Want a free car?

Chuck Davis sits astride a 1982 luxury sedan, a merchandising gimmick he hopes will attract prospective buyers to the house at 2407 Stutz Place he and his wife are trying to sell.

All you need do is buy the house

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Parked on the lawn at 2407 Stutz Place, in a rather fashionable Midland neighborhood, sits a metallic beige, four-door, $15,000 luxury Toyota Cressida sedan, loaded with extras and a windshield message — "This Car Free" — the stuff from which fantasies are spun.

Excited passersby may even glance about, anticipating the appearance of a swarthy fellow of Latin extraction with his diminutive aide in tow, both dressed fit for fantasy in vanilla suits and white shoes.

But as with most freebies, there's a catch. In this case, a four-bedroom, four-bath, 3,100-square-foot, ranch-style catch parked just behind the car.

It seems the windshield's other half reads "Buy This House."

"Buy This House...This Car Free." Fantasy Island, indeed.

The semi-fantasy is the brainchild of Chuck and Evelyn Davis, proprietors of Permian Toyota of Midland, who for approximately three months have been unsuccessfully trying to sell or rent their home.

After a fruitless, 90-day search through a local Realtor, Davis hit upon the eye-grabbing sales technique, calling it "a unique idea that might attract somebody's attention."

The car has served as front-yard dressing since Wednesday, generating two inquiries but no buyers the first day.

Mrs. Davis said the home, priced at $149,000, became too big as their two sons and daughter reached college age. The Davises, residents of Midland for eight years, purchased a smaller home near Green Tree Country Club, where they both enjoy golfing.

Although prospective buyers have been scarce, the Davises seemed optimistic about their "merchandising" gimmick.

Davis said since the Realtor's more conventional methods failed, "I thought, well, by gosh, this might do some good."

Reagan uses power to stall freight strike

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — By invoking his power to temporarily avert a nationwide freight strike, President Reagan is hoping a settlement can be reached in the dispute between 40,000 locomotive engineers and the railroad industry.

Reagan interrupted his vacation at his mountaintop ranch 20 miles from here Thursday to sign an executive order creating a presidential emergency board to investigate the issues.

The president's action, taken three days before a threatened strike, triggers a 60-day cooling off period. Any walkout during that period would violate federal law.

The president's power to forestall a strike is part of the Railway Labor Act.

"It was the president's view that a railroad strike would have an immediate impact on the public," said White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes. "He considers the railroad industry crucial to the U.S. economy."

Reagan signed the order shortly after the National Mediation Board sent him its findings that a strike would virtually shut down rail freight movement in the United States.

The contract dispute between the engineers and 10 rail lines centers on pay, work rules and working conditions, Speakes said. Mediation efforts began last December and ran through May, he said.

"A strike by the BLE (Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers) threatens substantially to interrupt interstate commerce to a degree such as to deprive a section of the country of essential transportation service," said a written statement issued by White House officials in California with the president.

The president is expected to name the three members of the fact-finding board next week. They would have 30 days to study the issues and develop recommendations, and the union and industry then would have 30 days to consider the board's findings.

The BLE had scheduled a walkout for 10:30 p.m. EDT Sunday. Before Reagan's action, Bill Wanke, first vice president of the engineers' union, said the union "absolutely" would abide by the no-strike ban and the accompanying cooling off period.

Speakes said a strike would have a "severe impact on Department of Defense material, coal, wheat and inter-city rail passengers." In addition, he said it would increase unemployment by 620,000 after two weeks and by 1.1 million after four weeks.

Speakes said in 1981, 18 percent of the Defense Department's freight traffic went by rail. That figure rose to 25 percent in the first six months of this year.

Seagoville transfer aborts prisoners' hunger strike

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Five federal prisoners who were to have begun a hunger strike today in protest of alleged poor health and safety conditions in the city jail were unexpectedly removed from the jail and transferred to the federal prison at Seagoville.

Two officers from the Bureau of Prisons arrived at the jail about 8 a.m. today, taking even the police department by surprise.

"I guess that's one way of solving the problem," shrugged one city police officer, who said he suspected but couldn't be sure that television publicity Thursday night may have been a factor in the sudden transfer of the men, some of whom had been in the jail two and three months.

Although federal authorities today denied the threatened hunger strike per se prompted the transfer, they did confirm that complaints from the inmates had expedited their removal.

Said Richard Percoskie, acting assistant warden at the minimum security federal prison camp in Big Spring:

"We didn't learn of the hunger strike until this morning. The move had been planned because of the length of time they had been in the jail and because they were causing problems — in an administrative way — for Midland authorities. They had been calling the news media and writing letters to us and our regional office."

The inmates, many of whom were in the process of being transferred from Big Spring to other federal penal institutions, had complained of a lack of proper ventilation, inadequate medical attention and tepid drinking water in the jail. They also said they were allowed to shower only once a week and were being deprived of adequate access to their lawyers.

Doctors feel two hospital additions warranted

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

While Midland Memorial and Parkview hospitals are preparing to battle over which facility should be granted state approval for additional beds, a consensus of the local doctors is that both hospitals need to be expanded.

Dr. J. Ralph Berry, president of the Midland County Medical Society, told The Midland Reporter-Telegram Thursday the physicians will support both MMH and Parkview's expansion plans.

Until recently, Berry said the physicians have "stayed on the sidelines" in matters concerning certificate of need applications.

"The public should have a choice between two hospitals," Berry said.

A four-point letter distributed June 15 to Midland's physicians asking for support of two hospitals in Midland has resulted in 80 percent of the doctors favoring both facilities receiving additional beds.

UNDER TEXAS law, MMH and Parkview must submit certificate of need applications to the Texas Health Facilities Commission for more beds.

MMH's application calls for a $15 million 77-bed expansion, while Parkview applied for a $17.5 million 110-bed hospital which will be located on 10 acres on Midland Drive.

Parkview officials hope to convert the existing facility to a psychiatric hospital, but, according to Parkview's application, "whether or not the conversion application is granted, additional medical/surgical beds will be needed in Midland County because of the rapid population growth."

And Berry said this is one reason why the physicians decided to make a public statement concerning the applications.

Public hearings on the application are expected to be held in mid-August with the Permian Basin Health Systems Agency Area-12 which will recommend its findings to the THFC.

BERRY, AN ophthalmologist who has practiced in Midland for 10 years, said an ad hoc committee of the Medical Society reviewed the question of whether or not Midland could support the additional 127 of beds. The following is the letter suggesting the position the physicians should take in this issue:

"The Ad Hoc Committee of the Midland County Medical Society on hospital plans for the local area has met and suggests the following items:

"—Midland County Medical Society should support, both here and in Austin, both hospitals in their bid and hospital applications for the consent of same.

"—The local citizens, we feel, deserve a chance to make a choice between the two hospitals, or even three, if such should be built.

"—The local area is grossly under the number of beds needed for a catastrophic emergency (such as Wichita Falls' tornado, gas problem, local railroad cars, hazardous material trailers) e.g., Chaparral Center is not useful as hospital.

"—The average ratio, four beds per 1,000 population, would indicate the necessity here for 375 beds, plus 75 more for county needs. This would lessen the flow of the local patients to nearby and more distant hospitals. With 11 new doctors coming to the city and some 110 M.D.'s located here, more surgical, medical and drug and mental-related beds are needed urgently if these doctors are to stay in practice here."

BERRY SAID A "minority of the doctors — 20 percent — don't feel that way. They only want one hospital," but the consensus is to "accept the fact there's room for two."

He added the disagreement among the doctors was over the last two points in the letter.

"Can we retain the number of doctors if we don't have adequate facilities for them?" Berry asked.

"Midland Memorial needs more operating space," he added, referring to the present conditions at MMH. "Obstetric space has reduced operating room by 30 percent a week."

In its application, MMH has proposed a new labor and delivery room area.

"I can book a surgery at 8 a.m. and I can't get in until 12. Problems might crop up in the middle of the night...women waiting to deliver must have Caesarean-sections," he said, adding that "obstetrics now takes one-third to one-half of the six surgical rooms" at MMH.

Ex-page says investigators have names

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former House page LeRoy Williams said today he gave House ethics committee investigators the names of three congressmen with whom he says he had sex and the name of a senator for whom he allegedly arranged an appointment with a male prostitute.

Williams spoke to reporters as he and his attorney emerged briefly from their closed-door meeting with the committee staff members.

Williams then went back into the meeting without giving any further indication as to what was being discussed.

Earlier in the day, Williams stood by his story even though he flunked an FBI lie detector test.

He told an Arkansas television station Thursday after the test that he had given the FBI the names of three members of the House and a senator.

But the examiner who conducted the test, Williams said on the NBC-TV "Today" show, "stated that I flat-out flunked the test, that he felt like I should right then turn my story around and tell the truth."

He accused the person who administered the test of being "biased."

"From the start, he was not very objective about the test. His test was pointed toward, was I condemning the congressmen or, he was just not very objective at all."

Asked by interviewer Chris Wallace if he had been lying, Williams replied, "No, I was not."

Williams said he was still ready to testify under oath to the House ethics committee, which is investigating the allegations, or to a grand jury.

Asked what he would tell the committee "with regard to your relationship with three congressmen," Williams said:

"I'm prepared to tell them the truth."

Q: Which is?

A: The fact that I was involved with three congressmen and that I did also set up liaison meetings...between congressional people, one senator and models from, prostitutes from, friendly models."

Of the lie detector test, Williams' attorney, Bob Scott, said during the break in the investigators' interview, "The examiner said he (Williams) had lied from beginning to end."

Williams said he was shocked at the format the FBI used in administering the test and charged that the examiner acted as if he were "persecuting a perpetrator instead of asking questions of a victim."

In an interview with the Associated Press, Williams said he had been involved with three congressmen from September to November 1981. There were three incidents, he said, all in the congressmen's offices and all after hours.

He declined to discuss the details further, but said in the interview that he was "angry over the attention this has put on the victim instead of the perpetrators" and added that he "would have gone home and never said a word if the doorkeeper's office had not tossed my name around with the media."

Williams charged in the "Today" interview that he "believed" deputy House doorkeeper Jack Russ had been "involved in sending the media after me instead of sending the media after the pages who were there in Washington in order to get the monkey off their backs."

Russ was not immediately available for comment. On Wednesday, he said of Williams's charges that he engaged in sex with congressmen and set up an encounter for another member: "The bottom line to Mr. Williams is this: He has a serious problem. He's a pathological liar."

Panel's pot report attacked

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eliminating criminal penalties probably would not increase use of marijuana, but it could save society money and effort in trying to enforce ineffective laws, says a National Academy of Sciences committee.

The report recommending an end to criminal sanctions for private use was attacked not only by the government, but also by the head of the academy, both fearing that such an action might encourage drug use.

The study, released by the academy Thursday without the fanfare that often accompanies similar reports, questioned the effectiveness of present law-enforcement policies concerning marijuana.

An 18-member committee of experts said decriminalization of individual use would save law enforcement, legal and social costs related to arresting 400,000 persons a year on marijuana-related charges.

While the committee did not call for legalizing marijuana, it proposed eliminating criminal penalties for personal possession or use of small amounts of pot and possibly replacing them with civil sanctions such as fines.

Despite all levels of government spending hundreds of millions of dollars each year trying to stop the drug, the group said, an estimated 55 million Americans have tried marijuana.

"The effectiveness of the present federal policy of complete prohibition falls far short of its goal — preventing use," said the study.

The National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA), which sponsored the four-year study, rejected the conclusions of the report and said it would not consider implimenting them.

William Pollin, the NIDA administrator, disagreed with the conclusion that decriminalization would not encourage increased use. Pollin said removing criminal penalities might be interpreted as meaning marijuana was now considered harmless.

A NIDA spokeswoman, Carol Sussman, said there is concern that decriminalization would have "serious and tragic health effects" among young people.

Kheira and M'hamed Mahallem talk about their cross-Texas trek from Houston to Odessa in a taxicab — a 15-hour ride via Galveston and Dallas that ran up a $999 cab fare.

Cabbie, take us to Odessa — the long way — and step on it

ODESSA (AP) — "Where is Odessa? Where is Odessa?" two exhausted Algerian tourists kept asking from the back of a cab as they watched the meter roll up a $999 fare.

Kheira and M'hamed Mahallem, who speak little English, hailed the cab at Houston Intercontinental Airport, thinking it would be just a short ride to Odessa, where Mrs. Mahallem's brother lives.

But Odessa is 500 miles to the northwest and the trip last Friday turned into a 15-hour odyssey that included side trips to Galveston and Dallas — in opposite directions.

The cabbie told the couple he wasn't exactly sure where Odessa was. So he made the trip via Galveston — 50 miles southeast of Houston — and Dallas — 350 miles east of Odessa.

The meter showed a fare of $999, but the driver settled for $320 — leaving the couple penniless because the Algerian government allows travelers to take no more than $150 each out of the country. Relatives supplied the remaining $20.

With her relatives helping interpret, Mrs. Mahallem told the Odessa American in a copyright story Thursday that the couple flew from Algeria to Paris on June 30 and on to Houston July 1. When they arrived in Houston, Mrs. Mahallem called her brother, but he wasn't at home so she decided to take a cab and surprise him.

"She was very excited and wanted to see her brother," said Rosemary Kouider, Mrs. Mahallem's sister-in-law. "They had been flying all day from Algeria to Paris to New York to Houston, and were exhausted."

But the Algerian couple became frightened after several hours in the cab. "Where is Odessa, where is Odessa?" they repeatedly asked the driver.

Mrs. Kouider says she was shocked when she learned that the cab had come from Houston — not from the Midland-Odessa Airport.

"I thought I would die," Mrs. Kouider said.

Ex-U.S. envoy calls warning about Lebanon 'maneuvering'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Malcolm Toon, who has served as America's top envoy both to Moscow and Tel Aviv, says the Kremlin's warning over possible use of U.S. troops in Lebanon appears to be "political maneuvering" rather than a threat of direct Soviet intervention in the conflict.

Toon said Thursday the message sent to President Reagan by Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev may actually serve to increase the chances that the United States will go ahead with sending Marines into Beirut to help evacuate beleaguered Palestinian guerrillas.

"We're now in a different sort of ball game," Toon said in an interview. "With the Soviets issuing these threats, it's going to be rather difficult for us to back away from the president's apparent commitment without giving at least the appearance of knuckling under to Soviet pressure."

Brezhnev's message to Reagan, as reported by the official Soviet news agency Tass, said that if U.S. Marines were dispatched to Beirut "the Soviet Union would build its policy with due consideration of this fact."

According to Tass, Brezhnev expressed the hope that "at this critical moment ... a sense of responsibility and common sense would prevail over opportunistic calculations."

The report did not specify what stepsthe Soviets were prepared to take in case American troops become involved in a multinational peacekeeping force for Lebanon.

However, Tass asserted that sending in the Marines would aggravate an already explosive situation, "strengthen the aggressor and in the final analysis ... supplement the Israeli occupation with U.S. occupation."

Toon, who served as U.S. ambassador to Israel in 1975-76 and subsequently as ambassador to the Soviet Union before retiring from the Foreign Service in 1979, said of the Kremlin warning:

"What they're doing is making sure that we go in there. That probably was not their purpose, but that's what the effect of the threatening language will be on the likelihood that the president would back down — unless there is some other device uncovered in the negotiations" involving U.S. special envoy Philip C. Habib.

Midland doctors favor MMH, Parkview expansions

"I can't compete with that," he said. "MMH has got to get that bond issue through for the 77 beds."

Parkview's application proposes an obstetrics department in its facility. And Berry suggested that an additional obstetrics hospital also could be utilized in Midland.

"ODESSA IS 10 years ahead of Midland with its Women's and Children's Hospital," he added. "We can improve the standard of care in the area with two good choices," Berry said.

Parkview's application also proposes an emergency room which Berry feels will be supported by the paying and indigent patients.

"If the hospital (Parkview) does what it says it will and puts in an emergency room, they'll get the indigent patients also. We don't know what will transpire, but they have not turned indigent patients away (at the existing facility); in fact, they have accepted these patients in the middle of the night."

It has been the concern of the MMH administration that if Parkview builds its new hospital, the paying patients will go to that facility, to be called the Doctors' Hospital, leaving the majority of Medicaid/Medicare and indigent patients for MMH.

Parkview's certificate of need application states: "This project will replace the medical/surgical beds located at Parkview Hospital and will have no significant adverse effect on existing facilities such as Midland Memorial Hospital."

"MIDLAND MEMORIAL would probably still get the bulk of indigent care," Dick Liley, Parkview administrator, said. "However, Parkview is willing to share the burden as long as contractual arrangements can be made. Since I've been here, we've never turned away a patient."

He said Parkview had 40 percent Medicaid/Medicare patients in April and 42 in May.

"It wouldn't bother me to see both projects approved," Liley said. "I definitely believe there has to be two hospitals in Midland. Competition is the force that provides better medical care."

Liley added that after MMH closed beds because of the lack of staff he sent a letter to MMH offering to take any indigent patients as long as Parkview was reimbursed by the hospital district.

"That was a month ago," he said. "We offerd to enter negotiations to ease the burden on MMH by accepting their patients...to date I have not received a reply."

RAY BRANSON, MMH president, told The Reporter-Telegram it is up to the hospital district to consider Liley's offer.

"We will cooperate with any facility providing health care in Midland County." he said. "I don't anticipate we will actively oppose Parkview's application (for its 110-bed hospital)...we will actively promote our application.

"They're competing with us right now for patients," he said. "I think the doctors would be attracted to a brand new facility. I think its in the best interest of Midland for Midland Memorial Hospital to get up to the size to provide adequate health care.

"Our bed-need study does not show a need for more than what is in our application," Branson said. "I haven't seen data that supports more beds."

Branson said he was aware of the four bed per 1,000 population formula that the physicians referred to which is also used the by the PBHSA to determine the number of medical/surgical beds for the area, but MMH's application is "based on projected population figures by the Texas Department of Health and the market (patient load)."

THE PBHSA five-year health systems plan states that the national guideline for general hospitals is that "there should be less than four non-federal, short-stay beds for each 1,000 persons in a health service area except under extraordinary circumstances."

It further states "bed need projection figures found on Table 9 (summary of analysis for all service trade areas) indicate that by 1986, a 4.0 beds per 1,000 population ratio would be necessary to provide equal access to all the region's residents to short-stay beds."

Although this formula pertains to the entire Permian Basin area, Jeanie Kaferle, assistant at the PBHSA, said the formula is also a proper guideline for Midland County.

And, as far as the Medical Society is concerned, 80 percent of Midland's doctors "feel we have to have more beds, active medical/surgical beds," Berry said.

Chance for rain remains in forecast

Although only .04 of an inch of precipitation was recorded overnight in the Midland area, Midlanders may see more rain tonight and Saturday.

With a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms expected through Saturday, the recorded amount of rainfall may increase from the .65 of an inch for the month and the 6.93 inches for the year.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is predicting partly cloudy skies through Saturday with a low tonight near 70 and a high on Saturday in the upper 90s.

Winds are expected to be southeasterly at 5-10 mph tonight, increasing to 10-15 mph Saturday.

Thursday's high of 94 fell nine degrees short of the record high of 103, set for that date in 1964. The overnight low of 69 missed the record low of 56, set in 1979, by 13 degrees.

Carpet stolen from eastside home

In theft and burglary complaints to city police during the past 24 hours, $6,120 worth of carpet was reported stolen from several eastside home under construction by the Plainsman Homes Co. of Midland. The locks on sliding glass doors had been broken to gain entry.

Dr. C.D. Haynes reported the theft of an $1,800 microscope from his office at 3301 Mogford sometime Thursday afternoon.

And Len Popescu of 4602 Crenshaw told officers luggage and assorted household goods vauled at $880 were taken in a burglary of his residence Thursday.

Midlander injured in one-car rollover

PENWELL — A Midland man was in critical condition this morning at Odess'a Medical Center Hospital following a one-vehicle rollover accident about six miles west of here Thursday afternoon.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Dario Lugo, 27, of Rt. 3, Midland, was westbound on Interstate-20 about 1:15 p.m. Thursday when the right rear tire of his 1971 Ford station wagon blew out, causing the car to leave the roadway and roll over three times, throwing Lugo from the wreckage.

Two unidentified passengers in the car were not injured. Lugo suffered head and internal injuries.

Bell to drop appeals of rate orders

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Mark White said today Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. has agreed to drop its appeals of 1980 and 1981 rate orders issued by the Public Utility Commission.

White said in a statement the agreement between Bell and the PUC to dismiss the appeals could save customers more than $100 million.

"The agreement has been endorsed and is supported by the Texas Municipal League's Southwestern Bell steering committee as being in the best interest of all cities affected by the agreement," White said.

As part of the agreement, he said, Bell will withdraw its appeal of the 1981 rate order in which it requested $88.9 million in additional revenues and $20.4 million in refunds of temporary rates ordered by the commission.

Also, White said, neither Bell nor the PUC would appeal an April district court decision that denied a claim by Bell for an additional $25 million but upheld Bell claims for approximately $13 million.

The attorney general said the agreement would end all pending litigation between Bell and the PUC.

Christening date set for William

LONDON (AP) — Prince William of Wales, the baby son of Prince Charles and Princess Diana, will be christened in the music room at Buckingham Palace on Aug. 4.

The ceremony will be performed at noon by Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, spiritual head of the Church of England, a palace announcement said.

The blue-eyed baby, born on June 21, has been named William Arthur Philip Louis.

Second-in-line to the British throne behind his father, the prince has only been seen once in public — the day his parents took him home to Kensington Palace from St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, just 21 hours after he was born.

Aug. 4 is the 82nd birthday of Elizabeth, the Queen Mother, a well-loved figure within the royal family and throughout the nation.

The christening will come one week after Charles and Diana celebrate their first wedding anniversary. They were married in a glittering ceremony at St. Paul's Cathedral last July 29.

Queen Elizabeth II, her son Prince Charles and other most recent royal arrivals have been christened in the music room.

Congress questions transfer by Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional panel is taking the unusual step of defending a bureaucrat whom the Reagan administration transferred to a new job, saying the move was "arbitrary and capricious."

A House Energy and Commerce subcommittee has come to the defense of Wayne L. Pines who, as associate commissioner for public affairs, was spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration until a forced transfer May 17.

Pines, 38, was widely respected in his old post where he was quoted frequently, expressing the agency's viewpoint on issues ranging from toxic shock syndrome to the use of salt.

Pines' new job — special assistant to the director of the National Institute of Mental Health — carries significantly less responsibility even though he has retained his rank in the senior executive service and his pay of $59,100.

At FDA, Pines managed a staff of 59. At NIMH he does not have even a secretary. Pines had been with the FDA for 10 years.

Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker, whose agency oversees the Food and Drug Administration, sought to explain the transfer by saying Pines' skills were needed at NIMH.

But the subcommittee on oversight and investigations, which interviewed 10 people involved with the transfer and reviewed relevant documents, was skeptical of Schweiker's stated reasons.

Seagoville transfer ends plans for prisoners' hunger strike

"The temperature of the drinking water is 80 degrees," said Robert Corbin, one of a dozen or so federal prisoners temporarily housed at the jail under a contract between the city and the government. "The windows are always closed and there's no fresh air.

"There's no doctor and we're constantly sick because of the heat. The jailers tell us if it's a life or death situation — closer to death — they'll take us to the hospital."

Corbin, a 29-year-old Dallas man who has served eight months of a three-year sentence for drug conspiracy, originally was confined at Big Spring, which has no cells to accomodate "disciplinary problems."

He had been in the city jail five weeks, awaiting completion of a disciplinary transfer to the medium security prison at Seagoville, and was chosen as spokesman for the group of protesting inmates. He and the others had also complained about red tape delays that kept them in the jail and away from the relatively easy life in federal prison.

In a suit filed June 25, one of the inmates, Lewis Eugene Gregg, alleges the city jail lacks a fire escape and that "no facility exists for attorneys and prisoners to consult with one another in total privacy."

Gregg, who is appealing a parole violation conviction and has been in the jail five months, was not among the prisoners transferred today. It is not known if he was going to participate in the hunger strike.

The suit also claims there are no provisons for fresh air exercise in the jail and that prisoners are allowed only one fresh change of clothes per week.

A preliminary hearing on the suit is coincidentally scheduled in federal court July 14, Bastille Day in France.

City officials Thursday declined to release a copy of the contract under which federal prisoners are housed because the matter is in litigation.

An official for the federal prison system said while the government expects certain food and sanitation standards to be maintained at the local level, he couldn't be sure of the specific regulations that might apply in Midland's case without reviewing the contract.

Corbin said in a phone interview with The Reproter-Telegram Wednesday that at least five of the 12 federal prisoners had agreed to join the hunger strike, which, he added, would remain in effect until their grievances are resolved.

Chief of Police Wayne Gideon could not be reached for comment.

Small Texas businesses need low-interest loans

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas small business owners need a way to get loans at the lower interest rates available to larger businesses, according to a gubernatorial task force.

Gov. Bill Clements Task Force on Small Business on Thursday recommended the creation of a "small business loan pool" funded in part by the franchise tax paid by corporations. Under the proposal, a corporation could choose to pay 20 percent of its franchise tax into the pool.

"The task force feels that the greatest need of a small business is the ability to secure funds at the same favorable rates as larger companies," the task force told Clements.

The pool money would be held by participating banks, which would use it to cover 30 percent of the loans. The rest of the money would come from the bank.

A task force subcommittee reported that 80 percent of all businesses fail within the first five years because of "undercapitalization."

"Small businesses do not have the ability to secure loans at favorable interest rates; contrary to their larger counterparts, a small business must often borrow funds at the current market rate or at higher rates," the report said.

Texas collected $417.4 million in franchise taxes in 1981. The tax is calculated as a percentage of assets or profits. John Moore, spokesman for the Comptroller's Office, said the minimum tax is $55 a year.

Franchise tax revenue lost through the program would be more than made up to the state by increased sales tax collections, the task force said.

The panel said there are about 260,000 small businesses in Texas. A small business was defined as one having fewer than 100 employees or less that $1 million in annual gross receipts. The small businesses account for 80 percent of all businesses in the state, according to the report.

Clements also was told in the report that Texas universities and schools should add courses concerning smalll business. The task force members also called for the establishment of Small Business Development Centers in metropolitan areas to aid owners of small businesses.

Also proposed was a state panel to review rules adopted by state agencies that regulate small businesses.

Crash of Navy training planes kills six

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — It may take investigators six months to determine the deadly mistake that sent two Navy training planes hurtling into each other, Navy officials say.

The Beechcraft T-44A turboprops collided in flight Thursday and fell in flames into a grain field, killing two instructors and four student pilots aboard the aircraft.

"It's like putting together a puzzle," said Lt. Cmdr. Mary Wilson, a spokeswoman for the Naval Air Training Command.

Dr. Joseph Rupp, the Nueces County Medical Examiner, said the badly burned bodies of five men and a woman were pulled from the twisted wreckage that landed on either side of a mobile home.

The Navy withheld the identity of the victims until it could notify next of kin.

An on-site inventory of the debris, scattered over a one-eighth mile area, was completed Thursday and small pieces were taken to a hangar at the Corpus Christi Naval Air Station for use in the investigation, Mrs. Wilson said.

Larger metal pieces will be analyzed for stress and metal fatigue at an engineering laboratory, she said.

Investigators, she said, also are reviewing voice transmissions recorded before the crash.

Assistant Fire Chief E.E. Irwin said witnesses said one plane came apart in the air and the other was mostly intact when it hit the ground, exploded and burst into flames.

"It just fell. It exploded two or three times," said Elena Rodriguez, who could see one of the planes crash from her home 200 yards away.

"It was like slow motion. It was like a movie. The plane dove straight down to the ground," said Nina Wilde, 33, who saw one of the planes fall.

Navy crash trucks put foam on the burning wreckage and extinguished the fire quickly, said Irwin.

The planes are propeller-driven aircraft the Navy uses to train advanced students, said Ensign Jeff Herman.

Suit to decide fate of 'resign-to-run'

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A Bexar County court-at-law judge who sued to retain her seat could stop Attorney General Mark White from interpreting a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that may force some officeholders to give up their posts.

A provision of the Texas Constitution requiring officials in 22 county positions to resign if they file for another post before the first day of the last year of their elected term was upheld last month by the high court.

The suit filed by County Court-at-Law No. 1 Judge Carolyn Spears will now be reviewed by White before he decides whether to determine the fate of officeholders who sought another post believing a lower federal court struck down the state provision.

"If there is indeed a suit addressing the same issues, then the attorney general's opinion would be postponed," Mary Hardesty, assistant for information in the attorney general's office, said Thursday. "A court decision always takes precedence over the attorney general's opinion."

State District Judge John Yates is scheduled to hear the suit by Ms. Spears on July 16. She retained her seat on the bench Tuesday by obtaining a temporary restraining order from Yates.

Ms. Spears announced her candidacy for 224th District Court while an El Paso federal district court ruling, which found the clause unconstitutional, was still in effect, said her attorney, Gerald Goldstein.

Political candidates to get lowest broadcast ad rates

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Political candidates are entitled to the lowest rates for broadcast advertisements even if they buy only one ad and an opponent buys hundreds, according to Attorney General Mark White.

The attorney general, in an opinion issued Thursday, said federal law requires television and radio stations to charge the "lowest unit charge" for political ads. The opinion was requested by Rep. Gerald Hill, D-Austin and chairman of the House Committee on Elections.

House Ethics Committee hires investigator

By LAWRENCE C. LEVY
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Quietly and without formal comment, the House Ethics Committee has hired a 31-year-old assistant U.S. attorney to head its investigation of alleged sexual misconduct and drug use by members of Congress.

The retaining of Donald A. Purdy Jr., who resigned from the U.S. Attorney's office in Philadelphia on Friday and reported to Capitol Hill on Tuesday, is the first significant step in the committee's probe of allegations that a few congressmen promised promotions to teenage House pages in exchange for sex.

Purdy also will oversee the investigation of allegations that lawmakers were supplied cocaine and marijuana by congressional aides.

The committee will also conduct an inquiry, announced in May, into the activities of Rep. Fred Richmond, D-N.Y., who has been the target of a federal grand jury investigation into his financial dealings. Recently, according to published reports, at least two of his former aides have told the grand jury, sitting in Brooklyn, that he paid them to buy him drugs. Richmond refused to comment Thursday.

Ethics Committee Chairman Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, offered Purdy the job more than two weeks ago, before the allegations by former pages about the sexual misconduct of congressmen came to light. Peter Vaira, the U.S. attorney for Philadelphia, who praised Purdy, said the assistant came to him "at least two or three weeks ago" about the offer to supervise the inquiry into Richmond and allegations of drug use on Capitol Hill.

Purdy, a Philadelphia native and a graduate of the University of Virginia Law School, has been given no deadline. "He is aggressive and very professional," Vaira said. Referring to Purdy's three years as a senior counsel on the House committee on the Kennedy and King assassinations, Vaira added, "He knows how to work with congressmen; he's been there before."

Neither Purdy nor Stokes would discuss the appointment, which was not officially announced. The panel, formally named the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, is empowered to investigate possible violations of House rules. It can recommend that the full House reprimand, censure or expel a member.

For more than a month, a federal grand jury has been hearing evidence about a drug ring for which a congressional aide was allegedly a courier, but federal law enforcement sources say no congressmen are targets. The FBI is making its own inquiry into the sexual misconduct charges, which were originally made by two former pages. One of them, Leroy Williams of Arkansas, has said he had sex with two House members and found a male prostitute for a senator.

Jury awards $4.1 million to family

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — The family of a 36-year-old scientist killed in the 1979 crash of an airliner at Chicago's O'Hare Airport has won $4.1 million in damages, the record award for such cases. The previous record was $2.3 million.

The verdict was reached on a 10-2 jury vote last week in proceedings before Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Max Deutz, who is trying a series of damage cases prompted by the crash.

Deutz this year has settled two of the cases and tried 16. Another 16 are pending in his court, and additional cases are still awaiting trial in federal court in Los Angeles and in Chicago.

Most of the awards have been for a few hundred thousand dollars. The previous record jury verdict was $2.3 million awarded last year to the family of Jack Donahue, 36, personnel and sales manager for Gallo Wine Co.

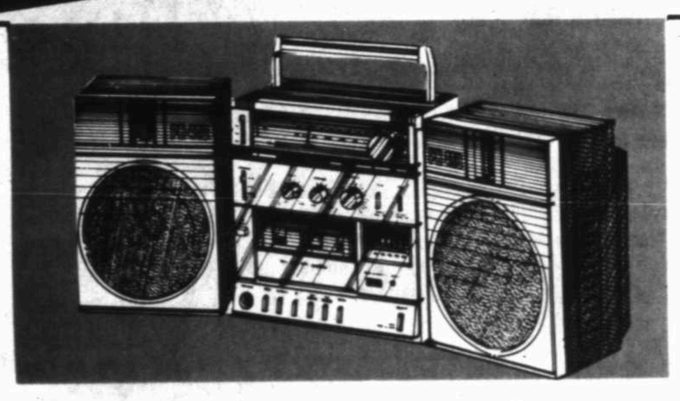

The $4,138,000 will be paid by American Airlines, which owned and operated the DC-10 jumbo jet, and the McDonnell Douglas Corp., which manufactured it, to the scientist's wife, Sandra Tramell, 38, and her three children, John, 18, Michael, 10, and Danielle, 8, of the Los Angeles area.

Killed in the May 25, 1979, crash was Paul Tramell, who had been director of applied research for American Hospital Supply Corp.

British civil servant says Falklands should be free

STANLEY, Falkland Islands (AP) — Residents of this war-shattered British colony should consider moving toward independence and including Argentina in economic development plans, Britain's civil administrator says.

"I think it would be good for their image in the world and for the islanders themselves to get away from the colonial status," Civil Commissioner Rex Hunt told reporters. "There's no doubt that the Third World and the majority of countries in the world still regard colonies as a dirty word."

Speaking to the first group of non-British journalists to visit the Britain's Falklands colony since British forces wrested them back from Argentina June 14, Hunt said the attitude of the islanders was: "Thank God we are still alive."

At a news conference Wednesday night, Hunt said despite the 74-day undeclared war for sovereignty that cost nearly 1,000 lives on both sides, Argentina could play an important role in developing the Falklands' economy.

Argentina has not renounced its claim to the South Atlantic islands it calls the Malvinas, 250 miles off the South American nation's southern coast. Most of the 1,800 islanders are patriotic British descendants who raise sheep, the Falklands' principal commodity.

In London, questions have been raised about Britain's financial ability to maintain the Falklands as a colony, guarantee its defense 8,000 miles from home and rebuild its shattered economy.

Hunt's suggestion that the Falklands become independent has been shared by British leaders over the past 20 years to relieve Britain of the financial burden of the islands it has ruled since 1833.

Argentine forces expelled the 56-year-old Hunt from the Falklands after they invaded April 2. He returned in the downgraded role of civil commissioner instead of governor two weeks ago, 10 days after Argentine commander Brig. Gen. Mario Benjamin Menendez surrendered his 11,800 troops to the British.

London has never given an official reason for naming Hunt civil commissioner, but he formerly was in charge of military and civil affairs. Now there also is a British military commander for the Falklands, Maj. Gen. David Thorne, 48. He succeeded Maj. Gen. Jeremy Moore, who directed the land campaign to retake the islands.

'Bride burnings' by in-laws spark demonstrations in New Delhi

By BRAHMA CHELLANEY

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Bharati Narula, a 20-year-old newlywed, rushed screaming into the street from her New Delhi home last month, her clothes aflame. "God save me, I'm being burned," she cried before collapsing.

Ms. Narula was the latest victim on a growing list of young Indian women to die from burns after their parents failed to pay promised dowries or were unable to meet demands by in-laws for more money or goods.

Authorities estimate that as many as 400 newly married wives died of burns last year in New Delhi. Many of their in-laws say the deaths were cooking accidents but some parents call the burnings cold-blooded slayings.

In Ms. Narula's case, her husband, her mother-in-law and her father-in-law are in jail, awaiting trial on murder charges. They are accused of pouring kerosene on the young woman's clothing and setting her on fire.

There have been only a handful of arrests in connection with the deaths. In most "bride burnings," the assailants go free because of lack of evidence, authorities say.

The deaths of Ms. Narula and eight other women in New Delhi during June triggered weekly demonstrations by several women's organizations that formed an anti-dowry committee.

Chanting slogans like "Brides are not for burning," "Marriage is not a commercial transaction" and "Send murderers to the gallows," these activists have staged noisy protests outside houses where young women were fatally burned.

They are concentrating their efforts on organizing street-corner meetings and marches to create a greater awareness among women of their rights and force authorities to punish those responsible for the burnings.

'Tigers, horses, elephants' join to free Cambodia

By DENIS D. GRAY

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A onetime king, a communist zealot who helped mastermind a bloody revolution and an aging exile have joined together to fight Vietnamese forces in their Cambodian homeland.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the former king; Khieu Samphan, the communist, and Son Sann, the exile — bitter enemies in the past — are preparing to set up a resistance government somewhere in the jungles of western Cambodia.

The Vietnamese invaded Cambodia in late 1978 and replaced the bloody Khmer Rouge regime, of which Khieu Samphan was president, with a pro-Hanoi government. But it took years of wrangling among the three factions to come up with the loose resistance coalition that was formalized in June.

The charismatic, extroverted Sihanouk, 59, is the coalition's president. Khieu Samphan, an introverted 50-year-old bachelor, is vice president. The prime minister is Son Sann, 71, who chose exile in Paris when Cambodia was plunged into the Indochina war in 1970.

"Tigers, horses and elephants in the same cage," is how Hun Sen, the foreign minister of the current Cambodian government, has described the trio.

The concensus of Western analysts in Bangkok is that the three will have big problems in dealing with each other and that militarily, their alliance won't make much difference.

But having Sihanouk, and to a lesser extent Son Sann, involved should give Cambodian resistance a better international image, attract more aid and improve chances of gaining diplomatic support in the United Nations and elsewhere, the analysts added.

U.S. Assistant Secretary of State John Holdridge said on a recent visit to Bangkok that the United States would provide only humanitarian assistance to the Sihanouk and Son Sann factions but not to the Khieu Samphan's Khmer Rouge. Holdridge ruled out military aid to all three, however.

Tension between Sihanouk and Khieu Samphan goes far back, even though the young radical once served as a secretary of state for commerce under the prince, who had abdicated in 1955 in favor of his father but remained as head of state.

In 1960, Sihanouk's secret police beat and stripped Khieu Samphan naked in the streets of Phnom Penh, Cambodia's capital. Seven years later, accused by Sihanouk of leading a peasant revolt, he fled into the bush to join a communist guerrilla movement known as the "Khmer Rouge," or the Red Khmer, taking the name of Cambodia's dominant native group.

Sihanouk's days in Phnom Penh were numbered as the Vietnam War, and the power plays behind it, spilled into Cambodia. Although he enjoyed great popularity in the countryside — said to exist to this day — the inner core was eroding.

One of Sihanouk's steady supporters was Son Sann, who had performed well in the Cabinet, as head of the national bank and briefly as prime minister. When the coup against Sihanouk came in 1970, Son Sann opted for exile in France.

Sihanouk chose exile in Peking where he joined his old enemies, the Khmer Rouge and Khieu Samphan, to fight against the U.S.-backed Lon Nol government in Cambodia. Like the one just formed, the National United Front of Cambodia was composed of disparate factions, with the Khmer Rouge the strongest. Although Sihanouk was the front's leader it became evident that he was more and more the figurehead.

Diet with bulk helps treat hemorrhoids

Dear Dr. Solomon: I suffer from hemorrhoids and I would like to know how to relieve them when they become painful. Would a laxative be a good idea to keep me from becoming constipated? — Peter, Tacoma, Wash.

Dear Peter: Laxatives contribute to the development of hemorrhoids and you should try to avoid them, if possible. Breakfast cereals and bran add bulk to the diet and you might find them helpful. You may obtain relief through the use of sitz baths, stool softeners, and rectal suppositories.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Have doctors learned any more about what causes the toxic shock syndrome? I don't see much about it in the papers anymore. — Tessie, Dover, N.J.

