Shultz feels Soviets want issues resolved

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

GENEVA — U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz today reopened talks on a troubled arms control treaty and said he was sure the Soviet Union wants to resolve differences that led the Senate to shelve the pact indefinitely.

Shultz, before meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze, refused to blame the Soviets for differences over how to monitor the destruction of U.S. and Soviet intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

"I am not trying to characterize the disagreements," he told reporters on his flight from Washington. "Problems have arisen, and since no one has ever done anything like this before, there are problems. We approach this in a problem-solving way."

Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov, in a telephone interview today with the British Broadcasting Corp., said "We think that we can iron out our differences.

"They are not very big," he said, "so we still hope and we think that the Senate is going to ratify the treaty before the Moscow summit." The summit between Reagan and Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev is scheduled for May 29-June 2.

Shevardnadze, arriving in Geneva on Tuesday, had said he was not sure what the problems over the treaty were. He said the Soviets had answered questions posed by the United States.

"Basically the verification problems regarding the INF (Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces) treaty have been resolved, I think," he said.

In Washington, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said today the Senate could ratify the U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms agreement in time for the Moscow summit if Shultz works out disputes in this week's talks.

Rain, hail mar morning for working Midlanders

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The farmers are happy, the weather service unimpressed and many Midlanders just plain wet after a thunderous morning downpour drenched the city today.

The lightening, thunder, hail and rain wasn't an "official" severe thunderstorm, explained John Wright, director of the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Severe thunderstorms requiring the issuance of a NWS "watch" or "warning" report must contain winds of at least 58 mph and ¾-inch hail, Wright said.

Winds this morning topped out at 47 mph and the hail was less than ¾ inch in diameter, Wright said.

A low pressure trough spanning an area from Minnesota through Missouri and Oklahoma and into West Texas is the culprit behind the thunderstorms, Wright said.

Oil industry has promise, WTGA told

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

America is not running out of oil and petroleum geologists can look forward to promising careers for many decades to come, says Lawrence W. Funkhouser, president of the 53,000-member American Association of Petroleum Geologists.

Speaking to the West Texas Geological Association Tuesday, Funkhouser, a former director of Chevron Corp. and vice-president for Chevron Exploration and Production, told the geologists that the petroleum industry was emerging from the most painful down cycle in its history, but added that studies indicate oil demand and prices will increase past the year 2,000, causing the search for oil and gas to intensify.

He said oil would be found in places not dreamed of today and many talented geologists would be needed when the search intensifies.

Funkhouser, who resided in Midland from 1961 to 1963, said the great task facing geologists today was convincing the public, Congress and some in industry that America was running out of oil.

He called the oil crisis story an old one that had been repeated many times, and most recently with President Jimmy Carter.

Herd of starving cattle seized from east Midland County ranch

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Sheriff's deputies have seized 700 starving cattle from a east Midland County ranch pending a civil hearing Friday to determine whether the livestock should be returned to their owner or sold at a public auction, according to Sheriff Gary Painter.

The Hereford steers and heifers, most of whom were suffering from severe malnutrition, were located on barren pasture land along State Highway 158 near County Road 1379, Painter said Tuesday.

"This was the first time I've encountered something of this magnitude," he said. "Usually, you find one to five head penned up somewhere and starving for one reason or another."

Painter has been monitoring the starving cattle for the past 60 days and observed them crossing the highways for lack of food, he said.

According to the sheriff, the herd occupied four sections of land — or 2,560 acres — which is 10 times too many cattle per acre.

Painter attributed the starvation not to the recent drought conditions in the area, but to the fact that there were too many head grazing on too few acres.

The skeletons of many of the cattle in the herd were visible and many of the animals have died on the ranch, he noted, observing that "there are bodies all over the place."

Painter said the herd has been fed daily since the roundup began and the cattle are beginning to fill out.

The Midland County Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has been aware of the problem for about three years, according to SPCA Director Dalton Byerly.

The herd "got by" on a limited amount of food provided by the landowner, said Byerly, but the malnutrition resulted from a lack of grazing pasture land.

"There was money to supply feed, but the biggest problem was that there was nothing on the property," he said. "Another problem is that the cattle have not been worked, they have not been separated and we have a lot of inter-breeding and a lot of malnutrition.

Accused kidnapper will be jailed until trial

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The accused kidnapper of June Gilkerson will be jailed until his trial next month despite an attorney's claim that his detention is unconstitutional, a federal judge ruled Tuesday.

U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton following a hearing also denied defense attorney Tom Morgan's request for a hearing on a motion to move the trial because of excess publicity. The trial is expected to start June 13.

Bunton said he did not agree with Morgan's arguments that the federal Bail Reform Act — which allows denial of bond to a person accused of a violent crime or one which could be punishable by a life sentence — deprived Parker of his right to be presumed innocent, and of his right to effective representation.

Morgan said early today he would appeal the ruling to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Parker is accused of conspiring to kidnap Ms. Gilkerson, 24, and another woman on the morning of Nov. 8, 1986. His accused co-conspirator, 22-year-old David Alderink, pleaded guilty to her abduction in state court and is serving a 20-year prison sentence.

Ms. Gilkerson — an attractive, dark-eyed criminal justice student — was allegedly abducted at a bowling alley parking lot in northwest Midland, bound and forced into a pickup truck, according to the federal indictment of Parker.

She has not been seen since, and since early in the investigation Midland police detectives assumed she was murdered.

At a Feb. 23 hearing following Parker's arrest, U.S. Magistrate Darrell Smith ordered him held without bond because of the "danger" he allegedly poses to several prosecution witnesses in the case. Morgan filed a motion contesting the order, which Bunton denied Tuesday.

CENTRAL AMERICA

What U.S. policy in Central America has lacked, even under the Reagan Administration, is clarity. What, exactly, do we seek?

If our enemy is the Soviet Empire, the answer should be clear: removal of the Soviet and Cuban military presence, and displacement of the Communist regime that hijacked the Nicaraguan Revolution.

In aligning itself with the Soviet Empire, in bringing in Cuban military advisers, in fomenting subversion among its neighbors, the Sandinista regime made itself the enemy of the United States; and the Sandinistas should be treated as enemies.

Both the Guatemala Plan and the Reagan-Wright Peace Plan are rooted in self-delusions. There is simply no "peace" agreement that can be reached that will persuade the Sandinistas to get out of the business of exporting revolution and into the business of exporting bananas. Because the Sandinistas are not socialists; they are Communists. Either they will be overthrown and Central America will be free, or they will overthrow their neighbors and Central America will one day belong to the Warsaw Pact.

Off and on for six years now, Congress has cast a protective arm around this anti-American police state that is laying the foundations for a permanent Soviet beachhead on North America. If the Democratic majority on Capitol Hill ditches the Contras, Congress should be openly attacked in the fall of 1988 for what is has become: the indispensable partner of the Soviet Empire in the communization of Central America.

THE MIDDLE EAST

In the two decades since the Six-Day War, East Jerusalem and the West Bank have been economically integrated into the Jewish State, and here is the insoluble conundrum of the Middle East: No Arab government can acquiesce in permanent Israeli control of the Holy City and Judea and Samaria, and no Israeli government could survive permanent amputation of East Jerusalem and the West Bank.

It takes effort to be sanguine about that region of the world where only the fittest survive. Every year, the number of Palestinians under Israeli rule grows, and the ratio of Arab-to-Jew approaches closer to one-to-one. Every three years, Egypt adds to its impoverished demographic base of 50 million as many newborn children as there are Israelis in the Middle East.

Looking over the sweep of modern history, neither Western democracy, nor pro-Western monarchy, appear to be growth stocks in that region of the world. Egypt, Iraq, Libya, Ethiopia and Iran, have all seen pro-Western monarchs tumbled in revolution since Eisenhower's time. Syria resides within the Soviet orbit; Tunisia is shaky; uneasy sits the crown upon the head of the king of Morocco, the king of Jordan and the king of Saudi Arabia. Kuwait and the sheikdoms waver in the balance; and pro-Western Lebanon no longer exists.

RAIN

"We're not getting any severe weather." Wright said. "This is just thunderstorms, strong winds and small hail...just a good rain...which is what we need."

Farmers at the Midland Co-Op today agreed.

"I'm doing really nice today since the rain," said farmer Hoot Leonard. "We're keeping our fingers crossed for more."

Cotton-planting season is upon the farming community, but the recent dry spell has made for dismal planting prospects, he said.

The farmers need about a 24-hour-long rain similar to this morning's to create ideal soil conditions, Leonard said.

"The ground is so dry it's going to require quite a bit of rain to get it wet," the farmer said.

Plans to plant will proceed, however, as early June is the latest Leonard would want to put in a cotton crop, he said.

The Texas Department of Public Safety, Midland Police and Midland County Sheriff's Department recorded no major accidents resulting from the morning rain.

All lawmen noticed were the usual flux of stalled cars at flooded intersections, police said.

The thrashing rain was to have dissipated by the afternoon, Wright said. Skies on Thursday should be partly cloudy, he said.

STATE

An approaching upper level disturbance produced scattered showers and thunderstorms over the Panhandle and most of the South Plains early today.

Other showers and thunderstorms fell on the southern part of the Low Rolling Plains, Hill Country and Edwards Plateau near Del Rio.

A stationary surface trough stretched across South Texas from Beaumont to San Antonio to Del Rio. Patchy areas of fog developed in a deep layer of moist air south of the trough line.

Partly to mostly cloudy skies covered the state except for west of the Pecos, where clear skies prevailed.

North to northwest winds breezed across the Panhandle in the storm system. The Far West and much of North Texas also had north winds, while east and southeast winds prevailed over the rest of the state.

Wind speeds were generally 5 to 15 mph, except stronger and gusty in the thunderstorms.

Temperatures were in the 50s over the High Plains, Far West and southwest Texas while the rest of the state had readings in the 60s and 70s. Early morning extremes ranged from 53 degrees at Amarillo to 76 degrees in Corpus Christi.

NATION

Thunderstorms moved out to sea today after lashing the East Coast with hail and powerful winds that blew windows out of buildings and downed trees and power lines.

Thunderstorms Tuesday also dropped hail as big as golf balls along the Gulf Coast and unleashed winds gusting to 76 mph in central Texas. Strong winds damaged homes near Eola, Texas.

Showers and thunderstorms continued early today along the middle Atlantic Coast and the Carolina coast. Cloudy skies prevailed from northern Florida to New England and the lower Great Lakes region.

Showers and a few thunderstorms extended from central Texas to southeastern Colorado, and a few showers and thunderstorms dampened North Dakota.

Midland statistics

Tonight: Mostly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thundershowers. Locally heavy rains possible in the afternoon. Low in the middle 50s, easterly winds at 5-10 mph. Thursday: Partly cloudy with the high near 80, and easterly winds 10-15 mph.

Three killed in Cyprus car bombing

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — A car packed with explosives blew up today on a bridge minutes after police had chased it away from the Israeli Embassy, authorities said. Three people were killed and 15 wounded.

The semi-official Cyprus News Agency said an Arab man who owned the car was arrested while trying to run away from the scene.

A caller claiming to represent terrorist Abu Nidal's group told NBC-TV in New York this morning that Nidal's organization was responsible for the bombing. NBC News Editor Michael Wilson quoted the caller as saying it was the first of future attacks against Israeli targets.

Abu Nidal, whose real name is Sabry al-Banna, has been accused by Israeli, Arab and Western intelligence agencies of directing scores of terrorist attacks. They include simultaneous assaults at Rome and Vienna airports Dec. 27, 1985, that killed 20 people.

His group, Fatah-Revolutionary Council, broke in 1976 with Fatah, the mainstream guerrilla faction led by Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat.

Israeli Ambassador Aharon Lopez said the Israeli Embassy was a possible target of today's bombing. Authorities said windows were shattered in the building but no one there was injured.

The Mitsubishi Pajero exploded and disintegrated in the middle of the bridge on a main highway, less than 200 yards from the embassy. The explosion set four other vehicles on the bridge ablaze.

A police statement said a briefcase containing a remote-control detonating device was found about 200 yards from the site of the blast. No further details were available.

A police statement said the car's driver and a Greek Cypriot woman who was in a car immediately behind were killed. Another Greek Cypriot, Andreas Frangos, a retired diplomat, was in another nearby car and died of his wounds in a hospital a few hours later.

Fifteen other people were taken to Nicosia General Hospital with various wounds, hospital officials said.

The news agency said the arrested Arab, whom it did not name, had arrived on the island on March 21.

Later today, scores of policemen converged on a Nicosia apartment building where the man lived and searched it.

Police said the car with the bomb had a foreign visitor's temporary Cyprus registration plates and twice tried to park outside the four-story embassy in a narrow side street.

Cypriot police guards told the driver parking was forbidden and the car sped off toward the Grivas Avenue bridge. The explosion came a minute later, the statement said.

"There must have been a lot of explosives packed in that car," Nicosia Police Chief Andreas Trifyllis told newsmen at the scene.

Lopez told Israel army radio: "We do not know yet who is responsible. But it is certainly possible that the embassy was the terrorists' target and that the car (bomb) exploded prematurely for some reason."

Meanwhile, in Jerusalem, the Foreign Ministry condemned the attempted bomb attack.

"The explosion, in the wake of which innocent Cypriots were hurt, was another attempt to exploit the soil of Cyprus for terrorist attacks against Israel," the ministry said.

Hail-carrying storms now moving out to sea

Associated Press

Hail-spitting thunderstorms that pelted the Atlantic coast for two days began blowing out to sea early today, while the National Guard helped enforce a curfew on a Kentucky town "buried" by a tornado blamed for one death.

The storms, which shattered windows and downed power lines as far south as the Gulf coast and as far north as Pennsylvania, surprised motorists throughout the Deep South with icy roadways on Tuesday.

"We've got wrecks everywhere," said Vicki Griffith, a police dispatcher in Tallassee, about 20 miles northeast of Montgomery, Ala. She said at least three people were injured in accidents during the afternoon storm. The extent of the injuries was not immediately known.

School officials in Tallassee and nearby Wetumpka delayed the dismissal of students Tuesday afternoon to allow the storm to clear, said Robyn Hearn, a spokesman for the Alabama Emergency Management Agency. No funnel clouds were sighted despite tornado warnings.

Thunderstorms also lashed Georgia and North Carolina, where residents spotted several funnel clouds, and West Virginia before beginning to move out to sea early this morning, the National Weather Service reported.

In Mississippi, winds overturned three mobile homes, caused minor power outages and hurled a 50-foot communications tower 30 feet onto a nearby business. No injuries were reported.

The storms produced golfball-sized hail near Saucier, Miss., and in central Texas, where the wind gusted up to 76 mph. In Winston-Salem, N.C., about 5,100 homes lost power due to the storm, but it was restored by 9:15 p.m., Duke Power Co. said.

Kentucky Gov. Wallace Wilkinson on Tuesday toured a 6-mile-long path of destruction left the night before by a tornado that killed a woman in a house trailer and injured at least 15 people in Middlesboro, a town of 11,000 just north of the Tennessee border.

"It just kind of hopped along the valley," Wilkinson said. "And it's very obvious where it touched down."

Joe Iovine, who watched bulldozers clearing debris Tuesday from a furniture store owned by his family since 1910, said, "It was wiped out in 30 seconds. I get to talking about it and it chokes me up. I've had it."

"Some the the calves appear to be newborn when they're actually two or three months old," Bylerly added.

A hearing is slated for 9 a.m. Friday in Midland County Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe's court to determine whether the animals are to be returned to the ranch or whether they are to be sold at auction.

Painter said he doesn't anticipate criminal charges being filed in connection with the incident.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

WTGA

"They said we were running out of oil as early as 1922," said Funkhouser. "That year a report concluded that world reserves amounted to only about 14.5 billion barrels of oil and stated that we had already produced about half that amount. Since 1922, we have produced over 135 billion barrels and estimate that we have an additional 127 billion barrels to produce."

The exploration geologist says the AAPG predicts four eras of oil discovery-recovery in which supply-demand factors will force oil prices higher and higher. They are:

- the era of OPEC control (1973-2015) in which oil prices should average between $20 and $30 per barrel in 1987 dollars,
- the era of enhanced oil recovery (present-2025) with prices ranging from $25-$40 per barrel,
- the era of heavy oil and oil sands, beginning after the year 2025, in which prices will average $40-$50 a barrel, and
- the oil shale era, which would kick in somewhere after the year 2,050 and require oil prices of about $60-$70 in 1987 dollars.

Funkhouser said the great period of stability in the U.S. was the 70 years preceding 1979 in which oil prices averaged $10 per barrel in 1987 dollars. He called the 1980s an abberation.

He chastised the Reagan administration for its "benign neglect" of the energy industry. "Today's energy problems have been met with inaction, allowing the world's most effective oil-finding machine to self-destruct," he said.

While Funkhouser doesn't believe America can be energy independent, he questions how dependent we should be. "Do we stabilize production today at 8 million barrels daily or do we wait a few years and stabilize it at 6 or 4 million?"

He called price the great determiner: "Oil prices will determine everything. It will determine whether or not we have the talent and technology when we need it."

PARKER

In his argument, court-appointed counsel Morgan said his client — who he termed of "excellent character" and a "genuine Vietnam War hero" — was put in the position of having to prove he should be able to post bond.

The denial of bond "clearly puts the accused...Mr. Parker or anyone in a situation where he would be compelled to testify," Morgan said. "That violates his absolute privilege against self-incrimination," guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, he said.

Morgan also claimed that Parker's presumption of innocence has "been destroyed," because "a federal judge (Smith) has said there is probable cause the offense was committed."

Parker was arrested Feb. 4 at the Dallas area video store where he worked. He was returned to Midland several days later, and has been held in the federal section of the city jail.

On March 3, following a request from Morgan he was sent to the U.S. Medical Center for Federal Prisoners in Springfield, Mo. to undergo a medical and psychological evaluation. He was returned seven weeks later.

During the 20-minute hearing, the 6-foot-5-inch Parker watched the proceedings carefully. He seemed relaxed, and outside the courthouse even winked at a television cameraman.

Morgan also complained to Bunton that because his client was denied bond, the preparation of his defense has been difficult.

Rules at the city jail allow Parker use of the telephone only once a week, and when he confers with him in person, it is an "uncomfortable arrangement" with jailers and police officers around, Morgan told the judge.

Because of his detention, Morgan is also unable to visit the alleged crime scene with his client, he said.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery spoke briefly, and challenged Morgan's assertions.

The constitutionality of the Bail Reform Act, though frequently questioned, has been upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court, Beery told Bunton.

"One would think that has been put to rest," Beery said.

At the close of the hearing, Morgan — who has filed at least 20 written motions in the case — asked the judge about a separate hearing on a motion to move the trial to San Antonio.

Morgan claims his defendant can't receive a fair trial in Midland because of the extensive publicity of the case.

But Bunton told Morgan he would not schedule a separate hearing on the motion for a venue change, because it would generate more news coverage.

Instead, the judge said he would wait until potential jurors were questioned on the first day of the trial.

"If the panel has pre-conceived ideas, pre-conceived notions about the case because they have heard so much about it, we will deal with it at that time," Bunton said.

Morgan, who had planned to issue several subpoenas for the venue hearing, had no comment on the judge's remarks.

Dukakis cheers; Bush awaits endorsement

Associated Press

Democrat Michael Dukakis hailed his lopsided presidential primary victories in West Virginia and Nebraska, declaring: "I'm working hard...to wrap it up." Jesse Jackson, his hopes of derailing Dukakis fading fast, nonetheless vowed, "We will take it all the way to the end."

On the Republican side, Vice President Bush, poised to pick up President Reagan's formal endorsement today, cruised to uncontested wins in Tuesday's contests in Nebraska and West Virginia. The vice president already has a mathematical lock on the Republican nomination.

But Bush's showing in Nebraska pointed to possible weakness in the fight to come this fall. Sen. Bob Dole of neighboring Kansas, who dropped out of the Republican race almost two months ago, still siphoned off nearly a fourth of the vote.

Even though he has mowed down all his rivals, Bush has made weak showings in some farm states.

Bush still has token opposition from former television evangelist Pat Robertson, who technically remains a candidate. But Robertson concedes he has no hope of getting the nomination now — Bush went over the top in delegates two weeks ago, in the Pennsylvania primary.

Reagan, who had pledged to remain neutral until the nomination fight was settled, was expected to finally bestow his formal blessing today at the White House. Reagan and Bush are also scheduled to appear together tonight at a Republican Party function in Washington.

With two more wins in his column, Dukakis moved within striking distance of the 2,081 delegates needed to nail the Democratic nomination. According to the latest AP delegate count, Dukakis had 1,581 to Jackson's 942.

In West Virginia, Dukakis captured 239,159 votes, or 79 percent, to Jackson's 42,942 or 14 percent, with 95 percent of the precincts reporting. In Nebraska, Dukakis received 104,996 votes, or 63 percent to Jackson's 44,275 or 26 percent, with 99 percent of the precincts in.

Dukakis was winning all 37 of the delegates in West Virginia and 18 of the 25 in Nebraska.

Exit polls suggested Dukakis was beginning to make some inroads into Jackson's black support, which has been all but monolithic in contests to date. Only about 4 percent of West Virginia's voters are black, but about a third of them voted for the Massachusetts governor, ABC voter polls on Tuesday indicated.

But Jackson won 24 percent of the white vote in Nebraska, one of his best showings of the primary season among white voters, according to ABC. Dukakis, for his part, did well among Democrats in both states who voted for Reagan in 1984, which would bode well for him in a fall confrontation with Bush. And he was winning support across the ideological spectrum.

"Voters of different ideologies look at Dukakis and are seeing what they want to see," said ABC News poll analyst Doug Muzzio. "In a sense he's all ideologies to all voters."

Bush won 71,606 votes or 89 percent in West Virginia, with 69 percent of the precincts reporting.

ARMS

"I think there's still time to get the consent of the Senate to ratification prior to the summit. But these matters have to be dealt with," he said on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America."

The treaty, signed by Reagan and Gorbachev at the Washington summit meeting in December, is the first to scrap an entire category of nuclear arms. It also provides for unprecedented on-site inspection of missile factories and bases to guard against cheating.

In the last few weeks, the Soviets had raised objections to various procedures proposed by the U.S. side. These include the scope of inspection within designated areas and use of cameras.

Asked if he thought the Soviets were backsliding or causing trouble, Shultz did not criticize Moscow. In fact, he said of Shevardnadze, "he wants to see the INF treaty completed and into operation as much as I do. As problems arise, I am sure he will want to look at them."

Shultz said he hoped the treaty will be ratified before Reagan begins the summit with Gorbachev. But he said, "I can't tell what the Senate will do."

Shultz and Shevardnadze planned to meet twice today and twice Thursday on the problems and on the wide range of summit topics, including human rights.

The differences over verification have prompted the Senate to postpone indefinitely ratification of the treaty to scrap 683 Soviet missiles and 364 U.S. rockets.

With the Moscow summit less than three weeks away, the trouble over the treaty is a severe setback to the arms control process.

Already, there is virtually no hope of completing a second accord to sharply reduce long-range U.S. and Soviet nuclear weapons before the summit.

The United States says the Soviets are trying to restrict the access of U.S. monitors to Soviet missile plants and sites. This would leave the United States unable to guarantee that the Soviets are not cheating.

Inmate's execution stayed

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A death row inmate who wanted to die could only grit his teeth and mumble after his execution was stayed less than six hours before its scheduled time.

On Tuesday evening, following an appeal filed on behalf of James Smith's mother, the U.S. Supreme Court granted a reprieve. No vote among the justices was released.

Alexzene Hamilton of Indianapolis contended her son was mentally incompetent. Her attorneys also claimed mitigating evidence in his case was not allowed to be considered by jurors who sentenced Smith to death.

"I'm praising God right now," Mrs. Hamilton said after hearing of the stay. "That's all I can say, I just thank God."

Smith, waiting in a holding cell next to the Texas death chamber, gritted his teeth and said something inaudible upon hearing the news, said Texas Department of Corrections spokesman Charles Brown.

He was later transferred back to his usual cell at the prison's Ellis I unit. Smith, 37, was convicted of the 1983 robbery-slaying of a Houston insurance office manager Larry Rohus.

Testimony at his trial showed he was tackled by witnesses while fleeing the shooting scene and that a gun he was carrying was linked to the Rohus slaying.

"I'm very disappointed," said Raymond Rohus, the victim's brother. "He was caught red-handed. I don't know what else they can do besides go ahead and take care of their obligation to get rid of the guy."

Smith has no attorney and resisted attempts for legal help.

"I don't understand all this clinging to life," Smith said in a recent interview. "Life is a temporary situation. The spirit moves on. Death is like eating a prune in the morning. It's a natural function."

Tuesday morning, he requested "Rhaeakunda dirt" for his final meal later in the day — a request Texas Department of Corrections did not honor. According to Texas A&M University soil experts, the dirt is believed to be eaten in voodoo rituals.

Grand jury declines to indict officers in prisoner's death

LIBERTY, Texas (AP) — A Liberty County grand jury declined to indict any of 11 officers accused of being involved in the death of an Cleveland jail inmate.

After hearing testimony from 28 witnesses over three-and-one-half days, the grand jury on Tuesday cleared seven Cleveland police officers, two sheriff's deputies and two state troopers of criminal charges in the March 16 death of Kenneth Earl Simpson, 30.

"The grand jury heard evidence on all aspects of the case," said Liberty County District Attorney Michael Little. "The evidence led them to believe that no criminal offense was committed by any of the officers involved."

An autopsy report stated Simpson died of asphyxiation caused by trauma to the neck, but the medical examiner has yet to rule on whether the death was homicide or accidental.

Cleveland Mayor Richard Boyett told the Beaumont Enterprise a decision on whether to reinstate the officers will be made today or Thursday.

"We are going to try to make the decision as soon as possible," Boyett said. "I don't see that we've got any alternative but to let them go back to work. We want to have our legal people check it out first."

The final decision to reinstate the officers will be made by Chief Harley Lovings, Boyett said. Lovings will talk with council members and the city attorney before making his decision, the mayor said.

Cleveland police officers Capt. Ike Hines, Darrell Broussard, Laverl Sweeten, Tom Yates, Ann Merchant, James Primeaux and Larry McMillan had been suspended with pay pending the outcome of the grand jury probe.

Deputies Willie Carter and Royce Wheeler and state troopers John McDaniel and Don Smith remained on duty through the grand jury proceeding.

Cleveland police arrested Simpson on disorderly conduct charges after he allegedly got into a shoving match with Yates. The officer accused him of stealing an ink pen.

Simpson later struggled with officers after they found him smoking marijuana in his cell.

Nearby residents began gathering at the home of Simpson's mother, Naomi, as word spread of the grand jury's decision.

Man suing church, ex-nun for $5 million

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Church officials said they heard rumors but had no evidence when a man first told them he believed his wife and a nun had a lesbian relationship that was breaking up a 12-year marriage.

Steve Woolverton of Port Isabel contends the church did know, and filed a $5 million lawsuit against the Roman Catholic Diocese of Brownsville, the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Texas and former nun Mary Kregar.

The civil trial entered its first full day of testimony in state district court Tuesday.

Sister Mary Franchon Pirkl, executive councillor of the Franciscan Order to which Mary Kregar belonged, said in a videotaped deposition that she was first told in January 1984 of other nuns' suspicions about the relationship between the two women.

She said she confronted Sister Kregar with the story, but the nun assured her it was only a friendship.

Later, Sister Pirkl said she learned there had been a lesbian relationship, and that Sister Kregar also acknowledged a different homosexual relationship with another nun.

Ms. Kregar was removed from the Rochester, Minn.-based order in Aug. 1984 by a "mutual decision," Sister Pirkl said, primarily because of Ms. Kregar's inability to lead a celibate life.

Woolverton's alienation of affection suit claims that the marriage ended in May 1984 because of a lesbian relationship between Mary Woolverton and Sister Mary Kregar. Sister Kregar was assigned to Our Lady Star of the Sea Catholic Church in Port Isabel from 1983 until mid-1984.

Woolverton said in the suit filed in 1986 that he confronted church officials about the relationship that he said was undermining his marriage, and asked to have Sister Kregar removed from the Port Isabel parish, but that the church refused to intervene.

"(Brownsville Bishop John) Fitzpatrick flatly refused to remove defendant Kregar, and the illicit relationship between Kregar and Mary Woolverton continued unabated," the lawsuit states.

The suit also alleges that the then-nun had a lesbian relationship with Mrs. Woolverton and "suggested reading material to plaintiff's wife which dealt with subjects which furthered defendant Kregar's illicit purposes."

Father Ben Verbrugge of the Port Isabel parish testified via videotape that Woolverton had contacted him about the alleged relationship, but that he left the matter to Sister Cecilia Rolling, director of religious education for the parish.

Sister Rolling testified, also on videotape, that she had no proof of a lesbian relationship.

"I don't believe that you just accept rumors and then act on them," Sister Rolling said.

Mother criticizes bail set in students' robbery

DALLAS (AP) — A high school student who has spent more than two weeks in jail because he can't afford to post $100,000 bail has drawn the attention of Dallas County Commissioners.

Commissioner John Wiley Price, citing jail overcrowding, said the bond amount was "capricious" and questioned whether the amount was proper.

Valonzo "Lonnie" Jackson of Garland was jailed since April 25, when a state district judge increased his bail from $2,000. He is accused of robbing two students of about $100 over a four-month period in schoolyard shakedowns.

"That's clearly exorbitant and I'm sorry we just heard about it today," Price said of the bond increase.

But Judge Mike Keasler said that amount was too low for a charge involving a second-degree felony. After Jackson's third court appearance without an attorney, on February 25, Keasler raised the bail, ordered the defendant jailed and appointed attorney Jason Jacoby to represent him.

"These are serious charges," Keasler said, noting that he routinely increases bail in such situations to ensure that defendants keep their word to make court appearances.

Jackson's mother told Dallas County commissioners Monday the 17-year-old Richardson Berkner High School student shouldn't be in jail and can't afford the $15,000 to hire an attorney to bail him out.

Ruth Jackson, an accounting clerk, told commissioners her son has been persecuted by school officials who don't like a black youth having a white girlfriend. At her side stood a supportive Carolyn Walton, mother of Jackson's girlfriend.

