Senate puts off vote

Panel to examine charges against Thomas

WASHINGTON (NYT) — After a day of divisive, emotional debate over one of the most politically charged issues before it in recent years, the Senate on Tuesday night agreed to postpone until next Tuesday the vote on the confirmation of Judge Clarence Thomas to the Supreme Court.

The White House reluctantly agreed to the delay to allow time for the Judiciary Committee to hold hearings into accusations of sexual harassment that have set off a storm of outrage against the Senate, and caused many to demand closer scrutiny of Thomas.

This highly unusual delay in the confirmation process resulted from the dramatic and carefully presented public accusation on Monday by Anita F. Hill, a law professor at the University of Oklahoma and a former Thomas aide.

The decision to delay came more than two hours after the original 6 p.m. deadline for the vote had passed. George J. Mitchell, the majority leader, stepped onto the Sen-

Faith in nominee, Senators erodes

WASHINGTON — Hit broadside by an issue whose force it had misunderstood and mishandled, the U.S. Senate belatedly acknowledged on Tuesday that its fairness and credibility had been damaged and agreed to postpone a scheduled vote — a rare development in its tradition-bound annals.

The decision to investigate allegations of sexual harassment by an Oklahoma law professor against Judge Clarence Thomas reflected the growing power of women and of issues of importance to women in American politics.

Bush issues rules to spur bank lending

■ Bankers view action as a largely symbolic response to growing pressures.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush approved a series of regulatory measures Tuesday that he said would encourage banks to make new loans and stimulate the economy, but the announcement was viewed by bankers as a largely symbolic response to growing political pressures.

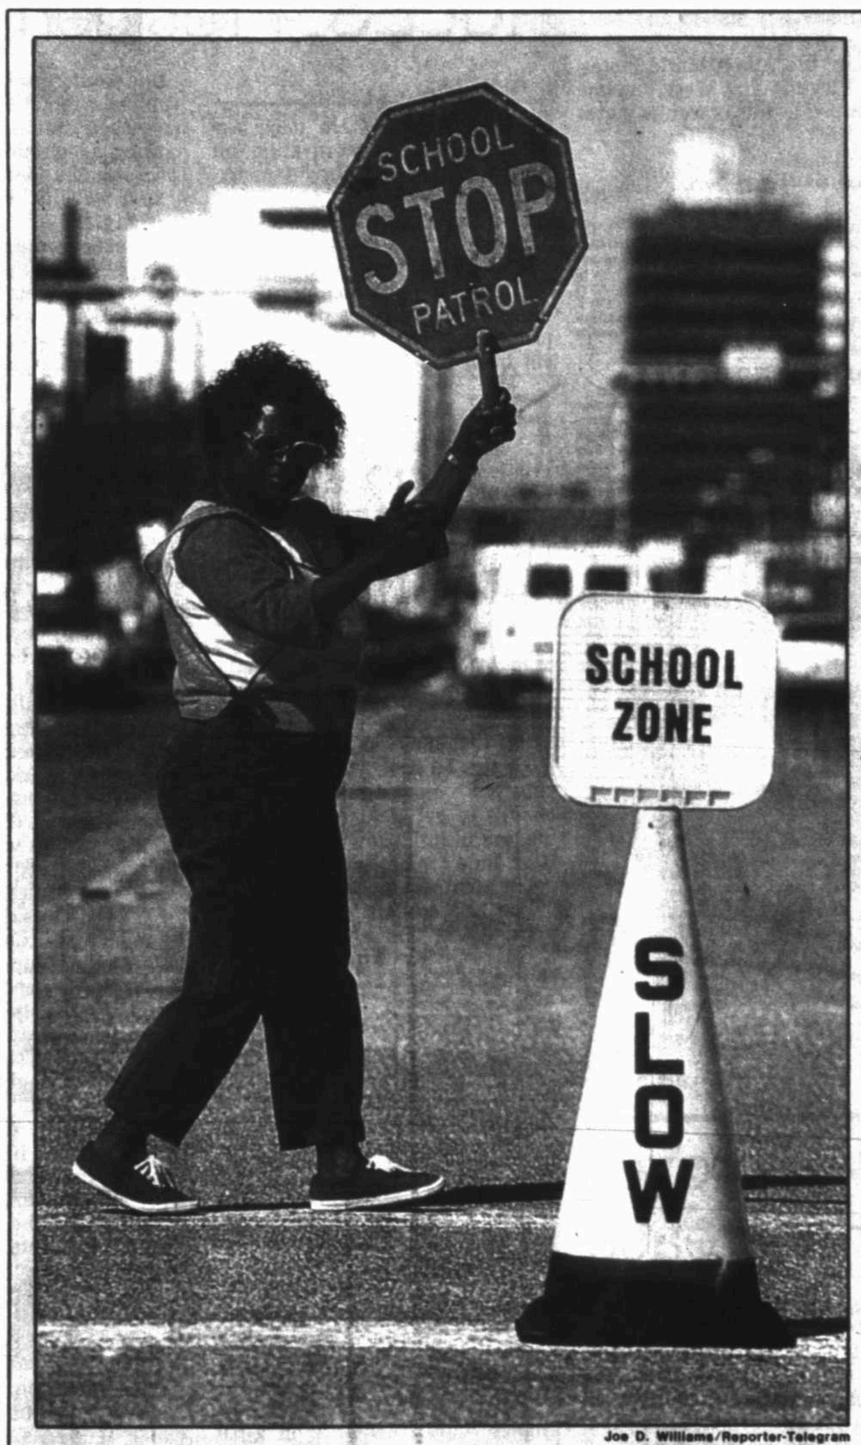

Taking steps to alleviate what he called a "credit crunch," the president said the measures were intended to "ensure that we have sound banks making sound loans."

He added that more steps would be taken, but he did not specify them.

Most of the measures in Tuesday's package were announced in less detail seven months ago, and Tuesday's statement from the Treasury Department used language that was virtually identical in many places to its March 1 news release on the subject.

The presentation Tuesday as a package of new measures was a clear indication of the White House's concern about the sluggish condition of the economy 13 months before the 1992 presidential election.

Parents win city's OK on 2 guards

■ Council authorizes crossing guards at Fannin, Anson Jones elementary schools.

With petitions, pleas and videotape, a group of Midland parents successfully won City Council approval for crossing guards at two local schools.

Although most councilmen admit hazardous street-crossing situations exist at schools throughout the city, and some parents requested police officers to control motorists, the council authorized only two additional crossing guards and one set of flashing lights.

Traffic Engineering Coordinator Gary Saunders, who brings the council a twice-yearly report about crosswalks and school zones, said action was recommended on the three requests before the usual report period because of parents' interest.

The guards — which will bring the city total up to 23 — were hard won in another sense. Councilmen late last year requested the school district share some of the cost of guards, who average $5,000 each per year. But the school board was unwilling to compromise and city officials said they have not pursued the issue.

The problem, parents and school leaders said, is drivers whose bad traffic and parking habits put kids at risk.

"We have this problem at 80 percent of our schools," said At-large Councilman John Castro, who advocated equal treatment for every school in the city.

"We have parents who do an excellent job with their kids, getting them to school, but we have many others who don't," said Bob Rymal, president

Rising water rates don't faze residents

By Debbie Lincecum

Rates are going up, but almost no one seems to care.

Midland City Councilmen gave a water, sewer and sanitation increase final approval Tuesday. During more than a month of consideration, however, they have received little opposition to the plan, most of which is slated to fund the Colorado River Municipal Water District's pipeline that will bring water from the O.H. Ivie Reservoir to Midland-Odessa.

Water rates, now $10 for the first 2,000 gallons and $1.83 per additional thousand gallons, will increase to $10.50 and $1.89 per thousand.

Sewer rates, now at $11.67 per household per month, will increase to $12.17. Garbage pickup, now $7.50 per month, will increase to $7.75.

Customers should begin to see higher rates after Nov. 1. The average homeowner, a user of about 15,000 gallons,

Honor society GPA flap ends on level grade

Parents and students concerned that National Honor Society eligibility requirements were raised this year can breathe a sigh of relief.

Midland high school juniors must have a cumulative scholastic average of 4.0 — the same grade-point average required last year — in order to be eligible to be inducted into the society Nov. 18.

Concerns were voiced by several parents of students in Midland and Lee High Schools recently that the standards had been raised.

Midland High School's 1991-'92 handbook stated that the eligible GPA to qualify for the honor society is 4.5.

Nation watches Texas' 'Robin Hood' school-funds plan

By Roberto Suro
N.Y. Times News Service

■ Related story/2B

HOUSTON — For years "the Robin Hood plan" loomed as a dreaded last resort for Texas public schools, and now that it is operating, no one is very happy about it.

The rich say they are being robbed by the new system for financing public education. The poor say that despite sweeping revisions designed to eliminate financial inequities among school districts the state is still not giving them what they need.

Texas' success or failure will be closely watched in more than 20 states where education financing systems are under challenge in the courts. Among them are New Jersey, where the state supreme court last month ordered a new trial to determine whether the state's 1990 Quality Education Act adequately addresses equal financing between poor districts and rich districts, and New York, where arguments are scheduled this month in a lawsuit brought by a group of poor districts asking a state court to declare the school financing system unconstitutional.

In a groundswell of legal activity, the number of states with such lawsuits has grown to 22 from 8 two years ago. Poor school districts with a relatively small amounts of taxable property are contending in the suits that their students are unconstitutionally disadvantaged compared with those in rich districts, where large amounts of taxable property can raise more money for the schools.

The disadvantages may come in many forms, from the microscopes and computers available to students in richer districts to the crowded classes held in cafeterias or hallways in poorer districts. At a time of limited government resources, the increasingly urgent new question is whether equity and excellence can be achieved simultaneously.

"We were an exemplary district in Texas, and it is going to be much more difficult for us to maintain our standards now," said Charles Slater, superintendent of the Alamo Heights School District in an affluent predominantly white suburb of San Antonio. "The real solu-

Leland's debts

WASHINGTON — The House bank was holding approximately $30,000 in overdrafts and the members' restaurant some $10,000 in unpaid tabs for Rep. Mickey Leland of Houston when he was killed in a 1989 plane crash, says a source familiar with the matter. The overdrafts were deducted from a death annuity paid to Leland's widow, but the restaurant bills apparently have never been settled, the source said./8B

VOTE: Panel to examine former aide's charges

ate floor and said that there were too many lingering questions about allegations against Thomas to call a vote Tuesday night.

"The delay approved," Mitchell declared, "is important to the integrity of the Senate, the integrity of the confirmation process, the integrity of the Supreme Court and the integrity of the individuals involved."

Sen. Bob Dole, the Republican leader, also called for a delay, but only until Friday. He conceded, though, that Republicans were outnumbered. He said Republicans did not hold the Senate to a vote Tuesday night on the nomination because the tide was running so strongly against Thomas that he might have been rejected altogether.

Under the agreement, the charges of sexual harassment against Thomas, who has vehemently denied them, will be examined in hearings during the next week under ground rules that were being negotiated Tuesday night.

In explaining the delay, Dole said that some of his Republican colleagues "would have rolled the dice at 6 p.m." But he added in a mellow, candid tone, "I couldn't put together 60 votes at 6 o'clock."

"It seemed to be that it was a gamble that should not be taken," he said, adding that "some questions remain" that probably should be answered.

Mitchell, a Maine Democrat, adopting a tone intended to heal divisions, said the agreement was a result of events that were "unpredictable, unplanned and unfortunate."

The decision to delay came after White House lobbyists and Senate Republicans realized that they might lose if they forced a vote on a group of Democrats who were leaning toward Thomas, but were being battered by criticism that the overwhelmingly male Senate paid too little attention to charges of sexual harassment from a woman who formerly worked for the nominee.

The turning point came in an emotional speech less than two hours before the scheduled 6 p.m. floor vote. Sen. John C. Danforth, Thomas' chief defender, stepped onto the Senate floor and said the nominee wanted time to clear his name from the "sharks" who, Danforth said, were trying to use the accusations of Professor Hill to keep Thomas off the court.

The Missouri Republican said he had spoken to Thomas by telephone and quoted him as saying: "They have taken from me what I have worked 43 years to create. They have taken from me what I have worked 43 years to build: My reputation."

Professor Hill appeared briefly before reporters Tuesday in Norman, Okla., to say only that she would cooperate with the Senate, saying, "I will fully cooperate with the efforts of the Senate. I intend to cooperate and to go to Washington if it is requested."

The bitter, emotional tone was in keeping with the tempest into which the Senate was plunged Monday, when Professor Hill accused the Senate Judiciary Committee of declining to investigate her complaint.

FAITH: Action reflects growing power of women

(From 1A)

Once the charges had been made public, any "rush to judgment," as several senators put it, would surely be taken by many to mean that the Senate considered the questions at stake trivial.

That risk was evident enough to persuade swing voters, largely conservative Democrats, that they dare not go ahead until they had given a thorough airing to the charges by Anita F. Hill, a law professor at the University of Oklahoma.

Their call for a pause changed the balance of forces in the Senate enough to convince Thomas' backers they had no choice but to go along.

In effect, Ms. Hill's charges changed the terms of the debate, at least for the moment. It had centered on Thomas' fitness to serve, but in the last 48 hours it turned to two other questions: where senators stood on sexual harassment and whether they were willing to give a woman a chance to argue her case under oath against a man backed by the full power of the presidency.

It happened because the level of political pain increased sharply for senators and their staffs. Phone calls from constituents, intense lobbying by women's groups and intense newspaper and television coverage drove home the message that sizeable portions of the electorate took Ms. Hill, composed and articulate in stating her case on television, very seriously indeed.

Once again, as in other presidential nominations in recent years, elements of character, rather than ideological difficulties, moved to the fore. In other cases, it has been use of so-called recreational drugs, or alleged lack of judicial temperament, or drinking and womanizing. All impinged on fitness to serve, but in ways that had been largely ignored in years past.

Few have emerged from this episode with their reputations enhanced.

The White House hunkered down at once when Ms. Hill's charges were made public over the weekend, arguing that senators on the Judiciary Committee had known of them and chosen not to quiz Ms. Hill, even in executive session, and that they had therefore been disposed of, for all intents and purposes.

At first, the White House seemed reluctant to do or say anything that might jeopardize the nomination, and Marlin Fitzwater, the White House spokesman, even refused early Tuesday to state President Bush's views on harassment.

RULES: President eases bank loan regulations

(From 1A)

Worried that voters may perceive Bush as concentrating on foreign policy and not interested in pocketbook issues, the White House has gone to lengths recently to make it appear that Bush is on top of the situtation.

Tuesday's announcement also included the outlines of two new proposals, neither of which has yet been fully developed.

One would permit bank officers who believe that their institutions have been unfairly treated by examiners to circumvent the usual process and appeal instead directly and secretly to supervisors in Washington.

The other would give the banks more flexibility in raising capital, presumably freeing them to make more loans. Many other countries now permit banking companies to treat a greater amount of their preferred stock as capital than the United States does.

Several years ago, the United States signed the Basel Accord, an international agreement that standardized banking requirements. When it takes effect, the new measure will bring American regulatory practice into line with most other countries.

A third part of the package involves the important area of valuing real estate. The administration said the guidelines were being drafted and might be completed by the end of the month. The guidelines would cover how banks classify loans.

The issue of the weak economy is so politically charged that the Cabinet has been deeply divided for some time over whether the regulatory package should have been announced much earlier and been more substantial, according to a senior administration official

Torrential rain turned some southern Florida streets into waterways Tuesday, making a mess of morning rush hour. Surfboards, rafts and bare feet were the preferred modes of transportation in some places.

Widespread street flooding was reported in Miami, Fort Lauderdale, Pompano Beach and Homestead. More than 11 inches fell in Hollywood, Fla., during the morning, and 3- to 7-inch readings were reported across much of Dade and Broward counties.

On some roads, cars were abandoned where they stalled and were windows-deep in water.

Temperatures dipped into the mid-20s in the Mid-Atlantic states, bringing a hard freeze to some valleys of Virginia and West Virginia and light frost elsewhere. The low temperature in the Lower 48 states was 22 at Lewisburg, W.Va.

FLAP: Parents, students breathe sigh of relief

(From 1A)

4.0 and a 4.5 grade-point average," said Sylvia Sims, a parent of an LHS student.

Ms. Sims said she had been told by an LHS counselor that the school would require a 4.2 cumulative GPA for honor society eligibility.

"My daughter worked hard to meet the 4.0 goal," Ms. Sims said. "She is a senior and this is her last chance to get inducted. With induction in just a few weeks, there is no time for her to bring up her grade-point average."

The LHS student council handbook stated that a 4.5 GPA was required for honor society eligibility.

Ricardo Torres, executive director of secondary education for the Midland school district, said Tuesday's meeting resulted in "uniformly establishing the 4.0 as the eligible GPA for membership in the National Honor Society" for both high schools.

Torres said honor society sponsors and high school principals may meet again this fall to consider raising the GPA.

The National Honor Society requires that candidates have "a cumulative scholastic average of at least 85 percent, B, or 3.0 (on a 4.0 scale)."

Midland students currently are eligible with a 4.0 GPA on a 6.0 scale.

"The GPA scale was modified when we started four-tier programs, in order to reflect the program. The scale has been in place for a couple of years," said Ted Miller, spokesperson for Midland Independent School District.

The four-tier program accommodates curriculum ranging from remediation to extraordinary challenges for gifted students. The tiers are basic skills, general, advanced and honors courses.

Jane Carrens, the new principal at MHS, said "it was unfortunate" the school's handbook had the 4.5 GPA eligibility printed in it.

"The GPA was changed over the summer," Ms. Carrens said. "In last May or June, the National Honor Society sponsors made the discovery that students must have a minimum of an 85 to be in the honor society. They thought we were out of compliance, so they raised the GPA."

The sponsors realized that students in the honors level of courses would have to have a 4.5 GPA in order to have an 85.

Ms. Carrens then called Mary Jo Patterson, assistant program administrator the Division of Student Activities of National Association of Secondary Schools, which oversees the National Honor Society.

"Ms. Patterson said that we were actually in compliance because students in the general courses would have a grade of 95 with a 4.0 GPA," Ms. Carrens said.

When the fourth tier was added in fall 1989, the GPA scale was modified to reflect the levels of the tiers. Now the question remains as to whether the GPA should be raised in order to ensure that students being inducted into the society are actually the top academic achievers in their class.

Ms. Carrens said that with the tiers in place, a 4.0 GPA would mean a numerical score of 95, a score of 87 for a student in general courses, an 85 for a student in honors, and an 83 for students in advanced.

Honor society sponsors question whether the GPA should be raised in order for students in advanced courses to be challenged and to meet the requirement of having a numerical score of 85.

'It is up to each school to amend their requirements," said Ms. Patterson, the assistant director with the national office. "Each school can amend the requirements to be higher or lower," she said. "It is just required that the information (concerning the new GPA) be made widely available to the students and parents."

Ms. Patterson said that although there are no standard quotas or percentages of classes recommended for induction, "with a 6.0 scale, Midland schools may feel that they need to raise their students' standards by raising the GPA."

Torres said, "One of the commitments that we have is the expectation that these honor society students are truly the cream of the crop."

"Raising the standard will challenge the teachers as well," Torres said.

The administrator said if the local committee overseeing honor society eligibility requirements decides to raise the GPA this fall, it would effect the Class of 1995 — students who are freshmen now.

As for the selection process, Ms. Patterson said, "The principals are ultimately in charge of making the decisions. The faculty council is the voting group that is appointed by the principal. They decide which students are eligible by a majority vote. But the principals have the final say."

Candidates aren't selected for membership solely on GPA, Ms. Patterson said. They also are evaluated on the basis of service, leadership and character.

"Raising the GPA for eligibility is not a done deal," Torres said. "We will see whether it needs to change and when that change will be in effect."

The bottom line, according to Miller, is that the rules will not change for students this year. "No one has been harmed," he said. "There is no need to panic."

RATES: Council approves water, sanitation increase should see water and sewer bills go from $45.46 to $47.24 monthly. A 10 percent discount remains in place for early payment.

At-large Councilman J.D. Faircloth continued to oppose the water and sewer increase. He has said it is only necessary because of an annual $750,000 transfer from the water and sewer fund to the general fund, a franchise fee similar to that charged the cable, telephone and electric companies.

Councilmen said they think customers aren't concerned because the increase is small and its use has been justified. It is likely the first of several water and sewer rate increases to fund the pipeline debt.

"It's quite small," Mayor Carroll Thomas said. "Everybody knows we've got to build that pipeline. Everyone knows we need the water. Now we're going to try to do it as cheaply and efficiently as we can."

"It's been four years since the last increase," said District 3 Councilman Buddy Sipes. He said local residents are likely to be more receptive to a rate increase than a tax increase. "I think people understand why it has to go up."

Rick Menchaca, assistant to the city manager, said the pipeline is expected to replace some current sources of city water that are becoming depleted.

"We sit pretty well with water," Menchaca said. "But our other sources have started being depleted. (In) our two major wells, the water table is starting to decline."

The city uses about twice the amount of water as Odessa, although the two are close in population, Menchaca said.

"I've heard figures of about 15,000 gallons per household per month," he said. Officials have said the pipeline should bring water to the city that tastes slightly better.

