Doggett maintains slim lead over Hance

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN — State Sen. Lloyd Doggett and Congressman Kent Hance ran neck-and-neck Saturday in their battle for the Democratic U.S. Senate nomination, a race both said looked like a rerun of the May 5 primary in which they were separated by a mere 273 votes.

At 1 a.m., Doggett still held a narrow lead over Hance, according to virtually complete results from the secretary of state's office.

With only 18 precincts — all in Howard County — uncounted Doggett led Hance by 50.08 percent to 49.92 percent, or 489,457 votes to 487,887, a difference of 1,570 votes.

"I never thought that this was a race we could win by any landslide," Hance said as Doggett narrowed the gap by winning in the state's big cities.

"We'll be with you through the night," Doggett told supporters late in the evening.

Hance jumped to an early lead based on returns from West Texas and the Panhandle. But Doggett did well in the Houston and Dallas precincts and overwhelmed Hance in Austin, Doggett's hometown.

Hance, who finished first in the primary, said the narrow margin Saturday gave him a familiar feeling.

"This is a trend I saw happen in the primary," he said. "The main thing I'm afraid of is what precincts have not reported. You have no way of knowing."

Howard County, which was expected to favor Hance, had not reported any votes by 11:15 p.m. An official in the secretary of state's office said a storm apparently had caused power outages.

As the vote gap narrowed, Hance campaign manager David Doak complained to reporters that Travis County ballots were being counted at the county Democratic Party headquarters instead of the county clerk's office.

Travis County Clerk Doris Shropshire, who said her deputies were supervising the vote count, confirmed the ballots had been taken to the party office "because that's the way they wanted to do it."

Mrs. Shropshire said the party has more sophisticated equipment to use in counting the paper ballots used in Travis County.

The winner will face Democrat-turned-Republican Phil Gramm in November for the seat being vacated by GOP Sen. John G. Tower, who is retiring after 23 years.

Gramm said Saturday night that it didn't matter to him which Democrat won.

"I'm going to run the same campaign no matter who the nominee is," he said.

Hance, a conservative from Lubbock, was the surprise top vote-getter in the May 5 primary. Doggett, a liberal from Austin, finished second as both bested former Congressman Bob Krueger, whom opinion polls had shown as the front-runner.

Don Richards, a former Hance aide, defeated Democratic runoff opponent Tom Richards on Saturday in a tight West Texas congressional race with an unusual name recognition problem.

With all 213 precincts reporting in the District 19 race, Don Richards had 30,144 votes, or 51.6 percent, to 28,217 votes, or 48.3 percent, for Tom Richards.

Outage holds Senate tally

The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Conservative U.S. Rep. Kent Hance and liberal legislator Lloyd Doggett were locked in a tight race with almost all the votes counted in Saturday's runoff election for the Democratic U.S. Senate nomination.

With all of the votes tabulated except from 18 of 20 precincts in Howard County in West Texas, Doggett led Hance by 50.08 percent to 49.92 percent, or 489,457 votes to 487,887, a difference of 1,570 votes.

Howard County's returns, expected to favor Hance, were apparently delayed by a power outage caused by a storm, according to an official in the secretary of state's office. About midnight, election workers began counting the votes hand.

Melva Demmer of the secretary of state's office said about 3,000 votes were cast in the runoff in Howard County. In the May 5 primary, Doggett received 459 votes, Hance 2,871, and Bob Krueger 1,439.

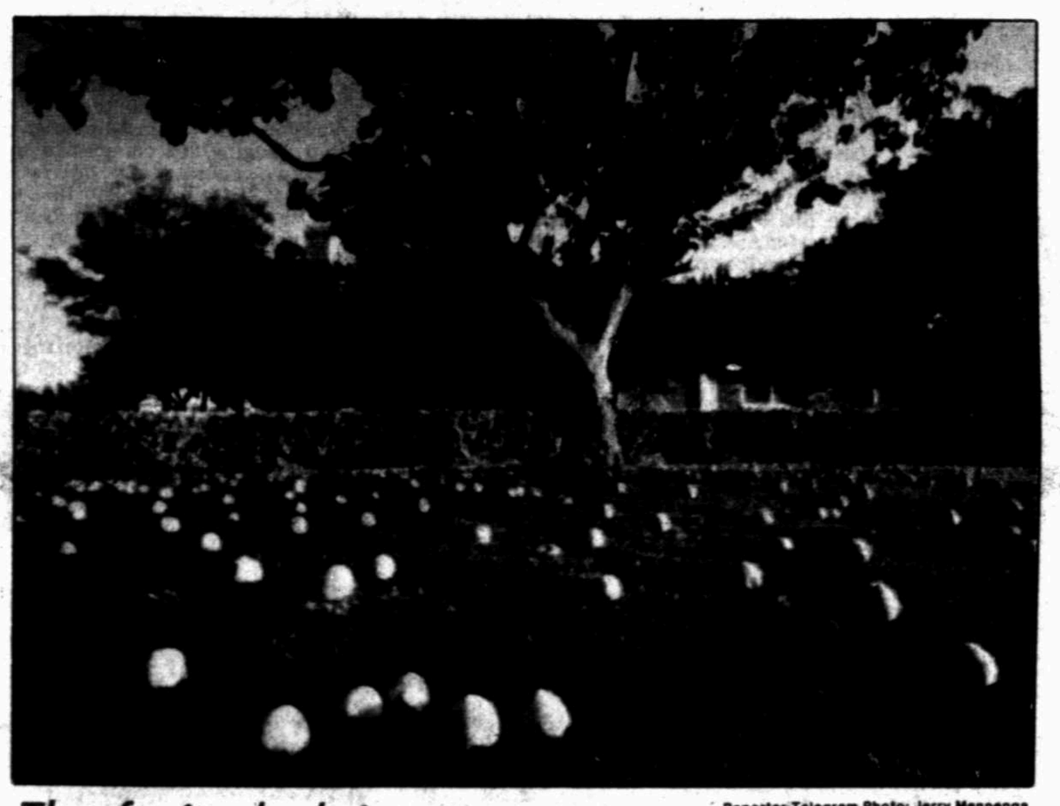

Hance, a congressman from Lubbock who opposes amnesty for illegal aliens, had squeaked ahead in the Democratic primary May 5, but didn't win a majority of the vote and so was forced into a runoff with Doggett, a state senator from Austin.

Hance jumped to an early lead with returns from west Texas and the Panhandle, where he ran strong in the May 5 primary. Doggett finished that primary just 273 votes behind Hance.

Doggett was doing well in Houston and Dallas, and Austin, his hometown, was slow to report returns.

The winner will face Rep. Phil Gramm in the November election for the Senate seat being vacated by Republican John Tower.

Midland still favors Kent Hance

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

After grabbing more than two-thirds of the votes in the Democratic Party Primary here May 5, U.S. Rep. Kent Hance maintained his stronghold on the Permian Basin by sweeping past State Sen. Lloyd Doggett in Saturday's Midland County runoff election.

With a dissappointing voter turnout for the Democratic runoff, Hance captured 77.8 percent of the vote with 2,297 votes to Doggett's 643 in the U.S. Senate race.

In the primary May 5, Hance received 2,664 votes, Doggett received 548 and Bob Krueger, the third major contender in the Democratic race who endorsed Hance Wednesday, received 591 votes.

In other runoff elections, Midland County voters favored W.C. (Bill) Davis over Roy E. Greenwood in the race for Judge, Court of Criminal Appeals, Place 2. Davis garnered 1,320 votes while Greenwood pulled in 622. Absentee voters cast 217 votes for Davis and 74 for Greenwood.

During the Midland County May primary, Greenwood received 789 votes, while Buddy Stevens, who was not in the statewide runoff ballot, received 670 votes.

In the race for Judge, Court of Criminal Appeals, Place 3, Midland County voters favored Bill White over Thomas B. "Tom" Thorpe, with a 1,139 to 861 margin. Absentee totals showed White with 200 votes and Thorpe with 89.

Thorpe had rounded up 628 votes in the May 5 primary, compared to White's 445 and the 634 votes received by Walter Boyd, who also missed the state runoff.

Hance, who won every Midland County precinct in the May primary, dropped two precincts to Doggett in the runoff. Precinct 305, voting at Carver Cultural Center, gave Doggett 84 votes to Hance's 39 votes. In the primary, Precinct 305 registered 138 votes for Hance, 33 for Doggett and 40 for Krueger.

Precinct 306, casting ballots at Crockett Elementary School gave Doggett 55 votes and Hance 40 votes. The precinct in the primary cast 145 votes for Hance, 41 for Doggett and 45 for Krueger.

Absentee voters cast 403 votes for Hance and 73 for Doggett.

The Hance-Doggett statewide winner meets U.S. Rep. Phil Gramm in the November general election.

"I'm not worried particularly," said David Godfrey, Gramm's county chairman. "Hance is probably a little stronger in West Texas but not as strong in East Texas. Gramm's a strong candidate and he's going to run on his record, so it'll balance out."

Reagan weathering varied storms in Ireland

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Foreign Affairs Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

GALWAY, Ireland — Ronald Reagan, the trouper, had to use humor in braving a hailstorm and peaceful protests that threatened to dampen his first full day in Ireland but he left them laughing and applauding for more.

"I have a hunch I should be shortening my remarks," the president said in accepting an honorary doctorate from the University College of Galway as hailstones began pelting the robed and tassled audience in the open courtyard before him.

Less than half a mile away, behind reinforced police barricades, about 1,500 fist-clenching demonstrators shouted slogans such as "Victory to Nicaragua and Cuba" and "U.S. — Out of Central America."

But the sudden shift in the weather was far more of a threat to Reagan than the storm of protestors, whom he barely saw. "Hail to the Chief" has taken on a "whole new meaning," quipped a television newsman.

The surprise trip by Secretary of State George Shultz to Nicaragua Friday en route here to join Reagan was exquisitely timed to help defuse the anti-Reagan protests here over U.S. policy in Central America.

Irish Senator Michael Higgins, one of the protest leaders, described Shultz's meeting with Nicaraguan leader Daniel Ortega as "a welcome but almost unbelieveable turnaround." Dr. Eamonn Casey, the Catholic bishop of Galway and another dissenter, hailed the peace shuttle as "a step in the right direction."

Reagan, whose visit to this small walled town celebrating its 500th anniversary was compared in introductory remarks to the visit here of Christopher Columbus on his way to the discovery of the New World, spiced humor into his prepared address.

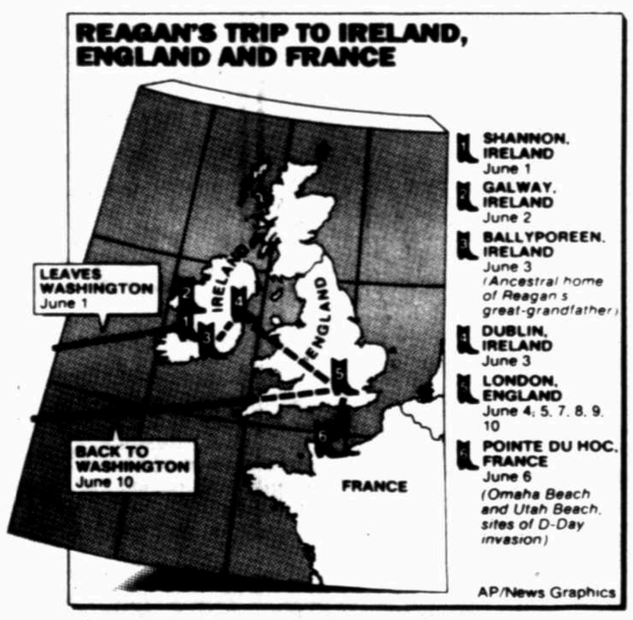

He hailed the fact that "in free societies, differences of opinion are expected, indeed encouraged. It is this freedom to disagree...even when in opposition to those in authority that is the cornerstone of liberty and human progress."

Then he added: "That's what I keep telling myself every time I try to iron out my differences with the speaker of our House of Representatives, a lad by the name of Tip O'Neill."

The comment provoked laughter and a hearty round of applause.

"Well, Tip is a great son of Ireland and of America as well," Reagan added. The president seemed to be genuinely proud of the academic honor he received here Saturday.

Dutch missile delays open to interpretation

The Associated Press

FRANKFURT, West Germany — The government said Saturday it fears Moscow might interpret the Dutch delay in deploying new nuclear missiles as a sign of faltering resolve in NATO, and initial reaction indicated other Western allies also may be worried.

The Dutch Cabinet agreed to accept an undetermined number of medium-range cruise missiles in 1988. It will take 48 missiles if the Soviet Union has not resumed arms control talks with the United States or has increased the number of SS-20 nuclear missiles pointed at Europe.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization called for the 48 missiles to be stationed on Dutch soil by 1986 as part of the alliance's plan for deploying 572 U.S.-built Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe.

Because of the late hour of the Dutch Cabinet vote Friday, there was scant official comment from West European governments. However, some politicians and commentators rebuked the Hague for backing away from the NATO timetable.

The sharpest criticism came from West Germany, which is deploying the largest contingent of the NATO missiles — 204, including all 108 Pershing 2s.

Conservative Chancellor Helmut Kohl's coalition government fears "This could lead to a misunderstanding in Moscow," West German government spokesman Juergen Sudhoff said in a statement.

"The federal government regrets that the Dutch government has been unable to make up its mind to help carry out the full 1979 NATO twin-track decision on schedule," he said.

The disarmament expert of the ruling Christian Democrat-Christian Social Union parliamentary faction, Juergen Todenhoefer, accused the Dutch of "buckling under massive pressure from the Soviet Union and the so-called peace movement."

The Soviet government, in an official statement issued through the Tass news agency, brushed aside the Netherlands' reluctance to deploy its share of missiles.

"The intention to go on deploying American nuclear missiles in Western Europe to observe the schedule drawn up in the NATO headquarters has again been declared explicitly," the statement said.

The statement repeated Soviet demands that the newly-deployed U.S. missiles in Western Europe be dismantled before nuclear disarmament talks can be resumed.

It added: "From the very outset, NATO was planned as and has become an active tool in Washington's hands in pursuing the policy of power pressure on the Soviet Union, of the notorious 'Cold War' policy."

In Britain, where deployment of 160 cruise missiles is under way, the Foreign Office issued a brief statement saying the government would "study carefully" the decision with its NATO allies.

"If, as it appears from press reports, the Dutch government's announcement strengthens its support for NATO's 1979 decision on INF (intermediate-range nuclear forces), then this is a step forward," the statement said.

The National Weather Service forecasts showers today for parts of Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas, Montana, Wyoming and South Dakota.

Forecast includes chance for rain in Permian Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

After receiving a trace of rain at Midland Regional Airport Saturday, the National Weather Service is calling for a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms today.

Partly cloudy skies and warm temperatures will remain in the area through Monday with a high today reaching into the middle 80s. The mercury is expected to dip into the middle 60s tonight, climbing into the upper 80s Monday.

Winds today will be from the southeast at 10-20 mph and gusty.

Saturday's high of 89 missed the record high of 100, set in 1977, by 11 degrees. The overnight low of 64 was 17 degrees warmer than 1947's record low of 47.

STATE

Widely scattered showers and a few thunderstorms developed along a stationary cool front that extended across Texas on Saturday, but mostly sunny skies and warm temperatures dominated the state's weather picture.

The front was stalled along a line extending from Wichita Falls southwest to near Midland-Odessa. Most of the shower activity was along and behind the frontal line Saturday afternoon.

Afternoon temperatures were mostly in the 80's, except over the Panhandle and South Plains where readings in the 60s and 70s prevailed.

Southerly winds were the rule over most of the state. However, northeasterly breezes clocked at 10 to 15 mph developed behind the front.

Forecasters expected the front to remain stalled for the most part through Sunday. Scattered showers and a few thunderstorms were forecast to develop over West and Northwest Texas on Sunday. A few early morning clouds were expected to form over South Texas.

NATION

Saturated New England got no relief from showers Saturday as swollen rivers rose over their banks and forced hundreds to evacuate, and chilly temperatures stretched from the nation's capital to Montana.

Some parts of Massachusetts were enduring their fifth straight day of rain, according to the National Weather Service, which issued local flood warnings and advisories across New England.

In Connecticut, where the three largest rivers crested well above flood stage by Saturday, leaving damage estimated in the millions of dollars, Gov. William O'Neill appealed to President Reagan for federal disaster aid. Parts of the state got an inch and a half of new rain early Saturday.

"We're very concerned about the impact of these heavy rains on farm income," said Rep. Nancy Johnson, R-Conn.

The rainfall in the Northeast was blamed on a storm system that passed off Cape Cod but reversed course and stalled over New England.

"It's a rather abnormal type of thing," said meteorologist Craig Cannon, saying the retreat was caused by wind patterns in the upper atmosphere.

RUNOFF

The Richardses, both of whom are from Lubbock and have struggled throughout the campaign to distinguish the names, are unrelated. Llarge voter turnout in the district and brought votes to both candidates, Don Richards said.

In the Republican runoff in that district, which stretches from Lubbock to Odessa, businessman Larry Combest beat accountant Ron Fleming with 60 percent of the vote.

Combest and Don Richards square off in November in the race to fill Hance's seat.

Voters in four congressional districts went back to the polls Saturday to tap congressional candidates in five races.

In District 6, Max Hoyt beat Joe Barton by only 18 votes in a Republican congressional runoff to fill the House seat left by Gramm.

In District 22, Houston political consultant Doug Williams, a former aide to Congresswoman Barbara Jordan, beat Jim Mooney of Pearland by more than a 3-to-2 margin for the Democratic nomination. That seat was left vacant by Republican Ron Paul, who lost to Gramm May 5 in the U.S. Senate race.

And in District 14, Mac Sweeney of Wharton, who recently resigned as a White House aide, defeated Georgetown attorney Chris Mealey with about 60 percent of the vote.

Former Bexar County prosecutor Bill White and incumbent W.C. Davis won the Democratic nominations for two places on the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, the state's highest criminal court.

White, who was Bexar County district attorney until voters unseated him in 1982, beat State District Judge Thomas Thorpe of Dallas. He credited support "of all the prosecutors around the state" for his win.

Davis, a former Bryan district judge, beat Roy Greenwood of Austin, a former administrative assistant for the appeals court.

Barring write-in efforts in November, Saturday's winners will get seats on the nine-member court in January because there are no Republican nominees on the general election ballot.

At least two Texas House members lost their jobs Saturday in Democratic runoff elections but Rep. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, appeared on his way to new job in the Senate.

Early incomplete votes showed Barrientos with 57 percent over Travis County Attorney Margaret Moore with about 30 percent of the votes counted in the race to succeed Doggett.

The Democratic Senate winner will meet Republican Patricia McNamara.

Rep. Joe Gamez of San Antonio, a freshman Democrat who was convicted of driving while intoxicated last year, ended up a loser when Gregory Luna, a San Antonio attorney, got 60 percent of the completed vote.

Rep. Jim Crockett of Pearsall lost to Poth school superintendent Eldon Edge Sr., who got 50.8 percent with all precincts reporting.

Rep. Robert Earley of Portland defeated Grady Hogue, retiring Bee County College president, with 56 percent of the vote.

In the only Repuplican legislative runoff, Brian McCall, a Plano insurance agent, lost to Sam Johnson, a Plano builder and former Vietnam prisoner of war, who garnered about 53 percent.

Ron Lewis, a Mauriceville real estate broker-developer defeated W.T. Oliver of Bridge City, a former state legislator, with 59 percent of the vote.

Former House members Emmett Whitehead of Rusk, a newspaper publisher and rancher, lost his contest with Clift Johnson of Palestine, a real estate broker, who got 56 percent in final totals.

Dawson County may flip coin

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

In Dawson County, the Democratic nominee for precinct three county commissioner may have to be decided by a coin flip.

After months of campaigning and two elections, Sanford Boardman and E.L. "Gene" Hendon have finished in a dead heat. Each received 479 votes in Saturday's runoff election, "and according to state law, the election must then be decided by chance," such as a coin flip, said Dawson County Democratic Chairman Eldon Moody.

So if the results hold up after Tuesday's canvass and a possible recount, the two candidates' campaign strategies may be reduced to calling "heads" or "tails."

In other area results in the Democratic primary runoff, Kent Hance rolled over Lloyd Doggett by wide margins, as expected, for U.S. Senator, while W.C. "Bill" Davis and Bill White outpolled Roy Greenwood and Tom Thorpe, respectively, in the races for places two and three on the state Court of Criminal Appeals.

The county-by-county runoff results are as follows:

— Dawson County: For U.S. Senator, Hance had 2,779 votes and Doggett 207; for District 17 U.S. Rep., Don R. Richards won 1,872 votes to 1,051 for Tom Richards; for place two on the Court of Criminal Appeals, Bill Davis had 1,206 votes and Roy Greenwood had 1,075; for place three, Bill White had 1,638 votes to 689 for Tom Thorpe; for precinct one county commissioner, Rudy Arredondo had 466 votes to 311 for Luciano Cavazos Jr.; for precinct three, as noted, Sanford Boardman and Gene Hendon had 479 votes each.

— Upton County: Hance had 1,365 to 247 for Doggett; Davis had 853 votes to 484 for Greenwood; White had 842 to 500 for Thorpe; for Sheriff-Tax Assessor, Glenn Willeford beat Lynn Holland, 1,048 to 678; for precinct one county commissioner, Morris E. McKenzie defeated Chesley M. Campbell, 235 to 206; in precinct three, Kenneth LaQuey beat Jack Carr, 473 to 271.

— Martin County: Hance had 804 votes to Doggett's 41; Davis had 423 and Greenwood 181; White had 423 and Thorpe 180; for tax assessor, Leona Louder defeated June Carpenter, 447-404.

— Crane County: Hance had 744 votes to 76 for Doggett; Davis had 423 to 267 for Greenwood; White polled 446 to Thorpe's 254; for precinct one county commissioner, Gordon Hooper beat Homer Grooms, 240 to 161; for precinct one constable, Roger Bulman defeated James D. Brents, 170 to 114.

— Andrews County: Hance had 1,204 votes to 55 for Doggett; Davis outpolled Greenwood, 536 to 465; White had 549 to 446 for Thorpe; Don Richards had 829 to 405 for Tom Richards.

— Howard County: Results were unavailable at press time due to computer problems there.

Ector County voters place Pressley on November ballot

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Julian "Coach" Pressly showed Saturday there is still some sting in his political bat, sending Adela Vasquez' team home a loser in their runoff battle.

Pressly, 60, will again be the Democrats' designated hitter in November. He will be matching strategies with one of his former players, GOP nominee Gerrid Bowen. The sweetest swinger will be the next Precinct 3 Ector County Commissioner.

Drawing on his 12 years of experience fielding complaints from angry residents and playing to the crowd, Pressly parlayed his suppport into a big victory.

The former professional ballplayer and high school and Odessa College coach defeated Ms. Vasquez by 430 votes — polling nearly 20 percent more of the ballots cast. Almost 2,300 turned out from Precinct 3, as both sides made late-inning moves to get voters to the polls.

Vasquez, a 35-year-old school counselor who enlisted the support of Hispanics and the Permian Basin Women's Political Caucus, failed to outrun Pressly, who jokingly suggested his backers came predominantly from the ages 55-110.

"For some reason, I don't feel like a loser," said Ms. Vasquez, who was just a toddler when Pressly took up coaching, "I accomplished my goal."

"Until we generate some interest in the younger group, it's going to be like this in West Texas," she said. "A lot of the older folks came out to vote... They came out in droves."

She pointed to the endorsements Pressly received from the two Democratic candidates unsuccessful in the May primary, former City Councilman Keith Weddell and County Constable Jerry Roberts, as a tough line-up to beat.

Noting "I didn't hit a lick until the primary," Pressly suggested "the young people just didn't show up."

"I represent the older, conservative type of people and these are the kind of people that got out and voted," said Pressly.

"I know who to talk to and who not to talk to," said Pressly of the political savvy that has carried him through three campaigns and other runoffs.

Looking ahead to his next big game, Pressly predicted the winner would need to score 10,000-12,000 votes in November. "They're all going to be out on that one," he said.

While Ector County voters cast their ballots for Thomas M. "Tom" Richards, Don R. Richards won the Democratic runoff for District 19 U.S. Representative. With all 213 precincts reporting, Don Richards had 30,144 votes (51.6 percent) and Tom Richards had 28,217 (48.3 percent).

Meanwhile, Ector County voters strongly supported the loser, casting 4,376 (71.42 percent) for Tom Richards to 1,751 (28.58 percent) for Don Richards.

County voters followed the district-wide trend in the Larry Combest-Ron Fleming runoff deciding the GOP nominee to face Don Richards in November. In Ector County, Combest carried 872 (72.73 percent) of the votes, while Fleming managed 327.

Kent Hance — who relinquished the seat which Combest and his former aide Richards will be vying for in November — carried Ector County better than 5 to 1. Hance received 5,405 votes (83.77 percent) to Lloyd Doggett's 1,047 (16.23 percent) here.

In Ector County Democratic run-offs, vote totals were as follows:

— U.S. Senator:
— Lloyd Doggett 1,407.
— Kent Hance 5,405.
— U.S. Representative, District 19:
— Thomas M. "Tom" Richards 4,376.
— Don R. Richards 1,751.
— Judge, Court of Criminal Appeals, Place 2:
— Roy E. Greenwood 2,206.
— W.C. "Bill" Davis 2,827.
— Judge, Court of Criminal Appeals, Place 3:
— Thomas B. "Tom" Thorpe 2,137.
— Bill White 2,915.
— County Commissioner, Precinct 3:
— J.E. "Coach" Pressly 1,354.
— Adela Larrea Vasquez 924.

In the lone Republican run-off, vote totals were:
— U.S. Representative, District 19:
— Larry Combest 872.
— Ron Fleming 327.

Gramm, a former "Boll Weevil" Democrat who supported President Reagan and switched to the Republican Party, defeated three opponents in the May 5 Republican primary.

Gramm said Saturday night that it didn't matter to him who won.

"I'm going to run the same campaign no matter who the nominee is," he said.

MIDLAND

"I think the Democrats chances are good (in November)," said Midland County Democratic Party Chairman Janet Massey, who has declined to choose a favorite between the Democratic contenders. "But I am disappointed in the low (voter) turnout."

In May, only 9 percent of the electorate, or 3,888 people, voted in the Democratic primary. Saturday's runoff election drew only 2,952 people to the polls, including the 478 votes cast by absentee ballots. "That's sad," Ms. Massey said.

Nonetheless, her hopes for November are optomistic.

"I've said all along I'll support whichever candidate that wins," Ms. Massey said. "We're planning on sending whichever one it is to Washington."

The breakdown in precinct votes are as follows:

— Alamo Junior High: Precincts 101, 102, 103, 104, 105 and 106 — Hance, 405, Doggett, 108; Davis, 271, Greenwood, 112; White, 235, Thorpe, 158.

— Lee Freshman High: Precincts 201, 202, 203, 208, 209 — Hance, 177, Doggett, 111; Davis, 138, Greenwood, 75; White, 107, Thorpe, 116.

— Bowie Elementary: Precincts 204, 205, 206, 207 — Hance 306, Doggett, 55; Davis, 149, Greenwood, 74; White, 103, Thorpe, 25.

— Carver Cultural Center: Precinct 305 — Hance, 39, Doggett, 84; Davis, 34, Greenwood, 18; White, 34, Thorpe, 25.

— Crockett Elementary: Precinct 306 — Hance, 40, Doggett, 55; Davis, 33, Greenwood, 31; White, 30, Thorpe, 43.

— South Elementary: Precincts 301, 302, 303, 304, 307 — Hance, 208, Doggett, 48; Davis, 136, Greenwood, 60; White, 122, Thorpe, 77.

— Rusk Elementary: Precincts 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408 — Hance, 719, Doggett, 109; Davis, 342, Greenwood, 178; White, 308, Thorpe, 228.

— Absentee: Hance, 403, Doggett, 73; Davis, 217, Greenwood, 74; White, 200, Thorpe, 89.

— Totals: Hance, 2,297, Doggett, 643; Davis, 1,320, Greenwood, 622; White, 1,139, Thorpe, 861.

REAGAN

At several moments during the endless introductions that traced his family ancestry back to Ballyporeen where Michael Reagan, his great grandfather, was born in 1829, Reagan simply beamed, smiling broadly and exchanging glances with his wife Nancy on the other side of the podium.

A brass band played standards such as "Wearin' O' The Green," "In The Mood," and "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," before Reagan arrived inside the ivy-covered stone spirals of the medieval university courtyard.

When he strode in, clad in traditional red and purple academic robes, the band played the theme song from the movie musical "Around the World In 80 Days."

The four-day Reagan trip here is one steeped in nostalgia with the main message he seems intent on imparting being his love for his ancestral home and the key role Irishmen have played in American history.

Reagan told the Galway College audience that 20 generals in "our Revolutionary Army" were of Irish ancestry and nine signers of the Declaration of Independence were born in Ireland.

"I imagine the British weren't surprised to see just who was fanning those flames," Reagan said in praise of the fighting ability of the Irish during the Revolutionary War. He quoted Sir Henry Clinton who wrote home to London "the emigrants from Ireland are our most serious opponents."

"There is no doubt about the Irish role in taming the wilderness of the New World and turning America into an economic dynamo beyond imagination," Reagan said. "The Irish came by the millions," he added, today totaling 43.6 million Americans, the nation's largest native-born ethnic community.

It was just as well that Reagan had little substance to impart about the world situation because by the time he reached the point in his speech devoted to reassuring his audience of his commitment to peace, the heavens opened and hail pelted all but the dignitaries under the podium awning.

"Today, the free world faces an enormously powerful adversary," Reagan began. But seeing that the crowd seated in front of him was hovering together to get under the few umbrellas which were in evidence, he skipped the next paragraph.

It was familiar ground anyway. "What we face is a strong and aggressive military machine that prohibits fundamental freedoms," was one line Reagan omitted.

"American policy is aimed at detering aggression and helping our allies and other friends protect themselves, while, at the same time, doing everything we can to reduce the risks of war," he said.

"This is a perplexing and, in so many ways, a thankless task," he added.

Most of his audience seemed to agree with him. "I think President Reagan stands for democracy," Dr. Fergus Meehan, a medical faculty member said.

"If he didn't take the stand he took, we would all be taken over by communism," the robed academic added. There was little evidence the protests at Galway's Gothic Cathedral even were in progress.

Moments before Reagan was to speak, however, a handful of small, black balloons streamed across the courtyard intended to symbolize the darkness and sinister forces of the nuclear arms race that peace advocates here allege Reagan is responsible for.

The protests did not seem to be widespread. One demonstration in Dublin's Phoenix Park by a women's group had been expected to draw about 1,000 people. Only 12 showed up.

"The one thing they have succeeded in doing has been keeping away friendly crowds from seeing the president," Ted Smith, an aide to Irish Prime Minister Garrett FitzGerald said.

The security precautions were unprecedented, most local inhabitants said. They were far greater than the steps taken during President Kennedy's visit here in 1963 or that of Pope John Paul II in 1983.

"I didn't know there were so many armed police in Ireland," one astonished Galway resident said.

Correction

In Friday's paper it was incorrectly stated that members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 7208 served as pallbearers in services held for Lawrence Ray Logsdon, 71, of Midland.

It should have stated that pallbearers were members of the American Legion, Post 19.

Report: Houston area federal judges wealthy

HOUSTON (AP) — Most federal judges and magistrates in Houston and Galveston could live quite comfortably without their salaries, according to their annual financial disclosures.

Eight federal judges in Houston, one in Galveston and four U.S. magistrates who work in Houston recently filed the reports which will be reviewed by a national committee on judicial ethics. One judge, Robert O'Conor Jr., of Houston, asked for an extension.

Judges are currently paid $73,100 and magistrates $65,800.

The papers show one judge is a millionaire owner of parking lots and farmland, The Houston Chronicle reported Saturday. Another sold a Mercedes and a race horse to help retire as much as $715,000 in debt.

STATE

U.S. District Judge Carl O. Bue Jr. was the wealthiest of the jurists filing reports. He listed between $1.2 million and $1.6 million in assets in 1983.

The assets figures exclude the worth of the jurists' residences and any salaries they pay their spouses. Their judicial salaries are also exempted from consideration.

Bue also reported a maximum outside income of $279,500, the largest amount being from crops on farmland in Fillmore County, Neb., and interest income on savings and bonds.

Bue said his most valuable property is a downtown Houston parking lot worth more than $250,000. He listed no debts. He also included a note to the committee, asking that he be notified if anyone asks to see his financial disclosure.

At the other end of the judges' financial spectrum is Norman Black, who lists no outside assets or debts. Black reported that he earned $5,200 teaching at South Texas College of Law and $2,700 teaching for Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, a publisher.

Among other judges and magistrates who filed the disclosure forms, U.S. District Judge Gabrielle McDonald reported assets ranging from $388,000 to $640,000 and debts, mostly bank loans and a mortgage on a lot on Lake Walden, of up to $715,000.

Ms. McDonald reported that most assets are jointly owned with an attorney spouse.

According to her statement, the couple owns an office building worth more than $250,000, and Ms. McDonald reported income last year up to a maximum of $35.500.

Education board recommends pay increase

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Education on Saturday recommended spending $2.6 billion more on public schools over the next three years, and quietly laid to rest a controversial rule that restricted the teaching of evolution.

The finance plan, which was approved 24-0, would raise equalization aid to poor school districts from $340 to $800 per student. This alone would cost an estimated $350 million next school year.

Equalization aid is an issue that the Legislature, meeting in special session beginning Monday, will consider. Eight tax-poor districts filed suit against the state last week, claiming its school finance system is unfair.

Bynum said the funding formula on which the $800 is based has passed all U.S. Supreme Court tests on school funding.

Districts eligible for equalization aid would have to collect property taxes at the rate of at least 40 cents per $100 property valuation. If the 40-cent levy fell short of raising $2,400 per student, equalization aid would make up the difference.

The board recommended that state payments to local school districts for teacher salaries and other expenses continue to be based on "personnel units," or the number of administrators, teachers and teacher aides in the district.

Rep. Bill Haley, chairman of the House Public Education Committee, has suggested a formula based on the number of students in attendance on an average day.

On Friday, when the proposals were discussed, Bynum said, "Growing suburban districts would do better dollarwise under the ADA weighted plan while stable districts would do better under the PU (personnel unit) system. Educationally, I have to come down with PU."

Other board recommendations to the Legislature would raise teacher salaries and would establish a "career ladder" that would enable teachers to move up to higher salaries based on criteria such as experience, competency and special training.

The board, however, is waiting for the Legislature to develop a system for testing how competent teachers are.

Beginning teacher salaries would go up from $1,111 to $1,520 a month, and other increases would range from $50 to $170 per month.

The board also recommended spending an extra $4.75 per student to help districts implement a new curriculum that emphasizes reading, writing and math. The board authorized Bynum to request $6.8 million for more staff to review school accreditation.

Without debate, the board formally repealed the 10-year-old rule that required references to evolution in textbooks to "identify it as only one of several explanations of the origins of humankind."

Critics of the rule have said it influenced the teaching of biology nationwide.

The board tentatively repealed the rule at its April meeting in El Paso, after Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox had held that it was unconstitutional, and the vote Saturday was a formality.

"God bless it," quipped board chairman Joe Kelly Butler after the vote on evolution.

"That's the end of that," said Bynum.

Gilley's sued for fatal wreck

HOUSTON (AP) — The parents of two women killed when a drunk driver slammed into the rear of their car are suing Gilley's Club, the massive suburban honkytonk where the man had been drinking.

Paul and Jo Petersen and Frederick H. St. John, all of nearby Pasadena, filed the wrongful death suit Friday. Named as defendants were Gilley's, Genes Enterprises Inc., and the driver, Jeffrey Brian Price.

Price is currently serving two eight-year jail terms after being convicted of two counts of involuntary manslaughter in the deaths of Paula Petersen, 19, and Lisa Beth Ann St. John, 18.

The two teen-agers had stopped at a red light when Price's car struck their vehicle. Evidence presented at Price's trial showed his blood contained .15 percent alcohol. Drunkenness is legally defined as .10 percent or above.

The suit did not specify damages sought.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Quality, quantity of education in question

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Gov. Mark White and H. Ross Perot have called the crusade, and the Texas Legislature has rallied forth to do battle for truth, justice and quality education.

But like other crusades, the final outcome of the special session is likely to be only partially successful.

That's because the lawmakers face the problem of paying for educational reforms, and that ties into the question of equalization of aid to districts.

While equalization is hardly a new topic, the matter has been given added impetus by the filing of a lawsuit by eight of the state's poorest districts, challenging what they contend is an unfair and discriminatory financing system.

And most state officials agree that the present system does need a major overhaul, although they don't necessarily agree on just what should be done to improve funding to school districts.

Texas' official policy, as stated in the Texas Education Code, is that each child is entitled to an educational opportunity that is "substantially equal" to that provided to any other child in Texas.

But just what equality means, and how to assure, remains elusive.

Rep. Paul Colbert, D-Houston, in a study of school finance problems, says what is commonly referred to as equalization in Texas is "power equalization."

The idea, he explains, is that a dollar of any given taxpayer's tax effort should have the same "power" to educate his or her children as any other taxpayer's dollar.

Problems arise because of wealth of districts isn't the same, so that a wealthy district is able to raise the same amount of money as a poor district by a lower tax rate.

State aid attempts to address that situation through a formula which sets a guaranteed value of wealth for each student, with state aid being adjusted to provide a greater amount to the poorer district.

The problem, critics say, is that the formula only equalizes up to a maximum number of dollars per pupil and richer districts are able to add money above that level.

Colbert also notes that the wealth of a school district is "by and large" not a function of the wealth of the people who live there.

While it's true that the poorest districts, such as Edgewood Independent School District in San Antonio, consist of "very poor residents," Colbert says, a district also may be "property-poor," as in the case of Killeen (where as much of the area is federal property) or in rural districts, where adoption of agricultural productivity values has removed much of the value of land from tax rolls.

He also notes that while a district with wealthy residents such as Alamo Heights in San Antonio has 16 times the relative property value of Edgewood, "this only puts them slightly above the statewide average level," and is just over half the relative per-pupil wealth of Deer Park because Deer Park has several large refineries.

Further complicating the matter is the fact that it costs more to educate some children than it does to educate others, and the costs of providing different types of instruction varies greatly.

And Colbert notes another problem relates to the willingness of local taxpayers to provide funds for education, which raises arguments about "local control," and how far the state should go in ordering expenditures.

Related to all this is the question of just how much money is needed for education.

No one has been able to answer that successfully, because no one has been able to say what really makes a good school.

The House Study Group looked at the question four years ago, and concluded, "The fact is that educational experts and researchers do not know...."

But, the report noted, "parents, professional educators, and elected officials alike are worried about whether the schools are good enough and are demanding a change from the courts, the state, and the schools."

And the report makes the point that while recommendations on what to do to improve education have varied greatly, no one seems to have ever recommended spending less money.

Screenwriter making films about Texas

Horton Foote

WAXAHACHIE, Texas (AP) — Two-time Academy Award-winning screenwriter Horton Foote seems a little out of his element in this small Texas town, where he has just finished filming his latest movie, "1918."

But Foote insists, despite his heavy New England accent, that he's a Texan destined to write about Texas. He feels, he says, right at home.

Foote, acclaimed in 1962 for his Oscar-winning adaptation of "To Kill A Mockingbird," won the Academy Award this year for his screenplay for "Tender Mercies," which starred Robert Duvall. He breaks into a big grin when the Oscar is mentioned.

"I won once before and I wasn't there," he says. "This time I was there and it makes a big difference because you don't realize how excited that whole area gets.

Foote, 68, says Oscar night was "an old-fashioned spectacle like you thought might have happened when they had premieres back in the old days."

After the ceremonies and a night of partying, Foote hopped a 7 a.m. flight back to Texas.

"I had to get back here because it was our second day of shooting (for "1918") and I wanted to be on the set," he says.

The movie, a period piece about a Texas family that copes with the ravages of the plague and war, finished shooting in mid-May in Waxahachie. The small town, located 30 miles south of Dallas, is a mere eight miles from the site where "Tender Mercies" was filmed.

Foote and his Dallas-based crew were in the midst of packing up after 18 months of preparation and filming. As he arrived at the two-story, wood-frame house used in the film, neighbors poured out to greet him with hugs and kisses. He was visibly moved.

"You know, I may never see some of these people again," Foote says after they have gone. "We were like a family for six weeks. I guess it's the curse of the theater."

Foote — a fifth-generation Texan — planned to return to New York after a brief visit to his birthplace of Wharton, Texas, near the Gulf Coast. He says he writes better about Texas when he's not there. He lives most of the year in New York and New England.

For "1918," everything down to the last piece of furniture was carefully planned. Foote even shipped his family's cream-colored bedroom set from Wharton.

"It was fashionable in those days to paint the furniture light," he says, running his hand over the dresser.

All around, there is a sense of a step back in time. The house, built in 1870, is surrounded by a white picket fence. From the front yard, a graveyard is visible at the bottom of the hill. The graveyard, town courthouse and two other houses on the street were used in the film.

"It's like a 19th century street," Foote says surveying the abundant trees and southern-style dwellings. "I'm sure it's the only one left in America."

"1918" is a film about imagined death and real death, Foote says.

"The imagined death is the fantasy that I'm sure many young men were having during World War I of what would happen if they went overseas — about how they might die," he said. "Also in '1918,' a horrendous flu epidemic began. That was the real death that came in, silently and unobtrusively. It killed more people than the war."

"1918" stars Foote's daughter, Hallie, in the leading role of Elizabeth Vaughn Robedaux. Stage actor William Converse-Roberts plays her husband, Horace, and Matthew Broderick — most recently of "War Games" fame — plays her 17-year-old brother, known simply as "Brother" throughout the film.

The setting is the mythical Texas town of Harrison, which Foote says is loosely based on Wharton. "1918" is one of nine plays written by Foote about his own family.

"I'm trying to find a metaphor for their lives and times," he says.

Foote left home as a teen-ager to become an actor, not a writer. After several years as a stage actor on and off Broadway, he wrote his first play about Texas at the urging of a friend.

He says he had "never written a thing in his life" before then, but won immediate praise from critics. One play soon followed another.

"I found myself with some kind of reputation and knew very little about writing," he says.

In the 1950s, he wrote his first Broadway play, "The Chase," which was produced by Jose Ferrer. Lillian Hellman later wrote the screenplay.

His works in the 1950s included live television dramas for playhouse theaters. His first screenplay, "Storm Fear," in 1956, was directed by and starred Cornel Wilde.

Bank climb becomes gesture of patriotism

AUSTIN (AP) — A University of Texas student climbed a 26-story downtown bank Saturday in what his partner on the ground claimed was a gesture of patriotism.

Police said the climber, 23-year-old Lance Weaver of Alvin, was charged in muncipal court with criminal trespass, a misdemeanor that carries a maximum penalty of 180 days in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Another young man, who identified himself as Brad Pope of Austin and said he was Weaver's partner, said Weaver was a student of international business.

"Lance has been around the world, and he believes this is the greatest country in the world and he wants to say it," Pope said.

Pope, 22, stood across the street with hundreds of spectators watching Weaver move slowly up the west side of the InterFirst Bank Tower.

As the climber reached the top, where a police rescue team waited, he made a half turn toward the cheering crowd and waved a small American flag.

Pope said Weaver had started out with a sign that said "Only in the USA" but had to drop it to get around a ladder the fire department had used to try to block the ascent about the fifth floor.

Weaver had tried to climb the same building last September but a foot strap broke at the fourth floor and he had to quit, Pope said.

Weaver replaced the straps with platforms attached to suction cups on Saturday and also was attached to the building by a harness, Pope said. The climber wore a tuxedo shirt and wanted to put on a tie — "to look nice," Pope said, but they decided a tie might be dangerous.

The climb began about 6 a.m., and Weaver reached the top 4½ hours later.

Spectators surged across the street to get a glimpse of Weaver when he emerged from the front door of the bank. But after few minutes, the crowd dispersed, complaining that police would not bring him out until they had left.

Weaver, to avoid detection by bank security guards, began the climb at street-level windows covered by curtains and used padded climbing platforms to cut down on noise, Pope said.

"We had a five-minute nervous period," Pope said.

A security guard spotted Weaver but by that time, Pope said, he was at the second floor and on his way.

Pope said he was arrested on a charge of reckless conduct but the charge was dropped, and he was released.

"We chose today because it was a weekend and there would be less traffic, and anyway next week school starts," said Pope.

District to probe inflated scores, monitor teachers

DALLAS — School officials, fearing that prospects of bonus pay may have encouraged teachers to inflate scores on basic skills tests, are investigating allegations of cheating on the exams at four elementary schools.

School Superintendent Linus Wright said scores among third-graders on the Iowa Test of Basic Skills at the schools were "unusually high."

The Iowa test and another achievement examination took on added importance in Dallas schools this year because the district's new incentive pay plan is based in part on student scores.

Techers, administrators and even custodial workers at all the district's schools that rank in the top 25 percent based on test scores and attendance will receive up to $1,500 incentive pay.

A teachers union opposed to the pay plan said it is to blame for the possible cheating, which Wright pledged to prevent.

"We have not been able to explain this (the high scores," Wright told school district employees in a speech telecast Friday. "There are still some inconsistencies. The next step is to go back to the school principals to see if we can't find a reason for the inconsistencies."

Officials say that there were several instances in which administrators heard that old tests were being used for study guides.

"The district will not tolerate teaching the test or otherwise cheating in any way," Wright said.

In the future, test sessions will be monitored and test score samples will be analyzed to spot unlikely achievement gains, he said.

The district declined to name the schools or release the scores.

Administrators say that they are not certain that cheating was the cause of the high test scores, but Harley B. Hiscox, president of the United Teachers of Dallas and an opponent of the incentive pay plan, said the discrepancies prove that schools are cheating on the tests.

"It (incentive pay) has brought out the worse in some people," he said. "Teachers told me it (cheating) was common."

Wright's administrative assistant, Bob Johnston, said the district has received numerous, but mostly unverified, complaints of test cheating.

"After we announced the incentive plan, we started receiving a lot of complaints about cheating in one classroom or another," he said. "But when we asked for specifics, we never got anything."

Doctor drops suit, resigns from staff

ALPINE, Texas (AP) — A 75-year-old doctor reinstated to the staff of Big Bend Memorial Hospital has dropped a lawsuit against the facility and resigned.

"I'm going to continue my practice right here in my office," Dr. William Lockhart told the Odessa American on Friday.

Brewster County Judge Tom Connor Sr. said Friday that after meeting in executive session, the hospital board agreed Tuesday to reinstate Lockhart and pay him $35,000 for attorneys' fees.

In return, Lockhart agreed to drop the suit he filed against the hospital last January in federal court.

Lockhart resigned from the medical staff on Wednesday, but hospital administrator Tom Santry said the board had no assurance from Lockhart that he would resign if he was reinstated.

Lockhart said the board's action vindicates him.

"They restored me completely, they said. That reverses the charges that were brought against me," Lockhart said.

However, when asked if the board's action indicated the hospital felt Lockhart was a competent doctor, Santry said, "I have no comment on that."

Lockhart's privileges first were suspended last fall after two medical staff ad hoc committees began investigating two separate charges against him.

At one point, Lockhart said the case involved a spontaneous abortion and a letter alleging professional misconduct.

The allegation involving the spontaneous abortion later was dropped, but the second allegation went before the 15-member medical staff, which unanimously upheld his suspension, sending the issue to the board of directors.

The board voted last November to uphold the suspension. Lockhart then filed suit against the hospital, seeking $10,000 a month since last Sept. 10, when his hospital practice privileges were taken away, and $50,000 in attorneys' fees.

His legal petition alleged that the hospital deprived him of his hospital privileges without due process.

Lockhart said Friday that the board's action should end an investigation into his medical practice by the Texas State Board of Medical Examiners. "They don't have anything against me," he said.

Authorities search North Carolina, Virginia for death row escapees

WARRENTON, N.C. (AP) — Police hunted through a railyard of antique trains Saturday for a fugitive killer believed to have abducted a cabbie at gunpoint, while officers looked for three other death row escapees over hundreds of square miles of North Carolina countryside.

Authorities were also on alert in Portsmouth, Va., after a detective thought he sighted two of the escapees and a shot was fired at police. However, a search in the area was called off.

The four were among six death row inmates who pulled a grand charade Thursday night by dressing as guards and driving out of the Mecklenburg, Va., Maximum Security Prison in a prison van. Two were caught the next day as they ate wine and cheese in the corner of a coin laundry.

The rest were being pursued by bands of police, 40 FBI agents, helicopters and dogs in areas of North Carolina 160 miles apart — from the railroad town of Spencer in the piedmont of western North Carolina to Warren County on the Virginia border. It was the first escape from the sophisticated Mecklenburg prison in southern Virginia.

And there "are an awful lot of people out there who are armed ... vigilante types," said Robert Pence, FBI agent in charge in Charlotte, "a lot who are out roaming around."

Police officers escort Derrick Lynn Peterson (left) and Earl Clanton Jr. (background) from the Warren County jail to a waiting van in Warrenton, N.C., Friday night. Peterson and Clanton escaped with four other death row inmates from the Meckenberg Correctional Center in Boydton, Virginia, Thursday night.

THE CONVICTS had been planning the breakout for months, down to minute details such as the size of the guards' uniforms they would need, said Heman Clark, secretary of Crime Control and Public Safety for North Carolina.

Police searched in Portsmouth after officers said they chased and were fired at by one of two men believed to have been escapees Linwood and James Briley. But the search for the brothers was called off after officers failed to find them Friday night.

The Briley brothers were in a gang that killed 11 people in a 1970s rape-robbery spree in Richmond, Va. The other two fugitives had been convicted of murder as well, and like the Briley brothers had been sentenced to death.

"They are dangerous, desperate characters," said Russ Edmonston, a spokesman for the North Carolina Department of Crime Control and Public Safety.

"We have reason to believe that they are capable of doing anything."

The convicts had left the prison armed only with knives. But on Saturday morning, authorities questioned a cabbie who reported he was forced to drive 100 miles from Durham to Salisbury by an armed man who fit the description of escapee Lem Davis Tuggle Jr., 32. The cab was found seven hours later in Spencer, about 50 miles north of Charlotte.

EIGHT OFFICERS and a dog searched through a collection of old train equipment at a state historic site called Spencer Historic Shops.

Another escapee was believed to have remained in Warren County, Edmonston said. More than 200 officers searched the county.

Edmonston said officials believed the escapees split up after abandoning their stolen van at a school in Warrenton, about 30 miles from the Boydton, Va., prison.

The "ingeniously planned" escape, as Virginia Corrections Department spokesman Gilbert Miller put it, began Thursday evening when dinner for the state's 24 death row inmates was over. Prison officials said the inmates created a disturbance in the common room, and when the guards responded the prisoners overpowered them with homemade knives and took command of a glass control booth, freeing themselves from the cellblock.

The inmates took some guards hostage and stripped their uniforms from them. They then ordered one hostage guard to call the prison's transportation officer requesting that a van be brought out to remove a bomb.

THE INMATES, dressed as guards, disguised a fire extinguisher to look like a bomb, put it on a stretcher and walked out to the van.

The inmates activated the chemical fire extinguisher as they approached the van and told other guards to stay away. They hoisted the stretcher into the white van, a guard in a watchtower opened two electronic gates and the convicts drove away at 10:47 p.m. Officials discovered the ruse a half-hour later.

Convicted murderers Derick Lynn Peterson, 22, and Earl Clanton Jr., 30, were captured without a struggle Friday evening in Warrenton as they sat in a laundry about a block from the local police station. The FBI had been monitoring phones of people known to be connected with the escapees, and one such call came from the laundry.

Long Democratic primary race ending this week

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

The Democratic presidential primary marathon ends this week, with front-runner Walter F. Mondale looking to either California or New Jersey to deliver the big-state victory he needs to make him the party's nominee.

Gary Hart, a tireless pursuer to the end, hopes for one final surprise to sustain his candidacy all the way to the July convention.

"Final Tuesday" — the end of a grueling string of contests that began last winter — includes primaries in California, New Jersey, West Virginia, New Mexico and South Dakota, with 486 delegates at stake.

Mondale is confidently predicting victories in California and New Jersey and a big enough share of the delegates to give him more than the 1,967 he needs to be assured of the nomination.

Hart, trailing Mondale by nearly 700 delegates, says he'll stay in the race no matter what the outcome.

"What is critical currently is the chemistry of this campaign and not the arithmetic," says campaign manager Oliver Henkel. He says Hart needs to win either California or New Jersey and finish a close second in the other state to remain a viable candidate. But other close aides, speaking privately, say the Colorado senator must win both of the big states to stay alive.

FOR THE Rev. Jesse Jackson, the last week of the long primary campaign is also the final chance to add large numbers of delegates to his total, as well as increase his clout at the convention.

Public and private polls point to a close race in California, where voters will choose 306 national convention delegates, and a slim Mondale lead in New Jersey, where 107 delegates are at stake.

Campaign aides in both states say many voters are undecided and a prime-time televised debate Sunday night involving all three contenders in Los Angeles may swing thousands of votes.

The three smaller states have received relatively short shrift from the candidates, who have shuttled from coast to coast every two to three days in the last three weeks. But Mondale looks strongest in West Virginia, with 35 delegates, and Hart on top in South Dakota, 15 delegates. Polls indicate a toss-up for New Mexico's 23 delegates.

After months of non-stop campaigning, all three men found themselves near the end of the primary season physically exhausted and financially strapped.

Mondale and Hart both started television advertising late in the week in California. But television campaigning is so expensive in the state that pollster Mervin Field said the $400,000 Mondale has budgeted and the $300,000 Hart can afford is too little to make much of an impact. "That kind of money in this state ... just has no effect," he said.

Jackson has no paid television commercials.

THE CONTENDERS have been stressing environmental issues, the nuclear freeze and appeals to Hispanic voters in their campaigns around California, the state with the largest convention delegation.

Mondale is using a television advertisement he has used in other states where he won. It shows a red telephone, with a blinking red light, and an announcer saying: "The most awesome, powerful responsibility in the world lies in the hand that picks up this phone. The idea of an unsure, unsteady, untested hand is something to think about."

Hart has countered with a commercial designed to neutralize Mondale's constant attacks on his record. It quotes from an endorsement Mondale gave him in his Senate campaign of 1980. "He is brilliant. ... If we lose Gary Hart, it could change the course of this entire nation," says an announcer, quoting Mondale.

Even though smaller, New Jersey may turn out to be the most important state — especially if Hart defeats Mondale in California. Polls for both candidates gave Mondale a lead of roughly 10 points in the state nearly two weeks ago, and a victory would enable him to make the case to convention delegates.

Mondale has attacked Hart's leadership on environmental issues and his commitment to the nuclear freeze — two issues that are particularly imnportant in New Jersey. He also has strong union backing and the support of several members of the state's congressional delegation.

Body may be victim of mass killer

SEATTLE (AP) — A teen-ager who police fear was a victim of the Green River killer has been identified as the "Jane Doe" whose skeleton was found last summer in a wooded area.

But the Green River Task Force declined Friday to add Joanne M. Hovland immediately to the official list of victims attributed to the serial killer.

The Snohomish County site where the body was found is 40 miles north of the killer's closest previous dump site. The slayer has killed at least 25 young women during the past two years, police say.

All of the previous bodies have been found in King County, which surrounds Seattle.

"Serial killers are very mobile," task force consultant Bob Keppel said Friday, "so from one county to the next, a quarter mile here or there, even 30 miles, is absolutely nothing to them."

Task force commander Capt. Frank Adamson said Friday it is likely that the skeleton of a young woman found last weekend just south of the King County line, in the Pierce County community of Sumner, is that of a Green River victim also.

That young woman, so far unidentified, has not been added to the official victims list either.

Ms. Hovland, 16, had been on the list of missing women police considered likely Green River victims. That list now stands at 12.

She was identified through dental records.

"Task Force members are looking into the possibility this death may be related to the (Green River case)," Fae Brooks, a task force spokeswoman, said Friday. "At this time, (Ms. Hovland) is not listed as an official victim of the Green River homicide investigation."

The case takes its name from the Green River in south King County, where the bodies of the first five victims were found in the summer of 1982.

Like a number of the victims, Ms. Hovland had a prostitution record and had frequented the "Sea-Tac strip," an area of motels and fast-food restaurants near Seattle-Tacoma International Airport in south King County.

Ms. Hovland was last seen May 8, 1983, when she was released from the Denney Youth Center, an Everett youth detention facility. She was sent there for 10 days after prostitution convictions in King County, said Mike Sullivan, a center spokesman.

Injured dog runs to hospital

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — A 100-pound, black-and-white dog, bleeding profusely from a leg injury, hobbled to the Sacred Heart Medical Center emergency room for help.

Nurse Nancy Scott first spotted the injured animal near the hospital Thursday and asked co-workers to bring her a pressure dressing to stop bleeding from a ruptured artery. "It looked like he'd been hit by a car," she said.

"But before I could do anything the dog ran off," she said. "He ran right for the emergency room entrance."

When emergency room nurses spotted the dog, they dashed outside with the first-aid pouch. Another nurse and a security guard joined Ms. Scott in giving aid to the large dog.

"He was just a wonderful dog," Ms. Scott said. "He didn't attempt to bite me or anything."

Hospital staffers then summoned SpokAnimal Care which took the dog to the Pet Emergency Clinic.

The dog, which appears to be part Newfoundland, was doing well. The animal did not have a license and animal control officers have been unable to locate its owner.

Third space shuttle's engines fired in pre-launch test

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Discovery, America's third space shuttle, howled and spit fire for 19 seconds on its launch pad Saturday in a successful test of its three powerful main engines that apparently cleared the way for the ship's maiden flight this month.

"We have three engines up and running," NASA commentator Rocky Raab reported as the powerplant blazed to life, engulfing the launch pad in fire and steam and sending a thunderclap echoing across miles of palmetto and scrub land.

During the brief explosion of power, the 100-ton space plane strained against the holding force of eight 3-foot-long hardened-steel bolts that locked it securely on the pad. On an actual launch, explosive charges sever the bolts to release the shuttle.

"A preliminary look at the data indicates it's all good," launch director Bob Sieck told reporters an hour after the test.

But Sieck said National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials want to inspect the engines carefully and analyze all the data for a few days before setting a firm date for Discovery's debut, joining Columbia and Challenger in the growing shuttle fleet. The launch team has been working on a tentative target of June 21.

Discovery's first commander will be astronaut Henry Hartsfield, who flew as pilot of Columbia's fourth mission in 1982.

McDonald's children protest

MARIETTA, Ga. (AP) — Three children of Rep. Larry McDonald, killed in the Soviet downing of a Korean airliner, are challenging his third wife's claim that she needs $375,000 from his estate for a year of support.

Kathy McDonald, whose husband was killed in September 1983, had asked a probate judge to award the money to support her and her two children. Because of the objection, a hearing scheduled for Monday has been postponed. McDonald left no will.

"The three children of Anna McDonald (McDonald's first wife), who are of college age, just don't feel that $375,000 is necessary for a year's support," her attorney, Curtis A. Thurston Jr., said Friday.

Six charged in selling stolen bonds

NEW YORK (AP) — Six people, including a reputed organized crime figure and a former policeman, have been charged with trying to sell stolen securities or travelers checks, federal prosecutors say.

Louis Foceri, 61, of Smithtown, described in court as a reputed member of the Luchese crime family, was arraigned with two other men Friday on charges of conspiring to sell $4.4 million in stolen corporate bonds.

In a second case, former New York City police officer John Manca, 53, his daughter and a third person were charged with trying to sell $20,000 in stolen American Express travelers checks. Authorities said the cases were related.

Man recaptured two decades later

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — A convicted murderer who was recaptured after escaping from prison 24 years ago "just stammered and stuttered" when he was taken into custody, officers said.

Robert Eugene Lucas, 55, had been living quietly in Florida under an alias for more than two decades before being arrested Thursday, said agent Mike Lanfersiek of the Florida Department of Law Enforcement. Officers had been tipped to Lucas' whereabouts.

Lucas escaped in 1960 from Stone Mountain Prison east of Atlanta, setting off a manhunt in several states. He was serving a life term for the June 1960 gunshot slaying of a drinking companion.

Programmer must pay parents rent

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A jury took 10 minutes to decide that a 43-year-old computer programmer must move out of his parents' home and pay $7,269 in back rent and utility bills.

The ruling Friday in Allegheny Common Pleas Court climaxed a nearly two-year battle by the retired parents of Andrew Zarna Jr. to evict him from their home in suburban McKees Rocks.

Andrew and Angeline Zarna said their son stopped paying rent in August 1981 despite earning more than $27,000 annually, and became disruptive, burning cigarette holes in furniture and working late at night in his basement machine shop.

Search called off for boater

PORTSMOUTH, Va. (AP) — The Coast Guard has called off the aerial search for a retired Associated Press newsman whose homemade 39-foot sailboat is overdue on a voyage from Jacksonville, Fla., to Maryland.

Spokesman Gene Longo said the Coast Guard is continuing to check marinas and harbors in the hopes of pinning down where the Shamrock and its skipper, Robert Shaffer, may have gotten lost along their route.

DEWEY LEE

In Appreciation

I would like to take this opportunity to express my heartfelt thanks and appreciation to every person who contributed to, supported me, worked very hard for me and voted for me in our campaign for Justice of the peace.

For the benefit of those of you who never knew the final results of the primary election, we missed a runoff by 120 votes. Sorry we lost but we can still be appreciative of the fact that our system is still the best there is in all the world. I for one thank God every day for this freedom of choice we enjoy in this great State and Country of ours.

Speaking of choice, I would remind all of you fine people who voted for me that we still have the"choice for a change"in November's general election. Again I say thank you and I appreciate your support from the bottom of my heart, I remain.

Sincerely,
Dewey Lee

Law school tuition to top $10,000

NEW YORK (AP) — Tuition at the nation's five most expensive law schools will top $10,000 next year, and total annual expenses at those schools should surpass $16,000, a new survey says.

The most expensive law school in the country continues to be Columbia University, with an estimated tuition between $10,725 and $11,212 for the 1984-85 school year, according to the National Law Journal survey.

On the other end of the scale is the tuition charged to Texas residents at the University of Houston — $120.

The average increase for the next year is about 10 percent, bringing the average tuition to $6,882 at private schools and $1,799 at public institutions, according to the survey in the journal's June 11 issue.

Only estimated tuition amounts were available for some of the most expensive schools, which had not yet set their tuition rates, the journal said.

Most of the country's 98 accredited private law schools will charge between $5,000 and $8,000 for tuition, with a third charging about $7,000.

Most of the public law schools will charge between $1,000 and $2,000. Schools in the Northeast and Midwest generally charge more than those in the West and South, according to the magazine's survey.

The magazine also reported that the nation's law schools registered an average decline of 11 percent in the number of applications they received last year. Among the possible reasons: a drop-off in the number of people in their early 20s, increased application fees and greater selectivity by students.

As a result, said Terrance Sandalow, dean of the University of Michigan Law School, some law schools have been "substantially lowering their standards or reducing the size of their classes."

Others said some law schools may be forced to close if applicants continue to decline and costs increase.

At the same time, students are feeling the crunch. John R. Kramer, associate dean at Georgetown, said annual costs there could reach $22,000 per student in five years. Even now, he said, an average law student who started classes at Georgetown last year could expect to leave with a $41,816 debt.

After Columbia, the 14 most expensive law schools in the country and their estimated tuition next year are:

Northwestern, $10,470; New York University, $10,200; University of Chicago, $10,200; Stanford, $10,006; Cornell, $9,920; Yale, $9,900; University of Pennsylvania, $9,810; University of Southern California, $9,750; Georgetown, $9,035; Boston University, $8,996; George Washington, $8,910; Harvard, $8,800; Duke, $8,750; and Northeastern, $8,745.

AFB fighter crashes

HILL AIR FORCE BASE, Utah (AP) — The pilot of an Air Force F-5F ejected safely before the Nellis Air Force Base fighter crashed during a training exercise in the western Utah desert, the Air Force said.

Len Barry, public affairs officer at Hill AFB, said Capt. Stephen T. Grace, 29, a native of Ft. Worth, Texas, ejected before the 1:15 p.m. crash Friday.

The accident occurred on the Utah Test and Training Range about 35 miles west of Lakeside.

Nurses walk picket lines, not corridors

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A strike by almost 6,000 registered nurses entered its second day Saturday with other hospitals helping pick up the patient load, but some shortages of intensive care beds were reported.

No new talks were scheduled in the strike against 15 hospitals, the largest in U.S. history, as nurses walked picket lines instead of corridors. The struck hospitals remained open.

"There have been no problems on the picket lines. It's boring, which is wonderful," said Bob Wiesner, a negotiator for the Minnesota Nurses Association.

Job security, seniority and layoff procedures are the main issues in the strike against 9 hospitals in Minneapolis, 3 in St. Paul and 3 in suburban areas. They account for about half the hospital beds in the seven-county metropolitan area.

NURSES ARE picketing, but not striking, at two other hospitals. Also, nurses at Mercy Medical Center in Coon Rapids, a Minneapolis suburb, are scheduled to strike Monday morning.

The three largest hospitals in the area — Hennepin County Medical Center, St. Paul-Ramsey Medical Center and University of Minnesota Hospitals — were not struck and were picking up some of the patient load. In addition, United and Children's hospitals in St. Paul reached contract agreements earlier with their nurses.

Hospitals had prepared for the strike by sending home some patients, sending some to other hospitals or nursing homes, postponing elective surgery and limiting admissions to the most critically ill. About 8,000 non-nursing employees were laid off.

Hennepin County Medical Center, a large county hospital which was not struck, halted elective surgery to reserve space for more urgent operations, said Dr. Melvin Bubrick, in charge of screening surgery patients.

ELEVEN OF the hospital's 12 operating rooms were busy Friday, he said, many with patients who would otherwise have had their surgery at other hospitals.

Greg Hart, an administrator at University of Minnesota Hospitals, which was not struck, said intensive-care space was running out.

"We are just about full up," Hart said.

The patient load at St. Paul-Ramsey Medical Center, also not struck, was slightly above normal after receiving about a dozen patients who normally would have been sent to other hospitals.

"We're taking a close look at our elective work," said Dr. James Cicero, chief of emergency medicine. He said some patients requiring minor surgery may be asked to postpone their operations if bed space becomes tight.

