Unemployed find place for thanks

By BETSY BROWN KRAFT
Associated Press Writer

The newly unemployed helped swell lines for free meals as charities handed out Thanksgiving dinners in record numbers, while more fortunate Americans celebrated with traditional turkey, parades and football.

Some people hurt by the recession said they got their first hearty meal in weeks by going to missions, churches and restaurants that shared their donations, or good fortune, on Thanksgiving day.

"We're here because we're hungry," said Leonard Darling, balancing pie on his lap as he sat on a bleacher at the Oklahoma City Salvation Army beside his wife. Nearby, an oilfield worker waiting in line said he hadn't eaten a good meal since losing his job in September.

"We've noticed a lot more families," said Maj. Neil Saunders of the Salvation Army Hospitality House in Tucson, Ariz., which served 1,200 meals, compared with 870 last year. "Those who were our givers are now our receivers."

Many spent the day the traditional way — behind a stove at home or watching parades or football.

The Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade drew thousands to the streets of New York City and millions to their television sets. The parade's sky-high gas balloons had two new additions — Woody Woodpecker and 75-foot-tall Olive Oyl — and one casualty: Bullwinkle's nose leaked and he had to quit early.

In Philadelphia, 350,000 people watched marching bands and floats that celebrated both Thanksgiving and the city's 300th birthday.

Pro football fans gave thanks that the players' strike was over and watched the New York Giants beat Detroit 13-6 and the Dallas Cowboys defeat Cleveland 31-14.

In Plymouth, Mass., marchers re-created a processional to a church by the Pilgrims, whose 1621 harvest celebration began the holiday.

Millions took to the roads to visit family and friends. By early today, 75 people had died in traffic accidents nationwide.

In Boston, a gay bar called Buddies served free Thanksgiving Day meals to 200 senior citizens, and in Denver, almost 13,000 people flocked to "Daddy Bruce's" barbecue parlor for turkey, ribs and baked beans.

A thousand people converged on the St. Vincent De Paul Society in Phoenix, Ariz., for traditional fare while 300 got free turkey sandwiches at a sandwich shop. In Tulsa, Okla., the Salvation Army fed 725 people, twice last year's number.

"The middle-class families moving down here from the North have made a substantial increase," said Salvation Army Maj. J.E. Tolan in Oklahoma City. "They are lured by the unemployment rate...until they get down here."

People lining up for two blocks outside St. Anthony's Dining Room in San Francisco were entertained by clowns and musicians as they waited for more than two hours to eat.

More than 5,000 people were served, compared with 4,500 to 5,000 in the past, said Father Floyd Lotito, director of the agency.

"They're coming away deeply angry with the (Reagan) administration," he said. "They're struggling; there are no jobs, their benefits have been cut."

"I heard there was plenty of work here," Roy Miller said ruefully as he waited in line. He had been laid off in July from a trucking company in Nashville, Tenn.

In Peoria, Ill., the Salvation Army provided free dinners for the first time in recent years.

In Cleveland, an "overflowing crowd" at the Volunteers of America building triggered an early start. When the noon starting time rolled around, 291 dinners already had been served. In all, about 700 were served, 100 more than last year.

"It's been years since I've seen anything like this," said the Rev. William Bonner, pastor of Solomon's Temple Church in Detroit, where people lined up for blocks as 12,000 boxes of food were given away.

In Los Angeles, the American Soul Clinic Mission cordoned off four city blocks to set up tables that fed 5,000 people, up from 4,500 last year.

Reagan's economic proposals draw opposition

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan is drawing political fire for a plan under study to tax unemployment insurance benefits of jobless workers and reduce the minimum wage for youth hired in summer jobs.

White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes confirmed Thursday that the two proposals were among eight options developed for Reagan by his Cabinet Council on Economic Affairs to attack the problem of chronic unemployment.

Although Speakes said Reagan had not discussed the ideas with his economic advisers and would take no action on them until next year, the proposals came under immediate attack from organized labor and a ranking congressional Democrat.

In Washington, Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, declared: "I don't think Mr. Reagan has thought that one through," or he would have rejected the proposals out of hand. "People on unemployment aren't goldbricks or loafers. They're usually people who are down on their luck, through no fault of their own," said Reussv

"I wouldn't mind considering some change in the current exemption on taxation. But it would be unconscionable to, in effect, reduce unemployment compensation for the poor by taxing it," Reuss added. Earlier Thursday, his panel predicted that November's unemployment rate might rise a notch to 10.5 percent.

The proposals will not be ready for the lame-duck session of Congress that convenes Monday but will be carried over to early next year, Speakes said.

Rex Hardesty, a spokesman for the 15 million-member AFL-CIO, said, "We hope President Reagan would not support anything so callous as to tax people who did not cause unemployment and are not to blame for their plight."

Hardesty also said the labor federation would resist decreasing the minimum wage for youths.

"It makes no sense to discriminate against one class of people, whether you do it because of their race, their religion or their age," he said.

Murray Seeger, director of information for the AFL-CIO, said today that "employers need no more financial subsidies on top of last year's failed dose of Reaganomic giveaways. ... To attempt to raise more revenue from the ranks of the unemployed is to punish twice the chief victims of Reaganomics."

"This, of course, is an outrageous suggestion," said Studs Terkel, the author who has chronicled the lives of American working men and women for a half-century. He told ABC News in Chicago, "I can't say what I really think of it without being cut off the air."

The unemployment package is separate from a series of steps Reagan will propose to Congress next week to stimulate the economy.

Currently, unemployment insurance benefits are exempt from taxation unless the recipient's family income is $18,000 or more. The threshold for a single person is $12,000.

Latin American nations welcome 'renewed' U.S. interest

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — President Reagan's trip to four Latin American nations next week is welcomed by the leaders of the chosen few as a chance to present him with pictures of their economies, which show more red than black.

U.S. presidents have rarely ventured to Latin America, leading to criticism that the United States gives the area lower priorities.

This feeling among Latin America was reinforced earlier this year when the United States supported Britain in its Falkland Islands war.

But the shock is wearing off now and Reagan's five-day trip beginning Tuesday has been hailed by the countries he will visit — Brazil and Colombia in South America and Costa Rica and Honduras in Central America.

Reagan will meet the heads of those countries and confer with leaders of two other Central American nations — President Alvaro Magana of war-torn El Salvador and Guatemalan military junta leader Gen. Efrain Rios Montt.

Here is a country-by-country rundown in the order Reagan will visit them:

BRAZIL

Latin America's largest nation is staggering under a foreign debt of nearly $70 billion, lagging just behind financially strapped Mexico. Brazil has been sinking billions into energy projects to cut dependence on imported oil. Although it has been struggling to make its payments and inflation approaches 100 percent, the United States has expressed confidence that Brazil will work out of its economic straitjacket when the world situation eases.

COLOMBIA

Leaders here have said Reagan's visit could result in a renewed U.S. interest in and a better understanding of Latin America and its problems.

Foreign Minister Rodrigo Lloredo Qaicedo of Colombia has said he hopes Reagan's talks "will permit him to identify very clearly the economic, social and political problems affecting our countries."

COSTA RICA

Long considered a Central American showcase for democracy, this tiny nation of 2.2 million people is looking to the United States to help it through its worst economic crisis ever. Many of the problems stem from the plunge in world coffee prices and high oil costs.

Reagan will meet with President Luis Alberto Monge, a pro-American who took office last May.

HONDURAS

Leaders here have complained about problems with Nicaragua on its southern border. In 1979, Marxist-oriented Sandinista guerrillas overthrew the government of the late President Anastasio Somoza.

Honduras and Nicaragua frequently exchange gunfire across their borders. Nicaragua claims anti-Sandinista exiles conduct raids into Nicaragua from camps in Honduras.

New Japanese prime minister elected

Yasuhiro Nakasone

TOKYO (AP) — Conservative Yasuhiro Nakasone was elected prime minister today by the Japanese parliament and immediately began forming a Cabinet while newspaper editorials questioned the "political ethics" of his leadership.

Nakasone's election was assured by the majority held in the Diet (parliament) by his ruling Liberal Democratic Party.

In the Lower House, where the LDP holds 287 of 505 active seats, Nakasone received 287 votes, against 102 for Ichio Asukata, chairman of the top opposition Japan Socialist Party. Later in the day Nakasone outpolled Asukata 130 to 50 in the Upper House where the LDP holds 134 of 246 seats.

The other votes were divided among four smaller parties.

The LDP, a conservative coalition of factions in power since 1955, chose Nakasone as its president after his convincing win Thursday over three rivals in primary election voting by the party's 1 million rank and file members.

He succeeds outgoing Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, 71, who announced he was stepping down after two years in office on Oct. 12.

Nakasone and his 20-member Cabinet will be formally inaugurated tonight by 81-year-old Emperor Hirohito if the selection of ministers goes smoothly. The emperor, a powerless symbol of state, has been directed by the constitution to appoint the prime minister chosen by the Diet since the end of World War II.

The Japanese press reported that the foreign minister post would go to Shintaro Abe, who as International Trade and Industry minister under Suzuki was a chief spokesman for Japan's controversial trade policies.

Nakasone retained Susumu Nikaido, a deputy in the largest LDP faction led by former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, in the powerful party post of secretary general. Several other Tanaka followers also were expected to receive key Cabinet posts.

Nakasone's opponents in the party race criticized his ties to Tanaka, who was tried on charges of accepting $2 million in bribes to promote the sale of Lockheed aircraft in the early 1970s. The trial is expected to conclude next year.

Nakasone, whose faction ranks fourth in size, was dependent on Tanaka for his victory.

"It is likely that under Mr. Nakasone, who came into power on the basis of support from Tanaka and other party faction leaders, political ethics will further run counter (to democracy). That puts us on our guard," said the mass-circulation Asahi Shimbun daily in an editorial.

The Mainichi Shimbun urged Nakasone to "demonstrate in practice his claim that he is not controlled by former Prime Minister Tanaka and others."

Pope zapped 10 days to make farmers happy

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Seeing next year's calendars on sale in a downtown bookstore reminds us that 400 years have gone by since Pope Gregory XIII gave the world, or most of it, a 10-day vacation from itself.

From Oct. 4, to Oct. 15, 1582, there were no wars, no strikes, no floods, fires or earthquakes. No kings were crowned, no armies marched, no governments fell. No ships were wrecked, no taxes collected, no crimes committed, not even a titillating palace scandal to satisfy the cravings of the new breed called journalists, whose art or scourge was just being launched among lay-abouts in the taverns and coffee houses. And everyone had an alibi for not sending out Christmas cards on time.

Those might have been the 10 happiest days in the history of the world: too bad they never existed. They just fell from the calendar all in a bunch, as if Rip Van Winkle had been caught catnapping ahead of his time.

By papal fiat, Gregory XIII advanced eternity's clock 10 days, declaring Oct. 5 to be Oct. 15 and wiping out the days in between in order to bring the old Julian calendar, which had ruled the civilized world since 46 B.C., into sync with the solar system.

He thus blew the whistle for history's longest official time out.

Come to think of it, 46 B.C. also was quite a year, the longest on record. In order to correct earlier time-keeping efforts, Julius Caesar had launched his calendar by extending the year 46 B.C. to 445 days. This should have given everyone plenty of time for Christmas shopping, except Christ wasn't born yet.

ANYHOW BY THE time Gregory came along 16 centuries later, the old Julian calendar had been losing 11 minutes and 14 seconds a year and farmers were complaining that the spring equinox fell 10 days earlier than sun time, which put the cows or something off their feed.

So the pope called in his astronomer, a Jesuit named Christopher Clavius, and the decision was made to drop 10 days, zap, just like that.

Renaissance popes carried about St. Peter's Square on a chair seem to have had more clout than modern jet setters occupying the apostolic palace, despite the primitive global communications. Catholic nations adopted the Gregorian calendar almost immediately, but various German states timed their affairs with the old Julian calendar until 1700. England, having broken with Rome, didn't keep papal time until 1752. Russia had to wait for godless communism to come along before adopting Gregory's time-keeping system in 1918, and Turkey stalled around until 1928 to update its calendar.

In any case, October of 1582 must have been a strange time to be alive — or even dead.

The great Spansh mystic Teresa of Avila died at 9 p.m. on Oct. 4, just three hours before the world jumped ahead 10 days, making her wake one of the longest in history, even though she was buried next morning. I always think she would have enjoyed the irony of this, since time and seasons never intruded on her vision of eternity. During Lent one year, a local hunter called at her convent with a gift of some partridges, which she ordered cooked up right away.

"But, sister," a young novice protested, "how can we? It's Lent."

"LENT IS Lent and partridges are partridges," Teresa replied, wiping that penitential day from the calendar.

Because Gregory's calendar did not receive instant international recognition, school book history was dealt some blows from which it still has not recovered. Thus, Shakespeare and Cervantes really did not die on the same day, April 23, 1616, as is widely proclaimed from college lecterns, because Spain working off the Gregorian calendar was 10 days ahead and the Bard of Avon died under the old system. Suffering similar British perversity in matters temporal, George Washington was really born on Feb. 11, 1732, although we celebrate his "birth date" on Feb. 22. Because the Russians were so late hanging up the right calendar, the Great October Revolution observes its holy day on Nov. 7, out of deference to a long dead pope.

Even before Norman Rockwell and Playboy models began jazzing up the scroll of time, calendars fascinated me. My favorite, outside the "Shorttimers Calendar" on which grunts in Vietnam struck off the days left in their one-year hitch, was devised by the early Romans, who apparently didn't like winter any more than the rest of us. Their pre-Julian calendar had only 10 months and a year of 304 days. Their months were Martius, Aprilis, Maius, Junius, Quintilis, Sextilis, September, October, November and December, the last six corresponding with the Latin words for five through 10. Grim January and February didn't even exist until a down-at-the-heels emperor added two extra months to collect more taxes and to allow him to stay in office longer.

Julius Caesar, when he revised the Roman calendar 700 years later, got July named for himself, in addition to moving the start of the year from March 1 to January 1, also for tax purposes. Not to be outdone, the Emperor Augustus took the next month, Sextilis, and renamed it August, in his own honor, then borrowed a day from February to make it 31 days or just as long as Big Julie's personal month.

Only real calendar buffs know that the year 2000 will be the first century-beginning year to be a leap year, offering a February of 29 days, in four centuries of century years. To keep his calendar on tight solar time, Gregory decreed that February in century years would only have an extra day in years divisible by 400 — thus 1700, 1800 and 1900 had no extra inducement for lovers.

Calendar reformers are still plugging for a 13-month year to eliminate leap years and provide for months of exactly four weeks. That's OK by me. I get paid by the month and could use the extra money.

Doo Dah Parade irreverent spoof on annual Rose Parade

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The Doo Dah Parade has no theme, no judging, no prizes and no marching order.

But that won't stop the unorganized and irreverent spoof on the Rose Parade from somehow moving down Colorado Boulevard in its offbeat fashion Sunday.

Although the parade continues to be billed as "occasional," it will be celebrating its sixth year.

It was first held on Jan. 1, 1978, when the Tournament of Roses bumped its parade to Jan. 2 because New Year's fell on a Sunday that year.

The one organized event is the selection of the Doo Dah Queen. Even that isn't nearly as exacting as choosing the Rose Queen. Susan Wilson got the Doo Dah crown in 1979 because she asked for it.

The current monarch is 65-year-old Hazel Guinn, former owner of the now defunct Hazel's Bar. Snotty Scotty and his Hankies, a Pasadena bar band, were named grand marshal.

Unlike the elegantly designed floats that grace the Rose Parade, past entries in the Doo Dah Parade have included a synchronized briefcase drill team, a gay marching band and a precision crutch-walking unit.

Parade organizer Peter Apanel estimated that 50,000 people attended last year and 75,000 are expected this year.

The figures sounded "a little high" to Pasadena police spokesman Alex Uribe, who said about 25,000 came last year and about 30,000 are expected Sunday.

"But it's a heck of a parade anyway," he said.

Certain apple varieties threatened by fickle American palate

VOORHEESVILLE, N.Y. (AP) — The Sheep's Nose. The Chenango Strawberry. The Spitzenburg. These and other old-time apple favorites have almost disappeared under the pressures of the marketplace and the enthusiasm of genetic engineering.

But many are being saved from extinction by fruit scientists in remote upstate New York, the heart of apple country.

The demise of certain apple varieties is due at least in part to the fickle American palate.

Peter Ten Eyck II, who grows apples in this rural hamlet and hangs onto some antique apples as curiosities, describes their taste as "somewhere between upper ugly and lower homely."

Today, the big sellers are the Red Delicious and the tangy McIntosh, and someday even they may get a similar taste description. Already growers are getting excited about the new Empire apple, the cross between the McIntosh and Delicious that some call the "apple of the future."

This is expected to be a big year for apples around the nation. But while Americans will have more apples to pick, the number of varieties to pick from is dwindling.

Of the 8.5 billion pounds of apples expected for harvest nationwide, this year's crop will contain more Delicious, McIntosh and Empire apples, and fewer Baldwins and Northern Spies.

Consumer preference for a limited number of varieties and such advances as better refrigeration and giant supermarket chains threaten many apple varieties.

At the New York Agricultural Experiment Station in Geneva, where the Empire was developed, 1,000 varieties, some of them almost forgotten, are kept from extinction.

Roger Way, a pomologist at the station, explains that such types as the 600-year-old French Api are kept alive for more than sentimental reasons.

"We're maintaining these because some have specific flavors or resistance to diseases or insects," said Way. "We can use them as parental material in future breeding and variety development — we can incorporate those good characteristics with other varieties."

The Api, for example, known in this country as the Lady, has a good flavor, Way said. The tiny fruit, only about 1½ inches in diameter, is grown by just a few New York farmers who sell them mostly for Christmas tree ornaments.

New York state, home to some 100 types of apples, currently has only about 11 varieties with significant commercial value, according to Paul Bascom, a statistician with the New York Crop Reporting Service.

"Fifty years ago the Baldwin was the most important variety grown here in New York state," Way said. A severe frost in 1934 killed many of the tender buds and by 1980, no new plantings of the Baldwin were recorded by the reporting service.

The Northern Spy similarly fell from favor because the tree takes up to 14 years to bear fruit, and then does so only every second year, Way said. The Golden Delicious, which has soared in popularity over the last few years, gives fruit after only three to four years.

Growers must also consider the whims of the marketplace to stay on top.

"Big chain store buyers prefer a large volume of fewer varieties with uniform quality," Way said.

Some growers, however, are nostalgic for apples of the past.

Ten Eyck said people still seek out his older apple varieties, some of which date back to the American Revolution.

"People into the nostalgia of history buy these apples," he said.

"Several of the old apple varieties evolved because annual bearing — a crop every year — was important. And they had to have tremendous keeping ability because there was no refrigeration," Ten Eyck said.

"But what is acceptable quality now is different than what was acceptable quality then," he added.

A bite into one of Ten Eyck's Black Gilliflowers, a member of the Sheep's Nose family, reveals a bland fruit, mealy in texture, with a coarse exterior. The most remarkable thing about the antique apple is its elongated shape, making it resemble a sheep's nose when turned sideways.

The federal government has taken an interest in the project started by the foresighted scientists at Geneva.

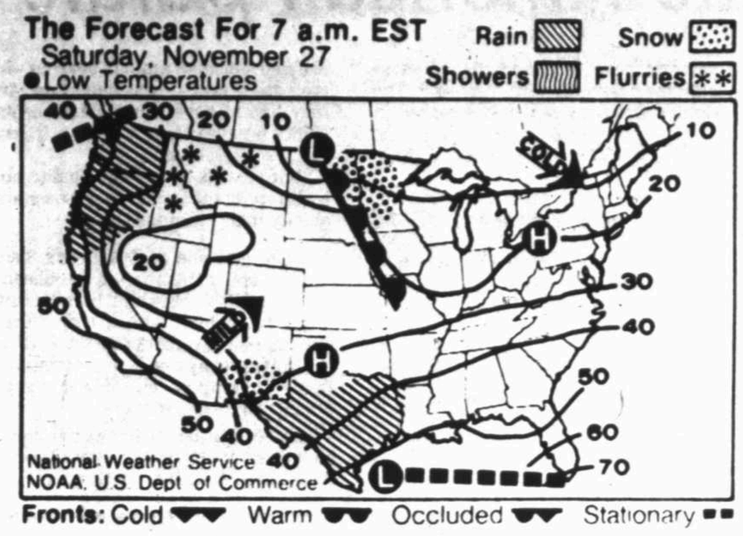
WEATHER SUMMARY



AP Laserphoto Map

Rain is forecast through Saturday for parts of Texas, Louisiana, Missouri and the Pacific Northwest, according to the National Weather Service. Snow flurries are expected in part of Idaho and Montana, with snow predicted for parts of Minnesota, the Dakotas and New Mexico.

Chilly, drizzly weekend weather due

Midlanders would be advised to bundle up this weekend, since the area should experience a bout of perfect cold and flu weather — drizzly skies and chilly temperatures.

According to the National Weather Service, tonight should be cloudy with an 80 percent chance of rain possibly mixed with snow. The low tonight should drop to near 30 with winds northeasterly at 5-10 mph. Saturday should be cloudy with an 80 percent chance of precipitation. Saturday's high should ease into the upper 30s with northeasterly winds at 5-10 mph. The outlook for the remainder of Thanksgiving weekend calls for cloudy skies, warmer temperatures and a continued chance of rain.

Thursday's high of 36 matched the 36 degree overnight low. The record high for Thursday was 85 set in 1965. The chilliest Nov. 25 was in 1938, when the mercury dipped to 18 degrees.

Thanksgiving Day precipitation, which totaled 0.12 of an inch, pushed the monthly accumulation to 0.17 of an inch and the yearly sum to 12.80 inches.

Drizzle continued in Midland this morning, as it did in Andrews, Lamesa, Big Spring, Crane and a host of surrounding communities.

Sunset tonight is at 5:45 p.m.; sunrise Saturday is at 7:28.

Downed powerlines drape a house on the Hawaiian Island of Oahu in the wake of Hurricane Iwa's Tuesday night sweep through the area.

Submarine may provide island's power

HONOLULU (AP) — The Navy's nuclear-powered attack submarine Indianapolis stood by at Pearl Harbor today, awaiting a decision on whether it might be used to supply power to hurricane-ravaged Kauai Island.

"This is all very iffy right now. We really don't want to get anyone's hopes up and then not be able to come through," said Lt. Cmdr. Terrence A. Forrester, U.S. Pacific Fleet spokesman. A decision might be made today, he said.

The western Hawaiian island has been without power since Tuesday, when Hurricane Iwa struck with winds up to 110 mph. The lack of electricity also meant water pumps haven't worked. Six portable generators were flown to the island Thursday night to provide power for some of the 39,000 residents.

Residents of Kauai and Oahu continued their cleanup Thursday, many taking time out for a Thanksgiving meal cooked over charcoal fires or portable gas stoves, some using food in danger of spoiling without refrigeration.

Parts of Oahu, the state's most populous island, were also without water. Tanker trucks were used to replenish supplies as officials asked citizens to conserve.

If the submarine is used, it would be moored in Nawiliwili Harbor with transmission lines going ashore to be plugged into the Kauai Electric Co. grid, Forrester said.

"But there are any number of things that have to be resolved, such as: Where do we plug in? Can they use the power we send them? Can we change our electrical power into something they can use? And we also have to answer safety questions," Forrester said.

A team of divers has gone to the island to survey the harbor to see if the sub could make it in safely. More than a dozen boats sank in the harbor during the storm.

Kauai Civil Defense Director Cayetano "Sonny" Gerardo said he and Navy officials met Thursday to discuss the possibility that the Navy might be able to provide a ship to help Kauai.

"The Civil Defense people said they needed a ship that could generate 1,500 kilowatts of power and we looked around and found the Indianapolis was about the only one around that could," Forrester said.

Gerardo said using the Navy sub may not solve Kauai's electrical needs because much of the problem involved downed transmission lines throughout the islands. However, he said the sub could provide service to some areas.

Civil defense officials on Oahu and Kauai estimate the total damages to public and private property by the hurricane's winds and high surf at more than $160 million. Several resorts on Kauai were destroyed and debris — including thousands of coconuts — littered the ground.

Rummage item was 'jewel' of a find

By MILES BELLER

LOS ANGELES — When Janice Snowden sold an old jogging suit for $2, the fact that she'd stashed $10,000 worth of jewelry in a pocket of the suit simply slipped her mind.

The story might have ended on that unhappy note. But luckily for Snowden, the buyer of the running suit didn't think the jewelry was part of the bargain, and returned the valuables to the rightful owner.

Snowden had forgotten she placed a wedding ring, three other diamond rings and a pendant in a jogging suit that she sold at a garage sale two weeks ago. But the woman who bought the suit, Dottie Zuvela, found the jewelry in a pocket of the running suit Monday morning and returned the jewelry that night.

"I was in the shower washing the dog, the phone rang and I ran out nude and wet," said Zuvela, recalling the historic moment she happened upon the hidden jewelry.

Chilled by the air, Zuvela reached into a nearby closet for something to wear.

Throwing on the jogging suit, she felt something in one of the pockets, and unzipped the pocket. There, in a little leather pouch, was a small fortune in jewelry.

"'Bernie,' I yelled" — Bernie is Zuvela's husband — "Bernie, I found the jewelry."

Having not the slightest inkling of the importance of the find, Bernie remained calm in the face of this startling discovery.

His wife had known about the jewels, having heard a TV newsman mention something about them last week.

However, she said she never made the connection between the missing goods and her recently acquired jogging suit, since the television reporter had said the jewelry was in an old coat.

Did Zuvela entertain the notion of, well, holding onto the jewelry for just a bit?

"Never!" she said. "I have jewelry like that and know what it would be to lose it."

After tracking down Bob Snowden, Janice Snowden's spouse, Zuvela and Snowden devised a plan that would reunite Janice with her jewelry, but in a startling way.

Zuvela and her husband drove over to the Snowden house Monday night.

Snowden called to his wife.

As she stepped into the living room Zuvela handed her a brown grocery bag.

"I bought something at your garage sale," she said, "It was defective merchandise, so I'm returning it."

Inside was the jewelry.

Once Janice Snowden regained her composure, the Snowdens took the Zuvelas out to dinner.

The jewelry's return was quite an emotional experience for his wife, Bob Snowden said.

Recalling the moment Janice first realized she had left the jewelry in the jogging suit, Snowden said his wife was "shaking and trembling...crying uncontrollably. It took me a couple of minutes to figure out what had happened."

Yet, somehow, they both believed that the jewelry would be returned. In an effort to recover the valuables, ads were placed in local papers, signs posted around the neighborhood and photos handed out to jewelry stores and pawn shops.

"My wife has a jewelry box but she kept the rings and pendant in the jogging suit, thinking that if we were robbed they wouldn't get the stuff," said Snowden, explaining why priceless jewelry had been housed in a running oufit.

However, he added that his wife now stores the the returned rings and pendant in a more conventional place — a safe deposit box.

As for the jogging suit, Dottie Zuvela still is hanging on to that.

"Of course I have it," she said, "After all, I paid for it."

Rebels likely operate out of Honduras

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Armed forces chief Gen. Gustavo Alvarez Martinez says Nicaraguan counter-revolutionary bands probably operate from Honduran territory but don't have his government's support.

"It's very difficult to control yard by yard," he said of the rugged 740-mile border between the two Central American nations. "Yes, it's probable that there could be bands."

Speaking to foreign reporters Thursday in his office at military headquarters, Alvarez Martinez denied persistent Nicaraguan charges that the Honduran armed forces support the rebel bands and openly tolerate their camps here.

"There are no camps. Nor is there support," the general said.

Alvarez Martinez, considered the country's most powerful figure, said the leftist Sandinistas ruling Nicaragua since the July 1979 revolution "are enemies of my country ... Nicaragua is the base of subversion in Central America."

He recalled how Sandinista bands operated from hidden bases in Honduras during their successful fight to oust the late Nicaraguan strongman Anastasio Somoza.

Alvarez Martinez accused Nicaragua of training Hondurans to be guerrillas here and claimed the Sandinista army has violated Honduran territory 60 times this year.

The Nicaraguan government says recent border raids by Honduran-based exiles have caused an average of five deaths daily in Nicaragua. The Sandinistas accuse the United States of aiding the rightist rebels.

In Managua, military sources said Nicaraguan air force planes flew missions along the Honduran border and there were reports of heavy fighting Thursday between government troops and rightist insurgents crossing the border.

The military sources, who requested anonymity for security reasons, said at least two Nicaraguans were killed in the fighting near Jalapa, 190 miles north of Managua and five miles from the border. They had no immediate details.

"It is possible that 600 counter-revolutionaries entered Nicaragua from Honduras," one source said.

The reports could not be independently confirmed.

Alvarez Martinez said he would have to double or triple the number of troops stationed along the border to patrol it effectively.

The Honduran army has deployed four battalions along the border, a bit more than normal, because of the threat posed by Nicaragua, which has 24 battalions on its side of the frontier, he said.

Alvarez Martinez denied published reports that the Reagan administration is spearheading a covert operation based in Honduras aimed at destabilizing the Nicaraguan government.

"If the United States is doing something, I don't know about it," he said.

At least 12 dead, 15 hurt in Beirut blast

By The Associated Press

French, Italian and Lebanese troopers recovered 12 bodies from the rubble of a Beirut apartment building devastated by a blast that also left 15 people seriously injured, including a woman and her six children, police said today.

Police said the explosion late Thursday in the low-income Moslem neighborhood of Chiyah was caused by a 66-pound dynamite charge detonated by remote control. Officials said they had no clues on who was responsible.

In Cairo, authoritative Arab sources said a high-ranking Palestine Liberation Organization official arrived in the Egyptian capital Thursday and met with Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly.

The sources identified the envoy as Abu-Zaim, the code name for Atallah Mohammed Atallah, director of PLO military intelligence and overseer of about 8,000 Palestinian guerrillas dispersed in Arab countries following their evacuation from Beirut in late August and September.

Abu-Zaim's meetings with Egyptian officials would include talks on ways of opening a dialogue between the Palestinians and the United States on the future of the Palestinians, the sources said.

PLO chairman Yasser Arafat had to defend himself from strong criticism from hard-line Palestinian factions Thursday at a meeting of the PLO Central Council in Damascus, Syria, conference sources said.

