THE WINTERS ENTERPRISE

VOLUME FOUR | WINTERS, TEXAS 79567 | THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1993 | PRICE 50 CENTS | NUMBER 23

$10,000 WINNER! — Eva Leta Smith of Winters is all smiles after winning the grand prize in the ticket game sponsored by the Abilene Reporter-News, Skinny's and Pride.

Winters woman wins $10,000

Lady Luck smiles three times on local residents

Eva Leta Smith of Winters says she's still in shock over receiving a check for $10,000 last week from the Abilene Reporter-News.

Mrs. Smith had the winning ticket chosen on May 27 from more than 79,000 entries in the contest sponsored by the Reporter-News, Skinny's and Pride.

For several months she and her daughter, Carmela Polston, had been alternating weeks of submitting their entries to the Reporter-News office.

She admitted she didn't feel very lucky, especially after two other Winters residents had already won prizes.

Jack Pierce won $400 on his birthday in March, and Ellis Ueckert won $400 in May.

Luckily, her perseverance paid off -- and in a really big way!

Notifying Mrs. Smith of her winning entry required some special action, including a phone call to the Winters police department by Mr. Tony Conder of the Reporter-News. Conder had been unable to reach Mrs. Smith by telephone as each attempt was answered by a busy signal.

Conder contacted the Winters police department who sent an officer to the home of Mrs. Smith and requested that she free her phone line for an important call. Mrs. Smith had no idea of the good news she was about to receive.

Mrs. Smith was still skeptical after talking to Conder who assured her of her win and told her to look in the next issue of the Reporter-News. When her name did indeed appear the following day, she was more than a little excited.

The $10,000 check arrived on June 3. Mrs. Smith says she plans to pay bills with some of her "miracle money" as she calls it, and will take her time spending the rest.

Eva Leta and her husband Sam run a registered childcare center.

OIL BIDNESS . . .

By Reg Boles ©1993

With all the talk of new taxes about, it is not unusual to hear an American talking about how he or she hates the prospect of those taxes. But, now, foreigners are doing it as well, and these guys' actions could cause us some problems down the road.

"But why?" you might ask. Why would a foreigner care?

Well, if you had one major product and you sell most of it to America, you would be concerned about what is going on there, even if you weren't a citizen. Especially if you were OPEC (Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries).

You see, the OPEC guys are kinda upset at the whole world--not just America. The reason they are upset is because of taxes on energy and the reduction in net price (back to them) they cause. You see, a tax on crude (be it BTU or an import tax or whatever) usually is not passed on to the consumer of the end products. It is just subtracted from the current wellhead price, so the producer gets paid less even if oil prices stay the same. OPEC is no different from any other producer in this regard.

Plus, taxes on energy help dampen demand and that means there won't be enough buyers for all the crude that OPEC has just expanded to produce. You can see why, then, America, the biggest consumer for imported oil in the world, really ticks the OPEC dudes off when it proposes new energy taxes.

OPEC points out that energy is the most taxed product of any product in the whole world, and that America taxes energy more than any other industrialized country in the world, except Norway. And, the U.S. becomes number one when you factor in state taxes, production and ad valorem, etc.

"Why do we have to keep raising the taxes on energy?", they ask. "Isn't enough enough?"

"Probably not!", we have to answer. The government's appetite for our money only continues to grow, and petroleum is a cash cow when it comes to raising revenue because of its universal demand.

OPEC is thinking about just how to register their displeasure with all the new petroleum taxes on the Clinton agenda. Some of their ideas are a little scary.

One possibility is to punish the American petroleum producers by allowing oil prices to fall through the floor. This would accomplish two goals, at least in the mind of OPEC: (1) it would help eliminate competition by crippling the domestic U.S. energy industry, and (2) it would force the U.S. government to reduce the energy taxes to stimulate its own industry.

Another possibility is selective boycotting. This would try to get the message across in a more subtle manner by cutting off some countries other than the U.S. from their exports. Japan is a prime target for this, since they have no domestic production. This type of action would have repercussions throughout the world by causing economic panic in Japan, while still allowing the biggest consumer to continue to order oil from OPEC. This would be a great lever to let the U.S. know OPEC means business about over taxing (at least in their eyes) petroleum. After all, if Japan were disabled economically, it would be equivalent to completely disarming the U.S. army.

