Reagan, aides huddle with new 'team player'

After a 2½-hour meeting with Reagan in the shade of a pine tree, Shultz came to Washington and told reporters, "I can work simpatico for him and with his administration."

The secretary of state-designate said he saw the job "as an opportunity to do what I can to advance the cause of peace, freedom and justice in a world so troubled and so anxious to hope for a good future."

With three top Reagan aides — two from California — watching nearby, Shultz approached a stand of microphones as he stepped out of a presidential helicopter that carried him from Camp David to the Pentagon. As if to accentuate his role as part of the Reagan team, he said "my name is George Shultz. I'm from California."

Only four hours earlier, Shultz arrived at Dulles International Airport from London and was whisked to the presidential retreat for a meeting with Reagan and some of the top aides with whom Haig had battled.

There he met with the president, national security adviser William Clark, with whom Haig had had differences, presidential counselor Edwin Meese III, and White House chief of staff James A. Baker III. The three aides flew with Shultz for a working lunch on a terrace outside Aspen Lodge, Reagan's cabin.

Shultz said he had known the president since Reagan was governor of California in the late 1960s. "I know him well and he knows me."

He praised Haig, with whom he planned to talk later in the day, for his "long and dedicated and distinguished services," which "stands as a shining example to all citizens."

Asked about reports that Israeli officials were concerned about the impact the shift would have on Israel, Clark said, "I'm unaware off any such fears."

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the conference was "quite detailed" on specific points and problems of foreign policy.

The spokesman said Shultz, who will be quartered in a government guest house near the White House, would visit the State Department on Sunday and that he had already been given briefing books. He will be given a temporary office at the department until he replaces Haig, if confirmed by the Senate.

Haig is staying on until Shultz is confirmed.

Speakes also said that Shultz would telephone Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., and Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which must pass on his nomination, over the weekend.

Storm moves in, takes out businesses

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

STANTON — A rapidly-moving storm that generated heavy rain, large hail and winds estimated at 60 to 70 mph snapped power lines, toppled trees, interrupted phone service and demolished at least two buildings here Saturday afternoon.

A large, corrugated metal storage building owned by the Graves Plumbing & Supply Co. on the northwest side of town was flattened as though a train had run through it.

"The wind was blowin' so hard and the hail was so bad I didn't even hear (the building go down)," said Mrs. Wilmer Derden, who lives in a mobile home next door to the firm. "The hail was like big marbles. Our trees are all over the place. But our trailer just barely quivered."

The storm tore the corrugated roof off a large cotton warehouse belonging to West Texas Industries on U.S. Highway 80, just east of Stanton. Other company buildings, along with cars and farm tractors parked on the property, also sustained damage. Power lines were down and a large strip of the roof was wrapped around a utility pole.

"It was my good roof too," said company manager Bobby Klatt. "It (the storm) came out of the north. It lasted, hard, for 15 or 20 minutes. I'd guess the winds at 60 to 70 miles an hour. Tin was flying all over the place."

Said volunteer fireman Walt Haislip: "They were terribly high winds. We were called out on a tank battery fire, but the wind and rain were so heavy you couldn't see to drive. We got a mile out of town and went back."

Stanton appeared hardest hit by the storm, with Midland and other area towns reporting little or no severe weather.

Meanwhile, the forecast from the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport calls for a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms today and tonight, with temperatures in the mid-90s this afternoon and the mid-60s tonight.

The high Saturday peaked at 101 degrees, the hottest day of 1982 but still two degrees shy of the record 103 set in 1972.

Monday's high is expected to be in the mid-90s. A slight chance of thunderstorms exists for Monday.

Windy city

Neighbors and employees gather to aid clean-up operations at two Stanton businesses severely damaged in thunderstorms Saturday. A Graves Plumbing & Supply Co. warehouse, above, was demolished, and metal siding from West Texas Industries, a Stanton cotton press and warehouse complex, left, was scattered over a wide area by high winds that struck the town about 4 p.m. Heavy rains and hail also were reported. Buildings and vehicles were damaged, power lines were down and phone service was interrupted by the storm. No injuries were reported.

Rain, hail fall on areas of Southwest, Midwest

By The Associated Press

Thunderstorms extended from northeastern New Mexico across the Texas Panhandle into western Oklahoma and over western Kansas into western Nebraska on Saturday.

Marble-size hailstones fell at Amarillo, Texas, during a storm that also produced gusty wind, and a flash flood watch was posted over the Texas Panhandle into north central Texas as the storms produced locally heavy rain.

The National Weather Service reported 1.7 inches of rain at Amarillo within a matter of hours, with some areas getting up to 3 inches.

Frustration on two fronts

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — I have never know so amny Americans in all walks of life to be as indignant and frustrated as they are over the acquittal of John W. Hinckley, Jr., on grounds of insanity. He was committed to a mental hospital in Washington after the nation watched his try to kill President Reagan and critically wound three others, two of them assigned to the president. This was justice miscarried, to my way of thinking, and obviously to lots of members of our Congress as well.

Hearst

A bipartisan group of Senators and Representatives has acted swiftly — within 24 hours of that incomprehensible verdict — to sponsor legislation which will either tighten the law for an insanity plea or write a new one to stand as the law of the land.

The overwhelming majority of our fellow citizens believe that the law was twisted — a feeling I fully share — into the defense on grounds of insanity. That is sheer plea-bargaining. Hinckley was a spoiled loner, 27 years old, who tried to prove his machismo to a young movie actres. She spurned his love letters sent to her in college and all his advances to meet her. Thereupon, Hinckley, a family dropout, stalked the president, planning to kill him at pointblank pistol range.

As a horrified TV audience noted, he nearly assassinated the president. His bullets felled others and, alas, presidential press secretary Jim Brady may never recover. This ebullient man has undergone innumerable bouts of surgery to relieve pressure from Hinckley-fired bullets in his head. He is in a wheelchair, requires constant therapy and care. How does his family and he feel about such a course of sanity and justice?

Two of the 12 jurors in the case admitted afterward that they "goofed" but bowed to pressure from fellow jurors. Well, I submit that they chickened out. Had these two stuck to their convictions and not been flimflammed by psychiatric mumbo-jumbo, the outcome would have been a hung jury. In that case, Federal District Judge Barrington D. Parker would have been compelled to remand Hinckley for a fresh trial with a new jury.

With the verdict, the judge committed Hinckley to the hospital for tests and, get this, set Aug. 9 for a hearing. That's to determine whether the would-be killer "is entitled to release from custody." In other words, the possibility exists that Hinckley can in 50 days be adjudged sane and walk away to plot again.

The loophole of "insanity" derives from 16th century English law. Even today in most heinous killings, the appeal is rarely invoked in criminal cases around the states. I fully believe that Hinckley is as guilty now of committing this despicable crime as he was when he pulled the trigger of the gun aimed at the pesident outside a Washington hotel. We would do well to remember that psychiatrists are not the law and laws on insanity copouts must change as our lgislators propose.

Midland to cap wastewater study with hearing presentation

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

After studying sewage for 1½ years and spending more than $200,000, the city of Midland will be coming to the end of the line when it presents its proposal for a $20 million wastewater disposal project before the Texas Water Commission in a hearing here Tuesday.

The public session will start at 9 a.m. and will be held in the auditorium of the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College.

Purpose of the hearing is to allow the city to outline its proposal and to give opponents who will be affected by the project a chance to voice their objections. This hearing is one of the steps required before the city can be issued a permit to begin construction.

Under the plan, Midland would ship its primary treated effluent through pipelines to J. "Timber" Floyd's land southeast of the city and near Glasscock County line. There it would be retained in a holding pond until used for irrigating crops.

The TWC's hearing notice reports the city's existing permit allows up to 9 million gallons of sewage per day while the proposed discharge plan would handle up to 15 million gallons per day.

"Final irrigation disposal facilities shall consist of new irrigation storage lagoons and approximately 2,500 acres of land for effluent disposal by irrigation, to be located approximately 16 miles east of the city of Midland in Block 37, Sections 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15, TWP 3-S of the T&P Railroad Co. Survey...," the notice says.

THE PROPOSED IRRIGATION site lies in the drainage area of Johnson Draw, but "no discharge of pollutants to waters in the State is authorized," the notice continues. It goes on to state that "approximately 2,950 acres of farm land are presently utilized for irrigation of effluent pursuant to the existing permit" and a temporary order.

Under this proposed amendment, the city would continue to use existing interim facilities and acreage for irrigation until the new facilities would be operational, "and may continue to be used after completion of final facilities, as specified in the proposed amendment."

The new system would be in operation two years after the permit amendment is issued, according to the notice.

The studies and ensuing proposal were precipitated by complaints from county residents along Midland Draw and near the sewage treatment plant that wastewater had been running down the draw. The city acknowledged the holding ponds had filled, that farmers hadn't been able to take enough out for irrigation and the primary treated effluent had overflowed into the draw.

Thus began the search for a piece of land where the effluent could be used for irrigation but also where the

'Daquiri Factory' producing unfair share of its product

LAFAYETTE, La. (AP) — Never mind that there's a new city law banning motorists from carrying alcoholic drinks in open containers. Business is booming at David Ervin's drive-in daquiri stand.

In fact, so many customers showed up at The Daquiri Factory on Friday that many of the cars got tickets for obstructing traffic, and as the afternoon turned to evening state troopers waved drivers on down the road if there wasn't room for them in Ervin's driveway.

Ervin, who also sells other frozen drinks, said many customers told him they were there to protest the new law, which makes it illegal for drivers or their passengers to carry alcoholic drinks in open containers or in reseal-able containers with a broken seal.

But he said the police attention probably drew a bigger crowd than he'd have had otherwise.

"Really, it's the best thing for my business they could've done," he said.

He had his own ways of drawing business, though. To celebrate the stand's seventh month, he gave away 4,000 eight-ounce bottles of champagne along with copies of the ordinance.

And he sealed the lids onto his frozen drink cups with freezer tape.

This, he said, should bring him into compliance with the ordinance.

Jail inmate, legal investigator file suit against police chief

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A city jail inmate and a legal investigator who says he is being denied access to the inmate on Chief of Police Wayne Gideon's orders have filed a federal lawsuit against Gideon, the police department and the City of Midland.

The plaintiffs are Lewis Eugene Gregg, who is being held for federal authorities on parole violation charges, and James D. McFadden, a former Midland police officer who now works as a para-legal for the the law firm of Lynch, Chappell, Allday and Alsup, which is representing Gregg by court appointment.

McFadden, who criticized the administration of the police department in a letter printed by The Midland Reporter-Telegram May 23, resigned from the force a year ago in a demotion dispute and litigation on that issue is pending in appeals court. He had been with the department 16 years.

In the federal suit filed Friday, McFadden claims he had consulted with Gregg on previous occasions but when he attempted to do so June 16 he learned he had been "barred from entering the jail pursuant to an order of the Defendant, Wayne Gideon, which order only permits licensed attorneys to enter the jail to speak with

Texas economy slowing, but solid

By PAUL RECER
Associated Press Writer

The gold at the Texas end of the nation's economic rainbow is tarnished somewhat by layoffs, a slightly increasing unemployment rate in certain areas and a mild slowing of growth.

But the experts say Texas' economy is still strong, healthy and may be poised for another surge forward.

"I think we're starting into a boom period," said a San Antonio economist.

Said a Houston expert: "The outlook is exceedingly bright for the rest of the century."

Texas, as a whole, has been touched lightly, so far, by the general national recession. But it has taken some locally severe bumps, scrapes and bruises.

The "oil patch" has been staggered by a severe cutback in drilling, a decline in refinery capacity and a dramatic reduction in demand for oil field equipment. Experts are predicting that some companies may fold before the picture improves. Dozens of oil-related businesses have experienced layoffs and more are predicted.

The Dallas-Fort Worth area has been stunned by the loss of Braniff International. About 4,500 workers lost their jobs when the airline stopped operations on May 12. There also have been layoffs in some manufacturing firms.

Unemployment rates have risen slightly in a number of areas of the state and may get worse. Some experts are predicting rates as high as seven percent this summer in Houston and Dallas, the state's economic powerhouses, because of seasonal trends.

Statewide, the Texas Employment Commission said that the April figures, the latest available, show an unemployment rate of 5.9 percent, compared with 4.3 for the same period of 1981. Only four major labor markets, Amarillo, Austin, Odessa and McAllen-Pharr-Edinburg, showed improved employment pictures for April.

But these problems, according to the experts, are but minor bumps on a high-speed Texas economic highway into the future.

Economists making predictions nearly all agree that Texas is the place to be no matter what the national economy does.

"Texas is usually the last to feel a recession, is affected the least and is the first to recover," said a Houston economist.

Nat Eisenberger, head of the respected Economic Advisory Services firm of Houston, calls Texas "the strongest regional economy in the country."

The reason, he says, is a superior "mix" of economic sectors. The state's economy is based on five sectors — energy, high technology, service and finance, old line industry and agriculture. The first three are expected to be the major growth industries for the rest of the century.

"It just so happens that Texas is strong in all three," said Eisenberger.

In addition, said the economist, Texas has more cities over 100,000 in population than any other state, giving a great capacity for industrial and market growth. The state, though classified as 80 percent urban, has vast areas for expansion. And, lastly, the state has a distinct "pro-business" attitude with low taxes and a strong tradition of encouraging expansion.

"The future is extremely bright, no matter how it looks in the near term," said Eisenberger.

HOUSTON:

An abupt decline in drilling is being felt strongly now in the oil field equipment and services industry. Layoffs are common and production is being cut back across the board.

Refinery workers have been laid off as capacity has dropped to 60 percent.

Part of the problem stems from over-optimism in the oil business, said C. A. Kasdorf, manager of economic research at the Houston Chamber of Commerce.

Oil field service companies, enjoying a boom in 1981, geared up for high production. When drilling suddenly dropped by 35 percent early this year, said Kasdorf, the companies "were caught by surprise."

This added to an existing "energy recession" caused by a decline in demand, unstable prices and the uncertainty about gas decontrol.

All of these negative factors may disappear next year, said Kasdorf, and drilling activity could resume its hot pace.

Housing starts in Houston continue strong, despite the high interest rates, with the city expected to lead the nation in housing starts for the eighth straight year. Non-residential construction again passed $1 billion dollars for the year and is 38 percent of the pace for 1981.

Unemployment in Houston, however, was 5.6 percent for May and may get to "six or seven percent," said Kasdorf, in June and July because of seasonal effects. One reason for this, he said, is that many people moving to Houston from out of state find themselves "mismatched in skills" for the Houston jobs.

DALLAS-FORT WORTH:

Unemployment in May surged to 5.7 percent, an 11-month high, and probably will get worse, according to Texas Employment Commission labor analyst Don Johnstone.

"Growth of the local economy, although continuing, is weak compared to that of the last few years," he said. "Our unemployment is a reflection of what's going on in the national economy."

The May employment figures don't reflect the impact of the Braniff demise and Johnstone said the figures would have topped 6 percent if the unemployed airline workers were included.

Several companies, among them Bell Helicopter, Texas Instruments, Mostek Corp., Halliburton Co. and Dresser Industries, have had recent layoffs.

Economists, however, believe the Dallas-Fort Worth area is well-positioned to rapidly recover with any pick-up in the national economy. Defense spending and increased drilling will have a significant impact, it's believed.

SAN ANTONIO:

The Alamo City seems to be on its way out of the recession, according to Melinda Schultz, an economic analyst for the Greater San Antonio Chamber of Commerce.

"All the figures are very positive," she said. "The indicators are really more positive than last month. The figures indicate we're doing well except for residential construction and related things such as utility connections."

She said San Antonio escaped major effects of the national recession because of a diversified economy and is now looking toward a quickening economic pace.

"I think we're starting into a boom period," she said.

ABILENE:

Unemployment rose in Abilene in May, primarily from layoffs in the oil industry. The rate increased from the 4 percent of April to 4.8 percent.

Diane Duncan, a TEC official in Austin, said the decline is statewide.

"It doesn't take a whole lot of layoffs in major industries to reflect a decrease in employment, especially in smaller areas," she said.

Ann Carman of the TEC office in Abilene said the rate was affected by the April layoff of 400 employees of Nucorp Supply Inc. The firm laid off another 200 early this month. She said Abilene may experience other layoffs this month.

EL PASO:

Unemployment improved in El Paso in May, but the rate is still far above the state average. TEC officials in El Paso said the rate dropped in May to 10.4, just a bit below the 10.5 percent of April.

Elke Schabel of the city's chamber of commerce said the unemployment figures reflect the large number of unskilled workers in the El Paso area, and not the effects of major layoffs.

On the bright side, she said, there have been 73 new businessesopened in El Paso since January, 1981, including a new Atari plant that will hire 600 workers. She said she expects more growth, especially in the electronics field.

Retail sales, thanks to Mexican shoppers, she said, are up compared with the same time for 1981.

RIO GRANDE VALLEY:

Unemployment in the Valley is running at about 13 percent, but such figures are not unusual for the area and may even be on the low side because migrant workers now are harvesting crops in the North and Midwest.

Building in the Padre Island resort area is booming. Officials estimate building permits for the area are expected to reach $75 to $80 million this year, about $10 million more than in 1981.

Marathon LeTourneau, an offshore drilling rig firm, has laid off 100 workers at the Port of Brownsville.

AMARILLO

Amarillo reported a 4.2 percent unemployment rate for May, which Chamber of Commerce spokesman Jim Eubanks said was the lowest for any metropolitan area in Texas.

"For June it will be higher because we are having some layoffs," he said. ASARCO, which has a smelter here, is laying off about 50 of its 850-man work force, Eubanks said. Bell Helicopter and Halliburton, an oil field service firm, also had some employee cutbacks.

"Even with all that, our unemployment and our layoffs have been very, very small, percentage-wise. Our economy is based on agriculture, oil and gas, manufacturing and distribution. One counterbalances the other for a stable economy."

City to present wastewater proposal

ground water under the land was of a poorer quality than the treated wastewater. That's how the Floyd land and adjacent tracts were chosen as the disposal site, according to the city's reports.

HEARING EXAMINER James Larkins said late last week in a telephone interview from Austin that he was getting organized for the hearing and expected it to last two to three days.

"Secret of the thing is organization and I'm in the process of getting it organized. The key feature is determining who the proper parties are...those who have key interests," Larkins said.

By "key interests," Larkins said, he means persons who will be directly affected by the project. "They have to have a justifiable interest in it. They have to show it will harm them in a direct way. Not just any bystander who opposes it will be allowed to speak."

Testimony and information gathered at the hearing will be "voluminous," said Larkins.

When the hearing begins Tuesday, Larkins will spend the first hour getting organized as to the list of speakers. "Before you start out, you have to have a flight plan. The first part of the meeting will be for developing that plan."

The hearing examiner "wouldn't be surprised at quite a bit of testimony."

When the hearing has concluded, Larkins said he will organize the testimony and make a recommendation on Midland's permit amendment to the TWC. "I don't make a decision; the commission does that."

John Lowe, director of utilities for the city of Midland, isn't expecting as long a meeting as Larkins. "He's pessimistic," said Lowe.

The city's presentation shouldn't take more than two hours, and Lowe said he is unaware if there will be much opposition.

ON TAP FOR the city's side are reports by Black & Veatch representatives, a consulting engineering firm; Ed Reed and Associates, a local hydrology company; and Lowe, who half-jokingly said he would play the role of the "heavy."

Black & Veatch engineers and the Reed hydrology firm have been involved in the studies since the search for a new disposal site began.

The engineers will speak about the project's construction while the hydrologists will talk on ground water and hydrology of the area, according to Lowe. He will talk about management of the project and the contract with Floyd.

Lowe said he had received one notice of protest from a Lubbock law firm representing the Glasscock County Water District.

"It's just a matter of seeing who all shows up and how the hearing examiner conducts the meeting," Lowe said. "If he so chooses, everyone can speak."

Lowe contended the city has done its homework. "We've dotted our i's and crossed our t's. We've been ready for a long time. I'll be glad to get this over and get on to some other things."

MIDLAND COUNTY Judge Bill Ahders said late Thursday he didn't think the county commissioners would take a formal stand, pro or con, on the project.

County Attorney Scott Henderson said he would be attending the meeting and representing the county, although he may seek more direction Monday from the commissioners when they hold a regular session.

"I won't be putting on any independent new evidence. I will be cross-examining their (city's) witnesses and I may put on one witness to evaluate the city's evidence," Henderson said.

However, he noted that the philosophy of doing what is best for the public good rather than a few people will come into play at the hearing. Noting that the residents of the city of Midland also live within the county, Henderson he couldn't oppose the project on the basis of it hurting a few county residents when it would benefit a larger number.

"We have to work for the public good," he said.

"Upon information and belief, Plaintiff would allege that the Defendants' rule barring non-lawyers from assisting prisoners is being primarily directed at him and is being used to unlawfully interfere with his right to earn a living and be free of governmental interference in his chosen profession in violation of the rights secured to him by the Constitution, to his damage and that of Plaintiff Lewis Eugene Gregg.

"Plaintiffs would allege and show that the continued enforcement of this rule by the Defendants will cause irreparable injury and harm and that they are entitled to a preliminary and permanent injunction against enforcement of said rule with a declaration that same is void and violative of their constitutional rights."

The suit, which seeks an unspecified amount of dollar damages in excess of $10,000, also alleges several violations of jail standards and procedures — including the lack of a fire escape for prisoners, "other than the main stairway which leads from the booking desk to the jail."

Further, it requires the defendants to "admit or deny" that "persons other than attorneys, family members and police personnel have been granted access to prisoners during non-visiting hours in the City of Midland jail (prior to and since) June 16, 1982."

Other allegations charge that "no facility exists for attorneys and prisoners to consult with one another in total privacy," and that police officers "have questioned prisoner Lewis Eugene Gregg concerning communications with his attorneys."

Assistant City Attorney Paul Williams late Friday afternoon confirmed reports that the city was aware a suit might be filed after a weeklong series of top-level conferences between Gideon and city officials initially failed to resolve the matter.

An 11th-hour accord apparently has been reached, however. Said Williams: "The law is that the city should set up reasonable hours to allow para-legals to confer with prisoners if the prisoners so request. Mr. Nuessle (City Attorney Joe Nuessle) informed the city council of this and the city council instructed Chief Gideon to set up reasonable hours for consultations between para-legals and prisoners.

"It is my understanding that earlier today Chief Gideon has set up what he believes to be reasonable hours. I have not seen a copy of the memo yet. But it is my understanding that he has just earlier this afternoon sent out a memo to his jailers (providing for) consultations between para-legals and prisoners."

Williams added that he isn't sure when the new policy is to take effect. Gideon could not be reached for comment.

On the allegations of jail standards violations, Williams said the city has a contract with the government to house federal prisoners and that before the contract was signed several years ago, "Some federal prison inspectors did inspect our jail and they gave us a clean bill of health."

Williams also said he's not sure if the jail has been inspected since that time: "I believe it has, but I'm not certain."

McFadden's attorneys could not be reached for comment, and it is not known if the suit will be dropped in light of the new jail visitation policy.

Man jailed when he failed to testify

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — A Longview man jailed after he was granted immunity and then refused to testify in the trial of seven people accused of oil theft was released Saturday by an order from the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

Garvin Richardson had been offered immunity by prosecutors to testify against the seven people from Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana.

Israeli planes attack Syrian missile battery

By FAROUK NASSAR

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli warplanes attacked a Syrian missile battery Saturday in the first battle action reported since announcement of the latest U.S.-arranged cease-fire. An armored column closed in on the the Beirut airport as Israel strengthened its siege around Palestinian guerrillas in west Beirut.

Israeli jets screamed overhead on reconnaissance missions and Lebanese army units were ordered to report to their units immediately, indicating their entry into west Beirut might be imminent.

Hundreds of refugees fled south and north in search of sanctuary. PLO chief Yasser Arafat toured his devastated enclave and expressed skepticism that the U.S.-mediated truce, announced Friday night, would hold. "Every two or three days, they (the Israelis) declare a cease-fire, only to break it shortly afterward," he said.

The Israeli military command said its warplanes returned safely to base after destroying a new SAM-6 missile battery Syria had moved into the Bekaa Valley in eastern Lebanon. No casualties were reported.

Israel has insisted that Syria cannot bring in new missile batteries. The military command did not say when the one attacked early Saturday had been set up.

ARAFAT ALSO rejoiced over the resignation of Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., calling him the "pillar in the Reagan administration on which (Israeli Defense Minister Ariel) Sharon relied in his scorched earth strategy in Lebanon."

"American civilization, American human rights here we are," Arafat cried as he toured bombed-out neighborhoods. Men and women dashed out of their demolished houses to hug and kiss the stubble-bearded leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Senior political sources in Jerusalem said Israel's invasion army had to move quickly against the PLO guerrillas — perhaps in 24 to 48 hours — in case the Reagan administration adopt a tougher line toward the Jewish state following Haig's resignation.

But Israeli television reported the U.S. State Department sent Israel a message that Haig's departure would not mean a change in U.S. policy.

The state-run television said this apparently was meant to reassure Israel and deter it from any last-minute offensive before the State Department changeover.

Analysts said the Israelis probably would overrun the airport before storming into the adjacent Palestinian camp of Bourj el-Barajneh in case Israel decides to move in on the PLO nerve center.

BEIRUT NEWSPAPERS reported mediation efforts were under way on a formula to move the hitherto inactive Lebanese army into west Beirut while the guerrillas pull back into the camps on the city's southern rim.

The army would then collect the PLO's heavy arms from the camps while a multinational force is set up to police a 25-mile guerrilla-free security zone adjoining Israel's northern border in southern Lebanon, the papers said.

The west Beirut sector has been controlled by the PLO and its leftist Lebanese militia allies since the 1975-76 Moslem-Christian civil war.

Syria snuffed out the war and its 30,000 "peacekeepers" remained in Lebanon, but increasingly attacked Israel's Christian allies rather than policing the civil war armistice as they were supposed to do.

Israel invaded June 6 to crush the guerrillas near its northern border and rout the Syrians.

Haig is known to have been at odds with Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, an opponent of the 3-week-old invasion, and is now to be replaced by George P. Shultz, president of a group with wide interests in the Arab world, especially in Saudi Arabia.

LEBANON'S LATEST cease-fire was arranged by U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib and went into effect Friday as Haig's resignation was announced.

Habib met Saturday with Lebanese President Elias Sarkis at the Israeli-ringed presidential palace in suburban Baabda in renewed attempts to work out an acceptable formula to disarm the PLO and ward off an Israeli ground attack on west Beirut.

The PLO said its leadership was considering "important new U.S. proposals" relayed to Arafat via French Ambassador Paul Marc Henry. The proposals were not spelled out.

Meanwhile, Israeli forces outside the capital rounded up stray Syrian soldiers in the pinewoods overlooking the strategic mountain town of Aley, nine miles east of Beirut on the main highway to Damascus, and put them to work collecting bodies.

Aley was under firm Israeli control after the Syrian garrison pulled out Friday without a fight towards the Bekaa Valley.

An outdoor rock concert — a rare sight in Midland — was held Saturday evening at Cole Park southeast of Midland. The rock group "Sharkz," shown here, was among the groups scheduled to play.

ment are still unfortunately a long way off in Argentina where the army, which suffered a debacle in its Falkland Islands adventure, continued a shaky rule by naming a retired general as president. The appointment was opposed by the air force and navy, urging unsuccessfully a turnover to civilian government and national elections. So the air force — which had the only accomplishments against the British forces — and the navy quit the junta, saying they'd only keep ranking officers associated for security reasons.

So the president-designate, retired Maj. Gen. Reynaldo Bignone, with rush instructions from senior military junta officers, tried to outflank the discomfited services on the outside. He set about courting civilian political leaders, out in the cold for six years, and has been quickly rebuffed by nearly all. The stage appears set, because of deterioriating economic conditions, for the probability of still another coup in the upside-down political atmosphere of inherently rich and literate Argentina, a country of 28 million people.

The Argentine army fiasco was provoked because the junta tried to distract attention from the nation's economic mess with the ill-fated invasion of the Falklands. It was calculated to raise nationalistic fervor but didn't allow for the fact that Britain, a democratic live-and-let-live kingdom, refused to be pushed from islands it has held for the last 150 years. A remarkable British expeditionary force was mounted and sent 8,000 miles — a sensational achievement — in these days of missiles and push-button technology. The Argentine forces were no match against the volunteers from the United Kingdom.

Back in 1980, Britain offered Argentina "sovereignty" over the Falklands in return for leasing the islands back, for a time, to the United Kingdom. It was identical, I felt, with the accommodation on Hong Kong made by Britain with China. No soap, retorted the Argentine junta to the offer from London. Instead, their schemers plotted the invasion of the Falklands.

The U.S. tried to mediate and have Argentina see reason. It failed despite herculean efforts at long-range shuttle diplomacy by Secretary of State Haig. In the aftermath of the Argentine surrender which it sought to disguise as mainly our fault for aiding Britain, Prime Minister Mrs. Margaret Thatcher flew into town. She first spoke at the ongoing U.N. disarmament conference, declaring bluntly that aggressors and not weapons make wars. Not for nothing is she dubbed "The Iron Lady."

Then she flew to Washington to confer with President Reagan, an old friend and fellow-conservative. For an hour they discussed the status of the Falklands and just how long British forces would be assigned to the region and, therefore, be away from NATO. Afterward, Prime Minister Thatcher repeated for emphasis that there is no role for Argentina to play in a future disposition of the Falklands, meaning NO sovereignty issue.

The Prime Minister also observed acidly at a press conference that Britain offered unspecified "concessions" to Argentina in April and last month which the junta rejected out of hand. She added bitterly: "Is anyone suggesting that I should hand over our people to a regime that doesn't know human rights in the same way our people do? No."

So the junta can stew in its own juice. It has lots to answer for, beginning with the kookie invasion to the economic swamp in which Argentinians are sinking up to their necks.

Texas didn't really win prison suit

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — State officials crowed about a "clean" win when the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals gutted parts of U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice's reform order.

But, in quieter tones, the officials recalled that major portions of the 10-year-old lawsuit were settled in agreements which amounted to wins for the plaintiffs, the prison inmates.

Attorney General Mark White said the appeals court ruling Wednesday "really supports the Texas position on how to run a prison."

However, the appeals court agreed with the inmate-plaintiffs' claim that Texas runs prisons that mete out "cruel and unusual punishment."

Although the appeals court said Justice went too far in his reform order, the New Orleans judges let stand changes agreed to by the state, and other changes, ordered by Justice, that were not appealed by the state.

Included was the negotiated settlement in which the state agreed to do away with "building-tenders" or inmate-guards. Justice, who listened to 349 witnesses during the 159-day trial, said some building-tenders were "violent, corrupt and brutal inmates — some particularly notorious..."

Some of the building-tenders were so hated by other inmates that prison officials are concerned about where to house the former inmate-guards.

The prisoners also picked up a victory when the state did not appeal Justice's order against placing more than two inmates in a cell.

However, the inmates and the U.S. Justice Department wanted private cells for prisoners, a reform granted by Justice. The appeals court gave the state at least a temporary win on that issue, saying, in effect, try some other changes first.

The appeals court order threw out Justice's single-celling order, but said, "We deem the wait-and-see policy, rather than radical surgery, more in keeping with the constitutionally reparative function of the injunction."

The New Orleans judges told the inmates they could re-argue the single-celling issue in one year if rights violations persist.

Gov. Bill Clements says the most far-reaching change brought about by the lawsuit will be "classification," the system of separating less-dangerous inmates from those who are more of a threat.

The appeals court affirmed Justice's order for a new classification system.

"Texas now has a classification system of sorts," Clements said. "I think we can have more bits and pieces to it. ... There's a strong sentiment that we should have facilities close to those metropolitan areas where those white-collar criminals who are charged with lesser crimes and certainly non-violent crimes can stay within that general area."

Clements said those convicts could work during the day, return to a minimum-security prison at night and repay their victims.

Texas' present limited classification system leads all inmates to maximum security prisons. It's the only kind the state has built.

California has gone to an extensive classification system that gives each inmate a point score. Inmates are grouped in prisons according to their relative degree of danger.

Braniff wins first trial in effort to resume flight

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Braniff International, grounded by financial problems, can keep control of its terminal at Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport, a U.S. Bankruptcy Court judge has ruled.

The ruling Friday by Judge John Flowers allows Braniff to keep one of the facilities it needs to discuss joint operating agreements with other airlines, said Braniff Chairman Howard Putnam.

"Had we not retained our gates, we would have had no chance at reorganization," said Putnam. "If (Flowers) said no, I'd be looking for a new job."

The airport, Braniff's major hub, had sought to evict Braniff from its facilities.

Putnam and his chief financial officer, M. Philip Guthrie, disclosed in testimony during a hearing that Braniff was discussing a $50 million joint operating agreement with eight airlines, including Pan American World Airways.

Braniff still has $15 million in cash to contribute to the initial cost of putting Braniff's planes back on Braniff's old routes, Putnam said.

"I have initiated the contact with every other airline and I have talked to the chief executive officer of every other airline. They're all interested," Putnam said outside court of the eight airlines.

But Putnam cautioned that the odds were still against Braniff, and if the airline did find a way to reorganize, it would fly under a different name.

Flowers made his ruling within minutes of the conclusion of attorneys' arguments late Friday afternoon.

While the judge barred the airport from evicting Braniff from its terminal, he also said the airline must pay rent, lease half of its terminal space to other airlines within 45 days and make progress toward reorganization within 90 days.

Flowers, who heard four days of testimony, said that after 90 days the airport could file papers again to evict Braniff, but a Braniff reorganization of Braniff was "at least possible" and that the airline deserved more time.

Storm strands campers in Palo Duro

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Torrential downpours hit the Texas Panhandle on Saturday, stalling dozens of cars in high water and stranding campers in Palo Duro Canyon for a time.

The National Weather Service reported 1.7 inches of rain within a matter of hours, but added that some areas noted up to three inches during the morning.

An undetermined number of campers were forced to seek high ground at the Palo Duro Canyon State Park after rising waters cut off roads leading into and out of the area, according to a park spokesman, who asked not to be identified.

But state highway department crews used sand to open up the roadways shortly after 1 p.m., leaving the park "in super condition," the spokesman said.

In Amarillo, streets were closed and overpasses were flooded during the worst portion of the storm, which included high winds and marble-sized hail.

Police received numerous reports of stalled cars, but no injuries were reported.

By JAMES R. KING

RICHMOND, Texas (AP) — Mary Lou Anderson was under a death sentence with nothing to lose when she agreed to testify against Feryl Granger, her partner in the 1978 execution-style murder of her parents in nearby Sugar Land.

As a reward for helping prosecutors win a death sentence against Granger as well, her punishment was reduced to 50 years in prison, and with that, most folks in this quiet town on the shores of the Brazos River figured the case was closed.

But after Miss Anderson got off death row, Granger appealed and won a new trial — and then, to the dismay of prosecutors, she refused to repeat the testimony so crucial to the state's case against him.

What happened next, according to District Attorney Bill Meitzen, is now the basis for a landmark appeal that he feels could change the way prosecutors treat couples accused of committing crimes together.

When Miss Anderson refused to testify at Granger's second trial, Meitzen simply brought out the old transcripts of her testimony from Granger's first trial and read them to the jury. Granger was convicted again.

"Her lawyers were telling her there's no way I could win the trial without her testimony, so she thought she had me over a barrel," Meitzen recalled. "Fortunately, we had a very wise district judge who let me put in her prior testimony."

Defense attorneys protested that such a use of prior testimony was illegal. They argued the only way Miss Anderson's previous statements could be introduced as evidence would be if she were unable to show up in court because she had moved out of the state or was too sick, or dead.

The question, which attorneys say has never been tested in Texas, is now in the hands of the 13th Court of Appeals in Corpus Christi, and Meitzen said he expects a decision by the end of the year. He admits if the court throws out Miss Anderson's prior testimony he will have no case against Granger.

Granger got off death row because the court ruled an accomplice's testimony must be backed up by at least one other witness in a capital murder case. At his second trial, he was convicted of simple murder and sentenced to life in prison.

If he wins a third trial on the previous testimony issue, "We'd have to turn him lose. A killer will be walking the streets again, looking to kill somebody else," Meitzen said.

The bodies of Miss Anderson's father and stepmother were found tied, gagged and each shot several times in the head in their Sugar Land home Jan. 3, 1978. Prosecutors said Granger murdered the couple in a plot to share proceeds from a $10,000 insurance policy with Miss Anderson, a convicted hot check writer who was facing a prison term unless she made good on about $6,000 in worthless checks.

More important, Meitzen said, is the effect Granger's appeal could have on the often delicate negotiations between prosecutors and defendants accused of participating in the same crime.

Prosecutors must decide whom they want to go after and whom they want to bargain with in exchange for testimony, the district attorney said.

"It's like dealing with one devil to get a meaner devil," said Meitzen, who has come under criticism recently for not bringing to trial the woman charged in another notorious murder committed by a man and a woman acting together.

"We're faced with the same situation" with Helen Mejia, accused in the 1979 abduction and murder of 20-year-old Kimberly Ann Strickler, Meitzen said.

Miss Mejia's testimony helped put trigger-man Roger DeGarmo on death row two years ago, but she has never been brought to trial herself. Meitzen says frankly he's afraid if he prosecutes her and alienates her, and then DeGarmo somehow wins a new trial, Miss Mejia could stand mute just like Miss Anderson did.

In both cases, Meitzen said, the woman's testimony is essential in convicting the man.

"The only way I can hold a conviction against DeGarmo is with her testimony. I could try her now, but let's say I convict her, and she's sitting in the penitentiary, and Degarmo gets reversed, and I go up and I say, 'Helen, I need your help some more.' She can say 'to hell with you, buddy,'" Meitzen said.

In DeGarmo's case, Meitzen said he feels he has an "airtight" conviction, but "I've seen too many of them get reversed" for one reason or another, prompting him to wait for a decision in the Granger case before proceeding against Miss Mejia.

Visiting District Judge Olin Welborn of Alvin, who allowed Miss Anderson's prior testimony during Granger's second trial, did so only after he granted her immunity from further prosecution and cited her for contempt of court.

"She still refused to testify," said Meitzen. "You can't pry anybody's mouth open."

Granger's defense attorney, Logene Foster of Sugar Land, said using prior testimony deprives the defendant of his constitutional right to confront his accuser.

Meitzen countered that the defendant had the chance to confront the witness in the original trial, but Foster said circumstances could have changed in the meantime, or new evidence could have been uncovered, that would call for a new line of cross-examination.

Meitzen said if Foster's appeal is successful, "I'm going to stand up and say if this is the law, then the law is an ass."

Vickie Daniel wants more money from dead husband's estate

LIBERTY, Texas (AP) — Vickie Daniel is suing her sister-in-law and eight corporations in an effort to resolve ownership of property in the $732,000 estate of former Texas House Speaker Price Daniel Jr., the husband she was acquitted of murdering.

Mrs. Daniel's lawyer, C.J. "Buddy" Hanby, said Friday the suit was filed after lawyers failed after a year of negotiating to settle differences.

Named in the suit were Mrs. Daniel's sister-in-law and executor of the estate, Jean Daniel Murph, of Richardson, and eight corporations established by the late legislator before and after his November 1976 marriage.

Lawyers for the estate claim Daniel had $691,000 in separate property assets with $126,000 in liabilities, Hanby said.

Community assets accumulated during the couple's stormy four-year marriage were set at $41,000 and liabilities at $26,000, Hanby said. Lawyers said Mrs. Daniel was entitled to $7,500 settlement, one-half the net community assets, Hanby said.

However, Hanby contends, the eight coporations organized to conduct Daniel's business affairs may contain community and corporate property intermixed.

Attorney Mark Morefield, a former partner of Daniel's, said the estate was happy the suit was filed because it will clear the record.

School district ordered to pay $26,000 in damages to teacher

DALLAS (AP) — The Wilmer-Hutchins School District has been ordered to pay $26,000 in damages to a former elementary teacher who was fired in 1980 after attempting to voice teacher complaints concerning pay discrepancies.

A federal court jury ruled Friday that the district violated the constitutional rights of Jewel Malone, who was terminated following a seven-hour school board meeting Oct. 13, 1980.

Mrs. Malone, who now works in a Dallas nursing home, was president of the Wilmer-Hutchins affiliate of the Texas State Teacher Association.

U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer ordered the school board to reinstate Mrs. Malone in January 1981. She declined to sign a new contract in June 1981.

In addition, the jury also ordered board members Ruby Folsom, Bobby Moore, Ernestine McMillan and Mildred Connors to pay $900 each in damages to Mrs. Malone.

Man convicted of bribing juror

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas bonding company president convicted of attempting to bribe a juror hearing a civil lawsuit against him has been assessed a five-year probated sentence and a $10,000 fine.

Robert Blake McCallum was found guilty of attempting to influence the juror's verdict, despite his insistence that their meeting at a restaurant was coincidental.

McCallum, who heard the sentencing verdict Friday, faced up to 20 years in prison.

McCallum said he purchased $500 worth of champaign for juror Suzanne Wills and two of her girlfriends at the request of a friend with a romantic interest in Ms. Wills.

The jury on which Ms. Wills served awarded a $165,500 judgment to a Richardson woman who accused McCallum of libeling her.

Texas GOP 'boom' should last until 1984

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Regional leaders of the Texas Republican Party were told Saturday that the GOP boom in the state, boosted by the 1984 national convention in Dallas, should last through the next presidential election.

"We've really got an opportunity this year," said national GOP committeeman Ernest Angelo, Midland, "and with the national convention coming to Dallas in 1984 that gives us even more optimism in the presidential election."

Angelo and State Republican State Chairman Chet Upman of Mineral Wells led a number of high party officials Saturday in urging the 62-member State Republican Executive Committee to go all out in November.

"We are in exciting times and I see nothing but optimism," said Upham.

"We have a chance to put the Republican way before the people and show that the Democratic way is not in step with in our state for the decade to come."

The SREC met mostly to take care of routine party business.

Wayne Thorburg, executive director of the state Republican party, told the committee there would be TV advertisements from now until November stressing what he called the liberalism of Democratic political candidates and the Republicans' conservative ways.

"If we want to keep the Texas way of life we must vote Republican this year," said Thorburg. "That's what we are telling voters."

Upham warned that Texas Republicans must give Clements a "big margin" in the governor's race, "because if there is not a large margin at the top of theticket, there may be a dropoff at the bottom of the ticket and we will lose some local candidates."

Angelo said Democrats had made a nationwide effort to gain congressional support by redistricting maneuvers.

Founder of 'Far Flung Adventures' gets to 'run the rivers all year long'

By STEVE BREWER

TERLINGUA, Texas (AP) — Sitting on the porch of the old Chisos Mining Co. building here, watching the wind spin clouds of dust as dry as ground bone, it's hard to imagine tons of water rushing madly through the mighty canyons of the Big Bend.

Yet, housed in the building is the major float trip outfitter for the Rio Grande, which only miles away is churning its way to the Gulf of Mexico.

A sign hanging from the roof of the porch says, "Far Flung Adventures, World Wide Headquarters." Occupying a worn wooden bench on the porch, smoking Marlboros and emptying cans of Lone Star, is Mike Davidson, 29, co-founder of Far Flung.

"The population has increased 1,000 percent since I moved here, which is only from three to 30," Davidson said. "It's still hard not to call it the ghost town."

DAVIDSON'S COMPANY is in large part responsible for the resettlement of Terlingua, a town that was abandoned in the 1940s after area mercury mines were flooded.

For thirty years, the town sat virtually empty, the yellow adobe buildings drying and falling apart under the relentless sun. Then, in 1975, Davidson, an avid outdoorsman since childhood, came to the area to take a raft trip down the Rio Grande, through Big Bend National Park.

"My partner, Steve Harris, had started rafting in California," the former construction worker said. "I was amazed. I said, 'You mean I can get paid for camping and traveling down the river and eating good food?' I went on a two-week trip with Steve. We had a lot of time to talk about it."

The result was the founding of Far Flung in 1977.

"I DON'T THINK we really thought about the future when we started it," Davidson said. "We said we'll just camp out and see what happens. Then the guy who owned this place rented us a place at his ghost town. We had saved some money and it was real cheap to live for a good while.

"We met people over at Big Bend Park who liked us and helped us out because we were one, real safe, and two, real concerned about our impact on the river," he said.

The blossoming of the company surprised the owners nearly as much as it did everyone else. Now, the company employs as many as 20 river guides and took 300 people floating down the river in May.

"We have people out on the river all the time," Davidson said. "This is about like a base camp."

AN OLD WAREHOUSE used by the mining company was re-roofed and is used to store the deflated rubber rafts, oars and food supplies. Headquarters is in the back of the mining company office — which also holds two restaurants, a store and a motel office.

Tourists embarking on a float trip meet Davidson's boatmen in Terlingua and are driven 17 miles to Lajitas, where the raft trip begins. The average trip is two days and one night and ends just beyond Santa Elena Canyon, a narrow gorge between cliffs that are Mexican on one side and American on the other.

"We also have a trip that's three days and two nights," Davidson said. "The larger trip suits those who are extremely curious or extremely lazy."

The guide sits in the middle of the raft, armed with two oars to direct the boat through the fast-moving current. Paddling by the tourists is optional.

"We encourage participation," Davidson said. "They help us tote their stuff. But we have a lot of older people — people 80 years old — who can't paddle. It's not necessarily that strenuous, but they have the option of just having everybody sit and letting the guide paddle."

LUNCH CONSISTS of fruits and cheese and the guide prepares a steak dinner at the overnight campsite.

As whitewater goes, the river is not that hazardous, although Davidson said, "There are a few interesting places we have to negotiate."

The one "significant rapid" is a stretch in Santa Elena Canyon called the Rockslide.

"It's a technical rapid which means you have to make several decisive maneuvers," he said. "No matter how many times I go down the slide, I always scout it first.

"I saw a couple of guys in a little rubber raft not too long ago and they headed right into it. I hollered, 'Hey, uh, aren't you guys going to take a look at it first?' They said, 'We've been through here before.' I said, 'OK, you damn fools.'

"When we made it through there, they were standing over on the bank all wet and smoking cigarettes like you do when you've just had a scare."

DAVIDSON, A WIRY MAN with the deep tan of the outdoors, said he has had a few scares in the Rockslide, where the dashing water forms suckholes and hydraulic pulls through the big boulders.

Dallas Cowboys won't sue NCPAC over political ad

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys have decided not to challenge the telecasting of a right-wing political commercial portraying a group of scantily-dressed models wearing outfits similar to those of Cowboy cheerleaders.

Tex Schramm, the team's general manager and president, said that he viewed a video tape of the commerical Friday and is satisfied that the spot does not imply that the Cowboys are taking sides in a race involving Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas.

The commercials were shot in Texas Stadium this month by the National Conservative Political Action Committee, which is working against Bentsen's re-election.

The team and Texas Stadium management threatened to take NCPAC to court over the commercial after learning about the filming last week.

"As we had said from the beginning, the Cowboys were in no way involved in the NCPAC commercial," Schramm said Friday. "The Cowboys do not prefer one political candidate over another.

"We have looked at a tape of the commercial and it has been edited in such a way that it would be impossible to infer the Cowboys were in any way endorsing the message on the commercial."

Budget is stuff dreams made of

By JAY PERKINS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The budget that Congress finally adopted is the stuff that dreams are made of, a document as much of illusion as reality.

It projects a fiscal year 1983 deficit of $103.9 billion — or is it really $116.4 billion? It makes cuts from what might have been rather than from what really is.

It is — no more and no less — a vision of the future, based on best-guess estimates. And like all such visions, it's as likely to be flawed as true.

And Congress now faces the difficult problem of implementing the illusion it has created.

It will be a difficult task.

This is a budget that includes cuts that knowledgeable sources on Capitol Hill agree never will be made. It is a document that projects program reductions that are, at best, politically unpalatable and at the worst, politically impossible.

IT INCLUDES $20.9 billion in tax increases that will have to go through a potentially hostile, Democratic-controlled House Ways and Means Committee — and in an election year yet.

And it will be up to Republicans, who wrote this document, to make it work. Democratic leaders in the House already have washed their hands of the process, announcing that Republicans and their conservative Democratic allies will have to enforce the document.

No one knows at this point how near this guidepost to the future will be to reality. If past history is any example, it probably won't even be close.

Guesstimates never have been very accurate. And what is actually spent can be affected by congressional relations with President Reagan, by upcoming elections that leave members of Congress reluctant to campaign before voters who have seen their benefits cut or taxes raised.

An Analysis

All this adds up to what Congress-watchers have said for months — this budget will be difficult to implement and all the projections are uncertain at best.

The administration, for example, projects the budget deficit under this blueprint at $103.9 billion for the fiscal year that starts Oct. 1. The Congressional Budget Office estimates it at $116.4 billion. And neither has an exactly sterling record in prognostication.

THE BUDGET resolution passed for this current year, for example, projected a deficit of $38 billion. The Reagan administration now estimates that deficit at $100 billion — and the Congressional Budget Office says it will be closer to $114 billion.

The budget for 1981 projected a balanced budget. The actual spending, however, ended up $58 billion in the red.

It's impossible to say with any precision what cuts will be made under this budget. For one thing, the cuts are not from what currently is — but from what is expected. And this economy has not been following any of the traditional rules.

The reductions so highly touted by Republicans are from a baseline projection that estimates growth in the programs from new participants and from inflation. It assumes unemployment will be 9.1 percent for 1982 and decline to 8.4 percent in 1983. It estimates growth from inflation at 7 percent.

Where inflation will be a year from now is, of course, unknown. But if it's more than 7 percent, the baseline was too low, the cuts too shallow and the deficit understated.

To be sure, the programs are being reduced. But the reduction is, in the vast majority of cases, from anticipated growth and not from current spending.

A SECOND problem is that the budget does not make actual or specific cuts. It mandates that reductions be made in programs under the supervision of various congressional committees and suggests areas where the cuts can be made.

But the committees themselves decide how to make the cuts. And they may make the cuts in the suggested areas — or in other areas.

Thus, those big cuts in food stamps, some $800 million in the upcoming fiscal year, may not be made. The money may be made up by cutting some other agricultural program. Likewise, projected welfare cuts may come from some other program.

And then there are cuts that will never be — and were never intended to be — made.

Under the budget act, committees are ordered to make the overall cuts in the budget. But this enforcement mechanism can be waived — sometimes because economic conditions dictate it, sometimes because a friend needs a favor.

In this budget, the enforcement mechanism is applied to all affected committees except two — the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee and its counterpart in the House, the xeducation and Labor Committee.

THAT MEANS that cuts in such programs as student loans, which are under the jurisdiction of those committees, likely never will be made. Sources with both committees agree this is the case.

Several sources said the enforcement mechanism was waived for those two committees by Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete Dominici, R-N.M., at the request of Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah. Hatch is facing a tough re-election battle in November, and the waiver means his Education and Labor Committee will not have to make the politically unpopular cuts.

The House committee, headed by Rep. Carl Perkins, D-Ky., got the same break simply for uniformity, the sources said.

For whatever reason, the cuts are in the budget — and the deficit reduced by some $400 to $600 million as a result, the sources said.

It's yet another dream that stuff never will be made of.

Moral Majority needs funds

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — The executive vice president of Moral Majority says the conservative lobbying group has cash-flow problems that have put it in serious financial trouble.

Ronald S. Godwin said in a direct-mail appeal this month that "Moral Majority barely has enough money to print our next newspaper," the monthly Moral Majority Report.

In the letter, Godwin asks for gifts of $15, $25 or $50 before July 4 for "an old-fashioned rally day for Jerry Falwell," the television evangelist who founded and directs Moral Majority.

Godwin said Friday: "I'm not in a desperate mood, but I'm in a serious one."

He said the cash-flow problems are due largely to a normal decline in contributions each summer.

'Old girl' no longer in demand

By ROBERT E. THOMPSON
Hearst Feature Service

PHILADELPHIA — How do you discreetly inform a lady of a certain vintage that pouches now bulge beneath her eyes, that her once-dazzling physical attributes have either slipped or thickened, that her ingratiating charms have grown dull and that her favors no longer are in high demand?

That is the problem a lot of Democrats faced as they gathered in here this week to praise and assess a political party that is both time-honored and time-worn.

After 50 years of scintillating courtship by the likes of Franklin Roosevelt, Harry Truman, Adlai Stevenson, John Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson, Hubert Humphrey and even, in his innocent youth, Ronald Reagan, the grand old girl just ain't what she used to be.

Perhaps only the faithful and nostalgic "Tip" O'Neill still sees her as she once was — a fresh, vital symbol of untapped American glory.

But O'Neill's vision of the lady is part of her problem — for the speaker is a captive of the passions of the past rather than an eloquent trumpet of the future.

He remains a noble defender of Social Security, Medicare, Civil Rights and other New Deal-Great Society reforms that lightened life's burdens for the elderly, the ill, the poor, the middle class and those who were denied equality of opportunity.

But he is not in communication with younger generations of Americans who, while preserving the accomplishments of the past, seek to move forward to new achievements.

Torn between the old and the new — between the desire to hold on to yesterday and the hope of shaping tomorrow — the Democrats are dancing to an uncertain cadence. The once-glamorous lady is comfortable following the partner who wants to lead her in a waltz and even a sprightly reprise of "Happy Days Are Here Again." She is not yet in step with the rollicking rhythm of rock-and-roll.

Beneath the facade of harmony and the eloquent rhetoric in Philadelphia, the Democratic Party is a political entity divided by the ages, standards of reference and economic philosophies of those who seek to lead her into the future.

The juices of its star performers flow in abundance when they are denouncing Ronald Reagan and his policies. But those juices tend to splatter in a half dozen different directions when those performers try to chart the party's return to glory.

In a large sense, the Democrats are paying the price of having achieved their long, historic agenda of programs for social and economic change. The basic features of that agenda long ago were written into federal law and now the Democrats are confronted with defending the ramparts of the past against Reagan's assaults of the moment.

They number some outstanding individuals among their current leaders in Congress and the governorships. But, except for their opposition to Reagan, those leaders have not yet found a cause to bind them together in spirit and determination.

They are divided on the question of a nuclear freeze. They have shelved the concept of national health insurance. They cannot quite grasp a way to shape their old compassion to the economic strictures of the '80s. They have not found those issues that appeal to young people just starting out in the business world and to elderly people who have retired from it.

But they are trying. Waiting for Reagan and the Republicans to fail is not a policy. It's an interminable political death watch, more likely to repulse than to woo the electorate.

Dutch queen visits Michigan

By MICHAEL McKESSON

HOLLAND, Mich. (AP) — Thousands gathered Saturday in this city steeped in Dutch heritage to honor the queen of their ancestors' homeland.

Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands, nearing the end of her two-week visit to this country, was greeted by throngs of western Michigan residents whose communities were founded by Dutch immigrants and bear such names as Zeeland, Drenthe and Overisel.

Welcoming the queen and her husband, Prince Claus, Mayor Richard Smith of Holland said about 15 million people of Dutch ancestry live in the United States.

The queen's U.S. tour commemorates 200 years of Dutch-American friendship.

In Kollen Park, more than 2,000 people representing Holland-area "kolonies," as Dutch communities are called, held a traditional American picnic. On the menu for the queen and the prince: hot dogs, baked beans, corn on the cob, watermelon and chocolate chip cookies.

Following the picnic, the royal party boarded the U.S. Coast Guard vessel Acacia for a cruise across Lake Macatawa, joining hundreds of boats for an air show that included a parachute descent by members of an Army unit that had liberated the Netherlands during World War II.

After the five-hour stay in Holland, the queen and Prince Claus returned to Grand Rapids, with a brief stop in Zeeland. A reception was scheduled Saturday evening.

Earlier Saturday the queen placed a wreath in a park in Grand Rapids in memory of American soldiers who died in the Netherlands in World War II. And she planted a tree at Calvin College, a center of Christian Reformed Church activity in the United States.

"I entrust this young tree to your care," she said, calling the maple "a tribute to the Dutch who came here so many years ago."

The queen arrived in Grand Rapids Friday evening. It was raining hard when the 44-year-old monarch stepped from her plane down onto a red carpet. In her remarks, she referred to the "very, very Dutch weather."

Later, the queen and prince toured the Gerald R. Ford Presidential Museum. Their guides were the former president and his wife, Betty.

In an exhibit of the former president's White House oval office, Ford and the queen had their pictures taken. Commenting on the office setting, Ford quipped:

"My desk never was that neat."

Gag order remains

MIAMI (AP) — A federal judge has refused to remove a gag order he placed on lawyers involved in a case that brought a judgment that 1,910 Haitians have been wrongfully held in facilities across the United States and Puerto Rico.

U.S. District Judge Eugene Spellman issued the original ruling Friday. He also presented plans for release of the Haitians to the attorneys who had filed the lawsuit, but ordered them not to discuss the plans, saying a public announcment would not be made until Monday at the earliest.

The judge said Friday that releasing the plans could cause "immediate and irreparable damage," and might cause an influx of illegal aliens who have gone to the Bahamas.

In a four-page opinion Saturday, Spellman denied motions made by two Miami newspapers and a Miami television station that could have allowed lawyers to comment publicly on the judge's ruling.

"The court is not insensitive to the rights afforded by the First Amendment or the arguments presented by the media," he wrote. "However, the gag order was issued only in the belief that an emergency exists."

Space shuttle astronauts Hank Hartsfield, left, and Ken Mattingly chat after an early Saturday morning training flight at Kennedy Space Center in preparation for today's Columbia liftoff.

Flight initiates space military operations

By HOWARD BENEDICT

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The shuttle Columbia embarks today on its fourth and final test flight, a seven-day mission that will initiate, under a partial cloak of secrecy, America's manned military operations in space.

The flight is to climax in a Fourth of July landing ceremony featuring a galaxy of space ships and President Reagan's delivery of his long-awaited national space policy.

Columbia's fourth commander describes the flight as the "final stepping stone" before the versatile ship begins satellite-deploying operational missions with Flight 5 next October or November.

"Our job on Flight 4 is to be the cleanup hitter, to do all the tests that have not been accomplished, for one reason or another, on the earlier flights," said Navy Capt. Ken Mattingly.

"We're taking a big step bridging that gap from test flights to the operational era," added his crewmate, Hank Hartsfield.

The countdown, flawless for four days, was right on the button Saturday as launch crews prepared to pump a half-million gallons of fuel into Columbia's tanks in the final hours before liftoff.

Mattingly, 46, and Hartsfield, 48, are to begin their 113-orbit journey with a blazing blastoff from Launch Pad 39A at 11 a.m. EDT this morning. They are to bring Columbia back to Earth 7 days, 1 hour, 13 minutes later at Edwards Air Force Base in California's Mojave Desert.

For months, Reagan's science advisers have been formulating a national space policy which Reagan is expected to unveil at the landing. Among items reportedly under study are go-aheads for a fifth space shuttle and a permanent manned space station, both long-sought by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Packed in Columbia's cavernous 60-foot cargo bay for Flight 4 is the first Defense Department payload ever carried aloft by U.S. astronauts. Its presence underscores the growing emphasis on militarization of space by both the United States and the Soviet Union.

The defense package contains test sensors for future spy satellites — a modest beginning to a burgeoning program that could develop by decade's end into a formidable American military space force of ships, pilots, satellites and out-of-this-world weapons.

Defense planners say this nation must have a strong military space program to counter a growing Soviet effort in that arena. The Government Accounting Office estimated recently that the Defense Department will require 114 of the 234 shuttle flights expected to take place through 1994 — mainly for hoisting and servicing communications, navigation, surveillance and other defense satellites.

The Air Force last week established a Space Command to coordinate the effort. The next day the Soviet Communist Party newspaper Pravda criticized the testing of military hardware on the shuttle and accused Washington of planning "to spread the arms race to outer space."

Does it bother Mattingly and Hartsfield that they are initiating a new military era in space?

"Space is a new frontier, important to all of us, including the Defense Department," Hartsfield said. "The shuttle is a national asset and I think the DOD is going to derive a great benefit from it."

The astronauts won't be heavily involved with DOD-82-1 except to occasionally switch instruments on and off and gather photographic and other data as the package rests in the cargo bay.

Their main task, they said, is not military — but to prove Columbia is ready to become operational, ready for scores of space roundtrips, hauling up commercial, scientific and military payloads — and perhaps elements of a space station late in the decade.

Columbia's first for-hire flight in October or November will deploy two commercial communications satellites, for Satellite Business Systems and Telesat of Canada. A lot more paying customers are waiting to get on board, and 70 flights have been booked — more than 20 for the Pentagon — into September 1987 for Columbia and its sister ships. NASA is busy working up a manifest beyond that date.

Mattingly has been in space before, as the moon-orbiting command ship pilot of the Apollo 16 lunar-landing mission in 1972. Hartsfield is making his first trip after 16 years as an astronaut-in-waiting. Both have degrees from Auburn University in Alabama.

"I know Hank very well, and I know how exhilarating space flight is," Mattingly said. "And I know that Hank is going to have a ball. The problem is how I'm going to keep his eyes inside until we get the spacecraft in orbit."

Military cargo aboard space shuttle really no secret

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The cargo manifest lists it as DOD-82-1 and the Pentagon has classified it "top secret." But the military surveillance equipment, stowed aboard the space shuttle, is really no secret at all.

The Star Wars package includes:

A super-cooled, infrared space telescope;

A navigational Space Sextant;

A spectrometer, with special, extra-fine filters.

These are not benign devices, tested solely for the betterment of science. The telescope and the spectrometer are being tested for possible use in helping track and destroy enemy missiles being fired at American or allied territory. The sextant could enable satellites to function free of guidance from ground stations, which could be destroyed in wartime.

DOD-82-1 means it is the first (1) Department of Defense (DOD) payload flown on the shuttle in 1982 (82). The Air Force, which manages the Pentagon's space effort, acknowledges only that it is packed in Columbia's cargo bay.

Astronauts Ken Mattingly and Hank Hartsfield have instructions not to talk about DOD-82-1 on open communications lines or to televise live pictures of it during the flight, which is set for liftoff today.

Nevertheless, details about the payload are known from Air Force congressional testimony and articles published in technical papers.