Jacoby told the Associated Press Tuesday evening that "there is progression in the case," but that he couldn'd discuss specifics.

"We're at a delicate point of negotiations with the state and other people," he said. "All this publicity may already have slowed things down a little."

A trial has been set for July 5.

According to police reports, Jackson and a classmate allegedly robbed two other students daily between September and December 1987, threatening them, pushing them and pulling at their clothes.

The victims, aged 15 and 17, told officers they feared they would be hurt if they didn't hand over the money, said police spokesman Jim Wheatley. A grand jury indicted Jackson on February 9.

Police obtained a warrant for Jackson's arrest January 4 from Municipal Judge Carl McClellan.

Back-to-nature group demands right to camp in East Texas

LUFKIN, Texas (AP) — Health officials say the Rainbow Family's planned sojourn in Texas could strain resources, but members of the back-to-nature group say they have a right to camp in an East Texas forest.

U.S. Magistrate J. Michael Bradford said he would make a recommendation today in federal Judge William Wayne Justice's court on the U.S. Forest Service's effort to block the large gathering.

Tuesday, health officials testified at a hearing requested by the forest service to halt a Rainbow Family "tribal council" this weekend and a larger gathering in July. The forest service says the loosely knit group had not applied for special-use permits.

Dr. Marietta Crowder of the Tyler Health Department testified that a Rainbow Family convention the size of one in North Carolina last year that drew about 17,000 people would strain drinking-water supplies and garbage collection abilities.

Members of the "peace and environmentalist" group gathered before the hearing on the federal courthouse steps to protest the possible prevention of their gathering. The group, which held its first gathering in 1972, has no headquarters and no membership list, said spokesman Garrick Beck in New York.

"This is the people's land and the people don't need a permit to be on their land," said a family member who identified herself as Little White Owl. "We don't want to argue and don't want to fight. It just happens that we are a group of people called the Rainbow Family who are fighting for the rights of all of us.

"I come to the cathedral of nature once a year to be with my brothers and sisters. All we are saying is come home and find out what we are all about, and you'll find that we aren't any different from you."

Family members had refused to accept the permit applications offered them, said Billy Ball, forest service special agent. And Harry Switzer, an agency supervisor in the lands and minerals section, said a permit is required for the council and a planned July 4 weekend gathering.

But one family member said the group didn't need applications because the Constitution was its permit, Switzer said.

Family members were subpoenaed for the hearing before Bradford, who said the federal government must prove "immediate, irreversible damage" to stop the gathering.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Steve Mason called to the stand seven family members, but all refused to testify, claiming Fifth Amendment guarantees against self-incrimination.

STATE in brief

Construction halted to save egrets' nesting

DALLAS (AP) — Tree-cutting on an endangered bird's migratory grounds was halted at least until the end of their nesting period after outraged environmentalists protested the clearing for new tennis courts, an official said.

A construction crew knocked down about 25 trees containing nests of the endangered snowy egrets, but the protests brought at least a temporary end to the cutting on the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School campus.

"Of course, we'll still have to consider our longterm plans, but for now our goal is to just let the birds settle back down and not have any further loss," spokeswoman Kathy Costello said.

"That means that, for right now, we've halted construction and we're not going to do anything more," she said. "First, we've got to get past the nesting period."

Dallas environmentalists and nearby residents said the grove of trees has long been known as a rookery, or nesting area, for migratory birds now in the midst of their nesting period, which began about three weeks ago.

City searches for insurer

NOLANVILLE, Texas (AP) — Officials in this central Texas community are scrambling to find a new insuror for the city's emergency vehicles.

Nolanville's liability coverage expired at midnight Tuesday, forcing the city's four police cars, two fire trucks and ambulance off the streets.

"I don't want to alarm the public," said Mayor June Parker, adding a company had agreed to provide insurance for the city, but would not cover the emergency vehicles.

"I don't know why we can't get insurance coverage. I can't give any details at this moment," said Parker, who was elected during Saturday's municipal elections.

Murder trial continues

GIDDINGS, Texas (AP) — A 9-year-old Bryan girl whose body was found two weeks after she was abducted from her home had not yet learned to be wary of strangers, her mother testified Tuesday.

"I taught her a stranger was just a friend she hadn't met," Kandy Kirtland's mother, Jan Dell, said in tearful testimony. "I didn't want her running around the world scared."

The testimony capped the second day of the capital-murder trial of James Otto Earhart, a Bryan junk dealer accused in the girl's death. He was arrested May 26, the same day the child's body was discovered in east Bryan.

During Tuesday's testimony, four witnesses said they saw the man in the neighborhood from which the girl disappeared and an expert said the girl probably died within hours of her disappearance.

Austin to collect fines

AUSTIN (AP) — Hoping to track down about $13 million in unpaid fines, Austin's city government has fielded city marshals for the first time in 64 years.

In the past four years, about 156,000 outstanding Class C misdemeanor warrants — most for traffic-related offenses — have accumulated, said Lt. Dell Shaw of the Austin police warrant division.

Shaw said that if every fine were paid, the city would collect $13 million. "We have so many outstanding warrants on our files. We hope this program will reduce that number," he said.

In 1924, city marshals in Austin were responsible for peace-keeping duties in the city, officials said. Their jobs later were assumed by the police department.

Otwell school inspected

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Authorities launched a surprise inspection at the Rev. W.N. Otwell's church-run school this morning, initially seizing five youths they said were living there in violation of a court order.

Officials from the attorney general's office, Texas Department of Human Services, Department of Public Safety and the Texas Rangers arrived at the school about 6 a.m. and began inspecting birth certificates of children at the unlicensed facility, said Deborah Anderson, secretary for the Community Baptist Church.

A state district judge ruled April 12 that state officials could inspect the compound and remove children found there without a relative or guardian.

Four plead guilty in motorcycle gang drug case

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Four defendants pleaded guilty to charges filed in connection with an alleged amphetamine manufacturing ring operated by a motorcycle gang.

The four were among six slated for trial Tuesday before U.S. District Judge Howell Cobb. Prospective jurors were instructed to return to the courthouse today for jury selection in the cases of the two remaining defendants.

Security was tight during Tuesday's proceedings, but officials declined to say whether threats of violence had been received.

In August 1987, a grand jury indicted 21 Bandido motorcycle gang members or associates on drug-related charges following a four-year investigation into allegations of a drug manufacturing operation in southeast Texas.

Federal prosecutors have alleged the conspiracy to manufacture and distribute methamphetamine involved 15 laboratory sites, including Houston, Nederland and Bridge City.

Defendants who plead guilty Tuesday were identified as Linda Jane Clark, 35, of Vidor, one count each of manufacture and possession with the intent to distribute methamphetamine; Dennis Jerome Gnirk, 40, of Houston, one count of conspiring to manufacture the drugs phenylacetone and methamphetamine and distribute them, and one count of aiding in the manufacture of the drugs; Patrick Michael Jackson, 40, of Houston, two counts of aiding in the manufacture of three pounds of methamphetamine; and William Lynn Brown, 44, Vidor, one charge of conspiring to distribute the drug.

Robert Bruce Clark, 36, who is imprisoned in the Texas Department of Corrections, and Gregory Claude Clark, 33, of Lumberton, still face trial in the case. They are brothers.

Cobb has ordered attorneys not to discuss the case and denied a request for separate trials

Dillard's

BUCHANAN

Lebanon was Israel's Vietnam. The military superiority of the IDF over its neighbors may be greater than ever, but the national spirit within Israel is nothing today like it was in 1967.

The United States' commitments in the region — to keep Israel alive and free, to keep the Gulf oil flowing, to keep the friendship of the moderate Arabs, to keep Soviet power out — are among the few foreign policy goals upon which Americans still seem broadly to agree. But America's capacity to maintain these interests has not grown with anything like the accretion of power of those who threaten them.

One day, too, the United States must come to terms with the Iranian revolution. Post-Khomeini, we will have to reach some modus vivendi. For Iran, with her 50 million people and her geographical position, is going to be the permanent power in the Persian Gulf, whether ruled by an ayatollah, a general or a shah.

And eventually, Iran, even revolutionary Iran, must come to see that the permanent threat to her security and integrity does not come from the Superpower on the other side of the world, but from the avaricious Superpower with which she shares hundreds of miles of frontier.

Until the day comes, however, when the United States can re-establish with Iran a relationship other than implacable hostility, America's national interest, as well as the vital interests of our friends in the Middle East, dictate a policy of containment of Iran, coupled with a sober awareness that ideas, even terribly misguided ideas, cannot always be contained by land armies and naval flotillas.

SOUTHERN AFRICA

Western and American policy toward the Republic of South Africa represents the triumph of moralism over strategic self-interest.

In an Africa beset by corruption, starvation, tribalism and tyranny, South Africa is arguably the only successful country on the continent. Yet, the West has joined an international cartel to cripple that economy and bring down that government. Apparently, it is necessary to destroy South Africa in order to save her.

As leader of the West, America's place should have been at South Africa's side, sheltering this tormented country from her enemies, as South Africa makes the necessary transition from apartheid to a more just society. Instead, Congress cast our lot with those attempting to kick South Africa to death for a sin of segregation of which America herself was guilty for decades.

Grounded in hypocrisy, economic sanctions are utterly self-destructive. Black Africans are today going without work, their families without income, so that self-righteous Americans can sleep better at night.

The goal of U.S. policy in southern Africa should be a subcontinent oriented toward the West, a subcontinent from which our Communist enemies have been expelled. How does destroying South Africa, a Western as well as an African nation, conceivably contribute to that objective?

In the war between East and West for control of southern Africa, the Communists control Angola, wield decisive influence in Mozambique and Zimbabwe, and have placed their wagers upon the terrorist cadres of the African National Congress. The assets of the West are South Africa, democratic Namibia, the UNITA resistance forces of Jonas Savimibi in Angola, and the RENAMO rebels of Mozambique.

Any policy designed to protect vital Western interests — in the minerals, geography, sea lanes, and people of southern Africa — will build upon, not destroy, those assets.

ARMS CONTROL

To the common man, the concept behind the ABM Treaty — i.e., that the more naked we are to atomic attack, the more secure we are — sounds like the essence of lunacy. To the arms control community, however, mutual nakedness to nuclear attack (Mutual Assured Destruction) is defined dogma, an article of faith. Among arms controllers, the hostility to SDI is as virulent as in Moscow. We must not provoke the Russians by defending ourselves; both nations must remain totally vulnerable, say the arms controllers, for both nations to remain secure.

It is in the major premise of the "arms control" syllogism that there lies a logical fallacy, the pathetic fallacy, the belief that evil inheres in things, i.e., atomic weapons, not in people. We are threatened, it is said, not by the men in the Kremlin, and their awesome military machine, but by the nuclear arsenals on both sides; it is the "arms race" that threatens mankind. As we get rid of the weapons, we reduce the danger of war.

Nuclear weapons, however, are the ultima ratio of Western civilization, the last argument against our annihilation. That we are seeking security in their abolition is a manifestation either of religious faith, or mental disorder.

When men cease to believe in God, Chesterton wrote, they do not believe in nothing, they believe in anything. Arms control is the Golden Calf of a West that has lost faith in itself. It is the laetrile of secular man who does not want to believe he is under a sentence of death, or to hear what is required of him to survive. To see Ronald Reagan speak romantically of a "world without nuclear weapons," is saddening.

In a realistic defense policy, America's strategic needs are quite simple — enough weapons, offensive and defensive, to ride out a Soviet first strike, and destroy, with the U.S. retaliatory blow, every major target of military value in the Soviet Empire. Under those conditions, the hardheaded men in Moscow would never strike, and the West would be immune to blackmail.

While a recent national survey found that half the American people believed the United States had a "good" or an "excellent" defense against Soviet missiles, the truth is, we have no defense. We are forbidden by the ABM treaty of 1972 from defending ourselves from rocket attack; and, even if we had the legal right, the United States today lacks the military capacity to stop a single one of the 9,000 atomic warheads Moscow has targeted upon the United States. Given America's near abandonment of its air defense system decades ago, the U.S. Air Force would have a hellish time stopping an all-out attack from Aeroflot. Should, God forbid, deterrence fail, the United States will be, literally, at the mercy of Moscow.

STAR WARS

Strategic Defense, SDI, is one of the great ideas of President Reagan, one of the great ideas of our age — a futuristic defense of America based not on the duplicitous signature of some Soviet Party chairman, but on the technological superiority of the United States. Using space-based, and land-based, anti-missile weapons (laser-beam, charged particle beam, kinetic-energy weapons), SDI, fully deployed, would be capable of so "degrading" a Soviet first-strike against the United States, that no sane Soviet commander would even contemplate launching one — and inviting a retaliatory attack upon the Soviet Union.

No treaty Moscow will offer us is worth giving up SDI. Indeed, with the advances already made in defensive technologies, with the 150 billion rubles the Soviets have sunk into strategic defense — SDI is one day soon going to be a reality. The only question left is whether America, or the Soviet Union, will be the nation defended.

Prinicipal presidential battle anticipated on West Coast

By JOEL CONNELLY
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Gov. Michael Dukakis must carry California to win the White House, making the West Coast a premier political battleground of the 1988 campaign, Vice President George Bush's campaign manager, Lee Atwater, said Tuesday.

But, he added, Bush, who has the Republican presidential nomination sewed up and is expected to get President Reagan's official endorsement today, can triumph in the November election even if he loses California.

Atwater listed as "highly competitive" the states of California, Washington, Oregon and Hawaii."If we get cavalier, we can lose one or all of 'em," he added.

The South Carolina-bred political strategist predicted that Dukakis, the anticipated Democratic nominee, will make few breakthroughs in the South and, therefore, must get the 47 electoral votes of America's most populous state.

"I am convinced the Democrats cannot win the election without California," said Atwater. "I can come up with three very plausible ways we can do it. But California will break the Democrats back if they can't carry it."

The upcoming June 7 California primary, while no longer vital to either party's nomination, is shaping up as a preview of the November election campaign. Dukakis is scheduled to spend more than a week in California. The Rev. Jesse Jackson will be there 23 days. And Atwater said Bush will devote "a large chunk of time" to the state.

In a lengthy interview with the Hearst Newspapers' Washington Bureau, Bush's manager predicted Dukakis will be a "tough, competitive" opponent in November. And he said the Massachusetts governor has avoided some of the image problems which burdened ex-Vice President Walter Mondale when he was the Democratic nominee in 1984.

"I think Dukakis has shown durability, an ability to organize, self-discipline and the ability to stick with a plan," said Atwater. "He hasn't gone out there like Walter Mondale and cultivated the party's interest groups."

While describing Dukakis as "a typical frost-belt liberal," Atwater gave grudging credit to the Massachusetts governor for "scrambling to get out to the center where the electorate is."

Bush's chief strategist also conceded that the frost-belt governor might appeal in the political climate of the West Coast.

"I think the biggest notion going against us (Republicans) is the idea of historical cycles," said Atwater. "Change is essential to that. West Coast states are more change driven than other states around the country.... I think overall the notion of change in this year's election is minimal, but enough in states like Washington, Oregon and California to make them competitive."

Atwater also described Washington as "a critical state" which "no one can count in the bag right now."

The Bush strategist's predictions run contrary to American political trends over the past nine presidential elections. Except for President Lyndon Johnson's 1964 landslide against Sen. Barry Goldwater, the Republican Party has owned a virtual lock on the electoral votes of 13 western states.

The most recent Democratic president to win because of support in the West was Harry Truman in 1948. Democrats last carried California and Oregon in 1964. Vice President Hubert Humphrey took only Washington and Hawaii in 1968. And Hawaii was the only western state to vote for Jimmy Carter in 1976 and 1980.

By contrast, Atwater predicted Dukakis can carry only Georgia and "perhaps one or two other" Southern states — even if the Massachusetts governor picks a running mate from Dixie, such as Georgia Sen. Sam Nunn.

He said Florida "would become competitive" if the Sunshine State's Sen. Robert Graham is chosen as Dukakis' running mate.

Bush's manager tried to downplay controversies which have swirled around the Reagan Administration in recent weeks.

Asked about controversy over whether the vice president knew Panama's Gen. Manuel Noriega was involved in drug trafficking, Atwater replied: "That's got a shelf life of some weeks, no more."

The campaign manager said Bush took "tough shots" over U.S. arms sales to Iran and diversion of profits to Nicaragua's contra guerillas. But Atwater claimed the Reagan Administration's worst scandal has lost any importance as a campaign issue. "I've seen nothing to convince me it will change any votes," added Atwater.

However, the Iran-Contra issue continued to dog the vice president in a Washington, D.C., courtroom yesterday.

A Seattle lawyer, Michael Withey asked U.S. District Judge Aubrey Robinson to order that two of Bush's national security aides produce documents relating to the vice president's role in the Iran-Contra affair. The aides, Donald Gregg and Col. Samuel Watson, have withheld 200 pages of documents on national security grounds.

"It is apparent that Vice President Bush has an important personal and political interest in whether the documents subpoenaed are to be disclosed," Withey argued in a legal brief.

Withey is aiding the Christic Institute in a civil lawsuit stemming out of the 1984 bombing of a press conference held by dissident contra leader Eden Pastora.

Karnes to face Kerrey in Nebraska; Moore in running for fourth term

Associated Press

Republican primary voters gave West Virginia Gov. Arch Moore a shot at a record fourth term and Nebraska Sen. David Karnes a hard-fought victory in the first election of his brief political career.

But Karnes, who survived an aggressive challenge by Rep. Hal Daub, may have a tougher time defeating the Democratic primary winner, former Gov. Bob Kerrey.

Other results from Tuesday's primaries in the two states showed Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd easily winning West Virginia's Democratic nomination for a sixth term. He will face state Sen. Jay Wolfe, who won the Republican primary. In the Democratic primary for governor, insurance executive Gaston Caperton won a seven-way race for the chance to face Moore, who edged millionaire businessman John Raese.

Nebraska voters approved a measure raising salaries of lawmakers in the nation's only one-chamber Legislature from $4,800 to $12,000. It's their first raise in 20 years.

And in Nebraska's 2nd District, where Daub gave up his seat, Democrats denied a congressional nomination to Cece Zorinsky, widow of U.S. Sen. Edward Zorinsky. Instead, former state Sen. Pete Hoagland will be the Democratic nominee and will face Jerry Schenken, winner of a four-way Republican race.

"We did it!" an elated Karnes told supporters as he claimed victory late Tuesday. "And the thing that I am so proud about is that we did it the old-fashioned way — we earned every single vote."

Nebraska's GOP Senate race had been rated a toss-up in pre-election polls, but Karnes — who was appointed 14 months ago and is the nation's youngest senator at age 38 — won by a wide margin. With 99 percent of the vote counted, Karnes had 114,101 votes or 55 percent and Daub had 93,236 votes or 45 percent.

Daub was quick to congratulate Karnes on "his very sound and impressive victory" and promised to help him in November.

Karnes was a supporter of Gov. Kay Orr's election and she appointed him to fill Zorinsky's seat after he died in March 1987. Daub, 47, was one of several GOP regulars who sought the job.

For the Democratics, Kerrey had 152,363 votes or 91.6 percent and Ken Michaelis, a disbarred lawyer, had 13,889 votes or 8.4 percent.

"I know the task over the next five months is going to be difficult," Kerrey said, shrugging off polls that have showed him the clear favorite.

The 44-year-old Kerrey, who lost part of a leg in Vietnam and won a Medal of Honor, has been a popular figure in Nebraska and lent some glamour to the farm state when he dated movie star Debra Winger.

In West Virginia, with 82 percent of the vote in, Moore led with 60,978 votes or 52.6 percent to Raese's 54,891 votes or 47.4 percent.

Raese, who accused Moore of failing to deal with the state's fiscal crisis, also lost his previous bid for office, a 1984 Senate race against Democrat Jay Rockefeller.

Moore, 65, won his first two terms as governor in 1968 and 1972, but was barred by law from seeking a third straight term. After Rockefeller served two terms, Moore was elected again in 1984.

Caperton's victory in the Democratic primary followed a campaign so bitter it threatened to leave his party divided.

"He bought this election fair and square," said Clyde See, the former House of Delegates Speaker who finished second and was outspent $1.8 million to $500,000.

"This is a victory for change," said Caperton, a newcomer to politics, "a victory for those who believe we can create jobs and prosperity in West Virginia, a victory for education."

With 82 percent of the vote in, Caperton had 102,514 votes or 37.6 percent, See had 72,153 votes or 26.4 percent and the five others divided the remainder.

In the Democratic Senate race, the 71-year-old Byrd had 197,523 votes or 80.7 percent, while moving company owner Bob Myers had 47,122 votes or 19.3 percent.

"I am delighted by the overwhelming vote of confidence that I have received," said Byrd.

Post office services may be restored by end of summer

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Post office window service and collections could be back to normal by the end of summer, but that won't mean the end of the agency's financial struggles, according to Postmaster General Anthony Frank.

Frank said Tuesday that he is committed to restoring service that was cut earlier this year in the face of congressionally imposed budget restrictions.

But reopening counters and restoring Sunday sorting and collection means finding $9 million a month in savings somewhere else, he said.

With luck, he said, that can be accomplished by late summer. But he added that services will be restored only when he is sure that they can be kept open.

Hundreds of construction projects for new postal facilities also were canceled or delayed to save money.

"Long after people forget about the windows being closed," building projects will still be delayed, land will have been sold to someone else and construction costs will be even higher, Frank said.

Frank, who took over as postmaster on March 1, said that explaining the need for service cuts at the same time rates are rising has been difficult.

The rate increases imposed on April 3 don't help, he said, because the accounting system mandated by Congress results in the increased income being counted as a reduction in the national debt, not as extra money for the agency.

On other topics, Frank said:

— A system may be considered in which notices would automatically be sent out for people filing change or address forms.

— The agency should help serve as a go-between for other federal agencies and the public, such as by making catalogs of Government Printing Office booklets available in lobbies. The current program to deliver an AIDS booklet to every home is a good example, he said.

— It is "amazing" how many suggestions for new stamps he receives. He said he doesn't see anything wrong with issuing a stamp to honor singer Elvis Presley, although so far the independent committee that makes the final choices has turned down that idea.

The budget problems may be eased by a House bill that would remove the Postal Service from the federal budget. The agency had not been part of the budget until 1985.

"You really can't include us in the budget process, when we don't use taxes," Frank said. Direct subsidies to the agency were ended several years ago.

In addition to restoring the services that were cut earlier, Frank said he wants to find ways to add other services.

For example, automated postal tellers now under development could be placed in shopping malls, more markets and other stores encouraged to sell stamps at their checkouts and automation improved to speed post office lobby service.

Frank said battling for renewed public confidence means both improved service and improving perception of that service.

He described a program in which postal carriers placed specific items in home mailboxes and, later, asked the residents to fill out forms indicating whether those items had been received.

When the item was a large white envelope, only 0.3 percent reported that it had not been delivered, he said. But when it was a commercial catalog, 11 percent of the people who received it reported that it had not arrived.

"We know the items were delivered" but the perceived value of the item makes a difference, he said.

Witness says gunman had 'horrid grin' on his face during rampage

OZARK, Ark. (AP) — A gunman wore a "horrid grin" as he aimed his revolver at office workers during a Christmas rampage in which he allegedly killed 16 people, including 14 of his relatives, a witness testified.

R. Gene Simmons, 47, stepped over the body of one of his victims, "took a stance and pointed the gun at me," Juli Money testified Tuesday in Simmons' murder trial, holding her arms out with hands clasped to show how he held the gun.

"I screamed, 'No!' and dived behind some boxes," she said. "He was grinning. He had a horrid grin that looked like false teeth and his eyes were wide open."

Ms. Money, 35, said she grabbed her head thinking she had been shot "because I felt the heat from the bullet" that whizzed past her head.

Simmons, a retired Air Force master sergeant, is on trial in the Dec. 28 deaths of former co-worker Kathy C. Kendrick, 24, and James D. Chaffin, 33, in Russellville. Four people were wounded during the shootings. The state is seeking the death penalty.

Simmons is to be tried July 18 for murder charges in the deaths of 14 relatives, including his wife, his children and his grandchildren. The bodies were found at his home near Dover after the shootings in nearby Russellville. Police said the 14 were killed during the Christmas holidays.

According to police, Simmons used two .22-caliber revolvers to kill Miss Kendrick, who friends say rejected Simmons' amorous attention, and Chaffin, who apparently was a chance victim. Police said Simmons had a grudge against most of the people he is accused of shooting.

Chaffin was shot in the right eye at point-blank range as he opened a door at Taylor Oil Co. after he and Ms. Money heard two shots fired in the office area, Ms. Money said. The gunman had already wounded the company president, Rusty Taylor.

It was Chaffin's body, Ms. Money testified, that Simmons stepped over before aiming at her.

David Salyer, who was shot in the forehead, also said Simmons fired with a grin on his face.

Simmons, who had worked for Taylor and Salyer, then went to a nearby law office where Miss Kendrick worked and stood in front of her desk, according to another witness, Brenda Jones. Miss Kendrick returned to her desk a short time later and said, "Can I help you?"

Simmons had his hands in his pockets but jerked his right arm up and started firing a pistol, Miss Jones said. "He missed her at first," she said. "She just stood there. He kept shooting. Finally, he hit her."

Prosecutor John Bynum said in his opening statement Tuesday that Miss Kendrick, a legal secretary, was shot at least four times in the head as she sat at her desk.

About 60 spectators were present in Franklin County Circuit Court, including relatives of some of Simmons' family members.

Cancer victim made Army general for a day

FORT INDIANTOWN GAP, Pa. (AP) — Given the chance to be anything they wanted for a day, many kids might choose to become president of the United States, an astronaut or a performer.

But not 4-year-old Jamie Dayhoff, who was recently given such an opportunity by Dream Come True, an organization that gives seriously and terminally ill children trips, gifts and celebrity visits.

Jamie, who has lymphatic cancer, always said he wanted to be a soldier so when Army recruiters commissioned him a one-star general Monday, he was ready.

He stood tall as he was outfitted in a tailored battle dress uniform, cap, general's star, a Combat Infantry Badge and dog tags.

"Doggie tags, woof, woof," Jamie said as the ID tags were slipped over his head. "Woo, they're cold."

He swore "to support the Constitution...against all enemies" and saluted Lt. Col. Robert Thorlakson, commander of the Harrisburg Battalion, U.S. Army Recruiting Command.

"I'm here to be a general, a GI Joe, a good guy," Jamie said before asking Thorlakson's advice on what orders to give his soldiers.

"Tell them to stand straight, march good, run fast and be good boys," Thorlakson said.

Despite being a rather young general, the Easton boy took to his duties like an old pro.

He fired two blank rounds from an M-16 rifle, carefully retrieved the spent shells and stored them in his battle fatigues.

"I want to do it again," Jamie said after trying some electronic rifle training. Each time Jamie pulled the trigger and the electronic bullets hit their targets, he squealed in delight.

"He always enjoyed the GI Joe experience," said Charles Dayhoff, Jamie's father. "That was his dream, to eat with and take a nap with soldiers, take a ride in a jeep and see how they train."

Panel to recommend to Senate which bases should be closed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate has decided to create a buffer against the political consequences of deciding which of the nation's 3,600 military installations should be closed — a commission that can be conveniently blamed if the folks back home complain.

The Senate voted 83-13 on Tuesday to create a 15-member commission that would recommend which bases to close. The House is expected to agree to the commission, senators said during debate over the proposal that was tacked onto a Pentagon budget bill.

Studies by the Pentagon and the Senate Armed Services Committee have estimated that between $1 billion and $5 billion a year can be saved if unneeded bases can be closed.

Refinery worker still not found

NORCO, La. (AP) — The search for the final person missing from the explosion at the Shell Oil Co. refinery here continued today, as forensic experts tried to identify two other bodies recovered in the rubble last week.

The dead man identified Monday was Roland Satterlee, 35, of LaPlace, said Sarah Colletti, a Shell spokeswoman. His was one of three badly burned bodies recovered from the plant on Friday.

Still listed as missing or unidentified Monday today were Jimmy Poche, 36, of Harahan; John Moisant, 38, of New Orleans; and Bill Coles, 28, LaPlace.

Three men remained hospitalized: Richard Hodges, 33, of Norco in critical condition and Larry Arceneaux, 27, of Norco in stable condition at West Jefferson Hospital, and John Violette of LaPlace in stable condition at River Parishes Hospital.

The cause of the gasoline-refining unit explosion last Thursday has not been determined.

Panel expected to OK gun ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation to ban undetectable plastic firearms could clear the Senate Judiciary Committee this Thursday, just two days after the House approved a similar bill with a calm that rarely accompanies gun control measures.

A smooth ride for the legislation was virtually assured two weeks ago, after Attorney General Edwin Meese III and law enforcement groups agreed to a compromise version — and the National Rifle Association went along.

The NRA agreed to avoid a bruising gun control battle in Congress when it became clear that no existing handguns would be prohibited under the agreement.

Liver divided among two patients

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The world's first two reported successful attempts to transplant parts of the same liver into different patients are big steps toward overcoming the chronic donor organ shortage, say transplant surgeons.

Dr. Henri Bismuth, a liver transplant surgeon at Paul Brousse Hospital in Paris, reported here Tuesday that he had no choice but to divide the liver of a 40-year-old brain-dead man for two women, both unconscious and near death.

The procedure, performed May 1, is believed to be the second in the world, according to Dr. Christoph E. Broelsch, professor of surgery at the University of Chicago. The previous one was performed in February in West Germany.

Case could prevent mummy decay

MARINA DEL REY, Calif. (AP) — Scientists who spent months testing a 3,000-year-old mummy nicknamed Lady X say they've developed a new way to prevent decay of Egypt's mummies and other priceless antiquities.

The technique involves construction of hermetically sealed display cases filled with inert nitrogen gas, and "will benefit millions of objects in museums around the world," possibly including Israel's 2,000-year-old Dead Sea Scrolls, said Luis Monreal, director of the Getty Conservation Institute.

A small-scale prototype of the display case, which contains temperature and humidity sensors, a leak detector and almost no oxygen, was unveiled Tuesday during a seminar attended by 100 scientists, museum officials and Egyptian dignitaries.