One other possibility might be to lobby for special exemptions, etc. to get around the taxes' effect while allowing the present U.S. government to say they are doing their part to reduce the deficit and keep the energy industry strong at the same time.

Whatever they decide to do, we must remember that we no longer live on an island economically. What we do to artificially influence markets here can have lasting effects on the rest of the world. Not considering those facts could be very dangerous.

Of course, checking to see if our Attorney General paid the proper withholding and FICA tax last time she hired some kid to mow her lawn is much more important--isn't it?

Poe's Corner by Charlsie Poe

Foreword by Charlsie Poe

I have asked Betty Thomason to be guest columnist in "Poe's Corner" for both the June 3 and June 10 issues of The Winters Enterprise.

Betty and I are members of the Abilene Writer's Guild and both received recognition at a dinner held at Briarstone Manor last Friday. The awards were a result of the annual contest sponsored by the Abilene Writer's Guild. Betty received Honorable Mention for her story about Joseph Juneau, for whom the capital of Alaska is named.

We were asked to be on the program at the May 27 meeting of the Guild.

Betty researched this article 12 years ago when she was employed as a nurse by the U.S. Public Health Service Hospital at Mt. Edge-cumbe, Alaska. She worked with the Tlinglet Indians and became familiar with the terrain and the weather in the southeastern Alaska regions, which helped in putting the story together for the contest.

by BETTY THOMASON

Before this period of history, Sitka was the place where the transfer of power from Russia to the United States occurred on October 18, 1867. When the Russians pulled out of Alaska, organized law and order went with them. In 1880, when Juneau and Harris prospected for Pilz, Alaska was governed by "miner's law." Civil or criminal law was not organized until 1884.

Part of the lure of this wild, lawless frontier for Juneau and Harris was the recreational side of prospecting. The untamed duo liked life away from established society. Also, Juneau and Harris enjoyed the fact: no boss stood over them and they kept no regular hours.

With no daily schedule planned, Joe and Richard interrupted their July trek to the Gastineau destination by stopping in one of the Tlinget villages on Admiralty Island for some recreation. One of the consequences of the miner's law was that, often, the Indian women fell victims to some of the rowdy trappers, soldiers or prospectors who frequented their settlements.

So, it happened that day, a few of the Tlinget women became the objects of Joe and Richard's affections. The pair stayed on in the community a while, drinking the Indian homebrew until their own food supplies ran out. After this unplanned detour, the two men made it back to Sitka empty handed, where they told Pilz they hadn't found gold.

Following that event, Chief Kowee arrived in Sitka, hot on the trail of the wayward men. Kowee told Pilz that Juneau and Harris holed up in one of the Indian villages and didn't look in the right place for the gold. Once again, the Indian Chief brought gold ore samples to George Pilz to prove his point.

September, 1880, found Juneau and Harris at Gold Creek. Despite the failed July mission, Pilz helped refinance Juneau and Harris and sent them back to the far banks of Gastineau Channel.

This time, Joe and Richard walked further inland past thick underbrush of devil's club, tangled salmonberry vines, spruce trees and ferns to find the section of stream they named Gold Creek.

Their strike was a "bonanza." Not only were there gold particles to be placer mined by pan washing, but there were rocks rich with gold streaks to be lode mined, requiring complex mining procedures. As soon as possible, Juneau and Harris staked claims and a townsite, which Harris called Harrisburg. Since Harris was educated, he tended to the descriptions and the stake locations on all their claims--thus, attributions generally reflected his name.

Shortly after, Juneau and Harris sailed toward Sitka with a large amount of gold ore. Purposely, they by-passed their turn to Sitka, with the intention of skipping to Canada with the gold. However, on one of their island camp-overs, they ran into another of Pilz's prospectors. As reported in Touring Juneau, by Toni Croft, Pilz's grubstaker "brought the pair back to Sitka by gunpoint."

Once again, Juneau and Harris returned to the Silver Bow Basin Mine they had discovered on Gold Creek. They never struck it rich like the big investors who formed the large, lode mining companies such as the Treadwell or the Alaska-Juneau.

Working in a crowded mining camp was not without trouble. Harris became entangled in some lawsuits with the other miners. The miners alleged, "Harris didn't know how to record or stake boundary lines." As a result of lawsuits, Harris lost most of his mine holdings.

