MISD may add new elementary to ballot

■ George Lara's proposal would give voters opportunity to vote for high school projects without a new elementary school, an elementary school without the high school projects, both or neither.

By Jeff Stevens
Staff Writer

Midland voters could have an additional choice when the Midland Independent School District presents its bond referendum. In addition to voting whether to spend $72 million for a new Midland High School and a renovated Lee High School, the district may ask for another $6 million-plus for the construction of a new elementary school south of Interstate Highway 20.

In the July 13 edition of the Reporter-Telegram, George Lara raised the issue of the community's need for another elementary school.

"I've heard a lot of response and it's been real positive," Lara said of the aftermath of his announcement.

So positive that at the July 25 school board meeting, trustees will address whether to add the campus as a separate item on the ballot.

"I plan to request to place it on the same ballot," Lara said. "(But), I want to see what the majority of the board feels."

Lara's proposal would give voters the opportunity to vote for the high school projects without a new elementary school, an elementary school without the high school projects, both or neither.

The new campus, which has been discussed for several years, has been estimated to cost about $6 million for construction costs. The cost of land acquisition and site development has not been determined. Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. said the board will receive additional information Tuesday about the cost of the project and land development.

Baressi said it would be good to receive feedback on the item but urged caution in pursuing the matter.

"The comments I've received since the article ran were basically negatives as far as adding to the total cost," Baressi said, adding that the additional cost could jeopardize the entire bond issue.

His comments were based on experience. "I think we had a situation a few years ago, where we were talking about a bond issue of about $50 to 60 million and it escalated to $110 million. It was a close call, but it was defeated," Baressi said.

Most of Midland's secondary facilities face same problems as high schools

By Jeff Stevens
Staff Writer

With all the hype and hoopla about high schools in need of renovation or replacement, Midlanders may have forgotten about seven other Midland Independent School District campuses in need of renovation.

The $72.2 million bond proposal currently on the table would provide for renovation at Lee High School and the construction of a new Midland High School. However, it would not take into account any of Midland's other aging campuses. According to Wilson Heidelberg, executive director of auxiliary services, all of Midland's secondary facilities, save Abell Junior High, have many of the same problems faced at LHS and MHS.

Of highest priority, said Heidelberg, is San Jacinto Junior High School, located between N and Garfield streets at Community Lane. San Jacinto was built in 1952 and its age is beginning to show. Principal Larry Winget has a laundry list of problems he's seen at the school since he came there as assistant principal 11 years ago.

At the top of the list is crowding. Winget said the school was built to house about

Man escapes train accident uninjured

Rick Lopez
Staff Writer

A Midland man escaped a Tuesday night train collision without injuries.

Police identified him as 34-year-old Thomas Lee, who was driving an extended cab pickup for Triple N Services.

The accident, which was reported at 8:13 p.m., occurred at the site of another train accident that killed local businessman Bill Walker on Jan. 27.

City spokeswoman Tina Jauz said a Union Pacific train stuck the pickup when Lee, who was westbound on Industrial Avenue, tried making a north turn onto G Street. The truck flipped upside down with impact.

Ms. Jauz said Lee was trying to outrun the train, which was also westbound.

"He will be cited for failing to yield at the right of way for a train," she said.

Witnesses at the scene said Lee was able to climb out of the pickup almost immediately after the wreck. He declined medical treatment at the scene.

"He's a very lucky man," said Liz Villarreal, who watched authorities take notes at the crash site. "I wouldn't take a chance like that."

The 3,900-foot train was traveling at 49 mph before the conductor tried to slow down, Ms. Jauz said.

Lee's accident is Midland's fourth collision on Union Pacific railroads this year.

In addition to Walker's death, a June 10 accident at that same intersection killed Midlanders Danny and Debbie Martinez and their 11-year-old son, Matthew. The sole surviving member of the family, Zachary Martinez, suffered arm, skull and neck fractures.

On July 7, an 18-wheeler driven by Odessan Michael S. Moore was struck as he tried crossing Industrial and Midkiff. He did not suffer injuries.

Such tragedies still remain in the minds of residents who live near the train tracks.

"My parents told me that I have to be careful and not be by the trains," said Frank Ramos, a young boy who was riding his bicycle when he witnessed Lee's accident.

In each of these accidents, the inter-

FBI: More victims likely in child porn case

Rick Lopez
Staff Writer

FBI officials believe they will encounter more victims in a child pornography case they began probing in May.

Authorities announced the investigation Tuesday after arresting Lonnie Payne, owner of 24 Hour Bail Bonds, at his office Monday.

Payne, a former Midland police officer, was taken to the Midland County jail, where he remained without bond on Tuesday.

Agents with the Federal Bureau of Investigation allege that Payne utilized his business to pressure a 17-year-old girl to pose for sexually explicit photos.

According to court documents, the girl was arrested April 19 on charges of credit card abuse. On May 5, a bondsman arranged for her release and took her to his office in the 700 block of West Indiana Avenue.

The man talked the girl into letting him take sexually explicit photos of her in his office, according to court documents. She claims he had sex with her after taking the pictures and that he told the girl he had posted photos of her on a Web site.

On May 17, agents seized computers, digital cameras, scanners and other related items from Payne's office. While searching a filing cabinet, authorities also found photos of three girls who they believe are between the ages of 10 and 12.

Bill Vanderland, supervisory senior agent of the Midland FBI office, said authorities are trying to locate other girls who might be too afraid to come forward.

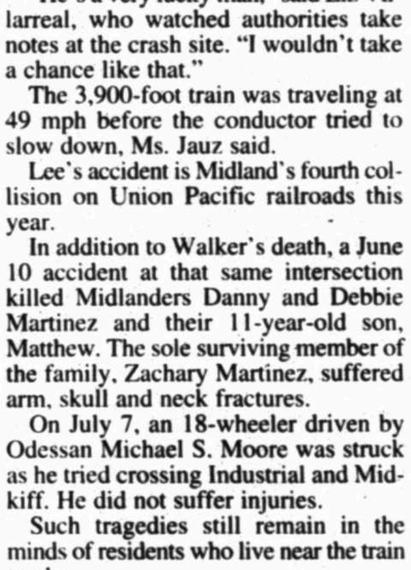

"Based on the information we seized, there could be several additional victims," Vanderland said Tuesday. "We know this will be hard to talk about, but we hope they can contact us."

Anyone with information on the case is asked to call the Midland County Sheriff's Office at 688-1228.

Payne's attorney Tom Morgan said his client intends to plead not guilty at his appearance in federal court today. The U.S. Attorney's Office has filed a motion asking the court to hold Payne without bond until his trial.

Vanderland said the Midland Police Department

Russia, China denounce U.S. missile shield, call for cooperation

By Christopher Bodeen
Associated Press

BEIJING — In a throwback to the early years of the Cold War, China and Russia joined Tuesday to condemn what they consider U.S. attempts to dominate the global order and pledged to stand together in defiance of American power.

Russian President Vladimir Putin and his Chinese counterpart, Jiang Zemin, put their burgeoning partnership on display during a one-day summit in the Chinese capital. Among the five documents they and their aides signed at a public ceremony, two took aim at the United States, singling out the proposed national missile defense system.

The leaders' language was not confrontational, but they agreed to closer cooperation on international affairs and denounced the anti-missile shield. In a joint statement, they accused Washington of using the shield "to seek unilateral military and security advantages that will pose the most grave, adverse consequences" to China, Russia and the United States itself.

Putin and Jiang urged Washington to adhere to the 28-year-old Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, which prohibits the missile defense system. Their statement warned that altering the treaty "will trigger an arms race and lead to an about-face in the positive trend that appeared in world politics after the end of the Cold War."

Washington argues that its proposed national shield is not aimed at China and Russia but at stopping missiles from North Korea and other smaller states hostile to U.S. interests. Putin and Jiang said "the pretext of a missile threat is totally unjustified."

They also criticized a U.S. proposal for a more limited anti-missile system to protect its troops and allies in East Asia, which Beijing fears would undermine its claim to Taiwan.

Defense Secretary William Cohen met with Jiang and other top Chinese officials in Beijing last week but reported making little headway in overcoming their objections to missile defense.

"The ones that we have to work on most assiduously are the China concerns," Undersecretary of State John D. Holum told reporters in Washington on Tuesday. "It will take considerable work to demonstrate that this system isn't aimed at them."

In the documents Jiang and Putin signed after almost three hours of closed-door meetings, they blasted "hegemonism" and attempts to interfere in countries' internal affairs. Those were thinly veiled attacks on NATO, U.S. bullying and last year's war on Yugoslavia, all of which have been roundly criticized in the past by the giant neighbors.

Jiang and Putin also issued a separate statement committing China and Russia to "work together in the international arena to promote peace and stability in the world." Their aides signed agreements on banking and energy cooperation. One accord will see Russia build an experimental fast neutron reactor in China.

Tuesday's meeting was Jiang and Putin's second in three weeks, after a Central Asian summit.

After a 21-gun salute, Jiang squired Putin along a red carpet to review a military honor guard on Tiananmen Square. The presidents then met privately for two hours before their foreign and defense ministers and other officials joined them for formal talks.

Afterward, Jiang and Putin said their talks cemented already strong ties. Putin invited Jiang to visit Moscow next year.

"Our two countries presently share a common position on the global security balance," Putin was quoted saying by Russia's Interfax News Agency.

The common stance was a reminder the 1950s, when Mao Tse-tung's regime was Russia's "little brother" in the communist camp. They worked then to spread communism and fight what they labeled U.S. imperialism.

Beijing eventually chafed at playing second fiddle, and the two became bitter rivals in the later decades of the Cold War.

But now China has all but jettisoned its socialist economy, while Russia ditched communism a decade ago. The reduction of hostility between them and common concerns about American influence have brought them closer than at any time in more than three decades.

The new relationship is based on principles they hold in common. Those include nonintervention in nations' internal affairs, as well as the need for mutual support and cooperation on border issues and security, said Jia Qingguo, an expert in international relations at Peking University.

China and Russia will likely cooperate in developing technologies to defeat the U.S. missile shield if the United States presses ahead with it, although they are unlikely to enter into a military alliance, he said.

Despite their concerns, China and Russia can ill afford to alienate the United States.

Their economic fortunes largely depend on foreign investment, and that investment is aided by smooth relations with the West. And Beijing's large-scale purchases of Russian weapons aside, trade remains at low levels between China and Russia despite repeated promises by their leaders to boost economic ties.

U.S. military restricts servicemen in South Korea

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Amid growing anti-American sentiment, the U.S. military in South Korea has instructed soldiers not to go out at night and told them to travel in pairs and stay out of trouble, officials said Tuesday.

The restrictions, similar to those imposed on U.S. servicemen in Okinawa, Japan, stem from recent anti-U.S. demonstrations in Seoul and the stabbing death last month of an Army doctor, said Kim Yong-kyu, a U.S. command spokesman.

Some 37,000 American troops are stationed in South Korea.

The doctor, Maj. David Berry, was killed in broad daylight by a South Korean man with a record of mental illness. The military says the attack was unprovoked.

Thousands of South Koreans took to the streets Saturday after the U.S. military acknowledged it had dumped formaldehyde into Seoul's Han River, a major source of drinking water for Seoul's 12 million people.

The protesters lobbed toy rockets into the U.S. military compound and pelted a nearby building with red paint, demanding punishment for those responsible.

The military said the 20 gallons of formaldehyde was treated by the sewage system before it entered the river, and was therefore not harmful to the environment.

The South Korean media criticized the chemical dumping as "disregarding the South Korean people."

In response to the uproar, the U.S. command also extended patrols by its military police in major night spots in Seoul that are frequented by American soldiers.

Many shops and bars reported a sharp drop in business, with fewer American visitors.

"The U.S. military imposed a late-night curfew and a drinking ban on all its service members in Okinawa earlier this month after several of them allegedly committed crimes that have enraged Japan.

The order seemed aimed at calming the community ahead of President Clinton's visit to the island for an international summit this weekend.

Most South Koreans support the stationing of U.S. troops in their country as a deterrent to military threats from communist North Korea. But many are worried about crimes and other controversies allegedly involving American soldiers.

Protests have been on the rise since early May, when a U.S. Air Force fighter jet dropped six bombs on the Koon-Ni Range near the west coast village of Mae Hyang, 50 miles southwest of Seoul.

Villagers say six people were slightly injured and walls were cracked and windows shattered by the impact.

Together with activist groups, the villages have been staging sometimes violent rallies, demanding the relocation of the range.

More than 200 activists have since been detained for violent protests.

Study: Allergies and timing of mother's first period linked

By Emma Ross
Associated Press

LONDON — The development of allergies in children may be related to the age at which their mothers started having menstrual periods, new research suggests.

The prevalence of allergies and asthma has increased by as much as 80 percent in the developed world over the last decade or so, particularly in children, and scientists can't explain most of the increase. On average, 20 to 25 percent of people in the United States and elsewhere in the developing world have asthma or some other allergic disorder.

A study published this week in the British medical journal Thorax found that allergies were more common among people whose mothers started menstruating early and less prevalent among those whose mothers had their first period later, particularly after age 15. It is the first time such a link has been made.

The younger their mothers were when they had their first period, or menarche, the more likely the subjects were to have allergies as adults.

Dr. Baizhuang Xu, who led the study at Imperial College, London University, said his preliminary findings support the idea that the female sex hormone estrogen may play a role in allergies. Puberty is triggered in girls by an increase in estrogen and experts have noted that girls are reaching puberty earlier these days.

Previous studies have suggested that women with high estrogen concentrations may be more likely to suffer allergies and that conditions in the womb might influence the development of allergies later in life.

Lindsay Forbes, an asthma and public health researcher at Guy's Hospital in London, said the findings were intriguing, but warned they were preliminary.

She said if the connection turns out to be real, while nothing can be done to change the onset of menstrual periods, other estrogen-related influences such as hormone replacement therapy and the contraceptive pill can be controlled.

Dr. Fernando Martinez, director of the Respiratory Sciences Center at the University of Arizona, said while the findings were plausible they do not take into account the fact that first-born children are more likely to develop asthma and allergies. The study does not distinguish between first-born and later-born children.

The findings are encouraging for further research investigating a possible link between estrogen and allergies, she said.

Xu noted indirect evidence suggesting the hormone might have a role.

Allergies and asthma are more prevalent in young boys than girls, but by puberty, the opposite is true.

Women have a higher incidence of allergies than men until the age of about 40 or 50, when menopause sets in. The prevalence of allergies is balanced equally between men and women after that age, except for women who are taking hormone replacement therapy, Xu noted.

Some experts believe the age of onset of menstrual periods could be an indicator of a woman's estrogen levels. The earlier she starts menstruating, the higher her estrogen levels are in adulthood.

Estrogen can also affect the functioning of the immune system.

Xu's study involved 5,188 people born in Finland in 1966. In 1997, at the age of 31, they were given a skin prick test to determine whether they had allergies. Their medical records included the time they were in the womb and showed at what age their mothers had their first periods.

Overall, 33 percent of the men and 28 percent of the women had allergies. The average for the general Finnish population is about 30 percent.

A total of 35 percent of those whose mothers started menstruating at 12 or younger had allergies. For those whose mothers' first period was at 13, the rate was 32.8 percent. It was 30.2 percent for children of women who reached puberty at 14 and 30 percent for those with mothers whose first period came at 15.

Only 26.4 percent of people whose mothers started menstruating at 16 or later had allergies.

That means those whose mothers had their first period at 12 or younger were 1.5 times more likely to suffer allergies than children of women who began menstruating later.

Xu acknowledged the association is not strong, and said research needs to be done in other countries, and with a direct measurement of estrogen instead of using menstrual periods as an indicator.

Celebrity penguin vanishes

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Scientists want to study him, journalists want to photograph him and millions of South Africans just want reassurance that their beloved Peter is OK after he survived an oil spill and swam 470 miles back to his home.

The only problem is no one knows exactly where the celebrity penguin is.

Driving rain and howling wind prevented people from taking the boat trip to Peter's home to greet the 18-inch tall hero on his return Tuesday to Robben Island.

Scientists, who glued a tracking device to his back, know he's there somewhere. But even when boats begin running again, the search for Peter will be a difficult one: the device tracks him only to within about 500 feet, and the island, four miles off Cape Town, is covered with thick bush under which the penguins nest in burrows.

Peter was among 20,000 penguins trucked to the town of Port Elizabeth and released to make the long swim home, giving authorities time to clean up an oil spill from a tanker that sank June 23.

The local media, meanwhile, have turned Peter, along with two other tracked penguins, Percy and Pamela, into celebrities, and thousands have followed their progress via the Internet.

