Golden Horseshoe found

The Golden Horseshoe was delivered at 9:15 a.m. today to 10-year-old Monte Bennett of Pampa.

Following the clues provided in the news media and local businesses, the boy guessed that the horseshoe was waiting at the local post office, waiting for U. R. Victor, general delivery.

The Golden Horseshoe search is an annual event sponsored by the Pampa Chamber of Commerce in conjunction with the Top o' Texas Rodeo.

As winner of the horseshoe, Monte and his family will receive a free box seat for all three nights of the rodeo, and the opportunity to ride in the rodeo parade Saturday.

'Although many Pampa residents had come close to finding the horseshoe, the post office could not deliver it except to the person who asked for it in a specific way," said Kathy Topper, rodeo secretary.

Monte, the son of Daisy and Bill Bennett, 1700 Coffee, said his parents helped him figure out the clues to finding the horseshoe. They had guessed that the name "Victor" would have something to do with finding the horseshoe, but last night's clue about "I'm 'generally' where your news comes to town," told them they would have to ask for a package for Victor sent "general delivery," Monte said.

The Bennetts faced a tense moment, Mr. Bennett said, when the man in front of them at the post office asked if the golden horseshoe was there. The postal worker said, "Yes, it's here, but how do you ask for it?" Bennett said. Not knowing what else to say, the man just shrugged his shoulders and turned away.

The box containing the horseshoe, wrapped in newspaper, arrived at the Pampa Post Office from G. H. Shew, Canadian, on a mail truck following the Canadian rodeo, answering clue no. 2 which said "I came to my home by truck from the last rodeo."

Today's clue was to say "I'm waiting for you so I can be delivered."

Current perforation data ordered by RRC

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission has tightened its control of the Panhandle Fields by voting to notify all operators that they must get their oil and gas production records up-to-date and in compliance with commission rules and state law.

The commission's decision Monday put operators on notice that they are not free to produce from any level they please.

Some viewed the commission's 3-0 vote as yet another effort to halt "white oil" production but commission general counsel Susan Cory said that was not the case.

Ms. Cory said, however, the order would apply to oil operators who produce gas from a gas-only zone, which is prohibited by commission rules and state law.

Many white oil operators chill vapors to liquid which they count as oil for purposes of classifying wells as an oil or gas well. A commission order prohibiting this practice is pending in state district court.

The Monday memo, which was recommended by the commission staff, would require information on all wells that have been reworked to be submitted to the oil and gas regulatory agency.

"It has come to the attention of the commission that many wells have been completed in the Panhandle Fields in a manner which does not comply with current field rules," the memo said.

It noted that a 1938 commission special order stated that "no gas well or oil well shall be permitted to produce gas from different levels, sands or strata at the same time through the same string of casing."

Also, the memo reminded operators that a 1941 special order had instructed operators that no oil well could produce more than 500,000 cubic feet of gas a day.

The memo ordered oil and gas operators to submit within 30 days any changes in production records on file. Hearings would be set in cases where a well appeared to be improperly completed.

"Some operators feel free to perforate (wells) anywhere in the Panhandle Field, and that is not the case," said legal examiner Patrick Thompson. "They are not free, and we want to make that clear at the outset."

Thompson said the order was proposed after reports of "recurring regulatory problems" in the 1.5 million-acre Panhandle Field, which has attracted much attention in recent months.

On Monday, Commissioner Jim Nugent asked, "If we've got rules out there we haven't enforced for the last 20 or 25 years, are you saying you're going to invoke them?"

J.H. Morrow, director of the Oil and Gas Division, replied: "It's been a problem ... we've attempted to obtain compliance in the past, done a lot of testing and asked operators to report well completion conditions, so possibly we have not enforced them but that's what we're trying to do now.

"Obviously, we haven't done as good a job as we would like to."

Ms. Cory said, "I don't think it's so much a question of knowing of violations and choosing not to do anything about it, because we have continually — even as recently as 1977 — directed the operators as to what we thought the rules were and told them to stay in compliance with those rules.

"Most of the operators, from what we can tell, who have added or changed their interval open to production have not reported the changes to us."

George Singletary, senior technical examiner, underscored the value of the Panhandle Field by estimating its reserves at 1.37 billion barrels of crude oil and 5 trillion cubic feet of natural gas.

He acknowledged that as many as 10,000 Panhandle wells might be 25-years-old or older, some with casing that might have corroded, which could give a false reading on production, and he added:

"I wouldn't be hesitant one minute to call a hearing to review all the rules and all of the special orders that apply to the Panhandle Field, and if nothing else, bring them up to date."

Commission Chairman Buddy Temple said the commission vote puts it on record as saying the agency "wants information that we should have had all along, that has not been reported, and we want to know about it."

If there are violations, Temple said, the commission would take steps to correct them. "If we don't do that, why gather the information?"

Don Boucher, executive director of TEAM for the Survival of the Panhandle, said Railroad Commission staff members are "talking out of both sides of their mouth."

Commission examiners "truly believe there is a rule that says you can't produce from different strata," according to Boucher.

He maintained the Railroad Commission adopted a rule in the 1930s that "clearly" allows production on different levels.

"They are saying if you have an oil well and you are drilling into another formation then you are illegal," Boucher said. "It's downgrading the idea of a common reservoir."

Miami's city offices may be moved

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

MIAMI — By moving city offices out of the city county building into a prefabricated building, Roberts County Commissioners feel that they can save money in getting their county "holding area" up to state standards.

And, feeling the city has no other choice, Miami mayor Tom Stribling said he does not object to the move.

Commissioners discussed the jail remodeling Monday at their regular meeting.

The county has until October to prove that it is bringing its jail — a 72-hour holding area — up to state standards.

A state jail inspector said the county must provide a separate briefing room and a separate kitchen for the jail, which currently shares the city county building with the sheriff's office, the city of Miami and the fire trucks. The current "kitchen" consists of a microwave oven in the sheriff's office. The city offices consist of a main meeting room where the polling booths are located and a small office.

With a holding facility rather than a complete jail, the county holds prisoners for 72 hours before moving them to Hemphill County or Ochiltree County, which are also having overcrowding problems.

In March, commissioners looked at jail plans drawn up by architect Pat Tunnell. The plans incorporated the city and county offices and remodel the restrooms to provide access for handicapped people. The plans also include an additional jail cell. However, costs of the building renovation were estimated as high as $231,000, and commissioners felt they could not pay that much. Later, Miami resident John Sebastian submitted similar renovation plans and said the work could be done for as low as $75,000 to $85,000.

But commissioners concluded that all that needs to be done is to add the briefing room and a food preparation area and that, according to Precinct 2 commissioner Ronnie Gill, could cost as low as $10,000 if the city moves out.

County Judge Newton Cox said he has found a 14 by 40 foot prefabricated building that the city could move into. The building could be placed on concrete block in a lot between the current building and the Miami post office. He said the building, which is insulated and features bathroom facilities, would cost about $19,000.

Precinct 4 commissioner Sam Condo said he knows of a 16 by 20 foot building that could sell for less than $10,000.

Commissioners voted to consider moving the city offices out into a separate building and remodeling the current county building to comply with state jail standards, and that bids for the new building and the renovation would be looked at "separately and jointly" to figure the total cost.

Stribling, who attended the Monday meeting, did not protest the county action and he feels that the city council will go along with the county decision.

"There's not a whole lot they can do about it," Stribling said. "We're at the commissioners' court's mercy."

The city uses the two offices at the back of the building and pays no rent on the offices.

"We cannot afford to buy a building of our own," he added, speculating that the county will go ahead and let the city stay in the building rent-free.

Stribling said all the city needs is "a good size office and a good meeting room." He added that the building would also need a restroom.

"It will not have to be a real large facility," he said. "It would be nice if the city could have a say in what building we get."

Miami city council will meet at 7 p.m. Wednesday, although discussion of moving to a new building is not on the agenda.

In other business, commissioners voted to hire local contractor Larry Bryant — who also works for the city three days a week — on a contract labor basis at $400 per month.

Roberts County Appraiser Debbie Stribling reported that the county's effective tax rate — the highest the county could go above its current tax rate without holding a public hearing— is 25½ cents per $100 valuation. Judge Cox is preparing the 1986 county budget and figures the county can work with a 24 cent tax rate.

White Deer landfill gets state's approval

WHITE DEER — A state health inspector gave the newly revamped city landfill an almost clean bill of health and said it is good for another 20 years, Mayor R.W. Standefer announced at Monday's city council meeting.

Earlier this year, inspectors with the Texas Health Department declared the dump was not in compliance with state standards and ordered the city to clean it up and to set aside separate areas for metal, masonry and combustible items. In March, the city set out to build a new dump on the site of the old one at a cost of about $15,000.

Tuesday, health ispectors visited the new city dump and declared it was in 99 percent compliance with state health standards.

Standefer said the only shortcoming the state found with the landfill is that about 12 acres on the east end of the dump needs "fine graded to level it better."

"He was very well pleased with everything," he said, adding that state inspectors gave the new dump a life expectancy of another 20 years.

The new dump — 1,800 by 430 feet — is divided into three areas, one for concrete and masonry, one for metal appliances and vehicles and the third and largest area for combustible items. The combustible items area consists of a number of smaller landfills which would be built, used and filled in as years go by.

The original cost estimates were $8,000 for dump clean-up plus $4,000 to dig four pits for the combustibles. However, Standefer said the final figures totaled $11,690.

Kid show competition stiff

All-out efforts by young cowboys and cowgirls produced impressive times and close competition as the Kid Pony Show preceding the Top o' Texas Rodeo opened Monday night.

Opening night competition was in two groups for youngsters seven-years-old and under. The show continues tonight with ages 8-9 and 10-11 showing their stuff.

There were no double winners in either division on opening night, although several contestants came close.

In Group II competition for youngsters ages 6 and 7, hard-riding Stormy Nettles of Liberal, Kan., had a first and a second in the boys division, while Breezy Cox of Cheyenne, Okla., posted a first, second and third.

Layne McCasland of Wheeler had a pair of seconds in the under-five age group, narrowly missing first place in each event.

The barrel races, final event of the night, provided top performances and closest competition of the night.

In the under-five competition, Monty Eakin of Spearman edged Wheeler's McCasland by less than half a second, winning with a time of 21.30 to McCasland's 21.78. In girls' competition, a late ride by Thamsen Blackware of Seneca, N. Mex., produced a time of 23.37, edging past Jenny JoJean Hobson of Pampa, who had led to that point with 23.52.

The Group II competiton was equally close and exciting. Stormy Nettles, bidding for double victories, posted an early time of 21.67 and it stood up until late in the event when last year's champion, Chad Taylor of Perryton, got his chance. Taylor, who won the event after a wild start on a bucking horse last year, had no problems this time and his all-out ride on Sugar Foot produced a time of 18.62 and won the event, improving on the 20.99 that took first place last year.

The Group II girls barrel races produced the most impressive times of the night, with three riders breaking 20 seconds. Nikii Nettles of Liberal opened the competiton with an impressive 19.45. But the second rider, Julie Richardson of Groom, a little cowgirl riding a big horse, responded to the challenge and immediately beat that with an 18.77. Breezy Cox, the last rider in the event gave it a good try and came up just short with 18.89. Last year's Group I winner, Sequin Downey of Pampa, also had a strong finish in 20.71.

The event opened with the Gold Rush, an event in which all the contestants go inside the arena on foot and try to pull ribbons from calves tails. Winners were Wes Stribling, Layne McCasland, Josh Sirmans and Matt Reeves.

