PAMPA — AmWest Savings will change its name to First American, SSB, Thursday, according to officials with the savings association.

"We have recently changed our charter to a state savings bank," said Dennis Godwin, Pampa branch manager, "and our new name better expresses our commitment to provide the community with a full line of banking services."

Godwin said the organization was still Texas-owned and operated and that AmWest checks and documents are still valid and will continue to be honored.

"All customer account relationships will remain the same," he said.

He said celebrations are planned Nov. 14 through 18 at all branch locations across the state.

PAMPA — Gray County commissioners will meet at 9 a.m. Friday to canvass votes for the Tuesday general election.

The court will convene in the second floor courtroom of Gray County Courthouse.

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — A man who told police he beat his mother to death and cut out her organs because "she was a vampire devil" has been arrested on a charge of aggravated murder.

Henry M. Heepe, 50, was found lying face down in bed Monday night next to pieces of his mother's corpse as some of her body parts bubbled in a pot on the stove, Capt. Paul Callahan said.

Heepe is accused of beating his mother to death, stabbing her repeatedly, then removing her organs and possibly eating some of them. Police said their search of the house did not locate all her organs.

"I killed my mother," Heepe said, according to a police report. "She was a vampire devil. I cut out both of her hearts. It took her five hours to die."

Police found 77-year-old Barbara Heepe dead in a bedroom of the house she shared with her son after getting a call from a neighbor who had been unable to reach her.

CHICAGO (AP) — Parents who want normal-weight children shouldn't try to control how much they eat — left alone, most youngsters instinctively know how much is good for them.

"You have to have a little bit of faith in your child's ability to know when they're hungry and when they're not," said Susan L. Johnson, the lead author of a new study of 77 preschoolers aged 3 to 5.

Stringently tracking the child's eating can lead to problems: Children with the most body fat had mothers who were the most "controlling" about diet, the study found. The children were also the least likely to eat appropriate amounts of calories spontaneously.

"The more control the mother reported using over her child's eating, the less self-regulation the child displayed," authors of the study say in the November issue of Pediatrics.

Parents should just "relax a little," said Johnson, a nutritionist and postdoctoral fellow in pediatrics at the University of Colorado Center Health Sciences Center.

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — A doctor who performs abortions was in serious condition today, a day after a sniper toting an AK-47 shot him as he ate breakfast in his kitchen.

The first bullet crashed through a sliding glass door and through the back of Dr. Garson Romalis's chair as he was leaning forward, police spokeswoman Constable Anne Drennan said.

"The second shot appears to have struck the doctor in the leg as he was being spun around in the chair," she said. The doctor's wife and daughter were home at the time but were not harmed.

Police still had no suspect in Tuesday's shooting. Drennan said today. They had not ruled out motives other than Romalis' abortion work.

In Washington, D.C., Justice Department spokesman Carl Stern said the FBI was helping in the investigation.

Abortion is legal throughout Canada and available at most government-funded hospitals and clinics.

Democrats, Republicans divide courthouse

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
News Editor

While two new faces will be around Gray County Courthouse in 1995, the ratio of Republicans to Democrats will remain the same with six and six after local voting Tuesday.

Selected to lead Gray County as judge is Richard Peet, Pampa's mayor and a Pampa High School government teacher. Peet defeated convenience store owner Democrat Jim Osborne, 4,876 to 3,421.

Republican James Hefley, McLean, will fill the Precinct 4 commissioner's spot left by retiring Republican Ted Simmons. Hefley garnered 1,563 votes to beat out two write-in candidates, Billy Scribner with 604 votes and Gerald Johnson with 300 votes.

Returning to the Precinct 2 commissioner's spot is two-term incumbent Jim Greene, the lone Democrat on the court. Greene edged Republican challenger, Susan Tripplehorn, 926 to 735.

Officeholders who gained their jobs by appointment to unexpired terms will retain those seats. Republican County Attorney Todd Alvey, who was tapped for the job Jan. 1 following the resignation of County Attorney Bob McPherson, will finish the term set to end Dec. 31, 1996. Alvey bested Democratic candidate Tracey Blades, 4,864 to 3,320.

In the tax assessor/collector's office, the woman appointed by commissioners to lead the office until Jan. 1 has won election to complete the unexpired term of the late Margie Gray, who died April 21. Sammie Morris, a Republican, captured 5,145 votes to Democratic challenger and office co-worker Donna Daugherty's 3,194.

Republican County Treasurer Scott Hahn will continue on the job, defeating write-in candidate, Kay Smith, 5,314 to 2,043.

Veteran Democratic County Clerk Wanda Carter, first elected in 1970, was returned to office, 5,266 to 3,054. She was opposed by Republican newcomer Joetta Thomas.

Yvonne Moler, Democratic district clerk, bested another Republican newcomer, Bobbie West, 4,364 to 3,925.

Incumbent Democrats running unopposed were 223rd District Judge Lee Waters, 31st District Judge Kent Sims and Justice of the Peace Precinct 2 Margie Prestidge. They captured 6,012, 5,723 and 1,179 votes respectively.

Incumbent Republican Justice of the Peace Precinct 1 Bob Muns, also unopposed, earned 3,211 votes. In Precinct 4, Republican first-timer Mary Ann Carpenter took 2,168 votes.

Also running unopposed, State Sen. Teel Bivins received 6,720 votes and State Rep. Warren Chisum gained 6,100 votes from Gray County residents.

"It's a happy day - not blissful - but a happy day," said Gray County Republican Party chairman Tom Mechler.

He told Republicans gathered at party headquarters Tuesday night $13,000 had been raised and spent on the election.

Across the street, Democratic Party chairman John Warner said, "Locally, all of our Democratic incumbents were re-elected and we're pleased the voters looked at their records. Wanda Carter, Yvonne Moler and Jim Greene have done a good job for our county and they will continue to do so for the next four years."

However, Warner said he was disappointed with negative campaigning nationwide.

"I urged our local Democrats to run on their own merits, not on the demerits of their opponents. That may be wrong, but that's the way I believe our leaders should conduct themselves," he said.

Peet said he expects to resign his teaching job at PHS at the end of the semester and the mayoralty on Dec. 13.

"I'm hoping to make Gray County a much more liveable and prosperous county," he said.

Area voters help with GOP victory

By BEN KECK

Voters in area counties Tuesday joined the majority of Texans in returning a Republican incumbent to the U.S. Senate, and in dumping the incumbent Democrat U.S. representative.

And the voters of Carson, Hemphill, Roberts and Wheeler counties joined the rest of the state to dump the incumbent Democrat governor. They did, however, vote to retain Democrats in the second- and third-ranking jobs in state government.

In Carson County, U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison received 1,873 votes to Democrat Richard Fisher's 574. Libertarian candidate Pierre Blondeau got 14 votes. Republican challenger Mac Thornberry, who took the 13th Congressional District seat away from Democrat Bill Sarpalus, got 1,613 votes in Carson County, while Sarpalus got only 861.

Republican George W. Bush got 1,556 votes in the county, to Gov. Ann Richards' 944. Libertarian gubernatorial candidate Keary Ehlers got 19 votes in Carson County.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and Attorney General Dan Morales, both Democrats, managed to hang onto their jobs. In Carson County, Bullock got 1,550 votes to Republican Texas Lezar's 892, and Morales received 1,334 to Republican Don Wittig's 1,005. Vicki Flores, the Libertarian candidate for attorney general, got 55 votes.

In Hemphill County, Hutchison received 1,128 votes in the Senate race; Fisher got 260; and Blondeau received 6. Thornberry got 945 and Sarpalus received 431. In the governor's race, Bush got 930; Richards, 465; and Ehlers, 8. Bullock received 879 votes to Lezar's 459. Morales got 688; Wittig, 576; and Flores, 31.

Hutchison carried Roberts County, 448 to Fisher's 93 and Blondeau's 5. Thornberry got 412, compared to Sarpalus's 130. Roberts County went to Bush in the governor's race, 412 to Richard's 138 and Ehlers' 8. Bullock carried the county 309 to Lezar's 213. In the attorney general's race, Morales has 256; Wittig, 245; and Flores, 11.

Republican Brian Quinn wins appellate court seat

By JEFF CARRUTH
Special to The Pampa News

LUBBOCK — A Lubbock attorney today partially credited his victory over an incumbent appellate court judge to a strong Republican vote on election day.

Brian Quinn, a Lubbock Republican, defeated H. Bryan Poff, a Canyon Democrat, Tuesday for Place 2 on the Texas Seventh Court of Appeals.

Quinn said he won because voters wanted to reject Poff, a former state representative and district judge.

"They said, 'Look, we don't want you,'" Quinn said. "The voters wanted to send a message."

No one answered repeated calls to Judge Poff's office or home today.

Even though he won by a five percent margin, Quinn said he would have been happy with a one vote edge.

"People were just upset with judges who make law," Quinn said. "I promise to do my best to keep the courts out of the business of making laws."

The Lubbock lawyer partially credited his win to some Republican coattails. A strong Republican showing Tuesday put the GOP in the Texas Governor's office and gave them control of the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives.

Quinn will take his seat on the four judge Seventh Court of Appeals panel in January. It is Quinn's first judicial seat.

Based in Amarillo, the Seventh Court of Appeals is an intermediate court that hears civil and criminal appeals.

Surrounded by supporters, William "Mac" Thornberry, Republican candidate for the 13th Congressional District, gets a victory hug from Jane Juett Tuesday night after defeating incumbent Congressman Bill Sarpalus. Republicans gathered in the basement of Boatman's Bank in Amarillo to celebrate a variety of election day victories that put them in control of the governor's office and both houses of Congress. Mac Thornberry going to Congress

AMARILLO — It was a tired Republican congressman-elect that was accepting congratulations early today and giving telephone interviews to local and national reporters.

William "Mac" Thornberry won Tuesday's election for the 13th Congressional seat, beating incumbent Congressman Bill Sarpalus by more than 15,000 votes out of a total of almost 142,000 cast in the race.

"I'm very grateful for these people," Thornberry said, motioning toward his supporters who had gathered in the basement of Boatman's Bank in Amarillo Tuesday night, "and the people across the district who made this possible. I feel responsible to them. I will do my very best to prove myself worthy."

Thornberry, an Amarillo Republican, took an early lead in the vote tally, maintaining a 56 to 44 percent edge most of the night. With 99 percent of the votes counted today, Thornberry had garnered 78,884 votes, or 56 percent of the total, to Sarpalus' 63,042, or 44 percent of the votes.

The newly elected Republican was one victory in many for the GOP Tuesday. Thornberry said he sees it as a mandate for change.

"There needs to be some changes in Washington," he said. "We think they'll be some big changes."

Sarpalus, an Amarillo Democrat, was an eight-year veteran of the U.S. House of Representatives and had served in the Texas Senate for eight years before going to Washington.