Voting in France favored serenity

Since March 1986, when a shift of parliamentary power opened the period of "cohabitation," France has lived uneasily with a Socialist president and a conservative prime minister. That period came to an end recently when Francois Mitterrand decisively defeated Prime Minister Jacques Chirac, thus becoming the first president under the Fifth Republic to win a second seven-year term.

Though Mitterrand's victory dealt the French right its worst defeat at the ballot box in 30 years, "cohabitation" of a sort will continue. The reshuffled government — minus Chirac — likely will strike a balance between Socialist and moderate right-wing policies.

This is a chastened Socialist Party that regained power. Seven years ago, when Mitterrand first was elected, the conservatives had been in power for 23 years. The Socialists, with the support of the Communists, promised drastic reform to solve the accumulated problems of the period. This time, there's no Socialist talk of nationalizing major industries, and their call for a "wealth tax" is about the only proposal that differs from Chirac's free-market philosophy.

The basic tenets of France's foreign policy and its generally friendly relations with the United States also are expected to continue. And Mitterrand vows to seek a solution to separatist violence in the Pacific territory of New Caledonia. He said his government would open "the necessary peace-making and dialogues."

Domestically, Mitterrand is moving swiftly to confront the anti-immigrant appeal of the far-right National Front Party, whose founder Jean-Marie Le Pen, won a significant 14.4 percent of the vote in the first round of presidential voting on April 24. Socialist officials have said that a program of public spending to improve housing conditions in France's immigrant areas and create employment will be a top priority.

In sum, a vote for the Socialist candidate was, in a sense, a conservative vote. The old Socialist, Mitterrand, managed to portray his conservative opponent as unstable and unreliable. A series of dramatic moves orchestrated a few days before the election by Chirac's interior minister, Charles Pasqua, including the release of three French hostages in Lebanon, even overflowed to Mitterrand's benefit. They were altogether too transparent.

At 71, Mitterrand embodies tradition, stability and, as one Socialist official put it, "serenity." The French chose serenity.

Film would benefit kids

I consider myself a reasonably informed, concerned parent in the Midland community. I have two children in the Midland schools, one of whom will soon be of driving age. I was appalled at the lack of consideration the Odessa Chamber of Commerce seems to have given to producer Larry Kasper, the gentleman who is interested in making the film against drunk driving in conjunction with SADD (Students Against Drunk Driving) in the Permian Basin.

It is my understanding that the Fowler, Calif. community had volunteered the services in question as was reported on local T.V. in that community, and then sent Kasper a bill for those same services. It seems the Odessa Chamber has "convicted" Kasper of neglecting outstanding debts without giving him a fair trial. If the Odessa Chamber is so rude and close-minded as to not allow Kasper his right to tell his side of the story, and to show his intentions, then I think the Midland Chamber should invite him to present his proposal.

Surely we, as parents and concerned citizens, can see the need in our community for such an educational film. It is — or should be — very obvious that some of our teens (and even younger) are headed for big trouble. With drug and alcohol abuse rampant, how can we as adults turn our backs and deny the problems? Don't our children deserve better than our neglect? Don't they deserve our support, and our help? It's time we stop burying our heads in the West Texas sand! As a community pulling together for the good of our kids we can make this film a reality. Kasper does not seem to be asking for our money. What he is asking for is our cooperation and volunteers.

I know my children are worth more than this to me. I sincerely hope that we as a community can give this worthy project our support.

Article on clerk cited

As a longtime admirer of Rosenelle Cherry, I especially enjoyed the article on Mrs. Cherry in the April 25th Reporter-Telegram.

I realize that an article cannot tell everything about someone like Mrs. Cherry, but I think it is important for your readers to know that Rosenelle has been recognized numerous times for her special competency and exceptional ability in handling the responsibilities of her office. She was voted the Outstanding Clerk in the State of Texas for 1983, District/County Clerks' Association of Texas and received the Midland Young Lawyers Liberty Award in 1984.

When it comes to the county clerk, Rosenelle knows more about the office's function and its legal responsibilities than do the lawyers, county commissioners, and other public officials with whom she is in daily contact. The people of Midland County should be especially thankful that we have a county clerk whose diligent service and hard work has earned her such an exceptional reputation.

I know that in the news business there is not a lot of good news to tell the citizens about, but Rosenelle's hard work and effort in her office is good news indeed.

Hats off to volunteers

This week is National School Volunteer Appreciation Week and though it may sound cliche, I'd like to honor these "unsung heroes" and "extra-milers".

Over 55,000 hours of volunteer service, easily valued at $200,000 - 220,000, are accumulated each year by the volunteers working in the Midland schools. School volunteerism doesn't translate to parties of punch and cookies, but to individual and group tutoring, office and clerical assistance, crime and drug abuse prevention programs and much, much more.

Study after study clearly establishes the positive effects of a volunteer presence on the campus and in the classroom — improved academic achievement, better discipline, good community/school communication and enhanced staff morale.

Take time this week and tip your hat to the school volunteer. Better yet, join their ranks and become involved in improving the future of our community.

Turks may have killed terrorist leader

WASHINGTON — An official Turkish hit team assassinated at least one Armenian terrorist leader five years ago, despite pleas from the United States not to go ahead with the hit.

Jack Anderson

The story, which has remained a secret until now, lends credence to the possibility that another Turkish hit team killed the most wanted Armenian terrorist two weeks ago in Athens.

The kill-and-run tactic is common for Armenian terrorists, but Turkey's international reputation has not been besmirched recently by the label, "assassin." Hundreds of thousands of Armenians, a major ethnic group in Turkey, died at the hands of the Turks before and during World War I. Since 1975, a new surge of vengeance by Armenians has resulted in a bloody terrorist campaign, killing dozens of Turkish diplomats.

Apparently, the Turks have been striking back without attracting much attention.

Knowledgeable sources told Dale Van Atta that in the summer of 1982 the Central Intelligence Agency learned that a Turkish intelligence unit was planning to kill Armenian terrorist leaders operating in Western Europe.

Similar assassinations of Palestinian terrorists by Israel had resulted in relatively little condemnation around the world. But U.S. officials believed that an assassination by the Turks would be more difficult to swallow, and Turkey would be roundly denounced by fellow NATO allies as heavy handed.

So in September 1982, U.S. officials visiting Ankara raised the delicate matter with Turkish counterparts. The Americans presented themselves as concerned friends who didn't want to see an ally open itself up for criticism, and they urged the Turks to cancel the hit.

"The effort was not successful," a National Security Council source told us. "Not long after, the Turks killed at least one Armenian terrorist, maybe more. But the whole thing was kept quiet. Few individuals outside the CIA were even aware of it in Washington." So the U.S. fears of public scorn were unfounded. Our sources refused to reveal the name of the terrorist who was assassinated. The Turkish embassy has had no comment on the story.

But no group had a stronger motive than the Turks in last month's assassination of Hagop Hagopian, the leader of the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia, ASALA, the most brutal of the Armenian terrorist groups. In a surgical, highly professional hit on April 28, two gunmen fired four rounds from sawed-off shotguns at the 39-year-old Hagopian as he left his Athens home. No one else was hurt in the pre-dawn attack.

Hagopian's identity and whereabouts have long been a mystery. Hagop Hagopian was not his real name, but his nom de guerre. Few captured terrorists had ever seen him or knew his story. He founded ASALA in 1975 after breaking with the PLO, which had trained and supported him.

The biggest surprise following his assassination was the discovery that Hagopian was only half Armenian. He was also half Iraqi. New evidence indicates that he was part of the hit team responsible for the massacre of Israeli athletes at the 1972 Munich Olympics.

That means the Turks were not the only ones with a motive to kill Hagopian. Intelligence sources told us the Israelis knew all along that he was also an Arab terrorist, so it is possible that an Israeli hit team brought him down with the same efficiency that Israel demonstrated in the assassination of PLO leader Abu Jihad in front of his family last month.

A third possibility is that other Armenian terrorists killed Hagopian. Splits among Armenian groups have led to bloodshed in the past. Hagopian himself was believed to have ordered the execution of more moderate Armenian leaders.

Ironically, the Greeks, who are investigating the murder on their turf, don't think that Turkey is responsible, even though there is no love lost between Turkey and Greece. If Greek authorities have figured out what Hagopian's real identity was, they are not telling.

To date, Armenian terrorists, primarily with ASALA, have murdered at least 30 people in their campaign to get revenge against the Turks. The most indiscriminate act was the detonation of a suitcase bomb in July 1983 at the Turkish airlines counter at Orly Airport in Paris. Eight people, including an American, were killed, and 51 were injured.

MINI-EDITORIAL — In California, someone spent days methodically stripping the bark off 30 giant oak trees that had stood for 100 years. The trees will now die. On the other side of the country, someone took great pains to carve a swastika in the black granite of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. It isn't murder or mayhem. It's simply a reminder of the sick minds that wander among us on the planet. The constructive reaction is not to froth at the mouth with rage from our armchairs. Instead, those of us who consider ourselves "normal" (i.e., above such perversity) must work harder to leave our mark, too.

JAMES RESTON

Bush can talk of future issues, but will he?

WASHINGTON — Vice President Bush is running a puzzling campaign. He is trying to be as cheery as Ronald Reagan and as folksy as Jesse Jackson, but even the great mass of his supporters are not very happy with his performance.

James Reston

The reason for this is that he is not really cheery or folksy but a serious and conventional man.

More than the other two candidates in the race, his record, particularly in the field of foreign affairs, entitles him to speak intelligently of the coming problems of the world, but instead he speaks of Jimmy Carter and bygone malaise.

He says he wants to be the "education president," and one purpose of a presidential election campaign is to educate. But so far he has been following the Reagan line that the way to succeed in politics is to evade and equivocate, to spend and spend, borrow and borrow.

He is not, however, likely to sell another rerun of the Reagan role — at least not for long. The movie is over, the audience has changed and many of the problems have changed, at home and abroad.

His way is not Reagan's. Unlike the President, he can't wave for the television cameras to people who aren't there, or pretend that Reaganomics was a triumph. And it's a tribute to him that he seems false when he tries. Reagan was the last of the big borrowers, and even Wall Street is looking for something different.

The vice president is in a good position to lift this campaign out of its present rut. His nomination is assured. The campaign has now gone on for six months without producing a single memorable speech on either side. He has the ability and the staff to change that, but he ran around Ohio campaigning on his loyalty to the past.

It won't be easy for him to lose this election, but he could do it by backing into the future and being more loyal to the president than to himself. Hubert Humphrey tried that in 1968, when he hated the Vietnam War but backed it in deference to President Johnson, and lost to Richard Nixon.

This election, unlike the last two, is not likely to be won by personality and televised public relations. Fortunately, neither Bush nor Governor Dukakis is a Madison Avenue or Hollywood type.

They may be unexciting or uninspiring, but both are competent, thoughtful, moderate, unifying men, which may be precisely what is needed after eight years of incompetence, faction and ideology.

The vice president has benefited greatly by his record as co-pilot in the White House, former head of the Central Intelligence Agency, member of Congress, businessman and ambassador to the United Nations and China.

He claims, fairly, that this is what sets him apart. But this is relevant only if he demonstrates that this experience has given him a vision of the coming age; if he has one, he has been remarkably quiet about it.

Among the central tasks for the future are the restoration of a nonpartisan foreign policy, the recruitment of a Cabinet and White House staff of talented men and women, the control of nuclear weapons and the budget and tyranny in the world.

Bush could be expected as a result of his long public service to tell the country what he thinks about these things, rather than defending Ed Meese, who is almost as irrelevant to the future as Jimmy Carter.

Dukakis may be expected to press him for answers to these questions and to come up with some answers of his own, and at least he will want to have these questions debated fully later in the campaign — a prospect for which the vice president has shown little enthusiasm in the past.

Unless I misread the mood of the voters, they are sick of partisan wrangling, false promises of "Star Wars" security, disgraceful budget and trade deficits, alluring promises and phony proclamations that everybody's better off amid clear evidence of homelessness, sickness and the decay of decency and plain speaking.

For eight years now, we have had a government that has concentrated on public opinion rather than the public interest, told the people what they wanted to hear and argued at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue that they could have what they weren't willing to pay for. But the bills are coming in and the guess here is that the voters may be ready for a little creative common sense.

Fortunately, Bush and Dukakis, unlike the last two presidents, at least are not tearing down Washington and blaming it for all the nation's troubles. They know, or should, that the government is no better than the public servants on whom they must depend, and that if you turn over the Justice Department to your brother or your personal lawyer or some other crony, you'll get what you deserve.

The trouble in the campaign so far, however, is that the candidates are not really talking about these fundamental questions, but sliding around them.

Admittedly it's early. It's more than three months until the end of the nominating conventions in Atlanta and New Orleans. This is a long time to rely on kissing babies on TV, but unless the people and the press ask tougher questions and demand some plain answers, the chances are they'll get the same old run-around.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Restaurant dress codes cramp your style!

While actress Whoopi Goldberg was in Atlanta recently for her one-woman show, she stayed at the downtown Ritz Carlton hotel.

She was refused entrance to the Ritz restaurant, however, because she didn't look like the Ritz thinks you ought to look when you eat in one of their hotels.

Grizzard

Let's just say that Whoopi will never make the cover of Mademoiselle.

I often have wondered why restaurants and bars are so picky about how somebody looks or dresses when they come in and offer their business.

Take the sign that says, "No shirt, no shoes, no service."

Does this mean as long as I have on a shirt and shoes I can take off my pants and still get the bacon cheeseburger?

The least they could do in a restaurant with a sign like that is to say, "You can't come in without your shirt or shoes, but I'll take your order if you'll just wait outside while it's cooking."

I've never been fond of the sign that says, "Gentlemen are required to wear jackets and ties."

I've always figured restaurants have rules like that to make certain they don't get any riff-raff.

But some very riff-raffy people wear ties. Ed Meese. Jimmy Swaggart. Al Capone wore ties, didn't he?

I don't know if medical science has looked into it, but I would suppose that wearing a jacket and tie and trying to eat in a place where they won't allow you to drink your beer from a bottle would not be that good for the digestion.

The jacket restricts movement and the tie probably is some detriment to circulation. This dress code, then, could lead to such maladies as heartburn, indigestion, and even ulcers.

If it turns out such restaurants have a deal going with the Maalox people, I wouldn't be surprised.

I saw a sign in a hotel bar in Jacksonville, Fla., recently that completely baffled me.

It said, "Casual, stylish attire only."

The first thing I did when I saw that sign was to look and see what I was wearing. I was wearing a golf shirt, khaki slacks, and loafers with no socks.

There was no question that I was casual, but was I stylish as well?

It depended, I suppose, on various personal points of view.

"Something out of a 1956 Sears catalog," detractors might say. "Definitely not stylish."

A more mature person might say, however, "Middle-aged preppy, huh? Very stylish, please come in."

With some trepidation I walked into the place and took a seat at the bar.

"Before I order," I said to the bartender, a woman, "do you think my outfit is stylish enough to be in here?"

"You'll do," she said. "Now, what ya drankin'?"

Whoopi! I ordered a beer in a bottle.

Panel may grant immunity to North in order to get notes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will consider granting Oliver L. North limited immunity to get him to turn over 2,848 pages of notes he took while a key White House operative in the Iran-Contra affair.

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., said such immunity is among the options the panel will consider as it seeks to wrap up its probe of connections between U.S. aid to Nicaragua's Contra rebels and Latin American drug trafficking.

Other possibilities include subpoenaing North's Washington lawyer, Brendan V. Sullivan Jr., and enlisting the help of executive branch agencies that should rightfully have the documents, say Kerry and his aides.

At a hearing Tuesday, Sullivan appeared on North's behalf and invoked his client's Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination in refusing to turn over the dozens of spiral-bound notebooks North compiled while running President Reagan's covert Contra aid program.

North, who retired this month as a Marine lieutenant colonel, did not appear.

North is one of several targets in a broad conspiracy case that charges he illegally diverted profits from the sale of arms to Iran to aid the Contras.

At the White House, President Reagan responded with an emphatic "no" when asked whether he had ruled out granting pardons to North and to his former national security adviser, John M. Poindexter.

Reagan did not elaborate, but his answer came a day after he told columnist Carl Rowan it would be wrong to grant pardons before the trial is over, and suggested he would be out of office when that happens.

Previously, the president has hinted he is leaning toward a pardon for North and Poindexter, saying he did not think they were guilty of any crime and that he doubted any jury would convict them.

Portions of North's notebooks previously given to congressional investigators are sprinkled throughout with references to drugs, drug traffickers, the Drug Enforcement Administration and the CIA. But large segments — committee aides said about half the contents — have been blacked out by Sullivan or by White House censors.

"It's the first time I ever heard of in history that an attorney who is not code-cleared, classified-cleared or even any security clearance whatsoever, sits as the custodian of documents that have been walked out of the workplace of the most highly sensitive government agency that we have," said Kerry, chairman of the panel's narcotics subcommittee.

"It's unheard of, and I think it's inappropriate," he said.

Kerry said Sullivan, in a closed-door meeting of the committee, presented an affidavit from North acknowledging the subpoena for his notebooks but citing his constitutional right not to incriminate himself as justification for withholding them.

It took 10 days for U.S. Capitol police to deliver the subpoena to North, the Washington Post reported Wednesday. Police who were outmanuevered by North at his Virginia home and elsewhere, finally threw the papers into his car last Saturday while the former Marine was stopped at a traffic light near his house, the Post said.

Kerry said he does not know what the notes might reveal of importance to his investigation, but believes his subcommittee must have the documents in order to be sure it has done a thorough job. He promised that if turned over, the documents would be kept secret.

"Why does the name of someone involved in narcotics appear in Ollie North's notebook?" he asked. "These are unanswered questions that still tell me there is a lot that has not yet come to light."

North, a former National Security Council staff member, directed much of the operation that sent arms to Iran and raised money to supply the Contras at a time when Congress barred such aid.

He and Sullivan also have declined to provide the notebooks to Lawrence E. Walsh, the independent counsel who is prosecuting North and others on charges stemming from the Iran affair.

Kerry said he has spoken to members of Walsh's staff about the matter, and "it's clear they don't know as much as we do" about the case.

Elderly man marries live-in friend to get his 'soul ready for Lord'

BELLE GLADE, Fla. (AP) — After 23 years of living in sin, an 84-year-old cancer patient married his 74-year-old companion in a hospital ceremony arranged and attended by his nurses a day before surgery.

Emma Jones stood beside Charlie Vickers in a wheelchair and legally tied the knot Tuesday in a Glades General Hospital lounge as 25 nurses and doctors looked on, hosital spokesman Kerry F. Aunce said. Palm Beach Circuit Judge Don Adams performed the marriage.

"I don't believe the doctor is going to be able to get me through this, and I want to get my soul ready for the Lord," Vickers said of his colon surgery. "We've been together for 23 years and if something happens, I want us to be married."

Vickers said he gave up drinking moonshine when he was younger and gave up cigarettes after a colostomy a year ago.

"Smoking is a sin and sleeping with someone you're not married to is a sin," he said. "It doesn't do any good to quit one if you're not going to quit it all, so I wanted to get married and quit it all."

AIDS patient says firing violates policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former Justice Department employee with AIDS says he was fired despite a new federal policy touted as "enlightened and compassionate" that prohibits discrimination against government workers with the disease, according to a published report.

The Washington Post reported today that Mark Gregory was fired from the department's Community Relations Service on April 25, several weeks after the Office of Personnel Management announced employees with acquired immune deficiency syndrome would be treated the same as those with other serious illnesses.

"The only reason they fired me is because I'm sick and because I have AIDS," said Gregory, 30, who is undergoing experimental treatment at the National Institutes of Health.

Gregory, who lost his health insurance when he was fired, is appealing the dismissal.

Federal guidelines on workers with AIDS were issued in March, when OPM Director Constance Horner said, "The federal government, as an enlightened and compassionate employer concerned with the health and welfare of its employees, has an obligation to show the way in addressing the realities of the AIDS epidemic."

The Justice Department says Gregory was fired not because of his illness but because of the 30 days work he has missed since he was hired as a clerk-typist last July. Gregory says most of the missed days were spent participating in the experimental NIH program.

"He's not being singled out," said department spokesman Brad Marman. "He was discharged because he could not perform the job on a full-time basis adequately."

Marman told the Post that Gregory was considered a probationary employee when he was hired, although both he and Gregory's supervisor would not talk in detail about his case.

Diagnosed as having AIDS-related complex in October 1987, Gregory said he took 10 days leave without pay on the advice of his supervisor and another 14 days to participate in the NIH program. He took another six days off after his lover died.

Aide uncertain if astrologer will be seen again

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan has not been in touch with her astrologer in "a couple of months" and it's uncertain when — or if — she will contact her again, White House officials say.

"Will she again? I really don't know," said Mrs. Reagan's spokeswoman, Elaine Crispen. Previously, Mrs. Crispen had said Mrs. Reagan would continue to consult the astrologer, Joan Quigley of San Francisco.

Changing her answer, Mrs. Crispen said Tuesday, "How do I know when and if again?"

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater and Mrs. Crispen both said it had been "a couple of months" since Mrs. Reagan had been in touch with the astrologer.

In his new book, former White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan says the first lady regularly consulted a San Francisco astrologer about scheduling for the president, policy matters and decisions.

The White House has adopted a "no-comment" policy on specifics in the book, trying to dampen the stargazing controversy.

Fitzwater, at his regular news briefing, was asked whether Mrs. Reagan had used a "secure" telephone line to speak with Quigley, and if not, had there been a breach of security.

"I have no idea," Fitzwater replied.

Asked to assess the role of astrology in preparation of the president's schedule, Fitzwater said, "We have not commented on that in the past, and I would say only that the president's scheduling is a process involving many people and many different considerations and concerns."

Mrs. Crispen said Quigley had been to the White House only once, at a state dinner. Other than that, the first lady had communicated with her only by telephone, Mrs. Crispen said.

She said she did not know how often they talked.

Meanwhile, Qiugley, who got her start advising teen-age girls and has quietly built a clientele that colleagues say includes Fortune 500 executives, said "this whole thing is very embarrassing to me. I've been put in a terrible situation because I'm an ethical person and I don't talk about my clients. But I had to come forward to show that I am a serious person with a scientific approach to astrology."

TV host Merv Griffin, who shares a July 6 birthday with Mrs. Reagan, introduced her to Quigley after one of the astrologer's frequent appearances on his show about 15 years ago. A Griffin spokeswoman said he would not comment.

New French premier considers candidates for Cabinet

PARIS (AP) — Premier Michel Rocard appointed a longtime aide as his chief of staff today and consulted with senior Socialists on choosing Cabinet ministers in his new government.

President Francois Mitterrand, reelected on Sunday, appointed Rocard on Tuesday to succeed conservative Jacques Chirac.

Rocard, long a rival to Mitterrand within the Socialist Party, said he would not delay naming his Cabinet ministers, but it was not clear how soon the appointments would come.

The first move by the 57-year-old premier was to name Jean Paul Huchon his chief of staff. Huchon was chief of staff to Rocard when he was planning minister, then agriculture minister, in Socialist governments from 1981-85.

He is first deputy mayor of Conflans St. Honorine, the working-class town in the Paris suburbs where Rocard has been mayor since 1977.

It is common in France for senior national officials to keep their mayoral posts. Chirac, who was premier for two years, has been mayor of Paris for more than a decade.

Mitterrand, 71, was re-elected to a seven-year term in a landslide victory over Chirac Sunday. But the success of a new government will depend largely on whether the Socialists gain the confidence of a broad spectrum of voters — and backing from centrist politicans.

Chirac's center-right coalition still controls the 577-seat National Assembly, marking the first time in the 30 years of the French Fifth Republic that a government must face a hostile Parliament.

Commentary on Rocard's appointment was largely favorable in French newspapers, even those that traditionally support rightist policies.

The conservative daily Le Figaro noted that Rocard favored a free-market economy and said he had "shown his independent spirit" by bucking official Socialist positions in the past.

Former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, a prominent centrist member of the assembly, said on Tuesday that he was "waiting for a gesture toward a united France" in the composition of Rocard's Cabinet.

Rocard, 57, told reporters Tuesday that he would keep in mind French people's concerns "for their future, for their jobs, for their education, for their security."

He must assemble a government which reflects the Socialists' swing to the center and which can try to work with the conservative parliamentary majority.

Shipyard strike shows Solidarity's strength, helplessness, Walesa says

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa said today that an eight-day sit-down strike at the Lenin shipyard showed Solidarity's strength but that lack of widespread support hurt the strikers.

"We were paralyzed because there were so few of us," Walesa told reporters at St. Brygida's Church near the shipyard in this Baltic port, where the electrician led workers to form the Soviet bloc's first independent union federation eight years ago.

He said this month's action showed "our strength as well as our helplessness" and that the workers would try again if necessary.

Walesa and about 1,000 haggard strikers who had occupied the plant and refused to work abandoned their strike Tuesday evening. Strike leaders said they wanted to avoid a police raid, but communist authorities said the action failed for lack of support.

Still, the government said the two weeks of strikes that ended Tuesday will compel it to speed up efforts to revive Poland's crippled economy.

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban told The Associated Press by telephone that the decision to end the strike was judicious and "so eloquent that it requires no comment whatsoever."

The official PAP news agency reported some shipyard supervisors were back at work today and normal work would resume Thursday. Walesa said he got a phone call at home in the morning asking him why he was not there.

"If there are people who think we lost, it is because we still lack solidarity" among workers nationwide, he said.

But Walesa said that "if necessary we will try again. Nothing ended. Nothing is finished." He added that the 15-member strike committee that engaged in five rounds of negotiations with management will not be dissolved.

There was no immediate word on whether the strikers would face legal charges or disciplinary action. During negotiations, the strikers had been offered amnesty but only if they left the shipyard Sunday night.

Heads held high, the shipyard workers filed out of the yard without a settlement Tuesday but also without having backed down from demands whose centerpiece was reinstatement of the yard's Solidarity chapter.

Through the intervention of the Catholic Church, workers and management met five times from Saturday until Monday.

Police had surrounded the shipyard since Thursday and the strikers had rejected government offers of wage increases, so quitting was the "best solution possible," said strike committee chairman Alojzy Szablewski.

The strike evoked memories of 1980, when a younger, leaner Walesa cosigned an accord at the same shipyard during a nationwide wave of strikes over price increases that toppled a government. A time of unmatched freedom followed.

Urban said on Tuesday that "the strikes and protests have not won the support of the working class and society" but had taught the government important lessons.

"The May events will compel the government to more consistently develop reform."

Danish prime minister resigns to form coalition

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — Prime Minister Poul Schlueter resigned today in a bid to form a new center-right coalition after an inconclusive parliamentary election called over Denmark's nuclear-arms policy and its allegiance to NATO.

Danish radio said Schlueter submitted his resignation to Queen Margrethe II at Amalienborg Palace and told her negotiations would begin this afternoon.

Tuesday's balloting ended in a stalemate in which neither major bloc could form a majority government.

Schlueter's outgoing minority, four-party coalition retained its 70 seats in the Folketing, the 179-member parliament. The socialist opposition dropped two seats for a total of 79.

The opposition Social Democrats, Denmark's largest party, touched off the election by pushing through parliament a new anti-nuclear resolution the government refused to implement because of strong objections from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The resolution, designed to bolster Denmark's 1957 peacetime ban on nuclear arms, calls for notifying visiting warships that such weapons were not allowed in port. Unless the resolution is overturned by the new parliament, the government will have to carry it out, after the wording has been determined.

Despite the vote, the government and the opposition both claimed the outcome vindicated their position on the NATO issue.

Schlueter, speaking during a televised post-election roundtable discussion with other party leaders Tuesday, claimed that the four coalition parties opposing the April 14 resolution came out best.

"The parties that voted for the Social Democratic resolution on NATO policy were weakened," he said.

Schlueter, who had called the election just eight months after the last one, claimed the outcome would ease Denmark's crisis in NATO. He had wanted voters to endorse the country's "full membership" in the Western military alliance.

But Social Democratic leader Svend Auken insisted "there was still a majority backing the resolution" and said his party would work for its implementation in the new parliament.

In reply, Schlueter invited Auken to negotiate with government parties "a sensible solution" to the issue.

Until the opposition resolution was passed last month, successive governments assumed that NATO allies abided by Denmark's non-nuclear policy.

The United States and Britain said the new measure, if implemented, would jeopardize their plans to land troops in times of crisis to reinforce Denmark, which controls the narrow access to the Baltic Sea.

They also said the measure threatened the solidarity of NATO and was against their own policies, which forbid disclosure of which ships carry nuclear arms.

Final results showed 3,913,318 ballots cast for a turnout of 85.8 percent.

Schlueter's Conservatives lost three seats, retaining 35.

Foreign Minister Uffe Ellemann-Jensen's Liberals, the senior coalition partner, won 22 seats, three more than it had before.

The coalition's nine-seat Center Democrats and four-seat Christian People's Party were unchanged.

Capturing seven additional seats to total 16, far-right Progress Party was the biggest winner.

Airport loading time increase approved

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

City Council members decided Tuesday to give Midland International Airport users an additional four minutes to unload passengers and luggage along the terminal curbside.

In a 5-1 vote on second reading, the council increased to five minutes the posted time users may park at the terminal's entrance.

Councilman Bill Williams voted against the measure in an attempt to impose a more subjective limit on curbside loading and unloading.

Other changes imposed under the new ordinance include an increase in the number of metered parking spaces, which will be located at the north and south ends of the terminal curb and in a parking lot directly north of the terminal.

Time limits for metered parking — which will continue to be available in a lot southwest of the terminal — were increased from 15 to 30 minutes under the new measure.

In addition, the ordinance held changes for airport limousines and buses, which now must load and unload passengers in the western-most lane in front of the terminal.

In accepting a $31,175 gift, city council members vowed to speed up the construction of a neighborhood park in northwest Midland, which is to be named after long-time Midlander Frank B. Essex.

Acting on a motion from at-large Councilman Gordon Marcum, the council voted unanimously to accept Mrs. Frank B. Essex's $31,175 check, which represented half of the money needed to build the park at the intersections of Treemont Avenue and Willow Way.

Construction of the playground should get under way in the next couple of weeks, Parks and Recreation Director George Logan said.

Marcum — prior to his reading a resolution of commendation to the family — said, "Not many people know about some of the things they (the Essex family) have done for the city."

