Reagan Lobbies Personally...

AWACS Deal Moving Closer To Approval By U.S. Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, adding another vote to his side with a new round of personal lobbying, is moving closer toward Senate approval of his sale of AWACS radar plane to Saudi Arabia.

After meeting with Reagan on Friday, one senator announced his support for the $8.5 billion arms deal and two others who had been leaning against the sale said they were now undecided. Three opponents said they promised Reagan that they would keep open minds.

Reagan's meetings Friday with seven senators narrowed the Senate lineup against the sale to 51-37 according to the latest Associated Press count. Twelve senators say they are undecided.

One less vote and the opponents will no longer have a clear majority. But Reagan has to get a majority of the senators present and voting to approve the sale, or at least get a tie vote.

Senate Republican Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. said more senators will be declaring their support for the sale next week.

"We're still behind, but we're coming up and they're (opponents) coming down," Baker said.

Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., who had been leaning for the sale, announced his support after a meeting with the president.

"If we turn it down we're lost," Johnston said. "But if we accept it, we can change our minds later" because the planes will not be delivered until 1985.

Sens. David L. Boren, D-Okla., and Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., who had indicated in the past that they were against it, said they have since moved to undecided.

And Sens. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., Quentin N. Burdick, D-N.D., and Howell Heflin, D-Ala., said they remain opposed but promised the president during the meetings that they would restudy their positions or keep their minds open.

In addition, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., who has been listed as uncommitted, is working on a resolution of support for Israel that could lead him to vote for the sale, said his press secretary, Bill Kats.

"We are looking at resolutions, including possibly something of our own initiative, which would be a reconfirmation of our special relationship with Israel," Kats added.

Meanwhile, White House spokesman David Gergen confirmed that the AWACS sale is likely to be discussed next week when Reagan meets with Saudi Prince Fahd during a 22-nation summit conference at Cancun, Mexico.

MUSEUM GIFT--Roy Baze, left, presents his check for $500 for the Scurry County Museum to Sharon Sutton, museum director. Baze is an Exxon Corporation annuitant and made the gift through the company's matching gifts program so Exxon will double the amount, bringing the museum a total of $1,000. Exxon has also given the museum a $1,000 grant to bring "Crossroads of Empire," a major map exhibit, in 1982.

Dayan Dead At 66

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Moshe Dayan, who wielded the sword of Israel in three wars and countless skirmishes before helping to hammer out the plowshare of peace with Egypt, is dead at age 66.

Dayan, whose black eyepatch was a familiar symbol of the Jewish state in war and peace, died of a heart attack shortly after the start of the Jewish Sabbath Friday evening.

Protest Farm Bill

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The president of the Texas Farmers Union says many farmers and ranchers are sorry they voted for President Reagan.

Mike Moeller, TFU president, also told a news conference Friday that Reagan's Farm Bill would drive more family farmers out of business and "intensify the world hunger crisis."

"There is increasing disillusionment with Reagan among farmers. I see that everywhere I go. ... I don't see many farmers who are completely proud of their vote," Moeller said.

He said Reagan promised farmers 100 percent of parity but farm prices are "running at 50 percent of parity."

"I think farmers feel Reagan hasn't kept his promises and hasn't done anything in the Farm Bill to correct their problems," Moeller said.

Tax Statements Are Nearly Ready

Scurry County tax statements are due to go into the mail within a week.

That was the word from Clarence Minton, county tax collector, as the last receipt blanks were expected to roll out of the computer Saturday night.

The computer began turning out the tax statements early Thursday and had completed that task Friday. Then it began on the receipts.

Minton said he hoped that his staff could get all statements in the mail by Friday, Oct. 23. That would give the taxpayers a full week to take advantage of October discounts.

He said he had hoped to be able to put some statements in the mail as early as Monday, but the valuation engineers advised that it would be early this week before they completed oil statements. Minton hopes these will be here by mid-week.

A computer programmer from Lubbock came here Wednesday evening to set up the city's computers to print the tax statements and receipts. The computer began its work at 1:30 a. m. Thursday and was continuing Saturday. It was expected to complete the task around 10:30 p. m. Saturday.

The county tax office collects taxes for all taxing entities in the county, which includes the county, the city, the school districts of Snyder, Hermleigh and Ira, and the Scurry County Junior College District.

Deanna Myers Is New Entomologist

The new entomologist for Scurry and Mitchell Counties should know the territory in which she will serve.

She is Deanna Myers of Snyder, who will succeed William C. Jany, now with a commercial firm in Mississippi.

Her appointment becomes effective Oct. 21 and she will be headquartered in Colorado City, said Ken Cook of San Angelo, director of the West Central District in the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

The new entomologist completed graduate studies recently at Texas A&M University, where her research for a master's degree dealt with cotton insects. She earned a bachelor's degree at Texas Tech University after completing two years at Western Texas College.

Miss Myers is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Myers Jr, Route 2, Snyder. Her father is a long-time cotton producer.

She belongs to the Southwest Entomological Society as well as the American Entomological Society, and is listed in Who's Who of American Women in Science. Her university scholastic standing also earned memberships for her in Alpha Zeta, Phi Kappa Phi and Phi Theta Kappa.

In providing leadership for the pest management programs that deal with boll weevils and other insects, Miss Myers will work with Mitchell County Extension agent Robert C. Benson and Scurry County Extension Agent Billy Earl Roach as well as with agriculture producers in both counties.

United Way Reports Due

First report session for the Scurry County United Way Campaign will be held at 10 a. m. Tuesday at city hall.

The campaign was launched Thursday at a kickoff luncheon at the Snyder Country Club, and Elizabeth Potts, general campaign chairman, said campaign leaders hoped to complete a successful drive in three weeks.

Reports will be heard from division chairmen at the Tuesday session. The United Way has a goal of $60,900.

For those who were unable to attend the kickoff luncheon, a videotape of the event will be show at 6:30 p. m. Monday on channel 2 of Snyder Community Antenna Television.

Ask Us

Q.—Why didn't the SDN carry a story about the missing funds in the county tax office, which was in the Abilene and Lubbock papers?

A.—The SDN ran it on the front page Sept. 9. It was run the following day in the two papers mentioned. We assume they picked up the information from us. We might add that there was nothing sinister in the incident. It was merely a clerical error. The funds were never out of a tax office bank account, which means they were not actually "missing." They simply were not disbursed to the school district on time. We are told that steps are being taken to prevent such an incident in the future.

Say Committee Will Be Needed

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — When the federal governments starts sending lump-sum block grants to Texas the state is going to need a committee to manage the funds, according to supporters of a proposed constitutional amendment.

Scurry Museum To Get Traveling Exhibition

"Crossroads of Empire," a major traveling exhibition from the Amon Carter Museum in Fort Worth, will be shown in the Scurry County Museum at Western Texas College from June 14-July 24, 1982, Sharon Sutton, museum director, has announced.

This is the first exhibition to explore the cartography of the American Southwest. Drawn from several institutions and private collection, the exhibit was produced in collaboration with the Cartographic History Library at the University of Texas at Arlington with support from Justin Industries.

The local museum has received a grant from Exxon to make it possible to bring the exhibit here.

Included in the exhibit is the earliest known map to outline the Gulf of Mexico, Martin Waldseemueller's chart of the area, as well as late 19th century railroad surveys. In between are some of the most important maps ever produced of the region.

Other major exhibits already scheduled by the museum for 1982 are "A Golden Age of Paintings" from the Sarah Campbell Blaffer Foundation of Houston and "Works by Women" from the Gihon Foundation of Dallas.

"We felt 1982 will be an outstanding year for the Scurry County Museum," Sutton said. "We encourage residents of the community to plan now to see these and other exhibits being planned, and to lend their support to the museum through membership in the Museum Association. Information about association memberships can be obtained by calling our office at 573-6197."

Rate proposals of the telephone company caused quite a stir here the past week, and we view it as a sign of the times.

Bill Starnes, wire chief here for Southwestern Bell, said he was surprised at the reaction to the news wire stories about telephone rates.

Those "measured service" proposals for local calls are listed as optional, he said, and they would not be able to offer it in Snyder anyway.

The word "optional" in the report did not lessen the apprehension among many customers, however, especially the elderly. They view it as a trend toward something that frightens them, and what may be optional one year could be mandatory the next. We are certain that these people would welcome some reassurance from phone company officials that they are not going to be forced to take measured service—anytime.

Another thing the phone company is feeling today is the growing distance between it and the people it serves. Somehow, a person doesn't feel as close to a voice in San Antonio as he did when someone closer answered his inquiries about phone numbers and service problems.

Things are not always what they seem.

A professor at a major medical school asked his students this question:

"Here is the family history. The father has syphilis, the mother has TB. They already have four children. The first is blind. The second has already died. The third is deaf. The fourth has TB. The mother is pregnant. The parents are willing to have an abortion if you decide they should. What do you think?"

The students overhwelmingly agreed that an abortion was the right move.

"Congratulations," said the professor. "You have just murdered Beethoven."

It seemed almost eerie watching the early innings of the New York Yankees and Oakland A's in the baseball playoff game Thursday to see the late evening sun still shining in Oakland while it was already pitch-dark here.

And it seems incredible that one week from now it will be getting dark an hour earlier. Next Sunday, Oct. 25, is the day we fall back to Standard Time, which means that a few days later, Christmas will be here.

If the talk about a national debt of more than a trillion dollars has you confused, perhaps you will be interested in these figures that apply to you personally, if you are an average working citizen of the United States.

Your share of the public debt is $12,137. You owe another $1,612 as your share of accounts payable, another $5,650 on undelivered orders, $250 on long-term federal contracts, $4,012 on federal loan and credit guarantees, and your share of Uncle Sam's insurance commitments comes to $27,737. Annuity programs yet to be funded will cost you $86,250. Your share of unadjudicated claims, international commitments and other financial obligations of Uncle Sam add another $575 to your personal liability. This means that your share of Uncle Sam's multi-trillion commitment is $138,223—unless you have a working wife. Then your share is $276,446.

Some accountant is supposed to have figured this out. We'll take his word for it and urge the feds to do something to whittle it down, but don't do anything to interrupt any part that may be putting money in our pocket. Make the cuts from those who won't feel it.

Economy Is Slowing Down...

Economists Divided Over Effect

NEW YORK (AP) — No one questions that the economy is slowing down. But economists are sharply divided over how great a decline has been suffered and how soon relief will be felt.

Reports this past week added to the mounting evidence of a listless economy and raised the prospects of the nation falling into its eighth recession since the end of World War II.

Government agencies reported the biggest drop in industrial production in more than a year, rising inventories of unsold goods, sluggish growth in retail sales that failed to keep pace with inflation, and the weakest early-October auto sales in 23 years.

On Wednesday, the government reports on the growth of the economy in the third quarter. If the "real" gross national product — the inflation-adjusted total of goods and services produced by the economy — drops, it would be the second consecutive quarterly drop.

A recession is commonly described as two straight quarters of declining GNP, although technical analysts insist on cumulative, pervasive weakness in economic activity before declaring a recession.

While increasing number of economists are predicting a recession this year, some maintain the economy has been gripped by recession for the past three years.

"The overall performance of the economy has been consistently weak since the early part of 1979," say Morgan Stanley & Co. Inc. economists H. Erich Heinemann and Charles Lieberman. But Heinemann and Liberman say they expect inflation to continue to unwind and interest rates to fall substantially in 1982.

Influential Wall Street economist Henry Kaufman, managing director and member of the executive committee of Salomon Brothers Inc., says that while interest rates may decline in the next few weeks, they will turn higher again, setting new records.

Kaufman says the impact of tax cuts that took effect Oct. 1 and a Federal Reserve Board policy that would make credit more available, should induce growth in the economy this year, heading off a recession. But Kaufman added: "We must regard it as an achievement if our economy continues to sputter and spurt."

James Tobin, who was named the recipient of the 1981 Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Science on Tuesday, says President Reagan's economic program is a "receipe for high interest rates" that will fail to cure inflation or reduce unemployment.

The Federal Reserve reported that industrial production fell 0.8 percent in September, following a 0.3 percent decline in August and a 0.6 percent gain in July. It was the largest decline since a 0.8 percent drop in July 1980, at the end of a short but steep recession.

The Commerce Department said inventories held by U.S. businesses rose 0.7 percent in August as sales fell 1 percent. It also reported that sales by the nation's retailers rose 0.4 percent in September, and have increased at a seasonally adjusted rate of gain of 1.4 percent in March, much less than the increase likely attributable to inflation since then.

HEALTH

Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

Peyronie's disease

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I have a condition called Peyronie's disease, a gristle-like growth on my penis. I've been to two different doctors. Both tell me there isn't much they can do for me and that it will go away in time. I've had it for three years and I'm 44 years old.

I've taken vitamin E three times a day but that seemed to make it more tender. I was taking vitamin E before this developed, then stopped and started it again when the doctor suggested it. I am not taking any now but I am not improving either. Is there anything you can tell me that will help?

DEAR READER — I used to think this was a rare condition but the large number of letters I get asking about this problem suggests that it is actually rather common. Doctors do not know what causes it. The problem is essentially as you describe it. It causes a crooked organ during erection and it can be so severe that it is painful and prevents sexual relations. It is more common in middle-aged and older men but it can occur earlier, as your case suggests.

The area may resemble a low-grade inflammation. Vitamin E has been used for it with variable, but often unsatisfactory, results. The area often does clear spontaneously with or without medicine, which causes me to sometimes say a person recovered in spite of the doctor and not because of the treatment.

I am sending you The Health Letter number 17-4, Male Reproductive Functions, which includes a discussion of the problem.

Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

There are several treatments available and I think you should see a urologist who may be familiar with those discussed in that issue. If necessary, go to the urology department of a nearby medical university clinical center.

I think some of these are similar to the plaques we see in the arteries. The penis is really a large blood vessel so that isn't too surprising. In persistent cases surgery has been reported to be successful in some, cutting out the plaque and mending the area.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Can you tell me anything about "valley fever"? I hear it attacks the lungs and sometimes can be taken care of by surgery. But what happens if the fever is spread over all the lung?

DEAR READER — You probably mean coccidiodomycosis, also called San Joaquin Valley fever because it is so common in that location. It is a fungus disease and the fungal spores are inhaled. It cannot be spread from man to man or from animals to man. You get it from the soil and air.

At first it appears as a respiratory illness. It may be mild and many people do not know they even have it. Most recover without future problems. A few have a spread of the fungus infection through the lungs and even to other areas.