Arafat was criticized because of his approaches to Egypt and Jordan, two countries that many Palestinian leaders perceive as traitors because of their moderate positions, officials at the conference said.

Arafat is likely to ask the 55-man council to give him a vote of confidence to pursue his diplomatic initiatives, the officials said.

In Tel Aviv, meanwhile, a poll published today by The Jerusalem Post showed that Israeli public opinion has hardened against President Reagan's Middle East peace plan.

Forty-eight percent of 1,255 Israelis interviewed rejected the plan in late October, compared with 38.6 percent a month before, the Modi'in Ezrahi Research Company said.

Reagan's plan calls for full autonomy for the Palestinians under Jordanian supervision, a freeze on Jewish settlements in the occupied areas and negotiations on the future of Jerusalem.

Police said units of the French and Italian contingents serving in Beirut's multinational peacekeeping force cordoned off the scene of the blast until the early hours of today. U.S. Marines of the 4,000-strong international force were not involved in the operation, police said.

Lebanese officials said U.S. envoys Philip C. Habib and Morris Draper were to report to the Lebanese government in the next 48 hours on the responses they received from Syria and Israel on a proposal for a partial and simultaneous withdrawal from Lebanon.

Habib is proposing a nine-mile pullback of Israeli and Syrian troops in Lebanon's central mountains by the end of the year as a first step toward a total and simultaneous withdrawal in a next stage, the officials said.

Habib was to meet today in Amman with King Hussein of Jordan to discuss progress of U.S. efforts to get withdrawal talks between Lebanon and Israel started, the official Jordanian news agency Petra said.

The PLO's official news agency Wafa said in a report distributed by its head office in Nicosia, Cyprus, that the Lebanese National Resistance Front was responsible for two attacks on Israeli patrols in Lebanon's southern port cities of Sidon and Tyre Wednesday and Thursday. The agency did not elaborate.

The Israeli military press center in Baabda, near Beirut, said no one was hurt in the Sidon gunfire attack on an Israeli border patrol Wednesday, and that it had no information on Lebanon's state radio report of an alleged one-hour shootout between an Israeli patrol and unknown assailants near Tyre on Thursday.

Israeli troops invaded Lebanon June 6 to force out the PLO, and are stationed in the central and southern parts of the country. The Syrians, who entered Lebanon on an Arab League peacekeeping mandate following Lebanon's 1975-75 civil war, are based in northern and eastern Lebanon.

Egyptian officials who asked not to be identified said Abu-Zaim's visit to Cairo was aimed at being briefed on the talks between Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and visiting President Francois Mitterrand of France, as well as to discuss how the PLO can enter into a dialogue with the United States to pave the way for a Palestinian settlement with Israel.

92 persons killed in traffic mishaps

By The Associated Press

Far fewer people will die on U.S. roads and highways this holiday weekend compared to Thanksgiving 1968, the holiday weekend with the most traffic fatalities on record, the National Safety Council has estimated.

By 9 a.m. today, 92 people had died in traffic accidents.

The Chicago-based Safety Council said between 420 and 520 deaths might occur in traffic accidents over the four-day weekend.

Israeli school tries to build friendships between Jews, Arabs

NETANYA, Israel (AP) — An Israeli school is trying to build bridges between Jews and Arabs by having them live together and learn each other's language.

The Ulpan Akiva, perched on sand dunes near this Mediterranean resort town, provides a sharp contrast to the usual gloomy state of relations between Jews and Arabs — relations which have worsened with the Lebanon war.

Many of Israel's 600,000 Arab citizens — and the 1.3 million Arabs under Israeli occupation — lost relatives who lived in the refugee camps that were flattened by the Israeli invasion.

At the ulpan, Hebrew for language school, students are urged to ignore politics.

"We have never had a political clash or explosion," says the founder and headmistress, Shulamit Katznelson.

Many Hebrew-Arabic courses are offered in Israel. But Ulpan Akiva, named after a rabbi who didn't learn to read or write until he was 40, is the only institution where Arabs and Jews live together, sharing rooms and studying each other's language and culture.

Mrs. Katznelson, a member of a family that helped found Israel, says the aim is "to build human bridges."

"Without sincere communication with the local Arabs, Israel won't survive, and the bleeding will be both ways."

Ulpan Akiva was founded in 1951 to teach Hebrew to Jewish immigrants. The 1967 Arab-Israeli war, which brought more than a million Arabs under Israeli occupation created an urgent need for teaching Arabic, a field that had long been neglected here.

So Mrs. Katznelson added Arabic classes for Jews and offered Arabs seats in the Hebrew classes for immigrants.

Nabil Aboumunshar, an Arab from the occupied West Bank town of Hebron, shares a room with Dror Greenfield, a Jew from Tel Aviv.

Aboumunshar says he came to learn Hebrew "so I can speak to my Jewish friends." Of his initial meeting with Greenfield, he said, "In the first minutes it was difficult. Now I understand what he says, and he understands what I mean."

"I didn't know what to expect," said Greenfield. "You don't know how friendly you can get, or what you can talk about. I'm sure they (the Arabs) feel the same way. But by the second day we were friends. We try not to get into political discussions."

Jews are taught spoken Arabic only. Arabs learn to speak and write Hebrew. Both languages share the same Semitic roots.

Greenfield says he is learning Arabic because "we're surrounded and are living in a country with hundreds of thousands of Arabs. It's important to know their culture and understand them."

Garo Mardiressian, an Arab from the West Bank town of Ramallah, says, "Here you learn that people are people. If you live in an Arab city and don't meet Jews, you meet them here and become friends."

Taysir Sbooh, an Agriculture Ministry clerk in the West Bank City of Nablus, says he has no problems getting along with Jews at Ulpan Akiva.

Rafeek Murrar, an Arabic school headmaster in Ramallah, says that although it is discouraged, he sometimes discusses politics with his newfound Jewish friends.

How it looks for legislators

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, — Politics is fun to watch. Today's bright light could be tomorrow's burned out bulb. Change is a way of life.

The Democratic Party's strong showing in the November elections should mean a whole new ball game for Texas congressmen in the 98th Congress. Here's a run-down of the likely battle plans and career standings for several key Texas legislators.

— Sen. John Tower (R): Busy.

The Senate Armed Services Committee chairman will have to be on guard in the 98th Congress. Democrats plan to come out gunning for cuts in military spending. Tower, a long-time supporter of the Pentagon, will have to persuade fellow Republicans that such cuts will not significantly reduce the skyrocketing federal deficit. If he can't, Tower's influence in the party and the White House could be hurt.

— Sen. Lloyd Bentsen (D): Free.

After winning a new six-year term, Texas' junior senator should have more freedom next year to become a leading foe of Reaganomics. Bentsen will get considerable attention as the second ranking Democrat on the Senate Finance Committee.

— Rep. Phil Gramm : Cloudy.

The maverick "Boll Weevil" has little chance of staying on the House Budget Committee. There are 26 new Democrats coming to town next year, which means more players competing to get on the influential committee. The House Democratic leadership, which has wanted to dump Gramm from the committee for over a year, now has a ready excuse.

— Rep. Charles Stenholm : Crossroads.

The Stamford Democrat made a strong impact on the 97th Congress. His patient and commanding role as leader of the Boll Weevils won plaudits and respect from Republicans and Democrats. Many observers this year dubbed the gentleman farmer a rising star. But the Democratic pick-up of 26 new seats could diminish the Boll Weevils' role as power brokers. Will Stenholm moderate his views and conform to the party's wishes?

— Rep. Jim Wright: Challenge.

Some say Wright is wrong as House Majority Leader. The Democrats have had a sizable majority but the party has loss nearly every important battle in Congress. The November election results means that Wright will have even more Democrats on his side. If he can't keep his troops in line now, the party may look for a leader who can.

— Rep. Kent Hance: Ambitious.

U.S. no longer industrial

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you have the feeling that nothing works and that politicians don't know what's wrong with the economy or the country, give a moment or two to John Naisbitt, writer, futurist and social historian.

In a new book entitled, "Megatrends: Ten New Directions Transforming Our Lives," Naisbitt questions the current political debate over the recession, jobs, energy and restoring the nation's place among the industrial powers of the world.

"We're all acting as if we're in an industrial society when, if we looked at it clearly, we would see that we're no longer an industrial society, and we've got to change," he says.

From this basic premise flow a number of conclusions, which if true, should give politicians and businessmen more than momentary pause.

Among them:

—Unions and other large institutions will eventually become almost obsolete.

—There really is no nationwide recession; instead there is a dramatic shift in the economy from North to South and from an industrial society to an economy based on the transfer of information.

—The president's power to influence events is vastly overrated, and what Congress does and says matters less and less as time goes on.

—In almost every way, the country is decentralizing, and the best ideas are coming from the bottom and working their way upward.

—The ways by which we measure economic progress or decline are obsolete. Measuring simple increases in industrial output, or national unemployment, or growth in the gross national product no longer tell us what's happening to the economy.

Naisbitt believes the United States will never again lead the newly industrialized nations like Japan, Korea, Taiwan or Brazil in the production of cars, steel or products requiring high labor costs.

Norway may soon be dry

STROMSTAD, Sweden (AP) — Norwegians are streaming across the border into this Swedish town of 5,000 to wait three abreast in long lines outside its only liquor store. They are driven to it by a liquor strike that has turned Norway dry.

"Some days it's impossible to buy liquor here," complained Folke Carlgren, a Stromstad fisherman. "It's better to drive the 180 kilometers (112 miles) to Uddevalla and back to buy your booze there. It's quicker."

Carlgren said on a typical day, the Norwegians begin arriving long before opening time.

About 500 workers of Norway's four state-owned alcoholic beverage production plants went on strike at the end of August, demanding cost-of-living pay increases averaging 2.50 Norwegian kroner (about 40 cents) an hour. Almost all liquor and wine sold in Norway is imported in bulk and stored, treated, bottled, packed and distributed by the four plants.

The Stromstad liquor store, run by the state monopoly Systembolaget to serve only the town's population, has increased its work force from six to 20 to handle the Norwegian invasion.

Manager Lennart Johansson said sales are up 800 percent over the corresponding period last year. He would not disclose exact figures, but local business sources put the daily sales at an average of 800,000 Swedish kronor (about $110,000).

It's not only the liquor store that is cashing in on the Norwegians, who have seen skyrocketing prices at home over the last few years turn Norway into one of the world's most expensive countries.

Stromstad supermarkets also report heavy daily sales, especially since the Swedish government devalued the krona by 16 percent in mid-October.

"The're buying everything from pork and canned food to all sorts of electrical appliances," said Bengt Davidsson, manager of a downtown supermarket. "They buy less now than they did the first two weeks after the devaluation, but the number of clients has increased."

Davidsson refused to say how much his sales have increased but said Norwegian government measures to cut into the exodus are having an effect.

Electric company to award trip

STANTON — An all-expenses-paid trip to Washington, D.C., will be awarded the winner of an oratorical contest sponsored by Cap Rock Electric Cooperative.

The contest is open to any boy or girl who was 14 years old as of Sept. 1, but not yet 20 years old. The winner will join winners from other electric cooperatives across Texas in the annual Texas Electric Cooperative's Government-in-Action Youth Tour to Washington. All expenses for the 12-day trip, beginning in early June, will be paid by Cap Rock Electric.

Each entrant will be require to give a five- to eight-minute talk on a subject to be announced and answer one or more questions asked by judges. Participants will be judged on the basis of knowledge of subject, 40 percent; speaking ability, 30 percent; poise, 10 percent; personality, 10 percent; and appearance, 10 percent. The contest will be Jan. 17 in the "Willie Wiredhand Room" of the Cooperative building in Stanton.

Interested persons may obtain an official entry form from their local high school or the office of Cap Rock Electric Cooperative, Inc., Box 700, Stanton, Texas 79782. Entry forms must be received not later than Dec. 10.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Avoid oral sex if either partner has cold sores

Dear Dr. Solomon: About twice a year I get a beaut of a cold, with very painful cold sores in my nose and on my lip. Is there any reason I shouldn't have sexual relations with my wife when I am having this problem? — Ken, Tempe, Ariz.

Dear Ken: Dr. Steve Kohl, of the University of Texas Medical School in Houston, says there is always the possibility that the partner may develop oral herpes (cold sores) during sexual intercourse. Herpes has also been transmitted by oral sex. Therefore, it would be best to avoid oral sex if either partner has active oral or genital herpes.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother has arthritis but she refuses to fill the prescription the doctor gave her. She says she heard on the radio that there is no cure for arthritis, so why take medicine? What would you say to her if you could speak with her? — Mr. M.F., Brooklyn, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. F.: It is true that there is no cure for arthritis. But it is also true that there are treatments, including the use of drugs, that can alleviate pain and that may prevent the crippling effects of the disease.

If I can help my patients reduce joint inflammation and the associated pain I feel I have accomplished a great deal. I will not be dishonest and promise them a cure, but who would say that the alleviation of pain and prevention of the crippling effects are not important?

Dear Dr. Solomon: Will you please clear up all of the confusion about aspirin and Reye's syndrome? If the people who are supposed to let the public know what the score is tried to confuse us deliberately, they couldn't do a better job. — Vito, Queens, N.Y.

Dear Vito: Many authorities believe that there is an association between aspirin and Reye's syndrome, but others contend that there is no proof of a cause-and-effect relationship.

Nevertheless, the evidence is strong enough for the Committee on Infectious Diseases of the American Academy of Pediatrics to warn that aspirin usually should not be given to children who are suspected of having either chickenpox of influenza. The Centers for Disease Control had previsouly made a similar recommendation.

One complicating factor is that many over-the-counter products contain salicylates. Parents should therefore make it a point to read the labels before purchasing such a preparation for use by their children.

The committee has also raised questions about the use of any medication to reduce fever when a child has symptoms of either chickenpox or influenza. It suggests that other measures be employed to control the fever, including increasing the child's intake of fluids and sponging with lukewarm water.

Sakowitz sells back-yard roller coasters for $2 million

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Thanks to all those opulent, glittering, bankbook bending catalogues that have been jamming my mailbox for week after week since last August, I have my Christmas list all sorted out.

Now if only the Connecticut, New York and New Jersey state lotteries would cooperate with winning tickets, Santa will be deorbiting down our chimney with a load of loot that would make the Aga Khan envious.

First off, for the child in all of us, at the price of a mere $2,430,000 the merchants of merriment down at Sakowitz will erect right in my own backyard a full sized wooden roller coaster. Nearly a half mile long, it is guaranteed to meet all safety codes and comes complete with four cars holding six passengers each and a covered loading platform.

"Allow six to nine months for delivery in the continental United States," the catalogue states. Well, I can use that time to get some tickets printed. Charging the neighborhood urchins 50 cents a ride, I figure I'll only have to keep my Christmas Club going another 700 years to pay off the credit card.

It's lucky for me my wife is allergic to fur or I couldn't resist surprising her on Christmas morning with what Santa's little phrase makers at Sakowitz call "a full length sweep of splendor", a fur coat made from the bellies of rare Russian snow lynxes. I don't know what they do with the rest of the lynx, probably stitch up some designer overalls or bikinis, but apparently the matching hat worn by the model in the catalogue is not included in the price, perhaps because it came from the tail section or some other declasse length of lynx.

FOR THOSE willing to saunter off to Siberia and pot their own lynx, the Abercrombie & Fitch catalogue lists genuine safari shooting jackets, "originally designed in Africa in the 1930's," with "quilted suede recoil shoulder patch and three reinforced cartridge pockets," at $160. The pith helmet is not included.

Sadly for us globe-trotting foreign correspondents (I was in Tijuana recently on business), cleft sticks are no longer listed in any of the catalogues crossing this threshold. However, New York's B. Altman & Co. still stocks the belted Burberry trench coat at $495. This is the real article, dating back to when Evelyn Waugh's coverage of a war in Ethiopia inspired his novel "Scoop," and no Fleet Street hack worth his expense account would leave home without it.

The successful TV serialization of Waugh's "Brideshead Revisited" has brought teddy bears back in style on college campuses and as an executive suite play thing in the lonely corridors of power. Abercrombie &

Mulligan's Stew

Fitch offers a three-foot-tall cuddly stuffed grizzly at a trifling $225. "He grins a lot," the catalogue assures us, "especially when his foot pads get tickled."

In case your office doesn't have any, the same firm of outfitters is flogging dumbbells, chrome-plated, at $130 a pair.

To redefine my macho image in the new year, I've asked Santa to put me down for a leather buttonup motorcycle jacket, circa early Marlon Brando, in "supple French lambskin" at $210 from Lord & Taylor.

There is a legend that after the upset at Yorktown, the victorious colonial troops wanted to crown George Washington king, but he declined the proffered coronation. In the fantasy world of Christmas catalogues, George gets a chance to reconsider and serves as king in a "Revolutionary Chess Set and Battlefield Board" that enables players to "relive the War of Independence." The opposing pieces are arrayed as George III and his redcoats. Also from Lord & Taylor at $400, roughly the price of the tea dumped in Boston harbor.

I WOOED and was wed in Ireland unaided by the romantic glow of a "splendid crystal Waterford courting lamp," but I can make up for this lapse in my love life and assure an enduring afterglow by sending $470, plus $40 postage, to Cashs, the Cork, Ireland, mail order house which sends out one of the more enticing catalogues.

While on the subject of romance, for the lush in your life several catalogues offer booze-filled bonbons, half gallon "Texas-sized" brandy snifters, a hollow handle golf umbrella for snorts at tee time and silver plated corkscrews.

For stocking stuffers when I hit those three lotteries, I've got my heart set on a five-foot long tape measure unwinding from a silverplated walnut shell, only 15 clams from Lord & Taylor; also an electronic "checking account calculator — three separate access keys retain checking and two charge account balances," from the Harward COOP at $24.95, and a hand held, three-way massage showerhead, from Sears at $14.99.

When those winning lottery numbers are called in all three states, I'll also dial Altman's toll free number and ask Santa to bring me a book for Christmas, a first edition of William Faulkner's "Sartoris" at the knockdown catalogue price of $2,275. Or maybe I'll ask for Henry VIII's autograph, framed with his portrait, for only $12,000.

Of course, by that happy time, I'll need to have my own stock ticker in the den or at bedside, and the friendly folk at Sakowitz can ship it reindeer express for $3,158, including installation. The catalogue notes, however, that "monthly charges from exchanges for line service are additional."

Well, after all, Christmas can't go on forever or what would the catalogue dream merchants do for next year?

Little porker to ham it up

NEW YORK (AP) — Eight little pigs had their big chance to hog the spotlight as they hammed their way through an audition for a 30-second role in a Broadway revival of "Alice in Wonderland."

The would-be bit players strutted their stuff for a grand dame of the theater, Eva Le Gallienne, 83.

Miss Le Gallienne, who will direct the new production and play the White Queen, studied the porky players and interviewed their owners — all members of the Hunterdon County Rooters, Squealers and Squawkers 4-H Club from Flemington, N.J.

Miss Le Gallienne, who adapted, directed and starred in the original 1932 production, selected a 15-pound piglet named Michelle to fill out the role.

Michelle's 30-second stint is to come when the baby in Alice's arms turns into a pig and Alice says, "If it had grown up, it would have made a dreadfully ugly child, but it makes a rather handsome pig, I think."

Miss Le Gallienne said she will help train the piglet to run directly from the center of the stage to the theatre wing.

Man convicted of reckless driving tears down signs

SUNNYVALE, Calif. (AP) — A 26-year-old convicted of reckless driving is repaying his debt to society by doing some political dirty work.

Municipal Court Judge James W. Stewart, who favors "creative sentencing" in lieu of having offenders pay fines or sit in jail, instead ordered Mark Strakbein to tear down old campaign signs from telephone poles and fences.

Stewart thought the unusual sentence might help the city while teaching Strakbein a lesson.

"Those signs not only are a visual blight, they are illegal as well," Stewart said. "By law, those are supposed to be taken down 10 days after the election."

There are so many signs that Sunnyvale City Attorney Lou Green says it's "too much of a hassle" to file suits against the people responsible for them.

Fourth man arrested in papal conspiracy

AP Laserphoto

Ivanov Antonov, 35, a Bulgarian airline official, is taken handcuffed to jail from Rome police headquarters by two Italian policemen. Antonov was arrested Thursday in connection with the 1981 assassination attempt against Pope John Paul II.

ROME (AP) — A Bulgarian airline official has been arrested as the fourth alleged conspirator in the shooting of Pope John Paul II, and Bulgarian Embassy officials denounced the arrest as "illegal and unfounded."

Ivanov Sergia Antonov 35, the airline's Rome station chief, allegedly checked the would-be assassin into a small hotel near the Vatican and drove him to St. Peter's Square on the day of the attack, the Italian news agency AGI said.

Antonov was arrested Thursday as an alleged conspirator of Turkish terrorist Mehmet Ali Agca, who shot the pope in St. Peter's Square on May 13, 1981 with a Browning revolver.

Officials said Antonov played a "very active" role and helped Agca in a "material way," but investigators would not give details.

Bulgaria expressed "indignation for the unfounded and illegal arrest" of Antonov and denounced the allegations as "absurd and unfounded." The Bulgarian Embassy in Rome said Antonov's arrest was "a new attempt to damage the traditionally good relations" between Bulgaria, Italy and the Vatican.

The news agency quoted unidentified police investigators as saying that Antonov had made reservations for Agca at the Pensione Isa, a small hotel in Vihe Vatican, then drove him to St. Peter's Square.

Despite speculation that he did not act alone, Agca has always maintained he had no accomplices. He's serving a life sentence in an Italian prison.

Police said Agca had escaped from a Turkish prison in 1979, traveled throughout Europe using false passports and made several trips to Bulgaria before he tried to kill the pope.

Besides whether Agca acted alone, police wee investigating how he brought the revolver into Italy.

Antonov, as head of the Balkan Airline office at Rome's Leonardo da Vinci Airport, was able to go to and from parked airliners at will, and could avoid passport control at the official border.

Giuseppe Balsamo, a police spokesman, said Antonov was arrested Thursday at the downtown Balkan Tourist Office, a travel agency for Balkan airlines. The Bulgarian official, who has been living in Rome for about four years, was taken to a jail cell at police headquarters for questioning, Balsamo said.

Antonov was charged with "complicity" in the attempted assassination of the pontiff, Balsamo said.

Various media had long speculated there could be a Bulgarian connection in the attempted killing of the pope but all suspects arrested by police until now have been Turkish.

NBC News has suggested that the papal shooting was arranged by the Bulgarian secret police, and that the Soviet KGB intelligence service was aware of the alleged scheme.

The Reader's Digest carried an article by Claire Sterling in September charging the Soviet Union had used the Bulgarian secret service as a buffer in a Communist plot.

FitzGerald leading race for Irish prime minister

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Former Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald promised a "strong government" to combat the Irish Republic's economic crisis as his opposition coalition surged ahead today in the third general election in 17 months.

"It looks like I'll be the next prime minister," the 56-year-old Fine Gael (Family of the Irish) party leader boasted, stopping shy of claiming victory despite a solid lead over Prime Minister Charles Haughey's Fianna Fail (Soldiers of Destiny) party.

Final results were expected late today.

Haughey, 57, refused to concede defeat although he acknowledged the likelihood of a coalition government. "But I fear it will be unstable because of ideological differences between the two parties," he added.

"We are living in difficult times now. Governments are falling all over Europe. In times of deep economic recession it is difficult for a government to stay in office," Haughey said.

Talks begin with Namibian leader

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz headed into a meeting today with South African Foreign Minister Pik Botha intent on seeking a formula for achieving black majority rule and independence in the South African-controlled territory of Namibia.

U.S. officials said Shultz was looking for signs of South African flexibility in ending what has become an impasse in the five-year international negotiating effort to make Africa's last colony independent.

South Africa, with strong American support, insists it will not relinquish control over Namibia, also known as South-West Africa, if there is not a concurrent agreement leading to the withdrawal of the estimated 20,000 Cuban forces from Angola, Namibia's northern neighbor.

Vice President George Bush told African leaders during his recent seven-nation tour of the continent that the United States is committed to maintaining the link between the Angolan and Namibian issues.

That linkage has been widely criticized by black African leaders, who argue that Namibia should be granted independence irrespective of the Cuban troop presence in Angola.

Black African officials contend the United States and South Africa have delayed achievement of independence in Namibia by linking that objective to the withdrawal of Cuban troops.

South Africa has launched repeated military raids into Angola in an attempt to destroy bases maintained there by the South-West Africa People's Organization, Namibia's main guerrilla group.

U.S. officials said they hope South Africa will break the current impasse by making a unilateral gesture toward Angola, such as a cease-fire or a partial withdrawal of forces from Angola.

They said that during Botha's visit here, administration officials planned to explore his thinking on that possibility.

"We'll be planting seeds," one official said.

He added that Shultz also planned to make clear to Botha the administration's opposition to any move by South Africa to impose a settlement in Namibia by unilaterally declaring Namibia's independence and installing a pro-South African government there.

"The bottom line for the United States has to be an internationally acceptable settlement for Namibia," the official said.

The U.S. objective in pursuing a negotiated settlement is to "remove Namibia as a source of contention in our relations with the rest of Africa," he said.

The current central authority in Namibia is the South African-backed Democratic Turnhalle Alliance, which has been installed as a provisional government.

Chad dispute cancels OAU summit

TRIPOLI, Libya — African heads of state called off an Organization of African Unity summit two days after its scheduled opening because they failed to reach an agreement over who should represent Chad at the meeting.

OAU spokesman Peter Onu announced Thursday that "it has not been possible to hold the 19th summit because of a lack of a quorum." He said 30 of 51 member delegations were represented — four short of a two-thirds quorum under OAU rules.

The summit's collapse was the second in three months, and prevented Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy from automatically becoming the OAU's chairman for the next year.

Onu said Kenyan President Daniel Arap Moi, OAU chairman since the 1981 summit, would "continue to serve in that capacity."

The summit was scheduled to open Tuesday. But 17 predominantly pro-Western countries said they would not participate after Khadafy refused to seat new Chadian President Hissene Habre.

Habre's presidency is recognized by the OAU majority. But Libya, Ethiopia and Mozambique, among others, back ousted Chadian President Goukouni Oueddei, who has set up an exile government near the Libyan border and is fighting Habre's forces.

In an angry speech Thursday, Khadafy blamed the United States, France and other Western nations for disrupting the summit.

Speak out for safety

The importance of citizen involvement in the enforcement of Midland city codes and ordinances was graphically demonstrated this week when a number of residents in one of Midland's older mobile home subdivisions were left without electricity or natural gas service because of ordinance violations which endangered their well-being.

Those who read stories in The Reporter-Telegram detailing the plight of the mobile home park's residents might have been inclined to blame the utility companies for terminating service just as this winter's first major cold weather engulfed Midland. The utility companies were not at fault, however. They halted service partly because of non-payment of bills by the park's owner, but primarily because code violations at the park presented health and safety hazards — hazards that were potentially life-threatening. Conditions at the park were appalling to say the least.

The various agencies and companies involved in this incident were correct in their actions. The decision to terminate utility service was a difficult one because of this week's inclement weather. But the undeniable risk to the park's residents posed by exposed electrical lines, natural gas lines exposed and lying atop the ground and so forth outweighed the humane consideration of keeping utility service uninterrupted. Finally, one of the park's residents complained about the curtailment of service and the city bureaucracy went to work on getting the situation corrected.

It appears that in this particular case city ordinances and code enforcement are sufficient to protect the interests of park residents. This mobile home park is considerably older than most, city officials say, and consequently city personnel would not get involved in code enforcement there unless a complaint was received, as was the case.

What's worse is the fact that city officials say the problems encountered at this park are not unique in Midland; there probably are other mobile home parks and other structures in the city or county in which the lives of residents are threatened by code violations. Those problems can be corrected, the officials say, if the city is aware of the violations.

While it's true city ordinances probably could be strengthened to provide for periodical follow-up inspections of such facilities for compliance with city health and safety codes, it's common knowledge that the type of growth Midland experienced during the past couple of years would have rendered such a program difficult.

Because of that fact, citizen involvement becomes increasingly important. When residents get involved and bring problems or potential problems to the attention of various city officials, action can be taken to make life in Midland better and safer for all of us. Remaining silent about dangerous situations merely increases the probability of death or injury for some unsuspecting Midlander.

That is what city officials hope to avoid. A large part of the responsibility is yours. You shouldn't take that responsibility lightly.

Improving highways

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis seems to be gaining ground in his effort to persuade President Reagan to support an increase in the federal gasoline tax to rebuild worn-out highways and bridges. Rarely has there been a better case for arguing that a tax is too low instead of too high.

Mr. Reagan appeared to be leaning in favor of the tax hike when he remarked at his Nov. 11 news conference that he was willing to look at the motor vehicle fuel tax as a "user fee." Moreover, the president indicated he did not look at the proposal for rebuilding highways and bridges as a "jobs program," even if it would put some 320,000 people to work in the construction industry. That keeps it out of the category of those Democratic-sponsored programs that would put people on government payrolls as a cure for high unemployment.

The recession has nothing to do with the problem Lewis is addressing. For several years, revenue from the 4 cents a gallon gasoline tax has been failing to cover demands on the Highway Trust Fund for construction and maintenance of highways and bridges. The reason is simple. Costs of labor and materials have more than doubled during the last decade. Fuel consumption, and hence the revenue from the per-gallon tax, have grown barely at all because of the switch to more fuel-efficient cars.

If there is going to be a user fee to finance a federal transportation program, then the rate of 4 cents a gallon is no longer realistic. If we are going to reverse the alarming deterioration of the country's transportation "infrastructure," the money has to come from somewhere, and the fuel tax is the traditional source.

Lewis would increase the tax by 5 cents a gallon, and says this would cost the average motorist about $35 a year.

Mr. Reagan should be impressed by the long history of federal-state cooperation on highway programs, and the opportunity to strike a blow for his New Federalism by assigning primary responsibility to the states in carrying out the bridge and highway work which the higher federal tax would finance. Not only would the work be carried out by contractors from the private sector, but the program would not expand the role of the federal bureaucracy.

Texas' highways, too, are showing the need for improvement. A tax increase would seem justified in the interest of safety.

Tube news debunked

Television ads claim that most Americans get their news from the tube. The claim has been based on a superficial poll that asks respondents where they get their news. It has not been based on in-depth studies.

Now such a study has been made by Professor Lawrence Lichty of the University of Maryland, and the findings are quite different.