The councilman recalled how they contributed money to the city when it asked for a police dog and a drug dog. The family then turned its attention toward the training of those animals and "when we needed $5,000 for the training facility, they were gracious enough to give that," he said.

Also, after two meetings between city officials and second-hand store owners, council members approved an ordinance establishing a 10-day holding period for goods purchased by those dealers.

The purpose of the law is to allow law enforcement officers additional time in checking with the shops in searches for stolen goods. Under current city statutes, shop owners must hold goods only 48 hours.

Midland police Sgt. Tom Hyde, who recommended the measure, has said the ordinance won't affect pawn shop owners because, under state law, they must already hold goods 90 days before resale.

In addition to lengthening the holding time for goods, the proposed measure may offer a break to shop owners by loosening paperwork requirements.

Under current city law, shop owners must keep written records on all merchandise they buy for later resale. The statute would establish a $25 floor under which the paperwork would be unnecessary.

In other action Tuesday, the council:

-- Approved on second reading a West Texas Consultants' request to change a 12.9-acre tract of land at the intersection of Polo Parkway and Castleford Road from a Multiple-Family Dwelling and Office District to a Single Family Dwelling District.

— Awarded on second reading a specific use permit to Martha Madrid for the on-premises consumption of beer and wine at her Dakota Avenue and Big Spring Street restaurant.

— Approved on second reading an amendment to the Building Code to permit utility services at commercial buildings prior to the final inspection.

— Approved on second reading ordinances to establish stop signs and yield signs at various locations.

— Granted a franchise to Village Lincoln Mercury Dodge to operate a limousine service.

— Re-appointed Carolyn Henry and appointed Evelyn Gould and Scott Bryant to the City Planning and Zoning Commission.

— Appointed Freddy Nelms to the City Street Commission to replace Margaret Williams.

ECISD board will continue smoking plan

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County school trustees Tuesday night elected to continue a modified ban on smoking and heard objections to some recommendations on the district's sex education policies.

Mickey Jones, who ended 10½ years on the board after hearing newly elected at-large member Tommy Salmon Sr. take his oath and receiving a framed plaque recognizing his years of service.

He said as his last meeting neared Tuesday he had a "lump in his throat and a tear in his eye" until he saw in the evening newspaper the topics to be discussed.

Suddenly, he said, the lump in his throat disappeared and the tear in his eye dried up as he realized he would not be involved in discussion of the controversial subjects.

Implementation of a near-total ban on smoking throughout district facilities failed to materialize when a majority of board members, including newest member Salmon, opted to continue the policy that allows smoking in designated areas.

Board member Buddy West, a member of the Drug Education Task Force, said he had had "many complaints" from people about designated smoking areas. He said the odor of smoke emanating from such areas was almost enough to "knock a person down."

However, while some board members were sympathetic to his arguments, the issue of individual rights prevailed and a majority decided to continue the modified ban on smoking that restricts smoking to certain areas and encourages ECISD employees to quit smoking.

West argued strongly for a total smoking ban, saying he had attended a conference on drug and alcohol abuse during which it was stated smoking leads to the use of other things, such as drugs and alcohol.

Longtime board member Bill Turner said in the absence of "a mandate from the people" he would favor continuing the modified policy.

Jim Nelson, said he "is not a smoker and I don't sympathize with those who do," and he was willing to let the designated smoking area policy continue for awhile.

Salmon said he feels "an individual has a right to choose," and "You can eat yourself into a grave, too."

Board member Jim Spencer, a former ECISD principal who said he smoked for 35 years, but quit, said he supported the rights of smokers, that smoking or not smoking should be an individual choice.

Dr. Lee Buice, an inveterate smoker, said she supported recommendations from several teachers, who argued for continuation of the modified smoking ban. She said it is not a health issue, but a personal rights issue.

The policy recommended by the Drug Prevention Task Force would have banned ECISD employees from smoking in, or at, any school district facility.

The general public would be allowed to smoke only at outdoor facilities, such as Ratliff Stadium.

The task force also recommended a schedule of consequences for violation of anti-smoking regulations.

The penalties ranged from verbal reprimands to expulsion from campus.

On the sex education issue, board members will not vote on implementation of a recommended sex education curriculum until the first meeting in June, following a committee review of the Sex Education Task Force recommendations.

Several parents who voiced opinions on various elements of the proposed curriculum objected to inclusion of information on contraception, contending that to teach contraception and abstinence amounts to teaching "a double standard."

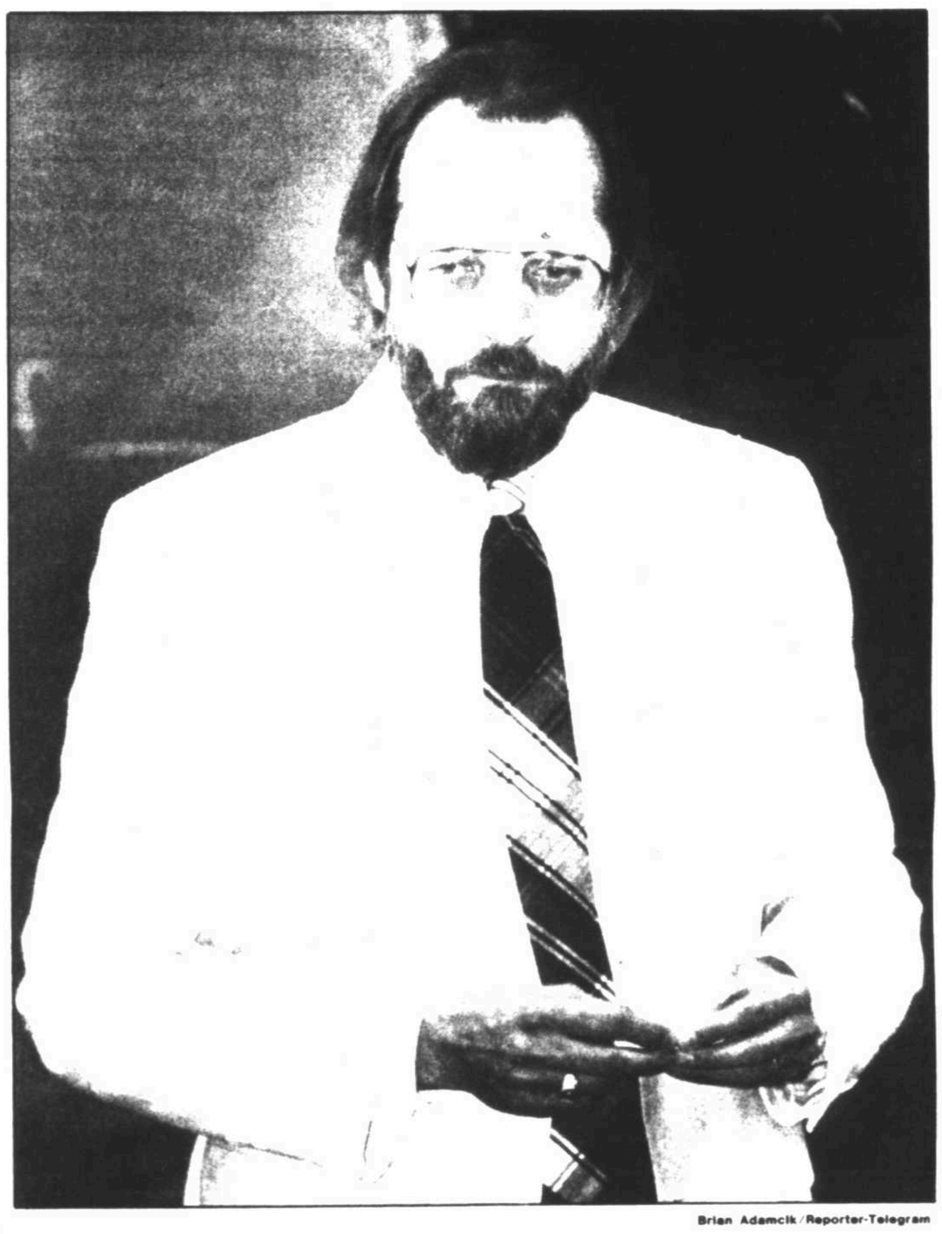
Expert 'nurtures' abusive parents



Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Dr. Stephen Bavolek, a child abuse expert from Utah, spoke Tuesday about the psychology of the abuse parents and way to correct the behavior.

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

A child abuse expert spoke at Midland Memorial Hospital Tuesday concerning the psychology behind abusive parenting behavior.

Dr. Stephen Bavolek, of Salt Lake City, Utah, was called here by the Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program to preview a seminar he may present in October.

Bavolek's "nurturing program" teaches parents the methods they can use to better themselves which in turn should make them better parents, he said.

The nurturing program details four aspects Bavolek claims are reflective of an abusive parent.

An abusive parent will have inappropriate expectations of his child; will lack empathy for his child or other people; will hit a child and/or often mistakes the role of a child for someone else.

Explaining the four aspects, Bavolek said parents must realize the negative self-esteem that could be created by continually asking a child to do something he can't do.

Secondly, a parent must have empathy for his or her child. The "role" a parent plays during the day must not overtake the potential he or she has to "feel" how it is to be a child, Bavolek said.

"As long as the concept for violence exists" a parent is not going to accomplish an effective parenting behavior, the expert claimed.

Alternatives to violence must be found, he said, because hitting a child is a symptom of locked-in violent tendencies within the parent.

Abuse — especially incest — can occur when the parent mistakes the child's role as a child for someone else, Bavolek said.

A disturbed father, for instance, may see his daughter as a wife or lover and proceed to molest her, Bavolek said.

A person cannot say someone is a "bad parent," Bavolek claimed. Instead, the person is a "bad person" if anything, and steps must be taken to correct emotional problems from that angle, he said.

In his nurturing program, Bavolek teaches parents why they feel and think the way they do. He will tell the parents that the sum of their feelings — self-esteem — and their thoughts — self-concept — result in experiences they inflict on their children.

In correcting an abusive parent's behavior, Bavolek seeks to create a positive self-concept and self-esteem within the parent, he said.

The seminars will be brought to Midland if the financial and organizational support can be found within the community, said PBCAPP Executive Director Carol Steele.

Banker's father testifies he allowed son to sign his name

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The father of an Odessa bank president on trial for bank fraud in federal court in Midland testified Tuesday that he had given his 41-year-old son permission to sign his name on a $15,000 loan made in June 1985.

"My son said he needed $15,000," Reagan V. Brown, 67, said his son, Jimmy R. Brown, had told him after the son had become president of First State Bank in Odessa in 1985.

" 'Daddy, I need somebody to pay some bills,' " the father said his son told him. "I said, 'Make a note for it, and proceed as we have always done,' " Reagan Brown testified. "He (the son) had the power of attorney to do it," the father said. "It was with my consent. I want to make that perfectly clear."

The son has been charged by federal indictment with six counts of bank fraud, including the signing of his father's name to the loan and then initially denying that it was he who had signed his father's name.

Reagan V. Brown, a Bryan rancher who from 1976 to 1982 was commissioner of the Texas Department of Agriculture, testified that he had transferred his bank account from Bryan to Odessa after his son, who as a Bryan banker had handled much of his father's business, had called him and said, " 'Daddy, we need loans out here (in West Texas),' " the father testified.

The father said he transferred to First State Bank $150,000 in certificates of deposits and then borrowed $153,000 from the bank. "I believe we discussed the $15,000" loan on the telephone, he said.

THE SENIOR BROWN, the defense's third witness, was questioned by his son's Fort Worth defense attorney, Frank McCown, and was crossed examined by the prosecutor, Assistant United States Attorney Jim K. Blankinship of Austin. U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton is presiding over the trial which is being tried before a 10-woman, two-man jury.

Reagan Brown said that instead of verbally agreeing to the loan, he could have written his son a check for $15,000 "if I wanted to," but "the bank was making interest (on the loan) to keep people working."

In addition, the father said that he and his son have been business "partners all of his life."

"This is the way we did business, Mr. Blankinship," the senior Brown told the prosecutor. "We made the note. We paid interest, and I could take that off of my income tax. That's the way we did business."

The senior Brown said he had transferred his funds back to First Bank & Trust in Bryan and paid off the unsecured loan after the son had encountered concern and distress within the bank over the Brown signature loan, which was made without approval of the bank's board of directors.

Reagan Brown said that he and his son were "absolutely" close and that he would "absolutely not" do anything to hurt his son.

Before the father testified, John Wright, president of the Abilene holding company which owns First State Bank of Odessa, testified that "to my knowledge, there was no (bank) policy (in 1985) about an officer borrowing money from the bank." However, Wright, said, "I think good judgment would prohibit it."

WRIGHT DID SAY that Jimmy Brown had used "poor judgment" in signing his father's name on the loan and then cashing a cashier's check for the $15,000. "I told Mr. Brown that."

Brown is on paid leave from the bank while the criminal case is pending against him.

Before Wright had testified, the prosecution had examined 16 government witnesses, including Federal Bureau of Investigation agents, current and past First State Bank employees, including a former internal auditor, and a National Bank examiner.

Kyle Jones, an Austin-based examiner for the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC), testified that there was "some question about the ($15,000) note. It appeared that the proceeds did not go to Mr. Reagan Brown but to Mr. Jimmy Brown."

Jones said that when he had interviewed Jimmy Brown in December 1985 about the note, the younger Brown initially "said that Reagan (the father) had signed the note" and that his father had owed him "money in connection with a recent land sale."

Later, though, Jimmy Brown "contradicted" himself, the OCC examiner said, and "indicated that he had signed the note and felt uncomfortable about signing the note."

Jones said that Jimmy Brown and a bank director had "concluded" that the son's signing the father's name "wasn't proper' and that the loan was "moved out of the bank" two weeks after it was made in June 1985. The loan was repaid that month.

New MISD board members begin job

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Little action was taken Tuesday at the first school board meeting for two Midland men who earlier had been sworn into office by state District Judge Pat Baskin.

James Fuller and Jim Builta assumed the District 1 and 4 Midland Independent School Board seats.

Fuller's District 1 seat was vacated by former trustee Ron Britton Tuesday, while the District 4 seat had been vacant since former trustee Joe Golding resigned earlier this year.

It was announced at the board meeting Tuesday former District 3 candidate Price Parker would not seek a recount in Saturday's election vote.

Parker lost a runoff bid by one vote.

A preliminary report was presented to MISD trustees Tuesday by University of Texas professor Michael Thomas.

Thomas will release in June a final report on the organizational structure of the district as commissioned by trustees earlier this year.

Thomas said he interviewed more than 100 MISD staff members in his study.

In preliminary findings, the professor said he found the central office staff to be overworked and in need of support help.

The school district will apply to the Texas Education Agency for permission to teach a high school honors geology class, trustees voted Tuesday.

Also, Volunteers in Public Schools were recognized Tuesday in honor of VIPS Week in the MISD.

Trustees reported that volunteers contributed more than 61,000 hours of service to elementary schools and over 13,000 hours of service to secondary schools in the local school district.

VIP Patti Zecchi reminded those at the meeting Tuesday that the five school district runoff elections will be held May 21.

Absentee voting began today in the school district races and will continue through Tuesday.

Bunton seeks more information before ruling on jail problem

Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — A federal judge is waiting for reports on overcrowding problems at the new Bexar County Jail before ruling on a long-standing motion to find county officials in contempt for failing to resolve the problems.

Chief U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton III said Tuesday he has asked for reports on the new jail from an attorney representing inmates, as well as from county officials and the U.S. Justice Department.

Speaking in a telephone interview from the Federal Courthouse in Midland, Bunton said highly publicized staffing problems at the new jail have no bearing on the case unless he can be convinced the problems affect inmates' rights.

Meanwhile, the county's attorney, Assistant District Attorney Patricia McNair Persante, said overcrowding in the new jail may be only a legal definition away from being solved.

Persante, who has worked on the county's 1981 federal consent decree for 4½ years, said she is waiting to hear from Bunton on how to apply the federal consent decree to the new jail.

"It's very specific," Persante said of the decree. "Overcrowding (in the old jail) was that we had more people than we had beds."

The old 739-bed jail housed prisoners solely in cells, she said. The new jail, however, has day rooms, recreation areas and other places for inmates to go, in addition to their cells.

"Cell space and the number of beds becomes very important in that (old jail) system," Persante said. "The new jail has a lot of large day areas and recreation rooms. Inmates can spend a lot of time outside of their cells."

With the jail population nearing the 1,400 mark, Persante insists she could argue in court that the current 1,019-bed jail is not overcrowded.

He died Monday following a brief illness.

BANKER

"HE (JIMMY BROWN) said he felt uncomfortable about it," Jones said of the Jimmy Brown's signing his father's name and cashing the cashier's check.

"I had recently been to a white-collar crime school," Jones said, and there he learned that "it's good to reiterate...and re-confirm answers" when interviewing.

Jimmy Brown was indicted last March with:

— Making false statements and representations to National Bank examiners in December 1985 about a $15,000 loan. The prosecution is charging that Brown had signed his father's name to the $15,000 loan but had stated that his father, Reagan V. Brown, had signed his own signature.

— Presenting a "materially false financial statement" to Texas National Bank of Odessa to influence the bank's action on Brown's existing loan in September 1985.

— Making a false statement to Texas National Bank of Odessa to influence the bank to grant him a $10,000 loan in September 1985. The grand jury alleged that Brown represented that the loan was for the down payment on a new home when the loan was "to pay off a delinquent loan at another bank."

— Making a false and misleading financial statement to "deceive the directors and officers" of First State Bank and examiners of the United States Comptroller of the Currency in August 1985.

In one instance, Brown had placed a $112,425 value on almost a 15-acre ranch tract (14.99 acres), on which a Brazos County appraiser had placed a $22,300 fair-market value but which an independent appraiser had placed almost a $60,000 value at $4,000 an acre were the ranch land sold for home sites or as recreational property. His assets in 1985 were listed at $212,875, and his income was carried as $67,500, according to testimony.

— Embezzling and misapplying $15,000 in money, funds and credits "entrusted to the custody and care" of the bank and Brown in June 1985.

— Making a false entry in applying for a $15,000 loan in June 1985. The grand jury charged that Brown represented that the loan was to be used for "debt consolidation" when the loan proceeds were intended to be used "personally" by Brown.

The younger Brown became the 10th Midland-Odessa banker or ex-banker to be indicted for bank fraud since the FBI in 1985 heightened its probe into West Texas banking practices.

Previously, three former Midland-Odessa bank presidents have been indicted and convicted of fraud, but Brown is the first bank executive to be indicted while still managing a bank in Midland or Odessa.

Brown could receive up to 24 years in prison and fined up to $1.5 million if he is convicted on the six counts, which include embezzlement.

Midland-Odessa ex-bankers who have been indicted, convicted and sentenced for bank fraud since 1985 include three former bank presidents, an ex-director, three former vice presidents, and a chief executive officer. Sentences have ranged from 24 years imprisonment to one year. Court-ordered restitution has been as high as $550,000.

One indictment, against a former Midland bank vice president, was dismissed.

SMOKING

Michael Smith, who said he had two daughters in the school system, argued against providing contraception information, saying, "We don't give out radar detectors with driver's licenses, do we?"

Another parent, Katie Smith, arguing that only "total abstinence" should be taught, said to teach contraception was tantamount to saying "don't use drugs, but if you do, use a clean needle and buy from a reputable dealer."

Others disagreed.

Another mother, Dana Frazee, with three daughters in school, observed that "not all teen-agers say no" and they need to know about contraception because it is information they will carry into adulthood.

She said it will probably be the only exposure to reliable information the teens will ever have after they finish school. She suggested that parents who don't want their children exposed to the information provided in classes refuse to grant permission to attend.

Task force recommendations include creation of the position of health supervisor, who would have responsibility for overseeing health and sex education programs.

The new sex education program would include teaching "concepts of self-worth and decision-making" along with the current drug education program, in kindergarten through 6th grade.

Grades 5-through-6 would see introduction of "physical changes at puberty," with information on human reproduction introduced in the 6th grade.

Boys and girls in elementary grades would be taught sex education in separate classes.

Junior high programs "will separate boys and girls for appropriate portions of the instruction," while the senior high program would teach all sex education materials "in mixed groups."

Under the proposal, beginning in 9th grade, students would be taught:

— Importance of family, respect for parents' attitudes toward dating.

— Dating: need for self-control and standards; differences in male and female reactions on a date; ideas for avoiding problem situations; the advisability of abstinence for teenagers.

— Future life goals require good, moral behavior.

— Reproduction.

— Marriage and family planning.

— Contraceptives, including risks, dangers, myths, limitations, correct information, (birth control is not advocated).

— Sexually transmitted diseases.

The review committee will determine whether to recommend board members approve the task force sex education program in total or with modifications in some areas.

Reagan hints again at Bush endorsement

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan hinted anew today at the worst kept secret of the Republican primary season: his support of George Bush's presidential campaign.

In a sort of political tease for the formal endorsement Reagan will make tonight at a Republican Party dinner here, the president, accompanied by Bush, walked into the Cabinet Room to waiting GOP congressional leaders.

As they emerged, the lawmakers applauded.

"I just have very brief announcement to make and that is that I'll have something to say about the campaign tonight," Reagan said.

The president then walked over to the table, sat down next to vanquished Republican presidential hopeful Bob Dole, and grinned widely as reporters tried to question him, saying at one point he had other business that needed more immediate attention.

Bush smiled, walked to the other side of the table, and took his seat across from Reagan.

Reagan's blessing later in the day will be anti-climatic, since it comes two weeks after the Pennsylvania primary in which Bush won sufficient Republican convention delegates to lock up the party nomination.

The president chose a Cabinet Room meeting with GOP congressional leaders to say he would complete the public endorsement of Bush tonight at a Republican Party dinner here.

The timing of Reagan's endorsement had been the subject of high-level jockeying between Bush campaign and White House officials in recent days, although there never was any serious question that Reagan supported Bush.

JAIL

"It's our opinion that we are not overcrowded now in a legal sense," she said.

Since inmates were transferred to the new jail April 29, reports have surfaced about a shortage of jail guards and resistance to the direct supervision concept, which requires guards to mingle directly with inmates.

"Those are administrative concerns, and the suit as such does not involve this," Bunton said.

The federal case concerning the jail began in 1973 when inmates filed a lawsuit, claiming overcrowded conditions at the jail were violating their rights. The suit resulted in the 1981 decree in which the county agreed to limit the population in the old jail to 739 inmates.

The overcrowded conditions continued in spite of the decree and, in January, attorney Gerald Goldstein, representing the inmates, filed a motion with the court asking that the county officials be held in contempt if the problems were not resolved by May 31.

Tuesday, the judge said he had asked Goldstein to file a brief with the court explaining the inmates' legal position now that the new jail is open.

Specifically, the judge said he is asking Goldstein to answer two questions: Are the plaintiffs still asking county officials to be held in contempt if the overcrowding problems are not resolved by May 31? Does the new jail resolve any of the overcrowding problems stated in the inmates' original suit, filed in 1973?

Once Goldstein's brief is filed, Bunton said the county will have a week to 10 days to respond. Additionally, the Justice Department has been asked to file an amicus curiae (friend of the court) brief on the issue.

Although Goldstein did not elaborate on what his brief would contain, he said overcrowded conditions have continued at the new jail.

"While these facilities are a lot nicer, inmates are still sleeping on the floor," he said.

The new facility, with an inmate capacity of 1,019, housed 1,363 prisoners Monday. The figures include 210 inmates waiting transfer to state prisons run by the Texas Department of Corrections.

Goldstein pointed out that the jail population would exceed capacity even if the state accepted all of its prisoners and said county officials may have to release some non-violent offenders and consider other methods to punish them.

"After all, this is a pretrial detention facility," he said. "It's not designed to punish people but hold them before trial."

Goldstein said he expected to file his brief with the court in the next week to 10 days.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Six Midland students finalists in arts contest

From Staff Reports

WASHINGTON — U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith has announced the 14 regional finalists in the seventh annual Congressional Arts Competition for high school students.

"This contest helps cultivate the imagination and artistic spirit of our young people," Smith said. "Their creative reflections tell us much about the vision of today's youth."

Six of the finalists from the 21st District of Texas are from Midland.

Amy Hester Coleman, Krysta Duvall, Shaine Myers and Tracy Potts are students at Greenwood High School, while Judy Ballard and Robin Kang attend Midland Lee.

Another finalist is from Menard High School.

Their group of 14 paintings, collages and drawings was chosen by a panel of judges in San Angelo last month from a large field of initial entries.

A winner and two runners-up will be chosen Saturday by a panel of judges from the area's artistic community.

The congressman will announce the selections in a 2 p.m. news conference near the Luby's Cafeteria entrance to Central Park Mall in San Antonio, where the work of the finalists is now on display.

The winning artwork and its creator will be flown to Washington for a June 28 ceremony at the Capitol, where the work by student artists in similar Congressional District contests across the country will be displayed for the next year.

Minister to present book

From Staff Reports

The Rev. Dr. William B. Oglesby Jr. will present a seminar on his recent book, "Biblical Themes in Pastoral Care," from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Friday at the Best Western Airport Hotel at Midland International Airport.

The seminar is sponsored by the Samaritan Counseling Center of West Texas, 202 Pilot Road, Terminal.

Oglesby served as Marthina DeFriece Professor of Pastoral Counseling, Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va., from 1952 to 1984 and has been professor emeritus since 1985.

A graduate of Austin College in Sherman, Union Theological Seminary, and the University of Chicago, Oglesby is an ordained Presbyterian minister. He is a diplomate in the American Association of Pastoral Counselors and recipient of the Distinguished Contributions Award in 1983. He is the author of five books including "With Wings as Eagles," "Referral in Pastoral Care" and "Care for the Dying."

"Dr. Oglesby is a pioneer in the field of pastoral care and counseling," says a Samaritan Counseling Center news release. "He is an animated, insightful speaker and an articulate spokesman for pastoral care in the context of the Christian faith. He is one of the most knowledgeable persons in America on the biblical basis for pastoral care."

The seminar is designed for clergy and laity. Cost is $25 per person. Interested parties need to call the SCC, 563-4144.

VAN sets spring party

From Staff Reports

Visual Aid's Newsmobile, an organization that does volunteer work with the blind and physically handicapped citizens of Midland, will hold its annual spring party for clients, volunteers and special friends Monday.

The annual event is held outdoors at VAN headquarters, 2908 W. Ohio Ave., weather permitting.

The theme of the party this year is "Frontier Days" and western decorations will be used throughout the yard. Many of the volunteer hostesses plan to be dressed in western attire.

"It is anticipated that over 100 guests will be served lunch and enjoy live western music," says a news release from VAN.

Transportation will be provided for those elderly and disabled clients among the guests.

VAN was organized by Mayme Kroenlein Martin in 1973, and its volunteers call on nursing home and house-bound clients who are blind, visually impaired or otherwise handicapped. They provide small services for those who have no family to help them, and are remembered with cards on their birthdays.

VAN also holds an open house at Christmas for its clients and volunteers and a monthly workshop to which about twenty ambulatory clients are brought and work on simple handwork projects and are treated to lunch.

VAN is not an agency of United Way and receives no funds from any level of government, but is funded entirely by contributions from local individuals and businesses.

Ballet tickets on sale

LUBBOCK (AP) — Dancer Mikhail Baryshnikov has been booked for two performances after tickets for the first appearance sold out in two days, officials said.

Tickets for the July 23 Mikhail Baryshnikov & Co. performance were sold out Tuesday, two days after they went on sale via mail order.

Lubbock Civic Centers director Van McVay contacted Baryshnikov's tour manager about a second performance July 24.

Ticket orders for the July 24 performance still are being accepted. However, orders received for the July 23 performance after it attained sellout status will be filled first.

"To tell you the truth," McVay said, "we may wind up selling out the second show on Wednesday. Then again, we may be able to fill orders through the end of the week. I just can't tell you for sure. But yes, I would advise people to mail in their orders right away if they expect to have any chance at all of obtaining tickets."

Area cowboys to compete

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — Teams of Texas' best working cowboys, representing 13 well-known ranches, will compete in the Western Heritage Classic's "wild and wooly" ranch rodeo Friday and Saturday at the Taylor County Expo Center.

Sponsored by Budweiser and Ben E. Keith Beers of Abilene, the Western Heritage Classic is a four-day event, which closes Sunday, saluting the heritage and traditions of the Texas ranching lifestyle.

Other events and activities of the Western Heritage Classic include an authentic cattle drive, exhibits of Western art, a pre-rodeo gala called the Rhinestone Round Up, a championship Cowboy Campfire Cook-off with ranch cooking straight from the chuckwagon, a Bit & Spur Show, Australian Shepherd Dog Working Trails, professional bull fights and appearances by the world-famous Budweiser Clydesdales and the Anheuser-Busch sky-diving team.

Wolfman Jack hosts new rock 'n' roll television series

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Legendary disc jockey Wolfman Jack says his new cable TV show spotlighting the golden era of rock 'n' roll rivals his old hit show, "The Midnight Special."

The Wolfman, who portrayed himself in the 1973 movie "American Graffiti," is the host of "Rock 'n' Roll Palace" on The Nashville Network. The 30-minute program is taped at Little Darlin's Rock 'n' Roll Palace in Kissimmee, Fla.

The bearded host says he does not missing doing "The Midnight Special," of which he was host for eight years, because the new program is so good.

"We have very special and wonderful people," the 49-year-old Wolfman said in an interview. "We had a magic and it comes out on the tube. The show comes on and goes off fast. Everyone was inspired and wanted to be there and wanted to perform. It was very magical."

Guests this season include the Diamonds, the Shirelles, Tommy Sands, the Coasters, Del Shannon, Brian Hyland, Joey Dee, Lou Christie, the Crystals, Bobby Vee, Martha Reeves, Mary Wells, Johnny Tillotson, the Platters, the Crickets, Lenny Welch, Freddie Cannon, Spencer Davis, Billy J. Kramer and the Tokens.

"On TV, there's not one show going after these acts," the Wolfman said. "This is the first show to come along and do this.

"It's real American music — what rock 'n' roll originally was before people turned it around and sideways and upside down. From 1958 to 1964, that's real rock 'n' roll. Then the Beatles hit and everyone sounded like them. They didn't give our boys long enough. There were real classics from that era.

