Taxpayers Snipe At Hospital

By BOB CAMPBELL

IDALOU — "Is there any way that we could get rid of our county hospital?"

That question from one man today at a public meeting held here by State Sen. E. L. Short drew some laughter from the 40 persons attending but provoked a

County Commissioner James Lancaster of Idalou told his townspeople after the 9 a.m. gathering at Isom Insurance Agency that he planned to vote against a requested hospital district tax increase at a special 1:30 p.m. commissioners meeting today.

Short discussed an effort he led in the State Senate to provide the district with $15,000 in state money for each medical student studying at the Texas Tech University Medical School-affiliated hospital.

The bill narrowly failed, he noted.

A hospital district tax increase could be put to a vote of district residents if the commissioners rejected it, and Short said the legislature then either would have to provide more money for the hospital or let it close. He said he would expect more funding because the state already has invested about $50 million in the Tech medical school, which is federally required to be affiliated with a teaching hospital.

Short said the school might to able to contract with another hospital, such as Methodist Hospital in Lubbock, but that it would have to be on the basis of an approved long-term contract.

Court's Decision To Curb Police

WASHINGTON (AP) — Police may not detain a criminal suspect for questioning unless they have "probable cause" to arrest the suspect, the Supreme Court ruled today.

The Supreme Court today also upheld a Massachusetts law that gives an absolute lifetime preference in public employment to veterans of the armed forces, and ruled that a woman who claims she was fired by former Rep. Otto Passman, D-La., because of her sex may sue in federal court for back pay and damages.

In the important criminal justice ruling, the court voted 6 to 2 to overturn the murder conviction of a Rochester, N.Y., man now serving a prison sentence of 25 years to life.

The justices ruled that the incriminating comments Irving Jerome Dunaway made to police during his detention should not have been used at his trial. Dunaway was convicted of the 1971 murder of a Rochester pizza parlor owner.

State officials must now either retry Dunaway without using certain critical evidence or set him free.

"Detention for custodial interrogation — regardless of its label — intrudes so severely on interests protected by the Fourth Amendment as necessarily to trigger the traditional safeguards against illegal arrest," Justice William J. Brennan Jr. wrote for the court.

The Fourth Amendment protects individuals against unreasonable government searches and seizures. The court ruled that Dunaway's detention was a "seizure."

"We accordingly hold that the Rochester police violated them (Dunaway's constitutional rights) when, without probable cause, they seized (him) and transported him to the police station for interrogation," Brennan said.

The court rejected arguments by New York prosecutors that the unconstitutional detention and Dunaway's incriminating statements were so unrelated that his statements could be used as evidence in his trial.

Brennan's opinion said the high court's 1968 decision in a case called Terry vs. Ohio — one that allowed some police "stop and frisk" searches for weapons on less than the probable cause traditionally needed for arrests — was very narrow in its scope.

Brennan wrote that the New York prosecutors urged the court "to apply a balancing test, rather than the general rule, to custodial interrogation, and to hold that seizures such as that in this case may be justified by mere reasonable suspicion."

"Terry and its progeny clearly do not support such a result," he said.

Joining Brennan were Justices Potter Stewart, Byron R. White, Thurgood Marshall, Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justice William H. Rehnquist dissented. Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr., who missed oral arguments in the case because of illness, took no part in deciding it.

Dunaway was 18 years old at the time of the crime. Prosecutors said he shot the pizza parlor owner in an attempted holdup.

In the decision on veterans' rights, the justices said in a 7-2 vote that the Massachusetts law does not discriminate unconstitutionally against women.

Because the Massachusetts law is stronger than similar laws in 45 other states, today's ruling likely will be hailed as a shield to constitutional attacks on those laws.

Tornado Dips On Plains

A-J News Services

The threat of violent weather returned to the South Plains this morning when a tornado warning was posted for northern Lamb County after a "large" tornado was reported on the ground near Earth.

A citizen reported sighting a funnel nine miles southeast of Earth but the first warning expired without incident at 11:45 a.m.

Earth City Secretary Noel Pittman reported at noon, however, that Pioneer Natural Gas Co. employees driving in a pickup between Earth and Muleshoe, which are 18 miles apart, saw a tornado on the ground which then went back into the clouds about halfway between the two cities shortly before noon.

Radar at the National Weather Service in Lubbock also indicated a possible tornado in the Olton vicinity at the time of the warning.

Near noon, Lubbock radar showed showers and a few heavy thunderstorms to the north and northwest of Lubbock, all moving to the northeast.

Forecasters are expecting wet weather to clear out of the area Wednesday, but in the meantime, they said, there's a 30 percent chance of more rain this afternoon and a 20 percent chance tonight.

Thunderstorms churned over wide stretches of West and South Texas late Monday and early today, spilling more cent rainfall and prompting the issuance of numerous flash flood warnings and watches.

A flash flood warning was issued until noon today for Wichita County, where the National Weather Service reported more than 1 inch of rain between 8 a.m. and 9 a.m.

"So far we haven't had any reports of flooding," a Department of Public Safety official in Wichita Falls said at 9:30 a.m. today, adding that a steady downpour was continuing in the city.

He said a heavy shower had been stagnant over Wichita Falls since about 6:30 a.m. today and reported that the NWS there was warning residents to beware of possible flooding in low-lying areas.

To the west of San Antonio, flash flood warnings were issued through this morning for portions of Hondo Creek in Medina County and the Frio and Sabinal rivers in Uvalde County.

Reporting rainfall in excess of 2 inches per hour over the watersheds early today, the NWS warned of the threat of ground saturation and rapid runoff of additional showers.

Cities under the flood warning included Hondo in Medina County and Sabinal in Uvalde County.

Paratroopers 'Gutty Bunch'

Thirty-five years ago Wednesday at 1:32 a.m., Clyde Hall watched a red light come on inside the cramped cabin of a C-47 transport plane and 20 young men rise tensely to hook up their parachute lines.

Four minutes later, a green light came on, the man at the rear yelled, "Jump!" and they jumped one by one into the dark wind and the greatest battle in history.

HALL

The 29-year-old engineer had taken off south of Bristol, England, with paratroopers and his three fellow crewmen, and they were making one of the first troop drops on D-Day of the Normandy Invasion.

"It was one of the most horrifying experiences you could ever have," Hall, now a 64-year-old automotive service shop owner in Lubbock, said this week. "Every 10th bullet from those machine guns had a tracer bullet, which was red, and it looked like a Christmas celebration, with fireworks going off."

The plane came in low — at 1,500 feet — to fly under most of the German flak.

As quickly as they could shuffle to the open door and tumble out, the paratroopers were gone. The pilot, co-pilot, navigator and Hall turned back for England and the second of numerous loads of paratroopers that night.

"I couldn't tell you the number of trips we made in there," he said. "We had more confidence after that first flight. Most of us had never been in combat before."

Hall said the first load of paratroopers, faces blackened, "were smoking cigarettes and cracking jokes" on the way over the English Channel to France.

"That was the guttiest bunch of boys I ever had the pleasure of being associated with," he said, "that first bunch I carried over.

The Army Air Corps crews had been briefed on the invasion 10 days earlier. While bad weather threatened it, they were kept in a long Quonset hut with military police at each end for security until the weather finally lifted. The MPs even went with them to the latrine, he said.

The C-47s carried troops across for nearly three hours, and the next day they started carrying wounded back to England from France. After three days, they settled into a pattern of "hauling gasoline to Patton and hauling the wounded back."

Three weeks later, Hall took part in the invasion of Southern France from Gorsetta, Italy.

"It didn't go so good for the first two weeks, and then we started to gain ground and Patton got to going, and we knew we were on the road to overcoming the enemy," he said.

FBI Hopes New Sketch Will Help Wood Probe

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — FBI officials say they plan to release at least one — and possibly three — more composite sketches of persons witnesses have told them were near U.S. District Judge

(Related story on Page 12, Sec. A)

John Wood's townhouse the morning the judge was assassinated.

The FBI released composite sketches last Friday of two white men in their late 20s or 30s whom witnesses had said were in the "immediate vicinity" May 29 when a sniper cut down Wood with a single shot to the spine.

Daniel Shaffer, the assistant director of the investigation, said of the first two composites, "We're not saying these people are connected to the case in any way, but we're not saying they're not either."

FBI Special Agent Manuel Marquez said Monday the FBI has not yet found those two men. He also said there could be as many as three more sketches issued today or later this week, but refused to say whether those pictured in the drawings were women or men.

"They are also not necessarily suspects, as such, but we just want to find out who they are and what they were doing there," said Marquez.

It had been reported Saturday that a man carrying a rifle and a walkie-talkie was seen near Wood's townhouse several days before the assassination.

A San Antonio photographer, who was carrying a walkie-talkie and a monopod camera stand May 26 while in the area taking pictures, voluntarily went to the FBI on Monday in case he had been mistaken for a man with a rifle.

Marquez said the FBI "appreciates the photographer coming forward and clarifying his presence on Saturday."

He added, however, "We are still looking into that aspect of the case," refusing to elaborate further on what aspects might interest the investigators.

Wood, 63, known as "Maximum John" for his stiff sentences in drug cases, was killed by a .243-caliber bullet, usually fired from a high-powered deer rifle.

It was the second time in seven months a Western District of Texas official involved in West Texas narcotics smuggling cases has been ambushed. Assistant U.S. Attorney James Kerr escaped serious injury Nov. 21 when his car was riddled with bullets.

Federal officials have refused to say whether they believe the two assaults are connected.

Egyptian Leader Bares Arms Deal With China

CAIRO, Egypt (UPI) — President Anwar Sadat announced today Egypt has concluded a new arms deal with China, in line with Cairo's policy of diversifying its armament sources.

In a speech marking the fourth anniversary of the reopening of the Suez Canal, Sadat also said he will seek licenses from the United States to build U.S.-designed advanced weapons in Egypt.

He said these arms would be manufactured by a purely Egyptian organization that will replace the Arab Military Industrialization Organization, a joint venture being dissolved as a result of Arab opposition to the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

"I am happy to announce to you now that the Chinese Peoples Republic has concluded an arms deal with us," Sadat told a large gathering of officers from the 2nd Field Army at a camp in the Suez Canal town of Ismailia.

He gave no details of the new deal but simply said, "in your name and on behalf of the Egptian people, I extend thanks to the Chinese leadership for its understanding and its unselfish help which is devoid of any ulterior motives."

Sadat said Egypt currently has arms supply agreements with the United States, Britain and France in addition to China.

This, he said, was in accordance with his 1974 arms diversification decision taken after the Soviet Union imposed an arms embargo on Egypt in reprisal for its unilateral Middle East peace moves and its closer relations with the United States.

Since that time, Egypt has obtained French Mirage warplanes, air defense missiles and military helicopters, British Hovercraft, swingfire anti-tank missiles and Sea King naval warfare helicopters and American C-130 military transport planes and jeeps.

In the pipeline from the United States, Sadat said, are 50 F-5E jet fighters, plus $1.5 billion worth of Phantom fighter-bomders and other hardware, including naval units and ground-to-air missiles.

"What is more, I shall request from the United States licenses for production of the most advanced weapons," Sadat said. "Also I shall seek partnership with major arms-producing companies using the most modern technology and I am confident that all of them will welcome this because they respect Egypt and are aware of its size and value."

Sadat's speech came as Egypt took a tough position in talks with Israel on opening their borders, insisting on restrictions that would bar most Israelis from visiting Egypt for eight months.

Energy Officials Auditing City Station

By JEFF McCASLIN
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The U.S. Department of Energy has launched a full-fledged investigation into possible federal gasoline price gouging violations by a St. Louis-based oil company that owns two service stations in West Texas, The Avalanche-Journal has learned.

A spokesman in the Midland DOE office confirmed today that Mars Oil Co. of St. Louis, which owns service stations in Lubbock and Odessa, is being fully audited by the energy department in light of complaints that its stations may be overcharging.

Lowell Darling, acting auditing director for the DOE's Midland office, said an auditor on a routine spot check of gasoline prices in Lubbock Friday noticed the Mars Service station at 2315 4th St. was charging 99.9 cents a gallon for all grades.

Darling said the station attendant told the auditor that all records were kept at the home office in St. Louis.

He said the DOE will wait until the audit is completed before determining whether the company is within the federal guidelines for price increases or if they will ask the company to roll back prices.

Darling said the Mars station in Lubbock was the only station being investigated by the DOE in the West Texas area.

Federal guidelines adopted by the DOE allows stations to charge 10 cents more than what the station pays for the gas, plus a three-cent non-product increase and any rent increases since Jan. 1, 1979. A service station's profit margin is based on what that station charged for gas on May 15, 1973.

A DOE spokesman in Washington said stations found to be violating price ceilings will be informed by letter that they must roll back their prices to stay within the guidelines or face fines totalling $15,000 a day.

Darling said the oil company claims to be taking advantage of a new DOE rule modification known as banking.

Here's how it works: If a station allowed to charge 10 cents more per gallon than it paid decided to charge only three cents more, the station could make up the difference later by cashing in their "bank account" of the unused profit margin, which in this case is seven cents.

The practice is potentially lucrative to companies selling large volumes of gas with relatively low profit margins, or below the established 10 cents per gallon, a DOE spokesman in Washington said.

Because of the recent shortage and the fact that motorists seem to be willing to pay any price for the precious commodity, several chains are electing to use the loophole and cash in on their

Carter May Seek Public Funds To Repay Debt

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter may ask the taxpayers to swallow $50,202.94 of his 1976 general election campaign expenditures despite an audit finding that his election committee should repay the Treasury.

The Federal Election Commission, after a 2½-year audit, said Monday it is seeking reimbursement for:

—$27,080.69 in interest the campaign earned on telephone deposits using taxpayers' money.

—$15,207 in unreceipted cash payments made to "get out the vote" on election day.

—$7,915.25 in miscellaneous travel, entertainment, lodging and office expenses, which also were insufficiently documented.

The 1976 campaign was history's first publicly financed U.S. presidential election, and the audit was aimed at finding whether the millions of subsidy dollars were properly spent.

White House officials said few if any of these audit findings would be disputed in the 30 days allowed for appeals.

But they also said they are strongly considering an attempt to get the election commission to rule that the Treasury should reimburse itself.

White House counsel Robert Lipshutz said the campaign turned back to the Treasury $126,000 in primary election money, and also had qualified for roughly $250,000 in federal subsidy payments for the primary that was never claimed.

He said he may ask the FEC to transfer money out of the Treasury, into the primary campaign fund and from there into the general campaign fund to cover the disputed expenses.

Lipshutz acknowledged that this might not work. The commission could rule that it amounts to using taxpayers' money to pay the very sums for which the commission barred use of pulic funds in the first place.

And FEC press officer Sharon Snyder said there were other problems with such a proposal, including legal barriers to transferring money from a primary to a general campaign fund and a lingering dispute over whether the Carter primary campaign could properly claim the $250,000 which Lipshutz mentioned.

If all else fails, the $50,000 probably will be paid by the Democratic National Committee.

Miss Snyder said the commission had assumed the DNC would pay the money until Lipshutz raised the possibility of seeking public funds to satisfy the debt.

The FEC's audit report stated, in fact, that the Democratic party already had agreed to pay the $27,000 interest item, but Lipshutz said he didn't know how the commission got that idea.

Granum said the $50,000 in question amounts to one-tenth of 1 percent of total expenditures in the 1976 general election campaign. He said he understood this is about the same percentage that has been questioned in other campaigns.

Indeed, the FEC billed former President Gerald R. Ford's general election campaign for $33,359.42 after completing an audit on it more than a year ago.

That included $700 in parking tickets which the FEC said should not have been paid with taxpayers' money, $30,472 in interest earned on deposits similar to the Carter phone deposits, and $2,187 in unused funds.

France Criticizes American Oil Policy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Differing views on oil and the Middle East are causing a rift between the United States and France with strong accusations emanating from both sides.

After a meeting with President Carter Monday, French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet complained that Europe fears the U.S. policy of subsidizing heating oil imports is driving the prices up on the world market.

But Energy Secretary James Schlesinger branded the criticism as "hard ball" diplomacy, and retorted that the United States has shown more restraint in petroleum consumption than has Europe.

On the Middle East front, Carter bluntly told the visitor that France's failure to support the Egyptian-Israeli peace process "tends to strength the radicals and force moderates (in the Arab world) to vacate the middle ground."

Press secretary Jody Powell reported that the discussion was one "of complete candor on both sides," with Carter making it clear "we are somewhat disappointed that the French are unable to be more supportive thus far in the peace process."

"The least we can hope is that the French and others wil demonstrate a willingness to wait and see how the next round evolves before disassociating themselves from our effort," Powell said.

The French issued a statement at the White House while Carter was meeting with the foreign minister, outlining their distress with the little-publicized U.S. move two weeks ago to increase the amount of diesel and home heating oil by providing a $5-a-barrel subsidy for foreign purchases.

Supplies of both products had dropped to a level the administration viewed as dangerously low.

Several European officials denounced the move, saying it would create a subsidy war.

But Schlesinger, defending the decision, said "it was very carefully adjusted to keep it below a subsidy level that would draw oil" to the United States.

"It is sufficient only to preclude what we have observed in recent months, which is a drift of products ... from Canadian sources of supply, West Indian sources of supply, toward the European market," he explained.

He said the United States has cut its oil appetite "about a million barrels a day below projected use for this time of the year," and "that degree of achievement and restraint has not been emulated by some of our partners in Europe."

As for Francois-Poncet's complaints, Schlesinger replied, "The term, I believe for this form of diplomatic art is hard ball," indicating both sides were hanging tough.

"I don't know what hard ball is," Francois-Poncet retorted when told of Schlesinger's response. "But our basic attitude is that there has to be consultation. There is a larger common ground between us. I am encouraged we will find a means to meet his situation."

Clergymen Want Meeting Canceled

WASHINGTON (UPI) — As if President Carter didn't have enough problems with a balky Congress, rising inflation and diminshing fuel supplies, he is now being accused of departing from biblical values and promoting homosexuality.

The charge comes from a New York-based alliance of fundamentalist clergymen demanding that Carter call off today's scheduled meeting between White House staff aide Jane Wales and a group of 12 self-proclaimed "Third World gays."

Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., who met with the anti-homosexual clergymen — a Catholic, a Protestant and a Jew — said Monday he sent Carter a telegram "expressing my indignation that the president is lending respectability to the breakdown of moral values," and demanding the clergymen be allowed to meet with White House aides, as well.

Miss Wales said today's meeting "doesn't imply support or non-support" of the homosexuals' goals. "We try to be able to meet with any organized interest group. We try not to say no," she said.

This meeting was requested three months ago, and the antihomosexual group "would be given the same opportunity," she said.

She said the homosexuals — blacks, Asian-Americans and American Indians — wanted "to let us know of their concerns: housing, health care, employment discrimination, the Equal Rights Amendment and broad areas."

"Any American has a right to request an appointment to see a public servant," Humphrey said. "But the government has gone too far in legitimizing homosexuality. I hope the White House will not cross the line between listening to grievances and promoting a life style abhorrent to most Americans and which contributes to moral decay."

The Rev. Roger Fulton of the Neighborhood Church in New York's Greenwich Village, spokesman for the anti-gay group, complained the government has encouraged immorality and homosexuality — specifically that the National Endowment for the Arts has awarded a federal grant for the display of homosexual art "with definite Sodomite qualities" in New York.

The recipient group, he said, previously put on a show where "transvestites simulate sex acts behind plate glass windows with children watching."

Asked why a born-again Christian who reads the Bible daily would promote homosexuality, Fulton said Carter "has made so many decisions in this and other areas that do not reflect biblical values."

"A real Southern Baptist doesn't just take step No. 1 (rebirth) and then ignore the teachings of the faith," he said.

Kenny Rogers Receives Three Music Awards

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Kenny Rogers, who cashed in heavily on his hit song "The Gambler," was a three-time winner at the 13th annual Music City News Cover Awards.

Rogers, unable to make the ceremonies because of a performing commitment, was chosen top male vocalist Monday night. His song, "The Gambler," was selected best single and he shared duet of the year honors with Dottie West.

"If I'd have known I'd have won three awards, I'd have canceled and been there in person," Rogers said from Las Vegas via special hookup to the nationally televised awards show at the Grand Ole Opry House.

Barbara Mandrell was selected female artist of the year, breaking Loretta Lynn's 12-year stranglehold on the award.

"I think it's great she won," Miss Lynn said. "You've got to lose sometime."

Other than Rogers, the only other act to win more than one award was the Statler Brothers, who were chosen group of the year for the sixth straight year and who won top album honors for "Entertainers On and Off the Road."

Silver-haired Pee Wee King, an accordionist who wrote the classic "Tennessee Waltz" in 1948, won the Founder's Award for long-time contributions to country music.

Other winners were:

Roy Clark, top musician; the Osborne Brothers, bluegrass group of the year; Eddie Rabbitt, songwriter of the year; Jerry Clower, top comedy act; "PBS' Live from the Grand Ole Opry," top television show; Rex Allen Jr., most promising male vocalist.

Also, the Oak Ridge Boys' band, band of the year; Janie Fricke, most promising female vocalist; and Connie Smith, gospel act of the year.

Winners were selected by 150,000 readers of the Music City News, a monthly Nashville country music publication.

The show was the second of three major country music awards shows this year. The Academy of Country Music in Los Angeles made its presentations in May. The Country Music Association has its show in October.

HHH Eyed For Medallion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The late Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey and three men who crossed the Atlantic Ocean in a helium balloon may soon be immortalized on gold medallions.

HUMPHREY

The House voted Monday to authorize the striking of the mediallions. The Humphrey medallion would be presented to Muriel Humphrey, wife of the late vice president and Minnesota Democrat.

Balloonists Ben Abruzzo, Maxie Anderson and Larry Newman live in New Mexico. Their 1978 flight was the first successful crossing of the Atlantic in a helium balloon.

The Bureau of the Mint estimated the medals would cost $48,000 to $60,000. The Treasury would be authorized to sell bronze copies to the public to recover costs.

The Senate, which passed similar legislation earlier, must now vote on minor changes made by the House.

CRANSTON

Cranston, 31, was arrested Feb. 17 after 33-year-old Trudy Bekessy told police he had broken into her home. She testified at a preliminary hearing that Cranston choked and beat her and said he would kill her.

Film Cowboys To Honor Wayne

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Songs around the campfire are part of the tradition of the Old West, but some of the 50 screen cowboys gathering for a television production want to dedicate their melodies to another American tradition — John Wayne.

Wayne, hospitalized with cancer, will be saluted in song on an ABC television special tonight (Channel 28, 9 p.m.) called "When the West Was Fun." The screen cowboys requested that the show's final number be dedicated to Wayne, said producer Brad Marks.

Roy Rogers, Dale Evans and the Sons of the Pioneers will sing while the cowboys gather around a campfire. A picture of Wayne, a veteran of scores of movie westerns, will be superimposed over the scene.

In a trivia section of the show, it will be noted that Wayne once was asked to be Marshal Matt Dillon on the "Gunsmoke," television series, but instead recommended a young actor named James Arness.

Royal Couple Schedules Tour

TOKYO (AP) — Crown Prince Akihito and Princess Michiko will make a goodwill visit to Romania, Bulgaria and the Netherlands in October, the Imperial Household says.

The royal couple will visit Romania and Bulgaria as the proxies of Emperor Hirohito to return the visits made in 1975 by Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu and in 1978 by Bulgarian President Todor Zhivkov, the agency said Tuesday.

The announcement said the visit to the Netherlands will be informal.

Freeze-Dried Fat

TORONTO (AP) — Want to lose weight without a diet? Armed Forces researchers have discovered that two hours a day in temperatures of 40 degrees below zero can take off a pound or so a day without a sweat.

The Lighter Side Of Today's News

"When's the last time you saw a fat Eskimo?" asked Dr. William O'Hara, who started thinking about no-sweat weight loss while examining troops on Arctic maneuvers.

O'Hara has been duplicating Arctic conditions in a "cold room" where people inhaling super cold air have lost about a pound a day even while eating all they wanted, partly because the body must burn calories to warm the inhaled air.

The department of tourism in the Northwest Territories says there are tourist accommodations available for those who might like to take advantage of the technique in the Arctic, but it warns that summer temperatures have warmed to 20 degrees below zero.

Wriggly Worms Worth Money

By SHARI LEWIS

Worms. Wriggly, squirmy worms. If you said "Yechh!" to yourself when you read that, this idea is not for you. But if you like to look at insects and other little things that crawl on the ground and wiggle through the earth and hide under rocks, you may find that there's money for you in worms. Well, the money's not in the worms, but if you can grow worms or catch them, you'll probably be able to sell them.

Fishermen need them. Bait dealers (who seldom grow worms) need them. Pet stores (selling turtles and birds) need them. Aquariums and stores selling tropical fish need them. And if you have any laboratories in your neighborhood, they need them too, because red worms are dissected for experiments in many laboratories.

Your first order probably won't cost you more than $5 and you'll receive over a thousand wrigglers in this starter set. Now, a red worm lays an egg every 10 days. In three weeks 3 or 4 baby worms come out of that egg. In three months, those babies start laying eggs of their own! So you can see that your starter set, properly cared for, can turn into over a million worms in a year.

Red worms are by far the easiest kind of worms to grow. You can get your first group of worms by mail from worm growers who advertise in fishing magazines, and they'll give you full instructions, too.

Red worms live in a moist mixture of peat moss and composted cow manure (which you can get at any garden supply store) and they eat corn meal, just sprinkled on the ground every three days or so.

YESTERDAY'S BRAIN TWISTER: If you sing a silly song in an automobile, what do you get?

ANSWER: A car tune!

TODAY'S BRAIN TWISTER: Can you place all of these numbers (1-9) one in each square so that the up and down row (vertical one) and the side to side row (the horizontal one) total exactly the same sum? (Look for the answer in tomorrow's Kids-Only Club column.)

Carter Needs Cure For Woes

Analysis

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter may have diagnosed his own political problem. Now all he needs is the cure.

He suggests it is to be found in an aroused American public, demanding congressional approval of key administration proposals.

But Carter's problem is that the public seems to blame him along with Congress for much of what has gone wrong on such matters as energy and inflation.

"Too many Americans today are watching the spectacle of politicians grappling with complex problems, for instance, of energy and inflation," Carter told leaders of the Democratic Party. "They see the demagoguery and they see political timidity and they wonder if we who are in office are equal to the challenge."

He said people are disturbed, doubtful, uncertain of the future, and concerned that their leaders cannot seem to act on nagging problems.

That has a familiar ring. It is much the same theme Carter sounded when he was campaigning for the White House. "Millions of Americans have lost faith in government," candidate Carter said nearly three years ago. "We feel that we've lost control of our own government, that it has become our master instead of our servant, that we are being ruled by special interests and by politicians who just don't care about us."

That worked well for a Democrat campaigning as an outsider, asking for the franchise to come to Washington to change things.

It does not work well for an incumbent president in the opening phase of a campaign for re-election.

For if voters are as dissatisfied with the federal government as Carter says, that means they are dissatisfied with the White House, too. It may be unfair for the president to face the blame when things go wrong or undone because he can't get action in Congress. But it is a fact of political life.

And Carter made the most of that fact when he was running against Gerald R. Ford.

A recent AP-NBC News poll showed 72 percent of the people think Carter's performance as president is only fair or poor. The same survey showed 74 percent feel that way about Congress.

On the plus side, 26 percent rated Carter's performance good to excellent; only 20 percent gave Congress marks that high.

To put it in words instead of numbers, for all his criticism of Congress, Carter has not convinced the people he's doing much better than the legislators.

When Carter appeared before the Democratic National Committee a week ago, the first question he faced suggested he isn't using the full prestige and power of the White House to get action on energy and the like.

He said there will be plenty of blame to go around if the government cannot act. "And I know the president has that responsibility as the pre-eminent person, and I get my share of the blame, and I am not too weak to take it," he said.

Carter then turned the question around, and suggested that party leaders should be putting pressure on Congress in behalf of administration programs. "What member of the Congress, as a Democrat, could stand up against you?" he asked. "Very few."

The party apparatus is one of the tools available to a president. There's not much evidence Carter has made very effective use of it.

Another is to deal with balky members of Congres by stalling or scuttling their pet projects. But Carter told his news conference last week he doesn't work that way, and isn't going to punish constituents because their congressman opposes his programs. "I represent those districts, also," he said.

A third is persuasion, and he's been trying that.

DR. LAMB

Mineral Oil Not Best

By Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I have been taking mineral oil most of my life. I am 72. I have piles for which I had surgery a few years ago. This left me with a tight muscle in the rectum and makes elimination difficult. However, the mineral oil doesn't seem to do what it used to and my stool is too soft and sometimes shredded.

Lately I've been introduced to Metamucil which seems to work fine and gives me a natural stool. I also drink fruit juices. What I would like to know is, is it safe to take Metamucil every day? I'm told that it is a physic and should not be relied on. It does seem to work nicely, though.

DEAR READER — Many doctors used to recommend mineral oil but most of us don't recommend it any more. Originally it was not thought to be absorbed and was used to soften the stool. It worked very well for that in most cases. The problem is small amounts of it can be absorbed and act as an irritant to the organs in which the mineral oil is deposited. It also can interfere with the absorption of important vitamins and minerals. Then there's a little social problem of it leaking through.

I don't recommend chemical laxatives either. I'm sending you The Health Letter number 12-8, Laxatives, Enemas and Suppositories, to give you some basic information on which of these products you should avoid. Other readers who want this issue can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Send your request to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 326, San Antonio, Tex. 78292.

Metamucil is one of several bulk laxatives and is not necessarily any better than some of the others on the market. They contain an inert substance which swells when moist, adding bulk to the diet. The moisture that it retains does act as a stool softener and can help people who have problems in elimination in conjunction with hemorroids or complications of hemorrhoids.

Usually you can get the same effect from including enough bran or cereal in your diet. The cereal fiber swells when it's moistened and acts as a bulk additive.

The so-called bulk laxatives, of which Metamucil is one, are not chemical laxatives and there's really no harm in taking them on a regular basis if you can't solve the problem with a natural diet. If it works well for you, there's no reason that you shouldn't continue it although I must say that I'm a little partial to the idea of your using cereal fiber in your diet. To me it seems just a little more natural.

There are such things as stool softeners which you could use as well if you really need them.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I have examined my rectum and I feel a mass that seems to be flesh. It almost covers the rectum and at other times it doesn't seem to be there. Is this normal? I've had trouble with constipation for years.

DEAR READER — You probably have hemorrhoids. Sometimes they protrude and you can feel them and at other times they do not. Regardless of what it is, anyone who has a mass in that area and doesn't know what it is should certainly see a physician.

TODAY'S EDITORIAL:

The Sisterhood Of Man?