Other miners in the Harrisburg camp were unhappy with Harris over the claim disputes, so they wanted to rename the tent city. Juneau saw this as his golden opportunity. What an honor it would be to have the town named Juneau!

Juneau's big break came in 1881 when Harris and some of his supporters went on a shopping spree to Seattle. Juneau stayed behind and solicited votes. It is recorded that on December 14, 1881, the miners voted to change the name of the town to Juneau.

Eventually, Juneau and Harris sold their mining interests. What little sum of money they made was soon gone. All they had left of their work that day at Gold Creek was a memory. Juneau died broke at Dawson City in 1899. This gold-seeking vagabond would roam no more. He was laid to rest in the town that had steadily grown because of the mining industry and that would soon become the capital of Alaska--his namesake, Juneau.

Winner announced

Edna Parramore of Winters was the winner of $100 worth of gasoline in a drawing sponsored by the Winters High School twirlers on May 27.

Proceeds from the event will help defray expenses of camp and uniforms for Cristi Burton, Jaime Bahlman, Robyn Parramore and Jennifer Boles.

Exercise to prolong life

Exercise is important for all ages, but for older adults it can mean more than just staying in shape. It also can help mitigate disease and prolong life.

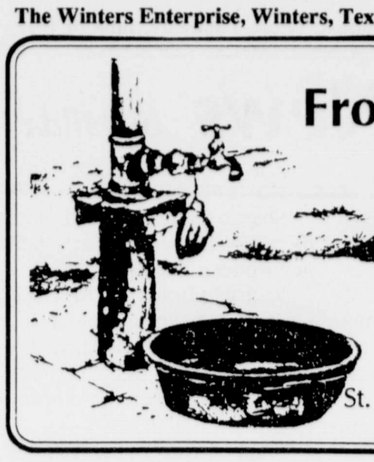

According to Dr. Mary Kinney Bielamowicz, professor and nutrition specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension at Texas A&M University, "By increasing muscle strength through exercise, the percent of body fat associated with increased risk of chronic diseases such as diabetes or heart disease can be reduced." She also states that high blood pressure is often aggravated by increased fat and inactivity.

Lean body mass is normally lost at the rate of six and a half pounds every 10 years of life and accelerates after age 45. It is possible to reverse that loss with weight-bearing or strengthening exercises. Exercise also counteracts loss of strength directly related to loss of muscle mass.

By adopting a walking program, older adults can lose fat tissue and gain lean body mass without changing their eating habits. Also, osteoporosis can be slowed down or arrested by a brisk walking program.

Older adults should choose their diet carefully to include a variety of healthful foods as recommended by the U.S. Department of Agriculture Daily Food Guide. Also, plenty of liquids, 6 to 8 cups daily, is essential.

Dr. Bielamowicz stresses that, ideally, "...exercise along with dietary and nutritional strategies should be instituted early in life."

From The Well

by
Pastor Jim Hanson
St. John's Lutheran Church

My parents met for the first time at a lake. It was winter, and up north in Fergus Falls, Minnesota, young folks would entertain themselves by skating on the ice. Someone would shovel the snow off a piece of the lake and you would have a skating rink. On the shore was a "warming house", a barn-like structure that had a big pot bellied stove in the middle and benches all around. It was here that my father first laid eyes on Marie Hugelen. He was an upper classmate in college and she was a high school senior. He asked her to skate with him and she said "yes." They had a good time on the ice. When it was time to go home, father asked her, "Can I walk you home?" She replied, "No." He asked why. She replied, "It wouldn't be proper."

They didn't see other for some time. Then one day after school when mother came home she saw my father sitting on a chair in the living room. She recognized him, and he-her right away. She said, "What are you doing here?" He explained that the college he was attending had too few rooms in the men's dormitory and some of the upper classmen were to get rooms off campus. Father had been told that my mother's mother had some rooms. He checked it out and found not only a room, he found my mother. And from that time on they were both "hooked" on each other.