Thornberry told reporters as Tuesday night turned to Wednesday morning that his initial plans were to close up the campaign and begin the transition to open offices in Amarillo and Wichita Falls.

"I've got to try to consider the staff for the office and making whatever moves we're going to make to Washington," he said. "My family and I hadn't really talked about that yet, but there are a lot of decisions we have to make."

He said he expects to get to work as soon as the new Congress convenes.

"I've had the benefit of working up there before, and I kind of know the way things work," he said. "I think I'll be able to hit the ground running come January Third," Thornberry said.

In the meantime, Thornberry said he intended to take some time off to spend with his family and prepare for the move to the nation's capitol.

"There's one moving company in San Antonio I won't be using," he said.

Sarpalus' involvement with a San Antonio-based moving company that is under investigation for making illegal contributions to congressmen was one of the issues during a campaign marked with person attacks and innuendo on both sides.

Thornberry stood by his "Contract with America," a Republican campaign document signed this fall by GOP candidates on the steps of the Capitol in Washington that calls for votes on 10 keys issues during the first 100 days of the 104th Congress.

The newly elected congressman said all 10 issues, including proposals for tax cuts, term limits, a balanced budget amendment and a star wars defense system, would be brought up for a vote on the House floor so Congress could be held accountable by the voters.

Responding to calls by Texas Panhandle state legislators on redistricting, Thornberry said that any redrawing of district lines should include all of Amarillo. Redistricting two years ago split the city, leaving the Potter County portion, predominantly Democratic, in a winding 13th Congressional District that extends from the northern border of the Texas Panhandle south and east to Denton. The Randall County portion of Amarillo with a strong Republican vote became part of the 19th Congressional District represented by Lubbock Republican Congressman Larry Combest. Thornberry's Amarillo home is in Combest's district.

"I hope that when they redraw the line that they consider the best interest of the people first and foremost," Thornberry said. "What we had this year were lines that were drawn with the best interest of the politicians and that's wrong. I think it's in the best interest of the people to put Amarillo back together regardless of what candidate or what party it helps or hurts. The best interests of the people ought to come first."

Thornberry's victory trimmed the Democratic edge in the Texas congressional delegation to 19-11. Sarpalus had not returned any calls for comment by press time today.

Pampa United Way nears 85 percent of goal

The Pampa United Way has reached 84.8 percent of its $300,000 goal, with $254,498 in contributions and pledges recorded through Tuesday, according to Executive Administrator Katrina Bigham.

"There are a few more businesses, professional and individuals still out, and we hope they will all be in by Friday, Nov. 11," Bigham said.

"After reports were ran of the giving records for last year and this year, there is more than enough still uncollected to enable us to reach our goal," she said. "We are trying to call on everyone that is still out to see if we need to pick up their pledges or packets."

"We want to complete this campaign by the end of this week, if at all possible," she said.

Bigham expressed appreciation for all the volunteers who worked on this year's campaign and for all those who have donated to the Pampa United Way.

"Our 16 agencies are very dependent upon this one-time fund-raising effort that is citywide," she said.

Those who have not been approached about giving to the Pampa United Way and who wish to make a donation may do so by mailing the contribution or pledge to Pampa United Way, Box 2076, Pampa, TX 79066, or by calling the office at 669-1001.

Lefors ISD trustees to discuss school repairs

LEFORS — School repairs and gun control will be on the agenda for Thursday night's meeting of the Lefors school board.

The board of trustees for Lefors Independent School District is expected to approve a resolution to comply with federal law dealing with bringing firearms to school, said Joe Roper, Lefors school superintendent, today.

The board will also discuss refinishing the gym floor and updating the high school heating system, Roper said.

Trustees are also scheduled to vote on Sam Haynes as director of Gray County Appraisal District, along with an update of the school policy manual.

Roper said he would outline federal and state laws for the board in connection with vehicle transportation regulations during Thursday's meeting, and present the Academic Excellence Indicator System.

The indicator system is a statewide system that shows how well schools are operating, Roper said. It shows such things as student performance, teachers salaries and administrative costs. The superintendent said the results of Lefors schools would be presented in a public hearing although no date has been set.

"It will probably be next month," he said.

Roper indicated there would probably be a closed session during the meeting to discuss personnel.

Osborne, for whom this was the second defeat in his quest to be county judge, blamed the loss on anti-Democratic sentiment in the county.

"Voters wanted a change and they got it," he said.

Hefley attributed his win over two write-in candidates to replace the retiring Commissioner Ted Simmons in Precinct 4 to "widespread support."

"I had a lot of people ask me to run when they found out Ted wasn't going to run again," said Hefley.

"I had a lot of widespread support," he said.

He said he had no specific issues that made him want to run for commissioner's position.

"I felt I could be an asset to the commission," he said.

His two write-in opponents were Billy Scribner and Gerald Johnson.

Though he is disappointed about his loss, Scribner said that he will support Hefley because he is also a Republican.

"I'm behind him all the way," said Scribner.

Longtime County Clerk Wanda Carter said her race against Republican Joetta Thomas was "a good, clean race."

"I'm thrilled and thankful that the people thought enough of me to reelect me," said Carter, who has held the post for 24 years. "There are a lot of people I'd like to say thank you to. They've worked long and hard. As for my opponent, she ran a good, clean race."

And that's what veteran politicians at Republican headquarters were telling Thomas, who made her first foray into politics this year.

"You ran a good race, you really did," outgoing County Judge Carl Kennedy told Thomas. "You should consider running for something again."

Thomas wasn't quite sure about that.

"It's not easy for me to get up before crowds and talk," she said. "But I really have grown through this campaign. I gave it all I had, but I was a virtual unknown and (Carter) had been in there 24 years. I did all I could. I'm not disappointed at all."

Republican Sammie Morris, who was appointed last May to the post of tax assessor-collector, said her race against Democrat Donna Daugherty, an employee of the office, "was a hard one."

"We all worked so hard," Morris said. "Campaigning was worth it because you find out you have so many friends."

Republican Scott Hahn defeated write-in candidate Kay Smith for the treasurer's post that Hahn has held for eight years.

"I certainly feel good about it," said Hahn.

He was also pleased that he and his opponent ran a what he feels was a clean race.

He said he plans on continuing the work that he has done in the previous eight years he has been in office.

"We are approaching a time in Gray County where finances are becoming more of a problem than what has been experienced previously," he said. That, Hahn added, makes his position as county treasurer that much more critical.

Smith said she wished the race had been closer, but running as a write-in candidate made it all the tougher.

Iran bombs opposition bases in Iraq

By MONA ZIADE
Associated Press Writer

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian warplanes bombed a Kurdish base in the no-fly zone in northern Iraq today, killing at least one person and wounding three, Iranian opposition groups said.

Tehran's official Islamic Republic News Agency initially reported its planes hit a base of Iran's main opposition group, the Mujahadeen Khalq. Later, IRNA identified the base as a headquarters of "counter-revolutionaries," without giving its affiliation.

The air raid was the first this year on Iranian opposition bases in Iraq, but there have been others against Iranian Kurds and Mujahadeen since Tehran and Baghdad reached a cease-fire in 1988 ending eight years of war.

Today's attack was unlikely to draw Iraqi retaliation because both Baghdad and Tehran have been fighting their Kurdish minorities, which have sought autonomy for decades.

The base lies just within the no-fly zone Western allies established after the 1991 Gulf War to protect Kurdish dissidents whose rebellion against Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein was brutally crushed. More than 3 million Kurds live in that autonomous enclave protected by Western airplanes.

Iran, Iraq and Turkey fear the autonomous Kurdish zone in Iraq is the possible nucleus of an independent state uniting 20 million Kurds.

A statement by the Democratic Party of Iranian Kurdistan said four Iranian fighter jets attacked the group's base at Koi Sanjaq this morning. The base, although inside Iraq, is home to Iranian Kurds.

Ali Safavi, a spokesman for the Mujahadeen based in Paris, said the warplanes struck the Kurds after failing to bomb the Mujahadeen camp in Ashraf, whose anti-aircraft system was activated. The Mujahadeen and Kurdish bases are 215 miles apart.

The Kurdish statement described the attack as "intensive," despite the low casualty report. It gave no details of damage.

IRNA, in a report monitored in Cyprus, said the pilots reported hits on the "command headquarters, munition depot and center of counter-revolutionaries..." All the jets returned safely to their bases, the agency said.

In its early report, Iran claimed the Mujahadeen recently sent saboteurs from Iraq to western Iran in an attempt to sabotage oil pipelines and other installations. That charge was cited by Tehran as the reason for a missile attack on Mujahadeen bases Sunday.

Atlantis enters second half of flight

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Monitors aboard Atlantis worked to give scientists more details on Earth's delicate atmosphere today as the shuttle and its crew of six forged into the second half of an 11-day mission.

Biologists also watched the progress of 10 pregnant spacers, the first pregnant mammals to fly aboard a U.S. spacecraft.

Six instruments in Atlantis' cargo bay and a $35 million German satellite trailing the shuttle are working to give scientists a clearer idea of what make up the atmosphere and how it is affected by the sun. One instrument — an ozone detector — broke a day into the flight and hasn't worked since.

Infrared telescopes aboard the satellite have gathered more than 8 million wavelength images since astronauts dropped it off Friday, the European Space Agency said today.

The crew is to pluck the 7,500-pound satellite back out of orbit this weekend for the trip home. In the meantime, astronauts are keeping busy mostly by maneuvering the shuttle for atmospheric studies and working on several secondary experiments.

One of those includes daily checks on the pregnant rats. The rodents and 20 other control rats in a laboratory at Cape Canaveral are part of an experiment to see how weightlessness affects fetal development.

Area

The vote in Wheeler County was 1,503 for Hutchison, 555 for Fisher and 8 for Blondeau. Thornberry beat Sarpalius in the county, 1,334 to 763. Bush has 1,298 to Richards' 821 and Ehlers' 15. Bullock got 1,317 to Lezar's 742, and Morales beat Witting and Flores by a vote of 1,134 to 799 to 32.

Contested local races in the area were few. Here's a county-by-county breakdown.

CARSON COUNTY

Winning the one uncontested race for county commissioner of Precinct 4 was Republican Kevin Howell. With 348 votes, Howell defeated his Democratic opponent, incumbent Tracy Kotara, who received 312 votes.

Democrats filled the slots in the other unopposed elections in the county. They are:

• Jay R. Roselius was re-elected county judge with 1,712 votes.

• Jeannie Cunningham was elected county treasurer with 1,783 votes.

• C.F. "Choc" Smith received 505 votes for county commissioner, Precinct 2.

• W.B. "Bill" Hinson received 241 votes for justice of the peace, Precinct 1.

• For justice of the peace, Precinct 2, Phyllis Tyler received 998 votes.

• For justice of the peace, Precinct 4, Sharon Harper received 574 votes.

• Loren Brand was re-elected sheriff with 1,726 votes.

