Deadline approaches for Kosovo resolution

If talks between the Yugoslav government and the Kosovar ethnic Albanians fail, NATO is ready to begin bombing Serb military targets throughout Yugoslavia as soon as today.

IF TALKS FAIL

- NATO will bomb Serbian targets if Serbs refuse peace terms. Ethnic Albanians fear this will trigger retaliation against their people by Serb forces currently in the region.
- More than 1,000 international monitors would be evacuated from Kosovo before the bombing begins.
- Albania has offered NATO full use of its ports and airports.

Clinton warning

WASHINGTON — President Clinton warned Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic on Friday that he would be "held accountable" and face NATO airstrikes if he refuses to accept a peace accord with ethnic Albanians and allow NATO peacekeeping troops into Kosovo. Clinton sent Secretary of State Madeleine Albright to peace talks in France for a down-to-the-wire diplomatic bid to seal a deal by a Saturday deadline. The president said the time limit was firm, and he had ordered U.S. warplanes "to be ready" to attack Serb targets. "There needs to be an agreement before the strikes commence," the president said at a news conference with French President Jacques Chirac.

Trade deficit

WASHINGTON — The economic crisis that has pushed one-third of the globe into recession caused U.S. exports to drop for the first time in 13 years and pushed the nation's trade deficit to an all-time high. The Commerce Department reported Friday that the imbalance between what America imports and what it sells abroad soared to $168.8 billion last year, 53 percent above the 1997 level and topping the old record of $153.3 billion set in 1987.

Old terminal comes down in eye-catching, sentimental demolition

By Rick Lopez

Beth Brown had a special place in her heart for the old Midland International Airport terminal.

Sure, it's become moldy and crusty over the years, but it was the place where the 25-year-old Odessan boarded her first plane.

... And where she booked her first vacation without her parents, met her great-grandfather for the first time and flew out for her first job interview.

On Friday, Ms. Brown was taking her first flight from the new airport terminal as a work crew began demolishing its 50's-era predecessor Friday.

"It's kind of ironic," Ms. Brown said, while waiting for a flight to Austin.

She peered out a second-floor window to watch the bulldozers and other huge hydraulic machines line up around the decaying structure before turning it to rubble.

"I feel a little sad ... but, oh well. Out with the old, in with the new," Ms. Brown said.

Onlookers cheered as a 70-ton excavator punched out a large hole from the terminal with one sweep, tumbling sheets of faded paneling, concrete and steel to the ground.

Eye-catching but sentimental, Friday's event launched an eight-month project that eventually will turn the site of the old

Gramm calls for using surplus to stop tax.penalty against couples

■ Senator discusses his plan at home of Midland couple.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm chose to speak from the home of a Midland couple Friday to announce his planned push to erase the tax penalties on married couples.

Gramm's so-called marriage tax is estimated at $1,400 each for a couple making $30,500 each per annum. This is caused by the decrease in standard deductions for a married person vs. a single person, the higher tax bracket for the combined income vs. the separate incomes and other penalties related to dependent exemptions, Gramm said.

If each of these hypothetical taxpayers were single, they would pay $7,184 each, but as half of a married couple, they would each pay $8,563, he said.

Gramm and entourage, along local news media representatives, were hosted by Neal and Melanie Harrison at their northwest Midland home.

"We could have done it down at City Hall, but what does that have to do with marriage?" Gramm said. "So we found somebody like Melanie who would let me drag all these people into her kitchen," he said.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram
U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm met with several Midlanders Friday morning to talk about tax relief and the marriage penalty tax. The gathering was hosted by Neal Harrison, standing right, and his wife, Melanie, seated to Gramm's left.

Because of the strong national economy, Congress has a budget surplus, and in a generally bipartisan agreement, two-thirds of this surplus will be used to shore up the country's Social Security system over the next 15 years, Gramm said.

The remaining third of this surplus is slated to go to the federal budget, and political wrangling has begun over how this will be best used, he said.

Estimated at more than $600 billion, Gramm suggests a budget where a significant portion of this money is used to remove the penalties that apply to married people by raising the standard deduction for couples.

"We want to raise the standard deduction by $3,900 to eliminate the marriage penalty," he said.

This would eliminate the tax penalty for a wide variety of married wage earners.

Some tax analysts would point out that this is a boon for the single wage earner families where one spouse stays home with the children and is a non-earning dependent, Gramm said.

He countered this argument, however, by saying that a family should not be penalized by having a full-time, child-rearing parent to look after the household.

"We want the tax code to be neutral with regards to that decision," Gramm said.

Many Democrats support the president's plan to increase funding for such things as housing, education and nutrition, which Gramm says he would support, but through increasing available funds to the family.

"The real debate is not how much money you're spending, but who's doing the spending," he said.

Gramm said his plan also would help low-income working families, since the increased standard deduction would be an "above the line deduction" on income tax forms.

By taking a $3,800 or $3,900 deduction on the taxable amount of income a low-income couple earns, this would

8th-grader tags along with mayor, has burger with Gramm

Sissy Ortiz apologized for her T-shirt, jeans shorts and white sneakers.

Most eighth-graders who attend Abell Junior High School normally aren't worried about such things, but then again, most eighth-graders don't get to have a power lunch with Sen. Phil Gramm (R-Texas), swap dog stories with the mayor or snap pictures at a press conference about taxes.

Most certainly wouldn't write a letter to Mayor Bobby Burns asking to tag along for a day doing government stuff.

But she did, and so on Friday, Burns showed up unannounced at Sissy's school with Gramm in tow and asked her to ride along. Sissy thought she was going to shadow the mayor next week, but that had to be canceled because of achievement testing.

So you'll have to excuse her casual outfit.

"I would have been formal," Sissy said. "But, I mean, this is the mayor, and how many chances do you get to be with the mayor?"

Sissy got her chance because she met Burns four years ago at a leadership class. Burns gave a speech about his duties, and when he asked if there were any questions, Sissy raised her hand.

"How much money do you make being mayor?" she asked.

"Well," Burns answered, "it varies."

"That's OK," she answered. "I'm going to take your job, anyway."

Sissy isn't exactly shy, said her mother, Linda, a case worker at the Midland Salvation Army. Her

Milosevic refuses to meet with U.S. envoy

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Declaring he would not surrender Kosovo "even at the price of bombing," Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic refused Friday to meet with a U.S. envoy sent to urge him to accept NATO troops as part of a peace accord with ethnic Albanians.

The envoy, Christopher Hill, left Friday afternoon to return to the Kosovo peace conference in Rambouillet, France, after delivering the appeal to Yugoslav Foreign Minister Zivadin Jovanovic.

NATO has threatened to launch airstrikes if Serbs and ethnic Albanians fail to accept an internationally-sponsored peace plan by noon Saturday (6 a.m. EST).

"NATO is ready to take whatever measures are necessary, ... these include the use of airstrikes," NATO Secretary General Javier Solana said Friday in a statement.

Milosevic's refusal to meet Hill makes attacks more likely. In an effort to salvage the conference, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright was heading to Rambouillet. Her scheduled arrival, just before Saturday noon, suggested the deadline could be extended.

However, White House press secretary Joe Lockhart noted the deadline already has been extended once, and urged both sides to "face the difficult choices to get a peace."

With prospects for success dim, Canadian and some European diplomats began evacuating the Yugoslav capital. U.S. officials said in Washington that planning was under way to evacuate the 130 American diplomats and dependents in Yugoslavia and to assist 4,000 other Americans in leaving.

The State Department warned U.S. citizens Friday against travel to Serbia and strongly urged Americans in that country to depart. European Union nations also urged their citizens to leave Yugoslavia.

And the 1,300 workers of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, which oversees international monitors of the cease-fire in Kosovo, were ready to pull out should talks fail, said Col. Mike Philips. "The levers are in place, and we are ready to pull them," Philips said.

About 2,000 people have died and hundreds of thousands have been displaced in a year of fighting between government forces and the rebel Kosovo Liberation Army, which seeks independence from Serbia, the main Yugoslav republic. Ethnic Albanians make up 90 percent of Kosovo's 2 million population, and most favor independence for the Serbian province.

To end the bloodshed, the United States, Russia, France, Britain, Germany and Italy have offered a peace plan to the warring parties that calls for 30,000 U.S. and other NATO troops to enforce the agreement.

The presence of foreign forces, however, has emerged as the main stumbling block to Belgrade's acceptance of the accord, which would provide sweeping autonomy for Kosovo.

There was no statement from the Yugoslav government on why Milosevic would not see Hill, one of the three principal negotiators at Rambouillet.

Before Hill arrived Friday, however, Milosevic denounced international threats that, as he put it, Yugoslavia "will be bombed if it does not allow foreign occupation of part of its territory."

"We will not give away Kosovo, not even at the price of bombing," Milosevic declared.

That message was echoed Friday in the government-controlled media, which appeared to be preparing the population for attacks. Travelers reported seeing heavy movement of troops, helicopters and jets in northern Serbia.

In the Kosovo capital Pristina, the province's top Serbian official declared Friday that any uninvited foreign troops would be treated as aggressors. "We will defend our territory from anybody," said Zoran Andjelkovic.

Lt. Gen. Spasoje Smiljanic, commander of the Yugoslav air force, said the country's air defense was ready to "defend the fatherland, especially Kosovo," the official news agency Tanjug reported Friday.

In Pristina, an ethnic Albanian economist, Halim Maliqi, said he was hoping the two sides would reach an accord.

Despite Serbia's strong stand against NATO troops, it appeared unlikely the ethnic Albanians would accept the peace plan without them for fear of Serb reprisals.

In an interview with the KLA's news agency Kosova Press, the head of the ethnic Albanian delegation, Hashim Thaci, said his group insisted that any accord be "guaranteed by NATO, led by the U.S.A." and include "acceptance of the right of Albanians for a final declaration for the status of Kosovo," meaning independence.

North Korean defectors sue intelligence agency

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Yoo Jae Ui sat in the back of a government van, marveling at the late-model cars clogging the streets, the modern high-rise buildings, the colorful neon signs. It was 1995, and Yoo was in Seoul at last.

Three years earlier, he had been sent from North Korea to Siberia to work as a logger. He escaped 18 months later and spent more than a year trying to get to Seoul and claim asylum.

"My days in North Korea and Siberia flashed before my eyes. I thought, yes, I made it. I couldn't have been happier," Yoo said. Soon, Yoo said, his happiness turned to dismay.

On Friday, Yoo and eight other defectors from communist North Korea sued South Korea's intelligence agency for allegedly torturing them during interrogations after their arrival. Their civil suit seeks compensation of $16,700 each for physical and psychological damage. While low by American standards, the amounts are considered large in Korea.

On the day he arrived, Yoo said six intelligence agents met him at Kimpo airport and escorted him to a government building in southwestern Seoul. "The officials began shouting at me, calling me human garbage who abandoned his family. I was confused and shocked," he said.

His interrogation lasted four days and officials beat him with clubs if he failed to answer questions or resisted, he said. "Without any evidence, they said I was a North Korean spy. How could I disprove it?" Yoo said.

The agency acknowledges it interrogates most defectors in an attempt to weed out possible spies but rejects allegations of torture as "totally untrue."

"They fabricated the fact and claimed they were tortured ... in a desperate attempt to receive more government subsidies," said Kim Young-hoon, a spokesman for the National Intelligence Service.

Because of changes in the law, North Koreans who defected to South Korea between December 1993 and December 1998 received $12,500 in "settlement money," less than the $15,000 for those who arrived before them or the $30,800 for those who arrived after them, he said.

Defectors denied the agency's claim.

"Of course, it would be great if we could receive more money because we are poor. But money is not what we are after. Our human rights are the real issue," said defector Han Chang Kwon.

The number of North Koreans fleeing their hunger-stricken homeland has risen sharply in recent years. About 300 have come to South Korea since 1994, compared with a total of 950 since the Korean War ended in 1953.

Many defectors who arrived before 1998 complain they were severely mistreated and beaten.

"We've decided to speak up because we saw signs of changes after the new government of President Kim Dae-jung was inaugurated last year," said Huh Chul Soo, another former North Korean logger in Russia who says he was tortured after arriving in 1994.

Under past authoritarian governments, Seoul's spy agency was notorious for its harsh treatment of opponents.

The first opposition leader to become president in South Korea and a politician who champions human rights, Kim has tried to tame the once-feared intelligence agency, firing two-thirds of its senior officials.

Not all North Korean defectors complain about mistreatment. Those believed to have valuable information about reclusive North Korea receive much more money and apparently better treatment.

Hwang Jang Yop, a 76-year-old former communist party secretary and confidant to North Korean leader Kim Jong Il, arrived in Seoul in April 1997, becoming the highest-ranking official to defect to rival South Korea.

Right after his arrival, he moved into an apartment managed and protected by the intelligence agency and received more than $200,000 in cash. He was questioned intensively, but never at the government interrogation facility.

8-year-old airlifted to Lubbock for surgery

From Staff Reports

The 8-year-old boy who was injured in a traffic accident Thursday was airlifted to a Lubbock hospital where he had surgery Friday, Department of Public Safety officials said.

The condition of George Balderrma was not available at press time.

Accident victim Athena Balderrama, 15, is still listed in serious condition at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, hospital officials said.

The other victims, Sabrina M. Bergerson, 18, and Sonya Balderrama, 13, were released from Memorial Friday, hospital officials said.

The accident occurred Thursday evening at the intersection of FM 307 and County Road 1110.

A vehicle driven by Ms. Bergerson ran into a pickup stopped at the intersection, DPS troopers said. George, Athena and Sonya were all passengers in the vehicle.

The pickup driver, Artie Offield, 45, and his passenger, James Walter, 51, were treated and released Thursday, according to DPS reports.

interests go beyond Faith Hill, school and boys.

"It's not so much that her interests are so political, but she's always very inquisitive as to why, why, why," Ms. Ortiz said. "Our conversations tend to filter into the political aspects of life. I've talked to her about the political frustrations of my job, and why I wasn't able to help people, and I've cried at times. She always wants to know why I can't help."

Sissy took pictures with her hand-held camera standing alongside the crush of TV cameras and reporters at Gramm's press conference and later grabbed a burger with him. She also listened quietly as Burns and Gramm swapped tidbits about the life of a politician and Midland's economy.

Burns said he encourages other students Sissy's age to explore the political process.

"Politics is supposed to be inspiring, but when you see what's going on in (the White House), I'm not sure young people are really inspired," Burns said. "But politics is a good thing to do. I hope there are more Sissys out there who will look at it."

Sissy isn't sure she wants to go into politics. She also wants to be a singer, a psychiatrist and a lawyer. But she thought the time she spent with Burns was "awesome."

"I learned some things," she said.

And there was a bonus.

"Well," she said, her eyes lowering a bit, "it's also a great way to get out of school."

END: Gramm seeks tax break for married couples allow a great many people to maintain their earned income tax credit — which is a tax break designed to encourage low-income people to work.

When these low-level wage earners marry and lose their earned income tax credit, it is "the biggest marriage penalty that exists," Gramm said.

Over the next decade, removing the tax penalties for marriage would cost the country between $130 billion and $150 billion, he said.

Other portions of the surplus would be used for an across-the-board tax cut and increased defense spending, including pay raises for the military and restoring a previously slashed pension fund for the U.S. armed forces, Gramm said of his budget proposal.

Married couples at the Friday press conference were supportive of the plan, pointing out that the loss of tax breaks is significant when people marry.

"It's something you have to think about (when planning for marriage)," said Gena Linebarger, a friend of the Harrisons.

"Children don't even want to get married these days, and then they hear their parents complaining about the marriage penalties," another friend said.

Some detractors in Congress say this plan does not help the poorest of families, since they don't pay taxes.

Gramm maintained that many tax-supported programs such as food stamps exist to assist these poorest of families, "but a tax break is for taxpayers."

"If we give it back to the taxpayers — if something happens and we need it back — we could get it back. If we spend it, it's gone," Gramm said.

terminal into more runway room for the new terminal.

Most of the old terminal's valuables — like fixtures and windows — were salvaged before Friday's demolition. To be saved, though, are two sturdy and healthy trees planted in the courtyard before the old terminal was built. The demolition crew and nature conservation organizations are trying to find a new home for the trees, airport director Ken Day said.

For some people, it was a little disheartening to see the old terminal, which served more than 1 million flyers each year, be reduced to a mound of debris.

But it's what a progressive city like Midland needed to do to prepare for the future, said Gaspar Landeros, an airport maintenance worker.

"It served its purpose, but had a lot of problems," said Landeros, who was sitting in one of the hundreds of lush couches distributed throughout the new terminal for exhausted travelers.

"We repaired it was many times as we could, but the city is right. This new place is what's best for the people."

Landeros' co-worker, Manuel Reyes, worked at the old terminal for 20 years, patching up the rips in its worn carpet, replacing fried wiring and welding back pipe breaks several times a week.

"Sometimes, we'd come in the morning and find all this work waiting for us," Reyes said. "I'll miss the coffee shop, but that's about it.

"I might feel a little melancholy, but at the same time, I'm happy. We're changing with the times."

Two school board trustees to run for re-election in BSISD

By T.E. Jenkins
Big Spring Correspondent

BIG SPRING — Trustees for Districts 1 and 3 are seeking re-election in the Big Spring Independent School District board race.

Larry McLellan is trustee for District 3 and Irene Bustamante represents District 1.

McLellan, board president, is a pharmacist at Professional Pharmacy. He said he is seeking re-election in an effort to continue his role in the schools' direction.

"One of the main reasons I would like to be re-elected is to see the new junior high to completion. It's been somewhat disappointing to see this project take so long to complete, but we wanted to be sure that the facility was up to the highest standards. I think once people see the extent of the school, they'll understand why we were willing to be as patient with the project as we have.

"This year, and the coming year, we are really looking at some tough times financially. The current evaluation of the tax rolls, as well as the loss in mineral values are going to make things tough on all school districts, not just ours. I don't think there is anything better than serving the education of our youth, and I want to see that continue."

Ms. Bustamante, who will be seeking her second term, is an employee at The Medicine Shoppe. She was unavailable for comment.

Although incumbents are the going trend with BSISD, the exact opposite stands true for the Coahoma ISD, as two residents of the area have filed for seats on their board of trustees.

Ronnie Dodson and John Wayne Metcalf have filed their intents to fill the two positions held by Brian Marlar and Bill Gressett. Neither Gressett or Marlar have filed for re-election.

There will be three seats up for grabs in the Stanton ISD — Districts 3, 4, and 7.

Johnny Louder, District 3 board member, has filed for yet another term, which if elected, will extend his 13-year-long tenure with the board.

The ballots remain empty for District 4 and District 7, an at-large seat.

Todd Smith, currently representing District 4, has not yet filed or made his intentions known. The District 7 seat is held by Randy Moore.

No one has yet filed for the boards in the Forsan, Glasscock, Sands, and Grady districts.

Forsan ISD has three at-large positions open; they are held by Dale Humphreys, Donnie Andrews and Domingo Rios.

Glasscock ISD has two openings on the board, held by Lillie Havlak and Jimmie Bednar.

Sands ISD also has two seats up for election, held by Billy Reed and Martin Nichols.

Grady ISD also has two seats open held by Tony Sawyer and Brad Tunnell.

Candidate filing is scheduled through March 17. Early voting begins April 14 and continues through April 27. Election Day is May 1.

Big Spring police arrest El Paso man on drug charges

T.E. Jenkins
Big Spring Correspondent

BIG SPRING — An El Paso man was arrested on possession charges Thursday after about 130 pounds of marijuana was found inside his tires during a routine traffic stop.

Marcus Ayala, 25, of El Paso was pulled over on Interstate 20 for having an expired registration sticker. Officers discovered his license had been suspended and that he had "several other offenses on his record. That's when we placed him under arrest," said Big Spring Police Department Cpl. Ralph Rollins.

Rollins and Officer Joel Garza then had the vehicle searched by a canine narcotics unit.

"The canine unit went immediately for the tires of the vehicle," Rollins said. "Shortly after that, one of the tires was broken down, and that's when we found the marijuana."

"They had the material stashed in compartments that were actually inside the tires themselves," said Police Department spokesman Sgt. Roger Sweat.

"There are four compartments in each tire, and we've found about 8 pounds of the drug in each compartment, so we estimate the seizure to be about 130 pounds total," he said.

"The marijuana that has been recovered, if the weights stay at the number they are currently at, we should have close to 130 pounds. That's a street value of about $60,000," Sweat said.

Sweat said Ayala told officers that he was en route from his home in El Paso to visit relatives in Fort Worth.

"We're not sure at this time whether or not these drugs actually came from El Paso or not," Sweat said. "They may have originated out of Mexico."

Ayala is being held in the Big Spring jail on possession of marijuana charges, a second-degree felony. He is being held in lieu of a $10,000 bond, jail officials said.

Marmolejo announces re-election bid for District 2

From Staff Reports

Adela Villa Marmolejo on Tuesday filed to run for re-election as Midland school board trustee for District 2.

Her challenger, first-time school board candidate George Lara, announced his campaign on Monday.

Ms. Marmolejo, a native Midlander, attended Midland public schools and graduated from Midland College. She has served as trustee for Midland Independent School District since 1988 and was the first Hispanic woman elected to the school board. She has served as board secretary (1991-92) and vice president (1993-94).

"I love kids, and they're the future for tomorrow," Ms. Marmolejo said. "I want them to have a better tomorrow than I had."

Marmolejo

A single parent with a son attending Creighton University, Ms. Marmolejo is employed with the Occupational and Physical Therapy outpatient center.

She is active on various committees, including the Community Justice Committee, Permian Basin School Board Association, Texas Bilingual Association and Neighborhood Housing Association.