This was in 1915. Just prior to World War I. Dad graduated from college, but made sure his Marie was engaged to him before he left town. He enrolled in the seminary and planned to be a foreign missionary. At the end of his second year at seminary, he enlisted in the Navy. His mother had said that she never wanted to see one of her sons go off to war. He honored that. But after she had died, he felt free to answer the call of his country, to serve in the Navy. In the meanwhile, mother finished college and took a job teaching in a small town in North Dakota. She did well. After the war was over, dad came back to seminary, graduated, and took a call to serve seven small churches in and around Middle River, Minnesota. They were married on June 19, 1921, right after the morning worship service at First Lutheran Church in Fergus Falls.

They were engaged for seven years before they married. Most of their courtship was by mail. They wrote lots of letters. And shared deeply from their hearts on paper. I think that is a good way. A written word carries more clout than a spoken one, and until it is destroyed, can be read over and over again. Letters are kind of like scripture. Much of the New Testament is a love letter from God, and like a love letter, can be read over and over and over again.

Even after marriage, whenever dad was gone for any length of time, he'd write a note or a card to mother. I can remember as a boy of 10 years, walking home from the post office one day with the mail. In it was a card from dad to mother. I sneaked a look at what he had written. At the bottom of the card he had written, "Mama, how I love you." As I read those words, I was engulfed and immersed in their love for each other. It was the greatest I could have as a young boy. Dad and mom really love each other! Dad wrote it so! Like scripture, it is written. And like scripture, brought life and love to me.

. . .don't come with a warning sign!

Although a power line, especially a downed line may look harmless, it can still be dangerous even if you never touch it directly. SO REMEMBER – STAY CLEAR OF ELECTRIC POWER LINES because power lines are not all insulated and don't come with a warning sign!

Call WTU if you see a downed line and wait for a serviceman to arrive . . . .

It's the safest plan of action.

When the Lights Go Out, We Won't Leave You in the Dark

Power outages sometimes happen during this time of year due to problems caused by thunderstorms, lightening, high winds or tornados. When the lights go out, WTU will do whatever it takes to get your power restored as quickly as possible.

If your lights do go out, we need your help!

Here's what you can do:

- First, check with your neighbors to see how widespread the outage is.
- If you're the only house in your area with the light outs or if you don't have any close neighbors, check your breaker or fuse box to see if the trouble is there.
- If the trouble isn't on your side of the meter (such as a tripped circuit breaker or a blown fuse), call your area WTU office. Keep trying if the lines are busy. It's important that we hear from you — and we appreciate your patience.
- As soon as we learn of an outage, we call out as many crews as needed and work as long as necessary to make sure your power is restored.

Some People Are Dying to Get a Tan.

About 8,500 people die from skin cancer every year, too high a price to pay for a tan. Getting too much sun causes skin cancer.
So stay out of it when you can.

Fall vote expected on boll weevil eradication zones

Mandie England on Advisory Committee

Texas cotton farmers should expect to vote on the boll weevil eradication plan in the fall, Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry said. The boll weevil eradiction law, which provides for setting up eradication zones and the rules for dealing with the cotton pest, was put on the books June 1. Farmers will vote by zone on whether to adopt the eradication plan. Prior to these elections, several legal steps must be taken in order to get the program running at full speed.

"We're very excited to have this law, and we want to make sure everything is in place to move as quickly as possible," Perry said. "We're working on the initial rules. Several steps must take place to get the program running, and we're doing what we can to expedite each step."

The first step began with the creation of the Boll Weevil Advisory Committee. TDA named three cotton producers and three entomologists to the 12-member advisory committee--Jim Ed Miller, a cotton grower from Ft. Hancock in the El Paso Valley and a board member of the Texas Pest Management Association; Dan Pustejovsky, a cotton grower from Hillsboro who has been fighting the boll weevil for 45 years; Craig Shook, a cotton farmer from Corpus Christi and member of the Texas Cotton Producers Association; Mandie England, a private crop consultant with bachelor's and master's degrees in entomology from Texas A&M, from Winters in Runnels County; Dr. Ray Frisbie, integrated pest management coordinator at Texas A&M; and Dr. James Brazzel, center director for USDA-APHIS in Mission and a technical advisor for the USDA's boll weevil eradication committee.

Other members of the committee appointed by Texas Water Commission Chairman John Hall are Mary Ambrose, Texas Water Commission; Cyril Durrenberger, Texas Air Control Board; and Mary Arnold, Austin Chapter of League of Women Voters. Dr. Jack Hays, a Lubbock toxicologist, has been appointed by the Texas Department of Health. Yet to be named are two members appointed by the Governor's office.