DESPITE OCCASIONAL failures of enforcement, laws mandating equality for women have become commonplace. In the 1970s alone, more than 25 countries so far have instituted legal reforms of this nature.

Throughout the world, education is serving as a major catalyst for change in the role of women, even though half again as many women as men remain illiterate.

"Unlike employment outside the home or in political participation, education for women is almost universally valued," notes Mrs. Kathleen Newland, author of "The Sisterhood of Man."

Mrs. Newland's book was released last week under the auspices of its publisher, the non-profit Worldwatch Institute. Her study was financed by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities.

"WITH EDUCATION comes the opportunity—and the impetus—to break away from the traditional 'breeder-feeder' role," write nationally syndicated columnists Martha Angle and Robert Walters.

"Almost without exception," they report, "studies have shown (that) the more education women receive, the more likely they are to seek employment outside the home."

In industrialized societies worldwide, more than a third of all adult women are in the labor force. In the United States, Scandinavia and Eastern Europe, the percentage is well over half.

Equally significant, there is a direct linkage between education and fertility rates.

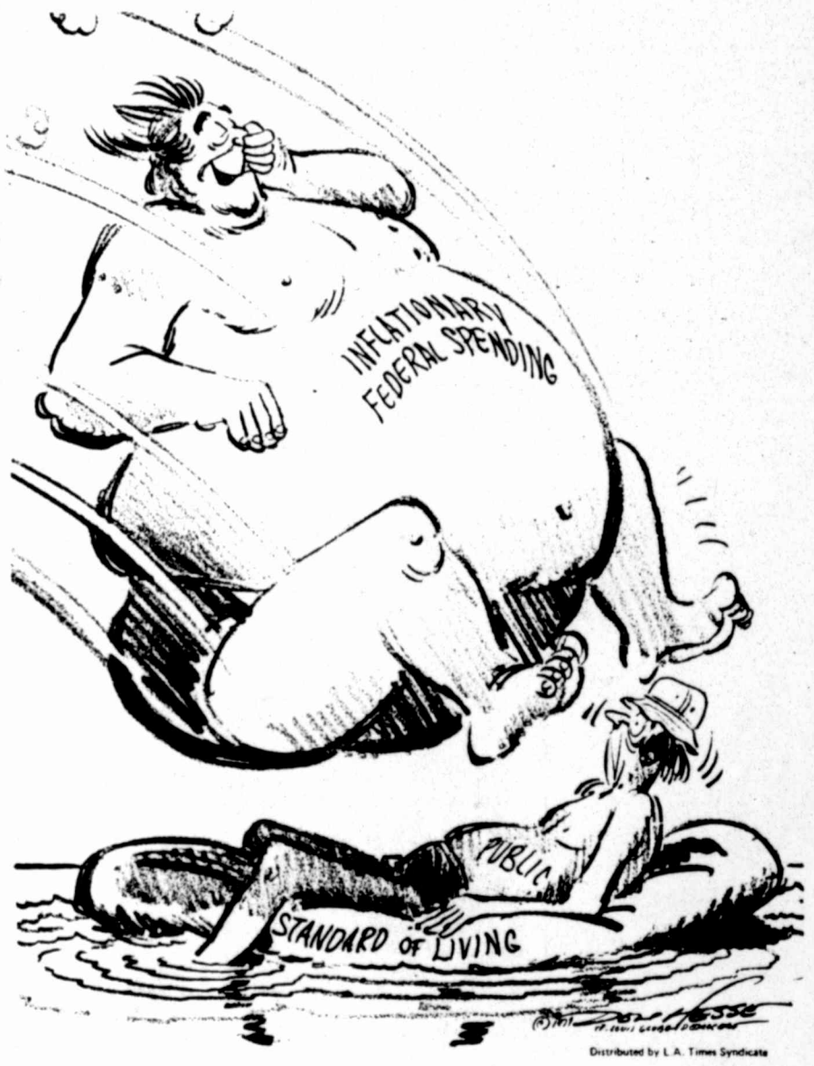

THE MORE schooling women obtain, the fewer children they are likely to have—a correlation of immense significance in developing nations plagued by overpopulation.

Indeed, what is most intriguing about the worldwide social revolution is the extent to which improvement in the status of women is related to—and necessary for—progress on a variety of other fronts.

Governments have been slow to recognize the connection, especially in countries where tradition and custom narrowly define the role of women. "It's always possible to find some more urgent problem," observes Mrs. Newland.

Yet most of those "more urgent" problems—from poverty to health care, hunger to unemployment—cannot be solved without the active participation of women.

Pragmatism as well as idealism is on the side of equality for women. For as Mrs. Newland contends: "As the world changes for women, women will change the world."

TWO YOUNG MOTHERS, their children in tow, sat together in a Lubbock church pew the other day.

As often happens when children are together in a place of worship, there was constant babbling in a stage whisper throughout the service.

One would write a note and show it to the other, who would write a note back. Then they'd discuss what they had written.

Being female, there was a little primping and a repeated opening and closing of one's purse.

Nearby worshipers reported later that the constant talking and wriggling was a distraction. If the children themselves had not sat quietly throughout the service, the preacher probably couldn't have been heard at all.

Holmes Alexander:

'Death, Where Is Thy Sting?'

WASHINGTON—Death had come out of the closet, in every way except one. The event of Three Mile Island and the political move to close down other atomic power plants have caused us to be forgetful of a deep human truth.

We have failed to remember, under the newness of the atomic threat, that God or Nature prepares the mind for earthy extinction. We have failed to apply this knowledge to the most enormous fact of our time—the nuclear fact.

We have not acknowledged that there is a divine quality of mercy that applies to the widespread awareness that our wholesale destruction is not a remote possibility if there occurs a massive accident (though this is scientifically controllable) or World War III which few believe that SALT II is likely to avert.

MORE SIGNIFICANTLY, I think, we have not yet come to the belief that the same intellect which permits man to destroy himself has also instructed man's brain to accept destruction.

Death in its non-nuclear aspect has come to be accepted, much as the four letter word is no longer verboten. We no longer bother so much with circumlocutions relating to the bedroom and toilet.

Perhaps the new candor has made us cleaner and more forthright, at least that is the widespread opinion. So it is with the once-taboo subject of death.

Your family newspaper has opened its pages of discussions and organizations which deal with the "dignity" of the act of dying.

AESTHETIC embellishments come into play with soft music, beautiful flowers, tasteful surroundings for the deathbed, wipe open stands the door that was once padlocked with inhibition.

A time has reached us when medical professions, whose sworn duty was once to protect life, are now excused—if not encouraged—to cut the current of artificial breathing devices.

The doctor, the intern, the nurse, the relative is thought better of if he withholds medicines, or if he supplies the lethal pill for the hopeless sufferer.

Where there once were solemn court proceedings over induced death, books are now published and lectures given on mercy killings of the incurable.

But this modern attitude toward death, as yet, does not extend to the nuclear fact.

Whenever there is an atomic incident, people lose their cool. They are more afraid of radiation than of dying in bed. It is the fear of the unknown, or the unusual.

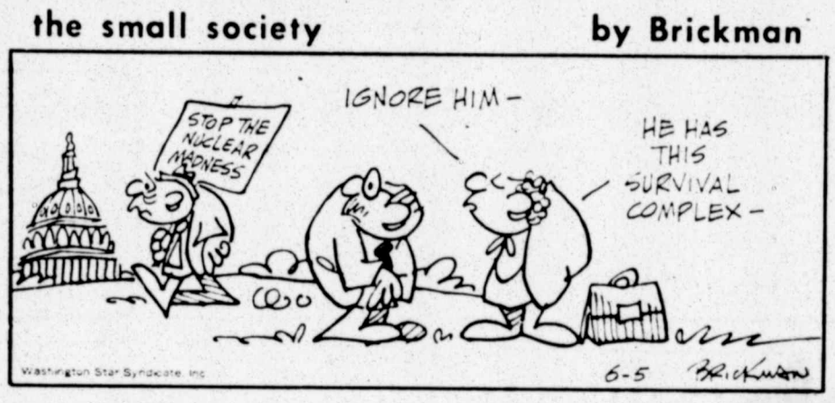

But anyone who has been at a deathbed knows that patients become calm and resigned when they view the inevitable. I believe this to be the work of God, the indoctrination of Nature.

From this I deduce that if the apocalypse by explosion or war is drawing near we will find ourselves blessed with a mentality, or a Master, that causes us to accommodate to whatever will be.

Shakespeare observed that jailers noted how often "when men are at the point of death have they been merry."

We are not apt to become merry over death by H-bomb or nuclear radiation, but I am convinced that the Deity will condition us to accept it. It won't be as bad as the gloom-spreaders wish us to think it will be.

the small society — by Brickman

Sylvia Porter:

X-Ray Exams Increase At Patients' Expense

(Second of three columns)

ASTOUNDING NUMBERS of us routinely undergo X-ray examinations each year. Would you believe more than 13 million in this country alone?

The obvious explanations remain as always: X-rays are of extreme value in detecting conditions which must be corrected; X-rays are routine in testing teeth, lungs, any other organs that suggest trouble has developed, limbs, etc.

But recently another explanation has been extensive use of so-called defensive X-rays, which physicians often order to protect themselves against the possibility of malpractice suits.

There is no effort on the part of the physicians themselves or their organizations to deny this—particularly in the face of soaring awards to patients suing their doctors for malpractice in any number of ways.

TO THEIR credit, it should be stressed that physicians should not get all the blame for the abuse of X-rays. Their patients frequently request—even demand—the X-ray.

In fact, Deborah Van Brunt of the U.S. Food & Drug Administration's Bureau of Radiological Health points out that many patients feel that their physician "must be on the ball" when he gives X-rays or other similar tests involving high-technology therapy.

While there is no way to check the incidence of these diagnostic examinations, estimates on the use of defensive X-rays now run from six to as high as 40 percent of those taken in one year!

And while there is no way to tote up the amounts that many of these unnecessary X-rays add to health costs: this much is clear:

• THE X-RAY exams swell the risks of overexposure to radiation fallout.

• The unavoidable expenses of the treatments are adding substantially to the costs of health care each of us, as individuals, are assuming and certainly are contributing to the upsurge in these costs year after year.

• The burden on the hospitals also is a factor, for the X-rays involve costly equipment, personnel, space, etc.

As of today, hospitals are open to ever more bitter criticism in this area, too. They are not immune to charges of excessive use of X-ray—not by any means.

And even the generally praised mass screenings for tuberculosis by mobile X-ray units are coming under fire.

The units do uncover possible dangerous conditions, perhaps in sufficiently early stages to permit treatment and complete recovery of the individual. But how much unnecessary exposure is there to radiation?

OTHER PROBLEMS are emerging from charges that X-ray examinations too often are not performed by radiologists who are trained to read the resulting films. (All my recent X-rays have been performed by trained nurses who then turn over the films to the radiologist for reading and interpretation. Hasn't that been your experience, too?)

But those who are re-examining the entire X-ray-radiation problem are concerned about improper use of the X-rays by the lesser trained personnel, and also are making this point clear.

Low-level radiation is responsible for up to 5 percent of all cancers, according to studies. The recent National Academy of Sciences review notes that thyroid, lung and solid tumors of the breast can be associated with X-ray dosages.

But the NAS study does conclude that the overall risk of cancer and genetic mutations from low exposure to radiation is still slight.

Radiation, of course, is everywhere in our environment. Approximately 50 percent of the radiation we receive we can't control: diverse exposure as a result of flying in a plane for long distances; natural background radiation; even working in buildings of certain types of stone.

THEN THE problem really erupts when we add the broadened spectrum of radiation exposure as a result of a myriad of treatments for disease and methods of detecting disease.

Large doses, in the range of thousands of roentgens (5,000R, for instance) may be required in radiation treatment of cancer.

John D. Lofton:

The New 'Persecuted Minority'

WASHINGTON—OK, get out your crying towel and add a new group to your list of people-I'm-supposed-to-feel-sorry-for. And just who might these individuals be whose reputations are being so viciously maligned?

Why, they are the Vietcong. That's right, the Vietcong.

The New York Times reports that "The Deer Hunter," which won an Academy Award as the best picture of 1978, has "gradually become the center of a controversy over whether art should be hobbled by history."

The Times says that the film's critics have been most particularly disturbed that the movie's central metaphor for the absurdity of war is an invention.

That metaphor is the game of Russian roulette, used as a torture, that the Vietcong in the movie force their American prisoners to play against each other.

LINDA GARETT, the head of something called the Hell No We Won't Go Away Committee, is quoted as saying that "the Deer Hunter" is a "misinterpretation of history."

The New Yorker magazine's film critic, Pauline Kael, is miffed because the movie portrays the VC as "cruel and sadistic."

And AP reporter Peter Arnett, who won a Pulitzer Prize in 1966 for his coverage of the Vietnam War and who should know better, says: "The central metaphor of the movie is simply a bloody lie."

Get serious, pal. If the Communists didn't force our POWs to play Russian roulette, it's the only thing they didn't force them to do.

In March 1973, Army Staff Sgt. James Pfister of Evansville, Ind., said that he saw 10 fellow prisoners of war die of malnutrition and poor medical care.

On April 9, 1973, Newsweek magazine reported:

"The catalog of abuse read like an index to the Marquis de Sade. The ex-POWs said they had faced regular beatings, with anything from bamboo clubs to automobile fan belts.

"Some complained that their captors had proved more energetic in exploiting wounds than treating them.

"LONG PERIODS of solitary confinement—Col. Norman Gaddie counted 1,000 days—and other forms of psychological torture were almost as brutal as the physical punishment."

This same week, Time magazine reported:

"The favorite props of the North Vietnamese captors were lengths of rope, iron manacles that could be screwed down to the bone and fan belts for administering beatings.

"Prisoners claimed that they were tied up for interminable periods into positions that yogis could not assume. Ropes tied to a man's ankles, wrists and neck were tightened until he was bent over backward into a doughnut shape.

"Men were also bent forward into a position of a baby sucking its big toe. The ropes cut off the circulation, and in several cases paralyzed limbs for months, even years.

"HANDCUFFS ON the wrists of one prisoner were tightened so much that blood came through the pores. Hands and feet often swelled to unimaginable proportions and turned black. Jaws, noses, ribs, teeth and limbs, the prisoners charged, were deliberately broken and left unset.

"The sick and wounded were left in their own excrement for days on end. Sgt. Don MacPhail said that he was hung from a tree over three fresh graves and beaten with sticks. He was told he would be in the fourth grave."

POW Maj. Harold Kushner reported seeing another prisoner of war being knocked down, "kicked in the face, kicked in the genitals and reduced to a cringing mass squealing like a pig." Two weeks later he was dead.

Describing his brutal torture by the Communists, POW Navy Capt. Jeremiah Denton said: "I was like an animal. Not even a healthy animal, like a crippled roach. I was pretty much of a vegetable."

NEW YORK TIMES reporter Aljean Harmetz says that the "rising backlash" against "The Deer Hunter" may come partly from "the increasing knowledge that the seemingly realistic sequences of violence are not based on any reality." Like hell they aren't, Mr. Harmetz!

And if you're truly interested in the reality of the violence committed against our POWs, you should talk not only to Vietcong apologists, but to the victims of these savages as well.

These are the people who really know what they're talking about.

So They Say...

When you don't have a good reason for doing a thing, you have one good reason for not doing it.

Overheard: "Isn't that sweet? They've been married 25 years and he still holds her hand." "That's the only way he can keep it out of his wallet."

Daughter Left To Find Father

By LINDA DEUTSCH

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sometimes, when life seems too beautiful to be real, Victoria Fyodorova shivers with fear — a Russian-American Cinderella who worries that her happiness could vanish at dawn.

"You can never be sure," she says pensively, "Four years ago, who could predict what would happen to me? I was planning to go back to Russia then."

Instead, Victoria Fyodorova, the stunningly beautiful daughter of a Russian actress, found the American father she had never known, met and married a handsome American airline pilot and gave birth to her first child — an American — in an international love story that made headlines.

Her beauty and bubbly personality brought her a modeling career as the symbol for a major cosmtics firm. She even dared to dream of resuming the acting career she left in Moscow.

Now, she has written a book which tells why her escape to this story-book American life is a miracle.

WRITES ABOUT CHILDHOOD — Victoria Fyodorova, author of "The Admiral's Daughter" is shown in early May in Los Angeles. Miss Fyodorova, a Russian-American, has written a vivid tale of political oppression, poverty and ostracism which made her childhood in Russia a nightmare. (AP Laserphoto)

"The Admiral's Daughter," by Victoria Fyodorova and Haskel Frankel, is a vivid tale of political opression, poverty and ostracism which made Miss Fyodorova's Russian childhood a nightmare and drove her as a young woman into alcoholism, divorce and despair.

"If anyone could tell me then, 'You will have a happy life, a child and a husband who loves you and who you love,' I would say, 'It's a nice movie, but I'm not in it,'" she says earnestly.

Her book may be an effort to excorcize the memories which haunt her still.

"Sometimes I am going into myself," she says, "and I tell my husband, 'You know what I'm afraid of? I'm afraid that one day I will get up and that starvation and need of everything will come again.'"

"The Admiral's Daughter" is the story of Victoria and her mother, Zoya Fyodorova, the top Russian actress who was imprisoned and tortured because she gave birth to an illegitimate daughter by an American admiral.

Victoria Fyodorova was born in 1946, and her name signified the day she was conceived — VE Day, May 9, 1945. Her father, Adm. Jackson Tate, had been expelled from Russia before he knew that his wartime love affair with Zoya had left her pregnant.

Zoya, then the most popular screen star in Moscow, was imprisoned for treason before her baby was a year old. Her "crime" was the love affair with Tate, and her prison torment lasted eight years.

"I think only a Russian could understand the way I was as a child," Miss Fyodorova says in her book. "Despised by everyone around me, called an enemy to my face."

She lived in exile with an aunt she believed was her mother. She endured near starvation and abject poverty. Their home was infested with tarantulas.

She learned the truth of her birth only after her mother had been released from prison. But she did not know until she was grown that her father was still alive.

She found Tate through a worldwide publicity campaign, won permission to visit the United States and on a memorable day the long-lost father and daughter embraced at last. "'Papa, Papa, Papa,' I couldn't stop saying the name," she recalls in her book.

Her plans to return to Russia were dropped after she met and married pilot Fred Pouy.

What she does not mention in the book is her 1976 voyage back to Russia with her husband and young son.

"I just wanted to be sure I did the right thing," she recalls in her excellent, Russian-accented English.

"When I went back, I understood that I missed nothing. From the first day, I saw the same cruelty, rudeness.

Prison Inmate Receives Second College Degree

NEWARK, N.J. (UPI) — Samuel Bynes attended commencement exercises at Rutgers University Sunday, received his masters degree in criminal justice — and went straight to jail.

The journey south from Rutgers' Newark campus to Trenton State Prison wasn't part of some federally funded experiment designed to encourage degree holders to visit the jail. Bynes lives there.

The 42-year-old inmate has been in Trenton State on a life sentence since 1964, for the slayings of a liquor store owner and an oil company executive.

Bynes completed his high school requirements in prison and in 1971, he enrolled in a criminal justice program at Trenton State College. He was placed under guard on his way to and from the campus.

In 1974, he became the first inmate from a state maximum security facility to receive an undergraduate degree and, after leaving TSC, was accepted into Rutgers' graduate program.

James Finckenauer, Bynes' graduate school adviser, believes Bynes is the first inmate to receive both undergraduate and graduate degrees, but "he will have no position to teach inmates in a formal way."

"He'll continue advising in an informal way ... as a type of jailhouse lawyer. Here's a guy whose got some education and seems to know what's happening and can give good advice," Finckenauer said.

Desalination Plans Axed By Corps

TULSA, Okla. (UPI) — The Army Corps of Engineers no longer considers plans to reduce the saline content of the Arkansas River economically feasible and has temporarily shelved the project, Corps officials said.

A companion desalination project for the Red River also may be too expensive, officials said.

Lt. General J.W. Morris, Corps commander, in a letter to Sen. Henry Bellmon, ROkla., said preliminary results of a recent cost analysis study "indicate that the project may not be economically justified at this time."

In view of the change in the economics of this project resulting from our analysis, I have directed a more deliberate approach to finalizing our study effort," Morris said.

Col. Robert Bening, head of the corps' Tulsa division, said the new study indicates the cost of the projects would not equal the benefits.

The latest estimated cost of reducing chloride levels in the Arkansas River is $535 million, Bening said, but Oklahoma congressmen place the price tag at between $750 million and $1 billion.

Bening said the Corps already has spent $15.6 million for preliminary studies and that the Corps still plans to ask for another $1 million to complete field studies.

The estimated cost for the Red River desalinaion project is $200 million and Bening said that project may be economically feasible.

Bening said the principal technical problem with the project is the construction of brine containment pools.

Engineers want to build a series of dikes and pools in western Oklahoma where the Arkansas passes through natural salt formations. The retention pools would be used to remove the salts.

Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla., has criticized the Arkansas project because he said the retention pools and related construction would take 60,000 acres of western Oklahoma farmland out of production.

Bening said he had been instructed to "slow down" the final report and "to put the Arkansas portion on the shelf" if the revised cost-effectiveness study proves true.

AVIATION FACT OF LIFE — Metal fatigue first drew public attention in the 1950s when the first commercial jetliner, Britain's deHaviland Comet, second from top, had a series of crashes. But every American-built commercial jetliner now in service has been subject to airworthiness directives with roughly about one quarter of these ADs being for metal fatigue. Among those for which ADs were isssued were, the McDonnell Douglas DC-10, top; Boeing 707, third from top; Lockheed L-1011; and Boeing 747, bottom. (AP Laserphoto)

Metal Fatigue Usual Aviation Problem

WASHINGTON (AP) — The DC-10 that crashed in Chicago taking 274 lives was not alone in having cracks or metal fatigue.

An Associated Press check of Federal Aviation Administration records shows the problems of cracks and other structural faults were around before the jet age. They are a fact of life in aviation.

Every American-built commercial jetliner has been subject to "airworthiness directives" — or ADs — government orders for maintenance checks of specific metal parts for cracks. Such an FAA directive last week grounded DC-10s for checks of engine supports. Some of the same planes were grounded again Monday after the FAA learned of additional problems.

"There's not an airplane in the world, civil or military, that doesn't have metal fatigue eventually," said Fred Farrar, an FAA public affairs official. "You know metal fatigue is going to occur ... So you keep watching, and then you put out the AD."

Farrar cited the noticeable flexing of an airliner's wings in flight, a sight that often frightens neophyte fliers. Like a paper clip that is bent back and forth, he said, each movement of the wing contributes to a slight weakening of the structure.

"But better that it bend than break," Farrar said.

Metal fatigue first drew attention in the 1950s, when the first commercial jetliner — Britain's de Havilland Comet — had a series of unexplained crashes, some fatal. It was discovered that a misaligned bolt near a window flexed and eventually failed, resulting in explosive decompression.

The crases destroyed confidence in the plane and in effect ended its commercial service, though the problem had been found.

Most ADs deal with less urgent matters, however, and the situations they point out generally are considered as the inevitable problems of highly complicated machinery rather than a life-threatening hazard.

For example, a total of 129 ADs had been issued as of mid-May on the first U.S. commercial jet, the Boeing 707, which began service in 1958, and on the nearly identical Boeing 720. Of the 129 ADs, 49 covered possible cracks in metal parts, particularly wing surfaces.

Twelve of the ADs were considered important enough for airlines to be alerted by telegram. Those ranged from possible control obstructions to a 1962 warning that lint and moisture accumulating behind lavatory outlets for electric razors could pose a fire hazard.

But a high number of ADs does not necessarily mean a lack of safety, Farrar said, adding: "The number of ADs issued shows the system works," with most issued early as a new plane's problems are found.

For example, 99 of the Boeing 707-720's total ADs were issued through 1969; only 30 have been issued in the 1970s.

Ironically, the DC-10, a tri-engine, long-range transport in service since 1971, has among the fewest ADs. Only 43 have been issued in the past eight years, with only one requiring a check for cracks — in the mechanism that extends the wing flaps.

The Associated Press check of airworthiness directives covered the Boeing 707-720, 727, 737 and 747; the McDonnell Douglas DC-8, DC-9 and DC-10, and the Lockheed L-1011 — the bulk of domestic airliners. Here are the results for aircraft other than the DC-10:

— Boeing 707-720, a four-engine long-range transport introduced in 1958. ADs: 129. Those requiring checks for cracks: 49, including 17 for the wing skin or structure; 11 for various control surfaces; 8 for the horizontal stablizer; 7 for the landing gar and asociated structures; and 2 for engine mountings.

— Boeing 727, a three-engine medium-range transport introduced in 1964. ADs: 70. Requiring checks for cracks: 24, including 11 for the landing gear and surrounding structure and 4 each for the horizontal stabilizer and various control surfaces.

—Boeing 737, a twin-engine, short-range aircraft delivered to airlines in 1967. ADs: 27. Requiring checks for cracks: 7, including 4 for control surfaces and 1 each for the wing structure, landing gear and airframe.

—Boeing 747, a four-engine wide-body, long-range jumbo jet introduced in 1970, ADs: 39. Requiring checks for cracks: 10, including 6 for the fuselage and 4 for control surfaces.

—Lockheed L-1011, a wide-body, tri-engine, long-range transport in service since 1972. ADs: 32. Requiring checks for cracks: 3. Includes 1 each for an engine duct assembly, cargo door and landing gear.

—McDonnell Douglas DC-8, a four-engine, long-range transport introduced in 1959, now out of production. ADs: 55. Those requiring checks for cracks: 14. Includes 6 for engine wing mounts, 5 for various control surfaces and 3 for landing gear.

—McDonnell Douglas DC-9, a twin-engine, short-to-medium-range transport in service since 1965. ADs: 43. Those requiring checks for cracks: 12. Includes 4 for engine mounts, 3 for fuselage, 3 for various control surfaces and 2 for landing gear.

ADs often are prompted by bulletins issued by manufacturers and monitored by FAA engineers. But unlike the bulletins, the directives carry the force of law.

Witness Recalls Assassination

DALLAS (UPI) — Although she was only 10, Rosemary Willis, who was running next to President Kennedy's motorcade in 1963, remembers seeing clearly "two figures" on a railroad trestle as the shots that killed Kennedy rang out.

She said she saw the figures on the railroad trestle the first time when the shots were fired. She saw them a second time, she said, in pictures received by the FBI within hours of the Nov. 22, 1963 assassination. But when FBI agents returned the pictures, she said, the figures were no longer visible.

Her father, who filmed portions of the assassination, agreed. He said there was "no damn way" the fatal shots could have been fired from the Texas School Book Depository as the Warren Commission contended.

Miss Willis said she not only saw the figures on the railroad trestle, but saw a man behind "a lattice-type wall' and the "umbrella man" considered by some assassination researchers to have been the signal man for firing the shots.

Miss Willis' testimony came to light publicly 16 years after the assassination because of the efforts of a then-15-year-old Californian David Lui. He was studying the most famous film of the assassination, taken by Abraham Zapruder, as part of a class project at a Beverly Hills, Calif., school.

Lui said that while studying the film, he noticed a young girl in a white coat running beside the motorcade. But he said the girl came to a sudden halt and looked up at the building from where the Warren Commission said Lee Harvey Oswald, acting alone, fired the fatal shots.

Lui's story of how he eventually located Miss Willis, now 26, was contained in a copyright story Sunday by the Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

Miss Willis' actions that sunny November day have raised questions about the timing of the shots — and whether Oswald had enough time to have fired all the shots himself.

Miss Willis said she saw figures out of the corners of her eyes as the shots rang out — and her father captured them on film. They rushed the film to a Kodak lab, she said, where FBI agents, and Zapruder, were already assembled.

"Zapruder — and the FBI — were already there," Miss Willis said. "Certain photos we saw then clearly showed two figures on the railroad trestle. The FBI took the photos and when they returned them, the two figures were no longer in the photographs."

The Warren Commission later visited the Willis family.

"They talked to me but nothing I said was in their report. There are a lot of discrepancies in the commission's report. I know they changed some of the things my parents told them, even to the point of putting 'Yes' where they said 'No.'

Lui, now 19 and a college student, believes the Zapruder film demonstrates Oswald had enough time to fire three shots at Kennedy.

Lui said Miss Willis began to halt on frame 196 of the film. At frame 210, the car passed out of the camera's view and by the time it returned, at frame 225, Kennedy was clutching at his throat in reaction to a wound. At frame 238, former Texas Gov. John Connally had obviously been hit.

Officials have said Zapruder's film moved at 18.3 frames per second. Officials also have said the fastest the shots could have been fired was at a rate of one every 2.3 seconds.

Many conspiracy theories have been based on the premise that Oswald's rifle could not have fired all the shots that hit the motorcade. Lui, however, said the girl's reaction showed the first shot may have been fired well before that was commonly thought.

After studying the film, Lui said he traced the girl — who was 10 years old when Kennedy was shot — and in 1975 located her. She confirmed Lui's suspicion it was the sound of a gun shot that caused her to stop abruptly.

"I heard three shots and they all came from across the street from the direction of the book depository," she said Monday in an interview with UPI. "Oswald was up there as clear as could be. I think he was up there on purpose to make people think he was the one.

"I remember standing while everyone else was falling to the ground. And in my (peripheral) vision I saw three other figures standing. I saw a man with an open umbrella and beyond him a man behind a lattice-type wall.

"And I saw either one or two people on the railroad trestle above. I glanced at the president again for a split second, then when I looked up, the umbrella was down and the man behind the wall had vanished."

"The sounds I heard came from the book depository but they weren't necessarily the shots that killed him. Someone with a gun with a silencer could have been in the gutter where they later found shells, or on the railroad trestle or behind the wall."

Miss Willis' father, Phil, agreed, saying, "There's no doubt in our mind the final shot that blew his head off did not come from the depository (located to the rear of the motorcade). His head blew up like a halo. The brains and matter went to the left and the rear."

Polygamist Awaits Transfer To Utah To Face Charges

LAREDO (AP) — While polygamist leader Ervil LeBaron remained in jail here, officials in Salt Lake City said they would announce a decision today on a special prosecutor for his murder trial.

LeBaron is charged with murder and conspiracy to commit murder in the 1977 shooting death of Rulon Allred, leader of what was believed to be Utah's largest polygamist sect.

FBI agents said LeBaron would be brought to Utah "very soon," but refused to name a specific day because of security reasons. Webb County jailers at Laredo said they did not know when LeBaron would be taken.

LeBaron, 54, told U.S. Magistrate Tom Goodwin Monday he suffered broken ribs while in custody of Mexican authorities. Goodwin assured LeBaron he would receive all necessary medical attention while in the Webb County Jail.

Jail officials said LeBaron never indicated to them he was in pain, and no sight of injury was seen when he was admitted. Jailers said Monday night they did not know whether LeBaron had been seen by a doctor yet.