The older contestants participated in calf riding and Kendall Reedy of Wheeler was the only rider staying aboard the required four seconds.

In Group II boys flag race, Stormy Nettles won in 15.02, surviving a late challenge from Sirmans of Miami, who posted 16.39. Breezy Cox was the only girl in that division to post a time, winning in 25.36. Sequin Downey

White Deer names committee to decide on office remodeling

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

WHITE DEER — City officials will let a committee decide what type of remodeling is needed for city offices which employees say are "depressing" and crowded.

The city council set up the committee — comprised of Mayor R.W. Standefer and aldermen Raymond Blodgett and Charles Sutterfield — at its regular meeting Monday. The council also set a tentative limit of $20,000 to spend on the renovation.

At the city's June meeting, Pampa builder and civil engineer Price Smith presented aldermen with a rough plan showing how the offices can be rearranged and enlarged to allow more space. Smith's plan moves the council room to what is now a near-empty storage room in the back of the offices. The mayor, marshall and judge each get an office, while the bookkeeping area is expanded to where the marshall now works.

Smith estimated the remodeling would cost from $20,000 to $25,000.

"We can do it for a lot less than $25,000," council member Dean Wyatt said Monday. He said one cost cutting move would be to simply leave the current office setup unchanged, but move the marshall and judge to new offices in the back.

"They're not here 24-hours a day," he said of the part-time law enforcement officials. He suggested moving the two men and putting new paint and carpeting in the city office.

Mayor Standefer said he did not need his own office, "just a desk I can work out of."

Aldermen inspected the back storage room to see what work needs to be done before offices could be built there.

One obstacle in the city's remodeling plan is the centrally located bathroom area, which divides the offices from the storage room. Several council members wanted the two similar restrooms moved to the back of the building, but Standefer said that Smith believes that moving the restrooms would cost too much. The facilities in the two restrooms are alike.

City secretary Paulette Craig first suggested the remodeling in May after offices were flooded in a late April hail storm. She and other city officials asked Smith to draw up renovation plans and estimate costs. While his office re-arrangement plan could cost up to $25,000. another plan which includes new floor and paint would run about $9,000.

Neither Craig nor Smith were at the Monday meeting.

The remodeling committee is expected to meet later this month to decide what remodeling is needed and what they can afford. They will then ask Smith to draw up new plans according to their suggestions and cost limits.

City council members agreed to do repair work in the alleys behind the post office and downtown businesses. Standefer said the work will consist of leveling out the alleyways and filling in some ruts.

He explained that local mail carriers have gotten stuck in some of the ruts in the alley behind the post office and the postmaster asked if the city could put gravel in the alley there.

Sutterfield warned that if the city fixes the alley behind the post office without offering the same service to other downtown tenants "you're opening up a can of worms."

Council members also agreed to seek bids on three- and four-inch pipeline that would connect gas pumps to the city's gas dehydration unit.

Williams said that he has checked the prices on three and four inch sizes on 100-pound and 160-pound pressure pipes. The costs would range from 64 cents per square foot for the three-inch 100-pound pipe to $1.57 for the four-inch 160-pound pipe.

He reported that the city's gas dehydration unit is getting five gallons of moisture a day out of the city gas lines. The dehydrator, which the city has had for more than a decade, was put into operation in June to pull the moisture out of the gas lines. The moisture in the lines caused "wet gas" which froze up in city lines during the cold winter weather.

The city has received $1,050 on the sale of 42 surplus gas meters, Williams reported.

In other business, council members rejected all bids for the sale of a 1976 Chevrolet pick-up truck and a 1980 Plymouth the city used for a police car. Bids on the truck were $276 and $252 while the Plymouth bids ranged from $355 to $703. Council members earlier discussed either putting the two vehicles up for bids or trading them in for a new model truck. However, they agreed Monday that the pick-up bids were lower than what they felt it was worth.

Standefer said that with the bids rejected, the city will "start over" in its attempt to sell the vehicles.

Walsh to run for attorney general

AUSTIN (AP) — Republican Ed Walsh, who as Williamson County district attorney sent confessed mass killer Henry Lee Lucas to death row, today declared himself a candidate for attorney general.

Walsh said he wants to be the state's top law enforcement officer to help Texas get tough on crime.

In announcing, Walsh criticized Mattox for complaining about legislative cuts in his office's budget.

Reagan meeting legislative leaders on budget impasse

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the budget deadlock on Capitol Hill drags on, President Reagan and the top congressional Democrats and Republicans were to meet privately today at the White House to try to break the impasse.

Reagan scheduled meetings with GOP leaders today and with budget negotiators Wednesday morning.

But the president also was set to attend an unannounced meeting over cocktails in the White House Red Room at 5 p.m. today with House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass.; Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan.; House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois and Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia.

An administration official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said the evening gathering was not publicly announced "because we did not particularly want unrealistic assumptions placed against the meeting."

He added, "At this point we don't expect anything to actually happen, any deals to be struck."

However, the meeting is evidence of a growing feelingswithin the administration and on Capitol Hill that a budget compromise is all but impossible this year without the direct involvement of the top congressional leaders and the president.

BGEFORE Congress began a Fourth of July recess on June 27, Dole personally delivered a letter to O'Neill proposing that the two leaders try to cooperate in the search for a compromise when the House and Senate returned to work this week.

The House and Senate have each approved budget blueprints that would achieve about $56 billion in deficit cuts next year, but negotiators from both houses are at odds over differences between the two versions.

The plan approved by the Republican-led Senate calls for a one-year freeze on Social Security cost-of-living increases, would allow military spending to increase with inflation and would eliminate a variety of popular domestic spending programs.

The plan passed by the Democratic-led House leaves Social Security untouched, freezes military spending and generally retains the domestic spending programs.

Reagan has embraced the Senate measure and repeatedly criticized the House package. In his weekly radio address last Saturday, Reagan said the House budget "is simply not a serious document," contains "phony deficit reductions" and "would deliver a severe blow to our national security."

In several weeks of talks, budget negotiators from the House and Senate have done little more than argue about who is to blame for the stalemate.

Southwestern Bell's Riveria trip criticized

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans' telephone bills could go up because Southwestern Bell sent more than 100 people to the French Riviera for a week, says Public Utility Counsel Jim Boyle.

A company executive said the April 1984 trip was a reward for top Yellow Pages salesman. Increased Yellow Pages ad sales can help keep local rates down, the executive said.

Boyle, the state lawyer who represents ratepayers, was not convinced.

"It looks like a nice boondoggle on an annual basis for some executives," he said Monday, the start of the second week of a Public Utility Commission hearing on Bell's rate hike request.

The company wants a $277 million annual increase. Boyle says there's fat to be cut and the company could stand a $124 million rate decrease.

"This is another indication of extravagance, of a failure to operate efficiently," he said of the trip.

"If this company is entitled to a rate increase it should show that it is spending wisely and not foolishly, and this is an indication it is not doing that," Boyle said after questioning Bell Texas Vice President Richard Harris about the trip.

Boyle said any money spent on the trip comes out of Yellow Pages revenue that could be used to offset requested rate hikes.

A company publication touted the trip as a week of "experiencing the lifestyle of the rich and famous."

"This was one of the most luxurious trips I've ever been a part of," said Leonard Bagelman of Austin, a Bell employee quoted in the company publication. "It was one good thing after another."

Bell's top Texas official said the trip is routine in the business world. Texas Bell President Jim Adams called it "the type of trip often set up to motivate people to sell more."

"The more revenue they generate ... the more revenue there is to impute to the ratepayers. So, in fact, the better and more successful that kind of a trip is in motivating a sales force, the more net revenue flows through to the bottom line," said Adams.

Neither Adams or Boyle had figures on how much the trip cost. A company publication showed that 43 "winners, their spouses and guests" made the trip.

The winners were members of the company's "President's Club." Southwestern Bell President Zane Barnes of St. Louis also made the trip.

"The week was filled with activity, the weather was lovely, the accommodations were great and the food-- although too much-- was good," employee Gayle Frazier of St. Louis said in the Bell publication. "I even became something of a wine connoisseur."

The week's highlight was an awards dinner featuring a "nine-course feast of exquisite French dishes," according to the company publication.

Adams said such trips-- the 1985 trip was to Hawaii-- are a valuable incentive.

"The bottom line is plus or firms would not be doing these types of activities," he said.

Gunn to remain as board chairman of prison system

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Deflecting reports of a partisan ouster, Robert Gunn emerged from a prison board meeting saying he will remain at the helm of the corrections system board for at least two months.

Published reports over the weekend indicated that Gunn, a Republican appointed by former Gov. Bill Clements, would be ousted as chairman by the Democrat-controlled board because of Gunn's plans to campaign next year for a Republican against Democratic Gov. Mark White.

But after the board meeting, Gunn said, "I do not intend to support anyone until such time I'm off the board."

Saying "there never was an effort" to oust him, Gunn said "a consensus" of the board agreed he should stay on during the two-hour, closed-door meeting. No vote was taken, he said.

White, who was campaigning Monday for the Democratic candidate in the 1st Congressional District special runoff election, said he was pleased that the board was "going to continue to work together."

The governor downplayed any political differences with Gunn.

"As long as he's going to work to improve that prison, then there will be no political differences," White said. "I hope that he'll continue to function as a member of that board and will be trying to carry out his responsibilities, which are awesome, and make sure that we have the finest prison system in the country."

Gunn said he was "very anxious to continue as chairman" in order to carry out new prison reforms and planned to remain on the board for at least the next two months.

"I am very anxious to get things lined up, to get things running smoothly," the 60-year-old Wichita Falls oilman said.

Gunn has chaired the board during a time of upheaval in the Texas Department of Corrections, the nation's second-largest state prison system. Earlier this year, officials agreed to a settlement of a 13-year-old lawsuit filed by prisoner David Ruiz, agreeing to reforms and expansion. The settlement awaits federal court approval.

Most board members refused to discuss the executive session, which preceeded a regularly scheduled prison board meeting.

One board member, Robert Lane, said reports of Gunn's demise "totally surprised me." Asked whether he supported Gunn, he replied, "I certainly do."

Another board member, Dennis Hendrix, said Gunn's continued presence on the board was important.

"He's done an outstanding job," Hendrix said.

With Gunn's prodding, the TDC took steps toward modern prison management. Consultants were hired to scrutinize the agency's antiquated management and accounting procedures, and federal court orders were obeyed instead of opposed.

DINOSAUR SKELETONS DISCOVERED—Paleontologists Louis Jacobs, left, and Will Downs of Southern Methodist University prepare to remove a plaster-encased dinosaur skeleton, more than 100 million years old, from an excavation site near Proctor Lake in North Central Texas. (AP Laserphoto)

Geologist locates prehistoric bones

STEPHENVILLE, Texas (AP) — Scientists say fossils of a previously unknown creature buried on an ancient flood plain near here could fill in a major gap in dinosaur history.

"The thing that is important about this discovery is that these fossils are from dinosaurs and other critters of an age that we know little about," said Dr. Philip Murry of the Tarleton State University Physical Sciences Department.

The remains of a type of plant-eating, dinosaur-like creatures that lived 100 million years ago were found in June by TSU sophomore Rusty Branch during an excavation project in June.

So far, the team has uncovered six dinosaur skeletons on the western part of Lake Proctor in Comanche County, about 75 miles southwest of Fort Worth and they suspect the site holds even more fossils.

