Negotiators agree on tax measures

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Congress has taken a big step toward its promised election-year down payment to trim enormous budget deficits, with negotiators agreeing Saturday on a package of nearly $50 billion in tax increases and about $11 billion in spending cuts.

It was nearly dawn when House and Senate tax writers, who had worked through the night, settled the last of 282 differences between tax measures passed by the House and Senate.

No new taxes were included in the compromise package. The measure was composed primarily of changes in existing taxes, especially those affecting businesses, tax shelters and some complicated tax accounting practices.

The agreement, which came at 5:17 a.m. EDT, capped three weeks of bargaining and ended only after a non-stop round of public and private talks that lasted nearly 21 hours.

The full House and Senate now must vote on whether to accept the conferees' agreement.

The struggle was necessary so Congress could meet a goal set by leaders to pass a package of deficit-reduction moves by the time the House and Senate recess at the end of the month for the Fourth of July and the Democratic National Convention.

Among provisions of the tax agreement:

—The 3-percent excise tax on local and long distance telephone service, due to expire after 1985, would be extended through 1987.

—The federal tax of 16 cents per pack on cigarettes will drop, as scheduled under current law, to 8 cents after Sept. 30, 1985. The House had passed a bill which would have permitted it to drop only to 12 cents, but the conferees rejected this.

—The tax on liquor, which is $10.50 per proof gallon, will rise to $12.50, effective Sept. 30, 1985. The conferees rejected a House move to raise the tax to $14.25. Beer and wine would not be affected.

Action on the tax portions of the package had been stalled until Thursday night, when the negotiators approved more than $11 billion in companion federal spending savings, including a hike in premiums paid by Medicare beneficiaries and a freeze of physicians' fees paid under Medicare.

The tax and spending agreements are part of the effort to resolve differences between a House-passed $182.4 billion deficit-reduction plan and a $140.1 billion package supported by President Reagan and passed by the Senate.

Both plans combine tax increases with curbs on military and domestic spending in an effort to rein in federal red ink, projected to total $600 billion over the next three years.

The idea in the bargaining completed Saturday was that if Senate Republicans would give up on some business tax breaks they wanted that lose money for the Treasury, House Democrats would stop resisting spending cuts.

But some Democrats said they had given up too much.

Rep. Fortney H. Stark, D-Calif., sounded a sour note at the end of the confernece when he said, "Sick, helpless people had $11 billion cut from Medicare" while giving a "$12 billion free gift (in tax breaks) to America's largest corporations."

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said, "In every swing, somebody wins and somebody loses."

As he looked out at the bleary-eyed audience of about 200 that included lobbyists from business and trade associations as well as the Reagan administration, Rostenkowski said, "I hope you were all winners out there."

Texas couple stands firm, won't testify against son

By PAUL RECER
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON — Bernard and Odette Port aren't talking about the stains police say were found on the stairs in their home, the bullet hole in the photo on the wall.

The Ports say they are willing to go to jail rather than testify in the case of their 17-year-old son, accused of murdering a female postal worker.

Twice, they have refused to answer a grand jury's questions about the woman's death, even though a judge granted them immunity and ordered them to testify.

The Ports say they believe the same protection granted spouses against incriminating each other should be extended to parents and children. They also say the laws of their religion, Judaism, prevent them from testifying against a family member.

If on Wednesday they refuse to testify again, the Ports could be charged with contempt of court. They would face jail while their son remains free on $20,000 bond.

David Port pleaded innocent to murder Friday. He also waived his right to a grand jury hearing in the hope of keeping his parents from going to jail.

But prosecutors say they are going to continue the grand jury investigation because they have no other witnesses who could testify to key facts of evidence.

Randy Schaffer, an attorney representing the Ports, said the state could be fishing for facts that could turn the murder charge into a capital murder indictment. Under Texas law, a person convicted of a murder committed in the commission of a felony can be executed.

"If they speak, it could mean that the state could kill their son," he said.

The Ports also believe, he said, that family rights are superior to the needs of the state, and that to preserve civilization, civilization must first preserve family.

Prosecutors have denounced the Ports' arguments as a desperate ploy to withhold information the state may need to prosecute their son.

"Why should we cut them (the Ports) some slack and let them go running around free...shooting a finger at the court's order?" Harris County District Attorney John B. Holmes Jr. said.

Assistant District Attorney Brad Beers said that to complete the murder investigation the state needs information only the Ports have.

It may look like Quality Care Nursing Services director of nursing Ann Hamm, left, and nurse Maria Mendoza are supporting Wesley Thomason, but after 10 years of being confined to a wheelchair, Thomason, 44, is simply enjoying their company while walking on his own.

Odessa man stepping out after 10 years in wheelchair

By HALLYE JORDAN

ODESSA — "I used to have to look up to people," Wesley Thomason said, "but I don't anymore."

Leaving his cane standing in the middle of the room, he took a slow step and was attempting another when he faltered, uttering a surprised sound. Maria Mendoza, licensed vocational nurse, immediately was at his side to break the fall. He turned, an impish twinkle in his eyes, and grinned down at her from his 6-foot frame.

It wasn't the first time he'd surprised her.

In a wheelchair for the past 10 years, the 44-year-old quadriplegic can now walk. It took willpower, determination and pain but the U.S. Navy veteran, with the help of his nurse from Quality Care Nursing Services in Midland, accomplished what physicians had told him for years was impossible.

After lying about his age, Wesley joined the Navy as a 16-year-old. At the age of 20, he suffered severe brain damage when a magnetic mine attached to his ship, the USS Lyman K. Swenson, went off as she traveled up a river in Vietnam.

"There were five of us down there," he said, "and me and this other guy were the only survivors. It left him with no legs. But I didn't know who I was for a year."

He spent six months in a Veterans Administration hospital in California and two more years at a VA hospital in Houston. When he was released, he drew 80 percent disability and worked as a watch and jewelry repairman. He again was hospitalized, obtaining a job as a welder when he was released.

In 1970, his real problems began.

"I hadn't worked since," he said.

THE EXPLOSION HAD left him an epileptic, suffering from grand and petit mals, as well as "wandering mals," ("that's where I chase beautiful women," he said, grinning).

Three killed as van overturns

From Staff Reports

Three members of a Midland family — including a child — were killed and several other persons were injured when a large church van overturned on Texas 158 near Gardendale about 5:15 p.m. Saturday.

Pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry were 29-year-old Andrea De La Rosa of Route 9, Midland, and her sister-in-law, 40-year-old Anedina Balog, no street address available. Also killed was Mrs. De La Rosa's 2-year-old son Michael.

At least 19 other persons were injured and taken to Midland Memorial Hospital and Odessa's Medical Center Hospital. Some were treated and released, while others were still being treated late Saturday night.

In unofficial reports, a group from the Trinfo de la Cruz Assembly of God Church at 1600 E. Hickory had borrowed a large van from the First Baptist Church for a weekend outing at an unknown location. The van reportedly blew a tire and rolled over.

A Department of Public Safety spokesman said troopers weren't sure which direction the van was traveling when the accident occurred.

Also in unofficial reports, Mrs. De La Rosa's husband was following the van in his car and took his 2-year-old son and other family members to MMH. No further details were available by press time.

Services are pending at Thomas Funeral Home.

Attache slain as Lebanon reveals unity plan

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Lebanon's government unveiled a plan Saturday to reunite the Christian and Moslem sectors of the capital, as police were reporting that two militiamen shot and killed an Austrian attache in mostly Moslem west Beirut.

As the Moslem-Christian coalition Cabinet of President Amin Gemayel met in Bikfaya, a town 10 miles northeast of here, four gunmen kidnapped a Libyan diplomat and two unidentified companions from a hotel in west Beirut, police also said.

Prime Minister Rashid Karami also announced a revamping of the military high command designed to better distribute authority among Christians and Moslems and end divisiveness in the army.

"Beirut shall be reunited," Karami said. "All crossings will be reopened, the 'green line' eliminated and the port and airport will function normally," Karami said, without setting a date for enforcement of the plan.

As he spoke, tears welled in his eyes over news that his mother had died, after a long illness, in a Beirut hospital during the day.

The "green line" divides the capital into Christian east and mostly Moslem west sectors.

Christian and Moslem radio stations said that the security plan to reunite the capital and open Beirut's port and airport could be a genuine turning point in efforts to end Lebanon's civil warfare.

The Cabinet's announcement was tensely awaited by the Lebanese, whose nation has devastated by civil war that has killed more than 60,000 people since 1975.

Before the Cabinet met Saturday, gunfire and mortar attacks rocked Beirut 10 miles to the southwest. One person was reported killed and 45 were injured.

Police said that four gunmen stormed into the lobby of the Bristol Hotel and forced Mohammed Moghrabi, a Libyan diplomat, and two companions into a waiting car. The vehicle sped away, said police, who provided no further information.

An hour later, police said, two militiamen killed an Austrian Embassy attache. American University Hospital, where the body was taken, identified him as Gerhard Loitzenbauer, 51. Police said the shooting occurred after the gunmen confronted Loitzenbauer in his car in west Beirut's Verdun neighborhood. The gunmen escaped in the car.

Police said the shooting and the abduction apparently were unrelated. They said car theft, not politics, seemed to have been the motive behind the shooting.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Hot, dry forecast for Basin continues

From Staff and Wire Reports

The dull doldrums of summer have hit the Permian Basin area as the forecast has started sounding like a broken record: hot and dry.

Today should be partly cloudy with a high expected in the upper 90s, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. Breezes should blow through at 10-15 mph from the south.

The mercury tonight should dip down to near 70 but will wind back up in the high 90s on Monday, according to the weatherman. Winds again will waft through from the south at 10-15 mph.

High on Friday was 97, a cool reading compared to the record 102 set on that date in 1972. Saturday's low was 69, still a few degrees warmer than the record low of 60 set on that date in 1946.

For the year to date, 6.10 inches of precipitation have been recorded.

STATE

Most of the state was sunny and hot again Saturday as a result of an upper level high pressure system. Highs soared into the 90s over much of South and North Texas. The Red River Valley and North Central areas had readings at or just above the century mark.

Meanwhile, a cold front from near Lubbock to Childress brought cooler air to the Panhandle and northern High Plains. Scattered showers and thunderstorms erupted along the front as cooler air from the north collided with hot humid air to the south. Temperatures moderated into the upper 70s and 80s under partly cloudy skies behind the cold front.

Elsewhere, isolated thundershowers developed over the mountains of West Texas in the Big Bend. Temperatures in West Texas were mainly in the mid 80s to mid 90s.

Widely scattered thunderstorms were expected to roam West Texas and parts of Southeast Texas again Sunday while the rest of the state was expected to have more hot, fair weather with highs mostly in the 90s.

Thermometers were expected to hit 100 in many areas again, with a high of 103 predicted for the Rio Grande River in the Big Bend Country. Lows in the 70s were forecast.

North Texas is expected to have partly cloudy skies Sunday with a slight chance of thunderstorms in the east.

Thunderstorms should bring slightly cooler weather to the Panhandle and South Plains with highs in the 80s.

NATION

Fair skies gave some relief to flooding over the northern Plains on Saturday after a stormy night of heavy rain and scattered tornadoes.

Tornadoes touched down overnight from Wyoming to Iowa and golf ball-sized hail struck parts of South Dakota. Wind clocked at 70 mph damaged homes in Illinois and heavy rains fell in Iowa, where many rivers already were bankfull. Spirit Lake, Iowa, got 4½ inches of rain.

At least two Iowa families were evacuated Saturday as a result of flooding, the National Weather Service reported.

A flood warning was issued Saturday along the Missouri River from Sioux City, Iowa, south to Plattsmouth, Neb. The Missouri already has flooded thousands of acres downstream in Missouri and Kansas.

But in Iowa, "The levees are still holding," said Don Bartholomew, Civil Defense director in Fremont County.

A flood warning also was issued for some rivers in eastern Nebraska.

Thundershowers reached western Kentucky and Tennessee by midday Saturday and rain extended from northern Mississippi and northern Alabama into Ohio.

Bessemer, Ala., got 1.87 inches of rain during the night.

Heavier rainfall during the 6 hours ending at 2 p.m. EDT included 1.49 inches at Fort Campell, Ky., and more than an inch of rain fell during a 15-minute period at Cambridge City, Ind.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 55 degrees at Yellowstone Park, Wyo., to 106 at Palm Springs, Calif. The low for the day was 28 degrees at Yellowstone Park.

For Sunday, rain and occasional thundershowers were forecast from New England across Florida and the eastern Gulf Coast through the Atlantic states, the lower Great Lakes, the upper Ohio Valley and the Appalachians. Widely scattered showers were forecast along the Washington coast.

Highs in the 60s were predicted over much of New england; in the 70s across the Great Lakes and the upper Ohio Valley; in the 60s and 70s along much of the Pacific Coast; in the upper 80s and 90s over the southern tier of states and across the Plains and the Plateau, and up to 100 to 110 degrees through the inland Southwest.

Odessa law enforcement officers search a car for evidence in a shooting incident in the 800 block of Autumn Street about 6:40 p.m. Saturday. The body of an unidentified gunshot victim lies at left. Another person is confirmed dead and two persons reportedly were held for questioning. No details were available by press time.

Mitterand concludes Soviet visit

The Associated Press

VOLGOGRAD, U.S.S.R. — French President Francois Mitterrand paid tribute Saturday to Soviet war dead as he ended a three-day visit in which he discussed disarmament and irked the Communist leadership by stressing Western concern about dissident Andrei Sakharov.

Later, the French president flew to Paris following a dinner hosted by the Volgograd Communist Party's executive committee. He had no comment upon his arrival in the French capital Saturday night.

Mitterrand, a Socialist, praised the Soviet Union during a wreath-laying ceremony in this Volga River city that was named Stalingrad at the time of the epic World War II battle between the Red Army and German invaders. The battle broke Nazi Germany's back in the Eastern Front.

"After the first Nazi defeat in North Africa, all depended on Stalingrad," Mitterrand said of the city, which was renamed in 1961 after Nikita Khrushchev, then Soviet leader, denounced Josef Stalin's iron dictatorship.

WALKING

During those seizures, he would regain consciousness and find himself in his wheelchair on a country road in the middle of the night, far from his West Odessa home. Twice he was hit by a car during those incidents and once he came out of the seizure as a large truck passed him on a road, the driver shaking his fist at a helpless man in a wheelchair.

Because of the severity of his grand mal seizures, he suffers from spinal meningitis, not the viral type, but the type in which the membranes covering the spinal cord are inflamed, according to Maria, his home health care nurse.

"That was because I was arching so bad," he said.

"You should see him," said his wife Tresia, whom he married when he was 23 and she was 19. "His body would draw up into a fetal position and he'd just twist and turn."

"It takes 10 people to hold me," Wesley said.

He also suffers from arthritic osteoporosis, a deterioration of the bone and inflammation of the joints. He has no hearing or sight on his right side and must wear a hearing aide in his left ear.

"I've had eight strokes and three heart attacks," Wesley said. "I've had 16 operations, all for tumors, and three were malignant." He also has three inoperable brain tumors.

"He'd started having trouble before, but when he finally lost his whole right side was in 1977," Tresia said.

"THAT WAS THE fourth time for me to be in a wheelchair," he said, adding with a grin, "and this makes the fourth time to get out of a chair."

His relationship with Maria began a short three months ago. When she arrived at his home for the first of the 18 hours per week paid by the VA, she found a man sitting in a wheelchair, wearing thick glasses and a hearing aide and dressed in pajamas. They had a lot of work to accomplish.

"I never did give up," Wesley said. "Even when I got in a wheelchair, I never would give up. That's what I kept telling these damn doctors, 'Let me go to P.T. (physical therapy). Let me go to P.T.' They told me I knew I never would be able to walk again and they said I better learn to accept it.

"I just said, 'Oh, to hell with that. I may have to live with it but I'll never accept it.' "

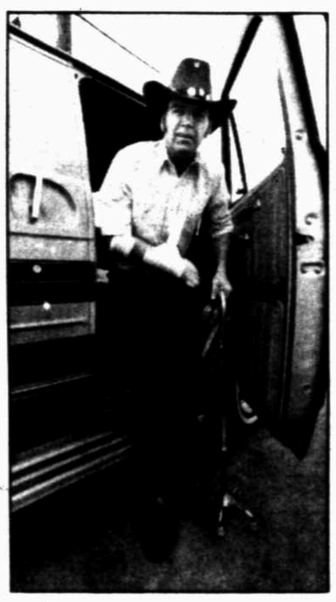

He retained limited use of his left hand by continuing to exercise it with 30-pound weights, enabling him to move himself from his wheelchair to his bed with the help of a trapeze that hangs over the bed. He would swing his legs over by using his good hand.

"I still tried to be as independent as I could," Wesley said. "I didn't want anybody to help me."

Maria, who hadn't been sent as a physical therapist, said she didn't have much hope when he told her he wanted to stand on his own.

Because his paralyzed feet had "dropped" and couldn't be flexed enough for standing flat-footed on the ground, Maria and Wesley began therapy by fashioning a homemade foot board out of a cardboard box, metal tray and pillows so his feet would push against the board as he slept.

With no whirlpool or other physical therapy tools to work with, Maria massaged his legs. The two then devised their own exercises for his particular needs.

Cody Bell/Reporter-Telegram

Wesley Thomason enjoys making trips into town now that he doesn't have to hassle with his wheelchair.

Once, planning a week's vacation, Maria was explaining the exercises to a replacement nurse who would work with Wesley. She told the amused nurse not to look for the exercises in any textbook — they surely weren't there.

Maria began by kneeling down, holding his foot and pushing against his knee while he attempted to stand.

"WHEN HE FIRST started to stand, and due to me being so short, he'd be bent over," said Maria, who claims she's 5 feet tall and weighs 90 pounds. "I just didn't want her to feel like she was so short," Wesley said with a laugh, adding teasingly, "she's 5-feet tall with high heels."

The first time he stood straight and tall on his own, Maria said, "Both of us cried. We just stood there and hugged each other and cried."

Of course, that accomplishment wasn't enough for Wesley. After that, his determination increased. Following his exercises and shower, a two-hour long routine, Wesley would sit in the chair, stand up for a few seconds with Maria at his feet pushing, and then sit down. "He'd go all day. He'd do it constantly," Maria said. "I'd be so tired and he'd keep going. I'd say, 'Wesley, you really need to rest.' "

And Wesley, seeing that his nurse was tired, would stop for a few minutes.

When he told her he wanted to walk, Maria relied on a technique she'd seen a physical therapy patient use when she worked for a rehabilitation center. Using a pivoting motion, Wesley learned to swing his hips forward, pulling his legs along.

"The first time he walked a long distance was from the bed to the living room," Maria said. "That scared me because I thought it was too far. Then the next day, he walked from the bed to the couch and back. That's when he surprised me. I followed him with the wheelchair."

"And I told her to put that damn thing up," he said, grinning.

Recently, they went shopping with Maria, as usual, spending more time with him than her allotted six hours a day. His first stop was a fast food restaurant.

STANDING AT THE counter with his paralyzed hand in a sling and his good left hand resting on his walker, someone asked him if he'd been in an accident. "Nope," he proudly said, "I've been in a wheelchair for 10 years and now I'm walking."

They then went to several shops, with Wesley constantly playing jokes.

When Maria went off to search for an item, she would instruct Wesley not to move. But when she would return, he wouldn't be there.

"I was scared," she said. "He'd disappeared. But then I saw him in the sporting goods department and he'd just be standing there laughing at me."

When Wesley first stood on his own, Maria said he'd be walking by next January. Wesley didn't agree. "I told her, hell, I'll be dancing New Year's Eve."

But a week ago Saturday, he broke another goal.

After walking all day through several shopping malls with an exhausted Maria, Wesley and his wife were treated to a night of celebration by a friend.

"I sat there and stated listening to the music and thought, 'To hell with this,' and said, 'Tresia, let's go.' "

"It scared me to death," Tresia said. "Those floors are usually pretty slippery and I thought, 'just one wrong move and we're going to fall.' But he just wouldn't quit."

"As far as the future for him, he might be running a marathon in five or 10 years," Maria said, laughing.

One of his next goals is to go fishing again with his family, including his children, Mark Wayne, 20, and Kathy, 16. He also plans to strengthen his right arm, start driving his van and begin talking with managers of stores and restaurants about making places more accessible for the handicapped.

"THERE ARE SO damn many barriers," he said. "There are so damn many places where you can't fit in the door and you can't open it anyway because you need two hands.

"People who've been handicapped or haven't been able to do the things they used to do, they'll put on smiles but they hurt down deep inside," he said. "I want people to just stop looking at us like we're nothing — like we're not even there."

"We had some long hours," Maria said. "We'd get his shower and exercises and then we'd go out except when he didn't feel like it. Now, of course, he doesn't feel like staying home."

"Everyone kept telling me to accept that I couldn't walk anymore," Wesley said. "But I didn't accept it. If I had, I'd still be sitting in that chair.

"There are a lot of people in wheelchairs," he said. "All they need is somebody to help them, give them a little motivation and a little inspiration and they'll get out of there. There's a lot of pain and a lot of work. But I won't let that stop me. I just fight the pain and don't let it beat me.

"Maria's been a great, great help. She's been an inspiration," Wesley said.

"And he's become more than a patient to me," Maria said. "He's become a friend."

Persian Gulf leaders meet

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Military chiefs from six Persian Gulf nations held an emergency meeting in Saudi Arabia Saturday to work out a strategy against attacks on gulf shipping in the Iran-Iraq war.

Meanwhile, Iran rejected an Iraqi claim that Iranian gunners had shelled Iraqi border villages in violation of a U.N.-mediated moratorium on civilian attacks.

The start of the private meeting in Riyadh by military chiefs of staff from Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Qatar and Oman was held up until after the completion of the daylight observances of Ramadan, the Moslem holy season.

One of the goals of the meeting was expected to be creation of a joint command against Iranian air attacks on commercial shipping in the oil-rich region.

Arab diplomatic sources viewed the meeting as yet another step in a Saudi-led trend toward military preparedness, along with diplomatic action, to try to prevent a widening of the Iran-Iraq war, which began in September 1980.

The six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council decided to have the meeting after a dogfight June 5, in which Saudi Arabian jetfighters shot down an Iranian warplane over Saudi waters.

The council's secretary-general, Abdullah Bishara, said Saturday the meeting in the Arabian capital, was in line with the "political resolution of the GCC summit conference, which underscores self-reliance and development of indigenous defense capabilities."

Bishara said the meeting was "of special significance in view of the crucial stage the gulf region has been passing through."

Stuntman Dean Dawson, in the stands, watches as Max Konz of San Antonio practices falling off a horse. Dawson runs a stuntman school in Bandera.

Leaping off scaffolds just part of man's daily routine

BANDERA (AP) — Leaping off five-story scaffolds, dodging explosions and falling off horses are just part of the daily routine for Dean Dawson.

The 35-year-old cowboy has been a stuntman for 18 years and now has his own stunt school in Bandera, a haven in the Texas Hill Country for dude ranch enthusiasts.

Dawson just graduated a class of six students who paid $2,000 apiece for six weeks of instruction. He taught the class how to fall off horses, how to be dragged by a pickup truck, how to have a knock-down, drag-out fight and how to jump off platforms — all without getting injured.

"A stuntman has got to be smart," Dawson said. "You can't work if you're hurt. That's the big difference between a stuntman and a daredevil."

Daredevils, he said, will perform death-defying stunts, but often get severely hurt.

Dawson, who has been in at least a half-dozen movies and more television shows, has had his share of injuries. He has lost teeth, had his head split and was grazed when a blank misfired.

But Dawson said he didn't have the luxury of a stunt school to teach him the ropes of the business. Most of what he knows he picked up from his uncle Rudy Robbins, a longtime double for John Wayne and James Arness of "Gunsmoke" fame.

In all the years he has taught stuntwork, Dawson said he has had no serious injuries.

Judge: School officials need to solve problems

DALLAS (AP) — School officials should solve desegregation problems themselves rather than rely on "gray-haired" judges to make politically unpopular decisions, U.S. District Judge Eldon Mahon says.

Mahon, speaking Friday to a gathering of North Texas school administrators, cited Fort Worth's experience as an example that other districts should follow.

Fort Worth found its 1983 desegregation package acceptable because school offficials tackled the highly emotional desegregation issue and hammered out a consensus among politically divergent groups, said Mahon, who approved the resulting plan.

Mahon advised other school districts to follow suit instead of passing the matter on to the federal courts.

"I'm a firm believer in school administrators taking the initiative," Mahon said. "That's why I'm so proud of school officials and the citizens of Fort Worth."

Mahon said there is no reason why school officials should rely solely on the federal courts to make decisions regarding desegregation plans. He said school districts could save millions of dollars in legal fees and time by seeking a consensus on complex legal issues and working out a plan on their own.

However, Mahon said he understood why some school administrators lack the will to take the initiative. Elected trustees sometimes fear political retribution at the polls, so they "drag their feet" and let a "gray-haired" judge make the decision, he said.

By relying on the federal courts, trustees can place blame on the judge if political pressure follows a decision, Mahon said.

"I think it's important for school officials to take the initiative, but for political reasons, I understand often it's easier to say, 'Let the judge do it,' " Mahon said. "And that's fine because I don't have to worry about being voted out of office and I can sleep at night knowing I tried to make the right decision based on constitutional law.

"But I don't know any federal judge that really wants to be involved in school business," he said. "Now if you are unwilling or unable to take the initiative, then a judge will get involved."

Mahon said the Fort Worth Independent School District worked with the plantiff and intervenor — the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Mexican-American Educational Advisory Committee — in a desegregation suit filed in 1959.

As a result, the district was able to come up with a politically and legally acceptable plan that reduced busing and saved the district millions of dollars, Mahon said.

Man says life ruined after false conviction

ORANGE (AP) — Clarence Von Williams says his life was ruined when he was convicted of a rape to which another man eventually confessed.

"Nobody has ever apologized to me for what happened," said Williams, 45, who spent 51 days in jail before Jon Simonis, of Lake Charles, La., admitted he committed the crime. "I was very definitely raped by the criminal justice system."

Williams said Bridge City police could easily have developed evidence which would have cleared him of the 1979 rapes of a woman and her teen-age son and daughter.

The three victims identified Williams as their attacker. His first trial ended in a mistrial, but a second jury convicted him and sentenced him to 50 years in prison.

On Dec. 4, 1981, one day before Williams was to be transferred from Orange County Jail to the state prison system, he was released. Simonis, 32, admitted to the Bridge City rapes as well as more than 80 others attributed to the so-called "Ski Mask Rapist."

Simonis, who pleaded guilty to all charges against him, is serving 21 life terms, plus 2,681 years, in the Louisiana State Penitentiary at Angola.

Williams' attorney, Don Kelley, said local police investigated the crime rather than calling in technicians from a regional crime lab based in Beaumont.

Kelley said police failed to collect evidence from a wet mattress found in the victims' home, allowed a muddy footprint found outside to be destroyed when crawfish dug holes through it and failed to collect other evidence which might have cleared his client.

Pecos mayor 'a little surprised' at his election

PECOS (AP) — When Frank Sanchez was elected mayor of this 103-year-old oil-and-ranching community in April, he became one of only a handful of Hispanics holding similar positions throughout the country.

His victory over the incumbent mayor — a member of a prominent long-time Pecos family — surprised even him, but Sanchez attributes his success to an increased knowledge among Mexican-Americans about how to win in politics.

"When I won, I was a little surprised," Sanchez said recently. "I was Hispanic and young — by far the youngest (person to run for mayor) in recent years in Pecos and some of the old aristocratic folks here were skeptical of me."

But, the 35-year-old Pecos native said, "I was really organized and that's what it takes — especially for Hispanics."

Mexican-Americans traditionally have been unorganized politically, Sanchez said.

"But in the past two or three years, we've really learned, and I think you'll see many more Hispanics becoming elected officials in the very near future, especially in West Texas," which has a large Hispanic population, he said.

Sanchez, a supervisoring caseworker for the Texas Department of Human Resources, won the mayor's seat in Pecos, where more than 60 percent of the population is Hispanic, by defeating incumbent mayor Bill Hubbs by 149 votes.

He never had held an elected office before, but twice had unsuccessfully sought a seat on the city council.

The previous experience of running for office "helped me in organizing a campaign," Sanchez said. "It also gave me some name recognition."

Sanchez has been in office since April 12 and says the first couple of months on the job primarily have been spent learning and gaining acceptance from the community.

"It will take some time to get accepted and to blend into the role of being mayor," he said, "but I think my attitude already is helping."

Sanchez says that although he knows his position as a Hispanic is important, especially for younger Mexican-Americans who need "role models," he intends to concentrate on being a "mayor for the whole town."

"I don't think I was elected to be a Hispanic mayor representing only Hispanics," he said. "I was elected mayor of the town and I want to be a mayor for everyone."

The issues facing Sanchez as mayor are those that most elected officials today are tackling.

For example, Pecos, a town of nearly 13,000, needs new industry and a more diversified economy, Sanchez said.

"I also think the mayor needs to be more progressive," he said.

But as a first-term mayor, Sanchez said he has no promises to fulfill.

"I didn't run on any real platform," he said. "I just encouraged people to get out and vote."

Pecos operates under the state's general laws rule, which means that contrary to home-ruled cities, its local elections are nonpartisan. The mayor also receives no pay.

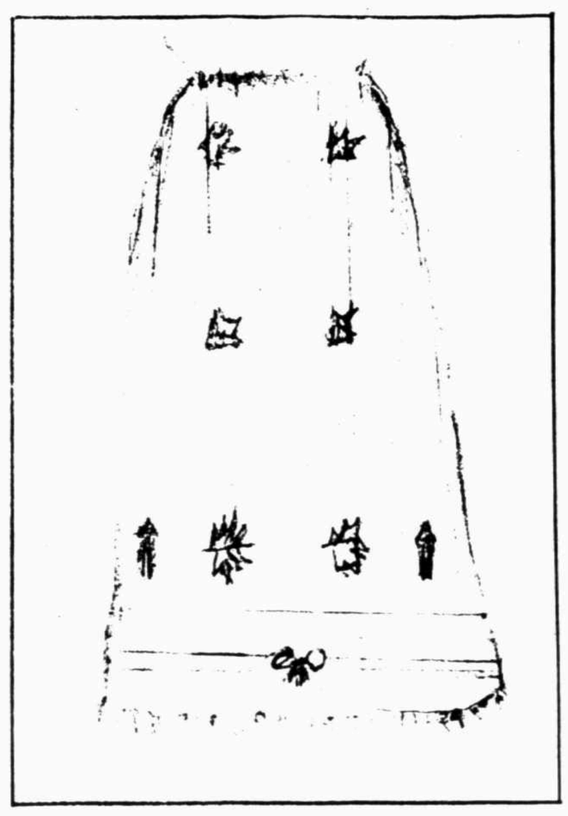

Sanchez, a father of two and an active member of several local civic organizations, said he currently has no further political ambitions.

"But then, a few years ago, I had no intention of running for office," he said. "If I do run for anything again, it probably would be mayor again, depending on how these two years go."

Sanchez said he hopes his successful mayoral bid encourages other qualified Hispanics to seek public office.

"We have got to start taking action in politics," he said. "And, if Hispanics are qualified and organized, I think they can win."

Judge won't throw out drug charges

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A military judge ruled Saturday that supervisors at a military drug-use detection laboratory denied evidence to defense lawyers, but the judge refused to throw out drug charges against two soldiers.

The defense claimed the soldiers could not get a fair trial because of command interference in the operation of the Army-Air Force drug-use detection laboratory at Brooks Air Force Force Base.

"I find supervisory personnel have in the past attempted to deny evidence to trial and defense counsel," said Judge Advocate Maj. Robert Gibson.

However, he refused a defense motion to throw out the charges, saying: "I find this unlawful conduct did not affect the witnesses on this issue and the defense has not been impeded in this case in gaining evidence."

Earlier Saturday, a defense attorney claimed the military command acted like "a serpent," striking down workers who complained about sloppiness in the laboratory.

Behavior by lab management was "inexcusable and obstructionist" in the handling of drug cases against soldiers, said Capt. Howard Lazar.

Staff Sgts. Henry Warden, 29, of San Antonio, and Leonard Baltimore, 32, of Cheyenne, Wyo., are charged with using marijuana.

The Brooks lab processed 260,000 urine specimens from soldiers nationwide last year. About 10 percent of those indicated drug use and about 3,000 servicemen were discharged on drug-related offenses from September 1982 to October 1983.

Another military judge in a separate drug case already has ruled that Brooks officials exerted improper influence on lab workers. Lt. Col. Barton Spillman made the ruling in dismissing charges against two sergeants from Patrick Air Force Base in Florida. A spokesman at Patrick said, however, charges are still pending against the two until legal authorities at Patrick had a chance to review the transcripts.

Defense attorneys had called several lab workers who testified that they were demoted for complaining about lab procedures.

One witness, chemist Joseph David Whitson Jr., said he kept an "out-of-control file" on tainted urine tests that showed false positive results.

But Col. George Lathrop, head of the Brooks lab, testified that the file was an attempt to cover up mistakes by lab workers, including Whitson. He also denied charges of command interference and pressure on lab personnel, saying many were reassigned because of burnout or personal reasons.

state in brief

Gramm: I'm just humble hard-working professor

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — U.S. Rep. Phil Gramm told Texas news executives Saturday he's just a humble, hard-working college professor and not the "silk-stocking city slicker" in the U.S. Senate race.

Gramm suggested that a vote for Democrat Lloyd Doggett in the November general election would be a vote for big cities, big government, big taxes and anti-military.

"My closest political ally is Ronald Reagan," he told the 105th summer convention of the Texas Press Association. "My opponent's closest ally is Ted Kennedy.

"I think that tells you a lot."

On the other hand, the former Texas A&M professor, 41, depicted himself as a governmental watchdog and model of fiscal restraint who supports the "traditional conservative values of the people of Texas."

Will GOP have Tiny Tim?

DALLAS (AP) — Tiny Tim, the falsetto vocalist who rose to brief fame in the 1960s, says he would like to sing at the Republican National Convention here in August, if the GOP will have him.

"I don't know if I would fit in with my Boy George image," the long-haired singer, also known as Herbert Khaury, said Friday. "They might want to throw me to Mondale."

Mike Debonis of Los Angeles, an agent for the 55-year-old singer, said he plans to contact convention organizers this week to see if delegates would like to hear the ukulele-strumming entertainer perform his repertoire of nostalgic songs.

The offer caught convention planners by surprise.

"I really don't know what to say, honestly," said GOP spokesman Gary Holtsma. "We're happy for anyone to offer their time and talents to the convention...but there aren't a lot of slots available."

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Frank Baker of the Fort Stockton Pioneer was named president of the Texas Press Association during the group's annual convention Saturday.

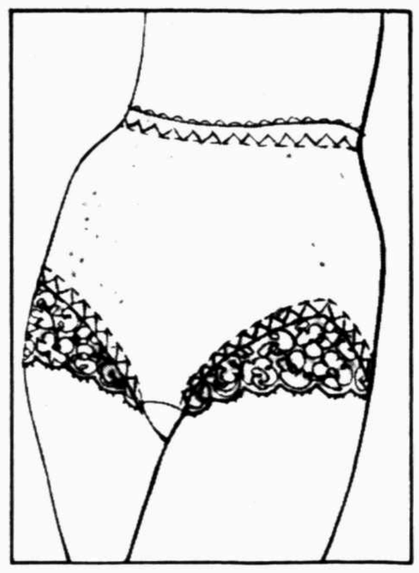

Walter Buckel of the Lamesa Press-Reporter was named first vice president and Charles Schulz of the Taylor Daily Press was elected second vice president.

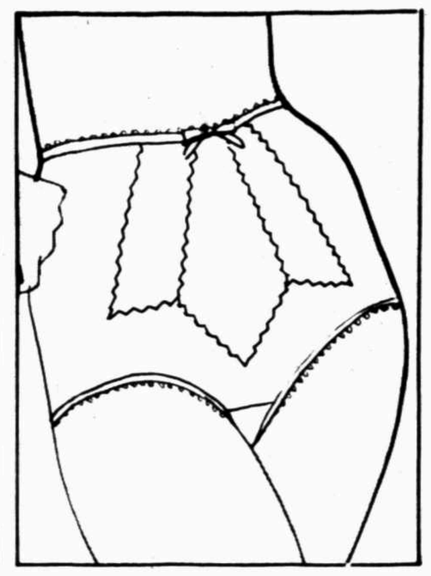

Norris Monroe of the Copperas Cove Leader Press was re-elected treasurer of the 550-member news organization.

Democratic platform won't call for end to run-off primaries

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democratic Platform Committee rejected on Saturday a plank offered by supporters of the Rev. Jesse Jackson urging elimination of run-off primary elections in Southern states.

Jackson says they all discriminate against minority candidates.

Instead, the 184-member committee adopted a milder version offered by delegates for the party's presidential front-runner, Walter F. Mondale, that calls for ending run-off races only in states where the process can be demonstrated to discriminate.

The Mondale plank, which Jackson delegates relucantly supported after their own measure was defeated, calls for a study, to be financed by the Democratic Party, to determine where such discrimination existed.

The "dual primary" dispute, a major campaign issue for Jackson, was the last major unresolved issue for the platform writing panel. The Mondale-dominated committee will submit its final 35,000-word platform to the floor of the convention next month in San Francisco for ratification.

Convention floor fights on nuclear arms policy and the Middle East were all but assured Saturday when Hart representatives said they planned to bring challenges to sections of the platform dealing with these subjects.

Rep. Timothy Wirth of Colorado, Hart's leader on the plaform panel, said Hart supporters would appeal to the full convention though the filing of minority planks in an effort to revive several of the candidate's pet proposals.

Topping the list is Hart's call for an outright ban on use of U.S. land forces in any Persian Gulf conflict, Wirth said.

He also said Hart delegates would help Jackson supporters round up the necessary votes for a minority plank on Jackson's proposal for a 20 percent cut in defense spending.

"That's a very important issue for Rev. Jackson and we want to help him bring it up," Wirth said.

Bringing a minority plank to the convention floor requires the signature of 25 percent of the platform committee, or 46 signatures. Jackson only has 20 delegates on the platform committee, while Hart has 57 and Mondale nearly 100.

Hart and Jackson representatives were generally enthusiastic about the overall platform document, a statement of party philosophy and goals that contains a stinging indictment of President Reagan's "government by subtraction" and a quiltwork of proposed remedies pieced together from the campaigns of the three presidential candidates.

"It's a document all of us can be proud to run on," Wirth said.

"It was a process we all benefited from," said Jackson delegate Alvin Thornton of Maryland.

Despite talk of harmony and victory in November, Saturday's concluding platform session was dominated by last-ditch efforts on the part of the Jackson and Hart campaigns to modify the document further.

Jackson delegates pressed hard for the elimination of run-off primaries, which are currently used to determine nominees in state and local elections when the top vote-getter in a field of three or more candidates fails to get more than 50 percent of the vote.

The Jackson plank urged the "complete elimination of dual primaries," calling them "a grave impediment to the right to vote."

Jackson visits Panama, wins praise from leader

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Democratic presidential candidate Jesse Jackson visited Panama on Saturday and won praise from President Jorge Illueca for helping focus public opinion on the Contadora peace plan for Central America.

Jackson met with Illueca and other Panamanian leaders for about 90 minutes after arriving in the capital city on the first leg of a five-day Latin American trip.

"Rev. Jackson's trip and his support of the Contadora process is important and appreciated and helps that process to move forward," Illueca told reporters after the meeting.

"The visit of the Rev. Jackson is very important for the Central American and Latin American regions since we have confirmed he is one of the best interpreters of the Contadora group's objectives. The importance of his visit is that he is now very successful in getting all of you that represent the mass media and communications in the United States."

Jackson and his 14-member entourage is being accompanied on his trip by about 70 U.S. reporters and technicians.

Foreign Minister Oyden Ortega Duran said the Contadora process "is in its final stage of negotiation and deliberation. We have at this time a draft of an agreement and by July we will have the agreement in final form."

Jackson endorsed principles for peace developed by the four Contadora nations — Panama, Venezuela, Mexico and Colombia. They want all foreign advisers withdrawn from Central America, an agreement by all nations in the region to stay out of the internal affairs of their neighbors and a reduction of the military buildup in the region.

The group takes its name from Contadora Island, where representatives of the four nations met.

The Contadora nations drew up a 21-point set of declarations stating these objectives. The agreement to which Ortega referred concerned their efforts to write language embracing those points. Their talks have been slowed for months because of disagreement over that language.

Jackson's itinerary was to have included meetings with foreign ministers for all of the Contadora nations, but none was held because the foreign ministers have been attending another session in Colombia.

Illueca, who left for the United Nations in New York immediately after his meeting with Jackson, pr mised to contact the Contadora fo eign ministers and try to find mutually agreeable meeting tim while Jackson is in the region.

Jackson called for the four nation to push for a NATO-like alliance all nations, including Cuba, in th Western Hemisphere. He said th United States should move towar normalizing relations with Cuba, bu declined to specify what type goo faith actions Cuba should take.

Advisers: Hart needs woman as running mate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two advisers to Gary Hart said Saturday they have recommended that the Democratic presidential candidate consider announcing a woman as his vice presidential running mate before the Democratic convention.

"The question of when to announce his choice is open," said Frank Mankiewicz, a senior Hart advisor. "It won't depend on what (Walter F.) Mondale will do. I have recommended that Hart consider the possibility."

Rep. Patricia Schroeder of Colorado, co-chair of the Hart campaign, said she presented the suggestion to Hart last week.

Ms. Schroeder, who has known Hart for 15 years and heads his vice presidential search, said she told him that if Mondale announces a running mate before the convention and it is neither Hart nor a woman, Hart should announce that he will run with a woman.

"My message is that if Mondale names a running mate before the convention, I think Hart should, and it should be a woman," Ms. Schroeder said. "The issue is to defeat Ronald Reagan, and I believe to do that, the ticket has to have a woman."

Ms. Schroeder said that if Mondale does not announce his choice of running mate before the convention, the women most mentioned as vice presidential possibilities probably would tell Hart they wanted to hold out to see what Mondale does at the convention.

But if Mondale announces before the convention that he has chosen someone other than Hart or a woman, such as Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen or Arkansas Sen. Dale Bumpers, a woman might feel free to accept Hart's offer, Ms. Schroeder said. "If Mondale closes the door to a woman, then Hart could make his move."

She added that if Mondale offers the vice presidency to Hart, she thinks he would accept it because it would help unify the party and put Hart in a good position to lead the party in 1988.

She also said the vice presidential position would enhance Hart's ability to raise funds to retire his campaign debt.

Lighted cigarette causes gas explosion

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — Someone lit a cigarette while firefighters were evacuating an apartment complex because of a gas leak Saturday, causing an explosion that destroyed the building and injured nine people, authorities said.

At least one person was reported in serious condition.

The 24-unit Civic Center Motel, which recently was converted into apartments, was gutted, said fire department dispatcher Karen Quesada.

Most seriously hurt was an unidentified resident of the building, who was rushed by ambulance to the burn ward of San Bernardino County Hospital.

This zoo no longer concrete-and-iron prison

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Ten years ago, the Audubon Zoo was a concrete-and-iron prison where wretched animals in tiny cages were fed leftovers from local restaurants.

Now the zoo, once considered among the nation's worst, is a showplace, a place to learn, and a sanctuary and breeding ground for endangered species.

It is among the top 10 or 15 zoos in the United States and Canada, according to Robert O. Wagner, executive director of the American Association of Zoological Parks and Aquariums.

The critical eye that once was aimed at Audubon Zoo is now turned to Atlanta, where recent animal deaths sparked investigations by the city, a county grand jury, the Humane Society of the United States and the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

"Atlanta is at the crossroads today where New Orleans was 10 years ago — either get your act together or close," said Ron Forman, who moved from a city hall office to the zoo office in 1974 and became zoo director two years later.

Formal inquiries were never made into the wretched conditiions at Audubon Zoo. It was such a slum that civic organizations took the initiative themselves.

"Local people felt the zoo was almost an indictment against them," he said. "Animals were kept in cramped, prison-like cages. It was an embarrassment to the city."

The tiny concrete cells held many animals that should never have had to stand Louisiana's muggy heat, including a miserable polar bear that was given chunks of ice to play with in the summer.

The zoo had no professional staff — only day workers who cut grass one day, picked up trash another and cared for the animals in their spare time.

Humane Society names worst zoos

The Associated Press

The Humane Society of the United States got national publicity this year with a list of what it called America's 10 worst zoos.

The society said the zoos had poor animal care, no educational, social or cultural value, little community support and long histories of problems. In addition, they made no effort to contribute to conservation, according to the society.

One zoo on the "10 Worst" list, the Aqualand Zoo in Bar Harbor, Maine, is now closed. Here, alphabetically by city, are some of the others with recent developments and comments from zoo officials.

— The Atlanta Zoo. An interim veterinarian and zoo director have been appointed. With volunteer veterinarians on call, a new records system and plans to build a veterinary clinic by fall, "we're turning the corner on veterinary services," said Terry Maple, interim zoo director.

— Franklin Park Zoo in Boston. Despite years of staffing and financial problems, due largely to dependence on legislative appropriations, recent developments have overcome Humane Society complaints, said Nancy Parker, a spokeswoman for the Metropolitan Boston Zoos. A $2 million children's zoo will open July 4, and a recent $7.9 million state appropriation will allow work on a tropical forest exhibit to resume.

— Prospect Park Zoo in Brooklyn, N.Y. The 49-year-old zoo is to be renovated and turned into a children's zoo by the Bronx Zoological Society, which will take over operation from the city. Municipal and zoo officials said in 1982 the zoo was outmoded and poorly maintained. Richard Lattis of the zoological society said the zoo was still "horrible looking." Tupper Thomas, Prospect Park administrator, said the zoo had had problems but the Humane Society ranking was based on conditions that no longer exist.

— Houser's Groves and Zoo in Melbourne, Fla. David Mannes, manager, said the Humane Society objected to putting big cats in cages instead of behind moats. He said state regulators disliked the use of moats. Furthermore, all the cats there were raised on a bottle, born in a cage and stayed in a cage "because that's all they know." He added that a recent questionnaire had indicated community support for the privately owned zoo, which has never been accused of poor animal care.

— Knowland Park Zoo in Oakland, Calif. The poor rating of this 400-animal, 125-acre zoo is "not based on fact," said William Penn Mott Jr., general manager. "I've been to many zoos around the country and every zoo has areas that are not what the directors of that zoo would like to have...It doesn't necessarily mean it's bad for the animals." The zoo, run by a zoological society, conducts educational programs, has a vet, a dietician and 11 animal keepers, and follows a multimillion-dollar capital improvement plan, he said.

— Welder Park Zoo in Sinton, Texas. In a town of 6,044 people, lack of city money is one reason this 13-acre zoo has had problems for years, said Walter Hill, city manager. But four decrepit cages were demolished and a master plan was drawn up even before the Humane Society rating was published.

— Space Farms Zoo in Sussex County, N.J. Fred Space, director, says the family-owned zoo provides good animal care and has achieved breeding successes and records for animal longevity in captivity. Space, who said the Humane Society never interviewed zoo officials or reviewed zoo records, said humane societies dislike the zoo's antique trap display.

Most zoos do good job, according to observers

NEW YORK (AP) — Where monkeys climb on ropes and trees, where they can poke around a naturalistic setting for their food and hide occasionally from visitors, the Humane Society sees signs of a good zoo.

Where animals live among litter, where the grounds are unkempt and visitors don't learn much, a zoo association executive sees trouble.

And where a coin-operated machine gives moldy feed for the animals, where animals have too little room to move about and children are bitten by a bear or a fox, a zoo is breaking federal law. Officials may shut it down, impose a fine or suggest the owner try another line of work.

America's zoos have their problems. But in an industry that gets high marks for self-regulation, most do a good job, observers say, and the internationally publicized troubles of the Atlanta Zoo are an aberration.

That zoo came under investigation by a county grand jury, the city, federal inspectors and the Humane Society of the United States for possible mismanagement and animal mistreatment.

Incidents include the deaths of animals, including an elephant in a traveling circus, a lion and tiger that had advanced cancer, and two Kodiak bears that were shipped to a North Carolina buffalo ranch.

A complaint against the zoo has been filed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, saying the zoo broke federal law by failing to provide adequate veterinary care for the elephant. Before it died while with the circus, the animal had been sent to a suburban farm to recuperate from muscle ailments.

After finding substandard animal exhibits and inadequate records, the American Association of Zoological Parks and Aquariums, which represents about 175 zoos and aquariums in the United States and Canada, suspended the zoo's membership.

That step, unprecedented in the group's 60-year history, signals that the zoo "is not professionally operated" and should make other zoos reluctant to lend it animals, said Robert Wagner, executive director of the association.

Atlanta's situation is "very, very, very unique," Wagner said, and "certainly not typical" of most zoos in the United States and Canada.

Terry Maple, named interim zoo director by Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young after the controversy surfaced, said that while he would not downplay the problem at the zoo, he believes "it is a recent phenomenon."

Steps have been taken to improve veterinary care at the zoo, Young has made available $400,000 from the city budget for immediate improvements and city officials have begun work on a long-term plan for operations.

Oklahomans fight definition of barbecue

BOLEY, Okla. (AP) — Anyone who has ever held a greasy, sticky rib in one hand while sopping up sauce with a slice of bread in the other knows just what barbecue is.

But the U.S. Department of Agriculture doesn't always agree.

That's why Forrest Lee and his brother, Maurice Lee II, are trying to get the USDA to update its definition of barbecue.

The brothers are the two principal officers in Smokaroma Inc., the only industry in this predominantly-black town of about 500 some 50 miles east of Oklahoma City. They thought they were in the barbecue business, but the USDA disagreed.

"It all started in California, where they have a 'truth-in-menu' law," said Forrest Lee, a distinguished looking man who is vice president of the corporation.

"The USDA's definition of barbecue was adopted by California, and state officials told people who were using our smokers they couldn't call their product barbecue any longer," said Lee.

"They (USDA) are still using a standard that was written in the early 1900s when there was only one way to cook barbecue — with wood."

The Lees say they have a better way than standing over a hot, smoky fire for hours and hours.

They have a special, sealed cooker that smokes and browns the meat under pressure, a process that Forrest Lee says not only is much faster than conventional methods but which also leaves the product more tender and moist.

The pressure forces the smoke from hickory chips into the meat, and the company's special seasoning and sauce add to the distinctive flavor.

But the USDA argued that just because it tastes like barbecue, that doesn't make it barbecue.

AP Laserphoto

Forrest Lee, vice president of Smokaroma Inc., stands next to one of the firm's pressure cookers. The Boley, Okla., company is currently attempting to get the USDA's definition of barbecue changed.

The USDA's definition of barbecue states the meat "shall be cooked by the direct action of dry heat resulting from the burning of hard wood or the coals therefrom..."

"Our way uses moist heat, the moisture coming from the natural juices of the meat," Lee said.

The Smokaroma cooker also uses electricity for heat and chars hickory or other aromatic wood in a separate container.

The USDA standard also states: "The weight of barbecued meat shall not exceed 70 percent of the weight of the fresh uncooked meat."

That also leaves out the Lees' cooker, which hardly shrinks the meat at all.

"They're just encouraging waste," said Forrest Lee, who had just returned from a business trip to Hawaii. "Why would any restaurant or other establishment do something that would cause them to end up with less meat?"

Lee and his brother, the corporation's president, won a court battle against the California ruling. But they decided it would be too costly and take too long to fight each state, so they decided to take on the USDA.

That was three years ago. But now there is hope that the federal government finally will adopt a standard that will encompass the Smokaroma cooker, Lee said.

Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla., wrote the Lees recently to say that a new definition of barbecue would be issued soon in the Federal Register. That new revised definition could lead to even more business, and more jobs for the community where empty, ramshackle buildings make up much of the downtown area.

Forrest Lee said that the company, which employs about 25 workers in a modern plant at the southern edge of town, produces 1,500 cookers a year. They sell for "just under $4,000 each," he said.

Most sales are to convenience stores and the delicatessen departments of grocery stores. But Lee said the Hyatt Hotel at the Los Angeles Airport also uses the cooker.

The company grabs a good chunk of the after-market, too, by selling seasonings, carry-out containers, display warmers, hickory chips, table and counter advertising cards and Smokaroma's "secret barbecue mix," the recipe for which is locked away.

The idea for the Smokaroma came more than 25 years ago. "Our father wondered what would happen if you combined an electric skillet and a pressure cooker with wood chips and meat," Lee said.

From that, Smokaroma was born.

Lee said the process for making "the best-tasting barbecue you ever had" is so simple that skilled workers aren't needed.

First, 2 ounces of wood chips in a charring cup are placed over a heating rod in an indentation of the cooker. The meat is coated with the barbecue seasoning and then placed on special racks in the cooker. The lid is clamped shut, the timer is set and the barbecue cooks without being watched as the smoke from the charring chips is forced into the meat by the steam pressure.

Women get more than free hot-air balloon ride

WESTFIELD, N.Y. (AP) — Two women who won free hot-air balloon rides got a trip to remember when they ended up stranded on Lake Erie for 10 hours before they and two others aboard were rescued Saturday.

A Coast Guard cutter rescued the four, who had stayed afloat in the balloon's gondola, at 7:25 a.m. One of the three women passengers was treated for mild hypothermia, but the four were otherwise unharmed, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Paul Sternisha.

The balloon took off Friday afternoon from the Western New York Children's Psychiatric Center in West Seneca, near Buffalo, about 55 miles northeast of here.

"As near as we can determine, the balloon landed 10 miles into the lake," near Freeport, Pa., a Chautauqua County sheriff's department spokesman said. He said a CB radio broadcast from the balloon said it was falling into the lake.

Coors will donate money

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — The Adolph Coors Co. plans to give up to $325 million to the black community regardless of whether the brewer settles a disagreement with the national Black Economic Development Coalition, says a company spokeswoman.

Coors' national advertising about its plans to give the money over the next five years concerns an earlier commitment to blacks and not negotiations with the BEDC, said spokeswoman Rona Williams.

The coalition began negotiating with Coors last month after chairman William K. Coors made public statements the group considered racist.

Talks broke down May 23 when Coors insisted its contribution be based on its sales to the black community, but restarted after the coalition counterproposed a 10 percent financial committment.

Three plead innocent

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two men and a 19-year-old pleaded innocent to charges of smuggling more than 800 pounds of marijuana from Mexico by airplane.

Authorities seized 857 pounds of marijuana worth an estimated $775,000 at a remote airstrip near the Rancho California housing development in Riverside County, said Orange County Lt. Tom Conner.

Countdown to launch of Discovery begins

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The countdown began Saturday for Monday's maiden launch of the space shuttle Discovery, and the ship's first commander says his craft will continue the "rich tradition" of famous sailing vessels that bore that name.

The count started right on time at 3 a.m. EDT when test conductor Frank Merlino issued the traditional "call to stations" that summoned more than 50 engineers and technicians to their consoles in the control center three miles from the launch pad.

Liftoff for the 12th shuttle voyage is set for 8:43 a.m. EDT Monday, with return to Earth scheduled one week later at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif. NASA opted to land at Edwards instead of returning Discovery to the launch site landing strip because it is a new ship and the wide-open California desert provides plenty of margin for error.

NASA officials reported Saturday afternoon that early countdown activities were progressing smoothly. These included turning on the shuttle's electric power to verify that various systems are working and loading the ship's five general-purpose computers with the information needed to guide it through seven days in orbit.

Weather forecasters said showers are expected to move through the area Sunday. But they said Monday's weather should be good for a launch.

The six-person flight crew, including America's second woman in space, spent much of Saturday meeting with flight officials and reviewing the complex flight plan.

Commander Henry Hartsfield, the only space flight veteran in the group, and pilot Michael Coats practiced landings on the three-mile runway here in a Gulfstream jet modified to handle like a shuttle.

The other crew members are mission specialists Judy Resnik, Steve Hawley and Richard Mullane and payload specialist Charles Walker, a non-astronaut who is to refine a drug he says could help tens of millions of people.

The crew's official mission patch has a picture of a ghost ship, a full-masted 17th century sailing vessel.

Hartsfield explained that it "represents all the namesakes of the space shuttle Discovery. It is a name rich in history for world exploration. With the shuttle Discovery we will continue that rich tradition."

Hartsfield, who flew on the fourth shuttle mission aboard Columbia two years ago, said Henry Hudson commanded a vessel of that name in exploring Hudson Bay and the Hudson River in the 17th century, Capt. James Cook explored the Pacific in another Discovery in the 18th century and three ships of that name have explored Antarctica. All five were British-built.

Hartsfield also noted that "Hudson's crew mutineed and put him afloat in a small boat and he was never seen again, and Captain Cook was killed in the Hawaiian Islands."

"It's my intention to come home with my ship," he added with a grin.

Catholic church helps workers form co-ops

LAWRENCE, Mass. (AP) — The 50 employees of Big Apple Textiles Inc. decided not to trust their future to investors any more when they learned their company was for sale for the second time in three years.

Committed to buying the business, but too poor to pay the price, the workers looked around for help and found an unlikely ally — the Roman Catholic Church, which is trying to help the workers find the money.

Since Pope John Paul II called for a greater church role in the workplace three years ago, the Catholic hierarchy has begun using its political and economic muscle to help workers form their own cooperatives.

"It's part of the social teaching of the church that we can't just leave things to the law of the jungle. Some of the big tigers and elephants do quite well, but the little folks don't do so well," said the Rev. Marvin A. Mottet, executive director of the American Catholic Bishops' Campaign for Human Development in Washington.

The effort is taking root in Massachusetts, where the Archdiocese of Boston received a $60,000 grant from Mottet's group in January to find workers worthy of assistance and people willing to help.

Two weeks ago, 21 Boston lobstermen — squeezed out of the downtown harborfront by hotel and apartment development — formed a cooperative with the aid of the archdiocese, which also helped them lease a 3½-acre site in South Boston.

Now, the archdiocese is trying to negotiate a worker buyout of the Lawrence factory and a foundry on the South Shore, said John Moynihan, head of the diocesan peace and justice committee.

Tony Volk, president of the Lawrence plant, said the workers — who were laid off for up to eight months three years ago the last time the plant changed hands — have agreed "to the last man" to turn their workplace into a cooperative.

"This is probably a million-dollar business and, with 50 people, that's a lot more money than some of these people have," he said.

Because worker cooperatives are perceived as risky, he said, "you have to seek non-traditional sources (of financing). When you go to someone like the archdiocese, they are more concerned with your philosophy and, of course, your potential for success."

Negotiations to buy the company stalled recently when the current owners withdrew their offer, but Moynihan said he believes they can be persuaded to sell if the archdiocese can find the working capital to help the workers through their crucial first year.