Dear Tessie: The exact cause of the toxic shock syndrome is still unknown. Many of the cases reported thus far appear to be associated with the use of tampons, but the disease occurs in people other than menstruating women, including men. In fact there has been one report of a married couple who had the disease at the same time.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My wife and I are both of average height, but our son, who is 12, is somewhat small for his age. Can the fact that he has asthma have anything to do with this? — Mr. S.L., Modesto, Calif.

Dear Mr. L.: Some children with asthma do tend to have delayed growth. In a study of 342 children with asthma, Dr. A.J. Martin, of the Royal Children's Hospital in Melbourne, Australia, found that growth retardation first became apparent at 10 years of age, and was most pronounced at 14. However, most children reached a normal height and weight as adults.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I hear and read a lot about breast cancer, but I have just found out that I have what my doctor says is benign breat disease. Is this rare? — Ellie, Trenton, N.J.

Dear Ellie: Biopsies indicate that there is a 3-to-1 ratio of benign breast disease to malignant breast disease. The greater emphasis in the media on breast cancer is due to its seriousness, even though benign breast disease affects a much larger number of women.

The 3-to-1 ratio I cited indicates that breast cancer does not necessarily follow benign breast disease. Moreover, only a small percentage of women with breast cancer have a history of benign breast disease.

Dear Dr. Solomon: When we discovered that my brother had diabetes, I set down a plan for him to live by. He was good about it for the first month or so, and then he started to slip. Now, he is not following it at all. The plan is for his own good; I am afraid he will get sick. How should I handle this situation? — D.A., Philadelphia

Dear D.A.: I understand your concern for your brother, but the best thing for you to do would be to step out of the situation. Let your brother set up a healthy and comfortable routine diet with his doctor. It is important that it should be one that is close to his present lifestyle. You could set up the healthiest and most beneficial diet in the world, if he doesn't feel comfortable in following it, it won't be of any value to him. Dr. Robert Clark, chief of medicine at Sunrise Hospital in Las Vegas, advises that it is most important not to alter the diabetic patient's lifestyle.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Seeing the country by double-decker bus

GARDEN CITY, Kan. (AP) — If Lyn and Marsha Gledhill are getting more than their share of stares while they drive across the United States, it could be due to their big, red double-decker bus.

"One fellow ran off the road looking at us," Mrs. Gledhill said Wednesday as they stopped in this southwest Kansas town. "Wherever we stop, someone wants to talk to us and take pictures."

The couple, their son Duke, 3, and daughter Sharlene, 2, of West Yorkshire, England, are journeying across the country in a double-decker Bristol Loddeker bus they shipped across the Atlantic.

"It's great, smashing," Mrs. Gledhill said. "We decided we might get to meet a lot more people this way. It's a lot more fun."

They began their trip May 27 in Boston, where Gledhill's aunt lives, and it has taken them through much of the northeastern United States and to Ontario. She has a sister in Phoenix, Ariz., the next planned stop.

They decided to swing through Kansas, Mrs. Gledhill said, partly because her father "is a big cowboy fan" and said to be sure to stop at Dodge City.

Despite warnings that Kansas was "flat and boring," Mrs. Gledhill said, "It's not as people have made out."

"It's not as flat as some places in England," she said.

After reaching California, they hope to sell the bus and fly home.

View of wild blue yonder has been astonishing

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — The view from the top of the world has been rather astonishing of late.

There was the space shuttle Columbia orbiting about in the wild blue yonder in absolutely tickety-boo fashion, as the English scribes used to say at Cape Canaveral, justifying all those billions of tax dollars on its fourth and final test flight.

And somewhere below, at 16,000 feet, there was this chap floating above San Pedro, Calif., in a green and white plastic lawn chair, the kind you can buy at any supermakret.

Jules Verne meets Mary Poppins in real life.

Or, in the inevitable movie version, Steven Spielberg meets Walt Disney in an extraordinary extraterrestrial extravaganza.

I wish I had been a passenger aboard either that Delta or TWA flight when the crew first spotted truck driver Larry Walters shlepping above the clouds in his aluminum chair, popping away with his BB at some of the 45 weather balloons that were carrying him beyond his wildest dreams on that way way-out 45-minute flight.

I'm sure the captain up there on the flight deck handled the sighting with the customary cool that seems to come with a four-stripe rating:

"IF YOU folks on the left side of the aircraft will look just below and slightly ahead of us through that break in the clouds, you'll see a configuration of weather balloons buoying aloft a webbed chair manned-module. Our cabin crew will soon be serving lunch, so please return to your seats, lower your serving tables and for your own convenience and safety keep your seat belts lightly fastened. From time to time, we'll alert you to other interesting things along our flight path today. The weather looks good all the way, and we hope to be on the ground in Los Angeles a few minutes ahead of schedule, depending on traffic conditions."

Pilots are trained not to get excited when confronted with unexpected hardware up there, even the kind available at any hardware store. Foreseeing the unforeseen, or at least pretending to be underwhelmed by it for the benefit of the customers, goes with the job description.

The captain of the British jetliner that dropped 26,000 feet a few days ago after passing through a cloud of volcanic ash over Indonesia could have seen a whole flotilla of chaise longues, deck chairs, bleacher seats and two bums on a park bench go floating by and tut-tutted the passengers into thinking it was an everyday occurrence. If you recall the news story, after he finally got the engines going and pulled out of that five-mile dive, he got on the horn and announced, "I'd like to apologize for that spot of bother there..."

Rather. Now please scrape yourselves off the ceiling while the cabin crew takes orders for our in-flight off duty shop...

When one considers, if one ever does while strapped in there, that the wings of a Boeing jumbo jet from tip to tip are longer than the Wright brothers first flight at Kitty Hawk just eight decades ago, gaping gullibility is all that is left to the passenger who has not kept pace with the dizzying advances in the field of aerodynamics.

What else can one do but swallow fear, coax a pink pallor back into the knuckles by grasping the proffered drink and emulate the unconcern dripping from the intercom?

ONE TINY spot of bother on the flight deck should not translate to one giant paroxysm of panic for the paying customers. Fear is all in the mind, unless the ground or ocean intervenes first.

When it comes to coaxing John and Joan Q. Public into quitting terra firma and trying travel in the upper regions, cool calm con has always been the name of the game.

In 1911 the London subway installed Britain's first escalator at the Earl's Court Tube station. To persuade patrons to fly the friendly skies above the platform, railway officials hired a man with a wooden leg to ride up and down all day and demonstrate there was nothing to fear from a moving staircase. Not even a spot of bother.

Flying passenger and military jets, occasional helicopters, even landing on the deck of an aircraft carrier are all part of a modern reporter's life. It goes with the territory, along with an air sick bag and a notebook.

But they'll never get me up in one of those lawn chairs.

Unless, of course, they send along a chaise lounge as the press bus.

As the sherpa said when he loaded a crate of Scotch onto the back of a young mountain goat for a trek into the high Himalayas, "I wouldn't send a crate up on a kid like that..."

Man drowns

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — A man who said he killed three hunters in self defense has drowned on a family outing more than 2½ years after the slayings.

Officials searched Big Sandy Reservoir Wednesday for the body of Ronald Selig, 44, who disappeared in the water while trying to swim to his daughters' raft Sunday, officials said.

Selig was tried twice for the Oct. 20, 1979, shooting of three hunters at their camp in northern Wyoming. The first trial ended in a hung jury after he testified he had shot the men in self defense. A second jury found him innocent on Dec. 9, 1980.

The price of a roll of wallpaper is high enough. Why not eliminate some of the cost of labor by renting a wallpaper steamer to remove the old paper. The unit consists of a steam machine and pan which is hand-held against the wall for a few seconds, slide it over half the width of the pan and scrape off the layers of old paper. Be sure to do the side walls first, steam will help to loosen the ceiling paper. Even if you do not intend to hand your new paper yourself, substantial savings can be realized by removing the old paper yourself.

Handy Hint:

The hose and pan should be connected to the machine before it starts to make steam.

Israeli government at odds with network

By MARCUS ELIASON

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The government's long-standing aversion to Israeli television news coverage has been sharpened by the reporting on opposition to the Lebanon war by the state-owned network.

The conflict between government and television, which in peacetime focuses on controversial issues like inflation and the treatment of Arabs under Israeli occupation, has taken on an additional emotional streak in wartime.

It blew up again Wednesday night in a noisy parliamentary debate at which pro-government legislators vowed to work for greater control of the network, and the opposition claimed free speech was in jeopardy.

The immediate cause of the debate was a television report that 100,000 people attended an anti-war demonstration in Tel Aviv. Members of Prime Minister Menachem Begin's ruling coalition said the figure was closer to 30,000, and that the discrepancy exposed the bias of television.

The row over numbers was symptomatic of the anger Begin supporters feel toward television which, although monopolistic and under a measure of government supervision, is as outspoken and unshackled as any state network in the West — at least in peacetime.

Newspapers, which are far harsher on Begin than the television and radio networks, come in for less criticism, since they are mostly privately owned. The papers are subject to the same military censorship as the broadcast media.

Politicians who would vigorously oppose any attempt to censor the written press have no hesitation in demanding control of the electronic media, which are financed partly by the government and partly by mandatory public subscription. Radio, unlike television, broadcasts paid commercials.

Television and radio are overseen by a management committee of seven members picked on a party basis so that five represent the current ruling coalition and two the opposition.

Pro-government members complain that they are powerless to dictate policy to reporters and editors, because Israeli labor laws make it impossible to fire them without causing a srike.

Committee member Aharon Papo contends that most television reporters come from "bohemian, leftist circles" and let their views color their coverage.

Papo said in an interview that on the night of the anti-war demonstration, television ignored two pro-government rallies elsewhere in Israel.

"These reporters are using the screen to brainwash the public," he charged. "And the moment we say a word, they scream that free speech is threatened."

Television reporters complain that the network too often bows to official pressure.

From the start of the Lebanon war, television reporters covering the fighting have had to wear army uniforms and take orders from the military press office.

A total ban was imposed on televising debate on the morality of the war. That restriction was eased when the fighting ended, but reporters still are barred from initiating interviews with participants in anti-war demonstrations. However, they are free to cover demonstrations as they unfold.

Yaron London, an acid-tongued talk show host, was ordered to record his program for prior review after he repeatedly challenged the official line.

London asked one guest whether there were similarities between Jewish children in the Warsaw Ghetto and children in the Palestinian guerrilla army. Another person interviewed, an expert on the Soviet Union, said Kremlin control of the guerrillas was less extensive than the government would have Israelis believe.

Papo says one reporter, Menashe Raz, went to the front to look specifically for soldiers who would criticize the war on camera. Raz denies the charge, saying his subjects were chosen at random by their field commanders.

On the battlefield, television has emphasized the courage and hardship of the troops. The destruction and suffering of innocents has been less extensively covered, compared with foreign networks.

Haitian refugees contract rare cancer, infections

By FRANK BLANCHARD

ATLANTA (AP) — Haitian refugees have come down with a rare cancer and other life-threatening infections previously found in gay men and drug abusers, health officials say.

The national Centers for Disease Control said Thursday that 34 previously healthy Haitian refugees contracted Kaposi's sarcoma, a rare skin cancer usually seen in the elderly, and a number of other infections almost unheard of in healthy people.

"It is not clear whether this outbreak is related to similar outbreaks among homosexual males, (intravenous) drug abusers and others, but the clinical and immunologic pictures appear quite similar," the CDC said in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

The diseases, which demonstrated a mortality rate of nearly 50 percent among the Haitians, usually appear in people whose bodies' natural disease-fighting network is weakened by chemotherapy or transplant surgery, said Dr. Peter Drotman, a clinical services consultant at the CDC.

But a startling number of previously healthy homosexual males and people who inject illicit drugs recently have fallen victim to Kaposi's sarcoma and other infections because their immunity systems collapsed for some unknown reason.

The problem first came to the CDC's attention last year among previously healthy gay men in California and New York. It has since reached epidemic proportions in homosexual males and drug abusers, prompting the CDC to form a task force to investigate the cause, said Drotman, a task force member.

Close study of about half of the 34 Haitians has revealed the same kind of defective immunity seen in the homosexuals and drug abusers, Drotman said.

"Certainly you wonder if those groups are linked in some way, but we have no evidence of that," he said.

Gay men who have frequent sex with strangers and often use drugs have an increased risk of immunity breakdown and subsequent disease, but the two habits may not be the direct cause, the CDC has reported.

Downtown Duluth's 'moose on the loose' finally lassoed by Superior Coast Guard

DULUTH, Minn. (AP) — It took police, zookeepers, game wardens and finally the Coast Guard to capture a moose on the loose in downtown Duluth.

The chase began when the seven-foot, 1,000-pound female moose was sighted asleep in a parking lot around 10 a.m. Thursday.

Four hours later, with four tranquilizing darts stuck in her, the moose jumped into Lake Superior and swam out about a half mile before the Coast Guard managed to herd her to shore, said Richard Laine, senior zookeeper at the Duluth Zoo.

"I was concerned for its life when it was in the water," said Julene Boe, a zookeeper. "I don't think it reaized how big a lake it was in," she said.

Ashore, the moose was wrestled to the ground and given more sedatives. Nearly five hours after the chase began, the moose finally surrendered on the grounds of Glensheen mansion, a Duluth tourist attraction.

CAF's Desert Squadron to host fly-in, open house at airport

The Confederate Air Force's Desert Squadron will host a fly-in and open house Saturday at the Tiger Charter facility at Midland Regional Airport.

CAF warbirds from the World War II era will be on static display for public viewing Saturday afternoon. Pilot and air crews will be there to give the rundown on the various aircraft and to explain the roles which the aircraft or their type played in the war effort.

Though no air show is planned, "local flying activity" will take place, according to CAF spokesman.

Among the CAF colonels and their ladies at the fly-in will be Masajiro "Mike" Kawato, a World War II Japanese Zero fighter pilot and the world record holder for a solo flight in a single-engine from Japan to California in 1976.

Open house at Tiger Charter, which is just off U.S. Highway 80 and on the eastern edge of the airport, will begin at 8 a.m. Saturday.

The hosting Desert Squadron of the CAF's West Texas Wing is headquartered in Midland-Odessa.

Old drug injected into arteries proves effective for colon cancer

HOUSTON (AP) — A medical researcher says administering an old drug into arteries, rather than veins, has proven startlingly effective in treating advanced colon cancer.

The results have prompted a medical group to seek federal approval to use the method to treat brain cancer, said Dr. Daniel Lehane, director of oncology at the Houston Veterans Administration Medical Center.

The drug, cis-platinum, has been surprisingly effective when infused into the arteries of patients extremely ill with colon cancer, Lehane said Thursday.

In 27 of 36 patients, the drug caused metastatic tumors to shrink by more than 30 percent, he said. The level of success with more conventional treatment in similarly ill patients is 10 or 20 percent, he said.

Metastic tumors are those formed after the cancer has spread from its primary host organ.

The Southwest Oncology Group is seeking permission from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to use the method for treating advanced and uncontrollable brain cancers, Lehane said. He said the proposal had to be reviewed at several levels.

The advantage of arterial infusion — a process that has been used before with less success — is that it is direct, Lehane said.

"When you inject it into the artery, you can bypass the heart and squirt it in just as the blood is arriving at the tumor," he said.

Three-bedroom home built in six hours, 55 minutes

POST FALLS, Idaho (AP) — Scurrying teams of construction workers wearing color-coordinated T-shirts built a three-bedroom home in six hours and 55 minutes to show that "the building industry is alive and willing to serve as soon as interest rates go down."

Richard and Mindy Galbraith, the couple who bought the home for $39,500, watched with about 3,000 people as the house began taking form soon after the sound of a starter's gun at 8 a.m. Wednesday.

About 250 professional framers, plumbers, electricians, painters and landscapers erected what was billed as the "World's Fastest House," a 960-square-foot structure with three bedrooms, one bath, a living room, dining room, kitchen and garage.

Four Idaho contractors coordinated the event, hoping to set a record by building a conventional home in six hours. They missed by 55 minutes, 23 seconds.

"We took on the project to let the United States know the building industry is alive and willing to serve as soon as interest rates go down," said Jim Crowe, co-supervisor for the project which has been in the planning stages for a year.

"When the rates go down, many new building techniques will be used to increase the efficiency and quality of home construction.

"The quality is as good as a comparable house usually built in 70 days," he said. "The process has just been accelerated."

Only the cabinets were prefabricated. The rest of the house was built from scratch, Crowe said.

The framing, roof, electrical wiring and plumbing were finished within 90 minutes. The quick-drying cement driveway was poured in the second hour of the job.

To make sure the job went quickly, special quick-dry "mud" for covering drywall irregularities was flown in.

The event was sponsored by the North Idaho Building Contractors' Association in conjunction with the Idaho State Homebuilders and the National Association of Homebuilders.

The Galbraiths were elated when the final nail was hammered.

"The quality is probably better since so many people are involved and watching," Galbraith said. "Everyone is using quality materials and we are getting a lot of extras that we wouldn't be able to afford otherwise."

Among those watching were five building inspectors and three engineers who stood by to approve each step of the construction.

When the final rolls of grass sod were laid and movers placed the last stick of furniture in the "fresh" home, the Galbraiths and other project personnel were treated to a catered meal.

A representative from the Home Owners Warranty Corp. issued a 10-year warranty for the house.

Afterward, Galbraith mowed his new lawn.

Agency rejects findings of marijuana study

NEW YORK (AP) — A new study on marijuana recommends eliminating criminal penalties for possession of the drug, but the federal agency that paid for the study has rejected it, The New York Times reports.

The Times said in Thursday's editions the report by a committee of experts appointed by the National Academy of Sciences was submitted to the National Institute on Drug Abuse late last month but that the agency turned down the committee's recommendations.

The president of the academy, Frank Press, also disagreed with the findings of the committee, saying in a cover letter accompanying the report that the committee "may have gone beyond its charge," the newspaper said.

William Pollin, director of the National Institute on Drug Abuse, was quoted as saying that anything suggesting greater acceptance of the use of marijuana would be "a terrible mistake and a public health tragedy."

The Times said the report holds that removal of criminal penalties on use of marijuana would do little harm and that states that have done so have not seen an increase in use.

Repealing such laws, the report was quoted as saying, could produce substantial savings in the cost of law enforcement and eliminate the "social costs" of arresting 400,000 people annually on marijuana charges.

The committee also said that efforts to control the supply of marijuana are not likely to be effective.

Naturalist wins fight to keep lengthy locks

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A state park naturalist who went to court to fight a dress code for park workers has won the right to keep both his job and his shoulder-length ponytail.

Federal Judge Henry Woods ruled earlier this week that Larry Lowman, 30, cannot be fired for having long hair in violation of the state Parks and Tourism Department's dress code.

Calling the issue "a battle from the past," the judge said the state has no business enforcing a hair code for park naturalists. Appeals courts have consistently struck down hair codes except in cases involving law enforcement agencies, he said.

"I don't regard this man as any kind of policeman," Woods said. "He doesn't have any more power out there than you or I to tell people: 'Don't pick the flowers' or 'Don't kill the mockingbird.'"

Lowman was told he would be fired effective Friday if he didn't get a haircut. He immediately took the matter to federal court, saying his rights had been violated. He was backed by the Arkansas chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Lowman has worked for seven years at Village Creek State Park near Wynne, about 70 miles northeast of Little Rock, and his supervisor called him an excellent employee.

Park Superintendent Lake A. Lewis recently disciplined Lowman for violating the dress code policy adopted in December, but Lewis testified Wednesday that the length of Lowman's hair had no bearing on his job performance.

Lewis said it would be a tragedy to lose Lowman in a dispute over hair length and that Lowman's dismissal would lower morale of park employees statewide.

State officials defended the rule, which created minimum standards of appearance for four categories of uniformed park personnel in management roles.

State Assistant Attorney General Mary Stallcup argued there was an overriding public interest in requiring all uniformed employees of the agency to have shorter hair.

Ambassador confident Shultz will do good job

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israel's ambassador to the United States, Moshe Arens, says he is confident that close U.S.-Israeli relations will continue unaltered after George P. Shultz becomes secretary of state.

Arens says he has been assured that Shultz' Arab business connections will not influence his attitude toward Israel. Shultz was chairman of the Bechtel Group Inc., which is undertaking mammoth construction projects for the Saudi government.

"I have been assured this will not affect policy and his positions," Arens told a small group of reporters. "I don't expect it would. I understand he is a man of great intellectual honesty..."

"I would expect that in his case, as I'm sure is the case with any other man who joins the Cabinet coming from private life...that there will be no coupling at all between his past activities and his role now as secretary of state," he added.

Arens didn't say who had given him assurances about Shultz, but said he hadn't yet talked with Shultz, nominated by Reagan to succeed Alexander M. Haig Jr., who resigned.

Haig had a reputation as Israel's strongest backer in the Reagan administration. Shultz has in the past expressed some reservations about the close U.S. ties to Israel, and suggested the Arab point of view isn't given a fair enough hearing in Washington.

But most Mideast experts do not expect Shultz to try to initiate a significant change in the U.S. policy toward Israel. Even if he were inclined to do so, he would clash with Reagan's own strong pro-Israeli sympathies.

Arens made a similar point in the interview.

"I don't know that things will be identically the same, even though there is a change of actors on the scene," he said. "But underneath it all of course the policy of the United States is one that in the final analysis is determined by the president of the United States.

"That was true in the past when Alexander Haig was secretary of state, and I'm sure its going to be true in the future when Dr. Shultz is going to be secretary of state.

"And the president of the United States as far as I can tell has got a quite clear-cut definitive view and policy (toward Israel) and to the best of my knowledge it is going to continue..."

Shultz' confirmation hearings before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee are scheduled July 13. While some members of the committee have said they will question him closely about his Arab connections and attitude toward Israel, he is expected to be quickly confirmed and could be sworn into office late next week.

Asked if American Jewish organizatins had voiced concern about Shultz, Arens said "not to me."

Although Shultz has been carefully briefed on the Lebanese crisis, Dean Fischer, the State Department spokesman, indicated Thursday he doubted that Shultz has been involved yet in the U.S. policy toward the crisis.

Shultz was at the State Department Thursday.

Arens acknowledged in the interview that some Americans may be disappointed in Israel because of its invasion of Lebanon. But he said they do not understand that "our actions in Lebanon are clearly a defensive action."

Palestinian women and children stand in line Thursday as Red Cross workers distribute food and blankets in the former refugee camp of Rashideyeh, which was destroyed during Israel's invasion of Lebanon. About 7,000 Palestinians have moved back into the rubble-filled area where 24,000 once lived.

Israel dismisses sixth Palestinian official

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) - Israeli authorities today dismissed the Palestinian mayor of Gaza, maintaining its relentless drive against Palestinian nationalism in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Gaza Mayor Rashad a-Shawa, a patrician 73-year-old businessman who was appointed in 1975, became the sixth Palestinian municipal leader to be fired this year.

The mayor of Jenin in the West Bank has also been fired since the Israeli invasion of Lebanon began on June 6, and the Israelis have closed the all-Palestinian university at Bir Zeit after violent anti-Israel demonstrations.

"DISMISSING ME and my type is not going to help solve the Palestinian problem," Shawa told The Associated Press by telephone after the Israeli governor in Gaza, Brig. Gen. Yosef Lunz, fired him for leading a partial strike in Gaza.

"This will make it more complicated. I feel that, together with our right to our own homeland and to self-determination, we (Palestinians) can live peacefully side by side with Israel. Now they (the Israelis) will have to deal with more extreme people in the future," Shawa said.

The Gaza mayor and town council had been on a partial strike for three months, refusing to deal with Israeli authorities, not reporting to their offices and cutting back on development projects while maintaining essential services.

Shawa and his council decided Thursday to reject an Israeli demand that they end the strike.

Unlike the West Bank, where municipal councils and mayors were elected in 1976, Gaza's city leaders were appointed by the Israeli military authorities. Shawa said he accepted the mayorship only because 15,000 Gazans had signed a petition asking him to lead the city.

He had been deputy mayor from 1954 to 1965, when Egypt held the Gaza Strip.

Shawa charged that the Israelis were alienating the Palestinians with tough policies for the two past years.

"And now the attack on Lebanon will make things even more difficult," he said.

Gaza's population of roughly 180,000 makes it the largest city under Israeli occupation. The West Bank and Gaza Strip together have about 1.3 million Palestinian Arabs.

THERE HAVE BEEN sporadic demonstrations in the West Bank to protest the Israeli invasion, but nothing as intense as the series of violent clashes between Palestinian crowds and Israeli troops starting in March when Israel dismissed the radical nationalist mayors of Nablus, Ramallah, El Bireh and Anabta.

"The people are shocked at what is happening in Lebanon," said Raymonda Tawil of Ramallah, a publicist for the Palestinian cause. She said in a telephone interview that morale among West Bank radicals remained high and that they hoped the Palestine Liberation Organization in Beirut would not surrender or lay down its arms.

"We are not cowards, but we have been deserted by our Arab brothers," Mrs. Tawil said, explaining why there has been relatively little street protest in the West Bank as the Israeli army smashed the PLO in southern Lebanon and besieged the PLO's stronghold in west Beirut.

She said the residents of the West Bank had cursed Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy for suggesting that the PLO leadership commit suicide and become martyrs.

"Let him come and commit suicide, that's what we say," Mrs. Tawil said.

A moderate figure, editor Mahmoud Abu Zalaf of the Al Quds newspaper in Arab east Jerusalem, said he hoped the invasion of Lebanon might end in a peaceful compromise that would lead to the PLO becoming a political organization and perhaps winning recognition from the United States.

But Abu Zalaf said he found there was "deep resentment among our people at the invasion."

Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, the architect of the Lebanon invasion, embarked on a drive to eliminate Palestinian nationalism in the West Bank and Gaza early this year, aiming to create a moderate Palestinian leadership that would negotiate the Camp David plan for limited self-rule in the occupied territories.

The pro-PLO nationalists rejected Camp David and called instead for an independent Palestinian state. They refused to deal with the Israeli civil administration, which was installed last November, because they regard it as a stalking horse for imposing limited self-rule.

Soviet forgeries called troublemakers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration says the Soviet Union is apparently forging letters and documents with the signatures of U.S. officials in an effort to create diplomatic problems for the United States.

A State Department official who asked to remain anonymous said Thursday that Soviet forgers were believed to be behind the recent appearance of bogus documents "designed to stir up trouble."

"It is highly probable that they have done this," the official said, adding that the State Department was making the forgeries public in hopes people would "less likely be taken in" by such practices in the future.

Among examples of forgeries he cited was a letter supposedly sent by President Reagan to Spain's King Juan Carlos last Oct. 23 that said it was urgent that Spain join NATO and proposed ways for the king to counter domestic opposition.

The official said the letter was distributed twice, once through the mail to Spanish journalists, who apparently ignored it, and a second time to delegates to the Conference of Security and Cooperation in Europe in Madrid last November.

After the second distribution, several Madrid newspapers ran stories exposing the letter as a forgery, "probably of Soviet origin," the State Department official said.

Another forged document attributed to the Soviet Union was a letter allegedly from former Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. to Joseph Luns, secretary general of NATO, discussing ways of neutralizing the anti-nuclear movement in Europe.

Although the letter was expertly done, one obvious mistake was that it was addressed "Dear Joseph" instead of "Joe" — the way Haig would have addressed the NATO official, according to the official.

Union members sentenced to jail

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Martial law courts sentenced 16 members of the suspended Solidarity trade union to prison terms of up to five years for underground activities, the official news agency PAP said today.

Terms for five of the defendants were suspended. PAP said the sentences were handed down last month, but did not indicate when the violations occurred.

Quoting the Supreme Military Prosecutor, PAP said a Warsaw military court sentenced three workers at a gear factory in Gorzyce, southeast Poland, to terms ranging from three and one-half to five years for disseminating underground Solidarity papers and conducting other union activities.

Five men in the Swiebodzice region of southeastern Poland received prison terms ranging from four to six years for leading an association called "Underground Solidarity of Swiebodzin Land," PAP said.

Three others received three-year terms for participating in the organization and five others got suspended sentences, PAP said.

Hundreds of Solidarity union activists and members have been sent to jail or given suspended sentences for continuing union activities banned since martial law was declared Dec. 13. Most of the leaders of Solidarity, the first independent trade union in the Soviet bloc, were rounded up and ordered in internment camps after the crackdown was ordered by Premier Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski.

PAP also said that two workers in the railroad district of Gdansk received prison terms.

Speakes says offer stands despite Brezhnev

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a warning from Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev against sending U.S. troops into Lebanon, U.S officials say the Marines would be dispatched if all sides in the crisis agree to their presence.

Asked Thursaay about Brezhnev's warning, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the United States remained committed to its offer of peacekeeping troops for war-torn Lebanon.

The Soviet president delivered the admonition in a letter to President Reagan.

At the State Department, spokesman Dean Fischer said the Brezhnev warning by itself was not sufficient to derail the U.S. offer of troops to help oversee evacuation of Palestine Liberation Organization forces from west Beirut.

However, Henry Catto, a Pentagon spokesman, said Thursday that he doubted the parties involved would be able to agree on ground rules permitting up to 1,000 U.S. troopa to go into Lebanon.

"I doubt that it can be arranged," Catto said at a briefing, stressing that it is a "hellishly complicated situation" with many angles yet to be worked out.

"Everything could fall in place or everything could fall apart," Catto said. "We just don't know...We are a long way from a decision to go in."

Catto's remarks came a few hours after the contents of the Brezhnev letter were revealed. But Catto gave no indication that his assessment of the situation was related to the Brezhnev message.

Killing 'kiddie porn'

Not all that long ago Bruce Taylor, a noted pornography prosecutor from Phoenix, Ariz., was in Odessa to speak to Odessans for Decency, a pornography-fighting group. What Mr. Taylor said was enlightening about the way society has responded to pornography in general and child pornography specifically.

"It's this country's fault that child pornography is around because we didn't care whether they were making movies with teenagers in it, so why would it surprise anybody that the pornographers would start using kids?" Taylor explained.

"They were lousy people when they were making porn 15 years ago and they're still lousy now. You can't expect anything better from those kinds of people. They're animals, they're criminals, they couldn't care less about the community and they certainly couldn't care less about the First Amendment."

Fortunately somebody does care. The members of Odessans for Decency care, along with millions of other Americans who will not sit idly by as children are indecently exploited. And now the U.S. Supreme Court, too, has shown that its heart is in the right place on the issue of "Kiddie pornography."

Late last week the high court unanimously upheld a New York law which makes it a crime to promote sexual performances by children, even though those performances are not determined to be legally definable as obscene. What that ruling means for Texas and 19 other states is that their statutes prohibiting child pornography are valid and legally enforceable.

The pornographers undoubtedly will scream that the First Amendment protections afforded the press have been abridged and that this encroachment on freedom of the press only will lead to others. Hogwash!

The First Amendment, while being a cherished and valued protection for the liberties of millions of Americans, has been abused by those who sought to prey on the depravity of people who never were intended to hide behind it while exploiting youngsters with no real means of protecting themselves.

Child pornography has been a national disgrace. But now the Supreme Court has given the American public the means to stamp out that shame. People throughout tha nation, like the members of Odessans for Decency and others in Midland who have been repulsed by this constitutional loophole for pornographers, can and should rejoice at the ruling and take the steps to wipe out this exploitation once and for all.

Food stamp reform

Even the most staunch defenders of the Food Stamp program will find it hard to argue with the Department of Agriculture's proposal to stiffen the penalties for people who abuse their "entitlement" to the stamps.

Those convicted in court or at an administrative hearing of obtaining an allotment of stamps through "intentional misrepresentation or fraud" would be disqualified from the program for six months. A second offense would suspend them for one year. A third offense would bar them permanently from receiving the stamps. As it is, the minimum penalty for fraud is a three-month suspension, and the maximum a two-year suspension.

The new rules would make the point that there is a limit to the public's patience with food stamp cheaters. Anyone who persists in lying to obtain this grocery subsidy would be barred from the program altogether.

It is significant that the proposed new rules come from the Agriculture Department, which is supposed to be helping the nation's farmers, not policing a welfare program. The job of bringing food stamps under control — a goal of the government for several years — would be easier if the program were woven into the public welfare system.

The program currently is one of those under consideration for a new distribution of welfare responsibilities between the federal and state governments. Whether Washington keeps it, or the states take it on, a first step would be to acknowledge that food stamps should not have been made a responsibility of the Agriculture Department in the first place.

Another View:

Reagan only stumbled

President Reagan teetered a few times at his press conference the other night as he paced off the line on U.S. policy in Lebanon, but in the end he didn't stray and he didn't fall and he got to where he wanted to go without too much trouble.

Reagan personally reaffirmed what have been stated American policy goals — and Israeli ones — since Israel's invading army swept well beyond the line 25 miles into Lebanon that was said to be its original goal. The United States wants all foreign troops withdrawn from the country. It wants to see full Lebanese sovereignty restored. It wants to assure that in the future northern Israel will be safe from cross-border attacks.

The closest the president came to responding to repeated invitations to criticize Israeli actions was in saying that the United States wanted "and believed there could have been" a diplomatic solution to head off the Israeli invasion. For the rest, he made it clear that American objectives in Lebanon in the post-invasion period coincide with those of Israel.

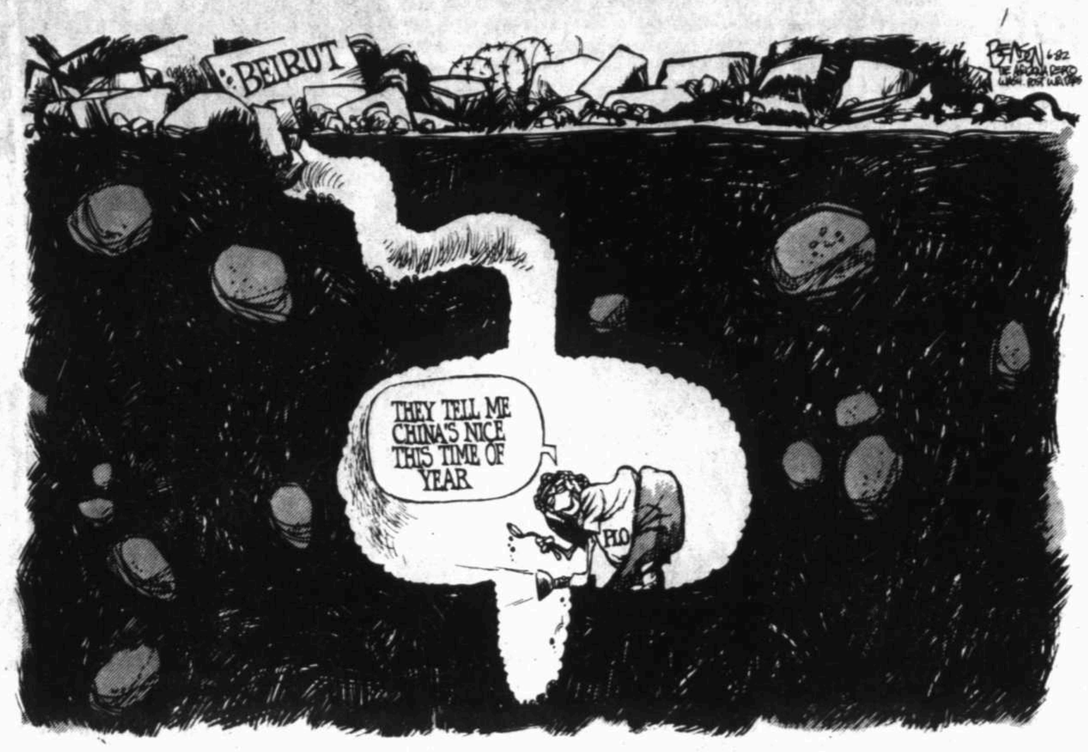

One of those objectives is getting the Palestine Liberation Organization's armed forces out of West Beirut. The sticking point is over how, and how soon that can be done. We trust that the United States has privately told Israel in strong terms not to invade the capital, since the human and political consequences of such an attack in an area of dense civilian population would push American tolerance of Israeli actions past the breaking point. But Reagan backed away from an earlier White House statement that Israel had promised not to enter West Beirut. In the process, he added to the pressure on the PLO to stop stalling in the withdrawal negotiations.

Lebanon's main political factions, though they are divided on just about everything else, are united in wanting the PLO out of Beirut. Without a PLO withdrawal, there is virtually no chance that the Lebanese can again become the political masters of their own house. But Lebanon's army and its political leaders are too weak by themselves to force the PLO out, and most of them aren't eager to have Israel do the job for them, even if Israel were willing to pay the costs involved.

That leaves it up to negotiations. The PLO is, we think, courting disaster if it deludes itself that dragging out these talks will in time bring it rescue from the outside. For the PLO, the only outside power that counts now is the United States, which is using its good offices to obtain for it a safe withdrawal from Beirut, and survival.

The president made clear what American policy objectives in Lebanon are. The significance of that message should not be lost on the PLO.

— The Los Angeles Times

CHARLEY REESE

Americans not yet ready to give up

It's good to see the good guys winning, for a change, in Hollywood. The list of box office smashes is remarkable for the number of wholesome movies on it.

Charley Reese

Steven Spielberg's "E.T." is a lovely and loving movie; Sylvester Stallone's "Rocky III" is a knockout. Both movies reflect a positive and heroic view of human beings just as did "Chariots of Fire," which won the Academy Award for Best Picture.

Spielberg and George Lucas, two cinematic geniuses who teamed together to do "Raiders of the Lost Ark," are men who seem untainted by the cynicism and decadence that turned Hollywood into an assembly line for garbage.

In Stallone's Rocky triology there isn't a single cruel or evil person. You come out of a Rocky film with the feeling that the world, as Stallone sees it, is a world of conflict and challenge but a world peopled by essentially decent human beings.

Clint Eastwood is another man who belongs on the list of successful good guys. Eastwood's movies, while dealing with violence and profanity, also always project a view of mankind as competent and moral — able to overcome evil.

So what? So the massive outpouring of people to see these kinds of movies tells you that the American people are turning away from the defeatist cynicism of the 1970s. That's a sign of a nation regaining its mental health and spirit.

Just as every artistic work inescapably reflects the soul and outlook of its creator, the response to an artistic work reflects the soul and outlook of the viewer. When audiences respond to achievement, triumph, heroic effort, and courage, they are telling you that these are qualities they value and admire.

Intellectuals who, for the most part, are cynical and defeatist, like to brand this form of art as escapist. Their message is that in the real world none of these virtues exist. Therefore, according to them, the true works of art are those films which depict people as weak and corrupt and beaten down by forces beyond their control.

But Lucas, Stallone, Spielberg and Eastwood are not only providing Americans with heroic art, they are themselves living examples of successful men whose courage, effort and intelligence produced success.

Lucas and Spielberg had the courage to produce movies the smart set in Hollywood said would flop and they continue to go their own way and are now being imitated by their former scoffers.

Stallone's success is no less an Horatio Alger epic than his fictional character, Rocky. He, too, is a man who had faith in his own ability and the determination to pursue his own goals despite scoffers and unbelievers.

Clint Eastwood is a former swimming pool digger who taught himself not only the actor's craft but also the ins and outs of an industry and has become a world class star in the face of positively hostile critics.

As a nation, we could well do without most of the so-called intellectuals. To borrow a phrase from Gordon Liddy, with the price of ammunition up to 27 cents a round, most of them are not worth blowing away.

They spend most of their time telling us how bad we are, how corrupt and inefficient our institutions are, how dark the future is, how reasonable the Soviets are. Their messages always translate into, "Give up."

Giving up, however, is un-American and the fact that intellectuals have been generally held in low esteem is not an indictment of Americans but a credit to their perceptiveness and common sense.

We are not yet Rome. We are not yet ready to let our freedom slip through our fingers while we gorge on food, drink ourselves mindless, and wallow in pornography. We are not yet ready to be overwhelmed by our problems or defeated by poor leadership.

As Rocky would say, Americans still have the "eye of the tiger."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Were Soviets quietened by Israeli might?

WASHINGTON — The Russians did their usual huffing and puffing over the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, but never went beyond rhetorical flourishes.