Lichty based his study on a 40-volume Simmons Market Research Bureau report. He found that while more than two-thirds of American adults read a newspaper every day, fewer than one-third watch a TV news broadcast.

Writing in the "Wilson Quarterly" of the Smithsonian Institution's International Center for Scholars, Lichty says that for most people TV news is just another show "and not very habit forming."

TV news is designed for visual impact and stresses the dramatic. It emphasizes such things as fires and accidents and rarely provides much information about local happenings. Because of time constraints, TV news presents only a few news items on each broadcast in comparison with the hundreds of news items in daily newspapers.

You can make your own study by counting the news stories on a TV station any night and comparing the result with the number of news items in your newspaper the same night.

CHARLEY REESE

A disarmed populace is defenseless

The anti-gun nuts thought Proposition 15, a California initiative that would have seriously restricted handgun ownership, would be the start of a successful nationwide attack on the private ownership of firearms.

Charley Reese

They lost their pants. With a 73 percent turnout of voters, Californians rejected Proposition 15 by a 2 to 1 margin despite support by virtually all of the state's news media. As it turns out, the vote was 63 percent against, 37 percent for.

It has never made sense for a nation, beset with violent crime and unable to make its criminal justice system protect the innocent, to disarm the innocent. Furthermore, to do so would be clearly un-Constitutional, though with today's federal judges that may be a moot point.

It is interesting to me to look at the people who supported Proposition 15. Armand Hammer, Lenin's old friend and the son of the founder of U.S. Communist Party, contributed $250,000 to the campaign, even though his main corporation, Occidental Petroleum, has paid no corporate income taxes for years.

Other luminaries of the liberal-left establishment who backed the gun control measure include: Elliot Richardson, former U.S. Attorney General; William Hewlett, chairman of Hewlett-Packard; W. Michael Blumenthal, Carter's Secretary of the Treasury; Lloyd Cutler, Carter's White House counselor; Warren Christopher, a Carter state department official; Patricia Harris, former Carter cabinet officer; Dr. Milton Eisenhower, Ike's brother; Clark Clifford, LBJ's Secretary of Defense; W. Averell Harriman, former diplomat who helped the Soviet Union develop its mining industry in the 1930s; Andrew Heiskell, former chairman of Time, Inc.; David Packard, former Secretary of Defense; William Ruckelshaus, a Nixon appointee; Frank Stanton, former president of CBS, Inc.; Leonard Janofsky, former chairman of NBC; Shirley Hufstedler, former Secretary of Education; and several others less known to the public.

The key point to remember in future efforts, certain to be made, to disarm the private citizen is that a handgun is only a rifle with a short barrel. Once the principle of government control is established, by restricting or banning the ownership of handguns, then restrictions on private ownership of long guns will surely follow.

The crime angle is only eye-wash. The real goal seems to be to disarm the private citizen. Guns don't cause crime anymore than hoes cause beans to grow. In California, this red herring was put to rest when 55 or 58 sheriffs, more than 100 police chiefs, and 33 law enforcement agencies formally denounced Proposition 15.

Every American should guard against restrictions on his right to own and use firearms. The concept of self-defense is rooted in English common law. But there is no defense against a gun except another gun. To argue that people have the right to self-defense but not the right to own the means of self-defense is a contradiction.

Furthermore, as far-fetched as it sounds, there may come a day when the American people may have to defend themselves against their own government. Without exception, the first act of every tyrant is to disarm the populace he intends to enslave. Fidel Castro's very first speech after he took power was to demand the surrender of private arms; Pol Pot, in Cambodia, did not begin the slaughter until he had first disarmed the population. The Polish people, despite their bravery, must submit to tyranny because they have no arms. When Great Britain was faced with invasion in World War II, it begged Americans to send them small arms.

A wise and just government need have no fear of armed citizens. It is crystal clear that the founders of the United States recognized that if the basic premise of the American Revolution — that all power and rights reside with the people — was to have any meaning, then the people must have the right to own and keep arms. A disarmed populace has no means of enforcing its rights against an armed government.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Soviets outmaneuvered U.S. on embargo

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's pipeline embargo was doomed from the start. The Russians, in league with our West European allies — the French, West Germans and Italians — outmaneuvered the White House at every step of the year-long international power play.

Jack Anderson

Soviet trade officials brought unprecedented pressure on the West Europeans, who of course were not all that reluctant to make a few million francs, marks or lire by undercutting the Reagan administration's sanctions.

The evidence — secret contracts signed by European companies to sell the Soviets the machines and material they needed to build the pipeline that will bring Siberian natural gas to Western Europe — has been seen by my associate Dale Van Atta. White House and intelligence sources provided details of the Kremlin's successful strategy. Here's the story:

The Russians knew they would need the superior Western equipment to build the pipeline. They also knew that a U.S. embargo would be the likely response to a Soviet crackdown in Poland. But the Polish situation was getting dangerously out of hand in the late summer and fall of 1981.

So the Soviets had to make sure of their pipeline supplies from the West before they took action in Poland that might lead to a U.S. embargo. They met their deadline — just barely.

On Oct. 22, 1981, the Soviet purchasing agency, Machinoimport, announced a contract with the French firm of Alsthom-Atlantique for 40 spare General Electric rotors. Ronald Reagan's one-time employer makes the best rotors in the world, and the Soviets were obviously hedging their bets against a U.S. embargo that would block the GE equipment at its source.

In November and early December, while the situation in Poland continued to deteriorate, the Russians worked frantically to get their final contracts with the West signed. Representatives of Creusot-Loire, another French company, arrived in Moscow for high-level negotiations for $250 million worth of chiller plants on Dec. 12. On Dec. 13, marital law was declared in Poland.

On Dec. 14, the negotiations with Creusot-Loire were successfully concluded. Two weeks later, as the Russians had guessed, Reagan announced the embargo on sale of pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union.

As the White House soon learned, it was too late. So in June, at the economic summit in Versailles, Reagan made an impassioned plea to the allied leaders to support the U.S. sanctions. Then-Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany didn't even look at Reagan, but gazed out the window at the gardens.

When the allied leaders failed to support the U.S. position, a furious Reagan responded later that month by extending the embargo to European affiliates of American companies. But here, too, the Russians were way ahead of him.

Two things had happened. First, the Soviets had insisted on dealing directly with subcontractors. This meant the Russians would be able to apply penalties for non-delivery directly on the subcontractors, who could thus be counted on to add their weight to the anti-embargo lobbying effort.

Even more important was the Russians' insistence on rewriting the so-called "force majeure" contract clause that absolves a supplier of responsibility if it is prevented from delivery by "prohibition of export or import, or any other circumstances beyond the reasonable control of the parties ... "

The rewritten force majeure clause appears in the 100-page-plus contract the Russians signed with Creusot-Loire and the German firm of Mannesmann. The escape clause duly covered the standard "fire, floods, earthquake, typhoon, epidemics (and) military operations of any character ... such as war."

But the standard reference to "prohibition of export" or other governmental action was deleted. In fact, the contract went further in another clause and required the supplier to offer the Russians alternatives if export licenses couldn't be obtained.

Footnote: Sources say an Italian company, Nuovo Pignone, signed a secret agreement with the Russians to supply 33 turbines without their GE rotors — which could then be added when, as the Kremlin correctly anticipated, Reagan lifted the embargo.

CLEANUP CATCH-22: Since 1972, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration has been promising to set minimal sanitation standards for migrant farm workers — pure drinking water, toilets and wash-up facilities. But the agency kept dragging its feet.

Meanwhile, migrant workers continue to suffer from dehydration, heat stroke, contamination of their food by pesticides and a host of diseases traceable to the filthy conditions in which they work.

When farm worker advocates took OSHA to court, officials testified that it would take another five years to study the problem. An outraged judge accused them of bad faith, and ordered them to speed things up. In July, OSHA agreed to "make a good faith effort to publish a proposed standard within 15-18 months."

Yet OSHA's recent agenda of regulations in process did not include field sanitation. "Just an oversight," a spokesman told my reporter James Crawford. He said a "risk assessment" would be undertaken within six to 12 months.

The catch is that because the health hazards are so obvious, migrant workers' clinics don't bother to gather much information about them. But without such data, OSHA will have more excuses to stall on the standards.

INSIDE REPORT:

Reagan turns to Dole for help on economy

WASHINGTON — Having decided his austerity-minded economic advisers must be overridden to avert the destruction of his administration, President Reagan must now approach the ineffable Robert J. Dole of Kansas to return the economy to a growth path.

Rowland Evans

The president is about to sign off on advancing the 10 percent tax cut scheduled next July 1 by six months to Jan. 1. That represents victory for Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, for politicians in the White House and for the president's own instincts.

Robert Novak

But the Jan. 1 tax scheme has to pass through the narrow window of the lame-duck session that begins Monday. Since no leadership help will come from the Democratic House, the measure will have to originate in the Republican Senate — in Sen. Dole's finance committee. That means quickly turning Dole's hostility to cooperation.

It will not be easy. Bob Dole has been called the uncrowned king of the Senate ever since forcing through last summer's $100 billion tax increase, with Reagan reluctantly following in Dole's wake. Since then, the senator has left little doubt about his own sense of importance. Most recently, he was in Moscow seeking bilateral discussions with Yuri Andropov (who rejected the meeting).

Understandably, then, Dole seemed a little miffed — when interviewed from Paris on the way home to Washington — that "I wasn't consulted on that (the tax speedup)." Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldridge, to the irritation of White House and Treasury, had blurted out the tax scheme before anybody could be consulted.

Hope that the finance committee chairman's feathers can be smoothed by the president's charm when Dole gets back to Washington is encouraged by plans to integrate the tax speedup in an anti-recession package. Included would be an old Dole favorite: a gasoline tax increase dedicated to federal public works spending.

The package would give Reagan the initiative in the lame-duck session in which Democratic leaders envisioned a bidding war with Senate Republicans over public works, with the president a fuming, ineffectual bystander. What worries the White House is that Dole, unless turned around by Reagan, will let the initiative return to the Democrats.

The idea for the tax speedup came not from Baldrige, a commercial Keynesian who supports it as a countercyclical stimulus, but from Don Regan on supply-side grounds. Not surprisingly, the president liked it once. Not surprisingly either, budget director David Stockman and economic adviser Martin Feldstein immediately opposed it, horrified at $14 billion more on the $150 billion-plus deficit.

But surprisingly, the austerity bloc no longer had the White House staff, including chief of staff James Baker, on its side. Realizing that Dole's $100 billion tax increase did nothing to reduce the deficit, politicians in the White House at long last have become convinced that neither tax increases nor spending cuts will balance the budget or save the economy. Instead, they believe economic growth must be fertilized.

Similarly, those politicians know Dr. Feldstein's publicly-projected unemployment rate of 9 percent through 1983 and maybe 1984 in order to keep down the dog of inflation is a formula for national misery and Republican disaster. The new mood at the White House seeks growth at a rate far in excess of Feldstein's crabbed estimates.

To transform mood into reality, what the Federal Reserve Board does (such as last week's welcome drop in the discount rate) means more than advancing the tax cut. Nevertheless, the tax package will be a sign of the administration's new tone. The next step is to try bringing chairman Dole into harmony with it.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Nov. 26, the 330th day of 1982. There are 35 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 26, 1922, King Tutankhamen's tomb was opened in Egypt.

On this date:

In 1857, the first Australian parliament convened in Melbourne.

In 1949, India adopted a constitution as a federal republic within the British Commonwealth.

In 1970, a Bolivian painter disguised as a priest tried to kill Pope Paul VI in the Philippines, but the Pope escaped injury.

Ten years ago: U.S. officials announced that the first detailed map of the planet Mars had been compiled from photographs made by the Mariner IX spacecraft.

Five years ago: Israel accepted an Egyptian invitation to take part in a multi-nation Cairo conference to plan Geneva peace talks.

One year ago: Britain's new Social Democratic Party captured its first seat in Parliament, as Shirley Williams won a district near Liverpool that was previously a Conservative stronghold.

Today's birthdays: Commentator Eric Sevareid is 70 years old. Singer Robert Goulet is 49.

Thought for today: "Love is a gross exaggeration of the difference between one person and everybody else." — George Bernard Shaw, Irish-born playwright (1856-1950).

Zhao to visit Africa

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP) — China seems to be taking an increasing interest in Africa as an arena to counter Soviet influence and to assert its claim as leader of the Third World.

Premier Zhao Ziyang will visit seven African countries early next year, according to foreign diplomats in Peking. China has not officially announced the visit, but the envoys said Zhao would go to Egypt, Algeria, Morocco, Guinea, Zaire, Zambia and Tanzania.

An Analysis

The last Chinese premier to visit this continent of some 50 nations and 485 million people was the late Chou En-lai in 1963.

Under Chairman Mao Tse-Tung, about half of China's foreign aid went to Africa, a continent with 20 of the world's 30 least developed countries.

But since Mao's death in 1976, China has slackened its aid to the Third World.

"China had been cutting back on economic assistance and size of diplomatic missions in Africa because of its many problems at home," said a Western diplomat in Tanzania. "But in the last month or so, I get the feeling that this is reversing."

He cited, in addition to Zhao's visit, China's establishment of diplomatic relations with Soviet-backed Angola in September, a heightened interest in independence for South-West Africa (Namibia), and the signing of several new aid agreements with Tanzania.

China agreed in August to build a "political education" college in Somalia. On Oct.24, the Somalis officially opened a hydroelectric project on the Juba River which was begun by the Soviets in the early 1970s and completed by the Chinese.

The Soviets abandoned the dam project in 1977 when they switched their backing to Ethiopia in a war with ethnic Somalis over the disputed Ogaden region of southeastern Ethiopia. The Chinese made a fresh start on it in 1979.

In Rwanda, where Chinese workers built the Parliament building, the Chinese are gearing up to provide labor on a commercial basis for a West German-funded road project. The planned highway will connect Kigali, the capital of the tiny east African nation, and the northern town of Ruhengiri.

Premier Zhao summed up China's aims in Africa earlier this year when he told the Guinea-Bissau head of state, Joao Bernardo Vieira, during the latter's visit to Peking that China would do its best — within its limits — to help developing countries change "the unjust international economic order."

Huang Hua, the foreign minister who was dropped in a Chinese Cabinet shuffle recently, noted during a 1978 visit to Zaire that China's main concern was "the Soviet global strategy for domination."

China's record in Africa, like the Soviet Union's, has been spotty, with neither Communist giant carving out a definable sphere of influence. Both have backed one or another faction in African liberation struggles, and both wage a battle of the airwaves, beaming ideology-laden radio programs to the continent in African languages.

While the Soviet Union has tended to aid only leftist governments and then mostly with military hardware, China has forged ties with a broad spectrum of countries — ranging from rightist, pro-Western Zaire and Morocco to socialist Tanzania and Mozambique.

Chinese aid to Africa, estimated at $2 billion between 1970 and 1977, has included military training and hardware to Zaire, a sports complex in Morocco, a sugar mill in Sierra Leone, a road project in Zambia and a scattering of medical teams and agronomists in many other of the 45 African countries with which China has diplomatic relations.

Eurotech is the full application of Europe's automotive technology to a new generation of motoring, making classy cars classier. Joe Childs stands between Eurotech twins, a much-modified Porsche, front, and a Mercedes 500SEL.

Eurotech: New technology for cars

By PAUL DEAN
By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — The appointment was to test-drive an all-black, no-chrome, lowered, wide-tired hot rod...intriguingly, a new Mercedes 450SL elevated by European modifications from superior transportation to superb machine.

The driver showed. But the car was not there. It had been sold earlier. For cash.

"Prince Saud, son of King Faisal, came in last night and bought it off the showroom floor," Joe Childs explained. He is a general manager of O'Gara Coach Co., where the rich are always slipping into something comfortably exotic in cars. "That sale means something. They (Saudi Arabians) are usually the first to step up and buy the latest things."

The latest thing, for want of a better buzzword, is labeled Eurotech.

Eurotech. It describes application ofEurope's automotive technology to a new generation of motoring.

IT IS IN THE Mercedes conversion where sophistication of engine, suspension, transmission and aerodynamics produces a 20 percent increase in horsepower and a 50 percent improvement in initial acceleration. "In first gear, it's a car that will climb a wall," a member of the marketing team said.

It is also a matter of turbocharging, shortening springs, stiffening sway bars and moving up to electronic fuel injection, high-lift camshafts and wind-tunnel analyses whether the recipient be a BMW, Renault, Volkswagen, Mazda, Porsche or Ford. "The Autobahn," another industry observer commented, "has come to the San Diego Freeway."

Even certain models of Pontiac's quick-selling Trans-Am have the Eurotech appearance, if not yet the performance.

The only chrome among their black is the wink of door handles and trunk keyholes. Hubcaps are body color. Parked, the car seems to be poised on the balls of its feet. On the move, its coefficient of drag is close to that of any Porsche. That is Eurotech.

Ford has touched the concept with a five-liter Mustang and next year will embrace it fully with a turbocharged, fuel-injected Thunderbird that is all rake and slippery to the air with body colors where most of the chrome used to be. "We'll offer all the things that aftermarket (conversion) people put on a car to make it a performing handler," a Ford representative said. "And its appearance will prove that if you get a clean shape, you don't have to hang junk on it."

In October Volkswagen will introduce its GTI, a fuel-injected, hot Rabbit good for 108 mph. Lamborghini of North America is importing, federalizing and selling a mid-engine, turbocharged version of Renault's Le Car that will stay with a 930 Porsche until 90 mph and still be within viewing distance with both cars hitting 125 mph.

WHAT OF THE Porsche? O'Gara's Beverly Hills lot holds two that are short on traditional Stuttgart looks. They are fiberglass-bodied hybrids imported from a German speed shop. The engine develops 400 horsepower and is mated to a turbocharger with boost, Indianapolis 500-style, controlled by the driver.

With the bill of sale for each D5 Kremmer-Porsche comes a suggestion from O'Gara Coach Co. The new owner is advised to sign up for a high-speed driving school. In one instance, knowing the reputation of the purchaser and exercising caution for its own image, O'Gara paid for the customer to attend such a school.

That is because this car runs out at 192 mph and even to veterans of night-time street-racing it is known as a $60,000 death wish on wheels.

"Yet," said Bruce Zeigler, the other general manager at O'Gara, "it looks like a 1977 Porsche 911 with someone having added a spoiler and a whale tail."

That introduces another element.

The Kremmer-Porsche does not appear to be what it is. Chromeless cars exude a certain dark mystery. A sedan is a sedan is a sedan and never a sports car. Ergo, fresh from an era where louvres, flares and even alloy wheels have represented nothing more than designer gimmicks, these vehicles are wolves in sheep's clothing. And that also is Eurotech.

THE IMPLICATION, of course, is that California roads are in for yet another scorching by drivers who believe the 55-mph speed limit is not a law they can live with. But when Eurotech specialists talk of performance, they are talking not top speed but performance as it relates to handling, braking and initial acceleration. After all, they point out, 98 percent of all driving is done at the bottom end of the speed range, so why concentrate on the top end?

"What we do is take the mass-produced car and tailor it to an individual's driving needs," explained Fred Loeffler, general manager of Century Motor Sales of Alhambra, Calif. "If a man lives where there are winding roads we give him a ride to handle that.

"We turbocharge the car so that when you hit that pedal entering a freeway on-ramp you've got more than enough to get into traffic."

Century sells BMWs, and more than any other dealership in the nation. Eighteen months ago, in conjunction with BAE Turbo Systems of Torrance, Calif., Century president Leon Peskin developed a turbo system for the BMW320i (now available for other models), and the conversion was blessed by the California Air Resources Board and the Environmental Protection Agency. Since then, an estimated 350 Century Turbo BMWs have been sold.

The total package costs $9,000 over and above the price like basic car. That includes Pirelli steel-belted radials and Momo alloy wheels, all from Italy. Also a suspension kit of state-of-the-art Bilstein gas pressure shock absorbers, shortened springs and tougher sway bars. Then there is a Kamel front spoiler and side skirts, not for looks but for aerodynamic efficiency.

A 50 percent increase in horsepower is guaranteed. Better yet, so is an improvement in fuel economy. That, however, is under whatever constitutes those "normal driving conditions."

AMERICAN MOTORISTS have always put horsepower before the cart.

So what if a Cadillac went around corners with all the control and predictability of spit on a griddle? If you wanted handling you could always buy one of those funny little European cars built for crinkly roads. Who was concerned that Dodge Chargers slurped a gallon of gas every 10 crosstown miles? Motorists said they would start worrying about that when premium got to 50 cents a gallon.

"American cars then were atrocious things," remembered Trefor Thomas, the British-born managing director of Lamborghini of North America. "They were bulky, excessive, heavy dogs that wouldn't do very much. They wouldn't stop or go around corners. They were very inefficient, but who cared?"

Suddenly, in the '70s, everybody began caring.

The federal Clean Air Act was introduced, and although Detroit was able to clean up its act, Thomas said, the engines that resulted "emasculated the car as far as performance was concerned."

Then international politics put corks in Middle East oil supplies to the United States. "Detroit scurried around spending millions of dollars building small cars and small engines," Thomas continued. "The first wave of cars were econo-boxes. They were very fine cars for fuel and economy, but the engineering was only average, quality was poor and performance very poor. The motoring public's hunger for performance was suppressed by, for want of a better word, patriotism. They began taking what was served up to them while joining in the general panic about gas availability and price."

MEANWHILE, BACK at overseas assembly lines, Europe and Japan continued building and exporting what terrain and economic climate had required them to build for decades — small, fuel-sniffing but high-performing cars. And in the space provided by Detroit's dilemma over efficiency, Thomas said, Europe and Japan found time to develop quality and technological excellence. Such as fuel injection. Such as integrated, electronic monitoring systems and engine controls.

Yet as national situations sour, so do they sweeten.

In the last two years, public dedication to the purchasing of economy cars has dropped the nation's fuel consumption. Gas prices have faltered. Glut actually became a word applied to oil supplies. Even current Middle East crises have produced no duplication of previous gasoline shortages and lines.

And surrounded by evidence that performance need not be sacrificed for efficiency, American motorists are demanding more.

Dallas Cowboy corner back Everson Walls (24) intercepts a pass on the four yard line intended for Cleveland Browns' wide reciever Dave Logan during first quarter action in Dallas Thursday.

Dallas gets Turkey day win, starts playoff drive on time

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys traditionally make their annual run to the National Football League playoffs starting with the Thanksgiving Day holiday, and that's something the strike hasn't changed.

The Cowboys whipped Cleveland 31-14 Thursday — their 10th victory in 15 Thanksgiving Day games — and now have 10 days rest before their next game.

And how are the Cowboys on the games after Thanksgiving?

They are 13-1. The Washington Redskins are the next opponent.

"This is normally our time of year," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "But you never know. I recall we had won 15 straight home openers, too, then we lost to Pittsburgh."

Dallas is 3-1 in the National Conference while the Browns dipped to 2-2 in the American Conference.

The Cowboys' rout of the Browns, which included four interceptions by the defense and sparkling performances by Tony Dorsett and Danny White, amazed Landry.

"I was surprised we played that well considering the strike and the fact we only had three days of rest after we played Sunday," said Landry. "Our defense was very good and we did some good things, offensively."

White threw two short touchdown passes of 4 yards to Billy Joe DuPree and 2 yards to Ron Springs, and Dorsett scored two touchdowns on runs of 1 and 5 yards despite a sore toe.

Dorsett also gained 116 yards on 20 carries before Landry gave him the fourth quarter off.

Cleveland quarterback Brian Sipe was sacked three times and suffered three interceptions.

"They just rolled us out and kicked our tails," Sipe said.

Landry cautioned his team about any premature playoff celebrations.

"This season is like no other season," Landry said. "You still can't judge it right now."

Cleveland's only points came late in the fourth quarter after Sipe had been benched by Browns' Coach Sam Rutigliano.

Paul McDonald threw an 18-yard scoring pass to Dino Hall and Greg Pruitt scored on a 2-yard run.

Back-to-back interceptions by Mike Downs and Bob Breunig positioned Dallas for two quick second-quarter touchdowns, and the rout was on.

Dallas bult a 17-0 halftime lead to 31-0 after the third quarter.

Sipe had created something of a stir at midweek with a well-meaning statement that backfired. He said that he thought the Dallas front four was so good "the three Stooges could play in the secondary."

"Everybody kind of took that comment personally," said Downs. "We (the secondary) are the Rodney Dangerfields of the NFL because we don't have a lot of No. 1 draft picks and we don't get a lot of respect.

"They might think we're not good football players, but today we kind of proved them wrong."

Rutigliano said "I've had better Thanksgivings than this. I think they played extremely well ... you can't take anything away from them.

"We still have the opportunity to control our own destiny starting with San Diego on Dec. 5."

He added, "Brian was under pressure the entire game. He had some difficulties but you can't single him out. He is still our No. 1 quarterback. McDonald did a good job and will be a good one."

If he Cowboys were expecting Friday off after their lopsided victory, they were mistaken.

Landry called a Friday practice and added "I might let 'em off over the weekend ... the work we have the next 10 days should help our team."

Holmes doesn't feel pressure that surrounded Cooney fight

HOUSTON (AP) — Larry Holmes, happy about the absence of the high-voltage tension that surrounded his last fight, defends the World Boxing Council heavyweight title tonight against Randy "Tex" Cobb, the WBC's No. 5-ranked contender.

"I wouldn't put my dog through what I went through," said Holmes of the pressure-cooker atmosphere of his defense against previously unbeaten Gerry Cooney last June 11 at Las Vegas, Nev.

Holmes still bristles about what he feels was unfair treatment by the media and some of the public in the weeks leading up to the Cooney bout, which he won when he stopped the previously unbeaten challenger in the 13th round.

The champion was accused by some of being a racist, and he feels he was treated as if he were the challenger.

None of that has occured here. In fact, Holmes' 13th title defense against Cobb, who, like Cooney, is white, is remarkable for its lack of hype. A small crowd is expected in the Astrodome.

The bout, blacked out in Houston, will be televised live on ABC from 9 p.m. to 11 p.m., EST.

Also featured on the show will be a 12-round bout in which Greg Page of Louisville, Ky., will defend the United States Boxing Association title against against James "Quick" Tillis of Chicago.

"Cobb is a nice guy," said Holmes. "He respects me, and I respect him as a human being."

Told that Holmes felt relaxed about the low-key atmosphere of the fight, Cobb, who takes little seriously, at least in public, said, "I'm certainly glad. I was worried about that."

Of course, there is pressure on Holmes, who is 40-0, with 30 knockouts, and who has made 12 successful title defenses.

"My biggest challenge is when I get in the ring Friday night," said the champion. "I'm unbeaten and I want to stay that way. Nobody in the world likes losers."

The late Rocky Marciano, 49-0, with 43 knockouts, is the only heavyweight champion to retire unbeaten.

Holmes, who became 33 Nov. 3, appears to be considering retirement.

One script calls for him to fight next spring, apparently against Lucien Rodriquez of France, then box an exhibition at his hotel near his hometown of Easton, Pa., at which he would announce his retirement.

But Holmes also said he could fight more than once if the money is right — such as $25 million for a rematch against Cooney.

"I don't think Larry Holmes is old at 33," he said.

The 26-year-old Cobb, a Texan who lives in Runnemede, N.J., has a physical edge of over Holmes.

Each is 6-foot-3 and Holmes and are actually even in reach — 81 to 80 inches in favor of Holmes — but Cobb is bigger and heavier — 234¼ pounds to 217½. Holmes is five pounds heavier than he was for the Cooney fight.

But Holmes has a big edge in experience over Cobb who had only two amateur fights and his 20-2, with 18 knockuts.

"If I got into it (boxing), I just knew I would do it (well)," said Cobb.

"I'm the one guy in the game that can change. I'm the guy who has great growth potential. I might even fool around and learn to fight."

It shapes up as a match between a boxer-puncher, Holmes, and a mauler who presses the action, Cobb.

"He fights like a puncher, but he's not a puncher," said Holmes. "He's tough and durable and takes a lot of punches. He's a face fighter, and I've never had trouble with face fighters."

"Larry works very, very well when he has established control," said Cobb. "But in the past I've shown I'm not the easiest guy to control."

Chaps lose first of '82 season

AMARILLO—Trinidad, Colo., handed the defending National Junior College Athletic Association champions of 1982 their first loss of the season, employing tough defense and aggressiveness on the boards for an 82-78 over Midland College in a first round Amarillo Classic game.

For the Chaparrals, it not only was the first defeat of the season, but the first in 30 games, dating back to an overtime loss at the hands of Amarillo College last December.

By winning, the Trojans, who were 26-5 last year, raised their record to 3-0.

THE CHAPS play Kilgore Junior College today at 4 p.m., face host Amarillo Saturday and then open the defense of their WJCC title at Clarendon College Monday night.

Down 78-68 with 5:47 left, the Chaps rallied on a pair of baskets by Spud Webb, who wound up with 19 points, and then Webb fed Jerome Crowe on a fast break to whittle the Trojans' edge to 78-74.

With 2:55 left, Trinidad went into its delay game as Henry Bee's free throw made it 80-74. Irvin Williams drove for a layup for the Chaps to make it 80-76 with 2:30 left. When 6-1 Roy Johnson missed a free throw for the Trojans, the Chaps had an opporunity to pull it out and when 6-7 Chester Smith hit a 12-footer and the Chaps forced a turnover, things looked good.

THE CHAPS failed to score and Roy Johnson missed a pair of free throws with 1:01 left, but then sank the deciding basket to end MC's long unbeaten streak.

Midland trailed by eight in the first half, but rallied to lead 39-36 at intermission.

Nate Bufford hit 20 points to pace the Chaps while Williams had 12 and Smith 13.

Six-three Byron Strickland, who held Webb to four points in the second half, scored 21 for the Trojans while Jim Johnson and Troy Sewell had 12 each, but 6-5 Henry Bee's aggressive play picked the Trojans up whenever they seemed to lag, although he scored only five points.

The Chaps played the game without Earl Wimbush, Webb's backup, who returned home to Houston.

Trinidad (82)—Byron Strickland 21, Al Davis 10, Jim Johnson 12, Troy Sewell 12, Roy Johnson 8, Henry Bee 5
Midland College (78)—Nat Bufford 20, Spud Webb 19 Irvin Williams 12, Jerome Crowe 9, Chester Smith 13.
Halftime—Midland College 39, Trinidad 36.