Mitchell Ostrover, executive vice president of the New York City-based Big Apple Textiles, said the offer fell through because the workers didn't meet the company's price.

Asked if the plant still could be bought, he said, "That's a good question. I guess anything's for sale at a price." He wouldn't say what the company asked or what the workers offered.

Ultimately, Moynihan said, the archdiocese hopes to spark creation of a whole federation of interrelated worker-owned businesses.

Bitter copper strike continues at Phelps Dodge Corp. mines

MORENCI, Ariz. (AP) — A year after the Phelps Dodge Corp. copper strike began, the bitter and sometimes violent standoff that has split families and friends and battered several Arizona communities continues unabated — as does the company's production.

The strike has seen shootings and brawls, families threatened with eviction from company-owned housing and uniformed state police and National Guardsmen lined up between strikers and people who have chosen to keep working.

Leaders of the 13 striking unions refused to accept the company's demand for economic concessions from June 25, 1983, until three weeks ago, when they softened their position.

But now, citing depressed copper prices that led to closing of 12 of Arizona's 27 mines, Phelps Dodge has withdrawn the offer it had maintained since the strike began last July 1.

And the walkout's anniversary may open what could be the dispute's final chapter — efforts by present workers to hold union decertification elections. Under federal law, striking employees deemed to have been replaced permanently can't vote to save their unions.

If the non-strikers oust the unions, hundreds of strikers and their families, some with roots two and three generations deep in four small towns in the mountains and deserts of southern Arizona, will be left with virtually no employment prospects. And about 400 strikers who still occupy company housing would face eviction.

Speeding auto runs into crowd waiting for food

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A speeding car spun out of control and plowed into a crowd lined up for a food giveaway at a church Saturday, killing two people and injuring at least 16 in a bloody scene one official said resembled as a "war zone."

People were lined up on a sidewalk outside the New Psalmist Baptist Church on the city's north side to receive cornmeal, flour, honey and powdered milk from a federal food distribution program when the accident occurred at 12:24 p.m.

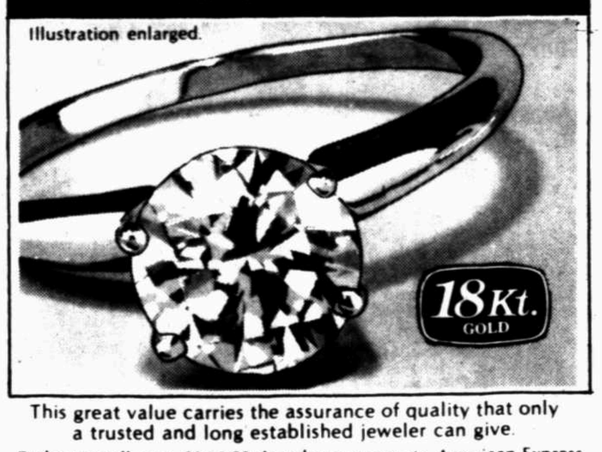

The car apparently turned a corner at high speed and veered across the street onto the sidewalk, then struck the steps at the side door where the food was being passed out.

Sgt. Ray Carpenter, the first officer on the scene, said 25 to 30 people were laying on the concrete sidewalk when he arrived. Three victims were pinned under the bronze 1975 Buick.

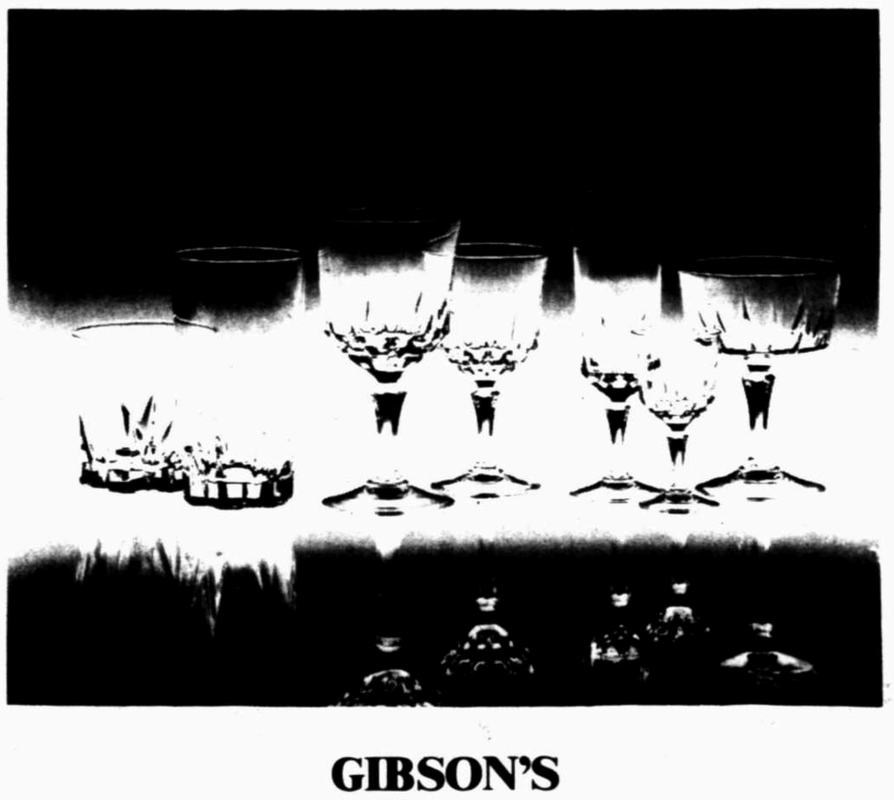

"I didn't know who to help first," said Carpenter. "It's the worst (accident) I've seen in my 15 years."

Carpenter said the area was filled with "bleeding and suffering victims," some of whom had limbs severed.

After the most seriously injured were rushed to area hospitals and police cleared away bystanders, the sidewalk remained covered with shoes, clothing, and pools of blood and a woman's clothing. The concrete steps leading to the side door was food was distributed were broken and pushed several feet by the force of the vehicle.

Indian prime minister tours damaged temple

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi toured the battle-scarred Golden Temple under tight security today, the United News of India said.

Mrs. Gandhi's 35-minute tour of the Golden Temple was her first visit to Amritsar since the start of the Sikh agitation for greater political and religious autonomy in August 1982, UNI reported.

The Golden Temple's head priest, Sahib Singh, submitted a petition to Mrs. Gandhi, urging the withdrawal of army troops from the sprawling shrine complex and asking for permission for Sikh pilgrims to visit the 17th-century temple, Sikhism's equivalent of the Vatican, UNI said.

It was not clear who signed the petition.

Rifle-toting soldiers stood guard outside the Golden Temple and elsewhere in this city of 700,000 people as the prime minister inspected the bunkers and fortified positions Sikh militants had occupied inside the shrine complex before the army took it over in an assault June 4-7, the news agency said.

The government has said 492 Sikhs and at least 84 army personnel died when the military stormed the Golden Temple two weeks ago. But police and military sources have said more than 220 army troops and 1,000 Sikhs were killed in the battle.

In the temple precincts, Mrs. Gandhi also visited the holy Akal Takht, which suffered heavy damage in shelling and machine gunfire during the army assault, said UNI.

The Akal Takht is a place for baptism and penance for Sikhs.

Some opposition politicians had criticized the 66-year-old Hindu prime minister for not visiting the temple earlier in light of her statements that a "healing touch" was needed to soothe Sikh sentiments following the army assault on the shrine.

President Zail Singh, a Sikh, visited the Golden Temple on June 8.

Mrs. Gandhi left for the Indian capital of New Delhi following the visit, UNI said.

On Friday, Mrs. Gandhi had told senior government officials that Sikh militants who had been based inside the Golden Temple had "a sinister and long-term motive" in acquiring sophisticated arms and ammunition from abroad.

She said the militants had accumulated so many bombs that "a mere spark could have destroyed the holy place."

The government accused militants inside the Golden Temple of masterminding a campaign of terror that killed hundreds of people in Punjab in recent months. The Sikhs had demanded greater political and religious autonomy within Hindu-dominated India, and some radicals had called for a separate Sikh nation in Punjab, where members of the sect are a majority.

Amazon's Indians now wear jeans

PORTO VELHO, Brazil (AP) — Where as recently as a decade ago they stalked the Amazon jungles naked, they now wear jeans. Where the sun told them the time, they now use watches and their radios link them to the outside world.

The Indians of Brazil's Amazon are growing in numbers once again, but the culture and ways of the modern world and the white man are rubbing off on these holdovers from ancient times.

More than 1 million Indians were said to exist all over this continent-sized country at the start of the 20th century. By the late 1970s the figure was put at 100,000. Today the tribes are growing and authorities say there are about 220,000 native Brazilians, most of whom live in the steamy Amazon jungle.

The situation today seems vastly different from that of 10 to 15 years ago when international humanitarian groups protested against what they said was government-tolerated, widespread dying off of Brazilian Indians.

"The initial shock with the whites was devastating," said Apoena Meirelles, head of the government's regional bureau of Indian affairs, known as Funai, here in the Amazon state of Rondonia on the Bolivian border 2,000 miles northwest of Rio de Janeiro. "But now the Indians are adapting."

"They adjusted to the diseases, and now they are vaccinated," said the 35-year-old Indian expert who headed several expeditions that led to first contacts.

Contact, or so-called pacification, caused a series of sometimes quick and always profound changes in the lives of the Indians, Meirelles said, adding that he believes the days of finding new tribes are over.

"We don't want to destroy the culture," said Meirelles, whose anthropologist father, the late Francisco Meirelles, named his son Apoena after a Xavante Indian chief. "There is no way we can stop this. They see you light a cigarette with a lighter and they no longer want to use sticks."

Describing the phenomenon as only human, he added, "That's why I believe that anthropology is the study of a dead culture. The Indian culture changes once the anthropologist or anyone else enters."

Brazil's Indians are culturally and economically diverse, scattered, physically different and speak varied languages. Some still are fierce and shun outside contacts. Others adopt Western-style clothes and welcome visits. A handful still practice ritual cannibalism. All have one common and overriding desire — to have their lands protected from settlers and prospectors.

"The government says there is a lack of money to give us our land," said Brazil's most famous Indian, Congressman Mario Juruna, during an interview at his office in Brasilia, the national capital. "Well why can't the rich contribute?"

The government's Bureau of Indian Affairs has been slow in meeting its promise to mark off native lands.

The result frequently has ended in the deaths of Indians or the farmers or gold hunters who tread on tribal territories. The delay recently led groups of Indians in several areas to storm regional Funai offices, hold several government workers hostage and force the dismissal of the Funai president.

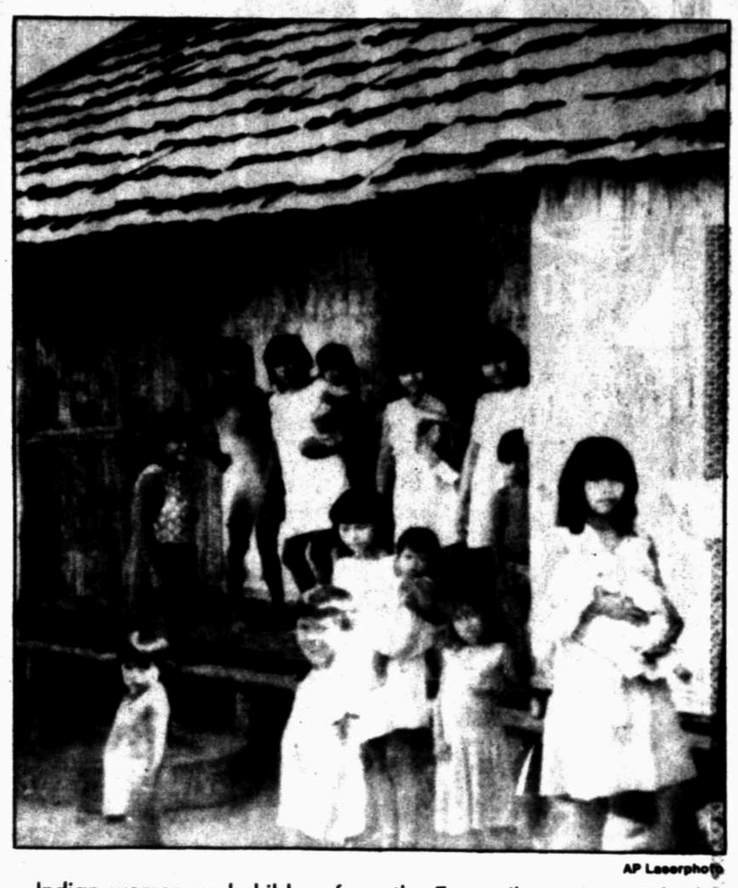

The new Funai president, Jurandy Marques da Fonseca, marks a change in policy from the military officers who had been heading the bureau. Da Fonseca is a lawyer by trade and was born in a tribal village, the son of a government Indian affairs worker.

Da Fonseca has named several Indians to high-ranking posts and has renewed the pledge to mark off the lands.

"Land is everything to Indians," said Meirelles, explaining that the expedition to reach the last tribe contacted was started because of land tresspasses in 1979.

The Uru-Eu-Wau-Wau tribe attracted national attention after killing the child of a settler and kidnapping another, who was later killed by bow and arrow.

The tribal land is about 180 miles southwest of this Rondonia state capital, in a desolate area where the deep green jungle canopy gives way to plains and low-lying mountains.

'Lots of information' links D'Aubisson to plot

WASHINGTON (AP) — A senior U.S. official said Saturday there is "lots of information" linking Salvadoran rightist leader Roberto D'Aubuisson to an alleged assassination plot against Ambassador Thomas Pickering.

But Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., a D'Aubuisson supporter, called the charge "a fabrication" and attributed the allegation to erroneous newspaper accounts.

Nonetheless, the Reagan administration found the evidence compelling enough to dispatch Ambassador-at-large Vernon Walters to El Salvador last month to meet with D'Aubuisson.

D'Aubuisson, who lost the May 6 national elections to President Jose Napoleon Duarte, accused Pickering of providing financial support to Duarte's campaign.

Helms also objected to Pickering's alleged activities and called on President Reagan to fire him. Reagan ignored the appeal.

The U.S. official, speaking on condition he not be identified by name, said the evidence against D'Aubuisson and his followers is "circumstantial" but clearly indicated an attempt on Pickering's life was being planned. The official said there was "lots of information" about the alleged plot, but he had no idea when and how it was was to be carried out.

Helms said linking D'Aubuisson to an assassination plot against Pickering is "an absolute falsehood. There is no evidence that I have seen that he has even been said to be linked to. This is all a fabrication, insofar as I've been able to check, by the various newspapers."

Helms, in an interview with the Raleigh News & Observer, also denied a published report that Reagan had called him into the Oval Office to tell him that his activities were inflaming a delicate situation in El Salvador.

"That's sleazy journalism, because there's not a word of truth in it, insofar as the president calling me down to the White House and chiding me," Helms said.

The administration has maintained that it did not take sides in the Salvadoran election. It did provide money to pro-Duarte union groups but said that assistance was for non-political purposes.

Helms complained that the U.S. embassy in El Salvador was converted into an adjunct of the Duarte campaign, and he also criticized members of Congress who visited El Salvador for stating publicly that American aid would dry up if D'Aubuisson were elected.

This, he claimed, amounted to subtle interference on Duarte's behalf.

U.S. officials have said D'Aubuisson appears to have had a key role in organizing rightist death squads four years ago and also in directing their activities. But Secretary of State George P. Shultz has said evidence of this is inconclusive.

Since the election, Helms has reconciled himself to Duarte's victory. At Reagan's request, he was a member of the official 11-member U.S. delegation for Duarte's inauguration on June 1. At the time, he said the outcome of the election was less important than ensuring El Salvador's survival.

Helms met with D'Aubuisson during the visit to encourage him to attend the inauguration in a spirit of reconciliation. D'Aubuisson refused.

Ironically, the first public report of a death plot against Pickering came from d'Aubuisson himself at a May 18 news conference in San Salvador.

D'Aubuisson told reporters he heard about it from an aide to Helms, who called to say that Reagan had learned of an attempt.

Farmers jeer, hurl food at Britain's Thatcher

PORTHCAWL, Wales (AP) — Farmers protesting milk production cuts hurled food at the party of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher Saturday, splattering egg on her face and dress, and wives of striking miners joined in the jeering, witnesses reported.

A detective rushed forward and unfurled an umbrella to try to shield Mrs. Thatcher from the barrage, which came as she left a convention of her Conservative party, the witnesses said, according to Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency.

The agency said Mrs. Thatcher, egg dripping off her clothes, appeared unruffled as she spoke briefly with party officials before being hustled into a limousine that sped away.

Porthcawl is a seaside resort in South Wales, a socialist stronghold and mining district wracked by Britain's 15-week-old coal strike, a dispute sparked by a decision by the government-run National Coal Board to close unprofitable mines. Accompanying the strike has been some of the worst violence in Britain's modern labor history.

Witnesses said eggs, a packet of butter, a tomato and some ice cream were part of the barrage aimed at the Thatcher party.

Mrs. Thatcher had just emerged from the annual convention of the Welsh Conservative Party to jeers from separate groups of 100 farmers protesting milk production cuts and 300 wives of striking miners, Press Association reported.

Witnesses said the objects all appeared to come from the farmers, who had assembled to protest milk cuts imposed by the Common Market.

"One of the eggs hit the top of her car and sprayed her with yolk," said Olwen Rapps, who was standing a few feet from Mrs. Thatcher. "There was egg down the front of her dress, but she was lucky it was not worse because she ducked."

In her keynote address to the convention, Mrs. Thatcher declared: "Let violence cease," referring to clashes between police and miners on picket lines.

The meeting was held 10 miles south of a giant steel complex at Port Talbot, where imported fuel is being landed for transportation to the inland steel plant at Llanwern.

A truck convoy hauled coal and coke into the Llanwern plant Friday after managers reported a fuel shortage because of a three-day blockade by railroad workers in support of the miners.

The strike has been marked by mass picketing at working mines and steel plants. Two pickets have been killed and 424 policemen and 164 miners injured, according to police.

Solidarity leader: Turnout low for national elections

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A leading figure in the Solidarity underground said Saturday that elections June 17, which had the lowest turnout in 40 years of Communist rule in Poland, gave the "true picture of society's attitudes."

Solidarity's underground had called for a boycott of the nationwide balloting.

"We broke a mystical barrier of 99 percent announced after all elections in Soviet bloc countries," said Zbigniew Bujak, chairman of the Warsaw chapter of Solidarity. He has been in hiding since the Dec. 13, 1981, imposition of martial law that led to the banning of Solidarity. His statement was carried in a communique.

He accused Communist authorities of inflating the official turnout figure of 75 percent by "more than a dozen percent."

The elections were the first in Poland since Solidarity was formed as an independent trade federation in August 1980. The voting on June 17 filled 110,428 seats on local and regional advisory councils. The candidates were approved by the government.

Authorities have claimed the turnout was a victory over those calling for the boycott. The government has said the turnout represented an endorsement of its policies.

South Africa arrests 44 people for campaigning against apartheid

DURBAN, South Africa (AP) — Police arrested 44 foes of South Africa's race separation laws Friday night and Saturday for their actions in campaigning against the official apartheid policy, authorities said. A protest spokesman called the police action "intimidatory."

A police official said 14 people were arrested Friday night for putting up posters in violation of local law in this Indian Ocean port city. He said 30 people were arrested Saturday and held under the Internal Security Act — meaning police do not have to announce a charge or even acknowledge the arrests. The 44 were released on bail of $76 each.

The agitators were members of the United Democratic Front, a multiracial organization opposed to South Africa's racial segregation policy.

Front spokesman Farouk Meer called the arrests "intimidatory." He said those arrested were protesting the government's decision to give limited voting rights to Asians and "coloreds," the government's official classification for persons of mixed race, but not to the majority blacks.

The Front wants Asians and people of mixed race to boycott August elections, when they are to elect representatives to their own chambers of Parliament.

The ruling National Party of Prime Minister Pieter W. Botha says the two new chambers will rule beside the all-white Parliament. He calls the three-chambered Parliament a major step toward reforming this nation's race laws.

Foes of apartheid say the plan in fact entrenches white minority rule. They contend that the whites-only chamber could govern even if the other bodies failed to meet.

Botha's ultraright opposition argues that giving even limited voting rights to Asians and mixed race people marks the first step toward handing South Africa over to black majority rule and selling out the white race.

There are just over five million whites in South Africa, almost three million people of mixed race, 850,000 Asians and more than 22 million blacks, according to government statistics.

In London Saturday, Neil Kinnock, head of Britain's opposition Labor Party, said that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's administration is "the most pro-South African government that Britain has had for many years."

Cuba will talk about return of 'excludables'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cuba has expressed willingness to discuss taking back thousands of criminals and mental patients among the 125,000 refugees who came to Florida in 1980, the State Department said Saturday night.

For several years, Washington has pressed Cuba to accept the return of several thousand exiles, mostly criminals and mental patients, who are ineligible to remain in the United States. These "excludable" Cubans were among the refugees who immigrated to Florida aboard the so-called "freedom flotilla" from the Cuban port city of Mariel.

"We have been urging Cuba for more than a year to discuss this subject and to accept the small percentage of Cubans who came to the United States from Mariel in 1980 who are ineligible for entry into the United States under our law," the department said in a statement read by spokesman Brian Carlson.

"The Cubans have indicated they will not discuss the subject though they have expressed willingness to do so after the U.S. elections in November," the statement said.

Carlson declined to say whether Cuba's professed interest in discussing the issue after the election was viewed by U.S. officials as an attempt to avoid action that might be seen as aiding President Reagan's re-election.

"We will assess the probability for productive discussion at that time," Carlson said.

Namibian guerrillas claim 94 South Africans killed

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Guerrillas fighting for the independence of South-West Africa said Saturday they killed 94 South African troops in two months of fighting earlier this year, Angola's official news agency reported.

The agency, Angop, said it was quoting from a statement issued in the Angolan capital, Luanda, by the South-West African Peoples' Organization (SWAPO).

According to the statement, SWAPO guerrillas killed 74 South African soldiers between Feb. 11 and 25.

During the same period, SWAPO forces shot down a South African military helicopter, destroyed 14 trucks and captured a radio post and several 60mm mortars, the agency said.

Angop's dispatch was monitored in Lisbon, Portugal. Angola is a former Portuguese colony.

Leftist terrorists killed

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Security forces killed three suspected leftist terrorists and wounded another in a shootout in the Black Sea coastal village of Unye, state radio reported Saturday.

The broadcast said the suspects belonged to Dev-Yol, Turkey's largest extreme leftist organization, and had been sought by the military for the last four years. It said two other members of the gang were arrested in the operation Thursday.

Security forces seized weapons and leftist publications at the suspects' hideout, the radio added, without giving more details.

Bus rolls off road, killing 9

MONREAL DE ARIZA, Spain (AP) — A bus carrying high school students rolled off a road, killing nine people and injuring three others Saturday near this small town in northeastern Spain, police said.

Among the passengers were 23 high school students from Barcelona, and police said they believed several of them died in the accident.

Police said the bus, traveling from Barcelona to Lisbon, Portugal, was apparently going at a high speed when it went out of control and rolled off the road just outside the town, 116 miles northeast of Madrid.

COM gives new coach pleasant surprises

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

City of Midland swim coach Brad Swendig didn't know what to expect of his swimmers going into his first meet as the team's head coach.

After the results of Saturday's first day of the West Texas Invitational Swim Meet at Doug Russell Pool, he was pleasantly surprised.

Not only is COM the big leader of the meet with the final events to be held today starting with warmups at 8 a.m. and events at 9 a.m., but Swendig already has seven swimmers hit qualifying times for this year's state swim meet.

"I didn't get the exact score, but we've got a pretty good lead," said Swendig. "I believe Amarillo Aquatic Club and Odessa Aquatic Club are pretty close to being tied for second."

When AAC came into Midland, Swendig had his first surprise of the day. He was able to enjoy a small reunion with a former teammate and competitor from his COM days.

"The Amarillo coach, Mike Butler, and I swam together for COM when we were in school," said Swendig. "We both started out as pretty bad swimmers and it seemed like we moved up through the classes together through our entire careers, competing against each other. It's kind of interesting that we're going up against each other again."

And, that's not always good as Swendig added, "He's a little bit too good of a coach. I hate to see a coach that's as good as he is in this area."

AS TO the swimmers who qualified for state, Swendig is most impressed with a group of 10-year-old boys who swam a 2:57.43 in the medley relay. It's a surprise because "basically, this is an early season meet and they're already coming together."

The four that comprise the medley relay are Matt Welch, Tim Yarborough, Kelly Delany and Jon Green.

Ryan Bell, competing in the 13-14-year old division had a grand day for COM, winning and qualifying for state in three events, 200 backstroke (2:25.12), 100 butterfly (1:07.42) and 400 freestyle (1:00.31). Michaela Hasek, 13-14, and Sam Perry, senior division, each also qualified in the 200 backstroke. Hasek qualified with a time of 2:38.71 and Perry in 2:26.94.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Matt Way of the Red Raider Aquatic Club of Lubbock strokes his way toward the finish line Saturday at Doug Russell Pool during first day of action in the annual West Texas Invitational Swim Meet. This action came in the 200-meter backstroke competition. The meet concludes today.

"There are a few individual swimmers that I'm really impressed with," said Swendig. "I'm standing on the sides not really knowing what to expect (because he's only been with the team for a month). I've got a 10 and under boy, Kelly Delany, and I guess he probably won every event he swam. I knew he was a good swimmer, but it surprised me how tough he was.

"We have a girl by the name of Michaela Hasek," continued Swendig. "She performed very well. Ryan Bell also pretty much dominated his division and I expected that. A senior girl, Becky Simpson, I believe she won three or four events today and I was shocked. Some of these swimmers, before meets, can't handle the pressure. She's just a girl that when she gets into a pressure meet situation, she's great."

Not every swimmer that caught Swendig's eye had a winning effort.

"I have four boys in the senior division that I was impressed with," said Swendig. "Alan Reed didn't win

"Three other senior boys that I think deserve mention are Earl Anderson, who won a couple of events, Sam Perry and David Hartman. I was pleasantly surprised with their performances."

an event today but he's a boy who retired four months ago from swimming and came back to swim just recently. He's one of the toughest swimmers I've ever seen. He swam some long races out of shape and did well. I don't know when I've seen a boy that out of shape swim as well as he did.

AMARILLO SWIMMERS Robert Fulton and Sean Griffen had some of the best performances of the day as each faired well in five events.

Fulton swimming in the senior boys A division, won the 200 backstroke, 100 butterfly, 400 freestyle, 200 breaststroke and 400 individual medley.

Griffen, 13-14, won his class A certificate in three events, the 100 butterfly, 400 freestyle and 200 breaststroke while winning the B division 100 freestyle and 400 IM.

Craig Paradee, a third Amarillo swimmer, was strong in four events in the senior boys division, taking first in the C 100 butterfly, the B 100 freestyle and 400 IM, and won his A certificate in the 400 freestyle.

Odessa Aquatic Club swimmers Jara Fatout and Jennifer Pester were each four-time winners on the day.

Fatout won the 13-14 girls B 400 freestyle and 400 IM, the C 100 butterfly and earned her A certificate in the 100 freestyle.

Pester, 11-12 girls, was an A winner in the 100 backstroke, 100 butterfly and 50 freestyle while winner her A certificate in the 400 freestyle.

Decker earns dream berth

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mary Decker, the nation's premier distance runner who is determined to compete in the Olympic Games for the first time, won the women's 3,000-meter race in the U.S. Olympic Track and Field Trials Saturday night.

The 25-year-old Decker, the world champion and the American record holder in the 3,000, was timed in 8 minutes, 34.91 seconds, the fastest by an American this year and the second-fastest in the world, in earning the Olympic berth.

In 1980, she made the Olympic team in the 1,500 meters, but did not get to compete in the Games because of the United States boycott of the Moscow Olympics.

In 1976, the oft-injured Decker was suffering from shin splints and lower leg ailments which necessitated two operations, and did not compete in the Trials.

And in 1972, she was only 13, one year under the allowable age of participating in the Olympics, and was not allowed in the Trials.

Recently, she said, "I get goose bumps thinking about the Olympics. I'm really excited about the whole Olympic thing. The last time (1980) was such a letdown."

This time, there should be no letdown, unless Decker gets hurt again between now and the Games, which begin July 28.

Today, she will try and make the Olympic team in a second event, the 1,500 meters. She won both the 1,500 and 3,000 in last year's World Championships.

Joining her on the Olympic team in the 3,000 were Cindy Bremers, the runner-up in 8:41.19 and Joan Hansen, who finished third in 8:41.43, making them the No. 2 and 3 performers in U.S. history, behind Decker.

Decker, just as she did in the World Championships, jumped to the lead immediately. She extended it quickly, established a commanding advantage and appeared to run effortlessly the rest of the way.

While Decker was moving easily to victory, the women's 100-meter high hurdles produced a remarkably close finish — and resulted in the elimination of American record holder Stephanie Hightower.

The first four finishers, led by NCAA champion Kim Turner of the University of Texas-El Paso in 13.12 seconds, finished within one one-hundredth of a second of each other.

Benita Fitzgerald-Brown, Pam Page and Hightower all were timed in 13.13, but meet officials, after spending a long time reviewing the film of the race, determined that the other two had edged Hightower for the remaining places on the U.S. team.

Hightower apeared to stumble slighly going over the last hurdle, and that undoubtedly cost her a spot on the team.

"I hit the sixth hurdle," said the solemn Hightower. "It threw me off. I just hit that one hurdle . . . that one little mistake cost me.

"When I saw it (replayed) on the screen (high atop the Los Angeles Coliseum), I had a feeling I didn't make it (the team)," added Hightower. "I leaned too soon.

"I'm going to Europe later this year and we'll see who is No. 1 in the United States."

There were five other finals Saturday, the next-to-last session of the eight-day Trials.

One of the most heated events was the men's shot put, which wound up with former American record holder Dave Laut winning at 70 feet, one-half inch. Although there were six 70-foot throwers in the field, Laut was the only one to surpass 70 feet.

Augie Wolf, the national champion and former Princeton University standout, finished second at 69-8 1-4, and Michael Carter, the seven-time national champion from Southern Methodist University who has been drafted by teams in the National Football League and United States Football League this year, was third at 68-4 1-2.

Lee's Willis aids North

HOUSTON (AP) — Kyle Mach's fielder's choice grounder scored the game's first run and led the North to a 3-0 victory over the South Saturday in the Texas High School Baseball Coaches Association's 11th annual All-Star Game.

Mach, of Fort Worth Southwest, pitched two innings, struck out three, and gave up only one hit to earn the victory.

Houston Cy-Fair's Gary Robertson, Mach, Midland Lee's Bryan Willis, and Houston Cy-Creek's Kurt Krippner combined for a three-hitter as the North defeated the South for the third consecutive year.

Willis was Lee's All-District and All-State choice in 1984, helping the Rebels gain the state playoffs for the second year in a row.

The North scored twice in the sixth on three walks, and Mach's fielder's choice, which scored two runs when Houston Waltrip second baseman Buzzy Reifel threw the ball into the dugout for an error.

The North scored its final run in the seventh against losing pitcher Axel Kloch of Houston Spring Woods on a leadoff triple by Hallsville's Linty Ingram and an error charged to Bay City shortstop Jimmy Pavlich.

The North leads the series 6-5.

Clear Lake is known as winningest school

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

The winningest high school in Texas isn't a football powerhouse.

But try visiting Clear Lake High School some time and the glint off current state championship trophies in such sports as cross country, tennis, volleyball and swimming is just as eye-catching.

"We reached our pinnacle this year," said athletic director Paul Gips, who, by the way, is retiring after 22 years' service in the school district.

An Associated Press survey of 1983-1984 University Interscholastic League state champions showed Clear Lake is the clear overall choice as the winningest high school in Texas.

Clear Lake is a Class 5A school of some 3,000 residents located 20 miles southeast of Houston just off the Gulf Freeway — not all that far from Galveston.

On display in the trophy case are boy's state titles in cross country, tennis and swimming, in which they have won eight state championships. The boys' teams also were area champs in basketball and baseball.

And the Clear Lake girls aren't far behind.

They earned state titles in both cross country and volleyball. They were state runnersup in swimming and tennis, and bi-district champs in soccer. The girls have won six state championships in swimming.

"We stress an overall program," said Gips. "All our coaches are important."

In individual swimming events, Clear Lake earned the 200-yard medley relay first-place medal and the 100-yard butterfly championship.

Gips' success formula is simple. He gets good people, he said, and then gets out of the way.

"I came here 22 years ago. I can hardly take credit for our athletic program," said Gips. "I sure haven't tried to tell anybody how to coach. I just sort of select good people and put it on automatic pilot."

Everything just fell together for Clear Lake's banner year, the athletic director said.

"It's really an impressive record," he said. "It's a good way to go out. I can relax thinking about it while I'm out there on the golf course. I couldn't have done it without great coaches ... My part was easy."

Of course, the AP survey showed other excellent programs across Texas, but Clear Lake took overall No. 1 honors.

Olympics could be armed camp

Security force wants to stop terrorist attacks

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Olympics have been made a "hardened target" to deter potential terrorist attack, but officials responsible for security say the Summer Games next month will try to avoid the image of an armed camp.

The officials, appearing confident that the 16,000-man security force and array of high-tech equipment will be adequate to meet any threat, also say U.S. intelligence has yet to uncover any plan to attack the Games.

"The Olympics right now have become a hardened target," Edgar Best, director of security for the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, said in a recent interview. "Good terrorists will not normally attack a hardened target."

"We think the probability (of an attack) is remote," said Cmdr. William Booth of the Los Angeles Police Department. "But we still have to plan as though it would happen."

"WE ARE very adequately prepared," added Richard T. Bretzing, the FBI's special agent in charge of the Los Angeles office. "We have an excellent response capability and, should an incident occur, our response will be both swift and effective."

To protect the 8,500 athletes expected at the July 28-Aug. 12 Games, security officials say they will amass a force of up to 17,000 officers to patrol the three Olympic villages, the 23 game sites and the 150 miles of freeways that connect them. The force will include a specially trained 50-man FBI hostage-rescue team to be stationed at an undisclosed location.

"Whatever we haven't planned on, I think we have the capability to immediately enter a delicate situation and resolve it very decisively," Best said.

Security officials see the Soviet pullout as having little overall impact on chances for terrorism at these Games.

Best said the withdrawal of 14 Soviet-bloc nations would remove potential targets for anti-communist extremists — but Brian Jenkins, an anti-terrorism expert at Rand Corp., said their absence would reduce Soviet interest in discouraging attacks.

However, Jenkins added, "I'm not saying (the Soviets) will give the green light to some terrorist proxy to go after the Olympics."

Jenkins noted that terrorist incidents often involve ethnic groups that hold a long-term grudge against a specific nation. "An Olympics is like a little United Nations that exists for a limited time," he said.

Jenkins added that while incidents of terrorism in the United States are infrequent, cases of international terrorism have increased four-fold since 1972. He also discounted the significance of current intelligence reports, arguing that most terrorist attacks occur without warning.

THE OLYMPIC organizing committee's security budget has been kept secret, but estimates place it at $100 million. Further, Congress has appropriated $50 million — some of it standby money — to cover security costs incurred by the federal government.

The Olympics have given the police forces of Southern California a chance to obtain an arsenal of glittering, high-tech hardware.

A remote-controlled robot will be in Los Angeles to handle bombs; police snipers will be equipped with night-vision scopes for their rifles; 84 helicopters are being bought, and sophisticated communications gear will provide "secure" radio transmissions," the FBI says.

And in case an attacker is planning a quick escape across the Mexican border, the San Diego police have set up a hot line with the Tijuana police.

Despite the preparations, security officials hope the police presence will be less intrusive than at other Games.

"At other Olympics, there was an oppressive look," said Best, a former FBI agent. "The look of security here will be different. ... It is an international sporting event, not an international security event. We did not want to overpower the Games with security."

Best has said the Olympics will try to avoid use of metal detectors for spectators, a procedure that produced long lines at the Winter Games in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, where troops startled some visitors by carrying submachineguns.

Law enforcement officials, speaking anonymously, have expressed particular concern about potential terrorist attacks by Armenians, Croatians, Iranians, Cuban exiles and Puerto Rican separatists.

A's end Rangers' streak

Meanwhile, Detroit maintains pace

From Wire Reports

OAKLAND — The lineup read Tom, instead of Tim, Conroy and the southpaw on the mound didn't pitch like Tim Conroy had all season.

But the Oakland A's think they've found the real article at last after watching Conroy fire fastballs past the Texas Rangers and allow only one hit in eight innings for a 5-1 victory Saturday.

"That's the Conroy we've been waiting on," said A's skipper Jackie Moore, who returned him to a starting role June 12 two weeks after taking over as manager. "We felt all along there was no doubt about his arm and his ability. It was just a matter of his confidence.

"One of these days we expect him to be a dominating pitcher."

Conroy, 24, certainly was that against the Rangers, whose only hit was a solo homer by Alan Bannister on a 3-2 pitch with two outs in the fifth inning. Conroy walked two and struck out five before tiring in the eighth but he got hitless relief help from Bill Caudill in the ninth.

"This was what we all needed," said Conroy, 1-3. "I had a good fastball, tailing away, and that's almost all I threw."

It was Conroy's best game since coming up from the minors late in the 1982 season. He had a complete game five-hitter last season against Toronto, but against the Rangers he threw consistently hard and around the strike zone.

"Every inning got easier and easier," Conroy said. "It's fun when you throw strikes.

"It's been a struggle not throwing on a regular basis, relieving or starting, but you've got to do what they want you to do. There's one thing that I'll never lose again and that's my confidence."

The victory snapped the A's five-game losing streak against the Rangers.

Conroy was staked to an early 4-0 lead with the help of a two-run homer by Mike Davis and a pair of stolen bases by Rickey Henderson against loser Danny Darwin, 5-4.

Dave Kingman started it off in the second inning with a high blooper that fell for a hit in shallow left field. He went to second on a groundout and scored on Bruce Bochte's single to right. Davis followed with a 400-foot homer, his third of the year, into the right-center field stands to give the A's a 3-0 lead.

Oakland picked up a cheap run in the third as Henderson stole second and third after leading off with a walk, then scored on a sacrifice fly by Joe Morgan. Henderson leads the American League with 32 stolen bases.

Bannister, hitting .296 since he was traded to Texas last month, hit his second homer with two out in the fifth, a solo shot that barely cleared the left field fence, to cut the deficit to 4-1.

Dwayne Murphy belted his 12th homer in the eighth for the final A's run.

Tigers 5, Brewers 1

DETROIT — Howard Johnson hit a three-run homer and Kirk Gibson added a solo shot to support the four-hit pitching of Milt Wilcox over eight innings as the Detroit Tigers defeated the Milwaukee Brewers 5-1.

Wilcox, who had dropped five of his last six decisions, did not allow a runner past second base until the eighth as he improved his record to 8-5. Doug Bair pitched a hitless ninth for the Tigers.

Gibson, who also had a pair of singles, belted his ninth home run of the season with two outs in the first inning. Detroit got three runs in the second, also with two outs, when Larry Herndon singled, Dave Bergman doubled and Johnson followed with his sixth home run of the season.

Detroit added a run in the third as Gibson singled and scored on Lance Parrish's hit-and-run double, which chased Milwaukee starter Chuck Porter, 5-3. Porter was removed from the disabled list and activated Friday.

Milwaukee spoiled Wilcox's shutout bid in the eighth when Ed Romero led off with a double and later scored on Jim Gantner's sacrifice fly.

Blue Jays 9, Red Sox 3

BOSTON — Buck Martinez, a 13-year veteran, belted two home runs in a game for the first time in his career and Rance Mulliniks had a single, double and triple, powering the Toronto Blue Jays to a 9-3 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

American League

Martinez, who also had a single, and Mulliniks drove in three runs apiece as the Blue Jays unleashed a 17-hit attack and sent Boston to its ninth defeat in its last 10 games.

Part-time starter Jim Gott, 3-2, making his first appearance since June 8, allowed only three hits over six innings before needing relief help from Roy Lee Jackson with two outs in the seventh. Jackson worked out of a bases-loaded jam and Toronto breezed the rest of the way.

The Blue Jays jumped on Rich Gale for four runs in the first inning. Gale, 1-2, was making his first start since being recalled from the minors June 7.

Damaso Garcia led off the game with a double, Dave Collins was hit by a pitch and Lloyd Moseby delivered an RBI single. George Bell singled home another run and Mulliniks drilled a two-run triple.

Gale allowed Martinez's first home run of the game in the fourth and was relieved later in the inning by Mike Brown, recalled from the minors Friday. Brown allowed a run-scoring single by Cliff Johnson.

Mulliniks doubled in the fifth and scored as Martinez drilled another homer into the screen in left. It was the 50th career home run for Martinez and his third this season. Mulliniks singled in another run in the sixth.

Boston scored in the third on Jim Rice's single and added two more in the eighth on a sacrifice fly by Mike Easler and a RBI single by Bill Buckner.

Twins 4, White Sox 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Rookie Dave Meier greeted Chicago reliever Juan Agosto with a tie-breaking double in the bottom of the eighth inning to give the Minnesota Twins a 4-3 victory over the White Sox.

Meier's double scored Dave Engle, who led off the inning with a double against Chicago starter Tom Seaver, 6-5.

Len Whitehouse, 1-1, pitched a scoreless eighth inning to earn the victory and Ron Davis worked the ninth for his 13th save. Minnesota's Al Williams, making his first start since May 2 due to injuries, allowed six hits over the first seven innings.

Chicago's Greg Walker broke a 1-1 tie with a home run against Williams to lead off the sixth. The Twins tied it in the bottom of the inning on an inside-the-park home run by designated hitter Randy Bush.

Chicago went ahead 3-2 in the seventh on a ground-rule double by Marc Hill, a sacrifice by Julio Cruz and a single by Rudy Law, which scored pinch-runner Dan Spillner.

The Twins tied the game again in the bottom of the seventh when Tim Teufel singled and was forced by Gary Gaetti, who went to third on Kirby Puckett's single and scored on a single by Mickey Hatcher.

Both teams scored a run in the first inning. Scott Fletcher was hit by a pitch and was forced by Harold Baines, who scored from first on Walker's double and an error by right fielder Tom Brunansky. Minnesota tied it on consecutive singles by Puckett, Hatcher and Kent Hrbek.

Yankees 5, Orioles 4

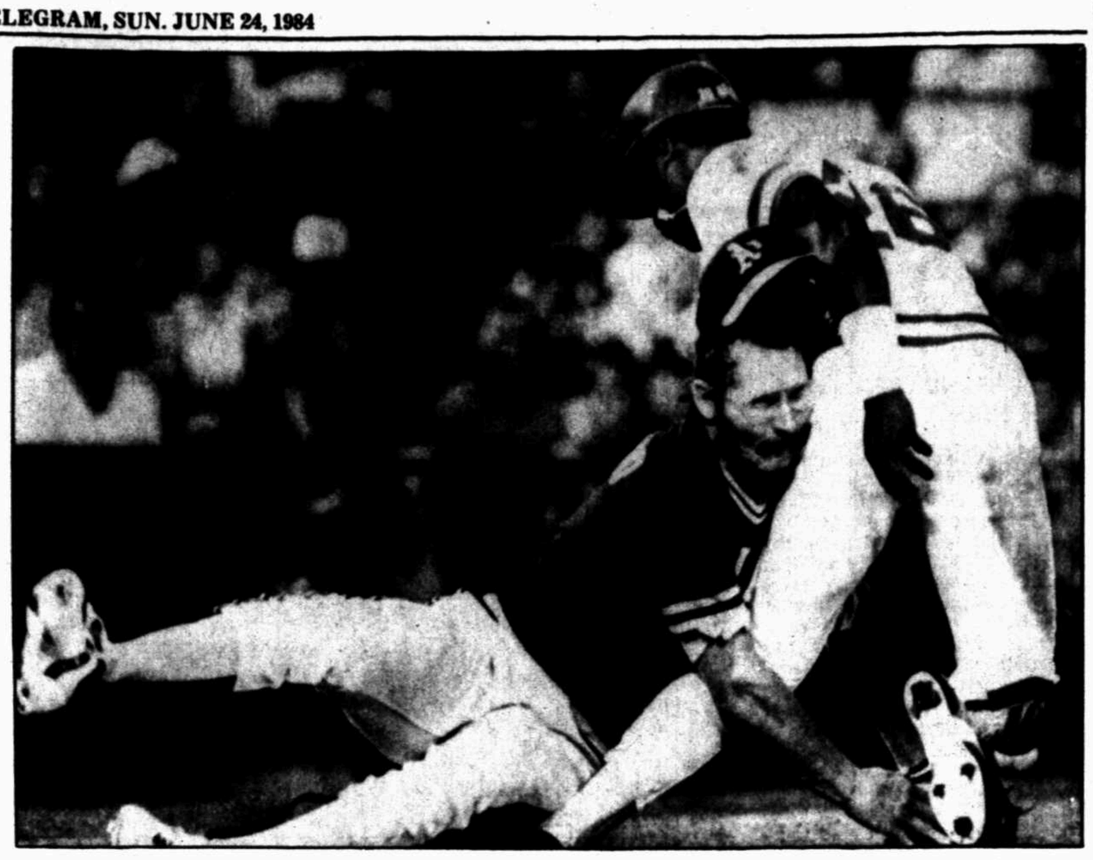

BALTIMORE — Steve Kemp greeted Tippy Martinez with a game-tying two-run homer in the ninth inning and Roy Smalley tagged Baltimore's relief ace for a leadoff home run in the 11th, giving the New York Yankees a 5-4 victory over the Orioles.

Martinez, 3-5, an old New York nemesis, has either won or saved 14 of Baltimore's last 19 victories over the Yankees. Until the Yankees nicked him for a run Friday night, he had not allowed an earned run against his former team since 1981.

The winner was Jose Rijo, 2-7, the fourth New York pitcher, who went 1 1-3 innings. Fellow rookie Clay Christiansen struck out Ken Singleton and Mike Young with runners at first and second for his second save.

With Baltimore leading 4-2 in the ninth, Don Baylor, whose 15th home run forged a 2-2 tie in the sixth, was safe on a fielding error by second baseman Rich Dauer. After Dave Winfield popped out, left-hander Martinez replaced reliever Sammy Stewart, but the left-handed-hitting Kemp connected for his third homer. Smalley's game-winning homer was his sixth.

The Orioles took a 1-0 lead in the first inning against Phil Niekro on a walk to Wayne Gross, Cal Ripken Jr.'s single and Eddie Murray's grounder, his 62nd RBI.

Oakland A's third baseman Carney Lansford loses the ball as Texas Ranger DH George Wright tries to keep his foot on the base. The Rangers lost 5-1 to the A's, however.

Former M-Cubs sparkle

Owen, Martinez have winning blows

From Wire Reports

CHICAGO — Former Midland Cub Dave Owen hit a pinch-single with the bases loaded and none out in the 11th inning to give the Chicago Cubs and Ryne Sandberg, who had five hits, including two game-tying home runs, and seven RBI, a wild 12-11 triumph Saturday over the St. Louis Cardinals and Willie McGee, who hit for the cycle and drove in six runs.

Sandberg had tied the game 9-9 with a leadoff homer in the ninth off reliever Bruce Sutter and tied it again 11-11 with a two-out, two-run homer in the 10th off Sutter.

In the 11th, Leon Durham drew a walk off Dave Rucker, 1-1, the fourth St. Louis pitcher. Jeff Lahti, then replaced Rucker and Durham stole second and went to third on catcher Darrell Porter's throwing error. The Cardinals walked the next two batters before Owen delivered his single.

Lee Smith, 4-4, the seventh Cubs pitcher, was the winner.

McGee had a bases-loaded triple in the second, a single in the fourth and a two-run homer in the sixth. He then cracked an RBI double in the 10th that sent St. Louis ahead and made him the first Cardinal to hit for the cycle since Lou Brock did it in San Diego in 1975.

McGee and Sandberg each had six at-bats.

Ozzie Smith, who scored four runs, opened the 10th with a single and stole second before McGee doubled off Smith. McGee went to third on an infield out and scored on a groundout by Steve Braun as St. Louis took an 11-9 lead.

But the Cubs rallied in the bottom of the 10th when Sutter walked Bob Dernier with two outs and Sandberg followed with his ninth home run of the season.

McGee keyed a six-run second with his triple and hit his second homer in the sixth after Ozzie Smith beat out a bunt single to help the Cardinals take a 9-3 lead.

Dernier belted a two-run double and Sandberg delivered a two-run single that highlighted Chicago's five-run rally in the bottom of the sixth that pulled the Cubs within 9-8.

George Hendrick's single sent the Cardinals ahead 1-0 in the first inning and St. Louis rookie pitcher Ralph Citarella, making his first major-league start, had a run-scoring infield single to spark the six-run second.

Sandberg singled home a run in the first and Chicago scored twice in the fifth on Sandberg's RBI groundout and a double by Gary Matthews.

Padres 5, Reds 2

CINCINNATI — Alan Wiggins singled home a pair of runs and former Midland Cub Carmelo Martinez slammed a home run to pace the San Diego Padres to a 5-2 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

The victory enabled to Padres to open a 2½-game lead over second-place Atlanta in the National League West.

Winner Mark Thurmond, 4-3, allowed just four hits and one unearned run before giving way to Rich Gossage in the ninth. Gossage allowed a run on Duane Walker's triple and Dave Concepcion's single.

Cincinnati's Charlie Puleo, 0-1, making his second start since his recall from the minors, fueled San Diego's three-run second inning with his wildness. Puleo walked Terry Kennedy to start the inning, then issued a one-out walk to Martinez. Garry Templeton singled Kennedy home and Thurmond's grounder put both runners in scoring position. Wiggins' ground single to right made it 3-0.

Dann Bilardello reached first on an infield single in the bottom of the third, reached third on Puleo's sacrifice and Eddie Milner's groundout and scored on Wiggins' fielding error at second base.

Martinez hit a solo homer off Bob Owchinko in the sixth, his eighth of the season, for a 4-1 lead.

San Diego added a run in the seventh on a walk to Wiggins, Tony Gwynn's single and Steve Garvey's sacrifice fly off Ted Power.

Cincinnati's Dave Parker was ejected in the sixth inning. Parker became upset over an inside pitch from Thurmond and later tossed his batting helmet halfway to the mound while running out a grounder.

Giants 7, Astros 5

HOUSTON — Al Oliver keyed San Francisco's offense with a 3-for-4 performance to lead the Giants to a 7-5 victory over the Houston Astros.

An infield single by Johnnie LeMaster and Oliver's double opened the game for the Giants and Chili Davis' grounder scored LeMaster.

The Giants made it 3-0 on two unearned runs off loser Vern Ruhle, 1-5, in the second inning. A throwing error by first baseman Enos Cabell put Scot Thompson on first base. Bob Brenly's single and Duane Kuiper's bunt scored Thompson and a single by starting pitcher Mark Davis drove in Brenly.

Houston's Bill Doran singled home two runs in the third to slice the lead to 3-2.

But the Giants scored three times in the fifth after walks to Mark Davis and LeMaster. Oliver singled Davis home. After Bill Dawley relieved Ruhle, Chili Davis's grounded out, but LeMaster scored on Jeff Leonard's sacrifice fly and Thompson singled home the final run of the inning. LeMaster drove in San Francisco's final run with a sacrifice fly in the ninth.

Frank Williams, 5-0, pitched 2 2-3 innings of relief to earn the victory, while Greg Minton hurled the final two innings for his sixth save.

The Astros narrowed it to 6-4 with single runs in the fifth and sixth innings. Doran doubled in the fifth and eventually scored on a wild pitch and Kevin Bass singled in the and scored on Alan Ashby's double.

Houston scored its final run in the ninth on Cabell's RBI grounder.

Dodgers 10, Braves 2

ATLANTA — Bill Russell lined a three-run double to break a sixth-inning tie and spark the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 10-2 victory over the Atlanta Braves.

With the score tied 2-2, the Dodgers started their sixth-inning outburst with two outs when Mike Marshall and Mike Scioscia singled off Pascual Perez, 7-2. Greg Brock then drew a walk to load the bases before Russell lashed his double that landed just inside the foul line in the left-field corner.

Russell delivered an RBI single, his third hit of the game, and Candy Maldonado added a two-run double to account for three more runs in the eighth off reliever Donnie Moore. The Dodgers scored twice in the ninth off Gene Garber on a run-scoring double by Scioscia and an RBI single by Brock.

The victory, before a second straight sellout crowd of 46,036, was Los Angeles' fifth straight over the Braves in six meetings this season.

Winner Fernando Valenzuela, 7-8, retired the first 12 batters he faced and struck out eight of the first 10. Dale Murphy doubled to start the Atlanta fifth and scored on a single by Ken Oberkfell, who later scored when second baseman Steve Sax booted Perez's grounder.

Valenzuela allowed four hits and finished with eight strikeouts before leaving in the seventh after walking the leadoff batter. Orel Hershiser worked the final three innings and gained his second save.

The Dodgers took a 2-0 lead in the third on Brock's eighth homer of the season and an RBI double by Franklin Stubbs that followed Russell's single.

Mets 2, Expos 0

NEW YORK — Bruce Berenyi and Doug Sisk combined on a three-hitter, leading the New York Mets to a 2-0 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Berenyi, 4-8, making his second start for the Mets since being obtained from the Cincinnati Reds on June 15, pitched seven innings, allowing all three hits. Sisk, in registering his 10th save, hurled hitless ball over the final two innings to lower his earned run average to 0.55 in 48 2-3 innings this season as he saved his fourth game in his last four appearances.

Charlie Lea, 11-4, yielded both runs on five hits, while striking out seven and walking one before being lifted for a pinch hitter in the eighth. Lea had won seven of his last eight starts.

The Mets took a 1-0 lead in the first inning on a two-out double to right by Darryl Strawberry that scored Wally Backman, who singled to open the inning. Danny Heep hit his first home run of the season with one out in the seventh inning.

Phillies 7, Pirates 5

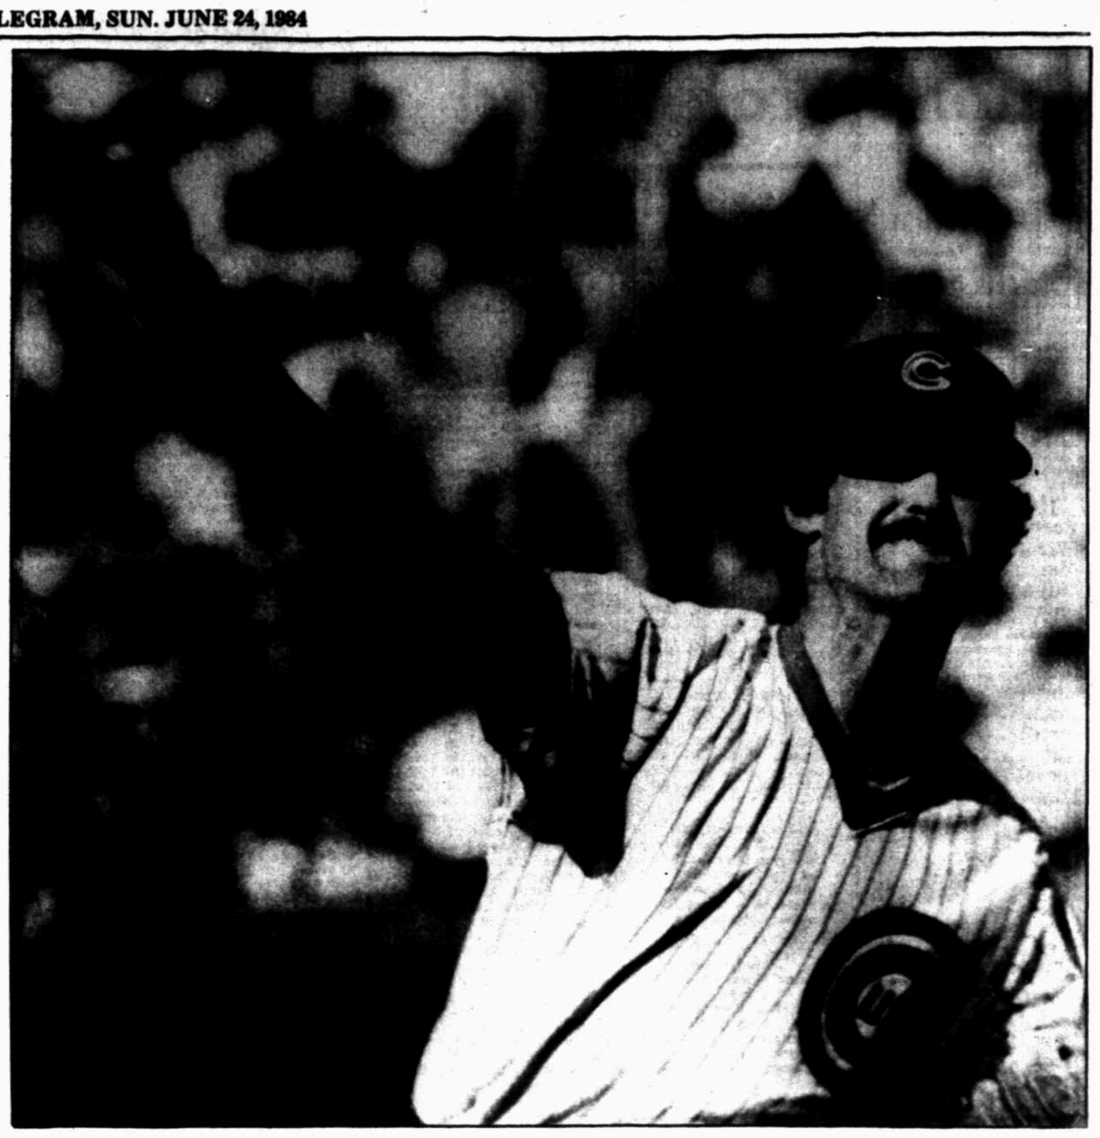

PITTSBURGH — Glenn Wilson and Sixto Lezcano homered to back the strong pitching of Jerry Koosman as the Philadelphia Phillies ended a four-game losing streak by beating the Pittsburgh Pirates 7-5.

The victory kept the Phillies one game behind the New York Mets in the National League East while snapping the Pirates' four-game winning streak.

Koosman, 8-6 after winning his fourth consecutive decision, survived a shaky start in which he allowed six hits in the first two innings. He then retired 16 of the next 17 batters he faced and didn't give up another hit until the eighth.

Lee Lacy singled home the first of two Pittsburgh runs in that inning before Al Holland came on with two runners on base and no one out. He allowed an RBI double to Tony Pena before retiring the side and was tagged for a two-run homer by Lacy in the ninth.

