City lowers tax rate, increases utility charge

An ad valorem tax rate of 59 cents per each $100 valuation, and a 10 percent increase in city utility rates was announced Wednesday night in an emergency meeting of the Pampa city commission, called to discuss funding of the 1981 - 1982 $6.2 million city operating budget.

City Manager Mack Wofford said Tuesday that Mayor H. R. Thompson had called the meeting in order for the commissioners to discuss alternate funding of the 1981 - 1982 budget.

The commissioners did not discuss funding of the budget during the meeting at 5:30 p.m. Wednesday in city hall.

At the beginning of the meeting, the city manager announced the 59 cents per $100 property tax rate and the 10 percent increase of utility rates.

In addition, Wofford said the one cent sales tax revenue estimate was upped from $1.4 million to $1.6 million after city officials had received information from the state comptroller's office showing Pampa's sales tax allocations had increased 29 percent in the past year.

Wofford said $255,000 was added to the $1,437,678 estimated in sales tax revenue in the preliminary budget filed on Sept. 4.

Explaining the utility rate increase, the city manager said a 10 percent increase in the overall operating revenue of the city utility departments would bring in an extra $300,000 in revenues for the coming year.

"This would affect all persons in the city, not only the property owners," Wofford said.

The city manager explained also that the balance of revenue needed for the budget would be provided by the 59 cents per $100 property tax rate. The city previously charged $2.13 per $100 at 40 percent of the property's valuation.

In 1982, the city, and all other taxing entities in Texas, will tax on 100 percent of the property's value. To equal the 1981 tax rate of $2.13 per $100 at 100 percent valuation, the tax rate would have been 85 cents per $100 assessed value.

Therefore, the city has lowered the tax rate by about 30 percent, which will offset to an extent the double, and tripled property assessments recently released by the city - school tax office.

Wofford, in the question and answer session, following the announcement, told Walter Shed, former mayoral contender, that the 1982 tax rate would bring in an additional $340,000 into the city coffers.

During the questioning of city officials by citizens attending the meeting, city commissioners sat without saying a word. All the questions were fielded by either Mayor Thompson or Wofford, with some comments added by City Attorney Don Lane.

The commissioners gazed at the table in front of them and the opposite wall during the meeting, occasionally glancing at the mayor, city manager, or the citizens attending the session.

Several questions arose about the "contractual" and "other charges" listed in the city's budget.

Wofford explained that many items were included in the divisions. He mentioned electric power, all contracted services, general liability insurance, workmen's compensation, and unemployment.

The city manager pointed to a computer print out sheet, which he said listed each of the items included in contractual and other charges columns.

Shed asked what the price of the print out sheet was. Wofford answered they cost $7 to $9. Shed asked if he might buy one. The city manager said they were not for sale, but Shed could look at a copy in his office at anytime.

Tampa Dougless suggested that the city print its budget for 1982 - 1983 on the computer print out sheet, with all items listed for the public.

Wofford said it would be too expensive. Mrs. Dougless said she thought the citizens would be "happy" to pay whatever was necessary in order to have a copy.

Questions on whether the high taxes affected incoming new industries were answered somewhat defensively by Mayor Thompson. "We operate on as frugal as possible basis. We're just as good as other towns," he said.

"The city is not in the personal services area. We provide the narrow, basic services the city requires and requests," he added.

Sid Laughlin, a Pampa businessman, mentioned seeing city employees taking 30 to 45 minute coffee breaks. "That is pure waste," Laughlin said. He said if this practice was cut out, it would save a considerable amount of the taxpayers' money.

Mayor Thompson commented, "I suppose you reported it as a good citizen."

Laughlin said, "I found a man in a company vehicle going into a liquor store and coming out of it with a bottle on city time. I reported it."

Wofford said he wrote a letter to Laughlin concerning the incident describing the disciplinary methods used.

Laughlin countered he had seen the man since that time, still driving a city vehicle. He told The Pampa News, after the meeting, that he had seen the same man in city hall Wednesday, and there was liquor on his breath.

Mrs. Dougless said, "There is a man charged with the finance department (referring to Finance Director Frank Smith). It is a known fact that he is out of the department a great deal."

Wofford said, "He is having health problems and is under the care of a doctor."

After the meeting, Laughlin said, "Well, we did get a welcome and a thank you from the mayor and city manager. I couldn't say they said much else. As far as the commissioners, I never heard them say anything. They just rubber stamped whatever the city manager or the mayor said."

He added, "I don't think we changed anything, but we did give them something to think about. What I don't understand is that with three business people on that board, how come they sit there and not attempt to cut anything out?"

Mrs. Nina Spoonemore said today, "The commission didn't respond very much, any more than they had to."

Gray County commissioners go along with appraisal district

By SHEILA ECCLES
Staff Writer

Gray County Commissioners took steps toward the formation of a central appraisal district board when they passed two resolutions Thursday, including the recommendation of a 10-member board and the postponement until 1983 of the full implementation of the county-wide appraisal district.

Commissioners agreed in the postponement resolution to forgo the use of a chief appraiser until 1983 so the current appraisals can be used through 1982.

Gray County Judge Carl Kennedy said, "We fought a good fight, but we lost, and it is time to move on (to the formation of the central appraisal district)."

During the discussion of the postponement resolution, commissioners agreed that it must be done in order to receive the state funds in 1982.

"The central appraisal district will definitely cost the taxpayers more money and you cannot say anything else," Gray County Precinct 3 Commissioner Jimmy McCracken said.

All four commissioners agreed that it looked like the central appraisal districts were set up for the benefit of Texas school districts.

Precinct 4 Commissioner Ted Simmons said, "If we had been a little more progressive in our school districts, maybe the state school districts and Mr. Peveto would not have pushed for this bill 621."

"We are gradually losing our local governing power. We should be getting more power back rather than giving it up," Simmons said.

The final consensus from all the commissioners was that the effects and mandates of the Peveto Bill 621 and House Bill 30 were very puzzling.

The second resolution passed by the commissioners approved the passage of the three-fourths rule and asked for a 10-member central appraisal district board.

The member allocations call for five members from the Pampa Independent School District - City of Pampa, one member from Gray County, one from Lefors School District, one from McLean School District, one from Alameda School District and one from Grandview - Hopkins School District.

A resolution calling for an interim board for the rest of 1981 was also passed by the court.

"The three main functions of the central appraisal board members is to 1) hire the chief appraiser, 2) set the budget of the central appraisal district, 3) and name the members of the board of equalization," Kennedy said.

Commissioner Simmons said, "I understand that in Austin they have built a very large building to house this new Central Appraisal District entity."

Precinct 2 Commissioner Ronnie Rice answered, "Yes of course it's so they can save us taxpayers more money."

Reagan to disclose tonight where the ax will fall on federal budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, trying to persuade Wall Street and pressure Congress about his economic program, will tell the American people tonight that his budget ax will fall on many things that we wish didn't have to be cut. Social Security, however, apparently won't be one of them.

The 9 p.m. EDT speech, the president's fifth on national television, was intended to unveil a $16 billion package of 1982 budget cuts that was still being put together Wednesday night.

White House aides were unusually tight-lipped about Reagan's proposals. "They've really clamped the lid on all of us here," said deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes. "They want to give the president the opportunity to have something in his speech."

The secrecy prompted speculation at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue that Reagan would take a new tactic in his drive to hold down next year's federal deficit to $42.5 billion and balance the budget by 1984.

One White House official, who asked not to be identified, said Reagan might solve the deficit problem simply by setting a higher target. Another suggested possibility was revamping the Consumer Price Index, which many experts say overestimates inflation, to reduce automatic cost-of-living increases for Social Security and other federal benefit programs.

Congressional sources said Wednesday that Reagan had abandoned his plan to save $2.9 billion through a one-time, three-month delay in next July's cost-of-living raise for Social Security recipients. That idea had been rejected in advance anyway on Capitol Hill.

But without the delay, the White House official said, Reagan was having trouble finding $16 billion in cuts.

In a brief Rose Garden appearance before a group of senior citizens, the president said Wednesday that to restore the economy to sound health he must slash "many things that we wish didn't have to be cut."

Later, after an evening barbecue on the White House lawn, Reagan said he was still writing the speech but "it's pretty well wrapped up."

He summoned his Cabinet for a preview this afternoon.

On the eve of the speech, the changes in Reagan's program appeared, from the reports of congressional and administration sources, to be shaping up this way:

—Social Security cost-of-living increases will be granted on schedule next July, but raises in some other federal pensions and veterans' benefits are likely to be postponed.

—Planned increases in military spending will be trimmed no more than $2 billion next year, despite wide expectation that Congress will try to cut more.

—Suggestions that tax cuts already approved by Congress be deferred next year will be rejected.

The administration was also under pressure in Congress and from mayors and governors to keep the general revenue sharing program for cities and local governments. The president reportedly had planned to phase out the program over three years, and at least some cuts are likely.

The new budget cuts were deemed necessary when persistent high interest rates led to revised forecasts that the fiscal 1982 budget, combined with the tax cuts, would produce a deficit $20 billion or more above Reagan's original goal of $42.5 billion. That would jeopardize the president's promise to balance the budget within three years.

Unlike earlier budget battles, however, Reagan is running into opposition from some of his fellow Republicans who fear he is taking too much from social programs and too little from the military.

"The Congress is against what we're doing," said one White House aide, speaking anonymously.