Her honors include earning state and national PTA life memberships, being named Outstanding Volunteer for the Volunteer in Public Schools Program and winning the Outstanding Hispanic Involvement in the Community Award and the bilingual association "Hall of Fame" award.

District 2 comprises the southern portion of Midland and a chunk of the eastern portion. In the last District 2 election in 1996, Ms. Marmolejo defeated challenger Clarence "Putty" Zachery with 59 percent of the vote.

No candidates have yet filed to run for election in District 4, which covers a southern central portion of Midland. District 4 incumbent Jackie Hamilton has announced she will not be seeking re-election.

March 17 is the last day to file to run for school board trustee in the May 1 election.

Some crucial words were left out of a sentence in a story in Friday's Reporter-Telegram about the TAAS tampering probe at Washington Elementary.

The sentence should have read, "But the passing percentage on the reading test actually decreased last year, the only year in which the TEA called the number of erasures on that portion of the TAAS questionable."

Another country tipped off Turkish forces on Ocalan's whereabouts

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Lifting a corner of the veil of secrecy surrounding the capture of Abdullah Ocalan, Turkey's prime minister confirmed suspicions in an interview published Friday that another country helped track down the Kurdish rebel leader.

In Turkey's Kurdish southeast, protests over the arrest continued for a fourth day, reportedly leaving one person dead. Security forces fired on Kurdish demonstrators in the town of Kiziltepe, killing one and wounding five, said Aslan Yildiz, an official of the pro-Kurdish People's Democracy Party.

The government didn't comment, but Turkey has taken a hard line against Kurdish demonstrators, arresting more than 1,000 since Ocalan's capture, according to the independent Human Rights Association.

Until now, Turkey has said little about how its special forces nabbed Ocalan in the Kenyan capital of Nairobi and brought him to Turkey to face trial on capital charges.

But in an interview published Friday in the Turkish daily Hurriyet, Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit said the commando team went to Nairobi after another country tipped off Turkey that he was there.

Asked whether the tip came from the United States, Ecevit said: "I can't reveal that. I can't give a country name. But you can make your own guess."

Reports have said the intelligence agencies of the United States or Israel helped Turkey in the capture.

Israel denies any role, going so far as to publish a statement from the Mossad spy agency on Friday and meeting Kurdish representatives in Germany. The country is eager to avoid becoming a target of Kurdish attacks, particularly after Israeli guards shot dead three Kurds when protesters stormed the consulate in Berlin on Wednesday.

Washington, however, stopped short of an outright denial. It said it took no part in Ocalan's capture, but had no comment on whether it helped track him down.

The United States, like Turkey, considers Ocalan a terrorist. He is the leader of the Kurdistan Workers Party, or PKK, which has fought Turkey since 1984 for autonomy in a conflict in the southeast that has killed around 37,000 people.

Ocalan is jailed at Turkey's Imrali island prison, where he is the sole inmate, guarded by commandos. Ecevit said the island is a restricted area, closed to all air and sea traffic.

The interrogation of Ocalan, who was paraded before cameras by triumphant Turkish authorities on his return, continued Friday. Three state security prosecutors were expected to begin questioning the rebel leader soon.

During Ocalan's exile, a special security court in the southeastern city of Diyarbakir put him on trial for terrorism, but never issued a verdict. On Friday, the court sent prosecutors a 400-page file attributing 13,998 crimes to Ocalan, the Anatolia news agency reported.

Up to 4,000 Kurds burned Turkish flags and shouted slogans against the United States, Israel and Turkey in a demonstration in the Lebanese capital Beirut, while 2,000 Iranian Kurds protested in front of the Turkish Embassy in Tehran.

Also Friday, in the Turkish city of Istanbul, an explosive device went off near a car in the downtown, shattering windows nearby, Anatolia reported. There were no injuries, and it was not immediately clear if the incident was linked to pro-Kurdish protests.

Turkey tightened access to the southeast Friday, where unrest continued. It stopped issuing credentials to foreign correspondents for trips to the predominantly Kurdish region. No explanation was given.

Ocalan's capture coincided with a fresh military offensive against Kurdish rebel hideouts in northern Iraq.

At the same time, the prime minister made a conciliatory gesture toward Kurds, saying the government was working on a plan to build roads and hospitals in the impoverished region.

Outside Turkey, pro-Ocalan demonstrations continued, although on a smaller scale than on Tuesday, when outraged Kurds seized embassies and consulates in more than 20 European cities.

Police in Romania clashed with some 100 protesters who tried to march on the Greek Embassy in the capital Bucharest on Friday, with four Kurds and an officer reported injured. And in the Swiss capital, Bern, Kurds briefly occupied the offices of the centrist Radical Democrats party, holding two party workers hostage for four hours.

Up to 4,000 Kurds burned Turkish flags and shouted slogans against the United States, Israel and Turkey in a demonstration in the Lebanese capital, Beirut, while 2,000 Iranian Kurds protested in front of the Turkish Embassy in Tehran.

A group of Kurds tried to rush the Israeli consulate in Montreal, and one policeman suffered a serious injury in the eye while police repulsed them, arresting 14.

A car bomb went off in Moscow near the Israeli Embassy on Friday, injuring two. But it was not clear if the embassy was the target — Israel said it was not — or if it was at all connected to the Ocalan issue.

In Germany, police arrested seven people suspected of being key figures in the PKK in southern Baden-Wuerttemberg state, accusing them of inciting the violent Kurdish protests that took place throughout Germany this week.

Political fallout from the affair continued as well. Greek Prime Minister Costas Simitis, under fire at home for letting Ocalan fall into Turkish hands, lashed out at his European Union allies, saying they did nothing to help Ocalan.

Greece's foreign minister and two other ministers were ousted this week for allowing him to take refuge in a Greek diplomatic compound in Nairobi while they searched for a country to take him in. Most European countries rebuffed Ocalan in his search for refuge.

A fourth Greek official fell Friday, when the head of the National Intelligence Agency, Haralambos Stavrakakis, resigned.

Amnesties force South Africans to face gruesome past

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Some of the bloodiest moments from the years of apartheid came back to haunt South Africans this week when a human rights panel issued a flurry of amnesty rulings.

Police officer Jeffrey Benzien, famous for his "wet bag" torture technique, was absolved. So were five members of a government death squad. Not so fortunate were the men who killed anti-apartheid activist Steve Biko. Their amnesty request was denied.

Few issues provoke as much emotion as the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's amnesty process, conceived as a necessary way to help the nation reconcile with its violent past.

With nearly 2,000 cases outstanding, many more painful decisions lie ahead. Late last year, the commission's Amnesty Committee expanded from three panels to five to speed up the process.

As the most infamous of 14 policemen granted amnesty this week, Benzien extracted information by forcing his handcuffed victims on the floor face down, pulling a wet cloth bag over their heads and twisting it tight around the neck.

Benzien, who demonstrated his technique at a commission hearing, is still a police officer, despite confessing to killing anti-apartheid activist Ashley Kriel in 1987.

Kriel's eldest sister Michelle Assure said her family was shocked and upset at the ruling.

"We feel this flies in the face of the Truth Commission's claim that it would be a victim-friendly body," she said in a statement.

Truth Commission officials say such decisions inevitably hurt victims, whose personal loss blinds them to the healing done to society by pursuing an amnesty process for all sides.

"We know the decisions are going to upset a lot of people, but we really don't have a choice. It is part of the process of reconciliation," Truth Commission spokesman Mdu Lembede said.

To qualify for amnesty, applicants must prove a political motive for their crimes and tell the full truth.

Four policemen were denied amnesty for killing Biko, whose life story was made into a Hollywood film. They stuck to their claim that he died of injuries accidentally sustained after he attacked them in his cell.

Benzien, meanwhile, boasted of his effectiveness as a torturer and described entering Kriel's house as a sewage inspector to shoot him in the back.

Cases such as Benzien's have created an impression that most applicants get amnesty. In fact just 262 of the 5,313 cases heard so far have been successful.

The five policemen from the Vlakplaas police death squad received amnesty this week for several attacks, including killing 10 youths who were told they were leaving South Africa for military training with the African National Congress.

Several supporters of the ANC and Zulu nationalist Inkatha Freedom Party were also granted amnesty for killing political opponents.

Doctor's orders: more wine, sex at least twice a week

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Following doctor's orders could become a popular pastime in the island village of Steinhamn, where the local physician this week urged his patients to drink more wine and have frequent sex.

Municipal doctor Nils Carl Loennberg, 59, distributed his 23-point prescription for a better, healthier life throughout the village of 1,250 people, raising eyebrows and making national news in Norway.

Loennberg's tips include drinking more wine, but less hard liquor, and having sex at least twice a week, as well as more conventional suggestions such as getting more exercise and eating more vegetables.

"Those who don't have an adequate sex life get sick easier," Loennberg was quoted as saying in Friday's editions of Verdens Gang, Norway's largest newspaper.

Loennberg, a founder of the Nordic Society for Medical Humor, said he wanted patients to laugh at his tips and then give them serious thought.

Some bachelors on the island, 250 miles north of Oslo, say they would love to follow the doctor's advice. There is, however, a shortage of single women.

"The part about the wine I could probably manage one way or another," 42-year-old bachelor Elder Huse was quoted as saying. "Now, I hope the doctor will write me a prescription for a girlfriend."

BBC plans to ax dog trial upset many

LONDON (AP) — A little black-and-white dog herds a small flock of sheep around a meadow. Then, another little black-and-white dog herds another flock of sheep. Then another, and another. In the end, the best little dog wins.

Putting sheepdog trials on the air is not the sort of programming that sends a TV executive's pulse racing, but they have been a fixture on the nation's televisions for 23 years. So, the BBC's announcement this week that it plans to ax "One Man and His Dog" was met with dismay — not just in the hills and valleys, but in such unlikely places as Parliament.

Suddenly, sheepdog fans began emerging from the woodwork, speaking out in sorrow and anger at what they saw as a growing disregard for country folk and country ways.

"It is further evidence of the urbanization of our society, with the agenda being dominated by north London wine bars rather than the countryside," Conservative legislator James Gray was quoted as telling The Daily Telegraph.

The BBC insists that it is as committed to rural viewers as it always has been. The show is going, nonetheless, though the BBC says a special edition is planned later this year "to say a very fond farewell to an old friend."

Sensing an opportunity — and an audience — the satellite network Sky TV hopes to ride to the rescue, noting that The Daily Telegraph immediately attracted 1,000 letters of support for its campaign to save the show.

Sky said Friday that it is negotiating with the International Sheepdog Society to create a sheepdog trial program of its own, possibly one day extending it to international competition.

"It's a family entertainment program as much as a sporting competition," Sky spokesman Andrew Sholl said. "It has tremendous loyalty."

Philip Hendry, secretary of the sheepdog society — which has provided "One Man and His Dog" with contestants, judges and dogs since the beginning — says the show brought pleasure "to countless people, many of whom have no direct relationship with the countryside or agriculture at all."

So, for the uninitiated, just what is the attraction?

"The beautiful surroundings," for one thing, Hendry said. Filming takes place in the lush Lake District, the Welsh hills and other scenic areas.

And for a nation of dog lovers, there also is the pleasure of watching what Hendry calls "the wisest dogs in the world" working in practiced partnership with farmers.

"Here is a quiet, simplistic, slow-moving thing — a man at his work," he said.

Still, the audience was tuning out. Viewership had shrunk from a high of 7.8 million during prime time in 1981 to its present 1.6 million on Saturday afternoons.

Guardian newspaper columnist Matthew Engel is no fan. He calls the BBC program a "soft-focus glorification of the minority sport of sheepdog trials."

"One Man and His Dog," he wrote, "is to meet the traditional fate of sheepdogs which somehow survive to such an age: the boss will briefly shed a tear, pat the old boy on the head, then lead the brute behind the shearing shed and shoot it."

Two possible presidents build strong political relationship

JOHANNESBURG (NYT) — When American presidents look abroad for one among their peers whose ideology and style matches their own, they often gaze toward London. Ronald Reagan had Margaret Thatcher. Bill Clinton has Tony Blair.

But if Al Gore wins the White House next year, he might be more likely to look toward Africa than Europe. Gore shares a remarkable relationship with Thabo Mbeki, the man who will almost certainly succeed South Africa's Nelson Mandela a few months from now.

In the past five years, the two leaders-in-waiting have forged ties never before seen between American and African statesmen.

They are intellectual equals, each a philosopher in different ways: Gore on science and progress, Mbeki on the reformation of Africa. Gore writes books, Mbeki drafts his own speeches. Both possess a private charm that seldom transmits on television. And the two genuinely seem to like each other.

"Clinton and Blair deserve each other, Gore and Mbeki deserve each other," says John Stremlau, a visiting professor at the University of the Witswatersrand in Johannesburg. "To think we could end up with two real thinking leaders . . . holy cow, wouldn't that be something."

South Africa got a closer look at the personal chemistry that could shape its relationship with Washington. During a two-day trip to Cape Town with five Cabinet members and a plethora of advisers that ended Thursday, Gore co-chaired with Mbeki the latest meeting of the US-South Binational Commission, concluding the talks with new cooperative agreements on trade, crime prevention, and job creation. Gore's visit was delayed a year when Clinton requested he remain in Washington during a flare-up in the Iraqi conflict last February.

While much of Clinton's ballyhooed Africa agenda has been derailed by wars in Congo, Sierra Leone, Angola, and along the Ethiopia-Eritrea border, the binational commission remains a vital forum for progress between the US and the troubled continent. One of only five such organs — the others involve Mexico, Russia, Ukraine, and Egypt — it is composed of 10 cabinet-level committees and more than 100 working groups that enable Washington and Pretoria to share information on everything from fishing tackle to crop-threatening moths.

The commission might be more form than substance, Stremlau argues, but the form is important. The United States is the top investor in South Africa, and enjoys an $800 million trade surplus. South Africa, meanwhile, remains Washington's most stable and important entry point onto the African continent. US Cabinet officials seem to line up to come. Commerce Secretary William Daley returned with Gore for his third visit in five months. Defense chief William Cohen was here two weeks ago.

The trade agreement, negotiated months ago but signed Thursday, provides new mechanisms to resolve longstanding disagreements between Washington and Pretoria on pharmaceutical copyrights, steel dumping, and South Africa's ties with Cuba. A separate arrangement brokered by Attorney General Janet Reno and her South African counterparts calls for the United States to share expertise in crime prevention with local prosecutors and police.

But the most important function of the commission has been the way it has served as a vehicle for Gore and Mbeki. The two have presided over the organ since its creation in 1994, and that work has forged a balanced relationship rather than one dominated by a senior Western partner. That is crucial for Mbeki, whose vision of foreign affairs is founded on the premise that African states have the right to stand as equals in the community of nations.

"Thabo's approach is that we need a strategic partnership with America, but one that does not frustrate Africa's ability to evolve according to its own interests," said one of Mbeki's advisers, who requested to not be named. "Unlike Mandela, Mbeki has had time to build personal and practical ties with his US counterpart."

Reaching beyond the nuts and bolts of policy, which they are able to discuss with equal agility, Gore and Mbeki share a concern that taps the most fundamental connection between the two countries: how to overcome the long, painful struggles against racism.

"What bonds South Africa and the US together as peoples is that we still have to purge our souls of racism," Stremlau said. "These are the two countries that most manifest that struggle. And these two guys — Gore and Mbeki — each belong to a generation shaped by that struggle."

Advisors: Mrs. Clinton increasingly warming to the idea of Senate run

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Hillary Rodham Clinton and her advisers are contacting dozens of political consultants, Democratic donors and election law attorneys in a rapidly growing effort to determine whether she will run for the Senate in New York.

The first lady did some of her own research Friday, meeting privately in the White House with retiring New York Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, a session that press secretary Marsha Berry called "an opportunity to explore thoughts."

Several of Mrs. Clinton's advisers say she is increasingly warming to the notion of running. Yet they caution that her decision could be weeks or months away. The advisers, contacted by telephone in recent days, all spoke on condition of anonymity.

One longtime ally says Mrs. Clinton likely will wait until April or May to make up her mind. A second said it could be longer.

"I truly believe she will be thorough and methodical and it will take awhile," said Mandy Grunwald, a consultant in Bill Clinton's 1992 presidential campaign who remains close to Mrs. Clinton.

Berry said the decision-making process will be "like watching grass grow."

Vice President Al Gore, after addressing the AFL-CIO executive committee in Florida on Friday, told reporters, "If she chooses to run for the Senate, I predict she will win and be a great senator."

Gore, who is running for president, was asked if he would consider her as a vice presidential candidate. He chuckled and said, "You'll have to hold off on questions like that until she can make her decision and I have the privilege" of winning the nomination and choosing a running mate.

The possibility of a lengthy exploratory period worries New York Democrats who have little hope of fielding quality candidates until Mrs. Clinton gets in or out. Polls show New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani, often mentioned as a possible GOP nominee, leads all potential Democratic candidates with the exception of Mrs. Clinton.

Close friends say her decision hinges mostly on personal issues, because she is already convinced she can raise enough money and build a strong enough political operation to mount a credible campaign. They say it boils down to this: Does she want to be a junior senator? And can she overcome her visceral distrust of the media and accept the scrutiny a campaign would bring?

Two friends who talked to her recently say Mrs. Clinton has suggested that, of all the options open to her, seeking the New York seat may be the most compelling. "The Senate ranks very high," said one friend.

Those sentiments surprise many other close friends and allies who remain convinced she will eventually decide against running. Some cite the family's multimillion-dollar legal bills and her need to make money after leaving the White House.

At her direction, these supporters have sounded out scores of political operatives from across the country, some of whom would be in line for campaign jobs if she runs. Bill Carrick and David Doak, both of whom have ties to New York, received calls recently.

After Mrs. Clinton's meeting Friday with Moynihan, whose retirement will open the New York seat, the senator said they discussed his state's voting patterns and demographics.

"They're more complex than you might think," he said, adding that the numbers "look very good for her, but New York is a big demographic problem." He said he did not advise her on whether she should run, but "of course I'd support her."

AP Photo

First lady Hillary Rodham Clinton is shown in this Jan. 4 file photo. The first lady is reported to be exploring the possibilty of running for the New York senatorial seat in the year 2000.

Several of Mrs. Clinton's advisors say she is increasingly warming to the notion of running.

Mrs. Clinton met previously with Moynihan's wife, Elizabeth; Sen. Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y.; Senate Democratic campaign committee chairman Sen. Robert Torricelli of New Jersey and a few female senators, including Barbara Boxer, D-Calif.

She meets next week with AFL-CIO President John Sweeney.

Mrs. Clinton has not raised money or commissioned polling and there are no plans to do so, advisers say. She did have operatives contact lawyers versed in campaign laws to ensure she stays within legal bounds during this exploratory stage. They also are examining complicated questions that would be raised in the campaign.

Stung by years of investigations in the White House, Mrs. Clinton is said to fear her every move will be studied while she explores the Senate option. Questions already have been raised about who should pay for her travel as first lady if she seeks the Senate seat.

Harold Ickes, a former White House chief of staff and longtime ally of Mrs. Clinton, plans to meet with lawyers next week, sources say.

She could form an exploratory committee before making a final decision, allowing her to raise and spend money in the interim. But advisers said that is not under serious consideration now.

The prospect of nominating a sitting first lady with a huge fundraising base and a strong following excites party activists.

"I would love to see her run," said Sandra Feldman, president of the American Federation of Teachers attending the four-day AFL-CIO convention in Florida that ended Friday.

Mrs. Clinton was the hot topic among labor bosses and Democratic operatives here. Ickes cornered union leaders for their views on the potential candidacy. Sweeney said she would be a good candidate.

Meanwhile in Washington, anti-abortion leaders announced plans to field protesters at every campaign event Mrs. Clinton might hold. "We will have signs, we will ask questions," said the Rev. Patrick Mahoney, director of the Christian Defense Coalition.

Global economic crisis pushes U.S. trade deficit to record high

WASHINGTON (AP) — The economic crisis that has pushed one-third of the globe into recession caused U.S. exports to drop for the first time in 13 years and pushed the nation's trade deficit to an all-time high.

The Commerce Department reported Friday that the imbalance between what America imports and what it sells abroad soared to $168.8 billion last year, 53 percent above the 1997 level and topping the old record of $153.3 billion set in 1987.

While the year managed to end on a slightly positive note with a lower-than-expected December deficit of $13.8 billion, economists warned that the trade gap will widen further this year.

"There is no way that you can conclude the worst is over," said Lawrence Chimerine, chief economist at the Economic Strategy Institute, a Washington think tank. "The deficit was up $58 billion last year and we could easily see another $40 billion to $50 billion increase this year."

The latest worry is Latin America, a region that accounts for one-fifth of U.S. export sales. Brazil, the region's largest economy, was forced to devalue its currency last month and the fear is that a recession there will quickly spread to other nations in the region.

"We have Japan, Southeast Asia and Russia already in recessions, Latin America probably going into a recession and Europe slowing down," said Gordon Richards, chief economist at the National Association of Manufacturers. "That doesn't add up to an optimistic forecast on trade."

American exports fell by 0.7 percent in 1998, the first annual decline since 1985, as sales of everything from soybeans to autos slumped. The global slowdown translated into the worst year for farmers in a decade and contributed to a loss of 234,000 manufacturing jobs last year.

But despite those negative impacts, the overall U.S. economy continued to power ahead as strong domestic demand offset the loss of overseas sales.

In fact, the lower-than-expected trade gap in December probably means that the government will revise up its estimate of overall economic growth from October through December from a sizzling 5.6 percent to an even faster 6 percent pace, many analysts said.

But growth is expected to slow markedly this year, reflecting less consumer demand and continuing troubles in the trade sector. Most economists aren't expecting a recession unless renewed global turbulence causes a big tumble in American markets that makes consumers fearful.