Percy, who lives on Dassen Island about 40 miles northwest of Cape Town and was released July 5, was expected home within a day or two. Pamela, who was released July 3, was taking her time getting back, swimming only about 25 miles a day.

African penguins, which are listed as vulnerable to extinction, are found only off the coast of southern Africa. The population is estimated at between 150,000 and 180,000 — 10 percent of what it was thought to be 100 years ago, according to the World Wildlife Fund.

Dassen Island, where an estimated 55,000 birds lived, holds the world's largest colony of African penguins. The third-largest colony is on Robben Island, a nature reserve and museum that used to serve as a prison for apartheid-era political prisoners, including former President Nelson Mandela.

Scientists want to weigh Peter and check his condition after his 19-day swim, which began June 30, while television crews and photographers are scrambling for pictures of him after his odyssey.

Meanwhile, more than 8,000 of the captured, soiled birds have been washed, and the first batch of 300 were released Tuesday in Port Elizabeth, said Simon Pope of the International Fund for Animal Welfare, which has flown in international bird experts to help cope with the crisis.

Fewer than 400 captured birds had died, Pope said.

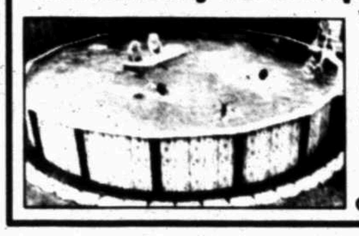

Bird experts are hailing the rehabilitation project as one of the most successful ever undertaken.

Teen turns himself in for middle school shooting

RENTON, Wash. (AP) — A 13-year-old boy who caused a panic at a summer school when he fired a shot into a cafeteria ceiling was arrested Tuesday afternoon. His mother notified authorities that her son wanted to turn himself in, and he was arrested peacefully at his grandparents' house for investigation of assault with a firearm and reckless endangerment, King County sheriff's spokesman John Urquhart said.

Urquhart said he did not know if a gun was recovered from the boy. He was to be taken to the county juvenile justice center in downtown Seattle following initial questioning at an undisclosed location.

After unsuccessfully searching the neighborhood and a wooded area near the school Monday night, officers had expressed hope the youth would give himself up.

Summer school classes were canceled Tuesday at the middle school and nearby Thomson Elementary School, which had been used as a safe haven for students Monday.

The boy was shown on KIRO-TV walking out of his grandparents' home in handcuffs, wearing a Detroit Pistons T-shirt. He was described after the incident Monday as dressed in black, with blond hair dyed blue at the ends. But on Tuesday, his blond hair was cut short with no dyeing evident.

"They're telling me this kid was very cooperative, they've never seen anger or violence of that type from him," school spokesman Peter Daniels said earlier. "By all accounts he was not a problem."

An aunt told the Seattle Post-Intelligencer that the boy, the oldest of three siblings, was being raised by a single mother. But she said the boy had not done well in school the past year and was attending summer school remedial classes.

During the week, the boy stayed with grandparents who live near the school so he could arrive at class on time, police said. During weekends, he stayed with his mother. Investigators believe the boy took the gun from his grandparents' home, Urquhart said.

Neighbors said the mother moved the family often, recently vacating a house she had bought from her parents. They said the boy would return and break in so he and his friends could use the house.

Urquhart said the boy got on a table at about 10:30 a.m. Monday and shot a round into the ceiling. He ordered the other 200 students to get on the stage in the cafeteria, but they scattered and ran.

Brittany Lamb, 14, was sitting at the same table when the youth stood up and fired. She said she was too scared to move, and he threatened her directly.

"He put the gun right up to my face and he said, 'I'm going to kill you if you don't get up on the stage.' I was frozen. I could not move at all," Brittany said.

She said that he had been talking about shooting a teacher for a few days and had told other pupils he was going to commit suicide before the police got him.

"A lot of people knew he was talking about it, but they didn't say anything because they didn't think he would really do it," she said.

Cylas Sampson, 13, said the boy had shown him a gun and a large knife at the beginning of the school day. "I didn't think he was going to do anything," Sampson said. "I thought it was a fake gun."

Just before the shooting, Cylas said he had called the boy over to sit with them. "He said, 'You don't have to worry about school anymore. Today's your last day of school,'" he said.

PROBLEMS: Officials say secondary schools in need of renovations

(From 1A)

660 students and has 720 registered for the coming year. However, the school has had more than 1,100 seventh- and eighth-graders during one school year.

Currently the crowding will result in the school having five floating teachers — teachers with no assigned room, who move from classroom to classroom each period. The school doesn't have any portables at the present, but Winget said crowding is manifested in other ways. "We have no storage at all. We are using every nook and cranny," he said.

Coaches are making their offices in closets and athletic equipment hangs from the walls and ceilings instead of being stored away. The school has only one dressing facility for girls and two for boys, but according to the principal they are lacking.

"The dressing rooms for boys and girls is atrocious," Winget said. "There are so many kids that are in the dressing room, they don't hardly have room to change without bumping into each other."

Additionally, the dressing facilities have only two toilets serving about 50 students and there aren't enough showers for every student to have time to shower in time to get to the next class.

San Jacinto has only one football field, compared to three at other Midland junior high schools. Although San Jacinto's field could draw envy for being unique. It has only one goal post because the field's western end-zone parallels Garfield Street. On game day, the team driving for that western end zone has to walk to other end to kick a field goal.

In the classrooms, Winget said the problems are even more serious. Because the school was built almost 50 years ago, the building doesn't meet the many requirements for 21st century education. The science labs serve about 30 students each class period but have only seven lab stations.

"If you double up that's 14 kids and you've still got another 15 kids sitting at their desks waiting to do the lab," Winget said.

He added that classrooms are so small that students aren't allowed to bring backpacks into the classroom because of the potential hazards they create.

Hallways at the school are 11 feet wide. With students in the halls at their lockers, the available hall space for traffic is reduced to about six feet, "which is enough for one direction single file one way and single file in the other direction," he said. "The hallway situation is bad as far as the crowding."

Additionally, the two-story campus has no elevator and is out of compliance with Americans With Disabilities Act guidelines so badly that physically handicapped students have to be transferred to another campus. Winget said a student with a broken leg in cast for more than a few weeks has to be transferred because of the situation.

San Jacinto, however, isn't the only campus in need. Lee Freshman High School was built in 1956, followed by Alamo Junior High in 1957 and Goddard Junior High and Midland Freshman in 1966. The district's two early childhood centers also are getting up there in years. Bunche ECC was built in 1959 and West ECC was built in 1945.

Tina Hood, a longtime member of the PTA has had three children go through Alamo Junior High School. "Alamo has humongous problems," she said.

Aside from the crowding, she said one of the most obvious problems at Alamo is the girls' dressing room. Ms. Hood said the girls' dressing room sits over the kitchen and has only one narrow entry.

"When my daughter was over there, I had a lot of concerns about a fire or anything that went on," Ms. Hood said, explaining that in the event of an emergency, there would be no safe way for a room full of girls to exit the dressing room.

Additionally, being on top of the kitchen the area gets extremely hot. "It's unbearable," Ms. Hood said, adding that the one locker room serves all girls' athletics.

Another of MISD's aging campuses, Lee Freshman doesn't have enough space for all of its students to eat lunch. A gym has been converted to the task and even then some students eat outside because of the crowded conditions inside. Principal Davis Corley added that space for food preparation also is limited.

He said his building is structurally sound, as are all MISD campuses, but the age of the building and its components cause some problems. Within the last three years, LFHS has had a roof replacement and the air conditioning chillers were replaced. Still the air conditioning and heating system is an either-or unit. The air conditioning can't be operated on the same day as the heater.

Heidelberg added that all the older buildings have electrical problems, air conditioning problems and plumbing problems.

During last year's warm winter with a smattering of cool days, that became a problem.

"They all (secondary schools) have problems with ADA. They all have problems with Title IX. The building envelopes were built in another era and are not accommodating the educational delivery systems of the day," said Heidelberg, referring to the Americans With Disabilities Act and the legislation that guarantees girls access to equal educational facilities.

Winget, at San Jacinto, said his air conditioner broke down twice last year and the temperatures in the classrooms reached as high as 90 degrees.

Additionally, he said at one point the entire second floor wiring had to be redone because the circuit breakers kept tripping.

If the administrators at those campuses are looking for improvements, however, there isn't much hope in the near future. Heidelberg said San Jacinto followed by Alamo would be the top priorities, but San Jacinto wouldn't be addressed for another five years.

That's coupled with the idea that MISD identified all of its secondary campuses as needing renovation in 1995. That was the year the district attempted a $110 million bond issue that would have renovated all elementary campuses and all secondary campuses.

As it turned out, the voters approved a $35.9 million bond for elementary renovations in 1997 and the district is seeking $72.2 million now to renovate just the high schools.

That's roughly the same $110 million attempted in 1995 with the difference being no renovations to the three junior high schools or the two freshman high schools.

According to the numbers provided in 1995, the remaining schools could have been renovated for about $40 million. Heidelberg said he wouldn't stand by that estimate today, but said a current assessment is underway that would detail the figure for those schools in coming weeks.

"Sooner or later, you are still going to have to renovate those buildings," Heidelberg said. "You just add to the number of those construction inflation and we are deferring a tremendous renovation cost for these junior highs."

Additionally, the longer the renovations are postponed, the more it costs to maintain the buildings. More costly repairs are required along with higher maintenance budgets. In the long run, Heidelberg said, taxpayers will see greater increase in their taxes by postponing than by taking an aggressive approach to the renovations.

BALLOT: Property has been identified for project

(From 1A)

Lara seems to have some support from fellow board members, however.

Dale Strauss, vice president of the school board, said he would like to get some additional information before making a final determination, but said he could support the concept. "I wouldn't be opposed if it were a separate item, because I feel our elementary and secondary schools are different issues," Strauss said. "I haven't seen anything yet on what it would cost or how that would affect our tax rate. That's the only hesitancy I've got about it at all."

Lara said a piece of property already has been identified for the project, but would not identify the actual address because of the potential for driving up the cost of the land.

section in question did not have crossing gates to prevent vehicle entrance.

Crossing gates are typically funded by the state, then constructed by the railroad company. Earlier this year, the Texas Department of Transportation (TxDOT) approved funding for Midland's four intersections of need: Industrial and Midkiff, Front and South K, Industrial and South G and Front and Carver.

Union Pacific officials said the design and construction of crossing gates typically takes 18 months.

CASE: Incident marks second blow to Payne's career

(From 1A)

and Midland County Sheriff's Office contributed to the investigation.

Payne's latest arrest marks a second blow to his career in recent years. In 1998, one of Payne's former employees was sentenced to eight years probation for shooting Payne's left arm at close range and causing permanent damage.

During the trial, Payne testified that he had an affair with the employee's wife and had taken semi-nude pictures of her. The shooter and his wife claim Payne was stalking them the night of the shooting.

Court records indicate that Payne has a court conviction stemming from his three-year stint with the Midland Police Department.

In 1984, Payne was sentenced to three years probation after he was convicted of using excessive force on a 21-year-old shoplifter on Feb. 8, 1983. The man admitted to stealing $32 worth of meat from a food store, but alleged he was kicked and beaten by Payne after being handcuffed.

Payne maintained that he used force because the man was still combative after being handcuffed. Payne was dismissed from the Police Department shortly after the man filed a complaint against him.

MISD meeting should bring good support

Midland Independent School District (MISD) officials have invited about 90 Midlanders to a meeting this evening to seek their help in convincing the community of the need for construction included in a $72 million bond proposal.

It's an invitation Midlanders should not decline. The educational future of thousands of MISD students may hinge on what results from tonight's meeting.

MISD's trustees have been discussing a bond proposal that would include construction of a new Midland High School and renovations at Lee High School. There is little doubt that those facilities need to be upgraded, but there is also a serious question as to whether such a bond proposal would be approved by Midlanders.

That's why the school officials are seeking the input of Midlanders from throughout the community. As MISD Executive Director of Communications Barney Welch noted, "We certainly want a variety of the community to be involved in this important process. If they have an interest in the bond, then obviously they will want to participate."

Midlanders need to become aware of the problems the school district is facing at both Midland and Lee high schools, and why major construction work is needed to remedy the situation at both.

They also need to give MISD officials a fair assessment of the mood of the electorate in the community so that trustees can make an intelligent decision concerning the bond proposal now being considered.

In an earlier editorial, the Reporter-Telegram noted "It's time to join together and make the commitment to invest in the future of our children and our community." We still feel that commitment is needed for the good of MISD and the community overall.

Attendance at today's 6:30 p.m. meeting is a good first step on the road to that commitment

Today in History

Today is Wednesday, July 19, the 201st day of 2000. There are 165 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 19, 1848, a pioneer women's rights convention convened in Seneca Falls, N.Y.

On this date:

In 1870, the Franco-Prussian war began.

In 1941, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill launched his "V for Victory" campaign in Europe.

In 1943, Allied air forces raided Rome during World War II.

In 1969, Apollo 11 and its astronauts, Neil Armstrong, Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin and Michael Collins, went into orbit around the moon.

In 1979, the Nicaraguan capital of Managua fell to Sandinista guerrillas, two days after President Anastasio Somoza fled the country.

In 1980, the Moscow Summer Olympics began, minus dozens of nations that were boycotting the games because of the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

In 1985, Christa McAuliffe of New Hampshire was chosen to be the first schoolteacher to ride aboard a space shuttle. (Ms. McAuliffe and six other crew members died when the Challenger exploded shortly after lifting off.)

In 1986, Caroline Kennedy, daughter of President John F. Kennedy, married Edwin A. Schlossberg in Centerville, Mass.

In 1989, 112 people were killed when a United Airlines DC-10 crashed while making an emergency landing at Sioux City, Iowa; 184 people survived.

Ten years ago: President Bush joined former presidents Ronald Reagan, Gerald R. Ford and Richard M. Nixon at ceremonies dedicating the Nixon Library and Birthplace in Yorba Linda, Calif. Baseball's all-time hits leader Pete Rose was sentenced in Cincinnati to five months in prison for tax evasion.

Five years ago: The Dow Jones industrial average ended at 4,628.87, down 57.41, after plunging more than 130 points earlier in the session. A pair of House subcommittees held a joint hearing on the federal government's raid on the Branch Davidian compound near Waco, Texas.

One year ago: Federal officials said radar data showed the plane piloted by John F. Kennedy Jr. dropped 1,100 feet in just 14 seconds. Sen. Edward Kennedy released a statement saying, "We are filled with unspeakable grief and sadness by the loss of John and Carolyn and of Lauren Bessette."

NAFTA-TAA fails to help majority of people

WASHINGTON — Has NAFTA, the North American Free Trade Agreement, caused massive unemployment, and did this tariff-lowering treaty cause what Ross Perot described as a "giant sucking sound" that took American jobs south of the border? In fact, some jobs did go to Mexico, but more jobs were created here.

Anderson

What remains are complaints about displacement -- the idea that jobs in Silicon Valley are replacing jobs lost in El Paso, Texas. To the people in El Paso, their jobs simply went south. This is what Adam Smith in his 1776 "The Wealth of Nations" referred to as the "invisible hand" of the marketplace, an unforgiving survival-of-the-fittest economic dogma that winnows out some industries and rewards others, which is why more computers than buggy whips are manufactured today. It is essential for progress.

But in the short run it is not worker-friendly, so Congress came up with a solution. By June 2000, more than 232,375 individuals registered and were certified with the NAFTA Transitional Adjustment Assistance program. This program was created to provide job training and income support for those whose jobs are lost due to NAFTA. But NAFTA-TAA's narrow criteria has failed to help the vast majority of people who have lost their jobs because of the trade agreement.

According to the NAFTA-TAA regulations, only certain workers in certain types of companies qualify. Only those who produce a goods directly affected by NAFTA qualify. The program excludes the entire service sector. Moreover, only those workers who know about the program apply. Since there is no mandatory posting of information about NAFTA-TAA, only a small percentage of those who have lost their jobs actually have applied.

Some examples of large companies that closed down their American plants to move to Mexico are Huffy Bicycles and Bass Shoes, which laid off 350 workers when it closed down its plant in Maine. Thomson Consumer Electronics, which succeeded RCA-Victor, moved its operation from Bloomington, Indiana, to Mexico, leaving 1,200 workers without jobs. Indiana's Department of Workforce Development tracked the laid-off workers and found that only 8 percent of them had found jobs with comparable or better salaries than what they had before. The others were either working for less money or not working at all. The invisible hand has been devastating for them.

Approximately 395,000 American jobs have been displaced since the passage of NAFTA. In El Paso, Texas, alone, about 10,000 jobs were lost. On the other hand, the national unemployment rate has fallen from 9.1 percent when NAFTA was passed in 1993 to 3.9 percent today, with unemployment falling for all demographic groups. And President Clinton, in his January State of the Union address, said the United States is experiencing its longest period of economic expansion. Budget surpluses allowed the nation to reduce its debt by $140 billion between 1998 and 1999. Moreover, since 1993, approximately 22.2 million new jobs have been created, more than offsetting the 395,000 displaced jobs.