Robert Hermann, an assistant secretary of the Air Force, told the House subcommittee on science and technology last year that the payload's major component is called CIRRIS — Cryogenic Infra-Red Radiation Instrumentation for Shuttle.

It is a super-cooled infrared telescope designed to scan the horizon to gather background and basic target data for future spacecraft designed to detect and possibly destroy hostile missiles and satellites.

An Air Force technical paper presented at a photo-optical meeting last year reported CIRRIS is a 38-inch-long reflector telescope with a six-inch aperture and a velocity-determining interferometer with a one-inch aperture. Liquid helium cools it to 436 degrees below zero Fahrenheit, fiber optics are used extensively in the design and a laser provides position references.

From reliable sources and technical papers it was learned that other Pentagon instruments aboard the shuttle include a Space Sextant and a device called HUP (horizon ultraviolet program), smaller than CIRRIS but intended to do similar studies in the ultraviolet spectrum.

Other smaller devices are to gather scientific data on the electrical and plasma environment surrounding the shuttle and cosmic ray bombardment. Information will be used in designing future defense payloads.

The sextant uses two telescopes to locate known reference stars.

Hartsfield hopes to never see weapons in space

BY PAUL RECER

SPACE CENTER, HOUSTON (AP) — Henry W. Hartsfield Jr. will operate military experiments on the fourth flight of the space shuttle Columbia, but the former Air Force colonel hopes he'll never have to carry weapons into space.

"I personally would hate to see space weapons come about," said the 48-year-old astronaut. "I think it would be a mistake."

Space, said Hartsfield, "is a great new frontier that I think can be beneficial for all of us. I would hate to see it turn into a potential battleground. That would be the wrong thing to do."

Hartsfield will be making his first flight into space when he and astronaut Ken Mattingly, the mission commander, are launched aboard Columbia today from the Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

The two astronauts will spend seven days in orbit in the final shakedown flight of the space shuttle system. They'll have on board Columbia a secret Air Force package designed to test techniques for targeting weapons in space. Hartsfield hopes that is the closest any nation comes to putting weapons in orbit.

"I don't see in the near future offensive weapons being put into space," he said. The inclination now of both the Soviet Union and the United States, he added, is for using space only as a "high ground" observation post.

It has taken a lot of patience for Hartsfield to get into orbit.

Before being named to a flight crew, the astronaut had to endure the demise of one space program, the Air Force Manned Orbiting Laboratory project, and a long period without flights by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

HIS FIRST mission comes after a 16-year wait and Hartsfield admits, "I would be less than candid if I didn't say I was disappointed it has taken this long."

Hartsfield got into aviation through pure chance. "I think it kind of snuck up on me," he says.

As a boy growing up in Birmingham, Ala., he spent time at a nearby grass field airport, but never considered flying as a career. His ambitions were in another direction.

"My goal had been to been to be a teacher, to go into the academic field," he recalls. "I always wanted a Ph.D. in physics."

Hartsfield attended Auburn University in Alabama where he enrolled in the Air Force Reserve Officers Training program. He earned a bachelor of science degree in 1954 and then enrolled in graduate school at Duke University.

"I was very close to getting my master's degree at Duke when I was called to active duty," said Hartsfield.

Dreams of academe vanished when the Air Force sent him to flight school.

"The first time I got behind the controls of an airplane," recalls the astronaut, "I knew I had found a home."

Hartsfield became a hot jet pilot, serving European tours in tactical fighter squadrons and later being selected to attend the Air Force Test Pilot School at Edwards Air Force Base in California. After graduation from that school, he stayed on as an instructor.

IN 1966, he was selected as an astronaut in the Air Force MOL project, a program that, literally, never got off the ground. After it was cancelled, Hartsfield was shifted into NASA's astronaut corps in 1969 and he retired from the Air Force in 1977 to become a civilian astronaut.

Hartsfield served through the Apollo and Skylab missions in a support role, helping the prime astronaut crews prepare for their missions.

Now, at last, it's his turn.

"I plan to have a lot of fun," says the astronaut.

Hartsfield's speciality on the week-long mission will be operating a remote manipulator arm designed to pick up equipment in the cargo bay of the shuttle orbiter. He will use the arm to grasp a science experiment package and manuever it outside the spacecraft.

Mattingly thinks shuttle most complex spacecraft

BY PAUL RECER

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — During the Apollo program, a fellow astronaut described Ken Mattingly as "the most conscientious worker I have ever seen. He's there Saturdays, Sundays, every day, working hard."

His work pattern hasn't changed in the 10 years since.

Thomas K. Mattingly is the 46-year-old commander for the Flight 4 of space shuttle Columbia, about to make his second mission into space.

Asked recently when he last took a day off, Mattingly thought a moment and said, "Oh boy, I don't know. It's been a long time. We really haven't had a break in about a year of any substance."

Some of the effort, he says, is from trying to learn how to fly the space shuttle, the most complex spacecraft ever built. But, "some of it is my own personality. It's hard to sort out what is necessary to do and what people try to do because they have an opportunity."

Mattingly was born in Chicago and grew up in Hialeah, Fla. The only son of an airline maintenance supervisor, he still uses the boyhood nickname Ken.

HE HAS always sheltered his private life, firmly turning aside questions about his family. Biographies released by NASA recently changed his listed marital status from "married" to "single."

Asked if he were divorced, the astronaut said only, "In the process." His son, Thomas K. Mattingly III, is 10 years old.

At an early age, Ken Mattingly began building sophisticated model airplanes and by his early teens he held a world speed record in model airplane competition.

He was offered a college scholarship in music. But he passed it up because of a stronger pull toward aviation.

Mattingly enrolled on an officer's training grant from the Navy at Auburn University where he made the dean's list and was president of the student body. He graduated in 1958 with degree in aeronautical engineering and was commissioned an ensign.

"I've found a home in the Navy," he wrote his parents.

The young Navy officer spent five years flying jet fighters from carrier decks. He was appointed to the test pilot school at Edwards Air Force Base and graduated at the top of his class a month after he was selected as a NASA astronaut in April 1966.

Mattingly held key support jobs during some of the early Apollo flights and was preparing to fly to the moon himself when he became the victim in one of the most bizarre incidents of the Apollo program.

HE WAS assigned as command module pilot on Apollo 13 when, just 72 hours before launch, a backup crewman developed German measles. Blood tests showed Mattingly lacked immunity to the disease. As a precaution, he was grounded and astronaut John L. Swigert Jr. took his place.

Apollo 13, it developed, was a good mission to miss. An oxygen tank exploded while the spacecraft was en route to the moon. The lunar landing was canceled and the crewmen narrowly escaped with their lives.

Mattingly never got the measles and made it to lunar orbit two years later as command module pilot on Apollo 16. He spent two days alone above the moon while his crewmates, John W. Young and Charles M. Duke Jr., explored the surface.

He was not idle while circling the moon. Mattingly conducted more than two dozen experiments using an arsenal of scientific instruments aboard the command and service module. He later recovered the film and data tapes from instruments outside the spacecraft in a 73-minute spacewalk.

In the years since Apollo, the astronaut has worked quietly behind the scenes, holding important jobs in the development of the shuttle.

Mattingly is a tall man, nearly bald, with angular features and a reputation for quiet reserve.

But at a recent news conference, Mattingly spoke eloquently about the space shuttle and its role in the nation's life.

"The thing I'm not sure that everybody appreciates that we see coming, and very soon, is that space is going to be routine," said Mattingly. "Instead of people standing around in awe at watching a rocket lift off... it's going to become a commonplace thing."

The scenery from space, says Mattingly defies his command of the language and he suggests it will tax a poet or a journalist to capture it.

Chain of events leading to Shultz taking over

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

WASHINGTON (AP) — The telephone call from the president of the United States reached George Pratt Shultz in London about 3 p.m. Friday.

Ronald Reagan wanted to know if Shultz, president of one of the world's largest private engineering and consulting firms, would accept the job of secretary of state.

After Reagan was elected in 1980, Shultz was rumored to be one of the top candidates for the post that eventually went to Alexander M. Haig Jr., so his answer was no surprise.

"I would judge it was fairly certain he'd take it," said deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, as he reviewed the fast-moving events surrounding Haig's resignation.

The drama, involving a secretary of state who threatened to resign once too often, extraordinary efforts to preserve secrecy, and transatlantic telephone talk, was primarily played out in the White House over a period of less than 48 hours.

The chain of events began Thursday when Haig, whose threats to resign were nothing new in the 17-month-old administration, again discussed such a move in a meeting with Reagan.

Some officials say Haig offered to resign at that session, while others say the idea was simply discussed. Whatever was said, Haig's hours were numbered.

BY FRIDAY, Haig's resignation letter was in hand. Hours later, with little warning, Reagan went on television and dropped his bombshell — Haig had quit and he was nominating Shultz to be the nation's top foreign policy official.

By 11 a.m. Saturday, 20 hours after the president's announcement in the White House press briefing room, Shultz and his wife, Helena, had flown from London to the United States from London aboard the supersonic Concorde. An hour later, they and the Reagans were meeting in the living room of Aspen Lodge, the president's cabin at secluded Camp David in Maryland's Catoctin Mountains.

"It has come as a pleasant surprise," Shultz told reporters before leaving London.

By one account, Haig did not learn that his offer to quit was accepted until Friday afternoon, when he was told at the end of a National Security Council meeting held in preparation for the upcoming U.S.-Soviet arms control talks in Geneva.

About the same time, Shultz was telling colleagues at Bechtel Group, Inc., the San Francisco-based engineering firm of which he is president, that he would be leaving.

While White House aides said that Haig's resignation stemmed from an accumulation of complaints, there was also some thought given to this question: Because Haig's resignation threats were so frequent, and were said to range over issues from the petty to the enormous, what led Reagan to accept the most recent offer?

By one account, the tone of the Haig's relationship with the White House, always somewhat rocky, worsened when William Clark, long a Reagan confidant, became the president's national security adviser in January. Clark had been the deputy secretary of state. His White House role came to the fore during Reagan's trip to Europe earlier this month.

It was Clark who vetoed a Haig trip to the Middle East. It was Clark who tried unsuccessfully to veto a Haig meeting in New York with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin a week ago. It was Clark who thought Haig had "dropped the ball" when the United States vetoed United Nations Security Council ceasefire resolution on the Falkland Islands, then said it hadn't meant to.

AT THE SAME time, Reagan was becoming increasingly frustrated with Haig and so were his other top aides, who appeared to have finally lined up in favor of the shift. So, the president decided to call the secretary's bluff when Haig said, in effect, "I run foreign policy or I quit."

After Haig offered to resign on Thursday, Reagan and his most senior advisers debated it Thursday afternoon. Clark huddled with his top aides in the White House situation room. Again Friday morning, the resignation was debated. And then, Reagan decided to call Haig's bluff.

After the decision was locked up Friday morning, the president took Haig aside after the National Security Council meeting to tell him the resignation was accepted.

Throughout the 24 hours leading up to the announcement, great care was taken that word of Haig's departure did not surface prematurely.

Haig's Friday schedule, made public that morning, gave no hints. At 10:30 a.m., he was to meet with the foreign minister of Bahrain; at noon, there was the NSC meeting at the White House. At 2 p.m, the foreign minister of Malta was on his schedule and two hours later, the chairman of the Economic Reform Commission in India was to call.

A revision moved back the Bahrain minister to 4 p.m. and dropped the Indian official.

What Haig's schedule didn't list was a 4:30 p.m. visit to the State Department auditorium. That was when Haig read his resignation letter to department employes, reporters and a national television audience.

Nor was there any sign in Reagan's schedule, or in those of his closest aides, that they were in the midst of dealing with the most difficult personnel development of the administration.

PRESIDENTIAL COUNSELOR Edwin Meese III, the man to whom Reagan once said he would turn first in a crisis, was in Cleveland. A message sent through the local Republican organization headed him back to Washington, raising speculation that he had not been clued in.

But reporters were told that the so-called "Big Three" of Meese, White House chief of staff James A. Baker III, and deputy staff chief Michael K. Deaver, knew about the resignation Friday morning, if not Thursday.

Baker gave no sign that anything was out of the ordinary. All day, his agenda showed an interview with a reporter scheduled for 3:30 p.m., 30 minutes after Reagan's announcement. The meeting wasn't canceled until after Reagan's statement.

It was not until 2:30 p.m. until reporters in the White House press room were told Reagan would have an announcement in half an hour.

Television networks were advised by White House aides that they would want to carry live broadcasts of Reagan's announcement.

There was even surprise in the office of William Clark, the president's long-time confidant who last January jumped from the post of Haig's chief assistant as deputy secretary of state to that of national security adviser at the White House.

When a reporter called a Clark aide 10 minutes after Reagan's announcement, and asked for information about "the Haig story," the aide said, in total shock, "what Haig story?"

Haig forever involved in 'turf battles'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The resignation of Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. was brought on by what he felt were constant challenges to his authority, including second-guessing and sniping, by other members of the administration, his aides say.

Haig's fights made headlines and were a source of considerable unpleasantness to President Reagan, who tried unsuccessfully to stop the feuding that eventually led to Haig's resignation Friday.

At the end, it wasn't lost on the White House that Haig fought with almost everybody, including Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, former national security adviser Richard Allen, present national security adviser William Clark, others in the Cabinet and key members of the White House staff.

He was by no means the "team player" that his successor, George P. Shultz, has been described as.

Despite his troubles, however, Haig may have been more successful than any other secretary of state since Henry Kissinger in influencing the course of American foreign policy and putting the State Department back at the pinnacle of the decision-making process.

The battles often got more attention than the achievements. While some squabbles were over policy, Haig also provoked fights over apparently trivial things, including whether others got the credit he wanted for himself.

Haig also had a tendency to go public with his disagreements, such as his complaint to Congress last year that Vice President George Bush was picked to head a crisis management team.

Haig's attempt to maintain and expand his authority at every turn were legend. He was widely criticized, and ridiculed, for his statement on nation-wide television that he was in charge after the attempted assassination of the president.

He once objected that Secretary Weinberger was using a government aircraft with windows for the passengers, while the plane he was using didn't have them. Once, he even delayed a trip to Argentina aimed at settling the Falklands crisis until he was given an airplane with windows in the passenger section.

These antics, known as "turf battles" in Washington, saddened Haig's supporters in the State Department. They felt he was good on policy, but his personality interfered with his ability to carry it out.

Haig cited policy differences in his letter of resignation Friday. "In recent months," he wrote to Reagn, "it has become clear to me that the foreign policy on which we embarked together was shifting from that careful course which we had laid out."

In retrospect, however, Haig had strong influence in setting the course of American foreign policy.

On his first day in office, Haig raised eyebrows when he said Reagan had told him he would be "the vicar of American foreign policy," responsible for the formulation, conduct and articulation of U.S. foreign policy to the country and the world.

In a boast that would be typical of his 18 months in office, Haig then said, "I want you to know that I intend to carry out that mandate while I am secretary of state."

While Haig appeared to win many more battles than he lost, he took his defeats hard, according to aides, including the most recent, his unsuccessful effort to prevent the administration from trying to block European participation in a Soviet gas pipeline to Europe.

Reagan's choice of a successor to Haig, former Treasury Secretary Shultz, illustrates that the White House had no major complaint with Haig's over-all policy. Like Haig, Shultz is a moderately conservative Republican.

The historic record will likely show that Haig was consistent in following the foreign policy course he first enunciated in a speech to the American Society of Newspaper Editors on April 24, 1981.

In order to restore sagging global confidence in American leadership, he said the nation needed to build up its economic and military strength, restrain the Soviet Union, reinvigorate its alliances and strengthen U.S. friends.

The Soviet Union had to be a major focus of U.S. foreign policy, he said, because "Moscow is the greatest source of international insecurity today." About the same time, he said human rights considerations had to take a back seat to terrorism as a focus of American policy, a controversial position from which he had to partially retreat later on.

Haig consistently talked tough about the Soviets, but still carried on a correct and active diplomacy with Moscow. His voice was the most persuasive in the administration in favoring U.S.-Soviet strategic arms reduction talks, which open in Geneva on Tuesday.

He argued successfully that the United States had to side with its traditional friends in time of trouble, such as with Britain in the Falklands crisis and Israel in its conflict with Arab nations, even if it strained U.S. relations with other friendly nations, which it did.

Although opposed by pro-Taiwan influences in the administration, he prevailed in arguing the need to maintain good relations with Peking and succeeded in preventing the sale of sophisticated U.S. jet aircraft to Taiwan.

But none of his successes came easy, aides say. "On every single issue, it has been difficult for him to prevail," said one very close aide.

And there were defeats, perhaps the greatest in the Middle East.

Donovan lawyer: Press unfair

WASHINGTON (AP) — A lawyer for Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan accused the press Saturday of being "unfair" in its coverage of the investigation of alleged ties between Donovan and organized crime.

Attorney Theodore Geiser of Newark, N.J., said the unfairness consisted of "rehashing" and "regurgitating" old information, failing to put information into context and failing to question the motives of the sources of the information.

Geiser said he believes there is a coordinated effort arising in Congress to destroy Donovan — a statement on which he did not elaborate.

His comments came during a panel discussion at a conference of the journalists' organization, Investigative Reporters and Editors.

DON HARVEY REALTORS
MAKING THE UNAFFORDABLE AFFORDABLE
Don't listen to the "gloom and doomers". Buying a home today is not an unreachable dream. Last year, first-time home buyers represented 33% of the market. But it took a lot more ingenuity than it used too.
If your financial condition will not allow you to settle in one of the affluent suburbs, forget about looking there. Start looking in areas where prices are more in line with what you can afford. Also, housing values can be much better the further one goes from metropolitan areas. True, commuting time and gasoline might be more expensive, but the extra cost may be far outweighted by the saving in monthly payments and initial down payment.
The more repairs a home might need, the better the price could be. A handyman can proceed at his own pace and financial condition. Even a non-handyman can stretch out non-emergency repairs until financial conditions permit.
Creative financing, with the seller providing much of the financing is more and more the rule today. And don't forget family help in financing. Last year, over 25% of first time buyers received half or more of their down payment from relatives.

Vendors peddle anti-Reagan gags

By BOB DVORCHAK

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Vendors hawking gimmicks, gags and political barbs are adding a satirical voice to the anti-Reagan rhetoric streaming out of the Democratic Party's National Conference.

Buy a Reagan Bean Shooter to "Shoot Down Reaganomics," an entrepeneur hawks, while another vendor promotes Reagan's Raygun as the official referendum on the president's policies

"In a very simple way, people can say something to the president," said Tom Lamay, a Washington, D.C., fireman who spent $7,000 of his savings to produce 3,000 of the paper guns. "It gives people a chance of letting their voices be heard."

Democrats looking to express their dissatisfaction with Reagan administration policies also can purchase buttons portraying the president in a feathered hat — "Reagan Hood — He Robs From The Poor and Gives To The Rich." And in a statement on the first family's lifestyle, another button announces, "Nancy Wears Red Dresses...We Get Pink Slips."

Most of the merchandise is being offered to various candidates as potential fund-raising gimmicks.

"I think this little gag is going to annoy the presidential advisers so that they'll shape up. You know how sensitive they are to public opinion," said Connie Nash, inventor of the Bean Shooter.

"It's a tongue-in-cheeck gag that says Reaganomics is not working," she added in an interview Saturday.

The gadget, distributed by California Hi-Lites of Los Angeles for $1.50, comes complete with a hollow straw and a supply of jelly beans.

Frustrated taxpayers are instructed to shoot beans at any pink slip, bankruptcy notice or student loan cancellation they may have received.

"If jellybean gets jammed in shooter — simply eat it — (just as Reaganomics asks)," the instructions advise.

Reagan's Raygun, which sells for $4, features a picture of President Reagan saying "Trust me." And it comes with a postcard addressed to the White House so the buyer can say if he agrees or disagrees with the president's policies.

The Raygun has control settings that can set federal spending, escalate the nuclear arms race and raise defense spending. Other dials measure the jobless rate, interest rates, inflation and budget deficit.

And the first step in the instructions says to "aim carefully at target (stable economy or world peace)."

Meanwhile, Rich Mansfield of Litchfield, Conn., has a $3 poster called Hard Times that is a takeoff on a national magazine cover and the jelly bean theme.

It quotes Reagan as saying, "This administration will not turn its back on the poor, the elderly or the working class," And then poses the question: "Full Of Beans?"

"It really asks a question, it doesn't make a statement," Mansfield said. "But I'm sure Teddy Kennedy would find it a lot more humorous than Ronald Reagan."

The vendors were given space and invited to the conference by the Democratic National Committee.

Zoo has teddy bear rally

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — More than 1,000 people brought their fantasies out of hibernation and joined a parade Saturday as Philadelphia became the city of bruinly love for "America's First Great Teddy Bear Rally."

Bears wearing dresses, hats, visors and formal suits — and posed on bicycles, in toy cars and in cages — wound through the Philadelphia Zoo with the help of proud adult and child mentors.

The beloved bruins ranged from the size of a thumb to 5-foot-8 and many were taller than the children who were carrying them.

The rally was sponsored by the zoo, which borrowed the idea from a similar event in Britain, where in 1979 a nobleman with the title of the Marquess of Bath held the first great international teddy bear rally at his estate in Wiltshire.

The marquess could not travel here, but he sent his favorite stuffed bear, Clarence, in the company of an official escort, said zoo spokeswoman Kathy Lincoln. Clarence had his own airplane seat for the trip.

Democrats call for early summit

By DAVID ESPO

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Democrats called Saturday for an early U.S.-Soviet summit on arms control, endorsed a nuclear freeze, and mocked the "Reagan recession" by suggesting that Republicans ask voters this fall if they're better off now than in the Great Depression.

Party members also approved a statement describing Israel's three-week old invasion of Lebanon as an opportunity to bring a "lasting peace" to that war-torn country and "greater security" for the Jewish state.

In workshops designed to produce a party vision of America mid-way through President Reagan's term, Democrats also adopted language that said the Equal Rights Amendment is a "Democratic issue" and supported an end to discrimination against homosexuals.

Not all the attention was on the issues, however, as California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., issued a statement endorsing his fellow Californian, Sen. Alan Cranston, for the 1984 presidential nomination. "We can no longer stand to be a nation divided by a lack of leadership in the White House," said Brown.

Cranston is one of seven unannounced presidential hopefuls vying for attention at a three-day Democratic Party conference that concludes today. Brown, who made futile bids to become his party's presidential candidate in 1976 and 1980, is now in a close race to join Cranston in the Senate.

In all, there were seven committees meeting to draft party positions on defense and foreign policy, the economy, the environment, crime, federalism, helping the poor and agriculture. All of the position statements are expected to be approved in a single vote today.

The proposed resolution on arms control calls on Reagan and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev to meet "as soon as possible." It came as part of an overall position paper predictably critical of the administration's foreign policy and calling for a nuclear weapons freeze.

But with party leaders taking pains to maintain the appearance of a united party, the freeze statement glossed over specifics.

"It's no secret there's a big difference within the Democratic Party on the issue of the nuclear freeze. ... We Democrats are cordially agreeing to cordially disagree." said Ben J. Wattenberg, a member of the foreign policy workshop panel.

Wattenberg is an ally of Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., who is supporting a proposal in Congress that calls for a freeze after the United States has achieved parity with the Soviet Union. The Jackson proposal has been endorsed by Reagan.

A rival proposal, backed by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, favors an immediate freeze, believing that nuclear parity exists between the two superpowers.

The statement on Lebanon was approved after criticism that it lacked language condemning civilian casualties in the Israeli invasion.

"We cannot be silent on the issue of civilian deaths no matter which side engages in them," said Christy Rodriguez of Virginia.

But Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn, who is of Lebanese descennt, voiced support and said, "We want Lebanon left to the Lebanese. We look forward to the day when we can have two great western allies side by side in that part of the world."

The economic statement criticized Reagan's budget and tax policy as unfair and declared, "Our immediate, pressing challenge is to spur recovery from the Reagan recession and to put Americans back to work. ...

"Perhaps the Republican theme for the election campaign this year will be 'Are you better off today than you were in the Depression?'"

It called for a limitation on the three-year income tax cut Reagan won from Congress a year ago, with no taxpayer receiving a cut of more than $700 a year.

At the same time, the economic report says the best way to revise the tax code is to provide for a uniform tax rate on most taxpayers, with progressively higher taxes on those in the upper income brackets.

But, in another effort to minimize differences, the statement also says the party should lead a national debate over several different proposals for revising the tax system.

On the question of a balanced budget, Democrats discarded a draft statement opposing the "administration and New Right's attempt to make permanent its spending cuts and tax giveaways" through a constitutional amendment. Instead, it approved a statement calling for lower deficits achieved with spending cuts and higher taxes.

At a news conference later, the AFL-CIO released a study backing its contention that the recession, increased Social Security and state and local tax boosts have turned the Reagan tax cut into a tax shift onto working people.

The study of nine states and nine cities said that in Minneapolis, a family of four making $25,000 would pay $431 in additional taxes in 1982 — even after a $305 federal tax break.

"This so-called break is just another deceptive tool... There's no benefit in it for working Americans," said Ken Blaylock, president of the American Federation of Government Employees.

Added Dick Celeste, running for Ohio governor, "A discussion of tax breaks is totally unreal to working people in Ohio. None of them believe they got it."

U.S. allies silent over Haig's resignation

By MONTE HAYES

Stunned U.S. allies were cautiously silent over the resignation of Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. But U.S. policy foes, including the Soviet Union, saw the sudden move as proof of fierce feuding within the Reagan administration over the Middle East and other volatile issues.

Haig quit Friday, claiming that American foreign policy had strayed off a "careful course" of consistency, clarity and steadiness of purpose. President Reagan nominated former Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz to succeed him.

The Soviet Union suggested Haig resigned because of discord within the Reagan administration over the Middle East crisis. Tass said "contradictions within the U.S. administration became further aggravated" after "Reagan decided to give the green light to the Israeli assault of west Beirut."

Moscow had viewed Haig as harshly anti-Soviet, and there was speculation the Kremlin might welcome the change. Relations beween the two countries have been extremely strained since Reagan took office 17 months ago with Haig as his chief foreign policy spokesman.

Haig won accolades from Canadian Foreign Minister Mark MacGuigan as "a man of peace" and a "very strong moderating influence" within the administration. But most U.S. allies in Western Europe, where Haig was on good personal terms with both military and civilian leaders, made no immediate official comment.

Haig was widely regarded as Europe's advocate within the Reagan administration. He had served for more than four years as supreme allied commander of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Although the British Foreign Ministry and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher made no public comment, Mrs. Thatcher is known to regard Haig highly because of his marathon shuttle efforts between London and Buenos Aires to resolve the Falkland Islands crisis.

Argentina, which lost to Britain when the Falkland Islands controversy flared into war, described Haig's resignation as an attempt by the Reagan administration to repair ties with Latin America damaged by the conflict. When Haig's mediation efforts failed and Washington announced its support for Britain, Argentines saw Haig as symbolizing America's "treachery."

British government officials said privately they were surprised by Haig's decision and speculated he had grown tired of political squabbling within the Reagan administration. French Foreign Ministry officials also expressed surprise.

Haig's resignation came as West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt angrily criticized Reagan's embargo on U.S. technology for the controversial Soviet-European gas pipeline. More than other officials in Washington, Haig had taken a moderately sympathetic view of Western Europe's plans to join the Soviet Union in piping in Siberian natural gas to the West.

Schmidt sent Haig a telegram today saying he was "very sad" to hear of his resignation and praising his "deep understanding of world affairs."

At the United Nations, a Palestine Liberation Organization spokesman welcomed the news, saying Haig "hurt American interests by adopting Israeli strategic objectives."

Hasan Abdel Rahman, deputy U.N. observer for the PLO, denounced Haig as "a partner...in the commission of the biggest and most savage crime committed in modern history" — a reference to Israel's invasion of Lebanon.

In Asia, Japan, South Korea and the Philippines expressed surprise at Haig's sudden resignation. China's official news agency reported his resignation without comment.

South Korean Foreign Ministry officials were baffled by Haig's resignation just 12 hours before Foreign Minister Lee Bum-Suk was to leave for Washington to meet with Haig, ministry sources said. But Lee departed for the United States as scheduled. He said he would meet with Deputy Secretary of State Walter Stoessel and other officials.

Israel fears tougher U.S. stance

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israel's invasion army in Lebanon has to move quickly now that Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has resigned because the Reagan administration may adopt a tougher line toward the Jewish state, senior political sources said Saturday.

The sources, quoted by Israel Radio, said the resignation of Haig, Israel's staunchest backer in the Reagan administration, could prevent Israel from achieving its objectives — getting the Palestine Liberation Organization to surrender and Syria to withdraw from Lebanon.

"The central issue in the next 24 to 48 hours is, to what extent will the United States demand the dismantling of the terrorist organizations within Lebanon, or will it suffice itself with a weaker, milder arrangement," Simcha Dinitz, former ambassador to Washington, told the radio.

Dinitz said he feared that in the interim period until Haig's successor George P. Shultz was sworn in, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger would gain ground with his hardline views on Israeli conduct.

Dinitz and former Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, both of whom know Shultz personally, expressed guarded concern about the latter's business ties with the Arab world. Shultz is president of the Bechtel Group Inc., which has vast business interests throughout the world, especially in Saudi Arabia.

Ronnie Milo, chairman of Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Likud faction in Parliament, said he was worried about the effect on Israel of Shultz's business interests.

"I must say with some regret that the one thing Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and Secretary-designate Shultz have in common is that in one way or another they both are connected to Arab business interests in the United States," Milo told army radio.

"One could say they both make their living from Saudi Arabia," he said, referring to the Bechtel Group. "This should light a red light for us, especially in view of the bad experience we have with Weinberger since he took office," said Milo. Weinberger used to be general counsel to Bechtel.

Resignation could harm U.S., China relations

By VICTORIA GRAHAM

PEKING (AP) — The resignation of Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig adds another factor of uncertainty to the already unsettled relationship between the United States and China.

Haig was widely perceived as a supporter of stronger U.S. ties with China, and a man who could persuade President Reagan not to follow the advice of conservative Republicans who want to upgrade relations with Taiwan.

George P. Shultz, nominated by Reagan to succeed Haig, is an unknown quantity to the Chinese.

The Chinese Foreign Ministry had a terse "no comment," Saturday, when asked about Haig's resignation. Foreign diplomats here said it was too early to predict what effect Haig's departure would have on the relationship that China has described as being at "a critical juncture" over the Taiwan problem.

"But it can hardly be a plus for China to lose one of the leaders on its side," said one Western diplomat.

"They cannot be very pleased because the Chinese prefer the people they know to the people they don't," said a West European diplomat, "and Haig was working to avoid a showdown with China at a delicate time."

Haig played a major role in convincing Reagan, a long-time Taiwan supporter, not to upgrade U.S. ties with Taiwan, which are now on a non-governmental basis. As a candidate, Reagan had promised to improve them.

Haig also was credited with helping to persuade Reagan to reject Taiwan's request for high-performance F-16 jet fighters.

In Peking a year ago, Haig declared that China was a "friendly country," to whom the United States would consider selling arms.

Haig was the first top U.S. official publicly to call the sale of U.S. arms to Taiwan "a very worrisome specter" in Sino-U.S. relations, and he was far ahead of Reagan in praising China's proposal for the reunification of the mainland and Taiwan, which China considers a breakaway province.

While Haig's departure raises doubts about the longevity of some of those ideas, foreign analysts say the underpinning of U.S.-China relations — the mutual desire to curb the Soviet Union — remains the same, no matter who is secretary of state. Furthermore, Reagan personally has been in command of negotiations with China since April, a sign that he approves the course being taken.

The transition to Shultz may actually be beneficial to those negotiations, if it produces a hiatus that gives both sides a chance to take stock and shift positions slightly.

Village devastated in fierce Syrian, Israeli battle

BHAMDOUN, Lebanon (AP) — Ragged Syrian prisoners cleared the bodies of their fallen comrades from the village streets here Saturday following one of the fiercest battles of the 3-week-old Israeli invasion.

The prisoners were bare-headed and expressionless as they collected the bodies from the side of the road or pulled them out of wrecked Syrian vehicles to dump them into the back of an open truck.

Israeli soldiers watched, fingering the triggers of their Uzi submachine guns. Two Palestinian prisoners sat on the sidewalk, their hands tied behind their backs and their eyes bound.

Lebanese civilians observed the scene in grim silence, but the children seemed unconcerned. Three little boys played on top of a burned-out Syrian T-62 tank across the street from four bodies lying on a pile of uncollected garbage.

The hilltop village, a strategic crossroads dominating the Beirut-Damascus highway, was devastated in the three-day battle that ended Friday with a Syrian armored regiment routed by overwhelming Israeli firepower.

A five-mile stretch of twisting highway was littered with Syrian and Lebanese bodies and the wreckage of tanks, trucks, armored personnel carriers, heavy guns and civilian cars.

Many houses were destroyed by shell fire or air strikes, but suprisingly, much of the village remained standing, with only windows broken and their frames overhanging the sidewalk.

The road surface was covered with broken glass and masonry, shell cases, unexploded hand grenades, twisted bits of charred wreckage and severed human limbs.

Soldier, policeman killed near Kampala

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — A soldier and a police officer were killed in an ambush at Nsimbe, 14 miles south of Kampala, security authorities reported Saturday.

The soldier and police officer were escorting a convoy of trucks carrying food to the Ugandan capital, according to the authorities.

Officials said the ambushers, whom they described as bandits dressed like soldiers, hijacked the trucks Thursday and forced the drivers to take them to an unknown destination. The drivers' fate was not known.

David Kanywamusai, director of Uganda's police Criminal Investigation Department, Saturday posted "handsome rewards" for information about "false military men" terrorizing Kampala and its environs.

Nationalist Party officials released

PEKING (AP) — China on Saturday completed its release of 4,327 low-ranking former Nationalist Party officials, soldiers and spies still in custody 33 years after the Nationalists were driven from the mainland, the official Xinhua News Agency reported.

The last two groups were released Friday in Shandong Province and Saturday in the Northeast China city of Tianjin, Xinhua said.

It said more than 1,700 others, already released on bail for medical treatment, also have received certificates of release.

The Standing Committee of the National People's Congress decided in March to release the last remaining Nationalists in custody, partly to help promote reunification of the mainland with Taiwan, to which the Nationalists retreated in 1949.

The decision covered Nationalists below the county and regimental level. Those of higher rank were released in 1975.

Xinhua said each released prisoner was given clothing, bedding and $55 in pocket money.

Vietnam criticizes role of association

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam on Saturday criticized the role of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations in promoting the formation of a coalition seeking to wrest power from the Vietnam-backed regime which now governs Cambodia.

A commentary in the Communist Party daily Nhan Dan, broadcast by Radio Hanoi, said the ASEAN countries were forced by China and the United States to promote the rival movement.

"They say they advocate non-intervention, but they are now grossly interfering in Cambodia's affairs," the newspaper said.

"They say they do not want confrontation with Vietnam but they now support the Cambodian reactionaries whose primary aim is to oppose Vietnam," it added.

ASEAN, composed of the Philippines, Thailand, Malaysia, Indonesia and Singapore, announced last week that it had succeeded in bringing together three Cambodian factions, including the Khmer Rouge and former Cambodian Prince Noradom Sihanouk, to try to lead a revolt in their country. The coalition is to be launched in early July in an undisclosed place in Cambodia, Sihanouk said Saturday.

Arbitration ends electricians' strike

LONDON (AP) — An arbitration agreement on Saturday ended an electricians' strike that had stopped publication of The Times of London for two days, the paper's management announced.

Arthur Brittenden, director of corporate relations at Times Newspapers, said The Sunday Times will publish normally. Both papers use the same presses.

Brittenden said the dispute over the firing of four electricians who refused to do maintenance work will now go to arbitration. They have been reinstated.

Boy kicks knapsack, bomb explodes

SAN SEBASTIAN, Spain (AP) — A 10-year-old boy kicked a knapsack on the street Saturday, exploding a terrorist's bomb that had been left there and sent him to the hospital.

Police said the explosion severely wounded Alberto Munagorri. The hospital listed him in grave condition.

The explosion occurred outside the offices of Iberduero, an electric company often the target of attacks by Basque separatists.

Police sources said it appeared the bomb, which caused light damage to the office, had been put in the bag by ETA, the separatist organization seeking independence for Northern Spain, which has been blamed for more than 350 assassinations since 1968.

Heat wave sends Greeks to hospital

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — A heat wave baked Greece for the second consecutive day Saturday, sending dozens of Athenians to hospitals with heat prostration and respiratory problems.

U.S. proposals keep MX, Trident missiles

By BARRY SCHWEID

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The United States is ready to open nuclear arms negotiations with the Soviet Union with "a good, equitable proposal" that will retain new U.S. MX and Trident long-range missile options while the deliberations proceed.

The sudden resignation of Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. is not expected to have a major impact on the talks, which open Tuesday at the Soviet mission here. The outlook is for a slow presentation of President Reagan's treaty proposal and considerable delay in tabling a Soviet counter-offer.

Reagan's decision to extend a ban on U.S. technology for a planned natural gas pipeline between the Soviet Union and Western Europe could have an additional, delaying effect if the tensions spill over into the arms control talks.

Arriving Saturday, chief U.S. negotiator Edward L. Rowny urged the Soviets "to join in a serious effort to reduce the threat of nuclear war," but he also said he had no illusions that his tasks will be easy.

ROWNY SAID Reagan personally gave him final instructions at a lunch Friday. Rowny said there was "no doubt" that Haig's successor, George Shultz, will adhere to Reagan's views.

The U.S. and Soviet delegations are to meet only twice a week. With each statement translated separately, it will take six to eight weeks to explain Reagan's treaty proposal. And in that time, the Soviet negotiators are expected to listen carefully, and offer none of their own.

"They'll quote their bosses," said a senior U.S. official in Washington. That means repeating charges by President Leonid I. Brezhnev and Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko that the U.S. offer is "lopsided" and designed to lock in U.S. supremacy.

The principal U.S. aim is to cut down the huge Soviet edge in heavy land-based missiles while the Pentagon goes ahead with the MX and Trident missiles and new long-range bombers.

Apparently, the administration has decided it will not let the Soviets sidetrack these weapons programs through negotiations. But if they reach an agreement without long delay they could limit their deployment.

Meanwhile, since November, U.S. and Soviet negotiators have been working on a parallel agreement to reduce or eliminate nuclear missiles in Europe. After 34 sessions, held in almost total secrecy, they have not come to terms.

NOW, WITH the opening of the strategic weapons talks, it may take even longer to harness the arms race.

The two U.S. negotiating teams intend to coordinate tactics and policy. While administration officials are not ruling out an agreement on one set of weapons, it's improbable that one accord would be wrapped up if the other talks are deadlocked.

That doubles the chances of delay.

Hovering over Geneva like a black cloud, meanwhile, are U.S.-Soviet disputes over Poland, Afghanistan and the Middle East. While special priority is being given to arms control, these other conflicts are bound to be distracting.

"Soviet aggression and support for violence around the world have eroded the confidence needed for arms negotiations," Reagan told the United Nations special session on disarmament June 17.

The history of arms control negotiations also suggests it will be a long, drawn-out process. It took eight years, and three U.S. administrations, to complete the 1979 SALT II treaty that imposed ceilings on American and Soviet long-range bombers and intercontinental ballistic missiles.

EVEN SO, former Lt. Gen. Edward Rowny and his delegation, carefully selected for their experience in arms talks and their knowledge of the Russian language, are guardedly optimistic.

Reading between the lines, they have concluded the Kremlin wants to come to terms, although with no sense of urgency. Brezhnev has not rejected Reagan's proposal for a two-phase treaty to reach equal and much lower levels of strategic nuclear warheads.

Rowny, who was there, says Brezhnev has come to regret dismissing out of hand President Carter's proposal in 1977 for deep reductions. Reagan's unprecedent military buildup of about $1.5 trillion over five years is supposed to make the Soviets sit up and take notice.

The U.S. goal — and Reagan has made no bones about it — is to neutralize the 3-to-1 edge the Soviets are said to have in heavy, land-based missiles.

In the meantime, the United States would go ahead with its own land-based MX and submarine-based Trident II missiles and new B1 and radar-proof Stealth bombers.

While Reagan has offered to put all U.S. weapons on the table eventually, the Soviets claim there's a scheme to protect the considerable American lead in long-range cruise missiles, strategic bombers and submarine-launched ballistic missiles.

"IT IS NOT all that tricky a trick," Gromyko told the U.N. session June 15 in a tough speech charging that the Reagan administration is embued with "a spirit of militarism."

Reagan's proposal calls for numerical equality. In the first phase, the United States and the Soviet Union would reduce their strategic nuclear warheads by roughly one-third to equal levels of 5,000 each.

No more than half of these could be on land-based missiles, and each side would be allowed 850 land-based or submarine-based missiles.

In a second phase, there would be further reductions along the entire spectrum of strategic nuclear weapons — again, downward to equal levels.

The Soviets say there is rough equivalence now, and that the treaty must assure equal security.

That, says Rowny, is a contradiction in terms. He has accused the Kremlin of taking an "Alice in Wonderland" stance.

BUT HE also thinks the Soviets want a treaty, and that they will be pushed along by Reagan's record defense program.

There are other pressures at work as well.

Brezhnev, nearing the end of his career, may want to cap it with an agreement reversing the arms race and boosting Soviet prestige in a world worried about nuclear weapons.

Reagan, despite a hard-line image, has stepped up his advocacy of arms control. "The primary problem today is reducing the store of nuclear arms that threaten the peace of mind, certainly of all the people of the world, and do pose a threat to all of us physically," he said last month.

Rowny, for one, does not doubt the president's sincerity.

"This president understands the situation quite well," he said. "If some people want to doubt him, that's their privilege, but I have not the slightest doubt that this president is in favor of arms control."

Heat wave strikes Italy

ROME (AP) — A scorching wind from Africa sent temperatures throughout Italy soaring for a fourth day Saturday. The heat wave has been blamed for the deaths of 13 people and thousands of domestic animals, widespread forest fires and hundreds of hospital admissions.

The deaths occurred Friday and Saturday in Sicily and Sardinia, where temperatures went as high as 113 degrees Fahrenheit, the highest readings in 26 years. The unofficial toll was compiled by The Associated Press.

The Italian deaths involved mainly elderly people who succumbed to heat prostration, but two farmers were killed fighting a forest fire near Palermo, Sicily.

More than 500,000 chickens in Sicily and 240,000 on the island of Sardinia perished in the heat, officials said.

Volunteers were called out to help firemen and soldiers battle hundreds of blazes across Sicily and southern Italy.

Is it unAmerican to spend the 4th in a hotel suite?

Not in ours, it isn't.

Because when you check in on our 4th of July Weekend Special, we give each person in your party a free American flag.

That makes it legal.

But the suite you get makes it sheer genius. American-style. It's big and spacious, with separate bedroom, separate living room, dining area, bar and complete kitchen.

You also get some things you won't find under one roof anywhere else in Northwest Texas.

- A full American breakfast—cooked to order for each person in your party. Absolutely free. Every morning.
- A two-hour open bar party—for all registered adults. Also completely free. Every afternoon.
- A nice, invigorating whirlpool—to loll round in.
- A big, beautiful pool—when you get tired of lolling around the whirlpool.
- A sauna—coed, family-style.

If you get tired of all this rest and relaxation, you can always drive over and "flag" the fireworks. But if you do, just remember: you've got a nice cool suite waiting to come "home" to.

Kremlin voices anxieties about Poland situation

By MARC ROSENWASSER

MOSCOW (AP) — The Kremlin is voicing new anxieties about developments in Poland.

For months after last December's martial-law decree, Moscow presented the view that the situation in the neighboring Warsaw Pact nation was "normalizing." As the official soviet press told it, workers were rallying around the Polish Communist regime, the nation's economic difficulties were fading and the threat of counter-revolution had been suppressed.

In recent weeks, however, Moscow has let down its guard and acknowledged that critical problems persist:

— President Leonid I. Brezhnev and Gustav Husak, the leader of Czechoslovakia, publicly referred to the ongoing "crisis" in Poland in a statement issued after their meeting here June 2.

— The government-controlled media have conceded recently that the Polish economy has not recovered.

— THE KREMLIN has worriedly noted the riots earlier this month in the Polish cities of Gdansk, Wroclaw and Nowa Huta.

— Soviet newspapers are once again focusing public attention on Poland after having been virtually silent during the spring.

One theory is that Moscow's sudden burst of candor is designed to support the argument that the time is not right for a visit to Poland in late August by Pope John Paul II.

The first public Soviet comment on the subject, a report June 18 by Tass, the official news agency, said the visit "will be difficult to realize in the near future."

That report was followed by an article five days later in the weekly newspaper Literary Gazette of Moscow that said the pope's trip would be possible only "if normalization throughout the country were achieved."

The Literary Gazette article included an unusually blunt attack on the Roman Catholic Church of Poland, saying priests there were responsible for the recent unrest by delivering sermons attacking the Communist authorities.

SOVIET OFFICIALS privately acknowledge the profound impact that the pope could have on Poland's future, and express fears that his visit could arouse new opposition and resistance to the martial law regime. On the other hand, a decision by the Kremlin to block the trip could have the very same affect.

The dilemma typifies the difficult decisions that the Kremlin still faces regarding Poland.

Left to be decided by Moscow and the men it supports in Warsaw are what to do with still-imprisoned members of the suspended independent trade union Solidarity; what role, if any, Solidarity can play in the future, and what reforms will stimulate the economy.

AP Analysis

It is the question of the languishing Polish economy that is perhaps most disturbing here.

A Soviet official, speaking privately recently, said he thought political instability in Poland would be overcome by economic growth.

"The Polish people are tired of the all the crises caused by Solidarity," he claimed. "The political problem has been decided with the jailings. Above everything else, it is necessary to revive the economy."

MOSCOW'S PUBLICLY stated position is that the Soviet bloc will not abandon an ally in distress and will make whatever sacrifices are necessary to help Poland out of its mess.

However, Western experts cite preliminary figures indicating that trade between Poland and the Soviet Union during the first quarter of 1982 was far below the amount set in protocols signed by the two countries. They also say articles published in the East-bloc press suggest that Poland's economy cannot be rebuilt without Western assistance.

The problem for Poland — and the Soviet Union, too — is that such assistance from the West will not be made available unless Polish leader Wojciech Jaruzelski relaxes martial law.

"They just don't have a whole lot of good choices," one Western diplomat said. "The economic problems become political problems and vice versa. I think that the economic problem is uppermost in their minds but they're worried about the political costs."

What the Soviet Union decides may prove decisive for Poland and, at the same time, give Western experts a preview of things to come from the Kremlin.

Western experts believe that many of the most important decisions regarding Poland will be made by Yuri Andropov, the former KGB security police chief. Andropov is believed to have assumed the late Mikhail A. Suslov's post as chief ideologist and is regarded as a leading contender to succeed Brezhnev.

Lebanese invasion provokes domestic divisions in Israel

By MARCUS ELIASON

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The invasion of Lebanon has dispelled the image of the Israeli David fighting the Arab Goliath and provoked domestic divisions that may be a long time healing.

About 4,000 Israelis demonstrated against the invasion in Tel Aviv's main square Saturday, waving placards reading "Out Of Lebanon," "More Conquest Means Less Security," and "No More War, No More Bloodshed."

A few arguments broke out with bystanders who support the war but there was no violence. Meanwhile, the military command announced two more Israeli soldiers killed in Lebanon, bringing the official toll to 260 in three weeks.

Day after day, Israel Radio's newscaster reads the latest battle deaths in somber tones: "Private Ram Mizrahi, to be buried at Mount Herzl Cemetery at 4 p.m. Thursday...."

Families sit transfixed by their TV screens, hoping to spot a son, father or husband among Israeli soldiers in Lebanon.

The busy streets of Tel Aviv are half-deserted, many shops closed by the mobilization of thousands of reserve troops. Dinner-table debate peters out into unanswered questions: Will Israel invade Beirut? Will Syria opt for all-out war? How long will America go on supporting Israel? What will the Soviets do?

The death and destruction brought to Lebanon and civilians there by the invasion has further darkened the Israeli mood. Many feel guilty, while others feel the foreign media have ignored the efforts the army claims it made to avoid civilian casualties while fighting a war in heavily populated towns.

"I envy those who have no doubts or reservations," wrote Rabbi Menachem Hacohen in the daily Yedioth Ahronoth. "I envy those whose hearts are not sore, who suffer no remorse, no pangs of conscience."

When the latest cease-fire took hold Friday night, the invasion was 18 days old — just three days shorter than the 1973 war, Israel's most traumatic conflict. The death toll acknowledged by the government so far is a terrible price for a closely knit society in which everyone seems to know everyone else.

This is a war that has raised high hopes and deep dreads.

Israel's defense minister, Ariel Sharon, holds out the promise of a peaceful Lebanon, rid of Palestinian guerrillas and Syrian forces. Prime Minister Menachem Begin believes it has cured Israel of its 1973 trauma — when Egypt inflicted heavy losses on Israeli forces.

U.S. doctors make uncensored appearance on Soviet TV

MOSCOW (AP) — In an unusual, uncensored appearance on Soviet television Saturday, a trio of American physicians discussed nuclear war and said civil defense programs are "insane" and invite nuclear attack.

The physicians' appearance represented the first occasion in many years in which Americans were allowed to present their views on a sensitive topic to Soviet television viewers without editing by a Soviet censor.

By prior agreement, the doctors steered clear of strictly political issues, an agreement which did not prevent American cardiologist Bernard Lown from offering his criticism of civil defense.

"Civil defense systems demand huge financial expenditures," he said, predicting that in a nuclear attack, fallout shelters "would turn into crematoria."

"The evacuation of a population is insane because it is based on the premise that we would know beforehand where the bombs will fall," he said, noting that evacuation plans cannot take into account such factors as weather and wind direction.

Soviet panelist Yevgeny Chazov nodded in agreement. "As far we are concerned, nuclear war would mean the death of mankind," said Chazov, who is a member of the policy-making Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party and is reportedly President Leonid I. Brezhnev's personal physician.

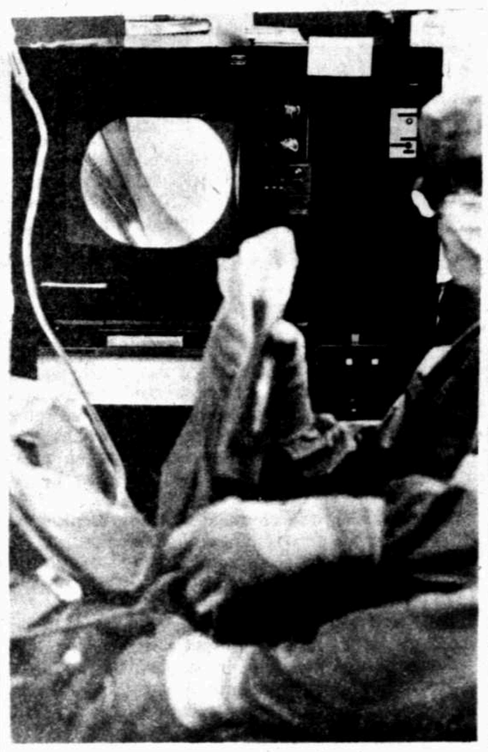
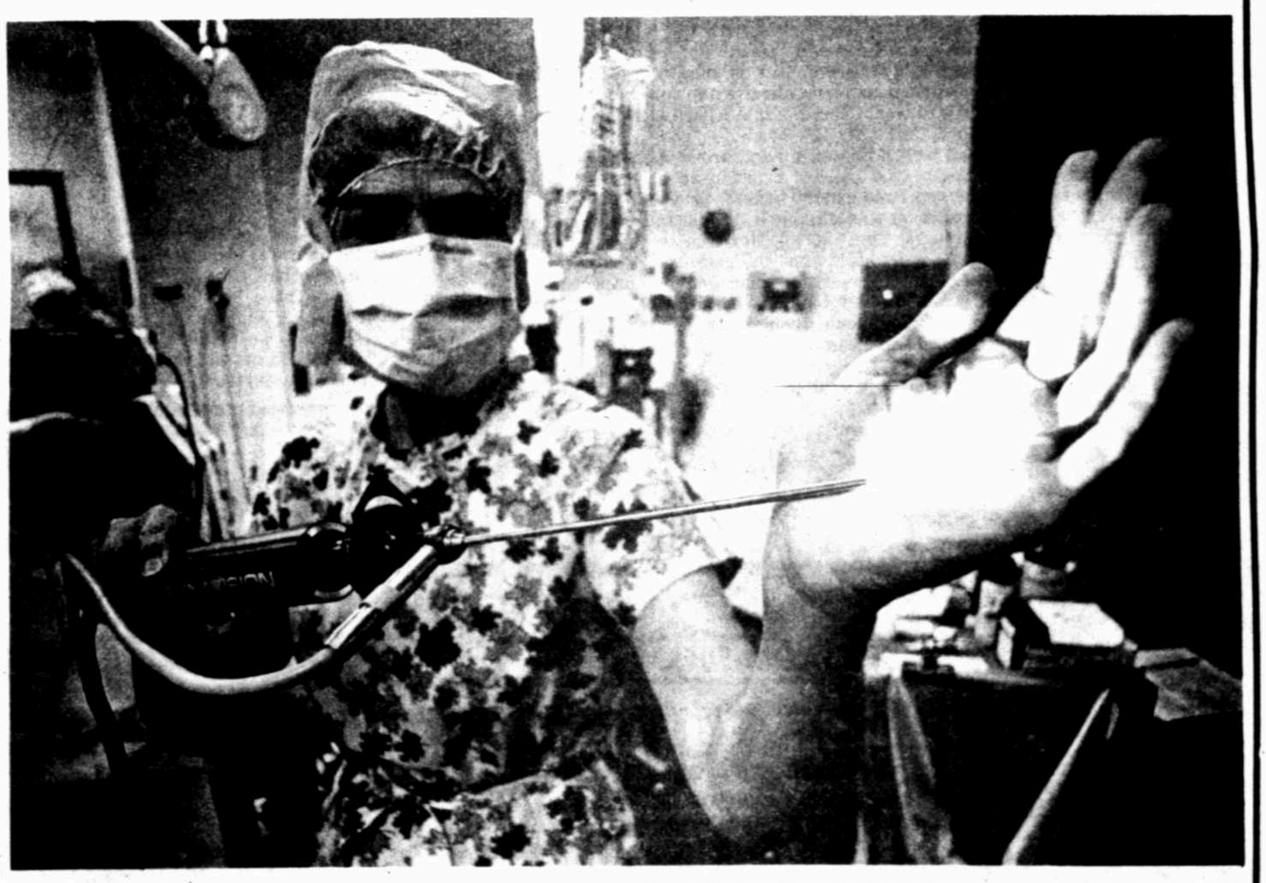
The Midland Reporter-Telegram
SUNDAY, JUNE 27, 1982



After Dr. Thurston Dean, right, drapes the camera attached to the arthroscope with a sterile covering, it is inserted in the patient's knee and an image is recorded on a television monitor. Dean then inserts slender surgical instruments through another incision to correct the damaged cartilage.

The arthroscope is inserted into a small incision made in the knee. The surgeon can use the small telescope to diagnose, document and treat specific knee ailments.

Knee-deep in surgery



Nurse Lauretta Adams holds an arthroscope, a small telescope, which is attached to a video camera and then inserted into the joint. The powerful light source tavels along a fiberoptic medium which allows the surgeron to view the interior of the knee.

Text by Gail Burke;

On first glance around Dr. Thurston Dean's waiting room, it seems to resemble any other Midland physician's office. But after entering an adjacent room, the difference is quite clear.

What patients have dubbed as the "J.C. Torture Chamber," refers to Janis Chapman, a physical therapist, who is in charge of the sophisticated physical therapy facility at Dean's office.

It's all part of a physical therapy program after an operation, known as arthroscopic surgery, is performed.

"Arthroscopy is used primarily for cartilage problems," Dean said, adding that torn ligaments can't be treated with this procedure.

The mini-surgery procedure can produce maximum results for the athlete and others who have injured their knee cartilage.

Cartilage in the knees acts as a shock absorber between the thigh and leg bones. A healthy knee is one in which the bones glide smoothly on the cartilages while the ligaments, tendons and muscles keep the entire joint well-aligned, strong and stable.

But, if the knee is locking, stiff, painful or tends to swell, it should be checked by a doctor.

The philosophy behind the surgery, Dean said, is not to remove the entire cartilage, but to smoothe it out, leaving cartilage so the knee can function.

Arthroscopic surgery, which Dean has been doing since 1974, has been used to diagnose, document and treat specific knee ailments.

It requires an anesthetic and leaves only small scars, but the real benefit comes in the time and money involved.

Although the physician's fee for the operation may be more expensive than conventional knee surgery, the time involved can cut the hospital cost.

A patient can be operated on at 7:30 a.m., discharged at 4 p.m. and begin therapy by 10 p.m. the same day. This makes the hospital cost less than a stay with the traditional knee surgery, which would involve making a three- to six-inch incision, preventing the patient from leaving the hospital and returning to work the next day as he can with arthroscopic surgery.

In addition, Dean said an athlete can be on the court, in the pool or out on the field within three weeks after the operation.

The surgery involves using slender instruments inserted into the joint through three to four one-fourth inch incisions. A small telescope, called an arthroscope, is inserted into the joint through the incision. Arthroscopy means looking into the joint. The telescope is equipped with a powerful light source traveling along a fiberoptic medium.

Dean views the inside of the joint either directly through the arthroscope or a lightweight television camera that is attached to the instrument, which shows an enlarged image of the inside of the joint on a nearby television monitor. While Dean's eyes are glued to the monitor, his hands move quickly and steadily through the operation.

After examining the inside of the knee, Dean can insert the surgical instruments in another incision, using a scissor-like instrument to trim and a slender shaver-like instrument to smooth out the cartilage.

The cartilage that is scraped off is sucked out through a tube and collected for tests by a pathologist.

The operation takes teamwork and a lot of expensive, sophisticated equipment. Dean owns all the equipment for this procedure in the Midland Memorial Hospital operating room. Sandy Ross, Curtis Green and Lauretta Adams assist Dean in the procedure.

It takes about 30 minutes for the actual surgical procedure, but from beginning to end the operation takes about an hour.

And the next day, the patient is ready for the "J.C Torture Chamber."

Teamwork is necessary in arthroscopic surgery. The team inclues an anesthetist, charge nurse, surgeon, an operation technician and two registered nurses.

Agent headed for Green-er pastures

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Charlie Green, who is as common to Midland County agriculture as bolls are to a cotton crop, will bring a drought to West Texas agriculture come Aug. 31.

He's bowing out.

Green, the county's agricultural extension agent since 1949, will be retiring from his multi-faceted job in about two months. In doing so, he'll be laying aside 33 years of public-service work. To many, his absence may seem sort of like the beginning of a drought.

"I'm going to start a second career," Green, 55, said in reviewing plans. "I hope it will slow down my pace, hope to do a little hunting and fishing, and travel some."

Green, who's too young, too vibrant, too experienced, too knowledgeable and too personable just to count time on the clock of life, will be going into the private sector as a horticulture consultant. He'll be doing research and supervising test plots for seed crops for a fledgling, international company. "It fits in with my background," he said.

Green concedes that he'll miss working with farmers and ranchers, with urban folks in solving their landscaping and horticulture-related problems, with youngsters in 4-H programs, and with others in community-development type work. It's challenging and satisfying, albeit exhausting, work.

Green's line of work is bent toward the pragmatic in agricultural education. But now he's looking forward to at least some leisure hours, though he does take time to work in his "piddle-plot" vegetable garden and pecan stand south of town.

"I don't see how I can be (as busy). That's the reason I want to retire: to slow down my pace."

Green joined the Texas A&M University System's Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) at age 22 in 1949 and began his 33-year tenure as the Midland County agent on July 15, 1949.

"Any time of the year, we're busy with one or more of the audiences" served by the extension service, he said in referring to youth in 4-H programs, farmers and ranchers, community-development interests, and urban people trying to put in or improve lawns, trees and gardens.

Green suggested that his work as county agent pre-empted his family life.

"Betty (his wife since 1951) raised the kids," he said. "And if they turned out right, the credit goes to her."

They did. Rick, the oldest at 30, is a viticulturist. Becky is a dental hygienist. Rance is an electrician. And the youngest, Karen, 18, is college-bound. "She (Karen) was our top crop," Green said. "We thought the family was complete, and she was a little surprise."

GREEN'S GROOMING for agricultural work started in Coleman County, where his father farmed. He did a stint at John Tarleton Agricultural College (Tarleton State University) in Stephenville in the 1940s before the U.S. Navy drafted him and put him into World War II. Afterward, he enrolled at Texas A&M, picked up his degree, traded in his old 1938 Chevrolet for a 1949 Studebaker, and set out for Odessa.

"And that (Studebaker) took all of my capital, except about $50." In his first several nights in the West, Green would spend alternative nights in a $3-to $4-a-day motel room and his car to cut down on his expenses until he got his first paycheck. "It wasn't as mean then," he said of the times he slept in the car. "I'd be afraid to do that now."

The Studebaker was economical.

"That little bugger," Green reflected. "I got 27 miles to the gallon out of that sucker."

He worked for awhile in Odessa, where the county agent, Buddy White, who served Ector, Crane and Andrew counties, "ran the wheels off of his car" in traveling from county to county to county. Green's initial assignment was "to help that old boy. He was really spread thin." But the day Green stepped in, White stepped out, and Green's duties turned to chores: trying to head off the golden-rod weed problem in Crane County, setting up a 4-H Round-up trip, and getting to know the people, and groping for answers to their problems. "And I was scared to death."

The scare there quickly faded and was replaced with the Midland fight. That came when TAEX District Agent George W. "Stud" Barnes, "a great big, old typical West Texas rancher," called Green and sent him over to Midland. Green reasoned that he, a greenhorn to agricultural extension work, would assist a seasoned county agent who would succeed the departing agent, James Martin. He was mistaken.

"I said, 'OK, Mr. Barnes,' " and picked himself up and drove over to Midland, Green said. "I was young, innocent and naive. I came in about the greenest county agent there ever was," he said, "and had the name to prove it."