"The feeling of some of the music today is a little bit like that (era), but the purity of rock 'n' roll when it first came out was astounding," she said. "It was pure, simple, nothing heavy, nothing but fun and romance. It had a good beat and you could dance to it. There were great ballads in those days."

The Wolfman, who has a syndicated radio show on about 70 stations, said music today emphasizes the performer rather than the song.

"You don't go see Michael Jackson for the song but for his great entertaining and dancing. You see a $2 million show. In the old days, you paid $2-$3 and saw 18 acts. Back then, everyone worked together. You try to put 18 acts together today and see what it costs you."

The Wolfman said he has many fond memories of "The Midnight Special," which he left in 1982 because the show was de-emphasizing live music, he said.

"There were some fine moments. I remember Ray Charles and Aretha Franklin and Billy Preston and at the end of each show we'd jam. This was very unusual for those days. For us to put them all together was very important."

The Wolfman really is Bob Smith, who grew up in a tough neighborhood in Brooklyn, N.Y. His character emerged in the 1960s from XERF, a Mexican station with a signal that carried into the United States. He later was on XERB, another Mexican station.

Then he appeared in the George Lukas movie "American Graffiti," which starred Ron Howard, Richard Dreyfuss, Harrison Ford and Cindy Williams, and briefly featured Suzanne Somers.

"It took the Wolfman from a cult figure to the rank of American flag and apple pie," he said. "It made me legitimate. Most actors go all their life and try for that kind of opportunity. The Wolfman stumbled and fell into it. I am very lucky."

Oil prices still directionless

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices showed modest signs of strength, gaining 6 cents to stand at $17.52 at midmorning.

Prices had finished mixed Tuesday for the second straight day in continued thin, directionless trading.

Futures prices for crude oil were mostly higher Tuesday, while gasoline futures generally declined and heating oil was mixed on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Futures contracts for June delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark crude produced in the United States, settled at $17.46 per 42-gallon barrel on the exchange, down 8 cents from Monday's close. Most other contract months showed small gains, however.

Traders said the weakness in June crude reflected a continued surplus of West Texas Intermediate and other light crude grades in the spot market for immediate purchase.

June contracts for unleaded regular gasoline edged up 0.03 cent to close at 51.62 cents a gallon, but most other months fell.

June heating oil gained 0.07 cent to 47.74 cents a gallon. Shorter-term contracts for heating oil rose while longer-term contracts slipped.

Dollar steady in thin trading

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar held steady in thin trading in Europe this morning, with foreign exchange dealers saying they expected it to remain in a narrow range throughout the session. Gold prices rose.

Traders said volume was modest ahead of the long weekend due to start for many dealers in Europe on Thursday.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.39 yen to a closing 124.24 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 124.20 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Tuesday:

–1.6765 West German marks, down from 1.6783

–1.3925 Swiss francs, down from 1.3955

–5.6915 French francs, up from 5.6905

–1.8789 Dutch guilders, down from 1.8815

–1,248.00 Italian lire, unchanged

–1.2370 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2375

The British pound rose to $1.8865 from $1.8825 on Tuesday.

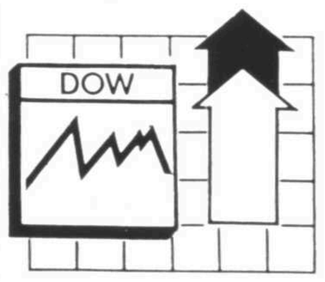
Gold opened in London at a bid price of $450.40 a troy ounce, compared with late Tuesday's $446.50. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $449.35.

In Zurich, the bid price was $449.20, up from $446.50 late Tuesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $2.73 to close at a bid $451.68.

Silver bullion was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.52 a troy ounce, up from Tuesday's $6.45.

Stocks break four-day decline



NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices closed slightly higher Tuesday, little affected by news that several major brokerages had suspended index-arbitrage trading for their own accounts in an attempt to curb market volatility.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials settled at 2,003.65, up 6.30 points.

Gainers edged out decliners on the New York Stock Exchange, with 745 up, 713 down and 507 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 131.2 million shares, compared with 166.32 million on Monday.

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 151.72 million shares.

The NYSE index was up 0.47 at 145.75.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials rose 1.08 to 299.66, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was 1.08 higher at 257.62.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index fell 0.18 to 299.81. The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market closed at 375.43, down 0.84.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market gained $5.581 billion, or 0.22 percent, in value.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

State's bank failures could reach 70

DALLAS (AP) — Bad loan portfolios in Texas have prompted the state's banking chief to increase projections on the number of 1988 bank failures from 50 to 70.

"Bank failures have not subsided during the first part of 1988 and, in fact, are running ahead of last year's pace," said Texas Banking Commissioner Kenneth Littlefield. "We have not seen a turnaround."

Last year, 50 Texas banks failed to set a national record. So far this year, 23 have failed. Another 179 state-chartered banks are on the regulators' problem list and Littlefield said Tuesday that few will last until the state economy makes a rebound.

Warner, Lorimar announce merger plans

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Loss-plagued Lorimar Telepictures Corp. has agreed to be acquired by Warner Communications Inc. in a $1.18 billion stock-swap deal that adds a top television producer to Warner's movie-and-music empire.

Tuesday's announced merger between the two entertainment companies had been widely expected, because they have been engaged in talks since March.

The agreement, which carries a number of conditions, calls for 0.415 Warner common shares to be exchanged for each Lorimar common share.

Consultant: Sabotage caused Bhopal leak

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — A report from a private consultant hired by Union Carbide Corp. says sabotage by a disgruntled employee, not negligence, caused a deadly gas leak at the company's Bhopal, India, plant about four years ago.

Arthur D. Little Inc.'s report, released Tuesday, supports previous assertions by Carbide about how the disaster occurred and refutes the Indian government's negligence theory as "physically impossible" given the plant's design.

Trade bill on way to President Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic leaders are preparing to send the omnibus trade bill to President Reagan for an expected veto after efforts to erase the measure's Alaskan oil provisions proved futile.

Labor leaders, clergymen and other supporters of the 1,000-page bill were invited to a ceremony today at which House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, planned to sign the bill.

It won final passage in the Senate on April 27 but instead of being sent to Reagan's desk has been stranded on Capitol Hill while leaders have sought to do a bit of post-passage tailoring.

Computer trading limits praised

By RICK GLADSTONE
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A broad move by five big brokerages to limit computerized stock dealing has won enthusiastic endorsement from critics who say program trading caused unwarranted price convulsions and alienated investors.

But some question the effectiveness of the halt on index arbitrage program trading because four of the firms will continue using the strategy for their clients' investments.

Kidder Peabody & Co., Morgan Stanley & Co., PaineWebber Inc. and Salomon Brothers Inc. on Tuesday announced limitations on program trading for their own accounts only. Bear Stearns & Co. said it had imposed a total suspension.

The moves marked the most aggressive voluntary steps yet to calm an outcry over the strategy that's blamed for destructive volatility in the stock market before and since the October crash.

"It is necessary for all to work toward the goal of restoring confidence in and guaranteeing the vibrancy of the marketplace," John Gutfreund, chairman and chief executive of Salomon, said in a statement that reflected the other firms' views.

"Any action taken by member firms to tone volatility and increase investor confidence should be applauded," said Richard Torrenzano, spokesman for the New York Stock Exchange, which also has taken steps to limit program trading. "I think it's meaningful and a step in the right direction."

The firms reportedly have been under enormous pressure from stock exchanges, customers, lawmakers, and even their own salespeople to coordinate action to control the practice, which involves the massive purchase and sale of stock index futures and the underlying stocks on which they are based.

Although the action won't mean an end to program trading, some traders said it should help limit the volatility because the brokerages had used the technique much more frequently than their customers did.

"We think it's a right (action) for the capital markets in the long run, and will encourage individuals to come back to the market," said Anthony A. LaCroix, chairman, president and chief executive of Advest Inc., a Hartford, Conn.-based securities firm that has urged tough restrictions on program trading.

Please see LIMITS, Page 7B

PROGRAM TRADING SIMPLIFIED

NEW YORK (AP) — Program trading is a catch-all term for a range of computerized trading strategies that most often refers to index arbitrage, which involves the rapid purchase and sale of stocks and stock-index futures. Here's how it works:

- TRADERS ATTEMPT to profit on discrepancies between the price of the actual stocks traded in New York and the value of indexes based on them, such as the Standard & Poor's 500, traded in Chicago.
- WHEN THE STOCKStrade at a significant discount to the index futures, traders sell the futures and buy the stocks. Conversely, when the index futures sell at a big enough discount from the underlying stocks, traders sell the stocks and buy the index futures.
- THE SPEED at which these transactions are executed is crucial to the program trading strategy because the price discrepancies between stocks and stock-index futures are temporary during the course of a trading session.
- BIG BROKERAGES use powerful computer programs that track these discrepancies and instantly set off buy or sell programs when conditions are deemed profitable.

Hispanic chamber names 1988 members of year

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

The Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce named its Hispanic Businessman, Businesswoman, Member and Corporate Member of the Year at Tuesday's meeting. The four will compete for the state title at the Texas Association of Mexican-American Chambers of Commerce convention this July.

Businessman of the year is Larry Carrasco, owner of New Method Cleaners. Forced to leave high school to support his family when his father died, Carrasco received his GED while in the armed services. He came to Midland and opened a janitorial service, which grew to include 30 employees and grossed approximately $250,000 a year. He later took over his uncle's dry cleaning business.

Businesswoman of the year is Oralia Corrales, owner of Oralia "Lillie" Corrales Insurance Agency. She is also a member of the Midland City Council, serving as Mayor Pro Tem.

Member of the year is Charlene Romero Wurtz, employed by Starline Printers. She currently heads the MHCC's Ambassadors and formerly was in charge of the chamber's newsletter.

Named corporate member of the year is the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

During the meeting, Corrales presented a "Resolution of Commendation" from the city council to Roger Robles, immediate past president of the MHCC and current chairman of the Eastside Economic Development Task Force. Robles' efforts on behalf of the MHCC, the task force, as well as other efforts on behalf of the community were cited in the commendation.

Failures taking toll on FDIC, FSLIC

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — The difficulties of banks and savings and loan institutions, particularly in Texas, are exerting extraordinary pressures on the federal corporations charged with insuring the nation's financial network.

Both the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC) are pouring billions of dollars into financially strapped member banks and thrifts.

While the FDIC reserves are presently considered sound, the FSLIC is said to be endangered by the mounting losses being accumulated by its member institutions.

The strategy has been to keep troubled banks and savings and loan institutions afloat in order to avoid the payoffs to depositors that would be necessary if the banks and thrifts were to collapse completely.

After oil prices skyrocketed worldwide in the early 1970s, Texas experienced a boom that encouraged many banks and thrifts there to overextend themselves. When the recession of the early 1980s hit and oil prices dropped precipitously in the middle of the decade, the problems of the state's financial institutions — including numerous fraudulent loans — became readily apparent.

FDIC reports a net worth of more than $18 billion for '87

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), which insures deposits at commercial banks, reported a net worth of more than $18 billion at the end of 1987, up from $11 billion in 1980.

The thousands of luxurious hotels, condo complexes and now-empty skyscrapers backed by the state's financial institutions made sense only in the context of a flourishing energy-based economy. After the downturn, the properties could not be sold off for anywhere near the value of the loans with which they were financed.

Both the FDIC and the FSLIC are hoping that a general economic recovery will return shaky institutions to a firm footing. But some analysts are saying the quick-fix approach will not work in the long run.

The funds now being used by both the FDIC and FSLIC to bail out the troubled banks and thrifts are reserves collected from member institutions to cover depositors in the event of bankruptcies.

According to William Isaacs, former chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and now chief executive of Secura Group, a private financial consulting firm here, healthy savings and loan institutions are assessed about 10 percent of their after-tax income by the FSLIC to prop up ailing thrifts.

Isaacs believes that the present assessment will have to be tripled and continued indefinitely if the present bailout strategy for the troubled industry is continued. And he says: "There is just no way you can or should place that kind of burden on the healthy savings and loans."

'Buy West Texas' rally scheduled

By MELLA McEWEN

McEwen

ClayDesta Communications, KMID-TV and the Midland Chamber of Commerce are hosting an invitation-only Buy West Texas rally at ClayDesta Atrium on May 17.

Over 2,000 invitations have been mailed to Chamber members and other invited guests.

The newest restaurant in town is CASA MADRID, located at 911 S. Big Spring.

Owner Martha Madrid said she offers all kinds of Mexican dishes from beef fajitas at $4.89 to chile rellenos, carne asada and a Mexican platter. She also offers breakfast platters and breakfast burritos. Hours are from 8 a.m. to 2 p.. and 5-9 p.m. Monday through Saturday, and 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Sundays.

Midlander Richard Wilburn has recently opened ABC LOCK AND KEY at 2611 N. Midland Drive, just north of Mesa Verde shopping center.

A long-time Midland resident and former oilman, Wilburn said he went to school for a year to learn the locksmith trade, then worked at Midland Lock and Safe for two years before opening his own business.

He makes keys, rekeys houses, makes master keys, opens and repairs locks, cuts keys, opens locked cars and other similar services.

As part of National Photo Month (May), K MART, along with Minolta and Polaroid, is sponsoring a "What's Your Favorite Place" contest.

Contestants can enter a picture of themselves in their favorite place, holding a K mart bag to the local K mart store at 340 N. Midland Drive. The judges will be the store manager and a local photographer. There will be a winning photograph from each store, which will then be sent to one of the five regional K mart offices, where two grand prize winners will be selected.

Individual store winners will receive a Polaroid Impulse camera. The 10 grand prize winners will receive a Minolta 7000 auto focus camers, 70-120 zoom lense, 28 mm wide angle lens, 2800 Minolta flash, SLP auto focus camera bag, five rolls of 35mm 100 film and four rolls of 35mm ISO 400 film.

The contest begins May 15 and entry deadline is June 18. Entrants can submit more than photograph.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Subordinated notes risky investment for retirees

By BILL DOYLE

Q. My wife and I are nearing 80 years of age. I suppose we are like a lot of retirees who spend a little more than their income. We are fairly well off but want to travel while we are still able. We also like to patronize fine restaurants, etc.

A $100,000 certificate of deposit paying 7.5 percent interest we own will mature soon and we are considering investing that money in 15-year, 11 percent subordinated notes issued by a savings and loan association. What are your thoughts on this type of investment?

Doyle

A. They are thoughts of caution because you would be putting your $100,000 at risk by investing as you are considering. Those notes do not have Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. coverage for the simple reason they are not deposits.

Those notes are debt securities issued by that S&L in order to raise more money to use in its business. As a note owner, you would be a creditor of the S&L. If the S&L goes belly up, you would not be bailed out by the federal government. You would have to stand in line with the S&L's other creditors.

It could be a long line, because those notes are "subordinated." That means the S&L has sold other debt issues which rank higher than yours on the balance sheet. In the event of the S&L's liquidation, those "senior" securities would have to be paid off before you and other holders of subordinated debt securities get anything.

The 11 percent interest rate is tempting and higher than you can get on absolutely safe things such as insured CDs and U.S. Treasury bills, notes and bonds. Common sense tells you the interest on those subordinated notes is high because of the risk involved.

It's quite possible those subordinated notes might work out just great — producing that high interest and being paid off at face value when they mature. But you can't be absolutely sure.

Unless you are ready, willing and financially able to take on risk, my advice is to stay with insured CDs and Treasury securities. Don't fret about spending a bit more than your income. Based on your letter, you're not going to outlive your capital.

Q. I have a 10 percent $50,000 CD maturing in three months. With the monthly interest checks from that CD and my Social Security benefits, I get along fine.

However, unless interest rates rise from their present low levels, I will lose a large part of my income by renewing the CD. What can I do to maintain 10 percent income from the $50,000 and still be safe?

A. Sorry to give you bad news. But, unless interest rates shoot way up over the coming three months, there is no place you can get 10 percent interest with the rock-solid safety of federally insured CDs.

You could get interest that high and even a bit higher a number of places — all involving varying degrees of risk. It's obvious that you should not take on any risk at all. Stick with CDs, even though you will have to settle for the current lower rates.

As I write this, you can get a bit more than 7.25 percent interest on 30-month CDs at some banks and S&Ls.

Q. I use the interest from a $48,000 CD to supplement the income from my part-time job. It's a one-year CD. My hopes are for rising interest rates. Would it be wiser to put $40,000 in a long-term CD and only $8,000 in a short-term CD? I'm 57 and can begin cashing in my individual retirement accounts at 59 1/2 if an emergency arises.

A. If your hopes for higher rates materialize, you'll do better keeping most of your money in short-term investments until interest rates peak and then moving it into long-term CDs, thereby locking in the high rates.

Good luck! No one can accurately predict where interest rates will be in the near future or in the years ahead. Some of the biggest names on Wall Street have gotten egg on their faces with dead-wrong interest rate forecasts.

Computer 'virus' spurring new caution among users

DALLAS (AP) — An insidious malady creeping onto disks of personal and business computers is wreaking havoc with programs and creating a new conservatism among computer users.

So-called "electronic viruses" are actually small computer programs, usually developed by mischievous "hackers" to attack software in mainframes and personal computers.

Effects of the new epidemic have made some computer users sick with frustration. Users who don't know where their software has been the past several months may have reason to worry about its health.

"You mean I can catch something from that thing?" quipped J.D. Bettes, a crime prevention officer of the Garland Police Department, which uses an electronic "bulletin board" to give out information. "Do I have to wear rubber things on my fingertips?"

Electronic bugs have been known for years in computer technology. The most benign viruses simply blank out screens for a moment, then flash messages such as, "Gotcha!"

But more destructive forms can create system failure or even delete important computer files from memory. Viruses enter through exchanged software and may remain undetected until they strike. And the bugs can reproduce.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials had to purge one computer after a West German group called Chaos invaded the system and planted a virus.

Sematech, Defense to sign pact

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sematech and the Department of Defense have reached an agreement that will allow the Austin research consortium to receive its first batch of federal funds, says Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

Bentsen, D-Texas, says Sematech should receive its first $15 million from the government within 15 days of the pact's signing.

He said he learned Tuesday of that an agreement had been reached and a formal announcement of the signing was expected today.

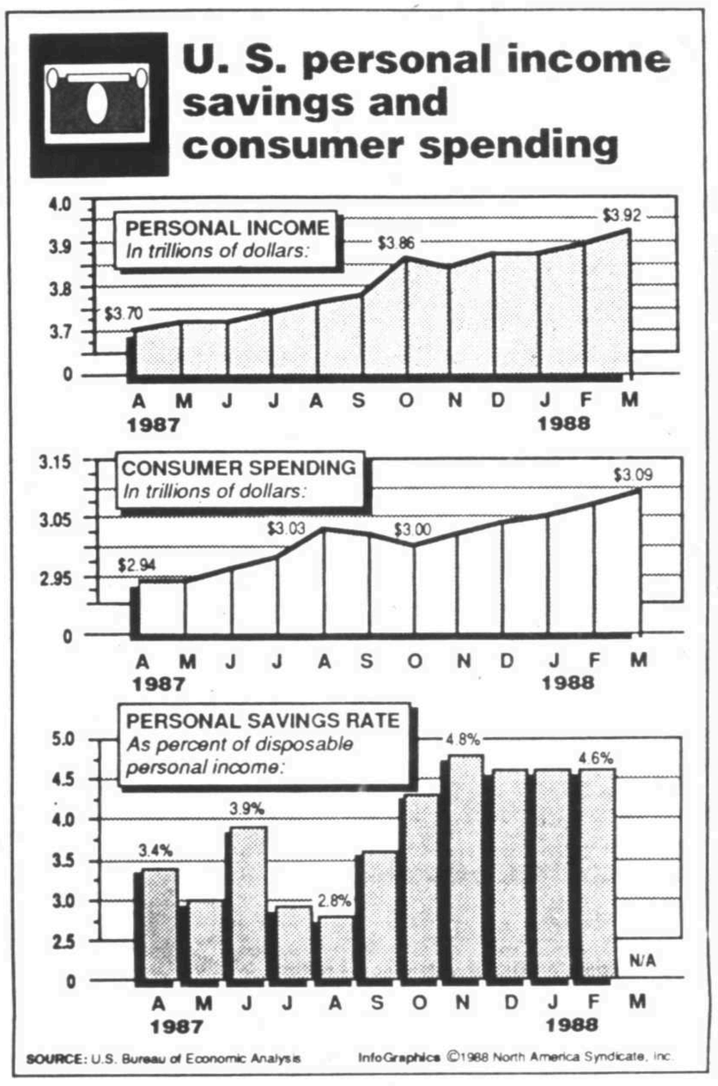
The signing of the "memorandum of understanding" governing the program "seals the deal and permits Sematech to go full speed ahead," Bentsen said. "I'm pleased that both industry and government have worked out their partnership in a spirit of cooperation.

"Meanwhile, I'm busy trying to round up the needed congressional support for full funding in the appropriations bill to keep this program on schedule," Bentsen said.

Congress appropriated $100 million for Sematech for the current fiscal year, but receipt of the funds was contingent upon signing the memorandum of agreement.

President Reagan had proposed Sematech receive only $45 million in federal funding for the next fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1.

However, House and Senate committees have voted to restore the amount to the full $100 million, which must now clear both chambers.



Desert Partners, USG head for showdown at annual meeting

CHICAGO (AP) — Desert Partners have been gunning for control of USG Corp. since late last year and today's annual meeting offers the partnership a chance to appeal directly to the company's stockholders.

At stake are six seats on USG's 15-member board of directors — five carrying three-year terms and one with a year left to fill.

Both USG and Desert Partners have nominated a slate of candidates for the seats, campaigning by mail and through newspaper advertisements for shareholders' votes.

Most shareholders have already voted their choices by mailing back proxy cards supplied by the opposing parties — blue cards for USG's slate, white for Desert Partners'.

But shareholders who voted by mail can change their votes at the meeting.

Results of the election were not expected to be announced today. Federal regulations allow USG 10 days to tally the votes and announce the winners, said USG spokeswoman Randi Killian.

An election victory by the outsiders would not translate into immediate control of USG by Desert Partners, a partnership led by oilmen Cyril Wagner Jr. and Jack E. Brown of Midland, Texas

But a victory by Desert Partners' slate would indicate shareholder approval of the Texans' demand that USG drop its "poison pill" takeover defense, a major impediment to the proposed acquisition.

Study finds damage from Alaskan oil drilling

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Interior Department report says there has been environmental damage from oil drilling in Alaska but apparently nothing to scuttle an administration request to open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to petroleum development, a congressional aide says.

The report has been withheld from Congress, however, and the copies of the report have been made available only through unofficial channels, say aides to Rep. George Miller, D-Calif.

Miller is chairman of the House Interior water and power resources subcommittee considering the administration request to allow oil rigs in the nation's largest wildlife refuge.

In April 1987, Miller had requested a report from the Fish and Wildlife Service on the environmental impact of drilling in Alaska's North Slope.

Miller's aides said Tuesday the report prepared by the service's Fairbanks office was completed and sent to the Interior Department last December but never sent to Miller.

Philip Million, a spokesman for the Fish and Wildlife Service, said Tuesday night he had not seen the report, but said he had been told "that it was a regional report prepared in Alaska and there were disagreements within the regional office on the conclusions reached in that report."

Million said the report either has been or is being modified, but that he didn't know what conclusions the final version will draw.

The report deals with existing drilling activities at Prudhoe Bay, about 70 miles west of the refuge, and the Trans-Alaska pipeline.

The information from the report did not represent any "smoking gun" that could, by itself, torpedo the administration's request for permission to drill in the refuge, the aide said.

"What makes this such a big deal is they sat on it," said the aide, who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

Another aide commented: "The real issue is whether Congress is being told the whole story. They're not."

The new report by the Fairbanks office supports some testimony given to Congress that populations of predators like bears and wolves have diminished since Prudhoe opened. The decline has been blamed on the arrival of an industrial complex and illegal hunting.

But the document also said the caribou herd in the area has grown during development of Prudhoe and that no major oil spills had occurred.

The report said air pollution has been a problem at Prudhoe, but said that dust has been more of a problem than chemical pollutants.

In testimony before congressional committees considering the future of the refuge, Interior Department witnesses have acknowledged problems at Prudhoe with environmental protection and enforcement but they said Prudhoe has improved in recent years.

Miller's aides related that another section of the report said 22,500 birds were lost or displaced from Prudhoe.

The aides noted, however, that the report did not tell another side of the Prudhoe story: It has produced 5 billion barrels of oil and brought about $100 billion worth of economic benefits to the nation.

Miller's subcommittee has tentatively scheduled another round of hearings on the refuge question for early next month. Bills to open the refuge have been approved by the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee.

The Reagan administration and the oil industry have been pushing Congress since the start of 1987 to allow development on the refuge, which they say may hold oil deposits to rival Prudhoe Bay's and which could help alleviate the nation's growing dependence on imported oil.

CHAMBER

Also recognized during the meeting were Darlene Gifford, who was named Minority Advocate by the Small Business Association's Lubbock regional office, and three students of the month selected by the MHCC, KJJT radio and McDonalds. MHCC president Sam Flores called the students the "Hispanics of the Future" and said supporting and encouraging Hispanic students to continue their education was an important mission for the chamber.

Special guests Pete Martinez, chairman and chief executive officer of TAMACC, and Joe Morin, president of TAMACC, were in town to discuss the upcoming state convention. They told members they were pleased with progress on the convention to date, and Morin reported that TAMACC members who pre-register for the convention are eligible for a drawing to win a five day, four night trip to Mexico City.

Elvia Hernandez, executive director of the MHCC, reported that journalist Geraldo Rivera won't be able to address the convention due to an assignment overseas. He will be replaced by San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros. She also reported that the chamber is a nominee for Outstanding Volunteer of the Year by the Midland Volunteer Center.

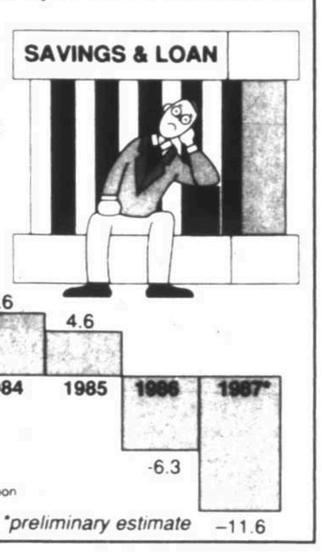
Nevertheless, experts say proprietary program trading by these brokerages has accounted for only about 20 percent of the total volume of trades attributed to the strategy. Some critics said this leaves much uncertainty.

"Liquidity in our financial markets has dried up, and this may be the first sight of rain we've seen in a long time," said Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., chairman of the finance subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee in reaction to the suspensions.

Capital Guardian Trust Co. Chairman Robert G. Kirby, a member of the presidential panel that investigated the stock-market crash, said the big brokerages probably had determined that bad publicity about the technique didn't outweigh the profits they derived from it.

FSLIC '87 deficit $11.6 billion

As of the end of 1987, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation projected that the cost of meeting its obligations would exceed the value of its assets by at least $11.6 billion. This compares to a 6.3 billion deficit at the end of 1986.



TOLL

In the past decade, the FDIC and FSLIC combined have used more than $40 billion to shore up endangered banks and thrifts or to pay off depositors when the doors were shut.

When the FSLIC steps in to bolster insolvent thrifts, as a rule, it brings in new managers to assess the damage and to maintain normal operations and depositors' confidence, while recovering as much as possible from bad loans.

In fact, problems within the thrift industry are considered so widespread by some members of Congress that they anticipate many savings and loan institutions will have to be closed and tax dollars will have to be appropriated both to pay off depositors and to clear up the thrifts' bad debts.

None of that has happened, but a number of solutions are being discussed in the halls of Congress and in financial circles:

■ Broader powers are being considered for banks and thrifts that presumably will improve their financial situation by freeing them to compete with securities dealers and insurance companies. The U.S. Senate has passed legislation mandating such changes and similar legislation is pending in the House. Critics warn that expanding the realm of banks and thrifts could create greater dangers in the event of another crisis in the industry.

■ A new federal institution is being considered that would absorb the bulk of the bad-debts from failing financial institutions. It would hold the diminished assets behind the bad debts until a general economic recovery permits them to be sold at a reasonable price.

■ Merging of both bank and thrift institutions as well as the FDIC and FSLIC is being discussed. Banks are opposing such a move because they are worried that the stable FDIC might be overwhelmed by sick thrift institutions. The savings and loan institutions are only lukewarm toward the proposition because they don't want to give up their edge over banks in real estate lending authority.

■ To reduce the burden of ailing thrifts on other savings and loan institutions, Isaacs intends to present a plan to Congress that would oblige the Federal Reserve to return to the FSLIC interest accrued on the after-tax income of its members that is held by the Fed.

Isaacs estimates that such a program would immediately generate $2.5 billion per year to help restore the overall health of the thrift industry. Currently, the Fed turns that money over to the U.S. Treasury.

■ As a last resort, appropriations into the billions of dollars are being weighed. Such funding would be necessary to close the insolvent savings and loan institutions.

For now, emergencies are being met on a case-by-case basis, despite complaints that such an approach will cost far more in the long run.

An estimated 300 to 400 savings and loan institutions are now considered "brain dead" — kept open with federal insurance funds because there isn't enough money to pay off depositors and buy up bad assets.

Last year, Congress authorized the "recapitalization" of FSLIC by floating $10.6 billion in bonds. But already, that money is considered inadequate for the job facing the insurance corporation.

The comptroller general's office is projecting that $25 billion will be needed to bail out the 250 to 300 thrifts that are in the worst shape. Some financial analysts put the figure for the amount of money needed as high as $90 billion. The FSLIC could cover the smaller figure, but it could not cope with losses at the higher figure.

Last year, in Texas alone, savings and loan losses totaled about $6.4 billion with 104 of the state's 143 savings and loans formally considered insolvent.

Traditionally, savings and loan institutions got their money from deposits in passbook savings accounts, which had a federal ceiling of 4.5 percent interest. They loaned that money out again for mortgages.

Inflation, however, led to creation of new financial instruments such as money-market funds that adjusted their interest rates to keep up with inflation.