HEMPHILL COUNTY

A Republican candidate who advocates spending "only what needs to be spent in order to efficiently and economically move Hemphill County into the future" narrowly won a place on the Hemphill County commissioners court.

Republican Ed Culver garnered 165 votes to defeat Democrat Jack Vines, who received 152 votes for the Precinct 2 commissioners seat.

In the Precinct 4 commissioner's race, Republican Lee Young, who promised to "be responsible to the taxpayer," won with 183 votes to Democrat Nick Thomas' 121.

Candidates who were unopposed were:

• County Judge Bob W. Gober, a Democrat, re-elected with 955 votes.

• District/County Clerk Davene Hendershot, a Democrat, re-elected with 1,081 votes.

• County Treasurer Claudette Hand, a Republican, re-elected with 1,113 votes.

• Frankie Hill, a Democrat, elected justice of the peace with 1,090 votes.

ROBERTS COUNTY

Republicans swept all but one of six races in Roberts County.

Republican candidate for district and county clerk Donna L. Goodman received 302 votes to her Democratic challenger, Kay Gill Swart's 252.

Billie L. Lunsford won the county treasurer's job with 319 votes to Democrat Marla Benge Jackson's 239.

In the race for county commissioner, Precinct 2, Democrat Royce Bailey lost to Republican Ken Gill, 71 to 73. Candidates who were uncontested were:

• Vernon H. Cook, incumbent Democratic county judge, received 378 votes.

• James F. (Jim) Duvall, incumbent Republican county commissioner in Precinct 4 received 123 votes.

• Fanny J. Greenhouse, incumbent Republican justice of the peace received 470 votes.

WHEELER COUNTY

In the only contested local race in Wheeler County, District Clerk Sherrie Jones, a Democrat, received 1,370 votes to defeat Republican challenger Kathy Hill, who had 701 votes.

Candidates who were uncontested were all Democrats. They were:

• County Judge Wendell Morgan, who received 1,444 votes.

• County Clerk Margaret Dorman, who received 1,506 votes.

• County Treasurer Jerrie Moore, who received 1,475 votes.

• Tommy Puryear, elected to County Commissioners Court, Precinct 2, with 429 votes.

• Boyd Hiltbrunner, elected to County Commissioners Court, Precinct 4, with 365 votes.

• Doyle Ramsey, elected justice of the peace, Precinct 1, with 860 votes.

• Guy Hardin, re-elected justice of the peace, Precinct 1, with 663 votes.

Two teens charged in execution-style slayings

DALLAS (AP) — Two West Dallas teenagers have been charged with capital murder in the execution-style slayings of two 16-year-old cousins.

Antonio Saenz and Elpidio Estrada, both 17, were detained Tuesday in lieu of $500,000 bond each in the deaths of Ralph Bustos of Lancaster and Thomas Bustos of Dallas, whose bodies were found near Mountain Creek Lake.

Ralph Bustos had been shot several times with two types of weapons, including a shotgun, according to an autopsy report, and Thomas died of multiple gunshot wounds. They apparently had been dead for several days, police said.

Police were still trying to piece together the events that led from Thursday, when the Bustoses' relatives reported them missing, to Sunday, when an anonymous caller told police the boys had been "executed" at the lake and their car torched.

"We're still working on the case to see if there are more people involved," said homicide Sgt. Bobby Little of the Dallas Police.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Haiti now needs its economic freedom

Now that Haiti's former power brokers have flown the coup and a new cabinet has been sworn in, the hard work of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide — instilling democratic, pluralistic political values — will pale next to the even harder work of invigorating prosperity in that impoverished land.

What makes the establishment of economic well-being so precarious is that Aristide himself has shown little understanding of what creates wealth in an economy. Before he was toppled by a coup, he leaned toward oppressive formulas — government giveaways, a crackdown on the rich — that, in the name of sharing more resources with the poor, wound up discouraging the very kinds of business investment that could give the poor real hope. In other words, Aristide has shown the social reformer's naive weakness for "redistributing" wealth.

And President Clinton hasn't helped matters any by promising to aid in rebuilding Haiti. Oblivious to U.S. taxpayers who might ask whether we haven't already done more than enough for that tiny island nation, Clinton declared at a ceremony in Washington, "Now that the democratic government has been restored, it must be nourished."

In other words, our president is proposing to redistribute wealth, as well — that of the American taxpayers.

But, whether handouts come from Yankees abroad or from Haiti's fledgling middle class and smaller economic elite at home, they will not bring prosperity to the masses. Only freedom — foremost, economic freedom — provides the hope of accomplishing that. That means, among other things, respect for property rights of all people: no more of the rampant looting that has shuttered small shops in the Haitian capital; no punitive measures against the handful who comprise Haiti's rich. Tempting targets though they may be to Aristide's indignant legions, they also are the ones who can create new jobs, along with foreign investors who might be willing to come in.

Perhaps above all, the government must resist the urge of governments everywhere to seize the fruits of people's labors through burdensome taxation. That will only chase off badly needed foreign capital and send the negligible domestic capital overseas.

If Aristide upholds economic freedom, Haitians will thank him for generations to come.

Berry's World

Do courts belong to judges?

Three years ago, Janie Shores, associate justice of Alabama's Supreme Court, was addressing a luncheon for attorneys newly admitted to the court. "The average citizen," she told them, "doesn't even have a passing acquaintance with the Bill of Rights ... he lives his entire life without exercising any of the rights safeguarded to him by the Bill of Rights. ...

"He has never invoked his right to remain silent in the face of interrogation. He has never had the occasion to cross examine his accuser nor demand bail, nor have the right to counsel. He has never been confronted with a criminal charge nor had a public trial. ... This lack of exposure to the Bill of Rights has caused an indifference on the part of many of our citizens to due process."

During the past three years, while many citizens have remained ignorant of their rights — and therefore everybody else's — a growing number have been educated by watching, at home, actual cases in actual courtrooms. In 47 states, television cameras have been allowed in some courts; and until recently, a pilot project has permitted cameras during civil trials and appeals in eight federal courts.

In January of this year, a Times Mirror national survey showed that large numbers of viewers have watched the more publicized trials and that "regular viewing of court trial proceedings may lead to a greater appreciation of the United States court system, which has fallen out of public favor in recent years." Many regular viewers of the Court TV programs, for example, now think the courts are fairer than they did before.

There certainly has been an increase in understanding how the courts work. For years, I have been trying to interest family and friends in some of the various tributaries of due process: the exclusionary rule, reasonable doubt, probable cause to obtain a warrant, and other minefields of the justice system. Until television entered more and more courtrooms, I had not made much headway.

The pre-trial proceedings of the O.J. Simpson case have resulted in a particularly remarkable advance in many people's interest in the justice system. I have heard friends and acquaintances — who had no previous concern with the Bill of Rights — argue heatedly as to whether there was sufficient probable cause for the Los Angeles police to conduct a search of O.J. Simpson's home and grounds.

Recently, a federal judge told me of hearing, on an airplane, two passengers seated behind her exploring at length whether a jury in the Simpson case would be stymied on the question of reasonable doubt.

"It was very clear," the judge told me, "that they were not lawyers." But they had been educated in the law by television in the courtroom.

Nonetheless, in a vote behind closed doors, the United States Judicial Conference decided in September to end the pilot project that had given television access to a small number of federal courtrooms over the past three years. And this policy-making body continued a total ban on television cameras in federal criminal trials.

Yet, in early 1994, the Federal Judicial Center — the research division of the federal court system — found, after an extensive survey of the pilot project, that "judges and attorneys ... generally reported observing small or no effects of camera presence on participants in the proceedings, courtroom decorum, or the administration of justice."

Moreover, the Judicial Center recommended that "federal courts of appeals and district courts nationwide ... provide access to civil proceedings in their courtrooms."

That recommendation has now been overruled. In a letter to The New York Times, Floyd Abrams, an active authority on the First Amendment, quoted a 1980 plurality opinion by the Supreme Court that throughout American history, the openness of our courtrooms has been an "indispensable attribute" to the fairness of trials.

But when it comes to television — as Legal Times and USA Today Supreme Court reporter Tony Mauro says — many judges "believe that the courtroom is theirs — not the public's. They forget it is the public's business they are conducting."

That the Supreme Court unaccountably refuses to televise its oral arguments nurtures the ignorance of the public as to how its court of last resort works. To close off the rest of the federal courts from the citizenry further mocks the letter and spirit of constitutional democracy. There is still hope, however, Congress has the power to let the sunshine in to federal courtrooms. Who will make the first move?

If the president takes the lead, he could have significant bipartisan support in Congress — and among the public at large.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, Nov. 9, the 313th day of 1994. There are 52 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Five years ago, on Nov. 9, 1989, communist East Germany threw open its borders, allowing citizens to travel freely to the West; joyous Germans danced atop the Berlin Wall.

On this date:

In 1872, fire destroyed nearly a thousand buildings in Boston.

In 1918, Germany's Kaiser Wilhelm II announced he would abdicate. He then fled to the Netherlands.

In 1935, United Mine Workers president John L. Lewis and other labor leaders formed the Committee for Industrial Organization as part of the American Federation of Labor.

In 1938, Nazis looted and burned synagogues as well as Jewish-owned stores and houses in Germany and Austria in what became known as Kristallnacht.

Trying to discover fantasy island

You can run, but you can't hide.

Men and women, especially men, perhaps for as long as time, have yearned for a place where they could "get away from it all." We have sought a "fantasy island" where one could live happily ever after amid beauty and plenty and let the rest of the world go by.

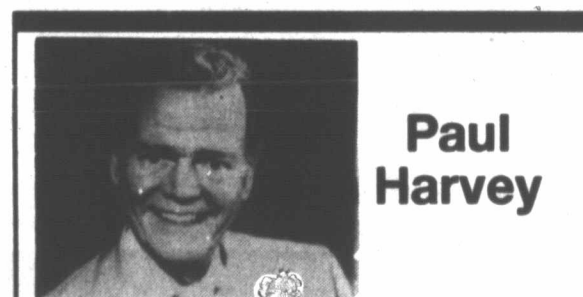

Two years ago, I journeyed to the "forbidden island" of Nihoa, downwind from the sheltering Hawaiian island of Kauai. There, I'd been told Polynesians lived as they had lived for 1,000 years undisturbed — fishing, farming and making love.

I returned disillusioned, having discovered that the islanders are kept comfortable only because they are regularly resupplied by the Robinson family on Kauai.

So the youngsters have discovered Twinkies and soda pop and diabetes and heart disease, and life expectancy is less each year.

That Eden was a disappointment.

More recently, visiting Ireland, I heard about the island of Inis Meain just outside storied Galway Bay. Playwright J.M. Synge had described life there as "perhaps the most primitive that is left in all Europe." National Geographic, in 1971, called Inis

Paul Harvey

Meain "a timeless isle that even today enjoys few modern conveniences."

I ran out of time before I could visit, and now it's too late.