Salt Lake County Attorney Ted Cannon said a decision would be announced today regarding whether Deputy County Attorney David Yocom will prosecute LeBaron.

Yocom, who prosecuted four LeBaron followers (including one of his wives) acquitted of the Allred slaying, resigned just two days before LeBaron's arrest. Yocom said he would like to try the case as a special prosecutor.

Federal Public Defender Gustavo Acevedo said LeBaron planned when brought to Utah to claim Mexican citizenship and say he openly preached in Mexico and was not trying to hide from authorities prior to his arrest.

He said LeBaron told him he had been living in Moaxaca, about 250 miles southeast of Mexico City, and his whereabouts was known to both U.S. and Mexican authorities.

He quoted LeBaron as saying he was picked up in Moaxaca, transported to Mexico City, and between there and the border was roughed up by Mexican judicial police and kept blindfolded several days.

Vonda Evelyn White, another of LeBaron's wives, was convicted last month in San Diego, Calif., of murdering Dean Grover Vest, who wanted to leave LeBaron's cult. LeBaron also was charged in Vest's death.

California Officials Hunting Squirrels

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ground squirrels — and the plague-infected fleas they are believed to carry — are being hunted by health officials who have set traps in the hills east of Los Angeles.

The effort began in Riverside County when a 15-year-old boy was stricken with bubonic plague after visiting a campground near Idyllwild, some 90 miles east of Los Angeles.

A similar effort is under way in Los Angeles County, where health officials worry that a recent plague case means the disease is nearing the densely populated metropolitan area.

With modern treatment, it's unlikely Los Angeles is poised on the edge of a catastrophic epidemic, said Dr. Shirley Fannin, chief of Los Angeles County's acute communicable disease control division. But plague could be a major health problem when it comes so near the 12 million residents of the sprawling metropolitan area.

Plague — known as the Black Death when it decimated the population of medieval Europe — is now a rare disease which, if identified early, is usually curable with modern antibiotics. Untreated, it is usually fatal.

Most human cases today occur when a person is bitten by an infected flea, itself destined to die of the plague it carries. Early symptoms include swollen, tender lymph nodes, chills and fever.

Plague has been lurking in the mountains and deserts of much of the American West since at least 1900, when a four-year epidemic claimed more than 100 San Franciscans.

The last major outbreak in the United States killed 33 people in Los Angeles in 1924. A few cases are still reported each year, most in California, New Mexico, Arizona and Colorado. About one fourth are fatal.

It's not likely ever to be completely eradicated, "but we can keep ahead of it," said biologist Harvey Magy of the state health department.

Magy, who is directing the Idyllwild attack, said plague can be controlled by controlling the carriers. He said state and county health officials are trapping ground squirrels near the campground to test the animals and their fleas for plague.

If plague bacteria are confirmed in the area, he said, the squirrels and their burrows will be dusted with insecticide. The squirrels will be lured into dusting traps — lengths of pipe with grain in the middle and flea-killing dust piled at either end.

"Once we've got the fleas under control," Magy said, "we'll ask the (state) Agriculture Department to go in and eliminate the ground squirrels. We can't eliminate them all, of course, but they should be reduced to a minimum ... without the rodents, you're not going to have plague."

Officials say the end of California's once-active squirrel suppression program may explain a recent spurt in plague cases.

Lack Of Younger Jurors Could Produce Trial Bias

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (UPI) — Many young criminal defendants might not be getting fair trials because young adults in the 18-to 30-year age group are substantially underrepresented on the nation's jury rolls, a study shows.

A researcher writing in the latest issue of The University of Michigan Law School journal said the absence of younger jurors could "produce bias and distort deliberation" in trials involving defendants between the ages of 18 and 30.

Donald H. Zeigler, associate law professor at Pace University, said he based his conclusions on a survey of 579 jurors and members of the general public in Queens County, N.Y., one of New York City's five boroughs.

Zeigler said the respondents were asked 21 questions relating to their attitudes about crime and punishment in general and youthful offenders in particular.

He said he found "consistent and significant differences in attitudes among persons of different age groups" — much more so than among people of different race, sex, occupation and income groups.

Zeigler also said the survey results "suggest an underlying pattern of hostility toward the young among older people," some of whom might unjustly presume that young people are guilty before the trial is conducted.

"A jury on which young adults are underrepresented might be less likely to accord a young defendant the full presumption of innocence," he said.

Zeigler said his survey supports the claim that young adults are "cognizable" — and should therefore be recognized by the legal system as a distinct group in jury selection.

The federal Jury Selection and Service Act of 1968 says defendants have a "fair cross-sectional right" but the U.S. Supreme Court has yet to determine whether young adults are an identifiable group for the jury selection process.

Zeigler said one reason for the absence of younger jurors is that students in many court jurisdictions are automatically excluded from the jury rolls. In addition, he said, young adults tend to change residence more often than older people.

Jury Accuses Pair In Prom Abduction

ROGERSVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Two 21-year-old Rogersville men go on trial June 26 on charges of kidnapping a couple after a high school prom and raping the 17-year-old girl.

Judge James Beckner scheduled the trial for Jerry Burton and Marshall W. Price after a county grand jury returned indictments against them Monday. Each is charged with armed robbery, felonious assault with intent to commit murder, kidnapping and first-degree criminal sexual conduct.

They were arrested May 20 and held under $100,000 bond.

MORE UNLEADED GAS — Energy Secretary James Schlesinger, right, makes a point as Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Douglas Costle stands beside him at the White House Monday after the two announced plans by the administration to increase production of unleaded gasoline. (AP Laserphoto)

Administration Acts To Increase Supply

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans who drive late-model cars may find it a little easier to get the unleaded gasoline their autos require after the administration acted to increase production of the fuel.

Under the actions, refiners will be allowed to add two cents a gallon to the base price of any increased production of unleaded gas, which is required by cars equipped with mandatory anti-pollution devices.

The increase is expected to cost motorists an extra one-fifth of a cent per gallon at the pump.

The actions also call for suspending until Oct. 1 a ban on the octane-boosting MMT additive used in producing unleaded gasoline and in delaying for a year stricter limits on the amount of lead in gasoline.

The EPA had planned on implementing, on Oct. 1, standards limiting the overall average of lead per gallon to .5 gram. But it now will continue to permit the current standard of .8 gram per gallon.

Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger and Douglas Costle, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, announced the plans at the White House Monday.

The officials said the plans could result in refiners shifting as much as 740,000 barrels per day from leaded to unleaded production.

The aim is to help increase the share of unleaded output from the present 40 percent of total gasoline production to more than 45 percent, they said.

Later, Schlesinger told a conference here that the government may have to subsidize development of synthetic oil and gas to speed up their use before energy shortages threaten the economy.

In a speech to the International Association of Energy Economists, Schlesinger said the reduction of Iranian oil production has dashed earlier hopes of shifting from reliance on oil to other fuels in seven or eight years.

Industries that might need subsidiation are those making synthetic crude oil and synthetic gas from coal, and drilling for "geopressurized" gas found deep inside the earth at high pressures.

Meanwhile, French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet told President Carter that European nations were concerned about U.S. plans to subsidize refiners importing heating oil.

"This decision tends to divert toward the United States a larger share of the oil sold on the world market," he said in a statement on his meeting with Carter.

Administration officials argue the United States is trying to curtail the loss of some of its traditional sources of supply that have been attracted to European countries willing to pay higher prices on the spot market. The $5 a barrel subsidy is financed from a private pool of oil companies.

In related developments:

—The Interior Department said it will again issue coal leases on federal lands. No coal leases have been granted since 1971.

The coal leases will be offered in 1981 and 1982, said Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus. Land will be leased in Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, Colorado and Montana.

Under the program, 1.5 billion tons of federal coal will be leased. Andrus said that was "enough to meet energy production goals through 1987 while carefully protecting the environment."

—A United Nations conference in Canada was told that the U.S. government and oil industry have delayed, possibly through ignorance, developing heavy oil, a slow-flowing, hard to refine substance.

U.N. special fellow Joseph Barnea predicted the importance of heavy oil would increase as the reserves of conventional oil decline.

Independent Truckers Heed Calls For Strike

By The Associated Press

Eighteen truckers circled the nation's Capitol in their rigs and moved off, leaving three men to present their beefs to the government, as some independent drivers heeded calls for a strike against high fuel prices.

"We can't afford to shut 'em down, but we can't afford to run 'em," independent driver Larry Lamb of Missoula, Mont., said Monday after a small group of truckers blocked pumps at three Missoula truck stops. "If we can get everybody shut down, it will only last three days to a week."

About 30 truckers tried to shut down two Sioux City, Iowa, truck stops Monday but moved off when police were called. Some stops had agreed to shut down their pumps at midnight Wednesday, but the protesters said too many truckers were refueling and taking on new loads instead of hauling already loaded perishable goods.

A call for the strke came Sunday in Sioux City when about 350 truckers from 13 states vowed to park their rigs indefinitely.

In addition to the price of fuel, which truckers say has gone as high as $1.14 a gallon in some areas, truckers are protesting weight limits that vary from state to state and the 55 mph speed limit.

"Those drivers who are out on the road have until midnight Wednesday to get home," said Jim Archer, president of the Colorado Independent Truckers Association. The Independent Double-O Union of America, headed by Dave Edwards of Greensboro, N.C., set a strike deadline for midnight Friday.

While dissidents urged a shutdown, however, Mike Parkhurst, president of the Independent Truckers Association, said, "We have not come to the point that we are going to organize a nationwide truckers shutdown."

DA, FBI Agent Warn Congress To Expect Increase In Fraud

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department and the FBI have a distressing warning for Congress and the nation's consumers: Rip-off artists go hand-in-hand with an energy shortage.

"If the energy situation remains critical over a protracted period, an increase in fraudulent practicies can be anticipated," Deputy Assistant Attorney General John C. Keeney said Monday.

Appearing with Keeney before the House subcommittees on crime and energy and power, Francis M. Mullen Jr. of the FBI delivered a similar message.

"I would anticipate an increase (in white-collar crime) as long as we have a shortage of oil," said the No. 2 man in the FBI's criminal investigative division.

Mullen said a special training seminar is being arranged at the FBI's academy at Quantico, Va., for agents involved in energy investigations. And he said there are special difficulties in uncovering criminal actions in the oil industry.

"The primary problems which we have encountered in these cases are developing expertise in the oil industry terminology and procedures and in developing an understanding of the complex energy regulations," he said.

Mullen, Keeney and other witnesses denied charges of a government cover-up of white-collar crime in the oil industry, and said there are dozens of suspected criminal cases under investigation around the country.

Keeney told the subcommittees there are 39 "active cases" being handled by federal prosecutors. "Based upon our experience to date, these matters can result in multi-defendant indictmets involving individuals and companies," he said.

In the majority of cases, Keeney said, prosecutors are working toward felony prosecutons on charges of conspiracy to defraud, mail and wire fraud and making false statements.

In a very few instances, he said, the Energy Department has referred cases to Justice Department lawyers that involve regulatory violations of Energy Department pricing regulations.

In addition to the 39 cases under active investigation, a second Justice Department official, lawyer Richard Fishkin, said there are "potentially 70 cases in the pipeline right now," under review by Energy Department auditors.

If auditors uncover suspected criminal violations, they pass their findings along to the Justice Department, which conducts its own inquiry to see whether the case should go to a grand jury for possible indictment.

In a related area, Mullen disclosed that FBI agents are conducting more than 100 investigations of suspected fraud in the coal industry. "The manner of the fraud or frauds is only bound by the imagination and ingenuity of the perpetrator," he said.

An FBI spokesman said after the hearing that most of the investigations center in the Huntington, W.Va., area. In a few cases, the spokesman said, federal grand juries have issued indictments.

Keeney and other witnesses denied allegations made last week by an Energy Department lawyer that government officials have covered up white-collar crime in the industry.

He said the attorney, Joseph D. McNeff, has been interviewed repeatedly by FBI agents and other investigators and has appeared before a federal grand jury which, according to another witness, has refused to issue indictments.

Subcommittee Staff To Examine Cases

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Now that both sides have had their say on whether the federal government vigorously prosecutes oil price frauds, the staff of a House subcommittee wants to go one step farther.

Staff workers say they intend to look up Department of Justice paperwork relating to fraud cases and find out why some cases referred by the Department of Energy were not pursued.

The investigation by the energy subcommittee of the House Commerce Committee will examine referrals that were turned down in the Justice Department as well as examples where a field office recommended a case to its superiors in the Energy Department and the higher-ups let the matter die.

Many of the alleged oil price frauds fell into two broad categories: what energy lawyers call "daisy chains" in which oil resale companies sell a given amount of oil repeatedly among themselves to drive up its price before a final sale, and "flip-flops" where price-controlled oil from old wells is falsely certified as control-free oil from newer or more expensive wells.

Monday, the Justice Department defended itself against an allegation that it failed to follow up promising cases of oil price fraud. The chief accuser was Joseph McNeff, a regional lawyer for the Department of Energy, who told the subcommittee last week his superiors and the Justice Department showed little interest in flagrant cases of fraud.

McNeff said he was punished with a reassignment to Dallas for his zeal, and he and others felt price fraud investigations were being sabotaged.

John Keeney, a deputy assistant attorney general, said Monday that he and others at the Justice Department were familiar with McNeff's allegations, but found no "credible evidence" to back them up. McNeff had only "gut reactions, instincts, feelings" and nothing to prove his charges, Keeney said.

"Mr. McNeff gave us zero with respect to credible allegations," Keeney said.

Keeney said there have been some delays in federal prosecution, but lines of communication are stronger now between energy and justice officials.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., who chairs the House energy subcommittee, said, "It is incredible that since the oil embargo of 1973-74, there has been only one — and I repeat that, only one — completed and successful prosecution of an oil case."

Dingell said the subcommittes had heard "a sorry tale of government officials' failing, either wilfully or otherwise, to perform their duties."

Mayor Of San Antonio Protests Rate Increase

SAN ANTONIO (UPI) — An angry Mayor Lila Cockrell says she will ask Texas congressmen to protest the Interstate Commerce Commission's latest approval of rate increases for shipping Wyoming coal for use in generating the city's electricity.

The 7 percent increase, approved by the ICC last Friday and effective immediately, was the second in the past five months — totaling 46 percent — and means that Burlington Northern Railroad can charge the city $18.18 a ton for delivering coal, up from $17.01 a ton.

The federal agency last December had allowed the railroad to hike its rate from $12.42 to $17.01 a ton, adding $13.7 million a year to utility bills at a time the federal government was encouraging utilities to shift from natural gas to coal to fire electric generators.

December hikes came after President Carter had asked for a voluntary 7 percent wage-price freeze, but the administration refused then to help Mrs. Cockrell win a rollback of the increases.

Mrs. Cockrell and City Public Service Board chairman Eloy Centeno announced at a Monday news conference they were appealing to Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-texas, and Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, to protest the latest rate increase, and Mrs. Cockrell added she would seek help from Gov. Bill Clements.

The mayor said she was especially angered by what she called "arrogance" on the part of the ICC in approving the higher rate two days after both she and an IC representative testified on coal rates before a presidential commission in Washington.

"The presiden's commission put him (ICC representative) on the griddle for raising rates so badly," Mrs. Cockrell said. "It seems like arrogance to me to hit us again so quickly."

She said Burlington Northern was penalizing utility customers in the nation's 10th largest city to subsidize less profitable hauling of other commodities.

"The ICC has for the first time correctly identified the purpose of the increase — to subsidize movements of other commodities which have lower freight rates because of competition among the carriers," she said, accusing the agency of "capricious irresponsibility" and "violating presidential anti-inflation guidelines."

British Minister In New Quarters

LONDON (AP) — Peter Jay, about to be replaced as Britain's ambassador to the United States, said Monday he may remain in America with his family.

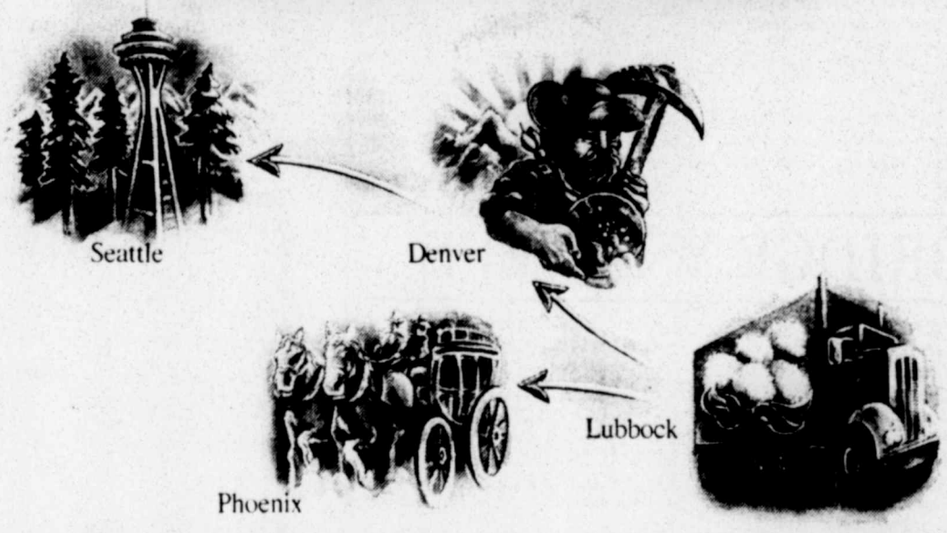

The 42-year-old former economics editor for The Times of London gives up his post on June 29 and will be replaced by Sir Nicholas Henderson, chosen by Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

"I may well decide to stay in America and work there but it will not be in journalism. I am thinking about my plans. There is no question of my not returning because there is a Tory government," Jay said. "We love England."

Lying is a gentle art in the exercise of which certain fundamental principles must be observed. One is to avoid telling useless lies. Another is to tell only those that have a reasonable chance of being accepted as the truth.

Promiscuous falsecarding often defeats its own purpose. On defense, it is easy to deceive partner rather than declarer, and thereby fail to obtain his cooperation. The most effective falsecards are those that will succeed even if partner is misled. West's swindle on today's hand was ingenious. It required quick thinking and took in declarer, to whom we extend our sympathies as an innocent victim of a well-laid plot.

North-South reached a contract of three no trump in quick time on normal bidding. Against this, West made his natural lead of his fourth-best diamond. Declarer could count seven tricks in top cards, and the most natural suit to attack to develop two extra tricks was spades.

Declarer won the opening lead in dummy and led a low spade to his ace. West could see that the suit was going to produce four tricks for the declarer; therefore, he immediately dropped the king under the ace!

This play did not sacrifice a trick since West still had the suit stopped. However, declarer could see no future in the spade suit. He now had eight tricks, and the club suit offered excellent prospects for developing a ninth — either a successful finesse or a 3-3 break would see declarer through.

Who could blame declarer for abandoning spades in favor of clubs? East won the queen of clubs and returned a diamond, and declarer's last stopper there was cleared. When the clubs failed to break, declarer had no way of coming to nine tricks without the spades. But West still had a spade entry, which enabled him to run the diamonds to defeat the contract.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: I am a widow with eight children. The oldest is 21 and the youngest is 10. My husband was killed a year ago and it hit me awfully hard.

Here is my problem. I'm in love. I am 40 and the kid I'm in love with is 21. (He's a friend of one of my children.) We didn't intend to get serious — it just happened, and now we have this love affair going. He moved into my house about a month ago.

I loved my husband very much, but he is gone and I need someone to love. Do you think is any future in this love affair?

In Love In New Mexico

Dear In: I could be wrong, but I can't see much of a future for you and your young lover. Not so much because of the vast age difference, but because of the emotional state you were in when the affair took root. Of course you need someone to love — we all do. But for your sake and his, I think the kid should move out of your house and you should move toward men your own age.

• • •

DEAR ABBY: A woman in our office is freaking us out with her humming. When she concentrates she hums one low monotonous note. This can go on continuously for as long as two hours or more without a break.

When I call her attention to the maddening distraction, she quits for a while, then resumes humming again until I could scream.

Others have told her, too. Nothing helps. Her humming has got me so crazy I sometimes can hear it when it's not there. She's a nice person otherwise, and she's old enough to be my mother, so I don't want to be rude or rough. Please help me and my co-workers.

Going Bananas

Dear Going: She has undoubtedly developed the humming habit over the years and now hums unconsciously. But habits are learned and can be unlearned, so the moment the hummingbird starts her song, remind her that she's distracting you. And keep reminding her.

• • •

DEAR ABBY: I've been thinking about the letter from L. In Denton, Tex. who couldn't figure out how come his wife knew how to make love so well if she was a virgin when she was married.

Well, I too, was a virgin when I married but my husband wasn't and with all his previous experience, he didn't know peanuts compared to what I taught him!"

I didn't learn it anywhere. I just followed my natural instincts and did whatever I felt was right. It seemed to come naturally.

I was blessed with parents who always showed affection for each other and never hid the fact that making love was a normal, healthy part of married life, so when I married it never occurred to me to hold back my sexual feelings. I just expressed them.

Never Had a Lesson In My Life

DEAR ABBY: You made the statement that a child cannot be darker than his darker parent.

That is correct, Abby, if only ONE parent has Negro genes. Skin color has no dominance but is a blending of genes.

It is possible, however for a child to be darker than either of his parents if — and only if — both parents carry Negro genes.

Your answer needs to be clarified. I have known such occurrences to cause husbands to unjustly accuse their wives of adultery.

Solar Energy Increases In Popularity

By PATRICIA MC CORMACK
UPI Health Editor

Let the sunpower in for a home improvement with a three-way pitch.

You will:

1. Help conserve petroleum products used for energy to heat home and water. Doing that could mean your grandchildren — including those just a gleam in your eyes right now — might have enough gas for their low-horsepower cars.

2. Be able to cut the food bill yearround by up to 30 percent, growing your own robust, health-giving, unadulterated tomatoes, potatoes and other crops in a greenhouse heated year round by a solar collector system that might even be engineered to help heat your house. The sunpower will help you stretch dollars from the food budget and save on heating bills. The fresh crops will boost your health. Health experts say say fresh is best, especially if organically grown.

3. Duck some of the soaring costs of energy for home use. You need all the help you can get to avoid bankruptcy in this era of spiral staircase inflation.

No need to wait for scientific breakthroughs to take advantage of some sunpower on the homefront, according to solar energy experts, including Lola Redford, president of the Consumer Action Now, Inc

CAN is a national non-profit organization founded after Earth Day 1970 to make consumers aware of the environmental impact of consumption habits. Right now, a top priority at CAN is pushing sunpower.

Stephanie Gibson, architect and economist with the Northeast Solar Energy Center, in Cambridge, Mass., says "amen" to Redford's drumbeats for solar energy.

Gibson's group is advancing solar energy in Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont — big users of oil for hot water and home heating, and electricity production.

Both Redford and Gibson helped put on a recent conference on Practical Applications and Economics of Energy Conservation and Solar Energy in New York City.

Landlords attending learned that due to federal income tax credits and a property tax abatement ruling in New York, a solar system for heating hot water can be competitive with current systems.

In the long run, it was hoted, such a system could save a bundle —especially if the price of oil and electricity continue to soar, as expected.

Gibson said the greenhouse that uses solar power in all kinds of weather adds another room to the house. It is not like a regular greenhouse. It includes a wall or someplace where sun rays hit and heat water in containers — barrels, beer cans, wine bottles, for example.

Or else it is designed to make use of sun to heat rocks. And then the heat is circulated at night to keep crops cozy.

Depending on the design, some of the solar heat from the greenhouse might be directed into the interior of the house.

Gibson said tax abatement is one sure way to get solar energy projects moving in housing and credited such a program with moving sunpower for more than tanning into prominence in California years ago.

"Did you know that you can purchase a $2,500 solar domestic water heater and have the federal government pay you close to $1,000 for doing so?" she asked.

"This significant saving to the solar consumer is the result of tax credits contained in the recently enacted National Energy Act and a HUD (Housing and Urban Development) program designed to encourage solar domestic water heater installations."

Depending on where you live, a solar system can generally supply from 40 to 60 percent of the total annual energy needed to heat domestic water, according to Gibson whose architecture degree is from Penn State University and whose Masters of Business Administration is from New York University.

"As we look at the solar energy picture," Redford said, "it is not so much a matter of having technological problems to solve.

"We feel comfortable that all the issues can be resolved if we get some indication from the leadership of this country on using energy wisely, using renewable sources and stopping waste.

"What we have now is confusion of what we should be doing. There are bits of funding going this way and that way and not enough looking at the long term — 50 or 60 or 100 years from now.

"We need long-term direction so the country can be headed toward a sustainable, renewable energy society.

"There is so much confusion now and the public is skeptical. When society is confused, it has trouble heading in any direction."

She said a number of bills to advance solar energy projects are being proposed in Congress and the most important at this time is one that would call for low interest loans for solar projects in new or existing housing.

"And we're still waiting for standards on flat solar collectors," she said. "This is important from a consumer protection standpoint. Without the standards consumers won't know or be sure of the exact performance of the solar collectors they purchase."

Redford, wife of actor Robert, is a power on her own. The mother of three, the oldest 18, she was appointed by President Carter to be Commissioner, International Year of the Child. She also is Chairperson of the Task Force on Appropriate Technology, U.S. Office of Technology Assessment.

She is on the boards of the National Women's Political Caucus, the Solar Energy Research and Education Foundation, the Center for Renewable Resources and the National Sudden Infant Death Syndrome Foundation.

The Redfords have domiciles in the Wasatch Mountains near Provo, Utah, and New York City.

The Utah one is solar. Redford said she recently helped to design a second solar one there, for the ranch manager's family. It would cost about $65,000 to duplicate the three bedrooms, 1- 1/2-half bath dwelling — a solar version of what could be the typical family home some day.

Redford, who attended Brigham Young University in Provo and the Church College of Hawaii, said the solar home for the ranch manager was designed in cooperation with third year architecture student Claire Pollack from Los Angeles.

"The house itself acts as a collector," she said.

As she described it, the heat is circulated through conventional ducts to rock bed and in the evening fans go on and a little pump works and — the house is heated.

She said the solar home heating system has a backup system, a small wooden stove and a little electric coil in one vent.

The main solar home on the property, the one used by the Redfords, has too much of a backup system.

"Ours was overengineered," she said.

Through CAN's leadership in securing a HUD grant for a demonstration, owners of a 12-story apartment in upper Manhattan were able to install a solar water heating system.

"The saving is enormous," Redford said.

As for the future?

"I feel it is important to get women involved and do away with some of the energy myths," she said.

"Women need to know how their energy use and buying habits affect the future and the environment."

Here is a primer on solar energy:

--Sunrays provide heat for human, animal and plant life. Solar is the oldest energy source. Inexhaustible, it does not hurt the environment.

—A passive solar energy system depends on design to catch the sun's heat. A window facing south on your home is a passive collector. It puts heat into the house.

—An active solar system uses a collector — such as glass panels; a storage system like water-filled barrels, beer cans or wine bottles or insulated tanks; and a distributing system — fans, pumps to circulate the hot water or air.

—Passive systems are the least expensive, especially when designed into a new home.

—Sun-powered batteries helped run a lot of instruments and Skylab in America's space program. These photovoltaic cells turn solar energy into electricity. They are quite expensive but breakthroughs are bringing down the price.

Many scientists hope for bigger breakthroughs making photovoltaics everyday. If that happens, you'll have some on your roof. They'll heat water, provide heat and light and electricity for appliances.

'Happy Bus' Makes City Commuting Fun

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The folks who travel to and from work on Bus Route 46, between St. Paul and suburban Apple Valley, say there's a constant party on their "happy bus."

One patron, a housewares dealer, says she's peddled her products to other riders. Others claim they've sold grapefruit, cookies and pecans during the 50-minute ride.

Passengers exchange magazines, tell jokes and complain about the weather and the Minnesota Vikings.

With all that frivolity, commuters waiting at stops at Rosemount and Mendota Heights can almost hear the uproar as the bus emerges from the dark and pulls into view.

There's only one bus a day into St. Paul, the one leaving Apple Valley at 6:45 a.m. on the 21-mile trip. Ronay says if regular patrons don't show up one morning, "They have to bring a signed note the next time."

The Metropolitan Transit Commission rotates drivers periodically and the bus patrons help new drivers learn Route 46.

"We get new drivers every eight weeks, so I sit up front and act as navigator," says Vern Ewell, 39, who gets on the bus at the beginning of the route and rides it to his railroad job in St. Paul.

At 4:50 each afternoon, the Route 46ers gather at a downtown St. Paul bus stop for the trip home. Once when the bus was early and only a few people got on, the patrons persuaded the driver to go back to the Minnesota Capitol for those who missed the bus at the route start because it was early.

Before he moved to Rosemount, Larry Day took a Minneapolis-to-St. Paul bus to work. "Nobody would talk to anybody," recalls Day, 30. Recently, after his wife gave birth to a baby, Day was toasted by fellow riders on the "happy bus."

Parental Spanking Of Children Forbidden By New Swedish Law

By VINCENT J.SCHODOLSKI

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (UPI) — It's breakfast time on July 1 and little Lars has just poured milk over his sister's head.

His father jumps up, grabs his son by the shoulders and says, "Listen Lars, I think you and I should have a chat about what just happened."

The morning before, the incident might have led to a good spanking. But starting July 1 it will be illegal to hit your children in Sweden.

A new law approved earlier this year not only outlaws spanking but makes it illegal to treat children in a "humiliating" way.

This is not a child abuse law — child abuse has been strictly forbidden for years.

"We are trying to change people's attitudes toward the physical punishment of children," said Sten Lindberg of the justice ministry.

"Society must point out to Swedish parents that it does not approve of this sort of behavior."

Beyond outlawing spankings, the law is a bit vague. It forbids humiliating children as a means of discipline, but what constitutes humiliation is unclear. The justice ministry is trying to formulate guidelines before the July deadline.

Depriving a child of a meal, forbidding contact with friends, or reading their mail may be out.

The law is the brainchild of a group called Barnsraett, or Children's Rights.

"We feel that the reaction of children when hit by parents is one of revenge, not respect, and this law is designed to bring about a more constructive attitude," said Barbro Rost of Barnsraett. She said the group's extensive studies have revealed corporal punishment elicits fear rather than love in children.

Barnsraett's work goes beyond new legislation.

"Our group is working on a broad front to protect the rights of children in society," Mrs. Rost said. One proposal would make it compulsory for children to have their own, stateappointed lawyers in divorce proceedings.

Enforcing the anti-spanking law is a problem the justice ministry hopes it won't have to deal with.

"It would be impossible to effectively enforce the law and check on each person's behavior, but we hope to change attitudes," Lindberg said.

To help, the ministry will mount a major advertising campaign to try to encourage parents to spare the rod. Included are TV announcements, posters and a series of pamphlets, one entitled, "Can You Bring Up a Child without Slapping Him?"

