Decontrol bill support urged

By DAVID C. SODAMANN
Business-Energy Editor

MESCALERO INDIAN RESERVATION, N.M. — Energy Secretary Donald P. Hodel urged the natural gas industry to get behind President Reagan's decontrol bill or face recontrol soon.

Hodel gave the Permian Basin Petroleum Association a tongue-lashing here Thursday night at the PBPA's 22nd annual meeting. He reminded his listeners that it was the gas industry which first urged Reagan to put forward some kind of gas decontrol bill.

"The president responded, but what we found is that this industry is very sharply divided," Hodel said.

"I was reminded that if we would just put a bill before Congress, you'd take it from there — not quite how it has worked out."

Hodel said Reagan's bill is "our best, and possibly our last, shot," at obtaining decontrol and a return to the free market.

The gas industry has spent a lot of time worrying about things it doesn't like in Reagan's decontrol bill, Hodel said, "while the proponents of recontrol ... captured the initiative, and that was a terrible mistake to make.

He said the natural gas proposition is in jeopardy, noting it is a mark-up vehicle in the Senate. "But let me point out that while you are worrying about those pieces of the bill that you aren't real happy with... the proponents of recontrol are working the Senate energy committee hard... to recontrol and freeze the price of natural gas.

"Now, you're letting this opportunity slip away from us. I don't think we're going to see an opportunity like this for decontrol again," Hodel warned.

"So, if you're concerned about some nit in our bill, some nuance in our bill, let me suggest to you you're not playing the game. The game's over here — the game between recontrol and decontrol.

"If you don't realize that, you don't recognize it, you're going to be terribly disappointed in a few days or weeks or months when a bill comes out of the Congress that is a recontrol bill; or a bill comes out of Congress that doesn't look anything like what you're hoping for."

During a press conference before the speech, Hodel told the Reporter-Telegram while there are elements in Reagan's decontrol bill that are causing division within the natural gas industry, "any bill would do that. If we had gone ahead with some of the more simplistic approaches some people would have had us do, we wouldn't have gotten to first base.

Trustees, backers in harmony on Jacksons concert

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The stately progression of high school graduation ceremonies almost had to compete with the tweet-twiddly-tweet, bop-of-a-pop group. But following discussions and revisions to a request, the Jacksons will be allowed to perform in Midland Memorial Stadium May 28.

"This is not a group that bites heads off of bats," Michael Williams, Midland attorney and 1983 Campaign Chairman of the United Negro College Fund for the Midland/Odessa area, told Midland Independent School District school trustees Thursday.

Williams, along with his sister, Pam, who worked for the Jacksons for three years, form In Full Bloom Productions. Along with Ali Attractions, the Jacksons' producers, they are bringing the group to town to benefit the UNCF with a minimum $10,000 donation from concert proceeds.

Williams explained the difference in rock and pop groups to trustees and administrators, who expressed concern about crowd control, infield damage and noise level.

"THIS IS NOT a group that will attract a crowd that most people in your position will be concerned with."

The original request called for renting the stadium for 8 p.m. performances May 27 and 28, with $100,000 property damage insurance and access to all stadium facilities, including the field, bleachers, field house, ticket booths, press box, parking area and concession stands.

Also, 100 armed security guards from a Midland firm were requested to control the expected crowds of 12,000-15,000 per performance.

Because high school graduation ceremonies are scheduled May 27, an agreement was reached for one performance May 28, from 2 until 6 p.m. Earlier hours were requested by board members out of consideration for area residents.

Most of the discussion ran around the football field, which has been in repair for the past five years, according to Wilson Heidelberg, director of school plant maintenance and grounds.

Athletic Director Gil Bartosh told trustees the field was in a critical stage following the end of track season. Previously, Bartosh has closed the stadium for all events, except spring football scrimmages, after the second week in May.

"I'VE ALREADY turned down a dog show and a horse show," Bartosh said, questioning whether a precedent will be set.

Houston developers reveal plans for Independence Plaza

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

"We are principals in whatever we develop," Dr. Eugene Winograd of Houston said Thursday in formally announcing Independence Plaza — a 16-story, $10 million office/parking structure at Big Spring and Illinois, scheduled for Fall 1984 completion.

"We will own, manage, and operate (Independence Plaza) ourselves. We intend to maintain that interest in Midland for at least 10 to 15 years," he continued.

Winograd is a physician who delved into real estate development for the first time in 1963, then took it up full time in 1971. The Houston man has developed several apartment complexes and commercial structures throughout Texas.

The builder of 157,000-square-foot Independence Plaza made it clear Thursday he is building in Midland to become a permanent part of its business sector.

Winograd said his Judwin Companies — five operating groups that buy, build and manage properties — stay with their projects. "We have never been the kind of developer that came in, built, half-filled their building and sold it for a quick return."

Major tenant for the atrium-bedecked Plaza will be Estoril Producing Corporation — which will occupy the 14th floor of the limestone and bronzed-glass structure.

Estoril also is a limited partner in the venture. Construction financing came from Republic-Bank/Houston and permanent money from Washington Mutual Savings Bank in Seattle.

Windfall profits tax exemptions still important issue

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of two articles dealing with current conditions in the oil industry. Part One deals with the windfall profits tax.

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — On July 9, 1981, President Reagan, Vice President George Bush and a number of aides met in the White House with a delegation of six oilmen organized by the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

The petroleum association and the oilmen wanted billions of dollars of tax breaks to be included in the president's 1981 tax bill, then before Congress.

Their ultimate goal was an exemption from the "windfall" profits tax for the first 1,000 barrels of daily production, a step that would effectively have eliminated the tax for virtually all independents, at a cost to the Treasury of $25 billion over five years.

The president had already agreed to cut by half the windfall profits tax on newly discovered oil. This break, worth $3.2 billion over the next five years for the oil industry, would go primarily to the independents, the wildcatters and entrepreneurs whose business is the search for domestic oil and gas.

The president, however, was not yet prepared to make additional concessions. Instead, he declared in vague terms that he looked forward to a day when he and the oilmen could burn the profits tax "like a mortgage."

The oilmen, recalling Reagan's detailed campaign denunciations of the "windfall" profits tax, went away angry and dissatisfied, but fully prepared to move on other fronts.

Their anger was not based only on a campaign promise left unfulfilled. Five of the six oilmen — Cary M. Maguire of Dallas; Gene Miller of Allegan, Mich.; James E. Russell of Abilene, Texas; Dalton J. Woods, of Shreveport, La.; and Lew Ward, of Enid, Okla. — had put their money behind their political convictions.

For the 3½ years from 1979 through the first half of 1982, these five men and their close relatives were good for $305,300 in federal campaign contributions, almost all of it to Republican candidates and GOP committees.

Their largess provided the Republican National Committee with $113,000, the Republican senatorial, congressional and a network of federally registered state GOP committees with $65,750, and the Reagan campaign and committees supporting it a total of $29,750.

The five oilmen were part of a major transformation of the upper echelons of GOP fund raising. Money for political parties and candidates comes from several basic sources: small donors, political action committees and large donors. In this last category of individuals willing to give $500 to $20,000 a year, independent oil has emerged as the single most important special interest in the financing of the Republican National Committee and the National Republican Congressional and Senatorial Campaign committees.

There is a long history of political giving by the oil industry, whose profits are influenced heavily by government tax breaks and price regulation. In the past, oil money flowed freely to both major parties.

But beginning in the late 1970s, oil contributions made a shift to the Republican camp, and the sharp rise in oil and gas prices seemed to cement a new alliance between the petroleum industry and the GOP.

Now, abruptly, that alliance is in trouble. Falling oil and gas prices are undercutting the wealth of the independents just as new political and economic pressures on Congress and the Reagan administration threaten their tax and regulatory goals.

In July 1981, however, the oil industry was still riding high. Undeterred by the presidential rebuff, the industry turned to powerful allies: a dozen oil-state congressmen whose votes would decide the outcome of the tax debate. Both the administration and House Democrats wound up bidding for the support of these "Boll Weevil" conservative congressmen, and the stakes of the bidding were tax breaks for independent oil.

After forcing the White House into this bidding process, the independents joined the administration in lobbying for the tax bill that passed a critical test on the House floor by 238 to 195 on July 29, and was signed into law Aug. 13, 1981.

With only slight exaggeration, Lloyd N. Unsell, vice president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, would write later: "Despite its divisiveness, the oil tax issue ironically became the glue that held together important elements of the coalition that produced the Reagan tax victory in the House."

The cost of that "glue" was $6.05 billion in tax breaks over five years directed primarily toward the independents — twice what they had before the July 9 session at the White House.

Passage of the tax bill represented the zenith of power for the independent oil industry, which had begun a nine-year, fast-track revival in 1973.

Windfall profits tax still an issue

For the previous 20 years, from the early 1950s to the emergence of a powerful international oil cartel in 1973, the price of domestic crude oil was stagnant, moving from $2.68 a barrel in 1953 to only $3.39 in 1972, a drop in prices after accounting for inflation.

During this period, the independents watched in anger as Exxon, Mobil, Gulf and the rest of Big Oil imported relatively cheap foreign oil and profited all along the chain from production and refining to distribution and sale.

But the escalation of oil prices imposed by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in 1973 and 1979 gave the independents a piggyback ride up the profit ladder. From $3.89 in 1973, the price per barrel shot up to $8.84 in 1976, to $14.27 in 1979, to $23.26 in 1980 and was up to $33.76 in July 1981, when the oilmen met with Reagan.

As oil prices rose, the center of gravity in Republican fund raising shifted from Wall Street and Chicago into the heart of the Sun Belt.

The Republican National Committee's big givers, who contributed at least $10,000 a year, are called "Eagles," and for years New York had more Eagles than another other city. Now, however, it has been eclipsed by Houston, the center of the oil industry. Moving up fast have been Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Dallas and Midland, a city with 84,200 residents but in the top 10 on the Eagle list, thanks to its location on the rim of the oil and gas-rich Permian Basin.

In the heart of these longtime, bedrock Democratic states, the interests of the oil industry were protected from the 1930s into the 1960s by some of the most powerful figures in Congress. Sens. Robert Kerr, D-Okla., and Lyndon B. Johnson, D-Texas, in the Senate and Rep. Sam Rayburn, D-Texas, House speaker during a period of Democratic control from 1940 through 1961, determined the membership of the tax-writing committees and channeled oil money to help keep Northern Democrats in line.

The last two decades, however, have seen a steady erosion of this relationship. The reign of Johnson and Rayburn ended in the House and Senate in the early 1960s; the rise of liberal influence in the House Ways and Means Committee led to the partial repeal in 1975 of the oil depletion allowance and the end of oil's control of the tax-writing panel.

Then in 1979, in the midst of a gasoline shortage, President Carter demanded that removal of government price controls on oil be accompanied by a "windfall" profits tax, a special levy on the industry's gains from decontrol of prices. The administration's campaign for the tax was punctuated with repeated complaints about oil industry profits.

"President Carter pushed all the oil people into the Republican Party," said Chet Upham, an independent oilman and chairman of the Texas Republican Party. "There is no question about it: the principles of the Republican Party are more akin to the things that oil and gas people are seeking."

The rightward bias of the oil community, however, has precedents dating to well before Johnson's and Rayburn's departures from Congress.

It found expression at least as far back as 1948, when oil money lubricated then-Democrat Strom Thurmond's 1948 Dixiecrat presidential campaign, and in the 1950s, when such prominent independent oilmen as Hugh Roy Cullen, H.L. Hunt and Clint Murchison channeled support to the anti-communist campaigns of Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy, R-Wis. On behalf of McCarthy, who was known as "Texas' third senator," they were hosts of only the second $100-a-plate dinner for a Republican in Texas history. Oilmen funneled $6.1 million in secret contributions to Richard M. Nixon in 1972.

The explosion in oil and gas prices during the second half of the 1970s coincided with the height of the conservative Republican movement, and the contributions of independent oilmen to this drive have been immense:

Of the $8.433 million in contributions of $500 or more to the Republican National Committee (RNC) for all of 1981 and the first half of 1982, $2.202 million came from only three major oil-producing states: Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma. Although these states have only 9.4 percentof the nation's population, they supplied just over 26 percent of the major contributions to the RNC.

In contrast, the Democratic National Committee (DNC) raised a total of $2.633 million in contributions of $500 or more during all of 1981 and 1982. Of this, only $73,950, or 2.8 percent, came from Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma.

Of the $5.71 million raised by the RNC from persons who would qualify as Eagles by giving $10,000 or more, $1.48 million, or 25.9 percent, was from persons with direct ties to the oil industry, and the overwhelming majority were independent oilmen, not officials of major oil companies.

Of all individual contributions of $500 or more to the DNC in 1981 and 1982, persons with identifiable ties to the oil industry gave $62,950, or 2.4 percent of the total of $2.6 million.

In a separate, murky fund-raising arena where the contributions are known as "soft" money and, for the most part, are not required by law to be publicly reported to the Federal Election Commission, independent oil in 1980 was to the Republican Party much as organized labor is to the Democratic Party: a major source of private cash for the presidential general election campaign over and above the $29.44 million given each candidate in public financing.

In addition to the role of oil in the presidential campaign and in financing national Republican committees, Houston, Dallas, Oklahoma City, Midland and Tulsa have become meccas for Republican congressional candidates, particularly conservative Republicans seeking to oust liberal incumbent Democrats.

Then-Rep. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, showed the way by going to Texas early in 1980 and returning with $150,000 to get his successful campaign against Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, off the ground. He was followed by a steady march of Northern Republicans seeking oil money, and they were not disappointed.

At the same time, independent-oil political action committees with names like DALLENPAC and HOUPAC began to spring up throughout the Southwest, channelling money to conservatives and acting as forums for candidates to make their pitches to groups of oilmen flush with rising profits.

The oil communities stood out as bastions of Republican conservatism in the Texas-Oklahoma terrain of "Yellow Dog Democrats" — voters who, in the local vernacular, "back the Democrat even if he is a scraggy yellow dog and the Republican is Jesus Christ, incarnate."

Democrat Garry Mauro, for example, was elected Texas lands commissioner last year with over 60 percent of the statewide vote. "I carried all but six of the state's 254 counties," Mauro said, "but in Midland, I got 22 percent of the vote."

Rep. Kent R. Hance, D-Texas, successfully engineered Midland out of his district when the lines were redrawn after the 1980 census. "For a Democrat to have Midland in his district is like trying to represent Munich in 1938," another member of the Texas congressional delegation commented.

"For Texas businessmen, politics is a participation sport, not a spectator sport," said Martin "Sandy" Sanford, an Austin lobbyist and partner in Houston-based Vinson & Elkins, the premier oil law firm. "We didn't come to watch, we came to play. And business in Texas is the oil business."

During the 1982 gubernatorial contest, the oil community lined up behind William P. Clements Jr., the first Republican governor since Reconstruction, helping him raise a record $13.2 million. But within a month after Clements lost, Mark White, the victor, held a series of "get on board the late train" fund-raisers that produced $3 million from many of the original Clements backers.

At the same time that oilmen in Texas were covering their losing bets on Clements by putting their money behind Governor-elect White, some of the same oilmen, along with a strong contingent from Oklahoma, were starting to break new and dangerous ground.

Not content with seeking the defeat of marginal liberal Democrats, they began to channel money against pro-oil, oil-state Democratic congressmen, men who had fought tough battles for oil on the floor of the House and in its committee rooms.

Jacksons concert to benefit local UNCF fund

"It's critical we get down there right after track season (to begin repairing the field)," he continued. "I feel we have to shut (access to outside groups) off for 2-2½ months to get our people down there."

The original request called for a platform to be built in the north end zone and people being allowed to sit on the field "picnic-style," Williams said.

According to Heidelberg, the stadium has 12,330 seats. About 750 seats are located behind the proposed site for the band, leaving 11,580 available seats.

"That means we'd have 3,420 on the field (if there was a crowd of 15,000)," Heidelberg said. "I'd strongly suggest if anything is done, we limit ticket sales to the number of seats."

Although Williams asked about placing seats along the sides of the track, administrators said they didn't feel police and/or security guards would be able to keep people off the field.

"I don't have any problem with the platform unless they're going to be driving heavy equipment right up to it," Heidelberg said. "I do have a problem with seating around the track because I don't see how you can keep them off the field."

CROWD CONTROL was the main concern voiced by security supervisor Craig Kipena, who suggested having four Midland police to every one private security officer.

"You're going to have some drinking and some drugs," he said.

Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi quickly pointed out the stadium is public property and persons caught with alcoholic beverages promptly would be prosecuted.

Bartosh added coaches and other administrators would help with crowd control.

"We'll have more security probably than we'll have people in the stands," he said.

Other comments included:

—Trustee Ann Page: "I personally feel the Jacksons are the kind of group we can endorse...We've let other groups use the stadium in the past. We don't deny church groups...It was built by public tax dollars and if the public wants to come see the concert, I don't have a problem at all with the Jacksons coming to Midland."

—TRUSTEE JOE Golding, laughing: "I've got a house near here — maybe I can make some bucks parking cars."

—Trustee Ron Britton: "The only great thing I see about it is the $10,000 donation to UNCF. But to put them right up to the First Baptist Church, the residential area...I don't think there's any way that even you, with 300 policemen, could keep those people off the field...I just think it's something that doesn't fit into school board policies...

—Trustee Parker Humes: "I've got confidence in you, Michael (Williams). If this was an outside promoter coming in..."

—Baressi: "I've got confidence none of my training had to do with dealing with pop groups..."

Trustees approved the concert 6-1, with Britton voting against the request. Final details will be worked out between promoters and the school district's legal representatives.

Houston developers reveal plans for 16-story Independence Plaza

Winograd looks for a major economic windfall in Midland — another boom period, but more lasting — by mid-1984 or 1985. He said, "In good times and bad times, we're going to be here with that building." Winograd expressed faith in long-term office space here, although he doubted if more housing could be built here with hopes of making any money.

The former practitioner described the building design, materials and maintenance plans as strictly "first-class."

The nine office floors and six parking levels will have sprinklers for fire safety since fire trucks can't reach tall floors.

Independence Plaza will have an electronic-controlled access system for parking and elevator use — in case a tenant wants one floor secured. "Our biggest selling point may be parking" provided on six lower levels, said Fred Neal, president of Judwin Construction, the general contractor.

Local workers will be used for much of the construction — as many as 300 temporary jobs at different phases. Midlander Jim Lawson, who superintended the First City National Bank of Midland's second tower, also will be chief on the Judwin project.

Midwest Electric, a Midland company, is one of the project's major subcontractors.

Hodel urges industry to support decontrol

"Everybody has his druthers," Hodel said, "but we're living in a world where you've got to go through the refining fire of the Congressional process."

There are a number of energy bills before Congress which are addressing the natural gas issue. "Our bill," Hodel said, "is the only bill that moves total decontrol, eventually permits a free market to operate; and secondly, would pull low cost gas, which is now being shut in, to the market. All the other proposals have the effect of making that situation worse."

The American consumer thinks he is being cheated. "There's a tremendous amount of outrage out there," Hodel said, "which I fear will result in pressure for more controls."

A provision in Reagan's bill would allow people who buy natural gas from producers to back out of their contracts. "I can tell you, " Hodel said, "the toughest sale my staff had with me, and I, in turn, had with the President and the Cabinet, is the idea that we as a Republican administration would support a bill that meddles in contracts as much as this bill of ours would do.

"But I proposed that in the end because I didn't believe there was another way in this world that we had a chance of getting Congress to seriously consider decontrolling and moving to a free market. You can do what you know how to do best, and that is to supply gas at a proper price to the American consumer," Hodel told the group meeting at Inn of the Mountain Gods.

"Let me suggest again that this certainly is, in my estimation, our best, and possibly our last, good shot at moving toward a free market in the natural gas industry.

"I suggest to you that your options are really to support the administration and work to improve it (the bill) as you do, or fashion your substitute for it — come up with something you'd prefer. Debate is going on right now in the halls, the back rooms of the Senate.

Hodel said he thinks the gas industry will find the administration is willing to be reasonable and supportive "of anything that moves this country in the right direction.

"But don't, whatever you do, leave the field to those in favor of recontrol. Do not assume the battle is between you and us over provisions in our bill. The battle is between you and us, on the one hand, and those who want recontrol on the other."

PBPA members said after Hodel's speech they had mixed feelingsabout his comments. Some felt what he said was exactly right and others were somewhat irritated about his criticism of the industry.

The annual PBPA meeting was to continue today with election of officers. All officers currently serving have been nominated and are expected to be re-elected. Speaking Friday noon was Jim Gillie of Phillips Petroleum, talking about the "Common Good — What's In It for Me." Gillie is a humorist who frequently speaks to oil industry groups.

Angelo not pleased, surprised by rejection of his appointment

Former Midland mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. released a statement today concerning the State Senate's rejection Thursday of his appointment to the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System.

"I am disappointed but not surprised that the Texas Senate yesterday refused for political reasons to confirm my appointment to the coordinating board, Texas College and University System, even though the appointment had been made nearly 18 months ago," said Angelo, a petroleum engineer.

Last fall, Angelo, a Republican, lost his bid for a seat on the State Senate, representing Midland in the 25th District. Democrat Bill Sims of San Angelo won the race, and was among the 10 senators who voted to approve Angelo's appointment.