The Clinton administration, worried that the record trade deficits will cause a backlash against its free trade policies, has been stressing with repeated urgency the need for Japan, the world's second largest economy, to pull out of its worst recession in 50 years and for Europe to do more to buy imports from crisis countries.

"Japan and Europe must move forward to ... help promote economic stability and growth in emerging economies," Commerce Secretary William Daley said in commenting on the latest trade figures. Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin was expected to make the same point during meetings of major industrial countries in Bonn, Germany on Saturday.

In other economic news Friday, the Labor Department reported that inflation remained tame with consumer prices rising a barely perceptible 0.1 percent in January as higher costs for oranges, airline tickets and cigarettes were offset by price declines elsewhere, including the biggest one-month drop in clothing costs in a decade.

The politically sensitive trade deficits with both Japan and China widened last year. The imbalance with China rose 15 percent to a record $56.9 billion, the highest ever for any country other than Japan.

America's deficit with Japan rose 14 percent to $64.1 billion, the second worst showing on record, surpassed only by a $65.7 billion deficit with Japan in 1994.

The U.S. deficit with all Pacific Rim countries, the hardest hit region from the global crisis, rose 33 percent in 1998 to $160.4 billion.

These increases are coming as Clinton, who took office vowing to open markets for U.S. industries, is under increased pressure to erect protectionist barriers. The steel industry has filed a number of cases petitioning the government to impose punitive tariffs and other industries from machine tools to textiles are considering filing their own cases.

For 1998, total exports dropped 0.7 percent to $931.3 billion, the first setback since 1985. Before last year, big annual gains in exports have supplied fully one-third of total economic growth for a decade.

Imports last year jumped 5 percent to a record $1.10 trillion. The increase would have been even larger except that falling world energy demand pushed down the price of imported oil to a 24-year-low of $11.52 per barrel.

Governor threatens to abolish elected Detroit school board

DETROIT (AP) — For years, the Detroit school district has been like the straight-D student who always promises to do better on the next homework assignment, then turns it in late and half-done.

Now Gov. John Engler is vowing to change that by asking the Legislature to abolish the elected school board and give Mayor Dennis Archer the power to appoint a new one.

Though a poll shows about half the city's residents support the idea, the plan has outraged many in Detroit who see a white governor and mostly white Legislature trying to oust people elected by a predominantly black city.

Hundreds of parents have shown up at community forums and committee hearings to oppose the plan. The local NAACP has come out against it.

"How dare you take away our rights as black people to vote," Helen Moore, a Detroit parent and school activist, told a state Senate committee Wednesday. "We can solve our own problems."

Caught in the middle is Archer, a black man who has been accused by some residents over the years of not being "black enough" and of working too closely with interests outside the city.

He has said that he doesn't like the governor's idea but that it will probably happen anyway, and he will do what he can to shape the legislation so that it accomplishes such things as reducing class size and bringing back summer school.

"I will insist that the terms of the legislation go far beyond the political substitution of one board for another. I will insist on real change and real benefits for the children of Detroit," Archer, himself a former teacher, said recently.

No one disputes that the schools in this city of 1 million people, three-quarters of them black, have problems. The dropout rate was 26.4 percent in 1997, the four-year graduation rate a dismal 29.7 percent. The district has 180,000 students, 108,000 of them living in poverty.

Those who make manage to graduate often don't have much to show for it. One Detroit job training program, Focus: HOPE, said two out of three graduates of Detroit high schools who took an entrance exam for one program could not read or do math at an eighth-grade level.

Engler's proposal is similar what has been done in Chicago, Cleveland and elsewhere. The appointed board would run the schools for at least five years, at which point the public could hold a referendum on the setup.

"Time and again, I was told: 'Butt out, send more money, wait until we implement our new plan, just give us a little more time.' The bottom line: eight years of excuses to me, preceded by decades of excuses to the people of Detroit," the governor said recently.

Engler said an appointed board could make the hard decisions an elected school board cannot: "You need a board that puts kids first."

He has said among other things that he wants the school system to take the "fluff" out of the curriculum and get back to basics.

Some residents are deeply distrustful. They see Engler's plan as an attempt not only to run the education of their children but to take over a business with 20,000 jobs and billions to spend.

"We all know racism is alive and well, and it is definitely alive in that state Legislature," said Marie Thornton, a parent. "This has nothing to do with the education of little black kids. This is about revenue. They're just using our kids for excuses."

Engler said there is no racism behind the plan, and noted that real control of the schools would be in the hands of Detroit's mayor.

The elected school board is, of course, deeply opposed. It has come up with its own set of ideas, such as establishing 20 schools just for troublemakers, asking parents to volunteer a half-day per month, requiring school uniforms, and using students to clean buildings.

"At any point you can recall us and throw us out," Board President Darryl Redmond said at a recent meeting. "We don't need anybody to come in here and tell us what to do."

Willam Beckham, the head of a panel that spent four months analyzing the district, said Engler's plan could remove many distractions.

Summit under way on dangers of genetically engineered organisms

By Joseph B. Verrengia
Associated Press

Prospecting, piracy, private eyes — the buzzwords negotiators are using at an international summit this week suggest intrigue and danger.

Even the meeting's backdrop — the exotic old Caribbean pirate port of Cartagena, Colombia — adds to the atmosphere.

But instead of weapons or precious metals, experts from 174 nations are debating how to regulate trade in gene-engineered potatoes, cotton, grains and trees.

The U.N.-backed summit represents the first global attempt to reduce the risks that laboratory-designed species might pose to public health and the environment.

For 20 years, biotech companies have been genetically manipulating plants and animals to make them more attractive — redder, juicer tomatoes, for example — speed their growth or make them more resistant to disease.

These new combinations could increase the food supply and reduce the need for hazardous farm chemicals. But opponents fear the unintended consequences of messing with nature.

For example, scientists added commercially valuable traits from the brazil nut to a strain of soybeans but ended up making the soybeans risky for people with nut allergies.

Another fear is that genes inserted in crops to give them certain favorable traits — resistance to herbicides, for example — might jump to surrounding wild plants. Some weeds have already become impervious to weedkillers in this way.

These plants, animals and microbes are commercial products as much as they are life forms, and the rights are tightly held by a small and shrinking group of multinational companies. Policing these rights is also on the agenda at the conference, which was convened to negotiate what is being called the Biosafety Protocol.

"We're experiencing a big shift into a biotech century," said Jeremy Rifkin, who is president of the Washington-based Foundation on Economic Trends and wants a moratorium on the commercial use of genetically engineered organisms. "We need to be asking a whole different set of regulatory, environmental and liability questions. It's going to affect everybody."

Biotech industry leaders contend their products are already subject to stringent safety standards.

Agribusiness giant Monsanto says its 60 genetically engineered crops have been the subject of 25,000 field trials in 45 nations. More regulation would "massively disrupt all international trade in biological materials," said Val Giddings of the Biotechnology Industrial Organization.

The United States is taking part in the summit but cannot vote on the protocol because the Senate has not ratified the U.N.-sponsored biodiversity agreement negotiated in Rio de Janiero in 1992.

The biosafety debate has gotten little attention in the United States, even though it exports 80 percent of the world's bioengineered materials.

Europe, however, has seen protests calling for a ban on the sale of "Frankenstein foods," at least until their risks can be determined.

"There is a huge domain of scientific uncertainty about the impact of these things," said Ian Taylor, scientific adviser for the environmental group Greenpeace in England.

A 68-year-old toxicologist in Scotland, Arpad Pusztai, has become a cause celebre in the biosafety debate.

He added insect-resistant genes and proteins to potatoes and fed them to rats. The animals suffered damaged immune systems, growth problems and shrunken brains, he said. It was thought to be the first time that trials of genetically modified food showed harmful effects.

However, his employer, the Rowett Research Institute in Aberdeen, described the findings as "muddled" and "misleading" and refused in August to renew his contract. Other scientists have come to his defense.

Even supporters of genetic engineering say more testing is necessary, especially when food is involved.

"Genetically manipulated organisms are part of the solution of raising food production in the world," said Maarten Chrispeels of the University of California at San Diego. "It is a good idea if there are uniform practices and all countries subscribe to minimum standards for testing and release."

Reaching a consensus before Tuesday, the last scheduled day of the summit, may prove difficult.

As of Friday, negotiators from the developed world led by the United States had succeeded in watering-down a draft text to exclude food crops and most other commodities — such as jeans made from genetically engineered cotton — from the list of regulated organisms.

Other issues in the debate include:

■ Labeling: Consumer and environmental groups want genetically altered foods and other products to carry labels explaining their scientific histories. Many biotech companies and grocers are opposed.

■ Permits: Some nations want to establish export permits for each biologically altered product. The Clinton administration wants to require permits only for those products that might cause environmental harm.

■ Prospecting and Piracy: Corporations employ researchers to "hunt" down genes in biologically rich countries and commercialize them. The host nations want to earn royalties on the genes.

■ Private eyes: Monsanto has been sending private investigators to make sure farmers are not violating agreements that bar them from saving gene-engineered seeds and using them in a later growing season.

Record hurricanes may have their names retired

WASHINGTON (AP) — Adieu, Georges. Bye-bye, Mitch.

Hurricane-battered residents of Central America and the Gulf of Mexico were happy to see those storms end last year. And now, because of the death and damage they caused, the names could soon be retired.

The final decision will be made by the hurricane committee of Regional Association IV of the World Meteorological Association, which meets in late March to coordinate forecast and warning activities for this year's hurricane season.

"I'm pretty sure two names, Georges and Mitch, from last year will be retired," Arthur J. Dania, director of the weather service of Netherlands Antilles and Aruba, said in a telephone interview. He heads the regional association.

That would bring to 49 the total names retired over the years, starting with Carol, which battered North Carolina, New York and parts of New England in 1954.

Mitch claimed thousands of lives in Central America when it stalled off the east coast last October, pouring record rains on Honduras and Nicaragua. The resulting floods were so powerful that maps must be redrawn to reflect the land's new contours.

Georges blasted across parts of the Caribbean in September, striking Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Cuba before crossing the Florida Straits to Key West. It then skirted the west coast of Florida and made landfall near Biloxi, Miss. It killed more than 600.

Replacement names will be chosen at a meeting of the WMO regional association, which represents 25 countries from Canada to Colombia and Venezuela.

Hurricane naming is but a small part of the group's work, Dania stressed, noting it helps national weather services share information and forecasts and issue warnings to protect people.

But storm names are usually the first contact with hurricanes for ordinary people, who hear the names on radio or television or read them in newspapers.

For the Atlantic Basin, six sets of names are used in rotation. That means Mitch and Georges would be returning in 2004 if they were not retired and replaced.

This year's tropical storms will reuse the list from 1993, beginning with Arlene and, if there are enough storms, running through Wilma.

Infamous retired hurricane names include Hazel, 1954; Camille, 1969; Agnes, 1972; Frederic, 1979; Hugo, 1989; Bob, 1991; Andrew, 1992 and, most recently, Hortense, 1996.

Hurricanes, technically known as tropical cyclones, are given names to prevent confusion when more than one storm is under way.

This was first done by an Australian forecaster, who used the names of politicians early in this century. That provided the opportunity for such weather reports as "Jones causing great distress" or "Smith wandering aimlessly."

Military forecasters took over the naming in World War II, usually using the names of their wives or girlfriends. For two years the military phonetic alphabet was used — Able, Baker, Charlie etc. — but in 1953 the U.S. Weather Bureau went back to women's names.

After women began complaining about the practice, the list was changed in 1979 to alternate male and female names.

While Dania said he has heard no proposals to change the current practice in his region, 14 countries of the Western North Pacific and South China Sea are taking a new approach starting next year. They have approved a new list of tropical storm names, 10 from each country, to be coordinated by the Hong Kong Observatory.

The names cover a wide range including Nakri, a type of flower in Cambodia; Haishen, a Chinese sea god; Pabuk, a big freshwater fish in Laos; Parma, a dish of ham, liver and mushrooms popular in Macao; Ewinlar, a Chuuk storm god in Micronesia; Cimaron, a Philippine wild ox; Durian, a Thai fruit; and Conson, a mountain in northern Vietnam.

Clinton's Social Security plan is scrutinized as tricky accounting

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton says his Social Security rescue plan will ensure that the retirement program can pay its bills for another 50 years.

But Republican lawmakers contend the plan is just tricky accounting that won't truly ease the burden of paying Social Security benefits to the huge generation of aging baby boomers.

Who's right?

It's true that Clinton's plan relies on complex accounting. But Social Security financing always has. The fundamental disagreement between Democrats and Republicans is more of an ideological one over how best to ensure the nation can afford to support the baby boomers in old age.

What most people don't realize is that Clinton's plan doesn't actually put aside any cold, hard cash now for Social Security to use later.

Clinton has proposed a variety of ideas, including having the government invest some Social Security money in the stock market. But the key part of his plan would be using about $2 trillion in budget surpluses over the next 15 years to pay down the nation's public debt. That's debt the government owes to individuals and others who have bought Treasury bonds.

Paying off public debt is one of the best ways to give the economy a boost and increase the nation's productivity, say many economists, including Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan.

If the economy is growing, the government collects more taxes from rising household incomes and corporate profits. Clinton's plan assumes that, if tax rates aren't slashed and other government spending is kept under control, the result would be enough extra money to make up for the cash shortfalls expected to face Social Security in coming decades.

Republicans don't dispute that a smaller debt means a better economy — in fact, many themselves advocate using some of the expected surplus to reduce the debt. But many think tax cuts could also help the economy.

Republicans also argue that the next step of Clinton's plan would amount to accounting trickery.

That's because any future windfall of general tax revenues, such as income taxes, would not ordinarily go to Social Security, which is now financed exclusively by its own separate tax — the 6.2 percent that comes off the top of workers' paychecks and is matched by employers.

But Clinton would try to ensure that it does by writing an IOU to Social Security from the rest of the government. That would create an obligation — on paper at least — to pay for the program from the general Treasury's tax revenues for many years.

"Our plan would put priority on investing for the future," Clinton said in a recent speech.

Republicans disagree.

"That's just simply creating more debt," says Rep. Clay Shaw, R-Fla., chairman of the House Ways and Means subcommittee on Social Security. "Tax dollars have to be increased to pay off those IOUs. That's the problem."

Many Republicans — and some Democrats — would prefer to keep using just the separate Social Security payroll tax system to finance the program's benefits.

They say it's risky to commit those other, general tax revenues when a recession or other calamity could dry up government surpluses in the future. That's when the nation might have so many other priorities — from military readiness to education — competing for cash.

"The administration's proposal risks saddling our children with more debt," said Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Also potentially at odds with Clinton's plan is the Republican desire for big, across-the-board tax cuts. Many GOP lawmakers say the financial benefits of a growing economy belong in Americans' pockets, not the government's.

"It's a moral issue, these tax cuts," said House Budget Committee Chairman John Kasich, R-Ohio, who has lately been road-testing slogans in his bid for the 2000 Republican presidential nomination. "America needs to be run from the bottom up, not from the top down."

GOP leaders are preparing to push an alternative to Clinton's plan that would try to make up the expected shortfall in Social Security payroll taxes by letting individual Americans invest some of the dollars the retirement program does have in the stock market.

The expectation is that workers with personal investment accounts could grow a bigger retirement nest egg than the government now provides with the same money. In the future, Social Security checks could be then reduced proportionally.

At the outset, however, additional government spending would likely still be needed to make sure people already too old to benefit from the accounts get the Social Security checks already promised to them.

"The surplus is going to have to be used in some way ... but it would be strictly transitional," Shaw said of Republican plans.

Clinton warns Milosevic to accept peace accord

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton warned Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic on Friday that he would be "held accountable" and face NATO airstrikes if he refuses to accept a peace accord with ethnic Albanians and allow NATO peacekeeping troops into Kosovo.

Clinton sent Secretary of State Madeleine Albright to peace talks in France for a down-to-the-wire diplomatic bid to seal a deal by a Saturday deadline. The president said the time limit was firm, and he had ordered U.S. warplanes "to be ready" to attack Serb targets.

"There needs to be an agreement before the strikes commence," the president said at a news conference with French President Jacques Chirac. "I don't think there is an option."

Chirac said he and Clinton were in "complete agreement" that the only way Milosevic could preserve Kosovo as part of Serbia was by reaching a self-rule settlement with the independence-minded ethnic Albanians, who make up 90 percent of the population in the province.

"The time has come to shoulder all his responsibility and choose the path of wisdom and not the path of war," Chirac said of Milosevic. "We want our continent to be at peace."

Milosevic is refusing to accept a 28,000-strong NATO peacekeeping force, which could include up to 4,000 Americans, as part of any agreement to end a year of fighting, which has killed an estimated 2,000. On Friday, he refused to see the chief U.S. mediator, Christopher Hill.

In a message to Milosevic relayed through Yugoslav Foreign Minister Zivadin Jovanovic, Hill said "there is no way to have a halfway agreement" — that is, a political accord without provisions for a military force to back it up, according to State Department spokesman James P. Rubin.

Hill went to Belgrade and tried to see Milosevic but the Yugoslav leader would not see him, a senior U.S. official said, speaking on condition of anonymity. The official said Americans were told that Milosevic did not want to undercut his negotiators.

Albright's scheduled arrival at the talks in Rambouillet, France, southwest of Paris, less than six hours before today's noon (6 a.m. EST) deadline raised the possibility the clock could be stopped and negotiations extended if the Serbs give ground in the final hours.

If there's no agreement by the deadline, it's "possible" that Albright could go on to NATO headquarters in Brussels, the senior U.S. official said. "There will have to be some kind of consultation" there, the official said, implying that an attack would not take place immediately.

But Clinton said the Serbs must make a choice now or face the military consequences.

"They can join an agreement that meets their legitimate concerns and gives them a chance to show that an autonomous Kosovo can thrive as part of their country, or they can stonewall," the president said. "But if they do that, they will be held accountable."

If no accord is reached, Clinton said NATO airstrikes "would at least reduce his (Milosevic's) capacity to take further aggressive military action against the Kosovar Albanians."

"We now call on both sides to make the tough decisions that are necessary to stop the conflict immediately before more people are killed and the war spreads," the president said.

U.S. Army Gen. Wesley Clark, the supreme NATO commander in Europe, suggested the military alliance has its Serb targets in sight and is ready to move.

"There are many different assets in Yugoslavia which are vulnerable," Clark said in a CNN interview, although he refused to discuss specific targets. "We're very much aware of what these assets are and where they are."

The Clinton administration and NATO are aware that airstrikes might embolden ethnic Albanian separatists and anger Serb soldiers, causing fresh civilian casualties on both sides.

Still, the White House kept up the military pressure, moving ahead with plans to deploy more than 50 extra fighter jets, bombers and refuelers to the region, adding to 220 U.S. warplanes and a total of 430 NATO aircraft that could be used in airstrikes.

C-17 cargo planes carrying 250 fighter pilots and support personnel from Holloman Air Force Base in New Mexico left Friday for Aviano Air Base in Italy ahead of 12 radar-evading F-117 stealth fighters, set to fly overseas during the weekend.

KC-135 refueling tankers left McConnell Air Force Base in Wichita, Kan., Friday for Fairchild Air Force Base in Washington state. Six KC-135 tanker planes took off from Fairchild for an undisclosed air base in Europe. Six B-52 bombers were set to fly to Britain over the weekend as well.

Enough NATO military firepower already was in place for a limited initial strike — most likely Tomahawk missiles fired from the USS Enterprise and other ships and submarines now in the Mediterranean and moving toward the Aegean Sea.

Retarded residents cajoled into sex

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Seven staffers at a home for the mentally retarded were fired after two residents in their care allegedly were cajoled into having sex so the workers could watch and laugh.

The Texas Department of Human Services and the attorney general's office are investigating, and on Thursday a judge appointed a trustee to oversee the 130-bed Beaumont Living Center. No charges have been filed.

Bob McBride of Alexandria, La.-based Central Control, which manages the home, said the seven staff members, both male and female, were immediately fired Feb. 11 when authorities told management about it.

The staffers allegedly set up the sexual encounter between a 47-year-old woman and a 50-year-old man for their entertainment.

Later, a staff member allegedly tried to force sexual intercourse between a 47-year-old woman and a 50-year-old man. The woman apparently had been offered a cigarette to participate.

"While these events were unfolding, other staff members stood outside the bedroom with the door partially open, watching and laughing," according to court papers filed the state.

Alou hurts knee

KISSIMMEE, Fla. — Astros left fielder Moises Alou injured a knee while working out in the Dominican Republic and will have an MRI performed in Houston on Monday.

Alou will miss the start of full workouts next Tuesday.

"There doesn't appear to be any structural damage, which is good news, but we don't know the extent of it until he gets the tests," general manager Gerry Hunsicker said. "He can put weight on it, which is also a good sign."

Alou set career highs in almost every offensive category last season, getting 182 hits, 124 RBIs, 38 homers and 105 runs as the Astros won their second straight NL Central title.

Florida Marlins traded Alou to the Astros after the 1997 season. Under his five-year contract, Alou could have demanded a trade after last season but elected to stay after the Astros agreed to give him an extra $3 million payment in 2002.

Lady Dawgs romp by Andress

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

PECOS — They might not have been firing on all cylinders all the time, but the Midland High Lady Dawgs hit high gear when it really counted Friday night.

Using a big third quarter run, Midland High pulled away from often pesky El Paso Andress in the Pecos High gym to win an area round Region I-5A playoff game 88-69 with one of its most dynamic offensive performances of the season. The Lady Dawgs hung up 50 points in the second half and could have hit the century mark had they made a few more easy shots earlier.

