Five-cent monthly increase per customer recommended

Examiner slashes Bell rate request

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. is entitled to only a nickel a month more from most residential customers in Texas, not the $1.25 monthly hike the company wants, according to a Public Utility Commission hearing examiner.

Phil Ricketts' 55-page report, issued Tuesday, chopped Southwestern Bell down to a $114.3 million increase, compared to the $326.3 million the company said it needs to meet inflation. The report undercut the $152 million the PUC staff said Bell should get.

The three-member commission will consider the report on Jan. 28.

Ricketts recommended the five-cent monthly increase for residential customers in cities such as Alvin, Big Spring, and Denison, as well as in the state's largest cities, including Houston, Dallas, San Antonio, Fort Worth, Waco and Corpus Christi.

Larger increases, however, were proposed for residential customers in smaller cities. Ricketts said customers in Albany, Alpine, Cameron, San Diego and other small cities should pay 55 cents more per month. Household customers in cities the size of Beeville, Center, El Campo, Vernon, Alice, Huntsville, Kingsville and others should pay 30 cents more per month, according to Ricketts.

"The $114 million is a reasonable amount," Ricketts said. "Obviously, Bell felt they deserved a good deal more."

The Texas Municipal League said Bell needed only a $68.2 million increase.

But Paul Roth, Southwestern Bell vice president, called the examiner's report "inadequate" and promised to seek significant adjustments and increases in the final order.

In a prepared statement, Roth said, "We are deeply disturbed that the recommendation fails to recognize the extent of our revenue needs to continue meeting the growth of Texas and to maintain the high quality of service required."

Bell posted the required bond and raised rates in November after the hearing began. The interim rates were based on the PUC staff recommendation.

Ricketts said the difference between the interim rates and the rates he recommended should be refunded, with interest, to customers during a three-month period. That proposal also is subject to commission approval.

The long-awaited report, prepared after a six-week hearing, recommended a 14.1 percent return on equity for Bell. The company sought 16.8 percent. Ricketts also cut $11.5 million from the amount Southwestern Bell pays to AT&T under a license contract.

Ricketts also wants Bell to do away with the current 50 cent per month charge for an extension, which covered the wiring cost.

He recommended a 25-cent increase in monthly "instrument charges" for phones owned by Bell. The company wanted a 50-cent increase, up to $1.50 per phone.

The end of the extension charge would offset the 25-cent hike in the instrument charge, Ricketts said.

The report offers a compromise on Bell's request for an increase in the cost of directory assistance calls. The company wanted to cut the number of free information calls to five per month, with a 25 cent charge for each additional call.

Ricketts said the limit should remain at the current 10. However, he said the cost of additional calls should go to 25 cents from the current 20 cents.

The company sought no increases in long distance or WATS service, and Ricketts recommended no increase.

THIS VALVE IS OPEN — Pictured above is a valve leading from an oil storage tank on the W.B. Currie Lease east of Big Spring, which local investigators believe was the site of an oil scam that defrauded Cosden Oil and Chemical Company of $425,000. The line pictured is situated near the bottom of the tank to allow salt water and bottom sediment to be pumped from the tank. The picture was taken Monday just after the arrest of John T. Sims, pumper for Jaco Oil Company of Midland, who was implicated in the scam. In order to pump oil from the tank this line would have to be sealed closed. As pictured above, the valve is in the "on position" with a Cosden not-tamper seal attached to insure that it stays that way. In order to turn it to the "off-position," the seal would have to be broken. In ordinary oilfield procedure, no seal would have been inserted unless the valve were in the "off-position," but from a distance, it is difficult to determine the position of the valve.

Mark Chapman's lawyer says 'insanity is clearly the issue'

NEW YORK (AP) — Insanity is "clearly the issue" in the case of Mark David Chapman, who has pleaded innocent to murder charges in the shooting death of former Beatle John Lennon, a defense lawyer says.

Chapman, 25, was surrounded by armed court officers when he appeared Tuesday in Supreme Court to enter his plea before Justice Herbert Altmann.

Outside the court, attorney Jonathan Marks, contending insanity was "clearly the issue," said his client would plead "not guilty by reason of insanity."

Police said today that Marks is under 24-hour guard following his report of a threat which police refused to detail. They said the lawyer would be protected by two detectives until the seriousness of the threat could be evaluated.

The lawyer withdrew his request to the court that Chapman undergo examination to determine his mental competence to stand trial. The judge, however, appointed two psychiatrists and a psychologist to examine the defendant. One of the psychiatrists is a veteran of the "Son of Sam" multiple murder case.

Pretrial hearings are scheduled for Feb. 11 and Feb. 25, with a trial date to be set at the latter appearance.

Authorities contend Chapman came from his home in Honolulu expressly to kill Lennon. Lennon, 40, and his wife, Yoko Ono, were entering their luxury apartment building Dec. 8 when he was shot several times.

Only hours before, Chapman obtained Lennon's autograph. The slaying evoked a worldwide tide of anger and mourning. Tens of thousands around the world paused for 10 minutes of silence as a final tribute to Lennon the Sunday after the shooting.

Chapman is under an around-the-clock suicide watch at Rikers Island prison.

Meanwhile, Julian Lennon, Lennon's 17-year-old son by an earlier marriage, said he would leave England to live with Miss Ono and become a rock drummer.

Lennon was quoted in the London Daily Mail today as saying: "That, at least for the immediate future, is where my music will take me."

Negotiator says Iran 'generally accepts' an Algerian proposal

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran's chief hostage negotiator said today the Tehran government generally accepts a secret Algerian proposal for ending the U.S.-Iranian crisis.

The negotiator, Behzad Nabavi, told a news conference in the Iranian capital the Algerian mediators had offered a guarantee that their proposal would work. But he gave no details of the proposal and guarantees, saying only, "This subject has been studied and has been agreed upon generally."

Nabavi, who is minister of state for executive affairs, refused to say explicitly whether he meant that a breakthrough had been made or was imminent in the stalemate over the 52 captive Americans, who have been held for 431 days.

The Algerian plan presumably replaces an Iranian one rejected by the Carter administration whereby the United States would have been required to deposit $24 billion in the Algerian central bank as a guarantee that Iran's financial demands would eventually be met.

Nabavi's remarks came a day after a confusing statement by Iranian Prime Minister Mohammed Ali Rajai aroused new speculation that progress was being made toward resolving the crisis.

Rajai said in a television interview in Tehran that Iranian revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini had authorized acceptance of a proposal from Algeria "to solve our problem with the United States."

But the Farsi-language words used by Rajai could have been translated as either that Algeria "guaranteed" to solve the problem or "undertook" to solve it, and there was no official English translation of what he meant.

Today Nabavi told reporters, "The Algerian government has said in its proposal that it is ready to accept the undertakings of both sides, in other words Iran and the United States can empower the Algerian government with their undertakings."

Asked when the hostages might be released, Nabavi said, "When the conditions of the Majlis (Iranian Parliament) are met by the U.S. government and when the Iranian government obtains enough assurance that the U.S. government's undertakings will be carried out." He also repeated Iran's threat to put the Americans on trial as spies.

There was no immediate public reaction by the Carter administration to Nabavi's statements, but on Tuesday night White House press secretary Jody Powell reported that Algeria delivered "additional questions" from Iran Tuesday on the last American proposals. He said a reply was being sent to the Algerians early today.

U.S. officials who asked not to be identified said the signals from Iran suggested the U.S. and Iranian governments had reached "agreement on some basic principles" to settle the hostage dispute.

But Powell said Tuesday's communication from Iran provided no basis for "any sort of conclusion about when or even if we will have an agreement."

The chief point being discussed between the two governments apparently was the amount of money to be put in escrow in Algeria by the United States as surety for Iranian assets frozen in U.S. banks and the foreign holdings of the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi which Iran is demanding.

Iran demanded that the United States deposit $24 billion, and the United States reportedly offered to put up about $12 billion.

U.S., Iran may have agreed on some 'basic principles'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and Iran appear to have narrowed their differences on ending the hostage crisis, but U.S. officials caution that a quickened pace of negotiations between the two countries does not ensure a breakthrough in the 14-month stalemate.

However, one official, who asked not to be identified, said agreement has been reached on some "basic principles" and that Iran is prepared to revise its demand that the United States provide $24 billion in financial guarantees as its price for releasing the 52 captives.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell, who attended a hastily convened meeting at the State Department Tuesday night, urged caution.

Meanwhile, in a news conference today in Tehran, Iran's chief negotiator in the hostage crisis, Behzad Nabavi, said Algeria has sent Iran its own proposal to try to break the stalemate and has offered some kind of guarantee that its proposal would work. He did not disclose details of the proposal.

Although Nabavi said Iran generally accepts Algeria's proposal, he refused to say whether a breakthrough was near in the negotiations to free the hostages.

Asked about signs of new Iranian flexibility, Powell said only that Iran asked questions about the latest U.S.

proposal and added: "There is no basis to judge where this will lead. We would all be well advised not to jump to overly optimistic conclusions. I don't think we can reach any sort of conclusion about when or even if we will have an agreement, based on what we have here tonight. I don't think there's any basis to be optimistic or certainly not more pessimistic than we were. At this point we're just going to have to wait and see where this will lead us."

Another official, who asked not to be identified, said there is no reason as yet to believe the hostages will be freed before President Carter leaves office 13 days from now.

One official, however, said the new information was "significant enough to take with a degree of seriousness." Another added: "I think we're a couple of steps further down the road."

The fresh movement involves the key issue of what will happen to the more than $8 billion in Iranian assets which Carter froze 10 days after the hostages were seized.

The Carter administration has proposed to deposit part of these assets — perhaps several billion dollars' worth — in an escrow account controlled by a neutral country, probably Algeria, to be released to Iran once all the hostages are freed.

Cut in water deliveries to oil firms prevented new high mark

The Colorado River Municipal Water District delivered half a billion gallons more water to its customers in 1980 over the previous year for a 3.10 percent gain.

This was not a record year by any means for the 16,754,096,382 gallons was well under the peak of 20,357,040,622 in 1974. However, had oil company deliveries been the same for both years, 1980 would easily have set a new high mark for production.

In 1974, when there were no restrictions upon oil repressuring deliveries, CRMWD pumped 7,016,666,122 gallons to these customers. Last year, with an almost complete cut-off except for brine wells and unpotable low-flow of the river, the oilfield deliveries stood at only 1,833,178,062 gallons.

Last year's 14,920,920,300 gallons was a record for municipal deliveries, topping the previous peak of 13,603,331,200 in 1979. If the 1974 oil deliveries were added to last year's municipal total, the new record would be 21,937,588,000 gallons. The 1980 cities' gain over 1979 was 503,636,000 gallons.

An unprecedented continuity of 100 or more degrees and no rain contributed to the record demand of the cities. Heavy rains in September replenished surface supplies, and by the end of the year deliveries to oil companies were being stepped up slightly and should gain substantially in 1981. Total of these deliveries for 1980 was 1,833,178,062 gallons which was 813,902,166 gallons less than the previous year.

During 1980, Odessa took a record 6,763,463,000 gallons, up 12.63 percent over 1979. Big Spring received 2,964,426,000 gallons, up 9.41 percent; Snyder 1,068,366,000 gallons (the first time it used more than a billion gallons in a year), up 16.35 percent; Midland 3,949,728,900 gallons, up 3.38 percent; Stanton 122,499,000 gallons, up 4.74 percent; Robert Lee 32,437,000 gallons, up 108.73 percent.

Action/reaction: Gold Bond Stamps

Q. What are people suppose to do with Gold Bond Stamps? The Gold Bond Stamps store is still in Big Spring, but the shelves are bare.

A. Today is the last day the Gold Bond Stamps store will be open in Big Spring, according to Margo Whittington, a Furr's supermarket employee. Ms. Whittington said that Furr's Supermarkets no longer issue Gold Bond Stamps. This was a decision of the chain, not of the local stores, she added. Ms. Whittington suggested that people could redeem their stamps in the Lubbock or Odessa Gold Bond stores. There is also an address inside the Gold Bond catalogue, where stamps may be sent to redeem their value on items. Locally, Prager's Men's Store will redeem the stamps until April 1.

Airport employees stabbed

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two airport employees received minor stab wounds after trying to remove a man who had no ticket from a TWA jet, police said.

Ronald Jones, 35, of Los Angeles was booked for investigation of assault with a deadly weapon in the Monday incident at Los Angeles International Airport, police said.

Police alleged Jones evaded airport security, walked onto a runway and pushed aside a crew member to board a San Francisco-bound 727. Airport employees Kenneth Adams, 36, and Daniel Robinson, 36, were stabbed when they tried to remove Jones from the plane, police said. The two were treated at a hospital and released.

Firefighters punished

MILLBURY, Mass. (AP) — The Board of Fire Engineers has demoted three part-time firefighters convicted of pulling false alarms and ordered them to paint all 125 of the town's alarm boxes.

The three were convicted last week in Worcester District Court of pulling the alarms Dec. 4. They were disciplined Monday by the board.