"It does make me proud to be associated with what has become a large group of distinguished Texans which includes Bill Blakemore, Michel Halbouty, John Connally, Sam Barshop and Billy Clayton, who similarly have been prevented from serving our state. The Senate is reflecting the fact that Gov. White has started a very bad precedent with his arrogant use of partisan political power in the appointment process.

"The state and Gov. White will be the losers in the long run," Angelo concluded.

Lubbock senior's testimony favors religious groups

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 17-year-old Lubbock, Texas, high school senior told Congress that a federal court decision last year banning voluntary, student-initiated religious activity in her school district has had a bad impact on her classmates.

Bonnie Bailey, who attends Monterey High School, argued that students are taught that the Constitution guarantees freedom of speech for all citizens, including students, but apparently religious speech is not protected.

"We are allowed to picket, demonstrate, protest, curse and take God's name in vain, but we can't voluntarily get together and talk about God," Miss Bailey told the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"We all make decisions," she continued. "I can decide if I want an abortion or if I want to use contraceptives, but I can't decide if I want to come to a meeting to talk about religious matters before or after school and to me this just isn't fair."

Miss Bailey and six other students, all of whom related incidents in their schools where religious meetings were banned, testified on legislation designed to prohibit discrimination against religious groups in the use of school facilities.

The legislation was introduced by Sens. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore. and Jeremiah Denton, R-Ala. A similar bill is pending in the House.

The proposed legislation would make it unlawful to deny equal access to students in public schools who wish to meet voluntarily for religious purposes.

The American Civil Liberties Union, which has brought most of the law suits against permitting religious groups to meet in public schools, told the committee there is no need for federal legislation "because the lower federal courts have been properly interpreting the Constitution, and Supreme Court precedent, in the cases that have already been decided.

"The pending legislation is unnecessary because if a school does adopt and implement a truly open forum policy, then a party denied access for any purpose — religious or otherwise — already has sufficient legal remedies available," the ACLU said.

The committee will hold hearings today and Monday on a Constitutional amendment allowing for voluntary prayer in schools.

Police investigating burglaries

In burglary complaints to city police, Lee Estrada of 1819 E. Hemlock told officers Thursday that a television set and jewelry worth a total of $1,620 were taken in a break-in at his home after someone forced open a door to gain entry.

Donna Armstrong, 309 Oxford, reported three guns and assorted cuts of meat were taken from her residence Thursday. Entry was gained through a bathroom window.

Total loss was placed at $1,450.

Star-studded dinner could 'spark' Tower's fund drive

HOUSTON (AP) — President Reagan and a constellation or two of Republican stars gather here tonight to honor Sen. John Tower at a fund-raising dinner designed to add about a million dollars to the Texas senator's campaign war chest.

Reagan is scheduled to arrive at Hobby Airport aboard Air Force One in the afternoon, make one brief appearance at a drug rehabilitation center and then retire to his downtown hotel to await the start of the 8 p.m. dinner.

About 3,000 Texas GOP members will pay $200 to $1,000 a plate to dine on roast beef with the president and 11 senators, including Tower, in the cavernous Albert Thomas Convention Center.

Ticket sales for the dinner have been brisk and Tower's press secretary, Linda Hill, promised "The hall will be filled."

It is the second fund-raiser this year for Tower, a leading Republican figure in Texas since his first election to the Senate in 1960. A dinner in Dallas earlier this year raised about $1.2 million.

Texas Republicans, stung by their loss of the governor's mansion in elections last November, are rallying around Tower. Some GOP leaders predict the former Midwestern University college professor may face a campaign next year as tough as the 1978 race that Tower won by a bare one percent of the vote.

George W. Strake Jr., a Houston oilman who becomes the state GOP chairman on Saturday, said the senate race will be long and expensive.

"We (the Republicans) are going to have to pull together to win," he said.

Reagan's trip to Texas is to help boost that effort.

Republican Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee is leading a delegation of U.S. Senate collegues to the dinner. Others scheduled to attend are Sens. Ted Stevens of Alaska, the assistant majority leader; Strom Thurmond of South Carolina; Richard Lugar of Indiana; Charles Percy of Illinois; James McClure of Idaho; John Chafee of Rhode Island; William Cohen of Maine, and Malcolm Wallop and Alan Simpson, both of Wyoming.

Members of Reagan's inner circle — Jim Baker, William Clark and Michael Deaver — also will attend.

Reagan, who will spend just over 17 hours in Texas, will make a brief stop to the Cenikor Foundation, a drug rehabilitation center. The president's wife has been active in the administration's fight against drug abuse.

At the dinner, Reagan is scheduled to make a grand entrance, after the others have arrived, and will speak late in the evening.

Reagan leaves for Washington Saturday morning after meeting at his hotel with members of the University of Houston basketball team that won second place in the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament.

GM, FTC establish program to settle complaints

WASHINGTON (AP) — General Motors Corp. says it will be able to resolve complaints about alleged defects in several million automobile engines and transmissions more effectively through an arbitration program approved by the Federal Trade Commission.

"The tentative consent order provides a much greater opportunity for immediate long-lasting and comprehensive consumer benefit than ever would have been achieved through litigation," GM said in a statement issued in Detroit.

The FTC voted 3-2 earlier this week to approve a consent agreement that settles 1980 charges that GM failed to notify consumers of serious (problems or defects in its cars. The automaker's acceptance of the agreement does not constitute an admission that it violated the law or that its parts were defective.

Asked if the automaker affirmed the existence of the alleged defects, R.T. Kingman, director of GM's Washington office, said, "I have two (Buick) Skylarks and they work fine. Apparently there are problems with some of them."

The GM arbitration program will be handled by Better Business Bureaus across the country. The bureaus are prepared to take about 4 million cases immediately, according to Merrie Spaeth, director of the FTC's Office of Public Affairs.

Any decision by an arbitrator will be binding on GM, the No. 1 automaker. If not satisfied with the decision, the consumer will have the choice of rejecting it and pursuing other private remedies, such as lawsuits against GM.

Carol T. Crawford, director of the FTC's Bureau of Consumer Protection, called the settlement unprecedented.

"The commission by accepting this agreement — and I might add, General Motors Corp. by offering it — has furnished consumers a powerful, yet fair and emphatically reasonable means for settling these and other disputes that may arise between car owners and car manufacturers, and that's the arbitration process," she said.

FTC Commissioners David A. Clanton and Michael Pertschuk voted against the agreement.

"I do not believe that individual case-by-case arbitration, where each consumer must prove a right to redress, provides a strong enough solution for the substantial injury suffered here by classes of commonly situated consumers," Pertschuk said in a statement. "Only direct, automatic refunds to consumers...can do that."

New York Attorney General Robert Abrams said the arbitration agreement, which will be subject to comment for 60 days following its publication in the Federal Register, was a "sellout."

Police remove object from Exxon storage tank

ARLINGTON (AP) — Police and federal agents removed an unidentified object from a storage tank at an Exxon Corp. service station today after workers found a seal on the tank had been broken, authorities said.

Officials with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobbaco and Firearms refused to say if the object, removed from the site about 5:15 a.m., was a bomb.

On April 15, a small pipe bomb exploded in a trash can at an Exxon station in nearby Grand Prairie. An unidentified extortionist told Exxon officials that more bombs would go off unless Exxon paid him 250 gold Krugerrands, worth about $112,000.

Arlington police said workers at the station, located near the Six Flags Over Texas amusement complex, called police at 3:13 p.m. Thursday after they found that tape wrapped around a padlock on the tank had been broken.

Undercover narcotics officer nets drug pushers in Galveston

GALVESTON (AP) — Fifteen people, including one man who was called to get his son, have been arrested at Ball High School on charges of selling drugs to an undercover narcotics officer posing as a marijuana-smoking student, police said.

The investigation, from Jan. 28 to March 25, was initiated by Galveston Independent School District trustees and administrators, Sgt. Howard Picard of the Galveston Police Department said Thursday.

A 22-year-old undercover officer from Port Arthur said shaved his moustache, grew his hair "a little longer" and then enrolled in four classes at the high school. The agent deliberately did things to get himself suspended from school.

"It's good to see a school ready to get rid of drugs," the agent said. "I wasn't thrilled about making cases against young people with their lives ahead of them but I saw it as a way to help the school."

However, the agent added, "Students should have the right not to be approached by it (drugs) or be pushed into it."

Galveston and Port Arthur narcotics agents, as well as U.S. Customs agents and officers from the Galveston County organized crime control unit, converged on the school campus Thursday morning, Picard said.

Betting bill stalled in committee

AUSTIN (AP) — Backers of a bill legalizing horse-race betting may find themselves in the ironic position of soliciting a "no" vote so they can get the bill to the House floor, where they say it would be passed.

A pari-mutuel betting bill has been approved by the Senate. Now it and its House counterpart are stranded in a House committee where a majority of the members say they are against both proposals.

House Urban Affairs Committee Chairman George Pierce, R-San Antonio, postponed an attempt to vote a bill onto the House floor when he could not swing the one vote needed to free the measure from the committee Thursday.

If he cannot get one more yes vote, he could try to get approval of a minority report — requiring eight votes, either yea or nay.

The catch is that Rep. Randy Pennington, R-Houston, plans in that event to get his fellow opponents of the bill to vote "present."

"The harshest vote you could cast against this bill right now would be present and not voting," said Rep. Tony Polumbo, D-Houston, who favors the bill.

If one of the eight voted "no" on a minority report, said Polumbo, the bill would go to the floor.

"But no committee chairman likes to send a bill out without a majority," he said. Pierce is expected to try again, perhaps as early as today or Monday, to get the bill out in the conventional manner.

Polumbo said he ha completed a poll of House members showing a majority would vote in favor of the bill if it does get to the floor.

"We stopped at 76," he said, the number needed for passage on the floor. "There are 76 people out there (for the bill)."

But Gov. Mark White said Thursday at his new conference he would give close scrutiny to any para-mutuel bill.

"I personally have very grave reservations about pari-mutuel betting," said White.

"I assure you I'm going to put a very tough test on any plan that comes to my desk," he said.

Doctors appeal for donor

FORT WORTH (AP) — Doctors at Cook Childrens Hospital here issued a nationwide appeal for an infant's liver needed to save the life of an 8-month-old girl suffering from a rare congenital defect.

Ashley Bailey's condition worsened Thursday as doctors moved her to the top of the waiting list for transplant recipients, doctors said.

"The reason we recommended her for a transplant is because there are no other options," said Dr. Lyn Hunt.

"Without a transplant, her chances are very, very poor."

Her mother, Annette Bailey, said she believed a transplant would be coming soon.

"I can't wait," Ms. Bailey said. "I've never seen Ashley looking like a regular baby. She's always been so yellow and skinny."

Catholics agree to revise textbook denouncing torture

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The Roman Catholic Church has agreed under pressure from the military government to revise a popular catechism textbook that denounces torture in Chile and questions the value of military service.

The book, "Come and See: Called with Christ to Serve the World," has been distributed to 2,100 Catholic high school seniors since the Society of St. Francis de Sales, a teaching order, published it two months ago with church approval.

Education Minister Monica Madariaga accused church officials of "betraying the fatherland" and threatened to cancel a proposed decree requiring Catholic religion classes in public schools.

The nation's Catholic bishops issued a statement earlier this week rejecting Miss Madariaga's charges but conceding that "some paragraphs of the textbook, taken out of context, could be misinterpreted."

"We are open to revise the text in the desire that it better reflect our faith," it said.

In the interim, Salesian superiors met with Miss Madariaga and agreed to halt publication and distribution of the book, prompting her to say work on the religious education decree could continue.

President Augusto Pinochet, an army general, asked Chilean mayors on Monday to exert more control over school texts "because the enemy is trying to create the worst image in the minds of the young, picturing us as torturers, repressers."

The controversial textbook, written by three Chilean priests and a nun, criticizes the Chilean concept of national security as "another form of totalitarianism" and laments, "It is sad that torture persists in our country."

While noting that Chile's bishops have condemned Marxism, the book says there are "some Christian values" in socialism, the dominant ideology of the Marxist-led government overthrown in a 1973 military coup.

What prompted the education minister's charge of treason was an anti-war letter in the book from an anonymous ex-soldier saying he wanted to "vomit" everything he learned in the army. The bishops said the letter was included in the book not to advocate draft-dodging but to provoke reflection and that, in any case, it was written not by a Chilean but a U.S. veteran of the Vietnam War.

The bishops did not indicate what parts of the book would be revised, but said it would continue to focus on real-life examples of moral questions faced by Chilean youth. And they insisted on retaining final control over the content of church-edited texts — for public as well as private schools.

Chile, church at odds

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — One of the sharpest conflicts between the Roman Catholic Church and temporal power in Latin America is being waged in the dusty slums of Santiago.

Three missionaries who formed "Christian communities" there were expelled from the country in March and two others were jailed, all accused by Chile's military government of being "political activists."

President Augusto Pinochet declared that Marxists "obeying orders from Moscow" were using the church "to propagate subversion."

Cardinal Raul Silva, archbishop of Santiago, countered that the church was being harassed by the government for pastoral work in defense of human rights.

The high-level war of words over the arrests and expulsions focused attention on the Christian communities, where political conflict is a frequent fact of life.

The communities are neighborhood councils that mix civic action with Catholic faith. They have sprung up by the thousands in Latin America's downtrodden areas since the region's bishops declared their "option for the poor" at a 1968 conference in Medellin, Colombia.

They have flourished despite scattered repression in the four years since the bishops gathered at Puebla, Mexico, to hear Pope John Paul II endorse that commitment.

Twenty-six priests and nuns who worked with Latin America's poor or defended them from the pulpit have been killed in those years, including four Americans, according to an Associated Press survey. Fifty missionaries have been expelled from military-governed countries.

At least 25 other priests and nuns have been arrested, notably two Frenchmen serving terms of eight and 10 years in a Brazilian prison after being convicted of "inciting civil disobedience and class struggle" among landless peasants of Brazil's impoverished Northeast.

In Chile the growing church presence in urban slums is part of a broad Catholic revival evident in rising attendance at Mass, participation in holy pilgrimages and seminary enrollment.

Mexicans cap well

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Workers placed the Nispero 90 well in the southern state of Chiapas under control earlier this week after a 61-hour gas and oil spill, the state oil monopoly Petroleos Mexicanos announced.

The company, known as Pemex, said more than 100 technicians and workers were involved in the effort to control the well near the Cactus petrochemical complex.

The well burst Saturday night, reportedly during an operation to reactivate drilling. Pemex has said it was spilling more than 500 barrels of oil and about 5 million cubic feet of natural gas daily.

The newspaper Excelsior reported that about 2,000 people were evacuated from the surrounding area, some 650 miles south of Mexico City, as a precaution during the emergency work.

PAC breaks fund-raising records

WASHINGTON (AP) — Political action committees (PAC) broke all the records for fund-raising and spending during the 1982 elections and pumped more than $87 million into candidates' political war chests, a Federal Election Commission report says.

Incumbents seeking re-election continued to be the biggest beneficiaries of the huge PAC treasuries, collecting more than three times as much PAC money as their challengers.

After a flirtation with challengers in the 1980 elections, corporate PACs returned to more usual form in 1982 and shifted millions to Republican incumbents, seeking to protect them in a year that was not thought to be a good one for the GOP, the FEC figures showed.

In almost every category, PAC finances in the 1981-82 election cycle exceeded those in previous periods.

PACs raised $199.3 million during the election cycle. They spent $190.4 million. Those amounts easily topped the previous highs, when PACs raised $137.7 million and spent $131.2 during the 1979-80 cycle

Contributions to candidates by the committees totaled $87.3 million in the latest cycle, the FEC report said. That is the most ever, eclipsing the $60.2 million contributed in 1979-80.

The 1981-82 figures included about $4 million given to help retire politicians' debts from previous campaigns. And on top of the $87.3 million, PACs gave $6 million to political parties and political party committees.

The PACs closed the 1982 cycle — and opened the 1984 season — with $31.4 million in the bank.

The rest of the PAC spending — about $97 million — paid for fund-raising costs, staff salaries and a little more than $5 million in independent expenditures in campaigns

The FEC figures cover activities by 3,727 committees during 1981 and 1982. But only 3,371 remained in existence as of Dec. 31, 1982.

Incumbents have long been the PACs' favorite candidates. Last year was no exception.

Incumbents got $58.2 million — 67 percent of all PAC contributions — while challengers got $16.8 million, or 19 percent. Candidates in races in which no incumbent was running got $12.4 million — the remaining 14 percent.

The PAC bias toward incumbents and the large number of Democratic incumbents in the House combined to keep the Democrats on top in PAC dollars. They raked in $47.2 million — or 54 percent of the total PAC giving — while the GOP's candidates got $40.1 million.

Overall, business PACS gave about two-thirds of their donations to Republicans in 1981-82 — up slightly from the 64 percent level in 1979-80.

The corporate PAC shift was mirrored by labor union PACs tilting more to Democratic challengers. They contributed 94 percent of their money to Democratic candidates.

The wealthiest group of PACS was made up of committees not connected with any other organization, ranging from the New Right's National Conservative Political Action Committee (NCPAC) to PACs run by such politicians as Walter Mondale and Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass. These raised $64.7 million.

Inauguration to represent unity

CHICAGO (AP) — Reflecting a "desire for unity" after a bitter campaign, Democrat Harold Washington invited ethnic leaders and political foes — including defeated Republican Bernard Epton — to be guests at his inauguration as mayor today.

"The entire ceremony will reflect ... Washington's desire for unity of the people of Chicago," said inauguration coordinator Judith Byrd.

On Thursday, Washington — who once served a month in federal prison for failing to file income tax returns — paid $6,148.93 in delinquent real estate taxes, avoiding any possibility that the swearing-in could be challenged because of the debt.

Ms. Byrd said the audience will include a White House representative as well as Republican Governor James Thompson, the state congressional delegation and several state legislators.

However, Epton was not expected to attend. He never made a concession speech, skipped a "unity luncheon" the day after the April 12 election and has bitterly blamed news coverage of the racially polarized election for his narrow loss.

Washington, the first black to be elected mayor of Chicago, moved the inauguration from its traditional site, the 700-seat City Council chamber, to the Navy Pier auditorium, which holds 3,000. The move was intended to underscore his campaign promise that he would make city government responsive to all segments of the community.

Also invited were other black mayors from around the nation, several Democratic presidential hopefuls and members of the Congressional Black Caucus, Ms. Byrd said.

The ceremony, officially a City Council meeting, will be opened by Mayor Jane Byrne as her last official act. It will feature an invocation by Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, archbishop of th Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago.

Employees charged in payoffs

NEW YORK (AP) — Eleven current or former city employees, including nine policemen, have been charged in an investigation into payoffs from illegal "after hours" clubs in Manhattan.

Seven men were charged in federal indictments with extortion and other counts. Three current and one former police officer pleaded guilty to lesser conspiracy charges.

All defendants were charged Thursday with conspiring to take payoffs ranging from $500 to $5,000 over a period of years from four unlicensed "after hours" social clubs.

Police Commissioner Robert McGuire said he suspended all officers charged with corruption except one who pleaded guilty to departmental and federal charges and was cooperating with prosecutors.

Twelve injured in derailment

CLINTON, Conn. (AP) — Workers with heavy cranes and floodlights were clearing debris and repairing railroad tracks today after the last three cars of an Amtrak passenger train derailed, injuring 12 people.

The Yankee Clipper derailed Thursday about 20 miles east of New Haven, blocking Amtrak's New York-Boston line. The train was carrying about 200 passengers, none seriously hurt, town officials said.

Amtrak officials hoped to have one track clear today, but meanwhile passengers were being bused between New London and New Haven.

William Pugh, a National Transportation Safety Board official in Washington, said the cause of the accident was being investigated.

Experts want lake drained

THISTLE, Utah (AP) — Army Corps of Engineers regional officials want to start pumping water out of a 3-mile-long lake backed up behind a mudslide plugging Spanish Fork Canyon, and Gov. Scott Matheson is seeking $7.8 million in federal disaster aid.

Robert Smith, the engineer in charge of construction for Utah, said Thursday that bids will open next week on the project to drain the lake to a safe level. Officials fear the mudslide may break, threatening downstream communities. Smith said the Army will pay for the project, expected to cost about $500,000. Damage from the mudslide and the lake is approaching $8 million, Matheson said.

Satellite drifts into eternal orbit

UPPER SADDLE RIVER, N.J. (AP) — Old satellites don't die, they just drift into eternal orbit. That's the fate of Westar I, the nation's first domestic communications satellite, being put out to pasture following nine years of steady service.

Last week the satellite's remaining fuel was used to raise it into a new orbit more than 22,300 miles above the equator, said Western Union Corp. spokeswoman Linda Munro.

In a few months, Westar I will drift out of contact with trackers and all beacons will be switched off, she said. The satellite, launched April 13, 1974, will then drift endlessly in a sweeping orbit, out of the way of other satellites.

Marine pilot's body found

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — Workers have recovered the body of a Marine helicopter co-pilot killed when his CH-53 assault chopper nosed into the Atlantic Ocean during assault landing practice.

The body of 1st Lt. David A. Boyle, 26, of Edwardsville, Ill., was recovered Wednesday night, said Cpl. Dennis Carter, a Marine Corps spokesman at New River Air Station in North Carolina.

The other three crewmembers were quickly rescued after the accident, which occurred as a dozen helicopters approached the shore within sight of sunbathers and diners at beach restaurants.

The crew was based at New River Air Station, Carter said Thursday.