The game wasn't quite the blowout that the final score would suggest, but it wasn't a major struggle for the Lady Dawgs, who won their 14th straight to improve to 27-3. There were moments in the second half in which they looked capable of playing with anybody in the region, yet moments in the first half when it didn't look as if any of their players could win a game of H-O-R-S-E.

In the end, all was well which ended well for MHS.

"Any time you can win a ball game at this point in the season that's great," said Midland High coach Jim Raughton. "I'm happy to be part of it.

"We just missed several shots early. There are going to be nights that's going to happen."

The Lady Dawgs actually finished the night hitting 34 of 67 from the floor, thanks mainly to a hot second half in which they hit 21-of-35 for a 60 percent clip. Andress pulled to within six to open the third quarter, but Midland High slammed the door with a 17-0 run to boost their lead to 55-32.

MHS scored the rare trick of having two players score at least 20 points as seniors Heidi Lange and Nina McAlister led the way with 21 and 20 points, respectively. McAlister was the biggest factor in the third quarter run, scoring eight points. She more than compensated for a lackluster first half in which she missed her first four shots from the field, clanging some easy layup opportunities which could have helped the Lady Dawgs build a bigger halftime margin than their 38-30 lead.

"I just wasn't relaxed," admitted McAlister. "I guess I was just trying too hard. We went into the locker room (at halftime) and coach Raughton started

Lady 'Kats claw way past Wink

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

The Garden City girls have played better basketball games than during their area round battle with Wink Friday night at the Midland Christian gym.

They will be the first to admit that.

"I didn't think we had one of our better games," Garden City coach Keith Stone said, "but I guess we have to give Wink some credit for that."

But even with 31 turnovers, which turned a potential blowout into a relatively close game, the Lady 'Kats can look at their 59-44 Region I-A area round win for what it was worth — a trip to bigger and better places.

"I don't believe in ugly wins," said Stone, who is 26-2 in his first season with Garden City. "I believe in hard fought wins.

"We know there are no easy games any more. They were ready to play tonight, maybe too ready. They were a little nervous. They are going to be ready for the next one."

Garden City fans will probably hope so. The Lady 'Kats, which finished the season as a top 20 team in Class A, will face No. 8 Vega (19-12) Tuesday. It will be played at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Plainview, which means the crowd will be a little more hostile than the biased Garden City crowd that filled MC's gym.

The Lady 'Kats have had better games. Having won every game since a pre-district loss to Coahoma on Dec.

Prucka chooses Miners

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

In signing to play soccer with the University of Texas-El Paso, Midland Lee's Suzy Prucka officially put her name alongside the best Midland girls to play the game.

Prucka

Although anyone who has seen her play the last three years for the Lady Rebels will tell you, her name would have been mentioned among the best, anyway.

"She has been an extremely versatile player and been able to rise to the occasion whether we needed her at midfield, forward or on defense," Lee coach Mike Simpson said. "Wherever we have needed her, she has been able to fill the spot."

This year, Prucka, a three-year varsity starter, was moved from midfielder to the defensive line as the team's sweeper. She has enjoyed success whether being the last player to beat or being used to mark the best players on the other team. In a pre-district match against El Paso Franklin, Simpson used Prucka to mark Franklin's all-state forward Holly Cohen, one of the more prolific scorers in the state. She held her own.

"I think that is one of the things that is exciting to her — to compete with that quality of a player and have success at it," Simpson said. "That is when you know you fit into a slot you have worked a long time to get into."

Prucka, who chose UTEP over a number of other schools, has worked a long time to get the opportunity to play Division I soccer.

"When I was little, I dreamed about doing this," Prucka said. "It is what I have worked for. There were times I thought maybe I shouldn't play, but it is all worth it now. All the struggles and all the games and practices have paid off now."

Prucka even went a different route to get there. In the eighth and ninth grade, she chose to play with boys' club teams, instead of the girls' teams, to improve her game.

"As the time the club system wasn't where I wanted to be," Prucka said. "I had a friend who was coaching boys. I tried out and I made it. It taught me a lot

Lady Buffaloes knock down Wall

By Tom Ruiz
MRT Correspondent

BIG SPRING — If there is something that Rainnie Hull has learned from her football playing brother Jeremy and cousin Brett is when the going gets tough the tough get going. And the early going for Stanton Lady Buffaloes looked more like a bad horror movie before Hull helped her teammates rally from a seven point first half deficit to win going away, 38-29 over the Wall Lady Hawks in a girls Region I-2A area game here last night.

Stanton will next play the fifth-ranked team in Class 2A, Hale Center. The date and time are still undetermined. Hale Center (25-3) defeated Eldorado, 72-38.

Hull, who finished with co-high scoring honors of 12 points with Rachel Madison, motivated the Lady Buffs (20-9) with a 12-4 run in the third period.

"We just came alive in the second half. We knew we could do it and we pulled through," said Hull.

Stanton coach Tim Van Hecke echoed Hull's sentiments. "It was gut check time at halftime. I asked the girls what they were going to do about the situation we were in."

And the Lady Buffs were in dire straits in the first half. They shot 1-of-7 from the field in the first quarter. The lone field goal came from Madison while Brandy Allred added a free throw. To make things worse, Stanton also turned the ball over seven times in the opening quarter.

The Lady Hawks (22-11), in the meantime, were slicing

Butler knows what Big Cat will experience

By Paul Newberry
AP Sports Writer

ATLANT. — As Andres Galarraga begins the battle against cancer, Brett Butler knows how the Big Cat must be feeling.

"The first thing you think about is, 'I'm going to die,'" Butler said Friday. "Then the ol' mind monster starts, and you don't know how bad it is or what you're going to go through."

Butler began his own struggle with the disease in 1996, when a cancerous tumor was discovered in his tonsils. He underwent excruciating surgery and six weeks of radiation treatments, but recovered to play another full season before retiring.

If Galarraga wants "to talk to someone in the cancer family," Butler said he is only a phone call away. Nearly three years after his initial diagnosis, there is no sign of a recurrence.

"This has become a ministry for me," said Butler, who lives in the Atlanta suburb of Duluth. "I want to encourage and give people some insight on the positive side of what they're going through, because initially I was scared to death."

Galarraga, cleanup hitter and first baseman for the Braves, has a tumor lodged on a bone at the base of his spinal column, according to Dr. Charles Henderson, an oncologist at Piedmont Hospital.

Henderson said Friday the tumor is stage 2 — stage 4 being the most advanced — and will be treated with five months of chemotherapy and one month of radiation. Galarraga will miss this season, but doctors are optimistic of a full recovery and his playing career resuming in 2000.

"He is in the best physical shape of all the patient I

Schilling wouldn't mind being next ace to get traded

Associated Press

Now that Roger Clemens is with the Yankees, Curt Schilling says he wouldn't be surprised if he's the next strikeout king on the move.

"I want to be here and contend on this club," the Philadelphia Phillies pitcher said. "If that's not going to happen in the immediate future and they move me to a club that is contending, then I would see if we can work something out."

■ Spring Training Roundup

Schilling, who last year became only the fifth pitcher with 300 strikeouts in consecutive seasons, said he doesn't expect to remain with the Phillies for the entire season and that he would consider waiving his no-trade clause.

"I understand a lot of the reasons why he would think the grass is greener someplace else," general manager Ed Wade said. "That said, our position is that he's here. I've told people we're not moving him. For the whole season? I can't answer that, but our desire is to build around him."

Schilling thinks the situation could change as the July 31 trade deadline approaches.

"If the right package of players came up, why wouldn't they move me?" he asked. "They're putting a team on the field now that is close to being set with a couple pieces missing. If they can fill those couple pieces by dealing me, then maybe they'll do it. If a situation would present itself where I would go to a team that had a real legitimate chance to play in Octo-

Estes leads Nissan with star-studded pack close behind

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Bob Estes has the Nissan Open lead and a firm grip on reality.

Estes, whose only Tour win came five years ago, fashioned a 4-under-par 67 Friday to go to 9-under through two rounds, good for a one-shot lead atop a jammed leaderboard.

The pack on his heels included Ernie Els and Davis Love III, a shot behind, and Tiger Woods and David Duval, four strokes off the pace.

"Leading after 36 holes doesn't really mean much," said Estes, a self-described realist who began the second day at Riviera Country Club tied with Duval for the lead.

"Even leading after 54 holes doesn't mean much. I remember David Duval's 59 at the Hope."

Asked if anyone in particular worried him, Estes grinned and said, "Oh, a list of about 20, 30, 40 people. There's Ernie, Tiger, David, Fred (Couples), all the usual suspects."

Els, a two-time U.S. Open champion making his first PGA appearance since last September, had a second-round 66 to move into a tie with Love, Rick Fehr and Alan Bratton at 8-under-par 134.

Love shot a 65, Fehr a 66, and Bratton, who earned the final spot in the tournament by beating a 16-year-old on a qualifying playoff hole, shot his second 67.

Defending champion Billy Mayfair was three strokes off the lead after a 67. Woods had a 68 and Duval, looking merely mortal for a change with a 71, were in a group at 5-under.

Els was pleased with his play.

"I'm looking forward to this weekend," he said. "I really enjoy the course; it's a classic. You have to play a lot of different iron shots."

Bratton is the relative stranger in the bunch near the top. When he came into the press room to face the media for the first time on the PGA Tour, he was greeted by "Who are you?"

He laughed and offered a brief but colorful bio: A former Oklahoma State player (and college player of the year in 1994), he has spent the past few years playing in India, India, Thailand, Singapore and Korea, in addition to some mini-tour appearances in America.

Adding to Bratton's unlikely story is the fact he barely even made it into the Nissan.

The 27-year-old Bratton, vying along with some 140 others for the two open spots in the tournament, edged, among others, high school junior James Oh, and Henry Liaw, a 13-year-old eighth grader.

Bratton and Oh were tied at the end of regulation in qualifying, but Bratton birdied the first playoff hole and Oh's 8-foot birdie try lipped out to give Bratton the spot.

Saying he got motivated when the announcer at the first tee at Riviera mispronounced his name as "Brayton," Bratton was wasn't surprised that he didn't have exactly a Tiger-size gallery following him around.

"If I was out there, I wouldn't be following me, either," he said, grinning.

■ Golf Roundup

Laoretti has two-shot lead in seniors play

LUTZ, Fla. — The defining moment of Larry Laoretti's golf career — his victory in the 1992 U.S. Senior Open — is no longer good enough to get him in tournaments.

So, the man with the wide-brimmed hat and smoldering cigar, a former club professional with no PGA Tour experience, knows he needs to make another statement on the course.

"If you are going to only win one tournament in your life, that's the one to win," Laoretti said Friday.

But he can't escape his nonexempt status.

"I'm playing for position, to be able to continue playing," the 59-year-old golfer said after shooting a bogey-free 67 to take a two-shot lead after the opening round of the $1.2 million GTE tournament. "Right now, I'm 66th on the all-time money list and hopefully I'll get into 20, 25 events this year."

If they way he played in gusting winds reaching 25 mph at the Tournament Players Club of Tampa is any indication, Laoretti shouldn't have much of a problem.

McGann rallies to take lead in Hawaiian Ladies Open

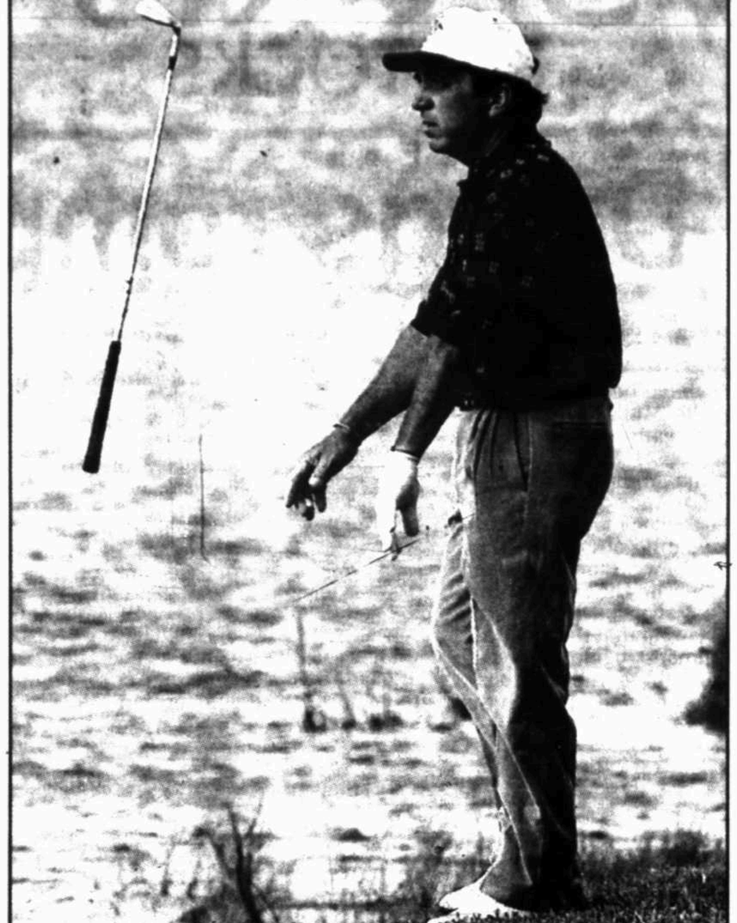
KAPOLEI, Hawaii — Alison Nicholas overcame a horrible start to birdie five of the last nine holes Friday to gain a share of the lead with Michelle McGann after two rounds of the Hawaiian Ladies Open.

Nicholas started the day at 2-under and was on the verge of shooting herself out of the 54-hole tournament after two bogeys through the first four holes.

After a par on the fifth-hole, she birdied five of the next seven holes to move into contention. Then birdies at the 379-yard 15th and 354-hole closing hole made her a co-leader with a 66.

McGann, trying to recover the touch that resulted in seven LPGA titles in three years, also had to rally for her 69.

She got off to an up-and-down start with a pair of birdies and two bogeys over the first four holes. She then added three birdies on her second 9, finishing with a tap-in on the 425-yard seventh.



AP Photo

Former Cincinnati Reds catcher Johnny Bench is in the Baseball Hall of Fame, but he probably won't get the same honor in golf. After making a bad shot from the waters edge on No. 10, he flips his club into the air. He shot an 83 during Friday's first round of the GTE Seniors tournament at the TPC of Tampa Bay in Lutz, Fla.

Trinidad should get better showcase this time around at MSG

By Ed Schuyler Jr.
AP Boxing Writer

NEW YORK — Felix Trinidad's only appearance in Madison Square Garden amounted to a cameo experience that did nothing to enhance his reputation.

On Saturday night, however, the unbeaten IBF welterweight champion gets a real opportunity to showcase his talents because the opponent will be Pernell Whitaker, a former champion in four weight divisions.

There are the questions of how drug and alcohol problems and a 16-month layoff will affect the 35-year-old Whitaker. However, there is no question he will provide stiffer opposition than that put up by Troy Waters, who lasted 2:50 against Trinidad in the Garden in 1997.

There also is the question of how making the 147-pound limit will affect Trinidad. He weighed himself at the Garden before Friday's weigh-in, then left to run around the arena. Trinidad weighed in 22 minutes after his name had been called and made the weight limit. Earlier, Whitaker weighed in at 147 pounds.

Trinidad's weight problem would be more serious if the weigh-in were the day of the fight. In this era of weighing in the day before the bout, boxers enter the ring several pounds above the limit.

"This is one of the best training camps I've ever hand," said Whitaker, who declines to discuss the problems that forced him into drug and alcohol rehabilitation and have kept him from fighting since he outpointed Andre Pestriaev on Oct. 17, 1997.

"He still a good boxer, but the drugs and alcohol have taken their toll," said Trinidad's father, also his trainer and manager. "But he still has pride."

Whitaker is left-handed but Trinidad expects no problem.

"I've fought left-handers before," he said.

Trainer Tommy Brooks thinks Whitaker has a lot more left than pride.

"You'd never think he'd been out of the gym," Brooks said. "Trinidad has a surprise coming."

"I would not be surprised if he comes right after me," said the 26-year-old Trinidad, a 5-1 favorite in Las Vegas. "If he does, I'll be ready."

Because of age and possible ring rust — and Whitaker insists there is none — it will be interesting to see how he holds up in the later rounds.

But that could be a bigger problem for Trinidad, who has gone past the fifth round only once (into the eight against Oba Carr in 1994) since outpointing Hector Camacho in 12 rounds on Jan. 29, 1994. He also has not fought since he knocked out Mahenge Zulu last April 3.

Trinidad's record is 33-0, with 29 knockouts. Whitaker is 41-2-1, with 17 knockouts.

This will be Whitaker's third Garden appearance and his first since he won the WBC welterweight title on points over James "Buddy" McGirt on March 6, 1993. He lost that title on a disputed decision to Oscar De La Hoya on April 12, 1997.

The replay of De La Hoya's split-decision win over Ike Quartey last Saturday will open the HBO telecast at 9:30 p.m. EST. The Trinidad-Whitaker fight should start between 10:30 p.m. and 10:45 p.m.

In a fight that will not be televised, Vince Phillips (39-3, 28 knockouts), 140 pounds, will defend the IBF junior welterweight title against Terronn Millett (20-1-1, 15 knockouts), 140 pounds.

BUTLER: Galarraga should stay positive

(From 1B)

have seen," Henderson said. "That will definitely help in his recovery."

Butler, who relied on both conventional and alternative treatments after his diagnosis, encouraged Galarraga to keep a positive attitude and gather as much information as possible about possible treatments.

"Ultimately, he has to make the final choice," Butler said. "My advice to him is to listen to everything, then make the best decision that he is comfortable with, not what somebody told him."

The 37-year-old Galarraga, who hit .305 with 44 homers and 121 RBIs last season, underwent an MRI and then a biopsy because of persistent pain in his back, initially injured near the end of season. The cancer was discovered Wednesday.

"Your back is not the best place, obviously, to have lymphoma," Henderson. "But with it being in his back, it helped with the detection because it caused irritation. If it had been any lower down, he may not have noticed it."

The Braves, going through their second day of spring training workouts in Kissimmee, Fla., were slowly coming to grips with the prospect of not having their best hitter and unifying presence in the clubhouse.

"It's a big hit to this team to lose a guy like him, but I think it would be a little selfish to worry about the team as opposed to him right now," pitcher Kevin Millwood said.

Galarraga, a native of Venezuela, was one of the leaders of the team's large Latin contingent, a gentle, cheery man who bridged the cultural barrier with the American-born players.

"When I heard about it, I felt like it was me who had cancer," catcher Javy Lopez said.

The Braves, seeking their eighth straight postseason appearance, intend to dedicate their season to Galarraga, who is expected to be released from Piedmont Hospital on Saturday and begin treatment near his home in West Palm Beach, Fla.

"He is going to be a great motivation for the team," Lopez said.

Don Baylor was Galarraga's manager for five years in Colorado. Now the Braves hitting coach, Baylor was shaken by the news, having lost his mother to cancer when she was 59.

"Every time you hear about the 'Big C,' everybody thinks the worse," Baylor said. "It's happened at a time of spring training where guys can deal with it early."

Though no one is likely to replace Galarraga's offensive numbers — he was eclipsed 40 homers in three straight seasons and 100 RBIs the last four years — the Braves are one of the few teams that seems equipped to deal with such a blow.

Left fielder Ryan Klesko, who seemed expendable when Atlanta signed Otis Nixon, now moves to first base, the position he played in the minor leagues. While Klesko struggled last season (.274, 18 homers, 70 RBIs), he is only 27 and hit a career-high 34 homers in 1996.

Nixon, who batted .297 with 37 stolen bases for Minnesota, provides speed at the top of the order, a key element that was missing for the 1998 Braves. Two other offseason acquisitions, outfielder Brian Jordan (.316, 25 homers, 91 RBIs) and Bret Boone (.266, 24, 95), will help compensate for Galarraga's power numbers.

The projected everyday starters combined for 167 homers last season, which seems a good starting point to at least approach the franchise record of 215 homers with Galarraga in the lineup.

No hitter should try to replace Galarraga's numbers all by himself, Baylor said.

"So many times when you lose a valuable player like Andres, everyone says, 'Now, I have to do more,'" the hitting coach said.

"Bret Boone, just do the same things. Brian Jordan, just do the same thing that got you here and not that superhuman thing you want to take on. Let's not pressure ourselves to where we get ... off to a bad start."

Rain puts off qualifying for race at Rockingham

ROCKINGHAM, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina Speedway is a track where qualifying can have a direct relationship to a driver's chance of winning, or even finishing, on Sunday.

The 1.017-mile oval has only 31 pit positions on the front straightaway, meaning that 13 starters in the Dura-Lube/Big Kmart 400 will have to pit on the backstretch. That's a big disadvantage, particularly on yellow flag stops when the drivers up front often are getting done with their stops by the time those in the back are reaching their pits.

The only driver to win at The Rock from the back pits in 67 races was Neil Bonnett in 1988. He started 30th when only 21 drivers pitted on the front straight.

With rain washing away top 25 qualifying Friday, the entire field will be determined Saturday in a single round of time trials, putting even more pressure on everyone.

"With two pit roads at Rockingham, you want to avoid that back pit like the plague," Jeremy Mayfield said. "The guys who usually end up on the front are probably going to end up in front anyway. The guys who usually end up on the back are probably going to end up on the back.

"The tough situation is where you end up with just a little practice time Saturday. You're trying to set up for the race and set up for qualifying at the same time. You have to focus on qualifying to get one of these frontstretch pits, but you have to work on the race as well."

Paul Andrews, Mayfield's crew chief, looked at the rain and said, "No matter what the weather, some weeks 30 minutes of practice is more than enough. Other weeks, you can't get enough no matter how many hours you have."

The Winston Cup drivers did get in their full two hours of practice before the rain began Friday.