Yes, local spots are sometimes cut out. And in other cases a local spot on the lungs from the fungus infection cannot be separated from cancer by X-rays and must be cut out. But if needed there are good medicines that can be used to control the disease that has spread. Amphotericin B, an anti-fungal agent, is often used in those cases.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Our daughter has a bad perspiration odor. Washing does not get the odor out of her clothes. I have tried everything I know of to get this underarm odor out but to no avail. She keeps herself clean, bathes daily, wears clean clothes daily and uses deodorants. Could something be lacking in her diet? None of the rest of the family has the offensive odor. We would appreciate any advice you can offer.

DEAR READER — Of course cleanliness is important in preventing body odors but most people do not know that ordinary soap and water often will not work, even if you bathe every hour.

Why? Because the odor is usually caused by bacterial action on normal sweat. These bacteria are inside the layers of the skin. Washing the surface of the skin will not remove them. That is why a cleansing soap that penetrates the outer layers of the skin is sometimes necessary.

A preparation that contains hexachlorophene is the best available, such as pHisoHex. It is a prescription item because it was found years ago to cause damage to babies. Before that it was routinely used in hospital nurseries to prevent staphylococcal epidemics.

Your daughter's doctor can give her a prescription. The hexachlorophene will penetrate the skin and stay there. In a few days it will begin to kill off the resident bacteria and her odor problem will begin to disappear, provided that really is the cause — and it probably is in view of its location. I don't think it has a thing to do with her diet.

I am sending you The Health Letter number 18-2, Sweating, Antiperspirants and Body Odor, to give you more details about this.

Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

The usual deodorants you can buy will not correct her problem but they may provide some limited relief. They are fine for less difficult problems.

And because I don't know your daughter's age I want to caution that I do not recommend hexachlorophene regularly in anyone who is pregnant or likely to be pregnant. Otherwise using it locally as under the arms until the odor disappears is not likely to be a problem.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I have been on one grain of thyroid for about 10 years. In that time I have gained 15 pounds. I've tried dieting but can't lose any weight. It came on and stayed on after I started on the thyroid program. Could the thyroid keep me from losing weight? Should I stop taking it to see? I don't know why the doctor put me on them. Exactly what does the pill do for me?

DEAR READER — If you have a normal thyroid, taking a small dose of thyroid will not do a thing for you. Your thyroid gland just decreases the amount of thyroid hormone it produces. The end result of the thyroid you take plus the amount produced by the gland is about the same as the gland would have produced if you had left the thyroid pills alone.

Your doctor must have thought you had low thyroid function. If so, stopping your thyroid pills will only make matters worse. If you really do have low thyroid function, you might need more thyroid rather than none. But I must add that low thyroid function is seldom a cause for weight gain. Usually it is caused by too many calories. Talk to your doctor and see if he wants you to take more thyroid or not.

SS Taxes To Increase Next Year

WASHINGTON (AP) — Social Security taxes will increase next year by about $100 for the average worker and almost $200 for those paying the maximum payroll levy, the government says.

The maximum Social Security tax, under $1,000 just four years ago, will jump to $2,170,80 in 1982, the Social Security Administration said Friday.

The wage base, or maximum earnings subject to the payroll tax, will jump to $32,400 from this year's ceiling of $29,700. For workers earning that much, the maximum tax will climb $295.75 above this year's top of $1,975.05.

But all workers, regardless of their income, will pay more in 1982 for Social Security's retirement, disability, survivors' and Medicare coverage. The tax rate itself will go up slightly from 6.65 to 6.7 percent for both employees and their employers.

Congress established the higher tax rate in 1977, as part of a program to bail Social Security out of an earlier fiscal crisis. If Congress had not acted, the Social Security tax in 1982 would have been only 6.3 percent on income up to $24,300, or a maximum tax of $1,531.

The Social Security Administration said the average worker will pay almost $100 more in Social Security taxes in 1982, due to rising salaries and the higher tax rates.

The agency noted that an average worker earning $13,729 in 1981 is paying $912.98 in Social Security taxes. Next year, that worker is expected to earn $15,045 and pay $1,008.02 in Social Security taxes.

Low-income workers who earn $6,968 in 1981 will pay $463.37 to Social Security; next year, the agency said, their income is expected to rise to $7,636 and their tax to $511.61, a $48 increase.

For the self-employed, next year's tax rate will increase to 9.35 percent from the 9.3 percent this year. The maximum tax will be $3,029.40 on income of $32,400, an increase of $267.30.

The wage base rises automatically each year as the average wages of workers increase. The Reagan administration predicted earlier this year that it would rise to $32,100 in 1982.

The agency also announced other changes taking effect Jan. 1, 1982:

—The maximum amount of earnings that any beneficiary under age 65 may earn without losing any benefits will increase from $4,080 in 1981 to $4,440 in 1982. Benefits are reduced $1 for every $2 earned above that amount.

—Beneficiaries aged 65 through 71 will be able to earn $6,000 in 1982 without losing benefits, up from $5,500 this year. Those 72 or older can draw full benefits no matter how much they earn. Originally, those 70 and older were supposed to have that right starting Jan. 1, 1982, but it was delayed a year as part of the 1982 budget cuts enacted by Congress.

—The amount of earnings required for a quarter of coverage will increase from $310 to $340. Most current workers will need 40 quarters, or 10 years under Social Security, to draw benefits, although some now nearing retirement can qualify with fewer quarters.

Earlier Friday, a top Social Security official acknowledged that Social Security's trust funds could have earned $1 billion more in interest last year if they had been invested to get the highest rates of returns.

Nevertheless, Robert J. Myers, deputy commissioner for programs, defended the current investment programs as treating both the trust funds and the Treasury fairly.

If Social Security adopted a strategy to roll over its investments to always get the highest current yield, he said, that strategy "would be very advantageous to Social Security, but very disadvantageous — and, in fact, inequitable — to the general Treasury."

Myers said the Treasury would then have to pay higher interest out of general revenues. This, he charged, "would be an indirect form of general revenue financing for Social Security."

He said the old-age and disability funds earned an 8.4 percent rate of interest on their investments in the year ending June 30, 1980, "whereas private money market managers currently earn about 13 percent." Myers said Social Security is getting that much on its latest investments.

Man Is Convicted Of Harrassing C.Kennedy

NEW YORK (AP) — A California man convicted of criminal trespass and aggravated harassment of Caroline Kennedy says he still wants to marry the late president's daughter.

Kevin King, 35, of Palo Alto, Calif., a self-described law school graduate who acted as his own attorney at the nonjury trial, pleaded with Criminal Court Judge John Bradley in his closing argument that "I don't see how you can harass someone when you want to get married."

Bradley set Oct. 23 for sentencing, at which time King could get up to a year in prison on each count.

Miss Kennedy, 23, who lives with two other young people in a Manhattan apartment and works at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, testified King first accosted her on Aug. 18 as she was eating lunch on the patio outside the museum and told her that "strange forces" had been telling him about her.

"It was very confusing," she said, "because he kept talking about the forces manipulating us."

The daughter of the late President John F. Kennedy said she finally gathered up her belongings and told King that "one of us is going to leave now." She said King replied: "OK, I'll go."

Because of the incident, Miss Kennedy said, she spent that night at the apartment of her mother, Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis.

She said she also received a postcard from King which "contained some obscenities that made me very nervous," and two love letters, one of which said: "Marry me. Borrow some rice from your mother's weddings."

Miss Kennedy did not look at King except when she was asked to point out the man who had accosted her. Then she looked at him directly and said, "That's him."

William Morris, who lives in the same apartment building as Miss Kennedy, said King appeared at the house shortly after midnight on Aug. 19. He said King was carrying a suitcase and rang his doorbell, saying he had tried Miss Kennedy's apartment but she wasn't answering. Morris quoted him as saying he was short of cash and wanted to stay in the building until she returned.

Morris said King asked him: "Don't you know what love is really like?" and added: "I'm in love with her, and I'm going to marry her."

Morris testified that when he asked King to leave, he did so, but he was back the next night and Morris called police, who arrested King near the building.

Andrew Karsch, who shares an apartment with Miss Kennedy and another young woman, testified that King had called many times asking for Miss Kennedy.

He said he finally threatened to call the police and told King: "If you really love her, you'll leave her alone, because she's afraid to come home."

Karsch said King hung up, but a few minutes later called again and said "This is Kevin King. Tell Caroline I'm going to marry her."

WTC Professor Writes Article

An article on an early Texas Ranger fort in Central Texas by Western Texas College history professor Dr. Harry Krenek, is featured in the current issue of The River Review, an Austin-based journal.

The story, titled "Fort Colorado," concerns an outpost constructed in the summer of 1836 by a company of Rangers under the command of Capt. Robert Coleman. The site of the fort is in what now is east Austin and is less than a mile from Austin International Airport.

Although Austin had not been established, there were settlers along the Colorado River south of where the city is now located who needed protection from the Comanches. The Ranger company provided this protection until 1838 when the fort was abandoned. The last commander, Capt. William Mosby Eastland, later joined the ill-fated Mier Expedition and was the first man to draw a black bean.

Fort Colorado was abandoned when the new president of the Republic of Texas, Mirabeau Lamar, called for a more aggressive Indian policy. As a part of this policy, in October, 1840, John Henry Moore commanded a group of Texans and Lipan Apaches who attacked a Comanche camp on the Colorado near present Colorado City. Moore and his men were the first white men in this part of Texas. Eastland was a member of Moore's company as were several Rangers who had served at Fort Colorado.

Because Of Daniel Sr.'s Influence...

Daniel's Attorney Implies Evidence Was Manipulated

LIBERTY, Texas (AP) — An attorney defending Vickie Daniel on murder charges implied in his questioning of witnesses that evidence crucial to the case was manipulated because the victim's powerful father, former Gov. Price Daniel, influenced the investigation.

As attorney Jack Zimmermann quizzed chief investigator Marvin Powell Friday, Powell indicated he was not in control of the investigation and should not be held responsible for mistakes.

Mrs. Daniel, 34, is accused of killing her wealthy and widely known husband at the couple's Liberty home last winter.

Daniel, 39, a one-time speaker of the Texas House of Representatives, followed his father's politically prominent example. Price Daniel Sr. was a Texas House speaker, as well as a U.S. senator and an associate justice of the Texas Supreme Court.

But the younger Daniel's career was cut short by a single .22-caliber bullet wound in the abdomen last January.

According to previous testimony, Mrs. Daniel said the couple argued, that he beat her, and that she shot him. But she insisted the shooting was accidental.

Zimmermann, 39, an associate of noted Houston attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes, subjected Powell to a withering round of cross-examination.

He established first that Powell and other members of the Liberty County sheriff's office met at least twice with the elder Daniel in the days following the shooting.

"Did you have the freedom to conduct the investigation, how you thought it should be done?" Zimmermann asked.

"No, sir," Powell replied.

"Were there people telling you what to do and what not to do?"

"Yes..."

"If errors were made, it wouldn't be fair to hold you or your people responsible?" Zimmermann asked.

"Well, I felt that way," Powell replied.

"As you look back on the investigation, do you feel it could have been done differently?"

"Yes."

Powell conceded that evidence vital to the state's case apparently was mishandled on many occasions, including failure to dust for fingerprints in certain areas of the house.

Asked why there was no attempt to lift prints in the home, Powell replied, "I didn't feel like it was necessary."

Powell testified at length about attempts to lift Mrs. Daniel's fingerprints from the death weapon.

"They couldn't find Vickie's prints on the gun, could they?" Zimmermann asked.

"That's right," the witness replied.

Powell said he could not determine if Daniel handled the rifle because he instructed no one to take Price Jr.'s fingerprints.

"We will never know from scientific evidence whether Price Daniel was in fact wrestling for that gun?" Zimmermann inquired.

"That's correct."

Powell said he was told that Daniel and his wife argued over marijuana a short time before the shooting and that his subsequent attic searches led him only to a box containing "two green specks."

He said he submitted the specks for analysis but was not asked the results of those tests.

Lawyers outside the courtroom said the tests were negative. But when Zimmermann was asked if he thought someone had destroyed the evidence, he said, "Do you think I came in here on a load of pumpkins?"

Zimmermann suggested that "somebody decided what happened and didn't feel the need to investigate further."

He added: "Whoever thought that didn't think Vickie Daniel was going to fight back."

District Attorney Carroll Wilborn discounted the defense's contention that a fight over marijuana sparked the violent fight, saying, "Marijuana is not something that requires the death penalty in Texas."

RescurersEnter Mine In Japan

TOKYO (AP) — Rescuers today donned oxygen masks and dropped back into a gas-filled coal mine in northern Japan where 42 miners were killed to search for 51 others feared dead from leaking methane fumes.

Authorities halted rescue operations Friday night, hours after the accident, when a large gas buildup was detected at the Yubari coal mine, 496 miles north of Tokyo.

"Judging from the present circumstances, there is no hope that anybody is alive," Chiaki Hayasahi, president of Hokkaido Colliery and Steamship Co. which owns the mine, said early today. Those trapped included 10 rescue workers, the company said.

Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki ordered Trade and Industry Minister Rokusuke Tanaka to lead a government team to the site. Cause of the gas seepage was not immediately known.

Officials said 170 miners were inside when gas started leaking at noon Friday; 77 escaped and nine were hospitalized. One survivor interviewed on television said the area had been dynamited several hours before the leak.

"All of a sudden white coal dust came gushing out," Kyodo news service quoted another survivor as saying. "Five of us started running but breathing became harder and harder and we kept falling over each other."

Hundreds of relatives and friends camped all night by the mineshaft waiting for the latest developments.

"Why didn't you tell us earlier?," some shouted when informed of the death toll hours after the accident. "We've been waiting so long for some news."

Hokkaido officials said 32 rescue workers with oxygen masks and other life-saving equipment split into six groups and went back into the mineshaft in hopes of finding survivors.

Many of the miners were trapped 1.5 miles below the mine mouth in a newly opened area, the company said. Rescuers were expected to take several hours to pick through tunnels, fearing explosions of leaking gas and coal dust.

Earlier reports of fire in the mineshaft prompted officials — fearing an explosion — to consider flooding the mine.

"If you do that you are just murderers," one tearful relative of a trapped miner was quoted as saying by the Kyodo news agency.

The mine, opened in 1974, boasted computer equipment and was regarded as one of Japan's most modern.

The city of Yubari, center of Japan's coal mining for the past century, has a history of tragedy. In 1965, a gas explosion killed 62 miners. In 1975, a gas leak killed five miners in the Hokkaido Colliery, and last year a fire shut down operations for 45 days.