Dara Milbank went for The Wall Street Journal — and returned disillusioned.

Inis Meain, for centuries, was about fishing, farming, basket weaving and storytelling around peat fires.

The mostly barren island of wind-swept limestone lacked even indigenous soil. To plant crops, inhabitants had to mix seaweed with sand.

But there were no police, there was no divorce, and islanders were protected by the sea and a small, inhospitable pier.

Then came electricity in 1978 — and television. With appetites whetted by what islanders saw on TV, running water came next — then telephones in 1987.

Then came a new pier for tourist boats and an airstrip for tourist airplanes — and past a Stone Age tomb — a tavern for tourists.

The language and the traditions are changing so fast that the uniqueness tourists come to see is scarcely there anymore.

The native population is shrinking — from 360 in 1961 to 225 now.

Traditionalists say they would rather abandon the place "than see it overrun by strangers." The formerly tarred canvas boats are now made of fiberglass. Satellite dishes beam the world onto the island. The new Land Rovers require paved roads.

With the island's headlong leap into the 20th century, Irish Gaelic is giving way to mongrelized English for the convenience of the visitors.

"Progress" has come to Inis Meain.

Dara Faherty, watching the sun go down in Galway Bay, says, "People were happier in my time."

Let's make the world safe for capitalism

"The world must be made safe for democracy." — Woodrow Wilson, 1917

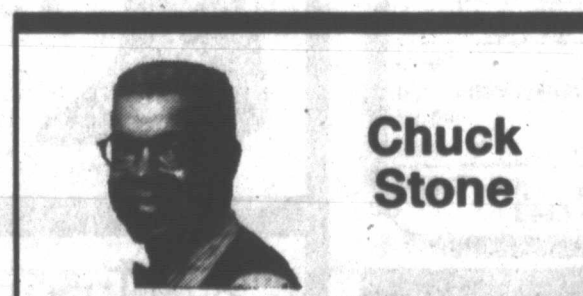

Peace is a prelude to democratic government. Democracy paves the way for a capitalistic economy. In 1994, the world is more democratic than it was in 1917, when the world in Wilson's narrow view consisted of America, Europe and Haiti. But today's world is not necessarily more capitalistic. It is, however, doing better at being peaceful.

Certainly that picture of Jordan's King Hussein lighting Israel Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's cigarette (no doubt to the delight of the tobacco companies) dramatizes how far nations have moved toward a global, peaceful co-existence.

Peace isn't an established ubiquity yet, but it's on a roll. No small energy in that process is Bill Clinton. Like Woodrow Wilson, he is using — paradoxically — America's firepower and prestige to ensure peace.

If the world has become more democratic, why hasn't it become more capitalistic? The evidence is conclusive. State-controlled economies cannot compete in productivity with free-market economies. Yet, many Third World nations still are reluctant to embrace an economic system that they link to capitalistic exploitation.

The economic superiority of a free market over a state or oligarchy-controlled economy is a painful lesson Russia has learned and South Africa recognizes. The free-market state is also a model to which Aristide-led Haiti currently aspires. America's economic interests are heavily tied to all three countries' economic success.

Chuck Stone

Clinton has not made as successful a case for propping up the democratically elected Aristide as he has in opening the U.S. treasury to Russia. South African President Nelson Mandela's recent visit dramatically underscored America's economic involvement in South Africa's future.

Along with Aristide's eloquent plea in his inaugural address for a political peace as a prelude to economic security, Mandela's equally eloquent plea for economic assistance before a joint session of Congress made the case for capitalism.

"The new world order that is in the making must focus on the creation of democracy, peace and prosperity for all humanity," Mandela said.

"The success of your entrepreneurs, and with it the capacity of your society to give work to your citizens, rests on the fact of the elevation of every person, anywhere in the world, to the position of A FREE ACTOR IN THE MARKETPLACE (my emphasis)."

"A buyer is a buyer, regardless of race or class," Mandela concluded.

That's about as close as you can get to Economics

101, a lesson that even a capitalistic America has had a hard time accepting when it comes to the economic worth of black people.

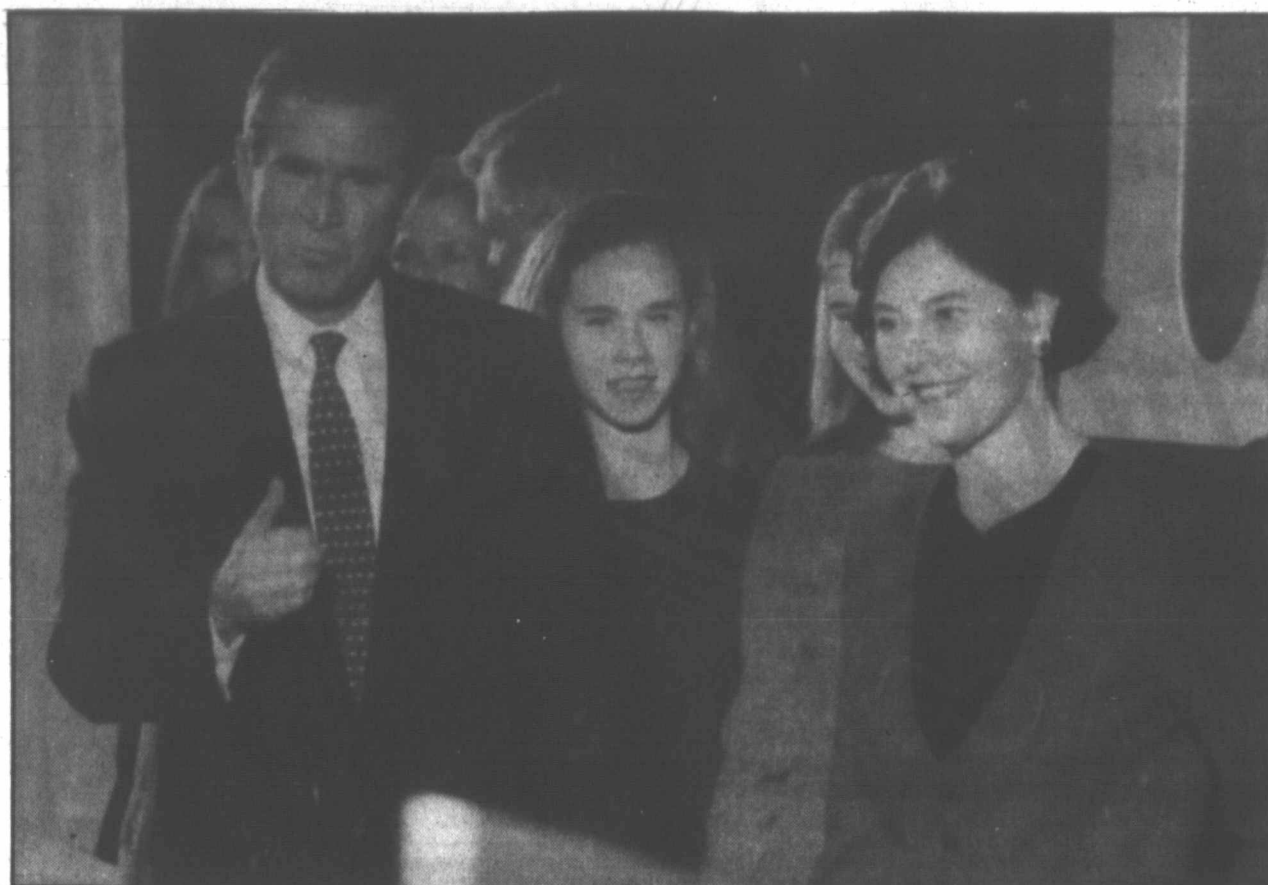

The Clinton administration has pledged almost $700 million in aid to South Africa, and reports from that country, according to The Wall Street Journal, indicate a coming together of black and white South Africans. Even so, American corporations still aren't rushing to invest in South Africa.

Haiti's economic interests may not be as globally important as South Africa's. Although U.S. occupying troops proved the United States' political commitment, Clinton pulled the economic rug from under Haiti when he reimposed textile restrictions on imports of Haitian clothing.

The naked hypocrisy of this decision typifies Clinton's vacillations. On the one hand, he campaigned vigorously for the North American Free Trade Agreement, which would lay the basis for free markets between the United States, Mexico and Canada; then he turns around and tells Haiti that it can't be a free-market partner.

To make things worse, the United States plans to spend $100 million on feeding programs for Haitians, even though previous feeding programs have almost ruined Haitian farmers.

Armed power can make the world safe for democracy. But it cannot guarantee economic prosperity. Only capitalism can. And it is time for this nation to realize that if it wants to open up more free markets for trade that will benefit the American economy, it's got to put its economic money where its political mouth is.

Bush: Texans ready for 'new generation'

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — George W. Bush says his victory over Gov. Ann Richards shows Texans want "a new generation of leadership" that will take the state in a new direction.

"What Texans can dream, Texans can do," Bush said. "I have heard from Texas ... and I hear the call of constructive change."

The eldest son of the former president will become only the second Republican governor since Reconstruction, a span of 120 years. Dallas oilman Bill Clements won the post in 1978 and 1986.

Bush, 48, said Texans responded to his promises to toughen juvenile crime laws, reduce welfare and increase local control of public schools.

"I've spent one glorious year campaigning, talking about where I want to change our state. And Texas has spoken very loudly," he said.

With nearly all the votes counted early today, Bush received about 53 percent of the vote to Richards' 46 percent. Libertarian Keary Ehlers got 1 percent.

The charismatic Richards, 61, had become one of the nation's best-known governors. She said she is proud of opening Texas government to all — marked by her appointment of blacks, Hispanics and women to many top posts.

"We had a great four years. We worked hard. We ran a good race. We have done a lot of good for Texas," Richards said.

"This is not the end of the world. It is the end of a campaign," she said.

Bush's father, who now lives in Houston, called it "a great night for Texas."

"It was a tough race, but we admire him for the way he kept the campaign focus on a positive, forward-looking message," the elder Bush said. "A year ago, people were saying well, 'You didn't have much of a chance.' But he fought the good fight and stayed on the issues and made his mother and I very, very proud."

Their $25 million race was capped by a ferocious final month in which Bush argued that Richards had failed to lead, while she called him too inexperienced to run the $35 billion-a-year state government.

From the start, Richards poked fun at her opponent, calling him a "jerk" and a "Johnny come lately."

She attacked his background in oil and other businesses. She even questioned whether his minority ownership of the Texas Rangers baseball team was enough to qualify him to be the team's managing general partner, a post he has held since the team's purchase in 1989.

Karl Rove, the Austin consultant who helped guide the Bush campaign, said the name-calling was a mistake.

"The 'jerk' comment was important because people knew for months that she was belittling him and treating him in a contemptuous fashion — calling him 'Shrub,' 'Boy George' and 'Little George.' People today want candidates and leaders who are positive and optimistic, and that was bitter and personal and negative," Rove said.