Other preparations for the pipeline, due to start delivery here in 1995, include an expansion of the water treatment plant that began two years ago.

Sanitation cost increases are planned to supplement the fund before it is impacted by increasing federal and state regulations. In addition to pickup cost increases, the per-ton cost of dumping at the landfill will increase from $7 to $8.

CROSSWALKS: Council authorizes two guards

(From 1A)

of the Anson Jones PTA, who came to the meeting armed with petitions signed by other parents.

Rymal showed a videotape of the school's single street entrance during peak traffic hours over several days. It showed students involved in near accidents with cars and making dangerous crossings with their parents. People dropping off and picking up their children in some cases showed complete disregard for parking regulations.

Councilmen authorized a crossing guard to begin work there.

Principal Marilyn Odom said the school's main problems are overcrowding and lack of sufficient street entrances. Shadylane Drive is the only street that offers access to the school's front door.

When the school was built in the 1950s, "city fathers expected 'Ozzie and Harriet' families where the kids would walk from their neighborhood to schools and when they got home, mother would have fresh-baked cookies waiting," Mrs. Odom said.

"They didn't envision as many as 500 or 600 students coming and going every day from the Jones campus. It's something of a bus terminal."

Parent education has failed to produce results in traffic, she said.

"We've tried everything but we still have a dangerous situation out there," she said.

The situation was described as not only dangerous, but unfriendly. Volunteer Cindy Thompson, who occasionally works in front of Anson Jones to control traffic, said she has been verbally abused by parents.

"They know there's nothing I can do about it," she said.

Saunders said workers from his office, while counting students in the area for their reports, witnessed similar angry behavior.

"In one incident, one driver was apparently trying to spit on another," Saunders said. "The children are the ones suffering in this, darting across the street between traffic."

Based on city standards, Anson Jones' situation warranted a crossing guard at the school entrance, Saunders said.

Fannin Elementary likewise received clearance for a guard, to be installed at the intersection of Lanham and Neely streets. Saunders said the area, which once had too-low traffic volume to qualify for a guard, had seen increased numbers of children crossing and cars driving through recently.

Liz Young, a parent volunteer with Fannin, told the council she thinks more students could use the crosswalks if they were safer.

"A lot of parents aren't sending their children through the crosswalks because there are no guards there," Mrs. Young said. At a 6-1 vote to install a guard at Fannin, parents cheered.

At Main and Dormard streets, the council authorized a set of flashing lights to warn motorists at the school zone.

Although guards may help children cross streets more safely, they can do little about traffic and parking violations, officials said. Deputy Police Chief Billy Ray said the guards are limited in authority and scope, and even their uniforms are minimal.

"Most schools have a severe traffic problem," Ray said. "We need more officers, but right now we're too short to put one at each school."

Supreme Court judge sworn in to take Aristide's place

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — A Supreme Court justice was sworn in Tuesday to replace President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, a little more than a week after the activist priest was deposed in a military coup.

Justice Joseph Nerette, the third-ranking member of the 12-judge court, was appointed Monday after soldiers stormed the parliament and forced legislators to name an interim president to keep Aristide from returning.

The 67-year-old Nerette, a longtime jurist and former math teacher, was appointed to the high court in 1988 under a military-controlled government. He has been considered an honest, politically neutral judge.

In his inaugural address, spoken in French as Brig. Gen. Raoul Cedras and other military leaders looked on, Nerette indicated disapproval of the Sept. 30 coup.

He said parliament had "duly met" and asked him to assume the presidency "after the tragic events which we will never cease to deplore, after the days that threatened national sovereignty."

He urged churches and political parties to foster "national reconciliation" and "the restoration of peace and harmony."

In an apparent protest, only 68 of the 108 senators and deputies showed up for the ceremony, and an undermined number refused to sign the resolution that named Nerette president.

The diplomatic corps also boycotted the ceremony.

In Washington, the Organization of American States strongly condemned Nerette's installation and called for a freeze on Haitian assets and a trade embargo, except for humanitarian aid. The OAS foreign ministers also authorized creating a 500-member civilian mission to help restore democracy in Haiti.

The 38-year-old Aristide, speaking in Caracas, Venezuela, where he is a guest in exile, called the appointment of Nerette "a second coup d'etat."

Soldiers had forced Nerette's election by storming the Legislative Palace and roughing up some of the 40 members of a crisis committee trying to decide how to fill the power vacuum left by Aristide's ouster.

One member of the Chamber of Deputies said lawmakers would have preferred to apply a section of the constitution permitting Aristide's handpicked prime minister, Rene Preval, and his Cabinet to run the country during the president's temporary absence.

Monday's assault at the Legislative Palace and another at the international airport, which disrupted an OAS meeting with Gen. Cedras, the armed forces' commander, seemed to confirm suspicions that Cedras is not fully in control of his forces.

Many Haitians believe a key figure in Aristide's overthrow was Maj. Michel Francois, 34, who commanded the capital's main police station, where the first clashes between security forces and Aristide supporters broke out.

After the coup, Francois was promoted to commander of the entire militarized police force, and on Monday legislators handed him the resolution declaring the formation of an interim government.

Interviewed Tuesday outside the police station, where he was ringed by a dozen police, Francois dismissed the storming of parliament as a "security" operation.

Asked if anyone in the security forces would favor Aristide's return, he said: "No, no, no. That's completely over. That's completely finished."

Nerette apparently was chosen because the Supreme Court president, Andre G. Cherilus, and vice president, Justin Castel, were never ratified by the Senate. Aristide appointed Cherilus and Castel without consulting the Senate, touching off one of the serious disputes with the legislature that characterized his seven-month rule.

Legislators and Cedras also accused Aristide of inciting mobs to attack his opponents, a charge he dismissed Tuesday. "Time will demonstrate that it is sa fallacy,' he said.

Most Haitians were unaware of what happened at the Legislative Palace on Monday because independent radio stations, the main source of news in Haiti, were either not broadcasting or played only music.

Sporadic gunfire was heard throughout Monday night in Port-au-Prince, the sprawling capital of 1 million people. Traffic on Tuesday was not quite back to normal, but the city was busier than at any time since the coup.

Foot soldiers patrolled the market areas and streets, while other security forces circulated in pickup trucks.

At least 150 people are believed to have died in attacks by soldiers during and after the coup.

PLAN: Nation watches

tion to equity should be to raise everyone to the level of Alamo Heights, not to bring us all down to some level of mediocrity."

But John Augenblick, a Denver-based consultant who has worked for several state governments helping to design school financing plans, said, "For some districts to insist that they want to remain at high levels of spending is all well and good, except that there are other districts that have never had the chance to even come close to the national average."

More and more often, he said, "the courts are ruling that state governments have a responsibility to insure that all school districts have access to about the same level of funding, and whether that level is adequate or not depends on what the state is willing to spend."

In October 1989, almost as soon as the Texas Supreme Court struck down the old school financing system that was based primarily on property taxes, some prominent politicians began predicting that Texas could pay for school equity only by imposing corporate or personal income taxes.

When that solution proved politically unpalatable, the Robin Hood approach of taking property tax money from rich districts and redistributing it among poor ones was adopted. The Texas plan sets in motion a spending proposal that would increase state spending on public schools by as much as $5 billion over the next four years.

But the legislature imposed no new state taxes to cover the additional spending. Texas is one of three states without corporate or personal income taxes.

"We got this started without any specific funding changes relative to public education," said State Sen. John Montford, a Democrat from Lubbock, who is a crucial legislator on tax issues. "But I think we are inevitably headed towards a major fiscal crisis and some tough decisions, because the spending is going to increase and the money won't be there."

The plan sets up new regional taxing authorities and obliges all school districts within those regions to tax at the same rate to pay for a basic educational program, and to then share the money. The system earned its nickname because, in the sharing process, about $300 million in local property tax revenue will be taken from rich school districts to be given to poor ones this year, according to preliminary estimates.

In addition, the state has committed itself to providing enough money to insure that poor districts have a minimum amount to spend if Robin Hood money falls short.

Rich districts are expected to take advantage of provisions allowing them to raise extra money through property taxes to enhance their programs, but they can do so only within certain limits.

Although the Robin Hood approach has been tried in different forms elsewhere, in Texas it has generated the most direct confrontation between rich and poor districts, which fought in court all summer and are promising further battles. Several rich districts have already challenged the new law, contending that the state is unconstitutionally appropriating local revenue.

In Utah, Wyoming and Montana, the state governments receive a portion of the revenue raised by local school districts and redistributes the money in districts around the state to equalize spending, Augenblick said. But, he said, Texas is the first state to redistribute money within regional districts.

With money flowing among neighboring school neighbors, the potential for resentment is heightened, especially when many of the rich districts are predominantly white while most of the poor districts have large minority populations.

Some of the rich districts most determined to fight the Robin Hood plan are Dallas suburbs like Plano, Richardson, Carrollton and Farmers Branch, which have been able to attract residents from the city with the lure of better public schools.

To the extent that the Robin Hood plan reduces the ability of such suburbs to spend more on their schools, it threatens to disrupt one of America's fundamental population dynamics.

But many poor school districts feel they have so much catching up to do that the amount of new money they will receive is disappointing — especially because they have had to raise taxes in order to take full advantage of the law.

U.S. complains to Israel about warplanes over Iraq

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israel sent several warplanes on a reconnaissance patrol into Iraqi air space four days ago, prompting an irate complaint from the United States, U.S. officials said Tuesday.

The United States warned Israel that its action could endanger the delicate mission of U.N. inspectors monitoring the destruction of Iraq's nuclear and chemical weapons, said the sources who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

The United States was "disturbed" to learn of the Israeli overflights, said an administration official. "We raised our concerns at the highest levels of the Israeli government," he said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The U.S. message was delivered by Undersecretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger to the office of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, said the diplomatic sources.

It followed a letter from Iraq to U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar, saying Israel had sent four F-15 warplanes into Iraqi air space on Oct. 4 at 10:49 a.m.

Flying low, the planes came into northwest Iraq from Syrian air space, the letter said. Then, it said, they climbed to between 21,000 feet and 27,000 feet, flew over the region of Al-Kaim and Al-Walid before heading at low altitude for the area of Al-Nadhayem on the Iraqi-Saudi Arabian border.

They entered Saudi airspace at 11:19 a.m., it said.

The letter from Iraqi Foreign Minister Ahmad Hussein requested that Perez de Cuellar intervene "immediately to take all necessary measures to put an end to these violatiohs."

The letter, dated Sunday but released Tuesday, called the intrusions "a flagrant violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq."

The Israeli Embassy declined to comment on the incident.

The planes apparently were on a reconnaissance patrol with a particular focus on the region of western Iraq from which Iraq fired Scud missiles toward Israel during the Gulf war.

A U.N. ballistics team has been in Iraq since Oct. 1, finding and destroying 16 unreported missile launchers in one day alone. It also destroyed 84 oxidizing tanks which provide a fuel component for Scud missiles.

The inspectors used two helicopters on loan to the United Nations from Germany to fly over the desert searching for launchers and to visit declared sites. They have surveyed 30 missile sites.

Baghdad had resisted granting permission for the U.N. helicopters to fly except under tightly controlled conditions. But it finally relented under diplomatic pressure from the Security Council and veiled threats from Washington.

During the war, Israel acceded to U.S. pressure to refrain from retaliating against the attacks.

But Israeli planes are no strangers to the skies of Iraq. In June 1981, F-16 fighters streaked low over Baghdad and bombed a just-completed nuclear reactor sold to the Iraqis by France.

That attack drew international condemnation.

The distance from northern Israel to northwest Iraq is about 250 miles.

Yugoslav's warring parties sign truce

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — Military leaders from secessionist Croatia and the federal army signed a new cease-fire pact Tuesday night that could offer new hope for peace in the republic.

Andrija Raseta, deputy commander of the army's fifth district, and Imre Agotic, chief of Croatia's forces, signed the agreement at a Zagreb hotel.

Although it marked the seventh attempt at cease-fire in three months, the latest accord was seen as having a better chance because it was signed by army leaders rather than politicans.

Little fighting was reported Tuesday, for the first time in more than a week.

"We think we have reached an agreement whose prospects of working are better than ever before," said Dirk-Jan van Houten, chief of the EC mission in Zagreb and the agreement's co-signer.

The truce statement called for the lifting of blockades by the federal navy on Croatia's Adriatic coast and by Croat forces on army barracks in the area.

It asked that fighting cease as long as peace talks continue among Yugoslav leaders and representatives from the 12-nation European Community at The Hague in the Netherlands.

Fighting in Croatia since early July has killed at least 600 people and caused billions of dollars in damage.

Earlier Tuesday, Croatia's parliament, wary of a repeat of the attack that destroyed the republic's presidential palace and blew out windows at the legislature Monday, met Tuesday night and voted for Croatia's definitive separation from Yugoslavia, Croatian TV reported.

Croatia and its neighbor, Slovenia, announced their independence on June 25, but agreed to defer the declaration until this week under an EC-brokered plan that was to convene talks on Yugoslavia's future. No such talks have been held.

Croats blame the war on Serbian expansionism. Members of the republic's large ethnic Serb minority say their fight is to protect themselves from absorption into an ultranationalist, anti-Serb Croatian state.

The draft resolution before Parliament called for Croatia to cut all relations with what used to be Yugoslavia, abandon Yugoslavia's legal system and declare all federal troops an "army of the aggressor."

While the shock of Monday's rocket attack subsided, the Croatian capital of Zagreb remained on edge.

Raseta required special approval from Croatian President Franjo Tudjman to leave his blockaded headquarters to holds talks with Agotic.

Raseta expressed hope that the latest truce would hold "because, finally, everybody sees that sooner or later we must come to an agreement."

But he accused the Croats of instigating two attacks after the truce took effect.

U.S., allies seek new web of curbs on Iraq's weapons

UNITED NATIONS (NYT) — The United States and its allies are planning to usher a new resolution through the Security Council imposing a tight new web of industrial and scientific restrictions meant to prevent Iraq from ever reacquiring weapons of mass destruction.

The proposed resolution, which is expected to be approved by the Council in the next week or so, would bring detailed restrictions into force to back up the Council's general order in April forbidding Iraq to keep or acquire nuclear, chemical or biological weapons or ballistic missiles.

That ban, formally accepted by the Baghdad government, was among the terms set by the United Nations terms for a cease-fire formally ending the Persian Gulf war.

The draft resolution would require Iraq to report on a range of scientific and industrial activity and provide detailed lists of any machinery, chemicals or other materials that could be used in weapons. It would also provide for highly intrusive inspections to guard against cheating by the Iraqis.

The plan would require Iraq to adopt new laws making it a punishable offense for any citizen to try to develop weapons of mass destruction.

The new resolution would detail the price that Iraq must pay in surrendering national sovereignty for its invasion of Kuwait.

Abrams to cooperate with prosecutors

WASHINGTON (NYT) — In the searing policy battles over aid to the Nicaraguan rebels in the 1980s, Elliott Abrams operated as the Reagan administration's combative public patron of the Contras, but it is his behind-the-scenes role at the State Department that the Iran-Contra prosecutors now want to explore.

That opportunity emerged on Monday, when Abrams agreed to cooperate with prosecutors in what appears to be their culminating drive to investigate efforts by administration officials to conceal the Iran-Contra affair from Congress as details of the affair began to unfold in the fall of 1986.

As part of a plea agreement, Abrams admitted to two misdemeanor charges of withholding information from House and Senate committees during testimony in October 1986 about his knowledge of secret efforts to aid the anti-Sandinista guerrillas and his own role in soliciting a $10 million contribution for the Contras from the Sultan of Brunei.

After the legal action against Abrams, Craig A. Gillen, the associate counsel in charge of the case, was reluctant to discuss how Abrams could assist the prosecution. But investigators appear to hope that Abrams will lead them to other senior administration officials, particularly within the State Department, who knew more about efforts to aid the Contras than they have admitted.

Lawrence E. Walsh, the Iran-Contra independent prosecutor, said after Abrams' guilty pleas that "this is an important development that should enable us to move quickly and with thoroughness to the conclusion of our investigation."

Walsh's long-running inquiry may soon run out of time. Most of the illegalities related to efforts to conceal the affair, like making a false statement to Congress, carry a five-year statute of limitations. Reagan administration officials began testifying about the affair in the fall of 1986, so the period in which officials are exposed to prosecution will soon end.

Abrams' job as assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs from 1985 to 1989 made him responsible for Central America. He moved freely through the ranks of top administration officials in Washington and helped supervise diplomats in Latin America, where President Ronald Reagan's desire to support the Contras increasingly dominated Washington's relationships with countries in that region, and intensified after Congress cut off direct military aid in 1984.

Abrams was also chairman of the Restricted Interagency Group, a panel that coordinated the administration's policy on Central America among officials at the White House, the CIA and the Defense Department.

It was as the head of this group, prosecutors said, that Abrams became familiar with secret efforts to aid the Contras after Congress barred direct military assistance.

Witness in Noriega trial describes delivery

MIAMI (NYT) — A Colombian drug trafficker associated with the Medellin cocaine cartel testified Tuesday that he saw the cartel's four top leaders give Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega a briefcase stuffed with $500,000 in cash during a secret meeting just before the general formally took power in Panama eight years ago.

Gabriel Taboada, a marijuana and cocaine smuggler who also ran an automobile dealership that supplied cartel leaders with luxury cars, said he was summoned to a cartel meeting in Medellin in mid-1983 and was introduced to "the gentleman over there in the uniform."

Taboada then pointed at Noriega, who is being tried here on 10 counts of cocaine trafficking, money laundering and racketeering.

"Manuel, here's the briefcase, there's 500 in here," Taboada recalled one of the four cartel leaders, Gustavo Gaviria, telling Noriega. "The gentleman picked it up, opened it, looked and closed it up again."

Taboada said he saw bills of $100 "neatly stacked and new" in the suitcase, which he described as "quite full." As the meeting broke up, he added, Gaviria joked with Noriega about the money, which Taboada said he assumed was $500,000, based on what he had seen and heard.

Taboada's account considerably bolsters the prosecution's case against the deposed Panamanian dictator. Two members of Noriega's personal entourage, Floyd Carlton and Luis del Cid, have already testified that they delivered drug payoffs to their boss, but neither ever saw Noriega in the company of the traffickers or saw him actually take any money.

Taboada took the stand after the defense asked Judge William M. Hoeveler to declare a mistrial because of testimony given Monday and late last week by Roberto Striedinger, a pilot for the cartel. Striedinger said he was present at the same meeting with cartel leaders as Taboada and saw several teenage girls lounging about the house.

Afterward, Striedinger said, he flew a plane carrying a half dozen French dancers. The implication was that the cartel had offered the sexual services of both groups of women to Noriega as a gift.

Jon May, a member of Noriega's defense team, told the judge that Striedinger's testimony about the dancers and the teen-age girls could have been prejudiced.

Lead prosecutor Michael P. Sullivan, however, argued that the testimony was an important to show Noriega's ties to the drug cartel.

Court leery after hearing cigarette case

WASHINGTON (AP) — A seemingly skeptical Supreme Court was urged Tuesday to strip cigarette manufacturers of protection from lawsuits accusing them of misrepresenting the dangers smokers face.

Several justices expressed doubt that Congress intended to let smokers sue tobacco companies in state courts.

The high-stakes case, stemming from a New Jersey family's eight-year battle with the cigarette industry, is expected to be decided by July.

The issue is whether federally required warnings on cigarette packs shield manufacturers from suits saying their advertising conceals the hazards of smoking. The warnings, authorized by the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act of 1965, have made the surgeon general a household name.

Marc Z. Edell, a lawyer for the family of lung-cancer victim Rose Cipollone, said the law doesn't preempt state court action against the companies.

"There is not a whisper in the legislative history" that Congress intended to ban such suits, he said.

But H. Bartow Farr III, representing the cigarette industry, said the law clearly prohibits claims against the companies stemming from what they say on their labels or in their advertisements.

The justices questioned both lawyers vigorously but seemed less convinced by Edell's arguments. Among those challenging his arguments were Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Anthony M. Kennedy, Sandra Day O'Connor and Antonin Scalia.

Kennedy repeatedly asked Edell if he believed a jury in a lawsuit against a cigarette firm could force the company to put new, tougher warnings on their cigarette packs. The justice suggested that would be the logical conclusion of the lawyer's argument even though it was forbidden by federal law.

Edell said juries generally are not called upon to decide such questions when they award damages in personal injury suits.

Congress needs accountability

U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith of San Antonio is correct in calling for full disclosure by other congressmen who also wrote "bad checks" on their members-only U.S. House account. The report last week by the General Accounting Office (GAO) that during the first six months of this year 134 different House members bounced 4,325 personal checks on the account is a matter of national shame.

Smith said in issuing the call, "Without full disclosure and independent verification, a cloud of distrust will no doubt hang over the entire ethics probe."

The probe needs to be conducted, but bounced checks aren't the real problem in the Congress. You can bet that the American people got the "drift" of the GAO release. That problem is illustrated to an even greater degree by the fact that Congress cannot get a handle on its deficit spending. Congress throws taxpayers' money at problems in a futile attempt to make them disappear. Congress attempts to "buy" friends overseas through its use of foreign aid instead of actually cultivating that friendship through staunch support and mutual respect. Congress repeatedly shows that it has no regard for the value of money.