Jury deliberates in largest U.S. tax fraud case

NEW YORK (AP) — A federal jury has begun deliberating on whether five Wall Street executives rigged $130 million in phony tax deductions for wealthy investors in what prosecutors claim is the biggest tax fraud in U.S. history.

The panel deliberated for four hours Friday and was to resume Monday.

Federal prosecutors charged the executives created a risk-free "Fantasy Island" tax shelter haven in their Wall Street office, selling tax losses that existed only on paper.

But defense lawyers said the businessmen were taking advantage of a legal tax loophole for rich clients such as television producer Norman Lear, actor Sidney Poitier and composer Henry Mancini. None of the clients was charged.

The defendants, all charged with conspiring to defraud the Internal Revenue Service, include the alleged mastermind, Michael Senft, 44; and his brother, David Senft, 40, both of Manhattan. The others are Walter Orchard, 35, of Somers; Joseph Antonucci, 38, of Irvine, Calif.; and Frank Susi, 32, of Stamford, Conn.

If convicted of conspiracy, each faces up to five years in prison and a $10,000 fine. Michael Senft also was charged with evading $925,000 of his own taxes, punishable by the same penalty, and with 58 counts of aiding in the filing of false 1979 and 1980 client tax returns, each punishable by up to three years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

David Senft and Antonucci were charged with aiding the filing of 31 false returns; and Orchard and Susi were charged with 27 counts each.

Their trial started May 3 before Judge Richard Owen at U.S. District Court in Manhattan.

Prosecutors contend the defendants based tax write-offs on fictitious losses in billions of dollars in non-existent government securities trades. They called the defendants' businesses, Sentinel Government Securities and Sentinel Financial Instruments, a "paper mill" and likened their trading to a game of Monopoly with play money.

Defense lawyers, however, told jurors they had proven the multi-billion dollar securities deals were real. They asserted prosecutors were trying to make their clients scapegoats for the government's own failure to regulate the fast-moving Treasury securities market.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher talks to South African Prime Minister Pieter Botha on the steps of Thatcher's official country residence at Chequers, 40 miles west of London Saturday. Botha is on a tour of Europe.

Thatcher tells South African official his government policy 'unacceptable'

LONDON (AP) — South African Prime Minister P.W. Botha held nearly five hours of talks Saturday with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who told him his white-minority government's policy of racial separation was "unacceptable."

The meeting was held at Chequers, Mrs. Thatcher's country residence, while some 15,000 people staged a demonstration in London protesting Botha's visit.

In a brief departure statement before flying to Switzerland to continue his controversial West European tour, Botha said, "Each side put its views about the situation in South Africa quite candidly."

British government sources said that in an hour-long meeting alone with Botha before lunch, Mrs. Thatcher told him South Africa's apartheid policy was not acceptable.

She also refused to sell South Africa reconnaissance when the subject "cropped up," said the British sources, who declined to be identified. The United Nations has imposed an embargo on the sale of arms to South Africa.

The anti-apartheid demonstrators marched from Hyde Park through central London. Three were arrested for hurling objects at police, a spokesman at Scotland Yard said.

Botha told reporters he and Mrs. Thatcher discussed South-West Africa, Angola and the situation in his own country during the meeting at Chequers, 40 miles northwest of London.

The one-day visit by Botha, 68, was the first by a South African leader since 1961. Botha, accompanied by his foreign minister, R.F. Botha, spent nearly five hours at Chequers. The men are not related.

In a brief departure statement before flying on to Switzerland, Botha reiterated South Africa's demand that "foreign forces" — a reference to Cuban troops in Angola — withdraw from southern Africa as a condition for giving independence to the South African-ruled territory of Namibia.

He said he and Mrs. Thatcher both "expressed their desire to help Namibia achieve its independence as soon as possible under peaceful conditions."

There were no smiles or handshakes as Botha and Mrs. Thatcher posed for photographs at Chequers, and the statement left out the customary diplomatic pleasantries.

British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe and a deputy, Malcolm Rifkind, joined Mrs. Thatcher and the South Africans for lunch and most of the talks, officials said.

Mrs. Thatcher had defended her invitation to Botha as a way of encouraging reform in South Africa, a major British trading partner and one-time colony.

Shultz meets with leaders of Nicaragua

SHANNON, Ireland (AP) — U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz flew to Ireland today to brief President Ronald Reagan on his surprise visit to Managua and his meetings with officials of Nicaragua's Sandinista junta.

Shultz arrived in mid-afternoon at Shannon International Airport and headed for Ashford Castle, where the president is staying on the second night of his four-day visit to Ireland.

Shultz met for 2½ hours Friday with the leader of the Nicaraguan junta, Daniel Ortega, and the two said they had agreed to hold more meetings aimed at easing Central American tensions.

Friday's discussions were the first high-level talks between the United States and Nicaragua since December 1981.

While calling the talks worthwhile, Shultz did not indicate that any differences had been resolved.

He said that the special U.S. envoy for Central America, Harry Shlaudeman, will represent the United States in future discussions with Nicaragua and that the opening round of talks will begin shortly.

A U.S. official, who asked not to be identified, said Vice Foreign Minister Victor Hugo Tinoco will represent Nicaragua in the talks.

Late Friday night, the Nicaraguan government issued a statement saying Ortega told Shultz he wanted "to visit the United States immediately to have personal talks with President Ronald Reagan."

In Galway, Ireland, Reagan was asked if he was willing to meet with Ortega. "I'm in the wrong country for that," he quipped.

The Nicaraguan government also announced it wants an unspecified "third" nation to participate in planned future meetings between representatives from Nicaragua and the United States.

Ortega has been to the United States twice, but only for meetings at the United Nations.

Larry Speakes, the deputy White House press secretary traveling with Reagan, said the president "was committed to the proposal midweek" for Shultz to meet with the Nicaraguan leader.

Earlier Friday, Shultz attended the inauguration of President Jose Napoleon Duarte in El Salvador. Reporters accompanying Shultz were not informed of the visit to Managua until shortly before takeoff from San Salvador.

According to officials, the administration wanted to maintain secrecy as long as possible in order not to distract attention from Duarte's inaugural.

Shultz said his discussions here did not change his view that the United States should continue supporting anti-government rebels in Nicaragua. The Sandinista leadership has said this activity is proof the United States wants to destroy the Nicaraguan revolution.

The areas of U.S. concern about Nicaraguan behavior, Shultz said, include its alleged efforts to export revolution elsewhere and to achieve military suiperiority over its neighbors, its military ties with Soviet bloc countries and what he said was Nicaragua's refusal to abide by promises to establish democracy and protect human rights.

The visit came at a time of sharp disagreement between the House and the Senate over whether to approve the administration's request for an additional $21 million in assistance to Nicaragua's rebel movement, known as the "contras." The Senate supports the measure while the House has voted against it. The legislation is expected to be taken up next week by House-Senate conferees.

Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Langhorne A. Motley has visited Managua four times over the past year in attempts to resolve disagreements but little progress has been made.

The last senior level talks took place 2½ years ago when former Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig met with Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto at an Organization of American States meeting on St. Lucia.

Shultz said he made the visit at the request of President Reagan. Officials said the idea was first discussed two weeks ago during the visit to Washington of Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid, who has long advocated direct discussions between Washington and Managua.

Guerrillas attack three villages

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Marxist tribal insurgents massacred at least 68 people and injured more than 100 others in three settlements near the Indian border, sources reported Saturday.

The sources, who asked not to be identified, said guerrillas belonging to the 2,000-member Shanti Bahini, or "Peace Force," attacked villages in the Chittagong Hill Tracts area Thursday and Friday.

They said the insurgents used Soviet-made automatic weapons that had come from across the border in the Indian state of Tripura.

The Shanti Bahini has been fighting since 1972 for greater economic and cultural autonomy for Buddhist and Christian tribes of Tibetan and Burmese ancestry in Bengladesh.

'Mothers should stay at home'

PEKING (AP) — Thirty years after the government reversed China's feudal tradition by promising equal employment for women, the official Communist Party newspaper has declared that mothers belong at home with their young children.

The women's jobs could be taken by unemployed youths, the Peking Daily said Friday.

Columnist Xing Hua said that women should take a three-year leave of absence starting in the seventh month of pregnancy, instead of eight weeks' maternity leave as provided under China's marriage law. If 70 percent of child-bearing urban women did so, it would create over three million jobs, the article said.

If mothers stayed at home, they could breast-feed their babies and liberate themselves and their husbands from hurried household chores, the newspaper said. It said this would help keep affectionate couples from squabbling over domestic trifles.

Party leader calls for new elections

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The leader of a leftist opposition party Saturday called for new elections or a presidential investigation of last weekend's parliamentary balloting, in which the leftists failed to win any seats in the People's Assembly.

Ibrahim Shukry, leader of the Labor Socialist party, said the final results of the results of the voting were invalid because of alleged stuffing of ballot boxes and intimidation by "armed militias" of the ruling National Democratic party.

"President (Hosni) Mubarak must study the election results with a national perspective and they have to be corrected, either by investigations or by new general elections soon," Shukry said.

The results gave the NDP 390 seats in the 448-member Parliament. Only one of the four opposition parties, the right-of-center New Wafd party, gained representation with 58 seats. The Labor Socialists lost their eight assembly seats.

Officers seize 55 pounds of heroin

HONG KONG (AP) — Customs officers Saturday seized 55 pounds of heroin worth $1.5 million from unclaimed baggage at Hong Kong's Kaitak International Airport, a spokesman reported.

Acting on a tip, customs officers kept a close watch on all flights arriving here from Thailand, the customs spokesman said.

He said two nylon suitcases arriving on a plane from Bangkok were left unclaimed and, when examined, were found to contain the heroin.

Top world officials mark Rome's liberation

ROME (AP) — Under the solemn gaze of decorated veterans, top officials of the United States, Canada and Italy unveiled a plaque Saturday honoring the U.S. and Canadian commandos who led the Allied liberation of Rome 40 years ago.

"With the sacrifice of so many men, my prayer is that Rome has seen the last of war."Gen. John W. Vessey Jr., chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, said to prolonged applause.

Nearly 300 American and Canadian veterans of World War II attended the ceremony in front of the U.S. Consulate on Rome's fashionable Via Veneto under clear skies.

The consulate was used as the headquarters of the U.S.-Canadian First Special Service Force that swept into Rome on June 4, 1944 after a nine-month-long battle in which Allied forces suffered about 300,000 casualties.

"I feel deeply moved ... It has a great meaning to me," said Anne Frederick-Hicks of Palo Alto, Calif., the only daughter of Brig. Gen. Robert F. Frederick who led the First Special Service Force into Rome.

Ms. Frederick-Hicks, a writer of war history, joined Sen. Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., and others in pulling down the green velvet cover to bare the white marble plaque on the wall of the Consulate.

The ceremony followed another commemoration at Porta San Paolo, the ancient Roman gate through which tanks led commandos of the force to seize the first Nazi-occupied capital in Europe.

"As one who fought in that battle, who spilled some of his own blood and left a bit of himself forever behind, it is a special honor to come back to a nation blessed with the fruits of peace," Dole told hundreds of people gathered around the stone gate.

Dole, who fought as a soldier in the Italian campaign and lost a finger and use of his right arm, represented President Reagan.

The audience included President Sandro Pertini, Premier Bettino Craxi and U.S. Ambassador Maxwell Rabb.

Among the veterans was Maj. Gerry McFadden, 66, of Thunder Bay, Ontario, Canada. He led a battalion of 380 U.S. and Canadian troops in the final assault on Rome.

In the last phase of the battle, McFadden commanded one of two special tank groups, each with 80 men and 10 tanks. When the battle was over and Rome captured, he said his group had only 23 men left.

"Before we mounted the final assault outside the city, there was some question whether Rome was an open city. We didn't know quite what to expect — flower-strewn streets or resistence. But we were prepared for the worst."

"As soon as we crossed into Rome, we came under sniper fire and stiff resistence from retreating Germans."

"But we couldn't call in artillery or aerial bombardment because of thousands of excited Italians roaming around the streets. But once it was clear that we were being hit by snipers, the Italians quickly cleared out, allowing us to go after the Germans."

He said his force suffered high casualties because "we were pushing too hard. We were under enormous pressure to take the first enemy capital — a mission accomplished when we seized 10 bridges of the Tiber."

Dole told the veterans they have reached the age of "funeral going and story telling" and quoted from Alfred Lord Tennyson's "Ulysses."

"Though much is taken, much abides, and though

We are not now that strength which in old days

Moved earth and heaven that which we are, we are —

Sakharov thesis smuggled out before hunger strike

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — An "imaginative" scientific exploration of space and time by Soviet exile Andrei Sakharov has been smuggled out of the Soviet Union, Stanford University announced.

The paper, one of four received from the Nobel Laureate since he was exiled to Gorky in 1980, is now in the Stanford Linear Accelerator Library, the university said Friday.

The paper, a possible explanation of paradoxes produced by theories about the origin of the universe, is titled "Cosmological Transitions with a Change in Metric Signature." Michael Peskin, an associate professor at the library, said the 24-page paper investigates various models of Einsteinian physics involved with space and time.

Peskin called it an "imaginative" exploration of "very elemental scientific issues. He certainly has gone in a different direction."

The typed paper includes scientific notations and formulas handwritten by the physicist, said Sidney Drell, deputy director of the library.

It is not certain when Sakharov wrote the paper, but Drell received it about a month ago, just before Sakharov started a hunger strike in an effort to obtain a visa for his wife so she can get medical treatment in the West.

Gators put bite on Midland Cubs, 7-3

Chamber wants to pack stadium Monday, Tuesday

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Bill Long, Tim Cook and the weatherman combined to put a wet damper on Midland's return home as the Beaumont Golden Gators defeated the Cubs, 7-3, before 1,407 fans at Cubs Stadium Saturday night in the opener of a six-game Texas League series.

Long and Cook teamed up for an 11-hitter for the win and a late inning drizzle drove off most of the fans before it was over. It was Long's seventh win in eight decisions and second over the Cubs. Cook took over in the sixth to gain his first save.

CENTERFIELDER Steve Johnson, coming off a recent 9-for-10 binge, broke up a 2-2 game with a run-scoring double in the Gators' three-run fifth that decided the game. Joe Housey, who had notched three straight wins, suffered his second loss, departing two walks after Johnson's double.

Johnson had two hits and three rbi for the night.

Five Midland pitchers gave up 11 hits and issued seven walks. Every time the Gators scored it seemed as though Jeff Ronk was at the bottom of it. His 4-for-4 with three runs scored didn't hurt his .132 batting average.

The Gators jumped in front 2-0 in the third when Ronk singled, Jim Thomas walked and both moved into scoring position on Bill Long's sacrifice. Johnson got one run in on an infield out and Al Newman singled home the next run.

If there was a bright spot for the Cubs, it had to be Mike Brumley's "arrival" in the Texas League. Acquired from the Boston Red Sox in the Bill Buckner trade, Brumley was 0-for-16 until he doubled down the right field line and later scored on Danny Norman's double in the third. First Baseman Mark Parent was ejected by base umpire J.B. Hance for questioning the call on Brumley's double and at the time that seemed more significant that Brumley's hit. Parent is hitting over .380 against Midland and has knocked in 10 runs against the Cubs.

But Saturday nothing helped.

Brumley, who played shortstop for the University of Texas' national champions last year and was a No. 2 draft pick of the Red Sox last June, singled home Don Hyman, who had walked, in the fourth to make it 2-2.

Hyman, who complained before the game that he hadn't had a multi-hit night since early in the season, went 2-for-2, but beyond that it was a long night for Midland.

However, they get a chance to even matters at 7:30 p.m. today when Mike Capel, 1-6, goes against Jim Leopold, 2-0, a native of Dayton, Ohio, who attended the University of Kentucky.

CUBICLES—Monday and Tuesday are Chamber of Commerce Pack-the-Park nights at Cubs Stadium. More than 20,000 tickets have been distributed to Midland merchants. "The purpose of Pack The Park nights are to show our community pride in the Midland Cubs organization," Dave Griffin, Chamber Sports Committee chairman said. "The tickets are free and we want all of our members, their employees, business associates, family and friends to come out and support the Cubs."

Ken Pryce pitched one win for Midland and was gone as quickly as he came, recalled by Iowa of the American Association...Larry Hrynko, out of baseball last year, was with the Cleveland organization...Pitcher John Huey is out with a shoulder injury, how long is up in the air...Third baseman Tony Woods, out of the cast, will play five or six games in extended spring training at Mesa, Ariz., and then be assigned, probably to Midland...Beaumont's Pat Casey, usually tough on Midland pitching, may miss the entire series as a result of a pulled hamstring...Midland pitcher Jeff Fruge has been assigned to Lodi...

Cal Emery, Penn State-for-national-champs advocate, is in Midland to work with Cub hitters..."It's still walks and errors that are hurting us," reiterates Manager George Enright. "We lost two games in the last inning at Tulsa, one on a walk with the bases loaded and then a walk and an error beat us in the final inning the next night."...Darryl Banks and Ray Soff are Midland's pitchers for Pack-the-Park nights....

Brumley hit .314 for the Red Sox' Winter Haven, Fla., farm club last year after a .298 season for the Longhorns...

Women ready for 49th WWT

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

A field of 144 golfers from Midland and around the state are ready to compete in the 49th annual Women's West Texas Golf tournament at Green Tree Country Club.

Local professionals Tom Kite, who plays out of Green Tree Country Club on the PGA tour, and Judy Rankin of Midland from the LPGA will be on hand.

Kite will give an exhibition at 5:30 p.m. Monday while Rankin will be present Wednesday at 7 p.m. to critique videos of the qualifying round for players who are interested.

The tournament will begin Monday morning with qualifying rounds from starting at 7:30 a.m. to determine pairings in the eight flights, with 16 golfers per flight. On Tuesday at 7:30 a.m., the first match play rounds will be held and will continue each day until champions are declared after Friday's play.

THE TOURNAMENT was last held in Midland in 1982 when Farwell's Penny Hughes won the title at Ranchland Hills Country Club. In 1983, Carol Snider won the crown at Amarillo Country Club. Both will be back to try for their second tournament victories.

Over the years, Midland has had four women win the tournament championship. Pat Garner won the first of her five titles in 1951, the first of a five-year string of Tall City winners. Garner defended her title in 1952, lost it to Midlander Gloria Ezell in 1953 and won it in each of the next two years. Her final title came in 1959.

In 1958, Gwen Elwell won her title. Susan Britton — the multi-year city defending champion — in 1972 was the last Midlander to win the Women's West Texas title.

"I would say this this is the largest women's tournament in West Texas," said tournament public relations chairman Patty Fuller. "We're very proud to hold it in Midland. We had it here in 1982 but we don't expect it to be back in Midland for a number of years. It will be in Lubbock next year for the golden anniversary."

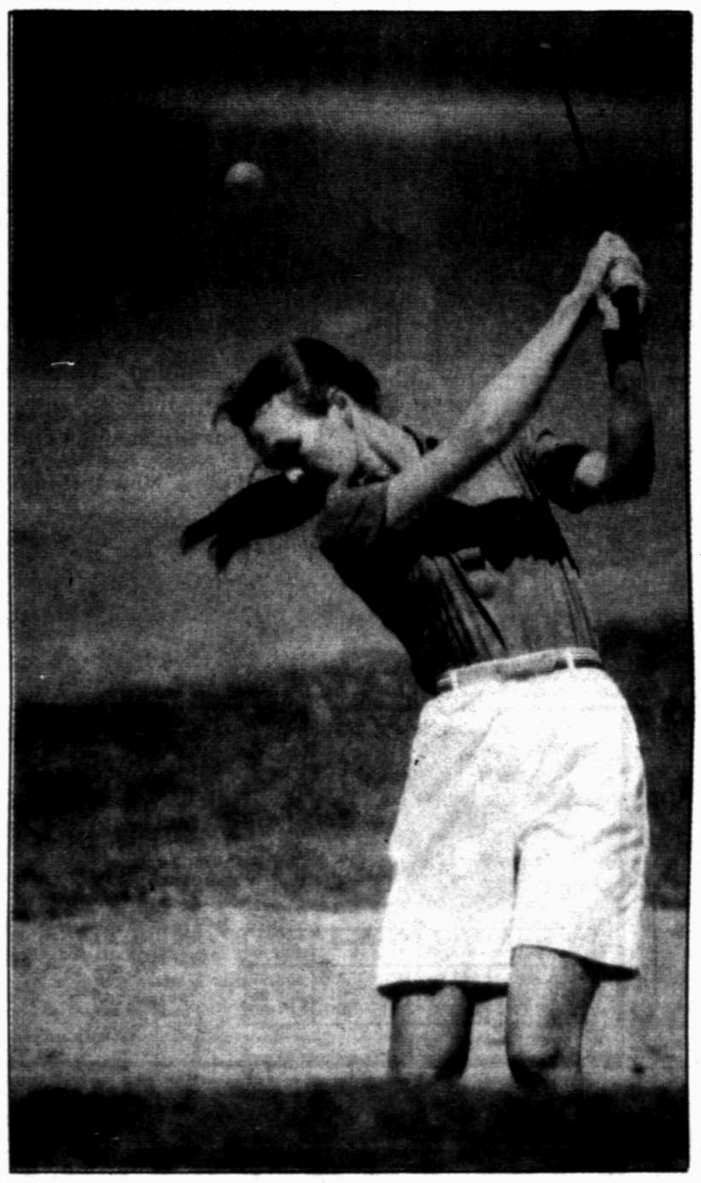

Fuller also added that Green Tree is in "first class condition for this year's tournament and we're just hoping for good weather."

Three Midland golfers seem to have a real shot at qualifying for the championship flight, two of which play for New Mexico State University: Ann Combes and Kelle Mobley, both Midland High graduates.

The third golfer is Nancy Coalter, who holds championships from Royal Oaks Country Club in Dallas and Midland's Ranchland Hills and Green Tree country clubs.

"Ann Coombes and Kelle Mobley have been playing this past year at New Mexico State and both are very capable golfers," said Fuller. "I'd say any of the three have a good chance of winning the tournament."

Cowboys, Devils take victories

College Series

OMAHA — Pete Incaviglia and Randy Whisler knocked in three runs each to spark second-ranked Oklahoma State to a 9-5 come-from-behind win over seventh-ranked Maine in first-round baseball action in the NCAA College World Series at Omaha.

The victory Saturday night sends the 59-13 Cowboys into Tuesday's 7:10 p.m. winners' bracket game against No. 1-ranked Arizona State, 54-18, which posted a 9-6 comeback win over Miami earlier Saturday.

Maine, now 33-19, meets No. 5-ranked Miami, 47-27, in a Sunday elimination game at 7:10 p.m., following New Orleans, 45-25, against Michigan, 43-19, at 4:10 p.m.

New Orleans, 58-12, lost to Texas 6-3 and Michigan dropped an 8-4 contest to 62-19 Cal State-Fullerton Friday night. Those winners meet in a 7:10 p.m. game Monday.

Oklahoma State mirrored Arizona State's earlier Saturday victory when the Cowboys came from a 4-0 deficit to pick away at Maine's All-American pitcher Bill Swift.

ASU had trailed Miami 5-0 after two innings, but used Don Wakamatsu's two-run homer in the eighth to win.

Maine's Rick Lashua tripled to lead off the contest and scored on a single by Tim Layman.

Layman came home on Jeff Paul's third homer of the year.

Lashua singled home a run in the second before Oklahoma State began to solve Swift's pitching in the third.

Incaviglia's infield single scored Doug Dascenzo in the third, then Whisler doubled home Brad Bell in the fourth and Dascenzo singled home a third OSU run in the fourth.

The Cowboys erupted for five runs in the fifth when Incaviglia doubled one home, Gary Green's infield hit scored another and Whisler tripled to score two more. Whisler scored the fifth run on an infield error to put OSU ahead 8-4.

Incaviglia, the nation's top RBI producer this season, knocked in his 98th run of the year with another double to score Mike Day in the eighth after Maine picked up one run on Ed Hackett's run-scoring double.

Arizona St. 9, Miami 6

Don Wakamatsu's two-run homer in the bottom of the eighth inning lifted No. 1-ranked Arizona State to an 9-6 victory over fifth-ranked Miami in first-round action in the NCAA College World Series Saturday.

Wakamatsu's fifth home run of the season sent 54-18 Arizona State to Tuesday's 7:10 p.m. CDT winners' bracket contest against the winner of Saturday night's Maine-Oklahoma State game. Miami, now 47-27, meets the Maine-Oklahoma State loser in a Sunday night elimination game at 7:10 p.m.

Darren Mandel staked Miami to a 4-0 lead in the top of the first when he belted his 20th homer of the season with the bases loaded.

Mandel's hit chased Arizona State starter Kendall Carter and Miami picked up another run off reliever Doug Henry on Phil Lane's run-scoring single in the third.

In Friday's first-round action, defending champion Texas downed New Orleans 6-3 and Cal State-Fullerton downed Michigan 8-4.

Texas, 58-12, meets Fullerton, 61-19, in Monday's 7:10 p.m. winners' bracket game, while Michigan, 43-19, takes on New Orleans, 45-25, in Sunday's 4:10 p.m. elimination game.

North Korea becomes 13th nation to snub Olympics

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As the deadline approached for countries to declare their participation in the Los Angeles Olympics, North Korea on Saturday became the 13th nation to join the Soviet Union in boycotting the Summer Games.

Still, a record 132 nations already were committed, and the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee spent the day waiting for eleventh-hour confirmations or withdrawals.

Nine countries remained in doubt. Chad, Seychelles, Burma, Madagascar and Upper Volta have sent only verbal commitments and four — Angola, Jordan, Lesoto and Somalia — have not responded, LAOOC officials said.

The LAOOC scheduled a Monday news conference to announce the final list of entrants.

Under International Olympic Committee bylaws, nations planning to compete were required to declare by Saturday. In Los Angeles, Olympic officials said they would take entries until 4 a.m. PDT today. They also said entry notices arriving a few hours late would not be rejected.

North Korea joins Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Ethiopia, Hungary, Laos, Mongolia, Poland, South Yemen, the Soviet Union and Vietnam in refusing to attend the Games. Iran, too, is not attending the Los Angeles Games but is not part of the boycott.

The 132 entries already committed to the Games surpasses by 10 the previous mark for record participation set at the 1972 Munich Olympics. Even with a record number of written commitments in hand, the LAOOC's worries aren't over.

Until the athletes begin arriving July 14, there are no guarantees the already diluted Games won't be further damaged by political strife.

"Something could always happen, right up to the last day," said Richard Levin, LAOOC deputy press secretary. "But basically they (the entries) are committed and the International Olympic Committee has conditions that a country could be sanctioned if it backs out."

Amy Quinn, LAOOC press secretary, said there was little chance any country that had either announced its participation or its withdrawal would change its mind as the deadline drew near.

"It's something we don't expect," she said.

The LAOOC initially had counted on 154 countries coming to the Games. Iran was the first to withdraw, backing out more than a year ago.

The biggest worry now for the organizers is preventing a walkout of black African countries. A potential problem is the Zola Budd issue.

The 18-year-old running sensation from South Africa recently was granted British citizenship and last week the British Olympic Committee announced she is eligible to compete for Britain at the Games.

South Africa is barred from most international meets, including the Olympics, because of its apartheid racial policy.

The Congolese news agency ACI referred to the Budd issue last week, saying her inclusion on the British team could bring protests from African nations.

At the 1976 Montreal Games 27 African nations pulled out to protest New Zealand's sports links with South Africa.

No action was taken against the African nations, but in 1977 the IOC adopted a new rule aimed at disciplining athletes and teams who withdraw after making commitments to attend.

The IOC rule says: "No competitor, team or delegation may withdraw from the Olympic Games once the final entries have been made except in the case of illness or force majeure."

Force majeure is an unexpected and disruptive event which would excuse a party from a commitment.

On Friday, Ethiopia became the first African country to back out, but it did not cite Budd as one of the reasons.

Lakers seek satisfaction

NBA Playoffs

LOS ANGELES (AP) — They wanted to leave Boston with a split and did. Still, there's no satisfaction for the Los Angeles Lakers.

They hope to move ahead in the National Basketball Association's Championship Series today when they play the Celtics in Game 3 at the Forum.

Los Angeles faltered in the final seconds of regulation play as Boston went on to a 124-121 overtime victory in Game 2 Thursday night and tied the best-of-seven series. The Lakers knew they missed a big opportunity.

"We snatched defeat from victory," Lakers center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar said after the loss.

"I guess that's kind of inside out, though. We got a split anyway and that's the positive side. I'm confident the guys won't get depressed about it," he said.

"God was on their side, and mother nature was on their side," said James Worthy, who led the Lakers in scoring in Game 2 with 29 points. "This game should have been ours. This is very, very frustrating."

By winning one of the two games in Boston, Los Angeles, which won the first game, 115-109, gained the homecourt advantage. They are, of course, hoping to sweep the next two games.

What if they lose them both?

"I don't think it will come back to haunt us," said Laker forward Jamaal Wilkes, who had his best game of the playoffs with 13 points.

But on second thought Wilkes said even if the Celtics "get one game in the Forum, it might. It may just haunt us yet."

The Celtics did not downplay the importance of winning Game 2.

"It (the win) was much more important for us than it was for them," said Boston reserve guard Danny Ainge.

The two heroes in the Celtics' victory were guards Gerald Henderson and Scott Wedman.

Henderson intercepted a Worthy pass with 18 seconds left in regulation and converted it into a game-tying layup, sending the contest into overtime.

In overtime, Wedman sank a 15-foot baseline jumper to give the Celtics a 122-121 lead with 14 seconds left, and they never relinquished it.

"I said two days ago that it wasn't the big guys who were going to win this series," said Boston forward Cedric Maxwell. "I said it was going to be the little guys, the unknown guys."

Game 4 will be played Wednesday at the Forum and series heads east for Game 5 at Boston Garden on Friday night.

Game 6, if needed, will be played in Los Angeles Sunday, May 10. Game 7, if needed, is slated for Boston on June 12.

Cruz leads Oregon to NCAA track title

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Joaquim Cruz, a durable middle-distance runner, led Oregon to its first outright men's title in 20 years in the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships, while sprinter Randy Givens sparked Florida State to the women's crown Saturday.

The powerful Cruz, a sophomore, added the 1,500-meter title to the 800 championship he had won Friday night with a victory in 3 minutes, 36.48 seconds, the fourth time this year he has broken his personal best and a Brazilian record.

The victory was the first by an Oregon runner in the NCAA 1,500 since Dyrol Burleson won the event for the third straight time in 1962. The Ducks' only other NCAA 1,500 winner was Bill Dellinger, now the Oregon coach, in 1954.

CRUZ, THE first to complete the 800-1,500 double in the NCAA Championships since Villanova's Don Paige in 1979 and only the fourth such double in meet history, went to the front immediately and never was seriously challenged.

Villanova's Marcus O'Sullivan finished second in 3:37.40, and Dub Myers of Oregon rallied to place third in 3:38.94.

"I needed to run in front and I tried to kill them (the other runners) off in the first lap because I knew there were some runners with strong kicks," said Cruz. "If I killed them off early, I didn't think I would have that much trouble."

The 1-3 finish gave Oregon 25 points in the event and pulled the Ducks safely ahead of Washington State, the Pac-10 Conference champion and NCAA favorite. Before the 1,500, Oregon had a precarious 76-74½ advantage over the Cougars. Washington State's only entrant in the 1,500, Omar Ortega, finished last in the 14-man field and did not score.

Oregon, in winning its fifth NCAA title, compiled 113 points in the 21 events contested over six days.

The Ducks won the title outrigt in 1962 and 1964, shared the crown with Southern California in 1965, and tied for first with Kansas and Brigham Young in 1970.

Washington State finished second this time with 94½ points and Arkansas was third with 85.

Florida State's women used their tremendous strength in the sprints to win its first title in the three years the women have competed in the NCAA meet.

The Seminoles, dethroning two-time champion UCLA, amassed 145 points in 19 events. Tennessee finished second with 124 points and Stanford was third with 71.

THE SEMINOLES' leader was the lithe Givens, a senior from Amityville, N.Y. She won the 100-meter dash and ran a leg on the winning mile relay team Friday, then came back and ran on the winning 400-meter relay team, clocked in 43.72, a Hayward Field record, and led a 1-2-3 Florida State sweep — worth 37 points — in the 200 in 22.87 Saturday.

Her four victories were worth 60 points for the swift Seminoles, who also got a victory Saturday from Marita Payne in the 400 in 51.05, another field record. Payne also was a member of both winning relay teams.

Cooper dominates All-District list

By BOB BRUNDAGE

District 4-5A champion Abilene Cooper dominated the 1984 Coaches' All-District first team list, placing five players in the elite group led by unanimous selections Joby Hill, pitcher; Nathan Jones, shortstop; and Kent Strain, outfielder.

Hill, a senior, led the Cougars to first place in 4-5A with a 7-0 record while Jones, a junior, hit an awesome .581 for the year. Strain, a senior who was also named district MVP, hit .489 for the year.

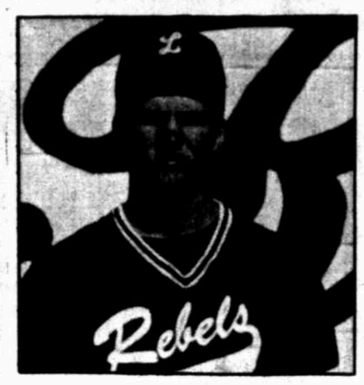

Senior catcher Clay Clemmons, .361, and second baseman Greg Badgett, .467, were also picked for the first team. Cooper coach Andy Malone was named 4-5A Coach of the Year.

In total numbers on the first two teams, Odessa High was the top team with six players selected, two on the first team. Senior OHS outfielder Boyd Cowan, .444, was the final unanimous selection while senior teammate Ricky Rodriquez, .458, was named utility infielder.

For 4-5A runnerup Midland Lee, only senior pitcher Bryan Willis, 7-2, was named to the first squad while senior Steve Woodlee, .405, was picked for second team outfield.

Steve Wootan

Bryan Willis

Midland High, an also-ran this year in the district race, placed senior Steve Wootan, .400, at first team third base while senior Mike Timlin, .405, was selected for second team outfield and junior Darren Thorpe, .333, was picked at second base on the second team.

Thorpe, Jones and Big Spring's Jay Pirkle, .521, outfielder, were the only juniors on the first two teams. No sophomores were named to any unit. On the honorable mention squad, one player selected by a team's coach, all but Midland High's Chris Herbert, a senior, were juniors.

The coaches also selected five players to be submitted for possible All-State honors. Willis, who has signed a letter-of-intent to play baseball for Texas Tech, was the only Midland representative. Other players choosen were Strain, Cowan, Torres and Craig Steen of Odessa Permian.

Willis was selected by the All-Star committee to compete in the State All-Star game on June 23 at the Houston Astrodome. He'll report to Houston on June 21 and practice on June 22.

Monterey eliminates Cooper from baseball playoffs

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — Losses have come few and far between for Lubbock Monterey's baseball team. The Plainsmen lost the first game of a doubleheader here 11-5 in the state playoffs, but bounced back with a 3-0 win to advance to the state playoffs in Austin, which begin Wednesday.

Monterey, 34-4, was bombed in the opener with a six-run sixth by the Cougars. But in the second game, Cooper's offense had no luck against Plainsmen ace Kevin Short. Short silenced the Cougars on a one-hitter for his 12th win of the year against a single defeat.

Monterey defeated Cooper by an 11-4 margin Tuesday in the first game of the quarterfinal series in Lubbock. Friday's one-hitter in the second game in Abilene by Short put the Plainsmen in the state's Final Four.

First Game

Lubbock Monterey	100	100	3	5	4	1

AIR CONDITIONING TRAINING

Our special, intensive, TWO-WEEK course in Refrigeration/Heating/Air Conditioning, is being offered by LINDSEY-COOPER REFRIGERATION SCHOOL, INC., in Irving, TX. This course is designed to teach strictly SERVICE, not engineering, to persons who are interested in getting into the service business.

The 108-hour course, certified by TEXAS EDUCATION AGENCY, is the same course that has proven so popular and beneficial to hundreds in the Dallas/Fort Worth Metroplex, all areas of Texas, at least 25 states and several foreign countries since 1970.

The classes feature both CLASSROOM and LABORATORY TRAINING and are limited to the first twelve persons enrolled. For more information regarding tuition and starting dates, call collect (214) 790-7404, or write:

On the Road Again with Allen and Jackie Cason

If most of your camping is done in areas without modern facilities like electricity ... you might consider the convenience of a portable generator ... If 12 volt lights or a 110 volt fan is all you are needing power to operate the 600 Watt Dometic generator is the right choice ($399.00). This unit is very compact ... and easy to operate. If however, your coach has refrigerated air, you will need a minimum of 3000 watts to carry the compressor ... the 3750 watt portable Dometic generator is the answer here. If your coach has a compartment already prepared for mounting a generator, Dometic offers the 4500 or 5500 watt built-in models.

BILLY SIMS TRAILER TOWN, 520 E. 2nd, Odessa, stocks the complete line of Dometic generators ... come by Mon.-Fri. 9 to 6 or on Saturdays 9 to 5 for more information about these quality power plants.

Beware of installing a generator on the rear of the coach ... like on the bumper ... as this tends to cause sway ... and take away from the proper hitch weight.

Baltimore slows Detroit express

By The Associated Press

DETROIT — Wayne Gross and Ken Singleton each hit two-run, upper deck homers and Storm Davis pitched a three-hit shutout as the Baltimore Orioles defeated the Detroit Tigers 5-0.

Davis, 6-1, struck out only two batters but retired the side in order four times in notching second shutout of the year and fourth complete game in 11 starts. Jack Morris, 10-2, was the loser, giving up seven hits and five runs in six innings. He was relieved by Willie Hernandez in the seventh inning.

The game evened the first series of the season between the runaway Tigers and the defending world champions at one game apiece. Third-place Baltimore is now 10½ games behind Detroit, which lost for only the 10th time in 48 games this year.

Mariners 10, Rangers 7

ARLINGTON — Larry Milbourne's tie-breaking single highlighted a four-run ninth inning Saturday night that gave the Seattle Mariners a 10-7 victory over the Texas Rangers.

Bob Stoddard, 1-2, got the victory, after relieving Roy Thomas in the seventh. Dave Schmidt, 0-3, took the loss.

Phil Bradley opened the ninth with a walk off Joey McLaughlin, who was replaced by Dave Schmidt, 0-3. He got two outs, but Al Cowens singled to right, driving in Bradley with the trying run.

Steve Henderson and Milbourne also singled, Bob Kearney reached first on an error by third baseman Buddy Bell that allowed Henderson to score the third run, then Spike Owen drove in Milbourne with an infield single. Bob Stoddard, 1-2, was the winner.

Blue Jays 9, Yankees 8

TORONTO — Pinch-hitter Ernie Whitt ripped a bases-loaded single off the rightfield wall in the 10th inning to give the Toronto Blue Jays a 9-8 victory over the New York Yankees, their 19th consecutive one-run win.

The win, Toronto's 14th in its last 16 games, moved the Blue Jays to within 4½ games of the Detroit Tigers in the American League East.

Reliever Clay Christiansen, 1-2, started the 10th by hitting pinch-hitter Dave Collins. Alfredo Griffin forced Collins at second, and took second when catcher Butch Wynegar threw the ball into centerfield after catching him off first.

Dennis Lamp, the former Midland Cub and fifth Toronto pitcher, picked the win to go to 3-2.

Royals 7, Twins 6

MINNEAPOLIS — Willie Wilson broke a 10th-inning tie with his fourth single of the game, then he scored on Pat Sheridan's double that gave the Kansas City Royals a 7-6 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Onix Concepcion doubled with two outs off Len Whitehouse, 0-1, then Ron Davis came on and gave up Wilson's single to left-center field. Sheridan's double to left, the Royals' 15th hit of the game, added what turned out to be the winning run, offsetting Gary Gaetti's run-scoring single in the bottom of the 10th. Minnesota also had 15 hits.

The Twins sent the game into extra innings with two runs in the bottom of the ninth off Royals' relief ace Dan Quisenberry, 3-2.

Red Sox 6, Brewers 3

MILWAUKEE — Tony Armas and Mike Easler belted consecutive home runs in the sixth to power the Boston Red Sox to a 6-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Milwaukee's Robin Yount hit his fourth and fifth home runs of the season to key the Brewers' offense.

A's 6, White Sox 3

CHICAGO — Dwayne Murphy drove in two runs with his eighth homer and a single, Joe Morgan hit a record-tying homer and Rickey Henderson had two hits and scored twice to lead the Oakland A's to a 6-3 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

The triumph snapped Oakland's eight-game road losing streak and was credited to starter Ray Burris, 5-2, with Bill Caudill earning his 11th save. Richard Dotson, 7-3, took the loss.

Morgan hit a solo homer off Al Jones in the ninth inning, the 266th of his career but his 264th as a second baseman, tying him with the late Rogers Hornsby for the most home runs by a second baseman. His two others came as an outfielder for Houston.

Angels 6, Indians 4

CLEVELAND — Dick Schofield raced home with the tie-breaking run in the ninth inning on Earnie Camacho's wild pitch to give the California Angels a 6-4 win over the Cleveland Indians Saturday night.

Trailing 4-3 in the ninth, California's Jerry Narron grounded a single to chase reliever Tom Wadell.

Camacho, 1-5, took over and Schofield grounded an apparent double play ball to Julio Franco but the shortstop booted it for his 16th error, allowing pinch runner Rob Picciolo to reach third.

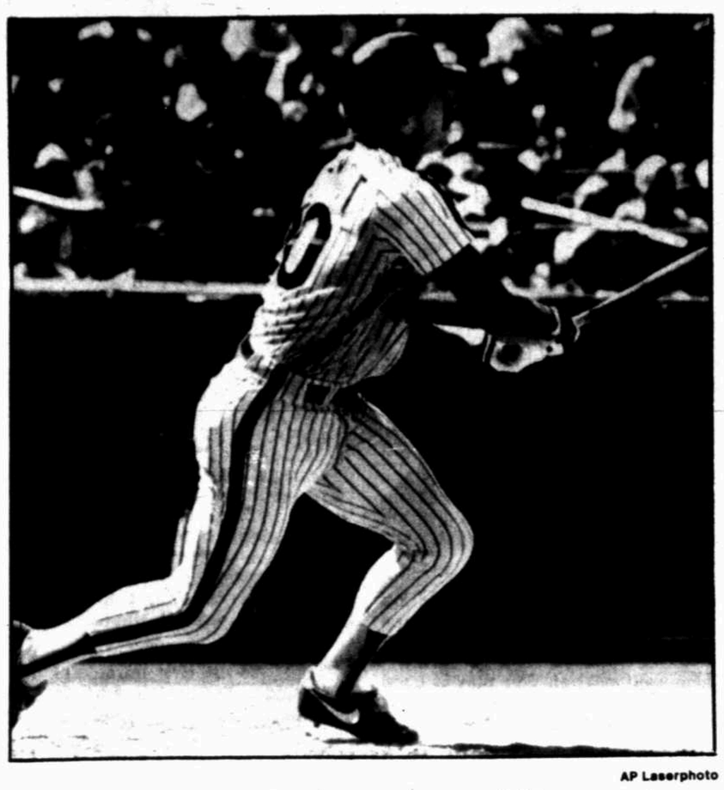

Picciolo scored by beating third baseman Brook Jacoby's throw to the plate on a grounder by Juan Beniquez.

Phils roll Cubs out of first place

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Schmidt, who drove in all three Philadelphia runs, cracked a two-run homer in the bottom of the eighth to give the Phillies a 3-2 victory over the Chicago Cubs Saturday that put them back in first place in the National League East.

After Keith Moreland's homer in the top of the eighth had given the Cubs a 2-1 lead, Von Hayes opened the Philadelphia half with a single to left off Lee Smith, who had relieved Dennis Eckersley to start the inning. Schmidt then hit a 1-1 pitch over the leftfield fence for his 13th homer of the season.

Al Holland, 4-2, gained the victory despite giving up Moreland's home run. Smith fell to 3-3. The game was played before 40,102 fans in Veterans Stadium, Philadelphia's largest crowd of the season.

The Cubs' Jody Davis went 0 for 3, snapping his 15-game hitting streak.

Braves 9, Reds 3

CINCINNATI — Pitcher Pascual Perez tripled home a pair of runs and scattered five hits over 7⅔ innings and Glenn Hubbard hit a two-run homer, pacing the Atlanta Braves to a 9-3 victory over Cincinnati, their fourth consecutive victory over the Reds.

Perez, 5-1, struck out four and walked one. In the eighth inning he walked Tom Hume with two away, then Gary Redus singled before Eddie Milner chased Perez with his third homer of the season.

Terry Forster took over and earned his fourth save. Brad Komminsk and Randy Johnson each had three of Atlanta's 14 hits.

The Braves jumped on Bob Owchinko, 2-2, for three runs in the fourth inning. Rafael Ramirez singled, took second on a wild pitch and went to third on Dale Muprhy's single. Murphy was doubled up on Bob Watson's fly out, but Komminsk singled to score Ramirez and Hubbard followed with his sixth homer of the season.

Padres 3, Giants 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Carmelo Martinez's sacrifice fly in the 10th inning scored pinch-runner Bobby Brown and gave the San Diego Padres a 3-2 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Terry Kennedy opened the 10th with a single off Scott Garrelts, 1-1, and Brown ran for him. Brown stole second, moved to third on Kevin McReynolds' sacrifice bunt and scored on former Midland Cub Martinez's fly to left.

Goose Gossage, 2-1, who yielded a game-tying, wind-blown, two-run double to Jack Clark in the ninth, was the winner, striking out five Giants in two innings.

Mets 5, Cardinals 2

NEW YORK — Ed Lynch and Doug Sisk combined on an eight-hitter, Mookie Wilson hit a two-run homer and Mike Fitzgerald drilled a tie-breaking single as the New York Mets snapped a four-game losing streak with a 5-2 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Hubie Brooks' 24-game hitting streak, the longest in the major leagues this season, came to an end as the Mets' third baseman went hitless in four at bats.

Lynch, 5-1, gave up eight hits, striking out three and walking two before Sisk took over after Tom Herr's leadoff double in the eighth inning. Sisk pitched hitless ball to collect his fifth save. Danny Cox, 2-7, was the loser, allowing all five runs on eight hits in 4⅓ innings.

Fitzgerald put the Mets in front to stay with his single following Danny Heep's two-out double in the fourth inning and the Mets added two runs in the fifth.

Pirates 2, Expos 1

PITTSBURGH — Tony Pena scored from first base on Doug Frobel's two-out, seventh-inning single Saturday as the Pittsburgh Pirates edged the Montreal Expos 2-1 behind the pitching of Lee Tunnell and reliever Kent Tekulve.

Tunnell, 1-2, making his first start of the season, scattered eight hits over seven innings before giving way to Tekulve, who earned his fifth save.

With the score tied 1-1, Pena singled with two out in the seventh and was running on the pitch when Frobel singled down the right-field line. First baseman Terry Francona's relay throw appeared to beat Pena to the plate, but he slid under the tag of catcher Gary Carter.

Tunnell allowed at least one hit in each of the first seven innings, but twice worked out of two-out, two-on jams.He struck out two and walked two as a replacement for scheduled starter John Candelaria, scratched because of tendinitis.

Oklahoma Outlaws blitzed, 14-0

TULSA (AP) — A 1-yard touchdown run by Vagas Ferguson late in the first quarter was all the Chicago Blitz needed to beat the Oklahoma Outlaws 14-0 in a United States Football League game Saturday night.

Chicago padded its lead late in the fourth quarter on a 14-yard touchdown run by Larry Canada. The touchdown capped an 11-play, 94-yard drive.

The victory upped the Blitz's record to 6-9. The loss by Oklahoma, 6-9, was its seventh straight after going 6-2 in the first half of the season.

Ferguson's run ended a 98-yard, 16-play, drive by the Blitz.

Chicago quarterback Ron Reeves, starting his second game, threw five complete passes in the drive, including one for 23 yards to wide receiver Chris Haines. Reeves completed 18 of 28 passes for 209 yards.

The Outlaws failed to capitalize on Blitz miscues in the first half, including the recovery of a Reeves fumble by Bob Nelson on the second play of the game, and a blocked punt that put Oklahoma on the Chicago 45.

Wolfe wins triathlon title

From Staff Reports

Over 250 participants took part in the first-ever Tall City Triathlon, with Kevin Wolfe winning the event in a time of one hour, 44 minutes and 22 seconds.

The triathlon is an endurance test that has competitors run, swim and bicycle distances in one afternoon. Entrants started at Doug Russell pool in Midland, where they swam 1,000 meters. From there, they bicycled down highway 191 to Odessa, then came back to Mission Country Club. The bike ride totaled 30 kilometers. At MCC, the competitors ran 10 kilometers to complete the race.

The evnt, which drew entries from as far away as Dallas, Austin and Houston, was co-sponsored by the Midland chapter March of Dimes and Central YMCA.

Baltimore slows Detroit express

By The Associated Press

DETROIT — Wayne Gross and Ken Singleton each hit two-run, upper deck homers and Storm Davis pitched a three-hit shutout as the Baltimore Orioles defeated the Detroit Tigers 5-0.

Davis, 6-1, struck out only two batters but retired the side in order four times in notching second shutout of the year and fourth complete game in 11 starts. Jack Morris, 10-2, was the loser, giving up seven hits and five runs in six innings. He was relieved by Willie Hernandez in the seventh inning.

The game evened the first series of the season between the runaway Tigers and the defending world champions at one game apiece. Third-place Baltimore is now 10½ games behind Detroit, which lost for only the 10th time in 48 games this year.

Mariners 10, Rangers 7

ARLINGTON — Larry Milbourne's tie-breaking single highlighted a four-run ninth inning Saturday night that gave the Seattle Mariners a 10-7 victory over the Texas Rangers.

Bob Stoddard, 1-2, got the victory, after relieving Roy Thomas in the seventh. Dave Schmidt, 0-3, took the loss.

Phil Bradley opened the ninth with a walk off Joey McLaughlin, who was replaced by Dave Schmidt, 0-3. He got two outs, but Al Cowens singled to right, driving in Bradley with the trying run.

Steve Henderson and Milbourne also singled, Bob Kearney reached first on an error by third baseman Buddy Bell that allowed Henderson to score the third run, then Spike Owen drove in Milbourne with an infield single. Bob Stoddard, 1-2, was the winner.

Blue Jays 9, Yankees 8

TORONTO — Pinch-hitter Ernie Whitt ripped a bases-loaded single off the rightfield wall in the 10th inning to give the Toronto Blue Jays a 9-8 victory over the New York Yankees, their 19th consecutive one-run win.

The win, Toronto's 14th in its last 16 games, moved the Blue Jays to within 4½ games of the Detroit Tigers in the American League East.

Reliever Clay Christiansen, 1-2, started the 10th by hitting pinch-hitter Dave Collins. Alfredo Griffin forced Collins at second, and took second when catcher Butch Wynegar threw the ball into centerfield after catching him off first.

Dennis Lamp, the former Midland Cub and fifth Toronto pitcher, picked the win to go to 3-2.

Royals 7, Twins 6

MINNEAPOLIS — Willie Wilson broke a 10th-inning tie with his fourth single of the game, then he scored on Pat Sheridan's double that gave the Kansas City Royals a 7-6 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Onix Concepcion doubled with two outs off Len Whitehouse, 0-1, then Ron Davis came on and gave up Wilson's single to left-center field. Sheridan's double to left, the Royals' 15th hit of the game, added what turned out to be the winning run, offsetting Gary Gaetti's run-scoring single in the bottom of the 10th. Minnesota also had 15 hits.

Red Sox 6, Brewers 3

MILWAUKEE — Tony Armas and Mike Easler belted consecutive home runs in the sixth to power the Boston Red Sox to a 6-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Milwaukee's Robin Yount hit his fourth and fifth home runs of the season to key the Brewers' offense.

A's 6, White Sox 3

CHICAGO — Dwayne Murphy drove in two runs with his eighth homer and a single, Joe Morgan hit a record-tying homer and Rickey Henderson had two hits and scored twice to lead the Oakland A's to a 6-3 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

The triumph snapped Oakland's eight-game road losing streak and was credited to starter Ray Burris, 5-2, with Bill Caudill earning his 11th save. Richard Dotson, 7-3, took the loss.

Morgan hit a solo homer off Al Jones in the ninth inning, the 266th of his career but his 264th as a second baseman, tying him with the late Rogers Hornsby for the most home runs by a second baseman. His two others came as an outfielder for Houston.

Angels 6, Indians 4

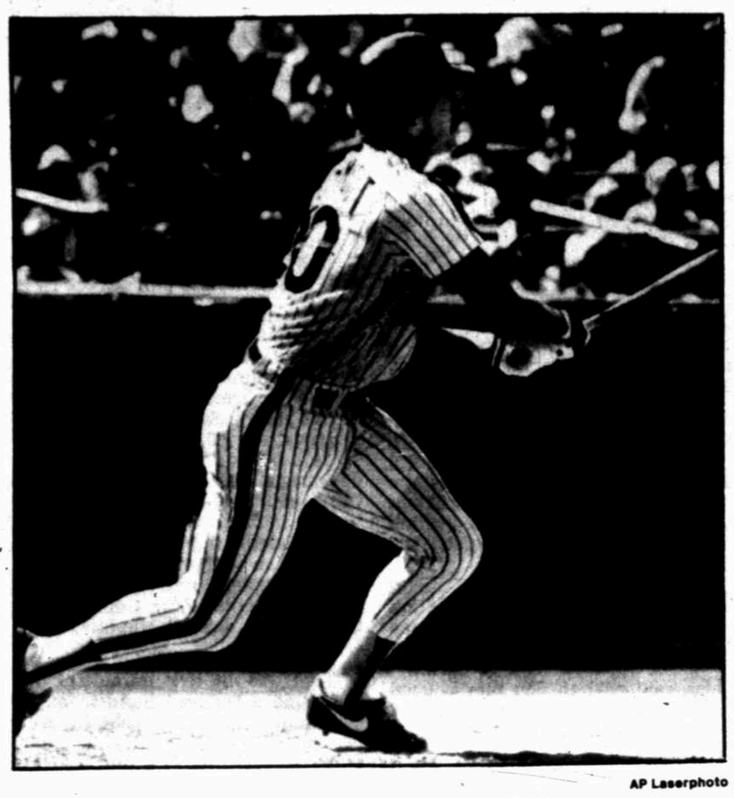

CLEVELAND — Dick Schofield raced home with the tie-breaking run in the ninth inning on Earnie Camacho's wild pitch to give the California Angels a 6-4 win over the Cleveland Indians Saturday night.

Trailing 4-3 in the ninth, California's Jerry Narron grounded a single to chase reliever Tom Wadell.

Camacho, 1-5, took over and Schofield grounded an apparent double play ball to Julio Franco but the shortstop booted it for his 16th error, allowing pinch runner Rob Picciolo to reach third.

Picciolo scored by beating third baseman Brook Jacoby's throw to the plate on a grounder by Juan Beniquez.

Phils roll Cubs out of first place

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Schmidt, who drove in all three Philadelphia runs, cracked a two-run homer in the bottom of the eighth to give the Phillies a 3-2 victory over the Chicago Cubs Saturday that put them back in first place in the National League East.

After Keith Moreland's homer in the top of the eighth had given the Cubs a 2-1 lead, Von Hayes opened the Philadelphia half with a single to left off Lee Smith, who had relieved Dennis Eckersley to start the inning. Schmidt then hit a 1-1 pitch over the leftfield fence for his 13th homer of the season.

Al Holland, 4-2, gained the victory despite giving up Moreland's home run. Smith fell to 3-3. The game was played before 40,102 fans in Veterans Stadium, Philadelphia's largest crowd of the season.

The Cubs' Jody Davis went 0 for 3, snapping his 15-game hitting streak.

Braves 9, Reds 3

CINCINNATI — Pitcher Pascual Perez tripled home a pair of runs and scattered five hits over 7⅔ innings and Glenn Hubbard hit a two-run homer, pacing the Atlanta Braves to a 9-3 victory over Cincinnati, their fourth consecutive victory over the Reds.

Perez, 5-1, struck out four and walked one. In the eighth inning he walked Tom Hume with two away, then Gary Redus singled before Eddie Milner chased Perez with his third homer of the season.

Terry Forster took over and earned his fourth save. Brad Komminsk and Randy Johnson each had three of Atlanta's 14 hits.

The Braves jumped on Bob Owchinko, 2-2, for three runs in the fourth inning. Rafael Ramirez singled, took second on a wild pitch and went to third on Dale Murphy's single. Murphy was doubled up on Bob Watson's fly out, but Komminsk singled to score Ramirez and Hubbard followed with his sixth homer of the season.

Padres 3, Giants 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Carmelo Martinez's sacrifice fly in the 10th inning scored pinch-runner Bobby Brown and gave the San Diego Padres a 3-2 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Terry Kennedy opened the 10th with a single off Scott Garrelts, 1-1, and Brown ran for him. Brown stole second, moved to third on Kevin McReynolds' sacrifice bunt and scored on former Midland Cub Martinez's fly to left.

Goose Gossage, 2-1, who yielded a game-tying, wind-blown, two-run double to Jack Clark in the ninth, was the winner, striking out five Giants in two innings.

Mets 5, Cardinals 2

NEW YORK — Ed Lynch and Doug Sisk combined on an eight-hitter, Mookie Wilson hit a two-run homer and Mike Fitzgerald drilled a tie-breaking single as the New York Mets snapped a four-game losing streak with a 5-2 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Hubie Brooks' 24-game hitting streak, the longest in the major leagues this season, came to an end as the Mets' third baseman went hitless in four at bats.

Lynch, 5-1, gave up eight hits, striking out three and walking two before Sisk took over after Tom Herr's leadoff double in the eighth inning. Sisk pitched hitless ball to collect his fifth save. Danny Cox, 2-7, was the loser, allowing all five runs on eight hits in 4⅓ innings.

Fitzgerald put the Mets in front to stay with his single following Danny Heep's two-out double in the fourth inning and the Mets added two runs in the fifth.

Pirates 2, Expos 1

PITTSBURGH — Tony Pena scored from first base on Doug Frobel's two-out, seventh-inning single Saturday as the Pittsburgh Pirates edged the Montreal Expos 2-1 behind the pitching of Lee Tunnell and reliever Kent Tekulve.

Tunnell, 1-2, making his first start of the season, scattered eight hits over seven innings before giving way to Tekulve, who earned his fifth save.

With the score tied 1-1, Pena singled with two out in the seventh and was running on the pitch when Frobel singled down the right-field line. First baseman Terry Francona's relay throw appeared to beat Pena to the plate, but he slid under the tag of catcher Gary Carter.

Tunnell allowed at least one hit in each of the first seven innings, but twice worked out of two-out, two-on jams.He struck out two and walked two as a replacement for scheduled starter John Candelaria, scratched because of tendinitis.

NL Roundup

Oklahoma Outlaws blitzed, 14-0

TULSA (AP) — A 1-yard touchdown run by Vagas Ferguson late in the first quarter was all the Chicago Blitz needed to beat the Oklahoma Outlaws 14-0 in a United States Football League game Saturday night.

Chicago padded its lead late in the fourth quarter on a 14-yard touchdown run by Larry Canada. The touchdown capped an 11-play, 94-yard drive.

The victory upped the Blitz's record to 6-9. The loss by Oklahoma, 6-9, was its seventh straight after going 6-2 in the first half of the season.

Ferguson's run ended a 98-yard, 16-play, drive by the Blitz.

Chicago quarterback Ron Reeves, starting his second game, threw five complete passes in the drive, including one for 23 yards to wide receiver Chris Haines. Reeves completed 18 of 28 passes for 209 yards.

The Outlaws failed to capitalize on Blitz miscues in the first half, including the recovery of a Reeves fumble by Bob Nelson on the second play of the game, and a blocked punt that put Oklahoma on the Chicago 45.

Wolfe wins triathlon title

From Staff Reports

Over 250 participants took part in the first-ever Tall City Triathlon, with Kevin Wolfe winning the event in a time of one hour, 44 minutes and 22 seconds.

The triathlon is an endurance test that has competitors run, swim and bicycle distances in one afternoon. Entrants started at Doug Russell pool in Midland, where they swam 1,000 meters. From there, they bicycled down highway 191 to Odessa, then came back to Mission Country Club. The bike ride totaled 30 kilometers. At MCC, the competitors ran 10 kilometers to complete the race.

The evnt, which drew entries from as far away as Dallas, Austin and Houston, was co-sponsored by the Midland chapter March of Dimes and Central YMCA.

'F' for forgetting

After all the attention that has been focused on public education the past few months, only someone who's been lost in darkest Africa the last several years cannot be aware that, yes, the schools have their share of problems.

In fact, most people probably are aware that the schools in Texas need to do a better job of educating youngsters. All the attention seems to have resolved that matter and on Monday Texas legislators begin a special session called for the expressed purpose of determining in what ways to reform the educational system.

What will evolve is a matter of speculation at this point. Although agreeing wholeheartedly with the premise that education reform is needed, we're dubious as to whether that end will be accomplished in the next month.

That's because the education issue has been scrutinized closely by the Select Committee on Education — the infamous group headed by Dallas computer magnate H. Ross Perot — and others and a voluminous amount of reform proposals have been widely publicized.

The reforms recommended by Perot's group undoubtedly are the most wide-ranging and controversial. They've drawn no small amount of flack and will be hotly debated in the special session. It goes without saying that the total package offered by the select committee will not be unanimously accepted in the session. Perot, who is adamant in insisting on the whole ball of wax or nothing, is offering a wish list on education, surely fully aware he cannot hope for all that he seeks but knowing that the more he asks for, the more he's liable to end up getting.

Perot deserves credit. He was appointed and willingly accepted a difficult and unpopular task. He waded into the situation, took the bull by the horns and promptly began to gore oxes that had been thought of as sacred cows in Texas education circles for decades. In the process he made a lot of enemies. But he made a lot of friends, too. Most importantly he helped to focus public attention on a subject that has too long been neglected.

What's even more staggering than some of the select committee's recommendations is the price tag attached to the total package. If the total package was accepted, it would increase the expenditure on education in this state by several billion dollars each year. As most Texans are aware, even a much-improved educational system isn't going to justify that expense with all the other money-siphoning matters facing the state. It simply isn't feasible.

But it is feasible to improve the system, to compromise and come up with a better educational product at a price the state's taxpayers can stomach. Maybe not in this special session, as we've noted, because the issue strikes at the heart of every legislator's hometown and most are not likely to be in a frame of mind to enact a large tax increase which would be needed to fund the major overhaul that's needed.

At best what's likely to be achieved is a pared-down educational reform plan that can be improved in the next regular session. If nothing can be carved out during this special session, education reform should not be forgotten but should become the top priority for the next session.

If not, this state's legislators truly do deserve a failing grade.

And now, highways

When legislators are not occupied in the special session that begins next week trying to sort out the education dilemma, they'll be asked to come up with a way to fund additional improvements to the state's highway system.

That may sound like a simple task, but it won't be.

There's no question about the need. Texas' highway network, long known nationwide as one of the best, is aging, deteriorating and, in some regards, in need of expansion.

Gov. Mark White has talked about getting highway funding by increasing the state gasoline tax. Currently, 25 percent of any increase in that fuel tax is constitutionally dedicated to education, according to officials with the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

That could raise one concern because Texans, while fully recognizing the need for improvements in the educational system, may insist that any increase in the gasoline tax go totally for highway improvements. That would necessitate changing the existing law.

But there are other considerations no less troublesome. One traditionally irritating aspect of funding highways for West Texans has been watching their tax dollars go for construction of ultra-expensive freeways in far-distant parts of the state like Houston and Dallas while local highways were left in their deteriorating condition.

Obviously that result is not going to be acceptable this time. West Texans want an increase in the gasoline tax to fund construction and maintenance of the highways they're driving on and for this region's highways to be included in that work.

The highways need improvement, but we want to see the results while driving down our roads.

JACK ANDERSON

Nuclear mines a threat, too

WASHINGTON — The Pershing-cruise missile controversy has disrupted U.S.-Soviet relations, strained the NATO alliance and sparked demonstrations by peace groups throughout Europe. But something that poses a possibly greater nuclear threat has gotten no headlines: the intended use of "atomic demolition munitions," or ADMs, in the early stages of conventional warfare between East and West.

Jack Anderson

The little-known ADMs are the land mines and satchel charges of the nuclear age. Dug into the ground for maximum demolition effect, they could blow up the bridges or dams and block the mountain passes and highways that conventional Warsaw Pact forces would use to overrun Western Europe.

The ADMs are intended primarily for destruction of real estate, not tanks or personnel. In fact, they are deliberately designed to minimize fallout, since they would be used mainly in friendly territory to stop an enemy advance.

For that reason, though, ADMs are more tempting to use. Yet a nuke is a nuke, and the first use of any nuclear device might escalate into a holocaust.

My associate Dale Van Atta has reviewed secret military documents and an obscure, 150-page Army field manual, "Employment of Atomic Demolition Munitions," which detail the uses, advantages and disadvantages of the nuclear weapons that few people have even heard about outside the Pentagon. Here's what he learned:

The Army first deployed ADMs in Western Europe, the Pacific and the United States in the mid-1960s, and they are still there, ready to repel a communist invasion. There are two types: Medium and Special ADMs — or MADMs and SADMs.

As of early 1983, according to a secret Pentagon report, the United States had a total of 608 ADMs — 372 in Europe (mostly in West Germany), 21 in the Pacific (mostly in South Korea) and the rest stored in this country.

The SADM is so small — 58 pounds — that it can be carried in a commando's backpack on a raid behind enemy lines. Its maximum explosive power is one kiloton — equal to 1,000 tons of TNT — and it can be tuned down to the equivalent of 10 tons of TNT.

The SADM's small size is both its advantage and disadvantage: It would be easy for terrorists to steal. To protect the devices from theft, U.S. bases that have SADMs also have tight security measures, including better fences, light towers, barbed wire covering the weapons themselves, and smoke and noise generators that would be triggered if intruders got into the bunkers where the SADMs are stored.

The nuclear wallop of the MADMs ranges from one kiloton to a Hiroshima-sized 15 kilotons. Yet it weighs less than 400 pounds, and can be transported easily by boat, helicopter or jeep.

According to the Army field manual, ADMs can be fired by remote control or by the use of timers, with up to 12 hours delay. Designed to be buried underground, the ADMs' three chief effects are cratering, blast and ground shock.