Longhorns gore Texas A&M, 53-16

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas prides itself on power football, slamming between the tackles, but a first-play touchdown pass from a tailback who had never completed a pass in college was the "real shot in the arm" in the Longhorns' 53-16 pounding of Texas A&M.

After A&M's Johnny Hector had zipped 21 yards to the Texas 13 only to lose a fumble, Texas tailback Darryl Clark floated a pass to Herkie Walls, who grabbed it near midfield and raced for a touchdown on an 87-yard scoring play Thursday.

The Thanksgiving Day victory for Sun Bowl-bound Texas, 8-2 and ranked No.14 in the nation, set up the regular season finale against ninth-ranked Arkansas in a nationally televised contest here Dec. 4.

"THE IMPACT of our first play really was significant," said Texas Coach Fred Akers. "Something big that early is a real shot in the arm."

Texas quarterback Robert Brewer said Akers decided before the game to use the play at the start, and Brewer added, "I think that play really shifted the momentum."

Clark, who ran for a game-high 137 yards on 16 carries to approach his first 1,000-yard season, said, "That was a great call, because we usually start a game running and they really took the bite."

He said he had never completed the pass even in practice except one day when the team worked in the gym.

"On the first play you can usually expect some sort of trick play. It was very well executed on their part, poorly executed on our part," said A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill.

The loss dropped Texas A&M in Sherrill's first Southwest Conference season since coming from Pittsburgh to 5-6.

TEXAS HAD 501 yards total offense, running for 279 — with third-team fullback Ervin Davis scoring on runs of 2, 3 and 27 yards — and hitting seven of 11 passes at better than 30 yards a clip for 222 yards.

Brewer threw scoring tosses of 6 yards to tight end Bobby Micho and 32 yards to Walls to raise his season record to 11, breaking the school mark of nine set in 1947 by All-American Bobby Layne.

Walls' touchdown catches were his eighth and ninth of the season, breaking by two the Longhorn record set by Hub Bechtol in the World War II era and tied by Johnny "Lam" Jones in 1979.

End Kiki DeAyala led a defensive charge that sacked Texas A&M quarterbacks Gary Kubiak and John Elkins seven times for 41 yards in losses and a safety, when Kubiak was thrown down in the end zone.

Houston Rocket Elvin Hayes tapes in a lay upover teamate Joe Bryant and Kansas City King Ed Neely in Thursday nights' game in the summit. The Rockets los their twelfth of 13 games.

Rockets blow 13-point lead, lose to Kansas City 88-79

HOUSTON (AP) — The Kansas City Kings suffered through 52 losses last season, now they have found the best way to forget all that.

Forward Eddie Johnson scored 10 of his game-high 19 points in the third quarter to lead the Kings to a club-record fourth straight road win, an 88-79 defeat of the Houston Rockets in the Summit Thursday night.

The victory gave the Kings a 7-3 record, good enough for the lead in the Western Conference's Midwest Division, and was their fifth straight overall.

The game was also the only one to be played Thursday in the National Basketball Association.

"We lost 52 games last year and we didn't like it," Johnson said. "So we're doing a lot of things to win. We didn't play real well tonight, but we knew if we kept the pressure on them we'd be in the game at the end."

The Kings were in the game the whole way. It was the Rockets, now 1-12, who struggled to stay in contention after blowing a 13-point lead in the second quarter.

Houston held a 39-26 advantage with eight minutes to go in the first half, but scored only two points the rest of the quarter. Reggie Johnson's dunk off a Mike Woodson steal with 1:05 left gave the Kings a 42-41 halftime edge.

The Rockets committed 10 of their 21 turnovers and shot only 31.6 percent in the second quarter, netting only 15 points.

Houston, which shot just 35.9 percent for the game, scored only 16 points in the third period as Kansas City opened a 70-57 bulge.

"It was a shame we couldn't find someone with a hot hand who could make some shots," said Houston Coach Del Harris. "It's impossible to get better shots against a ball club like Kansas City. They're one of the best defensive teams in the league."

Houston pulled to within five points late in the game and missed two opportunities to cut the Kings' lead to three before Eddie Johnson's three-point play with 1:09 remaining gave Kansas City an 85-77 lead.

Joe Bryant led Houston with 14 points while Ray Williams hit 12 for the Kings.

76ers' yearbook full of trivia

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

The Philadelphia 76ers' yearbook stands out as a treasure chest for National Basketball Association trivia buffs and lovers of offbeat information.

Thumbing through the 148-page guide, you can find statistical data that an ordinary person wouldn't dream anyone would take the trouble to find out.

A sampling, courtesy of Harvey Pollack, 76ers' director of public relations:

— California high schools had 46 graduates in the NBA last season, more than any other state. New York had 37 and Illinois 23. All the other states with NBA players are listed, down to Nevada, Missouri, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, Nebraska, Iowa and Idaho with one high school graduate each. There are four high schools with three graduates each — Crenshaw in Los Angeles, DeWitt Clinton in New York, DeMatha in Hyattsville, Md., and Mt. Vernon, N.Y.

— The 76ers had a possession record of 52-30 on the opening tipoff last season. Caldwell Jones was 32-14, Darryl Dawkins 19-12, Earl Cureton 1-3 and Julius Erving 0-1. The complete record against individual opponents also is included.

— Bobby Jones has played in 476 games in his career without a technical foul, more than any other active player. The other 15 NBA players who have appeared in 200 or more games without a technical also are listed.

— The book lists Philadelphia's biggest wins and worst losses against every NBA team since 1963.

— Moses Malone led the NBA in combined points, assists and rebounds for the fourth year in a row last season with 3,850, followed by Adrian Dantley with 3,295 and George Gervin with 3,130. The top 40 in the league are listed.

Some NFL teams playing like they're still on strike

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

Baltimore is rapidly establishing itself as the prohibitive favorite to earn the No.1 draft choice in the 1983 college draft.

You don't really expect anybody else in the National Football League to go 0-9, do you?

But the Colts ... ahh, that's a different story. Or, more precisely, the same story — week after dismal week.

This one won't be any different.

Last week's record against the spread: 9-5. For the season: 26-15.

This week's picks (home teams in caps):

BUFFALO minus 13 vs. Baltimore: The Colts stayed on strike one week longer than the rest of the league. Maybe they'll start to play this Sunday. Maybe not. Take the Bills.

CINCINNATI minus 3½ vs. Los Angeles Raiders. The Raiders have knocked off 1981's NFC West champion San Francisco 49ers and AFC West champ San Diego Chargers. Now it's on to the AFC Central Division. Take the Raiders. UP-SET SPECIAL.

NEW YORK JETS minus 3 vs. Green Bay. Don't let last week's shutout by the Jets fool you. They will have their hands full trying to cope with Lofton, Jefferson & Co. Take The Packers.

LOS ANGELES RAMS minus 3 vs. Kansas City: If the Rams keep it up, Anaheim Stadium will become a ghost town. Take the Chiefs.

SAN DIEGO minus 6½ vs. Denver: The Chargers won't let this one get away. Take the Chargers.

Pittsburgh minus 7 vs. SEATTLE: Terry Bradshaw will get back on the beam and dim the Seahawks' hopes of a resurgence. Take the Steelers.

Also take:

SAN FRANCISCO minus 8 over New Orleans

ATLANTA minus 6½ over St. Louis

MINNESOTA minus 5½ over Chicago

NEW ENGLAND minus 3½ over Houston

WASHINGTON minus 2½ over Philadelphia

Miami minus 2½ over TAM-PA BAY

Comeback Apuna, forget your grades

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Wayne Apuna, a junior linebacker who went AWOL on the Arizona State football team twice before, has left the sixth-ranked Sun Devils again and his college career could be over, according to ASU coaches.

Arizona State defensive coordinator Al Luginbill said Thursday that the 6-foot-2, 218-pound Apuna "is back in New Jersey" because "he has personal problems."

Luginbill wouldn't elaborate, but other members of the team said Apuna thought he would be ineligible for post-season play because he would not have passed all his classes in the semester ending Dec. 18.

"That's not true," Luginbill said. "Anyone taking 12 hours now is eligible for the Rose Bowl even if he doesn't pass any of the 12."

The Sun Devils, 9-1 overall on the season, can clinch the Pacific-10 Conference championship and accompanying Rose Bowl berth with a victory Saturday night over archrival Arizona.

Apuna, a native of Pearl City, Hawaii, rejoined the Sun Devil squad this fall after sitting out the past two seasons due to academic ineligibility.

He left the team during drills the past two springs and Arizona State Coach Darryl Rogers said Apuna would have to earn his way back onto the team this year.

As a second-string inside linebacker, Apuna was the squad's 10th-leading tackler with 59 including three quarterbacks sacks plus a fumble recovery.

Apuna broke his right hand in Arizona State's 17-13 loss to Washington here Nov. 13, but continued to attend practices up until last Friday. He had not been seen or heard from since team meetings Sunday before Luginbill tracked him down in New Jersey via a telephone call.

Giants 13, Lions 6

Taylor's giant miracle wins one for New York

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Linebacker Lawrence Taylor is only four games into his second year as a pro, but already the New York Giants expect — and frequently get — miracle performances from the 1981 National Football League Rookie of the Year.

Taylor intercepted a pass meant for Detroit halfback Horace King at the New York 3-yard line and galloped 97 yards up the sideiine for the winning touchdown in the fourth quarter as the Giants defeated the Lions 13-6 Thursday.

Taylor, who was nursing a sore right knee, didn't even start the game, but Coach Ray Perkins had to turn to him after the Lions grabbed an early 6-0 lead on Eddie Murray field goals of 46 and 44 yards.

"When Lawrence caught the ball, I knew he would go all the way," Giants' linebacker Brad Van Pelt said. "I expect it of him. In fact, the whole team expects it of him."

THE VICTORY was the Giants' first in four games while the Lions slipped to 2-2.

"We didn't know about Lawrence's leg," Perkins said. "But, we needed him in there because he makes the big plays."

It was one of three passes the Giants' defense — which had not been sharp in their first three games — picked off against Lions' quarterback Gary Danielson.

"The game highlights were that we won," Perkins said. "That's the bright spot — plus the fact that our defense played much better than it has."

Detroit Coach Monte Clark, clearly unhappy with his offense — which hasn't scored a touchdown in the Lions' two games since the end of the 57-day players' strike — ordered his team out for practice today and also canceled the Lions' scheduled day off on Monday.

"To say this is disappointing is putting it mildly," Clark said. "This is not the way we wanted to come out, at all."

AS HE has done all season, Clark started Eric Hipple at quarterback. However, when Hipple could complete just three of 12 passes for 39 yards in the first half, the Lions went to Danielson to begin the second half.

Danielson's very first pass was intercepted and Joe Danelo booted a 34-yard field goal. Moments later, Detroit tailback Billy Sims fumbled the ball away, leading to a 40-yard Danelo field goal to pull the Giants even at 6-6.

Danielson finished with 12 of 19 for 125 yards, but also gave up the three interceptions. New York quarterback Scott Brunner, son of Detroit offensive backfield coach John Brunner, hit 12 of 28 passes for 136 yards and had two picked off.

Sims responded with 114 yards rushing. Giants' rookie Butch Woolfolk, playing his first game in the state since earning All-American honors at Michigan, also was impressive, rushing 21 times for 87 yards and grabbing four passes for another 28 yards.

"BILLY SIMS was my idol in college," Woolfolk said. "I'm trying to do some things just like him."

New York's Leon Bright was carried off the field on a stretcher after being leveled by a hit from the Lions' Leonard Thompson as he tried to field a high punt in the fourth quarter. X-rays of Bright's neck proved negative, but the 5-foot-9, 192-pounder was kept overnight at St. Joseph Mercy Hospital in Pontiac overnight.

Bossy slaps in 70-footer, Paiement lifts Quebec over Calgary

BOSTON (AP) — For more than 56 minutes Mike Bossy of the New York Islanders was frustrated, failing to get even one shot on goal against the Boston Bruins.

Then, at 16:17 of the third period, the National Hockey League superstar shocked the Bruins Thursday night, drilling a 70-foot slap shot that lifted the Islanders to a 1-1 tie before a of 14,685 at Boston Garden.

It was one of only two games in the NHL Thursday night. In the other, Quebec beat Calgary 3-2.

"I was surprised it went in because of where I shot it from," said Bossy, who has 20 goals already this season after averaging better than 60 in his first five years.

"He got good wood on it, you've gotta give him credit," said Boston's Pete Peeters, the NHL's leading goalie foiled in a bid for his second shutout.

"Once a scorer always a scorer," players on both teams said in echoing an old hockey saying.

"HE GOT the puck when it was rolling and somebody was in his way," New York Coach Al Arbour said. "He slapped it and it was fluttering. That's how some of the long ones go in."

Taking a pass from Bryan Trottier, who collected his 500th NHL assist, Bossy wheeled through center ice. Then, approaching Boston defenseman Mike Milbury at the blue line, he suddenly let go his shot.

"Bossy has great release," said Peeters, who has a 2.49 goals-against average in a 10-4-4 record. "I knew he was shooting and I was out on top of my crease following the puck.

"At a certain point, about 4-5 feet away, something happened and I lost it for a split second. That's all I had to lose it for. It hit the thumb of my glove, snapped the glove back and went in. He made a heck of a shot, but I'm a little perturbed that I let it in. It seems now I'm letting shots go in with a few minutes to go to lose shutouts."

THE BRUINS, who defeated the Islanders 3-1 at Uniondale, N.Y., one week earlier, took a 1-0 lead on Barry Pederson's power play goal, scored on a passout from Peter McNab at 12:17 of the second period.

They had plenty of other fine scoring chances, outshooting the Islanders 32-19, but were foiled time and again by goalie Roland Melanson.

"It was a good hockey game," Boston Coach Gerry Cheevers said. "If we had a flaw it was just that we couldn't put it away. Only for a guy like Bossy would that shot go in. But it was the kind of game I wish I could have sat up (in the stands) and watched."

Nordiques 3, Flames

Wilf Paiement's 20-foot shot with less than two minutes remaining lifted Quebec over Calgary.

Quebec's other goals came from Anton and Marian Stastny. Lanny McDonald and Kevin LaVallee scored for the Flames.

Paiement, who played for the Toronto Maple Leafs last season, took a pass from Andre Dupont that had deflected off Calgary's Phil Russell and fired past Reggie Lemelin.

It was a frustrating defeat for the Flames. They had several excellent scoring chances in the third period. They took a 1-0 lead in the first period and ended the second even at 2-2.

Bowl pickers biting nails this week

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

This is the weekend the bowl people dread.

With all the annual talk about pushing the bowl-picking date back, what the bowls would just as soon do is end the regular season on the third Saturday in November when the invitations go out.

Right now, the Sugar Bowl is drooling over a shootout between the 1-2 teams, Georgia and Penn St. That could change if top-rated Georgia stumbles against Georgia Tech and Cotton Bowl-bound Pitt gains its revenge against runnerup Penn State.

The Orange Bowl won't know its host team until Friday when No. 11 Oklahoma visits third-ranked Nebraska for Big Eight honors.

Georgia Tech at No. 1 Georgia (favored by 20½): The Yellow Jackets have their best shot at Georgia in a number of years, but the Bulldogs can almost taste their second national championship in three Serafino "Foge" Fazio, but Joe's an old warhorse ... Penn State 28-21.

No. 11 Oklahoma at No. 3 Nebraska (7½): Winner goes Orange, loser goes Fiesta. That's losing? Miami gets ... Nebraska 24-21. years ... Georgia 42-7.

No. 5 Pitt at No. 2 Penn State (6): If ever a team was out for revenge, it is Pitt. Last year's 48-14 embarrassment merely cost the Panthers the national championship. Two Italian Stallion coaches in Joe Paterno and

No. 6 Arizona State (5) at Arizona: The Sun Devils, apparently out of the Rose Bowl picture two weeks ago, are suddenly back in it and a victory will send them to Pasadena for the first time. That should be enough incentive, but in the Upset Special of the Week ... Arizona 17-14.

Tulane at No. 7 LSU (24): The Green Wave humiliated the Tigers a year ago 48-7 and the Bayou Bengals haven't forgotten or forgiven. Turnabout is fair play ... LSU 48-7.

Wake Forest vs. No. 10 Clemson (21) at Tokyo, Japan: No, the NCAA hasn't deported the Tigers, which may be the only probation penalty it hasn't slapped on Clemson. This Mirage Bowl will be Clemson's only bowl for three years and this year they'll have to settle for an Atlantic Coast Conference championship ... Clemson 35-28.

Notre Dame at No. 17 Southern California (9½): Just what Notre Dame needs, a team with an added incentive. The Trojans want to give Coach John Robinson a farewell present ... Southern Cal 28-14.

Other games:

Alabama (4½) 20, Auburn 14; Hawaii 24, Air Force 20; Houston (20) 35, Rice 7; Long Beach State 31, Utah State 21; Arkansas State 21, Memphis State 17; Miami, Fla. 28, Cincinnati 10; Nevada-Las Vegas 35, Fullerton State 21; Oregon State 27, Oregon (5) 21; Oklahoma State 30, San Diego State 24; Tennessee 28, Vanderbilt (3½) 21.

Bright stays in Detroit hospital

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — New York Giants' punt return specialist Leon Bright was stay in a hospital here for observation Thursday night after taking a vicious hit from Detroit's Leonard Thompson in the fourth quarter of the Giants' nationally televised 13-6 National Football League victory over the Lions.

Bright, a 5-9, 192-pound, second-year pro out of Florida State, was carried off the field on a stretcher after Thompson's elbow caught him in the throat while he was attempting to field a punt at the Giants' 37-yard line with 9:04 remaining in the game. The Lions were given a 15-yard penalty for interfering with Bright's right to make the catch.

NFL management targeting Garvey

By The Associated Press

The National Football League is in its second post-strike week, but acrimony still lingers.

As players prepare to vote on the new collective bargaining agreement submitted by owners, union leader Ed Garvey is the target of continued complaints by the NFL Management Council.

"We had a completed agreement last week and now Ed has a new laundry list of things that he wants," says Jack Dolan, executive director of the Management Council.

The ratification process has been delayed as Garvey, executive director of the players' association, continues to argue that the players should not vote on the agreement until a number of issues still in conflict are resolved.

The union has given management until Monday midnight to settle the disputes. At that time, first the player reps and then the players will be asked to vote on those parts of the contract that have been initialed.

Among the items union officials say must be resolved is the owners' attempt to expand the season to 18 games next season without increasing the players' salaries and the owners' refusal to reinstate player representatives Herb Orvis of Baltimore and Mike Kadish of Buffalo.

On the first issue, management officials have repeatedly said the league has plans to extend the 1983 season.

"Garvey was the first one to mention an 18-game season, not us," Donlan insisted. "He brought it up on Thursday (Nov.18), two days after we reached a complete and total agreement. It is another example of Ed driving a wedge between the owners and the players because he thinks the more unrest between the parties, the better his position."

The union has refused, meanwhile, to drop a series of unfair labor charges against the league. These charges will be heard by an administrative law judge on Dec. 6. The union claims that actions by the owners have created and prolonged the strike.

A positive ruling by the judge would restore back wages lost by the players in the strike.

"I think, quite candidly, we will be very successful with those cases and I have no problem, whatsoever, saying they they won't get their money now, won't get their serverances and they can take their chances with the NLRB," Donlan said.

Meanwhile, management's chief negotiator warned the players Wednesday that failure to ratify the agreement will mean one less paycheck, a smaller playoff pool and the end of management's $60 million "money now" cash bonus plan.

The players, who returned to work last week following a 57-day strike, will be asked to either ratify or reject a five-year, $1.6-billion agreement hammered out by negotiators Nov. 16. On Tuesday, union officials said they expected the league's 1,500 players to reject the contract but continue playing.

Midwest Basketball Preview

Meyer just looking for 20 wins

By JOE MOOSHIL
AP Sports Writer

Ray Meyer of DePaul was only partly joking when he said "Our goal is to win 20 games, get into the NCAA tournament and then lose our first game," something that has become a habit with the Blue Demons in recent seasons.

Winning 20 basketball games is not going to be easy for DePaul or any other team in the Midwest where there will be stiff competition in the various conferences and even stiffer competition for playoff berths among the independents.

DePaul, Marquette and Notre Dame should be the top independents while championships in the various conferences will be up for grabs.

DePaul will be without a super star for the first time in years but Meyer views that as an interesting coaching challenge as he heads into his 41st year. All-American Terry Cummings, like Mark Aguirre before him, went to the pros so Meyer can employ various playing combinations involving the likes of Bernard Randolph, Ken Patterson, Walter Downing and newcomer Tony Jackson.

DEPAUL MIGHT not be America's winningest team this season but will be most visible by appearing on national television at least six times.

Hank Raymonds is still coaching at Marquette and he'll build around veterans Glenn "Doc" Rivers, Marc Marotta and Dwayne Johnson. The Warriors are shooting for an 18th straight winning season and 17th straight postseason tournament bid.

Notre Dame has John Paxson back and that's a good start in itself. Coach Digger Phelps went on a recruiting binge and came up with Tim Kempton, Ken Barlow and Joe Buchanan in trying to improve on a 10-17 record.

There will be changes this year in the Big Ten and Missouri Valley conferences. Both adopted the three-point goal but turned down going to a shot clock. The Mid-American Conference will play by the former rules without a three-point goal or shot clock.

THE BIG Ten has been the dominant basketball conference in the Midwest in recent years and when going to the Big Ten, it's always smart to start with Indiana.

Under Coach Bobby Knight the last 12 seasons, the Hoosiers have won or shared six Big Ten titles, captured two NCAA crowns and one NIT championship. Knight has a veteran team back including such veterans as Ted Kitchel, Randy Wittman and Jim Thomas.

Iowa lost Ken Arnold and Kevin Boyle but Coach Lute Olson has veterans returning in Michael Payne, Greg Stokes, Bob Hansen, Mark Gannon and Steve Carfino. If 7-foot Brad Louhas can break into the starting lineup, 6-10 Payne can shift to the forward position he prefers.

Minnesota lost most of its championship starting lineup but returning is 7-3 Randy Breuer, probably the best player in the Big Ten. Back again is 6-7 Zebedee Howell. Roland Brooks, a 6-7 junior college transfer, and 6-11 freshman John Shasky could help.

Ohio State has a veteran team returning but the Buckeyes lost Clark Kellogg and might be hard-pressed to duplicate their tie for second place. Michigan State and Illinois could be darkhorses. Michigan State lost only Kevin Smith and Illinois has a fine blend of veterans who will be joined by outstanding freshmen Efrem Winters and Bruce Douglas.

BRADLEY WON the Missouri Valley title but was knocked out of the conference tournament by Illinois State and failed to receive a bid to the NCAA much to the dismay of Coach Dick Versace who took his Braves to the NIT and virtually stormed to the championship.

Willie Scott and Barney Mines return in the backcourt but Versace must rebuild the front line starting with Voise Winters and Pierre Cooper who has had health problems.

Tulsa with Bruce Vanley, Illinois State with Rick Lamb and Wichita State with Antoine Carr will be contenders. Creighton also could be a factor if 7-foot Benoit Benjamin, one of the nation's most sought preps, lives up to expectations.

Ball State graduated five players from its championship team and lost Coach Steve Yoder to Wisconsin, all of which should open things up in the Mid-American Conference. Top contenders appear to be Bowling Green, Toledo and Ohio University, all of whom can field veteran teams.

Last year Evansville captured the Midwestern City Conference title, won the league playoff and advanced to the NCAA tournament with a 23-6 record. The Aces lost Brad Leaf but have 6-9 point guard Richie Johnson back.

Oral Roberts with 6-7 Chris Cantrell and Xavier, returning all five starters including Anthony Hicks, figure to be serious challengers.

MVP Holloway wants Grey Cup

Former Vol can't enjoy honor just yet

TORONTO (AP) — Condredge Holloway already has captured one award this year. Now he wants the big one — the Grey Cup.

The former University of Tennessee quarterback will lead the Toronto Argonauts into Sunday's 71st Grey Cup — the Canadian Football League's championship game — against the Edmonton Eskimos, the most dominant team ever to be assembled in the CFL. The game will be telecast nationally on cable by ESPN.

Holloway, an eight-year CFL veteran, was named the league's most valuable player Thursday night. After accepting the honor he admitted it was somewhat of a distraction.

"I wish I could really enjoy this," Holloway said. "But the big thing this week is to get ready for the Grey Cup."

Holloway's parents and sister were on hand to see the 28-year-old quarterback, in his second year with the Argos, capture the Schenley Trophy, beating out Edmonton wide receiver Tom Scott of the University of Washington.

Other Schenley winners included Ottawa quarterback Chris Isaac of Eastern Kentucky, rookie of the year; Edmonton defensive tackle James Parker of Wake Forest, defensive player; Ottawa guard Rudy Phillips of North Texas State, offensive lineman; and Hamilton wide receiver Rocky DiPietro, Canadian player of the year.

In 1972, Holloway, a sophomore, made his collegiate debut against Georgia Tech, a start that made big news at the time.

"You got to remember that I lived in Alabama," said Holloway, "so starting for the Vols was no big deal for me. Coach (Bill) Battle and the rest of the staff shielded me from any of the gaff.

"But I do remember all the hype. Georgia Tech was starting a black quarterback, too. There was more made over the fact of who was starting for the two teams than the rivalry of the teams."

Battle, now a businessman in Selma, Ala., also remembers the game well.

"A Georgia player picked off his first pass and looked to be on his way for a touchdown," Battle said. "But it was Condredge who came out of nowhere and nailed him at the five-yard line. Our defense held and we went on to win big."

After graduation, Holloway signing with the Ottawa Rough Riders.

"They came to me straightaway and said, 'I want you to play quarterback,' " said Holloway, who noted the National Football League teams wanted him to switch to either the defensive backfield or wide receiver.

His first four years he shared the signal-calling spot with former Notre Dame quarterback Tom Clements, who is now with the Hamilton Tiger-Cats. Prior to 1981, Toronto acquired Holloway in a bid to strengthen the club enough for a Grey Cup berth.

During the regular season, Holloway completed 299 of 507 passes for 4,661 yards and 31 touchdowns. His yardage total was the third best in the league behind Edmonton's Warren Moon and Clements.

Saudi's, Iran struggling for control of oil-rich sheikdoms

By DAVID B. OTTAWAY
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

MANAMA, Bahrain — Conservative Saudi Arabia and revolutionary Iran are locked in a struggle for control over the oil-wealthy sheikdoms strung out along the Arab side of the Persian Gulf. The outcome could well determine which country emerges as the dominant power in the gulf as well as the survival of the Saudi monarchy.

The conflict has become entwined in the 26-month-old war between Iran and Iraq, with the Saudis depending on the Iraqis to hold the Iranians at bay while they seek to incorporate the vulnerable sheikdoms into a Saudi-dominated and U.S.-supported collective security arrangement.

The Iranians are using the carrot and stick to woo the sheikdoms away from the Saudi orbit and get them to halt their sizable aid, primarily billions of dollars in loans, to the Iraqi side. There are signs the Iranians are having some success, to the consternation of the Iraqis and Saudis.

Underlying the struggle for dominance over the world's oil heartland, where 56 percent of all known reserves are located, is the dynamism of Iran's Islamic revolution, whose Shiite apostles say they seek to bring down the socialist Baath government of Saddam Hussein in Iraq on the one hand and overthrow the Saudi monarchy on the other.

The conflict between these two fundamentalist Islamic states — Saudi Arabia a close ally of the United States and Iran its bitter enemy — seems to be worsening, and, along with the Iranian-Iraqi war, it is totally consuming the politics of the gulf.

Last December, the authorities here arrested 73 Iranian-trained dissidents who were intent on overthrowing the ruling Al Khalifa family and establishing a Khomeini-style revolutionary Islamic state. Western diplomatic and Bahraini sources say Iran's Revolutionary Guards are still training gulf revolutionaries in two camps where the 73 were indoctrinated and that there is another one operating in Syria.

THE IRANIANS are recruiting mainly among the Shiite communities in the Arab gulf states. Shiite Moslems make up at least 60 percent of Bahrain's 350,000 people and constitute small, but politically active minorities in several other gulf states, including Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

Since last December's unsuccessful coup, Bahrain is reliably reported to have expelled by boat 200 to 300 suspected Shiite dissidents while Kuwait has thrown out 20,000 foreigners, mostly Shiites, thus providing the Iranians with plenty of potential recruits for their training camps.

The Iranian challenge to Saudi religious and political leadership was most recently laid down in late September during the annual pilgrimage to Mecca, when thousands of Iranian Shiite zealots staged demonstrations in favor of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and tried to proselytize among the 2 million Moslem pilgrims in attendance.

After a series of violent clashes, the Saudi authorities finally expelled 100 Iranians including their leader, Hojatoleslam Mousavi Khoiniha.

The Iranians had already made clear their revolutionary intentions in early June by sending their deputy foreign minister, Hossein Sheikholeslam, to Abu Dhabi to tell its ruler, Sheik Zayid Sultan Nuhayan, that their main target after the war with Iraq ends is Saudi Arabia.

This message was relayed to David Steel, leader of the British Liberal Party, who was then also visiting Abu Dhabi, according to a member of his delegation.

The "cold war" between Saudi Arabia and Iran is not just a matter of words, either. The two are at loggerheads inside the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, with Iran flouting its production quota and selling its oil as low at $29 a barrel, undercutting the Saudi benchmark price by $5.

AS A RESULT of its price war, Iran has been able to push up its production to 2 million barrels a day, despite the soft world market, while that of Saudi Arabia has tumbled to 5.5 million barrels, a cutback of nearly one-half in less than two years.

The mounting pressures and counterpressures were very much in evidence at a summit here of the six members of the Arab Gulf Cooperation Council earlier this month.

The council was created just 18 months ago, partly in response to the threat from Iran's Islamic revolution and the Iranian-Iraqi war and partly as a result of longstanding efforts by Kuwait and Saudi Arabia to bring the vulnerable Arab monarchies closer together.

The grouping comprises Oman, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar and Bahrain in addition to Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, and deliberately excludes Iraq on the ground that it has a socialist economic and republican political order.

The six constitute only a fraction of the Arab world's total population — 10 million to 11 million of its roughly 140 million people. But they produce currently 7 million to 8 million barrels of oil daily, more than 40 percent of OPEC's total. They also account for 20 percent of U.S. imports, 56 percent of Europe's and nearly 70 percent of Japan's.