Taxpayers deduct for IRAs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly one in five long-form taxpayers — almost 10 million in all so far — are claiming 1982 federal income tax deductions for Individual Retirement Accounts, the Internal Revenue Service says.

IRS spokesman Wilson Fadely said Thursday that with over 90 percent of the IRS Form 1040s processed, about 18 percent of the 53.7 million returns show deductions for IRA contributions.

IRA deductions were less than one-third that level before eligibility rules were greatly eased at the beginning of 1982.

Food system changing

America's food system has undergone significant changes since World War II. The number of food companies has plunged from about 725,000 in 1947 to some 540,000 today. The decrease was caused by drastic declines in the number of food manufacturers (54 percent) and retailers (49 percent).

NASA to delays shuttle flight

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Aeronautics and Space Administration says a variety of small problems has forced it to delay until mid-June the second flight of the space shuttle challenger.

When the shuttle landed at Edwards Air Force Base in California on April 9 after its 5-day inaugural flight, NASA officials said they hoped to get it into orbit again on June 9.

Farm firms to lose $7 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farm-related firms will lose up to $7 billion this year because of the federal payment-in-kind crop reduction program, a Small Business Administration official predicts.

"With the possibility of diverting as much as 50 percent of the crop base in selected commodities from cultivation in a given county, the impact on several small business industries may be quite severe," SBA counsel Frank Swain said Thursday.

He told a House Small Business subcommittee that with an anticipated acreage reduction of 36 percent, or 82 million acres, farmers will spend from $6 billion to $7 billion less on goods and services than if they were planting normal crops.

Beneficiaries to get more forms

WASHINGTON (AP) — Social Security's 36 million beneficiaries can expect to get more government paperwork.

Nelson J. Sabatini, associate commissioner of Social Security, told a House Appropriations subcommittee Thursday that the agency will be mailing out forms informing people of the amount of benefits they receive.

The forms are linked to a requirement that starting in 1984 people will have to pay income tax on half their benefits if their adjusted gross income — plus half their Social Security benefits — exceeds $25,000 for individuals and $32,000 for couples.

Aide hired for interest groups

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Rep. John H. Rousselot, R-Calif., is among the new aides hired by presidential assistant Faith Ryan Whittlesey to help handle White House relations with women, minorities, labor and other interest groups.

Mrs. Whittlesey said Thursday that Rousselot, 55, is the new deputy director of the office of public liaison, which she heads. She said other new aides, who replace staffers she fired after taking over last month, are:

—Jonathan Vipond III, 38, who formerly served in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives with Mrs. Whittlesey. He was named chief manager of the office.

—Mary Jo Jacobi, 31, director of the Commerce Department's Office of Business Liaison, who will to handle business issues, especially those of concern to women and minorities. She is a native of Bay St. Louis, Miss.

—Judi Buckalew, 35, legislative assistant to Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., who will handle social service and health issues. Ms. Buckalew, a registered nurse, is a native of Paterson, N.J.

Money wanted for South Korea

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is asking Congress to restore $60 million in U.S. military aid to South Korea.

The request came Thursday as South Korea's foreign minister, Lee Bum Suk, began a round of meetings with administration officials and congressmen to discuss what the State Department said were security, political and economic issues.

Sondra McCarty, a department press officer, said Lee's visit provides "an important opportunity to continue the high-level dialogue which has recently characterized the (nations') relationship and contributed so much to it."

Police jog for children

BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — Ten Massachusetts policemen will be on the lam this weekend, all the way to Philadelphia, in a stunt to help bring joy to the lives of terminally ill children.

In 35 10-mile segments, they will run to benefit the Sunshine Foundation of Philadelphia, an organization that tries to fulfill the dreams of dying children with such gifts as a pony or a trip to amusement parks.

Bedford Police Officer Paul O'Brien got the idea last fall after reading about the organization, which was founded by a policeman in Philiadelphia.

O'Brien said the group expects to raise more than $20,000 in Massachusetts and more money in Philadelphia.

All 10 planned to start running today on the Middlesex Turnpike. After the first mile, they will start a relay, each running 10-mile legs until they get to Philadelphia on Sunday, 46 hours later.

On Feb. 19, 1878, Thomas Edison received a patent for the phonograph.

Parents needed for stability

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Harvard Medical School doctor warns that many "missing parents" — absent from their homes because of divorce or jobs — will eventually pay the price when their children become emotionally ill.

Dr. Armand M. Nicholi Jr., said a home in which two parents are available to the child both emotionally and physically has become the exception instead of the rule, even in affluent families.

But he said studies conducted last year among school children in a Boston suburb indicated that children who "experienced" divorce or death within the family had a "statistically significant, strikingly higher incidence of emotional disorder than children from intact families."

"Most children experience an absent parent as rejection, and rejection inevitably breeds resentment and hostility. The child may express this outwardly in the form of violence or inwardly in the form of self-injury," he said.

He said his first clue that there might be a relation between "a missing parent and emotional illness" came about 15 years ago when he began studying several hundred young men who had dropped out of Harvard for psychiatric reasons.

"Two characteristics of the group were a marked isolation and alienation from their parents, especially their fathers, and an overwhelming apathy and lack of motivation," he said.

He said more and more parents are physically and emotionally absent because of the ever-increasing divorce rate, the trend for married women to work outside the home and the effect of television on the family.

He said that when parents are home physically, television often interferes with meaningful contact between family members.

Nicholi appeared before the first hearing of the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, along with Dr. T. Berry Brazelton, a pediatrician who has practiced for 30 years in Cambridge, Mass., and who has written popular books about child development.

Brazelton said the nation should do more to encourage good prenatal care because there are areas of the country, including Washington, D.C., in which the infant mortality rate is similar-

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
Pass	1 NT	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣.

Yes, this is the same hand we featured yesterday, but there can be more than one point of interest in a bridge hand. Besides presenting an interesting defense, it also permitted Britain's Martin Hoffman to bring off one of the rarest of all coups — the squeeze in one suit.

Hoffman's partner was not as optimistic as the North we featured yesterday. He elected to pass one no trump, and that became the final contract.

West led the king of clubs and, when declarer allowed it to win, West shifted to the nine of spades, forcing declarer's ace. The queen of diamonds was run to East's king. South ducked the jack of clubs return, and East exited with a diamond.

Declarer cashed out his diamond tricks, and on the last diamond East got rid of the embarrassing queen of hearts. Declarer cashed his master hearts to bring about this position:

NORTH

Now South cashed the ace of clubs and discarded dummy's heart. East was helpless. If he discarded a middle spade, declarer would lead a spade and cover West's eight with the queen. East could win, but at the end he would have to concede a trick to dummy's seven of spades. If East sluffed his low spade, declarer would duck a spade, and then East would have to win the spade lead and concede the last trick to dummy's queen.

Backyard threat

Central America isn't Vietnam, but it is safe to say most Americans can see enough comparisons between the Vietnam War's beginning and today's involvement in Central America to fear the future.

That fear is understandable. Only a fool dives headlong into a war without weighing the consequences. But as the United States' role in Central America seemingly becomes deeper, two all important questions must be answered: Is U.S. involvement essential in checking the spread of communism in this hemisphere? How far should that involvement extend?

President Ronald Reagan explained his administration's approach clearly in his appeal to Congress Wednesday night for additional aid for El Salvador. There are four goals in Central America, the president said. They are:

— Support of democracy, reform and human freedom.

— Support of economic development.

— Support of the security of threatened nations through military training and arms.

— Support of dialogue and negotiations.

The frightening aspect to many Americans about U.S. involvement is getting drawn into "another Vietnam." Sure there are comparisons. The "domino" theory assures us that Vietnam was a stepping stone for communist aggressors to Cambodia and Laos. Now the "dominos" are El Salvador, Nicaragua and Honduras. And from Central America, it's just a stone's throw to Mexico and the United States' border.

But Vietnam was half a world away. This nation's 20-year involvement in the conflict changed forever the way Americans approach involvement. But do we see the threat in our backyard: It's easier now to understand how the spread of communism threatens the Free World and how the Soviet Union hopes to one day win control of the world without firing a shot, but still most Americans probably don't feel threatened. When they will is a difficult question to answer.

The two questions posed earlier are easier, however. U.S. involvement is essential in checking the spread of communism in this hemisphere because this nation is the strongest in the Western Hemisphere and would be the obvious choice to lead the resistance effort.

Answering how far that involvement should extend is tougher. Obviously now isn't the time to send American troops to El Salvador. It's also clear that current involvement should extend to congressional support for the additional aid Reagan has requested despite likely public opposition. Beyond that, circumstances should dictate.

No American likes to fight on a battlefield. But our way of life is worth the commitment we must make to preserve it, however distasteful.

Another View:

No place for feds

What an agonizing decision the Indiana parents of "Baby Doe" had to make. Can anyone believe that when they were informed by the attending physician and the hospital that their newborn baby had Down's Syndrome and a blocked esophagus, they were casual about deciding, in consultation with their physician and the hospital and with a court's consent, that nutrition and medical treatment should be withheld until the infant died?

Who is to decide what to do when a severely handicapped infant is born, a hopeless case in the considered judgment of the doctors, an infant for whom life, even if it could be extended, would be an unending torment?

Surely decisions like this, with their profoundly ethical and delicate medical implications, cannot and should not be second-guessed by Washington bureaucrats. Of all areas in which government should not intrude, this must be one. As President Reagan's Commission on the Study of Ethical Problems in Medicine just recently declared, a blanket rule is not the appropriate approach to such excruciatingly difficult questions.

Yet it was in response to the Baby Doe case that the Department of Health and Human Services, in the administration of a president who professes to oppose government intrusions in private life, issued a blanket rule without even giving the public and the health professions an opportunity to comment on it.

The rule required all hospitals receiving federal funds to post notices warning, "Discriminatory failure to feed and care for handicapped infants in this facility is prohibited by federal law." It also invited anyone who knew of such a case to call a "Handicapped Infant Hotline" connected to the HHS bureaucracy, which then would act.

The rule was challenged by the American Academy of Pediatrics and 12 other organizations whose devotion to human life and ethical standards cannot be doubted. Now a federal judge has struck down the "hasty, ill-considered 'hot-line' informer rule." It is, U.S. District Court Judge Gerhard A. Gesell in Washington, D.C., declared, "arbitrary and capricious," promulgated without adequate investigation or consideration, and "virtually without meaning beyond its intrinsic 'in terrorem' effect."

HHS says it will appeal the decision. The administration would do better to reconsider whether any such federal intrusion in medical practice and private life and the physician-parent-patient relationship is needed.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Soviets stirring strife for testing

WASHINGTON — On Feb. 25, I quoted intelligence reports warning that the Soviets were trying to precipitate a military clash between Syria and Israel. Reason: The Kremlin high command desperately needs to know whether their updated SA-5 anti-aircraft missiles are any better than the SA-6s, SA-8s and SA-9s the Israelis destroyed with such ease during the Lebanon invasion last year.

Jack Anderson

What was anticipated two months ago is now becoming disturbingly imminent as the Soviet presence in Syria increases almost daily. Encouraged by their Soviet suppliers, the Syrians will try to remain in Lebanon after Israeli troops and international peace-keeping forces agree to pull out. Neither Israel nor the United States can tolerate this.

This could lead to a Soviet-American confrontation growing out of the Israeli-Syrian explosion the Kremlin is so assiduously trying to ignite.

The basis for this fear is that the Russians, embarrassed at the failure of their less-sophisticated surface-to-air missiles against the Israelis, can't afford to have the same thing happen to the SA-5s and SA-10s they have sent to Syria — the first time these weapons have been deployed outside the Soviet Union.

Intelligence experts are uncertain about just how far the Soviets would go to prevent a humiliating re-run of last year's dismal performance by their missiles in Lebanon. But the SA-5's potential for disaster is truly frightening: It can be armed with a nuclear warhead.

The SA-5, code-named "Gammon," has an impressive range of 150 miles. This means the Israelis, to protect their aircraft, would have to attack missile sites within Syria itself — and these missile batteries are now manned by Russian crews.

A top-secret Pentagon report, examined by my associates Lucette Lagnado and Dale Van Atta, notes that nuclear warheads are available for most SA-5 batteries within the Soviet Union. And in simulated launches against hypothetical B-52 bombers, the SA-5 crews were able to destroy "several aircraft with a single missile, suggesting a nuclear warhead."

The Russians have not actually installed nuclear warheads on the missiles they've deployed in Syria. But the fact that they could do so if pressed has not been overlooked by Israel and the United States.

The prospects of touching off a conflagration with the Soviets in the Middle East has had a chilling effect on the Israelis. Yet, once Israel withdraws from Lebanon, the only way it could counter a Syrian move to regain control of the country would be a new invasion on the 1982 scale. And this would put Israel eyeball-to-eyeball with the Soviets inside Syria.

U.S. and Israeli intelligence experts haven't yet agreed on exactly what the Soviet role in Syria will be. The Russians may simply be trying to recoup their lost credibility among doubtful Arab allies. It has even been suggested that the Soviet presence in Syria shows their determination to keep the Syrians from acting rashly.

At best, the Soviets seem to be indulging in a bit of brinksmanship, stirring up mischief to test U.S.-Israeli resolve. At worst, the Soviets are irresponsibly risking a showdown in hopes of regaining their prestige in the Middle East.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES: Rep. Joe Minish, D-N.J., whose heritage is Italian on his mother's side, took a bit of Italy along with him on a recent congressional visit to China: 10 pounds of Genoa salami and nine loaves of crusty Italian-style bread. "They held up pretty well," he reported. At the delegation's last dinner in Shanghai, Minish jokingly complained to his hosts that, while the Chinese invented spaghetti, "I was here a week and didn't see any."

— When Sister Madeline Chorman, a 72-year-old Peace Corps volunteer stationed in Ghana, was honored at a White House ceremony recently. She skipped the usual "pleased to meet you" greeting to President Reagan and got down to cases. She had been able to get only 100 pounds of flour a week to feed hungry Ghanaians. Could the president do something? He could, and he did. By late that afternoon, 30 bags of flour were on their way to Ghana from the Nigerian subsidiary of a Kansas City firm.

— Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., acknowledges a bit of a name-recognition problem in his quest for the Democratic presidential nomination. The self-deprecating solon contrasted his situation with that of a famous brokerage house in its TV ad: "When E.F. Hollings talks" the room falls silent, the senator said, adding: "I don't know if they're listening or just keeping quiet in disbelief."

— The Transportation Department tried some blue smoke and mirrors on Sen. Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb., when he questioned the creation of an ambassadorial post for Deputy DOT Secretary Darrell Trent at the international conference that sets trans-Atlantic air fares. Zorinsky asked if any of the other countries' representatives held the rank of ambassador. The department's response was a long, rambling history of the conference — but no answer to Zorinsky's question. The senator repeated his request for the specific information. Cornered, DOT officials reluctantly confirmed his suspicion: Trent would be the only ambassador.

INSIDE REPORT:

Trading hand protects boss

WASHINGTON — New tension within the Reagan administration is simmering between Reaganite hardliners on one side and pragmatists backed by big business on the other, working to undermine tougher restrictions on trade within the non-Communist world.

Coming on the heels of costly controversies between Reaganite loyalists and Republican regulars over the president's defense budget, arms control policy and approach toward the Soviet Union, the latest threat to administration cohesion and unity over trade policy is raising the specter of a national security policy coming apart at the seams.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

In truth, such somber musings are premature. Nevertheless, subsurface rumblings over inter-allied trade in strategic items have not stilled with the administration's tougher new trade bill. Business establishment leaders, backed by allies in high places in the Commerce and State Departments, have found bedfellows among trade-oriented liberal Democrats who also want to gut the president's new trade bill. That threatens more blood on the floor than was spilled last month when William P. Clark, Reagan's National Security Adviser, ordered the tough new bill sent to Congress.

Clark, so often the target of abuse these days even from within the White House, showed a mastery of the bureaucratic maze that his critics might find surprising — if they knew about it. A hardliner on strategic trade just like his boss, Clark's instinct was to support a toughened bill to extend the expiring Export Administration Act (tougher because it gave specific new powers to the president to bar what bureaucrats call "West-West" trade that might help the Soviet bloc). The bill had been drafted by Assistant Commerce Secretary Lawrence Brady and went to Brady's boss, Undersecretary Lionel Olmer, in early January.

There, set upon by various business and governmental committees with Olmer's apparent blessing, it was slowly gutted. An angry Clark quietly ordered Olmer and Assistant Defense Secretary Richard Perle, a specialist in strategic trade leakage to the Soviet bloc, to "negotiate a bill that would satisfy the president." Clark's hand, invisible except to insiders, thereby directed the battle to Reagan's turf.

What galvanized Clark and his aides was the steady chipping away of the early draft of the extension bill in the interest of appeasing U.S. producers and their foreign buyers. Even Undersecretary of State Allen Wallis went along with a section in the new bill that would have denied specific foreign policy powers to the president to stop trade deals without regard to Congress — a rare form of Executive Branch cannibalism.

By mid-March, Olmer-Perle negotiations shepherded by Clark produced the administration's extension bill. It armed the president with new weapons in an effort to assure that U.S. trading policy would not contribute to Soviet bloc military strength.

Instead of swinging into action behind the new bill, however White House Capitol Hill lobbyists under direction of chief of staff James Baker III have so far been passive. On Capitol Hill, Democratic Rep. Don Bonker, Chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on International Trade that has control of the bill, has pleaded with Olmer to return to the softer version abandoned on Clark's orders last month.

But Olmer, whose effort to fire Brady over the trade issue was rebuffed by Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldridge with Clark's approval, has no cards to play against the likes of Judge Clark. That does not mean the bill will pass. Business and political opponents have formidable power; the issue is one of the most difficult to manage in national security policy.

Clark's assets include Reagan himself. Clark knows that temporizing on the trade issue or accepting gutting amendments would weaken Reagan's hand at the forthcoming Williamsburg economic summit of the industrial democracies. It would also make the president look foolish in light of his use of sanctions against U.S. allies to hamper the Siberian gas pipeline, and his demand for allied concessions in return for lifting those sanctions.

Clark, oddly enough, does not want his boss to look foolish. He has mastered enough of the trade issue by now to make certain that he won't.

CHARLEY REESE

Law, science mix breeds ignorance

One of the contributing factors to the modern plague of ignorance that has made intelligent discussion of public issues well-nigh impossible is the continuous mixture of legalism and science.

Charley Reese

Law, which is certainly useful for some purposes, has escaped from the courtroom so that it now infects virtually every aspect of society. This is not good because the law is designed primarily for use in court.

The great limiting factor of our legalistic system is its rigidity. As an attorney once put it, if one of us knocked over a glass of water, we could quickly determine the facts. If we transfer the process into the legal system, however, we would have to define glass, define water, define what constitutes the act of knocking over a glass of water, and so forth forever.

When a scientist, for example, says that a substance is hazardous, he is describing certain properties of a substance and his definition of hazardous reflects the reality that toxicity is dependent on variables, particularly dosage.

When a substance is defined legally as hazardous, however, the definition is rigid and specific. To say, legally, a substance is hazardous is to say it is hazardous period. Then, when another law comes along which forbids doing something with hazardous substances, the issue becomes not really health or reality but squaring legal definitions.

Strawberries and many other foods, organically grown without a trace of anything added, contain toxic substances. Some minerals and vitamins necessary to human life are toxic substances. Sunshine causes cancer. Yet in the real world, we can easily deal with these substances because we rely on the scientific, not the legal, definition of toxicity.

The point is that just because a bureaucrat has added a chemical to the list of hazardous substances, it does not logically follow that some amounts of that substance spilled into the environment will cause health problems. The spill is illegal. But the effect may be non-existent, negligible, minor, or major. It will depend on variables which the law typically ignores and which science fequently cannot accurately determine.

A great deal of the nonsense in our society is generated by litigation. We have, as a nation, an excessive number of lawyers and, like other persons, they get hungry. The public treasury is viewed as an enormous mother lode of gold which if the proper formula can be found, can be mined by means of litigation. Other legal beagles are pursuing ideological goals, hoping to subvert the democratic process, by finding a judge who will do what a legislature will not.

An example of this disgraceful practice are the anti-gun lawyers who are trying to extend product liability to the point of forcing gun manufacturers out of business. They are looking for judges who will believe that if a gun is made and sold 18 times and stolen twice over a period of 15 years, the manufacturer is liable to pay damages to the last person shot with it as well as the last legal owner from whom it was stolen.

One solution would be to ban class action suits or at the least, severely restrict their use. Another would be to end the practice of courts ordering the government to pay fees to lawyers who take on these class action suits. A better solution would be to close two out of every three law schools or at least base the MX missile on law school campuses. Then we could at least say that a Russian first strike would not be all bad.

A free society cannot function without law but it also cannot function if the law strangles it and our problem today is not lawlessness, but too much law covering every conceivable aspect of our lives so that it has become virtually impossible for either an individual or a business to function without hiring a lawyer.

Like chemicals, the law can be toxic if the dosage is too high. When people must shift their attention from reality — like treating an injured school child — to the law (rules for treating injured children are predicated on anticipating and avoiding a lawsuit), then the nation can be said to be suffering from a poison which will ultimately prove fatal.

At right, a teenager waits in line for transportation to the militia training site, where sessions on various aspects of military life are held for Nicaragua's volunteer militia one weekend each month. Trainees range in age from 13 to over 70.