The nation's worst accident occurred in 1963 when 450 miners were killed in an explosion of the Mitsui Miike pit in Fukuoka.

EXHIBITOR—Carol Whitney of Norman, Okla., is one of eight artists who will be exhibiting in the Indian Images show scheduled from October 24-November 15 in the Diamond M Museum of Fine Arts. More and more of Whitney's work has turned to sculptural forms whose images are those of the Plains Indians and their land, with most of the pieces fired to stoneware temperatures.

Diamond M Museum Sets Indian Images Exhibition

Indian Images, an exhibition of regional artists portraying the spirit and tradition of the American Indian, will be the featured event at the Diamond M Museum of Fine Arts from October 24-November 15.

Paintings, drawings, prints, sculpture and Navajo rugs will be displayed by noted artists from Oklahoma, New Mexico, Montana, and Texas. The Diamond M invites the public to the preview showing of the exhibit from 1-5 p.m. Saturday.

John Gibson, interim director of the museum, states that this is a unique exhibit from several standpoints. First, there will be a combination of Indian and anglo artists to offer the viewpoint of those who have lived Indian and those who have cafefully looked at the Indian. Second, the Indian subject natter displayed varies according to the tribes portrayed, the particular lifestyle depicted, and the choice of past and present situations.

"A most significant point in this exhibition is the variety of techniques offered by the traditional and modernistic approaches employed," Gibson said. "Many of the artists have held firm to traditional expressions in depicting the Indian civilization, while others have chosen a modernistic approach that conveyd an expressive psychological reality not aimed for visual accuracy. All the artists have strived to accurately portray the heritage and lifestyles of the American. The honor and spirit of the Indian is rooted in the works of these artists any many prominent and innovative artist statements are vident."

Artists whose works will be included are Penni Anne Cross, Len Agrella, Grey Cohoe, Ben Buffalo, Roy Lee Ward, Patricia Warren, Carol Whitney and Mike Larsen.

Leaders Tour Flooded Lands

By The Associated Press

While House Majority Leader Jim Wright and a contingent of other congressman toured flood-ravaged communities in Tarrant County, residents still cleaning up in other parts of the state found themselves fleeing rising water yet again.

Up to 7 inches of rain fell on already soggy northern and western parts of the state Friday and hundreds of people had to be evacuated.

Meanwhile, Wright, accompanied by members of the U.S. House Public Works Committee and other Texas congressmen, boarded a Texas National Guard helicopter Friday for an aerial view of the flood damage.

Traveling with Wright were Rep. Jack Fields, R-Texas, House Water Resources Subcommittee Chairman Robert A. Rowe, D-N.J., Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, Rep. Jack Hightower, D-Texas, and ranking Public Works Committee Republican Don Clausen of California.

"I don't think much lobbying is going to be necessary," Wright said after the four-hour tour. "I believe the President will declare Tarrant County a disaster area. I think the facts so clearly warrant it. It's not a hand-out, it's a help up."

In Central Texas, state rangers began evacuating visitors to Lake Whitney State Park Friday afternoon as the Brazos River continued to rise.

Sherman was isolated from the rest of the world early Friday as water from two local creeks rose up to 6 feet in the streets and all roads leading into town were closed.

More than 250 people were evacuated from nursing homes and apartments in the city of 31,000, where 7 inches of rain fell overnight.

Evidence Points To 8th Recession Since WWII

WASHINGTON (AP) — Evidence is increasing that the nation's economy is in its eighth recession since World War II, economic analysts say.

"We're in a mild recession without much doubt," said private economist Allen Sinai after new government figures showed production by the nation's factories and mines declined last month to the lowest level since July 1980.

The figures, released Friday by the Federal Reserve Board, indicated that the 0.8 percent decline in industrial production in September was fairly broad-based.

Sinai was joined in his forecast of a recession by David Cross, senior economist with Chase Econometrics in Bala Cynwyd, Pa. Both predicted that any recession probably would be mild.

But Michael Evans, a Washington economist, declined to label the current economic weakness a recession, in part because the unemployment rate has not soared.

Two quarters in which the economy contracts are commonly termed a recession. The economy contracted at an annual rate of 1.6 percent in the second quarter, and very preliminary government estimates put the third quarter decline at an annual rate of 0.5 percent. Firmer figures for the third quarter activity, as measured by the gross national product, are scheduled to be released Wednesday.

Jerry Jordan, a member of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, said there is a "high probability" of declining economic activity for the rest of this year.

Jordan said economic activity in the July-September quarter probably declined at an annual rate comparable to the drop recorded in the second quarter, and that the economy might show a somewhat larger decline during the current quarter.

The latest figures on industrial production were not unexpected.

"It's really an acceleration of the August decline," Cross said.

Industrial production fell 0.3 percent in August, following a 0.6 percent increase in July.

The September decline was "still reflecting some of the serious weakness in the economy as far as the housing and auto industries," said Cross. The deterioration in those industries, he said, has spilled over into other areas.

Other recent indicators signaling a recession, according to Sinai, were a rising unemployment rate, higher unemployment insurance claims and declining auto sales and housing starts.

Also, the government reported earlier this week that inventory stockpiles held by American businesses were up 0.7 percent in August as sales fell 1 percent.

The Federal Reserve Board's report on industrial production said reductions were widespread, with sharp declines in durable goods materials.

Urbis To Play Piano At WTC

The Fine Arts Association at Western Texas College will open its 1981-82 season with a performance by Richard Urbis, pianist-composer, at 8:15 Saturday in the Fine Arts Theatre.

Urbis, who has a master's degree from the Julliard School of Music, performed in the 1981 Beethoven Competition in Vienna, Austria, and performed in the 1980 Chopin Competition in Warsaw, both with great audience acclaim. The Beehoven and Chopin works on his program here were performed in those competitions.

Among his many awards are two first places in Texas piano competitions and the Dallas Symphony 1973 performance of his own "Suite for Orchestra."

Urbis is continuing his studies with Jan D. Drath at Texas A&I University and also teaches piano, guitar and organ. He serves as organist-choirmaster for Community Christian Church in Corpus Christi and performs in a continuing series for the Corpus Christi Museum. He has given over 100 solo performances for civic, fraternal and city music groups. A multi-talented performer, he also enjoys pop and jazz and does perform non-classical music at restauranta and clubs. He was the accompaniest for "Sing Out-Up With People" in 1970.

Fine Arts Association members may loan their cards to friends for any of the performances and may bring guests by paying an additional fee at the door. If members wish to be certain they can be seated with their guests, they should call the fine arts office at 573-8511, extension 234, to make arrangements in advance.

Persons who would like to join the association are invited to call the fine arts office for information.

The second program in the series will be the WTC theatre department production of "Whose Life Is It, Anyway?" on Nov. 20-23.

By BILL McCLELLAN

Snyder's Tigers broke a half-season drought here last night with a good offensive effort and strong defensive play to defeat arch-rival Lamesa High School, 28-7 in a 2-4A matchup.

Snyder picked off three passes, recovered two fumbles and worked from some great field position in the first half. The Tigers didn't get as many gifts in the final two quarters, but kept the field position - a key factor in the outcome.

In fact, Snyder enjoyed such good field position that head coach George Byerly noted after the game, "I felt like we should have put more points on the board. It wasn't the best Snyder team I've seen out there all year - we had a lot of breakdowns - but we're very happy with the win. It's nice to come into a dressing room after a game and have everybody happy for a change," he grinned.

The score indeed could have been worse had it not been for three Tiger turnovers, a couple of missed plays and several key penalties. But no one was gripping.

"You've got to be doing some things right in order to win," said Byerly. "I think our defense really took it too them and our offense did also, other than a few breakdowns. We've got to get ready for Pecos now, but we're going to enjoy this for a while. It will be a real challenge to see if we can keep going what I hope we got going tonight."

Trey Harlin's one-handed pass interception on the Lamesa 19-yard line got Snyder in motion midway through the first half. Raymond Jeffrey broke free to the 1-yard line on first down, and carried over the initial Tiger TD one play later. Kerry Echols' first of four conversion kicks was good, and with 7:01 left in the opening quarter, Snyder led 7-0.

But Lamesa came right back. Running backs Steven Alexander and Steven Archer slashed through the line with a vengence as the Golden Tornadoes romped for 76 yards in 11 plays. The score came on a fourth-down run of one yard by quarterback Sam Hansard with 3:14 left. Rusty Ratliff kicked the PAT.

Lamesa never really threatened after that point, however. Aided by some good pressure from the line, Snyder's secondary was able to keep the Tors' highly-touted passer, Hansard, in check.

Neither team moved on its next possession, and a Snyder march of 39 yards ended at the Lamesa 20 when Hansard, also playing safety for the Tors, intercepted a Brent Beck-to-Curtis Gafford pass that misfired.

But Snyder regained good field position on the next series when Tiger senior Ronnie Lindsey sacked Hansard at the 3-yard line and forced a punt. A six-yard runback of the short boot gave Snyder operating room at the 18-yard line, and four plays later the Tigers scored.

Jeffrey took it over again from a yard out, with 5:20 left in the game. Echols tacked on the 14th point produced from the drive, which was highlighted by an 11-yard Beck-to-Gafford completion.

Snyder's third TD of the night came just 1:08 later. After the kickoff, Lamesa was held to a third-and-six situation. Hansard eyed a receiver near the sidelines, but David Miller intercepted for the Tigers and dodged tacklers for 32 yards to score. Again Echols booted the conversion, giving the hosts a 21-7 lead at halftime.

Almost all of Snyder's second-half possessions began in Lamesa territory, but Lamesa defenses held the Tigers at bay until 8:09 of the fourth quarter. Snyder had given up the ball twice after failing to convert on fourth down situations, and reached the Tor 6-yard line before fumbling on a first-and goal play.

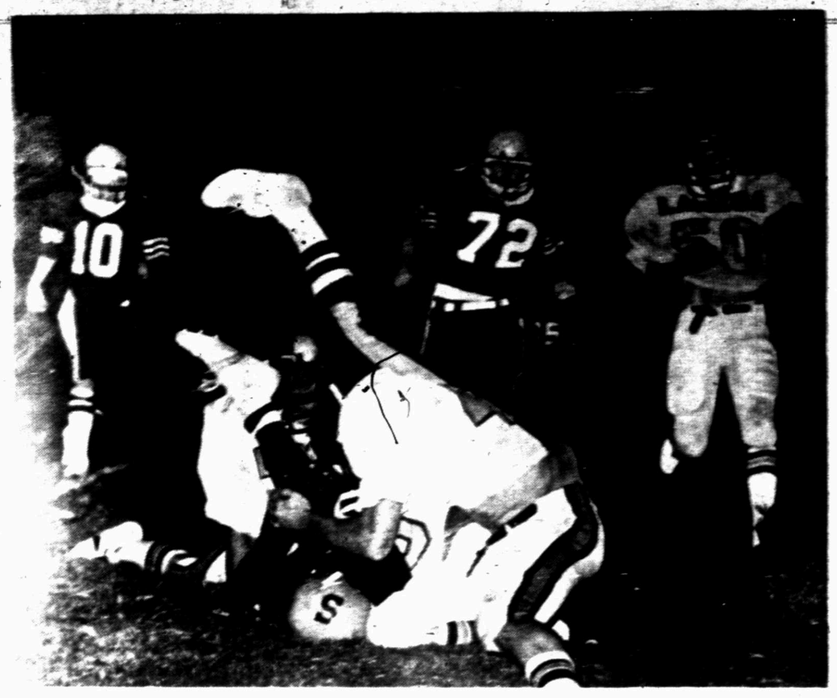
But the Tigers didn't get discouraged. After regaining real estate at the 39 from another poor punt, the hosts went to work. Beck hit Michael Luera over the middle for 11 yards to the 28-yard line on first down, and Norman Malone broke free for 13 yards on the next play. A carry by Mark Shaw didn't get the necessary blocking, but Beck zipped it to Gafford on the next effort, and the senior end wrestled his way over the goal line for a fourth Snyder touchdown. Echols tapped up the PAT, for the final, 28-7 score.

"We probably should have used that play more," said Byerly of the quick-striking pass play that worked all night for Snyder. "We thought it would work against them and it did. But we wanted to just get out there and drive the ball through them."

Snyder's last possession began in Tiger territory, but stopped at the opponent 31, when the hosts were hit with a penalty. Lamesa then made a desperate march to put points on the board, but was stopped short on Miller's second interception of the game.

Chad Peterson, David Delce and Darrell Robertson each recovered one fumble in the contest.

Jeffrey was Snyder's leading ballcarrier with 96 yards on 21 carries. Malone had 50 yards on eight carries and Delce had 33 yards on 3 totes.



HARD LICKS – Snyder's Norman Malone is upended by a pair of Lamesa tacklers, including Mike Shafer (45) after a pickup of four yards. Also shown are Brent Beck and Darrell Robertson for Snyder, and Johnny Stone (10) for the Tornadoes. Snyder got the best of the visitors, winning its first game of the season 28-7. Borden County Wins 52-26...

Coyotes Howl At Homecoming

GAIL – Borden County got five players in on the scoring act to thrill homecoming fans in a 52-26 victory over Grady here Friday – the Coyotes' fourth straight win after an 0-2 start.

The victory left the hosts at 4-2 for the season and 2-0 in district play. Borden takes on Hermleigh, a victor over Ira Friday, next week.

"This was a good win for us because it was against the team that beat us last year and started our problems," said Coach Randy Roemisch, whose Coyotes started off well in 1980, but then faltered after losing to the Wildcats. "We still haven't reached our potential yet, but I'll be pleased right now if we can keep gaining. We don't want to let up."

The scoreboard would indicate the Coyotes didn't let up Friday night. Borden scored 12 in the first period and 16 points in each of the second and third quarters to take a 44-20 lead. It was 52-20 before Grady scored on the last play of the game to trim the margin.

All-district player Jym Rinehart accounted for four touchdowns in the game, and got the Coyotes rolling with a 5-yard scamper in the first quarter.

Grady answered on a 25-yard pass from Lynn Key to Jay Billingsley, but the Coyotes came right back on a 10-yard toss from Darrell Green to Jr. Benavidez, 12-6.

Borden County then began to take control of the scoreboard as Mike Peterson scored on a 5-yard run and Green found Glen Gray on a 7-yard scoring toss. Jr. Benavidez kicked both PATs to make the total 26-6.

Grady got six points in the period on a 7-yard run by Key.

Rinehart went to work in the second half, scoring on runs of 3 and 9 yards in the third period and on a 2-yard scamper in the fourth. Benavidez kicked all three conversion attempts.