Here at the council's third summit, the Saudis pushed hard for a strong condemnation of Iran and hoped to sign a collective internal security accord as well as a defense pact. They were also reportedly seeking to raise billions of dollars in additional financial aid — $35 billion according to some accounts — to help Iraq finance its war against Iran. Already, the six have provided Iraq somewhere between $25 billion and $30 billion in loans and grants.

THE SAUDIS were thwarted on all three accounts, although the six did agree on the first steps to be taken toward setting up a common market starting March 1 as well as approve the principle of closer coordination among their meager armed forces.

The reasons for the lack of agreement here on a common stand toward Iran or the immediate conclusion of a collective security and defense pact are numerous. But among the most troubling to the Saudis is the clear trend by two of its Arab Gulf allies — the United Arab Emirates and Kuwait — to seek accommodation rather than increased confrontation with Iran and to keep some independence of action from the kingdom in security and defense affairs.

The emirates' ruler, Sheik Zayid, in particular has responded positively to Iranian overtures since last spring. A number of high-level Iranian officials, including Foreign Affairs Minister Ali Akbar Velayati, have visited Abu Dhabi offering enticements such as trade deals and a joint bank.

Earlier this month, Iran announced that it was sending its ambassador back to Abu Dhabi, a clear indication of both sides' interest in improving relations even at a time when those between Tehran and Riyadh are steadily deteriorating.

Kuwait has also tried to keep its door open to Tehran although it has continued to serve as a transit point for goods and war materiel going to Iraq.

Wedged between Iraq and Iran at the top of the Gulf, Kuwait, a city state of only 1.4 million, has long sought to maintain a balanced and "neutral" foreign policy among its powerful neighbors and to keep a measure of independence from Saudi Arabia.

It was mainly responsible for the failure of the council members to sign a collective internal security agreement here and it refused to sign even a bilateral one with the Saudis, despite the fact the other four sheikdoms did earlier this year.

THE KUWAITIS say they cannot sign the Saudi-proposed accord because its provisions for the extradition of wanted persons violate their constitution. But it is widely belived that the real reason stems from Kuwaiti resistance to being drawn too tightly into the Saudi security orbit or the Iranian-Saudi feud.

Iran has already twice bombed targets in Kuwait, including a multimillion-dollar oil installation, as an apparent warning to it for aiding Iraq.

Kuwait has also been dragging its feet on another Saudi-proposed scheme for a collective air defense system, which it would presumably coordinate with the aid of the five U.S.-provided Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS) aircraft.

Again, no agreement was reached at the summit here on establishing one, and Bahraini Foreign Minister Mohammed Bin Mubarek admitted at a press conference the six had "a long way to go."

A year ago, the Arab gulf leaders were talking about establishing not only a collective air defense system but also a joint "rapid deployment force" to put down any attempt to overthrow one of them and thwart any attack from outside.

But the technical problems of doing this, even if a political agreement were reached, have been brought home by the failure last March of even the AWACS planes to spot a Phantom jet piloted by a defecting Iranian before it was about to land at Dhahran airport in Saudi Arabia.

"It is astonishingly complex to have a joint control and command system," remarked one Western diplomat here. "I don't think the (gulf council's) military capability will frighten anybody for a long time."

FOR THE TIME being, the six council members are concentrating on trying to coordinate, rather then integrate, their defense forces, beginning wth their ground radar systems.

At the summit here, the Saudis also pushed for a strong condemnation of Iran and its threats against the Saudi monarchy. But neither Kuwait, the emirates nor its closest ally, Qatar, would go along with the Saudi hard line, according to conference sources.

In the end, the summit limited its criticism of Iran to its crossing the border into Iraqi territory, which it described as a "threat to the entire Arab nation," and called on Tehran to heed the appeal of Islamic and nonaligned nations, as well as the United Nations, for a peaceful settlement.

The Saudi bid to get more financial aid for Iraq also reportedly failed. Iraq was said to be asking for a $35 billion aid package. Bahraini Foreign Minister Mubarek denied that the summit took up the request.

Nigeria's economy strained by effects of world oil 'glut'

By LEON DASH
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

LAGOS, Nigeria — This country's previously buoyant economy has been plunged into financial straits similar to those affecting other Third World petroleum exporters as the global oil glut dramatically cuts back Nigeria's share in the world market.

Staggered by a drop of more than 50 percent in oil revenues during the past two years, for example, Nigeria — which once had abundant cash supplies — today is faced with a sharply contracting economy as evidenced by a $5 billion arrears debt on imports and other short-term financial obligations such as foreign profit remittances.

The growing backlog, according to Western economists, is caused by a document-processing slowdown at the Nigerian Central Bank. Previously there was a one-month average for payments, but that has been prolonged currently to as much as a three-month delay because foreign cash reserves have fallen from the $10 billion surplus of 1980 to less than $1 billion at present — not enough to finance one month's imports at current volumes.

An ominous development for Nigeria's future financial standing is the refusal of foreign banks in Lagos to accept or issue letters of credit while the payment backlog persists, the economists said.

As in other Third World countries whose economies are heavily dependent on crude oil, such as Mexico and Indonesia, Nigeria's economic crisis illustrates the fragility of singularly oil-based economies and the dislocation that occurs when demand and prices drop. The government will have to finance an estimated $4.3 billion austerity budget deficit next year with expensive overseas borrowing.

ECONOMISTS HERE said Nigeria will be facing a critical economic crunch in the immediate future. But they are optimistic that Africa's most populous nation, with an estimated 100 million people, will weather the current crisis in the long run by reducing fiscal expenditures and scaling down ambitious development projects that Nigerian leaders have looked to as a means of diversifying the economy.

One $2.5 billion project, a 250-mile railroad linking the coastal city of Port Harcourt with the steel mill under construction in the city of Ajaokuta, has been temporarily abandoned.

Nigeria's external long-term debt is a relatively small $12.3 billion, while its debt-service ratio, compared to other recession-plagued African countries, is an easily managed 15 percent.

Even with the drop in total government revenues from $26 billion in 1980 to a hoped-for $14 billion this year, Nigeria remains underborrowed, according to economists.

In a budget speech early this month, Nigerian President Shehu Shagari — using Mexico's plight as an example — made the same point.

Mexico "is an oil producing country which today has a foreign debt figure of over $80 billion," said Shagari. What Nigeria is "now experiencing is by comparison not as alarming, though this is not to say there is no cause for concern," he added.

"The position in which we have found ourselves is almost inescapable because, being part and parcel of the world economy, there is no way in which we can fully be insulated from the global economic blizzard," Shagari said.

YET, WHILE Nigeria, unlike Mexico, is in a good credit position for long-term commercial loans, the country's economic planners may run into difficulties in these somber times borrowing billions of dollars overseas to finance budget deficits.

"Nigeria is not overborrowed," said one economist, "but its reputation of timely (payment) of its debts is bad, and banks have become much more cautious in these times than they have been."

And there "is not a lot of commercial loan money available these days," he added.

He and another economist said the Nigerian government in 1979 had projected oil production of 2.2 million barrels a day and a continual increase in oil prices up to 1985. "It is a classic example of government misplanning," said one. Budgetary growth and development plans were based on unrealistically high income expectations.

In March, Nigeria's Central Bank startled local businessmen and bankers when it ordered a sudden halt to issuing letters of credit, the means to finance imports. At the time, oil production plummeted to a low of 700,000 barrels a day. When import financing facilities were resumed in April, Shagari simultaneously introduced stringent austerity measures — a 250 percent preorder deposit duty on cars, for example — that dropped the monthly import bill from $1.8 billion to its present $1.2 billion.

Oil prices have fallen from a high of $40 a barrel to $33.50 a barrel. In 1980, oil exports produced 90 percent of government revenues, but today they account for 60 percent. The rest is made up by cocoa and other non-petroleum exports.

A LOYAL MEMBER of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, Nigeria's pricing, production and marketing strategies are limited by its adherence to the organization's production quotas and price agreements as largely determined by Saudi Arabia, OPEC's most powerful member in establishing world petroleum supply levels.

Nigeria's production gradually climbed back to 1.3 million barrels a day by May and averaged a high of 1.5 million barrels in October, but the heady high-income days of more than 2 million barrels-a-day seem to be gone for the near future.

OPEC producers are facing increasing price competition from non-OPEC oil exporting countries, such as Great Britain's North Sea exports.

Oil companies have retooled their refineries to use the harder to process, but cheaper heavy crudes substantially lowering the demand for the higher-priced light sulfur "sweet crudes" such as Nigeria produces.

Energy conservation measures and the world recession also have cut demand.

ALL OF THESE factors have recently pushed Nigeria from second place after Saudi Arabia as a supplier of imported oil to the United States to fourth place behind Mexico and Britain, which hold second and third places, respectively.

News reports here quote one of Shagari's economic advisers, John Jideonwo, as saying that Nigeria's oil production can be expected "to stagnate" at 1.3 million barrels a day until 1985. Jideonwo said he based his calculations on OPEC's declining share of the world oil market.

Figures show more women executives fired than men

By BRENDA FINE
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — Buried in a mountain of unemployment statistics are figures showing that more women executives are being fired than men.

As of October, 175,000 women administrators and managers were out of work. That's 4.7 percent more than the number of their male counterparts.

One reason for the imbalance may be because women tend to be concentrated in service areas, said Deborah Klein, a senior economist with the Labor Department in Washington, D.C., while male executives predominatein goods-producing areas.

A survey conducted for Korn/Ferry International profiled the "typical" woman executive and reinforced "the idea that women have been succeeding in the softer fields" such as personnel, marketing, finance and consumer products.

This raises an obvious question: if women are "succeeding" in these areas, why the rise in layoffs?

"It's partly the old 'last in, first out' syndrome," says June Squire, associate director of Career Clinics, an executive outplacement counseling service. "Women have the skills, most definitely, but what they often lack is the seniority."

Felice Schwartz, president of Catalyst, a national organization helping women enter into and advance in their careers, agrees that seniority is a key to the problem. "Until effective ways of judging by productivity are developed, companies will continue to lay off by seniority. Women will suffer because they're usually the most recent entries.

"Women are suffering more than men right now," Schwartz maintained. "The 1929 depression was a disaster because families depended on the man as the single wage-earner. This time around, most families have two paychecks, so the loss of one isn't totally devastating."

But the emotional impact of being fired may be felt more severely by women executives than by men. Women tend to blame themselves for being fired, rather than the economy, according to a report in the Wall Street Journal. And because they often have to work harder to prove themselves in the business world, the loss of what has been achieved is a double blow to the dented female executive's ego.

Squires, however, whose outplacement firm counsels both sexes, sees the emotional consequences of losing a job as potentially devastating to men and women alike.

"We deal with the loss of a job as seriously as we would a death or a divorce," she said. "Actually, on stress levels, loss of job is right up there with loss of a loved one."

Says Schwartz of Catalyst: "Of course it seems like a walloping blow (to a woman) until she looks around and realizes that men are being laid off, too. Moving up in the corporate world is a set process — one that takes a certain amount of time."

On the other hand, the fall may be swift. It can take only two weeks to be fired.

New Pepper at Dr Pepper

DALLAS (AP) — Dr Pepper Co. says its president, Charles L. Jarvie, resigned and was replaced by Richard Q. Armstrong, president of its Canada Dry unit.

Dr Pepper Chairman W.W. Clements issued a statement saying Jarvie's resignation was spurred by disagreements on the company's operating strategy.

"Chuck Jarvie and I have a great deal of respect for each other and a good relationship," Clements said, "but we also have different views about the company's strategy, and in light of this an amicable parting is best."

Clements said the change was effective Wednesday.

Dr Pepper spokesman Corky Brown declined to comment when asked if Jarvie was asked to resign.

Dr Pepper's profit in the third quarter of this year fell 71 percent from a year earlier.

Graham's Pharmacy-Crawley's Rexall Drug, located at 319 Dodson in the Village, is the place to shop for all your Christmas gifts. They have a complete selection of fine gifts for everyone on your list and offer free gift wrapping on purchases of $5 and up, as well as layaway service. Employees Phyllis Glass and Angie Ward are busy wrapping gifts for Christmas. Not pictured are Bea Sears, cosmetics saleslady, and Lisa Daniel.

Graham's for Christmas

Paid Advertisement

Don't panic as Christmas approaches; instead, try combining several shopping trips into one with a trip to Graham's Pharmacy-Crawley's Rexall Drug. That's right, Graham's Pharmacy has one of the most complete selection of unusual gift items in Midland with free gift wrapping on purchases of $5 or more.

Layaway service is available and there's no minimum purchase required. Your layaway will be held for you until Christmas Eve, if you like. Personalized Christmas cards are available for order until Dec. 1; so come in and pick out your christmas cards now. Graham's is open Monday through Saturday from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. for your shopping convenience.

Graham's, located at 319 Dodson in the Village, has every shelf full of unusual gift ideas. There is a wide selection of fine men's gifts such as shoeshine kits, leather attache cases, leather travel sets, cigar and cigarette boxes, ashtrays, colognes, jewelry boxes and many more. Men's gifts are sometimes hard to find, so if you're in a bind for a gift and don't know where in the world you're going to find that perfect item for the special men in your life, come on out to Graham's.

For women, there are gift sets, including bath powders, colognes, a complete selection of Celebrity jewelry and lingerie cases; scented candles, soaps, sachets, potpourri, small appliances, jewelry boxes and jewelry; wind chimes, wooden gift items; Hummell figurines, as well as Hummell books; Pfaltzgraff pottery; Fitz and Floyd gift items and a great selection of glassware.

Own your own Benefits of office ownership

Paid Advertisement

Owning your own office space is not only practical from a proprietory point of view, but makes good economic sense as well. The offices at Big Spring Sixteen-O-Three North offers you yet another advantage: 100 percent financing and a convenient location.

The offices at Sixteen-O-Three North are built to give you an outside or atrium view; none of that closed in feeling of the multi-story projects which abound. The most important feature of this particular project, however, is the fact that by buying one or more of these condiminium units, you can proportionately share in the common areas of the building, such as the reception area, kitchen and baths, which give you additional space to use at no additional cost. According to Tom King, who along with Bill Chancellor owns this project, the amenities offered by ownership in Sixteen-O-Three North include sharing of secretarial and telephone answering services, sharing of expenses including utilities, insurance and taxes, and the fact that unlike renting office space, your payments are set and can not be increased over the life of the financing.

King also points out the tax advantages in owning your own office space which can result in a savings in taxes of up to 50 percent a year.

There are still several spaces available at the project, ranging in size from 174 square feet up to almost 800 square feet. Financing is at 100 percent for 15 years at the lowest market rates. The white, one-story stucco building, located at 1603 N. Big Spring, is well-designed to give each office an outside view, as well as a view of the central atrium. Each office also has a skylight. This results in office space which is light and airy, giving one a feeling of being outdoors. There is covered parking in back of the building, as well as a parking area in front for visitors. The building is close to downtown, yet far enough away to avoid the traffic congestion.

For information on purchasing one of these office spaces, call Tom King at 682-6000.

K & C Industrial-Developers began in Midland with the opening of an industrial development in Industrial Park near I-20 and Francis St. in 1977. During the past five years, this facility has grown to capacity, and K & C are involved in many other projects throughout the Midland area.

Tom King and Bill Chancellor, owners of K & C Industrial-Developers would like to point out the advantages of office ownership and invite interested parties to come by Big Spring Sixteen-O-Three North, their condiminium office building located at 1603 N. Big Spring.

For one Texaco worker 1982 hasn't been the best of years

By JERRY GRIMES

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — For Jimmy Dement, 1982 hasn't been the best of years.

He was one of nearly 4,000 Texaco employees who went on strike last January, and one of four men injured in an Oct. 13 accident when a hot catalyst was sprayed on workers..

Recently, his wife, Lisa, faced surgery and a stay in the hospital.

"Well, you know, when it rains, it pours," Dement said.

Unfortunately, it seems to be still pouring on 22-year-old Jimmy Dement.

Last week he got the word that he will be one of about 250 employees who will be laid off by Texaco during the next seven days.

The layoffs, Texaco says, are a part of an overall effort to increase the productivity and efficiency of the Port Arthur refinery.

A former auto mechanic, Dement came to Texaco in June of 1981. He earned the right to bid into the coveted operator's classification at the refinery after having been in the yard department for only a few months.

"When I got the job at Texaco," Dement said, "I really thought things were going to be looking up for me."

Facing the unemployment line only days after being released by his doctor, he said, "I'm not too excited about going back to a refinery right now, to tell you the truth," he said.

The accident still weights his thoughts, he admitted.

"If you don't mind," he said, "I don't really want to discuss that."

Dement says he will qualify for unemployment benefits of about $147 per week, and adds there is always hope that the economic conditions will improve or that somehow he can be rehired.

Most of his hope, Dement admits, lies in a union-initiated plan which would, if accepted by Texaco, put some of the workers to be laid off back to work as temporary laborers. The job would mean a change in responsibility and a fairly substantial cut in pay, Dement says, but it would also mean working again.

"I loved my job. I couldn't stand doing the same old thing every day at some place," he said.

Working as a temporary employee, Dement would lose his company-paid benefits, which include various kinds of insurance and other amenities. And his pay rate would drop from around $12 an hour to about $8.75 — the union's bottom scale.

"I could go for that in a heartbeat," Dement said of the plan. "From what I gather it would be all labor work, but there ain't nothing wrong with that. That would be fine," he said.

Dement, like a good number of the rank-and-file employees at Texaco, is an avid supporter of his union.

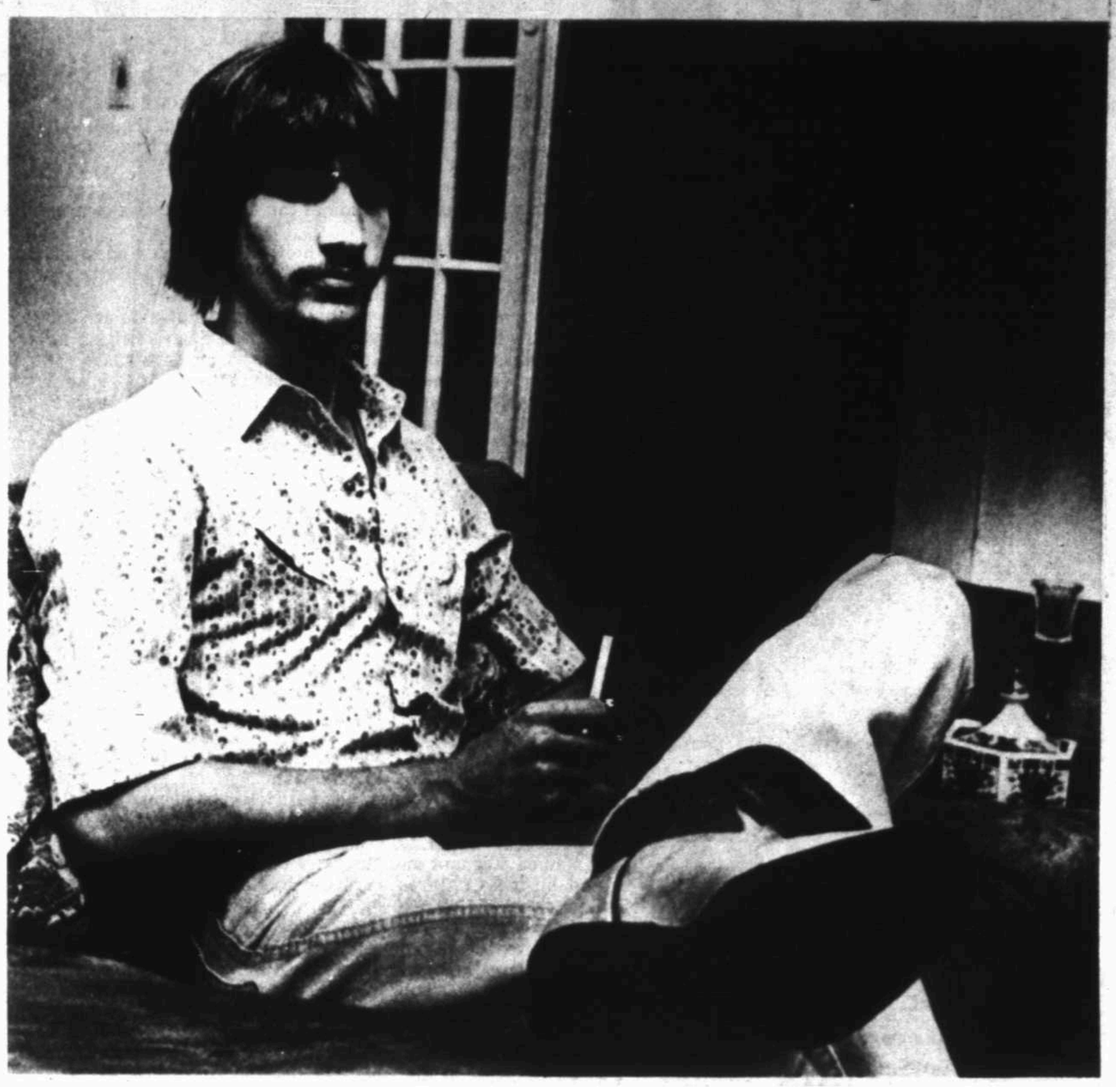
And while it was a company decision to eliminate jobs at the facility, it was, ironically, the union system — which insures that layoffs will be handled by seniority — that determined he would be one of the workers to be laid off.

"I mean to tell you," he answers without hesitation when asked if he still supports unionism.

"It's the only fair way to do it. You can't have a company picking people they want to get rid of and people they'd like to keep. It's just not fair," Dement said.

Dement says he has "no hard feelings" toward Texaco, either.

"After the accident they treated us real good." he said of the company.



Jimmy Dement, one of four injured in an accident at the Texaco Refinery catalyst plant in Port Arthur in October, discusses his future. He received word last week that he will be one of about 250 employees who will be laid off by Texaco. The company says layoffs are part of an effort to increase productivity and efficiency of the refinery.

Business pulling out stops

By THOMAS B. EDSALL
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — The business community is pulling out the stops to win approval of a bill requiring federal agencies to perform cost-benefit analyses before issuing major regulations, but the legislation appears likely to be caught in a legislative logjam as the 97th Congress comes to a close.

The measure, opposed by a wide range of consumer, environmental and labor groups, along with a number of Democratic House committee chairmen, won easy approval in the Senate last year, 94-0.

Since then, however, it has become the subject of protracted, and often controversial, negotiations in the House.

Business lobbies, with the Chamber of Commerce and the Business Roundtable leading the charge, are struggling to push the legislation through two hurdles, first the Rules Committee, and second the full House.

The regulatory reform bill, which critics call the "regulatory paralysis" bill, almost cleared the Rules Committee at the end of the regular session of Congress in October, but it was shoved aside at the last minute in deference to the balanced-budget constitutional amendment.

The bill's proponents contend it would force regulatory agencies to examine the economic consequences of decisions, and to make a public declaration of the cost of major regulatory proposals.

Opponents counter that the measure would tie regulatory agencies in knots of red tape, making the regulatory process more complex.

The issue has become more controversial because of the unusual procedures used to change the measure after it was approved by the House Judiciary Committee. Over the past four months, it has been subject to extensive tailoring during private negotiations between the staff of House Speaker Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., the Business Roundtable and the Reagan administration.

Angered that they were left out of the process, critics of the bill have complained bitterly that the "modified draft was developed in negotiations ... without the participation of environmental, consumer, civil rights and labor organizations."

But O'Neill's aides, who are not enthusiastic about the bill, contend they have succeeded in modifying it along the lines sought by the public interest and labor groups, and that the private negotiations produced better legislation than when the complaining groups were directly involved.

Congressional opposition to the bill is led by Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee and a formidable legislative tactician. In a letter to the speaker, Dingell argued that the bill "does not provide for regulatory reform, but actually for more red tape, a bureaucracy with greater power vested in the president and restriction of the independence of the regulatory agencies."

Dingell and his allies have the advantage of severe time restrictions created by the three-week long lame-duck session of Congress.

Proponents face problems not only getting the Rules Committee to act, but also getting the leadership to agree to consideration of a significant and controversial bill at a time when the agenda is crowded with appropriation measures and the new proposal to raise the gasoline tax.

Official sees 50-50 chance for success

Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

GENEVA — After a day of only marginal progress on most issues and complete deadlock on the rest, a high U.S. trade official said Thursday that he now sees only a 50-50 chance of success for the ministerial meeting of the 88 members of the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs.

Some kind of a final document will emerge from the meeting on Saturday, but it is unlikely to amount to much more than a general reaffirmation of adherence to broad GATT principles of free trade, along with the establishment of some special study groups to examine possible action in certain areas such as trade in high technology, GATT complaint procedures, and a code of practices for commerce in services such as banking and insurance.

Agriculture remains the big stumbling block. The European Common Market nations rejected an American delegation for a study on phasing-out agricultural export subsidies.

According to the American delegation official, such an agreement, at least to study the problem, would be the minimum the Reagan administration would need to hold off congressional demands for a U.S. export subsidy program to counter that of the Common Market. American farmers, with large surpluses of grain and other commodities, complain that the subsidized European exports compete unfairly with American exports.

But, the American delegation official said, "The European community is not interested in our proposal."

This was confirmed by the Common Market's chief negotiator, Roy Denman, who said flatly that "such a study would be unacceptable to us — we are not prepared to go back on what was agreed in the Tokyo round (the last GATT negotiations)."

Asked if he was concerned about what would happen to world markets if the United States started subsidizing exports to get rid of its surpluses as the Common Market does, Denman replied: "They are perfectly entitled to do that under the rules agreed in the Tokyo round, provided they do not take more than an equitable share of the world market as a result of subsidies."

But, he said, if the Common Market felt the U.S. subsidies were giving the United States a "more than equitable market share, we should not hesitate to make a complaint through the GATT machinery."

May be time for buyers to take plunge

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's mortgage lenders suggested Wednesday that now is the time to take the plunge for Americans who want to buy a house.

"This is the best time to start that process of buying a house and negotiating a bargain, both on interest rates and housing prices," said Mark Riedy, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, which represents some 1,900 companies in business to make home loans.

Riedy's reasoning was that mortgage rates — running in the range of 12 percent to 13½ percent — aren't going to get much lower and that houses prices also have hit bottom in the current market.

"There's no reason to wait any longer for a better deal in the mortgage market," he said at a news conference.

Declines in house prices "are about over in most of the markets in this country and they're beginning to firm up," he said. Those prices likely will start to rise slowly over the next several months, he said.

Ted Gibson, senior economist at San Francisco's Crocker National Bank, generally agreed with Riedy's analysis, might fall a little more.

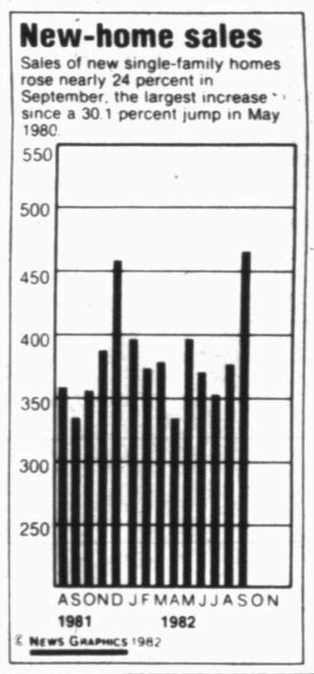
"My feeling has always been that the best time to buy a house is after the major part of the rate decline but before sales begin to pick up momentumn," he said.

As a result, he said, now is probably the time potential homebuyers could get the best combination on interest rates and house prices. Through the first half of 1983, he said, "would be an excellent time to buy a house."

While mortgage rates have come down substantially, he said, "there are no assurances they will come down" further. He cautioned consumers against waiting for "the magic moment" when rates hit their low point. "To wait much longer is to take a risk."

Average mortgage rates charged by major lenders reached a record 18.17 percent in October of 1981, according to government data. The ceiling on FHA-and VA-insured loans hit its peak at 17.5 percent in September 1981 before dropping to its current 12 percent ceiling. Variable rate mortgages generally run under their fixed-rate counterparts.

Riedy, like other economists and industry spokesmen, didn't foresee a return to single-digit mortgage rates anytime soon.



Car sales up

DETROIT (AP) — The five major U.S. automakers say mid-November sales of new cars rose 40.2 percent from a year earlier.

Bargain-hunting consumers taking advantage of low interest rates, rebates and free airline tickets offered by some carmakers help spur the increase, industry analysts said.

The carmakers said Wednesday they sold 209,917 cars in the Nov. 11-20 period compared with 149,728 a year earlier. The daily selling rate of 23,324 was the best since 23,826 were sold daily in mid-November 1980.

General Motors Corp. posted the biggest gain, with sales up 56.6 percent from the 1981 period.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 215 money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT of Holliston, MA 01746 increased $483.8 million to $227.95 billion for the week ending November 23, 1982.

The funds' 7-day average yield increased slightly, to 8.57% from 8.55%. The funds' 30-day average yield decreased to 8.67% from 8.74%.

The funds' average maturity figure remained at 39 days for the second week.

Publisher William E. Donoghue says, "This week's asset increase can be attributed to institutional funds as individual investors wait to see the new bank money market deposit account unveiled. At a recent meeting, however, bankers were amazed to learn that the new account will not be profitable. In fact, the break-even point for individual accounts will be $30,000. Tax-free money funds continue to grow at a rapid rate as investors seek the higher after- tax yields of these funds."

Town hard at work on its namesake holiday

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

CHRISTMAS, Fla. — While everyone else finishes Thanksgiving leftovers, people in Christmas are bracing for the next big holiday. Though it never snows here, the post office expects "an avalanche of mail" for Santa.

December will bring 100,000 pieces of mail to this central Florida village so holiday tidings can bear the Christmas postmark.

"Letters come from all over the world and even some small packages are sent here to be mailed out with the Christmas postmark," says Joy Chittum, postmaster since 1975.

Children's letters arriving here addressed to Santa are answered by a local family that has served as Santa's helpers for years. Mrs. Chittum says they prefer to remain anonymous.

Not quite as remote as Santa's house to the north, Christmas is a spread-out, unincorporated community on U.S. 50, about 23 miles east of Orlando. The only markers alerting strangers they have made it to Christmas are road signs at each end of the village.