National League

Newly acquired George Frazier pitched two innings of scoreless relief Saturday in Chicago's 12-11 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals. Frazier joined the Cubs from Cleveland.

Doby paces AL stars with two homers

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Former Cleveland Indian star Lary Doby slammed a pair of solo home runs to pace the American League Old-Timers to a 6-1 victory over the National League Old-Timers Saturday.

Doby hit 253 home runs in his career during the late 1940s and 1950s.

Doby homered in the second inning off Hall of Famer and Buffalo native Warren Spahn to give the American League a 2-1 lead. In the third, Doby hit his second homer to right field off Johnny Sain, capping a four-run outburst that gave the American League a 6-1 advantage.

Brooks Robinson, former Baltimore Orioles third baseman, hit a three-run homer during the four-run third, also off Sain, and showed some of his old brilliance at the hot corner with a backhanded play in the top of the third on a grounder by Ernie Banks.

The American League used six different pitchers with ex-New York Yankee Whitey Ford notching the victory. Spahn, a former Milwaukee Braves star and the winningest left-handed pitcher in the majors with 363 victories, hurled the first two innings for the National League and took the loss.

With the victory, the American League tied the seven-game series at one game each.

The game was played before a crowd of 26,434.

Judy Johnson missed money

DOVER, Del. (AP) — William Julius "Judy" Johnson was a heck of a third baseman in his heyday in the old Negro leagues. His only regret is that he "never had a chance to make that big money."

"I often think about that," Johnson said. "God give us all a talent, and if we use it properly, we'll be successful. We never had that chance and that was the thing that hurt. I feel it a lot more in my declining years than I did earlier. But that's life and you have to cope with it."

The 84-year-old Johnson, who lives with his wife, Anita, in Marshallton, a suburb south of Wilmington, is in declining health. He said he's been suffering from a bad case of shingles since December.

But he still plans to attend the first Judy Johnson Sports and Scholarship banquet Sunday in Wilmington.

The event is being organized by W. Thomas Braxton, a postal service employee from the Wilmington area who said a scholarship will be awarded to a graduating minority high school student planning to attend college and play baseball. The student must also need the scholarship, he said.

"It was my idea because traditionally, minority students tend to get track and basketball scholarships, but not baseball scholarships," Braxton said. "Judy Johnson is concerned with children. He's lending his name to the banquet and the scholarship will be given in his name."

Johnson was born in Snow Hill, Md., and raised in Wilmington, where he played ball on neighborhood playgrounds. He also played every Saturday in Chester, Pa., for the Chester Giants. When he joined the semi-pro Bachrach Giants in Atlantic City, N.J., he was paid $5 a game.

In 1975, Johnson became the sixth member of the Negro leagues to be inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y.

Edwin Rosario remains unbeaten with split decision

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Edwin Rosario of Puerto Rico, gained a split decision over Howard Davis Jr. Saturday to retain his World Boxing Council lightweight title and remain undefeated.

The 21-year-old champion hit the challenger from Glen Cove, N.Y. with a stinging left hook with about 15 seconds remaining in the fight to put Davis on the canvas. It was a blow that decided the fight.

Referee Mike Jacobs of London, gave Davis a mandatory eight-count and it looked like Rosario would move in for a knockout. But the bell ended the 12-round fight.

In the final scoring, Sidney Nathan of London and Angel Tovar of Mexico gave the fight to the champion by a count of 115-114 and 117-113, respectively. Jose Juan Guerro of Mexico, had Davis ahead by a 114-113 score.

The stunning finish of the fight was the second time Rosario was able to knock Davis, a gold medalist in the 1976 Olympics, down. The first time came in the second round, when Rosario unleashed a left hook, similar to the one that decked Davis in the final round, that put the 28-year-old down. But the Puerto Rican was unable to do much more with the challenger, ranked No. 2 in the lightweight division coming into the fight.

Rosario seemed content to box with Davis during the middle rounds, trying to be aggressive with right-and left-hand combinations at the beginning and end of those rounds. He apparently was attempting to stay away from the long arms of Davis.

Navratilova wins again

EASTBOURNE, England (AP) — Forty-eight hours before the start of Wimbledon, Grand Slam champion Martina Navratilova claimed her third straight Eastbourne grass court tennis title Saturday with a commanding 6-4, 6-1 victory over fourth-seeded Kathy Jordan.

Jordan, who ousted second-seeded Chris Evert Lloyd in straight sets in Friday's semifinals, went into the match apparently full of confidence but suffered a setback when Navratilova broke her service in the first game.

The 27-year-old Czechoslovakia-born American never looked back.

It was a sharp contrast with Friday's semifinals, in which Navratilova was extended to three sets by West Germany's Claudia Kohde.

"I felt a lot more confident today," Navratilova said. "But then I always do when I'm in a final. Getting there is usually more of a problem because it is always on your mind. But in a final I'm always more relaxed."

The service break clearly rattled Jordan, and there was no repeat of the precise serve-and-volley game that ousted Lloyd.

The 24-year-old from King of Prussia, Pa., wasn't helped by Navratilova's pinpoint serving.

In the first set, Navratilova conceded just four points in five service games. Three of those came in the 10th game, which she closed out on the first advantage point with a winning forehand volley to take the set in 39 minutes.

"I really could do very little," said Jordan. "Even when I was putting in good serves, Martina was hitting me with some incredible passing shots. She had a go at everything I did and made it very difficult for me.

"I was upset at losing the very first game of the match, because I think I hit three very good serves, which she somehow got winners from."

Navratilova kept the pressure on at the start of the second set when she broke Jordan's serve to 15 and held her own to love to go 2-0. She quickly reeled off another three games before inexplicably dropping her serve at 5-0.

But Navratilova quickly recovered her form to end the contest on her second match point when Jordan charged in and hit a smash straight at the net.

Navratilova earned $28,000 for her victory, while Jordan had to be content with $14,000.

Later, in the doubles finals of this $175,000 event, Navratilova and partner Pam Shriver ousted Britain's Jo Durie and Ann Kiyomura 6-4, 6-2 to win the $11,000 top prize. The runners-up get $5,500.

The singles victory was Navratilova's 31st in a row since losing to Hana Mandlikova in Oakland in January and her sixth tournament title.

With the All England Lawn Tennis championships due to start Monday at Wimbledon, Navratilova was asked how she was approaching the tournament.

"Having won the Grand Slam, everybody keeps asking me if I'm thinking about the next one," she said. "That's a pretty tall order. My next goal is to win at Wimbledon, and obviously that feels much more realistic."

Jordan, asked about her chances at Wimbledon, replied, "I think I'm playing well and must have a good chance there. However, if Martina plays the way she did today, she will win the title.

"Nobody else can play that way. But if she has an off day, I think Pam Shriver, Hana Mandlikova and myself could have a good chance against her."

Holman, Roth spare way to bowling title

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — After dominating the field all week with high scores in the $125,000 Showboat Professional Bowlers Association Doubles Classic, Marshall Holman and Mark Roth spared their way to the title Saturday.

Top-seeded Holman and Roth defeated challengers Ted Hannahs and Dave Husted 169-160 in a finale that featured just four strikes — three of them by Husted and Hannahs.

To reach the title game, Hannahs and Husted worked their way past Mark Baker-Joe Berardi, 241-207; Jim Miller-Don Genalo, 235-182; and Steve Fehr-Steve Martin, 202-175.

It was the 30th title for Roth, of Spring Lake Heights, N.J., and No. 17 for Holman, who had not won a game in three previous appearances on the televised finals.

It also was the third doubles title for the powerful duo, who also won in 1977 and 1979.

"You want to win so much, it really doesn't matter how it comes about," said Holman, who averaged 216 for the week. "It feels more gratifying, certainly, to roll a big game and win. But they pay the same amount of money whether you bowl good and win or you get lucky and win."

In the doubles format, each player bowled every other frame. Bowling on the left lane, Roth, who had the high average of the week with 218, had one strike, one open and three spares. Holman, on the right, spared four times before leaving the 8-10 split in the 10th.

By then, however, all he wanted to do was knock down enough pins to win the title.

Hannahs and Husted, who finished first, had the three strikes, but combined for three open frames.

For their victory, Roth and Holman split the $25,000 first prize.

Lewis has words for Mrs. Nature

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Carl Lewis doesn't have any complaints about the track at the Los Angeles Coliseum, but he would like to have a few words with Mother Nature.

"I think the facility is pretty good," Lewis said of the site for the Olympics track and field competition. "I've turned in some good performances. But the problem is not the track, it's Mother Nature — whether the wind stays settled down.

"The wind was tricky throughout the meet for everybody, not just myself in the long jump and sprints," Lewis said as he relaxed after five days of competition in the U.S. Track and Field Trials.

The polyurethene-and-rubber track, built last year, was criticized at first by some athletes competing in the U.S.-East German meet as being too soft. But it has drawn generally favorable comments from competitors at the U.S. Track and Field Trials this week.

"The track is fine," said Edwin Moses, the world record-holder in the 400-meter hurdles. "Next to Indianapolis it is the second-best track around. The radius of the turns is set up very well.

"The track is a lot faster than it was last year," he added. "I think it is in very good shape."

But sprinter Calvin Smith, the world record holder in the 100 meters, said, "It doesn't give up back what you put into it."

And sprinter Ron Brown said, "It's nothing special."

Javelin throwers said they liked the track's runway.

"Awesome, really fast — just like I want it," said Karin Smith, the winner of the women's javelin.

"This runway is probably the best I've ever thrown off, anywhere," said Tom Petranoff, the world record-holder in the men's javelin. But Petranoff has had his problems with the swirling winds at the Coliseum.

Last year, he said, "when I started down the runway there was a tailwind, (but) when I started my drawback it was a slight headwind."

Frank Greenberg, a meet official, said, "For the East Germans, it (the track) was soft and slow but we were assured it would be fast (now) and it is. They have removed a certain level of gravel and they have swept the straightaways and turns.

"The athletes have told me that they (maintenance people) took extra care to make it smooth. I haven't heard one bad comment about the track.

"It will be faster during the Olympics."

NBA names Layden as top team executive

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah (AP) — Frank Layden, who earlier was selected as the National Basketball Association's Coach of the Year after directing the Utah Jazz to its finest season in a decade of existence, on Saturday was named the league's Executive of the Year.

The announcement was made here at the league's annual meetings and during a luncheon where the jovial Layden was the object of a roast by his NBA peers.

Layden, who also is the Jazz general manager, received 31 votes from a 76-member panel of sports writers and broadcasters who regularly cover the NBA.

The runner-up was Norm Sonju, the Dallas Mavericks' general manager, with 14½ votes. Boston Celtics President-General Manager Red Auerbach and Detroit Pistons General Manager Jack McCloskey tied for third with eight votes apiece.

Seven other team executives received one vote each.

Layden, 52, guided Utah to a 45-37 record and the Midwest Division championship this past season. The Jazz also advanced into the playoffs for the first time, losing to Phoenix in the Western Conference semifinals.

Layden assumed the dual role of coach and general manager in December, 1981, replacing Tom Nissalke. Utah finished 25-57 that season.

The Jazz wound up 30-52 a year ago, despite losing high scoring Adrian Dantley and John Drew to an injury and a drug problem, respectively, for most of the season.

Some of the Layden moves that gave Utah its finest season ever in 1983-84 included the acquisition of Dantley in 1979, the signing of All-Star guard Rickey Green three seasons ago when he playing in the Continental Basketball Association, and the drafting of such pivotal players in Utah's success as center Mark Eaton, guard Darrell Griffith and Thurl Bailey.

Layden came to Utah as general manager from Atlanta in 1979, when the Jazz moved from New Orleans to Salt Lake City. Before then, Layden served three seasons as an assistance coach with the Atlanta Hawks, and prior to that, eight seasons as head coach of Niagara University.

NFL rookie draft picks get taste of owner hardball

By JERRY MAGEE
Copley News Service

They're playing hardball in the National Football League, and the dollar signs that may have been dancing through the fancies of many rookie draft choices have turned into the reality of empty pockets.

With training camps opening in three weeks, a study shows that of the 336 athletes selected in the NFL's May 1 draft, only 120 have signed.

Atlanta, Detroit, the Los Angeles Rams, the Los Angeles Raiders and San Diego have not announced a single signing. Houston and Miami have detailed reaching agreements with one player each — and the Oilers made their acquisition (Nebraska offensive lineman Dean Steinkuhler) BEFORE the draft.

ONLY THE two New York clubs, Chicago, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Green Bay, New England, Philadelphia and San Francisco have announced signing draft choices in appreciable numbers. Other clubs wait. And signings occur only in a trickle.

"The whole process almost has come to a halt," an agent complained. "Nothing is being done. At least six or seven teams are taking a hard line."

Clearly, the NFL does not feel the United States Football League is going to sweep away many more prospects than it already has. Most NFL teams are holding to a hard salary line in the belief that draft choices have no alternative but to join football's senior league.

The San Diego Chargers apparently are in no hurry to sign Texas defensive back Mossy Cade, their first-round pick, and the players they drafted behind him.

Invited to assess the progress of the Chargers' negotiations with prospective rookies, team President Eugene V. Klein answered, "Medium rare." When asked what that meant, Klein laughed and admitted, "I don't know." He did not sound concerned. "It's life in the big city," he said.

Klein apparently is not alarmed by a threat by agent Perry Deering of Dallas to give USFL teams an opportunity to sign Cade and defensive back Leonard Coleman of Vanderbilt as a package. Deering also represents Coleman, a first-round choice of Baltimore.

DEERING SAID he and the Colts are far apart in negotiations. With the Chargers, he is closer, but Deering said the Chargers wish to pay Cade largely on a deferred basis and Deering is resisting.

The solution, as Deering sees it, is to find a USFL team "that has defensive woes and has the change to invest $5 million" in the two players. "In my opinion, if you get a good set of cornerbacks, it will go a long way toward setting up your defense," Deering argued.

Agents who have waited for the market to be established have found that there is no market for their clients, at least not one of the sort the agents would prefer. "The NFL has time on its side," one agent said, "and it's using it. Players considering signing with the USFL this late in its season know there isn't going to be any football for them until March, and that scares them. These kids aren't accustomed to going that long without playing."

The NFL teams that have waited are likely to sign players cheaper than those teams that acted more aggressively.

THE NEW England Patriots, for example, awarded Nebraska receiver Irving Fryar a four-year deal valued at $2.65 million. The first player named in the draft, Fryar won a $1 million signing bonus, and he is to receive a $400,000 bonus for reporting. Every cent of his bonus, though, is deferred between 1989-99.

Steinkuhler's Houston package comes to $2.8 million, also for four years. His bonuses total $1.8 million, of which $1.697 million is deferred between 1990-97.

When he signed with Chicago, again for four years, linebacker Wilber Marshall of Florida received a $1.6 million bonus, a $200,000 interest-free loan and salaries totaling $1 million.

PITTSBURGH presented receiver Louis Lipps of Mississippi Southern, the 23rd player named in the first round, a $625,000 signing bonus, with $400,000 deferred. The Steelers' first-round selection in 1983, defensive lineman Gabe Rivera, received only a $400,000 bonus.

Those actions, though, were weeks ago. To now, signing announcements have been made concerning only 12 first-round choices and 10 second-round picks. There are 28 teams. The most active have been the Giants, who have reached agreements with 10 of their 15 selections (but not first-rounder Carl Banks, a linebacker from Michigan State); the Jets, who have secured all but three of 15 players; the Broncos, who have signed eight of 14 choices; the 49ers, with seven of 17 prospects under contract; and the Browns, who have signed their first seven picks and a total of eight of 10.

Hank Bullough fires Mauler assistants

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Hank Bullough took his first official step as head coach of the Pittsburgh Maulers Saturday by firing the entire assistant coaching staff, less than 24 hours after the United States Football League team finished its first season 3-15.

"I want to be able to bring coaches in that I am familiar with and that I feel will do the best job," said Bullough, 50, who was appointed head coach May 23 for the 1985 season.

"It's not that I feel the other coaches wouldn't; it's just part of the profession," he said.

Ellis Rainsberger, appointed interim head coach April 29, continued calling the plays until the season wound down, finishing with a 1-7 record. Formerly an assistant coach who took the place of fired Coach Joe Pendry, Rainsberger is among the seven assistant coaches Bullough dismissed.

Maulers publicist Bill Keenist said Bullough met with the seven individually Saturday to break the news.

Bullough was an assistant coach last season for the Green Bay Packers of the National Football League and previously held assistant coaching jobs with the Cincinnati Bengals, New England Patriots and Baltimore Colts.

Rainsberger, 50, spent five years as offensive coordinator for the Winnipeg Blue Bombers of the Canadian Football League before becoming offensive backfield coach for the Denver Gold of the USFL last season.

Also dismissed are Joe Haering, defensive coordinator and linebackers coach; Frank Lauterbur, defensive line coach; Dick Moseley, defensive backfield coach; Bruce DeHaven, special teams coach; Joe Hatcher, receiver coach; and Bill McConnell, backfield coach.

Hatcher had been assistant coach for five years at Kansas State, while McConnell was defensive secondary coach for four seasons at West Virginia University. Lauterbur had coached for 11 seasons in the NFL, most recently as defensive line coach for the Seattle Seahawks in 1982.

Businessman wins $17 million suit

CHICAGO (AP) — Milwaukee businessman Marvin Fishman has won a more than $17 million federal settlement against the owners of the Chicago Bulls, but he says he'll fight another 20 years if the owners decide to drag the court battle out with appeals.

"If God gives me the strength, I can go another 20 years on this," Fishman said in a telephone interview Saturday. "There's no way I would back down on this lawsuit. No way. I can't make this strong enough."

Fishman has waged a 10-year court battle to win control of the Chicago Bulls.

U.S. District Judge Stanley Roszkowski on Friday awarded the judgment to Fishman, 58, who alleged in a lawsuit that a group of local businessmen headed by the late Arthur Wirtz blocked his efforts to purchase the team in 1972 for $3.3 million.

"In our opinion, we feel — and so does the judge — that we've been wronged. People shouldn't have done this to me. We have to right the wrong," Fishman said.

But the judge denied a request from the Milwaukee real estate developer that the National Basketball Association franchise be turned over to him and his associates.

The judge left the way open for Fishman to buy the franchise by saying that the franchise owners might not be able to afford the more than $17 million. In that case, the judge said, he would be willing to help appoint a neutral mediator to negotiate the sale.

Fishman said he was pleased with the decision.

"I'm satisfied that we won," he said. "It's taken this long — 10 years. I'm happy that it's over."

He declined comment on whether he still wanted to buy the Bulls.

A secretary at Wirtz Corp., who would identify herself only as Ms. Mullin said William Wirtz, who took over as head of the group of Bulls' owners after his father's death in 1983, was out of the office Friday and unavailable for comment on the decision.

In the liability portion of the case, Roszkowski ruled in October 1981 that the Wirtz group, Chicago Professional Sports Inc., had engaged in eight of the nine antitrust violations alleged in Fishman's suit.

Attorney Don Harris, who represented the Wirtz group, said that finding will be the basis for an appeal.

But Fishman said he would fight any appeal.

The judgment Friday awarded Fishman $12.5 million for the anti-trust violations; $4.5 million in punitive damages, and attorneys fees that have yet to be determined.

An expert witness testifying for the plaintiff set the value of the club in 1982 at $15 million.

Fishman, who helped found the NBA's Milwaukee Bucks, filed the lawsuit in 1974, two years after his group, Illinois Basketball Inc., reached agreement with then owner Elmer Rich Jr., to purchase the Bulls for $3.3 million, plus the assumption of $1 million in liabilities.

But Fishman said that when he attempted to negotiate a lease that would allow the team to continue playing in Chicago Stadium, Arthur Wirtz, who owned the stadium, refused to meet with him.

Fishman made other arrangements, but his bid for the Bulls subsequently was rejected by the NBA because the facility was deemed unsuitable.

Wirtz' group bought the team shortly afterward.

Kriek outlasts Teacher in Wimbledon warmup

BRISTOL, England (AP) — Defending champion Johan Kriek outlasted Brian Teacher 6-7, 7-6, 6-4 Saturday to win the $100,000 West of England tennis tournament and complete his warmup for next week's Wimbledon championships.

It took the South African-born naturalized American 2 hours and 2 minutes to beat the 29-year-old from Los Angeles.

Kriek, 26, pronounced himself "happy and completely mentally attuned" in his preparations for the All-England Lawn Tennis tournament, which begins Monday. "I was a bit apprehensive at the beginning of the week. But my form has gotten better and today's tough match was just the sort of preparation I wanted."

The two fought a close first set and Teacher won the tiebreaker after Kriek had asked the umpire to tell a spectator to extinguish a cigar, whose smoke was wafting across court.

"I am totally against smoking," Kriek explained. "I hate it, and I go crazy when I see it. The smell of this cigar was making me feel sick."

In the second set, Teacher came back from 2-5 to tie at 5-5, saving four set points along the way. But Kriek won the first three rallies of the tiebreaker and took it going away.

In the final set Kriek was 5-1 up but again Teacher rallied to take three games in a row. In the 10th game, Kriek hammered two aces and two service winners to take the game to love and keep his crown.

After the match, Kriek said he saw "no reason at all why I should not make the top 10 and stay there."

With his world ranking hovering now between 14 and 18, he said, "I only have to produce perhaps another four victories in a year — not an impossible task when you are playing well."

In major recent tournaments, Kriek has found it difficult to get past the quarterfinals, when he has run up against John McEnroe or Ivan Lendl, "and they always go on and win the tournament," he said.

At Wimbledon, where Kriek is seeded 12th, if the early rounds go according to the seedings, the draw would pit him against Jimmy Connors in the quarterfinals.

Peterson wins ovation despite elimination

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After working with handicapped kids "that have to hop to run 50 meters," decathlete Orville Peterson said the least he could do was finish what he started.

"I didn't want to be known as a dropout," said Peterson, who lost a bid to make U.S. Olympic team Friday night but won a standing ovation for running his 1,500-meter finale despite a painful leg injury.

Limping so badly that he was overtaken early his second lap, Peterson, finished dead last in the 13-man heat, his time (9 minutes, 44.80 seconds) so slow that he received zero points for the effort.

That left him with a final total of 7,124 points in the gruelling two-day event, dropping him to 32nd in the 35-man field. John Crist of Atlanta, winner of the heat in 4:28.95, won the event with a score of 8,102.

Tim Bright of Santa Cruz, Calif., was second at 8,098 and Jim Wooding of Coatesville, Pa., finished third with 8,072 points.

Earlier this month, Peterson, from Vero Beach, Fla., amassed 8,015 points, the third-best total by an American this year.

But a hamstring strain in the first event of day, the 110-meter hurdles, crippled the chances for the 23-year-old from Campbell (N.C.) University.

It got worse in the discus and pole vault, but Peterson said nothing to the team trainer until the javelin competition, when the leg started "aching real bad. I didn't say anything because I was afraid they might make me withdraw.

"I had worked too hard to quit," he said after the race, as competitors and coaches expressed their admiration.

Earlier, when the seriousness of the injury was apparent, veteran decathlete Fred Dixon, who was making his final appearance in the event, offered Peterson some personal advice.

"Fred said, 'Finish it if you can. You'll feel good about yourself."

Peterson said he never seriously considered withdrawing.

"I owed a lot more to others than I did to myself," said Peterson, whose father is a minister in Gifford, Fla., "A lot of people prayed for me and believe in me . . . little people who could hardly help themselves.

After running his first lap in 1:24, Peterson's pace slowed to a painful crawl. Visibly struggling on his heavily-bandaged left left, he needed almost three minutes for the final lap.

But as he toured the brick-red oval, applause from the Coliseum crowd grew with each lonely lap.

"Yes, I heard it. At first it hurt me. Then I got emotional. I realized it meant that somebody cared," said Peterson, a minister's son.

In the background the theme song from "Chariots of Fire" played over the public address system. The track announcer, caught up with emotion, lauded Peterson for his courage, and recited an inspirational poem as he struggled toward the finish line.

Later, Peterson said he is more dedicated than ever to continue his Olympic pursuit.

"I'll be healed in a couple days and get back into training. I'll be back."

Black USFL coaches get same song

By AUSTIN WILSON
AP Sports Writer

NEW ORLEANS — For the ambitious black football coach, the United States Football League is the same song, second verse — generally one black man per staff, none of them head coaches, none of them in the key coordinator positions.

The USFL winds up its second regular season this weekend.

In the established National Football League, Pittsburgh has named Tony Dungy its defensive coordinator for the upcoming season, and Lionel Taylor, now head coach at Texas Southern, was offensive coordinator with the Los Angeles Rams under Ray Malavasi — two notable exceptions to the pattern.

Coordinators — with broad responsibilities for game plans and strategies and frequently for some administrative duties as well — are considered the most likely to move up to head coaching jobs when they come open.

"I don't think the black coaches who want the pro jobs are making enough waves about it whenever a job is open," said Eddie Robinson of Grambling State, the winningest active college coach and the only black man known to have been offered a head coaching job in the pros.

"They should apply for the jobs and make them (owners) tell them no," he said in a telephone interview from his office.

However, he said, the late Carroll Rosenbloom contacted him about the job at Los Angeles. He didn't apply, he said.

Dungy and Greg Blache, an assistant with the USFL Jacksonville Bulls, said in separate telephone interviews that applications are a waste of time.

"I've always felt that nobody up here (professional football leagues) gets a job he's applied for," Dungy said. "The owner has two or three guys in mind, and he's going to pick somebody he knows and respects or somebody who's been recommended to him by somebody he knows."

"When a guy hires, he knows who he's going after," Blache said. "I don't believe I've ever applied for a job in my life."

A couple of teams in both leagues have more than one black assistant. One or two have none. Most have one.

Blache said he sees an element of "tokenism" in that.

"It's there, and I do resent it," he said. "At the same time, I'm cocky enough to feel I was hired because I'm a good coach."

"I'm a good football coach who happens to be black," he said. "I've told people in the past that if they just want somebody to come in and babysit the black players, find somebody else."

He said he believes he was passed over for a defensive coordinator's job in college because the head coach was afraid to give that much responsibility to a black man. There are no black head coaches in professional football for the same reason, he said.

"It's not so much consciously as saying, 'Hey, we can't do that,'" he said. "'If we bomb with a white coach, it's a little mistake. If we bomb with a black guy, we're on the spot.'"

Dungy said the same "old boy network" that has limited opportunities for blacks in the past was the thing that got him the defensive coordinator's job at Pittsburgh when it opened up.

"Coaches like to hire and promote the people they know," he said. "That's really what happened in my case."

He was on Coach Chuck Noll's staff when the position opened up, and Noll promoted the man he knew and trusted, he said.

It's just a matter of time — probably quite a lot of time — before a black man is named a head coach, he said.

"I feel that somewhere down the line, if the position opened up, Dan Rooney would hire me or Chuck Noll would recommend me," he said.

Still, he said, "I think having a black head coach is a ways off."

Tank Younger, assistant general manager with the NFL's San Diego Chargers, said by telephone from his office that it's going to take more than just waiting for that day, though.

Younger's signing out of Grambling in 1949 brought professional scouts to the predominantly black colleges that had previously been ignored. In 1975, Younger was named to his front-office job, the highest front-office position attained by a black man in professional football.

"I think some owner is going to have to make a move, make a decision to hire a black coach," he said.

"I was the first black assistant general manager in the league. Mr. (Gene) Klein, I've been told, was looking for a guy to be assistant general manager.

"In reviewing everybody's background who was in the league, experienced in the league, my name kept cropping up. He made a decision that black, blue, green or white, I want Tank Younger as my assistant general manager.

"Someone is going to have to do the same thing when he's looking for a head coach. He's going to have to make the big decision and hire him, and — if he doesn't make it — do the same thing that happens to any other guy."

Tom Kite charges into Atlanta lead

ATLANTA (AP) — Tom Kite, holding a one-shot lead going into today's final round of the $400,000 Georgia-Pacific Atlanta Classic, has a goal in sight.

"I've never won two tournaments in a year. That's one of my major goals for the year," said Kite, who collected the sixth PGA Tour title of his career in Florida three months ago.

That victory set the steady little man off on another of his streaks of extremely strong play and consistently high finishes. Since then, he's been ninth or better in seven of 10 starts.

"I've been playing very well. I feel like I've been playing very solidly.

"It's nice to come back with a good, strong tournament after a very disappointing week," said Kite, who missed the cut last week in the U.S. Open.

HE ALSO had a major disappointment in the Masters—where he was in title contention until he hit into the water on the 12th hole of the final round—but came back with a runner-up performance the following week.

"I'd just like to finish one place higher than that," he said Saturday after a no-bogey, 6-under-par 66 had given him the third round lead in this event. He finished three trips over the 7,018 yard Atlanta Country Club course in 202, 14 under par.

Don Pooley, twice a runner-up in this tournament, held second going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize. He was at 203 after a third round 67.

Pooley, playing in the same group with Kite, had a 2-shot lead after he scored four consecutive birdies beginning on the 11th hole, but lost three shots to Kite on the next two.

He regained a share of the lead with a 10-foot birdie putt on the 17th, but could not match Kite's birdie-4 on the water-guarded final hole.

Tommy Valentine, the hometown boy who held the second-round lead, had to work hard to salvage a round of par 72 and drifted back to third at 205.

Scott Simpson, a winner at Westchester two weeks ago, vaulted over 53 players with his brilliant 63 that left him at 206.

Simpson, whose 36-hole total of 143 was the figure necessary to qualify for the final two rounds, played with the new U.S. Open champion, Fuzzy Zoeller, in the first group off the tee.

Arnie's hot 67 catches seniors

CLEVELAND (AP) — Arnold Palmer shot a 5-under-par 67 Saturday and took a one-stroke lead over Peter Thomson after three rounds of the Senior Tournament Players Championship at Canterbury Golf Club.

Palmer's outstanding round gave him a 9-under-par 207 total on the par 72, 6,615-yard course, with the final round to be played Sunday. The $250,000 tournament is the 10th of 26 Professional Golfers Association senior events this season.

PGA members must be at least 50 years old to compete.

Palmer, 54, birdied the second, fifth, sixth, 12th and 13th holes and made no bogeys. He is trying to win his 68th PGA tournament, including his seventh senior tour event.

Palmer shot a par 72 and a 68 in the first two rounds.

Thomson, a 54-year-old Australian, played a round much like Palmer's.

Thomson cashed in birdies on the second, sixth, ninth, 11th and 13th holes, and also suffered no bogeys.

Thomson, who played the PGA tour only in the 1950s and then only part-time, is shooting for his first senior championship.

Defending champion Miller Barber stormed into contention with a 67, for a 210 total. The 53-year-old Barber made six birdies and one bogey, with four of the birdies coming on the last seven holes.

Barber has captured 22 tournament championships, including 11 on the senior tour.

Mike Fetchick had the day's best round at 66, which included eight birdies, to head a group of five golfers at 212.

Billy Casper, Tim Ferree, Charles Sifford and Don January joined Fetchik at 4 under par, five strokes behind Palmer.

January had led after the first two rounds but slumped to a 73 Saturday.

Rinker's lead cut in half

DANVERS, Mass. (AP) — It was no secret that Laurie Rinker was nervous as she watched her eight-stroke lead cut in half Saturday in the third round of the $225,000 LPGA Boston Five Classic.

The 21-year-old member of a Stuart, Fla., professional golfing family twice lost her cool and tangled with cameramen as she soared to a 4-over 76 on the 6,008-yard Radisson-Ferncroft Country Club course.

"I was more nervous today," she said. "They were taking pictures of me on the fourth hole and on the sixth, a TV cameraman's beeper went off."

Rinker ended the day with only two birdies and a string of six bogeys — four of them on the six holes after she tossed a club in disgust over the beeper incident.

"It was a long road today. Of the four days, today was the hardest mentally to have such a big lead. I really didn't play poorly but the breaks kind of evened out.

"I'm disappointed, but not upset because I'm still 7-under for the first three days," Rinker said. "I played aggressively but it doesn't show in my score."

She noted that swirling winds might well have been responsible for a general rise in the scores that left only four players in the field of 72 under par going into the final round.

Rinker carried an eight-stroke margin into the third round and briefly led by 10 before running into bogey trouble. She was 65-68-76-209 going into the final round.

Becky Pearson, 28, a fifth-year pro from Delray Beach, Fla., meanwhile, shot the best round of the day, a 6-under-par 66.

U.S. swim trials give toughest test

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — It's been said that the toughest swimming meet in the world is the U.S. Olympic Trials, rather than the Olympics themselves.

With East Germany, the strongest women's swim team in the world, and the Soviet Union, with possibly the best individual in Vladimir Salnikov, boycotting this summer's Games in Los Angeles, that old saw is more true than ever.

The U.S. Trials, which start Monday and continue through Saturday, will have 34 of the 45 swimmers who made the 1980 U.S. Olympic team that didn't go to Moscow because of the American-led boycott, including 14 of 18 women and 20 of 27 men. This is in a sport where retirement sometimes comes before 20th birthdays.

PUSHING THE veterans will be some newcomers with little international experience.

"Just because the Soviets and the East Germans aren't coming, it doesn't mean making the U.S. team any easier," Don Gambril, head coach of the U.S. Olympic team, said.

Gambril said it's time for U.S. athletes to "forget the dog-gone boycott. The thing is over and done with, and for anyone who doesn't believe we will have plenty of good competition, just look at Alex Baumann of Canada," who just shattered the world record in the 400-meter individual medley to go with his previous world standard in the 200 IM.

Among the veterans expected to compete in the Trials are four who were on the 1976 Olympic team at Montreal. Steve Gregg of Berkeley, Calif., was a silver medalist in the 200 butterfly in 1976; Bob Jackson of San Jose, Calif., made the finals in the 100 backstroke in 1976 and also was on the 1980 team, and Peter Rocca of Concord, Calif., was a 1976 silver medalist in the 100 and 200 backstroke and another 1980 Olympic team member.

THE LONE swimmer left from the 1976 team is Jill Sterkel, 23, of Hacienda Heights, Calif., who will seek to become the second woman swimmer to make the U.S. Olympic team three times. The first was Eleanor Holm, a backstroker in 1928 and 1932 who was kicked off the 1936 team for drinking champagne on the ship en route to Berlin.

Sterkel was on the freestyle relay team that upset the powerful East Germans and won the only U.S. women's swimming gold medal in Montreal. Sterkel continued to be one of the world's best sprint freestyle and butterfly swimmers.

The strength of the East Germans has trimmed the number of U.S. women world record-holders to two — Mary T. Meagher of Louisville in the 100 and 200 butterfly and Kim Linehan in the 1,500 freestyle.

Meagher, who set her first world mark at age 15 in 1979, has rallied from an off-year in 1983 to post the best times in the world in her specialties in 1984. Linehan has returned to training after a long layoff.

Another woman who would have been a gold-medal favorite even with the presence of the East Germans is Tiffany Cohen of Mission Viejo, Calif., a top distance freestyler.

TRACY CAULKINS of Nashville, Tenn., 21 and a world-class swimmer since 1977, also will compete in the Trials. She has held 60 American records in every competitive stroke and has won a record 48 individual titles at national championships.

The American men have four world-record holders who combined last summer at the Pan American Games to set a world standard in the 400 medley relay, with each swimming 100 meters in his specialty.

Rowdy Gaines, 25, of Winter Haven, Fla., who visited Midland last week, holds the world mark in the 100 freestyle; Matt Gribble, 22, of Miami has the world best at 100 butterfly; Rick Carey, 21, of Mount Kisco, N.Y., set world records in the 100 and 200 backstroke last summer, and Steve Lundquist, 23, of Jonesboro, Ga., is the world record-holder at 100 breaststroke.

Olympic interest continues rising

Sports Analysis

By STEVEN K. PAULSON

NEW YORK (AP) — Olympic fever is rapidly building in the United States, and some Olympic-watchers give the Soviet boycott much of the credit: with no Soviet bloc athletes, there will be more medals left for the Americans.

Other factors have contributed to the surge in interest. Those factors include:

—Increased interest in sports among women in the United States.

—Increasing media coverage, with the Olympics only five weeks away and the track and field trials and preliminary shooting events this week.

—Increased enthusiasm because the Summer Games are returning to the United States for the first time in 52 years.

A number of other sports events have been competing for attention in the United States, including the U.S. Open Golf tournament, the upcoming Wimbledon tennis matches and the baseball pennant races. In addition, interest has been diverted by the U.S. political races this year.

BUT HENRY Freeman, managing editor for sports of the newspaper USA Today, a national daily, says once the Games begin and Americans start winning medals, American's attention will be riveted on the Games.

"If there is one thing this country loves, it's winners," he said.

Since preparations for the Games are visible in Los Angeles, interest is easier to gauge on the West Coast than on the East Coast.

But Amy Quinn of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee said interest is not limited to southern California, which has a financial stake in the Games. She said interest is building across the country as the Olympic torch passes through small towns on the way to Los Angeles.

The path of the torch has taken it from New York to the South, through the Midwest and across to the coast, where it will be used to light the Olympic flame during opening ceremonies.

Officials at ABC television said Friday that overnight results of the track-and-field trials in Los Angeles Thursday showed "great" share ratings in Philadelphia, but only moderate ratings in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles.

According to the preliminary figures, 6.2 million television sets in the New York area were tuned to the Olympic preliminaries Thursday night, which are used to select the U.S. Olympic team. In Chicago, 3.7 million tuned in and in Los Angeles, 7 million. Philadelphia had a 13 percent share of the market of those who watched television Thursday night, but the exact figure was not available.

Opinions differ on the impact that the Soviet boycott of the Games has had on Americans. Some say interest in the Games has dropped, because of the reduced competition caused by the boycott. Others say the boycott has served to pull Americans together.

CHARLIE STEINER, manager of sports at RKO radio, a U.S. network that serves about 600 stations, said the boycott has reduced the Games to "nothing more than a classy track meet," and said the Olympic organizing committee needs to work with radio as well as television stations to build interest.

James E. Duffy, president of the ABC television network, which has bought the rights to televise the Games, said the boycott has helped spur American interest and patriotism.

"I think all of that with the Russians pulling out is relating to a spirit Americans haven't seen for a long time," he said.

ABC plans to televise 187½ hours of the event, including the weekday Olympic events —a first for the network.

Freeman said another factor in this year's interest in the Games is increased participation in sports by women.

He said court rulings allow more women to play sports in high school and college, and as a result women want to watch others compete. He said women are also interested in fitness, such as jogging and running, and they will be interested in watching the summer Games.

As a result, the International Olympic Committee added 13 new events this year for women, including the 3,000-meter race, the marathon, the 400-meter hurdles, an expansion of the pentathlon to the heptathlon, an additional canoeing event, two cycling races, rhythmic all-around gymnastics, three shooting events, synchronized swimming duets and reinstatement of the 200-meter individual medley in swimming.

Steve Montiel, deputy press secretary for the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, said reports that people in Los Angeles are slashing room rates to attract visitors and reports that airlines are slashing fares to attract passengers to Los Angeles should not be interpreted as a lack of interest on the part of American spectators. He said people in southern California overestimated the number of visitors expected for the Games and are now having to cut back.

"WE HAVE always been consistent in our projections. Several years ago we said we expected 600,000 to 700,000 people from outside southern California. While we were saying that, others were saying three million, four million, five million people were coming to Los Angeles for the Games. These were never realistic.

"We are really pleased with the response."

He said the committee has already sold out for two-thirds of the ticketed sessions — 3.5 million of the 5 million seats available.

Montiel said no Olympics has ever sold out, and he does not expect a sellout this year. He said he expects ticket sales to continue until the events begin, in those events where tickets are still available.

South Korea ties U.S. Olympic baseballers

NEW YORK (AP) — Kim Yong-Kuk's run-scoring double in the seventh inning enabled South Korea to tie the United States 2-2 in an eight-inning game between the Olympic teams. The game was called after eight innings because of a time limit for the Montreal Expos-New York Mets game at Shea Stadium.

Yong-Kuk's double followed a lead-off walk to Lee-Soon-Chul, who advanced to second on a passball and to third on Mark Houng-Sik's infield single.

The United States took a 1-0 in the opening inning on back-to-back singles by Oddibe McDowell and B.J. Surhoff and a double play on which McDowell. The Americans made it 2-0 in the top of the sixth when Will Clark was hit by a pitch, moved to third on Mark McGwire's double and scored on Cory Snyder's sacrifice fly.

The Koreans scored their first run in the bottom of the sixth on a bases-loaded two-out walk to Yoo Joong-Il.

Pairings for the competition in Los Angeles, where baseball is to be a demonstration sport, were announced by Robert E. Smith, President of the Amatuer International Baseball Association. Japan and Canada have accepted invitations to join the United States, Taiwan, the Dominican Republic, Italy, Korea, Japan, Nicaragua, and Canada.

Two divisions have been formed — the White with the United States, Taiwan, Dominican Republic and Italy. Canada, Korea, Japan and Nicaragua are in the Blue Division.

The opening rounds of the competition, which will be held at Dodger Stadium, match Italy against the Dominican Republic and Taiwan against the United States July 31 and Canada against Nicaragua and Japan against Korea Aug. 1.

On Aug. 2, the Dominican Republic faces Taiwan, followed by the United States against Italy. On Aug. 3, Korea opposes Canada and Nicaragua goes against Japan. The Dominican Republic meets the United States and Italy plays Taiwan Aug.4, followed by Canada-Japan and Nicaragua-Korea Aug. 5.

McEnroe temper favored

Navratilova much more popular pick

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — In the view of British bookies, sober businessmen in a country where betting is a legal national passion, John McEnroe and Martina Navratilova are the hottest favorites to win Wimbledon since before World War II.

At this year's All England Lawn Tennis championships, which open Monday, the question seems less whether the top seeds and defending champions will hold their service than whether McEnroe will hold his temper.

The fiery New Yorker already has had a major blowup at an umpire in a Wimbledon tuneup tournament and a series of clashes with Fleet Street, London's newspaper row, which has urged tennis officials to clamp down on his tantrums.

AFTER McENROE heaped abuse on umpire Roger Smith at the the Queen's Club tourney — he called Smith an "idiot" and a "moron" — the Guardian newspaper said, "No one should be permitted to voice such contempt for a fellow human being and get away with it."

The tabloid Daily Mirror declared: "In a four-letter word, he is a LOUT. Or, as he would describe umpires, the pits. A moron."

McEnroe defended his behavior by saying the officiating in tennis is the worst of any major sport. Asked by a British reporter if he had any regrets about his actions, McEnroe replied, "What I regret is (having) to deal with people like you."

Wimbledon referee Alan Mills said he plans to "firmly but fairly" enforce the code of conduct, which provides for , in order, a warning, a point penalty, a game penalty and finally disqualification for any player infringing the rules. Similar warnings have been made before at Wimbledon with little effect.

What is in no doubt is that McEnroe is playing some of the best tennis of his career, despite his loss to Ivan Lendl in the finals of the French Open.

The Paris defeat was McEnroe's first this year, after winning 42 straight matches. At 25, he is serving with precision, volleying decisively and covering the court like a fox on a scent — all elements that make for winners on the finely manicured lawns at Wimbledon.

McEnroe has said the French Open loss, in which he had Lendl two sets down but let his concentration slip, still haunts him. "It's going to be tough to put the defeat in Paris out of my mind," he said. But he added, "Winning, in time, heals wounds."

Lendl, the No. 2 seed, dislikes playing on grass. McEnroe beat him in the semis here last year. This year, just 48 hours after his triumph on the Parisian clay, Lendl was ousted from Queen's Club on grass in the first round.

If the seedings hold — for the first time this year, they're based solely on computer rankings — Lendl will also face a major obstacle in two-time Wimbledon champ Jimmy Connors, seeded third and in Lendl's half of the draw.

The top prize money for the men is $137,000. For the women, it's $123,300 dollars. The total purse is $2 million.

Women's tennis at Wimbledon is celebrating its centennial this year, and Navratilova, who has won the singles title two years running, is so heavily favored that most debates seems to be whether she'll be able to complete the Grand Slam — the conquest of the French, Wimbledon, U.S. Open and Australian Open in the same calendar year. Her French Open triumph completed that sweep, which began in 1983 — not a true "Slam," but worth a $1 million bonus nonetheless.

THE NO. 2 seed, Chris Evert Lloyd, has won three times at Wimbledon, but her baseline game is nowhere near as suited to grass as Navratilova's serve-and-volley.

None of this, of course, means that Wimbledon holds no surprises. Quite the contrary — surprises are as much a tradition here as strawberries and cream.

Two years ago, it was Texan Zina Garrison reaching the quarter-finals against Navratilova on her first try. This year Garrison is the fifth seed.

Last year, it was unseeded New Zealander Chris Lewis fighting his way to the finals against McEnroe.

This year, who knows? Perhaps George Livingstone Leif Shiras?

Who is he?

That's what the London papers were asking when Shiras felled the newly crowned French titlist Lendl at Queen's Club.

Five days later, they weren't asking that about the 24-year-old Milwaukeean when he took McEnroe to three sets in the final.

Shiras, a lanky blonde who admits to liking the nightlife just a bit too much and who says his training regimen involves running up flights of stairs in his girlfriend's apartment building, says he's beginning to like this winning business.

"It's much better than the bad taste of losing," he said.

John McEnroe is the heavy favorite to win the Wimbledon title this year, but his major fight may be with the British press and his annual bout with tournament linesmen.

Arthur Ashe plays it safe on Wimbledon choices

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — On the tennis court, Arthur Ashe was known for taking chances. As a prognosticator on this year's Wimbledon tournament, it's a different story.

"John's got to be favored," Ashe said of defending men's singles champion John McEnroe.

And the women?

"Martina Navrtilova will be the highest-rated favorite with more distance between her and second place then at any time in history," Ashe said.

So much for the surprises.

In 1975, Ashe pulled off his biggest surprise, capturing Wimbledon with a shocking upset of top-ranked Jimmy Connors. Ashe did it by changing his game, taking advantage of Connors' weaknesses.

Can it happen again on the grass courts at the All-England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club?

"Jimmy could win if McEnroe lost, or if they had a crazy match like that final two years ago, which was one of the worst matches I've ever seen in a Wimbledon final" said Ashe. Two years ago, Connors prevailed over McEnroe in five sets.

"In the fifth set, Jimmy was mentally tough," said Ashe, who will work this year's Wimbledon as a commentator for Home Box Office.

After McEnroe and Connors, Ashe likes French Open champion Ivan Lendl.

"The distance between Connors and Lendl won't be as great as it would have been if Lendl didn't win the French," he said.

On the slow clay courts of Roland Garros Stadium in Paris two weeks ago, Lendl fought back from a two-set deficit to stop McEnroe and finally grab his first Grand Slam title. Ashe said McEnroe just wore our.

"As good as he is," Ashe said, "he didn't have enough experience on clay to figure out how to win when his serve stopped working for him.

"He mentally fell apart in the fifth set. Lendl won three love games. You wouldn't think anybody could serve three love games against McEnroe in one set."

While Ashe, captain of the United States Davis Cup team, picks the top three players in the world to be in the men's semifinals, he noted that almost every year has produced surprises at Wimbledon.

"I remember Vitas (Gerulaitis) came out of nowhere, somewhat speaking," he said. "McEnroe did it in 1977 when he came out of the qualifying and reached the semis. Tim Mayotte got to the quarterfinals (in 1981) and (Australia's) Rod Frawley got to the semifinals (in 1981)."

Last year, Chris Lewis of New Zealand reached the finals, where he was crunched by McEnroe.

In the women's field, Ashe said, Navratilova stands alone, with Chris Evert Lloyd a distant second.

"On grass, I would put (Czechoslovakia's) Hana Mandlikova and probably Pam Shriver in that group with Lloyd," he said. "Then comes a big group.

"Camille Benjamin's appearance in the semis (at the French Open) shows just how muddled the women's field is now. Their middle is getting tougher."

Ashe said Navratilova's dominance is, in the long run, good for women's tennis.

"There's no question the caliber of women's tennis is getting better. She should be a challenge to everybody else," he said. "She takes a professional approach to her tennis. She pays the price.

"That's an anomaly among past great athletes. Typically, every one who is gifted doesn't work hard. When you have a comination of a great athlete and great training together, you get the record she's got."

Ashe, who won the first U.S. Open in 1968, will split the commentary chores at Wimbledon with Billie Jean King, who holds a record 20 Wimbledon titles. HBO will televise The Championships, as the British refer to Wimbledon, daily (4 p.m.-7 p.m. CDT) from June 25 through July 5, with the exception of Saturday, June 30.

On Wednesday, July 4, HBO will televise its first live action from Wimbledon, beginning at 8 a.m. CDT.

Restoring hope

Anyone watching this week's floor debates in the House on the pros and cons of the immigration-reform bill surely had to be impressed by the emotionalism attached to the issue. There are ample reasons.

The sweeping reforms debated in the House — the ones that undoubtedly will be debated next week as a conference committee begins discussions aimed at resolving differences between the House and Senate versions — are crucial to the future course of immigration — and its impact — on this nation. Various aspects of the reform measure touch virtually every American life. It's no small, insignificant bill and, fortunately, it isn't being treated as such.

Whether you are a businessman, a student, a Spanish-surnamed American or one among the "huddled masses yearning to breathe free," the decision now being reached in Washington, D.C., is going to affect your future. That gives the debate its emotionalism.

The House version of the bill didn't please everyone — particularly a number of representatives in the Texas delegation. But that's to be expected because no "final solution" to the question of immigration reform is going to satisfy all concerned. What it did, though, is bring immigration reform a step closer to reality and that is the House bill's overriding virtue.

Reform of the nation's immigration policy is desperately needed and it has been avoided too frequently in the past. Regardless of how the final bill is enacted, it's going to be a bitter pill to swallow. What it likely will mean is that some Americans are going to lose — businessmen who will be subjected to penalties if found guilty of hiring illegal aliens, Spanish-surnamed Americans who feel abused in the work place because of the color of their skin, aliens who have to leave the country because they didn't qualify for legal status, any immigrant because of limits placed on legal entry to the United States for residence.

In that respect the debates should be emotional — and thorough. But in the end a reform bill must be enacted in some form. Why? Because, as President Reagan and countless others have noted, the United States has lost control of its borders. That is not acceptable — not in the interest of national security and not in the interest of providing sanctuary for all who hope to call America home.

America's shining hope for the people of the world must be restored and that can only happen through reform of our immigration policies.

Another View:

Unexplained ruling

The Supreme Court ruling upholding the seniority system when personnel cutbacks must be made is an important recognition that the nation can't be color-blind if it is constantly forced to make quota-like "allowances" for racial minorities.

But while the court's ruling is being heralded as a victory in the battle against "reverse discrimination," it certainly does not legitimize discrimination. It merely upholds the long-standing American tradition that, in many workplace situations, the last hired can be the first to be fired.

Civil rights leaders are properly concerned about the court's ruling. Because of historically discriminatory practices in many places throughout this nation, blacks and other minority members often have been the last to be hired. When budget restrictions force layoffs, they will have less seniority than many white employees, and thus, will be the first fired.

The court ruled acceptable even massive layoffs of minority employees with low seniority, contending it is unfair to favor one class of people over another class except in cases where individuals have been personally discriminated against. But, in the words of Justice White, "mere membership in the disadvantaged class" cannot justify "make-whole relief" for persons who did not personally suffer discrimination.

Such "make-whole relief" is at the heart of the affirmative action programs the courts have been so fond of, programs establishing racial quotas or goals in hiring, firing, promotions or layoff procedures. The proper concern is how far the court's ruling can be extended beyond the issue of seniority and into quotas.

The Reagan administration says the ruling applies to all quotas and announced it will review hundreds of court orders in job discrimination cases to remove those racial quotas and goals. But despite administration claims, the court did not decide that issue. In fact, there is much in the ruling to confuse that issue by allowing variant interpretations. And variant interpretations of judicial opinions inevitably require further judicial opinions for clarification.

Surely, that is how this matter will be resolved. The Supreme Court will, ultimately, have to explain just how extensive it intended this ruling to be. Until it does, we urge the Justice Department not to read something into the senority ruling that may not be there.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, June 24, the 176th day of 1984. There are 190 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 24, 1948, the Berlin Blockade began as Soviet forces halted all land traffic between the isolated city and West Germany.

On this date:

In 1497, the first recorded discovery of the North American mainland took place as explorer John Cabot sighted land.

In 1519, Lucrezia Borgia, a member of the Spanish nobility, died.

In 1793, the first republican constitution in France was adopted.

In 1908, the 22nd and 24th president of the United States, Grover Cleveland, died at the age of 71 in Princeton, N.J.

In 1940, France signed an armistice with Italy during World War II.

Ten years ago: The White House revealed that President Richard M. Nixon had been suffering from phlebitis, an inflammation of a vein in his leg, but that the condition had presumably abated.

Five years ago: Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somoza rejected a call by the Organization of American States for his resignation.

One year ago: The space shuttle Challenger — carrying America's first female astronaut in space, Sally Ride — made a safe landing at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

Today's birthdays: Actor Al Molinaro is 65. Comedian Jack Carter is 61. French movie director Claude Chabrol is 54. Actress Michelle Lee is 42. Rock musician Mick Fleetwood is 37.

Thought for today: "When a diplomat says yes, he means perhaps; when he says perhaps, he means no; when he says no, he is no diplomat." — Anonymous

Bank 'run' stresses deregulation

WASHINGTON — The near-fatal "run" on the Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. may seem of little concern to most Americans, who may shrug it off as having interest only to cigar-smoking financiers driving between office and country club in air-conditioned Rolls Royces.

Jack Anderson

But Continental's near-failure dramatizes the need to finish the job of deregulating the nation's commercial banks. What's at stake is not just the survival of America's eighth largest bank, but the future of the entire banking system and the economy itself. This is a matter of obvious concern to every American.

Continental, with $2.3 billion worth of problem loans, had been for months the target of rumors that it was on the brink of disaster. Many of the bank's biggest depositors in Europe and Japan began pulling out their money, which set off a chain reaction that necessitated the largest government bank rescue effort in history.

The seeds of Continental's close call were sown two years ago with the failure of Penn Square, an Oklahoma City shopping center bank. Continental had bought more than $1 billion in bad energy loans from Penn Square — a significant part of Continental's loan problems.

Government regulators could have taken corrective measures after the Penn Square fiasco, but the two agencies with direct authority — the Federal Reserve Board and the comptroller of the currency — were asleep at the switch. However, some officials at the two agencies did urge sweeping reforms that might have prevented the Continental crisis.

Administration sources told my associate Michael Binstein that some officials at the Fed and in the comptroller's office had been recommending for two years that Continental be forced to bite the bullet early to avoid the predictable crisis. Two specific recommendations were to get rid of Continental's top management and to stop paying dividends to shareholders.

But this prescription was ignored. Dividends kept pouring into the shareholders' pockets, lulling them into a false sense of security, and Continental's board of directors continued to promote only insiders to the top jobs.

Part of the problem is philosophies: The Fed and the comptroller have generally been reluctant to crack their regulatory whips over a troubled bank, believing that the board of directors is best equipped to run its affairs. On the other hand, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which gets stuck with the costs when a bank collapses, believes in responding early and forcefully before a major crisis develops.

The Fed refuses to let FDIC investigators examine the books of banks and holding companies under the Fed's control. There's growing sentiment at both the Treasury and the White House that the Fed has been too high-handed in its relations with the other agencies. One Treasury official described the Fed's behavior succinctly as "arrogant."

The Fed's attitude toward disciplining irresponsible banks made Continental's situation possible. If it forced banks to disclose more fully the extent of their troubled loans, big depositors and shareholders would do the disciplining by taking their money elsewhere.

The Fed's reaction to the Penn Square calamity was typical of its permissiveness. According to several sources, the Fed wanted the FDIC to bail out depositors beyond the $100,000 limit, and to assume all of Penn Square's bad loans.

But the FDIC refused, despite intense pressure. This left the responsibility on shareholders and uninsured depositors — and on banks like Continental, which had bought Penn Square's bad loans.

By refusing to reward Continental for its bad management decisions, regulators knew the bank would have problems. But it viewed this as necessary medicine for what ailed Continental.

So why did the FDIC come to Continental's rescue last month — a move that congressional critics have charged was a bailout of a big bank? The FDIC needed time to study Continental's books and arrange an orderly merger. Rushing through a merger would have been irresponsible.

Though Continental's wounds were clearly self-inflicted, some members of Congress have cited it in an attempt to make banking deregulation the scapegoat for the industry's problems. Continental, they say, proves the need for more, not less regulation.

What these critics choose to ignore is that deregulation would not weaken the government-supported safety net for depositors. Its basic effect would be to allow banks to branch out into such lucrative financial fields as insurance and securities.

It can be argued that deregulation might have prevented Continental's crisis. If the bank had been permitted to diversify, it wouldn't have had to rely solely on loans to weather the storm. Other profitable ventures could have saved it from its bad loan decisions.

Solons find NED'S 'moral fault'

WASHINGTON — Perhaps certain congresspersons hold the truth in such high regard that they do not want it promiscuously displayed. Perhaps. But the attempt to kill in the cradle the National Endowment for Democracy looks like yet another instance of moral posing at the expense of a moral undertaking.

George F. Will

Some conservatives, eager to combine ostentation and frugality, want to be seen saving $31 million (a sum spent every two and a half hours on interest on the national debt). Some liberals, eager for herosim without risk or exertion, want to slay this butterfly on the pretext that it is a cleverly disguised dragon. They say NED will be an instrument for U.S. "intervention" in the internal affairs of despotism, and we all know that would be wrong. Don't we?

You might think that persons who are strenuously opposed to the use of force to advance U.S. interests, as with aid to Nicaraguan freedom fighters, and who condemn U.S. collaboration with autocrats, such as Marcos of the Philippines, would welcome NED. It is, after all, an act of creative plagarism: The Reagan administration took the idea from two liberal Democratic congressmen, Dante Fascell of Florida and Don Fraser, now mayor of Minneapolis.

But a lot of latent hostility to the idea was brought down, like summer lightning, by reports that the AFL-CIO — this nation's most diligent private force for freedom — spent $20,000 of NED money on behalf of the moderate who won Panama's presidential election. Such assistance to friendly persons in elections may be problematic; certainly it will not be a part of NED's future agenda. NED's board has now forbidden the use of funds to finance campaigns of candidates for public office.

With federal and corporate funding, NED can do such things as: aid political prisoners and their families in places like Poland; assist harassed and fragile embodiments of democratic values, such as the "flying universities" (maintained by dissident intellectuals) in Poland; assist the organization of Cuba Committees in Europe, where there are many Cuban democrats in exile; support a magazine run by and for the thousands of Chinese students studying abroad, a magazine devoted to discussion of peaceful liberalization of China; send to places like South Africa and Chile law students skilled at litigation on behalf of human rights; assist the Democratic and Republican Parties in sharing the skills of democracy. (Democracy is, after all, a learned art — with parties trying to take root in the stony soil of less fortunate countries.)