Congressman Smith's call for full disclosure does not relieve him of the responsibility of his earlier actions. Anyone can make an error and future information should shed more light on how the congressman's error occurred. But the fact is it did occur!

Other members of Congress are not so fortunate. Some have written hot checks on the House account in excess of $10,000; others write 20 hot checks a year. Private citizens can't do that; most do not want to. They're responsible.

How can the American people actually develop trust in a gaggle of officials who don't even have the depth of character to maintain their own checkbooks in proper fashion, much less the nation's?

Yes, representative government — which is what we have in this nation — begins with accountability. My how we'd like to see a little of that from the people in government.

Thanks to you, UW help is available

After the call came to my office informing me of the attack, I was faced with the fact that things like that do happen to people I know. A dear friend had been brutally raped and beaten by a man who had broken into her home during the early morning hours while the rest of us slept.

When I finally reached her, she informed me that the Midland Rape Crisis Center was already working with her in conjunction with the area law enforcement agencies. Since that time she has spoken in glowing terms of their care and assistance through that day and the following weeks.

I am proud of my association with the center, and am grateful that they were able to touch the life of a very special woman.

The Midland Rape Crisis Center, and other United Way-supported agencies, are dependent upon the contributions of time and money of concerned citizens to stay in operation. I am grateful to live in a community where people care enough to share their God-given wealth so that when the need arises, the help is there.

Support, contributions enrich students, parents

Midland City Council PTA would like to publicly thank James Cook, district manager, Rick Hall, owner, and Randy Robinson, store manager, and Maricela Gonzalez, past store manager, of Pinocchio's for their support to us over the past 4 years.

Through their Pizza Bucks program, they have contributed $4,500 to our council. With that money, we have been able to supplement our student scholarship fund, host a city-wide Texas Life Membership reception, honor our Citywide Cultural Arts winners and begin a citywide Parent Education Resource Library. Their support has not gone unnoticed or unappreciated.

The school children of our community and their parents are such a valuable resource, and the support and contributions of establishments like Pinocchio's helps all of us further their enriching experiences. We appreciate so much all you are doing to make things better.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Oct. 9, the 282nd day of 1991. There are 83 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Oct. 9, 1888, the public was first admitted to the Washington Monument.

On this date:

In 1635, religious dissident Roger Williams was banished from the Massachusetts Bay Colony.

In 1701, the Collegiate School of Connecticut — later Yale University — was chartered in New Haven.

In 1776, a group of Spanish missionaries settled in present-day San Francisco.

JACK ANDERSON

Is the Army engaged in a witch hunt?

WASHINGTON — Tony Mines and Marcela Bodkin went to a friend's baby shower last year and have been fighting to save their reputations and jobs ever since.

An unidentified tipster told the Army that Bodkin and Mines, both civilian intelligence employees with the U.S. Army Southern Command in Panama, consorted with Cubans at the party and that Mines slipped an envelope to the Cubans. Then the tipster added another shovel of dirt — telling the Army that Mines and Bodkin were gay and used drugs. The hint of espionage and unsavory conduct were enough to cost Bodkin and Mines their security clearances, even though there was no proof.

Anderson

Twenty months later, an investigation has turned up nothing to verify the charges by an informant whom even the Army admits was of "unknown" reliability. But Bodkin is out of a job and Mines is working for the Air Force near Washington in a menial job because he still has no security clearance.

It all began Feb. 5, 1990, when the two friends went to a baby shower in Panama City. A tipster later told Army investigators that Mines carried a legal-size envelope into the party and at some point went into a back room with four unidentified Cubans. The informant said that when Mines came back out, he did not have the envelope.

The informant then added some vague allegations about drug use and homosexual activities. Mines and Bodkin deny that they are gay and say they don't use drugs. As for the Cubans, Bodkin says he didn't see any Cubans at the party, nor was he carrying an envelope. As holders of security clearances, both Mines and Bodkin would have been required to report even casual social contact with Cubans at a party, but neither did.

The military bans gay soldiers, but the same standard does not hold true for civilian employees. They can, however, be denied a security clearance.

Investigators failed to find any connection between Bodkin and the Cubans, and nothing to build a case against Mines. Urinalysis showed no signs of drugs in either of their systems.

The series of events has been a nightmare for the two friends. In the Army's Southern Command in Panama, the case has sparked suspicions of retaliation and even racism against Mines and Bodkin, both of whom are black. Their case has also drawn interest from Capitol Hill, where members of the Congressional Black Caucus have asked Defense Secretary Dick Cheney to find out if Mines and Bodkin were railroaded.

The letter to Cheney, signed by Reps. Edolphus Towns, D-N.Y., and Ron Dellums, D-Calif., says that Mines and Bodkin lost their security clearances "based on allegations deemed by military investigative agencies as insufficient and unverified." Sen. Charles Robb, D-Va., is also looking into the case.

Our associate Scott Sleek talked to several people who worked with Mines and Bodkin in Panama. All said they didn't believe the two were guilty of the allegations. A few believed the charges were racially motivated, or that Mines was being harassed because, in 1989, he had complained to the Army Inspector General about lax security in his work area.

Mines' assignment in Panama ended last December. He asked to remain working there until he could clear his name, but his request was denied. Instead, he was transferred to a job with Air Force intelligence near Washington. But since he has no security clearance, he has been given duties far below his 16 years of training and experience. Bodkin was told that her job was being eliminated. As of last week, she was out of work, and is still in Panama.

Hooray for responsive house legislators

WASHINGTON — Observe the stutter-step of political scandal.

First, troubling news breaks. The charges are brushed aside as trivial by late-waking media or are stonewalled into silence by grim-faced authorities.

Then scandal coverage develops a second wind, whipping up a firestorm that sucks in coverage down to the talk-show level, which sets in motion investigations that bring reform to the political process and sweep out rascals.

Safire

Finally, the scandalmongers are derogated by historians as making much fuss over nothing.

What has Housegate, or Rubbergate, or Kitegate — any gate in a firestorm — taught us? Mainly this: Thank God for the House of Representatives. It is the glory of American democracy.

No sarcasm intended. When Speaker Tom Foley responded to the wave of revulsion and ridicule by putting an end to the corruption of the House bank last week, he demonstrated a truth that the Founders intended: The House is the political institution most closely in touch with the people.

If a similar display of arrogance leading to corruption had been exposed in the Senate, that Club would have closed ranks on the files.

If it had happened in the White House (also exempt from Freedom of Information disclosure), the president's counsel would discreetly put a stop to it, with nobody punished.

But the House, as a body of readily accountable officials, felt the voter heat and saw the ethical light.

The internal pressure on the speaker from the members shifted from "squelch this quickly" to "close the bank and investigate the major corrupters before we all get smeared as deadbeats and are beaten next year — or before the term-limitation movement turns our seniority sanctuary into a hotel for transients."

So hats off to the House; when the public says "jump," it should and does say "how high?"

In this case, the answer is: a little higher.

Forget about the petty embarrassment of members who inadvertently took small interest-free loans erroneously described as "bounced checks"; that's penny-ante stuff.

Instead, the sleepy public-integrity section at the attorney general-free Department of Justice should zero in on the kiting recidivists and big borrowers who deserve censure, if not prosecution.

Something is rotten in the office of the sergeant-at-arms. It goes deeper than the fixing of parking tickets, or extending interest-free credit of $20,000 to members who follow their leader, or influencing of local banks to make political loans.

Jack Russ, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's protege, is shyly declining interviews presumably because he will be asked about the $10,000 he took out a couple of years ago. That ain't fishbait.

Who directed him to take out that money? To which member did he give the 10 thousand in cash? For what blackmail, gambling or compassionate reason? Did the member ever give him the money back? Or did somebody else reimburse the sergeant-at-arms — if so, who, why, and were any taxes due?

These are questions about only one incident that the FBI and IRS apparently have deemed too sensitive to investigate. With the folks at home aroused, clean members will now lean on the House ethics committee to get tough on the corrupt.

Perhaps we can get the momentum of congressional self-discipline to extend to the most egregious example of nest-feathering: the abuse of the franking privilege.

This enables incumbents to advertise with self-serving, junk-mail newsletters and "meeting notifications" at a cost to the public of tens of millions each year.

ART BUCHWALD

Warheads will keep clicking for 3,000 years

It is typical of a government bureaucracy that when it decides to do something, it doesn't take the time to consider the consequences. The latest example of this is the President's decision to dismantle nuclear weapons.

On paper it sounds like a dandy idea, but no one addressed the problem of where to dump the weapons once we decided to break them up.

Buchwald

Winston Simon, in charge of a trash dump just outside the Capital Beltway, was beside himself when Bush made his speech. He told me, "I don't have any room for atomic weapons — I don't even have room for empty beer bottles. Where does Bush intend to bury all this junk?"

"I'm certain that he must have some idea. You can't have a nuclear disarmament policy without a disposal program to go with it."

"If he has, he hasn't told me. You know atomic warheads are not biodegradable. Some of them go 'click, click, click' on a Geiger counter for 3,000 years. Even if I bury them underground, they still go 'click, click, click' for an eternity."

"Can't you smash 'em up like they do old automobiles?"

"It doesn't work like that. The more you push an atomic weapon around, the more likely it is to go off. Do you see that hydrogen bomb sitting there on those used tires? Every time we breathe on it, it goes 'click, click, click.' "

"So, what can you do? We have to reduce our nuclear capability to show the Iraqis that we are sincere."

He said, "We have to take atomic waste seriously. We must separate it when we throw away a weapon. The plutonium goes in one garbage bag, the atomic fuse in another and the rocket parts in a third."

"But people are not used to separating their nuclear trash. Neither is the government."

"Then we'll fine them for each atomic weapon that has not been placed in the correct bag. I run a good trash dump, and I'm not going to endanger my law-abiding garbage with nuclear missiles that are hazardous to people's health."

"Maybe Bush will decide to dump the weapons into the sea."

"That's not a great idea because then the fish we fry will go 'click, click, click.' What we have to do is put the waste in somebody else's back yard — like the Colombian drug cartel's property in South America. The Russians have a big advantage over us when it comes to getting rid of their weapons. Their nukes are now spread around in 15 republics, so Moscow can tell those governments that since they wanted their independence, they have to dispose of their own bombs."

"Suppose you announced to President Bush that you only intended to pick up atomic trash on Mondays and Thursdays. Would that slow down proliferation of nuclear waste?"

"It would help, but it wouldn't solve the problem. The environmentalists would complain that every time one of our trucks went through their neighborhood it went 'click, click, click.' "

"You have the toughest job in the entire disarmament picture. They don't consult you, and then when they make a decision they put all the weapon trash in your lap. Is there any way of solving the nuclear weapons' waste problem once and for all?"

He replied, "We have to make stronger garbage bags."

Scientists use blood to detect disorders

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time, researchers have diagnosed fetal genetic disorders such as Down's syndrome by simply taking blood samples from pregnant women, eliminating possible risk to the fetus.

"This is important," said Dr. Sherman Elias of the University of Tennessee in Memphis. "It opens up prenatal diagnosis to the whole population because there is no risk to the fetus."

Elias was one of several researchers who described sophisticated new techniques for sifting fetal blood cells from mothers' blood. The results were described Tuesday at the Eighth International Congress of Human Genetics.

"What we're looking for is the needle in the haystack," said Dr. Mitchell Globus of the University of California, San Francisco.

The researchers emphasized that the technique requires much more testing before it can be made widely available.

"The technology is going to be possible; it's certainly not ready to apply," Globus said.

The technique could ultimately be a substitute for amniocentesis, in which fetal cells are obtained by inserting a needle into the womb to remove some of the fluid that bathes the fetus. Amniocentesis has a very small chance of causing a spontaneous abortion, and researchers say the new technique would eliminate that risk.

Elias and his colleagues reported the identification of a fetus that carried three copies of chromosome 18, one of the 23 human chromosomes that normally occur in pairs. His group has also identified a fetus with an extra copy of the X chromosome.

Dr. Diana Bianchi of Children's Hospital in Boston reported the diagnosis of a case of Down's syndrome, caused by three copies of chromosome 21.

Screening mothers' blood for fetal disorders is likely to be much cheaper than performing amniocentesis and other conventional techniques for diagnosing fetal ailments, Globus said.

"I think the cost is going to be quite reasonable because you can do a large number of samples at one time," he said. "You might be talking about $100 instead of $1,000."

The new techniques rely on the fact that a very small number of fetal blood cells can make their way into a pregnant woman's bloodstream through leaks in the placenta.

The cells are very rare in the mother's bloodstream, however. The new technique uses automated blood cell sorters to help separate fetal blood cells from maternal blood cells, along with a variety of other biochemical tools, Globus said.

Once the fetal cells were identified and separated from the mother's bloodstream, the genetic material in the cells was examined for abnormalities that would represent disorders in the fetus.

Researchers are working to improve both the cell-sorting methods and the methods for analyzing the small number of fetal cells collected, Globus said.

Bianchi said she was concentrating on the development of improved sorting methods.

Cheney meets with POW hunter

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney met Tuesday with a POW hunter and two members of Congress to review purported evidence that Army Capt. Donald G. Carr and other missing U.S. servicemen are still alive in a Laotian prison.

Retired Air Force Lt. Col. Jack Bailey and Indiana Reps. Frank McCloskey and Peter Visclosky described the meeting as "excellent" and said Cheney assured them that the Pentagon is "working constantly" to conclude the case.

"I think it was a major step in getting it resolved," said McCloskey, a member of the House Task Force on POWS/MIAS. "If Col. Bailey's intelligence checks out, we could have Donald Carr coming home alive."

The Pentagon gave the case a top priority in August after Bailey turned over photographs purportedly showing Carr in a Laotian prison camp less than two years ago. Carr, a Green Beret captain from San Antonio, was believed killed after he was shot down over Laos in 1971.

Bailey, who has been searching for missing Vietnam-era servicemen for 26 years, said he has uncovered fresh, eyewitness intelligence that Carr and more than a dozen other American captives were seen alive in the Laotian prison within the last 30 days.

"We had a damn good briefing," Bailey said. "I told him (Cheney) that Capt. Carr is very much alive in Laos, being held against his will by the North Vietnamese, and I gave him information to prove what I was telling him."

The briefing lasted more than an hour and included Cheney, Deputy Defense Secretary Donald Atwood, Undersecretary of Defense for Policy Paul D. Wolfowitz and Deputy Assistant Secretary Carl Ford, who oversees POW-/MIA issues for the Pentagon.

Pentagon officials did not comment on the meeting, but Cheney's chief spokesman, Pete Williams, said earlier Tuesday that the government has a "great interest" in resolving the Carr case.

"It's very, very important for us to follow every lead," Williams said.

Bailey, who has been critical of the government's past handling of MIA cases, said he left the meeting "highly impressed" with the Pentagon's commitment to the investigation.

"We don't have anybody out yet, but I feel we're starting to work together," said the 68-year-old former combat pilot. "I'm feeling good."

Processing plant closes due in part to fire

HAMLET, N.C. (AP) — The chicken-processing plant where 25 people died in a fire last month won't reopen, the company's owner told employees.

The closing of the Imperial Food Products plant was effective Oct. 2, according to the letter signed by company president Emmett J. Roe. Employees began receiving the letter Monday.

Roe's letter said about 225 employees will be affected.

The plant's closing is "caused in part by the disaster ... and by the company's inability to make an arrangement to finance its short and long-term obligation," the letter says.

The fast-moving fire and heavy smoke swept through the plant Sept. 3 after a hydraulic line ruptured, spewing flammable fluid onto the natural gas flames that heated chicken fryers.

A man who answered the telephone Tuesday at Roe's Atlanta home said Roe "is not available at any given time or at any given place and quit harassing this phone."

The company's only other plant, in Cumming, Ga., was closed last week, a friend of Roe's said. William W. Sawyer, executive vice president of the Forsyth County, Ga. chamber of commerce, said Roe told him last week he would have to file for bankruptcy unless he gets new financing.

Imperial's primary lender, Northeastern Bank of Pennsylvania, has demanded repayment on loans worth more than $5 million, court documents show.

There was no answer at the company's headquarters in Atlanta or at a number Roe listed in the letter as Imperial's representative in nearby Rockingham.

Hamlet Mayor Abbie Covington said Tuesday of the decision: "I hate it."

"The bottom line is we've lost 200 and some jobs and in lieu of that I would have preferred that they would have reoponed," Covington said.

But plant employee Mattie Fairley said: "It's all right with me because I wasn't planning on going back up there anyway."

Foley removes another privilege for house members

WASHINGTON (AP) — Speaker Thomas S. Foley on Tuesday ordered House officials to stop helping members reverse city parking tickets, as special privileges for lawmakers continue to disappear at a rapid pace.

The policy won't end dismissal of parking tickets issued to members of Congress because a city ordinance allows them to park almost anywhere when they are on "official business."

But Foley's action will force a member who receives a ticket — whether at noon outside an office building or at 3 a.m. in front of a night spot — to personally make the case that he or she was on House business. The sergeant-at-arms had been handling the job.

It was the latest action taken by the House to do away with privileges that had been abused by some members.

The House voted 390-8 last Thursday to close the members' bank by the end of the year and have the ethics committee investigate the bank's policy of covering members' bad checks without penalty.

On Tuesday, Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, chairman of the ethics committee, said he wouldn't take part in the investigation because he wrote checks with insufficient funds in his House bank account.

Stokes, who revealed the deficiencies last week, said he hadn't violated House rules but told Foley it was important "to avert any appearance of impropriety." Rep. Matthew McHugh, D-N.Y., was expected to be placed in charge of the probe.

The House restaurant system also has begun a pay-as-you-eat program for members and groups they sponsor to prevent large delinquent tabs such as those accumulated by some 300 current and former members and their sponsored organizations.

Foley, announcing the ticket policy at his daily news conference, said: "We're not intermediating in any of these cases of dispute. I thought it was appropriate that the House and Senate have the same practice."

The Senate eliminated its intervention in January.

A former high-ranking District of Columbia official, who coordinated the ticket-adjusting process at City Hall, estimated he handled between 20 and 40 requests each month for members of Congress during most of the 1980s.

City parking tickets were valued at a minimum of $10 when the official handled them during the last decade, but the lowest amount now is $20 per infraction.

However, many members missed the 15-day payment deadline, causing the amount of the tickets to double by the time they reached City Hall, said the former official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Under the old practice, House members notified Sergeant-at-Arms Jack Russ whenever they received a parking ticket. Russ would request district officials to eliminate the ticket under a local ordinance.

State lets doctors with AIDS work

ALBANY, N.Y. (NYT) — Choosing to reject new federal guidelines, New York State proposed Tuesday that health care workers infected with the AIDS virus should be able to perform surgery and other invasive medical procedures without informing patients of their medical status.

A long-awaited policy proposal from the State Health Department reaffirmed the state's commitment to protect the confidentiality of infected health care workers and to allow them to continue working in most cases.

While Gov. Mario M. Cuomo acknowledged the growing public anxiety about the potential for catching a deadly virus from society's healers, his response was "based on science and not fear," said Anne W. Crowley, his press secretary.

In that way, the state's position places it at the forefront of a national resistance movement against guidelines adopted in July by the Federal Centers for Disease Control and possibly also against legislation passed by Congress last week.

The federal guidelines, which do not have the force of law, said that health care workers should voluntarily be tested for AIDS and that those infected should be required to inform their patients before performing "exposure-prone" procedures.

The congressional measure, which has not been signed by President Bush, requires that state health departments adopt within one year either the federal guidelines or "guidelines which are equivalent." States that do not could lose millions of dollars in Federal health grants.

But the definition of equivalency was left vague, and apparently will be determined by the director of the Centers for Disease Control, said Jeffrey Levi, director of governmental affairs for the AIDS Action Council in Washington.

Kent Taylor, a spokesman for the Centers for Disease Control, said the agency had not yet studied the bill.

Because New York's proposal is the first to be issued since Congress acted, supporters of the state's position said they hoped that it might influence other states and persuade the Centers for Disease Control to soften its guidelines.

Fault could cause 7.8 earthquake

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A little-studied fault that stretches from California's agricultural heartland to Death Valley could produce a deadly earthquake measuring 7.8 on the Richter scale, a new study shows.

The 154-mile-long Garlock Fault intersects at its southwestern end with the more famous San Andreas Fault at Tejon Pass. The pass is about 35 miles south of Bakersfield at the south end of the San Joaquin Valley, the center of California's farm industry.

Booster club donates equipment to MISD

■ District receives geology books and equipment such as binocular microscope.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Midland science students won't have to squint when they peer into a new binocular microscope, thanks to the Math and Science Boosters.

The binocular-like microscope — which allows the viewer to use both eyes to look into it at the same time — was part of $18,000 in equipment donated to Midland Independent School District at the Tuesday night board meeting.

The booster club also donated $3,000 in geology textbooks to the district.

"This was a group effort," said Mark Pace, public relations chairman of the boosters group and one of its organizers.

"A parent came to us and asked what we could do about the geology textbooks, which were 20 years old," he said.

Jan Artley, MISD science coordinator, said, "We kept waiting to see what was going to be done about book adoption at the state level for science books. Year after year we kept waiting on the state and hanging onto the books."