Such funds hurt the thrifts until Congress lifted the ceiling on the interest rates savings and loan organizations could offer and also broadened the scope of their activities.

Thousands of thrift executives joined in the booming real estate ventures, especially after tax law changes in 1981 speeded up the timetable for tax write-offs.

When oil prices collapsed, hundreds of savings and loan executives were caught short, not just with suddenly uneconomical loans but with 'insider' loans to friends and with corrupt patterns of pyramiding loans.

Danny Wall, who a year ago took charge of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board that regulates the thrifts, has testified that "misconduct" was a significant contributing factor in the losses of 43 of the 210 savings and loan institutes that have been closed, merged or put under federal management since 1982.

WORLD in brief

Gorbachev expects party to fall in line

MOSCOW (AP) — A meeting between Mikhail S. Gorbachev and prominent editors has made clear that a major gathering of Communist Party members next month is expected to fall solidly in line behind his reform campaign.

Gorbachev told the media and ideology leaders at a meeting at the party Central Committee that old methods of choosing delegates to party conferences would be scrapped for the meeting planned June 28, the first such gathering since 1941. The 5,000 people to take part should be chosen solely on the basis of their support for the reforms, Gorbachev said.

"There must be no more quotas, as were the case in the past, specifying how many factory workers and farmers and how many women are to be elected, among others," Gorbachev said. "The principal political directive is to elect active supporters of perestroika to go to the conference."

Others who spoke at the meeting appeared to endorse that approach and declared "perestroika," Gorbachev's effort to rebuild Soviet society, a path from which no one should stray.

The 57-year-old party chief met with the media and ideology leaders on Saturday, but full reports on the exchange were released by the official Tass news agency only Tuesday night and early today.

Hijack convictions upheld

ROME (AP) — Italy's highest court upheld the convictions and prison sentences of seven Palestinians who conceived and carried out the 1985 hijacking of the Achille Lauro cruise ship.

After a three-hour hearing, the Court of Cassation on Tuesday rejected appeals by defendants, including fugitive Palestinian leader Mohammed Abbas. The court thus let stand the May 23, 1987, convictions and sentences decided by an appeals court in Genoa, the port city where the ill-fated Mediterranean cruise began.

An elderly, wheelchair-bound New Yorker, Leon Klinghoffer, was shot to death and his body was thrown into the sea during the ordeal.

Tuesday's ruling cleared the way for a separate civil action by relatives of Klinghoffer to seek damages. Earlier rulings said the two daughters of Klinghoffer were entitled to compensation.

Pope to meet with miners

COCHABAMBA, Bolivia (AP) — Pope John Paul II made his way across the country's rugged Andes and high plains for a meeting with miners and peasants in a city where half the people are unemployed.

After a night at a historic monastery in Cochabamba, the pontiff was to fly today to the city of Oruro, center of the devastated tin mining industry.

A papal Mass for workers and peasants was planned at Oruro airport, 12,160 feet above sea level on the "altiplano." Unemployment in the city of 132,000 is running at easily twice the national average of 22 percent.

The city is considered the focal point of misery in Bolivia, the poorest country in South America. The collapse of world tin prices has prompted the conservative government to shut down 14 of the 21 state-owned mines, leaving 21,500 of the 27,000 men who worked them jobless.

John Paul flew 150 miles over the Andean mountain range to Cochabamba from La Paz on Tuesday night, ending a 24-hour stay in the Bolivian capital.

Laos site yields no remains

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — American and Laotian soldiers today completed an excavation of a U.S. warplane crash site in southern Laos without finding any remains of two crewmen missing in action for 22 years, an official said.

The soldiers worked together searching a remote bamboo- and brush-covered hillside in Savannakhet province where the OV-1A Mohawk reconnaissance aircraft was downed by heavy ground fire on March 15, 1966.

It was the third joint excavation in communist-ruled Laos, where Washington is trying to resolve the fates of 555 Americans who never returned from the Indochina war.

"There was an exhaustive search of the crash area from May 2 to 11...(but) no remains of the two crewmen aboard the aircraft...were found," said Ross Petzing, spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Bangkok.

He said the team toiled in very hot and dusty conditions, "and there was some danger posed by unexploded ordnance left over from the Indochina war period. Three cluster bombs and several live shells were exploded at the excavation site by U.S. Air Force emergency ordnance disposal experts."

Burma cited for rights abuses

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Burmese soldiers have killed, raped and tortured members of ethnic minorities in the government's fight to crush rebel movements, the human rights group Amnesty International said today.

The London-based organization said evidence shows "a consistent pattern of gross violations of human rights" by the Burmese army. In a 71-page report, it described the fates of nearly 200 alleged victims.

An appendix gave details of apparent "extrajudicial executions" of 60 members of the Karen minority.

Sophisticated Salads

These days, everyone is a great deal more sophisticated when it comes to food. We're wiser about nutrition, more discerning about freshness and quality and much more experienced with the exotic tastes and flavors of cuisines from around the world. This fashionable food awareness has elevated even the "everyday" salad to new heights of style and taste. Today, we're just as likely to see salad served as a creative entree or a sandwich as we are to see it as a side dish.

That doesn't mean salads have to be more elaborate and expensive. On the contrary, the very essence of sophistication is knowing how to be beautifully simple without being plain or boring. These five sophisticated salads certainly have enough panache to satisfy even today's more experienced palates. Yet they are based on common, economical foods you can find in your neighborhood supermarket all year long.

Initially, the stars of these elegant salads — California Iceberg Lettuce, California avocados and commercial salad dressings and sauces — may not seem terribly stylish to you, especially since they've been mainstays of American menus for such a long time. But our new food sophistication has also taught us that good, basic, simple foods are really the secret to creating masterpieces of culinary distinction. And that's what these salads are. They are as far from humdrum and boring as you can get, yet they feature fresh produce and products we are all familiar with. Best of all, they can be made ahead and refrigerated until serving time, because nothing is more sophisticated than knowing that one's time and energy are the most valuable commodities these days.

Iceberg & Avocado Aspic

- 1 large head California Iceberg Lettuce
- 1 medium California avocado, seeded, peeled and quartered
- 1 package (8 ounce) cream cheese, softened and cut into 6 pieces
- 1/2 cup mayonnaise
- 1 teaspoon lemon juice
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon hot pepper sauce or to taste
- 2 envelopes unflavored gelatin
- 1/2 cup water
- 1/4 cup diced red pepper
- 1/4 cup diced green pepper
- 1 tablespoon minced onion
- French dressing

Wash, core and hollow out center of lettuce. Drain and set aside. Combine avocado, cream cheese, mayonnaise, lemon juice, salt and hot pepper sauce in blender or food processor. Process until smooth.

In a small sauce pan combine gelatin and water, allow to soften. Cook over medium heat, stirring to dissolve. With blender or food processor running, slowly pour gelatin into avocado mixture. Immediately pour mixture into medium bowl and stir in red and green peppers – and onion.

Spoon avocado mixture into lettuce. Wrap tightly with plastic wrap and chill overnight. Slice into wedges and serve with French dressing. Garnish each wedge with a sprig of parsley and a radish rose.

For 6 to enjoy.

Garden Trifle

- 1 medium head California Iceberg Lettuce, cored and torn into bite size pieces
- 2 medium California avocados, seeded, peeled, cubed and lightly tossed in fresh lemon juice
- 1 small purple onion, thinly sliced
- 3/4 cup radishes, thinly sliced
- 3/4 cup yellow squash, thinly sliced
- 3/4 cup shredded carrots
- 1 cup mayonnaise
- 1/2 cup sour cream
- 1 package (0.2 ounce) dry dressing mix (any flavor)

In a shallow medium-size salad bowl layer half of the lettuce, avocado, purple onion, radishes, yellow squash and carrots. Top with remaining lettuce.

Combine mayonnaise, sour cream and dry dressing mix. Spread evenly over lettuce, sealing to edge of bowl.

Arrange remaining avocado, purple onion, radishes, yellow squash and carrots in a diagonal stripe pattern over surface of dressing.

Cover tightly with plastic wrap. Refrigerate for several hours.

For 6 to enjoy.

Serving hint: Can be arranged in individual serving salad bowls.

Mediterranean Stuffed Tomato

- 1 large California avocado, seeded and peeled
- 2 tablespoons mayonnaise
- 1/4 cup diced celery
- 1/4 cup diced red peppers
- 2 green onions, thinly sliced
- 9-1/4 oz. can white tuna (packed in water) drained and flaked
- 1/2 cup creamy Italian dressing
- salt and pepper
- 4 medium tomatoes
- 1 head California Iceberg Lettuce
- chopped nuts (optional)
- chopped parsley (optional)

In a small bowl mash avocado with mayonnaise. Set aside. Combine celery, red peppers, onions, tuna, and creamy Italian dressing. Salt and pepper to taste.

Peel tomatoes, if desired, and cut out stems. Without cutting all the way through, cut tomatoes in 5 or 6 wedges. Arrange 3-4 lettuce leaves on a salad plate to form a cup and place one tomato on each. Carefully open up tomatoes like tulips, and spoon equal amounts of avocado mixture in each, reserving small amount for garnish. Then spoon equal amounts of tuna mixture over avocado. Garnish each tomato with a dollop of avocado, chopped nuts, and parsley. Chill. Serve with additional dressing.

For 4 to enjoy.

Variations: Diced cooked chicken, turkey or ham may be substituted for tuna.

Guacamole Salad Sandwich

- 1 small California avocado, seeded, peeled and quartered
- 1 small tomato, peeled and quartered
- 1/2 cup buttermilk dressing
- 1 teaspoon garlic salt
- 3 pita breads, cut in half
- 2 cups California Iceberg Lettuce, finely shredded
- 6 ounces cheddar cheese, shredded
- 1 cup diced cooked ham
- 1/2 cup alfalfa sprouts

In a blender or food processor combine avocado, tomato, buttermilk dressing and garlic salt. Process until smooth.

To prepare sandwiches, spoon 2 tablespoons avocado mixture and 1/6th of the lettuce, cheddar cheese and ham into each pita bread half. Repeat this process to make 6 sandwiches. Top each pita sandwich with sprouts, and serve with remaining avocado mixture.

For 6 to enjoy (1/2 pita bread per serving).

Variations: Diced cooked turkey or chicken may be used in place of ham.

Fifth Avenue Fruit Salad

- 2 cups citrus fruit sections
- 1 medium California avocado, seeded, peeled and sliced into thin strips
- 1 cup red grapes, halved and seeded
- 1 cup dark grapes, halved and seeded
- 1 cup green grapes, halved and seeded
- 1 pint medium strawberries, halved
- 1 head California Iceberg Lettuce, cut into 4 rafts
- blue cheese dressing

Drain citrus sections, reserving juice. Sprinkle sliced avocado with approximately 1 tablespoon of reserved citrus juice. Make lettuce rafts by cutting head crosswise into slices about 1 inch thick. Spread rafts with blue cheese dressing. Arrange all fruit on Iceberg lettuce rafts. Serve with additional blue cheese dressing.

For 4 to enjoy.

THE PICK OF THE CROP

Recipes are only as good as the ingredients used. For salads, it's supremely important that you select the freshest, highest quality produce and then care for it properly. Here's how to choose the best California Iceberg Lettuce and California avocados and how to care for them at home.

CALIFORNIA ICEBERG LETTUCE

Select heads that "give" slightly when squeezed. These "springy-firm" heads are ideal for all uses — lettuce cups, wedges, rafts, chunks, bite-size pieces or shredded.

At home, trim any leaves that may seem too coarse for salad use. Holding the head core-end down, whack it onto the kitchen counter. Then twist out the core with your fingers. Rinsing is recommended to restore moisture lost in transit. Hold the head core-end up under forcefully running water for a short time.

Drain lettuce thoroughly in a rack or colander. Store in refrigerator in a tightly closed plastic bag or airtight container.

CALIFORNIA AVOCADOS

California avocados are available year-round. Winter varieties have thin, smooth green skin and are available November through May. From January to November, avocados are characterized by thick, pebbly skin that darkens from green to purple-black as they ripen. Avocados contain no cholesterol, making them a healthy ingredient for any salad.

Look for fruit that is free of bruises and gouges. A ripe avocado yields to pressure when gently squeezed. Firm avocados can be ripened at home at room temperature. To speed up ripening, put avocados in a paper bag.

To prepare, cut avocado in half lengthwise around seed, then rotate halves to separate.

To remove seed, either slide the tip of a spoon gently underneath, or carefully strike the seed with a sharp knife, embedding the knife in the seed. Rotate and lift the knife to remove seed.

To peel avocado half, place cut side down in your palm and remove skin with your fingers or a knife.

Sprinkle all cut surfaces with lemon or lime juice or a vinegar based salad dressing to retain bright color.

THE BEST DRESSED SALADS

A good dressing can turn an ordinary salad into a great "creation". But both the salad ingredients and the dressing must be handled properly. Commercial salad dressings are created for good taste and safety. The vinegar or lemon juice used to give them their piquancy and zest also provides the acid level that inhibits the growth of bacteria.

Store unopened dressings away from direct light at moderate temperatures. Improperly stored, their taste, aroma and appearance become less appealing, but they will not spoil. If you buy a dressing from a refrigerated display case, it must be stored in the refrigerator.

Refrigerate dressings after they are opened to protect color and flavor. The words "Refrigerate After Opening" on the label are intended only to help preserve freshness and do not relate to spoilage.

Cool salads 'spring' from international sources

By MELANIE BARNARD and BROOKE DOJNY
Copley News Service

Now that it's spring, we are beginning to be seduced by the produce sections of our markets again. Bright and crisp vegetables are appearing in greater abundance, and our love affair can begin anew!

But how to prepare them in new ways? And how to include as many of these beauties in a single-dish meal as possible?

For answers, we turn this week for inspiration to the cuisines of two distinctly different (though surprisingly alike) cultures: the Greek and the Creole of Louisiana.

Greece has always produced a distinctive list of ingredients from its sunny Mediterranean climate. Mellow olive oil and brine or salt-cured olives from ancient groves. Tangy feta cheese made from the milk of the goats grazing on the hillsides. Bell peppers, meaty tomatoes and other sun-ripened vegetables and herbs from the gardens.

We have combined all of these wonderful Mediterranean tastes in a colorful pasta salad, and have added a little quickly poached chicken to make this medley a complete meal in itself. Serve the salad with breadsticks or a chunky sliced loaf of peasant bread, and the supper is complete.

We love to eat jambalaya — that Louisiana Creole dish made with rice simmered with shellfish (and sometimes sausages and chicken), along with that triumverate of Creole seasonings: onions, peppers, and tomatoes. It takes some time to prepare, though, so we've incorporated its flavors into a rice salad for the After Work Gourmet that goes together in about half an hour.

CNS Graphic

Add some file power to the dressing, if you have it. File is the ground leaves of the sassafras bush, and is a flavoring and thickening agent borrowed from the native Americans by the first settlers of Louisiana. File powder contributes a distinctively Creole flavor to this salad.

JAMBALAYA SALAD

Rice And Vegetables:
2 cups chicken stock
1 cup raw long grain rice
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 teaspoon dried thyme
1 bay leaf, broken in half
½ teaspoon salt, if using homemade or unsalted chicken stock (use no salt if using canned stock)
½ pound medium or large shrimp, shelled and deveined 6 ounces smoked ham, cut in ½-inch dice (1½ cups)
1 cup seeded and diced plum tomatoes (3 large plum tomatoes — about 8 ounces)
1 cup coarsely chopped green pepper
¾ cup thinly sliced celery
½ cup chopped red onion
3 tablespoons minced parsley, plus additional for sprinkling on top of salad

Jambalaya Dressing:
3 tablespoons red wine vinegar
1 teaspoon coarse grain mustard
⅓ cup olive oil
1 clove garlic, minced
¼ teaspoon dried oregano
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon Tabasco
¼ teaspoon black pepper
¼ teaspoon file powder (optional)
⅛ teaspoon cayenne

Bring chicken stock to boil in medium saucepan. Add rice, olive oil, thyme bay leaf and salt, if needed, and stir once. Reduce heat, cover, cook on lowest heat for 15 minutes. Place shelled shrimp on top of rice, cover again, cook for another 3 to 4 minutes, until shrimp have turned pink and rice is just tender. Transfer to large mixing bowl and cool for 5 minutes. Discard bay leaf.

Add ham, tomatoes, pepper, celery, red onion, and parsley to rice; toss to combine.

To make jambalaya dressing, whisk vinegar and mustard together in small bowl. Whisk in oil and add garlic, oregano, salt, Tabasco, pepper, optional file powder, and cayenne.

Pour dressing over salad and toss gently to mix well. Taste and season with additional salt, if necessary. Serve tepid or cover and refrigerate for up to 4 hours. To serve, transfer salad to pretty glass bowl and garnish with additional chopped parsley, if desired.

GREEK CHICKEN AND FUSILLI SALAD

Greek Dressing:
¾ cup olive oil
3 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon red wine vinegar
1 clove garlic, minced
2 tablespoons minced fresh dill or 2 teaspoons dried
½ teaspoon black pepper
½ teaspoon salt

Pasta and Garnishes:
8 ounces fusilli (short pasta twists)
2 cups water for chicken
¾ teaspoon salt
1 pound boneless and skinless chicken thighs or breasts
4 ounces feta cheese, crumbled into chunks (about 1 cup)
Half an English seedless cucumber, unpeeled and thinly sliced
1 yellow red pepper, seeded and thinly sliced
1 small head red leaf lettuce
2 medium tomatoes, cut into wedges
⅔ cup Greek olives (such as Calamata)
Fresh dill sprigs for garnish, if available

To make dressing, whisk together oil, lemon juice, vinegar, garlic, dill and salt and pepper. Set aside.

Bring large pot of water to boil for pasta. Bring 2 cups of water and salt to simmer in skillet or saucepan just large enough to hold chicken comfortably. Add chicken, cover pan and poach at a bare simmer, turning once, for 8 to 12 minutes until chicken is cooked through. Let chicken cool and then cut into ¾-inch chunks. Sprinkle lightly with salt and pepper.

In separate pot of salted water, cook fusilli while chicken is poaching. Cook fusilli in rapidly boiling water for about 8 minutes until al dente. Drain and refresh under cold running water. Drain again.

Place pasta in large bowl. Pour half of dressing over it and toss to coat throughly. Add chicken, cheese, cucumber and bell pepper. Pour remaining dressing over salad and toss again. (Salad may be served immediately or made to this point and held in refrigerator for up to 3 hours. Remove from refrigerator about 1 hour before serving.)

To serve, make bed of lettuce leaves on large platter. Spoon pasta salad in center and garnish with tomatoes, olives and optional dill sprigs.

DEAR ABBY

It's better to be loved than right

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This concerns the letter from the man who wrote to say that when he was 19, his parents disowned him and threw him out of the house when he told them that his 20-year-old girlfriend was pregnant. (He married her, and became very successful.)

After not speaking to him for six years, the father wrote his son saying his business had gone bankrupt and he asked if the son could let him have $500 a month "for a while." You were on the side of forgiveness and advised the son to meet with his father and work out some way to help him.

Your readers clobbered you. The score: Readers, 289; Abby, 1.

Well, when I was 28, unmarried and pregnant, my father gave me a blank check and told me to have an abortion. I refused.

Although my parents lived less than a mile from me, both chose to ignore me and my child for two years. Then out of the blue, they called to ask if I would meet them at a nearby park so they could see their grandchild.

My husband forbade me to go, but I went anyway. Now I am grateful that I learned early in life that it is far better to love and be loved than it is to be right.

Abby, change that score to: Readers, 289; Abby and Joy, 2.

DEAR JOY: Since I published the score showing how badly I was "clobbered," I received enormous support for "my" side. Add more than 5,000 for Abby — and still counting!

DEAR ABBY: I love my husband's brother and his wife dearly, but they much too frequently show up just as I am about to prepare supper. They live out of town and work in the city where we live. They've made a habit of stopping at our place right after work, and staying until they are invited to eat supper with us.

There's no problem when I have sufficient food — I ask them to join us (which I've done many times), but I usually plan just enough for the two of us. Even my husband admits that these visits have gotten out of hand, but he doesn't know what to say to his brother.

I don't want to offend them, but how do I get them to leave? I hate to hurt their feelings. Incidentally, their combined income is on a par with ours. — HAD IT OUT EAST

DEAR HAD IT: You say you "love" them. What's to love about nervy people who take advantage of you?

These relatives are freeloaders. They could occasionally bring deli food, carry-out chicken or Chinese.

Instead of complaining to Dear Abby, get the gumption to tell them enough is enough and don't worry about offending them. They're about as sensitive as a pair of rhinoceroses.

DEAR ABBY: A few months ago, during a routine eye examination, my eye doctor of eight years told me that he no longer wanted me as a patient because I bought my extended-wear contact lenses from an optician, and not from him! Although I have never had any problems with my eyes, he said he was afraid if I did, due to these contact lenses, I would sue him for malpractice.

Have you ever heard of anything like this before? Every time I think of it, I get angry, so I decided to write to you and find out if my eye doctor had the right to drop me as a patient for that reason.

Also, is there someone I can complain to about what I consider terribly rude behavior? — SEEING RED IN JACKSON, MISS.

DEAR SEEING RED: After eight years of his giving you care, I can understand why your eye doctor would expect you to come to him for your contact lenses — and also why he was miffed to learn that you went elsewhere. It's your privilege to go wherever you choose for eye care and lenses, but it's his right to refuse to keep you as a patient for reasons of his own.

If you think that your eye doctor has acted unprofessionally, you can complain to your local branch of the American Medical Association. It's listed in your phone book.

DEAR ABBY: Apropos the letter from Mary Jane who married Jack McCartney when he was 61 and she was 14, and now, two years later, she writes to say that they are very happily married and the parents of two beautiful children:

Perhaps your readers would be interested in some other marriages with similar age differences:

Justice William O. Douglas was 64; his bride was 29.
Melvin Belli, 64; his bride, 29.
Henry Miller, 79; his bride, 29.
Edgar Allan Poe, 26; his bride, 13.
President Grover Cleveland, 49; his bride, 21.
Bing Crosby, 53; his bride, 23.
Pablo Casals, 81; his bride, 21.
Luther Burbank, 67; his bride, 28.
Leopold Stokowski, 63; his bride, Gloria Vanderbilt, 21.

Darwin would probably say that such marriages were eugenically good. But I know a women's libber who says a girl has to marry a much older man to find maturity similar to her own. — GILBERT VAN VRANKEN, CLAREMONT, CALIF.

Onions: Boring dishes made interesting

By MELANIE BARNARD
and BROOKE DOJNY
Copley News Service

Can you imagine food without onions? Wouldn't it be boring? And by onions, we mean the whole onion family which, of course, includes garlic! Boring is not a strong enough word. A world of food without garlic would be unthinkable.

But let's not wallow in negative thinking. Most fortunately, the whole array of all of the members of that illustrious onion family are available to us year-round in each and every supermarket — garlic, yellow onions, red onions, white onions, leeks, shallots and scallions (called green onions in the West), to name most of the cousins.

We really do try not to be food snobs most of the time, but there is one cardinal rule that we believe in so strongly that we would proselytize about it on any soapbox any day, any time: Never, please, ever use garlic powder or onion powder. It's a little bit of work to use fresh, but the difference is stark. Onion and garlic powders both have a metallic aftertaste that stays with you for hours, even days, and once you wean your taste buds away from them, you never will be able to go back.

To chop an onion, first peel off the brown skin, then cut it carefully in half lengthwise through the stem. Lay the onion, cut side down on the cutting board and make several lengthwise cuts through it. Then simply slice crosswise, and the layers will separate into a heap of beautifully chopped onion.

The easiest way to peel and chop garlic is to smash the unpeeled clove with the flat of a large blade of a chef's knife. The skin then comes off in one piece, and the garlic can be quickly chopped. Remember, the finer garlic is minced, the stronger the taste.

Whenever we see it on a good Italian restaurant menu, we order Osso Buco. The classic long-simmered casserole of veal knuckles simmered in good stock is hearty and rich with flavor, but what helps make this dish so inspired is the last-minute sprinkling of gremolata — a mixture of minced parsley, lemon zest and garlic.

Making Osso Buco at home is time-consuming, though, so we have devised this quick Veal Pasta Gremolata using some of the same elements. Serve this with a salad of lightly dressed spring lettuces. It's an elegant meal, and with a strawberry dessert such as shortcake or a sundae or a tart, it would make a beautiful company dinner.

CNS Graphic

Chicken and Dumplings brings us down home for a treat that used to take many hours to make. This shortened version starts with good canned chicken stock, and the chicken and vegetables complete their quick cooking as the beautiful green-flecked scallion dumplings steam on the top of the stew. The broth is thickened somewhat by the starch in the flour, and the whole dish is redolent of the savory flavors of great home cooking. A salad of escarole dressed with a mustardy vinaigrette is all that is needed to round out this dinner.

VEAL PASTA GREMOLATA

12 ounces broad egg noodles
1 pound veal scallops, cut from the shoulder or leg
Salt and pepper to taste
2 tablespoons butter, divided
2 tablespoons olive oil, divided
½ cup chopped onion
2 carrots, peeled and cut in coarse ¼-inch dice
2 ribs of celery, cut in coarse ¼-inch dice
1 clove garlic, minced for sauce
1 bay leaf, broken
½ cup white wine
1 cup chicken stock
½ cup heavy cream
1 teaspoon lemon juice
Gremolata:
¼ cup minced flat-leaf parsley
1½ teaspoons grated lemon zest
1 large clove garlic, minced

Cook pasta in large pot of boiling salted water for 7-8 minutes or until al dente. Drain well. Return to cooking pot to keep warm.

While pasta is cooking, salt and pepper both sides of veal. In large skillet, saute veal in 1 tablespoon butter and 1 tablespoon oil over high heat for 30-45 seconds until lightly browned. (You may need to do this in 2 batches. Add more butter and oil, if needed.) Cut veal into strips about ½x1½-inches.

Add remaining butter and oil to skillet and saute onion, carrots and celery over medium-low heat for about 4 minutes, until just softened. Add garlic and saute 30 seconds. Add bay leaf, wine and stock and simmer about 3 minutes until lightly reduced. Add cream, veal and any juices that have accumulated from veal. Simmer, uncovered, for about 5 minutes until meat is tender and sauce is lightly reduced. Stir in lemon juice. Taste and season generously with pepper and salt as needed. (Salt quantities will vary depending upon saltiness of chicken stock.)

Pour veal mixture over pasta in pot. Toss gently, but thoroughly. Combine gremolata ingredients, add to pasta and toss again. Serve immediately.

COUNTRY CHICKEN STEW AND SCALLION DUMPLINGS

4 cups chicken stock
1 (2½ to 3 pound) chicken, cut into 8 pieces
6 carrots, peeled and sliced into 1-inch lengths
1 small onion, thinly sliced
1 rib celery, thinly sliced
1 bay leaf, broken in 2 pieces
Freshly ground black pepper and salt, to taste
1 teaspoon dried thyme
Scallion Dumplings:
1½ cups flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
2 scallions, including most of the green tops, finely chopped
3 tablespoons chilled vegetable shortening
½ cup milk

To make stew, combine chicken stock and chicken pieces in large soup pot or Dutch oven and bring to boil over high heat. Add carrots, onion, celery and bay leaf and simmer partially covered for 15 minutes. Skim off any foam that rises to surface.

Meanwhile, make dumpling dough. Sift together flour, baking powder and salt into mixing bowl. Stir in minced scallions. Cut shortening into about 5 pieces, add it to flour, and work mixture together with fingertips until it resembles coarse meal. Make well in center, put in milk and stir with a few strokes of wooden spoon until the dough comes together. It should be quite a sticky dough.

When chicken has simmered for 15 minutes, spoon off most of fat that has risen to surface (it is not necessary to remove it all.) Add thyme to stew and season with generous amount of black pepper and salt to taste. (Since canned chicken stock can be salty, taste carefully first if you have used it.)

Use generous 1 tablespoon of dough for each dumpling. Dip measuring spoon first into simmering liquid (so dough doesn't stick to spoon) and then drop irregularly shaped pieces of dough onto top of simmering stew. You should be able to make about 12 dumplings. Cover pot and let stew simmer and dumplings steam over low heat for 20 minutes.

Serve in shallow soup bowls or on rimmed plates. (You may pull off and discard chicken skin before serving, if desired.)

Springtime flavored with dishes made from lamb

By PIERRE FRANEY
New York Times News Service

Lamb is the meat most closely associated with spring, but the term spring lamb is often misused by restaurants and retail shops. A real spring lamb should be less than a year old and weigh between 40 and 60 pounds. Such lamb is prized for its tenderness.

The Provencal recipe here can be made with spring lamb or slightly older lamb; mutton might be too tough for this quick-cooking method. I have added a teaspoon of ground cumin, which is a traditional spice for lamb in the Middle East. It lends a sharp, aromatic touch to the sauce.

MEDALLION OF LOIN OF LAMB

2 skinless, boneless loins of lamb, about 1½ pounds
4 ripe plum tomatoes, ¾ pound
3 tablespoons olive oil
1 teaspoon finely chopped garlic
12 fresh basil leaves, chopped
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
1 teaspoon ground cumin
3 tablespoons butter
4 garlic cloves, peeled
4 sprigs fresh thyme, or ½ teaspoon dried
2 tablespoons chopped shallots
½ cup water

Cut lamb into 12 pieces of equal size. Remove skin and tomato seeds, and cut into ¼-inch chunks.

Heat 2 tablespoons olive oil in small saucepan and add chopped garlic. Cook briefly but do not brown. Add tomatoes, basil leaves, salt and pepper. Stir and simmer 5 minutes. Keep warm.

Sprinkle lamb with cumin, salt and pepper. Heat remaining tablespoon olive oil with 1 tablespoon butter in nonstick skillet large enough to hold lamb in one layer. Add lamb, garlic cloves and thyme. Brown lamb quickly on all sides; cook over relatively high heat about 4 minutes for rare. Remove lamb pieces to warm platter.

Add shallots to pan and cook briefly, stirring until wilted. Add water. Bring to boil and cook 1 minute. Swirl in remaining 2 tablespoons butter and any juices that have accumulated around lamb. Blend well. Taste for seasoning. Remove garlic cloves if desired. Keep warm.