Now, what is there about such activities that causes a congressman — a conservative Republican — to describe NED as an "endowment for mischief"? If the U.S. government is to be forbidden, in the name of moral fastidiousness, from lending aid and comfort to freedom's brave and isolated friends, the U.S. policy amounts to unilateral moral disarmament.

The effectiveness of some things NED may do would be reduced by publicity. One advantage of its independent status is that it would not come under the Freedom of Information Act. This displeases those legislators who are eager to please those journalists who think that if Aristotle had been a clear thinker he would have said that the great goal of government is not justice but happy journalists.

NED has brought about another outburst of philistine moralizing of the "Grenada-was-as-bad-as-Afghanistan" sort. The anti-NED argument is: We would disapprove of foreign interventions in our democracy, therefore....

Therefore nothing. The moral status of an action is conditioned by the actor's intentions and results. We are a good nation interested in nurturing good things in nations afflicted with bad regimes. Besides, we tolerate all sorts of foreign attempts to shape opinion in our open society.

But in Washington in the sleepy summer season, occasions for indignation are distressingly scarce. Hence they are valued almost as much as air conditioning, the other necessary comfort. Many opponents have used NED's little appropriation as an excuse for preemptive indignation about imaginable violations of the ever-stricter rules of political hygiene that are binding only on the United States.

There is a moral failing that theologians call "scrupulosity." It involves seeing moral fault where there is none, or fanatically seeking perfect purity when that is not desirable or even possible. The assault on NED is, in part, another excuse of scrupulosity regarding foreign policy.

Congress, it sometimes seems, would like a foreign policy conducted by Emily Post with the Warren Court squinting over her shoulder lest there be any violation of procedural niceties. NED is not perfect. The controversy about it illustrates how pursuit of the perfect injures the good.

What's lost in summit? Cufflinks!

President Reagan couldn't say it out loud at his press conference, but he hinted that one of the problems with having a summit conference with his counterpart in the Soviet Union is that he doesn't know who it is.

Art Buchwald

Just before the conference he received a briefing from Soviet experts in the CIA and State Department.

"Chernenko is sick," said one expert. "The power is shifting to Andrei Gromyko and Defense Minister Ustinov."

"Then I ought to meet with them," the president said.

"If you do, you will offend Grigori Romanov of the Communist Party in Leningrad, who now seems to be running the KGB. We're not sure if he's with the Chernenko group or against them. But I'd give him a set of cufflinks, just in case."

"Well, how do I make any progress with the Soviets if Chernenko isn't in charge?" the president asked.

"We didn't say he wasn't in charge. He's a wily old goat and has some Young Turks in the Politburo who cannot be ignored because any one of them could be Chernenko's heir apparent."

"Are they hard-liners?"

"Some are and some aren't. Mikhail Gorbachev is one of the favorites for the job if Chernenko dies. He's 52, so he'll be around for a long time. I'd also give him cufflinks to play it safe. But do it quietly. If the anti-Chernenko crowd gets wind of it, they'll use it against him if he goes for the leadership."

"How can I remember all these people if I go to a summit? I can't even remember the names of the members in my own Cabinet."

"Here are some photographs taken of Chernenko and the other Soviet leaders at the last May Day parade. We've put their names underneath them so you'll know who is who."

The president studied the photographs. "They all look alike to me."

"Call everyone 'Comrade' and you won't have a problem."

"How can I call a Soviet leader Comrade after what I've said about them?"

"It's like calling someone Mister."

"I don't think it's a good time to propose a summit meeting with the Soviets when we don't know who we're dealing with."

"It couldn't be a better time. Our intelligence indicates if you propose one now they will turn it down flat."

"Why?"

"Because if you meet with Chernenko it will acknowledge that as far as the United States is concerned he is in charge. The anti-Chernenko forces in the Kremlin can't afford this while they're lining up their support to take over the power, once Chernenko is stuck in the Kremlin wall."

"Chernenko must know this. What's to prevent him from accepting my invitation to a summit to put his domestic enemies in their place?"

"The Soviet army will never go for a summit at this time, and from what we can learn they have a lot to say about who meets with Chernenko and who doesn't."

"Then it's your opinion that I should announce at the press conference that I'm willing to meet with Chernenko without a prepared agenda?"

"It will look great in an election year, particularly since there is no chance of it taking place. Our intelligence indicates that if you do this you'll be co-oping one of the major issues the Democrats plan to use against you in the fall. By taking a softer line on the Soviets between now and Election Day you'll stop all the talk that you're intransigent about Soviet-American relations."

"What happens, if in spite of your intelligence, the Soviets agree to go to a summit with no strings attached?"

"Then you have nothing to lose but your cufflinks."

Should high court decide 'humaneness' of killing?

Modisett

Only in a society like ours would the question even be considered.

After wrestling for years with the question of whether capital punishment is acceptable in a society victimized by crime, the Supreme Court has become sole proprietor of another thorny tangent question. The court now is being asked to determine whether the lethal drugs injected into condemned individuals' veins to execute them are quick and painless. In other words, what the justices are being asked is whether lethal injections are humane or, are the killers being forced to endure excruciating deaths.

Wait a minute. What are we talking about here? I mean what are we really talking about in this instance?

Let me answer my own question. What we're really talking about is killing human beings who through their own actions have shown society they are a continuing danger and are not worthy of our compassion. It's as plain and as simple as that and no amount of diluting is going to make it any more palatable.

We're not talking about whether the death-row convicts in question are capable of being "salvaged" by society. That question was answered when the court ruled on the constitutionality of capital punishment.

What the question before the Supreme Court poses now is the expediency of punishment and whether that punishment is accomplished without pain. Wrapped inextricably in that web of a question is this ironic realization: When society finally arrives at the "perfect" method of execution — one that is painless to the convict, painless to society and, of course, socially acceptable — will it still be "punishment?"

Merriam-Webster defines punishment as "infliction of a penalty." That says nothing about whether punishment has to be painful; just that one receives a penalty. But the second definition gets down to the brass tacks. It further defines punishment as "retributive suffering, pain or loss."

So on to the next question. Are lethal drugs painless and do they bring death quickly? Who really cares? Who really should care? You, for one.

Does a murderer ever stop to consider whether drilling a .45-caliber slug into his victim's brain is going to be painless? Does a victim's death come quickly enough or is the expectation of death just a lingering horror that racks the mind until finally the act is completed?

There are those individuals who oppose capital punishment on religious grounds or simply because they are opposed to harsh penalties regardless of the crime. Maybe they'll never be convinced that there really is brutality and hatred in the world. Maybe they'll never be placed at a would-be murderer's mercy and realize as the last fleeting seconds of their lives are slipping away that they were foolhardy. Their objections are understandable, taking into consideration the context in which they are cloaked.

But those reservations do not resolve the question. Should our society really be trying to determine whether our method of execution is humane enough? Or should we be avenging crimes? Is that the real question here? Just penalty for a crime.

I only know this in my heart, for society to spend years haggling over whether we are being kind enough to the murderers of innocent men, women and children while the relatives of those victims are required to provide financial support (because that's exactly what their tax dollars are) for the lives of the murderers is the cruelest of all cruelties.

Is death by lethal injection humane enough?

Possibly not, but that really isn't the question. Is death by lethal injection punishment enough?

How much more blood will flood our streets?

By STEVE BECKER

Steve Becker came to Midland in 1971 from Denver, Colo. He is employed as a business manager for a Midland independent oilman and rancher. Becker earned his master's degree in business from the University of Texas of the Permian Basin in Odessa.

Since 1966, when the Supreme Court of the United States began blocking executions for murder in the United States, until November 1983 (17 years), there have been eight convicted murderers executed. In the same period, there have been 334,866 Americans murdered, and the blood continues to flood our streets. There seems to be something unfair and unequal when 334,866 Americans are deprived of their life, liberty and property and only eight convicted murderers pay an equal price.

There are about 1202 convicted murderers on death row. Some very minor legal roadblocks that have prevented executions are being removed, and there may be a few of the murderers executed in the next year or two. Those who oppose the death penalty are weeping about the possible bloodbath of the execution of these 1202 murderers, but they do not mention the innocent blood of the 334,866 Americans.

Not only do those opposed to the death penalty not mention the innocent, but neither does the media. Not once have I seen the cumulative number of murders compared with the number of executions for murder in the same period. There have been more Americans murdered since 1966 than we lost in all wars from World War I to date, and still the Supreme Court sits on its hands and the blood flows.

How many murders are directly attributable to our unjust Supreme Court? It is impossible to put an exact figure on the murders resulting from Supreme Court decisions over the past 17 years, but the question is not whether their hands are bloody with innocent blood but the exact number for which they are responsible. An example is an Indiana man convicted of murder in 1972, released in 1979, and in 1980 again in jail for another murder. He could not have murdered the second person if he had been executed after his first murder.

In 1950 there were 7,942 murders and the murder rate was beginning to rise because only half as many murderers had been executed in the preceding decade. From 1960 to 1969, there were only 145 executions as compared to 601 in the previous decade. What happened to the number of murders? There was a 212 percent increase in murder in 1970, as compared with 1950, and a 290 percent increase in 1980 over 1950. Give or take a few thousand murders, the majority of the Supreme Court of the United States through these years is responsible for 150,000 murders being committed in the United States that would not have been committed if they had not effectively suspended the death penalty.

The death penalty is clearly constitutional. The death penalty is not prohibited by the Constitution. It was used by the 13 colonies before they became states, and they continued to use it until the Supreme Court began to try to change the constitution by court fiat in 1966. All of the people who wrote the Constitution and those who adopted it approved of and practiced the use of the death penalty. For the Supreme Court to question the death penalty 200 years later on the grounds that it was prohibited by the Constitution is ridiculous.

The death penalty in our country is a punishment for a crime decreed by a court after hearing the evidence. The primary question is "Does the punishment fit the crime?" Is it a just punishment? As the punishment for murder, the execution of the murderer is equal to his crime of taking a human life. Since it is equal, it is a just punishment.

The death penalty has been attacked as being cruel and unusual punishment. Before examining the arguments, the facts need to be established. Executions in the United States have historically been by hanging, firing squad or electrocution. The results are extremely quick, and there is little if any time to suffer.

The word "cruel" means designed to cause pain. There have been many ways devised to cause the death to be painful and prolonged, such as crucifixion, burning at the stake and whipping. Obviously a quick death prevents the condemned from prolonged suffering, so by any common meaning, the word "cruel" cannot be applied to a method which causes death quickly. Hanging and shooting are widely used historical ways of execution, so they could hardly be called unusual.

Life for life is equal punishment. It is not unequal. If the courts were requiring the murderers to be executed in the same manner as they had murdered, there would be indeed some cruel and unusual punishment, but such is not the case. The death penalty carried out under court orders in our country is uniformly swift and painless. If there is a swifter and more painless method of execution, there would be no objections from those who seek justice, but justice demands the execution of murderers.

The opposite of justice is not mercy, but injustice.

Native Texan proud to hail from here

It is interesting to read so many different opinions. It seems opinions of Robert E. Lee are as two-sided as the Mason-Dixon Line. So for the gentleman who insists on insulting native Texans, I must make a reply.

First of all, I am a native Texan, and I get the impression that you, Mr. Cullen, are not. So maybe that is why you are less familiar with the Texas history that created so many heroes and such a unique land. No other state can boast of independence as a nation. No other state holds such a unified society that sets it apart from all others. True Texans are proud of Texas because it is so much like its own country.

Secondly, in my opinion Texans speak of seceding from the union purely out of discouragement for a federal government that seems to grow less and less sympathetic to our needs. Secession is near impossible (nothing is impossible), but we know we would come closer to being a self-supporting nation than the one we live in now.

Thirdly, as far as out-of-staters, I welcome them to our "land of opportunity." But for those who move in, take our jobs, make a better living than where they came from and then complain about the way we live and think, I wish they would go back where they came from (wherever that is).

Finally, I am an American who is proud to be born in the greatest state in the union. I won't leave for that reason, and if I do, I know I will come back. If you learn just one thing while you are here, Mr. Cullen, I hope you learn not to call real Texans 'fascists' and then leave your name in the paper. Now will someone please rename Indiana Street.

Our enemy already battling for minds

In last Sunday's edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram Buddy McQueen expressed his disapproval of President Reagan based on his fear that his own three sons might face a war because of Reagan's strong leadership. Mr. McQueen should realize that our enemy is already at war with us and the battlefield is the minds of the American people. The object of this mind battle is to get us to lay down, voluntarily, our own military weapons. The Communists will start a military war only when the United States has left itself weak enough to be defeated.

President Reagan's position in favor of a strong military is not a position that the Communists favor because they can't win the battle for the American mind under his leadership. I'm sure they would smile warmly at the sight of Mondale and the Democrats stripping our own military of its strength in the name of world peace, while they continue to prepare for the war they intend to win.

Mr. McQueen's fear of war is a frightening indication of how well the battle is going for the Communists. Apparently he would rather be Red than dead.

Being a parent has positive rewards, too

In reading Gary Ott's article concerning the decision not to have children, I found myself feeling much pity for him.

It is, of course, everyone's right to decide whether or not to become a parent, but to base that decision on just the negative aspects, as Mr. Ott did, is such a shame. He pointed out all of the trials and tribulations he viewed might occur while raising a child but failed to evenly weigh the advantages.

He did not consider the joy a parent feels with a child's first words or first steps. He didn't consider the joy a parent feels just having their child say he loves you. But then I suppose you have to be a parent to understand those feelings.

Western nations still not prepared for war

I too was a POW in WW II and in those years I had a lot of time to dwell on what got me into that situation in the first place. It was obvious then and obvious today that it was the unpreparedness and disarmament policies of the governments of France, Britain and the United States.

These same policies are now advocated by Messrs. Mondale and Hart. Those policies now espoused by Mondale and Hart will bring that day of confrontation much too close and will put us in the same position in which we found ourselves in 1940, defenseless. This time the oceans will not save us, not give us time to prepare ourselves and our allies.

Your sons won't have to march off and fight. The front will be everywhere. The front will be our front doors, the combatants and victims, everyone.

Doctors woes might turn your stomach

This letter is in answer to an article that came out in the Reporter-Telegram about the doctors falling on such hard times because of malpractice insurance, etc.

It's enough to turn a person's stomach. Especially when you see where these doctors live and see them driving around in their Rolls Royces and their limousines.

No; hard times are when you work until your back feels as if it's broken, just so you can put food on the table for your family! Do that and then talk about hard times.

Be careful, you doctors. You are liable to break our hearts!

Italians document Soviet role in assassination attempt

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Americans are traditionally inclined to give other people the benefit of the doubt, so we were somewhat reluctant to believe that communist Bulgaria would hire a gunman to kill Pope John Paul II in St. Peter's Square in 1981 before horrified crowds. The attempt fortunately failed by inches but the assassin, a Turkish killer who murdered fellow-countrymen at home, was seized.

The Bulgar connection quickly became known, yet the KGB and its proteges even spread the "disinformation" around the world that the CIA was responsible. They slyly suggested that since the U.S. was interested in a summit meeting then with the ailing Yuri Andropov, who for years headed the KGB, we were interested in keeping mum.

Not so where the office of the Italian state prosecutor was concerned, nor a courageous, veteran American author-journalist, Claire Sterling. She has been living for years in Italy and her sources are impeccable. Mrs. Sterling, who wrote a book on terrorism a few years ago, had an investigative book published last September, "The Time of the Assassins," nailing the Bulgars and the KGB to the plot against the Pope's life.

She is back in Washington now to testify about her revelations — also published in The Reader's Digest and The New York Times — to select congressional committees. Mrs. Sterling merits the thanks of her own countrymen and women for digging at great risk. Her findings have just been corroborated by the Italian prosecutor's office which will ask for indictments of three Bulgar agents in a few days.

Why did the Bulgar-Soviet connection decide on such a high risk operation? Because, as the state prosecutor concluded, "some political figure of great power" noted upheaval in Poland caused by the Solidarity movement and wanted to weaken or disorganize the effort. The decision, therefore, was made to kill Pope John Paul II, the only Polish-born Pope in history. Italy's intrepid prosecutors, who compiled more than 25,000 pages of evidence, did not single out the Soviet power personality who approved of the gunmanship but makes it clear the late Andropov gave final clearance for so heinous an act.

On lesser but still world-shattering situations, Andropov gave orders to execute the leading Freedom Fighters of the Hungarian revolution in 1956 and personally interrogated Czechoslovak Communists-turned-reformists after the Red Army invaded 12 years later. Subsequently, until three months before he grasped the reins of Soviet power totally, Andropov seemed to enjoy being the "Grand Inquisitor" of dissidents inside the U.S.S.R. He seemed pleased to see them break. Then, they'd be returned to gulags to spread the word of KGB power and omniscience.

Preparing the plot against the Pope required broad outlines. Gaps were filled in by the gunman, Mehmet Ali Agca, who voluntarily began to talk about the Bulgarian role after his sidekicks ignored him in jail. So Agca began to spill the beans, telling about his recruitment as a gun for hire by Bulgar agents. They got him out of Turkey and he lived in a big hotel in the Bulgar capital, Sofia.

He didn't speak Bulgar or Russian, which is close to Bulgarian, so couldn't make out who were Soviet agents or Bulgarians. He reckoned that Bulgars, by showing constant deference, were getting Soviet orders. Agca was plentifully supplied with assorted currencies. His gun came from the shop of a Vienna arms dealer. It was all carried out in whodunit style to the rendezvous at a Rome hotel near the Vatican where Agca holed up and watched the Pope make his rounds in St. Peter's Square.

The thick 78-page Italian prosecution report went into an exhaustive check-and-double-check investigation of the hired gun's revelations and movements of Bulgar and KGB agents. The minutiae is as detailed as full-scale footnotes in historical documents, which the prosecution record may well become. It's a rogue's gallery, citing among other instances, names and aliases of Turkish mafia types who run guns and drugs into Bulgaria as well as Bulgar agents.

Of the three Bulgarians named in the indictments, only one, mustachioed Sergei I. Antonov, is in Italian hands. The two others fled back to Bulgaria a long time ago. Agca, in his voluntary statements to the Italian judiciary, provided detailed remembrances of Antonov's apartment in Rome where he worked for the Bulgar airlines. Antonov was a major go-between for Bulgar state security and had been trained by the KGB for foreign assignments. All Bulgarian security is an off-shoot of the KGB. Its operatives have killed a defector with a poisoned umbrella end jabbed into the victim on a busy London street. Another defector escaped the same fate in Paris when the umbrella point blunted and doctors extracted the poison quickly.

Under heavy guard, Agca was taken to St. Peter's Square for a re-enactment of the attempted papal assassination. The duplication was so dramatic, as eyewitnesses reported, as to be chilling beyond melodrama. Last December the Pope visited the gunman in jail. Ali Agca had been convicted and sentenced to life in prison, but the Pope forgave Agca's act in a spirit of humanity. Temporal law now takes over from the spiritual. The Soviets and their murderous henchmen, of course, don't recognize the Western rule of law to which most people adhere.

What this shocking case proves to us is communist indifference to all human life and values, no matter on what level. President Reagan, himself the victim of an assassination attempt, urged, at the London summit of Western nations and Japan, all allies to cooperate against terrorism. A declaration of approval emerged from the meeting and we'll see how far it goes. The attack on the Pope served to bring well-intentioned nations together to combat terrorism. Italian law will identify the real culprits.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Texas eyes again on pension reforms

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Once again, Texas officials are keeping an eye on efforts by Congress to overhaul pension laws, an overhauling they feel could prove expensive to Texas taxpayers, and burdensome to public retirement systems.

PEPPRAA has revived. Pronounced "pep-rah," is the Public Employee Pension Plan Reporting and Accountability Act.

State officials disliked the act when it appeared in 1982, and indications are they haven't learned to like it any better in 1984.

Rita Horwitz, executive director of the State Pension Review board, says the new proposal is different from its unlamented predecessor, but new and different isn't necessarily better.

What set state officials off two years ago was the prospect of the federal government dictating to Texas, and other states, what to do with the funds in public pension programs. One official at the time described it as the federal government "drooling over all those billions" in state pension plans — and another called it an attempt to bring all public pension funds under federal control.

Horwitz says the new version of PEPPRAA "focuses more on reporting and disclosure," but admits to being less than completely enthusiastic about the legislation's revival.

"If we can get an exemption from the bill," she says, the Pension Review Board will have to send some 300 reports on pension operations to the Federal government.

"If we're not exempted, "Horwitz says, "we would be required to conform to everything that's in the bill" including providing "all sorts of information to be given to the participant in a plan."

Providing such information already is part of the Texas statute, she adds, so "we're not opposed to that." But, Horwitz says, there is concern that "once this bill is passed, anything can happen at the federal level...through rule-making ...."

Texas has some large retirement systems, at both the state and local levels.

The Teacher Reitrement System and Employees Retirement System, at the end of 1983, had about $11 billion, with close to that amount in the 55 largest city and county retirement systems, Horwitz says.

And those systems have remained healthy over the years, and state officials aren't eager for federal intervention which they feel could work to the systems' detriment.

In 1982, much of the argument revolved around the prospect that the federal law could lead to "imprudent social investing." That, officials argue, would violate the principles of what makes a sound retirement system.

What's needed, they contend, is to provide investments which will give the best rate of return with safety for the invested funds.

Texas voters, in 1975, adopted a constitutional amendment authorizing additional state funding for the state's public retirement systems, and attempting to remove investments frm the political arena.

Officials also say that there are worthy social programs which are in need of funds, but they don't think trying to divert funds from public retirement systems is the best way to assist those programs — and they feel it could work to the damage of the retirement systems.

Social investment policies haven't had a great deal of support among Texas lawmakers, although there have been attempts during recent legislative sessions to restrict investments involving South Africa (and Communist nations).

Retirement funds also have come under scrunity in the special legislative session, in regards to the state's contribution to those funds.

Work by the Legislature and Pension Review Board is continuing in several areas involving pensions, including the Judicial Retirement System, which is the subject of attention from the Select Committee on the Judiciary

And the Pension Review board is continuing its review of funding policies, Horwitz reports.

"We're looking at what kind of objectives should we have, and how should we go about determining the best way for these systems to be funded," she says.

Those recommendations should go to the 1985 Legislature.

Meanwhile, state officials are continuing to glance over their shoulders towards Washington, and PEPPRAA.

The bank, to be known as the Allied Bank Fort Worth, would have capital of $800,000, surplus of $800,000 and reserves of $400,000, the agency said.

Jeffrey M. Harp, Fort Worth, is proposed as chairman of the board, and Terry H. Dallas, Fort Worth, as vice president and cashier.

A tentative hearing date was set for Aug. 9.

Hepatitis sidelines singer Larry Gatlin

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music singer Larry Gatlin said Saturday he has hepatitis that will curtail his career for two to three weeks.

Gatlin, 36, said in an interview from his hospital bed that he expects to be discharged Monday or Tuesday.

He entered the hospital Wednesday and was forced to cancel a Thursday White House appearance with his two brothers.

The Odessa, Texas, native said he has the milder of the two types of the liver disease. He was listed in stable condition.

Gatlin said he hopes to sing as scheduled July 4 at the mall in Washington, D.C.

He said he sent President Reagan a telegram apologizing for canceling the appearance Thursday at the Congressional Seafood Festival on the south lawn.

"I told him I owed him one, and that I'd repay him in November at the ballot box," Gatlin said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Hundreds of John Lennon fans, ignoring the late singer's call to "imagine no possessions," packed the Sotheby Parke Bernet galleries Saturday to bid for a piece of their idol's life.

"It was a blockbuster," Elizabeth Auran, spokeswoman for the exclusive auction house, said after the auction of 123 lots of items brought $430,936.

Sotheby's was hired to conduct the auction by Lennon's widow, Yoko Ono, who said she would donate the proceeds to charity.

The leading Lennon item was a 1965 Rolls Royce Phantom V, which was purchased for $184,250 by a Florida Beatles fan, Wallace Yost of Pensacola.

Lennon's Wurlitzer jukebox sold for $20,350.

The baby grand piano on which Lennon composed "Dear Yoko" fetched $8,800 from a musicologist and Beatles fan, Lucy McConaghie, of St. Augustine, Fla.

A set of Lennon's erotic "bag one" lithographs, done in 1969 as a wedding present to Ms. Ono, sold to a private buyer for $18,360. At their first showing, Scotland Yard confiscated eight of the prints as indecent.

The lyrics of Lennon's song "Imagine" contain the phrase, "Imagine no possessions."

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — English swimmer Andrew Gilbert, who captured four medals in the swimming finals at the International Games for the Disabled last week, faced other finals on dry land.

Even though Gilbert, whose legs are partially paralyzed by polio, qualified for the British swim team to the games, he faced a major obstacle — his final examinations for entrance to Bristol University were being held at the same time.

School officials from the United Kingdom and Hofstra University, where the disabled athletes were housed, arranged for him to take his tests here.

Gilbert promised not to telephone or receive letters from his school chums who had already taken the tests. He has to complete the tests by Tuesday.

He admits he didn't hit the books much until last Tuesday, after his swimming competition was over. He won a silver and three bronze medals in the 100-meter freestyle, backstroke, medley relay and freestyle relay.

NORTH PLATTE, Neb. (AP) — "This award puts me up there with the big ones," actor Denver Pyle said when he received the 1984 Buffalo Bill Award.

Pyle, who plays Uncle Jesse Duke on "The Dukes of Hazzard" TV series, joined a prestigious group of entertainers who have been cited for their contributions to family entertainment in the Cody tradition.

"It's not easy to select material that is wholesome, that is fine quality, that children can watch," Gov. Bob Kerrey said as he presented the award Friday night. "Denver Pyle has done that in his career."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dr. Armand Hammer, chairman and chief executive of Occidental Petroleum Corp., has been named by President Reagan to a third term as chairman of the President's Cancer Panel.

Hammer, 86, has served since October 1981 as chairman of the three-member panel that monitors the $1 billion cancer research program of the National Cancer Institute.

"I have been struck by the sense of discovery that is in the air and the excitement generated by the new knowledge that is coming forth at a much greater rate than in the past," he said in a statement Friday.

ABE: Education within everyone's reach

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN

Gracia Garcia quit school after eighth grade. "My grandmother, who was taking care of us, had a heart attack, and I had to drop out and take care of my brothers," she explained.

Two years ago Mrs. Garcia entered the classroom for the first time in more than 20 years. After studying at Midland College for 16 months she passed a General Education Development test and received the equivalent of a high school diploma.

It wasn't easy studying high school English, reading, math, social studies and science at age 35, she said. But whenever she got discouraged her family refused to let her give up on herself. "Sometimes I wanted to quit, but my kids wouldn't let me," said the mother of three.

Today she feels the results were worth the effort, and would encourage anyone who wants to finish his high school education to do so. "Even if you are old you can go to college. That is great."

Now she wants to put her knowledge to work in the business world, and plans to take additional classes at MC. She is interested in computer courses.

"I want my kids to finish high school and go to college. That's my dream," she said, adding she would never allow her children to leave school as she had done.

The GED and English as a Second Language programs constitute most of Adult Basic Education at MC. ABE classes — which also include literacy, citizenship and pre-vocational training — are offered tuition-free. They are financed through federal, state and local funds.

Courses and the open lab are available both in the morning and evening.

GED students range from teens to senior citizens. "Last year we had one who was 71," said ABE director Barbara Gideon. "He dropped out of school in third grade to help his family. He married, had a family, worked and retired without ever having a high school diploma."

GED students must be at least 16 years old and cannot take the tests until age 17. This limits some younger girls who left school because of pregnancy and don't want to return, Ms. Gideon said. There have also been instances of gifted children who have obtained college degrees before high school diplomas.

The five tests are based on achievement scores of a nationwide sample of graduating seniors. To pass, students must perform equal to or better than 80 percent of those seniors, Ms. Gideon said.

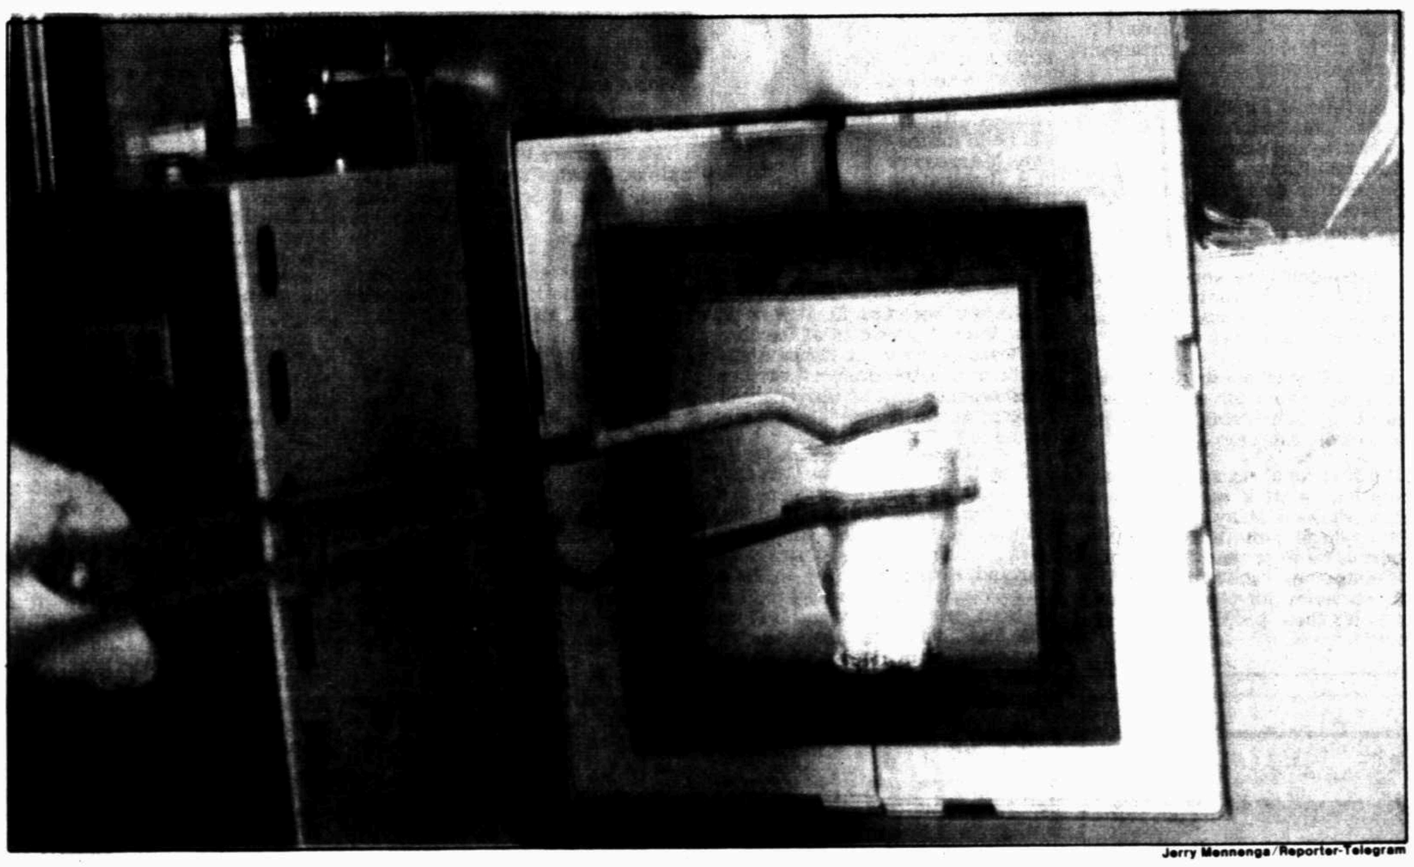

"It's not an easy test, and it's not a give-away program," Ms. Gideon explained. In the past two years, 99.7 percent of MC's GED students have passed their tests. "We're very proud of that." During the past school year 97 GEDs have been awarded.

ESL courses, which are also taught at Casa de Amigos, have benefited students of 11 nationalities. Students learn to speak, read and write English.

Many take self-paced, individual study in the lab because the speed at which they learn depends on such things as level of education, exposure to English, its similarity to their primary language and whether or not they are familiar with our alphabet.

Chemical techniques have golden prospects

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Dr. Mike Robinson uses tongs to reach into a high-temperature furnace, adjusting the position of a crucible which contains a mixture that, after a two-step separation process, will produce a small pellet of gold.

LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — There is gold everywhere, even in your own backyard.

Unfortunately, chances are slim that mining your flower beds will mean a life of leisure. There is more to prospecting for gold than buying a shovel and pan and sifting through the dirt.

"They'd have trouble even finding it without very, very sophisticted chemical techniques," said Dr. Mike Robinson of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

But methods of extracting the precious metal from everyday ores are being improved constantly, making it more feasible to make a living mining areas left alone in bygone Gold Rush days.

Right here in the Permian Basin, a place not known for its precious metal production, gold is being extracted by new methods that could mean more gold mined for less.

Robinson is taking ores from Texas, New Mexico, Nevada, Arizona, Idaho and across national borders in Canada and Mexico and extracting what precious little precious metal he can — some from ores left untouched in the past.

Minus the "fire assay" — heating the ore with a combination of chemicals in a high-temperature furnace — Robinson has extracted relatively large quantities of gold, left alone before because of the dangers of arsenic also present.

The amount left over is more in a relative sense, but not enough to excite the average person to make for the hills. In a Canadian sulfide ore, a 50-gallon bucket gleans $50 in gold, estimated Robinson.

By trial and error, Robinson has found a way around the expense and potential hazards of the cooking method used by smelters to recover precious metals.

Stirring a mixture of certain chemicals in a liquid solution and the ore in a beaker literally washes out the arsenic — leaving a residue with a high gold content.

By processing a much larger volume of the ore, money could be made through this method. "All mining is kind of like McDonald's," noted Robinson.

Further research could make mining of Texas ores — the best of which Robinson said has netted $40 in gold per ton — more profitable. This chemist's interest is not in the profit, but in finding better solutions through his research.

"It's not for the money," said Robinson, pointing to the 50-gallon bucket of Canadian sulfide ore which remains half full after two years of work.

Rape investigations aided by 'profiling' methods

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Matt Holten/Reporter-Telegram

"There's no real classification of the typical sex offender," says Lt. Bret Grove of the Midland County Sheriff's Department. "That's because there are so many different psychological factors involved.

"Some offenders, for example, have a certain fantasy and they look for a particular victim who can fulfill that fantasy. Maybe it's women with long blonde hair.

"There are also 'rapes of opportunity,' in which he knocks on doors at random. Any female — from a child to a grandmother — who answers the door is a potential victim."

Even though there's no hard and fast method by which sex offenders can be categorized, the FBI has developed a technique that can at least point police in the right direction when it comes to solving rape and other sex crimes.

Compiled after hundreds of interviews with convicted sex offenders, the relatively new investigative tool is called "profiling."

If, for instance, a local law enforcement agency is having trouble solving a sex case, authorities can send data about the crime to the FBI's Behavorial Science Unit at Quantico, Va.

Included in the data will be pictures of the crime scene, pictures of any weapons or torture devices used, aerial photos of the area in which the crime occurred, full medical reports, complete investigative reports, a profile of the victim — both personal and professional — and pictures of the victim to see if there's a specific type of female the rapist was after.

If the victim has been slain, the information will also include full autopsy reports and photographs of the autopsy being performed. This allows the FBI to see the type and location of wounds and helps outline the psychological makeup of the rapist.

After piecing together all the available data, authorities can usually place the rapist into one of two broad categories: organized or disorganized.

The organized rapist will leave little or no evidence behind, according to Grove. The body, for instance, will be removed from the scene and dumped elsewhere. Also, organized rapists are generally extroverts who get along well with people and are the least suspect.

The disorganized sex offender, on the other hand, is typically an introvert whose attack is unplanned and "frenzied — like sharks feeding" — said sheriff's Capt. Tommy Jones.

Both Jones and Grove have been trained by the FBI in solving sex crimes.

The introvert is often employed at menial tasks because his feelings of inadequacy lead him to believe he can't get a better job. He probably walks, uses public transportation or drives a borrowed vehicle.

Both types fear or feel intimidated by women, and both commit the crime to exert control over women.

According to statistics, most rapes are violent acts of revenge for real or imagined wrongs done the rapist by a female relative or acquaintance when he was younger. The rapist may not consciously remember the bad experience, but it's left an indelible imprint on his psyche.

Authorities say lust is seldom a cause of rape. There are instances where even infants and elderly nuns have been attacked.

The organized rapist will sometimes try to aid in the investigation, according to Jones. "He'll hang around the police and offer tips. He gets a thrill out of the game, the risk involved.

GARY OTT

You'll have to act a bit like a riverboat gambler

Let me say right up front this column is a tad late. It should have been written sometime prior to April 15 — income tax day — but because I'm always in a state of shock during that period of time (and, as a result, don't think clearly,) I put it off. Still, there is an important message here.

It deals with the system. Or, more specifically, beating the system.

I speak of tax write-offs. Deductions, if you will. Surely, you know of what I speak. Tax deductions have become a part of our lives. They are as American as apple pie. You purchase something and immediately your mind starts calculating ways to write it off next year's tax return.

Obviously, some people are better at this than others. It helps, for example, if you have a little riverboat gambler in you. This is not to say that some people actually cheat, mind you, but it is probably safe to assume that at least a few deductions are, shall we say, questionable.

The theory seems to be: If you can get away with it, it ain't illegal.

The problem is some of us are not gamblers. If we're holding three aces at the poker table we might, just might, raise the bet a quarter. Nothing more.

Predictably, we're the same overly cautious person when filling out our income tax form. If it is not an obvious deduction, we don't dare claim it. Visions of nasty IRS auditors prancing into the office and embarrassing us in front of our co-workers reinforce this conservative behavior.

So we pay out the nose and, in turn, open ourselves up to public ridicule from...you guessed it...the riverboat gamblers.

"Take a chance," they are always saying. "The loopholes are there for your use. Go for it."

"But what if I get caught?" we whine in return. "I could go to jail."

"Not a chance," they reply. "The government is not interested in your puny salary. It wants the big boys."

That, I suppose, should be reassuring but somehow the fear persists. In fact, paranoia dictates our lives. We would like nothing better than to be risky and daring, but an overriding fear won't allow us that luxury. In short, we spend the bulk of our lives sneaking glances over our left shoulder, constantly afraid of being caught...even though at the time we're doing nothing wrong.

As you can imagine, this leads to a rather a stale lifestyle. For example:

— We won't run a red light, even if it is at 4 o'clock in the morning and the nearest oncoming car is two counties away.

— Under no circumstance would we consider calling in sick at the office, regardless of the fact that our temperature is 103 and our mere presence could endanger the well-being of anyone within coughing distance of us.

— If a sales clerk gives us too much change, we return it...not because we're particularly honest but, rather, out of fear that it is a conspiracy by the business to catch us doing something unethical.

— We refuse to tear off the label from a mattress simply because that's what the instructions on the label say.

I discussed this paranoia with a riverboat gambler the other day and he laughed. "Do as you please," he said. "As for me, I like taking chances. It makes life more interesting."

By the way, he's now doing six months in Huntsville for tax evasion.

UTPB has unique role in Permian Basin community

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

When a community decides it has come of age and deserves recognition as an important urban center, it usually tries to attract the kind of prestigious institutions which people associate with great cities.

Community leaders may build a sports stadium, dreaming of the reflected glory a legendary team like the Dallas Cowboys or New York Yankees can provide. But instead of importing a dynasty, what they usually end up with is an expansion team.

Or they may lobby the state for a major university. Few institutions confer more municipal status than a well-regarded university, and if it has a good sports program the city fathers can still build their stadium and kill two birds with one stone.

But if a community such as the Permian Basin expects the ivy-covered traditions of an established four-year university and gets instead a limited, upper-level institution such as the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, people may consider the school the academic equivalent of an expansion team.

"Many people expected the atmosphere of a four-year school — freshman frolics, frats and football," says UTPB President Duane Leach. "People said, 'Gee, it just doesn't seem like the kind of school I went to.' Well, it isn't."

UTPB's public image has suffered because people didn't understand the role of an upper level institution, says Leach.

"It's an avenue of renewal for people, particularly women, who want to go back and finish a degree or upgrade their education."

Most UTPB students are older (the average age is 29), have jobs and go to school at night.

"The tone, atmosphere and campus life are different from a traditional college. Many elements are not there without freshmen and sophomores," says Midland College President Jess Parrish. "But there's the added element of a curriculum designed to handle students who are working, students who are highly motivated. I think it has worked very well."

UTPB first opened its doors in 1973, after Midland lost a protracted battle with Odessa over its location. But no sooner was that controversy settled than a new one arose over whether to expand it to a four-year institution.

Leach, who has been in office less than a year, declines to take a position on adding the lower division, saying it's a decision for the UT Regents and the State Legislature.

"We'll become the best upper-level institution we can, and then see what happens."

The students generally are pleased with the education they get at UTPB, but they'd still prefer the school to expand to four-year status, says Jim Gaddy, president of the Student Senate.

"I think it serves its purpose as an upper-level institution," says Gaddy, but "I want it to be four-year."

Gaddy says the engineering and accounting departments and the various science departments are creditable, but that the humanities and arts suffer from the absence of a lower division, "and you can't have a great institution without attending to those areas."

Lily Tercero is vice president of the Student Senate and a business major who'll be entering the school's master of business administration program in the fall. She praises the education UTPB provides, but agrees with Gaddy that adding freshmen and sophomores would improve the school.

"Everybody agrees that the quality of education here is just as good as at a large school," she says, but "we don't have enough student life. We have two groups of students. Most work in the daytime and go to class at night — it's pretty difficult to get people together."

Adding a lower division would bring more variety and diversity to the student population, says Ms. Tercero.

But right now UTPB is concentrating more on building up its graduate programs than on adding to its undergraduate program. While up to now the school has emphasized teaching, "we'll see somewhat of a shift toward research," says Leach.

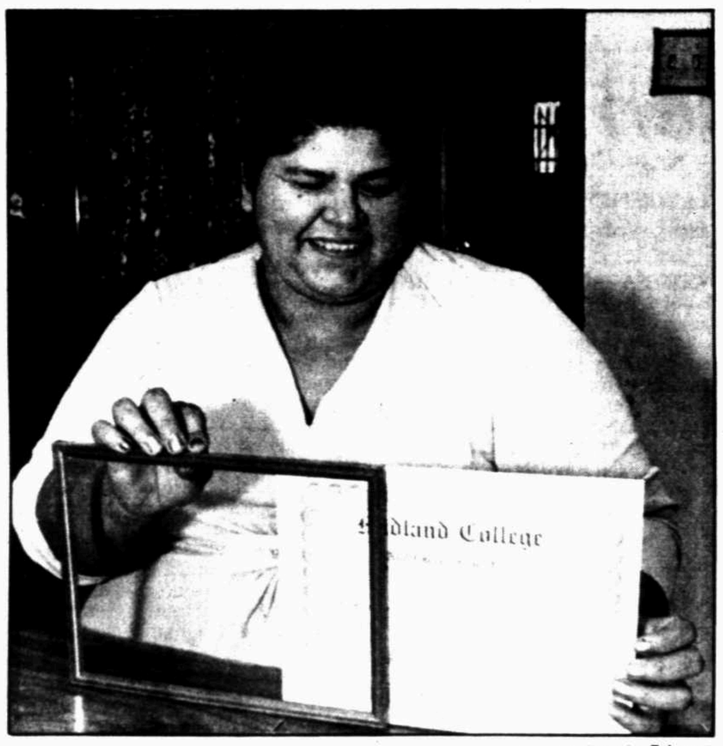

"What we see here is a major emphasis on energy, technology and diversification — an attempt to make the university a public resource. I do see the university playing a catalytic role in leading this area into economic diversity," he said. "I think the university has a bright future and can help provide a transforming vision for the entire region."

Leach points out that while the University of Texas recently celebrated its centennial, UTPB is 89 years younger.

"We're a university in process," he said. "We're still building those bonds with the community."

With expansion of programs will come more facilities, says Leach.

"We're going to need a student union building, a new library building, a new classroom complex and the possible addition of dormitories in the not too distant future — and we're confident that even as an upper-level institution, we'll be able to fill those dormitories."

About 40 percent of ESL students are Hispanic, Ms. Gideon said. Nearly as many are Indonesian. Oriental and Middle Eastern students are also common.

Usually only English is spoken in the classroom. "The teacher needs to be creative and dramatic. Maybe it's a frustrated actor that teaches ESL. They end up doing charades, drawing pictures on the board, waving their arms," she said.

"The students are wonderful from a teaching standpoint because they're highly motivated. They want to learn and they work very hard."

Most ESL students stay for a year, but some remain for several years, constantly improving their command of the language.

It takes a lot of strength and determination to stick with ABE programs, she said. Many students have families and jobs that also make demands on their time. "I know I'm not that strong," she admitted. "The cold statistics don't tell the whole story. It's these people that tell the story."

GOLD

"The real value comes out when you get into mining," he said. "But if you don't have a method, you can mine all day and you're just pushing rocks around."

And that's where researchers like Robinson come in. While he still uses the fire assay method currently the standard of the industry, Robinson has developed ways around the heat.

"It's not a panacea. It's not what you should do on all ores," he said, explaining that some gold is lost during stages in the heating process because of the presence of certain elements, such as tellurium, thallium and arsenic.

"Most commercial labs can't even spell them in terms of knowing about the ore," said Robinson.

Other methods the researcher uses are atomic absorption, which measures the amount of gold in a liquid solution heated to 2,000 degrees, and the most high-tech application — Inductively Coupled Plasma — which heats the solution to 10,000 degrees and allows fewer chemical interferences. Robinson has developed polymer beads which react with gold to separate out the precious metal from a liquid solution, simply by stirring.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

This atomic absorption spectrophotometer, used by Mike Robinson to measure the amount of gold in a liquid solution, is a long way from the primitive methods used in bygone years to test for gold.

Exxon has gotten the gold fever near Truth or Consequences, N.M., where they are currently drilling to test the depth of a deposit of gold ore discovered.

Meanwhile, Robinson will be in his lab, working on more efficient ways to extract the precious metal from the ore, though he has delved into the entire process from panning in streams to digging up rocks.

As long as his financing holds out, the research will continue.

"Research is a worse habit than smoking," he said. "It just never ends."

RAPE

"He's saying, 'I'm here giving you idiots information that leads straight to me and you're too dumb to catch on.'"

Pointing to a training manual, Grove said, "There was a case where an ambulance attendant would commit a sex murder, then go to work and wait for the call to pick up the body. Police would still be on the scene. It fulfilled his need to be close to danger."

The introverted rapist, however, would seldom get involved in a case because he'd rather melt into the general population and not stand out.

Once it's determined that the rapist is either organized or disorganized, more specific personality traits can be drawn and the field of suspects narrowed.

The sub-categories include the angry rapist, the sadistic rapist and the power-hungry rapist.

From there, authorities can match the profile with those of known sex offenders in the community and start closing the net.

Just as there are no absolutes in categorizing sex offenders, there is no hard and fast method of deterrence.

Precautions include not establishing a daily pattern in driving to work; locking house doors and windows; locking car doors; checking the car before entering it; keeping car and house keys on a separate ring from other keys to avoid fumbling for them; keeping the car in good working order to prevent breakdowns on the road; and not accepting assistance from strangers.

"A woman should stay in the vehicle and watch for passing patrol cars," said Grove. "If a stranger approaches offering to help, roll the window down slightly and say, 'If you really want to help, you wouldn't mind going to a phone and calling my husband or a repair shop for me.'

"Sometimes a rapist will disable a car in a mall or other shopping center and wait for the victim. Instead of accepting his help, she should go back inside and get aid."

Dogs have also proven a deterrent — at home or while out jogging or walking. But Grove doesn't recommend weapons such as knives, guns or Mace in the hands of the untrained.

"In the event of an actual attack," he added, "the only thing I can say is remain as calm and clear-headed as possible. There are just too many variables and unknowns to give concrete rules as to what to do. It just has to be played by ear."

More detailed information on sex crimes and how to avoid becoming a victim can be obtained from the Rape Crisis Center or the Crime Prevention Units of the police and sheriff's departments.

Woman shoots at washer, kills nephew

DALLAS (AP) — A woman's anger over an attempt to repossess her washing machine turned to tragedy when a bullet she fired at the washer ricocheted and fatally wounded her 7-year-old nephew, police said.

The woman pulled a .38-caliber pistol and fired three shots at two men who came to her house at 5 p.m. Friday to repossess her washer, police said. The men fled in a van and left the washer in the front yard.

Police said the woman then fired several shots at the washer. One of the bullets ricocheted off the top of the machine and struck her nephew, Erskine Sneed, as he stood in the front doorway of her house, investigators said.

100-year-old woman still stitching

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

One woman at a local nursing home stays in stitches by spending her time sewing, despite turning 100 March 13.

Linia Pollard, a resident of Stonebrook Care Center, has been sewing for more than 80 years. She said she learned because she "just tried."

"I used to have a machine but when I came here, they didn't have no place for it — but I always had a good machine," the smiling, dark-haired, 97-pound woman said. "But now I just sew by hand — it's something to do. It's a good pastime for me.

"However," she added, "I do wear my own clothes."

Dressed in a colorful plaid dress, Mrs. Pollard said friends constantly give her material from which to create clothing. According to Barbara Rice, activities director for the nursing home, "if someone was to bring her a new dress she would cut it apart and remake it."

When a roommate moved out a while back, Mrs. Pollard said she took her scissors to a dress left hanging in the closet. "But it really wasn't worth working on," she said, giggling.

She uses patterns, laying the material flat on her bed to cut while she sits in her wheelchair. Dresses are her specialty but she said she makes "one thing and then another."

A native of East Texas, Mrs. Pollard said her father died when she was young and she lived with her mother until marrying David Pollard. Actually, she said, the newlyweds continued to live with her mother until Pollard finished building them their own home.

"I married when I was 18 years old," she said, "He bought me a machine as soon as we was married and I went to sewing."

While she never made her husband any clothes, others did profit from her self-learned skill.

"I never had any children," she said, "but I raised an orphaned girl — my sister's child. And then when she got old enough to be married, I went to sewing for her children and for her, too."

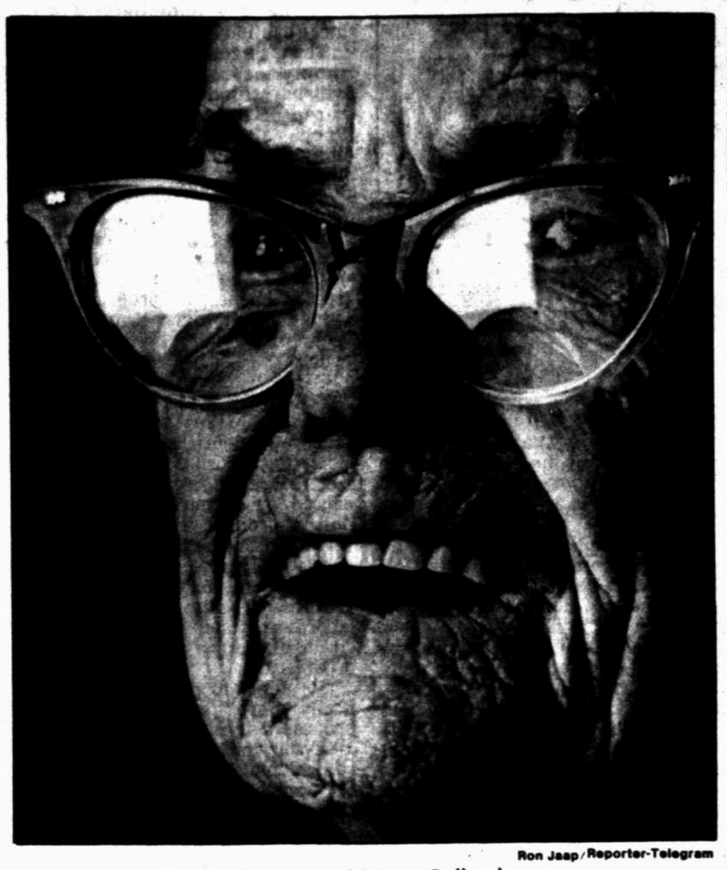

Her husband, a rancher, moved her out to Stanton. "We lived there for a quite awhile," Mrs. Pollard said. "He's buried there in Stanton." The year escapes her but, she said, "he's been gone a long time."

"I thought he was handsome," she said, smiling up at a picture of him on her wall. "He made me a good living. When he passed away, he left me plenty to live on and a good home."

Her move to Midland was made so she could be closer to her sister's grandchildren, now grown, who live here.

Although she used to make them clothes, she said she now sews for another reason.

"They just give me this (material) to pass time," she said with a laugh. "I sure have had lots of it give to me. I guess I won't never wear it all out."

THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT

Public hearings, oil wells lead City Council's agenda

Public hearings and oil wells constitute part of the agenda when the Midland City Council begins its meeting at 10 a.m. Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers.

In addition, the council will take another swing at raising fees at Hogan Park Golf Course. A meeting was held with local golfers last week and a proposal will be submitted to the council. Golfers had objected to the original plan to double membership fees.

The council will consider a request for a mineral lease at Cole Park, a permit for Discovery Operations to drill in the Adobe Meadows Addition, a permit in Wimberley Addition 900 feet from the south section line and another one 660 feet from the west section line.

At 4 p.m., the council will hold a public hearing on Texas Utilities Company request for a rate increase. The proposed hike has been studied and the council will approve an ordinance that will establish rates in accordance with what the consultants recommend.

At 1:35 p.m., a public hearing will be held on a request by Veloz Enterprises for a specific use permit for the sale of all alcoholic beverages in a restaurant at Wadley and Midland Drive.

A 1:40 p.m. public hearing will consider the request by John W. Rahlfs Company for a zone change from Planned District to Amended Planned District for an office development on the southwest corner of Illinois Avenue and North H Street.

A 1:45 p.m. public hearing will consider a request by Sherwood Mobile Estates for a specific use permit for a mobile home park on the north side of Highway 80 west of Elkins Road.

A 2 p.m. public hearing will consider on appeal a request from X-Pert Land Development for a zone change from LR-2, local retail, and Planned District for a housing development, to Amended Planned District for a shopping center at the intersection of Northgate and Midland Drive.

Scharbauer Brothers and Company will ask the council to defer the company's formal dedication of drainage facilities in their present plat. The council also will consider a resolution authorizing a park agreement with the firm.

In other action, the council will look at the Housing Assistance Plan for 1984-87 in conjunction with the Community Development Block Grant program, a new lease agreement with Rich-Air, a request from Amerada Hess for relocation of flow lines and a report on Southwest Wastewater Outfall System for Air Terminal to Water Pollution Control Plant

The agenda includes discussing a house built in the right of way on Rhode Island Avenue, establishing new speed limits on Midland Drive from Loop 250 North, setting up one-hour parking on Texas Avenue in front of the Public Safety Building and hearing a homeowner request use of the alley right of way for a private gas line.

MISD Board of Trustees

The meeting of the board of Midland school trustees Tuesday will be similar to, but probably briefer than, the last meeting. Items on the agenda include the second reading of 18 revisions in board policy and study of the 1984-85 preliminary budget.

There will be an open grievance hearing at 4 p.m. for a teacher appealing an evaluation.

The meeting will begin at 1:30 p.m. in the board room of the administration building.

Henderson Park added to schedule

The summertime van sponsored by the city Parks and Recreation Department will begin visiting to Henderson Park on Mondays starting this week. Three recreation leaders will be there to supervise the neighborhood children in games, crafts and special events at no charge.

Schedule for the rest of the week is as follows:

—Tuesdays: Wadley-Barron Park.
—Wednesdays: Tumbleweed.

Gramm to address Lions Club

From Staff Reports

U.S. Rep. Phil Gramm, R-College Station, will address the Downtown Lions Club here July 11 at noon in Midland Center. He is the Republican nominee in the U.S. senate race.

Gramm is known for co-authoring the Reagan economic recovery program. He resigned from Congress and won re-election as a Republican after House Speaker Tip O'Neill stripped him of his Budget Committee seat in reprisal for his efforts to aid Reagan's spending plan.

The congressman, who won the Republican nomination with 73 percent of the vote against three opponents, said Texans deserve an issue-oriented campaign in the general election race for the U.S. senate this year.

"The people of Texas face a clear choice between two dedicated advocates of distinctly different philosophies of government," said Gramm. "I have spent six years in Congress working for a balanced budget, lower taxes, greater economic opportunity for the working people of this country and a strong defense. My opponent has consistently demanded higher taxes, more spending and less defense."

Gramm introduced a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution on his first day in Congress — Jan 3, 1979. He pointed out that Democratic opponent Lloyd Doggett voted against the resolution adopted by the Texas Legislature which urged aproval of the balanced budget amendment.

A survey conducted May 8-9 by Texas pollster Lance Tarrance showed Gramm with an 11-point lead over Doggett.

Gramm's stop in Midland is part of a 75-city tour.

Midlanders claim device 'cures' trees

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Hal and Virginia Rachal are defying the "established order" of man's approach to solving problems.

"We have a different technique," said Rachal, a 72-year-old Midland rancher. "They (scientists) are being scientific; they have to follow the textbook."

He doesn't and isn't.

Rachal, his "natureologist" wife Virginia and a Midland College drafting instructor and computer programmer, Curt Pervier, 31, are experimenting with an electronic device designed after an undisclosed pattern in nature to free oak trees from the deadly live-oak decline and oak wilt.

"I have sure-fire proof it works," said Rachal. "We have tested it on several different types of (leaf) fungi and had success in each case."

Both live oak wilt and oak decline, which Rachal says are synonymous, are evidenced by parasites — fungi.

Live oak wilt is threatening destruction of evergreen live oaks in Texas Hill Country. The live oak wilt, which is "much more dramatic" than the oak decline, leaves branches wilted.

"There is no labeled chemical treatment for it (live oak wilt)," said Dr. Harold Kaufman, plant pathologist with Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Fort Stockton.

An estimated 10 percent of the live oaks in the Texas Hill Country have been killed by or are infested with live oak wilt.

Kaufman said he has isolated the live oak wilt fungus in Midland but has not broadcast his finding out of fear of panic and helplessness. "Why mention it?" he asked.

Oak decline fungus, which essentially clogs the vascular system of trees, has not been identified in Midland, Kaufman said. However, Texas A&M University researchers have recognized an effective chemical treatment via thiabendazole (Arbotect 20-S and Arbotect S), which is injected into the tree. To be effective in countering the disease, the chemical must be injected before the tree is too far gone.