Jack Anderson

My intelligence sources tell me this may have been because Soviet leaders were afraid the Israeli war machine was too strong for the kind of limited intervention that was the Kremlin's only real option. Or, as Marx might have put it (Groucho, that is), the big bully was confronted by a little bully and didn't want to risk a bloody nose.

As soon as Israeli tanks crossed the Lebanese border, the Soviets put their forces in the Middle East on full alert. This included the Soviets' Mediterranean fleet and an airborne division in the Caspian area, a few hundred miles north of Lebanon.

Except for a few alarmists, State Department and CIA analysts discounted the Soviet alert as a prelude to direct intervention in support of the Soviet-supplied Syrians and Palestinians.

They pointed out that this would be unprecedented. Previous Soviet intervention — in Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Afghanistan and Poland — has been confined to countries that are not only contiguous to the Soviet Union, but already within the Kremlin's orbit. Soviet military meddling elsewhere, as in Angola and Ethiopia, has been done by the Russians' Cuban and East German surrogates.

The experts' complacency was jarred by an ominous Kremlin communique on June 14: "The Soviet Union takes the Arabs' side not in words but in deeds, and presses to get the aggressor out of Lebanon. The present-day Israeli policy-makers should not forget that the Middle East is in an area lying in close proximity to the southern borders of the Soviet Union, and that developments there cannot help affecting the interests of the U.S.S.R. We warn Israel about this."

The intelligence community began to take a second look at its information on the Soviet military alert. They noted that the Soviet Navy's squadron in the eastern Mediterranean had been beefed up by the addition of some surface warships, and that a Soviet airborne division in the Caspian area had been put on "special alert."

In fact, they knew, the Soviets had already expanded their military forces in areas looking out Russia's "southern window" toward the Persian Gulf. A recent highly sensitive Pentagon report seen by my associate Dale Van Atta supplied the figures:

"A large increase has taken place in the Soviet forces located in the nearby Caucasus and Turkestan Military Districts. Twenty-six ground divisions, with 250,000 men on active duty, are now located in those districts and in Afghanistan."

The report also noted the presence in this Soviet force of "first-category airborne divisions" and, most significantly, a "command and control capability necessary to conduct large-scale military operations."

It seemed, as a State Department analysis put it, that Soviet intervention in Lebanon "becomes a distinct likelihood ... in the event of a serious threat to the Syrian government."

So why didn't the Soviets make their move? Intelligence experts offered several reasons. One was that the Palestinians themselves would have been unhappy about direct Soviet intervention. Another was that the Kremlin lacked a solid pretext for armed intervention.

But the most interesting explanation is that the Russians were leery of risking an embarrassing military defeat at the hands of Israel. For example, an airborne invasion would require Soviet control of the air. But destruction of the Syrians' entire surface-to-air missile strength had given Israel total air superiority.

In short, a modest "police action" could be disastrous for the Soviets, and the Kremlin was not prepared to escalate into a full-scale war with Israel. So it settled for bombast instead of bombs.

ENDANGERED SHRINES: In addition to other forms of persecution over the years, American Indians have suffered from misunderstanding and intolerence of their "heathen" religious practices. To remedy this, Congress in 1978 passed a law guaranteeing that the religious customs of native Americans would be respected.

The law called for a study to suggest policy changes that would secure the Indians' religious freedom. The study was completed in 1979, and a draft executive order was prepared.

Not a single recommendation of the study has been acted upon, and the executive order draft is gathering dust in the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Of particular concern are the estimated 25,000 sites sacred to Indians. They could be destroyed by development of federal lands where they are located.

A BIA official suggested that Indian leaders prepared a study of the sacred sites — a process that would take years. But because they are sacred sites, Indian rights leaders say, their locations cannot be divulged.

PIPE DREAMS: In preparation for a nuclear war, the government has been quietly stockpiling tons of opium — the drug believed most effective in relieving the excruciating pain of large radiation doses. Congressional sources say about 30,000 pounds of opium "gum" have been stored by the General Services Administration, along with 40,000 pounds of longer-lasting opium "salts." The experts say another 90,000 pounds of opium salts is needed to meet the government's goal — enough, presumably, to turn every fallout shelter into an opium den.

INSIDE REPORT:

Haig's style proved his stumbling block

WASHINGTON — A quick end to Alexander Haig's tenure as secretary of state was signaled no later than mid-April in confidential advice to Capitol Hill from national security aide William P. Clark.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

A conservative Republican leader had complained to Clark that Haig was becoming intolerable on East-West questions. The response from Clark, totally unexpected by the complaining conservative, was to this effect: Don't worry about Al; he'll be gone in two months.

Clark did not quite meet that deadline. But his forecast was made well in advance of the issues that finally made Haig Reagan's first Cabinet dropout. Haig fell less because of internal disagreements on issues than as a result of his style — specifically his determination to be Reagan's "vicar" of foreign policy.

That Haig would not be around for the rest of the year was clear to the Reagan inner circle in early June when the president would not permit Jeane Kirkpatrick to resign as U.N. ambassador as suggested by Haig. The proximate cause of Haig's demise was Reagan's move for stiffer sanctions against the Soviet Union on the Siberian natural gas pipeline question in the secretary of state's absence and against his wishes.

But his fate was sealed, ironically, at the beginning of the year when Haig's enemy, Richard V. Allen, was forced out of the national security slot at the White House and replaced by Haig's friend, Judge Clark. That was thought to be a coup for Haig, cementing his vicarship.

But Clark was Ronald Reagan's chief of staff 16 years before he was Al Haig's deputy secretary of state. Insiders who knew Clark's character predicted that once in the White House, he would not tolerate Haig's insistence on overriding everybody — including the president himself — on policy questions.

Haig's central role in the Anglo-Argentine Falklands crisis might have saved him for a few weeks. But his celebrated telephone blowup over Argentina with Kirkpatrick ended the stay of execution. At Haig's suggestion, she submitted her resignation to Reagan. The president refused it, a step interpreted inside the White House to mean Haig was gone.

The Haig-Clark friction grew more open during Reagan's European tour, leading to the president's June 18 stand in Washington against the Yamal pipeline during a meeting not attended by Haig. The secretary was outraged that a step so antagonistic to NATO alliance partners should be taken in the wake of Reagan's trip during which there was no hint of tightening the screws.

Characteristically, State Department bureaucrats privately reacted to the president's decision by pledging that the sanctions ultimately would be watered down below the point of recognition. That attitude was what Clark was talking about when he predicted to the congressional Republican leader that Haig would fall. It happened last week when Haig pressed his unhappiness over what Reagan had done.

At the end, Haig was alone. White House chief of staff James Baker considered him a disruptive force from the first day of the administration. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger had clashed with him on almost everything. Even easy-going Vice President George Bush went semi-public this month in complaining about Haig's pro-Israel tilt. "Good riddance," said one senior presidential aide in reaction to Haig's departure, typifying the holiday mood at the White House.

Secretary-designate George Shultz will satisfy all of Haig's internal enemies who wanted no vicarates in Foggy Bottom. But he is not all that reassuring to Haig's anti-communist critics inside and outside the administration.

Back in 1980 transition days, these anti-detentists had come down hard against Shultz and in favor of Haig for secretary of state. They have grown so disenchanted by Haig deferring to Europe and the State Department bureaucracy that many consider any change welcome relief. Yet, they still harbor reservations about Shultz as a cold warrior.

Whatever his true inclinations, Shultz — based on his Nixon-Ford Cabinet record — can be expected to fight his battles quietly on the inside and ultimately defer to the president's judgment. If foreign policy remains Europeanist and detentist, it will be Ronald Reagan's responsibility and not that of a vicar down the street. And that is clearly what Judge Clark has had in mind for some time.

Synanon often involved in litigation

By CHARLES P. WALLACE
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — An extraordinary reunion took place here recently. Over a smorgasbord of tamales, sushi and beer, the group of men and women came together to exchange family stories and reminisce about their experiences in a lawsuit that unfolded over four years in the California civil courts.

Most of the guests were jurors or alternates in the case, but what made the party extraordinary was the presence of the two lawyers who represented what became, in effect, the losing side in the suit.

The two men, Robert Fremlin and Tris Brown, defended the American Broadcasting Co. in a $42 million slander suit brought against the network-owned local station, KGO-TV, by the Synanon Foundation, the controversial drug-rehabilitation group.

After four months of trial that began in February, ABC quietly settled the lawsuit out of court by paying Synanon $1.25 million, the largest defamation settlement in the history of American law.

The defense cost an estimated $7 million, one of the most expensive legal bills ever tendered for this kind of case. That fact alone was enough to make proprietors of news organizations across the country shudder in horror.

BUT PERHAPS the most extraordinary thing of all was the realization that at the moment ABC tossed in the legal towel and gave up, it appeared to be well on its way toward winning the suit, the jurors told Fremlin and Brown.

"I knew ABC would have won the trial," juror Nicole Hidalgo recalled later.

The decision to settle, which was never explained because of an agreement not to discuss the case, stunned ABC's lawyers, the judge, and probably most of all, KGO's reporters.

"I had to go through all that hell and now I feel left to twist slowly in the wind by ABC," said Joyce Shank, a KGO reporter who worked on the Synanon story and was fired by the station in what she described as an unrelated matter before the trial began. "This wasn't what I was taught...this wasn't America."

The strange turn of events has also raised questions about the role of insurance companies in libel cases that involve First Amendment issues (ABC at one point sued its insurance company over the case) and the commitment of a broadcast network to journalistic principle when the price tag is breathtakingly high.

"To hear of a media organization as rich as ABC settling a Synanon case by 'mutual agreement' and refusing to comment further, cannot help but raise questions about the network's commitment to ruggedly independent journalism," commented Norman E. Isaacs, the chairman of the National News Council, a press watchdog group that conducted a critical study of Synanon's relations with the media in 1980.

THE SETTLEMENT was disturbing to other journalists who have covered Synanon closely over the years. Dave Mitchell, who won the Pulitzer Prize for public service in 1979 for Synanon articles at the weekly Point Reyes Light and has since been sued by the group, commented that "Synanon does the one thing that really affects the owners of the news media. It makes them afraid for their money."

Philip C. Bourdette, Synanon's general counsel, said he could not comment on the settlement. But he said he was happy with the outcome of the case.

Synanon was founded by Charles Dederich in 1958 as a small, nonprofit center for the rehabilitation of alcoholics and drug addicts. Within a few years, the organization had gained an international reputation for its successes and had expanded its facilities throughout the country.

By the late 1970s, however, word began filtering out of the group about changes in the organization's direction. While Synanon still cared for drug addicts, its ranks were increased by a number of non-addicts who became known as "life stylers." The group became an organized religion, its members were encouraged to change marriage partners, and men were urged to get vasectomies.

There were also increasing reports that Synanon, responding to what it perceived as threats against members, was turning to violence. There were lawsuits charging that Synanon members had beaten visitors and neighbors near its Northern California facilities.

The reports reached a dramatic climax — and brought national notoriety for Synanon — when in October 1978, Los Angeles lawyer Paul Morantz, who had obtained a default judgment in a lawsuit against Synanon, was bitten by a rattlesnake placed in his mailbox.

TWO MEMBERS of Synanon's "Imperial Marines" pleaded no contest to charges of conspiracy to commit murder and assault with a deadly weapon in the attack. Dederich, the organization's founder, at the same time pleaded no contest to charges of conspiring to commit murder.

In January 1978, San Francisco station KGO-TV began a series of news broadcasts about Synanon's reported purchase of a large quantity of arms and ammunition.

During part of the reports, the station used a graphic background which had been traced from a photograph of Lee Harvey Oswald, the assassin of President Kennedy, holding a rifle and joined with the Synanon emblem. Newscaster Fred Van Amburg also alleged that Dederich was under investigation for skimming funds from Synanon.

KGO-TV broadcast a retraction of the skimming allegations two days later, but in March, Synanon filed the suit alleging that the station had slandered Synanon and Dederich with five broadcasts dealing with the weapons purchases, the Oswald drawing and the allegation of skimming. It asked for $21 million each for Synanon and Dederich.

By the time the KGO broadcasts were aired, Synanon had been the subject of increasingly critical reporting by other news organizations. Synanon had also begun to fight back with lawsuits accusing some of the news media of distributing defamatory information about the group.

IN 1972, the San Francisco Examiner published an expose about Synanon that contained a number of errors. Synanon sued for libel and won an out-of-court settlement from the paper's parent Hearst Corp. for $600,000, at that time the largest libel settlement in history.

Later Hearst paid Synanon a reported $2 million to settle another suit in which it was alleged that men hired by Hearst had broken into Dederich's office and taken some of his taped recordings.

In December 1977, Time magazine published a one-page article about Synanon under the headline, "Life at Synanon Is Swinging; A Once Respected Drug Program Turns into a Kooky Cult," which detailed some of the life-style changes that had taken place in the organization. Synanon sued Time for $76.75 million.

After spending a total of $2 million in legal fees, Time was able to have most of the charges thrown out of court. Synanon later dropped the suit against the magazine and reportedly paid Time a large settlement.

In the preparation of its defense, Time's lawyers amassed documents from Synanon's files that showed that Synanon was engaged in what one Synanon memo called a "Holy War" against Time. The magazine said the campaign was part of a deliberate effort to intimidate news coverage of Synanon.

One tape recording submitted to the court by Time involved a conversation between Dederich and Dan L. Garrett, then Synanon's chief counsel, who has since left the organization.

ACCORDING TO A transcript of the conversation, Garrett told Dederich: "There could be good money in libel..." To which Dederich reportedly responded: "Maybe you could do the whole thing on Xerox, and mimeograph, you know. Just have forms so, so that we could just file a case. You know, have some legal secretary knock off a libel action in about 45 minutes and that'd be it."

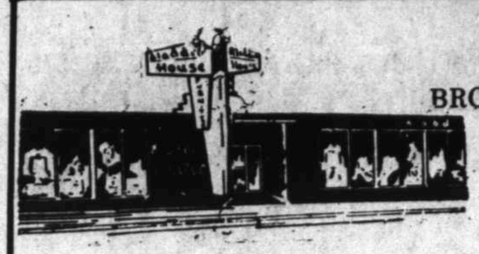

"They were very thorough litigants who were very frustrating to litigate against," said Frederick A.O. Schwarz Jr., who headed Time's defense for the New York law firm of Cravath, Swaine and Moore. "The result of our case is a very telling result," he said, adding that it was rare that the defendant in a libel suit ends up getting paid by the plaintiff.

An armed guard and a guard dog keep watch over the ruins of Sheik Mohammad al Fassi's Beverly Hills mansion in this January 1982 file photo. Saudi prince 'stranger in strange land'

By RANDALL HACKLEY

MIAMI (AP) — Once upon a time in this land of sun and palms, a Saudi prince and his wife's family rolled in on a carpet of wealth. They didn't receive a royal welcome.

Instead, these members of the Saudi royal family became involved in lawsuits, countersuits, police raids, money giveaways and even an allegation of enslavement that have kept them in the media spotlight.

The most prominent of the controversial visitors has been Prince Turki bin Abdul Aziz, a nephew of the late King Khaled, who has sued 12 members of the Metro Dade (Miami) Police Department for $210 million.

Abdul Aziz, 44, said the police acted "outrageously" when they burst into his bayfront condominium on Feb. 26 to search for an Egyptian nanny allegedly being held against her will.

Police, who had a warrant, failed to find the woman but encountered fierce resistance from the prince's bodyguards. One officer was felled by a kick in the groin. Another injured her head in a fall and said her wrist was slammed in a door by the prince's mother-in-law who allegedly bit a detective's hand.

Abdul Aziz's 25-year-old wife, Princess Hend, angered when the policewoman searched her mother's room, reportedly spit at police and shouted: "Out! Out of my house! I will break your nose!"

Police and prosecutors now say the prince — who returned home last month for Khaled's funeral — is a "stranger in a strange land," and is snubbing the law and his American welcome. The police officers countersued.

Before his departure, the prince and his family sought to end the suit, but the police officers refused.

Police pressed prosecutors to file assault charges. Dade State Attorney Janet Reno wrote federal officials in Washington saying the prince's claim to diplomatic immunity was "a sham."

However, on April 2, the State Department granted diplomatic immunity to Abdul Aziz, who was a Saudi deputy defense minister in the mid-1970s.

In May, the prince offered $100,000 to police if they would drop their countersuit. It was rejected.

Abdul Aziz and two brothers-in-law then began a two-month series of contributions to local hospitals, universities and cultural boards. Some $500,000 was donated. On June 7, the prince dropped his suit.

Abdul Aziz isn't the only member in his family to attract attention.

One of his brothers-in-law, Sheik Mohammed al Fassi, was arrested Tuesday in his suite at the luxury Diplomat Hotel in Hollywood, Fla. The hotel says al Fassi ran up a $1.5 million tab for the months of May and June and hasn't paid.

He was charged with defrauding an innkeeper, a third-degree felony. He posted bond of $1,000 and was released, pending an appearance.

Al Fassi had rented two floors of the posh, beachfront hotel for himself, one of his wives, four children and an extensive entourage.

A spokesman for the sheik blamed the unpaid bill problem on the Moslem practice of remaining inactive during the holy period of Ramadan, the distraction of Khaled's recent death and overcharging by the hotel.

The 28-year-old al Fassi, with a fortune estimated at $6 billion, has other problems. He has been sued for divorce by first wife, Dena, who hired celebrity divorce specialist Marvin Mitchelson to seek half her husband's net worth.

His Beverly Hills, Calif., mansion — decorated in garish colors and discreetly painted nude statues — was ruined by an arsonist two years ago.

He also upset Florida residents last year when he hired half the Hollywood police force for round-the-clock protection at the Diplomat.

Hollywood Police Chief Sam Martin halted the $11-an-hour moonlighting, saying some workers were so tired from their extra jobs they fell asleep at work.

Last year, al Fassi's son, Turki, had a fourth birthday, so the proud father recruited the children of 20 Hollywood city officials to serve as friends for a day. He spent a reported $150,000 on the party, including rental of an 85-foot yacht and $100 tips for attending adults.

More recently, al Fassi kept officials in the Miami suburb of Opa-locka waiting nearly three hours in the rain until he and a retinue of 26 arrived to present a $30,000 check to the city which has a faded Arab motif and a city hall which resembles a mosque. The sheik says he became lost driving through the city.

His 19-year-old brother, Tarek al Fassi, flies by helicopter from his fan-shaped estate in Golden Beach to classes and soccer practice at Florida International University.

Last month, the teen-ager was forced to come up with $21,000 after a local car company put a lien on his $78,000 Lamborghini when the youth refused to pay for repairs.

Aspirin improves outcome of coronary operation

BOSTON (AP) — Another new use for ordinary aspirin has been discovered by Mayo Clinic doctors, who found the medicine significantly improves the outcome of coronary bypass surgery.

In recent years, researchers have found evidence the everyday pain medicine prevents strokes and heart attacks.

A report in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine said aspirin also keeps blood flowing smoothly through the newly mended arteries of heart patients who undergo coronary bypass surgery.

This operation is performed to relieve angina, a chest pain caused by restricted flow of blood to the heart. It occurs when the arteries that feed the heart become clogged.

Surgeons use pieces of vein to route blood around the blocked arteries. However, the new blood vessels often become plugged with clots in the days after the operation.

The experimental treatment, directed by Dr. J.H. Chesebro, was "extremely effective" in keeping the repaired arteries open, the doctors wrote.

The therapy involved aspirin and another drug called dipyridamole, which improves blood flow in the coronary arteries. Patients began taking dipyridamole two days before their surgery and they got their first dose of aspirin seven hours afterward.

In all, 407 patients took either aspirin and dipyridamole or inactive substitutes called placebos. Within a month of the surgery, at least one artery graft was clogged in 8 percent of the aspirin patients and in 21 percent of those who took placebos.

Aspirin works by interfering with the function platelets, blood cells that clump together to form clots.

Old surfers never die — they keep on surfing

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — "Virtually everybody knew guys like Dewey Weber and Skip Frye. They were legendary figures with recognizable name value. They were heroes. They had a mystique.

Jeff Duclos, with some 2,000 other fans, was eyeing the Manhattan Beach breakers, watching the surfers cut gracefully through the waves at an "old-timers" contest in May on their long boards, some longer than nine feet.

"Today's emphasis is on short boards (six feet or less). The style is competitive, very aggressive, a lot of quick turning. It's sort of staccato. I think it's lost a sense of fun. I don't know if that's typical of society or its pace or what," said Duclos.

TRYING TO DESCRIBE to non-surfers what surfing means to the "lifers" is like trying to describe the color turquoise to a blind man.

The early surfers found self-esteem in the sport. (However, most of them insist they are legends because they are "old," 40 and over). Despite societal pressures to get respectable jobs and buy homes in suburbia, they stayed in the water.

SURFING WAS WHAT THEY DID BEST, much as others showed talent for math or English. But the others became scientists, teachers, members of professions lauded by their parents and peers.

The young surfers grew up to be old surfers.

When they aren't surfing, they're somehow promoting it. They don't feel a need to apologize.

The ocean may be temperamental or calm, but the varied moods are all familiar to them. It is a one-on-one encounter between the man and the wave. Anyone who rides a wave and wonders how he looks to other people is not one with himself or the sea. He is a performer who will one day let his act exhaust him. Then he will quit.

That is what the old-timers say.

THE SENIOR SURFERS respect one another's feelings. Observers have seen veterans kick out of a wave and ruin their own rides rather than run into an absorbed comrade.

They worry about kids surfing today. They worry about localism, about the aggressive, superficial surfing style. They wonder why kids try to conquer or manipulate waves rather than commune with them.

They have mixed emotions about big money competitions. Their message to the young is "Relax. Look at yourself. Have more fun."

They have retained a sense of warmth and humor. And hey, long boards — and fathers — are coming back.

"TI'S BEEN GOING ON for a year or so and coming on stronger. Guys jogging down the beach see guys surfing on longer, lightweight boards and they're thinking 'I used to do that.'" Weber, sponsor of the Long Board Classic in Manhattan Beach and a surfer for 37 years, was watching his peers engage in lighthearted competition on long boards (nine feet or more).

"Jogging is so boring, you know. You can get in 20 minutes' surfing the exercise you get in three hours of jogging.

"The guy who used to surf and quit because society demanded that he go out and earn a living for his children, he's maybe got the color TV and the two cars. He's joined middle-class America and he's what they call successful. His kids are saying, 'Hey Pop, I heard you used to surf. We've heard ya bragging. Come on let's go out.'

"Every day I got a guy coming into my (Hermosa Beach) surf shop who hasn't surfed in 10 years saying, 'Help, what do I do?'

"With the economy, they're not going to Mammoth or Palm Springs. As long as the ocean is there, some 50-year-old kid is going to want to play in it."

WEBER, A STOCKY, ENERGETIC MAN with lively eyes and sun-bleached hair, who still gets the board out almost every day, started surfing when he was 11 and became a world champion "hot dog." He helped perfect stunts like cutbacks, going left into the curl and turning right, walking the board, nose-riding and roller coastering.

His ability to maneuver even on Hawaii's big waves earned him the nickname "Little Man on Wheels." To many in the '50s, his style seemed showoffish.

"THE CLASSIC HAWAIIAN STYLE was still dominant," he recalls. "You were suppposed to stand as erect and still as possible. It was considered dynamic. I had tried it, but it became boring. I wanted to push my limits and get as much out of the wave as I possibly could from start to finish.

"I was doing those things when Skip (Frye) was a little kid. And then Skip, and his friend Mike Hynson, who rode for me and rode my surfboards when they were coming up being young hot stars, they were the next generation. That's kind of how the whole thing came down.

"It took us years to perfect the fine points, like how Skip finishes a ride. My trademark is snap turning hard and running to the tip. David Nuuhiwa with his definite nose-riding style; nobody can even imitate it. Same with Dale Dobson, the versatility of switch-footing. No one compares."

WITH TODAY'S SHORTER BOARDS, he said, there is less opportunity for style. Short boards require "jerk and slash" movement to keep going and they offer less room for body movement.

"A lot of short-board riders tend to look like every other short-board rider. It's hard to distinguish who's who."

Weber explained that surfing went through a stagnant period and had its downs when equipment was changing from long boards to short boards, to shorter boards, to twin fins and tri-fins and thrusters — a type of sleek, tri-fin board. Now it's stabilized, he said.

WEBER AND HIS WIFE, CAROLINE, have owned the surf shop since 1960. He noted that long boards are coming back in. "We've got 16-year-old kids starting to order them.

"It's socially acceptable again because there is a definite purpose for long boards in slower, mushier waves. You can't ride a short board in the real small waves."

As Weber spoke at the Manhattan Beach tournament the crowd of about 2,000 suddenly let out a collective "ooh" after a long, graceful ride by Dobson.

WEBER RECALLED GOING TO Los Angeles to get a permit for his contest. "I was stuck down there, bumper to bumper, down in the city, you know, all the crap floating around in the air; people in suits and ties, running around. I was in this elevator and there were six men in business suits, about my age, and one looks over at the other one and says, 'Well ah, you been robbing any banks lately or what?'

Charles Berlitz: Man of many words

By MARK ZANGER
Hearst Feature Service

What kind of mind can learn 25 languages?

The mind of Charles Berlitz — language teacher, skin diver, retired spy and amateur archeologist — is like a Victorian museum full of quaint and forgotten lore. To talk with him is to jump from the politics of American Indian tribes to language policy in the Soviet Union to the lost continent of Atlantis to the origin of the Gypsies.

NOT ONLY DID BERLITZ once write a best-seller about the Bermuda Triangle, his mind is like the Bermuda Triangle — full of lost facts and shipwrecked ideas that others might think disappeared without a trace. It leaves him with plenty to talk about.

When a Hare Krishna asked him for a donation recently on a New York street corner, Berlitz offered a sawbuck if the cultist could name the 10 principal incarnations of Vishnu, a little list Berlitz recalled from his religion course at Yale in 1936. "They're not well up on cosmogony," he learned.

HIS NEWEST BOOK, "Native Tongues," is full of language trivia and odd lists. It will appeal to anyone who enjoys the People's Almanac and the Guiness Book of World Records.

Berlitz begins the book with an account of his experimental education. "I learned four different languages at the same time, each exclusively spoken to me by different members of my family."

HE STILL THINKS this is a good way to look at language, although at the time he assumed that if grandfather spoke to him in German, mother in French, father in English and the maid in Spanish, then everyone must have his or her own language. Fortunately, he says, he noticed that most grown-ups talk to one another in a common language.

He believes that eight words in each of 26 languages is enough to "establish an initial communications breakthrough anywhere in the world."

AS A LANGUAGE TEACHER and author of over a hundred textbooks, Berlitz learned several thousand words in each of the world's most spoken languages: Mandarin Chinese, Japanese, Arabic, Indonesian, Hindi, Russian, Swahili, Portuguese. He learned "the small ones" for the army — Vietnamese, Thai, Lao, Turkish, Lingala, Somali, Hausa.

In 1967, Berlitz ended all connection with the language schools founded by his grandfather. He either quit or was fired, but won a seven-year legal battle for the right to use his name on his books. His writing shifted to books on Atlantis, the Bermuda Triangle, underwater archeology and the tendency for many prophecies of doom to center on the decade 1990-2000.

IN "NATIVE TONGUES," Berlitz soft-pedals his more unconventional theories, but includes fascinating word similarities between European, Asian and American Indian languages to support the idea of American colonists living here before Columbus.

Not surprisingly, Berlitz favors bilingualism, and thinks the United States should "work it out like the Swiss or the Belgians."

WHY DON'T MORE PEOPLE speak more languages?

"The main obstacle is taking a chance. Most people are happy to hear even a few words of their own language. One language that does a lot of good in American life right now is Greek. Even in a French restaurant, if you can ask, 'Are you sure there are no tables?' in Greek, it's to your advantage."

Churchmen put 'how to' before 'I do'

By ROBERT DI VEROLI
Copley News Service

Getting married in a church these days isn't as easy as it used to be.

A growing number of churches, in response to a divorce rate nearly triple what it was 20 years ago, have tightened their premarital counseling requirements.

ROMAN CATHOLICS, who always required a waiting period of about a month, have extended that to three months, and even to six months in some dioceses.

In general, liberal and evangelical Protestant churches leave the matter of premarital counseling to individual pastors, but most clergymen say they spend more time than they used to on marriage preparation.

"I'm amazed at the change in, say, the last 10 years in this regard, with so many more evangelical churches going into premarital counseling and even post-marital counseling," the Rev. Dr. Howard Hendricks of Dallas Theological Seminary said during an interview.

REPORTS FROM THE NATIONAL CENTER for Health Statistics say the divorce rate in 1980, the last year for which statistics have been compiled, is almost three times higher than it was in 1959.

"Many churches are doing post-marital checkups every six, 12 and even 18 months, trying to plug into the areas in which the greatest leakage, the greatest deterioration, occurs in a marriage," Hendricks said.

RABBI ELIEZER LANGER of Beth Jacob Congregation in San Diego said he has always counseled prospective brides and grooms and that he emphasizes the religious nature of marriage in the sessions.

"I don't know that I do any more premarital counseling than I ever did, but I usually try to meet with the couple at least two or three times before the wedding," he said. Langer added: "The spiraling divorce rate is a problem for everyone, however."

BUT THE REV. ROBERT KLEINSCHMIDT of the First Baptist Church of Lemon Grove, Calif., says he doubts the increased counseling being done by evangelical churches does much good.

"They're really not all that interested," Kleinschmidt said.

"I don't think they listen very well to what you say. People think that getting married in a church by a priest or minister is a sort of good-luck charm, and I don't think they really respond well to the information you give them."

KLEINSCHMIDT SAID he has found that too often only one partner, usually the woman, is serious about the counseling or even getting married in a church.

"You can counsel, but unless it's accompanied by the will, the commitment to make some changes and alter present behavioral patterns, I'm not so sure counseling does much good," he said. "I'm sure you can blame the church some for not trying harder and earlier, but you can try all you want and until people respond to what you tell them, it won't do any good."

CATHOLICS HAVE ALWAYS required a minimum premarital waiting period of about a month. The banns of marriage — publicizing an impending marriage from the pulpit, in the parish bulletin or both — for three consecutive weeks is still practiced.

Catholic couples must now go through a three-month preparation period in which they attend either a one-day "Pre-Cana" workshop and five evening sessions with a married couple or attend a marriage encounter program and meet three to fives times with their parish priest.

IN THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH, most priests require couples to take part in an engaged couples encounter, be evaluated by the Interfaith Counseling Institute, and meet with them in as many as six counseling sessions. They would also require at least one partner to be a baptized Christian. Banns may also be published.

Moreover, if one member of the couple is divorced, the bishop's permission would also be required before the marriage can be performed.

MOST PASTORS ARE CONCERNED about couples where only one or neither partner is a practicing Christian.

"I don't tell them I won't marry them, but I do bring up the whole matter of why they want to be married in a church," one pastor said. "Normally, I use that as an opportunity to get them to follow up on their religious views and commitment. In one or two cases, though, I have told couples they'd be better off going to a judge or justice of the peace if all they want is a legal ceremony."

'Risk factors' control urged

NEW YORK (AP) — Controlling risk factors could lead to a longer, healthier life, the former chief medical director of NASA's Manned Spacecraft Center in Houston told the Health Insurance Association of America recently.

Dr. Charles Berry, president of the National Foundation for the Prevention of Disease, identified those "controllable" risk factors as high cholesterol, hypertension, cigarette smoking, sugar intolerance (diabetes), alcohol abuse, obesity, stress and lack of exercise.

Spine injury summer hazard

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Summer is the "Paraplegic Season," according to two University of Michigan physicians, Dr. James R. Mackenzie, chief of Emergency Services at the U-M Hospitals, and Dr. Frederick M. Maynard, director of the Acute Spinal Cord Injury Program at the hospital.

Professor gets audiology award

STORRS, Conn. (AP) — Dr. Mark Ross, a University of Connecticut professor of communication sciences, has received the New York League for the Hard of Hearing's 1982 Harriet H. Jones Award in Audiology.

He was honored for his "high standards of excellence and accomplishments in clinical services, teaching, research and writing (which) have assisted the professional audiology community and hundreds of hearing-impaired children."

Ross has served as a speech and hearing therapist at Lenox Hospital in New York City and has also been an audiologist with the Fort Miley Veterans Administration Hospital in San Francisco.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

He has oily load on his shoulders

DEAR HELOISE:

When my youngest, a son, flew back to the cozy nest after having accomplished four F's in college, we slowly bound up our wounds and are trying (again) to help him find direction.

So now he is learning about "hard" work. He has learned that when one does not use one's head, the burden is often transferred to the feet! Indeed, he has holes in his soles.

And, as a bus boy at a fancy and busy restaurant, he also has heavy soil on one or both shoulders of his required white shirt.

I had told him he could do his own laundry as part of his continuing education in reality but frankly, Heloise, he is truly exhausted when he's finished at the end of the day. Indeed, when he left for work one morning at 10:30, he mumbled, "Good night, Mom," as he stumbled out the door.

I want him to look clean and neat, so I'll tend to his shirts for now. But how do I clean the shoulders of the oily-looking residue from tray bottoms? — B.T.

+++

Looks like you've got him on the right track, but it's harder on the parents than the kids, right?

As for his shirt (the poor dear), rub the stains with a mechanics' hand cleaner — comes in a can and is great for cleaning greasy, grimy hands.

Then, wash the shirt as usual. And you should get an "A" for your effort. Just hope he does when he goes back to the books. — Hugs, Heloise

ICE CREAM

Dear Heloise: I was making homemade strawberry ice cream. I didn't like the pale color, so I thought of adding strawberry flavored gelatin.

Wow! It really looked like strawberry then, but you'll have to adjust the amount of sugar you add if the gelatin is pre-sweetened. — Marjorie

SUMMER HEAT

Dear Heloise: We bought our new home mainly because of the fireplace which is the center of visual interest in our den.

It's disappointing to me, though, that such a focal point is so dark and useless in the summer months — especially when we entertain — as this area is literally turned off.

Now some friends and I have begun using our fireplaces in the summer, lighting not logs, but candles. The candles can be placed in there with small pine cones or branches, fresh or artificial flowers, etc.

Being set up in the fireplace, they are potentially safe, but should be watched, as with all open fires.

The effect is beautiful with light, and the area suddenly comes alive again. — Charlene Mora

SILK FLOWERS

Dear Heloise: Silk flowers make very pretty decorations until the dust collects on them.

I easily dust them by using my hair blow dryer on a slower speed.

If the flowers get dirty, I just remove the flower from its stem (if applicable, otherwise I remove the stem) and gently swish it in lukewarm water. I shake off the excess water, pat it dry (it may need some reshaping) and put it back in place.

Just be sure to test a flower, before putting them all into the water, to make sure they will hold up. — Dodie

BUILDING BLOCKS

Dear Heloise: If anyone has an active toddler like mine, here's a great tip.

Save the disposable diaper boxes. They're great for making giant building blocks. Just cover them with a pretty adhesive-backed paper, and you have an inexpensive toy that the little ones will love. — Mrs. Charles Rice

There are lots of readers who would like to hear your idea for keeping the little ones busy and happy. And Heloise can pass it on to them if it's a good one. Write Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216. She can't acknowledge your letters individually but she'll use the best in her column whenever possible.

CDC supports routine shots against whooping cough

By FRANK BLANCHARD
AP Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — The value of the whooping cough vaccine, which guards against the severe and sometime fatal childhood disease, outweighs the slim risk of damaging side effects, federal health officials say.

"Any vaccine and any drug is not without risk," said Dr. Arthur Reingold, an epidemiologist at the national Centers for Disease Control. "The question is whether the risk associated with the vaccine is less than or greater than the disease you vaccinate against."

Added Dr. Edward Brink, a center medical officer: "Almost all pediatricians and physicians know that there is a risk ... but generally feel that the risk of the disease exceeds the risk of the vaccine. Essentially, the parent has to make his own decision."

Doctors at the center said Thursday that recent national publicity focusing on the occasional serious side effects of the pertussis, or whooping cough, vaccine ignores the overwhelming benefit of the shot.

More than 80 percent of the children who receive all three recommended doses of the vaccine are shielded against the disease, the CDC said. Unvaccinated children, however, risk catching the disease, characterized by an intense cough and sometimes leading to seizures, degenerative brain disease and death.

"We feel very strongly that the overall effect to society of routinely vaccinating children for whooping cough is a substantial decrease in morbidity and mortality," Reingold said.

In 1980, 95 percent of the children in the United States received the DTP shot, which includes vaccines for diptheria, tetanus and pertussis, the CDC said. In many states, the DTP shot is required for admission into public school.

Brink cited a UCLA study of 16,000 people that said there was one seizure per 1,750 pertussis shots, one case of central nervous disfunction per 110,000 shots, and one case of lasting central nervous disfunction per 310,000 shots.

"There is defined attributable risk, albeit quite small," Brink said.

In this week's Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report, the CDC said that among 1,277 pertussis cases reported from 1979 to 1981, 58 percent required hospitalization and seven of the cases resulted in death.

"People who catch the disease are at significant risk of having seizures, pneumonia, hospitalizations" and other complications, Brink said.

DEAR ABBY

Male graduates flunk courtesy test

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY:
"Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
"Thou art not so unkind
"As man's ingratitude."

I think I know why Shakespeare used "MAN'S" ingratitude here: For years I have been mailing checks to soliciting graduates who have thoughtfully sent me announcements of their graduations.

The girls, God bless their thoughtful, grateful hearts, are batting 100 percent in written "thank-you's," whereas, from at least 75 percent of the boys, the only acknowledgment for receipt of gifts is the endorsement on the back of the check. (It is heartening, however, to know that at least the boys can write!)

Now, a bended knee plea to you prospective male grads: Under your endorsement, at least scratch out a "thanks."

No, Abby, amend that to read: "Look, kid, from now on please write a thank-you note." I am swearing off the thankless sex. — TEED OFF IN TEXAS

DEAR TEED OFF: For shame! I know not your gender, nor do I want to know, but pray, judge not all males as thoughtless, lazy ingrates.

Shakespeare undoubtedly used "man" to denote all mankind, which included womankind as well. However, to revise all classic literature in an attempt to desex it would be a man (or woman)-sized job.

DEAR ABBY: Please settle an argument I'm having with my sister-in-law. Her husband died four years ago, and she has never bothered to change the utility bills or credit cards to her name. All her bills are addressed to "Mr. and Mrs." just as though her husband were still living. (There is still a phone listing for "Mr. and Mrs.") She says as long as the bills get paid, it doesn't matter whose name they are in. Nor does it matter how she's listed in the phone book.

Is it legal to transact business using a dead man's name? — PERPLEXED IN PA.

DEAR PERPLEXED: A Philadelphia lawyer can tell you what's legal, but why is this a cause for argument? If your widowed sister-in-law, for any reason, wants to retain her charge accounts and telephone listing in the name of "Mr. and Mrs.," why should you care?

DEAR ABBY: This is a reply to "Bitter Daughter," who complained about having to "entertain" friends and relatives she hadn't seen in years following her 85-year-old mother's funeral. Daughter asks, "Where were all these criers the last four years when Mother was in a nursing home waiting for someone to come and visit her?"

First, my sympathy to the daughter. Then my question to her: How many friends did you invite to your mother's 80th birthday party? And how many times did you phone her "cronies" and offer to pick them up and take them to visit your mother? Did you arrange little parties for your mother at the nursing home? Nothing elaborate — just one or two of her friends and some iced tea, cookies and ice cream?

As we sow, so shall we reap. It seems so strange to me that those who have never put themselves out for others expect so much for themselves when the going gets rough.

My own mother lived life to the fullest and gave of herself as long as she could. Toward the end, the hospital halls were filled with friends because she had been a friend to so many.

Maybe this message will help those who still have time to give of themselves. They will be rewarded. — MOTHER'S DAUGHTER IN EL PASO

Divorce effect on children is study subject

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Do children in families where parents are divorced report different parental behavior in acceptance, psychological control or discipline than children in families where parents remain together?

In research toward a Ph.D. in home economics at Oklahoma State University, Jane Teleki interviewed children and adults in the Tulsa area concerning parents' behavior in the two situations.