The advisory committee's role is to advise the department on the rules designed to protect individuals, livestock, bees and wildlife in the eradication zones. It will also offer advice on the criteria the boll weevil eradication foundation must follow in developing rules and methods of treatment.

On June 1, organizations representing cotton growers were allowed to petition the commissioner to be the single group certified as the boll weevil eradication foundation (BWEF). This group will implement the eradication law, conduct referenda to establish eradication zones, and conduct the elections to establish the BWEF board. Cotton growers in each zone will vote by mail or in the county extension office on whether or not to participate in the program at this time.

After TDA receives petitions requesting certification, a public hearing will be held to allow for input on certifying a group to form the BWEF. After a petitioning organization is certified, it will conduct the referenda to establish eradication zones and a statewide board with each zone represented. Rules for conducting the elections will be adopted by TDA. Educational meetings will be held in each zone before the elections. A legal notice must appear in newspapers within the zones at least 45 days before the elections.

If a zone votes to be part of the eradication effort, then the board will set up rules regarding how the eradication plan will be conducted and what assessment cotton producers will pay to support the program. Public hearings and elections will be held on these matters.

The Education of a Small Town Doc

by Keith Boles

Keith Boles

Keith Boles has signed a contract with North Runnels Hospital to practice medicine in Winters once he is through with medical school and residency. At this time, he is a first year medical student at Texas Tech in Lubbock.

Howdy Winters! The first year of medical school is done! Only six more years, now, of training 'til I become a real doc and can be sued for malpractice.

I'm in Winters for the summer. Don't alert the authorities. I'm doing a "preceptorship" with Dr. Lee. Between the first and second years, we have three months off for a summer break. About half the students do a preceptorship and the other half do research with a professor in the school of medicine; both help the student earn a little extra cash over the summer months.

A preceptorship is where a student spends a month with a family doctor somewhere in the state. The student follows the doctor around and sees patients with him. It allows the student to see what a family doc's career is like and gives him or her an introduction to basic patient assessment.

The preceptorship program is run by the Texas Academy of Family Physicians and they also are the ones who pay the students. The Academy uses the program to entice more students into Family Practice.

A family doc's career is already very busy so it's not easy for them to have one of us students following him or her around always asking questions. I want to thank Dr. Lee for being so kind, letting me work with and bother him for a month. He has been very instructional.

One more thing, I will gladly step out if a patient feels uncomfortable with me in the room, so don't let me stop you from seeing Dr. Lee about a "personal problem."

Now, if you remember from last time, I was telling you about the classes I took during the Spring semester. I'll continue with that topic this time. I've covered Physiology and Neurology. We took three more classes: Human Development, Medical Ethics and an elective.

Human Development covers development of a human (impressive logic?) from fertilization of the egg to a few months after birth. We learned how the body and all its parts are formed from just a few cells in the uterus. We covered birth defects and what agents can cause them and when the embryo or fetus is most susceptible to these agents.

Medical Ethics met once a week for two hours. A guest lecturer would speak on a topic such as euthanasia, abortion, treating patients who can't communicate, or confidentiality of the patient-physician relationship.

A round table discussion would then be held consisting of doctors from the Lubbock area and students. We covered some pretty interesting topics and the discussions did get heated at times. We also had to write three papers throughout the semester on topics discussed in class.

Now, the elective. We had a choice ranging from anesthesiology, pediatrics, and ophthalmology to medical computer databases. Since I used computers a lot during my engineering days, I chose medical computer databases.

It was very useful in that it taught me how to access large computer databases all over the country including the National Library of Medicine database in Washington D.C. So, even though I'll be many miles away from the nearest medical library out here in Winters, Texas, I'll be able to access the latest journal articles over the computer. Gnarly, huh.

I promised you last time I would discuss some wild neurological diseases we learned about. Here they are. If a person has damage to a certain part of their cerebral cortex on one side of the brain, they'll totally ignore the other side of their body. They actually believe that side of their body does not exist. They refuse to dress that side and refuse to bathe that side of their body. In fact, one case was presented where a patient injured himself while trying to kick one of his legs out of bed. He thought it was someone else in bed with him!