"IT'S LIKE arteriosclerosis," Pervier said of the disease.

Rachal says the electronic device, an amplifier concealed in a protective plastic tube and buried in a shallow grave at the base of the infested tree, possibly is a panacea.

Hal Rachal

Virginia Rachal

Curt Pervier

The design, copyrighted by the Rachals, is patterned after a common phenomenon in nature. They declined to disclose the pattern.

Mrs. Rachal designed the amplifier-antenna.

"I'm nature's girl," she said. "I study it constantly.

Rachal said his wife has "learned things about nature that are not in textbooks."

"You use your mind and observe," Mrs. Rachal said. "I have marvelous powers of observation."

The device puts out a "very high frequency radiation into the area" and acts in concert with the natural radiation — the electronic field, aura or halo — emanated by trees and in all of nature.

The device is effective for 50 feet and possibly will eliminate fungi from all plants, Rachal said.

"If it will cause that fungus to detach itself from the host, it (the fungus) will have no way to survive. It will starve to death."

The device has "no ill side effects, no hazards whatsoever" to man, plant or beast, he said.

"I have been sleeping with one under my bed for seven years," said Rachal.

Pervier, friends to the Rachals, said the shape of the device serves as an antenna. "It's a naturally occurring pattern. It revitalizes trees."

RACHAL SAID he has proof the device has rid coffee plants in Nicaragua and crabapple trees and euonymus shrubs in Midland of leaf fungi.

"We will not disclose that (specifics about the device)," Pervier says. "It's a trade secret." And Rachal says the design is so well "camouflaged" that not even an analytical scientist could figure out the design were he to break open the sealed 3-inch plastic tube, which is about 18 inches long.

Rachal admitted he realizes the scientific community, including Texas A&M University researchers, scientists and horticulturists, will think he's up to "hocus-pocus."

But Rachal said there's no sleight of hand in his technique or promotion. "We're not going to market it unless we can see we're successful (in controlling the vascular fungi)."

But contrary to the norm, Rachal said he is not wasting time on traditional research, which might take two or three or more years to substantiate the effectiveness of his device.

"I'm not going after this thing scientifically. I have my own plan. By the time they (A&M) scientists prove it up, all the trees would be dead," reasoned Rachal.

Rachal conceded that the apparent health of plants exposed to the secret device just may be coincidental. But he said the device is effective in controlling fungi and recovery of the infested trees and shrubs is more than coincidence. But the "$64 question" is whether or not the harm done to an infested tree or shrub is reversible after the fungi have been killed.

And there are risks involved, he said.

RACHAL SAID he will unconditionally guarantee the effectiveness of the device.

"The plan is for this to be permanent; there will be no wearing out to it. And once it's cured, it (the infestation) will never reoccur."

"It has the potential," said the more cautious Pervier.

The "unconditional guarantee" simply means the buyer's money will be refunded if the tree is not cured of fungus-related diseases. Rachal also hinted that his plans include handsome profits off the investment.

The Rachals declined to disclose their asking price for the device but indicated the cost would be pro rata — according to the value of the tree or trees to the property owner, since trees often enhance property values.

Plant pathologist Kaufman was leery of Rachal's techniques and claims.

FIRST OF ALL, Kaufman said, the cause of any injury to a tree must be scientifically established. What Rachal might identify as live oak decline or oak wilt could be caused by chemical damage, stress due to drought, lack of oxygen or water to the root system due to overly-compacted soil, too much salt or inadequate fertilizer. A sampling of a tree or shrub would have to be laboratory tested to determine if a strain of fungus was attacking the organism.

"He needs to prove the fungus is really there," said Kaufman. Just because a tree apparently recovers after this "magic elixir" just may be coincidental. "A tree that's in trouble can lose leaves and re-leaf at anytime."

Kaufman recommended that Rachal take a scientific approach to testing the device.

"The guy (Rachal) may be sincere," he surmised, but he suggested that the Rachals and Pervier "obviously don't know anything about biology."

Rachal, his wife, and Pervier agreed.

"That's right," they said one after the other.

But Pervier said their academic background may have little correlation with their expertise.

"The Wright Brothers were not aeronautical engineers," he said. "They didn't know what aeronautics was."

Rachal said he doesn't expect approval from the scientific community.

"We'll be surprised if any scientist who follows the textbook would give any credence to the device. I'd be startled...if I were a textbook scientist," Rachal said, "I wouldn't give any credence to it."

Jehovah's Witnesses convene in Midland

Approximately 5,420 persons raised their voices in song as 60 new adherents to the faith walked out of Chaparral Center Saturday during the third day of a four-day district convention for Jehovah's Witnesses.

A special baptismal service was held Saturday. After Joseph Cillis delivered the main address, "Subjecting Ourselves Under Jehovah's Mighty Hand," baptism by complete submersion was held in the pool at Rodeway Inn.

Cillis stressed to the new comverts that they have made changes in their lives and "future changes would be a part of a continual process toward a new personality.

"You have made changes in the way you think, the way act and the way you live," Cillis said.

The Witnesses adhere to fundamental Bible teachings pertaining to moral conduct. They are opposed to premarital sex, homosexuality, unscriptural divorce and the use of tobacco and drugs. They also believe each member is a minister and should be involved in both preaching and teaching activities.

The principal speech of the convention, "A Government That Accomplishes What Many Cannot," will be delivered by L.E. Punko at 2 p.m. today. There is no charge. The public is invited to attend.

EDUCATION

This is the last full week for prospective students to sign up for the second summer session. Everyone planning to take a credit course or two during the second summer session should come to the Office of Student Services in the Administration Building between 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday of this week or on Monday, July 2. That will be the final day for early counseling and issuance of time permits.

Official registration day is Monday, July 9, with classes starting on Tuesday, July 10.

This is the last full week of classes for the first summer session. Students will have their final exams on July 2.

Accounting instructor Tom Vannaman was hospitalized at Midland Memorial last week for a heart attack. Both he and Dr. Don Hunt now are out of the coronary care unit, back home and recovering nicely.

That was just part of the college sick list as no less than nine employees or relatives were in the hospital at the same time.

Not all of it was bad news, however, as business instructor Connie Ladd and her husband, Jack, became parents of a son on June 14. Jack Ladd Jr. was enrolled as the first child in Midland College's child care center for September 1985, three months ago when his mother applied for a year's maternity leave.

Although summer officially arrived last week, it really became spring on the campus when the crepe myrtles finally started blooming. They had been struggling to blossom out after being severely frozen last winter. And, if visitors look in the raised planters on Beal Plaza, they can see the first portulaca blooms of the season.

There's one absolutely beautiful tree hidden away between wings of the Occupational-Technical Building. We've been calling it a catalpa for several years, but maintenance director John Hohenberger has corrected us. He says it's really a Japanese Pagoda tree.

• • •

Piers for the support columns of the new Health Sciences Building are being poured, so it won't be long before the steel beams start coming out of the ground. That will allow the sidewalk superintendents to get a sense of the size and shape of the new facility.

• • •

In addition to its many credit and non-credit courses, the college also hosts a number of other meetings, seminars, and training programs which are attended by people for all over the West Texas-New Mexico area. Just last week, there was a program on aging and Alzheimer's Disease, plus a training program put on for area auto mechanics on how to align wheels on front-wheel drive vehicles. We even learned that the rear wheels have to be aligned on the front-wheel drive car.

It's a rare week when there isn't at least one special event scheduled for the campus...and that's the way we like it, as we strive to operate as a comprehensive community college.

• • •

We've just received word about a "Tax Shelter Seminar" which is to be held July 26, co-sponsored by Midland College and the Midland Board of Realtors. The free seminar, slated in the Allison Fine Arts Building recital hall, is free. It is scheduled to run from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director for Midland College.

Rescue crew reaches Scouts

BALMORHEA, Texas (AP) — About a hundred Boy Scouts stranded by high waters in the Davis Mountains last week were finally reached Saturday by a Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation crew, a department spokesman said.

The scouts were isolated at their summer camp Wednesday after heavy rains flooded out a rural road near Balmorhea, about 150 miles southwest of Odessa.

Midland radio club participating in field day contact competition

From Staff Reports

The Midland Amateur Radio Club is participating this weekend in the American Radio Relay League's Field Day contest, which simulates an emergency test to see which club can log the most radio contacts in a 24-hour period.

"The idea is to see if we are able to set up and use communications under emergency conditions," said Ed Meyer, field day chairman for the 120-member Midland club.

The club members will keep three transmitters in continuous operation throughout the test, which began at 1 p.m. Saturday. After the first three hours, club members had logged 500 contacts, "which is very good. If we can maintain that pace we'll do very well" in the national contest, said Meyer.

The club's antennas were mounted on a derrick at OIME Inc. on Highway 80 near Odessa, and the members were taking turns huddling around the transmitters in a crowded shed at the bottom of the derrick, trying to contact other amateur operators across the U.S. and Canada.

"The idea (of the contest) is to see if we are able to set up and use (radio) communications under emergency conditions."

— Ed Meyer, field day chairman

"So far we've hit Ontario, Manitoba and Rhode Island," said Meyer. "But last night when we were setting up, we talked to Pakistan, Yugoslavia and Russia."

The Midland club is in Class 2A, which means it competes against other clubs with transmitters up to 150 watts. Other classifications go up to 1,000 watts, said Meyer.

The contest may be fun for the club members, but it has a serious purpose. Club members are preparing themselves to provide the community with communications during an emergency involving tornados, flash floods or high winds, when normal power has been knocked out, Meyer said.

"This exercise is more of a training exercise and to show everybody what we can do."

Funds sought for service for elderly

From Staff Reports

Applications for funds to provide services for older people are being accepted by the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission's Area Agency on Aging.

These services include transportation, legal services, meal delivery to people confined to their homes, and other supportive and nutrition services. The eligible counties are Midland, Andrews, Borden, Crane, Dawson, Ector, Gaines, Glasscock, Howard, Loving, Martin, Pecos, Reeves, Terrell, Upton, Ward and Winkler.

For further information on applying for these funds, contact the Permian Basin Area Agency on Aging, P.O. Box 6391, Midland Regional Air Terminal, Midland, Texas, 79711, or call 563-1061.

The deadline for applications is 4 p.m. July 30, for the contract period running from Oct. 1, 1984 to Sept. 30, 1985. A meeting for subcontractors and potential subcontractors will be held June 29 from 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission's offices at 2514 Pliska Dr. at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Midland home burglarized

In a burglary complaint to city police, the home of Kenneth Joe Baker at 5114 Belaire reportedly was broken into sometime Friday.

A neighbor reported an open window and officers also found the front door open. Taken were a home computer, stereo equipment and a television set. The loss was placed at $1,340.

Hearing postponed

DALLAS (AP) — A trial board hearing has been postponed for an ambulance nurse-dispatcher fired after she argued with a caller for about eight minutes over the need of emergency service for his dying stepmother.

At the request of Billye Myrick's attorney, the board decided Friday to cancel Monday's scheduled hearing for up to 30 days pending a decision in federal court on her suit that the city's appeals process is unconstitutional, Assistant City Secretary Barry Davis said.

Hexachlorophene is a phenol derivative that is not inactivated by soap. It is an antiseptic that is effective in killing many different types of germs. If used continuously it can also reduce body odor. It has also proven to be very effective in the reduction of staphyloccal germ infections in infants in hospitals. There are, however, some problems associated with its use. It is quite quickly absorbed into the blood steam through mucous membranes. It is absorbed to some degree by intact skin and will enter the body in large quantities if the skin is broken with a wound or burn. For these and other reasons, the FDA has banned its use except by prescription.

HINT:

Hexachlorophene was frequently found in deodorants soaps.

Medalists

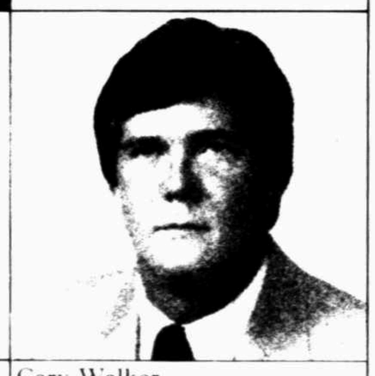

City firemen Dave Felice, left, and Reginald Rankin clasp hands in victory after winning medals in the 2nd Annual Firefighter Olympics held this month in Dallas. Felice won gold medals in both the 10-kilometer run and the 800-meter run. Rankin took a bronze medal in broad jumping. Also, the fire department's bowling team captured a bronze medal. About 20 members of the department competed for the first time in the recreational games and were pitted against departments from throughout the state, including cities the size of Houston and San Antonio.

Battered Women's Center plans first benefit

Text by Lisa Gerlock

Anyone who does notunderstand the whole vegetable garden orphaned-dolls syndrome may be even more confused by this one:

Three authentic Cabbage Patch dolls with official papers have been renamed Oil Patch Cabbage Patch dolls. Decked out in their minks, diamonds and gold, they will be seeking new families July 3 at Midland Center. Their adoption price will be paid to "The Most Expensive Little Picnic in Texas," to benefit the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

The $100-per-couple and $250-per-sponsor tickets include a catered dinner, an auction, entertainment by the Levee Band and arts and crafts booths. The picnic begins at 8 p.m. and lasts until midnight.

Other items to be auctioned are collectibles circa 1900, such as stained glass windows from the original Scharbauer home, lighting fixtures, books, nightgowns, a copper table lamp and a server buffet. A pair of brass candlesticks circa 1850 will also be auctioned.

Decorative pillows handmade by volunteers and women at the center will be sold at the "Pillow Palace." And more than 150 pairs of "pre-owned" jeans, which have been donated to the center, will be sold at the "Junkie Jean" booth.

Women and volunteers of the center compiled a cookbook featuring their recipes and poetry.

Area artists and craftsmen are also expected to have booths at the downhome gala.

The dolls, Irv Ace, Kristi Bunny and Bellamy Newton, are dressed in cabbage clothes, but trimmed with gold and diamond stickpins and mink trimmings.

The dolls' jewelry is 14-karat gold and the diamonds are ⅛-carat. The jewelry was designed by Ray's Jewelry. Mink donations and designs were made by Evaughn Barrett, a former estate appraiser who is also involved in the picnic's auction of collectibles.

Proceeds from the picnic will benefit the Battered Women Center's plan for a full facility addition to the house. The goal is to build a two-story, 20-room and multi-restroom facilities to serve as temporary emergency shelter for 40 people. It would be an addition to its current housing with a capacity of 32.

Limited space has caused the center to arrange for accommodations at other facilities for four families, a total of 13 people, within the last week, according to Irene Clouse, executive director of the center.

"And these women are in life-threatening situations," said Lesa Deason-Kubik, publicity chairman of the fund-raising event.

The center's philosophy is to keep the family together in times of trauma. Housing victims at the center enables counselors to offer group counseling programs for adults and children. Legal and medical funds, launched in January, provide for emergency treatments and first time appointments with legal services for victims at the center.

The center has not housed less than 10 people at one time in almost two years, according to Ms. Clouse, and the average cost for a woman's stay at the center is $144 per week.

The center's property and house was purchased in December 1979 and should be paid off this year, said Ms. Clouse. The property, housing and counseling financing is included in the center's operating budget. The planned addition, however, will be financed through the center's capital fund.

Private donations and other contributions feed its operating budget, 32 percent and 68 percent respectively.

The center will continue to rely on donations for operating expenses, however, because the picnic is exclusively for the capital fund, she said.

More ticket information is available by contacting Charleen Rosebery, 683-8928.

AT WORK

Organizations encourage participation

BY ADELE SCHEELE, PH.D.

Most of us belong to some professional group. As dues-paying members, we go to dinner or luncheon meetings every so often to eat the usual chicken and peas and hear the half-hour celebrity speaker. For a few of us, getting out and being seen is enough. But for others, however, going becomes even more painful than not going. So we drop out after a while because not much happens. Small talk over a glass of wine grows tiring, or hearing about successes of others throws us into fits of disappointment or jealousy.

To cement group participation is the aim of many professional associations. They want to develop their members and therefore themselves as organizations. These aims provide the double agenda that is critical for every association.

Women in Film is a perfect example of how a group tries to coalesce its members, who belong to the industry in so many different ways: writers, editors, producers, actresses, agents, managers, creative directors, lawyers. To supplement their meetings, WIF has created, like many other organizations, a weekend retreat earmarked specifically for self-improvement and networking. This past weekend, at their 7th annual retreat at a Malibu campsite, I had the honor to facilitate their purpose: How to sell themselves better.

After the Friday night dinner, videotape equipment was set up. Each member had one minute to pitch something that she was trying to make happen — a script to sell, an actor to represent, a project or property to obtain — to the group as if it were the one whose confidence or signature she had to get. The presence of the camera (even for people used to at least being behind one in their daily work) struck hard.

But even more, pitching to a "safe group," one of peers who do sign the contract or consummate the deal, pushed emotional buttons. What usually happens in any safe group is that all defenses are caught off guard. The shell that protects us when we actually go out to sell doesn't get a chance to form. So out comes real signals: sing-song deliveries, darting eyes, visible embarrassment at one's very qualifications.

For those hours that it took for each of the 70 to have her minute's pitch, everyone was riveted. Members knew each other in sixty seconds more profoundly than some of them had in any other exercise. During the replaying of the tapes during the rest of the weekend, women sat in two's and three's openmouthed at the visible revelation of talent and hesitancy to tell about it.

The next morning, I spoke about that very disparity — having talent but not owning up to it. Work situations were brought up by some while other members had suggestions from their own successes. Lunch came as a real interrupter.

The afternoon brought more show-and-tell in a panel of four experts whose successes were well known. The four shared behind-the-scenes stories of how some of those successes were built. The audience bombarded the panelists with questions about how one persists, negotiates, or gets a toehold in a new direction. Comic relief came Saturday night with live, rehearsed performances and then spontaneous singing and dancing. I doubt that anyone slept. Some played Trivial Pursuit while others continued singing in harmony or sharing stories, personal and professional.

Sunday morning brought my ritual farewells. Again, round-robin, each member stood to explain the double agenda: what she experienced during the weekend personally or professionally and what she, in turn, now will contribute to the organization. Sounds simple enough; yet no one was prepared for the honest, profoundly emotional revelations that issued. As audience to each other, each member evoked courage and compassion.

WIF proved the five needs and wants of the membership and the organization:

1. Everyone needs to belong and be acknowledged.
2. Everyone wants to improve her own skills, and to be allowed to reveal herself.
3. Everyone needs to help others and use her influence.
4. Everyone needs to come away for a weekend, without their personal family, to spend uninterrupted time with their professional family.
5. Everyone wants the group to be greater than she individually is.

These five reasons-for-being seem the same for every group. If you belong to one and can orchestrate such a retreat for a weekend or even for a day, you singlehandedly can change the meaning of the group's survival — and your own. I'd be pleased to hear what you can achieve through your association.

Chocolate blamed in dog's death

Chocolate has been blamed for many things over the years, including obesity, acne, hyperactivity and infertility, and now pet death.

In a report from the Texas Veterinary Medical Diagnostic Laboratory (TVMDL) published in a recent Texas Veterinary Medical Journal, chocolate was reported to be the cause of death in a Springer Spaniel. The dog died in seizures one day after eating two pounds of chocolate chips.

The ingredient in chocolate toxic to dogs is theobromine, a caffeine-related stimulant.

Agitation and loss of bladder control can be symptoms of theobromine poisoning in dogs when seen after they have eaten large amounts of chocolate.

Group urges better chemistry education

WASHINGTON (AP) — Too little science is taught in elementary schools, too few high school teachers are well-grounded in chemistry, and even college courses in chemistry fail to fill the needs of students, according to a special task force of the American Chemical Society.

In a recent report they offered 40 recommendations to help solve these and other pressing problems of chemistry education.

"One of the most important changes that must be made is a reemphasis of laboratory work," says Dr. Peter Yankwich, a chemistry professor at the University of Illinois, Urbana, and chair of the task force. "Students are expected to learn from watching a teacher demonstrate a principle like neutralization of an acid with a base, but it's just not the same as giving a student 'hands on' experience."

Laboratory exercises have been used less and less in recent years because they are expensive and the logistics, such as scheduling time for each student to use a limited number of instruments, can be difficult, according to the report.

The task force emphasizes that laboratory work is important for students at all levels, from kindergarten to graduate school. In high school, the report says, 30 percent of class time should be dedicated to laboratory work.

Another major recommendation is for "vigorous and large expansion of National Science Foundation and other federal programs to upgrade the quality of science instruction through direct service to teachers." According to the report, only a quarter of elementary school teachers feel confident in teaching what little science is in their curriculum.

At the high school level, says Yankwich, the vast majority of students are not being taught chemistry by certificated teachers of chemistry. They are being taught by persons who have minimal background in chemistry and little if any qualifications to maintain and advance their working familiarity with the subject.

"We need to encourage teachers to keep up with the advances in their subjects, to expand their understanding of the sciences," he says. As recently as 1977, almost half of all high school science teachers had taken part in NSF-sponsored education programs, but those programs no longer exist and the number of teachers taking part in continuing education programs has declined significantly.

The task force also recommends establishing guidelines for college-level chemistry courses aimed at non-science majors.

"Chemistry is a neglected liberal art with an important role in contemporary society," Yankwich says. "Understanding it is fundamental, particularly because our society must make many important decisions about technical questions on energy, health, disposal of toxic wastes, and other subjects that affect all of us.

"Though we are deeply troubled by the problems of and facing chemistry," the task force report says, "we are optimistic that the people will sense the hazard and support changes that must be made."

Lightning strikes

BOSTON (AP) — The tremendous electrical charge accumulated in the atmosphere during a violent storm will take the shortest possible route to reach ground.

That's why lightning strikes high places, especially mountaintops, much more often than anywhere else, according to the Appalachian Mountain Club.

The club says that if you are hiking in the mountains and see a thunderstorm on the way, discard your metal-framed backpack and get down off the peaks and ridges as soon as you can. Get below the timberline if possible, if not, lie down flat and insulate yourself from the ground as much as possible.

Study reports HMOs cheaper

BOSTON (AP) — The rapid growth of health maintenance organizations is likely to mean considerably less use of hospitals in the years to come, according to a study released today.

The study confirms that HMO patients spend substantially less time inside hospitals than do people who seek care from private physicians. Other researchers have found the same thing, but this study demonstrates that the HMOs' cost advantage doesn't result from enrolling healthier patients.

The HMO doctors studied "were simply practicing a different style of medicine from that of fee-for-service physicians," one that is less "hospital-intensive," the researchers found.

About 13½ million Americans now belong to HMOs, and they are growing rapidly — in part because they cost less than ordinary health insurance.

People who join HMOs pay flat fees that entitle them to as much medical care as they need. There are no deductibles, and even annual physical exams are covered. However, clients must accept physicians who are on the HMO payroll.

Despite the earlier findings, some experts suspected that HMOs are cheaper because, to begin with, their clientele is in better shape. Most people enroll through group plans where they work, so they must be at least well enough to hold jobs.

The new research, part of an $80 million study by The Rand Corp., concludes that differences in the patients served cannot explain the HMOs' cost advantage.

The project, directed by Dr. Willard G. Manning, was published in the New England Journal of Medicine. An accompanying editorial by Dr. Alain C. Enthoven of Stanford University called it "a landmark on the journey toward a cost-effective health care system."

The experiment randomly assigned 1,149 people to the Group Health Cooperative of Puget Sound in Seattle. Meanwhile, 431 others were given free care from any fee-for-service physicians that they wanted to see.

The HMO patients were 40 percent less likely to be admitted to a hospital than were those who got free care from doctors in private practice. And the average annual cost of their care was 28 percent lower.

"One might expect considerably less hospitalization as the HMO market share grows, because the national hospitalization rate is not far from the free-plan value," the researchers concluded.

The HMO business has grown dramatically since 1973, when there were just 72 of them in the United States. By the beginning of 1984, the nation had 280. HMOs are especially popular in California, where one in seven people belong, and in Minneapolis-St. Paul, where one in three are enrolled.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Recently it was my pleasure to come across some old scrapbooks and other memorabilia from the defunct French Heels Club. It was fun to reminisce with other former members about the club in its heyday and the role it played in helping us find our niche in the community.

The club, a social organization for young, single, working women, was a visible force in Midland during the 50s and 60s. Mrs. Charles Wallace, the former Shirley Culbertson, now of Horseshoe Bay, was the club's first president when it was organized in 1949. Ann Semple, a fourth grade teacher at Henderson Elementary School, was the prexy when the club disbanded in 1971.

The club not only provided a social outlet for the young women, but an opportunity for community involvement. For several years the club sponsored a Charity Ball, and among other civic projects the members ushered for the Midland Community Theatre and assisted with the Community Concerts membership campaign. They enjoyed a variety of social activities, including picnics, dances and cocktail parties, with the Bachelors Club.

Many of its members still reside in Midland and continue to be active in civic and social affairs. Among them are Betty Jo (Mrs. George) Moberly, Camille (Mrs. Bill) Leifeste, Shirley (Mrs. George) Mayes, Betty (Mrs. Pomeroy) Smith, Mary Frances (Mrs. Jim) Beverley, Jeanie (Mrs. Tom) Johnson, Susan (Mrs. Ron) Britton, Sally Kelly, Peggy (Mrs. Glenn) Woods, Sara (Mrs. Cooper) Robbins, Barbara (Mrs. Steve) Rowland and Ann (Mrs. Jerry) Scott.

I envision a reunion of French Heels Club members. Wouldn't it be fun to see everyone again? Somehow that should be possible although it would take some doing. Do we hear any volunteers?

MOZELLE (MRS. HOWELL) WEBB recently returned from a week's trip to Washington and Canada. In Washington she visited with former Midlanders LaVerne and G.D. West at their home in Richland and with cousins at Moses Lake and also toured Grand Coulee Dam.

The Wests accompanied Mrs. Webb to Penticton, British Columbia, for a brief stay. They particularly enjoyed a tour of the Okanagan Game Farm, where they saw a variety of wild animals in their natural habitat.

The Wests' Midland friends will be happy to hear that they are hopeful of moving back to Texas in the near future, but have not yet settled on a location.

ELEVEN MIDLAND GIRLS are currently enjoying the first session of Camp Waldemar, which is located at Hunt in the heart of the Texas Hill Country. In addition Midland is represented by Ann Grimes who is one of the camp counselors. A student at UT-Austin, she is the daughter of Sarah Lew and David Grimes.

The local campers are Alyson Aldridge, daughter of Roberta and Charles Fraser; Bridget Burleson, daughter of Cindy Burleson; Kendall Collins, daughter of Susan and Gary Askins; Holly Herd, daughter of Patty and Tevis Herd; Jeanny Hyde, daughter of Nancy and Woody Woodman; Allison Isbell, daughter of Linda Isbell and Rocky Isbell; Kaye Knox, daughter of Mary Alice and Gordon Knox; Sherwood Wagner, daughter of Lissa and Cy Wagner; Beth Ann Williams, daughter of Ann and Ronnie Williams; Elizabeth Woodside, daughter of Lucy and John Woodside, and Kathleen Yeager, daughter of Marianne and Wilbur Yeager.

Camp Waldemar will celebrate its 60th anniversary in 1985.

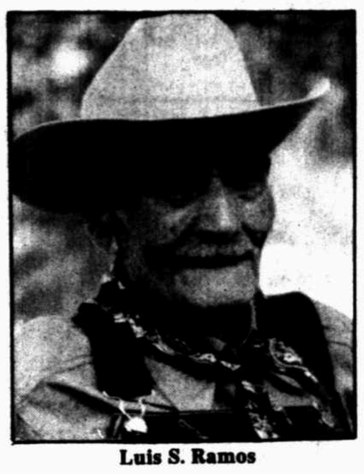

IN VISITING WITH Jim Gardner (who is a "few" years my junior), I remarked that I recently had enjoyed "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo." He responded, "Oh, I have that album." But I was referring to a rerun of the 1944 movie that I had seen not long ago, while he was talking about a record with that title by the rock group "Jefferson Airplane." The generation gap rears its ugly head again.

THREE YOUNG MIDLAND women, Kyan Harvey, Gina Sparks and Deanne Spaw, recently enjoyed a week's cruise along Mexico's West Coast. They sailed on The Tropicale, stopping at Puerto Vallarta, Mazatlan and Cabo San Lucas.

While the ship was docked they enjoyed the beautiful beaches, swimming, parasailing and shopping. On shipboard they took part in a variety of entertainment, particularly enjoying the disco.

Woman's house floats

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Whenever Carole Edmunds goes on vacation, she takes her house along. Ms. Edmunds, a software development engineer for Honeywell Aerospace and Defense, lives on a 38-foot sloop that is moored at Clearwater Beach.

Her boat has all the conveniences of a regular house. She holds a Coast Guard captain's license for 70-ton, oceangoing vessels and she has learned how to repair the boat's two-cylinder auxiliary diesel engine.

Her first trip in her boat, which she bought in 1979, not only was the longest she has taken so far, it also proved to be a grueling initiation. It was her first open-water sailing experience and the Gulf of Mexico was stormy as she and a crew of three sailed from Slidell, La. Winds up to 55 miles an hour forced her to put into Gulfport, Miss., for two days.

FIGURING MONTHLY PAYMENT

It's decision time, Mr. Home Buyer. You have enough funds for the down payment and you qualify for the mortgage. Now, can you afford the monthly payments?

To figure out how much you can carry, convert all amounts into monthly figures. If you are paid twice a month, add two paychecks. Incorporate infrequent expenses (vacations, gifts, clothes) by adding them up and dividing by 12. Your total monthly income may include salary, interest, dividends and bonuses. Typical monthly expenses are food, utilities, education, transportation, taxes, insurance payments, etc. Your total monthly income minus monthly expenses will give you the amount available for monthly housing costs.

This total must cover all of your housing expenses, including mortgage payments (principal plus interest plus tax insurance), maintenance and repairs. The higher the down payment and the longer the repayment time, the lower the monthly payments will be.

If it looks like you can make it but it's going to be tight - don't feel unique.Most new home buyers feel the same way, but in a matter of a few years you'll be glad you made the purchase.

Doctor: Comparison shopping best way to choose physicians

NEW YORK (AP) — Most consumers are concerned enough with what they buy to shop around and make comparisons, but that is not often the case when it comes to selection of a doctor, says Dr. Jeffrey A. Stein, an associate attending physician at The Presbyterian Hospital here.

"More and more people comparison shop for the other things that they use," he points out. "But when it comes to making one of the most important consumer decisions in your life, you probably make the choice of a doctor based on little more information than a good word from a friend or a convenient office address.

"Too often the choice boils down to personality more than anything else," he adds. "People usually just call up a friend and ask, 'Who do you like?' It's important to like your physician. That obviously has something to do with the healing process. But to base your choice solely on personality is foolishness. There are objective references that can be used, too."

He suggests that a person in need of a physician contact a major teaching hospital in the area. They often have referral panels of physicians willing to serve as "family doctors."

"The fact that a doctor is on the staff of a university teaching hospital tells you that he or she has been prescreened for you," Stein says. "You know that all of the doctors there have had their credentials looked over pretty carefully by the university and hospital staff."

But he adds, "By itself, that's no guarantee." He recommends that people do a little research on their own. This entails more than just reading the diplomas hanging in the doctor's office.

Stein suggests consulting the "Directory of Medical Specialists," available in most libraries. It tells where a doctor attended medical school, where he or she was trained, in what and for how long. It also tells by which boards a doctor is accredited, professional affiliations and their entrance requirements.

You should, Stein advises, choose only those physicians who work or were trained at institutions that you know of and trust. Once you are satisfied with a doctor's credentials, he suggests that you should learn more about how the practice is run.

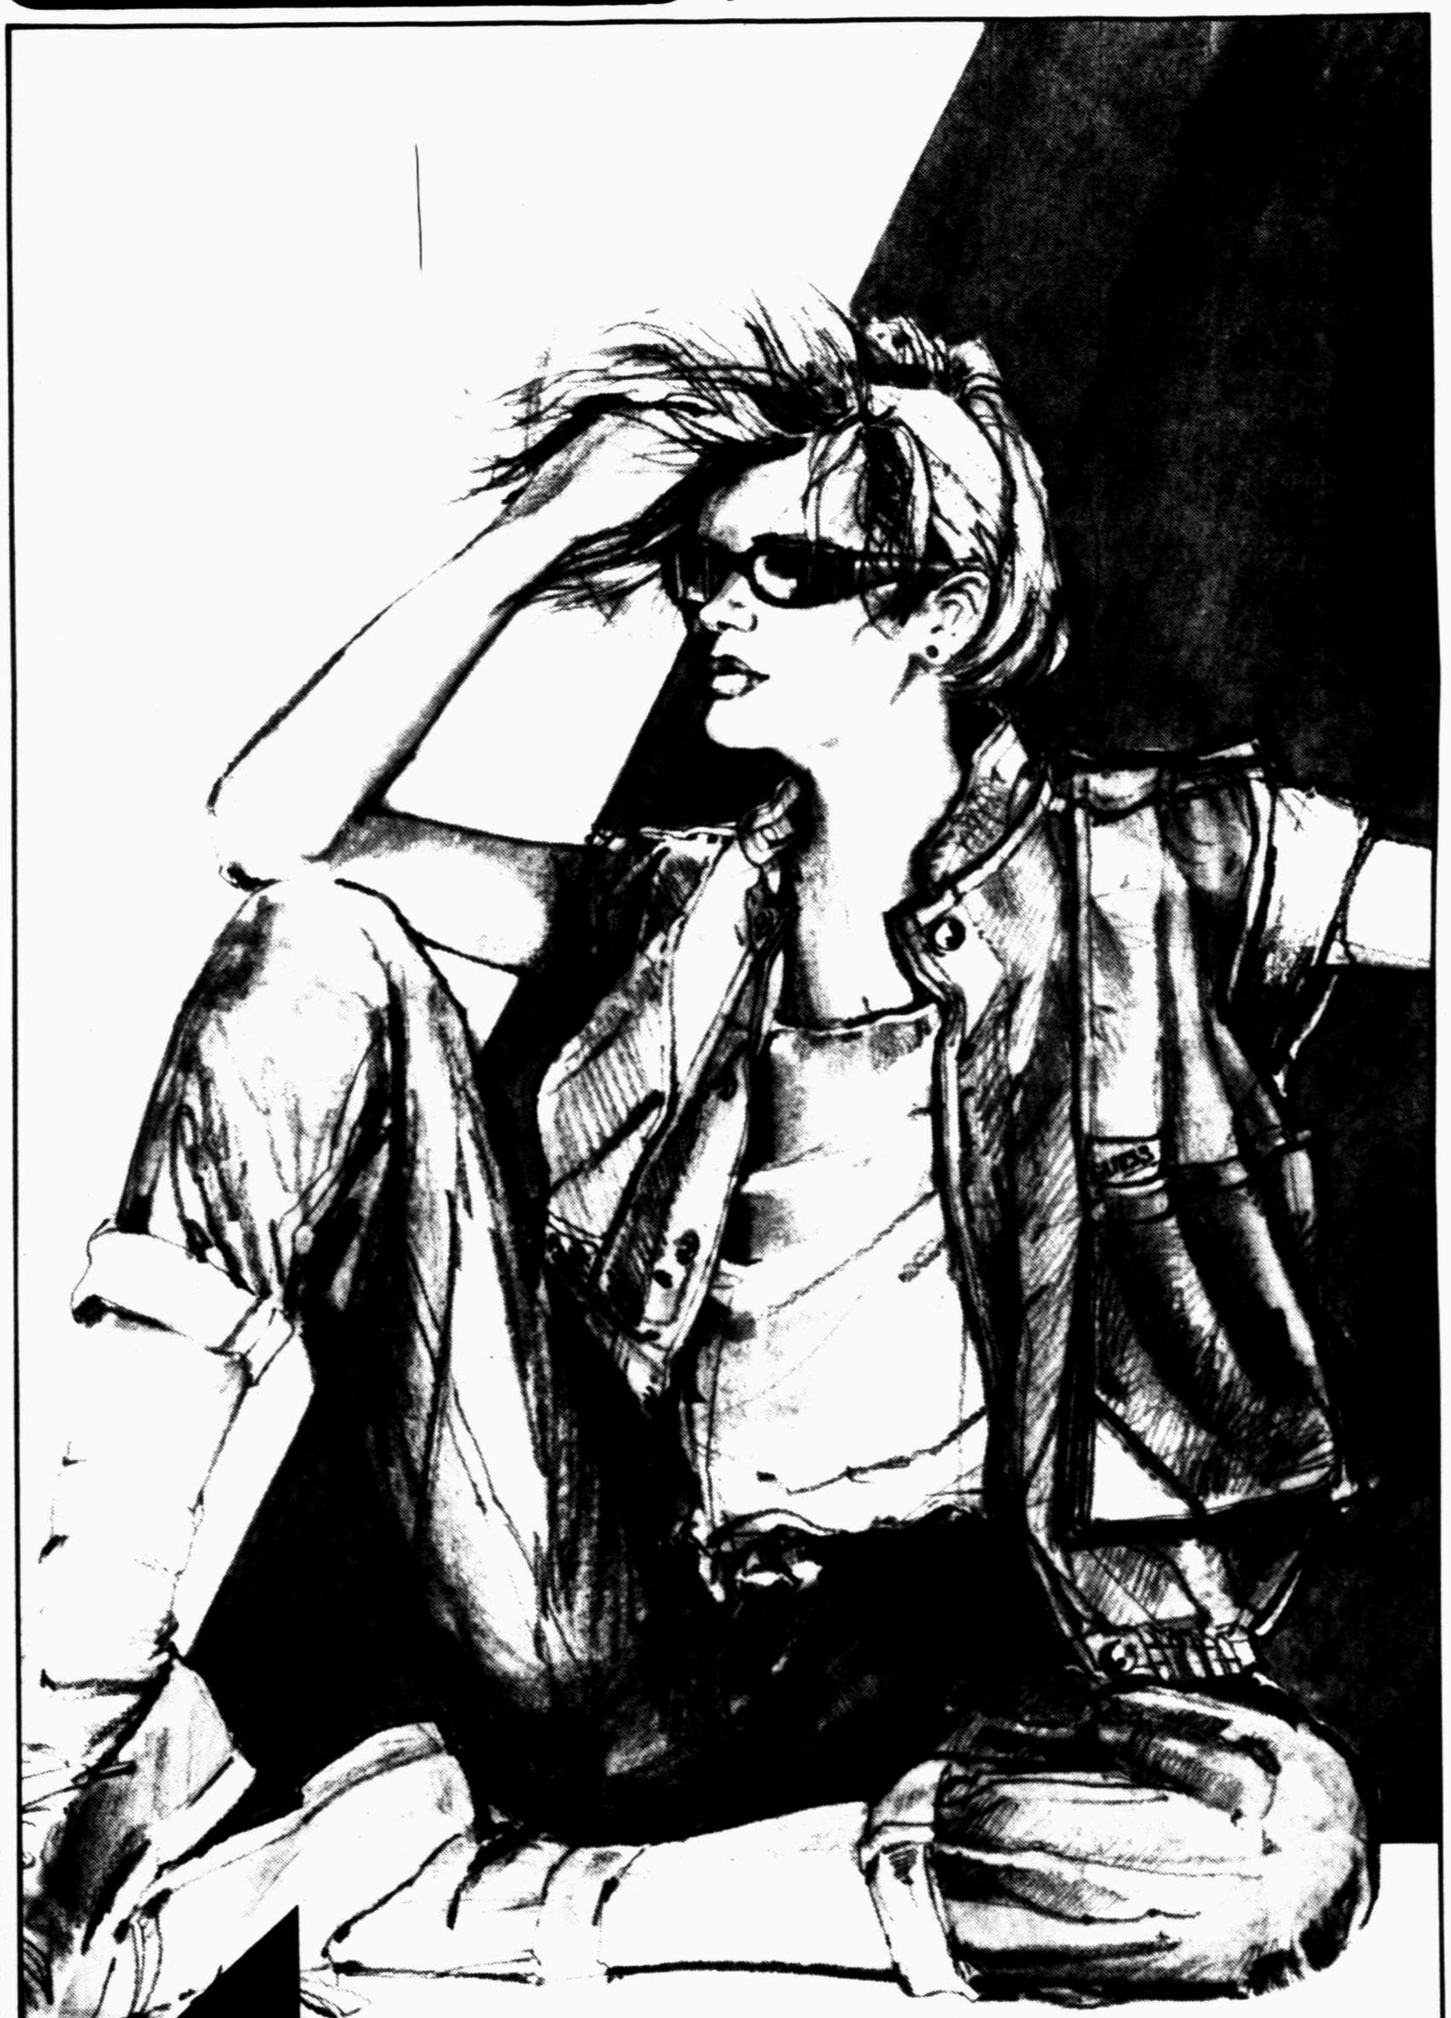

"You should find out what the fees are, if the doctor is available on evenings or weekends, how emergencies are handled, if the doctor has special hours to be available by phone, if he or she returns phone calls, and other information which will affect the structure of the relationship you'll have."

Such questions, Stein says, should be directed to a physician's office staff.

Japanese weddings often costly

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — With a businesslike ruffle of travelers checks, Yuzo Hiratsu stood amid the frou-frou finery of the Watabe Bridal Gowns' salon and signed away more than $300 for wedding clothing rental for his fiancee, Hama Michiko, and himself.

Like many Japanese couples, they had come to California to save money and to make a dream wedding a reality. These lovers are 5,000 miles from their hometown of Kobe. Their ceremony will be performed in a language they barely understand. The minister and most of their witnesses will be strangers. Yet their trip is a fantasy fulfilled, a prepackaged fairy-tale wedding with a lacy blue garter tossed in.

The purchase price, including trans-Pacific air fare, first-class hotels, restaurants and souvenirs, comes out to a fraction of what a traditional wedding would cost the couple's families. For $450-$500 more than the price of a basic tour, a Japanese couple can be married here and return home with a photo-album filled with romantic pictures, according to Stewart Himeno of Japan Creative Tours, a company that has provided wedding packages here and in Honolulu for the past eight years.

A wedding in Japan "is a very expensive operation," said a spokeswoman for the Japan Information Service's San Francisco office. She estimated $10,000 "is a basic figure, and in an expensive hotel, a wedding could cost more than $25,000." By contrast, the average American wedding, including everything from invitations to wedding cake, costs $4,909, according to figures for 1983, provided by Brides Magazine.

The Japanese tradition of "hikide mono" accounts for part of the cost, as the couple must give a gift to each of the wedding guests. There is also the expense of elaborate trappings associated with any culture's wedding ceremony. Add to the price of all the finery, the cost of entertaining the customarily large guest list of business associates, augmented by everyone in your village who is related to you, and a couple may feel lucky to get out for less than $25,000.

On average, a San Francisco wedding and honeymoon lasts eight days and costs about a tenth of that, even with two or three days in San Francisco, a jaunt to Los Angeles and a trip home by way of Honolulu, according to Himeno. His is one of several companies that arranges packages that include marriage license, limousine rental, flowers, church and clergy fees, photographer and a bottle of champagne. His firm, which also instructs its clients on the brief Presbyterian ceremony, also provides witnesses, usually the chauffeur or a clerk.

Rental of the groom's formal wear and the bride's gown costs extra. The gowns are a major expense, ranging from $90 to $300 for the day's wear, "depending on the fabric," said Yoshi Onaga of Watabe Bridal Gowns. Videotaping the ceremony costs an additional $280.

Western-style weddings have been growing in popularity in Japan for about 20 years. To accommodate their families' and their own desires, young couples married in Japan combine elements of both traditional and Western-style weddings — thus doubling the expense.

Traditional weddings, often held in a shrine, begin at 2 p.m. with a Shinto ceremony followed by a reception, p.m., according to the Japan Information Service. It is at the reception that the struggle between Japanese culture and the new Western ways becomes most evident. East meets West as the bride changes clothes as many as four times to evolve from a traditional girl to a modern woman, a fashion show that embodies Japan's reluctance to give up the old ways even as it embraces the new.

Hiratsu, a 30-year-old Porsche parts salesman, and Michiko, a 31-year-old piano teacher, planned their wedding here to fulfill a dream, they said. She selected the most expensive and opulent creation in Watabe's shop, a full-skirted gown with a fairy-tale train, short sleeves, a lacy scalloped neckline and a fitted bodice embroidered with pearls. He rented a white tuxedo.

After their wedding ceremony, they were to tour Monterey, Carmel, Los Angeles, Sacramento, Lake Tahoe and Reno. But even though they had purchased the wedding package before leaving Japan, there were the usual slip-ups.

Dutch buy Scottish tulips

LOGIE, Scotland (AP) — The Dutch, long famous for their flower bulbs, are now importing hundreds of tons of Scottish bulbs each year.

The Scots are exporting bulbs not only all over Europe, but as far away as New Zealand.

Demand for bulbs is such that one co-operative of farmers concentrated in the Montrose area of northeast Scotland, is looking for new partners to join it so it can enter the U.S. market next year.

The group currently exports 900 tons of bulbs a year, in addition to cut flowers.

Oral history enters high schools' studies

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Oral history — "significant reminiscences by living persons about their lives" — emerged in the 1970s as an important new method of studying and teaching history at the college level.

Yet it is rarely used in high schools, according to Preston Pierce, a University of Rochester researcher. He says social studies teachers believe oral history can be effective but seem unaware of available resources and how to use them.

Pierce says, "The quickest way to increase acceptance would be to inform teachers that facilities for both locally produced and commercial materials are available in high school libraries."

A buttonhole should lie in the direction of the strain on a close fastening such as cuff, waistband or fitted bodice. In these locations, the hole should be horizontal with the button settled in the end. The same rule applies to decorative features such as tabs. Vertical buttonholes are often used on the front of men's shirts. On straps, etc., the buttonhole can be vertical but they are always used on a strap opening because the buttonhole must be exactly in the center and not allow any movement of the button. Vertical buttonholes are also used under a flap or fly opening because horizontal holes may become visible.

Nine-year-old girl runs

SEWELL, N.J. (AP) — Tabitha Francks knows what makes little girls run.

The 9-year-old fourth-grader has broken seven national age-group records for running as an 8-year-old. She also qualified for the Boston Marathon, although she was not permitted to run because of her age.

The 63-pound youngster set a record for girls her age of 40:23 in the 6.2-mile L'eggs Mini Marathon in New York's Central Park last year. She came in 79th overall in this year's run.

She offers these suggestions for young girls who want to take part in running competition:

— Always enjoy yourself.
— Never give up.
— Don't think of being tired.
— Don't stop until you have gone through the finish line.
— Don't become upset if you don't win.

Jasmine grown for perfume

GRASSE, France (AP) — The sweet smell of success literally comes from this little town in the south of France by the dawn's early light.

Its most famous product is jasmine, which is used for making expensive perfumes.

One kilo of jasmine equals 5 million flowers, which must be cut by hand at sunrise only, at the moment when the flowers are just beginning to open, according to Guy de Mouy, chairman for Jean Patou Inc., a perfume producer.

Other ingredients used for perfume making include rose oil. One drop of this essence is extracted from the petals of 70 roses, he added.

Interior MOTIVES
by Ray and Austella Berry

One should never blindly shop for fabrics without some basic plan or some fairly specific idea of what to look for. It should be done only after mapping out the fabric strategy for every room. Will all the fabrics be in smooth or textured weaves, or is the scheme a combination of correlated patterns? Does the mood of the decor call for elegant textures or informal, casual materials? Is the drapery fabric to match the wall color or the sofa print? Does the room's role preclude the use of fragile textures and colors? Is the decorating style traditional, modern or mixed? Will most of the pattern go on larger, upholstered designs or be used primarily for accent?

When you are decorating your home or office, even if you only have a basic idea as to the look you would like to achieve, at WINDOW DECOR, we can help put your thoughts together into a workable plan. Custom bedspreads, draperies, upholstered or papered walls and carpeting can all be coordinated to give your environment a 'pulled together' look. Over our many years in business, our customers have looked to us for quality advice, service and products. We can do the same for you. Call us at 685-0875 or visit us at 30M West Industrial Loop. Hours: 8AM-4:30PM Mon.-Fri. and by special appointment.

Climates and personal taste should be factors in defining fabric choices.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

Nasturtiums can be used in salads

By ELVIN McDONALD

It's been said that our taste buds dull as we age. One way to avoid such blandness is to keep consciously tasting — and also trying — foods we've never eaten before.

How about a nice colorful, tasty and healthful salad of two parts fresh, garden-grown lettuce leaves to one part dewy fiesta colored nasturtium flowers? If you've never eaten petals or flowers, this may seem like eating your pet canary, but such feelings pass quickly.

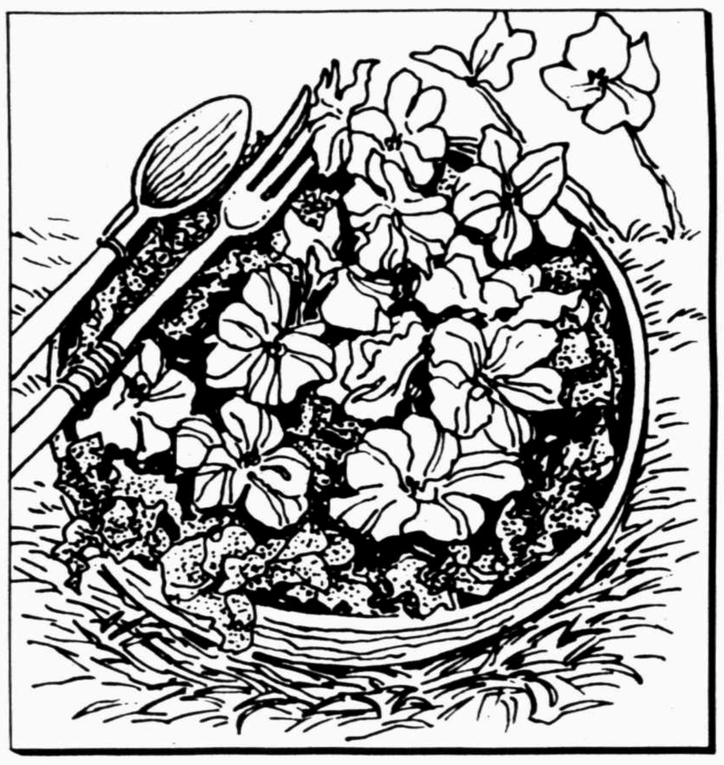

Nasturtiums can't be grown just anywhere, but they are among the easiest of all annual flowers to start from seed. The seed is one of the largest encountered in this type gardening, larger than an English pea. Poke this a half-inch deep into well-prepared, moist soil, and at an average of 72-75F., a green sprout will appear within five to seven days.

From the time a nasturtium sprouts, full sun is needed, along with fresh-air breezes and enough moisture to keep the soil evenly moist. Blooms will be scarce if the soil is too rich, so thin it down, mixing in generous amounts of coarse sand, or perlite if you are growing in hanging baskets or rooftop containers you don't want to be too heavy.

Aphids may cluster on nasturtium's tender shoots. Wash the insects away with forceful water sprays, or apply any pesticide recommended for use on edibles, such as Sevin. (Don't use insecticidal soap as nasturtiums are allergic to it.)

In case you were hoping, no I don't think nasturtium will make a very good house plant. A sunny, airy, moist greenhouse, yes. But probably not in a window garden.

For a chart of how flower and herb seedlings look as they emerge from the soil — and so you won't pull them instead of the weeds — order my notebook inserts: Send 50 cents coin and a stamped, self-addressed, long envelope with "Seedlings" written on the back flap to Elvin Mcdonald Reader Service, Box R, Niagara Falls, N.Y. 14305.

Q. I've never been able to get any information — excepting the name — of a house plant called Aglemecia. It has large green leaves and puts out clusters of red berries. Mine measures about 12 by 12 inches, lives in a semi-light location and is watered weekly. Lately there have been a lot of yellow leaves; what's wrong?

A. Aglaonema (ag-loh-NEE-muh) is the name, or Chinese evergreen. It belongs to the aroid family, along with philodendron, pothos and caladium. Aglaonema is one of the best — and also most widely distributed — plant for growing in low-light situations, such as in the interiors of rooms, on the floor, tabletops and shelves, wherever a touch of living green looks beautiful.

Lots of yellow leaves all of a sudden could mean the soil got too dry and remained that way for too long. It could also be the result of leaving the aglaonema standing in water at the same time temperatures were on the cool side (65F. or less) and light was poor.

Another possibility is that the arrival of spring, with warmer temperatures and increased day-length, has given your aglaonema the urge to grow. This means it needs an ample supply of nitrogen. Apply 20-20-20, 23-21-17 or fish emulsion.

Q. I have enough success with streptocarpus in my home greenhouse to make me want to grow them really well. Why do the leaves become yellowish green?

A. Try using more nitrogen; instead of a flowering fertilizer such as 15-30-15, use 20-20-20 or 23-21-17. Streptocarpus is also a relatively shallow-rooted plant that is in the habit of growing away from itself, constantly reaching out to fresh, nutrient-rich soil. Consequently, it pays to divide or at least transplant frequently, once if not twice a year.

Streptocarpus leaves might also go yellow from too much direct sun, especially in the Sun Belt and as spring advances toward summer. If the growing medium dries enough to badly wilt the foliage, expect considerable tip dieback; scissor-trim as necessary.

Planting season ending

Hearst Feature Service

If spring's rush into summer caught you out of step with traditional seasonal lawn and garden chores, accomplish them now before days get hot and dry — and stay that way.

It's about last call for planting summer bedding plants, such as petunias, marigolds, impatiens and zionias. The big discount stores and farm markets probably have cleared their shelves of bedding plants. Try local garden centers that gsow their own.

Be fussy wherever you cut your last-minute bedding plants. Avoid plants that have grown leggy or whose leaves have lost their dark green color and are yellowish. Both conditions are signs the plant has been in its cucicle too long, aod may not grow well, despite your good care. Choose plants that are short and, wherever possible, have not come into flower.

Any bedding plant needs special attention for the first two weeks in your garden. You may have to water daily, especially if the weather is bright, sunny and breezy. No matter how carefully you transplant, it's going to take the new plant a good two weeks to recover and continue growing roots. Until that time, the roots are close to the surface and when surface (3 inches or less) moisture runs out, the plant is out of luck. Warm breezes aggravate the situation.

Cut away withered fomiage from tulips, daffodils or hyacinths. By now, the foliage has made enough food for next year's flower and has stored it in the bulb. If the foliage is yellow, or neas to it, clip it off at the ground with a sharp pair of shears. Don't yank or pull it off; doing so may pull the bulb up closes to the surface thao it belongs.

Remove spent peony blooms before the plant wastes energy making seeds. This is a vital practice for any plant, unless it's being grown for seed. When the flower has passed its peak, snip it off. Don't let it go to seed. Many annuals after they pass their first flush of blossom in July actually will slow down flower production, especially if dead blooms aren't removed. You can keep your annual garden in flower by constantly removing blooms. It encourages the plant to grow more.

Many houseplants do well vacationing outdoors. This is especially true of ivy, philodendron, Norfolk pine and any number of houseplants not grown for flowers. You must ease the shock from the relatively low-light levels inside your home to the brilliance of the outdoors. Move the plant to a relatively shady spot for the first few weeks and then move it to a brighter locale if the plant is sun-loving. Avoid porches or patios that are in continual sunlight. Few houseplants will do well under the searing heat and intense sunlight found on patios.

There's a price to pay for moving a plant outdoors: Watering will be more frequent and there's a good chance a summer crop of insects will visit it. While careful spraying will keep an insect infestation away, it's nearly impossible to avoid closing the summer without a few more bugs on the plant than when it was brought outside.

If you are successfully growing flowering plants indoors, such as African violets, and they have bloomed year 'round in the same spot indoors, leave them inside. Moving outdoors may be a short-lived tonic; it will take several months for such plants to reacquaint themselves to the indoor climate.

Salamanders' ability to regrow legs studied

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

IRVINE, Calif. — In the past few decades scientists such as Peter J. Bryant have been studying lower life forms like salamanders in the hope that humans could learn the secret of regenerating parts of their bodies.

Bryant, director of the Developmental Biology Center at the University of California, Irvine, told a recent gathering of the school's donors and supporters that the possibility of human regrowth of missing or defective body parts could become reality by the turn of the century.

Bryant, 39, who holds a doctorate in genetics, has been directing the school's 15 years of research into regeneration. Eight scientists work in the program.

Using slides to show how goldfish, fruit flies and salamanders regrow body parts, Bryant said, "So the question is, why can salamanders do that and we cannot?

"... We believe the regeneration of body parts in the human body is an attainable goal, not just because these other organisms have this ability to regenerate, but also because the human body does have these abilities to a certain extent."

A human, Bryant said, can regenerate skin and the liver, and, in some cases, a fingertip.

In an interview, Bryant said, "What we need to do is work out what kind of cellular processes are involved in regeneration in the animals where it does occur, and then see if we can work out what the differences are in the mammal, and then try to get around those problems and remove whatever it is that is prohibiting regeneration from occurring."

In his campus talk, Bryant said the school, about 35 miles southeast of downtown Los Angeles, has so far done no research on humans, and he declined to predict when that might start.

Garlic studied

Hearst Feature Service

Garlic frequently is dubbed "the stinking rose" by garlic haters and assorted vampires, but garlic lovers are more apt to describe it as the ketchup of the intellectual. Garlic, they'll tell you, marries with just about anything, from vinegar to sugar.

The campaign to guarantee garlic its rights as a socially acceptable condiment began 10 years ago with the first edition of L. John Harris' "The Book of Garlic," published by Aris Books in Berkeley, Calif.

The book explores garlic's medicinal powers as a cure for colds, coughs, aches and pains, gout, neuralgia and rheumatism, high blood pressure, fevers, earaches, fainting spells, flatulence, diphtheria, epilepsy, parasites, ringworm, acne, hemorrhoids, head and scalp problems, open flesh wounds, intestinal ailmenus, poison ivy, athlete's foot, insomnia, nervous spasms, leprosy, tuberculosis, arteriosclerosis and cancer.

Harris examines garlic therapy, done by research teams at major universities in Japan, where a garlic-spraying machine was developed. It's one of those Rube Goldberg contraptions that sprays solutions of garlic and water on patients with a variety of disorders. A garlic and water solution also is used as an insecticide by organic gardeners, who are equally enthusiastic about bordering their crops with rows of garlic, said Harris.

"Many recent studies indicate that perhaps garlic can be one of the effective, safe and cheap agents needed to keep uhe Green Revolution green," Harris wrote. Researchers in India have produced a garlic killer for the malaria mosquito, which has become increasingly immune to DDT, Harris discovered. Garlic's ability to ward off vampires is discussed at length.

Teens can create own job market

Copley News Service

Summer jobs are never as numerous as the youngsters seeking them. So create one.