NAFTA has clearly been a significant factor in this prosperity, and just as clearly Perot's "giant sucking sound" never materialized. And the invisible hand has brought far more happiness than grief.

Traffic stop fuels political rumor mill

Former Texas U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen used to say, only half-jokingly, that "In Texas, we consider politics a contact sport."

With that go the rumors that abound.

And they can take on a life of their own. Former Texas House Speaker Gib Lewis used to say you could start a rumor in the Capitol basement, race it to the fourth floor and usually lose.

So when Lt. Gov. Rick Perry got some TV exposure he probably didn't like — getting out of his vehicle to try to hurry along a state trooper writing a warning ticket to Perry's driver — rumors started about how the tape got out.

McNeely

Troopers routinely videotape from their squad car when they pull someone over. It was Austin's KVUE-TV that heard about the June 28 traffic stop, near Dripping Springs west of Austin. The station filed an open records request. Then they put it on their July 7 news broadcast.

The Perry vehicle was pulled over for going 75 mph in a 55 mph zone. Perry's driver, Madison Mauze, got out of the car and started walking toward the patrol car. The trooper, Dori Livingston, told him to stop.

He did. Mauze apologized for speeding.

Then Perry got out, shook hands with the trooper and said, "So, if you'll just let us go on, that would be better." He got back in the vehicle.

Livingston wrote Mauze a warning ticket.

Perry, who later said he was late for a meeting, got out again. He asked if the trooper needed to see his identification.

"No, sir," Livingston said.

"What's the holdup here?" Perry said.

Livingston said she was writing a warning ticket.

"Why don't you just let us get on down the road?" Perry asked.

"After I'm done with my warning, sir," Livingston responded.

Livingston finished her paper work and then let the lieutenant governor and his driver get on down the road.

Perry later told reporters he regretted getting out of the car. He praised the trooper as "very professional."

One rumor was that Jim Francis of Dallas, the chairman of the Public Safety Commission that oversees the Department of Public Safety, released the tape because he is a backer of U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison should she wind up in a governor's race against Perry.

Francis, who has been involved in Texas Republican politics for more than two decades, laughed incredulously when he heard that postulation.

"I can categorically 100 percent say that that is not true," Francis said. "Period."

Francis said he first heard about the matter when Col. Tommy Davis, director of the DPS, told him of the records request.

"However it got out, I can promise you I had nothing to do with it," Francis said.

Plus, Francis said he hopes a Hutchison-Perry faceoff never happens.

"I haven't even decided what I would do," Francis said. "I consider them both good friends. I certainly would not take a cheap shot on either one of them."

KVUE wouldn't say how it heard about the pullover, but when the state's second-ranking official, who may be governor within a year, gets pulled over 20 miles from the capital city, it's not surprising that the word would get out.

As for the heads-up Davis gave Francis about the KVUE record request, "It's 100 percent routine on anything that's high profile," said DPS spokesman Tom Vinger. "This is the lieutenant governor, after all."

Tony Sanchez, for the record. . . . The Laredo businessman and University of Texas at Austin regent lately being touted as the Democrats' silver bullet candidate for governor in 2002 hasn't declared whether he'll make that race.

And, even though he's been calling political friends to say he's very strongly considering the race, so far he's not giving interviews on that subject.

But asked whom he'll support for president, Sanchez said it'll be the man who picked him for the regents: Republican Gov. George W. Bush.

"I raised money for George," Sanchez said in a telephone interview. "I like him. I'm going to vote for him."

Sanchez said he cares deeply about minorities and civil rights, and believes Bush does too.

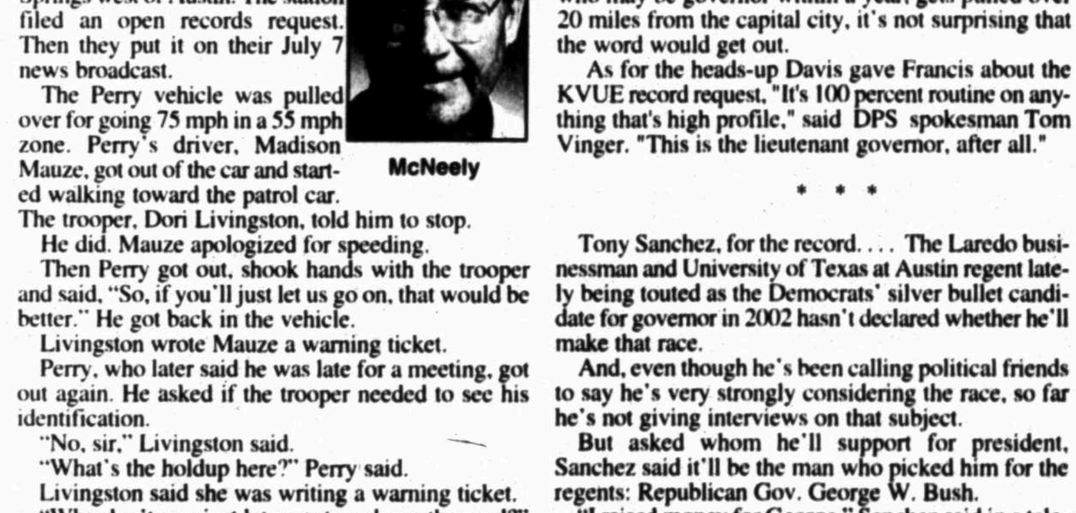

"My part of the state is undereducated, underfunded and underserved," Sanchez said. "I think as president, he'd make the border a priority. He is my friend, and I'm not going to be disloyal to him.

"But that's the only Republican I'll say that about," Sanchez added.

Profit to be made in pharmaceutical speculation

Years ago the big profits in the United States were made in oil. These days they come from pharmaceuticals.

The prices of prescription drugs rose 153 percent during the '80s, another 30 percent since 1994, and they are going still higher. Pills cost so much that Americans are now buying them for investment rather than for curing an ailment.

Nick Nargosi is one of the major speculators in prescription-drug trading and has made a fortune. He invited me over to his house to see his pill collection.

Two burly guards searched me and escorted me into Nargosi's ornate office.

He said, "Pill dealing was never much of a business in the past. People just took pills without thinking about them appreciating in value. They are now kicking themselves for not putting their prescriptions away in a safe."

Buchwald

He held up a pink capsule. "Take this diuretic, for example. Originally it was made for high blood pressure and cost 25 cents. If I sold it today it would be worth $25,000. Of course, that's not all profit for me. The drug companies would get at least half."

"What's in that case over there?"

"That's a tranquilizer," Nick said. "Sotheby's sold one like it last week for $18,000. It's a big item with pill collectors."

"How do you explain the surge in prescription-drug prices in the last few years?"

"It's related to the price of cotton. As you know, all prescriptions come one part pill and five parts cotton. When the price of cotton soared, the manufacturers had no choice but to raise the cost of their drugs. I read in a prescription-drug catalog that you can get $8,000 just for the cotton that comes in the bottles."

One of the guards brought out a velvet tray.

Nargosi picked up a magnifying glass from his desk.

"These are some of the crown jewels of prescription drugs. This green pill is made of aspirin and codeine. It was sold to us by an old lady on Medicare who found it when she was cleaning out her medicine cabinet. It was obvious that she had no idea of the value of the tablet, and thought it had something to do with pain. The company that made it offered me $11,000 to buy it back because it was planning to raise the price of it again."

He showed me a black-and-white capsule. "There are collectors all over the country who would kill for this muscle relaxer."

"How much is it?"

Nick laughed. "If you have to ask, you can't afford it."

"The drug companies say that they need to charge a lot of money and make unbelievable profits in order to stay in business," I said.

"They have to say that because people are starting to complain about the costs. The fact is that prescriptions are a risky gamble, and you shouldn't accept one from your doctor if you are going to complain about the bill."

The guard took away one tray and brought another.

"What are those?" I asked.

"They're over-the-counter drugs. Since prescription ones have gotten so expensive, many investors are now turning their attention to these. You can make a bonanza on them if you know what you're doing. This sugarcoated antacid pill was 10 cents two years ago and is now worth $20. I don't sell them. I just keep them around to amuse my friends."

"Aren't you afraid of keeping so many valuable prescription drugs in your house?"

"Not really. Even if the thieves got inside, no one would be able to open the safety caps of the bottles."

Senate passes bill to stop 'marriage penalty'

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Trumpeting the growing budget surplus as a signal to slash the tax burden, Republicans won Senate passage Tuesday of a bill that would eliminate the "marriage penalty" by cutting taxes for virtually every married couple.

"All of these families have contributed to the record surplus that we have in Washington," said Sen. William Roth, R-Del., the Senate Finance Committee chairman. "They deserve to get some of it back."

Shrugging off President Clinton's veto threat and Democratic criticism that the bill is skewed to the wealthy, the Senate voted 61-38 for the legislation that would reduce government revenue by $248 billion over 10 years. Eight Democrats joined most Republicans in favor, but the margin was not veto-proof.

Differences must still be worked out with the House, which passed a 10-year, $182 billion earlier this year. GOP leaders expected an agreement later this week and cited the latest glowing surplus estimates in pressing the president to abandon his veto threat.

Clinton has said he would sign the GOP marriage penalty bill only if Congress also sends him a measure creating an acceptable Medicare prescription drug benefit. Republicans say the bill puts Clinton — and Vice President Al Gore — in a tough political spot.

The Congressional Budget Office now projects an enormous budget surplus of $2.17 trillion over the next decade, far above previous forecasts. That includes an estimated $102 billion surplus in fiscal 2001, up from $15 billion in April.

GOP leaders want to use some of that surplus to permit people to benefit in 2001 from some of the "marriage penalty" cut. The Senate bill delays some key provisions until 2002 at the earliest.

Much of the surplus will be set aside to pay down the public debt. But the new numbers also make it easier for Republicans to push for more tax cuts in this election year, including a proposed expansion in tax-deferred contributions to retirement accounts and repeal of a 1993 tax increase imposed on the Social Security benefits of people with incomes above certain levels.

The Senate-passed "marriage penalty" bill would cut taxes for approximately 45 million couples, including about 25 million two-earner households in which couples pay more than they would if single. It also would cut taxes for millions of other couples who actually receive a marriage "bonus" because one spouse earns the most income.

The bill would:

■ Gradually enlarge the 15 percent and 28 percent income tax brackets for married couples so they are roughly twice the size of those for single people. The House bill only widens the 15 percent bracket.

■ In 2001, boost a couple's standard income tax deduction so it is equal to those of two single people. In 2000 dollars, that's an increase from $7,350 to $8,800.

■ Raise by $2,500 the income cap for couples who want to claim the earned income tax credit.

■ Ensure that certain personal credits, including the $500 per-child tax credit, don't ensnare taxpayers in the complex alternative minimum tax.

Clinton has called for marriage penalty relief that is less costly and targeted at middle- and low-income couples. A Senate Democratic alternative giving married couples a simple choice of filing tax returns as singles or jointly was defeated Monday night.

Democrats heaped scorn on the Republican bill and other GOP tax cuts, saying they risked squandering the surplus to benefit primarily upper-income people while ignoring such spending priorities as providing prescription drugs under Medicare and smaller classroom sizes.

"It's very clear that the Republicans in Congress have decided to put aside their responsibilities and to play politics," said White House spokesman Joe Lockhart.

Citing research from the labor-funded Citizens for Tax Justice, Democrats said almost 58 percent of major GOP tax cuts passed or pending this year would go to families with incomes in the top 5 percent, over $130,000 a year.

Republicans countered that the marriage tax cut and the gradual repeal of inheritance taxes passed last week by the Senate, if combined, would consume only about 10 percent of the projected budget surplus.

GOP leaders hope to finish the marriage penalty bill this week and get it to Clinton before the Republican National Convention starts July 31 to demonstrate stark differences with Democrats on tax cuts. GOP aides say the marriage penalty bill will likely be sent to Clinton first, followed by the estate tax repeal.

Hanging of black teen conjures up dark memories in Mississippi

By Paul Payne
Associated Press

KOKOMO, Miss. — Raynard Johnson spent a hot evening knocking around with his older brother and trying out a new computer. As darkness fell, the black Mississippi teen-ager was with a girlfriend.

A few hours later, Johnson's body twisted in the evening breeze, hanging by a belt from a low limb on a pecan tree in his yard.

Two autopsies point to suicide in the 17-year-old's death, and investigators note that the girlfriend said she broke up with Johnson just before he died.

But others who knew him said Johnson had everything to live for — a family and friends, good grades and plans for the future. What Johnson also had were friendships with white girls.

Johnson's family, particularly his mother, is convinced that the teen-ager was murdered the night of June 16, sacrificed as a warning to other young blacks who would run with white women.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, who has championed the Johnson family's cause at prayer vigils and news conferences, has labeled the death a lynching, conjuring up memories of nightriders who terrorized blacks in the South during the civil rights movement.

"It has the smell of Emmett Till all around it, and these questions have to be answered," Jackson said. Till, a 14-year-old Chicago youth who was visiting family in Mississippi, was lynched in 1955 for supposedly whistling at a white woman.

The last lynching of a black man in Mississippi occurred in 1959 when Mack Charles Parker, accused of raping a white woman, was pulled from a jail cell, beaten and shot. His body was dumped in the muddy waters of the Pearl River.

In the Johnson case, two autopsies, including one commissioned by the family, found that Johnson's injuries were consistent with suicide: There were no bruises or other marks on the body, and nothing at the scene suggested there had been a struggle.

Local, state and federal authorities are still investigating.

The possibility that heartbreak, rather than hatred, killed Johnson is reinforced by statements from his girlfriend, also black, that she broke up with him only a couple of hours before his death.

"I told him I love him, but I loved someone else," Taccara Matthews told police, "and he sat there just looking at me. And he asked me if I was ready to go home, and I said, 'Yeah.'"

But the Johnsons and Jackson say that the belt around the young man's neck was not his own and that FBI agents lost critical evidence such as an answering machine tape. The FBI refused to comment.

"I know that he didn't take his own life," mother Maria Johnson said. "He's dead and somebody did it and everybody's a suspect."

Last week, the family secured a promise from Attorney General Janet Reno that there would be a thorough investigation.

Kokomo is typical of many rural communities in this thinly populated state. Its several hundred residents live scattered among oak and pine forests broken occasionally by small farms. The Johnsons' red cinderblock home is off a small blacktop road, nestled in trees and facing a pasture.

Some of the family's closest neighbors, a white family, were friends with Raynard Johnson and question the suicide finding. And Roger Johnson, one of Raynard's older brothers, pointed out, "Most of our friends are white."

The Johnson family believes the teen-ager's death may be connected somehow with the two white, teen-age girls he and Roger visited days before Johnson's death. Although the girls were not dating the brothers, Jackson and Johnson's relatives believe some whites may have been upset by the friendship.

The Johnsons say white people in pickup trucks had been cruising up and down their quiet street several days before. They also said Johnson heard noises outside his home the two nights before his death.

In their statements to police, the two girls said they knew of no one who held any animosity toward Johnson.

■ Recent airport disaster drill was successful, says evaluator, though some emergency personnel "didn't appear to have a sense of urgency"

By Ed Todd

Disaster Drill-2000, held at Midland International Airport on July 8, was essential and probably should be held annually instead of once every three years as mandated by the Federal Aviation Administration, according to Harry Spannaus, one of those charged with evaluating the exercise.

The exercises "are needed and are extreme high value," said Spannaus, a retired United States Air Force wing commander and chairman of Midland's Airport Planning and Development Board and chairman of the Permian Basin Airport Board.

"We probably should hold them every year instead of once every three years" as required by the FAA, Spannaus said.

The drill, which tested the response of Midland-Odessa-Big Spring area emergency services and hospital personnel, was centered around the simulated crash of a jet airliner at Midland International Airport where many of those playing the victims were college students.

"It's like in the military and airports all across the country," Spannaus said on Tuesday following a quarterly meeting of the Permian Basin Airport board. "Sooner or later, there probably is going to be an accident.

"While we hope it isn't going to happen in Midland, and the chances are remote, it is the remote possibility that we have got to train and plan for," Spannaus said. "And any aircraft accident out here involving a commercial airline is going to involve a lot of casualties. So, we've got to be prepared."

Overall, the drill went "very well," Spannaus said in review. "However, he noted that "some of the emergency personnel didn't appear to have a sense of urgency" in responding to those feigning injuries by their cries and moans. "They leisurely strolled" around the simulated accident site instead of running to the victims.