"Cratering is used to destroy massive targets, such as large bridges and dams, and to create obstacles by excavating a great volume of material, as in producing craters or landslides," the manual explains. "Blast is used to damage extensive surface targets such as depot complexes, (or below water) port complexes. ... Ground shock is effective in the destruction of underground targets such as installations, fortifications and pipelines."

Because friendly troops would be operating in the area of ADM demolition, the weapons are designed to be as "clean" as possible, giving off minimal but still deadly radiaton. "A large fraction (of the radiation) is trapped by particles of debris and ejecta which fall back into the crater or on the lip and become buried in the rubble," the manual states. A diagram of an ADM crater shows a "puddle of radioactive glass" beneath the blast.

Less than 25 percent of the ADM explosion's radioactive debris is spewed into the atmosphere, but the manual warns of other dangers that friendly troops must beware of: "Flying debris, stones and sand are converted into missiles by the blast wave, thereby causing casualties to unprotected personnel. Hot, dust-laden gases may cause burns. Airborne dust may cause irritation and possible suffocation as well as limit visibility and movement within and adjacent to the target areas."

Though ADMs could theoretically be used as tactical offensive weapons to impede or block enemy counterattacks, their principal use would be defensive: to "block avenues of approach by cratering defiles or creating rubble; sever routes of communication by destroying tunnels, bridges, roads and canal locks; create areas of tree blowdown and forest fires; crater areas including frozen bodies of water subject to landings by hostile airmobile units, (and) create water barriers by the destruction of dams and reservoirs."

NATO sources said the nuclear demolition devices' best use would be in narrow valleys or mountain passes, near superhighways and in tunnels. "A blocked defile can stop an enemy advance and cause him to mass in an area where he can be destroyed by nuclear weapons," the manual explains.

Ideally, from a military standpoint, ADMs should be in place ahead of time. But politically it would be impossible to do this in Western Europe. In fact, the ADMs will be phased out over the next few years as the Pershing and cruise missiles take over a larger resonsibility for NATO's defense.

GEORGE F. WILL

Cuomo's diaries reveal politician

WASHINGTON — Prominent politicians are subjected to unremitting scrutiny, so they polish their surfaces until they shine like fine enamel. This whets our desire for some incision in the surface through which we might glimpse an interesting interior, something softer and less brittle than enamel.

George F. Will

Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York has committed a self-incision by publishing diaries written during the two years prior to his election in 1982. The result is a remarkable addition to the permanent literature of our politics. Even persons in whom the fires of partisanship are well-banked will enjoy the drama of a public life examined from within.

The diaries will be unsettling to two groups. Some Democrats will experience — suffer, really — a shock of recognition. They will recognize a political style for which they have lost the knack but which the public rewards. Some Republicans will experience high anxiety, lest Democrats suddenly discover this presidential asset in their midst. The diarist is the Democrat most capable of marshalling his party's strength while matching Ronald Reagan's sense of the nation's healthy nostalgia.

The diaries resemble a Russian novel, and not just because more characters crowd the canvas than sensible readers want to sort out. The diaries also have the themes of guilt and self-absorption, and of guilty self-absorption. Self-absorption is, in a sense, the occupational duty of a diarist and the occupational hazard of a politician whose life is necessarily given over to ambition and calculation.

The diaries record the universal facts of politics — fatigue and a nagging sense that one's family is being penalized — and the special sensibility of the author, whose Catholicism permeates the pages. He wants to square his sense of communitarian vocation — service to the "family" of New York — with the irreducible egoism of the political enterprise.

The astonishing thing is that a political recipe that once was second nature to Democrats now seems astonishing. Cuomo combines Rooseveltian liberalism and social conservatism. He demonstrates for Democrats something that, until 25 years ago, few doubted: It is fine to be enthusiastic about both the welfare state and policemen.

The decline of American liberalism dates from the early 1960s, when it was highjacked by cloth-headed people who lived in suburbs, or high-rise apartments with doormen and security systems, and who decided that concern about crime was covert racism. They discerned "idealism" in brats (often their own) who called policemen "pigs." Cuomo recently initiated New York's own list of a dozen "most wanted" criminals and bestowed the first annual Police Officer of the Year award. Considering the recipient — a 36-year-old detective who in 16 years has earned 210 citations for valor and has arrested 1,200 armed offenders — it is a wonder there are a dozen criminals at large.

Cuomo said: "I grew up in an era when the authority represented by police officers was meaningful, an important part of your value structure." He added: "People who live in the state, the family of New York" (Cuomo can not order lunch without invoking family) "will say, 'Gee whillikers, would I love to have a kid like that!'"

"Gee whillikers"? There is another political person who could naturally use that phrase, and who expresses comparable nostalgia. Four years ago he carried 44 states.

When speaking about criminal justice, Cuomo is not just a father whose daughter has been attacked twice in broad daylight. He also is an echo of liberalism before it lost its bearings. But his voice is lost in the clatter as Jesse Jackson goes to Mexico to attack his own country on foreign soil, and the two frightened little men opposing him talk about everything under the sun but will not express, and may not feel, disgust about Jackson's behavior.

Cuomo's literary life recently involved him in identifying aphorisms falsely ascribed to A.J. Parkinson, who is a creation of the Cuomo imagination. Cuomo says that Parkinson should not be credited with "In government, a dollar saved is a dollar overlooked" or "If it's a free press, why do newspapers use coin-boxes?" And he notes that Brooklyn Democrats deserve credit for "Honesty is no substitute for experience."

But he confesses to having taken certain literary liberties. He once attributed a particularly pithy quotation to Aristotle rather than its real author — Immaculata, his 82-year-old mother, who speaks Italian. He thought people would pay more attention to Aristotle. That is a misjudgment any rookie governor could make.

ART BUCHWALD

Television scraping trash bin!

The TV network program schedulers are becoming more ingenious with each passing season.

The other day I walked into a TV production center and I saw a man sweeping up all kinds of videotape from the floor. I thought he was a janitor, but he turned out to be a vice president in charge of "Creative Programming."

Art Buchwald

"Why are you sweeping the floor?" I asked him.

"There are a lot of good shows here," he said. "I'm looking for TV bloopers and gaffes that I can put together for next week's special."

"You mean mistakes people made that were left on the cutting room floor?"

"You got it. The outtakes of the goofs have now become more popular than the shows themselves. The audience loves them and it doesn't cost us a dime. The trouble is that we've used up so many real goofs that we may soon have to start producing fresh ones just for our show."

"You mean you want people to purposely make mistakes when they're doing a straight program so you can use them on your program?"

"That's correct. We sent out a memo to our news departments and production companies to mess up as much as possible so we can use the foulups on our special. And we're now writing into our contracts that a TV performer has to produce three bloopers for every straight spot that can be aired."

"You've really come up with a cheap form of entertainment."

"All the networks have gotten into the act. No one believed there was gold in all the screwups on TV."

He finished sweeping the floor and handed the videotape to an editor. Then he said, "I have to check on whose birthday is coming up so we can do a special honoring the person."

"I notice there have been a lot of shows featuring old-time TV personalities lately."

"It's a big business. You find some star from the Fifties and Sixties and you give a dinner for him and then you invite all his friends to appear for nothing to say funny things about the person, and you can fill up an hour and a half of prime time. The only one we have to pay is the caterer."

"You have to be a creative genius to think of an idea like that."

"That's what we're paid for."

He took me into the TV library where the staff was going through old tapes. "That group over there is working on a 'Best of Comedy' special, that one over there is splicing 'The Most Memorable Plays in Baseball,' and the third group is preparing a show strictly devoted to TV car crashes. There is no end to how many shows are in this library, and if each special costs more than $800 I'll eat my Nielsen printout."

"Holding down costs seems to be the name of the game in TV."

"You use what you've got. I'm not organizing all our soap operas to compete in the TV 'Soap Olympics.' But our biggest special this year will be a mud wrestling match between the principals of 'Dynasty' and 'Dallas.' If I can arrange it we're talking about a 45 share in the ratings."

"Are you working on any new shows?"

"What do you mean new? The material may be old, but the concepts are original. Anyone can create a brand new show, but it takes imagination to recycle what you've shown already."

We went outside and the vice president started going through the trash can.

"What are you looking for?" I asked him.

"You never can tell what shows are in here, until you hit the bottom of the barrel."

TODAY IN HISTORY

In 1808, Jefferson Davis — who would become the only president of the Confederacy — was born.

Ten years ago: Former Nixon aide Charles Colson pleaded guilty to a charge of trying to obstruct justice and influence the trial of Daniel Ellsberg.

Five years ago: Anti-nuclear demonstrators staged a second day of worldwide protests against nuclear power.

One year ago: Militant tax protester Gordon Kahl died in a shootout with authorities in Arkansas.

Today's birthdays: Actor Maurice Evans is 83. Actor Tony Curtis is 59. Actress Colleen Dewhurst and poet Allen Ginsberg are 58. Musician Curtis Mayfield is 42.

Thought for today: "Information is the currency of democracy." — Ralph Nader, consumer activist.

In everyday 'War Games,' computers are winning

Bill Modisett

In the movie "War Games," world peace and security was threatened because a youth broke into a Defense Department computer to play a game and accidentally set the computer on a course leading toward thermonuclear warfare.

I won't tell you how the movie ends, in case you haven't seen it. But that's OK; there are other prospects "War Games" brings up besides just thermonuclear warfare and the destruction of society as we know it.

The movie premise is interesting, of course. It hit the theater circuit just about the time video games were at the peak of popularity and "hackers" — individuals who use their own computers to break into other computers via the telephone lines — were gaining a degree of recognition and notoriety.

But, as I hinted earlier, nuclear destruction isn't the end of the world. After all, there are other things about computers that are just as bad — if not worse! Like:

— Their unpredictability. Computers are extremely intelligent devices. I won't even quibble about the fact that computers make some jobs simpler and faster; they do.

But ask any newspaper reporter. You never know when you're going to be typing along on the keyboard and suddenly your video display screen is going to go blank. Or try to sign on to the terminal some morning when the machine obviously isn't ready to wake up.

Computer specialists tell us that these instruments aren't human, they're just cold wires and chips. They don't have emotions. Ha! That's baloney! I've detected obstinance and anger in our terminals at the Reporter-Telegram on more than one occasion.

— It's been debated almost since the day the big, one-eyed monsters overran the workplace, but I know for a fact that computer terminals are a threat to the health and safety of people. How do I know? Easy, look around in a building where the terminals are in use. What you see is a bunch of pale-skinned zombies sitting around cursing computer terminals that turned on them like mad dogs or kids beating up game machines because they didn't get the score they thought they deserved. It's a computer jungle out there!

If society is going to use computer terminals — and I definitely believe they do offer specific advantages in particular areas of the workplace and leisure activity — we've got to change our thinking about how to use them.

What we could do, for example, is move all the terminals out of doors where the users could enjoy the fresh air and sunshine in between intermittent sessions of pounding the keyboard. That would also combat the well-known symptoms of computer fatigue — fixed eyes, shaky hands, rambling speech.

— People also need to have access to a "Computer Crisis Hotline" where they can tell experts symptoms that either they or their machines are displaying and get professional advice fast.

Anybody who has ever reached the point in the use of their computer at which they didn't know what to do next certainly will attest to the need of such a hotline.

Besides, there's always the very real and frightening prospect of a computer actually doing what "Joshua" — the computer in "War Games" — did and assuming control of the situation.

That would be depressing because, as the movie showed, computers play for keeps.

Midland needs centers for teen-age youths

We were excited to read that the board of directors of the Midland-Lee Youth Centers recently voted to reopen the centers in the fall of 1984.

A survey done this spring indicated high school students would use these centers. The past two months we have volunteered with other parents as sponsors for "Friday Night Specials" and have seen personally the great need for teen centers in Midland. Attendance has grown each week and proves the need for a place for youth to meet and have a good time under proper supervision.

The board needs community support in raising funds to reopen the centers. It is imperative to raise the money quickly so that a director can be hired and plans for fall can become a reality. Donations can be mailed to the Midland-Lee Youth Centers, Inc., P.O. Box 50490, Midland, TX 79710. Every gift will be an investment in the youth of Midland.

Let us all be involved in this community project.

Volleyball team needs to be commended

I would publicly like to commend the achievement of 17 young ladies from San Jacinto Junior High School.

Recently, the San Jacinto White volleyball team had the honor of boasting an undefeated eighth-grade season. This was not an effort made merely by a coach and a "few outstanding players," but by determination, hard work and support of every individual on the team. These ladies are not only talented athletically, but possess other admirable qualities as well such as friendliness, determination and positive attitudes.

Not only did they achieve this goal, but they also proved that multiple goals can be achieved simultaneously. Each has reached success in the areas of music, academics and other extracurricular activities.

Today as not only their coach but an admirer, I applaud the efforts of Christi Anderson, La Shauna Bradley, Macey Bray, Theresa Brown, Amy Hale, Samara Kleinbeck, Stephine McCormick, Lucille McKee, Judi Moore, Holly Nobles, Holli Petri, Mary Salcido, Kristy Stephenson, T. Ann Turner, Isabel Villarreal, Debbie Wiseman and Kathleen Yeager.

Street should honor Martin Luther King Jr.

As a 23-year resident of Midland, I feel that I am within my rights to propose that the city street currently named Indiana Avenue have its name changed to Martin Luther King Jr. Avenue.

Indiana Avenue runs east-west from Fairground Road to Carlton Street through a primarily black residential area. Indiana has historically been used as a major black thoroughfare on the south side. The avenue is the southern border of Washington Park. Washington Park is used by black families for picnics and other family activities along with its annual use for the celebration of Juneteenth (June 19th, Black Independence Day).

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. is one of the few Americans who are remembered with favor around the world. There are monuments in his honor on almost every continent. The United States Congress has honored him with the setting aside of the third Monday in January as a national holiday.

The City of Midland has seen fit to name public schools in honor of traitors, ie... Sam Houston, Robert E. Lee, and Soldiers of fortune Jim Bowie, Davy Crockett.

I would like to see this city name a street in honor of the Nobel peace Prize winner, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Dallas Smith improved sheriff's department

This is in response to the letter signed by J.R. Smith, published May 13.

When Dallas Smith became sheriff of Midland County there were no uniformed patrol divisions. Between 1980 and 1984 the number of deputies assigned to uniformed patrol increased from nine to 14. That's a 55 percent increase, Mr. Smith.

Sheriff Dallas Smith has constantly upgraded the personnel in the agency. In the past four years five deputies have been graduated from the FBI Law Enforcement Academy. In 1980 there were only 14 deputies with associate or bachelor degrees. In 1984 there are 30.

Those deputies who could not make it, who could not grow on the job, are bound to be unhappy. You complain because the sheriff would only comment that some of his officers who left quit and some were fired. You wanted him to state publicly the reasons they quit or why they were fired.

Dallas Smith protected his men by not making public the reasons they had to be fired or the reasons others quit.

Dallas Smith took an antiquated one-horse sheriff's office and has made it into an agency highly respected by law enforcement officers throughout the state.

Your letter to Mr. Smith was a little like kicking a man when he's down.

'Trash' mars city's Celebration of Arts

I think Celebration of the Arts was such a good idea and there were many activities that families could enjoy together. But I was stunned at the presentation put on by the Midland High drama department on Saturday evening.

I would not have chosen to see something like this but even more than that was the fact that there were several young children in the audience and the audience was not warned about the language or the subject matter.

Movies like this are rated "R" and young people do not go to these. I am dismayed that the people in the drama department that are responsible for choosing the material for our high school students select such trash and hopefully something will be done to stop this.

SPEAKING OUT

Confused voter still asking 'What does it all mean?'

By CAROL CHIDLAW MILLER

Carol Chidlaw Miller is a native Midlander who returned to the Tall City seven years ago from Houston. She is a professional legal secretary, is married and enjoys writing.

"If you want to be a good Creel," my Great Aunt Lucile Creel told me, "you will be a Democrat."

I was about 8 years old at the time, my name wasn't even Creel, and I sure wasn't sure what it all meant.

My maternal grandmother (obviously not a Creel) also took me aside. "The Democrats," she said, rolling her eyes significantly, "are a bunch of uneducated, lower-class, dirty-fingernailed commoners. We are descended from Lord Dutton of England. You will, of course, vote Republican."

"What does it all mean?" I asked one of my Alamo Junior High School teachers.

"That we have a choice," she explained. "That we, as Americans, are free to vote any way we please. Our only responsibility is to educate ourselves so that we know what the issues are."

"And what are the issues?" No answer. I am still asking that question.

When I was a senior at Midland's Lee High School, our Government classes held a mock convention and nominated Richard Nixon to run for President. We even sent him a telegram, and he accepted. So much for my judgment in political matters.

"WHY," I ASKED in 1965, "can't we just mix it all up and vote for the person, not the party?"

I was 21 and at last could vote. Now I wanted to understand how to vote.

This year I turned...er...over 21, and I still want to understand how to vote. I have listened to our candidates smear each other's reputations into muck. I have read the newspaper's explanations of the issues until I am convinced of only one thing: All the issues are the same, and our choices are narrowed down to voting for the person with the pleasantest speaking voice and the most attractive wife and children.

I can't find many differences in the Democrats and Republicans (except in Midland, where one has a few more Republican candidates to sort through in the voting booth). I'm not wild about anybody either party has to offer nationally. I do think Ronald Reagan is still very good-looking, and it reminds me of my mother's words when he was only a California politician: "Of course I'd vote for Mr. Reagan if he ran for President. He was always my favorite movie star."

AFTER GIVING all the chaos some serious thought, and considering my duties and responsibilities as an American, I know that I must show up on election day to pull the switch for the least of all the evils, whether or not I understand the myriad issues over which they quarrel. However, in keeping with my concern over national issues, I would like to propose my own slate of candidates and appointed officials. These folks would do a mighty fine job running our country and our city, and I cannot see why somebody didn't think of them before:

President: My husband Tootie. He would put a shotgun in the hands of every able-bodied man, woman and child and tell us all to get out there and stop crime instead of waiting to vote on it.

Vice President: Our retired Springer Spaniel. She would fill this country's need for a female in an elected office; she has the wisdom of experience, the patience of maturity, and she will blindly follow her leader's orders with total loyalty, no matter what.

Secretary of State: My adopted mother Pat. She was born with an Irishman's natural diplomacy which enables her to talk to anyone about anything at any time. If talking fails, she takes quick revenge.

SECRETARY OF Health, Education and Welfare: My natural mother Jody. She can pray her way through any illness, she will put discussions with God back in the classroom where they belong, and with me as her assistant she will insist that all the folks on welfare today go to work.

President's Chief Military Advisor: My father Chid. He fought in World War II and now he won't fight, no matter what. We need a little peace in this world.

Head of the Environmental Protection Agency: Me, of course. I will insist that my neighbors — and yours — get out and pick up the trash in their yards. Going further, I will provide that prisoners be sent out to our state and national highways to pick up trash.

Head of the Internal Revenue Service: My Great Aunt Lucile. She has never believed in taxes and never will.

Governor of Texas: The man who lives two blocks over and three houses down from me. He doesn't speak English, but then neither do most Texans, and he keeps a beautiful front yard.

Mayor of Midland: The current president of Midland Legal Secretaries Association. It seems like a natural step-up. Anyone who can call to order a bunch of chattering women and finish two hours of business in 23 minutes can handle a city council with no problems.

SHERIFF OF Midland County: My son David. Anyone who can knock three older kids flat for taking a jab at his new braces wins my vote for protecting me any time. Now there's a person with his priorities on straight.

Chief of Police: Ed Todd. What we need in that position is someone who can talk his way through a crisis and leave the rest of the people involved standing around with their heads swimming in confusion, but grinning nonetheless.

I haven't give much consideration to the other people who might be excellent choices to head up things. It is my further opinion that there are far too many elected and appointed offices, and if we cut things down to just a minor few, our system of government would be less unwieldy and easier for the common person to understand.

Wonder if it's too late to get started for November 1984?

President Reagan addresses subject of 'last frontier'

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-In-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — President Reagan told cheering U.S. Air Force Academy graduates in Colorado Springs, Colo., the other day that they are not simply warriors guarding the nation but pointed them toward a challenging peaceful future "in space." That's really the last frontier where the action will be, where pioneering American men and women can meet challenges as did our ancestors when they opened up the land wilderness and with backbreaking toil made this nation bloom.

"OUR WILLINGNESS to accept the challenge of space will reflect whether America's men and women today have the same bold vision, the same courage and indomitable spirit that made us a great nation," declared the president before a huge commencement day crowd at the 25-year-old service academy.

President Reagan went on to advise the nearly 1,000 new second lieutenants that their generation is on the verge of greater advances than mankind has ever known. Their vision and dreams, the president asserted, will determine America's future.

"And nowhere is this more true," President Reagan observed solemnly, "than America's next frontier — the last frontier of space."

I found the address moving and timely. It occurred coincidentally in the home state of a Democratic presidential aspirant who keeps plumping for new ideas. The commencement speech also came at a time when the 150th annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science was held in New York City, devoting much of a session to an appeal for a ban on anti-satellite weapons, popularly dubbed "Star Wars."

From reports I read of the scientific conference here, I assume that the gathering opposes further development of the "High Frontier" anti-ballistic missile system created by retired Lt. Gen. Dan Graham. He put together the project when he learned to his horror — yours and mine, too — that there's no defense except mutual assured destruction, appropriately known as "MAD" on both sides, the Soviets and ours. The president incorporated some of Gen. Graham's ideas in a nationwide speech two years ago.

PRESIDENT REAGAN, as commander-in-chief, is ever-mindful of the nation's security. He has not, I emphasize, adopted in full "High Frontier" space defense measures, but has acted prudently with scientific and military counsel on procedures and costs. Additionally, the president has taken congressional leaders into his confidence and requested their advice and suggestions.

Obviously, lots of work has to be done before even scientific opposition is satisfied. To this end, President Reagan recently appointed Lt. Gen. James Abrahamson to develop and research a defensible anti-ballistic missile system in space. Knut Royce, of our Washington bureau, has interviewed Gen. Abrahamson who is supervising a vast research and development program to ascertain what can be feasible, not based on pent-up emotions or fuzzy notions.

There have been criticisms from the scientific and congressional communities that the High Frontier program would ultimately cost so much as to bankrupt this nation. That reasoning, I submit, is missing the main point. Would we rather let a substantive program drop for dollars and cents and place ourselves at the mercy of the USSR? The Soviets still pursue their anti-ballistic space defenses despite at least half the efforts that are known to have gone off target or misfired.

AT MY request, Royce came up from Washington and met Dr. Edward Teller, father of the "H" bomb, who flew in from San Francisco to New York. In the car coming in from the airport, Dr. Teller answered Royce's questions succinctly. He believed, but was not absolutely positive, that a satisfactory ABM system can eventually be constructed. But the technology and costs for a space-based system, in Dr. Teller's view, could make it unfeasible. That, of course, is where the congressional power of the purse enters.

The cost factor sharply brought to mind a favorite quote of my father's which ran as follows: "Whatever is right can be achieved through the irresistible power of awakened and informed public opinion. Our object, therefore, is not to enquire whether a thing can be done, but whether it ought to be done, and if it ought to be done, to so exert the forces of publicity that public opinion will compel it to be done."

Dr. Teller, whose knowledge of physics and applied science have been 50 years or more in the making, had a little philosophy to communicate to Royce. He thought that whatever is eventually deployed may have little bearing on currently-understood technology. In sum, he agreed with the administration that a five-year research and development program is the right approach. There's lots of research still to be done and refined.

IN THE mid-'70s the Soviets chose to go ahead and develop their own anti-ballistic missile system. Under the existing treaties, we could safeguard Washington or our own ballistic missiles. Apparently we opted for ballistic missile sites; the Soviets for Moscow. We were able to detect and monitor their anti-ballistic missile tests. A question raised, though, is how much of this was faked?

Communist doctrine, as laid down by Lenin, goes along these lines: Any international agreement or treaty made by us with a foreign country need be observed only as long as it benefits world communism. Should times and conditions change so that our best interests are not uppermost, we MUST ignore it.

Since we have an agreement with the Communists as noted in previous paragraphs, they, like ourselves, are going ahead trying to perfect a defense system. That part of it is all right. But should they succeed sooner than we, their ideological dogma insists that they ignore the agreement...

To all statesmen, soldiers and scientists this is a Leninist precept still held in the highest esteem by the power oligarchy called the Kremlin in Moscow. That still holds for land, sea — and now space. We can forget it at our own peril.

No one close to Norman

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Australian Greg Norman found himself possessed of a huge, seven-stroke lead going into Sunday's final round of the Kemper Open Golf Tournament and called the situation:

"The best of all possible worlds.

"I've got the lead and I'm confident I'm going to win," the long-hitting Australian import said Saturday after his scrambling, 1-under-par 71 had given him unchallenged command.

Norman, the leader all the way in this chase for a $72,000 first prize, completed three trips over the extremely difficult Congressional Country Club course in 207, nine shots under par.

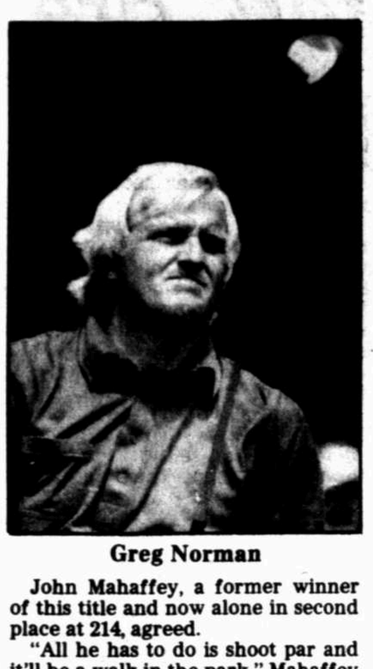

His huge lead was the largest third-round margin on the American PGA Tour since 1982 and matched the largest since 1976.

It made the tournament his, to win or lose.

"I haven't got there yet, but I'm confident I'm going to win," repeated Norman.

He received no argument from the men vainly in pursuit.

"If he shoots good tomorrow, it's over," said Scott Hoch, one of the few others under par. "If he shoots par tomorrow, give him the trophy."

Greg Norman

John Mahaffey, a former winner of this title and now alone in second place at 214, agreed.

"All he has to do is shoot par and it'll be a walk in the park," Mahaffey said after his hard-won 70 in winds that gusted to 35 miles per hour.

Tied with Hoch at 215, and the only other men under par, were Scott Simpson and Dr. Gil Morgan, both of whom were playoff losers in this event last year. Each had a third-round 73.

Hal Sutton, the PGA title-holder, was the only man in the field able to break 70 on the course made more difficult than normal by the swirling winds. He had a 69 and was at 218.

Defending champion Fred Couples shot 72-220. And rookie Brad Faxon, who was four strokes back and alone in second place at the end of 36 holes, went to a 77 and was at 217, 10 strokes back.

"What Greg is doing is phenomenal," Mahaffey said. "To be nine under par at this point, under the conditions we played this week — I'm talking about swirling wind that is stronger than I've ever seen on this golf course — is unbelievable."

Norman, winner of 29 world-wide titles, including seven last year, is seeking his first official PGA Tour title.

"That's my next ambition, my next priority," said Norman, now a resident of Orlando, Fla.

Norman, four strokes in front of the pack when the day's play started, needed only to match par 36 over the front side to expand the margin to six.

Sheehan shatters LPGA records

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Defending champion Patty Sheehan shattered three records Saturday, shooting a 9-under-par 63 for a nine-shot lead after three rounds of the LPGA Championship.

Sheehan surged past faltering 36-hole leader Betsy King in their head-to-head duel on the front nine en route to a women's course record of 5-under-par 31 at the Nicklaus Sports Center.

Her 63 broke the 18-hole course mark set by Jerilyn Britz in 1979. And her 54-hole total of 204, 12-under-par, wiped out the tournament standard set by Nancy Lopez in this 1978 major championship.

The leader capped her brilliant performance by sinking a 20-foot putt for an eagle three on the difficult closing hole.

Sheehan, who came from seven shots behind with a 66 in the final round for her 1983 title here, birdied five of seven holes midway through her performance.

Patti Rizzo, Cindy Hill and Pat Bradley shared second place at 213, three strokes below par at this course just north of Cincinnati. Rizzo had 68 and Hill 69.

Bradley, this year's leading money-winner, blew a chance at the sole runner-up spot when she hit into a lake on the 18th hole, taking a bogey 6. She settled for a 70 on the warm, sunny day

Another shot back at 214 were Dot Germain, Beth Daniel and Penny Pulz. Germain came in with a 68. Pulz and Daniel shot 70 each.

JoAnne Carner's hopes of winning here and picking up an accompanying $500,000 bonus with back-to-back victories vanished when she shot a 76. Carner stood at 226, 22 strokes off the pace.

King, leading Sheehan by two shots after 36 holes, lost her putting touch and skied to a 76. King's total was 215.

It didn't take Sheehan, 27, long to take over the lead in her quest for her 10th career triumph. She pulled even with King when the midway leader three-putted the second hole from 10 feet. It was Sheehan alone at the top after she knocked in a three-foot birdie putt at the next hole.

Doors open for Bramble, Hatcher

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — While Livingstone Bramble and Gene Hatcher basked in unaccustomed glory Saturday, Ray "Boom Boom" Mancini and Johnny Bumphus pondered what direction their careers will take as ex-champions.

Mancini was released Saturday from a hospital where he was taken for cuts and contusions after he was stopped in the 14th round by Bramble Friday night while attempting to defend the World Boxing Association lightweight crown.

Before Bramble upset Mancini, Hatcher upset Bumphus, stopping him in the 11th round and winning the WBA junior welterweight title.

Dave Wolf, Mancini's manager, said the fighter got eight small stitches in one eyelid and six small stitches in the other. There was no concussion or broken bones, he said.

MANCINI, of Youngstown, Ohio, was taken to the hospital after midnight and was kept overnight because of the lateness of the hour.

Before leaving for the hospital Mancini told Wolf "get me a rematch." Then just before he went to sleep, Wolf said, Mancini asked, "Did you get the rematch?"

"That's not to say that after a nice long vacation he won't decide to be governor of Ohio or whatever he wants to be," said Wolf.

The manager said Mancini, who made $1 million in his fifth title defense Friday night, is financially secure at age 23 and that if he continues to fight, it won't be because of money.

If Mancini does continue to fight, he could get a rematch in Bramble's second defense. Bramble's first defense could be againt Ubaldo Sacco of Argentina.

Leading on all three score cards, by big margins on two of them after 10 rounds, Bumphus tired badly, was knocked down by a left hook and stopped by Hatcher.

The fight ended in chaos, with co-manager Lou Duva berating referee Johnny LoBianco, and the two fighters throwing punches after the bout had been stopped.

"I won't say Gene Hatcher beat me, I'll say the referee beat me," said Bumphus, of Clementon, N.J., who added that he and Hatcher had apologized to each another.

"He didn't know where he was even after the fight," said Hatcher, of Fort Worth, Texas.

The New York State Athletic Commission reportedly will investigate Duva's action.

Bumphus will go to the Cleveland Clinic for tests involving weight and strength, said Duva, who also manages Bramble.

The manager had said before the fight that the 6-foot Bumphus's first defense probably would be his last because making the 140-pound weight limit robbed him of too much strength.

HATCHER'S contract is said to call for a rematch against Bumphus in Hatcher's second defense. But it appears Bumphus will go after one of the welterweight (147 pounds) titles.

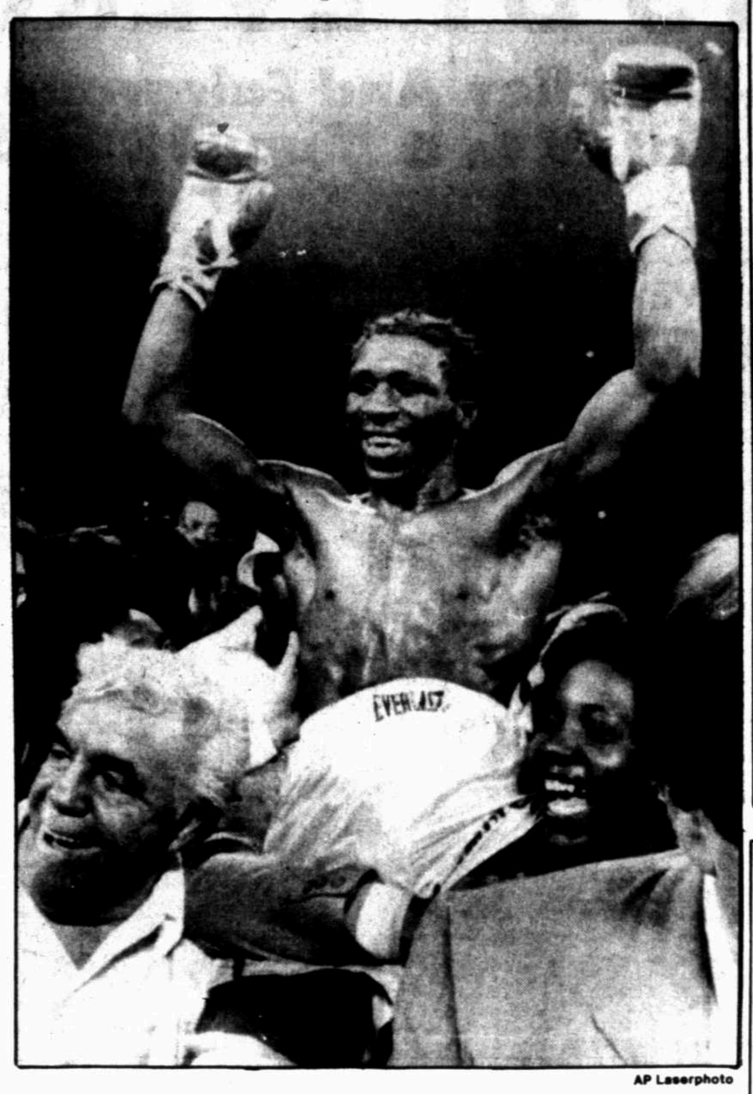

Bramble, a native of the Virgin Islands who now lives in Passaic, N.J., said he would fight whomever Duva selects.

"I want to become one of the best lightweights of modern times," said Bramble, who stayed up all night savoring his victory.

"It's not going to change my life," said Bramble. "It's going to change my bank account, but it's not going to change my life."

Bramble's immediate plans were to return to Passaic and "buy two large rats to feed to my snakes." Bramble has a python, a boa and five pit bull terriers.

Hatcher said he was to going to relax.

World vault record beaten

PARIS (AP) — Sergei Bubka of the Soviet Union shattered his week-old world record in the pole vault Saturday by clearing 19 feet, 3½ inches at an international outdoor track meet at suburban St. Denis.

Bubka bettered his own mark of 19-2¼ set on May 26 at an international meet in Bratislava, Czechoslovakia.

His latest record, achieved at a match sponsored by the French Communist Party's daily newspaper, L'Humanite, came on the last of three attempts as the crowd watched in hushed silence.

After failing to clear 19-2¾ and 19-3, he launched himself on the third try and rolled cleanly over the bar as the crowd cheered wildly.

At first officials announced 19-3, but they remeasured the bar height and found the record was one-half inch higher.

With Polish pole vaulter Wladislav Kozakiewicz translating for him, Bubka said he was surprised he set the mark "because I am not yet at the top of my form. I have been preparing for the end of June, beginning of July, and I didn't believe I could jump so high today.

"It lets me believe in further progress," he said.

Asked about the Soviet boycott of the Los Angeles Olympics that will prevent him facing the world's best, Bubka said: "I don't get involved in politics and it's a political decision.

"I can't say anything about it, but personally I am ready to go and pole vault everywhere in the world," Bubka said through Kozakiewicz.

The one-day "International St. Denis Athletics Meet" featured athletes from the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Poland and Cuba, the latter team headed by sprinter Alberto Juantoreha.

GOLF

For those golfers who are defeated in Tuesday's first round of match play, there will be a consolation bracket. On Thursday, a nine or 18-hole handicap lame duck tournament will be held for those out of the consolation and match play brackets.

Another special event for the tournament will be a senior medalist for any contestant 50 years of age or older. The medalist will be determined during Monday's qualifying round.

TV rights dominate major CFA issues

DALLAS (AP) — Dealing with unscrupulous player agents and the early signing of underclassmen are issues just as important as TV football rights, Penn State coach Joe Paterno told delegates to the College Football Association meeting Saturday.

Paterno, who occupies a position of national leadership within the CFA as well as the NCAA, chided delegates at the three-day meeting for spending too much time discussing television.

"The television issue is a significant one, of course," Paterno said in brief remarks at the start of Saturday's session.

"But I would hope this forum would not lose sight of the fact that although television is important and something we have to eventually solve, it's more easily solved than some of the other problems we have out there."

Unprincipled player agents as well as the threat of further undergraduate signings by the United States Football League also need to be addressed, Paterno said.

"How to flush out the agents — how to prevent some unsuspecting individuals to be led to believe they are ready to play professional football — we must solve these things, too," he said.

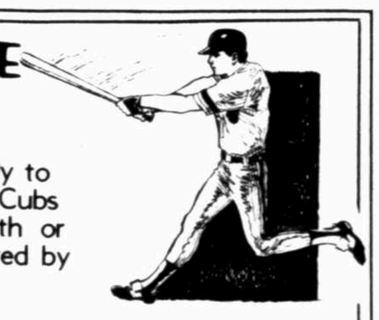

Paterno said one difficulty in dealing with the early-signing issue is that for some players it may be the right thing to do.

"We still have to be in a position as people who are responsible for the overall good of our athletes, that we don't deprive the ones who maybe ought to go," he said.

"We have a very delicate situation. Hopefully, we'll come up with constructive suggestions to handle some of the most difficult problems ever seen in intercollegiate football," he said.

The eighth annual CFA convention, which ends Sunday, is the first in a series of meetings by the policy-makers of intercollegiate athletics this summer — a time that Paterno says will be very important.

Movies make move from theater to home

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

It all started when they got rid of the cartoons.

Going to a movie used to be a real social event, something you could build an entire evening around.

The theaters didn't look like other buildings; they resembled opulent Babylonian palaces or exotic Chinese pagodas, and their lights could be seen from miles away.

Inside, you could count on a full evening's entertainment, with coming attractions, a cartoon, a newsreel and maybe a double feature. The decor was plush, there was real butter on the popcorn, and the screens were huge, the better to accomodate the larger-than-life action.

But modern efficiency and the advent of television have wiped all that away. After the proliferation of TV sets lowered theater profit margins and rendered the newsreels obsolete, theater owners realized that if they also eliminated cartoons they could increase the number of showings per night.

Other improvements followed: Ornate movie palaces were cut up into mini-theaters or torn down and replaced by squat, rectangular boxes with four or five tiny screens each. The bright lights and plush decor have been scrapped. There are no more ushers with little hats and flashlights to guide people to their seats. And instead of spending the whole night at the theater, moviegoers now often find themselves in and out in less than two hours and wondering what to do with the rest of the evening.

"Going to the movies used to be an occasion," says Linda Bond, a Midland independent film producer "Now it's like going out to watch television."

But this streamlined approach to presenting movies may eventually backfire on theater owners, because more and more movie fans are taking the utilitarian theory one step further and renting movie cassettes to watch at home.

"Movies cost $4.50 per person at the show. We rent them for $2.50, and the whole family can watch," said Jimmy Friedrichs of the Sound Machine, an electronic equipment store.

Friedrichs estimates that 40-50 percent of Midland households have video cassette recorders, and there are more than a dozen places in town where people can buy movie cassettes or rent them for the night or weekend — even at supermarkets such as Albertson's.

This phenomenon hasn't yet seriously hurt the theater business, says Ms. Bond.

"That was the big fear, but it hasn't come to fruition," she says. Movie cassette rentals "have just expanded the market."

But they have changed the demographics of the market, she said, because people over 25 are more likely than teen-agers to rent movies to watch at home. As a result, "Moviemakers are slanting their product to the teen market."

If movie rentals haven't yet cut into theater business, they may be hurting cable TV, according to Kip Crowther of Movie Mania, which sells video equipment and rents out cassettes.

"I think people are hooking up to the basic channels but not as much to HBO and Showtime," he says. "Why pay for that when for a little extra you can see exactly what you want?"

But cable channels are meeting this threat by diversifying into non-movie programming, says Gaye Bagwell of Dimension Cable Services.

"We do feel we have competition" from movie rentals, she says, "but all the channels have supplemented their movies with other kinds of programs," such as sports and children's programming, which aren't readily available on cassettes.

For shoppers at the Albertson's supermarket at Wadley Avenue and Midland Drive, movie cassettes are just another item on the shopping list. Going out to movies is an American cultural tradition, but so is watching television, and many movie fans seem to prefer the convenience of their living rooms to the lure of the darkened theater.

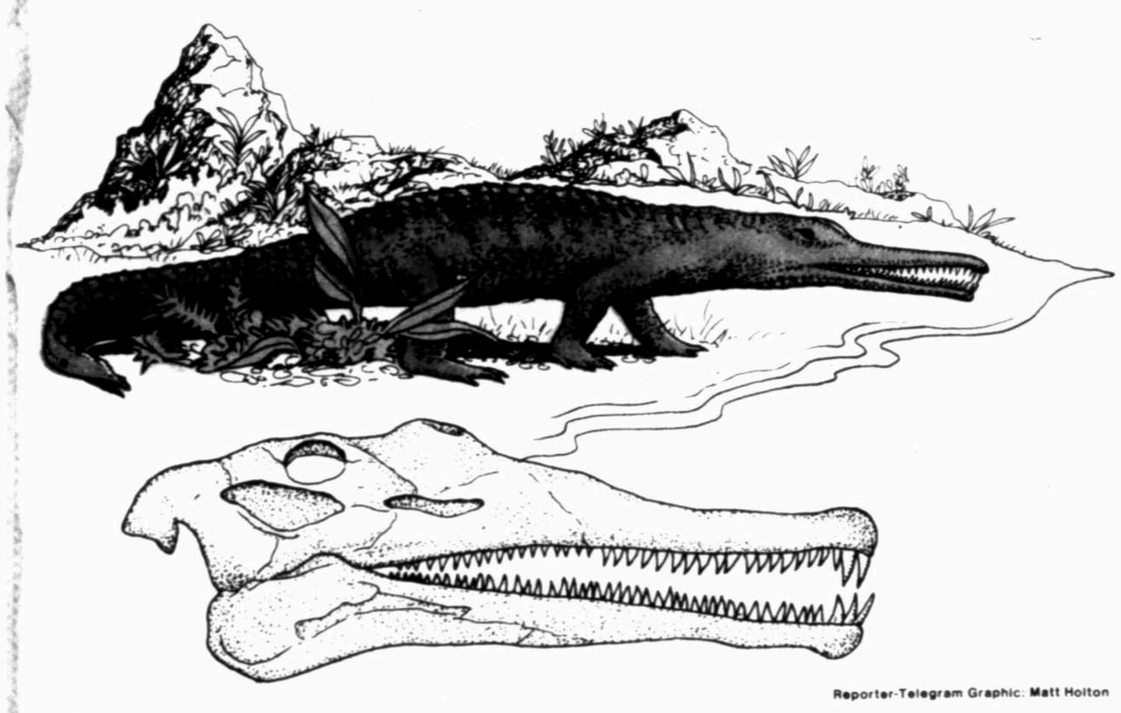

But all these movie-renters must be giving up something they were doing before they bought their video recorders, whether it was going out to movies, watching cable and network TV or just twiddling their thumbs and staring at the wall. Jim Duddleston of Albertson's thinks they used to go out to theaters more, but now rent movies and watch them at home because "It saves you the hassle of going out to a show."

But going out to a show used to be part of the fun. What has happened to the glamour and romance of the movies if Albertson's shoppers can just throw a tape of "Trading Places" or "Sudden Impact" into their shopping cart along with the dog food and frozen pizza?

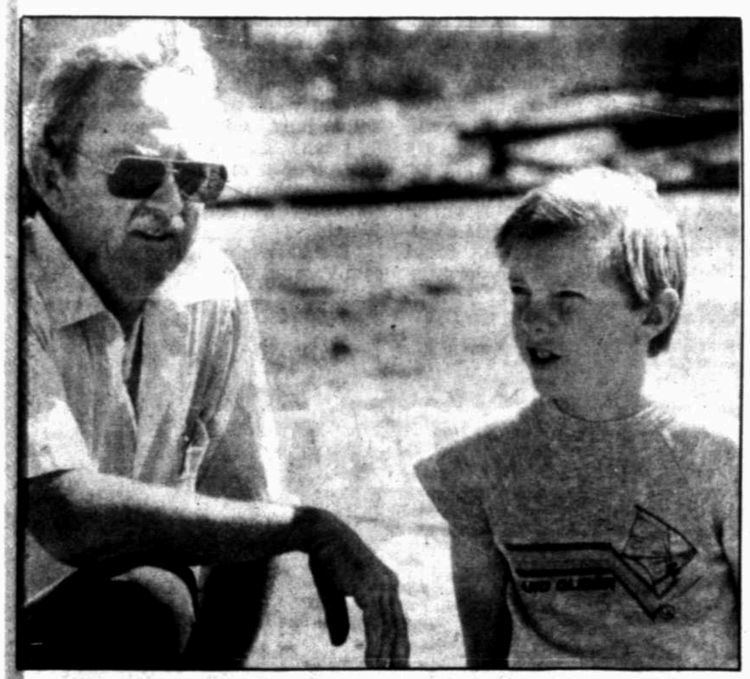

Of course, there are still a few advantages to going out to a movie instead of watching a tape at home. Despite the absence of cartoons, impressive architecture and wide screens, there are still some essential cultural experiences that can only be had at a theater, as Friedrichs points out:

"Have you seen the lines for 'Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom'?"

Midlanders find phytosaur bones

Reporter-Telegram Graphic: Matt Holton

Phytosaurs, shown in an artist's sketch above, became extinct 200 million years ago. The jawbone and other remains of the cousin to modern-day crocodiles and alligators were found six weeks ago on a ranch in Howard County.

Bob Palmer and his son Chris of Midland, pictured at left, discovered the bones while looking for arrowheads. Their find is considered one of the top fossil discoveries of the Triassic Age in West Texas.

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

"We had been fishing and the fish stopped biting, so we started looking for arrowheads."

That's how Midland amateur archeologist Bob Palmer describes how he and his 11-year-old son Chris discovered the fossilized remains of a prehistoric phytosaur on the D.L. Dorland ranch south of Coahoma about six weeks ago.

What they saw protruding from a mound at the edge of a stream bed was a portion of the lower jawbone of a 200-million-year-old predatory cousin to contemporary crocodiles and alligators.

The jawbone is about two feet long and some of the teeth are still intact.

"My big thing is looking for arrowheads," said Palmer, who owns Palmer Pipe and Supply on Garden City Highway. "A lot of people think I'm crazy, but I'd rather be out stompin' around in a pasture than watchin' TV.

"We just kinda stumbled on it. I knew from the tooth holes that it was a fossilized jawbone. But I didn't know then what kind of animal it was. I thought maybe it was a large lizard."

Also found were three vertabrae, some toe and rib bones and several pieces of bony armor that covered the animal's back.

About 20 percent of the skeleton has been recovered so far. Further excavation is planned at the site, which is on patrolled private property that's not open to the public.

"I was surprised that we just came up on it like that," said Chris Palmer. "I was excited when we found it."

The elder Palmer knew Dr. Carl Frailey of Midland College and Frailey, who got his doctorate in vertebrate paleontology from the University of Kansas, knew exactly what Palmer had come across:

"It's the best specimen of a phytosaur found in West Texas. Phytosaurs were aquatic, bank-dwelling reptiles that are always found as fossils in stream-deposited sediment. They could grow up to 30 feet in length; this one was about 10 feet long."

Is typing 'key' to computer skill?

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

It's a common adage, a person must crawl before he can run. And it applies to computers as well. Some Midland teachers fear students who begin running programs before they "crawl" with a typewriter may limp for the rest of their lives.

Business and computer math teachers agree it is better for students to take beginning typing before computer programming. Computer teachers say such a student can complete assignments twice as fast as the hunt-and-peck typist, and instructors don't have to waste class time teaching the basics of a keyboard.

Decimae Dennis, who chairs the business department at Lee High School, said students who work on computers or typewriters at home before learning the proper way to type "do pick up bad habits that are hard to correct. And they never make the kind of typist we would like for them to make because the bad habits are hard for them to break."

The problem is not yet serious, she said, because computers are not commonplace. But they will be. One LHS computer teacher estimated that one-fourth of his students work on home computers.

Midland Independent School District is concluding a $200,000 fund-raising drive to implement a comprehensive computer program next year. Computer literacy will now begin in the elementary grades. But students do not have the opportunity to take typing classes until they reach high school.

Orin Wade and Eunice Chynoweth, both computer math teachers at LHS, said that is not soon enough — students should begin learning the keyboard in fifth or sixth grade.

"Part of our course involves being able to write a program, enter it in the computer and debug it — make corrections," Wade said. "If they don't have time (during the hour-long class period) to type it in the computer, they don't have a lot of time to get it debugged."

During a typical class period a student may enter as many as 3,000 characters, he said. Students who can type "have a big advantage. There's no comparison."

School board member Joe Reed has addressed the issue in board meetings. He bought a home computer when two of his children began working with them in school.

"I started watching the kids at home...spend hours just putting the programming in. They'd sit there with one finger punching in the program a letter at a time, and it was very discouraging.

"One of the real drawbacks of using these computers is the inability to input these programs quickly. If you don't know how to type, it just takes forever to get a program running." He said his children spend too much time hunting for keys and not enough time learning and experimenting.

"I'm really trying to encourage and generate interest in getting it (beginning typing) as far down as the third grade level," Reed said. "I would like to see the skills well developed by the time they get to fifth and sixth grade where they're really using the computers."

MISD Assistant Superintendent Dr. Duane Moore said solutions are being considered.

"Our long-range plans include units called keyboarding in the elementary grades. Use of the keyboard will be part of the computer literacy course." It's not a full-fledged typing class, he said, but it teaches students where the characters are and how to type with 10 fingers.

Moore did not know how long it would be before keyboarding was incorporated into computer literacy courses.

There I go...Mr. Cool in his convertible

When the offer was first made, I was amused.

Imagine. Me, Mr. Steak and Potatoes, driving a sporty little foreign car. And a convertible at that. No, it didn't seem possible. I mean, we're talking about a person whose last three vehicles were ugly, brown four-door sedans. And American-made too. There would be no fancy European jobs here. No sir. When Lee Iacocca told us to shop America, I took it to heart. Detroit needs you, he said in TV commercials, and being the patriot that I am, I was there with a helping hand.

Still, there has always been a slight tugging at the heart to do something wild and crazy; something totally impractical. I wanted people to look at me and say, "Good Lord, Agnes, look at that strange person over there. He doesn't seem to have a care in the world." Deep inside, of course, they would be insanely jealous.

So the offer for the sports car took on added significance. Maybe this would be my chance. I could indeed be foolishly carefree and, at the same time, the subject of much envy. Yes, the car was becoming a definite possibility.

As I pondered my options, mind-boggling visions raced across my brain. There I go...Mr. Cool in his convertible. The top is down. One of those dapper British touring caps is deftly placed upon my head and a multi-colored scarf, wrapped loosely about the neck, is blowing in the wind. I'm cruising the rolling highways of France at a high rate of speed about to enter Paris from the south. A modest, though tastefully designed, cottage can be seen in the distance. It is where I am staying. Still, the streets are where I leave my mark. Everywhere my convertible and I go, heads turn. Women offer subtle hints that I might be desired, but they will have to wait. After all, I'm entirely too busy being a stud to concern myself with frivolous advances.

Ahhh, the madness of an incurable romantic knows no bounds.

But back to reality we must go. For the record, I did purchase the car. And what a car it is. Small (about the size of a shoe box) but with the roar of an angry lion. To be near me when I crank up the awesome machine is something akin to being situated in the pit area of the Indianapolis Speedway. The noise is deafening. A.J. Foyt, wherever he is, must surely be smiling.

Some of my more boring, pragmatic friends — they are members of the Moral Majority — suggested in no uncertain terms that my purchase was a serious mistake.

"Don't do it," they warned. "In addition to making you a communist suspect, it is virtually impossible to find parts for those things. Use your head, get a Chevrolet."

"I don't want a Chevrolet," I screamed. "I want to be cool. I must have that car."

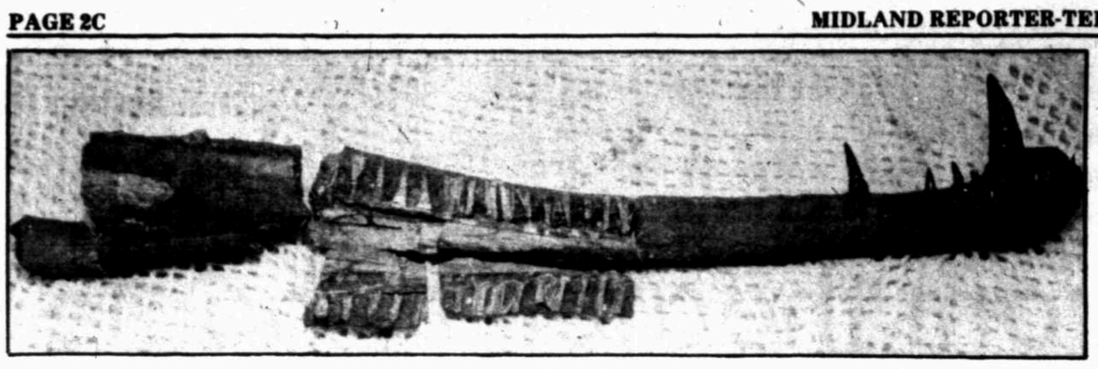

"You'll be sorry," they sighed, shaking their heads as they walked away.

Perhaps. But I've had it for a couple of weeks now and everything has gone smoothly. Indeed, there have been no problems whatsoever.

Of course, I am planning a couple of minor changes. First there's the brown paint job, then a couple of new doors and before you know it — surprise — I'll have an ugly, four-door sedan.

Some things never change.

This is a portion of the lower jawbone of a phytosaur, a predatory reptile that could grow to 10 feet or more in length. Remains of the animal were found on an area ranch.

BONES

Phytosaurs existed for about 30 million years, according to Frailey, and ranged through Europe, Asia and North America.

Their jaws were elongated and filled with sharp teeth that were replaced by new ones as they wore out.

Their nostrils were set back near the eyes, allowing the creatures to slip through the water virtually unexposed — a distinct advantage for aquatic predators.

The front legs were smaller than the hind ones and the body was protected by heavy bony plates that were probably encased in horny epidermis.

"All in all, phytosaurs were strikingly similar in appearance to modern crocodilians, and it seems reasonable to think their habits were likewise crocodilian-like," says a publication titled "Evolution of Vertebrates."

The publication goes on to say: "They were among the dominant reptiles of late Triassic times, and some of them reached gigantic proportions."

One theory about their extinction, said Frailey, is that they "were outcompeted" by their own kin: the early crocodiles and alligators that began taking over the same econiche phytosaurs once filled.

"It's a good discovery," he added. "It's the first major discovery of its kind in more than 40 years, and it ranks with the top three or four fossil discoveries of the Triassic Age in West Texas."

Palmer's discovery has been donated to MC and is on display in the school's science building.

Partners seek ownership of ship

HOUSTON (AP) — Four members of a limited partnership have asked for ownership of a 17th century Spanish ship believed to be resting on the bottom of the Gulf of Mexico and containing $100 million in gold and other valuables.

A lawsuit filed Friday claims that Michael Lethcoe, a major partner in the Far South Ltd., which found the shipwreck about 140 miles off Galveston, formed another company and switched the treasure to its ownership.

Jack Gunn, one of the limited partners who has been a diver on the search, said the possible find has not been made public before. He declined further comment.

Lethcoe's telephone number is unlisted and he could not be reached for comment Saturday. Other members of the search team indicated the operation was under "heavy security."

Edmund Pankau, an investor in the search and owner of a private investigation firm in Houston, said the search has been underway for about two years.

But all divers have found so far is "a big lump of coral," Pankau told the Houston Post.

He said the group knows which ship it is looking for and, if the wreckage is found, the value of its contents could be more than $100 million. He also declined to reveal the ship's name.

"You remember those stories where somebody brings you a map where X marks the spot? he said. "We've been working on something like that for two years."

Pankau compared the importance of the find to the recovery of $10 million in gold and artifacts from the remains of two Spanish galleons found in the Straits of Florida between 1971 and 1980.

Marvin Ellis, a diver working on the shipwreck search, said the disgruntled partners in Far South Ltd. were offered a chance to sell their shares in the company or to be part of the new company, Captain Nemo.

They refused the offers and Far South Ltd. subsequently folded, Ellis said.

Lucas charged with deaths in Texarkana

TEXARKANA, Ark. (AP) — Deputy prosecutor Rodney McDaniel of Miller County says he will seek the death penalty for drifter Henry Lee Lucas, who is accused of the deaths of two Arkansas teen-agers.

McDaniel filed capital murder charges against Lucas on Friday for the deaths of Gordon Alexander, 14, and Alexander's sister, Karen. The two died in April 1981. The charges were filed in Miller County Circuit Court.

Lucas, 47, has been convicted of three deaths in Texas and has pleaded guilty to a fourth death in that state. In addition to the charges filed in Texarkana, Lucas is accused of 18 deaths in five states. Earlier this year, Lucas was charged in Pulaski County Circuit Court with the 1978 stabbing death of Elizabeth Taylor, 33, of Little Rock. Lucas has said he killed more than 150 people.

AUSTIN — To a superintendent in a warm and underfunded school district, equalization can mean a welcome breeze of artificially cooled air.

"You put 25 bodies in the room and the temperature outside is 100 degrees and you are not really enhancing the learning climate," El Paso Independent School District Superintendent Ronald McLeod said of his 72 buildings, only 11 of which are air conditioned.

McLeod, like officials in many of the state's more than 1,000 school districts, wants more state money. The process of allocating the funds is called equalization and most everyone agrees Texas does it poorly.

To many, it is issue No. 1 for the special legislative session that oon Monday begins its look at how Texas educates its children. Gov. Mark White, seeking a $4.8 billion tax hike to pay for education reforms and highway repairs, has called a 30-day special session.

ABOUT HALF of Texas' school districts receive equalization aide — a total of more than $1.3 billion since 1975. The money is intended to make up for the lack of local funds in poor districts, but the current system has left a wide gap — some districts spend as little as $1,600 a student while others top $10,000. The average is about $2,600.

Even officials in some districts that could suffer under a new equalization plan favor change.

"First of all, it's morally right and second of all, it's a legal issue that would not stand up in court. Let's do the right thing and get it over with," said Fort Worth Superintendent Carl Candoli.

"Clearly, the districts without a tax base to support a reasonable program need far more state help," said Austin Superintendent John Ellis.

"I think equalization needs to be accomplished both from a standpoint of legal and moral implications," said Richardson Superintendent Arzell Ball.

THE APPARENT consensus for change also is an agreement that the state must come up with more money to equalize. And there is disagreement on what changes should be made.

One plan is being pushed by an alliance of the eight largest school districts and the 160 poorest districts. The large districts like the plan because it takes into account the additional costs of educating "special" students, including handicapped and non-English speaking. It also accounts for the difference in education costs across the state.

Another plan, pushed by Education Commissioner Raymon Bynum, sets up an improvement fund keyed to attendance. Craig Foster of the Equity Center, the alliance of the 160 poorest districts, said the Bynum plan "adds additional money to the same old formula."

Comptroller Bob Bullock produced a plan he said could help poor districts "without adding a single red enny in taxes." Without a tax hike, Bullock said his system would increase state money to 52 percent of the students.

SEVERAL LARGE districts would pay the price of Bullock's plan. Dallas would lose more than $16 million in state money. Ysleta would gain more than $8 million.

Leonard Sturm, Houston ISD associate superintendent for budgets, said, "There's 100 ways you can change things. You could just take the current formula and add money to it, but that doesn't speak to some of the issues."

Another thing superintendents are looking for in equalization is a plan that does not allow poor districts to use state money as a way to avoid raising local taxes. A lack of tax-collecting effort in poor districts could force tax hikes in richer districts that lose money to equalization, some superintendents fear.

"I would hope that whatever plan they come up with will have a minimum influence on our taxpayers or cause us to have to reduce programs," said Al Hook, superintendent of the Alief schools.

"The way I define equalization is that if any district in the state makes an average tax effort then it should be able to make an average per pupil expenditure," said Charles Benson, superintendent of the 45,000-student Ysleta Independent School District in El Paso.

"We don't advocate taking money from anybody. Put the state money in the schools that need it most when they demonstrate they have done everything locally," he said. "There's so much pressure that something has to be done."

Much of the pressure comes from a lawsuit — filed on behalf of eight poor districts — challenging the current system.

"The Texas financing system institutionalizes and perpetuates the notion that children educated in low property wealth districts are not worth as much to the stte as children who reside in property wealthy districts," the lawsuit says.

BEFORE THE SUIT was filed, Houston Independt School District Superintendent Billy Reagan said, "Even a first-year law student knows that the existing state system of financing schools is not constitutional by any test."

James Vasquez, superintendent in the Edgewood district in Bexar County, one of the plaintiffs, said, "We can't hire enough certified math teachers to meet our needs. We have buildings so old we have to close the schools because we don't have the money to refurbish them."

The suit cites state law guaranteeing equal education for all children. But even superintendents who support a new equalization system say it takes more than more money to provide quality education.

"The guarantee has to be a reasonable level of education," said Ellis of Austin. "You can't guarantee it will be the same. I don't think anyone is talking about having the most luxurious education available to all. When districts have wealth they are apt to add and expand and do far more."

Ball's Richardson district is among those able to "do far more." The Dallas suburb has sufficient local money to add 40 percent to the minimum teacher salary set by the state. That means a starting Richardson teacher earns about $15,700 a year — roughly the amount now proposed as a new statewide minimum.

But Ball said more than money makes Richardson schools good. He is proud of "a very aggressive community" that backs the system.

"Can you have quality education across the state? I think that's an idealistic position. However, I do think we can do a better job of spreading the funds," said Ball.

IN A SYSTEM where the poor seem to get less of everything, why should education be different?

"Because that's the law of the land," said Ball.

Will legislators, meeting in a 30-day pressure cooker, be able to correct the equalization ills?

"I don't think equalization will be the problem. The tax bill will," said McLeod of El Paso.

"If we have to rely on a solution coming through the courts it will be several years and a lot more kids will be hurt," said Benson of Ysleta.

"I can't imagine they won't. But I've cleared my calender for the next month to make sure I'm in Austin watching," said Candoli of Fort Worth.

"We have run out of patience," said Vasquez of Edgewood.

DEATHS

Nettie Schulze

Nettie I. Schulze

People of our community who make a difference.

Judge Barbara Culver

To best benefit a city, it is sometimes necessary to venture outside of that city. Judge Barbara Culver has become involved in the county as well as the state to inprove life for Midlanders.

There have been many firsts in Judge Culver's life, such as being the first woman judge in Midland County, the first woman Republican judge in Texas and the first woman to preside over the Republican State Convention in Texas. Besides breaking ground for women, she was performing important tasks that affected the lives of many.

Judge Culver has led an extremely active life. She is a member of the American Bar Association, Midland County Bar Association, the Texas Constitution Committee of the State Bar and the Law Wives Club of Midland. In 1981 she was appointed to the State Liason Committee on Federal Rules of Evidence.

Judge Culver also has served a three year term on the President's Advisory Council on the Education of Disabled Children, as well as being a member of the Midland County Juvenile Board.

The Midland County Commissioner's Court named the county detention home, Culver Youth Home, in her honor.

Locally, Judge Culver is a member and past president of the Altrusa Club, past president of the Midland Branch of the American Association of University Women, an honorary lifetime mmber of the P.T.A. and was a member of the Rape Crisis Board.

The Judge believes that "Midland is the ideal city to live in, to raise children in and to grow up in because it is a city that has always taken an interest in its people, especially its youth. We (Midland) are blessed with many facilities for young people, but with our large percentage of highly educated and involved young people you do not need to look far to see that Midlanders really do care.

All we have are people, so people are interested in other people."

To Judge Culver, Midland creates a "sky is the limit" feeling.

Strong beliefs, dedication and acton is why Judge Barbara Culver makes a difference in Midland.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC's first summer session under way

By H.A. TUCK

If you plan to take a credit course during Midland College's first summer session, you'd better hurry!

Monday is the final day to late register and you've already missed three days of classes. But you still can sign up by visiting the Office of Student Services in the Administration Building between 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. tomorrow.

For you folks who already have a degree or don't want to earn college credits, the Community Service Department is offering a bunch of non-credit courses this summer just for your enjoyment and personal enrichment. They range in length from one evening to four or five weeks. Details about these courses are available in the summer course bulletin, which you can pick up in any Midland bank, the Midland County Library, or from the Community Services Department in the Administration Building.

It looks like a giant gopher has been loose on the campus, leaving a trail of brown grass behind him. But it's really sod that was dug up to install new cable television conduit and cable that will reach to the new Health Sciences Building. The sod was replaced and should be green again soon.

• • •

Speaking of the new building, the construction folks finally have decided not to build a great dirt pyramid after all. It took a lot of dirt work to raise the southwest portion of the construction site 3 feet to make it all level. That's done now and they are laying in the foundation forms and stubbing in the utility lines. With that done, something other than dirt soon should be rising out of the area.

EDUCATION

Seems there always are some minor glitches during registration and this summer's session was no exception. First one came when a small child jumped just high enough to hit a light switch and all the lights in one part of the gym went out. fortunately, the computer terminals continued to work although it was difficult to see to make entries without any overhead lights. It wouldn't have been any problem, but the lights in that part of the building are quartz halide and have to cool for about 10 minutes before they can be turned on again.

The other problem came when a student inadvertently tried to register for 11 hours, when the limit is seven during a summer session. The computer rejected that student... and all others who followed. It took a while before the problem could be debugged, but such an error now wouldn't affect other students.

The registration system which has evolved through the years at Midland College is quick and efficient... which is appreciated mostly by students who have endured registration marathons at other colleges and universities.

If you haven't seen the displays located in the hallways of the Science Building, you really should visit them. There are some unique and interesting exhibitions, even for people who normally aren't especially interested in scientific subjects.

Among the displays are a baby dinosaur, and the jaw of a phytosaur that was discovered recently by Bob Palmer on the D.L. Dorland Ranch near Coahoma. Palmer contacted Dr. Carl Frailey, MC geology instructor and donated the find, which may be the first of a large number of fossils. The phytosaur was crocodile-looking and lived during the Triassic Period, about 200,000,000 years ago.