Two of the firefighters, Carl D. Hakala, 19, and Daniel Zinaga, 21, will lose their $650 annual pay and will have to serve terms on the auxiliary force, the board said. Mark S. Strom, 19, already an auxiliary firefighter, will be dropped to the end of the list of those waiting to become regular firefighters, the board said.

Man charged with cruelty

FORT PIERCE, Fla. (AP) — A 61-year-old man who pleaded no contest to charges of starving horses and other animals has been sentenced to six months in jail and been ordered never to own an animal again.

County Judge Edward DeFries sentenced William Eberhardt on Monday after Eberhardt pleaded no contest to six counts of cruelty and abuse to animals.

Sheriff's deputies said Eberhardt kept horses and other animals tied up for long periods of time without food or water. Authorities said they confiscated 47 fowl, two ponies, a number of dogs and 20 pigs from his farm.

Dogs attacking zoo animals

BALTIMORE (AP) — Marauding packs of domestic dogs are attacking animals at the Baltimore Zoo, zoo officials said.

The latest victim was a Grant's gazelle, a native of East Africa, which died Monday, zoo Director Stephan H. Graham said Tuesday. Earlier attacks killed two other gazelles, three African pygmy goats and a southdown sheep, Graham said.

Most of the dogs are pets from homes in neighborhoods surrounding the zoo, Graham said. Zoo officials and police are trying to catch the dogs, Graham said.

UAW begins bargaining on proposed wage, benefit freeze at Chrysler HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — The United Auto Workers union began bargaining today on a proposed wage freeze at Chrysler Corp.

UAW President Douglas A. Fraser arrived at Chrysler headquarters and said he welcomed the announcement by Chrysler that, unlike Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp., it was temporarily freezing new car prices.

The company has proposed to the union that wages and fringe benefits be frozen at present levels until the expiration of the current contract in September 1982, an action Chrysler says could save $600 million.

After meeting with the Chrysler Loan Guarantee Board Tuesday in Washington, Fraser said wage concessions and additional government loan guarantees would not be enough to keep Chrysler afloat unless the nation's "absolutely devastating" economy improves.

Today's negotiations are a linchpin in the automaker's latest plan to stave off bankruptcy by coupling $1.5 billion in cost-cutting measures with $400 million in additional federal loan guarantees.

Miller said the loan board again urged Chrysler officials to pursue merger plans with another automaker as a step to expand its market and obtain crucial cash. Such a move, however, is long-range and would not be part of Chrysler's current quest for loan guarantees, he stressed.

Miller also said that Chrysler currently could not qualify for the $400 million in loan guarantees, quashing Fraser's suggestion that the company seek all of the $700 million still available.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Additional government loan guarantees and union wage concessions will not be enough to keep the Chrysler Corp. afloat unless the nation's "absolutely devastating" economy improves, says the head of the United Auto Workers.

Nonetheless, UAW President Douglas Fraser and other negotiators were meeting with Chrysler officials today in Detroit to discuss the automaker's call for up to $600 million in wage concessions.

Those negotiations are a linchpin in the automaker's latest plan to stave off bankruptcy by coupling $1.5 billion in cost-cutting measures with $400 million in additional federal loan guarantees.

The cost-cutting elements would include both a union willingness to accept lower wages and concessions by banks holding outstanding Chrysler loans.

Reagan names Bell to Education post

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ronald Reagan today named Terrell H. Bell to head the Education Department, an agency the president-elect has vowed to dismantle. The appointment of the Utah education official fills the last vacancy in Reagan's Cabinet.

Transition press secretary James Brady announced the appointment of Bell, 59, U.S. education commissioner in the Nixon and Ford administrations. Bell is new Utah's commissioner of higher education.

Neither Reagan nor Bell was on hand for the announcement. But Brady said Bell would be available to answer questions at a news conference next week, when the new special trade representative and the Council of Economic Advisers are expected to be announced.

Bell reportedly flew to Washington this week to talk with Reagan, transition advisers.

Russian actress Fyodorova denied visa for U.S. visit

MOSCOW (AP) — Zoya Fyodorova, the Russian actress who landed in Stalin's prisons after she fell in love with an American naval officer in World War II, said today she had been denied a visa for another visit to the United States.

Miss Fyodorova, 68, said she was told by Soviet authorities Monday that she could not make her fourth trip to America because "your daughter in America has behaved badly."

"They said they had no complaints against me personally," she told The Associated Press. "They said it was all because of my daughter. They said I could try to apply again for a visa in six months."

Miss Fyodorova had hoped to leave for the United States Feb. 19. She said she was stunned by the refusal of the visa.

Miss Fyodorova's daughter Victoria, who lives in Connecticut with her American husband, said Tuesday that her mother had told her by telephone of the visa denial.

The daughter came to this country in 1975 to meet her father, Jackson Tate, a retired admiral who died two years ago. She married an American airline pilot, Fred Pouy, the year she arrived and became a U.S. citizen. They have one son, Christopher, 4.

"Her life is zero without Chris and me," Mrs. Pouy said of her mother. "OK if they don't like me but they don't have to punish her."

She said one visa official told her mother Soviet authorities were upset about Mrs. Pouy's book "The Admiral's Daughter," which related her mother's wartime romance with an American naval officer. The book was published in 1979, and her mother has not visited — or applied for a visa — since then, Mrs. Pouy said.

She also said her mother told her "everyone was refused a visa" that day, speculating that there may be a new freeze on exits from the Soviet Union.

"They're taking her away from me again, after 35 years," sobbed the daughter.

Police Beat Lodger bilks inn of $341

Criminal activity was slow in the city, Tuesday.

A lodger at the Big Spring Holiday Inn left Tuesday without paying his bill. The bill included charges for the room, room service and a bar tab. Loss was estimated at $341.42.

After destroying a chair at the Big Cheese Pizza Parlor, 208 Gregg, 11:14 p.m. Tuesday, a patron stole 20 beer mugs and fled the scene. Loss was estimated at $35.

Two boneless hams were stolen from the refrigerator at the Big Spring State Hospital, sometime Monday.

The meat was valued at $40.

Two men walked into the Seven-Eleven Store at West Highway 80 and Willie, 2:04 a.m. today, and walked out with two cases of Budweiser beer. They didn't pay the required $16.98.

Five mishaps, four of them high-and-runs, were reported Tuesday.

Vehicles driven by Mary Noyes, 2402 Cheyenne, and Allen Sides, Clovis, N.M., collided at Fifth and Gregg, 5:17 p.m.

A parked vehicle belonging to Bert Sheppard, 2608 Lynn, was struck by a vehicle that left the scene at 1:17 p.m.

Nixon's lawyer threatens legal action over tapes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon's lawyer, threatening legal action, says he told President Carter it would be illegal to turn Nixon tapes and documents over to Senate Democrats for Alexander M. Haig's confirmation hearings.

The lawyer, Herbert J. Miller, said he told the president in a letter Tuesday that Carter already had violated the law by asking federal agencies to search for the information requested for the hearings on confirmation of Haig's nomination to be secretary of state. The hearings begin Friday.

"I told him it was highly improper and illegal — I don't know if I used those words," Miller said in a telephone interview. "It is a misuse of the power of the White House."

Senate Democrats have asked for tapes and papers involving Haig's role in Nixon's Watergate defense, wiretapping of Nixon aides and reporters, the decision to bomb Cambodia during the Vietnam war, and other issues. Haig was White House chief of staff under Nixon.

The National Archives' counsel, Steven Garfinkel, said Miller threatened Tuesday morning to take court action to halt the archives' search for the material. Miller had taken no court action by 3 p.m. so the search started then, Garfinkel said.

Miller said he later sent the letter to Carter, saying that turning the Nixon tapes and documents over to the senators would violate the Presidential Records and Materials Preservation Act. Congress enacted that legislation to prevent Nixon from destroying any of the material during the Watergate trials.

The material was requested by Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., acting as senior Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which will conduct the Haig hearings.

At the archives, Garfinkel said he does not believe the requested information can be turned over to the Democrats before Jan. 20 when the committee hopes to complete Haig's hearings.

Missing 14-year old added to Atlanta child deaths

ATLANTA (AP) — The case of a missing 14-year-old black child has been officially added to the cases of 15 other missing and murdered children being investigated by a special police task force, Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown said today.

Lubie "Chuck" Geter was reported missing Sunday, one day after his brother dropped him at a shopping center where he planned to sell car deodorizers, authorities said.

The case originally was turned over to the Atlanta police missing persons' bureau rather than the missing children's task force, but Brown said the task force officially entered the case late Tuesday.

Eleven of the children have turned up dead during the past 18 months.

All Western Parade scheduled Jan. 30

FORT WORTH — Planning is under way for the annual All Western Parade, scheduled at 2 p.m. Friday, Jan. 30 in conjunction with the 85th Southwestern Exposition and Fat Stock Show, reports W.R. Watt Jr., president-manager.

This year's Stock Show will begin its 12-day run on Wednesday, Jan. 28 and concludes Sunday, Feb. 8. Tickets for the World's Original Indoor Rodeo are on sale at the Will Rogers Coliseum box office daily, including Sunday, from 9 a.m. until 6 p.m.

Mail orders should be sent to P.O. Box 150, Fort Worth, Texas 76101. Tickets are $6 for all nights and $5 for 2 p.m. matinees on February 2 through 6. When ordering by mail, include $1 extra for return postage and handling.

Those wishing to participate in the parade should contact Genny Brown in the Special Events Department at the Stock Show, said C.L.

Chuck Shytles, parade chairman.

"Everyone is welcome to be in the parade," Shytles said. "However, our parade is all western and does not allow motorized vehicles."

Already scheduled for 1981 are the Owens Country Sausage Eight-Horse Belgian Hitch, the Budweiser Clydesdale Hitch, and the Swingin' S Ranch Trail Riders from Carrollton, plus 10 floats, 10 bands and 25 riding clubs.

"We have room for plenty more," Shytles said. "Interested participants are urged to contact the Stock Show Office immediately. We are looking forward to an even better parade than last year."

He said the parade last year was one of the best on record. More than 65,000 people lined downtown Fort Worth streets to watch more than 4,000 participants. The two-hour parade was formed by 2,000 horses.

Snow blankets Northeast today

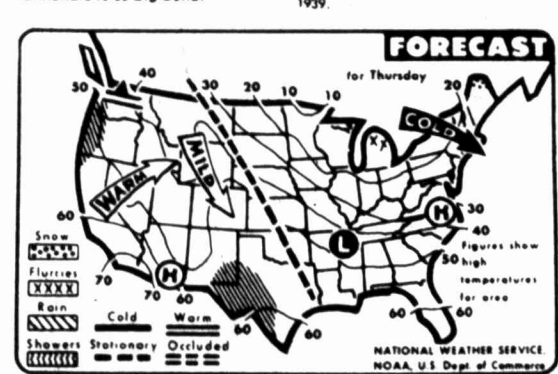

By the Associated Press

Up to 6 inches of snow blanketed New York, New Jersey and Connecticut today, snarling traffic and mass transit and forcing some school closings.

Snow also fell this morning in Washington, Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

Earlier, snow spread from the Great Lakes through the mid and north Atlantic Coast states and the southern Appalachians. A mixture of snow, rain, freezing rain and sleet fell over the Carolinas, with showers and drizzle from the central Gulf Coast to Georgia and South Carolina. Some rain also dotted areas of southeast

FORECAST
WEST TEXAS — Partly cloudy north, considerable cloudiness south through Thursday. Not so warm with scattered showers west of Pecos today. Widely scattered showers south tonight and Thursday. Highs 54 Panhandle to 65 Big Bend. Lows 25 north to 40 south. Highs Thursday 52 Panhandle to 60 Big Bend.

MIDDAY FORECAST — The National Weather Service forecast for Thursday calls for colder temperatures in the Northeast while warmer readings will move over much of the West.

American attitudes on women's roles are ambiguous

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two-thirds of Americans say they wouldn't mind if their boss were a woman, but by vast majorities they want police, doctors, lawyers, dentists and bankers to be men and salespeople, hairdressers and nurses to be women.

American attitudes are ambiguous on the homefront. Virtually all Americans now think it takes as much intelligence and drive to bring up children as to run a corporation, but only half say a working woman shouldn't have to bear full responsibility for running the house, too.

These trends emerge from a study, "Today's American Woman: How the Public Sees Her," which traces changes in public attitudes about women.

It was prepared by pollster Daniel Yankelovich and his assistant, Deborah Durfee Barron, and published by the President's Advisory Committee for Women. No new polls were conducted for the study, which only analyzed existing studies conducted by major public opinion research firms around the country.

What emerges is a general approval of women's progress — in the job market, in politics, in free choice to determine her own destiny.

But three out of 10 people see women as suffering as much discrimination as Puerto Ricans and Mexican Americans. Most people feel that women suffer less discrimination, though, than blacks or homosexuals.

A third of the women who were surveyed felt they would have gotten a lot further in life if they had been born as men. One in four said being born a woman prevented her from accomplishing all she had once hoped.

Because the study is based on the results of polls conducted at different times by different pollsters asking questions of differing groups of people, some of the findings appear to be in conflict with each other.

For example, one poll indicated that only a third of the public feels that women should run the home and let men run the country, a dramatic change from 1974, when a majority felt women should stay home.