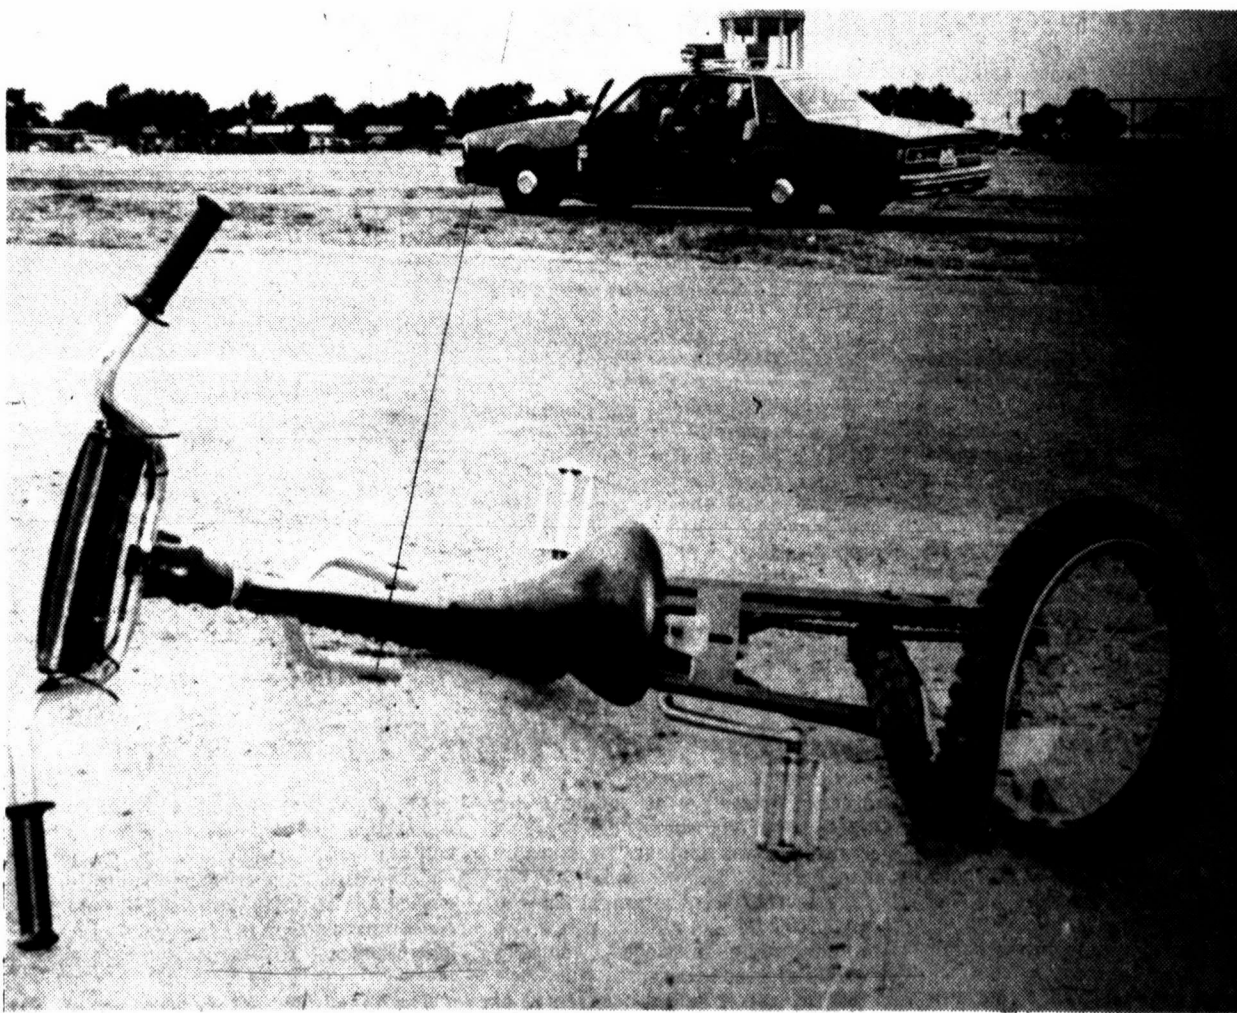

Cities battling over cow bridge

PARKER, Texas (AP) — A rickety wooden bridge that officials of this North Texas community refuse to repair has become the center of a struggle with a neighboring city, which needs it for a major east-west thoroughfare.

The battle over the bridge has raised the ire of folks on both sides of the troubled waters in Cottonwood Creek. And some, including Bill Donihoo, are even talking about secession — from Parker, that is.

Because the bridge is closed, Donihoo said Wednesday, his son must travel five times as far to get to the school he attends in Plano.

The problem began in 1980, when the bridge was declared substandard by highway officials. Rather than replace the span, Parker officials closed it, as well as the road that leads up to it.

'Suicide commandos' seize Turkish office

PARIS (AP) — Three Armenian "suicide commandos" seized about 40 hostages in the Turkish consular office in Paris today and threatened to kill them unless Armenian political prisoners and priests were freed from Turkish jails and flown to France.

They threatened to blow up the building if French police tried to intervene and set a deadline of 11 p.m. (5 p.m. EDT) for their demands to be met.

A Turkish security guard was reportedly wounded by one of the gunmen during the takeover. Turkey's ambassador in France, who was not in the building, denied his government held Armenian political prisoners and said there would be no negotiations with the terrorists.

Police sealed off the building on the Boulevard Haussman in Paris' fashionable 8th District, and said they succeeded in evacuating all the other occupants of the building, about 70 people. Some of them climbed down from the second and third floors on ladders put up by the police.

Police said no formal contact had been established between the police and the attackers, and that when police approached to ask if negotiations were possible, a hand grenade was waved at them behind a window.

Police also said initial reports that two French policemen were held were incorrect. They said two policemen tried to get into the offices immediately after the attack but were repulsed by a burst of gunfire.

Messages dropped by the guerrillas and a statement issued by their organization in Beirut said "all the hostages inside the consulate will be executed" unless the demands are met, and that the building "and all the people inside" will be blown up if French forces try to intervene.

The messages were signed by the "Suicide Commandos of Yeghia Kechichian," a cell of the Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia.

Kechichian was presumed to be a member of the Secret Army slain on a mission.

A spokesman for the Turkish Embassy in Paris, who declined to be identified, quoted Ambassador Adnan Bulak as saying: "We will not negotiate with terrorists. That is Turkish government policy."

A witness who escaped from the building told reporters the leader of the gunmen, a short, thin, bearded man, fired shots at a Turkish security guard who tried to overpower him and wounded him at least once.

The consular employee said he was working in his office when he heard someone shout in French, "Don't move." Then, he said, several shots were fired.

The SALA has been waging a war of assassinations and bombings against Turkish diplomats and government offices to avenge the massacre of Armenians by Turkish soldiers at the end of World War I.

Chemical dumped on Americans in Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP) — American troops may have been exposed to Agent Orange in Vietnam when their own planes dumped the toxic spray near U.S. military bases instead of the jungle, the government says.

"When I got this job in July, I didn't think anyone quite foresaw that we would be dumping this stuff on our own people (in Vietnam)," Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker said Wednesday in making the disclosure.

Last summer, President Reagan directed Schweiker to intensify the investigation into whether the health of servicemen was damaged by exposure to the defoliant.

Previously, the government knew of only 1,200 men — Air Force crews who ran the spraying missions — who were directly exposed to the spray.

But Schweiker said a new search of Pentagon records showed 90 instances when airplanes dumped their chemical cargoes in emergencies, including 41 times "directly over or near U.S. air bases and other military installations."

As a result, he told a news conference, the number coming into contact with Agent Orange "was substantially larger than anybody expected." He said, however, he could not estimate how many men may have been exposed.

The head of an organization of Vietnam veterans who claim their health was damaged by Agent Orange said his group had known for years that the herbicide was dropped directly on American soldiers.

Conditions put on Salvadoran aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Handing a temporary defeat to President Reagan and the president of El Salvador, the Senate is moving toward blocking U.S. military aid to El Salvador unless the Central American country protects human rights and meets other conditions.

But the conditions, included in an amendment approved late Wednesday, could be reversed as the Senate continues work on a $5.8 billion foreign aid bill.

By approving the amendment, 54-42, the Senate rejected a proposal by Sen. Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind., to merely list the conditions as goals for the government of El Salvador. Reagan is against the conditions, Lugar said.

The conditions would halt U.S. military aid to El Salvador unless Reagan certified to Congress in writing that El Salvador is protecting human rights, moving to control its security forces, implementing economic reforms and is committed to free elections and willing to negotiate for peace.

El Salvador's President Jose Napoleon Duarte appealed to the Senate not to tie the conditions to military aid, calling such action "an unacceptable imposition on a government friendly to the United States."

In other action on the bill, the Senate approved amendments by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., earmarking $5 million for Poland, $5 million for Lebanon and $5 million to promote breast feeding rather than use of commercial baby formulas in poor countries.

It also approved an amendment by Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., earmarking $12.5 million in economic aid for Costa Rica.

Racist given life for killing blacks

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Avowed racist Joseph Paul Franklin, who briefly escaped hours before a jury sentenced him to life in prison, is asking the trial judge to overturn his conviction for murdering two young blacks.

Moments after the jury was dismissed, 3rd District Judge Jay E. Banks said he received a handwritten motion from Franklin asking him "to declare the conviction illegal and void."

Banks said he would rule on the motion Monday, when he is to formalize Franklin's sentence. Franklin, acting as his own attorney, told the judge, "thank you."

Franklin, 31, of Mobile, Ala., was found guilty Saturday of first-degree murder in the Aug. 20, 1980, slayings of Ted Fields, 20, and David Martin, 18. The two were shot while jogging with two white women near Salt Lake City's Liberty Park.