Vaughn Donaldson, co-chairman of the drill and chief of the airport's Aircraft Rescue-Firefighting (ARFF) units, said that the emergency workers, including firefighters and paramedics, seemingly "lacked a sense of urgency" for just cause.

"And one of the things we want the emergency workers to do, especially in a disaster, is to slow down, take their time," Donaldson said, " ... because they are going to be rushing. We do not want them running around like chickens with their heads cut off. We want them to take their time, to be slow and methodical. If they can do that and stay calm, then they will do a much better job. They will do what they are trained to do. The fact that they were going slow and lacked a sense of urgency, I thought that was wonderful. That's how we train them."

Were the emergency workers "running, that means they are not thinking," Donaldson said. "They are just reacting. We want them to think in an emergency rather than just go out there and start reacting. We want them to be slow and methodical."

— Vaughn Donaldson, co-chairman of the drill

Marv Esterly, director of Midland airports, said that Disaster Drill-2000 was "the best disaster drill that we've had yet.

"The disaster drill is designed to find weaknesses in our system in dealing with such a disaster," he said. "We've had very good comments from the evaluators. And we will continue to review all the evaluations and find those areas" of weakness and make adjustments.

According to FAA regulations, the drill is required once every three year to ensure "prompt response to all emergency situations to minimize the possibility and extent of personal injury and property damage."

Shave and a haircut ...

50 years later, barber gives first customer another haircut

A friendship that lasts more than 50 years is hard to come across these days, and so is a 50-cent haircut. Frank Ordener, who has been cutting hair for 50 years, gave a special cut Tuesday afternoon to his longtime friend Bobby (Clown) Williams.

"Clown was my very first paid customer," Ordener said. "He paid 50 cents then and got a freebie today, so that's 25 cents apiece. That's the best bargain he's gotten in 50 years."

Ordener got his nickname during a basketball game his junior year in high school when he stole the ball from an opponent, ran down the court and bounced the ball trying to make it in the basket instead of shooting. His coach jumped up and yelled, "All right, you clown!"

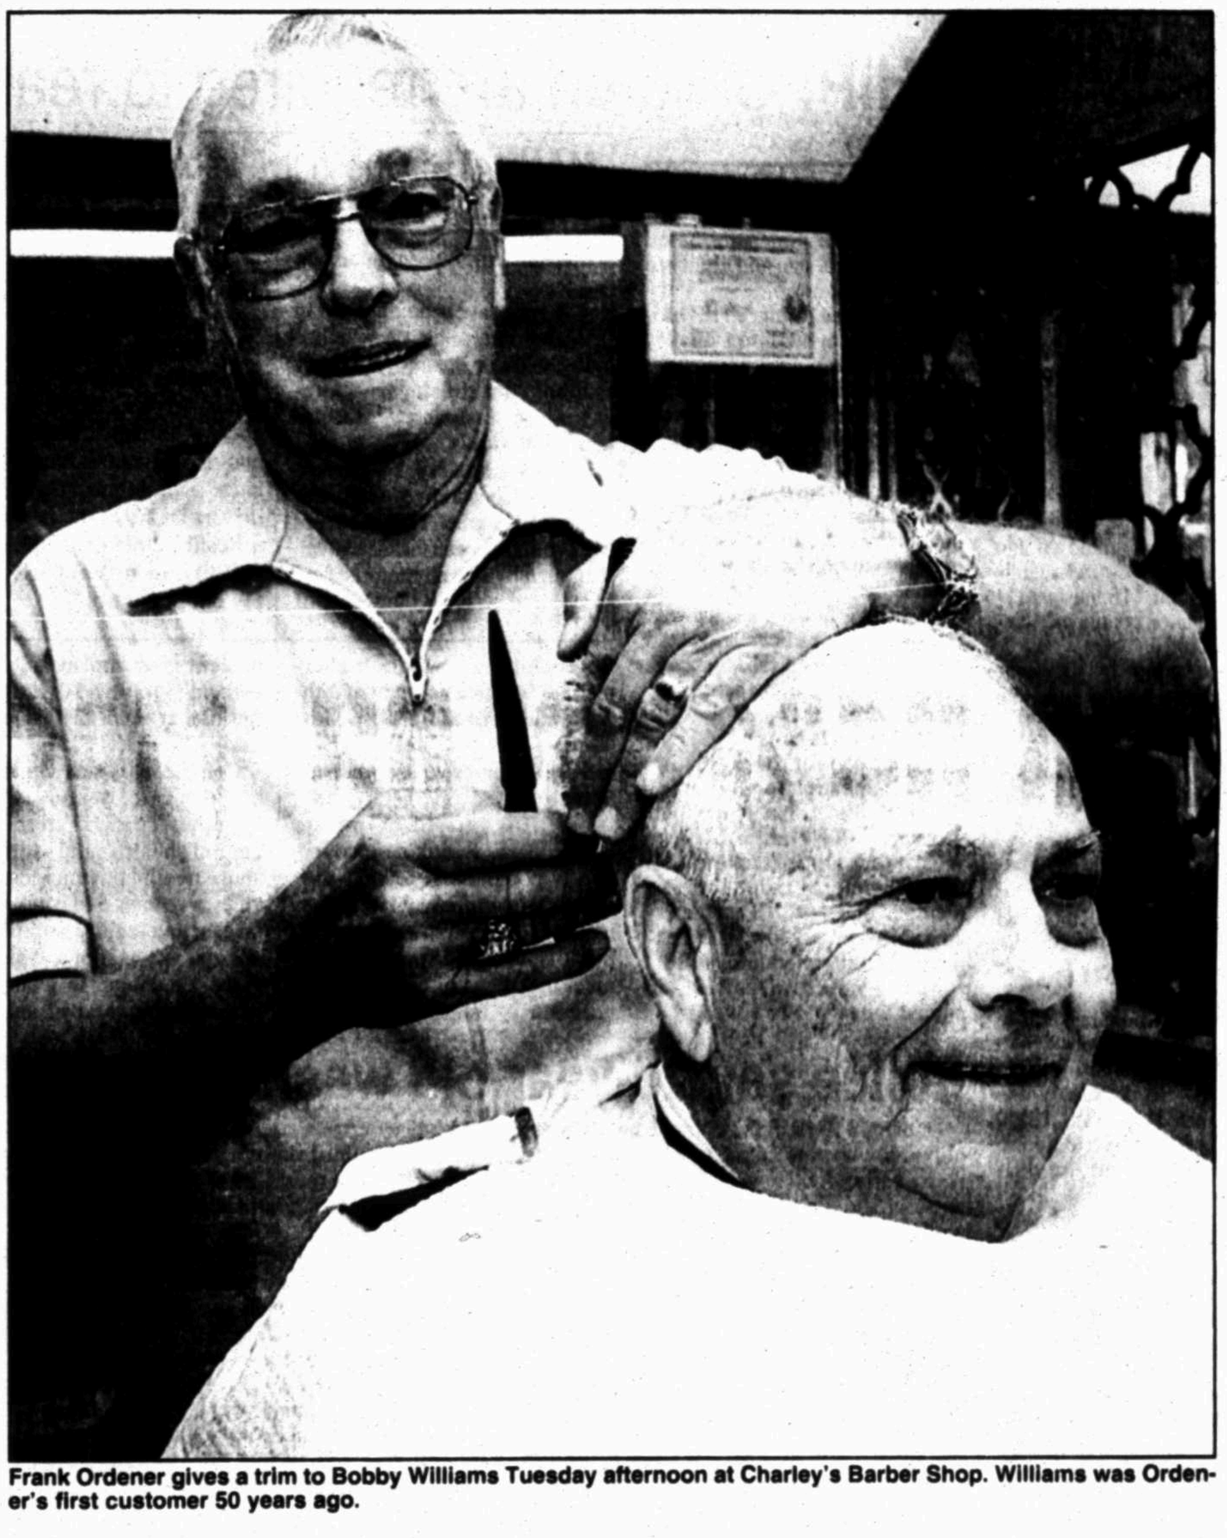

"After that he lived up to his name," Ordener joked.

Ordener and Williams graduated high school in 1949 in Archer City. After graduation, Ordener began barber school and Williams began working in the oil field. Both joined the Marine Corps after a few years of work.

"After I left the military I went back to the oil field," Williams said. "In 1967 I had an accident where my rig came into contact with a 7,200-voltage line. I lost my right leg below my knee and three fingers on my right hand. After 42 days in the hospital and rehab, I went back to work in the office as a clerk. I retired as the field production superintendent in 1994."

Now Williams spends his time playing golf in his hometown of Archer City and traveling with his wife, Donna. He stopped in Midland

Midland meeting on solid waste to be 1 of 3 in state

Questions about trash disposal or recycling?

Texans with comments or questions about the Texas Natural Resource and Conservation Commission's (TNRCC) 2001-2005 solid waste plan are invited to attend a public hearing Thursday at 1:30 p.m. at 2910 La Force Blvd. near Midland International Airport.

The Midland meeting will be one of only three in the state this week. The two other meetings will be held in Austin and Arlington July 19 and 21.

Steve Dayton, team leader for the waste planning team for TNRCC, said attendees of such meetings are usually members of local government, but said members of the public are invited to attend.

"Most comments are from solid waste managers and local officials. Most of the time the public has not gotten involved. We deal with governments in doing regional waste management plans," Dayton said.

Dayton said the proposed plan differs from the current plan in that it includes policy and data on industrial waste disposal, whereas the current and previous plans concerned themselves with municipal solid waste only. And Dayton said, "This plan is a more streamlined version of the previous plan."

In its press release regarding the meeting the TNRCC stated that 35 percent of all waste in Texas is recycled.

These statistics conflict with the city of Midland's recycling report. Since the city began its new recycling program in October, 4.58 percent is the most the city has recycled in any one month.

Ken Jones, director of utilities for the city of Midland, said the TNRCC number is for all waste, not just household waste.

"That includes car bodies, railroad cars, metal buildings. For household waste (statewide) it's about 15 percent," Jones said.

Jones said recycling was heavy in 1998 and 1999 with Recycle Midland recycling more than 10 percent of all solid waste in the city. In 1998 Recycle Midland recycled 16,175 tons and in 1999 it recycled 13,750 tons, Jones said.

But, sorting through all trash for recyclables proved costly for the city of Midland, which late last year changed

Insurance commissioner discusses trends in industry

Kristine Aleman

Texas Insurance Commissioner Jose Montemayor spoke to the Midland Association of Insurance Agents Tuesday afternoon and said such ventures out of Austin improves his "quality of decision making" because it helps him know "what's going on" among regular Texans.

Montemayor was appointed insurance commissioner for the state of Texas in January of 1999 by Gov. George W. Bush.

He retired in 1993 as a major in the U.S. Air Force and worked in the Texas Department of Insurance from 1993 to 1995.

Montemayor

Discussing the future of the insurance industry, Montemayor said there are 2,500 insurance companies and 200,000 insurance agents in Texas and soon those companies will be able to log on through the Texas Department of Insurance Web site to view the status of licenses and appointments.

"Companies will be able to renew agents and eventually process applications online," Montemayor said.

That, he said, will ultimately help Texans get the best coverage they can.

Changes will also occur through financial services and modernization, he said. That includes destroying all barriers between banks, insurance and securities.

"It's my strong belief that agents bring value-added capacity and potential to the industry," Montemayor said. "We'll continue to see consolidation of the industry."

Other renovations will focus on insurance privacy policies such as the "fingerprinting" of new agents and regulations of individual industries.

Montemayor also discussed problems with health and car insurance in Texas and the high rate of uninsured Texans. There are five million residents in Texas without health insurance, he said.

"Our primary focus is mandates," Montemayor said. "And the effects of man-

Many mothers and fathers in the community struggle daily to provide the basic necessities for their children. Medical assistance is an important factor in maintaining a child's well-being, of course, but it can be a difficult task to accomplish. However, with a new health insurance program, local children will be given the opportunity to receive the help they need.

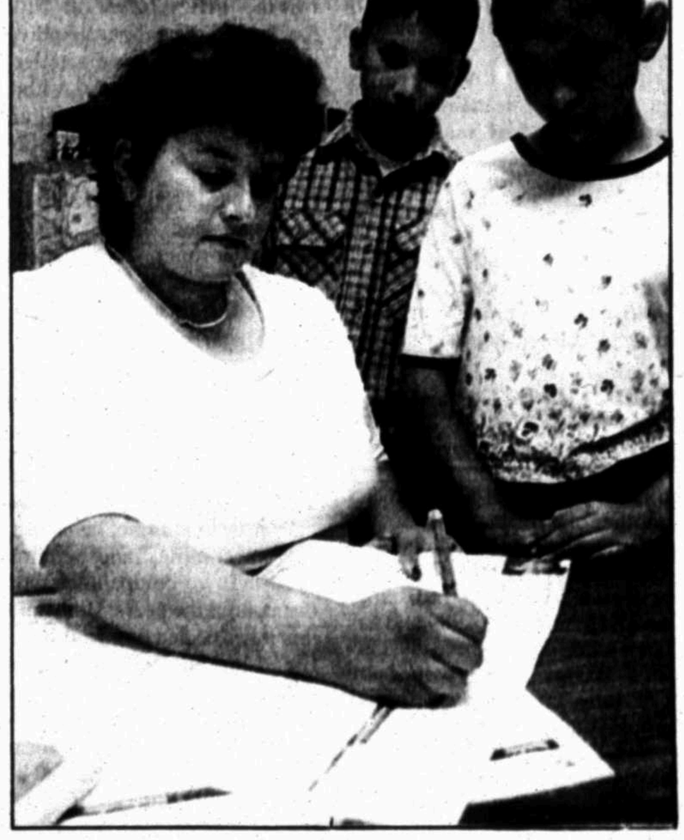

Midland is celebrating Children's Health Insurance Month this month after the presentation of a proclamation by Mayor Bobby Burns at the June 27 City Council meeting. CHIP, short for Children's Health Insurance Program, is the new statewide campaign to provide all children in Texas with medical care.

CHIP went into effect May 1. It was launched in the statewide program TexCare Partnership, which offers three separate children's health insurance programs at a price that fits the budgets of lower- to middle-class Texas families.

There are an estimated 1.4 million uninsured children in Texas who may now qualify for affordable health insurance.

CHIP is designed for families who earn too much mon-

Police Reports

Athlete arrested

Midland police on Monday arrested a 20-year-old man in connection with a sexual assault.

According to police spokeswoman Tina Jauz, a woman in her 30s told police that a man raped her at a north Midland apartment complex on July 9. She knew the perpetrator, police said.

Thomas

On Monday, police arrested Gary Paul Thomas on one charge of sexual assault in connection with the case. He was released from the Midland County jail after posting a $15,000 bond Tuesday.

Thomas is an outfielder with the Midland RockHounds baseball team.

Border shooting

Last week's shooting at a Border Patrol substation in Presidio does not appear to be directed at two agents who were inside the building at the time, FBI officials said Tuesday.

"We're treating it like a random act against the Border Patrol instead of the two individuals," said Bill Vanderland, supervisory senior agent of the Midland FBI office.

The Midland FBI is among a handful of federal and state authorities probing the Thursday morning shooting. At about 4 a.m., shots were fired at a building in which two Border Patrol agents were working.

Names of the agents have not been released because the motive of the attack is still unknown. No suspects were found after agents searched the area, officials said.

An investigation continues, Vanderland said.

"At some point in the near future, we will find out who did this and why," Vanderland said.

Adolphus will be closed for a few weeks after fire damage

DALLAS (AP) — Electrical engineers will spend the next few weeks repairing the historic Adolphus Hotel where a four-alarm electrical fire last week caused about $35,000 in damage.

The 88-year-old Adolphus — Dallas' oldest hotel — will be closed until the week of July 31 or Aug. 7, engineering consultants told the hotel's management. It will be the first time the 27-story downtown building has been closed for anything but remodeling since it opened, Adolphus spokesman David Davis told The Dallas Morning News.

A fire Friday forced 80 guests to relocate to other upscale hotels, including the Fairmont Hotel and the Wyndham Anatole Hotel. During the weekend, employees scrambled to find other accommodations for new guests. The hotel was scheduled to be completely booked starting Wednesday with the Mary Kay Cosmetics convention, which ends Aug. 5.

The damage was limited to the basement, where the fire started, and the first two floors, which had smoke damage. None of the hotel's historical features were damaged.

Officials said the fire's cause was an electrical panel, which they are still investigating. Friday's heat — 96 degrees when the fire started around 12:30 p.m. — may have contributed to the electrical problem, fire officials said.

Adolphus officials said they expect insurance to cover lost revenue during the repairs, but it may not cover lost wages for employees who are temporarily out of work. The hotel's 50 salaried employees are working from remote locations, but only a dozen of its 350 hourly workers are able to work, said Karen Ranker, human resources director.