Pace said the boosters approached exploration managers at local oil companies for the donations to fund the purchase of new geology books "which were in decrepit condition."

The organization received donations from Arco, Chevron, West Texas Geological Society, National Gas Society of the Permian Basin, Sonshine Exploration, Occidental Petroleum and some individuals.

"They provided the money and we provided the channeling of the funds," Pace said.

Pace said Damon Clinical Laboratory in Irving provided the $18,000 worth of high-tech equipment.

"The laboratory is very supportive of endeavors like ours," he said.

The donated equipment includes two variable speed centrifuges and three spectrophotometers to measure anylytes in a fluid. "The spectrophotometer is a pretty standard piece of lab equipment," Pace said. "Various experiments can be conducted to see at what wavelength chemicals absorb light."

Other donated equipment includes a water bath to hold a reaction at a constant temperature, a white blood cell differential counter, the binocular microscope and a scanning densitometer.

"The densitometer is made to read electrophoresis plates," Pace said. "Then students can see the protein breakdown in blood or plants from blood smears. It is a good resource tool for measuring protein quantity and can be used in anatomy or physiology."

Pace said that the equipment was in good condition, but it was stored in a warehouse. "It may have become obsolete for the laboratory for one reason or another," he said. "It may have become too slow for them, or it was not being used for the type of analysis they are doing now.

"The point is," he said, "this type of equipment is sitting around in warehouses all over the nation. Someone just needs to arrange to pick it up. It shows the teachers and students we care when we try to meet their needs."

Board President Ken Marks praised the boosters for their donations as well as their donations of time.

Lou Brown eager to fill offices with Republicans

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Lou Brown readily admits to being a party animal.

And she's a lady about promoting the Republican Party just as she is about the house and ranch.

"I'll put on overalls and traipse all over the ranch and help load wood and bring it home," Mrs. Brown said, "but I can be a lady about it."

This weekend, she and her husband, County Commissioner Win Brown, will head to Cincinnati, to do a bit of her straight-talking in promoting women in the ranks of the Republican Party at the biennial National Federation of Republican Women (NFRW).

"I am very partisan, Mrs. Brown said. "I am very environmental, and I am probably a party animal. I really believe in the party process."

While she is ardently pro-woman in getting more females into politics, Mrs. Brown is eager to fill more political and public offices with Republicans — both men and women.

That's the NFRW's "bottom line," Mrs. Brown said.

"I feel that Republicans are more closely aligned with Americans and their traditional values than are Democrats," she said. "The Republican Party is for less government and believes in the free-enterprise system."

Meanwhile, the 128,000-member NFRW, led by Huda Jones of Kentucky, is revving up its campaign to have more women as delegates to the Republican National Convention. Thirty-five percent of 1988 delegates were women. But that won't do in 1992, when Ms. Jones wants women to be the majority of Republicans.

"Huda's main thrust is to get more women as voting delegates," said Mrs. Brown, who is "going to be working hard to be one of those delegates to get more discerning women into politics and into polling places.

Yankee infielder says he owes much to Casa

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a series highlighting some of the 17 United Way-funded agencies which will benefit from the agency's current annual campaign.

In 1967, a 3-year-old attended his first activity at a community center known as Casa de Ninos.

Velarde

Today, that youngster is an infielder for the New York Yankees and credits much of his success to being led on the right path early in his life at the agency now known as Casa de Amigos.

Randy Velarde, 28, attended Casa for nearly three years as a youngster, taking part in many of the youth activities including, of course, baseball.

Earlier this year, Velarde returned for a dedication ceremony at Casa de Amigos and talked about his life and his motivation to play professional baseball.

"You must open your eyes and establish your goal early in life, and maintain a focus on that goal," Velarde told the youngsters.

He considers his time with Casa was well spent.

"It was definitely positive. When I took part in Casa's activities, it was then called Casa de Ninos. The building was so small and always busy. Now that Casa has expanded tremendously, I can imagine how much more it's helping other kids. I encourage all kids to participate in Casa's programs," he added.

Velarde stressed the importance of an education and told them that a high school diploma is not enough to live comfortably in today's world.

His mother, Olivia Velarde, remembers clearly how Randy first got started at Casa.

Grand jury to question another person in Henry case

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Seven weeks after the disappearance of 17-year-old Elizabeth Henry, at least one more person is expected to be questioned in front of a federal grand jury about the girl while police await laboratory analyses related to the investigation.

Investigators are working with the District Attorney's office and the Assistant U.S. Attorney's office to set up polygraph tests and question individuals who may shed light on what happened to Miss Henry, believed to have been abducted, police said.

Since Ms. Henry's disappearance on Aug. 19, more than 200 people have been interviewed by police.

About nine people — unwilling to voluntarily speak with police — were summoned before a federal grand jury for questioning, said Detective Lt. Earl Luckey of the Midland Police Department. At least one more person will be called before a grand jury, Luckey said.

In addition to the numerous interviews, police have also gathered a "tremendous amount" of evidence, currently being processed by the FBI.

Some of the evidence will require DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) testing.

"It might tell us if she was in certain areas (such as) where we removed some carpet," the lieutenant said.

Results of the DNA testing, which take 90 days, won't be available for another couple of months, but other analysis results may be back within two weeks, Luckey said.

But for now, police are no closer to closing the case than a month ago, Luckey said.

He said that police do have suspects, but declined to comment on how many there are or what their relationships are to the missing girl.

Miss Henry was reported missing after her parents found their home in disarray on Aug. 19 and their daughter gone.

Earlier that day, Miss Henry had made an emergency 911 call for help from her parent's home.

On Aug. 31, 23-year-old Sumner Pendleton, a former boyfriend of Miss Henry's who was among those questioned by police, was found dead from an apparent suicide by carbon monoxide poisoning in the garage of an empty house in northwest Midland.

The FBI and the Texas Rangers have assisted the police in the search for Miss Henry. That search has included an FBI airplane, equipped with a heat-seeking device that detects decomposing bodies, scanning Midland County and a search of vacant buildings in north Midland by real estate agents.

The case of Miss Henry makes three woman who are missing from Midland and have yet to be found.

Woman charged in airline bomb threat

■ Stephenville resident allegedly made bomb threat phone call so friend of hers would not miss Southwest flight.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

A bomb threat that delayed a Southwest Airlines flight in Midland for almost three hours last week was allegedly made by a friend of a woman who was running late and in jeopardy of missing the flight, according to a complaint filed in U.S. District Court.

Dora Elia Torres, 23, was arrested by the FBI on Monday in Stephenville, where she resides, FBI officials said.

Ms. Torres is believed to be responsible for making a bomb threat telephone call to the Southwest Airlines Reservation Center in San Antonio at 4:23 p.m. Oct. 1, according to the complaint.

A female voice told the reservation operator "... there is a bomb on Flight 627, leaving at 4:30 to El Paso," then repeated the message and hung up, the complaint stated.

Flight 627 was held up at Midland International Airport and 27 passengers evacuated. A FBI bomb unit searched the aircraft and luggage but no explosive device was found.

On Oct. 3, the FBI was informed by Louisa Galindo of a conversation she had overheard between Rachel Galindo and Dora Torres that involved the bomb threat.

Daughter sees parents for first time since they fled Vietnam

By Rick Smith
Associated Press

SAN ANGELO — What would she say to her daughter?

Hue Nguyen shook her head and stared at the empty Mathis Field runway.

"It's been so long," she said quietly. "I have no words."

Ten years ago, she and her husband, Than Van Nguyen, left their home in Communist-controlled Vietnam.

"We escaped," Nguyen said simply. "We wanted to gain freedom."

But, to find freedom, they lost a 9-month-old daughter.

"She was so tiny," said Nguyen, shaking his head.

A fisherman, Nguyen captained a boat filled with 50 refugees from his home to Indonesia.

"We had to be quiet," he said. "If the Communists found us, they would kill us. We could not tell the baby to be quiet, not to cry. We had to leave her behind. It was a terrible sacrifice for me. For my wife. But we wanted freedom so much."

They left the baby with Nguyen's parents in Phuoc Tuy, South Vietnam, while the Nguyens and an older daughter traveled with the "boat people" to Indonesia.

Their third child, a son, was born in an Indonesia refugee camp where they spent 16 months.

In 1982, the family found a sponsor who brought them to San Angelo.

Gradually, they adapted to American life.

The parents found work. Both have jobs at Ethicon Inc.

The children attended school.

They learned English, discovered American food, took classes, saved money.

He became a local hero, pulling a stranger's baby from a burning car in 1987.

Kermit man arrested in extortion plot

A 40-year-old Kermit man was arrested Monday for attempting to extort $1 million from an Odessa grocery store by threatening to place contaminated products on the store's shelves, according to the FBI.

John Houston Reed III made an initial appearance before U.S. Magistrate Robert Sykes on Tuesday.

Reed allegedly sent a note to the manager of Thriftway Grocery Stores demanding $1 million or else the writer — calling himself Howard — would put contaminated products in the store, according to a complaint filed with the U.S. District Court.

Menard school district collects money and gives it right back

N.Y. Times News Service

AUSTIN — In the small West Texas town of Menard, the state's new "Robin Hood" school finance law took from the sort-of medium well-to-do and gave it right back to them.

Menard's school district, like the other 1,052 independent school districts in Texas, was placed in one of the new county education districts lawmakers designed solely to spread wealth between rich and poor schools in counties.

But the Menard district is the only one in the Menard County Education District. So officials there had to collect money from the district then give it back.

The exercise actually cost the Menard district about $2,000 for printing and mailing tax bills and administrative costs and more than $7,000 for liability insurance the district purchased for CED board members, even though they are covered under the school district's liability policy.

"That ($9,000) may not seem like much, but to a small school district it's substantial," said Menard Superintendent Jack Patton. The district plans to spend $5,400 each this year to educate its 422 students, which places it well above the 1990-91 estimated statewide average of $4,344 per student.

Menard officials aren't alone in their frustration.

A statewide survey by the Texas Association of School Boards this month found officials in many districts complaining that taxpayers do not understand the new system.

Other officials are criticizing the state for not helping local districts get the new education districts up and running.

"We've all had to forge ahead on our own. We haven't gotten any help from anybody," said Larry Manire, chairman of the Tarrant County CED.

The Texas Education Agency conducted a series of 20 regional workshops in June to answer questions from local officials on the new finance law.

KMID general manager to join KTPX

Staff Report

KMID-TV General Manager John Foster has resigned his post there after 32 years to join a new ownership team at competitor KTPX, station representatives said Tuesday.

Foster will become general manager of KTPX-Channel 9, replacing Dan Robbins, who has been at the station's helm since it was placed into receivership four years ago.

R.H. Drewry Co. of Lawton, Okla., expects to close on its purchase of KTPX by early November, Foster said Tuesday. The purchase already has Federal Communications Commission approval.

Foster worked with Drewry for more than 25 years when the company owned KMID.

Robbins said he expects to be replaced by Foster about Nov. 1.

"We really like Odessa, so I'm going to move into other broadcast situations here," Robbins said.

KMID announced Foster would be replaced on an acting basis by Judy Dillard, now a sales executive at the station.

Foster said his decision to leave KMID was a tough one and expressed his admiration for station owners Joe and Barbara Golfarb, who he said have done "a magnificent job" at KMID, he said.

Drewrey, which has broadcast and cable television interests in several southwestern markets, has wanted to get back into the West Texas market since selling KMID in the early 1980s, Foster said.

The first priority at KTPX will be technical — "providing a good, clean signal throughout the 19 counties covered by Channel 9 and KWAB (Channel 4 in Big Spring)," Foster said.

The new owners plan to upgrade the entire facility, and Foster anticipates an 18-month schedule for installation of new equipment and programs at the station.

BROWN: Couple to attend GOP meeting from Texas" and who was a national Republican delegate in 1984 and 1988.

(From 1B)

Republican delegates are selected "by merit," said Mrs. Brown. Democrats use a "quota system" to ensure that various racial backgrounds are represented in that party's national convention, she said.

Women possess an innate quality, discernment, which would serve politics and the nation well, suggested Mrs. Brown,

"I think women vote more conscientiously than men do,"said Mrs. Brown, a past president of the Texas Federation of Republican Women and a NFRW officer since 1985. Currently, she is NFRW's third vice president.

"They are more discerning. They will look more closely at the races (and) at the personalities. They will look more closely at the issues."

And it is "presumptuous of people to think that the Republican Party doesn't care about women," she said. "It's presumptuous to think that men are not interested in day care for women. And it is presumptuous to believe that women are not interested in foreign policy and in defense issues."

Women's influence in politics is growing as is their interest in national and world affairs.

"I do know that women do register to vote more conscientiously," she said. "It's a proven fact that more women than men try harder to get to the polls on election days."

But "a challenge" of the NFRW is to get more citizens registered to vote and to cast ballots, since "only half of the eligible voters in the United States actually register to vote in any one presidential election year and, then, maybe a third to a half of those who are registered actually vote on election day."

Her interest in grass-roots politics was ignited by almost 30 years ago, in 1962, when local lawyer Barbara Culver campaigned for Midland County judge and became the county's and Texas's first woman Republican county judge and the first Republican on the Midland County Commissioners' Court. Today, four of the court's five members are Republicans.

Judge Culver, who later served on the Texas Supreme Court, won that 1962 election "strictly by the basics" and on her conservative platform designed to bring Midland County "out of the horse-and-buggy days" under Democratic Party control.

"She went out, organized precincts, (participated in) neighborhood coffees, knocked on doors, rang door bells ... (and declared), 'I'm Barbara Culver. I'm running for county judge. I'd appreciate your vote.' "

Mrs. Brown noted women's collective impact on the nation.

"The days of the man being the bread-winner, bringing the money home and allotting it out have been gone for a long time," said Mrs. Brown.

Commissioner Brown noted his wife's "desire to see things get accomplished.

"It's just a natural desire, a desire for the betterment of country, a desire to serve in a public way," Brown said of his wife.

In looking ahead, Mrs. Brown figured that the the United States probably is 10 or 20 years away from the social changes and attitudes that would welcome a woman presidential candidate who has a strong possibility of winning."

"It's not the good, ol' boy syndrome any more," Mrs. Brown said. "The good, ol' boy politician is gone. The men that are winning are not good, ol' boy politicians any more. And for a woman to try to be a good, ol' boy politician is not the vision that other women want."

Meanwhile, Mrs. Brown will continue her rising role in the NFRW, which is an autonomous and self-sustaining affiliate of the Republican Party.

"We say to the Republican Party," Mrs. Brown said, " 'Don't tell us what to do, but let us help you.' "

FLEES: Vietnamese girl reunited with family

(From 1B)

"San Angelo has been good," Nguyen said. "Here, we learned freedom."

They never forgot their daughter.

They exchanged letters with her.

And photographs.

But they were never able to see her, speak to her.

Then, in September, Nguyen became a naturalized U.S. citizen.

It was time, he said, to send for her.

"Once I am a citizen, it is easier to sponsor her, to bring her over," he explained, waiting in the airport Friday night.

Nguyen's other children, daughter Cuc, 13, and son Hoang, 9, sat silently while waiting for their sister to arrive.

Cuc said she looked forward to having a sister.

"My brother's a brat," she said, frowning. "He always goes out and plays with his friend. I don't have a friend near our house, but now I'll have a sister."

Cuc said she and her brother will be able to speak to their sister in Vietnamese.

"She won't have any trouble," Cuc said. "When we came here, I didn't have any trouble, and I had to learn by myself. She's lucky. She'll have me."

The flight from Dallas arrived almost an hour late.

Friends and neighbors of the Nguyens crowded the waiting room at Mathis Field.

At about 10:30 p.m. Friday, Phuong Thi Kim (her name means "Flower in Summer Time") uncertainly stepped out of the plane and walked down the stairway with a airline employee.

Tiny and looking very tired and serious, she wore a yellow pantsuit and neatly made jacket and clutched a small black bag.

She walked quickly into the terminal.

And, into the arms of her mother.

Who held her for the longest time, without saying a word.

MISD: Boosters donate equipment

(From 1B)

"The boosters tutored our youngsters for the science fair," Marks said. "They donated a lot of time to that."

Aside from accepting the donations, trustees approved a resolution which records their objection of the recent congressional redistricting which split Midland County into three districts.

"It's going to be confusing to the voters," said MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr.

The resolution objects to the U.S. Justice Department preclearance under the voting rights act of the U.S. congressional district plan adopted by the 72nd Legislature.

The school board found that "it is the public interest to object to the preclearance."

In other action, three Midlanders were nominated to serve on the Midland Central Appraisal District Board of Directors Tuesday night.

Midland school board trustees nominated Gilbert C. Tompson, David M. Grimes and Margaret Cowden to serve on the five-member board.

They will serve two-year terms beginning Jan. 1.

School board trustees also heard reports on the district's bilingual program.

The money raised will help fund 17 agencies.

A "secret weapon" that is being used to get to the goal faster is a $50,000 matching challenge grant offered by Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. For every new dollar or for each increase over last year's contribution, Parker & Parsley will match it up to $50,000.

The pilot campaign raised $635,201, or 23.1 percent, of the overall goal.

YANKEE: Velarde returns to Casa

(From 1B)

"We lived next door to Casa and one day the teacher asked if Randy would join. His brother was six years older and already in school and she suggested that Randy should have someone to play with during the day," she said.

"Well, we are Catholic and I didn't know about how religion played a part, but the teacher assured me that it didn't matter" that the program was begun by a Methodist church.

Randy credits his father, Lee, as his main inspiration. The elder Velarde nearly signed with a professional baseball team but declined in order to stay with his family.

Casa was established in 1964 by St. Mark's United Methodist Church. It has offered a wide range of programs to eastside residents ever since. The four major programs are senior citizen activities, education, social services and health/dental services.

Casa receives 27 percent of its funding from the United Way. The United Way recognized the importance of the work at Casa and decided to sponsor the organization in 1973.

More than 500 volunteers donate about 7,000 hours annually to the organization. The volunteers fill out a job description and are placed in areas of interest to them.

In 1989, Casa de Amigos received an $888,300 grant from the Mabee Foundation. The money allowed for an addition of 6,000 square feet to the site at 1101 E. Garden Lane, where they moved in 1978. The building now encompasses 18,000 square feet.

More information on Casa de Amigos' programs is available at 682-9701.

GIRL: Henry investigation continues

(From 1B)

Nov. 8, 1986, when she was believed to have been kidnapped. Investigators believe Ms. Gilkerson was killed shortly after her abduction but never have located her body.

Two men are currently serving prison sentences in connection with her abduction: David Alderink, 20 years in the state prison, and Kenneth Wayne Parker, serving two consecutive life sentences in the federal penitentiary.

The two men had schemed to kidnap Ms. Gilkerson — "Alderlink's lover at the time — and sell her into prostitution in Mexico, according to testimony at Parker's trial.

Alderlink testified that the last time he saw Miss Gilkerson, she was handcuffed with her mouth and eyes taped and was with Parker, who allegedly planned the abduction.

The other missing persons case occurred more than 10 years ago.

Kristy Lynne Booth was last seen Feb. 2, 1980 at Dimensions, a now-defunct North Midland nightclub. Ms. Booth, 19 years old at the time, left her coat and shoes with friends at a table while dancing and never returned.

Her parents believe their daughter is dead.

PLOT: Man tries to extort $1 million

(From 1B)

A Murine eye drops bottle, which contained concentrated sulfuric acid, accompanied the letter, the complaint stated.

The manager of the store received telephone calls from "Howard," who repeated the demand and gave instructions where to place the money, the complaint stated.

Reed went to the pick-up site and was arrested following a high-speed chase and admitted the extortion scheme, the complaint said.

Reed's arrest was the result of a 10-week investigation conducted by the Odessa Police Department and the FBI, officials said.

No contaminated products have been found in any Thriftway stores and Reed denied putting any substances in the stores, FBI officials said.

Reed may face up to 20 years in prison and $250,000 in fines for the offense.

CALL: Bomb threat arrest made

(From 1B)

The discussion allegedly revealed that Ms. Torres made the call, the complaint stated.

Louisa Galindo confronted the women, and Rachel Galindo said she did not make the call, the complaint said.

Rachel Galindo, who had a reservation on Flight 627, reportedly had been running late and would miss boarding the aircraft, the complaint indicated.

Ms. Torres allegedly called the airlines "and made the bomb threat in order to delay the flight, so that Rachel Galindo could arrive at the airport before departure," according to the complaint.

On Tuesday, Ms. Torres made an initial appearance before U.S. Magistrate Alex McGlinchey in Fort Worth, the judge said. A detention hearing before McGlinchey is scheduled for Thursday, officials said.

Ms. Torres, who remained jailed in the Johnson County jail in Cleburne on Tuesday, is expected to return to Midland to stand trial, officials said.

Charges against women dropped in illegal radio station case

Staff Report

Charges against an Odessa woman for aiding and abetting the operation of an illegal radio station in Odessa were dismissed on Monday, federal officials said.