But another poll deduced that about half of Americans subscribe to the old saying that a woman's place is in the home. Two-thirds disapprove of families in which the wife is the breadwinner while dad stays home with the kids.

On the other hand, about half of Americans subscribe to the old saying that a woman's place is in the home. Two-thirds disapprove of families in which the wife is the breadwinner while dad stays home with the kids.

Most people think a preschool child suffers if mom holds a job.

Most people — nearly six in 10 — don't think the United States will have a woman president by the year 2000, but seven in 10 think a woman will be sworn in as vice president.

Only one person in seven says he would vote against a woman presidential candidate if his party nominated her. In 1937, 65 percent said they would vote for the other party's male candidate.

Attitudes toward sex have changed, too.

Most people feel a couple having a child out of wedlock should not marry just for the sake of the child, but they don't feel it should be made legal to have children out of wedlock. And seven in 10 say deciding to have a child out of wedlock would be morally wrong.

The public is moving toward accepting the idea of single women having children, but a majority remains opposed. But adoption by single parents is all right with most people.

Iran claims victories in conflict with Iraq

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iraq reported fierce fighting continuing in one area of the Iranian counter-offensive launched two days ago but claimed the Iranians were retreating on their second front 200 miles to the north.

The Iranian government claimed "fresh victories" but gave no new details. Pars, the official news agency, invited foreign reporters in Tehran to the railway station later today for the arrival of 400 to 600 Iraqis it said were captured in the fighting near Ahvaz, the capital of oil-rich Khuzistan province, which Iraq invaded Sept. 22.

An Iraqi communique broadcast by Baghdad Radio Tuesday night said Iraqi forces were battling a three-prong Iranian attack in the area of Susangerd, 35 miles northwest of Ahvaz, where Iran said its first major counter-offensive of the war began Monday.

"Our forces engaged the enemy in strength and with all kinds of weapons, inflicting on him heavy losses in lives and equipment," the communique said. "Fierce fighting is still continuing in Susangerd."

The communique claimed that in the other area of Iranian attack, the Gilan e-Gharb highlands at the northern end of Iraq's 300-mile invasion line, the "enemy is retreating, leaving behind the dead and large quantities of tanks and arms, some destroyed and some usable."

For the first time in more than a month, the Iraqi air force went into action against the Iranians in Susangerd and Ahvaz. Baghdad Radio said Iraqi MiGs flew 15 sorties over the two cities, "scoring direct hits and causing extensive damage."

Well, don't be embarrassed anymore

Are you still embarrassed over your latest blunder?

Did you forget where you parked your car in the shopping center lot? Did you roll up to the check-out stand in the supermarket with a basket full of food and discover you had left your wallet or purse at home? Did you show up for the party one week late?

These are all natural blunders and all of us have pulled something similar at one time or another.

WELL, DON'T BE embarrassed anymore. You are in good company. Not only do we ordinary individuals pull these boo-boos, some of the largest and most respected companies in the country have pulled monumental blunders.

And David Ricks, chairman of the Ohio State University International Business Program, has kept track of all of them. Ricks has been ferreting out blunders made by big businesses for ten years and uses the horrible examples as teaching aids for his students.

SOME SAMPLES from nearly 200

documented blunders Ricks has uncovered:

A baby food company tried unsuccessfully to peddle its product in a mostly illiterate African nation with a label showing a cuddly infant. It turned out the Africans thought the jars contained ground-up babies.

Chevrolet was puzzled when its Nova model, popular in this country, would not sell in Latin American markets. Firm officials finally figured out that in some of the Latin American countries Nova means, "Does not go."

AN AIRLINE advertised the "Rendezvous lounges" on its 707 flights in Brazil and lost customers. Rendezvous in Portuguese is a place to have sex.

Pepsodent's promise of white teeth brought no new customers in part of Southeast Asia, where people of status chew betelnuts, and black, discolored teeth are a symbol of prestige.

A blunder, as defined by Ricks, "is a mistake that could have been avoided, but because of carelessness it's not." For that reason he counts

MacDonald's advertising of "Big Macs" in Canada as embarrassing, but not a monumental-type blunder.

In French-Canadian slang, "Big Macs" are big busts, but the giant hamburgers still are selling wonderfully.

General Foods, for example, found that England had no room for Jell-O. The firm found out too late that British shoppers look for gelatin in cakes or wafers, not powdered form.

CAMPBELL SOUPS languished on English shelves, too. The trouble was that Campbell Soup cans looked so small next to the English cans selling for the same price. In England, soup is sold with the water already added.

Some companies are culturally ignorant. Like the aircraft company that used ads in India picturing Pakistanis. Americans may not be able to tell the difference, but Indians can.

Or the firm that tried selling refrigerators to the mostly Moslem Middle East with an ad picturing their appliance chock full of food... including a giant ham on the middle shelf.

Colors are culturally significant.

Take the firms that forgot when labeling their products that green is the color of disease in Africa and white the color of death in Japan.

HIRING TRANSLATORS is not always the answer, Ricks found. Frenchmen working on advertising for French-Canada, and American-trained language students working on campaigns intended for overseas, have blundered often.

"Body by Fisher" became "Corpse by Fisher" in a Belgian ad. Pepsi's familiar "Come Alive with Pepsi" became, in a German translation, "Come Alive out of the grave." A car wash turned into a "car enema" in another blunder.

"Know the area" is a must for businessmen interested in selling a product. Take the decision of a fast food chain to locate a West German hamburger stand on a street that tests showed was heavily traveled. The hamburgers didn't sell.

Finally company officials checked out the building next door... it was a bordello.

Oh, how sweet it is

Jan. 4, 1981 will long be remembered in Atlanta, Ga., as the dreadful day a group of Texas Cowboys rode into town.

But haunting the President's hometown even more is the fact these homies rode away, stripping them of the opportunity of becoming a heralded land of football champions twice in the same year.

ONLY DAYS BEFORE, the Georgia Bulldogs accomplished their half of the goal, defeating Notre Dame for the Sugar Bowl title.

The Atlanta Falcon's task was clearly cut out for them. The reality of rolling along Super Bowl road lay only behind a door profusely barricaded by a group of unyielding Dallas Cowboys.

Papers proclaimed it, sportscasters announced it, and Jimmy the Greek confirmed it. This particular playoff game couldn't have been more evenly matched if the National Football League Commission had handpicked the teams itself.

IF ATLANTA was favored, it was only at the very most by 2½ points. But Dallas' previous experience in battling playoff games was more than enough to erase the less-than-three-point spread.

As usual, the Cowboys spent most of the afternoon playing catch up. Atlanta was the first on the scoreboard, rallying to a 10-nothing lead over the Cowboys early in the game.

But the Cowboys' calvary came to the rescue, led by its under-rated quarterback Danny White.

THOSE LIKE MYSELF who watched the matchup on television, just barely escaping anxiety-caused coronaries, were once again ecstatically overjoyed by the outcome.

I had spent most of the afternoon preparing myself for a loss that seemed imminent from the first quarter. The possibility of Dallas pulling out another miracle victory was just too far-fetched.

That's probably what a stadium full of Atlanta Falcon fans thought, too. Boy were they ever surprised.

THE COWBOYS have had several days to savor their hard-fought victory. But Sunday, the draining cycle will begin all over again, this time against the Philadelphia Eagles.

But for the time being, I'm happy. The Cowboys are happy and Tom Landry is happy. What else matters?

Some are favored

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Every news story on the remorseless climb of interest rates invariably focuses on the "prime rate," with the explanation that this is the percentage charged by banks to their most reliable borrowers. Anyone with less prestigious credentials can expect to pay a higher rate on his loan.

What only a few insiders know, however, is that the prime rate is even more unfair to the little guy. According to a confidential Federal Reserve Board survey, the big banks haven't been charging their favored Big Business borrowers anything like the prime rate.

THE BANKERS ran up the prime rate to above 20 percent last year. Yet at the same time, they offered loans to big corporations at well below that supposedly "most favored" rate, the survey showed.

"The large banks have been posting a phony prime rate," a knowledgeable congressional source told my associate Lucette Lagnado. They have been making loans to Big Business at 5 or 6 points below the posted prime rate, he charged. It happened last year, and it's happening now.

Meanwhile, of course, small businessmen are being forced to pay a few points above the bogus prime rate. Indeed, the bankers are approaching the kind of interest rates that could get a Mafia loan shark thrown in jail — as high as a usurious 25 percent or 26 percent.

The cost in human terms is staggering. Sky-high interest rates have driven the payments on home mortgages and major installment purchases beyond the reach of many people.

The effect on small businessmen has been crippling and in many cases ruinous. By the very nature of their operations, they require regular infusions of credit to survive. But the loans that used to be their lifelines are now dragging them under — when they can get them at all.

Take the case of Charles Altman, owner of a small clothing factory in Waltham, Mass. Last winter, he was in urgent need of a loan to keep going. But interest rates had just zoomed up, and Altman found that the bankers were reluctant to lend him what he needed — they were afraid he couldn't afford the high interest rates they were charging.

Altman went to the Small Business Administration for help. But unofficially, he got turned down there, too. Apparently, the fact that he was not a minority businessman, or in imminent danger of bankruptcy, killed his chances with the government agency.

FINALLY, ALTMAN found a banker who would advance a small loan. But it wasn't enough to install the air-conditioning his plant badly needed. As a result, during the summer heat waves, Altman simply had to close down. Shipping deadlines were missed, and production dropped by half. Instead of making money, Altman lost. He is now facing bankruptcy.

Meanwhile, Big Business conglomerates — which could afford high interest rates a lot better than the Charles Altmans of the nation — are getting credit at bargain prices from their friendly bankers. The Federal Reserve Board is aware of the situation, but is deferential to the Big Boys of high finance.

DESERT FREEZE — Recent reports that Saudi Arabia is investing its oil billions in German and Japanese currencies, instead of dollars, come as no surprise to American businessmen. They have been aware for some time that they are losing lucrative Saudi contracts to competitors of other nations, particularly Japan, South Korea and France.

The Americans say the main reason is that restrictive U.S. laws are driving up the cost of doing business overseas. For example, even when all the work is being done in Saudi Arabia, the businessmen claim, U.S. firms must comply with expensive environmental regulations that foreign businessmen don't have to meet.

The cost of importing expert personnel is also a factor in the Saudis' reluctant shift away from U.S. firms. An American engineer costs the Saudis $400,000 a year, while they can bring a Japanese engineer to their country for only $325,000 — and a Korean for even less.

A JUNGLE OUT THERE — Being a leading arms merchant has its headaches, according to a secret report prepared for the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The prospective buyers have an irritating tendency to play the sellers off against each other, it seems.

"If the recipients believe they need arms and cannot buy from the United States, they will buy from other industrial countries, including, in some cases, the Soviet Union," the report complains, adding glumly:

"If a nation is convinced that its security is threatened and judges its arms requirements differently than the United States does, the U.S. ability to affect its decision is limited to the power to persuade. The power to persuade is, in turn, dependent upon the goodwill, confidence and trust that the United States has developed with the military leaders, governments and people of these countries."

STAMPING OUT ISRAEL — The normally placid lives of officials at the United Nations Postal Administration have been disrupted by howls of protest in recent weeks. The cause of the storm is this month's issues of some six million stamps honoring the Palestinians and their "inalienable rights."

Caught in the middle, U.N. postal officials point out that the stamps honor Palestinians, not the PLO as such — and that in any case, they were only following orders from the General Assembly.

Hairy situation in Arizona

The federal government doesn't have monopoly on regulatory overkill.

To qualify as a barber in Arizona, one must undertake fully 1,250 hours of instruction in a registered barber school (at a cost, in 1978, as high as $1,327).

This is 50 hours more than is required in most law schools, writes Arizona State University law Professor Jonathan Rose in Regulation magazine.

Of those 1,250 hours, not less than 250 must be devoted to the "scientific fundamentals of barbering, hygiene, bacteriology, histology of the hair, skin, muscles and nerves, structure of the head, face and neck, elementary chemistry relating to sterilization and antiseptics, and diseases of the skin, hair and glands."

Following graduation, the student must pass an exam and then practice as an apprentice for 18 months under the immediate supervision of a licensed barber.

We haven't even mentioned Arizona's elaborate regulations governing barber schools and barber shops, which this newspaper does not contain enough pages to go into.

But curiously, while the number of Arizona barbers has increased by 22 percent in the past six years, the number of barbers has increased by only 7 percent, and the number of shops has actually declined.

Or is it so curious?

New year politics

Joseph Kraft

WASHINGTON — For the U.S. and the other industrialized countries, the politics of the new year are mostly in place. At the center is the unresolved problem of the last decade — the famous mix of slow growth and rising prices known as stagflation.

The rhetoric of those has recently changed — from liberal to conservative. But it remains in doubt whether the government that doubts most, the government of this country, will tackle basic troubles, or, like its predecessor, merely attack the symptoms.

CONTINUING INFLATION is deeply embedded in most of the industrial world. In this country, which is better than average, the core rate of inflation — that is to say the increase in prices which business must impose to stay abreast of rising costs — now amounts to about 10 percent annually. Uncertain political conditions in the Persian Gulf and bad harvests assure higher prices for energy and food. Unless measures were taken, inflation of over 10 percent is guaranteed for the U.S. and most European countries.