With traditional means of persuasion denied, what is a parent to do with an unruly child?

"Talk to the child, discuss things and get away from the old idea of, 'thou shalt not,'" Mrs. Rost said.

"Basically what this law says is, 'You can't do things to a child that you can't do to another person."

Khomeini Support Aired During Memorial Rallies

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of Iranians transformed memorial rallies into mass displays of support for Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini today. They also chanted "death" to President Carter, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

The rallies were to commemorate the thousands of demonstrators killed in Qom 16 years ago by the troops of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, overthrown in February by Khomeini's forces. They also followed criticism of Khomeini in recent weeks by a variety of political and religious figures, who have claimed democratic freedoms are being ignored in the country and that Iran is slipping toward a religious dictatorship.

The rallies were staged in major cities around the country, benefiting from a national holiday declared by the government. The state radio said slogans supporting Khomeini, the Shiite Moslem leader of the revolution that ousted the shah, predominated everywhere.

The Tehran crowd, estimated by reporters at about 600,000, carried hundreds of portraits of the bearded ayatollah and placards with slogans expressing their allegiance.

The massive crowd burst into chants of "Khomeini! Khomeini!" as lay and clerical speakers succeeded each other with speeches. Other chants included "Death to Carter!" "Death to Sadat!" and "Death to Begin!" because of the Mideast peace treaty they negotiated that left the issue of Palestinian autonomy up in the air.

The banners they held aloft praised Khomeini as the "leader" and "backbone" of the revolution, and a choir of little boys sang a stirring marching song that went, "Khomeini, Khomeini, we are ready to die for you."

A huge portrait of the ayatollah, three stories high, dominated the rally in Tehran's Sepah Square. It was suspended halfway down the facade of the tall telecommunications building.

Security guards included green-uniformed members of the Guardians of the Islamic Revolution, an elite security corps set up last month by the Islamic Revolutionary Council, the country's supreme body.

Shops and government offices closed. Women in full-length black veils carried children in their arms, and many of the marchers were separated into male and female groups.

Addressing a memorial rally in Qom, 100 miles south of Tehran, Khomeini struck out at his critics.

"You were all sitting in your homes and it was Islam that gave you the freedom to come out, so now try to be one with the people and don't oppose the religious leadership," Khomeini declared, without referring to his critics by name.

The ayatollah, who draws overwhelming support from the poorer sections of Iran's population, lavished praise on them for their part in the ouster of the shah. "It was the poorer classes that have been working effectively for this nation," he said.

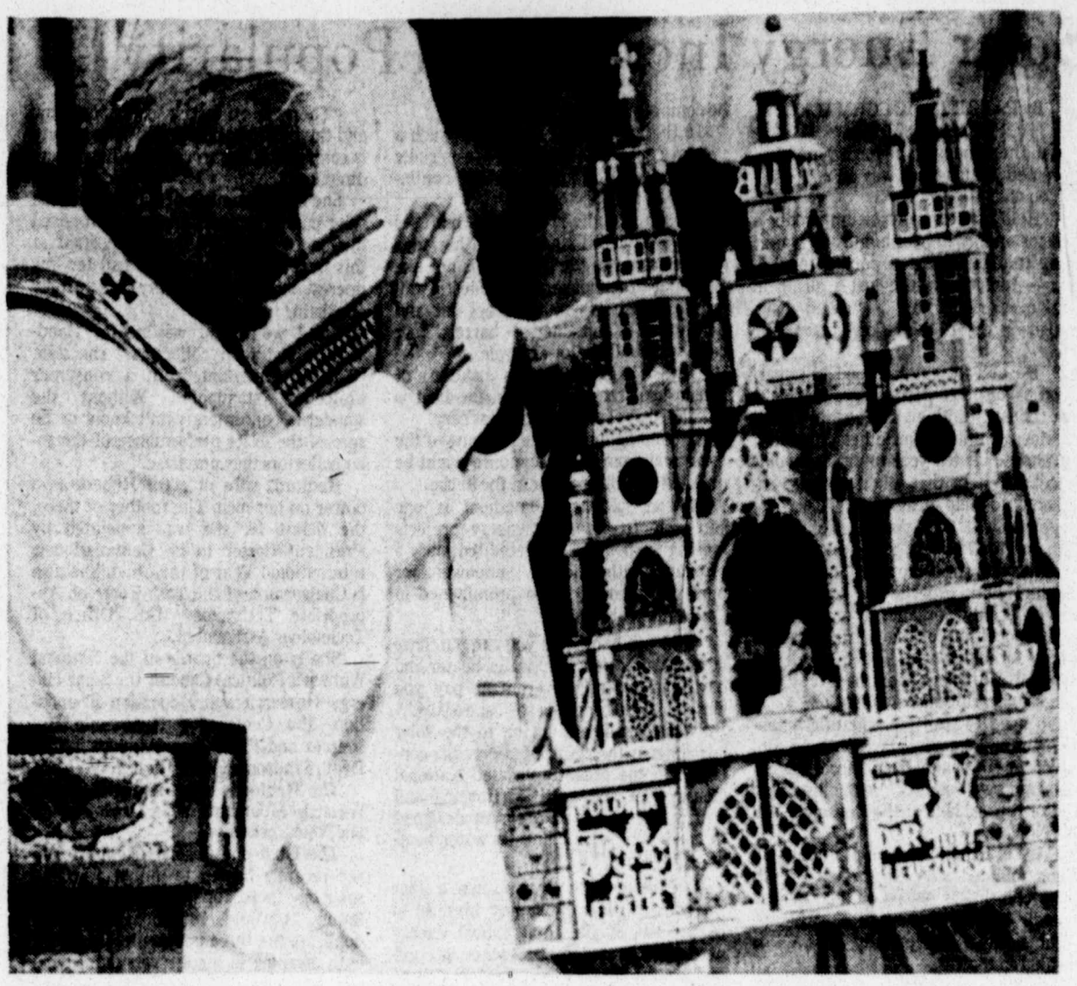

On Monday night, Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan warned that foreign enemies of Iran's revolution will score little success by attempting to stir up "regional problems" in the country.

Speaking after bitter fighting last week in the oil-rich province of Khuzestan, Bazargan said that if the enemies "do not refrain from such acts, their identities will be known to everybody in their own countries and their own people will recognize the conspiracies of the regimes against Iran."

The prime minister, speaking on nationwide television, did not name the "enemies" or specifically mention the Khuzestan fighting, which officials said left 37 dead and nearly 200 wounded. The fighting between Arab militants seeking autonomy and revolutionary guardsmen followed fighting in other Iranian ethnic areas.

The revolutionary government also published the draft of a new press law Monday, providing up to three years imprisonment for insulting Iran's religious and revolutionary leaders, Cabinet members or people's representatives.

One clause of the draft decrees imprisonment from one to three years for insulting "the first personage of the religious community or the Islamic revolution," meaning the 79-year-old Khomeini.

Uganda Park Left Empty Of Animals

PAKUBA, Uganda (AP) — Once one of Africa's great wildlife preserves, Kabalega Falls National Park in northwest Uganda, seems virtually empty of animals, its herds of elephants, buffalo and hippopotamus destroyed by Idi Amin's troops.

In a three-day trek across the rolling plains of the former Murchison Falls National Park, a reporter saw one giraffe, one buffalo and several clusters of gazelles.

Less than a decade ago, zoologists estimated that the 1,500-square-mile park contained 30,000 buffaloes, 14,000 elephants, 13,000 hippopotamuses, 600crocodiles and at least a dozen rare white rhinoceroses transported into the area to save them from poachers.

The park includes a spectacular waterfall where the Victoria Nile thunders through a rocky gap 20 feet wide and plunges 127 feet into a pool. Both the falls and the park were named after Sir Roderick Murchison, president of Britain's Royal Geographic Society in 1864 when a European explorer discovered the falls.

Amin changed the names after his coup in 1971. As his turbulent, murderous rule unfolded, the number of foreign visitors to Uganda dropped from 80,000 a year to nearly none and the $17.5-million-a-year tourist industry collapsed.

Villagers living in the park said Amin's soldiers began invading Kabalega, the country's best wildlife preserve, to kill elephants and sell the ivory tusks across the border in Zaire.

After Amin lost Kampala, the capital, to an invasion force of Tanzanians and Ugandan exiles on April 11, thousands of his troops fled through the park.

"They came in convoys of big trucks," said Pastor Lolili, a 25-year-old school teacher. "They shot the animals with machine guns, loaded the trucks with the carcasses and drove to the West Nile."

Lolili and other villagers said the soldiers wanted the meat to feed themselves and their families in West Nile, where food is chronically scarce.

The troops also sacked the two tourist lodges in the park, at Pakuba and Paraa. An official in the nearby town of Pakwach said a convoy of 20 trucks went to the lodges at the end of April and took away every movable item of value.

The furniture is gone. Floors are covered with broken glass. Doors have been splintered and the electrical wiring ripped from walls.

The shooting could have driven some of the animals into hiding, and they should emerge later. But it will probably be many years before the park is again a place where visitors can observe African wildlife at close quarters.

Pope Demands Polish Leaders Recognize Rights Of Christians

CZESTOCHOWA, Poland (AP) — Pope John Paul II demanded today that Poland's Communist government recognize the rights and beliefs of Christians although their view of the world is "diametrically opposed" to Marxism. It was the most powerful political statement the pontiff has made in the four days he has been in his homeland.

In a speech prepared for delivery to a closed meeting of Poland's Roman Catholic bishops, the pope described religious freedom as a fundamental human right and declared that guarantees of religious freedom in Poland's constitution and other documents are meaningful only if they consider "the real needs of the church."

The pope asserted the church's readiness to enter into a dialogue with the government for normalization of church-state relations.

He said "authentic dialogue must respect the convictions of believers, insure all the rights of citizens and also the normal conditions for the activity of the church as a religious community to which the vast majority of Poles belong.

"We are aware that this dialogue cannot be easy because it takes place between two concepts of the world which are diametrically opposed, but it must be possible and effective if the good of individuals and the nation demands it."

The text of the speech was released to journalists early today but was withdrawn soon after without explanation. A Vatican spokesman said later that the pope wanted bishops to hear it first before the speech was made public.

Before meeting with the bishops the pope celebrated an open-air Mass for thousands of Polish nuns and said that even "the biggest enemy of the church" could not help but appreciate their dedication.

Poles began gathering at dawn on the hillside below the country's most revered shrine and by the time the Mass began, the crowd had swelled to several hundred thousand.

The pontiff, beginning the fourth day of his return to his communist homeland, looked at the rows of black-gowned nuns and told them their calling was an "exceptional treasure" for the Roman Catholic Church.

He recalled a visit he had once made to a home for sick children in his home town of Wadowice and said even "the biggest enemy of the church would never forget the dedication of the nuns."

The pope also recalled his trip to Mexico in January saying his meeting with nuns there "sank deeply into my memory and heart."

A large number of Poland's 24,000 nuns traveled to this western Polish city from all over the country for the Mass at the Jasna Gora Monastery.

On Monday, a half-million of his countrymen and women dropped to their knees on a dusty hillside as the pope raised the Communion host during an outdoor Mass at the monastery.

Soviets Eye Negotiations With Chinese

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union wants to open formal talks with China in Moscow this summer aimed at reconciling two decades of hostility between the world's largest Communist powers, the official Tass news agency reported today.

Tass said Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko asked China's charge d'affaires, Tian Zengpei, to his office Monday and handed him a note proposing the opening of negotiations for normalization of relations.

The Chinese themselves suggested in April the two countries open talks n relations at the same time they formally abrogated a 30-year treaty of friendship with Moscow. An exchange of diplomatic notes followed.

Gromyko's note, which responded to a Chinese note of May 5, suggested that the talks be held in July and August in Moscow, with each nation represented at the level of deputy foreign minister or special emissary.

"The aims and tasks of the negotiations," Gromyko's note said, "must be the normalization and improvement of relations between our countries on the basis of the principles of peaceful coexistence, including the principles of equality, mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, noninterference in each others internal affairs and the non-use of force."

Acceptance of this term could mean some loss of face for the Chinese, and whether they would accept remains to be seen.

Agreeing to accept Soviet territorial integrity could mean China would have to give up its claims to some 386,000 square miles of territory within the Soviet Union that Peking maintains is historically part of China.

Agreement to a non-hegemony clause would be ironic in the extreme for China since the Chinese have insisted such clauses be included in its treaties with other nations, including the United States and Japan, as a backhanded slap at the Soviets.

SALT Debate Expected To Begin In October

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd says he expects the Senate will begin debate by early October on the strategic arms limitation treaty that President Carter will sign at the Vienna summit June 18.

In an interview Monday with reporters, Byrd, D-W.Va., declined to predict how the Senate will act — whether it will approve the pact by a two-thirds vote, ratify if with amendments, or reject it.

The treaty, seven years in negotiation, would limit the strategic arsenals of the United States and Soviet Union to 2,250 strategic bombers and missiles through 1985 and impose other types of arms restraints.

Senate critics of the accord, including Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., have served notice they intend to try to amend the treaty. It takes a majority to amend a treaty, but a two-thirds vote to ratify it.

The administration has stated it would consider any fundamental amendments to be unacceptable.

Byrd said he has been discussing with Sen. Frank Church, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the schedule of hearings.

The Foreign Relations Committee, which has sole jurisdiction over the treaty, is expected to hold hearings in July prior to the congressional August recess.

The Senate Armed Services Committee is also expected to hold a series of informational hearings on the treaty in early September.

"I hope it will be ready to go by mid-September or early October," Byrd told reporters.

Byrd offered no prediction of how long the SALT II debate will last. The Senate debated the NATO treaty for 12 days, and the treaties to turn over control of the Panama Canal to Panama for 39 days.

"It will be clearly debated," Byrd predicted.

President Carter leaves for the Vienna summit June 14. The delegation will include Secretary of State Cyrus Vance; Defense Secretary Harold Brown; Gen. David Jones, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Dr. Zbigniew Brzezinski, Carter's adviser on national security affairs.

No senator is being included in the delegation. Brzezinski, at a press luncheon Monday said including members of the Senate would put an individual senator in an awkward position because his participation would signal his strong support of the pact in advance of the committee hearings and Senate debate.

Rebel Flyers Reportedly Sieze Control In Ghana

ACCRA, Ghana (UPI) — Rebel air force officers seized Ghana radio in a day-long stuggle and announced they had taken control of the country, just two weeks before an election to return Ghana to civilian rule.

There was still no independent confirmation of the reports Monday, however, and the balance of power in the West African republic of 10 million people was still unclear after a war of words over the airwaves.

In between interludes of martial music, the rebel-held radio Monday evening declared an overnight curfew from 8 p.m. until 6 a.m. and said the army headquarters was "under the control of the revolutionary forces."

It called on the nation's military rulers, the Supreme Military Council, to report to the air force base in Accra "or face the consequences."

An officer who said he was Lt. Gen. Joshua Hamidu, chief of defense staff in the Supreme Military Council, broadcast an appeal to the military to lay down their arms and return to barracks to cooperate with the revolution "to avoid further bloodshed."

It was the only indication there were any casualties. There had been no reports of clashes.

The unconfirmed radio reports said the revolt was led by a Lt. J.J. Rawlings, a junior air force officer who only last month staged an unsuccessful coup that was quashed in a matter of hours. The reports said Rawlings was freed from jail by fellow officrs to lead the latest uprising.

First news of an uprising came in an early morning rebel broadcast. A fast series of rival announcements during the day outlined the events in the former British colony of 10 million known as the Gold Coast.

Less than two hours after the first rebel broadcast, a government announcement said loyalist troops had retaken the radio station and "curbed" the revolt.

By afternoon the rebels were back on the air asserting they were in "full control of all the vantage points in the country."

They said plans for a June 18 election, scheduled to return the country to civilian rule for the first time since January 1972, would proceed as scheduled.

The present government of Gen. Fred W. Akuffo assumed power after a bloodless palace coup July 5, 1978, overthrowing Gen. Ignatius K. Acheampong, who had been the country's military ruler for six years.

Akuffo maintained Acheampong's pledge to return the country to civilian rule by July 1979, after chronic economic difficulties that triggered unrest among students and middleclass Ghanaians in the final period of Acheampong's rule.

FAA Officials Ground Several Jumbo Jets

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal officials, concerned that improper maintenance procedures may have produced a crack and led to the nation's worst air crash, have grounded nearly two dozen DC-10s, but a consumer group today asked a court to ground the entire fleet.

The partial grounding was ordered Monday night after similar cracks were discovered in two jets that had gone through the same procedure. It was the third grounding in a week for some of the jumbo jets.

Meanwhile, the 50,000-member Airline Passengers Association, rebuffed Sunday when it sought an order to ground all DC-10s, used the new information on cracks as the basis for reopening the case in U.S. District Court today.

A lawyer for the association, Windle Turley, argued that improper maintenance procedures have caused "life-threatening" cracks in some of the jumbo jets.

Turley said federal investigators have treated their latest findings as "a life-threatening position."

But the Federal Aviation Administration, he said, has responded with a "very watered-down, very softened, clearly inadequate procedure" for rechecking the airplanes, Turley argued.

Judge Aubrey E. Robinson Jr., said he would rule today on the passenger group's request for a temporary restraining order to ground the 138 DC-10s owned by U.S. airlines.

Robinson told Turley, however, that he wasn't sure the court had the power to "substitute its judgment" for that of the FAA administrator, who has authority over airline safety directives.

The series of inspections were ordered after one of the wide-body DC-10s crashed in Chicago May 25, killing 274 persons in the nation's worst air disaster.

The hearing centered on an FAA directive Monday night which grounded an estimated 20 of the 138 planes that may have been subject to improper maintenance procedures that could cause cracks. The passengers group said this was inadequate, but government attorneys argued it was a sound decision based on the advice of experts.

Jonathan Howe, an attorney for the FAA, told Robinson the agency previously ordered inspections of the crucial wing pylon assembly at intervals of 10 days or 100 flying hours "to catch any incipient cracks." The new directive, he said, adds additional checks of those planes that may have been improperly inspected since the crash.

Royce Lamberth, chief of the U.S. attorney's civil division here, said the matter does not warrant the "complete disruption of air traffic." And he said the passengers group has not shown the irreparable harm needed to obtain an emergency restraining order.

"For 274 people it was irreparable," Robinson responded. "All the airline loses is money."

The FAA ordered the latest grounding on the recommendation of the National Transportation Safety Board, which is investigating the crash.

The board said two American DC-10s had cracks in the aft attachment points of the pylons. A pylon is a structure that holds the engine to the wing.

Investigators found a 10-inch crack in the aft attachment point of the pylon that separated from the engine that fell off American's ill-fated Flight 191.

Th NTSB said the cracks in the two recently inspected planes were apparently caused when mechanics improperly removed the engine and pylon in one section, instead of two steps. Flight 191 had undergone the same "engine removal and reinstallation procedure" on March 30, the FAA order said.

McDonnell Douglas, maker of the DC-10, specifies in a service bulletin that the engine and pylon should be removed separately.

Company Officials Say Address One Factor In Credit Scoring

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two major oil companies rejected allegations today that they deny credit cards to some persons simply because of the area in which they live.

However, representatives of the firms, Amoco Oil Co. and Mobil Oil Corp., told the Senate Banking subcommittee on consumer affairs that they use a person's address as one of several factors in determining whether to grant credit.

Terence B. Redmond, an Amoco vice president, and William B. Blackwell, credit manager of Mobil Oil Credit Corp., said passage of a bill prohibiting use of geographic information as a factor in credit rating would result in less credit for customers.

Both firms defended computer-based "credit scoring" as superior to systems that rely on subjective judgments of employees to determine who gets a credit card.

Redmond denied that Amoco has ever refused credit cards to all persons living in a certain ZIP-code area whose residents had a lower-than-average credit rating.

"Residents of any ZIP code where Amoco markets can and do secure credit approval," he said. "No credit-card applicant has ever been turned down solely because of his or her place of residence."

The company officials agreed, however, that having the wrong ZIP code could, in combination with several other factors, result in denial of credit.

Under the credit-scoring system, whether a person gets a credit card depends not on his own bill-paying record but on whether he has the characteristics of those who in the past have paid their bills on time.

If, for example, a merchant finds that a large number of people who are lumberjacks or who have a certain ZIP code have a bad bill-paying record, being a lumberjack or living in such an area might make it more difficult for an applicant to get credit.

Amid accusations that such ZIP-coding of credit applications results in racial discrimination, the consumer subcommittee affairs opened its hearings Monday on credit-scoring. The panel heard a Detroit woman tell how she and her husband had been denied a Mobil Oil credit card in 1977 because of living in the wrong place and having the wrong occupation.

The woman, Aileen Selick, earns $34,000 a year as assistant to the city superintendent of schools. Her husband, Isaac Selick, is a retired policeman who earns $17,000 as a security officer and private detective.

She said she was never able to determine which occupation Mobil considered uncreditworthy. However, she added, Mobil did concede the fact the Selicks live in an aging section of inner-city Detroit weighed against them.

Mobil's action, Mrs. Selick told the subcommittee, "says that we are not trustworthy; we have been discredited." Mobil since has stopped using ZIP codes in determining who gets credit.

The subcommittee is considering a bill that would make it illegal to discriminate against credit-card applicants on the basis of place of residence.

Gail S. Rubino, speaking for the National Retail Merchants Association, told the panel that the bill is unnecessary. At present, she said, "no applicant can be rejected or approved solely because of his or her place of residence. It is the applicant's total score which dictates the creditor's decision."

Nick Ferrante of Los Angeles, representing the American Bankers Association, said the scoring system results in fewer errors, more credit and better treatment for those who apply for credit for the first time.

Under the "judgmental" system, in which a merchant or bank decides whether to grant credit by subjectively evaluating an applicant's record, a young couple with no history of borrowing might be denied, Ferrante said.

Veterans Dissatisfied With Study Plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — An organization representing some Vietnam veterans expressed dissatisfaction today with Air Force plans to study for six years the health of 1,200 airmen who were exposed to Agent Orange while spraying the herbicide over the Vietnam jungles.

"Six years seems too long to wait for results — a lot of veterans are worrying now about whether they have suffered genetic damage, whether they should become fathers," said law professor Elliott Milstein.

Milstein is co-director of the National Veterans Law Center which has sued the Veterans Administration on behalf of six or eight veterans who were exposed to the herbicide.

The Air Force announced Monday it would conduct a six-year study, of the effects on the health of the 1,200 men exposed to — and sometimes drenched in — Agent Orange while spraying it from low-flying planes in an attempt to deny hostile troops their hiding places.

Milstein said the study should be conducted by an agency independent of the Air Force to make certain it will be unbiased. He said veterans might be told to wait until the study is completed before their claims for disabilities are settled by the VA.

The VA said it welcomed the Air Force study. Spokesman Strat Appleman said that until the results were in, the VA would stick with its position that "there's probably no relationship between the health condition of a veteran today and his probable or alleged exposure some eight or 10 years ago to Agent Orange."

Appleman said about 500 Vietnam veterans have filed claims for medical disability but only one has been found eligible for payments on the ground that he suffered from chloracne, a skin condition resulting from exposure to chemicals.

Of the 500, he said, about 100 servicemen showed no symptoms, 15 were awarded payments on disabilities unrelated to the spraying program and the remaining claims were disallowed.

Appleman said 350 of the claims came from the Chicago area after a television station there broadcast reports in March 1978 of the possible effect of the herbicide on veterans of "Operation Ranch Hand," the nine-year spraying campaign.

The National Veterans Law Center, a public interest law group co-sponsored by the American Civil Liberties Union and the American University Law School's clinical program, sued the VA last week.

The suit claimed the VA was obliged to receive public comment before it issued guidelines to the doctors who rule on disability claims. The guidelines said no relationship exists between Agent Orange and the health of those who handled it.

Under the Air Force testing program, the 1,200 "Operation Ranch Hand" participants will be telephoned and asked a long series of questions. Those who report ailments or want physical examinations will be invited to the Air Force School of Aerospace Medicine in San Antonio for complete exams.

Many Vietnam veterans already have filed suit against the manufacturers of several toxic chemicals that went into the herbicide, saying the chemicals already have resulted in medical problems.

Missing Stock Certificate Found

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A stock certificate, missing since before the turn of the century, has been found in the Wells Fargo archives and whoever is declared the owner will be richer by $2.5 million.

When Texas Land Trust Certificate No. 390 was issued in 1888, it was worth 100 shares, par value of $100.

But the certificate is not up for grabs. Texas courts have been looking for it for years, and they will decide who gets it. Three medical schools could receive the windfall.

Basil Pearce, vice president and manager of Wells Fargo's history department, and Edward Munger, retired Wells Fargo vice president and an authority on the bank's history, were titillated by a newspaper story about the certificate and launched a search for it.

Wells Fargo announced Monday that Pearce and Munger discovered the certificate in the archives.

The certificate entitled the bearer to 100 shares "of proprietary interest in the lands and property in the State of Texas heretofore conveyed by the Texas and Pacific Railway Company and other grantors ..."

The bank said its value ballooned due to changes in the status of the land trust. They have resulted in the certificate being worth 53,000 shares of Texaco, Inc., stock valued at $1.4 million and sharing in the current value of Texas Pacific Land Trust worth $1.1 million.

When DeLamar died in 1918, he left an estate worth an estimated $20 million. Half went to his daughter and half to the medical schools of Columbia, Harvard and Johns Hopkins.

The heirs of DeLamar and another man involved with the certificate could be its new owners as well as the medical schools.

Carter To Announce Decision On Missile

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter will annnounce shortly his decision on whether to build the MX mobile missile, a senior White House official says.

Carter met with top military leaders Monday to discuss the issue, officials said. One, who asked not to be identified, said the president was expected to make his decision before a June 15 summit meeting with Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev. Under terms of the arms limitation treaty to be signed with Brezhnev, the United States will be allowed to develop one new missile system. The MX is currently the leading candidate to be that new weapon.

$7,700 Cash Draws Panel's Attention

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Ethics Committee investigators looking into Sen. Herman E. Talmadge's financial affairs are focusing increasing attention on $7,700 in $100 bills allegedly found in one of the Georgia Democrat's old coats.

Sources who requested anonymity said the committee has traced the cash to a Texas Federal Reserve bank and are trying to pin down its origin.

The money was given to the panel by Talmadge's former wife, Betty, who has said she discovered the money in a pocket of one of Talmadge's overcoats in January 1974.

Minchew was returning today for his fifth day of testimony before the committee, which has accused Talmadge of converting campaign contributions and Senate expense payments to his personal use.

Under cross-examination Monday, Minchew held firm to his story that Talmadge was a full participant in the scheme designed to provide cash for the senator from campaign funds and Senate expense payments.

Talmadge's lawyer, James Hamilton, generally failed to shake Minchew's previous testimony on how he came to set up a secret Washington bank account, which has been the major focus of the committee's investigation.

Minchew described using a mechanical device to inscribe Talmadge's signature on checks drawing on the account in the Riggs National Bank.

The former Senate aide said he would routinely sign Talmadge's name to the front and back of checks and keep a supply handy for whenever he wanted to withdraw cash for his or Talmadge's use.

Some $39,000 in campaign contributions and Senate expense funds passed through the account in 1973 and 1974. Committee investigators say Minchew may have used up to $16,000 of the money himself.

Unrelated to that is the $7,700 turned over by Mrs. Talmadge. The money is important, sources said Monday, because it has no connection to Minchew, Talmadge's chief aide from 1971 until 1974.

Talmadge has said he never handled large amounts of cash, just $5 and $10 bills given him by supporters in Georgia.

Sources say testimony expected from Mrs. Talmadge next week about the $7,700 will contradict her former husband's description of his use of cash.

Moreover, sources said the committee also hopes to discover the source of the cash.

Gordon Roberts, a spokesman for Talmadge, declined comment Monday on the $7,700 except to note the senator's previous statement that the money could not have been in his overcoat in early 1974, as Mrs. Talmadge maintains.

Minchew is scheduled to testify through Thursday and could return Monday.

Defendant To Testify At Trial

BROWNSVILLE (UPI) — The co-defendant in the trial of James Buffington, convicted of having his wife killed by a hired gun, is expected to be the key prosecution witness against the accused triggerman in the case that has been likened by a prosecutor to an Alfred Hitchcock plot.

Jury selection began Monday in the trial of Charles County, 30, charged with killing Chere Buffington in San Antonio on March 20, 1976, in exchange for a payment of money from the woman's former husband.

Court officials said the individual questioning of 62 prospective jurors would be a lengthy process and a jury was not expected to be empaneled before Thursday in the court of District Judge Preston Dial.

Prosecutors and defense attorneys were to qualify 42 potential jurors out of the panel summoned to the courthouse Monday, then strike 15 names each to arrive at the 12-member jury.

Dial, of San Antonio, earlier this year granted a change of venue to move the trial to Brownsville on grounds a publicity of the case in Bexar County might prejudice selection of a jury.

A San Antonio jury on Jan. 6, 1979, sentenced Buffington, 34, to die by lethal injection on grounds he hired County to kill Mrs. Buffington so Buffington could collect $369,000 in life insurance.

Charles Moore, 33, a co-defendant in the killing, testified at Buffington's trial and also was expected to be the key witness against County.

In the Buffington trial, Moore testified that he was with County when Mrs. Buffington was abducted and when County shot her twice in the head while she begged for her life in the back seat of her own automobile.

Other witnesses testified that Buffington had taken out $100,000 in life insurance on his ex-wife after their divorce, paid some of the premiums and that he helped pay legal fees for County after she was killed.

"When he stopped the car, he just turned around and shot the lady," Moore told the jury in the Buffington trial.

"It is almost as if Alfred Hitchcock put pen in hand and decided to write a screenplay, but you have to realize it happened in real life," prosecutor Keith Burris told the Buffington jury in his final argument.

Parcel Bombs Sent To Top Nazis

NEW YORK (AP) — Five powerful parcel bombs — all capable of killing or maiming — have been sent to Nazi leaders in four states. And a telephone caller says more are on the way today.

But, unlike the first group, today's bombs "are going to go off," the anonymous caller told The Associated Press on Monday.

The caller, claiming to represent the International Committee Against Nazism, said he revealed where the bombs were located because "this is only a When asked for more information, the caller said Monday: "We'll call you tomorrow with new places." He hung up when asked if he would call before the new bombs exploded.

Monday's caller said bombs had been mailed to Nazi leaders in Chicago; Cicero, Ill.; Arlington, Va., and Lincoln, Neb. On Saturday, a person claiming to be from the same group told the AP in a telephone call that a bomb had been sent to Paterson, N.J.

Authorities in each of those communities later confirmed the existence of the potentially lethal packages.

An FBI spokesman in Newark, N.J., said the agency was looking into the incidents — talking to persons who received the parcels and trying to determine who else might get them. He declined to divulge additional details of the investigation.