Mayfield, who finished 20th in the season-opening Daytona 500, was fastest at 156.965 mph, followed by Mike Skinner at 156.870, Daytona winner Jeff Gordon at 156.743, Ward Burton at 156.075, Dale Jarrett at 155.962, Sterling Marlin at 155.895 and Mark Martin at 155.836.

John Andretti, whose engine failure relegated him to last place at Daytona, was frustrated after posting a speed of 154.618.

"With so little practice time, you don't have much time to experiment," he said. "You have to go with what you think is going to work, and it's going to be tough to experiment a lot."

SPRING: McGwire gets bodyguard

(From 1B)

ber — and it wasn't this club — then I would listen."

Dodgers general manager Kevin Malone already has worked out the playoff picture and the first Yankees-Dodgers World Series since 1981.

"They'll need Roger when they play us in the Fall Classic in October," Malone said. "It'll be fun. It will be nice to see Kevin Brown and Roger Clemens matched up in October."

With much of baseball focusing on Brown and his record $105 million, seven-year contract, the pitcher worked out at spring training with the Dodgers for the first time.

"We haven't made a lot of friends and I don't think people are going to take it easy on us," Malone said. "We'll have to step it up a notch."

In other news:

— Like a chief of state, Mark McGwire will have bodyguards this spring. A Jupiter, Fla., police officer will shadow the home run king each time he goes from the clubhouse to a practice field.

— A day after he was traded by the New York Yankees along with reliever Graeme Lloyd and infielder Homer Bush for Roger Clemens, David Wells headed to Miami for a golf weekend.

"I've never seen him so down ... beyond depressed," said Yankees pitcher David Cone, who spent about four hours with Wells on Thursday. "I've never seen anybody so stunned by a trade ... confused and stunned."

Clemens is due to report to the Yankees' camp in Tampa, Fla., on Saturday.

— At Dunedin, Fla., Bush wasted no time in reporting to his new team.

"I'm excited," he said. "It's a great opportunity for me, after watching greatness in New York. I didn't contribute at all there, maybe a little bit, but maybe here I can get more at bats and have some fun."

— Three-time All-Star Julio Franco, who last played in the major leagues two years ago, agreed to a minor league contract with the Tampa Bay Devil Rays. If he makes the major league roster, Franco would get a $400,000 contract and the chance to earn $100,000 in performance bonuses.

— Pitcher John Hudek lost his salary arbitration case against the Cincinnati Reds and will get $800,000 rather than his request for $1.3 million.

— The Arizona Diamondbacks have agreed to terms with South Korean pitcher Byung-Hyun Kim and intend to start him at A-ball thus year.

— Blue Jays pitcher Paul Quantrill, who injured himself snowmobiling, reworked his contract, which called for a $1.4 million salary. The guarantee was reduced to $500,000, but he can earn the entire amount depending on when he's back on the active 25-man roster. There are also performance bonuses and options for 2000 (about $1.8 million) and 2001 ($2.1 million) that become guaranteed depending on how many games he pitches.

— The Rockies have signed pitcher Jamey Wright and shortstop Neifi Perez to one-year contracts.

Wright, 24, received a 56 percent raise from $240,000 in 1998 to $375,000 in 1999. Terms of Perez's contract were not disclosed.

USOC may look into Atlanta's bid

By James Pilcher
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA — The U.S. Olympic Committee might take a second look at Atlanta's bid for the 1996 Games because IOC members received gifts that possibly were too expensive.

Dick Schultz, executive director of the USOC, said Friday a response to the IOC's request for information about the Atlanta bid was due to go out early next week, but that the letter might be delayed as investigators might ask further questions of local Olympic organizers.

Charlie Battle, the former vice president for international relations for the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games, was quoted in Friday's Washington Post as saying the Atlanta bid committee ignored the IOC's gift limit.

The limit at the time for IOC members was $200 but has since been reduced to $150.

In an interview with The Associated Press on Friday, Battle acknowledged the gifts, which included golf clubs, first-class airline tickets and clothing. But he said they were "pertinent, appropriate and were not lavish or out of line in any way."

Schultz said the investigators most likely will want to question Battle further.

"They'll probably want to know to what extent this went to, and that will go into the report to the IOC," he said.

Said Battle: "We'll acknowledge what we did and confirm everything we did was proper. We've been ready to respond for a while, but they've asked us to delay."

Speaking to WSB-TV, former Atlanta mayor Andy Young, who was also a member of the bid committee, defended the gifts as well.

"If we exceeded the guidelines, it was in the spirit of generosity, not out of any sense of bribing people," Young said. "Remember, we did not have any money and not a lot of time."

The IOC is investigating the Olympic bid process after last December's revelations that Salt Lake Olympic officials provided college scholarships, free health care and other expensive gifts to IOC members and their families while securing the 2002 Winter Games.

Twenty-four IOC members, more than one-fifth the membership, have been implicated in the worst corruption scandal in Olympic history.

Dick Pound, who is leading the IOC's investigation, has requested all bid cities dating to the 1996 Games review their dealings with IOC members.

Pound was traveling Friday and unavailable for comment.

Battle said there was "never any effort or intent to abuse the process or to do anything which we felt was not the right thing to do."

Battle, a lawyer who now runs an Atlanta development group, insisted there was no wrongdoing. He contends IOC rules were vague, other bid cities were also lavishing IOC members with travel and gifts and Atlanta organizers "stayed within the spirit of the relevant guidelines and accepted practices at that time."

An IOC panel this weekend will discuss the bribery scandal. IOC spokesman Franklin Servan-Schreiber on Friday said the committee has solicited responses from those members implicated in a report issued this month by a Salt Lake ethics committee.

That report cited 10 additional IOC members who were not included in the list of 14 implicated earlier during the IOC's internal investigation.

Any additional expulsions will be submitted to the full general assembly at the March 17-18 emergency session in Lausanne, Switzerland.

In another matter, IOC executive board member Jacques Rogge said the games are unlikely to lose their major sponsors, a group that includes Coca-Cola, IBM, Kodak and McDonald's.

According to Rogge, all the major sponsors for the 2000 Games in Sydney, Australia, and 2004 Games in Athens, Greece, are standing firm.

But the scandal clearly could hurt the bottom line for host cities. The chief executive of the Sydney Games, Sandy Hollway,

Dumoulin joins Jackalopes

It was announced Friday that defenseman Mario Dumoulin has agreed to terms with the Odessa Jackalopes and will be in uniform when the team opens a critical three-game homestand on Thursday.

Dumoulin (6-foot-1, 225 pounds) was acquired from the Abilene Aviators in exchange for forward Dan Lavergne on Jan. 26 but did not report to the Jacks. Dumoulin, who was a associate captain for Abilene, protested against his former team trading him.

Jacks coach Joe Clark said he is pleased to finally see this situation come to an end.

"It's been a difficult time, but throughout all that happend, Mario and I stayed on good terms," Clark said. "His holding out had nothing to do with his opinion of the Jackalopes organization."

Clark added that Dumoulin is very positive about his new team, and that his teammates are ready to welcome him.

"He has told me that he is very anxious to help us make the playoffs," Clark said. "He's looking forward to his debut in a Jackalopes uniform. Our players are excited about having Mario join our hockey club, and I hope our fans will make him feel welcome."

The 23-year-old from Burlington, Ontario, joins Jacque Rodrigue, Chris Morque, Anders Lindberg, Martin Ohrstedt and Mike Ross on the blue line (defense), giving the Jacks three very solid defensive pairings.

Lubbock names hockey team

LUBBOCK — The Western Professional Hockey League's 18th member franchise Friday officially announced its team name and unveiled its logo. In mid-October, Lubbock hockey fans will welcome the Cotton Kings to the ice.

The name was chosen primarily due to the siginificance of cotton in Lubbock's agriculture industry, which provides for approximately 25 percent of all local employment, and was selected through a "name the team" contest held in conjunction with the Lubbock-Avalance Journal.

The Cotton Kings are expected to be placed into the WPHL's Western Division and will form natural rivalries with the Amarillo Rattlers, Odessa Jackalopes, San Angelo Outlaws and Abilene Aviators, among others.

Richmond's late shot leads Wizards to win

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The last time the Chicago Bulls started a season this poorly, Michael Jordan was honing his game in high school.

Mitch Richmond scored in the lane with 17.2 seconds left to lead the Washington Wizards past the Bulls 93-91 Friday night, the seventh loss in eight games this season for defending NBA champions.

Chicago has lost six straight, its longest skid this decade. The Bulls last dropped six in a row while coasting into the 1989 playoffs during Jordan's fifth NBA season.

Calbert Cheaney scored 17 points, Juwan Howard 16 and backup center Ben Wallace had a career-high 13 for the Wizards.

Raptors 90, Bucks 82

TORONTO — The Toronto Raptors put on a quality performance in their final game at the SkyDome, outplaying Milwaukee.

Tracy McGrady had an assortment of high-flying dunks, Dee Brown hit three timely 3-pointers and Doug Christie led all scorers with 20 points for the Raptors, who will move into the new Air Canada Center on Sunday.

The win was just the second of the season for Toronto, which had been playing at SkyDome since entering the league in 1995. The victory gave the Raptors a record of 40-77 in the cavernous building built for baseball's Toronto Blue Jays.

Knicks 78, 76ers 67

PHILADELPHIA — Allan Houston scored 25 points, including five of New York's nine 3-pointers, as the Knicks recovered from their worst loss of the season to beat Philadelphia.

The Knicks improved to 5-1 without the injured Latrell Sprewell despite committing 23 turnovers one night after a 98-74 blowout loss in Cleveland. It was Philadelphia's worst offensive output ever against New York in 220 games.

Kurt Thomas, forced into the starting lineup by Sprewell's injury, had 14 points. Larry Johnson had 12 points and seven assists, and Patrick Ewing had 11 points and eight rebounds.

■ NBA Roundup

Matt Geiger was 1-for-8 and scored six points, hearing even louder boos than Ewing. Philadelphia lost forward Tim Thomas, who turned his ankle badly in the fourth quarter and was carried off and taken to a hospital for X-rays, which were negative.

Magic 99, Hawks 94, OT

ATLANTA — Anfernee Hardaway made a key defensive play to force overtime, then hit a clinching jumper with 41 seconds left in the extra period as the Orlando Magic rallied to hand the Atlanta Hawks their first home loss.

Hardaway, who scored 10 points in the first half, managed only one free throw in the last two quarters of regulation. But he came through defensively after Horace Grant hit a jumper from the top of the key to even the score at 87 with 14 seconds left.

Steve Smith, who had 28 points, tried to set up for the winning shot, but Hardaway knocked the ball away as the buzzer sounded.

In overtime, Orlando raced ahead by scoring the first seven points, beating the Hawks back down the court for a couple of fast-break layups by Darrell Armstrong and Hardaway, sandwiched around a 3-pointer by Nick Anderson.

Pistons 101, Suns 93

PHOENIX — Jerry Stackhouse had 23 points and 10 assists as the Detroit Pistons ended their five-game losing streak with a victory over the Phoenix Suns.

Stackhouse had eight points in the fourth quarter, which began in a 71-71 tie, including six in the final 25 seconds.

Timberwolves 115, Grizzlies 96

MINNEAPOLIS — Stephon Marbury scored 23 points and Joe Smith added 21 as the Minnesota Timberwolves beat the Vancouver Grizzlies.

The Timberwolves won for the fifth time in six games. Dating back to last year, they have won a team-record 10 straight regular-season home games.

Giants sign Collins; release Kanell

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — The New York Giants on Friday signed troubled free-agent quarterback Kerry Collins, but maintained that he will enter the season as the backup.

"Kent Graham is our starter," Coach Jim Fassel said, asserting there would be no open competition in training camp. "Kent has earned that right by what he did last year."

The team also released quarterback Danny Kanell, leaving the former starter somewhat stunned.

Collins, whose recent difficulties include a drunken driving arrest, issued a statement saying, "A great deal has happened in my life over the past year or so, and I am looking forward to a fresh start with the Giants."

Fassel, a former quarterback coach, admitted he was eager to rehabilitate Collins, a four-year pro from Penn State who Fassel said needs to make playing quarterback "the complete focus of his life."

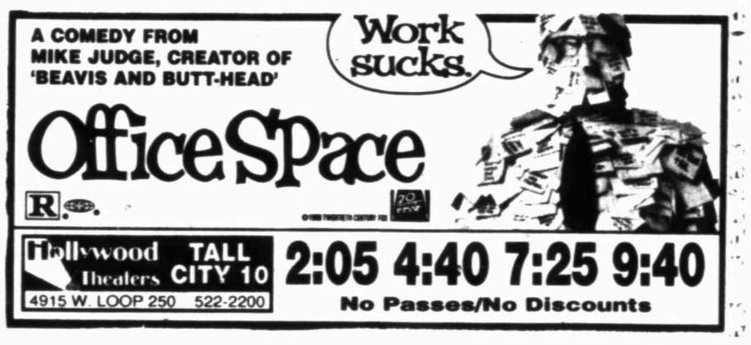
Fassel said Collins will be at Giants Stadium the entire offseason, lifting, watching tapes, and preparing to work on his fundamentals.

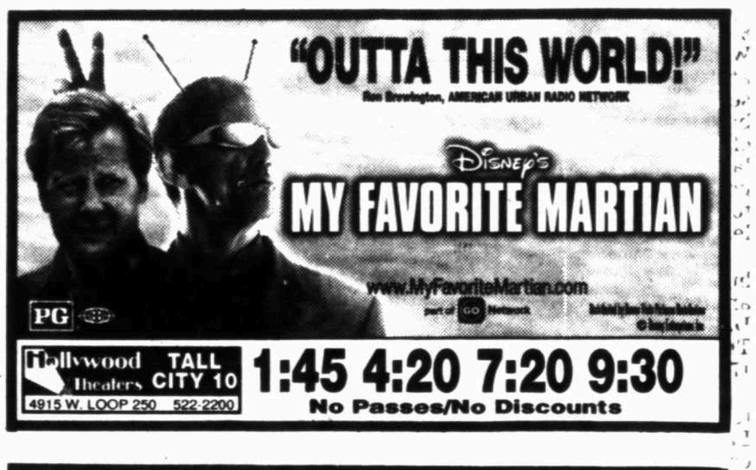
Noting that Collins, at 6-foot-5 and 240 pounds, can be a big, physical player, Fassel also maintained he has a "big-league arm."

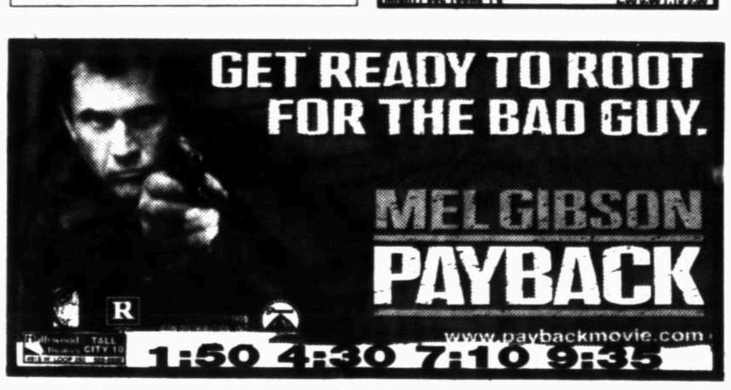
"If handled right and developed ... you see a very, very big upside," Fassel said. "If we get him right, he has that kind of ability" to take a team to the next level.

A meeting with Collins this week persuaded Fassel that the quarterback is ready to work. "He said all the right things, and in a convincing way," Fassel said.

Collins struggled this past season with the Carolina Panthers, who made him the fifth overall pick in the 1995 draft. He was released on Oct. 13 after reportedly telling then Panthers coach Dom Capers that he didn't have the heart for pro football.







MHS rips Parkland just for practice

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

PECOS — Preseason games, which don't count toward a team's win-loss record, are often referred to as exhibitions, but the Midland High boys basketball team is in the midst of a two-day Permian Basin postseason "exhibition" tour that does count on the season record.

The first game of that brief stretch Friday night was a success, as the undefeated District 4-5A champions defeated District 1-4A champs El Paso Parkland 96-81 in the Pecos High gym following the Midland High girls win over El Paso Andress in the Region I-5A area playoff round. It served as a tune-up for the Bulldogs, who have a first round bye next week before they open defense of their state championship this coming Friday against an El Paso opponent at a site still to be determined.

Yet, the most interesting half of the doubleheader will come this afternoon when Midland High travels to Seminole for a practice game today at 2 p.m. Since the start of their district schedule, it seems as if the No. 2 state ranked Bulldogs have rarely been challenged, but Seminole could change that.

The Indians are the No. 1 ranked Class 3A team in the state with a 30-2 mark. The game should be a feast for high school hoops afficianados with perhaps the three best high school players in West Texas on the same floor. Seminole will challenge the Bulldogs with 6-foot-7 center Chris Ogden, who is bound for the University of Texas, while MHS will counter with guard Charles Tatum and forward Jay Christian, who are bound for Arkansas and Rice respectively.

"Seminole is going to have the whole gym packed," said Midland High coach Jack Stephenson. "Every game we play is a challenge from here on out. They (Opponents) see defending state champions on our chest and they suck it up."

While the atmosphere for today's "practice" game figures to be charged, it was considerably more laid back in Pecos for Parkland. The Bulldogs weren't necessarily planning on playing Friday night, having already scheduled Seminole for today.

However, when the opportunity to play arose, Stephenson decided to grab it.

"I just wanted to keep that competitive edge," Stephenson said. "There's always a little bit of good and a little bit of bad in having a bye, the bad being you don't get to play for over a week. (Parkland) has to be pretty good because they called and asked to play us. A lot of other teams don't want to play us in a practice game."

Parkland hung in respectably against Midland High, which improved to 27-3 on the season. The Bulldogs blew open a close game with a 31-10 outburst in the second quarter, reminiscent of what has caught many foes off guard this season.

As would be expected, Tatum and Christian were the big guns, scoring 32 and 28 points respectively, barely missing a second straight game where both of them could have had 30 (they pulled the trick a week earlier in the 4-5A finale against Odessa Permian).

A minor surprise was the production of senior Brent Winter, who had a career high 16 points for Midland High.

With one practice game behind them before the playoffs, the fatigue factor is a possibility today. But that's merely the latest obstacle for the defending state champions, who don't seem to be perturbed by much.

"It doesn't make any difference to these kids," said Stephenson of having to play two games in 18 hours. "They rehab pretty quickly."

GARDEN: Lady 'Kats will take on Vega

(From 1B)

12, that would be expected. However, it wasn't like Garden City stumbled on a win that wasn't theirs to begin with. Garden City got the lead early, stretching it to double digits by the second quarter. From then on, the closest Wink got was five points down. There was always a cushion. Garden City just had to leap over a few obstacles.

First, foul trouble kept a number of Garden City's starters (J'Layne Niehues, Stormi Chandler and point guard Meagan Goodwin) on the bench for a good portion of the third quarter and some of the fourth. Niehues fouled out with two minutes to go.

"It was terrible," said Niehues of having to watch most of the second half from the bench. Niehues ended the game with 14 points and six rebounds. "Thank God for letting us have such a good team. Everybody can play."

"We got into foul trouble, but our bench saved us," Stone said. "Jill Hoelscher, Whitney Eoff, Tiffany Kujawski and Kina Lankford all came in and played well."

They also kept Wink at a distance until the fourth quarter when Garden City made up for some of its earlier flaws by hitting 13 of 15 free throws in the period.

"We work on free throws all the time," Stone said. "I told the girls that it will win games for you. I believe it did tonight."

"That is what we needed. We knew they were going to foul in the fourth quarter," said Chandler, who was 4-for-4 from the line in the last quarter. "We were happy with the way we played. We just want to win and keep going."

To their credit, the Lady Kats held Wink to 32 percent shooting, shot 44 percent themselves and used their size to win the war on the boards 37-30. Sophomore M'Lynn Niehues had a game-high 10. Senior sister J'Layne had 14 and Kyndra Batla had 10. Batla had six assists and Goodwin had four.

For Wink, Jess Anne Fernandes scored 17, Jennifer Hawkins 14 and Casey Slaughter 10.

STANTON: Lady Buffs face Hale Center and dicing through the Lady Buffs.

(From 1B)

They rotated the ball nicely before finding the open shot which was usually from 10 feet in or less.

When they weren't hitting from outside, the Lady Hawks also discovered an open avenue in the lane with uncontested lay ups.

Like a scene out of the movie Halloween, the Lady Buffs were left for dead, but just like Jamie Curtis, Stanton refused to die.

"We just became more aggressive in the second half," said Van Hecke, as the Stanton half court press, the Lady Buffs bread and butter forced Wall into committing 11 turnovers in the second half.

Stephanie Washington, Stanton's junior post also helped ignite the Stanton comeback with five points.

But it was her four blocked shots and her tenacious play that helped fuel her teammates.

Adding to Stanton's dramatic turnaround was the almost complete collapse of Wall, when senior Jenny Begnaud went down with a leg injury in the second half.

After Allred's fast-break lay up, Stanton had the lead for the first time 22-21 as the buzzer sounded to end the third quarter.

The Lady Hawks were never the same after

Begnaud was carted off the coliseum floor. Wall, which had a 17-10 lead at halftime, scored only 11 points the rest of the way. Krystal Noel was its top scorer finishing with 10 points.

As for Hull, she's just glad to see another playoff game, just like her football kin. "I've got a lot of expectations to live up to," and so does her team.

MHS: Lady Dawgs get Coronado next yelling at us and when I came back out everyone told me to just lay it (the ball) up soft and easy."

(From 1B)

Such first half nervousness might have been understandable in light of the playoff situation and the fact that following an arduous district schedule that the Lady Dawgs hadn't played a real game in a week.