Slow growth in national output arises from inflation — and the half measures taken to stem it. The combined effect of high interest rates and reductions in government spending and private investment works to reduce to about two percent the growth outlook for the next 18 months for the U.S., Britain, Canada, Germany and France.

Between rates of growth and political coloration there exists a connection. When there are surpluses to divide, societies seem ready to leave the task to political leaders. When disposable income falls, and the task is distributing sacrifice, people turn self-reliant.

So the 1960s were halcyon days for believers in government management of the economy — Democrats in the U.S.; Labor in Britain; Gaullists in France; Social Democrats in West Germany and Scandinavia. But lately, parties and persons known to favor the free play of markets have surged forward. Hence the recent success of the Tories in Britain; Helmut Schmidt and his coalition partners, the Free Democrats, in West Germany; President Giscard d'Estaing and the Independents in France. The Republican victory of Ronald Reagan last fall is the American counterpart of a general drift.

BUT ARE FREE marketers any better in dealing with stagflation than believers in government direction? Recent experiences in Japan, Germany and Great Britain, apart from being special in each country, cancel each other out. Nor is a true test apt to come with the Reagan administration in this country.

Reagan supporters, to be sure, have surfaced two coherent strategies for dealing with stagflation. There is the emergency program favored by Jack Kemp, the New York congressman, and David Stockman, the Michigan congressman who will be Reagan's budget director. It features a tight lid on credit, big cuts in taxes and government spending; and deregulation on the grand scale, including decontrol of oil and gasoline.

Then there is the foreign policy strategy. The idea is to live with stagflation, and concentrate on making a few gains in dealing abroad.

Crystals form in frostbite area

Q.D. of 10 J.M. 2 2012

andol noitziol 2 neM

Paul G. Donohue, M.D.

Dear Dr. Donohue: Could you please give me some information on what could be done for frostbite? My husband got frostbite on his foot from deer hunting several years ago. Today, he has developed what looks like a bunion next to the small toe. This is giving him great pain. Please give him some advice. How is frostbite treated? — Mrs. C.R.B.

Frostbite means that ice crystals have formed in tissues beneath the skin. With this, the part feels cold, becomes painful, then finally numb. The skin color varies from white to violet. Did your husband's initial symptoms match these?

The proper first treatment for frostbite is proper rewarming in a place where refreezing will not occur. If a partially-warmed frostbitten area refreezes, larger ice crystals form and even greater damage occurs. The treatment is immerse the frostbitten part in water at a comfortable temperature (between 100 and 108 degrees Fahrenheit). Recirculate the water. Use a thermometer to regulate the temperature of the water. Thawing usually takes from 30 minutes to an hour.

It is wise, when possible, to have a frostbitten area examined and treated professionally. A tetanus booster may be needed, and the care of the frostbitten part after thawing requires close follow up to be certain adequate circulation has been restored and that infection has not developed.

As to your husband's problem: Even minor frostbite can leave a lifelong condition of decreased tolerance to cold in the area affected. Pain would occur in dampness or cold. Once a finger or toe has been frostbitten, great care must be taken to protect it in the future. I cannot relate the development of a bunion to frostbite, however. That may be an entirely different matter. A bunion should be padded so that no pressure is placed on the area. If that doesn't help, your husband ought to ask his physician if it needs to be removed.

Since frostbite is a hazard in many of the winter activities, prevention is the best treatment. Adequately covering all exposed parts is a must. If a person notices pain in an exposed area or a blanching of the skin, he should seek shelter promptly to warm the part.

Dear Dr. Donohue: About three times since I began having regular physicals several years ago I have had a few red blood cells in my urine. Urological tests showed no other symptoms. I am 48 and in excellent health otherwise. Please tell me what the general medical opinion would be regarding the seriousness of this intermittent condition. — Mr. R.J.O.

The finding of red blood cells in the urine, although often a benign sign, should be thoroughly investigated. This was done in your case. It is most important to determine whether a tumor is causing red blood cells to be shed in the urine. Other conditions can cause the same symptom — for example infection or injury. However, vigorous exercise or exposure to cold also may cause the appearance of the cells.

So long as the important causes have been ruled out, then you can feel assured that nothing serious is going on. Actually, under normal circumstances we pass upwards of 100,000 red blood cells in the urine daily. That sounds like a lot, but at that level they would not be detected from a regular urine test. This is why a further investigation is warranted when blood cells do show up on a routine test. Even a few extra red blood cells does not imply there is trouble with the kidney or bladder. They may have been there because of some exercise you engaged in prior to the regular test. Athletes often show such signs after a contest.

Dear Dr. Donohue: Please give us your thoughts on use of large doses of vitamin C as cold preventative. — Mrs. T.O.

I guess I am obliged to get on the record on this one. From the evidence I've seen, I find no reason to believe vitamin C helps or prevents colds. Keeping well-nourished with all necessary nutrients (including vitamin C) will help a person weather the onslaught of a cold virus, however.

Dear Dr. Donohue: When one is taking Zylorim for gout, is it unwise to take aspirin in any form? Do they work against each other? — M.D.P.

One early study raised the suspicion that uric acid might not be filtered as well into the urine when aspirin was used with Zylorim (allopurinol). As you know, high levels of uric acid are the hallmark of gout. That initial finding could not be confirmed in subsequent studies, so aspirin can be used with Zylorim.

My answer

Billy Graham

DEAR DR. GRAHAM: I became a Christian in one of your crusades about a year ago. Now I find a lot of temptations come my way and I wonder if I am abnormal or if other Christians have problems with temptation? — D.A.A.

DEAR D.A.A.: Certainly Christians have problems with temptation. In fact, to be perfectly honest with you, Satan may even increase his temptations to you because he wants to keep you from living for Christ. But you should remember several important facts.

One is that temptation itself is not sin — the sin is yielding to temptation. Jesus Christ was tempted, the Bible says, "In every way, just as we are — yet was not sin" (Hebrews 4:15, New International Version). Satan tried to make him sin by tempting him, and yet Satan was unsuccessful. Nowhere does the Bible promise that we will not be tempted and tested.

Another fact you should remember is that God can help us when we are tempted. As we rely upon him, the Holy Spirit can give us the strength to resist the assaults of Satan.

This is a very important truth, and sometimes is misunderstood. It is not simply that God may give us a sudden surge of spiritual strength at the moment of temptation. It is also that God will equip us in such a way that the temptations of Satan will no longer be attractive to us. I suggest you study carefully what the Bible tells us in Ephesians 6:10-18. In that passage the Christian is compared to a soldier engaged in battle. Evil spiritual forces are arrayed against us, and yet God himself has given us the armor we need to fight Satan. "So that when the day of evil comes, you may be able to stand your ground, and after you have done everything, to stand" (Ephesians 6:13).

All of your spiritual weapons — God's truth, righteousness, etc. — come to us from God's Word. That is why the Bible is so important in our struggle against temptation. Learn the Word of God — memorize it, obey it, trust it. When Jesus was tempted (see Matthew 4:1-11) he answered Satan with the Truth of God's Word. That same weapon is available to you and me.

SAVES ONE BABY, LOSES SECOND — With badly burned hands, David Brewster, left, stands outside his home in Boston's Mattapan area with firefighter Arthur O'Leary as his home blazes in the background Tuesday. Brewster was able to save his 5-month-old son Reginald but was driven back by the force of the flames when he attempted to rescue his 18-month-old daughter Devita who was pronounced dead at Carney Hospital. Brewster himself remains in guarded condition at Boston City Hospital with burns on his face, hands and arms.

Texas households will divide HEAP allotment

Some 600,000 Texas households will divide $33.8 million this winter under the Home Energy Assistance Program (HEAP), Marlin W. Johnston, acting commissioner of the Department of Human Resources said recently.

Payments begin this month and continue through March, 1981, Johnston said.

The program, established by Congress, is designed to assist low income households meet the increased cost of energy for heating their homes.

Johnston said the cash assistance will be one-time payments, and will range from $20 to $140, based on family size, income, primary heating energy used, and county of residence.

About 400,000 households will receive the energy payment automatically, and do not have to apply for it. These are households now receiving benefits from Aid to Families with Dependent Children, Supplemental Security Income, or Food Stamps.

The remaining 200,000 households are low-income families and individuals not already receiving public assistance. Members of these households will be required to apply for HEAP benefits beginning Jan. 5, and not after Feb. 28, 1981.

Each county in Texas has a designated location for members of these 200,000 households to apply for the energy assistance. These locations may be determined by calling the local office of the Texas Department of Human Resources. If certified as eligible for the assistance, applicants should have their payments within 20 to 30 days.

Household gross monthly income cannot be more than the following figures for eligibility. Numbers of people in household, in parentheses, precede income figures: (1 person) — $296; (2) — $446; (3) — $618; (4) — $756; (5) — $893; (6) — $1044; (7) — $1195; (8) — $1346; (9) — $1498; (10) — $1649; (11) — $1800; (12) — $1951.

GOP confident as Senate convenes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lock, stock and bookbinder, the Senate is in Republican custody for two years and quite probably longer.

Last time that happened, Jimmy Carter was in the Navy, Ronald Reagan was in the movies, and Harry S. Truman was moving out of the White House.

First, Truman sent a final State of the Union message to Congress, and in it confirmed that the United States had indeed developed the hydrogen bomb.

When that 83rd Congress convened, 28 years ago, Republicans had tenuous control of both Senate and House. They gained it in Dwight D. Eisenhower's presidential landslide, and lost it two years later.

This time, they insist, the pattern will be different. "The momentum is ours," says Bill Brock, the outgoing Republican national chairman.

As the new Senate held its ceremonial opening session on Monday, Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd, the majority boss until then, joked that the Republican side of the aisle looked bloated to him.

It would, after years in which the Democratic side was the crowded one. At one point, the Democrats held 68 of the 100 seats and had to squeeze in extra desks, narrowing the aisles to do it.

They've got plenty of room

There are 53 Republican senators; there haven't been that many in 50 years.

The duration of the Republican lease certainly will depend on what happens, in the Reagan administration and at the Capitol. Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. said Reagan will be sending Congress his economic program early next month. That is likely to be the key issue — if Republicans really can curb inflation and keep the economy perking at the same time, political rewards surely will follow.

The president's party usually has trouble in off-year elections, and that will make it difficult for the GOP to carve into the 51-seat margin by which Democrats control the House.

The Republican numbers are promising on the Senate side

Integration order defied

Three girls, state judge return to school

BUCKEYE, La. (AP) — With a defiant state judge standing by, three white girls returned to all-white Buckeye High School again today in defiance of an order by a federal judge who wants them to attend a racially integrated school.

State District Judge Richard Lee and his lawyer, a constitutional expert, showed up before the opening of school. The girls arrived a few minutes later and went straight inside without comment. Unlike two previous days this week, no law enforcement officers were there to escort them.

Lee said the girls could attend classes despite U.S. District Judge Nauman Scott's order that it violated his desegregation pupil assignment plan for Rapides Parish.

Scott has threatened to fine anyone who interferes with his orders.

Lee told reporters: "I will obey any order served on me, whether it's from a federal court, a state court or a city court."

U.S. Attorney Ransdell

Keene filed papers with Scott in Shreveport late Tuesday asking that Lee be held in contempt of court and fined $1,000 a day.

On Tuesday, Lee had said he was undecided whether he would go to school today to ensure that the girls are admitted.

"I'm getting old, and that's a long drive for me," Lee said. Lee, 44, lives in Alexandria, 15 miles away.

Scott ordered last summer that Rapides Parish public schools be more broadly desegregated and reassigned 108 of the 7th and 8th graders at Buckeye High to attend Jones Street Junior High, which is 54 percent black. The junior high school is in Alexandria.

To get around Scott's order, the parents of three of the reassigned students — Michelle Laborde, 13; Lynda McNeal, 13; and Ramona Carbo, 12 — gave custody of their daughters to friends living in the new Buckeye attendance zone.

Disclaiming racial motives, the parents maintained that they didn't want the girls bused to classes far from their homes.

The judges' tug-of-war began when Lee approved the custody move and Scott, calling it a "sham," took the case away from Lee's state court.

DISABLED — Rows of Grumman Flexible buses stand idle, parked at a bus garage near Chicago awaiting inspection and repair. Some 205 of the vehicles, operated by the Chicago area Regional Transportation Authority, have been recalled by the manufacturer after checks revealed frame and other structural defects.

(AP LASERPHOTO)

Hairline crack is discovered in Dallas Grumman bus

DALLAS (AP) — Mechanics discovered a hairline crack in the frame of one of the city's 69 Grumman-built buses, but Dallas Transit System managers said they have no plans to take that bus, or any of the other Grumman vehicles, off the streets.

"We're not intending to take any of these out of service," said DTS general manager Cliff Franklin. "There's no safety problem at all with the bus."

"There is a small crack that I would liken to a fracture in your arm that you wouldn't discover without an X-ray," he continued. "The bus with the hairline fracture will be put back into service and monitored frequently for any growth of the fracture."