Murry and Dr. Louis Jacobs of the Shuler Museum of Paleontology at Southern Methodist University headed the excavation.

Jacobs describes the project as monumental because of its contributions toward creating a more complete view of how the earth and animals have changed.

"This finding fills in a major gap in the record and gives us a more complete picture of the workings of these animals in their environment," Jacobs said.

The site is unique in the quantity of fossils uncovered and the quality of the findings, several of which have been reclaimed intact, Murry said.

The skeletons recovered thus far are of a small ornithischian, or bird-hipped species.

Not intended for sports

My athletic prowess can be summed up in five words: I am not a jock.

Name the sport: Track, too quick. Basketball, too complicated. Volleyball, too humiliating.

I was the one who, in grade school, always came out last in the 50-yard dashes. I cannot remember my slow times because, like many childhood horrors, it has forever been blotted from my memory. All I know is that I was even slower than the little girl who crossed her eyes and ran like a penguin.

Realizing that I probably "would never be any good at sports," I sat out on most athletic activities my classmates and camp buddies were involved in. This was especially true at school where physical education class meant basketball practice. Deer Creek used to groom its roundballers at a young age — fifth and sixth grade — and those who showed no ability to dribble a basketball and sink it through the hoop were given no alternative but to sit on the bleachers, do their homework and get teased and stared at by the aspiring Antlerettes on the court.

I was one of the first to actually sit out on basketball class. But others, mainly intellectuals and dopers, soon joined me. Because of this, I feel that my little band of non-jocks and I were pathfinders in the drive to bring more variety into the P.E. program. For me, however, it was too late.

Basketball was my strong point.

My skill at volleyball was almost as sure. In my church youth group, I always ended up on the same team as the big boy basketball players who would lunge in front of me and smack the ball over the net before I even knew where the thing was. So, I'd stand there pidgeon-toed and arms flapping like a lost little bird on a Manhattan sidewalk.

I was always able to blame my lack of luck at volleyball to the tall teammates who got in my way. That was before Thursday, when I forsook my pride and sanity in a volleyball game at the staff picnic. This time, I had no big basketball players to hide behind; they were almost all grade schoolers or people shorter than me. Still, there I stood, with my mind fixed on the ball but my body frozen to the ground and the munchkins lunging in front of me to smack the ball over the net.

There have been other sports.

In an ill-fated college tennis class, I managed to lob the ball over the net a couple of times during the semester. I also did okay in a one-year college swimming class, until second semester hit and I found myself sharing the pool with the Grove High School swimming champions. Varicose veins keep me out of the pool, now.

I've also tried my luck at aerobics class. But either I ended up in advanced aerobics or I got the town sadist for a teacher. Our first warm-up song was Katrina and the Waves hyperkinetic "Walking on Sunshine," a rapid-fire piece which had my heart beating like a sub-machine gun by the end of the first verse. Next aerobics class, I hope they play something more my speed, like "Moonlight Sonata."

About the only sport I've developed any skill for is bicycling. I'm not talking about racing or moto-cross. I'm talking about getting from here to there without getting hit by a car. Peddling from The Pampa News office to Coronado Hospital combines the best of both: develop ramp jumping skills on Sommerville while improving speed and evasive action on Hobart. I'm an expert.

Still, as I cycle against the wind, with my thigh and calf muscles pushing down on the pedals and the speed pressing on my face, one thought occupies my mind:

Why couldn't I have felt as confident on the basketball court or the track field as I do on my bike?

Buzzards bothering Ballinger

BALLINGER, Texas (AP) — Ballinger's newest residents have ruffled a few feathers among their neighbors, but none of the squawking has prompted the newcomers to take flight so far.

Between 20 and 30 turkey vultures descended upon a residential neighborhood in May, setting up shop on a General Telephone Co. microwave tower and leaving a certain unpleasantness in their wake.

City Administrator Dennis Jones said some residents have complained about feathers and vulture droppings.

Officials hope to get the upper feather, however, by startling and frightening away the ghoulish birds with noise bombs designed to discourage the birds from taking up permanent residence.

Texas Rodent and Predatory Animal Control Service agent Kirk Gustad set off three booming cracker shells and a screeching whistle bomb Monday night, which sent the flock scattering.

"They are usually successful in scaring the predators away," Gustad told the Abilene Reporter-News. "This is the first thing we've tried, and we don't know if it'll work."

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Sometimes we hit the wrong targets

As anti-apartheid protesters rallied in San Franciso, where University of California regents were deciding whether to sell off stock in companies that do business in South Africa, the American Medical Association, meeting in Chicago, faced a disinvestment quandary of its own.

wo high-ranking officers of the AMA, it seems, own land in Georgia on which tobacco is grown. Even more scandalous to some, the immediate past president and chairman of the board of the association—which was set to adopt 10 resolutions about the hazards of smoking—are cigarette smokers, a fact that embarrassed some AMA members.

Good arguments for disinvestment can be made in both cases. But the protesters in San Francisco and Chicago both, exhibited a good deal of self-righteous and misguided zeal.

The evils here are apratheid and smoking.

The villains are not the California regents, who have responsibilities to the university that may have to take priority over any dubious effect disinvestment might have on South Africa's political system.

Nor are the villains the AMA officials, who, on the one hand, were apparently not aware tobacco was among the crops grown on farm land they bought as an investment 15 years ago, or, on the other, have the same difficulty stopping smoking that millions of other people have experienced.

Some people are more quickly frustrated than others when the world refuses to behave as they believe it should, or when they feel powerless to change conditions they know to be wrong. When that happens, they cast about for a target that's easy to hit, ofttimes even when it's the wrong target.

People's frustration over the actions of terrorists, for example, may lead them almost to cast the government of the United States and Israel as the villains in the hijacking of TWA 847, rather thatn the hoodlums who took the plane and held the hostages.

In a complex world, problems sometimes evade easy solutions and blame is sometimes difficult to assess. In many cases the best course (though a course not without its frustrations at times) is for individuals to live their own lives as blamelessly as possible and resist the temptation to point fingers.

Berry's World

"If there's a baseball strike, I wouldn't be surprised if the American people demand some kind of RETALIATION."

William Murchison

Just thugs and barbarians

I wouldn't presume to generalize about the hostages, or to depreciate their ordeal by criticizing them. On the other hand their spokesmen, at a Damascus press conference, made some, ah, remarkable statements that should not be passed over in silence.

It is well known by now that hostages often bond with their captors, on whom they are after all dependent. They come to "understand," perhaps even to empathize with, the captors' cause. Captivity of this sort is a form of brainwashing.

So what do we hear from Damascus? First, hostage spokesman Allyn Conwell admonishing his countrymen: "Retaliation (against the hijackers) sounds an awful lot like revenge. I don't seek any retaliation or revenge...I think we all need to find a deeper understanding of the circumstances that led up to people taking a desperate act..."

Then we hear Captain John L. Testrake of TWA Flight 847 affirming: "We've found out things about our fellow man on the other side of the world that we didn't know. And we found that they're human beings. They have the same emotions, the same fears, the same hopes, the same expectations, the same dreams for their country as we all have. And in that sense we were able to empathize with them, and we were led to have a deeper understanding of their problems that they're facing over here."

Curiouser and curiouser. And how about the rest of the hostages? Are their own feelings toward the terrorists equally tender? Testrake said he was surprised to find "how closely our views all paralleled when we finally got together to share notes with each other."

If the Damascus statements were the product of coercion, it speaks badly for the slavering attention television invariably gave terrorist-sponsored "press conferences."

But what if such sentiments are genuine? Then - well, I suppose, in all courtesy, one will have to turn away in embarrassment. "Deeper understanding of their problems," indeed! The TWA hijacking deepens chiefly our understanding of the horror and bestiality of modern terrorism.

Let us reflect on the events of last June 14. A civilian airliner full of innocent passengers, personally unconnected to the traumas of the Middle East, is hijacked. Lives are threatened and disrupted.

More horrible yet: One of the passengers, a Navy diver, is singled out. He is beaten brutally. "They dragged him out of his seat, tied his hands, and then beat him up," his seatmate related. "I watched as they kicked him in the head. They kicked him in the face and knee caps, and kept kicking him until they had broke all his ribs." A little later they shot him like a dog.

Ah, yes, just your average, everyday murderers.

But I wonder. Isn't Western civilization's cardinal problem the tendency to sympathize with its enemies: or if not to sympathize with them, then to understand them? To see their "point of view," to appreciate their "humanity"? How many times have I heard great-souled Western liberals talking of how the Soviets, with 60- or 80-million murders on their slate, are People Just Like Us. Gag!

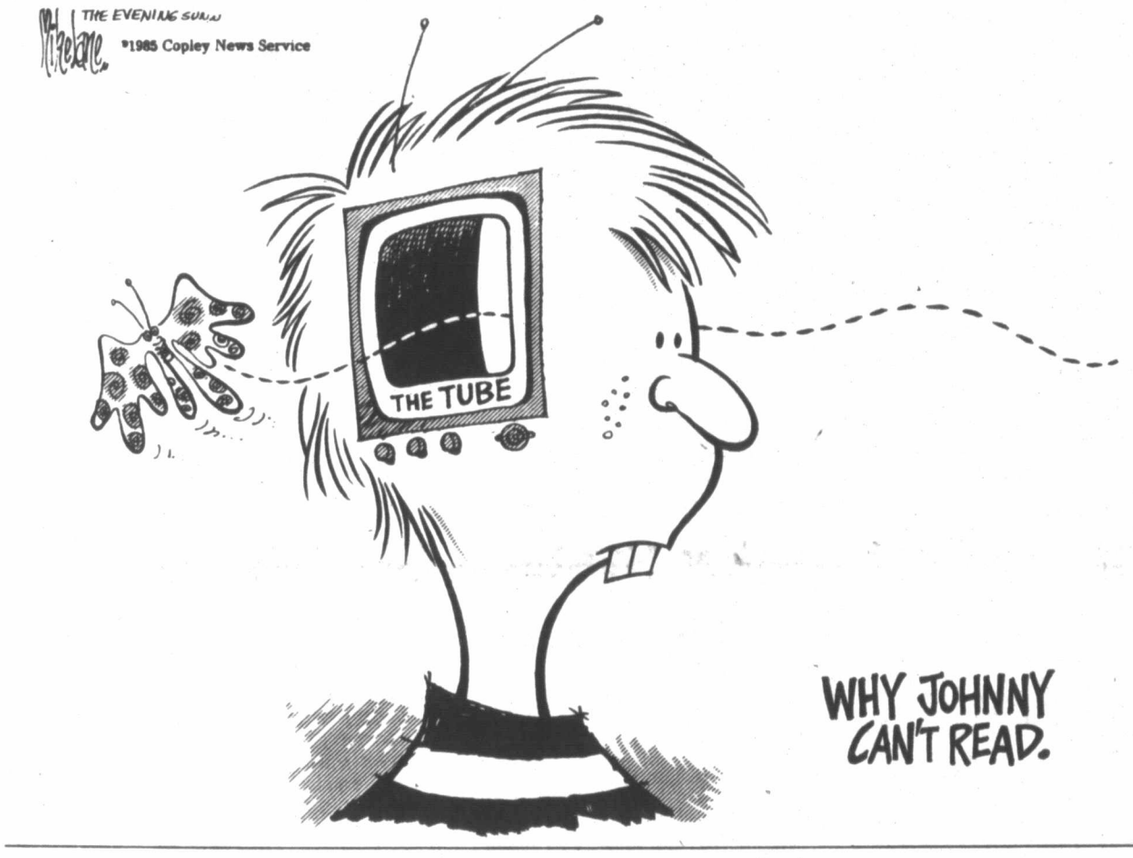

Leave the Soviets out of it for now. The necessity of the moment is to punish terrorists, whatever their provenance or motive. Ours may not be a civilized world, but it should be, and in such a world people like the TWA hijackers are not spared what Allyn Conwell calls "revenge."