He made a favorable impression on the Midlanders; some folks petitioned the Midland County Commissioners' Court to appoint him to the solo job. Barnes recommended him and the court hired him. The parents of C. DeWayne Davis, then Midland Chamber of Commerce's assistant manager and now a county commissioner, put Green up in a room in their old dairy barn until he could find a place of his own. The room had a linoleum floor, bunk, a wash basin and running water. "It wasn't primitive; it was clean."

IN RETROSPECT, Green figured he was ill-prepared for the job, but he plugged away.

"I said, 'Oh, my God, I can't do that,' but I can't turn down that kind of a raise."

So, he went to work.

"Everytime the phone rang, it scared the socks off of me, because I knew I wouldn't know the answer. I had a stock answer: 'I don't know, but I'll sure find out the answer for you."

"I've left a lot of tracks around this county, and you would hope that they'll remember you for awhile. There's not many farms and ranches in this county that I haven't been on."

— Charlie Green

His industry paid off.

"But I learned it myself and slugged it out, dug it out. It's a tough training course," Green said of his groundwork here. "But it's real effective."

Two years after Green's Midland County assignment took root, he found himself dragged into the beginning of a seven-year drought.

"That put a lot of farmers out in the oil patch," he reflected. "The Spraberry (oil) boom saved them."

Since '49, the number of farmers in the county has dropped from about 225 to 150, and the number of ranchers had been cut from about 75 to 50. But, noted Green, that fits in with the national trend: the fading of the small family farm and the cropping up of larger farms, which are economic necessities.

Today, Green is fearful that inflation and the depressed crop prices may do in the 1980s what the drought did in the 1950s.

"It's going to wipe a bunch of them out anyway, it looks like."

GREEN HAS FARED WELL in programs relating to cotton, pecans, alfalfa, livestock, landscaping, horticulture, "making-the-best-better" 4-H work and other areas associated with agriculture in Midland County.

But some experimental crops foundered here. He cited a few:

—Sunflowers. "The market went to pot."

—Guar. The production here was victim of a "limited market...You've got to have a contract agreement."

—Soybeans. "We couldn't compete."

—Sugar beets. "The sugar beet business fell on hard times."

—Vegetables. "Our yields weren't competitive enough" to satisfy Campbell's Soup Co.'s demands. Besides, Green noted, "vegetables are labor intensive," and in that regard, agriculture can't compete effectively with the oil industry.

The upshot was this: "This is just dryland cotton country," Green said.

In recent years and months, farmers and ranchers have been beset by lopsided price increases. As a prime example, Green noted that the per-barrel price of oil went up from, say, $5 or less to $30 or more in less than 10 years.

"But agriculture is still getting the equivalent of $5 a barrel. Cotton isn't bringing a cent more (today) than it was in '72," Green said. But in that 10-year period, the farmers' cost for diesel fuel has increased from 14 cents a gallon to about a $1 a gallon.

AS GREEN tidies up his office and sets his normally-cluttered work area into shape for his yet-unnamed successor, he reflects over his boyhood and youth, his early days in extension work, the seven agriculture-oriented assistant agents who have aided him since 1956, and lets out a bit of country philosophy.

"I've left a lot of tracks around this county," Green said, "and you would hope that they'll remember you for awhile. There's not many farms and ranches in this county that I haven't been on."

But one occurred to him: It's a place wherein the ruling lady has a tendency to pull a firearm whenever someone shows up on her place uninvited. "I never made it a point to go down there, and she never did send for me," Green mused.

The legacy he treasures came from his father, a stock farmer. "He was one of the old guys who had gone through the Depression, and was scared to go into debt. He could have been a large landowner down there, but, bless his soul...

"He left a legacy to be proud of: Work hard, pay your debts, be truthful in all things," Green said as a son who honors his parents.

"You can't put a price on that."

Proper program of watering can save lawn — and money

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Exension Agent — Agriculture

Joe Henggler, new area extension irrigation specialist for District 6, will be guest speaker at the June meeting of the Midland Pecan Growers Association to be held at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the County Extension Office, 218 W. Illinois St. (Courthouse Annex).

Henggler will discuss the principles of irrigating pecan trees for optimum performance in West Texas.

The meeting is open to the public.

DON'T JUST TURN ON your lawn sprinkler when hot, dry weather arrives and gripe about your high water bill. By watering, fertilizing and mowing your lawn properly, you can reduce your water bill as much as 40 percent during the summer months.

Conservation by the homeowner provides the only solution to high water bills and excessive water demands during our hot and usually dry Texas summers, points out Dr. Richard Duble, turfgrass specialist with Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

In small cities where industrial demand for water is low, lawn watering may account for as much as half of all the water used during summer months. Even in larger cities, lawns get 30 to 40 percent of all the water supplied by municipalities.

Lawns need about 2 inches of water per week during the summer and most of this usually comes from irrigation, especially in West Texas. Exactly what can a homeowner do to reduce his summer water bill?

The first thing is to water your lawn only when the grass starts to show signs of drought stress. Look for discoloration and wilting. If leaves roll up in the late afternoon and foot prints remain after walking across the lawn, then water within 24 hours.

Once you've decided that your lawn needs watering, do it right. Most homeowners don't water their lawns properly. They either water too often, causing grass to develop shallow roots and making it a prime target for insects and temperature extremes, or they water too infrequently and apply too much water at one time, resulting in a lot of runoff.

When watering, soak the soil (if sandy) to a depth of 12 inches.

Cutting back on lawn fertilization can also reduce watering. Applying fertilizer in the spring and fall will generally keep your lawn healthy. In sandy soils it may be necessary to split, apply the nitrogen in 2 to 3 small applications but cease to apply topdressing of nitrogen materials by the last of June.

Mowing less often and cutting your grass at taller heights will also help keep your lawn in better shape during hot, dry weather. St. Augustine grass does well when mowed at a 3-inch height and Bermuda grass can be cut at 2 and one-half inches.

TRAINING YOUNG BUDDED PECAN trees into a central leader tree has always been a difficult task. Over the last three growing seasons we have learned a new technique which can make this training easier.

Select one shoot from the top of one year, two year and three year old trees in May or June. Young rapid growing budded pecan trees tend to initiate two, three or more shoots at the top of the tree in May and June. Only the strongest and most rapid growing of these should be allowed to develop. Simply cut out the other new shoots in the top of the tree.

Side shoots which are commonly called the trashy trunk should not be removed during the first four years after planting. These shoots manufacture food which is utilized in the development of a root system. When these side shoots are cut off too early in the life of the tree, root development is reduced and total tree growth is reduced. The side shoots on the lower five foot of trunk should not be cut off until they are about one inch in diameter. They may be slowed down by tip pruning in January and February or pinch pruning the growing tip in the summer.

New history of 4-H Club available

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new official history of 4-H is now available to the public, according to the Agriculture Department.

Copies of the history — "4-H: An American Idea 1900-1980" — were distributed Thursday to senior Agriculture Department officials and selected members of Congress.

Eugene Williams of the department's Extension Service said presentations to state governors also were planned nationwide.

Sheriff to address panel

Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith will give the Midland County commissioners an update report on his proposed stockade and how the Texas Commission on Jail Standards responded to his proposal at the 9 a.m. Monday meeting of the Commissioners' Court on the second floor of the Midland County Courthouse.

Smith and the commissioners also are to discuss bids on fencing materials for the military-type stockade, which would contain minimum-security prisoners.

The stockade would be a temporary facility to house county prisoners until a new jail can be built to replace the steel-and-concrete jail on the fifth floor of the courthouse.

In other business, the commissioners are to:

—Consider Ken Peeler's proposals for a different site for the proposed stockade. Peeler is contending that the current proposed site — a 7½-acre plot in southeast Midland — would have an adverse effect on land values and on commercial and industrial development in the area.

—Hear architect Walter Pate's report on the proposed new courthouse annex.

—Consider accepting the certification of Culver Youth Home, Midland County Juvenile Probation Department in the Midland County Courthouse Annex, and the Midland County Jail as juvenile detention facilities.

—Discuss personnel and job classifications with Jerrie Westmoreland, county personnel director.

—Consider Barbara Ellis's proposal for Parkhill, Smith & Cooper Inc.'s proposed contract for administrative and management of the 1982-83 federal Community Development Block Grant program. Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, engineers, architects and planners, last year supervised the first phrase of the $1.6-million federal program to upgrade the so-called window pane area in south central Midland.

—Set salary for Elections Administrator Janeice Builta.

—Hear a report by Albert Stewart, road and bridge superintendent.

—Conduct a public hearing at 4:30 p.m. on use of federal revenue-sharing funds for 1983.

Highway commissioner to address Lions

Sam Waldrop of Abilene, a member of the Texas Highways and Public Transportation Commission, will be the speaker Wednesday noon at the meeting of the Downtown Lions Club in Midland Center.

The Midland Chamber of Commerce is joining the Lions Club in hosting the luncheon. Invited to hear the speaker are city, county and chamber officials from Midland and neighboring cities.

The special meeting here is one of a series of Area Awareness sessions arranged by the Texas Good Roads/Transportation Association, calling attention to the condition, needs and problems of the state highway system. Similar meetings are being held at various points throughout the state.

Oliver Thomas of Lubbock, first vice chairman of TGR/TA, will introduce the speaker. Bill Collyns of Midland is the association's regional director.

Waldrop, in his address, is expected to review the overall program of the state highway system, and to outline the problems faced in building and maintaining Texas highways now and in the future.

Jerry Speck, president of the Lions Club, said the public is invited to the luncheon. Reservations should be made by noon Monday at the Chamber of Commerce.

Veterans group to meet

Midland's chapter of the Brotherhood of Vietnam Veterans Inc., will hold a meeting at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the community room of the Commercial Bank & Trust Co.

Topics to be discussed will be issues of interest to Vietnam veterans and their families, according to a spokesperson for the group.

Stanton officials announce plans to enforce city vermin ordinance

STANTON — Stanton city officials have announced that a 1964 city ordinance prohibiting any operation which encourages the breeding or harboring of rats, flies or other vermin and insects will be strictly enforced.

The announcement came on the heels of numerous complaints to the police department of fly infestation.

Specifically designated as unlawful to keep within city limits are hog pens, cow lots, horse lots, chicken yards, goat and sheep pens and any other livestock holding pens.

Domino tournament planned

BIG SPRING — The fifth annual National "Texas-Style" Partnership Domino Tournament will be held at Dorothy Garrett Coliseum in Big Spring July 29-31.

Entries are being accepted by Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce.

Teams who pay $100 to enter will play an estimated 20 hours against other teams in order to reach the semi-finals.

The tournament, unique in the nation, is expected to attract more than 100 persons from several states.

In "Texas-Style Dominoes," players draw seven dominoes and use only the first double played as a spinner.

Persons interested in entering the tournament should contact Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce, P.O. Box 1391, Big Spring, Texas 79702. Entries must be received by noon, July 28.

17 arrested in Andrews County

ANDREWS — The Task Force initiated by Andrews County Sheriff Wayne Farmer and Police Chief Doug Gaines to wipe out street crime has been in action again, with 17 persons arrested June 18 to add to the 24 picked up on June 12.

Officials hope to "clean up the city" and restore a measure of security for residents, according to Farmer.

The most recent raid resulted in seven arrests for liquor violations, four for possession of marijuana, and one each for resisting arrest, attempted burglary of a habitation, interfering with an arrest, traffic offense and unlawful carrying of a weapon. An illegal alien also was held for the U.S. Border Patrol.

Many MC students would prefer dorms open to all students

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

On a hot, windy day, just before afternoon classes were to begin at Midland College, thoughts of the near weekend seemed to loom larger than any relating to the plans for building of on-campus housing for MC athletes, announced Tuesday during a special meeting of the MC board of trustees.

Indeed, of the few students strolling around campus on their lunch break, or escaping the heat of the mid-day sun in the Student Center, many did not seem concerned; nor, they said, were their peers.

A few students approached were completely surprised about the possible construction of the 40-occupant, on-campus housing facility that may be built for MC athletes by Midland businessmen Bill Williams and John H. Hendrix. Others said they wouldn't even have known about it except

"If they made housing available for everyone, there would be more students coming to the school..."
— Karen Zalesny

that they heard it through the news media.

"There isn't too much talk about it," Ken Barrow, a junior at Louisiana State University home in Midland for the summer, said. "We talked about it a little in physics class today, but more about the financial aspects of it. I don't think there is much negative sentiment going around."

Yet, a few students were a little more emphatic about their opinions.

"If they are going to build it, they ought to build it for everyone, and not certain people," said Trudy Vaughn, a May graduate of Midland High School who is taking a few courses at MC this summer. "I don't think it's fair just to have a place for the athletes. Anyone who is on a scholarship should have it."

"There isn't too much talk about it. I don't think there is much negative sentiment going around."
— Ken Barrow

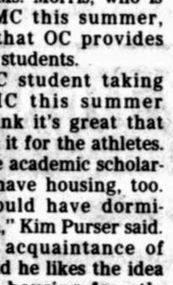
Although Ms. Vaughn is not sure where she will attend school next year, she said Midland College is a possibility. Even if Midland College had housing for students, she said she would still live at home in order to keep expenses down.

"But if I were from out-of-town and couldn't find a place to live, I'd turn around and go home," she said.

"I think it would be a good idea to have it for everyone," Nelda Morris, a sophomore at Odessa College, said. Ms. Morris, who is enrolled at MC this summer, pointed out that OC provides housing for all students.

Another OC student taking classes at MC this summer agreed. "I think it's great that they are doing it for the athletes. But I think the academic scholarships should have housing, too. Everyone should have dormitories to live in," Kim Purser said.

An athlete acquaintance of Julie Eoff's said he likes the idea of on-campus housing for athletes, Ms. Eoff said. His girlfriend, who is on an academic scholarship, is upset.



"This is a community college and it's growing fine...I don't want to see it turn into a junior college."
— Bob Zimmerman

"She thought she was just as important to the college as he was," Ms. Eoff, a senior at Klondike High School, said.

Ellison Portis, of Midland and a recent graduate of OC, agreed that housing should be made available for all students. "I don't think athletes should have any special privileges," he said.

Portis is a college athlete. The ex-trackster from Odessa plans to continue at West Texas State University in the fall.

"I think they should build dormitories to promote more people to come to this college," Karen Zalesny, a sophomore who lives with her parents in Midland, agreed. "If they made housing available for everyone, there would be more students coming to the school which would be better for Midland College."

"If they are going to build it, they ought to build it for everyone, and not certain people."
— Trudy Vaughn

Bob Zimmerman disagreed. "I think it is a terrible idea," Zimmerman, who also lives with his parents, said. "This is a community college and it's growing fine, just from the community and the area, at an amazing rate. I don't want to see it turn into a junior college."

"But I think if they're going to house the athletes, they better house everyone," said a student at Ms. Zalesny's and Zimmerman's table in the Student Center. The student, who asked not to be identified, added, "If they're going to give us the grades, they ought to give us the housing."

Another unidentified companion of the trio interrupted, "I just don't like jocks. I have to make grades to stay in school.

"I wish I was the contractor, though," he added, grinning. "I'd build extremely short buildings."

Booth disappearance still a mystery

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

It was an odd case from the very beginning. A young woman with no apparent enemies goes dancing at a local nightspot on a cold, snowy Saturday night. The next thing anyone knows, she's gone — "simply evaporated," as one person put it.

Her shoes and coat are discovered at the table where she'd been sitting with a girlfriend, and her car is found abandoned just outside the city limits two days later. It's got 256 more miles on it than when she went out that night.

Stranger still are the deaths of seven people whose names surfaced during an exhaustive, frustratingly futile investigation into the Feb. 2, 1980, disappearance of 19-year-old Kristy Lynne Booth, a 1979 graduate of Lee High School.

"In my 22 years of law enforcement I have never encountered a case where all the leads have fizzled out and so many young people whose names came to my attention have died tragically," said Ed Ward, a former city detective who is now employed by a local job placement service. "It's a weird feeling."

Ward won't say it, but it's almost as though the spirit of Kristy Booth won't rest until the truth is known.

Her picture hangs on the wall above Ward's desk, just as it did when he was poring over the case while still on the police force. He had never met Kristy Booth, but he feels he knows her just the same.

She had skipped work as a part-time cocktail waitress for one club to go partying at another one. The young man to whom she lent her 1975 Pacer that night told police when he returned to the club, she was gone.

He said he then drove around until the car stalled and he left it parked along the Rankin Highway about three miles south of town. Repair work done the day she disappeared allowed police to determine how many miles the car had been driven.

Friend after friend and suspect after suspect generated more questions than answers. No tangible evidence could link anyone to her disappearance. Hypnosis and psychics were even pressed into service. Still nothing.

As late as May 1981, her parents flew to California on a tip she had been seen there. It turned out to be just one more false lead in a case fraught with false leads and dashed hopes.

"It's like she just disappeared into thin air," her 46-year-old mother said Friday. "No one remembers seeing her leave."

Kristy was a very trusting person who braggingly talked about knowing several local drug dealers, and Myra Booth remembers warning her daughter the week before she disappeared that she shouldn't put so much faith in people. "But she was convinced she could take care of herself," said Mrs. Booth.

Another odd feature of the case is that Kristy didn't receive a single phone call from the Saturday night she vanished to the following Thursday — the day her disappearance became known publicly.

Strangely enough, though, the Booths still receive occasional phone calls — some of them from people asking for Kristy, despite all the publicity in the case. Her parents can't tell if the callers are serious or sick.

"I think there are people who know what happened," said her father, retired Marine Corp Master Sergeant Tom Booth. "But they're scared to talk. The hard part is not knowing. You lie there at night and think of 20 different things that could have happened."

Kristy Booth

Both parents now believe their daughter is dead. They would like to see her receive a Christian burial. "People ask how we've been able to cope," said Mr. Booth. "It's our Christian upbringing and our faith in the Lord."

Ed Ward thinks she's dead too. But he hasn't given up on finding her. Just this past week he was checking another lead in the case. It's a slim lead, but straws are about all that remain.

MC's summer enrollment increases

By Thursday, Midland College has pre-registered 245 students, compared with 155 at the same time period last year. Pre-registration for the second summer session continues through July 6, with registration slated for July 7. Classes will begin July 8 and conclude on Aug. 12.

Persons who plan to take courses during the second summer term should come to the Office of Student Services in the Administration Building between 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday. Midland College will be closed on July 5 in observance of Independence Day.

During the second summer session, Midland College offers a wide schedule of academic courses, plus a limited number of vocational programs. Information about specific classes which will be taught may be obtained by calling 684-7851, extension 166.

The trend toward higher enrollment count continues from the first summer session, which enrolled 1,132 students compared with 1,042 last year. Midland College had 613 students in its 1981 second summer session.

During an informal, one-on-one tour of Rankin Museum, curator Gerry Cogdell displays an item in the historic dress collection. Situated in the landmark Yates Hotel, the museum depicts decades of Upton County history.

Museum keeps Rankin in touch with its times

RANKIN — When Ira Yates swapped his Rankin mercantile store for a tract of land just southeast of modern-day Iraan in 1916, everyone thought he had committed as great a folly as had Seward when he initiated the purchase of Alaska from Russia in 1867.

They don't laugh at Seward anymore; neither do they at Yates. For the "worthless" ranch with which he got stuck yielded black gold — a $15 million gusher that brought a stampede of persons to West Texas in an oil boom that has yet to subside.

With the money Yates dedicated himself to building the finest, most modern hotel between Fort Worth and El Paso, and by the July 4, 1927, that dream was reality: the Yates Hotel towered three stories above the nearby railroad tracks in this small town cradled between the mesas and buttes of West Texas.

The hotel long since has fallen victim to the ravages of time and severance of railroad passenger service to Rankin, but in another sense remains more alive than ever through its link with a past era. Closed in 1964 and inherited by the city, the building was put up for sale. However, the facility failed to attract a buyer, and in 1968 permission was granted the Archaeological Society to use it as a museum.

BUT PLANS failed to materialize, and the well-known structure which had been designated a Texas Historic Landmark in 1964 was left to crumble gradually before the encroachment of the Grim Reaper.

But all that changed in 1973 when Rankin Museum Association was incorporated and Upton County Commissioners appropriated funds to renovate the ground floor for use as a museum, and soon persons such as Ann Clark were working hard to make the institution a reality.

"Ann has been one of the leading lights," said museum curator Mrs. Lee (Gerry) Cogdell. "This museum is due to her and to Maggie Taylor, deceased, and to all the people that donated these things."

The idea of preserving the lore of the Rankin area through collection of historic items struck a note of pride throughout the community, and the project soon reached fruition. On May 5, 1974, the Yates Hotel again opened its doors to the railroad tracks and towering tablelands, this time as a museum filled with memorabilia that hints of a simpler era.

"EVERYTHING HAS been donated — we haven't spent any money for acquisitions at all," said Mrs. Cogdell. "It was a community project and people were very generous...I think it gives the residents a feeling of accomplishment."

The museum is representative of a growing breed of such facilities in Texas: a small, locally-owned establishment whose aim is to preserve county history. The Bicentennial of the nation in 1976 spurred many Texas counties and historical groups into initiating such projects, as well contracting the writing and publication of county chronicles.

Presently occupying three chambers of the old hotel, the Rankin facility is a wealth of local history, ranging the full gamut from rare photographs of early-day Rankin to items from the ghost town of Upland a few miles north, extensive files of clippings and records of personal interviews with "old timers", authentic wicker furniture from the original hotel facilities, a 50-pound meteorite, and even an itemized grocery receipt with 1942 prices, all to give persons of this and future generations a feel for what life must have been like in long-ago Upton County.

"Though we don't have a very long history, we feel it is important to hold it for those who come after us," noted the curator.

PRESERVATION OF the hotel itself is important to the museum society, and in 1980 a new roof was completed, while future plans include the repair of upstairs windows, the remodeling of the ground floor and the rearrangement of items to depict the area's history chronologically.

The presence of a multi-storied structure bearing the monicker of "museum" rising in the barrens of West Texas often intrigues passersby on U.S. Highway 67, as the registry contains the names of persons from throughout the state and beyond.

"We'll get folks in here who'll say, 'my uncle and grandfather grew up here' and they'll find so much of interest in what it was like then," said Mrs. Cogdell, who conducts tours of the museum for visitors in an informal manner such as is only possible in "Small Town, West Texas." Here, formality is shunned, while hospitality reigns, and she greets persons at the door with a smile and conversation during the "open hours", 2-5 p.m. Thursdays and Fridays and 1-5 p.m. Saturdays.

And, it is not infrequent that as she asks them to sign the registry, she nods to the items from the days of yore and explains that "we're going to try to get outside collections in and start acting a little more 'uptown'."

But it seems likely the front porch atmosphere afforded by the lore-rich walls of the Yates Hotel will continue to make a visit to Rankin Museum a "laid-back" occasion.

Could you tell me how many acres there are in the Big Bend and Guadalupe Mountains National Parks? — J.L.

ANSWER: The Big Bend National Park, which was authorized in 1935, has 708,118.40 acres. The Guadalupe Mountains National Park, which has Guadalupe Peak, the highest point in Texas at 8,751 feet, contains 76,293.06 acres. It was authorized as a national park in 1966.

Can you find out how many countries have The Bomb and the capability of "delivering" it? Also, how big is the biggest bomb and how large an area would it destroy?

Also, what are the nuclear targets in Texas and have there been any statistical scenarios done as to when the conflagration will occur? — O.R.

ANSWER: B. F. Halloran with the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency in Washington, D.C., provides the following answers to your queries.

To the first question, six countries are known to have set off nuclear explosions: The United States, U.S.S.R., Great Britain, France, People's Republic of China and India.

As to the second question on how large is the largest bomb and the area it would destroy, the Soviet Union is thought to have once had a test blast of 50-60 megatons yield. However, the largest warheads that have been in regular production on either side are about 20 megatons. (A sheet describing the effects of a 20 megaton nuclear blast at various ranges and other various areas was provided).

The area destroyed cannot be stated because it depends on the definition of "destroyed" that is used. Most nuclear warheads are one-megaton or less.

Finally, there have been no scenarios done as to when such a conflagration would occur. It is assumed, Halloran states, that the priority for nuclear targets would be: 1. military bases; 2. key industries; and 3. financial centers.

I have just learned I have a heart ailment. Does this mean the life insurance policy I took out three years ago can be canceled? — N.G.

ANSWER: No, if you stated all the facts truthfully on your application, your policy cannot be canceled for any condition which developed or was discovered after the policy was issued, says The American Council of Life Insurance.

Even if you made a mistake in filling out your application, most policies become incontestable and cannot be cancelled after they have been in force for two years.

I would like to know the federal government's hotline numbers to obtain information on cancer, consumer product safety, federal taxes, auto safety and flood insurance. Can you help? — L.A.

ANSWER: These toll-free numbers can be dialed by the public to obtain "live" information: Cancer, 1-800-638-6694; Consumer Product Safety, 1-800-638-2666; Federal Taxes, 1-800-555-1212; Auto Safety, 1-800-424-9393 (for information on auto safety safety problems, recalls and complaints about specific makes and models); Flood Insurance, 1- 800-424-8872 (for information on federally subsidized flood insurance in hazardous areas.

Miss Finley received the Elizabeth Morris-Student Affiliate first place trophy and a cash award for her performance of "Tell Me, Oh Blue, Blue Sky!" by Giannini and "Deh Viehi, non Tardar" from "Le Nozze di Figaro" by Mozart. Miss Finley is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Finley of Midland.

Midland woman wins first in voice competition

Melanie Finley of Midland was the first place winner in the Student Affiliate High School Performance Vocal Contest of the Texas Music Teachers Convention held recently in Austin.

The convention had over 2,600 registered participants. All events were held in the performing arts complex at The University of Texas.

Miss Finley, a 1982 graduate of Lee High School, has studied piano with her mother, Mrs. James Finley, for 12 years and is a voice student of Mrs. Horace Griffin. She has won a number of piano competitions, attained top tal-

Yucca Theatre provides Midland with cabaret

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Newcomers to West Texas who ate at Beef Delight or walked past 210 N. Colorado St. on their way to somewhere else had no idea that boarded up behind the restaurant was an old theater or that the restaurant itself had once been a theater lobby.

Oldtimers knew.

Returning transplanted West Texans assumed as they walked down Colorado Street that the theater had gone the way of other landmarks. Although the exterior remained, they imagined the interior had been gutted.

It hadn't.

Silent except for the occasional scurrying sound of four-footed creatures, the deserted Yucca Theatre waited in a manner reminiscent of the toys in Eugene Field's poem, "Little Boy Blue":

"The little toy dog is covered with dust, but sturdy and stanch he stands;
And the little toy soldier is red with rust, and the musket molds in his hands.
Time was when the little toy dog was new, and the soldier was passing fair;
And that was the time when our little boy blue kissed them and put them there.
'Now don't you go till I come,' he said. 'And don't you make any noise'...
Oh! The years are many, the years are long, but the little toy friends are true."

After serving West Texas since 1929 as a vaudeville house and a multi-purpose theater, the Yucca lights went out in 1974. Night and day passed as the same inside the Yucca until Midland Community Theatre's search for a new Summer Mummers home brought the curtain up once again.

The Yucca's design makes it a perfect house for the annual melodrama, as well as for numerous entertainment activities, especially those which call for a cabaret format.

When the Yucca is fully operational, "it will give the town a cabaret theater which opens a whole area of entertainment we don't have here," said Jim Salners, president of MCT's board of governors.

The Yucca Theatre is available for rent for private parties as well as concert engagements. It can provide appropriate housing for presentations ranging from classical performances to rock 'n' roll shows, in addition to offering a perfect setting for a jazz ensemble or a comedy act such as Gallagher's, Salners said.

The Yucca is "not in competition with" any other facility in town "because it's not the same type of space," Salners said.

As an example, Salners talked about the Yucca and Midland Center.

"I think they can complement each other," he said. When Midland Center is being used for conventions, "the lectures can be held here (Yucca), while the exhibitions are across at Midland Center."

The Yucca operates as a service arm of MCT, Salners said.

"All the money they (audiences) spend there will be used here in the city to enhance the city. Every dollar we generate that has a MCT tag on it is spent that year," Salners said. The money goes toward improving MCT's programming, onstage and backstage.

There was a drawback to acquiring the Yucca: one which was viewed by some as a challenge. After so many years of misuse and nonuse, it required major repairs.

Work on restoring the Yucca began in the spring of 1981.

"The improvement from the old building to this building was about 100 percent," Salners said. "To replace the Yucca Theatre would cost $5 to $6 million easy in today's market, but through the generosity of Midland Southwest Corporation, we've gotton a very workable lease arrangement (for 75 years) which allows us to have this facility at a fraction of that cost."

Smiling Salners added, "We got the Yucca as is." The tab last year for modernizing its interior ran $375,000, he said.

This money was spent on, among other things, rewiring the building, installing utilities, pouring concrete for stair-step flooring downtairs as well as purchasing all new seating. Work also was begun on improving the sound and lighting systems.

This year "to finish it off and make it workable we will spend in the neighborhood of $200,000 which will cover the sound equipment, the light equipment, renovation of the theater, cleaning it up and repainting," Salners said. "We want to maintain the atmosphere that has been the Yucca for over 50 years."

Although the sound will be better this year at the Mummers when it opens Friday, the entire sound system will not be fully installed until the end of the summer.

The new system includes "sound absorption material in certain places to enhance the quality of the sound the audience hears." Pausing, Salners said laughing, "We can't do anything about the sound they (the audience) make, but we can reinforce and clarify the sound the actors make onstage." To help accomplish this, speakers with a delay mechanism will be installed underneath the balcony.

Last year the balcony was not open. This year it will be. Initially this will increase the seating capacity from 400 to 500. Eventually, when the entire facility is open, the seating capacity will run closer to 600.

Those who have attended the Mummers know that along with the onstage show is an offstage show. It centers around audience members taking popcorn pot shots at one another. This had become a tradition at the Mummers, which offers its audience the opportunity to return to childhood while enjoying a melodrama and olio. Most evenings it's hard to decide who has more fun, the audience or the cast.

An exception to this tradition will be the balcony. Its seating is designed especially for those who want to come and view the show in a less relaxed atmosphere. The standing rule will be no popcorn throwing in the balcony. As Salners said, "If they (in the balcony) throw one thing, we throw one thing — them out the door."

The exterior of the Yucca also will undergo certain modifications when it becomes an intregal part of a future downtown complex.

The development, aptly named Renaissance West, will combine old and new into an under-the-same-roof city block complex, with the old including the Yucca and The Petroleum Building, and the new including a 31-story office building, a 350-room luxury hotel and a parking garage. All will be joined together by an atrium, which wraps around the Yucca. The look and feel of the complex's interior is reminiscent of the Anatole Hotel in Dallas.

The plans show a sidewalk cafe and bar between the parking garage and the hotel lobby with a door from the north side of the Yucca lobby into the hotel lobby and a door from the south side of the Yucca lobby into the atrium.

This means "opening up the (Yucca's) lobby area and opening up the roof (balcony) area in front," said Art Donnelly, who has been instrumental in putting Renaissance West together. "This will enhance the value of the theater" making it "the center of a major downtown development which is really unique to the area."

It is fitting that a theater which provided so many West Texans through years past with the opportunity to see road shows, attend war bond drives (World War II), and to view the latest movie releases, will no longer be shut off, nor forgotten, but will once again play a key role in providing entertainment for West Texans.

In 'Blade Runner,' future dismal

"Blade Runner," starring Harrison Ford, is not another "Star Wars" or "Raiders of the Lost Ark." Oh, it does have a few of those ingredients that make for sci-fi fantasy — bizarre people, futuristic sets and an unholy menace. But "Blade Runner" is not a lighthearted struggle of good over evil; it is a pessimistic view from a survivor.

That survivor is Rick Deckard (Harrison Ford), a bounty hunter. Living in Los Angeles in 2021, Deckard is a product of the times. He kills anarchistic androids — machines that have turned against their intended purpose as mankind's servants. But his conscience begins to gnaw away at him when he falls in love with one of the "Replicants" he is slated to terminate.

Just what the message is, is not clear. "Blade Runner" is based very loosely on a novel of that name by science fiction writer Philip K. Dick (the novel is subtifled "Do Androids Dream Of Electric Sheep"). The novel has a more concise explanation for how things are on Earth after World War Terminus. But "Blade Runner," the film, never answers such questions as: why are the skies black; why is there always a thick haze, even indoors; why do the people look like mushrooms and wear protective gear, and more.

Hampton Fancher and David Peoples who wrote the screenplay would have been better off had they kept closer to the original story. As it is, "Blade Runner" comes down to a shootout and a guy gets girl — even if she is heavy metal.

In setting the tone of doom and gloom, production designer Lawrence Paull has given us a world of murk. Dark cavernous hallways and rooms are punctuated only by the shafts of light from flying neon signs and the color of punk hairdos.

His is an effective creation and strangely beautiful in its rawness.

The music is eerie and haunting as well. Composed, arranged and produced by Vangelis ("Chariots of Fire"), one might expect a heavily synthesized sound. Here his style of music is right at home; working from minor chords, he echoes the dissonance of the society.

Ford as Deckard plays the hired killer as a simple man, not given to self-examination or recrimination. So his angst is believable when he confronts the 21st century problem of the right to life — human or otherwise.

As a caricature of comic-tragic proportions, Rutger Hauer ("Soldier of Orange") gives a moving performance. He is the leader of the androids and when his time for termination comes, Hauer sits in the rain, his head drooped like a puppet clown with loose strings.

"Blade Runner," rated R, underscores the possibilities of the future but takes a distant view. It is a cold, cruel world where people take what love they can get — what little is left. Spoken Hemingway-style, "Blade Runner" is mostly action and reaction, which is something Harrison Ford has down to a fine art. Regrettably, the direction by Ridley Scott as well as the screenplay, fail to back up Ford. "Blade Runner" is a curious and unsatisfying film.

Recipe for chili: Make sure you act silly

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Chili-cookin' wagons were circled early Saturday, ringing a dusty, rut-filled lot behind the High Chaparral western-wear store on Front Street in anticipation of the Second Annual High Chaparral Chili Cook-off and Jamboree.

At the far end of the gathering, beyond the rigs flying flags from both sides of the Civil War, Sarge Thompson hunkered over his chili-cooking equipment — the "Terlingua Cooker" — while wife Dorothy and Cora May Hill simmered beef and onions in a nearby motor home.

Thompson, 54, whose nickname dates to his stint as "sergeant of the latrine" when he was the youngest member of his Boy Scout troop, has been traveling from Monahans to chili cook-offs since a maiden trip to Terlingua, home of the granddaddy of them all, in 1968.

"We just went down there sight-seeing," he recalled, "and we've been sight-seeing for 14 years."

THE THOMPSONS have been "serious" chili-cookers for about six years, he estimated, as he puttered with a portable chili-cooking stove tucked inside a black, barrel-like wind-break. A pressure gauge hovering at 1200 psi adorns the front, an ornament which occasionally fools passers-by into thinking Thompson's chili pot is about to explode.

Showmanship is at least half — most would argue more — of chili cook-off festivities. Showmanship entails "whoever can get the silliest," according to Ronnie Maddox, contest organizer and participant.

Ingredients such as customized trailers, elaborate cooking stoves, costumes, T-shirts, hats, flags, pins and buttons are as important as good meat, chili powder and cold beer.

Sarge adds excitement by occasionally "letting off some steam," squeezing the handle of a fire extinguisher mounted to the side of his cooker, sending a cloud of spray and an occasional passerby leaping into the air.

Mrs. Thompson was tight-lipped about her chili-making secrets, which she learned from her grandmother, a full-blooded Cherokee Indian.

"THERE'S A LOT of fun foolin' with it," Sarge said, as he picked out memories from a table full of trophies adjacent to the stove.

The Second Annual Green Acres Goat Cook-Off in 1981 at Fort McKavett for example, was an especially successful outing for the Thompsons. Sarge captured first place in the armadillo race with what he described as a "Hertz rent-an-armadillo" and some well-placed tobacco spitting. Dorothy grabbed top honors in the wet T-shirt contest.

Chili cook-offs also raise money for charity. Proceeds from the High Chaparral event, generated by donations and money paid for chili samples, are donated to the Midland Policemen's Benefit Fund.

A few yards from the Thompsons, Don Totzke and Jeri Bradshaw, members of the Hillbilly Chili team of Odessa, disavowed any knowledge of a chili-making secret.

"Really, there's not much of a secret to it," Totzke said. "The big secret is having fun. That's why we're here."

He said since March his team has logged about 7,000 miles pursuing chili cook-offs from Arlington to Amarillo, Alpine to Waco.

"WE ALL HAVE understanding bosses," he explained. "Or we're unemployed," Jeri quickly interjected.

A few bubbling pots down the line, Bertie Sims, "Grandma" to most chili cookers, picked bits of gristle from her chili cauldron.

About four or five years ago, after losing her husband, "Grandma" Sims, 66, decided she wanted to be around young people and started traveling to chili cook-offs.

"You hang around with young people and you stay young," she said. "Go to an old folks home, you get old."

Now, "all the cooks say it just isn't a chili cook-off if Grandma isn't there," she said. "It's a swell bunch of people. I'll tell you, they'll just do anything for you."

"Grandma" Sims, from Seminole, takes her 84-year-old mother along on some of her chili-cooking escapades and was named "Chili Queen" at a recent cook-off.

"THEY DECIDED that there was too many young, pretty girls so they decided they'd let an old grandma be the Chili Queen," she said, laughing.

Mrs. Sims grows her own chili meat. She couldn't remember which bull — either Ferdinand, Double Trouble or a combination of the two — was simmering away in the pot before her.

She said when she returns from a cook-off, her grandchildren will typically ask: "Grandma, did you win anything?" Mrs. Sims, a smile beaming from under her cowboy hat brim, said her answer is usually: "No, but I had a hell of a good time."

Chili cook-off judging is an art in itself, requiring careful consideration of several attributes in each chili sample to determine the day's champion.

Aroma should be such that "a blindfolded person should know it's chili," according to an instruction sheet provided for the panel.

Chile should be of a reddish-brown hue, not too hot or greasy, and of "agreeable" thickness.

Judges are instructed to remain silent during their deliberations, unless they must warn the others of "undesirable objects" in a particular chili sample.

SHOWMANSHIP JUDGING took place around noon, although the antics involved in the showmanship category tend to have a cumulative effect during the course of the contest.

By 3 p.m., after both chili and contestants stewed and simmered through the hot afternoon, Head Judge Wayne Hill stepped to the microphone to beckon forward cooks and their creations. With some late arrivals, 20 teams were competing for prizes.

For more than half an hour, six judges perused the line of samples, sipping chili, smacking lips, swigging beer and scribbling notes. As Hill sat down to tally the votes, a crowd of contestants surrounded the judging area to witness the announcement of the day's chili champion — Hermit's Brew, a team from Odessa.

While the top three finishers earn the right to compete for the Texas Chili Society state championship September 19 in Odessa, each chili cooker seemed to wear a winner's smile as the awards were dispensed.

"GRANDMA" SIMS gushed over her fourth place prize in showmanship; second place went to the Thompsons. Lemon-roll and egg-toss honors went to Hillbilly Chili.

The Second Annual High Chaparral Chili Cook-Off and Jamboree served as evidence that good times still lie as near as the closest gathering of friendly people, ample refreshments and good chili.

As Willie Nelson's vocals floated through the hot, dry air, accompanied by an abbreviated version of "Battle Hymn of the Republic" from Sarge Thompson's musical horn, the lyrics of a Hillbilly Chili song lingered with visitors to this old-fashioned, Texas-style chili cook-off.

"There are two kinds of chili in the whole universe — Texas-style chili and those that are worse."

UTPB has minority scholarships available

ODESSA — Several scholarship awards are available to area minority students planning to attend The University of Texas of the Permian Basin this fall.

Joyce Thompson, director of financial aid and placement at UTPB, said three or four awards of $250-$300 each will be available to minority students this fall through the Nojem Libson Scholarship. Applications must be in before July 9.

"The Libson Scholarship is available to any minority male or female student with preference given to Ector High School and Odessa College graduates," she said.

Thompson noted applicants must meet UTPB admission requirements and show financial need.

Persons desiring applications or further information may contact the financial aid office at 367-2354.

King saves three match points against Harford

Rain causes Wimbledon to fall 150 matches behind schedule

By GEOFFREY MILLER
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Billie Jean King was still mistress of Wimbledon Saturday at 38 years old, saving three match points and battling back to beat an opponent 15 years her junior at the All-England Tennis Championships.

The six-time Wimbledon champion, the oldest woman player in the tournament, defeated Tanya Harford of South Africa 5-7, 7-6, 6-3 in an up-and-down match played in four stages between rain showers.

For the fifth time in six days, rain disrupted the tournament, which ended the first week some 150 matches behind schedule. Officials planned to make up lost time by starting early and using all 17 courts of the All-England Club through the second week. They still hope to finish with the men's final on July 4.

The third round of the women's singles was completed, but more than 40 men were still waiting to play their second-round matches.

VITAS GERULAITIS, the No.3 seed, slammed his way past Bruce Derlin of New Zealand 7-5, 6-2, 6-3. Johan Kriek of South Africa, seeded fifth, twice came from behind to overcome Peter Elter of West Germany 4-6, 6-3, 3-6, 6-0, 6-4.

Lloyd Bourne, a 23-year-old Californian, won a long match against Cassio Motta of Brazil 6-4, 6-4, 1-6, 5-7, 6-3 and qualified to play defending champion John McEnroe in the next round.

McEnroe and his main rival Jimmy Connors had already reached the third round.

It is 19 years since King was first frustrated by the rain on Wimbledon's Center Court. In 1963, when she reached the final for the first time as Billie Jean Moffitt, the tennis was washed out on the Saturday final and she lost to Margaret Smith (later Court) two days later.

This time the rain kept interrupting the match, and it may have cost her the first set.

Rain fell as she served to save the set at 5-6. She asked for the match to be stopped, but the umpire told her to play on.

King broke off play once to wipe her glasses, but she lost the game and the set.

AT 4-5 in the second set, King trailed love-40 on her service and was on the brink of being eliminated. But she fought back with some of the strokes that made her the Wimbledon champion in the '60s — volleys that often moved at an unexpected angle and had the South African going the wrong way.

The set went to a tiebreaker. King won it 7-2, and from then on she was in command. She broke service for a 5-3 lead with cunning short returns, and dropped only two points in five service games.

"I can't recall the previous time I have been so close to defeat and won," she said. "When I was down 4-5 and love-40, I told myself, 'You have been here 21 years, so use that experience and hang on.'"

Seeded players reaching the last 32 of the women's singles, along with King, were No.6 Wendy Turnbull of Australia, No.11 Bettina Bunge of the United States and No.15 Virginia Ruzici of Romania.

Turnbull beat Pat Medrado of Brazil 6-2, 6-4. Bunge was leading 6-3, 2-1 when her opponent, Marjorie Blackwood of Canada, pulled out with a pulled thigh muscle. Ruzici edged Sabina Simmonds of Italy 6-7, 7-6, 7-5 in a long close duel which attracted a big crowd around a court at the far end of the grounds.

HANK PFISTER ousted Stan Smith, the 1972 champion, 6-4, 7-6, 7-6. But Smith enjoyed his share of glory from the past. During the longest rain break, a film was shown on television of his five-set victory over Romania's Ilie Nastase in the 1972 final, and players eagerly watched it in the locker rooms.

"Just watch this volley on the next point," King told the women players as the final set was shown. She remembered it all.

Bermuda Triangle: Shortcut on Walden's No. 11.

Walden...don't let the name fool you

BY TED BATTLES

(One of a Series)

Walden is not what that noted handyman-gardner Thoreau had in mind when rhaposidized about a pond in Concord, Mass.

This Walden is known for its Z-style doglegs and tall trees, which give it an Augusta look, and its secret desire to be a blend of Sahara and Outer Banks, although its location is more like Louisiana Bayou.

There's nothing peaceful about this Walden, although it is thought-provoking.

Walden has enough sand to make a camel happy and a duffer pine for a good ol' West Texas golf course where sand isn't enough of a novelty to make a big thing, or deep trap, of it.

BUT WALDEN derives its greatest fame, or notoriety, from its Bermuda Triangle, where many a promising round has been shipwrecked.

The triangle begins with one of those par-five Z's at No. 11, a 599-yarder. The green juts out into the lake on a penisula and, of course, you can save many yards and a stroke by cutting across the water. It can be deceptive, particularly, to a West Texan. In fact, Golf Digest's Ross Goodner decided to cut across the lake with a four-wood. Splash.

We were a bit closer and it looked like a five-iron shot. The shot was good. Splash. A five-iron in East Texas is not the same caliber weapon it is in West Texas.

NO. 12 is a cupcake that plays from 123 yards to 155. You play from one pennisula to another, no room for mistake fore, aft or to the right. Splash again.

No. 12 is from one pennisula back to the mainland, over a bay. By this time we were feeling like a salvo of missed shots in Battleship, but this time made the crossing without mishap.

WALDEN is full tricks, like the 380-yard dogleg right No. 5, bordered by woods on both sides. A nice tee shot leaves a 125-yard shot or so to the green from the dogleg's crook. Only trouble, before the green, a large pond eats into the fairway from the left and trees overhang what's left from the right. Still if you can clear the trees, you plop right in the middle of the green.

Walden is the kind of course you'd like to play again after becoming acquainted with all of its idiosyncrasies, just so you can bring it to its knees.

Walden's No. 13...thankfully, no splash.

Cubs face Gold Sox today at 6

El Paso's Diablos home run muscle, three of 'em, and sparkling defensive play gave the first half champions a 16-7 win over the Midland Cubs in the final game of the Texas League series at Cubs Stadium Saturday night.

The 18-hit offense and rally-robbing glove work also enabled Jim Koontz to go the route for his fourth win despite 16 Midland hits.

However, the Cubs came out of the series with a 5-3 edge and, after those six straight losses in El Paso a week earlier, that had to make Manager Brian Murphy feel good about the second half race.

Now, while El Paso squares off against San Antonio, currently leading the second half race, Midland meets Amarillo in the first of a six-game series at 6 p.m. tonight in Cubs Stadium. It affords the Bruins a golden opportunity to make time at the expense of the two teams Midland must beat in the second half race, but to exploit the situation, the Cubs must do better against the Gold Sox than they did in the first half when the teams split, 8-8.

EL PASO jumped on Midland starter Tom Smith, 3-5, like a long lost buddy, or cousin, scoring five runs in the first inning. Bill Foley hitting a grand slam, the first of three Diablo homers Saturday night. Smith never got out of the inning.

The jackpot wallop was Foley's 13th of the year.

Carlos Gil, who was behind 5-0 in the first inning last Tuesday, must have felt right at home when he relieved and got the final out.

In fact, Mike Diaz' two-run homer, his 12th, in the second, made one wonder if history might repeat. The Cubs rallied to win 11-6 for Gil Tuesday and singles by Mike Kelley and Joe Carter and Carmelo Martinez' sacrifice fly actually reduced the El Paso lead to 5-3 in the third.

UNFORTUNATELY, the Diablos didn't take the hint, scoring twice in the fourth, then Randy Ready homered in the fifth and Dion James hit a two-run homer in the sixth. A pair of three-run innings in the eighth and ninth removed any lingering hope.

Leftfielder John Hansen not only went 5-for-5 at the plate for El Paso, but made seven putouts, bouncing off the wall for two. His defensive play along with Ready's at third and Mark Johnston's at second probably was the difference in the final analysis. They enabled Koontz to survive some potentially stormy innings.

KOONTZ, 4-7, was shelled for 16 hits and in addition to Diaz' homer, he was tagged for a roundtripper by Joe Carter in the fifth, Joe's ninth, with no one on base.

James batted in four runs to share rbi honors with Foley's slam. Dion's came on a sacrifice fly, his sixth homer and a single. Mark Schuster had a three-rbi night and Dan Davidsmeier had three singles as El Paso combed four Midland pitchers for 18 hits.

BRUIN BREWIN'S—Despite the Diablos' three homers Saturday, Midland won the series homer barrage, 15-13...The Cubs now trail the season's series, 8-12...Doug Welenc, 8-6, will probably get the call against the Gold Sox tonight...Diaz got the thumb from plate umpire Pam Postema in the sixth inning after a walk to the Diablos Steve Michael....Muser Fannies' (for El Paso Manager Tony Muser) showed up 36 strong to root for the Diablos and behaved more like a rowdy football crowd, clanging cowbells and cheering in unison...utterly camp, especially when you're getting beat 16-7...The Cubs won't be in town for July 4, but will hold their fireworks display after Friday's game and GM Bill Schammel announced Friday wound not be a two-for-one beer night...

Double eagle helps Gilder tie record

Kite birdies same hole, drops two

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — Just at the moment it seemed that his record-setting scoring binge had come to an end, Bob Gilder achieved golf's most rare accomplishment, a last-hole double-eagle that gave him a share of an all-time PGA Tour scoring record.

Gilder holed a 3-wood second shot from 251 yards out — achieving a score of "2" on a par-5 hole — Saturday on the 18th hole of the third round of $400,000 Manufacturers Hanover-Westchester Classic. It was the first double eagle of his career and the first of the year on the pro golf tour.

The spectacular shot, on the 509-yard final hole at the Westchester Country Club course in suburban New York, turned what appeared to be a relatively routine performance by Gilder into a thing of drama. It finished off a 5-under-par 65 and giving him (1) a whopping six-stroke lead going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize and (2) a share of the all-time Tour record for the lowest score on the first three rounds of a tournament.

He had earlier rounds of 64 and 63 and completed 54 holes in 18-under-par 192. That figure tied the record set by Mike Souchak in the 1955 Texas Open.

GILDER, WHO missed the all-time record for the first two rounds by a single stroke, now has a shot at the record for 72 holes, 257, also by Souchak in the same Texas Open. Gilder needs a final round of 65 to tie it.

The record book, however, was not the chief casualty of Gilder's shot from the fairway, a shot that ran from the front of the green, up a little slope and into the heart of the hole.

That unhappy distinction belonged to Tom Kite, who, undaunted by Gilder's earlier heroics, had grittily maintained pursuit of the leader and had him within range for a last-round challenge.

That disappeared, along with the Morales removed from disabled list; back in Chicago

CHICAGO (AP) — Outfielder Jerry Morales of the Chicago Cubs was removed from the disabled list Saturday and activated.

Morales, 34, injured his left knee in Houston May 13. He was placed on the disabled list and later sent to Midland, Texas, where he played under the major league rehabilitation clause.

Morales, who had a .200 average when he was injured, batted .400 at Midland in seven games.

The Cubs had been one player under the limit and didn't have to make any moves to make room for Morales.

TED BATTLES BATTLE SCENE

The first time i met the hard-of-hearing old gentlemen was at the Texas Sportswriters Hall of Fame dinner on the eve of the Notre Dame-Texas Cotton Bowl game in 1969, the year the Irish broke their post-season fast.

He was an effervescent sort who introduced himself as editor of the nation's oldest weekly, the Washington County News in upstate New York. Whoopee! The initial reaction was, "in a room filled with celebrities, I had to wind up next to..."

Still, since Harry Van Surdam had come all the way from Hoosick Falls, N.Y., in the heart of James Fenimore Cooper country, to see a game he could have seen better on TV, we couldn't help but wonder why, especially when he related that he left by bus in what turned out to be a 48-inch snowstorm, rode down the Hudson to catch a plane in New York City and arrived only that morning, still out of breath.

IT WAS A difficult conversation. Harry was hard of hearing and was sitting to my left, next to my stone ear. I had to twist in my seat to hear him. But the backache was well worth it.

When Jim Crowley strode to the podium to give his version of a Knute Rockne pep talk, the old guy was surprised, "Crowley...why we gave him a plaque six years ago when I was president of the Washington (D.C.) Touchdown Club."

Crowley, of course, once coached Fordham's Seven Blocks of Granites and was himself one of the Seven Mules for Notre Dame's legendary Four Horsemen.

That's when I asked myself, "Who is this guy, anyway?"

AS IT turned out, if Davey Crockett, Sam Houston and James Bowie had coached or played or officiated football or established educational institutions, Van Surdam, even though he now lived in New York, would be in the same Texas textbooks. It was soon evident this was a chunk of history who had wandered in out of the snow.

Van Surdam was superintendent of the El Paso Military School at Fort Bliss, content in what he was doing. "The Mexican Revolution in 1909 ruined my school," he related. "so I did some research on mining schools and then campaigned for two years, making speeches all over the state in advocating such a school for El Paso. It finally passed the legislature and, while the governor didn't sign the bill, he didn't veto it and Texas School of Mines came into existence."

Van Surdam became the third coach of the Miners in 1920. Of course, Texas Mines later became Texas Western and is now UTEP.

HE WAS ONE of those responsible for the Sun Bowl game and officiated the game in 1937, 1938 and 1940 and was still running up and down the field in a striped shirt into his 80s.

Van Surdam helped John Heisman found the Washington Touchdown Club and as a young reporter in Nashville, Tenn., used his considerable musical talents to put some of Grantland Rice's verses to music.

Gus Dorais and Knute Rockne are credited with popularizing the forward pass as an offensive weapon when they brought a small college team out of Indiana to upset mighty Army, 35-13, in 1913, but their use of the pass was no surprise to Van Surdam.

"I wasn't the first to throw a forward pass, but I was one of the first to use it as an offensive weapon rather than a desperation measure."

JUST IN case he was talking to a skeptic, he hauled out a yellowed clipping that recorded his 52-yard pass, in the air, for Marietta College against Ohio University to win a game in 1906. It was the longest pass thrown until 1920.

Van Surdam became a regular visitor to the Cotton Bowl after that and every year I'd look for him. One year he even included a trip to the Sun Bowl, where he was honored for his contributions to football. But his eyes were going and we missed him the last couple of years.

The other day we picked up a national publication and read that Henderson E. (Harry) Van Surdam had died. He was 100 years old.

Petty corrects bad situation

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock car king Richard Petty took steps Saturday to remedy what he felt was a bad situation, closing a deal that will put his 21-year-old son, Kyle, in another team's car.

The third generation of racing Pettys will drive the rest of this season's superspeedway races in a Buick Regal owned and prepared by Hoss Ellington.

That will mark the first time since the early days of stock car racing, when Kyle's grandfather, Lee Petty, occasionally took an outside ride, that a Petty will be driving outside the family fold.

It's World Cup time and these soccer playing rosters of Denise and Valerie Dean in Camarillo, Calif., took up the sport after watching family matches in the yard. The roosters kick the ball 12 feet, sometimes, but the matches usually wind up in feather-pulling brawls.

LA summons Mike from Albuquerque

BASEBALL— Mike Marshall, last year's player of the year in the minor leagues and the Pacific Coast League's MVP, has been called up from the Albuquerque Dukes by the Los Angeles Dodgers. Marshall, who switched from first to utfield this year, was hitting .389 with 14 homers, 62 RBI and 20 doubles. Last season he paced the Dukes to the PCL championship, winning the triple crown with a .373 average, 34 home runs and 137 runs batted in...

SOCCER—Fifty-six players received official cautions for their behavior in the first round of the World Cup soccer finals and three others were sent off the field because of their conduct, according to final statistics from the 36 matches. Referees issued yellow warning cards or red expulsion cards to players on 21 of the 24 participating teams. Only the Soviet Union, Brazil and New Zealand, all of them playing in Group 6, ended the first round without disciplinary measures...

FOOTBALL—The Dallas Cowboys will not try to stop broadcast of a right-wing TV commerical attacking U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas. Tex Schramm, the team's GM and president, said he viewed a video tape of the commerical Friday and is satisfied that the spot does not imply that the Cowboys are taking sides in Bentsen's race. The commercials, shot in Texas Stadium this month by the National Conservative Political Action Committee, feature models scantily dressed in cheerleader outfits similar to those Cowboy cheerleaders wear. "We have looked at a tape of the commercial and it has been edited in such a way that it would be impossible to infer the Cowboys were in any endorsing the message on the commercial."...

Weaver to retire after current season

Only finances can keep Earl in game

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

There is a sandlot baseball term called "do-over." The ball strikes a fire hydrant, rolls under a car and drops into a storm sewer. A half-hour search of the neighborhood yields another scuffed-up, semispherical object with which to continue By then, no one can agree on who was standing on which base, and 15 more minutes elapse during a heated argument.

"Do-over."

Earl Weaver, in his 15th and final season as manager of the Baltimore Orioles, wishes he could occasionally invoke the "do-over" rule.

"I just keep wondering. I say to myself, 'I wonder what would have happened if I'd made the other decision,'" says the 51-year-old manager.

"SOMETIMES I wish it was like contract bridge, so you could play the hand over, call everybody back out on the field and say, 'OK, fellas, let's try it again this way.' But the desire wouldn't be there. It wouldn't be the same the second time. I guess it wouldn't work."

In the major leagues, there are no storm sewers down which managerial mistakes can disappear.

"The only way to keep your job in this business is to be right more often than you're wrong," Weaver says.

In 13½ years as the Baltimore manager, prior to this season, Weaver was right 59.7 percent of the time, a winning mark that topped all active managers. His record was third best on the all-time list, trailing only Joe McCarthy (.614) and Frank Selee (.598).

He has gained a reputation as a statistical genius, whose penchant for numbers had yielded five 100-victory seasons, six American League East titles, four AL pennants and one World Series championship.

His trademarks are pugnacity, chain smoking and a dutiful loyalty to statistics, to which he refers for guidance in making decisions ranging from pinch hitters to retirement.

SOME HAVE doubted the sincerity of his decision to retire after the 1982 season, but it's there in the numbers.

"This is my 35th year in baseball, and anybody who spends that much time in one job is entitled to retire," he says. In 1968, Weaver became Orioles manager after 12 years as a minor-league pilot and a half year as Baltimore's third-base coach. In that year, he made the decision to manage until 1980.

"Inflation and financial considerations kept me on another two years," Weaver says. "I was afraid that the finances that I had set up for myself wouldn't keep me going as long as I wanted — through the rest of my life. I want enough money to play golf, go to Las Vegas, Hialeah, Gulfstream, Calder and the dog tracks at night — and to go out with my wife anytime I choose."

Although he admits financial considerations could force him out of retirement, Weaver has a genuine desire at least to try the easy life. A devoted family man, he gardens, makes his own pasta and bakes bread.

"I've always been smart enough never to say never," Weaver says of the possibility of returning to manage. "You never know what disaster could strike, and I'm being serious. It could be one of your children, or your house could burn down. I may need a job someday."

Weaver, who summers in Baltimore but owns a winter home in Hialeah, Fla., refuses to name his choice for successor. He says he does not want to put General Manager Hank Peters or any of the managerial candidates on the spot.

"I WOULD be slighting somebody if I started to name names," Weaver says. "That decision is up to Hank. I wish they would make a decision.

Garvey, Cey deserve credit for Dodgers' win over Astros

By The Associated Press

Steve Garvey and Ron Cey often have been blamed for the Los Angeles Dodgers' problems this season, but they would have to get a lot of credit for the Dodgers' victory Saturday.

Cey had a single and two doubles, and Garvey added a pair of singles in a 4-1 triumph over the Houston Astros.

"I think that you can trace back and find that when I'm hot, the team responds well and becomes hot also," Cey said. "When I do the job, it's a given, when I don't, it's a focal point."

"I picked up my swing and the team has picked up also," said Garvey. "The lack of production has been partially my fault, but it's not fair to point fingers at Ron and me in a team situation. We don't want to take credit for the wins or blame for the losses."

In addition to Cey and Garvey, pitchers Dave Stewart and Steve Howe also got some credit in beating their former teammate, Houston's Don Sutton. Stewart, 3-4, limited Houston to four hits in 52-3 innings, and Howe, who earned his sixth save, gave up only one hit the rest of the way.

The Dodgers jumped to a 1-0 lead off Sutton, 7-4, in the fourth when Garvey singled, stole second and came home on Cey's second double of the game.

Los Angeles upped the score to 3-0 in the sixth. Garvey and Cey singled with none out. Mike Scioscia advanced the runners with a sacrifice, and Bill Russell was intentionally walked to load the bases.

Stewart drove in Garvey when he forced Russell at second. After Steve Sax drew a base on balls to reload the bases, Ken Landreaux's single drove in Cey.

Houston got a run back in the bottom of the sixth when Terry Puhl walked and moved up on a wild pitch by Stewart, then scored when Jose Cruz singled, chasing Stewart.

The Dodgers scored their final run in the seventh. Rick Monday led off with a single and was replaced by pinch-runner Ron Roenicke, who was sacrificed to second. Roenicke stole third and came home on Scioscia's RBI single.

Cardinals 2-4, Cubs 1-1

Jim Kaat allowed four hits in six innings in his first start of the season to lead the first-place St. Louis Cardinals to a 2-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs and a doubleheader sweep Saturday.

Bruce Sutter got the save in both games, giving him 17 this season. He worked one inning of hitless relief for Dave LaPoint in the opener, and 11-3 innings of one-hit relief in the nightcap.

Keith Hernandez singled in the lead run in the opener and also singled and scored in the ninth inning for a 4-1 triumph.

Kaat, 43-year-old left-hander, upped his record to 2-1 and was nicked for a run in the first on singles by Ryne Sandberg and Keith Moreland. He didn't allow another run before departing for a pinch batter in the seventh.

The Cardinals tied it in the second inning on doubles by Ken Oberkfell and Gene Tenace and went ahead to stay on another run-scoring single by Hernandez in the third inning of the nightcap. Lee Smith, 1-3, took the loss.

Hernandez and George Hendrick led the attack in the opener, each getting two of the Cardinals' six hits off loser Doug Bird, 4-8.

Hendrick singled in the second, went to third on a single by Tom Herr and scored as Oberkfell grounded out.

The Cubs tied it in the bottom of the second on a single by Jay Johnstone and a run-scoring double by Larry Bowa, but Hernandez' run-scoring single with two outs in the third put the Cardinals ahead to stay.

Bird then retired the next 17 batters before Hernandez beat out an infield hit in the ninth and scored on a double by Hendrick. Hendrick advanced to third on an error by Bowa and scored as Mike Ramsey grounded out.