Teenagers, look around the community, see what needs doing, and then see if you can do it.

Herewith are some ideas — several from a perennial called "Money Making Book for Kids."

Services:

Addressing mail, for those with good handwriting. Envelope stuffing. Passing out leaflets. Small businesses often need these services.

Standing in line for people at sports events or rock concerts.

Going to the Laundromat for someone. Offer an ironing service, but only if you are good at ironing.

If you've taken typing in school and are terrific at it, consider a typing service.

Rent an electric marker and offer to etch identification numbers (Social Security or driver's license) on valuables such as television sets, as a protection against robbery.

If you've got a bicycle, run errands and make deliveries.

— Cleaning is a category of its own. People are always looking for an inexpensive car wash and waxing.

There are lots of things that need cleaning. Houses — walls, floors, windows, attics, garages, etc. Driveways. Supermarket baskets. Offices. Boats. Shoes. Call a local real estate office and see if there is a need for anyone to do cleaning of houses for sale or for rent.

— Yardwork. Mowing, trimming, watering, weeding and cleaning up.

— Painting house numbers on curbs, stenciling names or numbers on mailboxes.

— Score-keeping or umpiring kids' baseball and softball games.

— Sitting or caring for:

Babies and children. As well as the usual child care, have a Saturday play-care center in your house or backyard. Walk kids to summer school or Bible school or day camp. Offer to take them to the movies on Saturday. Be a vacation companion — some parents will pay a teenager to go along on a trip and watch the young children.

Seniors. Teenagers can care for older people, too, as well as the handicapped.

Houses. Take care of a house when the neighbors are on vacation. Or offer a specialized house-sitting service during weddings, for example. Notify your church and others in the area that you would be available. You might consider informing directors of mortuaries, too, because funerals, like weddings, take families away from homes.

Pets. Feed and care for pets when their owners are away. Walk dogs, two or three at a time. Have a backyard cat and dog show, with an entry fee of $1. Wash dogs.

— Use the backyard for a:

Carnival. Get the necessary permission if needed from the city or town. Sell tickets, sell food, helium balloons, organize other kids into variety acts, rent movies to show.

Garage sale.

Record, tape and comic swap or exchange.

Neighborhood variety show.

— Food. Be a party helper. Many hostesses are always looking for someone to efficiently help serve and clean up afterward. Get your experience by working for parents or their friends, then you'll have references.

— Be a job broker. Look for odd jobs for friends, then charge them a fee.

— Odd jobs. Be prepared to do lots of things.

Now most important, work up a list of jobs or services which you are qualified to do, then research your neighborhood or area to see if they are needed. Ask experts for advice. Depending on the kind of job, see if a business license or some other city permission is needed for your short-term project. It might not be necessary, but it is important to check.

Then decide what to charge. Under-price your competition. Consider several factors: age, experience, what other kids are charging. Sometimes it's better (more profitable) to charge by the job rather than the hour. Work up a price that seems fair to you and your customers.

You might be prepared to do lots of odd jobs. Yardwork, scrubbing walls and bathrooms, polishing silver, cleaning garages, painting, little repair jobs. The fees could vary for these.

Next, advertise. Try an ad in the classified section of the local newspaper. Flyers are excellent. You can distribute these door to door, plus ask supermarkets and other local stores if you might post your flyers on their bulletin boards. For certain special projects, posters might be effective. You'll probably find word-of-mouth is an effective advertisement, too.

DEAR ABBY

Stepparents have hard job

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: With both Mother's Day and Father's Day behind us, I would like to make a pitch for a forgotten minority: stepparents. I have two wonderful parents who divorced, and each married another wonderful person.

My stepdad has helped me out through some tough times — financially and emotionally. My stepmother is a caring, considerate person who makes our time together special and fun.

It's hard to be a stepparent. They have to work twice as hard to get the love and respect that natural parents get automatically.

For Mother's Day, I bought two presents. And I did the same for Father's Day. I feel lucky to have four parents who love me.

I hope this letter makes other stepchildren realize that some stepparents really care. — STEPKID

DEAR STEPKID: What a lovely letter. If other stepkids learn from it, it will be a step in the right direction.

DEAR ABBY: I should have realized I had chosen the wrong man when we went shopping for an engagement ring and he said to the clerk, "Show her the cheapest ring you have."

We had no honeymoon because he thinks honeymoons are a waste of money. He has never given me a birthday or anniversary gift. He's never complimented me on my appearance, cooking or anything else.

He says I shouldn't waste money on clothes or beauty shops because I'm only a housewife and don't need to look nice. I gave up outside employment four years ago to become a full-time mother.

Major decisions that should have been made jointly, such as selecting a house, he made alone, without consideration for my taste or opinion.

Because of the way he treats me, I no longer have any sexual interest in him. He was always very selfish in that respect anyway.

After eight years of this so-called "marriage," I am sick of being a doormat. I've begged him to see a marriage counselor, but he refuses, saying, "If you don't like things the way they are, we should just split up."

I would do just that, but being a single mother with two young children to support would be a terrible burden. I might add, he is from a foreign country where wives are expected to do as they're told and shut up.

What do you advise? — STUCK IN CHICAGO

DEAR STUCK: You have two choices: You can spend the rest of your life in a loveless marriage with a selfish man who treats you like a doormat, or you can give this ultimatum: "Either make an honest effort to improve our marriage with counseling, or it's all over."

There are worse fates than being a single mother with two young children to support. And one of them is continuing as you are.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "CAN FORGIVE BUT CANNOT FORGET IN MANHATTAN": What you are saying is that you cannot truly forgive. Heed the words of George Herbert, 17th-century English poet and philosopher: "He who cannot forgive others destroys the bridge over which he himself must pass."

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Radio network keeps blind persons informed

Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — Some of the most avid readers of newspapers and magazines in the nation can't read at all. They're blind.

Every day of the year, around the clock, thousands of partially or totally blind Americans, or victims of crippling diseases such as multiple sclerosis or cerebral palsy, snap on special radio receivers to hear community news reports, what goodies local supermarkets are offering at special prices and how the stock market is doing.

Only a few organizations offer this humanitarian reading service in different parts of the country. But for their handicapped audiences, few services are more essential.

"I feel part of the world again," was the way one grateful listener described the reading service provided by In Touch Networks here. It provides daily broadcasts for more than 4,000 people who have special closed-circuit radio receivers in New York, Connecticut and New Jersey.

Jasha Levi, executive director of In Touch, says the opportunity to provide the reading service is "extremely rewarding because it means so much to our listeners." He pays tribute to what he calls the "unsung heroines and heros of our service" — some 300 volunteers who read the newspapers, magazines and other print material for the benefit of their special audience.

"Starting at 6 a.m. every day, these volunteers begin trooping into our studio," Levi said. "They come in on their way to work, or after work at night, or during the day. They are housewives, retirees, business executives, show business people and even news media professionals. It's really heartwarming."

Pointing to a hallway bulletin board filled with rows of glossy photographs, Levi continues:

"Here you see some of the volunteers who do our readings. Dina Merrill, she used to come in regularly to read for In Touch listeners." he says. "And there's a picture of Deborah Hobart, you know, of the TV soap opera 'As the World Turns.' And Devorah Lee. What a great reader of comics she is! She's so good that even our staff engineers stop to listen to her when she's on the air."

In Touch was founded in 1974 by a small group of dedicated people who included James R. Jones, a stock broker who had lost his sight three years earlier, and his wife. He died in 1977, nearly a year before In Touch began broadcasting on April 19, 1978.

The network started modestly, beaming pilot programs over closed circuit radio three days a week. Gradually, the service widened. Today, In Touch broadcasts 24 hours a day every day. In April, it began bouncing its signal off the Satcom IV and Westar IV satellites so that cable systems and FM stations throughout the continental United States could pick up its programs for local use.

"Overall," said Levi, "our people read 96 newspapers, magazines, direct mail literature and other print material to provide daily programs for our listeners. The newspapers include the New York Times, Wall Street Journal and Barron's. The magazines include Time, Newsweek and Good Housekeeping."

And, he notes with a grin, "we even read True Confessions and the National Enquirer for the benefit of some of our listeners."

In Touch is a private, non-profit organization. It relies on donations from individuals, foundations, corporations and some government grants.

Just how important is this type of service to the handicapped? As one member of the In Touch listening audience wrote:

"I cannot tell you the difference In Touch has made in my life. Now, I am able to share the same thoughts and ideas that the everyday citizen reads."

Japan's real estate picture bright

Copley News Service

Real estate "transactors" in Japan are becoming more active and sophisticated in their local markets. In the not-too-distant future, they may equal their counterparts in the United States (brokers and salespersons) in computer-age real estate practices.

A special committee of the Japanese government's Ministry of Construction has been appointed to study and recommend methods to improve real estate marketing techniques. The committee is particularly focusing on success-proven methods being used in the United States.

Progress has been substantial in recent months and years. Among other forward steps, the Japanese now use an "exclusive right to sell" listing contract, and have established Multiple Listing Services (MLSs). They are also using advertising and other promotion techniques, patterned after U.S. practices.

The exclusive right listing is now being used in Japan, but on a somewhat limited experimental basis, this writer was told by Robin Broadfield, vice president, International Affairs, of the National Association of Realtors (NAR).

The exclusive right concept is growing, but many real estate transactors (agents) use the exclusive agency listing. Under this listing agreement, the contracted agency controls the listing and will receive a commission if the property is sold by any agency. But the owner could still sell the property himself without paying a commission.

The MLS concept is new and growing rapidly in Japan. And MLS operation has been established in each prefecture. But a serious problem exists in processing high-quality listings through the MLS systems, Broadfield pointed out.

Thus far, most MLS operations in Japan are voluntary. Members are not required to submit all their property listings to the MLS pooling system. Therefore, the best (most salable) listings are often withheld.

There are now a total of 96 voluntary MLS operations in Japan. Many of these will undoubtedly become mandatory as they become more sophisticated and viable within their marketing area. In a mandatory MLS, all property listings must be submitted, as is the case with most MLS operations in the United States.

By way of background, there are now 105,561 real estate transactors in Japan. They are licensed by either the construction minister or regional prefectural governors.

Eighty-four percent of the licensees are members of local real estate associations, which in turn are members of the National Federation of Real Estate Transaction Associations.

The federation is the largest real estate association in Japan — somewhat comparable to the National Association of Realtors in the United States.

Bacteria may prevent gum disease, cavities

NEW YORK (AP) — Tooth decay caused by bacteria may one day be reduced by a common germ that wipes out the cavity-causing strain, scientists say.

Researchers at the University of Connecticut are coating people's teeth to find the best method of applying the apparently beneficial microbes, which have warded off tooth decay in rats, but they say conclusive results probably are years away.

The microscopic organisms aren't expected to eliminate the need for brushing, but they could add one more weapon to the struggle against tooth decay, perhaps the most common chronic infection known to mankind.

The scientists outlined their preliminary research Monday at a meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

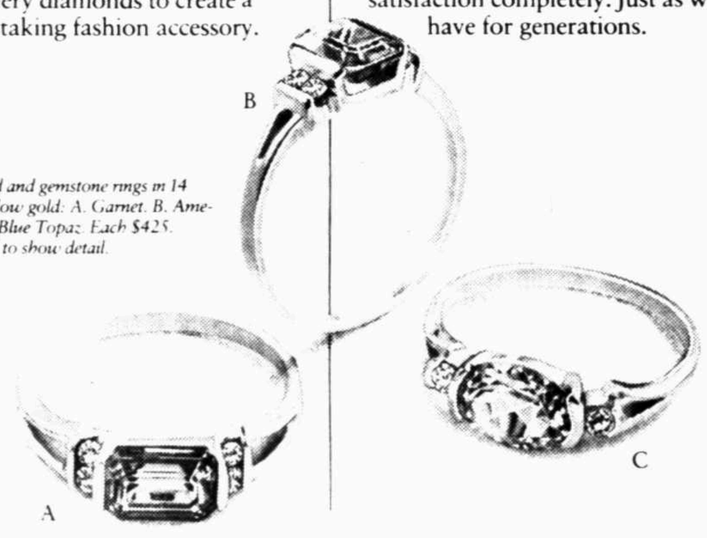

The most frequent cause of tooth decay by far is a kind of bacteria called Streptococcus mutans. It sticks to the teeth, turning the sugar that people eat into acid, which in turn dissolves tooth enamel and causes cavities.

Dr. Jason M. Tanzer of the University of Connecticut Health Center in Farmington is experimenting with tove, a form of a common safe bacteria called Streptococcus salivarius.

Clothing labels not read soon enough

By ERMA BOMBECK

There are four kinds of people who buy garments with a label inside that reads, "DRY CLEAN ONLY."

There are those who don't sweat, those who do not declare all of their income to the government, and those who cannot read a word of English.

I belong to the fourth group. We're idealists who never believe a bird will spritz us when we are indoors. We never imagine there will be a fresh blueberry (for which there is no antidote) on a park bench. We never consider the odds of reaching for salt and having our bosom drag through the gravy on our roast beef.

No, we just dance along the yellow brick road like we have some sort of immunity to the stains and spots of life. Clothing manufacturers wait for people like me to be born — people who pick up a garment that looks like you can throw it in the washing machine and who never read the label until we have fallen in love with it and taken it home.

I would like to think I am the same person when I wear a DRY CLEAN ONLY as I am when I'm wearing a MACHINE WASHABLE, but who am I kidding? I'm as tense as a bullfighter entering the arena with irregularity problems. As I slide a pure silk dress over my head (that I THOUGHT was polyester when I bought it), I pinch my lips together until they turn white. Not good enough — I still get lipstick around the collar.

As I wash my hands, water splashes down the front of it. The oil from the car door grabs at it. When I walk into a room, friendly dogs come out of nowhere and small children with sticky fingers throw their arms around my neck. Speaking of necks, I am careful not to put makeup on it, yet it secretes a ring-around-the-collar that cries for the work of a professional cleaner.

What's a woman to do? I bought a little cotton jacket the other day that I thought was "safe." It was one of those casual, perma-wrinkle things where you pushed the sleeves up and wore it over slacks. I threw inhibitions to the winds. I ate tomatoes in it and an ice cream bar. I stood under trees, pumped my own gas and brushed my teeth while wearing it. When I went to toss it into the washer, I saw the label, "DRY YOU KNOW WHAT."

As a friend of mine said when I gave her a hand-painted bib at a baby shower that said, "DRY CLEAN ONLY" . . . "Erma, you're a loser."

Peppers stuffed with tuna

The Associated Press

TUNA PEPPERS

2 large (each 8 ounces) green peppers
6½-ounce can solid-pack light tuna
Olive Oil
1 large egg
1 cup soft bread crumbs
⅓ cup parsley leaves, finely chopped
2 cloves garlic, finely chopped minced fresh or dried basil to taste

Halve peppers lengthwise, remove seeds and white membranes; cover with boiling water and boil 5 minutes; drain well.

Drain tuna, reserving oil; to the oil add enough olive oil to make ⅓ cup. Beat egg until foamy; mix with tuna, bread crumbs, parsley, garlic and basil; stuff into pepper halves.

Pour reserved oil into an 8-inch square pan and in it arrange pepper halves, stuffed side up. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven, basting with oil in pan every 10 minutes, until peppers are tender — 30 minutes.

Serve at room temperature. Makes 4 servings.

Quick action saves grape harvest at vineyard

Copley News Service

"I woke up because the dogs were barking, and my stomach immediately began turning: It was pouring rain."

Mike Benziger of Glen Ellen Winery in Sonoma County, Calif., tells this story about the harvest of '83, and it's a tale with a happy ending.

To a wine maker or grape grower, the sound of rain is like seeing an apparition. Rain can enter the grapevine's roots and dilute the flavors; it can leave moisture inside the bunches and cause bunch rot — which can make for some dreadful wine.

"I jumped out of bed — it was about 5 a.m. — and I called the grower for some of our Sauvignon Blanc," said Benziger. "He said it wasn't yet raining up-valley, so I started calling pickers all over the county, and we raced up there and began picking like bandits.

"A couple of hours later, we looked down the valley and saw the storms moving up toward us, and this one giant thunderhead was headed right for us. I thought, 'We've had it.'

"But at the last minute it veered off and went west toward the coast. We kept picking, and then another thunderhead moved up the valley and right toward us — but at the last minute it made a big right turn and went over to Calistoga (in Napa County).

"We got finished picking about 2 p.m. and got the tarps over the gondolas in the trucks — and then the clouds just opened up. It rained so hard the fields flooded, and we couldn't get the trucks out right away. But at least the grapes were safe."

So safe, in fact, that Glen Ellen's 1983 Sauvignon Blanc, from grapes grown in the fine Sonoma Cutrer Vineyard off Shilo Road in Sonoma, was awarded the sweepstakes award in the third annual Farmer's Fair of Riverside County, Calif., wine competition.

Lavish dinner prepared to benefit charity

NEW YORK (AP) — Fifteen of the world's most renowned chefs raised $200,000 for the March of Dimes by cooking an elaborate 11-course dinner to honor Craig Claiborne, food editor for The New York Times.

The fund-raiser was organized by Pierre Franey, French chef and author of the Times syndicated column "The 60-Minute Gourmet," who ran from table to table urging the 410 guests to "eat your food!"

"Pierre's having a heart attack," joked March of Dimes administrator Diane Holuk.

Franey said he chose the chefs from among "friends of Craig, great chefs and great friends he has written about over the last 30 years."

Claiborne, who looked dazed, said "I kept a plastic smile on my face and my mouth shut" while the revered but tempermental cooks decided between themselves who would make the main course.

"All I can say is, it was a once-in-a-life-time experience," he said, adding in a whisper: "And I mean NEVER again!"

The honor fell to Jean Banchet, owner of Le Francais restaurant of Wheeling, Ill., who made pigeon stuffed with foie gras and truffles in puff pastry for the crowd at Manhattan's Tavern on the Green.

"These squabs were alive on Saturday. They were raised outside Chicago and we strangled them to keep in the blood, so they'd be nice and juicy," Franey told the guests.

"Then George Perrier made the puff pastry at his restaurant, Le Bec Fin, in Philadelphia, and we put the whole thing together today in New York."

Highest praise of the evening went to a spicy shrimp creole cooked to order by Paul Prudhomme of K-Paul's restaurant in Louisiana, a Cajun chef whose cuisine was popularized in syndicated columns by Claibourne and Franey.

"Paul's men caught these shrimps in New Orleans on Saturday and they were flew here for you," Franey told the dinner guests in his fractured English. "However, I did not strangled them."

The diners paid $500 apiece for the privilege of savoring mussel soup by Andre Soltner of 'Lutece,' Peking duck by David Keh of 'Auntie Yuan,' crab tartlets, sushi, soused Mexican pork, mixed green salad, bleu cheese and what Franey called "an orgy of chocolate" — including a mousse confection by Michel Fitoussi called "The Bermuda Triangle" and peanut butter and jelly-stuffed bonbons by Nouvelle Cuisine specialist Barry Wine of "The Quilted Giraffe."

They washed it down with Laurent Perrier Grand Siecle Champagne 1975, a 1981 Meursault white burgundy, a 1979 Chateau Belair St. Emilion and finished it off with a Veuve Roth Framboise Single Cask Unblended Cognac, 1964 vintage.

The revelry was followed by a somber moment created by Beverly Sills, the soprano who, in addition to her duties as director of the New York City Opera, is the mother of two children with birth defects and chairwoman of the March of Dimes.

"You can't question my credibility, I'm sorry to say," she said with tears in her eyes.

"There are times when you put your arm around a friend and say 'I know exactly how you feel.' Well, unless you've had a child with birth defects, you can't know how it feels. It's a desolate feeling."

"The danger can affect anyone in this room — it's a very democratic disease," Ms. Sills said. "I hope the day will come when every baby is born perfectly beautiful, and beautifully perfect."

Tips help beat the heat

By ANITA LEWIS
Hearst Feature Service

Don't just talk about the weather, do something about it! Hide. Preferably in an air-conditioned tunnel under your house.

No tunnel? Have to go to work? Here are some tips to help you survive the heatwaves of 1984.

— Avoid direct sunlight. Scurry from your air-conditioned car into the shadow of buildings or from shady tree to tree. Better yet: Take a tip from Scarlett O'Hara and open your umbrella or don a wide-brimmed hat.

— Wear light-colored, loose clothing. Light shades reflect sunlight and decrease the solar effect. Forget the pantyhose, the cinched-in belted skirt, the three-piece suit and necktie. Choose cotton over synthetics.

— Don't overdress youngsters. Infants, in particular, do not perspire easily and should be dressed lightly and kept in the shade. For an easy way to monitor their comfort, frequently check how warm or cool their fingers are. Warm fingers indicate infants are overheated.

— Remember that sunlight can penetrate water up to 12 inches. If you're trying to stay cool in the pool, you're also risking sunburn.

— Skip the beer, wine and martini lunch. Alcohol interferes with the body's cooling mechanism. Take a pass on sodas, as well; sweet drinks increase fluid loss. Instead, drink plenty of cool water.

— Avoid excessive exercise or labor. Let the weeds take over the garden, the grass grow to its heart's content. This is no time to asphalt the driveway or jog around the park.

— If you must jog, make sure you are acclimatized to the heat. Build up gradually and exercise late in the day. Check the temperature and relative humidity before setting out. Don't jog or run if the humidity is above 50 percent and the temperature above 80 degrees. At 90 degrees, you create heat faster than you can dissipate it, and body temperature rises. If the humidity is above 75 percent, perspiration does not cool the body. Replenish fluids at least every 10 minutes and don't jog alone. Stop jogging if you develop muscle cramps. Rest for the remainder of the day and replenish fluids.

— If you feel confused, dizzy, stop sweating or experience muscle cramps, get medical attention at once. Heat stroke can be deadly.

— Avoid heavy, fatty foods which are hard to digest and put a burden on the system. After a heavy meal, increased circulation of blood to the stomach gobbles up nearly a third of the heart's output and, in hot weather, can strain the heart.

— Unless you're perspiring heavily, avoid salty foods. Salt in large quantities is unnecessary. It needs fluids to be absorbed and alone can bring on nausea and stomach cramps. Accompany salty foods with water.

— That cup of coffee or tea or bowl of soup may make you feel cool by contrast, but it just adds to the heat reservoir of your body. Also, caffeine may stimulate heat production in susceptible people.

— Check with your doctor to find out if your medications interact with sun exposure (antibiotics) or your ability to handle extreme heat (stimulants, antihistamines, diuretics, anti-depressants, psychotropic agents, hypertension medication.)

Lana Cunningham/Reporter-Telegram

The old buildings of Edinburgh brighten up in a late afternoon sun against a sky darkening with rain clouds.

'Ticking off' England

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

The card from a friend overseas brought it all back: "I'm so glad that your trip found the U.K. was enjoyable after all in spite of the battered Mini."

The idea of returning to England for two weeks was only a dream for the future. Now it's a dream of the past — a passing scene of places and faces that made a foreign country seem like home.

Going again seemed impossible, the cost being the biggest barrier. But by budgeting and planning for it, the dream turned into reality. The advice to anyone who dreams of going to Great Britain is not on where to go or what to do but simply, "Go." Everyone will have a different experience. And if cost is a barrier, there are ways to enjoy the innumerous offerings of Great Britain for little money to give priceless memories.

THERE IS NO WAY to put a price tag on a golden orange sunset in a Scottish Highland bay, or a view of Edinburgh from the highest spire of a city statue, or the childish ecstasy of discovering Harrod's, or the amusement of an almost front row seat to the most popular musical in London and finding a "cat's" tail in the lap.

The trip began and ended with "Cats." For anyone who ever hated cats, there's no way to continue that hate after seeing the musical based on T.S. Eliot's book. The music is delightful, and each personality springs to life on the stage.

But it's at the theater that one accepted fact of life in the United States becomes noticeably lacking in England. Water fountains. During intermission one buys hot soft drinks or ice cream. One young woman at the theater, when asked about a water fountain, giggled, "I don't think they've quite caught on over here."

THE ONLY WATER FOUNTAINS in London can be found in front of Buckingham Palace (designed only for viewing, not drinking from), and a small one to quench the thirst at the Tower (somewhat ironic since so many people lost their heads there).

England is advertised as a cool place to spend the summer. It is, unless someone goes there specifically to get away from the heat in Texas. Last summer, England suffered the worst heat wave in 350 years. "Isn't it wonderful," the Britons said to travelers. For the first time in 350 years, they were getting suntans.

IT WASN'T SO WONDERFUL for travelers accustomed to air conditioning. They were getting hot under the collar, hot soft drinks and hot buses.

Guided tours are fine for people who have never been to England, but they have a tendency to keep the travelers separated from the natives and give only a glance at major sites.

By renting a car or riding the rails, a traveler can jostle shoulder to shoulder with the British. But there's no way to blend in with the natives. All a traveler has to do is open his mouth and the natives respond, "You're not English (or Scottish or Irish) are you?"

But they don't resent it. Admit you're lost, and they give you the right directions.

To see a country is to see it through interests

By CAROLYN FITZ-GERALD

Perhaps the best way to see any country is through a specific interest and since my interests lie with the theater and literature, I decided to head for England's Northwest where poets, playwrights and artists have inspired themselves for hundreds of years, surrounded by the sheer rock faces, sudden valleys and placid lakes that make up England's Lake District called Cumbria.

I spoke a heartfelt word of thanks to the hospitable and courteous British Airways staff, searched my bag for my British Airway airpass bought at huge savings at home and set out for the Manchester Airshuttle. Manchester is considered the gateway to the Land of Lakes, the home of poet William Wordsworth, children's author Beatrix Potter and contemporary author Melvyn Bragg who was, happily, still in residence.

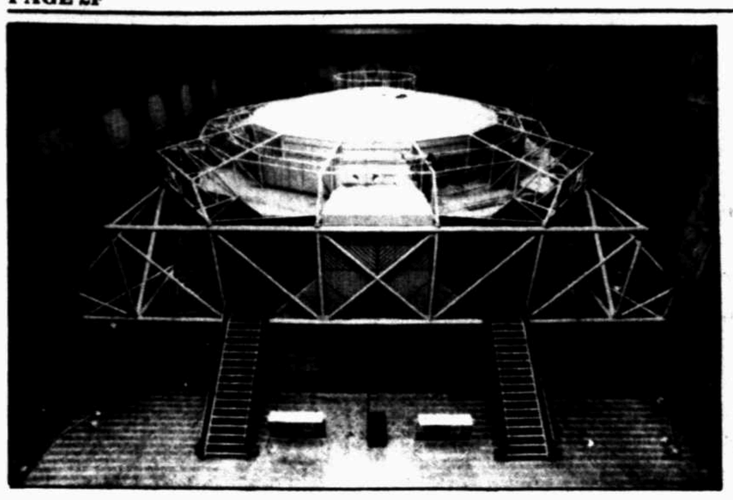

MANCHESTER SEEMED just another industrial city but with time to spare before the Mountain Goat Trailway bus picked me up, I set out to discover the town's cultural side.

First, I stopped at the library which has the usual books and documents but offered a surprising addition — a theatre in the basement.

A children's pantomime was in progress so I slipped in for my first real taste of British pantomime where females play men and males play female parts, often uproariously. The audience, enthusiastic but controlled, joined in to help the flowers emerge victorious over the garden bugs in this production called "The Plotters of Cabbage Patch Corner." Since the advent of the cabbage patch doll, the word was a sure-sell title for the avid 5- to 7-year-old theater-goers.

I LEARNED THE Library Theatre offers adult fare as well and recent prodution were Ewan McColl's "Shore Saints and Sea Devils" and Noel Coward's "The Vortex."

Please see Northwest England, Page 2F

Looking like a space module that has landed amidst Georgian columns and friezes, the Royal Exchange Theatre is built inside the old cotton exchange building.

Built of glass and aluminum in order to accomodate to load factor in the old cotton exhange building, the seven-sided Manchester Royal Exchange Theatre seats 700.

The rounded stage offers viewers a chance to experience special effects both from within and from without from the airy masterpiece.

NORTHWEST

Next, I hurried to the old Palace Theatre, recently restored and graced by Prince Charles' presence at gala fund-raising event which helped off-set some of the $3-million restoration cost.

If you haven't seen "Oliver" in England, you haven't seen "Oliver." The fog mists over the audience, hearts break and then spirits soar as Dickens' original story of Nancy and Sikes is delivered without the distraction of learned accents.

A CHILD NEXT to me, about Oliver's age, was asked by his mother if he would like an ice (ice cream to us). His reply was, "Thank you, no. I would much prefer a coloured program," — not a surprising answer for a child reared where professional theater is available every week.

The best of Manchester Theater was yet to come: A seven-sided glass theater built in the center of the old cotton exchange building called The Royal Exchange Theatre.

The structure was devised mostly to accomodate the space, weight, load factor and the available light from glass domes in the old facility, but as is often the case, necessity begat a miracle.

Looking like a space module that has landed amidst Georgian columns and friezes, the rounded stage offers 700 viewers a chance to be a part of the play and to experience special effects from both within and from without the airy masterpiece.

THE NIGHT I WAS there, "Hamlet" was performed in the same manner Shakespeare planned it: in comtemporary dress with the "To be or not to be" soliloquy delivered before the "Oh what a rogue and peasant slave I am" scene. This sequence and the inclusion of often unused portions of the First Quarto led me to understand the troubled family's motives and gave me an insight into Elizabethan politics that I had not been able to grasp in previous performances. I also had never realized that "Hamlet" was originally a loosely connected five-hour play from which each director must construct his own version.

After a nearly 3½-hour performance, the directors and actors asked the audience if they wanted to stay and discuss the performance. Of the 700 people in the packed Exchange Theatre, about 400 chose to stay until after midnight on a rainy ("it always rains in...") night in Manchester. I rescheduled the Mountain Goat and stayed.

ON THE BUS TO the lake country the next day, I gave way to a nap and awakened just as we entered the little town of Cockermouth.

Our first stop was the Pheasant Inn nestled in the Thornwaite forrest near Lake Bassenwaite where good food, good hosts and an evening with author and TV commentator Melvyn Bragg awaited me.

The roast pheasant decorated with its own tail feathers and accompanied by game stuffing and bread sauce was an easy choice for dinner.

A preview of Bragg's soon-to-be-aired TV show about his birthplace called "Land of the Lakes" followed. The show was produced by Border Television and Bragg said, "We will have a go at placing the show with PBS in the States later this year."

AFTER THE THREE-PART presentation, Bragg met with guests in the lounge where a coal fire burned brightly in the gate and everyone settled down in comfortable chitz-covered chairs in order to hear him passionately describe his love for the Lake District and its people.

Later, in London, a young woman referred to Bragg as "the thinking woman's sex symbol." While his rugged good looks seemed to belie his intellect, Bragg has been compared with classical author Thomas Hardy and he enjoys a reputation both as author and as host of the intellectual South Bank Show on BBC where his broad Lake Country accent continues to enchant viewers in the United Kingdom.

ANOTHER GUEST ON still another evening around a coal grate was mountain climber John Porter, a quiet young man who lives in the Lake Country so that he can practice on the sheer cliffs while getting enough money together for the next big attempt at Everest or a lesser Himalayan peak.

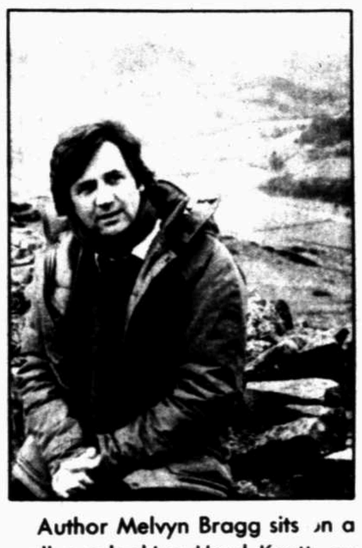

The next day, the Goat as we now fondly referred to it, took us by Scafell which I mistakenly called Scafell Mountain. Our guide, Frank, quickly quick told me that "fell" means mountain or peak just as "mere" means lake. His rection was much the same as that of Texans who hear someone refer redundantly to the Rio Grande as the Rio Grande River.

FRANK ALSO EXPLAINED that Scafell is where many climbers practice and come back to after their adventures. He took us to a little church called St. Olaf's in Wasdale Parish where many climbers who try and fail disastrously are buried.

I remember John Porter's words, "Climbing simplifies life. It's just you and the mountain...and sometimes the mountain wins."

On the brighter side, one of the village sports is called screeing, a game where young men place bets on their ability to jump on the slag helps running down the side of the mountain and riding along with the small avalanches they create until they are forced to jump aside. Screeing is a feature of the Grasmere Games which take place on the third Thursday of August each year. Further details about the games can be obtained by calling the Cumbria Tourist Board at (096 62) 4444.

BELOW SCAFELL are cottages and a larger home called Dudden Hall along the river.

Author Melvyn Bragg sits on a wall overlooking Hard Knott, an area in the Lake Country.

We stopped at the High Cross Inn pub, a real English pub with sleeping dogs, hunter's pie and the town storyteller on the end barstool.

I had heard about the ghost at Dudden Hall and I asked the proprietress about it.

"Old John knows," she said, indicating the stool. "He's a bit deaf and it will take a while but his mother worked there in the old days as a laundress."

With this invitation, old John hopped off his stool like a schoolboy giving a recitation and told a tale of not one but several ghosts which included a mistress poisoned by a disgruntled maid, and a doctor and his horse and carriage who missed a turn and plunged into the gorge.

THE MISTRESS WALKS the river bank in her nightclothes and the horses are seen in hoof pounding splendor at dusk each day. "I seen them meself," said John, "when I was a tad and used to meet me mother with the lantern."

From the fells, we drove in the afternoon to Muncaster Castle at Ravenglass for tea with Lord and Lady Pennington.

It is difficult to give up the grounds in order to enter the castle because Lady Pennington's mother keeps tropical birds and bears in the lush gardens.

To enter the castle is to be greeted by the gracious hospitality which surrounds the Penningtons and view what amounts to a museum with portraits of former generations by Gainsborough and Reynolds. There is even a well-known bronze on the library table.

FOR THE FIRST TIME, I came to know what "stone cold" meant as the castle floors seeped through my footwear. But at night, all is cozy because the Pennington's offer electric blankets, not to sleep under, but on. The Penningtons accept a limited number of guests and they may have a choice of the King's bedroom where Henry VI once slept, The Tapestry Room, The Bridal Suite or others, some with and some without ghosts according to the young Cambridge historian who was there cataloging the family treasures.

Before I left, I didn't see any ghosts but I did find out one Muncaster Castle secet: Lady Pennington irons. Domestic help is apparent but for a household with bears to keep as well as beds to make and 40-foot tablecloths to iron, every hand counts.

A SWING THROUGH the pencil museum at Keswick completed the rugged country and I was off to see Wordworth's birthplace at Cockermounth which inspired his poem, "To a Butterfly."

Again, the penetrating cold made it easy to imagine how Mrs. Wordworth caught a chill at an early age and left William, and his three brothers and his sister Dorothy motherless. The living quarters in the house were cold and drafty which only made lunch in the cherry kitchen with its open fire all the more appreciated. Out of doors the weather was cool but sunny, not unusual for the Lake District during winter and early spring. I stopped in at the book store down the street to get Bragg's latest book, "Love and GLory." With little hope, I asked which the pencil museum said it could no longer afford to package so grandly were available. "Skylark or otter?" asked the saleswoman, referring to the pictures on the metal boxes.

LITTLE DID SHE know she was offering the last of its kind. "Oh otter. Most definitely otter," I said, clutching my prize to me and giving her only the required 70 pence in return.

I gave up touring Beatrix Potter's home in favor of heading for Bristol and the Bristol Old Vic's Theatre Royal in King Street.

Recently restored to its former elegance, the Theatre Royal is the oldest continuously operating theatre since it opened in 1766.

It is known as one of the try-out places for London and "Crucifer of Blood," featuring Sherlock Holmes as the main character and a fast becoming legendary river launch escape scene seem destined to take "Crucifer" to London's West End theatre district.

"Who can ever tire of Bath," said author Jane Austen, and indeed, in the short period I was there, I did tire with lots of walking on the closed avenues, but not of Bath.

A CULTURAL CENTER and spa since the Roman's built public baths over mineral springs there, Bath social life centered around the theatre and the elegant homes in the Georgian Cresent, an area of architechtural splendor.

Beau Nash headed Bath society in the early 1700s and he made sure all who came followed his code of grandiose behavior.

Next door to the newly restored Theatre Royal Bath is Popjoy's Restaurant, former home of Beau's mistress, Juliana Popjoy, whose ghostly grey spectre can be seen attending the theatre in one of the boxes or circling the staircase to the restautant's upstairs dining room.

Popjoy's egalitarian owner will greet you in a waiter's jacket and tell you everyone at Popjoy's works together to see you enjoy your dinner, the atmosphere and the evening. As an aside he will tell you that Juliana refused to sleep in a bed after Beau's death and lived out her remaining nights in the hollow of a tree.

MEANWHILE, NEXT DOOR, Tom Stoppard's farce, "The Real Insepctor Hound," is playing to a packed house and afterwards in the vaults underneath the theatre the restraurant and bar are filled with both theatregoers and actors which include a young performer John Gordon-Sinclair who often enlivens Amercian films. He is worried about making an appearance alone at a girl's school the next day.

Upstairs, I enter the darkened theater to see if I can glimpse the lady in grey. I don't see her but the presence of Vivian Leigh can definitley be felt in the Vivian Leigh dressing room where her gowns stand ready and her gloves are tossed casually upon the dressing table.

Like most English theatres from the small Library Theatre in Manchester to the magnificence of Theatre Royal Bath, the spirit and the desire are there but the money is not.

EVERYTHING IS FOR sale in the Theatre Royal Bath to members of the Top Brass Club. That is, you may buy a dressing room, the musician's stand or the stage for a state price and a plaque with your name on it is placed on your choice in perpetuity.

Charlie Chaplin's widow Oona has already purchased the stage curtain in his name. The circle bar is just waiting for a Texan's name, says a theatre official.

I couln't help remembering the remarks made by a Library Theatre employee in Mancester, "We don't know where funds for our next performance are coming from but we'll have it, we always have."

Back in London where theatre is staunchly supported by a large population base, the higlight of the season is the musical "Poppy," about the English opium trade in China which was, again, a pantomime with men playing feamle parts and vice versa.

UNLIKE THE CHILDREN'S pantomime, "Poppy" is decidedly for adults and even "Poppy's" pantomime horse meets with something other than the usual "Black Beauty" fate found in children's pantomimes.

In smaller areas, excellent theatre can be found all over England, all the time. There are remote theatres in places like Ambleside which boasts Theatre in the Forrest. There is the wellknown Rosehill Theatre and the Century Theatre at Keswick. There is even a Brewery Arts Theatre in Kendal and talented actors and actresses perform in stables and meeting houses or wherever they find an audience because in England, "The Play's the Thing," wherever you are.

Condomiums in refreshing settings are available for time share in the Langdale complex of England's Lake District National Park.

On the site of an old gun powder mill stands the Pillar Hotel, a part of the Langdale complex.

By CAROLYN FITZ-GERALD

On the site of the old Elterwater gun powder mill, several of the Lake District's landed gentry met with a local construction magnate and realized a dream — a luxury hotel, country club and condominium complex in a remote area of England were shooting, fishing, climbing the Langdale peaks and just drinking in the beauty can be enjoyed all day, every day.

Then, at night, lovers of the out-of-doors can return to fine food and drink, a fully-equipped spa with an indoor pool and a $1,000 Swedish orthopedic bed to sleep in.

It seems the best of all worlds, and Langdale complex, which includes time share condominiums and a luxury hotel called The Pillar, would be a treat even without the natural beauty offered by the surrounding Lake District National Park.

The old millstream wanders though the Pillar lobby and gurgles softly as diners order from French menus and wine lists in Purdy's, the most elegant of The Pillar restaurants.

Out the glass windows, the old mill wheel turns as others are upstairs enjoying beauty treatments and facials in the Pillar Club. Still other guests have placed their money on privacy in the condominiums where kingsize beds, maid service and catering are available if they wish.

Nothing has been left out of the Langdale experience and each room in the hotel is connected to a separate living and dining area.

While transportation has been difficult until recent years, now visitors may take the M 6 highway from London or a train to nearby Windermere where they will be greeted by a member of the Langdale staff.

And wonder of wonders, the Langdale Complex enjoys an 800 number in the United States. For reservations and information, the number is 800-424-9822 or call direct to Langdale (09667) 302 or Telex 65188 LANGDL G. As principals in the Langdale Partnership, Edna and Terry Proctor were delightful hosts as well and those who are interested in a one to 10 week share in a condominium should ask for them direct.

England

However, they speak only English, not American.

"Are you ticked off," an Englishwoman asked the traveler.

"No, I'm not mad at anyone."

Looking exasperated, the native clarified herself: "Is your name marked off the list?"

Or, the telephone directions in which the traveler is told to find Queen's Ferry Road. Coming from a dry climate the only "ferry" the traveler could think of was "fairy."

"I didn't know the queen set aside a special road for those people," the traveler thought, until she saw the street sign only a few blocks from the harbor.

A traveler must be prepared to admit stupidity. Ma Bell doesn't control the phone system there, and using a pay telephone isn't the same as in the States. "You Americans," said an Englishwoman showing a traveler how to use the phone, "have such a strange phone system. I never can use your phones when I'm over there."

The money is pushed into the phone only after the other party answers. And depending on the time of day, day of the month, month of the year and mood of the queen, the price varies.

GREAT BRITAIN has an excellent rail system. The only caution is to be sure to get on a car that is air conditioned, if there's another heat wave. But even in the steamy heat, the traveling natives could be friendly. One young man sporting a Falklands sweat shirt talked about his service in that brief war and an unexpected freezing swim when his ship was sunk.

Renting a car is easy. Driving it is the hard part. The English Mini came sans radio, sans air conditioner, sans air vents and sans power steering. It's not only embarrassing to acknowledge to all the other drivers to never having driven on that side of the road, but to ask a gas station owner what the numbers mean on the pumps since they aren't marked leaded and unleaded.

"Don't you know what kind of gasoline you want?" the man said.

"Car gasoline," the traveler said.

Half laughing, the man said, "Put in Number Four."

BUT THE natives can't always be trusted. Watching the golden sunset at Oban, a Scottish couple in their 60s talked about how easy it would be to drive in Edinburgh. "I'm from a farm in the country and driving in Edinburgh is no problem to me."

No one mentioned the same street can have at least 15 different names as it stretches from one end of town to the other. Princes Street is only Princes Street for a few blocks, but it took two hours to discover that in the middle of rush-hour traffic.

Getting through the cities can be murderous, especially with the round-abouts and 5,000 cars heading for the sardine can on wheels. But by going around in the circle hundreds of times, the traveler finally can find the correct road.

It's the countryside where the car becomes invaluable as it takes the traveler to spots not included in guided tours.

"This road isn't on the map," said the passenger to the traveler.

"Doesn't matter," said the driver as the car whizzed down a narrow two-lane road with centuries-old thatched-roof houses opening onto the street. "Road signs all say we're going to wind up in the right town." (They did).

Sometimes, in the middle of idyllic settings, the realities of today's world can intrude. Next to a narrow road in a forest the signs read, "Watch for Tanks" and "Tanks Crossing."

THE SIGNS WEREN'T lying. A few hundred yards down the road in a clearing sat rows of tanks, the guns pointed above the road.

Staying in expensive hotels doesn't always assure a traveler of hot, tasty food served on time with friendliness as a side dish. But it is the specialty of a bed-and-breakfast place. And Great Britain thrives on its bed-and-breakfast business.

To find a place to stay during a crowded holiday season, the best place to contact is the British (or Scottish) Tourist Authority. For a small fee, they will tell a traveler where to find affordable accommodations in that town. In Oban, despite the crowded room and hot temperatures, the employees were courteous and located a room in a house three miles outside of town. The woman who opened her house to the travelers had her own special, grandmotherly charm and the house looked out onto a 12th century castle. The cost was 5 pounds, or about $7.50 for bath, bed, evening tea and morning breakfast..

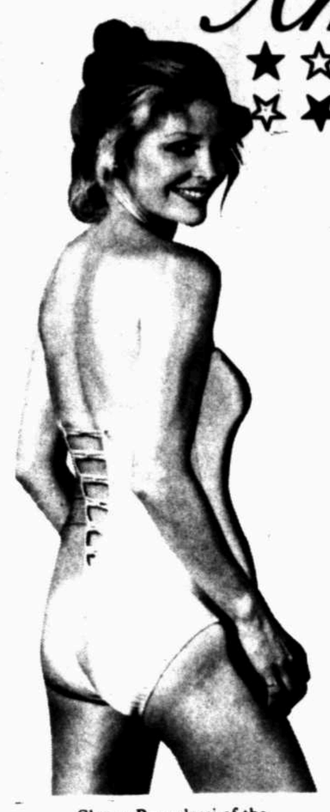

SEVERAL PLACES are old houses with many rooms converted for use by travelers. Breakfast is served in a small dining room and all the travelers usually strike up a conversation with each other. One place served tea and shortbread in the evening before bedtime, another offered coffee in the television room and another had a backyard filled with sweet-smelling flowers in the cool summer evening.

"When you plan your next U.K. trip — whenever that may be — remember us," the English friend said in her card. "You are very welcome to a bed, and Birmingham makes a reasonable center for several outings, especially Stratford and several stately homes nearby."

Of course, there will be another trip to England, and this time Birmingham will be "ticked off."

Taping conversations may solve problems

FARMINGTON, Conn. (AP) — Some may frown on the practice, but taping conversations may have a positive effect in solving domestic problems.

That's the opinion of Krass Kestin, a counseling psychologist who has employed the technique after discussing personal situations with Emhart employees here.

Kestin explains, "Their work was suffering because of problems at home and they poured out their feelings. Afterward, I'd tell them what they said was taped and suggest they take the tape home and play it for the family members."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Methods for treating scoliosis equal

Dear Dr. Solomon: A few years ago a friend of mine had a daughter who had scoliosis and she had to wear a brace for a while. It turned out fine and, in fact, she was recently married. Now the daughter of another friend is getting electrical treatments for the same condition. Is one form of treatment better than the other, or have they learned something new? — Mrs. L.R., Baltimore, Md.

Dear Mrs. R.: Dr. Scott J. Mibarak, of Children's Hospital and Health Center in San Diego, says that the used of a brace or treatment by electrical stimulation of back muscles are both effective in about 85 percent of patients with scoliosis (curvature of the spine); however, electrical stimulation has certain advantages.

Treatment with electrical stimulation takes place only during sleep. This means that the child is not burdened during the day, does not have to explain to friends and others why he or she is wearing a brace, and the patient's compliance with treatment is therefore improved.

Not every child with scoliosis can be treated by electrical stimulation, and about 15 percent of those who are so treated are not helped, either because they do not comply with the treatment program, or they have some problem with the electrode that supplies the stimulation, or are otherwise unable to tolerate the device. Some of these patients may respond to treatment with a brace, but others may require surgery.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband went to his doctor because he has some pain in his arm, and the doctor told him he had tennis elbow. My husband doesn't know a tennis ball from a bowling ball, so how could he ever have a tennis elbow? — Mrs. V.A., Houston, Texas

Dear Mrs. A.: You don't have to be a tennis player to develop tennis elbow any more than you have to be an athlete to get athlete's foot. Even repeated gripping of a tool, such as a screw driver, can cause enough stress on the forearm muscles to cause the condition.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Until I was in my fifties, I don't remember ever hearing of a woman who had a heart attack, although I did know of some men who had heart attacks. Now that I am in my sixties, I seem to hear of more and more about women getting them. Are women more likely to get heart attacks as they get older? — Sue, Montreal

Dear Sue: The incidence of cardiovascular disease is always higher for men than it is for women. However, the relative increase is greater for women once they reach the menopause.

For Tommy, Ann Arbor, Mich.: Some researchers believe that marijuana is even more damaging to the lungs than is cigarette smoking. They say that chronic marijuana smoking can cause a variety of respiratory difficulties in one year or less that would take 10 to 20 years of cigarette smoking to produce.

Sports injuries may cause arthritis

ATLANTA (AP) — Sports injuries may lead to arthritis, especially when they go untreated, according to the Arthritis Foundation.

It says a serioues athletic injury to a joint needs prompt medical attention or it can lead to traumatic arthritis, a form of osteoarthritis.

Osteoarthritis affects 16 million Americans, or about one in every 14 persons.

Survey: Men don't take advantage of paternity leave

NEW YORK (AP) — An increasing number of the nation's major companies are offering "paternity benefits," but men seldom take leave to help care for their newborn children, a survey shows.

Catalyst, a women's research organization, said Wednesday it found that men and women are offered comparable unpaid leaves following the birth of a child.

While most of the nation's major companies offer disability benefits to pregnant employees, very few provide extended paid leaves, the survey showed.

Catalyst also found what it called a "surprisingly" large number of women arranging to work part time for a period after returning from leave, with 60 percent of the companies saying that option had been granted.

The study said 75 percent of the companies reported that new mothers return on average within three months.

"Women return to work relatively quickly," Phyllis Silverman, Catalyst's director of career and family planning programs, said at a news conference.

The report said parental benefits are of growing concern to companies.

Forty-four percent of the labor force is comprised of women, and that figure should be 50 percent by 1990, Catalyst said, predicting that 80 percent of these women will at some point become pregnant.

Catalyst said it received responses from 28.7 percent of the country's top 1,000 industrial companies and 500 biggest financial and service concerns. The responses came from all regions of the country, Catalyst said.

Doctors may profit from embryo transfer process

LOS ANGELES (AP) — With the birth of the world's second baby by an embryo-transfer process, a group of medical researchers plans to cash in on the technique by opening "adopt-an-embryo" clinics in several cities nationwide.

Michael Eberhard, vice president of Memorial Health Technologies, announced Saturday the first such clinic will open this summer in Long Beach to help infertile couples have children.

His announcement followed the birth of a baby girl about 10 days earlier by the embryo-transfer technique. A precise date of birth was not made public to preserve the privacy of the family. Doctors also have declined to reveal the names of the infant or where she was born.

Eberhard said the latest delivery was announced Saturday at a meeting of the Society for Gynecological Investigation in San Francisco by Dr. John Buster, who is in charge of the embryo transfer research team at Harbor-UCLA Medical Center in Torrance.

Under the embryo-transfer procedure, an embryo is taken from one woman and placed in another woman's uterus.

Buster described the latest embryo-transfer baby as a "beautiful, full-term little girl" who was born at a Southern California hospital after an uncomplicated delivery.

He said the parents were a professional couple in their mid-30s who "had been unable to bear children because of the mother's intractable infertility that two major surgical procedures failed to correct."

In February, Memorial Health Technologies and an associated research group, Fertility & Genetics Research Inc. of Chicago, had announced the birth of a baby boy using the new procedure.

Eberhard said Memorial Health Technologies, working under contract with the Chicago group, is developing plans to open several "adopt an embryo" clinics nationwide.

"The cities right now that have shown the greatest interest — and I wouldn't want to mention the names of the medical centers — are San Antonio, Chicago, New York and Miami," Eberhard said.

Scientists successfully combating rubella

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States has been so successful at combatting German measles, which can cause permanent damage to children infected in the womb, that the disease could be eradicated within the next 15 years, says a federal health official.

Dr. Alan R. Hinman, director for immunization at the Centers for Disease Control, said recently that the United States has succeeded in cutting reported cases of rubella to under 1,000 per year and the incidence of children with birth defects to less than 100 yearly.

"If we continue to do what we're doing now, rubella will disappear from the United States in the next 15 or 30 years," Hinman told an international symposium on rubella, also known as German or three-day measles.

The vaccines have only been used in a limited number of countries, and experts from more than 20 countries came to the three-day symposium to discuss the best ways to approach rubella immunization.

When vaccines against rubella became available 15 years ago, the United States began an aggressive campaign to innoculate the entire population against the disease.

However, other nations, such as the United Kingdom, use selective vaccination of women and girls who could become pregnant to provide individual protection.

Dr. Saul Krugman of New York University Medical Center, a conference co-chairman, said the disease is rather mild in children, with many never feeling ill or getting a rash.

Because of this, many doctors and health officials in other countries don't necessarily see rubella as a serious health problem.

"The disease becomes a problem when it affects women of child-bearing age," Krugman said.

Although a pregnant woman suffers few ill effects from rubella, the virus causing the disease can infect the fetus. An infection, particularly early in pregnancy, can result in heart abnormalities, deafness, mental retardation, cataracts in the eyes and nervous system abnormalities.

Infants with congenital rubella infection can have a mortality rate as high as 20 percent in the first 18 months of life, the experts said, but in many cases the effects are delayed. It can take months, or even years, for such symptoms as hearing loss to appear, they noted.

Heart attack victims may resume sexual activity

By JUDITH KURIANSKY

Q. My husband had a heart attack two months ago. He's only 47. But since he's come home, he never mentions sex anymore. I don't know what to do.

A. Be patient and understanding. You can resume a good sex life after a heart attack, as long as you attend to what I call the three F's.

Get the facts. You and your husband should talk to his doctor together about when it's safe to have sex again. Recent studies show that few people have such a talk both because of their own — and the doctor's — anxieties about talking about sex.

Only one in three doctors offers such information, so you have to take the initiative. You might be surprised to learn that research shows you can resume sex when you resume your other activities. Monitoring the increase in heart rate during sex as well as other daily activities showed that normal sexual activity between spouses may be no more stressful than a brisk evening walk.

Notice I said normal sexual activity between spouses. Sex with unfamiliar partners or much more vigorous partners can increase stress, and therefore risk. And statistics show that the danger of an attack during the sexual act increases during an extramarital liaison. Sex is safest without emotional pressue.

Talk about feelings. More than half of couples have problems with sex after a heart attack because of fear — usually the fear of dying in bed. But this fear is not justified. Even in a problem case, medications, instructions about altered positions and exercise programs under your doctors' care can help in resuming sexual activity. Some sophisticated post-heart-attack programs even have devices you can hook up to monitor your heart rate during sex and other activities.

Feeling depressed — which is perfectly normal after any illness — can interfere with resuming sex. Talk about the sadness, and also the anger, over getting sick and maybe even facing death. Then those feelings will pass, and you can both feel sexual again.

In case either you or your husband worry that having "safe" sexual relations now means it would be boring, be reassured. In one research group, post-heart-attack patients who participated in group talk sessions with their spouses reported that their sex lives were much better than before the illness. Talking about their fears helped alleviate them.

They also spoke, sometimes for the first time, about what they liked in sex. One couple who had always made love at the same time of day in the same way had to change their routine and discovered even more pleasure!

Continue affection. Sexual activity is not just intercourse. Touching, holding, kissing, even talking about a sexual fantasy you have about your partner can be very stimulating and help couples feel good during rough times.

Q. My husband isn't as affectionate as I would like. Sometimes the only way to get him into bed is to make him angry with me. Then to make up, we have sex.

A. Energy — in whatever form — can fuel sexual passion. When your body is "revved up" and your mind is alert, you can channel that energy into sexual outlets. The "charge" can come from the exertion of playing a spot together, the excitement of getting a raise, or even the anxiety of being on the edge of a cliff. When your adrenaline flows, you can get turned on. But when a couple needs to fight to get excited, there's a problem.

Often the problem is a battle over control. The man, feeling insecure (possibly because of problems in other areas of life, like work), needs to assert his power and dominance in bed.

He's afraid to be soft or gentle for fear this would undermine his masculinity in his eyes or expose his feelings of vulnerability. He may also feel angry toward you, but is unable to express it in words. Talk about his tensions with you and also in other areas of his life.

In one survey I conducted, the majority of women reported that anger was a turn-off for them. But only half the men agreed. The men might be able to handle — and even welcome — angry feelings better than women.

Examine how you might be contributing to this pattern of anger between you. Are you also angry but unable to express those feelings? Have you chosen a man who is withdrawn, and perhaps even hostile towards you (or women in general)?

Dr. Judith Kuriansky is a columnist for King Features Syndicate.

Vaccine protects children from meningitis

BOSTON (AP) — Children should be routinely vaccinated against hemophilus, a bacteria that preys on babies and is a major cause of meningitis and other fatal illnesses, says a European study published today.

The vaccine prevents infection with hemophilus influenzae type b, which causes 20,000 to 30,000 cases of illness in the United States each year.

Tested on 50,000 children in Finland, the vaccine has one major drawback: It does not work on children who are under 18 months old. And since the bacteria often strikes babies around age 1, many experts have discounted the usefulness of the shots.

The latest research shows, however, that the germ is a major hazard throughout childhood, and much illness could be prevented by a widespread vaccination program.

The germ — not to be confused with the flu virus — is the foremost cause of childhood meningitis, a brain inflammation that kills 5 percent to 10 percent of its victims and leaves 30 percent with permanent damage. It also causes epiglottitis, a fatal obstruction of the windpipe, along with arthritis, pneumonia and other diseases.

The shots, known as the Hib vaccine, apparently cause no dangerous side effects.

The vaccine is not yet produced in large volumes in the United States.

Arthritis remissions temporary

ATLANTA (AP) — Remissions can lead people with arthritis to develop a false sense of security, cautions the Arthritis Foundation.

People with arthritis often experience remissions, during which some or all of their symptoms may disappear, but usually temporarily and often without treatment.

The symptoms may go away but the arthritis doesn't, says the foundation.

Arthritis sufferers should continue to see the doctor and follow their prescribed treatment program during a remission.

Guidelines issued on X-rays

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Blue Cross and Blue Shield Association has issued guidelines designed to reduce the number of medical imaging procedures such as X-rays and ultrasound scans in hopes of cutting mounting health costs.

Bernard R. Tresnowski, president of the association, told a news briefing Wednesday that the guidelines will help assure that patients don't get unnecessary diagnostic imaging and that insurers like Blue Cross and Blue Shield won't have to pay for it.

"The new guidelines are not a reduction in benefits," Tresnowski said, "but an attempt to make sure that we are not paying for tests that are not needed."

Tresnowski said Blue Cross and Blue Shield plans throughout the country pay about 35 percent of the $7 billion spent annually on X-rays, computerized three-dimensional X-rays called CAT scans, ultrasound scans, as well as nuclear and other types of imaging.

Almost 200 million of these imaging procecdures are done each year and the number is rising by about 8 percent each year. Although there are no figures on how many of these procedures may be unnecessary, he said, there are good indications that some of them are.

Even if the percentage of unnecessary imaging procedures is small, Blue Cross officials said, so much money is spent on these diagnostic tools that even a small decrease in use will mean savings of millions of dollars.

Dr. Ervin E. Nichols of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, one of eight professional medical organizations that helped develop the guidelines, said 40 percent of all pregnant women have ultrasound examinations.