"We really have no defined boundaries," said Mrs. Chittum, "and we claim 3,500 residents over about a 100-square-mile area."

Asking folks at the town's only general store for directions to downtown Christmas brings this kind of reply: "I guess this is it, except for the post office and community center down the road."

Off to one side of the post office is a permanent yuletide display — a Christmas tree and an assortment of oversized Christmas cards painted on sheets of plywood by members of a local art club.

The town got its name from Fort Christmas, established Dec. 25, 1837, when eight companies of soldiers arrived during the Second Seminole War.

Soldiers at the fort "were offered 160 acres free if they would stay five years, build a house, cultivate the land and fight the Indians," said Reta Barnes, an assistant curator at the fort. Many current residents are descendants of those soldiers, she said.

A replica of part of the original fort, two 20-foot-square blockhouses, is the agricultural community's recreational centerpiece.

The "spirit of Christmas" prevails all year long, says Juanita Tucker, the town historian who served as postmistress for 42 years until she retired in 1974.

"People are good and kindly here," Mrs. Tucker says. "There's a spirit of neighborliness."

Christmas has done relatively little to capitalize on its name and remains a low-key place.

Only three small streets are named after Santa's reindeer — Comet, Cupid and Blitzen — but there is Reindeer Road, Antler Street, St. Nicholas Street, Christmas Road and West Christmas Road. Three nearby housing areas include the name "Christmas" — Christmas Estates, Christmas Pines and Christmas Heights.

The holiday season does bring a deluge of visitors. Tourists headed for either Disney World to the west or the Kennedy Space Center to the east stop at Christmas, says Mrs. Chittum.

1982 Christmas sales period now begins in earnest

NEW YORK (AP) — Today's start of the Christmas buying season, always an important time for merchants, is even more crucial than usual as storeowners look for a sign of economic recovery, analysts say.

Sales have been slow all year as the economy remained stagnant and the rates of unemployment and business failures were the highest since the Depression.

"Some stores are going back what they were doing in the '40s, before they were concerned about their fashion image," Ira Neimark, president of New York's Bergdorf Goodman, said.

"They are promoting heavily and pounding away with incredible sales" in women's clothing, he said.

Fabian Linden, executive director of the consumer research center at the business-sponsored Conference Board, said preliminary figures from a November survey of 5,000 households nationwide were more encouraging for Christmas sales than a month earlier.

"It's not dancing in the streets," said Linden. "It's an uptick of a dimension that is not stunning, but fairly good."

Albert Sindlinger, whose Sindlinger & Co. has been polling consumer attitudes for decades, had a grimmer outlook.

"There is nothing I can see any place in the economy that justifies a big Christmas," Sindlinger said. "It's going to mean an awful lot of bankruptcies in January. A lot of retailers have been waiting for Christmas to bail them out."

Merchants have been hoping — and the Reagan administration has predicted — consumers would spend the country out of the recession.

"If it doesn't happen during Christmas, then it isn't going to happen," said economist Allen Sinai at Data Resources Inc., a private consulting firm.

He said he is optimistic that sales will rise at least 5 percent from last year's levels, a lackluster performance in normal times but enough to signal the nation is headed for a modest, sustainable recovery.

Mission's founder dies

BLUFF, Utah (AP) — The Rev. Harold Baxter Liebler, an Episcopal priest who devoted much of his life to helping Navajo Indians, is dead at 92.

Called by the Navajos "the one with the long hair who drags his garment," Liebler died earlier this week.

He came to southeastern Utah nearly 40 years ago to establish St. Christopher's Mission, and later started Hat Rock Valley Retreat near Oljeto, where he has lived since 1966. He was known for his work in improving sanitary and health conditions among Navajos in Monument Valley.

Liebler was ordained in 1914 in Brooklyn, N.Y., and served as curate of St. Luke's Church in New York City and rector of St. Paul's Church in Riverside, Conn. In 1918, he founded St. Saviour's Church in Old Greenwich, Conn., and served there nearly 25 years.

He became interested in the plight of the Indians when he heard a fellow priest discuss Indian missions.

He studied the Navajo language and culture and in 1942 took a trip west and rode a horse into southeastern Utah.

"This area had not been evangelized at all, and only touched briefly by traveling Methodist missionaries," he said in a 1975 interview.

In 1943, he resigned from St. Saviour's and moved to Bluff.

"I actually spoke very little Navajo when I arrived in Bluff," so he kept his conversations short, he said.

He later learned Indians would ask one another, "What sort of white man is this that talks like a Navajo but only says a few words, and then won't say anything more?"

Liebler established a school, built a church, conducted a clinic and established some mission outstations.

He discarded the notion that Indians must renounce their traditional beliefs to convert and he tried to interpret Christian religion in terms Indians could use in their life. He baptized 2,000 Navajos in 40 years, said Helen Sturges, a social worker who went West with him.

Jamie Fiske celbrates landmark first birthday with transplanted liver

Jamie Fiske

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Today is Jamie Fiske's first birthday — a day her doctors said she would never live to see without a liver transplant.

But after her father's plea to the American Academy of Pediatrics in New York, a donor was found and the operation was performed three weeks ago. Jamie had a smile for her parents and brother when they gathered at her bedside on Thanksgiving at the University of Minnesota Hospitals.

"I haven't seen her looking this well since May," said her father, Charles Fiske. "I saw her last Sunday and I can't believe the difference.

"When I was here Sunday, she was just beginning to smile," Fiske said. "Today when I got to the door...she looked up and I got a big smile out of her."

Jamie suffered from biliary atresia, a disintegration of the bile ducts which causes fluid to back up into the liver and eventually throughout the body. Doctors said she probably would die before her first birthday without a transplant.

On Nov. 5 she received the liver of a 10-month-old Utah boy killed in a traffic accident. Dr. John Najarian, head of the transplant team, said Wednesday the girl had passed the period in which she was most likely to reject the new organ.

G. McGovern

NEW YORK (AP) — George McGovern, who lost in a landslide when he ran for president against Richard Nixon, says that since leaving the U.S. Senate he's never "had so much fun...or been so rich."

"I wouldn't run for the Senate again, but I will run for presidency (again) if I have something to say that no other candidate is saying," says the South Dakota Democrat, who lost his Senate seat in 1980.

In a Parade magazine interview to be published Sunday, McGovern said the Senate was "not as interesting or rewarding a place to be" as Americans for Common Sense, an organization formed to counter ultra-conservatism that McGovern now heads.

"There's more personal self-seeking, less camaraderie (in the Senate). I've never had so much fun as I've had in the last year or been so rich — well, not rich, but comfortable," he said.

McGovern's position at Common Sense is unsalaried but he earns a "comfortable living" lecturing and teaching, the magazine said.

McGovern said people who come to hear him speak "feel the country made a mistake" in re-electing Nixon to a second term in 1972.

CHICAGO (AP) — Giuliano Ciannella will replace supertenor Luciano Pavarotti in an upcoming production of Verdi's "Luisa Miller" after Pavarotti bowed out because of family problems.

Ardis Krainik, general manager of the Lyric Opera of Chicago, issued a statement Thursday saying Pavarotti had to cancel his Chicago performances and return home to Modena, Italy, because of "serious family problems." She did not elaborate.

Ciannella, a newcomer to Chicago, is now singing the role of Lt. B.F. Pinkerton in the Lyric's new production of "Madama Butterfly," which received enthusiastic reviews from the city's critics.

"Fortunately Ciannella's repertoire includes the leading tenor role in 'Luisa Miller,'" Ms. Krainik said.

She said the production, which begins Dec. 1, has been sold out since spring.

NEW YORK (AP) — Three teen-agers snatched the purse of Emily Kennedy, wife of Robert F. Kennedy Jr., as she walked on Fifth Avenue, but she refuses to press charges, police say.

Mrs. Kennedy, a 25-year-old Legal Aid Society lawyer, reportedly has ignored pleas by police and her husband, a prosecutor in the office of the Manhattan district attorney, in her refusal to press charges.

Police said Thursday that Mrs. Kennedy had been walking on Fifth Avenue toward her home on East 88th Street around 11 p.m. Wednesday when three youths ran past and one snatched her purse.

A taxicab driver saw the incident, chased and captured the youths and held them until police arrived. He retrieved Mrs. Kennedy's purse, which contained $120, and gave it to her.

"The woman told officers she didn't want to pursue the matter. She wasn't injured; she got her purse back, and she apparently was satisfied with that," one policeman said Thursday.

Officers took the names and addresses of three boys, ages 14 to 15, and let them go.

After Mrs. Kennedy got home, she telephoned the precinct police office and reported the incident but still did not press charges, police said.

Strips will blow out tires

REDDING, Calif. (AP) — A "roadblock" to blow out speeding motorists' tires with spike-studded rubber strips will be tested by the California Highway Patrol.

Aimed at drivers who lead officers on chases on Interstate 5 near Mount Shasta, the experiment begins Dec. 1 and will last a year.

Pursuing officers will radio for a CHP unit ahead to intercept the speeder by pulling four, 15-foot-long strips across the highway, according to CHP officer Steve Farned.

Vincent D. McGraw, founder of the Society of Inkwell Collectors, shows off part of his collection of more than 500 inkwells. The society, which started out with 12 members, now numbers 70.

Society collects mementoes of an earlier era

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MINNEAPOLIS — Inkwells were everywhere before World War II: on every desk, in banks, hotel lobbies, post offices.

But with the popularity of the fountain pen and the ballpoint pen, inkwells vanished.

Vincent D. McGraw, 51, a retired private detective and currently manager of a Minneapolis industrial supply house, started collecting inkwells in 1965.

Today he has more than 500:

— Glass, brass, bronze, silver, seashell, wood and porcelain inkwells.

— Ornate inkwells and inkwell stands from across America and throughout the world, some dating back to the late 1700s.

— Pyramid inkwells from the Chicago World's Fair of 1939. Vaseline glass inkwells out of the Great Depression.

McGraw has paid as little as 35 cents for an inkwell and as much as $600.

In 1972, while still a detective, he published "McGraw's Book of Antique Inkwells."

"I had 1,000 printed," he said. "The book sells for $7.95. It's sold in antique shops."

The book put him in touch with a scattering of inkwell collectors throughout the nation, Canada and England.

"We exchanged letters, bought and traded inkwells," he said.

In October 1980, McGraw founded one of the smallest societies in America — the Society of Inkwell Collectors. It began with McGraw and 12 others.

Today, 70 people belong, four of them in Canada and one in England.

The $24.50 annual dues include a subscription to the society's quaterly publication, the Stained Finger, a handmade quill, a membership card and a specially made inkwell.

A bank president, a high school principal, housewives and a couple of sailors are among the members.

"I've just sent out an inquiry to compile a profile of inkwell collectors," McGraw said. "It will be published in an upcoming issue of the quarterly.

The quaterly features stories about outstanding inkwells and outstanding collectors. The lead story in the current issue is about Barbara Woodburn of Burbank, Calif., who has sought out inkwells up and down the West and East coasts and in England.

McGraw limits his collecting to inkwells. Other collect pens, blotters and ink bottles as well.

"When I was a kid I remember having to beat the erasers, empty the watebaskets and fill the inkwells for the teachers," he recalled.

The Society of Inkwell Collectors has headquarters at his home, 5136 Thomas Ave. S., Minneapolis, Minn. 55410. Many inkwell collectors have made trips here to exchange information with him and to see his collection.

Although McGraw doesn't expect inkwell collectors to rival, say collectors of baseball cards in the near future, he still has a few ambitions for the society. "I don't think we'll ever get big enough to have society chapters," he said. "But one of these days, we may have a convention."

Can't bear thought of close road

CROWNSVILLE, Md. (AP) — Members of the Pine Tree Associates nudist camp say they don't mind a new highway — but they can't bear the thought of having it so close.

Gill Cochran, an attorney for the camp, said the current design for Interstate 97 would put the 4.2-mile artery between Baltimore and Annapolis within a visible 300 feet of the 108-acre nudist camp.

Cochran was hired to represent the camp two months ago because of members' fears there might be too much sight-seeing by motorists.

"They (camp members) all travel and see the need for the highway," Cochran said. "But they just don't see the need for it so close."

Sewing machine developed — and destroyed — in 1829

Barthelemy Thimmonier, a tailor in Amplepuis in France's Rhone District, invented the first sewing machine in 1829. When he tried to introduce his machines into factories, hand sewers, fearful of being put out of work, destroyed them on two riotous occasions.

Joe Edwards rings up a can of Rock & Roll beer, which is especially brewed for his bar, Blueberry Hill, near Washington University in University City, Mo. The poster by the cash register refers to state officials in Texas, who banned the beer after deciding that the can contains material which is "false...indecent and immoral."

Distributor doesn't understand his beer being rejected in Texas

UNIVERSITY CITY, Mo. (AP) — It's costing beer distributor Joe Edwards money for the moment, but he claims the satisfaction of knowing that he has a beer that's too tough for Texans.

The Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission refuses to let Rock & Roll Beer be sold in Dallas because the label contains material which is "false...indecent and immoral."

"It's incredible," says Edwards, claiming the beer brewed for him in New Orleans soon will be available from New York to California. "I think what they really objected to was the slogan" on the label.

The label depicts "Johnny Longshot," whom the 36-year-old Edwards dreamed up as an ultimate rock fan, dressed in a black leather jacket, motorcycle cap and sunglasses with a cigarette dangling from the corner of his mouth. His slogan is "I sold my soul for Rock & Roll."

"How can anyone prove they sold their soul for rock 'n' roll?" asked J.M. McCarthy, head of the beverage commission. "For someone to prove that claim, they'd have to be dealing with realms that I'm not aware of."

Edwards said he redesigned the label to make it less offensive to Texans, but it, too, was rejected, and he was not told why.

In the interim, he has adopted a new poster for his special brew.

"Ain't no cowboy beer," it says.

Edwards developed the beer for his own suburban St. Louis bar, Blueberry Hill, which Advertising Age recently called "a nostalgia emporium from the 1950s."

"I chose 'I sold my soul for rock 'n' roll' because that's what the older generation thought the kids were doing in the '50s," he said.

"But look at those kids now. They're the top lawyers, doctors, scientists and workers all over the country."

Edwards said the beer — and its label — have been approved by the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and state agencies in Missouri, Illinois and California. He expects approval soon from New York state.

"I never believed that Texas, as progressive as it claims to be, would turn down something that several other states had approved," he said. "I don't think they have much regard for their citizens' mentality if they worry that they may take the slogan seriously."

Pageant to have real Bethlehem shepherd

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A 13-year-old Bethlehem shepherd boy is here to add a touch of authenticity to what has been billed as the world's largest re-creation of the birth of Jesus.

Imaan Copty, who tends his family's flock on Bethlehem's hills, was greeted at Los Angeles International Airport earlier this week by the Rev. Robert Schuller of the Crystal Cathedral. The boy wore a traditional shepherd's robe.

For the second year, the church is producing a spectacular Christmas pageant featuring 250 people and numerous sheep, donkeys and camels. Last year several Los Angeles costume shops worked more than three months to prepare the 400 costumes designed from paintings by the great masters.

Several members of "The Glory Christmas — A Living Nativity" joined Schuller in greeting Imaan at the airport.

The boy, who had never been out of Israel, presented Schuller with a family gift of an olivewood Nativity scene. The teen-ager, who speaks fluent English, said he was happy to have been chosen to participate in the pageant, which runs from Dec. 3 through Dec. 21.

Imaan will play one of 22 shepherds.

"We're really trying to make this thing as authentic as possible," said Schuller, whose Sunday morning services from the Garden Grove church made of 12,000 glass panels are televised nationally.

Chess aficionado laments lack of first-class competition

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Learned hands whisked pieces into position and a chess clock rattled like a simmering popcorn pot as Eagle Elliott and Tom Yantis recently engaged in a friendly but combative game of "speed" chess.

His dark, serious eyes flickered about the board as 29-year-old Elliott steadily moved the ebony pieces to an advantage. His mentor, Yantis, at 43 a crafty practitioner of the game, peered from under a brown cowboy hat and uttered an occasional "good play" as he scurried to meet the challenge.

Elliott's black triumphed in this contest, but many rematches will follow. As two of the Permian Basin's most accomplished chess players, they rely heavily on each other for the competition necessary to maintain a high level of skill at this ancient game.

In Elliott, Yantis finds a hunger for excellence and a love of chess rare in West Texas and non-existent in his Monahans hometown. Elliott, who aspires to Texas' chess championship, draws on Yantis' experience and friendship while pursuing his dream.

TOGETHER THEY'LL battle some of the world's best at the Dallas Turkey Shoot today through Sunday, knowing they lack both the time and money to pursue the competition which chisels eager, raw talent into a wisened chess grand master.

At age 7, a curious Elliott first learned from an uncle the knight's "L-shaped" attack and a pawn's lethal baby steps. Not long after, he defeated his teacher on a regular basis and was already struggling to find competition. When his uncle was not available, young Elliott would improvise, simulating game situations and analyzing possible moves.

"If a man falls in love with chess, he always strives to be better," said Elliott, who counts Blackfoot and Cherokee Indians among his ancestors. "I've always been interested in the game, but I couldn't find any competition. For a long time I had to quit playing because I had no competition."

When he quit Midland High school his senior year and took a grocery store job to help support his mother and two brothers, Elliott found even less time for chess.

Elliott later earned his GED, married and moved to Dallas, where chess challengers — and homesickness — were more plentiful.

AFTER HIS marriage ended sadly, Elliott returned to Midland and discovered Yantis, a veteran professional tournament player, during the early days of a short-lived area chess club.

"It got to the point where I almost lost interest in it, until I met Tom," he said. Elliott received his first tournament test at the 1980 Midland Open. He and Yantis have traveled to several Texas tournaments since and Elliott has a couple of trophies to show for his efforts.

The United States Chess Federation tracks a professional's wins and losses and rates players based on quality of competition and tournament performance. A "perfect" rating would be 3,000. Chess grand masters are rated 2,400 points or more.

Rated at 1,343, or "D" class, Elliott has rapidly advanced two classes in two years of tournament play and hopes to crack the 1,400-point, "C" barrier, soon.

"I don't intend to be 'D' class when I come back from Dallas," he said.

ELLIOTT ESTIMATED that about six USCF-rated players, many who no longer participate in tournaments, reside locally.

"As far as I know, I'm the most active tournament player in Midland," he said.

Yantis admitted his rating is slipping from a 1,639, "B" class peak, and he explained that they are both feeling the stunting effects produced by a lack of fresh, strong local competition.

"You're only as good as the people you play," said Yantis, who bemoans chess' lowly status in the United States compared with its lofty perch in the Soviet Union.

Russia boasts about 4 million tournament chess players; the U.S. about 30,000, explained Yantis, who mixes chess lore, legend and fact in a dizzying flurry of staccato conversation, punctuated with an occasional Groucho-like wiggle of an imaginary cigar.

BOTH MEN lament that chess doesn't play a bigger role in U.S. culture and curricula.

While children here are fed on a video diet of Dig Dug and Donkey Kong, "in Russia, they don't have that kind of thing," he said. "In Russia, they say: 'Son, I'll buy you wooden men, a board and a chess clock, and you'll go to tournaments.'"

Russian grand masters are idolized by Soviet citizens and subsidized by the government, said Yantis, noting that this country's few elite chess players are anonymous, and sometimes penniless, in comparison.

He said studies have shown that young people become better students once exposed to chess. "Chess develops a part of the mind that nothing else develops," he said.

Elliott recalled showing his young daughter the proper starting position for each chess piece. When he wiped the board clean and asked her to repeat the procedure, she did so flawlessly after only one lesson.

"I HAVE NO doubt that someone like that could be an excellent player if she had a teacher," he said. "People believe you have to be a genius to play chess; this is not true.

"I played against too many young kids who could be good at it. If the young people of this community, Midland and Odessa, ever discover chess, it will really be something. It sure beats spending all your money on Pac Man," Elliott said.

For his part, Elliott continues to "discover" the venerable game.

"The greatest chess player who ever lived lost games; you always strive to be better," he said. "To me, it doesn't get boring, it's constantly changing. It's never the same game twice."

When Yantis is unavailable and Elliott has a spare moment from his six-day-a-week labors for Midland Floral, he hones his skills with a chess-playing computer or by studying one of about 152 chess books he's collected.

Because chess is more than machine-like movement of pieces along some time-tested battle plan, Elliott longs for tournament challenges. Ten dollars from each paycheck goes toward a chess tournament travel fund.

"YOU CAN'T teach a computer imagination; a computer plays logic," he said. "Chess is also an art, you have to be very creative to be a chess player. And you have to have a lot of imagination."

Elliott's most prideful moment came when for 34 moves he matched imaginations with William Lombardy, a Catholic priest and an international chess grand master.

"I may lose, but I'm not afraid to play anybody," said Elliott. "You have to play chess every day to be good at it."

As he speculated on his future, Elliott spoke first like a pragmatic pessimist.

"I'd like to be Texas state champion in two years," he said, but "financially, I'll never make it."

Then, as he toyed with a chess piece and mused, his optimism became apparent.

"There's never been a master between Dallas and El Paso. I think if I can continue to go to tournaments, I think I can someday put Midland back on the map."

Phil Brown, left, and Woodrow Phillip are both cancer victims and they want to help other hospitalized cancer patients. Here, they are role-playing as part of the CanSurmount sessions. CanSurmount is Midland's new hospital-based program that trains cancer patients to visit with newly-diagnosed cancer patients.

Program helps people cope with cancer

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

While lying in the hospital bed, the newly diagnosed cancer patient feels fear and loneliness. Questions invade his mind, and thoughts of death dance through his head. Tedious treatments have left him nauseated. Although it's a bright, sunny day, the patient sees only the gloomy darkness.

Then a visitor enters — a CanSurmount visitor. He's had cancer too.

He knows the loneliness and he'd like to try to talk about some of the words and feelings that are so new for the disease's newest victim.

The CanSurmount visitor will listen when the doctors and nurses aren't available and share the thoughts, frustrations, anger and fear.

Midland now has a hospital-based CanSurmount program to help cancer patients and their families better understand and cope with cancer.

Alan Schroeder, Midland Memorial Hospital's social worker, is coordinating the American Cancer Society support program. It has been approved by Midland County Medical Society and Dr. J.E. Mendez, the medical chairman for the Midland Unit ACS, is the program's medical adviser.

Although there are CanSurmount programs throughout the country, Schroeder said Midland's group is different. Unlike the community programs, this hospital-based program will be for patients who are hospitalized. Schroeder will match CanSurmount visitors with hospitalized cancer patients.

Nine cancer patients, who are stable, cured or in remission, were trained recently to become CanSurmount visitors. The seven women and two men will listen to newly-diagnosed cancer patients. They will probably remember those frightening feelings and share them with the patients. They will support the new cancer patients through this difficult time.

Too often cancer patients are reserved when talking to medical professionals and may become tongue-tied, but with another cancer patient he could feel at ease and be able to talk.

Schroeder said volunteers are carefully screened before they can visit a patient in the hospital.

"The volunteer must have had some cancer experience and his current health determines if and what capacity he will serve," Schroeder said. "And he must believe in conventional cancer treatments.

"Also, he must be emotionally healthy and realistic about the time he has available," he added. "After visiting the hospital patient, the volunteer

Flu should be treated seriously, acting director of health agency says

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

You're feeling great. And then, suddenly, an achy feeling begins to travel from the top of the head, invading the muscles and joints.

A slumpish feeling eases through the body, draining all your energy. Immediately, fever, chills and a dry cough appear. It's the flu.

Flu season is here again, and Midland residents are urged to take this epidemic seriously, says Dr. James M. Humphreys, acting director of the Midland City/County Health Department.

Humphreys said the elderly, who are vulnerable because of lung, heart disease or diabetes, need to take extra precaution.

"Such people should check with their physicians about being immunized by vaccines," he said.

Vaccines used throughout the U.S. are made from cultivating flu viruses in fertilized hens eggs. The vaccine prevents the disease in a person by stimulating the production of antibodies.

"If people have an egg sensitivity, they should alert their physician about it before being vaccinated," Humphreys said.

The government states that high-risk persons, such as the elderly and those with chronic disease, could get complications from the flu. Therefore, these people should check with their physicians about flu and pneumonia shots at the beginning of flu season.

"Anybody is susceptible to the flu," he added. "But anybody with chronic lung disease will not be able to resist the virus. The risks are the same for everyone, but the consequences for these people could be worse.

"If a person has a tendency toward lung disease, it's already difficult for him to breathe. The ability to fight off infection is impaired and the flu can set you up for pneumonia. The secondary bacterial infection (pnuemonia) is the threat."

Humphreys added that people who may have one type of flu may develop an immunity to a closely related strain.

"The extent of symptoms depends on the flu bug," he said. "Some people get it in the form of a cold, some vomit and have diarrhea, or they may have a combination of all three."

Humphreys said common sense is the best precaution.

"You get the flu by inhaling the virus," he said. "Needless exposure in large groups of people should be avoided.

"Sneezes and coughs should be covered with a handkerchief or tissue."

Those tending to a family member who is down with the flu should remember to wash their hands, and tissues should be disposed of in a paper bag that is frequently replaced.

Another helpful hint is to use plastic disposable plates, cups and bowls. This can help reduce the risks of cross-infection.

And if you do get bitten by the bug, Humphreys said "stay in bed, keep warm and drinking plenty of fluids."

Aspirin is usually taken for aches and pain, but some doctors say that children should not be given aspirin to treat a viral disease.

Because aspirin has been linked with an increase of Reye's syndrome, physicians are recommending acetaminophen.

However, the link between aspirin and Reye's syndrome has not been proven yet.

But, Humphreys said "there is a possible risk, but you need to decide how much the benefits of the medicine outweigh the risks."

Dallas actor organizes huge Thanksgiving feast

DALLAS (AP) — Some came because they were hungry, seeking a free Thanksgiving meal in a scene repeated in towns across the country.

But others came for compansionship — a "family" when they had none in the area — in a phenomenon found only in areas such as this where a once-bright promise of jobs attracted droves of unemployed people.

More than 2,500 of Dallas' lonely and hungry immigrants gathered in front of City Hall for a massive homecooked feast Thursday organized by a local actor who didn't want to be lonely on Thanksgiving.

"(This is) for those who couldn't be with their family today, those who came to Dallas looking for better times and maybe didn't find them and anybody else who wanted to have a good time," said J. David Moeller, a sometimes unemployed local actor and the organizer of the "SuperFeast."

"This is the family of man," said Moeller while surveying the crowd in the concrete plaze.

Moeller said he raisied donations of food and money from private and corporate sources for the gathering, which attracted local residents, some of whom were more hungry for companionship than for food.

Piles of turkey meat were left over when everyone was fed.

Moeller said he had organized his SuperFeast three times before, but the last time in Dallas was in 1971. He said he felt there was a greater need this year for the event because of economic hard times, and because of the large Dallas population of migrants seeking work.

The meal consisted of a wide range of traditional Thanksgiving fixtures, including 100 turkeys rounded up by Moeller and cooked by a volunteer.

Several people who had just eaten free Thanksgiving meals at Dallas' Salvation Army headquarters or a church-run soup kitchen called The Stew Pot said Moeller's meal was far superior to other free gatherings.

"I've hit three places and this is the only place they have real turkey," said Tom Hartsoe, an unemployed South Carolina resident looking for work in Dallas. "Every place else had pressed turkey. But this, this is the top of the line."

"We heard about it at The Stew Pot and rushed right over," said Joe McNamara, who said he and his friends were "hopping on a boxcar for Florida" Thursday night.

A man who only identified himself as "Ray" said it was by far the best meal he had eaten "in a long time."

At the Salvation Army, workers served up the traditional Thanksgiving charity dinner to families this year. The organization had expected a large crowd because of the economic recession.

"We've fed 593 people already and we're going to serve a lot more," said Ruth James, food service supervisor at the downtown Dallas office.

A local restaurant opened its doors to about 40 hungry orphaned or abandoned youngsters from the Buckner Children's Home.

Seven-year-old David shared a table with 8-year-old Muhamed, who said his mother left him at Buckner two weeks ago.

"We're roommates. We're both scared of the dark," David explained.

Actress' foreign attacker gets 12 years in prison

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Ambushed as she was leaving her home for a college class on March 15, actress Theresa Saldana was stabbed repeatedly by a former mental patient who believed he was on a mission from God.

Her assailant, Arthur Richard Jackson, a 47-year-old Scottish drifter, Tuesday was sentenced to 12 years in prison for trying to murder Saldana, who had appeared in the films "Raging Bull" and "Defiance."

"He inflicted this grievous harm on this innocent girl and wrecked her career," said Santa Monica Superior Court Judge Laurence J. Rittenband as he imposed the sentence. "This defendant ought to be put away in some secure mental facility and put out of harm's way so he can't harm somebody like he did Miss Saldana (but) I can only sentence him for what he has done."

Jackson, who would be eligible for parole — and deportation — in eight years, said he believed Rittenband was "ruthless" in handing down the sentence.

"I'm feeling a bit down about what happened," he said in a telephone call to this reporter. "I feel the judge was a bit ruthless. I don't understand why he would go to the maximum sentence when I did have mitigating circumstances."

During the trial, Deputy Public Defender Steven Moyer conceded Jackson had stabbed Saldana three times with a steak knife, but he argued the defendant lacked the mental capability to form malice, one of the elements of the attempted murder charge against Jackson. Jurors, however, didn't buy that defense and on Oct. 26 they found Jackson guilty of attempted murder and assault with a deadly weapon charges.

Jackson told a deputy probation officer, Ann Burnett, that he became obsessed with Saldana after seeing her in "Defiance" and became convinced the film was based on material he'd mailed to actor Gregory Peck in 1974. Saldana then became the symbol for a former lover, Jackson said.

"I wanted to commit suicide, but I didn't want to die alone," Burnett quoted Jackson as saying. "I wanted my counterpart with me. It was something sacred."

Saldana was stabbed three times in the chest and cut on the arms and legs outside her apartment.

Then police found, in Jackson's traveling bag, a petition for a "state-imposed" execution. The petition asked that Jackson be executed in the same cell block where 35-year-old Arthur Cretzer was slain during a May 1946 riot at Alcatraz.

Man serving life sentence allowed to go home to die

DALLAS (AP) — A 25-year-old man who had been serving a life prison sentence came home from what probably was his last Thanksgiving.