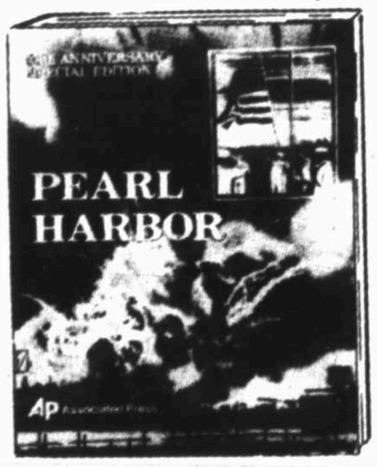

Wendy Ann Barnes had been charged with three others last month in connection with the operation of a pirate radio station that transmitted from West Odessa.

Charges against Barnes were dropped by U.S. Magistrate Robert Sykes because not enough evidence was presented at a preliminary hearing to show that Barnes aided and abetted the operation, officials said.

Three men still remain charged with the misdemeanor offense of operating a radio station without a license, punishable by up to a year imprisonment and fines up to $100,000.

Solo meals don't have to come from a can

By Enid Nemy
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — One day Shirley Herz, a theatrical publicist, decided to follow the advice handed out by the theoretical experts on living alone.

She figured that maybe there was something to the idea of "gracious" solo living, and that it was entirely possible that she was missing something.

So, before she left for her office that morning, Ms. Herz took a steak from the freezer. When she got home that evening, she arranged one perfect place setting on her dining room table, made a shrimp cocktail, broiled the steak, prepared some vegetables, poured a glass of wine, lit a candle and sat down. Her solitary splendor was reflected in a mirrored wall.

"I felt like an absolute fool," she said. "I thought, 'What am I doing?' "

The next night Ms. Herz, who describes herself as "a bit of a slob," went happily back to her old habits, banishing all thoughts of living more tastefully.

She undressed, put on a robe, threw a packaged dinner in the microwave and repaired to the bedroom with her dinner on a tray. She climbed into bed and watched television.

The reality is, if an unscientific survey means anything, that Ms. Herz is as normal as most people living alone.

She is, indeed, not eating as graciously as some, but that "some" is a relatively small percentage. On the other hand, she is certainly more elegant in her habits than a not inconsiderable group of people who will admit to their home-alone practices only on assurance of anonymity.

Basically, what these too-mortified-to-publicly-admit habits consist of is not sitting down at all in dining room, kitchen, living room or bedroom. It is all about eating on the run, although the practitioners may not be running anywhere but to the television set.

These men and women not infrequently take some cheese or a piece of fruit from the refrigerator or pour milk over a bowl of cereal and stand where they are and eat.

At best, they carry the food as is or in a bowl into another room, sit and munch as they read. They do this, too, with Chinese and other take-out food, sometimes not bothering to take it out of its carton.

Women, if they're home, are apparently more inclined than men to eat the same thing several (or more) nights in succession.

Jill Carp, an accountant with Yohalem Gilman & Co., has no qualms about eating water-packed tuna with lettuce and a rice cake every night for a period of time, or Caesar salad or pasta. Liz Logan, articles editor of Mademoiselle magazine, is also happy at home with "a repetition of undemanding standards."

This could mean tuna fish sandwiches or lentil soup with the liquid drained out and poured over spaghetti or other foods she "wouldn't dream of giving to other people." Ms. Logan, who changes into jeans or a bathrobe when she gets home, usually eats on the couch, but "never sits down properly." All of which is perhaps a reaction to years spent as a restaurant critic.

Pasta is a mainstay of both the men and women who rarely cook and those who believe in making themselves a proper meal.

Greg Morton, the art director of Greenhouse Inc., a Chicago advertising agency, is one of them. If he doesn't bring in pizza, he'll make pasta or chicken and eat in the living room from a tray on his lap.

When Lee Hennessee is home, she'll set an attractive tray, but it will hold pasta, a cold cereal (sometimes refilled twice) or something from a take-out shop if she happened to pass by one.

Ms. Hennessee, a vice-president of the Counseling Services Department at Shearson Lehman Brothers, sits on the floor in her bedroom in front of the television, tray perched on a needlepoint stool.

Both Sara Sill and Marcella Rosen belong to the minority category of cooking something simple but eating it properly. Ms. Sill, the finance and development officer of Young Concert Artists, often visits a weekend outdoor market and then makes a stew or a pasta sauce sufficient for several meals.

She usually eats on a stool that fits into her kitchen counter, or at a table in a dining area, but always, she said, "sitting down like a human being — it's a quick way to remove myself from the day."

Marcella Rosen, an executive vice-president at the Ayer advertising agency, has a large sunny kitchen with a table and she does most of her eating alone there.

"I cook something simple," she said, "but it would be a dinner I could serve to anyone. I put it on pretty china, sometime I have a glass of wine. I enjoy every detail."

Susanna Porter, a senior editor at Bantam Books, considers food her reward at the end of the day. But the rewarding dinner comes at an untraditional hour — sometime between 10:30 p.m. and midnight.

"I work until 7 or 7:30 p.m.," said Ms. Porter. "Then I'll run or putter and then I'll do some work at the kitchen table reading and editing."

When work is finished or hunger pangs really strike, she'll start cooking, often an elaborate pasta, and then push the books and manuscripts aside, have a glass of wine and eat. " I can't have wine and then work, and I tend not to want to eat early anyway," she said.

'Light' bread passes 'kid' test

By Linda Anderson

Why jump on one bandwagon when you can jump on two at the same time? Rainbo now has a new member in its family of breads — Rainbo Light Oat Bran Sandwich Bread. Not only is this a light bread (only 40 calories per slice, according to label advertising), but it contains oat bran, which has been a trendy dietary addition for the last couple of years.

Anderson

We bought a loaf and took it home to check it out for taste, price and advertising accuracy. I didn't tell the young taste-tester that the bread was both light and made with oat bran — I wanted her honest opinion about the taste and if she knew what the bread was made of, she'd never even taste it.

A 24-ounce loaf of Rainbo Light Oat Bran Sandwich Bread cost $1.59, which is a lot more than I'm used to paying but probably not much more than other brand-name breads.

Label advertising was kind of elaborate, for a loaf of bread: "Rainbo Light Oat Bran contains a delicious combination of oat bran and vegetable fiber. Each full slice of Rainbo Light Oat Bran Bread contains only 40 calories per slice (one third less calories than regular Oar Bran Bread) and no cholesterol. That makes Rainbo Light Oat Bran the perfect complement to a low fat, low cholesterol diet.

"So try the light bread that makes eating healthy easier to do. Great tasting Rainbo Light Oat Bran Bread."

Nutrition information claimed each 40-calorie slice (and there's supposed to be 32 in a loaf) contains 3 grams protein, 8 grams carbohydrates and less than 1 gram fat.

Ingredients list was a little scary. The main ingredients, in order, are water, wheat flour, alpha cellulose (I guess that's the above-mentioned vegetable fiber, but I don't know), wheat gluten, oat bran, corn syrup and honey. Those last two are sugar, and oat bran is listed fifth.

The bread itself was what you might call pretty decent. It tasted like a cross between wheat bread and white bread. My young taste-tester didn't doubt for a minute that it was white bread — the fact that she ate it (except for a piece or two of crust) and said it was good proves that.

The bread had the soft texture we have grown to know and love. If you didn't know it was "light" and made with oat bran, you might think it was just regular bread.

I liked it. I'll probably buy it once in a while. It's a little expensive for everyday use, though.

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Price at other locations may vary.

Plan ahead for trick-or-treat safety

Staff Report

The trickest thing about Halloween may be letting children have fun, while keeping them safe. Halloween traditions, like "trick or treating," may hold some very real hazards for children in the '90s. Fortunately, however, sensible precautions can help keep your little goblins safe and happy this year.

Weight Watchers will be distributing reflective stickers and safety tips free of charge to the public beginning Oct. 15 at its centers and meeting locations. "The stickers can be placed on children's costumes to make them more visible on Hallowween night," said Mignon Braun, area manager for Weight Watchers. "Many of our members have children so we wanted to help them have a pleasant, worry-free holiday."

"Playing it Safe®," the national award winning, nonprofit children's safety program and Weight Watchers, have drawn up this list of Halloween safety tips that everyone shold be aware of:

■ Start out safe, with costumes. According to the National Safety Council, most Halloween accidents are caused by falls. Check to make sure that children can walk easily and move freely, without tripping over dragging hems or getting tangled in their costumes. Have children wear comfortable shoes when trick or treating.

■ Light colors are more visible in the dark. Tape or sew reflective tape onto costumes to increase visibility.

■ Avoid masks. They can too easily obsure vision and cause adicents. Instead, use creative makeup or "face painting." Make sure to choose makeup labeled "non-toxic." Fasten all wigs, hats or headpieces securely on your child's head, so they can't slip over the face.

■ Provide a trick or treat bag with reflective stickers that glow in the dark.

■ Never allow children under the age of twelve to go trick or treating without an adult. Accompany them yourself, or send your children with a trusted neighbor or friend.

■ For older children, make sure they trick or treat in a group. Have your children draw you their route — keep a copy for yourself and have them take a copy. Do not allow them to deviate from this route. Give firm instructions about any potential hazards along the route, such as empty houses or vacant lots, and allow children to go only to houses that are brightly lighted.

■ Set a time for older children to be back home. Make sure they have a watch and can stick to the rules.

■ Never allow children to go into anyone's house, unless they know them very well, while waiting for a treat.

■ Send children trick or treating with a flashlight.

■ Make sure children understand and follow all traffic safety rules, such as crossing at corners and waiting for green lights.

■ Make one ironclad rule — no matter what age, have children bring all treats home before eating them. Check treats carefully. Discard all homemade treats and fruit. Save only treats wrapped and sealed by the company that made them. Check to make sure no packaging has been damaged or broken.

DEAR ABBY

Daughter's search for dad ends happily

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: About 20 years ago my parents divorced. My mother kept my father's whereabouts unknown, and eventually all contact was lost. When I turned 18 and left home, I tried to no avail to locate my father. I gave up after six years, until I read a letter in your column. You gave the address for the Salvation Army, which has a Missing Persons Service to help find close relatives. I contacted them, and yesterday I received a telephone call from my father!

Van Buren

Many years have passed and he has a new family, but I hope we can build a relationship now.

Thank you, Abby, from the bottom of my heart, for making this possible. Please publish the information about the Salvation Army at least once a year. Maybe there can be other happy endings. — YVETTE IN NEWPORT BEACH, CALIF.

DEAR YVETTE: No need to thank me. That's what I'm here for.

Readers, the Salvation Army operates a Missing Persons Locator Service in 90 countries throughout the world. This service is available to the public. Those interested should be aware of the following basic guidelines:

1. The inquirer should be searching for a near relative. Please do not request a search for old classmates, sweethearts, wartime buddies, friends or neighbors. And do not ask to find runaway adult children or someone owing you money.

2. The inquirer must be able to provide essential information about the missing person.

3. The Salvation Army reserves the right to accept or reject any request for services based upon consideration of reasonableness, feasibility or notice.

4. The inquirer is asked to forward a $10 non-refundable donation.

5. The inquirer may secure information and/or a missing persons inquiry form by contacting the nearest Salvation Army office in his area or by contacting the nearest Territorial Headquarters.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I have no children, but we plan to try in the near future. If we have a son, my wife wants to name him after me.

The problem is I already have a son named after me from my first marriage, and I don't think it would be right to have two half-brothers with the same name. It could cause them both problems in the future with bank accounts, charge accounts, loans, wills, etc.

My wife seems to think these would be only minor inconveniences. I don't see it that way.

Am I wrong for saying no to naming another son after me? And can you offer a possible solution to this problem? — H.J.K. Jr.

DEAR H.J.K. JR.: You are not wrong. If that's the way you truly feel, why not reverse the first and middle names? Instead of "Henry Joseph Klophammer" (not your real name), name him "Joseph Henry Klophammer."

This one's for everybody, from teens to seniors! To purchase Abby's new booklet, "The Anger in All of Us and How to Deal With It," send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Anger Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Forget past mistakes. In late fall, an older person offers you excellent career advice. Learn to delegate time-consuming tasks. A creative venture begun early in 1992 could bring lasting fame and fortune. Put in those extra hours that will make your work truly outstanding! Investing your money wisely next June will bring improved dividends.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: "Beatle" John Lennon, singer Jackson Browne, author Bruce Catton, baseball's Brian Downing.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Wake up and recognize what is really important to your mate's happiness. Material possessions count for less than affection and understanding. Become a better listener. Discretion is essential.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Avoid looking to other people for motivation. Find it within yourself. The business and employment outlook will improve soon. Do not jump off into the unknown. Stick to the safe and familiar.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You deserve better friends than those you are associating with now. Widen your social circle. A bonus is not the whole answer to your financial worries. Look for another source of income.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be aware of what is going on behind the scenes at work. You need all the information you can get to negotiate a profitable business deal. Your family's financial security is involved.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A phone call or letter triggers a bright idea. Do your research now, but postpone making a presentation until you have the attention of those in authority. Remain both objective and prudent.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Wait a little longer before popping an important question. Some news regarding a family dinner proves very interesting. Cheer up someone who is feeling under the weather.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Recognize that there are no shortcuts to success and you will be ahead of the game. A work problem is not nearly as serious as it seems. A good evening for entertaining.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A close relationship becomes more rewarding. A period of relaxation will help you return to work feeling refreshed. You feel like a new person! Let others discover your great sense of humor.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Stay the course. A positive attitude is the key to winning a competition. If concentration is difficult, take an occasional brief break. Romance needs more time to grow.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A chance meeting with an old love leaves you feeling full of vigor. Take care to finish all business projects on time. An evening shopping expedition could uncover some real bargains.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The emphasis now is on finishing what you start. Tackling too many things at one time could land you in hot water. Establish your priorities and stick to them. Persistence pays off!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A friendship may be more valuable than a current romance. Performing a favor for someone will work to your advantage. Keep a tight rein on your personal spending.

Among contemporary bridge players, few have had more impact on the game than Alvin Roth of New York. Many of the methods considered standard today were his brain-children four decades ago! Besides being a great theoretician, Roth is also a great player. Few can equal his "feel" at the table—a hunch that some untoward action can reap huge dividends. To show what we mean, consider this hand where Roth held the West cards.

If anyone gave you the West hand and asked you if you would double three no trump, you would think your questioner had been nipping at the brandy bottle too assiduously. Yet that is exactly what Roth did. The auction made it clear that North-South had stretched to reach game and, while it was possible that nine tricks were there for the taking, it was equally likely a substantial penalty could be in the offing.

Roth hit upon the only lead to ensure the contract's defeat—a spade. Declarer had nine tricks in plain sight, but first had to gain the lead. The best chance seemed to be to rise with the queen of spades, losing to East's king.

Declarer was in considerable difficulty. Since a heart or a club discard would, in essence, be throwing away a trick, declarer parted with a diamond. That proved disastrous.

East shifted to a diamond, won by West's jack. A spade to the ace and a diamond back meant the defenders collected the first nine tricks—four spades and five diamonds—for a whopping penalty of 900 points.

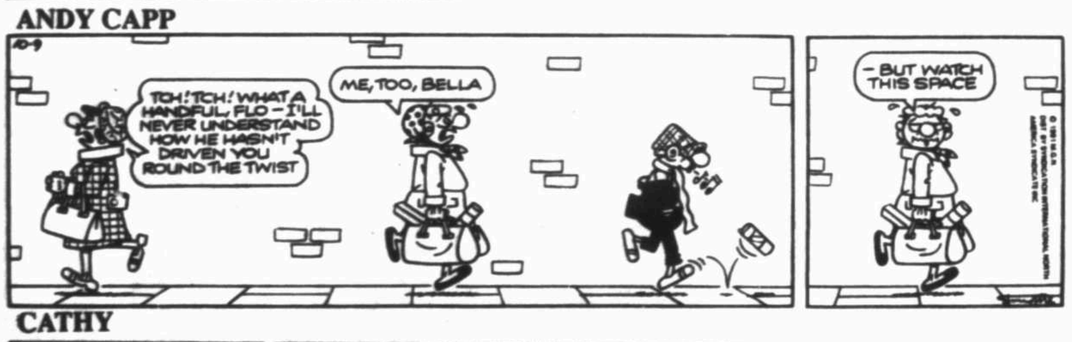

A thoroughly satisfactory ending to what even Roth had to admit was a speculative double.

Thatcher to receive honorary degree from Kuwait University

KUWAIT CITY — Margaret Thatcher, the former British prime minister, is getting an honorary degree from Kuwait University in gratitude for her support during Iraq's invasion.

Thatcher

"This is the least we could do for the lady whose words were a balm to the wounds of our people inside and outside Kuwait during the occupation," said Rasha al-Sabah, a university spokeswoman.

The proposal was expected to be approved in two weeks by the Higher University Council, she said.

The university hopes Thatcher will travel to Kuwait in February to receive the Ph.D. in political science during Kuwait's National Day and Liberation Day celebrations.

Thatcher was prime minister when Iraq invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2, 1990. She resigned Nov. 28.

BRANSON, Mo. — What brought Willie Nelson to the Ozarks?

"Just instincts," Nelson told reporters Tuesday in announcing plans to be the latest country-music star to open a theater in Branson next spring.

"I just think it's the thing to do. I've been here before and met a lot of nice people. A lot of my friends are here already. It just makes sense for me to come here."

The Gatlin Brothers plan to open a theater here next year. So will Johnny Cash and Andy Williams. Ray Stevens, Mel Tillis, Boxcar Willie and other country groups already have theaters in this popular southwest Missouri resort.

Nelson said he doesn't expect his theater to make enough money next year to pay off his $17 million tax debt. He was billed $16.7 million by the Internal Revenue Service last year for back taxes. He blamed the debt on poor financial management.

SANTA ANA, Calif. — Lily Tomlin says she can always spot a fan who finds her disappointing in real life.

Tomlin

"You can tell by the looks on their faces that they would just as soon I didn't show up at all, so as to keep up this illusion they have of me," Tomlin said.

"People give me too much credit," she said, adding that she doesn't write her own material and doesn't consider herself a good writer.

"I live in fear that my correspondence will be published. I'm thinking of stopping all correspondence from now on and resorting only to phone calls," she said in an interview published Tuesday in The Orange County Register.

Tomlin's new film, "The Search for Signs of Intelligent Life in the Universe," opens Friday.

Bob Dylan has two key ideas for songwriters: make songs meaningful, and get some music education. "If nobody wrote any songs from this day on, the world ain't gonna suffer for it," Dylan said in an interview published in the October issue of SongTalk, the journal of the National Academy of Songwriters.

WINDHOEK, Namibia — Britain's Queen Elizabeth II was welcomed Tuesday by singers and traditional dancers in this year-old desert country, the only member of the Commonwealth she had never visited before.

The queen and her husband, Prince Philip, also received a 21-gun salute. They reviewed a special honor guard of Namibian soldiers trained by the British Army since independence.

The British royals were met at the airport by President Sam Nujoma, a former guerrilla leader who came to power when Namibia received independence from South Africa last year.

From Namibia, the queen will travel to neighboring Zimbabwe for next week's Commonwealth summit in Harare.

Namibia has about 2 million people. It was never a British colony, the usual requirement for belonging to the 50-nation Commonwealth. Rather, Namibia was administered by South Africa when South Africa belonged to the Commonwealth.

DOWELLTOWN, Tenn. — Jason Sheppard, the son of country singer T.G. Sheppard, and two other men are safe after they were trapped in a cave for almost 48 hours.

The three, all in their mid-20s and from the Nashville area, emerged unhurt Monday from Indian Grave Cave, said Buddy Parker, emergency management agency director for DeKalb County.

They entered the cave Saturday afternoon and became trapped after climbing down a 35-foot cliff about a mile inside. Rescuers helped them out.

"They were pretty well experienced and had planned an overnight trip but weren't prepared with ropes," Parker said.

Group to crack down on illegal vehicle tags

EL PASO (AP) — Hundreds of callers are tattling on neighbors who are Texas residents but are avoiding paying local taxes by putting less expensive New Mexico license plates on their cars.

Tax crusader Orlando Fonseca II said he's received more than 300 reports of the license plates abuse since announcing last week that his group Taxation Without Representation was launching a crackdown on such drivers.

"The phone is ringing off the wall," Fonseca said. "I've gotten some angry calls from people who say that we're using gestapo tactics. But that's ridiculous. We're turning in cars, not people."

El Paso County Tax Assessor Collector Jimmy Hicks said his office will enforce Project Lookout. He will collect reports from Fonseca's group and notify vehicle owners they are violating the law.

Under Texas law, a person has 30 days from the date the person moved to the state to change the vehicle registration or risk a $200 fine plus other fees related to title transfer.

Texas drivers also are required to show proof of liability insurance, pass vehicle safety inspections and meet emission control standards that do not apply in New Mexico and can increase the cost of registering a car.

Fonseca said many of his tag tattlers tell him of luxury cars with New Mexico plates.

Leland left bank overdraft, restaurant bill

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — The House bank was holding approximately $30,000 in overdrafts and the members' restaurant some $10,000 in unpaid tabs for Rep. Mickey Leland of Houston when he was killed in a 1989 plane crash, says a source familiar with the matter.

The overdrafts were deducted from a death annuity paid to Leland's widow, but the restaurant bills apparently have never been settled, the source said.

Records in Harris County Probate Court regarding Leland's estate indicate that neither the House nor the franchise operator of its restaurant has filed a claim to recover any unpaid dining bills.