Also on display are breathtaking wood and stone carvings by Woody Erskine of Midland. These may be seen though June 30. Erskine has some delicate carvings done from a single piece of stone or wood.

The building is open from 7 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday during the summer. Frailey was responsible for putting the displays together.

Equipment purchases normally aren't newsworthy, but maintenance director John Hohenburger can't resist telling about buying a new articulated riding mower for about half the price. Seems the unit was stolen in California by thieves who were arrested in Pecos. The company decided it would be cheaper to sell the mower in Texas than to have it shipped back to California, so MC acquired it at a greatly reduced price. According to Hohenburger, close examination showed the mower had never been driven on grass when it was recovered.

Masses of daisies are blooming now in front of the Student Center, about two or three weeks later than usual because of the cool weather. Along with the roses, they are providing most of the color on campus right now.

Midlander earns medical degree

LUBBOCK — James Manning Jr. of Midland recently was graduated from the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center School of Medicine. He received one of 90 doctor of medicine degrees awarded during the School of Medicine's 10th graduation convocation.

Manning, a member of Alpha Omega Alpha Honor Medical Society, will begin a residency program in otolaryngology at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston. He is the son of James A. Manning of Waynesboro, Pa.

Honored during the School of Medicine Awards Convocation June 2 was Noble Rainwater, son of Jack Rainwater of Irving and Mary Rainwater of Midland.

A member of the class of 1985, Rainwater received the Lange Publications Award for Excellent Performance in Medical School.

Dancerobics sessions to begin at YMCAs

New sessions of Dancerobics will begin Monday at the Midland YMCAs.

Dancerobics, a complete physical fitness program consisting of warm up, aerobic and muscle conditioning exercise routines, does not require dance experience. YMCA membership is not required and babysitting is available.

For further information, contact Judy Reuter at 682-2551.

YMCA class aimed at back sufferers

An exercise program for people who suffer lower back discomfort will be offered by the Central YMCA beginning June 12.

"The Y's Healthy Way to a Healthy Back" is a carefully designed and instructed exercise program to correct and prevent back pain related to muscle weakness, diminished flexibility and muscle tension.

The class will meet every Tuesday and Thursday at 6:30 p.m. for six weeks. Cost is $35 for YMCA and $50 for non-members. Enrollment is limited to 15 students and registration is being accepted at the Central Y, 800 N. Big Spring Street, 682-2551.

education in brief

MC to close summer registration

Monday is the final day for students to late register for Midland College's first summer term.

Students should come to the Office of Student Services in the Administration Building between 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. to sign up.

Information about classes which still have openings may be obtained by calling 684-7851, extension 166, on Monday.

The first summer session ends July 3, except three vocational classes which run two weeks longer.

"At this time enrollment is running slightly behind last year's record figures. Part of this might be because the high schools still were in session when we registered, and some might be attributed to an improvement in economic conditions locally, which is providing employment opportunities for young people that weren't available the past couple of summers," a college spokesman said.

MC awards 'Top 5' scholarships

Midland College has awarded several Top 5 Percent Scholarships to area students. The renewable grant covers tuition, books and fees.

Recipients include: Sara Dobbins, Midland High School, daughter of Albert Dobbins Jr.; Morgan Shrum, Greenwood High School, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Shrum; Rachael Lopez of Seagraves, daughter of Mrs. Ernest Lopez; Paula Oliver of Rankin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Oliver; Rosa Linda Valles of Stanton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andres Valles; Teresa Cantu of Rotan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rogelio Cantu; and Gary Gilbert of Andrews, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gary Gilbert.

4-H'ers to compete in roundup

Five Midland County 4-H'ers will be competing in the 1984 Texas State 4-H'er Roundup Tuesday and Wednesday at Texas A&M University in College Station.

They will be among approxmately 1,600 Texas 4-H Club members participating in the annual Roundup.

The youths representing Midland County and their projects are Kelin Jones, 16, health demonstration; Kim Watson, 18, food show; and Cindy Triplitt, 18, Richard Triplitt, 15, and Lisa Countryman, 16, horse judging.

4-H'ers competing in the food show and Roundup contest qualified for the statewide contest by winning in county and district competition. The project show is open to 4-H youths who are interested in preparing exhibits about particular projects in which they have excelled.

Roundup activities on Tuesday will include the food show, project show, National Dairy Heritage Foundation Public Speaking Contest and 27 career workshops. Approximately 40 contests will be conducted on Wednesday.

Eighty-five outstanding 4-H members will be presented almost a half-million dollars in scholarships in a 7 p.m. Tuesday ceremony. In addition, four supporters of the 4-H program will be recognized by the Texas 4-H Foundation.

On Wednesday, 28 4-H adult volunteer leaders will be cited by the Texas 4-H Foundation. At 8 o'clock that night, Roundup contest winners will be hailed in a special assembly.

Soil week concludes

Soil Stewardship Week, 1984, which rounds out today, emphasizes man's link to the land.

Without plentiful fertile soil, mankind suffers and so does the Earth.

"Americans must become aware of the economic, social, and ecological interdependence between urban and rural areas," says John R. Block, secretary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Long-life milk not catching on

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — About two years ago, a few U.S. dairy companies introduced a new product they hoped would win quick approval from consumers — milk specially treated to stay on the shelf for months, without refrigeration.

But the product — known as UHT milk, for the ultra-high-temperature process used to treat it — has been slow to catch on. Sales have been adding 1.5 percent to 2 percent to sales of regular milk products in most markets, instead of a hoped-for 3 percent, according to one maker, Dairymen Inc. The cooperative's Savannah, Ga., UHT milk plant is operating at just half its capacity.

Faced with that problem, the company's lobbyists approached members of Congress for a favor. Would they add to a farm bill then being drafted a provision requiring the federal government to buy up some of the surplus milk and donate it to needy third-world countries?

Sen. Walter Huddleston, D-Ky., agreed to offer the provision, and in March won passage on the Senate floor and in a House-Senate negotiating committee. Dairymen Inc. is based in Louisville, in Huddleston's home state, and has been generous in its campaign giving to members of Congress.

Water lawns properly

When the weather turns dry, don't just turn on your lawn sprinkler and then gripe about your high water bill. By watering, fertilizing and mowing your lawn properly, you can reduce your water bill as much as 40 percent.

Conservation by the homeowner provides the only solution to high water bills and excessive water demands during our hot and usually dry Texas summers.

In small cities where industrial demand for water is low, lawn watering may account for as much as half of all the water used during summer months. Even in larger cities, lawns get 30 to 40 percent of all the water supplied by municipalities.

Most Texas lawns need about 2 inches of water per week during the summer and most of this comes from irrigation.

Exactly what can a homeowner do to reduce this summer water bill?

The first thing is to water your lawn only when grass starts to show signs of drought stress. Look for discoloration and wilting. If leaves roll up in the later afternoon and footprints remain after walking across the lawn, then water within 24 hours.

Once you've decided that your lawn needs watering, do it right. Most homeowners don't water their lawns properly. They either water too often, causing grass to develop shallow roots and making it a prime target for insects, diseases and temperature extremes, or they water too infrequently and apply too much water at one time, resulting in a lot of runoff.

When watering, soak the soil to a depth of 4 to 6 inches. In heavy clay soils, watering for 15 to 20 minute periods may be necessary to prevent excessive runoff.

Cutting back on lawn fertilization can also reduce watering. Apply fertilizer in the spring and fall will generally keep your lawn healthy. Fertilizing during the summer, especially with nitrogen fertilizer, will green up your lawn, but it will also make it grow faster and use more water.

Mowing less often and cutting our grass at taller heights also will help keep your lawn in better shape during hot, dry weather. St. Augustinegrass does will when mowed at a 3-inch height, and bermudagrass can be cut at a 2-inch height.

ARMED FORCES NEWS

Servicemen complete assignments, training

Navy Petty Officer 3rd Class Mark H. Duncan, son of John T. Duncan of Odessa, recently returned from a six-month deployment to the Eastern Mediterranean.

He is a crewmember aboard the amphibious assault ship USS Guam, homeported in Norfolk, Va.

During the deployment, the Guam participated in "Operation Urgent Fury" in Grenada, evacuating over 1,000 civilians from the island nation.

The ship then supported the Multi-national Peacekeeping Force in Beirut, Lebanon. The crew helped evacuate over 600 civilians from the war-torn country, and assisted in the redeployment of U.S. Marines.

Marine Lance Cpl. Paul G. Johnson Jr., son of Paul G. Johnson Sr. and Anna P. Benton both of Odessa, has been promoted to his present rank while serving with 3rd Force Service Support Group in Okinawa.

Navy Seaman Recruit Ronald B. Todd, son of Dale R. and Martha J. Todd of Odessa, has completed recruit training at the Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Ill.

During the eight-week training cycle, trainees studied general military subjects designed to prepare them for further academic and on-the-job training in one of the Navy's 85 basic occupational fields.

Included in their studies were seamanship, close order drill, Naval history and first aid. Personnel who complete this course of instruction are eligible for three hours of college credit in Physical Education and Hygiene.

Marine Gunnery Sgt. Robert D. Newby, son of Ronald E. and Bobbie D. Newby of Garden City, recently returned from a six-month deployment to Beirut, Lebanon and the eastern Mediterranean.

He is a member of Battalion Landing Team 2/8, 22nd Marine Amphibious Unit (MAU), based at Camp Lejeune, N.C.

The MAU was involved in "Operation Urgent Fury" in Grenada in October 1983. It began its peacekeeping role in Lebanon in early November 1983 as part of the Multi-national Peacekeeping Force and continued serving in the eastern Mediterranean Sea until early April.

The Marines of the 22nd MAU were among the last Americans to leave Lebanon when the U.S. Peacekeeping forces pulled out of the war-torn country.

Navy Petty Officer 3rd Class John T. Bodew, son of Richard and Bonnie Bodew of Odessa, recently participated in "Baltic Operations 1984," a major multi-national exercise in the Baltic Sea.

He is a crewmember aboard the destroyer USS John Rodgers, homeported in Charleston, S.C.

Over four thousand men from six nations took part in the two week naval and air exercise. Five U.S. ships and about 35 ships and patrol craft from Belgium, Denmark, West Germany and Great Britain participated.

While in the Baltic, the John Rodgers visited Aarhus, Denmark; Kiel, Germany; and Helsinki, Finland. It was one of the first U.S. Navy ships to visit Finland in almost two years, and had to follow a Finnish icebreaker more than 20 miles through to reach Helsinki. Once there, the crew took part in many social and cultural activities, and also hosted thousands of Finnish visitors aboard the ship.

Marine Gunnery Sgt. Sammy L. Hunt III, son of Vernell and Sammy L. Hunt II of 1200 Pine St., and 1926 Morgan Way, respectively, Midland, has been awarded the Navy Achievement Medal.

He received the decoration for superior performance of duty while serving at Marine Corps Recruit Depot in San Diego.

The medal is an official recognition of an individual's outstanding accomplishments and is presented during formal ceremonies.

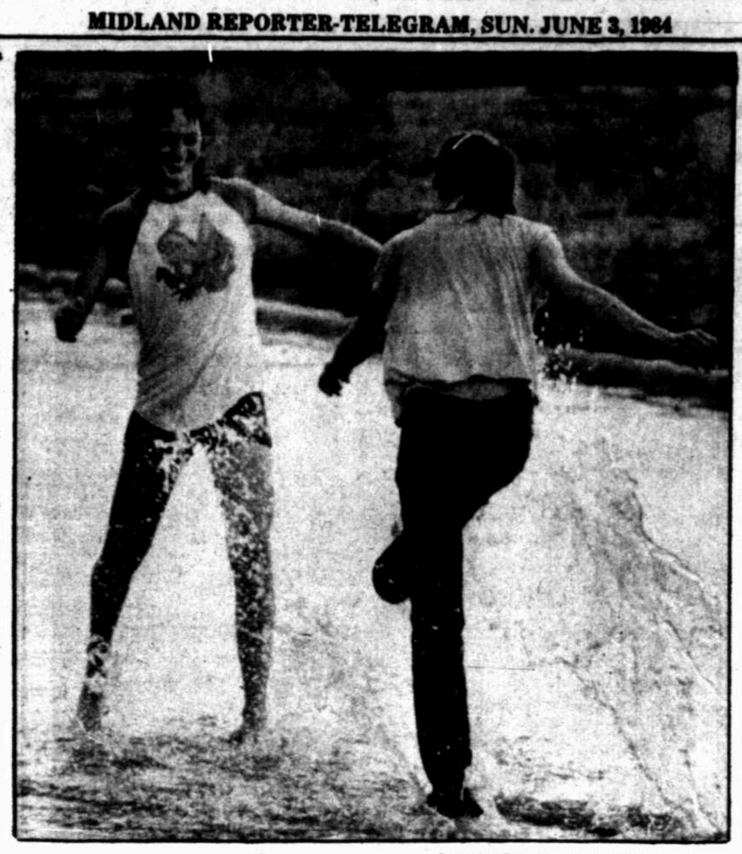

Navy Airman Recruit Cary L. Stotts, son of Don T. and Rita K. Stotts of 4902 Leisure, Midland, has completed recruit training at the Naval Training Center, San Diego.

During the eight-week training cycle, trainees studied general military subjects designed to prepare them for further academic and on-the-job training in one of the Navy's 85 basic occupational fields.

Included in their studies were seamanship, close order drill, Naval history and first aid.

Life's good in Norway

Among the Nordic countries, Norway has the lowest suicide rate, according to a six-year study which shows Denmark and Finland with more then 30 suicides a year per 100,000 population, Sweden with 20 and Norway with only 12.

VACATION HOME TAX CHANGES

Until recently, owners of second homes have been treated like villians by the IRS and disallowed business tax deductions if they departed from any of the stringent rules regarding the business rental use of second homes.

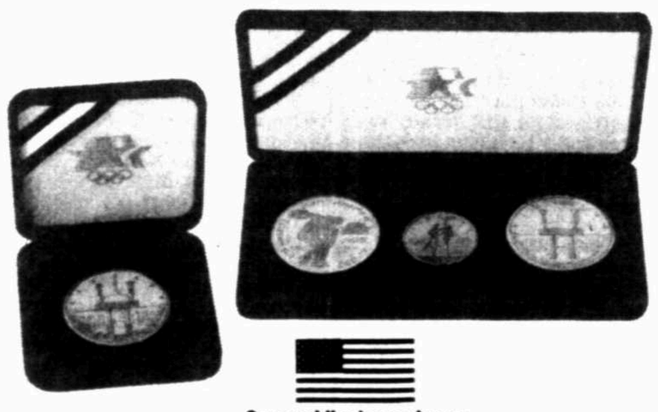

For example in 1976 the tax change precluded taking business deductions (depreciation, utility expenses and repair and maintenance costs) if the owner used the second home for more than two weeks (or 10% of the year's rental use) for his or her own PERSONAL use.

To twist the knife a little, the IRS interpreted personal use, the rental of the property to any related family members (even at a fair rental price).

Now Congress has relaxed these rules and in its own way has said that relatives can be treated under the tax law just like strangers and that a property owner should not be penalized for renting a vacation home or apartment to his parents (for example). The new tax ruling states that rentals to relatives (as long as it is at the going rate) will be treated as any other rental. The regular deductions will be allowed. Check with your CPA or your tax attorney.

International officer at Lions convention

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Sten A. Akestam is one of the luckier officers of the International Association of Lions Clubs. He doesn't suffer from jet lag.

"Either you have it or you don't," Akestam, of Stockholm, Sweden, said with a smile.

In order to make it to Midland for the District 2-A1 and Multiple District 2 Convention this weekend, he had to leave a state convention in Sweden following the opening ceremonies.

"We all travel," the third vice president of the International Association of Lions Clubs said. "But I really like Texas. You come back to every state too often, but I try to get back to Texas as often as I can."

Although not able to become involved in politics, or even talk about it publicly, Akestam said the goal of Lions International is world peace. Written in the bylaws is the goal of "establishing world cooperation."

"If you work like this and create understanding all over the world, the final goal could be peace, but we don't express it that way," he said.

"If people understand each other and understand problems, I think the risk of wars and misunderstanding really disappears."

Akestam, who lives near Russia, said he knows many businessmen in that country, where Lionism is not allowed. "They don't understand why an organization like this that serves other people is necessary," he said. "But we would like to be there."

The 37,000 Lions Clubs in 157 geographical areas primarily focus on performing community service and meeting local needs, which is "fine, but we have to get into international services, too," he said.

Spilling over from local efforts, the two major goals established by the International Association of Lions Clubs are fighting drug abuse and fostering the blind.

When Ebb Grindstaff was president two years ago, he established the War on Drugs as an international goal. Through the present international president's term and when the two other vice presidents move into the office, that goal will continue. And Akestam, who takes over in July 1986, will continue the tradition.

"The main reason, and there are many, is that it hurts young people today," he said. "We need to continue on such a program because we're not going to solve it in one year, or two, or maybe ever."

In Sweden, Akestam said drug abuse is a big problem; so big, in fact that the Swedish Leo Clubs, or junior lions clubs, and the Lioness Clubs for women also took up the effort and spread it to their respective international clubs, which boast of more than 100,000 members each.

Sten A. Akestam

The Lions Clubs established in countries where illegal drugs are grown, produced and transported, such as Columbia, Thailand and the Phillipines, are also involved in the issue.

"When we went to Thailand and said, 'You must help us,' the Thailand Lions said, 'We don't know what you're talking about because we don't have that kind of problem,' " Akestam said. Since then, the effort was recognized and is being dealt with on an increasing scale.

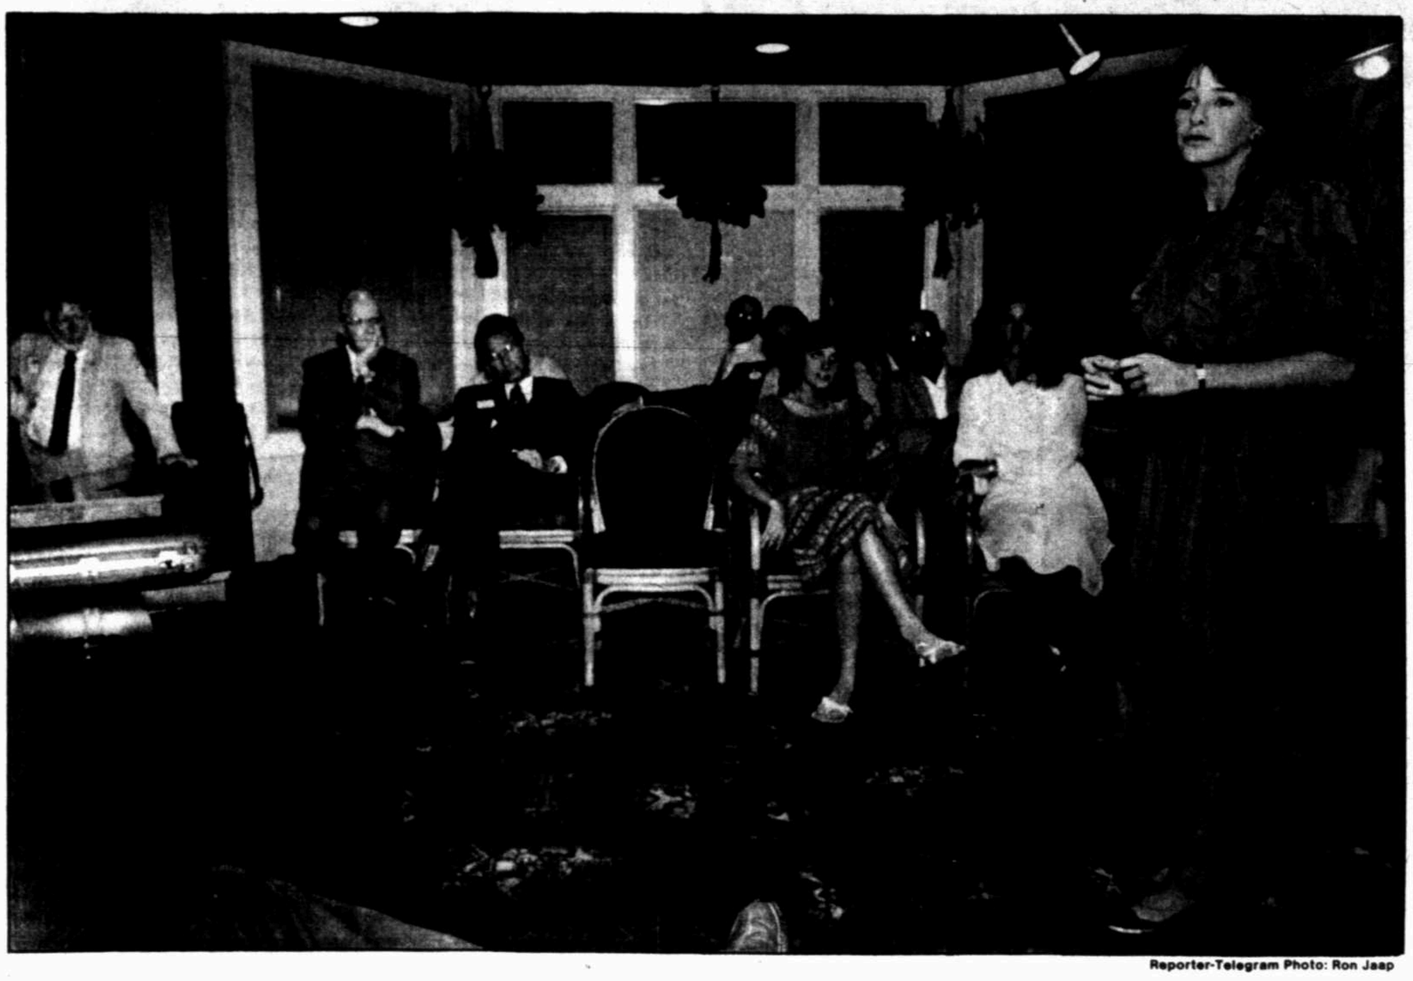

"We are not experts on this," Akestam said. "But what we can do is promote those experts we have who go out and give information about the damage of drugs.

"In Sweden, we have an organization just to inform everyone about this," he said, referring to the damage of drugs. "We have parents of youngsters who have been struck by the catastrophe involved. We use artists and athletes to talk to the students."

The second goal of Lionism internationally is helping the blind. Eight years after the first chapters in the United States were established in 1917, Helen Keller appeared on the scene. "The Lions of the United States really worked hard on that," he said. While this country has established many eye banks and programs such as those for training seeing-eye dogs, Sweden concentrates on providing eye operations in India, he said.

With 37 different countries involved in 60 youth camps every year and the international youth exchange, Akestam pointed to the importance of young people from different countries getting together with each other. For example, he said, last year Finland sent some 700 students to live with American host families.

"I think the world needs something like this: People caring for other people," Akestam said. "That is very necessary."

Lisa Wied, of Needville, was one of 10 students participating in the State War on Drugs Speech Contest.

Students wage own 'War on Drugs'

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The same peer pressure which is thought to turn kids onto drugs can be used to get them to kick drug abuse, according to students competing in the State War on Drugs Speech Contest Saturday.

"Eleven billion young people in the world today have experimented with or used drugs," said Cary Andrews, one of 10 students from district Lions Clubs at the Midland convention, which began Thursday. "When the statistics are large enough, the numbers don't lie. Drugs are harmful and, in some cases, deadly."

The students, representing 10 of 15 districts, spoke of the harmful effects of drugs, the negative impact from society which fosters drug abuse and ways in which the state war on drugs can succeed. Fighting drug abuse is the main goal of the International Association of Lions Clubs.

"American industry loses $25 billion a year because of drugs," said Jennifer Hanlon of Carthage. "Two-thirds of all high school students across the nation have at least experimented with drugs."

"Drugs are not just destroying this generation," said Jan Wornat of Roanoke, "but they also are destroying the next.

"TV and movies aren't helping either," she continued. "They show the kids getting stoned and having a ball with their friends, but they don't show the after effects."

"Many of you may not consider alcoholism as a form of drug abuse," Lisa Wied of Needville told the judges, Lions and their spouses in the audience at the Midland Holidome. "The nicotine in the cigarette that makes you feel relaxed after a long hard day at work can also be classified as drugs. We, the youth of today, should look forward to a future free of drug abuse — and it's not too late."

Awareness that drug abuse exists, education on the effects of drugs and prevention by recognizing early symptoms of drug abuse are the steps to take toward controlling the problem, the students said.

According to Karon Flage of San Angelo, a high school student panel that discusses the harmful effects of drugs have made other teenagers more responsive to the anti-drug movement.

"Your enemy is not the little pill or the little joint," Miss Flage said. "The enemy is apathy."

"The message is out," Michelle Vasquez said. "If you have a headache, take a pill. If you want to relax, have a drink. If you want to feel different, take a chemical.... Eighty percent of all crimes in Texas are either directly or indirectly involved with drug abuse."

"We in the state of Texas have decided to declare war on drugs and it's about time," said David Mee of Plano. "Peer pressure is cited as the number one way of getting kids started on drugs. But it's just as effective the other way around.

"Together — I think that's a valuable word," he said. "I believe, and history will back me up, that there is no problem Texas or Texans working together can't solve."

Stephen F. Austin's first tomb an empty memorial

The Associated Press

JONES CREEK — The brick and stone tomb lies empty in the shady family cemetery in Brazoria County. It has been 147 years since Stephen F. Austin was lowered into the tomb intended to be his final resting place.

Austin died on Dec. 27, 1836, approximately two months after being named secretary of state by the Texas republic's first president, Sam Houston. Austin caught a cold — which developed into pneumonia — while working in a damp, unheated room in Columbia, the Republic of Texas' first permanent seat of government.

At the age of 43 Austin was laid to rest at Peach Point Plantation, owned by his sister, Emily Austin Bryan Perry, and brother-in-law, James Franklin Perry. The cotton and sugar plantation, located in what is now southern Brazoria County, is still being ranched by the Perry family.

Austin's tomb remains where it was in 1836. What's missing is Austin's body. It was disinterred in 1910 and taken to the State Cemetery in the Texas capital.

The empty tomb lies behind the Gulf Prairie Presbyterian Church in Jones Creek, organized in 1877, where many Perry and Bryan family members still worship.

"Sometimes I work the tomb into my sermon. Both Austin's and Jesus Christ's tombs are empty — except Austin was moved," says the Rev. Dennis Winzenried, Gulf Prairie's minister.

Austin's remains were moved because the Perrys and the Bryans could not assure that the family cemetery would be preserved and didn't want to risk losing such a historical site to progress or decay.

"The family was afraid that maybe everybody would leave, which they could have well done. They were afraid the cemetery wouldn't be honored," says Mary Alice Perry, whose husband, Stephen S. Perry Jr., is the fifth generation Perry to live at Peach Point.

Henry Austin Perry witnessed the 1910 disinterment of Austin, his great uncle, and described it to his daughter, Mildred, who was 14 at the time.

"I don't know why they opened the casket, but they did. My father was astounded when he saw the body," recounts 88-year-old Mildred Billingsley of Clute.

Austin's body looked petrified, Perry told his daughter.

The remains were removed on a sunny October morning, remembers Mrs. Billingsley. Austin's body arrived in Angleton, the county seat, around 2 p.m. School let out early that day, and a simple ceremony was planned. "We sang a little, and we prayed a little," she recalls.

Mrs. Billingsley is the oldest living descendant of Moses Austin, a Connecticutt-born lead mine operator in Virginia who received permission from the Spanish government in 1820 to settle 300 families in Texas.

Moses Austin died before the venture began, and his 27-year-old son, Stephen, renegotiated the deal with a new, independent Mexican government. By 1822 the Austin Colony began to form along the Brazos and Colorado river banks.

Emily and James Perry moved to the colony in 1832. They began a new life on a parcel of land now located in Jones Creek, naming the property Peach Point Plantation.

Austin moved to Peach Point shortly before his death, after requesting that a small office be built onto the family homestead where he could attend to business when he returned from Columbia.

Today, a short distance from the tomb stands the small office and what was once a family room. Until the 1900 storm the rooms were attached to the house James Perry built.

"The office had a separate outside entrance. Austin was secretary of state at the time. Well, he could come down here at night and not bother the rest of the family," notes Mrs. Perry.

Odessa man sentenced to prison in triple slaying

ODESSA (AP) — A 29-year-old Odessa man who admitted using a baseball bat to kill his mother-in-law and her two teen-aged sons last year has been sentenced to three concurrent 55-years prison terms.

Kenneth Venne was given the sentences Friday after pleading guilty to the July 13, 1983, murders of Ruby Kay Fieseler, 50, and her sons Paul, 17, and Keith, 13.

Court officials say that Venne will be eligible for parole in 18 years. But prosecutor David Rosado, the chief assistant district attorney in Ector County, said it would be highly unlikely Venne would be released then.

"As a general rule, most guys don't get out (on parole) their first time up," Rosado said Friday. "At least not violent criminals ... He will not get out early."

State District Judge Joe Connally sentenced Venne after he pleaded guilty as part of a plea bargain worked out between prosecutors and his attorney, Warren Heagy.

Venne was scheduled to stand trial in Connally's court June 17 for the slayings. Under Texas law, the 55-year sentences were just short of the maximum punishment, court officials said.

A grand jury first indicted Venne on capital murder charges, on grounds that Venne committed the killings in the process of burglarizing the house. But prosecutors later said they would be forced to try Venne on a reduced charge of murder.

Malone-Hogan programs center on respiratory ills in newborns

BIG SPRING — Dr. Bernard Zilberg, Malone and Hogan Clinic pediatrician, will lead off the June continuing medical education series sponsored by Malone-Hogan Hospital for area physicians and health care professionals.

Scheduled for Wednesday and June 13, Zilberg's two-part program, "All That Grunts," will cover management of respiratory difficulties in newborn infants. The local pediatrician explained that "grunt" is a medical term for sounds made by a newborn in respiratory distress.

Other seminars include "Restoration of Sensation," by orthopedic surgeon Dr. Royce Lewis, chief of hand services at Texas Tech Health Sciences Center in Lubbock, June 20, and "Male Impotence and the Penile Prothesis," by Malone and Hogan clinic urologist Dr. Rudy Haddad, June 27.

Each of the Wednesday seminars begin at 12:30 p.m. in the first floor classroom at Malone-Hogan Hospital.

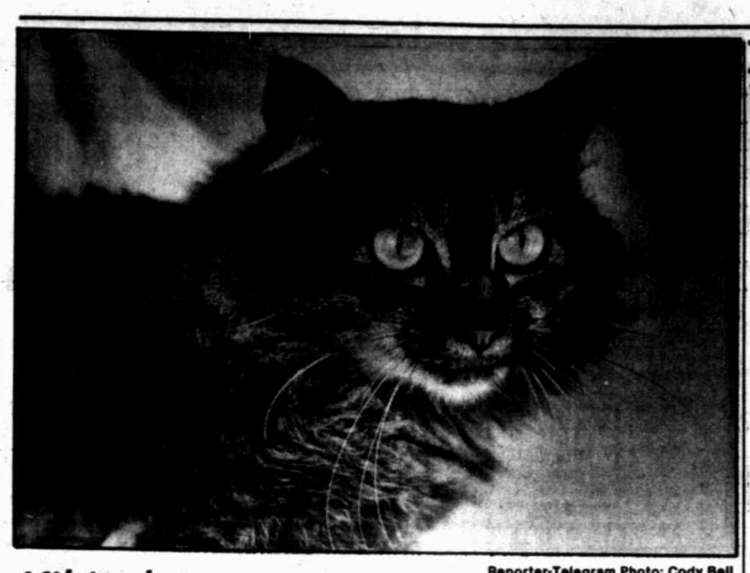

To attend the noon luncheon which immediately precedes each presentation, reservations should be made with Sissy Jones at Malone-Hogan Hospital, 263-1211, extension 175, by 4:30 p.m. the preceding day.

Library's 'Friends' begin drive for books

From Staff Reports

The Friends of the Midland County Public Library will hold a book drive this week to raise hardback and paperback books and magazines for its 17th annual Book Sale this October.

The book drive's headquarters is in a metal building in the middle of a parking lot at Industrial and Kentucky avenues on the southside of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. tracks.

Library patrons and others wishing to donate books and periodicals to the Friends may locate the book drive's headquarters by turning west off of Main Street onto Kentucky Avenue and driving a block westward to the building. The building is near the old U.S. Postal Service depot, which now is a warehouse used by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Friends Mary Mann and Mary Hughes will receive the books from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Books and specialized magazines which run the spectrum of the human experience are most welcome, Ms. Mann said.

"Anything anybody wants to give us we will take," she said.

The annual Book Sale, scheduled Oct. 19, 20 and 21 in the Midland County Exhibit Building, features encyclopedias and other reference works, biographies, Westerns, science fiction and other fiction, children's books, and volumes on petroleum and geology, and the disciplines — books from art to war.

Funds raised in the sale go toward purchasing non-budgeted library equipment and materials, such as computers, computer printers and disks, display racks, art prints, film projectors, map cabinets, magnifying lenses, carpeting and other items. The Friends also provide scholarships for staff librarians who are continuing their education.

Last years' Books Sale netted the Friends $10,439.90.

Fort Worth Star-Telegram schedule disrupted by fire

FORT WORTH — A pre-dawn fire Saturday in the air conditioning ducts of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram press room disrupted the newspaper's weekend publishing operations and part of their Sunday edition was printed at the Dallas Morning News.

Fire and smoke erupted from ducts located near press units about 3:48 a.m., a few minutes after completion of the Saturday edition press run.

The few employees remaining in the building were evacuated. There were no injuries.

Smoke filled the two basement levels housing the three lines of presses and spilled over to the first floor and mezzanine, when sprinkler and carbon dioxide extinguishing systems were activated.

Total damage could not be immediately assessed, but it included a large air conditioning fan. The cause of the fire was undetermined, newspaper officials said.

Nine Fort Worth Fire Department units and 35 firefighters extinguished the fire three hours after it began.

"The fire got into the vents, and of course that created its own thermal (system).... We had to check out all those vents and be sure the fire was out," said District Chief Jim Noah of the Fort Worth Fire Department.

The fire temporarily disabled two lines of presses and delayed the schedule for several early press runs for the Sunday Star-Telegram. One of the press lines was restored at 11:45 a.m. and the other at 2:40 p.m. Saturday.

The Dallas Morning News made available its press facilities and printed 100,000 copies of one of the Star-Telegram's three early-Sunday press runs.

Star-Telegram President and Publisher Phil Meek said:

"We are indebted to the management and employees of the Dallas Morning News for coming to our aid. They devoted an entire press line Saturday to print as many copies of our three early press runs as we required."

Meek also lauded the response of Star-Telegram employees.

"The dedication and responsiveness of so many Star-Telegram employees was a sight to behold," he said. "We had dozens of pressmen who started work at 4 p.m. Friday and worked until mid-day Saturday to ensure that the presses were back in working order.

Eighteen members of the night press crew worked 20 straight hours.

A major press room fire at the Star-Telegram in September 1968 knocked out several press units and caused several hundred thousands of dollars damage. It also resulted in the newspaper being unable to print its then-Saturday evening edition.

Hit-and-run truck driver sought after four deaths

CORSICANA (AP) — Investigators were searching Saturday for a hit-and-run truck driver involved in an accident that killed four people, including three Ugandans, on Interstate 45, the Department of Public Safety said.

The accident four miles south of here involved a tractor-trailer rig, two small trucks and a car about 11 p.m. Friday, said DPS spokesman Larry Todd. The tractor-trailer rig's driver left the scene in his truck, Todd said.

The dead were identified as Michael Ray Kneblick, 29, a policeman in the Dallas suburb of Irving and the driver of one of the two small trucks; and the Ugandans riding in the car, Dr. Rugaaju Sem Kushaba, 32; his wife, Rugaaju Mabel Kushaba, 29; and son, James Kushaba, 4.

The Ugandans lived in Houston where the father was a physician, Todd said.

Three of the victims were pronounced dead at the accident site by Navarro County Peace Justice Aubrey Smith. The 4-year-old was pronounced dead at Navarro Regional Hospital in Corsicana.

Highway patrolman Bill Bradley said the tractor-trailer rig was traveling southbound on I-45 when its rear tires struck Kushaba's car, knocking it out of control and causing it to careen into the oncoming freeway lanes.

The car then struck Kneblick's truck, causing a chain-reaction collision with a second truck. Its driver was not injured.

The bodies of the dead were taken to a funeral home in Corsicana, 55 miles southeast of Dallas.

State education board repeals rule restricting evolution teaching

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Board of Education on Saturday repealed a controversial rule that restricted the teaching of evolution.

Without debate, the board formally repealed the 10-year-old rule that required references to evolution in textbooks to "identify it as only one of several explanations of the origins of humankind."

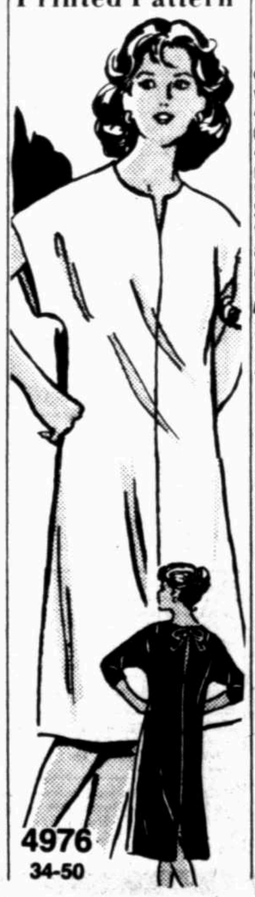

Critics of the rule have said it influenced the teaching of biology nationwide because the Texas textbook market is so large that publishers sometimes tailor texts to Texas needs.

We're a pacesetter in our field, with the stability and leadership that can fully utilize and develop your talents and expertise. Current and anticipated new product introductions provide a fast-paced environment in which to work and grow. As our sales representative, you'll establish new markets and build on existing ones through contact with physicians, pharmacists, and hospitals. 40% overnight travel.

A minimum of 2-3 years previous outside sales experience, with documented record of accomplishments, and a college degree will qualify you for this exciting career opportunity. Previous pharmaceutical sales or scientific background is a definite plus. We provide a very intensive training program to help prepare you for this challenging position. In addition to outstanding advancement potential, your efforts will be rewarded with an excellent salary, based on your experience, and complete fringe benefits including company car and quarterly bonus.

Applicants with prior pharmaceutical sales experience will be given special consideration. Send your resume with salary requirements in strictest confidence to:

$49 OVER FACTORY INVOICE

The $49 Over Factory Invoice Concept

No salespeople, low inventory. Volume selling cuts our total selling expenses by $600 per car sold, making it possible to sell every brand new 1984 and 1985 Buick, Oldsmobile, Pontiac and GMC truck at $ 49 over factory invoice. No exceptions. Everyone pays the same price at Don Perryman Motors: $49 over the price we pay the manufacturer and we guarantee it in writing. Price includes 3% dealer bonus referred to as "holdback" paid by GM. All factory options are sold at exact factory invoice. you see the original, untampered, authentic factory invoice. Not a limited offer.

No gimmicks, no pressure, no dickering. Factory order the car or truck of you choice with the exact options and color you want. Six weeks delivery for most models. The don Perry Motors staff of professional and courteous auto consultants is available for product information, quick-spec pricing, used car appraisals, and factory ordering. Free paint sealant, fabricare and full tank of gas with every new vehicle delivered, plus free engine oil changes, filters and lubes for the life of your car or truck. We encourage trades. We ask for a $500 deposit. If for any reason you should have to cancel your order, your deposit will be cheerfully refunded. Visit, call, or write. Our new concept in auto buying will make your new vehicle purchase a pleasurable experience.

"I'VE SEEN EVERY APARTMENT COMMUNITY IN MIDLAND."

"My feet hurt and my patience was wearing thin. I'd seen every apartment community in Midland, and none met my standards... until I discovered Oakridge Apartments. Just a little off the beaten trail, Oakridge has the quiet, private location I'd been looking for. Plus all the other extras I'd just about given up on. Like new construction, nice, friendly neighborhood appeal and superior amenities—indoor spa and sauna, clubhouse and pool, to name just a few—Oakridge is the greatest. I should know, I've seen them all."

1- and 2-bedroom and 2-bedroom studio apartment homes are available now. Take Loop 250 to N. Holiday Hill Road and look for the giant American flag.

ASSUMPTIONS.....ASSUMPTIONS.....
ASSUMPTIONS..... Forget High Interest Rates! Nice Homes ..... Low Rate Loans!

CASCADE-Non escalating, non-qualifying fixed 11.5 FHA loan makes this beautiful three bedroom, two bath brick home in Superior the best buy in today's market. This property's gonna sell; better hurry $87,500

GREENBRIAR-If you have $3,500 total for the equity in this nice 1800 square foot home with two living areas in the Northwest, move in! PLUS...assume 10% interest rate on the first year of a 3-2-1 buy-down $72,500

SUNNYSIDE-This sparkling three bedroom, two bath brick home would move fast even if you didn't have the opportunity to assume a 9.125% BOND MONEY loan. It's fairly new to the market. $69,900

CANYON-Forget the loan applications and high rates! You don't even have to qualify for this FHA fixed rate loan PLUS...a three bedroom home with BIG workshop, see it today! 48,000

PLACID-Attention Veterans! The total equity on this exceptionally well-built Superior addition home is only $9,900. Almost 1800 square feet, HOW warranty, quiet Cul-de-sac and a backyard big enough for a par 3 ..... $97,000

ANETTA-Oh Honey it's such a creme puff!" AND...it's got a fixed, assumable 10¾% loan. Let's call Regency right now!" $49,500

RUIDOSO COURT-New carpet through the entire house went in this past week–beautiful color and texture–and new wallpaper goes in this week. You can even pick the paper and let the bank pay for it if you hurry! 3-2-2 with huge utility, AND...assume 9.125 rate or seller will provide 10% fixed with as little as 4,300 down $83,900

BEECHWOOD-Who says there are no good assumptions on GREENTREE. How about 11.25% and a classy contemporary with big backyard ... $134,900

BENTWOOD-The equity might be high but the property, a nice three bedroom, two bath with much pride of ownership and sprinkler system is a bargain $55,000

PERMIAN-Just listed and priced to sell. VA loan so you pay $45 transfer, sellers equity and move in. Beautiful, extremely well-built and exceptionally maintained home on corner lot. Really nice. $93,000

NEELY-Wydewood beauty with over 2,200 square feet. 11.25 assumption and custom amenities through-out, on two lots $127,900

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT
HUD HOMES FOR SALE

Equal Housing Opportunity

Offers to purchase will be accepted on the following properties in accordance with normal bidding procedures:

EARNEST MONEY POLICY CHANGE

In a change to our longstanding policy, it has been determined that earnest money received in connection with the sale of HUD Homes will be deposited upon execution by HUD of the HUD 9548, Standard Retail Sales Contract.

NOTICE

The following language shall be entered in Item "H", Form HUD-9548, Standard Retail Sales Contract, when a property is sold AS, IS, UNREPAIRED, NOT ELIGIBLE FOR MORTGAGE INSURANCE:

"Item 11 on the reverse hereof is void and of no effect and the purchaser will make no claim thereunder. Purchaser also acknowledges that the property may not meet local code requirements on which certificates of occupancy are based. The seller does not assume any liability for the correction of outstanding building code violations after the sale is closed. Compliance with building code requirements is the responsibility of the purchaser. Item b. on the reverse of this contract is hereby deleted. HUD will deposit the earnest money deposit, tendered herewith, upon acceptance of this contract."

Effective IMMEDIATELY only the HUD 9551 (Broker's Tender) will be submitted on properties in the ten (10) day listing period shown below. Within five (5) working days after notification that an offer submitted on HUD Form 9551 has been awarded first priority for processing, the selling broker must submit the following exhibits: Earnest money deposit, executed HUD Form 9548 (Standard Retail Sales Contract) and an executed statement of Forfeiture of Earnest Money Deposit. Upon receipt of the earnest money and HUD 9548, the earnest money will be deposited. On FIRST-COME, FIRST SERVE properties, include all documents in bid offer.

DEADLINE FOR RECEIPT OF BIDS: JUNE 12, 1984 4:45 p.m.
BID OPENING DATE: JUNE 13, 1984 9:00 a.m.

Also taking a break at the billiard parlor is Rachel wearing a DeWeese suit.

Darlene wears a black Anne Cole suit.

Defying myths and misconceptions that the new swimsuit styles are for perfect model bodies only, Susan Holland has information to help the remainder of the population (and the majority) who think they're just not the perfect fit.

French-cut legs, for example, were the panic in recent years. Many women thought the only body fit for the thigh- and partial hip-revealing style was a body with slim or no-shaped thighs.

Not so, said Mrs. Holland, owner of the Islands Swimwear Shop in the Midland Park Mall. On the contrary, the style is especially flattering for larger thighs because the cut distracts the eye from the thigh to a higher point, she said, and the arch cut gives the illusion of a longer leg.

She has studied the art of fitting swimsuits to different body shapes since she began visiting the Dallas market four or five times a year after opening her store in 1979.

Shopping for swimsuits is "a traumatic experience for many women," she said, but it doesn't have to be.

One tip to ease the mind: No matter what size a woman wears, she needs to look for a suit one or two sizes larger than what she normally wears, Mrs. Holland said, because manufacturers create suits to fit an average size of torsos with little consideration for other body parts or non-average sizes.

The way to shop for a suit is not to walk into a store, look for a favorite color and try on the first one that catches the eye.

A suit should be selected according to the woman's shape, bone structure and height.

"People need to know that 90 percent of the suits are not for them," she said.

"They should concentrate on the 10 percent that is for them.

And, she advises, "even if it's traumatic, ask for help. Tell the clerk what the problem areas are and what the needs are."

Not everyone can find several perfect suits. And Mrs. Holland, who has her choice of several hundred in her own store, is no exception. Even though she has a large body of water in her back yard (she and her husband John built their own lake), she claims she may find only three or four suits per year she is really pleased with.

A marketing research study conducted by the Du Pont Textile Fibers department found that women ages 14-17, 18-22 and 23-34 tend to purchase more solid-colored suits than patterned suits. The age group 35-49 showed higher purchase percentages of patterns and fewer solids.

The same study concluded 1980 sales were higher for one-piece suits, with the highest market for two-piece suits in the 14-17 age bracket with 43 percent. From there, sales dropped to 40 percent in the 18-22 group, to 37 percent in the 23-34 group, to 30 percent in the 35-49, 50-64 group and the 65-plus group. The study also indicated that the two-piece category was comprised of 75 percent bikini and 25 percent regular two-pieces.

Swimsuits have the ability to flatter a figure and camouflage the flaws.

Besides finding a perfect-fitting and perfectly-flattering suit, getting one with quality is an equally important factor.

For example, the better quality — and usually more expensive — lycra suits will contain more lycra. This allows for long term wear if it is properly cared for. A less expensive lycra suit may lose its elasticity.

Caring for a suit is equally as important as selecting one of good quality. Chlorine, sun and harsh elements take a toll on suits. Immediately after wearing, the suit should be rinsed and hung to dry. It should never be put in a dryer, Mrs. Holland said, and it should never be left in a cold, damp room. A shower is an ideal place for a suit to dry.

Lycra suits are popular right now — and have been for the past several years. Other popular fabrics include 100 percent cotton and the new textured fabric suits.

"Basic body styles don't change that much, but textures change and how individual designers build a suit change."

Aside from style, shape, quality and pattern, the most important factor in selecting a suit is how the wearer feels in it, Mrs. Holland said.

"If you're comfortable and you feel good in it, that's all that really matters."

Also taking a break at the billiard parlor is Rachel wearing a DeWeese suit.

Defying myths and misconceptions that the new swimsuit styles are for perfect model bodies only, Susan Holland has information to help the remainder of the population (and the majority) who think they're just not the perfect fit.

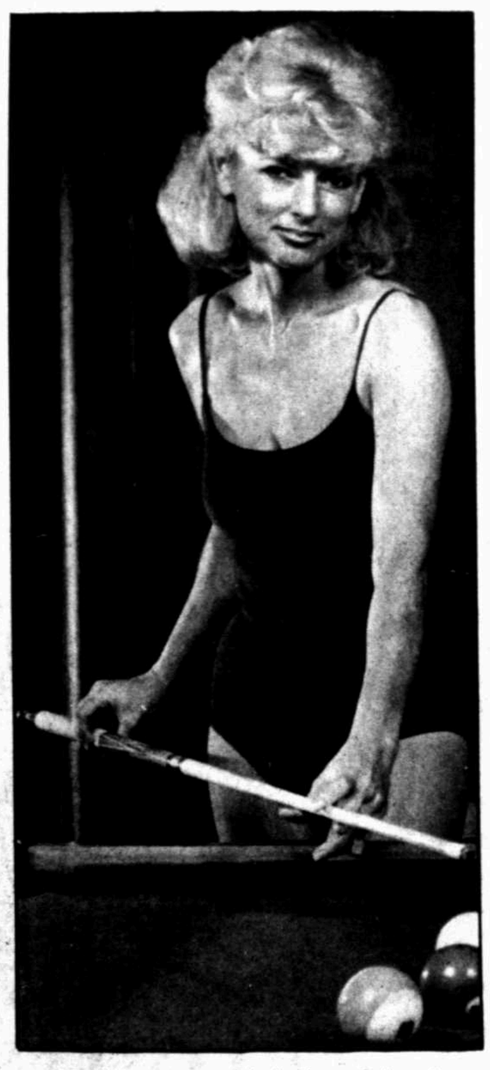

French-cut legs, for example, were the panic in recent years. Many women thought the only body fit for the thigh- and partial hip-revealing style was a body with slim or no-shaped thighs.

Not so, said Mrs. Holland, owner of the Islands Swimwear Shop in the Midland Park Mall. On the contrary, the style is especially flattering for larger thighs because the cut distracts the eye from the thigh to a higher point, she said, and the arch cut gives the illusion of a longer leg.

She has studied the art of fitting swimsuits to different body shapes since she began visiting the Dallas market four or five times a year after opening her store in 1979.

Shopping for swimsuits is "a traumatic experience for many women," she said, but it doesn't have to be.

One tip to ease the mind: No matter what size a woman wears, she needs to look for a suit one or two sizes larger than what she normally wears, Mrs. Holland said, because manufacturers create suits to fit an average size of torsos with little consideration for other body parts or non-average sizes.

Darlene wears a black Anne Cole suit.

The way to shop for a suit is not to walk into a store, look for a favorite color and try on the first one that catches the eye.

A suit should be selected according to the woman's shape, bone structure and height.

"People need to know that 90 percent of the suits are not for them," she said.

"They should concentrate on the 10 percent that is for them.

And, she advises, "even if it's traumatic, ask for help. Tell the clerk what the problem areas are and what the needs are."

Not everyone can find several perfect suits. And Mrs. Holland, who has her choice of several hundred in her own store, is no exception. Even though she has a large body of water in her back yard (she and her husband John built their own lake), she claims she may find only three or four suits per year she is really pleased with.

A marketing research study conducted by the Du Pont Textile Fibers department found that women ages 14-17, 18-22 and 23-34 tend to purchase more solid-colored suits than patterned suits. The age group 35-49 showed higher purchase percentages of patterns and fewer solids.

The same study concluded 1980 sales were higher for one-piece suits, with the highest market for two-piece suits in the 14-17 age bracket with 43 percent. From there, sales dropped to 40 percent in the 18-22 group, to 37 percent in the 23-34 group, to 30 percent in the 35-49, 50-64 group and the 65-plus group. The study also indicated that the two-piece category was comprised of 75 percent bikini and 25 percent regular two-pieces.

Swimsuits have the ability to flatter a figure and camouflage the flaws.

Besides finding a perfect-fitting and perfectly-flattering suit, getting one with quality is an equally important factor.

For example, the better quality — and usually more expensive — lycra suits will contain more lycra. This allows for long term wear if it is properly cared for. A less expensive lycra suit may lose its elasticity.

Caring for a suit is equally as important as selecting one of good quality. Chlorine, sun and harsh elements take a toll on suits. Immediately after wearing, the suit should be rinsed and hung to dry. It should never be put in a dryer, Mrs. Holland said, and it should never be left in a cold, damp room. A shower is an ideal place for a suit to dry.

Lycra suits are popular right now — and have been for the past several years. Other popular fabrics include 100 percent cotton and the new textured fabric suits.

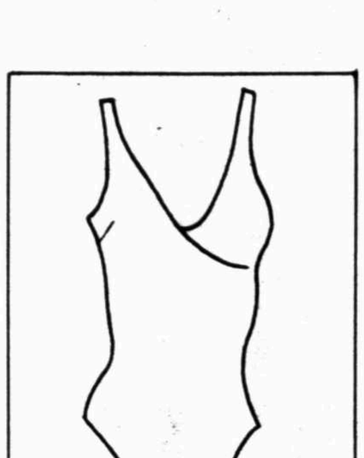

"Basic body styles don't change that much, but textures change and how individual designers build a suit change."

Aside from style, shape, quality and pattern, the most important factor in selecting a suit is how the wearer feels in it, Mrs. Holland said.

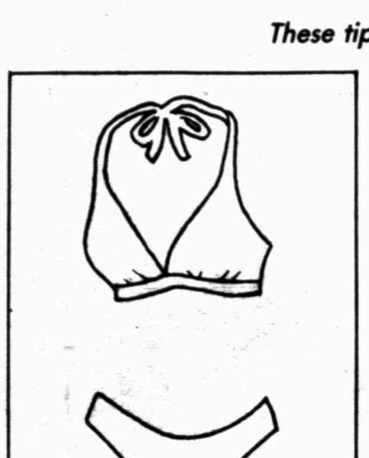

"If you're comfortable and you feel good in it, that's all that really matters."

These tips are offered by the Du Pont Company, textile fibers department

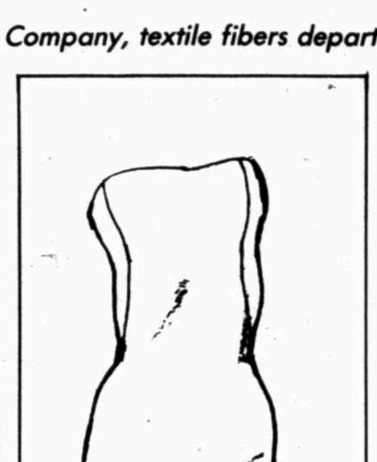

French-cut maillot
Cut across problem of chunky thighs by calling attention to a higher point. This design slenderizes and elongates the leg and distracts the eye from the very point you want to hide.

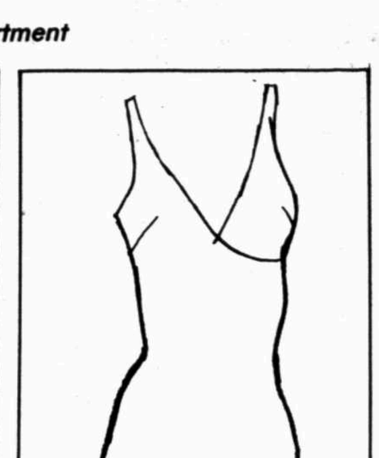

French-cut bikini
This suit is good for a body with a long torso and short legs. The separate pieces elongate the torso and the leg cut gives the illusion of longer legs.

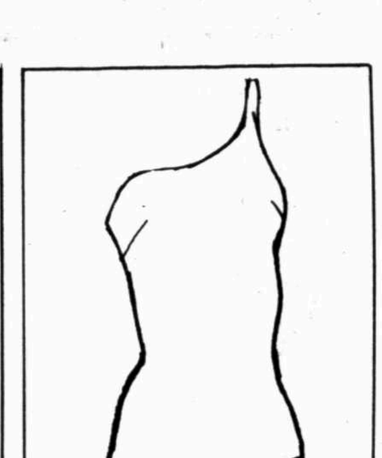

Bikini
A minimum coverage two piece is good for a well-proportioned — and usually younger — figure.

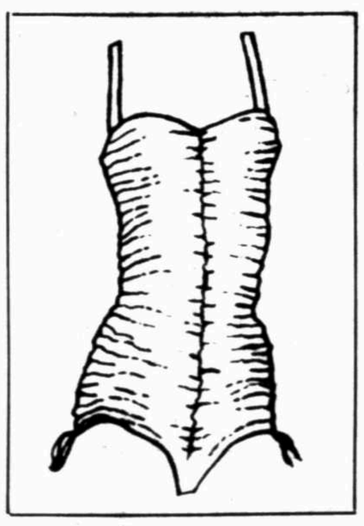

Tube/Bandeau
Strapless — often with hidden optional straps for swimming. Maximum sunning maillot is best for a well-proportioned figure.

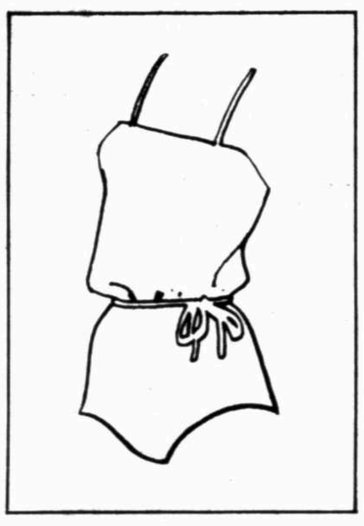

Maillot
One-piece closely fitted suit with high cut leg is flatteing for a well-proportioned active figure.

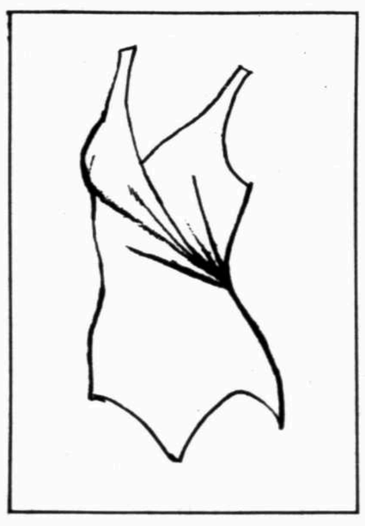

One-shoulder maillot
One-shoulder silhouette directs the eye up, away from hips. It is fashionable and flattering for a slightly fuller-hipped figure.

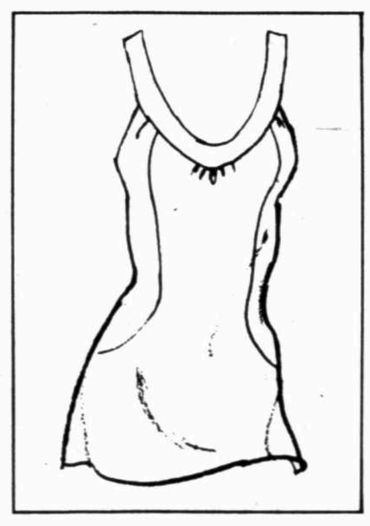

Shirred maillot
Gathers are adjustable at front or sides. This is a versatile and flattering camoflouge for a light to fuller figure.

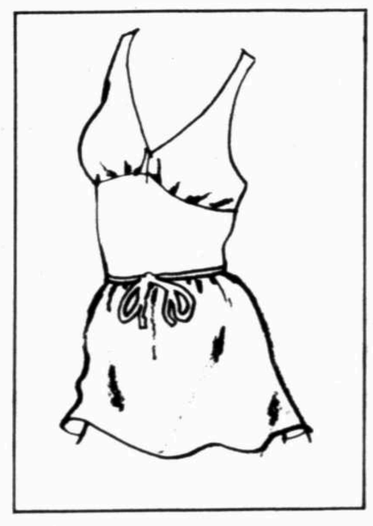

Blouson
Bloused top with inner bra is flattering for bulging midriff, full-busted figure.

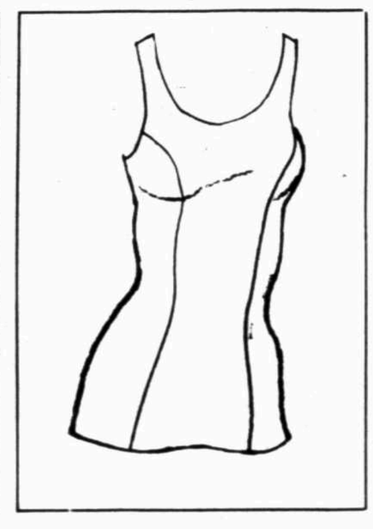

Surplice
This unconstructed, one-piece suit that gives support to full-breasted figure is very flattering to the midriff.

Swimdress
Skirted dress effect often with detached trunks or control panel at midriff underneath is good for full figure, long torso, bulging midriff.

Tunic
Gently skirted one piece suit is good for heavy thighs, hips, long torso.

Sheath
Panel front — firm controlled fit for full hips, full bust and midriff.

From psychology to fashion (and $50 million a year)

NEW YORK (AP) — In what she calls her "former life," Joan Helpern was a child psychologist. Her husband David studied education. But when they decided to go into business, it was shoe leather that caught their fancy.

Today, Joan & David is an international shoe company with an estimated $50 million in annual sales. The Helperns spend half the year working abroad. Home is New York, Boston, Italy.

"I have jet lag at all times," laughs Mrs. Helpern, a petite gray-haired grandmother. "I never finish in one place before it's time to turn around and go back."

This husband and wife venture, which this year expanded into ready-to-wear clothing, started as a side business nearly 18 years ago.

Mrs. Helpern was then pursuing her Ph.D. at Harvard, and her husband had moved from education to running a group of shoe and specialty stores that were, she noted, "successful but not terribly interesting."

An amateur artist, Mrs. Helpern started designing shoes at night. Her husband sold his business and the two of them set up operations near Harvard Square. Mrs. Helpern's first creation was a lady's oxford, functional yet different, a look the Helperns still aim for.

"I don't like things that are busy, more frivolous than they need be for the purpose for which they were intended," Mrs. Helpern says. "I don't mind frivolity if you're at a ball, but not as you're running through the airport trying to catch a plane."

The approach was successful, so much so that it forced Mrs. Helpern to make a choice. There was, after all, her unfinished doctoral thesis, "Innovations in Child Development in Elementary Schools."

"I had one traumatic moment in my life just before the thesis was about to be written," she said. "At that moment I said, 'Do I really give this up now?' and the answer was yes."

But it wasn't easy to leave the field in which she had worked for nearly 20 years.

"My guilt didn't allow it to work completely, so for a year and a half afterwards I stayed on the governing boards of professional organizations and I was editing manuscripts and going to conferences," she said. "Then I finally gave up the ghost, and that was about 14 years ago."

The couple used various labels but the "Joan & David" tag wasn't born until 1977, when designer labels became the rage. Suddenly, money dried up for everything that didn't carry a designer name.

A year after putting their names on the shoes, the Helperns received a Coty Award for their contribution to the fashion industry. The Coty now hangs in the ladies' room of their Manhattan office, a typical bit of Joan & David whimsy.

The view from the office 13th stories above the street is a panorama of Central Park and Fifth Avenue. "Bijou," a white bichon frise, snoozes in the window. The dog also goes on most business excursions, which take the Helperns throughout Italy, where the shoes are made in 18 factories.

This season, the company is offering more than 750 styles, many of them in smoky colors with unexpected touches — a boot reminiscent of a high-button shoe or a black evening pump with mixed satin, stamped or brushed textures.

"Balance" refers to the hang and the proportion of a garment. It is dependent on the posture of the person being fitted as well as their shape. An individual with a forward-tilted posture will need the front length of the garment, from neck to hem, considerably shorter than that provided by the pattern. A woman with a large or prominent bust will find the balance of some patterns incorrect because more length will be needed in the front. There are also other instances where the balance of the front and back of a garment has to be adjusted to produce a proper fit.

There is still time to make many garments for your summer wardrobe. Although sewing is the economical way to increase the scope of your closet all year long you'll be amazed by how little a cotton blouse or skirt will cost you to make. Make LEGGETTS FABRICS your sewing headquarters. Not only can't our selection be beat but we are very proud of our sales staff who are always willing to take the time to advise you. DELLWOOD MALL

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Patricia Wettstein and her daughter Laura recently returned from Washington, D.C. where they were invited to tea at The White House by First Lady Nancy Reagan. The tea was honoring regents of the National Federation of Republican Women.

Patricia, who is one of the few regents from Texas, related that the Executive Mansion was filled with masses of beautiful cut flowers for the event and that the guests were charmed with the afternoon's entertainment. A group of Chinese school children invited to Washington by Mrs. Reagan performed musical numbers and gymnastics in the East Ballroom.

Laura was invited to accompany her mother to the tea due to her longtime interest and active involvement in politics. Now a senior at Southwestern University at Georgetown, she was the youngest delegate to the state convention when President Reagan was elected in 1980.

The mother-daughter pair also enjoyed a tea at the Washington Club, a reception at the new J.W. Marriot Hotel hosted by Sen. Paula Hawkins of Florida and Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and the play "On Shiloh Hill" at Ford's Theatre. On Capitol Hill, they lunched with California Congressman Duncan Hunter, whose brother and sister-in-law Jim and Jan Hunter reside in Midland.

Weekending in New York City, the Wettsteins enjoyed the Broadway shows, "star gazing" at Sardi's, where an awards ceremony brought the celebrities out in droves, and visiting with former Midlander Rod Steele. They returned to Washington for an additional two-day visit before heading back to Texas.

BACK FROM A 10-day trip to China are Virginia (Mrs. Billie) Gilbert and her daughter Pat (Mrs. Parker) Humes. They were accompanied by longtime friends Gladys (Mrs. W.W.) Thomason of Denver City and daughter Sharon (Mrs. Carl) Huber of Hobbs, N.M.

They visited Hong Kong first, where they were headquartered at the Marco Polo Hotel. Traveling by ferry and taxi, they went to Victoria Point for a magnificent view of Hong Kong; Aberdeen, where the boat people live, and Repulse Bay, where the movie "Love Is a Many Splendored Thing," was filmed.

Entering Mainland China by way of the Pearl River, they went by hovercraft to the seaport of Canton and from there to Foshan, where they toured pottery, silk weaving and jade factories and visited an ancient ancestral temple.

Foremost among their memories is the day they spent in a commune, absorbing the Chinese culture. They also won't forget their dinners, which consisted of 12 courses and took two and a half hours to complete with chopsticks. They returned to Hong Kong by train, enjoying the beautiful countryside along the way, while observing the Chinese people and water buffalo at work in the fields.

MIDLANDERS MEGAN AND James Skees will return from a Hawaiian honeymoon to make their home in Hays, Kan. They were united in marriage Saturday evening at St. Ann's Catholic Church.