Among items on the acceptance scale of the interview were "Makes me feel better after talking over my worries," "Understands my problems and my worries," "Makes me feel better when I'm upset," and "Comforts me when I'm afraid."

Mrs. Teleki found no differences in acceptance in both sets of families. All children saw their parents as fairly high on acceptance. In families of divorce where fathers were not living in the home, the children still felt their fathers were accepting of them.

Examples of items included in the psychological control scale were "Feels hurt when I don't follow advice," "Thinks I'm not grateful when I don't obey," "Tells me how much he or she has suffered for me," and "If I break a promise, he or she doesn't trust me again for a long time."

Children in intact families saw their fathers as higher in psychological control than did children in divorced families. Children in both sets of families saw their mothers as relatively low on psychological control.

Items on the discipline scale included "Doesn't pay much attention to my misbehavior," "Doesn't insist I do my homework," "Seldom insists that I do anything," "Doesn't bother to enforce rules," and "Lets me off easy when I do something wrong."

Mrs. Teleki found differences in discipline were related to children's perception of fathers. Divorced fathers were seen as less firm in discipline than married fathers.

Children saw both divorced and married mothers as relatively firm in discipline.

Mothers in divorced families reported themselves less firm in discipline than did mothers in married families. In other aspects of the study, mothers in both types of families gave similar reports of acceptance and psychological control.

Mrs. Teleki's study is part of a larger research project in the OSU Family Study Center dealing with the management of relationships and resources of one-parent and two-parent families.

Prior to her doctoral studies, Mrs. Teleki taught child development courses at the University of Oklahoma, in Norman. She is now assistant professor and chairperson of the department of child development and family relations at East Carolina University in Greenville, N.C. She and her husband are parents of a girl, 13, and a boy, 10.

Mrs. Teleki selected parental behavior for her research because at least a third of the children born in the 1970s and growing up in the '80s are expected to experience the divorce of their parents, she said.

"The child's perception of the parent's behavior is more related to the child's behavior and adjustment than is the actual behavior of that parent," she said.

Findings of her study are contrary to some past research in that she found no differences in acceptance in both sets of families.

Robot designed to make Japanese fish dish

By JIM ABRAMS
AP Writer

TOKYO (AP) — A newly developed robot for making sushi, Japan's raw fish and rice delicacy, has sushi-shop owners at sea over whether conveyer-belt speed can co-exist with the slower but traditional over-the-counter service.

Makers of the automated chefs, the Suzumo Machine Co. of Tokyo, say they have sold more than 300 sushi robots since production began last year and can't keep up with demand. Among the orders are about 100 from purveyors in the United States, where the deep-sea dishes enjoy growing popularity.

Noboru Kiyoka, a company official, said the robot retailing for 1.6 million yen ($6,900) could press, punch and pat into shape about 1,200 oblong lumps of rice an hour — almost three times faster than the most quick-fingered "ita-mae" or sushi maker.

It took five years of research to build the robot that can combine vinegar, salt and sugar to create the glutinous boiled rice ball used in sushi, he said.

Kiyoka added, however, that the automaton is still not dexterous enough or sociable enough to drive the "ita-mae," which literally means "before the board," under the table.

Human hands are still needed to top the rice with the fiery green horseradish called wasabi and a slab of raw fish, octopus, squid or salmon eggs.

A larger obstacle to robotized sushi, company officials admit, is the perceived threat to the handmade flavor and shoulder-to-shoulder intimacy of the thousands of sushi shops throughout Japan.

Suzumo business-section chief Junichiro Nishimura said they even faced "a jinx that anyone trying to automatize sushi-making would go broke." He said there was a "good deal of resistance to the idea."

The typical Japanese sushi restaurant is a narrow shop where diners sit at a counter lined with glass-encased marine exotica. On the other side are "ita-mae" in white uniforms, headbands and high clog shoes, who swiftly slap orders together while expounding on anything from baseball to the origins of the house sake, or rice wine.

Officials of one sushi chain, which is using robots at two restaurants on an experimental basis, noted that customers were "still very wary" of sharing the savored camaraderie of the sushi shop with a machine.

"People think of sushi as a handmade product, and it's going to be hard to change that image," said Akinori Narisawa of the 178-shop Genroku chain.

Narisawa also expressed concern that the robots would make sushi uniformly bland, but said that with rising personnel costs, and a dearth of trained sushi chefs, "we may have no choice" but to turn to robots. It usually takes three to five years to train a young "ita-mae" in the skills of carving tuna, slicing shrimp, sculpturing rice balls and wrapping delicacies in seaweed.

So far, Suzumo's Kiyoka said, response to the robots has been best at cheaper fast-food and carry-out sushi shops where speed is at a premium and the machines can be hidden from the consumer's eyes.

Social skills of 50s are useless for dating scene of 80s, author finds

By DON CARTER
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — Author Lance Lerner had a longtime marriage bust up when he was 40 and was awed, amazed and awkward when he applied his 1950's social skills to 1980's dating.

Author Dan Greenburg, now 46, had a longtime marriage — to writer Nora Ephron — bust up when he was 38 and found himself a similarly awkward "victim" of the sexual revolution.

It's a not-unrelated coincidence. Lerner is the fictional hero of a new book, "What Do Women Want?" Greenburg, the book's author, happily admits that "Lance is about 98.6 percent me. I'm almost as foolish and compulsive."

The book is one of those off-the-wall comic novels with a dazed hero buffeted about on a sea of outrageous circumstances. And even though there are many similarities, the author says he has been spared some of the outrageous circumstances that confront poor Lerner.

Greenburg, a longtime contributer to Playboy and Esquire, says many of his 10 other novels — notably, "Scoring" — revolve around sex. The author says wryly that he writes about sex because "it's something that interests me. I'm also attempting to make up for lost time. I was a virgin until I was 23."

The naivete surfaced again when, newly divorced at age 38, he found all the dating rules had changed.

"I'm told the sexual revolution started 20 minutes after I was married," he laughs. "Before the sexual revolution, you took a woman to dinner 40 times and kissed her on the doorstep. After 50 more dates, you might have a little light fondling — above the waist, with clothes on. Now, if you don't take her to bed on the first date — or at least suggest it — she's irritated."

Because of his post-divorce naivete, the author says, "I'd take a woman out and ply her with alcohol to get her in the mood. I didn't realize she was already in the mood, and I was just getting her drunk and sick."

Finding women more assertive about their own personal needs was also a shock, he recalls. He remembers one date that ended in bed: "I was really interested in seeing her again, but she said, 'I'm afraid that won't be possible. I'm seriously involved with someone else.'

"Women have started doing to us what we've been doing to them. But at least they're more honest with us. After a one-night stand, a man would have said, 'Yes, sweetheart, I'll call you sometime.' "

Although he believes the sexual revolution "is uncomfortable," Greenburg says he thinks "there's no way of signing a peace treaty in the war between the sexes unless you acknowledge that there's been a war."

Arthritic receives permanent ceramic hip socket replacement

By BILL VALE
AP Writer

CINCINNATI (AP) — For the first time in his life, Gary Bumgarner says he's finally getting some relief from the constant arthritic pain in his 28-year-old bones.

In an operation on June 7, Bumgarner became the first U.S. patient to receive permanent, ceramic hip socket replacements developed in Germany. He's going home from the hospital this weekend and said on Thursday that he feels a little better already.

Bumgarner said his problem was diagnosed as spondylo epiphysical dysplasia tarda when he was a child. That means his long bones did not grow to normal size. His hip joints were not aligned, and cartilage wore down and his pain got worse as he grew older.

"I played football and wrestled in high school. Until I was in my early 20s," he said. "It never occurred to me that everyone didn't have such pain.

"As I got older, the pain became agony," said the Ohio State University pharmacy student from Wilmington. "It seems real funny — marvelous, really. There is still a little pain in the muscles from surgery but that will pass.

"I feel very lucky, very fortunate, to be the candidate for the first operation. I will make myself available to any of the doctors who want me," Bumgarner said.

Hip replacement operations were not generally advised for young people previously since metal and plastic replacements were not permanent, said Dr. Edward H. Miller, who conducted the surgery.

Miller said he received special permission to do the operation from the Food and Drug Administration, which originally had approved general use of the replacement devices for July 1. Miller said he studied the process earlier this year in Germany.

"This way I won't have the agony of having to go through the operation every 15 years for the rest of my life," Bumgarner said.

The pain, he said, contributed to problems in school. He was on the dean's list the first two years of college at the University of Miami in Florida. He flunked the next quarter and worked two years at Clinton Memorial Hospital in his home town.

Magazines and sewing classes

Copley News Service

While thumbing through a magazine, you may find several articles that are of special interest to you...sewing tips, fashion notes, recipes. But, when you want to find a particular article again, it seems to have disappeared.

Save yourself a lot of work thumbing through countless magazines. Glue (do not staple or tape) a 3x5 card to the upper right-hand portion of the magazine cover before you start looking through it for the first time. As you come to special articles, ones you may want to "recall" later, write the page number and a brief description on the card. It makes a very hand reference.

IF YOU ARE planning to take a sewing class, go prepared. One of the first things you will need is a large, shallow box or suitcase in which to tote your sewing garment back and forth.

What's wrong with a sack, you ask? Once you begin construction on your garment — whether it be a simple skirt or a blazer — you do not want to wad it up in a sack. You need a container large enough for the garment to lie flat.

Once the neckline of a garment has been stabilized, either with stay-stitching or the addition of the collar, you can hang the garment on a padded hanger for transporting.

CONSIDER ALSO a shoe box or small sewing box for carrying your own scissors, pins, tape measure, pin cushion, thread, etc.

Your instructor may not mind you using hers, but just think how much more efficient you can be with your own.

Other tips on being a good student: Always arrive on time; do all homework assigned; be willing to rip out when something isn't quite right. And, most important, as soon as you have finished the course, immediately make a second garment similar to the first. It is so easy to forget otherwise.

Questions may be addressed to Mrs. Betty Kinser, Ragtime Sewing Shoppe, 1305 W. 40 Highway, Blue Springs, MO 64015.

Juvenile arthritis

ATLANTA (AP) — If treatment is not started soon enough, blindness is a possible complication of one form of juvenile arthritis, a serious disease affecting about 250,000 children, reports the Arthritis Foundation.

A simple, painless eye examination can detect the eye inflammation in its early stages before permanent damage occurs. The Arthritis Foundation recommends that children with arthritis who run a high risk of developing eye complications be tested regularly by an eye specialist.

Princess Anne gets rousing Saskatchewan-style welcome

REGINA, Saskatchewan (AP) — Princess Anne was greeted by 1,000 people, band music and a 21-gun salute as she began a five-day visit to Saskatchewan.

Princess Anne

The princess arrived Thursday from Whitehorse in the Yukon Territory. Her limousine led a snaking line of cars through the legislative grounds while the Canadian Forces Air Command Band played.

After she arrived at the front of the legislative buildings, the guns of the 10th Field Regiment fired the traditional 21-gun salute, sending booming reverberations across Lake Wascana and scattering resident Canada geese.

The princess also plans a visit to Manitoba before returning to London.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Press Secretary James Brady was described as "doing well and resting" following elective surgery.

James Brady

Irene Haske, a spokeswoman at George Washington University Hospital, refused to reveal the nature of Thursday's operation, calling it elective and saying it was "not life-threatening or serious."

Brady, 41, was shot in the brain by John W. Hinckley Jr. in the March 30, 1981, attempted assassination of President Reagan. Brady has yet to return to work.

Last week, he was treated for what officials said was a recurrence of blood clots. In April, he was hospitalized for three weeks when the problem flared up in his legs.

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Retired Army Col. Charles Beckwith says Newsweek quoted him accurately but failed to properly portray the failed mission he led to rescue Americans held hostage in Iran.

Charles Beckwith

"Everything in the magazine that I was quoted as (saying), in quotation marks, I think were accurate," Beckwith said, "but other things that other people said I don't put any stock in."

Beckwith, who operates an anti-terrorist consulting business in Austin, commanded the Delta Force, an elite group sent to rescue the 53 hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran in April 1980. The mission failed when three helicopters malfunctioned. Eight U.S. servicemen died in the desert when a helicopter and a plane collided.

Newsweek reconstructed the rescue mission in this week's edition, saying that Beckwith sat on the ground and cried after it failed — something he denies.

Beckwith also criticized a Newsweek report that he labeled pilots on the mission as "cowards," saying, "I didn't call anybody a coward. That's ridiculous."

Newsweek Executive Editor Maynard Parker said Thursday the magazine stands by the story.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country singer George Jones has at least one fan willing to back up his admiration with money.

George Jones

When authorities in Monroe County, Miss., said they would file charges against Jones on Thursday if he failed to pay $737.50 in fines, Nashville nightclub owner B.D. "Pee Wee" Johnson jumped in his car, drove to Aberdeen, Miss., and paid the bill.

"I did it for the millions of people who love George Jones," Johnson said. "I think he's just the greatest guy there is and I know someday he'll pay me back."

The fines were the penalty for a March 30 traffic accident in Aberdeen that was followed by charges of drunken driving, driving without a license, reckless driving and possession of alcohol in a dry county.

Only a day earlier, Jones, 51, had been charged with possession of cocaine and public drunkenness near Jackson, Miss. Jones was released on his own recognizance and court action is pending, officials said.

Jones, whose hits include "He Stopped Loving Her Today," "White Lightning" and "Golden Ring," has been treated twice for alcoholism at a Birmingham, Ala., hospital since 1980.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Pornographic movie actor John Holmes faces a possible jail sentence following his conviction of receiving stolen property.

John Holmes

His attorney, Earl Hanson, said Holmes was found guilty Thursday of receiving a stolen IBM typewriter, which had been found in the trunk of Holmes' car last year.

Hanson said the verdict by Superior Court Judge Laurence J. Rittenband came after a brief non-jury trial at which no testimony was presented. At the same time, the judge ruled Holmes innocent of an accompanying charge of grand theft, the lawyer said.

Hanson said the maximum sentence for Holmes is likely to be eight months. A probation hearing has been set for Aug. 4.

Last month, Holmes was acquitted of four slayings in a posh Laurel Canyon home. He told detectives he was forced at gunpoint to let murderers into the house where two men and two women were slain. He has refused to name the killers, saying he fears his family will be harmed if he does.

Mitchell Egers, another attorney, said after the acquittal that Holmes hoped to "resume a successful movie career and live a normal life." Holmes, 37, has had a 17-year career in X-rated films.

Mitchelson into another palimony case

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A woman who says she has been cut off after serving for 12 years as a paid "traveling companion" to socialite Alfred Bloomingdale has filed a $5 million "palimony" suit against the close friend of President Reagan's.

The suit was filed Thursday by celebrity lawyer Marvin Mitchelson in Superior Court on behalf of Vicki Morgan, 29, who said she was the 66-year-old Bloomingdale's companion from the time she was 17 years old.

The suit says Bloomingdale, founder of Diners Club Corp. and heir to the Bloomingdale's department store fortune, never had a live-in relationship with Ms. Morgan, but contends he had a "second home" with her in Beverly Hills and was a "second father" to her son by another man.

"She hates to do this because she loves him, but she has no choice," Mitchelson said.

Morgan

Bloomingdale

"Unlike the Marvin case, Ms. Morgan has some signed agreements with Bloomingdale," Mitchelson said. The documents, he added, include an agreement to pay her as much as $10,000 a month.

The suit said Bloomingdale, a member of Reagan's so-called "kitchen cabinet" of advisers, had paid Ms. Morgan as a "traveling companion, confidante and business partner."

He and his wife, prominent in Los Angeles society, have hosted many parties for Reagan and his wife, Nancy, on their trips to the West Coast. The Bloomingdales have three children.

Bloomingdale, who has been confined to his Beverly Hills home because of an illness, was unable Thursday to come to the telephone to discuss the lawsuit, The Los Angeles Times reported. Staff members at his house said all inquiries must be directed to his wife, who was out of town and unavailable for comment.

Ms. Morgan's suit claims that Bloomingdale paid her support — sometimes as high as $18,000 a month — and made her a partner in profitable businesses including a firm called Show Biz Pizza.

Mitchelson said Ms. Morgan was hesitant to file her suit because Bloomingdale has been hospitalized recently.

While aging disease takes its toll, boys' families enjoy times together

GRAPEVINE, Texas (AP) — Two little boys trapped in the bodies of old men cried when they said goodbye in South Africa, where they were reunited for perhaps the last time.

Tiny Micky Hays, 10, returned Thursday from Orkney, South Africa, where he and his family went June 21 to visit 9-year-old Fransie Geringer.

THE BOYS suffer from progeria, a rare genetic disorder that dwarfs them, makes them wrinkled and bald, ages them rapidly and allots them a probable lifespan of less than 20 years.

"Leaving yesterday was hard," said Mickey's mother, Cindy Edwards, 28. "Mickey and Fransie felt they would probably never see each other again. Both boys were crying and both families were too.

"We were there 2½ weeks and we got to see them play together, fight together and love together," she said. "They're so much alike."

The two boys met six months ago after Americans, moved by news stories about Fransie and Mickey, raised money to send them both to Disneyland.

Mrs. Edwards said the families would correspond, but had made no plans for another reunion because of the huge expense of the trip.

Mickey, however, was not so sure.

"They're going to send him to my house like they sent me to his," he declared. "They better."

Fund-raising efforts organized by employees of American Airlines and Pan American World Airways in the United States and a car dealership in Johannesburg, South Africa, paid for Mickey and his family to fly to South Africa for the reunion.

"THEY ARE VERY special kids to the families," Mrs. Edwards said, "and what...we all think about is, 'What if something happens to one of them? What will the other one do?' "

Her tiny son, his bald head covered by his ever-present baseball cap, rested in Mrs. Edwards' lap as she told reporters at the Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport how wonderful it was to talk to another parent of a progeria victim.

"There is nothing like sitting down with someone who can say, 'I know how you feel.' And they really do know," she said before she and Mickey returned home to Hallsville, about 140 miles east of Dallas.

Mickey had two gifts to take home to remind him of the birthday he spent in Africa — a motorcycle and a stuffed ostrich he was given at a game preserve.

AP Laserphoto

An exhausted Mickey Hays rests in his mother's arms after the two returned to Dallas-Fort Worth Airport from South Africa. The two were guests of Fransie Geringer, who, like Mickey, suffers from progeria, a rare aging disease. Mickey's mother, Mrs. Cindy Edwards, told reporters that the two boys' families have grown very close.

No first-place competition winner

MOSCOW (AP) — Judges in the prestigious international Tchaikovsky competition gave gold medals to two Soviet violinists, but announced today that none of the 13 piano finalists merited the coveted first prize. They awarded silver medals to Englishman Peter Donahoe and the Soviet Union's Vladimir Ovchinikov.

"Sometimes, a competition decides that none of the contestants measure up to the standards of previous winners. That was the case this time," explained Fernando Laires, the only American on the 15-member piano jury.

Japanese pianist Michie Koyama won the third place bronze medal. Dmitry Gaiduk and Kale Randalu, both of the Soviet Union, shared fourth, while Maria Rovena Arrieta of the Philippines was fifth, and became the first Tchaikovsky laureate from her nation.

The Soviet Union's Nino Keselidze and Michael Houston of New Zealand tied for sixth place.

The highest-ranked American pianist was James Barbagallo, 29, originally from San Francisco and now living in Long Island City, N.Y. He shared seventh place with Ema Takhmazyan of Bulgaria.

In the violin awards Thursday, Soviets Sergei Stadler and Viktoria Mullova both won gold medals. Tomoko Kato, a 20-year-old Tokyo native studying at the Julliard School of Music in New York City, won the second-place silver medal.

Two Americans, Stephanie Chase, 24, of Westport, Conn., and Andres Cardenes, 25, a Cuban native teaching at the University of Indiana at Bloomington, were third. Fourth place went to violinist Annick Roussin of France. Fifth place was not awarded. Ralph Evans, 29, of New York City, placed sixth.

Awards in the two other categories — vocal and cello — were announced earlier this week.

Members of the piano jury told a reporter that Donahoe, 29, "played significantly better than the others in the final round," but was hurt by his original approach to a Liszt concerto in the semifinals.

"It's the decision I would have made, too," said Donahoe. "I'm aware that my playing is controversial. The person I'm sharing second prize with is a pianist I admire very much and I'm very happy."

A Soviet jury member said Ovchinikov played more conventionally, but the 24-year-old graduate of Moscow's Tchaikovsky Conservatory was considered too inexperienced to win top honors.

"I'm a bit tired, but in principle very happy," said Ovchinikov, who described Donahoe as a "really serious musician."

The American violin juror, Berl Senovsky, a teacher at Peabody Institute in Baltimore, Md., called Miss Chase's performances "a breath of fresh air." But he said the Soviet competitors fully deserved top honors.

The remaining violin finalists, who received diplomas, were: Kerry McDermott, 20, of New York City; Elmira Darvarova and Doro Brakhova of Bulgaria; Timothy Baker, 29, of New York City and Ivan Zesnaty of Czechoslovakia.

There may be no free lunch for cops in southern town

GEORGETOWN, S.C. (AP) — Police Chief James F. Elders wants his officers to stop accepting free coffee or cut-rate meals, but some restaurants aren't impressed with the edict even if they stand to save some money.

Elders, who announced the new policy for his 40-member force on Tuesday, said accepting freebies is against law enforcement's code of ethics.

"I can't really stop it," he said. "But this type of service sets up a situation where officers will congregate at one place and it's unfair to smaller businesses that can't afford it."

The Georgetown Times contacted for comment several local restaurants in this port city of 10,144 residents. All but one, where the manager refused comment, said they offered free beverages such as coffee to law enforcement officers.

"It's my coffee and I do what I want to do with it," said restaurateur Jackie McCants.

"This is a common courtesy for law enforcement officials that we have provided in our 30 years of business," he said. "I don't expect any special favors because if you need them, they'll respond because it's their job."

The Newspaper BIBLE

NO FOOLIN'!

It is God Himself, in His mercy, who has given us this wonderful work (of telling His Good News to others), and so we never give up. We do not try to trick people into believing--we are not interested in fooling anyone. We never try to get anyone to believe that the Bible teaches what it doesn't. All such shameful methods we forego. We stand in the presence of God as we speak and so we tell the truth, as all who know us will agree.

If the Good News we preach is hidden to anyone, it is hidden from the one who is on the road to eternal death. Satan, who is the god of this evil world, has made him blind, unable to see the glorious light of the Gospel that is shining upon him, or to understand the amazing message we preach about the glory of Christ, who is God. We don't go around preaching about ourselves, but about Christ Jesus as Lord. All we say for ourselves is that we are your slaves because of what Jesus has done for us. For God, who said, "Let there be light in the darkness," has made us understand that it is the brightness of His glory that is seen in the face of Jesus Christ. (II Corinthians 4:1-6)

For I am not ashamed of this Good News about Christ. It is God's powerful method of bringing all who believe it to heaven. This message was preached first to the Jews alone, but now everyone is invited to come to God in this same way. (Romans 1:16)

Corny tales symbolize American Dream

EDITOR'S NOTE: Horatio Alger's stories became the literary symbol of the American Dream: Poor boy follows Golden Rules and becomes rich man. "Strive and Succeed" is a typical title. On the 150th anniversary of his birth, members of the Horatio Alger Society remember the man, the manuscripts — and the myth.

By JILL LAWRENCE

WILLOW GROVE, Pa. (AP) — The smoky conference room is jammed with latter-day Ragged Dicks and Tattered Toms basking in the hard-won comfort of their middle years, their humble origins a distant memory.

One had made millions manufacturing nuts and bolts; another married well. A third left home at 15 to make her way in the world. Another worked his way through college as a barber and ended up owning a printing plant and a museum.

"If I didn't have this, I'd be feverish," cries Bob Bennett, pounding a first edition of "The Telegraph Boy" with his fist.

"If you don't have it, you'd better get delirious and start bidding...If you don't have it, you ought to be after it like a dog after a bone... Sold! You can say you spent more for 'The Telegraph Boy' than anyone else in the world."

THE BOOK went for $425 at the Horatio Alger Society's annual fund-raising auction.

Ronald Reagan's signature on a first edition of his autobiography, "Where's The Rest of Me?," brought a measly $50. A first American edition of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's poetry sold for a mere $16.

"We're not scholars. We're nuts," says Ralph Gardner, puffing on a pipe he had made. The bowl was a carving of Alger's head.

Horatio Alger. The name is a myth that far outreaches the author's actual achievements; a synonym for rags-to-riches; the American Dream realized again and again in Alger's 100-odd stories of poor boys en route to prosperity.

Who was he? The record is confusing. The first Alger biography was a hoax, recognized only 10 years ago, that served as the basis for almost all subsequent and supposedly reliable works.

A few things are certain:

— Alger attended Harvard and became a Unitarian clergyman.

— A Brewster, Mass., church dismissed him for "the abominable and revolting crime of unnatural familiarity with boys."

— He never married.

— His moralistic, action-packed books sold hundreds of thousands of copies while he was alive, and millions more in the 20-year period following his death in 1899.

THIS YEAR, the 150th anniversary of Alger's birth in Chelsea, Mass., finds Alger stamps adorning first class mail and a true-to-life Alger hero in the White House.

What could better characterize President Reagan's individualistic self-help philosophy than "Strive and Succeed," an Alger title? In 1969 Reagan won an award from the Horatio Alger Association, which honors prominent citizens — usually conservative ones — who have pulled themselves up by their bootstraps.

The Association, based in New York, is not to be confused with the Society, an international grab-bag of 250 nostalgia freaks, millionaires, businessmen, academics and book collectors aged 11 to 90. Their only common bond is a passion for Alger.

"Politics is one thing we never get into. It's no part of this," says Gardner, a cherubic-looking Alger biographer and former New York Times reporter. Then, scanning the society members gathered for a four-day convention, he adds: "I certainly don't know any liberals here."

Whether Alger meant to champion conservative politics or free enterprise is doubtful, according to most Alger scholars.

"There's so much bunk going around about what Alger did," says Jack Bales, a 30-year-old college librarian from Fredericksburg, Va., who is working on an Alger biography.

"HE MEANT his books to be didactic moral tales for children," says Bales, the oldest of nine children and an Alger reader for 15 years. "There was nothing in his mind about rags-to-riches...The idea of rags-to-riches is a 20th century interpretation."

The hallmarks of an Alger book are industry and adventure, and a conspicuous lack of romance. "There were a couple of girls that got kissed, but not many," says Dale Thomas, a Cleveland manufacturer whose CB handle is Ragged Dick, Alger's hardy bootblack.

The innocent tales, propelled by preposterous events and uncanny coincidences, abound with menacing villains and good-hearted heroes. And while goodness is always rewarded, it is never its own reward.

Trusting Rodney Ropes, his fortune lost by a careless guardian, makes a mint in the Montana gold mines. Forlorn Phil the Fiddler, beaten and starved by a cruel padrone, is adopted by a wealthy doctor. Cheerful Fred, the Erie Train Boy, his family on the verge of eviction, lands a lucrative job with a stockbroker.

"Alger was obsessed with money. The dollar sign was always lurking in the background... Good was translated into wealth. Some financial gain was at the end of the rainbow," says Bennett, the auctioneer. The Central Michigan University administrator is believed to own the world's largest collection of Alger first editions — 127 of 132 available.

Whether they buy into the rags-to-riches myth or not, Bennett and most of his colleagues have no illusions about Alger's work.

"IT'S NOT literature. You have to face the fact that he was not a literary giant," says Ed LeBlanc of Fall River, Mass. "I can read them for enjoyment — but you've got to suspend realism."

Bales, weary after half a lifetime with Alger and ready to "retire from the whole thing" when he and a co-author finish the biography, is more blunt: "The books are stilted, very corny, very outdated."

Discussing the author's style, Bennett says, "Alger's heroes never walked home. They trudged homeward... Frank always replied resolutely. He didn't just reply."

He adds, "I think it's fascinating that a guy that had no more writing talent than he did could so thoroughly capture the market. Most authors grow during their careers. Alger was the same from start to finish. The last book he wrote is as bad as the first. It's pitiful."

Nevertheless, avid collectors have been known to part with as much as $2,000 for a single first edition. Their conversations are peppered with prices and titles and arcane disputes.

" 'Timothy Crump's Ward' is the hardest to get," Gardner asserts during one heated discussion.

" 'Dan the Detective' is harder," interjects Jerry Friedland, an attorney from New York.

"'THE ERIE Train Boy' is impossible,'" Bennett cuts in.

" 'Frank's Campaign'... " began Thomas.

"Hard but not the hardest," Bennett says.

What drives these people? For some, it's the thrill of the chase.

"I like the covers and the designs and the challenge of completing the sets that I have," says Brad Chase, a state official from Enfield, Conn. "My kick is to bring a set together on my bookshelf and have all the spines the same."

Some members have fond childhood memories of Alger.

Shakespeare theater supports Oregon town

EDITOR'S NOTE: Ashland-on-the-Rogue isn't exactly what William Shakespeare had in mind, but the folks around Ashland, Ore., think he would have liked the setting for his play. In the Oregon timber country, by the Rogue River, Shakespeare is alive and well and helping to support a town.

By LISA LEVITT

ASHLAND, Ore. (AP) — Beneath Ashland's small-town hum swells the distinctive sound of genius.

Forsooth! What pure, sweet cadence! A couplet by none less than the immortal bard, William Shakespeare, his rich words providing an Elizabethan harmony to Ashland's southern Oregon melody. And no Avon nearby.

It has been almost a half-century since the founding of the Oregon Shakespearean Festival. And in that time, the bard's word has proved mightier than the buzzsaw, more powerful than recession and as much at home here as the wild Rogue River cutting through this verdant, rolling valley.

Two dozen sawmills have come and gone, but the curtain still rises every year on one of the nation's oldest and largest non-profit repertory theaters, one that thrives while others founder.

IT IS JUST "Shakespeare" to the folks around here who think of it as an old friend. In a barber shop in Ashland, people discuss whether this season's "Othello" is as good as last season's.

It hasn't always been that way. In the late Sixties, when Ashland's economy was sagging, residents incensed by a federal grant for a new indoor theater went to war against the festival and the "Shakies."

But, today Shakespeare is the glue that holds Ashland together while its lumber-dependent Jackson County neighbors suffer through the worst recession in 35 years.

"We're a very well-to-do city," concedes City Manager Brian Almquist, who left Southern California 12 years ago.

"We don't have the ups and downs that other communities do, the haggling over property taxes and going to the voters three, four, five times to get your budget passed. We pay cash for everything. We have trust funds for our hospital. We're able to borrow from ourselves."

Ashland's affluence can be traced to the city owned-and-operated electric utility, which provides the community of 15,000 with half its revenue, Almquist says. And there's Southern Oregon State College, a small liberal arts school with a $4-million payroll. But Shakespeare does its part.

"AN ENTERPRISE like Shakespeare, if you take their $2 million payroll, and the businesses that are here because Shakespeare is here...I've heard figures as high as a $30-million impact the festival has on the community — which is no small potatoes for us."

Shakespeare always has made money. Maxine Hunnell remembers the first performance. She was teaching English at the college in 1931 when Angus Bowmer became her colleague and brought drama to the school and, eventually, the city.

One July 4 — a holiday much ballyhooed in Ashland — they say Bowmer asked the city if he could do the "Merchant of Venice" on a stage at the concrete shell of the old Chatauqua stage.

"They thought we would probably lose money on that, so they said, 'Would you mind if we had boxing matches on the stage beforehand so we can make some money?' Well, they lost money, and we made money," recalls Mrs. Hunnell, who worked as a costume mistress in those early days.

She dyed all-wool long underwear for men's tights, sewed together miles of burlap for a curtain, turned unbleached muslin into damask and flannel into velvet. For that first performance, they did "Merchant of Venice" and "Twelfth Night." Some 500 people came.

It was far from the elaborate productions and elegant costumes that now draw 275,000 people here for an eight-month season of 12 plays, with as many as five performances a day in three theaters. But much of the reward is the same.

TODAY THE old stage has become the site of the outdoor Elizabethan Theater, a replica of the Globe Theater where Shakespeare's company performed in 17th century London.

"I can't say any of us believed it would develop into something like this," says Mrs. Hunnell. "But in 1962, after the last performance of 'Coriolanus,' I was talking with Angus, and he said people would say to him, 'You never dreamed it would be like this.' And he said, 'I tell them that we didn't think we'd have these kinds of lights, these kinds of seats, the ivy on the wall, any of these things. But we did say we would have a place where Shakespeare will be performed and enjoyed the way it should be.'"

Here, Shakespeare is performed against a lush green background — a cultural oasis in rural isolation, an almost irresistible combination.

Nancy and Jim Beaver came and were captivated. And when they decided to leave the corporate life in San Francisco and start their own business, Ashland seemed like the only place to go.

They started the Chanticleer Bed and Breakfast Inn, a short walk from the theater, one of a handful that have cropped up in the last two years.

SOME PEOPLE are in and out of Ashland in months, but some stay on for years and most agree the theater is important to their livelihood. Others, however, see it as something that attracts strangers and makes parking difficult.

Anti-theater sentiment came to a head in 1967, when, in order to get a $930,000 federal grant to build the indoor Angus Bowmer Theater, the festival had to donate its property to the city and lease it back. The city was suddenly a party to the theater and some residents were outraged.

"It created a tremendous schism right through the center of town," says Bill Patton, the festival's executive director. "In some cases people still haven't recovered."

From Patton's office window, visitors can see the Bowmer Theater, a beautifully designed facility that allowed the festival to expand its repertoire and its season, saving Shakespeare and reviving Ashland's sagging economy.

Democrats mad about latest Republican ad

By DON McLEOD

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats are hopping mad about a Republican television commercial telling voters that Social Security recipients can thank President Reagan for the extra money in their checks this month.

The fatter Social Security checks stem from an automatic cost-of-living increase, which Democrats claim the Reagan administration tried to delay and cut. The increase goes into effect each July.

"The Reagan administration failed to delay this year's COLA for only one reason...because we in Congress refused to go along with it," House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., said Wednesday.

But that's not what the GOP's new $1 million commercial says. The television spot features a grandfatherly postman who smiles fondly into the camera and says he's "probably one of the most popular people in town.

"I'm delivering Social Security checks with the 7.4 percent cost of living raise that President Reagan promised," the mailman says. "He promised that raise and he kept his promise, in spite of those sticks in the mud who tried to keep him from doing what we elected him to do.

"President Reagan has made only a beginning, but he has kept his word and it is a beginning," the mailman concludes. "For gosh sake, let's give the guy a chance."

The commercial started running Tuesday in 58 cities and will continue though July 15. Another 32 cities will be added later.

The Democrats were lining up Wednesday to denounce the Republican postman and his "lies to the American people," as O'Neill put it.

"I don't know why everybody's complaining about it," Republican Party Chairman Richard Richards said. "We've just created a nice little commercial."

But O'Neill likened the new commercials to the note that former President Nixon had inserted with the July checks in 1972, the year that Congress first hitched Social Security benefits to the rising cost of living.

"To attempt to portray this Republican administration as responsible for the July COLA is a blatant act of political hypocrisy," Democratic Party Chairman Charles T. Manatt said.

"The facts are that a groundswell of public opinion led by Democratic opposition to these Republican proposals forced the president to abandon his repeated attempts to diminish or delay Social Security benefits," said Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

"The Reagan administration continued to propose a delay in the June 30 COLA throughout this year's budget negotiations with the Congress," O'Neill said. "The administration wanted to delay this year's COLA by three months, delay next year's COLA by six months and the scheduled 1984 COLA a total of nine months."

In secret budget negotiations with Congress in April, Budget Director David A. Stockman circulated a set of proposals calling for a 4 percent cap on Social Security increases — and spreading them 15 months apart, rather than a year apart.

Reagan never publicly embraced the idea and it eventually was discarded. However, Stockman was joined at the bargaining table by White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III, and congressional leaders presumed they were negotiating with the president's backing.

Republican chairman Richards acknowledged that there may have been some thought to these proposals, but said the Democrats were in on it too, and nothing ever came of it anyway.

"I think there was some discussion about a couple of months delay," Richards said. "But never was it suggested that the cost of living be eliminated by this president.

Thatcher adopts compromise in Falklands probe

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher apparently made some compromises in launching an investigation of why her Conservative government failed to stop Argentina's invasion of the Falkland Islands.

Mrs. Thatcher, riding high in the popularity polls after Britain's victory in the South Atlantic, originally demanded that the inquiry should give at least equal weight to the record of four previous governments, going back to 1965.

But political foes charged she was seeking to lighten the share of blame on her own administration, and Mrs. Thatcher announced Tuesday that the investigation merely would "take account" of relevant factors from past years in negotiating the islands' status.

The liberal newspaper The Guardian called it "a substantial retreat" for Mrs. Thatcher "in the face of overwhelming political pressure from virtually all the opposition parties."

The prime minister told the House of Commons that 77-year-old Lord Franks, a Liberal Party member of the House of Lords and ambassador to Washington from 1948 to 1952, will head the Privy Counsellors who will conduct the inquiry.

She said in a written answer to a legislator's query that the other members of the panel will be Conservative peers Viscount Watkinson and Lord Barber; a Labor peer, Lord Lever of Manchester; a former Labor home secretary, Melvyn Rees; and Sir Patrick Nairne, a former high civil servant and now master of St. Catherine's College, Oxford University.

Watkinson, 72, is a former defense minister, Barber is a former chancellor of the exchequer, and Lever is a former paymaster general.

They were chosen in consultation with opposition Labor Party leader Michael Foot and Liberal Party leader David Steel.

Franks said in a television interview Tuesday night that he hoped to complete the inquiry within six months.

The investigation will focus on Foreign Office and intelligence officials who negotiated the Argentine claim of sovereignty over the Falklands, and wrongly assessed Argentina's intentions on the South Atlantic archipelago 250 miles east of the tip of South America.

Mrs. Thatcher's government already has paid a price for failing to heed intelligence reports that Argentina was about to launch the invasion that came April 2.

The 74-day undeclared war cost Britain 255 lives and an estimated $1.72 billion in ships, planes, missiles and equipment. Argentina has officially acknowledged more than 650 men as dead or missing from the fighting.

Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington resigned April 5, bowing to fury from all parties — including many Conservatives — at Britain's failure to prevent the invasion. He was replaced by Sir Francis Pym.

Mrs. Thatcher brushed aside demands that she also should resign and dispatched a 100-ship armada across 8,000 miles of Atlantic Ocean to retake the Falklands.

Lightning can strike twice in same place

CHICAGO (AP) — There's an old saying that lightning never strikes twice in the same place, but it's a dangerous assumption, according to the National Safety Council.

One or two strokes of lightning occur every square mile in an average thunderstorm, the council said this week. In an area with 50 storms a year, 50 to 100 bolts of lightning could strike within half a mile of any given house, the council said. And at any moment, there are about 1,800 thunderstorms around the world.

While National Weather Service statistics show that fewer than 200 people are killed by lightning each year, the injury rate runs into the thousands and property damage costs reach more than $400 million annually.

Phil Dykstra, home department manager of the Safety Council, said the most dangerous time to be caught in a thunderstorm is just before the storm, when dark clouds appear and the air feels charged with electricity.

"If you are outdoors then, and your hair feels as if it's standing on end, you are being set up as a perfect lightning target," he said.

Police critical of Belushi

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police Chief Daryl Gates says he doubts the accuracy of published statements by a woman who said she injected cocaine and heroin into actor John Belushi before he died of a drug overdose.

At an informal news conference earlier this week, Gates was also harshly critical of the late comedian, saying Belushi "was nothing more than a guy looking for something and the only place he could find it was in drugs."

"He died vomiting in the toilet and lay on some bed nude and to me that's a disgusting way to die," Gates said. "Kids need to know that so we don't have this hero worship of a man who abused himself and really abused the public significantly."

A new investigation into Belushi's death was prompted by an article in the National Enquirer. It quoted Cathy Eveyln Smith as saying she administered an injection of heroin and cocaine to the 33-year-old Belushi before he died March 5 in a posh Hollywood bungalow.

Ms. Smith, 35 was questioned after Belushi's death and again last week in Toronto after the Enquirer article was published.