If the frame were to crack all the way through at the fracture, "the only thing that would happen is the bus would drop five or six inches," said Franklin.

The buses, named "Flexibles" by the Grumman Corp., were taken completely out of service in New York City when cracks were discovered in the A-frames, which support the bus transmissions and engines.

Monday night, Grumman officials agreed to repair cracked frames on 637 New York City buses and Franklin said similar work will begin in Dallas on Jan. 26.

Farm — $20.4 million approved for cotton promotion

Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland recently approved a 1981 budget of $20.4 million for a cotton research and promotion program.

This producer-funded program is authorized under the Cotton Research and Promotion Act and is administered by a 20-member Cotton Board appointed by the secretary of agriculture.

Research and promotion projects are designed to strengthen the competitive position of cotton and expand its uses. The projects are planned and carried out by Cotton Incorporated, a producer-governed organization under contract to the Cotton Board. Cotton Incorporated is headquartered in New York City and has research facilities in Raleigh, N.C.

The program is funded entirely by producer assessments averaging about $2.40 per bale. Individual producers who do not wish to take part may obtain refunds of their assessments upon request to the Cotton Board.

P.R. Smith, assistant secretary of agriculture for marketing and transportation services, said the program has provided the industry with many tools for competing with synthetic fabrics and recapturing cotton's share of the textile market. Contributions listed by Smith included:

—Marketing of durable press cotton shirts and sheets, and development of additional new durable press products. The cotton industry had lost a considerable share of the market to synthetic fabrics with durable press capabilities.

—Development of energy-efficient dyeing and finishing techniques for cotton.

—Development and marketing of fire-retardant cotton fabrics for apparel and home furnishings.

—A new fiber processing line for non-woven cotton suitable for medical uses and personal care products.

—Marketing projects that encourage mill and manufacturers to use more cotton.

—An effort to expand the export market for U.S. cotton.

The program has also funded intensive research on problem of byssinosis, a disabling lung ailment that affects some workers after prolonged exposure to dust generated in handling and processing such natural fibers as cotton, flax and hemp. More than $2 million has been allocated in 1981 for this research.

Mrs. Baum reviews books for club

The 1941 Study Club of Coahoma met with the Alpha Tau Rho sorority at the Signal Mountain Room of Coahoma State Bank Monday evening.

Mrs. Dwayne Clawson introduced the speaker, Mrs. Jim Baum, who reviewed her book, "Keep Out of Reach of Children", a combination of original musical songs that teach a moral to coordinate with anecdotes of her four children. She stated that all people need goals, even if they never reach them. She also quoted, "Dreams never die, only the dreamers do." Her ending statement was "Happiness is having children."

Mrs. Guy Hodnett told about the 1941 Study Club, mentioning the theme for this year, "Follow the Rainbow of Service." She listed some of the projects: (1) Inspire more respect for the American heritage, (2) Purchase canteen books at Christmas time for Big Spring State Hospital patients, (3) Honor Coahoma High School graduating seniors, (4) Participate in the community improvement program, and (5) Remember elderly shut-ins in the community at Halloween and on Valentine's Day.

Mrs. Johnny Ezell told about the Alpha Tau Rho sorority's beginning in the 1930's by Walter Ross. Today it is international with 1,200 chapters. If a member moves, she can transfer to a new club.

The local Coahoma Chapter has adopted Mrs. Joe Barron as their grandmother for the year. Main projects are the Halloween carnival and spring bake and crafts sale.

Refreshments were served by the Alpha Tau Rho and the program was provided by the 1941 Study Club. The next Study Club meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Rod Tiller on Feb. 2, and will be entitled "Color Us Beautiful."

The Alpha Tau Rho will meet Jan. 19 in the home of Becky Key for a program on popular music.

Afternoon reception honors Kathy Mays

The home of Mrs. Don Newsom, 529 Hillside Dr., was the setting for an afternoon reception for Kathy Mays, bride-elect of Larry Harper, Jan. 3.

The tea table, covered with a green and white cloth, was centered with an arrangement of jonquils, white winter daisies and yellow chrysanthemums. Silver appointments were used.

Punch was served with crystal appointments from a table covered with a white linen overlay.

The honoree and special guests, Mrs. Roland Harper, Ft. Worth, mother of the prospective groom and Mrs. Floyd Mays, mother of the bride-elect, were presented daisy corsages. Another special guest was Mrs. Dick Pettie, Fort Worth, godmother of the bridegroom elect.

Co-hostesses were Mrs. Jack Cook, Mrs. Harold Davis, Mrs. Granville Hahn, Mrs. Jim Bill Little, Mrs. Ralph McLaughlin, Mrs. Paul Shaffer, Mrs. Hayes Stripling Jr., Mrs. John Taylor and Mrs. Jerry Worthy.

The couple will be married in a family wedding Saturday in the chapel of the First Presbyterian Church.

Womens Aglow to meet Friday

Women's Aglow Fellowship will meet Friday at 7:30 p.m. in the Blue Room of Dora Roberts Community Center at Comanche Trail Park.

Ginie Polo, vice president, former high school English and speech teacher and mother, will present the program on "How You can be used of Christ."

This will be Mrs. Polo's final meeting with the Big Spring fellowship since she is leaving this month to become a stock broker for E. F. Hutton.

Mrs. Polo is a former Miss Big Spring and Public Relations person for the Houston Grand Opera and editor of its magazine. Ginie is the mother of a teen-age daughter, Audrei, who has a ministry in Christian song. She has served as vice-president of the women Aglow Fellowship since its beginning in August 1979.

Dear Abby

'Marriage Encounter' Opens Doors, Hearts

DEAR ABBY: Many letters in your column deal with marital problems that seem to be caused by lack of communication. We'd like to suggest an inexpensive, practical and loving way to learn to communicate. The experience is called "Marriage Encounter."

During the last 12 years, over a million couples have gone on a "weekend," as it is called. It lasts from Friday through Sunday afternoon. A six- to eight-member husband and wife team that includes either a rabbi and his spouse, a minister and his spouse, or a priest, presents a series of talks on how to restore life, excitement, love and trust as well as honesty and openness to a marriage.

Abby, the world offers instant divorce as a solution to the problems of communication and commitment. Marriage Encounter showed us a doorway to happiness that we thought was found only in fairy tales.

JON AND MARY, MONTCLAIR, N.J.

DEAR JON AND MARY: I have had sufficient reports in praise of Marriage Encounter to know that it's well worth recommending. Age is not a factor. Couples who have been married 30 years and longer have benefited along with those in their 20s.

It is not a cure for deeply troubled marriages — it's a revitalization for marriages that have become stale, unromantic or dull.

For details, contact the church of your choice.

DEAR ABBY: In regard to the woman whose husband makes love with his socks on. When my husband and I were first married, he would frequently come home for lunch to satisfy his appetite (and mine), which, I confess, was not restricted exclusively to food. He had only an hour, so he never had time to take his socks off. It got to be a standing joke with us.

Now 11 years and three children later, nothing has changed. Who has time to bother with socks? Besides, impromptu rendezvous are usually the best.

SOCK IT TO ME IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR SOCK: On the other hand (or foot), to some, anticipation is more enjoyable than realization.

DEAR ABBY: We've been going round and round about something at our house, and you've been elected to settle it. Our 17-year-old daughter is going with a very nice 18-year-old. Rick is polite and respectful, and not wild like some, but, Abby, his jeans are so tight it is downright indecent! It is embarrassing for me to look at him. My husband agrees with me that something should be left to the imagination. We told our daughter to tell Rick to get a larger size, but she says there's nothing wrong with tight jeans — all the kids wear them that way. Do they? And are we square to be offended? What should we do?

TWO OLD SQUARES

DEAR SQUARES: Tight jeans are in, but when nothing is left to the imagination, they are offensive. And if you're square, I'm in all four of your corners.

Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send $1 and a long, stamped (28 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Letter Booklet, 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Block must assure Senators of care for farmers' needs

WASHINGTON (AP) — John R. Block, chosen by Ronald Reagan to be his agriculture secretary, is spending a lot of his time assuring senators and others that he indeed will mention farmers and their virtues in the councils of government.

At his hearing before the Senate Agriculture Committee on Tuesday, Block was asked repeatedly about his prospective role in the Reagan Cabinet.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., who lent his muscle in support of Block's nomination, said he would have "a very difficult job" in finding ways "to satisfy the real needs" of people.

"I would hope that you would make your voice heard... so that the farmers, the consumers will know that the voice of the secretary of agriculture was heard prior to some decision" that greatly affects them, Dole told Block.

In his response, Block pledged:

"It would be my profound desire to provide a strong voice for agriculture in the halls of government. I really think that may be one of my greatest responsibilities."

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., asked if Block would live up to his frequent remarks on behalf of farm exports.

"Yes," Block replied, "you can count on a very aggressive export effort."

Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., also wanted to know how strongly Block would espouse the cause of agriculture.

Block said that when he met with Reagan recently, "I came away with a feeling that I will have considerable prerogative" in making decisions. But there will have to be "give and take" in the process.

"I don't intend to take a second seat to other members of the Cabinet," Block said.

Sen. Roger Jepsen, R-Iowa, asked what Block would say to consumers concerned that rising export prices might drive up food prices.

"That's a very short-sighted thought, because farm exports are to the great advantage of everyone in this country," Block said.

Exports help provide foreign exchange to buy oil and a variety of foreign product, help build a stronger U.S. agriculture and create jobs across the country, he said.

A final decision by the committee on Block's appointment was postponed until financial disclosures and other legal papers are completed.

Meicher also was interested in Block farming operation, a 3,000-acre enterprise in Illinois that also produces 6,000 hogs a year.

Block said he did not know the exact amount of his farm's debt and explained how he and his family have an "operating partnership" that, like most larger farming operations today, use lots of credit.

Sometimes it requires $100,000 to $200,000 to cover operating expenses, Block said. But most of the debt is in land mortgages, possibly totaling $3 million to $5 million, he said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government weather analysts say scanty snow cover is endangering winter crops in the Soviet Union, Europe and China.

The Joint Agricultural Weather Facility, operated by the departments of Commerce and Agriculture, says the lack of snow cover "leaves dormant grain crops vulnerable to winterkill" in much of the three countries.

In its report issued on Tuesday, the facility said although unusually cold weather prevails in the eastern United States, winter wheat nationally is still rated in fair to good condition.

Above-normal temperatures prevailed during the week of Dec. 29-Jan. 4 in the western two-thirds of the country, which includes the Great Plains where winter wheat is grown extensively.

Production of meat up in Texas, America

WASHINGTON (AP) — Poultry production is trailing levels of a year ago, the latest Agriculture Department figures show.

In November, inspections of live poultry at slaughtering plants totaled about 1.45 billion pounds, down 6 percent from a year earlier, the Crop Reporting Board said.

Inspections of live young chickens going to slaughter in November totaled 1.08 billion pounds and were down 4 percent from a year earlier.

Production of young chickens — broilers — is expected to increase this year if broiler prices improve as forecast by department experts.

Texas farmers seed record number of acres in wheat

AUSTIN — Texas farmers seeded a record number of acres in wheat for pasture or harvest in 1981 with a record production expected in the spring. Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown has reported.

Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service estimates indicate a 13 percent increase in seedings over last year with 7.7 million acres. "Harvest, barring a repeat of last year's drought, is expected to surpass the 1979 record with a total of 154 million bushels," Brown said.

The previous record for production was 138 million bushels. The past record number of acres was set in 1946 with 7,587,000.

Despite scattered rains and snow in the Plains area, many fields there remain moisture stressed and are producing only limited grazing.

Seeding in all states have created a record high of 63.9 million acres of winter wheat, 11 percent more than last year's 57.4 million acres. U.S. production is projected to be 1.98 billion bushels.

"Exports have been somewhat sluggish in the past months," Brown said. "But with world stocks of grain for the fiscal year of 1980-81 estimated to be down by 20 percent, we are expecting export sales to pick up."

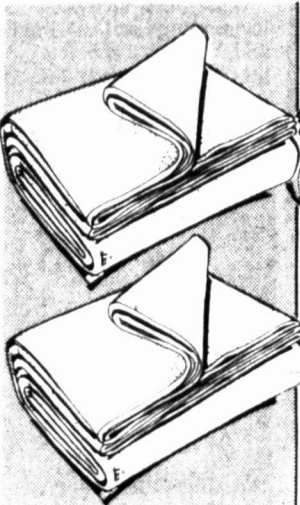

Area seeding estimates for Texas are as follows:

Northern High Plains, 2.9 million acres; Southern High Plains, 280,000 acres; Northern Low Plains, 880,000 acres; Southern Low Plains, 850,000 acres; Cross Timbers, 460,000 acres; Blacklands, 1.6 million acres; Edward Plateau, 210,000 acres; South Central, 230,000 acres, and other districts, 290,000 acres.

Chasing tornadoes called 'relaxing, entertaining'

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Alan Moller doesn't spend his vacation skiing, swimming or sunning at a sandy beach. For two weeks each spring, he grabs his cameras and chases tornadoes.

The 30-year-old National Weather Service meteorologist claims that talking the elusive, swirling storms is "relaxing, entertaining" and he doesn't understand "why more people don't do it."