LaPoint went 4-1 with the opening-game victory.

Padres 7, Giants 6

Broderick Perkins looped a two-out single in the 15th inning to drive in Garry Templeton from third base with the winning run Saturday and give the San Diego Padres a 7-6 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

The Padres lost an opportunity earlier in the 15th when Luis Salazar led off with a triple. After an intentional walk to Templeton, Ruppert Jones grounded a 3-0 pitch to shortstop Johnnie LeMaster, who threw out Salazar by several steps at the plate.

Eric Show, 6-3, who came on the 14th, earned the victory.

The Giants had a chance in the 11th when Max Venable led off with a pinch single and was sacrificed to second but was thrown out at the plate by right fielder Joe Lefebvre on Chili Davis' one-out single.

The Giants completed a comeback from a 6-2 deficit by scoring the tying run in the eighth inning. Milt May led off with a single and Darrell Evans walked. Tom O'Malley's double play grounder sent May to third and LeMaster drove in his third run of the game with a single to make it 6-6.

Home runs by Steve Swisher, Perkins and Templeton helped San Diego build its 6-2 lead, but the Giants scored three times in the sixth to pull within a run. Jack Clark led off with a single, O'Malley belted a run-scoring double and LeMaster followed with a two-run homer, his second.

Swisher's first homer of the season triggered the Padres' two-run third. Alan Wiggins singled, stole second and third and scored on Gene Richards' single.

Perkins' first home run of the season made it 3-0 in the fourth, but the Giants scored twice in the bottom of the inning on Davis' single and a homer by Brenly.

Reds 2, Braves 1

Tom Seaver hurled a three-hitter over eight innings and an unusual two-error play that allowed Dan Driessen to score from first base gave the Cincinnati Reds a 2-1 victory over the Atlanta Braves Saturday night.

Seaver, 4-8, surrendered a run on two hits in the first inning and retired 12 batters in a row following a fourth-inning walk to Claudell Washington, who was thrown out attempting to steal. Biff Pocoroba singled in the eighth to break the string.

Seaver, who struck out four and walked one, faced the minimum number of batters after the first inning befor giving way to Tom Hume, who pitched the ninth for his 16th save.

With the score tied 1-1 in the sixth, Driessen led off with a single off loser Ken Dayley, 3-4, and stole second. When catcher Pocoroba's throw was low and skipped into center field, Driessen continued to third. He scored when center fielder Brett Butler's throw caromed off third baseman Bob Horner's glove into left-center field.

Atlanta took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Washington doubled with two out and scored on a single by Dale Murphy, who has a National League-leading 58 runs batted in.

Cincinnati tied it in the third on singles by Ron Oester and Dave Concepcion, a wild pitch and a sacrifice fly by Paul Householder.

Phillies 7-4, Mets 4-3

Mike Schmidt slammed a tie-breaking two-run homer in the eighth inning, powering the Philadelphia Phillies to a 7-4 victory over the New York Mets and a sweep of Saturday's twi-night doubleheader after Larry Christenson flirted with a perfect game for 6⅔ innings.

In the opener, rookie catcher Ozzie Virgil drove in the winning run with a fifth-inning single and Marty Bystrom scattered nine hits for his first complete game in more than a year as the Phillies won 4-3.

It was the Phillies' second doubleheader sweep over New York in as many nights and stretched their winning streak to six games. The Mets have dropped four in a row and seven of eight.

Schmidt's homer off loser Neil Allen, 2-4, was his first since June 14 — also the last time Allen pitched before he was sidelined by an intestinal virus — and only his seventh of the season. It came after Gary Matthews, who homered in each game, had opened the eighth with a walk.

Reliever Tug McGraw picked up his first victory of the year, having been activated earlier in the week after being on the disabled list since the start of the season. McGraw, who allowed a game-tying two-run single to George Foster in the top of the eighth, drove in the Phillies' final run with a grounder.

Christenson easily retired the first 20 Met batters in the nightcap, striking out 10 and allowing nothing close to to a hit. But with two out in the seventh, Foster doubled down the third-base line and Dave Kingman followed with a single to make it 4-1.

Christenson was relieved by McGraw with one out and the bases loaded in the eighth. Hubie Brooks and Wally Backman opened the inning with singles and a one-out wild pitch advanced the runners. McGraw came on after Christenson walked pinch hitter Mike Jorgensen.

Mookie Wilson's grounder scored Brooks and, after John Stearns walked, Foster's two-run single tied the score.

The Phillies took a 1-0 lead in the second inning on singbes by Bo Diaz, Luis Aguayo and Ivan DeJesus. In the third, Matthews tagged Mike Scott for his 11th home run. Philadelphia added two runs in the fifth on a run-scoring single by Greg Gross and a sacrifice fly by Matthews. Pete Rose had a bunt single in the fifth, extending his hitting streak to 20 games.

Pirates 14, Expos 5

Pittsburgh capitalized on a seventh-inning throwing error by Montreal shortstop Chris Speier to score two unearned runs and break a 4-4 tie and Willie Stargell capped an eight-run outburst the next inning with a two-run pinch double as the Pirates blasted the Montreal Expos 14-5 Saturday night.

A 19-hit attack helped the Pirates win their third game in a row and send the Expos to their fourth consecutive setback.

The unearned runs in the seventh came off starter Charlie Lea, 6-3. Enrique Romo, 4-1, the third of four Pittsburgh pitchers, was the winner.

With one out in the seventh, Bill Madlock reached first base on Speier's error and went to second on a single by Jason Thompson. Madlock scored when Dave Parker singled, with Thompson stopping at second. Lee Lacy singled to right, but Thompson was thrown out at the plate by Warren Cromartie. Tony Pena's infield hit drove in Parker.

Relief pitcher Rod Scurry opener the Pirates' eighth with an infield hit and took second when Omar Moreno was safe on a sacrifice attempt. Johnny Ray hit a comebacker to reliever Woody Fryman, but the pitcher threw the ball past third, allowing Scurry to score and putting runners at second and third.

Brunner posts ace

Ross Brunner scored a hole in one on the eighth hole at Midland Country Club this past week. Brunner used a five iron on the par three, 162-yard hole. Cal Glass, Glen Aaron and Terry Lester were in the foursome that witnessed the golfing rarity.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

Zurich-Burton win PBA Doubles Classic title

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Sam Zurich and Nelson Burton Jr. won two games to get to the title match, then defeated top-seeded Jim Winklepleck and Dave Husted Saturday to capture the $110,000 Professional Bowlers Association Doubles Classic.

Zurich, of Huntington, N.Y., tossed strikes on 13 of 19 tries in the alternating frame doubles format to lead the team. Zurich and Burton, of St. Louis, won the championship game, 227-200.

Scott's time equals third fastest mile

OSLO, Sweden (AP) — Steve Scott of the United States equalled the third fastest mile ever as he won the "Dream Mile" at the annual Bislett Games Saturday in a new American record time of 3 minutes, 48.53 seconds.

Portugese runner Carlos Lopez won a sizzling 10,000-meter race, beating Alberto Salazar of the U.S, the world record holder in the marathon. Lopez was clocked at 27:24.39, while Salazar shaved nearly 4½ seconds off his American mark in the 10,000 meters at 27:25.61.

Bolz sets American pole vault record

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Dave Bolz, a junior at Indiana University, established an American record in the pole vault Saturday, clearing 18-feet, 9½-inches at an international triangular track meet.

Bolz bettered the mark of 18-9¼ set jointly one week ago by Dan Ripley and Billy Olson in a meet at Nashville, Tenn.

U.S., Russia basketball post wins

MOSCOW (AP) — U.S. and Soviet squads won their opening games Saturday in a women's basketball tournament, the official Soviet news agency Tass said.

The Americans built a 49-31 halftime lead over a Czechoslovakian team and went on to a 68-60 victory.

The Soviet team beat a junior Soviet squad 105-61.

On Sunday, the Americans face the Soviet juniors and the Soviet senior team meets the Czechoslovakians, Tass said. The round robin competition closes Monday.

Hogan wins fifth straight crown

PALATINE, Ill. (AP) — Marty Hogan of San Diego won his fifth straight national pro racquetball title Saturday, defeating Dave Peck of El Paso, Texas, to collect the $25,000 top prize in the $70,000 D.P. Leach national championship tournament.

Peck came into the tournament as the top seed after downing Hogan three matches to one during the season. But Hogan dominated the final, winning 11-9, 6-11, 11-5, 11-4.

Peck was awarded $10,000 as prize money for second place.

Hogan has played in eight of the last title matches, and has won the last five in a row.

If you've always wanted to visit Canada, a summer or autumn trip would be an ideal time to enjoy our northern neighbor's splendid offerings, especially if you use a recreation vehicle to take advantage of Canada's senic highways and beautiful campgrounds.

In planning a Canadian vacation, remember that the country is very big — it covers nearly four million square miles — and there's more to see than you'll have time for in one vacation period. You'd be well advised to read up on Canada beforehand and decide where you would like to visit.

Most Americans head for the province of Ontario, which offers such fine attractions as Niagara Falls, Canadian Grand Prix auto racing, beaches and resort areas on the Great Lakes, along with the beautiful cities of Toronto and Ottawa.

TRAVELERS interested in exploring rugged backcountry will delight in northern Canada while those preferring a less challenging landscape will appreciate the more populated southern section.

If you own an RV, keep in mind that entering the country is not difficult even though customs regulations do exist. RVers can take what they usually take on a trip, including small pets as long as a certificate of their recent rabies vaccination is on hand. "Pocket Hints", a free booklet on customs regulations, is available from the Bureau of Customs, U.S. Dept. of Treasury, Washington D.C., 20229.

Two things you need to enter Canada are proof that you are a U.S. citizen or legal resident and your vehicle registration card. If you're renting an RV, you'll need the rental contract. Before leaving home, consult your insurance company about RV insurance needs while in Canada.

For information on camping facilities in Canadian National Parks, write Parks Canada Division, Public Information Bureau, Ottawa, Ont., Canada, KIA OH3.

Canada is one of the the most unique countries in the world. Most of Canada's natural scenery — lakes, rivers and forests — are still the same as they were thousands of years ago. For some of the world's finest fishing, Canada is the place. Rainbow trout, dolly varden, brook trout, grayling, northern pike, walleyes and smallmouth bass is there for the taking.

About three years ago, I wrote a column on several men from West Texas who had just returned from Canada's Great Slave Lake. They fished for three days and caught more than 300 walleyes, over 50 northern pike over 10 pounds and countless numbers of whitefish.

But the highlight was their fried fish shore lunches they experienced each day on the trip. Their Indian guides would prepare fresh caught walleye over a fire, along with some Indian-style hashbrowns and a few bites of fresh onions, lettuce and tomatoes. I heard more talk aobut the shore lunches than the fishing itself.

Helms Hall to get permanent home

By JACK STEVENSON
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES — Forty-six years after its birth in a bakery, one of the world's top sports libraries is getting a permanent home.

Helms Hall, which includes Jesse Owens' track shoes, Gene Tunney's heavyweight championship belt and Johnny Weissmuller's swim trunks among its memorobilia, will take over a house purchased by a Los Angeles bank and renovated into a sports fanatic's dream.

Bill Schroeder and the late Paul Helms started Helms Hall in 1936 in Helms' bakery, hoping to maintain a record of great sports achievements.

The bakery later closed and the library went to Citizens Savings and Loan Associtation. So did the bronzed shoes of sprinter Charles Paddock, decathlon champion Rafer Johnson, football star Tom Harmon and middle-distance runner Mal Whitfield, along with scores of uniforms and pieces athletic equipment.

"I wanted to keep the foundation alive," saidHSchroeder, speaking of the agency which annually honors the top athletes in North and South America, Europe, Asia and Africa.

Now the First Interstate Bank is furnishing a home in the city's West Adams section for the momentos of long-ago achievements, as well as video tapes of more recent triumphs.

The building also will house the foundation's awards program and general offices."

So the scrapbooks of former lightweight champion Battling Nelson, the javelin thrown by Stella Walsh, the shoes worn by Owens when he broke three world records on one afternoon, all will be on display.

Youngsters will be urged to visit the library, to see the sculptures of such Hall of Fame members as baseball's Joe DiMaggio and Roberto Clemento and pro football's Merlin Olsen, among others. They also can look at the leather football helmets worn in the 1920s, when grandpa played.

Peter V. Ueberroth, president of the Los Angeles 1984 Olympic Organizing Committee, owned the foundation before First Interstate, with its plan for expansion, took control.

"This was something I knew should be continued and I wanted to help," Ueberroth said. "I am happy about the new home."

Donald P. Crivellone, executive vice president of First Interstate, said the library complement's the bank Olympic sponsorship.

"Having an aesthetically pleasing and centrally located home for the foundation will further promote local community interest in sports," he said.

Once endangered Texas species

Resurgent alligators terrorize hunters

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — Duck hunting has not been the same for Robert La Fleur since that day in the Texas marshes when a 14-foot alligator tried to eat his boat.

"The boat hit something hard," La Fleur recalled. "Then there was an explosion in the water and this alligator jumped out. It looked like it had an 18-pound smoked ham in each jaw. I thought we were going to die."

The alligator terrorized La Fleur and Herman Trayhan, his hunting companion, and gnawed the boat for several minutes before sulking back into the water. Neither hunter was injured.

OTHER FRIGHTENING encounters have been reported in Gulf Coast marshes.

"The problem is that man is moving into the alligator's territory," said David Lobries, manager of J.D. Murphree Wildlife refuge in Jefferson County, where La Fleur and Trayhan met their 'gator. "Where he (alligator) used to live, a man may now be living in a shiny new brick home."

The resurgence of the alligator — on the endangered species list here since the 1950s — has led Texas wildlife authorities to seek removal of the reptile from the list and resume selective alligator harvesting.

The heaviest concentrations are along the upper Texas Gulf Coast, home to an estimated 90,000 or more alligators.

BUT THE reptiles are beginning to range into the more densely populated surrounding areas, including Houston, where alligators occasionally create havoc by wandering down residential streets. There also have been reports of alligators dining on pets.

The Texas Legislature has approved having the alligator removed from the proteected list, and the state wildlife department is considering a limited alligator hunt for 1983.

Federal approval is needed, however, before state officials can establish guidelines for an alligator hunting season.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologist David Bowman, of Albuquerque, N.M., anticipates approval as early as next month. But that would not give state authorities enough time to prepare for a hunt this year.

"I am very confident the state of Texas will be able to have a limited harvest in 1983," Bowman said.

THE ONLY full-fledged alligator season is in Louiaiana. There is a limited hunt in Florida.

Plans for the first Texas alligator hunt would call for 1,400 alligators to be harvested, Bowman said, with future hunts aimed at taking 4 per cent of the total alligator population annually.

In Louisiana, landowners are awarded permits for distribution to licenced hunters, who then must meet certain skinning requirements and have the hides tagged.

Officials said alligators have been reported in 96 Texas counties, and in 48 of them, the 'gator population is increasing.

"A real lack of management is what led to their decline," Bowman said. "But they've recovered pretty well on their own by just being left alone."

POTTER SAYS coastal residents should adjust to the increased alligator population by developing a healthy respect for the potential danger.

Boza in line for title shot with decision over Elizondo

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Former World Boxing Council junior lightweight champion Cornelius Boza-Edwards Saturday placed himself in line for another title shot by taking a hard-fought unanimous 10-round decision over Roberto Elizondo.

Boza-Edwards, the WBC's No.1 junior lightweight contender, built a slim lead during the middle rounds and hung on as Elizondo, ranked No.5 by the WBC as a lightweight, rallied in the eighth and ninth rounds. Boza-Edwards, fighting as a lightweight at 134½, took the last round, landing the best punch of the bruising bout in the last half minute of the 10th, a right that staggered Elizondo, 135.

Sinister Bermuda Triangle devours stray golf balls

Bruce Devlin, the talk of the U.S. Open's early rounds last week, is the director of golf and the nifty course was designed by Devlin and Von Hagge. It's a par 72 and stretches 6,797 yards from the championship tees and 6,161 yards from the men's white tees.

WALDEN is located on Lake Conroe, an hour's drive from Houston, and it is not as mature as it looks. The resort development is only a decade old, but Lake Conroe "filled up overnight", or at least a lot faster than most planners expected. At any rate, it is wiser than its years, especially out on the golf course.

An hour's drive from Houston, Walden claims to offer spacious condominium suites for rates "comparable and often less than hotels."

Walden boasts that its Super Marina on the 22,000 acre Lake Conroe is the largest of its kind in the country. It has 520 boat slips.

In addition to golf, the Walden Tennis Center in a natural forest setting offer 16 laykold courts. Four are covered, 10 are lighted and two are stadium.

Haley wins split decision over Mamby

Haley, the WBC No.4-ranked contender entering the match, outscored the 35-year-old Mamby on the cards of judges Jose Guerra of Mexico 145-142 and Jimmy Bivens of Cleveland 148-144.

Judge Roberto Ramirez of Puerto Rico scored the bout for Mamby 144-143.

It was Mamby's sixth defense of the title he won from Kin Sang-Hyon in Seoul, Korea on Feb. 23, 1980. He last successfully defended the championship in December, defeating Obisia Nwankpa in Nigeria.

The loss dropped Mamby's career record to 33-13-5.

Haley, 27, improved his record to 45-2-2. He also holds the North American Boxing Federation title.

Neither fighter seemed to be hurt. Mamby attempted to control the tempo with his left jab, while Haley was the aggressor through most of the match.

Mamby was flatfooted during the early rounds, but was able to avoid being stung by a number of Haley flurries.

Mamby weighed 138¾, while Haley scaled 139½.

Do best and 'Try not to spend any money'

Baseball success at Miami

By ANNE S. CROWLEY

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — Baseball is a very successful business at the University of Miami, where a national championship now resides next to the only black-ink budget in the college game.

Both marks are the work of Coach Ron Fraser, a last-minute choice for the job 19 years ago, who earlier this month guided Miami to its first title in the College Baseball World Series.

Fraser's showmanship and knowledge of the game have put fans in the stands. Promotions, gimmicks — and good baseball — attracted an average of almost 3,500 to each game at Mark Light Field in 1982.

OTHER COACHES complained of the "circus atmosphere," but Fraser figures they'll change their tune as athletic budget grow tighter.

"I think we're just ahead of our time. Eventually the other teams are going to have to do it," Fraser said, noting that New Orleans, Arizona State and UCLA have copied some of his techniques.

In those places, he said, the coaches and promoters are known as "Fraser disciples."

More than any of his players, Fraser is the symbol of Miami baseball.

"I'm always hustling for the program," he said. "I hustle on a bigger level now, but I'm still hustling the same way. I hope this (championship) makes it easier."

His teams had been top-ranked many times, won about 80 percent of their games and qualified for six College World Series in Omaha, Neb., in seven years. The championship always eluded the Hurricanes — until this year.

"We've had some great years in the past, won lots of games and been a big success. Then we've gone to Omaha when we just weren't hot," he said. "We'd come back and people would say, 'It's too bad.'

"Now nobody can ever say we've never won the big one."

THIS YEAR'S club lost a disappointing 18 games, then breezed through the regional and the World Series without a loss.

"I don't think the phones have stopped ringing for a minute," said Rick Remmert, Miami's baseball promotion director. "We sold 250 T-shirts in 10 minutes at the stadium the other night. We've had two-dozen calls for season tickets."

Some 6,000 people packed the stadium to welcome the champions. People are clamoring for souvenir pictures, caps, baseballs, yearbooks, jackets and whatever else they can get their hands on, officials said.

In 1963, when Fraser returned to the United States after coaching several years in The Netherlands, Miami already had chosen another person as its new baseball coach. But the athletic director agreed to meet Fraser for lunch and, the next day, Fraser turned down a job with the New York Mets to take a $2,200 salary at Miami directing a baseball budget that included only four $500 scholarships.

SCHOOL administrators advised him to "do the best you can — and try not to spend any money," he recalled. Back in those days, he used to scrub baseballs with evaporated milk to make them look new.

"Those were lean years," he said, leafing through congratulatory telegrams from as far away as South Africa. "I don't like to remember them — I really don't."

A few years ago, Fraser said, he turned down a vice presidency with the New York Yankees. Irv Kaze, the Yankees' spokesman, and Bill Bergesch, the American League club's vice president for baseball operations, said they had no first-hand knowledge of such an offer, and attempts to reach principal owner George Steinbrenner by telephone were unsuccessful.

Fraser won't say what he makes now, but the 1982 budget was $270,000 and the program brought in $400,000. The football team has to ask permission before practicing on the artificial turf at the baseball stadium.

GIVEAWAYS — ranging from popcorn poppers and dinners to automobiles, diamonds and the opportunity to grovel 30 seconds for dollar bills spread on the field — are all intended to draw families to the stadium. Then there were the 30-foot sandwich, the Maine lobster bake and the $5,000-a-plate dinner, all on the infield.

"We can't just have baseball out there," he explained. "That way, if the game isn't as exciting as they would like it to be, there's something else to hold their interest."

When Miami officials told Fraser he'd have to cut the budget last year, even though his team was getting better, he decided to cut loose from the rest of the athletic program. The school agreed to let him keep everything the baseball team made, but he had to cover expenses.

He copied successful minor-league baseball programs, hired Remmert and told him his first job was to raise the money for his own salary. This year, about 157,000 fans attended 45 home games, 2,825 of them on season tickets, according to Remmert. Single-game tickets cost $3 each, less for children and students, and season tickets cost $50, which covers seats for two adults and three children.

"If you don't make enough money to run the program, it goes down the tubes. That's the real program," Fraser said. "Without the business side, you don't have bats, balls, trips and all the extra things it takes to be No.1."

FRASER'S congratulatory letters and telegrams have included messages from baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, the "third-base hecklers" at South Carolina and a variety of political and sports figures.

But his favorite was from a Miami housewife — just the sort of person for whom he's modeled his program.

California puts new wallop in 'Eminent Domain'

The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

All my life I had supposed the law of eminent domain" to be merely a statute which permitted the government o bulldoze some old lady's little fruit tand to make way for an expressway, rain a little boys' fishing pond to let a ailroad through, or to chase Indians ff land there might be oil under.

It never occurred to me it could be sed to put the arm on a guy who just vanted to leave town. Never in my wilest dreams did I consider a municipalty would exercise it to take over a OOTBALL TEAM.

The California State Supreme Court, wonderful collection of refugees ight out of Lewis Carroll, lovable ccentrics who seem to take their law rom "Alice In Wonderland" instead of Blackstone, has ruled that the Oakland Raiders must remain in Oakland. The act that this may contravene the Constitutional restraints against cruel and unusual punishment seems not to have weighed here. Perhaps that's another rial.

THE RULING, presumeably, was handed down by the White Rabbit himself. I don't know what Oakland's going o do with the Raiders. They can hardly urn them into a freeway or run a railroad through them. God knows there's no oil under them. Are they going to put swings in them or monkey bars?

What I don't understand is, if you can condemn and obtain a football eam, why didn't they take the Forty-Niners? Personally, I think they should have told the court they at least wanted the Cincinnati Bengals. If you can get a team by court order, why not the Dallas Cowboys? After all, they're "America's Team," right? It's a nice dea, though. Maybe, Yale should take over Notre Dame. God knows it would help New Haven. If anything can.

It makes some nice points of law. If teams can't move, can individuals? What if the world's richest man has a stopover at the Oakland Airport? Can they get a writ from the California Supreme Court expropriating him under the right of eminent domain and forcing him to remain and pay taxes to the city of Oakland in perpetuity? Can they sell tickets to see him?

IS THE ruling retroactive? Should it be applied nationally? If so, do the Dodgers go back to Brooklyn, the Giants to New York, the Lions to Detroit, the Rams to Los Angeles -- indeed, to Cleveland, because that's where they originally came from? Do the "Washington" Redskins now go back to Boston? The "St. Louis" Cardinals back to Chicago? Do the Chicago Bears become the Decatur Staleys again? After all, that's where they started. Where should the "Braves" go? Milwaukee first and then Boston? Do the football Giants get out of Jersey?

Indeed, what would Oakland say if the courts in Pennsylvania decided the team had to go back to Philadelphia where they started up as the "Philadelphia Athletics" 80 years ago? Does L.A. get the Chargers back?

The court ruled that Oakland "may acquire by eminent domain any property necessary to carry out any of its powers or functions." Funny. That's what Hitler said when he marched into Poland. The German word for "eminent domain" was "Lebensraum.

IN A WAY, it has always been cheeky of some carpetbagging owner who made his money selling shirts to the Army, or guns to the Arabs, or whose grandafather bought furs for strings of glass beads, to be able to buy an athletic team like a set of electric trains or an Erector set and grandly superimpose the territorial mandate "New York" or "Chicago" or "Detroit" across their uniforms and feed on municipal pride and support. But, even if Al Davis, the well-known managing general partner, had called his team simply "The Raiders," leave blank geographical indentification, would this have protected him from the following "law"? "In this period of fiscal constraints, if the city fathers of Oakland, in their collective wisdom, elect to seek the ownership of a professional football franchise, are we to say them nay?"

Honest. That's what the court said. If they're asking me, the answer would be, "Hell, yes!"

APART FROM all that, it's a lovely little grift. The city must pay "fair market value" for the condemned team. If you think they will, ask anybody whose beach house was condemned by government to provide a place for the public to drop its potato salad and sandwich wrappers and dogs' mistakes. The fair market value of the Rams in 1962 when Dan Reeves bought it outright was $7 million. Ten years later, Carroll Rosenbloom acquired them for $19 million. If you're beginning to see a trend, stick around. I think Al Davis is gonna feel like that little old lady with the fruit stand. Not only will he get banana peels all over him, but, sometimes, when the city takes over your property, it promises to help you re-establish in some other location. They'll probably help Al get a roller derby franchise in Dubuque.

Hostetler, Sample, Bell power Texas past Oakland, 5-2

By The Associated Press

Rookie Dave Hostetler and Billy Sample pounded two-run homers and Buddy Bell added a solo shot Saturday night, powering the Texas Rangers to a 5-2 victory over the Oakland A's.

Reliever Steve Comer preserved the victory for knuckleballer Charlie Hough, 6-5. Comer earned his fifth save with four innings of two-hit relief. Hough and Comer combined on a four-hitter.

Hostetler slammed a firstinning homer off loser Matt Keough, 6-10, after Bell doubled. It was Hostetler's 10th homer since he was called up from the minors May 28.

Bell connected for his eighth homer of the year in the third inning and Sample hit his fourth of the season after George Wright singled in the seventh.

Oakland loaded the bases off Hough in the sixth on a walk to Fred Stanley, a single by Rickey Henderson and a walk to Dwayne Murphy. Dan Meyer greeted Comer with a sacrifice fly to score Stanley, but Tony Armas grounded into a double play to kill the rally.

Oakland nicked Comer for a run in the eighth on Stanley's double, a single by Henderson and Murphy's grounder.

Brewers 11, Red Sox 10

Getting 16 hits on one day and 15 the next does wonders for a team's batting average. It's also not bad for a team's mental condition.

"Our ballclub is in a good frame of mind right now," Ben Oglivie said after the Milwaukee Brewers held on for an 11-10 victory over the Boston Red Sox Saturday. "We know we can win. We've been doing a lot of hitting."

The Brewers pounded out 16 hits in a 9-3 win Friday night. Oglivie led Saturday's 15-hit barrage with a solo homer in the fourth inning and a two-run single in the eighth that snapped an 8-8 tie and gave the Brewers the lead for good.

"There's was a lot of good hitting," Milwaukee Manager Harvey Kuenn said after watching his team win despite squandering an 8-2 lead. "It's a great tribute to our ballclub the way we came back. We got production from our entire club."

Since Kuenn became manager, the Brewers have batted .290 to raise their season average to .272. They are 16-6 under Kuenn and trail first-place Boston by just three games in the American League East.

"It was a wild one. That's the first time this year our bullpen didn't come through for us," said Boston Manager Ralph Houk. "We scored the runs to win it but we just couldn't get them out."

Oglivie's hit came after reliever Mark Clear, 6-3, the third Boston pitcher, walked three straight batters to load the bases. Rollie Fingers, 4-5, went the final three innings for the victory. The Brewers, who added a ninth-inning run on Robin Yount's sacrifice fly, have won nine of their past 10 games.

The Red Sox came up with two runs off Fingers with two out in the ninth to cut the margin to a single run. Dave Stapleton singled and Rich Gedman followed with a ground-rule double. Wade Boggs singled home both runners, but Fingers struck out Glenn Hoffman to end the game.

Trailing 8-2 after 4½ innings, Boston tied the score with four runs in the fifth and two in the seventh.

Two-run homers by Dwight Evans, his sixth, and Carl Yastrzemski, No. 10, cut the Brewers' lead to 8-6 in the fifth.

In the seventh, Dwight Bernard yielded walks to Yastrzemski and Dave Stapleton with none out and was relieved by Fingers. Gedman sacrificed, and the runners scored on a sacrifice fly by Boggs and a single by Hoffman.

Cecil Cooper's 14th homer gave the Brewers a 1-0 lead in the third, but the Red Sox tied the score in the bottom of the inning when Jim Rice stroked RBI single.

The Brewers got to starter John Tudor for three runs in the fourth. Oglivie belted his 18th homer, and Charlie Moore followed Ed Romero's single with his third homer to make it 4-1.

In the bottom of the fourth, Hoffman's RBI double cut the lead to 4-2, but Milwaukee added four more runs in the fifth on Ted Simmons' sacrifice fly, a two-run single by Romero and an RBI hit by Moore.

Twins 4, Blue Jays 3

Jack O'Connor never thought his duties as a reliever with the Minnesota Twins would include coming into a game with two runners on and no one out in the first inning.

That was the situation he faced Saturday against Toronto, however, and the young left-hander came through with a superb showing in Minnesota's 4-3 victory.

"I didn't really have much time to think about it," O'Connor said of his sudden insertion into the game after starter Pete Redfern was hit on the right heel by a hot smash from Rance Mulliniks.

Damaso Garcia had led off the inning with a single and moved to third when the ball caromed off Redfern into left field.

"With runners on, I just wanted to get each guy I faced," said O'Connor, who retired the side in order but surrendered a run on Willie Upshaw's grounder.

"I was happy to get out of that with only one run," said O'Connor, who took the mound with a hefty 12.38 earned-run average. He lasted seven innings, giving up the run and striking out seven.

The victory was the second in a row for Minnesota.

"Watch out, we're on a roll," said Twins Manager Billy Gardiner. "We've got good, young talent on this team and we'll start winning our share."

John Castino's two-out single in the Minnesota ninth inning snapped a 3-3. Gary Ward led off with a single, was sacrificed to second and scored on Castino's single off Toronto right-hander Dave Stieb, 6-8, who scattered eight hits in going the distance.

The Blue Jays nearly spoiled the performance of O'Connor when they tied the score 3-3 with two runs in the eighth. O'Connor gave up a leadoff single by Garth Iorg that brought on reliever Ron Davis, 2-7, the eventual winning pitcher. Davis walked pinch-hitter Hosken Powell, and Willie Upshaw followed with a bases-clearing triple.

Bobby Mitchell hit a two-out, two-run triple in the fifth inning to give Minnesota a 3-1 lead. Mitchell's hit scored Ward and Gary Gaetti, who had singled.

Tim Laudner's solo homer, his third of the season, tied the score 1-1 in the Minnesota second.

Orioles 4, Tigers 1

Dennis Martinez hurled a seven-hitter and Gary Roenicke hit a three-run homer as the Baltimore Orioles defeated Detroit 4-1 Saturday night and handed the fading Tigers their 12th defeat in 13 games.

Martinez, 8-4, allowed three hits to Enos Cabell and stranded four runners in scoring position while winning his 14th decision in a row at Memorial Stadium, five this season. He walked one, struck out two and blanked the Tigers until they scored with one out in the ninth on a double by Larry Herndon and Lou Whitaker's single.

Roenicke's 15th homer came with two out in the six inning and followed a double by Eddie Murray and walk to Cal Ripken Jr. The blast was off Milt Wilcox, 5 who has a 1-10 lifetime record against Baltimore.

The Orioles, who have won 14 of their last 19 game scored a run in the fifth with some alert base running b Jim Dwyer, who opened the inning with a bunt single. Wit one out, Rick Dempsey walked after the first two deliveri from Wilcox were pitchouts.

Dwyer faked going to third after Lenn Sakata flied ou then took off and made it safely after an off-target thro from center fielder Kirk Gibson. Dwyer scored on a sing by Al Bumbry, which got past a diving Cabell at third an kicked off the glove of shortstop Alan Trammell.

The victory lifted the Orioles past Detroit into third pla in the American League East, 4½ games behind first-pla Boston.

Yankees 4, Indians 3 (17 innings)

Ken Griffey's 17th-inning sacrifice fly with the bas loaded and none out gave the New York Yankees a 4-3 vi tory over the Cleveland Indians Saturday night in a gam that ended 10 minutes after the American League's 1 a.m curfew.

Graig Nettles, who hit his 300th career homer in the fift inning to start New York's comeback from a 3-0 deficit, le off the 17th with a single, the first hit off Ed Whitson, 1- who had blanked the Yankees since coming on in the 12t Whitson then walked Roy Smalley and Willie Randolph load the bases.

Griffey, mired in an 0-for-20 slump, drove a 1-0 pitch fro Ed Glynn to deep right-center, where Von Hayes made meaningless catch near the warning track as Nettles score easily to end the 4-hour, 58-minute game.

Under AL rules, no inning can start after 1 a.m., althoug an inning in progress may be completed. The Yankees cam to bat in the bottom of the 17th at 12:57.

Dave LaRoche, 2-1, earned the victory with six innings three-hit relief. LaRoche struck out four and did not walk batter and combined with George Frazier, Shane Rawle and Rich Gossage to pitch 1 32-3 scoreless innings in relief starter Dave Righetti.

Fosters lead Prickly Pairs play at MCC

Toby and Lane Foster of Lubbock scored 80 points Saturday to take the first-round lead in the Prickly Pairs Tournament at Midland Country Club by one stroke over two couples.

David and Gail Rupley of Dallas and Larry and Dorothy Melzer of Midland are one point off the pace with 79's followed by Walt and Fran Locker of Midland at 75; Bill and Jeanette Krueger of Palos Verdes Estates, Calif., at 74; Jack and Becky Huff of Midland and Larry and Kay Braden of Lubbock at 73.

Five couples are tied with 72 points.

Points are awarded on a 3-2-1 basis with birdies counting three, pars two and bigies one. Each couple is also awarded full handicap on each hole.

The tournament will conclude today with a shotgun start at 1 p.m.

Westhead expected to head Bulls

CHICAGO (AP) — Paul Westhead, who guided the Los Angeles Lakers to the National Basketball Association championship two years ago, is expected to be named head coach of the Chicago Bulls, according to published reports.

Both the Chicago Sun-Times and Chicago Tribune said in Sunday's editions that the Bulls will make the announcement Monday at a news conference.

Westhead, 43, and Atlanta Hawks assistant coach Mike Fratello were the leading candidates for the position in recent weeks.

The Sun-Times quoted "a source close to the Bulls" as saying: "Westhead is their man. The decision has been made."

A call to the Bulls' office Saturday was answered by assistant coach Gene Tormohlen, who declined to confirm the reports.

"It's not official, nothing has been signed yet," Tormohlen said. "That will be addressed at a press conference Monday."

Westhead would replace Jerry Sloan, who was fired on Feb. 17 as head coach and was replaced on an interim basis by General Manager Rod Thorn.

A native of Philadelphia, Westhead was fired by the Lakers after 11 games this season following a clash with Earvin "Magic" Johnson.

After a loss to the Utah Jazz in Salt Lake City, Johnson told reporters he could no longer play for Westhead, complaining that Westhead's offense was too restrictive and not suited to the team's talent.

Borg will be able to play Wimbledon in '83

By GEOFFREY MILLER
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Bjorn Borg can play at Wimbledon next year, no matter how many tournaments he plays during the year, the Men's International Professional Tennis Council (MIPTC) decided Saturday.

A new format was announced for the 1983 Volvo Grand Prix calendar. Most men will have to play at least 12 Grand Prix events if they want to enter Wimbledon, the French, U.S. and Australian Opens.

But each of the four big tournaments will be allowed to grant a wild card to any player who has won their singles titles in the last three years.

Borg was Wimbledon champion five years running, from 1976 to 1980.

This year's rules stipulated that anyone not playing in at least 10 Grand Prix events would have to play through the qualifying competition at all Grand Prix tournments, including Wimbledon and the other Grand Slam events.

Borg had planned a quiet year with months of rest. He refused to play in the Wimbledon qualifying competition and was barr from the tournament itself.

The MIPTC, in a statement, said: "If that rule had operated t time, Bjorn Borg could have played at Wimbledon, where he w champion from 1976 to 1980, and in Paris, where his last v tory was in 1981, but not at the U.S. Open, a title which has alwa eluded him."

The present rule about qualifying for the big tournaments being scrapped altogether. Players will either get into Wimbled by competing in a minimum of 12 Grand Prix tournaments they will be shut out.

But they will be able to ask for special consideration if they a injured or want to take a long rest from professional tennis.

Philippe Chatrier, president of the Pro Council, said: "The pu pose of the player commitment rule is to provide a meth whereby the tournaments obtain some assurance in advance of balanced and attractive field in return for providing so much pri money.".

Borg took a five-month-long rest after last year's U.S. Open a planned to play in only seven Grand Prix events in 1982. refused to change his plans to be eligible for Wimbledon.

Goalby sets record; leads by five shots

WINNIPEG, Manitoba (AP) — Bob Goalby continued his blistering pace in a $200,000 international senior golf tournament Saturday, setting a course record with an 8-under-par 64 and grabbing a 5-stroke lead over Gene Littler.

"Looks like Goalby's playing a different course than the rest of us," said Littler, who fired a 67 on the 6,743-yard St. Charles Country Club course.

Goalby's round, to go with successive 68s the first two days, included a 20-foot eagle from a sand trap on the par-5, 516-yard, 13th hole and six birdies for a 16-under-par 200 total.

His third-round score in the 72-hole tournament, with a first-place prize of $31,500, broke the course record of 65 set by Johnny Palmer of the United States when he won the Canadian Open in 1952 with a 25-under 263 total and equalled by Canadian amateur Jimmy Doyle in 1971.

Goalby, of Belleville, Ill. and a former Masters champion, said he wasn't concerned about the course record during his brilliant round.

"It was the last thing on my mind," said the winner of more than $600,000 on the Professional Golfers' Association regular tour. "I was looking at the scoreboard.

"I had a bunch of hot cats right there behind me in Littler, (Miller) Barber and (Don) January, who all have the potential to put good scores on the board and a couple of them did."

Barber, the defending champion, and January fell six strokes behind Goalby, with 206 totals. January, leading money winner in senior golf this year, had a 4-under 68, while Barber, with earnings of more than $1.5 million on the PGA regular tour, had one of seven eagles recorded Saturday to finish with a 3-under 69.

Goalby, 53, who has 11 victories on the regular PGA tour in the U.S., has been putting brilliantly and has a total of 17 birdies after three rounds of the tournament, which started with 52 professionals and one amateur.

Canadian Moe Norman, winner of the Canadian PGA title on three occasions, shot a 69 and was in fifth place at 8-under 208.

At 209 were American Howie Johnson and Australian Peter Thomson, while Americans Jerry Barber, Julius Boros and Charlie Sifford were all at 210. Boros had a 68, Barber a 70 and Sifford a 71.

Kel Nagle of Australia, one of 11 former winners of the Canadian Open, had a 72 for 211, while 70-year-old Sam Snead shot a 69 for 212. Dan Sikes also had a 212 total after shooting a 68.

Jacobsen couldn't keep up with Gilder ball, in the cup on the 18th.

"What," the stunned Kite asked, "is the antidote for shock."

He made birdie on the hole, dropping a six-foot putt. He made birdie and lost two strokes to the leader, falling six big strokes back.

"JEEZ," KITE SAID, "that's unbelievable. I make birdie and lose two strokes. That's hard to take.

"When he hit it, when it was in the air, I said, 'God, he's made it.' My caddy said, 'no, it's gonna be short.'

"Obviously, he wasn't."

And it puts the tournament in Gilder's hands. It's his to win or lose.

"There are two things have to happen tomorrow for me to have a chance," said Kite, who had a third-round 68 and was alone in second at 198. "Bob has to play bad and I have to have a really low number. Six shots have been overcome before, but if I shoot 64 tomorrow, all he has to do is shoot par — and that's just for a playoff.

"Nobody else has a chance."

Gilder, seeking to add this title to the Byron Nelson Classic he won earlier this year, took a different view.

"I'm not surprised at the score or the 54 holes," he said of his share of the record.

"I've been playing good. I know I can shoot low scores."

He paused just a moment, smiled broadly and continued.

"It's that double eagle that kind of throws you. You don't expect that.

"But you have to remember that anything can happen yet. There's another round tomorrow. But I have a good feeling about it. I'm playing well. I'm not over-elated or flat. I'm a little nervous.

"But," he said, and grinned again, "I guess a 6-shot lead is a little better than three."

Peter Jacobsen, who entered the third round in a tie for second only three shots back, simply couldn't keep up with Gilder's record pace. Jacobsen managed a round of par 70 and was eight shots back at 200.

No one else was within 10 strokes of Gilder going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize.

Birdies push Haynie past Carner for one-shot lead

By MEL REISNER
AP Sports Writer

PITTSFORD, N.Y. (AP) — Sandra Haynie popped three birdies in the first five holes Saturday and shot her way past faltering JoAnne Carner to lead after three rounds of the $200,000 LPGA Rochester International.

Haynie shot a 3-under-par 69 despite bogeying No. 18 — her only miscue of the round — for a one-shot lead and 54-hole total of 209.

She led Nancy Lopez and Carner.

Haynie, a 39-year-old LPGA Hall of Fame member, has 40 victories to 34 for Carner, who would qualify for the honor gallery by winning here.

Lopez birdied the last hole for her third straight round of 70 and Carner struggled in at 3-over 75.

Carner, 43, played the first 42 holes without a bogey but then bogeyed four of the next eight and dropped a stroke behind Haynie by the 14th hole — a six-shot swing in fortunes on the 6,149-yard Locust Hill Country Club course.

Lopez has won all three tournaments she has played at Locust Hill, setting the LPGA record in 1978 with her fifth consecutive victory here and repeating in 1980 and 1981.

Alone at 212 was Pat Bradley, who began the round tied with Haynie, Lopez and rookie Patti Rizzo five shots behind Carner. Hollis Stacy kept within reach after a 71-shot round which left her in fifth place at 213.

Shelley Hamlin stayed within five shots of the lead with a 71 and 214, while Patty Sheehan and Patti Rizzo were paired at 215.

Cathy Morse, Barbara Barrow and Sally Little were bunched at even-par 216.

Rizzo, showing the pressure of playing in a threesome with Lopez and Carner, recovered from a bad front nine and finished with even-par 72, but Carner never regained her touch after making bogey on the 176-yard seventh hole.

She also bogeyed Nos. 10, 13 and 14.

'Steaks' may be too high for families buying meat in bulk

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, Inc.

With busy schedules and escalating prices, many Permian Basin residents are deciding to buy goods in quantity when they see a "special" advertised. While most of the time this practice makes sense, if not careful, you can wind up being a loser, particularly when buying meat in bulk.

A practice used by certain meat companies in the past involved "bait and switch" advertising. An advertisement would entice customers into the store by offering meat at low prices. When they asked to see the advertised beef, the butcher showed them an unappealing fatty piece of meat. The butcher would then proceed to discourage purchase of the advertised meat and to encourage the purchase of more attractive higher priced beef.

Also, these merchants often exaggerated the quality of the higher priced beef and misrepresented the amount of fat and bone waste that was lost in the cutting and trimming of the carcass. Sometimes, the customer who paid a hefty price for good quality beef later discovered he actually received a lower and inferior grade.

Most bulk meat suppliers are honest. To avoid being gypped, use the following guidelines:

1. Only purchase meat from established, reputable businesses. Be careful of flashy ads from new businesses that seem "too good to be true." The honest bulk meat dealer wants your return business and will not attempt to cheat or deceive you.

2. If you respond to an ad for beef and find "bait and switch" being tried, walk out immediately and call the Better Business Bureau.

3. Ask the dealer what the yield grade of the beef is. Grades 4 and 5 will have more fat and waste than grades 2 and 3.

4. Ask how many steaks, how much ground beef, how many roasts and other cuts you will get. If your family only likes certain cuts, you may be wasting money by buying a variety.

5. Get a written estimate of how much of the hanging weight will be lost when the beef is trimmed, boned and cut. Ask the dealer to figure your cost per pound on this estimated weight. You may find, in some cases, it is higher than what you pay for individual pieces at the supermarket.

5. Stay at the market and watch while your beef is trimmed and packaged to be sure you get what you pay for. With some dealers you get inferior beef even though the meat you viewed in the store was attractive.

7. If you are planning to finance your purchase, shop for interest rates. Ask for the annual percentage rate when comparison shopping.

Buying meat in quantity can save time and money, but it can also be an expensive lesson if you are not careful. Before you buy, investigate.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Sexual pleasure declines during pregnancy

Dear Dr. Solomon: My wife is two-thirds through her pregnancy. Although she tells me that her doctor says she can have sexual relations, she is usually not interested. I don't want to upset her, but I'm very confused; half the time I'm angry, and the other half I feel sorry for her. I might feel better if someone would only let me know what's going on. — Lawrence, Clearwater, Fla.

Dear Lawrence: What's going on is that many women experience a gradual decline in sexual enjoyment during the time they are pregnant. Dr. Kenneth Reamy, chief of psychosomatic medicine and sexual counseling at the William Beaumont Army Medical Center in El Paso, Texas, surveyed a group of women at various times during their pregnancies. Some women indicated that their decreased desire for sex was due to physical complaints, such as nausea and painful breasts, or the fear of a miscarriage.

If you wife is abstaining from sexual relations because she fears that the fetus will be hurt, she might find it helpful to have a talk with her doctor so that she can learn what is and what is not permissible.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband has diabetes and his doctor is always warning him to take care of his feet. Why is this so important? — Mrs. E.C., Seattle

Dear Mrs. C.: Diabetic patients are at risk of complications from poor circulation and are prone to infection. Therefore, daily bathing and inspection of the feet become an important means of avoiding serious injury.

In this regard, the ounce of prevention is very much worth the pound of cure. Diabetic patients should be careful not to put too much pressure on blood vessels. Avoiding elastic garters or socks with tight elastic tops, and not wearing tight shoes, come within this category.

In addition, thermal (heat) injury should be avoided. This means not permitting the feet to get sunburned, and being careful when using a hot water bottle or an electric blanket. And patients should never trim their corns or calluses with non-sterile razor blades, knives, or scissors.

Of course the most important preventive measure is not permitting the diabetes to get out of control.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother keeps complaining that her legs hurt and that she always feels tired. That is, she complains to me and my sister. But when she goes to her doctor, she tells him that evrything is all right. When I ask her why, she says she doesn't want to bother anyone. She is 84 years old. What do you suggest? — Marge, Akron, Ohio

Dear Marge: It is not unusual for elderly people to fail to report various physical and emotional problems to their doctors. Why not accompany your mother on her next visit? If she again says that everything is all right, you can gently remind her that she had complained to you that her legs hurt.

I anticipate that some of my older patients may not disclose their aches and pains without some prodding on my part, so I generally set aside a little extra time for them. For many older people, just being able to talk to someone is good medicine.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Your horoscope

DEATHS

Ray Holiedy

Services for Ray Holiedy, 54, of rural Midland, will be at 10 a.m. Monday at the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with Gary Haaland, minister of Midland Lutheran Church, officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Holiedy died Thursday morning in a Midland hospital after a lengthy illness.

He was born Feb. 5, 1928, in Pottsis Camp, Miss. He was raised in Winfield and Hamilton, Ala., where he attended schools. He entered the Air Force in 1943 and served during World War II. He met Ruthie Morris in El Centro, Calif., and they were married in 1950. He had been in the appliance repair business until his death. He moved to Midland in 1971.

Survivors include his wife, Ruth Holiedy of Midland; two sons, Dennis Holiedy and Danny Holiedy, both of Midland; two daughters, Debi Sullivan of Ipswich, England, and Shawna Holiedy of Midland; three brothers, Daniel Holiedy of Mansfield, La., Clarence Holiedy of Midland and Raymond Carter of Fair Hope, Ala.; a sister, Ruby Rubidoux of Midland; and five grandchildren.

In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be made.

'Penny' Curfman

DEL RIO — Graveside services for Pamela Jane "Penny" Curfman, 39, of Del Rio and formerly of Midland, will be at 2 p.m. Sunday in Del Rio.

She died Thursday as a result of an accidental drowning.

Mrs. Curfman was born June 15, 1947, in Hartford, Conn.

Survivors include her husband, Cory Curfman of Del Rio; a daughter, Timi Pat Wood of Midland; a son, Dean Wood of Boyd; her mother, Bernice Cross of Midland; four sisters, Judy Keiper of East Hartford, Conn., Lorene Broom and Darlyn Cross, both of Midland, and Marilyn Young of Garland; and four brothers, Albert Timinskas, Douglas Timinskas and Mickey Cross, all of Midland, and Staff Sgt. Tristan Timinskas of Anchorage, Alaska.

CRMWD votes to pursue additional water rights

The district is trying to secure reserves for the system, particularly its western anchor, for peaking purposes and possibly for bolstering supplies until the Stacy reservoir project is connected with this area. O.H. Ivie, general manager, told the board some hydrology had been worked up on several prospective areas.

Directors also authorized execution of a contract with the city of Odessa to issue on Odessa's behalf $16 million in sewer improvement and extension bonds. This is similar to the $23 million in water and sewer bonds the district will issue on behalf of the city of Midland, possibly in the early part of August. These bonds are issued without recourse to the district, and the cities, which are solely liable, don't have to provide coverage. This is calculated to result in a savings to them.

The district's suit against the SACROC repressuring unit in southwest Scurry County for more than $250,000 in a contract interpretation dispute has been remanded from U.S. District Court in Lubbock back to the 32nd Texas District Court in Snyder.

SACROC initially was successful in getting the case moved to federal court. But U.S. Judge Halbert O. Woodward said that the presence of Texas corporations as signators was sufficient to transfer the case. These companies will be named specifically in the pleadings.

Requests by Sayres Operating Company for a contract quantity reduction and by Mabee Petroleum Corporation for a suspension of its contract quantity were denied. The board indicated it would not consider any such requests except immediately prior to the annual rate setting session on January each year, and then only if such requests for variance occurred within the first three years of a contract.

One replacement well in the Ward County field is now on production at the rate of 1,000 gallons per minute, and a second well, which appeared to be failing, has been rehabilitated successfully, said Rodney Lewis, administrative assistant. He also said that a new well to supply Pyote was completed and easily would deliver more than twice its requirements. He also told the board that Lake J.B. Thomas, in the wake of spotted showers, had increased to elevation 2231.55, making 60,000 acre feet in storage, of which 12,000 came in during the past week. Lake E.V. Spence reached elevation 1882.69, or 2½ feet above its previous record high, for 309,000 acre feet in storage, of which 37,000 acre feet came within the past week.

Lake Spence quality has been improved somewhat by the inflow, said Ivie. He also speculated that additional improvement might be made later if an additional diversion from Beals Creek could be effected below Big Spring.

The board also authorized an easement to General Telephone Company to install lines across district lands in Coke County.

Last original board member re-elected to CRMWD post

Other officers re-elected were John L. Taylor, Big Spring, and R.D. Fields, Snyder, vice presidents; and Joe Pickle, Big Spring, secretary-treasurer. R.S. Searls Jr. and Harbour from Odessa, John Currie and J.W. Little Jr. from Big Spring, and Hubert Cargile and James O. Rosser from Snyder were sworn in for two-year terms.

Harbour's connection with the district goes back to the initial meeting in 1946 when J.B. Thomas, then president of Texas Electric Service Co., proposed a multi-city water supply for West Texas. The district came into being and was organized formally in August 1949. Harbour has served as president since March 2, 1972, when he succeeded fellow Odessan, the late Charles Perry.

A traditional design featuring a corner fireplace and built in bookshelves in the living area, is the Leonard Homes Inc. entry into the Midland Homebuilders Association second annual Parade of Homes. The Parade will benefit Christmas In April. Tickets are $2 to tour all homes. Tickets will be available at the gate.

Held August 22-29, the entry will be among 30 new homes. Builder Jim Leonard has designed grace and effeciency into this 1876 square foot home. The entry has italian tiles leading the viewer into the living area and formal dining area.

. The living area has the corner fireplace, built in bookshelves, a wet bar, atrium door, and a ceiling fan, The dining room has a vaulted recessed ceiling featuring mirrors.

POSITIVE THINKING

You can learn to live with stress

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Stress, the dictionary tells us, is "strain, pressure, especially force exerted upon a body that tends to strain or deform its shape." And human bodies, like all other bodies, are subject to stress.

As a matter of fact, human bodies seem to be particularly susceptible to stress. General George C. Marshall once told the Overseas Press Club that, as Secretary of State, one of his greatest problems had been worrying about the ulcers that simultaneously afflicted Walter Bedell Smith in Moscow and Robert Lovett and Dean Acheson in Washington. The general himself was ill during some of the most important periods of his career and a doctor had to accompany him on one of his missions.

Other prominent figures have similarly suffered from stress. The list is a long one: Marshall's predecessors, Hull, Stettinius and Byrnes; James Forrestal; Clement Atlee and the late Ernest Bevin in England; also Russia's Vichinsky and Molotov suffer from ulcers and insomnia respectively, testifying that there is no Soviet superman. They are human too.

These and many other cases are cited by a New York physician, Dr. Arnold A. Hutschnecker, in a helpful book, The Will to Live. "Stress does two things," Dr. Hutschnecker writes. "It sustains tension and it spends energy. We must therefore answer it with two kinds of measures. We must find ways to break tension. We must learn how to conserve and replenish energy."

Of course, the effects of stress are not limited to famous figures on the national and world scene. Each of us is subject to it, and the housewife, the stenographer, the business man, the factory hand can be made just as ill by the stress under which they live as any general or diplomat.

But we can learn from some well-known people how to break tension. Dr. Hutschnecker points out that, during the worst periods of World War II, Churchill would undress completely and go to bed even if ten minutes was all the time he could spare for a rest. Roosevelt joked with his circle, put some time in on his stamp collection, and read detective stories to break stress. The greatest of our presidents, Abraham Lincoln, would take time out to pray.

Prayer is one of the best ways to relieve tension. I have written and talked for years on this subject and have collected thousands of experiences of people in all walks of life who have discovered that, in moments of stress, taking time out to pray and ask for guidance and receive the peace of God offers the best possible relief from tension.

We can learn to conserve and replenish our physical energy, as Dr. Hutschnecker points out, by proper diet and sufficent sleep. And we can learn how to conserve and replenish our spiritual energy by going to the greatest storehouse of energy the world has ever known, the Bible. And spiritual energy helps to build up emotional and physical energy.

Take down your copy now. Thumb through it and let if fall open at any page. Read a few passages and you will find a restorative no money can buy, no drugstore can concoct. Follow the words of the great 23rd Psalm which begins, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want" and goes on to say the "He restoreth my soul." Then turn to the Sermon on the Mount where you will find the words on which you can build a faith that will not only sustain you under stress but give you a never-failing spring of new confidence and energy.

Modern psychiatric science is only beginning to discover a truth that religion has known since the dawn of time. People react under stress in many ways; some react in terms of physical ailments such as ulcers, heart disease, allergies and the like. But those who possess a means of throwing off tension and of tapping new sources of energy can lessen or even avoid the consequences of stress.

Your religion offers you a way to live under the stress and strain of the problems you must face. It gives you a technique of prayer which releases you from tension and a practical living faith that continually replenishes your energy.

Learn to live your religion and you will learn how to live under stress.

Highway meeting to be held on July 6 in Odessa

ODESSA — The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation advises that a meeting of the Policy Advisory Committee and annual public meeting for the Midland-Odessa Regional Transportation Study will be held July 6 at 9:30 a.m. The meeting will be held in the district office of the department, located on East Highway 80 in Odessa.

Purpose of the meeting is to provide the opportunity for public comment on the current transportation plan and to review documents required to receive certification for the study.

Certification is required for the Midland-Odessa area to be eligible for federal funds for transportation projects.

Agenda items also include consideration of adoption of the Unified Work Program and Transportation Improvement Program with its Annual Element, Reaffirmation of the current Transportation Plan, Air Quality Statement and Urban Transportation Planning Process Agreement also will be included.

Specific projects included in the review will be those recommended to be constructed within the next three to five years.

The Policy Advisory Committee is composed of the following members: County Commissioner Willie Hammond, Ector County; County Commissioner Charlie Welch, Midland County; Mayor G. Thane Akins Jr., city of Midland; and Councilman Dick Sivalls, city of Odessa.

The public is invited and encouraged to attend.

LOOK WHO WON $2000 FROM COCA-COLA PLAYING PEEL-A-FORTUNER

Ever since your local Coca-Cola bottler began the Peel-A-Fortune game early this year, many of your friends and neighbors have been collecting letters of the alphabet from bottle caps and can tabs of Coca-Cola, Mr. Pibb, Sprite, and Tab. They have been trying to spell the lucky words, HOMERUN, TOUCHDOWN, POINT or COKE in hopes of winning a prize or instant cash up to $2,000.00 from their local Coca-Cola bottler. Now, Mr. Joe Sanchez of Midland, Texas has successfully spelled the word HOMERUN in accordance with the Peel-A-Fortune rules and has become the second Midland $2,000.00 Coca-Cola instant cash winner in 1982.

You can be a winner too. When you stock up your 4th of July supply of soft drinks, look for the bottle caps or can tabs of Coca-Cola, Mr. Pibb, Sprite or Tab with $$$ on the top. Under each specially marked cap or tab is a letter of the alphabet. All you have to do is spell one of the lucky words on the game card and you can win a prize or instant cash up to $2,000.00 just like Mr. Sanchez. Even if you don't spell any of the words, you are a winner because you have provided yourself and your family delicious, refreshing, Coca-Cola or its allied brands of Mr. Pibb, Sprite or Tab. COCA – COLA... the No. 1 selling soft drink in Midland and the Permian Basin. COCA – COLA... the one the others try to challenge or compare themselves to whether they are number 2 or 27. COCA – COLA... the one the others want to be when they grow up... the Real Thing. COCA – COLA... the one everyone associates with a winner. Just ask any of the following $1,000.00 winners in last years Coca-Cola instant cash contest: Royce Brooks, Roberto Garcia, Forrest Ward, Ken Lenoir, all of Abilene, Charlette Davis of Hawley, Zeke Davila of Colorado City, Eddie Lou Phernetton of Cohoma Russel Walker and Mrs. Rex C. Talbott of Big Spring, MRS. GENE BISHOP OF MIDLAND, Tony Gallegas of Larresa, Shannon Ash and Gustavo Hernendez of O'Donnel, Rob Baize and Dale Bradley of Lubbock, Larry Dearing of Hereford, John Barbee of Dublin, or Johnny Matthews and Harry Shapiro of Breckenridge, Texas.

No purchase neccessary. Just look for game cards and details where you shop for Coca-Cola, Mr. Pibb, Sprite and Tab. So play Peel-A-Fortune with Coca-Cola, Mr. Pibb, Sprite, or Tab who knows... you could be a $2,000.00 instant cash winner...
just like Mr. Sanchez

Your future is just around the corner!

That's right! There's probably a Long John Silver's Seafood Shoppe just down the street from your home. And each Long John Silver's offers much more than quality food service.

We're the nation's largest fast service seafood restaurant system – over 1,100 shoppes strong – with new restaurants opening every week. Our growth means employment opportunities for experienced restaurant managers or career minded individuals looking for a start in the food industry. Many of our managers become multi unit supervisors.

We offer:
*Five day work week
*Two weeks paid vacation
*Excellent health and life insurance
*Competitive salary ranges
*Bonus plan (assistant managers are eligible too)
*College accredited training program

Think about tomorrow today. Think about a career with Long John Silver's.

FINALLY, A PERFORMANCE CAR THAT'S COMPETITIVE WHERE IT REALLY COUNTS.

On the road, the Volvo Turbo turns in some remarkable performance figures. Like 0 to 55 in 9 seconds flat. On the left rear window, it turns in a figure that may impress you even more. The price.

Not that the Volvo Turbo is inexpensive. A car that offers Volvo standards of comfort and workmanship has to come in at a tidy sum. But when you compare its overall value—the built-in amenities, safety engineering and legendary longevity—it comes out as quite a bargain.

Of course, the Volvo Turbo offers something you can't put a price on. The supreme enjoyment you'll find in driving one. Which makes a test drive imperative. But even before you take it out on the road, find out what makes it great compared to other sports sedans. Go window shopping. VOLVO

Delivers the goods.

The 1982 Honda Civic 4-Door Wagon comes with front-wheel drive, because wagons are meant to be pulled.

It also comes with the highest gas mileage rating of any wagon sold in America.*

And it's designed to help deliver the goods when it comes to engineering refinements and interior styling.

With a wide-opening liftgate and a generous flat, wide, carpeted load-space. A 5-speed transmission comes standard. So does rack and pinion steering, steel-belted radial tires, front door and rear window defrosters, tinted glass and reclining front bucket seats. Plus loads more.

Take delivery soon on a new Honda Civic Wagon.

GARAGE SALE
Patio Sale, Yard Sale . . . whatever term you use, it's an enjoyable and profitable experience. It's your opportunity to "clean up" while you "clean out." You'll become re-acquainted with your neighbors and meet new friends, and the fresh air is good for your health.
Check your attic, basement, garage and closets for good, but no-longer-used items - furniture, tools, . . . the list goes on and on. Every item should be priced, of course. You may want to combine your sale with a friend or neighbor. Choose your days, get your signs ready and place your ad in the Classified section. Your ad should list a few key items, give the date, time, and good directions.
A friendly Classified Ad-Visor will help you word your Garage Sale ad for maximum results.