The hijackers didn't seize Flight 847 to get back 700 fellow Shiites held by Israel. The Israelis had announced already their intention of releasing the captives. The hijackers' design was to humiliate the United States, and by extension the whole West.

For which they are due what? Empathy? Or enmity?

The hijackers' "emotions," "fears," "expectations," and "dreams" - such things are beside the point. The point is the harm and malice they visited on a planeload of passengers, one of them in particular; and on the sense of comparative trust that undergirds international aviation; and, not least, on the dignity of the United States.

The hijackers are, as President Reagan would have it, "thugs, murderers, and barbarians." To hell with them.

Today in History

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, July 9, the 190th day of 1985. There are 175 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 9, 1776, the Declaration of Independence was read aloud to Gen. George Washington's troops in New York.

On this date:

Ten years ago: The Palestine Liberation Organization said in Beirut that it had demanded that a group calling itself the Revolutionary Social Action Organization release American Army Col. Ernest R. Morgan, who had been kidnapped June 29. But the PLO said the group refused. Morgan was released unharmed July 12th.

Five years ago: Outgoing party co-chairman Mary Crisp told a shocked Republican National Committee she feared the GOP was suffering from "serious internal sickness" and risked losing the November election for failing to endorse the Equal Rights Amendment and taking a rigid anti-abortion stance.

Today's birthdays: Actor James Hampton is 49. Sportscaster and former football star O.J. Simpson is 38.

A cloud in friendly skies

I flew Monday. It wasn't any big deal, just a commercial flight from Cincinnati to Atlanta.

Nothing out of the ordinary happened. We were 40 minutes late arriving, which certainly is nothing out of the ordinary.

But I was nervous boarding the plane, and I was nervous throughout the flight.

That isn't totally out of the ordinary for me, either. I once refused to fly at all because I was terrified of the idea of flying. Then it became apparent to me that if I didn't start flying, I would have to select a new method of making a living, so I bit the bullet and now I fly on the average of two to three times a week.

But Monday I felt my anxiety level go back to where it was before I conquered the fear of flying, and I had a feeling a number of my fellow passengers were experiencing the same thing.

The previous few days had been terrible ones for aviation. The Air-India 747 had crashed into the sea, killing scores. It may have been the work of terrorists.

There had been another crash of a small airliner in South America and an American Airlines flight had a near miss with another aircraft. The American pilot went in a dive to avoid a collision, and three flight attendants were hurt.

All that added to the TWA hostage crisis in Beirut.

Air travel is, or has been, the safest means of transportation ever devised. The statistics continue to be a source of calming for me during the worst of flights.

But when there is a tragedy, it is usually one of enormous proportions, and even the most confident of air travelers must admit that to die in an air accident is often to die a horrid death.

When the Russians shot down the South Korean flight, I hope the passengers never knew what hit them. Imagine flying along in peace and content and then having to go through the horror of falling into the sea.

I hope the same for the Air-India passengers. God grant they went in an instant.

Many infants and children died in that Air-India crash. The wire service photo on many front pages of the doll that had been fished out of the sea by rescuers was a heartbreaker.

There was a child on my flight, a pretty blond girl of no more than 2. She was traveling with her dad.

They were amusing to watch. Obviously, Dad was new in dealing with his daughter without Mother around. And even at her tender age, the little girl seemed to realize she could bend her father to limits her mother never would have tolerated.

I watched the little girl and I thought of the children who died on Air-India. What blackened heart could snuff out the lives of such innocents, regardless of whatever cause such an inhumane act was supposed to further?

I mentioned in an earlier column the time has come to put armed guards on airplanes to protect passengers. Stagecoaches were held up in another time in our history. Trains were once robbed, and ships were taken by pirates.

Now the airplane is under attack by outlaws who are even more vicious than any of their predecessors.

It's all a shaky flier like me - and probably countless others - needed to rekindle our fears. The friendly skies have become unfriendly again.

Invasion of Nicaragua would be costly

By Don Graff

As a military operation, a government source told the New York Times a couple of weeks back, a U.S. invasion of Nicaragua would be "like falling off a log."

That confident assessment appeared in a lengthy report on preparations for the possible use of force against the Sandinista regime. The account had all the earmarks of a deliberate leak. And it still does, despite vehement denials from the direction of the White House.

Whatever, Gen. Wallace H. Nutting could not agree less with the view that the Marines can walk into Managua anytime they get the order. On the contrary, he predicts tough going for any attempt to overthrow the Sandinistas by force.

"There would be," he warns, "a big fight to dislodge them."

Nutting ought to know more than a little whereof he speaks. He is retiring after a two-year tour of duty as chief of the Readiness Command, the quarter-million-man reservoir of combat forces from which the invasion troops would be drawn. Prior to that assignment, he headed the Southern Command, headquartered in Panama, which has operational responsibility for U.S. forces in Central America.

In a recent newspaper interview, Nutting discussed the Central American situation with surprising frankness, given his position and the political sensitivity of the subject.

Perhaps not so surprising, however, considering the paper was again the Times, where it was also noted that many senior U.S. officers share Nutting's opposition to direct military action against Nicaragua. These officers have been put off by the eagerness of administration civilians to discuss the possibility publicly — if usually anonymously. The source of the "log" remark, as it happens, was an otherwise unidentified intelligence official.

Nutting sees a number of good reasons for opposing a military strike, not least being the effect on the ability of the United States to deal with challenges that might arise elsewhere.

"If you think about committing sizable pieces of the (U.S. military) force anywhere in the world — Central America or Europe or Korea," he told the Times, "then you had better have an idea in your mind about what you are going to do if something else happens, when the other guy (the Soviet Union) has the global capability he has today."

Nutting also foresees negative repercussions among U.S. allies, especially in Latin America.

"We are paying a high price now for what they call military intervention for the last 50 years," he points out.

As it is, even the talk of a possible invasion is proving counterproductive. It has given the Sandinistas an excuse for maintaining a state of emergency and tightening internal control. Further, the emphasis on a military response is having a detrimental effect on Nicaragua's neighbors. The last thing economically weak countries such as Honduras should be doing, Nutting says, is spending money for arms.

Creationism law struck down; minister says evolution a religious belief, too

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Evolution is just as much a religious belief as creationism, says a former state senator whose legislation requiring their teaching side-by-side in public schools failed a constitutional test.

The nation's only law requiring the teaching of creationism along with evolution was struck down Monday by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The law, enacted in 1981, was never enforced and was similar to an Arkansas law struck down in 1982.

Attorney General William Guste said he would have to study the opinion before deciding whether to go on to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The three-judge appellate panel upheld and expanded on U.S. District Judge Adrian Duplantier's finding in January that the law was unconstitutional.

"The act's intended effect is to discredit evolution by counterbalancing its teaching at every turn with the teaching of creationism, a religious belief," the 5th Circuit said.

"They say that creation science is a religious belief, but evolution also is a religious belief," former state Sen. Bill Keith said Monday night.

"It is the cardinal belief of Hindus, Buddhists, Unitarians and theological liberals," said Keith, a 50-year-old Baptist minister who was defeated in 1983 in his bid for re-election and now lives in Jefferson, Texas.

"The obvious question is — if the judiciary considers creation science a religious teaching, why is there no concern among the judiciary that evolution also could be categorized as a religious belief?"

Creationism is the theory that the Earth and everything on it was created all at once thousands of years ago, as outlined in the Bible's Book of Genesis.

The theory of evolution holds that life began billions of years ago and that man gradually developed from simpler forms.

The 5th Circuit said, "Not only does the Act fail to promote academic freedom, it fails to promote creation science as a genuine academic interest. If primarily concerned with the advancement of creation science, the Act, it certainly appears to us, would have required its teaching irrespective of whether evolution was taught."

Martha Kegel, New Orleans director of the American Civil Liberties Union, which fought the law, was jubilant.

Cop killer executed after calling society 'cold-blooded murderers'

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Henry Martinez Porter, calling society "a bunch of cold-blooded murderers," was executed early today for the slaying of a Fort Worth police officer nearly 10 years ago.

Porter, the second Texas prisoner to be given lethal injection in two weeks, insisted to his last breath that the killing of Officer Henry Mailloux was in self defense.

"I want people to know that they called me a cold-blooded murderer, and I shot a man who shot me first," Porter said in a final statement as he was strapped to a gurney in the death chamber.

"I didn't tie anyone down on a stretcher and put poison into his veins from behind a locked door. I call this and I call your society a bunch of cold-blooded murderers."

Porter also complained he was a victim of prejudice against Mexican Americans.

"They call it equal justice, but it is your equal justice," he said. "A Mexican life is worth nothing."

He then asked for forgiveness from God and asked a prison chaplain to give his best to his family.

Porter, 43, from San Antonio, is a former painter's helper with a lengthy criminal history that included burglary, robbery, assault, forgery and auto theft. He was an acknowledged drug addict who said his habit once reached $1,000 a day.

Porter was on Death Row for nearly eight years and became the fifth inmate this year to be executed in Texas.

He had asked last week that his attorneys halt all appeals. No last-minute attempts were made to stop the execution.

"We have exhausted all of our legal avenues," his attorney, Dennis Tor, said last week.

Porter spent his final day visiting with relatives, including his daughter, brother and cousins.

For his final meal, he selected steak, refried beans, flour tortillas, salad, ice cream and chocolate cake.

"He told us to be strong. He's already accepted it (his death)," said Porter's daughter, Imelda Cortinas. She said she gave her father a picture of Christ and he gave her a taped messsage for his grandchildren.

Ms. Cortinas, who is expecting her fourth child shortly, said she saw no justice in the execution of her father and said her feelings were the same as the slain officer's family.

"What they feel for their family is the same as I feel for my father," Ms. Cortinas said.

Porter was calm on Monday and preferred to talk about his family, not about the crime or the execution, said his brother, Edward.

"He's accepted it," Edward Porter said. "He never really wanted to talk about it. It's just one of those things that happened."

Porter was tried and convicted twice of the Nov. 29, 1975 slaying of Mailloux. The first conviction was overturned. The second was appealed all the way to the Supreme Court.

The officer, investigating a string of convenience store robberies, pulled over the car Porter was driving. A struggle ensued in which Mailloux was shot fatally. Porter also was wounded in the scuffle, but recovered from his injuries.

LIFESTYLES

ENGLISH COUNTRY-STYLE living and dining area at left used to be a seldom - used formal dining room. Merged with the kitchen at right by removing an intervening wall, the large room now serves as a charming family haven, hub of home activities.

Unused dining area becomes family haven

If you have a formal dining room in your home that's doing little besides collecting dust, you might want to put it to work full - time.

That's what the interior designers at Armstrong did. They took a seldom - used formal dining room and a somewhate dark and cheerless kitchen and turned them into a charming family haven by demolishing the wall between them and redecorating. This big open space is now the hub of the home, the main gathering spot for family members and friends.

The immediate effect of removing the wall was to create a feeling of spaciousness. And a new light - tones color scheme in mouth - watering shades of peach and spearment heightened the effect.