Some of those employees are voluntarily taking vacation, while others are taking jobs in other hotels or filing for unemployment.

FBI issues arrest warrant in robbery

TEXARKANA, Ark. (AP) — The FBI said Tuesday that an arrest warrant had been issued for a man suspected of robbing a bank branch at Texarkana the day before.

Russell Lynn "Rusty" Lee, 36, of Texarkana is named in the warrant, the FBI said, as "the individual believed to be responsible for robbing" a branch of Commercial National Bank on Monday.

An FBI news release said the bank robbery occurred about 9:45 a.m. at a branch on Stateline Avenue, separating the Arkansas and Texas sides of the city.

Brian Marshall, spokesman for the FBI's office at Little Rock, said the robber displayed no weapon, but gave a teller a note demanding money. Authorities declined to say if any money was obtained, or how much.

On Tuesday, the FBI said Lee was last seen driving a 1973 Dodge Coronet, Texas license tag KTK-92W, and was believed to be accompanied by his 15-year-old son.

Ordener came to Midland in 1963 and spent 24 years working at Town and Country Barber Shop. He retired in 1989 and has been working part-time at Charlie's Barber Shop, owned by Charlotte Fitzpatrick, a former employee of Ordener.

"This haircut probably should have been a little better than last time," Ordener said. "It probably wasn't."

Williams joked that his hair is still the same style it was 50 years ago. It is an antique, he said.

Homecomings and reunions keep the two companions close throughout the years. Both agree that it has been a fun, worthwhile friendship and look forward to the next trip to the barber shop.

"We've had some hard times," Ordener said, "but there are no two people who have enjoyed living more than him and I."

CHIP: Children are required to reapply every year

ey to qualify for Medicaid health care, but cannot afford to buy private insurance. Rates are based on the family's size and ability to pay.

"We applied for the CHIP program because we didn't qualify for Medicaid," said Midlander mother of two Lisa Martinez. "Going to the doctor became really expensive. My daughter Michelle (may have) lupus. Now with the insurance we'll be able to treat her. It won't be as hard on me. We were looking at coming up with thousands of dollars at once."

After their father passed away, Gabriel, 12, and Michelle, 11, did not qualify for medical assistance. However, CHIP considered Ms. Martinez, and her income, as the children's sole provider, and they qualified for the program.

"A tremendous number of children don't have medical insurance or Medicaid," said West Texas Opportunities Midland Director Linda Ortiz, a member of CHIP. "The premiums are very, very low. The maximum monthly premium is $18."

Many families will only pay an annual fee of $15 to cover all of their children, while higher-income families will pay monthly premiums of $15 or $18. Most families will also have co-payments for doctor visits, prescription drugs and emergency care.

CHIP is offered by private health plans. Health care coverage is comparable to that provided to families who obtain insurance through employers, but it is designed specifically to meet the needs of children. The program is funded through 75 percent government aid and 25 percent from the Texas tobacco settlement, said CHIP Outreach Coordinator Jan Mann.

CHIP covers services such as hospital care, surgery, X-rays, therapies, prescription drugs, mental health and substance abuse treatment, emergency services, eye tests and glasses, dental care and regular health check-ups and vaccinations. It also provides coverage in connection with chemotherapy and teenage pregnancy.

Children who enroll in CHIP receive 12 months of continuous coverage and are required to reapply each year. To qualify, a child must be a Texas resident, a US citizen or legal permanent resident, under age 19, uninsured for at least 90 days and living in a family that meets the income requirements. Approximately 500,000 uninsured Texas children are estimated to qualify for the CHIP insurance.

A family can exceed the income limits if it is forced to bear child care expenses, pay for the care of a disabled adult, pay alimony or child support or if there are other work-related expenses. However, if a family's income falls within Medicaid limits, the children cannot enroll in CHIP.

"It takes a whole village to raise a child," said Mrs. Mann. "If we don't take care of other children, why take care of our own?"

Families can receive information and CHIP applications by calling 1-800-647-6558 or by contacting their local West Texas Opportunities, Inc. offices at (915) 687-3003 or (915) 367-3332.

dates of employer policies on rates."

A mandate is anything akin to an order, or an overwhelming wish or desire, said Jerry Johns, president of Southwestern Insurance Information Service.

Approximately 21 percent — about one in five — of vehicles registered Texas do not have liability insurance, even though by law all motorists are required to have that level of coverage. The percent climbs even higher — in some cases over 50 percent — the closer one gets to the Mexican border, he said.

"Texas has one of the most deplorable number of uninsured drivers. Many people choose to act irresponsibly and drive without auto insurance," said Johns. "Uninsured drivers is one of the most significant problems facing anyone driving in Texas. It's simply out of control."

Police say 20-year-old wasn't target of deadly drive-by

CORPUS CHRIST (AP) — The 20-year-old man who was gunned down outside his house early Monday wasn't the intended target of a shooting that left him dying in his mother's arms, nor was the shooting gang-related, police said Tuesday.

Moises Elizalde Jr. was found crumpled in the driveway at his home Monday morning, bleeding from bullet wounds in the chest, his mother Linda Elizalde said.

As the mother cradled her only son, the gunmen drove by a second time and opened fire. Linda Elizalde crouched down and was not struck. At least 20 shots were fired at them, police said. Moises Elizalde died shortly afterward.

He was the third shooting victim to die in the streets of Corpus Christi in less than a week, the Corpus Christi Caller-Times Web site reported.

In the Elizalde shooting, police arrested three suspects — ages 18, 20 and 21 — in a small sedan with two high-caliber handguns.

Mario Padia, 18, and William Marquez, 21, who affidavits say were the only ones to fire shots during the drive-by shooting, aren't classified by police as gang members, said Cmdr. U.B. Alvarado of the Corpus Christi Police Department.

Nicolus R. Smith, 20, who affidavits say was driving the car used in the shooting, was a gang member, Alvarado said.

Although Elizalde knew his assailants, he was not their intended target, Alvarado said. Alvarado said the shooting stemmed from an argument between one of Elizalde's friends and an another man, but police did not identify either man.

Padia, Marquez and Smith were each arrested soon after the shooting on charges of murder, four counts of aggravated assault and one count of deadly conduct, according to police affidavits. Their bond was $100,000 each.

They remained at the Nueces County Jail Tuesday night.

Slow Lotto sales continue; glitch caused minimal problems

AUSTIN (AP) — The company that runs the Texas Lottery said Tuesday it's unlikely any players were impacted by a computer glitch during the first two years of the game, and lottery commissioners warned the company to be honest about future problems.

The error, first discovered in 1994, could have caused winners to be overpaid or underpaid because some ticket sales were recorded twice. Because prizes are determined by ticket sales, the payouts could have been affected.

According to a preliminary audit released Tuesday, the glitch resulted in $18,932 in overcharges to 5,035 lottery retailers, which will be reimbursed by lottery operator Gtech Corp.

No Pick 3 or Lotto Texas winners were negatively affected by the computer error, said lottery executive director Linda Cloud.

"At no time was the integrity and security of any Texas Lottery game ever compromised," Cloud said.

Lottery officials said they believed the problem was corrected shortly after it was first discovered, but Gtech said it found evidence the glitch could have been more widespread than originally believed.

Gtech did not initially reveal a similar problem with its lottery in the United Kingdom, and the Texas glitch was discovered by lottery staff, Cloud said.

Although Gtech is cooperating with Texas officials about the computer glitch, the agency had strong words for the operator's officials who attended the meeting.

"The relationship with your company is very important to the commission. You are a big part of the Texas Lottery," said chairman C. Tom Clowe Jr. "If your company were to withhold information from this commission we would consider that a very serious breach of trust."

"I assure you under my watch as executive director that incorrect or inaccurate reporting of any lottery transaction, for whatever reason, is simply unacceptable," Cloud said.

The commissioners said they would review the preliminary report and await final results before deciding any possible action.

Also on Tuesday, the latest lottery figures showed that sluggish sales continued — a problem officials hope to correct with a harder-to-win Lotto that begins Wednesday.

Lotto Texas sales are down 23 percent so far this fiscal year with average weekly sales of $10.9 million. In the same period a year ago, sales were $14.1 million and nearly $18 million in 1997.

The commission predicts the change to the twice-weekly game will increase sales $166 million annually. Fewer winners results in grand prizes rolling over week after week into larger jackpots that should entice more players.

The three-member commission voted unanimously in May to institute the first major alteration in the game since it began in 1992.

Beginning Wednesday, players must match six numbers from a pool of 54 instead of from the current 50.

The change, which decreases the odds of winning from 1 in 15.8 million to 1 in 25.8 million, is being criticized by some lottery enthusiasts.

"Boo, hiss, hiss," said longtime player Del Wood. "If they are going to increase the odds, I'm not going to play. I'll take my $3 and buy my scratch-offs."

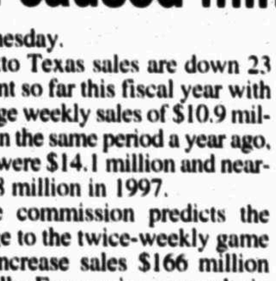

Wood is not alone, said George Alvarez, a clerk at Austin's Nau's Pharmacy.

"I don't see the excitement yet," Alvarez said. "If anything, people are upset that the odds are increasing. They don't understand that the jackpot will escalate more quickly."

Wednesday's jackpot is estimated at $21 million.

STATE IN BRIEF

■ Former copy editor found dead

ARLINGTON, Va — The body of a man found dead in a used car lot early Saturday has been identified as Stars and Stripes editor David Butler, a former sports copy editor for The Houston Post.

Butler, 42, lived in the Colonial Village area of Arlington, a suburb of Washington, D.C. The cause of death remains under investigation, said Arlington police, who suspect foul play.

Butler's body was found in the Triple-E Auto Sales lot. Colleagues at his paper had feared the worst after police came to their office with Butler's business card, which they'd found. Co-workers say Butler normally worked late on Fridays and took the train home.

Funeral arrangements were pending in Butler's native San Antonio. A Stars and Stripes newsroom memorial also is planned.

Butler was a longtime copy editor on the Post sports desk until the newspaper was closed and purchased by the Hearst Corp. in 1995. He joined Stars and Stripes soon afterward, spending three years in Europe before arriving at the Washington office.

■ Cable cut disrupts service

DALHART — Crews working on an XIT Telephone Cooperative cable near Dalhart accidentally cut a fiber optic line, disrupting some long distance, cellular and Internet service in the Oklahoma and Texas panhandles for several hours.

Altus Jones, plant manager for the company, said Tuesday or about two hours early Tuesday so that permanent splices could be made.

Jones said the cut occurred on a line near a spot east of Dalhart where the Texas Highway Department is widening U.S. 54. He said telephone crews were digging out the line to prepare to take it down for replacement when it was accidentally cut.

The outage affected the XIT service area around Dalhart and some Panhandle Telephone Cooperative traffic from the Guymon and other areas of the Oklahoma Panhandle. Local service was not disrupted.

■ Woman arrested for having sex

HOUSTON — A North Carolina woman has been arrested on charges of having sex with a 15-year-old Houston-area boy she met on the Internet.

Tara Y. Hulin, 31, was charged Monday with sexual assault of a child and solicitation of a minor.

The boy's mother reported the relationship to the Harris County Precinct 4 Constable's office after the she asked Hulin to limit her contacts with her son.

Authorities said Hulin traveled to Harris County and engaged in multiple sexual acts with the boy.

She was arrested by the FBI on Monday in Thomasville, N.C., and will be extradited to Harris County to stand trial. Bond was set at $200,000.

■ Body removed from chimney

MOUNT PLEASANT — Police have removed a decomposed body that was mysteriously lodged in a chimney at a marriage counseling service, and the corpse is on its way to the Dallas County Medical Examiner's Office for an autopsy.

The "substantially skeletal" body, which was discovered and reported Monday night, was dislodged from the inside of the building around 1 p.m. Tuesday after a four-and-a-half hour effort, Mount Pleasant Police Chief Richard Parker said. It appears to be a white or Hispanic male who somehow got stuck above the flue, and apparently has been there for an extensive period of time, officials said.

"It appears as if the individual crawled into the chimney from the outside, and got stuck on the inside," Parker said.

Parker said foul play has not been ruled out, but does not appear likely. The person may have been a burglar, or was trying to hide from someone, he said.

"However he got in t'entification on the body to avoid damaging it. Parker declined to comment further until he receives a report from the medical examiner.

The owner of the building, which was converted from a house in January, called police Monday night after discovering what appeared to be a body in his chimney. Officers could see the body from the top and the bottom of the chimney, officials said.

Inmate found dead in his cell; officials suspect foul play

By Mary Lee Grant
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Prison officials on Tuesday were investigating the overnight death of a Terrell Unit prisoner who was found on the floor of his cell with a shoestring around his neck.

Authorities believe James Wilson, 27, was killed by another inmate in what could be the latest in a series of violent events that recently have disrupted the nation's second-largest prison system.

Wilson was found at 9:30 p.m. Monday lying on his back as guards made their rounds, said Larry Todd, spokesman for the Texas Department of Criminal Justice.

Corrections officers unsuccessfully attempted to revive Wilson, who was pronounced dead at the Livingston-area unit's infirmary at 10:30 p.m., Todd said.

Wilson arrived in prison Nov. 20, 1998, on a five-year sentence for burglary in Lubbock County. He previously had tried to escape from confinement there, Todd said.

Although the Terrell Unit houses death row prisoners, it also holds prisoners of all security levels. Wilson was a minimum-security prisoner, Todd said.

Terrell inmates were confined to their cells in a lockdown Tuesday and prison officials were interviewing a suspect. Killing a fellow inmate can be a capital offense and could result in the death penalty.

"We will interview inmates who live on that particular pod of the unit and we hope to develop a case from those statements," Todd said, adding that Wilson had no cellmate.

The investigation will include determining how many guards were on duty at the time, Todd said. The unit was staffed within policy guidelines, Todd added, but he doesn't know how many guards were working when Wilson died.

Prison guards have blamed shortages in their ranks for an increase in violence. Between 25,000 and 30,000 guards monitor about 150,000 inmates in Texas, officials said.

Guards also have lobbied for a pay raise. Many cite low pay as the reason for several openings at some units.

Violent attacks in Texas prisons have increased more than tenfold in the past decade, a trend blamed on lengthier sentences, elimination of mandatory parole, fewer paroles and the strengthening of prison gangs.

According to TDCJ figures, the 923 percent increase in reports of violent events, from 1,434 in 1990 to 14,669 in 1999, has outpaced the jump in the inmate population, which rose 202 percent, from 49,209 to 148,734 over the same period.

Recent months have been particularly violent for the state's prison system:

■ Last month, a razor-wielding death row inmate badly cut volunteer chaplain's hand in the Terrell Unit. The prisoner, Juan Soria, is scheduled to die next week.

■ Also in June in separate attacks, a guard at the Connally Unit, in South Texas, was stabbed six times by a prisoner and another officer suffered severe head injuries when she was beaten while searching a cell.

■ A March stabbing death of an inmate by a fellow prisoner at the Coffield Unit, near Palestine, resulted in a statewide lockdown while guards searched for weapons.

■ In February, two murderers armed with metal rods took a guard hostage for 13 hours. They surrendered after prison officials allowed them to meet with death penalty opponents. One of the inmates, Ponchai Wilkerson, spit up a handcuff key moments before his execution March 14.

■ Last December, guard Daniel Nagle was stabbed to death at the McConnell Unit near Beeville, becoming the first Texas corrections officer killed in 17 years.

Volunteers help work on 14-mile water line in race against time

THROCKMORTON (AP) — A 14-mile pipeline is a potential lifeline for residents running out of water in this Northwest Texas town.

As Lake Throckmorton's level drops, residents and volunteers who've answered calls for help in exchange for room and board are in a race against time to complete the line before the town's sole water supply dries up. They only have about two months.

Throckmorton Mayor John Kunkel said the first day of what has been labeled "Operation Big Step" on Monday was "busy, hectic. But were off to a pretty good start."

There's a lot at stake. Currently, residents can't wash their cars or water their plants. Gov. George W. Bush has declared the parched town about 60 miles northeast of Abilene a disaster area.

And the job's so big that residents can't do it themselves, despite an $800,000 state grant. So they issued a call for help that about 50 volunteers have answered so far from across the state.

"Our biggest need right now is big ditching equipment," Kunkel told the Abilene Reporter-News. "The crews have done as much as they can do, but we need two or three more big ditchers."

Other volunteers, including Red Cross workers, served meals, drinks and snacks for front-line workers. They also provided shelter.