THE ONE PART OF A NEW HOME AD YOU CAN'T AFFORD TO MISS.

The HOW symbol won't be the biggest thing in a new home advertisement.

But when you know what it stands for, it just might be the most important.

Because HOW, the Home Owners Warranty Program, is a unique plan that actually protects that new home against major structural defects.

And HOW's 10 years of protection is included in the cost of the home.

You're protected against workmanship and material defects the first year. Defective wiring, duct-work, and piping in the second. And your home is protected against major structural defects that vitally affect the use of the home for the full 10 years.* Your builder can give you all the details, including the reasonable exclusions.

So look for the HOW symbol when you're looking for new homes.

It's the fine print that's working in your favor for 10 full years.

HOW Home Owners Warranty Corporation

Warranty and insurance coverage applies only if the builder properly enrolls the home and is in good standing with HOW at the time of settlement.

*Subject to deductibles.

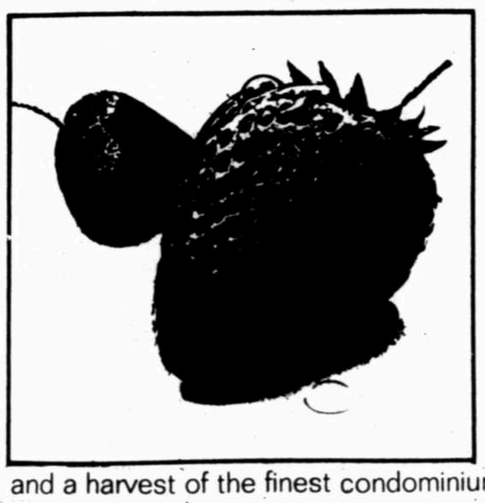
A FRESH APPROACH



Las Colinas in Trinity Estates. A thoroughly new perspective on residential luxury that's ripe for the picking in Midland. It's maintenance-free condominium living with an elegant flair, plus unbeatable all-new construction. At Las Colinas in Trinity Estates, you can finally enjoy the intimacy, convenience and efficiency you deserve. Priced from the $70's to the $90's and with easy 90% financing, a condominium in Las Colinas in Trinity Estates is just the kind of home you've been waiting for.

Just imagine the carefree lifestyle that awaits you in Las Colinas . . . a professionally tended, garden-fresh landscape; a sparkling pool; hottubs, security gate; a one-story clubhouse and ¼-mile jogging track a stucco enclosure wall with decorative trellis work; and a harvest of the finest condominiums in town.

And interiors? Picture this . . . a sunken living room, skylights and bedrooms beneath vaulted ceilings. A GE convenienced kitchen. The best in energy efficiency with split zone heating and air conditioning. And the privacy that only a home with no one living above or below you can offer. So forget the instability of rising rent costs and the demands of traditional home maintenance. All you need to remember is Las Colinas in Trinity Estates — a fresh approach to homeownership.

Colin Stewart shows his mother Denise how to crawl through a tunnel made of exercise mats. Crawling is an important aspect of the babies' gym classes.

Gym classes for babies

What'll they think of next?

Story by Linda Anderson

Paul Gilbert

Think of a gym, and the pictures that come to mind involve basketballs, tennis shoes, vigorous exercise, and very tired bodies.

Think of babies and the mental images are soft teddy bears and sleeping cherubs.

What could gyms and babies possibly have in common? The Alamo YMCA's Gym Babies and Toddlers gym classes — exercise classes for parents and babies to participate in together.

Gary Seth, director of gymnastics at Alamo YMCA, said, "This class is a support group for older kids' classes. It's getting kids to start movement at a young age. It also aquaints new parents with exercise and stimulating movement in children and infants. This program is the only one like this in the area."

The classes are designed for infants and toddlers from age six months to 30 months and either or both of their parents, and are divided into four age groups: Gym Babies are from six months old to walking age; Toddlers I are from walking to 17 months; Toddlers II are from 18 to 23 months; and Toddlers III are from 24 to 30 months.

Both Seth and Kirsten Smith, instructors of the courses, attended a workshop in Tulsa, Okla. in order to become certified to teach the babies' classes.

"This is not a national YMCA program like aquatics is," Seth said. "Our national certification as far as gym goes only goes down to six years. We're the only YMCA in Texas offering this program."

But what can babies do in a gym? "They do beach ball exercises," said Smith. "They pull from a sit to a stand and back, they crawl through tunnels, crawl through hoops, sit on balance beam..."

"They do the same thing every week," she said. "The whole thing is very repetitious because the movements are very basic. No specific skills are taught, just movement and position."

"The classes stimulate movement, strengthen muscles, encourage the parents to do some stimulation at hone — and teaches parents how to play with their babies," Smith said, adding that the babies who participate in these classes might have greater coordination when they are older.

"Crawling is an integral part of learning. Kids who don't crawl at an early age will usually have learning disabilities," Seth said. "It has been basically proven that kids who start movement earlier do better in school."

Both Seth and Smith said that the classes are a social thing parents can do with small babies. "And they get to associate with other babies," Smith said. The classes also give the parents social contact with other parents of small children, she added.

"In the toddler program, they move up in skill," said Seth. "The older the kids, the move specific the skill. The kids have a good time — the classes are very child-oriented, child-directed. The kids more or less pick the activities."

"There are no limits or restrictions in any class," Smith said. "If a child doesn't want to do something, he or she isn't forced to. The idea is to keep them busy, keep them moving."

Health precautions are taken with the equipment used in the Gym Babies and Toddlers' classes. "We have enough beach balls so that the kids each have their own and don't have to share. They have their own teething rings. After each class we sanitize the equipment so we aren't passing things on to the next class," Seth said.

The gym classes for babies meet one day a week for eight weeks, in 45-minute sessions. Seth said, "This is probably all they can handle. Two days a week was all the older kids could handle, so we moved to one day a week for the younger kids. The kids are ready to come back, and don't get burned out as quick as if the classes were every other day."

The Gym Babies class is currently being held from 9 — 9:45 a.m. on Fridays, and the Toddlers classes are held from 11 — 11:45 a.m. on Fridays. "I want to get it in an evening class," Seth said. "I'm hoping to kick off this fall with an evening program. This is our problem — scheduling the building."

Seth said that there is no prerequisite to enrolling a baby in any of these classes. "They don't have to be in one class to participate in the next."

A membership in the YMCA is not required. And a nursery for brothers and sisters is provided.

"I enjoy teaching it — it's probably my favorite class," said Seth. "And the parents we've talked to seem to enjoy it just as much as the kids do."

Robert Buchanan shows how to use a paddle and a beach ball at the same time.

Anti-cancer drug tested

By LENNIE LA GUIRE
Hearst Feature Service

National Cancer Institute scientists are hurrying to complete tests on a new anti-cancer drug that has virtually cured one form of lung cancer in mice.

The drug, Tiazofurin, is among thousands of drugs tested during the past five years by the institute, but it is "unique" in its dramatic success against Lewis lung carcinoma in mice, the NCI says.

"It's well worth pushing forward and taking it to humans," said Ven Narayanan, chief of NCI's drug synthesis and chemistry branch. He and his colleagues "are moving along as rapidly as we can" to complete animal tests that must be done before the drug can be tested on humans.

The drug is produced by Viratek Inc., whose president, Robert A. Smith, said that, "At this point, we're not 100 percent sure of the mechanism of the action." He added that clinical results were more important in early stages of research.

Like Narayanan, he stressed that the drug had not yet been proved effective in treating humans. "I think it is important for us to be conservative about what this can do," Smith said. "It is not fair to hold up to people who are potentially dying of cancer this week or next week the possibility of cure."

"But," he added, "I expect that by the end of the year, the Food and Drug Administration will issue a permit to go ahead" with testing on humans.

In NCI tests, Tiazofurin was used on three groups of mice, Narayanan said. In each of the first two experiments, 10 of 10 mice with cancer survived for 60 days – meaning they were effectively cured. In the third test, seven out of eight mice survived.

The drug, which has taken 15 years of research to develop, is chemically similar to ribavirin, which has been shown to be effective against influenza virus in certain circumstances. Despite its similarity to ribavirin, however, Tiazofurin was not especially effective against viruses, Narayanan said.

The NCI tested the substance as part of its drug development program, which screens a vast number of compounds for effectiveness against cancer.

Cholesterol linked with heart disease

BOSTON (AP) — Doctors exploring the role of fatty proteins in the blood say the discovery of a new genetic illness provides more evidence that some of these substances can protect people from heart disease.

The researchers diagnosed a previously unknown disorder in two sisters who produced very low levels of high density lipoproteins, or HDL. These fatty proteins carry cholesterol in the blood.

Earlier studies have shown that low levels of these substances increase the risk of developing hardening of the arteries, or atherosclerosis.

The two women's blood vessels became clogged with fatty buildups, and both developed heart failure, one at age 25 and the other at 31.

"We believe that these two cases represent a new genetically determined disease providing a link between HDL deficiency and atherosclerosis," the doctors wrote.

The study, directed by Dr. Robert A. Norum of Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit, was published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

They theorized that the genetic defect disrupted the normal production of HDL in the two women.

Studies have shown that other forms of the fatty proteins, called low density lipoproteins, increase the risk of heart disease. Some researchers have speculated that it may be possible to lower the risk of heart trouble by manipulating the blood levels of these proteins.

Drs. Robert S. Lees and Ann M. Lees of New England Deaconess Hospital in Boston reviewed the latest findings in an editorial in the journal.

They said no one has proven that raising levels of high density lipoproteins will ease the risk of heart disease. But they said the link between low density lipoproteins and heart disease is more evident.

They noted that levels of low density lipoproteins in the blood are closely related to the total blood concentrations of cholesterol.

Lifestyle guidelines

The following are suggested guidelines for publication of stories in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday; or two days before publication in a daily paper.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within a week of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for engagement and wedding announcement stories.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Only the bride's picture will be used with both the engagement and wedding announcement.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of pictures and stories.

Brenda Vaccaro says her goals are 'T.R.F.'

By BETTIJANE LEVINE
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post
News Service

HOLLYWOOD — The imposing electric gate, the steep uphill drive and the young man who affectedly introduces himself as "one of the housekeepers here" are but decoys on the road to the real Brenda Vaccaro.

The mistress of the manse — which is really a cozy, clapboard cottage — waits in a small entry hall where the letters T.R.F. are aligned on the most immediately visible wall.

What does T.R.F. stand for?

"Thin, rich and famous," Vaccaro laughs. "Isn't that the cutest? My Aunt Marge gave it to me and said, 'Brenda, you gotta be T.R.F. for the rest of your life.'"

VACCARO INTERMITTENTLY achieves all three goals, often concurrently. But fame is a constant. People know Vaccaro. If not for her 10 years of Broadway roles or her Oscar-nominated performance in "Midnight Cowboy," or her occasional TV specials ("The Long Way Home" with Timothy Hutton was most recent) or her aborted TV sitcom series ("Dear Detective" and "Sarah"), then certainly for her talk-show appearances and TV commercials touting personal-hygiene products — a job she's been doing for the past three years.

And among those who read fan magazines, she is perhaps best known as the former long-time girlfriend of actor Michael Douglas — the woman he didn't marry.

"You must be kidding," Vaccaro says. "I thought people stopped talking about me and Michael years ago."

(Vaccaro married photographer Charles Cannizzaro last November, and they live in the house she bought from Douglas when they split.)

VACCARO WOULD RATHER that people talk about her recent hit films, but there haven't been many.

"Hollywood is a closed, tight marketplace, without much productivity. The recession and the actors' and writers' strikes have afflicted and depressed our industry. The opportunities go to those few who've appeared in movies that were huge boxoffice successes — people who are known entities, such as Goldie Hawn and Jane Fonda. Those people are in a position to buy a script, have it written and induce a major studio to co-produce it, with them in the starring role. So, if there were any parts I could or should be playing these days, they'd probably go to people like that."

So much for the downbeat side of Vaccaro, who delivers even the bad news in such a sincere, twinkle-toned voice that she makes it sound good.

VACCARO LIVES, TALKS and looks as though she's big box-office, even if great scripts aren't falling into her lap every day. Four times a week, her exercise instructor arrives at the door for an hour of aerobics, yoga and other thinning activities. ("I'm Italian and I love to eat, but I always get back to size 10.") As often as possible, she swims in the new pool outside her front door — a half-moon, high-tech affair that curves around the edge of a precipice. ("The pool cost me more than the house," she jokes.)

And Vaccaro shops — not only at her favorite department stores but also at her favorite upper-crust specialty shops.

BUT IN FACT, Vaccaro says, the things she loves have nothing to do with money. "Some of my favorite clothes cost almost nothing, compared to most prices these days. I have an adored blouse that cost $20, and an old surplus-store sleeveless parachute jacket I wear all the time. I've been through a lot of transitions in my life. For 10 years, when I was doing live theater in New York, I was often dressed by Norell. I had every fur you could think of. But I wouldn't wear that stuff now. It doesn't go with my life. Now, I shop with only three things in mind: comfort, femininity, beauty. You know what I mean? I like to look in the mirror and think everything looks beautiful. But I'm not going out and spend a fortune on whole outfits. You know how some women go for the outfit? I don't think that's particularly artistic."

WHEN SHE FIRST KNEW she was going to be interviewed for this story, she thought she "wasn't the type for this sort of thing. I can't sit down and spout off about Saint Laurent and Givenchy and all that stuff, because that's not me. I don't dress that way." Then she realized, she says, that perhaps she's pondered more about fashion than many other women have.

"What I want to say is that the most important thing ought to be whether a woman thinks she looks pretty in what she wears. Sometimes, I see a woman in a trendy outfit and it looks awful on her. She's wearing it because she saw it in a magazine or because someone told her it was 'in' this year.... I'm a woman who's had a long meeting with herself in front of a mirror. I know what will work and what won't. And I stick with what I like and what I think I look pretty in."

What worked for Vaccaro on the day of the interview was a soft, embroidered kimono jacket atop a simple blouse and pants. And new, flat-heel shoes. ("I'm crazy about these shoes. Aren't they fabulous? Shoes are my nemesis. I can't stop buying them. I bought a whole bunch of flats the other day at Neiman-Marcus. And I love Andrea Pfister and Maud Frizon.")

BUT ENOUGH OF THIS frivolity. Vaccaro is also a Serious Person. A woman of responsibilities. In addition to the house, the husband, the servants, the wardrobe, the antiques that need constant polishing, there are the four dogs and six cats. And above all, there is The Work.

SHE IS A "SERIOUS ACTRESS," she says, though there's not much call for that sort of thing in Hollywood these days. She could always do live theater again, she says.

"There are 1,000 parts I'd like to do — everything from 'Hedda Gabler' to Tennessee Williams. I used to sit around and think to myself, 'So what are you waiting for ?' Now I know I'm not waiting for anything. At this point in my life (she's 42), I have a husband, a home, all these animals. I love it all.

What about those tampon commercials?

"I was broke, in danger of losing the house, and they came up with big money to do this commercial. But I wanted to find a way to advertise the product without looking like a nurse with a White Rain hairdo coming out of a little starched cap.... So I got together with my writer-friend, Gail Parent, and we tried to create a commercial with excellence.

"WE THOUGHT IT WAS straight talking for the modern woman. Let's break some new ground, we thought. Who needs technical descriptions of tampons these days? Well, I had no idea of what I was getting into.

"I EITHER HAD TO do the ad agency's commercial or nothing.

"It was a big decision for me at that time in my life. I was in the shower scrubbing myself, and I said to myself, 'Listen, Brenda, so it's not perfume you're advertising. But it's money from God. You're in the business 24 years and you've got an offer for tampons. But take the money and be grateful.' And I was."

Brenda Vaccaro intermittently achieves the three goals signified by the letters T.R.F. aligned on the wall of the small entry hall to her house. A theater, TV and movie actress, she says they stand for "thin, rich and famous" — and they sometimes come concurrently.

Health officials recommend dual drug malaria treatment

ATLANTA (AP) — Travelers to East Africa should use a new drug along with the traditional treatment to prevent malaria, according to the national Centers for Disease Control.

The CDC said there have been a number of reports of malaria resistant to the commonly used preventative, chloroquine, in five East African countries: Kenya, Tanzania, Uganda, Madagascar and Comoros.

In its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report, the CDC on Thursday cited 19 such cases in the past 18 months among U.S. travelers and recommended use of a new malaria preventive drug under the brand name of Fansidar, which was approved for use in the United States in January.

Fansidar should be used along with chloroquine, except by pregnant women, people allergic to sulfonamides and infants under two years of age, the CDC said.

Retirees use craft center

By ELISSA McCRARY
AP Writer

HENDERSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — An arts and crafts center that's of, by and for the elderly is helping make this mountain town a prized spot for people contemplating retirement, local officials say.

Opportunity House, staffed and operated entirely by senior citizens, is the only retiree center of its kind in the country, according to director Lorraine Berry. Its 2,200 members, from every state and 13 foreign countries, support its work with their $8 annual dues. The non-profit center receives no federal funds.

"At Opportunity House, the theory is that talent doesn't cease to exist just because a person retires," said Ms. Berry. "Retirees can and should be a vital part of the community where they live. It's a joy to be doing something interesting and helping others at the same time."

Hendersonville Chamber of Commerce officials and real-estate agents say Opportunity House, favorable weather and beautiful scenery help draw those seeking retirement homes to the North Carolina mountains.

The Chamber of Commerce sends an Opportunity House brochure in its promotional package to everyone who writes for information on the area. Real-estate salesmen use it to encourage retirees to choose Henderson County over other possible mountain towns.

"I remember when I came to Hendersonville to look it over, every real-estate man in town told me about Opportunity House," said Robert Davis, 80, a retired magazine editor who handles public relations for Opportunity House and teaches a pottery class. "It didn't exactly make my decision for me on where to live but it got my interest."

Opportunity House, founded in 1957 by a Methodist minister, came into being at a time when Hendersonville was gaining a reputation as a nice place to retire, Ms. Berry said.

The group's first project, painting a huge mural in the fellowship hall of First United Methodist Church, was such a success that it spawned dozens of other art projects and classes in all types of arts and crafts.

By 1961, the group's 100 members had outgrown the church meeting room, but Hendersonville artist Grace Etheridge's donation of an old two-story house on the edge of town quickly became Opportunity House headquarters.

The center now offers sewing, quilting, all types of painting, pottery and stained glass as well as tour packages throughout the world at discount prices.

Parents should teach children how to work

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Today's family provides fewer opportunities for children to develop work values at home. Yet, parents can and should help children learn how to work, says Harold Munson, a University of Rochester education professor.

"Most families wait until the child is 5 or 6 before assigning duties," Munson says. "But children's values start forming by age 2 or 3. That's when they should begin watching and helping."

Redcaps are gone

By JOHN GUERNSEY
The Oregonian

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — "Where's Jim?" is doubtless one of the questions most frequently asked at Union Station by regular train riders.

Through the years, they have been made to feel like the most important people in the depot by Jim McGuire, the last of the professional "redcaps" at the Portland station.

And many of the thousands of travelers he has catered to during his 36 years as a porter rarely visit the depot without looking Jim up to exchange a kind word.

All his friends were invited to his cake and coffee retirement party recently in the main lobby of the station.

McGuire, who began his redcap career in 1946 after leaving the Army, recalled that in those days the station had 30 arrivals and departures daily (now there are about a half-dozen), and there were 71 redcaps on duty. He is the last of the career porters, although his job will be filled.

"I've never worked for tips — even though you do make a nickel or two from time to time. I've always figured my job was to help people, and I've worked to do it the best I could," said the 62-year-old McGuire, who moves with the gait and bounce of a young man.

He has done it all during his long career — sold tickets, fired a locomotive, hustled baggage, swept the floors and cleaned the restrooms. But after each short experience with other types of train work, he always returned to his first love — being a redcap.

He is a professional and is proud of it. "I've never misplaced or lost a piece of baggage," he said. "I was trained by professional redcaps, and you take pride in your work."

In addition to his many other duties, he has helped elderly women and mothers with flocks of children get settled into their seats on the train. He is a fountain of information and guidance for travelers unfamiliar with the depot.

"Some first-time train travelers get very nervous in the station," McGuire noted. "I try to calm them down."

Fitness, exercise craze can be bad for health

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Copley News Service

Today, American blood pressures are rising along with interest rates and war escalations. The only things dropping are businesses, bonuses and bank accounts.

While all this may help curb inflation, what is it doing to our health?

The tension created by uncontrolled and untreated blood pressure, curdling news, nuclear war weapons, long unemployment lines, major American business failures, acute recession in vital industries, plus threats of U.S. military involvement in other countries grate on our minds and nerves in unrelenting waves of news. Emotions run high and take their toll on our bodies, often with disruptive physical symptoms.

People react differently to worry, fear and tension. Some of us will develop obesity, ulcers and colitis. Others will respond with skyrocketing blood pressures. Many people react to negative emotions by painful back problems, heart attacks and strokes. The lists of medical problems triggered by emotional fears, anxieties, apprehensions and anger are virtually endless. If the physical disability alone isn't enough to do you in, the horrendous cost of your medical care will do it.

Clearly, we all need help in coping with today's problems. If we allow ourselves to become mentally, emotionally and, eventually, physically ill because of these things, where does that leave our children and our country? The need to remain strong and well is imperative.

One positive response that is fortunately sweeping the country is the fitness and exercise craze. Certainly it is helping some segments of the population who participate. Diet and nutrition are the vital components of establishing good health levels and public interest runs high. The unfortunate thing is that the worst and most dangerous diets sometimes become popular, thereby creating even more health problems.

For example, let's say you are on a weird fad diet that restricts everything but fruits. You are having quite severe diarrhea and you feel week, lightheaded and irritable. Nothing is going right and family arguments are becoming more frequent. You are still overweight and do not feel like doing anything, much less exercising.

How then, can you respond in a healthy, positive way to even your own economic problems, never mind your friends and neighbors? Unsolved problems cause anger and frustration to build up and soon things get worse. You end up with a physical illness that you might have prevented.

Multiply this situation and you can see a lot of unnecessary problems arising for people who get themselves into poor health. They can't cope with their own problems, nor help anyone else. Economically, we have enough problems without creating illness in our population. Protect yourself and your loved ones by avoiding bizarre diets that can destroy health and well-being.

Preventative measures to keep in good physical condition are not hard, not weird. They are simple and effective things that anyone can learn. Your body can only reflect the way it is fed and treated. The key is super nutrition, which does not mean excessive vitamins and minerals, but rather a provision of all the needed nutrients in the proper or required quantities.

How do you get them? In a diet specifically devised to give them to you. Human nutrition and subsequent health levels are manipulative. You can create your own healthy, relaxed body only with proper nutrients and exercise. When you feel good, you are mentally in better health and are far more capable in handling and solving problems.

There is even a new diet that helps to both calm you down and pep you up.

If you would like to try it, enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope and $2 for printing and handling, to Shirley Bright Boody, P. O. Box 1038, Rancho Mirage, CA 92270.

Exercise may not help diabetics

By RICHARD SALTUS
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Doctors have long prescribed exercise for diabetics on the theory that it may avert some of the most dreaded complications of the disease — eye, kidney and blood vessel damage — by helping control excess blood sugar.

A new Swedish study, however, has concluded that while physical training has undeniable benefits, it shows no evidence of having any long-term effects on blood sugar.

"We still recommend training because it helps reduce cholesterol, raises high-density lipoproteins (a form of fat that helps protect against heart disease) and increases well-being," said Dr. Ralph Gunnarsson of the Karolinska Institute. "But we don't expect it to have any major effect on blood glucose," he said in an interview at the American Diabetes Association's 42nd annual meeting.

Diabetes, which affects more than 11 million Americans, is a condition in which a lack of the hormone insulin prevents the body from normally converting sugar and starch into energy. The consequences can include blindness, kidney disease, amputations, heart disease and deaths of fetuses of pregnant diabetic women.

Doctors have recommended exercise on the basis of studies that showed a drop in blood sugar during physical exertion, said Gunnarsson. What hadn't been demonstrated and was only assumed, he said, was whether this temporary effect on blood sugar held true over the long term.

The physicians recruited 10 male diabetics averaging 32 years of age who had a form of the disease requiring daily insulin, but who had few complications. They also enlisted a control group of 10 normal subjects.

All 20 undertook an eight-week regimen of 45-minute exercise sessions three times a week. On a before-and-after comparison, the diabetics and normal subjects equally showed general conditioning improvement from the training.

Tiny slices of muscle taken from the subjects' calf muscles showed that for the non-diabetic men, exercise caused an increase in the tiny blood vessels that nourish the muscle.

Nearly none of the diabetic patients, however, showed an increase in these capillaries. Gunnarsson said the significance of this isn't known, but may be related to changes in the walls of blood vessels already caused by the diabetics disease.

Examinations of the subjects' blood showed there was no improvement in the control of blood sugar as a result of the exercise program.

"From this study, we can say that diabetics can perform regular exercise without serious problems and can gain some benefit from it," said the researcher. "But the rationale that it helps keep a tighter rein on blood sugar evidently is more hope than fact."

Is your salary keeping up with the Joneses?

By THOMAS R. BROOKS
(Special from Reader's Digest)

. Each summer we read of high salaries offered to that year's college graduates, and of the high income of sports stars and top professionals. Meanwhile, the recession continues to curb rising earnings for most people. Where do YOU stand? How does your salary compare with others in your field and in related occupations? To find out, try this quiz. .

1. ARE YOUR EARNINGS above or below average? Compare them with the "median earnings" for full-time workers — the point at which half of all salaries are above and half below. Where is this point now? (a) $6500 per year (b) $9000 (c) $12,500 (d) $15,000 (e) $17,500.

2. HOW DO STARTING salaries of today's college graduates compare with the average salary of established workers of all age groups? New graduates start (a) well below average (b) slightly below average (c) about the same as average (d) higher than average.

3. THE HIGHEST starting salaries today are awarded to graduates with degrees in (a) accounting (b) finance (c) engineering (d) computer programming.

4. DURING A WORKING LIFETIME, the average person can expect his starting salary to increase by how much? (a) 2- to 4-fold (b) 5- to 8-fold (c) 9- to 12-fold.

5. WHICH CAREER has the best salary curve? (a) lawyers (b) chemists (c) engineers (d) accountants (e) personnel specialists (f) buyers.

6. DURING THE 1970s, which group experienced the largest rise in median earnings? (a) professional and technical workers (b) managers and administrators (c) sales people (d) craft workers, i.e., carpenters, plumbers, machinists.

7. FUTURE SALARIES will depend on the demand for specific occupations. Over this decade, demand will grow fastest for (a) lawyers (b) secondary-school teachers (c) computer specialists (d) machine repairmen (e) practical nurses.

8. JUST TO STAY EVEN with inflation, your salary had to increase 112 percent from 1970 to 1980. Among the following occupations, which were winners and which were losers: steelworkers, clerical bank employees, automobile workers, trucking-company workers, shoe-industry workers, clerical insurance-company employees, federal white-collar workers?

9. THE HIGHEST-PAID Americans are (a) entertainment and sports stars (b) doctors (c) corporate executives (d) lawyers.

ANSWERS:

1. (d) The median earnings in 1981 for 72 million full-time employed Americans were $15,028.

2. (c) College graduates tend to start at roughly the same average pay that ALL workers of all ages average.

3. (c) Due to the current shortage of engineers, graduates with only a bachelor's degree in engineering are top starters, with average salary offers exceeding $25,000 a year. Accountants start at $16,000 to $18,000 a year; trainee bank officers come in at $14,000 to $20,000; college graduates in computer programming begin at $16,000 to $20,000.

4. (a) Salaries increase 2- to 4-fold in many occupations, depending on such factors as performance, seniority and inflation. If one's raises keep up with inflation, even a low rate can increase earnings three- to four-fold over a 30-year career. Top achievers will see such increases again and again.

5. (a) Successful lawyers. They started at around $7500 about 15 years ago, now average $50,000 a year, eight times as much. Top chemists do almost as well, earning 7.5 times their starting pay. Engineers may earn six times their starting pay. Accountants, personnel specialists and buyers are below average in salary growth among these professionals.

6. (c) Sales workers scored the greatest advance, with a 110-percent rise over their 1970 median income. Craft workers were second, with a 109-percent advance. Managers and administrators advanced less — 100 percent. Professional and technical workers advanced least: Their incomes rose by 75 percent in the decade.

7. (c), (d) and (e). Demand for computer specialists, machine repairmen and practical nurses is expected to rise more than 60 percent by 1990. Demand for lawyers will rise only 25 percent. Demand for secondary-school teachers is expected to FALL by 21 percent. These trends will surely influence salaries.

8. From 1970-1980, many unionized industrial trades kept ahead of inflation, while many white-collar jobs in the private sector did not. The winners: steel-workers (62-percent advance beyond inflation), trucking-company workers (+ 26 percent) and automobile workers (+ 20 percent). The losers: shoe-industry workers (-40 percent), clerical bank employees (-34 percent), federal white-collar workers (-23 percent) and clerical insurance-company employees (-21 percent).

9. (b) Doctors win with their sure and steady income. In 1980, they had a median income of $83,700, as compared to the lawyer's $50,000. One in four of the 180,000 people earning over $100,000 a year is a doctor. Entertainment and sports stars may hit million-dollar figures but careers are relatively short. Some corporate executives may earn salaries ranging well above six figures, but the median salary of all managers is $21,000.

Educated cyclists

LINTHICUM, Md. (AP) — The more educated a motorcyclist is the more likely he is to seek formal cycle training, according to survey of motorcycle riders.

The Motorcycle Safety Foundation survey of more than 16,000 motorcyclists found that the percentage of riders who have taken a rider course increases slightly at higher levels of education. Participation is not related to age.

The survey also found education relates to helmet use, with riders who have graduated from college being twice as likely to wear helmets as riders who did not go on to college.

Magazine celebrates 10th anniversary

By KATHLEEN HENDRIX
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — It's party time for Ms. The national feminist magazine is 10 years old. This week, a fat double issue will be on the stands ("Our 10th Anniversary ... and Your Celebration") and on Tuesday, in New York, the staff at Ms. is throwing itself, and about 700 of its good friends, a bash at the Seventh Regiment Armory in Manhattan. Dancing to String Fever, an all-woman big band, skits, food and drink, fun....

At the Seventh Regiment Armory? To celebrate the birthday of a magazine that asks, in the anniversary issue, "What kind of guns are they buying with your butter?" in an article entitled "An Intelligent Woman's Guide to the Military Mind"?

Even when they are having fun, these people are serious. They are serious about their politics and their politics is feminism. They see the world in political terms and not much escapes the analysis.

When Ms. came out with its preview issue early in 1972 (at first an insert tucked inside New York magazine) Harry Reasoner, then at ABC, was one of the many who said the magazine wouldn't make it. He went on his radio show, "Reasoner Reports," and gave them five months — they had said all there was to be said in the first little issue, he predicted.

FIVE YEARS LATER he took it all back, with grace and well wishes, even permitting Ms. to use his remarks for promotion, saying "Ms. has shown us ... there is literally no subject feminism does not affect and transform."

Now it has made it another five years. Ms.'s circulation is upward of 450,000; it has changed its status — in 1980 — to nonprofit, as the Ms. Foundation for Education and Communication; it has published eight books — an anthology of fiction, a collection of non-sexist, non-racist children's stories, a guide to women's health; it has produced several television shows.

Strange time, though, for a celebration among feminists. June is also the month in which the fate of the equal rights amendment will be decided, and it appears the ERA may go down in defeat.

MANY BELIEVE IT IS IRONIC that these two barometers of the women's movement — the magazine that is taken by many to be the official party line, and the issue that symbolizes the movement — should be faring so differently.

Not ironic. Not according to Ms. editors, although they do mention the irony of their having predicted the ERA's passage in their first issue.

Although she was not drawing strict parallels, Steinem indicated that the current fate of Ms. may be a more accurate measure of the perennial "Whither the women's movement?" than is the current fate of the ERA.

"It would not be such an irony," she said, "if we had known our history. I did not."

ELABORATING ON HER OWN where-have-we-been and where-are-we-going piece in the anniversary issue, she compared the current situation with the first wave of feminism in the 19th century.

The first wave, she wrote, lasted almost 150 years and "ended our status as property, and achieved women's legal and social identity." The second wave seeks to end "women's status as a means of reproduction controlled by others, and unpaid or underpaid labor." It will take another 90 years, she wrote.

"The history of the first wave usually focuses on the vote," she said. "Now, it's convenient to focus on the ERA. It's specific. In both cases, however, the changes were deeper — cultural, anthropological, political ones. In the first wave, women became human beings instead of being their fathers' or husbands' chattel; they could earn their own money, sign a contract, appear in court. In the second wave, reproductive freedom as an issue ... is more important to women for health, safety and freedom than the ERA. The politics of the family, art and cultural events — these things are harder to cover. They're not as simple."

A LOOK AT MS: over the last 10 years, the three women indicated, is a look at the women's movement. It keeps its finger on the pulse.

It is not the official organ of some monolith called Women's Movement. It does not speak ex cathedra, with infallibility, on behalf of feminists everywhere, certainly not women everywhere. It has no party line. People who work at Ms. are forever patiently explaining or denying this.

Then what is it? It is obviously not one of the traditional women's magazines that have immortalized the casserole, or one of the newer, trendier ones full of tips for setting man traps in one's sensuously decorated apartment.

"It's a national forum," Levine said. "It's a forum for new ideas, political theory, literature, art, humor that springs from hope for, or plans for, equality."

ALL THREE WOMEN, like most of the editorial staff at Ms., have been with the magazine from the beginning, and, Levine said, "It became a forum of our own experience, it's part of the whole process of finding out that we're not alone. News and events not reported elsewhere are found here. The kind of forum we're not is a hands-off, equal-time forum. There are enough places where people who believe the opposite can get exposure. We do not have George Gilder writing for us."

Edgar, besides editing political and economic articles, has developed expertise is handling the magazine's legal problems — on censorship, libel, shifting to nonprofit status.

SINCE THE BEGINNING, Ms. readers have tended to treat the magazine as a forum and have made its letters-to-the-editor section unique. Letters are not confined to commentary on the magazine. Women write in describing how they are working out the household chores with their husbands, revealing their guilt and rage over rape, sexual abuse and incest they have been victims of, sharing their triumphs at work, and their frustrations, charting their successes, failures, dilemmas. The letters are history in the making, a decade of consciousness-raising and, having seen them as such, Ms. has deposited them at Radcliffe.

"It's the portable friend aspect of it," Steinem said.

It is not everybody's friend, of course. The New Right, the Moral Majority, the Stop ERA forces — predictably such groups condemn it as being too radical — lesbian, communist, leftist, godless. It has been banned in some schools and town libraries.

AMONG THOSE WHO generally support the same values and goals for women, however, there is also criticism. Ms. has some demanding friends, or sisters who are not friends.

About criticisms that they are getting middle class, career-oriented, or have always been so, profiling too many "women who have made it," Steinem talked at length.

THERE IS A LONG piece in the anniversary issue on the feminization of poverty, called "The Nouveau Poor," that predicts that by the year 2000 that more than 90 percent of America's poor will be women and their children, and that in spite of the individual, spectacular success stories that can now be told, women as a class are slipping backwards economically.

"Right from the beginning, the kinds of articles we always have done have tended to focus on groups, not individuals. We'd write about nurses, flight attendants ... We've always been movement oriented. The message has always been that there's no way to be a token, not a movement, and win. Even when we cover women as individuals, we're consistent. They've succeeded through or with other women, either as individuals they confide in, or through organizations.

"In the first issue," Steinem said grinning, "people kept telling us that we couldn't print anything about lesbians, so of course we knew we had to do it."

THERE HAS BEEN a special issue on male sexuality, articles on fatherhood, fathers and daughters. On their anniversary they salute 40 heroes of the movement.

Ten years ago women dared to lend their names to Ms., publicly stating they had had abortions. The latest public opinion polls, Steinem said, show 60 percent supporting freedom of choice on the issue.

"We've come a great distance," she said. "Some issues have gone so much more quickly than we could have expected. Rape as violence not sex, battered women, sexual harassment on the job, reproductive freedom — there weren't even terms in the language for some of these things 10 years ago. It was called life."

Document acquired

NEW YORK (AP) — The Morgan Library says it has acquired the first printing, first state of "The Declaration of Independence."

The library says the document has been described as "the most important single printed piece of paper in the history of the United States."

It is the formal statement by the representatives of the 13 colonies announcing their separation from Great Britain and the birth of the United States.

Dallas' Mansion on Turtle Creek is a first-class operation

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

It was raining heavily at midnight when the hotel limousine arrived to transport us from Love Field Airport to The Mansion on Turtle Creek, Dallas' newest luxury hotel.

We had heard about it, but nothing prepared us for the total luxury of what awaited us.

The Mansion is a gracious complex of guest rooms, dining and meeting facilities developed and owned by Rosewood Hotels Inc., the hotel development company of the Caroline Hunt Trust Estate.

But the hotel itself is unique in that it is the first to be run by the "21" Management Club, the team that operates the famous "21" restaurant in New York.

The Mansion is mounted on a slight hill near downtown Dallas. Its understated elegance welcomes an elite clientele — "the one-tenth of one percent of individuals who have reached the pinnacle."

This first-class hotel is small, consisting of only 145 individually decorated rooms and suites. The rooms, however, represent nothing but the best, from the 100 percent cotton sheets to the antique porcelains and fresh flowers that accent every room.

"It's a real commitment to quality from the developers," said Alexander de Toth, general manager of The Mansion. "It's a personal hotel, but undoubtedly the best in Dallas.

"We only have 145 rooms, so we make a real effort to be personalized," he said. "For example, the staff knows each guest by name."

"And Midlanders are some of our best customers."

De Toth named off a list of some of its more notable guests—actresses and actors, such as Ann-Margret, Linda Grey (of 'Dallas' fame), Burt Reynolds and James Garner; royalty in the figures of the King of Norway and the Queen of Thailand; and fashion designer Armani.

He likened The Mansion to a small, private and typical European hotel.

Basically, the developers have joined to create a Connaught-class hotel specializing in an elegant, residential atmosphere where loving attention is given to every detail, right down to the full-time brass polisher and the full-time touch-up painter.

History and tradition surround the place. Its restaurant is the restored Sheppard King Mansion, who made their fortune in cotton, and opened in 1980.

It includes dining rooms, bar and lounge and private party rooms. Dinner, luncheon, brunch and late-night supper menus feature a la carte selections, many of which are signature dishes of the "21" Club.

Even at 2 a.m., the staff urged us to order at our will. However, we took pity on the chef who would be forced to stay up all night preparing the roast quail farcis in potato nests, avodado vinaigrette and fried zucchini which we had envisioned, and, instead, opted for a house specialty, the pumpkin cheesecake.

We weren't disappointed.

While waiting for the dessert, we took a brief tour of place. Most of the architectural elements frm the original house remain, and it is filled with a collection of fine antiques and art.

Inside the Restaurant foyer, a grand staircase ascends two floors and features a wrought iron railing with a coat of arms. The ceiling of the original dining room, now the main dining room, has 2,400 separate pieces of enameled and inlaid wood.

The 16th century German mantel in the oak-paneled library (now part of the main dining room) was brought to the house by the Kings. The library features a handsome set stained glass windows depicting the British barons signing the Magna Carta. (Mrs. King was a descendant of King Edward III of England).

After dessert, we retired for early morning coffee in the lounge and bar which featured 18th century hunt-themed prints and mounted heads of trophies from safari hunts taken by the Kings. The area was highlighted by rich greens and dark woods, and is reminiscent of New York's "21."

Dinner is costly, so plan on spending a bundle on dinner for two—at least $100. Both lunch and dinner are served in the main restaurant. Brakfast and afternon tea are served in the Promanade. A harpist plays during tea.

The Mansion is expensive—the most expensive in Dallas—with room rates beginning at $105 for single, $130 for a double, and $300 for a suite. Unless you are on a company expense account, or your latest oil well has just come in, it's possible you won't want to spend that much for one lavish night. But if you do, you'll get lots for your money.

If anything, my criticism would be that it's a bit too pretentious. But, then again, it's nice to be pampered once in a while.

And service was superb. The doorman, front desk help, room service waiter and porter all were uniformly friendly and gracious. You are greeted by name at the reception desk while arriving to register. Word of your arrival is flashed to the desk before you get there.

Room service is available 24 hours a day and is available from the extensive menu offered at the hotel's restaurant.

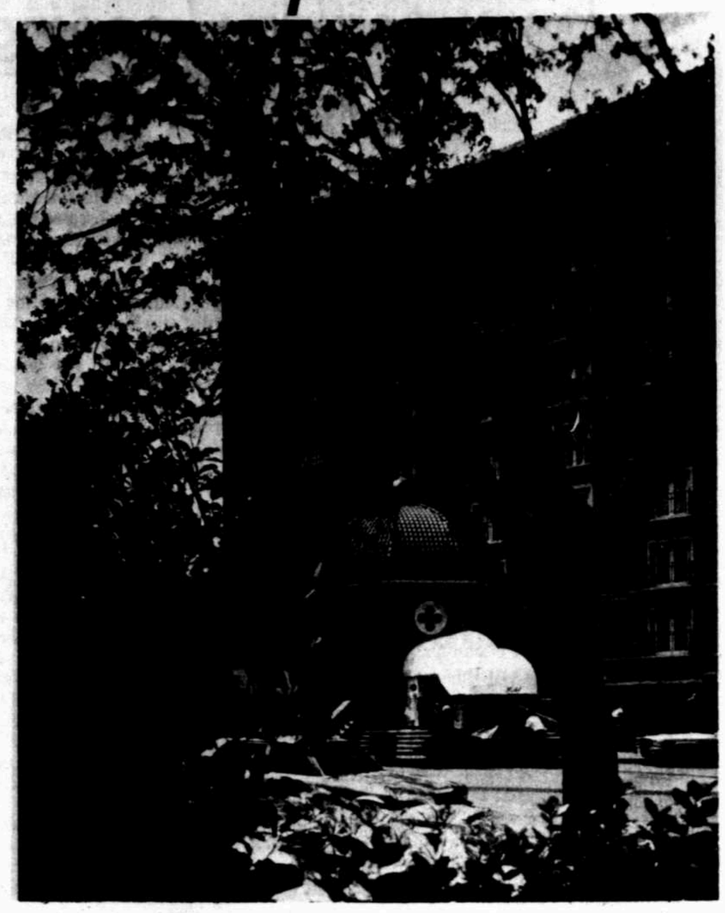
Breakfast is served in the rooms on a wicker tray holding fine china and crystal. A single red rose on the tray is typical of the small touches provided.

The rooms, done in pastels and earth tones are good sized, averaging about 450 square feet.

I was especially impressed by the bath area which is marble, and has gold-plated fixtures. Each bathroom includes a telephone (conveniently placed), soft robe, big, fluffy towels, special soap by Hermes and good lighting.

My room had several ashtrays, a selection of magazines (including the Ultra issue which featured Midland), a radio alarm clock, color television hidden in an antique secretary, three telephones and a box of chocolate mints.

All in all, the sheer physical grandeur of The Mansion on Turtle Creek sets it dramatically apart from every other hotel/restaurant in Dallas; nowhere else there can you dine in such all-encompassing luxury.



The Mansion on Turtle Creek in Dallas is a nine-story hotel tower of 145 guest rooms and suites with an adjacent restaurant and bar in the rstored Sheppard King Mansion located in the fashionable Turtle Creek area.

Airline deregulation may bring many changes in service

By JAY BEAUSEIGNEUR
Hearst Feature Service

With the added competition that airline deregulation has brought, passengers may be paying less — and enjoying their flights even less. Drooping or nonexistent profits have cut passenger amenities to the bone. Jet fuel costs have gone off the charts. And you can be sure that the gentleman occupying the left seat in the cockpit is taking home something in the neighborhood of $100,000 per annum.

So, with higher costs and far less revenue per passenger due to cheaper fares, how do airlines make a living? One way — besides diversifying into other industries — is to carry more passengers on each plane. And this is possible only by putting in more seats — which translates into smaller seats, less leg room and amenities, particularly in the way of food.

The Boeing 747, for example, started out with eight-across seating in economy when it was introduced in 1970. Today, only a few airlines have less than 10-across. Knees probably will touch the seatback in front. And crowded planes mean that storage areas — both under the seat and in the overhead rack — are either smaller or shared by more people.

AND ECONOMY CLASS airline food, which never has caused ground-bound restaurateurs any sleepless nights, continues to dwindle in quality and quantity.

If the mere thought of traveling on planes with more passengers, fewer flight attendants and punk food disturbs you, your psyche will probably feel like someone had poured meat tenderizer on it during the actual trip.

The obvious solution for businesmen is to purchase a first class ticket. But if you have to pay for it yourself, here are some suggestions for getting the most out of economy or coach class:

TRAVEL

• Find out how crowded the plane will be. Everyone gets cramped from sitting in small seats on long flights. So call the airline — or if you're using a travel agent, have them do it — and ask for the load factor. If it looks bad for you (but good for the airline) and you have some flexibility in your travel plans, rebook on a flight with fewer people. There's no 100 percent guarantee to this system, of course, as another flight may be cancelled and its passengers may end up on your previously empty jet, but it's better than grinding your teeth all the way to the airport in unhappy anticipation.

• FIND OUT IF you're going to be traveling on the best airline possible. Write or call the Consumer Assistance Service of the Civil Aeronautics Board — 1825 Connecticut Ave. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20428 (202) 673-6047. They'll send you a list of complaints per 10,000 passengers.

• Ask your travel agent which carriers fly the route of your choice. Then tell the agent which airline you want. The amount of commission an agency gets from an airline probably is commensurate with the number of passengers it books, so the agent may have more incentive to book you on a particular airline. If the agent won't book what you want, go to another agency. And if the agent tells you the flight of your choice is sold out, call the airline yourself to double-check.

• To get a good meal on an airline bring it yourself. And make it a cold one. You won't have to bother bringing utensils and condiments. These can be removed from the trays bearing the boiled copies of Accountant's Monthly that the other passengers will be eating — when they're not glaring at you in envy. The meal can be elaborate, and the only rule is not to bring anything terribly bulky or something you won't want to discard — like champagne glasses. On the return flight, have your hotel or favorite restaurant do your catering.

• GETTING A GOOD seat with leg room is a bit more difficult to arrange these days. The bulkhead seats are probably the best in economy because they will be the first row in each cabin and offer more leg room. Some travelers like the seats just behind the emergency exits, which usually means there is also no seat directly in front. Some airlines will confirm a specific seat at the time of ticket purchase. If this isn't possible, get to the airport early enough so you'll have some choice of seat selection.

• How do you know that you'll have a good flight? You don't. Every airline has bad days. But there are some clues to look for. Is the cabin clean? Is the crew attentive? How long does your check-in take?

Once you've boarded, of course, you take what you get. Some travelers try for the best they can afford, and pay for it. Whichever way you fly, if you are not satisfied — complain.

Come to the party!

El Paso is doing it again! We're staging our Second Annual Festival, bigger and better even than last year's celebration of the border communities' 400th birthday. And you're invited to the party!

It will be a bang-up Western jamboree with shoot-outs and can-can girls. A Mexican fiesta with guitarists and folkloric dancing. A country hoedown with Charley Pride and Brenda Lee. It will be a festival of the arts, too, with ballet, a symphony orchestra, and an invitational art show.

Fun for the whole family will fill El Paso's beautiful Civic Center, just a few blocks from Juarez, Mexico, and overflow into the streets and plazas of downtown El Paso. It will feature pageants and parades, food and fireworks, bands and balloons, clowns and a carnival. It will include crafts booths, science exhibits, historical displays - and, we hope, you! Please join us. You'll know you've been to a party!

'New York, New York'

It's still like living in a Broadway play

By CAROLYN FITZ-GERALD
Travel Writer

On an American Airlines flight into New York's La Guardia Airport, it was my luck to run into two women from Midland who had invested in an off Broadway play.

Their enthusiasm for "The Freak," a porduction about psychic Edgar Cayce, was so contagious that I made plans to attend a matinee the day after it opened simply because the production had Midland connections.

"The Freak" had not yet been reviewed the afternoon I saw it in the half-filled Douglas Fairbanks Theatre, which is one of the newly-renovated old theatres off Broadway.

I had read a book or two about Cayce, who died in 1945, but I did not imagine that an entire play devoted to a diviner and healer could be very interesting. I was wrong.

Although the critics lightly panned the work as "trivial," even they had to admit that all the performances were outstanding.

Polly Draper, lately of the Yale University School of Drama, surely deserves an award for her poignant and very real portrayal of a wife and mother trying to reach out to a husband who sees thing that others do not and is aware of future events long before they happen.

Around Broadway, there is a saying that some plays are critic's performances and some are audiences's successes. "The Freak" is definitely an audience play.

As a member of the audience, I felt as if I was there in that small Kentucky town, living through the terrors of misunderstanding and rejection with the Cayce family.

When the portrayal was over, like a good book that you don't want to put down, I wished that their lives would continue. I was just not ready to give up those people whom I had come to know so well.

Going backstage was more like going next door to offer a helping hand to a neighbor. I felt that more people should have been there to see such a magnificent performance and I told them so. But the actors were not still entranced with the aura that they had created that afternoon, explaining that houses were always light on Memorial Day weekend.

Back to The Regency Hotel on Manhattan's Park Avenue, I still felt as if I were part of a play, as a limousine pulled up and discharged actress Brooke Shields, complete with foxtails in her hair, Calvin Klein jeans and a silk shirt.

As I passed through the revolving door and into the low-key lobby bedecked with Persian rugs and exotic flowers, I ran into Ethel Merman only to enter the elevator and be told that the fragrance still hanging there belonged to actor George Hamilton who had just steppped out. My immediate reaction: Are George and Brooke having a fling?

Other guests were even more exciting. Israel's replacement for Moshe Dyan was ensconced in the suite above me. Every time I came in with a package, security appeared from nowhere to unobtrusively scrutinize my purchases for weapons.

But for the most part, Regency residents are the sort who have probably never seen "Endless Love" or "Zorro," "The Gay Blade" or, indeed, a movie at all. Some are permanent guests and many stay long enough to enjoy the small kitchens attached to most rooms and fill them with goodies from Zabar's grocery and delicatessen where celebrities and Jewish mothers stand side by side, hoping to get some gefilte fish before the supply, prepared fresh daily, runs out.

Those who don't have breakfast in the large well-appointed rooms and suites (done in the Regency period, of course), can hobnob with the Regency breakfast crowd where some say deals rival those made on the floor of the New York stock exchange over on Wall Street.

Lunch and dinner at The Regency are both excellent and are prepared and served in the European style by a chef who learned his trade at his mother's knee and apprenticed to some of the greatest culinary geniuses in the world, and waiters who still revere their profession.

When I ventured out to eat, I was pleased with Eat Boutique just around the corner at 661 Madison Avenue, where a unique family cooks and makes clothing, both by hand, and very carefully.

There shrimp a la Russe and wedding dresses in the antique style were an unexpected combination in such small quarters.

Two other dining favorites that I develped during my stay were Le Biarritz at 325 W. 57th Street for lunch and Le Bistro at 827 Third Avenue for dinner.

Le Biarritz must be close to the television networks because both Harry Reasoner and Walter Cronkite (now retired) were there at separate tables.

Reasoner was making his point by waving his hands and karate chopping the air while Cronkite sat quietly and made little churches and steeples with his fingers.

Le Bistro is, also, one of those places where the food is prepared with reverence and served with style.

During the few days that I was there, I searched the garment district discount houses for clothes to wear to wedding parties. Much the best buys were at Ben Farber's and S and W, where Nipon's and Bill Blass's were surprisingly inexpensive compared to retail prices

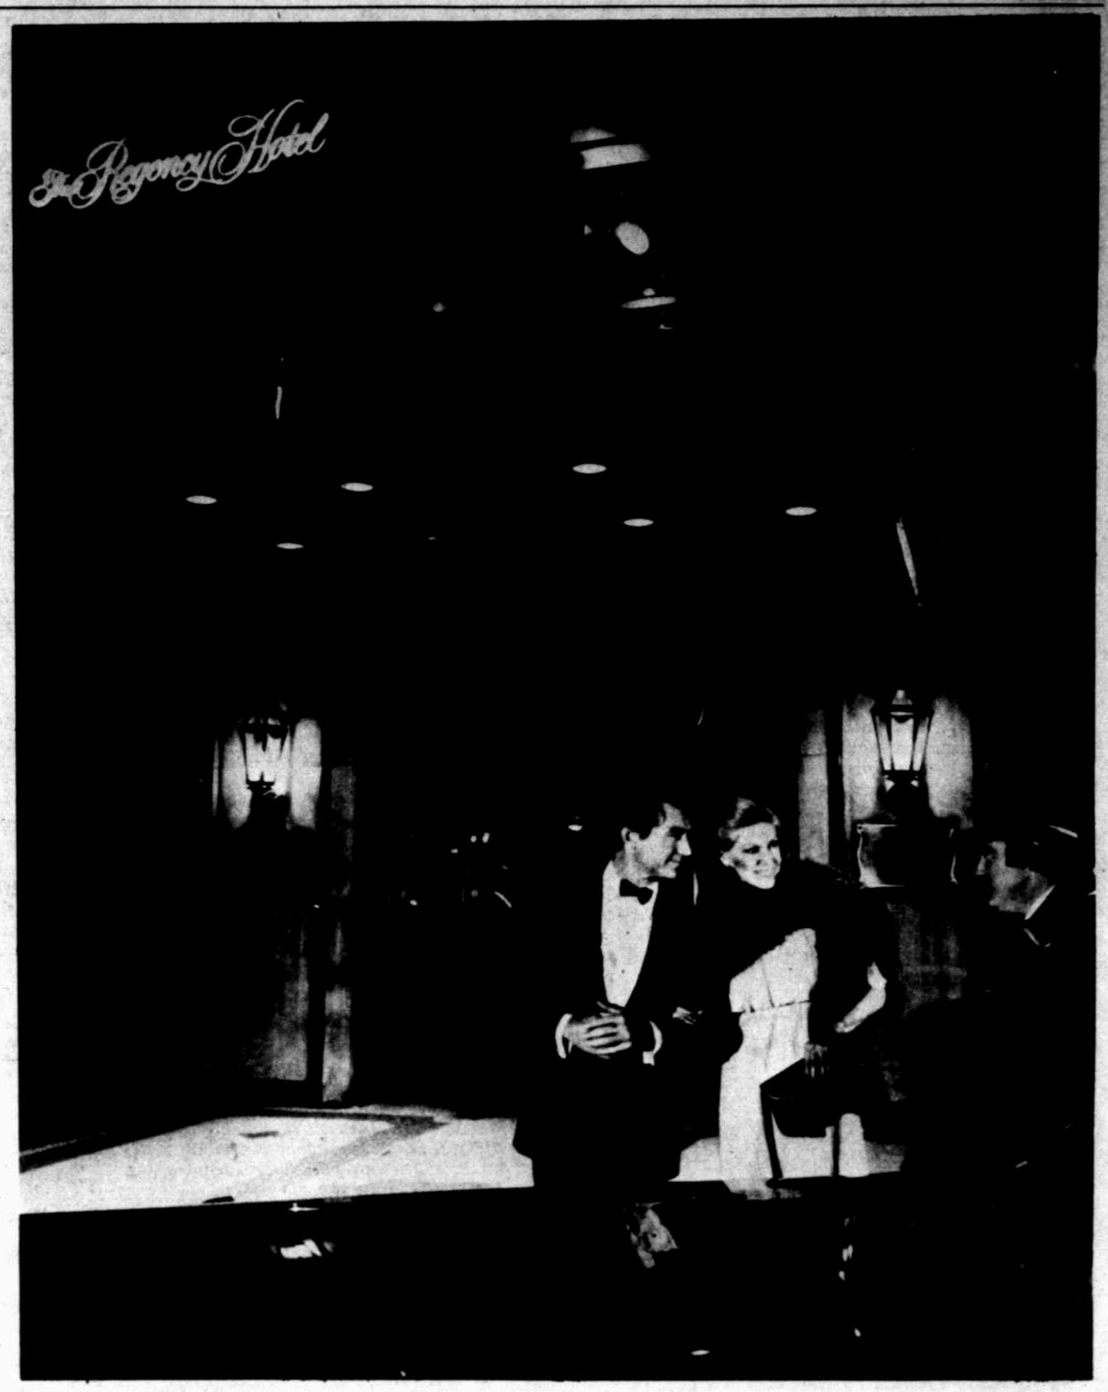
The shop at the Plaza Hotel on Central Park also offered an amazing number of long dresses with amazing prices to match.

I managed before I left to see another play, "Crimes of the Heart," by Southern Methodist University graduate Beth Henley who hails from Mississippi. Although I heard others say that they thought it was overdrawn, I think that they were just unfamiliar with the South. The frenetic social-climbing cousin, the vague childlike sister and the still wet-behind-the-ears lawyer where all types that abound in Henley's territory. The characters were ably portrayed with the usual astounding performance turned in by Mary Beth Hurt.

The New York City Ballet's renditions of 'Symphony in C' and 'Le Tombeau de Couperin,' 'Opus 19/The Dreamer' should have been a disapointed as there were heavy casualties (apparently being in the corps de ballet is a lot like a war), and most of the featured performers were understudies. But I thought that their efforts surely surpassed the regulars as the adrenaline flowed in response to a chance at stardom during a Friday night performance at Lincoln Center's New York State Theatre.

On the way back to the hotel, I stopped to catch a practice session with friend Lucy Lytle and her pianist, Alan Warner, who had just finished engagements at the Harley and the Hyatt hotels. Alan often plays with Peter Duchin and formerly accompanied Eddie Fisher. If you are planning a party, Alan and Lucy are available for engagements at 212/260-8426.

Back to The Regency for a nightcap at The Lounge, a stretched limousine pulls away from those lining Park Avenue in front of the hotel. Is it George and Brooke? I'll never know. Those extra long models that the celebrities use all have opaque glass, but I fancy that I caught a whiff of Eau Savage aftershave lingering in the elevator.



Guests at The Regency Hotel on New York's Park Avenue prepare to enter one of the limousines lining the avenue.

Stroll through sidewalks of New York

By JOHN SINOR
Copley News Service

The sidewalks of New York are still the light fantastic, still the trippiest trip here — East Side, West Side, all around the town.

Walk, walk, walk. It's easy. The infinite variety of life fuels the legs and pumps the heart with stamina.

Smell the incredible smells. Hear the incredible noises. Manhattan sounds as if it is forever tuning up, but if you listen close enough and long enough, you can hear the concert the city is playing.

One lady walks down Fifth Avenue in high-fashion pink leather. Another walks along East 26th Street garbed in cardboard boxes, rags and a rug, carrying the rest of her world in two onion bags.

Step lively but watch your step. A police officer holds an arm up like Moses and parts a Yellow Sea of cabs. Quickstep across the street before the sea closes again.

A Jamaican street musician attracts a crowd with sweet Calypso on a homemade steel drum. A terrible country singer draws flies with his lack of voice and music. Go to school, young man. You'll starve on street music.

Manhattan is a fix for newcomers, visitors and natives. David Kleiman, a native, gets withdrawal pains when his work sends him to other cities.

"I know I don't need 582 movie houses, 437 museums, 2,014 delis, and so on," he says, "but I want them around, just in case I do."

Wandering around New York, I get windowlust. There's a nice wristwatch for $32,000. A couple of windows away there's another watch that keeps near perfect time for $5.95. Items you cannot buy in New York have not been invented yet.

You skip and trip from world to world in New York moments. From culture to culture with a few hundred steps. New York isn't a big city. It's 183 small towns. Sometimes you can find good neighborhoods and bad neighborhoods on the same block.

New York is celebrating its 10th birthday as The Big Apple. The seeds were planted by Charles Gillett, president of the convention and visitors bureau, to change a sagging city image.

He borrowed the phrase from that circle of jazz musicians who have long referred to the city as The Main Stem or The Big Apple, meaning, man, that when you play here you have hit it big — the biggest.

I walked through the fun and funk of Greenwich Village, looked for roses in Washington Square, stumbled on the cobblestones of Chelsea, and got a rube's neck ache from looking up along Broadway. But that's OK. If you don't look up, you don't see a lot of things.

An old lady covered with jingle bells jogs in Central Park every afternoon. A Dead End Kid lookalike, with studs on his leather jacket and a Brooklyn accent, says he is an anthropologist and is building a dinosaur in his loft apartment. "Gonna take up mosta da room," he notes.

There are no surprises on the sidewalks of New York.

Manhattan a short fascinating trip

By ROBIN AND PATRICIA HARRIS
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — Most people are swayed by the erroneous belief that the farther the trip the more interesting it will be.

We recently tried to make amends by going on a journey that took us half an hour and found it thoroughly rewarding. The objective was Manhattan's lower tip, where there are more fascinating things to do and see concentrated in less than a square mile than many a much longer trip could offer. As the world's No. 1 center of commerce and finance, the activities of the city continually touch all our lives, which alone makes it well worth visiting.

Our base is the Vista, a new Hilton International hotel. The name is fitting, for its rooms command a sweeping view of one of the most engrossing of all spectacles, the panorama of New York Bay, dominated by the Statue of Liberty.

It is a kaleidoscope of ferries, tugs, barges, sightseeing boats, police cutters, freighters and tankers. Now and then a flag-bedecked cruise liner steams majestically under the Verrazano Bridge, outward bound.

On either side of the hotel are the stupendous 110-story twin towers of the World Trade Center. Atop the north tower is the celebrated Windows On The World, housing eight separate restaurants and bars.

One, the Cellar In The Sky, offers prix fixe dinners with vintage wines and cordials for $60 per person. Prices in the other rooms are on a par with deluxe places generally, averaging about $35 a person with drinks.

On top of the other tower is an open air observation platform, 1,350 feet up, affording an unequalled sight of the city and its environs.

Walking is the most enjoyable and instructive means of exploring this historic section. To the north is the colorful quarter called SoHo, a diverse maze of unique old castiron buildings, reasonably priced restaurants, innovative shops of every variety and some of the city's most unusual art galleries.