"In a playoff game it's a different atmosphere," said Raughton. "We might have been a little tense."

The biggest lead for Andress was 8-4 in the first quarter after Anika Wyche scored on a layup, as the athletic Lady Eagles converted several opportunities close to the basket. It was tied 16-16 at the end of the first quarter but when Midland High's Tawney Foy hit a 3-pointer early in the second quarter to give the Lady Dawgs a 19-18 lead, they never trailed again.

Midland High built its lead to as high as 35-23 when Lange scored on an offensive rebound, but the Lady Dawgs still weren't comfortable. That really didn't happen until the 17-point run in the third quarter.

A major factor in the third quarter was the ball movement by the Lady Dawgs in transition, as they converted the fast break as efficiently as they had all season, which resulted in easy opportunities for McAlister, who began converting them.

"I don't think it was as much our passing as it was our defense," said Lange of the Lady Dawgs' third quarter outburst. "We didn't play very good defense in the first half. We've got to adjust to that."

Midland High adjusted big time in the third quarter, allowing only 10 points and two field goals.

Sophomore Edrea Rogers was also a factor in the third quarter run, scoring on a baseline jumper and a 3-point shot. Rogers came off the bench to score 14 points and had eight rebounds to lead Midland High's 39-28 rebounding advantage.

It could have been an even bigger night in the double figure scoring category for Midland High when you consider that seniors Michelle Acosta and Clarissa Leonard scored nine apiece. Raughton thinks that it was the overall team effort in handling the basketball which resulted in the second half uprising.

"We did a good job in the second half just taking care of the basketball," Raughton said. "When you do that, you're going to get a lot of good looks at the basket."

Andrea Adams had a game high 24 points for Andress while Wyche added 14 and Gwen Williams scored 10.

The final result isn't particularly surprising when you consider that Midland High's top five scorers on the evening all scored above their season averages. In this case, the whole was greater than the sum of its considerable parts.

"I knew that everyone had to play their best tonight and everyone did," said Lange.

Midland High will play Lubbock Coronado (27-5) in the next round, and the game is tentatively scheduled for Tuesday in Snyder. Coronado, the runner up in District 3-5A, defeated El Paso Hanks, 67-54, Friday in Odessa.

GOLFERS! PROTECT YOUR EYES– SHARPEN YOUR SIGHT– LOWER YOUR SCORE!

Sunglasses and golf don't mix. Normal sunglasses are too heavy, slip off your nose, make it hard to putt, let the sun, wind and dust enter from the sides, strain your eyes in a couple hours and surely cost you strokes. But Heaven help your eyes, if you don't wear sunglasses. (See box)

Our new GOLF SPECIFIC Condor Sportsman sunglasses are scientifically designed to protect your eyes and improve your game. Here's why...

- Their wrap-around design keeps all of the sun's glare out, not just direct sun. It keeps out dust and wind, too.
- They weigh less than one ounce. You won't know you have them on.
- They're slip-proof. You can custom fit them to your forehead with their adjustable temple bars.
- They are rimless across the bottom of the lenses so they won't interfere with your line of sight when addressing the ball.
- They enhance your depth perception. You can track your shots and judge distances better.
- Their wrap-around lenses keep the sun off your temples and protect you from crow's feet.
- They screen out harmful UVA, UVB and UVC light.
- They exceed FDA impact standards.
- Their special lens material – developed by NASA – lets you see a golf ball more clearly in the air and on the ground.
- They increase your lateral vision. It is completely unobstructed throughout your swing.
- They block out high-intensity light and damaging blue light.
- They are scratch-and shatter-proof. You can drive a nail through the lenses and they won't shatter.
- They won't strain your eyes after long wear.
- They cost up to 85% less than other golf specific sunglasses.

Frightening things are at play on a sunny golf course that you may not know about. Long rays within beams of sunlight are actually sunburning the retinas in the rear of your eyes. And "blue" light is constantly damaging your eyes. A young pro we know was told by an optometrist that her eyes had developed calluses from playing in the sun without glasses. According to the Journal of Ophthalmology too much sunny golf can cause cataracts.

Small Company's New Golf Ball Flies Too Far; Could Obsolete Many Golf Courses.

Pro Hits 400-Yard Tee Shots During Test Round
Want To Shoot An Eagle or Two ?
By Charlie Allen

YALESVILLE, CT – A small golf company in Connecticut has created a powerful, new ball that flies like a U-2, putts with the steady roll of a cue ball and bites the green on approach shots like a dropped cat. But don't look for it on weekend TV. Long-hitting pros could make a joke out of some of golf's finest courses with it. One pro who tested the ball drove it 400 yards, reaching the green on all but the longest par-four's. Scientific tests by an independent lab using a hitting machine prove the ball out-flies 15 major brands by up to 22 yards.

The ball's extraordinary distance comes partly from a revolutionary new dimple design that keeps the ball aloft longer. But there's also a secret change in the core that makes it rise faster off the clubhead. Another change reduces air drag. The result is a ball that gains altitude quickly, then sails like a glider. None of the changes is noticeable in the ball itself.

Despite this extraordinary performance, the company has a problem. A spokesman put it this way: "In golf you need endorsements and TV publicity. This is what gets you in the pro shops and stores where 95% of all golf products are sold. Unless the pros use your ball on TV, you're virtually locked out of these outlets. TV advertising is too expensive to buy on your own, at least for us.

"Now, you've seen how far this ball can fly. Can you imagine a pro using it on TV and eagle-ing par-four's? He would turn the course into a par-three, and real men don't play par-three's. This new fly-power forces us to sell it without relying on pros or pro-shops. One way is to sell it direct from our plant. That way we can keep the name printed on the ball a secret that only a buyer would know. There's more to golf than tournaments, you know."

The company guarantees a golfer a prompt refund if the new ball doesn't cut five to ten strokes off his or her average score. Simply return the balls–new or used–to the address below. "No one else would dare do that," boasted the company's director.

If you would like an eagle or two, here's your best chance yet. Write your name and address and "Code Name S" (the ball's R&D name) on a piece of paper and send it along with a check (or your credit card number and expiration date) to NGC Golf (Dept. SCN-411), 60 Church Street, Yalesville, CT 06492. Or phone 800-285-3900 anytime. No P.O. boxes. One dozen "S" balls cost $24.95, two to five dozen are only $22.00 each, six dozen are only $109.00. You save $40.70 ordering six. Shipping and handling is only $5.00 no matter how large your order. Specify white or Hi-Vision yellow.

Midland churches again participate in 'Invite a Friend' day

INVITE A FRIEND TO GOD'S HOUSE.

By Jimmy Patterson
Staff writer

Churches in Midland will combine for a unique interfaith campaign in an attempt to bring vitality and new membership to their congregations this Sunday, with Invite a Friend to Church Day

The Invite a Friend program was developed by Religion in American Life (RIAL), a non-profit, inter-faith, research and public information organization based in Princeton, N.J.

Sunday's effort marks the second year of involvement by Midland churches.

"Invite a Friend to Church Day is an effort to offer the hospitality of the church to those who are not a part of a congregation, and to give people the opportunity to experience the richness of congregational life," said Trinity Presbyterian pastor Fane Downs, who is also president of the Midland Association of Churches. The Midland Association of Churches and Midland Ministerial Alliance are local co-sponsors of the Invite a Friend program.

Downs said Sunday was chosen since it is the first Sunday of Lent, the 40-day season many churches recognize as a preparation and sacrificial period prior to Easter.

The Invite a Friend initiative is a 10-year program, begun by RIAL. The goal at the completion of that decade-long period is "to have membership in church congregations reach 200 million by the year 2000," according to Nicholas van Dyck, a RIAL spokesman.

Presently, three out of every five persons have identified themselves as members of a religious congregation; two out of five say they attend services at least once a week. RIAL's goal is to reach four out of five Americans through Invite a Friend. Information provided by pollster George Gallup shows that in America, almost 80

Author Michael H. Brown, whose books are shown, will speak at 7 p.m. Sunday at Midland Center.

Noted author moves from toxic to moral contamination in lectures

By Georgia Temple
Staff writer

Michael H. Brown, author of "The Trumpet of Gabriel," "Afterlife" and "The Final Hour," actually began his writing career as a secular journalist almost a quarter of a century ago.

At the time, he had returned to his hometown following a five year absence, unaware that Niagara Falls, N.Y., beloved site of honeymooners and tourists, was being poisoned. Several years later and still in the dark, he accepted a position as a reporter on the Niagara Gazette. That was in early 1977. The next two years he spent becoming enlightened.

"It was the first case of hazardous waste in America and defined the entire issue of toxic waste," Brown said of his investigative reporting concerning the chemical dump site known as the Love Canal.

"My book, 'Laying Waste: The Poisoning of America by Toxic Chemicals' hit like a bomb," said Brown, who was nominated for a Pulitzer Prize for his work. "I spoke about that issue for 10 years on the college lecture circuit. I believe now I'm issuing the same warning, but it's a spiritual warning. Instead of a warning about toxic chemicals, it's once again a warning about contamination: moral contamination."

He brings his warning to Meeting is a step toward unity in the Protestant church

By Diego Ribadeneira
N.Y. Times News Service

An important religious event took place in St. Louis recently — and it wasn't Pope John Paul II's whirlwind 30-hour tour through the Midwestern city on the banks of the Mississippi.

In a significant meeting largely overshadowed by the pontiff's visit, representatives from nine Protestant denominations, representing 20 million members, convened in St. Louis and moved one step closer to realizing a 37-year-old goal of forging a united Christian body.

The Consultation on Church Unity was born out of a desire to fulfill a Biblical mandate summarized in the book of Ephesians: "There is one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God."

'When it comes to divisions among churches that have, in many instances, existed for hundreds of years, it should not be surprising that it takes a good number of years to heal those divisions.'
— Rev. Diane C. Kessler, Executive Director, Massachusetts Council of Churches.

As the report issued at the end of the meeting noted, "the unity we seek to manifest is not our choice but God's gift." But living up to the words in Ephesians has been difficult for denominations with long histories of strained relations.

"You would have figured after all these years that folks would have quit, but they didn't, and I think they are going to be rewarded for it," said the Rev. Ed Rodman of the Episcopal Diocese of Churches and diversity:

Feeling connected to the church regardless of class, race, important to members

By Pennie Boyett
Arlington Morning News

ARLINGTON — For an hour, the Sunday school lesson about responding to the call of God led to serious discussion about directions for the lives of students.

Now, in the hurried minutes before the worship service begins, members of the college and career class are concerned with directions to Thursday night's Bible study. They are asking visitors for their telephone numbers and passing around a map.

"In a big church, if you don't feel connected, you could get lost," said Melissa Brown, 22, a member of the class for about 18 months. The Bible study and other class fellowships are designed to help the visitors make that connection, whether they are in college or at their first jobs, whether they are black or white.

Some weeks, this class at Cornerstone Baptist Church, a predominantly African-American church, has been evenly divided racially, the Rev. Dwight McKissic, church pastor, said. Although the church's

Nuns leave brains to Alzheimer's research

By Greg Smith
Associated Press Writer

DUBUQUE, Iowa — Sister Ruth Schiffler has given most of her 83 years to God, children and the sick, and when she dies, the former educator's devotion to others will continue. She is donating her brain to researchers trying to find a cure for Alzheimer's disease.

Sister Schiffler is one of about 86 nuns in the Sisters of Charity of the Blessed Virgin Mary order in Dubuque and Chicago who have agreed to leave their brains to science.

They are participants in the nationwide Religious Orders Study, a $13 million federally funded research project in its sixth year.

"It's nice to know we're giving a lift to humanity. We're contributing to society and mankind in a way that we couldn't otherwise," Sister Schiffler says.

The Religious Orders Study, funded by the National Institute on Aging, is studying older Catholic nuns, priests and brothers who have agreed to undergo annual detailed clinical evaluations and leave their brains to research when they die.

Catholic nuns, Sister St. Julian Flaherty, left, Sister Carolyn Weibler, center, and Sister Ruth Schiffler participate in an excercise class at the Sisters of Charity of the Blessed Virgin Mary retirement center, in Dubuque, Iowa. The three are among about 86 nuns in the order in Dubuque and Chicago who have agreed to donate their brains to researchers trying to find a cure for Alzheimer's disease.

The nuns in Sister Schiffler's order and about a dozen Dubuque-area priests and the same number of Trappist monks at New Melleray Abbey in nearby Peosta, are among 25 religious communities in nine states taking part in the project.

Planting in the dry season

In Kangundo, Kenya, there are two seasons, rainy and dry. Farmers plow and plant corn during the dry season. When the soil is loose and easy to turn. With the corn seeds in the ground, farmers know their crop will germinate when rain falls. Planting in the dry season also ensures that the corn seeds are not unearthed by squirrels because it impossible for them to tell which spots have seeds and which do not when the soil is dry.

This metaphor applies to many aspects of life. When we do things because we are forced to, it is like planting after the rain falls. The soil is heavy, and "social squirrel," may interfere with our progress. Anxiety, panic or illness may set in and curtail our success.

Rewards of a spiritual nature are preceded by time spent in prayer. Some sudden incidents totally occupy our mind, leaving no room to think of anything else. If one prays before such an event occurs, he has inner peace that enables to help him to go through the situation he is facing. Jesus said, "I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day; the night cometh, when no man can work" (John 9:4).

The aspect of preparing for a better future during unfavorable conditions is presented in Jeremiah 29:1-14. It is a letter to Israelite elders who were taken captivity in Babylon. God's will was for those captives to engage in productive life during this "dry season." God wanted them to plant gardens, build homes and give their children to marriage instead of bemoaning their conditions. This way, they

The Good Book: Hosea (Part 27 of 66)

Overview:

Hosea was a prophet to the northern kingdom of Israel around 730 B.C., when the nation was in war with Assyria and in virtual anarchy. Hosea was instructed by God to marry a prostitute named Gomer. She bore three children, of whom Hosea was presumably not the father, and then left him. But Hosea sought her out and publicly restored her to himself. Hosea's marriage to Gomer is an analogy of God's relationship to his people Israel. Like Gomer, they are unfaithful; like Hosea, God seeks his people out and brings them home.

Theme passage:

11:1-3 & 8-9 "When Israel was a child, I loved him, and out of Egypt I called my son. The more I called them, the more they went from me; they kept sacrificing to the Baals, and offering incense to idols. Yet it was I who taught Ephraim to walk, I took them up I my arms; but they did not know that I healed them ... How can I give you up, Ephraim? How can I hand you over O Israel? My heart recoils within me; my compassion grows warm and tender. I will not execute my fierce anger; I will not again destroy Ephraim, for I am God and no mortal, the Holy One in your midst, and I will not come in wrath."

DIVERSITY: Opinions vary on future of black church in today's culture vision statement projects a multiracial church in the future, this class is leading the curve.

This week, there are 17 young adults attending, three of them white. But race is not a concern, members say.

Ms. Brown, a white student at the University of Texas at Arlington, says she sees the class members live by scripture, reaching out to others. As Christians, she says they have more in common than they have differences.

Do they talk about race?

"It's like race isn't an issue. They're just people," William Hornbuckle Jr.

Mr. Hornbuckle, 20, is African-American. A student at Texas Christian University majoring in criminal justice with plans to become a lawyer, Mr. Hornbuckle said he has learned to accept differences, learn from them and make close friendships.

"I never even think about it. We want people of every race. It's going to be everybody in heaven," he said.

Those heavenly demographics are not reflected in their churches on Sunday mornings, four pastors of predominantly African-American churches agree. All races will be admitted to heaven, they say, and people of all races are welcome to join their churches.

Beyond that, there is a diversity of opinion about the future of the black church in today's culture, even within denominations.

"There is a special role for the black church," the Rev. C.L. Taylor, pastor of Morning Star Missionary Baptist Church in Grand Prairie, said. "Without a doubt, all the black people have is the church. The church is the voice in the black community."

Morning Star has "some Hispanics" and "one or two Anglos" among its 1,500 members. Members come from as far away as Lancaster, Mesquite and Fort Worth. All are welcome, but the church is not trying to become multiracial.

"We're predominantly black. We definitely don't want to lose our culture," he said. "We welcome all because Jesus doesn't turn anybody away."

And if others — like the Potters House, an independent church founded three years ago in South Dallas by Bishop T.D. Jakes — want to be multiracial, there is room for other ministries, he said.

"I believe the black church is the most important part of our ministry," he said.

A few blocks away is St. John Missionary Baptist Church. The two congregations cooperate on activities such as a recent celebration honoring the late Martin Luther King Jr.

The Rev. Denny Davis, pastor of St. John, sees diversity as a must within the life of the church.

"The Bible teaches that God is no respecter of persons, suggesting that God has no preference for one race or group of people over another," he said. "As a church, we promote the universal theme that those who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ are children of God."

More than 3,000 families from 29 cities are members of St. John, which has three services on Sunday morning. On any given Sunday, there might be 15 or 20 people who are Hispanic or white in the congregation, Davis said.

To reach out to others, Davis said he tries to stay in touch with other congregations, including those that are not black.

'The black church has always been open. We have no problem, whoever you are, we have no problem with you coming and being a part of our fellowship. No eyebrows will be raised.'
— Rev. Michael Bell, pastor, Greater St. Stephens First Church, in Fort Worth.

"I hope to continue to further those kinds of fellowships to bring about an understanding of the universal fellowship of Christ," he said.

Athletics and the summer camp program also promote diversity, he said.

"The greatest key is helping every member to realize they are evangelists and they have a responsibility for witnessing on a day-to-day basis," he said. He believes that members witness at church, at school, at work or in the community will broaden the diversity of the congregation.

The Rev. Michael Bell, pastor of Greater St. Stephen First Church in southeast Fort Worth, is more skeptical. Most friendships outside of church fall along racial lines, he said, and that's who people invite to church.

The majority of white members who come to his church come because of intermarriage or some other relationship, he said.

"The black church has always been open. We have no problem, whoever you are, we have no problem with you coming and being a part of our fellowship. No eyebrows will be raised," he said. "We overcompensate because we know how it is to be ostracized. Whites, Hispanics — we would go out of our way to make them feel welcome."

In spite of that, he believes black people would become members of white churches more readily than white people would join black churches.

"Fifty-fifty? That's not going to happen in Tarrant County. In Dallas County. In Texas," he said.

McKissic would disagree.

"We are still predominantly African-American in our makeup, but our vision is multiracial. We believe in the years to come our vision will become reality," he said.

There are two white people on his staff, including the recently hired youth minister, he said. At Sunday's morning worship service, a few white faces are seen among choir, a white man helps collect the offering and a few more white faces are scattered among the congregation.

"We dare not do to white folk what has been done to us and say, 'You're welcome to come, but you can't hold a position of authority or leadership,'" he said. "We don't want to practice that kind of ministry, having been the recipient of discrimination. We dare not inflict it on others."

The service is based on the African-American worship experience, he said, but the music goes beyond contemporary black Gospel, ranging from Bach to rock, trying to give everyone what they need.

There are plans for putting on an event called "God's Family Reunion" on Labor Day in 2000. McKissic said he hopes it will bring forward the vision of the multiracial church in the 21st century.

"I'm not looking at it naturally," he said. "I'm looking at it supernaturally."

Within the last several years, the Central Texas Conference of the United Methodist Church, which includes Tarrant County, has established two African-American churches, three Korean churches and a Vietnamese ministry that moved from Arlington to Haltom City, said Rev. Tim Russell, executive director for church growth and development.

He projects that a new African-American church will be built in Tarrant County near Interstate 30 and Loop 820 after Grace United Methodist Church, now located in Central Arlington, builds a new church on 15 acres of land recently acquired in South Arlington.

Why build black churches close to existing churches with predominantly white congregations?

"The same reason that you have Whataburger, McDonalds and Dairy Queen across from one another. You can't say you're just going to start multicultural churches or single ethnic churches," Russell said. "You have to give people choices, options. Even Methodist churches should not look alike, be carbon copies of one another. We live in a society where people have different needs."

On the other hand, the North Texas Conference of the United Methodist Church, which includes Dallas County, is taking a multicultural approach to church growth by opening All Nations United Methodist Fellowship — which meets at a multi-screen movie theater in Plano — in January.

"It's the first of its kind for us in the North Texas Conference," said Rev. Bob Robertson, area director of communications for the conference. "The church will be diverse by design."

The pastor, Rev. Clara M. Reed, an African-American woman, has a deep background in the Pentecostal movement, Robertson said. Among the founders, there are also people with Catholic and Baptist roots as well as United Methodists.

"The North Texas Conference — all United Methodism — is seeking to reach the ethnic culture in ways that are unorthodox, rather than just building a church house and inviting people to it," Robertson said. "Will it work? Jesus had some difficulty in making it work, but it worked."

RIAL: Church attendance often spurs increased involvement in communities million people identify themselves as Protestants, 54.9 million are Catholics, 6 million consider themselves Muslims, and 4.4 million are with Jewish congregations. Another 4 million are members of Eastern Orthodox churches.

In the program's first year in Midland last year, the effort was met with "modest success," according to Downs.

Hospitality is stressed in local churches as part of the program.

"I would want to make sure people could follow the order of worship and we wouldn't make things too complicated for them," Downs said. "We've urged our congregation to be welcoming and hospitable."

Though several churches independently have weeks set aside to encourage visitors, the idea behind Invite a Friend is to "take advantage of a wide variety of media in order to make the whole community aware of such an event. As a result, church members would feel more encouraged to invite friends to worship with them."

Another hoped for by-product of Invite a Friend to Church Day would be increased involvement in community activity, volunteerism and charity work, according to Schatzie Tighe, the program's lay coordinator in Midland.

"People that attend worship services give to their community in both time and money, and we feel this would be a great way for all the churches in Midland to do something to cross denominational lines," Tighe said last March, prior to the first Invite a Friend Day.