Grady put up its final points on a 70-yard kickoff return by Joe Rodriquez in the third period and a last-play, 4-yard run by Rodriquez in the fourth. Fred Garza booted one PAT good.

Halftime ceremonies presented Lisa Smith as the homecoming queen, Roxie Wolf as football sweetheart, Glen Gray as football beau and Terri Moreno as band sweetheart.

Plunkett: From Great To Goat

by The Associated Press

Just about a year ago, a quarterback named Jim Plunkett began a National Football League odyssey that would wind up with him leading the Oakland Raiders to the world championship.

This Sunday, that same Jim Plunkett will be sitting on the Raiders' bench, watching a second-year quarterback named Marc Wilson call signals for the suddenly scoreless Super Bowl titlists, who host the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

The Raiders have been shut out the last three weeks and their 2-4 record places them fourth in the American Conference West. The last team to be blanked three weeks in a row was the 1943 Brooklyn Dodgers.

"After a while, you start wondering if you'll ever get in the end zone," said Wilson, who'll be making his first start in the NFL. "Then you start pressing."

Oakland has gained a total of 529 yards in the losses to Detroit, Denver and Kansas City. And the Bucs, who are 4-2 and tied with Minnesota for the top spot in the National Conference Central Division, have allowed a total of 30 points in their last three contests - all wins.

"The Raiders still have a good football team, with many outstanding players," said Bucs Coach John McKay. "Their streak just shows that anything can happen in this league."

On Monday, it will be Chicago at Detroit.

While the Raiders are on a roll backwards, the Philadelphia Eagles and Minnesota Vikings are two of the hottest teams in the NFL. The defending NFC champion Eagles are the league's only unbeaten team and they'll put their 6-0 record on the line against the Vikings, who have overcome an 0-2 start with four consecutive victories.

"I'm very excited about being 6-0," said Eagles Coach Dick Vermeil. "It's the first time the Ealges have ever been 6-0 and now we have an opportunity and a challenge to go 7-0.

The Vikings edged San Diego 33-31 last week on Rick Danmeier's field goal as time ran out. That doesn't make them any more comfortable about playing Philadelphia.

"I guess you'd have to call this out of the frying pan and into the fire," said Minnesota Coach Bud Grant.

Washington lost its first five games before finally reaching the win column last week against Chicago.

Rams Ready For Cowboys

DALLAS (AP) - Los Angeles Coach Ray Malavasi admits he gets a special charge out of going against the Dallas Cowboys.

"I'm always excited to play the Cowboys," says Malavasi. "It's a great challenge to the team and to me personally. They are well coached."

Sunday night's National Football League game between the Rams and Cowboys is also a rather large challenge for Dallas.

The Cowboys have been put in the position of having to rebound against the Los Angeles Rams or watch the Philadelphia Eagles run away with the National Conference Eastern Division title.

The unbeaten Eagles are 6-0 two games ahead of the 4-2 Cowboys, beaten 45-14 by San Francisco last week.

Not since St. Louis blanked the Cowboys 38-0 in 1970 had they experienced such humiliation.

The Rams (4-2) are tied with Atlanta in the NFC West. They have won four in a row including last week's 37-35 win over the Falcons after opening with two losses.

The oddsmakers have made the Cowboys four-point favorites to bounce back in the nationally televised (ABC) matchup at 7 p.m. in Texas Stadium.

Injured Ram quarterback Pat Haden will be available to start after suffering a leg injury against the Falcons.

It was first feared that Haden had suffered a broken leg but it was later diagnosed as only a contusion.

"Haden is ready to play," says Malavasi.

Backing up is Jeff Rutledge, who came off the bench to throw two touchdown passes against the Falcons.

The Cowboys-Rams series is deadlocked 8-8. The most recent meeting was Dallas' 34-13 NFC Wild Card triumph last Dec. 28 in Texas Stadium.

The Cowboys will be without center Robert Shaw, who underwent knee surgery earlier this week.

Couples Leads At Pensacola

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) - Fred Couples fired a second-round 65 for a 133 total to take the lead at the midway point of the $200,000 Pensacola Open.

Ed Fiori had a second-round 66, while Howard Twitty shot a 67, to share the second spot at 134.

We all have many choices when it comes to assuming certain common risks. We can personally assume such risks as business loss, mediocre food in a restaurant or bodily injury by an automobile or we can spread the risk among many by the purchase of insurance. Insurance deals only with economic risks. Its purpose is to assume the risk of economic loss. If a loss can be prevented or is small enough to budget, insurance may not be the wisest course. It is only when losses can be large that insurance becomes an important way to handle them.

IRA -- Dennis Jones got three touchdowns and his teammates added some generous helpings as the Hermleigh Cardinals defeated Ira in District 2-A six-man action here Friday evening, 66-20.

The Cardinals raised their record to 2-5 on the season, 1-2 in conference play, while Ira fell to 1-6 and 0-3. Next weekend Hermleigh plays Borden County while Ira travels to Highland.

Ira's James Crowder opened the scoring here Friday, plunging over on a 2-yard run in the first quarter. Hermleigh retaliated to take the lead for good moments later however when Kenny Riley scored from a yard out and Jones hit Darrell Nachlinger on a 1-point conversion toss, 7-6.

Hermleigh the began to stretch out the lead as Jones scored on a 4-yard run and Kevin Roemisch connected with Riley on a 33-yard pass play. Mike Nachlinger booted both of the conversions for a 22-6 lead.

Ira came back to close the game somewhat when Jeff Kellner scored on an 8-yard run, but Jones broke the game open with TD sprints of 8 and 26 yards. Mike Nachlinger added the two-point conversion kicks, giving the score a 46-12 look at halftime.

The Bulldogs' final touchdown of the game came in the third quarter as Kellner found Crowder on a 62-yard pass-and-run play. Crowder then kicked the extra points.

Hermleigh cleaned up as Jones ran the ensuing kickoff the length of the field, 80 yards. Mike Nachlinger's kick was good.

Darren Hughes and Anthony Roa closed out the scoring for the Cardinals, crossing over from 4 and 10 yards out, respectively.

Lead Playoff Series, 2-1...

Expos Top Los Angeles 4-1

MONTREAL (AP) - Outfielder Jerry White's three-run homer in the sixth inning gave the Montreal Expos a 4-1 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers Friday night and a 2-1 lead in their National League Championship Series.

The Expos can clinch a spot in next week's World Series opposite the American League champion New York Yankees by winning one more game in the best-of-five playoff for the National League pennant.

The Expos were to try and clinch the title Saturday behind right-hander Bill Gullickson, while the Dodgers were expected to pitch right-hander Burt Hooton, who won the first game of the series.

A fifth game, if necessary, would be played Sunday.

White, who had only three home runs and 11 runs batted in during the strike-split regular season, slammed a 2-1 pitch off Dodgers left-hander Jerry Reuss with Gary Carter and Larry Parrish on base, snapping a 1-1 tie.

White, a switch-hitter who bats naturally from the right side, made a winner of right-hander Steve Rogers, who has allowed just two runs in his last 36 innings.

Rogers allowed seven hits, struck out five and walked one as he won his third game in baseball's postseason competition.

Rogers beat Steve Carlton twice as the Expos took the Philadelphia Phillies 3-2 in the best-of-five miniseries for the East Division championship.

This was the first championship series played in Canada, but conditions were not as frosty as some had feared. The gametime temperature was 46 degrees.

The Dodgers took a 1-0 lead in the fourth. Dusty Baker led off with a single to left and advanced to third on Steve Garvey's single to right. Ron Cey grounded to third, with Baker scoring as Larry Parrish made the play on Cey at first.

The Expos had only three hits, all after two outs, off Reuss before they erupted with their big sixth inning.

Even then, Reuss retired the first two batters.

Learned Lesson Of Life

EDITOR'S NOTE — Think of Tennessee Williams plays and the image of actress Maureen Stapleton pops up. Of course, her career is far more diversified than that, including movies and television as well as other stage roles. Here, she talks about her professional career — and her "real" life.

By KEN RAPPOPORT
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Maureen Stapleton, animated, hazel eyes glittering, stamps into her dressing room, towels her short-cropped white hair, pulls herself together in a striped, zip-up housecoat, lights a cigarette, looks you straight in the eye and tells you about the most important lesson she ever learned about life in the theater.

"When I was a teenager," she says in her throaty voice, "I was in a class with a girl who wanted to play Saint Joan very badly. I mean, it was like life and death with her! And it just bothered me so because I thought: Gee, it's going to be tough enough to get a job. But if you give yourself the extra handicap of wanting something that much, it would kill you if you don't get it.

"I don't want that. I just want to work. I would certainly like nice parts and good writers and all that. But I never had a favorite part I 'had' to do."

For an actress who never aspired to anything special, Maureen Stapleton certainly has done all right for herself.

From the tempestuous Serafina in Tennessee Williams' "Rose Tattoo" and the powerful lead in Neil Simon's "Gingerbread Lady" to choice television roles such as "Queen of the Stardust Ballroom" and her present Birdie Hubbard in "The Little Foxes," her work has been as rich and deep as it has been diversified.

And recognized as well for its quality.

Miss Stapleton won Broadway's Tony Award for "Rose Tattoo" and "Gingerbread Lady" and has been widely acclaimed for many of her other parts, applauded by her peers as much as by the audience.

"I've been very lucky," she points out, noting that Williams and Simon — two writers known to create juicy roles for women — have played a big part in her work.

"I just do my work," she says. "There's nothing romantic or glamorous about it; it's a job. You can't expect magic. Oh, it starts out very romantic. But then it becomes a profession ... a different profession, that's all. The work itself is very interesting, like why you get a laugh here and not there, or what you do to get it back when you lost it. You know, the technical things. It's fun to find things like that. The surprises are interesting, but the rest of it is work."

As fine as Miss Stapleton's career has been, it's had its pitfalls, too.

Miss Stapleton finds stage work "wearing," but this particular show has generally been less strenuous, she says, since "the whole burden isn't on me." She alludes, of course, to the lion's share of the attention given to the show's acknowledged star, Elizabeth Taylor, who is making her first stage appearance after a storied career in films.

Miss Stapleton's stage success has not been without its consequences. She has gone through two broken marriages and licked a drinking problem along the way. On her dressing room mirror is taped a faded, 25-year-old picture of her two children, a boy and a girl. She works at her private life, although trying to balance it with a stage career is extremely difficult. Visits back home are infrequent, she says, because of the demands on her time.

Although she admits some affection for and identification with Williams and Simon characters, Miss Stapleton professes no favorites among her diverse roles.

"You can't think of favorites or anything like that," she says, "because then you'll always be wishing you were doing something else. Once you've done them, you have to put the roles out of your mind, like children who have left home. They're gone, that's all. Then you go on to other things.

"I never think in terms of, you know, am I happy with my work. I think in terms of ... just keep going. I don't have any ultimate goal. I just want to keep working. Not very romantic, I admit, but that girl who wanted to play Saint Joan really scared me. That really straightened me out. Whatever dreams of glory I may have thought, there was no way I wanted that. There's no way I wanted a role so badly that it would kill me if I didn't get it.

"There are too many in life."

Government Wins Vote Of Confidence

ROME (AP) — Italy's government easily won a parliamentary vote of confidence by a vote of 351-48 with 170 abstentions.

Premier Giovanni Spadolini, who leads a five-party coalition, asked for the Tuesday vote as a procedural measure to block obstructionism by the small, left-wing Radical Party. The premier resigns if he loses a confidence vote.

The vote took place on a measure to increase government contributions to political parties from $36 million to $66 million. The Radicals proposed more than 300 amendments to the bill to bog it down. They said parties should receive television time and other services instead of money.

The ruling coalition includes Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Republicans and Liberals.

Doctor Still Trying To Stamp Out Polio In Other Countries

By PETER MUELLO

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Dr. Albert Sabin, the discoverer of oral polio vaccine, is still going strong at 75 in his crusade to stamp out polio, and he cites Brazil as an example for other disease-ridden tropical countries to follow.

Sabin recently sat down with The Associated Press here to evaluate the success of his lifelong campaign against the dreaded children's disease — and to talk about his plans for the future.

"The problem of eradicating certain diseases remains a challenge," the American scientist admitted. "For example, only in the past five years have we come to know how much more polio there really is, especially in the tropics."

But he added, "It's just a question of finding the right strategy, the right tactics."

Sabin's strategy certainly worked in Brazil. In August he led the second annual mass vaccination campaign against polio, which used his revolutionary distribution plan. The program mobilized nearly 400,000 non-professional volunteers and brought the vaccine to 16.4 million children under 5 throughout this continent-sized country.

Sabin said he would urge the World Health Organization to bring representatives of other tropical countries where polio is a problem to Brazil, to learn how this country ran its campaign.

"If Brazil, with its huge area, can get organized, the other countries can learn," he said.

Sabin has special ties to this South American nation. His wife is a Brazilian. And his frequent visits here have made his portly white-bearded figure familiar to everyday citizens, who stop him on the street and thank him for his efforts on behalf of Brazilians.

But Sabin's work has taken him all over the world, ever since he started researching polio as a medical school graduate in 1931.

During World War II, as a member of a U.S. surgeon general's team, Sabin traveled to war zones in North Africa, the Pacific and the Far East.

HOME DESIGN
By Larry Farnsworth

This beautiful home will give you the dream house feeling all the way. Just see what a lovely, highly livable plan it offers its fortunate owners.

The dramatically beautiful exterior of this fine model encloses a total living area of 2,215 square feet — all of it designed to provide you and your family with the most delightful good living!

The entry foyer alone is enough to convey the drama and excitement of this intriguing plan. Its impressive, free standing circular stairway leads delightfully to the second story, all of it dramatically visible thanks to the open, two-story plan of this area.

Arches on the left lead to the big living room with its wide-hearthed fireplace, flanked by romantic French doors. Beyond it a pleasant dining room offers a perfect setting for relaxed, formal meals.

The kitchen and diffing nook area shows how beautifully this plan accommodates every homeowner need. Note that separate pantry and the big, basically L-shaped arrangement of bountiful cabinets and counters.

The large, lovely family room, stretching a good 21½ feet, gains extra dimensions through its two-story appeal as well as through the outdoor vistas disclosed by the double French doors at its far end. And the service area — including a rear entry and laundry-utility room as well as a half bath — adds practicality. Note, too, the attached carport.