Nicaraguans spend weekends in Sandinista training camps

By PETE LEABO
Associated Press Writer

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — A 14-year-old boy in oversize olive fatigues jammed a cartridge clip into the aging semi-automatic rifle and, like a pro, pumped five shots into the target down range.

A woman in her 30s sat frustrated, not knowing where to insert the clip into the weapon she'd never used. Ten-year-old Juan Carlos dropped his gun which jammed after one shot and clasped his hands over his ears as the deafening shots continued.

They are among the more than 2,000 Sandinista Popular Militia volunteers participating in military training at a grounds about 12 miles outside this capital city.

Their training is part of the leftist Nicaraguan government's attempt to beef up its defense against what it says are increasing attacks by armed groups of counterrevolutionaries invading the country from neighboring Honduras.

The rebel groups are made up of disenchanted Nicaraguans who feel the Sandinistas betrayed the popular revolution that overthrew the U.S.-backed regime of strongman Anastasio Somoza in 1979 as well as former Somoza followers.

The Sandinistas claim the United States and Honduras are backing the rebels. Honduras denies it is aiding the rebels and the United States says it is only trying to block arms shipments from Nicaragua to El Salvador.

The part-time volunteeers meet for training sessions one Saturday and one Sunday each month, each six-hour session dealing with a different aspect of military training. This week's lesson was learning to fire, disassemble, reassemble and sight the Czech VZ M-52 .44-caliber semi-automatic rifle.

The volunteers, ranging in age from their teens to their 60s, clapped and chanted political slogans as they waited their turn to fire the rifles.

Members of the Sandinista Youth Organization, acting like members of a pep squad, shouted "Death to Yankee Imperialists!" and "If Nicaragua won, Salvador will win!" They shook their fists and chanted "Fatherland or Death."

About half of the volunteers belong to the Sandinist Youth Organization and the rest belong to numerous pro-Sandinista labor unions or the Association of Nicaraguan Women.

Juan Carlos, who declined to give his last name, said he joined because his three other brothers and sisters are militia members. One woman who joined the militia 10 months ago said she used to go to church on Sunday mornings. She now meets other volunteers at various sites around Managua early Sunday morning for the 30-minute truck ride to the training site.

Most of the volunteers wear the boots, olive drab pants and brown shirts provided by the Sandinista government. Some wear regular army uniforms because, according to one militiaman, there are more volunteers than the government has uniforms for.

Others improvise. One woman stood in her ranks with pink hair curlers, wearing a T-shirt and slacks. Another wore a Playboy T-shirt. At least a few women brought toddlers, who were corralled in a day-care zone a safe distance from the firing zone.

Regular Sandinista Army soldiers and senior militia instructors closely scrutinize the drills.

Discipline is a major part of the training. A young boy who fired his rifle before the "open fire" command was forced to forfeit his four remaining cartridges.

There is no pay for the volunteers, who sat beneath the scorching sun in temperatures ranging in the 90s. But they said they enjoy the training and many said they think they will need it to defend their communities aganst invading counterrevolutionaries.

Canadian approval expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials are expressing optimism Canada will approve testing of U.S. cruise missiles above its territory now that Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau has embraced President Reagan's overall arms control strategy.

Trudeau flew home to Ottawa on Thursday after a two-hour White House meeting with the president, their eighth talk since Reagan took office.

Before he left, Trudeau went out of his way to offer support for Reagan's arms control efforts.

He praised the president's recent interim proposal to curb medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe as a show of flexibility that was needed "so our people will understand that we want peace, that we are not determined to escalate the arms race."

Fingerprint tests suggested

VIENNA (AP) — Fingerprints would be the best way to verify the authenticity of documents purported to be Adolf Hitler's diaries, Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal said today.

"Sometimes the simplest way is the best way," said Wiesenthal, who has made a career out of documenting Nazi war crimes and who believes the diaries are fakes.

Parts of the purported diaries have been published in West Germany and Britain, but experts disagree on whether they are real or not.

Hitler's fingerprints should be on file with Bavarian police in Munich, Wiesenthal said, since Hitler was jailed in Bavaria in 1923 following the abortive "Beer Hall Putsch."

The prints of Martin Bormann, a Hitler henchman also said to have handled the diaries, should be on the covers or the pages, Wiesenthal suggested. Bormann's fingerprints are also on file, he said.

Israel offering concession

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel offered Secretary of State George P. Shultz a limited concession today on the key issue delaying troop withdrawal from Lebanon crisis, a top Israeli official said.

Shultz said after meeting Prime Minister Menachem Begin that "an inch, maybe an inch-and-a-half of progress" was made. He would not describe the progress and headed for talks with Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

The Israeli official said his government offered "a new proposal on a limited point" concerning the future of Israel's ally in south Lebanon, Maj. Saad Haddad. He did not say what the concession was, but re-emphasized Israel's insistence that Haddad and his Israeli-armed Christian militia continue "to take a major part" in patrolling south Lebanon.

Lebanon regards Haddad as a traitor and objects to leaving him in a command post in the south.

Philippine gold rush continues

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Thousands of fortune hunters continue to dig for gold on Masapelid Island despite cave-ins that have killed at least four people and buried alive up to 70 others, an island official said today.

"They care for nothing but gold," said Rolando Geotina, governor of Surigao del Norte province which includes the island.

A crudely made tunnel beneath a hill collapsed on Masapelid after a series of cave-ins April 17, 20 and 23, burying scores of gold hunters as they were scooping up soil for panning on the seashore.

"Nobody knows how many are trapped and we will not know until after we've gotten them all out," Geotina said. But reports by his staff indicated as many as 70 people may have been buried alive, he added.

Border deaths questioned

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The deaths of two West Germans at East German border posts this month has strained delicate relations between the two Germanies and may frighten travelers, the government here says.

The government has warned West Germans who travel to Communist East Germany to obey all the laws there to avoid being stopped by authorities. It also asked East Germany to be "more humane" in its border checks.

The West Germans who died were Rudolf Burkert, at a Berlin border crossing on April 10, and Heinz Moldenhauer, at another crosssing near Eisenach, East Germany, on Tuesday. East Germany said both men died of heart attacks while being questioned by border officials.

Billy, Yankees back

ARLINGTON (AP) — Bucky Dent and Mickey Rivers say there is nothing special to them about facing their former team, the New York Yankees, and former coach, Billy Martin.

But there is something important to Dent, Rivers and the rest of the Texas Rangers about the three-game, weekend series beginning tonight.

"There's nothing special about playing Billy Martin," said Rivers, who helped lead the Yankees to three American League championships and two World Series crowns.

"All I'm looking forward to is getting some hits, scoring some runs and winning some games," Rivers said. "Anybody who gets in my way is going to be sorry."

Dent, who came to the Rangers last year for outfielder Lee Mazzilli, hit .417 in the 1978 World Series and was named the Most Valuable Player of that series.

He says he has no regrets about leaving New York, and is happy to be playing with the Rangers.

"There's nothing different about playing the Yankees for me," Dent said. "We played them in spring training this year. It was just like playing any other team."

The Rangers are currently 10-9 on the strength of a pitching staff with an ERA of 2.39. But the team is .226 at the plate, and in their last 14 games, the Rangers have squeezed only 17 earned runs.

"When I joined the team last year I thought that if the pitching came around, we'd have a good ballclub," Dent said. "So far, the pitching's been good, but we haven't been scoring a whole lot of runs."

Texas manager Doug Rader is bringing hard-hitting Dave Hostetler back into the lineup with hopes of reversing the slump at the plate.

Hostetler, who led the Rangers with 22 homeruns last year even though he joined the club 40 games into the season, was benched after a long string of strike outs.

"We've got to try to get something going here," Rader said. "We've got to start hitting."

Perhaps the plight of left fielder Billy Sample best illustrates the Rangers' woes.

Sample is hitting as well as anyone on the team, but he has little to show for it. His average has dropped to .241 and he's had only one hit in his last eight at-bats. Still, in batting practice and in games, Sample is bombarding the outfield with blistering drives.

Mickey Rivers

Bucky Dent

"I'm hitting as well as I've ever hit. But sometimes it carries so much that it gives the fielder a better chance I guess," said Sample.

"For sanity's sake, I hope it turns around quickly. But I guess I'd feel worse if I wasn't hitting the ball well.

"We'll score some runs," Sample said before a 3-2 loss Wednesday night to Toronto. "We're not hitting as bad as the statistics say. There are a lot of guys hitting like me."

Texas batting coach Merv Rettenmund shakes his head when asked to explain the slump, and says the hits will come.

"Sample and (first baseman Pete) O'Brien have been hitting better than anyone, buit they have nothing to show for it," Rettenmund said.

"Billy was hitting .300 just a week ago. He's been hitting the ball all over the field."

Sample has become a regular starter for the first time in his five years with the Rangers. Despite his batting woes, he leads the team in runs scored (9) and stolen bases (4) and is tied for the lead in hits (19), doubles (4), triples (1) and homeruns (2).

"I'm lucky, really, that I can lay down a bunt and get on or beat out an infield hit," he said.

Hostetler has been working extra hours with Rettenmund on his swing, and the batting coach says the "Hoss" is ready.

Long putt solves stiff Texas wind

IRVING (AP) — Lanny Wadkins considered the shot facing him: 208 yards, uphill, into a stiff Texas wind.

"I told my caddy to give me the 3-wood," Wadkins said. "I told him, 'I know I can hit a 3-wood 208 yards, wind or no wind'."

The wind, however, 20-25 miles per hour and gusting higher, was stronger than he thought. He was about nine yards short on the tough, controversial final hole, but made the long putt that finished off a 4-under-par 67 and provided him with the first round lead Thursday in the $400,000 Byron Nelson Classic.

Wadkins, who won the Tournament Players Championship in the howling winds of Sawgrass in 1979, shrugged off the effects of the gales that raked the new 7,002-yard Las Colinas Sports Center course.

"If you're going good you can handle the winds. If you're not going good you can't handle the winds," said Wadkins.

And, quite obviously, the aggressive, gambling Wadkins has it going good right now. He's won two tournaments and $164,225 in his last four starts.

"I'm just carrying over from the last four weeks," said Wadkins, currently the season's leading money-winner.

He admitted, however, that the 18th, a par-4 that measures 466 uphill yards, and this day played directly into the teeth of the wind, was a severe test.

"You've got to stand on your head to hit two big shots, uphill, into the wind," he said.

"I'm not sure it's fair, but it's a golf hole and everybody has to play it," said Canadian Dave Barr, who failed to find the green with a 2-iron. Barr birdied seven times in one stretch of nine holes, but finished bogey-bogey for a 68 that left him alone in second.

Rex Caldwell, the man who lost two consecutive playoffs and had a string of three second place finishes in a row early this year, was more out-spoken about the 18th.

"It's too tough for me," he said. "It's just an impossible hole. Just impossible — uphill into a hurricane."

He bogeyed the hole, hitting a driver from the fairway, to drop back to 69, two off the pace and 2-under-par on the course that is being played in Tour competition for the first time.

Allen strikes again

Sparks win over Cubs

SAN ANTONO—Shortstop Robbie Allen, who dealt the Cubs so much misery in the recent series at Midland, was up to his old tricks Thursday night as San Antonio won the series opener, 2-1, Thursday night.

Allen tripled home the tying run in the home ninth and then scored the winner on a single by Gilberto Reyes with two out.

Tim Millner, who had relieved starter Ron Richardson to open the eighth, was tagged with the defeat, his first against one win.

Steve Perry, 1-1, picked up the win after relieving Sid Fernandez.

The Cubs took a 1-0 lead in the second when Jim Walsh walked, stole second and third on a wild pitch before Don Hyman singled him home.

That lead stood up until the ninth as Richardson pitched seven innings of three hit ball. Fernandez had a five-hitter going until lifted in the ninth.

Steve Brooks continued on his hitting streak, singling to run his streak to 17.During that stretch, the TCU ex has hit .375 and knocked in 21 runs.

Allen, the former Clemson infielder, was 7-for-13 in Midland and, although he managed just one hit Thursday night, it led to the game-winning run.

The Cubs are now 3-3 on the current road swing. The Dodgers and Cubs play the second of their five-game series tonight and Midland returns home Tuesday to face El Paso in a five-game stand before beginning a 20-game swing through the East.

Padres' Show more upset by walk than losing no-hitter to Bowa bunt

CHICAGO (AP) — Eric Show wasn't as disappointed that Larry Bowa broke up his perfect game with a bunt single as he was that he walked Bill Buckner.

Show retired the first 16 batters Thursday when Bowa spoiled his perfect game with a perfect bunt in what turned out to be a 3-1 victory for the San Diego Padres over the Chicago Cubs in the only National League game.

The only night game, the Detroit-California contest in Anaheim, was rained out in the fourth inning with Detroit ahead 2-0. The game will be made up during the Tigers' next trip to Anaheim July 21-24.

"No, I wasn't surprised by Bowa's bunt," said Show. "He's a pesky little hitter. But the bunt had to be perfect. I got off the mound pretty good. A foot longer or a foot shorter and we'd have had him."

Despite an error behind him after the bunt single, Show settled down and struck out the last two batters in the sixth to protect a 3-0 lead fashioned on a two-run single by Steve Garvey and a run-scoring single by Terry Kennedy in the top of the sixth.

But Buckner drew a walk leading off the Chicago seventh and scored on successive singles by Leon Durham and Ron Cey as Show headed for the showers.

"I was disappointed in walking Buckner," said Show, who upped his record to 3-1. "He's a good hitter and I didn't want to give him anything good to hit. But every pitch I made to him was good except the last one."

Luis DeLeon relieved and walked Keith Moreland to load the bases but he struck out Jody Davis and forced Bowa to hit into a double play to earn his third save of the season.

Until the sixth, Show and Cub starter Steve Trout, 1-4, were locked in a hectic pitching duel. Trout allowed only one hit through the first five innings and had the Padres beating the ball into the ground to such an extent that Buckner had the first 16 putouts at first base.

As it was, he ended with 21, one short of the major league record held by several with Ernie Banks of the Cubs last equalling the mark of 22 in 1963.

Show wasn't mad or angry, but Cub Manager Lee Elia was upset over his team's inability to score more than once in the seventh.

Federation meddling arouses ire

Why fool with best game around?

The National Federation of High Schools is the organization which governs the rules by which our Texas high schools play basketball. So when you get down to basics, every time the Federation makes a rule change, it is tinkering with District 4-5A.

Of course, we recognize the fact that uniform rules are necessary. But change for the sake of change is not welcome and that appears to be the movement of the Federation.

BEGINNING NEXT basketball season, the Federation has decided that teams will get only two time outs per half instead of the current five per game. The change is an effort to make the end of the game more appealing to basketball fans. Most coaches save time outs until the final few minutes of the game, or at least, the majority of time outs.

However, it seems from this corner that the new rule may lengthen time of games instead of shorten them. In a tight game, coaches now usually save time outs until late in a contest. Now that they are given two time out per half, it is only natural to expect that coaches will use both time outs in the first half where few were taken before.

MIDLAND BASKETBALL coaches Paul Stueckler of Lee and Jack Stephenson of Midland High don't like the new rule. They see no reason for change in this area.

"I think we have the best game on the court right now and I don't see why they have to tinker with a good thing," Stueckler said. "I don't see this new rule changing things a lot, but it does limit the way you can use your time outs."

"I know one thing," says Stephenson. "If they give me two time outs in the first half, I'll use them both whether I want to use them or not. I don't see that helping the fans or the kids. Time outs should be used when needed. I really don't have any objection to lowering the number to four if everyone has four, but I do object to being told when I can use them."

Most consider this a minor rule change. There is no organized war to change it, but the Federation may not stop with the time out rule. There is discussion about adding an experimental use of three-point play in high school, a la NBA and some college conferences.

Stephenson said that the Federation is considering use of the three-point play in non-conference and tournament games only as a test trial. He doesn't like that idea.

"I'M NOT all that opposed to the three-point play, but if they are going to use it, I want it for all games. I don't want any changes in midstream. You're talking about a lot of adjustment in the middle of the season when everything is on the line. Non-conference games are to get your team ready for district play. If you use the three-point play for half the season, then toss it out, it only serves to confuse everyone," Stephenson said.

Stueckler is even more opposed to the three-point play. "I don't know why we have to be like the NBA. I think the NBA is the worst game in the nation. I don't even know why some of the college conferences are using the three-point play. The TV ratings show they have the best game going. Why do you want to fool with something that is obviously successful?"

Stueckler's view hits home here. The NCAA playoffs drew tremendous TV ratings. The Reporter-Telegram even felt the waves when a KOSA-TV showed a telethon instead of one of the Houston playoff games. The phone rang off the hook with people wanting to know where they could see the game since a local station was not going to carry the game. The answer had to be, "You just can't see it here," and that brought a lot of angry howls.

WE DON'T need three-point gimmicks in District 4-5A to add to the excitement. In 42 District 4-5A games in 1983, 30 were decided by less than a five-point margin. What can you do to improve on that?

The Federation has also taken some of the pressure off officials by making another rule that says if a player is fouled while shooting, the shot won't count anymore as a basket.

The next thing the Federation will consider is four steps before shooting, a legalization of walking. After all, the NBA has that already — doesn't it? Well, maybe that's an unofficial rule that should be official.

Ryan ends all doubt

TED BATTLES BATTLE SCENE

Cut it any way you want, but Nolan Ryan is the all-time strikeout champion.

It became official when Ryan recorded whiff No. 3,509 the other day in Montreal's frozen house of carpet remnants to surpass the immortal Walter Johnson. That not only gave the Alvin (Tex.) Aspirin dispenser more strikeouts than any one in major league history, but the number of gates he leaves swinging per nine innings also beats anything anyone else has done, even Sandy Koufax.

THE DODGER Hall of Fame lefthander had a relatively brief major league career when it comes to all-time greats, 1955-66, and some of those were wild, undisciplined years, but Sandy always notched a lot of strikeouts. Still, his 9.28 per game ranks behind Nolan's 9.41.

Four of the top 10 strikeout leaders, based on per-nine-innings, are still active. And perhaps the most surprising thing about the list is that it doesn't include either Johnson, No. 2 in total, or Bob Feller.

You'd probably never guess who was third. If you needed a hint, with 8.86 per game, no wonder they called him "Sudden".

J.R. Richard is fourth at 8.37 while Steve Carlton (7.36) and Tom Seaver (7.24) is ninth.

The non actives in the top 10 are Bob Veale (7.96) fifth; Jim Maloney (7.96) sixth; Sam Jones (7.54) seventh; and Bob Gibson (7.22) tenth.

THE LIST is surprising in that Seaver and Gibson, among the all time total leaders, trail some lesser knowns in the Ks-per-nine list.

Also missing are Warren Spahn, Cy Young, Christy Mathewson and Don Drysdale, Dazzy Vance, all high in totals, but not in rate-per-nine.

The all-time total leaders behind Ryan and Johnson are Carlton, Gaylord Perry, Seaver, Gibson, Ferguson Jenkins, Don Sutton, Jim Bunning and Mickey Lolich.

Ryan chalked up his 3,509 victims going on 17 seasons. It took Johnson 21 to reach his 3,508.

Of course, the game has changed over the years. Since Babe Ruth discovered the home run and the lively ball put it within reach of even the .240 hitting shortstop, the game has become overrun with free swingers.

In Johnson's day, contact was the name of the game, keep it in play.

Today, bullpens enable starting pitchers to go all out without concern for finishing a game. In Johnson's day, calls to the bullpen were genuine emergencies. No one made a living as a Bruce Sutter or Rollie Fingers in those days. Relievers were usually pitchers resting between starts.

So Johnson's achievement is remarkable for its day. Some may even think more so than Ryan's, but Nolan backs up the argument for his velocity with all those no-hitters.

I guess the one guy who might have given Johnson and Ryan a run for his money was Bob Feller, who missed all those years in World War II. Before he left for service as a 23-year-old, he was mowing down batters at the rate of 250 a year. And when he came back, he fanned 348 in 1946. He probably lost 1,400 strikeouts. He wound up with 2,581.

Still, Feller didn't throw the ball as hard as long as Ryan has. In his later years, Bob relied on the breaking stuff and in his final of six 20-game seasons in 1951, he only fanned 111 in 249 innings.

Redskin receives beating award

UPPER MARLBORO, Md. (AP) — A former Washington Redskin who claimed he was severely beaten by a service station owner three years ago has been awarded $103,000 in damages by a Prince George's County jury.

John J. (Jack) Davis, a lineman for the University of Maryland, the Redskins and the Hamilton Tiger Cats in Canada during the 1950s, testified here Thursday that the owner of a Seabrook gas station beat him up when he came to retrieve his car. The car had been towed from an illegal spot.

Davis, 51, who now does audit work with the Department of Labor, said the owner, former Prince George's police detective Richard C. Tulowitzki, also followed him to a nearby parking lot and beat him again. Davis testified that he lost two front teeth and a large clump of hair during the fight, and was bitten on the face, neck, fingers and side.

Tulowitzki, who also sued Davis, testified that Davis was drunk and had started the fight. He contended that Davis had bitten one of his fingers during the fight and had also bitten his son in the side. Tulowitzki, 37, said he had followed Davis to the parking lot to "detain" him until police arrived.

Tulowitzki's attorney, Melvin Bergman, called the judgment of $40,000 in compensatory damages and $63,000 in punitive damages "extremely excessive," and said he intended to file motion for a new trial.