Jim Mattox, a fellow Democrat who lost the 1990 gubernatorial nomination to Richards, said the governor failed to offer Texans a forward-looking message and seemed to echo some of Bush's themes.

"I think that this campaign should have been run on Richards' personality and the 'New Texas' concept that got her elected in the beginning rather than running on these Republican issues that she ran on," Mattox said.

Texas GOP captures top of ticket

By SUSAN HIGHTOWER
Associated Press Writer

Republicans made history by capturing the top of the Texas ticket, but Democrats retained control of many other key statewide offices in this year's balloting.

For the first time since Reconstruction, the GOP on Tuesday laid claim to both U.S. Senate seats and the governorship. Republican George W. Bush, son of the former president, ousted Democratic Gov. Ann Richards, while Republican Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison handily defeated Democratic challenger Richard Fisher.

Mrs. Hutchison, who received 61 percent of the vote, serves with Republican U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, who faces his next senatorial election in 1996 and also is preparing for a run at the presidency that year.

Fisher gained 38 percent of the vote, while Libertarian candidate Pierre Bloudeau had 1 percent.

GOP chairman Tom Pauken credited the victory to a unified party and a strong effort to get out the vote.

"I think people sense that we're heading in the wrong direction and we've got to get back on the right track," Pauken said.

"I think now that it's incumbent for us to show that we're capable of governing effectively," he said. "You're going to start seeing moves to downsize and restructure state government, and I think that move is going on across the country."

Texas Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry, a Republican, was handily re-elected with 62 percent of the vote, defeating Marvin Gregory, a Democratic dairy farmer from Sulphur Springs, who had 36 percent. Libertarian candidate Clyde L. Garland had 2 percent of the vote.

Republicans swept the Texas Railroad Commission and gained control of the Texas Supreme Court.

Democrat incumbent James E. (Jim) Nugent had 48 percent of the vote for his Railroad Commission post, while his Republican opponent Charles R. Matthews won the seat with 50 percent. Libertarian candidate Rick Draheim had 2 percent.

Republican Carole Keeton Rylander nabbed the unexpired term for Railroad Commission with 52 percent. Democratic opponent Mary Scott Nabers had 45 percent, and Libertarian candidate Buster Crabb had 3 percent.

In the Supreme Court justice races, Raul A. Gonzalez, Democrat incumbent, kept his Place 1 seat with 81 percent over his Libertarian opponent John B. Hawley. In the Place 2 race, Republican Nathan L. Hecht garnered 56 percent of the vote, to win over Democratic challenger Alice Oliver Parrott. In the Place 3 spot, Republican Priscilla Owen gained 57 percent to defeat Democrat candidate Jimmy Carroll.

For Court of Criminal Appeals, Republican Steve Mansfield ousted incumbent Democrat Charles F. Campbell with 54 percent of the vote for the Place 1 post. In the Place 2 race, Republican Sharon Keller snagged 54 percent of the vote to down Democrat Betty Marshall.

The GOP also gained some ground in Congress and the state Senate, as at least two incumbent Democrats lost: U.S. Rep. Bill Sarpalius of Amarillo and state Sen. Carl Parker of Port Arthur, who had become one of the state's most powerful lawmakers after 31 years in the Legislature.

But Democrats retained several major statewide posts. Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, with 61 percent of the vote, easily defeated Republican Tex Lezar for his second four-year term. The lieutenant governor presides over the Senate and is arguably the most powerful politician in Texas.

After trailing in early returns, Democratic Texas Attorney General Dan Morales, with 54 percent of the vote, pulled ahead of Republican challenger Don Wittig, with 43 percent, to win his second term in office. Libertarian candidate Vicki Flores had 3 percent.

Democratic Comptroller John Sharp, with 55 percent of the ballots, also handily bested his GOP challenger, political newcomer Teresa Doggett.

Democrat Garry Mauro kept his land commissioner post with 50 percent of the vote, turning back Republican Marta Greytak's challenge. Greytak had 47 percent, while Libertarian candidate David C. Chow had 3 percent of the vote.

And Democratic Treasurer Martha Whitehead squeaked by GOP challenger David Hartman to keep an office that she argued eventually should be abolished.

Texas Democratic Party spokesman Joe Cutbirth said the results reflect a trend toward growing voter independence.

"I think you saw a well-organized effort at the national level by the Republican radical right, and unfortunately I think it had some spillover into Texas," Cutbirth said.

"I think obviously party labels perhaps were not as important as they'd been in the past, and many well-known, well-respected Democrats were re-elected," he said.

Girl pulling prank accidentally killed by her father

WEST MONROE, La. (AP) — Fourteen-year-old Matilda Kaye Crabtree was hiding in a closet, playing burglar. Her father, who didn't know she was home, pulled open the door with gun drawn.

"She went, 'Boo!' and that scared him," said Stacy Redding, who crouched with her friend in the closet, and then watched as Robert Crabtree fatally shot his daughter in the neck.

Kaye's last words to her father: "I love you, Daddy."

Stacy, who was not injured, said Kaye's father was devastated.

Crabtree, 53, has not been charged with any crime. Ouachita Parish Chief Deputy Richard Fewell said it was "a pure accident."

Kaye was pronounced dead Sunday afternoon. She was supposed to be staying at Stacy's house on Saturday night, but the two changed their minds and went to Kaye's instead.

When Kaye heard her parents drive up at around 1 a.m., "me and her went into the closet," Stacy said, "tapping the walls and stuff" as though someone had broken into the house and was trying to hide.

Serve spiced cranberry tart instead of pie

Cranberry spiced tart is a sweet-tart alternative to the traditional Thanksgiving pie. (AP photo/National Dairy Board)

By The Associated Press

Cranberry spiced tart is very much like a Linzer tart — but with a cranberry filling instead of a raspberry one. The tartness of the cranberry is sweetened with sugar. The filling is wrapped in a cinnamon and almond-scented pastry.

Cranberry Spiced Tart

- 1 1/4 cups flour
- 3/4 cup finely chopped almonds
- 2 cups sugar
- 1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- Pinch ground cloves
- 2 egg yolks
- 1/4 teaspoon almond extract
- 1 1/2 sticks (3/4 cup) butter, softened
- Two 12-ounce packages fresh cranberries (6 cups)
- 1/4 cup cold water
- 1/2 stick (1/4 cup) butter, cut into 4 pieces

To prepare crust: In a large bowl of an electric mixer, combine flour, almonds, 1/4 cup of the sugar, cinnamon and cloves. On medium speed, beat in egg yolks and almond extract until just blended. Add butter: mix just until butter is combined, about 2 minutes.

On lightly floured surface, shape dough into a flattened round. In a 9- or 10-inch tart pan with removable bottom or 9-inch pie plate, place dough; press into bottom and sides. (Dough should be 1/4-inch thick. Refrigerate until firm, about 1 hour.) Using reserved dough, cut into 8 equal portions. On a lightly floured surface, using floured hands, roll each piece into a 10-inch long, 1/4-inch thick rope; roll each piece onto a flat baking sheet. Refrigerate covered with plastic wrap until firm, about 1 hour.

To prepare filling: Meanwhile, in a large, nonreactive saucepan, combine cranberries, remaining 1 3/4 cups sugar and 1/4 cup water. Over medium-high heat bring to a boil; reduce heat to medium-low. Simmer until cranberries are soft, about 15 minutes. Add butter, stirring until melted. Cool to room temperature.

To assemble tart: Preheat oven to 350 degrees F. Fill reserved pastry-lined tart pan with cooled cranberry mixture. Arrange reserved four pastry ropes across pie space evenly; place four remaining pastry ropes across pie in opposite direction forming a lattice pattern. Bake in a 350-degree F oven until pastry is golden and filling is bubbling, 30 to 40 minutes. Serve at room temperature. Makes 8 servings.

Turkey noodle casserole — a delicious way to use leftovers

By The Associated Press

Although only crumbs remain of the pumpkin pie, and the candied yams are just a sweet memory, there's almost sure to be an abundance of leftover Thanksgiving turkey.

Mediterranean noodle turkey casserole combines leftover turkey with roasted red peppers, artichoke hearts, mozzarella cheese, olives and noodles. The casserole can be frozen for later use.

Mediterranean Noodle Turkey Casserole

- 1 pound medium egg noodles, uncooked
 - 14 1/2-ounce can low-sodium chicken broth
 - 1 cup skim milk
 - 1 teaspoon salt
 - 1/4 cup cornstarch
 - 2 cups chopped, cooked turkey
 - 14-ounce can artichoke hearts, drained and quartered
 - 17 1/2-ounce jar roasted red peppers, drained and sliced
 - 9 Calamata olives, pitted and sliced
 - 1/2 cup grated part-skim mozzarella cheese
 - 1/2 cup white wine
 - 1 teaspoon lemon juice
 - 1/2 teaspoon black pepper
 - Vegetable oil cooking spray
 - 2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese
- Prepare noodles according to package directions. Drain. Stir the broth, milk, salt and cornstarch together in a large pot or Dutch oven until the cornstarch is dissolved. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until thickened and bubbly. Stir in noodles, turkey, artichoke hearts, red peppers, olives, mozzarella cheese, wine, lemon juice and black pepper.

Spray a 3-quart baking dish with cooking spray. Spoon noodle mixture into dish. Sprinkle with Parmesan cheese. Bake in a 350-degree F oven until bubbling around the edges, about 35 minutes. Let stand 5 minutes before serving. Makes 8 servings.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have been reading your column forever, it seems, and I must comment on a topic I've seen several times: bad teeth. You suggested that one reason people don't see a dentist is fear. This may be true, but there is also another reason — money. In my case, I have no dental insurance, and I can't afford dental care.

At my age (I am 28), my fillings are falling out. I needed four root canals (at $500 each), but I avoided them by waiting for the pain in my mouth to outweigh the pain in my wallet. I finally decided to have the teeth pulled (at about $100) each.

As you said, "A person's general health is threatened if his (or her) teeth are rotting." Therefore, I don't understand why dental needs are not covered by health insurance.

Until they are, I'll have to wait and pray that this great nation of ours will arrive at a plausible health reform that will provide dental care for everyone.

WAITING FOR DENTURES
IN BOSTON

DEAR WAITING: Dental insurance may not be as expensive as you think. You may find it would have cost you less than the extractions.

In the interest of your health, try to squeeze dental insurance into your budget, and make some phone calls to find a dentist who will allow you to pay on the installment plan.

DEAR ABBY: I was very moved by the letter from the Utah mother who lost her son, Adam, in an incident involving a toy.

On March 10, 1994, I became chairman of the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC). Our mission is to protect the public from unreasonable risk of injury from consumer products. This includes most of the products found in the home, especially children's products. Since March, I have worked to revitalize this small but important federal agency to address product hazards quickly and effectively. I work personally with my staff to make sure that every complaint is thoroughly investigated.