Nichols said he would guess that between 10 percent and 30 percent of these ultrasound scans are being done "for no good reason."

The guidelines will be sent to state and local Blue Cross and Blue Shield plans, which generally adopt such recommendations, Tresnowski said.

The following are some of the key recommendations:

—When cancer or other breast disease is suspected, X-ray mammography may be indicated, as well as ultrasound if the X-ray results are inconclusive. However, thermography, which uses variations in tissue heat to produce images, and diaphanography, in which images are created with intense light passing through tissue, are not recommended.

—CAT scans should not be used to evaluate headaches, unless the headaches are very unusual or prolonged and could suggest a more serious brain problem.

—Ultrasound images should not be used routinely during pregnancy and only when a specific problem is suspected. Physicians should not do ultrasound examinations just to learn the sex of a fetus or to give the prospective parents a picture to show their friends.

—Routine chest X-rays are not recommended for any situation.

"The use of diagnostic imaging procedures continues to escalate every year," Tresnowski said. "Significantly, it is the newer and more costly imaging procedures, such as ultrasound and CAT scans, which have had the fastest growth, nearly 60 percent annually."

The association recommended that state and local plans spend the next six months to a year educating hospitals and physicians and other health professionals on the guidelines and monitoring their behavior.

As patterns of inappropriate use emerge, institutions and individuals should be warned that their insurance reimbursements may be endangered before considering any cuts in payments, Tresnowski said.

In most cases, the insurers will continue to pay for most imaging procedures, he said, but doctors and hospitals will be required to provide more written justification for acting contrary to the guidelines.

RACING FEVER

Matt Holton/Reporter-Telegram

Action-packed thrills keep spectators and drivers, including a determined Christy Erwin, returning to Twin-Cities Speedway each weekend.

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Odessa native Christy Erwin has spent almost the entire 20 years of her life engaged in competitive sports. She has crossed from basketball, volleyball, track, softball and baseball to what is now her No. 1 love — stock car racing.

Every Friday night during the season, she is the only woman driving the oval track at Twin-Cities Speedway, east of Odessa Country Club's golf course on Highway 80's service road. Out of the three racing categories — stock, semi-late and late model — Miss Erwin races No. 35, a yellow-and-black 1974 Chevrolet Monte Carlo, in the stock division.

It's not her first experience competing in what has largely been considered male domain. When she was 10, she was the first girl to play on a boys' Little League baseball team in Odessa. Eight years later, after driving in Twin-Cities' powder-puff races for one season when she was 17, she stepped into the often times not-so-enviable position of being the only female in serious competition at Twin-Cities Speedway.

"It feels good to get out there and go as fast as you can and not get a ticket," Miss Erwin says. "It's exciting, competitive, especially against the guys and especially when you win."

However, when John Foster, John David, Bill Fales and her father, Joe Erwin, bought the track three years ago, she had no idea what impact their purchase would have in her life. After all, the track wasn't new territory for her.

"My dad, my grandfather (J.D. Erwin) and my uncle (Eddie Erwin) have all raced out there since their earlier years." Laughing, Miss Erwin remembers one night at the races when she was in the sixth grade, "I busted my lip. We were running up and down the bleachers, and I tripped and busted my lip right there on the bleacher."

Even when she was 17, she went to the track only as a spectator. Her family tried to get her to drive a car but her response was always "No way."

'Thrills, spills, chills'

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

The ground shakes. Brightly-colored stock cars flash past on the asphalt oval track. Suddenly, two cars collide, spinning out of the No. 2 turn. The flagman waves the red flag; racers begin gliding to a stop. The announcer's rapid-fire voice commands the crowd's interest over the diminished roar of the high performance engines, as he describes who's done what to whom.

Only moments before, the crowd's attention had been divided. Some were watching the race, while others were talking with friends sitting around them in the bleachers or making their own pit stop at the concession stands.

For a snap-shot moment, everything stops. All attention focuses on the track.

Two tow trucks wheel onto the track followed by an ambulance. People look toward the north wall, appraising whether there's damage to life and limb or not. One of the wrecked cars begins to creep along. The other is perfectly still, but the driver gets out, obviously unhurt.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

While drivers are often no more than 2 inches apart coming around the turns, watch out when that distance narrows.

Once again, the crowd's attention is diverted to former conversations; however, an expectant hush still hangs over the track. If there's more action, no one wants to miss it.

It's Friday night and as the sun sets slowly in the west, Twin-Cities Speedway revs up for, as announcer J. A. "Monty" Coldwell puts it over the loudspeaker, "Spills, thrills and chills."

To make sure they get a good seat, spectators begin showing up at 7 p.m.

"They want a ringside seat so they can see the turns," says Coldwell, who has been involved in racing for over 20 years. "On a quarter-of-a-mile asphalt oval you very seldom get too much action going down the straightaway, but in every one/two and three/four corners it's almost guaranteed throughout the night that there's going to be a lot of fender bending going on — maybe a few fires, maybe a turnover. People (spectators) put up bonuses for rollover fees. A car rolls over, he (the driver) automatically gets whatever amount has been put up. Nobody really wants to collect it.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. Whatever happened to Greg Evigan from "B.J. and the Bear"? Will he ever be on TV again?

R.B.
Sioux Falls, S.D.

A. He has been. He was on the recent ABC series "Masquerade," which was canceled at the end of the season. He also played one of the Champion brothers, briefly, on NBC's "The Yellow Rose."

Now, depending on the fate of that show (unsettled, as we go to press), it's possible that he could reappear in a future episode. For the time being, however, he's concentrating on writing songs and casting about for a Broadway show — he started on Broadway and would like to return.

Greg Evigan

Q. In 1983 I read an article about Gena Rowlands saying that her next movie, "Love Streams," would be out early next year, 1984. It hasn't premiered yet. When will it?

Anxious Trenton, N.J.

A. At this point, no one knows. The film was finished early this year and was shown at the Berlin Film Festival (where it won two major awards). However, Cannon Films, its distributor, doesn't have it on the release schedule.

James Garner

Q. I haven't seen much of James Garner lately. What is he doing?

C.P.
Las Vegas, Nev.

A. After a disastrous outing in the film "Tank," his current activities are all on TV. "The Glitter Dome," based on Joseph Wambaugh's novel, will be on HBO in August. He's currently filming "Heartsounds," based on Martha Weinman Lear's best seller, for ABC with Mary Tyler Moore, and after that, he goes into a miniseries, "Space."

Q. I would like some information on the British actor Alan Bates — is he married, has he made any current movies, etc.?

M. Silva
Hanford Calif.

A. Bates is 50, the son of a classical musician. He's from Allestree, Derbyshire, in England, is married and the father of 14-year-old twin sons. Professionally, he's an alumnus of the prestigious Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts, in the class that also turned out Albert Finney, Tom Courtenay and other stalwarts of the British stage.

Recent films include "An Unmarried Woman," "The Rose" with Bette Midler and "Nijinsky."

He also co-starred with Sir Laurence Olivier in a British TV production of "A Voyage Round My Father," broadcast here in April.

His next project is a play, "A Patriot for Me," in which he starred in London and plans to bring to Los Angeles this fall...then perhaps to Broadway.

Alan Bates

Q. We really enjoy David Morse on "St. Elsewhere." What can you tell us about him? How old is he? Is he married? What else has he done? And is he anything like his character, Dr. Morrison?

Lynda Friesen
Ontario, Calif.

A. He's 30, was born in Beverly, Mass., and raised in Hamilton, Mass. He credits the plays at Hamilton High School as the only reason he didn't drop out of school. After high school, he joined the newly formed Boston Repertory Theater, stayed for six years, and then in 1977, decided to try his luck as an actor in New York.

He was working as a bartender when he was spotted by a talent scout and sent to meet director Richard Donner, who then cast him in his first film, "Inside Moves." He got good reviews, but no further movie offers, so he came back to the off-Broadway theater. A few years ago, though, he decided to crack movies and TV and moved out to Los Angeles; "St. Elsewhere" came up not too long after.

Personally, he's married to actress Susan von Moschzisker with whom he does a lot of charity work — including helping abused children in the L.A. area. And he is a bit like his character, according to a friend. "David pretty much keeps to himself," he says. "There aren't too many people he feels really close to. He's very sensitive and painfully shy."

Cheryl Ladd

Q. Does Cheryl Ladd have any plans to go back into show business or to do any more TV?

M.M.C.
Hobart, Ind.

A. She never left show business. Although she isn't as visible as she was during the years on "Charlie's Angels," she has done a few TV movies recently, such as "Kentucky Woman," and "The Hasty Heart" for Showtime, reprising a role she'd performed onstage in Los Angeles.

Last month, her film "Purple Hearts" was released, and she has three projects pending that as of now she won't discuss. She will say, though, that while TV movies are possible, she isn't too interested in doing another series.

CHRISTY

"I was scared. Finally, they just told me to drive one one night when they were all out there practicing. I loved it."

After watching her drive the track, her father said, "I think she can do it.' I had a pattern, and I didn't putt-putt around there like all the other girls do."

Her dad then asked her, "Do you want me to build you a race car for next year to race?" Her reply was to the point, "Sure. I'll go for it."

Since then, Miss Erwin has done just that, despite some of the obstacles she contends with on a weekly basis. She has problems with what she calls "the boys."

"WHEN I'M out there racing, I stay away from anybody I can unless they're in my way, and I'm overtaking them. They give me a battle back and forth cause they say I can't drive, and I can outbeat any of them out there.

"If they spin me out, or if we're going down for the green flag, or whatever, and they're on my butt bumping me, making me mess up, well, then they've got one coming right back."

Not all of the drivers feel threatened by Miss Erwin.

"Just the ones that think they're so bad in stock. Now, none of the late model or semi-late — they really don't have a grudge against me. It's just the ones that ain't got it. They ain't got the money to make their car go around. They're just barely getting by themselves."

She does get along with certain drivers, such as No. 3, Terry Bradshaw.

"IF WE'RE side by side, we might bump a little bit, but we don't just turn the wheel and run each other into the wall.

"I've got a few that I get along with, but other than those, I can't stand them. I'd just rather not talk to them or see them, and I don't go to them first and start griping and making a scene.

"They'll come over to me, and I've got my pit crew standing there and they'll say, 'Get out of here, we don't want to hear it.' "

Miss Erwin and No. 81, a Camero, are locked into a disagreement which dates back to last summer. No. 81 was on Miss Erwin's tail going into the No. 1 turn and coming out of the No. 2 turn, when the members of her pit crew saw the driver's father jumping up and down as he yelled at his son, "Do it now. Do it now. Spin her out."

"Then, all of a sudden, I got spun out. Since then, we've had a feud going on, and I'm not going to give in to him because I can outdrive him just as much as he can outdrive me."

SEVERAL WEEKS ago, No. 81 got Miss Erwin's No. 35 up against the wall.

"He came over after that race and said, 'Oh, I'm sorry, I lost control.' I said, 'You just go back over there and mind your own business.'

"I was mad. I do get very mad because we've had it back and forth since I started racing. He started it. He came over and apologized because that's a pay back I have. And he'll get one and he knows it."

That night when Miss Erwin went up to collect her money for winning the feature race, the driver's dad, who has never spoken to her, yelled, "Christy, good race." As they were leaving the track, the father tooted his horn.

"They know they're going to get it. They do, or they wouldn't have done that."

WHEN MISS Erwin wins, she says, "They come up with all kinds of excuses. They can't take it really cause I'm a girl."

The drivers Miss Erwin has trouble with feel that she's competing in a man's world. She disagrees.

"Not all girls go out there and do that. When I went to drivers' ed, I already knew everything there is about driving. I was driving when I was 10 years old. Nobody really taught me how to drive except when I was real little, my dad let me sit in his lap. Other than that, it just came natural."

Although Miss Erwin is not in racing full time, she hopes to be. Her desire is "to go as far as I can.

"There's been pressure points, even from my dad. He wants to move me up, semi-late, late model and I don't want to. We had a car last year, it was a semi-late, which is the middle group. It had all the power, but it wouldn't handle to go around," Miss Erwin says.

CLOSE TO the end of last year's season, her stock car, a Camero, was wrecked.

"I got hit head on by four cars, and I was sitting at a dead still. It totaled my car, put a big cut on my neck, knocked my knee out of whack.

"After that I drove that semi-late the rest of the year, there was like four or five weeks left, and we didn't have time to get another stocker out there. So I gave it my best shot, but it wouldn't handle and I was scared. When I feel like I'm able to move up, I will. But until then, I won't. I'll stay in stock."

To have a career in racing requires, Miss Erwin says, "A lot of money. So much money — over a million dollars — to be a grand national stock car racer like Richard Petty, Neil Bonnett, Cale Yarborough. It takes good sponsors, a lot of money and a lot of time. You've got to have a reputation."

Although Miss Erwin, who works as a secretary for her father at Odessa's Bronco Chevrolet, is not in a financial position to compete on a national level, she says, "That's my dream. And even if it doesn't come true, I can still dream."

AFTER COMPETING for almost two complete seasons, she knows what it takes to race a car.

"It does take a lot of guts to get out there, especially in stock, any class, really. You're got to know what you're doing. You've got to have some money. You got to have a team. If you don't have a team (pit crew), you can do it, but it's that much harder. You've got to want to do it. It takes a lot of work, dedication, a lot of hours in the night, too.

The dedication Miss Erwin feels for racing cuts across all the boundaries of her life. Any man she chooses to marry will have to understand that.

"I have a friend who is 10th in the nation in men's karate and first in the nation in women's karate. She's been married twice and they both said, 'Pick me or pick karate.' She had to think about it, but she picked karate because karate was there before he was.

"If I get married and he says that, it'll be racing. He shouldn't say that. He shouldn't have to say pick racing or pick me. He should be behind me all the way just like I'd be behind him in anything he does. That's it."

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Blowing dirt blasts two fans, top photo, as the thrills and spills of oval racing hit a little too close for comfort. With a little help from a tow truck, the driver and car are shortly up and running the Twin-Cities Speedway track again. A look from inside, above left, as pit crewmen Brent Amonett, left, and Brit David work on driver John David Jr.'s car before the races. Christy Erwin, the only female stock car racer at Twin-Cities Speedway, above right, takes her 1974 Chevrolet Monte Carlo — No. 35 — through the warm up laps before the races.

"On a quarter-of-a-mile, people come out because they know they're going to get some action in the turns. They know there's going to be wrecks and when you've got 26 cars running at once in the street stock division, sometimes it takes a complete hour to run one feature race."

Wrecks are expensive not only financially but also in terms of number of spectators on any given night.

"Anytime a car's wrecked and out — every car touches 50 to 75 to 100 people — cousins, aunts, uncles, brothers, co-workers, friends — that follows cars. So when one car is down, you might be out 100 spectators for the next race."

This year, the worst wreck to date occurred in the late-model division during the opening race of the season.

"One hit going into the No. 1 turn, spinning out another car, hitting it, going up over the hood and going up over the fence, catching the rear wheels on a steel post before going off into the pit area. That steel post broke the speed of the car allowing the pit people to get out of the way. Since that time, the fence has been modified. So when you're running on a quarter-of-a-mile oval, you're talking about action."

In straightaway drag racing, the participants are racing against a clock; in oval racing, they are competing against one another. Both require dedication and work.

"You can't just get out there and get in a car and say, 'Well, I'm going racing.' You've got to do some work. Your car's got to be set up to go in that circle. You've got to have the right tire size according to the rules. You've got to have the right gear, the right rear end, the right carboration, the right pit crew, the right mechanic, the right sponsor and the right alert mind to keep out of trouble."

In racing, drivers and spectators share a common bond; the drivers put on the show while the spectators vicariously enjoy the ride in the fast lane.

John Foster, a co-owner of Twin-Cities Speedway and 24-year veteran of stock car racing who drives on the All-Pro Circuit, was first attracted to racing because of his fascination with automobiles and car racing in general.

"As I got into it, I discovered that here we've got a tremendous sport, and the competition is tremendous. The more I got involved, the more I liked it. A lot of people thought I would outgrow it. Now some 20 years later, I'm still doing it. I'm actually doing it more than when I started."

Noise — roaring engines, the sound of metal crushing metal — is part of the thrill of the races.

"When those automobiles come around and they shake the ground, it can send chills up your spine," Foster says. "I've run some races in Colorado where we had to run mufflers because of zoning rules and that type of thing, and a car race where you can only hear the tires squeal is pretty dull."

To keep the action going each week, Twin-Cities Speedway plans special events throughout the season which opened this year on April 6 and closes Oct. 7. Those events include:

— a special Street Stock Championship with over $1,000 in prize money this Friday;

— the Mid-Season Championship for all three divisions July 6;

— "Smoky and The Bandit Stunt/Thrill Show," an added attraction to the Friday night races July 13;

— the first Demolition Derby in a series of three Aug. 4;

— the "Texas Pro Series" returns to the Speedway with a purse of $12,000 Aug. 17-18;

— the second Demolition Derby Sept. 8;

— the "Texas Two-Barrell Championship" Sept. 28-30;

— and the third Demolition Derby Oct. 7. (The demolition derbies are open to all interested parties who want to test their ability to wipe out the competition. They may enter one or all three. To enter call Coldwell at 686-7923.)

Racers do think of safety precautions and some may be nervous when they first climb into their cars. "But," Foster says, once the competition starts, then the feel of excitement just builds inside. Blood starts flowing quickly; the adrenline flows."

Twin-Cities Speedway's lease is up in two years.

"People are concerned about the future of auto racing in West Texas, but we have faith not only in the sport nationally, which is growing throughout the nation, but locally as well," Foster says. "We've bought 30 acres to relocate the Speedway between the two cities between Highway 80 and I-20.

"The new facility will be an all purpose one featuring not only oval racing, but also motorcross and such events as mud drags and tractor pulls. Scheduled to open in 1986, it will be more of an overall recreational area and will have a place for outdoor concerts under the stars."

When the last race has been run each week at Twin-Cities Speedway, the stands clear as the participants and their families begin loading up.

"Everybody's tired, everybody's had a good time," Coldwell says. "They're getting ready to go home and get ready to go to the next race somewhere.

"One thing, in my opinion, that makes auto racing very special to each and everybody that's connected to it, is the closeness."

Book marks 'M*A*S*H's' finale

NEW YORK (AP) — The seven actors stole into the night, dragging the heavy Red Cross crate and giggling from the effects of a bottle of champagne. They dug a hole in a secret place and buried the remains of an 11-year-old legend.

It was the last day of the hit TV series, "M*A*S*H." The cast had put props from the show in the box as a sort of time capsule. It is buried somewhere on the lot of 20th Century Fox.

Arlene Alda captured that moment and others from the fall of 1982 in her book, "The Last Days of M*A*S*H" (The Unicorn Publishing House, $9.95). It is a photo essay of last goodbyes, of the farewell to a legendary TV show and the people who defined it.

"What I had hoped to do," Mrs. Alda said, "was register what people didn't see."

She is married to Alan Alda, who wrote, directed and starred as Hawkeye Pierce in "M*A*S*H." He also wrote segments of the book, royalties from which are being donated to the Pearl S. Buck Foundation to benefit Amerasian children.

Alda clings fiercely to privacy and dislikes having his picture taken, so the photo project was a problem for his wife.

"I found that during a whole week, I was terribly conflicted. I identified with my husband and the cast," she said. "When I put down the camera, I was as tearyeyed as everyone. When the camera was up, it was a shield. I was a professional and I had to understand and translate that emotion into a viable photograph."

"These are people," Alda interjected during an interview at his New York production office. "They're not stars or special people. They're people under pressure. All of us wanted that to be a very private, sentimental time. Then we found out that it wouldn't be — that media from all over the world would be there.

"It only added to the pressure and everything we did was tinged with that. We knew we wanted to end it (the show), but we didn't want to go through the process."

Alda worked on the book late at night with his wife, the author of "On Set," "Arlene Alda's ABC," "Sonya's Mommy Works" and "Matthew and His Dad."

"Arlene wrote her text and I wrote mine and then we compared," he said. "I was busy producing 'The Four Seasons' and doing rewriting and there would be the manuscript and photographs on the kitchen table at 3 a.m."

"The book got put together in the wee hours of the morning," added Mrs. Alda.

"In the foxholes of our time," finished Alda.

The Aldas said they work well together, often relying on one another for criticism and input. "She has an unusual sense to see what's at the heart of something... what's really being said and what are the concious conflicts blocking that from clear presentation. I've relied on her ability to do that," Alda said.

A former Fulbright scholar, Mrs. Alda has been a photographer since 1968. She gave up a career as a concert clarinetist to marry Alda. She had played with the Houston Symphony.

"I always felt that music is there — that it's stamped in my psyche forever," she said. "But I don't play the clarinet anymore. Music is always there and that to me is sustenance."

She took a basic darkroom course at a local high school adult education program in the New Jersey town where they have a house.

"The teacher was a marvelous amateur and he inspired me," Mrs. Alda said. "I immediately started taking hundreds of pictures...It's a rich art form and always challenging."

'Mass Appeal' auditions slated

Auditions for "Mass Appeal" will be held in Theatre Two at 7:30 p.m. today and Monday.

"Mass Appeal" deals with the conflict in personalities and beliefs between an older priest in a wealthy parish and a young seminarian filled with idealism but little practicality. It opened in New York in 1980 with Milo O'Shea and Eric Roberts and won critical acclaim both for the script and the performances. Since then it has had several national tours and has been seen on cable television.

Roles are available for two actors. One needs to be able to play in his late 50s or early 60s while the other needs to play in his mid-20s.

'Mr. Ed' fan club formed by accident

DALLAS (AP) — Singers have fan clubs. Athletes have fan clubs. Saturday morning cartoon heros have fan clubs. And now a talking horse has a fan club.

You remember the horse, of course, the famous "Mr. Ed."

The source of this unusual fan club course is a 25-year-old self-proclaimed "Edhead" who publishes a newsletter for the 1,100 members of his Mr. Ed Fan Club.

James Burnett hopes to revive the dead talking horse by returning the once-popular "Mr. Ed" television show to the airwaves. Mr. Ed, the horse, died in 1979 at the age of 33. "Mr. Ed," the TV show, which also starred Alan Young, expired in 1965 after a run of five seasons.

Burnett runs his campaign to syndicate the show from his tiny apartment in the Dallas suburb of Cedar Hill. Although he had never actually watched the show, he founded the club in 1974 — by accident.

"I decided I needed the ultimate fake return address. So I used the 'Mr. Ed Fan Club' because I thought it would be completely absurd for Mr. Ed to have a fan club," Burnett said.

"Then in 1979 I decided to make a T-shirt with the return address on it and people stopped me on the street and said they wanted to join," he said.

Most of his 1,100 members, including Young, who played Wilbur Post, Mr. Ed's owner, have joined in the last year. Word of the club is spreading, Burnett says.

"Most people just love Mr. Ed. That's all there is to it," he said."Right now, Mr. Ed is not very heavily syndicated. He's actually shown in more foreign countries than in U.S. cities.

"I have no idea why that is. But it presents an interesting challenge for me."

Burnett works at part-time odd jobs and hopes to make it big someday as a promoter. He's worked with rock musicians on concerts, handling some publicity, and believes the Mr. Ed Fan Club may lead to bigger career endeavors.

"He's something that was once very popular," Burnett said of the white talking horse, who liked bowling, driving a milk truck and sneezing "Wilburrrrr!"

"I have a chance to promote him and bring the show back," he said. "I think I've really tapped into something unusual."

Burnett said the fan club "is a part-time job and a full-time debt."

The club has held two Mr. Ed parties in Dallas, where "Edheads" gather to watch videotapes of the black-and-white show.

"I had never seen 'Mr. Ed' in my life until 10 months ago when an 'Edhead' in California sent me a videotape for a party," Burnett said. "It was great. He's everything I thought he would be."

With a straight face, Burnett says the club wants to create a city dedicated to Mr. Ed, and he wants to call it "Edtopia."

He wants Mr. Ed on television every night via an "Ed Network Satellite."

He wants all 143 episodes of the show replayed continuously.

"Ed learned through his misadventures with Wilbur," Burnett said. "He learned just about everything you can learn about friendship. His favorite saying was 'Holler, but don't hit.'

"I think there's a lot we can still learn from Mr. Ed," Burnett said. "I think he really relates to these times ...With all the problems and complications of modern life, people need a humorous escape."

Mr. Ed, he said was much more realistic than people realize," Burnett said. "He was actually more human than many humans thought he was."

The club, which he describes as "one big happy accident," is supported by a $6 annual membership fee, which includes a sporadically published newsletter titled "The Horse's Mouth."

"There is a whole generation of young people who have never even heard of Mr. Ed," Burnett said. "I'm out to re-Ed-ucate the public."

Library exhibit deals with making books

"The Making of a Book," a traveling exhibit designed by The Institute of Texan Cultures at San Antonio, takes viewers through the labors of book making. This exhibit is now on view at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, 1805 W. Indiana Ave., Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. through Saturday.

Originally created as an element in The Institute's 1970 exhibit of printer Carl Hertzog's work, the exhibit centers around the process involved in the production of one of Hertzog's books. The material was drawn from the printer's scrapbooks and correspondences.

"The idea is to show the layman all the steps involved in making a book from the author's conception to the successful marketing," says Al Lowman, exhibit originator and institute researcher.

The free standing, five-panel traveling exhibit contains artifacts, illustrations and text that show the different steps in making a book — research, illustration, printing and binding.

But, the book and the show don't stop with the binding process. As Hertzog said, "A book is not a success until it is paid for." The final panels include remarks on advertising, design of the dust cover, advance copies to book reviewers and other publicity tools.

For 50 years, French-born Hertzog has striven to have printing ranked with other, more traditional arts. While in his early 20s, he took up residence in El Paso, where he worked as a printer. It was there he created his reputation as a book designer and printer.

Beer has been guzzled for 4,000 years

By DORALIE D. SEGAL
King Features Syndicate

The Mesopotamians drank it 4,000 years ago. So did the Babylonians. Rameses III sacrificed 30,000 gallons a year to the gods in old Egypt, yet plenty was retained for use in some 100 medical prescriptions. Sophocles loved it and Julius Caesar toasted his victorious officers with it after successfully crossing the Rubicon.

King Arthur served it "round" to his knights and Henry VIII served it for gallant breakfasts. Queen Elizabeth I wouldn't travel without it and Mary, Queen of Scots imbibed during her imprisonment in Tutbury Castle.

Christopher Columbus guzzled it on his fourth voyage west, and the Mayflower passengers were unwilling to travel on because their supply was running dry — and thus they docked at Plymouth Rock!

Many other athletes "tank up" on it, and its popularity is growing.

What is the magical potion? Beer, of course.

BEER IS A malt beverage brewed from cereal grains, principally barley, corn and rice. Ale, a heavier malt beverage, differs from beer only in the brewing temperature. Yeast is used to ferment the sugars in the grains, and the small amounts of alcohol (ranging from about 3.2 to 4.5 percent) result from the fermentation process. Hops (flowers from a vine-like plant) are added in the brewing process as a flavoring agent.

The nutritional value of the finished product is derived from the original grain components, namely, carbohydrate, protein (most amino acids), vitamins and trace minerals. The product composition varies considerably among the various brands and even within the same brand when brewed at a different time in different vats.

These differences result from subtle variations in the brewing process; such as the length of time the grain is allowed to ferment, the proportion of the original ingredients and the composition of the local water source.

Imported beers, especially the specialty types, appear to have the widest variation; therefore, for the sake of reference, this article will concentrate on regular type (not "light," low-calorie) American lager beers.

An article in "Brewers Digest" states, "Prudently consumed, the 4.5 percent alcohol and overall composition (of beer) have excellent effects on body and soul." How literally shall we accept this statement?

BEER PROVIDES a soothing, therapeutic effect derived from the bitter substances in hops. (It is interesting to note the hops were used in olden times for medicinal purposes and are still used today by the pharmaceutical industry for their sedative effect.)

The beverage is reputed to decrease emotional tension without causing a decrement in carrying out normal tasks; in some instances, performance levels are actually increased.

Actually, we know that alcohol has a depressant effect upon the central nervous system, yet the immediate effect is to rev up the cardiovascular system; blood pressure increases rapidly and heart rate increases more slowly; the skin capillaries also dilate.

As many will confirm, beer is an ideal thirst quencher, resulting from the balanced concentration and ratio of alcohol to carbohydrate. Beer enhances appetite and aids digestion in the following ways:

Three components in beer have a salubrious effect on metabolism: B vitamins, organic acids and choline. Each enhances intestinal motility and counteracts some of the cholesterol's action.

BEER INCREASES water transport from the body. The high potassium to low sodium ratio leads to a desirable tissue dehydration.

As all runners know today, body heat generated by muscular effort must be dissipated; the sweating/evaporation process effects this heat discharge. The runner, however, must make certain that he is hydrated sufficiently so that he will be able to sweat freely; as the fluid loss approaches 6 percent of the body weight and the core temperature approaches 105 degrees F, the threat of heat stroke increases enormously.

Beer provides the necessary fluid that is absorbed in the system faster than defizzed colas and electrolyte-replacement preparations. Beer also provides immediate energy because the alcohol is absorbed so rapidly. Sugar, on the other hand, would require digestion.

Dr. George Sheehan describes his effort in the 1977 Boston Marathon, in 80-degree heat, no clouds and no wind: "I know of 16 runners who were overcome and spent the night in the hospital...I had no trouble. I drank 12 ounces of beer two minutes before the start. Then, I drank water until the halfway mark. After that, I bummed a beer every three miles."There is no quicker way to get energy and fluid at one time. The usual sugar drinks lie in the stomach, and many of the runners were vomiting on their way to the finish at Boston."

Most articles written for the beer industry trade publications seem to say that beer has many worthwhile nutritional properties. The following are some claims culled from these sources:

—As a food product, beer is nourishing, stimulating and wholesome.

—Beer is a reasonable source of potassium, magnesium, manganese, zinc, copper and other minerals. Vitamins are present in a highly favorable balance.

—Beer contains all the essential amino acids and the important minerals and B vitamins.

—Bottled beer can contribute as much as 10 of the daily riboflavin needs, up to 20 percent of one's daily niacin requirements, with significant amounts of pyridoxine and pantothenic acid.

—One liter of beer (about three 12-ounce bottles) provides half the daily requirement of nicotinamide and one-third the daily requirement of patothenic acid.

—The minerals in beer, especially phosphorus, are in available form and at useful levels.

RESEARCH FROM non-industry sources indicates that the above statements range from misleading to totally inaccurate. Let's take a closer look at some of these assertions.

Beer is a reasonable source of potassium, magnesium, managenese, zinc, copper and other minerals.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, it would take 17 bottles (12 ounces per bottle) to attain the Recommended Daily Amount (RDA) of potassium for a healthy male between the ages of 23 and 50; 10 bottles to fulfill the magnesium requirement and seven bottles for copper. Beer has less zinc and manganese — it would take 78 bottles of beer to meet the minimum requirement for manganese, and 83 bottles for zinc.

Beer contains all the essential amino acids and the important minerals and B vitamins.

Once again, according to the United States Department of Agriculture, beer provides no vitamin A, no vitamin C, no thiamine.

Bottled beer can contribute as much as 10 percent of the daily riboflavin needs, up to 20 percent of one's daily niacin requirements, with significant amounts of pyridoxine and pantothenic acid.

IT'S TRUE that bottled beer could provide 10 percent of your daily riboflavin needs, but you'd need to consume over two 12-ounce bottles to achieve that 10 percent. As for "significant amounts" of pantothenic acid... you'd have to guzzle down 59 bottles to meet your RDA.

Everyone has seen a "beer belly." It comes, supposedly, from drinking too much brew. Actually, ounce for ounce, beer is less fattening than whole milk, grape juice or apple juice and is about equivalent to certain brands of colas and ginger ales.

While the beer lover might finish off a six-pack (about 2 liters) watching one football game on television, it's not usual for someone to similarly imbibe two quarts of milk during the course of two or three hours. Even though beer isn't a concentrated source of calories, excessive intake results in fat; and men tend to "hoard" this fat in their "beer bellies."

In all honesty, anyone seriously watching his weight would have to consider his beer consumption to be merely "fun" calories, "empty" calories or a junk food. Yes, it has some nutritive value, but it would take 2,368 calories of beer to meet one's RDA for phosphorus, 2,516 calories for potassium and 1,480 for magnesium or niacin.

If the only part of your diet that you're watching is sodium, however, beer might not be a bad idea. A 12-ounce bottle has only 18 mg. of sodium.

But beer for overall health and nutrition? You've got to be kidding!

Dolly loves being part of fantasy world

By SHIRLEY LEE
King Features Syndicate

Dolly Parton, once known as the leading lady of country music, has been making herself known in so many areas of the entertainment world that she's no longer easy to define. Now, fully recovered from a series of physical difficulties that included bleeding ulcers and gynecological and digestive problems, she's rarin' to go.

Slim and trim and casually attired in a red-and-white zig-zaggy sweater over fitted tan pants, which, in turn, are partially covered by calf-high custom-made red high-heeled boots, she bursts like sunlight into the living room of the Beverly Hills Hotel bungalow.

She makes herself comfortable on the small couch. Her saucy blond wig is in place and her only jewelry of the day is a pair of longish red enameled earrings that match her lipstick and an eye-catching heart-shaped diamond ring which turns out to be a present from a "secret admirer."

"I'm really happy to be back in good health and I feel I'm more productive and better off than I've been all my life," she explains cheerfully. "That period of illness gave me a chance to clear out a lot of stuff in my life and to get smart about myself as far as health and nutrition and how to work so much and take so much time off..."

Except for a brief vacation in Hawaii with her husband, Carl Dean, following the making of her third movie, "Rhinestone" — during which the couple purchased a new island home — it seems as if there's been a lot more work than time off.

THERE'S THE movie, of course, in which she co-stars with Sylvester Stallone, and a new album called "The Great Pretender." But this is only the beginning.

"I will do many things. I'm writing a southern Broadway musical called "Wildflower." I might star in it for a time, and if that turns out real well, it could also be a movie. I like to stay busy, and writing is my favorite thing to do. I'm working on a soap opera — hopefully a night-time one — called 'Beulah Fay,' sort of like my life story, about a southern country girl that made it big and what it's like bein' a celebrity from a big family, from the mountains...sort of a comedy with music.

"I've started a production company and will be creating some television shows and series, TV movies and movies in general — not all for me but for other people as well. I'm writing some positive-thinking books and self-help things that'll be coming out."

A sound-track album of "Rhinestone" holds special appeal for her. "I think the songs are some of the best country things I've done since the old days." And for variety, there's the line of clothing she plans to offer, geared to "the average American public," and a full line of cosmetics slated to start off with perfume and skin-care products.

What does she think she knows about such things?

"I never was into fashion or style, but I know how hard it is for some people to find something nice to wear." Even with a trim new figure, she recalls having a hard time finding clothes, "being little and big-busted and big in the hips. I want to make a line of clothes for heavy, hefty, shorter people, among other things." For herself, she's been "mixing and matching whatever makes me feel good" for a long time, generally in her favorite white or black.

MS. PARTON RECALLS, "When I was just a real young girl I was impressed with what they called the 'trash' in our hometown. The women that wore the lipstick and had blond hair. I was a blond when I was a kid and my hair started to get a dirtier blond when I reached my teens, so I started bleaching it when I was about 15. That was the time that 'teasing' came out and that was something real creative to do so I got real good at that, boy!"

She grins. "I had that hair piled high as everything. I liked tight clothes and high-heeled shoes and I just kinda created a 'look.'"

She was also impressed with the costumes of Cinderella, fairy godmothers, Mother Goose and "over-exaggerated kings and queens sort of glamour" so her "look" has some of that about it, too.

Her wigs are a part of the fantasy fairytale world she loves. "I really enjoy wearing my wigs, because to me it's just like something fun to play in. I keep my own hair blond, by bleaching it every 10 days, but it's straight and baby-fine and it just will not do what I want it to do. So the wigs are wonderful and so handy."

And, besides, they help to give her the distinction that she craves.

"Somebody said to me, 'Why do you think you're a star?' I said 'I think I know what the people want to see.' People don't come to see me be me, they come to see me be them. I can be their fantasy for a moment and give them something back, so then it's a give-and-take thing and I love the fans. I just love people in general."

SHE GIGGLES. "If I had been a waitress, I'd have been Flo. If I'd worked in a factory, I'd have been the favorite one there. I'd have told the dirtiest jokes and laughed the hardest and brought chocolate cookies in. I would have had to make people happy if I could."

She reflects, "Folks who have got their lives together are wonderful to talk to, but what really is a greater feeling is to talk to somebody that seems totally apart and try to lend a helping hand in my way.

"I'm only trying to be me so that I can be something important to the people that need me. A lot of people don't need to know or care what I have to say or think, but there are people that need some kind of hope. I'm very sensitive to the needs of people around me."

"Somebody I love once said to me in all sincerity, 'Do you know, there are just so few worthwhile people in this world?' They were tryin' to pay me a compliment, but I had to say, 'I disagree with that.' I think that everybody in this world is worthwhile. Maybe they have not done anything worthwhile, but even poor old winos and the bag people — I can relate to why people do that — if they can't get a grip on it or have been knocked down too many times."

Ms. Parton continues, "It's true that you may never be able to help those people up to a better level — that'll be between them and God. But if you can just walk by and smile or talk to them a minute, you might find something wonderful that you can have for yourself to help other people with. I try to find the one thing that's to be admired — the Godcore — of each person I meet. And you never know, it might give them new hope.

Dolly Parton and Sylvester Stallone in a scene from their movie "Rhinestone."

"I always think that by a twist of fate I could have been them. That even if I'd have ended up poor and with 10 kids, my dreams would have been the same. So I try to write my songs and tell my stories for those other people who got caught in a trap along the way."

AND SHE'S quick to admit to the discovery that there are people "out there" who truly have no desire to be in the limelight. "Some people are happy to live a quiet, ordinary life within their budget, havin' meatloaf once a week, and havin' you out there to entertain 'em when they want to watch you. I have a sister like that and my husband, Carl, feels that way, too, although he's very proud of me."

Which brings up another subject — the fact that Dolly Parton's husband is so rarely seen by the show-business crowd that she has actually been accused of making him up as a means of fending off unwanted suitors.

Parton laughs heartily over this. "I even get to thinking it myself. She gets carried away with the idea of capitalizing on the so-called mystery.

"I've thought I could do a comedy routine on a special and have about four or five different guys — maybe a black man and an Oriental and a midget — and keep introducing them as my husband, Carl Dean."

Actually, Ms. Parton made an agreement with the real Carl Dean many years ago that he would not have to be a part of her professional life, and she's done her best to keep her part of the bargain.

"If I were to show him off in the public eye, it would just be for me because I'd like people to see that he is a very handsome guy, but then I don't feel I have to prove anything to anybody and I wouldn't invade his privacy for my own satisfaction. I'd love him no matter what he looked like if he was the one I had picked to spend my life with. And Carl is the one I want to make my plans with, he's the one I want to grow old with."

Formerly in the asphalt paving business and now in real estate, the 6-foot-3, brown-eyed man described by his wife as a "Marlboro commercial type looking guy" will only be seen with her by accident, but Ms. Ton describes their personal relationship as "ideal."

I CAN'T imagine my life without Carl," she exclaims feelingly. "We have a wonderful time together. He is my best friend. He's the most entertaining, the deepest and most off-the-wall person, and so original. He makes up jokes and never repeats himself. He doesn't want show business, but he's a comic. He'll stand right up and entertain you till you fall on the floor. But he has to do it in his own time and on his own terms."

And even though they are often apart for several weeks at a time, she insists they are never jealous of each other's relationships with the other people in their lives.

"We've been together so long that we are everything to each other. He's like my daddy, I'm like his daughter. I'm like his mother, he's like my son or my brother. I'm real comfortable with Carl. If I'm going to flirt, I do it when he's around, just the same. But it's not a personal threat to him. He loves the fact that I'm so open."

But their home life is their own and rarely shared with outsiders. "I don't entertain," she insists. "I had one party at my house since I've lived on that beautiful place (the 100-acre Nashville farm called Tara which she is planning to sell).

That was when the "Rhinestone" movie was in Nashville on location. "With the help of my relatives and friends, I gave a huge affair with swimming and horseback riding and everything for about 300 people. Carl helped to get everything ready and then 30 minutes before the people were supposed to come, he skipped out and went to Indiana to see a race. (Helping to further the legend of no husband.)

"He's basically shy and he didn't want to get caught up in all that. But I'm glad he doesn't hover over me. There are so many kinds of relationships and when you get to know new people, there are such wonderful things to know about them."

ONE OF THE new people in Dolly Parton's life is Sylvester Stallone, and one of the new interests — the "Rhinestone" movie, which they did together — is especially important to her.

"I think it's the best movie I've done so far," she says earnestly. "It was so true to life to me, so much my real personality."

The story is a romantic comedy that has to do with the female manager of a New York City country-and-western bar who makes a bet that she can transform anyone into a better country-and-western singer than any of those currently on the club's playbill. Stallone plays the New York cabbie who becomes the object of her bet.

"Sly did his own singing and we did it live, which is very seldom done. He's not a great singer in the class of Sinatra or Elvis, but he's got a lot of nerve and a lot of soul in his voice. I wrote the songs for the movie and I did my best to tailor-make them according to his voice."

Which brings Ms. Parton full circle to her beginnings as a very young child who prevailed upon her mother to write down the many songs that kept filling her head. For, no matter what the project, her first love — music — is bound to be involved in some way. And though it's true she is branching in numerous directions, she has no intention of growing away from her roots.

"Coming from the backwoods, there was no other way for me to start out except in country and folk music. I was very very country. Now I can sing in almost any style. I can travel all over, and I love that.

"I'LL BE spending several months at a time writing in the big house on the water that we bought over in Hawaii. I love the big-city life. But I love the country life, too — the beautiful trees and flowers and birds there in the Great Smoky Mountains. I didn't leave because I didn't like it. I left because I wanted to bring something back to the area and help the people there, just as any one of them would help any one of us."

And, with all the honors and awards and rewards she has under her belt, she hasn't forgotten. In 1979 Dolly Parton Day was initiated in Nashville, and a section of the U.S. Highway 411 that runs through her hometown of Sevierville, Tenn., was chosen to be designated Dolly Parton Parkway. These things in gratitude for such gestures as her annual performance in Sevierville of which proceeds go to the local high school and its special scholarship fund.

MacLaine wishes she had body of David Bowie

Hearst Feature Service

MacLaine

This is, as just about all of us know, Shirley MacLaine's year. Oscar-winner for her role as middle-aged Aurora in "Terms of Endearment." Star of "Shirley MacLaine on Broadway" — dancing, singing, twinkling, charming. A happy woman. But Shirley would like one more thing.

"If I had my way," she reveals in Harper's Bazaar, "I'd be 10 pounds lighter than I am now, with a body like David Bowie's."

This rather unusual statement, unusual even for the unpredictable Shirley, was made in a discussion of her views on beauty and health. Now 50, Shirley said she was not concerned about presenting herself "unglamorously" in her movie, is not obsessive about beauty, believes that good looks come with health, and does take care of herself.

"I'm more involved in looking good and staying in shape than I've ever been," she told Bazaar. "I'm more interested in doing healthy things.

"I don't think you have to work hard to work out well. Yoga is my favorite activity now. Yoga not only relaxes tensions and refreshes the system, it's a great all-over toner, too."

Shirley changes her physical program every 14 to 30 days, switches off to calisthenics, running, weight-lifting, "whatever I can find to spur my interests and fit into my schedule."

But — get this — Shirley does not follow a strict diet. And that is why David Bowie comes into her mind.

"I eat everything. I try to stay away from sweets, but can't. I eat red meat whenever I crave it. I guess my best habit, so to speak, is to avoid salt.

"I feel I have everything in balance. I drink alcohol if I want to. I smoke, too, though I never inhale. And I think I'm living better than I ever did."

Koalas stay in trees

Koalas are semi-nocturnal mammals that spend most of the day curled up sleepily in the fork of a gum tree. They rarely descend to the ground, doing so only when searching for a new food tree.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

Magazines cover various subjects

By BARBARA TILLMAN

There are very many magazines published today which cover a broad spectrum of subjects. These periodicals cannot be adequately fitted into a special category so they are termed general editorial publications. We, at the Midland County Library, are proud of our collection and wish to offer the following as further examples of the magazines which should appeal to widely varying audiences. The titles selected here have been recommended for public libraries.

A publication that calls itself "a magazine of the arts" is HORIZON. And although it does pertain mostly to the arts, it is considered to be general in content. The writing is good, the photography is excellent and it has very eye-pleasing page layouts. Each issue has seven or eight feature articles on art, filmmaking, writing, and museums. There are also profiles of creative individuals in the visual or performing arts. A column called "Cross Country" reviews and previews art exhibitions, television shows, theater, music, dance, and films across the United States. The magazine is interesting and understandable and high school students should find it useful if writing research papers on the arts.

MONEY is a magazine that can be found in our business department. It is, however, broad in scope so it is included in the general editorial category. As Bill Katz states in Magazines For Libraries, "MONEY is published for the great American middle class with enough money to worry about how to spend it wisely, but not enough to hire money managers." Each issue has a special report which includes four or five feature articles on some aspect of spending or investments. No particular knowledge of economics or finances is necessary since MONEY is written for the average reader. Advice is relatively simple and conservative. There are no get-rich-quick schemes. This periodical is a quite popular and often-used title.

A magazine of a very different nature is OMNI. this monthly publication offers readers short, interesting articles on science, arts, travel, astronomy, pop psychology, personalities, films and technology. The features are presented from a layman's point of view for persons with a limited technical vocabulary. One or two fiction selections are always offered an the magazine's graphic quality is excellent. The publication is recommended more for libraries with large general collections than for smaller libraries with limited collections. It is a slick, glossy magazine and can be fun to read.

PEOPLE is often referred to as a gossip magazine. However, it does have its redeeming qualities. It is in great demand and, from our circulation statistics, it is possibly the most checked out magazine of all. The photographs of well-known personalities, performers, artists, writers, politicians, and others with broad popular appeal dominate each issue. PEOPLE takes its subjects and points out the positive aspects of their life-styles. The editors do not indulge in petty scandals. It has been suggested that, in the future, this publication may be useful as a cultural history resource.

These are but a few of the magazines which are general in nature. We also have NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC, READER'S DIGEST, SATURDAY EVENING POST, and TEXAS MONTHLY. All of the periodicals mentioned here are indexed and, therefore, we do keep back issues. In some cases we have them on file for quite a number of years.

Book study of Sam Rayburn's political life

"Congressman Sam Rayburn," by Anthony Champagne; Rutgers University $19.95; 228 pp

A Review

By KENNETH REICH
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

From 1913 until his death in 1961, Sam Rayburn represented the largely rural Fourth District of Texas in the U.S. House of Representatives. For 17 of those years, longer than any other man in American history, he was the House Speaker.

"This book is not a biography," the author, an associate professor of social science at the University of Texas, tells us at the outset. What it is is a study of how Rayburn, a national political leader who at times was prominently considered for the vice presidency, managed to maintain an almost unfaltering grip on his home constituency for nearly five decades.

As such, it is a substantial contribution to our political literature, for this spare, often terse little book is almost a classic account of how an able politician uses all his organizational skills, his wiles and, yes, his charm to hold on.

There is the personal side:

"If Rayburn ever chewed tobacco in Washington, a longtime aide could not recall it," the author relates. "But in Bonham (his home town), he always seemed to have a plug in his cheek. He made certain always to spit in the fireplace at his home when constituents were visiting, so that if nothing else, they would take away the idea that Mr. Sam was just a plain fellow. In Washington, he wore tailor-made suits, never the khakis, old shirt and slouchy hat that were his regular Bonham attire."

There is the organizational side:

"The organization leaders had as their primary role winning elections for Sam Rayburn. The leaders were well known and established in their communities and could call upon friends and neighbors to vote for Rayburn and to, in turn, ask their friends and neighbors to vote for Rayburn. One leader thus described the range of his friends and neighbors network: 'In 1948, when I got elected district judge, there were 60,000 people in Grayson County. I called 21,000 of them by name. I mean that's how hard I'd worked'... The friendship network of his leaders could corral a substantial number of votes."

This seems to be a meticulously researched book. A list at the end gives the names of 62 persons interviewed, most of them important in Rayburn's career, and there are hundreds of footnotes. What it boils down to is an intriguing account of how Rayburn survived politically — no mean trick even in a district such as this one which remained remarkably the same for a very long period.

Of course, in many respects times have changed, even since Rayburn's death in 1961. Congressional districts have grown more populous. It is difficult to give as much personal attention to constituents as Rayburn did. But nonetheless politicians as clever and hard working as he was will often find a way to be as durable.

'Heretics of Dune' full of made-up jargon

"Heretics of Dune, By Frank Herbert. Putnam. 480 Pages. $16.95.

A Review

By WAKA TSUNODA
The Associated Press

Nearly 20 years ago Frank Herbert burst on the science fiction scene with a novel simply called "Dune," which told the story of a planet of that name.

The planet was on the verge of dehydration, and the natives dealt with the problem by wearing "still-suits" that enabled them to reclaim their body moisture and live on a few ounces of water daily.

This scarcity of water inevitably produced a unique culture, and Herbert's description of every aspect of it won him awards and a cult following of fans. The book became the standard for a new literary subgenre of "ecological" science fiction.

Since then, the author has written sequels, "Dune Messiah," "Children of Dune," "God Emperor of Dune." Now comes the fifth, "Heretics of Dune."

"Heretics," like the others, is not nearly as impressive as the original "Dune," in the sense that there is no new spectacular flight of imagination.

As the book opens, the "ghola" — a sort of clone — of a man named Duncan Idaho is growing up. He was a character in the original "Dune." Elsewhere, a young girl named Sheeana, who seemingly has the ability to command "giant sandworms," which some believe to be gods, is also growing up. And Mother Superior of "Bene Gesserit," an ancient school of mental and physical training, obviously has some design for them. What is it? Unfortunately, it turns out to be nothing worth waiting for.

Besides, the novel is so full of incomprehensible jargon of Herbert's invention that it is impossible to make any sense out of it without studying — not just reading — the original "Dune."

Anyone who wants to begin from the beginning, however, can now do so. Coinciding with the publication of "Heretics," the publisher reissued the original "Dune" — glossary of terms and all.

People can set inner clock, doctors say

King Features Syndicate

Thirty million Americans can't sleep. In a survey of more than a million adults in 25 states, 13 percent of the males and 26 percent of the females over age 30 complained of insomnia. Over age 40, the ratio is seven or eight women to one man.

What's at the root of today's widespread insomnia — and what can be done about it?

Dr. Terrence Riley, neurologist and former director of the Boston University Sleep Laboratory, explains that ideally, a person's circadian rhythm — the inner clock — is on a 24-hour basis. But what if yours is set for 30 hours?

That means, Riley says, that on one day, though it's time for bed at 10, you won't feel like turning in so you'll stay up till midnight and sleep just a few minutes longer the next day and 10 a.m. the day after that?

"The treatment I recommend," says Riley, "is simply to force yourself to stay up until you actually fall asleep — then to wake up at 6 a.m. regardless of when you went to bed.

"EVENTUALLY, THAT cycle will bring you to such fatigue that you will fall asleep at a defined time, say 11, and sleep solidly through until the wake time. Then I would suggest you stay awake until the next defined hour of sleep."

Peter Hauri, Ph.D., professor of psychiatry at Dartmouth-Hitchcock Sleep Disorder Center in Hanover, N.H., agrees. Most of us have an internal clock set for about a 25-hour cycle, he says. The world, unfortunately, spins a little faster.

Don't trust your internal time, warns Hauri. You must tell your body for one hour, each day, what time it is. It's much easier to do that by waking up than by going to bed at a regular time because you can force yourself to get up, even if it takes a cold shower, but willpower won't get you to sleep.

Can your circadian rhythm be reset? Within limits, says Hauri. For instance, when one man wakes up in the morning, his metabolism and temperature are right, and five minutes later he's eager to face the world. But his wife may rise very slowly.

Lark-owl marriages are a real problem, but we can learn how to sleep from any time to any time. You can learn to function efficiently from 6 in the morning until 3 in the afternoon just as well as from 11 p.m. until 7 a.m. But you must do it consistently for several months.

OWLS (NIGHT PEOPLE) tend to aggravate the situation by going to bed later and later. In the 40-to-65 age group, we are more prone to become larks (morning people) who wake up cheerfully and become tired around 9 p.m.

"Insomnia is not a sleep disorder, but a disorder of the sleeper," says Wilse Webb, University of Florida Sleep Laboratory researcher. You'll never see an insomniac cat, he claims, because a cat follows its own natural sleep rhythms.

Most people who have problems with sleeping stay in bed too long, says Hauri. It's always better to have a little pressure on the system and get a deeper sleep and than to squeeze the last drop of sleep out of your system in the morning. The "everybody needs eight hours of sleep" theory is debunked by all authorities. In fact, Dr. Mangalore Pai, founder of England's first sleep clinic, believes most people can thrive on just five or six hours.

From research at Tufts University, psychiatrist Ernest Hartmann found that those who require six hours or less are efficient and amibitious. They work hard, are self-assured, sociable, happy and avoid problems by keeping busy. Those who need eight or more hours are critical, complain of minor aches and pains, and worry.

Hauri claims there are those — especially in the 40-to-65 age group— who definitely need much more sleep than others. Some people have to sleep 10 hours. But some can get by with two. Everyone is born with an individual sleep need.

To discover how much you really require, sleep the same number of hours you do now for a week or two.

OBSERVE HOW RESTED you feel. Then cut back an hour. Is there any difference? if you start to get groggy or tend to fall asleep when you're doing mundane work or reading, go back to your former habits — or maybe add an hour.

Psychologist Merrill M. Mitler, Ph.D., former director of the Sleep Disorders Clinic at the State University of New York in Stony Brook and now with the Scripps Clinic Sleep Disorders Center in California, says signals that we aren't getting enough sleep are frequent loss of attention, lapses in performance, accidents, burning of the eyes, increased irritability or, in extreme cases, actual "sleep attacks" during the day.

Today's experts tell us the price of mild sleep loss is not great. "Just as a 150-pound person can live a full life at 130 pounds, a seven-hour sleeper can live with six hours a day. He'll get tired, but his brain won't shrivel," says Webb.

If the average amount of time people sleep could be determined, it might be about seven-and-a-half hours. Still, three hours on either side is within the normal range.

We fill our lives too full and miss sleep, hoping to catch up on weekends. It doesn't work that way. Consistency is the key to satisfying sleep, Webb says.

INSOMNIA CAN BECOME a habit. Hauri claims there are at least two bad practices that lend to this.

— You haven't slept well for a few nights, so you become worried about not sleeping and tell yourself, "I've got to try to sleep!" yet the harder you try, the less successful you are.

—You've been an insomniac for a few weeks because of stomach pain. The feeling of lying in your bed, uncomfortable, unhappy and tense, finally becomes associated with your bedroom; just going to that bedroom scares away sleep so you lie there and stare at the dark.

Some people even develop a habit of sleeping in a certain noise environment (Manhattan dwellers, for example) and only wake up when there's silence.

THERE IS NO way to cause sleep, says Riley. You can only increase and decrease its probability. Sleeping pills just make you feel dull. And while it's true that liquor induces slumber, it has a rebound effect: You'll wake up in the middle of the night. Some alcoholics, for example, have disturbed sleep patterns for as long as two years after they dry out.

Sleeping pills will do the same. Mitler says, "When a patient discontinues barbiturates, insomnia follows. The person isn't able to sleep at all for days, and when sleep finally comes, there may be terrible nightmares."

Another problem could be nicotine, which is a stimulant. According to the FDA, many ex-smokers have reported improved sleep after quitting.

One factor often overlooked in insomnia is that a patient may be taking medicinal drugs for another ailment, says Dr. Stephen Kennedy, head of Project Sleep, a joint federal-private education group study (now closed). And coffee, tea, colas or other caffeine drinks, as well as heavy, spicy foods, inhibit sleep, so should be avoided after 6 p.m.

At the same time, there may be foods that induce sleep. Hartmann published several papers in the New England Journal of Medicine suggesting that as little as a gram of L-tryptophan would induce sleep. Health-food stores frequently quote this and say foods high in L-tryptophan (beans, cheese, poultry, eggs, hamburger, liver, milk, peanut butter, peanuts, pork chops, steak, tuna) induce sleep.

MOST OLDER PEOPLE don't have trouble falling asleep, however; they wake up too early.

One of the surest solutions, if you wake up with a bad dream or something that's troubling you, is to turn the light on, write the whole thing out, and then forget it.

For real worriers, Hauri suggests going a step further. Schedule worry time, he says. Some people are so busy all day they have no time to worry until they go to bed.

If you're one of these, sit down early in the evening someplace where you can't be disturbed. Take a piece of paper and just sit there for an hour. When a worry comes, write it down. Then do something about it. If it's "I forgot my brother's birthday!" give him a call at the end of worry time.

Snoring doesn't usually interfere with the culprit's sleep, but it's hard on the person he or she sleeps with. Snoring is a rattling of the airway walls during sleep, and is apt to get worse with a weight gain, sedation or anything that further constricts the airway.

Luxury pet hotel caters to canines

NEW YORK (AP) — The newest luxury hotel on Manhattan's trendy Upper East Side boasts spacious suites, limousine service and a doctor on call, and it's so exclusive it doesn't even accept people.

The Montrose Pet Hotel caters to the dogs and cats of New Yorkers who go away on occasion and can spend $17 a night for pet care.

"Instead of cramped cages," the pet palace features "spacious, private suites complete with beds and a continuous supply of fresh drinking water," according to a hotel brochure.

The hotel is the fourth in a national chain developed by Don Mensh of Potomac, Md. The first was built 13 years ago in Rockville, Md., and others followed in Fairfax, Va., and Marietta, Ga.

Recently, Leslie Liebman of Manhattan reluctantly checked in her dog Gingi.

"She hasn't been in a kennel in three years," Ms. Liebman admitted. "She usually stays with my folks, but they are going away too."

Did Ms. Liebman feel guilty?

"Sure, especially when she started barking, but everything looks very clean and nice."

Ms. Liebman left specific instructions for Gingi's care and the clerk dutifully noted the details: dispense half a pill twice a day; let her play with the rubber bone; let her sleep with her favorite sleeping companion, an old pair of pantyhose, and feed her canned food if she refuses dry food.

The Montrose also offers premium food, a pet pickup service, a grooming salon and cubbyhole mailboxes.

Mailboxes? Certainly, and it's not just children who send vacation postcards to their pets.

"You have to remember you are dealing with a member of one's family," explained Mensh, owner of a Jack Russell terrier.