Divide tomato sauce equally on 4 plates. Place 3 pieces of lamb over sauce. Spread some shallot sauce over lamb pieces.

Italian omelet easy, versatile

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

A frittata, the Italian version of a French omelet, is extra easy to make. That's because it's served open-faced with cheese or other trimmings on top, rather than folded omelet-style over a filling. Don't limit the frittata to the breakfast menu. Cook one for lunch or supper and offer a choice of toppings or cut small wedges to serve as an appetizer.

VEGETABLE FRITTATA

2 tablespoons margarine or butter
⅓ cup sliced fresh mushrooms
2 whole tiny new potatoes, thinly sliced
2 green onions, sliced
4 beaten eggs
¼ cup milk
¼ teaspoon dried basil, crushed
¼ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
½ cup shredded herb-flavored cheese or Swiss cheese
4 cherry tomatoes, quartered

In a medium skillet melt margarine. Add mushrooms, potatoes and green onion. Cook over medium heat until potato is tender, turning occasionally.

Meanwhile, in a small bowl combine eggs, milk, basil, salt and pepper. Pour egg mixture into skillet. Cook about 2 minutes or until the egg mixture is set, running a spatula around edge of skillet and lifting mixture to allow uncooked portion to run underneath. Remove from heat. Top with cheese and tomatoes. Makes 2 servings.

Kabob dinner ideal meal-on-a-stick

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Kabobs, say food historians, originated in the Middle East, but most of us learned about cooking on a stick by fixing wieners and marshmallows. Put your stick-cooking skills to work to prepare an easy, fresh-tasting kabob dinner. Precook the carrots and green peppers slightly so they'll cook in the same time as the fish.

DEEP-SEA KABOBS

6 ounces fresh or frozen skinless, boneless swordfish, salmon or halibut steaks or fillets, cut ½-inch thick
1 large pink grapefruit
1 (8-ounce) can pineapple chunks (juice pack)
½ teaspoon dried dillweed
¼ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 small green pepper, cut into ¾-inch pieces
½ of a 10-ounce package frozen Parisienne carrots, thawed (¾ cup)

Thaw fish, if frozen. Cut into ½-inch-wide strips. Finely shred 1 teaspoon peel from grapefruit. Remove and discard remaining peel. Section grapefruit over a bowl to catch juice. Reserve and chill sections.

Drain pineapple into grapefruit juice. Cover and chill pineapple chunks until needed. In a shallow bowl combine grapefruit and pineapple juices, shredded grapefruit peel, dillweed, salt and pepper. Add fish. Cover and marinate in refrigerator for 2 hours, stirring occasionally. At serving time, drain fish, reserving marinade. In a 1-quart saucepan cook green pepper and carrots in a small amount of boiling water 5 minutes or until vegetables are crisp-tender. Drain.

On four 12-inch metal skewers thread fish accordian-style. On 4 more metal skewers alternately thread green pepper and carrots. Place kabobs on unheated rack of broiler pan. Brush with some reserved marinade. Broil 4 inches from heat 5 minutes. Turn kabobs over. Brush with marinade. Broil about 4 minutes more or until fish just flakes with a fork. To serve, arrange grapefruit sections, pineapple and kabobs on 2 lettuce-lined dinner plates. Makes 2 servings.

Microwave meals make entertaining easy

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Light the candles and pop open the champagne. This two-serving entree cooks in the microwave in less than 10 minutes, leaving plenty of time for celebration.

For a side dish of broccoli and rice, in a 1-quart microwave-safe casserole combine ¼ cup quick-cooking rice, ¼ cup water, 1 tablespoon margarine and ½ teaspoon instant chicken bouillon granules. Place 1 cup broccoli flowerets on top. Cook, covered, on 100 percent power (high) for 4 to 6 minutes. Let stand, covered, while you cook the fish.

SALMON STEAKS WITH CURRY SAUCE

2 (4 ounces each) fresh salmon or halibut steaks, cut ¾ to 1 inch thick
1 tablespoon dry sherry
2 teaspoons margarine or butter
2 teaspoons all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon dried snipped chives or dried parsley flakes
¼ teaspoon curry powder
⅛ teaspoon salt
½ cup milk

Place fish in an 8x8x2-inch microwave-safe baking dish. Sprinkle sherry over fish. Cover with vented clear plastic wrap. Cook on 100 percent power (high) for 3 to 6 minutes or until fish just flakes when tested with a fork, turning fish over halfway through cooking. Let stand, covered, while preparing sauce.

For sauce, in a 2-cup glass measure cook margarine, covered, on high for 30 to 40 seconds or until melted. Stir in flour, chives, curry powder and salt. Stir in milk. Cook, uncovered, on high for 1 to 2 minutes or until thickened and bubbly, stirring every 30 seconds. To serve, transfer fish to dinner plates; spoon curry sauce over fish. Makes 2 servings.

Chimps' diet healthy

Copley News Service

Have you ever thought of eating like a chimpanzee? According to a New York pathologist, chimpanzees don't get cancer, heart disease or arthritis.

The reason humans contract all these diseases is due to eating fatty foods, smoking cigarettes and drinking alcohol.

Dr. Harry Demopoulos says chimpanzees eat loads of berries, leaves and roots, which provide their bodies with antioxidants that fight cancer. In fact, he says eating fruits and vegetables and staying away from fatty dairy products will cut your chances of contacting cancer by 80 percent.

THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will feel more ambitious than in the past. Open doors by improving your one-on-one communication skills. An aura of success surrounds you, attracting new allies. Member of opposite sex is drawn by your money or power. Clearly, that will not be enough for a happy relationship. Discuss goals and ideals before getting too deeply involved.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Kim Fields, nurse Florence Nightingale, infielder Lou Whitaker, actor Bruce Boxleitner, slugger Kevin Bass, comic George Carlin, journalist Howard K. Smith, composer Burt Bacharach, actor Wilfrid Hyde-White, first lady Dolley Madison.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Good health is the key to deciding what is best for you. A secret admirer works behind the scenes to help you move up in the company or community. Forge ahead!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You experience a special moment with someone you have served loyally for many years. Excitement mounts when you realize that you could be left a large financial legacy. Play your cards carefully.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Money from the sale of a piece of property could be a godsend. The financial situation brightens. Continue to curb spending.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Travel adds excitement to your life. You may be moving into a position where you can spend more time overseas. Your greatest luck could come through your parents.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An office romance is a strong possibility. Be sure you understand the risks involved. Your aggressiveness attracts a new business partner. Exciting projects beckon.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Artistic and creative work will advance your career. Financial problems begin to subside; bankers are cooperative. Follow up constructive suggestions proposed by mate or business partner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New ideas will impress superiors. Good timing is the key to success. Complete unfinished business. Your personal relationships are enriched. Evening may hold some interesting developments.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Work toward long-range goals. A good day to begin a diet. The spotlight is on payment of financial obligations. A soft-sell approach will bring the best results. Romance perks along nicely.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Travel will provide valuable business and personal contacts. Your behavior could determine whether or not you get an important position. Financial matters need to be handled promptly. Do not delay.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Postpone career decisions until more information is available. Check and recheck facts and figures yourself. A last-minute change is frustrating, but will prove beneficial in the long run.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Showcase your special talents to impress influential people. A key position opens up; go after it! Your facility for saying the right thing in a difficult situation is a tremendous asset.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Knowing a foreign language is a terrific plus in business and romance now. Regular periods of meditation help bring inner peace. Financial and domestic worries subside.

Opening lead: King of ◇

Quite often, the ability to count to nine or 10 is all you will need to tell you whether to adopt an active or passive defense. That knowledge, learned in kindergarten, can point you in the right direction.

It is a tossup whether North should respond one no trump or raise his partner's opening bid to two spades. He let his flat distribution and honors in every suit sway him toward one no trump. We would have raised, even playing four-card majors. (With full values for a minimum response, raising partner's suit is more encouraging than a response of one no trump.) The final contract would have been the same.

West led the king of diamonds and partner followed with the five—the lowest outstanding card. That marked him with an odd number of cards in the suit, so West paused to study prospects for the defense. Declarer surely was marked with at least a six-card trump suit and the two missing side-suit aces for his jump. Since he could set up a diamond trick with just one more lead, that meant that he had 10 tricks available—six spades, one heart, one diamond and two clubs.

If the defenders were to prevail, they had to collect their four tricks in a hurry. Two were there in diamonds; the other two would have to come from hearts. A glance at dummy's jack of hearts was enough to convince West that he could not achieve his goal by leading a heart honor. The only chance was to hope that East held the 10 of hearts and declarer the nine.

Therefore, West shifted to his low heart at trick two. Not surprisingly, declarer elected to play for split honors and ducked in dummy, hoping that West's holding included the 10. The defenders were now assured of two tricks in each red suit.

Berlin serenaded on 100th birthday

Berlin

NEW YORK (AP) — It wasn't a White Christmas, but dozens of fans who usually sing Christmas carols to composer Irving Berlin serenaded him at his mansion today at the very start of his 100th birthday.

The reclusive composer, who hates to get up in the morning and wrote a song to that effect, didn't put in an appearance.

"If he's 100, he's probably sleeping," said Roberta Kaufman, who had been walking her dog and stopped to see what the crowd of 75 people was doing in front of the five-story brick mansion in Beekman Place, an exclusive East Side enclave.

John Wallowitch, who organized the midnight Tuesday serenade and has organized the Christmas carol singing outside Berlin's door for at least 20 years, was sure Berlin was awake.

"He's a night owl, I've seen him walking his dog at 3 a.m.," Wallowitch said.

"HAAApppy Birthday Irving" a somewhat intoxicated reveler yelled at the drawn shades of 17 Beekman Place. "We love you. Where are youuuuu?"

Many of those gathered seemed to be neighbors hoping to catch a rare glimpse of Berlin. Just before the singing began, a shade went up in the house and the crowd gasped.

But it was a teen-age girl and a matron. Both waved and the crowd waved back.

"Even if he didn't write a thing, to reach 100 is to be part of American history," said 21-year-old John Wiessman, a junior at New York University. "But this guy wrote a lot. I love 'God Bless America.' Every American has got to love it."

The music and lyrics among the more than 1,500 songs Berlin created for the stage, screen and popular music are inextricably woven into the American culture.

They include "White Christmas," "Easter Parade," "Alexander's Ragtime Band," "There's No Business Like Show Business," "Puttin' on the Ritz," "Blue Skies," "Cheek to Cheek," and "Oh, How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning."

In London, the British Parliament honored the composer today with a motion wishing him "many more White Christmases and Easter Parades."

Today's informal serenade will be followed tonight by a Carnegie Hall tribute to the composer, with stars like Frank Sinatra, Isaac Stern and Ray Charles scheduled to appear.

Wallowitch got the crowd ready by reading through a song he composed for the occasion.

"Just think, 100 years ago this little Russian lady was very pregnant," he said, referring to Berlin's birth on May 11, 1888, in Russia. Then he told the crowd to sing "softly, with great love."

The crowd sang "Happy Birthday," Berlin's "Always" and Wallowitch's "The Songs of Irving Berlin," which included the broad hint, "Knock on my door and I'll welcome you in."

Nearly five years ago, Wallowitch was invited into the Berlin home on Christmas Eve after a chorus of "White Christmas." On an impulse, he rang the doorbell. A maid answered and took him and his fellow singers into the kitchen.

There they were greeted by Berlin himself, in bathrobe and slippers. The composer hugged the men, kissed the women and told them, "That's the nicest Christmas present I've ever had."

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian George Burns has some advice for couples working on their marriages: Don't work too hard.

The 92-year-old comic speaks from experience; he was married for 38 years to his show business partner, Gracie Allen.

"Not only did I love Gracie, I was no place before I met her...We had a wonderful marriage," Burns said in an interview in June's McCall's magazine. "I don't think Gracie and I ever had an argument in all that time — except maybe about jokes."

"Don't work that hard at being married," Burns said. "If you try to make a marriage a success, it's got a good chance to be a failure."

Redford

MOSCOW (AP) — Robert Redford opened an exhibition of his movies by telling an audience that films are a powerful way to bridge differences of opinion and that he supports glasnost in Soviet cinema.

Glasnost, the Russian word for openness, is a key term in Mikhail Gorbachev's policy of reforms in certain areas.

"Obviously this is a very important time for our countries," Redford told the audience at Moscow's Oktyabr theater Tuesday, the exhibition's opening day. "And I believe that film is a very powerful tool to translate differences of opinion and points of common interest.

"And for that reason, I support glasnost in both American film and Soviet cinema."

President Reagan and Gorbachev are to meet May 29 in Moscow, their second summit since last December, when the two signed a treaty scrapping intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

Redford, 51, is most widely known among Soviets for his role in "Three Days of the Condor," a 15-year-old spy movie that continues to be shown in Soviet theaters.

He came to Moscow after spending three days in Leningrad where the eight-film exhibition opened.

"The Milagro Beanfield War" which Redford directed but in which he does not appear, and "All the President's Men" were the opening-night films, shown at two different theaters in Moscow.

Igor N. Lissakovsky, vice-president of the Association of Filmmakers, said the general public was being admitted to the films for 3 rubles a ticket (about $4.70), but that blocks of seats for each showing had been reserved for members of the Filmmakers Union.

Lissakovsky said the money from ticket sales, which usually goes to the state, will be turned over to the Filmmakers Union for projects encouraging young artists.

Other films to be shown are "The Candidate," "The Sting," "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," "The Electric Horseman," "Jeremiah Johnson" and "The Natural."

LONDON (AP) — Former Supremes singer Mary Wilson won the first round of a court battle for possession of a car once owned by Beatles George Harrison and John Lennon.

The Mercedes Benz Pullman, valued at $350,000, was sold by a car repair shop for $3,758 in 1982, 2½ years after Ms. Wilson and her ex-husband, Pedro Ferrar, left it for repairs.

Nicholas Wood, a lawyer for Kenneth Trood and Thomas Lubbock-Smith, owners of the repair shop in Basingstoke, southwest of London, said the car was sold because of a "misunderstanding."

But Monday, the High Court ordered the repair shop to pay Ms. Wilson and Ferrar $18,800 in damages and $24,440 in legal costs.

NEW YORK (AP) — Country singer Loretta Lynn says she plans to record an album with her kid sister, Crystal Gayle, and Ms. Lynn's five children, all of whom have followed her into the music business.

"Crystal'll probably kill me...because we were gonna surprise everybody," Ms. Lynn says in June's McCall's magazine. "Crystal and I talk once a week about what we are going to do."

WHAT'S COOKING

Teacher enjoys stained glass as hobby

EDITOR'S NOTE: This series of "What's Cooking" interviews will feature nonprofit organizations that have published cookbooks. This is the first article in a series of interviews with members of the Midland Texas A&M Mothers' Club.

The big smile on her face and the enthusiastic tone in her voice were evidence that Margie Lee thoroughly enjoys her hobby — stained glass. In fact, she and her husband, Donald, enjoy it so much that they have turned their garage into a workshop and made a small business of it.

"It all started when I wanted a stained glass window in the bathroom," Mrs. Lee said. After pricing several windows, Mrs. Lee decided she would learn to do the craft herself.

"I signed up for a class, and when I brought my project home, I showed him (her husband) how it was done. Then, when I would come home from school the next day, he would have finished my project," Mrs. Lee said.

After a little persuasion, Mrs. Lee convinced her husband to come take classes with her, and they both perfected their skills. They also have beautiful stained glass windows in both bathrooms in their home, complete with accessories including trash cans, tissue box covers and cosmetic trays.

Their creations are limitless. Just a few of the items in their workshop include night lights of all shapes, scenic window covers, Santa Claus' face, angels, strawberries, Texas shapes, cardinals, and the list goes on and on.

"But there's just so much of it (stained glass) you can put in your house." Mrs. Lee said. "We sell our things at some of the craft fairs or in the Mall."

The couple also travels in their spacious motor home to sell their wares in other cities. "On vacations, we like to go to the factories to watch them make the sheets of stained glass," Mrs. Lee said. "They make it one sheet at a time."

Although the Lees enjoy their hobby, they are involved in many other activities as well. Mrs. Lee enjoys needle point and computer work. She is a teacher and began teaching in Midland in 1954 at Lamar Elementary School. Currently, she is a learning disability teacher for grades kindergarten through fourth grade at Henderson Elementary School, and said she uses her computer knowledge in doing her lessons plans.

She also co-teaches an adult Sunday School class at Fannin Terrace Baptist Church where she and her husband are members. The Lees also are members of the Mall-Walkers Club and they walk together everyday at Midland Park Mall.

Between them, the Lees have four children, Tim Green of Del Rio, Vicki Brockman of Amarillo, and Craig Lee and Carla McDaniel, both of Midland.

Mrs. Lee's son, Tim, is a 1986 graduate of Texas A&M University, which led her to become a member of the Midland Texas A&M Mothers' Club, although she is not currently active. The Texas A&M Mothers' Club is a federated club throughout the state and the local club is a part of the state organization.

"As long as you have a child enrolled at A&M, you can be a member," Mrs. Lee said. The purpose of the club is, "basically for the well-being of our students."

J.P. Hearn/Reporter-Telegram

The group serves as a support group for mothers (and fathers) who have students attending A&M. The local group also raises money for scholarships that are given to Midland seniors who attend Aggieland.

According to Mrs. Lee, "A&M is big on parent involvement," and the Mothers' Club is just one of the many ways the parents' support is enlisted.

"We (the Midland Club) are only about four years old," Mrs. Lee said of the club, of which she is past president.

"We send our students survival kits during finals and stuff like that," Mrs. Lee added.

The Texas A&M Mothers' Club published a state-wide cookbook, "Aggies, Moms, and Apple Pie," which is a compilation of Aggies' favorite recipes from mom. The cookbook was published as a fund-raiser for the state organization.

"The editor of the cookbook sent a letter out to all of the Mothers' Clubs to submit recipes for the cookbook," Mrs. Lee explained. And when selections for inclusion in the book were made, Mrs. Lee came out on top with two of her son's favorites — Fresh Apple Pie and Apricot Bars — being selected.

At the bottom of each recipe is a brief statement about why the recipe was special to the Aggie in the family. For Mrs. Lee's Apple Cake recipe, the quote reads: "My Aggie son used to get his own apple cake each Christmas to eat up as fast or slowly as he chose. We still have fresh apple cake for every holiday (and in between). The Apricot Bars quote reads: "These bars are good mailers; they stay moist for several days. They also freeze well."

The following are Mrs. Lee's recipes which were included in "Aggies, Moms, and Apple Pie," and few other family favorites.

FRESH APPLE CAKE

4 cups peeled apples, chopped fine
2 cups sugar
1 cup chopped nuts
3 cups all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons baking soda
1 cup vegetable oil
½ teaspoon vanilla
2 eggs, well beaten

Combine chopped apples, sugar and nuts; mix well and let stand for one hour. With mixer, combine flour, nutmeg, cinnamon, salt, baking soda, oil, vanilla and beaten eggs until smooth. Stir in apple mixture, and mix well. Pour into well-greased and floured Bundt pan, and bake at 350 degrees for one hour. Serves 16-20.

APRICOT BARS

CRUST:
1 cup all-purpose flour
¼ cup sugar
½ cup (1 stick) butter, softened slightly

Combine flour, sugar and butter in bowl, cutting in the butter with a pastry blender until particles are the size of small peas. Turn into a 9-inch square baking pan and press firmly to make an even layer over the bottom of the pan. Bake at 300 degrees for 15 minutes, watching carefully that crust does not get too brown.

FILLING:
½ cup all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
2 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup brown sugar, firmly packed
1 cup snipped dried apricots
½ to ¾ cup chopped walnuts

Blend flour, baking powder and salt; set aside. Beat eggs with vanilla; add brown sugar gradually, beating until thick. Stir in the flour mixture, apricots and walnuts. Remove pan with crust from oven; spread apricot layer evenly over it. Return to oven, and continue baking 30 minutes at 300 degrees. Cool completely on a wire rack before cutting into small bars. Makes 16-20 small bars. Will freeze well.

GREEN BEAN SALAD

FOR SALAD:
1 #2 can French cut green beans
1 #2 can Green English peas
Drain both and mix with:
4 pieces celery, chopped
1 small onion, chopped
1 small green pepper, chopped
1 small can pimento
DRESSING:
1½ cups sugar
1 cup vinegar
½ teaspoon paprika
½ cup salad oil
1 tablespoon water
1 tablespoon salt

Mix and refrigerate for several hours or overnight. Pour over salad. Will keep for several days.

FAVORITE PECAN PIE

1 cup sugar
¾ cup white syrup
2 tablespoons flour
3 tablespoons cream
3 eggs
1 cup pecans
1 tablespoon vanilla
Dash of salt

Mix flour and sugar. Add syrup. Add cream and beaten eggs. Put nuts in bottom of pie shell and pour mixture over. Bake at 350 degrees for one hour.

SPAGHETTI AMORE

1 pound ground turkey
½ cup onion
¼ green pepper
1 can mushroom soup, golden
1 can tomato soup
1 soup can of water
1 dash garlic juice
1 cup shredded American cheese
½ pound spaghetti, cooked and drained

Lightly brown ground turkey, onions and green pepper in shortening. Add soups water and garlic juice and heat. In a 3 quart casserole, blend in sauce, ½ cup shredded American cheese and spaghetti. Top with remaining cheese. Bake at 350 for about 30 minutes, until bubbly.

CHERRY COLA SALAD

1 16½-ounce can pitted dark sweet cherries
1 20-ounce can crushed pineapple
1 3-ounce black cherry gelatin
1 12-ounce can cola-type beverage, chilled
1 cup finely chopped celery
1 cup pecans
½ cup flaked coconut (optional)
2 3-ounce package cream cheese, softened

Drain cherries and pineapple, reserving juice. Add enough water to juice to make 2 cups liquid. Bring liquid to boil, add gelatin, stirring to dissolve. Stir in cola, chill until slightly thickened.

Combine other ingredients (pecan, etc.). Beat cream cheese until smooth and fluffy. Add to fruit stirring well. Fold into gelatin. Pour into 13x9x2-inch pan. Chill and cut into square.

24-HOUR SALAD

2 eggs (beaten)
4 tablespoons sugar
4 tablespoons lemon juice
Dash of salt
2 cans mandarin oranges
2 large cans pineapple
1 jar cherries
2 cups small marshmallows
½ cup whipped cream

Beat eggs, sugar, lemon juice and salt well, then cook over a low heat, stirring constantly, just bring to a boil, until thick. Remove from heat and cool. Combine remaining ingredients, except whipped cream, and add to egg mixture. Chill for 24 hours. Fold in whipped cream.

Guest chef adds spice to 18-course college fare

New York Times News Service

DURHAM, N.H. — When students here at the University of New Hampshire get the urge to eat authentically prepared Chinese food, they usually have to travel 70 miles south to Boston. But one day recently, 5,000 students, faculty and members of the public went no farther than the school's three dining halls to sample dishes like Sichuan fried eggplant, spicy bean curd and sesame-dressed spinach salad.

The 18-course meal, titled "A Feast Fit for the Last Emperor of China," was designed and supervised by Ken Hom of Berkeley, Calif. He runs a cooking school in Hong Kong and is the author of "Asian Vegetarian Feast," (William Morrow, 1988).

"This is terrific," said Matt Sanner, a senior, as he dug into his third portion of barbecued ribs. "Usually we're served artificial food, but this is real stuff. It even has real bones."

Hom was invited as part of the university's Great Cooks on Campus program, an effort to improve the image and quality of the university's food service. Last year Madeleine Kamman, a French cooking teacher, and Franco and Margaret Romagnoli restaurateurs from Boston, came to cook special meals.

"Institutional dining services have a bum reputation," said Hannelore M. Dawson, manager of planning, training and nutritional services for the university's dining halls. "I thought that bringing well-known chefs on campus would generate a special atmosphere of enjoyment for our students and learning for our cafeteria staff."

The feast was part of the students' regular meal plan: faculty and members of the public paid $12 each.

The university has taken several steps to improve the quality of its food service in recent years. Vegetarian and low-cholesterol dishes are offered at every meal. Lunch and dinner always include a salad bar.

Preparing the Chinese feast meant mobilizing the university's 130-person kitchen staff several days in advance. Two butchers spent two days slicing 800 pounds of beef into thin slivers for stir-frying. Dawson went to Boston's Oriental markets to purchase 16 pounds of lemon grass, 30 pounds of crystallized ginger and 60 pounds of fresh ginger.

Hom arrived on campus five days before the feast and spent hours teaching Chinese cooking techniques to the kitchen staff. "You don't want to overmarinate the beef," he warned. "If you do, it will become mystery meat, and that's what we're trying to avoid." The stir-fried beef flavored with orange rind, ginger and scallions proved fairly popular. But the barbecued ribs and chicken wings topped with black-bean sauce were the overwhelming favorites.

There were a few complaints.

Still, Hom said he was pleased with the results. Before coming to the university, the largest group he had ever cooked for numbered 350 people.

Champagne's tethered cork: Preserving pop, reducing danger

By ANDREW POLLACK
New York Times News Service

Popping open a bottle of warm champagne that has just been agitated can send the cork rocketing away at 200 miles an hour. So Theta Resources Inc., a San Francisco industrial design company, has come up with a champagne stopper that it says could prevent such errant corks from nicking a chandelier or injuring a party guest.

The polyethylene stopper is tethered to the neck of the bottle so that it comes out with the traditional pop but is reined in four inches later. Jim Goldberg, president of Theta Resources, invented the tethered cork after hearing about a man who lost an eye from a runaway champagne cork. He said he considered several approaches before settling on a tether.

A twist-off cap, for instance, would have allowed the pressure to be relieved gradually. But that idea fizzled because it would not preserve the ability of the cork to pop, a key marketing requirement for champagne.

Whether the new stopper will find success remains to be seen. William Botkin, vice president of marketing of Korbel Champagne Cellars, said the device sounded like a gimmick. There could be an advantage there," he added. He said there are other gadgets on the market, such as special pliers. "Somebody's always coming up with something different."

Barbecue styles differ across country

By LORNA SASS
Copley News Service

If you've ever been in on a heated conversation about the virtues of barbecue, then you know what true passion is all about.

Cooking meat over fire might seem a primitive matter to some, but for those thousands of Americans who spend every free weekend hauling their barbecue apparatus to competitions across the country, the grilling, smoking and saucing of meat evokes more fiery opinion and fierce regional loyalty than the presidential elections.

Most Americans use the term barbecue in its broad sense, referring to the simple act of cooking outdoors on a grill. But this seemingly harmless definition can get you into immediate trouble if you happen to be in the Midwest or the Deep South.

In Kansas City, for example, a town proclaimed by Mayor Richard L. Barkley to be "the barbecue capitol of the universe," if you ask 10 different people to describe their local style of barbecue, you're likely to get 10 different answers.

All will agree, however, that when you say "barbecue" you are not alluding to an outdoor gastronomic entertainment but to a particular style of cooking meat over burning wood — usually very slowly with lots of sauce and even more smoke.

CNS Photo

However you tend your grill, the choice of recipes this season is endless.

WHILE KANSAS City is renowned for the hickory-smoked pork and brisket that emerge most commonly from closed cookers, the Carolinas are famous for their open-pit barbecues.

In this part of the South, pork predominates, and traditionally the whole hog is spit-roasted in an open pit as it is lovingly annointed with a piquant vinegar-based sauce.

In Virginia, where, historically, Caribbean cane sugar and molasses were readily available, the barbecue sauce tends to be sweeter than elsewhere.

While a vinegar baste is usually applied to the pork while it is cooking, the barbecued meat is accompanied at the table with a zesty sauce made of tomato paste, ketchup, brown sugar, honey and molasses.

In Memphis, on the other hand, a "dry rub" is favored, and a paste of brown sugar, hot red pepper, paprika and other spices is rubbed into the meat, which is finished off during the final stages of cooking with a generous coating of barbecue sauce.

The famous pit barbecue of Texas focuses on brisket and ribs, with a smattering of "hot guts" (spicy link sausages).

Dry rubs highlight such Tex-Mex spices as chili powder, cumin and oregano, and barbecue sauces are a deep, earthy brown — tomato-based and long-simmered with such flavorings as Worcestershire sauce, chile oil and liquid smoke.

SUCH BARBECUE is a far cry from the outdoor grilling that is so in vogue on the West Coast nowadays.

Try asking what barbecue means in California, a state where rugged individualism seems to know no bounds, and you will find yourself greeted with menus that include mango grilled over grapevine cuttings or salmon smoked on fennel branches.

In Hawaii, to barbecue means to have a luau, and in New England, it means steaming clams over coals doused with seaweed.

When it comes to regional favorites, it's all a question of what foods and fuels are readily available. Then throw some Yankee ingenuity into the formula, and you have barbecue recipes to suit every taste.

However, if you enjoy gadgets and variety, here are some things you might like to consider:

THE FUEL

High quality, efficient fuel is an essential ingredient for good grilling, so it pays to know your charcoal.

Purists favor hardwood coals, such as hickory or mesquite, not only because they burn hotter and cleaner then briquets but because they impart such luscious flavor to food. On the downside, they are usually more expensive and can burn a hole in your fire pan if you are not attentive.

Hardwood coals can also create sparks, so be sure to position your grill as far from the house as possible when using them.

In recent years, charcoal briquets have become more popular since they are cheap and convenient to use.

Briquets are a combination of wood scraps and filler, and they are very effective if you avoid those with high filler content and chemical additives for quick lighting. This latter type can impart an unpleasant taste to grilled foods.

Even when using high-quality briquets, make certain to wait until the coals are completely covered with gray ash before setting the food on the grill, or your food may pick up the peculiar flavor imparted by the fillers.

Although the number of coals you'll need varies with the type of cooking you intend to do, as a general rule you can visualize the amount of space on the cooking rack that your food will take. Then make a pyramid bed of coals on your grate, two-deep, which extends about an inch beyond the cooking area. If your cooking time extends beyond 45 minutes, you will have to add more coals as needed.

Allow 30 to 40 minutes for your coals to be ready, whether you are using hardwood or briquets.