I have telephoned parents whose children have been killed by consumer products. We have wept together, then worked at finding solutions so that other children will not die tragically.

Abby, please tell your readers that if they have problems in the area of product safety, or want information about consumer products, the Consumer Product Safety Commission is here to help them. Our toll-free hotline is available 24 hours a day with both English and Spanish-speaking operators. Our number is 1-800-638-2772.

Thank you for getting the word out that a small government agency can make a difference in people's lives.

ANN BROWN, CHAIRMAN,
U.S. CONSUMER PRODUCT
SAFETY COMMISSION

DEAR MRS. BROWN: Thank you for your informative letter and for your commitment to this important task.

It has been brought to my attention that immediately after reading the letter from Adam's mother, you telephoned her.

The best of luck to you as chairman of this "small but important" federal agency. Protecting the American consumer is an awesome responsibility, and your dedication will surely result in fewer injuries and deaths caused by unsafe products.

Flying hospital provides hope for the blind

By POPULAR MECHANICS
A Hearst Magazine
For AP Special Features

A new flying hospital provides hope for the more than 42 million people in the world who are blind.

For most of those people, William Garvey wrote in an article in the current issue of Popular Mechanics, proper treatment can cure their blindness or could have prevented it. Ninety percent of the world's blind live in developing countries where eye-care services lag behind those in richer nations.

Enter Orbis, an eye-care teaching hospital on wings. A nonprofit operation dedicated to fighting blindness worldwide, Orbis travels to virtually any country whose ophthalmological society extends it an invitation.

The aircraft carries a full complement of staff doctors, nurses and technicians, as well as a revolving group of practicing ophthalmologists. During each three-week mission, the volunteer faculty provides hands-on instruction to the local medical community.

Orbis began in 1982 with a converted DC-8 donated by United Airlines. In a dozen years, it provided training for 28,000 doctors and nurses and restored the sight of 18,000 patients in 70 countries.

The plane, which became the oldest DC-8 in operation, has been succeeded by a McDonnell Douglas DC-10. It contains highly advanced, supersensitive devices yet is virtually self-sufficient, able to function in the most desolate places.

The $14 million purchase price of the DC-10 was covered by donations from FlightSafety International founder and Orbis unpaid chairman A.L. Ueltschi, Hong Kong businessman Y.C. Ho and one anonymous contributor. To keep flying, Orbis depends exclusively on donations of money, material, services and time.

The $10 million Orbis conversion — for which the Orbis International organization is still raising money — emerged last spring at Mobile Aerospace Engineering in Alabama.

The passenger cabin is actually a high-tech interactive classroom. Up front lies a presentation area for large-screen film, slide or chalkboard visuals. To record lectures, video cameras stud the cabin's walls. In addition, several TV monitors provide for live and taped broadcasts. While the monitors show an ongoing eye operation, the seated attendees can use the cabin's microphones to converse with the surgeons.

Immediately aft of the classroom is the audiovisual room where Orbis personnel monitor and direct the aircraft's 17 cameras. The staff has created a library of more than 150 videotapes on eye surgery and treatment.

Continuing aft along the single port-side aisle, you next encounter the laser-exam room where physicians can diagnose diseases such as cataracts, trachoma, glaucoma and river blindness. Doctors can treat disorders using argon, YAG and solid-state lasers. As in all the rooms aboard the aircraft, video cameras transmit procedures to the classroom.

At the rear of the aircraft, a doorway on the left opens into a room with three gurney beds. Each is surrounded with heart/blood pressure/temperature monitors, intravenous trees, oxygen ports and similar postoperative patient gear.

This is the recovery room where patients are prepped for surgery. Then the gurneys wheel forward through swinging doors into the sterile area, where medicines are prepared, surgical utensils are sterilized and doctors scrub. Continue forward and more swinging doors lead into the operating room, planted between the wings — the most stable part of the aircraft.

At the center of the room is a Zeiss operating microscope employed for such procedures as corneal transplants. Picture windows permit VIPs and others to view the medical procedures from outside the operating theater.

In the cargo hold are three diesel generators — two for electricity and one of air conditioning — which deploy on the ground when necessary. The aircraft, according to Popular Mechanics, also can plug into any local power source.

Tom Brown, left, Alco Store manager, presents two-year-old Nikita Worley and her mother Kristy with a $25 Alco gift certificate. Nikita was the winner out of 42 entrants who were in Alco's Cute Baby Contest that was held throughout the month of October. The contest raised $215.28 and went towards the Pampa United Way. Proper handling of beef can help eliminate E. coli bacteria

As the people of Perryton recently discovered, E. coli is a sometimes deadly bacteria that lives in the nation's beef supply. It can strike anywhere at any time, or anybody.

With this in mind, the Allison Future Farmers of American chapter would like to pass on these cooking tips to make sure your family is protected from E. coli: 1. Cook all beef to at least 155 degrees; 2. Cook beef until juices run clear and not bloody; 3. Make sure beef is cooked all the way through; 4. Never eat beef cooked rare or medium rare; and 5. Clean preparation surface with a bleached based cleaner.

By following these guidelines, you can protect your family from this very dangerous bacteria.

Silents, please

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — This city on Cayuga Lake once rivaled Hollywood as a movie-making center.

In the silent film era, Ithaca was a favored location for film crews because of its romantic scenery, steep canyons and gorges, hills and waterfalls. Many episodes of the popular serial, "The Perils of Pauline," were shot here.

Four easy pieces

NEW YORK (AP) — The company is Belly Basics, and the product is the Pregnancy Survival Kit.

Actually, it's four pieces of cotton and Lycra clothing in a box: a baby-doll dress, a tunic, a little skirt and leggings. They're all black and retail for a total of $150. The women who conceived the kit say all you have to do is add a few pieces from your closet — and a few from your spouse's — and your maternity wardrobe is complete.

The kit, complete with instructions for accessorizing, is available at department and specialty stores — and maternity shops — nationwide.

Memories of retiree's adolescent love for older woman becomes prize winning story

By KAREN MILLS
Associated Press Writer

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — For more than 60 years, Ben Levin kept the memories bottled up, telling no one of his infatuation with the beautiful Ursula and how he believed his prayers may have resulted in her death.

When Levin was finally able to tell of his adolescent love of an older woman, the story of that first love and her probable death in a Nazi concentration camp won the $2,500 first prize in the national "Legacies" writing contest for seniors.

"It didn't come easy. It was sort of painful, even after all these years," said Levin, 79, of St. Paul and Gulfport, Fla.

In his story, "A Prayer Too Far," Levin tells of Ursula, a Jewish immigrant from Germany who lived as a boarder at his aunt's home in the early 1930s.

Levin was living in Baltimore at the time Ursula stayed with his aunt. He lived across the street but took meals at his aunt's home because his mother had died.

The well-traveled woman gave him private German language lessons and brought the European continent alive for him with her stories of Paris, London and the Swiss Alps.

The tall, skinny Jewish kid of 15, son of Russian immigrants, was captivated by the sophisticated woman in her 20s.

The idyllic existence was soon disrupted, however, by Levin's 30-year-old cousin, a brash, flashy rent collector, car repossessor and merchant with a bank account and a new car.

The cousin began wooing Ursula and soon they were engaged.

Levin began to pray that Ursula would recognize his cousin as a con man. After a few weeks, Ursula broke off the engagement. A month later, she returned to Germany to care for her sick father.

"We received one or two letters — then silence. The rest of the decade played out. Kristallnacht. The camps. The six million. Eventually the war was over," Levin recounts in his story.

He was able to find out that Ursula had been arrested. Nothing more.

Levin's cousin married another woman, treats her decently and is adored by his children.

"Thinking back, if I had not prayed so hard, how bad would it have been?" Levin says at the end of his story.

Levin said he had never told his wife, Bette, or their three children about Ursula. They didn't know until he read his story to them.

Levin has been writing since he was in high school, but didn't do a lot until after he retired from a career as a pharmacist about 15 years ago.

"I pushed drugs for 50 years before I turned to poetry," he said.

Simplicity is one key to writing a good short story, Levin said.

"If you're not Tolstoy, you'd better keep it simple. And clarity. And striking an interesting note right at the beginning," he said.

To develop a good story, Levin advises new writers to "read, read and read. The more you read the more you absorb."

In the past few years, Levin has won the Golden Pen Award for writers over 55 in his native Maryland, first prize in the Beaux Arts writing contest in St. Petersburg, Fla., and first prize in the 1990 Baltimore Writer's Alliance Annual Poetry Competition. His poetry and prose writings have appeared in more than 30 publications.

Levin was named winner of the second annual "Legacies" contest in July. The free contest for people over 60, sponsored by the Leibovitz Foundation of New York, drew 12,000 entries.

Entrants were asked to write brief, true stories about their lives to create memories so the wisdom of older people will not be forgotten, according to Linda Solomon, project director.

Because of the contest's popularity, rules are being changed slightly for 1995. Local individuals, groups, homeowners associations and senior centers are being asked to sponsor their own contests, with only local winners becoming eligible for national awards.

The deadline for the next contest is Sept. 30, 1995.

* EDITOR'S NOTE: "Legacies" will provide workbooks for anyone who wants to sponsor a local contest. For information call (212) 439-5914 or write Legacies, 163 Amsterdam Ave., Box 107, New York, NY 10023.

I've heard these little voices in my head singing "It's a Small World After All" for so long now that I think it's a permanent condition.

Nonsense, Andrew. All you need is a little audio brain surgery.

Audio brain surgery?

Sure. I picked some traditional rock music to use as scalpels. Aerosmith, Van Halen, the Stones.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) It might not be easy for you and your mate to tolerate each other's shortcomings today. Be careful: You may be walking on eggshells. Trying to patch up a broken romance? The Astro-Graph Matchmaker can help you to understand what to do to make the relationship work. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, P.O. Box 4465, New York, NY 10163.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Your patience might be tested today on an endeavor you thought would be easy. The penalty for poor judgment may be stiff today.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) There is no reason to feel obligated to follow the crowd today. Don't waste money on something you don't enjoy just to be part of the herd.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Your goals will be within reach today, but only after you maneuver around a few obstacles in your path.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Avoid discussions today with individuals whose views diametrically oppose yours. An argument could ensue about politics or religion.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Make it a point today to respect the privacy of your friends and maintain a little distance. A serious mishap could result from touching a raw nerve.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Today you may have unexpected difficulty in a close relationship. Diplomacy and tact will be required at all times.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Take good care of yourself today. Avoid things you know you shouldn't eat or drink. And if you're lifting something heavy, get a strong helper.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If someone you barely know promises you a big favor today, take it with a grain of salt. Be realistic in your expectations.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) This might be one of those days when distractions keep you from finishing your work. Don't get impatient with people, though, when circumstances are to blame.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You are usually tactful with others and seldom say offensive things. Today's comments, however, might not come out of your mouth sugarcoated.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) If you don't exercise self-discipline today, your extravagance will spiral out of hand. It won't be long before you feel too guilty to enjoy the fruits of such sprees.