Megan, daughter of Lois and Clayton Harrington, graduated with honors from Texas A&M in May. Also an A&M graduate, the groom is the son of Wanda and Bill Skees. He is a petroleum engineer with Diamond Shamrock.

Pre-nuptial festivities inclued the rehearsal dinner hosted by the groom's parents Friday evening at Green Tree Country Club and a bridesmaids' luncheon Saturday at the home of Doris (Mrs. Donald) Brotherton, with Betty (Mrs. Harold) Ballew, Mrs. Aida Dunlap and Neva (Mrs. Dick) Rousselot as co-hostesses. The bride's parents are hosting a brunch today at their home for out-of-town guests and the wedding party.

Megan was honored at a couple of bridal parties this spring. A miscellaneous display shower and brunch were held in the home of Betty (Mrs. Arnold) Allen. Co-hostesses were Elsie (Mrs. Nick) Dragisic and Heidi (Mrs. George) Goebel. College friends honored Megan with a shower in College Station.

THE END-OF-SCHOOL calendar was filled with dozens of parties honoring graduates at both Midland and Lee High Schools.

Among them was the lovely mother-daughter luncheon given for Christy Cowden at the Plaza Club by her grandmother Olive (Mrs. Allen) Cowden of Midland and her aunt Emma Sue (Mrs. H.W.) Hightower of Houston.

The 50 guests included Jean (Mrs. Jack) Tunstill, Christy's grandmother from Fort Worth. A Midland High graduate, Christy plans to attend UT-Austin. She is the daughter of Jeanie and Coley Cowden.

The Fred Brown family had a busy week recently when they entertained with three senior parties. Clever T-shirt invitations were delivered to friends of Lee High graduate Nicky Tomlin for a Jock Contest at The Midlander, hosted by Fred and his wife Karon. The boys enjoyed a variety of athletic events. Nicky, son of Betty and Don Tomlin, plans to attend Texas Tech this fall.

Mrs. Brown and her daughters Shelley Blanchard and Heidi Brown entertained LHS grad Holly Farrish with a dinner party at the Plaza Club. Holly, who plans to attend the University of Oklahoma, is the daughter of Wynell and Frank Farrish.

MHS graduate Hollee Hewett was honored by Mrs. Brown and her daughters with a dinner at Midland Country Club. The honoree is the daughter of Donna and Don Hewett. Her college plans include Midland College and TCU.

Mayor issues proclamation

Mayor G. Thane Akins of Midland has proclaimed the first week in June as "Big Brothers-Big Sisters of Midland Inc." Week.

In his proclamation Mayor Akins stated "Big Brothers-Big Sisters of America, established in 1903, has benefited youths from single-parent homes for 81 years...Through the...program boys and girls ages 5 through 16 are befriended by adults who meet with them a minimum of two or three hours a week to share time, ideas, knowledge and love..."

The proclamation also noted the approximately 12 million children who live in single-parent homes may need extra support, guidance and direction from another caring adult. Big Brothers-Big Sisters of Midland Inc., established in 1975, serves about 5,000 children in Midland County.

"Single-parent children are six times as likely to enter the judicial system, (and) the Big Brothers-Big Sisters Program keeps these youngsters out of jails and courts."

Women's club to have luncheon

Midland Christian Women's Club will have a Mother-Daughter Luncheon honoring mothers and their daughters noon Wednesday at Midland Country Club.

Joyce Martin of Austin, a graduate of Baylor University and a seminar leader in Austin, will speak on "A Decision on Indecision" about choices and decisions women make in their lives.

Charlotte and Valerie Cooke, a mother-daughter singing duo, will provide the music and Carol Hisey will accompany on the piano.

The program will be presented by Kathy Wurster, owner of "Kids Only," a specialty toy store. She will present domestic, imported and antique dolls and collectibles and discuss the care of dolls and the children's age groups they are appropriate for.

The cost of the luncheon is $10.50. All interested women are invited. Reservations should be made by Monday by calling 684-5093 or 699-4541.

A nursery will be provided for pre-school children at Memorial Christian Church and mothers are asked to bring a sack lunch and drink for their child.

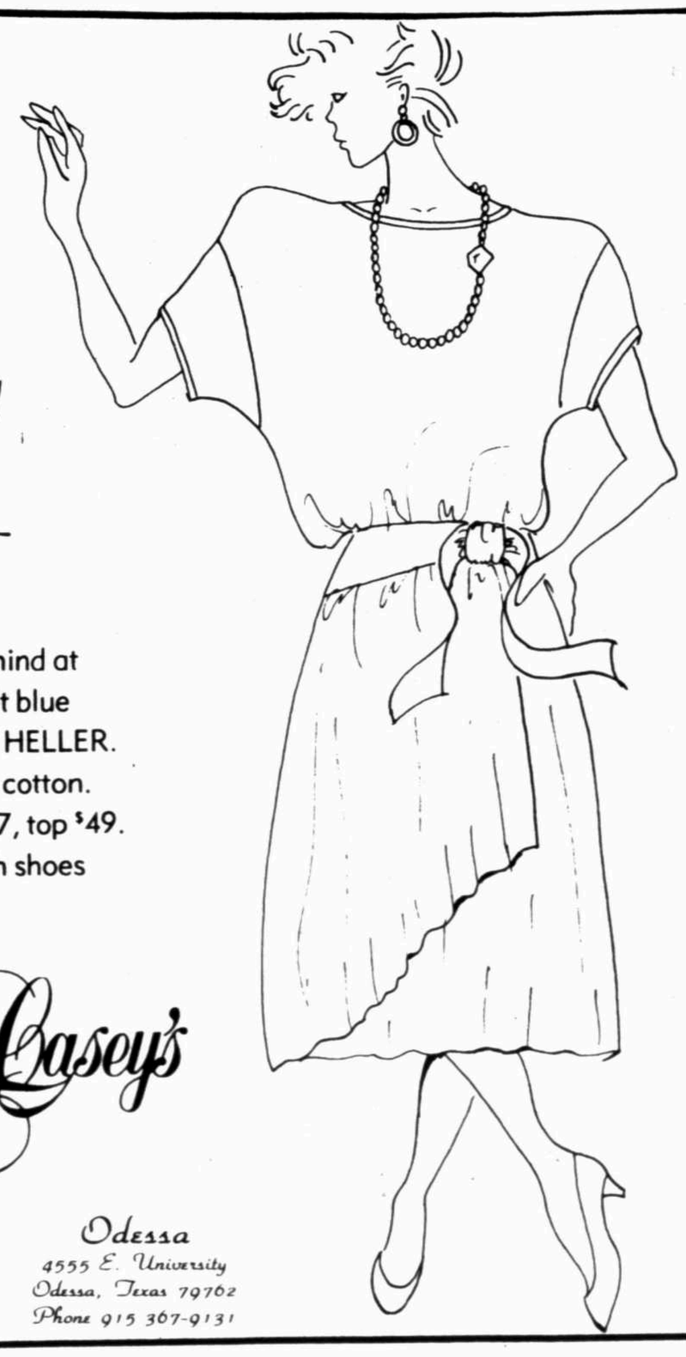

The Christian Women's Club is interdenominational and has no formal membership.

Video cassette recorders 'smarter'

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Video cassette recorders are getting smarter, smaller and simpler to use.

A new one from RCA is a "convertible": it's both a table model and a lightweight portable. This recorder can be preset to record eight hour-long television programs for a year ahead.

A remote control unit almost eliminates the need for an instruction manual. The user presses a button and step-by-step operating directions are flashed on the screen.

EAT
by DR. ROBERT HAAS
9.50

Reg. 14.95. The book for weekend to world-class athletes. Dr. Haas explains how to eat at every stage of competence in sports and fitness programs to achieve top levels of endurance, speed and power. Drawing on his experience with many famous athletes, Haas explains that an "unbalanced" diet is needed: such as more carbohydrates and less protein and fats. With each person having a unique physical makeup, he shows you how to evaluate your body chemistry to determine your diet needs in your level of competence. "Eat To Win" is forworded by Martina Navratilova who attests that Dr. Haas' guidance contributed to her victory in the 1984 U.S. Open.

DEAR ABBY

Granny took grudge too far

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: "Made a Promise" asked if she should carry out Granny's request. Granny, on her deathbed, asked that Aunt Mary not be allowed to attend her funeral since they never liked each other. You advised "Made a Promise" to tell Aunt Mary that Granny didn't want her at her funeral. Abby, that's cruel and unnecessary.

Funerals are for the living. The living feel the pain and need the comfort. They need to shed tears of loss, grief and even guilt. It's wrong to deprive Aunt Mary of the chance to express her pain. What a terrible guilt trip you have condoned!

Granny wants to carry her grudge to her grave. She's asked for the living to perpetuate her hurtful ways, and she has found a way to haunt Aunt Mary forever. What a power trip she's on!

Aunt Mary deserves a chance to make peace with herself by attending Granny's funeral. I think "Made a Promise" should use her better judgment and conveniently 'forget" to tell Aunt Mary. What the dead don't know won't hurt them. — THE TRUTH HURTS

DEAR TRUTH: I agree, the grievances of a lifetime should be buried with the dead, and instead of promising Granny that she would keep Aunt Mary from attending her funeral, "Made a Promise" should have told Granny what you explained so well above. Then Granny might have reconsidered and withdrawn her request.

But to make a deathbed promise, then "conveniently forget" it? Never!

DEAR ABBY: Until I saw that letter signed "Miss Virginia," who hated high school class reunions, I thought I was alone in my feelings. I attended three such reunions — my fifth, 10th and 15th — and they were enough for me.

First let me tell you that I was very popular in high school with both students and teachers, was a member of the National Honor Society and also a commencement speaker (chosen by students and approved by teachers).

The people who were pills in high school were still pills. And it's true, most of them came to show off their jewelry and furs and brag about how successful they had become. (Reminded me of those Christmas letters filled with bragging about their families, promotions and exotic trips.)

Also, the committees that work on these reunions never seem to have progressed beyond the senior prom. And those silly prizes! (The man with the least hair. Really, now!)

My 40th reunion is coming up next year, and I'm not going to that one either. Don't get me wrong, Abby, I still see some of my old classmates when I want to, but to run to a reunion and spend an evening with the rest of that bunch is sheer madness! — HATES CLASS REUNIONS

(Is your social life in a slump? Lonely? Get Abby's updated, revised and expanded booklet, "How to Be Popular" — for people of all ages. Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Lifestyle policies

The following are policies for publication of stories and announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the story is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only.

The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Portraits of the future bride and bridegroom in one photograph may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

POWELL-RIGGAN

Lynne Powell and Russell Riggan, both of Midland, will be married at 7 p.m. Aug. 17 at Broadway Church of Christ Chapel in Lubbock. The bride-elect is the daughter of Roger and Ava Powell of Littleton, Colo. Parents of the future bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Ben F. Riggan of Lubbock.

Miss Powell is a graduate of Lubbock Christian College. She is a member of Midland/Odessa Symphony Chorale and is employed with Clajon Gas Company. Her fiance attended South Plains College in Levelland and is employed with Smith's Orthopedics in Odessa.

Museum mania hits

NEW YORK (AP) – With more than 4,609 museums, the United States has more public museums and more museum visitors than any other country in the world.

More than 300 million persons visit American museums each year.

As many maturing couples may have already found, moving from a large house to a small condo or apartment can be a difficult job. Paring down can be an ardous, emotional and intellectual process. At one time or another, most of us have probably visited a relation, newly moved to a small apartment, and found that individual almost buried under a mountain of old furniture. To avoid this situation, one must be a brutal realist and throw certain feelings of nostalgia and sentimentality to the wind. Keep all the old photographs but scientifically and skillfully eliminate furniture, using only those pieces that will really work in the new and much smaller home. The best way to do this is to create a floor plan that best accommodates your lifestyle.
Whether you've just moved into a new home or simple decided to redo your present one, WINDOW DECOR can help you with that all-important window treatment. We can advise you on all phases of color and style coordination and custom design and manufacture beautiful draperies for you. Our showroom, located at 30 M. W. Industrial Loop, is open 8 AM to 4:30 PM Mon. through Fri., and 9 AM to 4 PM on Sat., or by appointment. Call us at 685-0875 and, for your home or office, we will design beautiful windows on your world.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

Philodendron doesn't receive respect it deserves

By ELVIN McDONALD

Recently, I helped stage what the Garden Club of America has designated a "Major Flower Show," mounted by the Memphis Garden Club. The horticultural classes may not have been as large as those at the oldest and biggest, the Philadelphia Flower Show, but they were superb.

Ferns, orchids, hanging plants in general and English ivy and creeping fig trained into topiaries were dominant. There were some extraordinary and rare aroids but only one philodendron, which brings me to my subject for today:

One of the most durable house plants around is that old standby, the heartleaf philodendron. We have all seen it so many times, we pay this tenacious jungle visitor no respect. We hardly bother to notice if the leaves are real, paper or plastic.

The number of flowers, plants and gardens I have photographed in my lifetime would be staggering, not to mention those I have grown or merely admired. Yet I clearly remember two simply trained and perfectly groomed heartleaf philodendrons seen in a Minnesota dining room 10 years ago.

The philodendron is an attractive and hardy houseplant.

Those of my memory were at either end of a sideboard, in silver urns. Each vine grew around and around, completely hiding a moss-stuffed wire totem pole 18 inches tall. There was a natural shine on the leaves, from a recent shower of water, and not one blemish could be seen.

Next time I suggest members of the Memphis Garden Club consider a philodendron challenge class, one that would show the public what beauty is possible with even the most ordinary and common of plants. As for you, how's your philodendron? Why not give it a shower, grooming, maybe even a repotting right now? Enjoy!

Many effective ways to train philodendron and other trailers-climbers are in my notebook sheets. For your set send 50 cents coin and a stamped, self-addressed, long envelope with "Vine Tricks" written on the back flap to Elvin McDonald Reader Service, Box R, Niagara Falls, N.Y. 14305.

Q. I live in a small ninth floor apartment, very light, no obstructions outdoors, but morning sun only. What herbs can I grow from seed or transplants? Also some flowering plants for winter and summer, bulbs and small trees.

A. Parsley and basil will grow beautifully for you, from seeds planted at almost any season, or from transplants when available. I also grow sweet bay (Laurus nobilis) as a small indoor tree, keep rosemary trained on wire or grapevine wreaths (6- to 12-inches in diameter), and bring in pots of fresh chives (from the greengrocer) about twice a year. You might also try potted specimens of thyme, mint, tarragon, or any herb that appeals. Morning sun won't make them show specimens, but then I don't think that's what you had in mind anyhow.

For flowering potted plants all year I would look to begonias, gesneriads such as African violet, streptocarpus, sinningia, episcia, lipstick aeschynanthus and columnea, and orchids such as phalaenopsis and paphiopedilum. You can also have fragrant 'Duke of Orleans' jasmine, African gardenia (Mitriostigma axillare) and Christmas cactus.

Among the bulbs, summer-blooming achimenes, from scaly rhizomes planted in late winter or spring, will make a great show in hanging baskets. In autumn I would force lots of paper-white narcissus, and the related, more delicately perfumed yellow Soleil d'Or. At the same time set some potted bulbs of hyacinth, tulip and miniature daffodil in the vegetable crisper of your refrigerator (or where thev'll be about 40F.) for eight to 12 weeks. Then you can bring them to bloom in winter and earliest spring. Permanent evergreen flowering bulbs that will grow in morning sun include two of the finest, clivia and eucharis.

You have a world of fascinating small trees from which to select. Since your space is limited, be really careful in filling it with truly beautiful specimens that make you happy. The graceful lady palm, Rhapis excelsa, is one possibility.

There are also numerous dracaenas or corn plants that can be used as indoor trees in relatively low light. These are coarse in texture, but their green is as refreshing as any, especially if you keep it naturally shiny by washing the leaves periodically with warm water to which you have added a little pure castile soap, such as Dr. Bronner's.

Finally, there is also the thought of taking a bushy plant that grows in the kind of light you have, and placing it on a pedestal about 42 inches tall. The effect in your room will be that of a tree.

Q. What can I do about a ficus tree of the rubber plant type that just hit the ceiling? It has nice leaves toward the top but miles of bare stem between that part and the pot.

A. Air-layering is the safest way to save th leafy top and get rid of all the excess leafless stalk. Cut a notch about a third of the way through the stem directly below the leaves. Prop this open with a toothpick. Surround with a good handful of moistened long-strand sphagnum moss. Enclose in a piece of plastic, wrapping it all around and tying above and below.

Check the moss from time to time to be sure it is always moist. After weeks or months roots will form; when they do, cut through the main stem directly beneath the new root-ball and pot up your new ficus. Keep moist, pleasantly warm and in the shade until it takes hold, then move to the usual growing light.

A detailed diagram for air- as well as ground-layering is in my notebook bulletin. For yours send 50 cents coin and a stamped, self-addressed, long envelope with "Air-Layer" written on the back flap to Elvin McDonald Reader Service, Box R, Niagara Falls, N.Y. 14305.

Spa brings out dishonesty in friends

By ERMA BOMBECK

Last February, a group of my fun-loving, totally honest friends and I got together and decided to go to a health spa.

All of us said up front we weren't going to a spa to lose weight. We were talking cerebral. All we wanted was a chance to get in touch with our feelings and visit with one another. If we grossed out people who saw us wearing leotards that made us look like a bag of dog nuggets, then that was their problem.

We most certainly were not going there to compete to see who took the most classes or did the mountain hike. After all, if we wanted pressure, we would stay at home.

As for clothes, why invest a lot of money in cute workout togs that we'd never wear again? What's a few runs in your tights among friends? Right? This was going to be a fun vacation of Scrabble, relaxation and good conversation.

The decision to lose a couple of pounds before we went never entered my mind until we were having lunch a week or so later. I noticed a couple of my friends picked at lettuce and waved the dessert cart on without salivating. That's when I decided to set a small goal for myself. I would lose a paltry pound a week so that by the time I got to the spa, I would be 16 pounds lighter. Losing it slow like that wasn't like going on a crash diet, so my integrity was intact.

Around the first of May, you cannot imagine my surprise when one of the women whipped by the house in a jogging suit that must have cost $60, a pair of big-name running shoes and a $6 headband.

There were persistent rumors that the others were going for the designer leotards, "Flashdance" T-shirts, leg warmers, coordinated cover-ups, new swimsuits and cute shirts with SWEAT written across them.

For a three-week period, I had charge-card burns on 90 percent of my hands.

Several of them joined aerobics classes, two more got into running programs, and three of them got pedicures for the first time in their lives, for the unveiling of their feet to strangers.

Naturally, being a person of honor who practices truth as a religion, I did not adjust my goal to lose 16 pounds. It's just that at the countdown, I now had to lose an average of eight pounds a week.

This week, the group of fun-loving totally honest friends and I arrived at the health spa. They were so busy changing clothes for the next event, they never had a chance to relax. We forgot to bring the Scrabble game which is just as well because no one is speaking to anyone anyway.

Being totally honest is pressure. It's also a long time to hold in your stomach.

AT WORK

Persistence can pay off

By ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

It's easy enough to say that persistence is one of the skills for success. Yet no one really defines what it means, what it takes. What I have found is that persistence has an underbelly — groveling: begging, calling back repeatedly, enduring endless humiliation.

Yet every successful salesperson knows that for every hundred no's you get, there's the possibility of a yes. For all the rejections an unemployed person takes, there's a possibility of success — one job. For everybody who wants something, a job or a chance to do more, you have to wade through countless times where it doesn't happen.

Marjorie was head nurse desperate to leave nursing. But at the same time she felt desperate about what she called her "options." She could certainly sell pharmaceuticals or something related, but she really didn't want to. She was not, in her heart, a saleswoman any more than a nurse. She yearned to write.

"Simple," her friends said. "Get a job writing about medicine." But not so simple when you're 45 and have never written. Writing jobs are hard to come by. Yet it's not impossible. Only difficult.

Consider her year-long search. Marjorie called upon and wrote to magazines, newspapers, journals, advertising agencies, universities, professional associations, public relations agencies that had anything to do with products or services of health care organizations.

They all screamed NO — not qualified enough, too old, over qualified; all the usual things. Marjorie was disheartened. To hurry up the slow hands of fate, she quit her job and in the intervening months of no work she lost her house, her car, and watched her sons' terror mount. Taking the bus to apply for jobs, she fell and broke her leg. Deciding between jumping off a bridge or changing her luck, she chose to do something positive.

She joined a women's professional group, became extraordinarily active, made friends, went to meetings dressed up even if it was the only happy occasion of the month. Finally one connection clicked. An editor left a medical journal and Marjorie took her job. Not a great job, not great pay, not the greatest opportunity, but an opportunity nevertheless. She counts it as her first step toward her new career in publishing. She credits persistence for her success.

Martin, ironically, is going through the same process of finding something though you would hardly guess it. Contrasted with Marjorie's meager apartment, he lives in Beverly Hills with two Mercedes in his garage. An out-maneuvered movie mogul, Martin is now searching for a new job himself.

With years of experience he's now caught up in a too-tight market with too many younger people vying for those key jobs. Martin is suffering from not playing politics better, so he sits at the phone every day and calls associates, friends, even people he has never met for lunch at least once a week. A dealmaker in his time, he wonders how he can persist with these calls without sounding too needy, too subservient. Where does the line divide between asking and begging?

Maybe there is no line whatsoever; maybe only the style is different. No one is asking for a handout. It's not, "Brother, can you spare a dime?" but it is, "Brother, can you spare a chance?" Despite their feelings, Marjorie and Martin have to develop their strength. Neither can show fear or emptiness.

Disney celebrates 50 years of duck's fame

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Writer

Donald Duck, the irascible, web-footed Walt Disney cartoon character, is 50 years old.

He has achieved world-wide success topped by few movie stars. His movies have been shown in 76 countries and his comic books have been published in 47 nations in 35 languages. His daily comic strip appears in 100 foreign and domestic newspapers and he appears on television shows in 29 lands, Walt Disney Productions estimates.

Donald has even won the honor most coveted by actors — the Oscar. He was the star of "Der Fuehrer's Face," which won the 1943 Academy Award for best short subject. In all, 11 films featuring the duck have been nominated for Academy Awards.

Donald was "born" — or "hatched" — June 9, 1934 when Walt Disney's Silly Symphony, "The Wise Little Hen," was released.

In that cartoon, his motion picture debut, Donald had a more elongated bill and smaller eyes than the mature duck has now, although he had already donned his trademark sailor suit — or rather, half a sailor suit.

His next appearance was later that year in the Mickey Mouse cartoon "Orphan's Benefit."

Donald was already showing his "star quality" in this film.

"He was given many more lines in his second role and this time there was no doubt about the force of his personality," according to Walt Disney Productions. "His unprecedented rages, his utter incompetence in the face of ever-present obstacles had audiences delirious with laughter."

Despite his auspicious start, Donald at first did not land many lead roles. An older Disney performer, Mickey Mouse, was usually given the better parts.

In 1937, however, Donald had the title role in "Don Donald." His female co-star was the romantic senorita Donna Duck. In later cartoons, her name was changed to Daisy Duck. Donald and Daisy became a team to rival Bogey and Bacall, Fred and Ginger, and Mickey and Minnie.

The next year, Donald's rowdy nephews, Huey, Dewey and Louie, came into existence. They have given Donald nothing but trouble ever since. In the 1940's, his miserly Uncle Scrooge made his first screen appearence to complete Donald's family.

Meanwhile, Donald's break from Mickey and rise to fame continued as the duck appeared in print as well as on film. In 1937, Donald had his own Sunday comic strip. In February 1938, his own daily syndicated comic began. He began starring in his own comic books in the 1940s.

In 1942, he made what was his last appearance in the Mickey Mouse cartoon series in "Symphony Hour" until the dynamic Disney duo were reunited last year in "Mickey's Christmas Carol."

During World War II, along with such Hollywood stars as Jimmy Stewart and Clark Gable, the duck joined the Allied war effort.

In "Donald Gets Drafted," Donald Fauntleroy Duck (the first time his middle name was revealed to the public) received an induction notice dated March 24, 1941. His subsequent military adventures were the topic of several shorts including the Academy Award-winning "Der Fuehrer's Face."

Eventually, Donald appeared in more than 150 short films and feature-length movies such as "Saludos Amigos," "The Three Caballeros," "Fun and Fancy Free," "Melody Time," and "The Reluctant Dragon."

When Walt Disney entered the new field of television with his "Disneyland" show in 1954, Donald soon followed. The series' fourth episode was entitled "The Donald Duck Story." The duck soon became a major electronic media figure with his daily appearences on "The Mickey Mouse Club."

Now, Donald has his own daily series — "Donald Duck Presents" — on the cable-TV "Disney Channel," which began service in Midland February 1.

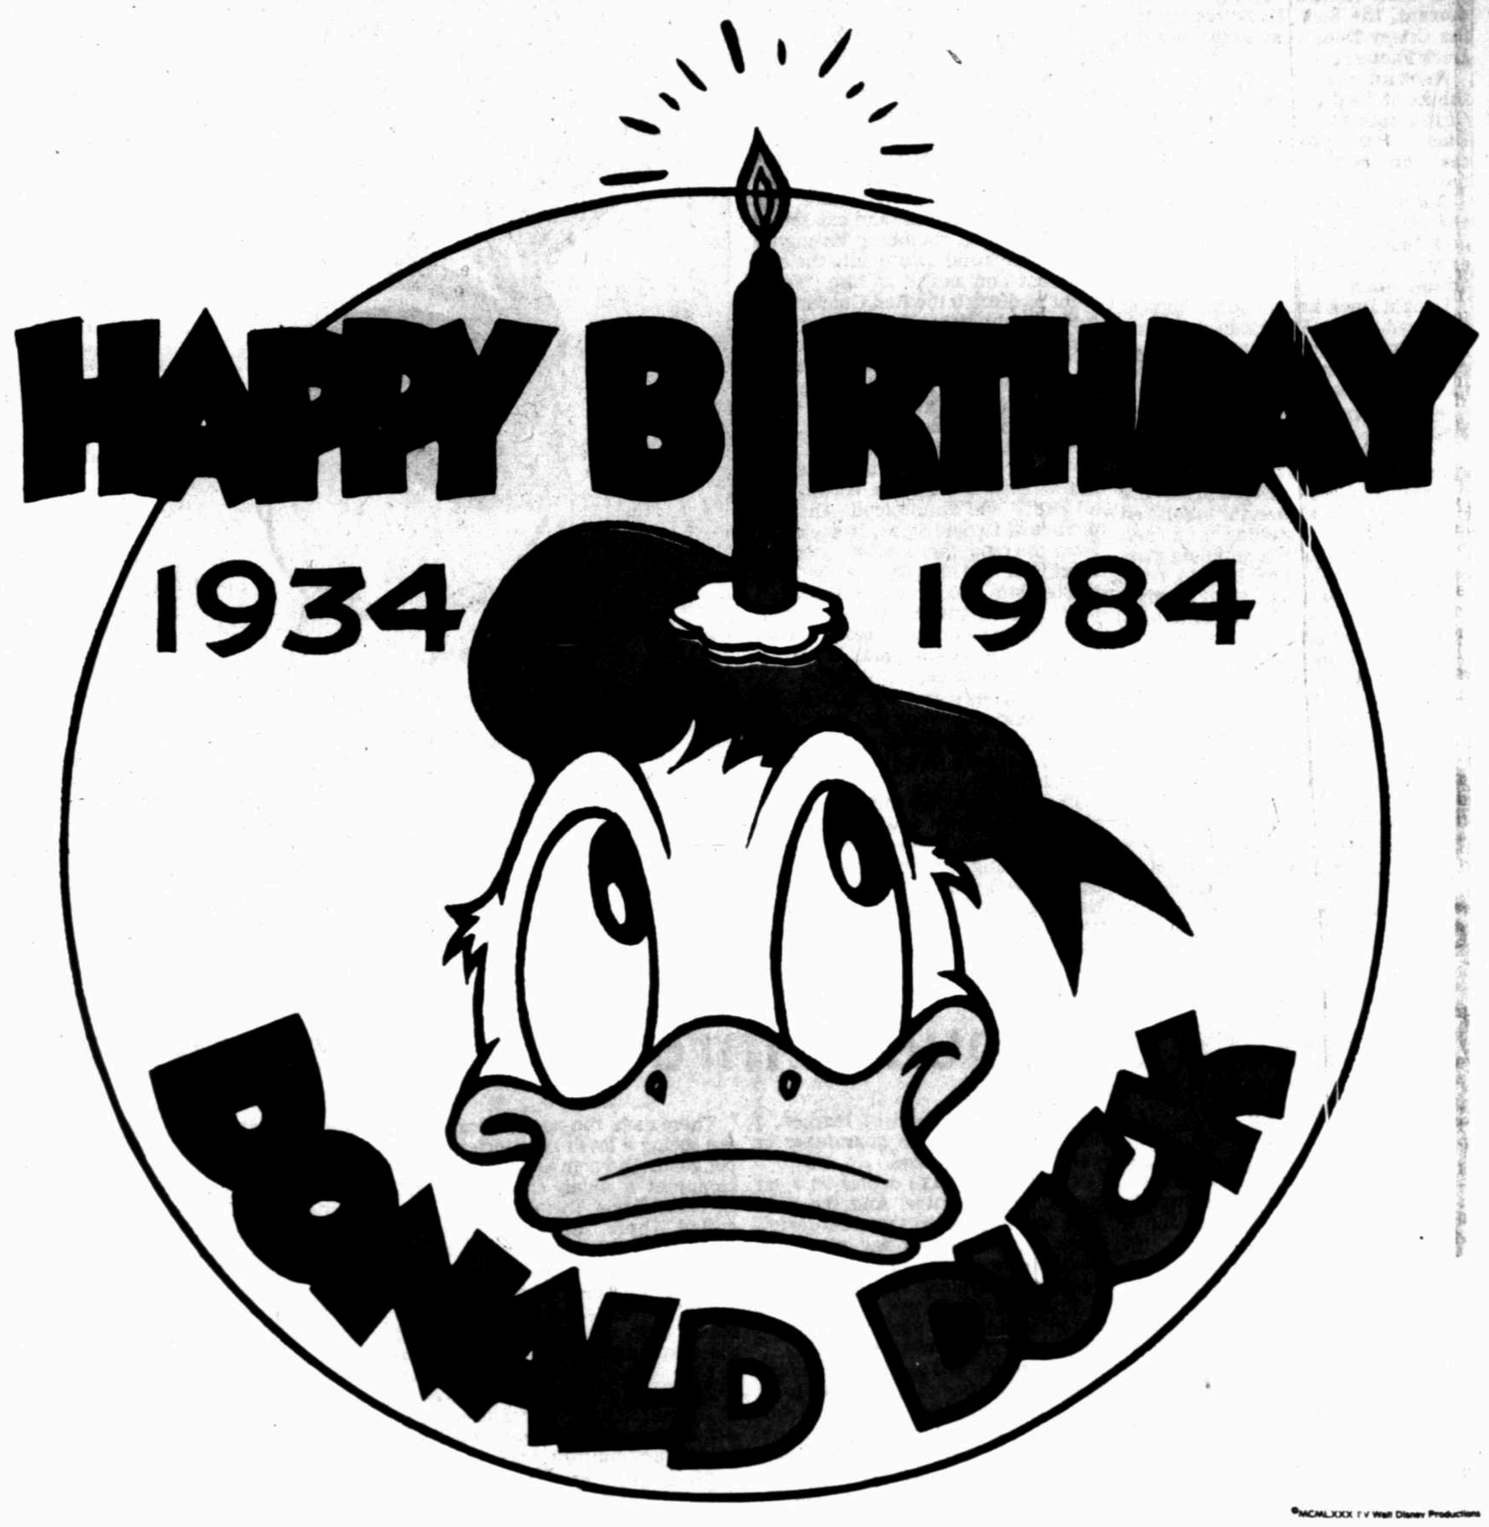

The middle-aged duck's most recent feature film appearance was "Mickey's Christmas Carol," which played here at the Ritz Theater in December.

Midlanders' response to Donald's last movie was "fantastic," the manager of the Ritz, Jim Wilmes said, "even with the weather as bad as it was."

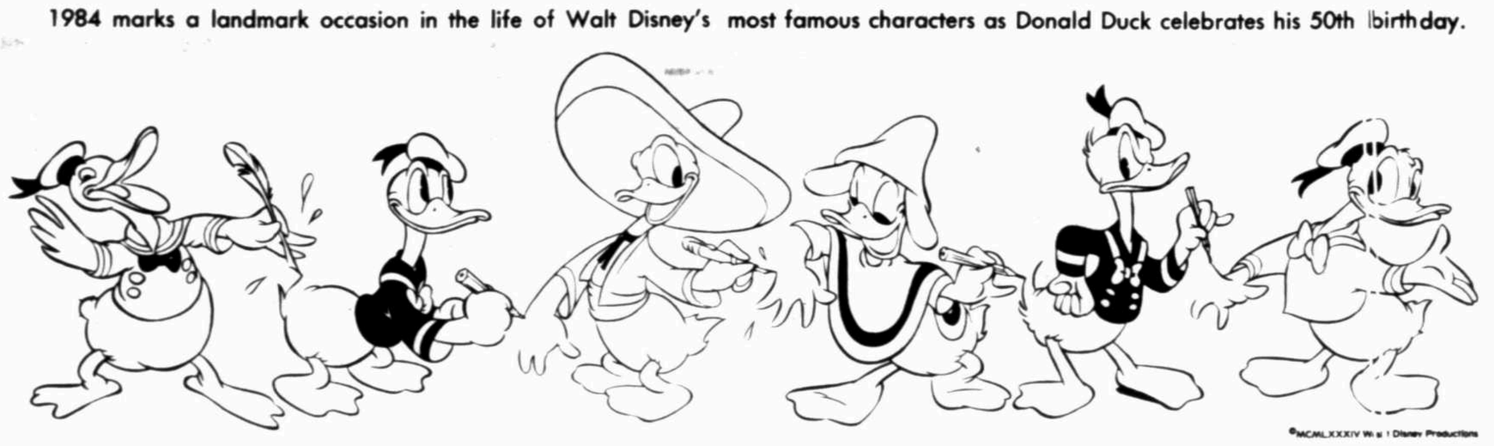

"It was well received," said Jay H. "Timber" Floyd of the Ritz Theater Corp. "We did real, real well with it.

"I enjoyed the film. It was very good. Of course, I grew up with the Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck cartoons and comic books too."

The animated character is now working on a featurette based on the life of Christopher Columbus. Mickey Mouse and Donald will once again appear together in the film, which, according to Walt Disney Productions, stars the cartoon rodent as Columbus and Donald as "a stalwart crew member."

1984 marks a landmark occasion in the life of Walt Disney's most famous characters as Donald Duck celebrates his 50th birthday.

Donald's appearance has changed through the years, from left to right, as he was drawn from 1934 to present day.

Celebrity duck stirs his share of controversy

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Writer

Few famous film stars have been able to live their lives in the public eye without attracting at least some controversy and Donald Duck is no exception.

While other celebrities have been caught up in drug scandals or palimony suits, Donald has recently come under the same criticism often leveled at Clint Eastwood's "Dirty Harry" films — the duck has been decried as being too violent.

Many Donald Duck cartoons aired on the cable television Disney Channel have been accused of being so violent they are "objectionable" in a recent study conducted by the National Coalition on Television Violence.

However, the general manager of the local cable-TV service says Midlanders so far have no complaints about Disney duck violence.

The NCTV's survey of violence on the Disney Channel found an average of 18.3 acts of violence per hour during cartoon programming.

The group concluded that only one-fourth of the Disney cartoons shown on the cable channel during the period it was studied could be considered "appropriate for children."

"Actually, the hallmark of Disney programming is its absence of sex, and vulgar language, not the Disney policy on violence," the NCTV study said.

"Disney cartoon violence was often very intense. Disney repeatedly opposes psychologists and spanking appears to be the one and only form of child discipline recommended by Disney."

Donald Duck cartoons figured prominently in the study. Following is the NCTV study's description of two cartoons:

"Spare the Rod": "Donald tries to follow the teaching of a psychologist and plays with his nephews. Donald is stuck in the behind, shot with arrows, dragged away and tied to a stake. Donald grabs the psychologist and takes him to the woodshed for a sound thrashing."

"Donald's Nephews": "Donald again tries to apply psychology from a book on how to play with your children. His nephews shoot Donald, terrorize him and feed him painful hot sauce, dump water on Donald and knock him over with a fire extinguisher while fighting with each other."

"Bellboy": "A spoiled boy (Junior) kicks, trips, flings, and electrocutes Donald. Donald is fired and finally takes care of Junior by spanking him."

"I was particularly disturbed by the Donald Duck and his nephews cartoons which promote spanking as the appropriate and only way to discipline children," said Dr. Thomas Radecki, the group's chairman and a psychiatrist with the University of Illinois School of Medicine.

"Three different Donald Duck cartoons put down non-violent attempts to deal with problem children and offered no alternative type of discipline other than corporal punishment."

In addition to cartoons, the NCTV also considered a number of Disney feature films, "Rin Tin Tin" reruns and the classic Charlie Chaplin silent movie "City Lights" too violent, although it did say that "City Lights" had an "excellent pro-social theme."

Only one Donald Duck cartoon was praised by the NCTV study — "Donald's Crime."

" 'Donald's Crime' has Donald taking money from his nephews' piggy bank to take Daisy on a date," the NCTV said. "His conscience talks to him, he imagines himself a thief belonging in jail. He gets a night job to put the money back."

"We're not trying to wage some sort of a vendetta against Disney," Radecki told the Reporter-Telegram in a telephone interview. "Disney is certainly better than the networks.

"We're not saying that people shouldn't watch the Disney Channel, but people can't just trust their children with the Disney Channel," simply because it has "that crystal-pure reputation," he said.

His group's goal is to discourage TV programs that may "teach children violence as a way of entertaining themselves," he said.

Gay Bagwell, general manager of Midland's Dimension Cable Service, which brought the Disney Channel to Midland, said she had not heard of the NCTV study and was surprised by its conclusions.

The Midland cable-TV company has never received any complaints about violent acts committed by Donald Duck or any other denizen of the Disney Channel that she is aware of, she said.

"I'm not aware of any concern in the community about that," said Ms. Bagwell. "People are more pleased with the family-oriented content of the Disney Channel."

A statement issued by the Disney Channel executives said they received almost 30,000 letters from it's subscribers during the channel's first year of operation and only six of those "mentioned real or imagined violence on Disney Channel programs."

"Frankly," the statement says, "we have had more subscriber complaints about editing scenes that, in our judgment, were objectionable to our audience."

Voice of Donald Duck still quacking after 79 years

Clarence "Ducky" Nash, the one and only voice of Donald Duck, is also celebrating his fine feathered friend's birthday.

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — His official birthday is June 9, 1934 — but you know how actors lie about their ages.

Donald Duck's beginnings really could be dated back to earlier in the century when Clarence Nash learned to imitate the animals he heard in the Missouri countryside.

The duck's 50th birthday is getting plenty of hoopla, with celebrations at the Disney theme parks in California, Florida and Tokyo. Much attention is also being given to Nash, the voice of Donald Duck, who can still quack up a storm at 79.

"I've done Donald in French, Portuguese and Spanish and once in German," Nash said in an interview with The Associated Press. "For Tokyo Disneyland I even did him in Japanese."

Nash, whose smallish frame and gentle manner makes him resemble one of the Seven Dwarfs, retired when he turned 65, but he still returns to the studio for an occasional job. He spoke Donald's lines in "Mickey's Christmas Carol" and now he hears the studio may follow up with "Christopher Mickey" and "The Three Musketeers."

Donald Duck's history has been stormy from the start. His first words on the screen — actually spoken by Nash, of course — were: "Who, me? Oh, no! I got a bellyache!" when he was one of a dozen barnyard animals the Wise Little Hen asked to help her plant corn.

After 50 years with a cantankerous duck as his alter ego, Clarence Nash remains as enthusiastic as a starlet. Although he has done it thousands of times, he tells his career story as if the events had just happened.

He was born in Watonga, Okla., grew up in Glasgow and Fairmont, Mo. The latter is now known as Independence, and Clarence became acquainted with another resident named Harry Truman.

"My parents were very patient, and they put up with my imitations of the animals I heard," he said. "One of my pets was a billygoat, and I tried to use his voice reciting 'Mary Had a Little Lamb.'"

His animal imitations led to a career on the stage and later radio. In 1930, Nash and his bride, Margie, found themselves broke in San Francisco. "We wanted to come to Los Angeles, and the cheapest way was by freighter," he said. "When we arrived, I had 10 cents and Margie had 50 cents."

One of his radio appearances prompted an audition at the Disney studio. "That's our talking duck," Walt Disney declared after hearing Nash perform.

The most versatile of the Disney voices, Nash provided frogs, crickets and bluebirds for "The Old Mill" and canaries for "Snow White." He also voiced Daisy (nee Donna) Duck and the nephews. Alan Young did Uncle Scrooge.

"In all my years of working for Walt we had only one argument," Nash said. "My name got in print as being the voice of Donald Duck, and Walt called me into his office and bawled me out. He said it would destroy the illusion to publicize the people who did the voices.

"When RKO began distributing the pictures, the salemen convinced Walt that it would help to have publicity about the voices. So I started doing it, and I've been doing it ever since."

Donald Duck challenges Peking's style

By DON DAVID
Copley News Service

PEKING — They like their duck over here. There's the Big Duck restaurant, the Sick Duck restaurant, the Crispy Duck restaurant and the Duck Factory.

Around the world, when one thinks of food in the capital city of China, one thinks of Beijing Kao Dian — Peking duck. It's so popular that they serve everything but the quack.

But now, out of the West, comes a challenger of that tradition, the biggest duck of them all and he aims to change some of the eating habits around here.

Donald Duck has come to China at the head of an American-style fast-food emporium on a dusty street not far from where Chairman Mao lies in state. These days, more people seem to be visiting Donald than Mao.

Donald has been chosen as the symbol of the Yi Li (Righteous Advantage) fast-food restaurant and is pictured just above the small red plastic canopy, clutching a chicken leg in one hand and a bubbling glass of liquid in the other. Donald, however, is looking away from the restaurant, as if he knows something the Chinese flocking to the place don't. Donald does.

Unless you like your hot dogs thin, tough and with a dash of tartar sauce of a "hamberger" made of something that is a bare imitation of meat, you can pass up the Righteous Advantage the next time you're out this way.

Sonya Andermahr, 19, of the Chestnuts, Oxon, England, had just finished picking up a visa for Mongolia when she stepped out of the swirl of honking cars, bell-ringing bicyclists and yelling children into the narrow doorway, attracted by Donald Duck's picture and the words "Fast Food" on a second-floor sign.

"No chips. That's very bad," the English teenager with an upswept new wave hairstyle commented. She leafed through a tiny dictionary, found the word for french fried potatoes and tried it on the clerk. The girl smiled and shook her head faster. Sonya ordered onion soup, then joined another line waiting to pick up the food.

She found a seat at a dayglo orange table in a corner of the mobbed restaurant. A soldier in a baggy green uniform and cap sat on the other side, thumbing through a book. Sonya slid quietly into the corner seat and smiled at him. "Don't want to disturb the Red Guards, you know?" she said. The soldier was well over 6 feet tall, and was joined by another soldier just as large. They moved to another table and began to scoop their rice and pork off the orange plastic plates.

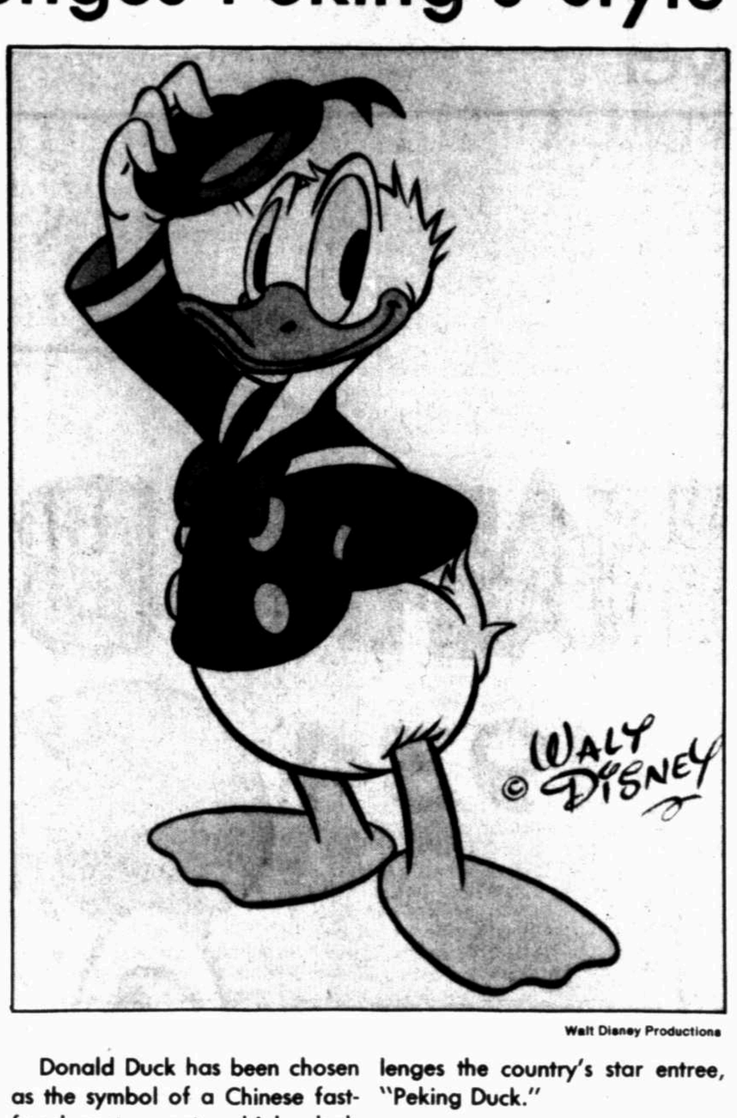

Sonya bit into her hot dog. She tasted her soup. She twisted the corner of her mouth into a frown. "It's all cold," she announced. Another picture of Donald Duck, facing away from the food line, was just over her head. The hot dog lay on the cold toasted bun like some sort of stuffed pink plastic tubing, the greenish sauce oozing along an edge. Even so, it was better than the limp berger of doubtful pedigree.

"It's not very fast for fast food," Sonya said, She took another bite.

"It's not very good, either." She ate it anyway. At 19, people do strange things.

The righteous advantage opened earlier this month with the ballyhoo of a Hollywood premier, with Vice Mayor Zhang Beifang himself cutting the red ribbon. "Peking doesn't have enough restaurants," he said. "There could be dozens of places like this."

What a frightening idea.

Fakes are genuine threat to consumers

Copley News Service

The Levi's jeans were a great bargain. Not to mention the Louis Vuitton handbag and the Cartier watch. And a Cabbage Patch doll for only a few bucks, too.

Such a deal. Such a load of fakes. Counterfeits all, available at swap meets, flea markets, from street vendors, at some small shops and even some department stores.

Counterfeit name-brand merchandise — coming into this country by the ton — is big business, an estimated $16 billion to $18 billion a year. In part, designer label shoppers have helped make it boom.

But there are other things, too — computers, auto parts, surgical instruments, heart pumps, steel.

So the U.S. Office of Consumer Affairs is drawing attention to this counterfeiting. Its view is that counterfeit products from abroad cause the loss of American jobs and hurt the efforts of honest manufacturers, plus, in some cases, pose a danger to consumers.

Realistically, this is a situation that can work to the consumer's advantage, as well as disadvantage. Some people are happy to save money and don't care if they buy a fake doll or blue jeans, as long as they look like the real thing. But many buyers are not getting the quality associated with the product — instead, cheaper fabric, frayed seams, vinyl instead of leather, a cheap watch and no guarantees or recourse in most cases.

Counterfeit brake drums on a car are another matter. And the military has discovered that counterfeit parts on helicopters and other aircraft disintegrate when the planes reach a high rate of speed.

The U.S. Customs Service has established a special "Operation Tripwire" to intercept such goods.

Sue Ozawa, a U.S. Customs senior inspector in Los Angeles, has been on a contraband enforcement team for 2½ years and has seen a lot of counterfeit products come into the country. She says most of the goods are manufactured in Taiwan, Korea, the Philippines, Thailand and other countries in the Far East.

Some of the copies are so good that it is almost impossible to tell the difference. In the case of some Louis Vuitton purses, "we had to have a vice president from Louis Vuitton come out and check it (the shipment)." The only things to indicate they were counterfeit were the material used to line the handle, a hole punched in the leather and the zipper, but everything was excellent quality. Even the hangtags with the shipment looked like the real thing.

Clothing doesn't usually present a safety problem, but a load of jeans seized in nearby Long Beach harbor did prove to have carcinogenic dyes, said Ozawa.

These days, the customs inspectors are seeing a lot of counterfeit Olympic goods and computers. The Apple computer is widely copied, she said. In some cases the computers are called Apple, others go by other names — Pineapple, Orange, Golden, even Green Apple — but contain the copyrighted programs recorded by Apple. Some travelers have made the mistake of buying these computers overseas — for $250 to $300 — and then find they cannot bring them into the United States.

It is difficult for consumers to evaluate products as to their authenticity, but manufacturers can do more. It is not enough that a copyright or trademark be registered, a company must go one step further and record the information with U.S. Customs. There is a fee of $190, but the information goes to customs offices in all parts of the country.

It is some manufacturers who tip off customs officials about counterfeit merchandise coming into the country.

Ken Ingleby of the San Diego U.S. Customs office said there is a lot of assistance from industry. Some companies have employees who do nothing but track down counterfeits.

Such a tip-off led to customs agents stopping a load of 1,000 pairs of fake Jordache jeans which came in from Mexico about nine months ago, resulting in three arrests.

When the counterfeits are seized, they are destroyed. A load of Cartier watches got a lot of media attention a few years back when it was crushed with a steamroller. But fake Cartier watches keep rolling in.

Ozawa counsels consumers that "if the price is too good to be true, it probably is."

Jim Mahan of Operation Tripwire in Washington, D.C., said the old adage, "You're only going to get what you pay for" is still good. The problem is some of the merchandise can be marketed through the usual channels, such as department stores and specialty stores — remember how good that Vuitton copy was. He has seen Ferrari sunglasses for sale by street vendors for $3 a pair, and they usually retail for $30 to $35.

The Cabbage Patch doll mania continues. Mahan said 45,000 bogus ones, an estimated value of $500,000 if they were sold as authentic, were seized in February alone. Sometimes the counterfeiters are crafty, such as those who shipped dolls just before Christmas — those didn't have bellybuttons, so thus weren't deemed exact copies and customs couldn't stop the cargo.

In the case of counterfeiting, obviously, it's the middlemen that make the money, although the consumers often think they are getting a good deal.

Meanwhile, legislation is being considered to discourage counterfeiting of American goods.

Pelicans hungry for anchovies

Hearst Feature Service

To many people, anchovies are just a pizza topping. But to pelicans, they're a way of life.

So when unusually warm ocean currents called "El Nino" forced the salty brown fish away from its normal habitat last year, it spelled disaster for the endangered California brown pelican. Nor was it good news for fishermen who depend on anchovies for live bait. And with ocean temperatures still two to three degrees warmer than normal, no one's certain when the anchovy — particularly the larger "horse anchovy" — will make its return.

A preliminary report by two researchers shows that hundreds of Southern California pelican chicks died last year of starvation due to a shortage of anchovies. Anchovies make up 90 percent of the pelican's diet.

"A lot of young chicks died in the nest," said Daniel Anderson, co-author of the report and biologist at University of California-Davis. "They were abandoned by their parents because they couldn't get food."

Other chicks died when they wandered away from their nests in search of food, only to drop off cliffs or fall victim to predators, explained Anderson, who added: "If they're fat and happy, they sit tight; if they're hungry, they get in trouble."

Even before El Nino, pelicans were on the endangered species list. High concentrations of the now-banned pesticide DDT in the environment were found to cause eggshells to become thinner and break before hatching.

The California Fish and Game Department sponsors a yearly report on the pelican population along the 200-mile coast from the Santa Barbara Channel to the northwest tip of Baja California.

Pelicans were making a steady recovery until last spring when El Nino struck, Anderson said. About 40 percent of the pelican chicks died, mostly of starvation.

Upholsterers prefer leather, silk

The Associated Press

Judging from the upholstered furniture shown at a recent national furniture market in High Point, N.C., the long-time ascendancy of solid color velvets is on the wane.

Velvet is still the best-selling fabric, but patterned velvets or those which combine several colors are gaining, as are woven fabrics in general and more heavily textured fabrics in particular.

Leather, often in pastel shades or in deep jewel tones, is covering more sofas and chairs in higher-priced furniture. While more expensive than other upholstery fabrics, leather is popular because of its longer life, durability and easy care, according to Fred Isenhower, vice president of Drexel Heritage Furnishings Inc.

Dressy sofas and chairs in silk and silk-look fabrics were shown at all price ranges. These pieces often feature dressmaker details such as ruffles, flounces and skirt pleats, as well as interesting pillow and arm treatments.

Continuing a trend noted last year, important colors for upholstery in showrooms such as Drexel's, Thayer Coggin, Baker, Bernhardt and Swaim were: black; black and white in combination; gray and grayed pastels; deep jewel tones such as ruby red and emerald green; and almost every imaginable shade of purple from softest lavender to deep mauve.

Aware of the sales appeal of sofas that can be sometime-beds, manufacturers continued to offer new ideas for convertibles. At the market, where retailers from across the country select new furniture styles for sale next season, sofa beds were well represented.

One manufacturer showed a chair and two loveseats that employ the principles of flip-out foam in a conventionally-made piece. The furniture also conceals a storage compartment for bedding in its base and will sell for $300 or $400 depending on size and fabric selected, according to Schweiger Furniture, its maker.

Computerized system diverse

NEW YORK (AP) — A computerized hotel monitoring system has been developed which integrates fire alarms, smoke detectors, security, and other management functions.

The system, developed by Honeywell, gives hotels current information such as guest lists and charges, energy usage, office accounting data as well as smoke and fire detection capabilities.

Swimming pool deaths increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — Deaths of pre-school children in swimming pools have been increasing in recent years, prompting federal safety officials to urge parents to be extra wary of this hazard to their youngsters.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission estimated that more than 300 children under age 5 die annually in swimming-pool related accidents, and this has grown as the number of pools has increased.

A study conducted in Dade County, Fla., found that most youthful drowning victims were males. The peak time for an accident is between 4 p.m. and 5 p.m.

DEAR DOCTOR

'Fibroids' common among women

By JEANNE A. PETREK, M.D.

Q. Everyone seems to have fibroids. What are they due to and how serious does the treatment need to be? I have heard of so many women having hysterectomies for this problem, and mine don't even bother me.

A. Fibroids (myoma, or more specifically, leiomyoma) are very common. In fact, 20 percent of all women between the ages of 30 and 45 have the non-cancerous growths of the uterus, consisting of muscle and fibrous tissue. The compound leio plus myoma means smooth muscle. Because they are so fibrous, the name "fibroids" may have been given.

Fibroids are not associated with malignancy. While the cause is unknown, hormones are certainly necessary for their growth and even for keeping them the same size. Fibroids develop and grow in menstruating women and then tend to shrink after menopause. On the other hand, if one has postmenopausal estrogen replacement, as many do, the fibroids probably continue to grow.

Depending on how many, how large and where located on the uterus, fibroids may or may not cause symptoms. Most women with fibroids do not have any of the symptoms that I will list.

Fibroids may cause bleeding between menstrual periods in addition to causing longer and heavier flow. If large enough, they can press on the bladder in front of the uterus or on the rectum behind the uterus. A patient may then experience the need to urinate small, frequent amounts or may have constipation.

Fibroids may interfere with the ability to become pregnant if they bulge into the interior of the uterus and may also be responsible for miscarriages. Occasionally, fibroids can even block the birth canal, necessitating a Cesarean section.

Fibroids that are large can be felt in a pelvic exam. Sometimes it is not clear whether the mass felt is an enlarged ovary or a fibroid growth of the uterus. An ultrasound exam, which is a test done in the radiology department with sound waves, can often determine the difference between fibroids and an ovary.

Because an enlarged ovary, particularly in an older woman, could be an ovarian cancer, it may also be necessary to perform a D & C and pelvic exam under general anesthesia. This may definitively determine whether the enlargement felt is an ovary or a fibroid.

If there is still doubt, a laparoscopy may be needed to confirm the diagnosis. Laparoscopy is performed under general anesthesia by inserting a telescopic viewing tube through a one-inch incision immediately under the navel. Although a more complex procedure than a D & C, it is smaller than a surgical exploratory operation.

Since most fibroids are small, cause no symptoms, and are discovered only by thorough exam, most doctors recommend pelvic exams every six to 12 months to monitor any changes in size and shape.

If fibroids become painful and troublesome, hysterectomy is the usual treatment. Some may ask why the doctor cannot remove only the fibroids without removing the whole uterus. The procedure of myomectomy — removal of the fibroids alone — is in many ways the more difficult procedure, often with more blood loss than a hysterectomy.

Q. My armpits are red and sore. The same condition occurred several years ago. It was suggested then that I stop all deodorants to allow the soreness to clear, but I would sooner appear in public without a dress than without my deodorant.

A. Unless it is due to shaving, irritation of the underarm is almost always due to deodorants and antiperspirants. It is true that both of these must be stopped to heal the irritation.

Sweat is essentially odorless fluid; the normal skin bacteria acting on the sweat produces the typical odor. The area can remain odorless while healing without deodorants if one sponges the underarm several times per day with witch hazel. It has a weak antibacterial effect.

Powders may help keep the area dry. Over-the-counter hydrocortisone cream applied two or three times a day is helpful in reducing the inflammation quickly. The application of cold water with or without witch hazel soothes the inflamed skin.

While the area is inflamed, soap should not be used. Bathe the underarms with witch hazel. Certainly do not shave the area either. After a few days to a week, the skin should be back to normal or one should see a doctor.

Deodorants may cause itching and irritation but rarely infection.

New ligaments implanted

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Athletes with torn knee ligaments may not have to hang up their spikes — or Frisbees — thanks to a newly developed implant made of a ropy fiber four times stronger than the original tissue, a researcher says.

Dr. Peter Indelicato, a professor of orthopedic surgery at the University of Florida, said about 200 people have received ligament implants made of the synthetic material over the last 18 months in a nationwide test of the procedure.

"Most patients choose this treatment because they are unwilling to change their lifestyles and curtail their sports or work," said Indelicato, who also serves as the university's team physician. "This implant, if successful, is their best bet to eventually resume their full activities."

Florida's health center is one of 15 institutions in the United States testing the prosthesis, which is made from a fiber that surgeons have used for years to reconstruct human blood vessels.

"This artificial ligament is four times stronger than a healthy human ligament," said Indelicato, who has implanted the material in 12 volunteers with torn anterior cruciate ligaments in the knee. Ligaments are a band of tough tissue which connect bones.

"A half-million patients have received vascular grafts of this material over the past 15 years with few instances of rejection by the body," he said.

Before the new ligament, called GORE-Tex and made by W.L. Gore and Associates Inc. of Flagstaff, Ariz., can earn a permanent place in medicine, doctors want to know if it can stand up to a steady regimen of running, twisting, jumping and turning.

The long-term recovery rate of implant recipients at Florida and other test centers will determine the Food and Drug Administration's approval of the ligament, Indelicato said.

Chico Villamor, 33, of Gainesville, received an implant from Indelicato in December after twice tearing the same ligament in his left knee.

After making small incisions and looking inside the patient's knee through a camera called an arthroscope, Indelicato used stainless-steel screws to temporarily anchor a 6-inch ligament implant to the thigh bone above and in the shin bone below the joint. The connecting bones are then attached to the implanted material.

Implant recipients usually leave the hospital two days after surgery and can walk without crutches within three or four weeks, Indelicato said.

Villamor, however, tossed aside his crutches after 10 days and said he "probably could have gotten off them even sooner. I'm already throwing a little Frisbee."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Legal drug abuse can hurt elderly

Dear Dr. Solomon: Whenever I see drugs mentioned in the newspapers, I usually read about heroin and cocaine and marijuana.

I am now working as a volunteer in a senior citizen center, and the people who come here take so many legal drugs that I wonder how they ever have room in their stomachs for food. Some of them are taking as many as six or eight different drugs.

Is this a good idea? — Mrs. J.R., Brooklyn, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. R.: People of any age should take whatever medication is required for their condition, and for some people six or eight drugs may be necessary.

However, the point you make is well taken since for some elderly people take prescription drugs far in excess of what they require.

Elderly patients appear to be in greater danger from the use of legal drugs than from the use of illegal drugs. Dr. Peter P. Lamy, of the School of Pharmacy, University of Maryland at Baltimore, notes that serious consequences may result from the indiscriminate consumption of such products as selenium, beta-carotene, and vitamin E.

Older people are more sensitive to the effects of drugs, and the consequences for them may be more serious even if they do not consume any more than do younger people. The problem of multiple drug consumption is more likely to occur when the patient is being treated by more than one physician and treatment is not coordinated.

Dear Dr. Solomon: When I go jogging, later in the same day I often get a cramp in my leg. At first I didn't know the reason, but now I realize that it seems to happen only on the days that I run.

Can the two things be related? If they are, why do they happen like this? — Fred, York, Pa.

Dear Fred: You seem to be describing exercise-related cramps, which can occur when excessive sweating results in a loss of salt frm the body. The same phenomenon may occur in patients suffering from heat exhaustion.

Dr. Jitendra K. Baruah, of the Medical College of Wisconsin, points out that in order to prevent cramps, a balance must be maintained between carbohydrates and fat, as well as between such minerals as sodium, potassium, magnesium, and calcium. Cramping may result if the balance is upset.

For Cobina, Midland, Texas: Some form of mental deterioration may be the only apparent mainfestation of infection in older people.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Doctor: Ulcers not always related to stress

Hearst Feature Service

True or false? Most people with ulcers are upwardly mobile professionals who have stressful, high-pressure jobs.

The answer is false. If you answered true, you are among the millions of people in the dark about ulcer disease, a condition which Dr. James W. Freston, medicine department chairman at the University of Connecticut School of Medicine, hopes to change.

To bring to light the myths and misunderstandings about ulcers, Freston has helped organize a public and physician education program about gastrointestinal diseases. Ulcers, he said, strike people at all socioeconimic levels, and there is little evidence thst job-related stresses are an important cause.

If stress is not a significant factor, what caused the ulcer in the first place?

"We now know certain factors increase the risk significantly. Foremost among them is cigarette smoking." Freston said, "Not only do cigarette smokers increase their risk of ulcers, otherwise effective drug treatment is compromised" by smoking.

Another factor contributing tu ulcer disease is aspirin use.

Paris: Begin with wine at sidewalk cafe

By LAURA BLY
Copley News Service

Forget the Eiffel Tower and the Mona Lisa; never mind the Moulin Rouge. If you want a taste of the real Paris, head for the nearest sidewalk cafe.

Swing your chair around for the best view of the street, order a glass of vin rouge or espresso (in French, even if it means pulling out your pocket phrase book) and lean back. The show that unfolds in front of you — a combination of arrogance and sensuality; red high heels and black berets — gives a better introduction to the City of Light than any monument, church or museum.

Of course, two or three hours of cafe-sitting, no matter how pleasant, are hardly the makings of a Paris vacation. So, once you've fortified yourself with a few glasses of wine, begin your explorations at the geographical and spiritual center of Paris: Ile de la Cite, a small island in the Seine River that has been a residential district since 200 B.C. The big draw here is Notre Dame, that magnificent Gothic cathedral surrounded by hordes of openmouthed tourists. Join the crush and wade inside — if you're lucky enough to visit on a sunny day, the light streaming through the famed Rose Window is something you'll never forget.

From the Ile de la Cite, it's a short jaunt across the Pont Neuf Bridge (the city's oldest) to the Louvre, one of the world's largest — and most intimidating — museums. It may sound like heresy, but you'd be better off to leave the Mona Lisa, Venus de Milo, et al, for your second trip — the place is just too massive.

Content yourself, instead, with a visit to the Jeu de Paume — a marvelous collection of Impressionist art at the other end of the Tuileries Gardens.

Take your time getting there; these symmetrical gardens, dotted with fountains, statues and ornamental ponds, are a perfect spot to munch a baguette of fresh bread and Camembert cheese as you watch young boys gather around the ponds with some of the fanciest toy boats you'll see anywhere.

Directly across from the Jeu de Paume is the Place de la Concorde, setting of thousands of beheadings during the French Revolution. Today, the frenzied mob has been replaced by frenzied traffic — so frenzied, in fact, that the only sensible way to get to the Egyptian obelisk in the center of the square is via the pedestrian underpass.

From the Place de la Concorde, it's a straight shot down the Champs Elysees to the Arc de Triomphe. During the Second Empire, the street was filled with the carriages of fashionable Parisians determined to see and be seen. Today, you're just as likely to see tourists as locals, and the chic flavor has been diluted by the presence of a McDonald's and Burger King.

At the top of the Arc de Triomphe, commissioned by Napoleon to celebrate his victories, you'll get a good overall glimpse of the city.

Once you've explored some of Paris' big tourist attractions, it's time to head back to a cafe — this time, to eat. Whether you opt for a simple entrecote (sirloin steak) and pommes frites (french fries) or nouvelle cuisine at the source, you can't go wrong in this city.

CNS Photo

The sights and sounds of Paris are everywhere as you travel through the city and pause in the shadow of the Egyptian obelisk — with the Eiffel Tower in the distance.

A final word about the legendary Parisian disdain toward American tourists: As far as I'm concerned, it's non-existent. A smile and a sincere attempt to speak the language — no matter how mangled your s'il vous plaits — will work wonders.

Tours of D-Day sites mark 40th anniversary

The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Americans will invade Europe this year on pilgrimages to the battlefields and beaches where they made history 40 years ago, and Europe is rolling out the red carpet for the returning heroes and their families.

June 6, 1944, was D-Day — when Allied forces invaded Europe and began to turn the tide of World War II.

This year several European countries plan commemorative tours and celebrations to mark the 40th anniversary of D-Day. The English ports from which the Allies set forth and the Normandy beaches where they landed will host events that include military and political figures from both sides of the Atlantic.

Forty years ago, for weeks before D-Day, 3.5 million British, American and Canadian soldiers poured into southern England. During the night of June 5 more than 1,000 ships sailed down Southampton Water. One sailor said, "You could almost have walked to France on their decks." Nearly 200,000 personnel landed on Normandy's beaches the first day; within a month the total exceeded 1 million.