LIGHTING THE FIRE:

■ Kindling — One of the quickest and cheapest ways to start a fire, as all good Boy Scouts know, is to use kindling. Simply roll up large sheets of newspaper on the diagonal and tuck in the ends to create a pretzel shape. Place a few of these on the bottom of the fuel grate and top them with dry twigs or sticks of roughly uniform size. On these, set about six coals in a pyramid, leaving space between them. Ignite the newspaper, and as the fire builds, set more coals on the pile. When the coals are ready, spread them out as required for cooking.

■ Chimney starter — This is a cylindrical metal container with two compartments, a bottom for newspaper kindling and a top for coals. You simply light the kindling with a match, and this fire heats the coals, which will be ready for use in about seven minutes. These red-hot coals are then used to heat any additional coals required for cooking.

Be sure to buy a chimney that has wooden handles so that you can easily empty the coals onto the fuel grate.

■ Electric starter — If you have an outlet in convenient reach of your grill, this may be the method for you. Simply nestle the starter prongs amongst the coals and turn the starter on. Once the coals touching the prongs are red-hot — about 6-7 minutes — remove the starter, and the hot coals will ignite those surrounding it.

■ Fluid starter — Although these combustible liquids are very commonly used for starting fires, it is critical to completely burn off the chemicals to avoid imparting an unpleasant taste to the food. To use fluid starters most safely, before lighting the fire douse only a single layer of coals and then pile the rest of the coals in a pyramid shape on top. To make sure that the food does not take on an unpleasant taste, be sure that the coals are covered with gray ash before you begin cooking.

REGULATING THE FIRE FOR COOKING:

Since different foods require different cooking temperatures, these rules of thumb come in handy when you are getting ready to place your ingredients on the grill.

First, to test the temperature, hold you hand at cooking height, palm side down. If you can comfortably keep it there for only two seconds, the temperature is hot, three seconds, medium-high; four seconds, medium; five seconds, low.

THE FLAVOR AND THE SMOKE:

For most barbecue aficionados, the greatest benefit of a meal cooked outdoors is that marvelous charcoal flavor permeating the food. Even if you are using briquets instead of hardwood, you can create sensational and varied tastes through the use of aromatic wood chips and vines. These do not replace the charcoal — the main source of cooking heat — but are used sparingly to impart special flavor. To create an intensely smoky flavor, soak the wood chips in water before placing them on the hot coals. For a milder flavor, place the dry chips directly on the coals and replenish as needed.

By using any of the following aromatic flavorings, you can give even a simple steak or chop a touch of the exotic. Many are now available in gourmet food shops or through mail-order catalogs.

■ Mesquite — All the rage in trendy barbecue circles, this Southwestern wood is sweeter and more delicate than hickory and makes a fine complement to densely flavored meats such as duck and lamb.

■ Hickory — Hickory lends the familiar smoky and bacon-like flavor that we associate with Southern cooking. It is superb with ham, pork and beef.

■ Fruitwoods — Strongly scented apple, cherry and peach wood chips work well with poultry, game birds and pork, but not with delicate foods such as fish.

■ Herbs and spices — The robust flavors of rosemary and basil are fine with fish and poultry, but for optimum results always soak them first.

ALL-AMERICAN BARBECUE SAUCE

1 cup cider vinegar
¾ cup chili sauce
2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
1 tablespoon A-1 steak sauce
3 tablespoons brown sugar
1 onion peeled and finely minced
1 teaspoon chili powder
1 teaspoon Tabasco sauce (or less, to taste)

Combine all ingredients in non-aluminum saucepan. Simmer gently, partially covered, for 35 minutes. Stir from time to time while cooking.

TEXAS DRY RUB

1 clove garlic, peeled and crushed
1½ tablespoon salt
1 teaspoon chili powder
1 teaspoon ground black pepper
1 teaspoon paprika
½ teaspoon ground cumin
½ teaspoon ground coriander
1 teaspoon mustard seed

Mix all ingredients thoroughly, mashing the garlic and combining it well with the salt and other spices. Rub into meat on all sides and let stand at room temperature for two hours before cooking.

This sauce may be used to baste beef, pork or chicken while it is on the grill, or it may be served on the side. The sauce can be prepared in advance and stored in the refrigerator for up to two weeks.

Federal Express makes Memphis ribs 'fast food'

New York Times News Service

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — This Mississippi River city is home to some of the best barbecued pork ribs in the South. It also is home to Federal Express Corp. So it seemed natural the two would get together.

Call it barbecue express — when it absolutely, positively has to be there by lunch.

Each night, when Federal Express cargo jets leave the company's "superhub" at Memphis International Airport, among the last packages loaded aboard are several dozen orders of quick-frozen ribs. They are packed with sauce and instructions for reheating and are bound for connoisseurs, celebrities and displaced Memphians all over North America.

Overnight ribs and specialty foods from other regions — sourdough bread from San Francisco, lobsters from Maine, citrus from Florida — are a growing part of Federal Express' business, said Dick Metzler, the company's managing director of express marketing.

"The thing that appears to be happening to us is that when you have two-income families ... people's shopping habits and expectations change," Metzler said. "This is something that a few years ago was just unheard of."

Federal Express does not know how much of its business involves food and other perishables. "No one of these commodities is a big issue in and of itself," Metzler said. "But together, it is becoming a noticeable part of what we do."

Memphis ribs have something of an advantage over the delicacies of other regions when shipped by Federal Express. Because 80 percent of the company's sorting and final shipping is done in Memphis, orders can be picked up at local restaurants as late as 10 p.m. and still be at the customers' by 10:30 the next morning.

Eight Memphis pork parlors now ship regularly by Federal Express, Metzler said. At least three have toll-free numbers for placing orders. Most restaurants ship a minimum of five or six servings of ribs, which cost about $90, including delivery.

Memphis's barbecue trade first took to the skies in 1985 when Charlie Vergos, owner of the Rendezvous restaurant, placed a small advertisement in The Wall Street Journal. Within days, he had more orders than he could handle in his family's small establishment, located since 1948 in the basement of a downtown building across Union Avenue from the Peabody Hotel.

The Rendezvous is perhaps Memphis's best-known barbecue restaurant, specializing in "dry" ribs, which are charcoal broiled and then sprinkled with a mixture of dry spices. Many Memphis restaurants also serve "wet" ribs, which are basted with barbecue sauce while they cook.

The Rendezvous now handles about 50 Federal Express orders a day, according to Vergos's son, John. The family recently bought the building where its restaurant is located. A planned expansion during the next year will give the Rendezvous enough kitchen space to expand its mail-order business, John Vergos said.

"We have a lot of displaced Memphians who want our ribs," Vergos said. A lot of other people do, too. The Rendezvous has shipped ribs to such celebrities as Frank Sinatra and Bill Cosby.

Corky's, a small barbecue restaurant in southeast Memphis, has a growing Hollywood clientele that includes Hal Holbrook and Memphis native Cybill Shepherd. But most mail orders for Corky's wet and dry ribs and pulled pork shoulder barbecue come from brokerage houses in New York, Los Angeles and Boston, for reasons restaurant owner Don Pelts has never quite figured out.

So far, Corky's only advertising has been a small sign painted to look like a Federal Express jet, which hangs from the rafters of its small dining room. During the next few months, Pelts said, he plans to start placing advertisements in major newspapers around the country.

"Memphis is a boom town for barbecue ... there's almost a restaurant on every corner," Pelts said. "People come here from out of town and eat our ribs and decide they want them again. Now they don't have to come back to Memphis to get them."

Big Spring's Thompson all business

A Thursday visit with McCamey's Wilhelm

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

"Are you gonna get that thing strapped on?" the high school coach asked a young freshman football hopeful during a recent practice.

"Yessir," the young hopeful said in a voice that was barely above a whisper.

"Good, 'cause I can't talk to you when you're bendin' over like that!"

First year Big Spring head coach David Thompson will never be confused with a laid back, push-over guy.

He's a football coach. A high school football coach. And to top it off he's a high school coach in West Texas, which qualifies him to be the definitive high school football coach.

In 1984, Texas Monthly magazine featured a pictorial essay on old time sheriffs in Texas. If the magazine ever chose to do a spread on old style high school coaches, Thompson would be right up there on page one.

Thompson came to Big Spring after having spent nine years at Post, a 3A school near Lubbock. The Oklahoma native replaces Quinn Eudy who left after the '87 season for personal reasons.

THOMPSON'S philosophy of football is quite simple. What you would expect, in other words, from a man whose life revolves around the game.

"Football boils down to one thing — fundamentals," Thompson said. "You block and you tackle. If you can't block and you can't tackle, you can't play the game. If you can then everything else will fall into place."

Coming off a 6-4 year in 1987, the first year since 1985 they failed to win district, the Steers can expect some changes in the way they prepare for the upcoming season.

"We're going to do it different than they've done it in the past," Thompson said. "That's not to say they did it wrong in the past. We're going to work in the off-season on getting stronger and quicker."

The Steers will be forced to go through the proverbial rebuilding year in 1988 as they have only two offensive and two defensive starters returning. A total of 12 lettermen are back.

But Thompson, no doubt, will find a way to utilize his limited experience to its fullest potential. After all, he didn't just roll down Interstate 20 without an ample amount of credentials himself.

Before his nine years at Post, Thompson was head coach for three years at Stanton, Big Spring's next door neighbor. He began his coaching career as an assistant at Hobbs, N.M., in 1965, then went to Ralls, Floydada and Alice — also as an assistant — in a career that has spanned 22 years.

Married for 23 years, he and wife Juanita have two kids. Those two kids just happen to be boys of the football variety. There's 16-year-old Rance who played 10 games as a sophomore quarterback last year at Post, and was selected honorable mention All-District. And there's 12-year-old Richey who will begin junior high football this season as a seventh grader.

Even though spending the last nine years on the South Plains, Thompson knows enough about Permian Basin football to know that District 2-4A is one of the toughest in the state.

"This district is a good football district," he said. "Everybody is competitive. Sweetwater should be the favorite but you never know. It's too early to tell.

"Here at Big Spring, we're going to try to build a program where year in and year out we can be competitive."

Big Spring opens its non-district season at home Sept. 9 against Lubbock Estacado. The Steers' only other non-league matchup will be the following Friday at Plainview. District home games include Sweetwater, Pecos and Snyder.

Thompson, who specializes in offense and will call the Steer plays from the sidelines, is reluctant to list what his interests are other than football. He does admit, though, that he likes to hunt, fish and play golf, but stressed that football is always one his mind.

"I better be thinking about football most of the time or I won't be around too long."

Now that's a West Texas high school football coach if there ever was one.

(Tomorrow....McCamey's Danny Wilhelm)

Midland High Coach Tim Whelan looks to the sky with mixed emotions. Although rain washed away the bidistrict playoff game with Plainview, it also washed away the home team's 3-1 lead.

Lee honors top athletes at fete

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee celebrated a banner athletic year with its annual All-Sports Banquet at the Holiday Inn Convention Center Tuesday night and three names grabbed the spotlight before it was over.

Jimmy Fennell was named as the school's Outstanding Male Athlete while Carrie Roach and Khristie Davis shared the Oustanding Female Athlete award, which is believed to be the first time in Lee history that the honor has been shared.

Fennell may be one of the all-time great athletes in Lee history as his credentials attest. He is a two-time district champion in the 110-meter hurdles, a Region I qualifier in three different relays, a rare three-year starter in football, District 4-5A most valuable defensive player during the 1987 football season, and second team All-State in football.

And while those statistics are impressive enough, the lanky senior isn't through setting Lee history. Saturday, Fennell will compete in the state track meet in the 110 hurdles and he has been picked to represent Lee and District 4-5A in the July 26 football All-Star game in Houston. After that, it is off to the University of Oklahoma for more football.

"I still have a few things to accomplish while at Lee," said Fennell, "and it starts Saturday. I want to get me one of those state medals."

For the girls, the term "outstanding" was harder to come by as Roach and Davis ended in a virtual dead heat in the voting — twice.

"I'm honored, but I can't really say I'm surprised because when we voted they told Khristie and I there was a tie and they were going to vote again," said Roach.

Davis was a three-year track star, earning Region I berths in the high jump and triple jump during her career. She was also a starter in volleyball, honorable mention All-District on Lee's playoff basketball team, an honor student and an All-State violinist in Lee's orchestra.

Davis, too, has a college sports career ahead. Lee girls track coach Janice Baulch announced that Davis will be playing volleyball at Texas Tech next fall.

Angels use mirrors, errors for 6-2 win

From Staff Reports

LITTLE ROCK— Midland's Angels made it two in a row, winning 6-2 over the Arkansas Travelers while scoring only one earned run. Monday the Angels won 3-2 with no unearned runs, indicating it's not how you play the game, but whether you win or lose.

The five-game Texas league series resumes here tonight as the Angels creep closer to the .500 mark, now just two under.

Jesus Alfaro swung the big bat for the Angels with four hits and two rbi, including the game winner, but five Arkansas errors, three by shortstop Jim Fregosi, were a big contributor to Midland's win.

Colby Ward, relieving Tim Bircham in the sixth, hung around long enough to get the win when Midland came up with two in the seventh and three in the eighth to break a 2-2 tie. It was Ward's sixth win without a loss this season.

Jeff Oyster was the tough luck loser, going 6 2/3 innings in six-hit and no earned run style to drop his third game in four decisions.

Alfaro singled, went to third on Lee Stevens single and scored on an error in the third. Jesus Mendez tied it with his third home of the season in the home third and that's the way it remained until Alfaro singled home the game-winner in the severnth, set up, naturally, by a booboo in the field.

Elsewhere in the Texas League, a wild pitch by Jose Dominguez allowed Wichita's Chris Knabenshue to score from third, lifting the Pilots to a 2-1 10-inning victory over Shreveport while San Antonio beat Tulsa 4-3 and El Paso defeated Jackson 8-4.

Shreveport tied the game in the ninth when Dee Dixon walked, stole second and third and scored on a two-out, two-strike hit by pinch-hitter John Skurla.

Bulldogs rained out

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

PLAINVIEW — Rain forced the postponement of Tuesday night's bidistrict playoff game between the Midland High Bulldogs and Plainview Bulldogs. The game was rescheduled for 7:30 p.m. tonight here, but initial weather forecasts for the South Plains area didn't look too promising late Tuesday.

Forecasters called for a continued chance of thunderstorms for Plainview tonight with rain expected through early Thursday.

Play was halted in the first game of the best-of-three series after only 23 minutes of play Tuesday night with Plainview holding a 3-1 lead entering the bottom of the second. Usually reliable MHS starting pitcher Eric Boyt was haunted by the wet conditions. Rain had made mastering his split-fingered fastball impossible and mud "caked on two-inches deep" on the pitcher's shoes made his delivery unpredictable, head coach Tim Whalen said.

When it rains ... it pours

Patterson

It started out to be just another assignment, our Tuesday trip to Plainview. Photographer George Wolf and I were assigned to cover the first game of the bi-district baseball playoff series between Midland High and Plainview, a game that was postponed due to rain.

It wouldn't turn out to be just your run-of-the-mill sort of adventure, though.

2:15 p.m. — We depart. Not even out the door, but already 15 minutes late.

2:17 p.m. — I discover that George drives the same kind of small foreign car I used to drive before everything imaginable went wrong with it and I had to sell it to a junkyard for $20.

2:18 p.m. — I make my second discovery: George's air-conditioner only works with the windows rolled down while doing 60 mph. By the time we arrived in Plainview, I look like a young Albert Einstein. My hair is a disaster anyway, I don't need the help of the West Texas wind.

2:20 p.m. — I make yet another startling revelation. George's new stereo system will only work with the windows rolled up. Actually, that's not altogether accurate. The stereo will work if the window handle is in the '2 o'clock position. It will not, though, work if the handle is in the 3 o'clock position.

5:45 p.m. — After a hearty meal at a Lubbock eatery, we take to the road again and notice the impending bad weather. George, the adventurer, who has never before witnessed a tornado is looking for some action. Perhaps actually his hoping that we would run smack dab into some bad weather would be more precise.

7:44 p.m. — The game is underway, but the weather is threatening and so are the Plainview Bulldogs. Todd Wilpon, the local radio announcer in Plainview, reminds his listening audience (which he claims consists of four loyal fans) that the weather guys are calling for wind gusts of 30 mph. "Gusts?" I think to myself. In Midland, if the winds are at 30 mph, they are thought of only as a slight breeze, if they are thought of at all.

7:53 p.m. — The ball game is called by the umpires who can't see because their eyelids are dripping.

9:10 p.m. — The journey home begins after finally realizing the ground wasn't going to dry any time soon. Deciding it was also time to seek out a men's room, we pull into one of those gas station-slash-convience stores. I ask the clerk if she had a key to the men's room, and without missing a beat, or a chew of her bubble gum, she pulls out a steak knife and says, "Last door on the left someone stole the key you'll have to pick the lock." Of all the convenience store robberies in the land today, I wind up at one of these stores and the girl pulls a knife on me just because I ask to use the restroom. As it turned out, the knife didn't work — although it did get me into the storage room — and we were forced to go down the street to the McMen's room.

11:40 p.m. — Another stop at another convenience store. This one in Lamesa. This time for some snacks. I buy a bag of chips and a bottle of Sarsaparilla, which I learn is just a fancy name for root beer.

Rangers hammer Birds

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Pete Incaviglia hit a two-run homer and two doubles, and Steve Buechele had four hits, leading the Texas Rangers to a 13-5 victory Tuesday night over the Baltimore Orioles.

AL

Larry Parrish, hitting .137 entering the game, also had three hits, including a two-run homer, as Texas won its fourth straight, its longest string of successes this season. The Rangers set season highs for runs and hits with 13.

Charlie Hough, 4-4, overcame early wildness for the victory, allowing eight hits in eight innings. Baltimore starter Mark Thurmond, 0-6, lasted only 1 2-3 innings, allowing five runs.

The Orioles were 4-5 in their previous nine games after opening the season with 21 straight losses.

The Rangers took a 2-0 first-inning lead when Incaviglia hit a 1-0 pitch down the right-field line for his sixth homer of the season after Ruben Sierra doubled.

The Orioles got a run back in the second on Eddie Murray's leadoff homer, his third.

Texas padded its lead to 5-1 in the second, chasing Thurmond. Thurmond, winless since since August 1986, saw his ERA swell to 8.26.

Twins 9, Brewers 3

Frank Viola extended his scoreless streak to a club-record 30 1-3 innings, and Kirby Puckett went 4-for-4 with a homer to snap the Brewers' 10-game winning streak.

Puckett and Kent Hrbek started a six-run fourth inning with successive home runs in support of Viola, 5-1, who broke Jim Kaat's 22-year-old Twins record of 28 consecutive scoreless innings.

Viola's bid for a third straight shutout ended with two out in the eighth when Robin Yount bounced an RBI single up the middle and Glenn Braggs followed with his fourth homer of the year.

Viola is 13-0 at the Metrodome since losing on May 22, 1987.

Yankees 17, White Sox 3

NEW YORK — Don Mattingly ended the longest home run drought of his career with a three-run shot in a seven-run third inning, and the New York Yankees snapped a three-game losing streak.

Mattingly had gone 124 at-bats this season without a home run. His longest previous stretch was 103 at-bats in 1985.

Mariners 4, Blue Jays 2

TORONTO — Mark Langston struck out 16, and Rey Quinones drove in two runs with a single and double as Toronto lost for the 11th time in 15 games.

Langston, 3-3, bettered his career-high in strikeouts by one and equalled the season-high by Roger Clemens of Boston against Kansas City Monday night.

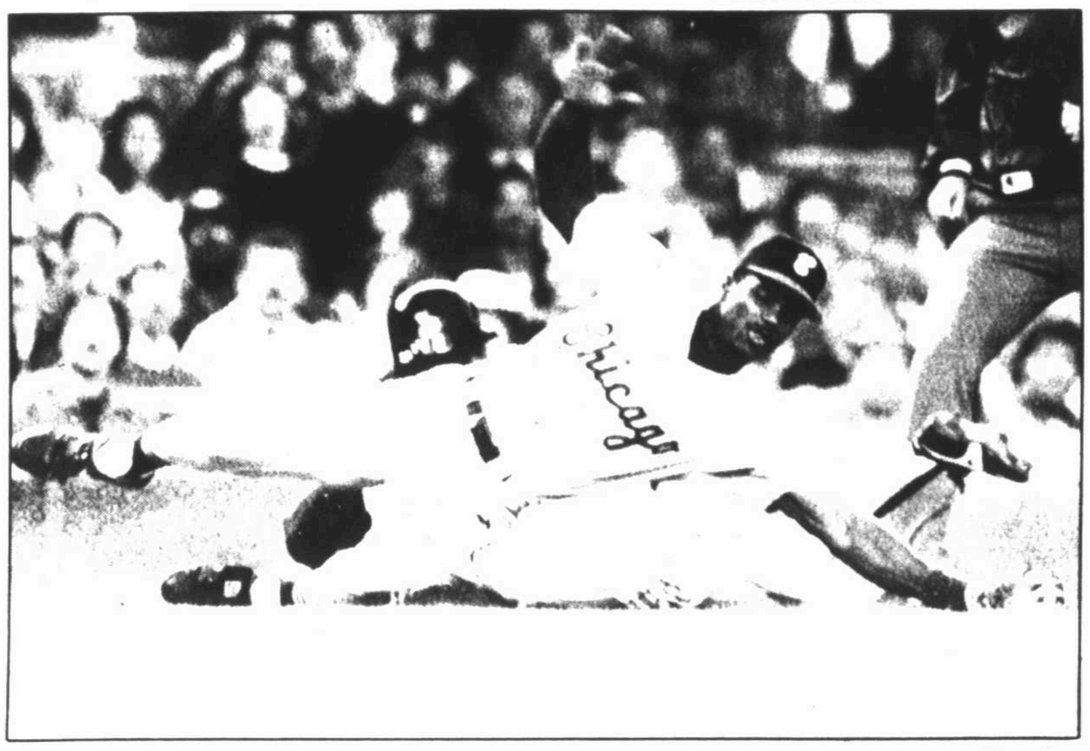
Royals 7, Red Sox 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Steve Balboni drove in three runs with a single, double and home run, and Floyd Bannister, 5-2, pitched Kansas City out of a six-game losing streak.

Boston starter Bruce Hurst lost for the first time after five victories as the Royals ended their longest home losing streak since 1974.

Indians 7, Angels 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Scott Bailes pitched a four-hitter, retiring 19 in a row from the first to eighth innings, as Cleveland snapped their six-game losing streak. Pat Tabler homered, had four hits and drove in three runs for the Indians, and Joe Carter had three hits.



AP Laserphoto

Yankees' Ricky Henderson steals third and bowls over Chicago's Ken Williams in the process.

Carter's bat beats Astros

HOUSTON (AP) — Gary Carter's run-scoring single snapped an eighth-inning tie and the New York Mets went on to beat the Houston Astros 5-2 Tuesday night.

NL

David Cone, 4-0, pitched seven innings for the victory, allowing one run and four hits. Roger McDowell finished for his third save, allowing a run in the ninth.

With the score tied 1-1, Darryl Strawberry led off the eighth with a walk from reliever Ernie Camacho, 0-3. After Camacho balked Strawberry to second, Kevin McReynolds reached on an infield single to third. Carter then singled to center, scoring Strawberry from second.

After a sacrifice bunt and an intentional walk to Kevin Elster to load the bases, pinch-hitter Lee Mazzilli hit a sacrifice fly. Mookie Wilson then singled in Carter to give the Mets a 4-1 lead.

The Astro run broke a streak of 16 consecutive scoreless innings by Cone.

Expos 6, Braves 1

ATLANTA — Hubie Brooks drove in three runs with a two-run single and home run. Brooks' single capped a five-run second inning and and chased starter Tom Glavine, 1-5. Brooks hit his fourth homer in the fifth off reliever Jose Alvarez.

Bryn Smith, 2-2, improved his lifetime record against the Braves to 11-

2. Pirates 6, Giants 2

PITTSBURGH — R.J. Reynolds, Jose Lind and Barry Bonds each drove in two runs while Vicente Palacios, 1-2, allowed three hits over five innings as the Pirates won for the 11th time in 14 home games. Jim Gott finished for his fifth save. Will Clark homered for the Giants.

Reds 10, Phillies 1

PHILADELPHIA — Bo Diaz's two-run homer capped a five-run first inning and Tom Browning, 1-0, pitched a six-hitter. It was the Reds' eighth complete game, matching their total of last season.

Chris Sabo went 3-for-5 to pace the Reds' 13-hit attack.

Dodgers 6, Cubs 5

CHICAGO— Kirk Gibson's home run with two outs in the 14th inning gave off reliever Les Lancaster, 1-3, was Gibson's sixth of the season. Brian Holton, 1-0, pitched three innings of one-hit ball for the victory.

Orel Hershiser, a regular starter, pitched the 14th inning for the Dodgers to earn a save.

With two outs in the ninth and Vance Law on first after an infield single, Shawon Dunston sent a drive over Gibson's head in left field for a double as Law scored the tying run to make it 5-5.

Cardinals 5, Padres 1

ST. LOUIS — Duane Walker's two-run pinch single off Andy Hawkins snapped a sixth-inning tie. Bob Forsch, 2-2, pitched 1-3 of an inning to get the victory. Todd Worrell pitched 2 1-3 innings for his ninth save.

Raiders sign Khristie Davis

From Staff Reports

Khristie Davis, Midland Lee High School senior, has signed a volleyball letter of intent to Texas Tech, where she will enroll in pre-med.

At Lee, Davis made the all-district team by high jumping 5-3 and lettering three years in basketball, three in track and two in volleyball. She was an scholastic Academic All-American with three years in the ochestra.

The daughter of Fannie and Bobby Joe Davis, Khristie maintained a 4.38 Grade Point Average and was on the National Honor Society.

Roach is another three-year track star, earning Region I track berths in the 200 meters, 400 and 800 relay teams, earning berths in all three seasons. She was the team's second leading point getter behind Melody Miller.

Lee head basketball coach Paul Stueckler also announced that the Army Reserve had previously named Davis and Lee quarterback Geoff Rich to a special award that combines both athletics and academics. Rich is headed for Air Force Academy to play football.

It was also announced by Scotty Alcorn, master of ceremonies, that Stueckler and baseball coach Ernie Johnson have completed 27 years of coaching and teaching at Lee. They are the only head coaches for basketball and baseball since Lee opened 27 years ago.

Alcorn also said that Stueckler has posted a 672-352 record (.656 winning percentage) to move into fourth place for victories among Texas high school coaches.

Lee swimmer was pointed out as earning second team All-State honors in diving by making the state finals. Stephanie Reed was another of coach John Bettina's swimmers to earn a state berth and Reed did it as a sophomore.

Tennis coach Bobby Connell was especially pleased with the Region I berth won by singles player Brian Bishop.

"I can really only speak of the last 16 years, but I think this is the first boys singles player at Lee since 1969 to accomplish this," said Connell.

If the figures were counted correctly, 25 athletes earned Region I berths in swimming, tennis and track while 24 more gained either All-District or honorable mention All-District honors in sports other than football.

Coach Johnson claimed that figure would grow when baseball names its All-District team. "We can't name our All-District players in baseball until the teams in our district are through with the playoffs, but we'll have some," said Johnson before adding, "We hope that we don't announce the All-District team until one of our district teams brings home a state championship."

More than 140 Lee students took part in sports other than football.

Kelly skips drills

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Quarterback Jim Kelly, troubled by a sore elbow on his throwing arm, won't work out with his teammates when the Buffalo Bills hold a three-day minicamp that starts Friday.

Bruins rout Devils

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Bruins took advantage of what was given them. The New Jersey Devils were unable to overcome what was dealt them.

NHL

"This has been a long day and it turned out to be a long evening," New Jersey general manager Lou Lamoriello said Tuesday night after the Bruins' 7-1 victory over the Devils, whom he coached in Jim Schoenfeld's absence.

Lamoriello said the team learned at 7 p.m., 35 minutes before the opening faceoff, that Schoenfeld had been suspended for the game.

Schoenfeld, sat down for a run-in with referee Don Koharski, retired to a luxury box seat. Lamoriello went behind the bench for the first time since he coached Providence College to the NCAA Final Four in North Dakota in 1983.

The Bruins ignored New Jersey's devilish situation. Instead, they came out like gangbusters and moved to within one victory of the Wales Conference championship and a berth in the Stanley Cup final.

"We were on the money," Boston coach Terry O'Reilly said. "We put our scoring opportunities in the net. Everybody came to play.

"I thought they came out strong, but we were ready. Now we have to settle down and come out ready for the big one. And the next game is the big one."

The Bruins, bidding for their fifth Stanley Cup and first since 1972, can advance to a showdown for the NHL's coveted prize by winning in New Jersey Thursday. A seventh game, if necessary, will be played in Boston Garden Saturday night.

The Bruins, smarting from a 3-1 loss in New Jersey in Game 4 Sunday night — when Schoenfeld had an original one-game suspension temporarily barred by a state court — turned on the power as regular NHL officials returned to work. The NHL crew refused to work Game 4 and amateur officials were recruited.

B	A bonus will be paid to broker by VA at closing.

The offer which best serves the interest of VA will be processed for acceptance. The name of the successful offeror and sales broker will appear in subsequent publications. VA will accept cash offers up to 10 percent below the advertised term sales price. VA also will pay reasonable loan discount points and buyers' closing costs on cash offers. However, the combined loan discount points and buyers' closing costs may not exceed 10 percent of the advertised term sales price. Offers must be submitted at term listed price when buyers request a new GI loan with $1.00 move-in. Interest rate of available financing is 10 percent (APR 10.1 percent). VA has properties for sale statewide. If you desire to purchase properties in other areas, please contact any sales broker located in the area in which you are interested.

FORFEITURE OF EARNEST MONEY DEPOSIT

Prior to signing the offer, broker must deposit in broker's trust account at least $500 earnest money. Once a purchase offer has been accepted for processing by VA and is subsequently cancelled at the request of the purchaser, the Earnest Money Deposit WILL NOT be refunded and the broker will be required to forward the Earnest Money to the VA as liquidation expenses. There will be no exception to this policy. Therefore, the VA suggests that all brokers interview their buyers to assure they want the property, prior to submission of an offer to purchase.
VA pays 5% sales commission. Offers are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Contract of Sale, on which all offers must be submitted. VA Form 26-6705 must be submitted in duplicate to:

VA Property Management Section