On the second floor a walkway from the delightful master bedroom leads to a charming roof garden. And grouped along the balcony-style walkway are another two bedrooms with a pleasantly "shareable" corner bath. Note, too, the lavishly appointed master bedroom dressing area. It is graced with many mirrors, a delightfully long wall vanity and a pair of huge closets. And, of course, the accompanying bath is totally delightful.

A basement option is offered with entry at the cloak closet under staircase. An 18' x 20' garage plan is also offered as an option.

National Tole Painting Week Is October 18-24

October 18-24 has been set as National Tole Painting Week.

The National Society of Tole and Decorative Painters is made up of a rare collection of some 15,000 members, spread all across the United States and Canada.

Anyone can join the Society. Members range from beginning painters and decorative artists to manufacturers and distributors of paint supplies and tole ware. Men and women, young and old alike, have found an exciting and educational life in the creative world of tole and decorative painting.

Two levels of certification may be achieved through the Society, Certified Degree and Certified Master. Awards are presented to those whose work passes the requirements.

The NSTDP was organized on October 22, 1972 with 22 members. Today the Society boasts a phenomenal growth rate and rare enthusiasm among its members.

Tole painting is a revival of an old art form. "Tole" is a French word meaning "sheet iron." Some of our earliest examples were from Connecticut in the 1740s. The tin peddler of yesteryear found that his tinware sold better with the addition of colorful designs. Brightly painted articles were a refreshing change to dress up otherwise dismal kitchen areas. Peddlers developed their own techniques of painting, making use of meager supplies available.

Tole and decorative painting can be very exciting. There is virtually no limit to the objects you can decorate — wood, tin, canvas, glass, or fabrics. It has become increasingly popular this last year with more and more ladies taking classes and workshops.

A number of local women are presently involved in Tole classes being taught by Sherry Hodnett at This 'n' That. Sherry has been teaching tole painting for five years and has studied under numerous teachers and attends workshops regularly.

Barbara Bills, who has been teaching for eight years and has extensive training and attends workshops, is also offering classes in advanced and beginner tole painting to be held at This 'n' That.

An effort is being made to form a local Tole chapter and anyone interested in joining may pick up a membership form at This 'n' That.

If your summer exercise routine includes jogging, don't make the mistake of stretching before you've started to run. It's much better to jog for a few minutes to give your muscles a chance to warm up a bit. Then stretch for three to five minutes. Warming up this way can help you resist injury by making your muscles more pliable.

BEEF TURNOVERS

They have a Jamaican filling.

Pastry, see recipe
¾ pound ground beef
Medium onion, finely chopped
¾ teaspoon salt
¾ teaspoon curry powder
½ teaspoon dried thyme
Pepper to taste, preferably generous
1-3rd cup fine saltine cracker crumbs
½ cup water

Make up Pastry. In a 10-inch skillet over moderate heat cook together the remaining ingredients, except the crumbs and water, crumbling with a fork until beef loses its red color. Stir in the crumbs and water; cool. On a pastry cloth with a stockinet-covered rolling pin, roll out one portion of the pastry to an 8-inch square; cut into four 4-inch squares. Divide ¼ of the meat filling into 4 equal portions; place a portion toward the center of each pastry square; fold over edges to meet; seal with fork tines; prick tops. Place slightly apart on an ungreased jellyroll pan. Treat remaining pastry and filling the same way. Bake in a preheated 425-degree oven until browned — 15 minutes. Serve hot. Makes 16.

Pastry: Cream 1 cup (two ¼-pound sticks) butter with two 3-ounce packages cream cheese and ½ teaspoon turmeric; gradually work in 2 cups all purpose flour until blended. Shape into a flat square, wrap in saran and chill. Divide into 4 equal portions; work with one at a time, keeping the others chilled.

Reflects Social Change...

Lingerie Styles Keep Pace With Lifestyles

By HEIDI NOLTE

NEW YORK (AP) — From restrictive white cotton undergarments in the 1920s to sensual primrose peepers in the '80s, lingerie has reflected social change throughout the decades, says a woman who has been associated with the industry for almost a quarter of a century.

"It's interesting how the movement in intimate apparel from function to fashion mirrors changes in our society," says Ruth Hirschberg, senior vice president and fashion director of Kayser-Roth Corp.'s Intimate Apparel division.

"Real fashion, as a whole, happens in today's living world," she says. "What people are wearing, what the economic conditions are like, whether there is peace or threatening war clouds — all have something to do with what will happen in the intimate apparel fashion world in the future.

"Economics, in particular, have dictated a major change in fashion trends," she points out. "One can't afford to buy a new wardrobe every season. Prices are just too high. Today you can wear what still looks good and add something new to your wardrobe. There are the more important or additional looks, instead of a complete reversal of style as in olden days.

"And we have to make the right things to go under the clothes that'll be in style next year. That's where the fashion industry is at now."

Changes in intimate apparel have followed changes in social attitudes, notes Ms. Hirschberg, who has monitored fashion and design for the past 24 years.

"The Jazz Age of the 1920s brought the demise of the traditional corset," she says. This was the first step in a series of fashion trends designed "to release the body from unnatural restraints; to let the body relax and breathe. The new designs allowed women to discover their own natural shape," she explains.

Subsequent years saw other intimate apparel fashion changes as well. The lacy, ornate look of the previous era gave way to "scandalously flattering" items such as the sexy nightgown.

"Wives selected sleepwear in patterns and designs they would not have permitted their husbands to see only a few years earlier," she points out.

Color-coordinated lingerie arrived in the 1950s and lighter, softer, easy-care fabrics came into vogue in the 1960s, she says.

"The sexual revolution of the late 1960s, however, brought the intimate apparel industry into sharp focus," Ms. Hirschberg notes. "Women's liberation was the age of body liberation as well, when women rejected the formal look of many undergarments. They began to shop for clothes that were body flattering and the new designs began to reflect the growing sexual awareness of women."

The 1970s found large numbers of former "hausfraus" emerging on the professional work scene, and lingerie kept in step with the changing concept of women's roles.

"Today there seems to be a most definite feeling that women have arrived at the work scene and are here to stay," she says. "They feel more comfortable and more secure in the professional world. Women no longer need the tailored executive suit to show their male coworkers that they mean business."

Adds Ms. Hirschberg, "Even if women do wear a tailored suit, the idea of wearing feminine lingerie underneath gives them a boost."

And as for advertising — "it isn't until you see a fashion item, that you want it," she says. "It is our job and the store's to keep tempting the customer with new looks. If they don't want new looks, we don't have a business."

And to bring those new looks to the public, the industry has to advertise. Just as intimate apparel fashion trends changed, their advertising did as well. At the end of the last century, figures weren't seen in advertisements.

"Undergarments were unmentionable then, and the industry had to be discreet when it advertised," says Philip Simon, president of the Kayser-Roth Intimate Apparel division.

"During the 1950s and '60s, however, advertising in general became more expressive, more daring," Ms. Hirschberg explains. And today, she says, you can't look at any advertisement, whether it be for soft drinks or suntan lotion, without seeing some sexual connotation.

"Intimate apparel advertising followed these same developments during the sexual revolution and sexual freedom of the late 1960s," she notes, adding it is no longer daring but quite acceptable to depict in ads a voluptuous woman draped in skimpy undergarments.

CHANGING TIMES—Modest bloomers were as much a part of a woman's wardrobe in the 1920s as sensual nylon intimate apparel is today. This 1923 ad for Kayser Italian silk underwear is conservative as compared with the daring ads seen today.

"Star Struck" Is About Hollywood

STAR STRUCK — By Linda Palmer. Putnam. 299 Pages. $13.95.

"Star Struck' is about life in Hollywood.

It's life on the fast track, where everything is power, money and sex. The heroine, Abby Tyler, marries a talent agent who becomes the head of a motion picture studio. Abby is young, beautiful and a talented writer. She also is innocent. And if she is criticized for being too innocent, it must be remembered that not everyone is born into the world hardnosed and "street smart."

The trouble with Abby is that she is too passive. She realizes her husband is headed for trouble in Hollywood, but she remains in the background, keeping her worries to herself. She has conflicts about her marriage and her love for another man. But she does nothing to resolve these conflicts.

She wants to write movie scripts, but her husband objects, so she tells him she is taking tennis lessons and writes in secret, under a false name. When one of her ideas is purchased by her husband's film studio, she can't find the courage to tell him she is the author. This deception later contributes to her husband's downfall and destruction.

Stories about life in Hollywood have been written before, and will be written again.

But Linda Palmer's tour of the film studios' back lots, the extravagant mansions and the exclusive Rodeo Drive boutiques is lively and interesting. In describing life in L.A., she seems amused, not embittered.

From Women's Movement...

Alix Shulman Gets New Lease On Life

By CAROL DEEGAN

NEW YORK (AP) — In the late 1960s, Alix Kates Shulman wrote a controversial article called "The Marriage Agreement."

"It's really funny thinking back on it now, because at the time it was inconceivable for many, many people that a man should do a dish without destroying his manhood, and I had the audacity to suggest in this agreement that we split the housework and the child care 50-50, that was all. Nothing about sex, nothing about money, and it was scandalous," Ms. Shulman recalled in a recent interview.

Ms. Shulman was born in Cleveland. She attended Western Reserve University and then moved to New York City to study philosophy and mathematics at Columbia University's graduate school. She married and became the mother of two children.

"I was fortunate to be in on the women's movement from the very beginning and it changed my life in a lot of ways," she said. "Before that, in the middle '60s, I had the sense that I had done it, that was it. I had gotten married, had my children and that was it. And then with the great excitement of the new idea of feminism, I began to see it didn't have to be the end."

In 1972, her first novel, "Memoirs of an Ex-Prom Queen," was published and became a best seller. It depicted the fate of a white, middleclass girl who grew up to womanhood in the 1950s, trying to be everything that an ideal woman was expected to be before the women's movement — prom queen, beautiful wife and devoted mother — only nothing worked out as expected.

Ms. Shulman said she had begun writing short stories and children's books after her youngest child had entered nursery school. But she said the women's movement gave her the confidence to persist in "that isolated and arduous work of writing."

Ms. Shulman wrote two books on the anarchist-feminist Emma Goldman. Her second novel, "Burning Questions," published in 1978, was the story of a self-styled rebel who was finally transformed in the late 1960s by radical feminism.

The main characters of her latest novel, "On the Stroll," are a pimp, a teenage prostitute and a shopping-bag lady.

"Bag ladies are actually homeless women who must carry their possessions with them either because they have no place else to put them, because they're literally without a home, or they can't leave anything that matters to them behind in their rooms because they'll be stolen," Ms. Shulman said.

"All kinds of women end up bag ladies and you also understand that they're just people who are poor and are down on their luck. They could be anybody, really, class, education, these things don't seem to make a whole lot of difference," she said.

"I'm not trying to suggest that everybody is on their way to being a bag lady, although that does seem to be a contemporary myth that has entered the consciousness," she said. "Now that the traditional protections that women have had in families, now that they're undergoing enormous changes, are under attack, really, people are scared about what's going to happen to them since the traditional protections are no longer reliable."

As for the prostitute, Ms. Shulman said there were thousands and thousands of 16-year-old girls across the nation who had run away from home, "and when you think about a female runaway's options, it's very difficult to know what all she can do except to go to the street."

The setting for "On the Stroll" is the Times Square section of New York City. Ms. Shulman, who worked for nearly three years writing and researching her novel, volunteered for a program that provided a coffee hour, once a week, for New York bag ladies. She interviewed youngsters who were brought into the offices of New York's Runaway Squad, and also came to realize the pimp "was as much maligned and stereotyped and mythologized as the bag lady and the prostitute."

ALIX KATES SHULMAN

Ms. Shulman said, "I want my readers to understand that these characters, these people, the bag lady, the prostitute and the pimp, are people just like the rest of us. What's different is the circumstances. But there's nothing depraved about their lives.

"Another thing I wanted to show was that for all three of these people, they have images of a much different and better life. They don't want to be hustling and grubbing."

Ms. Shulman is now at work on a new novel, in addition to her lectures and college workshops on fiction writing.

BROILED CHICKEN
It's a spicy version.

3-pound frying or roasting chicken, cut in 10 pieces
¼ cup butter, soft
1 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons dry mustard
2 teaspoons paprika
2 teaspoons curry powder
2 large cloves garlic, crushed

Wash and dry chicken. With a spoon blend butter with the remaining ingredients; spread half of this mixture over underside of chicken and arrange, seasoned side down, in the bottom of a 12 by 9 by 2-inch broiler-proof pan without a rack. Broil 6 to 8 inches from high heat for about 20 minutes. Turn chicken skinside up and spread with remaining butter mixture. Continue broiling, basting once midway, until breast portions are tender — about 10 minutes; remove them and keep hot. Continue broiling remaining chicken, basting once midway, until tender and extremely brown — about 10 minutes longer. Pour drippings in pan over chicken and serve with rice. Makes 4 servings.

Here are some tips for making straight hair look alive. First of all, never layer straight hair; opt for a good blunt cut. The sheer weight of all-one-length hair creates an illusion of fullness. Try using dozens of tiny foam rollers to set your hair — the smaller the roller, the tighter the curl. And don't forget hair-setting gel; it'll keep your curls bouncy hours longer. Another trick is to braid hair while it's still damp. Let it dry thoroughly before you undo it, and you'll have a head full of waves.

WEEDERS GUIDE

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

Home gardeners will soon be able to cultivate potatoes from seed for the first time. In the past, the only way they could grow this vegetable was from potato eyes planted in the spring.

This breakthrough in vegetable gardening was unveiled recently by Pan-American Seed Co., in West Chicago, Ill., when it introduced "Explorer," which it described as the first potato plant grown from true seed to be offered to the home gardener.

Both Explorer seed and Explorer plants grown from true seed will be available for next season's garden, according to G. Carl Ball, president of George J. Ball Inc., parent company to Pan-American.

"We don't quite know why true seed from potatoes has not been offered before, except that there have been certain technical problems in its development," Ball said. "Nature seems somewhat reluctant at times to share her bounty."

More than 30 major seed merchants attended "Explorer Day" activities and participated in the spud digging in the trial field.

In the past, home gardeners have bought "seed potatoes" of their preferred variety at garden shops, cut them into pieces, making sure there were a couple of "eyes" that would sprout in each, and planted them.

To go along with your freezedried coffee, you may soon have doughnuts, cakes, cookies and pancakes made with dryroasted navy-bean flour.

Scientists from Michigan State University and Texas A & M report favorable results from the first year of a three-year study of the commercial potential of milled navy beans used in processed food products.

They are experimenting with a dry-roasting process they consider promising as an energy-efficient, nonpolluting method of making navy-bean flour.