Mexican dishes easy to prepare at home

King Features Syndicate

Some typical Mexican dishes are easy to make at home.

STEAK BURRITOS

Here, typical Tex-Mex cooking: broiled steak flavored with chili-tomato sauce, sliced thin and wrapped in a soft (steamed) flour tortilla.

1 medium tomato
1 small onion
½ medium head iceberg lettuce
3 tablespoons salad oil
1 teaspoon chili powder
1 6-ounce can tomato paste
1 4-ounce can chopped green chilies, drained
3 tablespoons Worcestershire
1 tablespoon water
4 teaspoons sugar
4 teaspoons lime juice
¼ teaspoon salt
8 8-inch flour tortillas
1 beef top round steak, cut ¾ inch thick
Unseasoned meat tenderizer
1 small avocado
2 tablespoons sour cream

Cut tomato into bite-sized chunks; thinly slice onion; thinly slice lettuce to make about 4 cups.

Prepare chili sauce: In 2-quart saucepan over medium heat, in hot salad oil, cook chili powder 1 minute. Add tomato paste and next 6 ingredients; over high heat, heat to boiling. Reduce heat to low; simmer, uncovered, 5 minutes to blend flavors. Keep chili sauce warm.

Steam tortillas as label directs. Or, in 12-inch skillet in ½ inch water, place 3 inverted 6-ounce custard cups. Arrange tortillas on large heat-safe plate; set plate on top of custard cups. Over high heat, heat water to boiling. Reduce heat to low; cover skillet and "steam" tortillas 10 minutes or until soft and hot. Keep warm.

Meanwhile, preheat broiler if manufacturer directs.

Prepare beef top round steak with meat tenderizer as label directs. Place steak on rack in broiling pan. Reserve ½ cup chili sauce for assembling burritos. Broil steak 12 minutes for rare or until of desired doneness, turning steak once and brushing with remaining chili sauce occasionally. Remove steak to cutting board. With knife held almost parallel to the cutting surface, cut steak across the grain into thin slices.

Spread 1 tablespoon reserved chili sauce on a hot tortilla; top with ¼ cup sliced lettuce and a few steak slices in a lengthwise strip down center of tortilla. Fold left and right sides of tortilla over mixture; fold one end under. Repeat with remaining tortillas.

Cut avocado lengthwise in half; peel; remove and discard seed. Cut avocado halves crosswise into slices. Arrange avocado slices, tomato chunks, sour cream and remaining lettuce on one side of large platter; top with onion slices. Arrange burritos on other side of platter. Makes 8 main-dish servings.

CHEESECAKE FLAN

This delicious dessert combines Mexican and American classics: flan and cheesecake. It's topped off with a sweet caramelized glaze, fresh strawberries.

1 cup sugar
2 8-ounce packages cream cheese, softened
5 egg yolks
1 14-ounce can sweetened condensed milk
1 cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
½ teaspoon salt
2 small oranges
¼ pint strawberries
12 pecan halves

Preheat oven to 350 F. Grease 9-inch round cake pan.

In 1-quart saucepan over medium heat, heat sugar until melted and light caramel color, stirring constantly. Immediately pour syrup into prepared cake pan to coat botttom of pan.

In large bowl with mixer at low speed, beat cream cheese and egg yolks until smooth. Gradually beat in sweetened condensed milk, milk, vanilla and salt until blended. Pour mixture into prepared cake pan.

Place cake pan in 14-inch by 10-inch baking pan; fill pan with hot water to come halfway up side of cake pan. Bake 50 minutes or until set. Remove flan from pan of water. Cover and refrigerate until well chilled, at least 3 hours.

To serve, peel and thinly slice oranges. Slice strawberries. With metal spatula, loosen flan from side of cake pan. Invert flan onto dessert platter, allowing caramel topping to drip from pan onto flan. Garnish with orange and strawberry slices and pecan halves. Makes 12 servings.

CHILI-CHEESE DIP

A creamy rich appetizer dip, served warm with green-pepper strips and "cigarillos," fried rolled tortillas.

12 6-inch corn tortillas
2 large sweet green peppers
1 small onion
½ 8-ounce package American cheese
1 small tomato
Salad oil
½ 4-ounce can chopped green chilies, drained
¼ cup beer
¼ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon hot pepper sauce

Steam tortillas as label direcrs, or, in 12-inch skillet in ½ inch water, place 3 inverted custard cups. Arrange tortillas on large heat-safe plate; set plate on top of custard cups. Over high heat, heat water to boiling. Reduce heat to low; cover and "steam" tortillas 10 minutes or until soft and hot.

Meanwhile, cut green peppers into ½-inch-wide strips, dice onion, cut cheese into chunks and chop tomato; set aside.

Cut one steamed tortilla in half. (Keep remaining tortilla warm.) Starting from cut side, roll each tortilla half into a "cigarillo" (long, thin cylinder); secure each with a toothpick. Repeat with remaining tortillas.

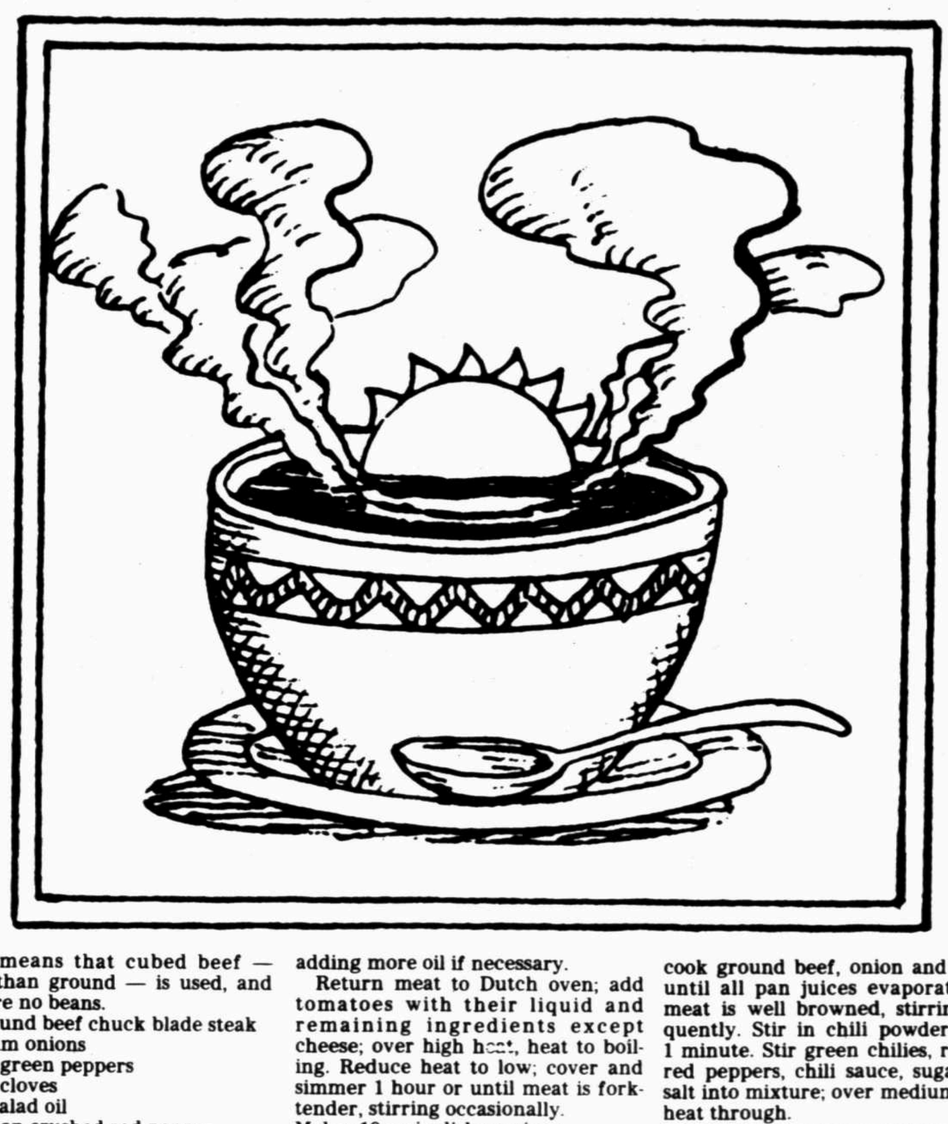

In 10-inch skillet over medium heat, heat ½ inch salad oil to 375 F. on deep-fat thermometer (or heat oil in deep-fat fryer set at 375 F.). Fry rolled tortillas, a few at a time, about 2 minutes or until crisp and browned on all sides. Remove to paper towels to drain. Carefully remove toothpicks.

Prepare cheese mixture: In 2-quart saucepan over medium heat, in 2 tablespoons hot salad oil, cook onion until tender, stirring occasionally. Add American cheese, green chilies, beer, salt, and hot pepper sauce; cook until cheese is melted and mixture is smooth, stirring frequently; stir in chopped tomato.

Spoon cheese mixture into small bowl. Serve immediately as dip for rolled tortillas and green-pepper strips. Makes about 1½ cups dip or 12 appetizer servings. 240 calories per serving.

CHILI CON CARNE

The most famous chili dish of all — and there are dozens of variations. Our recipe is Texas-style, which means that cubed beef — rather than ground — is used, and there are no beans.

1 3½-pound beef chuck blade steak
3 medium onions
2 sweet green peppers
2 garlic cloves
¼ cup salad oil
1 teaspoon crushed red pepper
2 28-ounce cans tomatoes
1 12-ounce can tomato paste
2 cups water
1 tablespoon sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon ground cumin
½ teaspoon oregano leaves
½ teaspoon pepper
4 ounces Monterey Jack or Cheddar cheese, shredded

With knife, cut beef chuck blade steak into ¼-inch cubes. Dice onions and green peppers; mince garlic.

In 5-quart Dutch oven over medium-high heat, in hot salad oil, cook meat, one third at a time, until browned on all sides, removing meat to bowl as it browns; set aside.

Reserve ½ cup diced onion for sprinkling over chili later. In drippings remaining in Dutch oven over medium heat, cook green peppers, garlic, crushed red pepper and remaining onions until vegetables are tender, stirring occasionally and adding more oil if necessary.

Return meat to Dutch oven; add tomatoes with their liquid and remaining ingredients except cheese; over high heat, heat to boiling. Reduce heat to low; cover and simmer 1 hour or until meat is fork-tender, stirring occasionally. Makes 10 main-dish servings.

BEEF TACOS

Favorite, quick Mexican-American dish: spicy ground beef served in a crisp taco shell, topped with shredded cheese, tomatoes, lettuce — and taco sauce, if you like your food hot.

2 pounds ground beef
1 medium onion, chopped
2 garlic cloves, minced
1½ teaspoons chili powder
2 4-ounce cans chopped green chilies, drained
1 7-ounce jar roasted sweet red peppers, drained and chopped
¼ cup chili sauce
2 teaspoons sugar
1½ teaspoons salt
¼ pound sharp Cheddar cheese, shredded
2 medium tomatoes, chopped
½ medium head iceberg lettuce, sliced
1 4.5-ounce package taco shells
[illegible]led hot or mild taco sauce

... 12-inch skillet over high heat, cook ground beef, onion and garlic until all pan juices evaporate and meat is well browned, stirring frequently. Stir in chili powder; cook 1 minute. Stir green chilies, roasted red peppers, chili sauce, sugar and salt into mixture; over medium heat, heat through.

To serve, spoon meat mixture into warm bowl. Arrange shredded cheese, chopped tomatoes and sliced lettuce in separate bowls for taco accompaniments. Let each person spoon some beef mixture into a taco shell, then top with taco accompaniments and taco sauce. Makes 6 main-dish servings.

QUESADOS

Traditional appetizer made with tortillas, cheese, sour cream and guacamole, cut into bite-sized triangles, then broiled, served bubbly hot.

8 6-inch flour tortillas
1 ripe medium avocado, peeled and cut into chunks
½ small onion
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon garlic powder
2 ounces Monterey Jack cheese, shredded
¼ cup sour cream
4 ounces Cheddar cheese, shredded
Bottled hot or mild taco sauce

Steam tortillas as label directs. Or, in 12-inch skillet in ½ inch water, place 3 inverted 6-ounce custard cups. Arrange tortillas on large heat-safe plate; set plate on top of custard cups. Over high heat, heat water to boiling. Reduce heat to low; cover and "steam" tortillas 10 minutes or until soft and hot.

In blender at medium speed or in food processor with knife blade attached, blend avocado, onion, lemon juice, salt and garlic powder until smooth.

In large bowl, mix avocado mixture, Monterey Jack cheese, sour cream and ½ cup Cheddar cheese.

Spread avocado mixture evenly on one side of four steamed tortillas; top with remaining tortillas, pressing gently to seal together, making 4 tortilla "sandwiches."

Preheat broiler if manufacturer directs. With knife, cut each tortilla "sandwich" into eight wedges. Place wedges on large cookie sheet; sprinkle with remaining ½ cup Cheddar cheese. Broil Quesados 3 to 5 minutes until cheese is just melted.

Arrange Quesados on warm platter; serve immediately. If you like, serve taco sauce to spoon over Quesados. Make 32 hors d'oeuvres.

TORTILLA PIZZA

Easy individual pizzas, each with a crisp, paper-thin flour tortilla "crust," a zesty topping of cheese and ground beef, strips of pepper.

½ pound ground beef
1 small onion, diced
1 teaspoon chili powder
½ cup mild taco sauce
⅛ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon ground cumin
Salad oil
4 6-inch flour tortillas
4 ounces Monterey Jack cheese, shredded (1 cup)
1 small sweet red pepper, cut into thin strips
1 small sweet green pepper, cut into thin strips

In 2-quart saucepan over high heat, cook ground beef and onion until all pan juices evaporate and meat is well browned, stirring frequently. Stir in chili powder; cook 1 minute. Add taco sauce, salt and cumin; heat to boiling. Reduce heat to low; cover and simmer 5 minutes to blend flavors, stirring occasionally.

Meanwhile, in 10-inch skillet over medium-high heat in ¼ inch hot salad oil, fry 1 tortilla at a time about 2 minutes on each side until browned and crisp; remove to paper towels to drain.

Preheat oven to 350 F. Place cooked tortillas on large cookie sheet. Into ground-beef mixture in skillet, stir half of cheese. Top tortillas with ground-beef mixture, red- and green-pepper strips, and remaining cheese. Bake pizzas 5 minutes or until cheese is melted. Makes 4 main-dish servings.

These days, most major team tournaments are played with a screen diagonall across the table. As a result, each player can see only one opponent — his partner and the other opponent are hidden behind the screen. This is done to eliminate the "intangibles" from the game, and one day the ultimate will be reached — each player will be in a separate room operating an electronic control board to make his bids and plays. It will be nearly impossible to cheat in any way, and an important element of the game will have been removed in the process — the ability to "read" your opponents.

One of the finest examples of table presence that we know of is this one from a rubber bridge game by the late, great Pierre Albarran of France. His four hearts was a two-way bid — he expected to have a play for it, and there was always the chance the opponents would venture a sacrifice.

West led a spade and Albarran won the jack. The normal line would be to strive for a space ruff in dummy. That would succeed if West held the 10 of hearts or the singleton king, or if East held K-10 doubleton. In that case declarer would hold his losers to a trump, a diamond and a club.

However, when dummy came down, East inspected it rather carefully and then sat back in a contented fashion. Albarran sensed East's complacence, so he decided East could overruff dummy twice. Reading the situation was only half the problem — South had to find a way to make use of the information.

Albarran continued with the king and ace of spades. He discarded a club from dummy as East ruffed. East shifted to a club. Declarer rose with the ace and led his eight of spades. West covered with the 10 but, instead of ruffing, declarer discarded dummy's last club.

His objective had been achieved — he had transferred his ruff from spades to clubs. West completed the defensive book by cashing the ace of diamonds, but declarer ruffed the diamond continuation, ruffed his club in dummy and then successfully finessed the jack of hearts. When that held, the rest of the trick were there for the taking.

Female family members expected to be all things to all people

By GLORIA SCHRAMM
King Features Service

I am a daughter, stepdaughter, stepsister, granddaughter, niece, wife, daughter-in-law, sister-in-law, godmother and mother. As a daughter, I am expected to be neat, clean, well-groomed, sweet, pure, helpful, get good grades in school and respect my parents. As a wife I am expected to be devoted, supportive, compassionate, understanding — and attractive. As a daughter-in-law I have to be diplomatic and understanding. As a stepdaughter...well, one has to be a saint!

With each new marriage in a family, we all get married, collectively. Which leads me to wonder: When we marry, do we bring our spouses as new members into the existing family or do we start our own, new family? It's confusing. Where does one family begin and another end? We are all related to every person who has ever lived, lives and will live. How many families would we have if it weren't for "family planning"?

As we do-si-do and change partners in square dancing, so we go from one family circle into another: from our original families at birth into in-laws with marriage and into our children's families by their marriages.

Throw in a death or divorce and a remarriage along the way and we have the "stepfamily," a variation of the theme. With each new family member, we have chance to play our ballads of love and devotion once more. We choose our friends — which is why we sometimes enjoy them more.

A female family member has to behave like the strings on a harp. We must strike a delicate harmony. Obituaries and floral wreaths read "beloved" and "devoted"; so must we be.

Females, more so than males, become their families. In spite of the women's liberation movement, we are the ones with too many moral obligations and are subjected to the guilt of unfinished symphonies. Conflict is our cornerstone.

We are the ones who take the brunt of emotional confrontations. We are expected to be all things to everyone — and to hold jobs as well. We are the ones who remember dinners, parties, all-occasions greeting cards and gifts, letters, phone calls and the scheduling of visits.

Anthropologist Ashley Montagu knew what he was talking about when he said women are more intelligent and aware of life than men. Sure, because we get involved.

I know that the harmonious family produces happy individuals — or at least those with a head start. But the key word is "harmony." Harmony is something that can't be bought. It has to be created. Females are psychological musicians. We set the clarity and mood.

As it often happens, we strike a wrong chord, a sour note. A string on the harp breaks. then we must busy ourselves at the painstaking process of re-stringing our relationships. It could be a full-time job.

Consider the alcoholic uncle, incarcerated stepfather and wayward sister we all know too well. Usually — and there are exceptions — men in families bury their heads and retreat to the office; it's the women who go to bat. We are the dominant social force.

Talk about leadership! We are the ones who decide what should be done with ailing grandparents and black sheep. We are the ones most likely to carry on the domestic duties of two households in sickness and death. We are the ones who learn that there is honor in assisting another with a bedpan.

What does a "good niece" do when an elderly aunt dies and the neighbors who cared for her in the end turn around and chastise the niece and the rest of the family for not caring for the aunt themselves. It's a perpetual slap in the face.

What does a "devoted" grown daughter, who wants to be neutral, do when her parents divorce? She could easily become a resentful pawn on a chess board. One must be well tuned to accommodate the high-pitched concertos that being female in the divided family brings.

How does a female handle familial hard feelings, sibling rivalries, wedding guest lists, personality clashes, undesirable traits, unmentionable issues?

She handles them head-on with tolerance, as only a female seems to know how to do. She doesn't escape; she ministers through socializing, relating and loving. She decides what to do with them. She walks the line with all.

Consider how hard Eve had it while she was the only woman on earth. Family problems are marathon. We fade away like forgotten songs when life, the composer, writes new ones. Time, perseverance and support of friends are the backup chords. I'm convinced the "Happy Home Recipe" had to have been written by a woman.

Finally, as a woman with new challenges, the female has the hardest role of all.

Just how much of her time can be given to career, hobby, sport, volunteer work and other self-indulgences without neglecting the unsung heroics of familial deeds? She spreads herself as thinly as she can. If she is single, she may be frowned upon by "neglected" relatives. If she is married, more is expected of her. She expects more of herself.

A friend of mine believes in reincarnation and a succession of earthly lives. She says our spirits choose the families into which we are born so we can learn whatever lesson we must learn from them in this life. The same goes for those whom we marry.

I've learned that a happy family makes happy people and vice versa. But my biggest lesson so far is how hard it is to be a female in the family. So I ponder, continue to dance, make wondrously mellow notes — until one of the strings on my harp breaks. Then, for a while, I take out the violin.

C&K Building gets new bank tenant, new name

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

Midland American Bank will recapture history and make history, Monday, when it opens its doors for business in downtown Midland and at its motor bank at the intersection of Andrews highway and Cuthbert.

The move will revive history, because it marks the revival of the former C&K Building as a bank facility.

Located at 401 W. Texas, the building was the home of Midland National Bank from 1953 to 1976, before the bank moved to its present location at First City Center.

The building was built in 1945 and is currently owned by K&K Properties of Woodland Hills, Clifornia, a publicly held corporation.

With the return of a bank to the building, it will be offically renamed the Midland American Bank Building.

Midland American Bank will occupy only the first floor which has been remodeled and accented with traditional furniture and warm, pastel carpeting and decor.

A large customer refreshment lounge will complement the spacious customer service lobby and customer parking will be provided immediately west of the building and at Republic Parking on the cornor of Wall and Marienfeld.

On the same day, Midland American Bank will also open its walk-in, drive-in facility at the cornor of Andrews and Cuthbert, and will be the first bank in the state to avail itself of the newly passed Senate Bill 596, which permits banks to open a drive-in, walk-in facility within 10,500 feet of its main office.

Chief Executive officer, Bill Bramley, said the openings of the new facilities was the result of "considerable long range planning on the part of the board and a commitment to the community."

Future bank plans call for the addition of one million in new equity capitol to its balance sheet. The new equity, to six acquired through the sale of common stock, will support anticipated bank growth.

According to Bramley $800,000 of new common stock have been sold.

A Midland owned institution, Midland American received its state charter in 1982 and opened for business in July of that year. Assets at March 30, 1984 totaled $7,244,484, including loans of $4,190,421. Deposits were $6,269,475.

Bank officers are; William A. Bramley, chief executive officer; Sarah Carter, president; Nancy Ray, cashier and Tim Brown, assistant vice president.

Midland oil students prowl Ambergris cay in search of carbonate clues, to better help them understand oil production in the Permian Basin.

PBGC schedules Belize study tour

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

"Thanks to the Permian Basin Graduate Center, 20 members of the oil and gas industry here will be able to take a trip to Belize in the Caribbean this August and write it off without the IRS trying to shoot the deduction down.

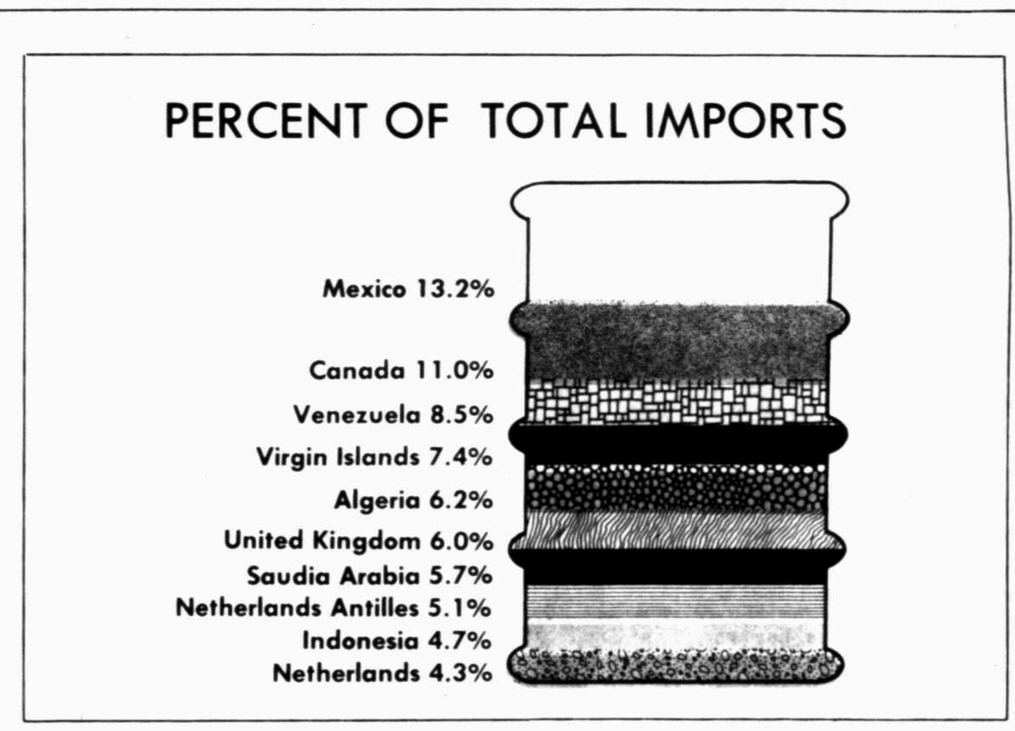

"It really is a business trip," says S.J. Mazzullo, a Midland consulting geologist and leader of the Graduate Center excursion.

"If you want to study glaciers," said the graduate of Rensselear Poly Tech Institute in New York state, "you have to go to Alaska. If you want to study modern carbonate reefs in the process of growing, you have to go to the Caribbean."

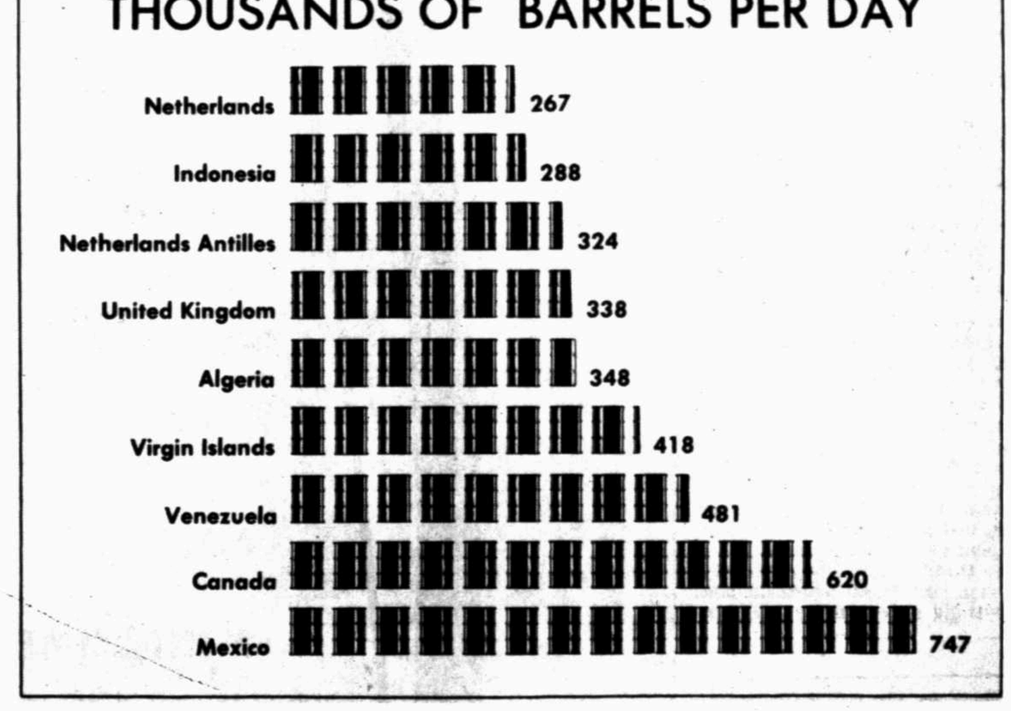

Mazzullo, with the help of Al Reid, PhD., another Midland consulting geologist, will be leading the second study group this year to the balmy, tropical waters to get a first hand look at how coral reefs are forming. Or, as they would say in geologese, "to focus on the Halocene and Pleistocene shallow marine, intertidal and supratidal carbonate depositional environments."

"These carbonate reefs are analogs or models to our carbonate reefs in the Permian Basin and once we understand them, we can better understand some of our own producing oil zones," said Mazzullo.

MGF has lower losses for 1984

From staff reports

MGF Oil Corp. has reported a net loss of $7.8 million or 28 cents per share for the first quarter of 1984.

The losses were down considerably from a net loss of $10.2 million or 62 cents per share for the same period in 1983. The firm also annonced a positive cash flow of $1,558,000 compared to a deficit of $427,000 for the period in 1983. It was the first quarter of positive cash flow for the oil company since the second quarter 1982.

Decreases in operational costs were also reported. General and administrative expenses were down 30 percent and interest expense decreased 8 percent, reflecting a continuation of cost control measures, according to W. Phillip Marcum, president and chief executive officer.

At the same time oil and gas sales also decreased 27 percent from $12.1 million in 1983 to $8.9 million in 1984.

The average price per barrel of MGF oil sold in 1983 was $30.21 as compared to $29.18 in 1984. Average price received per Mcf was $2.80 in 1983 and $3.03 in 1984.

President, Phillip Marcum cites a continuing contract drilling market as one of the firm's financial woes. For the first quarter 1984 contract drilling revenues were down 37 percent. Utilization rates of 33 percent in 1983 were only 20 percent this year for MGF rigs.

MGF is also the general partner in two contract drilling partnerships which are also suffering from the depressed market, and this is creating a great deal of uncertainty as to the partnership's ability to service its debt, which MGF has guaranteed. As a result, MGF began consolidating the contract drilling partnerships effective January 1, 1984, according to Marcum.

Prior to that time, MGF's investment as general partner was accounted for using the equity method of accounting. The firm's share of partnership losses for the three months ended March 31, 1984 was $1.36 million compared to $535,000 for the same period in 1983.

Major workout of oil firm debt reported by RAM Ltd.

From staff reports

The RAM Group Ltd., an Oklahoma City-based financial consulting firm, which serves many Midland petroleum producers in restructuring debt has completed a major workout of trade creditor obligations for The Brooks Hall Oil Companies of Oklahoma City and has further advised Alexander Energy Corp.in its acquisition of Brooks Hall oil and gas properties, according to John J. Hawk, executive vice president for RAM.

Under the terms of the agreement between Brooks Hall and its creditors, the oil firm will retire $6 million of debt. Cash payments will be issued immediately to 95 percent of the 450 trade creditors, throughout the Southwest who accepted the agreement. Payments will be dispersed by the RAM Group.

William W. Talley, II, president RAM Group Inc., called the agreement a trilateral arrangement typical of oil and gas workouts. "No other industry solves its financial problems this way," he said.

In the past 16 months, The RAM Group has participated in 12 independent energy workout situations involving $900 million of debt, $675 million of assets, over 3,200 trade creditors and 1,800 oil and gas properties.

U.S. crude imports becoming safer

From staff reports

Diversification of U.S. crude oil imports continues to weaken the OPEC grip and put petroleum supplies into safer hands.

Whereas once Middle East oilfields were the prime source for american crude oil imports that position has now shifted to our neighbors to the north and south, Canada and Mexico.

The OPEC stranglehold, however, is still not as loose as one might suspect, from viewing the graphics above, for most of the oil imported from Caribbean countries actually is brought there from OPEC nations.

Mexico, with newly discovered oil and gas fields in southern Mexico accounts for 13.2 percent of all U.S. imports, while Saudia Arabia now accounts for only 5.7 percent. The roles were once almost reversed.

Stable and friendly Canada to the north is the second largest supplier of imported crude, accounting for 11 percent of total imports.

Canada and Mexico together account for almost 25 percent of total U.S. imports, and to date are two long term allies.

Venezuela, another friendly with a relatively stable government is the third largest supplier, supplying 8.5 percent.

Virgin Island imports are mostly OPEC oil and not totally reliable, while Algeria is a left-leaning but relatively stable nation.

BELIZE

Al Reid vouched for the appraisal: "Once you understand the models in Belize, you are better able to delineate trends such as the Strawn. The northern Belize shelf, which we study, particularly ambergris cay, is an exact analog of the Strawn, Atoka and Morrow pays that occur on the Eastern Shelf and the Midland Basin."

Reid pointed out that the Paint Rock gas field in Concho County was almost identical to the cay the group studies in Belize, including almost identical tidal channels, islands and carbonate rock types.

The basic difference, however, Mazzullo said, was that Permian Basin reefs were approximately 320 million years old, as compared to only 750 years for some of the Belize reefs which are only babies and still growing.

Another interesting feature pointed out by Mazzullo was in the extreme porosity and permeability of the Belize formations.

Said Mazzullo: "We have encountered Dolomite only 10,000 years old, that was 18 inches thick and nearly pure Dolomite. Porosity in it was 30-40 percent and permeability was seven darcies. It points out the extremely rapid rates of potential reservoir formation." He added that the Dolomite was identical to many San Andres and Grayburg formations in the Basin.

The Belize study group will study represenative fore-reef, reef and back-reef lagoonal and supratidal island environments by snorkling and with cores and trenches in order understand the facies associations.

An added feature of the trip is a 90 minute fly-over of the area to acquaint the students with basinal atolls, clastic deltas, shorelines, alluvial plains and other features.

The study tour will be August 2-7, and will cost $1,000 which includes everything except airfare to Houston.

Andrews moves to top spot in rig count

From staff reports

The Permian Basin rig count declined again this week by one and follows a decrease last week of two. The declines come following four weeks in a row when the Permian Basin count jumped by ten or more rigs.

Andrews County gained five rigs for a total of 33 to join Lea County in the elite 30-or-more category. Lea, hovever, dropped three rigs to fall to 32 rigs, behind Andrews. It is the first time Lea County has not held the top slot in many months.

Glasscock County which has been coming on strong in past weeks slipped two rigs this week from 15 to 13.

Pecos County continues in third place with 26 rigs working. The county has been the site of some significant wildcat discoveries in past weeks, and that may cause the count to jump some in coming weeks.

The rig count this time last year was 214 rigs, as compared to 331 this week, and 332 last week.

Nationwide the rig count dropped only one, which is an improvement to some of the larger drops in past weeks.

Oklahoma was the big loser, dropping almost 20 rigs, while increases were seen throughout the Rocky Mountain states.

The national rig count this time last year was 1,989.

Confusion clouds reputation of utilities

NEW YORK — For years, millions of Americans have treasured their investments in electric utilities for dependability and safety. But a variety of events, especially industry expansion into nuclear power, has clouded this reputation with confusion and risk.

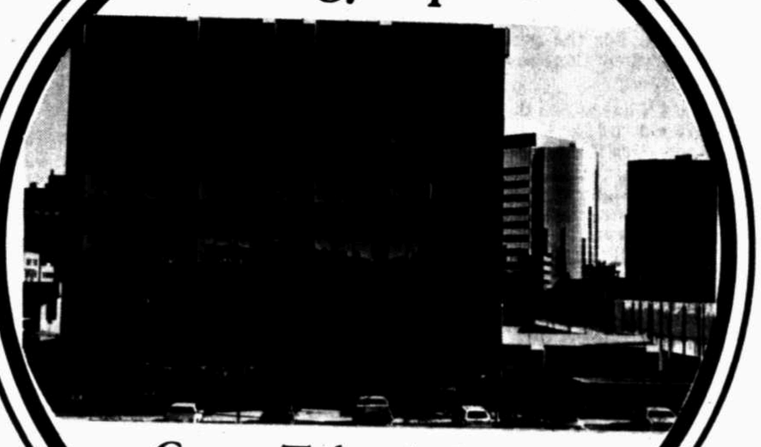

E.F. Hutton has developed a program designed to help investors understand and take advantage of the dramatic changes affecting these fixed-income securities. Even though much has changed, some utilities remain characteristically safe, while with others, the new element of risk has increased the chance of reward.

E.F. Hutton now offers: A new research report, "Taking Stock of Electric Utilities," that reviews the outlook for utilities in general and includes four common stock investment recommendations; a new booklet, "Utility Bonds-An Overlooked Investment Opportunity?" that diagnoses how huge investments in nuclear power plants have affected utilities. The booklet also categorized 40 utilities in four groups: High Risk (Long Island Lighting; Louisiana Power & Light), Moderate Risk, Moderate Safety, High Safety (Consolidated Edison; Indianapolis Power & Light); a Hutton Utility Trust, designed to allow investment in a portfolio of utility stocks professionally selected to provide maximum safety and return. It is described in the Hutton Utility Trust brochure.

Hutton is backing this effort with a national campaign involving advertising, direct mail and public seminars.

Consumers who want to receive any or all three of the brochures should write to E.F. Hutton & Company Inc., E.F. Hutton Information Center, P. O. Box 10318, Des Moines, Iowa, 50306 or call 800-EFH—2626.

NOTICE

On Monday, June 25, 1984 Adcock Ideal Cleaners will begin a new era. As of that date we will be Adcock's Ideal Drapery Service.

After much consideration, the decision has been made to limit our services to the care of commercial and residential draperies, bedspreads, blankets, slipcovers, and other household items. We will no longer offer cleaning service for clothing.

As many of you know, we have specialized in the drapery cleaning service for many years, and we now intend to offer the fastest and most complete service in the area. We will take down and rehang draperies and curtains, as well customize our service to fit your particular needs. As always, you are welcomed to bring your draperies in yourself.

Any cleaning orders still at the shop after June 25th can be picked up at your convenience at any time during our new hours, which will be 8:00AM to 5:00PM Monday through Friday. Drapery service will also be by appointment in addition to our regular hours. Our location of 309 Dodson and our telephone number -684-6697—will remain in the same.

Enstar, Unimar, Ultramar PLC to amend merger agreement

NEW YORK — Enstar Corp. and Unimar Co., a partnership of subsidiaries of Allied Corp. and Ultramar PLC, have announced an amendment to their merger agreement under which Unimar will increase to $20 per share its cash tender offer for 14,300,000 shares (approximately 51 percent) of Enstar common stock.

After successful completion of the tender offer, Enstar will merge with a wholly-owned subsidiary of Unimar. Unimar continues to expect to issue Indonesian participating Certificates in the second-step merger to the holders of the remaining Enstar shares, but under the amended merger agreement, these shareholders will also receive $2 per share in cash from Unimar in the merger.

The tender offer was initially for $18 cash per share for 14,300,000 shares of Enstar's common stock. All Enstar shareholders also were to receive shares, valued at about $2, in Enstar's Alaskan natural gas transmission and distribution business which was to be spun off prior to the purchase. The amended offer will give shareholders cash in lieu of shares in Enstar's Alaskan business. The amended offer was agreed upon after the Alaskan Public utilities Commission determined last Friday not to give Enstar temporary authority for the spin-off.

The expiration and proration date for the amended offer has been extended to midnight, New York City time, on Tuesday, June 26, 1984. The offer continues to be conditioned upon the tender of a minimum of 14,300,000 shares. As of June 12, approximately 410,000 shares have been tendered pursuant to the offer. Subject to the terms of the offer, all shares tendered pursuant to the offer. Subject to their terms of the offer, all shares tendered previously will be entitled to the increase in price to $20 per share.

On behalf of Unimar, A. Clark Johnson, president of Union Texas petroleum, Allied's oil and gas subsidiary, said he believes the amended offer is stronger than the initial offer because Enstar shareholders will now receive cash in place of an equity interest in the Alaskan business.

"Giving them cash eliminates for Enstar shareholders any risk related to the way the market might have valued shares in the Alakan operations," he said.

He said that Unimar and Enstar intend to sell promptly the Alaskan business and the sale may realize more or less than the equivalent of $2 a share.

Panel urged to reconsider repayment

WASHINGTON — The Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA) urged the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) to reconsider the method of repaying consumers for alleged overpayments as a result of the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals "wet gas/dry gas" decision.

IPAA executive vice president Lloyd Unsel calculated that those "ill-advised court ordered" repayments would amount to $2.86 per home or less than 25 cents per month over the next year. Unsell said that "asking producers to come up with hard cash at a time when the natural gas producing industry is facing devastatingly low levels of cash flow" could cripple the industry and would do nothing for consumers.

The court held in January that refunds were due consumers because of miniscule differences in water vapor found in some gas. Since Btu energy valve was displaced by water vapor in the gas, the court held that charges in excess of the actual Btu value of the gas be refunded.

IPA suggestd that FERC consider allowing producers to offset refund obligations against unpaid liabilities of the pipeline purchasers.

"Pipelines currently owe producers millions of dollars in two areas — retroactive add-ons permitted recently by FERC for past gathering and compression costs, and accrued unpaid, take-or-pay liabilities," Unsell said. "Consumers of natural gas have benefitted greatly over the past several years by not being charged for these legal obligations of their suppliers." Such a bookkeeping solution to the problem would be fair and would not require producers to come up with hard to obtain cash.

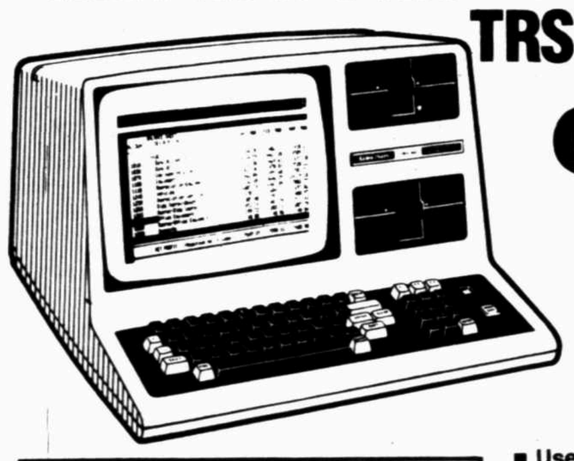

In a letter to FERC Secretary Kenneth F. Plumb, Unsell noted that of particular concern to IPAA are proposed rules relating to producer liability for refunding royalty owner obligations in advance of actual collection.

"It is commonly known that state and federal agencies which act on behalf of public royalty positions are notoriously slow in processing such items as refunds," Unsell wrote FERC. "Certainly a producer should not have to make payments in advance of collections on behalf of one agency of the government to satisfy a rulemaking by another agency. Where is the rule of fairness in such a procedure?" Unsell asked.

Flower Talk has Grand Openning

Flowers are like music, they are a universal language. They can say anything from I'm sorry to I love you to I am glad that you are my friend. They are also even a great way to say thank you.

Flower Talk was recently openned by Paul Coleman and Julia Maisel for precisely that reason. There are many people who have a lot of things to say and it seems so right to say it with flowers.

Flower Talk is a little different from many of the other florists in town. Besides your usual cut flowers like roses, daisies and carnations, they also carry a variety of unique and exotic flowers. Paul has a vast amount of experience in working with unusual flowers, so he knows how to handle them as well as how to arrange them to show off their beauty.

Flower Talk is a full service florist that offers complete wireservice and free delivery within Midland's city limits.

They love to do weddings. They do request that you book your wedding at least a month in advance to assure that they have the flowers that you want on hand. This is especially true if you would like a variety of flowers or some of the more exotic ones.

Fresh plants are also available at Flower Talk. They have a nice selection of either hanging plants or plants in baskets or pots.

If you are interested in the unique flowers that Flower Talk offers but you would like something a little more permenant, why not check out the silk flower arrangements available. They have many arrangments made up and on display in the showroom. If you see a design or a particular type of flower that you like but not exactly the arrangement you hd in mind, they will be more than happy to custom design an unique arrangement that will truly be one of a kind.

Parking at Flower Talk is absolutely no problem. By being located at the Westwood Shopping Center there is ample parking.

Flower Talk is open Monday through Friday, 8:30 to 5:30 and Saturday, 8:30 to 1:30.

Remember that their Robbon Cutting Ceremony will be June 27th at 2 p.m. Stop by and visit. While you are there, be sure a check out to see if they have an unadvertised special going on.

Paul Coleman and Julia Maisel are pleased to announce that the Ribbon Cuting Ceremony for their shop is scheduled for June 23. Stop by Flower Talk, located in Westwood Shopping Center, and wish them well.

Lewellen Construction recently completed the tsk of installing steel siding on this mobile home. The use of steel siding gives the mobile home the look of a house. If you would like more information, call Lewellen Constructions at 686-8007.

Lewellen Construction answers your questions

Americans are looking for ways to improve their homes. They want to improve not only its appearance but also its energy efficiency.

Lewellen Construction understands this home improvement trend and feel that steel siding is the answer.

Steel siding can do many things for you. It adds immediate and long lasting beauty to your home. Steel siding ends the expense, trouble and time consuming worry of repainting the house. It increases your home's resale value. It also decreases air infiltration while protecting your home from the elements, preventing further warping, rotting and decaying of its original surface.

Steel siding has the look of wood without the maintanence and expense of wood.

Th use of steel siding for home improvement is not limited to conventional homes. It can make your mobile home look like a real house. Not only is the appearance greatly improved, but when properly installed the siding reduces air infiltration, making your home more energy efficient.

On any home, steel siding will add immediate, long lasting beauty. The only "paint brush" you'll use will be your garden hose.

A common complaint of most mobile home owners is the lack of adequate insulation in the walls and poor fitting windows. Lewellen Construction can help alleviate those problems. As well as siding, soffitt and fascia, they install replacement windows and storm windows.

The experts at Lewellen Constuction took some time out to answer some of the most common questions about siding.

QUESTION— Sometimes I see a house where the metal on the fascia board has blown off. Why does this happen and can it be prevented?

ANSWER— All siding, soffitt and fascia is normally either nailed or stapled into the existing wood. On the corners of the fascia board nails can work loose allowing wind to catch the siding and tear it loose. Seeing the potential problem, Lewellen rivets the corners so they can't work loose. This is one of the many ways in which Lewellen Construction stands out ahead of the competition. They take the extra effort needed to insure a job that not only looks professional, but stays that way. The manufacturer's warranty is of little value if the material is installed improperly.

QUESTION— I've recently received mail advertisements from out of town siding companies saying they would use my home as a "model home" and I could get a big discount. Do you know anything about these companies?

ANSWER— Bill Lewellen echoes the warning by Linda Truitt of he Better Business Bureau on the pitfalls of dealing with siding companies that use deceptive selling tactics. You never get "something for nothing", so please beware. Remember, the cheapest bid is not always the best any more than is the most expensive. Investigate the reputation of the company. Get referrals and check them out.

Please refer to page 59 in the 1984 Sourcebook published by the Better Business Bureau for more tips on what to look for in a siding contractor. If you don't have a copy, write to the Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, P.O. Box 6006, Midland, Texas 79711 or call 563-1880.

QUESTION— I have a brick home and my trim is contoured instead of just a flat fascia board. I still have it painted every few years because I want to retain the original style. What can you do for me?

ANSWER— Lewellen construction looks at every job on an individual basis and works with the homeowner on every detail. The metal can be formed to fit most any shape. Also a wide variety of colors are available to compliment any home's color scheme. The best part of all is that your entire exterior then becomes maintenance free.

Remember, Lewellen Construction is a Midland company serving Midland.

If you have other questions or would like more information contact Lewellen Construction at 686-8007.

Max Hutchins otters a little encouragement as he poses Debbie Kellum. Max features women's portraits with a glamour flair.

Max's Studio offers women an alternative

WRITER'S NOTE: The following articles varies greatly from the articles usually found on this page. This article is written strictly from personal experience.

I am like millions of women around the world who absolutely despise having their picture taken. I usually also despise the prints that result. I either end up looking posed, stiff or just awful. Then I have to settle for the "lesser of the evils" as far as which pictures I order.

Even though I always complained about the pictures, I thought that it was a necessary evil of life. Happily, I found out that it wasn't necessary to torture myself.

When I found out that I needed a photograph, I cringed at first. I even thought of hiring someone to say that they were me, but I figured that I would get caught. With some reluctance I decided there was no getting out of it, so I asked around to find a photographer that came highly recommended.

One name kept coming up - Max Hutchins at Max's Studio of Photography.

I called Max at 683-2143 and set up an appointment. On the phone, Max explained the glamour flair method he uses for women's portraits. He would be using both sharp and soft focus with number of lighting variations to bring out the beauty of the model. He told me that I could bring a change of clothes if I wanted a little variety in the pictures. Max also told me that Debbie Kellum, a make-up artist who features the Lea Haller cosmetic line, would do a free make-up make over before the setting if I would like.

I arrived at my appointment absolutely scared to death. I feel much more comfortable as the photographer than as the model but Max began to make me feel at ease right from the beginning.

We went to the camera room to begin the setting. Before we began, Max turned on some soft music to soothe my nerves. After a few minutes I began to calm down.

It was a pleasant change not to be rushed through a setting. It took about 45 minutes n all for my setting.

After about 15 or 20 shots, I changed into the other outfit that I had brought along and then Max took quite a few more pictures.

All the while, as Max was taking the pictures, we talked about different things. This helped to take my mind off of the camera. He was also very complimentary when he thought he got an exceptionally good shot. He let me know when I had done something right. It took away the awkward feeling I usually get.

The best part for me, though, was the proofs. He had taken nervous, ordnary me and had transformed me into something different.

I even looked glaomourous (for me)! I was extremely happy with the results and I ordered quite a few pictures for my family.

Looking at these pictures made me feel like a "new" me.

Next time someone complains about "having" to have a picture taken, I am going to tell them to go to Max's Studio of Photography for a realxed setting and some really great pictures.

J. Woodford Sale

Midland insurance firms merge

J. Woodford Sale Insurance of Midland has completed a merger with Browning-Thompson Insurance Corp., announced Steve Thompson , president of Browning -Thompson Insurance.

"J. Woodford Sale represents a quality and integrity thats difficult to find. We couldn't have found a better partner for our Midland office," said Thompson.

"The insurance business is much more complex than it was when I became a Southwestern Life Career Agent in 1963," Sale said. "And Browning-Thompson's concept of a Network of Insurance specialists which can be called on to work with any individual client is an excellent idea. They are a very well organized corporation." Sale pointed out that he will continue to work within the new organization, maintaining contact with his present clients and continuing to share in new business. His twenty-one year career in insurance includes membership in the Million Dollar Round Table of Agents.

The combined business, J. Woodford Sale/Browning-Thompson insurance, will office in Midland's Claydesta Plaza, at P6 Desta Drive, Suite 2775.

MGF

MGF has previously announced it has reached an agreement with its sucured lenders to restructure approximatley $149 million of its secured debt. The agreement provides for, among other things, $29.6 million to be converted into convertible preferred stock and the maturity of the remaining approximately $119 million of secured debt to be extended for five years. The agreement is subject to certain conditions, including the conversion of approximately $165 million of unsecured debt into convertible preferred stock and common stock.

MGF has approximately $315 million in secured and unsecured debt. If the restructuring is successful, the total corporate debt would be reduced to approximately $130 million and the estimated annual interest expense would be less than $9 million. This would be a 70 percent reduction in comparison to the total interest expense of $29.5 million for 1983.

The offer to MGF's unsecured creditors will be made with a registration statement, which MGF expects to file within the next thirty days. The acceptance by the unsecured creditors of MGF's proposal to convert their debt into convertible preferred stock and common stock is critical to MGF's continued existence outside of a bankruptcy proceeding. If the debt restructuring is successful, management believes MGF should be able to return to a stable financial condition.

End sought to variable rate home mortages

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Majority Leader Jim Wright and a variety of House Democrats and Republicans are calling for an end to variable interest rate mortgages unless lenders agree to limit interest rate increases.

Wright testified Thursday before the House subcommittee on housing and community development, where he read complaints from people who wrote him about jumps in home-loan interest rates that caught them by surprise.

The Texas Democrat said a Southern Virginia woman was offered a $47,500 loan with a graduated payment plan that would increase monthly payments from $410 a month to $620 a month over the first five years and have the woman owing the bank $59,000 at the beginning of the sixth year.

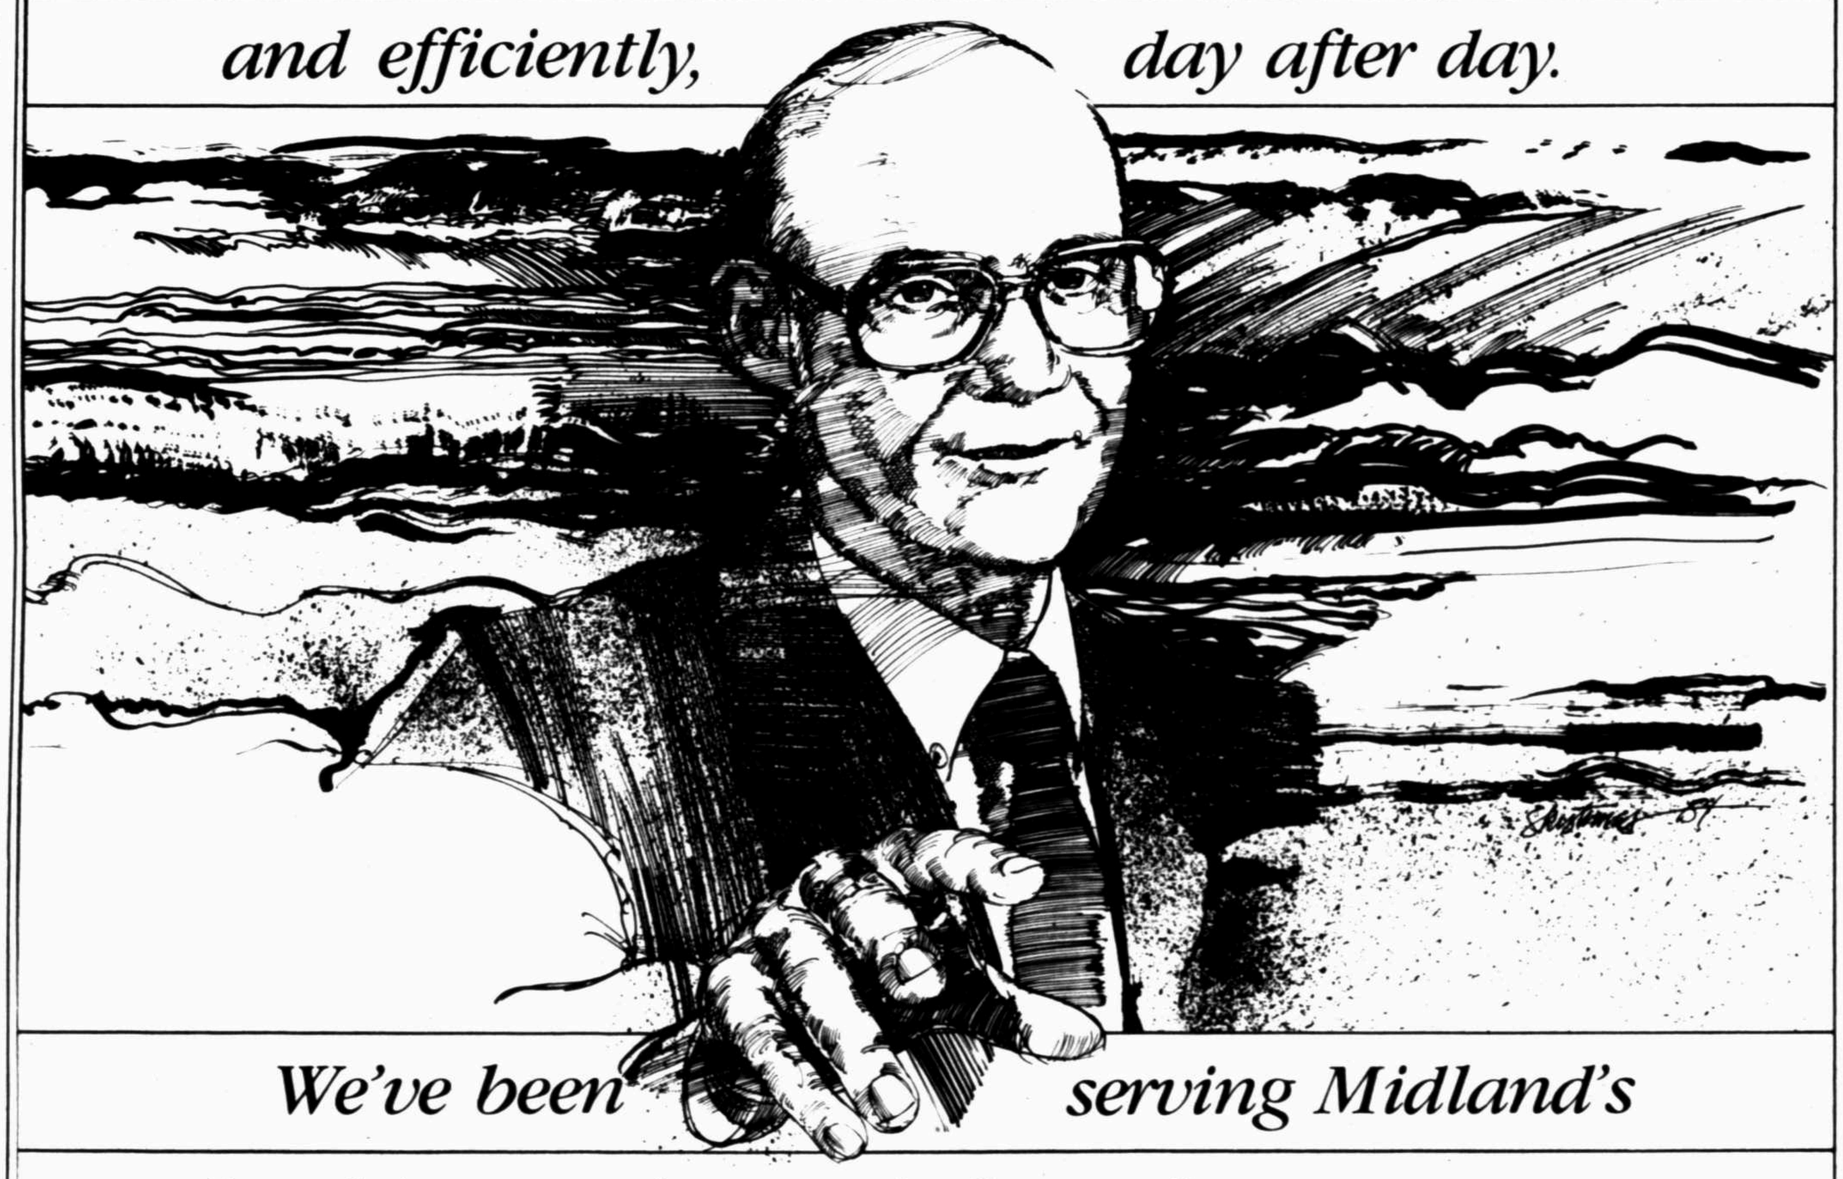

"If these hearings are not to sound the call of 'Farewell to ARMs ...' I think they should. We've got to start rolling it back sometime. The time is not going to be any easier or any better than right now," Wright said.

Rep. Stewart B. McKinney, R-Conn., the panel's ranking Republican, said interest rates ought to be "life capped," or limited in the amount they could go up.

Subcommittee chairman Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, agreed, saying: "Where the sky's the limit, the sky will become the limit."

"Midland needs more from a bank than a few energy loans and a good public relations program.

In a market like Midland, the successful bank must organize to deliver a wide array of financial services - consistently and efficiently, day after day.

We've been serving Midland's banking service needs for as long as you can remember. We know what it takes here.

We Know Midland!"