Each parcel contained similar explosives and detonators, and, in at least three cases, bombs were accompanied by a similarly worded message ending with "Heil Hitler and White Power."

The caller Saturday said a bomb would go to Tscherim Soobzokov, a former Nazi SS officer, in Paterson. Soobzokov received a cigar box-size package containing explosives at his home Friday. The device was detonated by Army experts.

Soobzokov was cleared by a federal grand jury last month of war crime charges dating back to World War II.

Bombs also were sent to Matt Kohel, commanding officer of the National Socialist White People's Party, at the group's national headquarters in Arlington, Va.; the party's Midwest office in Cicero; Frank Collin, head of the National Socialist Party of America in Chicago, and to Gary Rex "Gerhard" Lauck, 26, head of the overseas branch of the German Nazi Party and a member of the American Nazi Party in Lincoln, Neb.

The bombs to Kohel and Collin were intercepted at post office branches. The bomb to Cicero was defused by a party member, and the one sent to Lauck was disarmed at a police pistol range.

Larry Cole, Lincoln fire department inspector, said the guerrilla-type bomb sent to Lauck was capable of killing anyone within a 5-to 10-foot range. Cole described the triggering mechanism as a pressure-release type, designed to explode when the box was opened.

Donald Kenney, an explosives technician for the Chicago Bomb and Arson Unit, said the device intended for Collin — who was stymied in his efforts last year to hold a Nazi march in the heavily Jewish community of Skokie, Ill. — "was made to kill or maim the person who opened the box."

He said the cigar box contained a plastic bottle with black powder explosives. The South Side post office branch where the package was found was evacuated for half an hour Monday while the box was opened.

Manny Beck, chairman of a tiny New York City group with the same name as those claiming responsibility for the bombs, said Monday that his group was not involved.

"We want to say we are a non-violent organization," he said. "We advocate bringing these criminals to justice through judicial means only."

By KAY BELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff
(c) 1979 A-J Pub. Co.

The special agent in charge of Lubbock's FBI office Monday confirmed that agents here are searching for a man wanted by federal authorities in San Antonio.

"He is wanted for questioning in San Antonio," Bernie Brown told The Avalanche-Journal.

"We've been looking for him since almost a week prior to (federal judge John H. Wood's May 29) death," Brown added.

Lubbock County law enforcement agencies "have been very cooperative," Brown said, in the FBI's attempt to locate the man, a member of the Bandidos motorcycle club, but not affiliated with the Lubbock chapter.

"He has been in Lubbock," Brown said. "There's no question about it." He added that authorities think the man still is in the Lubbock area.

Brown also confirmed that the FBI and Lubbock County Sheriff's Office combined forces Sunday night for a stakeout of the local Bandidos clubhouse near Lubbock.

A sheriff's department dispatcher was overheard about 8 p.m. Sunday broadcasting a watch at the club's trailer house northeast of the city. A person with the sheriff's office was overheard saying the watch was in connection with the "deal out of San Antonio."

"What we were trying to do was locate (the man wanted for questioning)," Brown said. "We got a report that he was out there."

Also Monday, Lloyd Harrell, special agent heading the Dallas FBI office's part of the investigation into Wood's slaying, told The A-J he believes the publicity surrounding the Lubbock search may endanger the life of the man being sought here.

"We have to use extreme caution in what we say," Harrell said. "I certainly wouldn't want to be the federal prosecutor who endangered the life of an individual we need to talk to."

Meanwhile, in San Antonio, FBI agents continued their search for two men wanted for questioning in connection with the assassination. Those men were seen by several witnesses around Wood's condominium the morning he was shot.

Composite sketches of the pair were released by the FBI Friday. The drawings show a man with long brownish hair and a mustache and a clean-shaven man with light hair. Both wore glasses and appeared to be in their late 20s or 30s.

San Antonio agents have not named the men as suspects in the shooting, saying only "we're just trying to identify who these men are."

Age Discrimination Regulations Issued

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government today issued final rules banning age discrimination in all federally-funded programs, but decided to allow state and local governments to pass exceptions to the law.

The rules, which take effect July 1, implement the Age Discrimination Act that Congress passed in 1975. It requires that no one shall be denied benefits from any program or activity receiving federal aid because of his or her age.

However, the regulations announced today by Health, Education and Welfare secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr., provide for exceptions, including laws on minimum ages for drinking, getting a driver's license, participating in special education programs and the like.

Congress did not specify whether state and local government laws could supersede the federal statute. Senior citizens groups had urged HEW to allow only federal laws to provide exceptions to the act.

But HEW regulation writers decided that any statute passed by a state or local government would qualify for an exemption.

The rules cover all federal programs, and each federal agency will be required to issue its own regulations in 90 days specifying age discrimination regulations for its programs.

HEW, in a novel approach to enforcing a civil rights law, has provided that complaints about age discrimination will be handled by a mediation board. It did this in an effort to keep the law from spawning prolonged lawsuits.

House Aging Committee Chairman Claude Pepper, D-Fla., said in a statement that the new rules do not go far enough.

"However they are a first step in ending discrimination," commented the 78-year-old Democrat and the oldest member of the House.

"Older people can no longer be denied their fair share of funds except in limited cases of specific laws," said Pepper.

He said he hopes federal, state and local governments will "see the tide against ageism and will stop writing those few discriminatory statutes."

Pepper said he and other colleagues will be introducing legislation soon to abolish those exemptions "and mandate this long overdue justice."

Second Identity Says Killings Cousin's Idea

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A cousin of Kenneth A. Bianchi, the man accused in the Hillside Strangler slayings, has been implicated by "Steve Walker" — the personality psychologists say Bianchi assumes under hypnosis — as an accomplice in some of the killings, the Los Angeles Times says.

The Times reported today that "Walker," an aggressive personality who brags about the killings when Bianchi is hypnotized, said Bianchi's cousin Angelo Buono had the idea for the slayings, but that "Walker" killed the first girl and the cousins took turns later.

In a report to Bianchi's defense attorney, psychology professor Dr. John Watkins said that Bianchi told of the alleged murder partner under hypnosis. Buono, 44, refused to discuss any aspects of the investigation.

Statements by the 28-year-old Bianchi while under hypnosis have been a major basis for comments by District Attorney John Van De Kamp and Los Angeles Police Chief Daryl Gates that they suspect Buono, the Times reported.

State law says that without corroborating evidence, no charges can be filed on the unsupported statements of an alleged co-conspirator.

"Steve" refers to Bianchi as a weakling who deserves to be in trouble, says the psychologist.

However, prosecutors say they are suspicios that Bianchi might have invented "Steve Walker" as a possible defense.

Bianchi, being held in Bellingham, Wash., has pleaded innocent by reason of insanity in the slaying of two Washington State University coeds. He is accused of numerous felonies in Los Angeles, committed along with an unidentified "John Doe."

Photoengravers Strike NY Daily News

NEW YORK (AP) — Photoengravers struck the Daily News, the country's largest circulation daily, this morning after the breakdown of talks with the News and The New York Times.

But one of the News' negotiators, Gregory Thornton, said the strike by 64 photoengravers — who ready photographic plates used in newspapers — would not keep the News from publishing.

"We intend to print a newspaper," he said. The News has a daily circulation of 2.3 million readers, the largest in the country."

Although photoengravers at the New York Times were also negotiating for a new contract, they opted not to strike.

A total of 12 picketers began marching shortly after 7 a.m. outside the News building in midtown Manhattan and at its truck garage across the street. A heavy police detail was also present.

The Times and Daily News negotiate jointly through the New York Publishers Association. They also have a mutual shut-down arrangement whereby either paper will close if the other is forced to do so.

But John Mortimer, vice president of the Times, said his paper's position and reaction to a strike against the News would be determined later, following clarification of the situation.

Earlier, the Allied Printing Trades Council, representing the various AFL-CIO unions at the papers, pledged that it would give "all legal support" to the photoengravers.

Allied head George McDonald and Allied counsel Theodore Kheel said the support of the other unions would be decided in a meeting this morning of the Allied Council.

Asked whether it was possible that such union support would be withheld, McDonald said: "That's right."

One of the picketers said: "It's going to be tough if we're all alone against the papers."

The breakoff point in all-night bargaining came when the photoengravers' bargaining committee turned down a proposal made by Allied that was hoped to be satisfactory to both sides, according to Alied officials. They would not disclose details of the proposal.

But union president Stanley Aslanian gave a different version of the breakdown. He said the News management turned down the union's final offer for a wage increase accepted by other unions and job guarantees only to 1984, as opposed to union's earlier demand for a "lifetime guarantee."

HART DIES — Gene Leroy Hart, acquitted March 30 in the sex slayings of three Girl Scouts at a northeastern Oklahoma summer camp in 1977, died at the Oklahoma State Prison Monday of an apparent heart attack. Gene Leroy Hart Dies Following Exercise

McALESTER, Okla. (AP) — Gene Leroy Hart, the 35-year-old Cherokee Indian acquitted two months ago of the sex slayings of three Girl Scouts, collapsed in a prison exercise yard and died.

Officials at Oklahoma State Prison said Hart died Monday of an apparent heart attack after more than an hour of jogging and lifting weights late Monday afternoon in 80-degree weather.

Doctors tried for 20 minutes to revive him without success and he was pronounced dead a short while later at a McAlester hospital. An autopsy was scheduled for today.

Nancy Nunnally, a spokeswoman for the Corrections Department, said Hart had no history of heart trouble.

The death of Hart, convicted rapist, kidnapper and burglar, prompted mixed emotions in all those connected with the 1977 Girl Scout killings, from parents to prosecutors.

Sid Wise, former Mayes County district attorney who saw Hart charged with the slayings at a northeastern Oklahoma summer camp, said the death reflected "the hand of fate."

"It reaffirms my belief that justice will prevail, even if you have to go higher than men and women sitting on a jury," said Wise. "The hand of fate or the Almighty steps in when the system fails."

Some officials had feared other prisoners at the maximum-security prison would try to exact vengeance despite Hart's acquittal on the murder charges March 30 after a month-long trial.

Sheri Farmer of Tulsa, mother of 8-year-old Lori Lee Farmer, the youngest of the victims, said she wondered after hearing of Hart's death, "Has justice been done?"

"I still think he was the one who killed Lori, but I feel shaken about his death. I feel ... torn," said Mrs. Farmer.

"After all they've been through, to be asked to face this now is more than any family should be asked to bear," Pitchlynn said. "They fought long and hard to save that man. It's a shock. We're all saddened."

Hart was a fugitive from the Mayes County Jail at the time he was charged with the slayings at Camp Scott near Locust Grove. The three girls were also sexually molested, authorities said.

Hart pleaded guilty two weeks ago to charges of escape and burglary and was also serving state sentences — totaling about 90 years, prison officials said — on convictions of burglary, rape and kidnapping stemming from a 1967 incident.

Jet Airliner Loses Tire

RICHMOND, Calif. (UPI) — A tire dropped "like a bomb" from a jumbo jet Monday and bounced on a residential street, narrowly missing residents out in their yards.

"It sounded just like a bomb in a war movie," said Paul Zeppa, 20, a ham radio operator monitoring calls when the accident occurred. "I could hear the noise over the radio even though I had my earphones on.

"I ran outside and I saw this big tire bouncing down the avenue. I ran after it and dragged it back to the house."

The 235-pound tire apparently blew out when a Pacific Southwest Airlines 727, carrying 116 passengers, took off from San Francisco International Airport — across San Francisco Bay — en route to Reno, Nev.

The plane dropped its fuel over the Pacific Ocean to reduce weight and returned to the airport safely with its other wheels intact.

Zeppa, who had just returned home from his supermarket job, said the tire first hit a cement curb, cracking it. Then, he said, it struck a front lawn, gouging a foot-deep hole in the grass before it bounced down the street.

Zeppa said one neighbor was watering his lawn just a few feet from where the tire hit.

Earthquake Hits Southern Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — An earthquake registering 5.6 on the Richter scale struck southern Mexico near the Guatemalan border early Monday, seismologists reported. No casualties or serious damage were reported.

The epicenter was traced to the state of Chiapas, they said.

Attackers Beat, Cut Teen-Ager

A man and two women barged into a residence about 12:15 a.m. today and assaulted a 17-year-old Lubbock woman, who required 89 stitches at a local hospital as a result, according to reports.

Anna Maria Trevino of 309 E. Stanford St. said her assailants kicked open the door at a 2008 15th St. residence and began beating her. She said she was dragged into the bathroom where the male suspect displayed a knife and cut her.

The attackers were described as Mexican-Americans between 18 and 25 years old, and all very short.

In other activity, Johnny Alfred Dyer, 55, told police he was robbed of $45 cash about 12:15 a.m. today when confronted by two black men in the 1600-block of Avenue C.

Dyer, of 2722 E. Second St., said he was walking along the sidewalk when the bandits faced him and demanded money. He said one of the suspects was swinging a club.

Reports indicate that when Dyer said he did not have any money, one of the men went through his pockets and found the cash. After taking the loot, the bandits walked away north on Avenue C, according to reports.

The suspects were described as short and between 26 and 35 years old.

A 15-year-old boy reported to police Monday that since February a 27-year-old man has sexually assaulted him twice.

The youth said that the most recent attack was May 14 when the man entered his bedroom. The suspect, described as an obese black man, reportedly has tried to fight the complainant since the last assault.

A 14-year-old boy was taken into custody by police shortly after 5 p.m. Monday after he allegedly attacked a Lubbock woman in the 2200-block of 13th Street.

The 21-year-old woman said the youth grabbed her from behind and threw her to the ground. She said her screams apparently scared away the teen-ager.

Three off-duty policemen spotted the young suspect minutes later in the 2300-block of 10th Street and placed him in custody. The boy was turned over to juvenile authorities.

A 36-year-old woman was arrested about 9:30 p.m. Monday when she allegedly tried to walk out of the Safeway supermarket at Frankfort Avenue and 19th Street with $22 in unpaid merchandise.

The store manager said he saw the woman hide a package of meat in her pants and stick another item in her purse. The woman was arrested when she attempted to leave the store after paying for a can of shortening.

A 20-year-old Lubbock woman reported Monday that her ex-boyfriend forced her to have sex with him Saturday night.

The woman said that she was leaving a pool hall in the 700-block of 13th Street with another man Saturday afternoon when her ex-boyfriend began fighting with the man.

After the three were thrown out of the pool hall, the woman said her ex-boyfriend pulled a knife on her and forced her to go to his house, where he later made her have sex with him. The woman said the man did not release her until noon Sunday.

Pancho Hernandez of 1802 Zenith Ave. complained that someone took a two-month-old goat, valued at $35, from a pen in his backyard sometime between 9 p.m. Sunday and 9 a.m. Monday.

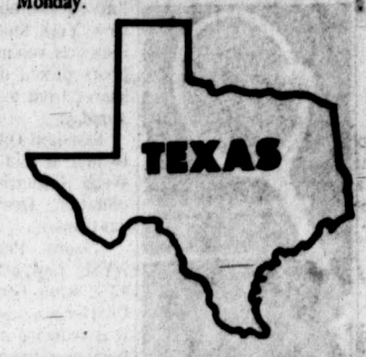

Janet Staggs reported thieves carted off $400 worth of goods, including frozen meat, flatware and small electric appliances, from Krow's Kitchen at 3030 34th St. sometime late Sunday or early Monday.

Deann Sander of 3624 55th St. told police Monday that someone took $2,250 worth of her property, including cash and jewelry, sometime between February 18 and March 4.

Juan Zamora of 4612 47th St. said someone stole his $3,000 car from the 300-block of Avenue S sometime Monday morning.

In vehicle thefts, James Harlan Wright said someone took $619 worth of goods, including a CB radio, hats and a tire, from his pickup truck, which was in a parking lot in the 1100-block of 50th Street sometime Monday morning.

Daniel Lester Richmond of Greencastle, Pa., reported burglars removed a CB radio, cassette tapes and watch, valued together at $500, from his van which was parked at the Ramada Inn sometime between 11 p.m. Sunday and 9 a.m. Monday.

Operation Identification Bugs Being Ironed Out By Council

By JEFF McCASLIN
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Operation Identification is progressing slower than anticipated, but Lubbock County Crime Prevention Council representatives said today the problems are being ironed out.

Hal Hensley, in charge of the council's efforts to get homeowners to mark their valuable household items, told the council he has received all the necessary materials but miscalculated the time needed to get the marking devices and brochures distributed.

LCCPC member Charlie Brown said he thinks the largest barrier with Operation Identification is that people don't realize how many items they have that need to be marked.

Hensley pointed out that citizens should not call the district attorney's office asking for personnel to come to their homes to mark their items. Hensley said the program is being organized on a block-by-block basis, but not all blocks have volunteers yet. He advised homeowners simply to wait until they are contacted.

LCCPC Chairman Sheriff C.H. "Choc" Blanchard said the council should wait until the next meeting before nominating a new president to replace Mal Cleland, who has not yet submitted a formal resignation notice.

Cleland announced his resignation as director of the Better Business Bureau last week. He will accept a similar position in Denver, Colo., later this month.

Lubbock County Criminal District Attorney John T. Montford told the council this morning he and other members of the funding committee met last week and discussed at least two proposals to liquidate the council's indebtedness on the marking devices.

He said he would have a concrete proposal to present to the council at the next meeting but wouldn't elaborate on that today.

According to the financial report presented to the council at their May 23 meeting, the LCCPC has about $6,600 in outstanding debts. Most of the money owed is for the marking devices purchased by the council to launch Operation Identification.

Capt. Frank Wiley of the Lubbock Police Department asked the council how the Neighborhood Watch program was progressing in conjunction with Operation Identification.

Blanchard said it is "lying dormant" right now because brochures from the National Sheriff's Association have not arrived.

Neighborhood Watch is a program designed to get area citizens to keep an eye on their neighbors' property and report to police any unusual activity in their neighborhoods.

Brown said the council should start thinking about getting more publicity from the local media for Operation Identification.

He also asked the council to begin making plans for drug abuse programs in the schools next fall.

Pilot Lands Airplane After Fiery Takeoff

GUTHRIE (Special) — A Mercedes man, whose crop duster apparently caught fire during takeoff near here Monday morning, was treated at Lubbock's Methodist Hospital for injuries he suffered in the mishap.

Marvin Lee "Lefty" Gardner, 58, who walked away from the burning plane after he made an emergency landing, was taken by private plane to Lubbock International Airport and then to Methodist by EMS ambulance at 11:45 a.m.

He was released from the hospital following treatment.

King County Sheriff Harmon "Babe" Oliver said Gardner's crop duster apparently caught fire while taking off about 10 a.m. at a dirt airstrip about five and one-half miles east of Guthrie.

The sheriff said Gardner managed to get out of the burning plane, but added that the crop duster was burned completely before Guthrie volunteer firefighters reached the scene.

Gardner, owner of the Gardner Aerial Spraying Co., was doing contract spraying for the Pitchfork and 6666 ranches.

Hospital Chiefs Rebuke Cost Increase Controls

DALLAS (AP) — Terming it too bitter a pill to swallow, Texas hospital administrators say they would like to lay proposed cost-containment legislation to rest.

Ray Hurst, president of the Texas Hospital Association, said Monday that hospitals have already proven themselves through voluntary controls. President Carter's proposal would hold hospital cost increases to 9.7 percent in 1980.

"The KKK — (Ted) Kennedy, (Joseph) Califiano and (President Jimmy) Carter — are after us," Hurst said at the association meeting at the Dallas Convention Center. "This is not a cost-containment bill but a contrived case to take over the health care delivery system."

Hurst said the Carter Administration blames a large part of the country's inflation on escalating hospital costs, a theory Hurst terms a "lurid character compared to the facts."

Using a study by Data Resources Inc., he said the consumer price index would drop only 1/10 of 1 percent even if the bill passes and everything the administration predicts happens by 1984.

And items other than hospital costs are skyrocketing, said Ray Woodham, chairman of the American College of Hospital Administrators.

"We resent having to be defensive in this thing, but Califano is only interested in the figures that underline his case," Woodham said.

City Woman Charged In Airman's Death

Annie Fay Williams, 21, was charged Monday with voluntary manslaughter in the Saturday night stabbing death of William H. James.

Miss Williams, of 3002 Fourth St., No. 62, was arrested shortly after the 11 p.m. incident.

The Criminal District Attorney's Office recommended a $15,000 bond for Miss Williams, who remained in the county jail Monday night.

James, a staff sergeant at Reese Air Force Base, was found in a car by two base security guards. The vehicle was in a ditch off West Fourth Street about two miles east of FM 179.

Shallowater Justice of the Peace Dardie Williamson pronounced the 29-year-old serviceman dead at the scene. She ruled the death a homicide, the county's fifth of the year.

While deputies were investigating the crime scene, they received word that a woman was at a nearby convenience store and that she was admitting killing James.

The woman, who met deputies at the store, said she and James had been fighting and that she stabbed him. The suspect was taken into custody late Saturday and transported to the county jail.

Sheriff's Capt. Alton Hobbs said James had been stabbed five times in the chest. A blood-stained knife blade, with the handle broken off, was found on the back floorboard of the auto.

Reports indicate that the woman handed deputies a handle which fit the seven-inch blade.

James' wallet, containing $115 cash, was found on the body.

The body of the 9-year veteran of the U.S. Air Force was taken to Henderson Funeral Directors. The body was to be transported to John H. Shaw Funeral Home in Wilmington, N.C. James was a native of Leland, N.C.

NEW YORK (AP) — Advancing energy issues led the stock market higher today.

At noon, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was ahead by 2.77 at 824.67. Advances led declines by better than 2-1 among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues as volume in the first two hours picked up to 15.29 million shares from 9.36 million at noon Monday.

Fire Guts Freighter; 5 Missing

COPPER HARBOR, Mich. (AP) — A fire raged through a 730-foot Great Lakes freighter today, and at least five sailors were missing and feared trapped aboard the crippled vessel. The ship looked "like a bonfire" to witnesses on shore 10 miles away.

Twenty-one crewmen from the Cartiercliffe Hall were rescued from life rafts in Lake Superior by two other freighters, the Coast Guard said. Five men were reported seriously burned and two others were less seriously injured.

Lt. j.g. Gary Schlabaugh of the Traverse City Coast Guard station said five sailors were missing. Radioman Mitchell Weber said there were reports they were trapped in the engine room.

However, the Duluth, Minn., Coast Guard station said one of its vessels on the scene reported six men were missing. In Montreal, Dave Blakely, sales and traffic manager for the ship's owner, also put the number of missing at six.

A Coast Guard medical corpsman, who apparently viewed the ship from a helicopter that helped evacuate the injured, said the interior of the ship was "pretty badly burned."

"I don't see how anybody could be alive in there," he said while unloading stretchers at Houghton Airport. He was too busy to give his name.

Four of the injured were taken to Portage View Hospital in Hancock, authorities said. Two were determined to be too seriously hurt to be treated there and were sent by Coast Guard plane to the University of Michigan burn center in Ann Arbor, 400 miles to the south.

The Coast Guard said two other crewmen with minor injuries were being taken by boat to the Portage Coast Guard station.

The uninjured men were still aboard rescue vessels.

Joe Amato, chief petty officer at the Cleveland Coast Guard search and rescue center, said ships on the scene reported flames could be seen in the vessel's aft section and below deck through portholes.

Judge Orders Theft Trial Jury Seating

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Amid accusations of malicious prosecution, a state district judge has ordered jury selection in the theft trial of Potter County Attorney Kerry Knorpp to begin today.

Knorpp is accused of theft and misapplication of county funds.

Monday, State District Judge Jerry Woodard heard a number of motions from both sides, including allegations that Potter County District Attorney Tom Curtis' prosecution of Knorpp is malicious.

Justice of the Peace L.B. Bartlett testified that when Knorpp worked for Curtis prior to 1973, there was tension between the two attorneys.

Judge Woodard said he did not know whether or not the prosecution was malicious, but said, "if the grand jury returned the indictment, it seems to me it is subject to trial."

Defense attorneys Joe Calamia of El Paso and George Gilkerson of Lubbock indicated Knorpp may argue in his own behalf, but Judge Woodard said would rule on that possibility at a later time.

Judge Woodard also told the attorneys to approach the bench if they plan to bring up charges of malicious prosecution or if they plan to call Knorpp's former wife, Sharon Thomas, before the jury.

Testimony in an unsuccessful removal suit brought to light allegations that Knorpp pocketed a travel advance of $200 given to him by the county to attend a legal seminar he did not attend.

Between 20 and 25 witnesses are expected to testify when the trial begins. Among those witnesses will be the county judge, two commissioners, the sheriff, auditor and a justice of the peace.

Twins Now Off Critical List

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Lisa and Elisa Hansen are sleeping regularly, eating baby food and drinking milk and fruit juice one week after the surgery that separated the 19-month-old girls who were born joined at the head.

The girls were taken off the critical list Monday, and are now listed in serious but stable condition, althought doctors say the twins remain gravely ill.

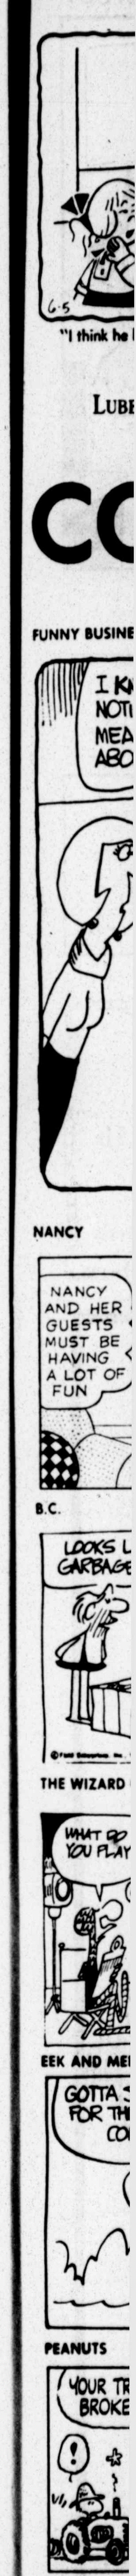

The twins had been in critical condition since two teams of doctors at the University of Utah Medical Center separated them in 16½ hours of surgery that began last Tuesday and ended early Wednesday. The operation that separated them was described as the first of its type to be successful.

"Doctors want to emphasize that while progress obviously has been made since separation surgery last Tuesday and Wednesday, the girls are still acutely ill and there are many factors which could lead to a future possible deterioration of their condition," hospital spokesman John Dwan said Monday.

There were hopeful signs, however.

Both girls were eating by mouth two days after surgery and there were no signs of infection, which doctors said posed the most immediate threat.

Comedian To Sit Out Elections

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Pat Paulsen, who lost his campaign for the presidency in 1972 to Richard Nixon, will sit out the 1980 election unless he is drafted by a grass roots groundswell of support from the great unwashed.

Paulsen, jaundiced in outlook and shifty of eye as ever, believes it's possible to unhorse President Carter next year. He is sure, however, that none of the prospective candidates has shown good early foot.

The saturnine comedian, who slouched along the hustings eight years ago, thinks California's Governer Jerry Brown may have the best shot.

"Jerry is giving Carter an image problem," Pat opined. "He flew off to Africa with Linda Ronstadt to attract attention. Now I hear Carter is going to Africa and he's taking Kate Smith along.

"Of course, Brown said he and Linda didn't do anything in Africa. But that's not news. He doesn't do anything with her in California either.

"If Linda and Jerry move into the White House, it will be the second time in a decade that the oval office will be filled with recording equipment.

"A lot of hopefuls are really dull. Take Robert Dull, er, ah, Dole, for instance. He could beat Pat Boone in a bland contest.

"Gerald Ford isn't Mr. Excitement either. Every time I see him on the tube I think I've lost the color on my television set. If you believe in reincarnation, Ford will come back as yogurt.

"Some people think Ronnie Reagan has a chance. I say he's a man for the 80s, the 1880s. Every morning when he gets up he runs to the window and hollers, 'The British are coming! The British are coming!'

"But Ronnie's in good physical condition. He can declare war just as well today as he ever did.

"John Connally of Texas may not make it. He had an accident the other day when he ran into himself changing parties.

"Howard Baker might have been a good prospect but he supported Nixon right to the end which proves he was born without a brain.

"Teddy Kennedy hasn't made up his mind. He can't decide whether to run for the presidency or to give pompous lessons to the Pope. He can talk for hours on subjects nobody cares about.

"The American people have finally figured out Harold Stassen. He announces his candidacy and gives his concession speech at the same time. I tried to get him to run on the ticket with me in 1972 but he wouldn't even meet me. He wanted the top spot on the ticket."

Paulsen, who disappears into the woodwork between elections, keeps busy touring colleges and auditoriums giving lectures and acting in such plays as "The Last of The Red Hot Lovers" and "California Suite."

Between tours he lives on a 300-acre ranch along the Russian River in Northern California where he grows wine grapes.

He is tempted to run for the presidency next year because he genuinely believes he would make a good president. As founder of the STAG (Straight Talking American Government) party, Pat thinks of himself as "a common, ordinary, simple savior of America's destiny."

On sex education he says, "I'm opposed to sex education in schools. Let kids today learn it where we did — in the gutter."

Paulsen entered the New Hampshire primary in 1972 on the Republican ticket — the Democratic ticket was crowded — opposing Nixon, Ashbrook and McCloskey.

He won't admit he was defeated, choosing instead to say, "I got 1,272 votes, one percent of the total. I spent only $8,000 on the campaign.

"If I'd spent $1 million and you project the number of votes by the amount spent, I would be going into my third term as president today.

"Think of the difference it would have made if I'd been elected instead of Nixon. There wouldn't have been any Watergate. I'd have made a good president if for no other reason than my lack of knowledge. That's my strong-point.

"I'm going on the Johnny Carson show June 8 to give my analysis of the coming campaign. It's possible my appearance could start a groundswell of support for my own candidacy.

"At the moment, I'm not planning to run, but as Jerry Ford said the other night, 'Never say never.'

"I might be able to beat Carter. He's been in office for three years and what's he got to show for it? At least Nixon had tapes."

Tomorrow's Horoscope

By Bernice Bede Osol

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You may not work well under pressure tomorrow, so try not to leave tasks to the last minute. Also this is not a good time to experiment with untested procedures.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Keep a low profile socially tomorrow and, above all, steer clear of cliques. Don't let another involve you in petty politics.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) It's possible you could be a bit more restless than usual tomorrow and make changes just for sake of change. Think your moves through before going off on tangents.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Instead, of looking for your friend's faults tomorrow, look for their virtues.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Normally you're willing to share fully what you have with others, but tomorrow you may be a trifle too self-serving for your own good. Don't be stingy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Be your own person tomorrow, but not at the expense of others. Treat your associates the way you'd like to be treated if the roles were reversed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Don't let an old grudge with a coworker precondition your thinking tomorrow. His or her methods may be superior, but you'll never know if your mind is closed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) For one who usually deals with life realistically, your practicality could desert you tomorrow, involving you in something both complicated and illogical.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Be prepared to exert some extra effort tomorrow if you hope to achieve an important goal. Your chances are good, but you'll have to work at it.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Well-formulated plans should not be altered. Stick to your original blueprints even though you may be faced with an unexpected change.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Tread warily in joint ventures tomorrow. Surface conditions may appear calm, but unusual undercurrents could lead to sticky developments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Be doubly tactful in important one-to-one relationships tomorrow. Do nothing erratic that could upset someone whose assistance you need at this time.