Stafford gains nod

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Philadelphia welterweight Roger Stafford preserved his upcoming world title fight by outpointing Alejos Rodriguez of San Antonio.

Smith's single binge paces El Paso win

By The Associated Press

Bobby Glenn Smith rapped out six singles and drove in five runs for El Paso and the Diablos scored four runs in the ninth inning to edge Beaumont 13-12 in a wild Texas League game.

In other TL contests Thursday night, San Antonio edged Midland, 2-1, and Jackson posted a 2-0 shutout over Arkansas.

Rain forced postponement of a game between Shreveport and Tulsa.

The Diablos' Bill Max completed the ninth-inning comeback with a fielder's choice grounder with one out. A throw from first base failed to nab Jaun Castillo, who scored from third with the winning run.

Ray Gallo, 1-1, was the winning pitcher. Mark Williamson, 1-2, took the loss for Beaumont.

Herman Winningham scored both runs for Jackson.

In the first, Winningham hit a leadoff double, advanced to third on an out by Terry Blocker and scored on a wild pitch. He got to first in the third on a single and advanced on a single by Kevin Mitchell and a sacrifice fly by Blocker.

Winning pitcher Dewayne Vaughn ran his record to 2-2. Loser Mike Barbra dropped to 1-1.

Hey, Cey, how about some hits?

CHICAGO (AP) — "Say hey," they used to yell, when Cub great Ernie Banks roamed Wrigley Field. "Let's play two."

It's a little different now.

"Hey Cey," they scream these days. "When you gonna get a hit?"

They're yelling a lot of other things at the former Dodger All-Star, who signed as a free agent with Chicago this year to become the city's highest-paid professional athlete. But mostly they boo, which is uncharacteristic for Cub fans so accustomed ill-fortune.

Cey was reluctant to describe his feelings about how the fans he so badly wanted to impress are reacting to what he calls the worst hitting slump of his career.

"It really doesn't matter what I think," the $950,000-a-year slugger said before Wednesday's 5-4 victory over San Diego. "They do what they have to do."

For 12 years, the 35-year-old third baseman was a fixture in the middle of the Los Angeles lineup, and he set numerous team slugging records. He was named to six straight All-Star games in the mid-1970s and tri-MVP of the 1981 World Series.

But in 17 games this season, he has just 10 hits in 63 at bats for a .158 average. Although he ranks fourth on the all-time Dodger list with 228 home runs, he hasn't hit one in a Cub uniform. He has knocked in just three runs, left numerous runners stranded in scoring position and committed six fielding errors.

"I've tried very hard to make things work, but up until now, nothing has happened of a positive nature," Cey said while signing autographs for fans who repeatedly asked him when he would start hitting. "It's so un-normal now it's almost not even worth talking about."

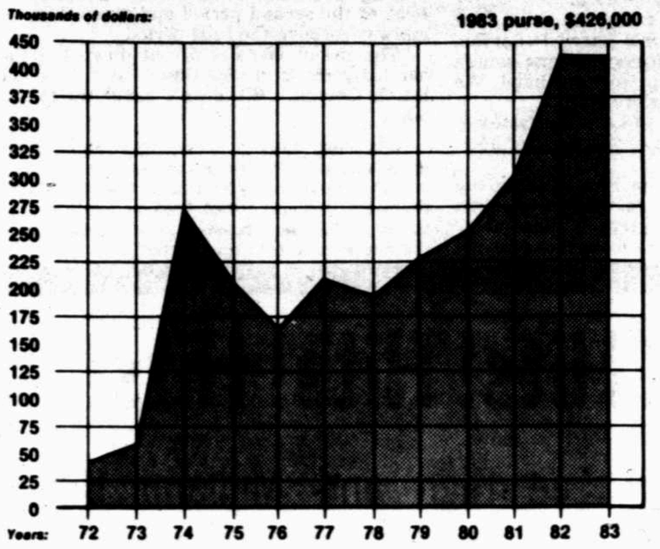
Kentucky Derby

The winner's purse in the Kentucky Derby is three times bigger this year than it was in 1972 after a decade of uneven but spectacular growth. The size of the purse varies from year to year, depending on the number of horses nominated (a $200 fee), the number who enter ($5,000) and the number who actually start ($5,000).



The second place horse will take home $60,000 this year, third place will pay $30,000 and fourth place, $15,000.

Pittsburgh gets USFL franchise

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pittsburgh has another professionall football team, but no one knows it's name, where its home field will be or how hard the National Football League might fight to prevent Edward DeBartolo Sr. from keeping it.

DeBartolo, whose son Edward owns the NFL's San Francisco 49ers, was under "great pressure" by other NFL owners not to acquire a franchise in the new league, USFL Commissioner Chet Simmons said Thursday in announcing that DeBartolo Sr. had acquired the USFL's first expansion team.

Simmons called the sentiment in the NFL "exceedingly onerous."

The NFL constitution prohibits team owners from also holding, "directly or indirectly, any interest whatsoever in a professional football organization, league, club or team not a member of the National Football League."

NFL spokesman Joe Browne said the issue would be discussed by the league's 27 other club presidents at their next scheduled meeting, May 25 in Tampa, Fla.

Pittsburgh Steelers spokesman Joe Gordon declined comment on the new franchise.

DeBartolo bought the new franchise for a price reported variously as $2.5 million and $6 million. The Pittsburgh franchise is the USFL's 13th entry and Pittsburgh's second pro football team. The Pittsburgh Steelers celebrated their 50th anniversary last season.

DeBartolo, a Youngstown, Ohio, real estate magnate, also owns the Pittsburgh Penguins of the National Hockey League and the Pittsburgh Spirit of the Major Indoor Soccer League. He also operates the Pittsburgh Civic Arena, where the two teams play.

Nuggets face 0-2 deficit

By Associated Press

Coach Doug Moe believes the Denver Nuggets are at their best when things are bleakest, and if that's true, the San Antonio Spurs could be in trouble.

The Nuggets are down 0-2 in their best-of-seven National Basketball Association playoff series with the Spurs, while league scoring champion Alex English and star center Dan Issel are both nursing injuries going into tonight's third game in Denver.

In the other Western Conference semifinal, Los Angeles is at Portland tonight in a series the Lakers lead 2-0, while Milwaukee is at Boston for the second game of an Eastern Conference semifinal that the Bucks lead 1-0. The New York Knicks, trailing 0-2, host Philadelphia in the other Eastern semifinal on Saturday.

PORTLAND goes home hoping that its rabid followers can make up the difference against the Lakers. The Trail Blazers have sold out for every home game for six years and 12,666 will attend tonight's playoff meeting.

Abdul-Jabbar scored 32 points to spearhead the Lakers' 118-97 victory over Portland in the clubs' opening playoff game. Then, with two and three men guarding him when he had the ball, he pumped in 37 points and had a team-high seven assists in the Lakers' 112-106 triumph Tuesday night.

"He's awesome all the time, but he's more awesome in the playoffs," Lakers guard Earvin "Magic" Johnson said of his teammate.

Young nerves boost old-timers into lead

AUSTIN, (AP)- Old-timers Jack Fleck and Fred Hawkins, who rarely shared the spotlight during their regular playing days, owned a shot lead going in today's second round of the $485,000 Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf Tournament and they owed it all to their ''young'' putting nerves.

"We made some field goals out there," said Fleck, the 1955 U.S. Open champion who beat out Ben Hogan. "It seemed like every hole was a dream."

The 62-year-old Fleck, who won only two PGA tour events, and the 59-year-ld Hawkins, wo was a runnerup 28 times on the PGA Tour, birdied seven of the first eight holes Thursday for a tournament record 28 on the front nine.

They coasted home with a 1-under par 34 to finish with an 8-under par 62 over the tight but testy Onion Creek Golf Club, good for a one shot edge.

Argentina's Roberto De Vicenzo, who eagled the first hole, and substitute Rod Funseth went out in 32 and come home in 31 for a 63.

The 59-year-old Hawkins, who won two PGA tour events and quit golf for 12 years before he rekindled his interest, holed putts of 30, 0, 10, 20, and 10 feet on the front ine.

Bruins even series

BOSTON (AP) — Boston goalie Pete Peeters dived, slid, sprawled and brawled and kept the puck out of the net. The Bruins would have been better off if his teammates hadn't forced him into such contortions.

Peeters was the last line of defense — and the New York Islanders reached it frequently — in the Bruins' 4-1 victory Thursday night that evened their best-of-seven Wales Conference final playoff series at one game each.

"Pete had to make too many big saves, but a win's a win," said Boston's Barry Pederson, who scored the National Hockey League game's last two goals. "We'll keep working hard. We know there are areas to improve on."

They can start by trying to keep the fast-skating, tenacious Islanders away from Peeters' doorstep.

"They were getting in on Pete a little too much," said Rick Middleton, who assisted on three goals. "We weren't keeping them away from the net. You can't let a team like that get too many chances or they're going to burn you."

Boston jumped into the lead in the first period on a power play goal by Mike Krushelnyski and a tally by Brad Palmer, one of the Bruins' two shorthanded goals.

Dennis Potvin's power play goal at 3:57 of the second period cut Boston's lead in half before Pederson raised his playoff goal total to 13 by scoring while the Bruins were shorthanded at 16:51 of the second period and at equal strength midway through the final period.

"The major issue is to cut down the shorthanded goals at crucial times," said New York's Butch Goring. "We didn't cover up for each other."

New York outshot Boston 33-31 and had more good scoring opportunities than the Bruins, but wasn't sharp enough around the net to finish them off. Several times Peeters made sparkling saves outside his crease then scrambled back to the net he had left unprotected.

Ryan better than ever

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Nolan Ryan, baseball's newly crowned "King of the K," may be the same good ol' boy he was in the American League, but Al Oliver think's he's a better pitcher.

Oliver, the Montreal Expos' 1982 National League batting champion, had a chance to face Ryan while he was with California and with the Houston Astros.

"The thing I was really impressed with after I came back from the American League, was that his control was exceptional," Oliver says.

"When he can throw that hard and have command of his pitches, he can be awesome."

OLIVER RATES Ryan in the top ten of pitchers he's faced, but when he puts it all together, "well, let me put it this way, there's none better."

Oliver's list also includes Bob Gibson, Tom Seaver, Juan Marichal, Steve Carlton, Ron Guidry, Gaylord Perry, Ferguson Jenkins, Steve Rogers and Jim Palmer.

Ryan broke the 55-year-old record for career strikeouts, held by Walter Johnson, against the Expos on Wednesday. He struck out five, giving him 3,509 in his career. Johnson, whose last season with the Washington Senators was in 1927, had 3,508.

Besides their pitching styles, Johnson and Ryan have other similarities. After his playing days, Johnson retired to a 500-acre farm in Germantown, Md., where he raised milk cows until he died in 1946. Ryan owns a ranch in his hometown of Alvin, Texas, some 10 miles from Houston, where he breeds cattle.

Johnson led an exemplary life that prompted President Calvin Coolidge to hold him up as a role model for youngsters. Ryan, like Johnson, is a simple, homespun type who hasn't let his stardom get in the way of his humanity.

"He's a regular, down-home Texan from Alvin," Astros Manager Bob Lillis says. "The fella has had such a great career — five no-hitters, the single-season strikeout record (383). He's done just about everything a pitcher could do, and in his everyday actions, you couldn't tell it.

"HE'S JUST gone about his business. He has a job to do that day, and he goes out and does it."

In the past several years, Ryan's job might have been getting a little easier. Despite being 36 years old, Ryan has lost very little off a fastball once clocked at nearly 101 mph. He still throws in the 97-98 mph range. And, an improvement in his control has allowed him to perfect his "she'll-be-comin'-around-the-mountain-when-she- comes" curveball.

Ryan has led the major leagues in walks six times, but only once since 1979, his last year at California. And, since 1979, his winning percentage has been .568, compared to .524 for his entire career.

"Actually, I still throw about 70 percent fastballs," Ryan says. "Some people think I'm going more to the curve now, but that's because I tend to get ahead of batters more and I can use it for an out pitch."

"With that curveball," Oliver says, "he's just as good as any pitcher around, maybe better. He's awesome."

Vin, Joe: too much of good thing

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

NBC spent a lot of money to get Vin Scully for its Game of the Week, pairing him with Joe Garagiola and dropping Tony Kubek to a second team with Bob Costas. Scully has no peer as a play-by-play broadcaster, but off the first few weeks, Scully-Garagiola appears to be verbal overkill.

Last Saturday, doing the Dodgers and Pirates, the pair played a game of "Can You Top This?" that overshadowed what was happening on the field. Did Scully know a pithy baseball anecdote? Garagiola knew a better one. Did Scully note a sublety on that play? Garagiola saw that and more.

THE KEY Dodger hits, Pedro Guerrero's homer and Jose Morales' double, were replayed several times over, each time to a Scully-Garagiola lecture on Pirate John Candelaria's carelessness with the pitch. Which is beside the point — if pitchers threw nothing but good pitches, nobody would get a hit.

One problem stems from a strong point — Scully's knowledge of baseball, gleaned from 30 years of living with the Dodgers day-in, day-out. He needs no ex-jock to explain what's happening on the field; nor does he need a "baseball man" to supply the anecdotes and the historical context that does so much to make the sport what it is.

GARAGIOLA has some of the same strengths. Moreover, he's more than an ex-jock. He's a comic, a raconteur, an entertainer; in short, he's show biz, one of a breed that finds it hard to allow anyone else the last word.

But unless he does, viewers may be smothered in verbiage. Unless NBC finds another way to bring balance to the broadcast booth.

Stay tuned.

A COUPLE of kudos:

—To CBS for its coverage of the brawl in last Sunday's National Basketball Association playoff game between Boston and Atlanta. It was diligent and more so — before airing the segment showing Tree Rollins biting Danny Ainge, CBS technicians played and replayed the tape to certify that it was, in fact, Rollins' teeth on Ainge's finger.

An addendum: Atlanta guard Mike Glenn ought to take someone from CBS out to dinner. To the surprise of those who know him as one of the most gentlemanly players in the game, Glenn was tossed out of Sunday's contest after the brawl. Then the NBA looked at the tapes and discovered that Glenn had no part. The result: the automatic $250 fine against him was rescinded.

—To ESPN for the National Football League draft. Staying on the air for 10 straight hours, it showed dozens of film clips and got thousands of words of analysis and hardly missed a pick.

Like anything 10 hours long there was good and bad.

Bad were the contrived shots from a bar in New Jersey where a series of football players were paraded before the cameras for irrelevant comments. When they ran out of football players, they trotted in Rory Sparrow of the New York Knicks.

Good were the graphics, listing a drafted player at his position along with the incumbents, thus putting it in the context of the team. Good also were the updates on John Elway's status, which dominated the draft.

But best, perhaps were the comments, particularly by the most knowledgeable football writers Howard Balzer and Paul Zimmerman. Zimmerman in particular managed to leaven his comments with dry humor as when suggesting, after the New York Giants picked a tight end, that Giant tight ends were underrated.

"Gary Shirk's a good player," he said. "He's a tough blocker. He can catch a pass for a first down on third and six ... (pause) And he's a neighbor of mine in New Jersey."

Colts, Chiefs, Rams so talent-loaded...

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Isn't it wonderful about the Baltimore Colts? I mean, having all the talent they will need for the 1983 season? They must. They passed a chance to get Dan Fouts. Couldn't find a spot for him in all that talent, I suppose.

Aren't you thrilled for the Kansas City Chiefs? What pluck to pass up on John Stallworth. I mean, you got to love a guy who says "I'll play these" and guts it out with what he's got in his hand.

You have to feel warm all over when you think that the Rams, flushed with success, see no reason to beef up their admirable receiving corps with the addition of Harold Carmichael, who has caught something like a touchdown pass a game since they played in high cuts and leather helmets.

IT'S GOT to give you a glow to know that solid franchises like Houston (1-8 in 1982), Baltimore (0-8), or the Rams (2-7), or Denver (2-7), believe they can go with what they got for the new season. I mean, would you break up the 1927 Yankees? It's really heartening to know that not one of the 28 teams in the NFL is hurting. The league is standing pat.

Not one of the 209 veteran players who became free agents got a nibble from the league, which had until April 15 to bid on them. That says volumes for the health of each and every team in the land. In baseball, if a player like Reggie Jackson comes on the open market, 25 owners, waving blank checks, pounce. But in football, Dan Fouts, who only averaged 320 yards and two touchdowns a game, didn't probably even inspire a phone call.

The Catch-22 is the infamous Rozelle Rule. Once thrown out by the courts of the land but reinstated with the consent of the governed — the players association — it provides for compensation for the club jumped by the free-agent player.

SIGNING Dan Fouts would cost, say, the Miami Dolphins a million in salary and two No. 1 draft choices to San Diego. But this is not the whole story. To get the full picture, we drop in on the owner of the 0-9 Red Dogs, Big Daddy Oilbucks. As we tune in, he is being interviewed by Specs Spacey of the Tallahassee Daily Equivocator.

Specs: "Big Daddy, can you tell my readers why you didn't bid on a quarterback in the free-agent phase of the offseason?"

Big Daddy (picking up a phone): "Excuse me, just a minute. (He dials an assistant.) 'Cratchit? What's a quarterback? Oh, he's the one who crouches under the center and tickles him in the ribs? Got it. Are we fresh out of them or something? No? We got two? Got it. Thank you.' (Hangs up, turns to Specs.) Well, Sonny, seems like we got all the quarterbacks we need, in fact, one more than we need."

Specs: "But, sir I was thinking of someone like Dan Fouts. Had 33 completions in one game last year. Had 17 touchdowns."

Big Daddy: "Sounds fine. What would it take to get him?"

Specs: "I believe he's asking for a million dollars."

Big Daddy: "A million dollars?! I could buy an oilfield for that! Why on earth would I pay it to a guy who just yells 'Hut, Hut!' every few minutes and falls on his can?!"

Specs: "Well, he could win the championship for you."

Big Daddy: "The championship? What championship?"

SPECS: "Of the league. The NFL. You could go to the Super Bowl."

Big Daddy: "I already go to the Super Bowl. By private train. Have a helluva time. What do I care whether the team goes, too?"

Specs: "Well, the prestige, the honor. Besides, that's what it's all about, isn't it?"

Big Daddy: "What it's all about, sonny, is the bottom line. Do you know I get $14 million a year for these cretins from television whether they make a first down all year or not? Do you know we have a sellout every week? I'll tell you quite frankly it's a nuisance having a winning team and going to the Super Bowl. All those people asking you for tickets. I got it made! It doesn't matter how lousy that team is!"

Specs: "But aren't you afraid some other team will grab up Fouts and Carmichael and Stallworth and Cliff Branch and get real good and your attendance will dwindle and TV contracts shrink and the business will pass you up?"

BIG DADDY: "My dear boy, do you think we'd leave anything like that to chance? Sharpen up! This is the most exclusive men's club in the world – except for that renegade who used to be up in Oakland and the fact that in that funny little town in Orange County the owner is a woman.

"There's no way one of us is going to tamper with the other's property. That's why we put that little compensation role in there. Protects us from our own greed. Got the players to put that little stipulation in there to keep us from falling all over ourselves in a bidding war in case some maverick came along who wouldn't abide by the club laws. Even though they're unwritten, they're for our own protection.

U.S. conservation, research efforts feeling pinch

By VIC OSTROWIDSKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON – A committee of the National Academy of Sciences claimed a few years ago that in the year 2010 "very similar conditions of habitat, transportation, and other amenities" could prevail in this country in an economy that consumed either twice as much energy or 20 percent less than used today.

Whether the nation would be using the equivalent of 70 million barrels of oil a day, or about 30 million, said the academy, would depend upon the degree of conservation.

Ever since the first oil embargo in 1973, loud voices have been heard throughout the land touting the potential of energy conservation. But early pleas fell mostly on deaf ears and were discounted as the unrealistic cries of environmental romantics.

The criticism subsided in 1979, however, when the Harvard Business School and the Mellon Foundation issued separate scientific studies concluding that energy conservation was the country's largest energy resource for the next few decades.

The studies claimed that conservation, coupled with relatively modest new production incentives, would be not only the best, but also the most politically acceptable energy plan.

THE SIX–YEAR Harvard study argued that by subsidizing greater gasoline mileage for automobiles and tighter building insulation, "you can save five million barrels a day by the late 1980s – faster than you can get even one million barrels a day from synthetic fuels."

Much has happened since then to get the country energy conservation-oriented. But most enviromentalists, some scientists, a few political leaders, several state legislatures, and some members of Congress believe much more should be done to make this country less dependent on oil, less energy-wasteful and more energy self-sufficient.

Does a conservation policy mean that Americans must accustom themselves to ever less comfort and convenience, to steamy summers and frigid winters?

The answer from the best experts is a resounding no.

The experts say there is a wide array of conservation possibilities that can save large amounts of energy without slowing down or cramping the style of the American consumer.

What is the definition of conservation?

THE DEPARTMENT of Energy defines conservation as a "series of actions to cut waste and get more from each unit of energy used. This is done in three ways: by improving the energy efficiency of buildings, vehicles and industrial equipment; by substituting energy-efficient goods and services for energy-intensive ones, and by curbing the need for energy services."

Viewed in a much simpler context, conservation – an improvement in the efficiency of fuel use – is like finding vast new oil fields.