Henry Lee Carter Jr., who suffers from a terminal disease, went home to die after an emergency reprieve from Gov. Bill Clements allowed his release from the Texas Department of Corrections in Huntsville.

"I came home to be with the people I love," Carter said. "As far as them (doctors) telling me how long I have to live, there's only one person who really knows, and I'm going to be ready when He calls. I just want to go knowing where I'm going."

"I feel by having this disease, I have the advantage of knowing that I'm going to die," he said. "The Lord has given me a chance to pull myself together."

Carter served only 17 months of his life sentence for aggravated robbery before coming to his home here.

He was diagnosed as having amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, a rare fatal disease of the central nervous system that will take his life within the year.

Carter is expected to die within the year.

"This Thanksgiving, we're not just going to be thanking God for the turkey on the table," said Mary Ann Carter, the inmate's mother. "We're going to be thanking God for letting us be together. We haven't had a Thanksgiving together since 1973."

Program helps cancer victims

will make a report, and we will have monthly rap sessions so the volunteers can talk about their visits."

Phil Brown and Woodrow "Woody" Phillip have gone through the two three-hour training sessions. They both have experienced cancer. Brown had Hodgkin's diseased and is now cured, while Phillip is in remission with multiple myeloma.

"I thought if I could help one person it would be worth it," the 62-year-old Phillip said. "A program like this would have helped me. I thought I was going to die. It was a shock when I found out (about the cancer). Doctors kept telling me I had three to six months to live, maybe a year, but here it is two years later."

Phillip is still taking chemotherapy treatments every five weeks, but he said he doesn't get as nauseous as he used to.

"I used to get so sick, I wished I would die," he said, explaining that because he experienced the chemotherapy treatment, he might be able to help somebody else.

Twenty-six-year-old Brown has been off of radiation treatments for a year. Because his cancer has a very high cure rate, he said he may be able to give some encouragement to those he visits.

"I'm cured until it comes back," Brown said.

Schroeder said both men will be beneficial to this new program, adding that they are "emotionally healthy and realistic about their disease."

"The cancer patient fears death first, then hair loss, sickness or disfigurement," Schroeder said. "This program will help ease these fears."

In a program such as this, credibility and confidentiality are often questioned.

According to the CanSurmount handbook, "visits should be kept CONFIDENTIAL. Using the patient's name outside the 'health care team' is indiscreet."

Not all cancer patients want to visit other patients, but there are alternative ways of serving.

The program needs people for public information and education, driving, phoning, clerical duties, organizing meetings, helping to coordinate new groups, social activities and public speaking.

Anyone interested in visiting or helping in some other capacity should contact Alan Schroeder at 685-1528.

Man's guide dog killed on holiday by neighbor

BRANCH, Minn. (AP) — New doors opened three months ago for Dale Rindahl when a guide dog helped him cope with blindness. But his world shrank again when a neighbor shot and killed the animal, police said.

Rindahl said the shots on Thanksgiving day "tore the heart right out of Sammy," the female Labrador-Bouvier that had given him affection, mobility and hope of a job.

A spokesman for the Chisago County sheriff's office said a person was questioned, but no charges had been filed. The officer added, "The dog was on a neighbor's property, and the neighbor shot the dog."

"You can bet your boots I'll press charges," said Rindahl, 24, adding he "shed a lot of tears" when he learned that his dog was dead.

Rindahl's diabetes led to blindness six years ago and, later, kidney failure.

In December 1980, he received a kidney transplant. As his health improved, he dreamed of acquiring a guide dog.

Lions International gave the dog to Rindahl in August. The Wyoming, Minn., Lions Club sent him to a school in Rochester, Mich., where Rindahl and Sammy spent a month learning to work with each other.

At home in Branch, in east-central Minnesota, "Sammy became a big part of my life," Rindahl said.

"I used to have to nag my family to take me for a walk," he said in an interview in September, discussing the difference Sammy had made. "Now I can just go.

"And if somebody was to try to hurt me, she'd put a stop to it," he added. "The first few days she growled at my family, especially when I was asleep."

Thursday morning, Rindahl let Sammy outdoors for her regular exercise. A short time later, he went out on the front porch to call the dog.

"I heard the shots," Rindahl said. "Then I heard Sammy screaming and crying."

Rindahl's brother, Steve, found Sammy's body. They telephoned their father, John, a state trooper, who notified the sheriff's office.

Dale Rindahl said they have other dogs at their home and one neighbor had threatened to shoot the animals if they didn't stay home.

Salvation Army of Midland kicks off Christmas campaign

The Salvation Army of Midland kicks off its 1982 Christmas Cheer Campaign today.

Donald Jones will chair this year's appeal and will be asking the business community to join hands with neighborhood volunteers to raise the funds necessary to help the needy in our community this Christmas.

Citizens soon will be receiving special letters in the mail, and the familiar Salvation Army red kettles will soon begin to appear at stores and shopping centers in the area.

Funds raised through the kettle campaign not only will help the poor during this holiday season, but also will support ongoing programs to help the disadvantaged and the elderly.

Despite inflation, Jones said he hopes Midlanders will open their hearts when answering the letters and in answering the call of the kettle worker's bells.

Checks should be made to The Salvation Army, P.O. Box 594, Midland, 79702.

DEATHS

E. E. Fitz-Gerald

Elizabeth Eyler Fitz-Gerald, 75, of 2007 Shell, died Wednesday in a Midland hospital.

A memorial service will be held at 10 a.m. Saturday at Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. J.B. Stewart officiating.

She was born Jan. 23, 1907, in Ralston, Okla., and moved to Midland in 1940. She was the widow of Gerald Fitz-Gerald, a longtime Midland attorney. She was a legal secretary in her husband's law office for 21 years before he joined a local law firm.

Survivors include two sons, Gerald Fitz-Gerald Jr., of Albuquerque, N.M., and Robert Sparling of Denver, Colo.; and two grandchildren.

The family requests that memorials be directed to the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center, High Sky Girls' Ranch or The Arthritis Foundation.

Maurice Lamphere

LAMESA — Services for Maurice Lamphere, 72, of Lamesa were to be at 10 a.m. today in First Methodist Church in Lamesa with the Rev. Jimmy Bridges of Odessa and the Rev. Jorden Grooms of Amarillo officiating. Burial was to be in Lamesa Memorial Park directed by Branon Funeral Home.

Lamphere died Tuesday morning at his home after a lengthy illness.

He was born in Barnesville, Minn., and in 1937 moved to Lamesa, where he operated The Green Hut restaurant for 25 years. He was a member of the Lamesa Masonic Lodge and Scottish Rite Temple. Lamphere helped found the Lamesa chapter of Demolay. He was a member of the Methodist church.

Survivors include his wife, Margaret Lamphere; a daughter, Marilyn Teague of Tomball; a son, Dennis Lamphere of Hamlin; three sisters, Frances Wilcox of Lamesa, Marjorie Lovejoy of Williston, N.D., and Marilyn Wise of Healsburg, Calif.; five grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

The family requests that memorials be sent to the American Cancer Society or the American Heart Association.

Vernell Cooks Jr.

Services for Vernell Cooks Jr., 28, of 1008 S. Marshall St., will be at 1:30 p.m. Saturday in Hollowell Methodist Church with the Rev. Hadley R. Edwards officiating. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery.

Cooks died Monday in a local hospital after a lengthy illness.

He was born July 14, 1954, in Marlin. He had been a Midland resident for the past 27 years.

Survivors include his mother, Mrs. Cleo Cooks; three daughters, Cindy and Kay Thrasher and Toyna Johnson, all of Midland; two brothers, Robert and Willie Cooks, both of Midland; six sisters, Leola, Cleo, Patricia, Birdy, Vera and Virgie Cooks, all of Midland; a half-sister, Weinell Marion of Midland; and a grandmother, Rosie Brown of Dallas.

William F. Massey

LEVELLAND — Services for William Foster Massey, 81, of Levelland, father of W.M. Massey of Midland, were to be at 2 p.m. today in First Assembly of God Church with the Rev. Haskell Rogers of Lubbock officiating and the Rev. Wilber Brumfield, pastor, assisting. Burial was to be in City of Levelland Cemetery directed by Smith Funeral Home.

Massey died Monday in his home after a lengthy illness.

He was a retired oil field driller and had lived in Levelland for the past 40 years. He married Flora A. Taylor Dec. 23, 1923, in Ryan, Okla. He was a member of the Assembly of God Church.

Other survivors include his wife, two daughters, three brothers, four sisters, eight grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

J.E. 'Doc' Lathan

Services for J.E. "Doc" Lathan, 73, of Midland will be at 3 p.m. Monday at Mt. Rose Baptist Church with the Rev. Gerald Badger officiating. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Jackson Funeral Home.

He died Wednesday.

Lathan was born Dec. 27, 1908, in Washington County. He was married to Willie D. Sanders Aug. 26, 1934, and moved to Midland in 1942. He was a four-letter Mason of the Midwest Chapter.

Survivors include his wife; four sons, Carl Edward Lathan and the Rev. Robert Earl Lathan of Midland, Lloyd Leslie Lathan and David Holland of Fort Worth; two daughters, Alice Ruth Lathan Floyd of Midland and Janie E. Judie of Denver, Colo.; a brother, Ras Lathan; and four sisters, Senora Williams of Houston, Mary Mills of Galveston, Rosie Heights of San Francisco, Calif., and Eddie Mse Sims of Washington County; eight grandchildren and a number of nieces and nephews.

UTPB travel course will end with week-long trip to Peru

ODESSA — A week-long trip to Peru, land of the Incas, will conclude a travel course being offered at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin this spring.

The price of the trip is $1,795, plus tuition and fees. The price includes roundtrip airfare, transfers, luggage handling, hotel rooms at double occupancy, all tours, guides, buses and all meals except for those in Lima.

Dr. Frank Samponaro, associate professor of history at UTPB, said the three-semester-hour course may be taken for graduate or undergraduate credit in history. The study of the Inca Indians will be from 10 a.m. to noon on Saturdays before the trip, which will be from March 26 to April 2. Registration will be Jan. 12-13 in the UTPB student lounge.

Students will fly from Midland Regional Airport to Lima, via Miami. From Lima, students will fly to Cuzco for a tour before boarding a train to the Incas.

Samponaro said anyone who has completed at least 60 hours of coursework at an accredited college or university is eligible to take the course. The course also may be taken through ENCORE, UTPB's no-grade option.

For more information, contact Samponaro at 367-2116.

UTPB chairman to speak on reformer

ODESSA — A lecture about the life and times of a woman who introduced kindergartens in the United States and influenced the writings of such literary greats as Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry David Thoreau and Nathaniel Hawthorne, is scheduled at 7:30 p.m. Dec. 2, in the University of Texas of the Permian Basin Devonian Room.

Dr. Margaret Neussendorfer, chairman of literature at UTPB who is completing research for an upcoming biography on Elizabeth Palmer Peabody, will be the lecturer and guest of honor at the event. Sponsored by the UTPB Literature Club, the lecture is free and open to the public.

Neussendorfer will spend the spring semester on a leave of absence from UTPB to complete her research on Peabody, an influential Boston woman whose life spans almost an entire century, 1804-1894.

Although Peabody was well known among her contemporaries as a writer and publisher, reformer and educator, she has remained a hidden personality in American history because she practiced these activities at a time when women were not openly recognized for such accomplishments, Neussendorfer said.

Nuessendorfer already has spent four years researching Peabody for the biography.

Documentary of oil show available

ODESSA — A 30-minute documentary on the 1982 Permian Basin Oil Show currently is available to professors and students at area community colleges and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The educational videotape, "Oil Show on Parade: the Permian Basin Oil Show," was written and produced by Dr. Waylon D. Griffin, chairman of management at UTPB, and directed and edited by Wayne Hawkins, technical staff assistant for UTPB's Instructional Media Services.

Griffin said the documentary features interviews with participants of the recent oil show. "The interviews focus on the central purpose and effectiveness of this type of equipment promotion," he said.

Griffin noted the documentary is available by contacting the UTPB library.

Program provides in-state tuition

ATLANTA, Ga. — Texas residents can go out-of-state for graduate school and pay in-state tuition in more than 30 degree programs through the Academic Common Market.

The programs offered for college graduates range from Chemical Physics at Louisiana State University to Tax Accounting at the University of Alabama.

By permitting the waiver of out-of-state tuition for uncommon graduate programs, the Academic Common Market helps participating Southern states avoid duplication of these specialized and costly programs. This interstate sharing arrangement is administered by the Southern Regional Education Board, the nation's oldest regional compact for higher education.

Examples of graduate programs available to Texas residents include Historic Preservation at Middle Tennessee State University, Legal Studies at the University of Baltimore, Sedimentation Engineering at the University of Mississippi, Sport Psychology at Florida State University; and Teaching the Gifted and Talented at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock. A total of 34 programs at over 20 campuses are offered.

To qualify for the Academic Common Market, the student must be accepted for admission by the participating out-of-state college or university and must be a legal resident of Texas.

Further information may be obtained from the Texas Academic Common Market Coordinator: Frances Phillips, director, Senior College Programs, Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System, Box 12788, Capitol Station, Austin, Texas 78711.

Midlanders named 'Premier Principals'

Seven Midland Independent School District principals were among 174 statewide named "Premier Principal" at the State PTA Convention in Fort Worth.

Honored were Jimmie Kelly, San Jacinto; Royce Austin, Bowie; Joe Cummins, Emerson; Mamie Williams, Bonham; Ricardo Torres, DeZavala; Bill Sherman, Rusk; and Frank Marlow, who served as Rusk principal from the fall of 1980 until named director of elementary education last summer.

Those named "Premier Principal" are nominated by their respective PTAs and are selected by a statewide committee. Criterion used for selection includes an increase in nominee's school PTA membership over the previous year, proof of volunteer workers in nominee's school, proof of community involvment in nominee's school other than that by parents and at least 75 percent of teachers in nominee's school must be PTA members.

The nominee also must participate on a regular basis in at least half of the local PTA meetings, executive PTA board meetings, PTA council meetings, district PTA meetings, state PTA meetings and national PTA meetings.

Space shuttle radar finds ancient river beds beneath Sahara

WASHINGTON (AP) — Radar aimed earthward from the U.S. space shuttle has revealed ancient river systems as mammoth as the Nile buried beneath the desert sands of southwestern Egypt, according to a report published today.

The article in Science magazine said the striking discovery of valleys and streambeds last seen by Stone Age man — and since then known only in legend — resulted from an "imaging radar" experiment carried aboard the shuttle Columbia in November 1981.

"These river systems were probably independent of the evolution of the Egyptian Nile," wrote the eight-member research team headed by John F. McCauley of the U.S. Geological Survey. "Thus, the old saying that the Nile is Egypt... while true in a human sense, is not so apt geologically."

Another team member, archaeologist C. Vance Haynes, said of the radar pictures produced by the shuttle experiment: "They boggle the mind. They look through the sand."

Haynes, from the University of Arizona in Tucson, said the images captured by sophisticated gear aboard Columbia may amount to road maps to the settlements of prehistoric peoples who roamed the now-inhospitable region as three periods — about 200,000 years ago, 60,000 years ago and 10,000 years ago — when the area received enough rain to permit human habitation.

The magazine article said the shuttle radar-imaging experiment succeeded in "revealing previously unknown buried valleys, geologic structures and possible Stone Age occupation sites."

early as 200,000 years ago.

In their magazine account, the scientists noted that legends about the "Bahr-bela-ma" — or "great rivers without water" — in the midst of the Sahara have been told since ancient times. Explorers were drawn to the area, the earth's driest and most featureless desert expanse.

However, the sprawling river valleys remained hidden beneath yards of sand until the shuttle experiment managed to yield radar images unobtainable by optical reconnaissance methods.

In the Egyptian region known as the Arbain Desert, rainfall occurs only every 30 to 50 years. Such extreme dryness enabled radar signals to penetrate the sand down to about 15 feet below the surface, compared with a depth of only a few inches in wetter terrain.

Researchers were able to trace the outlines of the hidden river valleys because bedrock a few feet under the sand bounced back bright radar images, while the deeper valleys showed up as great dark veins.

About 2 million years ago the climate of the area dried suddenly, changing from savannah — or grassland — to desert. But scientists have identified

Carol Breed of the U.S. Geological Survey astrogeology branch in Flagstaff, Ariz., said some of the hidden valleys discovered with the radar-imaging technique are more than 9 miles wide.

In September, scientists from the Flagstaff facility together with colleagues from the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., went to the areas of southwestern Egypt where the shuttle pictures indicated they should find remains of the long-vanished rivers. They dug test holes up to 3 feet deep.

"We encountered river gravels at those depths," Ms. Breed said. "We didn't have to go deeper. In most cases, the river gravels are just below the surface, which consists of a veneer of flat, windblown sand."

The Science article said that "the potential for mapping ancient drainage patterns — and, by inference, potential sources of near-surface ground water — is sufficient to arouse excitement among earth scientists."

Looking toward uses of the same radar-imaging technique in space exploration, the researchers noted that the ancient river systems discovered in Egypt "resemble features of probable fluvial (river) origin in the northern equatorial region and on the northern plains of Mars that also lack running water at present."

"We can only speculate on the potential of imaging radar to reveal subjacent (below-surface) topography through the dry or frozen...veneer that mantles many areas of Mars," they wrote.

Aliteracy may be problem in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Because aliteracy — not reading even though one knows how — has received little attention, there are no statistics on how widespread the problem is. However, educators attending a recent conference on aliteracy here said that they were sure there was an aliteracy problem in the United States.

Transplant patient recuperating

HOUSTON (AP) — A 41-year-old man is resting comfortably more than two days after receiving a new heart and new lungs through a surgical transplant, a hospital spokeswoman said.

"He continues to make some progress and his vital signs remain stable," Texas Heart Institute spokeswoman Hazel Haby said Thursday.

"His wife visited him several times today and its been 48 hours since the operations," Ms. Haby said. "He woke up this morning after a good night. He remains in intensive care. Everything is very encouraging."

The man, identified only as a resident of the Houston area, was taken off the critical list 12 hours after receiving a transplant of a heart and two lungs, said his surgeon, Dr. Denton Cooley.

Doctors said the man had suffered from a severe lung condition and congestive heart failure.

Cooley said the two new lungs and the heart — taken from a 19-year-old accident victim — would give the man "the first feeling of good health that he's had in the past 10 to 15 years."

Late Tuesday, a team of surgeons headed by Cooley transplanted organs from Randall Alan Weaver, of nearby Pasadena, who died in an motorcycle accident.

Cooley said the team transplanted the heart and lungs as a unit, first attaching the windpipe to inflate the donor lung. They then attached the vena cava and the aorta, he said.

The patient immediately began receiving Cyclosporin A, an experimental drug which helps prevent the body from rejecting donor organs, officials said.

A futuristic design from Lucille Khomak's book, "Fashion: 2001."

Fashions of future projected

By LUCRETIA STEIGER
Copley News Service

It's the year 2001 and you need something to wear. What will it be?

A spray-on peel-off latex bodysuit ... or an electric coat with a temperature control?

How about a limited edition paper dress, painted and signed by an outstanding artist, or an inexpensive disposable dress you pull from a tube?

Or would you prefer stepping into a booth for a few seconds and letting a computer design a garment to suit your body measurements, occupation and environment?

That's what some of today's top fashion designers think we'll be doing or wearing 19 years from now. Their predictions, and some of the reasons behind them, are presented in an intriguing and colorful book, "Fashion: 2001," created by Lucille Khornak of New York, a former model who became a photographer and then an author. Here are some of her other findings from the book:

• Zandra Rhodes believes that both men and women will color their hair increasingly — hers is usually pink or green — as a way of camouflaging their age.

• Donna Karan and Louis Dell'Olio (who design the Anne Klein line) think that "you'll take something, wrap it around yourself, and you're dressed. It's a question of how you put it together."

• Oleg Cassini's creation is a gown "which conceals and reveals a body in top form physically, the only jewelry being a hammered copper half-moon necklace built into the dress, all inspired by the purity of ancient Greece."

• Willi Smith thinks everybody will wear a solar belt pack on a "base garment" ordered from a computer. This base garment can be colored with crayons or painted.

• Not all designers foresee such a drastic change in the future. Jean Claude Caumont, for instance, believes that we'll be wearing "a T-shirt (which takes the place of a double-breasted jacket) and a pair of jeans."

Khornak's book, published by Viking Press, was the culmination of four years of research, letter-writing and pleading with designers to please produce the sketches and garments they had promised to design for her. Many of them used fabrics and techniques involving technology, such as Mary McFadden's fine pleating set by heat in polyester, or Bill Tice's fused, not sewn, garments.

Khornak is a commercial photographer in New York who shoots some of those striking and glossy colorful fashion photos seen in magazines for such clients as Yves St. Laurent and Helena Rubenstein. And since she likes to "experiment, play around, be creative" in both photography and fashion, she decided to produce the book.

She began by drawing up a list of top designers in this country and abroad, then realized that most of them produced fashions with a classic viewpoint. So she added "younger, more innovative designers" and came up with a total of 100 who are presented in her book.

Taking the photographs required considerable effort, she said during a recent interview.

"I needed shoes, accessories, the right background, and so I traveled around the world watching for what I needed. The publishers had given me an advance, but I spent that money the first month in Paris. Then I spent my own money, and I hope to get that back now through sales of the book."

Khornak also kept working as a photographer in her New York studio while she completed the book, flying back and forth for assignments. She says that she uses a variety of equipment, "the camera itself isn't important," but that background and mood in a photograph are vital.

"It's what you see and how you see it," she says, "and the light is most important." She also looks at her photographs as art and is working on several books with photographic themes.

Many denominations have clergywomen

By ROBERT DI VEROLI
Copley News Service

An increasing number of church congregations around the nation will be welcoming their first woman pastor during the 1980s, says the Rev. Lyle E. Schaller, a nationally known church consultant.

"Others will be greeting their second or third female pastor," Schaller said.

Religious leaders say that the trend toward more women entering the clergy — which began in the 1970s — has yet to peak and that women have begun assuming senior pastorates in greater number.

Some predict that eventually women will make up more than half the clergy in some denominations.

Rabbi Lenore Bohm of Temple Beth Israel, San Diego's only woman rabbi, said the trend is still on the upswing in Reform Judaism.

"It's not 50 percent yet, but I think in the next couple of years we'll probably be graduating, if not 50 percent, at least close to 50 percent women rabbis," Bohm said.

Of about 1,200 rabbis in the United States, about 50 are women, most from the Reform and Reconstructionist branches. Women are not ordained in Orthodox or Conservative Judaism.

Schaller, a Methodist clergyman who works for the Yokefellow Institute in Richmond, Ind., says in a new book, "Women As Pastors," that the day will come when a majority of his own denomination is served by women clergy.

The Rev. Gloryanne Hees, associate director of ministries at Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, Calif., wasn't so optimistic.

"I think there will be more women ministers, but I'm not sure there'll be all that many," said Hees, a United Presbyterian minister.

Hees said more women than ever are enrolled in seminaries, but that most of them go into psychology, marriage and family counseling, hospital chaplaincies and other fields rather than full-time pastorates.

"I was director of placement at Fuller for 10 years, and the most women we'd ever have going into the ordained ministry would be about 12 a year as compared to about 150 men," Hees said.

But Schaller says in his book that while women seminary graduates in the 1970s went mainly into non-parish work, today hundreds serve as senior pastors of large congregations, denominational executives and seminary professors — the latter number alone doubling between 1976 and 1981.

The Rev. Thomas A. Erickson of a San Diego Presbyterian church, who was chairman of a women-in-the-ministry committee at his former church in Tacoma, Wash., says that opposition to women clergy, particularly among women, will remain "a tough nut to crack" for perhaps a generation, but that attitudes are changing.

"Our impression in Tacoma was that many women weren't ready to have a woman in the pulpit," he said. "On the other hand, once they saw her, once they heard her, once they benefited from her ministry, they were as enthusiastic as anyone else."

Bohm said women are less opposed to women rabbis today than they were a decade ago.

"Now, if anything, it's the opposite. ... I think my greatest supporters are women."

The Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada reports that there were 10,830 women enrolled in seminaries in 1980, compared with 3,358 in 1972, and that scores of seminaries reported that 25 percent to 40 percent of their candidates for master of divinity or doctor of ministry degrees are women.

The Episcopal Church began ordaining women priests in 1977, when the church ordained 90 women and 96 men.

The Lutheran Church in America began ordaining women ministers in 1970, and during the next seven years, ordained 220 women clergy, 80 percent of whom are serving as parish pastors.

There are more than 1,000 ordained women ministers in the United Methodist Church and more than 500 in various Presbyterian denominations. About half the clergy of the Salvation Army are women.

Several denominations, such as the Church of the Nazarene, the Wesleyan Church and the Assemblies of God and other Pentecostalist groups, have a long history of ordaining women ministers. The American Baptist churches, the Salvation Army, the Church of God of Anderson, Ind., the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) and the United Brethren in Christ are among churches that have ordained women for almost a century.

Additionally, women preachers have always been part of the U.S. religious scene in metaphysical bodies and as evangelists, from Aimee Semple MacPherson to Kathryn Kuhlman.

The Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox churches do not ordain women priests, although it is an issue with Catholicism. Southern Baptists leave the ordination of women up to individual churches, but, sources say there are few, if any, Southern Baptist women pastors.

Reroofing needs

A house usually needs a new roof every 15 to 20 years. A third of all the houses in the United States are over 40 years old, says Georgia-Pacific, a building products manufacturer, and the percentage is growing. As a result, reroofing is expected to account for at least 70 percent of the market.

Deregulation of soft contacts may lower prices, FDA says

By DAVID GOELLER
AP Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Food and Drug Administration officials say a proposal to deregulate the growing soft contact lens industry should mean a drop in prices.

FDA spokesmen said Tuesday that the deregulation plan should foster competition in soft contacts and gas permeable lenses by making it cheaper and easier for new manufacturers to enter the field.

Bill Grigg said that new regulations scheduled for publication in the Federal Register on Friday would scrap the requirement that such lenses undergo extensive clinical tests before receiving FDA approval.

Under the plan, a manufacturer could market the lenses after demonstrating that their products are made from material that is equivalent or better than substances already approved on the basis of clinical tests, Grigg said.

Another FDA spokesman, Bill Rados, said the less-stringent requirement "is an important step. We expect it would increase competition in the contact lens industry and would expect it could decrease prices."

However, an official of a major contact lens manufacturer disagreed, saying that the lenses themselves are "a very small part of the total cost to the consumer."

The official, who asked anonymity for himself and his company, said that the lenses amount to only about $40 of the cost to a purchaser, the rest being for such things as an optometrist's fee that can bring the total price to $250.

The official also doubted whether new manufacturers could quickly enter the field and produce at lower prices because expensive sterile conditions are needed to make soft lenses.

The idea of doing away with clinical trials — which average eight months for medical devices — was initiated last year by the Contact Lens Manufacturers Association, Rados said.

Soft lenses were first introduced in the United States in 1971 and are used by an estimated 9 million people, Rados said. He added that gas permeables — rigid lenses that allow more oxygen penetration to the cornea than normal hard lenses — have been purchased by 1 million people since their debut in 1978.

"Since then, there has been quite a body of scientific evidence showing the materials in these lenses are safe," Rados said.

ORANGE CHIP COOKIES

We've revised our own variation of an old-time cookie.

¼-pound stick butter, at room temperature or cut into 4 pats
½ cup sugar
3-ounce package cream cheese
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 large egg yolk
1 cup sifted or fork-stirred all-purpose flour
Grated rind of 1 medium orange
1 cup (6 ounces) semi-sweet chocolate
½ cup walnuts, coarsely broken

In a medium bowl cream butter, sugar, cream cheese and vanilla; beat in egg yolk until blended. Gradually stir in flour until smooth. Stir in orange rind, chocolate and walnuts. Drop by level tablespoonfuls, about an inch apart, onto buttered cookie sheets. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until bottoms of cookies are golden brown (tops will be white) — 10 minutes. With a wide metal spatula remove to a wire rack to cool completely. Store in a tightly covered container. Makes about 3 dozen.

Fast fish

Bluefin tuna are among the largest and fastest of fish, National Geographic says. They continue to grow throughout their lifespan and an old-timer of 30 years will weigh about 1,500 pounds. And they can swim as fast as 55 miles an hour.

'Teen' magazine is attracting always-changing readership

By SALLY KORIS
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Few magazines have as difficult a time keeping readers or getting advertisers as Teen magazine. That's because Teen's readers quickly become non-teens and move on to new magazines, and research studies fail to provide enough documented facts about the teen market to encourage advertisers.

Yet Teen has managed to become a leading publication in the teen-age market, with a circulation of 1.1 million and steadily increasing advertising. The formula Teen has designed to attract and keep new readers in the 12-to-19-year-old age bracket includes offering a healthy dose of service and self-help stories, as well as plenty of fashion articles, letters columns and some fiction.

Recent issues have run articles on mother-daughter conflicts, herpes, what do to when your parents hate your boyfriend, a baby-sitter's manual, do-it-yourself Christmas gifts and ideas to maximize good looks.

"The needs of teen-agers haven't changed that much in decades," argues Robert MacLeod, Teen's publisher. "Parental difficulties, peer problems, boy-girl relationships, sex and usual fears are still major pre-occupations.

"A major difference in the teen world, however, is the changing structure of the family. With more divorces, single parenting and working mothers, the family roundtable has fallen away. As a result, teens are relying more on peers for information they otherwise would get at home."

The demand for advice and counseling is high: Teen's advice columns average over 25,000 letters per month.

Teen attracts readers through school subscription plans, word of mouth, newsstand sales, keeping its cover price an affordable $1.25 and staging big, attention-grabbing contests like the "Great Model Search." Some 50,000 young women have entered that contest, which offers the chance to be on the cover of Teen and win a 1983 sportscar and a host of other prizes.

The magazine attracts advertisers by boasting how much disposable income teens actually have and by attempting to convince advertisers that the teen years are a good time to build in lifelong buying habits.

Attracting sufficient advertising is crucial to any publication, but especially to Teen because its rates are kept relatively low by the intense competition between all women's magazines. Nevertheless, this year was Teen's best advertising year, with 600 pages in advertising pulling in $5.5 million. And 1983 should be a good year, MacLeod says, because the magazine will accrue revenues from a licensing deal with Sears.