"We may be chasing something that is not the truth," Gates said, referring to the Enquirer article. He said he was satisfied with the initial investigation and reopened it only after seeing the published statements attributed to Ms. Smith.

An attorney for Ms. Smith, who was paid $15,000 for the interview, has said she was misrepresented by the Enquirer article.

"After all the very intensive (police) interviewing of Ms. Smith, suddenly, for a fee, supposedly she gives another interview and says a different thing, which tells us maybe we're not pursuing the truth on this occasion," Gates said.

"I trust the initial interview (with police investigators) rather than the paid one," he said.

Laetrile effective, Pauling says

BOSTON (AP) — Nobel Laureate Linus Pauling says there's evidence that Laetrile and metabolic therapy have some value against cancer, despite a major study that found the combination to be worthless.

In a letter in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, Pauling criticized the conclusions of a Mayo Clinic study conducted for the National Cancer Institute.

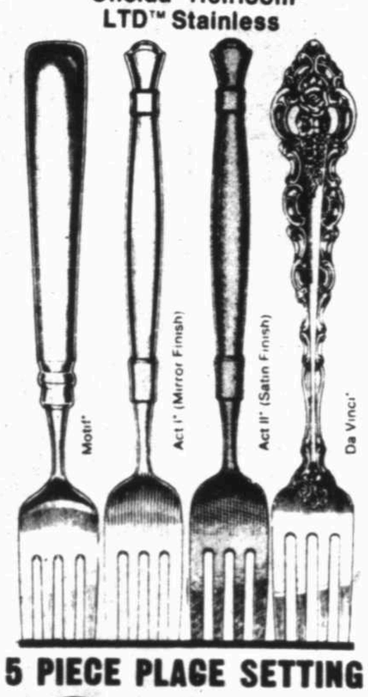

"It is my opinion," he wrote, "that there probably was a beneficial effect, including prolongation of survival."

Pauling, who won the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1954, noted that cancer patients treated with Laetrile and metabolic therapy survived an average of almost five months. He said other studies have shown that people with incurable cancer ordinarily survive about 1½ months.

China attempting to compete with Asia's biggest producers

By MICHAEL PARKS

Washington Post News Service

TIANJIN, China — In its drive to boost export earnings, China is attempting to compete head to head with some of Asia's biggest producers of low-cost consumer goods, but is finding that cheap labor alone does not give it a big competitive edge.

"We are newcomers trying to break into highly competitive markets, and it is tough," Liu Longyi, deputy director of the Tianjin Foreign Trade Corp., said. "We have to fight for a market share against long-established exporters. So far, we have done all right, but we need to do much better."

One of China's major industrial centers, Tianjin, on the Hai River, has found that its labor costs are lower than those of Taiwan, Hong Kong, South Korea or Singapore, but that it lacks their experience in marketing, flexibility in production, sophistication in packaging and effective means of quality control.

"Our industries must be modernized and our management improved if we are going to succeed in expanding our exports," Liu said in an interview here. "This is more difficult than perhaps we realized. Our efforts will pay off, I believe, but they will take time."

Since 1978, when China began its open-door economic policies emphasizing greater trade to stimulate development, Tianjin — the nation's third-largest city with a population of 6.28 million, including suburbs — has increased its exports an average of 30 percent annually, to $750 million last year. Overall, China's exports doubled, from $10 billion to $20.5 billion, in those four years.

But further export growth here depends on renovating and expanding Tianjin's textile mills and garment factories, which now account for nearly 70 percent of the city's export earnings, and importing new machinery and technology to upgrade other industries, including footwear, sporting goods, electronics, pharmaceuticals and chemicals, to meet international competition.

China's export drive is a key element in its overall economic development strategy. The foreign exchange earnings are essential to finance the import of advanced equipment needed to modernize the whole of Chinese industry.

Export industries are also viewed as a vehicle to introduce new technology and better management throughout the economy. And they are expected to stimulate faster, broader growth as they respond to world market conditions and draw on other sectors of the Chinese economy.

Designated an "export base" and given greater autonomy in foreign trade by the central government, Tianjin sees itself as a pioneer in this strategy, and among city officials there is a feeling of, "If we can't succeed, can China?"

"They do have determination," an American businessman with frequent dealings here said, "but they also face many limitations — in knowledge of the market, in their flexibility to meet it, in available cash, in their ability to change a system that is simply not export-oriented .... The jury is still out, I would say, on whether China can compete with other Asian exporters in Western markets or whether it will have to stick to producing hoes for Uganda."

Modernization of Tianjin's industries has begun, but slowly, because of China's shortage of capital. The city invested most of its funds in the textile industry, in which 80 percent of the equipment was 30 years old and obsolete in comparison with that of Taiwan, Hong Kong or South Korea. Now, Tianjin officials are seeking foreign investment for other selected export industries.

"We are particularly interested in joint ventures that bring us advanced technology and equipment, take self-financing with the output repaying the initial investment," Liu said. "For us, this is the path for the most rapid advance, and we think we can offer competitive advantages to our partners."

In one major deal, two Tianjin factories have begun with two other plants in Shanghai to produce Nike running shoes, with a target of 15 million pairs annually by 1985. Nike's investment in equipment for the factories will be repaid with the output.

Two Hong Kong companies have equipped an electronics factory here to produce 1 million cassettes a month in a similar joint venture, and Remy Martin, the French company, is a partner in a project to export white table wine made to its specifications at a Tianjin winery.

Still confounded by the difficulty of marketing its products abroad, Tianjin has entered into another partnership with a Japanese trading company to sell a broad range of consumer goods in Japan and other parts of Asia. "They have better knowledge of the market, as well as salesmanship skills that we don't have," a Tianjin trade official said. "We hope to learn from them."

To improve the attractiveness of its goods, many of which still come badly wrapped in brown paper, and the other Chinese goods exported through its port, Tianjin is seeking $57 million in foreign investment to underwrite about 40 percent of the cost of expanding its paper and packaging plants.

More is needed than just new investment, however, to expand Tianjin's exports, and trade officials acknowledge that a significant reorientation of the city's economy is required. "We have 4,000 factories, and about 1,000 are now involved in foreign trade, up from 600 three years ago," Liu said. "But still only about 10 percent of our output is exported, and it should be several times that."

A major difficulty is that Tianjin's economic development over the last three decades has been weighted toward heavy industry, which received 90 percent of all investment until 1979, rather than increasing production of consumer goods. Over the last three years, the output of light industry has risen 43 percent under China's new economic policies. And it now accounts for about two-thirds of total production here, compared with less than half before the reforms.

There is some irony in this reorientation. Before the communist takeover in 1949 Tianjin, then known as Tientsin, had been producing thousands of different, low-cost products for sale overseas, earning the foreign exchange needed to build up local industry and capitalizing, in effect, on cheap labor.

"There are quite important differences between then and now, as they will tell you." Fung Li-chong, a former Tianjin businessman and now a successful clothing manufacturer in Hong Kong, said on a recent trip back, "but the communists have discovered there was a natural economic logic to Tianjin as it was — a skilled labor force, a large area supplying raw materials, a port. Our slogan used to be, 'A good product at a low price,' and it is good to see they are going back to that."

Tianjin's old markets, however, have new suppliers, and trade officials find many of their prize products virtually unknown, except perhaps in Hong Kong and Southeast Asia. "It is a shock to some factory managers to find out their products have no reputation abroad and that a South Korean or Taiwanese firm sets the standard," a Japanese businessman with an office here said. "While China looked inward, everyone else overtook it."

Getting back into those markets is proving difficult, Liu acknowledged. "From our surveys, we know the demand is there for our textiles, clothing and other consumer products — good products at low prices," Liu said. "But the market is crowded, and we are also facing some government-imposed limitations, such as textile quotas in the United States. Slowly, however, we think we can build up our exports to three, four or five times their present levels and make them a major factor in our overall economic growth."

Secretary to annouce program

RARITAN, N.J. (AP) — An excellent safety record has won a chemical company an exemption from federal safety inspections under an agreement that's the first of its kind in the country, officials say.

Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan was scheduled to visit Ortho Diagnostics Systems Inc. today to announce the agreement between the company and his department's Occupational Safety and Health Administration, said Chester Fultz, a Labor Department spokesman.

Robert Andrews, a spokesman for Ortho Diagnostics, said the company's four plants qualified for the new program because they have safety records at or below the national average of 3.9 days lost because of injury per 100 workers.

"Ortho Diagnostic is zero for the past four years," Andrews said. "No one has been out because of injury or accident at the four plants. That accounts for over 7 million workdays."

Andrews said there are 1,700 workers at the plants in Raritan, Trenton, Williamsville, N.Y., and Westwood, Mass.

Under the agreement, Ortho Diagnostic, a division of Johnson & Johnson that manufactures chemical products for blood analyses, will run its own OSHA programs, Fultz said.

"The company will police itself," he said. "Rather than have OSHA go in there, they will be responsible for themselves."

Andrews said the company will develop voluntary health and safety programs to eliminate workplace hazards.

Managers having hard time after bank's collapse

By BILL SING
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

On some days during the last year, William Goldsmith's clients bought as much as $3 million in certificates of deposit from Penn Square Bank of Oklahoma City.

"It was a rapidly growing bank; it was a profitable bank," Goldsmith said in recalling why he and his Professional Asset Management company recommended the Oklahoma institution.

But this last week, some of Goldsmith's clients found out that they may lose some of their deposits in the wake of the bank's collapse on Monday.

And as a result, attention is being focused on Goldsmith and other "money brokers" — a relatively new, fast-growing breed of part-salesmen, part-financial advisers who sell large certificates of deposits for banks and savings and loan associations.

Money brokers have been around for at least a decade but have burgeoned recently in an environment of continued high interest rates, recession and corporate cash-flow problems.

To stay afloat, corporations have had to borrow unusually high amounts in short-term loans. This demand for short-term money has in turn led banks and S&Ls to search aggressively for funds — often in the form of large certificates of deposit of $100,000 or more — to fill the loan demand. Such jumbo certificates usually carry a higher interest rate, but amounts over $100,000 are not covered by government-backed insurance plans.

Because of the demand for big certificates, the money brokers — often former brokers or money managers for traditional brokerage houses such as Merrill Lynch and E.F. Hutton — have found a growing demand for their services, often from smaller banks and S&Ls who have more difficulty attracting big deposits.

Penn Square, a relatively small bank by national standards, apparently needed more and more cash for its growing portfolio of loans to oil and gas producers, drilling-rig operators and oil-service companies.

The large, traditional brokerage houses could have sold certificates for Penn Square, but by policy they normally sell only for the largest, most reputable banks, such as Bank of America and Citibank. In these cases, the size of the certificates is often in the multimillion-dollar range. Also, the brokerages often buy and sell big certificates for their own accounts, whereas money brokers only sell certificates to clients on a commission basis.

So the 11-2-year-old Professional Asset Management, based in Del Mar, Calif., near San Diego, and other money brokers sold certificates for Penn Square and others, often for very lucrative commissions. Professional Asset Management, received a fee of 15 basis points (0.15 percent) for each $1 million in certificates of deposit sold based on a one-year term. For a 90-day certificate, that translates into a commission of $375 for each $1 million.

A certificate salesman for Bache Halsey Stuart Shields Inc., a major traditional brokerage, earns $125 for a similar sale, said Jack Ben-Porat, a Bache vice president for institutional sales.

Goldsmith said the volume of business he handled for Penn Square varied widely, but on some days it reached several million dollars. And by many counts it appeared that Penn Square was far from insolvency before federal regulators closed it Monday because of bad loans.

Its independent auditor, New York-based Peat Marwick Mitchell & Co., gave the bank a clear opinion in its recent financial reports.

Unfortunately, critics charge, money brokers such as Goldsmith apparently did not scrutinize the bank any closer or examine the potential for cash-flow problems among the oil companies borrowing from Penn Square.

Some money brokers, the critics said, operate with staffs often as small as three or four people, and thus cannot conduct the type of industry research and analysis that major brokerage houses can.

Mal Nestlerode, executive vice president for the National Association of Federal Credit Unions, said there is evidence that most of the estimated 150 credit unions with uninsured deposits in Penn Square relied on the advice of the money brokers.

He noted that some money brokers might have overzealously sold certificates from shakier financial institutions because of the lucrative commissions and because the brokers have none of their own money at risk. He said he doubts that was the case with Penn Square, however.

Stormy meeting expected

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries gathered for their second emergency meeting of 1982 today and conference sources said the cartel is likely to reaffirm its current production ceiling and leave its pricing system unchanged.

The group's most pressing problem will be to stop excess oil production by Iran, Libya and Nigeria. Each of those countries is believed to be violating the individual quotas set at a special session last March.

Shortly after arriving for today's meeting, Iranian Oil Minister Mohammed Gharazi said Iran would not abide by its production limit of 1.2 million barrels a day, and would press for a higher quota.

Gharazi said Iran hoped to increase its production to 3 million barrels a day from the current level of about 2.2 million, and that Saudi Arabia would have to compensate for that increase by cutting its output. Gharazi did not say when Iran expected to reach the higher level.

He told reporters he still approves of OPEC's overall production ceiling of 17.5 million barrels a day, but is seeking a change in Iran's limit.

"We accept the 17.5 (million), but we don't accept our quota," he said. "That is our position."

While two key oil ministers urged earlier this week that production quotas remain unchanged, Venezuela's Humberto Calderon Berti has threatened to break his country's limit if others continued to exceed theirs.

A revolt against OPEC's self-imposed production ceiling could put new downward pressure on the price of oil by increasing supplies worldwide and possibly creating another glut.

Analysts see little chance that OPEC would let the system fall apart now. It has been one of OPEC's biggest successes and was the main reason oil prices stabilized last March. But as prices began rising in April, the temptation grew for OPEC members to sell as much oil as they could.

OPEC's 13 member countries agreed to their first-ever production ceiling in a meeting here March 20. The move was seen as an effort to keep prices and demand steady in the face of a continued worldwide oil glut.

On Wednesday, United Arab Emirates Oil Minister Mana Saeed Oteiba charged that some members had been exceeding their ceilings in recent weeks.

Their overproduction, he said, was a primary reason for the continued "softness" in worldwide oil markets.

Oteiba said ministers at today's session should urge OPEC's offenders to comply with their limits.

"The conference should ask various member countries to stick to their quotas," he told reporters Wednesday.

OPEC President Eduardo Ortega Gomez of Ecuador also urged that the ceilings be maintained, saying oil markets are not yet ready for increased production.

Plant close to schedule

DETROIT (AP) — Interior construction work on General Motors Corp.'s controversial Poletown assembly plant in the Detroit area is expected to begin this winter, the automaker says.

Work on the $500 million plant is progressing "pretty much according to schedule," GM President F. James McDonald told a meeting of the Hamtramck Rotary Club on Thursday.

He said the plant's roof should be in place by winter so work on the inside can begin.

The plant, straddling the Detroit-Hamtramck border, was the focus of national attention last year after residents fought attempts to be moved from their homes and businesses. Consumer advocate Ralph Nader intervened but the residents lost the fight in court and had to move to make way for the plant.

The area was called Poletown for its large population of people of Polish ancestry.

Originally scheduled to start operations in the spring of 1984, the plant's startup is now set for sometime in 1985 because of lagging car sales.

The facility, which will employ up to 6,000 workers, is to produce GM's Cadillac cars.

Melton files petition for reorganization

Negotiations are underway between T. June Melton III & Associates and the First National Bank of Midland as the result of what Melton describes as a "controversy" between the two parties.

Melton & Associates voluntarily filed a petition for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code on June 1. The action was taken "in order to prevent the First National Bank of Midland from foreclosing on a major asset of the company," according to a memo Melton prepared for his creditors.

That asset is not Wild River Canyon, Melton stressed. The water amusement park in western Midland was developed by the company and opened in the summer of 1980. The bank is trying to foreclose on the land under the park, however, and on Melton & Associates' acreage in a subdivision adjacent to, and surrounding, the park.

The move is not a court-ordered liquidation, but is a device giving Melton's construction and development company time to re-organize its debts with several creditors including the bank. The company will continue to operate under court supervision while it formulates a plan to pay its creditors.

Melton met with unsecured creditors in a preliminary meeting a week ago. A formal meeting was held July 6 with the secured creditors.

The company anticipates filing a plan of reorganization with these creditors within the next 120 days, according to the memo.

The status of Wild River Canyon has been shaky since this past spring. Several of the original investors, who own the facilities of the park in a limited partnership, wanted to sell it with the possible view of dismantling it and developing the land for residential use.

Melton & Associates stills holds a controlling interest in the park, along with a number of investors.

"To my knowledge, this (foreclosure and reorganization) will not affect the status of the park," Melton said. "We anticipate being open through Labor Day. If negotiations are successful, we anticipate the bankruptcy will be lifted within the next 30 days."

Wild River Canyon leases its land from Melton & Associates.The partners own the improvements to the land, or the actual buildings and facilities of Wild River Canyon.

Consultant to speak to WTGS

John Harms, exploration consultant, Littleton, Colo., will be the featured speaker at the West Texas Geological Society Meeting Tuesday. Harms will talk about "Clastic Depositional Models."

The meeting will begin at 11:30 a.m. at the Midland Hilton. The cost is $7.50. Reservations may be made by calling the Society at 915-683-1573.

Harms recently retired from Marathon Oil Company to form the international and domestic consulting firm of Harms and Brady. He worked for Marathon from 1959 until retiring. He was a manager of regional exploration, and has done basin research in Pakistan, Egypt, the North Sea, and Alaska. In his talk, Harms will review important advances in the study of clastic rocks, advances that may be happening or should be promoted.

U.S. Steel has cash flow problem

PITTSBURGH (AP) — U.S. Steel Corp. says it has a "cash flow problem and can't borrow money," according to a union leader attending talks aimed at solving economic problems for the company and its workers.

More than 100 district and local presidents of the United Steelworkers union from around the nation gathered behind closed doors Thursday for the first of two days of meetings with corporate executives for the nation's leading steel producer.

"The union laid out their problems and the company said they wouldn't turn a deaf ear," said Dick Grace, USW local president from McKeesport.

The meeting at the Hilton Hotel was closed to reporters. Participants were checked at the door for tape recorders, which were prohibited.

U.S. Steel officials declined comment after the session. But Mike Bonn, president of USW Local 2227 at the Clairton Works, said company executives were candid in discussing what they called steep labor costs.

"U.S. Steel didn't say what they wanted from us, but they have a cash flow problem and can't borrow money," Bonn said. "If they weren't in trouble, they wouldn't be that candid."

Weather blamed for poor June sales

NEW YORK (AP) — Cool weather and the continuing recession are being blamed for a poor sales showing in June by the largest merchandisers.

Sears, Roebuck and Co. sales fell 1 percent in June from June 1981, K mart Corp. was off 1.2 percent and J.C. Penney Co. sales advanced only 0.2 percent.

"The consumer still was basically unwilling to buy general merchandise in June," Monroe Greenstein, an analyst with Bear, Stearns & Co., said after the retailers released their June sales figures Thursday.

"The weakness, with the exception of video games and toys, was across the board," he said.

Sears, the largest general merchandise retailer, said sales fell to $1.86 billion from $1.88 billion. For the first five months of the fiscal year, sales at Chicago-based Sears were up 2 percent to $7.8 billion from $7.67 billion. Chairman Edward R. Telling attributed the June sales decrease to cooler weather that cut into seasonal purchases of such items as apparel and air conditioners.

No. 2 K mart, headquartered in Troy, Mich., said June sales slid to $1.59 billion from $1.6 billion. For the five months, sales were up 5.5 percent to $6.5 billion from $6.2 billion.

Thatcher adopts compromise in Falklands probe

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher apparently made some compromises in launching an investigation of why her Conservative government failed to stop Argentina's invasion of the Falkland Islands.

Mrs. Thatcher, riding high in the popularity polls after Britain's victory in the South Atlantic, originally demanded that the inquiry should give at least equal weight to the record of four previous governments, going back to 1965.

But political foes charged she was seeking to lighten the share of blame on her own administration, and Mrs. Thatcher announced Tuesday that the investigation merely would "take account" of relevant factors from past years in negotiating the islands' status.

The liberal newspaper The Guardian called it "a substantial retreat" for Mrs. Thatcher "in the face of overwhelming political pressure from virtually all the opposition parties."

The prime minister told the House of Commons that 77-year-old Lord Franks, a Liberal Party member of the House of Lords and ambassador to Washington from 1948 to 1952, will head the Privy Counsellors who will conduct the inquiry.

She said in a written answer to a legislator's query that the other members of the panel will be Conservative peers Viscount Watkinson and Lord Barber; a Labor peer, Lord Lever of Manchester; a former Labor home secretary, Melvyn Rees; and Sir Patrick Nairne, a former high civil servant and now master of St. Catherine's College, Oxford University.

Watkinson, 72, is a former defense minister, Barber is a former chancellor of the exchequer, and Lever is a former paymaster general.

They were chosen in consultation with opposition Labor Party leader Michael Foot and Liberal Party leader David Steel.

Franks said in a television interview Tuesday night that he hoped to complete the inquiry within six months.

The investigation will focus on Foreign Office and intelligence officials who negotiated the Argentine claim of sovereignty over the Falklands, and wrongly assessed Argentina's intentions on the South Atlantic archipelago 250 miles east of the tip of South America.

Mrs. Thatcher's government already has paid a price for failing to heed intelligence reports that Argentina was about to launch the invasion that came April 2.

The 74-day undeclared war cost Britain 255 lives and an estimated $1.72 billion in ships, planes, missiles and equipment. Argentina has officially acknowledged more than 650 men as dead or missing from the fighting.

Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington resigned April 5, bowing to fury from all parties — including many Conservatives — at Britain's failure to prevent the invasion. He was replaced by Sir Francis Pym.

Mrs. Thatcher brushed aside demands that she also should resign and dispatched a 100-ship armada across 8,000 miles of Atlantic Ocean to retake the Falklands.

Lightning can strike twice in same place

CHICAGO (AP) — There's an old saying that lightning never strikes twice in the same place, but it's a dangerous assumption, according to the National Safety Council.

One or two strokes of lightning occur every square mile in an average thunderstorm, the council said this week. In an area with 50 storms a year, 50 to 100 bolts of lightning could strike within half a mile of any given house, the council said. And at any moment, there are about 1,800 thunderstorms around the world.

While National Weather Service statistics show that fewer than 200 people are killed by lightning each year, the injury rate runs into the thousands and property damage costs reach more than $400 million annually.

Phil Dykstra, home department manager of the Safety Council, said the most dangerous time to be caught in a thunderstorm is just before the storm, when dark clouds appear and the air feels charged with electricity.

"If you are outdoors then, and your hair feels as if it's standing on end, you are being set up as a perfect lightning target," he said.

Police critical of Belushi

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police Chief Daryl Gates says he doubts the accuracy of published statements by a woman who said she injected cocaine and heroin into actor John Belushi before he died of a drug overdose.

At an informal news conference earlier this week, Gates was also harshly critical of the late comedian, saying Belushi "was nothing more than a guy looking for something and the only place he could find it was in drugs."

"He died vomiting in the toilet and lay on some bed nude and to me that's a disgusting way to die," Gates said. "Kids need to know that so we don't have this hero worship of a man who abused himself and really abused the public significantly."

A new investigation into Belushi's death was prompted by an article in the National Enquirer. It quoted Cathy Eveyln Smith as saying she administered an injection of heroin and cocaine to the 33-year-old Belushi before he died March 5 in a posh Hollywood bungalow.

Ms. Smith, 35 was questioned after Belushi's death and again last week in Toronto after the Enquirer article was published.

"We may be chasing something that is not the truth," Gates said, referring to the Enquirer article. He said he was satisfied with the initial investigation and reopened it only after seeing the published statements attributed to Ms. Smith.

An attorney for Ms. Smith, who was paid $15,000 for the interview, has said she was misrepresented by the Enquirer article.

"After all the very intensive (police) interviewing of Ms. Smith, suddenly, for a fee, supposedly she gives another interview and says a different thing, which tells us maybe we're not pursuing the truth on this occasion," Gates said.

"I trust the initial interview (with police investigators) rather than the paid one," he said.

Laetrile effective, Pauling says

BOSTON (AP) — Nobel Laureate Linus Pauling says there's evidence that Laetrile and metabolic therapy have some value against cancer, despite a major study that found the combination to be worthless.

In a letter in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, Pauling criticized the conclusions of a Mayo Clinic study conducted for the National Cancer Institute.

"It is my opinion," he wrote, "that there probably was a beneficial effect, including prolongation of survival."

Pauling, who won the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1954, noted that cancer patients treated with Laetrile and metabolic therapy survived an average of almost five months. He said other studies have shown that people with incurable cancer ordinarily survive about 1½ months.

China attempting to compete with Asia's biggest producers

By MICHAEL PARKS
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

TIANJIN, China — In its drive to boost export earnings, China is attempting to compete head to head with some of Asia's biggest producers of low-cost consumer goods, but is finding that cheap labor alone does not give it a big competitive edge.

"We are newcomers trying to break into highly competitive markets, and it is tough," Liu Longyi, deputy director of the Tianjin Foreign Trade Corp., said. "We have to fight for a market share against long-established exporters. So far, we have done all right, but we need to do much better."

One of China's major industrial centers, Tianjin, on the Hai River, has found that its labor costs are lower than those of Taiwan, Hong Kong, South Korea or Singapore, but that it lacks their experience in marketing, flexibility in production, sophistication in packaging and effective means of quality control.

"Our industries must be modernized and our management improved if we are going to succeed in expanding our exports," Liu said in an interview here. "This is more difficult than perhaps we realized. Our efforts will pay off, I believe, but they will take time."

Since 1978, when China began its open-door economic policies emphasizing greater trade to stimulate development, Tianjin — the nation's third-largest city with a population of 6.28 million, including suburbs — has increased its exports an average of 30 percent annually, to $750 million last year. Overall, China's exports doubled, from $10 billion to $20.5 billion, in those four years.

But further export growth here depends on renovating and expanding Tianjin's textile mills and garment factories, which now account for nearly 70 percent of the city's export earnings, and importing new machinery and technology to upgrade other industries, including footwear, sporting goods, electronics, pharmaceuticals and chemicals, to meet international competition.

China's export drive is a key element in its overall economic development strategy. The foreign exchange earnings are essential to finance the import of advanced equipment needed to modernize the whole of Chinese industry.

Export industries are also viewed as a vehicle to introduce new technology and better management throughout the economy. And they are expected to stimulate faster, broader growth as they respond to world market conditions and draw on other sectors of the Chinese economy.

Designated an "export base" and given greater autonomy in foreign trade by the central government, Tianjin sees itself as a pioneer in this strategy, and among city officials there is a feeling of, "If we can't succeed, can China?"

"They do have determination," an American businessman with frequent dealings here said, "but they also face many limitations — in knowledge of the market, in their flexibility to meet it, in available cash, in their ability to change a system that is simply not export-oriented .... The jury is still out, I would say, on whether China can compete with other Asian exporters in Western markets or whether it will have to stick to producing hoes for Uganda."

Modernization of Tianjin's industries has begun, but slowly, because of China's shortage of capital. The city invested most of its funds in the textile industry, in which 80 percent of the equipment was 30 years old and obsolete in comparison with that of Taiwan, Hong Kong or South Korea. Now, Tianjin officials are seeking foreign investment for other selected export industries.

"We are particularly interested in joint ventures that bring us advanced technology and equipment, take self-financing with the output repaying the initial investment," Liu said. "For us, this is the path for the most rapid advance, and we think we can offer competitive advantages to our partners."

In one major deal, two Tianjin factories have begun with two other plants in Shanghai to produce Nike running shoes, with a target of 15 million pairs annually by 1985. Nike's investment in equipment for the factories will be repaid with the output.

Two Hong Kong companies have equipped an electronics factory here to produce 1 million cassettes a month in a similar joint venture, and Remy Martin, the French company, is a partner in a project to export white table wine made to its specifications at a Tianjin winery.

Still confounded by the difficulty of marketing its products abroad, Tianjin has entered into another partnership with a Japanese trading company to sell a broad range of consumer goods in Japan and other parts of Asia. "They have better knowledge of the market, as well as salesmanship skills that we don't have," a Tianjin trade official said. "We hope to learn from them."

To improve the attractiveness of its goods, many of which still come badly wrapped in brown paper, and the other Chinese goods exported through its port, Tianjin is seeking $57 million in foreign investment to underwrite about 40 percent of the cost of expanding its paper and packaging plants.

More is needed than just new investment, however, to expand Tianjin's exports, and trade officials acknowledge that a significant reorientation of the city's economy is required. "We have 4,000 factories, and about 1,000 are now involved in foreign trade, up from 600 three years ago," Liu said. "But still only about 10 percent of our output is exported, and it should be several times that."

A major difficulty is that Tianjin's economic development over the last three decades has been weighted toward heavy industry, which received 90 percent of all investment until 1979, rather than increasing production of consumer goods. Over the last three years, the output of light industry has risen 43 percent under China's new economic policies. And it now accounts for about two-thirds of total production here, compared with less than half before the reforms.

There is some irony in this reorientation. Before the communist takeover in 1949 Tianjin, then known as Tientsin, had been producing thousands of different, low-cost products for sale overseas, earning the foreign exchange needed to build up local industry and capitalizing, in effect, on cheap labor.

"There are quite important differences between then and now, as they will tell you." Fung Li-chong, a former Tianjin businessman and now a successful clothing manufacturer in Hong Kong, said on a recent trip back, "but the communists have discovered there was a natural economic logic to Tianjin as it was — a skilled labor force, a large area supplying raw materials, a port. Our slogan used to be, 'A good product at a low price,' and it is good to see they are going back to that."

Tianjin's old markets, however, have new suppliers, and trade officials find many of their prize products virtually unknown, except perhaps in Hong Kong and Southeast Asia. "It is a shock to some factory managers to find out their products have no reputation abroad and that a South Korean or Taiwanese firm sets the standard," a Japanese businessman with an office here said. "While China looked inward, everyone else overtook it."

Getting back into those markets is proving difficult, Liu acknowledged. "From our surveys, we know the demand is there for our textiles, clothing and other consumer products — good products at low prices," Liu said. "But the market is crowded, and we are also facing some government-imposed limitations, such as textile quotas in the United States. Slowly, however, we think we can build up our exports to three, four or five times their present levels and make them a major factor in our overall economic growth."

Secretary to annouce program

RARITAN, N.J. (AP) — An excellent safety record has won a chemical company an exemption from federal safety inspections under an agreement that's the first of its kind in the country, officials say.

Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan was scheduled to visit Ortho Diagnostics Systems Inc. today to announce the agreement between the company and his department's Occupational Safety and Health Administration, said Chester Fultz, a Labor Department spokesman.

Robert Andrews, a spokesman for Ortho Diagnostics, said the company's four plants qualified for the new program because they have safety records at or below the national average of 3.9 days lost because of injury per 100 workers.

"Ortho Diagnostic is zero for the past four years," Andrews said. "No one has been out because of injury or accident at the four plants. That accounts for over 7 million workdays."

Andrews said there are 1,700 workers at the plants in Raritan, Trenton, Williamsville, N.Y., and Westwood, Mass.

Under the agreement, Ortho Diagnostic, a division of Johnson & Johnson that manufactures chemical products for blood analyses, will run its own OSHA programs, Fultz said.

"The company will police itself," he said. "Rather than have OSHA go in there, they will be responsible for themselves."

Andrews said the company will develop voluntary health and safety programs to eliminate workplace hazards.

Managers having hard time after bank's collapse

By BILL SING
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

On some days during the last year, William Goldsmith's clients bought as much as $3 million in certificates of deposit from Penn Square Bank of Oklahoma City.

"It was a rapidly growing bank; it was a profitable bank," Goldsmith said in recalling why he and his Professional Asset Management company recommended the Oklahoma institution.

But this last week, some of Goldsmith's clients found out that they may lose some of their deposits in the wake of the bank's collapse on Monday.

And as a result, attention is being focused on Goldsmith and other "money brokers" — a relatively new, fast-growing breed of part-salesmen, part-financial advisers who sell large certificates of deposits for banks and savings and loan associations.

Money brokers have been around for at least a decade but have burgeoned recently in an environment of continued high interest rates, recession and corporate cash-flow problems.

To stay afloat, corporations have had to borrow unusually high amounts in short-term loans. This demand for short-term money has in turn led banks and S&Ls to search aggressively for funds — often in the form of large certificates of deposit of $100,000 or more — to fill the loan demand. Such jumbo certificates usually carry a higher interest rate, but amounts over $100,000 are not covered by government-backed insurance plans.

Because of the demand for big certificates, the money brokers — often former brokers or money managers for traditional brokerage houses such as Merrill Lynch and E.F. Hutton — have found a growing demand for their services, often from smaller banks and S&Ls who have more difficulty attracting big deposits.

Penn Square, a relatively small bank by national standards, apparently needed more and more cash for its growing portfolio of loans to oil and gas producers, drilling-rig operators and oil-service companies.

The large, traditional brokerage houses could have sold certificates for Penn Square, but by policy they normally sell only for the largest, most reputable banks, such as Bank of America and Citibank. In these cases, the size of the certificates is often in the multimillion-dollar range. Also, the brokerages often buy and sell big certificates for their own accounts, whereas money brokers only sell certificates to clients on a commission basis.

So the 1 1-2-year-old Professional Asset Management, based in Del Mar, Calif., near San Diego, and other money brokers sold certificates for Penn Square and others, often for very lucrative commissions. Professional Asset Management, received a fee of 15 basis points (0.15 percent) for each $1 million in certificates of deposit sold based on a one-year term. For a 90-day certificate, that translates into a commission of $375 for each $1 million.

A certificate salesman for Bache Halsey Stuart Shields Inc., a major traditional brokerage, earns $125 for a similar sale, said Jack Ben-Porat, a Bache vice president for institutional sales.

Goldsmith said the volume of business he handled for Penn Square varied widely, but on some days it reached several million dollars. And by many counts it appeared that Penn Square was far from insolvency before federal regulators closed it Monday because of bad loans.

Its independent auditor, New York-based Peat Marwick Mitchell & Co., gave the bank a clear opinion in its recent financial reports.

Unfortunately, critics charge, money brokers such as Goldsmith apparently did not scrutinize the bank any closer or examine the potential for cash-flow problems among the oil companies borrowing from Penn Square.

Some money brokers, the critics said, operate with staffs often as small as three or four people, and thus cannot conduct the type of industry research and analysis that major brokerage houses can.

Mal Nestlerode, executive vice president for the National Association of Federal Credit Unions, said there is evidence that most of the estimated 150 credit unions with uninsured deposits in Penn Square relied on the advice of the money brokers.

He noted that some money brokers might have overzealously sold certificates from shakier financial institutions because of the lucrative commissions and because the brokers have none of their own money at risk. He said he doubts that was the case with Penn Square, however.

Stormy meeting expected

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries gathered for their second emergency meeting of 1982 today and conference sources said the cartel is likely to reaffirm its current production ceiling and leave its pricing system unchanged.

The group's most pressing problem will be to stop excess oil production by Iran, Libya and Nigeria. Each of those countries is believed to be violating the individual quotas set at a special session last March.

Shortly after arriving for today's meeting, Iranian Oil Minister Mohammed Gharazi said Iran would not abide by its production limit of 1.2 million barrels a day, and would press for a higher quota.

Gharazi said Iran hoped to increase its production to 3 million barrels a day from the currrent level of about 2.2 million, and that Saudi Arabia would have to compensate for that increase by cutting its output. Gharazi did not say when Iran expected to reach the higher level.

He told reporters he still approves of OPEC's overall production ceiling of 17.5 million barrels a day, but is seeking a change in Iran's limit.

"We accept the 17.5 (million), but we don't accept our quota," he said. "That is our position."

While two key oil ministers urged earlier this week that production quotas remain unchanged, Venezuela's Humberto Calderon Berti has threatened to break his country's limit if others continued to exceed theirs.

A revolt against OPEC's self-imposed production ceiling could put new downward pressure on the price of oil by increasing supplies worldwide and possibly creating another glut.

Analysts see little chance that OPEC would let the system fall apart now. It has been one of OPEC's biggest successes and was the main reason oil prices stabilized last March. But as prices began rising in April, the temptation grew for OPEC members to sell as much oil as they could.

OPEC's 13 member countries agreed to their first-ever production ceiling in a meeting here March 20. The move was seen as an effort to keep prices and demand steady in the face of a continued worldwide oil glut.

On Wednesday, United Arab Emirates Oil Minister Mana Saeed Oteiba charged that some members had been exceeding their ceilings in recent weeks.

Their overproduction, he said, was a primary reason for the continued "softness" in worldwide oil markets.

Oteiba said ministers at today's session should urge OPEC's offenders to comply with their limits.

"The conference should ask various member countries to stick to their quotas," he told reporters Wednesday.

OPEC President Eduardo Ortega Gomez of Ecuador also urged that the ceilings be maintained, saying oil markets are not yet ready for increased production.

Plant close to schedule

DETROIT (AP) — Interior construction work on General Motors Corp.'s controversial Poletown assembly plant in the Detroit area is expected to begin this winter, the automaker says.

Work on the $500 million plant is progressing "pretty much according to schedule," GM President F. James McDonald told a meeting of the Hamtramck Rotary Club on Thursday.

He said the plant's roof should be in place by winter so work on the inside can begin.

The plant, straddling the Detroit-Hamtramck border, was the focus of national attention last year after residents fought attempts to be moved from their homes and businesses. Consumer advocate Ralph Nader intervened but the residents lost the fight in court and had to move to make way for the plant.

The area was called Poletown for its large population of people of Polish ancestry.

Originally scheduled to start operations in the spring of 1984, the plant's startup is now set for sometime in 1985 because of lagging car sales.

The facility, which will employ up to 6,000 workers, is to produce GM's Cadillac cars.

Consultant to speak to WTGS

John Harms, exploration consultant, Littleton, Colo., will be the featured speaker at the West Texas Geological Society Meeting Tuesday. Harms will talk about "Clastic Depositional Models."

The meeting will begin at 11:30 a.m. at the Midland Hilton. The cost is $7.50. Reservations may be made by calling the Society at 915-683-1573.

Harms recently retired from Marathon Oil Company to form the international and domestic consulting firm of Harms and Brady. He worked for Marathon from 1959 until retiring. He was a manager of regional exploration, and has done basin research in Pakistan, Egypt, the North Sea, and Alaska. In his talk, Harms will review important advances in the study of clastic rocks, advances that may be happening or should be promoted.

Melton files petition for reorganization

Negotiations are underway between T. June Melton III & Associates and the First National Bank of Midland as the result of what Melton describes as a "controversy" between the two parties.

Melton & Associates voluntarily filed a petition for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code on June 1. The action was taken "in order to prevent the First National Bank of Midland from foreclosing on a major asset of the company," according to a memo Melton prepared for his creditors.

That asset is not Wild River Canyon, Melton stressed. The water amusement park in western Midland was developed by the company and opened in the summer of 1980. The bank is trying to foreclose on the land under the park, however, and on Melton & Associates' acreage in a subdivision adjacent to, and surrounding, the park.

The move is not a court-ordered liquidation, but is a device giving Melton's construction and development company time to re-organize its debts with several creditors including the bank. The company will continue to operate under court supervision while it formulates a plan to pay its creditors.

Melton met with unsecured creditors in a preliminary meeting a week ago. A formal meeting was held July 6 with the secured creditors.

The company anticipates filing a plan of reorganization with these creditors within the next 120 days, according to the memo.

The status of Wild River Canyon has been shaky since this past spring. Several of the original investors, who own the facilities of the park in a limited partnership, wanted to sell it with the possible view of dismantling it and developing the land for residential use.

Melton & Associates stills holds a controlling interest in the park, along with a number of investors.

"To my knowledge, this (foreclosure and reorganization) will not affect the status of the park," Melton said. "We anticipate being open through Labor Day. If negotiations are successful, we anticipate the bankruptcy will be lifted within the next 30 days."

Wild River Canyon leases its land from Melton & Associates.The partners own the improvements to the land, or the actual buildings and facilities of Wild River Canyon.