The Leland case is the latest in an escalating scandal involving easygoing financial arrangements for House members.

The Government Accounting Office reported recently that 134 lawmakers wrote 4,325 bad checks during the first half of 1990. The overdrafts were covered by the bank without any interest or penalties being charged to the members.

It was then disclosed that the members had stiffed the House restaurant for some $300,000 in unpaid tabs.

The House voted last week to close the bank and now is requiring that members pay for meals when they are served.

In Leland's case, it was unclear how many checks were involved or how long they had been held when he died in a plane crash in Ethiopia in mid-August 1989.

Shortly after Leland's death, the source said, his widow, Alison Leland, was paid a death annuity, initially valued at $89,500. The approximately $30,000 in overdrafts was deducted before the benefit, amounting to one-year's pay for a House member, was paid.

Ted Dinkins, the Houston attorney who is administrator of the Leland estate, said he was refusing to comment on questions that could not be answered from the public record.

Mrs. Leland could not be reached for comment.

Probate of Leland's estate is a tangle of conflicting claims. By the latest assessment, claims against the estate total $262,338 and Leland's share of the couple's community property is $226,373.

According to a congressional source familiar with such payments, the proceeds of Leland's annuity would have been paid directly to his widow and is not subject to probate.

Girl drinks from cup containing cocaine residue

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A 15-month-old girl suffered convulsions and was hospitalized after drinking water from a cup that contained cocaine residue, police said.

The cup was left in a house the girl's family had just moved into, said police, who were told by the girl's mother and stepfather and other witnesses that a drug dealer previously lived in the house.

The child was taken by ambulance Sunday morning to Santa Rosa Children's Hospital, where a spokeswoman said Monday she could not release the girl's condition.

Police filed a report after nurses noticed a white powder on the girl's hand and ordered a drug-screening test, which came back positive for cocaine, investigators reported.

The parents told police they moved into the home Saturday and were cleaning the house when they found a cup with white powder in it.

The stepfather told police he tried to wash out the cup before giving the girl a drink of water. He told police he could not remove a white crusty film from the cup.

No charges have been filed in the case, and the Texas Department of Human Services was investigating.

Volleyball games scheduled for Tuesday night at both Midland Lee and Midland High were called off because of a conflict with statewide Texas Assessment of Academic Skills (TASS) tests that were administered. Lee's District 4-5A match against San Angelo has been rescheduled for Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at the Lee gymnasium. MHS's non-district match with Seminole will not be rescheduled.

Team doctors have reportedly recommended that Joe Montana immediately undergo surgery on the torn tendon in his right elbow.

Montana's elbow

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Joe Montana has been told by San Francisco 49ers team doctors that he should undergo elbow surgery, but the three-time Super Bowl MVP is still seeking other medical opinions.

Any surgery would end Montana's 1991 season as well as threaten his career with the 49ers, who have won four Super Bowls with Montana as their quarterback.

"It's time we address the situation if is not going to get better," 49ers president Carmen Policy said. "If rest and rehabilitation is not going to get Joe back onto the field this season then it's time to say, 'Let's get a start on whatever gives us the best opportunity that will get him back for next season.' That seems to be surgery."

A source close to the 49ers and another source close to Montana said Tuesday that team doctors have recommended surgery to repair a torn tendon in his right elbow.

However, the 35-year-old quarterback was seeking opinions from other specialists, one source said.

"If some other doctor says he doesn't need surgery, he might decide to go with that opinion," the source close to Montana said. "But otherwise, it seems surgery is likely."

Team officials have viewed surgery as a foregone conclusion since Saturday, when Montana experienced a flareup of pain in his elbow during a workout.

Twins win ALCS opener

■ Minnesota jumps out to a five-run lead and holds on for a 5-4 win in Game 1 of the American League Championship Series.

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The Minnesota Twins keep winning at the Metrodome — even when they have to survive their home to do it.

The Twins won their seventh straight postseason game at the Dome as Jack Morris escaped a Toronto comeback to beat the Toronto Blue Jays, 5-4 in Game 1 of the American League playoffs Tuesday night.

For two teams that play a lot of games indoors, it wasn't a very pretty display. There were balls lost in the lights and more than a few misjudged drives to the gaps. The best-of-7 series continues Wednesday afternoon.

Minnesota, which went from the AL West cellar last season to win the division this year, built an early lead on uncharacteristic speed and held on with a strong bullpen performance.

It kept the Twins postseason perfect in PITTSBURGH — Even stars can get the shakes in October.

Doug Drabek had them last year. Tom Glavine has them now.

Nothing wrong with that. Who wouldn't before their first really big game?

"It's natural to feel that way at this time of year," Pirates pitching coach Ray Miller said as Pittsburgh and Atlanta prepared for tonight's playoff opener.

"The thing you don't want to see is that look on their face," he said. "It's a look we've all seen. You see fear in their eyes. It's happened to the best players. You try to talk to them, and all you see is white spots, things you've never seen before. Then you know you're in trouble."

On Tuesday, the teams tried to play down the pressure that will build and

Timlin, Stanton put Midland on baseball map

■ Mike Stanton and Mike Timlin, both Midland High products, are in the major league playoffs and might play each other in the World Series.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

As decorated as Midland's sports history has been, it has never experienced anything as rare as what could very well happen next week.

Stanton

Timlin

The magical battles that have been staged on the football field between Midland Lee and Odessa Permian, and the fair amount of future NBA stars that have passed through Midland on junior college pit stops are almost commonplace when compared to what will occur should the Atlanta Braves and Toronto Blue Jays advance to the 1991 World Series.

It's understandable if most of Midland will be rooting for a Braves-Blue Jays World Series.

If Toronto eliminates the Minnesota Twins in this week's American League playoff series, and if Atlanta defeats Pittburgh in the National League, two former Midland High teammates — Toronto middle reliever Mike Timlin and Atlanta set-up man Mike Stanton — will quite likely pitch against each other in the Series.

The fact that two pitchers from the same high school made it to the majors is unlikely enough; that two pitchers from a town the size of Midland could throw against each other in the Series is probably unequalled.

"Isn't that something?" is all Timlin's mother, Sharon, can say when she thinks about the possibilities. Mrs. Timlin will travel across the Canadian border this weekend for Games 3, 4 and 5 (if necessary) in the American League championship series between Toronto and Minnesota.

"I'm extremely excited, and very proud," Mrs Timlin said. "It's something he's wanted to do every since he was 9 years old.

"I can remember he used to lay in front of the television and say to me 'Mom, wouldn't it be great if all I had to do was play baseball?' "

Former Midland High School baseball coach Tim Whalen coached both Mikes in the early '80s.

"I think more than anything it's a tribute to those kids that they put forth the effort to excel to the level they have," Whalen, now assistant athletic director for Midland schools, said.

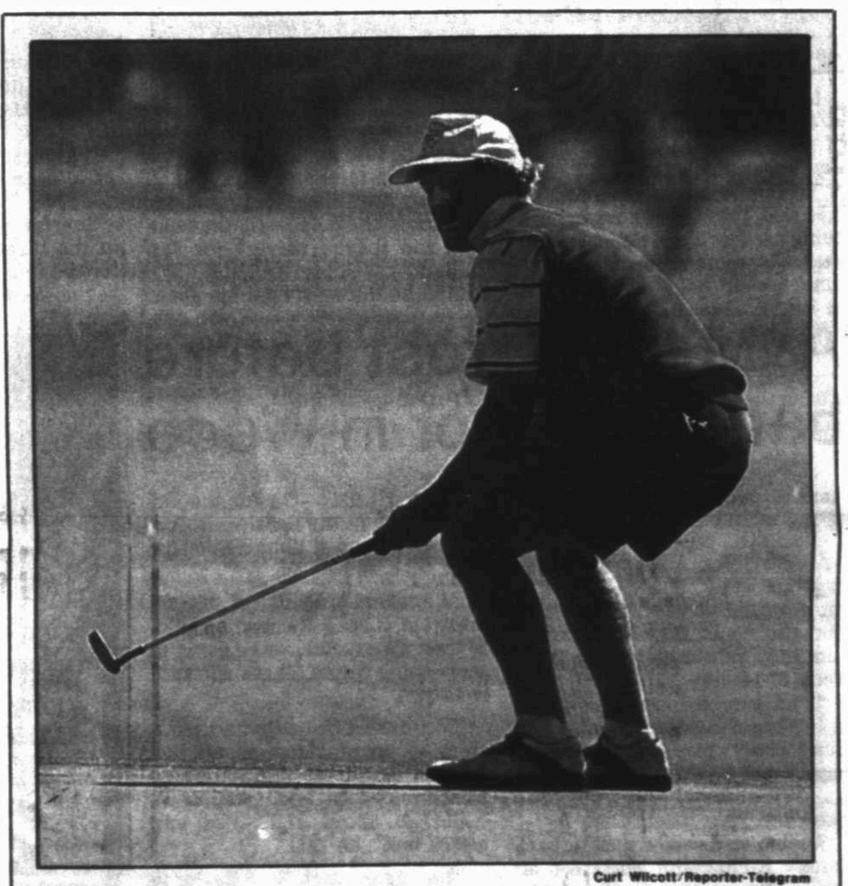

Stanton graduated in '83; Timlin in '84. The '82-'83 season — in which MHS finished third in District 4-5A — had the future major leaguers on the same team.

Seeing both on the mound, though, almost didn't happen, as Timlin recalls.

"I had always played centerfield," he said. "I was in my sophomore year, and I didn't want to pitch. (Former assistant) Coach (Eddie) McHugh wanted me to pitch and he told me to get on the mound.

"Coach Whalen then stepped in and had to tell me to pitch, and that made me kind of mad, so I started to throw really hard."

ODESSA — Midland College rebounded from its sluggish start, but not quite enough to land top honors in the Mission Dorado National Intercollegiate Invitational.

The Chaparral Green team finished in second, seven shots off first-place McLennan Community College's 895 total for the 54 hole tournament at The Club at Mission Dorado.

MC closed the tournament with a 294, low round not only for Tuesday's play, but also for the entire tournament. The Chaps completed play with a 902 for the three rounds.

"That's what cost us," MC head coach Delnor Poss said of the team's slow start, a 312 over the first 18 holes Monday. "I was really proud of the way they came back."

Darren Eckhardt shot two consecutive 71s to finish the tournament at 2-under, which tied him for fifth in individual medalist honors with New Mexico Military's Qyiond Rojahn.

Teammate Darren Griff, a member of the MC gold team, finished at 223, seventh in the individual race.

Lee vs. Permian: More than a game

Lines began forming at 5 a.m. Tuesday morning at Memorial Stadium as Midland Lee season ticket holders practiced the West Texas rite of standing in line.

Williamson

That can only mean that the Lee-Permian football weekend is upon us. The general public will get its chance at some of the 20,000 or so seats today when the ticket office opens at 8 a.m.

Lee vs. Permian will most likely be another sellout. In fact, it would only be news if it wasn't.

Since 1983 this annual rivalry has become more than a high school football game. It is part of the heritage of Midland and Odessa. It is part of community pride. It is having a ticket. It is winning and losing on a big scale. It is part of the very social structure of the Permian Basin.

It's very much like the oil industry that fueled these two cities during their growth peaks. Gamble big and the payoff is big. Hit the dry hole and lose the bank. Boom or bust. There is no in between. Leaners don't count. And what ever happens is as good or bad as last year's results.

Yes, Lee vs. Permian is a mirror of our West Texas life. James Michner, in his novel "Texas" spent a great deal of time trying to explain (I might add without total success) why high school football is part of the lore and heritage of Texas. It became the fiber that welded together small communities when Texas was rural and agricultural by nature. It was instant identity. Towns across the Lone Star State went to great — and sometimes illegal — lengths to insure that there was an identity to be had on the football field.

These may be 15 to 18 year-old kids on the field, but they carry much of the weight of Permian Basin social conscience on their shoulders when they take to the field. Some say this is misguided emphasis. Others will point to these two teams as the pride of the cities involved. Without siding with right and wrong, Lee vs. Permian is important to Midland and Odessa if for no other reason than people think it is.

H.G. Bissinger's book "Friday Night Lights" did little to break up the enthusiasm of West Texas' "magnificent obsession." Permian being barred from the state playoffs last year for illegal workouts didn't loosen the ticket crunch.

Also, the two teams haven't done anything to subtract from the success equation. Both are undefeated and the District 4-5A championship is on the line. This game seldom has playoff implications since both are usually in the state's run for roses — win or lose.

But if championships really matter in the Permian Basin, there are only two of any significance — the Lee vs. Permian championship and the state championship.

Others (Midland High, Abilene High, Abilene Cooper, Odessa High, etc.) may feel left out of this passing rite, but no one ever said that the Lee-Permian mystique has to last forever. All it will take for change to occur is for one of the above mentioned teams to start beating Lee and Permian — on a regular basis.

Then, and only then, will there be a status shift. But regardless, high school football will probably remain with us as one of the woven athletic fabrics of West Texas society as we know it.

Good or bad, and much has been written on both sides of the argument, Lee vs. Permian is more than a football game — by Permian Basin choice.

Gibbs figures defenses to dominate OU-Texas

Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Oklahoma coach Gary Gibbs figures that whichever team wins Saturday's game between the Sooners and Texas likely won't score many points in the process.

"When you go back and look at the history of this series, most of the games have been hard-fought, defensive struggles," Gibbs said Tuesday at his weekly news conference.

"Texas is a dominant defense. We're very good on defense. Not dominant, but very good. I just think when you factor the defenses into the equation, it's going to be a hard-fought struggle."

And neither team has been lighting up the scoreboard, anyway. Sixth-ranked Oklahoma (4-0) scored 40 points in its opener against Division I-AA North Texas and 55 the following week, but has followed that with 27 points against Virginia Tech and 29 last week against Iowa State.

Texas (1-2) scored 6 and 10 points in losses to Mississippi State and Auburn, respectively. The Longhorns scored 28 last week in a victory over Rice.

Only seven times since 1970 has the winning team scored more than 30 points. Since 1980, the average winning score has been 27-14. Oklahoma hasn't given up a rushing touchdown to the Longhorns since the third quarter of the 1983 game, a span of 29 quarters.

The Longhorns, Gibbs said, "have one of the dominant defensive teams in the country, if not THE dominant team." He said many people consider Texas' front line, led by end Shane Dronett, the top unit in the nation.

In discussing the Longhorns' slow start on offense, Gibbs said they were hurt at times by turnovers.

"I see a quarterback (Peter Gardere) who's a winner. I see some quality, quality running backs," he said.

Oklahoma's stable of quality running backs has been depleted due to injuries. Starter Dewell Brewer injured a knee in the Iowa State game and could miss up to six weeks. Earnest Williams, the team's fastest player, missed last week's game due to a toe injury. He is expected to play Saturday, but his availability is questionable.

That leaves senior Mike Gaddis as the starter. Ironically, this will be Gaddis' first start since the Texas game of 1989, when he suffered a severe knee injury early in the second half while making a turn in the open field.

Gaddis saw extended playing time last week, carrying 26 times for 118 yards.

Oklahoma's fullbacks have not produced as well as expected this season, and Texas traditionally is strong against the rush. But if the Sooners aren't able to run as well as they would like, Gibbs is confident they will have some success throwing.

Sophomore Cale Gundy has had two straight 200-yard passing games, a school record. He threw for three touchdowns against Iowa State and continues to impress his coaches.

"We feel better about our throwing game now that we've had a chance with Cale finishing last season, then going through spring practice and fall practice," Gibbs said.

"The defensive back play at Texas is outstanding. We'll match up better (than a year ago) because I think we'll have more confidence."

Last season, for the second straight year, Texas put together a late drive to win the game. The score in 1989 was 28-24; last year, it was 14-13.

In last year's game, after Texas had taken the lead with two minutes left, the Sooners drove to the Longhorns' 29-yard line but missed a last-second field goal.

"We want to win. It's a tremendous feeling to go down there and defeat Texas, it just hasn't worked out for us," Gibbs said.

"We're anxious to play, but we've got to keep our focus. This is an important ball game, but it doesn't have a bearing on the Big Eight Conference race or the Southwest Conference race."

Rangers drop five players, offer AAA assignment

ARLINGTON — The Texas Rangers dropped five players from their major league roster Tuesday and offered them an outright assignment to Class AAA Oklahoma City of the American Association.

Pitcher Mike Jeffcoat, catchers Mark Parent and Mike Stanley and infielders Mario Diaz and Gary Green have the right to refuse the assignment and become free agents.

Jeffcoat exercised that right immediately, and the others were asked to notify the Rangers of their intentions this week. They also are expected to refuse the assignment and become free agents.

Texas also reinstated pitchers Brad Arnsberg, John Barfield and Scott Chiamparino and infielder Jeff Kunkel.

Gamez predicts a 59 at Vegas

Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — A score in the 50's, Robert Gamez said, is not out of the question this week in the Las Vegas Invitational.

"I think we could see a 59," Gamez said Tuesday of a new course being used on a one-time basis this year. The score represents the all-time low 18 holes in PGA Tour history.

"I'll happily take all wagers," responded Jim Colbert, who designed the course and is a co-owner of the Sunrise Golf Club. "It's a little short for these guys, but 59 has only been shot one time as far as I know, the hole is still the same size and they're playing for $1.5 million."

And he knows something about the pressures of playing for big-money purses. Colbert won $202,500 last weekend as the winner of the Vantage Championship, the richest event on the Senior PGA Tour.

Sunrise replaces Spanish Trail in the three-course rotation used for the five-day, 90-hole event that begins Wednesday.

A&M takes rest before battling Baylor in Waco

Associated Press

COLLEGE STATION — Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum said Tuesday this week off should give injured Aggie players time to heal but also could slow the momentum they built in defeating Texas Tech 37-14.

"I have mixed emotions about it," Slocum said. "I'm glad we don't have to play from the injury aspect, but a part of me wants to go out somewhere and play Saturday."

Slocum said senior quarterback Bucky Richardson will rest all week, after spraining a toe in the Tech game. He had been hobbled since Sept. 14 with a sprained arch, which he hurt against Louisiana State.

Although he was hurt Saturday, Richardson guided A&M to 443 yards in total offense and ran for three short-yardage scores as No. 21-ranked A&M — 3-1 for the season and 1-0 in the Southwest Conference — won at Lubbock for the first time since 1985.

"We weren't doing any big secrets out there," Richardson said. "When we execute, we're going to score some points. That's all there is to it."

Slocum said his team had something to prove. "Most people had written us out of the Southwest Conference race, and if we lost we could go ahead and write ourselves out," he said.

The Aggies catch No. 8 Baylor (5-0) at Waco on Oct. 19. The Bears are off to their best start since 1980 and play Rice at Waco this Saturday.

"Everything is scary about them," Slocum said. "They have all the ingredients of a solid team. They have no weaknesses."

GOLF: Chaps play next week

(From 1C)

Mark Woods, of Western Texas College and Mikko Rantanen, of McLennan, finished tied for top medalist honors in regulation play, both with 217s. Woods birdied the first playoff hole in sudden death to lay claim to the individual trophy.

Despite shooting the tourney's low round Tuesday. MC was not without its problems. Shaun Bishop, 3-under heading into No. 12, ended with a 7-over, 79, while Steve Armstrong, shooting even par after 11, finished at 3-over for the day.

Armstrong attributed the team's problems to its slow start, and also the absence of the dominating player it's had the last two years in Dean Robertson and Andrew Coltart.

"We had one player last year who would always shoot really good, and everyone fed off him, in Andrew," Armstrong said. "We can't let (his absence) stop us, though. That's the secret."

Added Poss: "We don't have someone like Andrew who can come out every day and is capable of shooting three or four under every round. But I think this year we have more players with the potential to shoot even par every day than we did last year.

"Grant Thomson played very well, Darren Summers, a freshmen, was steady, and Darren Griff had an exceptionally good tournament. Steve Armstrong was also very consistent."

The Chaps next take to the road Oct. 16-18 in the Bossier (La.) Parrish Community College tournament.

Red Sox unexpectedly fire Morgan

Associated Press

BOSTON — While other manager's jobs were in danger, most people thought Boston's Joe Morgan was safe. Now he's out, too.

Morgan

In a surprising move, the Red Sox fired Morgan on Tuesday and replaced him with former Boston third baseman Butch Hobson.

"Butch is highly thought of throughout baseball and we just felt that he's the man for us," Red Sox general manager Lou Gorman said. "Everyone looks for scapegoats, but we're not blaming Joe Morgan for not winning."

Morgan led Boston to AL East titles in 1988 and 1990, but failed to come through this year. The Red Sox dropped 11½ games out on Aug. 7, then closed within a half-game of division-leading Toronto on Sept. 21. But Boston lost 11 of its last 14 and finished seven games back, in a second-place tie with Detroit at 84-78.

"Joe took the news like the pro he is," Gorman said. "He understands. He just said, 'That's your decision to make.' Joe did an excellent job, but if we didn't make the move, we would have risked losing Butch."

Morgan, who will be 61 on Nov. 16, replaced John McNamara on July 14, 1988, with the team 9½ games out of first. Boston rallied to win the division, but were swept by Oakland in the AL playoffs. The Red Sox slipped to third with an 83-79 record in 1989, then won the division in 1990 at 88-74 only to be swept by Oakland again.