DEAR ABBY

Mistress masters passion for married man

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: There are "anonymous" groups for alcoholics, gamblers, overeaters, etc. I propose yet another — Mistresses of Married Men Anonymous (MOMMA).

Only a woman who has suffered the tortures of being in love with a married man can help another woman survive this living hell.

My lover was 44 and separated from his wife when we met. No one ever told me that a 40-year-old woman could fall so hopelessly in love as to make the passions of a teen-ager look like child's play. The late dates, the stolen hours, the afternoon meetings, the phone calls, the broken promises, the fake names, the endless waiting, the tears, the threats, the confrontations — I've been through it all.

But there were some lovely times. The long drives to out-of-the-way places, the mini-honeymoons, the plans for "some day," the little gifts I couldn't say were gifts.

Then came the guilt, the anger, the desperation, the ultimatums — trying to forget with other men, the alcohol to numb the pain, the drugs, the pills, the prayers — the thoughts of self-destruction.

Have I missed anything, girls? I'm far from recovered, but I'm still alive and I intend to stay that way. My heart still skips a beat when I see a car that looks like his, or hear a song that stirs up memories.

I've moved, changed jobs and have an unlisted phone number. I'm determined not to look back. If I sound as though I'm still hurting, I am. But the pain is duller. Sign me — GOING SANE

DEAR GOING SANE: There is nothing new under the sun. A "Mistresses of Married Men Anonymous" was formed a few years ago, but if there are any active chapters today, I am not aware of them. MOMMAs, if you're alive and kicking, let me hear from you.

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter recently had her first baby. I was appalled to learn that her husband had taken pictures of her during her labor, actually delivering a baby boy! Is nothing sacred anymore?

I found it extremely difficult to look at the pictures of my daughter in labor, experiencing intense pain. And the pictures of the baby in various stages of being born were sickening!

Please don't tell me that an unwashed baby, still attached to the mother by an umbilical cord, is a "beautiful sight."

What are your thoughts? — NEW GRANDMA

DEAR NEW GRANDMA: My thoughts are the same as your thoughts. However, if the pictures were taken with the knowledge and approval of the new mama, it's strictly the business of the parents. Now let's hope that when the new baby grows up, he doesn't sue his parents for having violated his privacy.

New jewelry features platinum

NEW YORK (AP) — Platinum. That was the precious metal that fine jewelry was made of in the Roaring '20s. It was also the high-fashion color chosen for her coiffure by the famous blonde bombshell of the '30s — Jean Harlow. F. Scott Fitzgerald treasured a cigarette box of platinum, and the great Garbo fancied a platinum cigarette holder.

Platinum passed from view in the '40s when it was drafted into the war effort and replaced by white-gold jewelry. But it is slated for a comeback as fashion's new posh darling in precious jewelry, the Jewelry Industry Council reports.

You can find out your platinum I.Q. and learn some interesting facts about platinum in the following quiz from the council.

* 1. Platinum dates to: (a) Roman times, when important personages during Julius Caesar's reign wore laurel crowns fashioned of platinum; (b) the 1800s, when it was the precious metal chosen by France's most noted jewelry designers; (c) the 17th century B.C. in Egypt, as evidenced by jeweled artifacts unearthed in the Thebes casket by archeologists.

* 2. Platinum is rarer and more precious than gold. The ratio of gold mined in the world today to platinum is: (a) three times as much; (b) ten times as much; (c) five times as much.

* 3. Very much a modern-day product, platinum is used in: (a) the manufacture of high octane gas; (b) pacemakers placed in heart patients; (c) the emission control systems of new cars to control air pollution.

* 4. Platinum is most prized because of the following attributes: (a) it is 95 percent pure, has a higher melting point than other precious metals, doesn't tarnish or soil the skin; (b) it is easy for metalsmiths to work with, and is light weight; (c) scientists believe it has beneficial health properties for people with arthritis.

* 5. The word "platinum" is a misnomer. It should be "platinums." True or False?

Early school years very important in children's social development

By CAROL KRUCOFF
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

The year's first report card is like a preseason game in sports. "It gives you a line on how the child's responding," says psychiatrist Sheppard Kellam, "but it has very little importance for later outcome."

The year-end report card, however, may do more than indicate success or failure at basic tasks. For young children, contends the chairman of Johns Hopkins Department of Mental Hygiene, "the final report card can be a major predictor of success or failure in later life.

"Starting school is one of life's biggest challenges. It may be tougher than choosing a career and landing the first job because in first grade there are no choices available. Everybody goes. The first-grade classroom is society, where the child has to survive."

A child's ability to make this key transition from home to society plays a crucial role in his or her future, according to a 19-year-study of 12,000 Chicago children Kellam and his wife, sociologist Margaret Ensminger, conducted at the University of Chicago's Social Psychiatry Study Center. They have recently moved their data — and themselves — to Johns Hopkins where they joined the study's third researcher, Hendricks Brown.

THE RESEARCHERS followed one group of about 1,200 children over a 10-year period to identify characteristics in first grade that were linked to later-life problems. Among their findings:

- Children having trouble learning react with "inward distress" and show marked risk of later depression, paranoia and overall distress.
- Boys and girls generally respond to school learning problems differently. Boys tend to "act out" their trouble in recognizable ways, while girls tend to react inwardly with more subtle "psychiatric symptoms" such as sadness and crying.
- Boys with learning problems usually fit one of three profiles: "aggressive" — acting out trouble by fighting or disrupting, "shy" — not speaking up in class, not having many friends and "shivering in fear" that the teacher will call on him, and "shy-aggressive" — sitting alone and also fighting and breaking rules. Shy boys are at high risk for anxiety 10 years later. Both aggressives and shy-aggressives are at high risk for becoming delinquent, with shy-aggressives at extremely high risk of later substance abuse.
- A first-grade girl's emotional health is linked to her mother's mental health. Daughters of women who reported depression and anxiety in turn reported more depression and anxiety than did their peers. This psychiatric distress was evident both in first grade and in mid-adolescence, even if the mother's mental health improved.
- Children who succeed in first grade have a lower risk of depression and anxiety in adolescence.
- Mastering early learning is "vital." In a very few weeks, a child who is falling behind can start losing some self-esteem.

ALTHOUGH THE STUDY was conducted in a low-income community, Kellam says these findings are applicable to children in all socio-economic groups.

While school adjustment's relationship to later-life success is most striking in first grade, he says, "what's true of first grade is true of second, and so on. The point is that you can start early on being concerned about how well children are doing.

"This means it's vital that parents and teachers pay attention to developmental markers of how well things are going for the future of the child. And it's important that we successfully socialize children coming into the elementary school for the future of society.

"When you talk about expanding prisons, delinquency, crime, psychiatric symptoms and the rest, you're talking about a failure to socialize children. We're losing over half the kids who are coming into elementary school in urban areas at this point. They're not succeeding at the three basic tasks of learning, dealing with the rules and authority of the school and participating socially in the classroom process."

Current failures to successfully socialize children, says the 51-year-old father of three, can be countered by specific steps taken by the school system, teachers and parents. "For starters," he says, "you've got to cut class size" from current levels of 36 to 42 to "no more than 25." Second, he says, "You need a curriculum that is set up to make sure it reaches every single child in that classroom at the point the child is at in learning and takes them forward step by step with one small increment after another.

"We're using the same curriculum we used when we lived in a society where an eighth-grade education was sufficient. Today we're in a highly technological society, competing with the Japanese. We need a curriculum that uses teaching machines, because kids love them and they're a great learning tool."

TEACHERS CAN "reach out to kids in trouble. They can appoint shy children helpers and include them in structured ways such as having them erase the blackboard, collect papers and hand out pencils. With the aggressive child you must have a common agreement between the teacher and parent on how the child is to behave. The child has to be taught to behave and rewarded when they act appropriately, learn and participate."

Too often, says Kellam, parents and children have different views of the child's school success. According to his study, "when you compare mothers' ratings of how their kids are doing and the teachers' ratings about how the kids are doing, the correlation is like zero.

"Teachers and parents must form a partnership. Much of the reinforcing of how the child behaves in school has to be done at home, plus there's homework to be done and a set of structured goals and values to be taught to the child and they should be in agreement."

IN PRIMARY GRADES, this partnership should be established, he says, "from day one. You see the teacher for a few minutes just to make yourself available and form a relationship such that the teacher can call on you at the drop of a hat. You'll check in every other week or so just to have three words about how it's going. You don't want to distract the teacher from her job, but you want to have sufficient involvement so you know what's happening.

"Parents who haven't already done this should get in there and start. If your child does have problems, it's extremely hard to play catch-up ball."

The degree to which parents should be partners with their child's teacher, he says, "decreases as a function of age." Parents of junior and senior high schoolers, he says, "may want to see teachers with other parents in formal meetings.

"You can't go find out what your 16-year-old daughter is doing as well as you can your 6 year old. Teachers by that time are dealing with a highly specialized part of her behavior, and she's got more teachers."

KELLAM'S ADVICE when there is "a fundamental disagreement" between parents and teacher or when the teacher seems inadequate: "You go in and talk to the teacher, you talk to the principal ... and as a last resort you transfer the kid.

"But you can't keep yanking the kid out. When it gets down to it, some teacher is going to be right. The school represents the society in which the child's going to have to make it. If the teacher says this kid is failing to learn, you better believe something is wrong. What's not permitted is passivity."

Leftover recipes using tender cubes of turkey make Thanksgiving cooking last a bit longer. Try Stir-Fry Almond Turkey, a leftover recipe that comes together quickly. The one-skillet clean-up makes life easy for busy people.

Turkey leftovers can be delicious, nutritious, quick

For turkey leftovers, all it takes is a bit of sage advice and some super-simple recipes for delicious meals that can be on the table in minutes.

This turkey stir-fry comes together in hardly the time it takes to boil water for tea. For a leftover recipe with Oriental flair, combine succulent cubes of cooked turkey, green onion, almonds and pea-pods. Stir-fry in a wok or skillet and dinner is served. It's delicious and colorful — and the one-skillet clean-up makes life easy for busy people. Add cooked rice, a fresh fruit salad and bar cookies. Don't forget the chopsticks!

STIR-FRY ALMOND TURKEY

2 cups cubed, roast turkey
2 green onions including tops
3 tablespoons oil
2-3/4 ounce package sliced blanched almonds
6 oz. package frozen pea pods, thawed

Merinade:
1 tablespoon soy sace
1 teaspoon sugar
2 teaspoons cornstarch

Sauce:
2 tablespoons soy sauce
2 tablespoons dry sherry
1 teaspoon cornstarch
1 teaspoon oil
1 teaspoon vinegar
1 teaspoon sugar
1/8 to 1/4 teaspoon ground ginger
1/4 teaspoon garlic powder
Dash hot pepper sauce

Mix marinade ingredients with turkey and set aside. In a small bowl, mix sauce ingredients and set aside. Cut green onions into 1-inch pieces. Heat vegetable oil in wok or skillet over high heat. Add almonds. Stir and brown for about one minute, being careful not to burn. Remove almonds and set aside. Reserve oil in pan and add onion, browning for a few seconds. Add turkey and pea pods. Cook and stir about two minutes. Add almonds and sauce. Cook and stir until sauce thickens. Serve over rice.

Author: Love, romance alive, well

By DON CARTER
Hearst Feature Service

Social scientists who probe love "end up denying it exists, or saying it's something that dies in 18 to 36 months," says Alan McGinnis, a former Presbyterian minister who now is a full-time Los Angeles psychologist.

"I'm a little incensed that they can deny something that's inspired such great poetry, such great music, so many great things," McGinnis admits. Not coincidentally, he's the author of a new book, "The Romance Factor."

In his book, McGinnis counsels that we must learn to think of love not as something we "fall in" passively, but something that we actively seek — and then as something we work hard at keeping alive. He offers advice on how to avoid extra-marital affairs and the "traps" of love, how to resolve marital squabbles and gives other tips for the person looking for a lifetime of love.

McGinnis' religious background and beliefs come through frequently in the book. In advising lovers not to have unrealistically high expectations, he writes, "God sends us happiness in small quantities, and then watches, I suspect, to see what we do with that before giving us more."

McGinnis thought his own marriage was going well until his wife announced she wanted out. That gave him the belief that "most marriages die of neglect. A lot of divorce is due to sheer boredom." And McGinnis' second marriage was responsible for his leaving the clergy.

"When people leave, it's often because they hate the church or have lost their faith," he explains. "That didn't happen to me. The demands on a clergyman are excruciating — out four or five nights a week, no weekends, 60 or 70 hours a week — and I didn't want to start a second marriage with that."

When he entered his second marriage eight years ago, McGinnis recalls, "this time I had a much firmer grasp of what marriage was, and what I should put into it. I certainly brought a lot more attention to it."

Before marrying the second time, he reflected on some of love's "traps."

"Sex," he says, "has been a problem since civilization began. I don't know why God made us sexually ready before we're emotionally ready. I think a lot of us who got married in the 1950s did so because we had to get married to have sex. I think sex is great, but remember, the average couple spends more time at verbal than sexual intercourse."

Another trap, he says "is that just because you're in love doesn't mean you can live with the person." He urges lovers to consider the psychological reasons why some people tend to consistently fall in love with losers, such as the classic "opposites attract" case involving the insecure person who elects a mate who seems to have security or some quality the first person lacks. They end up having little in common.

HONEST ANSWERS TO HONEST QUESTIONS

30 refreshing minutes on religion in which three distinguished panelists respond to questions about their deepest spiritual convictions.

People of all interests and ages, crossing the plaza at the world headquarters of Christian Science in Boston, ask the questions. A panel of Christian Scientists answers them, and a more accurate picture emerges of a world-wide religious movement as it enters its second century.

Lingerie for larger ladies popular item

By ELEANOR ROBERTS
Hearst Feature Service

BOSTON — Hanky-panky lingerie for the large woman is here to stay.

There are sweetly seductive baby doll nighties trimmed with French lace for the full-figured woman — a polite expression beloved by salespeople in the large-size department. And while bikinis aren't exactly teensy-weensy, they are daringly brief, especially for a 55-inch hip. Tempting teddies in bright scarlet or naughty black are favorites of the size 44 set — and their husbands or boyfriends.

It's so popular that Joyce Farenden, president of Lady Annabelle Lingerie, Inc., of Salem, Mass., can't keep it in stock. All her G-strings are sold out. Men are buying the teddies at such a fast clip that she's constantly on the phone reordering. Couples married for 30 years come in, hand in hand, to shop at her store.

"One woman came with her mother as well as her husband," said Farenden. "She slipped into the dressing room, tried on an ecru lace-trimmed teddy with French cut legs and was so thrilled she dashed out in the middle of the shop to get their approval."

Lady Annabelle is one of the few companies in the country that offers lingerie of fine quality for the full-figured woman. "That's surprising, since more than 25 million women wear size 38 and above," remarked Farenden.

And don't consign this ooh-la-la lingerie to the sleaze class. The fabric is superb — soft, creamy Antron, Charmeuse and satinessa. The imported lace is delicate. And the items are made by such top companies as Vassarette, Formfit, Chez and Poirette.

The seduction factor for large women apparently has a wide appeal to men. More than 50 percent of Lady Annabelle's clients are men, says Farenden. "Some of them buy the lingerie for themselves," she added in her clipped British accent.

Slim, smart-looking Farenden, a Pan Am flight attendant for 10 years, started Lady Annabelle a year ago and admits she is somewhat astonished at the tremendous volume of business.

Sexy lingerie gives amply-endowed women a great emotional high. "It makes me feel very special" is a comment Farenden hears over and over. So this year, the good old granny gown will be replaced under many large women's Christmas trees by sheer black lace nighties with a thigh-high slit.

'Rabbit or rarebit?'

By MICHAEL KERNAN
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

Recent correspondence in The Washington Post shows that it is time to explain about Welsh rarebit again.

The question is: Is it rabbit or rarebit?

The answer is contained in the history of the dish, which the English have been eating ever since someone poured, or spilled, beer into a pot of melted cheese and dipped a bread crust into it. They first wrote about it in 1725.

It was a poor man's dinner, and since the Welsh were traditionally poor, some snide Englishman joked that this was what a Welshman would give you and call it rabbit stew.

When "Welsh rabbit" was exported to America, nobody got the joke. It didn't make sense if you didn't know what they said about Welshmen, and it certainly didn't taste the least bit like rabbit stew. So we gentrified the name to "rarebit."

Take your pick of spellings. They're both right. "Rabbit" is the original.

Most fires caused by toxic gases, expert says

Copley News Service

The fire at the MGM Grand Hotel in Las Vegas in November 1980 never climbed above the first floor, but most of the 67 deaths were caused by lethal gases between the 20th and 25th floors, a fire safety expert says.

The expert, Gordon Vickery, former chief of the U.S. Fire Administration who now heads a non-profit Foundation for Fire Safety, said 80 percent of all fire deaths in the United States, between 7,000 and 8,000 a year, are caused by toxic gases. Only 20 percent are caused by burns. He also blamed gases for a substantial number of the 250,000 to 300,000 injuries from fires each year.

Vickery said the United States has the highest fire death rate among the world's industrialized nations.

"Our death rate is about five times what it is in Europe, and we have 16 times as many fires per capita as they do in Japan," he said.

The annual loss in lives from fires is the equivalent of two fully loaded Boeing 747s running together and killing everyone on board once a month, he said. "If this happened in the airline industry, there would be a revolution and a new program, but no such revolution has occurred over fire deaths," he said.

Vickery, whose foundation is devoted to reducing deaths and injuries in fires, said his group is seeking governmental approval of tests to determine what toxic gases are involved in fire deaths.

A pilot program developed in conjunction with scientists, toxicologists, pathologists and government officials will begin soon in Seattle, Miami and St. Louis, he said.

Complementing that program will be a conference Dec. 8-10 in Washington, D.C., for people who deal with victims who survive fires, the medical community, nurses, emergency room technicians and paramedics, he said.

Vickery said present-day fires involving plastics and synthetics burn twice as hot, twice as fast and give off tremendous quantities of toxic gases at a very rapid rate.

In the examination of fire victims, both survivors and dead individuals, Vickery said, "We want a better idea of the causes; the traditional listing is smoke inhalation or carbon monoxide poisoning and that simply is not true.

"New products in building and furnishing houses are very cheap and very functional, but they do, when they burn, produce very toxic gases.

"We want to learn more specifically what those gases are and how they affect people. And if we do, it will dramatically change building codes and how houses are built."

Vickery said combustion toxicology is a relatively new science, not more than six or seven years old, and most of the work done in this field has been conducted by the national Bureau of Standards. The bureau has standard tests for toxic gases, but is in a battle with the plastics industry over testing, he said.

Subway preferable to elevated system

HOUSTON (AP) — A multi-billion-dollar subway system is the "second best choice" to an elevated rapid rail system rejected by the City Council, a transit official says.

Dan Arnold, chairman of the Metropolitan Transit Authority, predicted the board members would vote for a subway at its meeting next month.

"I wouldn't want to make any large wagers on there being an elevated downtown," Arnold said. "The great consensus of feeling is that the train should go in a subway configuration in the central business district of Houston."

Council members voted 13-1 against allowing the MTA to build the elevated rail system downtown. A 9-5 vote then postponed until Tuesday any action on a resolution urging the MTA to construct a subway instead.

"I've spent a tremendous amount of time studying the problems. I've traveled to Atlanta, Miami, Baltimore and New York. I've ridden the subways and I've talked to the people. This is much too important...to decide in an hour," said council member Eleanor Tinsely.

Ms. Tinsely supports a subway system but tabled the proposal so it could be studied further.

Council member Anthony Hall Jr., who introduced the subway resolution, argued the panel has known the elevated rail system would be defeated and has had plenty of time to study alternatives.

The proposal called for MTA to hold an election to issue bonds for the subway and called for downtown business to pay the difference — about $340 million. It also called for the MTA to spend money to improve the city's bus fleet, which has been plagued by frequent breakdowns.

With the rejection of the elevated train, the options left for the MTA include the subway, busways, commuter rail, monorail, trolleys and streetcars.

The MTA, created in 1978, had planned an above-gound rail system that by 1990 would stretch more than 40 miles from far west Houston to the northside. But transit planners didn't expect strong opposition from business and civic leaders.

The most controversial aspect of the proposal, which was included in a $16.2 billion mass transit plan, was the proposed 2.3-mile elevated train over Main Street in downtown Houston.

Downtown merchants blasted the plan, saying an elevated rail system would be noisy, create an eyesore, disrupt business and decrease property values.

The Harris County Commissioners Court voted against the proposal recently, but left open the possibility of constructing the elevated system over a less traveled street.

The plan was dealt a severe blow last week when the Houston Chamber of Commerce recommended a subway instead of an elevated train be built. Chamber officials said delays caused by objections were costing the city time and money.

But constructing a subway would delay the project up to two years and add another $340 million to the $1.8 billion price tag, transit officials said.

"The cost, of course, is the alarming thing. But at the same time, what is a city going to do that has growing pains and such a need for transporation?" asked Chamber Chairman William C. Harviin.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, Nov. 27, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Caroline Kennedy turns 25 today. Others sharing this birthday with you include: martial arts star Bruce Lee, Broadway and movie producer David Merrick, former U.S. Treasury Secretary William Simon and Toronto pitcher Dave Giusti. Prosperity lies ahead, but it is more important than ever that you choose your business associates carefully. The possibility of deceit is always present, but luck gives you the advantage. Changes in your private life will make you a better person and a stronger leader. A new image results in new business opportunities. Romance could be one of the side benefits of travel. Love, marriage enjoy wonderful influences.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Correct timing is essential in bringing about a reconciliation within the family. A blind date has good results.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Flexibility is your key to happiness this weekend. How you handle sudden changes in your plans will affect romance. The check you expect should arrive in today's mail.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your loved ones will respect you more if you admit your vulnerabilities. Gather the whole family together to honor an old friend. You will feel better if you get out more.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A confident attitude is contagious. You can easily get a relative's help in fixing up your kitchen in return for a home-cooked meal. You discover a new interest this weekend.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your attitude rubs off on the whole family. Let a young person choose his own goals. Turn on your special brand of charm if you have romance in mind. Courtesy works wonders.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A sudden need to travel could turn everyone's social plans upside-down. Limit your purchases to those things you cannot live without. Romance moves you in new directions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Spend the day with old friends and visit places you have not been for a long time. Insist that teen-agers cooperate. You surprise everyone when you show off a special talent.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Romance dominates your weekend plans, but you may have to find time for family business too. It will not be easy trying to understand what a loved one is going through.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Look over your valuables and consider whether you should put some of them in a security box. Avoid arguments that could upset someone in ill health.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You could be tempted to do something that you know is not good for you. Do not ask for a friend's advice unless you are prepared to take it. Romance deepens.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take the initiative and apologize to an old friend. Although you earn a good living, you are spending too much. Set up a workable budget and stick to it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Spiritual insights help you solve a family problem. Avoid becoming irritable about the minor annoyances that crop up in romance. Money makes you feel more secure. Hang on to it.

Dear Charlie:

Just a quick report from the World Championships at Biarritz. At the end of the qualifying stage of the Open Pairs, my partner, Paul Chemla of Paris, and I were lying sixth. Not bad, when you consider that all the best players in the world are assembled here.

This hand helped us considerably. I must apologize for Paul's one no trump opening bid. But then, you know him and are used to his little idiosyncracies. Naturally, I thought that we had at least one 5-3 or better fit in a major suit, and we had a convention to find out which was our best spot. My jump to four diamonds said that I want to play game in one of the major suits. In the expectation that his partner would be making the opening lead, West made a lead-directing double. Since Paul had no preference in the major suits, he passed and I opted to bid four hearts, which ended the auction.

This was perhaps not a very elegant contract, but as the cards lay, only the lead of the king of clubs would defeat it. I would not have been able to avoid losing two hearts, and a club and a spade if the defenders did not slip, since I had no quick entry to my hand for the diamond finesse. But West chose to lead a heart, and I had no problem. Everything was lying right and the suits broke most benevolently.

East won the ace and returned a low heart. I finessed the jack successfully, cashed the king to draw the remaining trumps and then took a diamond finesse. When that worked, I discarded a club on the ace of diamonds and started on spades. That suit also broke evenly, so I ended up with an overtrick and a top score on the board.

Will keep you in touch with what's going on here.

Sincerely,
Omar

A wrecking crane that was used to dismantle Donaldson's department store this week in Minneapolis, Minn., was silhouetted by smoke Thursday night after a five-alarm fire had spread from the store to the 16-story Northwestern National Bank building, left.

Fire still rages in Minneapolis

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Flames raged today through a high-rise bank building where Charles Lindbergh's first airplane is on display.The spectacular fire has caused up to $30 million in damage to two buildings.

The fire destroyed tne vacant Donaldson's department store in the heart of downtown and burned the top 12 stories of the adjacent 16-floor Northwestern National Bank building.

The aviation pioneer's Curtiss "Jenny" biplane is hanging in the bank's lobby. Assistant Fire Chief Allan Wold said it hadn't been damaged by the flames, but fire officials said the craft sustained smoke and water damage.

About 10 firefighters were treated for minor injuries at nearby Hennepin County Medical Center. Nine of them were released but one fireman suffering from chest pains was admitted to the hospital's coronary care unit "mainly for observation," a hospital spokeswoman said. No serious injuries were reported.

The five-alarm blaze covered a full square block of the Nicollet Mall, a closed-off 13-block stretch that is downtown's main shopping area. Guests were evacuated from a nearby hotel.

The blaze burned out of control in the Donaldson's building today and small fires remained in some rooms of the bank building, Deputy Fire Chief Raymond Luniewski said.

The cause of the fire was under investigation. Minneapolis police, however, said they were looking for a man and woman who witnesses said fled from the area shortly after the fire was reported.

Fire officials estimated the damage at up to $30 million.

The fire apparently started in rubble in the store, which was being demolished, about 5 p.m. Thursday and spread to the bank within half an hour, officials said.

Safe deposit boxes and securities vaults were not damaged, said W. James Armstrong, the bank's president and chief executive officer.

"Records and accounts of our customers will not be affected," Armstrong said, because the computerized records are kept in the bank's operations center four blocks away.

Banco Mortgage Co., the country's third-largest mortgage banker, and the law firm Faegre & Benson, both tenants of the building, had copies of their records stored elsewhere, officials said. Northwest Bancorporation, the bank holding company that owns Northwestern Bank, also had records of its banks' customers stored elsewhere.

Donaldson's moved last summer to a new building across the street and officials said no merchandise remained in the old store.

Wold said between 100 and 150 firefighters and about 20 rigs were called to the fire.

Firefighters sprayed the roofs of nearby buildings and kept the flames from spreading, but smoke penetrated the J.C. Penney store and parts of the IDS Tower, the tallest building in the city, through the skyway system that connects many of the downtown buildings. Some windows in the Penney store and the IDS building also were shattered by fire debris and heat.

Guests were evacuated from the Marquette Inn, a luxury hotel in the IDS Tower complex, and the Crystal Court area of the complex was closed because smoke entered the building through the skyway system. The complex is mostly business offices.

All off-duty firefighters were called back to either fight the fire or staff fire stations in other sections of the city, Wold said. Three units from neighboring St. Paul also were helping at neighborhood stations, he said, and firefighting equipment was brought to the scene from Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport.

Several firefighters were treated for smoke inhalation and other minor injuries.

One wall of the old Donaldson's store collapsed into 6th Street, blocking it. Sparks, debris from broken window frames and water from the powerful firehoses showered the mall as far as a block away from the fire.

Hundreds of people watched the fire behind barricades a block and a half away.

Sequestered jurors spend time with their families — via TV

SEATTLE (AP) — Home is 300 miles away for the sequestered jurors hearing a triple-murder case, but they got to spend a little time with their families on Thanksgiving — via closed-circuit television.

The trial is in Everett, just north of Seattle, but the jurors are from Spokane County, across the state in eastern Washington.

Snohomish County Superior Court Judge Dennis Britt refused to let jurors in the three-week-old trial go home for the holidays.

But as Britt looked on Thursday, nine jurors in a studio at KING-TV in Seattle shared holiday conversation with their families in a studio at KREM-TV in Spokane.

One juror, Skip Barron, became misty-eyed at seeing his young son for the first time in several weeks. "It's kind of hard breaking up our team," he said.

Classified is the solution...

...Now, what's the problem?

Mike and Natalie are young, in love, and newlyweds. Among other things, that means they've given up their two small apartments and moved into a larger place.

But, it really hasn't been a problem, because Mike and Natalie are wise for their years. They knew classified was the right place to find their first home together.

Classified quickly sold their duplicate pieces of furniture. With the money from the sales, they bought a lovely shelf unit from a classified advertiser.

Before you could say "I do," they located an apartment through classified with enough room for the waterbed, the stereo, two 10-speed bikes, six philodendrons, and the new shelf unit. And at a price two newlyweds could find very affordable indeed.

Whether you're newly wed, single, or an experienced spouse, classified can come to your aid. Tell classified your problem with a simple phone call.

Dial the number below and a helpful Ad-Visor will answer. Explain your problem . . . too much crowded into storage areas, a car you no longer want, a litter of pets to place, a house to rent or sell, an employment opening, or an article you'd like to locate. Whatever the problem, an Ad-Visor will soon be helping you write a fast-acting solution ad.

The Best Thing About Trinity Place Is The Neighborhood.

Where you live is an extension of your personality, your tastes and values. Living at Trinity Place is an expression of a special way of life, not just for everyone. Trinity Place was built for the contemporary lifestyle of the 80's.

Tucked away in Midland's newest residential subdivisions, Trinity Place is off the beaten path and insulated from highway noise and the hemmed-in feeling of a commercial neighborhood. Yet, Trinity Place is within

- ☐ 3 minutes of the new Midland Park Regional Mall
- ☐ 6 minutes of Midland Memorial Hospital
- ☐ 10 minutes of downtown Midland
- ☐ 5 minutes of Midland College
- ☐ 15 minutes of Midland Regional Airport
- ☐ 6 minutes of Midland Air Park
- ☐ 7 minutes of Interstate 20

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8 7/8% loan to value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 12½/8% first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent Secondary Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50%, each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be made in the original loan principle record- 10%. At each 5 year anniversary date the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 12.875%

GAS. CLEAN ENERGY FOR TODAY AND TOMORROW. FHA/VA financing availble.