The Belgian Tourist Office announces that that country is going all out to welcome returning GIs this year. They say that the Battle of the Ardennes (Americans call it the Battle of the Bulge) is what turned the tide of World War II. The Mardasson Monument at Bastogne commemorates the battle.

This year the Belgian provinces of Liege, Luxembourg and Namur, in whose towns the battles raged, have prepared tours for motorists, cyclists and pedestrians, covering sites of the battles. "Historical Routes 1944-45" will provide veterans and their families an opportunity to recall where they made history.

According to the Belgian Tourist Office, 745 Fifth Ave., New York 10151, tour operators to contact for information on visiting World War II battle sites in Belgium are Galaxy Tours, P.O. Box 326, King of Prussia, Pa. 19406; Excursions Unlimited, 1743 W. Lane Ave., Columbus, Ohio 43221; Patrick Henry International, 3530 Forest Lane, Dallas, Texas 75234; and Valor Tours, Schoonmaker Building, Sausalito, Calif. 94965.

Air France, through Galaxy Tours, (800) 523-7287, has plans for two escorted 12-day tours along the Normandy coast plus excursions elsewhere in France. "The Heart of France" begins in Paris and moves on to invasion beaches — Utah, Omaha and Arromanches — then goes to Le Mans, Reims, Luxembourg, Nancy and Battle of the Bulge sites, and then back to Paris.

Tours along the liberation route also are offered by Northstar Tours, Box 803, Lakeville, Minn. 55044, all entering and leaving Europe via Amsterdam. The focus is on American and Canadian efforts from the D-Day beaches to the Rhine crossings that occurred between June 1944 and March 1945, including beach landings, parachute landings at St. Mere Eglise, the Battle of the Falaise Pocket, Paris, Chateau Thierry, Reims, Luxembourg, Bastogne and the Battle of the Bulge, Malmedy and the Remagen Bridgehead.

Omaha Beach: Haunted by peaceful silence

By JERRY HULSE
The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

ST. LAURENT-SUR- MER, France — The old soldier stood alone, looking down on a memory.

It was a scene like the awakening from a nightmare and discovering with relief it had been only that: a nightmare.

On the golden sands of the wide and peaceful beach, the birds of the sea stood with ruffled feathers. They were warming themselves in the late afternoon sun while channel waters flushed the shore.

Occasionally a gull cried out as it soared overhead. Otherwise it was silent.

The old soldier stood at the very edge of the cliff, hat in hand. There was a breeze, and his thinning hair fell awkwardly across his fore head.

He blinked in the glare of the sun, and suddenly the old nightmare was back with all its terror.

Below the birds were gone and the sand ran red with the blood of men. In a single moment his mind slipped back across the years to a spring morning and the helplessness he had felt as he struggled ashore in one of history's greatest military efforts.

This place below him was Omaha Beach, one of the centerfolds of the Normandy invasion. Here at dawn on June 6, 1944, thousands upon thousands of U.S. troops fought their way ashore.

Above on the cliffs, exactly where the old soldier stood this day, Germans caught them in a nightmarish cross fire. The Germans were dug in with machine guns and mortar emplacements, and the U.S. troops clawed their way up cliffs like those at Dover.

Years later when Gen. Omar Bradley returned to Omaha Beach he said incredulously, "I looked up at the cliffs and I wondered how our men ever got there, got to the top."

Thousands did not.

Today they lie beneath row on row of crosses and Stars of David in the American Normandy Cemetery directly above Omaha Beach.

That morning in 1944 the cemetery had been a battle field. Now it is grassy and peaceful, warmed by the sun that shines down on all of Normandy.

There is a haunting silence except for the song of birds, unseen in trees nearby.

Visitors speak softly, for they are in the presence of the courageous, boys who came to this place from every state in the United States and as far away as Guam.

I studied the names on the crosses: Pvt. Kenneth R. Brink of Illinois ... Staff Sgt. Murl F. Simmons of New York ... Sgt. Harry E. LaChance of Connecticut ... Staff Sgt. James W. Winstead of Mississippi ... Pfc. Athel Givett of California ... Pvt. William A. Platt of Illinois.

Altogether, 9,386 men are buried at Normandy, above the beach where the hell storm occurred those long years ago.

Solemn words cut into stone reach out to those standing before the cemetery's memorial: "In proud remembrance of the achievements of her sons and humble tribute to their sacrifices, this memorial has been erected by the United States of America."

There are also the words of ex-French President Rene Coty: "These men who sleep their last sleep here have earned in victory their places in the first rank of the courageous. We do not forget. We shall never forget."

And there was the prayer said on D-Day by President Franklin D. Roosevelt: "Almighty God, our sons, pride of our nation, this day have set upon a mighty endeavor, a struggle to preserve our Republic, our religion and our civilization and to set free a suffering humanity."

The land with the cemetery has been given in perpetuity by a grateful France. There is a memorial inside the cemetery with the names of men who did not come home — those who were never found. It is called the Garden of the Missing, and these words are inscribed there: "Here are recorded the names of Americans who gave their lives in the service of their country and who sleep in unknown graves. This is their memorial, the whole earth their sepulchre .... Comrades in arms whose resting place is known only to God."

Altogether, 1,557 names.

Legends of the invasion are there for all to see: maps and graphic descriptions of the fighting.

North of the cemetery in a French war museum, films of the invasion are screened hourly.

America's heroes fought an enemy who was determined to conquer all Europe. This single invasion was the hair breadth by which the freedom of the world dangled so precariously.

So they landed at Omaha and Utah beaches and other places along the Normandy coast. Without their courage it is questionable that freedom as we know it today would have existed beyond that frightening morning.

D-Day was won while Americans slept at home. Victory headlines greeted them at breakfast time.

They also read of bodies rolling in the surf, the remains of young men who sleep their eternal sleep this day above Omaha Beach.

At no time in history had such an invasion occurred. Men were dropped ashore in landing craft, machines that rust this day along the Normandy beaches.

Thousands of others had already parachuted onto French soil before the invasion got under way. German forces watched incredulously as hundreds of ships and planes moved toward Normandy.

Thousands to visit Normandy

The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

They will be returning by the thousands this week — American, British and Canadian — to Normandy where they landed 40 years ago. For many, it will be a last chance to relive that historic day, for many are old men now. It seems impossible, they tell themselves, that they were so terribly young on D-Day.

President Reagan is expected at Normandy along with Queen Elizabeth, French President Francois Mitterrand and Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

Hotels have been sold out for months, although many returning servicemen will be staying with families who offered them shelter during the war. The majority are in their 60s now, some even in their 70s. Each bears his own personal reason for returning to Normandy.

For them it will be a second D-Day invasion, only without the horror of war. There will, of course, be the memories. Poignant memories of fallen comrades who never made it home.

Farmers and villagers along the Normandy coast still live with the memory of D-Day. They were freed by Allied forces from four years of German occupation.

Ceremonies will be held throughout the summer at other European battle fields, far beyond the landing beaches of Normandy. On the English side, Southampton will bring alive memories of those fateful days of war and wine and hurried romances.

For weeks preceding D-Day, British, American and Canadian troops poured into Southampton where the invasion had its beginning. Now, 40 years later, the memories of war will be rekindled. One sailor remembers how "you could almost walk to France on the decks of ships lined up on D-Day."

Other Americans will return to Southampton at the invitation of the local tourism department. A huge turnout is anticipated when Dame Vera Lynn, the wartime sweetheart of millions of GIs, will solo again at the Gaumont Theater, and ex-American serviceman Bob Organ of Lodi, Calif., will sing, just as he did while bombs fell and a world at war ached for peace.

Like Normandy: Battle of Bulge draws throngs

The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

BASTOGNE, Belgium — The cannons roared here, and men wept. Today there are no cannons, but men still weep. The Battle of the Ardennes, better known in America as the Battle of the Bulge, ended on a bloody, last day of January in 1945, but the stain remains on every blade of grass, every tree trunk, every piece of soil in this quiet Belgian countryside some 40 years later.

Men — both Americans and Germans — are returning this year to Bastogne, just as they are returning to the beaches of Normandy. They are returning to remember days so cold the tears froze on their cheeks, and nights that thundered with the weapons of war. And they weep.

They are returning to the killing ground, where nearly 80,000 Americans and 120,000 Germans died. Where 5,000 Belgian civilians were killed, 11,000 homes destroyed, and horses and cows and pigs died alongside their owners, their screams mixed with the roaring of tanks and the staccato sound of machine guns.

It is sometimes hard, especially for one who was not even born when the killing began, to envision the brutality of the Battle of the Bulge. Today, chickens cluck contentedly beside ancient stone barns, and small herds of cattle lazily munch young grass beside streams that once ran red with the blood of Americans and Germans. It all seems so bucolic, so harmless, so removed from death and destruction.

But it only takes one stop — a visit to the cemetery at Recogne just outside Bastogne — for even the youngest to be suddenly filled with the horror of this place. Here are buried 6,785 German soldiers. Enough to populate a small town.

Row after row after row the squat, black crosses march sullenly across the misty Belgian countryside. They force you to remember that men died here, legs shattered by machine guns, faces ravaged by shrapnel, lungs seared by winter's cold. Today they rest under ash trees, their simple stones rimmed by short-cropped grass that carries the smell of manure.

Some, like Heinrich Jauklin, who died Jan. 7, 1945 at the age of 18, were children; others, like Fritz Breithaupt, who was killed on Christmas Day 1944 at the age of 52, were too old to be waging this war. Today they all lie in the soil of Belgium, the soil that Hitler wanted so badly. Not far away — in Neuville-En-Condroz and Henri-Chapelle and Luxembourg — are buried the Americans, as young and as old, and as dead.

These men started dying on a foggy Dec. 16 at 5:30 a.m. when the Germans threw 28 divisions at the four Allied divisions guarding a 74-mile section of the Ardennes. The Germans quickly smashed through the American lines (thus the "bulge" in the American defense that gave the battle its name) on their push to win Antwerp and its vital sea link.

The Germans rushed 240,000 men, 970 tanks and 2,000 cannons into the battle; the Americans had but 83,000 men, 242 tanks and 576 cannons to defend. But they also had generals like Anthony McAuliffe and George Patton, and enough gutty men to repel a superior force.

At the outset the Germans had things pretty much as they liked, pushing through the smaller American force with relative ease. Fog and snow prevented Allied airplanes from assisting in the fight. But when the action approached Bastogne, the skies began to clear, the Americans dug in, and the Germans were first slowed, then stopped.

McAuliffe rushed his 101st Airborne into the city and the "Battered Bastards of Bastogne" fought for every house, every tree, every stone fence. When the Germans surrounded Bastogne and demanded a surrender, McAuliffe replied with his famous "Nuts." Infuriated, the Germans bombed the town unmercifully.

Although the Germans battered Bastogne until Jan. 4 and continued to fight and bleed and die in the forests of the Ardennes until Jan. 31, the Battle of the Bulge was won by the end of December. The Americans had held and Hitler's last chance for victory was gone.

Discount vacations may shortchange buyer

By ERIC JUDE
Copley News Service

You see them advertised all the time: Gift vacation for two. Have an exciting fun-filled holiday. Deluxe accommodations for three days and two nights. You pay only a small processing fee.

But that paragraph should include one more phrase — BEWARE.

Although many gift vacations and vacation certificates are good deals, some are worth much less than the offer implies. And some can cost you more and give you less than you expected.

Promoters of gift vacations and vacation certificates may sell them by telephone or mail for very low amounts, such as $15 to $45, which sounds attractive. And businesses sometimes use them as giveaways to boost sales. Since the vacations are giveaways, the businesses may not be concerned with how legitimate promoter claims are.

So, before you buy a vacation certificate or use one you received free, read the offer carefully and evaluate what you're getting, says a flier from the Federal Trade Commission.

Sometimes descriptions of vacation features are vague. For example, when reserving a hotel room through a promoter, you may be required to make a non-refundable deposit to hold or confirm your reservation. Once you arrive, you may find that what the promoter considers a "deluxe" room does not meet with your expectations of a deluxe room. Or, you may find that your accommodations are some distance from the main resort attractions.

CNS Graphic

According to the commission, you can minimize your risk of dissatisfaction or inconvenience by doing some pre-trip research.

Ask the promoter if a room deposit is required, whether it is refundable and what you must do to get your money back.

Also, request the names, addresses and telephone numbers of hotels connected with the promotion so that you can call and ask about their accommodations and where they are located.

To ensure that a promoter makes reservations at the hotels advertised, confirm your reservation with the hotel, not the promoter, prior to leaving home.

In addition, research any bonus coupons offered by promoters. These coupons offer everything from free meals and drinks to discount rates for gambling, show tickets or sporting events. However, there may be limited conditions under which you can redeem those coupons.

To avoid being unpleasantly surprised, ask the promoter for the names, addresses and telephone numbers of participating restaurants, theaters, clubs and casinos so you can call and ask if any restrictions apply. Also, you may want to ask if you are required to spend your own money before the amounts listed on the coupons can be used.

To be confident you are avoiding a bad deal, check the promoter's reputation with a local consumer affairs office, the state attorney general's office or the Better Business Bureau.

Prepare for camping trip

CHICAGO (AP) — Families planning a summer camping trip should make reservations from two to eight weeks in advance, especially for campsites in the most popular locations, the National Park Service advises.

Using a modern method to help people enjoy an old-fashioned kind of vacation, the service makes reservations by computer, through Ticketron.

Whether you're setting your sights on the Colorado Rocky Mountains, the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia or Yellowstone National Park in Wyoming, you'll find they all have something special to offer visitors. More than a third of the 300 areas in the National Park system have camping facilities available.

To make reservations at the park areas through Ticketron, visit sporting goods and department stores or automobile clubs and ask for the National Park Ticketron reservation form. Or write: National Park Service, Ticketron Reservation Office, Box 2715, San Francisco, CA 94126 (no phone reservations).

"Line everything up where you can take a look at it and determine whether repair or additional equipment is needed," suggests Beverly Crown, marketing vice president of the Chicago-based Henderson Camp Products, which produces the White Stag, Trail Blazer and Base Camp lines.

Upon arrival, check at the Ranger Station for assignment location. User fees average $4-$6 per family per day.

Health clinics, spas sprouting up across vacationlands

By MICHAEL CARLTON
The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

IRVING, Texas — In a small graveyard in Charleston, S.C., there is a modest tombstone, its granite ravaged by weather, its lettering nearly obliterated by the wear of the years. But if you crouch down and look carefully and the light is just right you can make out the inscription: "I told you I was sick."

I've thought about that tombstone and chuckled over its epitaph for years. We all know we're going to die, but few of us, I'm afraid, will go out with such humor.

And, since few of us are particularly anxious to take leave of this world, we search for ways to prevent — or at least postpone — the departure. To more and more men and women, that means combining a vacation or business trip with a complete medical checkup. Clinics and spas are sprouting up in America's vacationlands like tennis courts. It's not enough anymore to deal with bottom lines and corporate takeovers and the bond market; today's executive must also deal with blood pressure and EKGs and salt-free diets.

One of the leading facilities offering professional counseling on health matters for executives is the Las Colinas Preventive Medicine Center, located in Texas' posh Las Colinas Sports Club.

The center offers a comprehensive look at your health, your habits, your future risks. With a staff of six internists, three cardiologists, two orthopedic surgeons, a phychologist, an exercise physiologist, two dieticians, an athletic trainer and a physical therapist, there is little the center can't determine about your body and — to some extent — your mind.

Many of those who come to the center are Dallas-area residents who belong to the Las Colinas Sports Club, but an increasing number are visiting businessmen and women who take time out of their work week to undergo the $550, two-day examination offered by the Preventive Medicine Center.

Passport tips provided

By 'GENE BURKE
Copley News Service

Q: I am planning my first trip abroad and would appreciate information regarding passport requirements, inoculations and other recommendations.

A: If this is your first passport, you must submit, in person, evidence of citizenship, two passport photographs, 2-by-2 inches, an identity document such as a valid driver's license and the passport fee.

Citizenship evidence, if born in the United States, must be a certified copy of your birth record or your birth certificate, as a certified copy is called. If naturalized, then your naturalization certificate, which serves as evidence of citizenship as well as identity.

You should apply for your passport at a post office authorized to accept passport applications or at a county clerk of the court office if they accept applications.

No vaccinations are required to return to the United States from any country — however, some foreign countries may require certain immunizations. Specific information may be obtained from your local health department, physician or private or public agency that advises international travelers.

Q: I was told that if I didn't have a birth certificate, I could submit secondary evidence for a passport. What does secondary evidence consist of?

A: First, you must submit a notice from the state registrar stating that no birth record exists, and this must be accompanied by the best secondary evidence possible — which may include a baptismal certificate, a hospital birth record, affidavits of persons having personal knowledge of the facts of your birth or other documentary evidence such as early census, school or church records.

Q: I hear conflicting stories as to how long it takes for a passport to be issued. Is it five weeks or more?

A: During the winter, we are able to issue a passport within three weeks after receiving the application, if all is in order. As the busy season approaches, beginning in March, the issuance time is between five and six weeks.

Q: When I received my passport several months ago, I entered my name and address in the place provided. Now that I have moved, is it OK to cross out the old address and write in the new?

A: It is permissible to change one's address on a passport whenever necessary. If the change becomes difficult for reasons of clarity and the lack of space, it also is permissible to use a paste-in label.

Q: The photograph in my passport does not totally resemble me since I have a new mustache and am thinner. Need I get a new passport or can I just put in a photograph that looks like me now?

A: If you do not resemble the photograph in your passport and you plan to travel abroad with it, you need to apply for a new passport with photographs that look like you submitted with your application.

Incan city remote, mysterious

MACHU PICCHU, Peru — Machu Picchu, the ancient Inca city high in the Andes, was discovered in 1911 and is still the subject of much study and controversy.

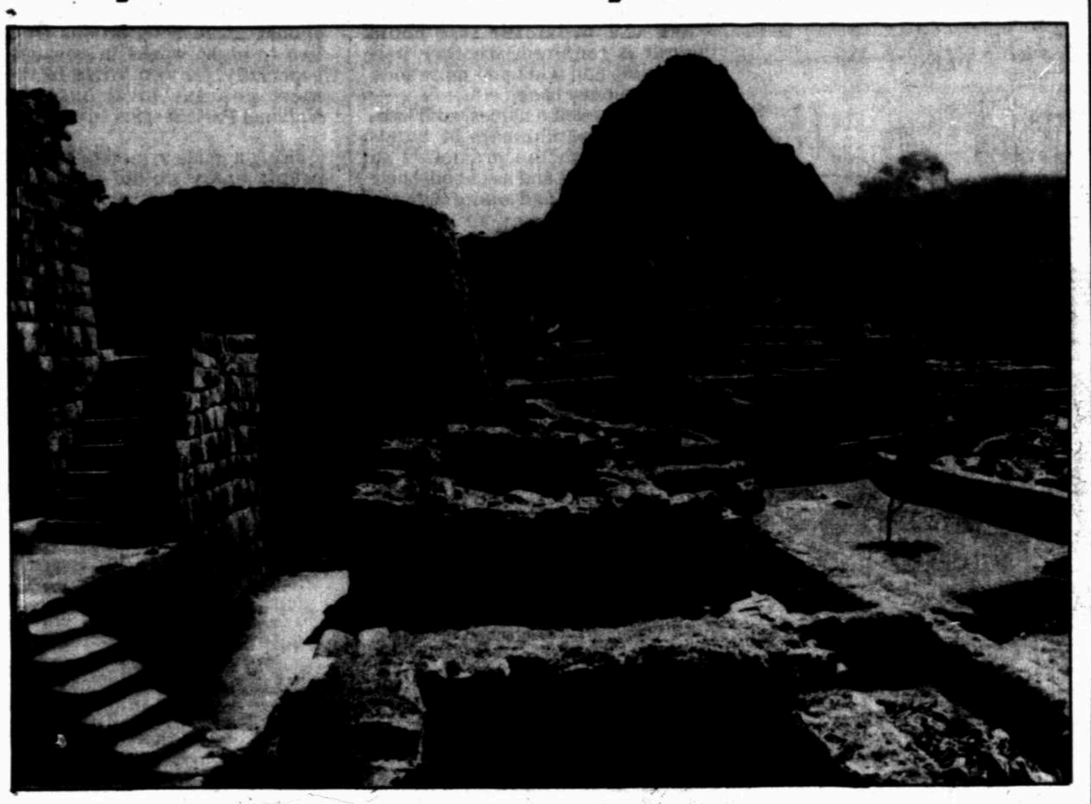

Although the ancient city is considered one of the world's mysteries, one thing is certain — Machu Picchu is one of the most breathtakingly beautiful sights on earth. Set 8,000 feet above sea level where the mountains reach the tropical zone, it sits on verdant cliffs above a swift, treacherous river and beneath jagged mountain peaks.

Machu Picchu can be reached only two ways — by train from Cuzco or by a 52-mile hike along the Inca Trail. When the city was built nearly 800 years ago, the Inca builders made it as remote and inaccessible as possible. Today the only hotel there, the Hotel de Turistas, has its 33 rooms booked months in advance. Most visitors take the five-hour train ride from Cuzco, spend the day on guided tours through the ruins, lunch on a balcony overlooking the valley and return to Cuzco for the night.

Machu Picchu was discoverd by Hiram Bingham, a historian from Yale University who was in South America studying military campaigns of Simon Bolivar. Fascinated by tales of the lost Inca cities, he formed an expedition, funded by Yale and private donations, to search for Vilcapampa, stronghold of the last Inca ruler and his sons.

When he found Machu Picchu he was certain he had discovered Vilcapampa. However, many historians and archeologists believe Machu Picchu was not Vilcapampa but another Inca stronghold.

The last Inca died in 1571, 38 years after the Spaniards captured Cuzco and destroyed the Inca Empire. Many believe any Inca city or stronghold built after the Spaniards' arrival in Peru would show traces of Hispanic influence. Machu Picchu has no signs of Spanish influence. Current belief is the city was abandoned long before the Conquest of Peru and even the existing Incas did not know about it.

Remote and mysterious Machu Picchu cloaks its secret in its awesome beauty. Built by Incas about 800 years ago, its exact origins and purpose remain a mystery to archeologists and historians. Many believe it was a hidden refuge for Inca rulers and spiritual leaders who used it as a sanctuary for sacred rites. Today Machu Picchu is only accessible by train from Cuzco.

No one even knows the city's real name. Local people simply named it after the mountain peak soaring above it. The name means Ancient Peak in Quechua, the local Indian language.

Some believe Machu Picchu was a secret refuge of the Virgins of the Sun whose existence was known to a select few. Adding credence to this theory is the fact 75 percent of the human remains found at Machu Picchu were those of females. Yet it is also possible the men were killed elsewhere in battle. That it was a place dedicated to worship and deliberately hidden from the rest of the world is certain.

Another mystery of the city is how it was built. The Incas did not have the wheel or mortar, yet they built structures with mammoth granite boulders, so perfectly carved and pieced together there is not even room for the blade of a knife between many of the rocks and boulders.

The best way to see Machu Picchu is by guided tour, which takes about three hours. Highlights include the Temple of the Sun, the most perfect stonework of Machu Picchu; the Royale Sector, with huge rock lintels weighing up to three tons; the Principal Temple, a three-walled building with immense foundation rocks; and the Intihuatana, the most important shrine at Machu Picchu, which was also the city's astronomical observatory.

Because the Incas did not have a written language and their oral historians apparently made no mention of the city, who built it and why, the purpose and people of Machu Picchu remain a mystery.

Acapulco: A gem despite growing pains

By PATRICIA DIBSIE
Copley News Service

The petite, blond woman in her 40s sipped on a glass of champagne and occasionally nibbled at the small shrimp dipped in red cocktail sauce. She laughed and talked of her adventures 20 years ago when she traveled to Acapulco for the first time.

The seat belt sign flashed and her audience returned to their seats anticipating adventures to match the romantic tale that the woman had spun on the three-hour jet ride from Los Angeles to Acapulco.

The view from the air brought mixed emotions — most thought a city with the reputation of Acapulco should have looked more cosmopolitan from 10,000 feet. A few strips of concrete interrupted a jungle of palm and coconut trees, nothing more.

The weather is tropical year-round (average temperature is 80 degrees Fahrenheit).

And the biggest problem in Acapulco is deciding when to sleep.

The days are warm and beautiful with any number of activities to capture the sports enthusiast — riding horses on the beach, scuba diving, sailing, waterskiing, para-sailing, deep-sea fishing. ...

For the walking enthusiast, there are shops, shops and more shops boasting bargains too good to resist.

And then there are the nights. The city comes alive in the early evening and time seems to slip away. When you're planning that romantic walk on a beach before calling it a night, don't be surprised if the sun peeks over the mountains. Yep, you've danced the night away.

No one seems to agree on the "real" Acapulco and perhaps that's because there are several.

There is the "country club" Acapulco 6 miles from the airport. The Acapulco Princess and the Pierre Marques may be just your style. That's if you like luxury spelled with a capital "L."

The Princess boasts of being "lavish, luxurious, very avant-garde," and it's that and more, from its massive polished marble entry to its many restaurants and bars, award-winning golf course and eight lagoon pools.

The Pierre Marques is another oasis, located just a few hundred yards from the Princess (both hotels are 20 minutes by car to the city).

Or travel back toward the airport and go on another few miles to La Barrita. Be sure and bring your camera, the folks back home won't believe this one. Pick your lunch from among the fresh seafood entrees and then sip on a drink while resting in a hammock on the beach. The waiter will call you when lunch is served.

Whatever hotel you decide to call home, sooner or later most everyone ends up spending a little time at El Mirador, on the shore. For it is here that the brave men climb the cliffs to make their 130-foot dives into the unruly waters below.

This is Acapulco the way the Mexican government chooses for the visitor to see it. It is the grande dame of Mexican resorts. And most visitors are content to spend their hours in the sun, enjoying this vista of "Amigo Country."

But there is another side to this city. It is not nearly so glamorous for the Mexican people who live and work there year-round.

Three of us ventured into this "real" Acapulco. We hired a cab and drove to the "other side of the mountain" where the poor people have been relocated out of the sight of the tourists.

Conditions are crowded and tattered laundry hangs on makeshift rope lines scattered between makeshift wood and cardboard houses. Most of the children are barefoot and most are ready to ask and accept a peso or two.

The adults are angry and say they have been forgotten by the government. They hear promises of better conditions and say that it is always this way when a new government comes in. But they say that promises soon are forgotten and so have learned to expect nothing.

"Except for movie houses, which I haunted as a child, it (when she attended a rehearsal for a school play) was the first time I had ever been inside a theater. I was at school to study English and possibly become a teacher. Watching that rehearsal was like being suddenly born. I impulsively asked to audition. The next day, I was in rehearsal myself, to play Gertrude in 'Hamlet.' I remember feeling that I had reached a safe harbor. For the first time in my life I was at home within my own skin. From that day on I have never felt otherwise."

— Kate Nelligan

Actress' obsession

By FRED ROBBINS
King Features Syndicate

"Obsessed," a word often used by the stunning new Broadway-Hollywood star Kate Nelligan, accurately describes many of the women she has memorably portrayed. It also serves as an apt description of the actress herself.

Last year she appeared in the shattering movie "Without a Trace," in which she played a young mother obsessed with finding her small son who set off for school one morning and simply vanished.

Making a sensational debut on Broadway last season in "Plenty," she played an English girl whose greatest moment came at 17, when she was a valiant underground courier in Nazi-occupied France, and who spent the rest of her life obsessively waging her own war against the post-war world that degenerated into bleakness.

In the lush miniseries based on Emile Zola's "Therese Raquin," seen on PBS, she was a 19th-century Frenchwoman obsessed by romantic sexuality.

AND NOW, IN "A Moon for the Misbegotten" on Broadway she has become obsessed with parallels between the character she plays, Josie Hogan, and aspects of her own life — a troubled relationship with an alcoholic mother...whose name just happened to be Josie. She's received rave reviews for her powerful performance in the Eugene O'Neill play.

The classic-featured, 32-year-old Canadian, is frequently compared with Ingrid Bergman, and is obsessed with becoming the best possible actress.

And, she says, "I have always had an obsession about doing things properly. Which explains why I've put my work, my career, ahead of any private life. I would be very foolish to lie to myself about what I am most concerned with.

"When it comes to marriage, I'm 'chicken.' I don't throw myself off the cliff with quite the abandon and bravery that some other people do. That explains why I haven't married, haven't had children.

"Until you've reached a certain plateau in your profession, if you're an actress, it is all but impossible to have it both ways and perform equally well in each area. And I haven't yet arrived at a pick-and-choose level as an actress."

Setting down her coffee cup, she continued, reflectively, "Of course I'm very lonely. I think anyone who has chosen the course I have is lonely. That seems to me the price that you pay.

"I WANT VERY much, at the right time, to be a wife and mother. It's a thought that does enormously attract me. I was reared in an Irish-Catholic home, in London, Ontario, and I am a most family-oriented person."

Fixing earnest hazel eyes on her interviewer, Kate Nelligan said resolutely, "I intend my personal life to be successful. I intend to make only one marriage — a challenging marriage to a man who needs, and to whom I intend to give, a great deal. I intend to have children. I intend my family to be happy. I intend for all these things to happen.

"But, for now, I would enter marriage with the sense of attempting something almost impossible. And I'm very glad I haven't done it. It's taking me such a long time to sort myself out. I'm glad I haven't burdened anybody else with it yet, on a permanent basis. And, more importantly, I'm awfully glad I haven't burdened children with it. I'm very old-fashioned about all of that."

Ms. Nelligan's maternal instinct, however, is most obvious when she speaks of the youngster, Daniel Bryan Corkill, 8, who played her 6-year-old son in "Without a Trace."

"For a month, we were reading children all over America trying to find the perfect Alex," she relates.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. Now that I have seen the movie "Greystoke," I am very interested in the new Tarzan, Christopher Lambert. Please tell me about his background, whether he's married, what his other acting credits are and what are his future plans.

Trina Beiers
Sacramento, Calif.

A. Lambert — pronounced "Lom-bare" in the French style, which he is — spoke French first, although his parents were living in New York. He learned English in boarding school in Switzerland, which accounts for the curiously European accent you heard in the film.

He decided at 12 that he wanted to become an actor, but instead bowed to his father's wishes after graduation and went to work at the London Stock Exchange. Six months later, completely bored, he went to Paris and entered the Conservatoire as a theater student.

Upon completion of the course three years later, he worked in the Paris theater, performing the classics, and got a small part in the film "Le Bar du Telephone."

After two more films, "La Dame du Coeur" and "Legitime Violence," he met "Greystoke" director Hugh Hudson, auditioned for the part with 50 other actors and three months later was given the part. He's following it with the film "Words and Music" currently shooting in Europe, co-starring Catherine Deneuve.

He isn't married and still lives in Europe, half the time in Paris, the other half in London.

Christopher Lambert

Q. My daughter is such a big fan of Jimmy Stewart. Can you tell me how he is and what he's doing?

Mrs. Mel Jones
Midland, Texas

A. He's fine, we hear. He had a problem with his skin last year that was treated, but otherwise is feeling well. He's doing mostly charity work at the moment. "People are always trying to make a deal with him," explains a friend, "but they're usually for properties that he would elevate but that would ruin him. So he's waiting for something good to come along."

He's also, specifically, waiting for a script: He and mutual admirer Carol Burnett have talked about doing a TV movie together, but they're both waiting to see the words before they commit.

Q. In January I saw the movie "Valley Girl" on HBO four times and my sister saw it six. I particularly like Nicholas Cage's performance. What can you tell me about this adorable guy?

C.A.P.
Oakville, Conn.

A. He's 20, was raised in Long Beach, Calif., and wanted to become a writer, so while in high school he studied acting because he thought a writer should learn about character development. But, "he was an actor at heart," says an associate, so he switched.

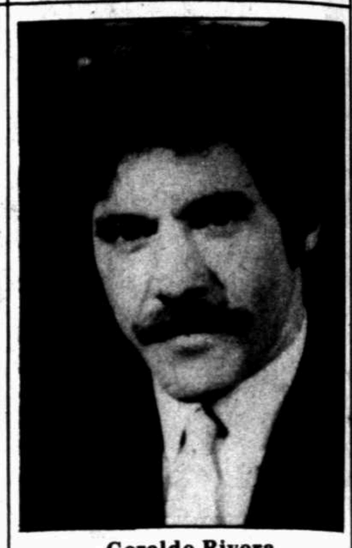

His first film was "Fast Times at Ridgemont High"; then "Valley Girl"; "Rumble Fish," for his uncle, director Francis Coppola; the current "Racing with the Moon"; and the upcoming "Cotton Club," also for Coppola.

Right now, he's filming "Birdy," based on the award-winning novel, for director Alan Parker ("Fame," "Midnight Express") and, justifiably, enjoying his success.

Q. Please tell me what "20/20" reporter Geraldo Rivera's name was before he changed it.

H. Lamber
Camp Hill, Pa.

A. Geraldo Rivera. His father, Al Rivera, was born and raised in Puerto Rico. The confusion stems from his past Anglicization of the name when he was at the University of Arizona — he called himself "Gerry Rivers," as he explains, because everyone was blond and blue-eyed and he was trying to get into a fraternity. But when WABC in New York was looking for a Hispanic reporter, he was proud to resume his ethnic identity.

Geraldo Rivera

Q. I've been trying to obtain information about my favorite rock group, Duran Duran. I'd like to know their full names, birthdays, etc.

Debbie Reynolds
Gary, Ind.
Trina Morehouse
Norwalk, Conn.

A. Here goes: Lead singer Simon Charles Le Bon (called Charly by the rest of the band) was born on October 27, 1958 and grew up in Watford, near London. He went to the same school as Elton John, studied drama at Birmingham University and has artistic interests away from the group. He likes to draw, write, read everything "from science fiction to Shakespeare" and see "good films." He also likes to sail.

Guitarist Andy Taylor was born February 16, 1961 in Cullercoats, near Newcastle, where he now owns a restaurant called "Rio." He lives in a 15th-century cottage in Shropshire with his wife, Tracie, who was formerly the group's hairdresser.

Bassist John Taylor (no relation) is formally named Nigel John Taylor. He was born June 20, 1960 near Birmingham and is the official partygoer of the group, "in charge of nighttime P.R.," according to Andy Taylor. When he isn't going to clubs, he's watching James Bond movies or tooling around in his cars, including the ultimate Bondmobile, a gold Aston Martin.

Drummer Roger Taylor (also no relation) was born April 26, 1960 in Birmingham. When not working, he likes to really relax — to lie in bed and watch TV. Keyboard player Nick Rhodes was born Nicholas John Bates on June 8, 1962 just down the road from John Taylor near Birmingham. His favorite things offstage are taking photographs, playing practical jokes, fine art, strawberries and his cat, Sebastian.

Redford lives by code developed in sports

By PAUL ROSENFIELD
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — He may be the last movie star who still operates this way. No assistants, no entourage. Nobody else is making the decisions. The people in Robert Redford's professional life have been there for years, but he doesn't lean on them.

As Redford entered his Manhattan office he apologized for being late and explained why he had been in three states in the last 36 hours — and why his life is complicated.

The reason was "The Natural," his first film in four years. Days before the first public screening, Redford was in an editing room looking over a last-minute redesign of the movie's opening credits. "The thing is," Redford explained, "that prints of 'The Natural' go to theaters around the country with a trailer attached — and the trailer is for the new Muppets movie. The feeling was, we had better redesign our credits. Otherwise, the shift in tone between the Muppets trailer and our movie would be...."

Redford trailed off; his smile, boyish still at 46, was ironic, recognizing the preposterousness of moviemaking.

In the span of a weekend he had to be in California, Utah, Connecticut and New York (where, except for California, he has homes). "I don't live too much by program," he said, "and it drives my friends crazy."

A SENSE OF comfort extends to his headquarters. There is no outer office, no name on any door and almost no mark of stardom. Furnished with a loveseat and a couple of chairs, the room hardly seems designed for a megastar-director-producer.

It is the size of the office (barely 9 feet by 12) that startles, until one remembers that Redford has 7,000 of the best acres in Utah. When one has that kind of acreage, a small midtown office is perfectly suitable. Redford only hangs his hat here, not his identity.

Redford sat for hours in a straight-backed chair and never flinched from a question. No publicist was present; no prior list of questions was requested; and no subject was barred. No star trips, unless you count tardiness.

Waiting for Redford is instructive; the time is spent going over the questions. One kept surfacing: How can Robert Redford, man of action, downhill racer and mountain climber, be reconciled with Redford the reclusive sketch artist, the eager movie director who storyboarded every shot of his debut film, "Ordinary People"? Is he jock or introvert?

"I'm schizophrenic," he responded. "I'm also Irish."

Redford's father, a former Los Angeles milkman, calls his son "a combination of Tom Swift and Attila the Hun." Paul Newman calls Redford "a barracuda pussycat."

That duality has allowed him to orchestrate a durable star career on his own terms. If Redford disappears from the screen for years, he also returns, usually in the right year, to make the films that address his own personal obsessions: "Downhill Racer," "The Candidate," "All the President's Men."

AGE, AT THIS point, would not seem to be one of Redford's obsessions. And if anybody is wondering how Redford is aging, the answer is that he seems not to be aging.

The issue of age was present in "The Natural." The movie, based on Bernard Malamud's first novel about a promising baseball player of 20 who does not reach his potential until 35, required Redford to play both ages. Ten years ago, he did that in the flashback scenes in "The Way We Were," but 10 years ago is 10 years ago.

"To play 20 now," Redford said, "means showing the innocent part of yourself. I worked from the inside out, and this was a case of getting rid of a lot of things. You have to lose a lot of the emotional weight you carry around. I was never really going to pass for 20 now, but to try means...a lot of help from cinematographer Caleb Deschanel. No, seriously, I think it's your vanity that likes to think you can do it. I believe people should bear aging. Women get a nice look when they start to experience things, and so do men."

What Redford experiences, away from moviemaking, is a "personal design for living that I came upon real early." By that he means a kind of enviable pattern of work: Several years are spent moviemaking and several years are spent not moviemaking.

"...After 'All the President's Men,'" he said, " people thought I was spending those years trying to match that success. I wasn't; I was only trying to recharge — to ride horses and travel and ski — and to follow my natural instincts."

The instincts are well-honed. Redford claimed never to have had, or needed, a role model. "I always had a sense of my own instincts. They were undeveloped, maybe, but they were there...Mine came largely from sports."

WITH REDFORD, MORE than instincts were sharpened in sports. Very early on he developed a kind of code, which he adheres to regardless of how popular or unpopular it is — or he is. And it came from sports. "In athletics, right away, I learned that life did not exemplify the Boy Scout maxims. I learned that life wasn't about how you played the game. It was about winning. Winning is what we celebrate.

"We are all given these instructions as kids, these do's and don'ts, which seem to be written as if on tablets. But what they have to say just isn't true. About how goodwill wins the day, and so forth. Maybe, in fact, those things were true then, but not later. Yet most of us operate from these truths, until we learn somewhere that life is not fair..."

The subject of the media rivets Redford. Most of his "personal" movies — "The Candidate," "Electric Horseman" — examine what the media, do to people. Very few showbusiness figures are as lucid on this subject as Redford. What one finds, all too often, is a fear of offending magazine editors or talk-show producers. The daily press is discomforting for most stars, usually because careers depend on the press, and stars are generally overexposed. Redford really, is underexposed. "I did two interviews for 'Ordinary People,' though seven appeared," he said.

For "The Natural," Redford again agreed to two interviews, with the Los Angeles Times and Life magazine. He won't have the cover of Life this time because he preferred not to pose for a photograph. He does have the cover of the current Ladies Home Journal, although the photo is several years old, and the story is less an interview with Redford than a piece about him.

Reminded that Robert De Niro, for one, occasionally takes a role home with him, living a character 24 hours a day, Redford said "For me, carrying over a role into private life would be a little much. There are only different ways of working, and one major way is physical."

REDFORD HAS A real grasp on his image, on why it grew and on how it is maintained. His appeal goes beyond looks, and has more to do with a kind of soothing adolescence, tempered by erotic promise. And Redford is smart about this. He turned down "The Graduate," saying "nobody will believe I am a 21-year old college student..." He turned down "Superman," saying he was uncomfortable in capes. He turned down "Kramer vs. Kramer" because "I was too obvious a choice, and I may have been wrong about that." When he and Paul Newman became "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," they also became the movie/couple of that decade, sex symbols in a time when there were almost none.

The real Redford movies are the ones that address his own obsessions. It was Redford who persuaded Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein to write the book "All the President's Men." Redford wanted to produce, not star, in "President's Men." With "The Candidate," he wanted only to co-star (as the campaign manager, instead of the candidate).

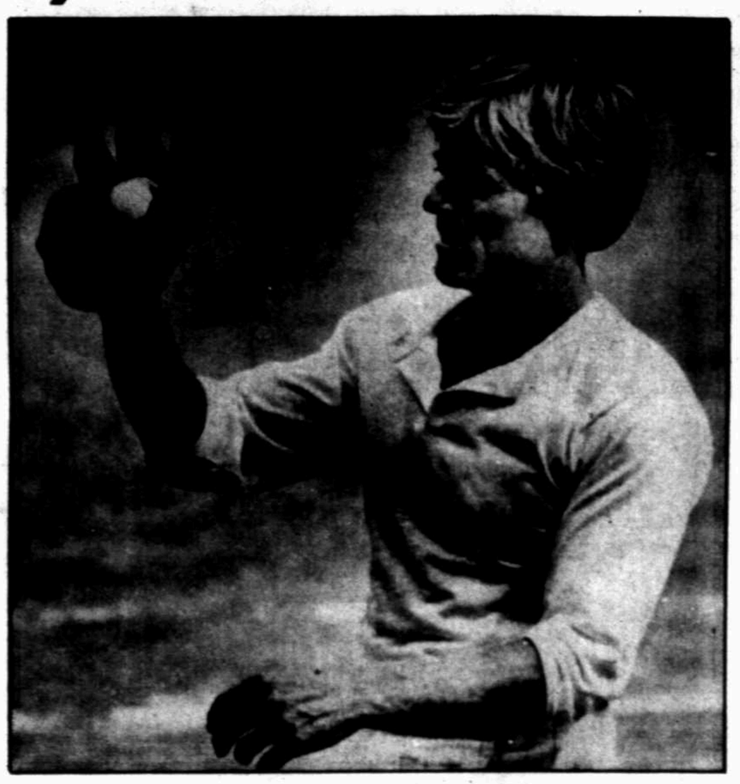

"The Way We Were" may be the quintessential romance movie of the '70s. Why this leading man can't find other leading ladies for movie romances is a real question. "The answer," Redford said, "is that today all barriers to romance are down. So what do you write a love story about? Since 'John and Mary' around 1970, we've had movie romances lodged in psychoanalysis. But 'The Way We Were,' obviously, was set in another time period. What was timeless about it was the subject: two people who try to love each other, and can't."

It was also about a man who tried for success and stumbled. A one-time novelist who turns to writing TV scripts isn't the archetypal Redford hero.

From the beginning, he knew he was not marked for a career in a TV series. Redford said "In 1963, I was offered a lot of money to do a TV series. I had no money, and a young family. I was the breadwinner, and it felt real good to have an offer of security. And I said no. Then they raised the offer to a figure that was ridiculous. To the point where my agent said, 'If you still say no, I don't think we can go on representing you.' I remember now slipping into that zone where you think, 'Gee, I could move my family out of Hollywood...' And then one morning I walked on the beach, one of those walks, and I said to myself, 'No.' I just couldn't imagine living with a TV series. Naturally they came back with even more money. But by then it was easy to say no. Two weeks later I was in Bucks County, Pa., trying out a new comedy for Broadway called 'Barefoot in the Park' with a first-time director named Mike Nichols."

TURNING DOWN TV in favor of Bucks County illustrates how Redford operates: differently. In Paris, at 20, he wore a beret and became such a convincing sidewalk painter that one American tourist snapped 34 photos, until Redford had enough. He pointed to his argyle socks, as if to his American heritage. The embarrassed tourist vanished.

When Redford tells this anecdote, it's with the eye of a painter, or maybe a movie director. That he won an Academy Award for "Ordinary People" is less the point than the fact that the ballplayer from Van Nuys (Calif.) chose as his directorial debut a movie primarily about behavior.

KATE

"I must have seen every child under the age of 10 in the United States. From the first moment I saw Danny, even in the haze of all the other small boys I'd seen, I knew, 'This is the kid.' He was just a kid from Chicago, a very regular kid whose teeth were missing, but there was something especially appealing about him. He's a very nice boy. We became very good friends."

EVEN BEING surrounded by excellent examples of children-filled, happy marriages, Ms. Nelligan allows, doesn't encourage her to enter the marital state — yet.

"I come from a very large family," she says. "I have four sisters and a brother. They all have families and they do it properly, superbly. I don't have to ask how they do this, I can see. They do it with great self-sacrifice, great tolerance, great commitment and great love. And they do it fulltime.

"I see their example and," she adds with a lilting laugh, "it's daunting!"

Ms. Nelligan is not a young woman easily daunted. Life does not lead her about by her perfectly photogenic nose. She leads it. She has always forged fearlessly ahead into the dark unknown as though sporting an invisible, high-powered headbeam to pierce the gloom.

A top student and an ace athlete (track and field and tennis) at St. Martin's Catholic School in Ontario, she found herself, as planned, at 16 at the University of Toronto on a full scholarship.

During her first semester there she attended a rehearsal of a school play. "Except for movie houses, which I haunted as a child, it was the first time I had ever been inside a theater," she recalls.

"I WAS AT school to study English and possibly become a teacher. Watching that rehearsal was like being suddenly born. I impulsively asked to audition. The next day, I was in rehearsal myself, to play Gertrude in 'Hamlet.' I remember feeling that I had reached a safe harbor. For the first time in my life I was at home within my own skin. From that day on I have never felt otherwise."

Ms. Nelligan's next port of call, two years and numerous plays later, was England. With no scholarship now and completely on her own, she managed to put herself through one year at the prestigious Central School of Speech and Drama in London — "working at odd jobs and getting about two hours sleep a night."

Then, she says, "It was clear I was going to have to leave. The tuition was really very high, not to mention having to come up with living expenses. So I went back home. I was determined to get back to England and finish my three-year course, but how? Then I had an idea, an inspiration really. I would solicit funds, ask people to give me the money to complete my training.

"I had a letter from the school in London saying that I showed promise, that I wasn't a hopeless case. So I rented a typewriter and wrote a lot of letters — at least 150 — to everyone I could think of in my home town who had money, and a lot of them there do have it, and were also interested in the theater. Many of them were on the boards or fund-raising committees of various playhouses."

Her father, she recalls, thought she was "crazy — absolutely nuts."

Pere Nelligan warned his imaginative daughter, "Nobody's going to answer you. Nobody is going to give somebody money."

FATHER DOESN'T always know best.

Looking back on her years abroad, the actress says, "I still would not change anything about what I did. I'm not disenchanted with England. In England there's not so much on the line, money-wise and success-wise, so you get a chance to work and learn and grow. For an actor starting out, England is an ideal place. With the BBC, the good repertory companies and all the subsidized theaters in London, you can work fifty weeks a year. I did, and all my friends did.

"In America many actors have a much rougher time. They don't get enough work. They have to do a soap opera to survive, or work in commercials. They really have a horrible time here."

Yet, Ms. Nelligan maintains she made the right move when she decided to live in the United States.

"I'm happier on this side of the ocean," she says. "And more relaxed. I find the Americans have a sense of fun and humor, which I've missed. I find their generosity most appealing. The whole way that people behave toward each other seems natural to me, because it's how I grew up. There are wonderful things about the English, things that I miss very much. But the fact is that I feel more at home here."

IT WAS GRATIFYING to hear Ms. Nelligan say this with such unabashed enthusiasm. For I still recalled the somewhat melancholy note in her voice when we first met and talked, a few years ago, on the set of "Eye of the Needle" in England.

"It's very odd," she said then. "I've lived away from my country for 11 years. I feel like a stranger here in England. It's my firm belief that you can never, ever, be anything but a foreigner in England if you weren't born here. And when I go home to Canada to see my family, I enjoy it a great deal, but I feel like an utter stranger there too. When people refer to me as a Canadian, I say, 'I guess so.' It's not a negation, it's just that I don't think of myself as belonging anywhere."

Now she "belongs" and, along with her extraordinary beauty and forceful talent, Ms. Nelligan's commitment is certain to catapult her to the heights.

"Nothing else makes me as happy as doing what I do for a living," she says. "And I'm the sort of person who needs to be used up. I don't like having anything left over.

"Some people say acting is about pretending. That's utter nonsense. Acting is always about telling the truth. It's telling the truth about emotional feelings to people in a way that they will understand and will reflect upon in their own lives. If you lie in your performance, the audience knows it. They may not know that they know, but somehow they do know.

"They want to love you because, in some truthful way, you make them cry or laugh. And they take to their hearts actors who open up part of their souls to them, actors who tell them the truth."

Ms. Nelligan, brainy, beautiful and blessedly gifted, wants to be taken to those hearts.

That is the truth.

And that is what is going to happen. Starting now.

'Search for Spock' completes the cycle

By BEULAH CASEY

Beulah Casey

"Star Trek III: The Search For Spock," is the most satisfying of the Star Trek movies thus far, remembering what many sequel efforts have long since forgotten — that what happens between the characters is more important than what happens to them.

Leonard Nimoy, known to us all as Mr. Spock, directs this movie and shows a truer understanding than previous directors (Robert Wise for the 1979 "Star Trek: The Motion Picture", and Nicholas Meyer for the 1982 "Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan") of what originally attracted us as TV viewers and drew us to the big screen for more. He returns to the comradeship of the crew of the U.S.S. Enterprise, making sure that everyone gets to display a little humor and a lot of loyalty toward each other.

Granted, we know the mission so well ("To explore strange new worlds, to seek out new life forms and new civilizations, to boldly go where no man has gone before"), that Trekkies everywhere will probably be speaking the dialogue as it comes forth from the characters mouths. But that easy identification is part of the attraction.

DeForest Kelley as "Bones" must complain; James Doohan as "Scotty" must doubt he can restore power to the engines, and then do it anyway; George Takei as "Sulu" and Walter Koenig as "Chekov" must make the helm respond; and Nichelle Nichols as "Uhura" must communicate. That much we know.

As for Admiral Kirk (William Shatner) and Mr. Spock, they must be to outer space what the Lone Ranger and Tonto were to the old west. Blood-brothers, only of a celestial kind.

Yet with all the "givens," the crew of the starship Enterprise has grown with each movie, individually adding complexity to the characters, jointly arriving at the perfect ensemble performance.

Notable cast additions in "Search For Spock" include, Christopher Lloyd (Reverend Jim of TV's "Taxi") as the sinister Klingon Commander; the grand and serious Dame Judith Anderson as a Vulcan high priestess; and Mark Lenard as Spock's Stoic Vulcan father.

Search For Spock" begins where "Wrath of Khan" left off — with the Genesis planet evolving, Mr. Spock put to rest on its surface, and the Enterprise home-bound for repairs. And returning to the original formula, arch-intergalactic-enemies, the Klingons, play hide-and-seek with Federation starships to get the secret of the "Genesis Project."

But what we all want to know — not that Spock reappears, but how — is so logically set forth by Harve Bennett's screenplay, one wonders if Mr. Spock put in his two-cents worth. It's exquisite unraveling will fascinate and hold your attention to the end, not afraid to avoid the pyro-technical abuse of previous "Star Treks."

In fact, there are jokes at the expense of technology in "Search For Spock." When the Enterprise crew dry-docks for repairs, the next space-berth over is occupied by the newest of starship designs, a craft capable of "transwarp." But, the first time out, it sputters to a halt, clanking like a nut down a sink pipe. Or, take the mock-"Star Wars" scene in a bar where "Bones" tries to hire a space scow, and add to that some space expletives used by the crew — and you have a "Star Trek" movie rife with good humor and fun.

"Search For Spock" sums up the Star Trek legend, with no urgency and yet with a surety born from familiarity. That it signs off with "and the adventure continues" suggests a future movie, but what more can be said?

Rated PG, "Search For Spock" opens in black and white, showing the closing scenes from "Star Trek II" and we once again hear the last words of Spock as he says, "The needs of the many outweigh the needs of the one." A box-office epithet? Perhaps.

But in "Search For Spock" Kirk turns the phrase around, suggesting that sometimes the needs of the one outweigh the needs of many. For this "one," "Search For Spock" completes the cycle. Now — it should be allowed to take its place in the space-movie continuum.

Award-winning playwright deaf

WASHINGTON (AP) — Not only is Terrylene Theriot a flashy dancer, but her very first effort as a playwright won first prize in a nationwide competition and received its world premiere at the Kennedy Center recently, starring actor George Segal.

Before all the hard-luck chorus girls and dramatists of this world begin weeping with envy, it must be said that Terrylene, a 17-year-old high school junior, has been deaf since birth.

But her eyes shine with so many bright dreams — and the pluck to make them come true — that her triumph at the Kennedy Center's National Very Special Arts Festival for the handicapped, seems only a foretaste of things to come.

Actually, she says, her words tumbling out excitedly in sign language, "I wanted to be a singer, but I really couldn't do that, so I decided to be a dancer."

One of five children born to a poor couple in Chicago — the entire family is deaf — Terrylene was about 4 when she was struck by the beauty of a woman dancing on television. "I ran and got my mother," she said. "She turned volume up loud and I suddenly realized that music went with it."

She invented dance steps before the mirror in her room, humming her own music in her head. Her parents couldn't afford dancing lessons. She did not attend her first formal dance class until last summer, paid for with money saved from her allowance.

When volume is turned up to high levels, Terrylene is able to pick up music rhythms.

At a news conference opening the four-day arts festival, Terrylene vamped her way through a chorus from "Godspell" with her fellow students from the Model Secondary School for the Deaf, a federally financed high school on the campus of Gallaudet College in Washington.

Two days later, 750 handicapped and non-disabled children and teenagers from every state and several foreign countries entertained audiences in the Kennedy Center with song, dance, drama, mime, handbells and poetry. Demonstration workshops were held by such professionals as actress Gwen Verdon, sculptor Robert Berks, artist Jamie Wyeth and an Alvin Ailey dance troupe.

The festival was sponsored by the National Committee, Arts for the Handicapped, an educational affiliate of the center founded 10 years ago by Jean Kennedy Smith, sister of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

"The arts should be open to all people," Mrs. Smith said in an interview. "This festival gives the handicapped, who have a very debilitating dependence on other people, the feeling they can create something beautiful and worthwhile on their own, which enhances their lives and gives them confidence."

As winner of the festival's young playwrights competition from among 53 entrants nationwide, Terrylene saw her first play, a one-act drama entitled "Imagine," performed on stage by Segal and three other professional actors.

She wrote the play last fall in her dormitory room, drawing on ideas that grew out of her former pen-pal relationship with a Texas prison inmate about twice her age.

"Imagine" is the story of the budding friendship between a prisoner and a deaf girl, his emotional isolation and her lack of confidence, and how they help each other break through their self-imposed barriers.

Two Texans among group of arts scholars

WASHINGTON (AP) — Twenty Presidential Scholars in the Arts, outstanding high school seniors chosen from more than 5,000 applicants in a nationwide talent search, will perform at the Kennedy Center and receive special medallions from President Reagan on June 19-20.

Each of the arts scholars also will receive $4,000 in cash in recognition of their achievements in dance, music, theater, writing and the visual arts. They are among 141 Presidential Scholars chosen by a White House commission under the auspices of the Education Department.

Two were from Texas. They are Desiree Doyen, theater, Carrollton, and Gloria Justen, music, Houston.

The 20 Scholars in the Arts were selected from a group nominated by the National Foundation for Advancement in the Arts, a private, non-profit corporation based in Miami that seeks to encourage young artists.

Reagan will present medallions to each of the 141 Presidential Scholars at the White House on June 19. The next day, the arts scholars will be honored at a luncheon at the Capitol given by the Congressional Arts Caucus,

We have often railed against players using too many conventions. Most conventions add little to the average player's ability. More often they simply sow grounds for confusion. He is an example from rubber bridge. The protagonists have been lost in the sands of time. Suffice it to say that North-South were a pair of experienced players who had a number of gimmicks in their bidding arsenal.

The auction needs considerable explanation. We have seen better jump shifts than North's — we feel one diamond would have been quite adequate — and we don't understand South's failure to show his spade suit at this second turn. No one realized that, when North bid four no trump, he was as high as his partnership ought to go. Then science struck.

Instead of being a natural bid, North's four no trump was Roman Blackwood. Five clubs showed either 0 or 3 aces, and North could not believe that his partner had opened the bidding with an aceless hand — he felt sure his partner had three aces. However, North did not look for a grand slam because if South had three aces in addition to the king-queen of clubs, he would have taken charge.

West led a trump and South, when dummy appeared, was not enthralled with his prospects. However, neither his face nor the tempo of his play revealed his predicament. He won the trump in hand and was careful not to lead another trump — that would enable one of the defenders to signal. Instead, he lead a heart.

West won the aces, and he did not even suspect what was going on. He chose the "safe exit of another trump. Now East got the chance to signal one of his aces, but it was too late. Declarer won the trump in dummy, cashed the king of hearts for a diamond discard and led the king of diamonds for a ruffing finesse. He ruffed away East's ace, and still had a trump entry in dummy to cash the good diamonds, on which he discarded all his spades and so landed his slam!

So the slam was made, and it took real science to get there. Perhaps we've been too harsh on the convention mavens.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. Now that I have seen the movie "Greystoke," I am very interested in the new Tarzan, Christopher Lambert. Please tell me about his background, whether he's married, what his other acting credits are and what are his future plans.

Trina Beiers
Sacramento, Calif.

A. Lambert — pronounced "Lom-bare" in the French style, which he is — spoke French first, although his parents were living in New York. He learned English in boarding school in Switzerland, which accounts for the curiously European accent you heard in the film.

He decided at 12 that he wanted to become an actor, but instead bowed to his father's wishes after graduation and went to work at the London Stock Exchange. Six months later, completely bored, he went to Paris and entered the Conservatoire as a theater student.

Upon completion of the course three years later, he worked in the Paris theater, performing the classics, and got a small part in the film "Le Bar du Telephone."

After two more films, "La Dame du Coeur" and "Legitime Violence," he met "Greystoke" director Hugh Hudson, auditioned for the part with 50 other actors and three months later was given the part. He's following it with the film "Words and Music" currently shooting in Europe, co-starring Catherine Deneuve.

He isn't married and still lives in Europe, half the time in Paris, the other half in London.

Q. My daughter is such a big fan of Jimmy Stewart. Can you tell me how he is and what he's doing?

Mrs. Mel Jones
Midland, Texas

A. He's fine, we hear. He had a problem with his skin last year that was treated, but otherwise is feeling well. He's doing mostly charity work at the moment. "People are always trying to make a deal with him," explains a friend, "but they're usually for properties that he would elevate but that would ruin him. So he's waiting for something good to come along."

He's also, specifically, waiting for a script: He and mutual admirer Carol Burnett have talked about doing a TV movie together, but they're both waiting to see the words before they commit.

Q. In January I saw the movie "Valley Girl" on HBO four times and my sister saw it six. I particularly like Nicholas Cage's performance. What can you tell me about this adorable guy?

C.A.P.

A. He's 20, was raised in Long Beach, Calif., and wanted to become a writer, so while in high school he studied acting because he thought a writer should learn about character development. But, "he was an actor at heart," says an associate, so he switched.

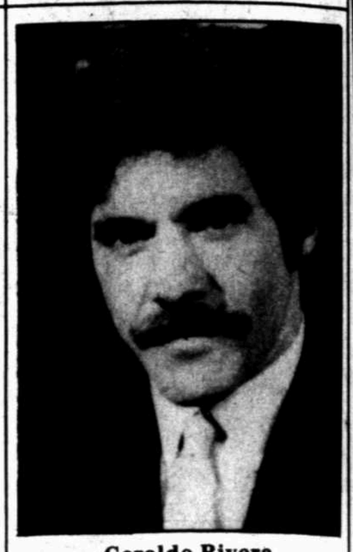

His first film was "Fast Times at Ridgemont High"; then "Valley Girl"; "Rumble Fish," for his uncle, director Francis Coppola; the current "Racing with the Moon"; and the upcoming "Cotton Club," also for Coppola.

Right now, he's filming "Birdy," based on the award-winning novel, for director Alan Parker ("Fame," "Midnight Express") and, justifiably, enjoying his success.

Q. Please tell me what "20/20" reporter Geraldo Rivera's name was before he changed it.

H. Lamber
Camp Hill, Pa.

A. Geraldo Rivera. His father, Al Rivera, was born and raised in Puerto Rico. The confusion stems from his past Anglicization of the name when he was at the University of Arizona — he called himself "Gerry Rivers," as he explains, because everyone was blond and blue-eyed and he was trying to get into a fraternity. But when WABC in New York was looking for a Hispanic reporter, he was proud to resume his ethnic identity.

Geraldo Rivera

Q. I've been trying to obtain information about my favorite rock group, Duran Duran. I'd like to know their full names, birthdays, etc.

Debbie Reynolds
Gary, Ind.
Trina Morehouse
Norwalk, Conn.

A. Here goes: Lead singer Simon Charles Le Bon (called Charly by the rest of the band) was born on October 27, 1958 and grew up in Watford, near London. He went to the same school as Elton John, studied drama at Birmingham University and has artistic interests away from the group. He likes to draw, write, read everything "from science fiction to Shakespeare" and see "good films." He also likes to sail.

Guitarist Andy Taylor was born February 16, 1961 in Cullercoats, near Newcastle, where he now owns a restaurant called "Rio." He lives in a 15th-century cottage in Shropshire with his wife, Tracie, who was formerly the group's hairdresser.

Bassist John Taylor (no relation) is formally named Nigel John Taylor. He was born June 20, 1960 near Birmingham and is the official partygoer of the group, "in charge of nighttime P.R.," according to Andy Taylor. When he isn't going to clubs, he's watching James Bond movies or tooling around in his cars, including the ultimate Bondmobile, a gold Aston Martin.

Drummer Roger Taylor (also no relation) was born April 26, 1960 in Birmingham. When not working, he likes to really relax — to lie in bed and watch TV. Keyboard player Nick Rhodes was born Nicholas John Bates on June 8, 1962 just down the road from John Taylor near Birmingham. His favorite things offstage are taking photographs, playing practical jokes, fine art, strawberries and his cat, Sebastian.

Redford lives by code developed in sports

By PAUL ROSENFIELD
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — He may be the last movie star who still operates this way. No assistants, no entourage. Nobody else is making the decisions. The people in Robert Redford's professional life have been there for years, but he doesn't lean on them.

As Redford entered his Manhattan office he apologized for being late and explained why he had been in three states in the last 36 hours — and why his life is complicated.

The reason was "The Natural," his first film in four years. Days before the first public screening, Redford was in an editing room looking over a last-minute redesign of the movie's opening credits. "The thing is," Redford explained, "that prints of 'The Natural' go to theaters around the country with a trailer attached — and the trailer is for the new Muppets movie. The feeling was, we had better redesign our credits. Otherwise, the shift in tone between the Muppets trailer and our movie would be...."

Redford trailed off; his smile, boyish still at 46, was ironic, recognizing the preposterousness of moviemaking.

In the span of a weekend he had to be in California, Utah, Connecticut and New York (where, except for California, he has homes). "I don't live too much by program," he said, "and it drives my friends crazy."

A SENSE OF comfort extends to his headquarters. There is no outer office, no name on any door and almost no mark of stardom. Furnished with a loveseat and a couple of chairs, the room hardly seems designed for a megastar-director-producer.

It is the size of the office (barely 9 feet by 12) that startles, until one remembers that Redford has 7,000 of the best acres in Utah. When one has that kind of acreage, a small midtown office is perfectly suitable. Redford only hangs his hat here, not his identity.

Redford sat for hours in a straight-backed chair and never flinched from a question. No publicist was present; no prior list of questions was requested; and no subject was barred. No star trips, unless you count tardiness.

Waiting for Redford is instructive; the time is spent going over the questions. One kept surfacing: How can Robert Redford, man of action, downhill racer and mountain climber, be reconciled with Redford the reclusive sketch artist, the eager movie director who storyboarded every shot of his debut film, "Ordinary People"? Is he jock or introvert?

"I'm schizophrenic," he responded. "I'm also Irish."

Redford's father, a former Los Angeles milkman, calls his son "a combination of Tom Swift and Attila the Hun." Paul Newman calls Redford "a barracuda pussycat."

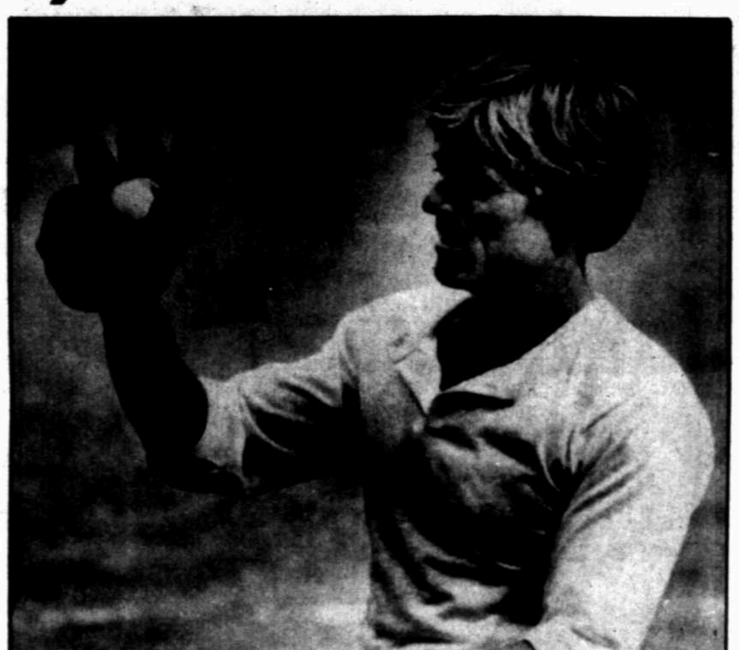

That duality has allowed him to orchestrate a durable star career on his own terms. If Redford disappears from the screen for years, he also returns, usually in the right year, to make the films that address his own personal obsessions: "Downhill Racer," "The Candidate," "All the President's Men."

AGE, AT THIS point, would not seem to be one of Redford's obsessions. And if anybody is wondering how Redford is aging, the answer is that he seems not to be aging.