Recent studies about potential savings vary, ranging from a "28 to 46 percent savings" projected by the Electric Power Research Institute to the "energy equivalent of 15 million barrels per day, which is 40 percent of the current U.S. use level," a projection of the American Physical Society.

The Energy Conservation Coalition (ECC) claimed that there are "few technological barriers holding us back. In fact, much of energy conservation is so simple, it is boring."

"Our homes, our factories, our automobiles, our appliances – our entire system for using energy is a relic of an era of cheap energy," the ECC claimed.

"STUDY AFTER STUDY has concluded that we can substitute "intelligence, prudence, better maintenance, and improved equipment for expensive energy," the ECC said.

Inexpensive leak-plugging in homes and factories, upgrading the efficiency of electric motors and industrial boilers, and changes in personal habits and driving styles yield considerable savings, especially as conventional fuel costs increase.

Other cost-effective improvements include passive solar building design, heat pumps, double-glazed windows, efficient air conditioning, re-using waste heat and materials, vanpooling and improved auto maintenance.

Other possibilities include higher mileage standards for cars and trucks, more energy-efficient building design and retrofitting of existing buildings, co-generation, or letting factories that need steam share the same site as electric power plants, which make steam as a waste product.

Such changes require changes in institutions, government regulations, industrial practices, and building code designs.

THE REAGAN Administration, however, supports the relaxation of government regulations but has steadily cut funds for energy conservation. It recommended cuts in a wide range of programs, including transportation, weatherization, emergency planning, heat recovery, waste conversion, and advanced engine research and development projects.

Although the building sector uses almost 40 percent of the nation's energy, research into ways to make homes and appliances more efficient has been targeted for severe budget cuts each year.

The picture for conservation programs is fuzzy at the moment. The continuing resolution for fiscal 1983 gave DOE solar and conservation programs the same appropriation as in 1982 – $268 million for solar and $468 million for conservation energy programs.

But that funding was cut further by Congress. The Senate Appropriations Committee recommended $188 million for solar. The House Appropriation panel recommended $180 for solar and $431 for conservation.

Things look even bleaker for fiscal 1984. The administration has requested $102 million for solar and $155 million for conservation.

BY CONTRAST, in the past few years state legislatures have developed many innovative programs to deal with the nation's energy problems.

Programs in Massachusetts and Maine devote bond funds to the retrofitting of public buildings. Alaska encourages conservation in residential and commercial buildings. Rhode Island promotes conservation through free home energy audits. Minnesota has a residential energy disclosure program in which a seller must disclose to a buyer the results of an on-site inspection by a certified evaluator. All states have developed ride-sharing programs and projects to educate drivers on auto maintenance.

Regan warns of deficits' effect

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Treasury Secretary Donald Regan warned Wednesday that economic recovery is severely threatened by continued high federal deficits and the inability of Congress to pass a budget that reduces domestic spending.

Noting that the federal deficit for the first six months of fiscal 1983 was $130 billion, Regan stated that it will be impossible to reduce interest rates if red ink continues to flow at that volume "month after month after month."

"The greatest threats to recovery are fiscal deficits...we've got to get these deficits down," said the secretary, pointing an accusing finger at Congress for its failure to adopt a budget resolution sharply paring domestic spending.

Although economic recovery has begun, he told a group of reporters over breakfast, it can be aborted by huge deficits, heavier government borrowing and an increase in interest rates.

For months, the Reagan administration has been at odds with Congress because many members of House and Senate, both Democrats and Republicans, are opposed to the president's proposals to slash domestic spending and to increase defense spending by 10 percent.

Many members also believe the third year of the Reagan's across-the-board tax cut, scheduled for July 1, and the indexing of taxes to inflationary bracket creep should be delayed or abolished. Some members advocate new taxes to provide revenue to offset the deficits.

While Regan pointed out that he, Office of Management and Budget director David Stockman, White House Chief of Staff James Baker and other administration officials are trying to work out a budget compromise with the House and Senate, he suggested it was time for Senate Republicans "to bite the bullet" and go along with the president's propoals.

Janeway predicts stripper well win

By SARAH McCLENDON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Darrell Janaway of Oklahoma City, representing Texas Independent Producers Legal Action committee, predicted here Thursday that stripper well operators will win their appeal to the Internal Revenue Service to continue exemptions from the Windfall Profit tax.

In testimony before the IRS, Janaway labeled the rulings of IRS in closing out stripper properties' exemption "a sham."

Janaway won a federal district court decision in Washington, D.C., on April 18 to force IRS and the Department of Energy to give them documents and all data used in arriving at the close-out ruling. He said IRS may have to be taken into court again.

He is planning now to report shortly to Judge June Green that the government is not fully complying with her order under the Freedom of Information Act. The judge recently instructed IRS to have its engineers, which were hired to interpret DOE regulations on stripper wells, produce their field data for the Legal Action commitee of Janaway.

Janaway described how difficult it is for affected citizens to get information about how IRS has made a decision on taxing stripper wells. He pointed out that since this decision reverses the exempt status that stripper operators have enjoyed for years, the documentary evidence is of the utmost importance. Yet IRS denied this when asked for it, he said. IRS told Janaway that it did not have documents.

OSHA steps up inspections in workplace 15 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Occupational Safety and Health Administration increased work site inspections by nearly 15 percent last year, and only a small proportion of the citations it issued were contested, agency officials say.

While the 63,914 inspections of work places in 1982 were far below the peak of 88,927 conducted in 1975, the agency said, the visits to plants and construction sites were increased at a time when OSHA's staff of compliance officers was being cut by nearly 20 percent.

In 1981, during the first year of the Reagan administration, total work place inspections declined from 64,786 in 1980 to 55,593.

The agency said in a statement that a "cornerstone of the new administration has been to cooperate with both management and labor for a safer work place, rather than the agency playing an adversary role as policeman."

Chamber reps on a tour to Austin

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

Midland Chamber of Commerce representatives will join city and county officials in a trek to Austin May 19. Their goal is to speed up construction of Loop 250.

The Chamber's streets and highways committee has made a list of priorities concerning three interchanges along the Loop, and it will ask the Texas Highway Department to expedite funding needed to complete these.

"We are asking for higher priortity on these projects," said John Aldridge of the Chamber. The Loop was originally conceived as a 20-year plan, with a projected cost of $40 million.

Chamber president Larry Bell said the idea is to speed up work on specific areas "to enhance traffic flow around the Loop and enhance its safety."

The three interchanges, which are already planned to be done "further down the road," are at intersections of the Loop and Highway 158 (Andrews Highway), Midland Drive and Midkiff Road.

The Chamber also will ask the State Highway Department to finish the Loop's main lanes between Midland Drive and Midkiff Road.

"If we could accomplish the work on these three interchanges," Bell said, "you would be able to get on the Loop at West Highway 80 and move over the overpass at Andrews Highway and Midland Drive and get to Midkiff without stopping."

In other transportation action, the Chamber ratified a resolution asking for defeat of a proposal to license all private and corporate aircraft in Texas. The bill, which is pending in Austin, would require a license sticker on each plane and would thus raise fees to be added to the State's general fund.

Other Legislative action which caught the Chamber's eye was a bill which would abolish the Texas Industrial Commission in its present form. The TIC works to attract new business and industry to Texas, and thus directly has an affect on Midland's economy as well, said Grant Billingsley, the Chamber's economic development director.

The House bill seeks to abolish the TIC and remove its 12 members, who are presently serving six-year terms. They are appointed by the governor and must by approved by the Senate.

The bill would replace the TIC with a newly-created agency, the Texas Economic Development Commission, whose 12 members would be appointed by the governor without need for Senate approval.

Chamber members criticized the proposal for several reasons. They said they feared the new agency would be too political, and that Midlander Joe Kloesel might lose his position with the TIC in the aftermath of any changes in its structure.

"I think this is disastrous," said Paul Harvel, Chamber executive vice president. "I don't know of any other state which approaches it the way they are proposing to do it. The TIC has problems, mostly of not having enough money, but I don't think it should be changed.

"Our neighboring states would just love to see this passed."

At its recent annual meeting, the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, headed by Kloesel, went on record opposing the bill to change the TIC, according to W.H. Collyns of the Chamber.

The Chamber decided to let its executive committee take action through a resolution against the measure.

In other action, the Chamber learned:

— Midland has succeeded in attracting more convention business in recent months, according to Louis Hochman. In February, March and April, the city's hotels and restaurants hosted 23 conventions. Bids have been accepted for several conventions which will be held here in the future, with 1,800 delegates expected to attend, Hochman said.

Convention business brings more revenues to the city than anyone realizes, he said, urging Chamber members to continue to promote Midland as a convention center.

— New business activity in Midland continues as evidenced by the number of ribbon-cuttings or groundbreakings attended by the Chamber's M Squad team. The team has participated in 38 such events since it was formed six months ago. "These new businesses represent $35 million in new construction and 475 new jobs for Midland," said Barbara Luedecke, M Squad leader.

— Midland's real estate market has experienced a dramatic change since March 1982, Laura Manulik, president of the Midland Board of Realtors, told the Chamber. A year ago there were 405 residential properties available in Midland; today there are 1,580. Counting commercial properties, farms and lots, there are 1,927 listings.

In March 1983, 116 residential units were sold, compared to 171 in march a year ago. Manulik said she felt the real estate market has "firmed up" and that local Realtors are seeing more traffic than in the first quarter 1983.

UTPB bill earns passing grades

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Although presidents of junior colleges in Midland, Texarkana and Tyler warned legislators on the dangers of a bill which the Senate passed Wednesday, their fears aren't shared by other colleges and universities.

The junior college presidents spoke in opposition to SB 1014 and HB 598, which would grant four-year status to The University of Texas of the Permian Basin — now a junior, senior and graduate university.

While admitting freshman and sophomore students to UTPB may set a precedent that will be followed by other upper-level institutions across the state, fears of junior college presidents over a loss in enrollment are not publicly shared by other area colleges and universities.

At Texas Tech University, administrators are staying clear of the war raging between Midland and Odessa.

Tech, which has an enrollment of about 23,000 students, is expanding its Health Science Center to Odessa; however, Dr. Eugene Payne, vice president for finance and administration, said he doesn't feel the center "would be impacted in one way or another.

"The Texas Tech University administration is not taking a stance on this bill for or against," Payne said. "We feel it is a matter appropriate to be handled by the Legislature, the Coordinating Board and the Board of Regents of the Univeristy of Texas System rather than by this university."

"It's difficult to guess how it will impact us," said Mike Ryan, assistant to the president at Angelo State University. "We've not had a four-year school in that area."

Although administrators have not appeared in Austin, Ryan said his university's 5,500 enrollment includes some Midland/Odessa students.

"We draw students from Midland and Ector counties as well as throughout the state. It's difficult to gauge what impact it could have (on enrollment). Certainly it would have some if you have a four-year school right there in your backyard."

Administrators from Abilene's three private four-year colleges also are staying clear of the controversial bill.

"We operate an individual Christian university that has national and international appeal," said Dr. William J. Peague, president of Abilene Christian University, which has an enrollment of 4,500 students. "We have a good number of students from the Midland/Odessa area and some have come to us after a couple of years at Midland College.

ACTion needed to feed area's hungry, speaker says

Zy Weinberg

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Since the poor and hungry always will be in the midst of the well-doers, the Anti-hunger Coalition of Texas (ACT) is scraping up otherwise wasted food for the downtrodden.

And Midland, now on the "bust" side of the boom, seems to be a contender for a food bank.

On Thursday, ACT's director, Zy Weinberg, brought his message to 30 Midlanders who expressed concern "about needy people here in Midland getting one of the basic necessities of life - food."

ACT's goal, which has been realized in 12 Texas cities from El Paso to San Antonio to Brownsville, is setting up food warehouses for supplementing food already provided for the needy by churches, missions, senior citizen centers, the Salvation Army and other similar outlets.

Aside from food, ACT's aim is to supply "better quality food to all Texans and particularly those of low incomes,...the destitute, the homeless, the drifter,...homeless people coming down here from the North and looking for jobs," Weinberg told a gathering in the Junior League of Midland's headquarters.

"FOOD IS the most expendable household budgeted item," lamented Weinberg. "It's the first to go and usually is the first item they cut out and usually results in deterioration in their diets and their health."

Food collected in warehouses usually is donated by grocery stores, food processors and restaurants and otherwise would be cast into Dumpsters due to damaged cans, expired sale dates and other "edible but not salable" items.

Safeway Stores are participating in the feed-the-hungry program.

"Twenty percent of all food produced in America is wasted," Weinberg said. That waste comes during the harvest, in processing, by overruns, in damaged merchandise at the wholesale and retail levels. In Texas, an estimated 12 million tons of food is discarded needlessly each year. "That's a tremendous amount of waste," Weinberg said.

The nationwide food-bank movement was started in Phoenix, Ariz., in the late 1960s by the Second Harvest National Food Bank Network. Food processors, including Kellogg, a cereal company, and Kraft, a cheese outlet, have donoted carloads of edible but unsalable foods to Second Harvest, which nationwide has set up 45 tax-free food banks.

IN THE RIO Grande Valley, about 230 tons of grapefruit which appear to be going to waste could be "picked, packed and trucked" to food banks, Weinberg suggested. "About that many grapefuit went to waste last year," he said, "so, there's a lot of food that goes to waste."

In Austin, where ACT is headquartered, a "plant-a-row-for-the-poor" resource is being developed among home gardeners, Weinberg noted.

"You'll find (food) sources you never dreamed of," he said.

Donation of food to the poor is being encouraged by the federal 1976 Tax Reform Act. For food processors which donate food, the act allows for the cost of food production and 50 percent of "their unrealized profits" to be written off their income taxes. In addition, the Good Faith Donors Act protects food donors from liabilities should, for example, people become ill from eating donated foods.

To date in Texas, food banks are operating in Brownsville, Austin, Corpus Christi, Fort Worth, Waco, Amarillo, Houston, Dallas, San Antonio, Wichita Falls and El Paso, said Weinberg. He is in West Texas to gauge interest in setting up food banks in Midland, Abilene, Odessa and Pecos.

MIDLAND IS not without need for food banks, suggested Ed Miller, manager of the Texas Employment Commission in Midland, which has a work force of about 64,200.

"It takes a lot of money to live in Midland," Miller said. "Groceries are higher" than in many other places. The unemployment rate here is 5.9 percent, while the rate in Odessa, which has less of a white-collar work force than Midland, is 9.6 percent. In Texas, the unemployment rate is 8.7 percent; nationwide, it is 10.8 percent.

"We haven't bottomed out yet, folks," Miller said. "You're going to see some real poverty" and couples who were used to living on $30,000 a year will suddenly find themselves unable to pay bills.

MISD trustees approve computer program

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Expansion of a computer literacy and the GEM (Gifted Education Midland) programs were approved during a meeting of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees Thursday afternoon.

To accommodate all students, the computer systems being used primarily for remedial instruction will be expanded at a cost of about $144,600.

Some of that funding, it is hoped, will come from outside sources.

In other action, trustees re-elected officers, approved a special education plan and a comparability statement and heard reports on the district security plan and construction of the Instructional Materials Center destroyed in a fire at Carver last spring.

According to Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi, all departmental requests for computer instruction were removed during earlier budget hearings in an effort to establish one system that encompasses all areas.

The program was designed to give the minimum level of knowledge and skills concerning computer usage, said Assistant Superintendent of Instruction Dr. Duane Moore.

"This is the minimum and I'm the first to admit it," Moore said of the program.

Because budget figures are not available, Moore said he was asking the board to approve the concept of the computer literacy program. Baressi said the Midland Chamber of Commerce had mentioned helping with funding and Trustee Ron Britton said he had been approached by a few community business people who had indicated a willingness to donate money for computers.

"I think we are in the computer age and I feel we have kids in the fourth, fifth and sixth grades (who are able to use the most advanced computers in the school district)," Britton said. "I think we need to look long and hard at getting the top of the line."

Additional computers at the high school level would be used for remedial programs, advanced computer and language courses. Freshman schools would be equipped with more computers for remedial math, computer literacy, science and enrichment activities in English composition, word processing, math, social studies and computer programming.

Junior high schools will continue to use computers in remedial math and English instruction. Computers will be added, one for every 100 students, at the elementary level and GEM students will continue to use computers.

Trustees also approved expanding the GEM program to include the top 4 percent of the current second grade class. This will begin an earlier transition of being pulled out of regular classes, GEM Coordinator Pat Alexander said.

"That gives us a more reasonable time line to establish expectations for the children," she said.

Madison wouldn't be surprised at corruption

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

If the founders of this country revisited the land of the free today, they would be shocked at our money-hungry values. But if the visitor were James Madison, "Father of the Constitution," he wouldn't be surprised at the corruption of the country.

Colonial citizens of the 18th century felt virtue was the key characteristic to a healthy republic — and all personal luxuries led to a decay of morals, said Dr. Drew McCoy.

But Madison saw the problems of today yesterday, according to the assistant professor of history at The University of Texas at Austin.

Thursday night, McCoy, the fifth and final speaker in the Midland College Free Enterprise Lecture Series, addressed about 60 people — mostly high school students — on the differences in 18th century and 20th century life in America.

"Our modern world of experience would be utterly foreign to the 18th century mind," he said. "I think few of us would realize how frightening and distasteful it would be."

Some of those minds, however, predicted today's "consumer culture" and "obsession with fashion," which rate personal success, McCoy said.

When the country's founders decided to set up a true republic, they felt government was tied to economy and society, he said.

Looking at the fall of ancient Rome, these early American settlers felt only a country full of virtuous people could make a strong republic. Personal luxuries should be set aside for the community's benefit.

Extravagant fashions, celebrations and personal luxuries were shunned, McCoy said. Emphasis was placed on honesty, simplicity, industry and frugality.

"What was to be avoided at all costs was idleness," McCoy said. "That is synonymous with individual corruption and social and moral decay."

Social development of a country follows certain stages, the founders believed. The beginning is primitive and rude, symbolic in the wandering groups of barbaric hunters. Then comes a settling down period in which the wanderers become stationed herdsmen and farmers. The advanced manufacturing and industrial stage is the last.

The founders also believed societies are like men: They are born, mature, decay and eventually die.

There are advantages to social development, such as civilization, refinement and wealth, McCoy said. But the maturation or aging of a society tends to bring about disadvantages, such as greed, corruption and destruction of morality, the early settlers felt.

"Social equality and personal independence is as important today as it was in the 18th century," McCoy said. "But many were not able to understand there would be limits."

In the agriculture economy and society of the 18th century, Madison saw those limits looming on the horizon.

During the Constitutional Convention in 1787, Madison warned fellow legislators they must take into account the number of people fleeing to the new country, McCoy said.

With the population increase and advances in agriculture production, Madison was concerned about "the surplus of non-landed consumers." Although more land was discovered, conquered and divided among the settlers, more people were coming in that could not secure their own property.

Madison's fears were not that farmland would be overworked and erode into non-producing dirt, McCoy said. "His was a nagging question of whether there would be adequate markets (both domestic and foreign.)"

He saw the need to develop further industry and trade, McCoy said.

Although expansion of industry at that time was viewed as the final step of a society, Madison knew the challenge would be overcoming the fear of greed and corruption associated with the last period in development of a society.

"James Madison never lost face...he never doubted the serious readjustments," McCoy said.

In the 18th century, nine out of 10 Americans lived off their own land. Today, less than 5 percent are involved in farming, McCoy said.

"He knew the challenges of future generations would be to readapt the steps of a developing society.

"I believe that is the challenge of our time."

New MMH board begins with marathon session

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital's three newly-sworn elected officials ate lunch at their first offical board meeting Thursday, but missed dinner.

Directors Frank Cahoon, Dr. Walter Parks Jr., and Wanda Mohr — along with Pat Estes and Tevis Herd — sat through a seven-hour session that began at noon Thursday.

With a short break between meetings, the directors lasted through lunch, the trustees and directors meetings and two executive sessions.

During the directors' meeting, former directors Dr. Henrie Mast and Ed Magruder were presented with appreciation plaques for their service on the board. Also, newly-elected directors Cahoon and Parks, along with re-elected director Mrs. Mohr, were sworn in by Judge Barbar Culver.

The "long" meetings didn't bring all bad news.

Trustee Tom Bruner told MMH directors and trustees that with six months into the fiscal year MMH's operating income — that which comes from patient charges — has shown "a profit, although a small one, of $141,938."

"This figure tells how the hospital did on its own (without other income and taxes)," said Dale Miller, MMH vice president of finance, in an interview during the trustees' executive session.

"The reason is partly because we've taken measures to keep costs contained and have been aggressive in our room rates."

According to Ray Branson, president, this $141,938 profit combined with contributions and investment income totals $681,896.

Bottom line figure for the hospital and the district, including taxes, totals more than $2.2 million for the year to date, Branson added.

And with good news, there's sometimes bad news.

Answering a question from Mrs. Estes, Miller said the hospital was only recovering 50 percent of the emergency room charges.

"We're providing a little more for bad debts," Miller said, adding that the hike is not only for the ER, but the entire hospital.

According to MMH financial reports, bad debts for the year to date total $1,492,133. Of that, the hospital has collected $428,363.

"At the beginning of the fiscal year, we provided 8 percent (of gross revenue). But in March we raised it to 10 percent, partially because of the economic situation and the increase in room rates," Miller added.

Action items included:

—Buying a CAT scanner, a computerized X-ray machine.