Mortgage Rate Hike Expected

By STEPHEN BROWN

NEW YORK (AP) — The banking regulatory changes that will raise interest rates for savings accounts will also raise interest rates on home mortgages, officials in the savings industry say.

The changes in savings interest rates were announced Wednesday by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and Federal Home Loan Deposit Insurance Corp., which set maximum allowable interest rates at savings banks and savings and loan associations, and the Federal Reserve Board and Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which set ceilings rates at commercial banks.

The home loan bank board also gave nationwide authorization to federally chartered savings and loan associations to offer variable rate mortgages. These mortgages, called VRMs, were available only in California and allow lenders to adjust interest rates periodically during the life of the loan.

Conventional mortgages carry for the duration of the mortgage — Usually 20 to 30 years — the rate set when the loan was made.

The new rules on savings, which included creating a new four-year savings certificate that pays interest keyed to the rates on four-year Treasury securities, were aimed at increasing the yields to smaller savers. Consumer groups and members of Congress have complained that small savers had been practically shut out of the high-paying money market certificates, called MMCs, offered by banks and thrifts since last June.

The six-month MMCs came in minimum denominations of $10,000. Under the new rules, all savings certifiates except the MMCs will have no minimum deposit rules.

The new rules authorizing variable rate mortgages nationwide are aimed at giving thrifts higher revenues to pay the higher yields on savings during periods of inflation.

The changes are expected to result in higher mortgage interest rates, probably a scarcity of funds available for mortgages in some states and possibly a downturn in the housing construction industry that traditionally precedes a general economic decline.

"In this inflationary environment the savings and loan industry must pay substantially higher rates of interest to savers," admitted Harold W. Greenwood Jr., president of the National Savings and Loan League, an industry group.

"But it must be realized that the American homebuyer in the future will also be paying much higher interest for mortgage funds — in the range of 10 percent to 14 percent over the next several years."

Edwin Brooks Jr., vice president of the U.S. League of Savings Associations, said the higher rates paid on savings "will mean an increase in the already high home mortgage interest rates too. Borrowers will have to pay the bill."

According to Brooks, savings interest costs are met largely by revenue from home mortgage payments, so that boosting interest on passbooks "will automatically mean still higher monthly payments for borrowers and trouble for the housing industry."

Higher interest rates price some potential homebuyers out of the market.

The opportunity to charge higher rates on mortgages should help the thrifts have money available for lending, the industry leaders said.

"However, it should be understood that nationwide authority for variable rate loans does not provide an immediate or complete answer to the problem of borrowing short and ending long.

"While over the long run, as lenders convert significant portions of their portfolios to variable rate mortgages, they will be in a better position to compete for deposits in the open market, VRM authority now will do nothing to help savings institutions afford the current high savings interest rates."

Industry officials have frequently pointed out in past months that some dozen states have laws limiting home mortgage rates to 10 percent or less, and that thrifts in these states are having a hard time closing the gap between revenues from loans and costs of paying interest on deposits.

In these states, the authorization for VRMs will offer no relief to S&Ls and savings banks because mortgage rates won't be allowed to go high enough. Shortages of funds are likely to develop in those situations, the bankers say.

Whale Dies Of Complications

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (UPI) — An ailing killer whale, found 10 days ago beached along the central California coast, has died despite intensive treatment by veterinarians at Marine World-Africa USA.

An autopsy showed the baby whale, nicknamed "Surfer Girl" by its keepers, died Sunday from kidney failure complicated by a perforated gastric ulcer.

A spokesman said the ulcerated condition is generally terminal for dolphins and whales. He added that "Surfer Girl" had been suffering from pneumonia when she was brought to Marine World.

The 1,000-pound pup, estimated to have been 18 months of age, had made steady improvement since she was found near Big Sur.

"We were very disappointed because all the initial signs had led us to believe this might be that very rare occasion where a whale found stranded would survive," Mike Demetrious, president of Marine World, said.

Gunbattles Rock Managua

A-J News Services

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Gunbattles in the streets and a general strike virtually paralyzed Nicaragua's capital, as Sandinista guerrillas held most of two northern cities and battled President Anastasio Somoza's troops in the south.

Hundreds of heavily armed guardsmen patrolled the deserted streets of Managua in anticipation of rebel attacks on businesses defying the guerrilla call for a nationwide general strike to topple Somoza.

"None of my employees have showed up for work," said one Managua businessman. "It's too dangerous. Everybody is afraid."

The rebels ambushed a national guard convoy a few miles from the center of Managua and less than a mile from the U.S. Embassy. The fierce 45-minute firefight could be heard in a large part of the city.

No buses and few taxis operated Monday, the first day of the strike, paralyzing transportation and making it impossible for most workers to get to their jobs.

The only businesses found open were government offices, branches of banks linked with the government and some gasoline stations.

One gas station owner said he opened only because guardsmen threatened to take over his business if he joined the strike.

The guerrillas also have erected barricades in the streets and taken control of the airstrip at Leon, the nation's second largest city about 55 miles northwest of the capital.

Many of the city's streets were gutted from dozens of rockets and machine-gun fire poured on rebel strongholds by national guard warplanes. People in poor neighborhoods of Leon, fearful of bombing by warplanes, fled to the countryside.

Heavy tank and armored car fire could be heard from the center of Leon and national guard planes could be seen strafing and rocketing the airport area, reporters returning from the city said.

National guardsmen said rebels ambushed a convoy of 25 soldiers, a Sherman tank and two armored cars sent from Managua to Leon, killing six guardsmen and losing two men themselves.

No word has been received since Monday morning from Chichigalpa, 20 miles northwest of Leon. A reporter there said most of the city was in rebels hands, with the guard confined to its headquarters.

Barricades were reported in the streets of Diriamba, Diriomo and Jinotepe, major towns southwest of Managua on the way to the Costa Rican border.

The guard, Somoza's combined army and police force said its troops had battled guerrillas in several other locations, including near Chinandega, in the northwest and Matagalpa in the north center.

The communique said government troops were continuing their assault against positions north of the Costa Rican border held by "the international brigade of communist mercenaries."

Somoza says the Sandinistas are operating from camps in Costa Rica and has threatened to declare war against his southern neighbor if the guerrillas keep up their raids.

But Costa Rican President Rodrigo Carazo said Monday that charges of guerrilla bases in his country were "lies" and that there was "no possibility" Nicaraguan troops would invade.

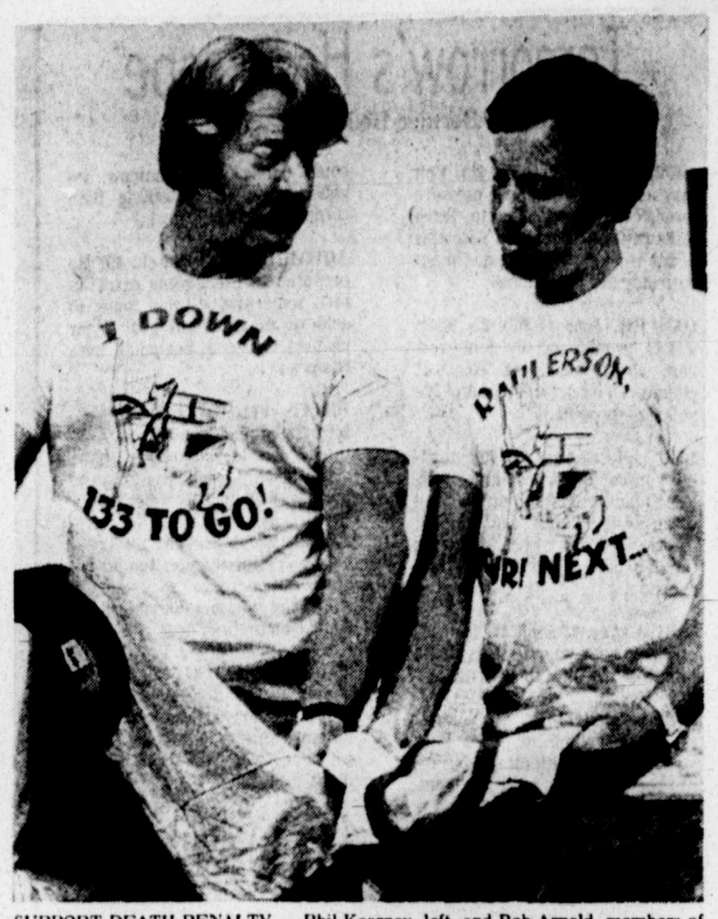

Carazo said Somoza was attempting "to put the responsibility for his problems on an external source. He can't imagine his problems are internal. He wants to hide them from the world ...

"The Nicaraguan people are tired. If you had suffered 45 years of that kind of government you would want to see it out of power also," Carazo told Associated Press correspondent Gordon Mott aboard a fishing boat outside the Pacific coast port of Punta Arenas east of San Jose, the Costa Rican capital.

The Sandinistas take their name from a rebel leader who fought the U.S. Marines who put Somoza's father into power in the 1930s. They led a two-week rebellion in September in which an estimated 1,500 persons died. Another 1,500 have been killed in clashes since.

PRISONER QUESTIONED — Sandanista guerrilla leader Eden Pastora, right, known as "Commander Zero," questions a Nicaraguan national guard officer near El Naranjo following a clash between the leftist rebels and government troops. Heavy Rains In Texas Increase Flood Threat

The heaviest recorded rainfall during the 24-hour-period was 2.38 inches at Del Rio, with a flash flood warning issued until 7 a.m. today for Val Verde County to the north of the border town.

NWS reports indicated 2 to 4 inches of rain Monday evening on soaked ground in the county and the closing of State Highway 163 between Comstock and Ozona.

Throughout much of the Hill Country and South Central Texas flash flood watches remain in effect through today, according to weather reports.

Meanwhile, in Southwest Texas, flash-flood warnings expired early this morning following reported severe weather in the Big Bend region that caused the evacuation of campers from a section of the park and damage to a nearby restaurant.

A campground with two parties near Costolon at the west end of the park was safely evacuated early today because of water up to 20 feet in height that washed out and flooded roads, according to Jim Lyles, chief ranger at Big Bend National Park.

"The road to Costolon was washed out," Lyles said. "Sixty percent of the road was severely damaged."

Also what was described in wire reports as a "near tornado" blew the roof off a restaurant located about 30 miles north of the park. Lyles said he believed serious damage damage from the winds was limited to the road between Presidio and Study Butte.

Closer to the South Plains, flash flood watches remain in effect through today for the eastern halves of the Big Country and Concho Valley.

The NWS in Abilene reported flooding early today at the Lake Stamford area although official rainfall in Abilene at 7 a.m. measured a scant .13 of an inch. At San Angelo the second highest total in the state — .90 of an inch of rain — was recorded.

NWS measured rainfall at the Lubbock Airport at 7 a.m. today was .29 of an inch, considerably less than the amount recorded at sites in the city.

City fire stations at 9 a.m. today reported .90 of an inch at the 4800 block of 50th Street; .70 of an inch at both the 2200 block of 50th Street and 17th Street and Utica Avenue; and .50 of an inch at both 30th Street and Texxas Avenue and E. 10th Street and Zenith Avenue.

The drizzle and overcast skies that cast gloom over Lubbock this morning should begin to clear soon, a NWS spokesman in the city said.

In addition, temperatures are expected to warm slightly Wednesday, with a high in the mid 80s forecast. Temperatures today were forecast to reach near 80 degrees.

By the weekend, however, a chance of thunderstorms over the South Plains is expected to again be a part of the forecast as an upper level pressure system continues to approach Northwest Texas from the west.

Temperatures over the weekend are expected to peak in the 80s and cool to the 60s.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms along with mostly cloudy skies were forecast for much of the rest of the state today.

Phone Officials Get New Posts

Southwestern Bell announced today that three Lubbock division heads will relocate as part of a nationwide Bell System reorganization.

Bob Dunbar, division manager-business office, will become division manager-business service center in San Antonio and will be responsible for business accounts throughout South, Central and West Texas, Bell officials said.

Bob Cooper, division manager-operator services will transfer to Houston, where he will carry the same title and similar duties for that area.

Charles Lee, division manager-installation and repair, has accepted the position of division manager-residence services in Austin. Lee will have charge of residence installation and repair for West and Central Texas.

The company will announce soon a new division level position in Lubbock, responsible for outside plant engineering, construction and assignment activities throughout West Texas.

The moves will not result in layoffs, Bell officials said. A few employees on division staffs will relocate, they said.

With Dunbar's departure, Bob McNamara, district manager-business office, will have principal responsibility for the company's customer relations activities in the Lubbock area.

"The company is restructuring along market lines to meet the demands of growing competition and change in the telecommunications business," Dunbar said.

"We will have three major departments — business, residence and network," Dunbar said. "Our management responsibilities will fall into one of those categories."

Dunbar has been active in the community since assuming the division manager-business office in Lubbock four years ago. He currently holds posts with the chamber of commerce, Rotary Club, Boy Scouts, museum association, and several others.

Cooper served as president of the YMCA in 1978 and is currently active in the Southwest Rotary Club, First Presbyterian Church, Lubbock Theater Center and Lubbock OIC. In 1977 he received the OIC's Outstanding Citizen Award.

Lee served as president of the Downtown American Businessmen's Club in 1977 and rodeo chairman in 1978, is past president of the Citizen's Traffic Commission and currently serves on the Boys Club board of governors.

Officials Audit Local Station

unused profit margin, the spokesman said.

Mars Oil Co. operates service stations in many parts of the country, including Missouri, California, Colorado and Utah, but owns only the two stations in Texas.

According to reports, the company is charging 99.9 cents a gallon across-the-board at all their self-service outlets, which prompted the DOE to perform a full audit of the company.

The station attendant at the Mars Service Station in Odessa, located at 3722 Andrews Highway, said she has lost business steadily since the prices started spiraling three months ago.

"We have the highest prices in town," she said, adding she didn't think it was right charging 99.9 cents a gallon for all grades.

She said the company ordered her to lay off the extra help and restrict operating hours to 7 a.m. to 3 p. m. five days a week.

"I don't know what they (the company) are trying to do. Our station has a good location and we used to do a lot of business before our prices went higher than everybody else's."

She said one day last week she sold only $100 worth of gas.

Jim Dowd, vice president for Mars Oil Co. in St. Louis, said the pump prices in Lubbock "accurately reflected" the price his company is charging. However he refused to comment why the firm is apparently pricing itself out of the local market.

Wayne Tucker, district manager for the Southwest section of the country for the DOE's Office of Enforcement in Dallas, said the pump prices at the Mars stations in Texas is the highest he's heard of in the state, adding that price is 10 to 15 cents higher than in most major Texas cities.

Bob Cecil, who is handling all possible price gouging violations for the DOE in Washington, said the number of stations audited by the DOE in Texas is relatively low compared to other parts of the country.

Of the 80 gasoline stations in Texas which have been audited from Feb. 15 to May 25 of this year, only 24 of them were cited as violating the federal price restrictions, Cecil said.

He said Texas cities where stations have been audited include Dallas, FortWorth, Houston, San Antonio, Corpus Christi and Wichita Falls.

By comparison, Cecil said, out of the 382 stations that have been audited in that same period in Los Angeles, 305 were cited for price ceiling violations.

The DOE has set up a hotline in Washington to handle complaints of stations that are possibly violating the federal guidelines. Cecil said they have received more than 16,500 calls since the hotline's inception in early January. That number is 800-424-9246.

FEW ACCIDENTS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fewer accidental deaths occur in February than in any other month of the year, according to the American Council of Life Insurance. The council says "latest government statistics show that February usually records some 7,400 accidental deaths while July records more than 10,000 deaths, the most of any month."

Tax Hike Faces Hot Fight Here

County commissioners can expect a fight from the Lubbock Property Owners Association if they agree to raise taxes to bail out financially troubled Health Sciences Center Hospital.

LPOA Chairman Bob Green said this morning his group would undoubtedly fight any tax increase aimed at helping the teaching hospital, which is administered by the Lubbock County Hospital District. Board members for the hospital district were scheduled to appear before the commissioners this afternoon to ask for that help.

Of the options discussed by hospital district board members, the commissioners could vote an increase on their own, turn it down completely or send it to county residents for a vote.

"You can anticipate some activity from our group no matter what the situation is," Green said.

"We are against it," he stressed.

The proposal to raise taxes, Green said, "is indicative of their complete and utter disregard for the taxpayer."

Green took a jab at the hospital's growing number of uncollected bills, saying "It would be nice if we all had $7 million to squander."

Green said that "like any other business," if the hospital keeps losing money at its present rate, the best solution to the problem might be to close it.

Hospital district officials predict that without an increase in tax revenues — and soon — the hospital will run out of cash in September.

Hospital as an interim teaching facility at the rate of about $52,000 annually when the school first opened, but a survey of Tech medical students indicated they were not happy with the arrangement.

The cost of graduating medical students here was a concern during debate on the extra funding, he said, adding, "The word on the Senate floor was that it costs twice as much as any other medical school in Texas."

Short said state legislators probably would want Health Sciences Center to be under state control with a different administration if they saved it with state money.

"If they have invested $50 million in it, I can't see them letting it close down," he said.

Short, a former state representative from Tahoka finishing his first legislative session as a senator, stopped in Idalou before conducting similar meetings at Lorenzo, Ralls and Crosbyton.

On Wednesday, Short will conduct similar meetings elsewhere in the area. At 9 a.m. he will be at the school superintendent's office in Whiteface, at noon at the Lions Club in Morton, and at 1:30 p.m. at the school superintendent's office in Bledsoe.

LOWER AIR FARES

WASHINGTON (AP) — A tenative agreement between the United States and Singapore should lead to lower air fares to the Pacific, the Transportation Department says. "As a result of this aviation agreement ... the prospects for competive new low fare air service to and from the Pacific have been increased dramatically," said Linda Heller Kamm, general counsel of the Treasury Department on Saturday.

Bell Agrees To Return Deposits

AUSTIN (AP) — Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. has agreed to return deposits to divorced, widowed or separated women who applied for service in the past 3½ years, under a class action suit settlement.

Dale Johnson, Bell public information officer in Dallas, said today legal notices of the settlement will be included in customers' June bills.

The settlement affects divorced, separated or widowed women who applied for telephone service between Oct. 28, 1975, and March 15, 1979. The women paid varying deposits or provided letters of guaranty from a third party.

Two Austin women, Linda Black and Marjorie Theberge, sued the telephone company in 1977 in federal district court.

The women charged the company with violation of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act by ignoring the credit history of accounts listed under names of a woman's husband or former husband.

"Linda Black never existed because I had been listed under my husband's name, so I had to put up a deposit for my phone after living in Austin for 15 years," said Mrs. Black, who was divorced in 1976.

Airline Will Plead Guilty To Charge

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government and an American company that outfits and sells aircraft have settled charges that the airline failed to report sending money to Uganda. The airline will plead guilty to the charge and the government won't seek criminal indictments.

The government said Monday it wouldn't seek the indictments against officers of Page Airways in return for the firm's pleading guilty to failing to report that it sent $46,647 to Uganda. Page agreed to pay the government $52,647, including $6,000 for criminal fines. The rest is settlement for all civil claims the government might have under the Currency and Foreign Transactions Reporting Act.

Organizations Hope To Improve Prenatal Care

By TOM GRIESS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

More than 45 percent of the deaths of Lubbock infants less than one year of age from 1973 through 1977 were attributable to premature birth, according to City Health Department statistics.

And according to one local medical specialist, 50 percent or more of those premature births could probably have been prevented with "adequate prenatal care."

This assessment by Dr. Stefan Semchyshyn, a perinatologist (high risk pregnancy specialist) at Lubbock County Halth Sciences Center Hospital, reflects a hope for the future shared by area health care organizations seeking to combat the county's historically high infant mortality rate, which soared from 15 per 1000 live births in 1976 to 20.3 in 1977.

Yet while improved and expanded prenatal services may promise fewer premature births in the future, a stumbling block of another kind appears to have no easy solution.

Second In A Series

Teenage pregnancy — a prime source of premature births — may be as prevalent now as ever in the past.

"What we're seeing now is a real increase in adolescent pregnancies," Paul Blackwell, the health department medical programs coordinator, said in early May. "There seems to be an attitude now among many adolescents that requires you to be a mother to be accepted."

Data compiled by the Texas Department of Health tends to substantiate this assessment. During the three-year period 1975 to 1977 in Lubbock County, of every 1,000 live births, 220 were born to mothers less than 20 years of age. The statewide average during the same period was 209.

Enrollment figures at the New Directions program of the Lubbock Independent School District show teenage pregnancy in the Lubbock area to have been a relatively stable problem in recent years.

The program, which offers separate educational facilities for junior high and senior high pregnant girls until the next school quarter after the birth dates, had matriculated 132 girls through mid-March of the 1978-79 academic year, according to Dorothy Phea, director of New Directions.

In the 1977-78 school year 147 girls attended New Directions; 155 attended in 1976-77; and 137 attended in 1975-76, according to Mrs. Phea.

She said 17-and 18-year-olds "are where we have the highest percentage" and added: "I'm sure we're not getting all the pregnant girls in Lubbock.:'

There are various explanations for the high susceptibility of teenage females to premature birth.

The physical immaturity of the teenager is not one of them, however, according to Dr. Michael Blackburn, director of the division of neonatology at the Texas Tech University School of Medicine and a specialist in the care of the high risk infant.

He said the maturity of the woman is a bigger factor — if she cares enough about the baby to take proper care of herself during her pregnancy.

Even for the teenager who desperately cares about the health of her future child, there is much that usually must be learned and sometimes there is insufficient money to provide the recommended diet and rest.

Peggy Rego, a home economics and health teacher at New Directions, said most of the girls enrolled in the program initially do not know much about their bodies or the precautions to be followed during pregnancy.

"They always say they have learned plenty after the prenatal sessions (at the school)," she said.

Dr. Norma Porres, a Lubbock family practitioner and a long-time member of the Lubbock-Crosby-Garza County Medical Society, blames much of the teenage ignorance on the school system.

"Most sex education is given by their own peers," she said recently. "They're not really taught responsible sexual habits. They ought to have sexual education beginning in junior high. They need to learn about the responsibility."

Lack of money is not a problem confined to teenagers alone, and among the lower strata of society, cheap diets with low nutrition levels are prevalent.

But among teen-age women in particular, Dr. Semchyshyn explained, poor nutrition contributes to toxemia — an affliction marked by high blood pressure and swelling that can cause convulsions and usually results in premature birth.

Women of all ages suffer premature births, and women over 40 are also common victims of toxemia, according to Dr. Semchyshyn.

He stressed that any acute illness can prompt premature birth and also said a defective cervix, which "may be more common now because abortions are more common," can do the same.

Low birth weight is the primary threat to the life of the premature baby, as noted in recently released findings of the Health Sciences Center neonatal intensive care unit.

According to the statistics, which measure the ICU operating results from Feb. 1, 1978, to Jan. 31, 1979, no infants weighing less than 1.6 pounds at birth survived; 50 percent of the infants weighing between 1.6 pounds and 2.2 pounds survived; about 75 percent of the infants weighing between 2.2 pounds and 3.8 pounds survived; and more than 95 percent of the infants weighing between 3.8 pounds and 5.5 pounds survived.

The longer the baby lives and the more weight he gains, the greater his chances of survival.

"Most of them that live to be a month old should live," said Dr. Marjorie Orr, director of Lubbock's city health department.

What constitutes adequate prenatal care varies with each pregnant woman, as it varies for first-time teenage girls and women in their 20s who are already mothers. But local health care authorities agree that it should include early and regular medical exeaminations and consultations, nutrition education and counseling to prepare for birth and subsequent care for the baby.

Support for the argument that inadequate prenatal care has been a major cause of the county's high infant mortality rates is provided by TDH statistics for the three-year period ending in 1977.

The figures show that for every 1,000 live births, an average of 38 women had received no prenatal care and 56 women had received care only in the third trimester of pregnancy. The statewide averages during the same period showed 36 women receiving no prenatal care and 54 receiving help only in the last third of pregnancy.

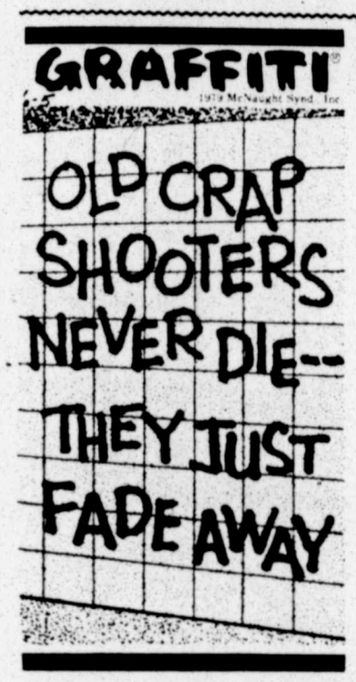

Further proof of the importance of prenatal care — and the information it provides health officials about the woman and the pregnancy — is supplied by Dr. Semchyshyn.

Working in close cooperation with the ICU, which must be prepared to care for an endangered baby immediately upon birth, Dr. Semchyshyn said that with knowledge of the pregnancy from 8 to 10 weeks after inception until the onset of labor, he can predict with about 65 percent accuracy any problems with the birth.

Without knowledge of the pregnancy but upon examination during labor, he said he could predict with about 75 percent accuracy problems with birth.

But equipped with knowledge of both the pregnancy and the labor, Dr. Semchyshyn said he could with about 85 percent accuracy advise the ICU of problems to be expected with birth.

LISD Officials Question Agency Need

By LISA PAIKOWSKI
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The proposal for a separate federal Department of Education is an invitation for increased federal bureaucracy and decreased local controls according to Lubbock school administrators.

The bill to create the 13th cabinet-level agency barely passed the House Government Operations Committee and will go to the House floor on Wednesday. A similar measure already has passed in the Senate.

The bill would transfer education programs administered by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to a separate department.

Several programs, however, such as Head Start, child nutrition and education for Indians and veterans, would remain scattered throughout other departments.

Critics see the department as an encroachment upon the terrain of local school entities and as a costly escalation of bureaucracy.

Proponents say the department would better coordinate educational responsibilities and would give education the recognition and emphasis it has been lacking.

The arguments against such a department are on the minds of some local administrators and most school board members.

"I don't see the need for a separate department," said Ed Irons, superintendent of public schools. "It would emphasize or enlarge government's role in public education."

Irons suggested that programs not under the umbrella of HEW could be brought under that department "to streamline their organization" so that education programs could be centralized and improved without creating a separate department.

Dr. E.C. Leslie, assistant superintendent for administration, said he sees both the pros and cons of the proposal, but has some doubts as to whether the department would benefit education.

He said he would favor the proposal if the creation of a department of education would remove some of the regulatory requirements imposed by HEW.

Dr. Leslie said "another positive side" of the department is "if it would be a step toward general financial support by the federal government rather than categorical support."

He explained that along with federal money, school districts are told how and where to spend that money. He said he would be in favor of the department if the government "gave us x amount of dollars and let the school board determine how the money is best spent for the Lubbock Independent School District."

But, he added, "I have my doubts that that's what will happen."

He said that leaving some education programs where they are "makes me doubt that a department of education would be created with the principal interest of getting money to people who need education."

Other administrators throughout the state apparently share the skepticism of Lubbock's school administrators.

Dr. Charles Matthews, executive director of the Texas Association of School Administrators, said its parent national organization, the National Association of School Administrators, officially endorses the department.

"But in Texas we have some reservations," he said. "We're lukewarm. It could give certain elements of the educational arena undue influence."

He said the department could create "more bureaucracy" and said that it "would probably give NEA (National Education Association) too much influence."

NEA endorses the creation of a separate education department, as does its local organization, the Lubbock Educators Association.

Newly elected LEA president Glenna Lane said "We feel the department is a good thing because we feel education needs to have a more important position than just as part of health and welfare.

"A separate department would cut down on some local bureaucracy with one department focusing on one area only and not branching out in other areas," she continued.

Local school board members who spoke to The Avalanche-Journal, however, are solidly opposed to the proposal for a separate department.

Trustee Giles M. "Buddy" Forbess predicted the budget for education could triple with the creation of such a department. "So many people think more programs make smarter students," he said. "I don't know that we need more money. We need more parents with an interest in education."

Said board vice president Montie Hasie, "My basic philosophy is that people in this country are depending too much on the government to solve their problems."

Board president Charles Waters said that the National Association of School Boards had endorsed the bill, but that he is opposed.

He speculated that the NASB backs the measure because it feels that "education is not being fully recognized by Congress. Congress is not assuming responsibility for education."

He said he thinks the bill will pass the House, but said he is concerned about increased federal control. "I would rather forego the federal money and maintain local control," said Waters.

Trustees Harold Harriger, Jose Ramirez and Brad Crawford Jr. also oppose the bill.

"The bottom line is that it will ultimately cost more to administer" programs under a separate education department, said Harriger.

Hance said his own decision on the bill is contingent upon the various amendments that will be brought up on the floor.

He said that we would not vote for the measure if through debate and amendments the department would appear "to increase the number of employees and amount of federal intervention in local educational matters."

But he said he would support the bill if a separate department "would cut down on bureaucracy and make federal education more responsive to local interest."

Hance said he will introduce his own amendment that would require the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to lose one employee for each employee the Education Department would acquire.

Hospital Seeks Tax Increase To Head Off Financial Crisis

By KIM COBB
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Directors of Lubbock County's fledgling teaching hospital, prepared "to get some heat," werecscheduled to ask county commissioners today for a tax increase to keep the facility's doors open.

A re-examination of an audit report by Lubbock County Hospital District board members Monday failed to provide answers for the myriad of financial problems at Health Sciences Center Hospital.

With the hospital in its second year of operation, staff members predict that the teaching facility for the Texas Tech School of Medicine will go in the red around September, with or without the cost-cutting measures which have been put into effect in recent months.

The hospital's bill collection rate has not reached the expected level and the amount owed the hospital for patient services is around $7 million, including those debts written off as "uncollectable." Executive director Gerald Bosworth has said repeatedly that area physicians have not given full support to the new hospital and state aid for teaching needs has not materialized.