After deliberating less than 2 1/2 hours Wednesday afternoon, the all-white jury said it could not unanimously agree to sentence Franklin to die before a firing squad. The verdict effectively imposes a life term. Utah law requiring such imprisonment or death for first-degree murder convictions.

Franklin showed no outward emotion as the decision was read, except to mouth the words "thank you" to the jurors. David Yocom, a Salt Lake City lawyer assisting Franklin later said his client "was very happy, obviously," but had said nothing specific about the decision.

Yocom said he was "very grateful" the jury did not decide on death and said the conviction would be appealed. Deputy Salt Lake County Attorney Robert Stott said he was disappointed with the decision. "We obviously argued vigorously for the death penalty," Stott said.

The jury began deliberations in the trial's penalty phase at 3:20 p.m., less than an hour after Franklin was captured after a brief escape.

Alternate homes sought for area adults

The Texas Department of Human Resources is looking for Alternate Living Homes for adults in the Panhandle area.

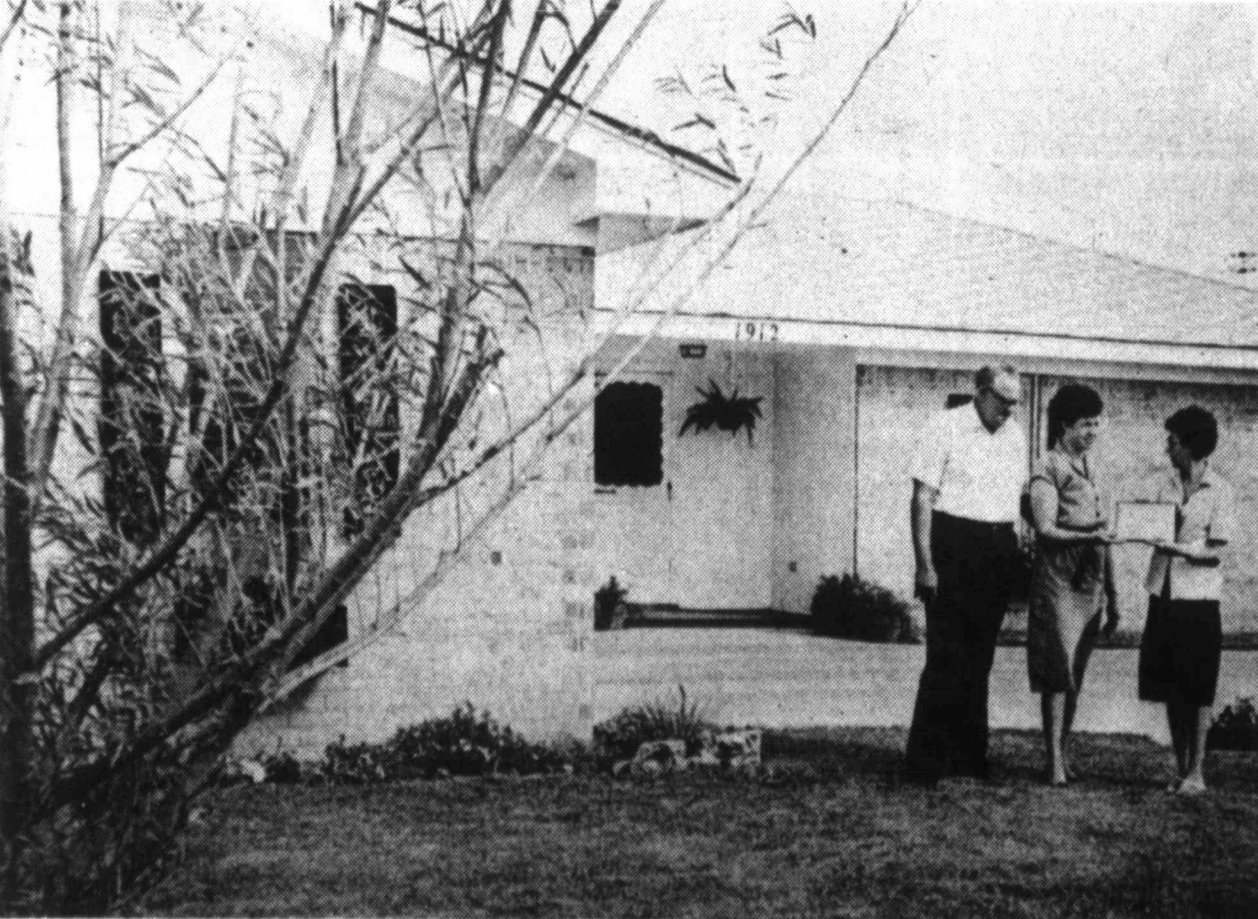

Debbie Hunter, case worker for the Pampa office, is in charge of locating area residents who are interested in sharing their homes with adults who are aged or disabled.

Hunter said, "One woman we helped to place was 76 and living alone. She had fallen and broken her hip. She went into a nursing home to recover from the break, but it became too expensive. An Alternate Living Home was the answer to her problem."

"Although the owner of an Alternate Living Home receives about $12 per day for each client, the job is confining and requires a great deal of patience," Hunter said.

Any person interested in supplying an Alternate Living Home should contact Debbie Hunter at the Department of Human Resources, 665 - 1863.

Texas students having a good time in school

By JACK KEEVER
Associated Press Writer
AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas students — thinking they were born just to have a good time — are opting for easy and entertaining courses over math and science, says the state commissioner of higher education.

"Frankly, the evidence shows we are turning soft; students somehow get the idea from society that hard work is to be avoided, something that has no rewards and that we were put here to play," Ashworth told the Select Committee on Public Education on Wednesday.

His review of public education contrasted with Dr. Vic Arnold's upbeat predictions about the Texas economy, which he said serves as a "magnet" for attracting newcomers to the state.

Arnold, a University of Texas professor in charge of the Texas 2000 project, predicted that in the next 20 years the state's economy will grow by 17 percent to 20 percent above the national average.

He and Ashworth testified before the Select Committee on Public Education, which includes legislative leaders such as Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Speaker Bill Clayton and educators.

Ashworth said the Southern Regional Education Board released figures "that say something about what our priorities really are. In the entire South in one year recently (1978), our colleges graduated 445 math education majors; but that same year we graduated 7,502 coaches and PE (physical education) majors."

"We have simply got to find ways to get students to take more math and science, and more than the minimum amounts required by our high schools to graduate and by our colleges to get by," he said. "And we need to keep them going in tough subjects once they get to college."

"The colleges are alarmed about the inadequate preparation of many high school graduates upon admission to college. Yet the colleges have been lowering and easing their admission requirements, which, in turn, has said to the high schools that they are free to eliminate certain graduation requirements," Ashworth said.

Ashworth recommended tightening college admission requirements and requiring more tough courses in high school.

He added that the brightest students are avoiding teacher education, and the "result is that students with the lowest grade point averages" and scholastic aptitude test scores "are often the ones choosing teacher education as a career. Those least qualified may be teaching our next generation."

"If one were an alarmist, he might say ... we are going from bad to worse."

Hobby, the committee chairman, said the issues raised by Ashworth "are much more fundamental than those raised (by the committee) so far."

"The best pay we ever gave our teachers was when we held them in high esteem," said Ashworth. "As much as I think teachers' pay needs to be improved, I am quite certain the most effective" way to recruit and retain teachers "would be to get the teaching profession back into higher repute with the public."

"It's hard to develop self-esteem when you live in a mobile home five miles outside of town," said Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson, D-Midland, chairman of the Senate Education Committee.

One conviction reversed, most upheld by court

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A former Gregg County, Texas, commissioner accused of conspiring to murder three men won a partial victory in federal appeals court — but he still faces five years in prison.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed William L. Satterwhite's conviction on one count of violating the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, known as RICO.

In that count, he was accused of two specific acts of racketeering. One was a conspiracy to kill three men as part of a devious plan to cover up the earlier murder of a prostitute.

However, Tuesday's 5th circuit ruling upheld Satterwhite's conviction, in a U.S. District Court at Tyler, on a charge of conspiracy to obstruct the enforcement of the criminal laws of Texas to facilitate gambling during a period extending from Jan. 1, 1973, to Jan. 17, 1979.

Satterwhite had been sentenced to five-year prison terms on each of the two counts, to be served at the same time. The reversal cancelled one term, but the other was affirmed.

In addition, the ruling upheld the convictions of former sheriff Tom Welch, facing 10 years in prison; Justice of the Peace Charles Cashell, sentenced to 3 years; and former Chief Deputy Sheriff James M. Cochran, 5 years.

Cochran, Welch and Cashell were convicted on the RICO count. Cochran, Satterwhite and Welch were convicted on the conspiracy to obstruct count. Welch and Cashell also were convicted on a second and separate conspiracy to obstruct enforcement of state criminal laws.

The first conspiracy to obstruct count dealt with efforts to protect a gambling casino at the Foster Farm near Longview, and later at the Pat Smith place. The second conspiracy centered on efforts to protect gambling at the Longview Jaycees Gregg County Fair and Livestock Show.

Gambling at the Foster Farm was shifted to the Pat Smith place after Longview

Judge once again blocks the exhumation of Oswald

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The widow of accused presidential assassin Lee Harvey Oswald has vowed to continue her effort to exhume his body despite a second restraining order prohibiting her from disturbing the remains.

State District Judge James Wright granted the restraining order Wednesday on behalf of Oswald's brother, Robert Oswald, who is fighting the attempt by Marina Oswald Porter, to have the grave opened.

It was the second time Wright has ordered parties in the exhumation case not to disturb Oswald's guarded grave in the Rose Hill Memorial Park cemetery in east Fort Worth.