Other structural changes were made, too. For instance, a door from the kitchen to the outside was sealed off and its function taken over by French double doors installed in the new living and dining area (the old dining room).

It not only provides more convenient access to a patio but also admits lots of daylight. So does the large greenhouse window which replaced the old, small kitchen window.

In open - plan decorating, unifiers are all important. Otherwise the space will look chaotic and "thrown together."

In the new family haven, the key unifying role is played by the natural ceramic pattern flooring which wends its way from the kitchen sink at one side of the room all the way over to the new fireplace at the far other side. The pattern lends rustic warmth to the living and dining area.

Incidentally, the fireplace is non - working — for show only. But the antique wooden mantle adds much to the charm of the room and at a comparatively modest cost.

Dividing the two main sections of the room is a breakfast bar with a swing-out typing desk for doing school and office work, writing letters or planning menus. When not wanted, the desk tucks away under the counter.

The color scheme is refreshing and easy on the eyes: peach - painted walls and cabinets in the kitchen, grass - striped, peachy - beige wallpaper in the living and dining area, and crisp, cool spearmint for the countertops and wood trim. The flooring is a rich terra cotta — the room's accent color.

The furnishings are in the dignified yet casual English Country style, a "look" gaining rapidly in popularity. Exemplifying that look are the Queene Anne dining table and splat - back chairs in cherry wood, the wing chair and the built-in bookshelves in the living and dining area.

Another point of interest is the massive "pickled" oak breakfront in the kitchen which displays a collection of treasured glassware and china.

Interior lighting shows off the objects d'art to their best advantage.

Here's the Answer

Q. — I am putting up wall panels over a wall that is already there. Can I cement the panels directly on to the old wall or do I have to build a framework first?

A. — You don't say what the old wall consists of and what kind of panels will be used, so the reply must be general rather than specific. While 4-by-8 panels can be installed directly over an old wall which is in fairly good condition, it is much better to attach furring strips to the wall and then install the new paneling. Furring strips usually are 1-by-2. Put them up horizontally, with vertical pieces where the edges of the panel will be. Use plumb lines and levels to be sure everything is perfectly straight. If not, use shims or small pieces of wood to get the furring just right. When you are sure it is, go ahead with the paneling, which then can be nailed or glued into place. Using an adhesive is fine, but place a few nails at strategic locations to keep everything in place until the adhesive is dry. Plan your job carefully. Make sure you have made provisions for electrical outlets and any other obstructions that might interfere with the installation of either the furring strips or the panels.

Q. — Our barn has an old aluminum roof that is beginning to develop cracks, apparently at the seams. They are very tiny cracks that can hardly be seen. If I solder them, will this prevent future leaks?

A. — You can't solder aluminum. Use what is called aluminumized caulking material.

(Balky toilet tanks, clogged sink drains, leaky faucets, pipe leaks and noisy plumbing are among the topics discussed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Make Simple Plumbing Repairs," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743.)

Dear Abby

Male nurses carry out their duties in face of prejudice

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I read your column about male nurses, and having been one for the last 13 years, I must comment.

Did you know that male nursing dates back to 1190 when the Teutonic Knights were founded to care for the wounded during the Crusades? Also, during Biblical times, the Knights of St. Lazarus were founded to tend the lepers.

I have had to face a great deal of prejudice while practicing my chosen profession. (No, I didn't ever want to be a doctor. And yes, I care for female patients just as a female nurse would.)

I feel that I am rendering a humanitarian service regardless of whether the patient is man or woman, rich or poor, black, white or yellow. My wife, who is also a registered nurse, has been very supportive. I realize that I am not alone and must do my part to bring the male nurse to an equal footing. Until recently, the armed forces did not grant equal rank or pay to male registered nurses although our training was identical. (Female nurses enjoyed officer status automatically. Male nurses did not.)

So here I stand, heterosexual and proud to be a nurse and a man. Physicians, God bless them, spend a relatively short period of time with their patients, but nurses are there around the clock, faithful advocates of the patients' rights and needs.

Thank you, Abby, for an opportunity to air my thoughts.

RAYMOND EARL STANFORD, R.N., SAVANNAH, GA.

DEAR NURSE STANFORD: Well said. My mail these last few weeks has been filled to overflowing with kudos for the male nurse.

Read on for a letter that says it all:

DEAR ABBY: What's all this static about whether or not a male nurse should care for women patients in "intimate situations"?

I am a taxi driver, and on two separate occasions I assisted in delivering a baby. And how about all those policemen who have done the same?

When a woman needs help, false modesty goes out the window.

"DOC" (MY NICKNAME NOW)

DEAR ABBY: I can't believe the prejudice of some women toward male nurses.

Women are fighting for equal rights and want to be accepted in a man's world, but they don't want men in theirs. How about equality for men? I am a young woman, but I am personally more comfortable with a male doctor than a female doctor. Who knows? The female doctor could be a lesbian, right?

And as for "Lois," who said, "Child molesters, perverts, wife beaters, etc. were men"—women can also be child molesters, perverts, husband beaters, etc., right?

So, in conclusion, it doesn't really matter who takes care of you when you're sick as long as you receive proper medical attention.

NURSE'S DAUGHTER IN JAPAN

* * *

DEAR ABBY: A word of advice to your readers: Should you find yourself as a patient with a nurse who is a male, please judge him on his professional skills.

In all probability he has chosen his career with a great deal of thought. After all, how many mothers tell their little boys that they hope they will grow up to be a nurse?

NORMAN GREGORY, R.N.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I couldn't believe the letter from "Lois in New York," who wrote, "If I had to go to a hospital, I'd give strict orders not to send me a male nurse to even give me a bedpan. (I would sooner be looked after by the cleaning woman.)"

The gall of that woman! If Lois should go into cardiac arrest when the cleaning woman and a male nurse are the only people around, I hope the cleaning woman knows whether to administer epinephrine, lidocaine or atropine, since she'd rather have the cleaning woman look after her than a male nurse.

FREE STANDING FURNITURE OR A BUILT-IN?

When you're thinking about a wall unit of any kind, or a bookcase, it's good to consider advantages of free standing units as opposed to built-ins for many worthwhile reasons.

Now, we're not saying that built-ins aren't good, too, but free standing units do give you so much. For one thing, because they are not built-in they can be put on different walls whenever you decide to re-decorate or change a room around.

The same applies if you ever move. Built-in shelves usually have to be left behind, but cabinets, bookcases and other wall units can go with you and be used in your new home.

Not only do you have the great versatility with free standing units, but there are so many attractive ones today that are really beautiful pieces of furniture.

Etageres, bookcases and wall units are available—not only to hold and display the things you want them to—but also to "stand on their own" decoratively. And such pieces can be used not only against a wall, but many may also be used, if you wish, as room or area dividers away from the walls. It all adds up to a way of decorating you might consider, and we'll be happy to help you.

Firefighters save Central California city

By The Associated Press

More than 10,000 firefighters grappled today with high temperatures and brush, forest and range fires that have forced thousands of people to flee in 11 western states and Canada as they charred at least 900,000 acres — an area larger than the state of Rhode Island.

Firefighters, many of them having gone without sleep for days, battled blazes large and small, many of them lightning-caused, in California, Idaho, Oregon, Utah, Montana, Washington, Nevada, Oregon, Arizona, Nebraska, South Dakota and British Columbia.

Residents of San Luis Obispo, Calif., returned warily to their homes on Monday after eight buildings were destroyed by a 30-foot wall of flames. About 5,000 to 10,000 people were evacuated earlier in the day, authorities said.

Gov. George Deukmejian declared a state of emergency Monday for San Luis Obispo County, the third California county to receive that status this month as fires seared the state, destroying or damaging more than 150 homes and killing three people.

The fire gutted seven homes and 14 other buildings in its early stages and, fanned by erratic winds on Monday, swept toward the city of 35,000, destroying another three homes and damaging five, authorities said.

Classes were canceled at schools and youth camps in the hills were evacuated as the fire grew to more than 60,000 acres. Highways and the airport closed, phone lines jammed and water pressure dropped as people sprayed homes.

Firefighters who saved the city, about 40 miles south of William Randolph Hearst's mansion at San Simeon, suffered 14 minor injuries, said Mike Cole, a California Department of Forestry spokesman, adding: "Some of them have been on their feet for 48 hours."

Temperatures under the orange-tinged sky climbed over 100 degrees.

The blaze, which began 130 miles northwest of Los Angeles on July 1, was among the latest and largest of a series of fires that has charred over 900,000 acres — about 1,400 square miles — since June in the western United States and Canada. By comparison, Rhode Island encompasses 1,214 square miles.

Heat also hampered firefighters battling the biggest California fire, which grew to 85,000 acres Monday in the Los Padres National Forest near Ojai, 65 miles northwest of Los Angeles. The arson-caused blaze no longer threatened the small cities of Ojai and Carpinteria.

It was 50 percent contained, but no control time was estimated, said Forest Service spokeswoman Joanna Guttman. Firefighters consider a fire contained when it has either stopped spreading or when it is surrounded by fire lines; a fire is controlled when it is out except for occasional hot spots.

Fires started by lightning also charred thousands of acres in California's Inyo and Fresno counties. Others closed scenic state Highway 1 from San Luis Obispo County to Big Sur and one blaze in the area sent 3,000 people fleeing. Los Angeles and San Diego counties have been declared disaster areas.

In the southeastern British Columbia mill town of Canal Flats, most of the 700 residents were forced to evacuate Monday as dry timber went up in flames.

More than 500 fires since June 1 have charred 368,000 acres of forest in British Columbia.

South of the Canadian border, more than 10,000 firefighters battled flames in the western United States, said Bill Keil, a spokesman for the U.S. Bureau of Land Management in Portland, Ore.

"This last week has been one of the worst fire weeks in the last 10 years," Keil said.

In Nevada, more than 40 range fires, many ignited by lightning, have consumed nearly 150,000 acres since Saturday, but there have been no reports of injuries or damage to buildings.

In Montana, firefighters grappled with an 11,000-acre fire in the state's central Little Belt Mountains. They said it would probably be a week before it was controlled.

Fires have blackened 70,000 acres of Oregon range land and crews battling more than 40 blazes were stretched thin.

Containment of a northwestern Utah lightning fire that torched 2,000 acres near Faust was close Monday, but in eastern Washington, a 2,400-acre fire on the Colville Indian Reservation burned out of control. Another fire at Colville that started Sunday had grown to 600 acres by Monday.

Fire crews from southwestern South Dakota and northwestern Nebraska contained a fire Monday that burned about 13,000 acres of range and timber northwest of Pine Ridge, S.D.

A fire in Arizona's Coronado National Forest burned 2,500 acres, but posed no danger to buildings.

In Idaho, 100,000 acres of forest remained ablaze Monday in a region where 120,000 acres have burned. More than 2,000 firefighters were trying to combat the fires in 110 degree temperatures.

New Mexico firefighters let 22 small fires that consumed 12,860 acres in the Gila National Forest burn themselves out because they posed no danger

RANCH DESTROYED—A fireman works to squelch flames at the Kennedy ranch on the outskirts of San Luis Obispo, Calif., Monday. Over 55,000 acres were destroyed as flames came to the outskirts of town. Only six structures were damaged as firefighters fought the flames back. (AP Laserphoto)

Family loses second pet zebra to assailant

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Robert and Judy Bilderback say they plan to sell their ranch in northwest San Antonio because of a series of violent attacks on their herd of zebras.