The MSU food scientists have substituted whole navy-bean flour for 30 per cent of the wheat flour in a "master mix" for baking. They report wholebean flour provides an economical source of additional protein in master-mix food products.

Milled navy-bean hulls are also being evaluated as a potential source of dietary fiber. Recent medical studies have linked low levels of fiber to colitis, coronary problems and other so-called "diseases of civilization," MSU noted.

a lesson in egypt

The assassination of Anwar Sadat provided a lesson to the Reagan Administration just five days after its pledge to defend the Saudi monarchy from all enemies, foreign and domestic: That no nation can guarantee the internal security of another for all the gold in Fort Knox, all the AWACS at Boeing, or all the tough talk in the Haig State Department.

Nowhere is that more true than in the Third World, where power is seldom transferred peacefully from one ruler to his successor. Many of these developing nations---only now emerging from long domination by colonial overlords or tribal chieftains---have yet to form governments of laws rather than of men. And understandably so. The English, after whom we patterned our political system, were still beheading one another centuries after the signing of Magna Carta.

That weapons alone cannot impart stability to an unstable ally was aptly illustrated in Iran. The shah was buying U. S. arms at the rate of $4 billion a year at the time he was forced to leave his country. And the shaky Saudis are currently spending $5 billion of their oil wealth annually on military equipment.

Certainly the United States cannot abandon its arms commitments to friendly nations at a moment when this country has for the first time been overtaken by the Soviet Union in the value of its weapons abroad. But we cannot lose sight of the fact that true stability for our allies requires not only a strong military (whose top-of-the-line equipment can all too easily be turned upon its own people, or fall into the hands of the opposition) but a strong dedication to the development of free and representative forms of government.

Our own security as well as that of our allies requires encouraging them in the evolution of broadly based institutions that will survive the loss of a charismatic leader of a zealous cadre. We need not go so far as to insist that they adopt every word of the U. S. Constitution as their own, but we should come down patiently and persistently on the side of free expression, humane and even-handed justice, and governed by the consent of the governed.

Egypt is farther along in this process than most of the developing world. Sadat---for all his recent crackdowns on opposition politicians, journalists and religious leaders---did much to liberalize and democratize the institutions that he inherited from Gamal Abdel Nasser. Reports indicate that power has changed hands in accordance with the constitution and that the broad policies of Sadat will be followed by his successors.

An what of our other major Arab ally? President Reagan has pledged, "Saudi Arabia we will not permit to be an Iran."

The feller on Deep Creek says, "The problem with having a meeting of the minds is that the potential attendance is so very small."

The heavy rains that fell last week in the Abilene and Breckenridge area triggered memories here of the Snyder floods of 1939 and 1972.

Since we've lived in Snyder, we have heard debates about which flood was worst. After watching news accounts of flooding in the area, we contend for anyone to experience a flood is terrible enough to make it the worst.

The Snyder flood of 1972 was before our time in Snyder, but the SDN office still has many evidences of it. Being located just a few yards from Deep Creek, the SDN office and neighboring businesses were victims of the flood.

Some say these are 100 year floods and should not happen again in our lifetime. Nonetheless, those on our staff who were here in 1972 were convenienced that the office and our equipment are vulernable.

In 1972, some four feet of water ran from the back to the front door of the news office. Electronic typesetting equipment, presses, records and files sustained damage. Water marks can still be seen in parts of the office.

We are told that no effort was made to get items up, as those on the staff in 1972 agreed that the creek had never come in the office and still wouldn't.

Now we have a staff of believers. In five years, we have seen the creek over the banks on three occasions. The last time water was lapping at the back door. We now have plans to get electronic equipment up above the potential water level. Still it would be a mess.

Flooding and the force of water can be deceptively dangerous. Also it brings with it health hazards, snake and rodent problems and often the loss of vital utilities.

We grew up on the flat plains of West Texas, and not until we moved to Snyder did we fully understand those usually dry and timid creeks.

Still in the Permian Basin, residents in such places as Midland, Odessa and Andrews can experience a flash flood following a heavy rain because the water has no place to run.

Also, we can remember flash flooding during our Army days in El Paso. Heavy rains on the Franklin Mountains can flood adjacent lowlands. The north part of El Paso is especially vulnerable.

News of the flooding has somewhat overshadowed the economic impact of the heavy rains, but any cotton farmer will tell you the rains were ill-timed.

What is needed now is several weeks of hot, dry weather.

When Jesus fed the multitude, twelve basketfuls were left over because each disciple had a basket. They were made of wicker work shaped like a narrow-necked pot, wider at the bottom, as Barclay explains. The loaves were like rolls and the fish were the size of sardines.

"Then he (Jesus) took the five loaves and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, he blessed them, and brake, and gave to the disciples to set before the multitude. And they did eat, and were filled: and there was taken up of fragments that remained to them twelve baskets." — Luke 9:16-17

at wits end

by erma bombeck

I heard a sermon the other week chastising those of us who sit in the back of the church when there is plenty of room up front.

The point that was made was that if we were attending a Broadway play, we'd pay scalper's prices to sit up front.

If it were a football game, we'd camp outside all night to get a front seat.

If it was a school play in which one of our children had a part, we'd kill to get a seat in the front row.

As I was sitting somewhere between the back door and the parking lot, the sermon made me very uncomfortable. Also quite defensive. It seems every single-issue group in the country is organized and has a spokesman except the back-of-the-church-sitters. Until someone comes along with their own Xerox machine, I'd like to take on the job.

People who sit in the back of the church are the most misunderstood group of people on this earth. Who knows them really?

Basically, we are humble people who believe the meek shall inherit the last parking place...the one that curves around the fire hydrant. It is our penance and we accept it gratefully.

We are people of extraordinary faith who put it on the line, so to speak, and give real meaning to "The first shall be last and the last first."

We are blessed with imagination as we sit from a vantage point that shows us nothing but the backs of heads as we try to imagine if they are as reverent as we are.

We are the caring compassionate people who turn around and say, "Shhhh," when someone is making noise in the hallway and disrupting everyone. We take out stray dogs that wander in and discover they are at the wrong service.

In our humble way, we keep the minister on his toes. If the sermon is of sedative quality, those in front can do nothing about it. We at the back can make a firm statement. It is called walking out.

As a back-of-the-church militant of many years, I find my group is a wonderful class of worshippers. When you're late they never judge or look disgusted when you ask them to move over. They're always ready for the collection plate because they see it coming. Through the miracle of sound they seemingly hear what everyone else hears.

The back-of-the-church people include a lot of handicapped persons who have trouble getting into pews and need a little more room, crying babies, distraught mothers and backsliders who aren't ready for the bright lights yet.

I happen to think that's where God sits...most of the time.

WAHINGTON (NEA)- As the Israelis contemplate the completion of the Camp David peace process without its principal architect, their foremost question is whether they signed a treaty with Egypt or simply wth Anwar Sadat.

The 1979 Camp David agreement is entering its final and most crucial phase. Next April the Israelis are scheduled to turn over to Egypt the portions of the Sinai Peninsula that they have occupied since the 1967 Six Day War. The land to be returned includes air bases and producing oil wells.

In exchange, the Israelis are to get what they have wanted so badly: the complete normalization of relations with Egypt. But Sadat's death will force them to face some hard decisions.

In the hours immediately following the assassination, leaders in both Israel and Egypt said the kinds of things that could be expected under the circumstances.

"In the name of the spirit and soul of our leader and our constitution, we will abide by all treaties and commitments made," said Hosni Mubarak, the Egyptian vice president, when he went on television to announce the death of Sadat.

"As President Sadat would have wished, it (the peace process) will continue despite the efforts of the enemies of peace," echoed Menachem Begin, the Israeli prime minister.

But others in Israel are expressing a lot less optimism and a lot more caution. As former Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan noted, "The assassination put a very big question mark about the continuation of the peace process."

The Israelis know that the new Egyptian government under Mubarak will be under tremendous pressure-both from within Egypt and from other Middle Eastern states-to abandon Israel and rejoin the Arab fold. They know that the peace process has progressed this far almost solely as a result of the will of Sadat. And they doubt that Mubarak's government will be the one-man operation that Sadat's was.

Nevertheless, Mubarak is seen as the key to the new peace equation. The former head of the Egyptian air force is viewed in Israel as a follower of few deep convictions. The Israelis suggest that he will be much more susceptible to political pressure-most of which will be urging him to abandon Camp David.

The Israelis think that it will take time-probably a year or so-to assess the strength and intentions of the new Egyptian government. But time is one thing that they lack with the April 28 return of the Sinai quickly approaching.

What the Israelis fear most is that the Egyptians will continue to say all the right things and to live up to Camp David only until they have the Sinai back. Afterward, the Israelis say, the Egyptians may abrogate the agreement, perhaps using as an excuse the lack of a final resolution to the "Palestinian question" and the West Bank.

This poses a dilemma for the Israelis. They will seem to be backing down if they try to delay the final steps of the Camp David accord. This could lead to the complete unraveling of the peace process.

But if they go ahead before being assured of the long-range intentions and survivability of the Mubarak government, they may end up relinquishing the Sinai and getting little or nothing in return.

Thus, Begin will be under almost as much pressure as Mubarak in the months ahead. Most of Israel's ultra-traditionalist parties view the Camp David agreement with suspicion and will use the assassination to try to halt the peace process. Given the frailty of Begin's majority in the Knesset, this pressure will be hard for the prime minister to withstand now that he does not have Sadat to fall back upon SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Try not to let yourself become involved in commercial situations today in which you lack expertise and know-how. Costly errors are possible.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A failure to show the proper spirit of cooperation today could alienate you from associates whose help you might need. Be a team player.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You may find it easier to talk about what you hope to accomplish today, rather than to do it. It would be better to perform first, boast later.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) It would be marvelous if we could take others at face value. Unfortunately, this is sometimes unwise. Don't let first impressions catch you off-guard today.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be tactful with your mate today about family issues. There's a possibility that something quite trivial could be blown out of proportion.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You may have to deal with some restrictive conditions today which could prevent you from acting as independently as you'd like. Resisting will make matters worse.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Normally you are rather optimistic, but today you might dwell more on the negative aspect of a situation than on its positive ones.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Avoid acquaintances today who tend to impose upon your generous nature. If you must deal with them, have an understanding as to who pays for what.

Your Birthday

October 19, 1981

You will be luckier this coming year in ventures or enterprises which you are able to control, rather than with those which include partners. Don't be afraid to strike out on your own.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Your goals will not be realized today unless you take active steps to accomplish them. Overcome your tendencies to procrastinate. Make yourself move. Romance, travel, luck, resources, possible pitfalls and career for the coming months are all discussed in your Astro-Graph which begins with your birthday. Mail $1 for each to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Be careful today. There is a likelihood you may repeat mistakes similar to ones you made in the past. Try to learn from experience.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You have an inquisitive nature. Normally, friends don't find your curiosity offensive. However, if you ask too many probing questions today it could perturb pals.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You're capable of major accomplishments today, but those with whom you deal may not find too much to admire in your methods. Protect your image.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Your way of doing things today and the way your boss wants things done could be poles apart. It's best to comply with his wishes. He signs the pay check.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Be sure that all of your affairs are in order before you attempt to tell another how he or she should handle things today. Your suggestions may not be welcomed.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Others could butt in today in areas normally your bailiwick, and disrupt your established routines. Try to avoid confrontations.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Work in harmony with coworkers today, not in competition. If each serves his or her own interests, nothing will be accomplished.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Rather than going on a spending spree today, it would be more prudent to seek ways to trim your budget. Funds can be managed better.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be concerned for those in your charge, but don't try to dictate their every move today. Be too demanding and they'll do the opposite of what you request.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Try to give others the benefit of the doubt today. If you expect them to respond in an unfriendly manner, you may unconsciously create conditions to bring this about.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your financial prospects are encouraging today, but you may either take things for granted or fail to recognize opportunities when they occur. Be alert.

Plenty Sign Petitions

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — More than 1 million people have signed petitions asking the dismissal of Interior Secretary James Watt because of his pro-development views, the Sierra Club says.

Larry Williams, coordinator of the Sierra Club's campaign to oust the secretary, announced the petition total Friday in a telephone interview with The Oregonian newspaper in Portland.

"The names are coming in at a rate of about 40,000 to 50,000 a week," Williams said. The Sierra Club has about 235,000 members.

Environmentalists are upset with Watt's proposals on mineral leasing in wilderness areas, national park land acquisition and his stand towards threatened and endangered species.

Blinded Man Refuses 'Crutch'

GRANTS PASS, Ore. (AP) — Although John Malkow is legally blind, he raises cattle and hogs, cuts wood and pilots his boat on the Rogue River.

When an explosion plunged Malkow into a world of darkness 14 years ago, a rehabilitation counselor told him to accept his blindness as a handicap.

"The guy said I should set up a cigarette stand at a federal building," recalled Malkow, 33.

"A lot of people cling to a crutch," Malkow said in an interview. "When I got injured so young, knowing that I had 50 years ahead of me, I decided I didn't want to sit around feeling sorry for myself.

"I'm not handicapped," he says. "I've met people with sight who are handicapped because they refuse to see. Blindness isn't a handicap. Maybe everybody should be blind for 30 days. They'd quit judging people by their appearance."

Malkow can barely see light. Outlines are hazy to him.

He was injured at Fort Lawton in Seattle. Malkow, an Army enlisted man, was in charge of a medical unit.

He walked into a room just as a container of medical chemicals, including caustic silver nitrate, exploded. The reason for the explosion was never determined.

Bits of wood and silver nitrate showered Malkow's face, causing blindness. The chemical imbedded in his skin eventually turned dark blue, coloring his face with splotches.

His oldest daughter, Heidi, was born three weeks after the accident. He and his wife, Anita, have another daughter, Holly, 9. He never has seen his children.

"That first year was the pits," said Malkow, who has had 103 operations on his face and eyes.

His fight for independence was not easy. He used savings to buy the 5½-acre farm near Grants Pass, where he was born. The Malkows use the farm to supplement his veteran's pension.

Malkow knows the farm by feel, but one of his most difficult tasks was learning to drive a tractor.

"I've had the barn door off as many as four times a week," he says with a laugh, while pitching hay.

"If I get lost I get off the tractor and feel my way around," Malkow said.

Moisture Helps Some Farm Lands

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although heavy rains have caused local flooding in Texas, the moisture has benefited winter wheat and livestock pastures over large areas of the southern Plains, the government's Joint Agricultural Weather Facility says.