To the east are two of New York's best known ethnic neighborhoods, Little Italy and Chinatown. Beyond is the East River waterfront, which is being restored so carefully that it is beginning to resemble drawings of old New York in its heyday as a sailing ship port. Among the vessels moored near the South Street Museum is the mammoth square-rigger "Peking," the longest ever built.

All around us are true landmarks, such as Federal Hall, the nation's first capitol, where Washington was inaugurated in 1789; St. Paul's Chapel, where he worshipped after the ceremony; and Fraunces Tavern, still open for business, where Washington said farewell to his troops in 1783.

Then there are the powerful exchanges, the barometers of business. The daily operations of the New York Stock Exchange and its smaller brother, the American Stock Exchange, as well as the Cotton, Mercantile, Coffee, Tea and Sugar, and Commodity exchanges, affect our very existence. All have visitors' galleries from which the fast and furious action can be observed.

The principal islands in the harbor are Liberty, with its statue and Ellis, through which millions of immigrants entered between 1890 and 1924.

Boats to both islands leave regularly from the Battery at the tip of Manhattan with roundtrip tickets at $1.50. Admission is free, but it might be noted that the elevator to the Statue of Liberty's high observation level costs one dime. Now that stamps are so expensive, this is the lowest charge for any service of the United States government in all 50 states, so you should take advantage of it.

Pat's Notes — SoHo is a real treasure for anyone interested in art, with so many fetching little shops and exhibits that you could — and should — spend hours just wandering.

Two places not to be missed as you stroll are Sweet's, near the East River at Fulton Street, the oldest and possibly best sea food restaurant in the U.S. and, in Greenwich Village, Dean and De Luca, at 121 Prince Street, which sells the gourmet foods and offers one of the best selections of exceptional cookware in all of New York.

World's fair lodging available

Now that Knoxville, Tenn., has proven that it is indeed the world's fairest city by hosting the 1982 world's fair, it must show that staying in the city is as easy as picking up the phone.

With a new interstate system, hundreds of new motels, hotels andparking spaces, one of the world's fairest city has played host to over 2 million visitors in the first months of the six-month fair.

To house the expected 15 million guests, Knoxvillians have opened their homes, college dormitories, campsites, floating homes, motels and hotels. And to make this year's vacation easier, one telephone number will connect with world's fair lodging at 800/251-9600 to reserve any of these accommodations.

In addition to the attractions of the World Fair, Tennessee boasts a national park, acres of recreational lakes, caves and trails for hiking, native arts and crafts, all from the beautiful Appalachian region.

It's a vacation sure to please the whole family.

Is it unAmerican to spend JULY 4TH in a hotel suite?

Not in ours, it isn't.

Because when you check in on our 4th of July Weekend Special, we give each person in your party a free American flag.

That makes it legal.

But the suite you get makes it sheer genius. American-style. It's big and spacious, with separate bedroom, separate living room, dining area, bar, and complete kitchen.

You also get some things you won't find under one roof anywhere else around here. .

- A full American breakfast — cooked-to-order for each person in your party. Absolutely free. Every morning.
- A two-hour open bar party — for all registered adults. Also completely free. Every afternoon.
- A nice, invigorating whirlpool — to loll around in.
- A big, beautiful pool — when you get tired of lolling around the whirlpool.
- A sauna & steamroom — coed, family-style.

If you get tired of all this rest and relaxation, you can always drive over and "flag" the fireworks. But if you do, just remember: you've got a nice cool suite waiting to come "home" to.

$120 for the family any 3 nights 4 days

IRELAND - WIND IS GALWAY'S KEEPER

Galway seems untouched by time, its 18th century charm fresh-scrubbed daily by the rain and wind. The wind whips off the bay, pushing people down cobblestone streets past tea shops and tanneries and bookstores with big wicker baskets filled with books spilling out onto the sidewalks. The wind is the keeper of this Irish city, maintaining a stubborn, untamed spirit, and blowing the dust off the past which is ever present in Galway. — Catherine Grant

BELGIUM - BEER MATCHES THE VERY BEST

La Gueuze!

The champagne of Belgian beers.

Never heard of it? Never tasted it?

Better hop on over to Brussels to educate your taste buds to something rare and exotic. There's nothing like it anywhere else.

The champagne comparison applies more to the bottling than to the liquid.

It has a deep amber color, a heavy body and a winey flavor. The alcohol content is high.

It is corked in heavy champagne bottles and is aged for several years in deep, musty cellars.

La Gueuze is not something your average beer drinker would guzzle daily. Belgians treat it as an aperitif. It's festive and ceremonial. And expensive.

But, between bottles of La Gueuze, you can sample others of the 355 varieties of beer that are the pride of Belgium.

Perhaps you didn't think of Belgium as a beer nation, if you thought about it at all. You probably associate beer with Germany as you think of France and wine.

So the next time you pause for refreshment in the sidewalk cafes of La Grand Place in Brussels, order La Gueuze and you'll be more worldly wise. — George Dissinger

FRANCE - THE SPLENDOR OF CLUNY MUSEUM

A stone's throw from the Sorbonne in the fabled Latin Quarter of Paris, a 13th century house converted into a museum goes largely ignored by thousands of world travelers who put the Louvre or Notre Dame at the top of their sight-seeing lists.

Even on a cold, rainy day when shelter and warmth might be desired more than cultural enlightenment, the Cluny Museum seems hauntingly forlorn. No need to worry about long lines at the admission door here.

Within its walls, the Cluny houses a priceless collection of pre-Renaissance artwork and religious objects. Here the best-known treasures are six "mille fleurs" tapestries called "The Unicorn Tapestries."

Romantic fools gaze lovingly at the lady posing with a unicorn and a lion. Pragmatists hurriedly rush by. Scholars ponder the meaning of the wall hangings. But it's adventurers who seek out the Cluny, who can boast that like Tutankhamun's treasures, they have seen something truly unique. — Preston Turegano

EXPERIENCE IS THE BEST TRAVELER

There are some things the travel agents never tell you. Such as never take your shoes off during a trans-Atlantic flight — unless you want to walk around Heathrow in your bare feet, carrying your shoes.

And no one ever tells you that while the back of the aircraft is the safest place to be, if you sit there during a long flight on a small aircraft you'll never be lonely. The parade for the restrooms starts as soon as the captain turns off the "no smoking" sign — even before the seat belt sign winks off.

My lessons have been dearly bought — and paid for.

Recreation such as drinking requires some knowledge of the area — particularly in the hard liquor line. No one knows how to fix simple drinks.

And even if the bartender recognizes the name of the drink that's no sign you'll recognize the taste. A martini turns out to be a slug of straight vermouth — without even the compensation of an olive. (I don't like to drink on an empty stomach, you see.) Drinks seldom come with ice — you'd think you were in the middle of the South Pacific, not looking out the window at the North Sea.

At the hotel, check the times — not only the check-out time but also at what early hour they lock their doors. That one I learned while standing shivering in the cold and drizzle of an Irish evening outside an international hotel.

Faced with the prospect of spending the night in the Irish mist or making myself a noisy American I preferred the latter — but it took almost half an hour to rouse the staff. Not the other guests, however. They were acutely aware of my plight immediately. In fact, it's fair to say that my problem was their problem. They weren't going to sleep until I could.

If there are "security forces" on the street because of political violence there are two caveats worth remembering. The first is to never photograph them — a significant number are camera-shy, fearing someone wants their picture for more sinister reasons than showing the folks back home what it's like "over there."

Getting caught taking a picture may cost the film and all of the other memories of the trip that are on it. And don't stop armed security patrols to ask directions. That brings too much civic attention to you — from everybody. Having a whole patrol jump out of a jeep and point guns in every direction — including yours — because you're lost is more than embarrassing. Even disconcerting doesn't describe it. — Mark Monday

Vaccine for Travelers' Complaint

By SHARON COHEN
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — An oral vaccine that should be ready for human testing in six months would prevent diarrhea-causing bacteria from sticking to the intestines and could provide relief for millions of travelers, researchers say.

The vaccine, which has been tested successfully on rabbits, could prevent many of the cases of diarrhea suffered by travelers visiting Mexico, South American and parts of Asia and Africa, said Christopher Cheney, a researcher on the project.

Kensington Palace a royal residence

By JANET SUTTER
Copley News Service

LONDON — Just inside the door was a friendly brownish-black Burmese with a red velvet collar, which jumped into a visitor's arms and clung to her shoulder, purring like mad. When asked about the cat's owner, the guard's eyes shifted around a bit, and finally he muttered, "One of the royals." A definite bit of cache, a friendly, homey touch.

If royal cats are around Kensington Palace, can royals be far away?

The prince and princess of Wales will soon have this new address, as well as a new heir. An apartment in London's Kensington Palace will be their house in "town" but, unlike most royal residences, this one is open to the public.

Already Princess Margaret, Prince and Princess Michael of Kent, the duke and duchess of Gloucester and their families live here. The palace is large enough to house all those people and their staffs, and have an impressive wing of state apartments for visitors to see.

One enters via Kensington Gardens (adjoining Hyde Park), where James Barrie was inspired to place the legendary Peter Pan. From Kensington High Street, walk up a broad avenue (where sometimes nannies can be seen pushing prams) and eventually just beyond an impressive statue of Queen Victoria is the sign indicating the entrance to the state apartments.

Inside, after ascending a flight of stairs, is the long queen's gallery, then the queen's closet where Queen Anne and Sarah, duchess of Marlborough had their famous and final quarrel. This was re-enacted on "The Churchills," a popular KPBS series. Nearby is the queen's bed chamber built for Queen Mary II (William and Mary of Orange).

She died in this room in 1694 at the age of 32. The light is subdued as though it were candlelight, and as well as a state bed, there is a handsome writing cabinet in the room. It was opened to the public in 1975, when finally post-World War II restoration was completed. The palace was bombed several times during the war.

This was not initially a palace, but a country house, and the high-ceilinged cupola or "cube" room incorporates remnants of the original Nottingham House. William and Mary acquired the property and started improvements here when the king's asthma suffered too much at Whitehall, due to the proximity of the Thames, and Hampton Court was too far away. The famous architect, Christopher Wren, who also designed St. Paul's Cathedral, planned the additions.

The house continued to change shape over the years, and tenants. Queen Anne, George I and George II lived there; the latter, almost the last reigning monarch in residence. Horace Walpole noted in the 1700s that in one area, "The floor produced a constant crop of mushrooms." In the late 1800s, the state apartments were used as barracks for sentries.

In the cupola room with its ionic pilasters and marble niches with gilded statues, all designed by William Kent, the effect of Roman grandeur is very different from that of the other rooms with their warm wooden paneling. One of the most notable events here was the baptism of a future queen in 1819, and according to one source, her name was still the subject of some family debate while the archbishop of Canterbury held the baby over the font. Finally, Victoria was chosen.

It is upon entering the duchess of Kent's dressing room and Queen Victoria's bedroom, that one experiences a time warp. From the formal 17th century king's gallery, with its huge oil paintings, one is plunged into Victoriana — overstuffed chairs, gewgaws and patterns everywhere, a lovely satin-covered cradle, the queen's toys. It was here Victoria lived until early one morning, she was proclaimed queen at age 18. She left soon after for the newly completed Buckingham Palace.

From the king's drawing room in Kensington Palace, there is a lovely view across the park, with the Round Pond and broad pedestrian avenues in the foreground, and in the distance, the Post Office Tower and the few skyscrapers of Mayfair. Next door is the Council Chamber, now filled with wonderful curiosities from the Great Exhibition of 1851.

In the center are an ivory throne and footstool presented to the queen by an Indian maharaja, and in a display case an extraordinary table fountain with a gold fountain under a gold canopy, with silver horses "prancing" around it on gilt ground. It has silver flamingos on it, too. And, surprisingly, a silver and gilt statuette of Lady Godiva, a gift from the queen to Prince Albert.

GRAMMER-MURPHEY

Course for parents on remarriage and stepfamilies to be offered by Family Services of Midland

Family Services of Midland is offering a course on "Families of Remarriage: Stepfamily Survival", on five Thursday evenings starting July 1. The sessions will be from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m.

John Young, counselor at Family Services and one of the instructors of the course, said, "The course will focus on such harmful stepfamily myths as 'instant love', 'step is less', and 'no difference'. Second, it will address such problem areas as child discipline, the ex-spouse or ex-spouses, loyalty conflicts, unrealistic expectations and the fear of a second failure. Finally, the potential strengths, rewards and satisfactions unique to stepfamilies will be explored. Role playing exercises and group discussions will enable the participants to compare notes and share practical advice with each other as well as drawing on the expertise of the class instructors."

Young defined a stepfamily as "any family in which the husband or wife has a child from a previous marriage. Sometimes the first marriage ended in death rather than divorce. This can lead to even greater than usual loyalty conflicts for the surviving children. Sometimes this is the first marriage for the husband or wife. In this case, he or she is faced with becoming an 'instant parent' without any previous parenting experience. Sometimes both spouses have children from a previous marriage. In such cases, the spouses may disagree on child rearing or may accuse each other of favoritism. Some of the children may live permanently in the home while others may only visit weekends or summers. This can lead to confusion as to the family's boundries."

Despite the tremendous number of possible family variations, all such families share very similar characteristics, produce the same kind of conflicting feelings, and raise many of the same questions about divided loyalties, discipline, etc., Young added.

"Although such families are sometimes called remarried, blended, reconstituted, recoupled, bi-nuclear or even prefabricated families, the term now gaining the widest usage is 'stepfamily'," Young said. "Although life in a stepfamily can often be like an endless group therapy session, such families often need some basic education about the step-situation rather than actual therapy to help them understand and work out their problems."

Young said that remarriage is on the increase. "Thirty percent of the marriages in 1970 involved the remarriage of one or both spouses." he said. "By 1977, this figure had grown to 41 percent. Most of these remarriages involved children from a a previous marriage. There are over 35 million stepparents in America today and the number of stepfamilies is increasing by 1,300 per day."

"Nevertheless, many stepparents feel isolated and alone. They mistakenly believe that 'step is less' and try to conceal their stepfamily status from the community," Young added. "At the same time that the number of remarriages is increasing, the divorce rate for remarriages is considerable higher than for first marriages — 44 percent versus 38 percent."

To help meet the needs of this growing number of stepfamilies, "Remarrieds Inc." — a self-help group — was started in 1968. It now has 18 active chapters in 15 states, plus a chapter in Australia. A second self-help group, the Stepfamily Association of America, was started in 1977. It now has 30 active chapters in 14 states — four in Texas, in Austin, Dallas, Houston and Canyon — plus a chapter in Canada. The independent "Stepparent News" was started out of Gary, Ind., in 1980.

Young said he, along with Jan Mann, co-leaders of the July stepparent survival course, hope to develop a local self-help, support group for stepparents.

Young is a Certified Social Worker (Texas), a clinical member of the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy, and a member of the Stepfamily Association of America. Ms. Mann has been the stepmother of two children since 1976.

The cost of the course is $35 per individual or couple. To register, call Young at Family Services of Midland, 683-4241.

Animals may 'talk' in own language

By BETH MOHR
Copley News Service

Is it possible to converse with animals?

In so many words, no. In other than spoken words, yes. That is the message of Ted Crail's new book, "Apetalk and Whalespeak."

A study of progress being made in scientific attempts to communicate with animals, "Apetalk" deals with both avenues to interspecies communication — understanding animal languages and trying to teach them to understand ours.

Crail's research, including interviews with scientists in the field and observation of animals they work with, has convinced him that communication with other species is a very real possibility.

CRAIL, WHO LIVES IN SACRAMENTO, CALIF., where he serves as director of creative services for the Animal Protection Institute, adds that the conviction is not shared by many scientists.

"The apetalk stories are so extraordinary, so marvelous and so wonderful that a large faction in science has turned away on the grounds that the stories couldn't be true," he said in an interview. "But, you can really prove these days that they are true."

THE MOST STRIKING EVIDENCE recorded by Crail is a project by psychologists R. Allen and Beatrice Gardner of the University of Nevada to teach a female chimpanzee named Washoe to converse in sign language.

The successful sign language project, the author explains, resulted from the failure of an experiment by another husband and wife team, Keith and Virginia Hayes, to teach a chimpanzee named Vicki to utter words.

"The Hayes were able to teach Vicki to say 'mamma,' 'papa,' 'cup' and 'up' in four years," Crail said. "At the rate of one word a year, the experiment was considered a failure."

Watching a film on the Hayes' project, the Gardners saw the possibilities of success in a different approach to communication.

"They suggested that the film be shown without sound," Crail said. "In the silent film, they saw that Vicki was saying quite a bit with gestures."

Vicki had apparently learned the meanings of words but was unable to say them because, Crail explained, chimpanzees do not have the same physical equipment humans use to form speech. The Gardeners acquired Washoe and began an experiment to teach her to converse in a sign language they devised.

Crail writes that "Washoe learned to talk — not perfectly, not fluently, not as a human talks but there were occasional insights in the words she signed and the observations she made."

SCIENTISTS SEEMED TO ACCEPT Washoe's progress in learning signs for clothes, toothbrush, baby, flower and other objects. They "drew back," Crail said, when the chimpanzee made signs that seemed to involve the ability to reason.

When Washoe saw a duck land on water and made the signs for "water" and "bird," the Gardners concluded that she was calling the duck a "water-bird" as a human might do.

"The scientists disagreed," Crail said. "They said that Washoe merely signed that she saw 'water' and a 'bird,' that she did not think up the word 'water-bird' for something she hadn't known about before."

Washoe has been able to be specific in signing what she wants, Crail added.

"She loves raspberries and knew they were growing near the Gardners' home," Crail said. "When she wants raspberries, she makes the signs for 'go sweet.' Any other animal would have to wait until a person came by with raspberries and indicate its desire by reaching for the berries."

IT HAS LONG BEEN KNOWN that primates use a wide range of gestures to communicate with each other. A great deal of early information on the primate communicating system was gained from the observations of the late Belle Benchley, director of the San Diego Zoo from 1927 to 1953 and author of, "My Friends, The Apes," published in 1942.

"Benchley discovered that gorillas have a whole communications system based on beating (rapping)," Crail said. "She watched the way they beat on various parts of their bodies and on things around them. Her discussions on the subject are fascinating.

"She was not a scientist and therefore gained knowledge in a very natural way. She was a great observer and wrote very explicit notes about the behavior of the gorillas."

In his book, Crail explains that when Benchley "encountered puzzles in her investigations," she turned the questions over to scientists and, Crail adds, "She did not try to decode gorilla language in a formal way ... but there was a great temptation to move from what she heard to what it meant."

While scientists such as the Gardners have succeeded in teaching animals a degree of communication with humans, it appears that humans have not succeeded in breaking animal communication codes.

FROM HIS INVESTIGATIONS of scientific studies of animals and sea mammals, Crail is able to report on some fascinating methods these creatures use to communicate but not on what they are saying. Some investigators believe that a breakthrough could be possible, given enough time. One of these investigators is Jim Nollman who made a study of the howling of wolves.

"He (Nollman) tried howling with wolves to see what it was all about," Crail said. "He found that the wolves would admit him to the howling but if he didn't howl right, they would stop and start to pace around until they were ready to give him another chance.

Pills often chosen for family planning

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly five million women visited family-planning clinics in 1980 and 64 percent chose birth control pills as their method of contraception, according to a government report.

The National Center for Health Statistics reported Wednesday that nearly nine of 10 clinic visitors were under 30 years of age, more than 71 percent were white and 54 percent had never had a child.

Couple celebrate golden wedding anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Marvin William McCree, 802 Gulf Ave., celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary Saturday in the parlor of the First United Methodist Church.

The reception was hosted by their children and families, Mr. and Mrs. Allen McCree of Austin and Mr. and Mrs. Michael McCasland of Cincinnati, Ohio.

McCree and the former Lucile Elizabeth Allen were married June 25, 1932, in Abilene. They have two children, and two grandchildren.

They have lived in Bowie, Olney, and Vernon before coming to Midland in 1939.

It was more than a special occasion for the McCree couple who had in attendance Marvin's two brothers, Dwight and Wesley, who have also both celebrated their 50th wedding anniversaries.

"Dwight and his wife, who are from Graham, celebrated their anniversary in 1980, and Wesley and his wife observed their anniversary in 1981," said McCree. "We were all married in June."

Mrs. McCree was a teacher inthe Midland Independent School District and her husband was a sales representative for Armour & Co.

They are members of First United Methodist church. She has been a member of Midland Woman's Club, Delta Kappa Gamma, American Association of University Women and Midland Retired Teachers Association. He has been a member of Midland Rotary Club, Hogan Park Golf Association and Alpha Kappa Psi.

Jigsaws have puzzled fans for a long time

KANSAS CITY (AP) — The jigsaw puzzle, that put-together pastime, has bewitched, bothered and bewildered many a patient soul for the past 200 years.

The Duke and Duchess of Windsor were avid jigsaw puzzlers. So were Bing Crosby, Gary Cooper, Charles Adams and Marilyn Monroe.

This summer jigsaw puzzling will make new headlines when the fastest puzzlers in the nation will compete in timed trials at the first National Jigsaw Puzzle Championships in Athens, Ohio, Aug. 21-22.

Singles, pairs and teams of four will compete for $1,000, $500 and $250 cash prizes in each category, and contestants will match wits piecing together custom-created puzzles made expressly for the contest by corporate sponsor Hallmark Cards.

An English mapmaker, John Spilsbury, invented the jigsaw puzzle in 1760, according to Hallmark researchers. Spilsbury mounted beautifully engraved maps of the world on sheets of mahogany, dissecting them into irregular shapes. The newfangled novelty was right on target as an educational tool and became the rage among children.

Throughout the 18th century, dissected puzzles kept on an educational track with alphabets, nursery rhymes, biblical stories and allegorical tales being added to the fare. While the sobriety of these early puzzles seems dull in comparison to modern tastes, it was a major selling point. As a puzzle box from 1789 proclaimed, it was "suitable for the instruction of youth of all ages, designed to impress upon their minds a love of virtue and hatred of vice."

By the mid-1800s, puzzles were being produced solely for amusement and puzzle makers had expanded their selection to include fine-art reproductions, historical episodes and pastoral scenes more for adults than children.

Queen Victoria described an evening playing jigsaws as "the pleasantest, gayest evening I have passed in some time," the researchers report.

The first American-manufactured puzzle, McCleary & Pierce's "Geographical Analysis of the State of New York," appeared in 1850. The Yanks discovered cardboard was a cheaper commodity to work with and they cut pieces in angles rather than curves to further economize.

The vertical jigsaw which allowed puzzle manufacturers to cut several stacked puzzles at once, was introduced as a replacement for the hand-held marquetry saw, and by the early 1900s the die-cut press came along. The die-cut process, which enables large runs of puzzles to be cut at once, is still in use today.

Although the jigsaw puzzle remained a moderately popular item throughout the 19th century, its "golden age" occurred during the Depression when millions of Americans wanted low-cost, long-lived entertainment.

But high society also got hooked in the '30s and the "par puzzles" — so named because they came with a suggested time considered necessary to complete them — were born.

These super-deluxe, extremely difficult works of art, made by Frank Ware and John Henriques, were cut on five-ply mahogany, packed in black boxes with no picture on the cover and carried a hefty price tag, sometimes as high as $2,000. One of the puzzles, which had 10,000 pieces, was so difficult that no "par" could be determined. It was simply titled "Days and Nights."

Today the 500-piece puzzle is the industry standard, but there are 1,000- and 2,000-piece puzzles available. Every subject under the sun has been used to illustrate a scene — from Abraham Lincoln, the explorer Henry Morton Stanley and the Lusitania to the lighter side of jigsaws featuring Miss Piggy, Mickey Mouse and Little Bo Peep.

There have been X-rated puzzles, as well as a magnetic puzzle for people who like to think on their feet. A psychoanalytic puzzle called "Your Secret Self" was reportedly able to give clues about a puzzler's personality based on the way he or she assembled it.

Today, jigsaw puzzling is one of the country's fastest growing pastimes, accounting for a $40 million industry in the United States alone.

Protections from summer hazards

By RONALD KERMANI
Hearst Feature Service

As summer shuffles into its three-month run, officials in organizations ranging from the Red Cross to the Lightning Protection Institute are ready to compute and compare how many people were drowned, killed by lightning or broke their necks diving into shallow water, among other summer mishaps.

Sweet summertime can be hazardous to your health. Black flies and bears, white lightning, yellow jackets, red ants and green poison ivy are just some of the hazards of relaxing anywhere beyond the front door.

About 7,000 persons drown each summer in the United States, according to Red Cross statistics. One-quarter of all drowning victims are between the ages of 15 and 24; fully half those deaths are from boating accidents.

And no summer passes without at least one frightening display of nature's "underrated killer" — lightning. Standing in an open boat, holding a metal tennis racket or teeing up on the 18th hole with your favorite iron invites the rare — but often fatal — experience of plugging into 30 million volts.

An average of 300 persons are struck and killed by lightning across the country each year, with almost all deaths occurring between May and August, when storms and vacationers are more common, said Marvin Frydenlund, managing director of the Lightning Protection Institute in Harvard, Ill.

An average bolt carries enough juice to power about 3,000 homes for a few seconds and heats the air around it to about 30,000 degrees Fahrenheit, severely burning a person's skin and internal organs, boiling blood and rupturing major arteries.

Precautions are simple and effective. If you're out in a boat, head for land. If you must ride out the storm in an open boat, lie flat. If the boat is aluminum, place seat cushions or life jackets between your body and the hull in case the boat is struck, Frydenlund advises.

Golf games and picnics are frequently interrupted by electrical storms, but people should be wary about the type of shelter they run for, Frydenlund said. Waiting out the storm under an open shelter which is not grounded by lightning rods may be more dangerous than standing outside.

If no lightning-protected shelters are nearby, Frydenlund advises people to seek shelter in a stand of trees or near buildings, but not near the tallest ones. Lightning can strike a tree, arc and strike a person standing nearby. The bolt can also travel down the inside of the tree, boiling the sap and exploding it with the force of a hand grenade. These "side flashes" may cause more deaths and injuries than direct strikes, Frydenlund said.

Golfers are advised not to lean on golf clubs during an electrical storm. Lightning will charge a portion of the earth, and "leaning on a club will direct the path of the current to your arm and chest area if there is ground voltage," Frydenlund said.

A 30,000-degree lightning bolt isn't the only deadly heat vacationers should heed this summer. Heat stroke can kill or cripple if the victim is not treated promptly.

Infants and elderly persons are more prone to heat stroke, which occurs when the body's thermostat — deep inside the brain — malfunctions. The internal body temperature rises dramatically from the 98 degree norm, often reaching 106 or 107 degrees.

The patient should be removed from the hot environment and immediately cooled with ice packs or cool water applied to the trunk on the way to the hospital.

Heat exhaustion is more common than heat stroke, and symtoms differ. Heat cramps and exhaustion are caused by excessive sweating and the lack of water and salts in the body. The patient's skin will feel clammy and sweaty, and the patient may complain of cramps in the abdomen, legs and arms. Persons suffering from heat exhaustion should be moved to a cooler environment and given water and salt, which the body loses by sweating.

As for the perils of picnicking, there's a stomach ache in your macaroni salad, danger on your hibachi and a loathesome itch in the thicket near the tent.

Auntie's mayonnaise-saturated marshmallow, grape and chicken salad may not only taste bad, it may be the breeding ground for millions of bacteria which congregate in the intestines and cause food poisoning. Food should either be kept below 40 degrees or about 140 degrees.

Hibachis and similar outdoor grills are convenient, but avoid overdosing the charcoal with lighter fluid and never use gasoline to light the briquettes.

Flier Earhart knew risk in fatal hop

Amelia Earhart, America's foremost woman flier, lost in a flight across the Pacific in 1937, wrote this in a letter to her husband just before her ill-fated hop:

"Please know that I am quite aware of the hazards. I want to do it because I want to do it. Women must try to do things as men have tried. When they fail, their failure must be but a challenge to others."

Parade of Homes entry features a second story and a basement

A pitched roof allowing space for a second story and a suprising basement are smart distinctions for the Woodcrest Homes entry into the 1982 Parade of Homes, sponsored by the Midland Homebuilders Association. The parade, which runs August 22-29, will feature 30 new homes and will benefit Christmas In April via ticket sales.

Tickets will be $2 to tour all homes.

Builder Joe Long has combined a large open living room space with the graciousness of a cathederal ceiling to accentuate the living area. A fireplace and entry into a garden room add the finishing touches. The second floor bedroom balcony overlooks the living area.

Providing access to the kitchen area and dining room, the living area also has entrance into the covered patio, a study, and stairs to the second floor and the basement.

The kitchen features rich almond colors and plush earthtoned carpeting, plus Roper appliances.

The master bedroom has a cathederal ceiling and a fireplace, plus an outside deck complete with a spa. Dual his and hers shower and tub, plus two vanities and large walk-in closets are featured in the masterbath.

There are two other bedrooms on the ground floor, while a fourth bedroom is located on the second floor. The basement has a 1/2 bath and a large room.

Earth tones dominate the color scheme throughout the house. The yard will be landscaped. The house has 2662 square feet of living space.

Laziness often not real reason for procrastination, researchers say

By IVAN SHARPE
Hearst Feature Service

If you are forever putting things off, consider the plight of University of California psychologists Jane Burka and Lenora Yuen. The counselors have been trying for six months to start writing a book. The subject: procrastination and how to deal with it.

They said they've been too busy, but admitted — with nervous giggles — that their real reason for putting it off is fear of producing a mediocre book, which might stunt their careers.

The two admit they are "moderately reformed" procrastinators. And someday, they'll get around to joining the Procrastinators Club of America, a Philadelphia-based group with 4,000 worldwide members whose dubious annual awards are always worth a laugh.

But wasting time is not a wily art of the lazy and incompetent. Like Yuen and Burka, many are perfectionists or over-achievers with a fear of failure — or success.

The researchers conceded many people put things off without experiencing stress or a gnawing sense of growing anguish. "But it's painful to the people we see. They may tell funny stories about themselves, but deep down it has become a serious issue that is affecting their lives," Burka said.

Procrastination, the psychologists claimed, may be a protection against hidden motivations that can take many forms. It can be used as a cloak to mask feelings of inferiority or to maintain an illusion of brilliance. It can be a means of revenge or a sly, ultimately self-defeating method of rebelling against society's rules and deadlines, they said.

Stephen Klink, a 39-year-old salesman, was always putting off making the contacts that could bring him sales. Klink actually was afraid of failure. And when his sales dropped, he was able to rationalize the reason. If only he'd had time to make the contacts, his sales would have been better.

Now Klink understands his real problem, his sales have begun to improve. "Now I just sit down and let those negative thoughts flow in. Then I move them aside and get things done," he said. His fear of failure was unrealistic, he realized.

Breana Bartholomew, a 25-year-old computer program analyst, was overly optimistic about how long it would take to create a new management information system. So when bugs developed in the testing phase, she was in a panic to make her deadline. She had procrastinated too long.

She realized she was afraid to produce high-quality work because management would expect more from her. And she was already working 70 hours a week. At the same time, her fear of failure meant she was reluctant to attempt new tasks.

Now she is willing to risk mistakes. "I am finding that the lessons you learn from making mistakes are worth more than all the successes," she said.

New Hepatitis B vaccine

By FRANK BLANCHARD
AP Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — A new vaccine available next month for hepatitis B is targeted for high-risk groups like homosexual males, intravenous drug users and patients of mental hospitals, but would have no effect on carriers of the liver disease, federal health officials say.

"It's not a vaccine for everyone in the population. The vaccine is targeted to certain specific high risk groups," said Dr. Mark Kane, an epidemiologist with the national Centers for Disease Control in Phoenix, Ariz.

Other high-risk groups that might be helped by the new vaccine include certain immigrants and refugees, people who come into household contact with carriers of the disease and certain patients who give blood, the CDC said Thursday in the Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

The CDC, reporting recommendations from the Immunization Practices Advisory Committee, said only those at high risk of contracting the disease should be vaccinated in the United States.

"The current strategy of using it with the high risk groups certainly will not eliminate the disease," he said. "But the potential for it (eradication) in the future is there."

People in the intermediate risk group include male prison inmates, employees at mental hospitals and health care workers who frequently have contact with blood, the CDC said. Low risk people include healthy adults and workers who rarely come in contact with blood.

Hepatitis B strikes an estimated 200,000 people a year in the U.S., primarily young adults, and kills an average of 250 people, the CDC said. The risk of contracting the disease varies from nearly 100 percent for high-risk people to 5 percent in the general population.

Hepatitis B, one form of the liver disease hepatitis, is associated with transmission by blood, hypodermic needles and sexual activity, Kane said. Sexual transmisrion occurs primarily in homosexual males, he said.

Ways to create elegance

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. I have a dining room that has no feeling of style or elegance. I have tried to create some structural detail by adding molding around the doors and windows and at the ceiling. I have painted the molding a slightly darker color than the light yellow walls. However, the room is still lacking. I am very much the traditionalist and would love to carry out this feeling, but how? — W.P.

A. You are on the right track when you accentuate the molding with a slightly different shade of your wall paint. Perhaps you need to go further.

Try adding wallpaper to the upper part of your walls and install a chair rail to match the ceiling molding you applied. Leave the lower part of the wall the color it is. A traditional wallpaper print with the wainscoting will give dignity and elegance to the room. If you wish to remain with a yellow color scheme, choose a wallpaper print with some soft yellows, among other colors.

Then repeat some of those colors in other ways in the room, such as the seats of your dining chairs and graceful tieback draperies. Accessorize with care, adding traditional touches including paintings, prints, ceramics, silver and an elegant chandelier.

Q. I am just starting out to furnish my first apartment and I have a few pieces of early American pine — a large chest, a dining table and a small occasional table. I want to create a sort of eclectic look — not strictly a museum atmosphere. My apartment is rather small, with limited natural light so I have painted my walls white.

I am wondering what color or kind of floor covering I should use? I have been thinking about vinyl and carpeting. I really don't have any color scheme yet but I have lots of color in prints and posters I have hung on the walls. I need to buy some furniture but that will have to come slowly because I'm not sure what my budget can stand. — B.C.S.

A. Instead of carpeting or vinyl for your floor, have you considered straw matting? It is available in a variety of widths and is often in a pleasing honey tone that should be great with your furniture. It can give you a casual look in the room and visual interest because of the woven texture. Then, you may add contemporary or traditional upholstered pieces as you feel you can afford them.

If you have lots of color on your walls and the nice wood tones of your furniture, perhaps a neutral look in your room will be just right. Bright pillows and cushions as well as other accessories would allow you to vary your colors as you desire.

Q. I have considered applying fabric to the walls of my bedroom. I have seen some fabrics applied flat and others shirred. Is it hard to apply shirred fabric to a wall? — T.P.

A. Applying fabric to walls isn't exactly easy but it is possible with a lot of patience and some preparation. Check your fabric stores for do-it-yourself directions and be sure you are clear just how to proceed before you actually get the project underway. Usually the type of fabric you wish to apply governs whether you apply it flat or shir it. A heavy fabric such as an upholstery weave can make a very rich wallcovering when applied flat.

To apply flat, thin down white glue and apply it with a paint brush to your wall, applying the precut fabric quickly. Tack in tiny nails across the top to hold the fabric until it dries and then the tacks may be removed. Or staple as you go along and apply a decorative braid to the edges where the staples are.

If you have chosen a very sheer fabric you will probably want to shir that. Figure about three times the wall's width for the amount of fabric you'll want for a good shirred effect. Hem the fabric to create a casing large enough for a pole to slide through. Then slip fabric onto the pole and attach it to the walls with curtain brackets at the ceiling level.

Repeat the procedure at the baseboard so the fabric is tightly shirred and taut. When you come to the doors or windows, proceed in the same manner with a rod holding fabric taut over the doors and windows just like at the baseboard.

DEAR ABBY

Wife's dog becomes bone of contention

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Before I entered into my second marriage, I had a small dog. The dog is housebroken, does not get on the furniture, rarely barks and is in no way destructive.

Now, after four years of marriage, my husband informed me that he has never liked dogs in the house, and he insists that the dog be put outside on a permanent basis. He issued an ultimatum — either the dog goes or he goes.

Naturally, I am heartbroken over this. My husband gave no indication of his seemingly deep-rooted feelings prior to our marriage, or even during the time we have been married up to now.

We've always taken the dog on trips whenever possible, and it was so well-behaved that one hardly knew a dog was around.

I am wondering whether to let my marriage go down the drain over a dog, or if I have to give up my beloved pet. My husband was well aware that I had an "inside dog" when he married me. Please comment but don't use my name or city. — IN THE DOG-HOUSE

DEAR IN: It strikes me as strange that your husband has lived uncomplainingly for four years with a dog in the house, and suddenly he's giving you an ultimatum — the dog or him.

If you really care for each other, you will get counseling and resolve the REAL problem.

I think your husband is using a four-legged animal as an excuse to take a two-legged walk.

DEAR ABBY: My best friend and I have been having a sexual relationship for the past eight months now. It's the natural result of our being very close, confiding friends. We are both married, have young children and our wives are also good friends.

Since we started this relationship, we both feel better about ourselves. In fact, we both feel we have become closer and more sensitive to our wives as a result. Also, we both feel an improvement in our sex life with our wives. I must add that our sex life with our wives was very good even prior to the start of this relationship.

We find nothing wrong with this; we love each other, our wives and children very much. Is there anything wrong in our being so contented? Signed ... CONTENTED

DEAR CONTENTED: If you don't think there is anything "wrong," why are you asking?

DEAR ABBY: We have a big problem in our family. Our daughter-in-law does not want her child (our 2-year-old grandson) to be around his grandfather when Grampa smokes — and Grampa smokes a whole lot.

She said she read that a person could get cancer from breathing secondhand smoke. What do you think? — GRANDMA

DEAR GRANDMA: Let me put it this way: Recent studies show that secondhand smoke can be almost as damaging to the lungs as firsthand smoke, and I think your daughter-in-law is justified in protecting her child.

DEAR ABBY: A while back you had a letter from an actress who deplored the bad manners of people who leave the theater while the cast is taking curtain calls. I share her annoyance wholeheartedly. It's not only bad manners to the cast members who have spent hours entertaining, but also to those of us who remain seated until the curtain calls are over.

The same applies to baseball games. I detest having my feet walked on by people leaving the ballpark during the ninth inning!

I once witnessed a ball game where the home team was behind 7-0. In the last half of the ninth inning the home team got eight runs and won the game! What a thrill those early-leavers missed. — PORTOLA VALLEY FANS

Diesel auto owners warned to take caution

WASHINGTON (AP) — Diesel autos are becoming more popular in this country, and the American Automobile Association warns first-time owners not to treat diesels the same as gasoline engines.

Careful attention to owner manuals is needed, the association reports, to learn about proper care and maintenance for this motor.

Particularly important to diesels are regular relacement of the oil, air and fuel filters. And he AAA notes that diesls may need more frequent engine oil changes than gasoline-powered autos.

The association suggests avoiding fuel additives, particularly ones contaiing alcohol, which can damage plastic parts in the fuel injection pump.

And they say gasoline should not be blended with disel fuel, because this causes a volatile vapor concentration which could explode.

All diesls smoke occasionally, but excessive or unusual smoke may be a sign of something wrong, the AAA says.

Excessive blacksmoke may mean that one of the fuel injectors is allowing too much fuel into he cylinders. If the smoke is blue the engine may be burning oil, and white smoke is usually a sign of low compression. Finally, of there is no exhaust smoke on starting, especially after prolonged cranking, the engne may not be getting eough fuel.

Midland riding group preparing for riding Olympics in Dallas

It's a club composed of a few dedicated members.

Leather and Lace Drill Team, Midland's horseriding club for members, was organized in the fall of 1979.

Right now, the group meets once a week to prepare for the National Mounted Drill Team Olympics held every year in Dallas on the state fairgrounds.

"This is what we strive for—to win at the Olympics," said Cheryl Radtke, president. Contests are held in parade competition, drill competition and precision riding.

"Right now, we have 12 members," said Ms. Radtke. "We've had as many as 25 members, but with Midland being such a transient town, we've lost some members." She added that the club is undergoing a reorganizational effort.

The club meets on Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. behind the Midland County Exhibit Building on East Highway 80.

"Leather and Lace is open to women interested in horses, who ride pretty well and are interested and willing to learn," said Ms. Radtke.

Kenneth Lynch, who is drillmaster, teaches good riding habits, proper sitting techniques, side passing, backing, collecting and basic manners.

"We always take the time to train our new members," said Ms. Radtke. "We have a lot of good team spirit. It takes a lot of gumption to do this type of riding."

She added that each member is responsible for her own expenses and other such things as equipment, transportation, trailer and horse.

"Some of the members are sponsored by individual companies in Midland," she added.

She said that the club has plans to ride in the July 1 Pecos Rodeo. Members will also ride in the Pecos parade at 10 a.m. that day.

"We'll be performing 10 minutes before the rodeo begins at 7:20 p.m.," said Ms. Radtke.

Interested persons can contact her at 683-7336 for more information.

Officers in addition to Ms. Radtke are Cheri Countryman, vice president; Becky Young, secretary; and Bonnie Waibel, treasurer.

Reyes Syndrome and aspirin — The controversy continues

By JOANN RODGERS
Hearst Feature Service

After months of debate and controversy, the Food and Drug Administration has warned parents, physicians and pharmacists of aspirin's link to Reye Syndrome.

Reye Syndrome is a rare, but often fatal, disease that afflicts young children with brain swelling and liver damage, usually while they're recovering from a viral infection. A trio of studies has discovered that the majority of children afflicted with Reye's were given aspirin for fever and pain sometime before the syndrome emerged.

The FDA now requires labels that advise against aspirin's use for children with flu, chicken pox and other viral infections.

But nothing about the Reye Syndrome-aspirin story is as simple as the directive suggests.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control (CDC), after analyzing the cases of Reye's on record, advised against the use of aspirin in the flu season and during outbreaks of chicken pox. The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) followed suit with a similar warning last month.

However, the CDC role in this episode is hardly definitive.

Indeed, the results of a Michigan study recently published in the Journal of the American Medical Association concludes it is "totally speculative" that aspirin use during a viral illness might led to Reye's.

Among other things, the Michigan researchers noted that aspirin use does not explain why Reye Syndrome is so rare (600 to 1,200 cases a year) while aspirin use is so common.

According to Pediatric Alert, a newsletter for physicians, the only thing research has demonstrated is that "children with Reye Syndrome are more likely to have taken aspirin prior to their illness than would be expected."

It may be that children destined for Reye Syndrome appear somehow sicker to their parents and prompt the parents to administer drugs of any kind more often than mothers of children not at risk for Reye. And since aspirin is the most widely used over-the-counter drug, that's the medicine that's been implicated.

These kinds of doubts led the FDA to refrain from joining the CDC and the AAP in its warnings until its experts had time to evaluate the evidence.

The Department of Health and Human Services' news release on the subject, dated June 4, stated that "it was the concensus of the scientific experts at the completion of an open hearing May 24 that its analysis "supported the earlier evidence of salicylates (aspirin) and Reye Syndrome association and was sufficiently strong to warrant warning health professionals and parents."

What that statement did not say is that it was the concensus of the scientists on the panel that none of the research evidence linking aspirin to Reye was considered terribly good.

Dr. Richard Johnson, Eisenhower Professor of Neurology at Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions, and a co-chairman at the May 24 hearing, says the panel confirmed the association between aspirin and Reye. "But it did not make any recommendation for labeling or other action."

"We actually agreed that the data were poor, and that it was likely to be impossible to get better data.

"While we certainly agreed that all physicians should be made aware of the association there was no concensus on what or how to tell parents and patients. Aspirin is a very good and a very safe drug that has been used for more than 100 years.

"There was concern about panicking parents of children with diseases like juvenile rheumatoid arthritis. These children need aspirin and there are no reported cases of Reye Syndrome in them, although they take huge doses. There was also concern about panicking adults who take aspirin and who are at no risk of Reye at all."

It may be undesirable, as well as unfair, for example, to require all aspirin products, including medications not intended for children, to contain the warning. Another option — to remove from labels the information that aspirin is useful for flu symptoms — does a potentially great disservice to adults. Aspirin is still the drug of choice, in the opinion of many physicians, for adult flu symptoms.

Another consequence may be that parents and physicians will stop treating most fevers with drugs of any kind. That action might lead in some cases to fever convulsions and brain damage in a few children.

On the other hand, it might please many scientists. In recent years, evidence has mounted that parents overtreat fever with aspirin and aspirin substitutes.

There is, according to pediatric experts, rarely a medical reason to treat any fever of under 103 degrees Fahrenheit with anything other than tepid baths and fluids. None of this, however, was discussed in the HHS statement.

Intentionally or not, the HHs statement may, by carrying the weight of the federal government, lull the public into believing the controversy has been settled. It has not.

Rental cars

By ERMA BOMBECK

Rental cars are like blind dates.

They sound terrific over the phone, but personality isn't everything.

The car rental people make it sound so easy. You step off the plane and your wheels are waiting for you. What they don't tell you is:

Where do you stick the key that opens the door?

How do you get the seat back so you can fit under the steering wheel?

How do you get the motor to turn over?

Where are the lights?

How do you get out of the parking lot?

It doesn't make sense. You're being thrown together with $7,000 worth of electronics but you've had more instruction on how to ride an elevator.

Ever sit in traffic and try to pick out people driving rental cars? It's easy. He's usually the guy with the windshield wipers going back and forth when the sun is shining. Or the woman who releases her hood going 60 miles an hour on the expressway . . . with her eyes closed.

Recently, I rented a talking car. From Japan. My car doesn't talk. It's tried to communicate on a few occasions, but it sounded expensive so I ignored it.

No sooner was I settled in this car than a voice said, "Your trunk is open." Now that line may be a scream in Japan, but not to me, who couldn't find the trunk in the first place and whose luggage was piled on the front seat beside me.

The voice had other phrases. "Your deft door is open. Your right door is open. Your lights are on. Your seat belt is unfastened."

"Your brake is on," she said mechanically.

When I returned the car, the girl at the desk said, "Where are your keys?" I motioned to the parking lot. "Let her tell you."

There was the car sitting alone in the darkness with a voice saying over and over, "Your keys are in the ignition. Your keys are in the ignition. Your keys are in the ig—"

Would it have killed her to tell me how to get them out?

Put'em up, America

IT'S CANNING AND FREEZING TIME AGAIN

Putting 'em up, or putting by, is an early nineteenth century expression for canning fresh fruits and vegetables, and saving them for use during the winter months when many kinds of foods became scarce.

Once a way of life throughout America, pickling and home canning is becoming increasingly popular. For it gives us an opportunity to taste a simpler lifestyle from a bygone era perceived as friendlier and more family oriented.

Pickling and Home Canning Finds Popularity Booming!

In the good ol' summertime we find a tremendous variety of fresh fruits and vegetables to please our palates. But the summer season is a short one. So it's not surprising that along with peaches, cucumbers and vine-ripened tomatoes, come thoughts of home canning and pickling.

Pickling and canning gives you a sense of personal satisfaction and accomplishment. And you'll find it saves you money, too. How much depends on whether you grow your own fruits and vegetables or purchase them from the supermarket.

In any case, you'll find that foods you've put up yourself are especially delicious. Because unlike store bought foods processed for the mass market, home canning allows you the freedom to prepare foods according to your own individual taste.

When pickling and canning, it is important that you use glass jars specially tempered to withstand high temperatures. These jars are easily recognized by the fancy patterns or manufacturers' names, such as Kerr, that are blown into them. Generally, such jars are available in half pint, pint and quart sizes.

After you've processed the jars with the delicious foods you've prepared, it is always best to test them for possible leaks that can bring on unwanted bacteria. After cooling, one method is to tap the metal lid lightly with a spoon. The tapping should produce a clear, ringing note. If you've over-packed the jar slightly, and the food touches the inner seal, it is still safe to store if tapping produces a sound that's dull, but not hollow. A hollow or dull-hollow sound indicates that the jar is not sealed properly. The food should be reprocessed using a new lid, or refrigerated and consumed at once.

The time you spend on home canning is well worth it. Opening a jar of fruits or vegetables you've put up is like unlocking a taste of summer on a cold winter's night. And, as a holiday gift, nothing is more appreciated than a basket or preserves you've prepared yourself.

DILL PICKLES

4 pounds 4-inch pickling cucumbers
1/4 cup pickling salt
2-3/4 cups Heinz Distilled White Vinegar
3 cups water
14 heads fresh dill
28 peppercorns

Wash cucumbers; cut in half lengthwise. Combine salt, vinegar and water; heat to boiling. Pack cucumbers into clean jars. Add 2 heads dill and four peppercorns to each jar. Pour vinegar solution over cucumbers to within 1/2-inch of top making sure vinegar solution covers cucumbers. Cap each jar at once. Process 10 minutes in boiling water bath . Makes 6-7 pints.

STRAWBERRY-PEACH JAM

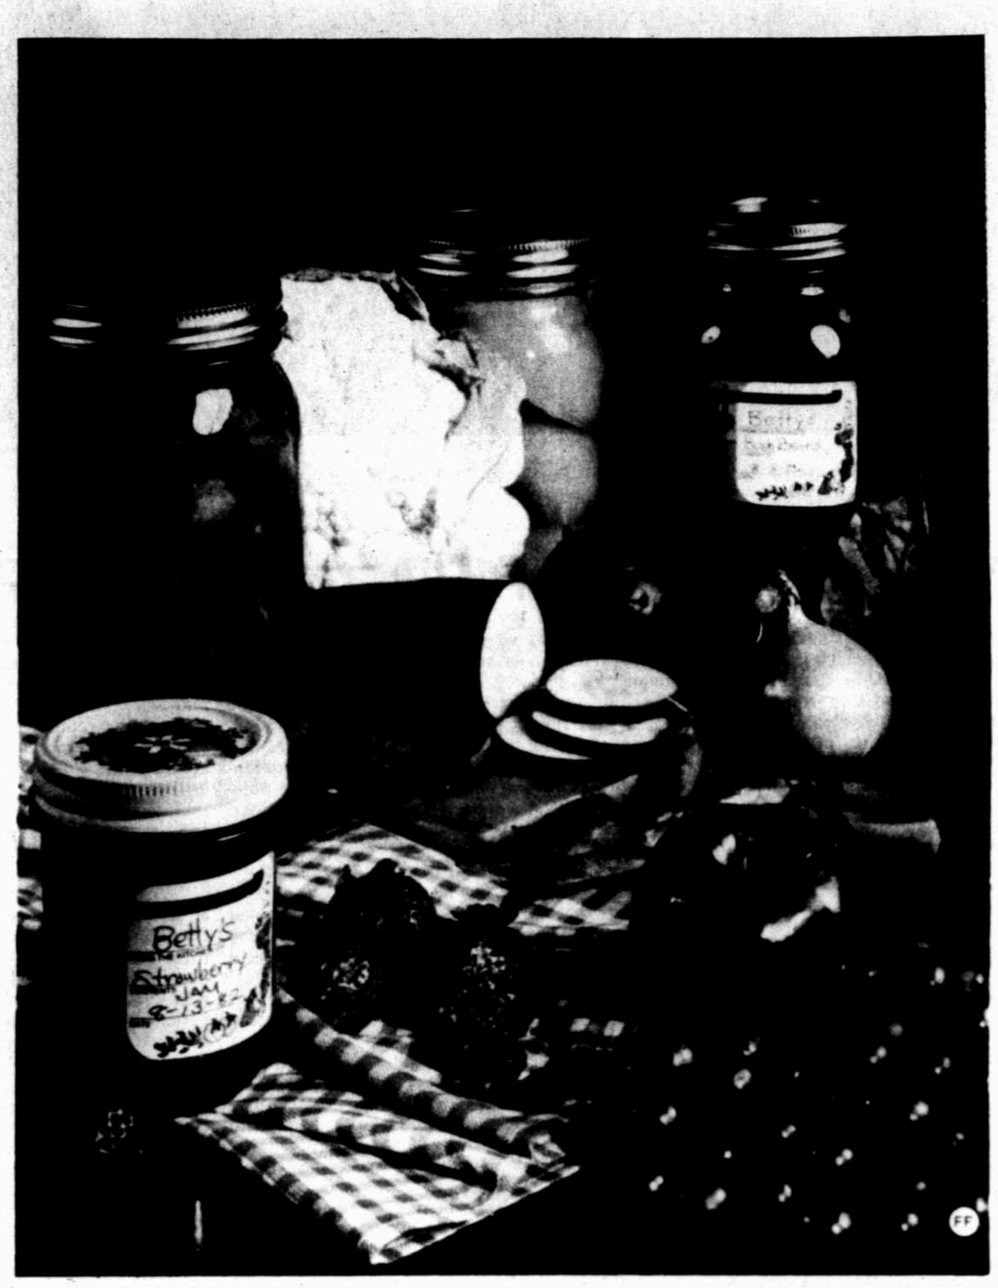
4-1/4 cups prepared fruit (about 1 qt. fully ripe strawberries and 1-1/2 lb. fully ripe peaches)
2 tablespoons lemon juice
6 cups (2 lb. 10 oz.) sugar
1 box SURE-JELL® Fruit Pectin

First prepare the fruit. Stem and thoroughly crush, one layer at a time, about 1 quart strawberries. Measure 2-1/4 cups into 6- or 8-quart saucepot. Peel and pit about 1-1/2 pounds peaches; finely chop or grind. Measure 2 cups; add to strawberries. Add lemon juice.

Then make the jam. Measure sugar and set aside. Mix fruit pectin into fruit in saucepot. Place over high heat and stir until mixture comes to a full boil. Immediately add sugar and stir. Bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and skim off foam with metal spoon. Ladle quickly into hot jars, filling to within 1/4 inch of top. Cover and process in boiling water bath for 5 minutes.

Makes about 6-1/2 cups or 7 (8 fl. oz.) jars.

Pickling and home canning is relatively easy. And it provides a rewarding experience for the entire family. Right now, a free booklet filled with many handy tips and recipes is available. To get your free copy, send your name and address, along with 50¢ (check or money order) to cover postage and handling, to Home Pickling and Canning Booklet, P.O. Box 2001, Dept. B, Willow Grove, PA 19090.



Eating the eggplant

By DIANE SAVAGE
Copley News Service

Once believed to be poisonous, the eggplant is now a very popular vegetable, particularly with vegetarians. Because of its fleshy texture and its size, it makes a good substitute for meat in such recipes as Veal Parmigiana. Instead of veal, the vegetarian can cut slices of the vegetable to make Eggplant Parmigiana. Equally delicious, and it costs less too! Eggplant also adds texture and flavor when included in spaghetti sauces or soups. A recipe for spaghetti sauce which calls for meat can be rendered palatable to vegetarians by substituting 1-inch cubes of eggplant, breaded and fried in a little olive oil or butter. (A little chopped celery is good, too.)

The eggplant is surely one of the strangest-looking vegetables. The glossy purple fruit of the plant is oval (which accounts for its name), and can grow to be almost as large as a football. The plant on which the vegetable grows is one of the most beautiful in the garden and grows to about two to three feet in height. It has large, grayish-green leaves which are slightly hairy and have a light purplish tinge to them. The flowers from which the fruit develops are a lovely deep lavender, with yellow centers. So if you are planning a garden this summer, do include the eggplant — if only for the beauty it will add to your backyard.

In selecting an eggplant at the grocery store, look for a smooth, shiny surface; if it's soft and puckered in places, it is probably past its prime. The eggplant entrees described below would go well with a tossed green salad and some fresh hot bread. Add perhaps a light white wine and a fruit and cheese platter for dessert and you've scored a real winner.

STEWED EGGPLANT

2 large eggplants
Olive oil to taste
Salt to taste
2 large onions
3 cloves garlic, minced
cup olive oil
3 large tomatoes
1 cup cooked, chopped spinach
¼ cup chopped chives
½ cup chopped celery leaves
1½ tsp. oregano
Pepper to taste
2 tbsp. lemon juice
¼ cup sesame seeds

Peel and slice the eggplants lenthwise, -inch thick. Cut eachslice again into two or three lengthwise strips. Arrange the slices on baking sheets, brush them with olive oil and salt them lightly. Put them in a preheated medium broiler for about seven to ten minutes, or until the eggplant starts to turn golden brown. Turn the slices over, brush the other side with olive oil, salt the slices, and put them back in the broiler till the other side is golden as well.

Meanwhile, peel and chop the onions, mince the garlic, and saute them in olive oil until the onions are translucent. Cut the tomatoes in thin wedges and add them to the onions, along with the spinach, chives and celery leaves. Simmer the mixture for about another 10 minutes, then stir in the oregano, salt and pepper, and the lemon juice.

Put a few tablespoons of this sauce in the bottom of a fairly large, fireproof casserole and arrange of the broiled eggplant slices over it. Spoon some more sauce over the eggplant and continue layering until all the eggplant is used up. Cover the last eggplant layer with the remaining sauce.

Put a close-fitting lid on the casserole and simmer the vegetables together over a medium flame for 10 minutes.

Toast the sesame seeds by spreading them on a cookie sheet and putting them in a 350-degree oven. Give them an occasional stir and remove when golden brown.

Sprinkle the toasted sesame seeds over the eggplant just before serving. Serves five to six.

SAUTEED EGGPLANT SLICES

1 medium eggplant cup fine dry bread crumbs cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese
2 tsp. salt
½ tsp. celery seed
¼ tsp. freshly ground black pepper
2 eggs
2 tbsp. milk
Flour for dredging
Oil or melted vegetable shortening

Peel and cut the eggplant into slices ½-inch thick. Set aside.Combinethe bread crumbs, cheese, salt, celery seed and pepper. Set aside. Beat together the eggs and milk. Set these aside. Dip the eggplant slices in the flour, then in the eggs and milk, then in seasoned bread crumbs. Saute in a 10-inch skillet in hot oil or shortening until golden, turning to brown both sides. Drain on hot paper toweling. Serves six to eight.

EGGPLANT SOUP

3 lbs. eggplant
2½ tsp. salt
2 tbsp. olive oil
4 cloves garlic, minced
1 tbsp. paprike
¼ tsp. ground cumin
2½ cups hot water
¼ cup finely chopped celery
1 cup finely chopped onions
3 tbsp. butter
½ cup cream
2 cups milk
Pinch of hot paprika
Freshly grated Parmesan cheese and croutons for garnish

Price the eggplants in several places with a fork and bake themin a 375-egree oven for 40-50 minutes, depending on their size. The skins should be wrinkled and the eggplant soft when removed from the oven. As soon as they are cool enough to handle, cut them open and scrape all the eggplant out of the skins. Puree the eggplant with two teaspoons of the salt in a blender and put aside.

Heat the olive oil in a large pot and add the minced garlic. Cook the garlic, stirring often, until it is golden; then stir in the paprike, cumin, and the remaining ½ tsp. salt. Heat the spices in the oil for about ½ minute, then add the hot water and simmer the broth gently for several minutes. Next, saute the finely chopped celery and onions in the butter until onion is golden and beginning to brown. Combine these with the eggplant puree and stir all of it into the broth.

Add the cream, milk and a little pinch of hot paprika. Simmer the soup for another 10 to 15 minutes, stirring occasionally, then taste to correct seasoning, if necessary. Serve hot with croutons and grated Parmesan cheese. Serves six to eight.

Art of pickling works magic

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

One of the oldest forms of food preservation is pickling, an art that predates written history.

Cleopatra regarded pickles as an aid to beauty and health. She introduced the method to Julius Caesar, who added pickled foods to the diet of the Roman legions to keep his warriors in good physical shape.

An informative and entertaining book on pickling and the more recent method of canning has appeared. It contains a wide variety of recipes for all kinds of food from wine jelly to ceviche, a method of "cooking" fish in lime juice, without bringing it near a stove. ("The Complete Book of Canning." Ortho Books. 575 Market Street, San Francisco, CA 94105).

Both pickling and canning, the book points out, capture nature's bounty at its peak and preserve it for future enjoyment.

Technically speaking, a pickle is either the brine (salt dissolved in liquid) or any food that is so preserved. But there are other methods, such as marinating in the juice of citrus fruit, or simmering in a spicy sweet-sour syrup.

Some 4,000 years ago, the Chinese, responsible for so many culinary firsts, became aware of the preservative qualities of brine. And the ancient Babylonians pickled their fish.

The Europeans learned centuries ago how to pickle food and to this day they use the method to preserve fish, meats and vegetables. Prime examples are the pickled herrings of Scandinavia and the pork and sauerkraut of Germany.

Pickles may be sweetened, peppered, dilled or soured. Most pickled foods are preserved in cans or jars, but some are simply marinated, refrigerated and eaten.

One of the quickest methods is ceviche, in which raw fish placed in lime juice "cooks" so that it looks and tastes poached, as in this recipe from the book.

CEVICHE

Juice of three limes
1 tomato, peeled, seeded and diced
1 avocado, peeled, pitted and diced
3 green onions, sliced thin
2 garlic cloves, minced
2 fresh or canned Serrano or Jalapeno chilies, seeded and chopped fine
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
½ teaspoon dried oregano
Parsley sprigs for garnish
Lime wedges for garnish

Cut fish into small cubes, place in glass bowl and cover with lime juice. Cover bowl with plastic wrap and let fish marinate 4 hours in refrigerator, stirring several times. Drain fish and mix with remaining ingredients. Garnish each serving with a sprig of parsley and lime wedge. Serve promptly. Serves 4.

Microwaving just for the two of you

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

An intimate candle-lit dinner for two usually sparks feelings of special romance. What a lovely way to let someone know how you feel, by preparing that exotic midnight treat, breakfast in bed or a truly different dinner.

Add an unusual touch by filling the room with candles. Float several fresh gardenias in crystal bowls to perfume the air. It is good to bear in mind that the mood you set is as important as the meal itself, and certain culinary treats are imagination weavers in themselves.

From the pure and simple to the elaborately complex, all meals become easier when you use the shortcuts only a microwave oven can provide. Several of these helpers are:

For warm, damp towels with which to clean up after indulging in finger foods, wet washcloths with a water and lemon solution. Wring out, fold or roll, and heat in a wicker basket.