Wright granted Robert Oswald's request for a similar order when British author Michael Eddowes, with Mrs. Porter's permission, moved to have the grave opened last year. Eddowes believes a Soviet agent and Oswald look-alike is buried there.

But that ruling was reversed last week by the 2nd Texas Court of Appeals in Fort Worth.

The appeals court said the legal rights of Mrs. Porter and her two children came before that of the brother's.

Judge Wright disregarded the higher court by disobeying its ruling.

Mrs. Porter said. "There is more to this than meets the eye."

She did not elaborate, but said that her brother-in-law is "a desperate person, trying to grasp at every legal straw."

Mrs. Porter said she was not surprised by the ruling.

"I think that we have a very strong legal case and there is no doubt who is right and who is wrong," she said. Robert Oswald "is running out of legal ammunition, and we are still going strong."

She said she is prepared to continue the legal battle to show that her former husband is missing from his grave, and predicts it could be "years" before she is permitted to exhume the body.

"It just puts more oil on the fire," she said. "The fighting spirit is still there."

The earliest date for a hearing on Wright's temporary restraining order would be Oct. 5.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Covering Commandment.

Local opinion

Emergency meetings a convenience, not a necessity to city

Emergency meetings are getting to be a habit of the Pampa City Commission, when, we feel, no real emergency or matter of "urgent public necessity" exists.

And, according to the Texas Open Meetings Law, only the posting of a notice in a public place two hours before the meeting is required.

The problem is our definition of an emergency, and the city commission's definition.

To the city commission, when they decide to have a meeting tomorrow, say, or in less than the 72-hour notice period required for their public meetings, then that makes it an emergency meeting. They define emergency based on the amount of notice they want to give.

To us, the emergency provisions of the open meetings law apply when a state of emergency or "urgent public necessity" exists, such as floodwaters threatening M. K. Brown Auditorium, or a tornado, or downtown businesses threatened by floodwaters, and city action is required. Another meaning of the word could be when some financial emergency occurs and the group must act quickly.

Attorney General spokesman Mary Hardesty also pointed out to us that the city commission is failing to state in their notices what the emergency or "urgent public necessity" is, requiring the meeting. Same with their notices of closed executive sessions. They are supposed to state what specific topic their discussion will cover, such as the familiar one "personnel."

Why must a budget discussion always be an "emergency"?

What is the emergency? Why can't they meet three days from now when everybody can be there?

That's our point. No real emergency exists. The emergency meeting clause is more a convenience, than a necessity, to our city commission.

City needs to change regular meeting time

While we're on the subject of public, open meetings, why can't the city commission regularly meet after working hours so taxpaying citizens can attend their meetings?

The excuse we hear so often is "because nobody comes anyway."

That's irrelevant. With all this heated discussion on the tax rate and the recent property revaluation, we think more of our citizens would turn out, if they weren't good, honest, hard-working people.

As we've said, time and time again, it's hard to explain to your boss that you have to leave work at 9:30 a.m. in the morning, just to do your citizen's duty by attending a city commission meeting.

Whether anyone actually shows up or not is not the issue. The issue is whether our citizens have the opportunity to show up at a time most convenient to them.

The city needs to change the time of its regular meetings.

Turnaround in Army

Things are looking up for the U.S. Army, and its chief of staff, Gen. Edward C. Meyer, must be credited for much of the improvement.

A year ago, the general reported to Congress that he commanded a "hollow army" — a force beset with shortages of personnel and lack of training, weapons and maintenance.

Last year six out of 10 Army divisions in the United States were unfit for combat because of shortages and inexperience. Today, nine out of 10 are combat-ready because Meyer brought 6,000 of his top sergeants from Europe to whip divisions here into shape.

Recent figures show the Army is filling 98 percent of its recruiting quota, bringing in 96,300 men and women. Sixty-nine percent of the recruits now are high school graduates, compared to the former 40 percent.

A year ago U.S. soldiers scored low in international competitions. Last month Army helicopter crews outpointed the Poles, West Germans and Russians in precision flying and navigation tests. Last May American tank crews placed third in competition against 20 teams from eight nations.

The remarkable turnaround in the Army is good news for the entire nation.

Comparable worth remains a problem

A federal study shows that on the average, women in the labor force are earning 40 percent less than men. Inasmuch as the same disparity has existed for the last 20 years, this suggests that women are not making much progress in their demand for equal pay for equal work.

But the study conducted for the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission also points out that sex discrimination by employers is not the only reason for the disparity. The law now requires that men and women doing the same job be paid the same wages, but anti-discrimination laws have not dealt with the fact that jobs in fields dominated by women traditionally pay less than jobs in fields dominated by men.

It is patently unfair to pay a male stenographer more than an equally skilled female stenographer simply because of his sex. But is it discriminatory to pay stenographers less than, say, construction workers? Stenographers may argue that it is, but the EEOC study points out that no one has come up with an acceptable formula to determine the "comparable worth" of work performed by persons in jobs which are not alike.

The Equal Rights movement is encouraging women to choose careers in fields traditionally dominated by men, and they have the law on their side in opening doors to employment and promotion opportunities that once might have been closed. This nibbles away at disparities in the incomes of women and men, but a dramatic change in the wage statistics may have to wait a resolution of the problem of calculating "comparable worth."

By ROBERT LEFEVRE

Most of us are prone to overlook an important rule of economic calculation. It might be called the rule of Chronological Distortion.

Many economists have written concerning what is often referred to as a "time lag" between actions taken in the marketplace and the anticipated consequences. A good example of this lag can be seen if one examines the gasoline market.

During the Carter administration, the politicians were tremendously concerned because of huge oil imports. At the same time, they were concerned that because of these imports and an apparent energy shortage, the American economy was entering a narrow corridor which might result in vanishing supplies and rising prices, neither of which would be welcome.

Those few with high visibility who were observing with accuracy (and some almost always are) suggested that the way to deal with the crisis was to take off the restraints both as to domestic oil production and to pricing. Given a free market, a natural conservation of gasoline usage would occur. People would be compelled by the realities of pricing to conserve. Additionally, given a free market in which to produce, a boom in oil prospecting would occur. Many more wells would be sunk and more domestic production would occur, particularly if the oil companies were allowed to profit as a result of their exertions.

Naturally, the politicians objected. Most politicians, while often being unaware of it, are socialistic in their thinking. One does not drive socialists out of government; government is the native soil of socialism. That is where socialists plant their roots and flourish.

So there were endless schemes by various departments in the government, by means of which to raise prices by taxation rather than by the rules of supply and demand; to ration gasoline; and, possibly the silliest of all, the Carter "windfall profits" tax which would penalize the oil companies for working harder right where they would be most effective, and then reward them later by having government subsidize (with the taxes just collected) the development of new energy sources, returning some of these same funds to the very companies thus taxed.

What is always unthinkable to socialists is that people will behave in their own best interests without having government tell them what their own best interests are.

What transpired was instructive if one cared to observe. While proclaiming that government would never remove price controls in an ostensible effort to "protect the poor" the government nonetheless raised the legal limits on prices charged. Price "controls" were maintained by keeping the laws on the books but adjusting price ceilings to market price advances.

On the other side of the coin, controls were maintained over oil production but at the same time larger and more incentive laden exclusions were made so as to encourage investment in oil and gas exploration. A person with dollars available could invest in exploration and receive as much as a triple tax "write-off" on taxes paid that year. Thus if a person invested say $10,000 in exploration in 1979, the same year he could write off $30,000 on his income taxes.

Thus, while keeping itself in total power, the government in fact followed the market indicators while proclaiming to the public the big lie that it was running everything.

Today, as we are well aware, gas prices have leveled off and in a few places across the country actual declines in prices have occurred. Similarly, there has been a boom in oil and gas exploration to the point where we have what is being called a "glut" in the supply column.

The time lag is conspicuous. Of course, I will argue that the time lag was far more lengthy than necessary. Had the government divested itself of its powers in these areas and had the belief been born that oil and gas enterprises were henceforth to operate in a completely free market, instead of a two-year lag we might have had a six-month's lag. This would have thrown thousands of political bureaucrats out of work, and brought about the hiring of many more thousands of persons in the free market areas of gas and oil production and service.

I have emphasized the word "belief" in an effort to make my point. Many have commented in respect to the stock market, for example, that it operates in a highly charged atmosphere that has more to do with emotion than with logic. Belief is nothing more than emotional certainty. (I am not suggesting that a belief is either right or wrong, it is merely a conclusion that has been accepted as true whether right or wrong. Thus, a belief could be either.) The nature of a belief is that something is believed.

The rule of Chronological Distortion can be applied in the reverse direction. Last fall, the voting public responded to Carter mismanagement in overwhelming fashion. It literally disowned the Carter political party and brought in the "out-of-favor" Republicans. Reagan had promised a reversal of policy.

Since Reagan came to power, very little has actually occurred, at the time of this writing. Will the budget be trimmed? It appears likely. Will taxes be reduced? It appears likely. Will Social Security "benefits" be continued? It appears likely. But nothing is certain. The jockeying and pettifoggery continues unabated.

But what has happened in the market? A belief has been born on principle. Believing this to be true, the men and women in the market have already made their calculations and are acting on them.

Stated another way the following occurs: If people believe prices will be forced upwards tomorrow, they will raise their prices today. If, on the contrary, they believe the market will become freer and more competitive tomorrow, then they will react today by trying to improve quality and trim prices, to become more competitive.