Fullback Fred Goad scored Wheeler's touchdown. Both teams have 5-4 records.

CLARIFICATION

PAMPA — In a story about the Pampa swim teams on page 7 of The Pampa News Tuesday, two paragraphs in the story were reversed, changing the meaning of the story.

The results listed are from the Abilene Invitational and not from a dual meet with Caprock and Tascosa, which has not been held yet. The dual meet will be held Thursday at the Pampa Youth Center, starting at 4 p.m. The Pampa boys meet Tascosa and the Pampa girls meet Caprock.

BORGER HOOP SHOOT

BORGER — The Borger Elks Lodge will have its 23rd annual Hoop Shoot free throw shooting contest Saturday, beginning at 9 a.m. in the Tex Hanna Gym on the Borger High School campus.

The three age divisions are 8-9 years, 10-11 years and 12-13 years.

For further information, call Don McKinney at 273-7927 after 6:30 p.m.

COOPER STUMPED

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — John Cooper's stumped by his team's inability to get off to a good start in road games.

"I can't put my finger on it," the Ohio State coach said. "We're not the veteran team we were a year ago. In fact, we have new starters. Maybe that's a part of it."

The Buckeyes (7-3) and tied for second in the Big Ten at 4-2, have split four road games and won another at a neutral site.

But a deeper look reveals deeper problems. The last four times that Ohio State has gone away from home — as it will Saturday against Indiana — it has been outscored 73-3 in the first half. Penn State did most of the damage taking a 35-0 halftime lead against the Buckeyes en route to a 63-14 rout Oct. 29.

Cooper said he does not believe the problem lies in preparation.

"We'd love to go out there and score on our first drive against everybody we play," Cooper said. "We're doing the same things we've been doing since I've coached here: Working out here Friday, leaving on Friday night, eating the same pregame meal, having snacks, going through the same routine."

Ohio State has come back to outscore its opponents 67-37 in the second half, but Cooper points out that the early deficit changes the game plan and puts additional pressure on his team.

Ohio State is not a slow starter at home. The Buckeyes have outscored their last four home opponents 97-10 in the opening two quarters.

While Indiana (5-4, 2-4) has lost three in a row, Ohio State recovered from the lashing at Penn State to beat Wisconsin 24-3 last week.

Asked which Ohio State team would show up to play Indiana, Cooper said, "I would hope it's the team that played last week. But I can't guarantee you that."

PATERNO'S GOAL

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — One of Joe Paterno's main goals when Penn State joined the Big Ten was to go to the Rose Bowl, where the Nittany Lions have not played since 1923.

No. 2 Penn State (8-0) is close to achieving that goal in its second season in the conference, but the Big Ten's contract with the Rose Bowl could cost the team a shot at the national title.

The Nittany Lions could go 12-0 and still have trouble convincing pollsters they deserve a national title because none of their regular season opponents is currently in the top 15.

Each of the potential Pac-10 Rose Bowl representatives has at least two losses. No Rose Bowl winner has been ranked No. 1 by The Associated Press since Southern Cal in 1972, and no Big Ten team has won the AP title since Ohio State in 1968.

"I wouldn't say getting pigeonholed into the Rose Bowl is the worst thing that could happen to you," Paterno said Tuesday. "I'd like to be around some of those pigeons."

Penn State would clinch a Rose Bowl berth with a win Saturday at Illinois (6-3), making Paterno the fourth coach to take a team to the four traditional major bowl games: the Rose, Cotton, Orange and Sugar.

Paterno also has a chance to coach his fifth undefeated and untied team. Three of those teams did not win national titles.

"We have not really talked to the team about bowls or polls," Paterno said. "We'd like to take each game as it comes, and we're playing a tough Illinois team this week."

As an independent in 1986 and 1982, Penn State was able to play the No. 1 team in a bowl game and win the title. This year, the team's second season in the conference, Penn State won't have that mobility.

"I don't think you ever get anything for nothing in life," Paterno said. "When we moved into the Big Ten conference, we were aware that there were a lot of positives and there might be a negative included, which is true with every conference in the country."

Several teams are in position to beat Penn State for the title. No. 1 Nebraska has no remaining ranked opponents and appears headed to an Orange Bowl matchup with No. 5 Miami. No. 6 Alabama would also be in the national title hunt if the Crimson Tide beats No. 3 Auburn. No. 4 Florida and wins the Sugar Bowl, probably against No. 7 Florida State.

Nebraska is locked into the Orange Bowl as Big Eight champion, and the Southeastern Conference champ must go to the Sugar Bowl.

"There will be some other people — such as Alabama maybe — that will be undefeated, and I'm sure they're not sorry they're in the Southeastern Conference even though they might have some of the same problems we have," Paterno said.

Four injured defensive players will miss the Illinois game, Paterno announced. Tackles Eric Clair and Vin Stewart have bad feet, while safety Clint Holes and cornerback Mark Tate both have sprained knees.

Borger turns football program around

Just two years ago, Borger had suffered through a winless football season. Two years later, Borger is just one win away from advancing to the post-season playoffs. What happened to turn the program around?

"I think it's a combination of a lot of things. We've had the support of the community and the administration and the kids have worked hard and set some goals," said Marty McClintock, who is in his second season as Borger head coach.

Borger can achieve one of those goals — a playoff seed — by beating Pampa in the final game of the regular season at 7:30 p.m. Friday night in Harvester Stadium.

The Bulldogs are 7-2 for the season and have won four of five District 1-4A outings. Their only loss was a narrow 6-3 decision to Randall, which has already clinched one of the two playoff seeds. Standing in Borger's way is Pampa, which is 4-0-1 in district and 7-1-1 for the season.

"I think Pampa is by far the best team in our district. Their defense is not only the best in the district, but its among the top five in the state. I think they're very deserving of that honor," McClintock said.

While Pampa has the No. 1 defense, it's Borger that has the No. 1 offense. The Bulldogs have piled up some big numbers by using a balanced attack.

"The statistics speak for themselves. But we don't go out and say we're going to run the ball x number of times or pass x number of times. We just take what the defense gives us, which probably won't be very much against Pampa," McClintock said.

Borger's offense, which is averaging 377.9 yards and 30 points per game, is sparked by junior quarterback Toby Guest and junior tailback Cornell Jones. Guest has passed for 1,542 yards and 14 touchdowns and leads the district in both categories. Jones has rushed for 1,091 yards and scored 13 touchdowns.

Pampa gymnasts win district all-around title

Team members from Gymnastics of Pampa recently competed in the District I Championships at the Big Spring YMCA. The gymnasts brought home a District All-Around title and qualified four team members for the North State Championships.

Chrissy Norris remains undefeated in Level 7 competition, the highest level at the Championships. She is the 1994 District All-Around Champion. Chrissy won three of the four events to take the All-Around. Chrissy placed first on vault (9.15), first on bars (8.45), first on beam (8.7), second on floor exercises (8.9) and first in All-Around (35.20). She will compete at the Level 7 North State Semifinals on Nov. 20.

In Level 5, ages 12 and older competition, Tish Smith won the District Championships on bars and floor exercises and Shannon Craig won on beam. Tish placed first on bars (9.6), first on floor exercise (9.25), second (tie) on beam (9.0), 11th on vault (7.9) and second in All-Around (35.75). She was only .10 of a point out of first in All-Around. Shannon placed first on beam (9.25), third on floor exercise (9.1), fourth on bars (9.3), ninth on vault (8.0) and third in All-Around (35.65).

The gymnasts will compete at the North State Semi-Finals at Richardson on Nov. 12.

Also, Abby Cavalier qualified for semi-finals at Richardson by placing second in All-Around in Level 5, 9-year-old competition. Abby won the District Championships on floor exercise with a 9.25 score. She also placed second on vault (7.9) seventh on beam (8.3), ninth on bars (8.55) and second in All-Around (34.00). Abby lost the All-Around title by only .05.

Teryn Stowers also competed in the 9-year-old Level 5 competition at the Championships. She just missed qualifying for North State and placed eighth on bars (8.6), tenth on beam (8.0) and tenth on floor (8.8).

At the North State Championships, the gymnasts try and qualify for the State Championships to be held in December.

Cowboys receive good news from medical staff

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys got good news from their medical staff on Tuesday: injuries suffered by wide receiver Alvin Harper and offensive lineman Derek Kennard weren't as bad as earlier feared.

Harper, who landed awkwardly trying to catch a pass as the half ended in Monday night's 38-10 victory over the New York Giants, was thought to have torn a left knee ligament. Owner Jerry Jones said he was worried Harper was gone for the season.

However, an MRI examination on Tuesday showed a sprain to the outside ligament of the knee. Harper was listed as doubtful for Sunday's game in San Francisco, but it wasn't a season-ending injury.

"I'm thrilled," said quarterback Troy Aikman. "It's the first good injury news we've had around here in a long time. There's no question there was a big sigh of relief around here."

Harper was on crutches and the Cowboys will work with rookies Cory Fleming and Willie Jackson this week in preparing for the 49ers.

"This is a very positive development," said Dallas coach Barry Switzer. "It's just the opposite of what the doctors told me last night. We think now that Alvin will be back soon, maybe this week. Maybe we can put Oral Roberts out there on the tower and get Alvin healed."

Harper was the Cowboys' best receiver this year. He caught a touchdown pass against the Giants, his sixth of the season, a career high.

"Alvin has been just great and we need him," Switzer said. "He's such a great leaper, you can just toss the ball up to him."

The news regarding the sprained toe received by Kennard was also promising.

Switzer said "Kennard was better this morning. I was thinking everything for the worst possible situations last night. We hope he can play."

Dallas also could get tight end Jay Novacek back for the 49ers. Novacek, bothered by a strained abdominal muscle, has only held for extra points and field goals in the last two games.

"We hope Jay can play this week," Switzer said.

Aikman said "It helps to have Jay in the game, particularly on third down. I have a lot of confidence he'll get open and I look for him."

The Cowboys go into the game with the 49ers with an 8-1 record, best in the NFL. They have defeated San Francisco in the last two NFC championship games.

"It's a big game for both teams," Aikman said. "I don't think it is any more important than the other 15 we play. It could have some homefield advantage significance later in the year. Beyond that it's not any more important."

Klingler's future uncertain at Cincy

CINCINNATI (AP) — Now that Jeff Blake has caught the Cincinnati Bengals' imagination, what happens to David Klingler?

Klingler, the sixth player chosen in the 1992 draft, has at least temporarily lost the starting quarterback job to Blake, the 166th player taken in the same draft.

Even though Klingler would like to try to play with a sore knee, coach Dave Shula has announced Blake as the starter again Sunday against Houston. It will be the third consecutive start for Blake, who led the Bengals to their first win last Sunday in Seattle.

And there's no indication when Klingler might get his job back. Shula plans to decide his starter on a week to week basis, taking into account how well the team does with Blake at quarterback.