For fancy desserts that flame on, heat brandy in a glass measuring cup for 10 to 15 seconds. Pour over the dessert and ignite.

If cheese and crackers grace your menu, warm the cheese first, as it is tastier at room temperature. An ounce of cheese requires 15 seconds of cooking time on high heat. Allow it to stand for 1 minute after removing from the oven.

TROUT BREAKFAST

2 frozen trout (1 pkg., about 10 oz.)
2 tbsps. butter or margarine
¼ sweet pepper, cut in strips
Salt, pepper
¼ cup water
Juice of 1 lemon
1 yellow summer squash or 10 asparagus spears
Hollandaise sauce (optional)

Place rinsed trout on buttered individual plates. Arrange sweetpepper stris on fish, season with salt and pepper, dot with butter or margarine. Add water to plates, squeeze lemon over fish. Clean and cut squash or trim asparagus spears. Arrange alongside fish, season. Cover with wax paper, cook 5 minutes. Rotate plates, turn vegetables if necessary, cook 2 minutes longer, until vegetables are tender and fish is opaque and white to the bone when pierced with a fork. Serve with hollandaise sauce, if desired.

HOLLANDAISE SAUCE

¼ lb. (½ cup) butter or margarine
3 egg yolks
1 tbsp. lemon juice
Dash cayenne pepper

Cut butter or margarine into four pieces, soften in shallow bowl,5 seconds Stir egg yolks, lemon juice and seasonings together, add to butter or margarine, blend well. Cover bowl with wax paper, cook 5 seconds. Stir, cover, cook 10 seconds, repeat until sauce is hot. Serve at once, or cover and store in refrigerator. Makes about ¾ cup. Reheat in the microwave about 1½ minutes. If the sauce should curdle, whisk in 1 tablespoon boiling water, a little at a time, to restore smoothness. Or, stir in one ice cube, over low heat.

ROCK CORNISH GAME HENS AUX CERISES

2 Rock Cornish hens
2 tbsps. butter or margarine
Salt, pepper
1 can (8 oz.) pitted bing cherries
¼ cup dry red wine
1 tsp. lemon juice
1 tbsp. cornstarch

Rub Rock Cornish hens with butter or margarine. Season with saltand pepper Arrange birds, breast side down, on saucers in a 10-inch glass pie plate. Cover with wax paper, cook 10 minutes. Brush hens with drippings, turn breast side up, cover, cook about 10 minutes longer until they test done. Let stand 5 minutes. In small bowl combine liquid from cherries, wine, lemon juice and cornstarch. Cook until sauce is thickened and clear, 4 minutes. Add cherries, heat. Pour sauce over Rock Cornish hens on platter.

MINUTE SOUFFLE

2 oz. German sweet chocolate
1 tbsp. rum
1 tbsp. cornstarch
2 eggs, separated
Dash salt

Melt chocolate in a cup, about 1½ minutes. Stir rum withcornstarch. Add t chocolate. Beat egg yolks until very light, add chocolate mixture. Beat egg whites stiff with salt, fold into chocolate mixture. Pour into 12-ounce souffle dish, cook 1 minute, until well puffed. Serve at once.

Sonia Rykiel and her new line of knits, both have French accent

By LUCRETIA STEIGER
Copley News Service

NEW YORK — Her orange-dyed hair creates a halo around her thin face and emphasizes her green eyes lightly shadowed in gray.

Parisian designer Sonia Rykiel, whose name has been known as a knitwear expert for years, fingers the huge bronze baubles at her ears and talks about what makes her tick. She was in her New York showroom briefly to introduce a new line of lower priced knits at the fall fashion shows here this week.

"Designing knitwear," she says, "is my way to explain what I want to say to the people. It's part of the movement of the body, life, the way women are today."

She speaks in a soft French accent, often seaching for the English word she needs with expressive hand gestures.

"Women must find clothes that will help them be themselves. Women must find clothes which will become part of themselves. That is what I can provide with knits. I design to take care of myself, and I am like other women.

"DESIGNING IS A hard business, difficult. It's the only discipline in the world which requires that we do something different each six months, that we change, and yet that we be the same so people will know what we do.

"I work always. I never stop. There is no end. It is my life.

"I get my ideas from one flower, a color, a tree, everything I see in the world. People say to me 'you are known for your hair' but I don't like that. I am more than my hair."

Rykiel is thin and fragile, a wispy figure in tunic-length black jacket decorated with round bronze discs over a black sweater and black mid-calf pants. She almost always wears black or white.

Her new collection of knits from Hong Kong features black sweaters, white sweaters, and black and white striped sweaters, along with other colors. The classic "Rykiel silhouette" is long, lean and slimming; there is a mid-thigh length tunic over a narrow skirt to just below the knee, and pants in various lengths. Ruffles and a knit cape add softness and the primary colors are gray, beige, blue, green, yellow and red.

She decided to introduce the new collection, which will sell from about $50 to just over $100 in the stores, because she was "tired of being copied quickly.

"I decided that rather than see inferior imitations, it was best to create a line which I, myself, would design.

"IT WAS THE RIGHT moment because everybody always copies me. I needed new options, too; it's a new push for me. It's Rykiel, but another side of Rykiel. It's the same thinking, but completely different." Contrary to her couture line which is knit of pure wools in Italy, her low-priced line of less-dramatic, sportier styles is made in Hong Kong from lamb's wool, angora and nylon blends.

Rykiel, 50, became a designer 18 years ago when she married a man in the fashion industry. They had two children, and she launched a designing career, before they were divorced. Now she lives with a man in Paris, but has no intention of marrying him.

"It is not my thinking to get married. I want to be free."

She has recently written a book about her life — "And I Wandered Naked" — which has been published in Europe and Japan.

Rykiel says, "Why not?" when asked her opinion of the proliferation of designer clothing today.

She shrugs her thin shoulders (staying thin is important to her because "I need to be protected") and lapses momentarily into French, then says that all of the women of the world need all the designers.

AND SHE ADDS THAT she is just like all the other designers: worried, anxious and nervous before every collection comes out.

"Every designer is always in doubt, even if she is well-known and everything goes well," she says. "It's still difficult to come out with new ideas every six months. And you have to keep doing that, year after year."

She shrugs, rolls her eyes and smiles.

"Alors," she says briskly, "that's it then."

HINTS FROM HELOISE

How to care for countertops

DEAR HELOISE:
My bright apple green countertops are very porous and stained. Most of the stains seem to be from coffee, tea and rust.

I've tried many things but the only results are lighter marks where I've scrubbed. Help! — Phyllis Kanoff

Countertops seem to be the hub of activity in most households. Not only are three meals a day prepared on them but plants are repotted, projects of all kinds performed, and they're the base for all the in-between snacking and cooking that goes on. No wonder counters look like they do. (What kid wipes up the purple jelly he spills while fixing a sandwich... ?).

Baking soda will remove most stains on laminated counters but, for really stubborn ones, as a last resort only, a mild solution of bleach and water will brighten them up. Continued use of bleach, plus using too strong a solution, eventually will eat away the protective glaze of the counter covering, so be careful.

And speaking of removing the glaze, nothing could be more abrasive and harmful to these beautiful countertops than powdered abrasive cleansers. I know many of us have been brought up thinking the only way to get anything really clean is with a powdered cleanser. We're all suffering the consequences of that thinking too. — dull sinks, bathtubs, tiles, etc.

Once the finish has dulled, there's not much you can do to restore the shine since it's no longer there. Some apply a wax coating and that helps but be careful as food can come in contact with this wax.

Hope this brightens your day, as well as your countertops. — Heloise

FREEZING POTATOES
Dear Heloise: With plenty of fresh Irish potatoes in my part of the country, here's how I freeze some of them.

I pick out the small ones, scrub them well in cold water and remove the skins or scrape them off.

Working with only a few at a time, I boil them in a pan of water for five to eight minutes, depending on the size.

After draining and allowing to cool, I package them and put them into the freezer.

When thawed, these potatoes can be used in most potato dishes except french fries, and will keep in the freezer for several months. — W.R.

EASY FIND
Dear Heloise: I have three different lipstick shades that are all in identical tubes.

To avoid hunting the name of the color in small print each time I use one, I marked the top end of each tube with a matching shade of fingernail polish.

Now I can tell at a glance which tube contains which color. — Kathleen Anderson

UTENSIL DRAWERS
Dear Heloise: I have my silverware in a shallow drawer with the spoons and forks nesting upright.

Upon closing the drawer I would bend the tines of the forks and prick the upper part of the drawer.

So I inverted the forks and now I have no more problems. — Edith Crump

MESS-LESS WATERING
Dear Heloise: To avoid dripping water on the floor, carpeting or furnishings when watering those lovely hanging baskets in your home, water your plants with ice cubes.

The cubes melt slowly giving the plant a good soaking and saves all that dripping!! — Carolyn Larson

Jack McMillan

FOCUS: Jack McMillan
He plans golden anniversary at ARCO

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Jack McMillan, 61, plans to hold out just a little longer, so he can celebrate his golden anniversary with Atlantic Richfield Company. He celebrated 45 years with the company June 26; 24 of those have been in Midland.

"I can pretty well make it to 50 without going too much beyond (age) 65," he said with a grin.

As the province landman for ARCO Exploration Company in Midland, McMillan is responsible for all the territory between Fort Worth and El Paso, including Roswell, N.M., and from San Antonio to Amarillo.

His fellow employees threw him a surprise party at the Petroleum Club last week. ARCO officials from Dallas, as well as his six children, flew into Midland for the affair.

McMillan's long career parallels the growth and evolution of the oil industry and of Atlantic Richfield in particular.

He started when he was 15.

HE LICKED STAMPS and handled stationery requisitions in the mailroom at the old Houston Oil Company. It was one of the oldest independents at the time, having been chartered in 1902.

In 1956, the company was bought out by Atlantic Refining Company, itself a forerunner of Atlantic Richfield.

After graduation from Sam Houston High, McMillan entered the oil field full time, first as a material handler and warehouseman. During 1938, '39 and '40, he lived out of a suitcase, traveling to six or seven different oil fields in South Texas.

He lived in some "interesting places," like Bruni, a wide spot in the road about 35 miles northeast of Laredo. "The company had what they called a resort down there. It was a big old Spanish house built around a swimming pool. I lived out there by myself. There were servants.

"For a 19-year-old kid, it was pretty good living," he said laughing.

Later he lived in a whistle stop on the railroad, Mount Lucas, about 25 miles from Beeville, in an abandoned pipeline station barracks.

"I was put up in there all by myself, just me and the big rats."

IT WAS THERE that McMillan took on another duty, loading and gauging railroad tank cars. Gauging methods were no different then than now. He was not aware of any crude oil thefts or "misreadings" of the gauge.

"About the only theft I ever heard about, in those days, was...we had a well over near Corpus Christi, on Nueces Bay. We had a problem with some of the people in town, mostly young people, who would come out and load up their car with a high grade distillate from the well we had. What they were able to put in their cars was not missed. It was a cat and mouse game."

McMillan followed a drilling rig for a few months, but decided that wasn't for him after he almost got his arm cut off.

"I didn't go back on a rig floor after that."

McMillan had two dreams: to be an oil scout, and a landman. He did both, and many other jobs, from gas measurement to being in charge of permit crews for seismic work.

THE PERMIT phase of his career took him to South Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas.

"One time we were working out of Mamou, La., and we were shooting down the road, using dynamite. One of the landowners had claimed we had sunk his house, and so I jumped in the car and rushed over there.

"We walked into his living room, and I could see sky between the ceiling and chimney. There wasn't a door in the house that would close. There's no question that the house had settled. It's just sitting on that marshy gumbo anyway. He was convinced that our shooting had caused it."

Houston Oil Company ended up paying the homeowner for damages, but that wasn't the last of it for McMillan.

"The amusing part came later. I happened to be in Crowley, La., to see a doctor who was a landowner. He was telling me about a patient of his who had bragged that he'd gotten this oil company to make his house level, when it had been sinking naturally through the years.

"I told him it was my company."

AS A SCOUT, most of his work was routine, but there were times when McMillan sat a half block away from a location and counted stands of pipe through his binoculars, to determine the drilling depth.

By 1950, McMillan had made his way into landwork, and there he stayed.

He still loves nothing more (other than fishing and boating on Lake LBJ) than to go out in the field and dicker with a rancher over a piece of land.

"There's nothing like personal contact."

During the winter of 1957-58, his gift for personal contact led him to buy the most expensive lease the company had yet obtained in the Williston Basin, North Dakota, at $125 an acre.

"I'd been working on this man for almost a year. I drove out to his place, five miles south of the Canadian border. I went to his back door and the thermometer read 45 degrees below zero. Oh, it was cold. We went on into his kitchen and signed the lease.

"That property is now producing and has been for 23 years."

HAPPILY FOR McMILLAN, during that same winter he was transferred to Midland.

He is proudest of his work in 1979 in the Val Verde Basin. "The company set out on a leasing program, and before it was all over, I had put the company into over 600,000 acres of land, and I'm not bragging when I say I almost did it singlehandedly.

"I was able to do this because of my prior contacts with ranchers. We had made this play in 1959, and at that time I met an awful lot of ranchers in the Val Verde Basin. Of course, in 1959, we didn't have that many acres. There was more competition back then."

ARCO is drilling its second well in the basin, which is located in Val Verde, Edwards and Terrell counties. The shales stand on end in the region and can grab the drill bit, and there are high pressure zones, making drilling there "treacherous and expensive," he said.

Had McMillan noticed any changes in the ranches since 1959?

"I dealt with mostly the same ranchers I dealt with over 20 years ago. We had something to latch onto and reminisce about. The ranches didn't look much different in 1979 — if anything, they looked better."

PRICES, HOWEVER, do not look better. "The prices have escalated unbelievably. Back in '59, you could lease anything down in Val Verde County for $3 to $5 an acre. But lately, it's up to as high as $75 an acre.

"We're being more selective in our buying. We're walking away from some possible leases. I can't blame the landowners, but there comes a point when a compnay has to say 'no.' I'm talking about raw acreage."

McMillan isn't really surprised to see how much the company has grown since the early days.

"When we got Robert O. Anderson of Hondo Oil, there was no question in my mind as to where this company was headed. He was a dynamo. You knew after visiting with him just a short while that he was an oil man."

Anderson, currently ARCO's chairman of the board, joined Atlantic Refining Company in 1963, purchased Richfield Oil Company, and later merged it with Sinclair Oil Company.

McMillan is optimistic for the company, and the industry's, future. He bases that partly on the fact that ARCO stock is holding its own.

HE PREDICTS an up cycle in the business is just around the corner, within the next two years. "I think we've bottomed out. I see things loosening up. I really do see a bright future coming up."

One thing that does concern him is the lack of experienced land people in the middle-aged group.

"We are either getting old and at the end of our rope, or are very young and inexperienced." He attributed this to the industry lull in the 1960s, and the fact that so many landmen left the majors to go with independent oil companies.

"I think the situation is rectifying itself now. Times are changing," said McMillan. "I believe people are going to begin staying with their jobs, settling down with one company."

A person couldn't do better than to follow McMillan's example in that regard.

Basin Inc. sold to Tesoro Petroleum

A San Antonio-based firm purchased Friday the operating assets of Midland's Basin Inc. Basin is a privately-held crude oil purchasing, transportation and marketing company.

Tesoro Petroleum Corporation, a marketing and refining business with diverse subsidiaries, closed the deal for an estimated $11- to $11.5 million. The takeover is effective July 1, 1982.

A Basin spokesman attributed the sale to the slow, yet highly competitive crude oil market, and also to the fact Basin's principals did not wish to remain in the business any longer.

Rumors of the sale surfaced in Midland over a week ago, but officials of both companies were reluctant to provide The Reporter-Telegram concrete information until Friday evening.

The Tesoro board of directors and the major stockholders of Basin Inc. met Friday to approve the purchase, a Basin spokesman confirmed Friday night.

Tesoro will obtain all of Basin's hard assets — trucks, storage tanks, pipelines in Texas, New Mexico and Arkansas; and pipeline stations. It was not immediately known whether Tesoro also purchased Basin's liabilities, or whether the deal involved cash, notes or shares of Tesoro stock.

It is difficult to say what effect the action will have on Basin's 300 employees, about half of whom work out of the Midland office, said the spokesman.

There will undoubtedly be a merging of departments in the takeover. Employees will probably be notified by July 1 about organizational changes, he added.

Basin Inc. was founded by Walter R. Davis in the early 1970s, and was later sold in 1979 to GMW Corporation of Midland for approximately $10 million.

Later, Davis sued GMW for $44 million, alleging mis-management of Basin funds. GMW counter-sued, and later filed for bankruptcy.

Davis bought Basin back in June, 1981, for less than what he received when he sold it.

A tentative out-of-court settlement has been reached in that case, which also came to involve the First National Bank of Midland. A Dallas bankruptcy court judge is expected to make a final ruling on the settlement July 16, 1982.

New Texas drilling depth record set

As of 8 a.m. Thursday, the deepest well in Texas is Hunt Energy's No. 1-9 Cerf Ranch, located 31 miles south-southeast of Fort Stockton, in Pecos County. It won the distinction when a 6 1/2-inch diamond bit turned by a Penrod rig started cutting the Ellenburger formation below 29,622 feet.

Drilling continued to a total depth of 29,650.

The well was spudded April 29, 1979.

The Cerf Ranch well continues a history of deep wells in West Texas that began with the Ralph Low University well No. 1-17, which reached 28,500 feet in 1972. It held the state depth record until Sept. 24, 1979, when Gulf's No. 2 Emma Lou reached 29,622.

The Emma Lou unit is in section 59, block 101, AB&M survey, 18 miles southeast of Fort Stockton.

Hunt Energy Corp. is operator of the Cerf well. Working interest partners include: El Paso Natural Gas, 31.25 percent interest; Mesa Peytroleum Corp., 25 percent interest; and Great American Exploration, 11.74 percent interest.

Penrod Drilling Co. is drilling the well, using a new National 1625-DE land rig. The No. 1 Cerf is the rig's first hole. The rig floor is 32.5 feet high, and the mast extends 147 feet above the floor. The draw works is rated at 3,000 input horsepower, and the mast is rated at two million pounds gross nominal capacity, with a setback capacity of 800,000 pounds. The rig employs a 1,000-ton DRECO traveling block, and a 750-ton BJ hook.

The rig is the second on the location. The well was spudded with a Penrod rig that lacked the capacity needed to reach total depth. It was replaced around 24,000 feet.

Both Hunt Energy Corp. and Penrod Drilling Co. are owned and controlled by the Hunt family of Texas.

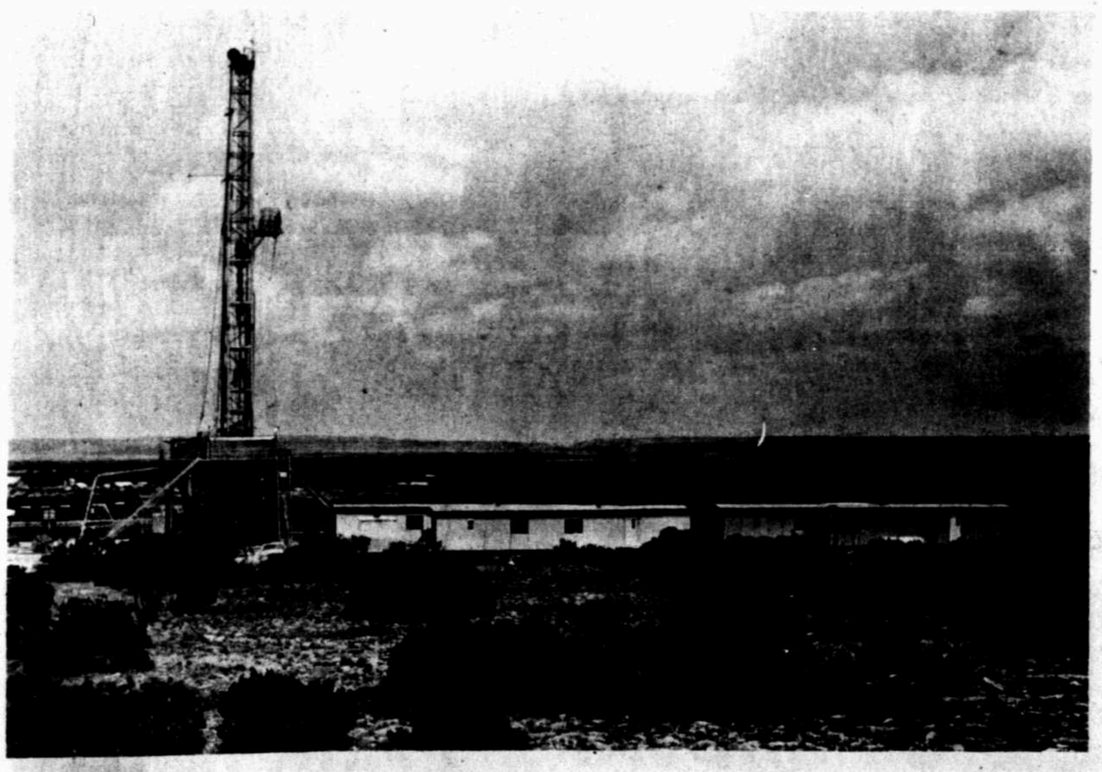
The Cerf Ranch well has encountered some serious technical problems and establihsed some new benchmarks as well. As of June 24, drillers had used 166 bits, including 21 diamond bits. The bits cost between $10,000 to $18,000 each. The cost for drilling mud has exceeded $3 million.

The well established a record for the longest string of 10 3/4-inch casing — 18,173 feet.

Herbert Hunt said despite the extraordinary drilling problems, such as a bottom hole temperature that measured 419 degrees Farenheit at 29,554 feet, and several operations to free bits stuck in the hole, he has continued to drill because the objective to be tested remains promising.

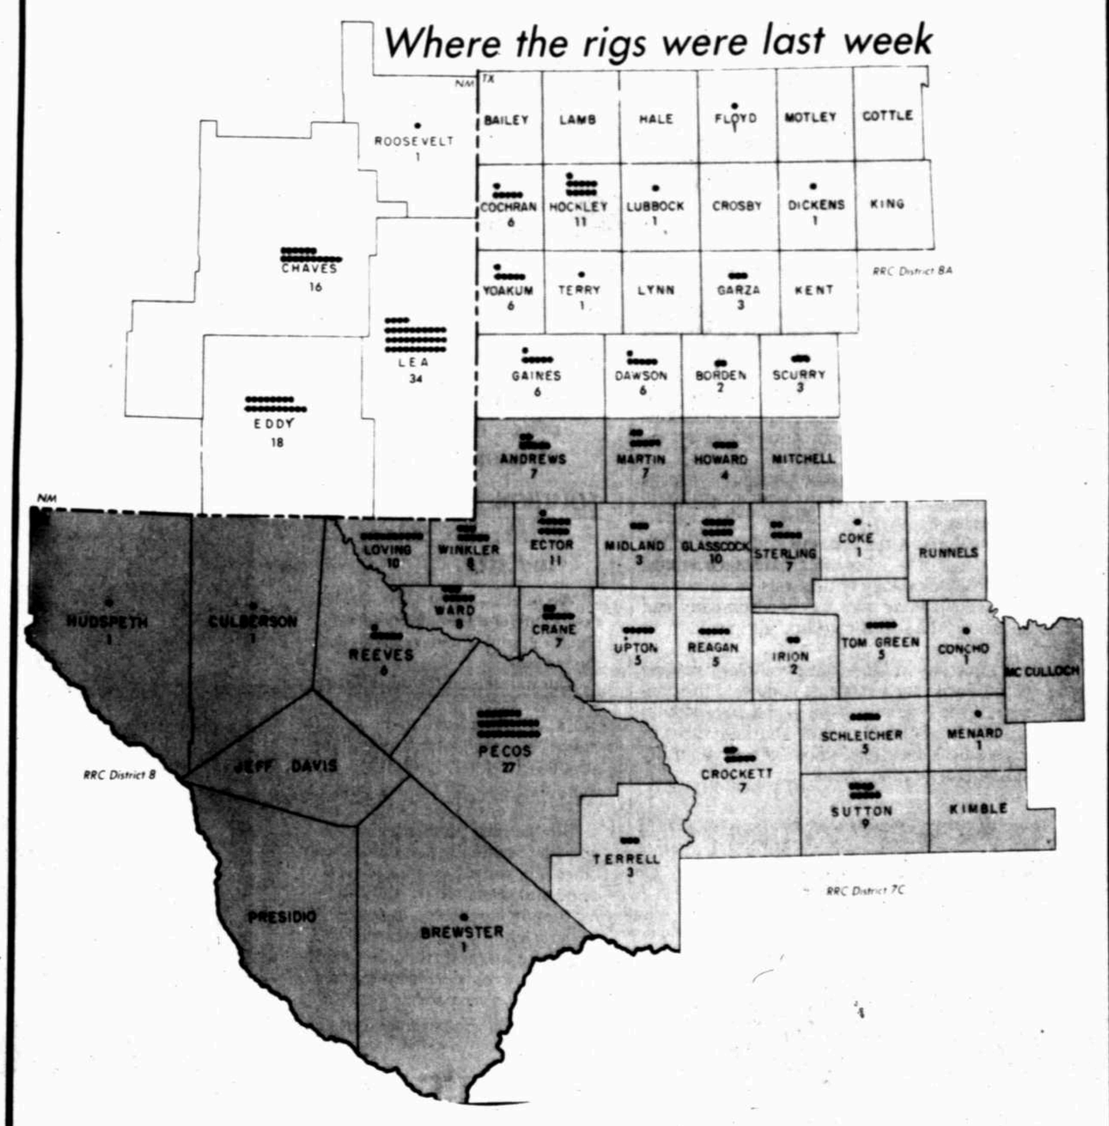
He noted that if testing at total depth does not show the presence of hydrocarbons in commercial quantites, there remains the possibility of completing the well in shallower zones that have already shown hydrocarbons.

Friday, the hole was being conditioned for logging, an operation that is expected to take from a week to ten days to complete.



The No. 1 Cerf drillsite, 31 miles south-southeast of Fort Stockton. The Hunt Energy Corp. well is today the deepest well in Texas, at a total depth of 29,650 feet. The old record, 29,622 feet, set in 1979, was beaten 8 a.m. Thursday.

Permian Basin rig count shriveling



The regional rig count shriveled yet again last week. According to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co. the tally was 278. The previous week's figure was 299.

Last week's rig count is the smallest since January 1980. The Reporter-Telegram's rig count records for times prior to January, 1980, are incomplete, so we are unable to determine how long it has been since the regional rig count was last at such a low level.

A year ago, Reed counted 440 rigs working the area covered by the map.

The national count is down again — to the lowest level in nearly two years. The International Association of Drilling Contractors reports 2,906 rigs making hole nationwide June 21. One year earlier the total was 4,008.

The IADC figures show 806 rigs working inland-Texas, and another 97 drilling in New Mexico.

BOTTOM LINES

MINERAL DEVELOPMENT INC.

The company has reported revenues and net income for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1982.

Revenues increased to $3.58 million from $2.46 million for fiscal 1981. Net income was $17,301 compared to $145,474 last year. President Richard D. Collins attributed the decline in earnings per share to a large increase in administrative and general costs because of additions to the staff.

During the fiscal year, the company participated in 30 successful wells out of 36 drilled, of which 14 were wildcats. Estimated future net reserves from proved oil and gas reserves increased to $15.4 million, compared with $7.9 million a year earlier.

STERLING PIPE & SUPPLY

OKLAHOMA CITY (SWN) — Sterling Pipe & Supply Company has reported operating results for the quarter ended April 30, 1982.

Total revenues for the second quarter of the fiscal year were $12,587,700 as compared to $24,733,800 for the corresponding 1981 period. Net income (loss) and earnings (loss) per share were ($481,400) and ($.18), as compared to $802,600 and $.36 for the same period a year ago.

For the six months ended April 30, 1982, total revenues were $37,669,600 as compared to $42,387,700 for the same period in 1981. Net income (loss) and earnings (loss) per share were ($9,000) and ($.00), as compared to $1,320,700 and $.62 in the corresponding period of 1981.

DECA ENERGY

DENVER (SWN) — Deca Energy reported preliminary net income of $340,518, or nine cents per share, on revenues of $1,378,125 for the year ended March 31, 1982. This compares to $219,451, or eight cents per share, on revenues of $685,482 for the period ended March 31, 1981. In comparing the two periods it should be noted that fiscal 1981 represented Deca's first year of operations. The company commenced operations in June, 1980, and completed a public stock offering during December, 1980.

Darryl Emmert, Deca president, noted that proved reserves of oil at March 31, 1982, were 560,400 barrels, an increase of 108 percent over the previous fiscal year, while proved reserves of natural gas increased 103 percent to 807,572 MCF. The present value of future net revenues was $9,927,889, using a 10 percent discount factor.

The company is active in the acquisition of leasehold interests in the Overthrust Belt in Uinta County, Wyoming, and Summit and Morgan Counties, Utah. As of May 31, 1982, the company owned working interests in 22,252 gross (14,649 net) acres in the three counties.

Deca recently entered into an agreement to sell an undivided 85.71 percent interest in 4,905 acres in Summit County, Utah, for $2,100,000. When these funds are received, working capital will be available so that Deca can take advantage of future opportunities.

DORCHESTER GAS CORPORATION

DALLAS — The Board of Directors of Dorchester Gas Corporation at its meeting on June 9, 1982, declared the regular quarterly cash dividend of $.04 per share of Common Stock, payable August 6, 1982 and the semi-annual dividend of $.6875 per share on its 5 1/2% Series A Preferred Stock, payable October 1, 1982, with record date of September 15, 1982.

Dorchester's Common Stock is listed on the American Stock Exchange under the symbol DGS.

PERMIAN BASIN ROYALTY TRUST

FORT WORTH (SWN) — The First National Bank of Fort Worth, as Trustee of the Permian Basin Royalty Trust, today declared a cash distribution to the holders of its units of beneficial interest of $.110812 per unit, payable July 15, 1982, to unit holders of record on June 30, 1982.

UNIVERSAL RESOURCES CORPORATION

DALLAS — The company has reported decreased earnings for the six-month period ended April 30, 1982 compared with the same period a year ago. Net income was $5.2 million, or 57 cents per share, versus $6.3 million and 75 cents a share for the period the previous year.

Total revenues for the period were $31.59 million, compared with $29.58 million last year. The board of directors declared a quarterly dividend of 5 cents a share payable July 6, 1982, to shareholders of record June 18, 1982.

SUMMIT ENERGY INC.

DALLAS — The board of directors has declared a regular quarterly dividend of 45 cents a share on the $1.80 cumulative convertible preferred shares. At the same time, the board voted not to pay any dividend on the company's common stock.

Sales of oil and gas in the first nine months of the fiscal year, ended April 30, 1982, increased 38 percent and cash flow was up 15 percent.

Total revenues for the period were $7.3 million compared with $6.2 million a year ago for the same nine months. Net earnings amounted to $1,319,533 compared with $1,598,843 in the 1981 period.

During the third quarter, ended April 30, 1982, revenues were $2.4 million, up from $2.3 million for the same quarter a year ago; earnings per common share were 4 cents versus 13 cents a year ago.

TEMPLETON ENERGY INC.

HOUSTON — Officers of the company are pleased to announce results for fiscal 1981, the first year the company has been in operation. For the period July 1, 1981, through December 31, 1981, the company earned $2.1 million and generated $5.7 million in cash flow on revenues of $8.2 million.

Independent audits showed a total reserve value of $261.2 million. Earnings per share were 13 cents primary and 12 cents diluted.

WAINOCO OIL CORPORATION

HOUSTON — Officers of the company have announced financial results for the first quarter, ended March 31, 1982. Record revenues of $13.6 million were accompanied by a net loss of $2.7 million, due to a $2.8 million write-off of offshore permits in Western Australia.

Cash flow from operations increased to $5.5 million, a 22 percent rise over the same period a year ago. Earnings (loss) per share were (26 cents) primary, versus earnings of 9 cents a share for the period in 1981.

Officers announced that the number of authorized shares of common stock was increased from 25 million to 35 million. In addition, the company plans to consolidate 17 limited partnerships and will file a statement regarding this with the Securities and Exchange Commission near the end of the second quarter.

MITCHELL ENERGY

DALLAS — Options trading in Mitchell Energy & Development stock has been started on The Pacific Stock Exchange, Chairman and President George P. Mitchell told a group of investment professionals here.

The company was among 10 recently selected by the exchange for options trading.

Mitchell also noted that the independent oil and gas producer has become the number one domestic firm on the American Stock Exchange in terms of earnings. The rank is based on the company's earnings of $115.2 million in its last fiscal year.

Overall, he said, Mitchell Energy & Development ranked eighth on the American Stock Exchange's recently issued list of top earners. Foreign firms held the seven higher ranks.

In addition to its extensive energy operations throughout the country, Mitchell Energy & Development has substantial real estate holdings in the Houston-Galveston area. Its headquarters are at The Woodlands, near Houston.

LEAR PETROLEUM

DALLAS (SWN) — The Board of Directors of Lear Petroleum Corporation (NYSE) has declared the regular quarterly cash dividend of three cents per share, payable August 30, 1982, to shareholders of record on August 10, 1982.

Lear Petroleum is engaged in the exploration and production of crude oil and natural gas and in the operation of natural gas transmission lines.

Texaco's find could be 'giant' oil field

By KAREN TUMULTY
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Texaco Inc. announced Thursday that it and a group of other oil companies have made a "significant" Santa Barbara Channel oil discovery that, coupled with an earlier strike, indicates the existence of what oil industry experts say is probably a "giant" oil field containing at least 100 million barrels of oil.

Such a field would pale in comparison with the size of Alaska's 10-billion-barrel Prudhoe Bay field, but wouild rank among California's 10 largest oil fields.

Texaco's discovery on a tract leased in 1979 is located 12 miles off Point Conception, several miles west of an area in which Standard Oil Co. of California, Socal, and a group of its partners announced last November that they had found a new oil field. It is well west of environmentally protected areas of the channel, where no leasing has yet been allowed.

The two wells, a discovery well which flowed up to 4,200 barrels of oil daily and a confirmation well which produced more than 3,000 barrels a day, are also located slightly south of a tract for which Socal and Phillips Petroleum Co. paid a record $333.6 million in a May 1981 federal lease sale. A Socal spokesman said the company expects to announce soon the results of drilling on that tract.

"I'm sure it (the Texaco discovery) will confirm the fact that there's a very large oil field out there," said L.W. Funkhouser, vice president of exploration and production at Socal.

The strike confirms oil industry expectations that the western channel would be a major production area. Much of the channel that has been thought to have the most potential either has already been leased or is in environmentally protected areas.

This is why less than half of the tracts offered in the channel at a federal lease sale earlier this month received bids.

Of the 140 Southern California tracts offered June 11, only 35 — 23 of them in the channel — drew bids. High bids totaled $132 million, but the Interior Department subsequently rejected six of them, saying they were too low.

Texaco, which is in partnership with Pennzoil Co., Sun Co. and Koch Exploration Co. in the discovery, predicted that bringing the well into production will require three or four years of additional work.

The company declined to comment on the potential of the field.

However, Funkhouser said he "wouldn't have any problem at all" with an estimate of 100 million or more barrels of reserves, which he added "in oil circles is considered a giant field."

Early tests of wells drilled by Chevron U.S.A., Socal's domestic arm, produced between 1,200 and 3,500 barrels of oil daily. A barrel contains 42 gallons. The United States consumes about 17 million barrels a day.

When the 4,269-acre Texaco tract was leased in June 1979, the companies paid the federal government $35.29 million for the right to explore it. Texaco said that it will conduct additional drilling to further evaluate the area's potential.

Ford lets consumer have say on car design

By PHILIPP HARPER
Copley News Service

Rebates and extended-warranty programs aren't the only strategies being brought to bear by Detroit as it struggles to survive one of the worst car-buying slumps in U.S. history.

Automakers are adopting a whole new way of looking at their markets. Gone are the days when the nation's taste in cars was determined by a handful of engineers and marketing types. It now appears that the automakers are willing to follow rather than lead, to let the consumer have an unprecedented say in the shape of cars to come.

And the Ford Motor Co. claims it is perched on the leading edge of this trend. Executives say the company not only has a greater awareness of the consumer, but it is more attentive to the needs of different kinds of buyers.

"Instead of looking at the traditional mass market, we've broken the market up into discrete groups of consumers," said Marilyn King, contemporary markets manager for Ford North American Automotive Operations.

According to King, the automaker no longer regards its market as a homogenous entity with a distinctly male and Caucasian flavor.

Now vying for Ford's attention, she said, are women, buyers over the age of 55, Hispanics, blacks, Orientals, young people and technology enthusiasts.

"We see if there's some way we as a company can relate to the needs of a specific group," King said in an interview.

A former University of Michigan psychology professor who joined Ford four years ago, King said the consumer research she presently is engaged in will help determine what the Fords, Lincolns and Mercuries of the mid- to late-1980s look like, since Detroit generally works on a five-year product cycle.

It is difficult to project into the future, she said, because people "are usually comfortable with today."

However, she was able to cite some of the more obvious automotive-design flaws that have caused discomfort for particular groups.

For example, the average acclerator is designed for people wearing one-inch heels, which makes it hard on the woman who is not wearing flats.

PROBLEM:
How to fill the diverse office needs of seven division heads.

SOLUTION:
Heritage Center . . . and HBF.

"We needed a first-class, quality developer, and management we could depend on. In Midland, that means HBF.

"Our quarters at Heritage Center are built with an emphasis on quality. You can see it in the striking design, the top-flight materials, the attention to detail. And there's more than enough parking provided adjacent to the Center.

"But the best part for us: We've got the confidence that comes with officing in an HBF building, developed and managed by Midland's most experienced professionals. All this at a leasing rate that's well within our budget! Heritage Center and HBF—two of the best business decisions we've made."

Unique pumping units introduced

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

The first of a unique line of portable pumping units made by Petroleum Lift Systems Inc. of Fort Worth has arrived in the Permian Basin, and it promises to be of interest to area operators for several reasons.

Developed in 1979, the Petro/Lift pumping unit is easier to move, easier to adjust, and more versatile than a conventional unit.

The self-contained unit weighs less than half the weight of a traditional walking beam unit, yet the largest of the four sizes made can pump from 11,000 feet with a maximum sucker rod load of 35,000 pounds and a 120-inch stroke length.

Its hydraulic system, which can be powered by natural gas, electricity or diesel fuel, allows the operator to adjust the pumping unit to conform to the natural harmonics of a well. Adjustments in stroke length and speed are made with simple pocket tools, rather than with the mass of tools required to adjust conventional units.

Hydraulic pressure gauges simulate dynamometer information, allowing the operator to monitor polished rod loads and thus reduce the chances of damage to the unit itself, or to down-hole equipment due to excessive speeds or load factors.

Because the unit, which looks like some sort of fork lift, doesn't weigh as much as a regular pumping unit, it is easily portable. A ginpole truck and roustabout crew aren't necessary to move a Petro/Lift unit. It can be carried in a 3/4 ton pickup and set up by two men in under two hours, making it less expensive to move from well to well.

The unit has two sheaves which travel on a hydraulic ram between the legs of the derrick. The work load is supported by the hydraulic cylinder, which sits on a beam. The beam, in turn, rests either on the ground or on a platform, so the load isn't put on the derrick.

The derrick is hinged at the bottom so that it can be moved out of the way if the well needs servicing.

If saving time and money is important, the Petro/Lift is handy. A well can be potentialed right away, instead of having to wait on a conventional pumping unit, or waiting for electricity to be installed at the site.

After the testing, the unit can continue to produce the well, or be used as a substitute while the operator is waiting on parts or repairs to a conventional unit.

The Petro/Lift can also be used to dewater gas wells and is less expensive than a conventional swabbing unit.

Smaller versions of the unit have been available in other parts of Texas for about 18 months. It was not offered in the Permian Basin because at first, the company didn't make a unit capable of handling the deep wells here. Recently, Petroleum Lift Systems introduced its biggest unit, the 120 inch, which compares favorably with the conventional 320-456 pumping unit.

Units with 48-, 72-, and 86-inch stroke lengths are also available.

Graduate Center course focuses on tax problems

The Permian Basin Graduate Center announces three courses. They will be held at the PBGC Building, 105 W. Illinois, Midland.

"Tax Problems of Closely-Held Corporations," will be held Tuesday and Wednesday, July 6 and 7, from 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Dr. John M. Malloy, Professor of Accounting, Texas Tech University, will instruct. Topics include: formation of a corporation, dividends, penalty taxes, subchapter S corporations, stock redemptions, corporate liquidations, corporate divisions, reorganizations, overall estate planning considerations, and integrated cases. Fee is $260.

"Federal Taxation of Partnerships," will be held Thursday and Friday, July 8 and 9, from 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Dr. John Malloy will instruct. Topics include: formation of a partnership, changes in the partner's interest, organizing and financing a partnership, transactions between partners and partnership, partnership distributions, sale of a partnership interest, limited partnerships used as a tax shelter, partnership freeze — estate planning considerations, and special problems in partnership taxation. Fee is $260.00.

"Interpersonal Communications," Wednesday, July 7, from 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Bob Avary of Bob Avary & Associates, Management Consultants, will instruct. This course will benefit those in management, mid-management, supervisors, counselors, or partners - anyone who needs to communicate effectively. Registration fee is $125.

WHAT IS THE COST OF AN UNPRODUCTIVE EMPLOYEE?

Plenty. It costs a lot in time, overhead, and out-of-pocket expenses to recruit a new employee. It costs a lot to train them and provide facilities. And just think of the cost of poor work.

You wouldn't try to solve your legal or medical problems without turning to the appropriate professional. So when you need to recruit effective employees, call in a professional personnel consultant.

A personnel consultant:

- knows where to find the right people. Often they aren't looking.
- screens applicants' skills, experiences, and personal background in advance.
- sends you qualified applicants for interviews and keeps sending them until you're satisfied.
- charges only when you hire.

Agency to study consumer proposals

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal agency which sets natural gas prices is putting on the "back burner" a series of proposals that consumer groups had charged could boost customers' bills by billions of dollars, officials said.

The decision represents a sharp reversal from the course the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission signaled it would take earlier this year when it began a round of proceedings all aimed at increasing natural gas prices. Consumer groups estimated that the impact of just two of the proposals could boost consumers' bills by $66 billion through 1985.

Rachelle Patterson, chief spokeswoman for the commission, said Friday that all of the gas increase measures were being postponed because of the desire for further study by Chairman C.M. Butler.

"The likelihood of anything happening before the end of the year is very remote," she said.

Butler, appointed as chairman by President Reagan, had been the main proponent for increasing prices of natural gas faster than called for in a 1978 law. Under the law, about half the country's gas supplies are being gradually decontrolled.

However, Butler's program stirred a majority of members of the House of Representatives to sign a resolution warning the energy regulatory commission to abandon its efforts. The commission was also picketed by angry consumer groups who packed commission hearings to protest what they charged was an effort by the Reagan administration at "back-door decontrol" of natural gas. The president in March announced he would not seek congressional action this year on his campaign pledge to speed up decontrol of natural gas.

Ms. Patterson said Butler decided because of the "volatility of the gas markets," further study was needed before the commission took any action.

Commission sources, who asked not to be identified, said that in reality Butler was having trouble getting the necessary three votes for his pricing proposals. A fifth seat on the commission is vacant at the present time and consumer groups have mounted a campaign against the Louisiana lawyer Reagan would like to nominate for the post.

A rival proposal surfaced at the commission which would have resulted in price cuts of 33 percent for one category of natural gas.

Butler ordered that proposal withdrawn from the commission's agenda last week at the same time he deferred action on one of the proposals to boost prices.

Ms. Patterson said Butler did not want a "piecemeal" approach to the problem and decided to defer all the proposals for further study. But Energy Action, a consumer group, charged that Butler's decision on the rule cutting prices showed he "is only interested in the free market when it raises prices and not when it lowers them."

Ceremonies held for Arab processing plant

SHARJAH, United Arab Emirates — Dedication ceremonies were held here recently for natural gas processing facilities for the Sajaa field, the first gas and condensate production in Sharjah.

Amoco Sharjah has announced that the new facility is designed to handle 250 million cubic feet of gas and recover 25,000 barrels of gas condensate. Export of condensate is expected to commence in the near-term.

Since completion of the first well, Sajaa No. 1, in December 1980, Amoco has completed three development wells in the Sajaa field, and the Mowa'eed No. 1 was drilled south of the Sajaa discovery.

Amoco Sharjah is a unit of Standard Oil Company (Indiana).

Activist shareholders are going to court

EDITOR'S NOTE: Shareholders are sometimes seen, rarely heard. Or at least that's the way it usually is in the corporate world. That seems to be changing, however, with an increasing number of activist stockholders, some going to court to be heard. Among them is an order of nuns.

By CYNTHIA ROBERTS

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — It started six years ago, when an exploding coal mine killed 26 men.

The Sisters of Loretto, a feisty order of Roman Catholic nuns founded in Kentucky, vowed to aid the survivors at Scotia, Ky., with more than prayer.

They went out and bought stock. Eighty-one shares in the Blue Diamond Coal Co. for $19,500.

As Blue Diamond shareholders, they intended to pressure the coal company into improving its safety record and allowing miners to unionize.

The Sisters of Loretto are among the growing numbers of church groups, grassroots activists and pension managers who are exercising their rights as stockholders to challenge corporate decisions.

The Securities and Exchange Commission says companies received 1,000 proposals from shareholders last year, dealing with everything from the sale of South African Krugerrands to evacuation plans for nuclear plants.

Corporations attempted to keep about a third of those proposals out of annual proxy statements, the SEC says. Of the resolutions that survived, proponents watched them lose — and lose big — at annual stockholders' meetings.

"No shareholder resolution has ever received a winning vote, except where it is supported by management," says one activist.

"Virtually all proposals lose," agrees Tom Dunfee, who has a newly-created chair in social responsibility with the Wharton School of Economics, University of Pennsylvania.

"But that doesn't necessarily mean they don't have an effect," he adds.

The Sisters of Loretto believe their presence has helped the Blue Diamond miners, although the firm challenged the nuns' right to become shareholders of record. A three-year court battle ended this spring with a victory for the sisters.

Blue Diamond's executives "view us as troublesome gadflies," says Sister Eileen Harrington, the order's spokeswoman. "I think they know they have some pretty tenacious shareholders on their hands."

Her activist order has lobbied Rockwell International to convert production of nuclear weapons components to more peaceful pursuits; supported the right of J.P. Stevens' workers to unionize, and asked the Quaker Oats Co. to put their advertising dollars into quality children's television programs.

The right to submit shareholder proposals was seldom used until the late 1960s and early 1970s, when peace activists began pushing American corporations to abandon support of the Vietnam War.

The first shareholder resolution to make headlines was Campaign GM in 1970. A group of young activist lawyers, loosely affiliated with consumer advocate Ralph Nader, used 12 shares of General Motors stock to put heat on company executives.

The activists wanted women and blacks on GM's board of directors and a study of worker-consumer safety and environmental issues.

They adopted techniques from political campaigns and sponsored campus debates.

"We didn't say outrageous things, and GM responded pretty much in kind," recalled Donald Schwartz, a Georgetown University law professor who acted as counsel to Campaign GM.

"Remember, this was right after the '60s. They expected to see a bunch of long-haired, freaked-out kids. I was 40 years old. Not only did I not have long hair, I had no hair," he jokes.

The proposals captured 2.5 percent of the vote and support from the United Auto Workers and the New York City workers pension plan through then-Mayor John V. Lindsay, Schwartz says.

"We thought the idea would catch on. It's simple, inexpensive and effective," he remarks.

In the past decade, shareholder proposals paralleled popular social issues. Antiwar efforts gave way to equal opportunity hiring, divestiture of investments in South Africa, infant formula marketing in the Third World, and most recently, anti-nuclear issues.

However, liberals hold no monopoly over shareholder proposals, says William Morley, the SEC's deputy chief counsel in corporate finance.

Conservatives are pushing proposals aimed at corporate contributors to universities. "It's against schools like Harvard, that don't let the CIA recruit, or universities that have somebody like Angela Davis on the faculty," he says.

Some recent shareholder proposals and their fates:

— The Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility asked AT&T to study weapons production in connection with the company's management of Sandia National Laboratories in Albuquerque, N.M.

The proposal was rejected by 94.5 percent of AT&T stockholders. But the fact that it came to a vote represents a minor victory for the activists.

— Shareholders of two Pennsylvania utilities submitted four proposals against nuclear power.

Philadelphia Electric Co. shareholders defeated, by 90.2 percent, a proposal to halt construction of the company's $4.2 billion Limerick nuclear power plant. The state's Public Utility Commission later asked the company to abandon a second reactor at Limerick because of lack of funds.

Pennsylvania Power & Light Co. shareholders defeated three proposals dealing with nuclear power. PP&L faced proposals from stockholders directly affected by its nuclear policy.

— The Rev. Andy Smith, of the National Ministries of American Baptist Churches, withdrew a proposal charging Pennwalt Corp. with responsibility for mercury pollution of a lake in Nicaragua. Pennwalt is part owner of the Nicaraguan firm, El Pesa Electrochimica Pennwalt S.A.

Both parties settled on Smith making a statement at the annual meeting. The company will monitor progress in Managua, "but we will continue to press Pennwalt to clean up the lake," Smith says.

The SEC, which has seen the number of contested shareholder proposals jump 10 percent to 20 percent a year, is considering changes in the process, Morley says.

One SEC commissioner has suggested shareholders own an "open sesame" of at least 50 shares before they may submit a proposal. And the SEC is considering getting out of the business of reviewing controversial proposals altogether.

"You can't deny the companies are more vocal than proponent groups about changing the rules," says Morley.

Under SEC rules, shareholder proposals face a succession of hurdles to be inclys.

Consequently, most proposals are swatted away like flies. But those who monitor shareholder resolutions say that is beginning to change.

"You are seeing these days that a lot of shareholder resolutions are getting 5 to 6 percent. That means a couple of heavy hitters are voting with them," says Randy Barber of the Center for Economic Organizing in Washington.

Traditionally passive investors, pension fund managers are finding they have the power to put some backbone into shareholder resolutions.

One of those is the state of California, which holds a $24 billion portfolio in 30 to 40 companies for its teachers' and public employees' pension funds.

At the annual meeting of Xerox shareholders May 20 in New York, California voted its 1.2 million shares in support of a resolution to halt Xerox expansion in South Africa.

"We own a lot of shares, but we don't own enough to win. Voting is a very potent, moral statement. Companies know where this state stands," says Alice Lytle, agency secretary for California State Consumer Services.

Duval Corp. cutting back production

HOUSTON — Duval Corp., the mining subsidiary of Pennzoil Co., announced recently that because of continuing weakness in demand, it will further reduce copper and molybdenum production at its Sierrita property effective July 1.

The company's Esperanza and Mineral Park copper and molybdenum properties will remain closed.

The Sierrita mine and mill complex, which has been operating at the reduced rate of 80,000 tons of ore per day, will be further curtailed to approximately 40,000 tons per day. Under this reduced production rate, about 35 percent of capacity, Duval will continue to meet the copper and molybdenum requirements of contract customers.

Duval is continuing a 32-hour work week in an effort to provide employment for the maximum number of workers. Under this plan, 850 of the current work force of 1500 will be retained.

Those employees subject to lay-off will be furloughed indefinitely and will receive severance benefits of one week for each year of past service with the company.

Arrival of summer makes stock market happiest

By JAMES PELTZ
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — No one was happier to see summer arrive than the stock market, which responded with a sizable rebound from its plunge of late spring. But many market watchers are having trouble warming up to the thought that a sustained rally is just ahead.

There are some signs for encouragement. A 10 percent cut in federal income tax rates is scheduled for July 1, along with a boost in Social Security payments. Both should put more cash in consumers' and investors' pockets.

That could help lead to economic recovery, which could provide companies with badly needed liquidity and perhaps enable interest rates to fall.

A major uncertainty on Wall Street, the fiscal 1983 federal budget, could soon be eliminated now that Congress has approved a budget outline.

Indeed, it was that approval — by the House this past Tuesday and the Senate the next day — that fueled the market's sharp gains in those two sessions, according to some quarters.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, off more than 80 points since early May when the week began, climbed 23.22 points Tuesday and Wednesday. It spent the next two sessions digesting some of those gains but finished the week up 14.46 points at 803.08.

The New York Stock Exchange's composite index rose 0.98 to 62.72, and the American Stock Exchange's market value index climbed 6.05 to 252.43.

Big Board turnover rose to a daily average 52.59 million shares from 48.88 million the previous week.

Despite the advance, however, some analysts doubt whether the market is poised for a sustained advance.

Consider those "encouraging" signs above. It is assumed that whatever budget is finally implemented, it will include a record deficit that the Treasury must finance — keeping upward pressure on interest rates. There are worries, too, that the tax cut will fuel inflation.

Many investors, of course, do not invest in stocks to see how they will perform for one or two weeks. They invest with the thinking that their stocks will improve over a period of months, hopefully outperforming the market.

Yet for those interested in the short term, many stocks in a high interest-rate environment can look like a wrong turn from a standpoint of return on investment.

"One must be aware of relative yields in money market funds and bonds vis-a-vis what they may attain in the stock market," says Charles Jensen, technical analyst with MKI Securities Corp. in New York.

The most recent average yield on the Standard & Poor's index of 500 stocks was 6.35 percent. But on money funds, the latest average 30-day yield was 13.02 percent, according to the Money Fund Report, an industry newsletter. And many bonds are yielding in excess of 10 percent.

Such a spread between stocks and such other investments is not news, but remains a competitive disadvantage for stocks so long as rates stay high. And that could derail any sustainable rally, some analysts contend.

But taking a longer-term view, Alfred E. Goldman, vice president of A.G. Edwards & Sons Inc. in St. Louis, asserts that this past Wednesday — when the Dow Jones industrial average spurted 13.51 points — "we started our summer rally."

He agrees that with current interest-rate levels, "I don't think we're in a position to sustain a big bull market." But he does see the rally proceeding in one of two ways.

First, the market will spend four or five months treading water at about or just below its current level, "wearing everybody out" and creating "despair through disgust" that will finally spur big volume and heavy buying.

Or, a drop so fast and so sharp it triggers an immediate and lasting upswing. "You'd get a cardiac arrest rather than a terminal disease," Goldman says. "And the cardiac arrest is better. It hurts a lot more, but it's over and done with."

Hugoton gas reserves shared

Dorchester Gas Corporation announced it has conveyed an 80 percent working interest in its Hugoton natural gas properties in Kansas and Oklahoma to a limited partnership formed for the benefit of its stockholders.

The Board of Directors approved the formation of Dorchester Hugoton, Ltd., units of which will be distributed to stockholders of Dorchester in the form of a taxable dividend. Stockholders of record on July 2, 1982 will receive units on the basis of one unit for each ten shares of Dorchester Common Stock held.

Dorchester is taking this action so that stockholders can more fully realize the true asset value of the company.

Said John R. Barnes, President, "The limited partnership will permit stockholders to have direct participation in the current and potential cash flow from the properties."

Limited partners will receive 80 percent of the production revenue from the properties, net of operating expenses and capital expenditure requirements, in the form of quarterly distributions.

Dorchester Hugoton, Ltd., holds 80 percent of Dorchester's working interest in the Hugoton properties with 20 percent being retained by Dorchester. The general partners are members of Dorchester's senior management who have the overall responsibility for the operation and future development of the properties.

The properties conveyed to the Partnership are in the Hugoton Embayment which is considered one of the most prolific natural gas reservoirs in the U. S. where wells, generally, have been productive since the late 1940's and should continue to produce into the year 2000.

The Partnership's working interest is comprised of 18 wells on 7,359.2 acres in Stevens County, Kansas and 128 wells on 63,422.4 acres in Texas County, Oklahoma, with total proved developed reserves estimated by independent engineers to be 161.2 BCF of gas as of August 31, 1981. Gas production from the properties, currently averaging 18.7 MMCFD, is being sold under long-term contracts at prices ranging from $.1473 to $.4672.

Dorchester believes future earnings potential of the properties could be significantly affected by prospects for price increases and infield drilling, both of which depend upon overcoming substantial regulatory burdens, contract limitations, and by possible exploration and drilling of other zones underlying the properties.

MCZ Inc. announces completion of Kurten Field producer

MCZ, Inc. has announced completion of an oil producing well in the Kurten (Woodbine) field near Bryan.

The well — the MJ Triolo Oil Unit No. 1 — is flowing at the rate of 395 barrels of 40 gravity oil per day and 306,000 cubic feet of gas per day, no water, through a 26/64-inch choke and perforations between 8,006 and 8,016 feet.

SLAPCO discovery finaled

LAFAYETTE, La. (SWN) — South Louisiana Production Company, Inc. (SLAPCO), has completed the discovery of a significant new gas reservoir on its Redfish Point prospect in Vermilion Parish, La.

The Strata Energy No. 2 State Lease 7582 has been completed as a discovery of a new reservoir through perforations in the interval 17,361 feet to 17,468 feet.

The well flowed at a rate of 3,846,000 cubic feet of gas plus 145 barrels of 49.5 gravity condensate per day on a 10/64-inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 7,980 pounds.

May gasser completed

DALLAS (SWN) — May Petroleum Inc., a Dallas-based domestic oil and gas exploration and production company, has announced the completion of a discovery well on the Leger Prospect.

May completed the Credeur No. 1 well in Lafayette Parish, La. The well flowed at a rate of 5.4 million cubic feet of gas per day and 35 barrels of condensate per day from the perforated interval of 11,311 feet to 11,330 feet in the Camerina "A" sands.

Rains County gets gasser

HOUSTON (SWN) — Prairie Producing Company of Houston, Texas announces the successful completion of an exploratory well in Rains County, in Northeast Texas.

The Prairie No. 1 Hopkins was drilled to a total depth of 12,688 feet and has been completed in the Smackover formation as a rich gas-condensate well. Tests of a zone at 12,428-60 feet yielded a flow of 2.33 million cubic feet of gas per day plus 423 barrels of 59.5 gravity.

Moran announces completion

Moran Energy Inc. said its natural gas discovery well, the State Lease 9414 No. 1 in Terrebonne Parish, La., has been completed.

The well initially tested at a rate of 11.9 million cubic feet of gas and 238 barrels of condensate per day from perforations between 14,012 and 14,034 feet.

Wheeler discoveries finaled

MINNEAPOLIS — Apache Corporation announced recently it has completed a south offset to its key No. 1 gas discovery in Wheeler County, and has begun producing the well.

The Reed No. 1-2A, section 2, block 1, B&B survey, is presently producing natural gas into a pipeline at the rate of 15 million cubic feet per day on a 27/64-inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 3,300 pounds per square inch.

Drilled to a depth of 16,400 feet, the Reed No. 1-2A was completed through perforations in the Upper Morrow formation between 16,118 and 16,158 feet. The new well is located approximately 2,000 feet south of the Key No. 1 and produces from the same interval in the Upper Morrow sands.

The Key No. 1 gas discovery in Wheeler County has been temporarily hooked up to production facilities until efforts to kill the well below ground are successful.

The well, which blew out in October 1981, is currently producing natural gas into a pipeline at the rate of 17 million cubic feet per day.

The well was completed in mid-1981 from the Upper Morrow formation below 16,000 feet with a flow rate of 24.5 million cubic feet of gas per day and flowing tubing pressure of over 8,000 pounds per square inch.

South Bayou Hebert well finaled

Pel-Tex Oil Company, Inc. announced a test on its State Lease No. 8013 No. 1 well in the South Bayou Hebert area of Vermillion Parish, La.

The well flowed at a rate of 1258 barrels of 34.6 gravity oil per day on a 12/64 inch choke from perforations at 16,007 feet in the Planulina 10 sand.

Wise County gets oiler

THE WOODLANDS (SWN) — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. announced the completion of an oil discovery in Wise County.

The No. 2 J. W. Thomas well, which opens the Garrett Creek (Caddo Conglomerate) Field, test-flowed 114 barrels of oil and 1.1 million cubic feet of gas per day on a 30/64-inch choke. Per-forations were between 4,115 and 4,242 feet.

North Dakota oiler finaled

Adobe Oil Corporation has reported a significant Red River formation gas discovery in its Luptak P23-31X wildcat well located in Billings County, N.D.

The well also has an indicated oil discovery section in the Fryberg formation which has not yet been production tested.

The Red River tested at a calculated open flow daily rate of 2.8 million cubic feet of gas and 5 barrels condensate on 10/64 inch choke opening with flowing tubing pressure of 3,200 psi from perforations at 12,820 feet to 12,842 feet.

On drill-stem test in the Fryberg formation from 9,600 feet to 9,651 feet, the well made 41 degree gravity oil at the rate of 281 barrels per day.

Pogo finals gas producer

HOUSTON (SWN) — The Pogo Producing Company 1-15A Johnson-State, located in the Southeast Elk City field in Washita County, Okla., is a natural gas completion in the Upper Morrow Plummer sand from perforations from 17,434 to 17,450 feet.

The well had a calculated open flow of 3,100,000 cubic feet per day, and flowed gas at the rate of 2,673,000 cubic feet per day.

Oklahoma gasser finaled

HOUSTON — The InterNorth Exploration & Production Division announced successful completion of an oil well in Custer County, Oklahoma, about five miles northeast of Hammon. The InterNorth No. 1-12 Clift flowed 690 barrels of oil and 200,000 cubic feet of natural gas per day on a 3/4 inch choke.

Nolan oiler completed

Getty Oil Company announced today an oil discovery approximately nine miles southeast of Sweetwater in Nolan County. The discovery well, the C. E. Boyd "64" No. 1, is located in an area identified by the company as the Beckham North Prospect. (Texas and Pacific Railroad survey, Block 20, Section 64).

During a 24 hour test, the well flowed 71 barrels of oil per day through a 14/64-inch choke.

Make room for new the Hispano card

By Susan Warfel
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Move over, Visa and American Express. Make room for the new Hispano card.