Leaders in the town of 1,036 residents have been working since September to secure a new water source. Last week, a breakthrough came when the city of Graham, about 35 miles away, agreed to sell water to Throckmorton as an emergency backup.

Now, Throckmorton's public works officials must complete the pipeline to Elbert, linking with the Fort Belknap Water Supply Corp. to get the Graham water. Graham officials said they were 35 percent low, but wanted to prevent their neighbors from running out of water.

Throckmorton Public Works Director Steve Bowlin said he was confident of beating the deadline.

Throckmorton is one of 129 Texas towns and cities with water restrictions. The state in February declared Throckmorton County and 94 others drought disaster areas.

Herb Davison of Texarkana learned about Throckmorton's water crisis on television and drove to help. A backhoe crew arrived from Comanche.

"Nothing brings a group of people together faster than someone needing help," said Golden Elkins, a retired plumbing contractor from Lake Graham. "People don't mind kicking up a sweat to help."

A crew of Texas Baptist Men from the Wichita Archer Clay Baptist Association set up shop to prepare meals for volunteers. American Red Cross volunteers from Abilene and Wichita Falls delivered meals and local women baked desserts to go along with them.

Under four awnings, residents and Red Cross workers handed out water and drinks as temperatures once again climbed toward the century mark.

Three churches received 75 cots for volunteers' lodging, said Owen Armbruster, a Red Cross volunteer from Abilene. He said more volunteers were expected later this week.

People are opening their homes to out-of-town workers and the school is offering its dressing rooms for showers, said Charles O. Fisher, pastor of Throckmorton's First Baptist Church.

"About the time you think the world is getting hard," said Fisher, "you are reminded how many people really want to help out."

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Wednesday, July 19, 2000:

Reach for the stars this year. Forget the expression "I can't." You need to let go of someone or something that has hindered your growth and development. Open up to progressive thinking and more creative approaches. Take classes. Grow from travel and new experiences. Instincts direct you, so trust your intuitive senses. If you are single, you meet someone special who helps you grow in a new direction. However, you might not want to share this relationship with others. It will have a clandestine element, or the person could be unavailable. If you are attached, the two of you need to spend a lot of time alone together. PISCES anchors you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★ Keep your own counsel as you rock from one feeling to another. A financial restriction puts the kibosh on plans. Discussions open up a problem. Take time doing your research. Analyze different options. Do research on the Internet. Tonight: You don't always have to be a chatty Cathy!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ Your attitude causes stress with an authority figure or a key project. Try to focus on what you expect and want from a situation. Staying goal-oriented helps you skip over a hassle. Expenses could multiply, but they might be necessary to bring the results you need. Tonight: Find your friends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Another's perspective doesn't sit right with you. Put your best foot forward and refuse to give in to negativity. Your sense of humor helps co-workers and bosses lighten up. You open doors when you remain positive. Discussions revolve around work. Tonight: In the limelight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ A partner's withdrawal triggers more difficulties than you had anticipated. Let go of an important project or goal for now. Dig into information and do research. You will find a way to bypass this problem and build a stronger bridge. Use your intuition. Tonight: Explore the Net.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Pressured by a professional situation, you seek out a trusted friend or partner. You see once more the wisdom of two minds working as one. Success comes from your collaboration. Take time to discuss other issues as well. Make an important meeting. Tonight: Do something special for another.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ News early in the day could upset work and your sense of direction. Allow others to open up and share what is on their minds. Recognize the efforts of another who means well. A must appearance draws new people into your life. Maintain professional decorum. Tonight: Where the crowds are.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ Rely on ingenuity and creativity when another puts a dent in your plans. Finances are strained. Make solid financial decisions. Design a budget, with an eye to the future. Allow greater flex in your work. Avoid making snap decisions. Tonight: Off to the gym.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ Pressure builds. You allow others to push your buttons. Stop, take a deep breath and move past a personal issue. Creativity helps you resolve a financial problem. Another surprises you with his willingness to pitch in and solve a problem. Tonight: Celebrate the night.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Anchor in. You have a lot to do, and you could have a difficult time getting going. Another intrigues you with his actions and words. Respond! Listen to someone else's point of view. Deal with finances. Add to security. Follow your inner voice. Tonight: Order in.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Deal with a touchy associate or loved one. Say no to a moneymaking investment or deal that carries a risk, even though another could let you know his disappointment. Keep communication flowing. Charge into work. You accomplish a lot. Tonight: Clear out errands.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★ Another lets you down. Handle a domestic problem before even considering work. Dig into financial facts before presenting a work-related idea. The costs could be prohibitive. Brainstorm. You find another way to the same results. Tonight: Your treat.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ You might be slow to start, but once you get going, it might be difficult to stop you. Your energy renews with each decision. Remain confident. Use your assets to draw more of what you want. Examine long-term goals for yourself. Tonight: Order in.

This deal is from a Pro-Am game. Follow the bidding and play, then decide who was the pro and who the amateur.

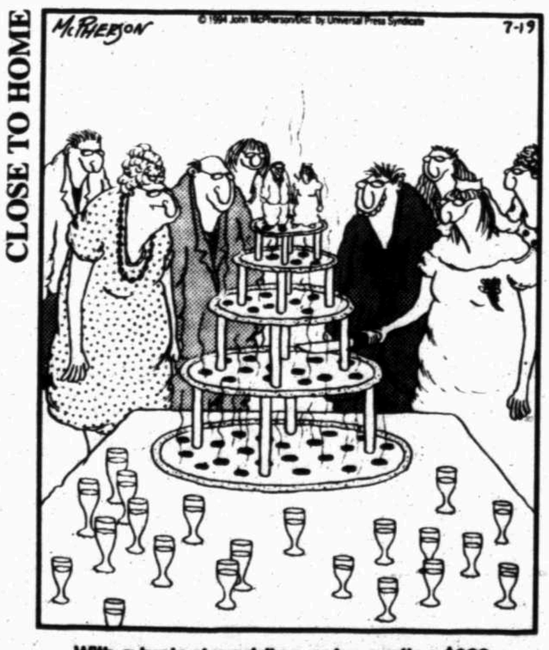

North-South bid well to the only game which had a chance. North's hand was too strong for a two-spade reopening bid. The double not only showed power, but allowed for the possibility of South opting to defend for penalties. The three-heart cuebid asked for a stopper, and South confirmed one by converting to three no-trump.

West led the top of partner's suit and East encouraged with the six. One play after winning the 10 of hearts, declarer cashed the king of clubs then took the finesse. The operation was a success but the patient died. When East discarded on this trick, declarer could not run the suit, so declarer had to settle for seven tricks.

North's bidding and East's defense are clearly of expert caliber. The same cannot be said, however, of South's play. East's pre-empt made it likely that the defender held a singleton somewhere, and the most likely spot for it was the club suit, North-South's longest combined fit. If that were the case, the odds are 4-to-1 in favor of it being a low card rather than the queen.

Taking that into account, at trick two declarer should have led a low club and finessed the nine. When that held, declarer could return to hand with the king of clubs to repeat the finesse and bring in the club suit to land nine tricks!

Marianne Gingrich considers tell-all book

ATLANTA — Marianne Gingrich is considering writing a tell-all book about her ex-husband, her attorney says.

Gingrich, 48, was divorced from former House Speaker Newt Gingrich in December.

At the time, attorneys for Newt Gingrich, 57, acknowledged that he had been in a relationship with Callista Bisek, a 33-year-old former congressional aide. Gingrich and Bisek are to be married Aug. 18.

Marianne Gingrich's attorney, John Mayoue, said Tuesday she has not committed to the book yet, but is looking into the idea.

"Right now, all I can say is that she is exploring the possibilities," he said Tuesday.

Marianne Gingrich also disclosed Tuesday that she has suffered from neurological problems that could be a precursor to multiple sclerosis.

LOS ANGELES — Cher faces a lawsuit in connection with a remodeling project on her Malibu mansion.

A construction manager is suing the singer and actress, claiming he was harassed by co-managers for the principal contractor because he is gay. The lawsuit also alleges illegal immigrants were used to remodel the home.

Salvador Sampino filed the lawsuit Monday, seeking unspecified damages from Cher and the home-building business.

Messages left for Cher's attorney, publicist, and manager were not immediately returned.

FORT RILEY, Kan. — Miss America Heather French is calling attention to the importance of the military.

"I wanted to become Miss America so I could travel across the country with this message — the job you're doing should be held in the highest esteem," French told Fort Riley troops who are departing for Kuwait.

French, 25, from Kentucky, is the daughter of a Marine wounded in Vietnam. Her sister is a soldier and she has many uncles who serve in the military as well.

After all the applause, shouting and a few whistles, the 1,200 soldiers expressed gratitude for her visit and invited her to pay a visit to Kuwait.

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — Dennis Rodman pleaded guilty Tuesday to drunken driving and will attend a three-month alcohol education program.

Rodman entered the plea through his attorney, Paul Meyer. The former NBA bad boy wasn't required to be in court.

Rodman will pay about $2,000 in fines and fees and will have his driving privileges restricted, prosecutor Tony Ferrentino said.

Rodman's blood-alcohol level was 0.15 percent — almost twice California's legal limit of 0.08 percent — when he was arrested Dec. 22 while behind the wheel of a Bentley after leaving a shopping and restaurant complex.

Rodman also pleaded guilty to driving without a valid California license. At the time, he was driving with a Texas license. Rodman lives in Newport Beach.

LOS ANGELES — Brooke Shields is heading back to the altar.

The "Suddenly Susan" TV star was vacationing in Mexico last weekend when her fiance, Chris Henchy, proposed.

"He took her away for the weekend and asked her on Saturday night. I don't really know any of the details, but she did say yes," Shields' publicist, Mia Ricchiuti, said Monday.

Henchy, 37, was a producer on NBC's canceled "Battery Park" series.

Word of the couple's engagement surfaced after New York City jeweler Stephen Russell announced he had designed Shields' engagement ring. He described it as "an antique cushion-cut diamond ring set in platinum and diamond mounting."

MEADVILLE, Pa. — Hold the mayo. Contemporary Christian singer Steven Curtis Chapman prefers Miracle Whip, lowfat chips and fresh fruit.

And the show can't go on unless members of the country group Alabama have vanilla ice cream on their fruit cobbler and Tootsie Roll pops.

The culinary perks are a must for some of the celebrities scheduled to perform at the Crawford County Fair next month. In addition to the pay they receive for performing, the celebrities' contracts call for specific food for their dressing rooms.

Loretta Lynn and George Jones ask for hot meals for their band and crew, as well as a vegetable tray.

And when the show is over, Alabama wants pizza, chicken wings and sodas to take with them.

Oklahoma prepares to execute five-time killer

By Kelly Kurt
Associated Press

TULSA, Okla — Eleven years ago, Gregg Francis Braun left his parents' Garden City, Kan., condominium and became a killer. If only, his father says, clocks could be turned back — including the one ticking toward his son's execution.

If Gregg Braun's execution proceeds as scheduled, he will be led to Oklahoma's death chamber on Wednesday, exactly 11 years after he went on a four-state murder spree that left five people dead.

"They're going to kill a good man," said Braun's father, Lelyn Braun, of Hays, Kan., who was a prominent Garden City lawyer at the time of the crimes. "And they're going to do it illegally."

Lelyn Braun doesn't defend his son's actions. But he is aiding an effort to win a last-minute stay of Thursday's execution and have him returned to New Mexico to serve a life sentence there. Appeals have been filed in both New Mexico and Oklahoma. The Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals on Monday rejected the request.

Dusty Miller understands why a father would fight for his child. He raised three children to adulthood alone.

But Miller can't comprehend how a 28-year-old Braun could walk into an Ardmore, Okla., floral shop and shoot his sweet-natured wife, Gwendolyn Sue Miller. And Miller doesn't believe a man like that can change as Lelyn Braun claims.

"I don't understand how he could meet somebody like Gwen and still make a decision that the world didn't need her anymore," Miller said Monday.

Gregg Braun received the death penalty in Mrs. Miller's July 21, 1989 murder. Two other women survived being shot in the head during the shop robbery.

His killing spree began two days earlier in Garden City when, riding on an all-day cocaine high, he set out to rob a convenience store and ended up shooting the clerk. He later told police that just after the murder he felt he had to kill again.

The bodies of Barbara Kochendorfer and Mary Rains were found on the same rural road.

The next day, he shot E.P. "Pete" Spurrier while robbing a Pampa, Texas, photo development store. It wasn't until July 23, 1989, just after he shot Geraldine Valdez twice in the head at a Springer, N.M., convenience store that police finally caught up with him.

"You guys must be proud," he told them. "You don't know what kind of famous criminal you caught."

Lelyn Braun says he didn't know this Gregg Braun. Yes, the son he raised had his troubles with drugs. Yes, the youngest Braun ran with the wrong crowd — unlike an older brother who became a prosecutor and another who became a successful businessman.

But Gregg Braun, who graduated Wichita State University with a degree in criminal justice, had seemed ready to get his life on track when he came to live with his parents. The night before the murders his father cooked him a steak. Dinner, however, ended in an argument when Gregg Braun showed up drunk, Lelyn Braun said.

The elder Braun heard about the Garden City murders the next day on the golf course and concluded that roving motorcycle gangs must be to blame. "It can't be Gregg," he thought when he got the call that his son had been arrested.

Gregg Braun received life sentences for the murders in Kansas, Texas and New Mexico.

Lelyn Braun blames the murder spree on a combination of drugs and alcohol. He said he wrote the victims' families to tell them he wished Gregg had never been born.

"I'm sorry it happened," he said. "I only wish to God we could turn the clocks back and undo it."

Gregg Braun's victims share a scrapbook of sorts. A blue-bound report presented to Oklahoma's clemency board is jammed with letters from the victims' families, along with official reports about Braun's crimes.

A letter from Kochendorfer's 17-year-old daughter, Barbara, tells of a teen-ager wanting a mother to comfort her when she cries. Another from 12-year-old Jessica Marion Rains speaks of the mother she never knew. "Sometimes, I just need to know what she was like," she writes.

Some of the letters express forgiveness. Some cry out for justice.

"He is the type of animal that makes the death penalty necessary," wrote Delores Spurrier, whose husband was killed. "The sooner he is put to death, the better off the world will be."

Valdez's daughter, Suzanne Baze, described how her mother volunteered for the Little League and always wore a smile.

"My dad, brother and I had to make the most painful decision we ever had to make," she wrote. "We had to decide whether or not to take my mom off life support."

And there are photos. A young Mrs. Miller on horseback. A smiling couple on their wedding day. A family ski trip. A grave covered in the flowers she loved to share. Miller's letter is to his wife.

"Everyone had a story about you and how much they loved you. And we laughed about you and cried about you. And then, as fast as the nightmare came, it got worse. And you were really gone."

Many of the family members plan to be there to watch Gregg Braun die. Miller plans to attend with his daughter and twin sons, who were 13 and 11 when their mother died.

"I feel so sorry for Gregg's dad," Miller said. "I think we love our children regardless of what they do. But this was not just a little mistake in life."

"He left a tidal wave of people hurting."

Gore criticizes Bush on Texas budget figures

By Suzanne Gamboa
Associated Press

AUSTIN — Al Gore said Tuesday that Texas' latest budget figures looked like a "cooked-up projection" and suggested that problems in Gov. George Bush's home state were a sign of sure trouble ahead if Bush wins the presidency.

The Democratic vice president, trying to make Texas' finances an issue in the presidential contest, spoke from the campaign trail in Tennessee about "Texas' worst budget situation in almost a decade."

Texas officials — and Republican Bush — indicated the state was running a surplus and the only problem was in Democratic distortion.

On Monday, Texas Comptroller Carole Keeton Rylander said the state was projecting a $1.1 billion surplus, more than enough to pay the bills even with a $610 million budget shortfall in the latest estimates.

State Rep. Garnet Coleman, a Houston Democrat, questioned the $610 million figure Tuesday, saying it could well be $750 million or higher.

A Texas Department of Health memo also suggested the figure could be higher, with that agency having about $633 million in over-budget spending. But Randy Washington, the department's deputy commissioner of finance, said the memo was inaccurate.

Ari Fleischer, a Bush campaign spokesman, said Gore was "grasping to an outdated, inaccurate memo to justify another day of negative attacks."

Coleman's comments followed those by state Sen. Mario Gallegos Jr., also a Democrat from Houston, who said the state Legislative Budget Board and other state officials were "cooking the books."

In addition, the Texas Democratic Party alleged that Bush had pushed for a tax cut proposal at the expense of state highway needs. But a highway commission member said the tax cuts didn't affect fuel tax revenues, which are dedicated funding.

While campaigning in Memphis, Tenn., on Tuesday, Gore likened the reports of Texas underestimates to his objections that Bush's national economic proposals could imperil Social Security.