Thus, all market consequences stem from what people believe will happen, and not necessarily as a result of what does happen.

equivalent of Bernard Baruch's bench in Lafayette Park. When people in the Johnson, Nixon, Ford administrations need advice they knew where to find me.

I am still not at liberty to confess what decisions I was in on, but suffice it to say that when I held court at the Sans Souci, the inflation rate never rose above five percent, people could purchase a decent home for $40,000, banks were begging the public to borrow money at 6 percent, Social Security was safe, and the United States had twice the military might of the Soviet Union.

Without revealing any confidences, I can state the recognition of the People's Republic of China first nodded at my table at the Sans Souci, and the Camp David talks began soon after the Egyptian ambassador asked to split a chef's salad with me.

When Roger Stevens ran out of money to complete Kennedy Center, I told the waiter to put whatever he needed on my tab.

This is not to say the Sans Souci was all work and no play. Some of the most beautiful women in the world could be found dining there in hopes that one of us would become a chapter in their memoirs.

But that's another column. Needless to say, there was something for everybody even if you didn't order from the menu.

The downfall of the Sans Souci was not of my making. It was caused when the Maitre d'Hotel Paul De Lisle, had a fight with the owner and resigned.

What the owner didn't realize was that Paul was our leader, and our security blanket away from home. No matter how important anyone is in the United States, he is still nervous about how he will be treated in a restaurant by a Maitre d'Hotel. The fact that Paul decided we were worthy of having a table in his restaurant, was the only assurance we had that we were still part of the power structure.

With Paul's departure, the Sans Souci became just another place to eat, and I had no choice but to fold up my table and leave. It was a sad day not only for me but for the country. The downfall of the Sans Souci caused a tremendous identity crisis for the movers and shakers in the nation's capital. To this day, except for Al Haig, most of us don't know who the hell we are.

Advisers attack start of struggle

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — A left-wing guerrilla group says the shooting of two American military advisers and a bomb explosion at the Honduran congress was the start of its "armed struggle against Yankee imperialism."

The Lorenzo Zelaya Popular Revolutionary Command said it was responsible for the attack Wednesday on a U.S. Embassy van in which Army Sgts. Robert L. Smith, 30, of Marshville, N.C., and Russell L. McFall, 34, were wounded. Three other Americans in the vehicle escaped injury.

A communique from the guerrillas also assailed Honduras' military government, calling it a puppet of the United States. It was the first attack on the U.S. training team of 21 men who began arriving in this Central American country two months ago. The Honduran police posted extra guards at their headquarters. Embassy spokesman Robert Callahan said Smith was wounded in the kidney and was flown to a U.S.

military hospital in Panama. He was reported in stable condition.

McFall, whose hometown was not available, was treated at a local hospital for an arm wound and released, the spokesman said.

Smith is a liaison officer between the training team and the Honduran government and McFall teaches air-to-ground communications. Embassy spokesman Robert Callahan said.

Callahan said a guerrilla with an automatic rifle fired eight bullets into the van in which Smith, McFall and three other American advisers were being driven to their headquarters.

The police said at least three men took part in the ambush and escaped in a taxi. They also fired at the nearby home of Col. Rolando Mejia Garriga, a former vice minister of communications, the police said.

Police said an anonymous caller telephoned a warning to the palace a few minutes before the explosion. They said about a dozen guards and others in the building escaped before the bomb went off on the second floor.

The pattern of business news

NEW YORK (AP) — In a business and financial world that in recent weeks projects great confusion and uncertainty you may appreciate an attempt to pigeonhole the news.

This framework has dangers, because news by its nature often defies categories, but it is a safe bet that many of today's events can be assembled under one or more of the following:

BUYING DOWN. To spur sales and counter prohibitively high interest rates, sellers may "buy down" the cost of borrowing by 3 percentage points. That is, they agree with the lender to share in the financing.

While this is particularly true in real estate, it isn't limited to that category. IVECO Trucks, for example, announced that beginning today it will offer 13.8 percent loans to buyers of certain diesel trucks.

SELLING OFF. One of the commonest practices when a product fails to sell is to sell the division or subsidiary that makes the product. Hardly a day goes by without an important announcement of this type.

STRIPPING BACK. Ten years ago the conglomerate theme was still a big factor in American business. Companies grew by buying. Today, many of them are divesting. They are stripping back to essentials.

SHUTTING DOWN. As practiced, for example, by the major automotive companies when faced with an oversupply of certain products. Generally, the shutdowns are temporary, but some companies are using the sluggish economy to close down and sell off older, outmoded facilities.

PUTTING OFF. In an uncertain future, long-term financial commitments are avoided. Companies that ordinarily borrow long are borrowing for comparatively short terms — for two years instead of 20. They are putting off big capital expenditures. They are, in a way, buying time.

LAYING OFF. Like the Federal government, many big companies are well into their programs of reducing the work force. Layoffs in years gone by generally involved blue collar workers, but over the past year or so automotive companies, some insurers, and even small, family-run corporations have been whittling away at their white collar staffs.

ACTING UP. Business has been pushing governmental units for various advantages. Perhaps as never before — and maybe because of the stress of tough market and financing factors — it has been demanding help, not just on taxes but on new site selection, worker training and the like.

MOVING OUT. Like individuals, many companies seek an answer to their problems in a new site. To some degree, the move to the Sunbelt may reflect this tendency.

Dallas leads nation in rape despite program

By ALLEN K. SHORT
Associated Press Writer
DALLAS (AP) — Five years ago, when a young Dallas secretary told her boss she'd been raped, he fired her because he didn't want "that kind of woman" around the office.

Back then, it wasn't uncommon in Dallas for a rape victim to wait up to 12 hours in a crowded hospital emergency room before she was examined. Attitudes toward rape and its victims have changed a lot since then, and Dallas has been a leader in making reforms.

But despite a rape treatment and reporting system that is regarded as a model among U.S. cities and an aggressive prosecutor's office that frequently obtains life sentences in aggravated rape cases, Dallas has become the nation's statistical "rape capital."

No one — least of all the more than 1,400 women who are raped here in a year — seems to know why.

In 1980, according to FBI and U.S. Census Bureau figures, a woman living in Dallas, the nation's seventh largest city, was three times as likely to be raped as a female resident of Chicago or San Diego and twice as likely to be victimized as a resident of Philadelphia, New York or Baltimore.

Dallas police recorded 1,121 reported forcible rapes last year, or 124 sexual assaults for every 100,000 residents. When only female residents are taken into account, the figure becomes almost 250 rapes for every 100,000 women in Dallas.

"We have the record, the reputation for being the worst in the nation," said Irving Stone, a forensic chemist with Southwestern Medical School here.

In 1973, Stone's laboratory examined 530 tissue and fluid samples taken from rape victims for use as evidence in court. This year, the lab expects to conduct 1,450 tests, almost three times as many.

Rape is historically an underreported crime — a common police estimate is that only one rape in 10 is reported. A sign that the Dallas Rape Crisis Center is having an effect is that 90 percent of the women who seek help at the center ultimately decide to report their assaults to authorities, said Sue James, the center's senior coordinator. That's up from 40 percent just five years ago, she said.

The center runs a battery of public education programs: meetings with women's groups to explain how to avoid rape, group therapy sessions for rape victims, police training sessions and seminars for doctors and social workers.

Ten years ago, "No one reported rape. It just wasn't done," said Ms. James, who recounted the case of the secretary who was fired. "And if you told a girlfriend you had been raped, she was liable to ask you what you did to provoke the attack."

Stone, who helped design Dallas' rape treatment and reporting program, and Ms. James both say the success of the program, along with rape reporting procedures used by the police, may be why Dallas' sexual assault rate stands out when compared to those of other big cities.

Los Angeles, the nation's third largest city after New York and Chicago, had the nation's second highest rape rate in 1980. But Los Angeles' per capita sexual assault rate of 95 per 100,000 was still significantly below the rate reported by Dallas police.

"In a lot of cities, if the investigating officer decides the case is unfounded, it isn't recorded as a rape," she said. "In Dallas, all of them are listed in the statistics regardless of the outcome of the investigation."

Stone concedes, however, that the city's 12 to 15 percent annual increases in reported rapes cannot be entirely explained by population growth or better crime reporting techniques.

Police theorize that the city's high rape rate is partly a result of the tens of thousands of young women who flock to the city seeking work, many of them from small towns or rural areas where personal security measures are not a major concern.

"Every time the local papers say there's another shortage of secretaries in Dallas, these young women come to the city in droves," said police spokesman Bob Shaw. "Sometimes, when they get here, they learn a real, real hard lesson."

Veteran rape investigator Evelyn Crowder agreed: "Dallas is a very popular place to women in Oklahoma, Texas and other states. And look at all the apartment complexes we have. That's where most of our rapes occur."

But statistics compiled by the Rape Crisis Center offer little support for the department's thesis.

In 1980, for example, only 5 to 6 percent of the women counseled by center employees came from small towns and rural areas. A much larger percentage had lived in Dallas all their lives, Ms. James said.

Perhaps a more likely factor in the number of rapes is Dallas' long summer, which stretches from March to October, Ms. James said. Windows and doors are open, and people are outside.

"Rapes go way down during the colder months here," she said.

Brief look at Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Exposing the identities of U.S. overseas operatives could result in up to 10 years in prison for government personnel and a three-year sentence for journalists under legislation approved by the House that now is awaiting action in the Senate.

Acting in response to assaults on U.S. intelligence agents, the House Wednesday approved the bill on a 354-56 vote. The bill, which opponents challenged on First Amendment grounds, sets the maximum 10-year prison term and $50,000 fine for CIA, foreign service and other government employees with access to classified data about agents who reveal their names to journalists or others.