U.S. Steel has cash flow problem

PITTSBURGH (AP) — U.S. Steel Corp. says it has a "cash flow problem and can't borrow money," according to a union leader attending talks aimed at solving economic problems for the company and its workers.

More than 100 district and local presidents of the United Steelworkers union from around the nation gathered behind closed doors Thursday for the first of two days of meetings with corporate executives for the nation's leading steel producer.

"The union laid out their problems and the company said they wouldn't turn a deaf ear," said Dick Grace, USW local president from McKeesport.

The meeting at the Hilton Hotel was closed to reporters. Participants were checked at the door for tape recorders, which were prohibited.

U.S. Steel officials declined comment after the session. But Mike Bonn, president of USW Local 2227 at the Clairton Works, said company executives were candid in discussing what they called steep labor costs.

"U.S. Steel didn't say what they wanted from us, but they have a cash flow problem and can't borrow money," Bonn said. "If they weren't in trouble, they wouldn't be that candid."

Weather blamed for poor June sales

NEW YORK (AP) — Cool weather and the continuing recession are being blamed for a poor sales showing in June by the largest merchandisers.

Sears, Roebuck and Co. sales fell 1 percent in June from June 1981, K mart Corp. was off 1.2 percent and J.C. Penney Co. sales advanced only 0.2 percent.

"The consumer still was basically unwilling to buy general merchandise in June," Monroe Greenstein, an analyst with Bear, Stearns & Co., said after the retailers released their June sales figures Thursday.

"The weakness, with the exception of video games and toys, was across the board," he said.

Sears, the largest general merchandise retailer, said sales fell to $1.86 billion from $1.88 billion. For the first five months of the fiscal year, sales at Chicago-based Sears were up 2 percent to $7.8 billion from $7.67 billion. Chairman Edward R. Telling attributed the June sales decrease to cooler weather that cut into seasonal purchases of such items as apparel and air conditioners.

No. 2 K mart, headquartered in Troy, Mich., said June sales slid to $1.59 billion from $1.6 billion. For the five months, sales were up 5.5 percent to $6.5 billion from $6.2 billion.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Sha-Jam Corp. recently filed for permits to drill two wells in Menard County. They are included in the report below. Although the firm listed a Midland address on the W-1s, it has no Midland phone number. We are therefore unable to obtain drilling reports for these wells in our usual fashion. Sha-Jam's wells will be carried as locations until we are given a phone number, or Sha-Jam begins providing us with reports, as do many operators.

Survival suits may have saved some rig victims

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some of the 84 men who died in the sinking of the drilling rig Ocean Ranger might have lived if the vessel had carried survival suits to protect them from the frigid North Atlantic, the National Transportation Safety Board says.

The board formally recommended on Thursday that all U.S. drilling rigs operating in cold water carry the suits. The recommendation went to the Coast Guard, which said it hopes to propose regulations in September.

Even though three rescue vessels were on the scene within an hour, the 84 crewmen died when the $125 million drilling rig sank in stormy seas 175 miles off the Newfoundland coast on Feb. 15.

Only 22 bodies were recovered. Autopsies showed all 22 died of hypothermia — loss of body heat — because of exposure to the 31-degree water. At that temperature, a person can die within 15 minutes and can live no longer than 45 minutes.

"The Ocean Ranger's lifeboats provided some exposure protection," the board said. "But many persons aboard entered the water before the rescue boats arrived, and others entered the water when (a) lifeboat capsized as they attempted to board the Seaforth Highlander (a rescue boat)."

"... Had the persons aboard the Ocean Ranger been wearing exposure suits, their survival time would have been extended by several hours, increasing their chances for rescue," it said.

The company that operated the Ocean Ranger, not waiting for the board's recommendation, ordered 4,300 of the exposure suits for its rigs in May at a cost of about $325 apiece.

Board member G.H. Patrick Bursley told a news conference he couldn't speculate how many men would have lived had the suits been available, but knew of at least eight. They were crewmen tossed into the water when a lifeboat capsized after the Seaforth Highlander attempted to toss it a rescue line.

"The master of the rescue vessel said he saw eight or nine men clinging to the lifeboat, but the men became immobilized and unable to respond to the rescuers before they could be pulled from the ocean," Bursley said. "All of them died because of brief exposure to the water."

The NTSB recommendation was issued although the the board has not completed its investigation of the Ocean Ranger's sinking. Bursley said the board expects to get more information on the accident from Canadian efforts to dive to the wreck, which is resting upside-down in about 250 feet of water.

Werner Siems, a Coast Guard spokesman, said Adm. Henry Bell, chairman of the joint NTSB-Coast Guard investigating team, made a similar recommendation for survival suits in April to Adm. John B. Hayes, then commandant of the Coast Guard.

Siems said proposed regulations are now being drafted and may be published for public comment in September.

Company solicited illegally

ANCHORAGE (AP) — Authorities say a Texas-based oil and gas company has solicited illegally thousands of dollars from Alaskans for investment in a questionable oilwell operation in Louisiana.

The state Division of Banking and Securities has ordered Monarch Oil & Gas Corp., to stop selling securities in Alaska. The state obtained a cease-and-desist order against Monarch last week, but the Anchorage Times reported Thursday that sales continue.

State securities examiner Edward Watkins said neither the company nor its agents are registered to sell securities in Alaska as required by law.

But the Times said Monarch sales agent Merrill Berg said the company and its agents are registered in Alaska.

The state officials said they suspect Monarch may be no more than a so-called "boiler room operation" where sales personnel sitting in a room full of telephones make call after call to potential investors looking for tax shelters in oil and gas wells which might not even exist.

Limited partnerships in Louisiana wells are being offered for $5,000 or more. Monarch also asks for a $15,000 note and promises the investor substantial tax savings on the total $20,000 investment.

Chief Examiner Lawrence Carroll said it is impossible to determine whether the operation is genuine, but the failure to register raises suspicions.

The state also suspects Monarch is the same company that operated illegally in Alaska earlier in the year under the name of Olympic Oil & Gas Co.

Texaco region consolidated

Texaco U.S.A. announced this week the formation of a new southwest region with headquarters in El Paso, resulting from a consolidation of the former Casper, Wyoming, and El Paso areas.

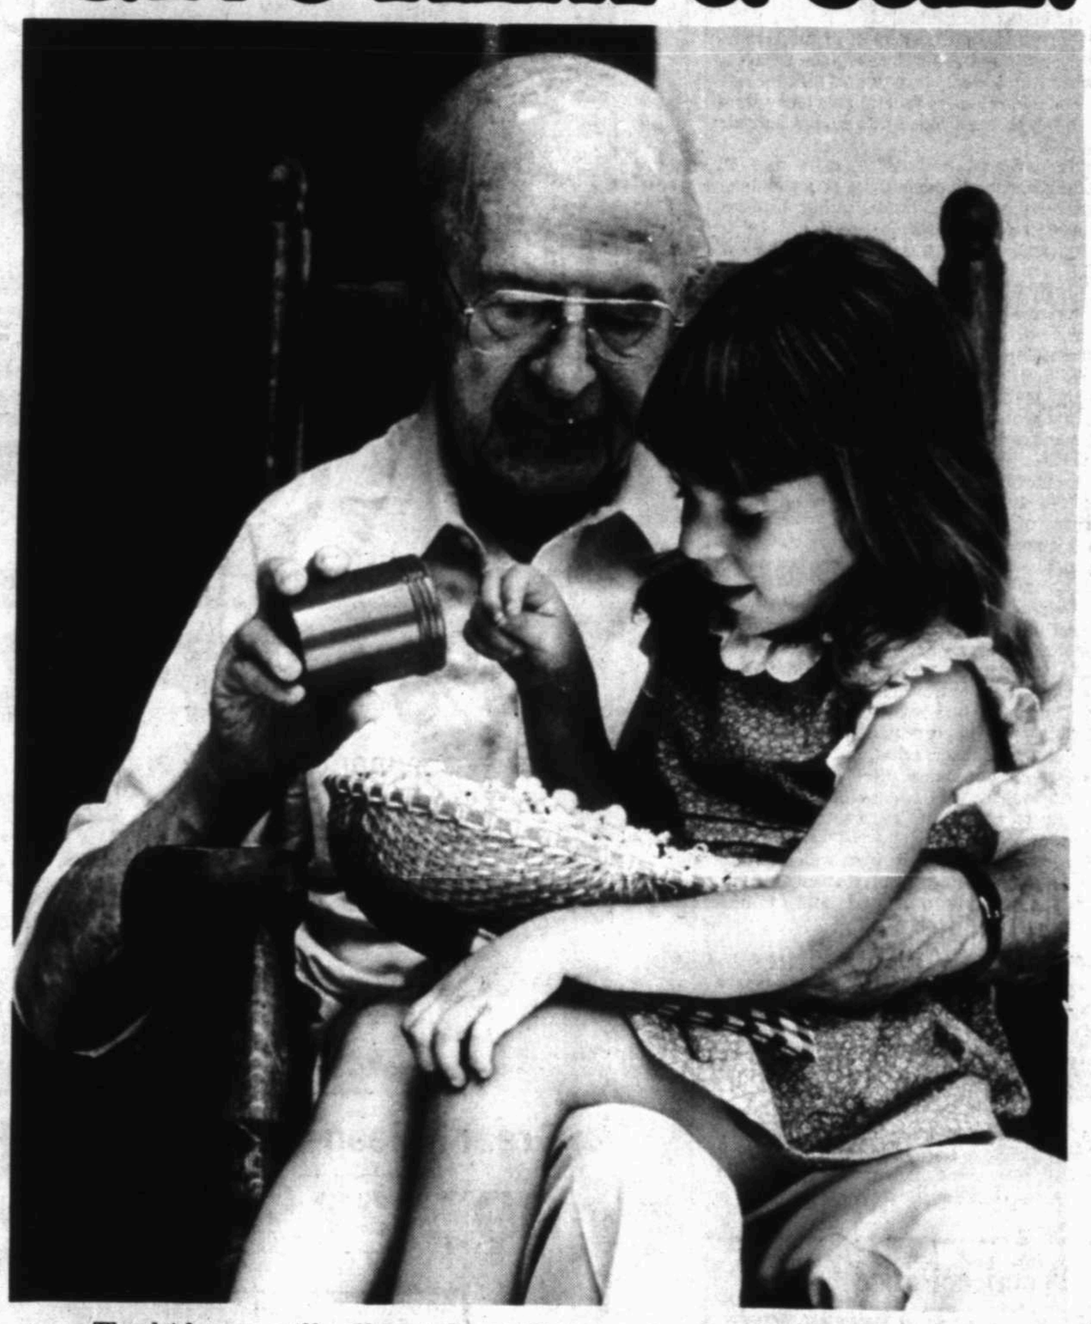

The new region will be responsible for coordinating refining, marketing and supply activities for Texaco U.S.A. in 10 states, including West Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and parts of Idaho, Nevada, South Dakota and Nebraska.

The re-alignment is part of a nationwide program by the company to place Texaco U.S.A in a more advantageous position and to provide more efficient services to its retail and wholesale customers, said a Texaco spokesman.

Thomas B. Meadows, previously manager of the El Paso area, has been named new manager of the southwest region. He is a 1950 graduate of Texas A & M University. He joined Texaco's marketing department in Houston that same year, and has served in various positions with the company since then. He has been manager of the El Paso area since 1979.

Let Grandpa know the kids miss him.

Give him a call.

The kids are still talking about their weekend with Grandpa. And they want to visit him again. Even if you live in Houston and he lives in El Paso, you can still stay close... by phone.

That's because Long Distance is the little touch that says so much. And when you call on the weekend you can say so much... for less. Just call between 11 pm Friday and 5 pm Sunday, or weeknights between 11 pm and 8 am.

This weekend call anywhere in Texas and talk

10 minutes for $2.34. Or less.

Long Distance. The little touch that says so much.

Investments of unsecured debts, deposits may be curtailed

By MARTIN BARON
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post NewsService

NEW YORK — Dismayed by the failure of Penn Square Bank, several large money-market funds said Thursday that they would curtail investments in unsecured debt and uninsured deposits of major banks that face big losses from the collapse of the Oklahoma City institution.

A number of money-market officials said the failure had rocked confidence in the financial diligence of certain major banks — some of which already were being shunned by money managers as overly aggressive in their lending and worrisomely weak in making full disclosure of problem loans.

"The credibility of the banking industry is a little bit on the weak side — with certain banks particularly," said a credit analyst at one major money-market fund, who asked for anonymity.

Money funds have emerged unscathed so far from the Penn Square affair. There have been no reports that any money fund had invested in securities or certificates of deposit issued by the Oklahoma bank. While a spokesman for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. said the agency does not know whether any money funds would be hurt, a key Securities and Exchange Commission official said he doubted that any money funds were significantly involved.

With less than $400 million in assets, Penn Square did not meet the normal criteria for investment used by almost all money funds. Most funds invest only in institutions with more than 1 billion in assets. Penn Square's problems had become widely known, and funds usually restrict their investments to top-rated financial institutions only.

"Most money market funds are very restrictive in their credit policies," said Susan Silbert, portfolio manager of Los Angeles-based Transamerica Cash Reserves, a money market fund.

But the incident is bound to rattle investors and money fund managers. "This should shake people up, no doubt about it," said Alan Schreiber, vice president of T. Rowe Price Associates, a Baltimore-based mutual fund group. "People are going to take a loss in a bank; holy cow, nobody's lost money in a bank in a long time."

Penn Square, the fourth largest bank in Oklahoma, was closed last Monday by federal regulators, who declared it insolvent because of large loan losses. The regulators are currently liquidating its remaining accounts. Much of the blame for its collapse has been placed on the bank's aggressive lending to oil and gas producers, who are hard hit by the recession.

While managers of some money funds said the Penn Square collapse would not affect their investments in major banks, others said they were unlikely to add to their holdings of securities of institutions that have become embroiled in the affair.

If such sentiments become widespread within the $200 billion money fund industry — and so far they have not — the cost of funds to banking companies such as Chicago-based Continental Illinois Corp., Seafirst Corp. of Seattle and Chicago-based Northern Trust Corp. could rise. Close observers say, however, that so far those banks are not being forced to pay higher rates to attract big depositors such as money market funds because of the Penn Square collapse.

Continental Illinois bought about $1 billion in energy-related loans originated by Penn Square and is expected to lose between $120 million and $200 million before taxes in the second quarter as a result; Seafirst, which bought about $400 million in loans, said its losses have not been determined, and Northern Trust, which bought about $125 million in loans from Penn Square, has increased its loan loss reserve by $8 million as a result.

Said one portfolio manager of Continental Illinois: "I'm not going to purchase any more money in it until this all settles down."

Continental Illinois ca.e in for particular criticism from one money manager because it failed to write off loans bought from Penn Square until the Oklahoma institution was declared insolvent. And the money manager said the whole affair had cast doubt on previous claims by Continental Illinois that it reviewed the Penn Square-originated loans wih as much care as those it made on its own.

Experts say New England still vulnerable to cutoff

By BILL STALL
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — In spite of greatly improved oil supplies, a large number of New England energy experts believe the region is just as vulnerable to a major energy supply cutoff as it was four years ago, before the Iranian revolution created turmoil in the world oil market.

This view prevails even though the area's dependence on oil has declined by about 10 percent during the past several years, shows a survey conducted by the New England Energy Congress.

Another major finding of the telephone survey was that a substantial number of energy experts sharply disagreed with the Reagan administration's energy policy of keeping government out of the energy business and letting market forces determine fuel use, supply and demand and prices.

For instance, 83 percent of those queried disagreed with the Reagan administration view that the federal government should have little to do with research and development of renewable energy resources.

"The respondents felt strongly that federal government does, indeed, have an important role to play in shaping national energy policy, despite current trends in Washington," the survey authors said.

Despite the disagreement over Reagan energy policy, there still was considerable sympathy for letting the market set supply and price. For instance, 56 percent opposed federal supports, such as loan guarantees, for the construction of synthetic fuels projects.

The survey concluded: "Many who agree, for example, that the government should subsidize the Solar and Conservation Bank, did so as an effort to restore balance to federal energy subsidies. Their preference would be to eliminate all subsidies."

On specific questions, however, most of the respondents favored continued federal assistance in areas like conservation and weatherization of low-income homes and implementation of federal efficiency standards for home appliances like refrigerators and air conditioners.

The energy congress staff talked to more than 70 people, including corporate executives, officeholders, environmental activists, consultants, public utilities officials and academic specialists.

One of the questions asked was, "Do you think New England is in a better position to cope with an energy supply curtailment now than it was in 1978?"

Half those surveyed said yes, but 36 percent said no and 14 percent were listed as "uncertain."

Much has been done in recent years to relieve New England of its "crushing 80 percent dependence" on oil for heating, transportation and other uses, the report said. This is due partly to conservation and the use of wood, wind, solar, hydroelectric and other non-petroleum fuels.

"This satisfaction is tempered by the sobering fact that the six New England states still rely on oil for over 70 percent of their energy needs," the report said. "Further, consumers in these northern states continue to pay an average of 25 percent more per unit of energy than the nation as a whole."

A majority of the respondents said conservation is the single most important energy goal for the region during the next five years.

The report, edited by Lock Pawlick, said, "While New England still relies on foreign sources to provide almost three-fourths of its petroleum needs, the dramatic reduction of oil imports nationwide may help explain why energy conservation, not energy independence, was mentioned most often by respondents when asked to identify the energy issues they felt were most important for the region to address in the next five years."

The major emphasis of the Reagan administration has been to increase domestic production through accelerated leasing of federal lands and offshore waters for oil and gas drilling.

1982 going good for Kite

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

Tom Kite stepped up to the Green Tree Country Club driving range and began his exhibition with a demonstration of how to hit the wedge. O'oohhh'sand aaahhh's rumbled through the attentive crowd as he casually put his first four shots within a five-foot circle about 70 yards down range. It was clear that this kind of mastery over the little white ball could only come from a professional golfer.

Most people thought they were learning some of the finer points of the game but what they didn't realize is that, as Kite weaved his way through the use of each club and some of the basics of golf, he was improving his own game.

"These kind of exhibitions are good for me," he said. "They remind me of what I'm doing. It's a good check on my game.

After watching the two-hour session it hardly seems necessary for Kite to work on improving his game. But being the consummate professional he is, Kite hit ball after ball while fielding questions and giving pointers to those in attendance. All of this following 27 holes of golf he played earlier in the day.

Kite not only exhibited a mastery over the golf ball but with his humor and quite charm he mesmorized the crowd as well.

FOLLOWING THE exhibition Kite talked about the 1982 season with confidence. "This year my game has been pretty good, not great but good." he said.

Good indeed. He started the season with a victory in the Bayhill Classic and since then has captured second at Inverrary, West Chester and in the Bob Hope Invitational, while finishing third in two other tournaments.

But his game hasn't been steady all the time. "I played well the first month and a half but after the Masters I struggled around." he said. "The demand for my time caused practice time to shorten and I developed some bad habits."

But, following his second-place finish at Westchester two weeks ago, Kite feels his game has come around. "There's nothing wrong with my game right now." he said.

The timing couldn't be better as the British Open is just around the corner. "I'm playing well and my chances are good." he said. "But I've never played, or even seen the course in Troon. The only thing I've heard is that it is a tough course."

Kite said Tom Watson, Jack Nicklaus, Craig Stadler and Bill Rodgers are the ones to keep an eye on in the British Open. "Tom Weiskopf could be tough too," he said, "the last time it was held at Troon, he won it."

Kite believes the key to his success in the British Open will be his ability to change. "I have to find out if Troon suits my game," he said. And if it doesn't? "I'm playing well and should be able to adjust."

KITE WILL leave for England on Saturday and arrive Sunday, which points out one of the drawbacks to the British Open, jet lag. "It takes about two days to recover from the trip," he said.

Reserve players, pitchers named to 1982 All-Star squads

Lasorda happy with NL team

NEW YORK (AP) — Los Angeles Dodgers Manager Tom Lasorda has no complaints about the National League squad he will manage in Tuesday night's All-Star Game.

"(NL President) Chub Feeney and I are very happy with the team we have selected," said Lasorda, who will attempt to extend the league's ten-game winning streak over the American League in the game at Montreal. Lasorda added that he and Feeney "are only sorry that some very deserving players could not also make the team."

Lasorda and the league rounded out the NL squad Thursday by adding 12 reserves to the eight starters selected in fan balloting. Included are two players — Pittsburgh first baseman Jason Thompson and San Diego outfielder Ruppert Jones — whose names were missing from the computer-card ballots fans used to vote for the All-Star teams.

Twelve American League reserves also were announced Thursday, and Manager Billy Martin of the Oakland A's also named two men whose names were omitted from the punch cards — Kansas City designated hitter Hal McRae and Minnesota first baseman Kent Hrbek.

Hrbek is one of four first basemen chosen by Martin. The others are Eddie Murray of Baltimore, Cecil Cooper of Milwaukee and Carl Yastrzemski of Boston. Rounding out the squad are Detroit catcher Lance Parrish, Kansas City second baseman Frank White, third basemen Toby Harrah of Cleveland and Buddy Bell of Texas and outfielders Dave Winfield of New York, Willie Wilson of Kansas City and Ben Oglivie of Milwaukee.

They join starters Carlton Fisk of Chicago at catcher, Rod Carew of California at first base, Bobby Grich of California at second, Milwaukee's Robin Yount at shortstop, third baseman George Brett of Kansas City and outfielders Rickey Henderson of Oakland and Reggie Jackson and Fred Lynn of California.

JOINING THOMPSON and Jones on the NL team are the Smiths of St. Louis — Lonnie, the outfielder, and Ozzie, the shortstop. Lasorda also named two players from his own Dodger club — outfielder Dusty Baker and second baseman Steve Sax.

Completing the list of back-ups are Montreal first baseman Al Oliver, outfielder Leon Durham of Chicago, third basemen Bob Horner of Atlanta and Ray Knight of Houston, and catchers Tony Pena of Pittsburgh and John Stearns of New York.

The NL starting team has Montreal's Gary Carter at catcher, Pete Rose of Philadelphia at first base, Manny Trillo of Philadelphia at second base, Dave Concepcion of Cincinnati at shortstop, Mike Schmidt of Philadelphia at third base, and outfielders Dale Murphy of Atlanta and Andre Dawson and Tim Raines of Montreal.

The selection of reserves was of particular interest in light of some complaints about the starting teams selected by the fans. Lasorda dismissed such criticism, saying of the fans, "They should vote because it's their game. They support us and we owe it to the fans to let them select the All-Stars."

Martin plans to start Eckersley

NEW YORK (AP) — Dennis Eckersley and Mark Clear of the Boston Red Sox and Ron Guidry and Rich Gossage of the New York Yankees highlight the eight-man American League pitching staff named Thursday that will try and break a 10-game AL losing streak in baseball's All-Star Game.

Oakland Manager Billy Martin said he plans to start the right-handed Eckersley, a side-armer, against the predominantly right-handed hitting National League lineup Tuesday night at Montreal, where the AL will try for its first victory in the mid-summer classic since a 6-4 victory in 1971.

Milwaukee's Rollie Fingers, winner of last year's AL Cy Young and Most Valuable Player awards, along with Dan Quisenberry of the Kansas City Royals — leading the majors with 22 saves this season — will join Clear and Gossage in the bullpen.

JOINING THE relievers are Jim Clancy of the Toronto Blue Jays and Floyd Bannister of the Seattle Mariners, who the AL leader in strikeouts.

Martin and AL President Lee MacPhail, who together picked the staff, passed over 10-game winners Pete Vuckovich of Milwaukee and LaMarr Hoyt of the Chicago White Sox in making their pitching selections.

Eckersley, 9-6 with a 3.25 earned run average and three shutouts, is the top winner on the AL staff. He would be the first Boston pitcher to start an All-Star game since Bill Monboquette in 1960.

Clear is 6-3 with 11 saves and a 1.92 ERA, while Quisenberry is 4-3 with a 2.13 ERA and 22 saves.

Fingers is 5-5 with a 2.50 ERA and 16 saves. Last year, he won six games, saved 28 and posted a 1.04 ERA. His 288 career saves are more than any pitcher in history. He was the losing pitcher in the 1981 All-Star Game, won by the National League 5-4 at Cleveland.

Gossage, selected to an All-Star team for the ninth time, was the loser in the 1978 Game when he gave up four runs in one inning as the NL won 7-3. He is 3-3 with 15 saves and a 2.45 ERA.

Guidry is 8-3 with a 3.53 ERA. Bannister is 8-4 with a 2.85 ERA and a league-leading 106 strikeouts. Clancy is 7-5 with a 3.33 ERA.

Martin said he would formally announce his starting pitcher Monday when he chooses his lineup.

The National League's eight-man staff, named Wednesday, includes Los Angeles' Fernando Valenzuela, who leads the majors with 12 victories, Steve Carlton of Philadelphia, and Steve Rogers of Montreal, who leads the league with a 2.04 ERA.

Also on the staff, selected by Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda and NL officials, are Phil Niekro of Atlanta, Cincinnati teammates Mario Soto and Tom Hume, Steve Howe of Los Angeles, and Greg Minton of San Francisco.

Zokol rocks into tie for first

By GEORGE STRODE
AP Sports Writer

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Canadian Dick Zokol has found a revolutionary way to shake the tension of playing his rookie season on the American golf tour.

He listens to soft rock music through earphones while he plays the game. Zokol tried the strategy for the first time Thursday. It worked.

He fired his best round as a professional, a 7-under-par 65, that earned him a piece of the opening Greater Milwaukee Open lead with Scott Simpson, Jay Cudd, David Edwards and Terry Diehl.

"It paid dividends," he said.

Such a lofty spot on the leaderboards is unaccustomed for him.

Zokol never has been in the top 20 of a tournament. In fact, he's made money in only three of his 20 American starts, standing 210th on the current money list with $2,743.

The former Brigham Young University standout admits the pressure has been immense in his first pro season.

"It's been a tough year and I knew it would be. I'm just trying to perserve. I've got to convince myself I can play with these guys, players I've seen on TV for the last 10 years. I know my game is good enough," he said.

If he never wins another dollar, Zokol will be known as one of the sport's pioneers with his headset.

JACK TUTHILL, the PGA Tour's tournament director and a 22-year veteran of the American circuit, believes Zokol's music listening is a first.

"And I see nothing wrong with it either. It might block out distractions," he said. "We've had a lot of guys listen to ball games, both baseball and football, but never this," said Tuthill.

Zokol wore the headset while he was walking between shots over the 7,010-yard Tuckaway Country Club course.

"I was out in my own little world with my music box. It was soothing. It helped take away the pressure," he said.

Except for Simpson, those at the top are all struggling to conquer the tour.

Simpson, of course, has established himself with four-year earnings of $431,000, nearly one-third of that coming in 1982. He won the 1980 Western Open.

Diehl hasn't won since the 1974 Texas Open, his lone victory. Of his 39 rounds this year, only two have been under 70. He beat his lowest 18 this year by four strokes.

Edwards' only triumph came in the 1980 Disney World team title title, playing with his brother, Danny.

Cudd, also in his rookie season, posted his best tour score. To do it, he birdied the last hole, late in the sunny, pleasant day.

The field is playing for a first prize of $45,000 from the total purse of $250,000.

In the first All-Star baseball game back in 1933, Carl Hubbell struck out what five American League sluggers consecutively?

Cubs progress gradual in winning of Alamo City

SAN ANTONIO—Rome wasn't built in a day and neither was it conquered overnight, so the Midland Cubs, perhaps, have cause to come home to Midland satisfied with their progress.

In the season's opening series, the Cubs stormed into San Antonio and returned to Midland like lambs after five straight losses.

This time the Cubs left, their ears ringing from a 3-2 loss Thursday night, but only because they didn't get a split in the six-game series.

That gives Midland a 2-8 record in the Alamo City.

IN ADDITION to the final-game defeat, catcher Mike Diaz had his 11-game hitting streak ruptured by San Antonio's Tom Klawitter, the U. Wisconsin product, who stymied the Cubs on seven hits.

Perhaps it was prompted by the ending of the hit string, but Diaz was ejected in the ninth after being called out on strikes by plate umpire Pam Postema, in a feud that dates back to the Cubs last homestand.

Klawitter, now 6-7, made just one bad pitch when he served up a home run ball to Fritz Connally, who promptly swatted it into the darkness beyond left field, it was his 20th. Henry Cotto, who had singled, was on at the time, and it gave Midland a 2-1 lead.

However, the Dodgers, who don't surrender many runs in this park, evened it against Doug Welenc, who went the distance, with a run in the fourth when Alex Traveras knocked his second homer over the left field barrier, the only earned run the Los Angeles farmhands were to score.

The second inning run came when Tony Brewer singled stole second and raced to third on the overthrow. He then scored on Ed Amelung's grounder to second.

Cowboys sign Hunter to series of contracts

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys have signed Monty Hunter, a 6-0, 201-pound safety from Salem College, to a series of one-year contracts, Cowboy spokesman Greg Aiello said Thursday.

Hunter was the National Football League team's second draft pick in the fourth round, Aiello said.

The Cowboys have 14 of 16 rookies, Aiello said. Holdouts are No. 2 draft pick Jeff Rohrer, a linebacker from Yale, and third-round choice Jim Eliopulos, a linebacker from the University of Wyoming.

Rookies report July 18 to California Lutheran College in Thousand Oaks, Calif.

Tropical surroundings add to bonefishing pleasure

The last leg of the Caribbean-Cozumel-Camp Pez Maya journey ended on a good note. Not only did our bonefishing adventures stir a new interest in my blood because of the elusiveness of this gray ghost, but the tropical lagoon surroundings made this bonefishing capital of the world one of the most unforgettable places in the world.

If weather had permitted, we might have been expert bonefish anglers by the time we left Pez Maya, but weather always seems to play havoc with fishing trips, especially those I attend. But, I will definately hit this beautiul Caribbean region again and try to perfect my bonefishing experience. I don't know whether that's possible or not, but it's sure worth a try.

Our final fishing day at Pez Maya ended almost perfect. Rains caused us to cease fishing from the lagoons, because we couldn't locate the bonefish very well, but our guide Julio suggested we might try some surf fishing just inside the breakwaters only 20-paces from our cabanas.

McTee and I rigged rather heavy not knowing what we might expect to catch. Using large white jigs, tipped with curly-tail worms, we cast into the blue surf late that final afternoon. Julio had told us that we could expect to catch jack creballs, snook, tarpon, barracuda and a few other Caribbean dwellers. We did just that. Both McTee and I were enjoying 10 to 15-minute battles with jackfish while our compadre, Joe Dogget of Houston, was trying to land a 20-pound tarpon he had snagged in the rolling surf.

You talk about fun. Try landing a 20-pound jackfish in the surf. It's like tying your rope to a run-a-way locomotive. We beached a few, and lost more than that. We were not fortunate enough to hook into a snook or barracude, but these gamesters made a lot of appearances as they lazily swam by our legs. At tims, schools of snook were going between, in and around our legs. And when a four-foot barracuda swam lazily by me, I did some quick high stepping, only to frighten the toothed-creature away.

I'VE BEEN to a lot of fine fishing locales in our wonderful world, but never have I been so enhanced with the Pez Maya fishing camp. Don't expect to find televisions, telephones and air conditioners at Pez Maya. There's no such animal. But you can expect to find some of the cleanest little cabanas and for sure the finest food in the world. Here at Pez Maya, you get away from it all. About the only thing you have to worry about is catching enough fish, recuperating from battling all those bonefish, etc., and getting enough sleep.

VISITING PEZ MAYA is simply a dream-come-true! You don't need fancy clothes, shorts, bathing suits, sandals and T-shirts will do. And don't bring too many clothes. You won't have time to wear them all. They may get dirty, but when fishing is good, who cares?

Fishing tackle is probably the most important thing. For bonefish you need very light tackle. A seven-foot spinning rod with a light spinning reel is perfect. Don't overdo on line weight either. Six-pound monofilament is ideal. For the larger species in the surf, take along two or three rigs with 14 to 20-pound line. Surf casting rods, with either spinning or baitcasting reels will work. But have a reel that will hold enough line capacity to handle a running tarpon or snook. Of utmost concern and importance is suntan lotion and polarized sunglasses.

Whether you've ever heard of Pez Maya or not, it's a relative easy place to get to even though it's hidden on the uninhabited Yucatan Peninsula amidst a perfect jungle-land setting.

Out of any point in Texas you can hop on a commercial airline, fly to Houston and you are only two hours from the island of Cozumel or the mainland resort city of Cancun. A charter flight from Cozumel to Pez Maya is always available.

If you need further information about Pez Maya, you may contact me at 512-655-6601 or write: Kenny Redin's Fin and Feather, P.O. Box 10539, San Antonio, Texas, 78210.

J.R. pitches well, doesn't get win

BASEBALL

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Mixing doses of fire and wildness, J.R. Richard tossed 109 pitches in seven innings to spark the Daytona Beach Astros to a 7-6 Florida State League win over the Winter Haven Red Sox Thursday night.

The 32-year-old former Houston Astros ace terrorized National League batters with his velocity before suffering a near-fatal stroke two years ago.

He threw 77 fast balls for 59 strikes Thursday, but gave up six walks and blew two wild pitches past catcher Rob McCorkle.

Plate umpire Frank Sylvester said Richard appeared to have control problems at times, but reached an estimated 85 mph with his fastball in the sixth inning.

Richard, who looked awkward with his glove in two previous games, had no fielding chances Thursday night.

It was Richard's third start in the Class A league, and his heaviest tour of mound duty to date. In his first two games with the Houston farm club, the lanky Louisiana native threw 65 and 93 pitches.

Richard left the mound in the eighth inning, with the score 6-2 in his favor, but with both runs earned. He was replaced by Mitch Copland, then by Doug Britt in the ninth.

Winter Haven tied the score at 6-6 in the top of the ninth with four runs. But Daytona Beach's third baseman Mark Strucher, who leads the Florida State League in homers with 18, hit a bases-loaded single to score the winning run.

Britt, and not Richard, got the win.

BOXING

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — John Tate, former World Boxing Association heavyweight champion, slowly but persistently punched his way past Leroy Boone for a unanimous decision Thursday.

Tate, 6-foot-4 and 242 pounds, outlasted Boone, 228, from Virginia Beach, Va., through 10 rounds, winding up with a swollen left eye and his 26th win in 28 professional bouts.

Tate, from Knoxville, and Boone pranced through the first half, exchanging jabs.

Tate began slowing Boone in the fifth with a series of strong rights, until Boone appeared to begin reeling by the end of the seventh.

The fight was scored 99-93, 99-92, 97-94, for Tate, who is expected to fight a rematch with Trevor Berbick sometime next month.

The win leaves Tate 5-0 since his March 1980 dethroning by Mike Weaver shortly after Tate achieved the heavyweight crown. Three of those wins were knockouts.

SOCCER

MADRID, Spain (AP) — West Germany clawed its way back from a 3-1 deficit to beat France in an unprecedented sudden-death showdown in Seville to move to the World Cup final against Italy, which parlayed Paolo Rossi's two goals into a 2-0 victory over Poland in Barcelona.

Pirates rally in bottom of ninth to beat Reds, 9-8

By The Associated Press

Lightning struck in Pittsburgh for the second night in a row, but this time the Pirates replied with some thunder of their own.

On Wednesday night, the Cincinnati Reds had pounded Pittsburgh relief ace Kent Tekulve for five runs in the top of the ninth inning and snapped a nine-game losing streak by defeating the Pirates 6-3.

They appeared to have done it again Thursday night when they scored six times off Manny Sarmiento and Tekulve in the inning and took an 8-4 lead into the bottom of the inning.

But the Pirates jumped on Tom Hume and Joe Price for five runs on Willie Stargell's two-run pinch homer and Jason Thompson's three-run double and pulled out a 9-8 victory.

"It's like being down for a nine-count, getting up off the floor and knocking the other guy out," said Manager Chuck Tanner.

In other National League games, the St. Louis Cardinals defeated the Atlanta Braves 5-2, the San Diego Padres downed the Philadelphia Phillies 5-3, the Montreal Expos trimmed the Los Angeles Dodgers 7-3, the San Francisco Giants outlasted the New York Mets 9-7 and the Chicago Cubs turned back the Houston Astros 5-3.

The Pirates should have been shellshocked when they came up for their final turn at bat. "But our guys just came to the bench and said: 'Let's go get them. The game isn't over,'" Tanner said.

And it wasn't.

Tony Pena opened the counter-rally with a single and one out later Stargell slammed his second home run of the season and first in Pittsburgh since August 1980.

"You just swing the bat, close your eyes and when you hear something run like heck," said the veteran slugger.

A single by Omar Moreno chased Hume and singles by Johnny Ray and Bill Madlock off Price loaded the bases, still with one out. Thompson brought all three runners home with his opposite-field double to left.

"We really showed some character. It's a great win," Thompson said.

The rally made a winner of Tekulve, who yielded a game-tying single to Wayne Krenchicki, a tie-breaking two-run double to Eddie Milner and a two-run homer to Duane Walker.

Dave Parker hit two solo homers for the Pirates and Madlock one.

Cardinals 5, Braves 2

Tom Herr greeted Atlanta relief ace Gene Garber with a two-run triple to key a five-run St. Louis eighth-inning uprising. Atlanta's Rick Mahler was working on a two-hit shutout entering thhe eighth when Ken Oberkfell singled. One out later, singles by pinch hitter Dane Iorg and Lonnie Smith produced a run.

Herr then ripped his triple, putting the Cardinals in front 3-2. After Willie McGee grounded out, Keith Hernandez was walked intentionally. George Hendrick foiled the strategy with a double that scored McGee and Hernandez. Bob Horner homered for Atlanta, his 18th of the season and seventh in the last eight games.

Padres 5, Phillies 3

Ruppert Jones slammed a two-run homer and Garry Templeton and Luis Salazar added solo shots as San Diego posted its fifth consecutive victory and moved within 2½ games of first-place Atlanta in the NL West. The setback knocked the Phillies out of the lead in the NL East, dropping them one game behind St. Louis. Jones homered in the first inning, Salazar singled a run across in the fourth, Templeton homered in the fifth and Salazar connected in the eighth, an inside-the-park smash high off the center field fence.

"On paper, they're supposed to be better than us," said Padres Manager Dick Williams. "But I don't know what kind of paper they're using. We're playing very, very well right now and we do hit home runs every now and then."

Expos 7, Dodgers 3

Warren Cromartie drove in three runs, two with a double that broke a 3-3 tie in the fifth inning, as the Expos ended a four-game losing streak. With two out in the fifth, Gary Carter singled and Tim Wallach walked off reliever Alejandro Pena. Cromartie, who had an RBI single in the second inning, then sliced a double that fell inches inside the left field foul line and scored both runners. Montreal made it 7-3 in the seventh. Al Oliver walked and Carter's double got past left fielder Rick Monday, allowing Oliver to score. Carter then scored from second on a sacrifice fly by Wallach as center fielder Ken Landreaux crashed into the fence making the catch. Landreaux left the game with a bruised right shoulder.

"I got them down to one boo tonight so I must be accomplishing something," said Cromartie, the target of jeers throughout much of the season and especially in the last week.

Giants 9, Mets 7

Chili Davis rapped out four singles and drove in two runs as the Giants handed the Mets their sixth consecutive setback. Davis' RBI single keyed San Francisco's four-run fourth and he also singled home the first of three runs in the eighth that opened a 9-3 lead. Jim Wohlford drove in three runs for the Giants with a sacrifice fly, single and double and Reggie Smith also had three RBIs with a pair of singles.

Cubs 5, Astros 3

Jody Davis slammed a three-run double with two out in the eighth inning to bring Chicago from behind. The Cubs trailed 3-2 when Junior Kennedy led off the eighth with a single off Vern Ruhle.

Sims doesn't like to part with a dollar

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Although former Texas defensive tackle Kenneth Sims has signed a contract that will make him the highest paid lineman in pro football, teammate Ray Clayborn of the New England Patriots says Sims is "so tight that when he walks around, he squeaks."

Sims, the No. 1 choice in the pro draft, reportedly signed a $1.8 million contract over four years, with approximately $1 million as a bonus.

Sims, who is being cautious about investing, said a friend of Texas Coach Fred Akers "told me he's never known a guy who put his money in the bank who went broke.