"When I was about 4 or 5 years old, growing up in Fort Worth, I wanted desperately to see a tornado," Moller said.

"When I wasn't out playing baseball, I was out looking for tornadoes," he added.

But the diminutive, bearded meteorologist, a self-described "tornado freak," says there is more to chasing the killer storms than risking life and limb at the expense of a little excitement.

"We go out and try to capture (on film) the exact time the storm forms, its touch-down and dissipation. By going out and chasing them, I've found that storms which produce tornadoes have definite visual patterns," he said.

Heavy rain and hail toward the southwest edge of a thunderstorm signal the possibility of a developing twister, Moller said.

"Usually, there is a flat, dark rain-free cloud base at the northwest end and that is the area where tornadoes develop in the wall cloud."

The wall cloud, a ragged appendage that hangs beneath the belly of the storm and follows heavy rain, is the area where an up-draft of air is sucked into the core of the storm, Moller said.

It is the intense upward movement of air that might eventually produce a tornado.

"Not many storms have that feature," he added. "A wall cloud is only seen with severe, damaging storms. If it's rotating, it will produce a tornado."

Moller, who has been on the trail of twisters since 1971, said he uses the information gleaned from his many outings to teach Skywarn participants — mostly amateur radio operators — how to spot tell-tale rotating clouds in severe thunderstorms.

Trained "ham" radio operators, dubbed "spotters," are called on by the National Weather Service to go out in the field when bad weather develops and watch the sky for any sign of developing tornadoes that meteorologists often are unable to detect on radar.

Moller, who is in charge of the Skywarn program for North Texas, said his field studies have helped him make the early warning program in his area "the best in the country."

He takes his annual tornado chase in April or May, "when the tornado season starts" with a group of "tornado nuts" he met while doing graduate work at the University of Oklahoma in 1971.

"It started as a hobby, then we got funding from the (National Weather Service) Severe Storm Lab in Norman (Okla.)," Moller said, adding that the group had started the Tornado Intercept Project, a field study for graduate students that is ongoing in conjunction with the storm lab and the university.

The group prepares by studying climate data and pinpointing an area where thunderstorms are probable.

"Then we drive out there and wait. After nine years of chasing tornadoes I can usually predict which thunderstorms will produce."

The majority of his trips have been to West Texas, and more specifically to the Palo Duro Canyon near Amarillo.

"Of the 55 tornadoes I've seen, half of them have been out in the countryside near Amarillo or Lubbock," he said. "The canyons out there seem to be ideal for them."

When a twister is born, the group zig-zags across the countryside recording its life and death on film, he said.

"I've found that going out late in the season (the last few weeks in May) is better because we are able to keep up with the tornado's movement," Moller said.

"For some reason, they travel slower that time of year."

Moller claims his hobby isn't dangerous for "a trained observer" but admits the group has run into some hair-raising situations.

"In Union City, Okla., we entered a storm from the wrong end and all of the sudden a tornado formed about 100 yards away," Moller said.

"I panicked and couldn't get my seatbelt off so I ducked underneath the dashboard. I peeked up and saw it just lift right over us ... it was incredible."

Moller said at times he gets so wrapped up in the excitement of the chase that he momentarily forgets the devastating power of the spinning cloud.

The tornado the frightened meteorologist saw near Union City in 1973 "went on into town and killed five people," he said.

"We weren't able to reach town in time to warn anyone, but fortunately they had a good spotter system and were able to sound an alarm early enough to avoid even more deaths," Moller said.

"When you see them in the distance they just don't look like they could be so destructive. It seems unnatural — the motion almost looks like animation, it's so fast."

U.S. SENATOR for TEXAS
142 RUSSELL OFFICE BUILDING
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20510

Real, meaningful arms control and reduction is a dream of all who love peace. But to achieve these ends, we must look realistically at possible courses of action.

Experience has proven that unilateral restraint on our part — such as the cancellation of the B-1 bomber — does not motivate the Soviet Union to take reciprocal action. As one top Carter Administration official said, if we arm, the Soviet Union arms. If we fail to arm the Soviets still arm. In fact, over the past decade, the Soviet Union has outspent us by $240 billion on defense. That means the Soviets already are engaged in an arms race, but it's a one-sided race.

The SALT II treaty actually was neither arms control nor arms reduction, because it would have allowed the Soviets to beef up their strategic forces while following the letter of the treaty.

The Soviets view arms limitations talks as hard bargaining sessions. They will press for the deal that is most advantageous to their interests. During the last stages of the SALT II talks, at least, we were simply out-negotiated.

How do we get back on the road toward real arms control? We will never be successful in negotiating with the Soviets unless they believe we have the national will to have a truly strong national defense system. If we will cut back our own defense programs without demanding reciprocity, we have little left to use as bargaining chips.

But our capacity for increasing our defense system actually is much greater than the Soviet Union's. That nation does not have the slack in its industrial capacity to increase its arms production much above its current level. The United States, on the other hand, could sustain a large increase if it possessed the national will. In short, if we were inclined to enter an all-out arms race, we would win. And the Soviets know that. That knowledge is our best chance at achieving real arms reduction.

When the Soviets become convinced that we have the national resolve to build a national defense system that is at least truly equal to theirs, then they will realize it is in their best interests to enter into serious and meaningful negotiations.

Survey data, my mail, and my own conversations with people indicate that the American people have the necessary national will to rebuild our sadly neglected defenses. I expect the new Administration and the new Congress to work together to meet our most pressing needs.

We must begin immediately. Only a truly strong defense will deter the Soviet Union from global aggression. And only a strong U.S. defense will make the Soviets interested in arms reduction.

When we accomplish this, then we can begin the business of hammering swords into plowshares.

AP ALL-PRO SPECIALISTS-1980

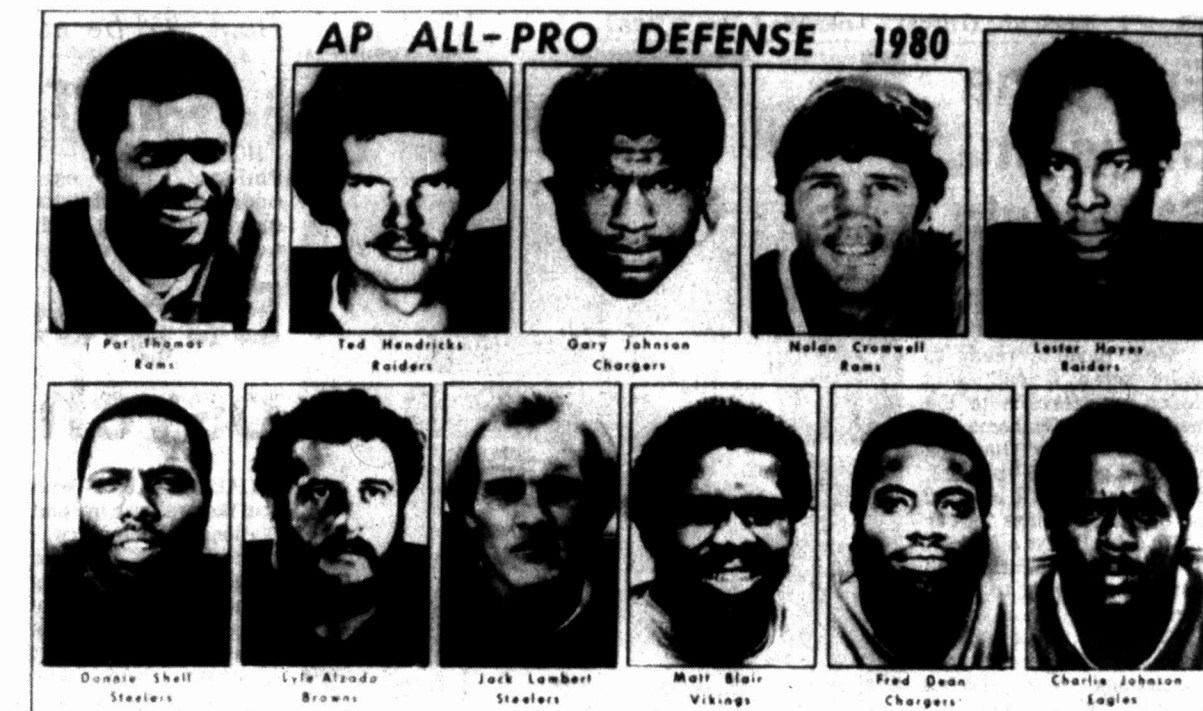

As AFC dominates AP elite NFL squad

John Thomas Smith First Team All-Pro

From staff and wire reports
The San Diego Chargers receiving trio of tight end Kellen Winslow and wide receivers John Jefferson and Charlie Joiner, who each caught more than 1,000 yards in passes apiece to set an NFL record, were named to the 1980 Associated Press All-Pro Team, along with Kansas City Chiefs punt return ace John Thomas Smith, who is a former Big Spring Steer great.

Smith, who starred at Big Spring High School in three sports from 1972-74, was honored on the First Team list as a punt returner. He led the NFL in 1980, returning 40 punts for 581 yards and two touchdowns, and averaging 14.5 per return. His yardage total along with his two touchdowns and average were all NFL highs.

The versatile Smith was also a deadly pass receiver for the Chiefs, catching 46 passes for 655 yards and two touchdowns in his third NFL season.

Cleveland's Brian Sipe, whose league-leading passing was instrumental in the Browns' resurgence, was selected The AP's All-Pro first-team quarterback. He beat out Dan Fouts, the Chargers' record-breaker. In all, San Diego had eight players on the first and second teams in the balloting by 84 sports writers and sports broadcasters, three from each NFL city. The other two Chargers starters are on defense — end Fred Dean and tackle Gary Johnson.

Winslow caught a league-high 89 passes for 1,290 yards. Jefferson had an NFL-high 1,340 yards on 82 receptions and Joiner added 1,132 yards on 71 catches. That made the Chargers the first team with three 1,000-yard receivers in a season.

Along with Fouts, whose 4,715 yards passing shattered the record of 4,082 he set a year ago, the other second-team All-Pro

Chargers are defensive tackle Louie Kelcher and place-kicker Rolf Benirschke.

The American Conference, which once again dominated interconference play, placed 16 players on the first team to 9 for the National Conference. The NFC had 14 second-team selections to 11 from the AFC.

The Pittsburgh Steelers, the NFL's defending Super Bowl champions who failed for the first time in nine years to reach the playoffs, came in second to the Chargers in first-team All-Pro players with three — center Mike Webster, middle linebacker Jack Lambert and strong safety Donnie Shell.

Four teams — Oakland, Los Angeles, Cleveland and Houston — put two players apiece on the All-Pro first team.

The Raiders are outside linebacker Ted Hendricks and cornerback Lester Hayes; the Rams are free safety Nolan Cromwell and cornerback Pat Thomas, the Browns are Sipe and defensive end Lyle Alzado and the Oilers are running back Earl Campbell and tackle Leon Gray.

Campbell, who won his third rushing title in his third pro season, amassed 1,934 yards, second only to O.J. Simpson's record 2,003. The other first team running

Steers outclass Colorado City

It wasn't a work of great art, but it was still a fun time for everybody on the home side here Tuesday night as the Big Spring Steers simply outclassed Colorado City by a score of 80-42.

Stanton wins three times

ROPES — The Stanton Buffaloes boys basketball team capped a very successful evening for the visitors here Tuesday night, racing to an early lead en route to an 87-70 District 5-AA win over Ropes.

Nine players scored for the Stanton boys in the win, their second in as many district starts. They are 10-4 on the year.

Curtis Williams had 25 for the Buffaloes, with David (Con't. on 2-B) "5-AA Sweep"

Big Spring Coach Ed Haller suited up 12 players for the contest, and all played with regularity in the non-district boys basketball tilt.

The Steers, with senior guard James Doss pumping in 10 quick points in the opening minutes, moved to an early lead and were never so much as threatened. Midway through the first stanza, Haller replaced the regulars. By the end of the first stanza, the Steers held a 17-5 lead.

With intermittent substitutions throughout the remainder of the game, the Steers managed to outscore their Colorado City foes by 2-1, utilizing a full court press in the process.

"It was awful good to get to play everybody quite a bit," said Haller. "We needed something like that where everyone got to play and also be happy with the outcome."

But while the lopsided score might seem impressive to some, Haller downplayed that aspect of the contest. "I don't know that the quality of our play was that good, and I hope that the final score isn't a determining factor in our guys getting too confident in themselves. We can be good, but we're still going to have to play better than that when district starts next week," Haller concluded.

The Steers were led in the scoring column by Doss' 18 points. Fletcher Johnson added 13, with Robert Rubio and Dickie Wrightsall chipping in with 12 each. Jay Green led Colorado City with 10.

The Steers, now 7-9 on the year, travel a short distance on Friday night to face a tough Coahoma team. There will be no JV game, but only (Con't. on 2-B) "Everyone"

Shorthorns rout C-City

The Big Spring boys JV basketball team had things all their own way here Tuesday evening against Colorado City, taking a 63-35 win.

The triumph was the seventh in 15 outings for Coach Mike Randle's crew, and their final game before District 5-AAAAA JV action begins next Tuesday when they host Abilene High.