In other congressional business Wednesday:

—President Reagan urged the Senate to approve a $5.8 billion foreign aid bill to help meet "serious challenges abroad from the adventurism of the Soviet Union and its proxies."

He made the appeal in a letter to Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, as the Senate began considering the bill.

Later, in a potential defeat for Reagan, the Senate tentatively approved a series of conditions on his military aid to El Salvador that would require reforms in the Central American nation.

The Senate approved, 54-42, an amendment to the foreign aid bill that would require the president to certify to Congress that El Salvador is not abusing human rights, is moving to control its security forces, is implementing economic reforms, is committed to free elections and is willing to negotiate peace.

—Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger told the House Budget Committee that $13 billion is "the maximum" that can be cut from the military budget during the next three years without impairing a planned arms buildup.

—A State Department poll showed the Senate standing 63-12 against President Reagan's proposed $8.5 billion Saudi Arabian arms sale, including AWACS radar planes. But Republican Leader Howard Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said he would "not rule out by any means that the president will prevail."

Income guidelines lowered for nutrition program

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department, in a belated announcement, says federal income guidelines have been lowered for a nutrition program that provides supplemental food for 2.2 million mothers and their small children.

The program, popularly called WIC, provides government food packages to help meet the nutrition requirements of pregnant and nursing women, infants and other small children.

A monthly package of special food costs the government about $28 each. Items can include milk, cheese, cereal, juice, eggs and infant formula, depending on the recipient's category.

Under previous rules, a family of four could have a maximum income of $17,560 a year and qualify for aid. The new regulation puts the maximum at $15,630 a year.

Details of the change will be published in the Sept. 25 issue of the Federal Register, the government's official notice of rule changes.

But the department's Food and Nutrition Service said Wednesday that the lower income standards for WIC actually went into effect on Aug. 13 in accordance with budget legislation passed by Congress. The delay in notifying the public was attributed to "quite a backlog" of red tape associated with a number of changes Congress ordered in federal food programs.

Assistant Secretary Mary C. Jarratt, who oversees the program, said the new rules for eligibility "will allow more of those at the lower end of the income scale to participate" in the WIC program by disqualifying some at the higher income level.

"It is a matter of targeting benefits so those in greatest need can be served," she said.

Although officials said they had no estimate on how many people will be cut from the program, they indicated those would be dropped as they come up for period review or re-certification of eligibility.

The program is expected to cost about $1 billion in the current fiscal year that ends Sept. 30. No estimate was available on how much the action might save in 1981-82.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has taken a major step to reduce the government's role in enforcing federal grain inspection standards that were beefed up five years ago to help curb the adulteration and short-weighting of American grain sold to foreign buyers.

Nearly half of the headquarters staff of the Federal Grain Inspection Service is being fired or demoted as an economy measure, the Agriculture Department said Wednesday.

Officials said 77 jobs are being abolished and 45 will be downgraded, effective Oct. 3. There are 261 people on the headquarters staff, most of them in Washington.

In all, the agency has about 1,500 employees nationwide, including grain inspectors.

Kenneth E. Gilles, administrator of the Federal Grain Inspection Service, said "changes will be made later in the field office structure."

Gilles said the reorganization "is in keeping with the department goals to increase efficiency, hold down costs and make government more responsive to the needs of the public it serves."

The agency was created by Congress in 1976 as part of a tightening of federal supervision of grain inspection in the wake of investigations and prosecutions related to adulteration of grain exports, bribery, short-weighting and other violations of federal law.

Gilles said the agency's original structure "has served its purpose, and the time has come to re-examine the priorities of the agency."

No dollar estimate on savings was available.

"With reduced allocations and greater dependence on user fees expected in the coming years, it is time to streamline our activities and increase the efficiency of the work this agency does," Gilles said.

Besides eliminating the jobs of two assistant and regional field offices in Atlanta, Kansas City, Chicago, Dallas and Seattle, the shakeup included:

—Combining the present weighing and inspection divisions into a new "field management" division, with responsibility for supervising agency field offices throughout the country.

—Combining several management support staffs into a new "resources management" division.

—Maintaining the present standardization division, located in Kansas City but part of the headquarters operation, and the compliance division.

—Transferring major management support functions to a new staff which will provide service to three other Agriculture Department agencies in addition to the grain inspection service.

Reagan to try and explain

WASHINGTON (AP) — The more President Reagan says about his economic program, the more Social Security becomes central to his budget cuts. And the more that happens, the more trouble he seems to get into.

Tonight, he will try to make it all OK.

The problem is this: How do you tell people you are going to delay the anticipated increases in their pensions — raises that were intended to help them cope with inflation? And once you tell them that, how do you make them like it?

When the president appears on television screens across the nation at 9 p.m. EDT tonight, he will need to do more than outline, once again, why he wants to cut back the planned increases in the coming federal budgets.

He must use the address to muster enough support that Congress, showing signs of balking at pension cuts, will once again return to his side with enough Democrats in the bunch to assure success.

Finally, after having no trouble winning significant majorities in the Democratic-controlled House in earlier battles, Reagan may have his work cut out for him.

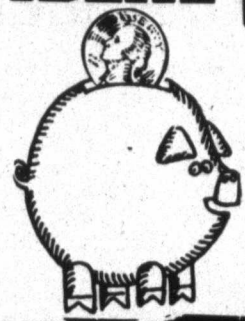

A week ago, Reagan left no doubt that the cost-of-living increase scheduled to go into effect July 1 for Social Security recipients would have to be delayed. Alice Rivlin, chief of the Congressional Budget Office, said that by postponing the increase for three months, the government could save $2.9 billion in 1982.

But on Monday, Reagan was told by Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., and House Minority Leader Bob Michel, R-Ill., that Congress would not go along.

Approval of the Social Security changes would be "extremely difficult, extremely difficult," said Michael Johnson, an aide to Michel. The trouble, he said, would be "with people on our side of the aisle."

Budget director David A. Stockman and his aides kept looking at Social Security. Over the long term, it appeared to be one program whose spending Reagan would have to trim to meet his pledge of balancing the federal budget in fiscal 1984.

SWEET APPLE PIE. Sugar and spice and all things nice make the topping.

Walnut topping is crust on apple pie

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

We know one young man whose wife doesn't have to urge him to help at dinner. That's because he's enjoyed cooking since he was a teen-ager. His sisters remember his high-school repertoire included spaghetti with various sauces, pizza and all kinds of cookies. His wife recalls the paper-thin Swedish pancakes he surprised her with one weekend morning shortly after they were married.

But he had never tried his hand at making the all-American apple pie. Recently when he did, the result was a sweet version with a nut topping rather than the usual pastry. Here's his recipe.

STEVE'S SWEET APPLE PIE
1 cup all-purpose flour
1/2 cup firmly packed light brown sugar
1/2 teaspoon ground ginger
1/2 cup butter
1/2 cup chopped walnuts
3 tablespoons cornstarch
1/4 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons butter, melted
1/4 cup honey
1/2 teaspoon grated lemon rind
1 teaspoon lemon juice
4 1/2 cups pared sliced apples
1 unbaked 9-inch pastry shell

In a small bowl, stir together the flour, sugar and ginger; with a pastry cutter or 2 knives cut in the 1/2 cup butter until coarse crumbs form; stir in the walnuts. Reserve to use as a topping.

In a large bowl, stir together the cornstarch and salt. Stir in until smooth the 2 tablespoons melted butter and the honey; stir in the lemon rind and lemon juice. Add the apple slices and toss until well coated. Spoon into the pastry shell. Sprinkle the reserved topping over the apples. Bake on the rack below the center of a preheated 400-degree oven for 15 minutes; reduce heat to 350 degrees and bake until apples are tender and crust is browned — about 30 minutes. Cool on a rack.

Dear Abby

Girl should remove herself from love triangle

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I'm in love. And it's the most exciting thing that has ever happened to me. I'm 22 and "G" is 24. He's also the boyfriend of one of my girlfriends, which complicates matters. They've been very tight for several years, but he told me he has no plans to marry her, although they're living together temporarily.

There has always been a very strong attraction between "G" and me, but I never dreamed anything like this could happen. Well, the other night, the very first time we were alone together, we lost all control and made love. I don't regret it, but I'm all confused. I know it happened incredibly fast, but Abby, I've never been in love like this before. "G" says he thinks he loves me, too, but it's too soon to make a commitment.

To make matters worse, "G" and his "girlfriend" are going on a 10-day vacation together. (It was planned a long time ago.) He promised to call me every chance he gets while he's away, and said we will work something out when he gets back. He says he doesn't want to lose me, but he's a very caring person and doesn't want to hurt her.

I suppose there is nothing I can do except wait and see what happens, but in the meantime, I would appreciate an objective opinion and any useful advice.

MESSED UP IN W. VA.

DEAR MESSED UP: My objective opinion is that you should cool it. If and when "G" is free from his present commitment, you can pick up where you left off.

DEAR ABBY: A new family moved into our neighborhood. Their children are about the ages of our children, so the youngsters quickly struck up a friendship. Soon we mothers were visiting each other's homes for coffee. So far so good!

Then after one of her visits, I noticed that two towels and matching washcloths were missing from my bathroom. They were not misplaced — they are gone! Of course I didn't see her, take them, but I strongly suspect she did. My questions:

1) Should my children continue to play with her children? Why or why not?

2) How can I get my towels and washcloths back in a face-saving manner for all concerned? I do not want to confront her.

Please don't mention my name or town. Sign me.

"M"

DEAR "M": I see no reason why your children shouldn't continue to play with her children. It's unfair to punish innocent children for the alleged "sins" of a parent.