The report, issued Wednesday, covered the week of Oct. 5-11.

"Rain in the Southeast late in the week disrupted the cotton harvest," the report said. "Several days of dry weather in the Corn Belt helped maturing corn and soybean crops."

In The Oil Patch...

Five Completions Reported In Scurry Fields

Five completions have been reported in Scurry County oil fields this week.

Test recovered 1,283 feet of oil and gas-cut drilling fluid on a drillstem test in the Canyon.

Tool was open one hour and 15 minutes on the test taken at 8,037-52 feet.

ABCO Energy will drill the No. 1 Holmes-Lemley Unit, an 8,300-foot wildcat in Borden County 13 miles east of Gail.

Handicapped Of Japan Seldom Seen Despite Much Publicity

TOKYO (AP) — Even for the able-bodied, Japan's twice-daily commuter rush can be frustrating, even dangerous, as passengers crowd trains and subways to three times their capacity. For the handicapped — especially wheelchair users — it can be a nightmare.

During the United Nations' International Year of Disabled Persons, the handicapped have received wide coverage in the Japanese press, and a recent nationwide 24-hour fund-raising campaign earned 388 million yen ($1.7 million).

But in Japan, the handicapped are rarely seen, hampered from venturing outside their homes by physical and cultural barriers.

Japan's estimated 2 million disabled adults have difficulty finding jobs despite a 1976 law requiring companies with more than 300 employees to hire at least 1.5 percent from the ranks of the disabled. Many companies prefer to pay the 30,000 yen ($130) a month fine for each person below the legal quota.

For those who can find work outside the home, getting there is one of the greatest difficulties.

For example, each day 1.2 million commuters pass through Shinjuku Station, Tokyo's busiest with several subway and rail lines. A steep flight of steps leads to the national railway's Yamanote line, the 21.5-mile loop which encircles Tokyo proper and links dozens of other lines. There is no ramp or elevator for wheelchair users.

Masayoshi Imanishi, 32, who lost the use of his legs when he was 17, began a survey last February of 16 private and national railway lines in Tokyo. At 100 railway stations investigated so far, he found private lines generally better equipped with ramps for wheelchairs and station attendants willing to lend a helping hand. He plans to write a guide to 300 stations.

He said the disabled prefer to avoid rush hour crowds, but since most companies start work at the same time, handicapped people often must leave for work ahead of the 7-9 a.m. crush.

Mitsunobu Katsuya, 33, a muscular dystrophy victim who has used a wheelchair for 13 years, said, "Actually, I like stairs. Before the steps, I contact many people who see my difficulty in reaching the train and understand the problems we wheelchair users have. Many people help me then."

He is a part-time worker for a public office. "Handicapped people in Japan must go into the society — it's the first problem we must solve. Architectural barriers are the next problem. Few handicapped people make an effort to participate in society."

Shoji Nakanishi, injured in a motorcycle accident 12 years ago, said he uses a taxi which can hold his wheelchair when he attends a sociology course at Tokyo University. It meets weekly but he can afford to pay cab fare only once a month.

He works at home, tutoring children in math and typing documents which his wife picks up and delivers.

The anaconda of South America, reaching lengths of 30 feet, is one of the most largest snakes in the world. Only the reticulate python of Asia rivals it in size.

Henderson On SWCD Board

Charlie Henderson of Snyder was elected to the Upper Colorado Soil and Water Conservation District board of directors in an election held Thursday evening in the Northeast Community Center.

Henderson represents Zone 3 of the district.

Henderson, an active vice president of West Texas State Bank, also operates a stocker steer program on some 1,800 acres of farmland in Scurry County.

Henderson also is area chairman of the Cattlemen's Roundup for Crippled Children for the West Texas Rehabilitation Center; chairman of the program building committee of the Agriculture Extension Service, is a past president of the Snyder Chamber of Commerce and a former district chairman of Boys Scouts of America.

He succeeds Carl Williams on the SWCD board.

Henderson is married to the former Anne Lathrop. They have two sons, James 10, and Tommy 5.

As one of five individuals on the board, Henderson will be responsible for district policies and procedures for carrying out the district program within the framework of the Texas Soil Conservation District Law.

Purpose of the district is to promote sound soil and water conservation programs on farm and ranch lands within the district and to serve as a voice for farmers and ranchers on conservation matters and other issues affecting private property rights of landowners.

The board coordinates the conservation efforts of various local, state and federal agencies and other organizations and has authority to enter into working agreements with governmental agencies and private concerns to carry out its objectives.

In Rich-Poor Summit...

Third World Leaders To Seek 'Real Dialogue' With America

NEW YORK (AP) — Third World leaders who face President Reagan at a summit of rich and poor nations this week will try to pull the United States off the sidelines and into a "real dialogue" on the needs of their people, says a leading American expert on developing countries.

The Reagan administration has been "so preoccupied with domestic matters that it hasn't really paid much attention to two-thirds of humanity," says Yale University economist Gustav Ranis.

Ranis is former director of Yale's Economic Growth Center, which has long been in the forefront of research into the underdeveloped world.

In a wide-ranging interview he previewed the issues of the upcoming summit at Cancun, Mexico; questioned the Reagan administration's strong emphasis on private investment as a development tool, and recommended that richer countries make foreign aid an automatic process, rather than go through annual political wars over the issue.

Even if U.S. foreign aid were doubled, Ranis says, it would not require sacrifices by ordinary Americans, who this year spent more than twice as much on cosmetics — $10 billion — as on official economic aid to poorer nations — $4.5 billion.

The two-day "North-South" gathering at Cancun is unprecedented.

Presidents and premiers from eight "northern" industrial countries and 14 "southern" developing countries will meet at the Caribbean resort to discuss the future relationship between the rich and poor nations.

Seven years of North-South conferences have produced volumes of speeches and studies, but little concrete change. The Third World now wants the northern leaders to commit themselves to global negotiations that will take steps toward a "new international economic order."

They say the rules of the world economy favor the rich; they want them changed to favor the poor — a kind of planetary affirmative action.

The poorer countries and their northern advocates call for a sharp increase in financial aid. A special North-South study commission recommended last year that northern nations expand foreign aid to equal 0.7 percent of their gross national products. The figure now in the United States is about 0.3 percent.

The Third World countries also propose new price stabilization and price support schemes to give them a better and more dependable deal on their cotton, copper, coffee and other raw material exports, keystone of their economies.

Among their other proposals, they want the North to open its markets more to their manufactured goods, by lowering tariffs and other protectionist barriers, and to grant them preferential rates on new technology.

The nations of the South argue that "neo-colonialist" industrial nations and multinational companies have used a biased world economic structure to stunt Third World development.

This argument and the argument of some in the North that underdevelopment is rooted in Third World incompetence are both "caricatures," Ranis says.

The Reagan administration has balked at the notion of global negotiations. At Cancun, Ranis says, "I think the most that's being hoped for is to draw the new administration into a real dialogue about the issues.

Since economic worries today make the United States reluctant to increase aid, he says, the emphasis should be on combining "quality" programs with policy changes in developing countries that encourage economic growth.

The Yale economist favors making foreign aid more automatic and longer-term. And if aid levels are guaranteed for longer periods, development programs could be more effective.

"It can't be an annual appropriation, which is what the Congress does, because then the developing countries don't have an assurance of the flow and they can't make the policy changes which require some multiyear increase ... of foreign assistance," he says.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., in a speech to the U.N. General Assembly Sept. 21, underlined the Reagan administration's new theme in overseas development: the pivotal role of private investment.

Rich and poor nations alike "must encourage and support the individual investor," he said.

Critics, Ranis among them, acknowledge that business investment has a large role to play, but they say the poorest countries will not attract it.

Handmade 'Super Bike' Gaining Popularity Despite High Cost

CHEHALIS, Wash. (AP) — It's a far cry from little Johnny's first 10-speed, which rides like a Sherman tank when compared with the bicycles made by Gary Klein.

Klein builds a "super bike." His bicycles start at $3,500. The "show model" sells for $5,100. Frames alone are priced at about $2,300.

His high-performance bikes are handmade. It can take a year to start and finish a frame.

"The high prices haven't discouraged sales. Bikes and frames are snapped up by bike racers and other serious bicyclists.

What makes his bikes so special – and expensive?

Klein has invented a bicycle frame that's lightweight and doesn't bend.

He's overcome the bane of "bottom-bracket flex." This occurs when, through uphill or other hard pedaling, a bike's lightweight frame bends.

That may cause the chain to rub or even spring off the derailleur, the gear changer that shifts the chain from one sprocket to another.

It's easy to build an inflexible frame with heavy materials, but they add too much weight. And weight, when you have to pedal it, slows you down.

Klein began working on the solution while a student at Massachusetts Institute of Technology nine years ago.

A professor organized a project to build a lightweight bicycle frame strong enough to resist flexing.

Klein used a frame of aluminum tubing with a larger diameter than the heavier steel-alloy tubing used in conventional high-quality bicycles. The larger diameter provided rigidity.

It also cut down on the weight, but there were other problems with aluminum frames.

The tubing must be joined by welding, rather than brazing used with steel tubing. So it had to be heat-treated to avoid damage in the welding process.

About five years ago, the technical problems overcome, Klein began building bicycle frames in a shed at his parents' prune farm in Santa Clara County, Calif.

He moved his bicycle works to Chehalis last year because of his difficulties with California state regulations.

The Klein Bicycle Corp. first made a "Team Super," which Klein said was exclusively a racing model. Last year he introduced a touring and racing model for longer-distance racing.

His flex-free bikes look like regular store-bought models, except for their noticeably fatter frames.

Klein doesn't make a track racing bike at the moment. He says there are too few racing tracks in the country.

"I'm selling to bicycle enthusiasts," Klein says when asked his clientele. He estimated 25-33 percent of the buyers are racers.

Another 25 percent who buy "are relatively new to the sport in that their last bike wasn't nearly of this quality, and they're just getting serious at it," Klein says.

"The rest (of the buyers) seem to be people who have always had good bikes. They might think about buying one of my frames for three years before they buy one."

While his custom-dimension frames go for more than $6,000, "we sell very few of those. Our show bike is $5,100. Most are in the $3,500-$4,000 range."

Klein has two employees at the Chehalis shop and an outside painter "who does the final finishing" in Portland, Ore.

The company sold more than 100 frames last year and the business has been growing.

There's a two-month wait once you order a Klein bike.

"That's for most cases," Klein said. "It takes about a year for me to start and finish a frame. This is because of (the steps required, such as) machining, welding, heat treating. Once I get a frame heattreated, it's about two months to finish it on out."

Kuwaitis Are Buying Birds

TORONTO (AP) — Wealthy Kuwaitis are training and paying Arctic Eskimos to capture gyrfalcons, a rare bird species prized in Middle Eastern countries for hunting, a Canadian Wildlife Service spokesman said.

The spokesman, Nick Novakowski said the Kuwaitis were paying the Eskimos $10,000 apiece for the huge birds, which have a wingspan of more than three feet. The Eskimos wanted to trap 400 birds, but the government only gave them permits for 50.

'We're not happy about it, but the gyr is not yet on the endangered list and thus does not have federal protection," Novakowski said. "We've indicated our displeasure to the (Arctic) territories. But the decision was made politically and the government gets its share of revenue for the birds.

Judgment Is Called 'Absurd'

CHICAGO (AP) — A lawyer for Delta Airlines has labeled as "absurd" a jury award of $208,000 to a retired judge and his wife who were bumped from a flight to Florida and missed the birth of a horse.

Former Illinois Supreme Court Justice Thomas Kluczynski and his wife, Melanie, claimed they had suffered "humiliation, indignity and outrage" after being bumped from the flight in February 1976. They had been invited to the Florida farm of Alberto-Culver chairman Leonard Lavin to witness the birth of a horse.

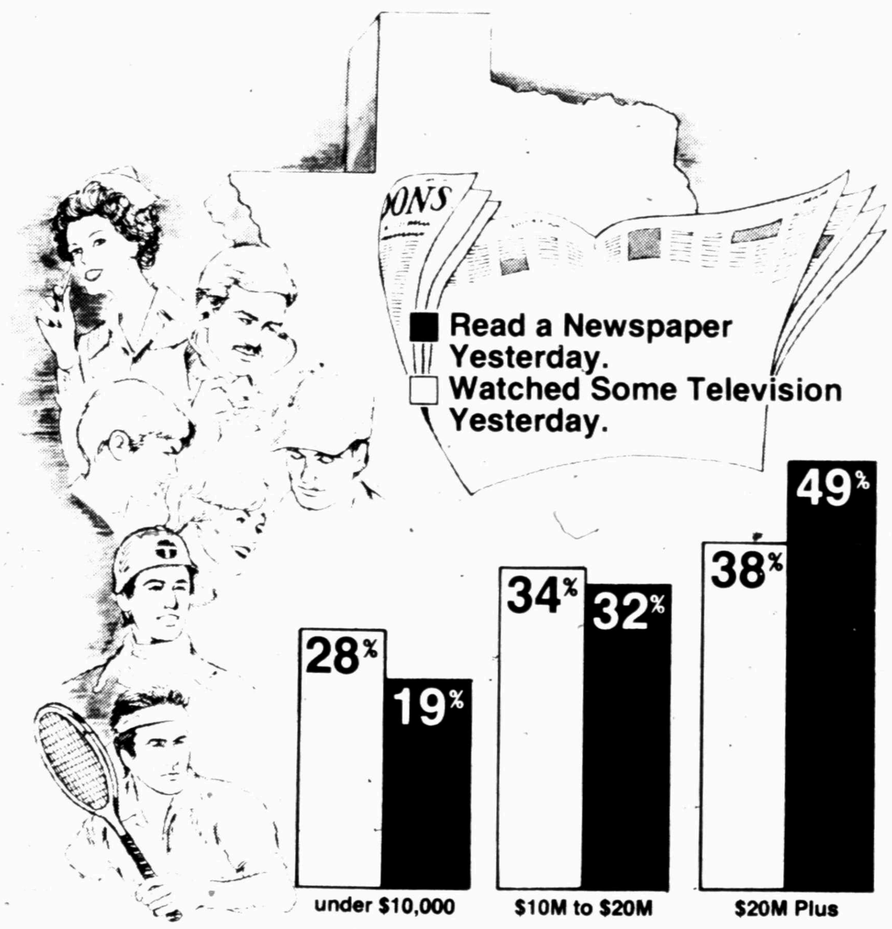
More Texas Adults with Incomes of $20,000 or more Read a Newspaper Yesterday than Watched Television



Most Texas adults read a newspaper yesterday, and most watched some television yesterday. However, almost one-half of all Texas adults with incomes of $20,000 or more — that market with more spendable income — read a newspaper yesterday, while only 38% watched some television.