The Shorthorns jumped out to an 18-4 first quarter lead and everyone played a great deal the remainder of the way.

Tony Randle, Jay Dawdy and Wrightsall each had 10 points for the Big Spring crew, while Colorado City's Tarter led all scorers with 17.

Big Spring (63) — Spears 4-8; Williams 1-2; Rubio 4-8; Randle 5-10; Dawdy 4-10; Jackson 2-1; Watson 2-4; Wrightsall 5-10; Harris 2-4. TOTALS 59-35.
COLORADO CITY (35) — Reest 6-12; Martinez 1-2; Tarter 6-17; McKinney 2-4. TOTALS 15-35.

Overtime win caps Coahoma night

BALLINGER — The Coahoma Bulldogs basketball teams continued flexing their muscles, taking three straight games from the Ballinger Bearcats in non-district action here Tuesday night.

The most exciting game was the finale, as the Coahoma boys used a Phillip Ritchey lay-up in the first minute of overtime to take a 45-43 win. Ritchey went the length of the floor after Damon Harmon tipped him the basketball to start the fast break.

Ritchey led all scorers in the contest with 23, with Michael Meyer adding 13. David Manley had 11 for Ballinger. "We didn't play too well," said Coahoma Coach Doug Harriman. "But still, it was good to win when we played like that."

The Coahoma boys, now 10-4 on the year, host Big Spring Friday night in their (Con't. on 2-B) "Bulldogs"

Forsan sweeps O'Donnell in 5-AA play

FORSAN — The Forsan Buffaloes basketball teams swept three District 5-AA games from O'Donnell here Tuesday night, highlighted by the boys 73-56 win in the finale.

The boys win was probably their best game of the year, as the Forsan team pulled away in the final stanza for a healthy margin.

Ricky Bedwell paced the Forsan team with 21 points, and a good overall game, while Andre Alcantar added 16. John Olivian had 21 for O'Donnell.

The win gives the Forsan boys a district record of 1-1 and a season mark of 8-6, while O'Donnell is winless in two district starts.

The Forsan girls held a 15-point third quarter lead, but had to use buckets by Christi Adams and Lavonne Brumley in the final minute to pull out a 55-53 win.

Sipe stunned by MVP honor

CLEVELAND (AP) — He was rarely caught off guard by a blitzing linebacker, but quarterback Brian Sipe says he was entirely surprised by the latest post-season award to hit him.

The heart of the Cleveland Browns' celebrated passing attack, Sipe was named the National Football League's Most Valuable Player by The Associated Press on Tuesday.

"This is one I had never anticipated," Sipe said. "It seems like just a little while ago I was fighting for credibility as an NFL quarterback, and I considered it a great honor just to be playing. Now, they're calling me the most valuable player in the league."

"I'm still a little bit caught off guard by it all," Sipe said. "The 31-year-old quarterback, statistically the NFL's No. 1 passer in 1980, earned 47 of the 84 votes cast by a nationwide panel of sports writers and sports broadcasters, three from each NFL city."

Houston running back Earl Campbell was a distant second in the voting with 22 votes. Philadelphia's Ron Jaworski and Atlanta's Steve Bartkowski tallied four each, and San Diego's Dan Fouts had three. No one else received more than two votes.

"I feel that when a quarterback is recognized for something like this, the whole team is being recognized," said Sipe. "I hope everybody around me realizes that this belongs to them, too."

Sipe this season became the leading career passer in Browns' history with 15,207 yards, pushing him past Frank Ryan and Otto Graham.

During 1980, his 2.5 interception percentage was lowest in the league, his 30 touchdown tosses second only to Bartkowski's 31, and his 4,132 yards the second-highest total in league history behind Fouts' 4,715.

Though he is 31, Sipe said he is at his peak physically, in part because he didn't take the punishment a regular would have endured during his early years in the league.

"Hopefully, when my body slows down, I'll be a little wiser and I'll be able to keep playing anyway," he said.

NTSU Athletic Director resigns under pressure

DENTON, Texas (AP) — North Texas State Athletic Director Andy Everest says he was surprised but not embittered by the sudden request for his resignation. "I wish nothing but the best for North Texas State," said Everest, 56, who announced Tuesday he has agreed to step down as athletic director.

"I can understand what they are looking for and what direction they are trying to go. This offered me the opportunity to step down and allow them that privilege," said Everest.

"We have labored under a tough situation the last couple or three years because of a lack of crowd, TV (appearances) and conference standing ... if they have to cut back it doesn't make me bitter," said Everest.

He said Fred Pole, executive assistant to NTSU President Frank Vandiver, asked for the resignation Monday when Everest met with the administrator to discuss hiring a new head football coach.

Jerry Moore resigned Sunday after two years as head coach to accept a similar position at Texas Tech.

"Basically it came at a very abrupt time. I was not prepared for it. I didn't have an inkling or an inclination about it," said Everest.

SMU stops UT, Aggies lose

By The Associated Press
Southern Methodist University complexed breaking a long jinx and Baylor, Rice and Houston came out victorious Tuesday night in Southwest Conference basketball action.

The Mustangs beat the University of Texas Longhorns, 53-51, on a desperation shot by Gordon Welch at the end of overtime. The victory in Austin marked the first time that the Mustangs had beaten Longhorn football and basketball teams in Austin in the same school year since 1966.

In other SWC roundball action, Baylor kept the Texas Aggies sliding with a 53-44 victory. Rice beat Texas Christian, 57-51, and Houston slipped past Texas Tech, 73-70.

Four baskets by Dave Piehler near the end of regulation time allowed the Mustangs to tie the Texas, 49-49, and send the game into overtime.

Virdell Howland gave Texas a 51-49 lead in the overtime period, but Johnnie James scored for the Mustangs to tie the game again at 51-all. After Longhorn Ray Harper threw the ball out of bounds, SMU decided to go for one shot although about two minutes remained in overtime.

LaSalle Thompson blocked SMU's last shot attempt, but Welch came out of a crowd with the ball and banked it

The win evened the Stanton girls record at 1-1, and boosted their season mark to 3-10. Ropes is now 1-1 in league play.

Della Brown was red hot in the Stanton girls win, pouring in 26 points, with Rhonda Garcia adding 10.

Romona Melton had 18 for Ropes.

Bum: 'I'd be ashamed if I'd tampered'

Oilers accuse Bum Phillips of tampering

HOUSTON (AP) — Bum Phillips hasn't exactly ridden quietly off into the sunset since being fired last week as head coach and general manager of the Houston Oilers. Phillips has been accused of tampering with the Oilers assistant coaches Tuesday and reported to have accepted the head coaching job for the New Orleans Saints. Phillips says he's done neither. The former Oilers coach, fired after taking the Oilers to the playoffs three straight years, met with Saints owner John Mecom Tuesday to discuss the job, a team spokesman said.

It is no secret that Phillips, a friend of Mecom's, wants the job. "I do want the job," Phillips said Tuesday. "I think I can do a good job over there."

The tampering charge came from new Oilers General Manager Ladd Herzog, who said all six assistant coaches had asked to be relieved of the final year on their contracts, which extend through the 1981 season.

"I haven't done anything I'm ashamed of before or after being fired," Phillips said. "I'd be ashamed if I'd tampered. That's the league rules and I go by the rules."

Herzog said that as of last Friday, all six Oilers assistants wanted to remain with the Oilers.

"Then one by one they all came to me and said they wanted to leave," Herzog said. "It's too much of a coincidence."

The only assistant commenting was defensive line coach Wade Phillips, son of Bum Phillips, who said emphatically he does not want to coach the Oilers next season.

Eagles begin psycho plays

DALLAS (AP) — Who will feel the pressure in Sunday's National Conference title game — the Philadelphia Eagles who have gone without a National Football League title since 1960 or the free-wheeling Dallas Cowboys who weren't supposed to get this far?

Dallas Coach Tom Landry said Tuesday nerves on both sides will be equally jangled. "The Eagles want to win badly," said Landry. "Sometimes you play worse when you try too hard, sometimes you play better."

"We can't go into the game saying we'll be satisfied with the season even if we lose because we have done better than expected. Too much work has gone into getting to this position. We've been working since April to get here."

Landry predicted it will be the most physical game of the season.

"Both teams are just one step away from the Super Bowl and it's sure not like going out for a picnic during the regular season," he said. "It will be tough and hard-hitting. I expect it to be the roughest and the toughest."

Landry said his crystal ball shows a close, possibly low-scoring game.

"I know we can't expect a lot of points against their very good defense," he said. "It will be a struggle all day. We'll have to counter their pursuit yet we know they will be waiting on the reverses. The Eagles will not be in the same frame of mind they were the last time we played when they already had 25 points on the scoreboard."

Landry opened up Dallas' attack in the final game of the regular season and the Eagles fell 35-27 although the Cowboys could not make up a 25-point edge owned by Philadelphia in the tie-breakers. Both teams finished with 12-4 records but the Eagles won the NFC East and the Cowboys had to play a wild card.

Dallas must play in blue jerseys, courtesy of Eagle Coach Dick Vermeil's decision to wear white. The Cowboys are 10-10 in blue jerseys in their 21-year history.

In counter psychological warfare, the Cowboys have pointed out that Philadelphia is 1-13 the last eight years in white jerseys.

Landry was asked Tuesday about Vermeil's statement that Dallas has

Campbell prepared to sit out 1981

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oilers running back Earl Campbell, who earned a reported $500,000 under a renegotiated contract this season, has asked new Oilers General Manager Ladd Herzog to renegotiate his six year pact again.

Herzog has replied with an emphatic no "under any circumstances." The circumstances could lead to a "pay-me-or-trade-me" demand according to Campbell's agent Witt Stewart.

"Witt said that in the event the Oilers don't want to renegotiate, then Earl wants to be traded," Herzog said, adding the Oilers won't do that either. "If we traded Earl Campbell, my house would be burned and I'd have to get out of town."

Campbell, who won his third straight National Football League rushing title this season, has been unavailable for comment since making the demand to Herzog on Monday.

"We believe Earl has been fairly compensated," Herzog said. "We renegotiated a six-year deal for him last year in good faith and expect him to honor his contract."

Campbell's action was believed connected with Bum Phillips' firing last week as head coach and general manager of the Oilers. Campbell made his demands after having lunch with Phillips on Monday.

The Oilers gave Campbell a new contract last February for a reported $3 million over six years. Campbell has gained 1,450, 1,697 and 1,934 yards in each of his first three seasons as a pro.

El Paso water suit is argued in New Mexico federal court

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) —

Attorneys representing New Mexico have asked a federal judge to dismiss a suit filed by El Paso, Texas, seeking rights to tap a vast underground water table that begins just west of Texas' westernmost border.

U.S. District Judge Howard Bratton listened to arguments from both sides Tuesday and said he would take New Mexico's motion for dismissal under advisement and rule on it "as soon as possible."

Attorneys for New Mexico said the Texans don't own any rights to its water and probably never will and the suit should be promptly thrown out.

El Paso filed suit last September hoping to gain rights to the mostly untapped Mesilla Bolson reserve of southern New Mexico. The West Texas desert city said it needed New Mexico's water to avert an anticipated shortage by the end of the century.

El Paso's lawsuit challenges the constitutionality of a New Mexico law prohibiting the export of its fresh water. Attorneys for the Texas border city have said the bolson is mostly under federally owned land and, except for Las Cruces, a city one-tenth the size of El Paso, no other community is using it.

But Richard Simms, representing New Mexico, said El Paso has put the cart before the horse in asking the court to waive New Mexico's law. He said the enforcement of the statute that forbids the export of water can only be enacted in court. He said El Paso does not have any water rights in New Mexico and is not likely to obtain any, and so it cannot ask the court to remove an embargo that exists only on paper.

After El Paso filed the suit Sept. 5, New Mexico State Engineer Steve Reynolds designated the area closed basins — forcing El Paso to file applications for water drilling permits. The city filed 326 applications.

The next step is for El Paso to go through a series of public hearings in New Mexico to determine if the wells and the anticipated 245,000 acre-feet of water a year the city would take is a hazard to other water rights or to surface water sources. In fact, Simms said El Paso's plan would lower the level of the Rio Grande.

Attorney Charles Berry, representing El Paso, said Simms' arguments were not relative to the motion to dismiss. He said whether or not El Paso has or will ever have water rights in New Mexico does not change the fact the state is prohibiting El Paso from tapping into New Mexico's underground water.

United Way of Texas hikes funds to study alcohol, drug addiction

AUSTIN — Increased funding for the Texas Commission on Alcoholism has been established by the executive committee of United Way of Texas as part of a major priority concern of UWT for the 1981 Legislature.

UWT also calls for appointment by the House Health Services Committee of a special subcommittee to study the problems of alcohol and drug addiction and abuse among Texas youth, according to the December issue of UWT's Human Services News.

The alcohol-drug issue is the only one of UWT's six priority concerns in which increased funding is asked for a state agency.

"We deeply appreciate United Way's support in trying to help us deal with this major problem," Ross Newby, TCA executive director, said today. "We also appreciate the other groups which have recommended our increased funding, such as the House Health Services Committee, TCA's Advisory Council, the Texas Association of Regional Councils, the Texas Association for the Prevention of Alcoholism and Drug Abuse and the Texas AFL-CIO."