There is no way you can get your towels and washcloths back without a confrontation. My advice is to forget it. But watch her carefully in the future.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 60-year-old woman who has been friends with a very nice gentleman my age for the past three years. I am quite sure he has a good income because he often goes on expensive cruises, drives a fine car and has a beautiful home.

He often asks me out for dinner, and the bill is never less than $30, but he never leaves more than a $1 tip! This is embarrassing to me as I am well-known in this restaurant in my small hometown.

How can I let him know that his tip is not enough? Thank you.

Dr. Lamb

Opinions vary on kidney stone treatment

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB - I am a 41-year-old male and have a history of kidney stones. I have passed many small ones, one-eighth inch in diameter or smaller, and have had two large ones removed by surgery. I read one of your columns about calcium oxalate stones, which I have. It suggested avoiding fruit juices, tea, beer, cola drinks, spinach and excessive vitamin C to decrease oxalate intake. You also state that limiting calcium-containing food is not a good preventive measure.

I discussed this with two urologists and the only agreement I got was with your recommendation to drink lots of water. What data backs up your advice concerning oxalates or is this just your opinion?

DEAR READER - It is not uncommon to find disagreement on controversial subjects in medicine. Many urologists believe that calcium should be restricted but other authorities disagree with this view.

But before we start it must be said that it depends on what is causing the stone - if you can determine that. Some are caused by a high blood calcium because of an overactive parathyroid gland that influences calcium metabolism. The cause for calcium oxalate stones in others cannot be determined.

No, the recommendation is not just my opinion. It is recommended in the latest edition of Cecil's Textbook of Medicine. Part of the recommendation is based on the fact that calcium is limited in its absorption from the digestive tract in normal people. If you consume more calcium, the excess won't be absorbed so it never gets to the kidney to form a stone. You will get more information on this in The Health Letter number 11-2, Kidney Stones. Treatment has changed, which I am sending you.

Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

In an individual case a decision on whether to restrict calcium or oxalate or both should be based on a careful study of three successive 24-hour samples of urine to determine just how much calcium is in the urine. If it is high then calcium might need to be restricted. If it is low then oxalate might be limited. Such tests help to limit the guess work.

And there is much more to the problem than just calcium. Milk, our best source of calcium, contains "conditioners" that make calcium compounds soluble helping to prevent stone formation.

DEAR DR. LAMB - I was reading a book and found that the character in the book used isometrics to increase his muscle size and density. I was wondering if you could tell me anything about isometrics and the different kinds.

DEAR READER - Hold your arm out in front of you. Now tense all the muscles in your arm so that your muscles are contracting against each other. As long as the opposing muscle groups are contracting against each other, without moving, that is an isometric exercise.

By contrast, an isotonic exercise involves moving the muscles through their normal range of contraction and relaxation.

By ERMA BOMBCEK

All the child psychology books I've ever read take you down the yellow brick road past puberty, serious petting, into mature relationships and leave you.

But parenting isn't like that. There are 30 million parents out there with kids between the ages of 18 - 55 who drift in and out of their lives like a revolving door.

The empty nest syndrome is overrated. I have heard of some parents who moved during the night to another city (and left no forwarding address). Others have installed pay showers. Still another parent I know waited until her son got up one night to use the bathroom, then painted his room pink and rented it to a pocket computer salesman.

No parent likes to change locks, but the situation is definitely getting out of hand. Children simply aren't leaving the home after school anymore as they did in the '60s. When they do, they multiply and come back tenfold.

So how do you displace an aging teenager? It isn't easy. When our son's bedroom began to take on the appeal of a roadside zoo (complete with sawdust on the floor), we took action.

First, we set the table for two. This made him aware that he was not expected for dinner.

Second, we intercepted his mail, wrote "No such person at this address" and had it returned to the post office for forwarding.

We posted signs in the hallway reading, "OCCUPANCY BY MORE THAN TWO IN THIS HOUSE IS A FIRE HAZARD."

We were considering telling him he would have to share his room with the family pet (and buying a wolf) when we came up with a daring but cruel idea. We stopped stocking the refrigerator.

I'll never forget the look of fear in that child's eyes standing in front of the refrigerator door (the hairs in his nose becoming frosted) saying, "Is that all there is?" if I live to be a hundred.

We never saw him again. You hear a lot of dialogue on the death of the American family. Families aren't

Deep-dish blueberry pie cooks 'clean

By CECILY BROWNSTONE Associated Press Food Editor COME FOR DESSERT Deep-Dish Blueberry Pie Beverage

DEEP-DISH BLUEBERRY PIE Made this way, in a roomy baking dish, there's no leakage during baking.

1 cup sugar
3 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1 1/2 teaspoons grated lemon rind
4 cups fresh blueberries
2 tablespoons butter
Butter Pastry, recipe follows
Vanilla ice cream

In a buttered 1 1/2-quart baking dish (about 10 by 6 by 2 inches) stir together the sugar, flour and lemon rind; add blueberries and toss well; dot with the butter. Roll out the Butter Pastry to an 11-by-8-inch rectangle and place over berries; with fork tines, press pastry about 1/2 inch up against sides of dish. Make four 2-inch long slashes, about an inch apart, in the center of the pastry. Bake in a preheated 400-degree oven until edges of pastry are golden - 30 minutes. Serve hot in wide dessert bowls because berries will be juicy; top with the ice cream. Makes 6 servings.

Butter Pastry: Into 1 cup all-purpose flour, with a pastry blender, cut 5 tablespoons butter until the size of small peas. With a fork, gradually stir in 1 1/2 to 2 tablespoons ice-cold water; press into a ball; cover, tightly and chill until butter pieces are firm.

Astro-Graph

by bernice bede osol

September 25, 1981

In the year following your birthday your financial prospects look especially good. However, be wary about entering into agreements with persons about whom you know little. Get references if you're in doubt.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Today could find you a bit down in the dumps because you may think you've been taken advantage of by a friend. It isn't likely you'll bring the issue out in the open. Romance, travel, luck, resources, possible pitfalls and career for the coming months are all discussed in your Astro-Graph which begins with your birthday. Mail $1 for each to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) If you're not as self-disciplined as you should be today, there is a good chance you'll whip out that stinging tail all scorpios possess if anyone rubs you the wrong way.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You're noted for being blunt from time to time, and today might prove to be a classic example. You may not mind words, even to be polite.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You might enter into a game of trying to match wits today. Just take care on whom you pick. If you select the wrong persons, you could come out on the short end.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Confusion might occur today because you may have a difficult time determining when you should be cooperative with associates and when you should be independent.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) For two reasons this may not be an unproductive day for you: 1) You won't be able to make up your mind what you want to do; 2) You might not follow through.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) It isn't likely friends can fill your needs today, either for emotional or pleasurable outlets. In fact, they might even add to your frustrations.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Avoid arguments at home today. You run the risk of saying things you'll later regret. Harsh words could inflict wounds that leave lasting scars.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) This could be one of your restless days. If depression sets in you could, uncharacteristically, become moody and difficult for others to contend with.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If you're not careful today, you could go on a spending spree. This could be especially possible if you are trying to lick some wounds by rewarding yourself materially.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) It's not like you to react emotionally, but today patience is not your long suit. If someone attacks your pride you won't let logic keep you from retaliating.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You could wake up on the wrong side of the bed today, and everything or everybody might irritate you. Get hold of yourself or you'll be labeled as a crab.

Braves topple Astros

HOUSTON (AP) — It wouldn't have been a big surprise if the Houston Astros had shut out the Atlanta Braves and pitcher Rick Mahler Wednesday night in the Astrodome.

After all, Mahler has been shut out four times in the Second Season alone, dampening what manager Bobby Cox terms the Braves' most pleasant surprise this season.

Mahler proved to be an unpleasant visitor in the Astrodome, handcuffing the Astros on three hits and rapping out a two-run double in the Braves' 3-1 win.

"He's pitched super for us," Cox said. "He pitched a great ballgame tonight, and did a fair piece of hitting, too. When his control's good and he can get ahead with his fastball looks quicker and he's hard to hit."

Only Astros second baseman Phil Garner was able to crack Mahler's mystery Wednesday. Garner singled in the first, but Mahler, 6-6, retaliated by setting down 15 consecutive batters.

"He tossed up a dandy, didn't he?" Garner said. "That happens every once in a while. Sometimes you put forth that good effort and you still don't come out on top."

Area grid roundup

Wheeler is off to a fast 2-0 start in the young football season, but head coach Preston Smith isn't about to put the Mustangs on a pedestal.

"We've got some tough teams ahead of us," said Smith, who coached Wheeler to the 1977 state football championship. "We've got McLean next. They're in a rebuilding year, but they've got a good, aggressive team."

Wheeler has defeated Stinnett, 7-0, and Booker, 28-18. "We were able to keep possession of the ball in those two games," Smith said. "Our defense has just been adequate though. We're not doing real good in that area."

Opponents have been unable to master senior running back Paul Bentley, who has rushed for over 400 yards in just two games.

"Paul is a north-south runner or the power-type," added Smith.

Junior quarterback Scott Wright keeps the Wheeler offense glued together.

"Scott has done a real good job of running the team," Smith said. "He hasn't thrown the ball much, but he knows how to move the team down the field."

Wheeler is the only area team without a loss.

McLean (1-1) dropped its season opener to Shamrock, 12-0, but bounced back to whip Silverton, 13-0.

Pampa Area Picks—Canadian 42, Hobart 7; Wheeler 27, McLean 7; Groom 13, Silverton 7; Lefors 27, Canadian freshmen 7.