The issue of age was present in "The Natural." The movie, based on Bernard Malamud's first novel about a promising baseball player of 20 who does not reach his potential until 35, required Redford to play both ages. Ten years ago, he did that in the flashback scenes in "The Way We Were," but 10 years ago is 10 years ago.

"To play 20 now," Redford said, "means showing the innocent part of yourself. I worked from the inside out, and this was a case of getting rid of a lot of things. You have to lose a lot of the emotional weight you carry around. I was never really going to pass for 20 now, but to try means...a lot of help from cinematographer Caleb Deschanel. No, seriously, I think it's your vanity that likes to think you can do it. I believe people should bear aging. Women get a nice look when they start to experience things, and so do men."

What Redford experiences, away from moviemaking, is a "personal design for living that I came upon real early." By that he means a kind of enviable pattern of work: Several years are spent moviemaking and several years are spent not moviemaking.

"...After 'All the President's Men,'" he said, " people thought I was spending those years trying to match that success. I wasn't; I was only trying to recharge — to ride horses and travel and ski — and to follow my natural instincts."

The instincts are well-honed. Redford claimed never to have had, or needed, a role model. "I always had a sense of my own instincts. They were undeveloped, maybe, but they were there...Mine came largely from sports."

WITH REDFORD, MORE than instincts were sharpened in sports. Very early on he developed a kind of code, which he adheres to regardless of how popular or unpopular it is — or he is. And it came from sports. "In athletics, right away, I learned that life did not exemplify the Boy Scout maxims. I learned that life wasn't about how you played the game. It was about winning. Winning is what we celebrate.

"We are all given these instructions as kids, these do's and don'ts, which seem to be written as if on tablets. But what they have to say just isn't true. About how goodwill wins the day, and so forth. Maybe, in fact, those things were true then, but not later. Yet most of us operate from these truths, until we learn somewhere that life is not fair..."

The subject of the media rivets Redford. Most of his "personal" movies — "The Candidate," "Electric Horseman" — examine what the media, do to people. Very few show-business figures are as lucid on this subject as Redford. What one finds, all too often, is a fear of offending magazine editors or talk-show producers. The daily press is discomforting for most stars, usually because careers depend on the press, and stars are generally overexposed. Redford really, is underexposed. "I did two interviews for 'Ordinary People,' though seven appeared," he said.

For "The Natural," Redford again agreed to two interviews, with the Los Angeles Times and Life magazine. He won't have the cover of Life this time because he preferred not to pose for a photograph. He does have the cover of the current Ladies Home Journal, although the photo is several years old, and the story is less an interview with Redford than a piece about him.

Reminded that Robert De Niro, for one, occasionally takes a role home with him, living a character 24 hours a day, Redford said "For me, carrying over a role into private life would be a little much. There are only different ways of working, and one major way is physical."

REDFORD HAS A real grasp on his image, on why it grew and on how it is maintained. His appeal goes beyond looks, and has more to do with a kind of soothing adolescence, tempered by erotic promise. And Redford is smart about this. He turned down "The Graduate," saying "nobody will believe I am a 21-year old college student..." He turned down "Superman," saying he was uncomfortable in capes. He turned down "Kramer vs. Kramer" because "I was too obvious a choice, and I may have been wrong about that." When he and Paul Newman became "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," they also became the movie/couple of that decade, sex symbols in a time when there were almost none.

The real Redford movies are the ones that address his own obsessions. It was Redford who persuaded Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein to write the book "All the President's Men." Redford wanted to produce, not star, in "President's Men." With "The Candidate," he wanted only to co-star (as the campaign manager, instead of the candidate).

"The Way We Were" may be the quintessential romance movie of the '70s. Why this leading man can't find other leading ladies for movie romances is a real question. "The answer," Redford said, "is that today all barriers to romance are down. So what do you write a love story about? Since 'John and Mary' around 1970, we've had movie romances lodged in psychoanalysis. But 'The Way We Were,' obviously, was set in another time period. What was timeless about it was the subject: two people who try to love each other, and can't."

It was also about a man who tried for success and stumbled. A one-time novelist who turns to writing TV scripts isn't the archetypal Redford hero.

From the beginning, he knew he was not marked for a career in a TV series. Redford said "In 1963, I was offered a lot of money to do a TV series. I had no money, and a young family. I was the breadwinner, and it felt real good to have an offer of security. And I said no. Then they raised the offer to a figure that was ridiculous. To the point where my agent said, 'If you still say no, I don't think we can go on representing you.' I remember now slipping into that zone where you think, 'Gee, I could move my family out of Hollywood...' And then one morning I walked on the beach, one of those walks, and I said to myself, 'No.' I just couldn't imagine living with a TV series. Naturally they came back with even more money. But by then it was easy to say no. Two weeks later I was in Bucks County, Pa., trying out a new comedy for Broadway called 'Barefoot in the Park' with a first-time director named Mike Nichols."

TURNING DOWN TV in favor of Bucks County illustrates how Redford operates: differently. In Paris, at 20, he wore a beret and became such a convincing sidewalk painter that one American tourist snapped 34 photos, until Redford had enough. He pointed to his argyle socks, as if to his American heritage. The embarrassed tourist vanished.

When Redford tells this anecdote, it's with the eye of a painter, or maybe a movie director. That he won an Academy Award for "Ordinary People" is less the point than the fact that the ballplayer from Van Nuys (Calif.) chose as his directorial debut a movie primarily about behavior.

"I must have seen every child under the age of 10 in the United States. From the first moment I saw Danny, even in the haze of all the other small boys I'd seen, I knew, 'This is the kid.' He was just a kid from Chicago, a very regular kid whose teeth were missing, but there was something especially appealing about him. He's a very nice boy. We became very good friends."

EVEN BEING surrounded by excellent examples of children-filled, happy marriages, Ms. Nelligan allows, doesn't encourage her to enter the marital state — yet.

"I come from a very large family," she says. "I have four sisters and a brother. They all have families and they do it properly, superbly. I don't have to ask how they do this, I can see. They do it with great self-sacrifice, great tolerance, great commitment and great love. And they do it fulltime.

"I see their example and," she adds with a lilting laugh, "it's daunting!"

Ms. Nelligan is not a young woman easily daunted. Life does not lead her about by her perfectly photogenic nose. She leads it. She has always forged fearlessly ahead into the dark unknown as though sporting an invisible, high-powered headbeam to pierce the gloom.

A top student and an ace athlete (track and field and tennis) at St. Martin's Catholic School in Ontario, she found herself, as planned, at 16 at the University of Toronto on a full scholarship.

During her first semester there she attended a rehearsal of a school play. "Except for movie houses, which I haunted as a child, it was the first time I had ever been inside a theater," she recalls.

"I WAS AT school to study English and possibly become a teacher. Watching that rehearsal was like being suddenly born. I impulsively asked to audition. The next day, I was in rehearsal myself, to play Gertrude in 'Hamlet.' I remember feeling that I had reached a safe harbor. For the first time in my life I was at home within my own skin. From that day on I have never felt otherwise."

Ms. Nelligan's next port of call, two years and numerous plays later, was England. With no scholarship now and completely on her own, she managed to put herself through one year at the prestigious Central School of Speech and Drama in London — "working at odd jobs and getting about two hours sleep a night."

Then, she says, "It was clear I was going to have to leave. The tuition was really very high, not to mention having to come up with living expenses. So I went back home. I was determined to get back to England and finish my three-year course, but how? Then I had an idea, an inspiration really. I would solicit funds, ask people to give me the money to complete my training.

"I had a letter from the school in London saying that I showed promise, that I wasn't a hopeless case. So I rented a typewriter and wrote a lot of letters — at least 150 — to everyone I could think of in my home town who had money, and a lot of them there do have it, and were also interested in the theater. Many of them were on the boards or fund-raising committees of various playhouses."

Her father, she recalls, thought she was "crazy — absolutely nuts."

Pere Nelligan warned his imaginative daughter, "Nobody's going to answer you. Nobody is going to give somebody money."

FATHER DOESN'T always know best.

Looking back on her years abroad, the actress says, "I still would not change anything about what I did. I'm not disenchanted with England. In England there's not so much on the line, money-wise and success-wise, so you get a chance to work and learn and grow. For an actor starting out, England is an ideal place. With the BBC, the good repertory companies and all the subsidized theaters in London, you can work fifty weeks a year. I did, and all my friends did.

"In America many actors have a much rougher time. They don't get enough work. They have to do a soap opera to survive, or work in commercials. They really have a horrible time here."

Yet, Ms. Nelligan maintains she made the right move when she decided to live in the United States.

"I'm happier on this side of the ocean," she says. "And more relaxed. I find the Americans have a sense of fun and humor, which I've missed. I find their generosity most appealing. The whole way that people behave toward each other seems natural to me, because it's how I grew up. There are wonderful things about the English, things that I miss very much. But the fact is that I feel more at home here."

IT WAS GRATIFYING to hear Ms. Nelligan say this with such unabashed enthusiasm. For I still recalled the somewhat melancholy note in her voice when we first met and talked, a few years ago, on the set of "Eye of the Needle" in England.

"It's very odd," she said then. "I've lived away from my country for 11 years. I feel like a stranger here in England. It's my firm belief that you can never, ever, be anything but a foreigner in England if you weren't born here. And when I go home to Canada to see my family, I enjoy it a great deal, but I feel like an utter stranger there too. When people refer to me as a Canadian, I say, 'I guess so.' It's not a negation, it's just that I don't think of myself as belonging anywhere."

Now she "belongs" and, along with her extraordinary beauty and forceful talent, Ms. Nelligan's commitment is certain to catapult her to the heights.

"Nothing else makes me as happy as doing what I do for a living," she says. "And I'm the sort of person who needs to be used up. I don't like having anything left over.

"Some people say acting is about pretending. That's utter nonsense. Acting is always about telling the truth. It's telling the truth about emotional feelings to people in a way that they will understand and will reflect upon in their own lives. If you lie in your performance, the audience knows it. They may not know that they know, but somehow they do know.

"They want to love you because, in some truthful way, you make them cry or laugh. And they take to their hearts actors who open up part of their souls to them, actors who tell them the truth."

Ms. Nelligan, brainy, beautiful and blessedly gifted, wants to be taken to those hearts.

That is the truth.

And that is what is going to happen. Starting now.

'Search for Spock' completes the cycle

By BEULAH CASEY

Beulah Casey

"Star Trek III: The Search For Spock," is the most satisfying of the Star Trek movies thus far, remembering what many sequel efforts have long since forgotten — that what happens between the characters is more important than what happens to them.

Leonard Nimoy, known to us all as Mr. Spock, directs this movie and shows a truer understanding than previous directors (Robert Wise for the 1979 "Star Trek: The Motion Picture", and Nicholas Meyer for the 1982 "Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan") of what originally attracted us as TV viewers and drew us to the big screen for more. He returns to the comradeship of the crew of the U.S.S. Enterprise, making sure that everyone gets to display a little humor and a lot of loyalty toward each other.

Granted, we know the mission so well ("To explore strange new worlds, to seek out new life forms and new civilizations, to boldly go where no man has gone before"), that Trekkies everywhere will probably be speaking the dialogue as it comes forth from the characters mouths. But that easy identification is part of the attraction.

DeForest Kelley as "Bones" must complain; James Doohan as "Scotty" must doubt he can restore power to the engines, and then do it anyway; George Takei as "Sulu" and Walter Koenig as "Chekov" must make the helm respond; and Nichelle Nichols as "Uhura" must communicate. That much we know.

As for Admiral Kirk (William Shatner) and Mr. Spock, they must be to outer space what the Lone Ranger and Tonto were to the old west. Blood-brothers, only of a celestial kind.

Yet with all the "givens," the crew of the starship Enterprise has grown with each movie, individually adding complexity to the characters, jointly arriving at the perfect ensemble performance.

Notable cast additions in "Search For Spock" include, Christopher Lloyd (Reverend Jim of TV's "Taxi") as the sinister Klingon Commander; the grand and serious Dame Judith Anderson as a Vulcan high priestess; and Mark Lenard as Spock's Stoic Vulcan father.

Search For Spock" begins where "Wrath of Khan" left off — with the Genesis planet evolving, Mr. Spock put to rest on its surface, and the Enterprise home-bound for repairs. And returning to the original formula, arch-intergalactic-enemies, the Klingons, play hide-and-seek with Federation starships to get the secret of the "Genesis Project."

But what we all want to know — not that Spock reappears, but how — is so logically set forth by Harve Bennett's screenplay, one wonders if Mr. Spock put in his two-cents worth. It's exquisite unraveling will fascinate and hold your attention to the end, not afraid to avoid the pyro-technical abuse of previous "Star Treks."

In fact, there are jokes at the expense of technology in "Search For Spock." When the Enterprise crew dry-docks for repairs, the next space-berth over is occupied by the newest of starship designs, a craft capable of "transwarp." But, the first time out, it sputters to a halt, clanking like a nut down a sink pipe. Or, take the mock-"Star Wars" scene in a bar where "Bones" tries to hire a space scow, and add to that some space expletives used by the crew — and you have a "Star Trek" movie rife with good humor and fun.

"Search For Spock" sums up the Star Trek legend, with no urgency and yet with a surety born from familiarity. That it signs off with "and the adventure continues" suggests a future movie, but what more can be said?

Rated PG, "Search For Spock" opens in black and white, showing the closing scenes from "Star Trek II" and we once again hear the last words of Spock as he says, "The needs of the many outweigh the needs of the one." A box-office epithet? Perhaps.

But in "Search For Spock" Kirk turns the phrase around, suggesting that sometimes the needs of the one outweigh the needs of many. For this "one," "Search For Spock" completes the cycle. Now — it should be allowed to take its place in the space-movie continuum.

Award-winning playwright deaf

WASHINGTON (AP) — Not only is Terrylene Theriot a flashy dancer, but her very first effort as a playwright won first prize in a nationwide competition and received its world premiere at the Kennedy Center recently, starring actor George Segal.

Before all the hard-luck chorus girls and dramatists of this world begin weeping with envy, it must be said that Terrylene, a 17-year-old high school junior, has been deaf since birth.

But her eyes shine with so many bright dreams — and the pluck to make them come true — that her triumph at the Kennedy Center's National Very Special Arts Festival for the handicapped, seems only a foretaste of things to come.

Actually, she says, her words tumbling out excitedly in sign language, "I wanted to be a singer, but I really couldn't do that, so I decided to be a dancer."

One of five children born to a poor couple in Chicago — the entire family is deaf — Terrylene was about 4 when she was struck by the beauty of a woman dancing on television. "I ran and got my mother," she said. "She turned volume up loud and I suddenly realized that music went with it."

She invented dance steps before the mirror in her room, humming her own music in her head. Her parents couldn't afford dancing lessons. She did not attend her first formal dance class until last summer, paid for with money saved from her allowance.

When volume is turned up to high levels, Terrylene is able to pick up music rhythms.

At a news conference opening the four-day arts festival, Terrylene vamped her way through a chorus from "Godspell" with her fellow students from the Model Secondary School for the Deaf, a federally financed high school on the campus of Gallaudet College in Washington.

Two days later, 750 handicapped and non-disabled children and teenagers from every state and several foreign countries entertained audiences in the Kennedy Center with song, dance, drama, mime, handbells and poetry. Demonstration workshops were held by such professionals as actress Gwen Verdon, sculptor Robert Berks, artist Jamie Wyeth and an Alvin Ailey dance troupe.

The festival was sponsored by the National Committee, Arts for the Handicapped, an educational affiliate of the center founded 10 years ago by Jean Kennedy Smith, sister of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

"The arts should be open to all people," Mrs. Smith said in an interview. "This festival gives the handicapped, who have a very debilitating dependence on other people, the feeling they can create something beautiful and worthwhile on their own, which enhances their lives and gives them confidence."

As winner of the festival's young playwrights competition from among 53 entrants nationwide, Terrylene saw her first play, a one-act drama entitled "Imagine," performed on stage by Segal and three other professional actors.

She wrote the play last fall in her dormitory room, drawing on ideas that grew out of her former pen-pal relationship with a Texas prison inmate about twice her age.

"Imagine" is the story of the budding friendship between a prisoner and a deaf girl, his emotional isolation and her lack of confidence, and how they help each other break through their self-imposed barriers.

Two Texans among group of arts scholars

WASHINGTON (AP) — Twenty Presidential Scholars in the Arts, outstanding high school seniors chosen from more than 5,000 applicants in a nationwide talent search, will perform at the Kennedy Center and receive special medallions from President Reagan on June 19-20.

Each of the arts scholars also will receive $4,000 in cash in recognition of their achievements in dance, music, theater, writing and the visual arts. They are among 141 Presidential Scholars chosen by a White House commission under the auspices of the Education Department.

Two were from Texas. They are Desiree Doyen, theater, Carrollton, and Gloria Justen, music, Houston.

The 20 Scholars in the Arts were selected from a group nominated by the National Foundation for Advancement in the Arts, a private, non-profit corporation based in Miami that seeks to encourage young artists.

Reagan will present medallions to each of the 141 Presidential Scholars at the White House on June 19. The next day, the arts scholars will be honored at a luncheon at the Capitol given by the Congressional Arts Caucus,

We have often railed against players using too many conventions. Most conventions add little to the average player's ability. More often they simply sow grounds for confusion. He is an example from rubber bridge. The protagonists have been lost in the sands of time. Suffice it to say that North-South were a pair of experienced players who had a number of gimmicks in their bidding arsenal.

The auction needs considerable explanation. We have seen better jump shifts than North's — we feel one diamond would have been quite adequate — and we don't understand South's failure to show his spade suit at this second turn. No one realized that, when North bid four no trump, he was as high as his partnership ought to go. Then science struck.

Instead of being a natural bid, North's four no trump was Roman Blackwood. Five clubs showed either 0 or 3 aces, and North could not believe that his partner had opened the bidding with an aceless hand — he felt sure his partner had three aces. However, North did not look for a grand slam because if South had three aces in addition to the king-queen of clubs, he would have taken charge.

West led a trump and South, when dummy appeared, was not enthralled with his prospects. However, neither his face nor the tempo of his play revealed his predicament. He won the trump in hand and was careful not to lead another trump — that would enable one of the defenders to signal. Instead, he lead a heart.

West won the aces, and he did not even suspect what was going on. He chose the "safe exit of another trump. Now East got the chance to signal one of his aces, but it was too late. Declarer won the trump in dummy, cashed the king of hearts for a diamond discard and led the king of diamonds for a ruffing finesse. He ruffed away East's ace, and still had a trump entry in dummy to cash the good diamonds, on which he discarded all his spades and so landed his slam!

So the slam was made, and it took real science to get there. Perhaps we've been too harsh on the convention mavens.

'Rascality on the Rig' 1984 Summer Mummers

"Rascality on the Rig" or "Oil's Well That Ends Well" will be the 1984 Summer Mummers offering for the enrichment and edification of West Texas audiences.

Performances are scheduled every Thursday, Friday and Saturday from June 29 through Sept. 1. Now in its 36th season, the Midland Summer Mummers returns to a play that has delighted audiences on three past occasions.

The plot focuses on the efforts of one Terrence Trueblue, a young petroleum engineer who is everything a hero should be, to clear his father's name which was blackened by the evil doings of Lester Leasehold, who is naturally everything a villain should be.

The two come face to face when both attempt to win the heart of beautiful Patience Plugback, the heroine who is, of course, everything a herione should be.

This year's production is under the direction of Midland Community Theatre's executive director, D. Matthew Bachmann, who leads the valient group of thespians to success or disaster. Performing in this year's summer madness are J. Malin Craig and R.S. Tilley as truthful Terrence; D. Wayne Ward and M.B. Trost as learing Lester; and Mlls. P. Parker and J. McElligott as pretty Patience.

Ms. S.S. Mogford and Mlle. M.G. Gibson return in the role of guardian of the heroine, Peaches. Slide-rule Simpson, trusted friend of the hero, is played by J. Marc Coffer and C. Galloway. The role of Odessa Delilah, the temptress of the play, will be filled by Mme. S. Grayson Hitchcock and Mlle. M.S. Schaller.

Others in the company are J. Newkumet, Curt Hadaway, W. Wilson, D. Hidinger, D. Garmeson, F. Wagoner, S. Lamm, P. Shaw, J. Judah, S. Voltz, T. Rosborough and C. Beare.

The melodrama will be followed by an entertainment of olio performers.

Box office opens Monday. This year, in order to alleviate confusion at the box office and in the minds of the patrons, the charge for a table reservation has been eliminated. This cost has now been included in the ticket price. Tickets at the large tables in front of the stage are $8, while the orchestra and lower balcony are $6.50. Tickets in the rear balcony are $5.

All tickets must be paid for within 48 hours of making reservations. Mail orders need to be accompanied by payment.

For more information call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

Traveling exhibit takes viewers through process of book making

Books are more than words on a page or the personal thoughts of an author. They are born of the toil, frustration and inspiration of many people other than the writer.

"The Making of a Book," a traveling exhibit designed by The Institute of Texan Cultures at San Antonio, takes viewers through the labors of book making. This exhibit is now on view at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, 1805 W. Indiana Ave., Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. through June 30.

Originally created as an element in The Institute's 1970 exhibit of printer Carl Hertzog's work, the exhibit centers around the process involved in the production of one of Hertzog's books. The material was drawn from the printer's scrapbooks and correspondences.

"The idea is to show the layman all the steps involved in making a book from the author's conception to the successful marketing," says Al Lowman, exhibit originator and Institute researcher.

The free standing, five-panel traveling exhibit contains artifacts, illustrations and text that show the different steps in making a book — research, illustration, printing and binding.

But, the book and the show don't stop with the binding process. As Hertzog said, "A book is not a success until it is paid for." The final panels include remarks on advertizing, design of the dust cover, advance copies to book reviewers and other publicity tools.

For 50 years, French-born Hertzog has striven to have printing ranked with other, more traditional arts. While in his early 20s, he took up residence in El Paso, where he worked as a printer. It was there he created his reputation as a book designer and printer.

Artists study at Tuscon workshop

Local artists Margaret Marcum and Lyndy Benson have completed a week of study at the Cowboy Artists of America Museum, Kerrville. The workshop was an intense week of work with artist Kenneth Riley of Tuscon, Ariz.

It was attended by 20 artists from four states.

This was the third art workshop conducted at the Museum by members of the Cowboy Artists of America. This educational program offered by the Museum began in November 1983. Its purpose is to reach younger serious art students who desire a career in fine art. The artist instructors receive no remuneration for teaching and leading these workshops.

Future workshops to be held in 1984 will be conducted by Joe Beeler of Sedona, Ariz., and current president of CAA; and William Moyers of Albuquerque, N.M. Artists interested in attending may contact the Museum in Kerrville for an application. Classes are limited to 20.

The Cowboy Artists of America Museum is dedicated to the works of a single group of living artists. It opened in April, 1983, and over 40,000 people from all the states and 48 foreign countries have visited the museum.

Auditions set for Sul Ross theater

ALPINE — The Sul Ross State University Summer Theatre of the Big Bend has set auditions for its summer productions for 7 p.m. June 5-6 in the Studio Theatre in the Fine Arts Building.

Parts are available for all ages, and anyone is invited to audition. The musical will be "Guys and Dolls." Two other shows will be chosen.

The summer theater will open the three productions July 6 in the Kokernot Outdoor Theatre.

Actress overhears nomination

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Rhetta Hughes found out about her Tony Award nomination from strangers a week after the prestigious theater honors were announced.

She was in a Chicago restaurant and said she overheard customers at a nearby table discussing the Tonys.

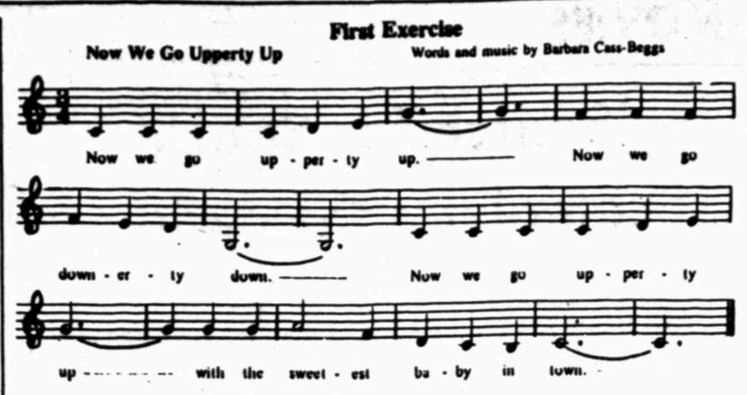

"They were upset that Dustin Hoffman wasn't nominated for 'Death of a Salesman,' and started talking about all the people they didn't know, like this Rhetta Hughes person," she said. "So I rushed over to their table and asked them, 'What did you say?' "

Miss Hughes, who was nominated for her role of a minister in "Amen Corner," rushed back to New York where she found a string of congratulations on her telephone recording machine.

'M*A*S*H' products to hit stores

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The popularity of the old "M*A*S*H" series apparently has not waned despite its absence from television. New "M*A*S*H" merchandise —bathing suits, towels and jeans — will hit the market this summer.

The new "M*A*S*H" products will be released through such stores as Sears, K-Mart and J.C. Penney and in specialty shops.

Music beneficial for babies, says music teacher

By MARY ANN SIMPKINS
King Features Syndicate

Those lullabies you've been singing or humming to your baby are important. The sooner a child makes contact with music, the better, according to Barbara Cass-Beggs. Children as young as 3 months old enroll in her classes, although the majority begin at 5 and 6 months.

A graduate of the Royal School of Music in London, a noted educator and author of numerous books on music, Ms. Cass-Beggs originally taught 2- to 6-year-olds. Her program, "Listen, Like, Learn," is given in four Canadian cities.

But some mothers persuaded her to start musical training for younger children. The research Ms. Cass-Beggs has collected and observations from her own classes has turned her into a firm believer in the benefits of music for babies.

For instance, singing to babies helps their speech. Besides listening when you sing or when you talk, your child also watches your face and lips. This triggers their interest in speaking.

Speech therapists stress the necessity of communicating with children. Ms. Cass-Beggs says, "The more you sing to a child and get them to sing with you, the less chance of speech problems occurring."

Additionally, music releases emotions. A tense baby learns to relax when you sing a lullaby. Older ones can stamp their feet or pound a drum if they're angry or frustrated. On the other hand, a cheerful melody makes them happy.

Security is another spin-off from music. You are re-creating the sound and movement baby was accustomed to in the womb. After the first six months the fetus hears and feels everything.

Any music annoying to the mother also disturbs the fetus. Look around you at a concert. Often you'll see pregnant women walking out when energetic pieces are played. The bouncing fetus forces them to leave.

According to Dr. A.A. Tomatis of France, who spoke at the First International Congress on Pre- and Peri-Natal Psychology held July 1983 in Toronto, the ears and hearing are among the first parts of the body to develop in the womb. By birth, they're fully formed.

However, as people age, the bombardment of sound and noise lessens their hearing ability. Our most acute hearing level ranges from birth to 4 years old, which is the reason why children learn more in those years than between 4 and 18.

Babies' intellectual development parallels their physical growth. Moving their heads, arms, bodies and feet to music strengthens muscles. Even with a newborn, Ms. Cass-Beggs suggests exercising them.

In the class I visited, filled with 11- to 14-month-olds, mothers and babies sat in a circle singing rhythmic verses, complete with actions. Fingers wiggled, heads nodded, bodies fell, feet hit the floor and mothers bounced their babies; all to a variety of melodies, including old standbys such as "Ring-around-the-Rosy."

When Ms. Cass-Beggs handed out little bells on a stick and rattles, they were immediately stuffed into mouths. After this taste test they enthusiastically rang them. These instruments teach coordination.

Ms. Cass-Beggs says, "At the first class the baby may have trouble holding the rattle and will probably drop it. By the second class he is not only holding the rattle but can shake it. At the third class he is beginning to shake it in the pattern of the melody."

These toys also stimulate a child's listening ability. Ms. Cass-Beggs stopped the bell-ringing, telling the children to listen. Everyone immediately quietened. For five seconds the babies listened and watched, concentrating on her as she sang and shook her bells. Afterwards, everyone joined in.

In one song, the babies shook their rattles over their heads then lowered them close to the floor, all the time singing about shaking high and shaking low. Other concepts children can learn from songs include big and small, hard and soft, numbers, how to put on a coat and the proper order for dressing.

Ms. Cass-Beggs moves quickly from one activity to another before any child howls from boredom. The intense level of the sessions exhausts them after 45 minutes; time for juice and cookies.

Ms. Cass-Beggs thinks parents can accomplish the same results by themselves. "If a mother sings to her baby at home, that's fine. She probably doesn't need a group," she says. However, she's found many have forgotten the nursery songs, so a group encourages them.

Others complain about their poor singing voices. Nevertheless, children prefer songs sung by their parents. Babies recognize voices. At 24 days old they can discriminate changes in rhythm. At 1 month they can distinguish family members by their voices.

Their sensitivity to sound can be used to advantage. If your baby hates diaper changing, sing during that time. While you baby watches and listens to you, he forgets what's happening down below.

By the time you're finished, the baby will be so surprised he'll have forgotten to cry. Whoosh him in and out of the bath with a song. Sing about toes, fingers and so on while you're drying him.

At night fathers can participate with the song, "Dance to Your Daddy." This piece is meant for evenings when an overactive child needs to be tired out before his nightly lullaby.

To relieve your voice, play some records. A soothing melody calms children during nap time. Very young infants enjoy pure music such as Beethoven's "Festival of Hits," "The Trout Quintet" by Schubert or a lively Mozart. Whatever you play, it should have a definite rhythm, strong melody and repetition.

Ms. Cass-Beggs often plays fugues and canons. She recommends "Le Canon de Pachelbel" by Maurice Andre. Avoid operas. Children prefer low, comfortable voices similar to their own. (They sing very low, below middle C.) A soft, pleasant man's voice appeals to them.

Although singing to babies is preferable to playing records, include some type of music in your daily routine. It will result in a happier and healthier baby. But remember children, like adults, also need quiet times.

Psychologist compares fairy tales, myths

By JOHN W. DEATS

So-called "fairly tales" were read to many of us when we were children, then put away and forgotten until we had children, and then grandchildren of our own. But according to Dr. Bruno Bettelheim, a world-renowned child psychologist and psychiatrist, the typical fairy tale is an essential element in helping children to externalize their special fears and anxieties. Speaking to children on the subconscious as well as conscious levels, fairy tales aid the child in setting positive moral values, and to face the challenges of growing up with greater confidence based on self-knowledge.

In Bettelheim's landmark and highly readable book, THE USES OF ENCHANTMENT, he compares the fairy tale to the myth and to the fable, noting important differences. For instance, practically all fairy tales end on a positive note, compared to the tragic element in many myths. The psychologist explains that the child should be read stories in which the hero, or heroine, works things out to a satisfactory conclusion. As the child matures, he can better deal with stories which mirror the real world. As Bettelheim states, "the fairy tale proceeds in a manner which conforms to the way a child thinks and experiences the world; this is why the fairy tale is so convincing to him."

Adults are sometimes surprised at how enjoyable the old stories are when they rediscover them. Nancy Larrick's A PARENT'S GUIDE TO CHILDREN'S READING has a fine list of collections of fairy and folk tales, both old and contemporary. She emphasizes the value of reading these tales to children for building vocabulary and that "the colorful language in stories too difficult for him will remind him of the treasures ahead." Another excellent book for adults is Roger Sale's FAIRY TALES AND AFTER: FROM SNOW WHITE TO E.B. WHITE. Unlike Bettelheim, Sales stresses the delight which adults can find in discovering anew childrens' literature, including fairy tales and works by Lewis Carroll, Beatrix Potter, Kenneth Grahame, Rudyard Kipling, and L. Frank Baum.

The library is again sponsoring a Summer Reading Program for children through junior high school, in cooperation with the Texas State library. This year's theme is "Magical Mysteries" and children are encouraged to read books of fable, fantasy, and folklore. Bookmarks, reading logs, and games will be provided. Children who read 15 or more books through the end of July will receive a certificate and a T-shirt transfer of a unicorn, courtesy of the Friends of the Library.

For those adults who wish to discover the realm of folk and fairy tales for themselves, here is a list of unusual and outstanding collections.

RARE TREASURES FROM GRIMM, translated by Ralph Manheim, illustrated by Erik Blegvad, collects 15 little-known tales of the 200 tales by the Brothers Grimm, including a haunting variation on the Cinderella story, "Thousand-furs."

TREE AND LEAF, by J.R.R. Tolkien, includes "Leaf by Niggle," a tale which illustrates the ideas presented in the extended essay, "On Fairy-stories."

IRISH FOLK AND FAIRY TALES, edited by Sean Kelly, covers a wealth of stories on fairies, witches, leprechauns, giants, mermaids, and kings.

ITALIAN FOLKTALES, by Italo Calvino, a highly praised work by the noted Italian novelist, attempts "the presentation of every type of folktale and the representation of all regions of Italy."

IN THE SUICIDE MOUNTAINS, by John Gardner, a most unusual tale by the contemporary author of OCTOBER LIGHT, ON MORAL FICTION, and many others. Newsweek magazine describes Gardner as "a writer who uses old formulas in a new way to demonstrate timeless truths."

Spouse becoming disabled creates stressful situation for caretaker

By CAROLYN KOTT WASHBURNE
King Feautures Syndicate

"It was the most frightening thing I had ever heard," Shirley says. "When my husband was ready to come home from the rehabilitation center after his stroke, the nurse said, 'He can never again be left alone.' I hated her for saying that."

Shirley is one of thousands of older women in the United States who is caring for a disabled husband. For some women, those whose husbands experience the slow deterioration of Parkinson's disease or Alzheimer's disease or multiple sclerosis, the caretaking burden developed gradually.

Sometimes the changes are so subtle that neither the patient nor his caretaker is aware of the seriousness of the disability. "My daughter came to visit and was shocked at how forgetful George was, at his inability to follow simple instructions," says Pauline, whose husband has Alzheimer's disease. "I had just gotten used to it."

For other women, like Shirley, the change was dramatic. On Christmas Eve 1977 her husband, Roland, suffered heart failure on an airplane just before takeoff from Chicago's O'Hare airport.

THE IMMEDIATE availability of a paramedic team (O'Hare has two mobile units) saved his life, but two days later while recovering in an intensive care unit, he had a stroke which left him paralyzed on the left side and barely able to speak.

Shirley's husband is one of the many people for whom recent advances in life-saving medical care have been a mixed blessing: Although his life was prolonged, the resulting disability has diminished the quality of his life and placed a tremendous burden on his wife.

An estimated 32.3 million Americans (14 percent of the population) are disabled to some degree, and while persons in all age groups are affected, there are proportionately more disabled among the elderly.

Wives, of course, become disabled as well as husbands, and many men, some of whom have never washed a dish or vacuumed a floor, become devoted caretakers.

"Men tend to be good case managers," says Miriam Galper, clinical supervisor of the National Long-Term Care Demonstration Project at the Temple University Institute on Aging in Philadelphia. "They know how to get outside help when they need it."

BUT THE PROBLEM of caring for a disabled spouse is more likely to be a woman's problem. Women tend to marry older men, women live longer (average life expectancy is 77 years for women, 69 years for men) and, on the average, women are healthier. And caretaking is a role women are used to.

Whether the disability occurs gradually or suddenly, the lives of the couple must change dramatically. Homes of the physically disabled need to be adapted with ramps for wheelchairs, special toilet and bathing facilities and modified cooking equipment.

The homes of those with mental disabilities, especially short-term memory loss, turn into battle zones. Beds must be fitted with restraints so the patient won't fall out, cabinets locked and doors secured with deadbolt locks to prevent straying.

More difficult than the physical adjustments are the emotional ones. Plans for the future evaporate. "My husband and I worked for years, saving for our retirement," says one woman. "We planned to travel, to take it easy, and now we can't."

Activities which couples enjoyed together must be modified or abandoned. Says one woman whose husband has Parkinson's disease: "Bob and I used to love to eat in restaurants, but we finally stopped. He'd shake so much that he'd spill food all over the place. It was just too humiliating for him."

Women whose husbands experience mental deterioration face a strange kind of loss. "The body is there, but the mind is gone," says the wife of an Alzheimer's victim. "There is no companionship."

THE ACCEPTANCE OF a disability can be difficult for the man who must cope with fears about his health and also adjust to a loss of power and control. "Myron and I stopped going out because he didn't enjoy having me drive the car," says Betty, whose husband had a heart condition and Parkinson's.

Pearl, also the wife of a Parkinson's victim, finally got twin beds because her husband's jerking kept her from getting any sleep. "I had to do it," she says. "But it felt terrible."

In addition to the heartbreak of watching her husband suffer, the wife of a disabled man must also cope with some late-in-life role changes herself.

She may have to admit that she and her husband are no longer partners but that she has become more like his mother or sister. "This can be a real strain if the woman is used to seeing her husband as the one in charge, the one who took care of everything," says Ms. Galper.

One of the greatest stresses is adjusting to the loss of freedom and privacy, since many disabled men can only be left alone for short periods, if at all. Men with physical limitations may need assistance with eating, dressing and going to the toilet.

ONE WIFE OF A stroke victim decided she could no longer leave her husband alone when she went out to do errands and he fell trying to transfer from the bed to his wheelchair. He lay on the floor, struggling to get up, until she returned three hours later.

Men with mental disabilities, such as the disorientation and memory loss which accompany Alzheimer's disease, cannot be left alone because of the potential harm to themselves and to property. "I never knew what Roy would do when I was away," says one woman. "One time he flushed a $1,000 denture down the toilet. I retrieved it, but it cost me $250 for the plumber."

Others have been known to leave a flame burning on the stove, to take apart electrical appliances, and to wander down the street in their pajamas, lost and confused.

And so the caretaking wives, trying valiantly to cope and not acknowledging how restricted their own lives have become, get trapped. Because there is not the gradual movement toward independence as there is for caretakers of young children, the women can be immobilized by what appears to be years of travail stretching ahead, with no relief in sight. One wife of a multiple sclerosis victim hadn't been to a dentist in three years.

Another, whose husband has Alzheimer's disease, could not get more than two hours' continuous sleep a night because her husband kept waking and calling out to her, confused about where he was.

The disabled men often become emotionally dependent on their wives, frightened of being left alone or in anyone else's care. The women feel they are always on call, always being "tailed."

IT IS UNDERSTANDABLE, then, when many caretaking wives develop their own emotional problems. Some are depressed, mourning the loss of hopes and plans. Some feel pity for their husbands and despair for themselves. Some secretly wish their husbands would die but then feel guilty about their wishes.

One recent research study suggests that the level of stress for caretakers of those with memory difficulties is much higher than for the caretakers of those with mobility difficulties.

Kirk Alley, working with the Committee on Human Development at the University of Chicago, has found in his study of caretakers that the major stress arises not primarily from the tasks of caretaking but from the futility of trying to connect with someone whose short-term memory is impaired.

"All human interaction is based on memory," he says. "And we take a certain level of it for granted. It's very difficult to interact with someone who can't follow simple instructions or remember where he is."

Other research indicates that stress results not so much from the severity of the disability as from the lack of outside supports for the caretaker.

GERONTALOGICAL counselors agree that it is essential for caregivers to get relief, either by having someone come to the home or, if possible, taking the disabled person to a respite care center during the day.

"The tendency to become a martyr is built in and must be fought against," says Ms. Galper. "Overcome your pride — open up to your children, to neighbors, to people from your church or synagogue."

Carole Gold, psychiatric social worker at the Late Life Counseling Center at Mt. Sinai Hospital in Milwaukee has found that those women who don't get relief tend to develop more physical and emotional problems than those who do. "Some end up taking out their resentment on the person they're caring for," she says.

Ellen Browne, director of Older Adult Services for the Parkside Human Services Corporation in Des Plaines, Ill., adds, "Women are understandably concerned that no one can take as good care of their husbands as they can. But they sometimes overcompensate, doing things for the disabled person that he could do for himself."

The wife of an Alzheimer's patient describes her local adult center as her "salvation." "I feel no guilt sending Roy there because I'm doing the best I can for him when he's at home, but I need my three days for myself."

SHE DOES ERRANDS, visits friends and enjoys peace of mind, knowing that her husband is well-supervised at the center rather than getting into "mischief" at home. Center staff can also help with rehabilitation exercises, which may be too strenuous for the caretaking wife.

Ms. Browne thinks that respite care can be beneficial for the disabled as well. Although at first most participants resist leaving the security of their homes to interact with strangers, eventually they come to feel welcome and accepted.

Ms. Browne has observed that participants with mental disabilities become more alert to their surroundings and less volatile, and participants with physical disabilities tend not to feel as sorry for themselves when they compare notes with others.

Some respite care centers offer support groups where the families of participants can share their struggles with people who truly understand. Most support groups also spend time on problem solving, such as how to cope with unreliable sitters or how to get freed up enough just to attend the support group.

Unfortunately, most communities do not have the services which enable caregivers to take a break: respite care centers (with specialized transportation to get participants there and back), home health aides, skilled in-home nursing care, companion services, delivered meals and chore services.

Book deals with stress from women's view

A Review

"The Female Stress Syndrome: How to Recognize and Live With It," by Georgia Witkin-Lanoil Ph.D.; Newmarket Press; 224 pages; $14.95.

By CAROL SOTTOLI
Copley News Service

Love was the theme of the '60s. Self-actualization was big in the '70s. Now stress seems to be well on its way to becoming the watchword of the '80s.

Georgia Witkin-Lanoil's "The Female Stress Syndrome" approaches stress from a feminist perspective, casting a slightly different light over this overworked topic.

Women, she believes, are particularly prone to the effects of stress because of their unique physiology and the responsibilities society heaps upon them.

The author tries to convince women that they shouldn't feel guilty for not being wildly successful at bringing home the bacon, frying it up in a pan and never letting their husbands forget they are men. Women's inability to accept that it is impossible to do everything right all the time has a lot to do with stress, Ms. Witkin-Lanoil believes.

The author devotes a chapter each to working women and women who decide to stay home with the kids.

"It seems that mothers in the '80's are likely to feel stressed and guilty if they do work outside the house and stressed and guilty if they do not," she says.

The author comes up with some interesting theories and does a good job of making women feel less guilt-ridden, but many of her ideas are very simplistic, while others border on the unbelievable.

At one point, she intimates that the scientific explanation for female intuition could have something to do with a study which shows women have greater use of both hemispheres of the brain than men.

Ms. Witkin-Lanoil does advance several methods for dealing with stress, most tied to becoming more self-centered. But the problem becomes obfuscated in different theories and the reader is left feeling helpless with the message that life is stress.

The author has a private counseling practice and teaches in the physchiatry department of Mount Sinai Medical College.

Author William Fox has 'whopping good humor'

A Review

"Chitlin Strut & Other Mandrigals" by William Price Fox; Peachtree Publishers Ltd.; 200 pages; $9.95

By DON FREEMAN
Corley News Service

As Kurt Vonnegut has said of the author: "Bill Fox stands a good chance of capturing the love Americans used to give Mark Twain in simpler times. He's brilliant."

There is in William Price Fox a peculiarly Southern magic and a whopping good humor that nicks away at pomposity. Fox, who is writer-in-residence at the University of South Carolina, thrives in a literary zone that blends fact and fiction. And this volume is the perfect collection for his many fans (including the oversigned) who have relished in Bill Fox's work since his first batch of short stories, "Southern Fried Plus," brought him to national attention.

Here we have Fox inimitably relating the night of the Chitlin Strut in a crossroads South Carolina town — it was one bodaciously hilarious time. We are privileged — the word is used in full appreciation of its meaning — to be with Bill Fox when he hears Satchel Paige spinning great yarns in the Rhythm Room of the Twilight Zone Bowling Alley. And there's a frog-jumping in Springfield, S.C., with echoes of Calaveras. And we hear Flatt and Scruggs in historic old Ryman Auditorium in Nashville. It is all vintage Fox.

Latin America's growth slowing

Following years of high economic growth and rising living standards, Latin America's gross domestic product (GDP) grew only 1.4 percent in 1981 and dropped 1.2 percent in 1982, says the Inter-American Development Bank. On a per capita basis, it says, the GDP dropped 1 percent in 1981 and 3 percent in 1982, wiping out improvements in standards of living achieved in the two previous years.

The decline in per capita incomes was particularly sharp — around 10 percent below 1980 levels — in Argentina, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Chile El Salvador, Guyana and Uruguay.

Chinese cookbooks should meet all needs

By SANDRA SCOTT KLINK
King Features Syndicate

Some cooking decisions which should be simple to make have become considerably more complicated in the past few years. Take, for example, the decision to purchase a Chinese cookbook. For many years there were only a few choices available. Now, however, you will be overwhelmed with options: basic, specialized, regional, huge tomes, thin little paperbacks, lavishly illustrated, not illustrated at all, some that presuppose much knowledge, others that assume almost total ignorance.

Acting under the assumption that the majority of potential purchasers are likely to fall somewhere in the middle ground — i.e. perhaps have done some Chinese cooking, have a working knowledge of the ingredients and techniques but need some refinements and some interesting new recipes — one or both of two recently published books should meet most of their needs.

An excellent catch-all basic volume is "Chinese Cooking Secrets" by Karen Lee (Doubleday, $22.50). Ms. Lee, an experienced teacher, approaches her subject with consummate clarity and organization.

She has obviously seen many of the mistakes that have victimized her students. As a result, the recipes and text are done in a way that anticipates — and sidesteps — these common errors.

Seemingly minor things like how to add oil to a wok and precautions about doubling recipes are presented in the early chapters well before a discouraging mistake is made. These and other details are the touches that could make the difference between mediocre and memorable.

Each recipe has specific notes and/or tips to ease the preparation. In addition, the range of recipes is wide — many traditional favorites along with some knock-'em-dead new ones, some simple, some a bit more complicated. However, even the more difficult dishes are explained so clearly that nearly anyone could turn them out successfully.

Two chapters in Ms. Lee's book sum up virtually every necessary scrap of knowledge about the basics: Special Cooking Techniques and Fresh Vegetables and Cutting Techniques. Sit down with the book, absorb the material in these chapters and try anything.

What Ms. Lee has done is adapt some techniques (reducing, deglazing, defatting) from other cooking methods, add them to her wealth of teaching experience and create a most workable cookbook.

Considerably more lavish and a bit more esoteric is "Chinese Cuisine From the Master Chefs of China" by the editors of "China Pictorial," The People's Republic of China (Little Brown and Company, $29.95).

This is a book to satisfy not only the Chinese cook but also the historian. You'll encounter specialties that you've never seen anywhere else. This is the first cookbook to come out of the People's Republic since the Cultural Revolution and it is packed full of information for the curious.

Sixteen chefs from the top restaurants in Beijing have offered their recipes, and they are supplemented with plenty of auxiliary material about the regions of China and their specialties, customs and protocol, medicinal uses of food, all sorts of little surprises.

Illustrations are all in color and elegantly done — lush, in a word. Every recipe is accompanied by a color photo of the dish — perfectly prepared and presented on a fabulously elegant dinner plate.

The names of some of the recipes are worth the price of the book: Peacock Spreads Tail, Silkworm Cocoon Bean Curd, Orchid Prawns, Maid Marrying Herself Off, Beautiful Lady Marries Gifted Scholar, Longevity Quail.

And the ingredients! Stand warned that you will most definitely not be able to find many of them in this country (sea slugs, shark's fin, wolfberries, duck's webbed feet). Substitutes are suggested occasionally, and many of the recipes are actually included as items of historic interest, not necessarily because the reader would be expected to rush out and try to re-create them. Certainly not all of the 140 recipes fall into the realm of the arcane. In fact, most can be made with the contents of a reasonably well-stocked pantry.

Anyone heading to China on vacation would be advised to scour both books for restaurant information, eating customs, types of dining styles and restaurants. As for potential Chinese cooks: Start with "Chinese Cooking Secrets" and graduate to "Chinese Cuisine From the Master Chefs of China."

A tasty dishes from "Chinese Cooking Secrets":

SLIPPERY CHICKEN

The name of this dish derives from the smooth, slippery texture the chicken acquires with the addition of egg white.

1 pound boneless, skinless chicken breasts
6 scallions (white part only), shredded
1 clove garlic, crushed
1 pound fresh spinach leaves
½ teaspoon salt
2 cups peanut oil
Marinade:
2 egg whites
1 tablespoon sherry
1 tablespoon water chestnut powder
Seasoning Sauce:
2 tablespoons water chestnut powder dissolved in 2 tablespoons sherry
2 tablespoons dark soy sauce
3 tablespoons sherry
1 teaspoon sugar
1 teaspoon Chinese red vinegar
2 teaspoons hot sauce
1 teaspoon sesame oil

Partially freeze the chicken, slice thin, then shred. Place the chicken and the ingredients for the marinade in a bowl and stir in one direction vigorously with chopsticks. Place the mixture in the refrigerator for at least 1 hour or up to 12 hours.

Combine the ingredients for the seasoning sauce.

Place the wok over high heat for about 1 minute. Pour in the oil; turn the heat to medium until the oil reaches 325 degrees.

Restir the chicken in the marinade. Turn the heat to high and add the contents of the bowl to the wok all at once, stirring with a pair of chopsticks in a circular motion for about 1 minute, until the chicken shreds have turned opaque.

Turn off the heat and pour the oil and the chicken into a colander set over a bowl. Shake the colander gently to aid the draining, then place it over a clean bowl.

Return the wok to high heat. Add the scallions; stir-fry for 30 seconds.

Restir the seasoning sauce and add it all at once to the wok along with the chicken; stir-fry about 30 seconds. Empty the contents of the wok onto one side of a heated serving dish.

Using a second wok, heat 1½ tablespoons of cooked oil until hot but not smoking. Add the garlic and allow to sizzle for a few seconds.

Add the spinach, stir-fry until it begins to wilt (1 to 2 minutes).

Add the salt; continue to stir-fry for another minute. Empty the spinach onto the other side of the serving dish. Remove the garlic clove. Serve immediately. Serves 3 to 8.

From "Chinese Cuisine From the Master Chefs of China," a stunner:

PEACOCK SPREADS TAIL

An impressive and beautiful cold dish, this peacock is actually not, with time and patience, very hard to create. Various foods, including eggs, abalone, shrimp, and canned fruits are cut and arranged to look like a peacock roaming through the grassland. The head and neck are carved from a white radish and colored to look like the real bird. Cucumber peel and slices conceal any rough edges.

1¾ oz. agar-agar, rinsed
¾ ounce chicken
8 eggs
1 pound prawns
7 ounces cucumber
5 teaspoons rice wine
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon prickly ash
1 white radish
Food colorings
11 canned cherries, halved
3 canned black mushrooms
5 ounces canned abalone
2 canned mandarin orange segments

Rinse the agar-agar in cold water; squeeze and chop. Cook the chicken in lightly salted boiling water just until tender; drain and discard the water.

Cut the chicken meat into shreds.

Hard-boil the eggs; cool in cold water and remove shells. Cut three of the eggs in half lengthwise. Separate the yolks from the whites. Cut the whites lengthwise into 24 to 30 thin "feathers" and set aside.

Cut off the prawn heads; shell, devein, and cut the prawns in half lengthwise.

Peel the cucumber, reserving the peel. Cut in half crosswise, then slice it lengthwise into flat thin feathers like the egg whites. Pickle a few of the peelings in a brine of salt and sugar.

To 2 cups water in a wok or pot, add the rice wine, salt and pinch of prickly ash. Heat to boiling; add the prawns and simmer for 20 minutes; remove the prawns and drain.

Mound a layer of the agar-agar and chicken on the platter as a base for the head, neck and body. (It will be covered with other things.) Carve the head, neck, beak and crown from white radishes. Dye them with food coloring and assemble them as shown in the photograph. Use prickly ash for the eyes. Place the head and neck on the mound of agar-agar. Cover the neck with a alternating rows of cucumber slices and blade-like slices of the white part of the egg. Ruffle and fan them to resemble feathers.

Following the arrangement in the photo, place the pickled cucumber peelings in the center of the platter in line with the head. Place the mushrooms on top of the cucumbers. Top the mushrooms with slices of egg yolk. Slice one of the eggs, notch edges around the whites. Place these around the mushrooms, and top each with a cherry half.

Slice the abalone into oblong pieces and notch the edges; tint with food coloring. Decorate them with the sliced-off rounded ends of the egg whites. Place the prawns, cut side downward, and top each with a melon seed-shaped piece of pickled cucumber. Cut the remaining eggs crosswise into 14 thin slices. Arrange them around the edge of the platter. Place a cherry half on the yolks and arrange the slices of abalone, prawn, eggs and cucumber around the body, fanning out like feathers.

Nestle the orange segments and carved cucumber flowers near the wings, suggesting a peacock with tail fanned out, roaming in the grassland.

Prickly Ash: 4 tablespoons salt
1 tablespoon whole Sichuan peppercorns
½ teaspoon whole black peppercorns

Heat a heavy dry skillet or wok over moderate heat and pour in the peppercorns. Stir constantly until the heat releases the fragrance of the pepper, about 1 minute.

Pour the peppercorns into a mortar and grind them to a fine powder. Reheat the skillet or wok and pour in the salt. Stir it constantly until it just begins to turn golden brown, less than 5 minutes.

Pour it into a bowl to cool for 1 minute. If the peppercorns have not been ground uniformly fine, put them through a sieve and grind the larger pieces again. Mix ground peppercorns with the salt. Discard obvious husks. After the mixture has cooled, store it in a jar with a screw top so it will not pick up other aromas.

Businesses must notify customers of limited responsibility

King Features Syndicate

You send your faded living-room rug out to be dyed. It comes back shrunk and badly streaked. The dryer tells you it's not his fault — the rug was shoddily woven and poorly dyed to begin with. And besides, he adds, the rug receipt clearly states "not responsible for loss, shrinkage or other damage." Is it your loss?

— You leave some garments with a cleaner. When you come to collect them, you learn they were destroyed by fire. Must the cleaner make good?

— You check your new $300 suede coat in a restaurant checkroom. When you present the claim check for the coat, the attendant can't find it — and points to a sign that says the restaurant owners limit their liability for any loss to $50. Can they do this?

Familiar enough situations that could happen to anyone, these transactions have one thing in common, says Linda Cawley, co-author of the book "Consumer Revenge." Each involves a specific kind of legal contract. This contract is created whenever you temporarily leave personal property in someone else's possession for purposes of storage, repair or some other service. The contract may be implied, as when you check your coat in a restaurant, or it may be a verbal or written agreement.

You should be aware that under reasonable circumstances businesses can legitimately limit their responsibility for your property — as long as they clearly notify you they are doing so and say what the limits are.

However, they cannot legally hide behind a "not responsible" disclaimer when your property has been lost or damaged due to their negligence (a legal term meaning carelessness).

Here's how the kinds of problems mentioned above might be resolved.

In the case of the ruined rug you might have grounds for claiming negligence on the part of the rug dyer by pointing out that if the rug was that badly made, an experienced rug dyer should have advised against dyeing it. Many judges in small-claims courts would rule in your favor. If not successful there, you might try bringing a claim against the rug manufacturer or the rug dealer.

But when it comes to holding a cleaner responsible for garments destroyed in a fire or a restaurant responsible for the full value of a coat lost in its checkroom, you won't have a case unless, again, you can prove negligence — for example, that the fire was caused by illegally or improperly stored combustible materials in the cleaning shop, or that the coat disappeared because the restaurant checkroom was left unattended during part of your stay.

'Mrs. Olson' honored with coffee pot

STANTON, Iowa (AP) — How do you honor your town's most famous citizen? If she's Virginia Christine — also known as TV's Mrs. Olson — you design the world's biggest coffee pot.

"Actually, it's the world's largest Swedish coffee pot," said Wynona Hummel, postmaster in this town of 600 people.

A distinguished actress, the Stanton-born Ms. Christine became the symbol for Folger's Coffee 20 years ago. Television viewers know her as the warm, Swedish-accented woman who teaches newlyweds how to brew a good cup of coffee.

Stanton, in southwestern Iowa, is proud of its heritage as a Swedish settlement founded 114 years ago.

"Virginia Christine was born and raised here. She came back for the centennial in 1970," Mrs. Hummel said. "They put on a nice program outdoors and they had some money left over. So they decided to put up a coffee pot."

In fact, the town had the local 125-foot-high water tower painted to look like a Swedish coffee pot. Someone figured out it would hold 640,000 cups of coffee, although it in fact holds only water — 40,000 gallons of it.

"We do have a nice restaurant and they serve coffee," Mrs. Hummel added.

GOLETA, Calif. (AP) — A combination of woofs, grunts and groans by a deputy sheriff kept a 300-pound bear at bay after it wandered away from Los Padres National Forest and into this Santa Barbara suburb.

Deputy Linette Lefkowitz said she learned how to talk to bears by making "the same noises they do," as a ranger at Yosemite National Park.

When the 18-month-old bear climbed a tree last week in a back yard on Vega Avenue, Ms. Lefkowitz said she convinced the bear to stay put until animal control officials tranquilized it with a dart and took it back to the forest.

"He wanted to come down out of the tree, but I told him he couldn't," she said.

Bears are "basically cowards," she said, "so I let him know that there wasn't any escape route."

NORTH MIDLAND MINOR EMERGENCY CENTER AND FAMILY MEDICAL CARE

3301 MOGFORD AT 2400 W. WADLEY, MIDLAND, TEXAS 79705

Opening June 4th

MINOR INJURIES AND ILLNESSES:

LOW COSTS. NO WAITING QUALITY CARE.

We're your alternative to hospital emergency rooms and regular doctor's offices. All types of minor illnesses and injuries are treated, on an extended hours basis. That means you can come see us before you go to work, or on the weekends. The major conveniences are you don't have to wait to see the doctor, and you'll pay substantially lower charges.

Treatment
We offer treatment of a wide range of ailments, including minor lacerations, fractures, sprains, headaches, back pain, allergies, cold, flu , abdominal pain. Regular physical examinations are also conducted as well as a full range of laboratory tests and x-ray procedures. In other words, you can come to us for almost any problem you would go to your family doctor for. However, life-threatening emergencies are encouraged to go directly to a hospital emergency room.

Convenience
You don't need an appointment. You may walk in any time during open hours and you'll see a doctor almost immediately. There's no waiting for long periods of time in a crowded waiting area. And your visit will usually be over in less than one hour.

Low Cost
Our costs are substantially below those of area hospital emergency rooms. And all charges are due upon completion of the visit so you won't get any unexpected bills later.

Staff
We're staffed at all times by a licenced physician and other qualified ancillary personnel who are ready to respond immediately to your medical needs.

Personal Care
Personal, quality care is our goal. Our doctor will take the time to see that you receive the attention you need. Any follow-up care or referrals to area physician will be prescribed on the spot.

Facilities
We're equipped with modern medical equipment including laboratory and x-ray materials. You'll get your test results back immediately.

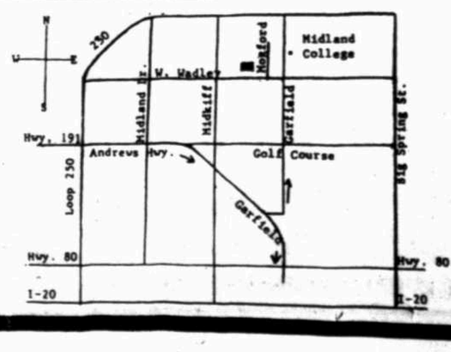

Location
We're located just minutes away. And you don't have to worry about finding a place to park. In fact you can park right by the front door.

Every parent should take turn at son's paper route

By JHERI FLEET
King Features Syndicate

"Thud!" The sound of the evening paper hit the glass door.

"Whoosh!" I heard the sound of the weight slap the concrete.

I doubled my hands into fists and pumped them above my head. I leaned back as a smile spread across my sweaty face. I got one!

Every parent faces the dilemma of letting a child have a pet or a paper route. A pet is forever and constant care. A paper route is hopefully only a few short years, once a day.

Both teach a child discipline and responsibility. But, a paper route teaches a child the value of a dollar, the economics of thrift, savings and financial independence.

In turn, it gives the parents pride in their child, the knowledge that they are doing what is right for this next generation leader, and a great right arm.

"Check it out." The comment of approval came from the young boys standing by the garage across the street.

I checked the list of addresses again and started forward. The glass door burst open, and a woman stormed out. I saw her movement from the corner of my eye; my head turned to look at the speeding form.

"Oh, please, Mrs. Bedford, don't be angry," I said. "That's the first one that made it all the way to the door."

"Joe's at camp. I'm his mother. And that," I pointed to her paper, "was my first success." I said. "Most of the time I park this moped and climb under holly bushes to retrieve my misses."

"What a job!" Mrs. Bedford shook her head. "I wouldn't do that if I was starving!"

"Believe me," I smiled, "I wouldn't either, but for my son..."

The woman shrugged and looked sympathetic; then she turned toward her house. "But watch the glass door," she said, and pointed the paper at me.

A cheer went up from my "gallery" across the street.

Hot on the heels of success, I lobbed the next one into an unstable mailbox next to the door. It tottered, then came to rest at a rather roguish angle.

After three days of jungle warfare with every holly hedge and rose bush and tree on the paper route, I was getting satisfaction. If I aimed at the top of the door and held my mouth just right, the paper landed somewhere near the porch.

The thrill of triumph pumped through my veins. I had to admit it looked easier than it was. At ten miles an hour I was the moving target.

After the day I found men who were at home peered out of their open garage doors or inspected obscure plants at the front door. I thought at first they were protecting their property and then realized the white tennis dress and helmet must seem a little odd.

My son called, collect, to check on his paper route substitute the third night. I bragged that the first day had taken me and hour, but I cut that by fifteen minutes the next day.

"That's great, Mom, but don't be disappointed if tomorrow and Friday take longer." He paused. "and Sunday don't forget it's five-thirty. Mom, that's a.m. Set your clock. Now, you won't forget will you?"

I sighed. Five o'clock is in the middle of the night.

"You can bet on it, son." I tried to be cheerful.

He laughed. "Just keep poppin' those suckers in the slot."

Thursday arrived. He was right. The paper looked like a set of encyclopedias, and he expected me to stuff all of it in a tiny rubber band.

The weight proved an advantage in throwing — it carried further. My arm, though, was paralyzed for two hours after I finished.

Following that hour in the 95-degree sun, I wiped 80-percent humidity from my face and stumbled into a 60-degree shower. I emerged a long time later to look at the ninth wonder of the world, a mother after she had thrown a paper route. It would be generous to say I looked fine.

By the end of the first week I knew more people in the 10-block area near our house than in the previous four years. The general trend of the conversation was a comparison in paper throwing styles and yard management, plus a horde of compliments on courage.

The crumpled paper with the sweat-stained addresses remained in the basket most of the time by Friday. I only had to park my vehicle and do hand-to-hand combat with bushes three times. The scratches on my arms were healing and the sunburn felt better — that is, as long as I wore a tennis dress.

I thought back to when my cousin warned me that I wouldn't feel that I had really raised a son until I threw a five-thirty a.m. paper route a few times. I smiled. I blessed my son that I only had to do that once a week.

The initiation was completed, but I wondered how and why I decided to also let my son attend soccer camp later in the summer. I consoled myself that while he had two weeks of fun-filled excitement, I would get to meet the couple who moved in next to the Lattimers, find out why the Clarks had the police over at four in the afternoon two days in a row, and find out if Suzy was still going with Jeff, the boy across the street.

Nationwide drilling declined slightly for the first quarter of 1984.

National drilling activity declines, Basin steady

By JOHN PAUL PITTS,
Business-Oil Editor

Nationwide, drilling activity for the month of April showed a marked decline from the same reporting period in 1983, according to American Petroleum Institute.

During the reporting period of March 31, 1984 through April 27, 1984 the total number of wells drilled was 5,673 which was down 440 from 1983's total of 6413 wells.

Despite continued, heavy development drilling on infill projects, and secondary and tertiary projects, even the total number of development wells was down 500 for the previous period, as was exploratory wells nationwide.

That was not the case, however, for the Permian Basin, which fared much better than the rest of the nation as 1983 and 1984 exploratory wells remained steady during the same April reporting period.

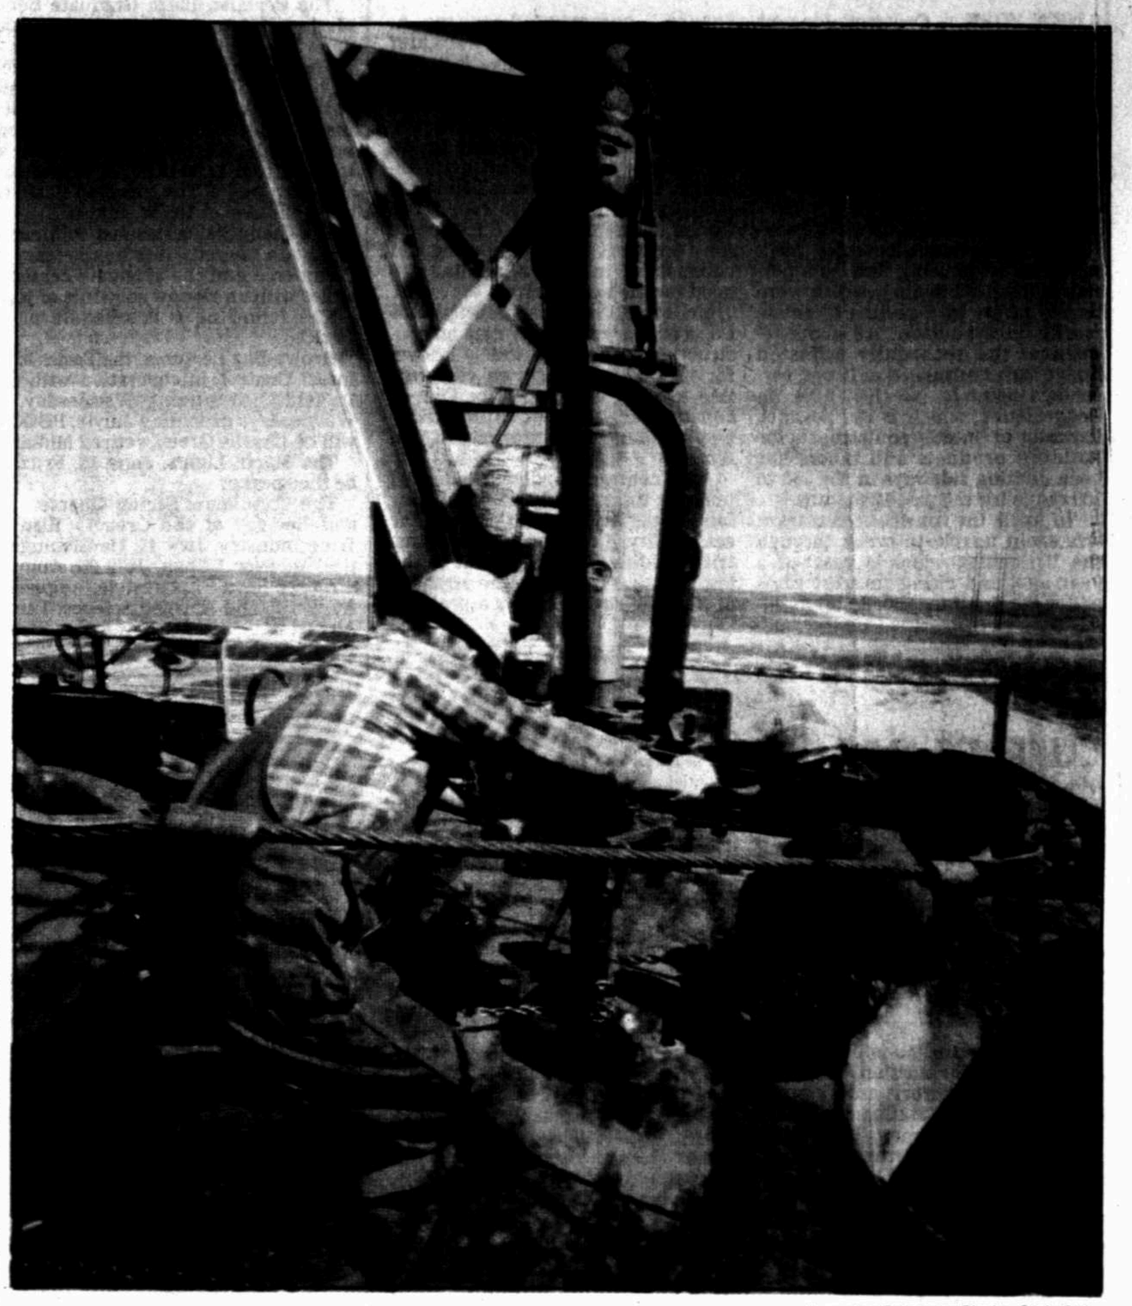

The area of the Permian Basin drawing the most wildcats surprisingly was Texas Railroad Commission District 7-C, which comprises the 14 eastern most counties of the geological province.