Among Americans who are members of a religious congregation, 86 percent visited for the first time because a friend or relative invited them, and 85 percent say they would invite others to visit if encouraged to do so, according to RIAL.

UNITY: Few similarities exist among different Protestant churches

(From 1C)

Massachusetts, who attended the meeting late last month.

"When it comes to divisions among the churches that have, in many instances, existed for hundreds of years it should not be surprising that it takes a good number of years to heal those divisions," said the Rev. Diane C. Kessler, executive director of the Massachusetts Council of Churches, who also was at the meeting.

For people in the pews, the agreement among the nine mainline denominations may eventually mean this: exchanging clergy for Sunday services; having one universally recognized baptism, and pooling resources by, for example, combining youth groups and sharing a youth minister.

These would be big steps considering that in many communities there is still little collaboration among Protestant churches of different denominations, even though the churches typically share very similar theological roots.

"Even something that would seem so simple as picking up the phone can be a big deal for people," Kessler said. "That's what makes this kind of ecumenical work so challenging."

Ultimately, a more closely allied Protestant body also might bring renewed vigor and political clout to mainline denominations whose influence in wider American society has been steadily declining for the past 40 years.

By the year 2002, according to the agreement hammered out in St. Louis, the nine denominations would publicly proclaim that they have joined together to form a new religious body — Churches Uniting in Christ.

Five years later the denominations would agree to accept each other's clergy — a step that is still uncertain because of disagreements over the office of bishop, which is central to the Episcopal Church.

"If this agreement were to come to pass it would literally reverse the Reformation, which led to the fragmentation of Christianity," Rodman said.

One of the most difficult obstacles on the road to Christian unity is the issue of race and racism.

Three of the nine denominations — the African Methodist Episcopal Church, the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church and the Christian Methodist Episcopal Churches are among denominations that exist because blacks were not welcome in white churches. And the vast majority of the nation's churches are still racially distinct.

"We really can't talk about becoming one until we deal with racism," said the Rev. Gregory Groover, pastor of Charles Street A.M.E. in Boston, who represented the African Methodist Episcopal Church in St. Louis. "If there is one factor that really separates us more than doctrine, more than theology, more than tradition, it is race."

The nine denominations committed themselves to overcoming the legacy of racism by signing an agreement to, among other things, identify and end church practices that smack of prejudice and actively promote the integration of congregations.

The other congregations participating in the Consultation on Church Union are the Episcopal Church, Presbyterian Church U.S.A., the United Church of Christ, the United Methodist Church, the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) and the International Council of Community Churches.

"I know it's a lot of hard work but I'm very excited about this," Groover said. "I do believe in Scripture and I do believe it is the will of Christ that we should be one."

could survive physically, keep their skills updated and perpetuate their families. These practices, while done in captivity, were to be the foundation for their freedom.

This also applies to today's unpredictable workplace. Career changes brought by downsizing, business mergers, technological advances, deregulation and less restrictions on international trade regulation have become part of our lives. To survive and thrive in the present turbulent workplace, one has to prepare with foresight rather than hindsight. Chance favors those who are prepared. Luck is the product of preparedness and opportunity. It is easier to learn the skills for your next position while you are at ease with your current one. Unspectacular preparation is the springboard of spectacular performance. Crops that germinate shortly after rainfall are planted in dry season.

If you repair your roof when it is sunny, you won't have to worry about getting wet while trying to do it in rain. The future depends on the sacrifice you make today. Plant when the "soil" is loose, and "social squirrels" are unable to unearth your efforts.

Are you planting in the dry season for whatever call or mission you have in this world? If not, what is stopping you?

BROWN: Author fascinated by repeated sightings of Virgin Mary

(From 1C)

Midland on Sunday when he will give a free talk, courtesy of La Promesa Foundation, at 7 p.m. at Midland Center, 105 N. Main St. An offering will be taken. His books will be available an hour before and after the presentation. For more details on the event, call the Marian Center, 682-1485.

Brown's globetrotting days began in 1979 following the publication of "Laying Waste." Until the early 1990s, he researched and wrote books on DNA ("The Search for Eve"), anthropology, toxic waste ("The Toxic Cloud") and the Mafia ("Marked to Die"). Then, in 1991, he began looking into reports of the Virgin Mary's apparition appearing in various parts of the world.

"I decided to take off from my work for a few months and look into it," Brown recalled. "I ended up taking off a lot more than that. I'm still doing it."

The consistencies of many of the recorded sightings convinced Brown of their veracity and inspired him to begin writing on the subject. His study of the Virgin Mary apparitions began with current sightings and branched into the historical reports that date back to Spain around 40 A.D. and include, Brown said, "At least 10,000 significant apparitions of her since the first century.

"And really, that's only a rough guesstimate. No one really knows. There are so many. They would fill volumes, and I do mean thick volumes on separate countries."

The sightings have played a role in the Catholic Church's view of her as the mother of the church, said Brown. "She directly inspired the construction of major churches as well as many minor ones."

The Virgin Mary has appeared to Christians, "on the Weeping Wall in Jerusalem to Jews," to "pagans in Rwanda recently," to "Native Americans in Montana" and to "any number of Protestants through the centuries," Brown said. "She has appeared virtually everywhere there are people, there is habitation." He paused and added, "I've never heard a report from Antarctica."

Although he had been raised a Catholic, when he worked as a secular journalist he said, "I bordered on probably an agnostic. I was toying with disbelief entirely."

His research renewed his faith.

"It's very difficult to investigate this stuff and come away a nonbeliever," said Brown. "As a matter of fact, I challenge anyone to follow in my footsteps and come away as an atheist."

When Brown speaks Sunday about the hidden Marian apparitions and the afterlife including Heaven, Hell and Purgatory, he will address those present "more as a Catholic than as a journalist."

His research into the sightings has convinced him that the Virgin Mary has appeared "at least hundreds if not thousands of times through the centuries. It's an incredible hidden fact that a secular society won't acknowledge."

Her purpose in appearing "from the other side of the veil" is to issue "significant messages and significant warnings," said Brown. "Right now, she's appearing and saying our world's in great danger and that mankind has become very corrupt. It's hard to turn on a tube and not acknowledge that, except, of course, for our politicians.

"It's a strange time and everything's been stood on its head. All of a sudden good is evil, and evil looks good, and this is what she's saying."

Groups unite for a stronger voice in welfare debate

By Diego Ribadeneira
N.Y. Times News Service

Even as the drama of President Clinton's impeachment limped to a close, a different and potentially significant moral tale was unfolding in another corner of the nation's capital.

More than 800 people from 40 states gathered in Washington last week to grapple with the question of what religious congregations, in the uncharted era of welfare reform, can do to help the poor lift themselves out of poverty.

The National Summit on the Churches and Welfare Reform, the first meeting of its kind, attracted more than 500 faith-based organizations that provide dozens of services, from child care to job training to health care.

As the country embarks on a historic and controversial effort to curb guaranteed government aid to needy families, churches, synagogues, and mosques are likely to play a huge role in helping the poor enter the working world.

But summit organizers say that while congregations certainly are capable and willing, they also are obliged to hold governments accountable so they will not completely abandon the poor.

"Before politicians start patting themselves on the back for welfare reform, they need to understand exactly what is happening," said Jim Wallis, an organizer of the summit and a Washington-based Christian activist who is spending a year as a fellow at the Center for the Study of Values in Public Life at Harvard Divinity School.

"Politicians are asking the wrong question," said Wallis, editor of Sojourners Magazine and founder of Call to Renewal, a national faith-based organization working to overcome poverty. "The question isn't how many people are getting off welfare. The question is how many people are getting jobs. And right now, the data show that half the people are getting jobs and the other half aren't."

Many who are able to get jobs are earning wages too low to significantly improve their economic situation, Wallis argued.

At a forum last week on churches and welfare reform at Harvard Divinity School, Mary Jo Bane, a professor of public policy and management at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government, said many people being pushed off welfare are landing minimum-wage jobs that make it inevitable that they will remain poor.

"The welfare poor have become the working poor," said Bane, who quit her job as an assistant secretary for health and human services in the Clinton administration in protest after the president signed the federal welfare reform law in 1996.

'Before politicians start patting themselves on the back for welfare reofmr, they need to understand what's happening.'

— Jim Wallis, organizer, welfare summiit.

A main goal of the church summit, Wallis said, was to catalyze an organized movement of religious congregations that could have an influential voice in public policy involving the plight of poor people.

The idea would be to mimic the success the religious right has enjoyed in having its voice heard in Washington and in state capitals on moral issues such as abortion and homosexuality.

Building on what Wallis said was a successful summit, key organizers will meet next month to decide what steps to take to build a national association of congregations working on poverty issues.

Already, Wallis said, it is clear that welfare reform will fail unless government at all levels deals better with three key weaknesses: a lack of affordable health and child care, and jobs that pay too little to support families.

"We have a real potential for advocacy," said Wallis, who is completing a book on the connection between spirituality and social action. "There are no political action committees for poor people; no highly paid lobbyist on Capitol Hill. Well, that's what churches are supposed to do.

"But a lot of churches have been doing their own things individually and staying away from politics," he said. "There's a major untapped force here."

Despite the great changes in welfare laws, Wallis said he is encouraged by the response of religious groups. A growing number no longer are simply interested in operating traditional charities such as soup kitchens, clothing closets, and homeless shelters. They want to provide permanent solutions to poverty.

"Running food pantries and the like in the end can be very demoralizing for churches and clients, because nothing ever seems to change," Wallis said. "Working on what it takes to move out of poverty can be more energizing. We want to end poverty, not service it."

RESEARCH: 667 clergy nationwide involved in project

(From 1C)

Besides Iowa, participants live in California, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Minnesota, New York, Tennessee and Wisconsin.

Dr. David Bennett, who heads the study by the Alzheimer's Disease Center at Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago, says the participants start without the disease and make excellent subjects.

"This is about as close as you can get to a controlled experiment because their lifestyles are fairly similar to each other," he said. "Getting brains from healthy, older people in general is pretty difficult because they don't want to do it."

Not so among the nuns at Mount Carmel, a retirement home for Sister Schiffler's order that sits on 110 acres on bluffs overlooking the Mississippi River.

"Everyone has a sense that at the time of death, they're moving into eternal life," said Sister Mira Mosle, director of public relations for the order. "Our people are very comfortable with it. I think there is a general sense that it's one way that people can continue to serve others... ."

Besides, says 85-year-old Sister Mary Eaton: "After I'm dead, the brain isn't going to do me a bit of good."

According to Bennett, one in 10 people over the age of 65 have Alzheimer's disease. An estimated five million Americans have the disease, with illness rates rising with age: 15 percent of people between the ages of 75 and 84, about half of those over 85.

"People over the age of 65 are the most rapidly growing segment of the population of the United States and other industrialized nations," Bennett said. "So the number of people with Alzheimer's could, in fact, triple by the middle of next century."

A total of 667 clergy nationwide are involved in the study. Researchers have already received 83 brains. Donating brains is only part of the project, however.

Participants begin with an evaluation that includes their medical history, work experiences, lifestyle, family history, neurological and physical performance tests and blood samples.

Cognitive performance tests are conducted to assess short- and long-term memory, language patterns, attention and perception.

The half-day of tests is repeated each year. Researchers are able to detect if any of the participants show signs of Alzheimer's and can bookmark, by year, the progress of the disease.

"Why am I participating? I went into it because of the many people I knew who have had spouses with the disease," said Sister Carolyn Weibler, a retired high school teacher.

"I have seen what happens, how it is a 24-hour job to take care of these people," says Sister Weibler, 83.

Bennett is being helped by scientists from the Mayo Clinic and the following universities: Case Western Reserve, Emory, Illinois, Kentucky, Northwestern, Pennsylvania and Pittsburgh.

"But the heroes of this story," he said, "are the participants — the nuns, the priests, the brothers — that are agreeing to do this. We researchers and scientists can have great ideas all day, but this is a partnership with a remarkably dedicated group of people."

Sister St. Julian Flaherty, 91, says she and her colleagues have developed a sense of humor about it all.

"It's not like we need our brains after we're gone," she says. "When I started, I asked if I would be able to have an open coffin at my funeral. They said, 'Oh yeah. We take the brains out of the back of the head.' "

Jehovah's Witnesses stand trial in Moscow

By Celestine Bohlen
N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — Seven years ago, Nikolai Cherevatov, then a Moscow University student, told his parents that his search for religion had led him to Jehovah's Witnesses, one of the fastest-growing proselytizing religious groups in Russia.

"They were very upset," recalled Cherevatov, now 31 and a devout follower of the religious community that is now before a Moscow court, accused of inciting religious discord and threatened with a ban on its activities.

"Papa said they were agents of the American CIA who would give me a gun, and tell me to shoot my parents if there was a war," he said. "Mama said no good could come from a close reading of the Bible."

As a child in a Ukrainian village, Cherevatov spent Sunday mornings in the local Russian Orthodox Church with his grandmother. Later, when he joined the Young Communist League, he had to stop going to church. But as soon as religious freedom dawned in the ruins of the Soviet empire, he began exploring his faith.

His journey began inside Russian Orthodoxy, but in the end led him out of it — a trajectory that has been repeated by hundreds of thousands of other Russian Christians, and set off alarms in the Russian Orthodox church about inroads into their flock made by what its priests call "totalitarian sects."

"The script is always the same," said Cherevatov. "I left my church, I betrayed the beliefs of my forefathers, of my country. But nobody ever asks why I left the church. It was not fanaticism that led to this choice, it was common sense. Now I have a comparison to make."

A 1997 law on religion restricted nontraditional denominations, and after that, the Orthodox church kept pressures on its rivals. Last August, Aleksei II, patriarch of the Russian Orthodox church, called for a ban on proselytizing faiths, particularly those that try to lure people away from the "religions of their ancestors."

The case now before a Moscow civil court is being closely watched by religious and human rights groups as the first significant attempt to use the law to restrict worship. Also watching will be Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, who raised the case with her Russian hosts during a recent visit, and the U.S. Senate, which has on its books a law that links American aid to Russia to religious freedom.

If the judge agrees with the prosecutor, the Jehovah's Witnesses — an aggressively proselytizing community with 130,000 believers in Russia — could lose their legal status and be banned in Moscow, where 10,000 followers reside. Technically, their national status would not be affected, but many fear that such a ruling would only encourage local judges to follow suit, and not only against the Jehovah's Witnesses.

"If they are successful in this case, then it will be terrible," said Lyudmila Alekseyeva, president of the International Helsinki Federation, "because after that, they will feel free to attack other groups."

Mrs. Alekseyeva, long a campaigner for human rights, said that "in a closed society like Russia, people don't like anything that is not 'ours.' When I ask people what is so dangerous about the Jehovah's Witnesses, nobody can answer, but they are sure they are, anyway. But this is not a theological problem. It is a human rights problem."

New York hosts conference examining Orthodox Judaism in modern world

By Julia Lieblich
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK — At age 16, Elizabeth Katz is already thinking about what it means to be a religious Jew in a secular culture. There are the obvious tensions, such as whether to wear pants or the long skirts favored in Orthodox circles. The larger question, she says, is whether to remain sheltered in a community of Orthodox Jews or venture into the larger society, with its richness and temptations.

She has made her choices: Jewish schools and secular movies, and modest skirts in an immodest world.

"It's easy to seclude yourself in being religious and go off to the right with no contact with the outside," she says. The challenge, she thinks, is to be modern and Orthodox.

Katz was among 1,500 people confronting that challenge at a recent two-day conference in New York, "Orthodoxy Encounters a Changing World."

How can modern Orthodox Jews interact socially, intellectually and professionally with society at large while safeguarding their religious life from secular values? How can they draw on elements of that culture that they believe in, such as a commitment to women's religious education, until recently not a priority in Orthodox circles? How can they apply Jewish ethical teachings to society's problems?

The smallest of the religion's three main branches in the United States, Orthodox Judaism espouses adherence to Jewish law it believes was divinely revealed. Israel's ultra-Orthodox Jews or haredim ("those who tremble" before the Lord) dominate the news with their efforts to impose their stringent interpretation of that law on others. But Orthodoxy encompasses a broad range of views on how to understand Jewish law in a modern context.

The conference was a homecoming for religious Jews who have long been concerned with such controversial issues as the leadership role of Jewish women, religion and democracy in Israel, and attitudes toward the non-Orthodox, at a time of growing conservatism within the Orthodox movement.

"When I walked in I thought, 'Oh wow, I'm not alone,' " said Ivy Schwartz, a former Jewish educator from New York.

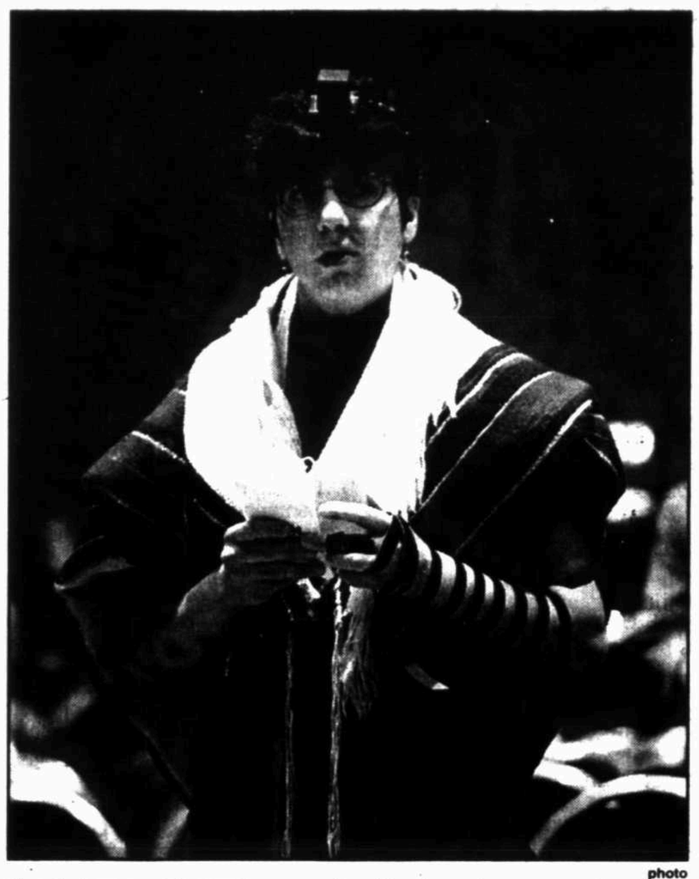

photo
Lisa Lehmann, 34, barely caused a stir when she appeared wearing Jewish garments normally reserved for men.

But to critics like Yeshiva University professor Rabbi Moshe Tendler, conference organizers were "outside the pale of Judaism" and "ignorant of Jewish law," as he said to The New York Jewish Week.

It's a familiar but unfounded charge that modern means less observant, countered Rabbi Saul Berman, director of Edah (Hebrew for "community"), the 2-year-old New York-based group that sponsored the gathering.

"We who have chosen the more difficult path of the integrationist approach are no less Orthodox than our brethren," says Berman, professor of Jewish Studies at Yeshiva University's Stern College for Women. "We may not for a moment yield to anyone our powerful commitment to halacha" (Jewish law).

Many women and an increasing number of men say that an integrationist approach to the modern world has led them to support expanding women's roles within the confines of that law. Women's prayer groups, once considered a radical idea, are gaining acceptance in many Orthodox synagogues. More women are celebrating the birth of their daughters with baby-naming ceremonies and saying kaddish at the death of their parents; only male versions of those rituals existed before.

When it comes to leadership, Orthodox Jews are discussing in what situations women should be permitted to offer rulings on applications of Jewish law. Three women are serving as congregational interns, responsible for education and pastoral care, in tw New York synagogues and one in Chicago. And a few Orthodox feminists are calling for women's ordination.

In such an atmosphere, Lisa Lehmann, 34, a fellow in medical ethics at Harvard Medical School, barely caused a stir at the conference when she swayed back and forth during morning communal prayer in the Grand Hyatt hotel ballroom, the only woman wearing a yarmulke, shawl, and tefillin, two boxes containing scrolls with Biblical messages bound to her with leather straps. Usually, such prayers are for men only.

She said she wanted to intensify her religious expression, and the conference seemed an accepting environment. She does not wear tefillin at her synagogue for fear of offending.

Reinforcing such values as tolerance, some adherents argue, requires a new generation of prayer books and institutions.

Modern Orthodoxy needs a new rabbinical school committed to combining the best in Jewish scholarship with the best in Western cultural studies and progressive thinking, argued Rabbi Daniel Lehmann, headmaster of the New Jewish School of Greater Boston.

His alma mater, Yeshiva University, has long been recognized as an institution that synthesizes traditional Jewish values and modern culture. But Lehmann called it "a generation behind intellectually," lacking departments in such fields as comparative religions and anthropology. Others at the conference defended Yeshiva.

"We need to be honest," Lehmann said. "We are the left of Orthodoxy."

Such talk reflected just the environment that conference organizers tried to foster: where subjects once considered off-limits could be discussed with civility and a diversity of opinion could be tolerated.

"Nobody here will label you as outside the pale of Orthodoxy for daring to ask questions," says Judy Adler Sheer, executive director of Edah, "for expressing your opinions and admitting that you're struggling with issues.

Sixteen-year-old Shifra Landowne welcomes the struggle. "I'll be facing these issues for the rest of my life," she says. "How to be a modern Orthodox woman."

Christian comic is funny, Mark my words

By Mark Lowry
N.Y. Times News Service

'You might be a Southern Baptist if the first words you ever uttered were, 'We've never done it this way before.' '
— Mark Lowry, Christian comedian.