—Setting a tentative date for sale of $15.1 million in revenue bonds.

—Approving a long range plan to bring MMH up to a 400-bed hospital.

Because directors anticipate approval of a certificate of need application for the CAT scanner, they approved purchasing a $1.1 million General Electric 9800 CAT scanner. Fundraising efforts by the MMH board of governors will pay for the scanner, which is expected to arrive in July.

Directors also decided to sell the bonds at 10 a.m. May 24, following a rating decision from Standard & Poor's Corp., or Moody's Investors Service.

The bond rating agencies are researching MMH's financial statistics and securities. A rating is expected to be made May 17 for the issuance of $19.8 million in revenue bonds for the $15.1 million state-approved 77-bed expansion.

According to Miller, the rest of the money will be used for a "cushion" to assure the first year's principal and interest payments.

"But if we decided to pay off the expansion debt in two years, payment would be $15.1 million," Bruner said. "This (additional money) is merely a reserve and sinking fund."

Following a 2½-hour executive session, directors approved a recommendation to expand the present facility to a 400-bed hospital.

"As the need arises and the city grows, we would intend to provide beds at this location up to a 400-bed facility," said MMH Director Herd.

"This is a long, long range plan. If a need for a satellite hospital arises, it would be done only after this facility had 400 beds," he added.

Guadalupe appealing more to casual camper

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

GUADALUPE MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK — Once only a haven for backpackers, this mountain island is appealing more and more to the casual camper.

In its decade-plus of existence, Guadalupe Mountains National Park has attracted thousands of hikers and hundreds of thousands of visitors, all seeking the solitude it provides.

Historically, hikers and backpackers have known the park most intimately as they have dared backcountry forests, skirted canyons, ascended the state's highest peaks.

It's been tough but now, through a development program, both backcountry hikers and visitors are finding the going a little easier.

"Our biggest project has been the trail construction," said Bob Peters, staff park ranger. "Originally there were some old trails in the park, some ranchers' trails, just paths really. Now we have about 80 miles of trails altogether and between 40 and 50 of these are newly constructed trails, new or improved."

The trails, noted Peters, are intended to appeal to a wide variety of visitors — not just backpacking purists.

"There are some trails in the park that take only a couple of hours," he explained. "The trail system in the park provides for short walks, as well as overnight. You don't have to be a backpacker or a hiker to take a mile or two miles of trail and see part of the park."

The trail project is only three-fourths completed, he said. "We will be improving some more of the trails — we won't be adding any trails."

For those who do not care to don hiking boots, preferring instead more leisurely activities, the McKittrick Canyon Visitors Center awaits. Opened last fall, the center provides information and photographs of McKittrick's attributes.

A guided nature trail, as well as high country trails, begin at the visitors center, said Peters.

Two developed drive-in campgrounds lie in Guadalupe Mountains National Park, one at Pine Springs and the other at Dog Canyon, where those planning to seek the high country will find the necessary trails less demanding.

"It's a good place to start a hike into the park," said Peters. "The elevation there is 6,300 feet, so you don't have quite as much a climb to get up into the high country. At Pine Springs, you've got about 2,500 feet to climb to get up into the high country."

Rangers sponsor interpretative campfire programs and guided walks at each drive-in campground.

Visitation thus far in 1983 has dipped slightly in comparison to that a year ago, but Peters noted "we really haven't started our main visitation season yet. It's been running about 140,000 a year, and we would anticipate it to be about the same this year."

Rangers and other park staff also have found more comforts than in the first decade of the park's existence, when many lived in trailer houses at Signal Peak south several miles south. Pre-fabricated houses were moved in a year ago and are now occupied by both seasonal and permanent staff.

One major project remains unfinished, however — a visitors center at Pine Springs Campground.

"Right now we have only the double-wide trailer for a center," said Peters. "The initial planning for the visitors center is completed, but we don't have any funds yet...When completed, it will be both a visitors center and offices."

ACTion needed to feed hungry

The "boom-or-bust cycle" is part of Midland's character.

"Midland is the last to see the results of recession and is the last to come out of it," Miller said.

"I don't want to be a prophet of doom," he said of Midland's recession. "I want to be realistic."

"It's here," said Eddy Willmon of Casa De Amigos.

Miller noted the Texas Aid to Dependent Children payments are so low "I don't see how anybody makes it, especially in Midland."

AMONG THOSE organizations which help feed Midland's poor are the Salvation Army, churches and missions, and Casa De Amigos, which, said Amigos' Director Mary Hinkle, gets some of its food for the hungry from hunters and fishermen.

On the proposed Midland food bank, the Salvation Army's Margie Deggs said the Salvation Army's warehouse possibly could serve as a temporary storage place for food.

The "biggest problem" in food banks is "just getting them started," said Weinberg, who conceded that "the food bank does have its skeptics....Finding food is not the problem, usually," he said.

While the circle of concerned Midlanders discuss organizing a food-bank steering committee, the Human Relations Council of Midland will give direction to individuals, businesses and organizations which may want to donate food or otherwise help in the food-bank effort. HRC's telephone number is 684-5866.

"There are needy people out there," said Junior League member Jana Tucker. "There's waste. We're just trying to prevent waste."

"I see it as Midlanders trying to help Midlanders," Junior League member Janet Foster said of the envisioned food bank. Donating edible food to the poor and hungry by way of a food bank is "better than tossing it into the Dumpster."

MISD trustees approve computer literacy program

GEM now includes only fourth through seventh graders. The expanded program also will provide advanced English for gifted eighth grade students. This should allow a smooth transition from the similar seventh grade program into the honors courses at the ninth grade level, Ms. Alexander said.

Bill Jackson was elected president of the board, replacing Parker Humes, while Ron Britton was named vice president, replacing Jackson. Joyce Sherrod was named secretary, replacing Ann Page.

Trustees stamped approval on the MISD Comprehensive Special Education Three-Year Plan and on a statement saying the district will continue to maintain comparable teacher/pupil ratios, average teacher salaries, supplies and materials in Chapter I schools and regular schools.

Trustees approved a request from Security Supervisor Craig Kipena to add two fulltime security officers next year.

Plans for construction of the 96-square-foot Instructional Materials Center were approved. Total cost for the center, which was destroyed in a fire last year, will run a maximum of $200,000, according to Dr. James H. Mailey, consultant for school planning and construction.

UTPB bill earns passing grades

"But my personal opinion is the type of education we have here will still be attractive to our clientele and any decrease in enrollment would be negligible."

Hardin-Simmons, a four-year university with a master's program, also does not expect any major decline in enrollment.

"We feel as a private church-related university that it ultimately comes down to how the state feels," said President Dr. Jesse Fletcher. "If you live in the Midland/Odessa area, you have a different set of feelings. The question seems to be how will this divide up the pie?

"It's not a competitive thing with us," he added.

Administrators of McMurry College in Abilene and The University of Texas of El Paso could not be reached for comment.

However, another West Texas state university that attracts some students from the Permian Basin probably won't see a change in its 1,840-student enrollment.

"As a general rule, as a state institution, we generally try to do the best we can of taking care of our business," said Sharon Bass, director of personnel and business services at Sul Ross State University in Alpine. "We do not get involved and haven't sent anybody to Austin to lobby.

"We have business we need to take care of and assume those involved are more aware of what the needs are and can more fairly assess the needs of that particular part of the state."

Although the bulk of SRSU students comes from the El Paso area, Mrs. Bass said there is "a sizable number" of students from the Midland/Odessa enrolled.

"What effect it will have on us depends on what UTPB will be able to do," she said.

Mexican-American general no longer hears 'Hey, Chili'

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A Mexican-American who today is a four-star general commanding the U.S. Forces Command (combat) told a congressional breakfast why he has "a deep love for those soldiers."

General Richard E. Cavazos, born into a family which helped run the world-famous King ranch, also told congressmen and others in the Texas breakfast club what it was like to grow up being called "Hey, Chili," and ordered as a six-year-old not to speak any Spanish on the school ground.

But Cavazos expressed no bitterness. He even thanked his Texas congressmen for their "contributions." He said "that school teacher might have been put down today for her views on bilingualism but in her heart she had so much love she turned out presidents and generals and turned blue collar people into white collars."

He said "soldiers talk funny," but "it is sincere talk." Their sense of humor as they go about their work, like washing mud off vehicles at 4 a.m. after night training, may consist of such cracks as "we get paid by the hour to do this so we don't mind." This is what the four-star general heard as he mixed with the troops which he formerly commanded at Fort Hood, Texas recently.

"But let us look inside these people," said the general who flavors his philosophy with talk gleaned from a Texas ranch, where rural people "live their lives with nothing but faith and dreams." "I'll ask you to believe that I believe what I am saying." Then he described how "so many people put down soldiers without realizing it."

"I want to go home, too. I love the early mornings and the sunsets. But I just feel I have not finished the job. I went in for a short time (during Korean war) and then stayed in because I was angry."

"This is a land that must be defended and preserved. There are debts we must pay. Some say the flag is just a piece of bunting. It is that. But it is more, too. A patriot's dream seems beyond. Your upbringing would not let you believe any different...I think the people have an inner strength. We can never grow too old or do enough to show our affection and gratitude."

Court affirms burglary conviction

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Court of Criminal Appeals Wednesday affirmed the burglary conviction and eight-year sentence assessed Joe Cecil Lair by a Midland County jury.

In his appeal, Lair argued the indictment in the case was "fundamentally defective" by not alleging the burglary was carried out "intentionally" or "knowingly" but the court noted the indictment said the entry was made "with the intent to commit theft."

The court also rejected Lair's argument that the trial court erred in admitting part of a "pen packet" showing two prior convictions for theft, and in refusing to order the state to disclose the identity of an informer whose information led to surveillance of the building which Lair was accused of entering.

Court upholds ruling in well dispute

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Supreme Court Wednesday let stand lower court rulings in a dispute from Midland County over operations involving an oil and gas well.

The 142nd District Court had awarded $56,632 to Dwayne Hamilton and his former wife, Myrlene Dillon, against Texas Oil and Gas Corp. in a June 27, 1980, decision.

That decision was upheld on appeal, with the Supreme Court ruling "no reversible error" had been made.

The trial court concluded that the company failed to perform duties specified in the agreement with the two non-operator working interest owners.

Chapter names boss, secretary of the year

Joyce Lovett
Hanson Corporation
1983 Secretary of the Year

Don McCall
First National Bank
1983 Boss of the Year

Marilyn Culp
Larson-McBrine, Inc.
Guest Speaker

More than 200 area secretaries and their bosses attended the Professional Secretaries' Day Luncheon at the Midland Civic Center Monday. Sponsored locally since 1952 by the Permian Chapter of Professional Secretaries International, the luncheon was held in observance of Professional Secretaries Week.

The purpose of Professional Secretaries Week is to increase public awareness of the vital role played by secretaries in business, industry, education, government and the professions; and to reaffirm the dedication of secretaries to the professional performance of their responsibilities.

Rosemary Graves, vice president of Safety International and the 1982-83 recipent of the Boss of the Year award, announced the selection of Donald McCall as the 1983-84 Boss of the Year. The honor is based on the boss's professional and civic contributions in addition to a good recommendation from his secretary. In this case Juanita Bil A native of Denver, Colorado, McCall has been in Midland since 1981, having served as assistant treasurer of Newmont Mining Company and as senior financial analyst for Mobil Oil, both in New York City, prior to joining First National Bank as executive vice president. Since April 6 he has served as chief executive officer and the interim general manager of the bank.

McCall was listed in "Who's Who in America" in 1982 and has a directorship in the Independent Petroleum Association of America, Green Tree Country Club and the Midland Symphony and Chorale. He is also a member of the Society of Petroleum Engineers, AIME.

He resides in Midland with his wife, Janet. They have four children attending colleges in California, Colorado and Texas.

The Petroleum Basin Petroleum Association Award for the Energy Secretary of the Year, started 1978 by Richard Gaddy, Midland independent landman, is to honor dedicated and hardworking secretaries in the oil and gas business. Secretaries are judged on loyalty, efficiency and responsibility in addition to the contributions to the industry and their community or church. Gaddy presented the 1983 award to Joyce Lovett, who is secretary-treasurer of Hanson Corporation and serves as office manager/administrative assistant/secretary to Bernold M. Hanson. She has been employed by that firm since 1977. Her secretarial experience covers a 30-year span, 25 years worth in Midland, where she was originally transferred by Mobil Oil Corporation from Louisiana. She has worked for British American Oil Producing Company, Midwest Oil Corporation, Texas Oil and Gas Coporation, and O.L. Chenoweth.

Born in Vivian, Louisiana, she has attended LSU and Midland College. She is a Registered Professional Parliamentarian. She was a faculty member of UTPB in 1976, was involved active in initiating petroleum courses at Midland College.

She is first vice president of the Texas State Association of Parliamentarians, and been nominated for 1983-84 president of the association. She serves as president of the Permian Basin Unit of the National Association of Parliamentarians, president of Permian Toastmasters Club, parliamentarian and Bylaws Committee chairman of the Permian Chapter of PSI, trustee and is a life member of Texas Tech's Dad's Association and the Texas PTA.

She helped organize the Sightless People of the Permian Basin Association of Personnel Consultants. She has served as vice chairman of public relations for the National Association of Parliamentarians, publicity chairman of the Museum of the Southwest, is involved with the Girl Scouts, and has twice been chairman of Secretaries' Week Committee of Professional Secretaries International.

She and her husband, Harold Lovett, have one daughter and are members of Grace Presbyterian Curch. Guest speaker for the luncheon was Marilyn Culp, president of Larson-McBrine, Inc., an investment company, and former assistant vice president of the First National Bank. In her subject, "Megatrends," she emphasized the phases of business and industrial growth in the U.S. by steps of Farmer — Laborer — Clerk — Technician.

"Secretaries are included in the latter classification as modern technology is automatically being incorporated in each secretary's work, such as the use of computers, word processors, etc., as a matter of course. Soon the secretary's title will be technician. Future major economic growth will predictably take place in the states of California, Florida and Texas — so there is something to be said for Midlanders being in the right place at the right time for progress."

Mrs. Culp's career may be summarized in four words — positions as teacher, publisher, banker, broker, she said.

Mrs. Culp was born in Austin, but has lived in Midland for the past 21 years. Married to Judge Vann Culp, she is the mother of three children.

Midlander named Mother of the Year

Alice Dickinson

Mrs. Alice Dickinson, a 50-year resident of Midland, was named Texas Mother of the Year at a luncheon in Austin on April 15. Presenting the award for Governor Mark White was his wife, Linda Gale.

Mrs. Dickinson, widow of pioneer West Texas oilman H.B. Dickinson, was nominated by the Houston-Kingwood area United Methodist Women for her volunteer work in the church, hospital and numerous charities and for raising nine children, all of whom were born and went to school in Midland.

Her selection was made by the American Mother Committee, Inc., an independent organization. The group is recognized as the official sponsor of Mother's Day by the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Mrs. Dickinson went to the National Mother's Association Convention in New York City in April as the Texas representative. During the convention she and the other representatives were honored at a reception attended by President and Mrs. Reagan.

Mrs. Dickinson, an LVN, is an active founding member of the Houston area Northeast Medical Center Hospital Center Auxiliary. She has been a supporter of several organizations serving the needy, an active Methodist church member and worked for four and a half years as an upaid dispatcher for the Kingwood Volunteer Fire Department.

She was born in 1906 in Hillsboro. After graduating from Hillsboro Junior College she taught high school Spanish and English and, in 1926, she married Henry B. Dickinson. While rearing their nine children in Midland, she remained active in church and civic activities and served as an election judge.

In 1965, when she was director of Kinard's Nursing Home, she returned to college to become a licensed vocational nurse at the age of 60. In 1970 she became the supervisor of nursing at Trinity Towers, a retirement center.

All of her nine children and each of her 12 grandchildren have attended college.

Pain victims substitute narcotics

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Patients with severe chronic pain who do not wish to take narcotics have no drug other than the withdrawn painkiller Zomax to depend on, says an official of the company that manufactures it.

"The only drugs that the FDA (Food and Drug Administration) has classified as useful in more than moderate pain are potent narcotics and Zomax," Robert Z. Gussin, vice president for scientific affairs at McNeil Pharmaceutical Co., told a House subcommittee Wednesday.

He said that when the drug was approved for marketing, it had been assessed by more than 100 clinical investigators in 40 studies involving more than 3,600 people.

The studies showed Zomax was as effective as usual doses of injectable morphine in reducing pain following surgery, Gussin said.

"A patient with a serious chronic painful condition, such as cancer or osteoarthritis, who wants to maintain a normal or close to normal life, would often have no choice but to suffer his or her pain if Zomax were not available," he said.

"We have a strong conviction that there are countless pain sufferers for whom there is no acceptable alternative to Zomax," Gussin said.

Zomax, a non-narcotic painkiller that was used by 15 million people, was taken off the market voluntarily by McNeil on March 4 for new labeling after reports of allergic reactions and five deaths associated with its use.

Company officials have said they plan to put Zomax back on the market fairly soon, after the FDA approves a new warning label.

AT WIT'S END

Guilt backlash

By ERMA BOMBECK

Remember when mothers used to make excuses for going to work? Well, now they're making apologies for staying at home.

It was bound to happen. It's called Guilt Backlash.

The principle is simple. Anything you enjoy is worth feeling guilty about. Back in the early '70s when getting a job outside the home was fun and different, guilt was at a premium.

But when the envy shifted to the woman who stays at home, gets to watch all the soaps she wants to, drinks coffee whenever she feels like it, and has time to shop and take naps, the attitude changed. What gives her the right to sit at home working one job when other mothers are working two?

I overheard two children talking the other day and their comments were interesting.

One child said, "I heard your mother quit her job and is staying at home now. Does she have to?"

"No," said the other child. "She said she just didn't feel fulfilled anymore making coffee for the whole office and filing insurance claims. She was bored."

"Boy, I hope that doesn't start something," said his friend. "Suppose all the other mothers started staying home. What do you think would happen to us?"

"Yeah, what kind of a mother is always home when her kids get home from school . . . nagging about changing out of your good clothes and complaining you're indoors too much watching TV and why don't you go out and play and get some fresh air?"

"Mark's mother stays at home, but she has to. They need the extra money she saves by not having to buy fancy clothes to work in and an extra car and the price of a baby-sitter."

"That's different," said his friend, "but when you stay home for no good reason, it stinks!"

"My mother stayed home once for two weeks. She was on a real guilt trip. Baked cookies every day, cleaned out the garage, actually sat me down and asked me what I thought about life. It was weird."

"My brother told me he can remember when nearly all the mothers in the world stayed at home. He never had to carry a door key. She was always there."

"Gosh, does that mean you won't be able to make confetti in the blender anymore or climb on the roof to change the antenna or tease the dog?"

His friend nodded. "I liked it better when mothers didn't know who they were."

Built-in look divides area

Copley News Service

Q. My husband and I are moving into a new apartment that has a fairly large living room, kitchen and one bedroom.

We do a considerable amount of work at home, although we both have offices that we go to each day. The work that we bring home, however, posed a problem for us in our smaller, more cramped apartment.

We want to plan carefully to accommodate working at home and not having always to pick up in the middle of our work. Please suggest some arrangement that would help us.

We would prefer not to go to any great expense constructing built-in shelves or furniture because we will probably only be here two or three years. — R.B.

A. You probably would be money ahead if you think in terms of creating a built-in look with furniture in both your living room and bedroom

In both rooms choose closed and open shelves and stackable wall units for storing work materials and supplies.

In the living room or bedroom sketch out the use of space so that you can each have a desk or writing table with adequate lighting, a comfortable desk chair and shelf space.

Consider one person's work space in the living room and the other's in the bedroom or both in one room, separated by a pair of etageres which can be functional or aesthetic. If you can create work areas in both rooms across a single wall, you can sometimes hang horizontal venetian blinds from the ceiling that can be lowered and closed to screen off several feet of the room when you wish your work-at-home projects concealed from guests.

Q. I need lighting in my entry area which formerly had wall sconces. I've removed the sconces to give the entry a more contemporary look and because I needed the wall for a large breakfront.

The breakfront really dominates the space. The only other walls are small and have tall plants against them.

What would be inviting and effective for lighting the space? — R.M.

A. If your breakfront is not lighted on the interior you might consider installing tiny fluorescent tubes under the shelves to direct the light down on the articles of your shelves. This could be effective because it would highlight various accessories you might like to show off. It would also provide soft, unobtrusive lighting in the space.

Wall units concealing storage and two separate work areas are provided in this creative living room for a young couple. A pair of etageres with reference books and greenery divide the work area which is set off from the seating area.

Marcella allows family lifestyles

Copley News Service

The Marcella is a three-bedroom split-level home that provides a well-organized base to support the flexibility of lifestyle in families as they actually live.

The extra storage area in the garage is the first sign of this awareness.

Another sign is the combination utility and half bath that separates the garage from the family room, keeping unnecessary traffic from the more formal part of the home. This utility-bath helps ensure that the junior mechanic or gardener has a chance to wash off the worst before entering the living area.

The large family room has a fireplace and sliding glass doors to a patio. It is segregated from the rest of the house by a difference in levels, offering privacy and quiet.

The spacious foyer, living room and formal dining room all have vaulted ceilings. A second fireplace and a bay window with a window seat add to the character of the living room.