Is it possible that the Bengals, who thought they were set at quarterback when they drafted Klingler, are having second thoughts? Klingler's agent doesn't think so.

"To be direct, David's understanding is he's still the quarterback of the Cincinnati Bengals and the development of the other quarterbacks around him is not a threat to him," agent Leigh Steinberg said Tuesday.

Time running out on saving NHL season

TORONTO (AP) — With time running out on saving the NHL season, negotiators are going back to the bargaining table, and another top player is going to Europe.

NHL commissioner Gary Bettman and union boss Bob Goodenow have scheduled another meeting Thursday in hopes of breaking the stalemate in contract talks.

It will be the first time since Oct. 4-5 that the prime negotiators in the collective bargaining talks have met face-to-face twice in a week. The two met for seven hours Monday in New York.

"Nothing from my perspective has changed. I'm still optimistic that something is going to get done," said Philadelphia Flyers general manager Bobby Clarke, who attended Monday's session.

Clarke told the Philadelphia News he planned to attend Thursday's meeting at a site yet to be determined.

While the sides didn't make any announcement, an agent, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said Tuesday the parties agreed to go back to the table Thursday. The fact that the talks will continue, the agent said, is encouraging.

On Monday night, the NHL sent a fax to league officials with an update on the negotiations. The Canadian Press reported. The fax, a copy of which was read to the CP, covered three areas touched on at Monday's talks:

— The NHL made it clear the Aug. 1 rollbacks would be fully restored in a deal. But that is not new because Bettman has repeatedly stated that intention to restore benefits.

— The NHL reconfirmed that players would continue to receive guaranteed contracts unless they were highly compensated ($1 million or more) or were unrestricted free agents.

— The NHL said it was waiting to hear from the union about putting in place a system for disclosing each team's finances. The NHL attached a letter sent to Goodenow from NHL general counsel Jeffrey Pash in late October that proposed the season start while an audit was being conducted. The offer was rejected.

The lockout, in its 40th day, already has led the league to cancel 14 games from each team's schedule. A total of 218 scheduled games have been missed.

Meanwhile, Toronto Maple Leafs captain Doug Gilmour said he's leaving Sunday to play in Switzerland. Gilmour will join Rapperswil-Jona in the Swiss League.

"Maybe we'll be called back in a week and this will be like a training camp for me," Gilmour said. "I'm trying to be optimistic. We'll be back soon."

Until then, fans will have to be content with charity exhibition games. The NHL Players Association has organized a four-team tournament starting Thursday in Hamilton, Ontario, with proceeds going to Ronald McDonald children's charities. There's also been talk of a three-week, six-team league based in non-NHL cities. That league would be organized by the NHLPA if the season is canceled.

Players representing Quebec, Ontario, Western Canada and the United States will compete Thursday through Saturday in Hamilton, Ontario. The game will feature sides of four players competing in running-time periods. In-game penalties will be replaced by postgame penalty shots.

Gilmour, New York Rangers goaltender Glenn Healy and an NHLPA employee were the only players at Tuesday's optional practice for the tournament.

Some players, such as Los Angeles defenseman Rob Blake, were in Ottawa to compete in an exhibition game Tuesday night between NHL players and the Ontario Hockey League's Ottawa 67s to raise money for the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario.

Some young players have criticized their older teammates for going to Europe. Gilmour, who is donating his salary of about $1,000 a week to the NHLPA, says that at age 31 he needs to play to maintain his skills.

"The guys who are younger have a lot of years left," Gilmour said. "I've only got four or five years to look forward to."

Robb survives North challenge

By ANNE GEARAN
Associated Press Writer

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — After a ferocious, acrimonious race focusing on which former Marine had committed the greater dishonor, Democratic Sen. Charles Robb emerged the victor over Oliver North.

With 99 percent of the unofficial vote in, Robb led the Republican challenger by more than 50,000 votes, 46 percent to 43 percent. Independent-turned-Republican Marshall Coleman, who many North supporters blamed for siphoning off North votes, had 11 percent.

"They wanted to stick with somebody who they knew," Robb said of voters.

Robb, scarred by alleged extramarital affairs and parties with drug figures, had battled fiercely against North, who seven years ago stood before Congress and admitted lying about his role in the Iran-Contra arms-for-hostages scandal.

But despite a flood of GOP victories nationwide, Robb's tattered image and his ties to President Clinton — North attacked him for voting with the president 95 percent of the time in 1993 — North's bid for political redemption fell short.

Texas voters set turnout record

By STEFANI G. KOPENEC
Associated Press Writer

Voters who flocked to the polls to elect a new governor and cast ballots in dozens of races apparently did so in record numbers.

Mark Bell, a spokesman for Secretary of State Ron Kirk, predicted early today that the final turnout would be 52 percent of the state's 8.6 million registered voters, the highest turnout in an off-year election in the last 20 years.

"Fifty-two percent is realistic," Bell said with nearly all precincts reporting. "It certainly would be safe to say that 51 or 52 percent would be the highest in (a gubernatorial election in) the last 20 years."

The figure is down from the estimated 55 percent Kirk forecast based on early balloting, but Bell wasn't disappointed.

"From all indications, from what we were hearing throughout the day, people were voting and going to the polls ... The weather was great," he said. "At this point, I really don't think we have an analysis why it turned out to be 52 percent. It's still good."

At 52 percent, 4.4 million people would have voted, Bell said. In early voting, which ran from Oct. 19 through Friday, Kirk's office said that in the 15 largest counties, 796,165 Texans or 15.3 percent of voters, cast ballots during that period.

On Tuesday, Texans went to vote encouraged by mild weather and the excitement of what was expected to be a close race between Gov. Ann Richards and Republican George W. Bush.

The state was virtually rain free, except a little light rain in El Paso and along the Texas-New Mexico border, according to Bob Kleyla at the National Weather Service in Fort Worth.

Lubbock County Clerk Ann Davidson said turnout Tuesday was "fast and furious."

"Everything seems to be busy. We have had lots of calls. ... It sounds like a lot of people are coming out to vote," she said.

Angry electorate puts Republicans in charge

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

Republican congressional leaders and the Clinton White House struck a tone of tenuous accommodation today after the American people put the Republicans in charge of both the House and Senate for the first time since Eisenhower's day.

Two years after President Clinton took office, the Democrats were targeted for wholesale repudiation, and today the president's top advisers acknowledged he would have to trim his agenda and try to work with the Republicans.

"We're laying the groundwork for reaching out," said Leon Panetta, the White House chief of staff. Clinton will push legislative themes that already have a foundation of bipartisan support, including deficit reduction, Panetta said.

The combative Newt Gingrich, a doctrinaire conservative sure to be installed as speaker in January, and Bob Dole, the incoming Senate majority leader, will share power with Clinton. Both said today they are ready to work with the Democrats.

Gingrich said he saw his new responsibilities as "a very serious and solemn obligation." But he still intends to enforce the strict tenets of his Reaganesque "Contract With America" to reduce taxes and shrink the federal government's role.

"There's no reason we can't sit down and have a serious discussion," with the White House about implementing Republican legislative priorities, Gingrich said.

Dole saw the election as nothing less than "a vote of no confidence in the Clinton agenda." Today, the Kansas Republican said he would tell Clinton, "We're certainly ready to work with you."

"We will have our disagreements, but I want him to know that notwithstanding the fact that he's lost the majority, that we have some responsibility," Dole said. "We know we have an obligation to the American people."

Besides their historic gains in Congress, the Republicans scored big in statehouses. They won 11 governorships now in Democratic hands and easily maintained control in 12 other states. They also won Connecticut, which currently has an independent as governor. All told, the GOP captured a majority of the nation's gubernatorial mansions for the first time since 1970.

In the Senate, Republicans won a 52-48 majority — a gain of eight seats. In one of the closest races, Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein withstood the $27 million challenge of political neophyte and millionaire Michael Huffington in California.

Republicans captured 52 previously Democratic House seats while Democrats picked up just four GOP-held seats. All were vacated seats — not a single GOP incumbent lost.

Catherine Rudder, executive director of the American Political Science Association and an expert on Congress, recalled that Ronald Reagan could get his program through a Congress which for six of his eight years was under Democratic control, but "Reagan was very popular and Clinton is not."

In an interview, she foresaw a rancorous session of Congress, frequent Clinton vetoes and a possible bidding war over a tax cut, despite its implications for the deficit.

"It is going to be harder to govern, not easier," said Sen. Bob Kerrey, D-Nebr., who survived despite his support of a ban on assault weapons.

Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., predicted that Gingrich, as the new speaker of the House, had prepared himself for this Republican takeover in Congress.

"Newt Gingrich is a very smart man, a very able tactician, and I think everyone puts their cooperation hats on now, including the president, who is left with a veto plan only," Hyde said today in an interview on ABC.

No longer in charge of the House, Rep. Tom Foley, D-Wash., also fought for survival. If defeated, he would be the first speaker of the House turned out of office since the Civil War.

Three-term Gov. Mario Cuomo, a liberal icon, fell in New York. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski in Illinois, under a 17-count federal corruption indictment, was done in by an opponent whose name was the subject of a trivia quiz on Chicago radio a few weeks ago.

House Judiciary Chairman Jack Brooks of Texas, at 21 terms the longest-serving lawmaker seeking re-election, was ejected by voters, some resentful that his committee had approved a ban on assault weapons. Texans also dismissed Gov. Ann Richards, beaten by George W. Bush, son of the former president. But another Bush son, Jeb, fell short of taking over the statehouse in Florida.

The GOP resurgence was fed by a deep-felt frustration. Leaving the polls Tuesday, voters said they feared for the future, not trusting the economic upturn to last, or to improve their lives.

Half the voters said they were no better off economically than when Clinton won, two years ago. A full third said it would be better if all incumbents were thrown out and replaced by new people, even though most incumbents won.

Legislatively, universal health care now seems doomed. Panetta said Clinton would propose only "an incremental change" — not the sweeping overhaul he couldn't get through even when the Democrats were in charge.

Tuesday's election brings back the divided government that characterized the Reagan and Bush years and puts Jesse Helms in charge of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and Alfonse D'Amato chairing the Banking Committee, free to reopen the Whitewater investigation of the Clintons' finances in Arkansas.

"Tune in on Jan. 4 on C-Span and watch us keep our word," said Gingrich. He promised to temper the scorched earth brand of combat that characterized his past battles in the well of the House.

But some Republicans weren't waiting until January. Young Republicans piled out of cars at 2 a.m. today and snaked across Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House in a conga line. They floated red, white and blue balloons and chanted, "GOP, GOP, GOP" and "Ninety-six, ninety-six, ninety-six."

Gingrich asserted that the Republicans intend to keep their "contract" that promises a tax credit of $500 per family, higher defense spending, a denial of additional payments for babies born to welfare mothers and constitutional amendments to require a balanced budget and impose term limits.