The latest attack came this weekend when a 5-year-old male Zeke was found shot to death.

The attack is the fourth in a year on the Bilderback's herd of zebras.

"At this point, the zebras are for sale. The property is for sale," Mrs. Bilderback said. "If somebody wants the property this much, at least they could have the decency to come forward and make an offer."

Mrs. Bilderback said she and her husband believe the attacks are the work of someone who wants to force them into selling their ranch.

"The first thing everybody says is that it's probably some kid doing it," Mrs. Bilderback said. "But a kid doesn't continue it like this. I have kids. It's too sophisticated for a child.

"We've had threats left on the answering machine," she said.

The Bilderbacks have raised zebras on the property for eight years and have owned as many as 12 at a time. Now they have six, including a pregnant female.

In May, Zelda, a 4-year-old female, was found leaning against a stall with a gunshot wound in a rear leg. Zelda, who also was shot in the tail last year, is still recovering from the May wound.

Also in 1984, another pregnant female was shot and killed.

Mrs. Bilderback said her husband telephoned police about the sick zebra after finding a hay bale that smelled strange in a pasture.

Mexico party claims fraud in elections

PIEDRAS NEGRAS, Mexico (AP) — Five months after political violence jolted this otherwise sleepy border city, charges of election fraud in recent elections once again have threatened to disturb the peace.

Leaders of the National Action Party, or PAN, have charged widespread electoral fraud in Sunday's congressional and local elections and predicted Monday that renewed violence could occur.

"There could be protests," said Alfredo Flores Rodriguez, PAN election coordinator.

Unofficial tallies early Monday showed the Institutional Revolutionary Party ahead in the seat for the Chamber of Deputies, or lower house of congress, as well as in races for state and local offices.

But leaders of the conservative National Action Party Monday called the elections "dirty" and said they would not concede defeat even if the ruling party is declared the winner when official results are announced Sunday.

"We won't concede. We won't accept that we lost because the elections were dirty," said Eleazar Cobos, PAN's candidate for the Chamber of Deputies who had claimed a 4-1 margin of victory going into the election.

About 90 percent of the polling places in the fourth federal congresssional district contained some type of irregularity, Cobos said.

"I dont believe PAN lost the elections," Flores said. "I believe there was fraud."

Cobos, whose loss in last December's mayoral election led to charges of election fraud and violent protests, said that Sunday's irregularities ranged from threats on the lives of PAN supporters to ballot box stuffing.

"The party doesn't advocate violence. But what the people do we won't be responsible for," Cobos said.

Flores said PAN leaders would hold a rally in the town square Tuesday to explain upcoming strategy to supporters.

Cobos went into Sunday's national race for congress confident of a victory. On Saturday, local PAN chairman Gabriel Espinoza predicted Cobos would win by a 4-1 margin.

But as unofficial returns trickled in Sunday night, charges of fraud escalated and heavily armed soldiers from the Mexican army dashed from one polling place to the next quelling minor disturbances.

Last December following Cobos' narrow defeat in the race for mayor, charges of fraud led to violent protests in which one person was killed and several others were injured during two months of demonstrations that included the burning of the municipal building and a stampede of the international bridge.

About 100 Mexican soldiers brought in to monitor the current elections and their aftermath were expected to remain here until after the results were announced, officials said.

U.S officials said Monday that they are prepared in the event of more violence.

"If there is any violence it will probably come Sunday when they announce the vote," said C.E. Cunningham, supervisor of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service in Eagle Pass. "The U.S. Border Patrol is prepared just in case."

"We will go the legal route first and present our findings (of fraud) to the election commission," Flores said Monday.

"With the documentation we have we will ask that the election be nullified," he said.

Shultz is greeted by thousands of refugees

SITE 7, Thailand (AP) — Tens of thousands of Cambodian refugees chanting "U.S.A. — No. 1" and "We want to go home" greeted U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz today on the embattled Thai-Cambodian border.

Shultz, who traveled by helicopter to the area in a show of support for Thailand and its non-communist allies in southeast Asia, toured this evacuation site crowded with refugees from nearby war-torn Cambodia.

He shook hands, patted babies on the head and listened to claims of atrocities allegedly committed by Vietnamese troops in Cambodia.

Virtually the entire population of 53,285 turned out to welcome Shultz.

The refugees displayed a large white banner that read: "We have manpower. We need arms and education. U.S. aid, please help us turn Vietnamese killing fields to Cambodian farming fields. We want to go home. God bless America."

Site 7, about seven miles from the frontier, was set up to receive civilian residents of Nong Samet, a border resistance camp hit by the Vietnamese during the recent dry season offensive.

Vietnam invaded its neighbor Cambodia in 1978, ousted the Khmer Rouge Communist regime and set up a pro-Vietnamese government headed by Prime Minister Heng Samrin.

The United Nations refuses to recognize the Heng Samrin and instead views the Cambodian resistance groups, headed by former Cambodian leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk, as the legitimate government of Cambodia. The Sihanouk-led coalition includes the Khmer Rouge, the non-communist Khmer Peoples' Liberation Front and Sihanouk's forces.

Moving against the resistance this year, the Vietnamese have destroyed every border guerrilla camp and driven some 230,000 Cambodians into Thailand.

The residents of Site 7 are not considered refugees eligible for resettlement in third countries, but instead are "displaced persons" who Thailand said it would send back to Cambodia when it is safer.

Cambodian camp chief Thou Thon told Shultz a bill before the U.S. Congress that would provide $5 million in aid to two non-communist Cambodian groups fighting the Vietnamese gave the refugees great hope. The residents of Site 7 are followers of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front.

Shultz said: "The plight (of the displaced Cambodians) is known to us and we have been responding to it. And I assure you we will continue to do so."

He also praised Thailand's response to the refugee problem.

Shultz was also briefed by David Morton, who heads the U.N. Border Relief Organization, a group providing aid to the refugees.

Morton said the group was suffering from a "cash flow problem" because of slow-coming contributions, and owed funds to some private voluntary organizations working under its auspices.

The United States contributed about $16 million last year to the organization and the International Committee of the Red Cross, which also operates at the border. On Monday, Shultz signed an agreement providing $3 million for aid to Thai villagers uprooted by border fighting.

Shultz' motorcade later went to the adjacent refugee holding center of Khao-i-dang. The nearly 22,000 Cambodians there are eligible for resettlement to the United States and other countries.

Seven blacks slain in clashes with police

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police shot dead seven blacks in clashes in a black township east of Johannesburg today on the day of a funeral for four other blacks killed in previous rioting, authorities said.

The violence broke out in Kwa-Thema, about 30 miles east of Johannesburg, police headquarters in the capital of Pretoria said.

A statement said five blacks were shot dead with birdshot and pistol fire when a crowd attacked and firebombed a black policeman's home, and two others were fatally wounded in a similar incident elsewhere in the township.

Anglican Bishop Simeon Nkoane, who lives in the township, said by telephone that police fired guns and tear gas in clashes with residents throughout the night. He also said police fired tear gas into a cinema where people were holding an all-night vigil for the four blacks who died in grenade explosions two weeks ago and were to be buried today.

"They have been shooting without aim, to intimidate and frighten people," said Nkoane. "It is raising the backs of the people up, which is very upsetting.

"This is maddening," said Nkoane, who has received threats and whose house has been firebombed.

Indians' Neal Heaton throws shutout

Indians blank Rangers

CLEVELAND (AP) — Manager Pat Corrales might have liked to remove Neal Heaton from the Cleveland Indians' rotation when the left-hander was in the midst of a personal six-game losing streak.

"But I've got nobody better to replace him, so you let him pitch, because he does have some tools," Corrales said Monday after Heaton pitched a six-hitter to end the streak and shut out the Texas Rangers 4-0.

"Neal's been through some tough times and he's come back," Corrales said. "Last year (when Heaton was 12-15) was tough for him, but he pitched some good games near the end. He doesn't let himself get too low."

Heaton was 4-4 with a 3.05 earned run average this year when his drought began. During his next six decisions, he had a 10.48 ERA.

"At first it was mechanical," Heaton said. "Then after you lose three, four or five games, you start thinking about it and it becomes mental. I'm still learning how to pitch. This is only my third full year in the majors. You just have to have patience."

The shutout was the first in more than a year for Heaton, 5-10. He struck out five and walked two and was aided by three double plays.

"He threw the breaking ball for strikes consistently and spotted the fastball," said Texas Manager Bobby Valentine, whose club lost its third straight.

Cleveland took a 1-0 lead against Mike Mason, 5-8, in the first inning on Pat Tabler's bases-loaded single, which improved Tabler to 4-for-4 with the bases loaded this season. Since joining the Indians in 1983, he is 20-for-32 with 49 RBI in that situation.

"I'm not big on stats," Tabler said. "But with men in scoring position, especially with two outs, it's a great situation, because you know the pitcher has to come at you."

Carmen Castillo started the Indians' three-run fourth inning with his second home run of the season, a solo shot to left.

One out later, Mike Fischlin tripled and scored on a sacrifice fly by Brett Butler. Julio Franco singled and Brook Jacoby walked to finish Mason and Andre Thornton greeted Chris Welsh with a run-scoring single.

"He (Mason) was throwing where they were swinging, and the results weren't favorable," Valentine said.

Heaton, who struck out two of the first three hitters he faced, said he knew before he took the mound that he was throwing well.

"I'm the type of pitcher who can usually tell before a game what kind of stuff I'm going to have," he said. "Tonight in the bullpen before the game I threw everything for a strike."

The victory was Cleveland's second straight after five losses in a row.

Agents' meeting may cause NFL players to miss camp

CHICAGO (AP) — Some of the National Football League's top stars, including Ron Jaworski, Steve Bartkowski and Dan Hampton, may miss training camp to protest low salaries following a "historic" meeting by a group of player agents.

Frank Murtha, a Chicago agent, said the players would be protesting an attempt by NFL team owners to roll back salaries to 1983 levels.

About 30 agents, representing some of the NFL's top players, met at a Chicago hotel Monday to plan strategy for countering the salary slide.

"We concluded our meeting with a unified position that we are not going to accept the rollback in salaries that management is proposing," said Murtha. "We had a historic meeting."

Murtha said the agents are finding a lot of resistance this year as they negotiate contracts for rookies and veterans.

He said there are 127 NFL veterans among the 28 clubs who are, or will soon be, free agents, and NFL rules prohibit them from reporting to camp if they don't have a contract.

"Until management makes reasonable salary proposals, our clients are not going to sign contracts," he said.

Most clubs open training camps in mid-July.

Murtha, the group's spokesman, said the meeting, which lasted for more than six hours, included all of the agents representing more than 20 of the NFL's first-round picks.

Murtha said the NFL owners were offering about 40 percent less than a year ago, trying to "hold the line on salaries for all 336 newcomers, (and) they are trying to reduce salary escalations for all the veterans whose contracts are coming up."

At this point only 69 of the 336 college players drafted in April have signed contracts for the upcoming season.

One year ago 194 players, including 13 first-round picks, had inked contracts.

Rangers interested in Howe

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Front-office officials of the Texas Rangers have confirmed sending out feelers to relief pitcher Steve Howe, who was released last week by the Los Angeles Dodgers, but said their inability to locate him the past several days is making them have second thoughts.

Ranger Manager Bobby Valentine said in Cleveland, where his team is playing a series with the Indians, that he spoke by phone with Howe three days ago at his suburban Los Angeles home, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported today.