Listing those problems as insurmountable at the present time, LCHD board members were to meet today at 1:30 p.m. in Commissioners Court to outline their bid for more county funds.

LCHD attorney Charles Galey explained the county can take two routes in raising more tax revenue for the hospital district, which currently receives 75 cents per $100 at a valuation of 40 percent:

— The commissioners could increase the county-wide assessed value from the current 40 percent level to around 60 or 70 percent.

— Or the Board of Equalization could continue assessing the county at 40 percent, while raising the hospital district property assessments to a higher level. This would require voter approval.

Bosworth said that getting the funds needed to run the hospital will mean "not less than doubling" current revenue from taxes. He said administrators and hospital staff are already cutting costs. However, that action also is reducing the hospital's capabilities as a teaching facility.

Board member Don McInturff expressed his discomfort at asking for more tax money in light of problems the hospital has faced in managing its billing department.

"I'll say I'm embarrassed to go, as a member of the board. This doesn't indicate good stewardship of the taxpayers' money," McInturff said.

"We better be prepared to get some heat," he added.

But asking for a tax increase is a "have to" situation, according to board chairman Jack Strong. Without additional tax revenue, he said, "The last one out can close the front door" of the hospital sometime next year.

The accounting firm of Pratas, Smith and Moore detailed its audit of the year ending Dec. 31, 1978, during Monday's work session. But the audit report revealed little which had not been discussed previously.

Accountant Wendell Moore said the report did not necessarily say anything new about the hospital's financial status, adding that some of the suggestions they made to smooth operations have already been adopted.

Moore's associate Randy Wright outlined 23 specific suggestions made by the firm to make the hospital's accounting procedures more efficient. The most common suggestion from the lengthy list was to "reconcile" records of business transactions with actual dealings more often than had been in the past.

For example, Wright suggested that bank statements be reconciled once a month instead of twice a year.

Bosworth reacted sharply to board member McInturff's questioning as to why certain procedures hadn't been reconciled more often, saying such procedures should have been followed and he didn't know why they hadn't.

Bosworth added that associate director for finances Bill Stinnett would have a written reply to all suggestions and questions brought up in the audit. Stinnet was ill and did not attend Monday's meeting.

"Timeliness" of bill processing also was mentioned by the auditors as a point of concern in hospital business dealings. Bosworth countered, saying the auditor's remarks were acceptable as of Dec. 31, 1978, implying the slowdown in billings is no longer a problem.

In other business, the board voted to direct outpatient bills for amounts under $100 directly to the patient, to avoid the paperwork involved with direct billing to an insurance company. This will not eliminate direct insurance company billing for outpatient services under $100, but would require the patient to pay a $5 fee if the service is requested.

Governor Approves Bill Reforming Property Tax

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Parts of the tax relief program that was overwhelmingly approved by voters last November have gone into effect, the governor's office said Monday.

Gov. Bill Clements' office said he signed into law a bill that puts into effect the Tax Relief Amendment last Thursday without any ceremony or special announcement.

The action was the climax of a process that began last summer when Gov. Dolph Briscoe called a special session of the Texas Legislature to cut property taxes shortly after California voters approved Proposition 13. The constitutional amendment passed by that special session, and later approved by voters, authorized the 1979 Legislature to enact the so-called tax relief bill (HB1060).

The compromise bill worked out by a 10-member conference committee was finally approved by the Senate and House the last night of the 140-day regular session on May 28.

Immediate provisions of the bill include one that exempts each residence homestead from $5,000 in school district taxes. Since the act is retroactive to Jan. 1979, the exemptions will be on the 1979 tax notices that most taxpayers receive in October. In addition, those over 65 and those disabled will be eligible for another $10,000 exemption in school taxes on their homesteads.

Also effective immediately is the exemption from property taxes, state, county and school, of all non-business cars owned by a family. However, if a city council or school board acts by this Dec. 31 it can re-instate the automobile taxes, now levied in several Texas cities.

Lawyers Screen Jurors In Sex-Murder Retrial

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Three prospective jurors have been seated in the retrial of Elmer Wayne Henley, 23, accused of participating in a two-year spree of sex torture and death.

The beginning of the trial was delayed 1½ hours Monday when defense attorneys who thought the defendant looked too shaggy for court sent him to the jail barber. Henley reappeared with a short haircut and without his mustache.

The three prospective jurors were chosen from nine who were questioned during Monday's opening session. After 32 prospective jurors have been seated, attorneys for each side will be allowed to strike 10, leaving a jury of 12.

The case was move to this South Texas coastal town after a new trial was ordered by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

Henley was charged for his involvement with Dean Corll, a 33-year-old power company worker who allegedly sexually abused, tortured and killed more than two dozen youths.

In August 1973, Henley called police to tell them he had shot and killed Corll. The death was ruled self-defense but Henley later led investigators to the bodies of 27 youths buried in shallow graves.

New Clinic Gives Hope To Spinal Injury Victims

By NANCI C. ALBRITTON

ATLANTA (UPI) — James Shepherd was a devil-may-care, new college graduate on a backpacking and bodysurfing holiday along the coasts of Africa and South America that June six years ago.

"I hit the bottom and felt myself being dragged in the sand," he recalled. Thinking he had only broken his arm, he desperately tried to push himself free of the strong undertow to get air. He didn't yet know his legs were useless.

"It didn't dawn on me what had happened," he said. "I couldn't hold my breath any more." Gulping mouthfuls of murky ocean water, he slipped into a peaceful unconsciousness.

More dead than alive, Shepherd's body was fished from the surf by a lifeguard. He was given mouth-to-mouth resuscitation on the Rio beach.

Shepherd lived but was completely paralyzed.

"He could only blink his eyes or click his tongue," said Alana Shepherd, his mother. She and her husband Harold, a successful road contractor, rushed to Rio within hours.

Lying semi-conscious in a Brazilian hospital, her son was to wrestle death for weeks. His lungs burned with pseudomonas, an infection from polluted water, and he slipped into respiratory arrest.

Mrs. Shepherd rigged a crude communications board so James could at least blink "yes" or "no" when she pointed to such words as "hungry" or "thirsty." After five weeks, a U.S. Air Force Medevac C-141 made a mercy flight at the Shepherds' expense to bring James from Rio to Atlanta.

"For three months his life was in question," Mrs. Shepherd said. But slowly, he began to recover at a private hospital and began a limited therapy program.

"When I left," Shepherd said, "one of the specialists said it was a shame that I would be confined to bed or a wheelchair for the rest of my life."

A family friend, a World War II paraplegic, encouraged young Shepherd to enter the renowned Craig Rehabilitation Center in Denver, one of the nation's few spinal cord injury treatment centers.

"I decided I was going to be able to walk," he said. "There was no reason that what they were telling me was right. My folks wanted to believe that, too."

An occupational therapist, Cathy Cox, met James at Craig and started him on an intense regimen to help him regain as much use of his limbs as his injury allowed.

"She assigned me one of her students for therapy," James said. He and Cathy became "basically just friends. We would go out to dinner or to a movie, that kind of stuff."

Almost five months later, Shepherd's response to the Craig-Cox combination was stunning. He walked out, He used a cane, but he walked.

"The doctor said I should get a wheelchair," he said. "I figured if I had it, I would use it, and I didn't want to use it.

He and his parents decided in Denver that the Southeast desperately needed a medical center to focus on the needs of the spinal cord injured and their rapid rehabilitation.

"It was just a crime that we had to go two-thirds of the way across the United States to get this kind of care," Mrs. Shepherd said.

Miss Cox was there when it opened in August 1975.

"I had to tell her she'd be in charge to get her to come here," Shepherd said. Less than two years later, they were married.

He admitted being married to a therapist has its pluses. But he laughed, "I have trouble now getting a good back rub."

Shepherd, who walks with only a slight limp, is now actively involved in the family road construction business and has served on numerous boards representing the disabled, including the White House conference for handicapped individuals.

He emphasizes that his apparently miraculous recovery was not a miracle at all, that his degree of recovery was decided the second his vertebra snapped off that Rio shore. He doesn't want to give false hope to others.

"Mine was a very fortunate back break," he said. "There is not anything we can do, or anyone in the country can do, to restore functions lost at the time of an accident."

But the non-profit, completely privately funded Shepherd center offers accident victims and other spinal cord injury victims rapid rehabilitation.

Decision Goes To Horner

ATLANTA (AP) — Bob Horner said he was happy, but the strain in his baby face told another story.

The 21-year-old blond bomber repeated over and over that he had won — that he happy about Monday's ruling by an arbitrator which denyied his request for free agency but told the Atlanta Braves to pay him about $146,000 for 1979.

Horner's eyes, however, gave him away as he discussed the six turbulent months of anticipation in the arbitration case.

Finally, he put it all into perspective when asked how he really felt about the decision.

"I'm happy, relieved, upset and miserable all at once," said last year's National League Rookie of the Year.

"I don't know. I'll just pick up the pieces and go from here. You don't plan on this (arbitration) happening. You hope it doesn't happen but if the cards fell exactly the same way, I wouldn't change a thing. I'd do it 100 times the same way," he sid.

Although both sides were claiming victory, it appears that the Braves were the big winers.

Atlanta lost some money, but retained their No. 1 draft choice of a year ago. Horner belted 23 home runs, drove in 63 runs and batted .266 in only 89 games.

Arbitrator Raymond Goetz' decision was disclosed in a draft opinion distributed to Major League Baseball Player Relations Committee and to the Major League Players Association, which had argued the merits of the case before Goetz, a University of Kansas law professor, last month.

There is no appeal for the decision.

Ironically, baseball's free agent draft of high school players and college players will be held today. It was in that draft that Horner was plucked from Arizona State a year ago.

Problems arose when it came time to sign Horner for 1979. The Braves negotiated on the basis of his $21,000 rookie salary, but Horner and his agent, Bucky Woy, argued that his 1979 salary should include all of his 1978 compensation, including signing and other bonuses, which totaled about $181,000.

Under major league rules, a player's compensation can only be cut 20 percent and Woy argued that Horner had to be offered at least $146,000 for 1979. The Braves refused, claiming bonuses were a one-time payment, and offered Horner $100,000 for 1979.

Horner held out and claimed he should be declared a free agent because the club had not offered a valid contract by a deadline date.

Goetz' decision is important because of the effect it will have on negotiations with top amateurs drafted this week.

"It's going to be tough on those kids signing out of college and high school," said Horner. "But I really don't know what's gong to happen. I just felt like I did what I had to do. I'd never do anything to make a gradstand play."

John Mullen, the Braves' general manager, also did not know what affect it would have on signing players from the draft.

"I think all the major league clubs will be scratching their heads wondering what effect it will have. I'm surprised at the ruling. In effect, I would say that any player who signs a major league contract will just get a salary. There would be no point in giving a bonus any more," he said.

"Obviously it's going to cost baseball money. I'm sure the decision is going to shake up a lot of people in the game," said Mullen.

He called the decision "a hollow victory," but added that it would change the way teams hand out bonuses. "There will be a lot of teams looking at signing bonuses differently than they did in the past," Woy said from his Dallas office.

He said Horner could "easily have gotten $1.2 million to $1.5 million for three years" if he had been declared a free agent.

"There was no tampering, but we got phone calls from half a dozen people who were in a position to know," Woy said. "If we had been declared a free agent, I would guess that at least two dozen ball clubs would have been in the bidding."

Horner said he was just glad "the thing is over with. What we were fighting for was upheld. We fought for what we thought was right and that's exactly what the arbitrator ruled."

He said he would live with the decision and "go from there."

Q. Why do the Pittsburgh Steelers wear their logo decal on only one side of their helmets?

—W.W., Richardson

A. The Steelers' standard answer is that their equipment man assigned to replace the decals, Jack Hart, is too lazy to bother with both sides. But there's more to it than that.

The four-cornered stars, in engineering terms a hyper-cycloid, were once the logo of the U.S. Steel Corp. It's the standard engineer's mark for steel. When the Iron and Steel Institute took over the logo, it asked the Steelers to use it on their helmets. They did, in 1962.

"We didn't know how long we'd be using it," says Steeler executive Ed Kiely. "We were afraid the steelworkers union would want their logo on the other side and pretty soon we'd be looking like a steamer trunk coming back from Europe. Now we get about three calls or letters a week wanting to know why only one side, so it's become something unique to the Steelers. Anyway, we always blame Jack Hart."

Q. When Bill Walton had a press conference about signing with San Diego, he said his second ambition was to get Brent Musberger to stop using innocuous nicknames like "Mountain Man," "The California Dreamer," "The Franchise" and "The Greyhound." Who are all these people?

—Connie Rentali, Dover, Del.

A. The first two are used by the CBS announcer to refer to Walton. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar is "The Franchise" and Walter Davis of Phoenix is "The Greyhound." Musberger loves that sort of thing. Immediately after the press conference he came on and hung another one on Walton: "Million-Dollar Bill." Not bad, as it's better than Six-Million-Dollar Man, the sum of Walter's contract with the Clippers.

IN THERE!— Kurt Kingsolver of Cal-State Fullerton scores under Arizonacatcher Dave Fortman while umpire Randy Christal signals him safe after a play at home plate. (AP Laserphoto)

Pepperdine, Fullerton Join Texas, Arkansas

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — It was bound to happen sometime.

Sooner or later, the potent bats of Fullerton State had to explode at the College World Series and they did just that Monday night.

The victim was Arizona, which was sent home reeling under a 17-hit onslaught that produced a 16-3 Fullerton victory, keeping the Titans alive in the double-elimination tournament.

Fullerton, rated third nationally, came into the series with a .330 team batting average, but the Titans struggled at the plate in their first two games, losing to Mississippi State 6-1 and beating Connecticut 8-3.

Monday night was a different story however, as Tim Wallach blasted a three-run homer and Sam Favata rapped four hits to lead the barrage against three Arizona pitchers.

"This has happened to us before, but Augie (Coach Augie Garrido) always gets us going again," said catcher Kurt Kingsolver, who provided a big spark by stealing home in a five-run eighth inning.

"We figure if we just keep playing our game, we'll win. If we play our game, I don't think anybody in the country can beat us."

Garrido said the Titans regained their hitting touch because of a change in thinking.

"The big difference was the adjustment we made with our hitters," he said. "As opposed to trying to hit the ball out, we just tried to make contact."

Another California team won the nightcap Monday. Eighth-rated Pepperdine eliminated No. 4 Mississippi State 5-4 in 10 innings in the best played game of the series to date.

That action left an unusual situation. For the first time in the 33-year history of the series, the four finalists are from only two leagues — Fullerton and Pepperdine of the Southern California Baseball Association and Texas and Arkansas of the Southwest Conference.

Top-rated Texas (55-6) and No. 7 Arkansas (48-13), both unbeaten in the series, meet tonight. Regardless of who wins that game, Wednesday night's schedule will be Texas against Pepperdine (52-17) and Arkansas vs. Fullerton (57-14).

Texas Coach Cliff Gustafson summed that contest up well, "You have to wonder if anybody will want to get ahead."

He had good reason to feel that way. Both teams fell behind in their first two games of the series, but rallied to win, leaving them the only undefeated entries in the tournament.

That makes tonight's game crucial because the winner will have a big edge in the drive for the title.

"We don't worry when we get behind," Arkansas pitcher Steve Krueger said. "Our (the pitchers') job is to hold the other team down because we know our hitters will come back."

Krueger and his teammates have been looking forward to playing Texas ever since both teams qualified for the series. Texas beat Arkansas four times in five games this year, including twice in the Southwest Conference playoffs.

Krueger worked the final eight innings of Arkansas' 5-4 victory over Pepperdine in the first round of the series Friday night. Afterwards, he was asked how soon he could pitch again.

"I could probably come back Tuesday," he said. "But if it was Texas I'd pitch tomorrow. I'dbe ready to play them anytime."

Catcher Ronn Reynolds shares Krueger's eagerness. Following a 10-3 victory over Arizona Sunday night, Reynolds was asked which team he'd prefer to play in the third round — Texas or Mississippi State.

"Texas," he said without hesitation. "They're a conference school, they beat us this year, we'd really like to see them again."

Texas came through with an 8-2 victory over MSU and Reynolds' wish was granted. Texas, the nation's top-rated team and the SWC champion, is 55-6. Arkansas, rated fourth and the conference runner-up, is 48-13.

Arizona (43-25) led 2-0 at one point Monday night, but Fullerton tied it in the fourth inning and went ahead in the fifth when Wallach slugged his 23rd home run ofthe season, a towering shot over the right fence.

The Titans poured it on after that, with Kingsolver's theft of home the first of 10 runs in the final two innings.

"I stole home on my own," he said. "The pitcher didn't look at me the first time, so I took off. I ran home yelling 'Kill.' That's our sign for stealing home."

"He (losing pitcher Ken Kurtz) threw me a fastball, then a couple of breaking balls," Lais said, describing the 10th inning situation, "so I was looking for a fastball on the 3-2 count. He threw one and I stroked it to right."

"I threw everything I had — curve, fastball, slider, changeup," Elser said. "I like playing in front of big crowd like this. I makes me sharper."

The loss of Mississippi State takes away the loudest cheering section of the tournament. About 500 MSU fans made the trip here from all over the country.

Orioles Win To Maintain AL-East Lead

By The Associated Press

Consider, if you will, Mike Marshall's dilemma in the bottom of the 10th inning Monday night. The Minnesota Twins reliever had Baltimore runners on second and third with two out and Lee May at the plate.

He could, of course, walk him intentionally, not a bad idea considering the fact that May has averaged 98 runs batted in during his last decade in the majors.

But Twins Manager Gene Mauch recommended Marshall pitch to May — carefully.

Marshall did — but not carefully enough. May hit a single to left field, Baltimore had a 3-2 victory and the Orioles remained one game ahead of Boston in the American League East.

"May was never supposed to see a strike," Mauch muttered after the Twins fell two games behind first-place California in the West. "If he wanted to get himself out, fine!"

But Marshall, 8-5, said it wasn't his fault that his slider wound up over the plate instead of on the edge, and that May wound up with his second run batted in of the game and 34th of the season — and with his ninth game-winning hit, tops in the league.

"There's no such thing as a bad pitch," Marshall said. "You can't throw exactly where you want every time. You just throw the best you can. There's nobody in the league I don't go after."

May said he was surprised the Minnesota manager didn't give him an intentional pass to first base. "Mauch and I have gone at each other for 10 or 11 years and he doesn't like me to beat him. I never thought they'd pitch to me with a base open.

Red Sox 13, Rangers 5

For Boston, almost every pitch in the fifth inning must have looked like a watermelon. The Red Sox sent 13 men to the plate in Fenway Park and eight of them across it in their rout of the Rangers.

"You get them in this park and they are a completely different team," Texas catcher Jim Sundberg said. "They are so much more aggressive here, they are tough to stop." Last week in Texas, Boston managed only seven runs in three games, losing two of them.

"We've got a team that goes into a slump together and comes out of it together," said Jim Rice, who had a double, a triple and a homer that triggered the eight-run explosion.

Rice and Yaz drove in three runs apiece. "It seemed everything happened for us tonight," Boston Manager Don Zimmer said.

Angels 4, Blue Jays 2

Dan Ford's tie-breaking triple in a two-run sixth inning helped the Angels turn back Toronto and move back into first place by one game over the Rangers.

Bert Campaneris opened the sixth with an infield single and came home on Ford's one-out triple to center field. Don Baylor then singled Ford home to boost his league leading RBI total to 55 in 54 games.

Yankees 8, Royals 3

Tommy John of the Yankees scattered six Royals hits and rode a seven-run sixth inning to his 10th win of the season, tops in the majors.

Willie Randolph tripled with the bases loaded for the big hit in the inning. Chris Chambliss had three doubles for New York.

Brewers 6, White Sox 0

Milwaukee's Ben Oglivie hit the first grand-slam homer of his career in the first inning and Mike Caldwell made the runs stand up with an eight hitter against the White Sox.

It was Caldwell's third shutout and ninth complete games. Sixto Lezcano had a two-run single in the seventh.

Mariners 11, Tigers 2

Seattle slugged a club-record six home runs — three-run blasts by Bruce Bochte and Ruppert Jones and solo shots by Willie Horton, John Hale, Dan Meyer and Larry Cox — and Rick Honeycutt pitched a five-hitter to turn back Detroit.

Indians 5, A's 4

Sid Monge kept Cleveland in the game by turning back bases-loaded threats by Oakland in the bottom of the 11th and 13th innings, and it paid off when Rick Manning of the Indians came through with a bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the top of the 14th to beat the A's.

Griffith Throwback To Old-Style Owner

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

MINNEAPOLIS — To reach the office of Calvin Griffith, president and board chairman of the Minnesota Twins baseball team, one is compelled to walk down a corridor lined with photographs of a dozen presidents — starting with bulbous, mustachioed Howard Taft — tossing out the first ball.

A near life-sized portrait of the legendary Walter Johnson hangs to the left of the door that transmits you into a wonderful world of diamond memorabilia — a world the game will never see again.

It represents a chapter that could have changed the history of the continent.

"Castro was a left-handed pitcher at Havana University," Griffith recalled. "He wrote us at the Washington Senators applying for a job. We had our Latin American scout, Joe Cambria, look at him. Cambria wired us back, 'Forget it.'"

The rebuked Castro turned revolutionary and became the driving force in the Communist takeover of Cuba. The Washington Senators subsequently moved to Minneapolis. Castro never lost his love for baseball and maintained ties with such transplanted major league stars as Tony Oliva, Camilo Pasqual and Pedro Ramos.

"One time after a visit to Cuba, the guys came back with a baseball for me," Griffith said. "It was signed by Castro. This is it."

"The FBI came around, asking some of the players if they had a Castro signature. They didn't, but I did," Griffith said with obvious relish. "The FBI took pictures of it. Now it's a part of the FBI files."

The paunchy, frank-speaking Griffith is a rare throwback to the days when baseball franchises were more than a tax writeoff or a hobby pursued by millionaires with their main wealth invested in other interests.

"This baseball team is all I have — I have to operate it as a business," he says. "I don't have any shipyards, hamburger empires or movie residuals to fall back on. Our total income amounts to about $8 million a year. Some of these rich clubs, like the Yankees and Angels, pull in $22 million a year.

"They call me conservative. I have to be. I can't throw money away. We must build from a farm system. It's like breeding thoroughbred horses."

In his 18 years at Minnesota, Griffith produced teams that led the league 10 years in attendance, won the pennant in 1965, nearly beat out Boston in 1967, won the division in 1969 and 70 and last year led the division for 0 days.

Born in Montreal, Calvin and his sister were adopted by Clark Griffith, owner of the Washington Senators, in 1920. Calvin found himself thrust immediately into a baseball atmosphere.

"Bill McKechnie and I were ball boys when Walter Johnson pitched," Griffith said. "He was the fastest pitcher who ever lived. He threw nothing but fast balls. He could pitch for four hours but if he rested for five minutes his arm would stiffen and he would be no good."

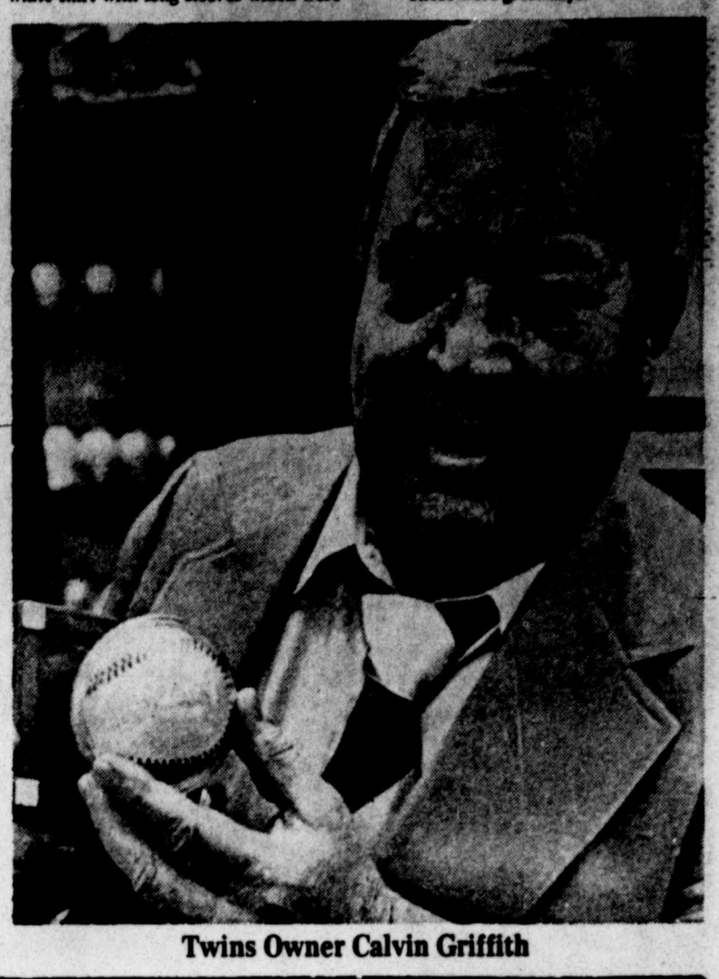

Calvin became president and operating officer of the Senators when the elder Grifith died Oct. 27, 1955. It was then that he began rubbing elbows with the men who run the country and show business personalities.

"The first president I remember throwing out the first ball was Calvin Coolidge. He was very stiff and austere. Dwight Eisenhower loved the game, as did Harry Truman and Lyndon Johnson. I have a glass-enclosed score card which Ike kept at our last opening game in Washington, April 18, 1960. We won 10-1.

"Jack Kennedy came to the game often with Jackie while they were courting. I remember Kennedy always wore a white shirt with long sleeves which were always rolled up. Jackie came in a flaring Mexican skirt. She was still doing photography then and was around the ball park quite often.

Lee Wins 100th Game

By The Associated Press

Some kidder, that Bill Lee.

Win one game — or a hundred — and it doesn't mean a thing, he says.

But he certainly seems to be taking life somewhat seriously now that he is in the National League — and winning. Like Monday night, when he won his sixth game this season and 100th lifetime with an 8-1 decision over the Atlanta Braves.

"I like it better over here," said Lee, who was sent to Montreal after a distinguished career with the Boston Red Sox in the American League. "The parks are larger, and I have more fun. I play more."

The Expo pitcher reached the century mark in victories with a sharp performance that, typically, included few strikeouts. Lee is not especially overpowering when he's sharp, just good enough to beat you.

"I don't strike out that many people," said Lee, who fanned only one batter. "My strikeout tonight was an accident when the ball caught the outside corner. The batter was surprised, the catcher was surprised, the umpire was surprised and I was surprised."

Elsewhere in the National League, the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 4-2; the New Mets defeated the Cincinnati Reds 6-2 and the Houston Astros blanked the Philadelphia Phillies 3-0.

Lee, 6-2, got all the support he needed from Gary Carter. Carter drove in three runs with a pair of run-scoring singles and his 10th homer of the season. Dave Palmer pitched the final inning for Montreal.

Tony Brizzolara absorbed the loss for Atlanta, yielding seven hits in the six innings he pitched.

"We got the bats going tonight" said Montreal Manager Dick Williams, glad to be back on the winning track after three straight losses. "It was a good place to break out. No, I'm not referring to the Braves' players, but to this park (Atlanta Stadium). We hit in this park. Guys like Carter — he always hits here."

Dodgers 4, Pirates 2

Rookie Rick Sutcliffe pitched a four-hitter and Joe Ferguson rapped a two-run homer to lead Los Angeles over Pittsburgh. Sutcliffe, 6-3, notched his fifth victory in his last six decisions as the Dodgers rebounded from three straight defeats over the weekend in St.Louis.

Ferguson's second-inning homer off loser Jim Rooker, 2-1, followed a two-out walk to Dusty Baker. It was Ferguson's eighth homer of the season.

"It was in my heart," said Sutcliffe. "I wanted to give that little something extra."

The Dodgers announced before the game that pitcher Doug Rau would undergo shoulder surgery and be out for the season and that pitcher Andy Messersmith had been placed on the 21-day disabled list with an ailing arm.

"I'll tell you, the fact that we lost Doug and Andy gave me a boost," said Sutcliffe. "They're both great guys and I'm really sorry for them. But I feel like every person on this team has got to give that little extra if we're going to win it like we planned to win it."

Mets 6, Reds 2

Joel Youngblood hit a solo homer and scored three times as New York beat Cincinnati and Tom Seaver behind Craig Swan's six-hitter. Youngblood, who hit his homer in a three-run ninth, had scored twice earlier as the Mets got three runs off Seaver, 2-5, who went seven innings — his longest stint since injuring his back April 19.

The only runs off Swan, 5-4, came on homers by Seaver and Dan Driessen.

"I was up because it was Cincinnati, not because of Seaver (a former Met)," said Swan. "I had never beat Cincinnati in Cincinnati."

Astros 3, Phillies 0

Jose Cruz and Craig Reynolds smashed run-scoring hits in the fourth inning and rookie Randy Niemann hurled a six-hitter as Houston defeated Philadelphia.

Niemann, 2-0, retired 16 of the first 18 batters he faced. It was his second victory since joining the Astros May 18.

"Batters don't feel overpowered by him," Houston catcher Alan Ashby said of Niemann, called up from Charleston of the International League. "When the game is over and they went 0-for-4, they wonder why they didn't get a hit."

Americans Advance

PARIS (AP) — Led by hammering Jimmy Connors, American men are making their best showing at the French Open Tennis Championships since Tony Trabert won the French crown in 1955.

Connors, Eddie Dibbs, and Vitas Gerulaitis have made it to the final eight, with Gene Mayer still a possibility for a quarterfinals slot.

No American has won this event since Trabert, and it has been decades since three Americans reached the quarterfinals at Roland Garros Stadium, with its slow clay courts and best-of-five-set matches.

Connors, here for the first time since 1973, cannonballed his way into the final eight Monday by overpowering Spanish clay court specialist Manuel Orantes, 4-6, 6-1, 6-3, 6-1.

Bjorn Borg, who dominated this tournament last year and is considered the world's greatest clay court player, is still the odds-on favorite to win the $49,000-dollar men's prize.

But Connors, in outduelling the clever Orantes, gwve a capacity French crowd a look at what the American power game can do to the more traditional European clay court artistry.

"I think the French are very knowledgeable about tennis," said Connors. "If they like me, that's fine. But I'm not out to win adoption papers. They want to see good tennis and I don't think they care who plays it."

Connors' next opponent was to be Dibbs, who has made the quarterfinals her four of the last five years.

"Dibbs and I have been playing each other since we were eight years old," said Connors. "I know how to play him and he knows how to play me, and that makes for great tennis."

Gerulaitis was to play Spain's Jose Higueras while Gene Mayer, playing smart clay court tennis, was to complete his match against Argentina's Guillermo Vilas. Mayer was leading, two sets to one, when the match was halted until Tuesday on account of darkness.