This interview had to happen. I needed to prove to my co-workers that Mark Lowry, the Baptist storyteller/singer, is indeed NOT the same human being as Mark Lowry — that would be me — the Pentecostal preacher's kid who often tells stories and thinks he can sing.

Lowry, who will appear this weekend at gospel singer Bill Gaither's Homecoming Texas Style at the Fort Worth Convention Center, has been mixing comedy and the faith for nearly 20 years. His shtick: telling stories sated with nudge-nudge, wink-wink in-jokes. He performs about 80 times in any given year, won a Dove Award for his long-form video "Mouth in Motion," and has written several books, including a children's series called "The Adventures of Piper the Hyper Mouse."

His latest album, "But Seriously," is indeed a serious piece, so to speak, but count on him to sprinkle his comical parables throughout his concert of original and standard gospel tunes.

The Mark Lowry Web site (www.marklowry.com) is filled with irreverent bits such as "classic church bulletin bloopers" and "you might be a Southern Baptist ..." (No.4: if the first complete sentence you uttered was "We've never done it this way before.")

Then there's "fun things to do during boring sermons":

"Slap your neighbor. See if they turn the other cheek. If not, raise your hand and tell the preacher" and "Start from the back of the church and try to crawl all the way to the front, under the pews, without being noticed" are two that have come to my mind many times — especially when visiting churches whose services are less, um, hyper, than those he, Lowry, and I, Lowry, were raised with (for example, those that actually list the order of the service on a program, as if they already know that the spirit is not going to move.)

I should probably also mention Lowry's favorite Bible verse, just because. It's 1 Chronicles 26: 18: "At Parbar, westward four at the causeway, and two at Parbar."

But enough about him. To prove that Lowry and I are not one and the same, I picked up the phone and called him, and I offer this question-and-answer session as irrefutable proof.

Q: I guess the most obvious question is, Mark, what's your middle name?

A: Alan.

Q: You didn't get a double dose of New Testament names like I did — Mark Timothy.

A: No, I guess I didn't. Do you have a brother, Mark?

Q: Yes: David Joseph. My sisters didn't get biblical names at all, though. But enough about me. How did you get involved with Christian comedy?

A: I started out just singing. And I'd talk about things that had happened to me and my family, and the people would just laugh. I never set out to be a comedian. I don't like that word. I'm a storyteller. Like Bill Cosby; he's a storyteller. People like Jay Leno are comedians. You don't get to know anything about them.

Q: So you just talk about my, I mean, your life.

A: If I haven't lived it, I don't tell it. To me it isn't funny if it isn't true.

Q: What kind of things do you talk about?

A: For one, I like to shoot down those sacred cows. I don't deal in politics, or in pulling down other individuals.

Q: So you don't pick on fallen Christian icons?

A: Once I used the phrase "cried like Tammy Faye at a yard sale." But that's about it.

Q: What's your most recent story?

A: One I'm calling "From Toilet Plungers to the Resurrection," which is about when I recently bought a new house and discovered Home Depot. I went looking for picture hangers and left with a Jacuzzi. Later I had a party and ended up talking to an atheist who was so interesting.

An interesting atheist? Wait. Is that a punch line?

Church leaders' reactions mixed after Clinton acquittal

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The head of President Clinton's religious denomination, the Southern Baptist Convention, reacted harshly to Clinton's acquittal by the U.S. Senate, but other comments by denominational leaders have been more measured.

The Baptists' president, the Rev. Paige Patterson of Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary in Wake Forest, N.C., called the decision "a sad day for America." Patterson is a Clinton critic who had called for the president to resign.

Patterson said the vote sent the message that "if you have money or prestigious position or both, your behavior can be totally irresponsible and reprehensible in the areas of sexual morality, truthfulness and faithfulness to personal covenants and commitments. ... We the people of the United States have sown the seeds of the dissolution of our republic."

Though Clinton is a Baptist, he usually attends services with his wife, Hillary, and daughter, Chelsea, who are Methodists.

The Rev. Felton May, bishop of the United Methodist Church in Washington, D.C., said "an entire global culture, intertwined by commerce, media and technology, has been on trial."

The bishop said "we live in a world where consumption, hedonism and self-gratification have increasingly become normal and even celebrated. Addictive behaviors are only one consequence of such misplaced values." He added that "by every indication, the president has grown spiritually as a result of this moral defeat and devastation."

In Chicago, presiding Bishop H. George Anderson of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, with 5.2 million members, said, "We have weathered a crisis that has tested our nation's system of checks and balances." He called for prayers "for the many people who have been injured throughout this process."

Rape sentence overturned; judge consulted Bible

CINCINNATI (AP) — A rapist's 51-year prison sentence has been overturned on appeal because the judge turned to the Bible while deciding the punishment.

The appeals court ruled that James Arnett can seek a lesser sentence. Arnett, 33, was sentenced 13 months ago for raping and molesting his fiancee's 8-year-old daughter.

In weighing Arnett's sentence, Judge Melba Marsh said she turned to the Bible and read a verse in Matthew that said anyone who offends a child would be better off if "a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

The appeals court, in a 2-1 decision, concluded that Marsh acted outside Ohio's sentencing guidelines by using the Bible to determine Arnett's fate.

"We stress that this case is unusual in that a specific text in the Christian Bible was the determining factor in the judge's imposition of punishment," appellate Judge Mark Painter wrote.

In dissent, appellate Judge Lee Hildebrandt Jr. said it did not appear to him that Marsh based her decision on the Bible passage.

Lenten luncheon series returns at First Presbyterian Church

By Jimmy Patterson
Staff writer

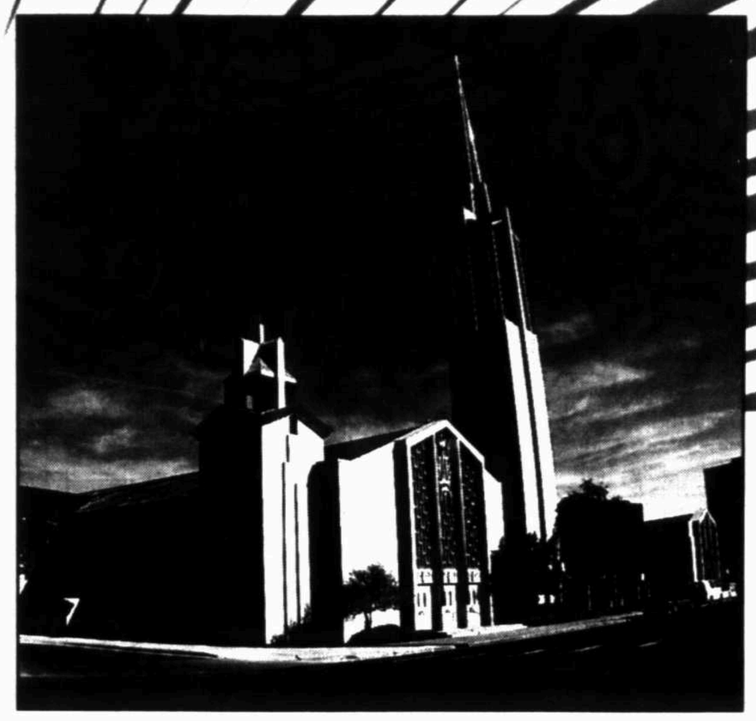
First Presbyterian Church is again the site of a series of Lenten Luncheon concerts throughout the season of Lent.

The series begins Wednesday at 12:05 p.m., and continues through March 24.

Each luncheon will feature a 30-minute concert with lunch available 30 minutes before and after performances. Admission is free to all recitals. Lunch is available for $4.

The first featured musician will be flutist Marjory Jennings. Jennings is a member of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and is known throughout the Permian Basin as both a teacher and a performer. Her program will feature music for flute and organ. Rebecca Sawyer, organist for First Presbyterian, will accompany Jennings.

"We've had a wonderful response from the community and a great showing of people who have expressed appreciation to us for doing this," said Sawyer. "We're trying to fill a need in the community. We do it at lunch when a lot of people don't have something on a regular basis. The crowds haven't been huge but we range between 100-250. We're pleased with that."



Wednesday's program, conducted in the First Presbyterian sanctuary, will include "Arrival of the Queen of Sheba," from G.F. Handel's Solomon; "Meditation," by Sally Daley; "Rhapsody for Flute and Organ," by John Weaver; Hayden's Allegretto and March from "Pieces for the Musical Clock; "Lotus Land," Op. 47, No. 1, by Cyril Scott, arranged by Jay Arnold, and "Fantasy on 'Slane,' " by Libby Larsen.

Following Wednesday's concert, the remaining luncheons will feature The Lone Star Brass Quintet (March 3); Gregory Pysh, tenor, and pianist Rebecca Sawyer (March 10); The Midland High School Choir (March 17), and organist Robert Poer (March 24).

"We have a variety of music," Sawyer said. "We're coming from the standpoint that all music is a gift from God. We do include some sacred music, but we have some secular music also."

Sawyer said the program is designed to have a variety of different performing mediums, thus a choir, quintet and duets, for instance.

"As much as possible," Sawyer said, "We try to include people from our own community in the series, and this year they are all either from Midland or Odessa."

First Presbyterian is located at 800 W. Texas, at the corner of 'A' St. The program is coordinated by the church's minister of music, Gregory Pysh. For more information, call 684-7821.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, Feb. 20, 1999:

Relate your needs more directly to others. You will fluctuate between being insecure and feeling on top of it all. There's a direct correlation between your self-perception and what manifests in your life. You're exceptionally verbal and might interrupt in conversations, assuming you know what someone will say. Let others express themselves first. If you are single, you meet people easily. Still, you might not be quite ready to settle down. If attached, work on complete communication, emphasizing what you hear, what you think was said and/or what might have been implied. Once the cobwebs are cleared in interactions with your mate, your relationship will be enhanced. TAURUS understands you.

BORN TODAY

Director Robert Altman (1925), basketball player Charles Barkley (1963), actress Jennifer O'Neill (1948)

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

★★★★ The time has come to make a serious decision. You might have been hemming and hawing, but now you see the need. Verbalize what you feel is necessary to establish the kind of domestic harmony you seek. Confusion surrounds plans and a friend. What's new? Tonight: A night on the town.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

★★★★★ You move from a difficult, low mood to extremely happy and outgoing. The moon in your sign beams good news toward you. Don't be shy; ask for what you want. Others respond enthusiastically. You could be baffled at a get-together, but will still have fun. Tonight: Your smile melts another's barriers.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

★★★ Right now, you might not be your jubilant, happy self. Review information carefully and stay in touch with your feelings. A work-related task has you focused. Worry less about what could happen, but rather deal with facts. Ask questions if you don't understand. Tonight: A quiet night.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

★★★★ Break precedent, take a risk. Listen to feedback. Remain sure of yourself. How you visualize a new friendship could be very different than the reality. A partner adds a bit of haze when making plans. Ask what is going on with your communication and this person. Tonight: Make it a party!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

★★★ You might need to cancel plans because of demands from a boss, an older friend or a relative. Maintain responsibilities, yet be sensitive to a partner who cares a lot. You could be confused by this person's behavior. Recognize that for many, you are a role model. Tonight: A force to reckon with.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

★★★★★ Your sensitivity and awareness takes you to a new level. Let others approach you. You gain interesting information. Don't let confusion over the day's plans get to you. Allow more spontaneity and joy into your life. Let a special friend be dominant. Tonight: Get tickets to a play, movie or concert.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★★ Your sense of well-being is enhanced because of a conversation and another's overture. It is time to let go of someone, who could be abnormally difficult and testy. Allow a child to express his feelings. Realize you don't have the whole story. Tonight: Check out an investment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★★★ You might be exhausted. However, a special friend casts a new light on your day. Be willing to take a leap of faith and go along with him. Chaos reigns at home. Usually this is uncomfortable for you, but for now, why not worry less and enjoy more? Tonight: Out and about.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

★★★ You might feel like another is putting you down. Think before you leap into action. In fact, you're better off distracting yourself with errands or a favorite hobby! As a result, you might be amazed at how you view life. A message or letter could be lost. Tonight: Don't stand on ceremony.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★★★ Dealing with a domestic issue proves to be difficult. Opt for what works for you. Lighten up and let the kid in you come out. A loved one thinks you are absolutely great and lets you know. Let communication happen. Don't question how another sees you. Tonight: The good times roll.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

★★★ Communication takes a difficult turn. You (or another) might be overly serious. Slow down a bit and relax. Drop in on a flea market or buy a new item for your house. As a result, you recharge and feel much better. Invite friends for the afternoon. Tonight: The party goes on.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

★★★★★ Have a needed discussion. Your ability to help another identify and be more empathetic is your strong suit. You are subject to sudden, fortunate changes in the near future. Your intuition could be off; stick to proven information. Tonight: Favorite restaurant, favorite person.

Rosemary Clooney spends day with muppets

NEW YORK — Rosemary Clooney spent a morning with some very dear friends — the Muppets.

The singer recently made her first appearance on "Sesame Street" in a segment due to air Monday.

"All of my fondest memories of bringing up five children watching 'Sesame Street' were realized on the day I spent with all my 'old friends,'" she said.

In her appearance, Clooney arrives on the street when it is deserted except for Hoot the owl and greets cast regulars as they appear. During the sketch she sings "Sunny Day."

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Fellow actors called him "a volcano of ideas and images," and described his films as "a postgraduate course in acting."

Those were among the praises accorded Dustin Hoffman on Thursday night as the American Film Institute presented him with its 27th Life Achievement Award.

"Working with Dusty was like being on center court at Wimbledon," remarked Jon Voight, Hoffman's co-star in "Midnight Cowboy." "You always knew the ball was going to come back, but you never knew what spin was going to be on it."

Many of the comments at the Beverly Hilton banquet touched on Hoffman's notorious penchant for endlessly exploring his film characters. He has been known for his forceful debates with directors as well, coming to blows with Sydney Pollack during the filming of "Tootsie."

In accepting the award, Hoffman, 61, spoke in front of large photographs of himself in his wide variety of roles, from Carl Bernstein in "All the President's Men" to Willy Loman in "Death of a Salesman."

"It has been a glorious orgy to be part of this century of American film," he remarked, close to tears. "I'm sorry if I hurt a few people, but I did it only in the pursuit of what I hoped would be real and good."

LOS ANGELES — Julie Andrews is raising her voice about violence against women.

Andrews and U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan will direct a 90-minute video conference panel on the subject during International Women's Day on March 8.

Andrews, 63, a goodwill ambassador for the United Nations Development Fund for Women, starred in "Mary Poppins" and "The Sound of Music." She has been unable to sing since she underwent surgery to remove non-cancerous throat nodules in 1997.

Her latest project is the CBS movie "A Winter Visitor," co-starring James Garner. It will air later this year.

OXFORD, England — Gennifer Flowers is overseas hoping to prevent more Monica Lewinskys.

"An affair with a married man, and or a married woman, is certainly not a relationship that I advocate," Ms. Flowers told reporters at the Oxford Union, where she was due to speak Friday night.

Clinton has admitted he had sex with Ms. Flowers, who was invited to address Oxford's debating society on "surviving sex, power and propaganda."

Ms. Flowers took issue with a reporter who suggested Clinton was not the first president to stray from his marriage vows.

"Are you saying that's OK? It's OK for men to break the oath and commitment to their marriage? I don't think so," she said.

And what about women who take up with married men?

"Those relationships are very destructive," she said. "They very seldom end in a positive way, and that is something that I shouldn't have done."

NEW YORK — Celine Dion wants the rumors about her being anorexic to stop.

"I don't have an eating problem, and there's nothing more I can say about that," she tells this week's edition of People magazine.

Dion, who is 5-foot-7 and 115 pounds, said her thin physique comes from her high metabolism.

"I'm lucky," she said. "If I had a problem with my health, I would let my fans know."

The 30-year-old Canadian singer, who rose to fame with her rendition of the "Titanic" movie theme, "My Heart Will Go On," stunned fans by saying she will take a yearlong break to spend time with her husband, beginning next January.

"I can't wait to do normal things — like just doing your own groceries, looking for your own tomatoes," she said. "I just can't wait to get up in the morning and look awful. I'm looking forward to getting bored."

It Only Hurts at First

I have a theory that there is a little defense mechanism in the human brain that blocks out memories of pain.

While that might seem like a good thing at first, if we can't remember how painful something was, we don't really learn anything from the experience. How else can you explain third marriages, family reunions, and anyone ever buying more than one Peugeot?

I've been thinking a lot about painful memories lately, as I just started another old car restoration project.

Somehow I seem to have forgotten about my last major restoration, with its shredded fingers, rusted bolt aggravations, and never ending, very expensive, unbudgeted details. That little defense mechanism has put my brain on fast forward, skipping from the reality of the many boxes of G.L.P.s (greasy little parts) in my shop, and focusing on the image of a gleaming collector car that monopolizes my daydreams.

There are few material satisfactions greater than driving your newly restored gem to the covetous gazes of strangers. What other endeavor rewards you with the pride of accomplishment, the pride of ownership, and the thrill of the open road? During every restoration there will be unexpected adventures, and newfound friends of similar interests. Invariably, you will discover that you're missing some obscure part, and the hunt through all the usual catalogs and micro print classified pages in the back of Hemmings Motor News lead nowhere.

It will be exactly the search for that part that will lead you on some of your most interesting journeys. In desperation, you start getting creative in your quest, talking to people in the enthusiast crowd, looking for someone who knows of a hidden stash of parts in a garage or out of the way junk yard. Maybe you see a similar car at a cruise-in, and you strike up a conversation with the owner. That person will invariably know someone, who knows someone, who might be able to help.

It's a great way to meet and network with like-minded "motorheads," and for every price gouging predator that attempts to overcharge you for a suspect part, you will meet five friendly types that will give you the piece you would gladly pay for. Occasionally you might have to take a road trip to find what you need, or attend a "swap meet" in the never ending search for essential stuff. New faces, new places.

Along the way, you will discover talents you never knew you had. It's a real kick to stand back and proudly point out the upholstery or paint that you refinished yourself, or to listen to the howl of a fully open four-barrel carburetor that was once nothing more than a pile of parts on your workbench. The rewards of a restoration well done are worth the aggravations, expense, and skinned knuckles.

At least that is what I'm going to keep reminding myself every time a rust crusted component snaps off some essential part made from pure unobtainium. In fact, I'm going to head down to the shop right now and finish putting together that "thirty over" 350 V-8 that has been sitting on my (borrowed) engine stand for a year. I don't really have the time to mess with it right now, and my right hand is barely functioning after an intake manifold fell on it, but I just can't shake the daydream of tire smoke and bellowing Flowmaster muffled exhaust.

Staring down the barrel of yet another restoration, I don't see the half completed engine, only the tire melting acceleration it will supply when installed.

Ultimate Luxury Minivan

RoadWorthy!

By Ken Chester, Jr.

'99 Chrysler Town & Country Limited

For the 1999 model year, DaimlerChrysler turned the competitive heat up another notch with the introduction of the Town & Country Limited minivan. This vehicle is meant to be a distinctive choice for those consumers that want the best creature comforts of a luxury sedan while also desiring the comfort, room and versatility of a minivan.

This new model adds a fourth level to the Town & Country minivan lineup which is now comprised of SX, LX, LXi and Limited. According to Ralph A. Sarotte, DaimlerChrysler Corp. General Product Manager, Minivan Platform, Town & Country minivan sales have increased 117 percent since 1995.

"We have virtually created a segment within a segment," Sarotte said.

The top-of-the-heap Limited model is built exclusively in the automaker's St. Louis South plant in Missouri. DaimlerChrysler's premium minivan features the following additional equipment: dual zone front and rear air conditioning/heating and controls, 125-amp alternator, alarm system and garage door opener, automatic headlamps with time delay, heated front leather seats, eight-way power driver's seat with two-position memory, leather wrapped steering wheel with touch controls for cruise and audio, third row bench seat with armrest, load leveling suspension and chrome aluminum wheels.

The Limited is powered by a High Output 3.8L six-cylinder engine joined to the smooth shifting 41TE electronic four-speed automatic transmission. The powerplant received a 14 horsepower increase to 180 during the '98 model year. This engine is available in all 50 states, meeting the Low Emission Vehicle (LEV) requirements in California, New York and Massachusetts.

Inside the cabin, the driver has a commanding view of the road, with decent displays and controls. Seating is comfortable throughout this minivan, with cubbyholes, storage areas, and cupholders galore. The minivan is easy to get in and out of, due in part to its low step-in height and the standard driver's side sliding door. With an easy release lever for the second row Captain's chairs, entry to the rear bench seat is improved.

DaimlerChrysler has even included a powerpoint in the rear of the vehicle — sure to be used heavily by the Nintendo crowd on long family trips. Another new feature is the addition of a row of grocery hooks, a plastic bar attached to the rear seat in order to secure plastic grocery bags loaded in the back.

Properly equipped, the Chrysler Town & Country can tow a trailer with a maximum weight of 3,500 pounds. Underhood fluids are clearly marked and easy to reach. The one sole complaint I have is that the DaimlerChrysler premium people mover still requires a prop rod to hold open the engine hood.

By the Numbers

The high output 3.8L V-6 spins out 180 horsepower @ 4,400 rpm and delivers 240 lb/ft of torque @ 3,200 rpm. EPA fuel economy ranges from 17 city/24 highway for the front-wheel drive model, to 16 city/23 highway for the all-wheel drive model. Standard safety/security equipment includes dual front air bags, four-wheel anti-lock brakes, fog lamps, low speed traction control, alarm system, full size spare tire and remote keyless entry.

Retail prices for the Chrysler Town & Country Limited starts at $33,765 for front-wheel drive to $36,140 for the Limited all-wheel drive model. Destination charge adds $580. Supplies of the Limited are good and there are no rebates.