A total of 46 wildcats were drilled in that region, whereas District 8 only drew 17 wildcats and District 8-A 19. The New Mexico portion of the Basin came up with only eight wildcats.

Perhaps the reason for this disproportionate number of wildcats lies in the fact that District 7-C producing fields normally require bigger stepouts for field definition.

Permian Basin drilling contractors can take some heart in the fact that footage drilled was closely proportional to the number of wells drilled in the two reporting periods. Wildcat footage in 1984 was 573,174, only 14,876 feet short of of 1983's footage of 558,198. Footage could have shrunk with the drilling of more shallow wells,but the footage is indicative of the fact that a reasonable mix of deep wells were still in the offering.

The most active area in the entire United States continues to be the Permian Basin, which far exceeds the entire Rocky Mountain region, and Oklahoma which are the Basin'snearest competitors in terms of total footage drilled.

Rock that burns still just around the corner

The Los Angeles Times,
Washington Post News Service

DENVER — Fifty million years ago the Green River Formation's shale beds were deposited in what is now Wyoming, Utah and Colorado, giving the West a vast resource that has fired the imaginations of scientists, financiers, writers, dreamers, entrepreneurs, oil men, speculators and a few outright crooks since settlers in covered wagons first encountered the "rock that burned."

For almost as long, development of a shale-oil industry has been just around the corner.

Today it still is just around the corner.

Because the Western shale beds hold trillions of barrels of oil, and because turning the rock into a crude oil is relatively simple, many have thought it would be easy to develop a giant shale-oil industry.

Just heat the rock to about 900 degrees Fahrenheit, and you have got it, they say.

But getting the process from a rudimentary heating of the rock to a commercial-scale plant is another matter. The major obstacle is economic, not technical; discoveries of large petroleum reserves always have been made before shale oil could turn the corner. It has always been cheaper to produce oil from conventional reserves than from shale.

That started with Edwin L. Drake's first oil well at Titusville, Pa., in 1859, which signaled the birth of the petroleum industry; it also was the end of an embryonic Eastern shale-oil industry.

According to the Colorado Energy Research Institute, oil shale was used to produce medicinal ointments in Austria and Switzerland more than 500 years ago. And a retorting process to "cook" the rock to release the kerogen material from which synthetic crude is made was patented in Great Britain in 1694.

Historically, interest in developing the West's shale has been most intense when the public believed (often wrongly) that conventional crude-oil sources were being depleted.

That is one reason for oil shale continuing to be a resource rather than a reserve, in the jargon of the industry. A mineral deposit is not

Arbitration, an alternative to court

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

Do we arbitrate or take it to court? That is the question that is being asked more and more in disputes between customers and businesses, thanks to a relatively new program initiated by Better Business Bureau.

While Better Business Bureau (BBB) has been an appointed policeman for the business community for many decades, it was only in the late 1970's that the Bureau became involved in the art of arbitration, according to Sara Hayes, a consultant on arbitration to BBB.

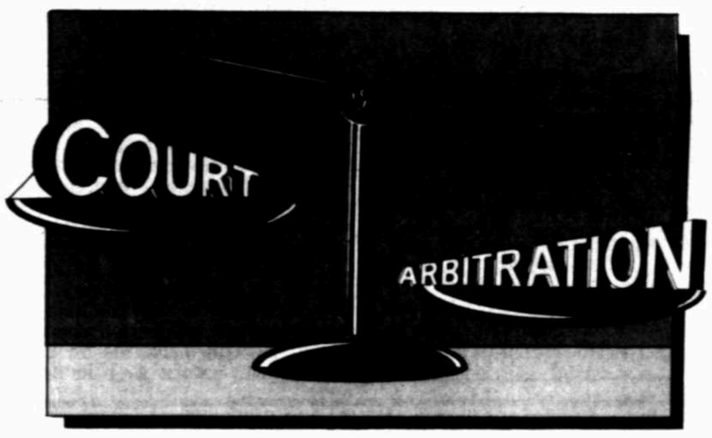

"The arbitration service was conceived in the late 1970's and after being proven successful in the auto industry and has since branched out into all areas of business," said Ms. Hayes.

Arbitration works on all ends of the business spectrum.

This year arbitration between GM and its customers over mechanical failures of certain model engines, and a court decision making GM liable in many cases is expected to account for about half of the arbitration case load of BBB.

Sometimes it can involve a host of customers against a business category, as in Milwaukee where the dry cleaning businesses came under attack from customers.

But, most cases of arbitration involve a simple dispute between a customer and a business.

Reporter-Telegram Graphic: Matt Holten

For example: A Midland couple went to a florist and ordered a floral arrangement for their wedding. They selected it from a photo in the florists book–a photo which showed a candelabra. But when the bill arrived the florist had charged the pair extra for the candelabra. The newly weds took exception ,saying that they had been shown an arrangement with a candelabra and refused to pay extra.

The florist in turn threatened to turn them over to a credit bureau and ruin their credit. He contended that the couple should have known that the candelabra was extra--"everybody knows that." It was a sticky situation, which seemed bound for civil court, but all parties involved opted instead for arbitration offered by BBB.

The trained arbitrator looked at the photograph of the floral arrangement and ruled quickly in favor of the couple. The florist, while not happy with the decision, was made aware of a potentially troublesome area in her business.

Ms. Hayes pointed out that arbitration favors the customer about 50 percent of the time and business the other 50 percent.

"Even though the customer wins only 50 percent of the time, about 80 percent feel they received a fair hearing," she said.

Both parties must agree to abide by the terms of the arbitration.

Linda Truitt, Permian Basin BBB head, says that her office handles approximately 10 arbitration cases per year, but expects that number to double next year.

"We don't handle tenant-landlord, medical or insurance cases," she emphasised ,"only marketplace transactions." The key to the BBB arbitration program, according to both Hayes and Truitt, lies in the trained volunteer arbitrator.

Each year Ms. Hayes, consultant to the Southern Regional Council of Better Business Bureau, conducts arbitration seminars in various cities in the region including Midland.

Instruction in the seminars is very basic including, the rules of arbitration and the elements in decision making.

"We don't want to over train them," said Ms. Hayes. "We don't want to make them over leagalistic and destroy their intuitive sense of fairness and objectivity. We want them to be able to draw from their life experiences, and address arbitration with the question: 'what would I want.'"

She pointed out that arbitration was a natural outgrowth of BBB's complaint process.

"Each year we handle 1.6 million complaints. That number of complaints is exceeded only by the U.S. judicial system.

Why would anyone want to become a volunteer arbitrator? According to Hayes and Truitt, it is a skill that can be applied very effectively in other areas of life, at work, in the schools, professional organizations and community groups.

Rig count up for fourth straight week

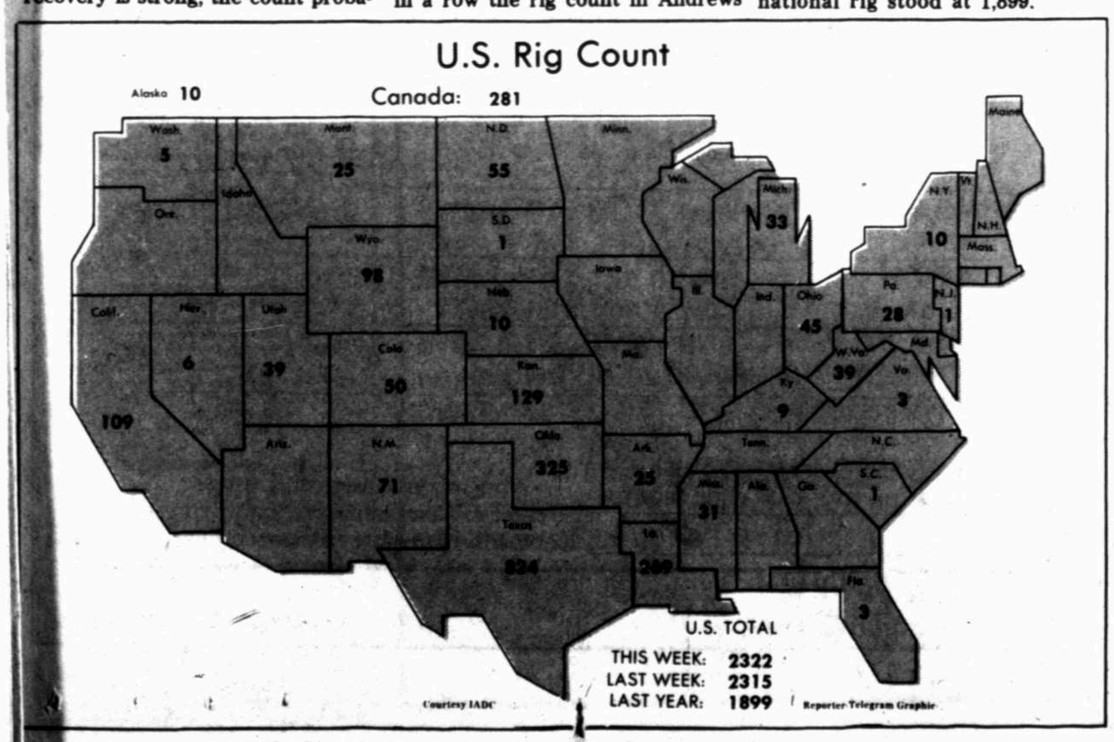

Are we heading for 500? For the fourth week in a row the Permian Basin rig count has taken substantial jumps. The climb started at 311, went to 319, jumped again to 333 and this week comes in ten rigs stronger at 343.

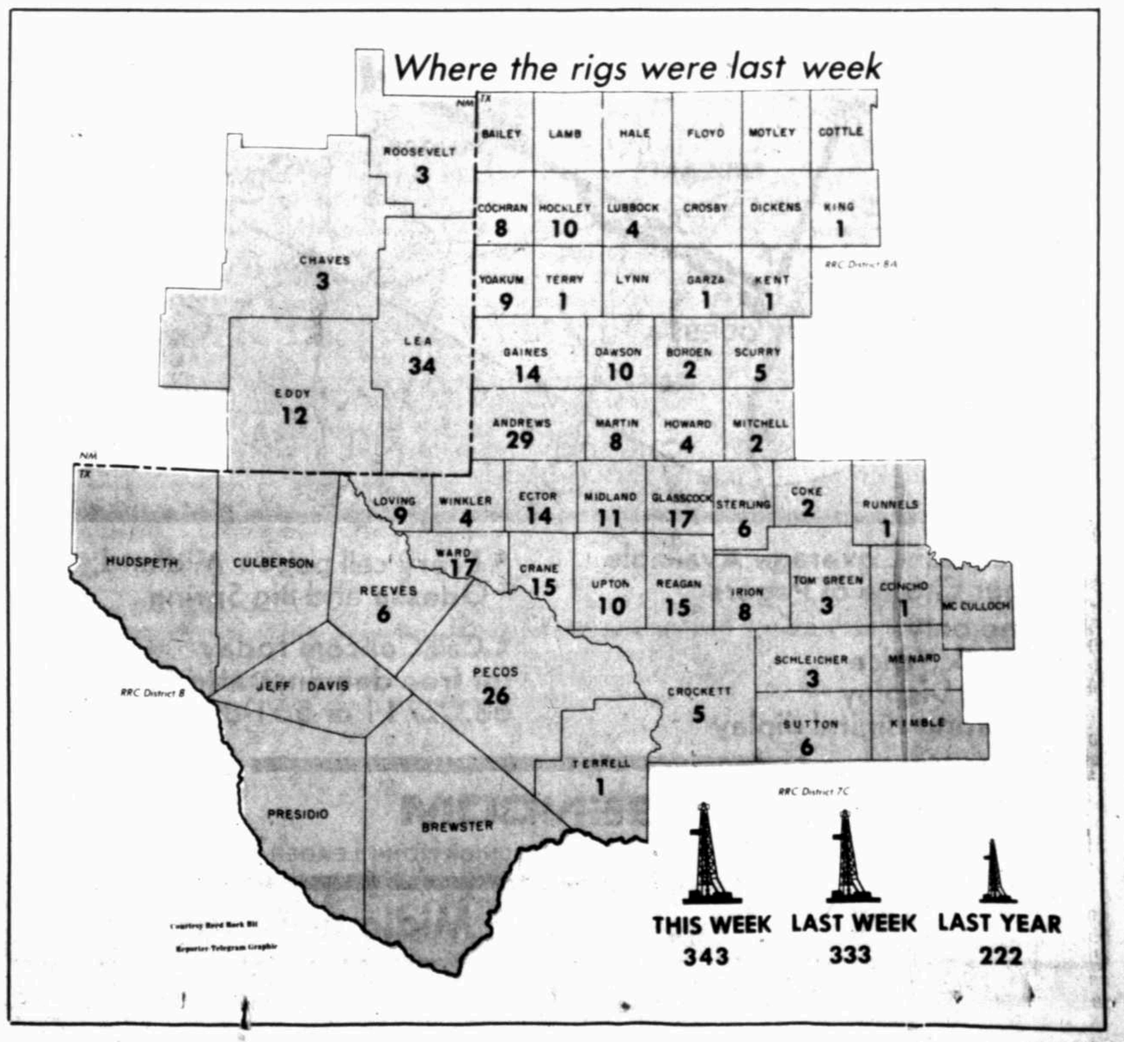

While the increases are reason for optimisim, an indication that the slump has bottomed out and that the recovery is strong, the count probably will not go to 500. And many who have had their full of booms are probably just as happy with that fact.

The Permian Basin rig count at this time last year stood at 222.Glasscock County with an addition of six rigs was the big gainer this week while Ector with three new rigs came in second. For the third week in a row the rig count in Andrews County increased, while Pecos and Lea counties the other big number counties held steady.

Nationwide the rig count was up only slightly from 2215 last week to 2322 this week. Wyoming and Oklahoma had significant upward surges as did Colorado and Arkansas.

This same time last year the national rig stood at 1,899.

New construction edges up one percent in April

NEW YORK — Contracts for new construction edged up a seasonally adjusted one percent in April, according to the F.W. Dodge division of McGraw-Hill Information Systems Co. Through the first four months of 1984, the value of all new construction started was $63.3 billion, a gain of 15 percent over the same period a year ago.

April's $17.4 billion of newly-started construction revealed modest gains in housing and commercial/industrial building, which were largely offset by a decline of public works construction. As a consequence, the seasonally adjusted Dodge Index advanced only one percentage point to 145 (1977=100). The Dodge Index, which is the advance indicator of on-site requirements for building products and labor, has been drifting sideways in the 140 to 150 range for the past 12 months.

"In April, the construction market was again unable to break through the 150 ceiling which it reached a year ago, and rising interest rates will make it stil tougher to do in the future," commented George A. Christie, vice president and chief economist for F.W. Dodge.

"After a strong recovery, followed by a year of high level output which was concentrated heavily in the housing sector, the building industry is now depending on non-residential markets to sustain volume as housing starts begin to fade," the Dodge economist said. "Prospects for a trade-off between housing and commercial/industrial building are good for the near future."

McGraw-Hill Information Systems Co., a primary source of data on construction markets, is widely known for its Dodge Reports on construction activity, Sweet's Catalog Files of construction product information, and building cost information systems.

April contracts for non-residential building totaled $5.4 billion, advancing one percent after adjustment for seasonality. Commercial ad industrial building rose 12 percent in the last month, largely on the strength of another surge of office projects.

PBGC announces changes in schedule

The Permian Basin Graduate Center announces that the talk on the Marfa Lights originally announced for June 6 has been rescheduled for June 13.

The second-annual Brown-Bag Lecture Series, co sponsored by PBGC and the Midland Chamber of Commerce, will begin Wednesday, June 6, with a talk on the Basics of West Texas Soil, Water, Fertility and Insect Control. Charlie Green, retired Midland County Extension Agent, will speak. All lectures are free and will be in the center's auditorium from 11:30-12:30 on consecutive Wednesdays through August 22, skipping July 4. The Permian Basin Graduate Center is located in downtown Midland at 105 W. Illinois.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Midlanders attend interior decorating fete

Bill Oglesby, Ray Robinson and Roger D. Vester of Mid-Tex of Midland recently attended a course in interior decorating for employees of Armstrong Floor Fashion Center stores held in Dallas. The course was conducted by experts from Armstrong World Industris' Interior Design Center, which is well-known for its magazine advertisements showing beautiful rooms. The company started the ads in 1917.

More than 3,000 people have attended the course to date. Armstrong's nationwide network of independent Floor Fashion Center stores offers shoppers abroad range of services, including attractive shopping environments, trained sales staffs, complete product selections and guarantees for materials and installation.

New board meets after court ruling

DENVER — John S. Wold has announced that the new board of directors of Minerals Engineering Co. (MECO) held its first meeting recently. The new board was seated after the Federal District Court in Denver entered its final order stating that the Wold slate of directors constituted the lawful board of the company. Wold began his successful proxy contest with the former managment of MECO prior to the 1983 annual shareholders meeting last June.

At its initial meeting, the new board elected Wold chairman of the board of directors and acting chief executive officer. Ralph J. Anctil was elected acting chief oprating officer. From 1972 to 1978 Anctil had been associated with MECO, holding several positions, including vice president of exploration. More recently, he was assistant chief of the Mining Division and chief of the Exploration and Evaluation Group of Woodward-Clyde Consultants. Wold is owner of Wold Minerals Exploration Co. and Wold Oil & Gas Co. of Casper, Wyo.

More people moving to metropolitan areas

CHICAGO — Activity among transferees relocating into a number of major metropolitan areas was up during the first quarter of 1984.

At the same time, the average price of a single-family home sold to a transferring individual and his family during Jauary, February and March approached the $100,000 mark — $99,985 — reported RELO/Inter-City Relocation Service, the nation's largest referral network of independent real estate brokers headquartered in Chicago.

Maytag to establish Houston-based branch

NEWTON, Iowa — In a major restructuring of its distribution system, The Maytag Co. will establish a new Houston-based sales branch and realign the terrritories of nine existing branches from Florida to Minnesota, it was announced by G.E. Ankeny, general sales manager. The change will be effective August 1.

The reorganization is being made by the appliance manufacturer to maintain its dealer coverage in line with its sales growth rate. The distribution changes will affect the firm's Dallas, Kansas City, Minneapolis, North Central, St. Louis, Detroit, Cleveland, south Central and Southeast branches.

The New Houston branch will serve dealers throughout southern Texas, as far north as Odessa in the west, Abilene and Waco in the central portion of the state and Beaumont to the east.

RepublicBank gets OK for new bank

DALLAS — The Comptroller of the Currency has given RepublicBank Corp. preliminary approval to establish a new national bank in west Houston to be called RepublicBank Eldridge, N.A., Republic Bank Corp. chairman James D. Berry has announced.

The new bank will be located south of Interstate 10 at the corner of North Eldridge and Memorial Drive in the One Eldridge Place office building, a project of Bolin Development Corp.

More women owning businesses today

LUBBOCK — Women business ownership is rapidly spreading to new areas of business activity, Philip J. O'Jibway, director of the U.S. Small Business Administration's office has reported.

"Most women-operated businesses remain in the traditional areas of retail trade and services," O'Jibway said. "But in recent years, more and more women are entering into new areas of business, including manufacturing, finance, insurance and real estate.

"President Reagan's recent report on the state of smal business, for example, shows that the number of female-operated businesses from 1977-80 rose 20 percent in the manufacture of stone, clay and glass and 37 percent in the insurance and broker field. During this period, there was an annual increase of 54 percent in the number of women-operated businesses in legal services."

Safety commission upholds current product export code

By a three to one vote, the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission affirmed its existing export policy under the Consumer Product Safety Act and the Federal Hazardous Substances Act; the policy prohibits the export of products that do not comply with applicable stardards or bans and that have been distributed in commerce for domestic use.

Voting to retain the policy now in effect were: Commission chairman Nancy Harvey Sterorts and commissioners Stuart M. Statler and Saundra Brown Armstrong. Dissenting was commissioner Terrance M. Scanlon.

The commission vote means that the CPSC reaffirms its statutory authority to prohibit exports of hazardous products that have been distributed for use in the United States and retains the discretion to consider any request for permission to export those products on a case-by-case basis. In reaching this decision, the commission pointed out that the Consumer Product Safety Ace and the Federal Hazardous Substances Act permit firms to export noncomplying goods that have not been distributed for use in the United States and that the action does not effect that situation. This action confirms a commission interpretation that has been in effect since at least 1980 and makes clear the commission's position with respect to export of noncomplying products under both statutes.

Necessity rekindled interest in Western shale when the United States entered World War I. In 1917 the first retort was built in Colorado.

In the Dec. 9, 1917, edition of The Denver Post, an article proclaimed "Colorado Shale Beds Contain 39,000,000,000 Barrels of Oil Says Prof. Russell D. George; Two Counties in State Hold Seventeen Times More Wealth in Petroleum Than Entire United States Has Produced Since the Discovery of Oil in 1859."

George was Colorado's state geologist. He said Colorado shale deposits held "at least 39 billion barrels of oil," although he conceded that no method of extracting it had been found.

Current appraisals put Colorado's deposits at about 1.2 trillion barrels of oil; about 85 percent of the high-grade Green River Formation shale (355 billion barrels of oil) are in the state, and the Piceance Basin contains 60 percent or 840 billion barrels of low-grade shale oil.

When Utah, Colorado and Wyoming entered the Union, about 80 percent of the oil shale lands passed into federal hands, and during the World War I era, the federal government allowed citizens to stake mining claims on the shale lands.

Although filing didn't yield much oil, it provides gainful employment for lawyers still involved in litigation over the validity of many claims.

During the early 1920s, about 12,000 barrels of oil were retorted in Elko, Nev., and some 3,600 barrels were retorted at Rulison, Colo., before interest in Western shale died because of huge oil fields discovered in east Texas.

AT&T sheds old image, offering gifts to users

By Charles W. Ross
Copley News Service

American Telephone & Telegraph Co. Thursday finally shed the last vestiges of its staid, elderly Ma Bell image and entered the carnival world of gift premiums for users of long-distance telephone service.

Callers who use AT&T lines may convert their long-distance bills into certificates to get dollar-for-dollar discounts on such merchandise as toasters, blenders, airline tickets, vacation cruises, Toyota trucks, garden tools and stereos.

In a move reminiscent of the tactics used by supermarkets (with their blue-chip stamps and newspaper food coupons) AT&T Thursday unveiled a 26-page premium catalogue with impressive fanfare. It marked the opening salvo in a battle to protect the company's share of the long-distance market from such heavy-hitting discounters as Allnet, MCI Communications, Western Union and GTE-Sprint.

Following the breakup of the Bell System at the end of last year, AT&T announced to the world that it would rely on quality, operator-assisted service to win the battle to retain its customers. Now, however, with the hard realization that it is only one of several hundred long-distance companies — and, more significantly, that every person in the United States is required to soon select a company to handle their long-distance calls — AT&T has shifted its marketing strategy.

AT&T believes that the long-term premium gift promotion combined with specific discounts on phone calling will help it keep its 94 percent market-share customer base. "But, we haven't abandoned our goal of quality," said Robert Huber, AT&T vice president.

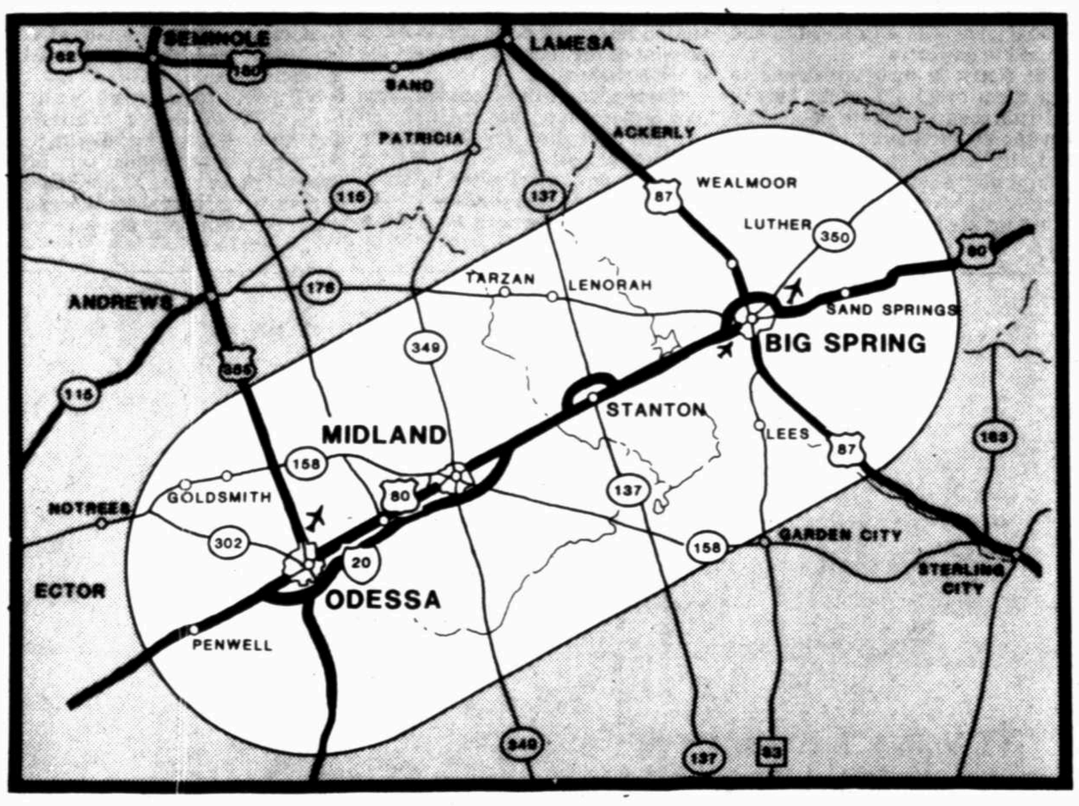

The premium program will allow AT&T customers who make at least $15 worth of long-distance calls a month in the United States to get $1 in credit toward the purchase of various items or services for each $1 of long-distance calling on their bill.

For example, a caller with $75 worth of long-distance calls can get a certificate from AT&T that would knock $75 off an Amtrak train ticket. Five dollars of long-distance calls would eliminate $5 from a pair of Levi corduroy pants; $10 gets a discount on a Black & Decker workbench; $3 would be taken off a Stanley rachet screwdriver.

But, the big prizes are for those who make lots of long-distance calls. With a maximum of $300 a month allowed, callers can get certificates for specific discounts on Howard Johnson hotel rooms, TWA overseas air travel packages, tour ship cruises, Avis car rentals, dining room furniture, train trips or $500 off the price of a Toyota truck.

The cost of the program will not alter the customers' phone bills, but the certificates cannot be used against those bills, AT&T said.

Atari lays off hundreds of workers

SUNNYVALE, Calif. (AP) — Atari Inc., the troubled computer game giant, will close its Hong Kong plant and lay off hundreds of middle-management workers here as it tries to stem a tide of red ink that reached $500 million last year, a company spokesman said.

Atari spokesman Bruce Entin confirmed Wednesday that the Hong Kong plant, operated jointly with Wong Electronics Co., would close.

He also confirmed that there would be layoffs, but refused to say how many workers would be furloughed. Industry sources estimated that 800 to 1,000 middle-management employees at corporate headquarters here would get pink slips over the next two weeks.

The layoffs and plant closing came amid reports that N.V. Philips, a Dutch electronics and entertainment company, was negotiating to buy a stake in Atari. Attempts to tidy up Atari's finances would make the company more attractive for an acquisition, although Atari executives have refused to confirm or deny the Dutch firm's interest.

Atari Chairman James Morgan and Steven Ross, head of parent company Warner Communications Inc., last week announced separately that major changes were in the works for Atari.

At Warner's annual meeting in New York, Ross revealed that "layers of management and the resulting bureaucracy ... will be stripped away."

Morgan has said his goal is to cut overhead expenses to a quarter of what they were one year ago.

Plans to shut down the Hong Kong factory reflect "our effort to increase manufacturing efficiencies," not a concession to declining sales, Entin said. Production will be moved to a plant in Taiwan.

After riding Pac-Man fever and the popularity of its 2600 VCS game console to profits of $323.3 million on sales of $2 billion in 1982, Atari saw the video game market collapse late that year. Losses mounted to $538.6 million on sales of $1.1 billion during 1983.

In the first quarter of this year, Atari reported a deficit of $34.9 million on sales of $153.8 million.

To cut costs, Atari has laid off more than 4,000 workers here and shifted manufacturing to Texas and the Far East. Research and development, marketing, accounting and management staffs remain at Sunnyvale.

Even those who aren't getting the ax said Wednesday they were disturbed, but not surprised, by the latest round of layoffs.

"It's sad, but we have known for a long time that Atari was going to pare down this way," said Aidan Cobbe, a trainee from Atari's Ireland division whose job was not affected. "For well over six months, it has been common knowledge," he said.

Interior Secretary is in oil business

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interior Secretary William P. Clark, whose department substantially influences the oil industry through its control of leases on federal lands, is in the oil business himself in a small way through one of his children.

Clark's financial disclosure statement, made available by the Interior Department on Wednesday, shows 1983 income of between $2,501 and $5,000 as rent on an oil lease to Phillips Petroleum Corp. on the family ranch in Shandon, Calif. The lease itself was not assigned a value as an asset.

His statement said the oil lease income went to one of Clark's dependent children.

Gabe Paone of the department's ethics office said the Phillips had not found oil on the ranch.

The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee was informed of the lease during Clark's confirmation hearings last fall and raised no objection, Paone said.

Clark listed outside income last year of between $10,220 and $48,220, mostly in rent on an office building in Paso Robles, Calif., and interest on Treasury bills. Crop income from the ranch was listed as $2,501 to $5,000.

He listed assets of $182,007 to $210,000 and no liabilities.

The form allows government officials to list items in ranges of dollar amounts rather than exact sums.

Weld monitor spots costly errors

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — As two pieces of metal were fused together in a blinding electric arc, a computer warned the welder: "Current too high ... speed too low."

Such variations can lead to faulty welds, increasing the cost and sometimes decreasing the safety of structures such as bridges, pipelines and nuclear reactors.

But the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers says its new weld quality monitor allows those mistakes to be spotted immediately, saving time and money.

"It says, 'Hey, your process is out of control,' and that's fantastic; it keeps you from making more errors," said Roy B. McCauley, a private consultant and former director of the Center for Welding Research at Ohio State University. "What's unique about it is that you are alerted to variations in the welding process immediately."

Frank Kearney developed the weld quality monitor for the Corps at its Construction Engineering Research Laboratory here, but the agency cannot mass-produce the device.

So, the technology will be turned over Friday to National-Standard of Niles, Mich., which will make the monitors and sell them. No price has been set, but the Corps will receive a 5 percent royalty. It is the first time it has entered into such an agreement.

Kearney said the annual cost of faulty welds is "in the billions," and mistakes sometimes go undetected or they are not found until the work is done, when repairs are up to five times as expensive.

Kearney said the $500,000 cost of developing the new monitor will be recouped quickly. During a field test of his monitor, it saved the Corps $750,000 on a turbine shaft for an Arkansas River hydroelectric plant, said Kearney.

Welding touches almost every industry — it is used to assemble cars, ships, airplanes and tanks, to strengthen skyscrapers, and to connect oil and gas pipelines.

Engineers now depend on such checks as X-ray testing after welds are complete.

Phelps Dodge withdraws its contract offer

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Phelps Dodge Corp., the target of a bitter 11-month-old strike by 13 unions, says it is withdrawing a contract proposal offered last June, partly because of falling copper prices.

Meanwhile, the deadline for dozens of striking miners to move out of company-owned homes in two communities expired today, and Phelps Dodge said it would go to court in the next few days to seek evictions.

Tom McWilliams, assistant director of labor relations for Phelps Dodge, said Wednesday the company withdrew its contract offer — previously rejected by the unions — because of "significant developments" including the dwindling price of copper. The company now sells the metal for 69 to 70 cents per pound, compared with about 80 cents per pound last July.

The contract offer included elimination of a cost-of-living escalator, lower wages for new employees and cuts in benefits.

Some 1,200 workers have refused to cross picket lines since July 1 at Phelps Dodge operations in Morenci, Ajo, Douglas and Bisbee. The company has kept its Morenci and Ajo mines open by hiring replacements.

Dr. Jorge O'Leary, a Clifton physician who became a leader in the strike after being fired last fall by Phelps Dodge, said strikers were planning to resist evictions in Morenci, where notices were sent to 29 strikers, through such peaceful "civil disobedience" tactics as sit-ins.

"We will be defending anybody they seek to evict on several different grounds," said Jerry Barrett, a Phoenix attorney for the United Steelworkers of America. He said there are "substantial legal reasons why they can't evict a person simply because of being a striker."

So far, only one Ajo striking worker and his family have been evicted.

Sgt. Allan Schmidt, spokesman for the state Department of Public Safety, said the agency will beef up its forces in Morenci for the weekend "a little bit" above its complement of 20.

Choctaw Tile and Marble have a wide selection to choose from in their unique showroom. The floor is made up of tile that is available to you. This way you can actually see what it looks like on the floor.

Choctaw Tile and Marble means quality products and service

Choctaw Tile and Marble has been busy showing Midlanders that quality craftmanship is still available to them. Choctaw has complete over 2100 jobs since they opened their Midland-based company in January 1975.

They get this many jobs because their work always meets or exceedsthe Tile Counsel of Americ a's (TCA) specification. The TCA sets the industry's standards for tile installation.

Choctaw believes in keeping with the latest technics. They do this by attending the Southern Tile, Terrazzo and Marble Contractors Association Convention. George "T" Barr, President, attended the April 25-28, 1984 convention in Cincinnati, Ohio. Choctaw also visits the tile manufacturing plants to learn first hand the characteristics of a particular tile. Within the last year, Oscar Barr toured the Aztec Tile plant in San Antonio and the D'Hanis plant in D'Hanis, Texas.

You may be wondering what makes Choctaw different? Oscar Barr, Vice President of Choctaw, feels strongly that their business concept is more conducive to providing the services and products demanded by the public. They do not subcontract or piece their work to others. All of their tile and marble work is done by their employees, which means consistant quality each and every day. Choctaw tilesetters' experience ranges from 9 to 35 years -- over 100 combined years of experienceto better serve their customers.

An example of the confidence they have in their work is the fact that they give a five year waranty on their shower installation and/or repair.

Choctaw is always ready to show customers their cultured marble department. Harold Boze, manager, hs over 14 years experience pouring culture marble. He uses the best materials available and he requires that each stage of work be inspected by himself, George or Oscar. This in-house control assures that Choctaw reputation for quality is maintained.

Choctaw has the only in-house facilities for cutting and polishing natural marble in the Midland/Odessa area. they can make table tops, fireplaces, mantles, and even replolish old marble tops. They are about to finish facricating and installating natural marble in a house for a local builder. Their next major project is the Cowboy Art Museum in Kerrville, Texas.

While discussing tile and marble, George "T" Barr brought up a very important point. If it is necessary to watch your budget, remember - the installation is one of your most important considerations. If laid incorrectly, the most expensive tile or marble will, in time, crack, chip or break loose. But if installed properly, a less expensive tile or marble will look beautiful for years.

Many people do not realize that Choctaw is also a ceramic tile and marble distributor. The showroom at Choctaw is a unique experience. The floor has been divided into sections and over 40 kinds of floor tile have been installed. Within the showroom, Choctaw has over 700 floor tile and 100 marble samples. Choctaw keeps on hand several of the more popular natural marble slabs and will assist you in selecting the one that best enhances your decor. Also, they have 18 cultured marble colors as well as a large cultured marble tub with a 6-jet Hydro Unit System, a medium and a small tub and vanity tops.

Choctaw Tile and Marble is having a 10% discount from posted prices on all tiles in their showroom through June. Present this article with your next order of tile and receive an additional 5% discount. Their showroom is located at 2550 Flynt. See their ad shown below or call them at 685-3071.

The B/I pages are where your business should advertise

The Business/Industry page is published by the Midland Reporter-Telegram as a service to the businesses of the Permian Basin.

Three pages are devoted each week to the Business/Industry pages (B/I): a double page spread on Sunday and one page on Tuesday.

The advertisements seen on these pages are directly related to the stories and photographs. Through a six month (26 weeks) or a three month (13 weeks) contract, businesses are given constant exposure to the literate public.

The stories and photos compliment the advertisements, giving the reader an in-depth view of the business. The reader is exposed to specific details and pertinent information not otherwise found on a small advertisement.

Midland houses between 3,500 and 4,000 businesses, reports the Midland Chamber of Commerce. With this amount of competition, constant exposure each week, for 26 or 13 consecutive weeks, can only promote interest to help the prospective business.

The businesses of the Permian Basin are as fascinating as they are numerous. Currently, the B/I pages are used by a wide variety of businesses that can provide many of the essential tasks that you desire.

Any and all businesses are encouraged to join the Midland Reporter-Telegram's Business/Industry pages, regardless of the nature of the business. All businesses, corporate or independent, are invited to consider this opportunity

For further information, contact the Advertising Department of the Reporter-Telegram at (915) 682-5311. The staff will be happy to quote prices and discuss potential story material. Call 682-5311 and let the Business/Industry pages work for you.

Cook's Pantry Buffet is now open in two locations to serve you better. If you don't feel like cooking but want a home cooked meal, stop by Cook's Pantry Buffet today.

Cook's Pantry No. 2 is now open

For all of you Midlanders who have come to know and love Cook's Pantry Buffet you are in luck! The Stone family has openned Cook's Pantry No.2. in the Blank's Building located at 310 W. Wall in downtown Midland. The same great service and selection will be available at the buffet style restaurant as you can find at No.1. Now even though the old Cook's Pantry wasn't far from downtown this will be even more convenient. They will also be serving filtered water at both No.1 and No.2 so if you just can't stand city water you will glad to know that you can get a good cup of coffee or tea without the after taste.

Cook's Pantry Buffet also comes in handy on those days when you just can't seem to bring yourself to eat at another "fast food" place. No.1 is located only a short drive from downtown Midland and No. 2 is right downtown at 310 W. Wall (The Blanks Building). The quick buffet service makes it perfect for the business person who has to eat and be back in the office in an hour.

Cook's Pantry is now open under the original owners, Chester and Ysleta Stone. Richard Stone is the manager of No.1 and Craig Getzloff will be managing No. 2.offer you good home cooked meals at a reasonable price. Meals are served buffet style and you are always welcome to come back for seconds. Most foods are made from scratch right in their kitchen, and the foods are so delicious, you would not expect to find them anywhere but your own kitchen.

For example, most of the soups are made fresh from scratch. There are always at least three meat items on the lunch menu, one is always pressure-fried chicken. The mashed potatoes are not instant, they are made from real potatoes. You will always find an excellent country style gravy every day at Cook's. The lunch menu change daily, so you can eat at Cook's every day without having to worry about eating the same food day after day. For those of you with a lighter appetite, there is always a salad plate . You can have it alone or with a bowl of homemade soup.Lunch at Cook's Pantry is served from 11:00 to 2:00, Monday through Friday.

Breakfast at Cook's Pantry is something you definately do not want to miss. Breakfast includes fresh buttermilk biscuits, hash browns, grits, bacon and both link and patty sausage. Country gravy is also available at breakfast, along with scrambled eggs, eggs fried to order, and even pancakes are included with breakfast. Once again, as always, seconds are welcome. And next time you come in, try our new cinnamon rolls. Breakfast is served from 6:00 to 10:00 Monday through Friday, and 6:00 to 11:00 on Saturday. Cook's Pantry is closed Sundays.

It is almost time for the horse races to begin at Ruidoso and many of you will be going to watch.It is good to know that even when you are far away from home, you can get a home-cooked meal. The Whispering Pines Restaurant in Ruidoso is owned by the Stone family who-take the same care in preparing your meals there as they do in Midland. The quality and taste is superb, just as it is here. If you like the Cook's Pantry you will love the Whispering Pines. Being able to enjoy a delicious home-cooked meal when you are that far away from home makes it all that much nicer. Relax and enjoy your vacation. Let Whispering Pines do your cooking for you. Tell all your friends about Whispering Pines and remember them when you go to Ruidoso.

Save yourself the time and trouble of cooking. Let Cook's Pantry do your cooking for you. Their breakfast hours are 6 a.m. to 10 a.m., Monday through Friday and 6 a.m. to 11a.m., Saturday. Lunch is served from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., Monday through Friday. Cook's Pantry is closed on Sunday. Call-in orders can be placed by calling 683-1463 for No. 1 and 683-3004 for No.2. Horse racing enthusiasts remember also the Whispering Pines in Ruidoso. By eating at any of the places, you will get a home-cooked meal at a reasonable price.

The Rack- a safe, clean place to shoot pool and enjoy yourself

When you close your mind and picture a "pool hall" you probably think of a dirty, smoke filled room filled with the type of people you would just as soon avoid. That may have been true in the past and if you look hard you could probably still find on today but as Lynne Headrick, manager and co-owner of The Rack, stated, "The old pool halls are like water in the desert—evaporating rapidly."

If you like to shoot pool but don't have a table at home, there is no need to deprive yourself any longer. The Rack, located at the corner Midkiff and Andrews Highway, is the answer to a pool player's dreams. It is clean, roomy and smoke free (for the most part). There is plenty of room between the tables and you can even get a sandwich or steak fingers from the snack bar while you shoot.

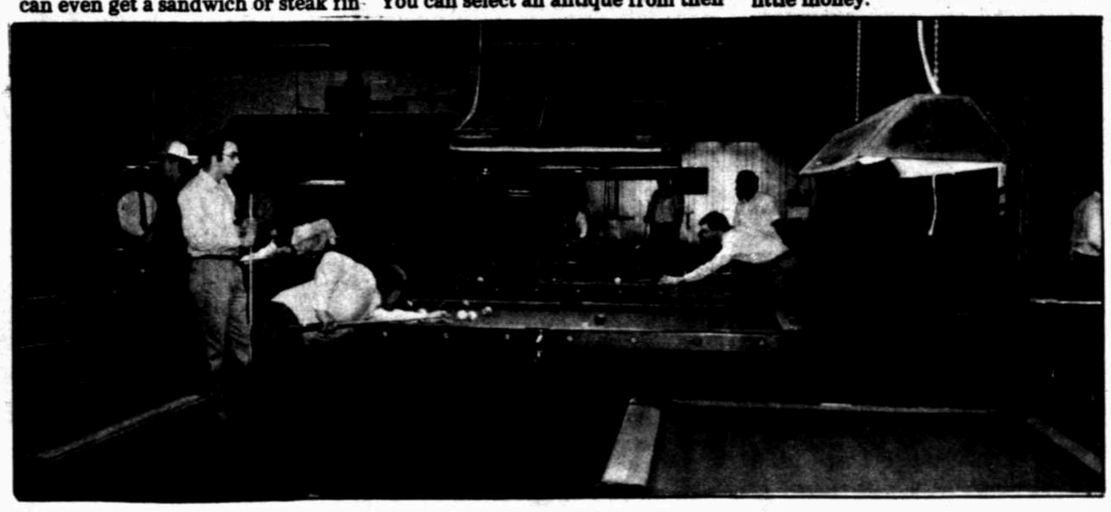

You will also be pleasantly suprised by the clientel that The Rack attracts. During the lunch rush it is not at all unusual to look around the room and see businessmen who have shed their coats and worries to enjoy a game of pool with colleagues and friends. In the evenings and on weekends it would be of no suprise to the regulars to see a father and son shooting pool together. The Rack feels that they are a family style establishment and one visit will assure you that they are right.

Besides being an excellent place to shoot pool, The Rack is also the most complete billiard and gameroom supplier between Dallas and El Paso. You can select an antique from their floor or one of the other used tables. They can also order a new table for you.

Another fact that will assure you that The Rack is a reputable establishment is the fact that they are very active in charity work for Midland. Lynne Headrick has been donating his time and knowledge to the March of Dimes and the Midland Youth Center.

The Rack is a private club that sells memberships for $10.00 but they are also open to the public. The only thing that a non-member can't do that a member can is buy beer. So everyone is welcome to come by and enjoy a game of pool.

Ladies play for free Monday through Thursday and until 6p.m. on Friday. So bring a date and save a little money.

As you look at this picture these people do not look threatening nor do they look like the type of crowd you would expect to find in a "pool hall". Yet all of these men are having lunch at The Rack, located at Midkiff and Andrews Highway. The Rack is the clean, safe place to shoot pool in Midland.

There's more to a diamond than meets the eye. And to understand the differences between diamonds is to understand the 4C's—Cut, Color, Clarity and Carat-weight. It's these 4C's that determine the value of a diamond.
The differences between diamonds are subtle indeed. But to people of discriminating taste, it's quality that makes all the difference. Your jeweler is the expert where diamonds are concerned. And he can show you high-quality diamonds in all sizes. They simply look better and will enhance your jewelry, no matter what the design.
Quality. It's unmistakable. And it's as important in diamonds as in anything else you own.

Standard & Poor's head has good view

NEW YORK (AP) — As head of a company that runs one of the nation's two major debt rating services, Howard D. Hosbach gets a better look than most at how corporate America works.

Hosbach, 53, is president and chief executive of Standard & Poor's Corp., whose pronouncements on creditworthiness significantly affect how much it costs businesses and state and local governments to borrow.

The company is more than a debt rater, however, as it provides a wide range of information about businesses and commentary on the financial markets.

Despite his influence on Wall Street, Hosbach employs a low-key style he says is based on the premise that a leader's job is to hire good people and let them work with as little interference as possible.

"The greatest danger of any CEO is one who believes he is so smart or so good that he tries to make all the decisions himself," Hosbach said.

"Those are the people who usually end up faking themselves out. In today's complex society and business world, I don't believe any one person is smart enough to run anything his or her own way. It just doesn't work," he said.

Hosbach, the son of an accountant, was born March 9, 1931, just as the country was trying to rise from the Great Depression.

He grew up in Cliffside Park in northern New Jersey, and attended college at Farleigh Dickinson University, commuting by bus from home and working afternoons filling orders at a book company warehouse.

He married the girl next door, Eugenia Paracka, and they are still married today, more than 30 years and four daughters later.

After graduation and a stint in the military, Hosbach joined McGraw-Hill Inc.'s book division in 1955 and three years later became advertising manager of a medical journal that the company published.

Howard D. Hosbach

He held several marketing positions with the company's book division in the 1960s, rising to general manager for sales by 1969.

A year later, Hosbach took a risk.

McGraw-Hill had acquired S&P, a Wall Street institution with roots reaching to 1860 when Henry Varnum Poor published his "History of Railroads and Canals in the United States." The new owners wanted someone to straighten out its marketing and sales operations.

Hosbach was named group vice president and moved from the parent company's midtown Manhattan headquarters to the Wall Street area where S&P operates.

"I gave up my benefits, came down here and literally started all over again. It has turned out to be the love of my life, as far as the business side goes," he said.

Within three years, Hosbach became executive vice president and, in 1981, was elected president and chief executive. The company has about 1,200 employees and posted an operating profit of $37.5 million on revenue of $134.8 million in 1983.

He said he has tried to nurture a collegial atmosphere at S&P in which employees discuss issues freely without worrying whether it fits the chief executive's view of the world.

"I don't want to carry a scepter, or wear a crown and cloak. People like that, I think, inwardly lack a real sense of peace and confidence. So they have to obscure it all with 'Hail to the Chief' and that kind of baloney," Hosbach said.

Hosbach said the biggest fault he has found among corporate managers is the tendency of founders to try to run things too long.

"Don't try to make the day-to-day decisions," Hosbach advised, "because you're going to make them just like you were running this very embryonic company when that is not what you are running any more."

Hosbach said he does not think any one part of the company will bear his imprint once he leaves, but he says that would suit him fine.

John T. Horsley

Bobbye J. Young

DENNIS QUIROZ has been associated with the American National Insurance Co. of Galveston for 12 years. He will be attending his fifth company sales conference in June in Miami, Fla.

JOHN T. HORSLEY retires from Exxon Co., U.S.A. with 33 years of service.

He is assigned as section head in the Midcontinent Division, General Accounting, located in Midland.

In 1959 he joined the company in St. Elmo, Ill. Assignments in the accounting group continued in Mattoon, Chicago and Oakbrook, Ill. For a short time he was in Evansville, Ind., later in Oklahoma City, and in 1968 he transferred back to Evansville as services supervisor. Accounting assignments with increasing responsibilities followed and in 1970 a transfer brought him to Midland.

His hometown is Tuscola, Ill., and in 1951 he received a B.S. degree in business education from Eastern Illinois University.

Friends joined the Horsleys at a luncheon held recently in honor of his retirement.

BOBBYE J. YOUNG has been named project co-ordinator for Petroplex Marketing Research. She has recently returned to Midland after spending nine years in Anchorage, Alaska. While in Alaska, she served as president of the Alaska Federation of Women's Clubs, secretary of the Alaska Protection and Advocacy for Developmentaly Disabled and served two terms on the board of directors for Common Sense for Alaska, Inc.

Prior to living in Alaska, Young worked locally with Adams Electric, Muldrow Aerial Survey, and served as a cafeteria manager for the Midland Independent School District.

MICHAEL D. DORSEY has been promoted to plant supervisor of Cox Marketing, Inc. Dorsey's new responsibilities include the supervision of the company's USDA-approved meat processing plant, sauce production facilities, and warehousing operations. He has been employed with Cox Marketing since October, 1982 and has handled various areas of responsibility since that time. Cox Marketing, also known as Comark, is a food distribution corporation located at Midland Air Terminal and is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Taco Villa, Inc.

Dorsey received his B.B.A. from Texas Tech University in 1977 following a 12-year tour of duty with the U.S. Navy.

PATSY & BILL BOHANNAN of Midland were among the 4,000 members of the National Association of Realtors who attended the Association's 1984 Mid-Year Conference and Trade Expo here May 5-10, which featured an appearance by President Reagan.

In addition to the President, many leading national figures spoke to the real estate industry and the overall economy. Among the key speakers at the conference were: Rep. Barber Conable (R-N.Y.), senior minority member of the tax-writing House of Representatives Ways and Means Committee; Robert Strauss, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee; House Majority Whip Tom Foley (D-Wash.); Sen. Richard Lugar (R-Ind.), chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee, and Sen. Jake Garn (R-Utah), chairman of the Senate Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee.

The National Association of Realtors, the nation's largest trade association, represents more than 600000 members involed in all phases of the real estate industry.

FLOYD C. WRIGHT has been promoted to vice president-administrative services, and DONALD H. GULLQUIST has been named treasurer of Houston Natural Gas Corp.

Wright joined HNG in 1950 as an internal auditor. Prior to his most recent appointment, he had been director of transportation and director of administrative services. A native of Cleveland, Texas, Wright holds a BBA degree from the University of Houston.

Gullquist, a native of Oak Park, Ill., joined HNG in 1975 as a financial analyst. Prior to being named treasurer of the corporation he was assistant treasurer for HNG, Oasis Pipe Line Co. and HT Gathering Co. and treasurer of HNG's transmission subsidiaries. He holds a BS degree from Illinois College.

JONATHAN M. STICKLAND has joined the staff of Hrubetz Oil Co. in their Dallas headquarters as production engineer. Stickland attended the New Mexico School of Mines where hw received a bachelor of science degree in petroleum engineering. Prior to joining Grubetz, Stickland was employed with Buttes Resources Co. in Dallas and was a consultant for Aero Energy Ltd.

Previously, Stickland was employed with Coastal Oil & Gas in Houston and Denver and Cities Service Oil Co. in Denver and Midland. Stickland is a member of the Society of Petroleum Engineers.

W.J. (JACK) LORD JR., PHD., holder of the Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc. Centennial Professorship in business communication, won the Jack G. Taylor Award for Excellence in Teaching in The University of Texas College of Business Administration.

A former chairman of UT's General Business Department, Lord was instrumental in founding the American Business Communication Association, which he has sered as president. He also is an ABCA Fellow.

LEVI S. HOLT, vice president and personnel manager & MALYNN A. HARRIS, employment representative for First City National Bank in Midland, earned Personnel Accreditation Institute's accreditation as a professional in human resources.

This accomplishment signifies that they have passed a rigorous examination showing a grasp of the considerable body of knowledge in the field of Human Resource Management. Theoretical knowledge and practical experience combained are requirements for accreditation.

Phone center chain to triple in size

FORT WORTH — John V. Roach, president, C.E.O. and chairman of Tandy Corp. reported that during the third quarter of 1984 the company will more than triple the size of its Radio Shack Telephone Center chain. Fifty-five new centers will be opened in more than 20 new markets. The total will be eighty centers, in about 40 major market areas nationwide. Additional Telephone Centers will be opened in 1985. Radio Shack Telephone Centers offer business telephone systems with two to 16 incoming telephone lines, and residential telephone equipment, along with installation, maintenance and leasing.

Th company opened its first Telephone Center on Feb. 14, 1983. Sine that time, it has tested stand-alone and combination store arrangements. Ten present locations are classed as "combination" stores, physically located with Computer Centers, but operating with separate management, sales staff, and profit and loss responsibility.

"After analyzing the results of our present twenty-five telephone centers, we have decided to open the new ones in combination with Radio Shack Computer Centers. This approach was selected to take advantage of synergy in both customers and equipment with Radio Shack Computer Centers, and economy of operation — thus profitability," Raoch said.

"We are a serious, long-term player in the telecommunications marketplace," concluded Roach. "It is our goal to offer not only outstanding equipment values, but excellent installation and maintenance support as well."

Efforts geared toward making changes in Texas homestead law

By BILL KIDD
AUSTIN BUREAU

Proponents of changes in the Texas homestead law to allow secondary mortgages are gearing up for another effort in the 1985 Legislature, arguing the public supports such a change.

Efforts in 1983 to have a constitutional amendment submitted to the voters to allow Texans to pledge their homes as collateral for debt failed.

Supporters of the change have been meeting regularly to discuss how to win legislative approval.

Bob Duke, Austin, Texas Consumer Finance Association, reports proposals are in the "drafting stage," and not yet complete.

Talks have been going on, Duke says, with "varios interest groups." ranging from title insurance and consumer groups to the Gray Panthers.

The Texas Savings and Loan League hasn't taken any position on the proposal, but has been monitoring the sessions.

Bankers appear to be less interested than other lenders.

Savings and loan associations are reported to be divided on the question, partly due to the fact that they often are the first-mortgage lenders for homes.

One savings and loan official says that while some associations want to be able to tap what's called a "wonderful market," which is expected to be opened up should such a change in the law pass, there's concern the change would unsettle Texas laws and make Texas mortgages less attractive on the secondary mortgage market.

At present, those mortgages are selling well, and savings and loans may be wary of making any changes which could make them less attractive.

Duke says polls taken on the question are running "70 to 75 percent positive" or higher.

Texans for Home Value Access, a group involved in last year's attempt, is expected to be the lead organization for the 1985 effort.

New regulations dealing with small-quantity hazardous waste generators are to go to the State Board of health this month, Bureau of Solid Waste Management, Texas Department of Health reports.

JackCarmicheal, BSWM, says such generators — producing less than 1,000 kilograms (or approximately 2,200 pounds) of wastes per month — aren't now "fully regulated" under Texas or Federal provisions.

The bureau is continuing efforts to find ways for safe disposal of such wastes, Carmichael notes, reporting in each of the state's standard metropolitan statistical areas, there is a municipal waste site permitted to receive small quantities of such industrial wastes.

Those wastes would be limited to two percent of the volume of the site.

TDH also is reviewing recommendations that the State join with site opertors to provide "some type of protection for long-term liability" if such wastes are accepted, with that proposal also being presented to the Governor's Task Force on Hazardous Waste.

State Board of Insurance reports an increasing number of complaints from consumers, and predicts that volume will continue to grow this year — partly due to requirements effective Sept. 1.

Commissioner of Insurance Tom Bond notes that all policies sold in Texas will have to carry a "consumer complaint notice" giving the name and address of the board.

"We all agree that this notice will generate more business for us," Bond says.

"We just don't know how much."

Even without that notice, Bond says, monthly volume of complaints during the first seven months of fiscal 1984 was 50 percent higher than for fiscal 1982, with half of the complaints relating to property and casualty insurance involving auto insurance. SBI will hold its annual hearing on auto insurance rates and rules August 22, and preliminary indications are that the insurance industry will be seeking an increase.

In 1983, the industry requested an average statewide hike of 11.4 percent, but received only 3.9 percent, the increase recommended by the board's staff.

Texas Department of Banking has given final adoption to its rules relating to loan production offices, after receiving only limited comment from banks on the proposals.

The rules are to eliminate questions on whether such operations are permitted under Texas statutes forbidding a bank to do business in more than one place.

Members of the banking section of the State Finance Commission earlier agreed with Banking Commissioner James L. Sexton's interpretation that such offices don't violate the prohibition, and authorized the rule to that effect.

Consumers paid to replace old water-heating systems

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission in cooperation with Robertshaw Controls Company announced that Robertshaw has offered to pay $150 to consumers who replace certain old liquid propane gas water-heating systems with new LP gas water-heating units.

Robertshaw indicated that because of their age, critical parts of the safety contrl on some older systems can ultimately wear out, leading to a potentially dangerous condition.

Known as the Unitrol A-1 series, the safety controls were manufactured between 1946 and 1955 and last distributed in 1960. The firm reports that 475,000 LP-type controls were produced. These controls have been involved in explosions and fires in which there have been deaths, prsonal injuries, and propertu damage. The company has records of 24 incidents involving 33 injuries and 7 deaths occurring during the 38-year period from 1946 to present.

Fewer than 1,000 controls of the 475,000 LP-type controls produced are believed to remain in service. Control valves used in water heaters fueled by natural gas ae not involved in this program.

BOTTOM LINES

TEMPLETON ENERGY INC.

HOUSTON — Templeton Energy Inc. announced its earnings (unaudited) for the three months ended March 31, 1984.

Reported net income for the three months ended March 31, 1984 of $785,000 or $.05 per share. Comparative net income for the three month period of the preceding year was $1,142,000 or $.07 per shae. The decrease in net income from the level of the previous year is primarily attributable to increased natural gas curtailments (principally by Columbia Gas Transmission Co.) during the first quarter of 1984, increased operating expenses due to the severity of the 1983-84 winter and an increased tax rate compared to the rate applicable in the first quarter of 1983.

Revenues for the three months ended March 31, 1984 of $5,465,000 were relatively flat compared to revenues of $5,515,000 for the corresponding period in 1983.

WHITING PETROLEUM CORP.

DENVER — Whiting Petroleum Corp. reported sharply higher revenues for the three months ended March 31, 1984.

Revenues increased to $387,296 from $161,884 for the 1983 first quarter. The company had a net loss of $24,692 for the latest quarter compared with a $11,559 loss for the 1983 quarter. The loss in each of the quarters amounted to less than one cent per share.

Whiting Petroleum was formed in Dec. 1983 through the consolidation of three companies — Keba Oil & Gas Co., Hingeline-Overthrust Oil and Gas Inc. and closely held Whiting Petroleum Corp. Revenues and earnings of Keba and Hingeline are not included in the first quarter 1983 financial results.

UNOCAL CORP.

Unocal Corp. and its subisidiary, Union Oil Co. of California, recorded first quarter net earnings of $180.1 million or $1.04 per share. This is a $) PERCENT INCREASE OVER THE $128.3 million, or 74 cents per share, earned in the same period a year ago.

The major positive factor was increased production of crude oil and natural gas in our overseas operations, especially in the Netherlands, Indonesia and Thailand. Lower dry hole expenses, both foreign and domestic, also added to earnings as did higher sales volumes and margins in our refining and marketing segment. In addition, chemicals earnings improved due to higher sales volumes and prices for fertilizer products. These gains were prtially offset by lower domestic crude oil production and prices, and lower investment tax credits.

Oil speakers available to organizations

The West Texas Oil Information Committee of the Texas Mid-Continent Oil & Gas Association, announces that it has speakers available to speak to groups on energy-related issues.

The purpose of the program, according to Charlie Rowton, Exxon public affairs represenative and chairman of the committee, is to provide the general public with factual information to promote better understanding of the oil industry's role as a good citizen and economic factor in Texas.

Currently 20 individuals with expertise in the fields of petroleum engineering, geology, petroleum land management, law and marketing are available for speaking engagements.

Some of the topics for presentation are: frontier energy development, natural gas decontrol, West Texas oil industry outlook, developments in gasoline marketing and other topics

More information and speaker engagements may be had by calling Charlie Rowton, 683k-0557,or Gene Motter at 685-5145.

Schrafft closes candy plant

BOSTON (AP) — The Schrafft Candy Co., manufacturer of chocolates, candy corn and spearmint leaves since 1928, says it will close its last plant, eliminating 800 full and part-time jobs.

Officials of American Safety Razor of Staunton, Va., owner of the candy company, issued a terse statement on the closing Thursday.

"We are curtailing manufacturing operations here," said Earl Howard, director of corporate administration. "We have no comment to make about it."

Recent efforts to find a buyer for the factory in Boston's Charlestown section failed, and the company's 350 full-time and 500 seasonal workers have been gradually laid off since Decemeber.

The current workforce is about 150.

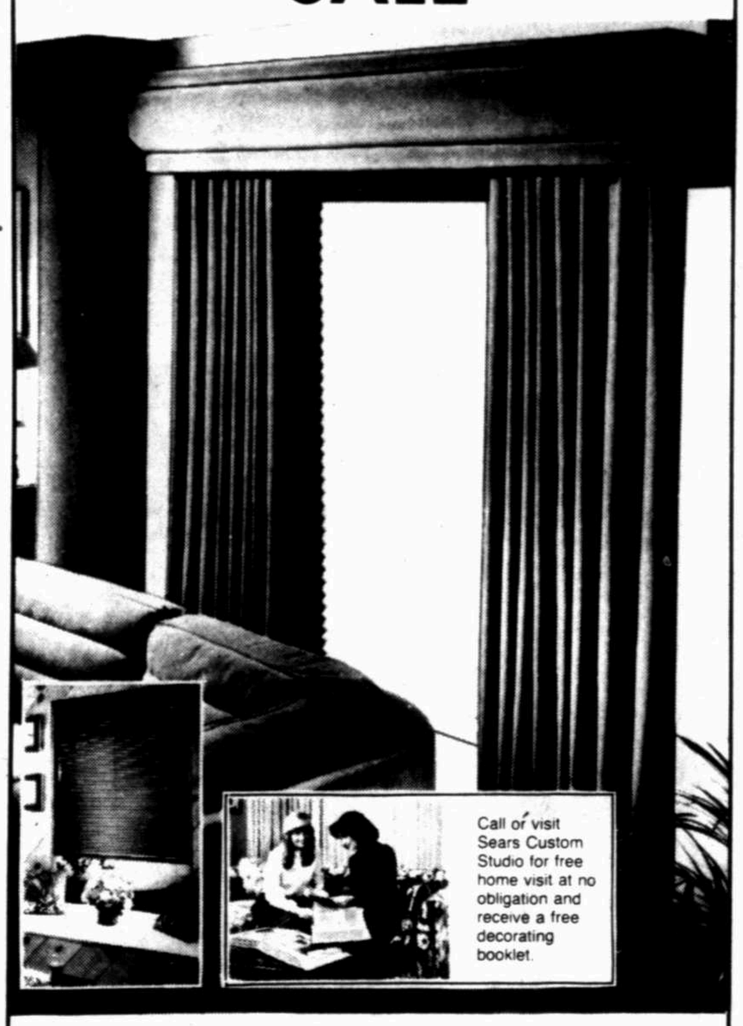

A company official who asked not to be identified told The Boston Globe that Schrafft has been hard hit by the new American interest in health.

Block named after geologist

HOUSTON — Conoco (U.K.) Limited, a subsidiary of Conoco Inc., has named its oil discovery in block 16/8b of the U.K. sector of the North Sea after noted 19-century Scottish geologist Hugh Miller.

Block 16/8b, in which the discovery well of the Miller field was drilled, was awarded to Conoco and Saxon Oil plc in 1980. Subject to the consent of the U.K. Secretary of State for Energy, Saxon Oil has agreed to assign part of its interest to Santa Fe Minerals (UK) Inc. The revised interests in the block would be: Conoco (U.K.) Limeted (operator), 50 percent; Saxon Oil plc, 30 percent; and Santa Fe Minerals (UK) Inc., 20 percent.