"This is the same borrow-and-hide approach he has used with the Texas budget," Gore said. "Today, we learned about an internal memo that projects a $600 million shortfall in the Texas health care system — adding another problem to Texas's worst budget situation in almost a decade.

Mike Jones, a spokesman for the governor's office, defended the spending plan including tax cuts.

"There was nearly unanimous support for these tax cuts by the Texas Legislature and Texas has a confirmed $1.1 billion surplus that will easily pay for needed budget adjustments and still leave the state with a surplus," he said.

"This is the same budget that has increased teachers' salaries and provided health insurance for more than 420,000 children and cut taxes to small businesses and still leaves our state with a sizable surplus," he said.

Bush said over the weekend that Texas' finances show sound fiscal management. He said of Gore, "What he wants to do is spend time distorting the record."

State Sen. Bill Ratliff, a Mount Pleasant Republican, bristled at the accusation that the budget staff was falsifying numbers.

"This implies intentional distortion of number and in all my years in the Legislature I've never known anyone to accuse the Legislative Budget Board of distorting the numbers and I hope I won't again," Ratliff said.

The Legislative Budget Board is composed of lawmakers who use the comptroller's revenue estimates to develop a basic, two-year state budget as a starting point for legislative debate on state spending.

Ratliff has estimated the shortfall could be as high as $750 million, and he said Tuesday, "I'm hoping I'm being conservative and it's closer to $610 million, but in either case were not close to a deficit."

MEETING: Less than five percent recycled in city

methods. Now, only aluminum cans and paper products contributed by Midlanders to the public school recycling bins are recycled.

The following is the city of Midland's dump totals in tons each of the past five years:

1995 - 124,260 tons
1996 - 116,727 tons
1997 - 123,612 tons
1998 - 111,313 tons
1999 - 96,036 tons

On the surface these numbers suggest waste disposal has decreased. But Jones said the private disposal company, JC Duncan and Company, began dumping its trash in landfills not owned by the city of Midland in 1999, thus accounting for a decrease.

Summer is grilling season

By Kathryn Matthews

NEW YORK (AP) — In-the-closet carnivores can come out now: Meat is back in high favor and fashion. And summer is peak meat-eating season, with grilling, punctuated by Memorial Day, the Fourth of July and Labor Day, in full swing. Recent data from the National Cattlemen's Beef Association say that beef is the most popular meat, followed by chicken and pork.

But successive seasons reflect more than one shift in style and evolving taste. At present, ardent American grill cooks eager to make the most of their sizzling offerings of meat and fish are increasingly turning to Latin-style grilling to fire up the flavor quotient.

BEEFING UP

Latin America's ancient diet consisted primarily of fruits, vegetables, legumes and grains. But the region developed an unrivaled appetite for meat after Christopher Columbus "discovered" the New World in 1492 and subsequent European arrivals brought their livestock — beef, lamb, pork, goat and chicken — to the Americas.

Today, there is no question where to find the beef. The southern cone of South America — Chile, Paraguay, Uruguay and Argentina — is prime cattle country, where meat is the indisputable centerpiece of the parrilla (grill) and asado (spit-roasted barbecue).

The parrilla features assorted sausages, innards and steaks cooked to order, while an asado is more of a traditional ranch-style cookout: Whole baby goats, suckling pigs, sides of beef ribs and briskets are roasted upright on stakes over a fire.

The original asado criollo, or Argentine spit-roasted barbecue, was a simple solution to hunger for the gaucho, the cowboy herdsman on the grassy plains of the Pampas. He killed an animal, then spit-roasted it for dinner. But its legacy has spawned a bountiful food tradition. Recounting her culinary sojourns in "The Book of Latin American Cooking," Elizabeth Lambert Ortiz noted that Argentine hosts apportioned about a pound of meat per guest at a typical asado.

It's a meat fest that Argentine native Guillermo Pernot, chef-owner of Pasion, a popular Nuevo Latino restaurant in Philadelphia, relishes.

At Pasion, Pernot serves Argentinian beef, which he recommends because, "the flavor is very intense. In Argentina, cattle is raised on alfalfa — no corn, no hormones — and it roams freely, so the beef is low in fat, but tastes very rich."

TOPPING IT OFF

Certainly, the meat counts, but "a Latin barbecue is about the condiments as much as the meat itself," says Douglas Rodriguez, the Cuban-American chef who made his Nuevo Latino debut at Patria in New York City, and now presides at Chicama, a nearby Peruvian-inspired restaurant.

The secret is in the sauce. But not the meat-basting, tomato-based barbecue sauces favored in the United States. Instead, a colorful and vibrant medley of condiments accompany grilled meats, sometimes doubling as marinades or dips.

These "sauces" range from mojo (a citrus-based vinaigrette) and chimichurri (a garlic-parsley pesto) to aji (a feisty hot-pepper sauce) and salsa criolla (a tomato-onion relish).

The multiple citrus-herb-garlic-chili flavor combinations that give Latin-style grilling its exuberant edge can be traced back to Mexico.

In "Ethnic Cuisine," culinary anthropologist Elisabeth Rozin ascribes two primary "flavor principles," tomato-chili and lime-chili combinations, to ancient Mexican cuisine. Over time, various seasonings entered the mix: garlic, cinnamon, cumin, oregano, onion, saffron, achiote (a tangy-tasting rust-colored seed), nuts and cilantro. Another flavor principle, that of sour orange, garlic and achiote, was used for pit cookery in the Yucatan, a region with Caribbean and European influences.

In his Nuevo Mexicano grilled preparations, like rabbit chorizo, Norman Fierros, the Mexican-American chef-owner of Norman's Arizona, capitalizes on these very flavor principles.

For him, "dried chili peppers, like hatch and pasilla chilies, used in marinades and sauces give the Mexican grill its distinct flavor. As does cooking slowly over mesquite, a type of wood indigenous to Arizona's Sonoran desert and Mexico, which infuses grilled fare with a subtle charcoal flavor."

Priscila Satkoff, the Mexico City-born chef-owner of Chicago's highly praised Mexican restaurant Salpicon, can't imagine a Mexican-style barbecue without sundry sauces, especially salsas, because "they highlight the flavor of grilled meats."

PIQUANT PLEASURES

Throughout Latin America, vibrant table sauces served with grilled meats abound. In Mexico, "It would be unthinkable to sit down to an authentic Mexican meal and not find a dish of sauce or some pickled jalapenos on the table; they are common as salt and pepper," writes Mexican gastronomic authority Diana Kennedy in "The Essential Cuisines of Mexico." (due September).

Table sauces that accompany grilled meats range from ixni-pec (a hot-pepper sauce) to salsa cruda (uncooked tomato sauce). With barbecued meats, Satkoff favors salsa molcajete: "It's a basic, classic salsa — just tomato and serrano chile. The flavor is spicy-sweet. You can't have a barbecue without it!"

Not surprisingly, Caribbean-Latinos go for the mojo (pronounced "mo-ho"). This Caribbean-Latin catchall term refers to an inherent liveliness or zest; it has morphed from a description of a table condiment to a local colloquialism, loosely meaning "life force." Technically, Cuba has the proprietary claim on mojo, but mojos have evolved into a pan-Latin condiment. The three essential ingredients include a member of the onion family (scallions, shallots, garlic), an acid (such as lime juice or sour orange), and olive oil.

Regional variations reflect local ingredients and taste preferences. So, while a Puerto Rican mojo might have recao (a spiky-leafed herb that tastes similar to cilantro) and oregano, the Cuban version would use cilantro and sour orange.

Chimichurri, an assertive parsley-garlic vinaigrette, reigns as Argentina's official grill sauce, but is used throughout South America. "At barbecues in Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay," Pernot says, "two things go hand-in-hand: premium quality meat and one essential sauce, chimichurri."

The same holds true in Chile, where pebre (an Indian word for a parsley-type pesto) is the national version of chimichurri, with the addition of basil.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Within this long and continuing carnivorous tradition, how do meat-loving Argentines keep their figures? Do they eat smaller portions of red meat? Drink plenty of red wine? Or perhaps Argentinians really don't eat that much meat?

Pernot laughingly sets the record straight, "I constantly crave meat! And yes, we really are rather greedy about it. Argentinians eat a very heavy two-hour lunch, and then we eat a late dinner. But we don't snack in-between, we walk a lot — and we don't feel guilty about eating our meat!"

The following recipes can be prepared on both the backyard and stovetop grill. Cooking times are approximate, but keep a watchful eye to make any necessary adjustments.

GRILLED ARGENTINIAN STEAK WITH CHIMICHURRI
(Adapted from Guillermo Pernot, executive chef-owner at Pasion, Philadelphia, Pa.)

4 Argentinian sirloin steaks (8 ounces each), or skirt steaks
FOR THE CHIMICHURRI:
1 bunch parsley
2 bay leaves
1-1/4 tablespoons crushed red pepper
6 garlic cloves
1-1/2 teaspoons dried oregano
1/2 cup red wine vinegar
1-1/4 cup extra virgin olive oil
1 tablespoon kosher salt

Place all chimichurri ingredients in a food processor. Pulse until well combined. Put chimichurri in a glass or plastic container, using as needed. Chimichurri will keep for up to 6 months. Makes 2-1/2 cups.

Prepare a medium-hot fire in the grill. Season steaks with kosher salt. Place steaks on the grill and cook to desired doneness, about 4 to 6 minutes on each side. Transfer to a serving dish and spoon chimichurri over each steak. Serve immediately.

Makes 4 servings.

GRILLED HALIBUT WITH ADOBADO MARINADE
(Adapted from Norman Fierros, executive chef at Norman's Arizona in Phoenix)

4 halibut steaks or fillets (8 ounces each)
FOR THE ADOBADO:
3/4 cup white vinegar
1-1/2 cup water
1/3 cup dried Mexican oregano
2 tablespoons ground coriander
2 tablespoons ground cumin
2 tablespoons granulated garlic
1 tablespoon salt
1 tablespoon freshly ground coarse black pepper
12 dried New Mexican red chili pods, ends removed and roughly chopped without removing seeds (if New Mexican chilies are not available, use other whole dried Mexican chilies like chili negro or chili pasilla)

TO MAKE ADOBADO: Place the vinegar and water in a blender and combine. Add all the other ingredients and combine until well incorporated. The mixture will be chunky because of the dried chilies. Store, tightly covered, in the refrigerator until ready to use. It will keep for approximately two months. Makes 2-1/4 cups.

Place halibut steaks or fillets in a nonreactive bowl and brush with adobado until sufficiently covered. Cover tightly with plastic wrap and refrigerate, allowing fillets to marinate 1 to 3 hours.

Prepare a medium fire in the grill. Remove excess marinade and rub some olive oil onto the fillets before placing on grill to prevent sticking and burning. Depending on thickness of fillets, grill fish approximately 2 to 3 minutes on each side, or until done. Serve immediately.

Power-packed pasta shells are lunch 'to go'

Associated Press

Forget sandwiches for brown-bagging it at work or heading off for a weekend picnic. Pack the same "hero" ingredients — ham, turkey, cheese, tomato and lettuce — into cooked pasta shells. To keep them fresh, carry the dressing on the side.

Crushed pineapple helps make 'The Best Cake'

Associated Press

A cake without fat? Yes, we know about angel food cake, the no-fat standby that's as light as a cloud and melts in your mouth. Then there's The Best Cake.

Betty Rohde, author of "Celebrations: So Fat, Low Fat, No Fat," says it "is my No. 1 cake and best seller for the book. I hope you enjoy it just a tiny bit as much as I have."

(P.S. Forget the the nuts if you want no-fat dessert.)

THE BEST CAKE

1/2 cup egg substitute
2 cups granulated sugar
2 cups all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons baking soda
20-ounce can crushed pineapple, juice and all (2-1/2 cups)
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 cup nuts, chopped (optional)
8-ounce package fat-free cream cheese, softened
1-1/2 cups confectioners' sugar
1/4 teaspoon vanilla extract

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Spray a 13x9-inch pan with vegetable oil cooking spray.

With an electric mixer, beat the egg substitute and granulated sugar together. In a separate bowl, mix the flour and baking soda together and beat into the egg mixture. Add the pineapple, juice and all, and continue to mix until blended. Stir in the vanilla and the nuts. Pour and scrape the batter into the prepared pan. Bake for 40 minutes.

Meantime, make the frosting. Stir the cream cheese with a wire whisk, not with a mixer (fat-free cream cheese gets thin if beaten with an electric mixer). Gradually beat in the confectioners' sugar, then stir in the vanilla.

Cool the cake about 10 minutes and frost. If the frosting is thin, pour it on the cake anyway. It is OK. The hot cake takes care of that. You may sprinkle with additional nuts.

Nutritional information per serving: 0 grams of fat without the nuts.

Offers to help can ring hollow to the depressed

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the letter from the Minnesota woman whose godson committed suicide at 18. At the funeral the minister asked for a show of hands from people who would not mind a phone call in the middle of the night from a depressed friend who needed to talk. Every hand went up.

Van Buren

I would like to say this: Many people SAY they are open to such a phone call. As someone who deals with chronic depression and has a history of attempted suicide, please let me share some of my experiences with "reaching out": My usually kind mother criticized me to the point of tears. Good friends have gone into their own problems before I could speak, or have been too busy to talk or call me back.

If you DO "raise your hand" as someone willing to take a call, be ready with love, support and understanding. If you feel you cannot do this, please be honest and kind enough to say so. — HEALING IN RENO

DEAR HEALING: As loving and caring as friends and family might be, everyone must realize that chronic depression is an illness. While they may be willing to lend an ear — and many are not — the wisest course of action is to get the person to a doctor ASAP for professional evaluation and treatment. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: After a suicide, people react. The depressed person "should have" sought help. He or she "should have" called. Well, it's not that simple. More often, other people are distant. They don't really want to hear about the hopelessness and distress. Only in retrospect are they available, when it's too late — and maybe that's the lesson: We are so busy living our own lives that we don't see it coming.

Depression is an isolating condition. Even when one finds help it can be a long, discouraging process. Prozac doesn't work for everyone. Perhaps if people were more aware of how a clinically depressed person sees the world, perhaps if people knew the right questions to ask, perhaps if people understood the depth of the despair and hopelessness, things would be different.

Please don't use my name. I'm constantly alert so that I keep my depressive tendencies under control — and oh, what a difference in the quality of life! It's like putting on one's glasses and seeing individual leaves on the trees. I wish I'd been diagnosed earlier. — DOYLESTOWN, PA.

DEAR DOYLESTOWN: Thank you for educating others about depression. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I wish easing the pain of depression was as easy as asking others for help. When your brain is in a blender at full speed, it's difficult for the proper connections to be made. Picking up a phone can be as overwhelming as picking up a 1,000-pound barbell.

What will help people with depression is more funding, research, scientific breakthroughs in medication and education. Our society has a lack of information about depression. Depression is an illness, not a "lack of character."

My heartfelt sympathy goes out to the godmother who lost her godson at such an early age. It's a tragedy. — A MOTHER IN OREGON

DEAR MOTHER: I agree. The answer lies in research and education. Sick people should not be stigmatized. Anyone suffering from depression that lasts longer than two weeks should discuss it with a doctor and ask for a referral to a mental health specialist. If that's not possible, a suicide or crisis hotline should be contacted.

BACK-TO-SCHOOL PENCIL COOKIES

3/4 cup granulated sugar
1/2 cup (1 stick) butter, softened (do not use margarine; reserve butter box)
1 large egg
1/4 teaspoon almond extract
2-1/4 cups buttermilk biscuit and baking mix
1 drop red food coloring
1/2 teaspoon yellow food coloring
1/2 cup miniature chocolate chips

In large mixer bowl, beat sugar and butter until creamy. Add egg and almond extract; beat until light and fluffy. Add biscuit and baking mix, beating on low speed to combine. Remove two 1/4-cup portions of the dough. Stir red food coloring into one 1/4-cup portion to make pink dough for the pencil erasers; reserve other 1/4-cup portion t o make sharpened tips of pencils. Shape cookies using one of the options below. Place pencils about 1 inch apart on baking sheet coated with cooking spray. Place a chocolate chip at the end of each white dough point for pencil lead. Bake at 350 degrees for 7 to 9 minutes or until cookies just begin to brown. Cool on pan before removing wire rack. Makes 5 to 6 dozen pencil shaped cookies.

SLICED PENCIL OPTION: Press white dough firmly and evenly in bottom of empty butter box (coated with cooking spray). Repeat with yellow dough and finally pink dough. Close box. Chill for at least 2 hours or until dough is very firm. Carefully remove box from around dough. Using a long, thin-bladed knife, slice dough lengthwise into 1/4-inch slices. Cut each slice into 6 "pencils." Trim white dough on each pencil to create a point.