The newest plastic card, geared specifically toward the Spanish-speaking population, will be launched here this August. The card will attempt to link the Hispanic community with retailers and professionals who want to tap the burgeoning ethnic market. Cardholders will pay a $25 annual fee to take advantage of sponsor discounts of 10 percent or more.

"We already have the American Express card, so why not the Hispano card — or Spanish card?" asked Edgardo Iorio, chairman of Hispanic Card Inc. "It's not that we're trying to copy them, but it's a way of identifying Hispanics."

Iorio said he and 10 other investors put together about $500,000 to start the card service. The growing importance of the Hispanic market was a major factor prompting them to form the company, he said.

"We really don't know how many Spanish-speaking people there are. For each legal," he estimated, "there are two or three more who aren't."

About 1,000 businesses and professionals have promised to provide discounts to Hispano card holders, Iorio said. Sponsors include restaurants, stores, medical clinics, lawyers, accountants and travel agents.

Sponsors will be listed in a quarterly magazine, to be updated with monthly supplements, Iorio said. While the fledgling company currently has no subscribers, it will lauch its first campaign to recruit consumers when the first magazine comes out in August.

"I think we can reach 100,000 people in the first six months," Iorio said. And he stressed that while the card was created with Hispanics in mind, others may also use the card.

Iorio thinks that the weak economy has helped the card attract sponsors, because many companies are losing business and looking for new ways to attract customers.

Futures contracts playing strong market role

By HELEN L. CALL
Copley News Service

Futures contracts on the stock market indexes and trading financial futures have overshadowed the usual business of the commodity exchanges. Coffee and pork bellies have their followers as always, but action there hardly creates the ripples it once did.

As for trading financials, caution is the word, according to veteran Richard Donchian at Shearson-American Express. "For timing, we continue to stress the wisdom of following financial instrument trends rather than trying to acticipate them."

Donchian addresses the question of inflation-deflation with the comment, "There are valid reasons why it is logical to expect another wave of perhaps rampant, double-digit inflation to develop within the next year or two."

To pay for the federal budget deficit, says Donchian, "the Fed will most probably be obliged to purchase and monetize the debt, thereby increasing the money supply."

Should banks need help with shaky loans to insolvent Third World nations, he adds,"the Fed has the authority to buy foreign government debt, bailing out the banks, but again increasing the money supply." If that happens, in Donchian's view, hyper-inflation would be hard to avoid.

Stock index futures have done very well by hedgers, says Art Leider, a trader with Shearson. "As the market moved from 840 to 790, hedgers could have made $5,000 to $7,000 shorting the Standard & Poor's index and the Value Line index. If you owned $50,000 in stock, you could have made as much in futures as the stocks lost in value."

Futures move point for point with the general market, he said. "If you have a portfolio rather than one stock, it should work fine."

Recently, the economic news has been so bad, people have no trouble thinking negatively, and taking short positions, he said. "The clients I have had made all their money on the short side of the market."

Speculators are not far behind. Said Leider, "Index futures allow the small speculator to play the stock market at a much lower commission level. A speculator who has a general feeling for the market can take advantage of it.

"You get 9-1 leverage, with no margin interest. You can still get margin calls when the market moves down. But profits from futures can be used to meet margin calls."

A few pension funds and institutions have been hedging their portfolios in the futures market. "So far institutional acceptance is very minimal," said Leider. "They have been sitting back to see how it is going to work out. Now a lot of money managers are getting approval to be allowed to trade."

Elsewhere in the markets, trends are still bearish, said Leider. "While there have been some brief rallies in currencies, the dollar has regained its strrength.

"I would still stay on the short side of most markets."

People are waiting for interest rates to come down, he said. "But Fed funds remain relatively high. There is a lot of nervousness about Treasury borrowings next quarter.

Correcting an oversight

As tragic as the Hinckley ruling was for the nation and the victims, including President Ronald Reagan, it appears the stimulus needed for meaningful reform of the insanity defense. Ironically, in that context, it my have been the best ruling that could have been handed down.

The public outcry over the "not guilty by reason of insanity" verdict told the entire story. People are not going to sit idly by for laws that do not punish the criminal, regardless of his or her mental state at the time of the offense. Provide the necessary medical help for those adjudged mentally ill, yes. But do not absolve them of responsibility for their actions.

Word of the ruling was still sweeping the nation earlier this week when legislators, citizens' groups and reform forces began lining up behind proposals for change in the insanity defense. It was, in a word, a monumental response to a wrong.

— In Texas, State Sen. Ray Farabee of Wichita Falls said he will ask the 1983 Legislature to change laws that allow the insanity defense. He did not offer specific revisions at this time.

— Just hours after the Hinckley verdict was returned, the Delaware Legislature approved a new law aimed at keeping mentally ill defendants behind bars. The new legislation provides a "guilty but insane" plea to ensure that mentally ill defendants will serve time for their crimes.

— Late this week, a U.S. Senate panel began studying the law that permits the insanity plea in federal cases, potentially to make corrective changes. Some of the jurors in the Hinckley trial even joined the effort to change the law.

The list of legislatures taking or planning action directly because of the John Hinckley verdict goes on and on. That's good. The insanity defense as currently written contains a loophole that should be closed quickly. But while the heat of passion immediately following such an incident is a perfect time to get legislation enacted, it's not a suitable time for the enactment of meaningful legislation that will provide punishment for the criminal, proper medical care for the mentally ill person and justice for the victim.

Such legislation should be written during less passionate periods when the proper attention can be given to all aspects of the revision. Otherwise, the revision may actually prove less just than the original law.

What initially looks to be a good revision is a law now in use in Michigan, Indiana, Illinois and Georgia whereby defendants can be adjudged "guilty but mentally ill." Defendants receiving such a verdit can begin serving their term in a hospital, but are transferred to prison to complete their term if and when they are found mentally competent.

Such a law appears to form the basis for a good legal change in Texas. As Sen. Farabee has indicated, the Legislature should be thinking along those lines when it convenes.

Mr. Bubbles retires

It is impossible to be objective about Lawrence Welk. Either you wouldn't miss his TV show for anything, or you wouldn't be caught dead watching it. Those belonging to the former group have kept the faith for 27 years, so the concert the other day at the Concord Pavilion had to be a bittersweet experience for them. The 79-year-old American institution insists, though many doubt it, that it was his last show. It was taped for television, but after it's shown at some later date, no more bubbles.

Cynics will groan, "Who cares?" But in America, it's hard to quarrel with success. Moreover, Welk's story is all the more impressive because his fame and fortune came rather late. He toiled in the vineyards of show business obscurity for decades, starting out with a musical ensemble he dubbed the "Hawaiian Fruit Gum Orchestra," playing one-night stands in every tank town between Yankton, S.D., and Hollywood. Then, a summer-replacement TV show in 1955 propelled him to the popularity he maintained for more than a quarter of a century.

If Lawrence Welk isn't everybody's glass of champagne, neither, let it be said, are the Rolling Stones, Johnny Carson or Clint Eastwood. That's all right. Any society that reached a consensus on what constitutes taste — good or bad — would be a pretty dull place in which to live. Wunnerful, wunnerful!

Another View:

Donovan's arrogance

A stonewalling Raymond J. Donovan at least made one thing clear at a "news conference" he called in Washington: He is as arrogant as ever in refusing to answer questions that the American people have every right to ask about allegations against him, including close ties with figures in the underworld of organized crime.

Reading a prepared statement, and then refusing to answer questions, he excoriated those who have made "relentless and cowardly attacks" against him "with total disregard for the truth" and declared he will continue to serve as secretary of labor "so long as I can be of service to President Reagan."

If Mr. Donovan would come out from behind his code of silence and tell the nation the truth as he sees it, there would be a basis for public assessment of his defense. His sealed lips are a persuasive indication that he fears the truth would hurt him.

In these circumstances the time that Mr. Donovan could "be of service to President Reagan" has already passed. The only service he can give to the President and to the country is to hand in his resignation forthwith. It should not take a constitutional lawyer or a court decision to make the case that there should be no cabinet seat for anyone who has been found by the FBI to have had "close personal and business ties" with the Mafia and refuses to discuss in public the substance and details of that finding and to refute it, if he can, or explain the circumstances.

The national cancer that is organized crime must not have a representative, or even a casual friend, at the White House cabinet table.

Other questions remain. Why did the incoming Reagan administration persist with the Donovan nomination after receiving the FBI report on Jan. 12, 1981? Why was the Senate not informed of it during confirmation hearings? Those questions, however, are not central to the fact that Mr. Donovan, having refused to address substantively the accusations against him and to give public explanation, is unfit to hold any government office of responsibility or authority.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, June 27, the 178th day of 1982. There are 187 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 27, 1950, President Harry Truman ordered the Air Force and Navy into the Korean conflict.

On this date:

In 1943, U.S. bombers attacked the German-occupied city of Athens, Greece, in World War II.

In 1962, President John F. Kennedy said the United States would not remain inactive if Chinese attacks on the Nationalist-held islands of Quemoy and Matsu appeared to threaten Taiwan.

In 1979, Syrian and Israeli jets battled above southern Lebanon for the first time in five years.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Alan Cranston: A politician's politician

WASHINGTON — Among Democrats who have their eye on the 1984 presidential race, many are looking in the direction of California — not at Gov. Jerry Brown, the flamboyant candidate, but at Sen. Alan Cranston, the quiet candidate.

Jack Anderson

Cranston is a rare bird, with hungry, watchful eyes. At 68, his bald, beaked features give him somewhat the look of an American eagle, but he is far from an endangered species.

For Cranston is a true pro, a politician's politician. During his 13 years in the Senate, his intelligence and integrity have won him influence beyond his seniority. Perhaps because he is known as a man of principle, who doesn't let political expediency override his convictions, Cranston's opinions always carry weight with his colleagues.

When the long summer of Democratic rule ended in 1980, he was quick to adapt to the unaccustomed role of a minority spokesman. He passed over the levers of power to the Republicans and immediately became a viewer-with-alarm for the Democratic minority. Many Senate Democrats would like to keep him in this role.

But Cranston is restless. To many politicians, the mere winning and holding of office, with its appearance of success and importance, are sufficient ends in themselves. But not to Cranston. As he sees it, winning the presidency is the desideratum that leads to the grand consummation of politics.

Low visibility is the biggest handicap to his presidential ambitions. Though his accomplishments are well known among the movers and shakers on Capitol Hill, the public outside California has little knowledge of who Cranston is or what he has done. Lacking the charisma of a Ronald Reagan or a Teddy Kennedy, the mild-mannered Cranston is in need of a rocket boost to gain recognition from the electorate at large.

Yet 1984 could be the best opportunity in years for a dark horse of Cranston's stripe to win the Democratic nomination. Changes in the party rules have given a potentially decisive role at the convention to members of Congress and other political pros — in other words, the ones most likely to appreciate Cranston. The early primaries and delegate caucuses will no longer be able to lock up the party nomination by convention time.

"The burden is now on him to muster support," Eugene Eidenberg, director of the Democratic National Committee, told my associate Lucette Lagnado. Cranston, he said, must "sell his qualities, raise the money, talk to enough reporters."

Cranston acknowledges that his face hasn't been pomaded, packaged and tested at the box office. But he has other political assets which have been tested at the ballot box. On his first run for the Senate in 1968, he won by 350,498 votes over his nearest opponent. The second time, his margin was 1.46 million, and in 1980, he ran 1.54 million ahead of the Republican runner-up. That was not only 56.6 percent of the vote, but 200,000 more votes than former Gov. Ronald Reagan got for president in his home state.

And though California isn't always in tune with the rest of the country, it still represents the biggest Electoral College prize of all — 47 votes, or more than 17 percent of the total needed by the winning presidential candidate.

While Cranston's quiet diplomacy and powers of persuasion are what impress political professionals, it must be said that his few performances in the public spotlight will probably be the despair of a national campaign manager. Not only has he refused to "trim" to the prevailing political wind, he has declined to keep secret his votes for unpopular causes.

For example, he was outspoken in his castigation of the FBI's behavior in ABSCAM, even though this put him on the side of Sen. Harrison Williams, D-N.J., at a time when most senators were trying to pretend they didn't even know their old colleague. And Cranston insists on taking credit for successful behind-the-scenes efforts to get the Panama Canal Treaty approved. He deserves the credit, but it's hardly likely to win him any votes for president.

One legislative success Cranston particularly likes to bring up is a little-known measure that gave federal funds to hospitals for special trauma units. George Washington University Hospital, where President Reagan was taken after the assassination attempt last year, had such a unit. So Cranston likes to say he helped save Reagan's life. Then he adds with a certain relish that the Reagan administration has cut funding for the program.

Though at 70, Cranston would be the oldest man ever nominated for his first presidential run, he would still be three years younger than Reagan. And even if Reagan is not the candidate in 1984, the Republicans would be hard-pressed to make age an issue. The senator, a sprint star in college and a runner and bicycle racer in middle age, is in excellent physical condition.

The Democrats, winding up their midterm convention in Philadelphia today, could do worse than pin their hopes on the quiet candidate from California.

GEORGE F. WILL

Ruling affirms rights for retarded people

WASHINGTON — In his 33 years, Nicholas Romeo has not been given much. Recently, however, he, and approximately 135,000 persons similarly situated, acquired some rights.

George F. Will

The word "landmark" is used too casually concerning Supreme Court rulings. But in its ruling in Romeo's case, the Court stepped, gingerly but unanimously, into new territory. For the first time it has affirmed substantive rights of involuntarily committed retarded persons in institutions. In this context, "involuntarily" does not mean against the individual's will, but rather that the individual's will was not engaged.

Romeo is profoundly retarded. Since the death of his father seven years ago, he has been a resident of Pennsylvania's much-criticized Pennhurst institution. He can not talk and lacks basic self-care skills. When petitioning for his admission to Pennhurst, his mother said: "He becomes violent — kicks, punches, breaks glass. He can't speak — wants to express himself but can't."

In Pennhurst he was injured 63 times, by his own violence or that of other residents, in the two years before his mother went to court. When in Pennhurst's infirmary for treatment of a broken arm, he was physically restrained in bed during parts of the day, with "soft" restraints on his arms. The staff said this was not for punishment but for his protection, and that of other patients.

Now the Court has held that there are constitutionally required conditions of confinement, derived from the 14th Amendment. The ruling is a delicate assertion of judicial oversight, tempered by assertions of deference to professionals in the field of institutional care.

The opinion, written by Justice Powell, affirms three rights: to safety, freedom of movement, and training. The first two "needs" are rights conditioned by institutional necessities, and the right to training is defined, minimally, as training necessary for enjoyment of the first two rights. But Romeo claimed only a right to "minimally adequate habilitation."

The Court calls even this claim "troubling," for several reasons. One is that "as a general matter, no state has a constitutional duty to provide substantive services for those within its border." The Court says the term "habilitation" is defined neither precisely nor consistently in psychiatry. (Actually, it is unclear how such habilitation is a psychiatric matter.) The Court also says that professionals differ "strongly" as to whether effective training of all severely or profoundly retarded persons is possible.

The Court does not know what the experience of recent years proves: that pessimistic prognoses, even by professionals, concerning all kinds of retardation, are apt to be wrong (although, alas, somewhat self-fulfilling). But the Court knows that an institutionalized person requires rights — enforceable claims — because he or she is wholly dependent on the state.

All Romeo sought, and all the Court affirmed, is a right to "training suited to" the two "needs" of bodily safety and minimum physical restraint. The Court stressed that, "This case does not present the difficult question whether a mentally retarded person, involuntarily committed to a state institution, has some general constitutional right to training per se." The Court actually pruned a lower court ruling, which it considered so broad as to permit excessive judicial intrusiveness. The Court said there is a "presumption of correctness" regarding the decisions of professionals, who "shall not be required to make each decision in the shadow of an action for damages."

Nevertheless, this ruling will, like a hovering angel, cast a comforting shadow on the approximately 135,000 retarded persons in institutions, many of whom are living in stomach-turning conditions. Furthermore, it expresses, and thereby nourishes, a social sensibility important to six million other retarded citizens.

The affecting surge of gratitude among friends of retarded citizens, including friends whose retarded friends are not institutionalized, is perhaps disproportionate to the rights affirmed by the ruling. But the satisfaction is commensurate with the expressive, as distinct from the technical, power of the ruling.

Americans are litigious, but not lawyer-like. American society is not animated by the dry distinctions that characterize judicial craftsmanship. Rulings like this one, and Brown vs. Board of Education, the 1954 school desegregation decision, are examples of the law's tutelary functions.

In 1954, the elemental message was: Blacks are full citizens. In 1982, the message is: Retarded people, too, are members of the community that the Constitution constitutes. The fact that these messages have had to be sent down from the Supreme Court — the Mt. Sinai of American government — is a measure of how bad things were then, and are in some places today.

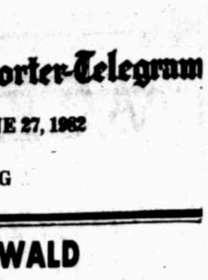
ART BUCHWALD

GOP selling job found wary public

Sometime back the Republican Party decided to launch a $1.7 million TV campaign to sell the GOP. They sought out an advertising agency and told them, "We've got to convince the American people that the only way to stop bad breath is by using Reaganomics. We want to show them that the best cure for the 'recession blahs' is a strong dose of supply-side economics. And we have to persuade the viewer that the president doesn't have ring around the collar."



Art Buchwald

The advertising agency boss told them, "You came to the right place. Belch, our creative vice president, has been working on just such a campaign. Show them what you've come up with."

Belch went over to a large easel. "Gentlemen, we must treat the Republican Party just like another consumer product. We have to convince the TV viewer that if he has hemorrhoids it's the Democrats' fault. Now our art department has sketched out a sample commercial. The first one shows actors that look like Jimmy Carter and Tip O'Neill. We will have a lawyer holding a will in which he reads what the Democrats have bequeathed Ronald Reagan, including a recession, unemployment and the highest interest rates in the history of the nation. As he's reading, Tip O'Neill is laughing like hell, and Jimmy Carter has that dumb grin on his face."

The Republican campaign managers studied it. Finally one of them said, "It's the old Brand X dirty trick gimmick. We're being negative, unfair, and some people would even say unscrupulous. I like it."

Another Republican nodded his head. "It's got the scary message we've been looking for, without the overkill. It will get the people thinking they're using the wrong deodorant."

Belch said, "We've tested it in Palm Springs, Calif., and 80 percent of the people who saw it said it convinced them to vote Republican."

"That's good enough for us," the head Republican honcho said. "If the Democrats yell foul, we'll know we're on the right track."

Belch said, "If the campaign proves as effective as I think it is, we have some other great ones in the can. We plan to show Carter and Tip O'Neill driving by an unemployment office in a long limousine, and when they see the lines outside they start laughing their heads off. And we will have the two of them walking through a school lunchroom watching the kids eating catsup and chuckling to each other."

The Republicans started slapping their thighs. The chief said, "Gentlemen, we've come to the right agency. You people can have our account. Now let's run it up the flag pole and see how it plays in Peoria."

The first commercial was made. CBS and NBC refused to air it, but ABC decided it needed the money. Also, the independent stations put it on.

To everyone's surprise it wasn't selling Reaganomics. The head Republican honcho called up Belch in anger. "Our warehouse is full of supply-side economics. Our sales are just a trickle. What's wrong?"

"It takes time for a negative message to sink in," Belch told him defensively. "You have to play it over and over again."

"Baloney," the Republican said. "Everyone thinks we're doing a commercial for probate lawyers. We keep getting calls from people asking if we will write their wills. Besides, every time the damn thing shows it reminds the voter we're in a recession."

"But you people said you wanted to blame all the country's economic troubles on the Democrats."

"You guys couldn't sell a Chrysler car to Lee Iacocca."

"Look," said Belch desperately, "maybe the commercial isn't doing everything we hoped it would. We'll change the campaign by being more positive. We could show the president eating jellybeans in the Oval Office, and then looking into the camera and saying 'The question you have to ask yourselves is, "Are you better off today than you were four years ago?"'"

"Don't bother," the Republican shouted. "Your agency is fired."

"But why?"

"Because, thanks to your stupid commercial, everyone in Peoria is going to vote for the Democrats."

SPEAKING OUT

Power of amendments may need amending

By CONGRESSMAN TOM LOEFFLER

U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler of Hunt was first elected to the Congress in 1978. Midland County officially becomes a part of Rep. Loeffler's 21st Congressional District on Jan. 1, 1983, due to congressional redistricting.

Some debate in the Congress is routine, some is historical and some is pitifully absurd. Matters relating to congressional pay and benefits clearly fall in the latter category.

Last December, in the waning days of the first session of the 97th Congress, the Senate passed a bill dealing with necessary reform of the black lung program — with a hidden amendment allowing members of Congress to commit highway robbery on the American taxpayer. The Senate amendment, in effect, led to three valuable tax options for the Congress: 1) Members could take a $75 deduction for "business" expenses for each day that the Congress was in session. The $75 was automatic and was not subject to substantiation or audit by the Internal Revenue Service. It was also available to members even if the only activity transacted on the floor of the House or Senate was the opening prayer. Or 2) members could take an automatic $50 for each day in session, coupled with expenses involved in maintaining a second home in Washington. Or 3) members could take unlimited business deductions provided that they could substantiate all expenses. To make matters worse, the options were made retroactive to the 1981 tax year. The maximum tax deductions could total around $19,000 — and could effectively eliminate in some instances a member's total federal tax liability!

Frankly, this whole mess is, in my mind, one of the most disgusting abdications of congressional responsibility in recent memory. All last year we asked the American public to sacrifice in a number of different ways in an attempt to achieve economic recovery, and then Congress turned right around and padded its own wallets. More than that, the deed was done quietly, with great speed, and through a devious back-door method — the use of tax deductions to provide, in effect, a hefty increase in congressional remuneration.

When the ramifications of the Senate amendment became clear, many of us sought immediate remedial action. I, for one, did not take advantage of a single new benefit on my 1981 income tax and have sponsored a series of different legislative vehicles to repeal this latest example of congressional greed. Even as I write, we have amended an appropriation bill which would strike the new congressional tax benefits from the statute books. Since the appropriation bill in question is over the president's budget, however, it may well be vetoed. If it is, I feel confident that amendments will be added to every possible piece of legislation until we are successful in undoing the damage. When that responsible event occurs, it will then be high time for Congress to decide once and for all how to handle matters related to congressional pay and benefits, while ensuring that the best interests of the American taxpayer are protected.

In the event the American people believe that Congress should be given an occasional raise to prevent having a Congress filled only with independently wealthy men and women, or, as some suggest, folks who can find no other employment, then the real focus must be on the process of providing them. It seems clear to me that a sitting Congress — by roll-call vote where every member is forced to stand up and be counted — should set an appropriate level of pay for the next Congress, which would not take effect until an election has intervened and the voters have spoken. This procedure would effectively prevent the kinds of activities we have seen to date.

The other basic question deals with the tax treatment of members of Congress. Most of the problems with the $75 per day nonsense arose because the statute on the books at the time set a $3,000 cap on business expenses for members of Congress. Many members felt that the cap, instituted in 1952, was unrealistic in face of the inflation rates of recent years. Many members felt that it was discriminatory to place a cap on business expenses for members of Congress when other businessmen are eligible to deduct any business expenses which they can document and justify to the satisfaction of the Internal Revenue Service. And many members felt that they have expenses, like the need to maintain two homes, which do not face other taxpayers. Because of the dissatisfaction with the $3,000 cap, Congress inexcusably overstepped the bounds of propriety and instituted the $75 per day abomination.

I do not pretend to have definitive answers to this one. One can argue that the $3,000 cap is unrealistic. One can argue that members of Congress do have legitimate extra business expenses, which, contrary to popular understanding, are paid by the members personally, like meals with constituents, flowers for funerals, remembrances for special occasions and the like. One the other hand, I, for instance, can argue that we all knew fully well when we first ran for public office that we would be faced with certain extra expenses and we should accept that fact or seek employment elsewhere.

There must be an honest, public debate on this issue, because there are no easy answers to cover all viewpoints. Regardless of the answers, however, it is essential that we never again be allowed to give ourselves a tax break in the form of a sneaky amendment to an unrelated bill, and we must never be able to give ourselves any special consideration that is unavailable to other Americans:

Consideration of matters relating to congressional pay and tax benefits have in the past been absurd, and Congress has only itself to blame. If we can be open, above-board, rational, reasonable, and responsible in the future, however, maybe the debate can border on the historical and maybe, just maybe, the public will regain some of its respect for the Congress as an institution, respect certainly not deserved by past antics.

Song of highway a familiar refrain

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — It has become a monthly ritual at DeWitt C. Greer Building.

A delegation from one of Texas' 254 counties, usually headed by the county judge, frequently with chambers of commerce members, often with maps and sometimes with legislators in tow, tells the three-member Highways and Public Transportation Commission that the county direly needs a new road (or roads) because the population is growing and more agricultural products, or manufactured products, or oilfield products, need to be transported.

And after the presentation is finished, the commission members thank the folks for coming, say they agree that the project most likely is needed and worthwhile, and point out that while they'd like to help, chances are that there's just not going to be enough money to get to that project in the immediate future.

Commission Chairman Robert Dedman, Dallas, at this month's session, explained to a West Texas delegation that Texas is spending close to $1 billion a year on highways.

But $100 million of that is overhead for the Department of Highways and Public Transportation, to keep the engineers and attorneys and secretaries and road crews and other people who are needed — and to supply them with the paper and typewriters and other equipment they need.

Another $400 million goes to repairs and rehabilitation of existing roads, and yet another $400 million goes to "leverage" federal funds for interstate and U.S. highways, Dedman said.

So, he explained, that means the commission is left with $100 million a year for building new roads.

"If we don't get some new funds to build roads," Dedman commented, "we're virtually out of the new construction business."

And he concluded with an admonition to the group to encourage their lawmakers to help the commission get some more money.

That complaint on lack of funds isn't new, and lawmakers have attempted to solve the problem by guaranteeing a basic level of highway construction.

But the plan hasn't worked as well as had been expected (or hoped), due to inflation and a drop in revenues from the gasoline tax.

Under a 1977 law, the Legislature set $750 million annually as the amount to be spent for highway construction, with provisions for the Highway Cost Index Committee to adjust the amount annually for inflation.

Any money needed over that available from the gasoline and auto license revenues is made up from General Revenue Fund dollars.

The idea was to assure that construction would continue at a constant level, to allow the department better to plan for and carry out construction.

In recent years, hundreds of millions of dollars from General Revenue have been needed to keep the program operating at its mandated level — and a number of legislators have indicated concern over the drain in the State's main operating fund at a time when so many demands are being placed and more are likely to be placed — on that fund for other needs.

Gov. Bill Clements recently, addressing the Texas Good Roads/Transportation Association, criticized the Highway Cost Index funding program and said the Legislature should look at alternative funding methods for highways in 1983 — but he stopped short of calling for an increase in the gasoline tax to finance highway construction.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby took a similar line, saying that the index "has worked well" but needs to be "fine-tuned," and that some means must be found to counter decreasing expenditures for highways at a time that Texas' population continues increasing.

But, Clements said, money is only part of the solution to the highway funding situation.

Texas, he argued, should improve its "strategic planning" and "management of highway construction, operation and maintenance programs.... We must come forward with a comprehensive, well thought-out reasonable plan for meeting our transportation needs."

And he warned — as did a number of legislators at the TGRTA session — against coming to the Legislature next year with any "pie in the sky kind of program."

Members of the Highways and Public Transportation Commission have been saying for some time now that Texas should increase its five cents per gallon gasoline tax, pointing out that the tax is the lowest in the nation.

Most politicians are reluctant to advocate increasing taxes, even when the purpose for which those taxes are dedicated is politically popular — and surveys indicate Texans continue to favor highways about as strongly as they favor anything.

And every month, a group of them turns up at the Greer building to deliver that message, and to be told that if that's the way they feel, they need to support finding funds to turn some of those requests into reality.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Readers are invited to submit letters to be considered for publication. They may be on any subject, but should not be slanderous or defamatory. They must be signed by the writer and must include the writer's correct mailing address and a telephone number at which the writer may be contacted during the day, either home or office.

No letter will be published anonymously and names will appear. Addresses and phone numbers are for verification only and will not be published.

Writers should be as concise as possible and the right to condense letters is reserved. They will be published as soon as possible after being received.

They should be addressed to: Letters to the Editor, The Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702 or brought to the newspaper's editorial department.

Just outsmarted?

To The Editor:

What did Midland County Library actually gain in its deal with First National Bank? We have already heard a clarification to explain that the bank did not, of course, give money or any real asset. Somehow, it will make less interest, I think.

Now we are seeing the results of the city of Midland's cooperation with First National Bank. The closing of streets and alleys (which are, of course, public property) to aid in the building of the plaza, is, also, apparently a fait accompli.

But back to my first question. The library property was essential, a central piece in the plan, the key. Usually, a person holding such a valuable asset is aware of it and demands suitable compensation. What did the bank pay for its gain?

It is not my province here to suggest that incorporating a county library into a private office complex is somewhat unusual. I just mention that in passing because there is talk of doing something similar with a new city building.

Were the officials responsibile for the library deal (I assume the county commisioners) misled or just outsmarted?

Finishing last

To The Editor:

I know justice is supposed to be blind, but not to the point that it needs a seeing-eye dog.

The verdict that was handed down Monday evening (June 21) for John Hinckley of not guilty by reason of insanity on thirteen seperate counts has to be the worst miscarriage of justice since man has been able to have discernment between right and wrong.

I believe if Hinckley hadn't had those well orchestrated courtroom antics to sway the jurors into believing that he was not a sane person (for which he should receive an Oscar), and if his four victims especially the president had been named Kennedy, the jury would have rendered a just and proper guilty verdict.

How can a supposedly civilized society say on one hand that Sirhan Sirhan is guilty and on the other hand that John Hinckley is innocent by reason of insanity? Sirhan Sirhan was the crazier of the two because he attacked the Kennedy clan which no one does and gets away with it. That was like going into the middle of a La Costra Nostra meeting with the intention of shooting the head man with a B-B rifle.

Like Leo Durocher once said, "Good guys finish last." The final score Monday evening was BAD GUYS 4 vs. GOOD GUYS 0.

Volunteerism

To The Editor:

The City of Midland Swim Team takes this opportunity to thank Midland for a successful 35th Annual West Texas Invitational Swim Meet. We have long enjoyed a very cooperative relationship with the Midland Parks and Recreation Department for their cosponsorship along with the Midland Jaycee's and Jaycettes who braved the elements this past weekend to serve as timers.

In addition, we express appreciation to the many individuals and businesses whose generosity in purchasing ads and event sponsorships in our program booklet help make competitive swimming possible in Midland.

Finally, a word of thanks to the swim team families who have worked so hard to put on a quality meet for the benefit of all the participating swimmers.

The unselfish spirit of volunteerism from all the involved parties makes our motto "The Sky's the Limit" a reality. Thank you Midland!

Congress' role

To The Editor:

Responsibility for the situation in which our country now finds itself, can be laid directly at the door step of the gentlemen who make up the Congress of the United States.

To begin, over the last decade Congress has passed legislation concerning welfare, entitlements, social security and a great many other things they knew our country could not afford — much less, live with. They tell you they did these things for humanitarian reasons, but this is bunk. They did them to insure their reelection and to build empires.

Not one of our illustrious representatives ever thinks about a balanced budget, they think about how much more can be spent. Not one of them ever thinks about paying off the national debt, only of how to increase it. It's politics as usual.

The delay connected with passing the 1983 budget is ridiculous. The national businesss economy has been forced to sit on its heels and our country and economy stand still while Congress worries over its selfish interests, fiddles while Rome burns. Many of these gentlemen really don't know how their budget vote will affect their upcoming election's, so rather than vote one way or another, they do nothing until November. From the day they are first elected, getting reelected is their only motivation.

Congress is full of representatives who have been in office for 15, 20 or 25 years. What makes us think that our representatives are irreplaceable and that we have to reinstall them into office, term after term. If they had really worked for the good of the nation, our country would not be in the sorry shape we now find it.

In order to cure this lust for reelection, which controls congressional actions, we need to remove the cause. A constitutional amendment prevented our presidents from serving more than two terms, what about a constitutional amendment to prevent a congressman from serving more than one term. Let's give him a six year term and prevent him from ever serving in Congress again. Let him know that he has to come out of Congress and live with the mess he helped create.

There are innumerable capable men and women in America who could serve our country well. Let's make it worth their while: Pay them a million dollars a year. This would be chicken feed next to what congressmen presently throw away in order to insure their reelection.

It would be possible to write reams concerning excesses of Congress and congressmen. Space does not permit, but we all know what these excesses are and how Congress has been putting it on us for several years. We also know they have unwritten rules which protect one another, and no one congressman would sponsor legislation limiting tenure. Therefore, it would be difficult to get any of them to initiate single term legislation. It will take a "ground swell" of public opinion to change the rules. I think it's quite evident: It is time for us to change the rules.

Insane fashions

To The Editor:

We have always known that in our judicial system one can get away with murder...it's been proven many times over. Now we know that one can get away with attempted assassination of our president, not to mention gravely wounding three others who happened to get in his way. It has become very fashionable to be "insane."

All we need to prove our insanity is a high-powered psychiatrist with a command of the English language to thoroughly confuse and bewilder the jury...the jury, of course, being made up of simple laymen as to the workings of the human mind. We no longer need to worry about the act or crime itself but rather what the mind was thinking at the time it was committed. Does proving insanity excuse the crime? And should we equate insanity with measles or chicken pox, sicknesses that we most likely cannot contract again? Or should it be more fairly compared to flu or pneumonia or diarrhea?

If John Hinckley is released from St. Elizabeth's Hospital, suppose next year he finds himself hopelessly in love with Brooke Shields...uh oh, he might not miss this time!

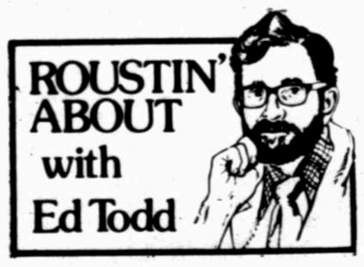
Fourth: Time of celebration?



Once again, Americans will lull through another Fourth of July as if it were just another weekend day laden with what-to-do-itis.

Americans, it seems, have got to be entertained or to be lured into a shopping spree to really get the most out of a holiday, such as the Fourth, which commemorates the Continental Congress's adoption of the Declaration of Independence in 1776.

Next Sunday will celebrate the 206th anniversary of this nation's independence from a foreign power. Remember all the fuss 'n' stir which was made over the Bicentennial celebration in 1976? That big bash, long since past, provided a good study in public spirit, commercialism and a camaraderie. It was as if the nation were a big fraternity, and millions of members joined in the uproar. Some stood idly by and wondered why.

This Fourth likely will be just another day, just as the Sabbath is just another day of the week to celebrate Creation. Americans, like all people, forget to be thankful and neglect to express gratitude for the blessings of living in an unoppressed land. Sometimes it seems to the contrary, but this country is relatively free of unreasonable constraints.

The thing to be beware, though, in this nation of landlords and private ownership is not to trespass on thy neighbor's property and don't covet, at least outwardly, his "things." Otherwise, keep to thy own wiles, don't interfere in thy neighbor's whims, and life will be livable for neighbors and passers-by.

It's the principle of the Golden Rule, if anybody remembers the gist of it. It must have merit, just as does the Big Ten laws in Exodus and Deuteronomy. But, quite obviously, the world, including the many circles which say they take stock in the Bible, isn't quite certain if the covenants are applicable today. Hence, there's a lot of willful, inadvertent and hapless violations of the rules; the state of the world bears witness to that.

The state of this nation and its people likewise bears witness to the people's lackadaisical approach to nationalism and to patriotism. Mistakenly, the people seem to think that patriotism applies only in times of war or other crises, and that nationalism is a threat to free enterprise and individualism. That's bunk. Without the nation and its maze of rules and regulations which, in theory, are linked to the Constitution, the people would be in more confusion than they are now and possibly would be in more bondage.

The people of this nation ought to review their heritage, as distorted as it may be, glean their blessings and contemplate how best to preserve them.

KINGSBURY-SMITH

'Now is the time for all good men,' world's military machinations indicate

By JOSEPH KINGSBURY-SMITH
National Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — Britain's brilliant military operation in the Falkland Islands, led by marines and commandos swiftly transported 9,000 miles from home base, gave striking evidence of the importance of a combat-ready Marine force to meet distant crises.

With the Lebanese war endangering American citizens, and with the potential danger of an Iranian or other radically-inspired revolutionary attempt to seize control of Persian Gulf oil resources so vital to the economies of the West and Japan, peacetime maintenance of a strong U.S. Marine Corps has never been more been more essential than it is today.

These views were expressed by Gen. Robert H. Barrow, Marine Corps Commandant, in response to questions during an exclusive interview with The Hearst Newspapers.

"At no time in our peacetime history has there been greater need for our Marine Corps than at present,' the combat veteran of three wars said.

"As our globe continues to shrink in a troubled world, interdependence tends to grow, and treaty obligations remain valid, the need for our Marine Corps becomes ever greater.

"The Russian move into Afghanistan, the Iran-Iraqi war, the fighting in Lebanon have all caused an awareness that instability may emerge anywhere."

Gen. Barrow believes that danger of a cutoff in oil supplies from the Persian Gulf would be more likely to come from a revolutionary threat to the Western-oriented sheikdoms than from direct Soviet intervention.

With growing public fear of nuclear war, the general thinks there is a new awareness of the importance of such conventional forces as the Marines. They can get to brush fires quickly and control the conflict before it escalates into a bigger conflagration that might lead to nuclear holocaust. Highly trained in amphibious assault, they can establish beachheads for stronger forces if necessary.

Operating from aircraft carriers and transport ships, they can overcome the landing rights problem faced by the United States when it was rushing military supplies to Israel during the 1973 Arab-Israel war. Even such NATO allies as Italy refused to grant the U.S. landing privileges for the American military cargo planes carrying weapons and ammunition to Israel. The only European allied country that granted the U.S. landing rights was Portugal, which allowed the American planes to refuel in the Azores. Had it not been for the quick American replacement of weapons lost when Egypt attacked Israel, the Jewish nation could have lost the war.

"In the event of a distant crisis, we can place forces in international waters without intruding on anyone's sovereignty and that in itself might prevent something going from bad to worse," Gen. Barrow said. "International waters are highways to trouble places."

One of the few areas in which the U.S. still retains military superiority over Soviet Russia is in amphibious forces. "If you look at the balance sheet of the Soviets and the U.S., there is one thing that jumps out, and that is that we are superior in amphibious capability, despite the fact that we do need to improve our amphibious lift," he added.

"Some people have thought amphibious warfare was passe, to which I have always replied: 'Oh God, I hope not.'

While amphibious forces may not achieve strategic surprise, they can achieve tactical surprise, as indeed they did in the Falklands. They landed not against Stanley, but in the inland waters between the major islands. An amphibious task force of 50,000 Marines over the Norfolk, Va., horizon at six o'clock tonight could, by six a.m. tomorrow be anywhere from Myrtle Beach, S.C., to the northern tip of Long Island, picking the place where the enemy is least heavily defended. With air superiority, an amphibious force can land almost anywhere it wants."

Britain's lack of air superiority in the Falklands, particularly the lack of early warning aircraft, was, in the general's opinion, the reason why they lost some of their warships.

Having risen from the rank of second-lieutenant to four-star general in the Marines, leading them into battle in China, Korea and Vietnam, the handsome, ramrod straight, leatherneck personifies the elite character of the Marine Corps. Firm but not pompous in demeanor, he is mighty proud of his "grunts," a nickname for a Marine.

He is pleased with the quality of recruits the Corps is now getting through the volunteer system, though higher standards have been established for acceptance. Twenty-nine percent of the people recruited in 1980 would be ineligible today, he said, adding that the drug problem in the Corps has been "licked."

Particularly pleased with the modernization program approved by President Reagan, the Louisiana-born Marine leader said:

"It's a very encouraging period for the Marines. We will experience a peacetime modernization over the next few years that is almost unparalleled."

For Quality Meats

Fact: Convenience has become a way of daily life for the average American today. Fact: Meat is an important part of the daily food of an average American. Fiction: Getting meat at your local grocery store is more convenient and less expensive than at a meat market. The alternative to those long lines and high prices is located at 4402 W. Illinois and is called The Meat-N-Place.

You know, you see a lot of tv commercials today telling you how the really smart shoppers compare prices and products and then choose the best product for their shopping dollar. That holds true not only for comparison between two brands of a product in the same store, but also comparing prices and quality between stores. If you shop, stop and compare prices and quality at your local grocery store with the excellent prices and quality at The Meat-N-Place.

The Meat-N-Place offers only the highest quality meat. The fresh ground beef is...just that... freshly ground with no ice water, formaldehyde, pink overhead lights, soy products, and only enough fat to give it flavor; very little flavor is lost in cooking. All meats are all-natural, with only the best of the meat put out for sale. No choice cuts are held back, and the result is a noticeable difference between meat sold at The Meat-N-Place and that sold at the grocery stores.

Although Meat-N-Place stocks bulk packages of roast, sausage, bacon, chicken-fried steak, dinner steaks, pork chops, chicken, franks, and corn dogs—all of which are cut and layered in neat, flat boxes which easily fit into your freezer regardless of the size—that's not all they stock. If you're on your way home from work, stop by The Meat-N-Place and pick up just a couple of steaks or ... whatever for your evening meal. And talk about convenience! No long lines, no crowds to fight, no impersonal cashiers, and no digging to find a steak that looks good enough to eat.

Now, back to being the smart shopper. With the quality of the meat, the convenience of quick service, and the choice of bulk purchasing or just daily shopping; the biggest surprise you'll find at The Meat-N-Place is that the prices are less expensive than most any grocery store or supermarket. Imagine, better quality for less money. Now there's absolutely no question in your mind about where to go for quality, service, convenience, and price... for your daily, weekly or monthly meat shopping.

For those of you who live out of town and have a hard time making it into Midland, The Meat-N-Place makes regular route runs to the surrounding towns. Call collect to inquire about meat delivery straight to your doorstep. Midland residents call 694-5536 or drop by 4402 W. Illinois between 10:00 a.m. and 6:00 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

And now, perhaps the biggest surprise of all: despite the already low prices and high quality, The Meat-N-Place is having a one day sale Thursday, July 1st. You will probably never again see prices as low as these. For example, brisket normally sells at The Meat-N-Place for the low price of $1.98 per pound, but during this special sale, it will sell for the incredibly low price of only $1.56 per pound. Hot dogs will sell for $13.40 for a box of 100; regular low price is only $15.30. Hamburger will be reduced from $2.10 per poundto $1.90. The regular low price of German Sausage will be cut from $25.08 to $20.84, and German Sausage by the piece will only be $1.30, regular $1.68. And remember, this is only the best, top quality meat. At these prices, you can't afford to miss this one-day sale. So mark your calendars. That's this Thursday, July 1st. The Meat-N-Place is your store for fantastic meat prices and exceptional quality.

Village Car Wash will wash and hand-dry your car, but what really makes them stand out from any ordinary car wash is the special services they perform.

The detail center at Village Car Wash has the following services to keep your car looking showroom new:

For long-lasting protection of your car's finish, Village will apply a poly sealant. And to give your car a brilliant lustre, Village will apply Simoniz paste wax by hand. Imagine, your car will be hand-waxed and will be guarenteed to have no swirls or buffer marks. And while they're at it, ask them to clean your vinyl top and apply a vinyl preservative. Tar removal is available at Village Car Wash to further beautify your car's exterior appearance.

On the inside, Village cleans all types of interior with Chem Steam. And after they clean the interior, ask them to apply Scotch Guard to preserve and protect the interior. You can rid your engine of all that messy grease and smudge by letting Village steam clean and degrease it. All special services at Village Car Wash are performed by qualified, trained personnel. They help you maintain your car's maximum at trade-in time, or at any time.

All special services at Village may either be performed seperately or at a package price. For an appointment, call 684-9485 or go by 604 Andrews Hwy. between 8:30 and 6:00. They have been family owned and operated in the Permian Basin since 1969, and their trained personnel are eagerly waiting to help maintain your car's showroom finish. Village Car Wash. More than just a car wash. The car Wash people, P 1 in West Texas.

U.S. auto industry sales drop 22.4 percent

DETROIT (AP) — A recovery in the U.S. auto industry that seemed to be under way last month is suffering a severe relapse this month as sales dropped 22.4 percent in mid-June, industry analysts say.

The five major domestic automakers said Wednesday they sold 118,095 cars in the June 11-20 period, compared with 171,196 in the period last year. It was the worst mid-June selling period since 1958.

The decline follows three consecutive sales gains in May and a slight 0.1 percent decrease in the first 10 days of June.

"This is a relapse," said Arvid Jouppi, auto industry analyst at Colin Hochstin Co. in Detroit. "If sales don't pick up in the third 10 days of June ... it will tie the current record for consecutive quarters of downturn."

Domestic auto sales have been in a slump for 12 straight quarters. The longest downturn in history was in the 13 quarters during the Depression from 1929-32, Jouppi said.

"The numbers are terrible," agreed David Healy, analyst at Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. in New York. He attributed it to a delayed falloff of sales following General Motors Corp.'s end of its 12.8 percent auto loan interest program May 31.

GM, the only U.S. carmaker now without a sales promotion, had the worst showing of the Big Three — down 25.4 percent in the 10-day selling period compared with a year ago.

But even Ford Motor Co. sales were down 16.8 percent and Chrysler Corp. was off 13.7 percent in the period. Both automakers had announced they will maintain their respective free-maintenance and extended warranty programs.

American Motors Corp. was off an estimated 37.8 percent and Volkswagen of America Inc. was down 31.4 percent. Both have cut prices on some models through the end of the model year.

Donald DeScenza, analyst at Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette in New York, attributed the drop to consumers' expectations that new incentives will be implemented. "Consumers have become so accustomed to incentives over the last couple of years that they expect new programs and are just sitting back and waiting," he said.

He also said May's incentives originally had ending dates at the end of May and in early June which pushed some buyers to get their cars then.

A recovery likely will not occur until the third quarter of the year, he added.

GM said it sold 68,498 cars from June 11-20, down from 103,331 in the period in 1981. Ford's tally was 30,781, down from 41,644, while Chrysler said it sold 14,734 cars, down from 19,210 in the period a year earlier.

AMC, which does not release 10-day sales, was estimated at 1,900, down from 3,426, while VW was at 2,182, down from 3,585.

For the year so far, carmakers have sold 2,775,235, down 13.6 percent from 3,135,786 last year.

GM's year sales totaled 1,709,444, down 9.3 percent from 1,897,903 a year earlier. Ford sold 651,412, down 7.1 percent from 705,805 and Chrysler's year sales were 329,492, down 13 percent from 381,157 in 1981.

AMC's year-to-date estimate was 42,618, down 40.1 percent from 71,675 last year, while VW's total was 42,269, down 46.2 percent from 79,246.

The percent differences are based on the daily selling rates. Last year, there were nine selling days in the June 11-20 period, one more than in the period this year. For the year, there have been 144 selling days, one less than in 1981.

Put a lot of Texas in your pocket

AUSTIN — You can put a lot of Texas in your pocket or purse if you have the 1982 model of the "Texas Fact Book."

The compact booklet, not much bigger than a man's hand, is published by The Universtiy of Texas Bureau of Business Research. It provides a quick reference to data about Texas — from the per capita income in Midland ($11,712) to the largest nonfinancial corporation in the state (Shell Oil).

Statistics on the state's agriculture, business, construction and housing, cost of living, employment, finance, geography, government, income, manufacturing, mining, oil and gas, population, transportation and vital statistics represented in tables and maps. Brief paragraphs introduce each section.

Texas has a fairly young population; 42 per cent of the population is between 18 and 44 years old and more than 60 per cent is under age 35.

Approximately 32 per cent of the households in Texas receive an income of $24,000 or more.

"Texas Fact Book 1982" was compiled by three staff members of the Bureau of Business Research--Dr. Joseph Pluta, an economist who edits the Texas Business Review; Rita J. Wright, research associate, and Mildred C. Anderson, statistician.

Copies are $6 each (plus 30 cents tax for Texas residents) and may be obtained from the UT Bureau of Business Research, Box 7459, UT Station, Austin, Texas 78712.

UT to offer summer management program

AUSTIN — Once again this summer The University of Texas Graduate School of Business will offer a two-week Mid-Level Management Program for the Oil Industry that proved successful in 1981.

The program will be conducted July 11-23 at World ofs Resorts Inn near Lago Vista, about 40 miles west of austin.

Enrollment is limited to 32. June 25 is the deadline for enrolling.

Seminar sessions are tailored to the needs of middle managers in petroleum-related business. Areas of study will focus on finance, communication (written and oral), accounting and people management. A business simulation game will allow participants to reinforce what they learn in the classromm through practical decision-making exercises.

Most of the faculty will be drawn from UT's Graduate School of Business. Among them will be James Deitrick, accounting; Beverly Hadaway, finance; D. Maitland Huffman, management; John Penrose, busikness communication, and I. B. Helburn, management-Industrial relations.

The program fee of $2,500 covers lodging, meals, books and materials.

Management Development Programs of the UGT Graduate School of Business is in charge of arrangements. Further information may be obtained from that office at (512) 471-5893.

Triton signs contract

DALLAS (SWN) — Triton Energy Corporation hasannounced that its subsidiary, Triton Colombia, Inc. has signed a contract with Empresa Colombiana De Petroleos (the national oil company of Colombia) for oil exploration in the Llanos area of eastern Colombia. The contract gives Triton exploration rights to approximately 400,000 acres comprising the Santiago de Atalayas No. 1 sector, located 150 kilometers east-northeast of Bogota. Important oil discoveries have recently recently been made in this area, and development for production is now taking place. Triton plans to begin detail seismic work in its contract area in September 1982.

Triton Energy Corporation, headquartered in Dallas, Texas, is an international oil and gas exploration and development company. The Company is actively involved in exploration projects in the United States, Canada, the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, France, Argentina, Thailand, Australia and New Zealand. In addition to its oil and gas interests, Triton subsidiaries conduct contract drilling operations in the United States and produce and explore for coal in Australia.

Texas to face critical period as assistant programs stopped

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Past dependency on Federal assistance in the area of general aviation will cause Texas to face a "very critical period as the Federal government pulls out of the transportation business," Texas Aeronautics Commission Executive Director Clay Wilkins says.

Wilkins comments that Texans have never treated aviation as a "transportation mode," at least in the sense that highways are treated.

"The State must assume more initiative in developing an aviation transportation system to meet the needs of business, industry and the individual," Wilkins says.

Wilkins expects Congress will soon authorize a temporary extension of the airport development aid program for one year, to cover fiscal 1982, with a multi-year bill to provide funding from 1983 to 1987 expected soon afterwards.

The 1983-87 funding, Wilkins says, could come to $700 million annually nationwide--which would mean Texas would get as much as $35 million annually for large commuter airports, $5-7.5 million for reliever airports and $6 million for small commuter airports.

Wilkins notes TAC has begun a lawsuit against the federal government to force disbursement of some $5 billion in an aviation fuel tax and passenger ticket trust funds that, by law, is intended for use in airport development.

So far, Wilkins says, those funds haven't been spent as prescribed by law.

A lawsuit by Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., New York, against the State and the the State Board of Insurance over th premium tax law, has been reset for Nov. 8 in State district court in Austin.

The case had been set for April 19, then was changed to June 21, and then postponed to Nov. 8.

Metropolitan contends the premium tax law discriminates against out-of-Texas companies and thus denies equal protection of the law.

Two other out-of-state customers have filed similar actions but are expected to await the decision in the Metropolitan case before proceeding.

The decision could affect collection of tens of millions of dollars in premium taxes.

State Board of Insurance has named David F. Eley, a Chicago native with a background in finance and accounting, to assist with its study of investment income as a factor in rate making for property and casualty insurance.

Eley, 32, is a graduate in finance from the University of Illinois at Urbana, and has been employed as an auditor for the Internal Revenue Service and by public accounting firms.

He has begun researching subjects connected with the study, which was funded by the 1981 Legislature.

Arthur Wright, research economist, Texas Real Estate Research Center, Texas A&M, reports that in Texas, as elsewhere in the country, "the days of relatively cheap land, food, capital and shelter are apparently past."

Wright, in an analysis of homeownership published by the Bureau of Business Research, University of Texas at Austin, comments that "most people will likely by spending a larger portion of their incomes on necessities (during the 1980s) than they did in the 1960s and 1970s."

In spite of that, he says, "homeownership will still be one of the best investments most households can make."

During the 1970s, the annual appreciation rates of most homes was approximately 11 per cent nationwide, and 13 per cent in Texas--with the appreciation rate expected to exceed inflation during the 1980s because the growing population, increased numbers of people in the home-buying age range, and "increased perception that home ownership provides some hedge against inflation and some tax advantages, as well as shelter and pride of ownership," Wright says.

The Southwest region, he predicts, "will probably have higher appreciation rates than will some other areas of the nation."

Wright's study also notes that the average sale price of existing single-family homes in Texas has increased from $25,700 in 1973 to $69,000 in 1981--while the comparable nationwide figures show an increase from $32,900 to $78,000.

"While housing costs in Texas are generally still below the national average," he comments, "housing costs in some of the most rapidly growing Texas cities are considerably above the national average."

And with the growth in the price of housing, the percentage of income required to pay for housing has increased--with a typical household now spending 37 per cent of its income on mortgage payments and related texas and insurance.

Minneapolis, St. Paul inspiration for revival of U.S. cities

By VIC OSTROWIDZIK
Hearst Washington Bureau

MINNEAPOLIS -Those who seek inspiration for the revival of American cities ought to visit the amazing twin cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul.

What one sees immediately illustrates what can be done through cooperative effort between the private and public sectors, and underscores the interdependence of cities and the rest of the state.

John Cairns, executive director of the Minnesota Business Partnership (MBP), says the private and public sectors started working closely together during the 1970s when executives of several major corporations based in the area concluded those claims that business always opposed progressive legislation were perhaps deserved.

In other words, Cairns says, they conceded that "maybe business was part of the problem."

Deciding they wanted their companies and the Minnesota business community to be "part of the solution" they banded together to form MBP. The last word in the name was thoughtfully chosen. The founders sought to make business a partner with state government in dealing with economic and other issues.

THE ALLIANCE, similar in concept to the national Business Roundtable, draws on chief executives and staffs of such companies as General Mills, 3M, Honeywell and Dayton-Hudson, who work with government officials on task forces to coordinate efforts aimed at revitalizing the inner city.

At the capitol, the partnership has become a recognized force and a source of data. At the present time, however, MBP is involved in a bitter fight with Minnesota's state government, which it views as increasingly "antagonistic" to economic growth, one of the side-effects of state budget-tightening. This attitude is particularly common among small business people, whose markets and employees are exclusively within Minnesota borders.

But MBP is pleased with the way the Twin Cities governments have worked with the business community to help rebuild downtowns and restore citizen pride.

America's mayors attending the U.S. Conference of Mayors 50th annual meeting here have seen this partnership first-hand -the kind of successful cooperation that is known nationally as the "Minnesota Model."

THE MAYORS saw it in several tours of the downtown areas, observing new efforts in industry, housing, parks, energy conservation, education, jobs, minority assistance, neighborhoods, the arts and sports.

The mayors also had a chance to see from exhibits similar developments launched in 11 other cities -more viable projects than the 1960s partnerships, which relied heavily on urban renewal projects and "new town" experiments and often failed. But few of the exhibits have been as successful as the local model.

Local leaders credit the welcome change to business leaders who now recognize that attractive cities attract clients. Others claim better targeting of federal dollars has been the key.

Cairns says six characteristics distinguish the Twin Cities and the economy here from other urban centers: geographic isolation, ethnic homogeneity, dominance of locally-owned firms, a diversified economy, involvement of business leaders in public affairs, and, despite high taxes, government accommodation of major local firms though favorable rates on out-of-state sales.

The two cities, once rivals, now are jointly engaged in a major housing program.

THE SUCCESS of the Twin Cities cooperative venture is explained in a study done for the National Committee for Economic Development, as part of its national analysis of public-private partnerships.

"No single financial, organizational, or managerial device or formula explains the success of public-private cooperation in the Twin Cities," the report says. "Rather, the story is one of a habit of cooperation, a pattern of institutionalized civic-mindedness. Much may be unique to the area because of its peculiar history and economy. Nevertheless, there is also much that is replicable in other cities that can be applauded."

Talking with the mayors, a reporter was told that the Twin Cities' success often cannot be duplicated in large communities.

But not everything is wine and roses in the Twin Cities. There are problems here that the mayors heard very little about.

Minnesota's economy is strained not only by the recession but by the local downturn in agriculture and iron mining. This hasn't stopped the public -private partnership from continuing. But it could, especially if the economy worsens.

Business failures rising, problem may get worse

By BOB FICK

WASHINGTON (AP) — The business of more and more American businesses seems to be going out of business, and a financial analyst says it will probably get worse.

"Unless the economy improves and interest rates decline significantly, I am afraid that the already staggering number of business failures will swell to levels comparable to the early 1930s," says Edward Altman, professor of finance at New York University.

A relatively short economic recovery will aggravate the already grim situation because many small businesses will not have enough time to recuperate, Altman says. "The economic outlook for most firms is not encouraging."

Altman, backed up by statements from 18 federal bankruptcy judges and trustees, was providing a string of statistics for the House Small Business oversight subcommittee today, projecting that 25,000 of the nation's 2.8 million businesses will fail this year.

That would be the highest number since the depth of the Great Depression, when more than 31,000 businesses failed in 1932, and twice the number of just two years ago.

"The number of business failures today is really much higher," Rep. John LaFalce, D-N.Y., subcommittee chairman said in a prepared statement, "since thousands of businessmen simply decide to close their businesses because they see only an unprofitable future."

The bankruptcy court officials from New York across the High Plains to California repeatedly cited high interest rates, the lengthy recession, tight money and speculative business decisions of past years as the reasons for the lengthening lines at their offices.

"The tentacles of the current recession reach to all communities, at all locations. Even the glorious Sunbelt has not been insulated," Scott Bush, bankruptcy trustee for the northern district of Texas, wrote to the subcommittee

Quinlan Shea, acting trustee for the northern district of Illinois, added, "In a small community, or in a small market, one liquidation has a ripple effect throughout the community or the market."

But continued high interest rates were tagged over and over again as the chief culprit in the rising tide of business failures.

"A loan costing 10 percent in 1976-77 is costing in 1982 approximately 20 percent and has even reached the 23-25 percent level in recent years," Altman said in his prepared testimony. "No wonder we have record levels of bankruptcies and business failures!"

S&Ls pushing different short-term savings account

By SALLY JACOBSEN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rival plans are surfacing for a new short-term savings account that would let banks and savings and loan associations pay depositors high interest rates competitive with money market mutual funds.

The American Bankers Association and the U.S. League of Savings Associations have sent letters in the last few days to federal regulators spelling out their ideas for a new account.

The federal regulators, who make up the Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee, are scheduled to take up the issue at their meeting next Tuesday. The committee is charged by Congress with phasing out interest rate caps at depository institutions by 1986.

While the bankers are strongly pushing for a new short-term account, the savings and loan officials are half-heartedly giving their backing for such a plan — but only if Congress agrees to give them additional powers to operate more like commercial banks.

"A short-term account will increase our costs," William O'Connell, president of the U.S. League of Savings Associations, told the regulators in a letter. The U.S. League has about 4,000 member S&Ls.

"No recent economic developments portend any significant improvement" in the earnings crunch that the savings and loan industry has been experiencing, he said. Savings and loans, burdened by large portfolios of old mortgages, have been forced to pay out more to attract and hold deposits than they are taking in from those old home loans agreed on years ago when interest rates were much lower.

Without the legislation, O'Connell argued, the short-term account could be a "dangerous instrumentality" since some savers are likely to move money out of low-paying passbook accounts to get the higher rate. It should only go into effect once the legislation is approved, he said.

Bankers, on the other hand, want approval to offer a short-term account — with no interest rate caps and with a relatively low entry requirement — right away. The American Bankers Association represents about 13,200 banks.

In a recent full-page ad, the group said the regulators are facing a "sink or swim decision."

"It is now time to get on with the deregulation of banks and thrifts by authorizing competitive short-term deposit accounts," it said.

As spelled out by the American Bankers' Gerald Lowrie, the group wants an account that requires a minimum balance of $5,000. The bankers don't want interest rate ceilings placed on the account and they don't want savings and loan associations to be free to pay a bit more than banks, as is the case for some accounts. And they want to be able to give savers access to the accounts so they can write a limited number of checks on them. They suggest three transfers a month in minimum amounts of $500 each.

The proposed account, Lowrie wrote the regulators, is "operationally simple, understandable to both bankers and their customers, and most importantly, competitive with most current offerings of money market mutual funds."

The U.S. League says they will go along with a conditional account that requires $10,000 as the minimum to open and the minimum to earn interest.

Money from the account could not be withdrawn for seven days, under the U.S. League's plan. No more than three transfers would be allowed each month. Checks could not be written on the account.

Fewer cars built this week

DETROIT (AP) — U.S. carmakers will build 132,448 new cars this week in the United States, down 19.3 percent from the same week last year and down 3.1 percent from last week, a trade journal says.

Automotive News said recently that the five major U.S. automakers had built 164,073 during this week in 1981 and 136,630 last week.

By week's end, the year's total will be 2,586,766, down 26.5 percent from 3,520,557 last year, the journal said.

U.S. truck production this week was estimated at 50,437, up 26.3 percent from 39,920 in the week a year ago and up 2.4 percent from last week's 49,261, the journal said. Year-to-date truck production was 1,011,158, up 10.7 percent from last year's 913,635.

GM, Japanese firm incorporate

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. and Fujitsu Fanuc Ltd., a leading Japanese robot manufacturer, teamed up to form a new, U.S.-based robotics firm, GM officials said.

The new company, GMFanuc Robotics Corp., will be headquartered in the northern Detroit suburb of Troy, GM said Wednesday.

The firm, in which GM and Fujitsu each will own 50 percent, will design, build and sell robotics systems, GM said.