"Taxes may be a little rough, though."

Jackson snaps losing streak, 2-1

By The Associated Press

Tulsa and Jackson traded home runs, but it took a walk, a wild pitch and two fielder's choice plays to drive home the winning run as Jackson snapped a five-game losing streak in a 2-1 Texas League baseball victory.

In other Texas League games Thursday night, San Antonio edged Midland, 3-2, and Amarillo and El Paso split a doubleheader. Amarillo won the opener, 5-4, and San Antonio took the nightcap, 7-4. Arkansas' scheduled game at Shreveport was postponed because of rain.

All teams will be idle tonight for a travel day.

Ron Reynolds gave the Jackson Mets a 1-0 lead over the Tulsa Drillers in the fifth inning with a solo homer. They kept the lead until Tulsa's Steve Buechele slugged a solo homer in the top of the ninth.

Darryl Strawberry walked in the bottom of the ninth for Jackson, advanced to second on a wild pitch, moved to third on a fielder's choice play and came home on another fielder's choice.

Matt Bullinger, 5-1, was the winning pitcher. The loser was Mike Mason, 4-9.

Bill Long, 6-7, was the winning pitcher. Dan Burns, 4-2, was the loser.

Ready drove in four runs, including three with a homer in the fourth inning as the Diablos bounced back for a 7-4 victory in the second game.

James Steels drove in two runs for the Gold Sox with a triple in the fifth inning.

Jeff Ronk hit safely in both of the games for the Gold Sox to keep his hitting streak alive at 17 games.

The winning pitcher was Jerry Jenkins, 3-2. The loser was John White, 6-6.

A lot of balls fly when Kite practices

But Kite's admitted love for practice emerged when he spoke of recovering from the long trip. "I'll use Sunday to recoup from the trip," he said, "I might even hit a few balls."

And practice he does. When asked how many balls he hit during a practice session Kite estimated about 500.

One thing that obviously keeps Kite on top of his game is the attitude he has toward his craft. "I'm not where I want to be with my game," he admitted. "I'm still learning how to play golf."

If that's the case, the TPA pros had better move over.

A's defeat Yankees, 6-3

By TOM CANAVAN
Associated Press Writer

Oakland's Mike Norris lost his no-hit bid against the New York Yankees in the seventh inning. By that time, Doyle Alexander had lost more than that.

Norris, making his first start after spending 21 days on the disabled list, pitched no-hit ball for 6⅓ innings and wound up with a four-hitter as the A's posted a 6-3 victory over the Yankees Thursday night, giving Billy Martin his 1,000th victory as a manager.

New York's first hit was a check-swing single to center field by Oscar Gamble with one out in the seventh.

"I laughed," said Norris of the hit. "I didn't take it that seriously. You don't ever go out anticipating a no-hitter."

The Yankees weren't laughing about Alexander's performance.

The right-hander, who had been on the disabled list since early May with a broken bone in his pitching hand, lasted just 1⅓ innings, giving up five runs, including four in the first inning when Tony Armas homered and Jeff Burroughs added a two-run single.

The outing angered Yankee officials because Alexander, who suffered his injury by punching a dugout wall in Seattle, refused to remain with the team's AAA farm club at Columbus to get into shape.

"What Doyle Alexander did to his teammates in Oakland tonight was disgraceful but typical of the selfishness of some of the modern-day ballplayers," Bill Bergesch, the Yankees vice president of operations said in a statement released after Alexander was yanked.

"Here is a man earning hundreds of thousands of dollars to pitch and then flat refuses to get himself ready. He then goes out tonight and proves to the world that the coaching staff and manager were right," the statement went on.

Alexander, now 0-3, felt he hadn't let the team down but added, "I'm not looking for a verbal war in the press with these guys."

Yankee Manager Gene Michael said Alexander, who has a $2.2-million, four-year pact, would be assigned to the bullpen for occasional duty.

Rickey Henderson had his 80th and 81st stolen bases of the season for the A's, while John Mayberry hit a two-run homer for New York in the seventh and Gamble added a solo homer in the ninth.

In other AL action, Chicago nipped Detroit 3-2, Minnesota shut out Milwaukee 3-0, Toronto edged Kansas City 5-4, California defeated Cleveland 5-1, Seattle outlasted Baltimore 4-3 and Boston blanked Texas 3-0.

Twins 3, Brewers 0

Jack O'Connor and Ron Davis combined for an eight-hitter and Kent Hrbek lashed four singles, scored one run and knocked in another as Minnesota blanked Milwaukee for its fifth victory in six games.

It was the first shutout against the Brewers since New York's Roger Erickson, then with Minnesota, beat them 1-0 June 8, 1981.

O'Connor, 2-2, walked four and struck out four over seven innings. Davis finished up to get his seventh save. Hrbek's RBI single put Minnesota ahead 1-0 in the first inning against Pete Vuckovich, 10-4. Minnesota added two more in the fifth on a two-out RBI single by Gary Ward and Gary Gaetti's run-scoring double.

White Sox 3, Tigers 2

Pinch hitter Jerry Hairston slammed a dramatic two-out, two-run homer in the bottom of the ninth inning as Chicago handed Detroit its 19th loss in its last 24 games.

Hairston's homer, his second pinch-hit blast of the season, made LaMarr Hoyt the AL's first 11-game winner this season. It came on a 1-0 pitch from Dan Petry, who had scattered seven hits to that point.

"I've never been more grateful to see a ball go out of the park," said Hoyt, who ended a personal four-game losing streak.

Tom Paciorek's RBI single in the second had given Chicago a 1-0 lead but Detroit tied the score in the seventh on Mike Ivie's 12th homer of the season. The Tigers took the lead in the top of the ninth when shortstop Vance Law's error allowed Larry Parrish to score.

Red Sox 3, Rangers 0

Chuck Rainey tossed a six-hitter and Dwight Evans cracked three hits as Boston handed Texas its third straight loss.

Rainey, 5-3, walked four and struck out two in recording his second complete game. Boston took a 2-0 lead in the sixth when Glenn Hoffman doubled and scored on Jerry Remy's single. Remy took third when Evans' fly ball to center was misplayed into a double and, after an intentional walk to Jim Rice, scored as Tony Perez grounded out.

The Red Sox added a run in the eighth on Rice's RBI single.

Blue Jays 5, Royals 4

Stieb, 7-10, is 3-0 with an earned run average of 0.71 against the Royals this season.

Trailing 4-3, Toronto reached reliever Mike Armstrong, 2-3, in the eighth. Hosken Powell led off with a single and went to third on Damaso Garcia's double. Bonnell scored Powell on a check-swing roller and Upshaw hit an RBI single.

Mariners 4, Orioles 3

Dave Edler drove in three runs, including the game winner with a seventh-inning single, as Seattle downed Baltimore and to post its 26th come-from-behind victory of the season.

The Mariners, who trailed 3-0 after three innings, closed to within 3-2 in the third on Edler's RBI groundout and Bruce Bochte's run-scoring double. They tied the game in the fifth when Edler knocked in another run with a grounder.

The Orioles scored on Eddie Murray's RBI single in the first and added an unearned run in the second when third baseman Edler made an error. John Lowenstein homered in the third.

Angels 5, Indians 1

Fred Lynn cracked a tie-breaking three-run homer in the third inning and knocked in another run with a groundout in the fifth as California snapped an eight-game losing streak by beating Cleveland.

Brian Downing hit a solo homer for the Angels, while Dave Goltz and Doug Corbett, who posted his 10th save, held the Indians to six hits, one of them an RBI double by Andre Thornton in the first inning.

Ferragamo returns to Rams from CFL

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Quarterback Vince Ferragamo, who led the Los Angeles Rams into the Super Bowl before defecting to Canada, has returned to the National Football League club with a chance to earn a reported $1.1 million.

The Rams announced Thursday that Ferragamo, 28, had signed a series of one-year contracts covering three seasons.

"He was signed to a Rams' contract by club officials after approval from owner Georgia Frontiere," the team announced.

Ferragamo will join rookies and the other quarterbacks when the Rams open training camp at California State-Fullerton July 19.

Although the club refused to divulge terms of the contract, reportedly it becomes effective only if Ferragamo makes the team.

Previously, the club had signed veteran Bert Jones, who starred with the Baltimore Colts and is expected to be the No.1 quarterback this year.

Ferragamo signed with the Montreal Alouettes last year, but failed in the Canadian League and was released.

He must vie for a spot on the club not only with Jones but with Jeff Rutledge and Jeff Kemp, who were on the squad last year.

"I'm kind of elated about the new contract," Ferragamo said. "I'm excited about going to training camp. It's good to be back home."

He said he still was unhappy about his treatment in Canada, adding, "They tried to inhibit my coming back to the States and almost stopped my coming back to the NFL."

As for the competition against Jones, he said, "It will be challenging and I'm looking forward to it. I think there will be a lot of eyes looking to see who becomes the starting quarterback."

Jack Faulkner, the administrator of football operations for the club, said, "I think it would behoove everyone to take a good look at Vince Ferragamo to see what he still can do."

Originally from the Los Angeles area, Ferragamo first played at the University of California, then transferred to Nebraska.

He threw 30 touchdown passes for the Rams during the 1980 season after taking over from Pat Haden in 1979, the season the club reached the Super Bowl, where it lost to Pittsburgh 31-19.

After moving to Montreal last season following a contract dispute with the Rams, Ferragamo was plagued by interceptions and benched in mid-season.

Jimenez, Towns only pros to par Portland course

By BOB BAUM
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Club professionals Joe Jimenez and Ken Towns were the only players able to match par in Thursday's opening round of the $150,000 U.S. Senior Open golf tournament.

None of the 98 professionals and 52 amateurs in the field was able to break par on the lush par-71, 6,439-yard Portland Golf Club course.

Fifteen golfers, including defending champion Arnold Palmer, were within two strokes of the lead heading into Friday's second round.

Jimenez, 56-year-old head pro at the Jefferson City, Mo., Country Club and 1978 PGA Seniors champion, was in the third group to complete the opening round.

At the time, it didn't appear his score would hold up for the lead.

Several challengers flirted with breaking par, only to fall victim to the extremely fast greens and tall rough on the short but difficult course.

Towns, 54, from Graeagle, Calif., managed to tie Jimenez with birdies on the par-4 14th and 16th holes.

He had a 34 on the par-36 back nine, one of the few sub-par rounds on the final nine holes in the sun-baked opening round.

FOUR PLAYERS, including professional tour veterans Miller Barber, Bob Goalby and Freddie Haas, were tied for third at 1-over 72.

Also at 72 was former New Jersey club professional Art Silvestrone, who now lives in Orlando, Fla.

Haas, 66, holed a 120-foot iron shot for an eagle on the par-5, 523-yard fifth hole and followed with three straight birdies to move 3-under-par. But he faltered on the later holes.

Palmer, who missed putts of 12 and 18 inches, was among a group of nine tied at 2-over 73.

The field will be cut to the top 50 scores plus ties after Friday's second round in the 72-hole competition. First prize earns $25,000.

Daniel among favorites on golf course she's never played

WHEELING, W.Va. (AP) — Beth Daniel never has played a round on the Speidel golf course, but she's rated among the favorites in the $125,000 West Virginia LPGA Classic, a 54-hole tournament that begins Friday.

Carole Jo Callison, winner of the inagural Wheeling tournament in 1974, rates Daniel as the favorite, because, "potentially, Beth is the most talented player on the tour. I don't believe she has touched her potential yet and should only improve with experience on the tour."

Daniel, one of only three of the tour's top 10 money winners playing in this tournament, didn't arrive until late Thursday, so she will have to tee off in the first round without a practice session. In addition to Daniels, the fifth-leading money winner, those in the Top 10 entered are No.7 Hollis Stacy, the defending champion, and No.10 Jan Stephenson, who recently won two straight tournaments.

"This is a course that challenges you," said Stacy, who won Wheeling a year ago in a five-way playoff. "You can get into trouble on any hole and you have to use every club in your bag."

Doom hurls U.S. past Belgium, 8-0

(Compiled from R-T Wires)

SOFTBALL—Debbie Doom, a 6-foot-2 UCLA sophomore, did not allow a hit and struck out 18 of the 22 batters she faced Thursday night, pitching the United States to an 8-0 victory over Belgium in women's world softball championship play. Belgium's batters failed to hit a ball out of the infield against Doom, a windmill-type hurler. Only one Belgium batter reached base — on a passed ball after striking out in the sixth inning of the seven-inning game. The triumph was the second for the Americans Thursday night. Earlier, they trounced Guatemala 10-0 in five innings...

BASKETBALL—Sweden, led by Bill Magarity's 36 points, beat South Korea 80-74 in an opening game of the first Seoul International Invitational men's basketball tournament Thursday. New Zealand edged Austria 77-75 and Taiwan downed Malaysia 79-71 in other preliminary round games.

A total of nine teams from eight countries have been split into three groups for preliminary games. The top two teams from each group will advance to the round-robin final round. The other countries entered in the 10-day tourney are the United States and India, which were idle Thursday. Host Korea has two teams...

BASEBALL—Mayor William Hudnut has appointed a 40-member committee that will try and get a major league baseball franchise for the city. Donald Danielson, vice chairman of the board of City Securities Corp., heads the committee. Danielson and other politicians, labor leaders and community leaders on the committee plan to attend a meeting of major league owners in August in San Diego.

Baseball officials have indicated that six franchises may be awarded in the future, but no timetable has been set. A combination domed stadium-convention center expansion is under construction in Indianapolis. The Hoosier Dome would seat more than 40,000 for baseball and would have fences 325 feet down the foul lines and 400 feet to center...

FOOTBALL—James Bennett, a wide receiver from Northwestern Louisiana, has signed a contract with the Cincinnati Bengals for the 1982 season, the National Football League club said Thursday. Bennett is the eighth of the Bengals' 12 draft choices to sign. Terms of the agreement were not disclosed...

CYCLING—Jan Raas of The Netherlands won the sixth stage of the Tour de France cycling race Thursday, while Australian Phil Anderson kept the overall lead for the fourth consecutive day. Raas' victory came on a 144-mile course that marked the race's only stage on cobblestone roads. His time was 5 hours, 55 minutes, 42 seconds. He was 10 seconds ahead of runner-up Jose Jacobs of Belgium, and Pierre Le Bigaut of France, who was third. The stage results did not affect the top three positions in the overall standings. Anderson remained on top, followed by Ireland's Sean Kelly and Frenchman Bernard Hinault, who is favored to win his fourth Tour de France title in five years...

SOCCER—John McNamara, former assistant coach for men's and women's soccer at the University of Cincinnati, has been named head coach of the school's women's soccer team. McNamara was assistant coach at Union College in New York before moving to Cincinnati last fall...

SWIMMING—David Jennings, a physical education teacher and swimming coach at Upper Arlington High School in Columbus, Ohio, for three years, has been named women's swim coach at Miami University.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, July 10, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actors Mills Watson ("Harper Valley's" Uncle Buster) and Robert Pine (the sergeant on "CHIPS") celebrate birthdays today, as does North Carolina-born David Brinkley. The financial picture shows decided improvement in the months ahead. Be on the lookout for exciting career and business opportunities. You find something thought lost forever. Family affairs will play a crucial role in your happiness. Plan to do a certain amount of traveling. An unusual romantic adventure is featured. Luck is on your side! Kindly and generous, you have what it takes to be an excellent parent. Instead of clinging to your children, encourage them to be independent.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Contact old friends and former neighbors for an informal get-together. An evening social event should be a smash. You enjoy romance with an old partner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Socially, you are a star! Romance takes a giant step forward if you show more initiative. A shopping spree is fun so long as you do not go overboard.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If unattached, you find yourself faced with several equally exciting romantic prospects. You feel right at home at a new friend's house. A small child shares a loving secret.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stick to projects already underway. Look over accounts and other paperwork, but allow plenty of time for small fry. Keep entertainment costs moderate.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not expect too much from loved ones. They have their own goals and plans. A secret admirer reveals his/her identity. Make a constructive change in your lifestyle.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Choose a quiet time to smooth out your differences with loved ones. Teamwork produces excellent results. Your personal magnetism charms your guests.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A visitor adds excitement to your day. Pay more attention to your natural abilities. You may decide to further your education. Tend to the needs of older family members.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Handle legal affairs confidently. Complete tasks already in progress. You will have more fun staying home than going out tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The emphasis is on pleasure today and tomorrow. Family members' cooperation is the key to a highly satisfactory weekend. Travel is favored for those who have romance in mind.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You have many things to be thankful for this weekend. Do what you can to convince family members of the importance of saving. Look for ways to increase mate's happiness.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Get an early start on any work that has to be done. You will want to be able to take advantage of the many opportunities for fun and romance later today.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Personal problems are easier to resolve now. Share your thoughts, desires with mate. You and loved ones feel more at ease.

Opening lead: King of ♡.

The cards had been breaking badly all day, and only Trump Coup Tommy was smiling. He was in his element — he was busy having his most successful day ever at the club. This hand was typical.

The bidding featured one of those scientific gadgets that work well on the rare occasions when they come up. North's jump to four diamonds showed a good six-card suit, four-card support for partner's suit and values for game. Tommy had nothing to cue-bid, so he reluctantly bid only four spades despite the fact that he had a near opening bid.

West led the king and ace of hearts, and then exited with a heart in the false hope that he was about to collect two trump tricks for a one-trick set. He should have known better, considering that Tommy was at the helm.

Tommy won the queen of hearts, and he looked like a shoo-in for eleven tricks. But when he cashed the king of spades and East showed out, the contract was in jeopardy. He cashed the ace of clubs, crossed to the jack of diamonds, cashed the king of clubs and then entered dummy with the ace of diamonds, to bring about this position:

Declarer led a diamond from dummy and ruffed his winner. Now he led a club. If West ruffed low, dummy would overruff with the eight, so he was forced to ruff with the nine. Declarer discarded dummy's remaining diamond, and West found himself end played in the trump suit!

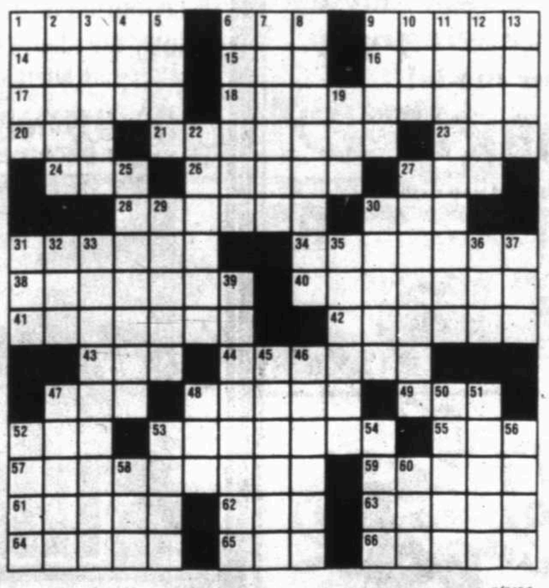

If West exited with a low trump, dummy's eight would win, so he led the jack of trumps. Tommy won in hand with the queen, and now finessed the eight of trumps. An astonished West found he could score no more trump tricks and the contract was home.

Leonard Nimoy, alias Mr. Spock in the "Star Trek" television series and film, is pleased with the way Paramount handled his death in "Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan," the latest film. "When it was first suggested to me...I was hesitant. But now...I think it was a very good idea," he says.

'NBC News Overnight' outrageous

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — It was sometimes outrageous and often offbeat. It occasionally went overboard. But it was never conventional or stuffy.

The first edition of "NBC News Overnight" offered some straight news, but also a good deal of amusing and bemusing news, treating stories with more respect than "Saturday Night Live" but less solemnity than the "Nightly News."

"NBC News Overnight," with co-anchors Lloyd Dobyns and Linda Ellerbee, was definitely a show for its timeslot and audience, which probably needs to be entertained more than informed.

Not only is viewership limited at 12:30 a.m. CDT, it probably doesn't consist of a lot of the white-collar business types who have breakfast with the 7 a.m. news, devour the Wall Street Journal, and begin the night with the 7 p.m. news.

In fact, Tuesday morning's inaugural broadcast didn't have a single business report or Dow Jones figure.

A recent Nielsen survey estimated that less than 10 percent of America's TV households, about 8 million, are watching television at 2 a.m. As Dobyns and Ms. Ellerbee said in their promotional message:

"When most of the nation is asleep, we are not. If you're not, join us."

The hour-long, Tuesday-through-Saturday program is on too late to be an extension of the 10 o'clock local news, as is ABC's serious-minded, issue-oriented "Nightline."

In tone and appeal, "Overnight" is more an extension of its lead-in show, "Late Night with David Letterman."

One piece, noting that Tuesday was Nancy Reagan's birthday, noted there was a disagreement whether the first lady was 59 or 61. Then, it showed actress Nancy Davis Reagan from a farcical 1952 TV production.

In the fast-paced segment called "News on a Reel," "Overnight" did reports on: the lawnchair pilot, who was hoisted haphazardly by weather balloons; census-taking in China, where 5 million counters are needed, and a frosty British toast to the new royal family member, Prince William.

The show featured several clever film reports and snappy sports highlights and scores, set to music "in case your team didn't cover the spread," said Dobyns.

And, because this is supposedly a news show and must compete with all-news cable networks, there was some REAL news. Unfortunately, the two filmed reports from the Middle East were the exact stories broadcast earlier by NBC's "Nightly News."

One expressed intention of "Overnight" is to cover foreign stories that are breaking in the early morning, so it was surprising that nothing was done to update the stories from the Middle East that had been broadcast seven hours before.

A story about a hostage hoax from Chicago, however, had been updated since 7 the night before.

Interspersed throughout were live reports on the lunar eclipse, an opportunity for this show to cover a breaking event. But the story seemed to disrupt the show's rhythm, and was particularly damaged by the reporting of NBC's science correspondent Bob Bazell.

Bazell and other live-interview subjects appeared on a screen between the two anchors. At one point, Dobyns and Ms. Ellerbee in New York turned the show back to Bazell at the Kitt Peak Observatory in Tucson, Ariz. But the science correspondent was nowhere to be found.

Several seconds later, Bazell came on camera and joked feebly about taking a coffee break. It was an example of the silliness that can happen at the late hour.

Dobyns, on the other hand, managed the right combination of irreverence and seriousness. His co-anchor, Ms. Ellerbee, could read from a script but had difficulty working extemporaneously.

New NBC News President Reuven Frank, who produced the whimsically innovative "Weekend" series in the mid-1970s, seemed to have his fingerprints all over "Overnight." It's a nonsense news broadcast that's fun to watch.

PBS relaxes rules concerning support

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Public Broadcasting Service has relaxed its rules, allowing certain firms that make cigarettes and liquor to support the production of public television programs.

PBS officials stress the new guidelines will not allow any type of advertising or mention of specific products on the air. In addition, any firm that is engaged solely in cigarette or liquor production is barred from underwriting a program.

Nevertheless, officials said the decision will open the door to "diversified" conglomerates like R.J. Reynolds Industries Inc., Phillip Morris Inc. and Hublein Inc. to provide grants for TV programs if they wish and to receive credit as an underwriter.

The new guidelines were approved by the PBS' board of directors June 27 and became effective a week ago Thursday.

"We found a whole new situation from when these guidelines were originally adopted 10 years ago," said Neil Mahrer, a PBS senior vice president, referring to the way liquor and cigarette makers have expanded into other businesses.

"What we're saying is we're not going to exclude a company that is diversified and engaged in a number of things besides making liquor and cigarettes."

Underwriting is the practice by which a company or foundation provides money for the production of a specific program in return for being credited as a sponsor at the beginning and end of the program. The Mobil Oil Corp. and Exxon are two prominent corporate underwriters.

Classes to begin shortly

It's the middle of summer, and time to start thinking ahead to what's in store for you during the next month or so at Midland Stained Glass Center, in the Chaparral Plaza, 4313-A W. Illinois.

Mary Richardson says there will be a new round of classes beginning the latter part of July or first part of August. "We'll have the beginning techniques of stained glass panels incorporating either the lead construction or the copper foil construction," she says. "If there's enough interest, we'll also have an intermediate class or a workshop."

L Richardson says that this year they will also have special classes in the early fall for making Christmas ornaments, lampshades and gift items.

For further information about any of these classes, call Richardson at 697-0322.

For those who are already working with stained glass, Midland Stained Glass Center has a wide variety of glass and supplies for the artist, including books and patterns for the beginner, and those smaller pieces of glass always necessary for work in progress.

The center is open Tuesday evenings until 9 p.m. so that hobbyists lacking work space at home can come in and complete their projects.

Commission work is accepted for doors, windows, mirrors, skylights, planters, lamps and other stained glass needs you may have. There are also some very lovely items for sale in the shop. Glass repair is also available at Midland Stained Glass Center.

L Midland Stained Glass Center is open Tuesdays from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., Wednesday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The House of Arts & Crafts, La Vallita Shopping Center, west of Midkiff on Wadley, is full of every kind of supplies needed for crafts projects, as well as a complete line of artist's supplies, office supplies and more. Come and browse Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Have a 'craftsy' summer

If the summer heat is keeping you indoors, now is the time to begin a crafts project, and the place to find exactly what you need for your craft or hobby is House of Arts & Crafts in the La Vallita Shopping Center, west of Midkiff on Wadley.

L The House of Arts & Crafts is brimming with new projects, including a complete stock of caligraphy supplies. There are screen printing kits for printing your own posters, greeting cards, sweatshirts, T-shirts, pennants, pictures, invitations, announcements, signs and banners and nature prints.

Rainbow Latch Hook kits feature Pandas, Calico Cats, Sesame Street rugs, frongs, mushrooms, owls and the 15" square pillow kit in the "Sierra" design. The Sesame Street afghan kit contains material for a 30" by 40" afghan, plus easy-to-follow instructions and a chart for embroidery.

Old-fashioned quilt or wall-hanging and pillow kits come in traditional designs such as Log Cabin and Dresden Plate pillows and the Alphabet quilt. A truly striking Early American pattern can be achieved with the "Warbonnet" string art kit; magnificent for the office, den or a child's room.

When everyone wants to make something together, try the Makit & Bakit stained glass kits. They're fun for all ages and the sun catchers and circus kits are easy to do and nice to have afterwards.

L These are just a few of the wide assortment of hobby kits available at the House of Arts & Crafts. Christmas craft supplies will be arriving around the first of August, and this year there will be even a wider variety in stock to make your Christmas season a joyous one.

Bill and Marlene Juren have stocked their shop with all kinds of special equipment for artists and craftsmen. They have easels for painting and sketching, both table and floor models. The adjustable aluminum easels open and close easily to carry your canvases, wet or dry. Artists will find all needed materials at the House of Arts & Crafts for painting or drawing, whether in oils, watercolor, pastel or pencil. Juren says a discount will be given to Midland College students on any class-related materials purchased.

POISON-IVY IS AN ITCHY PROBLEM
The itch that follows exposure may be acquired at any time, but the peak of poison-ivy, poison-oak, or poison summac is in the spring. The poisonous sap may reach directly to the skin, by contact with the plant, or later on by way of handled shoes, clothing, tools or domestic animals.
Poison-ivy symptoms begin to appear one or two days after contact. Some people are unusually sensitive and few are entirely immune. We have some poison-ivy lotions which usually offer quick relief and we can help you choose a good product. When the eruptions are unusually severe or cover most of the body, consult your physician.

Men dress international, says prince's shirtmaker

By GARRY ABRAMS
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Prince Charles is an early riser who prefers to do his shirt shopping at 7 a.m. The prince likes pin-striped shirts, mainly in blue but sometimes in burgundy, for wear with a suit. When he's in the country, he likes muted check shirts, again in burgundy, blue or posssibly green, but he refuses to wear yellow or pink. And although his shirts are custom-made, the prince is a perfect 39-regular with a 15 1/2-inch neck and a 35-inch sleeve.

So says Kenneth Williams, managing director of Turnbull & Asser, the London company that was issued Prince Charles' first warrant to supply his royal household last year.

Williams won't say how many shirts the prince buys in a year or how much he spends. But he does concede that the prince is a voracious consumer of shirts. "He buys a lot of shirts, obviously," he said. "We make all his shirts, including formal shirts and uniform shirts. His job is a bit like being on stage; he has to have his costume."

Prince Charles

When the heir to the throne of England wants to select his next set of shirts, Turnbull & Asser sends a representative to Buckingham Palace with fabric samples — often at the start of the prince's long day, Williams said. "He does select his own fabrics. He doesn't leave it to his valet."

AS FOR the prince's sense of style, Williams said, "I think he's determined not to be trendy," hence Charles' aversion to yellow or pink. Williams adds that the prince's erect military figure is the perfect model for a shirtmaker. However, the prince's habit of walking with his hands behind his back creates problems. Turnbull & Asser's measuring men have to make allowances "for how he walks," Williams said, pointing out that shirt measurements are normally made with the customer's hands draped at his sides.

Whatever may happen to him, Prince Charles can be assured that his measurements will be zealously preserved as long as Turnbull & Asser wields tape measures. That's been the practice with other notables, including Winston Churchill and Charlie Chaplin, Williams said. He considers their shirt dimensions a part of history.

On the American front, Williams believes that the U.S. male is becoming less visible. He no longer stands out from his European counterparts like a dandelion among roses, he said.

"The American man is no longer so readliy identifiable because he now looks European," Williams said, attributing this transformation to a new international look in men's fashion. That look is comprised of conservatively cut suits with natural shoulders and dressy dress shirts, he says.

Turnbull & Asser itself reflects the American man's new appreciation for fashion internationalism. The firm currently has space in three Neiman-Marcus stores in America where Williams and an associate recently were on hand to take orders for custom-made shirts. In the future, Williams says, the possibilities for American expansion seem promising because of his products' enthusiastic reception.

TURNBULL & ASSER'S niche in the international marketpalce is expensive ready- and custom-made cotton and silk shirts priced from $85 to $130. But Williams had advice that's applicable to any wardrobe. "The collar shape is 95 percent of the shirt," he says. When a man is wearing a jacket and tie, there isn't much else visible, he explains, so it's important to have a collar that "doesn't disappear." The firm's shirts currently have points 3 1/4-inches long and collar backs that are 1 7/8-inches high. Just as important as a collar's point-length is its "spread," he adds, noting that there has to be sufficient distance between the points to allow for the tie's knot. Williams also advocates shirts in natural fibers "because they tend to be more comfortable and generally indicate a higher-quality shirt."

He concedes that the firm's shirts do undergo evolutionary changes in style. For instance, collars recently were trimmed an eighth of an inch as a concession to the popular smaller collars made by others. "The casual influence has had an effect, too," Williams said. "You can't make shirts that look too starchy or too crisp anymore."

What's a good way to tell if there are any lasting changes in shirt styles? Williams says one way is to compare current styles with old shirts. "I've had customers come back to us after 20 years and they want the collars and cuffs replaced. That's when you know the collar shapes have changed. The upper classes are absolutely the worst for that sort of thing."

The prince prefers pin-striped shirts, mainly in blue, but sometimes in burgundy, to wear with a suit. When he is in the country, he likes muted checked shirts, but refuses to wear yellow or pink.

Weng: Master craftsman of crossword puzzles

By DAVID BEHRENS
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Who doesn't know Will Weng?
W
h o

Will Weng, of course. America's master craftsman of the crossword puzzle. He is 75 now and he caught his chronic case of crossword fever (ague?) when he was just a child.

"I was always fascinated by crossword puzzles then," Will Weng recalls. "But I didn't start constructing my own until the 1950s." Weng was in his mid-40s then, a graduate of the Columbia School of Journalism who went to work for The New York Times around 1931 and, 30 years later, was the chief of the daily's word-picky metropolitan copy desk.

"But I always wanted to do puzzles for the Sunday magazine, and I finally sweated one out. It had some rough spots but the editor accepted it." The puzzle, based on Joe Miller's antique jokebook, was filled with gags such as "slip of the tongue," defined as "What the butcher said when the meat fell to the floor."

So Weng's new career was born. He published about four or five puzzles a year in the Times and sold regularly to the London Observer and other publications. Then, in 1969, at age 62, the job of crossword puzzle editor was vacant. Weng applied. ("But, my goodness, what if I flunked? How would I have gone back and picked up the pieces?" Weng worried.) But he got the job and he didn't stumble, remaining a distinguished keeper of the Sunday puzzle for eight years.

WENG RETIRED as editor in 1977 but still works full time as an editor of crossword books. Lean and durable in his traditional suit-vest, puffing on the stub of a city-room cigar, Weng is at home in his modest studio apartment in Manhattan, surrounded by dictionaries, puzzle books, graph paper and pencils. (He never uses a pen.) And he is still a towering figure (Babel?) in the land of down and across.

His apartment is a maze of puzzles, submitted by puzzle-makers from all over the country, hoping to find favor with the master. Although free from daily and Sunday pressures, Weng publishes two books of puzzles a year, and his latest, "Will Weng's Americana Puzzles," is just out.

People constantly ask, how do you learn how to make a crossword puzzle? Solving them is hard enough, "but it's harder to teach someone how to construct a puzzle."

The language of crosswords is a strange one, filled with unfamiliar sounds echoing across the wordscape with teasing simplicity.

It is a particularly American language. While word squares are as old as ancient Rome and word puzzles appeared in British children's books in the 19th century, it is Arthur Wynee, editor of the New York World, who is credited with publishing the first modern crossword puzzle. The date was Dec. 21, 1913, and it was an instant success.

BY THE 1920S, America and Great Britain had gone crossword crazy. Railroad trains carried dictionaries with which travelers could cheat. Puzzles were printed on the backs of almost everything, from menus to dresses. One woman sued her husband for abandoning her; he chose his puzzle instead.

Who else would know that "Anglo-Saxon slave" is an "esne?"

That in the menagerie of three-letter animals, "African antelope" is "gnu" and "legendary bird" is a "roc?"

Who else would immediately know that "film dog" is "asta?"

That an "oo" is a Hawaiian bird?

That "Giant great" has to be "Ott," as in Mel, as opposed to "Hall of Famer" who is "Cobb," as in Ty?

Why would anyone ever know that "dyne" was an unit of force, as opposed to "erg," which is a unit of energy?

Or that the river "aar" flows into the Rhine, as smoothly as Bobby "Hockey Great" "Orr" skated across the ice?

But the world of such three- and four-letter words, the staple of the mundane puzzle, hardly challenges the advanced puzzler who wishes to create puzzles rather than conquer them.

WENG HAS some simple advice and a few tips.

For example, if you're in need of a seven-letter word that begins with suppo, pencil in a few options such as: s...u...u...u...s-r...e-t.

Then you can shoose between "support" or "suppose" later, when working out the crosswords. But that is just a minor shortcut. The real secrets of puzzle-making, Weng says, are patience, a love of puzzles, a good sense of humor, a good imagination and a good set of dictionaries.

Weng himself still needs two or three days to draw a Sunday-size puzzle of 130 or 140 words. "My mind goes dull in some bank of four-letter words and you have to get away from it. Then you come back to it and maybe it will clear itself."

Weng uses a well-worn paperback edition of "The Puzzle Lovers Dictionary," vintage 1964. And he just picked up a 1981 edition of "The Ultimate Cross Word Puzzle Index," compiled by Douglas Hershey, a computer programmer. It is a rarified collection, Weng notes, informing you that "anytime" and "anatomy" are the only seven-letter words beginning with "an" in which "m" is the sixth letter.

On a footstool nearby is a copy of Webster's International Third Edition, all 2,600 pages of it. Weng uses it often. Crossword puzzling is no vocabulary builder, and over the years, even the most ardent puzzler will be left with only a storehouse of three- and four-letter words, Weng says. After parading all those esoteric words that stumped puzzle people Sunday after Sunday, Weng has lost most of them: "I find myself looking up the same words over and over and over again."

"WHAT I generally tell people is to start small, take a pattern, throw away the definitions and put your own puzzle in there. You learn by doing, find out the mistakes... Always start with the longest clues first. Don't start in the upper left-hand corner with the banks of four-letter words. Put in your longest words or phrases first."

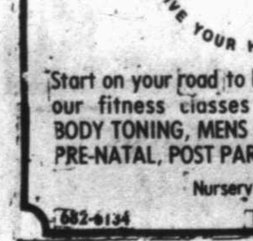

In starting a big puzzle, Weng suggests that the constructor leave plenty of room, using graph paper to work out problems, especially if you get stuck in a corner.

Most important to remember is that the puzzle must be symmetrical. Absolutely symmetrical. "It's an unwritten rule, that all the black squares must be balanced." Every time you add a black space in one quadrant, another must be added in the opposing quadrant.

But symmetry is the least of his worries as a puzzle editor. "Part of an editor's job is to pep things up," Weng said. If someone uses the prosaic word "sit" in the puzzle, you can't use the definition, "to occupy a chair." You might use: "... tight". He does have memories of fond moments in the word arena. "I was rather proud of the definition "large brass container." The word was "Pentagon." And in a puzzle submitted to him, the author wanted to use "The Fall of the House of Usher." But the suggested definition was rather prosaic. "A Poe Tale," the puzzle maker wrote. Weng substituted his owndefinition: "Epitaph for a Movie Palace." Now, that's puzzle-making.

Imperial War Museum gets 'Monty's' papers

LONDON (AP) — The archives of Britain's World War II commander Field Marshal Viscount Bernard Law Montgomery have been given to the Imperial War Museum here, ending speculation that a college or library would acquire them.

"It was unthinkable that they should leave England," said Sir Denis Hamilton, personal guardian of the archives and a wartime colleague of "Monty," as the commander was affectionately known.

The gift from the Toronto-based International Thomson Organization was announced earlier this week by Hamilton at a joint news conference with the war museum's director, Noble Frankland.

"It is a red-letter day in our history — the papers are a gold mine," Frankland said.

Hamilton, former editor-in-chief of Times Newspapers Ltd., acquired the papers when he published Montgomery's memoirs in 1962 in The Sunday Times, then owned by Thomson. Montgomery entrusted Hamilton to keep the documents in a secret place until the commander's death, which came in 1975 when he was 88.

Montgomery was paid "a few thousand pounds by Thomson's" for his papers in 1962, Hamilton said.

The archives range from letters to Montgomery's parents written from World War I trenches in Belgium, to correspondence from Britain's World War II Prime Minister Sir Winston Churchill and American generals Dwight D. Eisenhower and Omar Bradley.

Among the archives are 44 volumes of diaries that cover Montgomery's campaigns in North Africa, the Mediterranean and northwest Europe and his commands in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization after the war.

"A lot of that later period is still secret," said Hamilton, who fought under Montgomery. He said the commander entrusted him with the archives "because I was a professional editor and every time Montgomery wanted anything he went to a professional."

He said the archives filled more than 12 large tin boxes and contained momentos ranging from Montgomery's field-service regulations book to his claim for 1,000 pounds — then nearly $5,000 — for government compensation when his home in Portsmouth was bombed in 1940.

Frankland displayed one of the documents in the archives, titled "Personal and Most Secret," reviewing the state of Britain's Eighth Army when Montgomery took over in 1942.

It starts in the commander's blunt style: "The Eighth Army is in a bad state; the troops had their tails right down and there was no confidence in the high command..."

Several American and British libraries and universities had reportedly been vying for the archives, considered a major source of World War II history. Hamilton did not say which specific institutions wanted them.

You can't afford NOT to buy any longer!

Total move in costs of $5250 is based on 5% down or $3800 plus $1450 limited closing costs based on 15 days prepaid interest. The first year's payment of $673.30 (principal and interest only) is based on a loan amount of $71,400. The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivas lent to a rate of 10 7/8% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 15 7/8% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be changed at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage bases upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximun increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. Annual percentage rate approximately 16.575%.

Want a free car?

Chuck Davis sits astride a 1982 luxury sedan, a merchandising gimmick he hopes will attract prospective buyers to the house at 2407 Stutz Place he and his wife are trying to sell.

All you need do is buy the house

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Parked on the lawn at 2407 Stutz Place, in a rather fashionable Midland neighborhood, sits a metallic beige, four-door, $15,000 luxury Toyota Cressida sedan, loaded with extras and a windshield message — "This Car Free" — the stuff from which fantasies are spun.