Valentine said he told the left-hander that General Manager Tom Grieve would call to set up a date for Howe to throw in front of Ranger Assistant General Manager Sandy Johnson, who was in California on other business at the time.

However, since then, the Rangers have not been able to reach Howe, who will clear waivers Wednesday.

"Sandy was in California anyway," Grieve said from his home in Arlington Monday night. "We were going to set up something for him (Howe) to throw. But we haven't been able to talk to him since Bobby spoke to him several days ago."

The one thing Valentine has been wanting is a left-hander for the Rangers' bullpen. Howe was 1-1 with three saves and a 4.91 earned run average in 19 appearances for the Dodgers, but his earned run average was close to 3.00 until he served up three-run home runs in each of his last two outings.

"A left-hander, who might be able to help us and that we might be able to get for $20,000 (the waiver price)?" Valentine said. "I'd think we'd have to be interested."

Howe has been plagued by drug problems since 1983. Two weeks ago he was late for a game, did not arrive at Dodger Stadium until the seventh inning and told Manager Tommy Lasorda that his (Howe's) wife had gone to an amusement park and had accidentally taken his car keys. He finally took an $80 cab ride to the stadium.

A week later Howe disappeared again and when he surfaced 24 hours later, he said he wanted out of his Dodgers contract because he could not handle the pressures of playing in Los Angeles.

Drugs were suspected again but almost immediately ruled out. Under terms of the agreement that allowed him to return to the baseball after his last treatment in a chemical dependency clinic, Howe has been submitting to drug tests twice a week. His agent, Jim Hawkins, said Howe passed a drug test after returning to the Dodgers following his latest disappearance.

Still, the fact that the Rangers have been unable to reach Howe after Valentine's conversation with him has cooled off their interest somewhat, Grieve said.

"Right now, I'd say our interest is lukewarm," Grieve said.

Landry leaning toward White

DALLAS (AP) — Returning to his office after a month's vacation, Dallas Cowboys Coach Tom Landry said he is leaning toward Danny White as his opening-night starting quarterback, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported today.

Landry said Monday that Gary Hogeboom still is in the running for the starting assignment, but that White will have to falter for Hogeboom to move up.

"He's our quarterback," Landry said of White. "He's got the ball. He is going to play until he proves he can't do the job the way I want him to.

"He (White) has got to play poorly (before he loses the job). How poorly? I can't tell you. If in my eyes he's performing as well as he can and the failure is someplace else, I'm not going to penalize him. I'm going to make a decision based on what's best for the team."

Landry is favoring the 33-year-old White over the 26-year-old Hogeboom, he said, because he detects a difference in the way White is perceived by his teammates.

Last year at this time, Cowboys players favored Hogeboom and were down on White for a variety of reasons: White's anti-union stance in the 1982 strike, his reluctance to pal around with his teammates, and an arm that isn't as strong as Hogeboom's.

"It wasn't Danny's ability last year, it was the team and how they felt. The climate was not right, so I made a change," Landry told the newspaper.

"We had a problem with morale. We needed solid team unity. So we went with Gary and won the first game. We probably would have won more if our receivers would have stayed healthy.

"Then last year he (White) re-established his relationship with the team, and there's a good feeling. If he doesn't make it this year the way we hope he will, it won't be because the team isn't behind him. It will be because he failed on his own. This year our theme is 'Get the job done.' If you get the job done, it's OK.

"Now there's nothing to prevent Danny from playing well. Last year I didn't think he could do it. Now I do. It's just a feel I have."

Hogeboom was a surprise first-game starter last season who later lost, regained, then lost the position to White again.

Hogeboom's greatest downfalls were his inexperience and a tendency to force the ball into tight spots, leading to interceptions and incompletions.

Landry said he hopes Hogeboom responds positively to the situation.

"It's competitive all the way," Landry said. "Danny knows he's got to work to hold it, and if I thought Gary could do a better job, then I'd switch."

Landry said he anticipates keeping both quarterbacks. After last season he had indicated the starting job would be decided in training camp, with the loser likely to be traded.

Spurs sign Brittain

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The San Antonio Spurs Monday signed second-round draft choice Mike Brittain to a contract, the first draftee to sign for the upcoming season.

Terms of the contract for the 7-1 South Carolina graduate, picked No. 29 overall in the NBA draft June 18, were not released.

"We are happy to have Mike signed prior to our rookie camp and prior to the Midwest Rookie Revue," said team General Manager Bob Bass.

He is the first draftee to sign this year, team officials said.

Spend a Buck's future uncertain

NEW YORK (AP) — Spend a Buck's return to and future in racing are not definite, but plans for the Kentucky Derby winner's retirement are set.

"An assessment will be made at the end of this year as to whether or not Spend a Buck will race next year," trainer Cam Gambolati said.

If the 3-year-old colt doesn't race after this year, he will be retired for breeding on William S. Farish's Lane's End Farm at Versailles, Ky. Farish has purchased a share of Spend a Buck for an undisclosed sum from owners Dennis and Linda Diaz, it was announced Monday.

Spend a Buck will continue to race in the Hunter Farm colors of the Diazes.

As for his next start, Gambolati thinks it will be the 1⅛-mile Haskell Handicap July 27 at Monmouth Park.

Spend a Buck will make the final decision, Gambolati said, when he works seven-eighths of a mile under regular jocky Laffit Pincay Jr. between races next Tuesday at Monmouth Park.

If the $12,500 yearling purchase does start in the Haskell, it would be his first race since winning the 1¼-mile Jersey Derby at Garden State Park May 27. With that victory, Spend a Buck earned a $600,000 winner's purse and a $2 million bonus offered by Garden State for sweeping the Cherry Hill Mile, Garden State Stakes, Kentucky Derby and Jersey Derby. His career earnings are $3,998,502, second only to John Henry's $6,597,947.

Pampa routs North Plains

The Pampa All-Stars bombarded North Plains, 21-9, Monday night in the opening round of the District One 13-15 year-old Baseball Tournament at Optimist Park.

Pampa put the game away early with a 14-run barrage in the second inning. Included in that hitting barrage was a two-run homer by James Ward that cleared the centerfield fence.

Canyon used three pitchers in the second to try and halt the Pampa scoring spree.

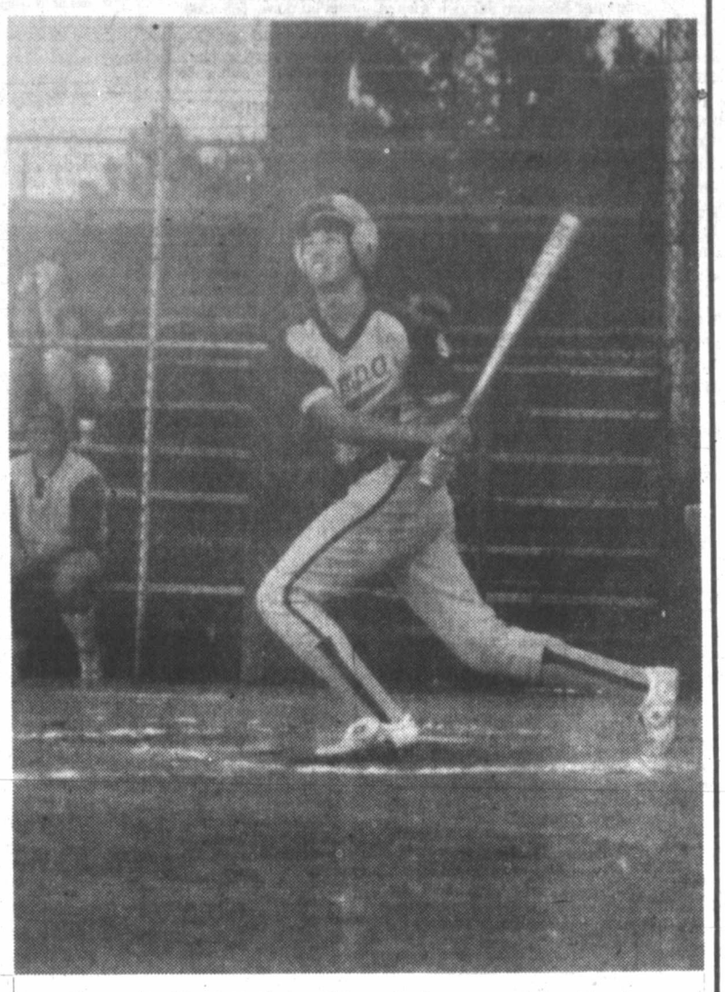

Grant Gamblin threw three innings of no-hit ball for Pampa before he was relieved in the fourth inning by Ward.

Gamblin and Troy Owen each knocked in three runs in Pampa's 18-hit attack. Owen, Ward and Greg Wolcott all had three hits apiece. Ward, along with Kerry Brown, Derrick Ryan, Ricky Sewell and Robert Perez, knocked in two runs each.

According to district 13-15 tournament rules, the game could not be called due to the 10-run rule, but the coach of the losing team can forfeit the game after four innings. However, the lopsided contest went the full seven innings.

Randall County defeated Top O' Texas, 8-3, in the other first-round game played last night. Pampa and Randall County square off tonight at 6 p.m. at Optimist Park.

The finals are scheduled for 6 p.m. Friday night. A second game, if necessary, will be played at 8.

Pampa's Chad McDougall knocks in a run with a single.

Walcott recalls Marciano fight

An AP Sports Analysis
By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

The fight was only one minute old when champion Jersey Joe Walcott crashed a left hook to the head and Rocky Marciano went down. But Walcott knew the challenger would get up.

"It was a good punch, but it was too high," the 71-year-old Walcott reminisced recently. "A couple of inches lower, and it would have been over."

Marciano did get up that night of Sept. 23, 1952, at Philadelphia, and 12 rounds later he knocked out the 38-year-old Walcott, who was making his second defense of the world heavyweight championship he won on a seventh-round knockout of Ezzard Charles after having failed in two title bids against Joe Louis and in two against Charles.

Marciano went on to defend the title six times before retiring in 1949 with a 49-0 record, a mark Larry Holmes will try to tie when he defends the International Boxing Federation heavyweight title against Michael Spinks, the undisputed light heavyweight champion, Sept. 20 at Atlantic City, N.J.

Marciano, 29, went into his challenge at Municipal Stadium (now John F. Kennedy Stadium) with a 43-0 record, with 38 knockouts.

Walcott, who turned pro in 1930, had a 50-16-1 record, with 30 knockouts. Looking back at the fight through his mind's eye, Walcott recalled a cut he received above the left eye in a collision of heads in the fourth round. Thirty-three years later, he considers it the reason he got nailed with a right hand that separated him from his senses and the title.

"In the 11th and 12th rounds, the bell saved him," Walcott recalled. "He was about to go.

"Before the 13th round I made up my mind to jab twice (consecutively) to get his head up and throw a right hand. The fight would have been over."

But it never happened.

"I jabbed so hard the first time that the cut opened (from the impact) and blinded my left eye," Walcott said. "I paused for a second and he uncorked a right hand. I couldn't see him."

That punch has become one of the most seen, through still photos, in the history of boxing.

Ward to play in all-star game

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Detroit Tigers manager Sparky Anderson has decided on outfielder Gary Ward as the lone representative of the Texas Rangers to play in the 1985 All-Star Game, next Tuesday at Minnesota's Metrodome, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported today.

The newspaper quoted unnamed sources close to the Detroit manager.

Ward has played in one previous All-Star Game. He was 0-for-1 while representing Minnesota in the 1983 classic.