Boston was 301-262 under Morgan, the eighth Red Sox manager to win 300 games. He has one year remaining on his contract at approximately $375,000 and was offered a job as special assistant for major league scouting.

Morgan said he went to Fenway Park to discuss the future of his five coaches and instead was told he had been fired.

"Sure, I was surprised," Morgan said, adding that he thinks he has done a good job.

"They pay the bills, they do what they want and that's the way it should be," he said.

NLCS: Experience helping Pirates cope build in the next week.

(From 1C)

The Braves say these games are no different than what they went through during their stretch duel with the Los Angeles Dodgers, and there's no reason to doubt them. Glavine, the Game 1 starter, and the rest of the Atlanta pitchers clowned around in practice, seeing who was the worst bunter.

The Pirates say that last year's playoff experience will help this time. In a relaxed Pittsburgh clubhouse, Andy Van Slyke's main concern was putting up a basketball net, which he hopes to use for most of the month.

Drabek admits it wasn't so easy for him a year ago.

After going 22-6 in a season that won him the Cy Young Award, he was picked to start Game 2. Drabek gave up a run in the first inning, and wound up losing to Cincinnati 2-1.

"The first part of the game, I was just so anxious to get in there. I was rushing," Drabek said. "What I've learned is how to prepare, not to let all the stuff get to you. Just put it aside, like it's another game, even though you know it's not."

Glavine, a 20-game winner this season, doesn't try to hide how he feels.

"Because I'm a little nervous, that doesn't mean I won't be confident out there," Glavine said. "I'll try to think of it as a parallel to my start in the All-Star game. But this is different.

"We did expend a lot of energy to get here. I'm sure there are some guys who are happy to be here. That doesn't mean our desire is going to change. We're not finished yet," he said.

The Braves believe, or at least want to believe, that they have the edge because every game recently has been important.

"It's been like being in the playoffs for two months," manager Bobby Cox said.

ALCS: Candiotti ineffective

(From 1C)

the 9-year-old Metrodome. Minnesota's last postseason loss at home was at old Metropolitan Stadium, in the 1970 league playoffs.

Toronto starter Tom Candiotti was chased after 2 2-3 innings, allowing five runs on eight hits. His knuckleball rarely knuckled and little else went right at the start for the startled Blue Jays, who won eight of 12 games against the Twins during the regular season — including two of three each of the last two weekends of the regular season.

The Twins said those games didn't matter and they proved it at the start, at least.

The Twins scored two runs apiece in the first and second innings and added another in the third. In two starts for the Blue Jays against the Twins during the season, Candiotti gave up four runs on nine hits in 11 2-3 innings. But in his last 14 1-3 innings, he has allowed 19 runs on 24 hits.

MIKES: Timlin didn't want to pitch

(From 1C)

Since that day, Timlin said, he's never done anything but pitch, including collegiately at Southwestern University in Georgetown.

Whalen says he had little to do with how successful the two have become. All he did, he said, was tell Timlin to get on the mound that day.

"Somebody else might take a little credit for that," Whalen said. "When they were here, they couldn't hit the backstop three out of five times, but at least they got it there fast. They had erratic control. But when they made a mistake, they did it in a hurry."

Whalen estimates Stanton's velocity in high school in the 85-88 mph range, and Timlin's 82-85 mph.

On his decision to have Timlin get on the mound, Whalen said it is a favorite subject even now.

"I tease him about that to this day," Whalen said. "Whenever we had a tryout, we went through and looked at the kids who had good arms. I told Timlin, and about three or four other kids, that I was going to visit with them about how to learn mechanics and how I wanted them to pitch.

"And Timlin said, 'Coach, I don't want to pitch, I'm an outfielder and a third baseman.'

"I told him I wasn't too concerned about what position he wanted, I was going to put him where he could play."

After toiling in the minors for four seasons, Timlin was the last one to make the Blue Jays' roster out of spring training this year.

The move paid off for the Jays. Timlin finished the season with an 11-6 record and three saves. Through 108.1 innings, his earned run average was 3.16. Timlin also allowed just six home runs while striking out 85 and walking 50.

For Atlanta, Stanton was 5-5 with a 2.88 ERA in 78 innings. He struck out 54 and walked 21 while allowing just six home runs.

Even though he shies away from taking any credit, Whalen is thankful for having been part of the formative years of their careers.

"They were both joys to coach," he said. "You hear so many bad things today about the drugs and alcohol part of it, and dropping out of college, but both those boys have dedicated themselves.

"That's a tough row to hoe, getting to the major leagues as a pitcher. I'm very proud of them and the way they've handled the pressure."

Although he now resides in Georgetown, Timlin says his baseball card has always read "Hometown: Midland, Tex."

"If we have any professionals coming out of Midland, it's a boost for the town," Timlin said.

RTC sale

DALLAS — The government thrift bailout agency will sell virtually its entire remaining stock of low-cost, single-family homes in Texas next month.

The Resolution Trust Corp. said Tuesday that auctions are scheduled in nine Texas cities Nov. 10-22 to sell the 1,100 homes.

To qualify to bid, prospective buyers must earn less than 115 percent of the median income in the city in which they live.

The RTC, Texas Housing Agency and Texas Veterans Land Board offer financing for the homes, which have a value of $67,500 or less.

The RTC will pay up to three points of the purchaser's loan amount to cover closing costs and up to 25 percent of the sales price for required repairs.

Auctions in each city will include properties in the city and nearby communities. For instance, the auction in Houston will include homes in Galveston.

Judge ends Exxon Valdez lawsuits

$1 billion settlement closes state, federal litigation over oil spill

Associated Press

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — A federal judge Tuesday approved a record $1 billion settlement and Exxon's guilty pleas to four misdemeanors to end state and federal litigation over the 1989 Exxon Valdez oil spill.

U.S. District Judge H. Russel Holland, who had rejected an earlier settlement offer in March, said he approved the deal because it included more money for restoring Prince William Sound.

He said Exxon's voluntary efforts to pay some civil claims and its cleanup work in the sound during the last three summers were the most important factors in his decision.

"Obviously, Exxon Corporation is very large and has been very profitable. But what is now very clear to me is that Exxon has been a good corporate citizen," Holland said. "It is sensitive to its environmental obligations."

Environmentalists and other critics said the penalties were insufficient to punish the giant company.

Hundreds of lawsuits filed against Exxon by private individuals still are pending.

Under the agreement, Exxon and its shipping subsidiary will pay a $900 million civil settlement over the next 11 years, as well as $100 million in restitution to be split between the state and federal governments specifically for rehabilitating the waterway. The companies also were sentenced to pay $25 million of a $125 million criminal fine, with the rest forgiven because of its earlier restoration efforts.

Two felony counts were dropped.

Federal prosecutors said the penalties were the highest ever assessed for environmental damages.

"The fine says to others in the industry, you can expect fines that are off the chart in response to oil spills that are off the chart," Holland said.

"But it also says to those others in the industry, if you accept and live up to your legal responsibilities as far as cleanup and damage control ... you will get credit for it."

James Neal, lead attorney for Exxon Shipping Co., said he thought Exxon's attorneys earlier had done a bad job in March of portraying the company's environmental record. "This time we did a much better job," he said.

"Prince William Sound won, and the trial lawyers lost," Neal told the judge.

In Juneau, Gov. Walter J. Hickel praised the judge's action.

"The judge made us whole again," Hickel said. "He made us one. For the last 2½ years we have been divided, and now we can look forward."

Hickel said he had a letter delivered to Holland on Tuesday, explaining the state's position on the settlement.

A state House Judiciary subcommittee still plans to review the settlement, starting with a hearing Friday, said Terence O'Malley, spokesman for the Democratic-led House majority coalition.

Board hears complaints about NCNB Texas loans

DALLAS (AP) — NCNB Corp.'s Texas bank has increased its lending faster than any other of the state's large banks, an executive testified Tuesday before a federal panel reviewing the proposed merger with C&S-Sovran Corp.

But former customers told the Federal Reserve Board panel the North Carolina bank has ruined or rejected thousands of Texas borrowers since taking over the state's largest failed bank.

Kenneth Lewis, president of NCNB General Bank, the Charlotte N.C.-based umbrella for NCNB's regional bank subsidiaries, said statistics showed NCNB's lending grew faster than any other large Texas bank in 1989 and 1990.

"We are committed to advancing our community development efforts to a position of clear market leadership by building a partnership of cooperation and trust with all members of the communities we serve," Lewis said.

Lewis testified before a Federal Reserve Board panel reviewing NCNB's application to merge with C&S-Sovran Corp. to create NationsBank.

NCNB Texas, with $33 billion in assets, is the largest NCNB subsidiary. It was formed in the July 1988 takeover of First RepublicBank Corp., the nation's biggest bank failure.

The bank's loan portfolio was about $12.9 billion at the end of 1990, less than half the $27 billion size of its predecessor in 1986. However, the loan portfolio was 10 percent above its 1988 size. Only one other large Texas bank, First City Bancorporation of Houston, showed growth in its loan portfolio.

Much criticism stems from bank's handling of problem loans from First Republic portfolio.

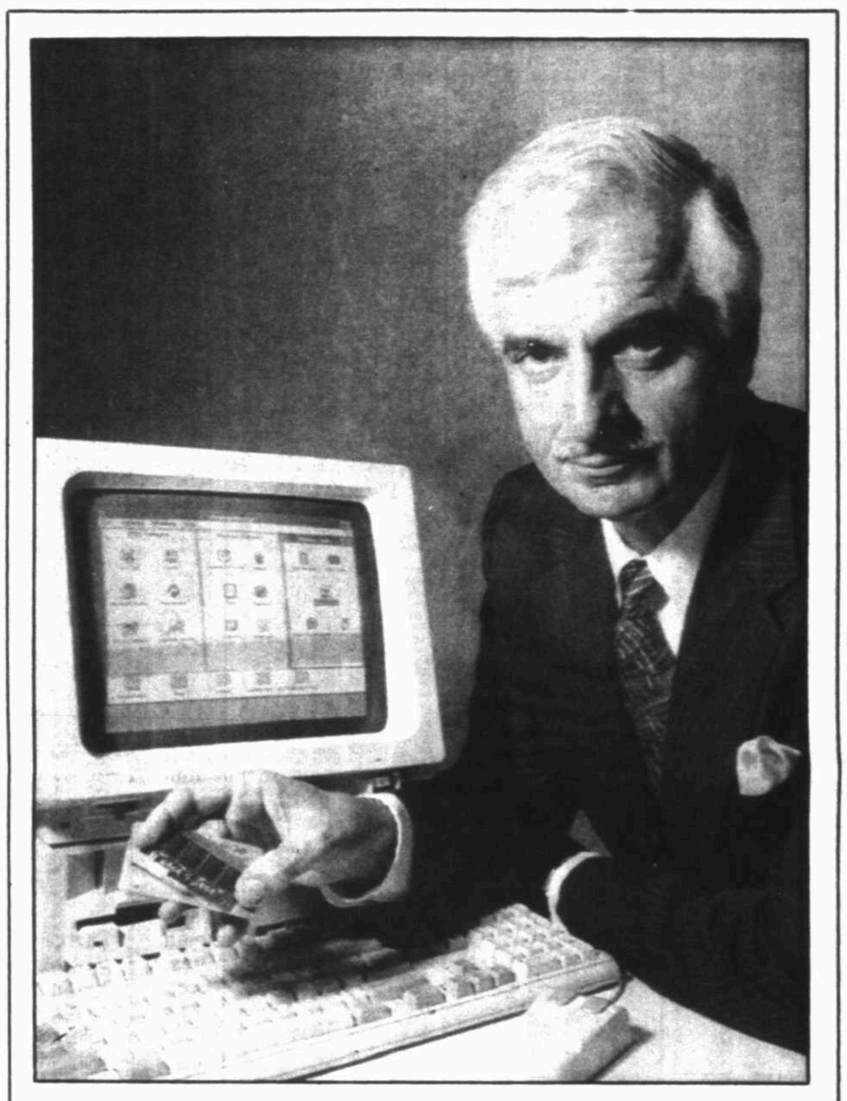

Since coming to Texas, the bank has fought charges it has been too restrictive in lending and used Texas deposits to shore up operations in the Southeast.

Much of the criticism has stemmed from NCNB's handling of problem loans from the First Republic portfolio. NCNB was given the ability to choose what loans to restructure or foreclose in a deal through which the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. paid most of the cost of such work.

Several witnesses told the Federal Reserve panel that their loans were called by NCNB without any reason.

H.A. Lawthon, president of Products for Surgery Inc. in Arlington, said his $12 million company was forced to borrow $2 million from an individual until he could prove the company's soundness to another bank after NCNB called the loan.

"From a small business standpoint, I am petrified at the merger of megabanks," Lawthon said.

Rebel Pizza Hut franchisee to Pepsi: You've gone flat

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Pizza Management Inc., one of the largest franchisees of Pepsico's Pizza Hut chain, escalated a dispute with the soft-drink giant Tuesday by saying it's canning Pepsi and switching to rival Coca-Cola.

The move was the latest in a legal squabble over franchise issues between San Antonio-based Pizza Management and Pepsico, the parent of Pizza Hut Inc.

Pizza Management, which has 240 restaurants, sued Pepsico for damages in 1986 after the soft drink company refused to allow Pizza Management to become a publicly held entity. Pepsico countersued and the case remains unresolved.

In a statement announcing the soda switch, Pizza Management owner Arturo Torres made no mention of the fight with Pepsico.

He said Pizza Management was making the change because "Coca-Cola is the clear-cut leader in providing drinks to the food service industry and can offer my company distinct technological and service advantages. More than anything else, Coca-Cola also has demonstrated a real commitment to helping us strengthen our business."

Torres, a Cuban immigrant, started as a dishwasher at a Pizza Hut in Amarillo. Pizza Management operates Pizza Hut restaurants in Texas and five other states as well as the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico and Spain and employs 5,300.

Among its restaurants is the Pizza Hut that will serve the Olympic Village in Barcelona next year.

The conversion to Coke's products is expected to be completed by Dec. 15.

FDIC chief takes parting shots

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — L. William Seidman, retiring chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., preserved his outspoken image with comments sure to rile the Bush administration, community groups and bankers.

In what he billed as a farewell address, Seidman on Monday disputed Bush administration claims that bank regulators were prolonging the recession, suggested that community-reinvestment rules should be eased for small banks and chided lenders for making bad loans.

Seidman, who is expected to step down from his post next week, countered the White House view that overzealous bank regulators were discouraging lenders from making new loans, thus preventing a recovery.

Seidman told hundreds of bankers assembled at Moscone Convention Center for the annual American Bankers Association convention, "If it is in fact your patriotic duty to make loans, and I believe it is, it must equally be your patriotic duty not to make bad loans."

He told reporters that historically large corporate and consumer debt loads were the main drag on the economy.

Abron's 228 yards boosts Richardson to upset

Associated Press

AP Honor Roll

Richardson coach Winston Duke expects good things from Chris Abron, so the best game of the junior tailback's career came as no surprise.

Abron carried 21 times for 228 yards and two touchdowns, boosting Richardson to a 21-20 upset of No. 9 Plano. The effort earned him mention in The Associated Press Schoolboy Honor Roll.

"I think that's just Chris," Duke said. "He plays hard every week. There's not anything that you'd ask him that he wouldn't do."

Duke said Abron, who now has 749 yards on 93 carries, has the speed and agility to dominate games. He did just that against Plano, scoring a game-winning 80-yard touchdown with 3:18 remaining. He also scored on a 1-yard run in the third quarter.

"The best way to describe him is the way the college coaches do, and that's an impact player," Duke said. "He's one of those people that's football smart. He's real good at seeing the holes and when he sees them he's got the speed and quickness to get through them. That's something you can't teach a kid."

Donald Veasley has emerged as a star for defending 4A champion Wilmer-Hutchins, which returned no starters from last year's team.

In last week's 28-14 victory over Midlothian, Veasley ran for 264 yards and three touchdowns. That gave him 628 yards on 93 carries through five games.

Wilmer-Hutchins coach Robert Woods said Veasley is getting better every week.

"He's got good speed and quickness," Woods said. "We're an option type team and we get a lot of yards to the outside. He's been doing a good job of running and catching out there. He's still making some mistakes though and he's got a long way to go."

Adrian Robinson starred on both sides of the ball for Edna, which shocked No. 1 Cuero 35-20. Robinson ran for touchdowns of 17, 37 and 1 yards, passed for a 54-yard score and caught an 11-yard touchdown pass. He also intercepted two passes.

"He's had several good games, but I don't know if he's had anything like that before," said Edna coach Buzzy Whitley.

In other outstanding performances:

—Brendan Achariyakosol of Jasper kicked field goals of 27 and 28 yards and four extra points, caught a 19-yard touchdown pass and returned an interception 90 yards for a touchdown in a 40-14 victory over Port Arthur Lincoln.

—Houston Scarborough's Demetrius Perry carried 42 times for 204 yards and three touchdowns in a 24-18 victory over Houston Kashmere.

—Tony Phillips of Spring Westfield ran for 200 yards and five touchdowns in a 42-39 upset of No. 3 Huntsville. Phillips' last score, a 3-yard run, sealed the victory with 4:53 remaining.

—Tony Blockett of Garland Lakeview carried 34 times for 222 yards and two touchdowns in a 24-7 victory over North Mesquite.

—Shawn Walters of No. 1 Arlington Lamar carried 30 times for 240 yards and three touchdowns in a 30-18 victory over Arlington Sam Houston. Walters' scores included a 91-yard run that broke the game open in the third quarter.

—Cody Graves of Goldthwaite scored five touchdowns in a 47-14 victory over Cisco. The scores came on runs of 16 and 51 yards, receptions of 19 and 4 yards and an 85-yard interception return.

—David Roman of Winters carried 18 times for 242 yards and touchdowns of 38, 31, 14, 5 and 91 yards in a 40-6 victory over Jim Ned.

—Cleon Williams of Boling carried 21 times for 203 yards and four touchdowns in a 51-0 victory over Brazos.

—Kerry Bennett of West-Orange Stark ran for 272 yards on 19 carries, including touchdowns of 51, 83 and 60 yards, in a 28-26 victory over Silsbee.

—Kelly Johnson of Hawkins caught 10 passes for 186 yards and three touchdowns in a 50-31 loss to Wills Point. Johnson now has 35 receptions for 715 yards and nine touchdowns this season.

—Wellington's Wesley McKnight carried 22 times for 258 yards and three touchdowns in a 42-6 victory over Memphis. McKnight also caught a 20-yard touchdown pass.

—Tremaine Brown of Amarillo Palo Duro carried 28 times for 220 yards and touchdowns of 91 and 15 yards in a 26-22 victory over Amarillo Tascosa.

—Andrew Martinez of Center Point rushed for 114 yards, intercepted three passes and recovered three fumbles in a 48-0 rout of Sabinal.

—Jimmy Sendejo of San Antonio Southside carried 21 times for 252 yards and three touchdowns in a 25-18 victory over Pleasanton.

—Paul Lisowski of Corpus Christi Flour Bluff made 20 tackles, including seven unassisted, and intercepted a passes in a 24-15 victory over Port Lavaca Calhoun.

—Mundrall Lewis of Wichita Falls Rider carried 26 times for 245 yards and four touchdowns in a 34-27 victory over Richland.

—Dallas White's Michael Martin ran for 206 yards on 20 carries in a 19-0 victory over Bishop Lynch.

Brewers name Bando as GM

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Sal Bando replaced Harry Dalton as general manager of the Milwaukee Brewers on Tuesday and his first decision will be whether to bring back manager Tom Trebelhorn.

Bando, 47, was a member of three World Series winners with Oakland in the 1970s before he signed with Milwaukee as a free agent. He had been a special assistant to Dalton since 1981 and his new title will be senior vice president of baseball operations.

"We need to make a decision for 1992. We will do it in the short-term," Bando said referring to Trebelhorn. "it could be as short as a day and it could be as long as a week. ... I'm very open right now."

Dalton, Milwaukee's GM for the past 14 years, was credited with building the Brewers into a contender in the early 1980s, but was blamed in recent years for their mediocre finishes. Milwaukee was fourth in the AL East this year at 83-79.

"I'd be less than candid if I told you I was particularly thrilled about no longer being the general manager," he told a news conference at County Stadium. "But I'm very, very pleased about remaining with the team."