In another case, the doctor held up a patient's arm and asked him whose watch was on his arm. He got mad and wanted to know who stole his watch! He thought it was on someone else's arm!

In another disease, a disease of the speech area of the brain, a person knows what they want to say but can't formulate the right words in the right order. For instance, they might say, "I'm going to take the dog for a walk in the park because I'm hungry," instead of "I'm going to get a hamburger because I'm hungry." Sometimes I say things as mixed up as this. I always thought it was normal.

Well, that's it for now. I'll write again about this same time next month. About what, I'm not sure. If you visit Dr. Lee in the next month, it may be about you. It could be your chance for fame and fortune. Just kidding.

As a side note, in most of our classes, we have what's called a "clinical correlation." These are class periods when a real, live, practicing physician comes in and presents some actual cases of patients with problems that correlate with what we're learning in class at the time. It's makes us students realize that this gibberish we're learning will actually have to be used some day. It's sort of a motivational tool, you could say.

Anyway, in our neurology clinical correlations, we've been learning about some really strange diseases. I'll share a few with you.

1994 USDA wheat program

Secretary of Agriculture Mike Espy has announced a required zero percent acreage reduction program for the 1994 wheat crop. This level was chosen from the statutory range of 0 to 15 percent and is unchanged from 1993.

"Letting wheat growers produce is important in keeping U.S. wheat moving in the world market place," Espy said. "We are committed to being competitive on the domestic production side and on the export sales side through the use of the Export Enhancement Program and other available export promotion programs. "Let there be no doubt that the United States will continue to be a reliable supplier of wheat to both our domestic and foreign consumers."

Espy also announced other provisions for the 1994 wheat program:

--The established target price is $4.00 per bushel, unchanged from 1993.

--A paid land diversion will not be implemented.

Other 1994 wheat program provisions will be announced later.

Lawmakers enact savings

Members of the Texas Legislature approved 85% of the dollar savings proposed by State Comptroller John Sharp.

Of the spending cuts and other recommendations approved, Sharp said some were adopted as proposed, others were enacted in somewhat different form, and still others inspired separate but related legislation.

Governor signs two bills sponsored by Sen. Sims

Governor Ann Richards has signed into law a bill that would establish the Young Farmer Loan Guarantee Program (YFGP). The bill, sponsored by Sen. Bill Sims (D-San Angelo) and Rep. Pete Patterson (D-Brookston), would establish guaranteed loans for eligible applicants not to exceed $50,000 or 90 percent of the total loan amount.

Governor Richards stated, "HB 1287...will provide young farmers with the funds they need to build a prosperous future for themselves and add to the economic base of Texas."

The program will be created in the State Treasury with funds currently collected and deposited in the Young Farmer Endowment Account in the General Revenue Fund.

Also signed into law was a bill that will assist livestock producers in overcoming their problems with predatory animals.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Steve Holzheauser (R-Victoria) and Sen. Bill Sims (D-San Angelo), allows county commissioner courts to augment the federal trapping program by increasing the bounty for predatory animals, allowing counties to participate on a limited basis if they pay part of the expense of providing a federal trapper to protect livestock in the county from predators.

In addition, this bill allows the county commissioner courts to determine which animals pose a particular risk to the county, rather than limiting the scope to specific animals as the old law did.

Emergency farm loan applications being accepted

Applications for emergency farm loans for losses caused by excessive rain, flooding and hail are being accepted at the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) office located in Abilene. Runnels and Taylor Counties are two of seven in Texas recently named by Secretary of Agriculture Mike Espy as being eligible for these loans.

FmHA County Supervisor Bruce Bailey said that farmers may be eligible for loans of up to 80% of their actual losses or the operating loan needed to continue in business or $500,000, whichever is less. For farmers unable to obtain credit from private commercial lenders the interest rate is 4.5%.

"As a general rule, a farmer must have suffered at least a 30% loss of production to be eligible for a FmHA emergency loan," Mr. Bailey said.

Farmers participating in the PIK or Federal Crop Insurance programs will have to figure in proceeds from those programs in determining their loss.

Applications for loans under this emergency designation will be accepted until January of 1994 but farmers should apply as soon as possible.

The FmHA office in Abilene, 3400-B South 14th Street, is open from 8 a.m. - 12 a.m. and from 12:30 p.m. - 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.