A recent state-wide study, conducted by Belden Associates of Dallas, suggests that newspaper readership increases as income increases, whereas television viewing decreases as income increases.

Mr. Advertiser, for you to reach your full potential in the Texas market, the daily newspaper is your effective medium.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: You have consistently urged parents to respect their children's privacy and refrain from reading their diaries and letters and from listening in on their telephone conversations. But now that so many very young kids are doing drugs, has your viewpoint changed?

If a parent suspects that his teen-ager is into drugs, doesn't the parent have the right to violate his child's privacy to find out for sure whether his suspicions are warranted or not? And when the parent confronts the child and it becomes obvious that the child's privacy has been violated, then what?

Please comment, Abby. There are a lot of worried parents who need to know.

CONCERNED IN AMARILLO

DEAR CONCERNED: There is a vast difference between invading a teen-ager's privacy in order to read his mail or diary and attempting to learn whether or not a child is involved with drugs.

Involvement with drugs can make the difference between life and death, and parents have an obligation to learn as much as they can by whatever means possible. God will forgive them. And so will the children, eventually.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem that I am sure is common to many parents across the entire nation. My youngest daughter, age 22, a recent graduate from Michigan State University, is living with her fiance, who is also a graduate of M.S.U.

What do I tell all of my friends when they ask me how my daughter is doing? I'm embarrassed to say that she is living with a man without being married.

NAMELESS, NATURALLY

DEAR NAMELESS: When you're asked how your daughter is doing, say, "She's fine, thank you." It's not necessary to disclose her lifestyle.

DEAR ABBY: I am the 23-year-old mother of a beautiful baby boy born out of wedlock. I dated the baby's father only a short while. (I'll call him Glen.) I was in love. Glen was in lust.

The baby is nearly a year old now and Glen has never seen him (his choice). My family has stood by me and I am grateful for their love and understanding. Glen's family does not know me or the situation. They live in another state.

I would like my son to know all his family! Apparently Glen doesn't want his family to know, but I think they have a right to.

Abby, please ask your readers if they were the baby's grandparents on the father's side, would they want to know?

I still love Glen, even if he doesn't want to know me or his child. I don't want to cause any trouble, but isn't this baby just as much his as mine? And aren't his parents just as entitled to know about their grandson as my parents?

RAISING A CHILD ALONE

DEAR RAISING: When your baby is old enough to ask, tell him his father disappeared from your life shortly after the boy was born. (That will be no lie!) And if you seriously do not want to "make trouble," let that be the story's end.

DEAR ABBY: Do you have to show your driver's license to engage in sex in the state of California?

I am a girl, 19 years old, and I met a very handsome fellow who liked me as much as I liked him. On our very first date we felt as though we had known each other all our lives. We admitted a mutual desire to become intimate, but he asked to see my driver's license first. Why? This never happened to me in Nebraska or any other state.

WONDERING IN W. HOLLYWOOD

DEAR WONDERING: He's no dummy. He wanted to be sure you were at least 18 years old, which is the legal age in California.

Shroud Of Ash Conceals Bodies Of Young Girls

MOSES LAKE, Wash. (AP) — A shroud of ash from the eruption of Mount St. Helens hid the bodies of two young women for a year and a half after they were murdered, giving their killer a long head start to flee authorities.

The bodies of hitchhikers Marsha Ann Weatter, 18, and Katherine Jean Allen, 20, each with one gunshot wound, were found by pheasant hunters Saturday and authorities have been scrambling ever since to try to pick up the cold trail of the killer. A special police task force has been formed to look for clues.

"Ash being over the bodies no doubt helped cover them up. Maybe 3 inches (of ash) fell along there," said Larry Boyd, chief criminal deputy sheriff in Grant County.

"It's kind of ironic, the volcano covered up some terrible incident," he said.

The layer of ash, he said, prevented birds or small animals from disturbing the remains until they were discovered by the hunters.

The bodies of the women — both from Fairbanks, Alaska — were clothed and lay side by side in a field of grass and sagebrush 150 yards north of Interstate 90 and 10 miles west of Moses Lake, Boyd said.

The ash had compacted to 1½ inches and some had been washed away by rain. Authorities couldn't tell whether the women were shot in the field or killed elsewhere, Boyd said.

Chief Deputy Ken Kernan said an autopsy showed each body had been shot once, but he declined to say where the bullets struck the bodies. He said tests were being made to determine if the women were sexually molested.

There was no ash beneath the bodies and authorities believe the women were killed about six weeks before the May 18 eruption of Mount St. Helens, which spread ash several inches deep on parts of eastern Washington and northern Idaho.

The women's backpacks were found near Yakima in July 1980, but until the discovery of the bodies, there were no other clues to their disappearance.

Grant County authorities said Thursday a five-member team was formed to investigate the killings.

It was "a callous and cold-blooded and senseless act," Kernan said. "We're compiling a nationwide teletype to all police agencies and circulating a flyer with the girls' pictures on it."

The mother of one of the women said that until the bodies were found, she had hoped the two were being held captive somewhere and would someday be set free.

"I never gave up hope," said Jean Weatter of Fairbanks, Alaska.

Other Hunt Describes Himself As Kind Of Dull

DALLAS (AP) — J.R. he is not. Nor is he Nelson, Herbert or Lamar.

As a wheeler-dealer Texas oil mogul, he is not a Ewing, or even a stereotype Hunt. Nor does he want to be.

"If I could flip a switch and turn off my last name, I'd love it," Ray Hunt said once.

Ideally, he would enter his skyscraper office each day to be greeted only by glowing reports on his ever-expanding financial empire.

He would spend the day making nothing but profitable and privately acclaimed business decisions.

His routine would be uninterrupted by outside forces and uncluttered by any mention of the words silver or soybean.

No one would call him the "quiet" Hunt or the "nice" Hunt or confuse him with the more visible Hunts, his half brothers Nelson, Herbert or Lamar.

Finally, and most importantly, he would be home with his wife and five kids before dark.

"In many respects, I guess I'm kind of dull," smiled the "other" Hunt, Ray, 38, youngest son of rapscallion oil billionaire H.L. Hunt.

Dull is not the word, though he scrupulously avoids the lightning and thunder so common to the activities of his better-known brothers.

"I do find public exposure undesirable," he said. "If I could wave a magic wand...I would prefer that no one knows Ray Hunt even exists."

With a shrug and a sigh, he added: "Obviously, that's not the way the real world works."

Associates say the only son of H.L.'s second marriage is simply a devoted family man who is submerged in the far-flung operations of Hunt Oil Co.

That was the flagship firm of the patriarch Hunt, a crafty, cunning Commie-hater who supposedly parlayed a winning poker hand into a mammoth oil fortune.

That was in the 1930s, during the East Texas oil boom.

But when the old man died in 1974, he left what Forbes magazine described as a company that "had been creeping for years toward a slow death."

At the time, Herbert and Nelson were more interested in Placid Oil and Penrod Drilling and Lamar was absorbed with his sports franchises.

Ray, then 31, took over as president of Hunt Oil.

In 1975, the "other half" of the family broke away to form Hunt Energy Co., and in 1978 sold its remaining 18.5 percent interest in Hunt Oil to Ray's family.

Ray was relieved to have the empire split in two. "He figured the separation would shelter him from his half-brothers' publicity," a friend, who asked not to be identified, said.

Such was not the case, although the companies remain entirely separate and the families share no common assets.

Nelson and Herbert's daring but dubious attempts to corner the soybean and silver markets got generous news coverage, little of it favorable.

Unfortunately, the public tended to confuse Ray with his half-brothers or lump them all in together.

Hunt Oil and Hunt Energy do operate out of the same Dallas skyscraper, but a kind of running joke suggests that the two could "just as well be Mobil and Exxon."

Said one Hunt Oil official recently: "I think we're about to get the message across."

On behalf of himself, his mother and three sisters, Ray took control of family land and oil properties valued at perhaps $250 million and built an empire now worth an estimated $1 billion.

"Ray got Hunt Oil rolling again," said Jim Oberwetter, 36, the firm's trouble-shooting director of governmental and public affairs.

"When he took over, the company still had an excellent reputation with the oil community. He built on that."

The youngest Hunt reorganized, modernized, diversified, upgraded and hired a number of the business world's best and brightest young minds.

"We keep the lines of authority very short and response time for a decision very quick," he said.

His operations grew to include oil, real estate, ranching, farming, publishing and, most recently, insurance.

Just weeks ago, he bought Union Life Insurance of Little Rock, Ark., for a reported $68.7 million.

"We look to Union Life as providing a basis...for what we hope will become a very sophisticated financial services operation," he said.

Actually, you might find the Hunt brand on a charolais cow, a Texas cantaloupe, a home shampoo or an oil or gas well almost anywhere in the world.

The Hunt holdings include five cattle ranches in Texas, Montana and Wyoming and a 6,000-acre farm, Sharyland Plantation, in South Texas.

Domestically, Hunt Oil is active in 20 states and in federal offshore waters.

Early on, Ray chose to decentralize the company's oil and gas operations, dividing them into four exploration regions: Houston, Dallas, Denver and Billings, Mont.

If not totally autonomous, each has great latitude in day-to-day operations and authority to make often high-level decisions.

"I've always felt that when you have the right people, everything else tends to fall into place," said Ray, sounding more than a little like his father.

The old man insisted his greatest source of pride was the caliber of people he attracted to Hunt Oil.

"He always said they had created the successes he was getting credit for," remembered Ray. "That always made a big impression on me."

But it was something else his father said that struck home even more dramatically. Said he:

"Given the choice between luck and intelligence, always take luck."

In 1976, Hunt Oil took its first plunge into foreign exploration, an interest in a North Sea block near Scotland. It was a major discovery, called the Beatrice Field.

"We've really been more fortunate than we should have been," laughed Ray. "We have been lucky."

Now, Hunt Oil is operative in perhaps a dozen foreign countries and is a key player, with SEDCO International, in the so-called "China Project."

That involves geophysical work for the People's Republic of China, which, the patriarch Hunt long insisted, was the epitome of the Red Menace.

One evening, a Dallas columnist spotted Ray Hunt with "a delegation of Red Chinese" in a local steak house. Tongue in cheek, he wrote:

"This had to be an historical first, this breaking of bread between the sons of H. L. and the sons of Mao, comparable say, to the children of Cain and Abel calling a truce and going out together for a night on the town."

Ray Hunt's business philosophy offers an explanation for Hunt Oil's involvement in the China Project.

"I'm a big believer that a company is like any other living organism," he said. "It is constantly changing. If it ever ceases to change, it's dead.

"I strongly believe that."

As he talked, the visitor was impressed with the physical similarities between the light-haired, slightly pudgy and boyishly handsome Ray and his father.

He went on:

"The second thing I believe very strongly is that while conditions change, the underlying principles which govern our actions seldom change.

"The oil industry changed quite a bit over the past 10 years. To remain successful and aggressive, Hunt Oil needed to change also. But we didn't change the principles that allowed us to get here in the first place."

Saying again he'd rather be lucky than smart, Ray said Hunt Oil was fortunate to be located in the booming Dallas-Fort Worth area.

Several years ago, he founded Woodbine Development Corp. to manage more than 3,000 acres of land in and around the two cities. It, too, has prospered.

Woodbine spent $32.6 million to renovate what now is Fort Worth's Hyatt-Regency Hotel and is building a $71 million, 40-story office building nearby.

In Dallas, Woodbine's splashy Reunion, a land improvement and hotel-restaurant-arena project, represented a $120 million investment.

The 50-acre, long-neglected tract that became Reunion was owned jointly with the city, and the development dramatically reshaped the Dallas skyline.

Though profitable, such endeavors also reflect a civic spirit that rarely, if ever, moved the eldest Hunt.

But he does continue to honor one of H.L.'s business canons — refusing to take his company public. Declared he:

"We are aggressively not interested."

Knocks Senate Redistricting

WACO, Texas (AP) — State Republican Chairman Chet Upham said Friday that Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby is doing an "irresponsible job" of drafting proposed Senate districts.

Upham's remarks were in a speech to the Texas Federation of Republican Women.

Hobby issued a two-sentence reply saying that when he has finished drafting his plan for consideration by the Legislative Redistricting Board, Upham and all other Texans would have an opportunity to comment.

The five-member board, all Democrats, has until midnight Oct. 28 to draw new election districts for both the House and the Senate.

"I call on Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby to open up his smoke-filled room and let the public know what an irresponsible job he's doing in redrawing state Senate lines," Upham said.

William Harvey, an English physician, discovered the circulation of the blood in 1628.

Secretary Of State Designate Denies Aspirations

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Despite the job's reputation as a springboard to statewide office, Secretary of State-designate David Dean says he has no political aspirations now.

Gov. Bill Clements on Thursday picked Dean, his general counsel, for secretary of state. It's the highest appointed post in state government, and frequently serves as a good way for would-be candidates to get their names known.

"Others have used it as a stepping stone ... to advance their own personal career," he said. "I come with no political aspirations at all."

The latest secretary of state to try to use the office as a stepping stone is George Strake, the man Dean will replace. Strake wants the GOP nomination to challenge Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

In taking his new post, Dean, 33, will complete the switch from the Democrats to the Republicans. He has been in the governor's office for nine years, starting as a law school student working with Democratic Gov. Dolph Briscoe.

When John Hill beat Briscoe in the 1978 primary, Dean jumped to the Clements' team, landing as a campaign worker and eventually general counsel.

"I couldn't in any way, shape or form support Hill," said Dean, who claims to have been a conservative Democrat.

Clements said Thursday, "David told me in the past he really is a Texas ticket-splitter and that all his inclinations are to be a Republican." Dean now is "declaring himself as a Republican," said the governor.

Clements picked Assistant Secretary of State David Herndon to replace Dean as general counsel.

Dean will earn $52,000 as secretary of state, which includes duties as the state's chief election official. He made $48,900 as Clements' counsel.

Although denying any immediate political aspirations — such as a race for attorney general next year — Dean said he has "no intention of staying in the office a very lengthy period of time."

"If something is available in the future (an elected office) ... I'd evaluate it and make a decision then," he said.

The portraits on the wall in the secretary of state's office give a good indication of how good a stepping stone the post has been. Former occupants of the office include Hill, who became attorney general; Attorney General Mark White; Comptroller Bob Bullock and former Attorney General Crawford Martin.