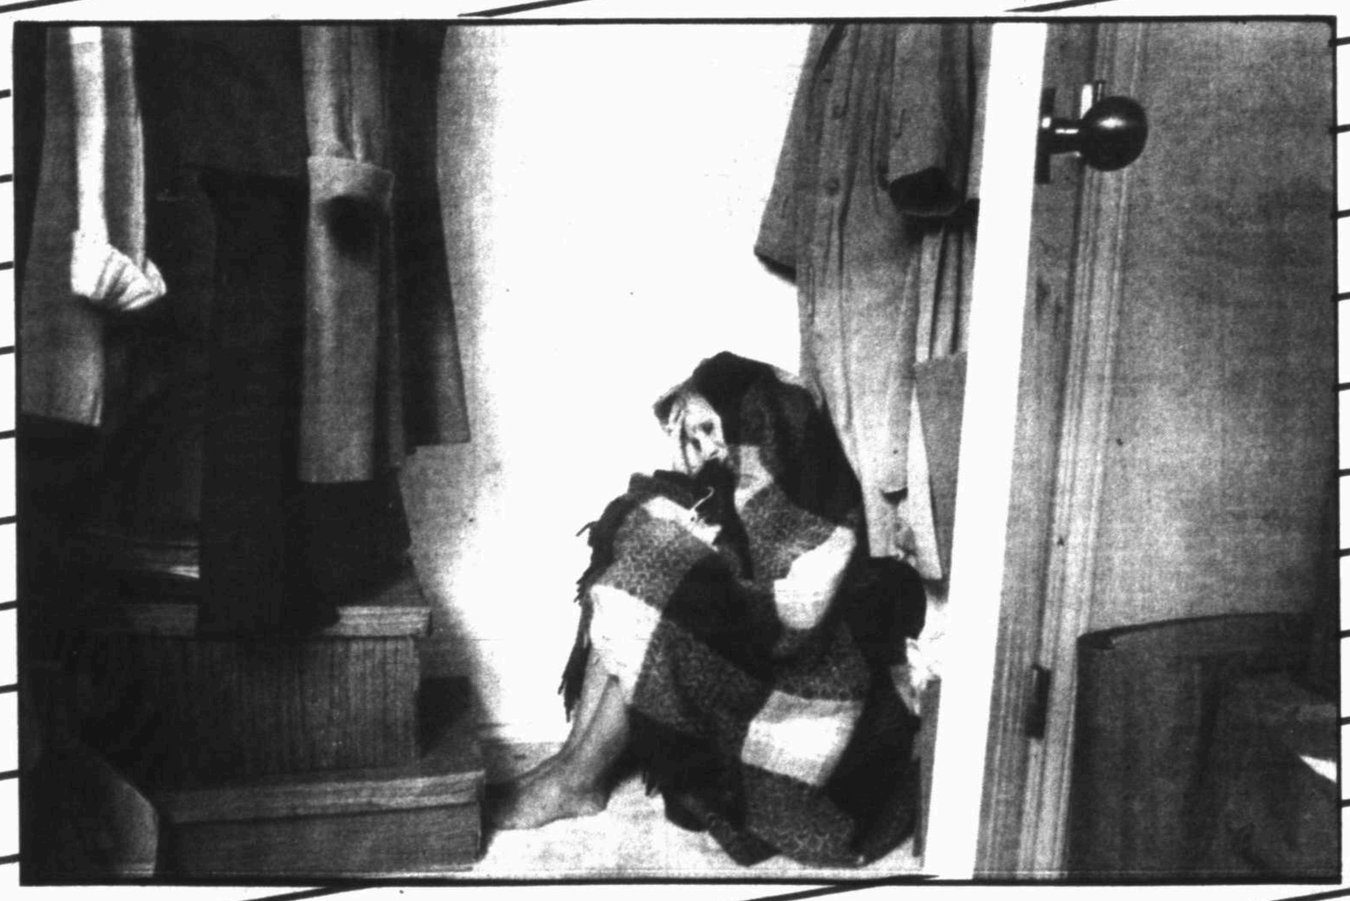

Milwaukee Brewers owner Bud Selig said Dalton will be reassigned to a senior vice president and will work on special projects.

"This restructuring is designed and aimed at making and continuing to keep the Brewers, as we get ready the rest of this decade for the 21st century, in the best way we think is possible," Selig said.

"The senior vice presidency is not merely a title," he added. "He will be working on extremely significant projects and activities with me."

Selig credited Dalton with making the Brewers the sixth-winningest team since 1977.

THE AIRSHOW YOU'VE WAITED 50 YEARS FOR...

TBF AVENGER

The Grumman TBF Avenger made its debut in June 1942 as the Navy's standard carrier and land-based torpedo bomber. In the Avenger's first combat test, attacking Japanese ships at Midway, they were almost wiped out by anti-aircraft fire and fighters. After this murderous baptism by fire, the powerful Avenger went on to prove its excellence at destroying the Japanese navy through the remainder of the War.

B-17 FLYING FORTRESS

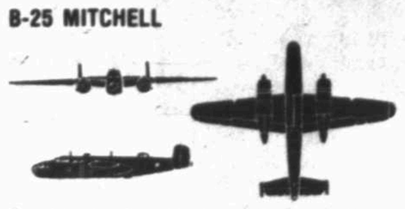

Through-out the War, the B-17 was the Army's mainstay long-range, heavy bomber in Europe and served with distinction everywhere in the vast Pacific theater. Of all the great American planes of the War years, none is more celebrated than the Boeing B-17 Flying Fortress. It still glows in the memory with the aura of a legend and provokes images of great courage and strength under fire.

B-24/LB-30 LIBERATOR

Consolidated's Liberator was manufactured in greater numbers and probably flew a wider variety of missions than any other American plane of the War. Designed in late 1938 as a high-speed, long-range USAAF B-24 bomber, the Liberator also served in different configurations as the C-87 transport and tanker, an F-7 for photo reconnaissance, and a submarine attack bomber with both the U.S. Navy as the PB4Y-1 and British Navy as Liberator I-IV. The CAF flies the oldest in existence.

B-25 MITCHELL

One of the most famous bombers of the War, the North American B-25 was named after Gen. Billy Mitchell, a pioneer advocate of military air power. Of its many combat exploits in every theater of the War, none fired the imagination more than the daring raid, April 18, 1942, on the Japanese mainland when 16 B-25's, commanded by Lt. Col. Jimmy Doolittle, took off from the deck of the carrier Hornet.

B-26 MARAUDER

Because of accidents during testing and training, the Martin B-26 earned a reputation early in its career as an unsafe airplane. Despite misgivings about the B-26's flying characteristics, the Army began flying it on combat missions in 1942 in the Southwest Pacific and later in Europe. In service, the Marauder was one of the great ones. Its versatility, speed, and power were legendary. It was tough, suffering less than 1% combat losses - the lowest loss ratio of any of the major USAAF bombers.

CONFEDERATE AIR FORCE
1939 1945
GHOST SQUADRON

B-29 SUPERFORTRESS

Boeing's B-29 Superfortress was the mighty weapon that proved decisively that strategic bombing could win wars quickly by smashing the enemy's industrial and military capabilities. The Pacific War that began abruptly with the attack on the American Fleet at anchor in Pearl Harbor ended almost as abrutply less than four years later with the massive bombing of Japan by wave upon wave of B-29's. The concluding blows of the War - the atomic bomb on Hiroshima and Nagasaki - were dealt by the deadly, efficient warplane.

C-46 COMMANDO

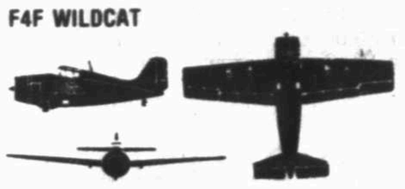

The stout silhouette of the Curtiss C-46 Commando was familiar to Allied fighting men in every theater of the War. Its enduring fame was earned flying precious supplies from bases in India to the beleaguered Chinese over the Himalayan Hump, one of the world's highest and most treacherous mountain ranges. The C-46's enemies were not fighters and flak, but 20,000 ft.-plus peaks and 100 mph winds. But on they flew, some averaging two round trips a day. In one busy month, they transported 106,000 passengers and 46 million pounds of cargo.

C-47/R4-D SKYTRAIN

These incredible aircraft are still familiar sights as they operate from airfields all over the world, continuing a service life that began in 1935 with their introduction as the Douglas DC-3 airliner. The USAAF designation of this legendary plane is the C-47 Skytrain, and served the U.S. Navy as the R4D. The British called it the Dakota. American G.I.'s knew it as the "Gooney Bird" during WWII, and "Puff the Magic Dragon" in VietNam. By any name, it is likely the most famous aircraft in aviation history, if for no other reason than its versatility and reliability during the War when it was the standard air transport for all allied forces.

F4F WILDCAT

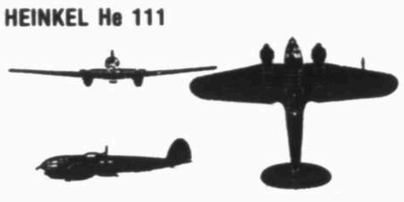

Like the Army's P-40 and P-39, the Navy's F4F Wildcat deserves the respect of posterity if for no other reason than its frontline readiness when the U.S. was brutally thrust into the War at Pearl Harbor. Slowest of all American fighters and outperformed by the Zero, the F6F managed an impressive combat record thanks to its rugged construction and the skills and courage of its pilots. Wildcats fought in every major battle in the Pacific to the end of the War, and for every F4F shot down, 6.9 enemy planes joined it.

F4U CORSAIR

With the airstream howling through its cooler vents and its well-deserved reputation as a deadly fighter, the F4U Corsair became feared by awed Japanese pilots and ground troops as "Whistling Death". The Corsair first saw combat with the Marines defending Guadalcanal from the combined air, land and sea assault by waves of Japanese. Later it flew from U.S. Navy and Royal Navy carriers and fought in every major Pacific battle from 1943 on. The Corsair continued in production through 1952 and ended its long career in 1965 - the longest service life of any WWII era fighter.

HEINKEL He 111

From its first combat in the Spanish Civil War in 1937 through the fall of France in June 1940, the Heinkel He 111 bomber was one of the most effective weapons of the Nazi war machine. But in the Battle of Britain, high losses of these and other light bomber types demonstrated that the Luftwaffe's total dependence on light tactical offensive warplanes was fatally short-sighted. The He 111 was born with the Third Reich in 1933. Like several German warplanes of the day, it was first passed off as a civilian transport flying in airline service.

SB2C HELLDIVER

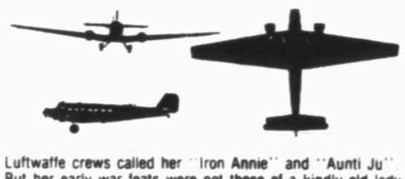

When it finally joined the Pacific Fleet in 1943, after a prolonged and troubled development, the Curtiss SB2C Helldiver proved to be a formidable and highly versatile weapon. It delivered bombs and depth charges with pinpoint accuracy, and could strafe with cannon, rocket and machine gun fire. The "Big-Tailed Beast" as its not-always-affectionate crewmen called it, was first designed in 1939. A maddening assortment of problems during development resulted in 880 design changes and delayed its entry into service long past the original deadline.

HUDSON / VENTURA / HARPOON

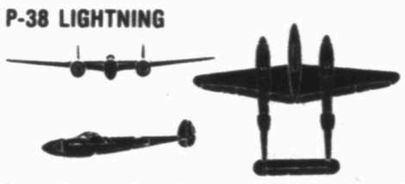

The twin-engined Lockheeds which saw military service in World War II all evolved from the Model L-10 Electra, introduced in 1934, to compete with the Douglas DC-2 and Boeing 247. The Confederate Air Force collection includes two Lodestars, a C-56 and a C-60, both in the colors of the RAF Coastal Command; and two PV-2 Harpoons, which, when restoration is completed, will carry the markings of U.S. Navy patrol bombing squadrons.

JUNKERS Ju 52

Luftwaffe crews called her "Iron Annie" and "Aunti Ju". But her early war feats were not those of a kindly old lady (or even a lumbering converted airliner, which she was), but a rugged, versatile warplane. The Junkers Ju 52/3m made its debut as an airliner in 1932 but was taken on as a makeshift bomber beginning in 1934. The plane served through-out the War as a multi-purpose transport and was essential to the swift victories in Norway, Holland and Belgium. Later in the War, its numbers were decimated as Allied planes and antiaircraft fire found Iron Annie an easy target.

P-38 LIGHTNING

The Lockheed P-38 Lightning won a 1937 Army design competition for a long-range interceptor, but its development was stalled by the ill-fated notion that American heavy bombers could defend themselves on daylight raids over Europe. After numerous airframe and engine modifications, the Lightning began to be deployed in large numbers by August 1942 and joined the Allied landings in North Africa in November. Pilots found the design unconventional, but most of them loved the P-38 for its speed, firepower and performance - and for the safety edge of its two powerful Allison engines. A Lightning could take a beating, lose one engine and still get you home.

P-39 AIRACOBRA

Devloped in 1937 as an aerial platform for a heavy caliber cannon, Bell's P-39 Airacobra incorporated a number of design innovations. With the cannon installed in the nose, the engine had to be located amidships behind the cockpit. A drive shaft that spun the prop had to run between the pilot's legs. The cannon, which was supplemented with wing-mounted machine guns, fired through the propeller hub. The P-39 was also the smallest fighter of the War, and never performed to expectations as a medium-altitude fighter. But, available in numbers at the onset of America's plunge into the War, it eventually proved to be a highly effective ground attack plane.

P-40 WARHAWK

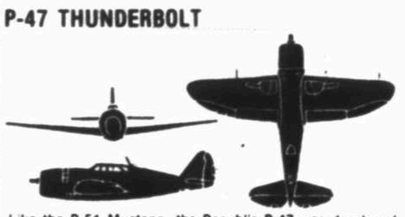

On December 7, 1941, the standard American Army Air Corps fighter was the Curtiss P-40 Warhawk. A few made it into the air from Hickam and Wheeler Fields in Hawaii on that terrible morning and helped score the first American kills on Japanese aircraft. The tough, versatile P-40 earned its lasting fame through the exploits of Major General Claire Chennault's American Volunteer Group, better known as the Flying Tigers. Chennault knew the P-40 could never match the speed, maneuverability and ceiling of the Zero in aerial combat. So he perfected unorthodox hit-and-run tactics to capitalize on the plane's ruggedness, weight and superior diving qualities and on his pilots' expert flying skills.

P-51 MUSTANG

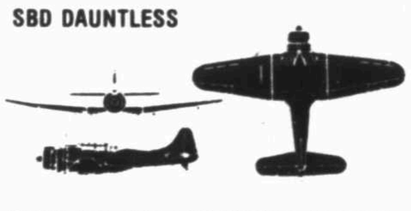

The P-51 Mustang was the aircraft with which the CAF began in 1957. Initially deployed as a ground attack plane, the Mustang came into its own as a fast, high-altitude performer after its original Allison engine was replaced with the more powerful Merlin. The P-51 fought in North Africa, Italy, France and over all the strategic targets in Germany. By late 1943, Mustangs filled the skies of Europe and were escorting bombers on long runs over Pacific targets and on to Japan.

P-47 THUNDERBOLT

Like the P-51 Mustang, the Republic P-47 was developed during the War to specification shaped by the brutal realities of aerial combat over Europe. The P-47 entered service in 1943 as a long-range escort for 8th Air Force daylight bombing raids and quickly lived up to its namesake, the Thunderbolt. It was the largest, heaviest single-engine fighter of the War. Its powerful engine (2,800 hp in later models), rear-mounted turbo-supercharger and heavy armament dictated the P-47's huge prop and massive airframe.

SBD DAUNTLESS

On December 7, 1941, the Douglas SBD Dauntless was the Navy's standard carrier-based scout plane and dive bomber. The plane carried a variety of combat loads, from a single large bomb beneath the fuselage to several wing bombs or a combination of both. Smoke-laying equipment for ground support consisted of a fifty gallon belly smoke-tank and an eighteen gallon smoke-tank mounted under each wing.

BIG

ZERO A6M2

For the six months from Pearl Harbor to Midway, the Mitsubishi A6M Reisen (Zero) carrier-based fighter ruled the Pacific and spearheaded Japan's early victories in the Philippines, Dutch East Indies and the chains of small islands. At the time, no Allied fighter could match its speed, maneuverability, climb or range. The appearance of P-38's in 1942 and Corsairs and Hellcats in 1943 doomed the Zero, although it remained Japan's front line naval fighter till the bitter end.

CBS wins top ratings for week

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Country Music Association awards broadcast along with "60 Minutes" and the comedies "Murphy Brown," "Designing Women" and "Major Dad" made CBS the top-rated television network last week.

CBS held five slots in the top 10 program list and was the leading network with a 13.4 average rating, the A.C. Nielsen Co. said Tuesday.

ABC and NBC tied for second place, each with an 11.7 average rating. Fox Broadcasting Co., which has fewer affiliate stations than the other networks, had a rating of 8.1. Each ratings point represents 921,000 homes.

The perennial favorite "60 Minutes" was CBS' highest-rated show at No. 2, and "The 25th Annual Country Music Association Awards" broadcast from Nashville took third place.

Researchers transform muscle tissue into bones

N.Y. Times News Service

In an animal experiment that sounds almost like science fiction, researchers at Washington University in St. Louis have transformed muscle tissue into bones that, they say, could be tailor-made to repair bone defects caused by accidents, diseases or treatment of tumors.

The achievement represents the most promising method yet devised for repairing large bony defects. Currently, plastic surgeons trying to replace a jawbone, for example, must rely on transplants of bone from the lower leg or hip, which involves complex surgery that is sometimes permanently debilitating to the patient.

"We found what seems to be a safe and clinically applicable technique," Dr. Roger K. Khouri, a plastic surgeon, said in an interview Tuesday. He and his colleagues, Dr. Basem Koudsi, a researcher in plastic surgery, and Dr. Hari Reddi, a cell biologist, published their findings in Wednesday's issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Since 1945 when the ability to convert muscle into bone was first demonstrated in a crude experiment with rabbits, medical researchers have been trying to develop a way to make use of this discovery in patients.

But previous attempts to stimulate bone growth where it was needed have met with mixed results, in part because the basic materials used were not sufficiently purified and because the resulting bone growth could not be well controlled.

Police dogs may lose jobs

N.Y. Times News Service

Police dogs that sniff for drugs may soon find themselves out of a job.

Thermedics Inc. of Woburn, Mass., and Pinkerton Security and Investigation Services of Van Nuys, Calif., have begun jointly marketing a portable drug-detection system that they say can be used to identify vapors from minuscule particles of cocaine, heroin and methamphetamines in the workplace.

The companies have no customers yet for the equipment, called Sentor, which is manufactured by Thermedics.

The system would be operated by specially trained Pinkerton guards who would test a work site of 15,000 square feet for about $5,000.

Sentor has drawn critics, including members of the American Civil Liberties Union who fear that the system is so sensitive it could lead to the dismissal of innocent employees who had sat next to drug addicts on the subway. But Thermetics and Pinkerton officials contend that there is a need for such a product.

A 1990 poll by the American Management Association found that 60 percent of more than 1,000 companies surveyed said they conducted some form of employee drug testing.

Sentor's makers expect that employers would warn workers of the presence of the system, and that it would be used to monitor the entire work area rather than screen individuals. Although evidence of drugs might then be used to investigate specific employees, its makers acknowledge that Sentor could not prove that a worker was using drugs.

With Sentor, samplings are gathered at various points — toolboxes, doorknobs, desk tops — either through use of a clean cloth or a vacuum device that sucks up air samples. Either type of sample is placed in a five-foot-tall, 200-pound refrigerator-shaped machine that heats it up and analyzes it through gas chromatography — a method of separating chemical compounds by their boiling points — and other means. A readout indicates the amount and type of drugs detected.

While some drug enforcement experts say Sentor could be a deterrent, they cautioned against exaggerating its ability to end drug abuse at work.

"Most of the use happens off the premises, at night, at lunch hours, at break times," said Peter Bensinger, a former head of the Drug Enforcement Administration who is now a consultant specializing in fighting drug abuse on the job. "I would be worried about relying on this measure too much."

Deputies catch Jose Canseco's missing turtle

DANVILLE, Calif. (NYT) — Sheriff's deputies in the exclusive community of Blackhawk sprang into action when Jose Canseco's pet tortoise, Rafael, escaped his pen and nearly trundled into traffic.

Responding to a passing motorist's cellular-phone alert, Deputy Megan Garry-Wintich of the Contra Costa County Sheriff's Department puzzled for a moment and then made ready to sweep the green, hard-shelled creature to safety as it lumbered toward busy Blackhawk Drive.

"She was saying, 'What am I supposed to do with this thing?' " her boss, Lieutenant Gary Hal, recounted.

But the Oakland A's slugger quickly appeared to rescue his 30-pound reptile.

It happened late Monday afternoon as Canseco and his wife, Esther, were packing up to move to their winter beach house in Miami.

The wayward Rafael and several other land tortoises that the Cansecos have kept as pets in their back yard for the past several months were supposed to be getting ready for the trip. Removed from his cement-block corral with splashing waterfall backdrop, Rafael apparently took advantage of an open gate and made a break for it.

The pets, including a couple of hundred-pounders, are Miami-bound in a van driven by a friend of the Cansecos.

A tortoise-lover since childhood, Canseco felt a Northern California winter would have been harmful to the desert-dwelling animals, said his friend and business associate, Walter Young.

"Mr. Canseco has a very kind heart," Young said. "The thought of mistreating an animal is totally against what he stands for."

Asked why Canseco went to the trouble of building a pen for the animals if he did not intend to keep them year-round, Young said the tortoises may return with the Cansecos in the spring.

The sand-loving tortoises are vulnerable to respiratory infections brought on by chilly air.

"If the weather had been cold in September, we might have been in real trouble," Young said. "We have lost a tortoise or two along the way."

Canseco remains hopeful that, over the winter, baby turtles will hatch from three eggs warming in an incubator in the Blackhawk house.