The Health Services Committee recommended in August that the Legislature appropriate annually $10 million to TCA, with such funds derived from state revenues generated through the sale of alcoholic beverages. In 1979, such revenues exceeded $189 million. TCA's 1980 state allocation is $1.2 million and the agency receives $3.2 million in federal formula funds.

Town council grants welfare director's wish, cuts his pay

BURRILLVILLE, R.I. (AP) — The town council has agreed to pay Welfare Director John Nolan Jr. what he thinks he's worth — it slashed his annual salary from $10,000 to $1,000.

The Friday night decision of the council was good news to Nolan, who has refused to accept two paychecks of about $415 each since taking office in December and now is seeking another pay cut.

The retired steamfitter said during his campaign for the job that he would accept only $1,000 of the $10,000 allocated for the welfare director's salary. He claimed the position has few responsibilities and should either be made part-time or be eliminated.

Now that he's worked for a month, Nolan thinks the job is worth only $583 a year.

Nolan says welfare directors' duplications were done by state officials. He said he has handled only two calls for assistance from welfare recipients in the past four weeks and has spent about four hours a week in his office.

Christmas Seal money works all year long

It's not too late to give Christmas Seals. Although the Christmas Season is a pleasant memory for many people, it isn't over for the Christmas Seal People — the American Lung Association of Texas.

Although most contributions are received in December, additional donations are needed to enable the work of Christmas Seals to continue all year round.

With the support of Christmas Seals, the lung association sponsors programs so that individuals with emphysema, chronic bronchitis and asthma can learn to understand their disease and to live as comfortably as possible with it.

It seeks to educate the public about the dangers of smoking and to reach children in their earliest grades in order to create a generation of nonsmokers. It offers professional education programs to health professionals to assure the best possible care for lung disease patients. And the lung association continues to work for tuberculosis control.

Persons interested in sending contributions or arranging for a memorial gift may contact the American Lung Association of Texas, 7701 North Lamar, Suite 104, in Austin, 78752, 512-458-2206, or call toll free by dialing the operator for Enterprise No. 86761. Lung disease is a matter of life and breath.

Four of Welk 'family' to perform in Abilene

Four members of the Lawrence Welk "Family" will perform at Rehab '81, the telethon benefiting the West Texas Rehabilitation Center on Saturday night.

Arthur Duncan, dancer and singer, will host the Welk showcase during the seven-hour long telecast. Featured will be Welk discoveries Anacani and the Otwell Twins.

Duncan was already well-known when he made his first guest appearance on the Welk Show in 1964. After several guest appearances the Californian was signed on as a regular member of the Champagne Music "family."

Anacani, born in Mexico, got her big break when she and her mother visited Lawrence Welk's Country Club Village restaurant in Escondido, Calif., in hopes that the maestro would be there and notice her. He asked her to audition and the following evening she performed at the restaurant. The audience liked her and shortly after, she became a regular on the television program.

David and Roger Otwell sent letters and tapes to a celebrities from their home in Tulsa, Texas, back in 1977. Six months later, they were invited to do a guest performance on the Welk program.

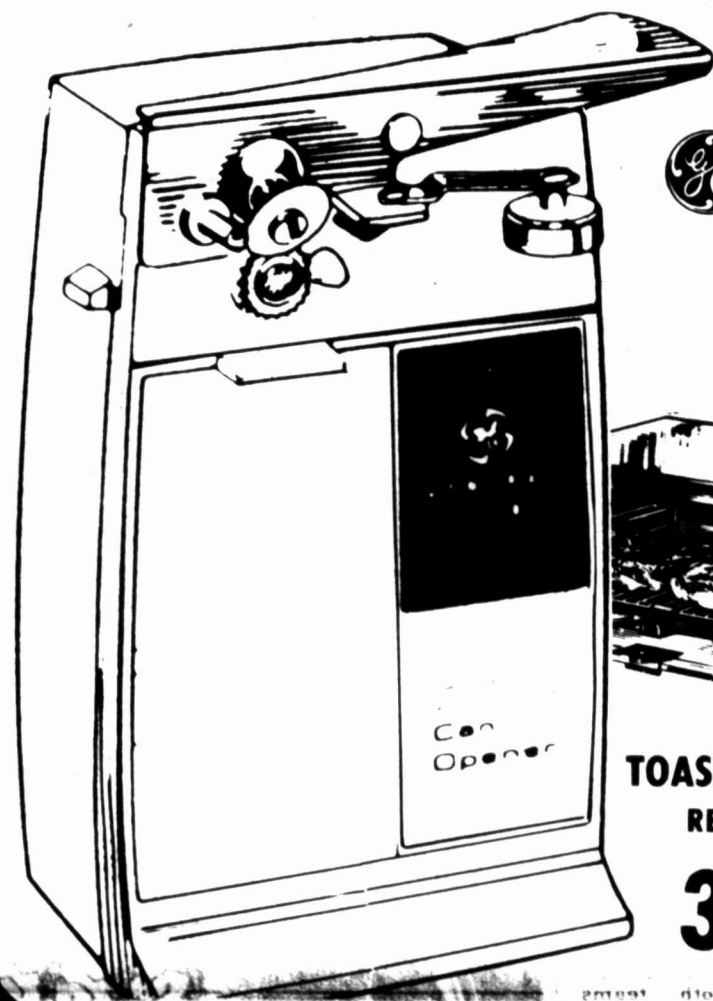

The telethon will be broadcast from 7 p.m. Saturday until 2 a.m. Sunday on 15 television stations. In addition to the Welk Showcase there will be Big Band, Country and Western and Soap Opera Showcases and entertainment by featured stars including Jimmy Dean, Jams Drury, Slim Pickens, Jimmy Weldon, Pedro Gonzales-gonzales, Yolanda and show hosts Rex Allen and Shari Lewis.

Tickets for those wanting to attend the show at the Abilene Civic Center are available for $4 general admission and $6 reserved seats at the West Texas Rehabilitation Center.

Little Rock PTA breaks up milk price-fixing scheme

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Phyllis Brandon was president of the Little Rock PTA when a committee of mothers began checking the "junk food" content of cafeteria lunches and along the way discovered that all the bids for milk contracts were identical.

Mrs. Brandon was puzzled. The questions she subsequently asked led to a state investigation, a federal price-fixing lawsuit and the largest antitrust settlement in Arkansas history.

Three dairies were indicted by a federal grand jury and pleaded no contest to criminal antitrust charges. Salesmen for two of the dairies served brief federal prison sentences.

On Wednesday, U.S. District Judge G. Thomas Eisele is expected to accept a $2,425,000 settlement from those three dairies and a fourth, all charged in a separate state civil suit.

Merl Barns of the state attorney general's office said the milk price investigation had uncovered an organized scheme among the dairies to fix prices to state institutions and wholesalers and a more loosely organized price-fixing setup for the schools.

No estimate of dollar loss to the schools has been made because the price-fixing practice apparently extended well beyond the seven-year boundary on the statute of limitations, in 1973.

Attorneys involved in the case credit Mrs. Brandon with a major role in breaking up the price-fixing ring.

As her husband, Jim, put it, "She's the one who kicked over the milk pail."

Mrs. Brandon, 45, says she formed the school lunch committee in 1974 at the request of Sandra Blakeway, then head of the Little Rock School District cafeteria system, who was reacting to PTA criticism of school lunches.

The committee looked at several aspects of the lunch program, and the members often ate at school cafeterias.

"When you start talking about food — even six years ago — you start talking about cost," Mrs. Brandon said in an interview. "Food prices are so high. Something came up about the milk that is served with the meals."

"I said, 'Well, milk goes out on bids, doesn't it?'" she recalled. "And she (Ms. Blakeway) said, 'Yes, but, you know, all those bids are always the same.'"

"I said, 'Do you know that's against the law? And she said, 'Well, there's not anything we can do about that.'"

Mrs. Brandon, who then had two children in Little Rock schools, disagreed.

"I don't know how I knew about the Sherman Antitrust Act, but somehow, somewhere along the way I had heard about it and I knew this wasn't right," she said.

The Antitrust Act forbids businesses to combine in any way that would interfere with competition.

Mrs. Brandon talked with some friends who were lawyers, who helped by telling her "what kind of questions to ask" of the school board.

"The question that was crucial was, 'How long has it been going on?'" she said. "The answer was, 'As long as anybody could remember.'"

"I was surprised it was going on," said Bob McHenry, a Little Rock attorney who was then president of the school board, "and I was surprised that it hadn't been discovered before. No one on the board was aware of the problem."

The board hired attorney Robert Light to pursue the case. When word of the board's civil suit against the four dairies hit the papers, the U.S. Attorney's office joined the investigation.

In 1977, criminal indictments were handed down against Borden Inc., Dean Foods and Coleman Dairy Inc. and against Simeon "Dub" Lynn, a salesman for Dean, and Gene Proctor, a salesman for Borden, said Barns of the state attorney general's office.

The three dairies entered no contest pleas and were fined. Proctor and Lynn each served 60 days in federal prison.

No federal charges were filed against the Foremost-McKesson dairy, but Foremost-McKesson was charged later in the state's civil suit which resulted in the $2,425,000 settlement.

Barns said all that remains to be done in the 6-year-old case is for Eisele to approve the settlement and for the money to be distributed.

The 19,000-student Little Rock School District will get a "fair amount of the money," Barns said.

McHenry says the district owes a great deal to Mrs. Brandon.

"I'll always feel good about Phyllis Brandon because of this," McHenry said. "She did one heck of a service to the schools and to the state."

Mrs. Brandon has mixed feelings about the suit.

She says she is "sad" because two men ended up in jail. But she also was "shocked that the dairies thought they could get away with that."

"Most of all, what appalled me was that it took a mother from the PTA to do something about people obeying the law," she said.

"People tend to think about the PTA as little mothers who bake cookies and make punch for the classroom parties," she said. "This time, we brought about something important."

UT instructor mourns loss of top quality algebra textbooks

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The telephone calls are rolling in at Stan Hartzler's home, and the University of Texas math instructor hopes each will yield another antique algebra book.

Less than 10 days after a column in the Chicago Tribune outlined his fascination with old algebra texts and growing anger with newly published schoolbooks, Hartzler already is reaping the benefits, and is getting leads on new additions for his current collection of 215 old algebra books.

Hartzler hopes the publicity dragnet will help him obtain enough books to "investigate why the (high school algebra) books coming off the press now are so bad."

His experience as a coach for high school math teams in suburban Chicago several years ago convinced him that algebra texts written between 1890 and 1910 are good enough for today's students.

After he started using a turn-of-the-century text to drill his math teams, they won five straight division championships. And classroom use of old books resulted in nine students scoring perfectly on national college entrance exams when 30 neighboring schools didn't produce even one perfect scorer, he said.

Less-than-brilliant students benefited from using the old texts, too, Hartzler recalled. "I can remember the names and faces that I had in remedial math classes. They had fine minds, but nobody had shown them how to do long division."

So, Hartzler said, he has acquired a "large disgust" for current algebra texts. He's irked by modern books "written by teams of people who too often never see each other to coordinate their philosophy and objectives."

"Previously, books were written by one teacher who wrote out of his experience—that had worked best for him. These books needed no revisions because they were good in the first place," Hartzler said.

Books of the educational era — "the heyday of organization," Hartzler calls it — often were written by a one-room schoolteacher. He said those books had to be self-contained because the busy one-room schoolteacher couldn't take time away from other students to present long lectures.

Hartzler's enthusiasm becomes overwhelming. "It is awful the way those students moved from one exercise to another. I get emotional about it, like when I hear Handel's 'Messiah.' Today, those exercises are not even written by the authors. Too often, they are written by high school teachers who live close to the publishing houses," he said. "They pay the authors less that way."

Hartzler is irritated by today's frequently revised math texts, updated with trendy layout and educational fadism. "It was

'new math' in the '60s, 'back to basics' in the '70s and now it's 'problem solving' in the '80s," Hartzler said. "I want to start a new fad — call it balance — and let's stop the pendulum."

Hartzler said he wants to "develop an informed demand for better books among those (state and school officials) who buy them. A lot of politics is involved here in Texas, and there's not much hope. But plenty of high school teachers are aware of how bad the books are."

Hartzler, who warns "I'm a rather outspoken little beast," suspects that modern math books are "being written for the teachers, not the students."

He sees the use of large, most criminal of fads." Research, he said, indicates that "the more pictures there are in books, the less the kids learn."

Hartzler's algebra textbook research is designed "to show that there have been sudden changes in topics that have no foundation in the classroom."

And he wants to set up guidelines teachers can use to evaluate textbooks, policies to replace politics or high-pressure tactics of publishing firms.

Finally, Hartzler said, he wants to "listen to my customers," the elementary education students he's now teaching at UT, and "to teach in ways I hope they can understand, not in higher educational theories."

The old-fashioned math teaching he advocates may be on a comeback. Until then, Hartzler and his family — wife Shirley and her children Beth, Amy and Michael — will scour antique stores, Salvation Army shops, garage sales and junkyards for old math texts.