Excited passersby may even glance about, anticipating the appearance of a swarthy fellow of Latin extraction with his diminutive aide in tow, both dressed fit for fantasy in vanilla suits and white shoes.

But as with most freebies, there's a catch. In this case, a four-bedroom, four-bath, 3,100-square-foot, ranch-style catch parked just behind the car.

It seems the windshield's other half reads "Buy This House."

"Buy This House...This Car Free." Fantasy Island, indeed.

The semi-fantasy is the brainchild of Chuck and Evelyn Davis, proprietors of Permian Toyota of Midland, who for approximately three months have been unsuccessfully trying to sell or rent their home.

After a fruitless, 90-day search through a local Realtor, Davis hit upon the eye-grabbing sales technique, calling it "a unique idea that might attract somebody's attention."

The car has served as front-yard dressing since Wednesday, generating two inquiries but no buyers the first day.

Mrs. Davis said the home, priced at $149,000, became too big as their two sons and daughter reached college age. The Davises, residents of Midland for eight years, purchased a smaller home near Green Tree Country Club, where they both enjoy golfing.

Although prospective buyers have been scarce, the Davises seemed optimistic about their "merchandising" gimmick.

Davis said since the Realtor's more conventional methods failed, "I thought, well, by gosh, this might do some good."

Reagan uses power to stall freight strike

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — By invoking his power to temporarily avert a nationwide freight strike, President Reagan is hoping a settlement can be reached in the dispute between 40,000 locomotive engineers and the railroad industry.

Reagan interrupted his vacation at his mountaintop ranch 20 miles from here Thursday to sign an executive order creating a presidential emergency board to investigate the issues.

The president's action, taken three days before a threatened strike, triggers a 60-day cooling off period. Any walkout during that period would violate federal law.

The president's power to forestall a strike is part of the Railway Labor Act.

"It was the president's view that a railroad strike would have an immediate impact on the public," said White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes. "He considers the railroad industry crucial to the U.S. economy."

Reagan signed the order shortly after the National Mediation Board sent him its findings that a strike would virtually shut down rail freight movement in the United States.

The contract dispute between the engineers and 10 rail lines centers on pay, work rules and working conditions, Speakes said. Mediation efforts began last December and ran through May, he said.

"A strike by the BLE (Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers) threatens substantially to interrupt interstate commerce to a degree such as to deprive a section of the country of essential transportation service," said a written statement issued by White House officials in California with the president.

The president is expected to name the three members of the fact-finding board next week. They would have 30 days to study the issues and develop recommendations, and the union and industry then would have 30 days to consider the board's findings.

The BLE had scheduled a walkout for 10:30 p.m. EDT Sunday. Before Reagan's action, Bill Wanke, first vice president of the engineers' union, said the union "absolutely" would abide by the no-strike ban and the accompanying cooling off period.

Speakes said a strike would have a "severe impact on Department of Defense material, coal, wheat and inter-city rail passengers." In addition, he said it would increase unemployment by 620,000 after two weeks and by 1.1 million after four weeks.

Speakes said in 1981, 18 percent of the Defense Department's freight traffic went by rail. That figure rose to 25 percent in the first six months of this year.

Move takes jail by surprise

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Five federal prisoners who were to have begun a hunger strike today in protest of alleged poor health and safety conditions in the city jail were unexpectedly removed from the jail and transferred to the federal prison at Seagoville.

Two officers from the Bureau of Prisons arrived at the jail about 8 a.m. today, taking even the police department by surprise. "I guess that's one way of solving the problem," shrugged one city police officer, who said he suspected but couldn't be sure that television publicity Thursday night may have been a factor in the sudden transfer of the men, some of whom had been in the jail two and three months.

Federal authorities couldn't be reached for comment by press time.

The inmates had complained of a lack of proper ventilation, inadequate medical attention and tepid drinking water. They also said they were allowed to shower only once a week and were being deprived of adequate access to their lawyers.

"The temperature of the drinking water is 80 degrees," said Robert Corbin, one of a dozen or so federal prisoners temporarily housed at the jail under a contract between the city and the government. "The windows are always closed and there's no fresh air.

"There's no doctor and we're constantly sick because of the heat. The jailers tell us if it's a life or death situation — closer to death — they'll take us to the hospital."

Corbin, a 29-year-old Dallas man who has served eight months of a three-year sentence for drug conspiracy, originally was confined at the minimum security federal prison camp in Big Spring, which has no cells to accomodate "discliplinary problems."

He had been in the city jail five weeks, awaiting completion of a disciplinary transfer to the medium security prison at Seagoville, and was chosen as spokesman for the group of protesting inmates. He and the others had also complained about red tape delays that kept them in the jail and away from the relatively easier life in federal prison.

In a suit filed June 25, one of the inmates, Lewis Eugene Gregg, alleges the city jail lacks a fire escape and that "no facility exists for attorneys and prisoners to consult with one another in total privacy."

Doctors feel two hospital additions warranted

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

While Midland Memorial and Parkview hospitals are preparing to battle over which facility should be granted state approval for additional beds, a consensus of the local doctors is that both hospitals need to be expanded.

Dr. J. Ralph Berry, president of the Midland County Medical Society, told The Midland Reporter-Telegram Thursday the physicians will support both MMH and Parkview's expansion plans.

Until recently, Berry said the physicians have "stayed on the sidelines" in matters concerning certificate of need applications.

"The public should have a choice between two hospitals," Berry said.

A four-point letter distributed June 15 to Midland's physicians asking for support of two hospitals in Midland has resulted in 80 percent of the doctors favoring both facilities receiving additional beds.

UNDER TEXAS law, MMH and Parkview must submit certificate of need applications to the Texas Health Facilities Commission for more beds.

MMH's application calls for a $15 million 77-bed expansion, while Parkview applied for a $17.5 million 110-bed hospital which will be located on 10 acres on Midland Drive.

Parkview officials hope to convert the existing facility to a psychiatric hospital, but, according to Parkview's application, "whether or not the conversion application is granted, additional medical/surgical beds will be needed in Midland County because of the rapid population growth."

And Berry said this is one reason why the physicians decided to make a public statement concerning the applications.

Public hearings on the application are expected to be held in mid-August with the Permian Basin Health Systems Agency Area-12 which will recommend its findings to the THFC.

BERRY, AN ophthalmologist who has practiced in Midland for 10 years, said an ad hoc committee of the Medical Society reviewed the question of whether or not Midland could support the additional 127 of beds. The following is the letter suggesting the position the physicians should take in this issue:

"The Ad Hoc Committee of the Midland County Medical Society on hospital plans for the local area has met and suggests the following items:

"—Midland County Medical Society should support, both here and in Austin, both hospitals in their bid and hospital applications for the consent of same.

"—The local citizens, we feel, deserve a chance to make a choice between the two hospitals, or even three, if such should be built.

"—The local area is grossly under the number of beds needed for a catastrophic emergency (such as Wichita Falls' tornado, gas problem, local railroad cars, hazardous material trailers) e.g., Chaparral Center is not useful as hospital.

"—The average ratio, four beds per 1,000 population, would indicate the necessity here for 375 beds, plus 75 more for county needs. This would lessen the flow of the local patients to nearby and more distant hospitals. With 11 new doctors coming to the city and some 110 M.D.'s located here, more surgical, medical and drug and mental-related beds are needed urgently if these doctors are to stay in practice here."

BERRY SAID A "minority of the doctors — 20 percent — don't feel that way. They only want one hospital," but the consensus is to "accept the fact there's room for two."

He added the disagreement among the doctors was over the last two points in the letter.

"Can we retain the number of doctors if we don't have adequate facilities for them?" Berry asked.

"Midland Memorial needs more operating space," he added, referring to the present conditions at MMH. "Obstetric space has reduced operating room by 30 percent a week."

In its application, MMH has proposed a new labor and delivery room area.

"I can book a surgery at 8 a.m. and I can't get in until 12. Problems might crop up in the middle of the night...women waiting to deliver must have Caesarean-sections," he said, adding that "obstetrics now takes one-third to one-half of the six surgical rooms" at MMH.

Ex-Congressional page stands by story

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former House page LeRoy Williams, who maintains he arranged an appointment for a senator with a male prostitute and himself engaged in sexual acts with a congressman, stood by his story today even though he flunked an FBI lie detector test.

Williams told an Arkansas television station Thursday after the test that he had given the FBI the names of three members of the House and a senator.

But the examiner who conducted the test, Williams said on the NBC-TV "Today" show, "stated that I flat-out flunked the test, that he felt like I should right then turn my story around and tell the truth."

He accused the person who administered the test of being "biased."

"From the start, he was not very objective about the test. His test was pointed toward, was I condemning the congressmen or, he was just not very objective at all."

Asked by interviewer Chris Wallace if he had been lying, Williams replied, "No, I was not."

Williams said he was still ready to testify under oath to the House ethics committee, which is investigating the allegations, or to a grand jury.

Asked what he would tell the committee "with regard to your relationship with three congressmen," Williams said:

"I'm prepared to tell them the truth."

Q: Which is?

A: The fact that I was involved with three congressmen and that I did also set up liaison meetings...between congressional people, one senator and models from, prostitutes from, friendly models."

In his interview Thursday with Little Rock television station KARK-TV, Williams repeated the names of three congressmen and one senator, but they were deleted from that broadcast. He did not use the names in today's interview.

Williams said today that he had sex with a member of Congress and set up the meeting involving the senator "because I felt I was afraid of the consequences if I said, 'No.'"

After the interview, Williams' attorney, Bob Scott, said Williams had been involved with three congressmen from September to November 1981. There were three incidents, he said, all in the congressmen's offices and all after hours.

On Thursday, Rep. Robert K. Dornan said he is pushing for a second congressional investigation into the allegations that some lawmakers have been involved with illicit sex and cocaine use.

Dornan, a California Republican who allowed his congressional office to be used by an undercover narcotics agent, also says his sources tell him that seven current members of Congress — six in the House and one in the Senate — have been implicated by others as drug users.

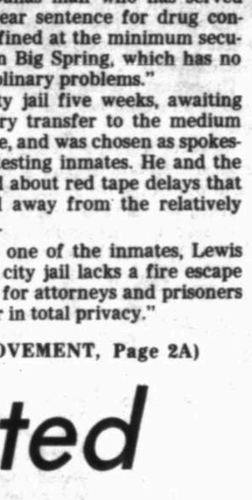

The seven lawmakers, along with two former members of Congress, have been named as cocaine users by three separate investigative sources, Dornan said in a letter to Rep. Leo Zeferetti, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control.

Three of the six current House members are from California, one is from New York, one from Massachusetts, and one from a state in the District of Columbia metropolitan area, Dornan said. He did not list the state of the senator nor the states of the two former congressmen.

Dornan also said allegations of homosexual activities with congressional pages have been made against two of the nine supposed cocaine users.

Panel's pot report attacked

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eliminating criminal penalties probably would not increase use of marijuana, but it could save society money and effort in trying to enforce ineffective laws, says a National Academy of Sciences committee.

The report recommending an end to criminal sanctions for private use was attacked not only by the government, but also by the head of the academy, both fearing that such an action might encourage drug use.

The study, released by the academy Thursday without the fanfare that often accompanies similar reports, questioned the effectiveness of present law-enforcement policies concerning marijuana.

An 18-member committee of experts said decriminalization of individual use would save law enforcement, legal and social costs related to arresting 400,000 persons a year on marijuana-related charges.

While the committee did not call for legalizing marijuana, it proposed eliminating criminal penalties for personal possession or use of small amounts of pot and possibly replacing them with civil sanctions such as fines.

Despite all levels of government spending hundreds of millions of dollars each year trying to stop the drug, the group said, an estimated 55 million Americans have tried marijuana.

"The effectiveness of the present federal policy of complete prohibition falls far short of its goal — preventing use," said the study.

The National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA), which sponsored the four-year study, rejected the conclusions of the report and said it would not consider implimenting them.

William Pollin, the NIDA administrator, disagreed with the conclusion that decriminalization would not encourage increased use. Pollin said removing criminal penalities might be interpreted as meaning marijuana was now considered harmless.

A NIDA spokeswoman, Carol Sussman, said there is concern that decriminalization would have "serious and tragic health effects" among young people.

Kheira and M'hamed Mahallem talk about their cross-Texas trek from Houston to Odessa in a taxicab — a 15-hour ride via Galveston and Dallas that ran up a $999 cab fare.

Cabbie, take us to Odessa — the long way — and step on it

ODESSA (AP) — "Where is Odessa? Where is Odessa?" two exhausted Algerian tourists kept asking from the back of a cab as they watched the meter roll up a $999 fare.

Kheira and M'hamed Mahallem, who speak little English, hailed the cab at Houston Intercontinental Airport, thinking it would be just a short ride to Odessa, where Mrs. Mahallem's brother lives.

But Odessa is 500 miles to the northwest and the trip last Friday turned into a 15-hour odyssey that included side trips to Galveston and Dallas — in opposite directions.

The cabbie told the couple he wasn't exactly sure where Odessa was. So he made the trip via Galveston — 50 miles southeast of Houston — and Dallas — 350 miles east of Odessa.

The meter showed a fare of $999, but the driver settled for $320 — leaving the couple penniless because the Algerian government allows travelers to take no more than $150 each out of the country. Relatives supplied the remaining $20.

With her relatives helping interpret, Mrs. Mahallem told the Odessa American in a copyright story Thursday that the couple flew from Algeria to Paris on June 30 and on to Houston July 1. When they arrived in Houston, Mrs. Mahallem called her brother, but he wasn't at home so she decided to take a cab and surprise him.

"She was very excited and wanted to see her brother," said Rosemary Kouider, Mrs. Mahallem's sister-in-law. "They had been flying all day from Algeria to Paris to New York to Houston, and were exhausted."

But the Algerian couple became frightened after several hours in the cab. "Where is Odessa, where is Odessa?" they repeatedly asked the driver.

Mrs. Kouider says she was shocked when she learned that the cab had come from Houston — not from the Midland-Odessa Airport.

"I thought I would die," Mrs. Kouider said.

Ex-U.S. envoy calls warning about Lebanon 'maneuvering'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Malcolm Toon, who has served as America's top envoy both to Moscow and Tel Aviv, says the Kremlin's warning over possible use of U.S. troops in Lebanon appears to be "political maneuvering" rather than a threat of direct Soviet intervention in the conflict.

Toon said Thursday the message sent to President Reagan by Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev may actually serve to increase the chances that the United States will go ahead with sending Marines into Beirut to help evacuate beleaguered Palestinian guerrillas.

"We're now in a different sort of ball game," Toon said in an interview. "With the Soviets issuing these threats, it's going to be rather difficult for us to back away from the president's apparent commitment without giving at least the appearance of knuckling under to Soviet pressure."

Brezhnev's message to Reagan, as reported by the official Soviet news agency Tass, said that if U.S. Marines were dispatched to Beirut "the Soviet Union would build its policy with due consideration of this fact."

According to Tass, Brezhnev expressed the hope that "at this critical moment ... a sense of responsibility and common sense would prevail over opportunistic calculations."

The report did not specify what stepsthe Soviets were prepared to take in case American troops become involved in a multinational peacekeeping force for Lebanon.

However, Tass asserted that sending in the Marines would aggravate an already explosive situation, "strengthen the aggressor and in the final analysis ... supplement the Israeli occupation with U.S. occupation."

Toon, who served as U.S. ambassador to Israel in 1975-76 and subsequently as ambassador to the Soviet Union before retiring from the Foreign Service in 1979, said of the Kremlin warning:

"What they're doing is making sure that we go in there. That probably was not their purpose, but that's what the effect of the threatening language will be on the likelihood that the president would back down — unless there is some other device uncovered in the negotiations" involving U.S. special envoy Philip C. Habib.

Midland doctors favor MMH, Parkview expansions

"I can't compete with that," he said. "MMH has got to get that bond issue through for the 77 beds."

Parkview's application proposes an obstetrics department in its facility. And Berry suggested that an additional obstetrics hospital also could be utilized in Midland.

"ODESSA IS 10 years ahead of Midland with its Women's and Children's Hospital," he added. "We can improve the standard of care in the area with two good choices," Berry said.

Parkview's application also proposes an emergency room which Berry feels will be supported by the paying and indigent patients.

"If the hospital (Parkview) does what it says it will and puts in an emergency room, they'll get the indigent patients also. We don't know what will transpire, but they have not turned indigent patients away (at the existing facility); in fact, they have accepted these patients in the middle of the night."

It has been the concern of the MMH administration that if Parkview builds its new hospital, the paying patients will go to that facility, to be called the Doctors' Hospital, leaving the majority of Medicaid/Medicare and indigent patients for MMH.

Parkview's certificate of need application states: "This project will replace the medical/surgical beds located at Parkview Hospital and will have no significant adverse effect on existing facilities such as Midland Memorial Hospital."

"MIDLAND MEMORIAL would probably still get the bulk of indigent care," Dick Liley, Parkview administrator, said. "However, Parkview is willing to share the burden as long as contractual arrangements can be made. Since I've been here, we've never turned away a patient."

He said Parkview had 40 percent Medicaid/Medicare patients in April and 42 in May.

"It wouldn't bother me to see both projects approved," Liley said. "I definitely believe there has to be two hospitals in Midland. Competition is the force that provides better medical care."

Liley added that after MMH closed beds because of the lack of staff he sent a letter to MMH offering to take any indigent patients as long as Parkview was reimbursed by the hospital district.

"That was a month ago," he said. "We offerd to enter negotiations to ease the burden on MMH by accepting their patients...to date I have not received a reply."

RAY BRANSON, MMH president, told The Reporter-Telegram it is up to the hospital district to consider Liley's offer.

"We will cooperate with any facility providing health care in Midland County." he said. "I don't anticipate we will actively oppose Parkview's application (for its 110-bed hospital)...we will actively promote our application.

"They're competing with us right now for patients," he said. "I think the doctors would be attracted to a brand new facility. I think its in the best interest of Midland for Midland Memorial Hospital to get up to the size to provide adequate health care.

"Our bed-need study does not show a need for more than what is in our application," Branson said. "I haven't seen data that supports more beds."

Branson said he was aware of the four bed per 1,000 population formula that the physicians referred to which is also used the by the PBHSA to determine the number of medical/surgical beds for the area, but MMH's application is "based on projected population figures by the Texas Department of Health and the market (patient load)."

THE PBHSA five-year health systems plan states that the national guideline for general hospitals is that "there should be less than four non-federal, short-stay beds for each 1,000 persons in a health service area except under extraordinary circumstances."

It further states "bed need projection figures found on Table 9 (summary of analysis for all service trade areas) indicate that by 1986, a 4.0 beds per 1,000 population ratio would be necessary to provide equal access to all the region's residents to short-stay beds."

Although this formula pertains to the entire Permian Basin area, Jeanie Kaferle, assistant at the PBHSA, said the formula is also a proper guideline for Midland County.

And, as far as the Medical Society is concerned, 80 percent of Midland's doctors "feel we have to have more beds, active medical/surgical beds," Berry said.

Chance for rain remains in forecast

Although only .04 of an inch of precipitation was recorded overnight in the Midland area, Midlanders may see more rain tonight and Saturday.

With a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms expected through Saturday, the recorded amount of rainfall may increase from the .65 of an inch for the month and the 6.93 inches for the year.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is predicting partly cloudy skies through Saturday with a low tonight near 70 and a high on Saturday in the upper 90s.

Winds are expected to be southeasterly at 5-10 mph tonight, increasing to 10-15 mph Saturday.

Thursday's high of 94 fell nine degrees short of the record high of 103, set for that date in 1964. The overnight low of 69 missed the record low of 56, set in 1979, by 13 degrees.

Carpet stolen from eastside home

In theft and burglary complaints to city police during the past 24 hours, $6,120 worth of carpet was reported stolen from several eastside home under construction by the Plainsman Homes Co. of Midland. The locks on sliding glass doors had been broken to gain entry.

Dr. C.D. Haynes reported the theft of an $1,800 microscope from his office at 3301 Mogford sometime Thursday afternoon.

And Len Popescu of 4602 Crenshaw told officers luggage and assorted household goods vauled at $880 were taken in a burglary of his residence Thursday.

Midlander injured in one-car rollover

PENWELL — A Midland man was in critical condition this morning at Odess'a Medical Center Hospital following a one-vehicle rollover accident about six miles west of here Thursday afternoon.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Dario Lugo, 27, of Rt. 3, Midland, was westbound on Interstate-20 about 1:15 p.m. Thursday when the right rear tire of his 1971 Ford station wagon blew out, causing the car to leave the roadway and roll over three times, throwing Lugo from the wreckage.

Two unidentified passengers in the car were not injured. Lugo suffered head and internal injuries.

Bell to drop appeals of rate orders

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Mark White said today Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. has agreed to drop its appeals of 1980 and 1981 rate orders issued by the Public Utility Commission.

White said in a statement the agreement between Bell and the PUC to dismiss the appeals could save customers more than $100 million.

"The agreement has been endorsed and is supported by the Texas Municipal League's Southwestern Bell steering committee as being in the best interest of all cities affected by the agreement," White said.

As part of the agreement, he said, Bell will withdraw its appeal of the 1981 rate order in which it requested $88.9 million in additional revenues and $20.4 million in refunds of temporary rates ordered by the commission.

Also, White said, neither Bell nor the PUC would appeal an April district court decision that denied a claim by Bell for an additional $25 million but upheld Bell claims for approximately $13 million.

The attorney general said the agreement would end all pending litigation between Bell and the PUC.

Christening date set for William

LONDON (AP) — Prince William of Wales, the baby son of Prince Charles and Princess Diana, will be christened in the music room at Buckingham Palace on Aug. 4.

The ceremony will be performed at noon by Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, spiritual head of the Church of England, a palace announcement said.

The blue-eyed baby, born on June 21, has been named William Arthur Philip Louis.

Second-in-line to the British throne behind his father, the prince has only been seen once in public — the day his parents took him home to Kensington Palace from St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, just 21 hours after he was born.

Aug. 4 is the 82nd birthday of Elizabeth, the Queen Mother, a well-loved figure within the royal family and throughout the nation.

The christening will come one week after Charles and Diana celebrate their first wedding anniversary. They were married in a glittering ceremony at St. Paul's Cathedral last July 29.

Queen Elizabeth II, her son Prince Charles and other most recent royal arrivals have been christened in the music room.

Congress questions transfer by Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional panel is taking the unusual step of defending a bureaucrat whom the Reagan administration transferred to a new job, saying the move was "arbitrary and capricious."

A House Energy and Commerce subcommittee has come to the defense of Wayne L. Pines who, as associate commissioner for public affairs, was spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration until a forced transfer May 17.

Pines, 38, was widely respected in his old post where he was quoted frequently, expressing the agency's viewpoint on issues ranging from toxic shock syndrome to the use of salt.

Pines' new job — special assistant to the director of the National Institute of Mental Health — carries significantly less responsibility even though he has retained his rank in the senior executive service and his pay of $59,100.

At FDA, Pines managed a staff of 59. At NIMH he does not have even a secretary. Pines had been with the FDA for 10 years.

Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker, whose agency oversees the Food and Drug Administration, sought to explain the transfer by saying Pines' skills were needed at NIMH.

But the subcommittee on oversight and investigations, which interviewed 10 people involved with the transfer and reviewed relevant documents, was skeptical of Schweiker's stated reasons.

"While I do not yet wish to challenge the veracity of your stated reason for the transfer, I believe that the staff's investigation raises troubling questions regarding the motives of those responsible...," Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., the committee chairman wrote Schweiker.

Dingell also questioned whether the move was legal in view of the laws designed to shield the civil service from politics.

"The personal talents of Pines are largely squandered in the transfer to an unnecessary position," the subcommittee's report said.

The report added, "... the arbitrary and capricious transfer of a highly respected SES employee has a demoralizing effect not only on the particular agency involved but throughout the government as well."

The report blames David Newhall, chief of staff for Heaer, fod Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker, for the shift. Newhall acknowledged that he was dissatisfied with Pines' work in at least three instances.

In two of those cases, he questioned how Pines sought to defuse embarrassing charges against the administration.

But Newhall said Schweiker had to approve any change in the status of Senior Executive Service personnel.

"This transfer was not a disciplinary action at all," Newhall said in an interview Thursday. "We were not satisfied that Pines was doing the kind of job in that slot that needed to be done and we felt he could make a significant contribution in another SES (Senior Executive Serice) slot."

Surprise movement by government takes prison population by surprise

Gregg, who is appealing a parole violation conviction and has been in the jail five months, was not among the prisoners transferred today. It is not known if he was going to participate in the hunger strike.

The suit also claims there are no provisons for fresh air exercise in the jail and that prisoners are allowed only one fresh change of clothes per week.

A preliminary hearing on the suit is coincidentally scheduled in federal court July 14, Bastille Day in France.

City officials Thursday declined to release a copy of the contract under which federal prisoners are housed because the matter is in litigation.

An official for the federal prison system said while the government expects certain food and sanitation standards to be maintained at the local level, he couldn't be sure of the specific regulations that might apply in Midland's case without reviewing the contract.

Corbin said in a phone interview with The Reproter-Telegram Wednesday that at least five of the 12 federal prisoners had agreed to join the hunger strike, which, he added, would remain in effect until their grievances are resolved.

Chief of Police Wayne Gideon could not be reached for comment.

Survival suits may have saved some rig victims

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some of the 84 men who died in the sinking of the drilling rig Ocean Ranger might have lived if the vessel had carried survival suits to protect them from the frigid North Atlantic, the National Transportation Safety Board says.

The board formally recommended on Thursday that all U.S. drilling rigs operating in cold water carry the suits. The recommendation went to the Coast Guard, which said it hopes to propose regulations in September.

Even though three rescue vessels were on the scene within an hour, the 84 crewmen died when the $125 million drilling rig sank in stormy seas 175 miles off the Newfoundland coast on Feb. 15.

Only 22 bodies were recovered. Autopsies showed all 22 died of hypothermia — loss of body heat — because of exposure to the 31-degree water. At that temperature, a person can die within 15 minutes and can live no longer than 45 minutes.

"The Ocean Ranger's lifeboats provided some exposure protection," the board said. "But many persons aboard entered the water before the rescue boats arrived, and others entered the water when (a) lifeboat capsized as they attempted to board the Seaforth Highlander (a rescue boat)."

"... Had the persons aboard the Ocean Ranger been wearing exposure suits, their survival time would have been extended by several hours, increasing their chances for rescue," it said.

The company that operated the Ocean Ranger, not waiting for the board's recommendation, ordered 4,300 of the exposure suits for its rigs in May at a cost of about $325 apiece.

Board member G.H. Patrick Bursley told a news conference he couldn't speculate how many men would have lived had the suits been available, but knew of at least eight. They were crewmen tossed into the water when a lifeboat capsized after the Seaforth Highlander attempted to toss it a rescue line.

"The master of the rescue vessel said he saw eight or nine men clinging to the lifeboat, but the men became immobilized and unable to respond to the rescuers before they could be pulled from the ocean," Bursley said. "All of them died because of brief exposure to the water."

The NTSB recommendation was issued although the the board has not completed its investigation of the Ocean Ranger's sinking. Bursley said the board expects to get more information on the accident from Canadian efforts to dive to the wreck, which is resting upside-down in about 250 feet of water.

Werner Siems, a Coast Guard spokesman, said Adm. Henry Bell, chairman of the joint NTSB-Coast Guard investigating team, made a similar recommendation for survival suits in April to Adm. John B. Hayes, then commandant of the Coast Guard.

Siems said proposed regulations are now being drafted and may be published for public comment in September.

Company solicited illegally

ANCHORAGE (AP) — Authorities say a Texas-based oil and gas company has solicited illegally thousands of dollars from Alaskans for investment in a questionable oilwell operation in Louisiana.

The state Division of Banking and Securities has ordered Monarch Oil & Gas Corp., to stop selling securities in Alaska. The state obtained a cease-and-desist order against Monarch last week, but the Anchorage Times reported Thursday that sales continue.

State securities examiner Edward Watkins said neither the company nor its agents are registered to sell securities in Alaska as required by law.

But the Times said Monarch sales agent Merrill Berg said the company and its agents are registered in Alaska.

The state officials said they suspect Monarch may be no more than a so-called "boiler room operation" where sales personnel sitting in a room full of telephones make call after call to potential investors looking for tax shelters in oil and gas wells which might not even exist.

Limited partnerships in Louisiana wells are being offered for $5,000 or more. Monarch also asks for a $15,000 note and promises the investor substantial tax savings on the total $20,000 investment.

Chief Examiner Lawrence Carroll said it is impossible to determine whether the operation is genuine, but the failure to register raises suspicions.

The state also suspects Monarch is the same company that operated illegally in Alaska earlier in the year under the name of Olympic Oil & Gas Co.

Texaco region consolidated

Texaco U.S.A. announced this week the formation of a new southwest region with headquarters in El Paso, resulting from a consolidation of the former Casper, Wyoming, and El Paso areas.

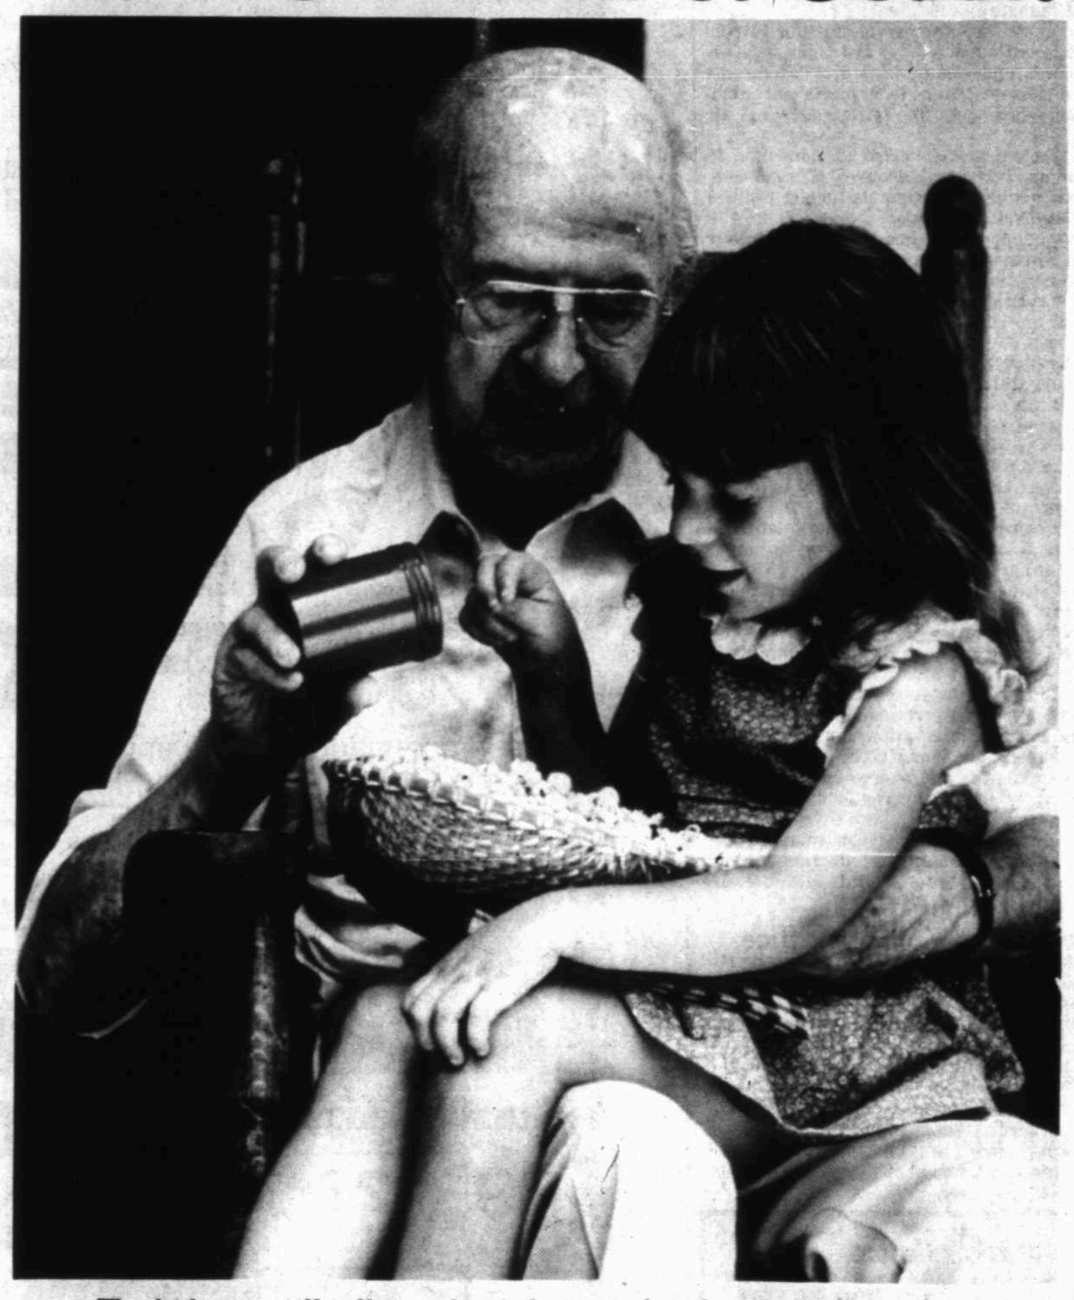

The new region will be responsible for coordinating refining, marketing and supply activities for Texaco U.S.A. in 10 states, including West Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and parts of Idaho, Nevada, South Dakota and Nebraska.

The re-alignment is part of a nationwide program by the company to place Texaco U.S.A in a more advantageous position and to provide more efficient services to its retail and wholesale customers, said a Texaco spokesman.

Thomas B. Meadows, previously manager of the El Paso area, has been named new manager of the southwest region. He is a 1950 graduate of Texas A & M University. He joined Texaco's marketing department in Houston that same year, and has served in various positions with the company since then. He has been manager of the El Paso area since 1979.

Let Grandpa know the kids miss him.

Give him a call.

The kids are still talking about their weekend with Grandpa. And they want to visit him again. Even if you live in Houston and he lives in El Paso, you can still stay close... by phone.

That's because Long Distance is the little touch that says so much. And when you call on the weekend you can say so much... for less. Just call between 11 pm Friday and 5 pm Sunday, or weeknights between 11 pm and 8 am.

This weekend call anywhere in Texas and talk
10 minutes for $2.34. Or less.

Investments of unsecured debts, deposits may be curtailed

By MARTIN BARON
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post NewsService

NEW YORK — Dismayed by the failure of Penn Square Bank, several large money-market funds said Thursday that they would curtail investments in unsecured debt and uninsured deposits of major banks that face big losses from the collapse of the Oklahoma City institution.

A number of money-market officials said the failure had rocked confidence in the financial diligence of certain major banks — some of which already were being shunned by money managers as overly aggressive in their lending and worrisomely weak in making full disclosure of problem loans.

"The credibility of the banking industry is a little bit on the weak side — with certain banks particularly," said a credit analyst at one major money-market fund, who asked for anonymity.

Money funds have emerged unscathed so far from the Penn Square affair. There have been no reports that any money fund had invested in securities or certificates of deposit issued by the Oklahoma bank. While a spokesman for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. said the agency does not know whether any money funds would be hurt, a key Securities and Exchange Commission official said he doubted that any money funds were significantly involved.

With less than $400 million in assets, Penn Square did not meet the normal criteria for investment used by almost all money funds. Most funds invest only in institutions with more than 1 billion in assets. Penn Square's problems had become widely known, and funds usually restrict their investments to top-rated financial institutions only.

"Most money market funds are very restrictive in their credit policies," said Susan Silbert, portfolio manager of Los Angeles-based Transamerica Cash Reserves, a money market fund.

But the incident is bound to rattle investors and money fund managers. "This should shake people up, no doubt about it," said Alan Schreiber, vice president of T. Rowe Price Associates, a Baltimore-based mutual fund group. "People are going to take a loss in a bank; holy cow, nobody's lost money in a bank in a long time."

Penn Square, the fourth largest bank in Oklahoma, was closed last Monday by federal regulators, who declared it insolvent because of large loan losses. The regulators are currently liquidating its remaining accounts. Much of the blame for its collapse has been placed on the bank's aggressive lending to oil and gas producers, who are hard hit by the recession.

While managers of some money funds said the Penn Square collapse would not affect their investments in major banks, others said they were unlikely to add to their holdings of securities of institutions that have become embroiled in the affair.

If such sentiments become widespread within the $280 billion money fund industry — and so far they have not — the cost of funds to banking companies such as Chicago-based Continental Illinois Corp., Seafirst Corp. of Seattle and Chicago-based Northern Trust Corp. could rise. Close observers say, however, that so far those banks are not being forced to pay higher rates to attract big depositors such as money market funds because of the Penn Square collapse.

Continental Illinois bought about $1 billion in energy-related loans originated by Penn Square and is expected to lose between $120 million and $200 million before taxes in the second quarter as a result; Seafirst, which bought about $400 million in loans, said its losses have not been determined, and Northern Trust, which bought about $125 million in loans from Penn Square, has increased its loan loss reserve by $8 million as a result.

Said one portfolio manager of Continental Illinois: "I'm not going to purchase any more money in it until this all settles down."

Continental Illinois ca.e in for particular criticism from one money manager because it failed to write off loans bought from Penn Square until the Oklahoma institution was declared insolvent. And the money manager said the whole affair had cast doubt on previous claims by Continental Illinois that it reviewed the Penn Square-originated loans wih as much care as those it made on its own.

Experts say New England still vulnerable to cutoff

By BILL STALL
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — In spite of greatly improved oil supplies, a large number of New England energy experts believe the region is just as vulnerable to a major energy supply cutoff as it was four years ago, before the Iranian revolution created turmoil in the world oil market.

This view prevails even though the area's dependence on oil has declined by about 10 percent during the past several years, shows a survey conducted by the New England Energy Congress.

Another major finding of the telephone survey was that a substantial number of energy experts sharply disagreed with the Reagan administration's energy policy of keeping government out of the energy business and letting market forces determine fuel use, supply and demand and prices.

For instance, 83 percent of those queried disagreed with the Reagan administration view that the federal government should have little to do with research and development of renewable energy resources.

"The respondents felt strongly that federal government does, indeed, have an important role to play in shaping national energy policy, despite current trends in Washington," the survey authors said.

Despite the disagreement over Reagan energy policy, there still was considerable sympathy for letting the market set supply and price. For instance, 56 percent opposed federal supports, such as loan guarantees, for the construction of synthetic fuels projects.

The survey concluded: "Many who agree, for example, that the government should subsidize the Solar and Conservation Bank, did so as an effort to restore balance to federal energy subsidies. Their preference would be to eliminate all subsidies."

On specific questions, however, most of the respondents favored continued federal assistance in areas like conservation and weatherization of low-income homes and implementation of federal efficiency standards for home appliances like refrigerators and air conditioners.

The energy congress staff talked to more than 70 people, including corporate executives, officeholders, environmental activists, consultants, public utilities officials and academic specialists.

One of the questions asked was, "Do you think New England is in a better position to cope with an energy supply curtailment now than it was in 1978?"

Half those surveyed said yes, but 36 percent said no and 14 percent were listed as "uncertain."

Much has been done in recent years to relieve New England of its "crushing 80 percent dependence" on oil for heating, transportation and other uses, the report said. This is due partly to conservation and the use of wood, wind, solar, hydroelectric and other non-petroleum fuels.

"This satisfaction is tempered by the sobering fact that the six New England states still rely on oil for over 70 percent of their energy needs," the report said. "Further, consumers in these northern states continue to pay an average of 25 percent more per unit of energy than the nation as a whole."

A majority of the respondents said conservation is the single most important energy goal for the region during the next five years.

The report, edited by Lock Pawlick, said, "While New England still relies on foreign sources to provide almost three-fourths of its petroleum needs, the dramatic reduction of oil imports nationwide may help explain why energy conservation, not energy independence, was mentioned most often by respondents when asked to identify the energy issues they felt were most important for the region to address in the next five years."

The major emphasis of the Reagan administration has been to increase domestic production through accelerated leasing of federal lands and offshore waters for oil and gas drilling.