Phillies down Astros with Texas connection

HOUSTON (AP) — The Philadelphia Phillies used their Texas connection of Charles Hudson and Glenn Wilson to show off their talents to the Houston Astros.

Hudson, a right-handed pitcher from Ennis, Texas, struggled early with his control but he managed to maintain his poise and some home-state bragging rights in a 7-4 Philly win over the Astros Monday night in the Astrodome.

Right-fielder Wilson, from the Houston suburb of Channelview, also played a vital role with a 3-for-5 hitting chart and three RBIs, including the game-winner.

The Phillies led 7-1 when Hudson, 4-7, left after 7 2-3 innings. He compiled seven strikouts as well as surrendering seven hits and four walks.

"Lots of friends and relatives were here and with them watching," he said. "It adds to the pressure. Any time you play this close to home, there's extra incentive to win.

The 26-year-old Hudson grew up in Dallas and pitched in college at Prairie View.

"Glenn and I are the only two guys on the team from Texas. And playing this close to home gives us something to talk about," Hudson said.

In his rookie season of 1983, Hudson had a no-hitter through 8 1-3 innings against Houston before Craig Reynolds broke it up with bloop single. Reynolds continued to haunt Hudson in Monday's game with a 3-for-4 batting performance.

"I tried to rush the ball and they nearly took my head off. The only time they hit me is when I got the ball too high," Hudson said.

Wilson punched a first-inning, two-out single to center that put the Phillies ahead 1-0.

"We've been struggling and it was very important for us to score in the first inning," Wilson said, referring to Philadelphia's 36-44 record.

Despite Wilson's Houston heroics, he has 46 of his 59 RBIs at Philadelphia this season.

Von Hayes, Rick Schu, Ozzie Virgil also had three hits for the Phillies, who totalled 20 hits in the game; 14 came off Houston loser Mark Knudson, 0-1, who made his major league debut Monday.

"I had no breaking ball at all," Knudson said. "Every time I tried one, I threw a mistake. All I can say is, it's over."

Rising tide of Nicaraguan refugees strains Costa Rica

By REID G. MILLER
Associated Press Writer

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — A rising tide of refugees from war-torn and economically shattered Nicaragua is putting enormous social and economic strains on neighboring Costa Rica.

"What we're facing is a potential economic crisis," Eduardo Lizano, Costa Rica's central bank president, said in a recent interview.

The government estimates that as many as 500 Nicaraguans cross the border into Costa Rica every day, some seeking legal refugee status but most quietly blending into society as undocumented aliens.

"There has never been such a massive number of refugees entering Costa Rica, even in the last days of the Somoza regime," said Interior Minister Enrique Obregon.

He referred to dictator Anastasio Somoza, whose overthrow by Sandinista guerrillas in 1979 ushered in a leftist regime in Nicaragua and a new round of civil war, this time between the government and U.S.-supported rebels known as Contras.

Obregon estimated that 250,000 Nicaraguans are living in Costa Rica, only about 20,000 of them legally, and says he expects the number to double in the next two years.

Some refugee experts suggest Obregon's figures are too high. But if he is correct, it means that Costa Rica will be harboring half a million Nicaraguans by 1988.

That would be about one-sixth of the current population of Nicaragua of 3 million and more than a fifth of the population fo Costa Rica, which has about 2.4 million people.

"What we have is an enormous group of people who have no jobs, no food and no shelter," said Richard Beck, a private economist in San Jose, adding:

"All of them will at some point be competing with Costa Ricans for jobs. Economically, we're not going to be able to handle this influx much longer."

Although Costa Rica enjoys the highest standard of living in Central America, the new refugees nevertheless enter a country that already has huge economic problems.

The nation's foreign debt is pegged at more than $4 billion, one of the highest per capita in the hemisphere; more than 9 percent of its people are without jobs; its main export crops, coffee and bananas, face stagnant world markets, and it doesn't have enough tillable land to meet the needs of its own burgeoning population, which grows by 2.6 percent yearly.

Some politicians, including congressional leader Guillermo Vargas Sanabria, have begun calling on the government to halt the influx of refugees.

But without an army and with a paramilitary police force of only 7,000 civil and rural guards to patrol a country the size of West Virginia, there seems to be little chance that Costa Rica can effectively seal its 150-mile border with Nicaragua.

Others have suggested that other countries, particularly in Latin America, could help absorb some of the displaced Nicaraguans, but there is no waiting list of nations willing to ease the burden on Costa Rica.

Two of the four Contra groups fighting the Sandinista government maintain headquarters in San Jose, although the Costa Rican government insists that its policy of neutrality bars them from engaging in any military activities here.

The Office of the U.N. High Comissioner on Refugees maintains three camps in Costa Rica, each holding about 3,000 people, at an annual cost of more than $2 million.

But Costa Rican authorities insist the people and the costs of the camps represent only a fraction of the larger refugee problem, for which they have no ready solution.

"If Costa Rica can't find a way to put a lid on the refugee situation pretty soon, it will run the risk of an eventual social explosion," said a Western diplomat who spoke on condition of anonymity for protocol reasons.

"Even now, this country's simply doesn't have enough to go around."

Authorities fear revenge

CLEBURNE, Texas (AP) — Authorities say they fear that a convicted kidnapper who remains at large following a jail escape may seek revenge against the family of a 13-year-old girl.

The manhunt by Texas Rangers and several sheriff's and police departments continued today for James Wesley Foote, 34, who escaped from the Johnson County Jail on Thursday.

Alvarado rancher and businessman Don McNiel said he has begun carrying a pistol, and his daughter Amy has been moved to a hiding place. Armed deputies have begun guarding the family.

"I don't know how long it's going to last," said McNiel on Monday. "The only saving grace this time (compared with the kidnapping) is that I know where everybody is but him."

Amy McNiel's grandfather said Foote told family members after he was sentenced that he would get revenge against them.

"He's possibly armed himself, and I would consider him dangerous," said Don McNiel. "He could be within two miles of where I am right now. I'm a little apprehensive, knowing about him as I do."

One of five people accused in the girl's kidnapping in January, Foote climbed over a fence topped with barbed wire and fled into the woods last Thursday.

He was sentenced in March to life in prison for the girl's Jan. 11 kidnapping.

"We've had no signs of him," said Johnson County Chief Deputy Malcolm Southerland. "Nobody has heard from him. We'll just wait for him to surface, and he'll surface. He can't stay hidden all the time."

Southerland said the jailer who was on duty in a jail exercise yard when Foote escaped has resigned. Officials said Gregory Lewis, who had worked at the facility since March 1984, was distracted by other inmates during Foote's escape.

"I have charged one other inmate with helping Mr. Foote escape," Southerland said.

Southerland said his investigation revealed that Lewis let jail inmates in the exercise yard "con him into going over to get the water hose" so they could sprinkle themselves to cool off.

"Then they asked him to go back and turn the water on. He was out of their sight for no more than a minute," Southerland said.

"He felt real bad about the thing, he really did," he said.

The prisoner, Melvin Clark, 20, of Cleburne, was accused of giving Foote a boost to climb over the fence, he said.

Texas briefs

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A district judge Monday sentenced Joe David Neaves III, son of a former Bexar County sheriff, to 45 days in jail and a $500 fine for driving while intoxicated.

Judge Jay Miller pronounced the sentence, but gave Neaves' attorneys until Aug. 23 to file a motion for a new trial. Neaves would not begin serving the sentence until at least that date.

The sentence was identical to one recommended by a district court jury that convicted Neaves in March.

Final sentencing had been delayed since then because of Neaves' attorneys' attempt to have Miller recused from the case.

The attorneys' appeals were turned down by the Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin.

Neaves, son of former Bexar County sheriff Joe Neaves, was arrested June 24, 1983, and charged with DWI. He is a former patrolman.

His trial was delayed several times before it was held in March. During the proceeding, Miller said he wore a bullet-proof vest because of death threats made against him.

Miller said if Neaves actually serves his sentence, he will allow him to do community service work in the evenings so he can keep his job at a grocery store.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Mayor Henry Cisneros Monday asked for an investigation of a weekend shooting by police of 24-year-old Michael Ray Haskins.

Haskins was shot to death early Saturday after a high-speed chase with police.

Authorities claimed Haskins was shot when he reached for a gun. A .38-caliber pistol was found on the floorboard of his car.

Elimination of deduction for local taxes creates uproar

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's proposal to eliminate the income tax deduction for money Americans pay in state and local taxes is generating the biggest uproar from those who appear likely to lose the most.

Based on the theory that Americans shouldn't be taxed twice — paying federal taxes on money they have already paid in state and local taxes — the deduction has been a part of federal rules since the income tax was inaugurated.

But the provision is not really fair, Reagan contends, giving the biggest benefits to residents of high-tax states who itemize their deductions.

And, federal officials say, eliminating the deductions would generate an extra $30 billion in revenue for fighting the huge federal deficit.

National labor leaders have strongly opposed the proposal, telling the House Ways and Means Committee that it would mean higher taxes for middle-income wage earners and would force states and municipalities to curtail needed services.

On average, a U.S. family would pay an extra $927 in federal income taxes each year, according to a study done by the Congressional Research Service.

In high-tax New York, the increase would be $1,646 for the typical family, the study said. At the other end of the scale, a typical Wyoming family would pay an extra $323.

State and local officials also say that requiring people to pay more in federal taxes leaves them less for spending — and for state and local taxes.

And, they say, people will resist increases in state and local taxes even more strongly than they do now if they are unable to deduct them.

If that occurs, the officials say, it would hamper their ability to fund state and local programs at the same time that federal expenditures for them are being reduced.

New York Gov. Mario Cuomo has been vociferous in leading the battle against the proposal, terming it a "rip-off dressed up as reform."

Cuomo has accused Reagan of trying to divide the country by pitting high-tax states against those with lower taxes.

But White House Communications Director Patrick Buchanan, in a letter to The New York Times, called Cuomo a "glib, fast-talking lobbyist for a reactionary liberalism that would kill tax reform in its crib, rather than surrender a cherished special interest exemption that benefits mostly the rich."

Cuomo counters that there are important reasons why states such as New York levy higher taxes than some other jurisdictions.

But not just Democrats oppose the plan. New York Republican Sen. Alfonse D'Amato recently joined Rep. Mario Biaggi, D-N.Y., in staging a mock Boston Tea Party. They tossed into the East River boxes marked "No Double Taxation."

Just across the state line, though, Pennsylvania Gov. Dick Thornburgh, a Republican, is backing Reagan.

His state's taxes are relatively low, and the current deduction tends to benefit only about one-third of the state's residents, those who itemize deductions. In general, Thornburgh says, Pennsylvanians will benefit more from an overall reduction in federal tax rates than from keeping this deduction.

Under the current system, Thornburgh charged, taxpayers in states with low local taxes are in effect subsidizing the federal levy on those in high-tax jurisdictions, who can deduct the local payments.

And even Democratic Gov. Michael S. Dukakis of Massachusetts — a state with relatively high taxes — has said that the president's plan is worth study, with any deduction being evaluated in the context of the entire plan.

The contention that the current system causes low-tax states to subsidize high-tax states only gets 79 cents back for every dollar it sends to Washington. This proposal could worsen the imbalance that already exists in how much Michigan gets back for every dollar it sends to the federal government," Levin said.

In Kansas, where the Congressional Research Service says the added cost would be well below the national average, Gov. John Carlin, a Democrat who is also president of the National Governors Association, opposed total elimination of the deductions.