District 3-5A Picks—Borger 24, Pampa 0; Lubbock Coronado 7, Tascosa 6; Austin E.P. 14, Palo Duro 0; Plainview 7, Amarillo High 0; Levelland 16, Caprock 6.

Overall Record—26-33, .788 percentage.

Pampa travels to Borger

Pampa visits Borger at 7:30 p.m. Friday night for a non-district clash with two longtime rivals.

Pampa is 0-3 and still looking for its first touchdown of the season. Borger, 2-1, is coming off a 35-7 trouncing by Hereford.

Advance tickets for the game are on sale today and Friday at the Athletic Business Office, 215 East Decatur.

Texas bows to Seattle

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Glen Abbott looks like a power pitcher. The Seattle righthander stands 6-foot-6, weighs 210 pounds and — judging from his size — should be able to throw a baseball through a brick wall.

But he cannot, and the fact that he doesn't try, makes him successful.

"Abbott has pitched well the entire second half," said Seattle Manager Rene Lachemann. "He has just been outstanding."

That remark came after Abbott, 4-7, beat the Texas Rangers 2-1 Wednesday night with ninth inning relief from Shane Rawley, and Abbott said he is successful because he thinks about what he is doing.

"There is a hitting zone, I think, when the ball is traveling between 82 mph and 84 mph," Abbott said. "If you check the radar gun, I think you'll find that most hitters are successful when the pitches are traveling about that speed."

"So, the secret of good pitching is to either throw the ball a lot faster than that — say 90 mph, like (Yankee pitcher) Goose Gossage — or throw it about 78 mph like I do."

"I know I can't blow it by the hitters with pure speed. If I throw it as hard as I can, it's still only going to travel about 84 mph and it won't be in the strike zone. So, I change speeds, work on my control and don't try to throw it hard."

Abbott's theory worked Wednesday night. He gave up one unearned run on three hits before he left the game with one out in the ninth inning. Rawley got the other two outs for his seventh save.

But Rawley's job was no snap. Bump Wills had singled to chase Abbott and Mickey Rivers had followed with another single. Al Oliver's ground out put Wills on third and Rivers on second, and the tension mounted when Lachemann ordered an intentional walk to the next batter, Buddy Bell.

Bases loaded, two out, bottom of the ninth, Seattle ahead by a run.

"That's what it's all about. That was exciting. You're a little nervous, your stomach is jumping — it's just you against the hitter. The whole game comes down to that one guy. One base hit and everything is lost," said Rawley.

Billy Sample grounded out to end the game and the loss dropped the Rangers four games below .500 and their dim playoff hopes faded even further.

"Our backs are against the wall," said Texas starter Rick Honeycutt, 10-6.

Seattle scored twice in the seventh. Paul Serna hit a solo homer and Dave Henderson followed with a single. He went to third on Terry Bulling's single and scored when Julio Cruz grounded into a double play.

Texas' only run scored in the fourth when Rivers reached first on Serna's error, took second on a single by Oliver and scored on Bell's sacrifice fly.

Pampa seventh and eighth grade volleyball teams were defeated by Borger earlier this week.

Pampa eighth grade fell, 7-15, 15-10 and 4-15. Renee Eakins was Pampa's top server with 10 serves.

Borger took the seventh-grade contest, 15-8 and 1-15. The next matches are Monday with Dumas, starting at 4 p.m. in the Middle School gym. Pampa will compete in the Borger Tournament Saturday.

Jeanette Doggett and Bonnie Grantham are the Pampa coaches.

Swedish women see themselves as far from equal

By ANNKA NILSSON
Associated Press Writer

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Two decades after Swedish women won equality under the law, a depressed economy and a society resistant to change are making reality less than the law.

"It is still harder to be a woman than a man in this country," said Lisa Mattson, president of the Federation of Social Democratic Women. "It is true that the situation in Sweden is improved, but it is still a long way before the situation is satisfactory."

A recent study indicates that sexual segregation in the labor market pushes women into lower-paying, less prestigious jobs, with only about 1 percent of managerial positions in the private sector filled by women.

Past surveys by the National Bureau of Statistics tend to back up the claim:

—In 1975, 50 percent of employed men worked in mining, manufacturing or construction. Less than 20 percent of female workers were in those industries. By contrast, 49 percent of working women performed public administration or other services — education, medical care and social welfare — sectors employing only 17 percent of the male workforce.

—Women dominated 70 occupations in 1977, men 300.

—In the private sector, the average male worker earns 22.6 percent more than the average woman.

Major demands by Swedish feminists have been for day-care facilities for all children and for six-hour work days to make it easier to combine a job with home duties. These remain overwhelmingly women's work, despite official efforts begun in the 1960s to encourage load-sharing in the home.

But solving Sweden's economic worries has top priority with most politicians, who say the country cannot afford costly social reforms or expanded anti-discrimination programs right now.

Nevertheless, there have been gains. A 1980 law bans sexual discrimination in hiring and promotion in public and private jobs and demands active efforts to promote equal opportunity in the workplace.

Equal opportunity ombudsman Inga-Britt Tornell, appointed to enforce the act, said it is too early to say whether the law will live up to its high expectations. Ms. Tornell has received 161 complaints about work discrimination or lack of active promotion of sexual equality, all but four of which have been settled by negotiation. The four contested cases are still pending in labor courts.

One complaint involved Bishop Bertil Gartner of the Swedish Lutheran Church in Goteborg, who refused to allow female ministers to practice in his diocese. The church ordains women but permits male clergy to refuse to work with female colleagues under a so-called "conscience clause."

Ms. Tornell told the bishop to draft an equal-opportunity plan.

She also received a complaint alleging that a male magazine reporter who did the same work as four female reporters was paid $200 a month more than the women.

Economist Christina Jonung said such cases are rare.

"In Sweden, women are not discriminated against by getting lower salaries than men on the same jobs, but by not being given access to the same jobs," she said.

Even the government occasionally runs afoul of Ms. Tornell's office. In one case, a government post was advertised and women were encouraged to apply, but Ms. Tornell discovered the job was set aside for a man already holding a temporary appointment.

Such complaints ideally should come from labor unions, Ms. Tornell said, adding, however, that she fears that nothing much can be expected from them until the "middle-aged men who do not care about equality are gone."

A female trade union official retorted that the unions do try to promote equality and said: "We simply have not found any cases of discrimination."

The official, Aina Westin of LO, the Swedish Trade Union Confederation, said, "Extensive work for equality is going on.... Pamphlets, study material, local programs have been worked out. Discussion programs and conferences have been started.

"The results will show in the long run. It takes time to convince men that they, too, stand to gain from equality."

LO has no female directors, although more than one-third of its 2 million members are women.

Birgitta Wistrand, president of a women's rights organization called the Fredrika Bremer Association, complained that one reason for discrimination is that the Swedish public simply doesn't care.

Sexual discrimination "is taken very lightly," she said, and penalties for violations — Ms. Tornell has been seeking damages of about $4,000 in each case — are much too small for effect.

"Today it is almost inconceivable that someone would stand up and talk against equality," she writes in her soon-to-be-published book, "Swedish Women on the Move." Yet, she said in an interview, "The awareness is very much on the surface and very fragile."

Towns to be moved to reach oil

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — If a town has oil under it, move the town.

That's the principle behind a massive project to shift a string of towns sitting on an oil field on the eastern shore of Venezuela's Lake Maracaibo.

Bachaquero, Lagunillas, Tia Juana, Ciudad Ojeda and Mene Grande sprouted along the lake some 50 years ago when foreign concessionaires were operating at a peak and it seemed the oil would gush forever.

It didn't matter back then whether a town was built on a potential oil field, said Antonio Casas Gonzalez, a director of the national oil conglomerate Petroleos de Venezuela who is heading the project to "reorder" the lake's eastern coast.

Casas estimates the production potential for the now-populated region is roughly equivalent to what has been produced in the coastal area in the last 40 years — at the rate of 600,000 to 900,000 barrels a day. That means 8.5 billion to 12.5 billion barrels of crudes ranging from heavy to high-quality super-light.

Not only are the deposits rich, but the towns sitting on them tend to be poor, Casas said. They grew rapidly and haphazardly outside fenced-in oil camps as people flocked to the area looking for jobs. Makeshift wooden shacks and brick box-houses sprang up and many stayed there.

Because there was no urban planning, transportation, schools and other services are deficient, Casas said. The sky in the area is often heavy and gray with pollution, and where other towns have parks, these are likely to have barren

Gays to hold beauty pageant

DALLAS (AP) — The 10th annual Miss Gay America Pageant, a beauty contest for male homosexuals who wear women's clothing, will draw gays from all over the country, the show's producer said Wednesday.

It also is drawing protests, mainly from the Third Congressional District Conservative Caucus which will have a prayer vigil to ask for "divine intervention to spare our city."

black patches.

The keystone of the moving plan, which is being coordinated jointly by the government, the municipalities involved and Petroleos, is the construction of an entirely new, model city, to be called El Menito. Petroleos de Venezuela will move its regional offices to the site to lure its employees away from existing towns.

El Menito will grow slowly, Casas said — he estimates its population will be 40,000 by the year 2000 — and will be carefully designed to avoid problems such as pollution and insufficient services.

Casas admitted such a large-scale project would encounter obstacles but said he thought it would work because the oil company is working closely with the town leaders on every step and because to people living in depressed areas a move would mean an improvement in quality of life.

No town has been earmarked for extinction, he said, but the goal is to shift the "human settlements" so more oil reserves will be available.

Petroleos de Venezuela has an initial five-year budget of $116 million for planning El Menito.