The kitchen is roomy enough for informal dining, with a pleasant breakfast view through sliding doors to its own patio.

Two bedrooms, a full bath, and linen storage are on the upper level. The major interest on the upper level is the master suite, featuring double entry doors. A second large room adjoining the bedroom itself serves as a bath and dressing area, with a large walk-in closet with mirrored bifold doors. Special interest focuses on the corner tub, which appears sunken in a step-up area.

DEAR ABBY

Couple gets break in waiting lines

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the lady who signed herself "Dallas." She was divorced after 28 years of marriage, and though her ex-husband had remarried, she never had. Now her ex-husband is deceased, and she wanted to know if she was considered a widow. Although society may not look at her as a widow, the Social Security Administration does!

To be eligible for widow's or widower's benefits, one must be at least 60 years of age, or between 50 and 60 and disabled, and have been married to the insured number holder for at least 10 years. He or she must also be unmarried or remarried after age 60.

Of course, as with any Social Security benefit, there is a limit on how much a beneficiary can earn per year, but I know there are many elderly men and women out there struggling along financially who are unaware of this resource available to them. Spouse's benefits are also available to people who are divorced after 10 or more years of marriage. – A SOCIAL SECURITY EMPLOYEE

DEAR EMPLOYEE: I am sure many readers are eligible for these benefits but are not aware of it.

Your letter will not only make their day, but their week, their month and their year. Thanks for writing.

DEAR ABBY: What should be done about the following? A man drops his wife off in front of a well-known cafeteria that is filling up fast for the dinner crowd. He drives off to park the car while his wife gets in line.

The man comes back about 15 minutes later. By then the wife is already at the head of the line yelling, "Yoo hoo, Honey – I'm here!"

The husband squeezes in ahead of somebody to pick up a tray and silverware, then goes to the head of the line explaining to everybody, "Excuse me. We're together."

Abby, is it fair to people who have had to wait their turn in line? And is it worth making a stink about? – BATTLE-AX FROM BAYTOWN, TEXAS

DEAR BATTLE—AX: It's something like filing a joint tax return – a break for a married couple. It's not fair. But who said life was always fair? Forget it.

DEAR ABBY: How can I find the perfect guy? I'm 31, single, not bad-looking and I've dated loads of guys, but there's something wrong with every guy I go out with. They're either too short or I don't like the way they dress or look.

The one I'm going with now is French and Indian. He's real sweet and good to me, but he's short and I don't like short men. Most of my girlfriends go with tall guys, but for some reason I always wind up with the short ones. I'm 5 feet 5 myself. If I wore heels I'd be taller than some of the guys I date.

I'd like to marry again. I've been married twice to guys who were taller than me and it didn't work out. Am I too picky or what? I'm not looking for a real handsome man – just a tall one. – LIKE THEM TALL

DEAR LIKE: There are no perfect guys – or gals, either. Since "tall" is so important to you, don't waste your time on men who don't qualify. Do I think you're too picky? Yes. You struck out with two tall guys. Doesn't that tell you something?

LAST SATURDAY!

Drugs may not cure burn victims

CHICAGO (AP) — Medical researchers report that the livers of severely burned patients may become impaired and as a result, some drugs used to help such victims may not metabolize properly.

Drugs routinely given to burn victims — such as barbiturates and benzodiazepines to fight anxiety, theophylline to aid breathing, pain-relievers, narcotics and choloramphenicol to fight infection — are broken down in the liver. However, the liver's ability to metabolize medication deteriorates in severely burned laboratory rats, the researchers reported Wednesday.

"When you are severely burned, you lose a lot of circulating blood volume," said Dr. Richard J. Fruncillo, a pharmacologist at Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia. "The remaining blood goes primarily to the brain and the heart."

Add room for ironing

Copley News Service

So often when we are working on large items (bedspreads, drapes etc.), we wish for more surface than our sewing table allows. Since sewing tables do not have leaves, we must come up with something else.

If you do not have a table the same height as your sewing table you can use your adjustable ironing board. Stand the ironing board alongside or behind your sewing table, adjust to the same height, and you have a large surface.

The biggest problem with not having a large enough surface is that your work will hang down over the side, pulling out of position and making it difficult to work.

In a pinch, your ironing board can also serve as a cutting table — if you have a cutting board. Simply unfold cutting board as far as necessary and center on ironing board. This will not give you a very long cutting surface, but will serve quite well for small projects.

Another handy helper is a sturdy TV tray with legs. Place a tray on either side of your sewing table to hold sewing aids, patterns, or whatever needs a home.

'Household hints' lady now writes diet hints

Copley News Service

You know those little "helpful hints" books which tell you to clean piano keys with toothpaste or to store stamps in the freezer so they won't stick together?

Would you believe the woman behind several of those books now is a millionaire several times over? Or that she lived such a good life and enjoyed eating such rich food, that last year her weight finally got up to 208 pounds padded onto a 5-foot-6-inch frame?

But added pounds posed just another problem to solve for Mary Ellen Pinkham, creator of "Mary Ellen's Best of Helpful Hints" and "Mary Ellen's Best of Helpful Kitchen Hints." So she channeled her energy into "Mary Ellen's Help Yourself Diet Plan." That book is now high on the best-seller lists.

Mary Ellen, 73 pounds lighter than she was a year ago, talked recently about her book and her life. She has curly brown hair, wide brown eyes which question everything and endless theories on what everybody ought to do about all their problems. She's even thinking about writing a book with a title on the order of "Get a Grip on Yourself" just to help people.

Mary Ellen — it's unthinkable to call her "Pinkham" since her first name is her trademark — founded Mary Ellen Enterprises in Minneapolis in 1976. She began business by publishing independently "The Best of Helpful Hints," a collection of problem-solving hints she and her mother had collected for years.

Three years later with Warner Books, she published a revised edition, which sold so many copies that it held first place on The New York Times' Best-Seller List for 10 months. She since has published two more best-selling kitchen and household hint books. Last July, Money magazine estimated that she has earned about $2.3 million from her books, and that's before the new diet book.

The 36-year-old woman who did all this is a practiced problem-solver and decision-making executive. She runs her publishing company in Minneapolis while her husband, Sherman Pinkham, 56, a former public relations director for the Minnesota Vikings, stays home full time with their son Andrew, 8. But Mary Ellen remembers when she was "a housewife making $75 a week as a fledgling publisher and couldn't get a loan from a bank."

So now on the last day of a seven-week promotional tour, she hunches on an office chair like a trapped and slimmed-down teddy bear. She wants to talk about how she'd rather be walking at home in Minneapolis. Walking is part of her diet plan, but so is learning to eat less, she said.

CNS Photo

"Mary Ellens's Help Yourself Diet Plan" Mary Ellen Pinkham weighed 208 pounds one year ago. Today she is 73 pounds lighter.

"I wrote the book for people who are chronic, addicted dieters like I was, the people who buy diet books. The audience I want is the diet audience; people who buy a book to get thinner, not educated. Nobody wants to get educated, just thinner. But education is the key to withstanding any problem in your life.

"My message is that dieting makes you fatter. The body is built for survival and when less food comes in, it says 'Oh, oh, better make this stretch.' So there you are eating less and not losing. With my plan, you start out eating 1,000 calories a day, get to within 4 pounds of your goal and start adding the calories back in. But you also have to exercise; I walk.

"Right now I weigh 135, and I maintain that by eating 2,400 calories a day. I trained myself, adding 200 calories a week until I began to gain. Then I knew I had to cut back to maintain my weight. The body has to readjust when you lose weight. My theory is that dieting leads to overeating."

That's a simplified explanation. In her book, which she wrote with the aid of a doctor and nutritionist, she discusses many diet theories and current research into problems with weight.

Her weight began to rise after her son was born, Mary Ellen said, although she was slightly overweight as a teenager. She tried diet after diet but nothing worked. Finally she realized that she'd "reached the breaking point" and she worked out a diet plan with her doctor. That was the foundation for her book which she hopes will help all dieters who read it.

"Many dieters take a bum rap. Most fat people don't eat three meals a day. They get on some crazy cockamamy diet and the diet gets all the credit when they lose weight. Then they go off the diet, put the weight back on and blame themselves. But it's the diet's fault. Fad diets concentrate on reduced input but never concern themselves with the other half of the energy equation; how you burn off that energy.

"Fat is an inactive tissue. The more muscle you have, the more you can eat. The diet has to be coordinated with exercise, but nobody wants to hear this."

Aerobic exercise is the key, she says, and she lists six possibilities: walking, cross-country skiing, swimming, hiking, some aerobic dance classes or jogging. She chose walking at a speed "as if that guy from 'Psycho' is after you" for 45 minutes to an hour at least three days a week. But walking five days a week is even more effective.

But she also points out that if you're happy with your fat, you should forget the idea of dieting.

"Being fat is not a crime against humanity. For most of us, when it finally dawns on you that your looks aren't your strong point, you go out and get another drawing card. Most of us don't get through life scot-free, but we've all got to learn how to handle it.

"There are lots of sad, desperate people out there. You are what you think you are. What difference does it all make if you don't think it? We're all dealt a different hand in life; we all get different cards. What you don't like, you can do something about. I said to myself that maybe I'll never be Raquel Welch, but on the other hand, I don't have to be a kangaroo."

Vitamin craze could be toxic

Hearst Feature Service

Bombarded with bad news about the effects of the environment and poor diets on their health, increasing numbers of people are joining the millions who reach for their bottles of vitamins and nutritional supplements each day.

If you believe the claims of some pharmaceutical companies and vitamin advocates, there's almost no problem that can't be helped by a supplement. Under a lot of stress? Take a "stress" tablet to ease the burden. Suffering from a cold? Try five grams of vitamin C. Worried about cancer? Take a dehydrated vegetable pill that provides megadoses of carotene. Arthritis? A few alfalfa capsules might do the trick. Can't sleep? There's an amino acid pill that fits the bill. Need more energy? How about some Glucose Tolerance Factor to increase insulin production?

But can vitamins really increase the quality and the quantity of life? Are Americans wasting their money and perhaps endangering their health by taking large doses of nutrients?

While there are no definite answers, the overwhelming body of medical opinion points in one direction: Most Americans don't need vitamins because the average diet is sufficient to meet all nutritional needs.

Recent reports on over-the-counter vitamins by the Food and Drug Administration and the National Academy of Sciences found no basis for recommending vitamins to the general population, and warned that taken in high enough doses, certain nutritional supplements could actually be toxic.

Naturally, there are dissenters. Some, like Dr. Michael Colgan, author of "Your Vitamin Profile," argue that because of processed foods, smoking, drinking and stress, the average American is undernourished. Others say the government's recommended daily allowances of vitamins are too low to provide a shield against diseases.

But the majority view is clearly anti-vitamin.

"There is no body of reviewed, credible evidence which can be substantiated to support use of vitamins," according to Dr. Henry Kamin, a professor of biochemistry at Duke University.

Roberta Peters casts spell over Theatre Midland crowd

A Review

Roberta Peters cast a spell over her Tuesday night audience at Theatre Midland, one best summed up by a line from her second encore selection, "I'll See You Again:"

"This sweet memory across the years will come to me."

Miss Peters, who has just completed her 33rd consecutive season with the Metropolitan Opera, closed out Renwood Inc.'s Select Series.

Delivered in a simple, straightforward manner, her recital included arias from operas she's well known for — "The Barber of Seville," "La Boheme" and "Rigoletto" — three love songs from operetta — "If I Were on the Stage," "One Kiss" and "L'amour, toujours l'amour" — and three light opera selections — two in German, "Meine Lippen sie kussen so heiss" and "Wien, Wien nur du allein," and the last in English, "Viljia" from "The Merry Widow."

She spoke very little. Had she introduced each selection, the audience would have heard the same lilting quality in her voice when she speaks as it did when she sang. It would have added a molto bene touch, however, which is vocally difficult to do.

The real problem was that there were no program notes.

Her (as she calls it) "thin coloratura" voice was in good form. Of note was her singing of Mozart's "Alleluja," Puccini's "Si, mi chiamano Mimi," Cilea's "io sono l'umile ancella" from "Adriana Lecouvreur," Friml's "L'amour..." from "Love Everlasting" and Lehar's "Meine Lippen..." from "Giuditta."

She teased the audience (as in "Viljia") with small tastes of her lower register, but did not sing anything which gave it full play.

Bowing elegantly at the close of each number, she took a brief moment to compose herself before nodding to her accompanist, Marshall Williamson, and beginning again.

She changed moods with the adroitness of a quick change artist. A subtle difference in the set of her head, the arch of her eyebrows or the expression in her eyes altered her demeanor from the regal bearing of a queen to that of a dreaming, coy girl.

Whether attired in her white sequin-bodiced gown or the more casual pink formal with matching choker coller she wore following intermission, the 5-foot-2-inch Miss Peters commanded the stage with her presence as well as her voice. It was certainly a treat to be able to hear Miss Peters in such an intimate setting; it was like hearing her in one's own home.

Her performance was an appropriate close to a series which has brought outstanding professional talent to Midland.

'V' doesn't mean entertainment victory for NBC

By FRED ROTHENBERG

ENTERTAINMENT

NEW YORK (AP) — Aliens from outer space used to be ugly, menacing creatures intent on eating the Earth. In "V," NBC's four-hour science fiction miniseries, they look like blow-dried actors from central casting. But be warned. They're not what they appear to be.

"V," which will be broadcast Sunday and Monday night, chronicles what happens when earthling lookalikes arrive here on a supposed mission of peace.

Great anticipation is cleverly built about the appearance of these aliens. When their leader first arrives, he resembles some smoothie from an afternoon soap opera. "We're pleased to meet you," he tells the world in a voice that has a computerized ring to it.

The visitors say their planet is near environmental collapse and can be saved only by chemicals from the Earth's sewage.

"E.T.," the movie about amiable aliens, has already been done, so suffice it to say that these visitors don't stay friendly. In fact, they turn downright ugly. Also suffice it to say that executive producer Ken Johnson, who wrote and directed "V," is not Steven Spielberg.

If "V" were a satire on how Americans treat new arrivals, it would have worked better. One kid is disappointed that they don't look like E.T. or Dr. Spock.

In the suburbs, status-conscious society patrons organize teas and show off their visitors. Teen-age girls develop crushes on their favorite hunk alien. An entire line of V merchandising becomes available. In one welcoming parade, a school band plays the "Star Wars" theme.

But these are minor moments of fun. "V" soon takes on excruciatingly pretentious overtones. When the true, un-American intentions of the visitors become clear, parallels are drawn between the aliens and Nazi terror.

A uniformed Visitors Friend Group, with similarities to the Hitler Youth Movement, attracts malcontents susceptible to the power of power who frighten their parents with the fear of ratting to the authorities.

One character, Abraham Bernstein (Leonard Cimino), is leery of the visitors from the beginning, and when martial law is instituted, he says it brings back memories of Berlin in 1938. "It's them versus us," he says.

It's unclear, however, where the American military is during the siege. And where are the Russians when we need them most?

"V" is NBC's $23 million attempt to put some big Nielsen numbers on the board before the network's affiliates meet next month. It's bound to produce better ratings than NBC's normal programming. But it's vastly overpriced, considering ABC got 10 hours and four nights of "The Thorn Birds" for $21 million.

The special effects, however, are spectacular. The huge spaceships do appear to be hovering simultaneously over the world's major cities. And the battle scenes, including the one that looks like "Star Wars" at the end, are believable.

But the major flaws are a hokey comic-book adventure story, characters out of the Saturday cartoons and laughable dialogue.

After one battle, one freedom fighter says, "I hope there aren't any casualties. I'd hate to lose one of us."

Betty Ford talks of alcoholism

Betty Ford

NEW YORK (AP) — Former first lady Betty Ford says she became an alcoholic because of hidden resentments at being a political wife, and believes that spouses have trouble communicating about the disease.

"When I was brought up, we didn't talk about our feelings and, anyway, I had no one to talk to," the wife of former President Gerald Ford said in an interview for Sunday's Parade magazine. "I was resentful that I was the one left at home to shoulder the burdens.

"Now, I believe in getting things out. When you bury your resentments, they become explosive, and that's when you begin to drink."

Mrs. Ford, 65, also said her husband at first could not admit to himself that she had a problem with alcohol.

"In this country, it's almost impossible for a man to confront his wife with the fact that she's been drinking," she said. "Jerry had no idea about alcoholism, and there was denial on his part."

But she said her recovery and work with other alcoholics has made her husband proud.

"Jerry isn't ashamed," she said. "He's very proud of the fact that we went ahead and found out what it was and did what we were supposed to do. He backed me up, and my family did, 100 percent.

"But there are other families out there who are still suffering, who need to get through the barrier we did."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Singer John Denver says he has no regrets about turning down the lead role in "An Officer and a Gentleman," even though the movie went on to win two Oscars.

"When I read the script, it seemed to me little more than a B-movie story with a lot of sex in it," Denver said in a recent interview. "I knew I wouldn't be comfortable in the role and so I said no."

He said he learned a valuable lesson. "It showed me I just didn't have the experience to see what could be made of a story by a good director (Taylor Hackford)."

The movie, starring Richard Gere, has taken in over $1.25 million at the box office.

Denver, 39, displayed a different look as he set out this week for Australia and a concert tour through the Far East. He has shed his familiar wire-rimmed glasses for contact lenses.

After his Asian tour, he'll tour Europe and the Soviet Union.

"When they finally lay me down, I plan to be really burned out," said the singer, planning a major U.S. concert tour in November.

NEW YORK (AP) — What better award to honor Lord Laurence Olivier for a distinguished acting career during a ceremony in New York City than than a big apple? — in crystal yet.

The 76-year-old Olivier, accompanied by his wife, actress Joan Plowright, was given the symbol of the city's "enduring admiration and affection" by Mayor Edward Koch at a gathering Thursday night of Hollywood stars, politicians and businessmen at the mayor's Gracie Mansion.

Court allows boy's surgery despite parents' objection

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Secure after a state Supreme Court decision that leaves him with his foster family, a retarded teen-ager can proceed with tests opposed by his natural parents that might lead to life-saving heart surgery, an attorney says.

The high court affirmed Thursday a state Court of Appeal decision to leave Phillip Becker, 16, with foster parents Herbert and Patsy Heath of San Jose, rather than allow his parents, Patricia and Warren Becker, to place him in an institution.

"I'm delighted. They're delighted," the Heath's attorney, Jay Spears, said Thursday. "More than ever, Phillip views the Heaths as his family, and their home is his home."

The Beckers had refused to permit a catheter inspection of Phillip's veins to see if surgery could repair a hole in his heart and spare him an invalid's life and early death.

In November 1981, the state Supreme Court stayed the test pending the outcome of litigation, Spears said.

"Now that the court case is over, we'll go forward with the heart test and see if surgery is possible," he said, adding that no date had been set for the tests, which require routine permission from the high court.

In its ruling in favor of the Heaths in January, the appeals court said the Beckers stayed "physically and emotionally detached from Phillip."

Defense Secretary certifies attack version of Navy jet

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger has officially certified to Congress that the attack version of the Navy's controversial F/A-18 Hornet jet now meets originally approved specifications, thus freeing fiscal 1983 advance procurement funds for the aircraft.

In a letter addressed to key committee chairmen, Weinberger said the Naval Air Systems Command had verified that the McDonnell Douglas/Northrop plane had achieved a 575-mile strike mission radius, or 25 miles in excess of the 1978 threshold requirement.

Reporting that the Defense Systems Acquisition Review Council had completed its assessment, the secretary said:

"I have approved production of the aircraft, which includes F/A-18 strike-fighters to replace A-7E (Corsair II) light attack aircraft.

"Given the above, I therefore certify that the attack version of the F/A-18 meets the originally approved attack mission requirements, goals, and specifications."

Under a law enacted last year, none of the fiscal 1983 funds for F/A-18 advance procurement could be obligated or expended for any of those planes scheduled to replace aircraft in Navy attack squadrons until the secretary of defense made his certification. A total of $283.7 million was authorized for such advance procurement.

Range of the Hornet has been the subject of much of the controversy surrounding the aircraft, with charges its "short legs" would require the Navy's big aircraft carriers to steam too close to heavily defended enemy land areas.

Weinberger referred in his letter to the conclusion by the Navy's Operational Test & Evaluation Force — after mission flight tests — that the Hornet's strike mission radius, or one-way leg, was only 450 nautical miles.

The Pentagon clearly is not thrilled with the range of the Hornet, which is only two-thirds that of the Navy's A-6 Intruder medium attack aircraft, even when the former is carrying two 330-gallon external fuel tanks. The A-6, however, is subsonic and has little defensive capability compared to the F/A-18.

When Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Thayer informed the Navy that production of the Hornet was authorized for the light attack mission, he said:

"While it has always been understood that the F/A-18 would have significantly less range and endurance than the A-7, there remains concern about the effect of these reductions on the overall warfighting capability of the aircraft carrier airwing."

As a consequence, Thayer directed the Navy to review the role of naval aviation in general to determine the best mix of aircraft for its carriers to conduct combat operations for major missions.

Three carriers will be involved in the tests. The John F. Kennedy will have F-14 Tomcats and A-6s in its wing; the Constellation, A-6s, F/A-18s, and F-14s; and the Coral Sea, a smaller ship which cannot take the F-14, will have four squadrons of Hornets.

CHICAGO (AP) — Two boys ages 7 and 8 have been accused of starting a fire that damaged seven homes of them, authorities said.