While Connors hits every shot as if there were no tomorrow, the 30-year-old Orantes plays patiently. When he misses a point, the Spaniard merely shrugs his shoulders, whereas Connors might snarl.

As in their match at the U.S. Open in 1975, which Orantes won with an off-speed game, their mastery of the contrasting American and European games made for superb tennis despite a chill wind and overcast skies.

In the first set, Orantes looked as though he might give a clay court lesson to Connors, thwarting the American's hard, flat shots with graceful, off-speed spinning returns and an occasional drop-shot.

He broke Connors' big serve in the very first game, wasting no motion or energy and seeming completely at home on the rain-softened clay.

After Orantes held on to win the first set, Connors came back to break Orantes' serve in the fourth game of the second set. He even managed to win over the crowd with a bit of clowning and some gentlemanly corrections of line calls that had improperly gone against his opponent.

Connors easily broke Orantes' service again in the sixth game, and from there his game just got stronger and sharper. Everything Orantes could do, he could do better.

"At the beginning, Manuel was hitting the ball well and maybe I was a little impatient," Connors said after the match. "After that, I waited for better shots and hit the ball real well."

Palmer Forced To Qualify

By The Associated Press

In his heyday, Arnold Palmer's absense from a golf tournament meant only one thing: he didn't feel like playing that week.

Monday, however, the circumstances were different.

The revered veteran was at the mercy of the U.S. Golf Association, whose rules dictated that he undergo the U.S. Open's 36-hole qualifying sectional at the Charlotte Country Club course with all the amateurs, no-name pros, etc.

Palmer, the 1960 Open champ and a virtual stranger to these qualifying affairs in the past, barely made the cut for the tournament which starts June 14 in Toledo, Ohio. He fired rounds of 72 and 69 for a 141 total, surviving by three strokes.

"Asking Arnold Palmer to qualify for the U.S. Open is like asking the Pope to take a lie-detector test," said one young golfer.

"Arnie should never have to qualify for anything in golf," said Eddie Pearce, who finished second at 136 in the qualifying round, one shot behind overall leader Graham Marsh.

Marsh fired a two-round total of 135 Monday, including a 66 on the first 18 holes and a 69 on the second round of the par 71, 6,729-yard course. Pearce shot a pair of 68s.

Other big names to qualify were Al Geiberger, who finished with 138, and Gene Littler, winner of the Open in 1961, who totaled 141 on the par-71, 6,729-yard course at Charlotte, N.C.

In the Cincinnati sectional, Don Padgett of Indianapolis fired a 7-under-par 67-68—135 at the Clovernook Country Club to lead a group of four qualifiers.

Cliff Cook of Portage Country Club took medalist honors in another sectional qualifier at Sharon Center, Ohio, with a course record 66, giving him a 6-under-par total of 138 at the Sharon Golf Club.

His afternoon round on the 7,300-yard course was one stroke better than the previous course record, set two years ago by Chi Chi Rodriguez of Dorado Beach Puerto Rico, who was the runner-up Monday wit 72-68 for a 4-under 140.

Doug Brown of Grand Prarie, Texas, came out of a year-long tournament "retirement" to shoot a 3-under-par 68, low round of the Dallas sectional at the Royal Oaks Country Club, and totalled 141 to lead the field there.

Tom Sieckmann of Omaha, Neb., shot a 64 over the first 18 holes and finished the day's two rounds with a 4-under-par, 136 total to take medalist honors in the sectional qualifying at the Mission Hills Golf Course in Mission, Kan.

Rick Terrell of Boulder, Colo., and amateur Chris Nordling of Aurora, Colo., advanced by firing identical rounds of 72 and 68 for an even-par 140 total in the sectional at Boulder.

Pickings Slim In Draft

NEW YORK (AP) — There are no Bob Horners this time, says Hal Keller, director of player development for the Seattle Mariners.

So the Mariners, who picked first in today's 15th annual summer free agent draft, looked for the next best thing.

"We're after the best available athlete," Keller said.

"If we had the No. 1 choice in 1978, we could have just started looking for No. 2," Keller said. "Bob Horner of Arizona State was head and shoulders above the crowd last year. Right now, there are no Horners out there, and, unfortunately, you can't manufacture them."

Horner was taken first in the draft by Atlanta and became rookie of the year in the National League before running into contract problems with the Braves.

Newspaper reports had Seattle seeking an outfielder with some offensive capabilities. Among those prominently mentioned has been Brad Komminsk, a 6-foot-3, 195-pound first baseman-outfielder from Shawnee High School in Lima, Ohio. Komminsk was on a list of players made up for consideration by Keller.

Keller's list also included right-handed pitcher Tim Leary of UCLA, and several high school players, including Joe Lansford, a first baseman from San Jose and brother of Carney Lansford, California Angels third baseman.

The draft, held in two phases by conference call to the commissioner's office in New York from the 26 major league teams' headquarters, was expected to run at least through Wednesday. In addition to the regular phase, for players not drafted within the past 13 months, there was to be a secondary phase, primarily for players previously drafted but not signed.

Following Seattle's first pick the selection order for the first round of the regular phase was: Mets, Toronto, Atlanta, Oakland, St.Louis, Cleveland, Houston, White Sox, Montreal, Minnesota, Chicago Cubs, Detroit, San Diego, San Francsco from California, Los Angeles from Pittsburgh, Texas, San Francisco, White Sox from Baltimore, Cincinnati from Philadelphia, Kansas City, Cincinnati, Detroit from Milwaukee, San Diego from Los Angeles, Los Angeles from Yankees and Oakland from Boston.

Seven teams — Los Angeles, Cincinnati, Oakland, San Francisco, Chicago White Sox, Detroit and San Diego — have two picks each in the first round of the regular phase, which goes five rounds. They acquired the picks as compensation for players lost in the re-entry draft.

The order of the secondary draft was drawn by lot, with Boston leading off followed by San Francisco, the New York Yankees and Philadelphia.

Decision Effects Felt Immediately

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Now that Prof. Raymond Goetz has dropped the other shoe in the Bob Horner arbitration case, the economic fallout will begin immediately, as soon as today, when baseball begins parceling out its top amateur free agent talent.

You can expect teams to be more than a little wary about waving large-sized signing bonuses under the noses of high school and college prospects picked in today's draft. Those bonuses, after all, now immediately become the player's bargaining base when it is time to sign a new contract.

The Atlanta Braves signed Horner off the campus of Arizona State last June and paid him $181,000. That figure included $21,000 in salary and the remainder in various other kinds of payments, most of it a signing bonus.

As far as Horner, his agent, Bucky Woy, and the Players Association were concerned, that $181,000 was total compensation for playing baseball for the Atlanta Braves in 1978. And that meant that under terms of the collective bargaining agreement which permits no more than a 20 percent cut in any year, Horner would have to be paid $146,000 for 1979. Prof. Goetz, it turns out, agreed for the most part, eliminating a few of the fringe payments but ruling the signing bonus a valid part of future negotiations.

Now, as things developed, Horner won Rookie of the Year honors and, in The New Baseball economy, is probably a bargain at $146,00:. But don't for one moment think the Braves would have paid him that kind of money if they knew it was going to create a permanent committment. And don't for one moment think other teams are going to fall into the trap that Atlanta wound up in, especially now that precedent has been established.

What if Horner had been a dud? What if he hadn't been Rookie of the Year but had, like some other first round choices, turned out to be nothing more than an ordinary ball player? Under terms of Prof. Goetz' award, the club buys blind and can only hope that a player lives up to his draft potential. That is a kind of Russian Roulette and you have to wonder if the teams are going to be willing to play that dangerous game with their checkbooks.

The Goetz decision was down the middle — kind of what you'd expect from an impartial arbitrator. He had a little something for both sides.

While upholding most of Horner's economic claims and granting him an instant increase from the $100,000 compromise contract he was playing under, the University of Kansas law professor did not permit the player to walk away from the Braves. Horner had asked for free agency, a pretty stiff penalty to inflict on the Atlanta club for what turned out to be a question of semantics — whether or not bonus consititutes a proper part of the future bargaining. Goetz refused to grant it and that part of his decision had to please the baseball esablishment. The crazy quilt free agent situation is difficult enough without allowing players to walk away from their clubs after half a season.

The Horner case was the first to face Prof. Goetz, baseball's new arbitrator. Clearly, it was a complicated issue and no easy matter for him to decide.

Now, when he sits down today with Marvin Miller of the Players Association and Ray Grebey of the Player Relations Committee, to go over details of the ruling, neither side can be totally happy with his judgment. And all that probably means is that the decision is a just one.

There is no appeal. The decision is binding and final. That's what arbitration is all about.

And while the three members of the arbitration panel study the opinion, draft will be underway. The Seattle Mariners will make the No.1 selection and you can bet whoever they pick won't be making $181,000 for playing baseball this summer.

That is the legacy left behind by Horner, the Braves and the landmark decision handed down by Prof. Goetz in his first swing at the arbitration plate.

New York Mets' Skipper Torre Worried About Team, Not Job Future

By MILTON RICHMAN
UPI Sports Editor

Ever since a newspaper story appeared two weeks ago saying what the New York Mets should do to turn everything around is hire Billy Martin as their manager, some of his players have been privately checking with Joe Torre.

"Are you OK, Joe?" they've been asking him. "Are you all right?"

His primary thought is about his players.

"It concerned me that it bothered them," he says. "They've been playing hard enough for me and it isn't like they're not giving their best. I'll admit our last road trip to the West Coast was bad. We won only three of 14 games. The players were trying hard but they were flat. You couldn't pick anyone out for dogging it because no one was.

"We had a meeting in Pittsburgh three weeks ago and a dozen or so guys volunteered comments on what was wrong. They were honest about it, saying they weren't playing aggressively enough, they were making too many mental mistakes and they were running bases without an idea."

The Mets' manager was talking over the phone from Cincinnati, where the Mets won their second straight game with a 6-2 decision over the Reds, but still were in last place in the National League East.

Torre was addressing himself to he specific question of what is wrong with the Mets, and answering as honestly as he knows how, he said, "I think we're short of pitching. The inexperience has shown up on our pitching staff."

Actually, the Mets have only two starters they can even count on to any degree in righthanders Pat Zachry and Craig Swan.

Apart from that, they have three rookie pitchers and it's obvious they aren't ready to compete on equal terms at their present level.

Another problem with the club is its defense. Apart from Joel Youngblood in right field, the Mets have a Venus de Milo outfield — no arms.

From what I've seen, Elliott Maddox is the best defensive center fielder on the club. Mazzilli is doing an outstanding job offensively in his bid for the league batting crown. Defensively, though, he falls short because he simply doesn't have the necessary instincts."

Mazzilli, however, has come a long way with the bat. The Mets' offense isn't their biggest problem right now.

On the plane carrying the club into Cincinnati from Atlanta Sunday night, third baseman Richie Hebner, impressed with the club's hitting, pulled catcher John Stearns aside and told him, "Hey, John, we can put some runs on the board."

"This is the best offensive club we've had since I've been here," he said to him.

Despite all those hits and runs against St. Louis and Atlanta, the Mets managed only a split in six games with those clubs. That tells you a lot about their pitching. It just didn't measure up.

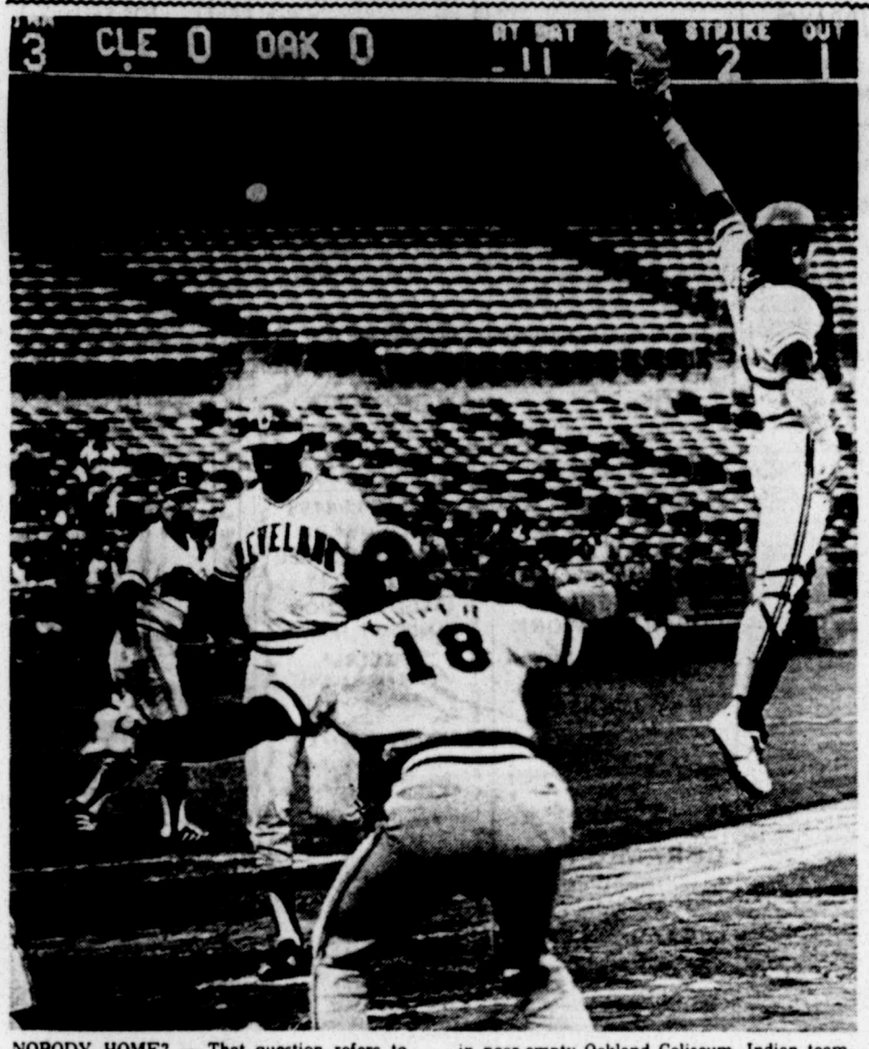

The team's morale is good in spite of its position in the standings. It would be better yet if the Mets could get hemselves another pitcher or two — but where?

Torre, in his second full year as manager and in his last year on his contract, says the basic difference between playing and managing is that it's impossible to hide as a manager.

"As a ballplayer, you can disappear," he says.

Torre was a little late in learning that one of his neighbors, Eddie Firmani, was fired the other day. Firmani, sacked by the New York Cosmos, lives in Demarest, N.J., not far from Torre.

"I hope there's no connection there," says the Mets' manager.

NOBODY HOME? — That question refers to both home plate and the stadium as Cleveland's Paul Dade scores behind A's catcher Jim Essian in near-empty Oakland Coliseum. Indian teammate Duane Kuiper waves Dade home as Essian misses the high throw. (AP Laserphoto)

Substitute Wins NAIA

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Playing at home was sweet music for David Lipscomb College, which combined Mike Cunningham's hitting and Kal Koenig's pitching to defeat High Point College 5-4 for the NAIA World Series championship.

Lipscomb, of Nashville, won Monday night its second National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics baseball title in three years and carved a niche in NAIA record books in the process. The Bisons this year were the first team ever invited to the NAIA final tourney, selected to replace Grand Canyon College, of Phoenix, Ariz., which withdrew because its players used champagne in a post-game victory celebration. All teams previously qualified through area playoffs.

Lipscomb defeated Southeastern Oklahoma 2-1 in 1977 a St. Joseph, Mo., to win that year. The NAIA World Series moved to Nashville this year after a six-year stretch in St. Joseph.

Cunningham drove in four runs, doubling home a pair to snap a 1-1 tie in the fourth and adding a two-run double in the sixth to give Lipscomb a 5-2 lead.

Koenig, selected for the all-tournament team and chosen most valuable player, hurled three strong innings in relief. He replaced Lipscomb starter Tim Pardue with two on and no one out in the seventh. Koenig struck out High Point's Ken Carter and Mike Pisano before giving up a two-run double to Joe Garbarino.

A record NAIA World Series crowd of 8,779 watched the game at Herschel Greer Stadium, boosting attendance for the week-long tourney to a record 29,006, nearly twice the 1975 high.

High Point, from High Point, N.C., made its first championship game appearance. Before this year, the Panthers hadn't won an NAIA World Series game in two previous tourney trips.

High Point tied it in the third on singles by Fred Poole and Pisano, a walk to Garbarino and Tim Reid's sacrifice fly.

"I thought all along, after we won the first two ball games, that we had a chance to go all the way," Lipscomb Coach Ken Dugan said. "Pitching carried us. In a tournament like this, the team that gets pitching is the one that's going to win."

High Point got into the title game by beating Point Park College, of Pittsburgh, Pa., 10-6 in 13 innings Sunday night in a contest suspended by rain the day before. Lipscomb beat High Point earlier in the tournament 6-3.

Other teams in the original field of eight were St. Xavier, Chicag; Birmingham-Southern, irmingham, Ala.; Southeastern Oklahoma State, University of Wisconsin-LaCrosse and Lewis-Clark State, Lewiston, Idaho.

Defending NAIA champion Emporia State was eliminated before reaching this year's tournament.

CART Still At War

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Two-time U.S. Auto Club national driving champ Tom Sneva, now with the rival Championship Auto Racing Teams organization, says he would love to compete in the USAC-sanctioned Pocono 500 this month. But the state of war within the sport makes that very unlikely.

Sneva, who received an invitation to enter the Pocono race from promoter Joseph Mattioli, telephoned his reply:

"What I told him was I would like to be there if my car owner shows up," said Sneva. "I said I couldn't myself because I don't have a car."

Tom Bagley, another CART driver; responded likewise:

"I told him I was contracted with Longhorn Racing, and that if Longhorn Racing is there, I'll be there. But I told him I couldn't come in another car because it would be a breach of my contract."

Right now, most CART teams have indicated they will not run at Pocono. The situation seems unlikely to change unless there is an abrupt settlement between USAC and CART, which broke away from the established sanctioning body late last year, or unless there is an agreement between CART and the major track owners which would preclude USAC's participation altogether.

But that latter possibility has been ruled out by Mattioli, who reiterated that the June 24 Pocono race will be run under USAC rules.

Still, CART President Pat Patrick said he is trying to negotiate with the track owners.

"We're open to suggestions," said Patrick. "We've got to get together. I talked to Dr. Mattioli and said we couldn't run under the conditions we did in May (at Indianapolis)."

"I am not opposed to forming a new sanctioning body under SCCA (Sports Car Club of America) composed of car owners and race track owners," Patrick continued. "If Dr. Mattioli and Ray Smartis (promoter of the Ontario 500) came to us and said, 'We'd like to sit on your board,' I would not be opposed."

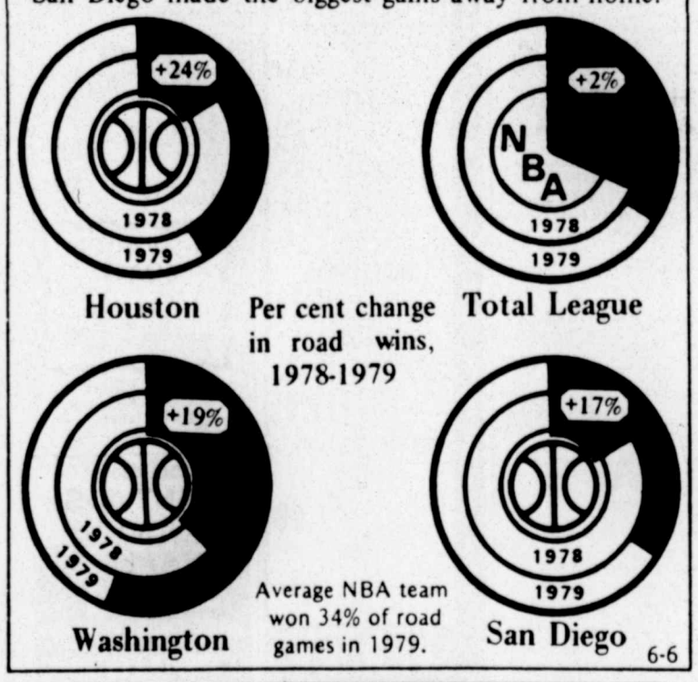

The Pocono and Ontario 500-mile races currently are run under USAC sanction.

NBA Still Has Home Court Advantage

Road teams won two per cent more games this year than last in the NBA, but Houston, Washington and San Diego made the biggest gains away from home.

Hockey Growth In Doubt

NASSAU, Bahamas (UPI) — Hopefully, Winnipeg, Edmonton, Quebec and Hartford haven't tried on their National Hockey League uniforms yet. They may have to return them.

The agreement reached between the NHL and the World Hockey Association to absorb four WHA teams next season received a jolt Monday night when Alan Eagleson, the executive director of the NHL Players Association, demanded a new collective bargaining agreement between the league and the Players Association.

"According to the terms of the collective bargaining agreement between the NHL and the Players Association," said Eagleson, "if the NHL and WHA merged, the agreement is null and void and a new agreement must be negotiated. It is our contention the NHL and WHA Have merged."

NHL President John Ziegler insists the NHL is expanding when it takes in Winnipeg, Edmonton, Uuebec and Hartford from the WHA and the issue of semantics probably will require protracted negotiations before settlement is reached.

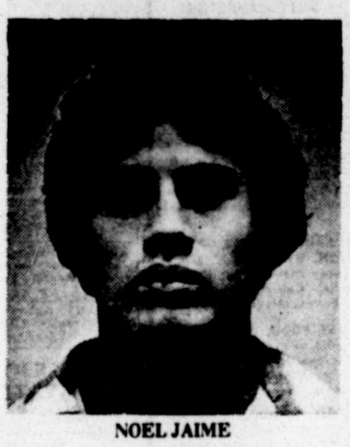

Eagleson also demanded that as part of any new agreement, compensation would consist of future draft choices or money — or both — rather than players.

The most celebrated case of compensation involved the Detroit Red Wings, who signed goaltender Rogie Vachon after he played out his option with the Los Angeles Kings. Unable to agree with the Kings on compensation, Detroit submitted to arbitration and ended up losing their talented young center, Dale McCourt.

McCourt sued to stay in Detroit and played for the Red Wings during the past season, but in a recent decision the court upheld the original compensation, sending McCourt to Los Angeles.

"Players in the top one-third of the salary range should be compensated for with draft choices or possibly certain monetary compensation," said Eaglson.

The Players' Association is on record as demanding $12 million, or half of the total monies received by the NHL From the four WHA teams which will begin play next year.

Tech Cagers Get Fem Star

Texas Tech women's basketball coach Gay Benson Monday announced the recruiting of one of El Paso's most versatile athletes as Gwen McCray accepted a Tech basketball letter-of-intent.

A 2-AAAA all-district basketball player for four years, Miss McCray won city and district Most Valuable Player awards and was an all-state selection last season while representing El Paso Parkland High School. She averaged 19 points, 11.4 rebounds and five assists on a team which compiled a 32-4 record.

Miss McCray, who stands 5-8, won three consecutive Class AAAA state high jump titles, and set the state record of 5-9. She has been named to the El Paso Hall of Fame for her track and field accomplishments.

However, Miss McCray announced she will only play basketball at Tech.

She is Tech's third signee, joining junior collegians Nodia Vaughn of Western Texas and Christie Newman of Amarillo College.

"Gwen is the best all-around freshman recruit we've ever signed here at Tech," Mrs. Benson said. "She has tremendous jumping ability and quickness. She has the potential for becoming an outstanding college basketball player.

"I don't know if she'll play guard or wing next year, but the way she jumps, she could even play post," Mrs. Benson said.

"Gwen played point guard, wing and center in high school," said her former coach, Larry Vanley. "She played against many six-footers, but there wasn't a girl in the city that could outjump her."

LCC Inks Jaime

Noel Jaime, a two-time all-city and all-district 4-AAAA second baseman at Lubbock High, has become the fifth Lubbock Christian College baseball recruit of the season, reported LCC coach Larry Hays.

Jaime, a 5-6, 140-pounder, batted .517 as a junior and .411 as a senior. He also stole 25 bases this year.

Jaime is the third LHS player to sign with the Chaparrals in the last four years. Presently, Kenny Toney (Class of '76) is the starting third baseman and Ernest Day, who played for the Westerners last spring, was redshirted this year.

Jaime will be having plenty of newcomer help with the LCC baseball team. And one of the things that students will be asking around the campus is: Can an all-America javelin thrower develop into a pitcher?

Hays apparently thinks so. He signed two-time junior college all-America trackster Ricky Coskrey of Odessa College to a baseball scholarship scholarship also Monday.

Hays also inked a pair of Ranger Junior College outfielders, Danny Hemphill and Jimmy Durham, to bring to five the number of signees this summer. The first recruit was southpaw pitcher Rodney Green of Jal, N.M.

Coskrey, a 6-2, 210-pounder, is a graduate of Odessa Permian. He didn't enter college immediately after high school, but when he did, he was recruited for the javelin out of a physical education class and made all-America both years.

He tossed the javelin 209 feet as a freshman and finished fifth in the national meet at Eugene, Ore., as a sophomore last month. But, in baseball, because of his strikeout work in semipro leagues around Odessa, Coskrey received offers from Texas A&M and Pan American.

Durham and Hemphill played on teams with a 103-34 record in two years. The 1978 Ranger JC squad finished with a 60-19 record and won the national championship.

Durham is a 5-9, 155-pound centerfielder from Houston Madison. "He has excellent speed," Ranger coach Jack Allen says. "He's undoubtedly the quickest player I've ever had in my 16 years here. He can run a 6.2 60."

Hemphill, a 6-0, 170-pounder, hit .330 as a freshman. He missed two-thirds of the 1979 season after suffering an ankle injury while making a catch in the opening game. He hit .317 this year but his stolen bases dropped from 31 to five.

Covert Takes Junior Tourney

Steve Covert of Lubbock fired a 77 to win the 16-18 years' age bracket of the Junior Tournament at the Lubbock Country Club Monday.

Brad Simnacher, also of Lubbock, won the 14-15 bracket with a 78, and Richard Ashton of Denver City captured the 12-13 bracket with an 81.

1 — Steve Covert, Lubbock. 2 — Chad Davis, Crosbyton. 3 — Trai Kelley, Midland.

14-15
1 — Brad Simnacher, Lubbock. 2 — Grady Rogers, Lubbock. 3 — Rick Alexander, Lubbock.

12-13

a game 1-0 because Denny McClain hit a home run. At least, that's what I told my buddy. Am I right?

—Tony Callado, Lancaster, Pa.

A. The years play memory tricks on us all. Gibson was 2-0 headup with McClain that Series, and had a home run in a 4-0 victory. McClain won the sixth game, and Mickey Lolich beat Gibson in the seventh game for the championship. Lolich hit a home run, the first of his career, in the second game of the Series.

Q. Why hasn't the quick-kick been used in pro football, particularly from the spread or shotgun formation? Quite a few quarterbacks such as Danny White of Dallas and Dan Pastorini in Houston can punt the ball.

—Joe Wetherlynn, Jackson, Miss.

A. As far as we know, the last "quarterback" to quick kick was Sammy Baugh, but that's when the Redskins ran the single wing. This enabled Baugh to run up the NFL record 48-yard average.

The play is not in the Dallas or Houston playbooks. Both teams think they can make a first down on third-and-whatever.

Grain Futures

CHICAGO (AP) — Soybean and grain futures set new season's highs in some contracts Monday on the Chicago Board of Trade, partly on talk of adverse weather for this year's crops.

Reports that wet fields in Southern wheat-growing areas may interfere with harvest of the winter wheat crop helped wheat futures gain up to 4½ cents in more distant contracts, which set new life-of-contract highs.

Soybean contracts covering new crop months also set new season's highs. Talk that dry weather in the Midwest could curb growth of the new soybean and corn crops played a role, analysts said.

The difference in price between nearby and more distant, or new-crop, corn contracts widened sharply, with 24¼ cents separating the price of corn for delivery this July and July 1980. Exporter buying in the more distant contracts, plus concern about growth of the new crop, were cited as factors.

Guard Dog Business Booming In Dallas

DALLAS (UPI) — Dallas' rising crime rate has increased the sales of trained guard dogs, but a police spokesman says the average citizen doesn't need an attack dog for protection.

"I'm just not in favor of attack dogs," said Sgt. John Allen, a supervisor in the Dallas Police Department's crime prevention unit. "They might turn on relatives or children, or they may attack people you don't want hurt when you're not there.

Nevertheless, while Allen is dispensing crime prevention advice such as installing dead bolts and solid doors, companies that train and sell guard dogs are doing a booming business in Dallas.

The nationwide franchise K-9 Command Dog Ltd. has discovered that as thepopulation increases, so does the crime rate, said Mitch Breier.

Breier, who recently opened a Dallas office, said most of his customers had already been the victims of crime — such as robbery, burglary or assault — and wanted to prevent a reoccurence. He said his dogs were safe and less likely to attack without provocation than untrained dogs.

Breier sold about 50 German Shepherds and Doberman Pinschers between January and April for prices ranging from several hundred to several thousand dollars.

Each new owner and dog receives about six lessons together, during which the dog becomes accustomed to its owner and the owner learns how to control the animal.

Tom Paxton, owner of the Texas Police Dog Academy Inc., agreed with Allen that the average person did not need a guard dog.

"The people who might really need such a dog are blind or handicapped, but they couldn't control one," said Paxton, who makes most of his money leasing dogs to warehouses and businesses. His dogs, he said, need "constant training and work."

Paxton said he has trained dogs for individuals, but screens customers first because "you get all kinds of nuts in this business, too."

Several years ago a "pleasant enough" man came to Paxton with three $500 bills and asked to take a dog immediately.

"I kept talking to him and talking to him to find out why he wanted a dog," said Paxton, "and it turned out that the neighbor's kid had pounced on his wife's flower bed. He said he knew that if he killed the boy he would be put in jail, whereas if his dog killed him, they would just kill the dog."

Yelling Fans Not Illegal

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — There's no law to stop fans from yelling their lungs out at sporting events, a judge has ruled, even if what they say is offensive.

Circuit Judge Perry Whitmore has dismissed a $7,000 lawsuit against a 27-year-old man accused of using abusive and profane language during a 1977 minor league baseball game.

According to the suit, Sterling was sitting a few feet away and directing his yelling at the manager of the Tulsa Drillers, a Texas League team visiting the Arkansas Travelers.

Whitmore said last week that while he did not condone Sterling's alleged comments, fans could use their "lungs" at a game and there was no law to stop them.

Sterling also has filed suit over activities at the game. In a federal lawsuit, he contends his right to yell at players was violated when the manager pulled him over the fence, beat him and other team members joined in.

Also named in that suit were the Texas Rangers, which owns the Drillers, and the entire Drillers team.