ROLLED PENCIL OPTION: Wrap each dough (white, yellow and pink) in plastic wrap; chill until firm. Use measuring spoons to measure dough for each cookie; 1 teaspoon yellow dough, rolled with fingers to make 4-1/2-inch-long length of pencil; 1/8 teaspoon white dough, shaped to make sharpened point; and 1/8 teaspoon pink dough, rolled to make eraser.

HELPFUL TIP: When measuring biscuit and baking mix, gently spoon mix into nested (dry) measuring cups. Using a metal spatula or straight-edged knife, level off the top.

KICK-OFF BRISKET

1 large onion, sliced
1 extra-lean beef brisket (4-1/2 to 5 pounds), all visible fat removed
1 cup Bloody Mary mix (mild or hot)
1 cup lemon-lime soda (8 ounces)
Juice of 1 lemon (about 1/3 cup)
2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
1 package (1.61 oouncs) brown gravy mix (no-fat or regular)

Layer onions and beef in large roaster or 13x9x2-inch baking pan or dish. In 4-cup glass measure, stir together Bloody Mary mix, lemon-lime soda, lemon juice and Worcestershire sauce; whisk in gravy mix. Pour over beef: cover tightly with foil. Bake at 325 degrees for 3 hours or until beef is tender when pierced with a fork. Cool for 15 to 20 minutes. Cut across grain into thin slices. Arrange beef in 13x9x2-inch baking dish or toteable carrier. Pour sauce over beef. Cover; keep warm until serving time or refrigerate and reheat as needed. Serve with "Game Thyme" Biscuit Squares. Make 8 to 10 servings.

"GAME THYME" BISCUIT SQUARES

3 cups buttermilk biscuit and baking mix
1 tablespoon finely chopped fresh parsley
1/2 teaspoon dried thyme leaves
1 cup sour cream
1/2 cup milk
2 tablespoons butter or margarine, melted

In mixing bowl, stir together biscuit and baking mix, parsley and thyme. In 2-cup glass measure, combine sour cream and milk; stir into biscuit and baking mix mixture until dough forms a ball. Turn out onto surface dusted with additional biscuit and baking mix. Knead 10 times. Place in 8x8x2-inch pan or 8x6x3-inch toteable dish. Using a knife, cut dough into squares. Drizzle with butter. Bake at 400 degrees for 18 to 20 minutes or until golden brown. Cover loosely; keep warm until serving time or reheat as needed.

HELPFUL TIP: When measuring bisuit and baking mix, gently spoon mix into nested (dry) measuring cups. Using a metal spatula or straight-edged knife, level off the top.

GIANT SOCCER BALL COOKIES

1 package (7 to 8 ounces) almond paste (room temperature)
1 cup (2 sticks) butter or margarine, softened
1 cup granulated sugar
1 large egg
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
3-1/2 cups buttermilk biscuit and baking mix
2 tablespoons baking cocoa

In large mixer bowl, beat almond paste and butter until smooth (about 3 minutes). Add sugar, egg and vanilla; beat until light and fluffy. Add biscuit and baking mix, beating on low speed to combine. Remove about 1-1/2 cups cookie dough and stir cocoa into it until well combined. Shape white dough into 20 balls (about 2 tablespoons each) and the chocolate dought into 12 balls (about 2 tablespoons each). On 13-inch pizza pan coated with cooking spray, arrange 10 white balls and 6 chocolate balls, 1 inch apart, to resemble soccer ball. Bake at 350 degrees for 12 to 14 minutes or until light golden brown. Cool on pan on wire rack. Repeat with remaining balls. Makes 2 giant cookies.

Place 1 chocolate ball in the center, then arrange 5 white balls around it. Alternate 5 white balls and 5 chocolate balls around the rim of the pan. As the cookie bakes, the balls melt into each other to create the soccer ball design.

VARIATION: To make 3 life-size soccer cookies, shape dough into 30 white balls and 18 chocolate balls, each 1 inch in diameter. Arrange balls (as directed above) in three 9-inch round cake pans coated with cooking spray. Bake as directed above.

HELPFUL TIP: When measuring bisuit and baking mix, gently spoon mix into nested (dry) measuring cups. Using a metal spatula or straight-edged knife, level off the top.

CONSUMING INTERESTS

Cool lemon-cream pie is disappointment — an expensive one too

By Linda Anderson

Sometimes, when it's so hot outside that the only cool place I can find is the frozen food aisle of my favorite supermarket, I find myself weakening and buying stuff I might not have bought otherwise. (When you walk v-e-r-y s-l-o-w-l-y down the aisle, trying to make the coolness last, you see things you might not have noticed before.)

Anderson

For example, on one recent grocery-shopping trip when the weather was not only hot, it was humid — and the frozen food aisle was so cool — I found myself buying a "New!" Mrs. Smith's Cookies and Cream Pie in LemonyLemon flavor. Normally I might not have even looked into the part of the freezer section where the pies are, but it was hot outside and cool lemon refreshment sounded so wonderful ... well, next thing I knew there was a frozen pie in my cart.

Turns out it is one of a new line of Mrs. Smith's frozen pies that each includes some kind of Keebler cookie in the pie.

This particular pie was made with, and I quote: "Light and refreshing lemon cream filling and chunk of Keebler Vienna Fingers Cookies." What it was, was a lemon cream filling with some kind of whipped cream-like topping and pieces of Vienna Fingers cookies (a kind of creme-filled vanilla cookie), all on top of a graham cracker or cookie crumb crust. Looked good!

A 1-pound 10-ounce pie cost $5.99, which was a lot more than I wanted to pay, but it was hot outside, etc., etc., etc. (See rationalizations in above paragraphs.)

Label advertising shows the pie is part of a line of pies, which also includes a vanilla cream pie made with Droxies Cookies (Keebler's answer to Oreos); chocolate cream pie made with Fudge Shoppe Deluxe Grahams Cookies for a s'mores kind of flavor; chocolate cream pie made with Fudge Shoppe Grasshopper Cookies for a chocolate-and-mint kind of thing; and a strawberry-banana cream pie made with Keebler Vanilla Wafers.

According to the nutrition label, one-sixth of our lemon pie is supposed to contain 370 calories with 180 of them from fat. I don't know, one-sixth of a pie is a pretty big piece...

So I bought a pie and took it home where the other hot, sweltering people were waiting, and we opened the box to sample the pie as soon as possible.

When we opened the box we discovered the pieces of Vienna Fingerson the top of the whipped topping. Turns out that's about the extent of the cookies' contribution to the pie.

The whipped topping was just whipped topping; the lemon filling was just lemon filling (more tart than I expected too); and the crust appears to be made with ordinary graham cracker and/or cookie crumbs, not Vienna Fingers (though I could be wrong there).

In conducting the taste test, we discovered that the pie isn't very different from an ordinary frozen lemon cream pie without cookie chunks on top. It looks a little taller than a less expensive pie in the same flavor, but, except for the cookie chunks, that's about it.

The pie was good, in a frozen cream pie sort of way. But was it worth six bucks? Nah...

'Boys open camp without Williams

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

WICHITA FALLS — Pro Bowl right tackle Erik Williams didn't show for the first day of practices at the Dallas Cowboys' training camp.

"He's not here and he's not on his way," team owner Jerry Jones said Tuesday.

Jones indicated Williams' absence was not a surprise to the team and gave no details.

"I had a good visit with him last week and was aware of some issues and concerns," Jones said. "When we counted heads yesterday, we thought he might be a late arrival. Then we started visiting with his agent and realized he wouldn't be here."

His agent, Alan Herman, did not immediately return a message left at his New York office by The Associated Press.

Williams is due $1.85 million this season and next under a six-year deal he signed after the 1995 season. By comparison, Cincinnati recently signed right tackle Willie Anderson to a six-year deal that averages $5.1 million, slightly more than the $5.08 million per year deal Philadelphia gave tackle Jon Runyan.

Williams

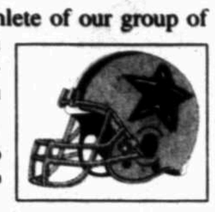

If Williams isn't holding out for more money, it could be to avoid some of the grind of training camp.

"Whether he is fined or how much, that's an internal matter," Jones said.

Williams is coming off his third Pro Bowl selection in four years and the fourth of his nine-year career.

Dallas will replace him with second-year lineman Solomon Page, who started one game in Williams' place last season and allowed no sacks in 21 pass plays. He started six games in all as a rookie and played in 14, working at both tackle and guard.

"He might be the best athlete of our group of offensive linemen," coach Dave Campo said. "I'm confident he'll be able to step in and play."

Page, who was supposed to start at right guard, has no problem playing tackle.

"It's not much of a difference for me," he said.

Moving Page opens a starting guard spot. Tony Hutson and Jorge Diaz will share the duties.

Williams is missing a chance to become more familiar with Dallas' new, motion-filled offense. His absence also is the first roadblock Campo has faced in his six-month tenure.

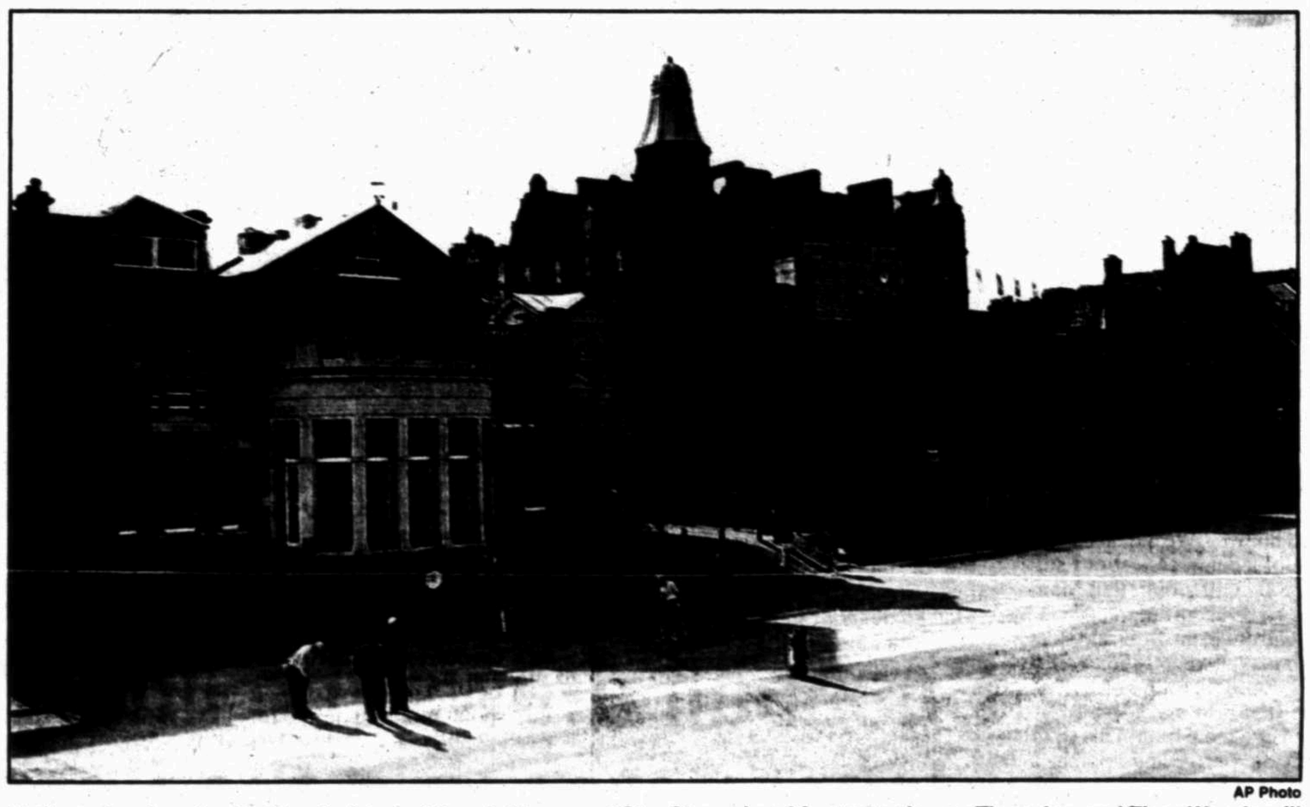

"This is a business, people have to remember that," Campo said. "I look at it from the standpoint we'd like to see the whole football team here and I think Erik Williams is part of the team.

"I don't look at it as a crisis at this point. You may talk to me two weeks from now and I may look

BRITISH OPEN

Historic Setting

Golfers stand on the first tee in front of the clubhouse at St Andrews Monday in Scotland. The 129th British Open Golf Championship starts play on Thursday, and Tiger Woods will be trying for his fourth major championship.

Woods takes aim at making history with long drives, good short game

By Doug Ferguson
AP Golf Writer

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland — All it took was one hole to illustrate why nothing seems capable of keeping Tiger Woods from his place in history at the home of golf.

On the 15th hole during a peaceful practice round Tuesday morning, Woods took a mighty swing with his driver and watched the ball disappear against the dull, gray skies over St. Andrews. His group walked 379 yards before they found it.

"Look where Tiger is," swing coach Butch Harmon said to Mark Calcavecchia and Mark O'Meara.

The length was expected, and one reason Woods is such a huge favorite this week.

It's what he did after his drive that showed why he can win major championships by a dozen shots or more, and why at age 24 he is only one leg away from becoming just the fifth player to win the career Grand Slam.

The ball had dropped into a pot bunker the size of a kiddie pool. There was barely enough room for Woods to take a stance, the back of his knees nearly pressed against the sodded walls.

Woods squeezed the ball out of the sand, over the lip and onto the green, some 15 feet from the flag. The silence finally was broken by two words from his caddie.

"Nice shot."

And now, two words for the other 155 players in the field who will try to claim the 129th British Open and keep Woods from becoming only the youngest player to win all four major championships.

Good luck.

Woods doesn't win every week, but he has won 14 of his last 26 tournaments worldwide, an astounding rate. And only twice during that stretch — neither of those majors — has he failed to get into contention on Sunday.

George signs big extension with Tennessee

Associated Press

Eddie George became one of the highest-paid running backs in the NFL on Tuesday, when the Tennessee Titans announced a $41.25 million six-year contract extension.

The deal gives George the option to play a seventh year, for an extra $4 million. It also includes a $10 million bonus.

"It's not often a professional athlete stays with one organization his whole career, and I have an opportunity to do that," George said. "I'm glad we could get it done. It's a big weight off my shoulders."

Last year the Indianapolis Colts signed rookie Edgerrin James to a seven-year, $49 million contract, while the St. Louis Rams signed

Decathlon champ will miss Olympics

By Bob Baum
AP Sports Writer

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Dan O'Brien, the defending Olympic champion in the decathlon and one of track and field's biggest names over the last decade, said Tuesday he plans to withdraw from the U.S. trials and will miss the Sydney Games.

O'Brien, 34, said he partially tore the plantar fascia, connective tissue on the bottom of his left foot, while practicing the high jump last Wednesday.

"I don't see any way I c

. "A couple of times I thought, 'To hell with it, just go for it' and I can't even take three or four steps without having to stop. It's that painful."

O'Brien said he wouldn't formally withdraw until just before the competition begins.

"I'm 98, 99 percent out right now," he said. "If for some reason a miracle were to happen, my prayers were answered and I woke up Thursday morning and felt like I could sprint, I would be out there giving a try."

Just a week ago, O'Brien had expressed optimism in defending his Olympic title, even though he had been in serious training only eight weeks and had not competed in a decathlon since winning the event at the 1998 Goodwill Games. That was his only decathlon since he won the Olympic gold medal in Atlanta in 1996.

O'Brien said he was practicing the high jump on the Washington State University track in Pullman last Wednesday when he felt something pop in his foot. Two days later, an MRI showed a 60

Armstrong loses time, keeps lead

By Andreas Evagora
Associated Press Writer

MORZINE, France — It was a rare sight: Lance Armstrong struggling through the mountains, unable to summon an extra burst of energy to stay with his rivals on a climb.

The Texan just couldn't keep up late in Tuesday's 16th stage of the Tour de France and wound up staggering across the finish line in eighth place. He was 2 minutes, 1 second behind stage winner Richard Virenque and 1:37 behind Jan Ullrich, Armstrong's only serious challenger for the title.

Armstrong, though, had plenty of time to spare, and rode well enough to maintain an overall lead that should hold up with five stages left in the cycling marathon.

"Today was the hardest day of my life on a bike," a winded Armstrong said.

His lead over Ullrich, the 1997 champion, was cut from 7:26 to 5:37, but with all five of the decisive mountain stages over, he should have few problems retaining the yellow jersey to the end.

Lance Armstrong, foreground, watches Jan Ullrich, center, and Richard Virenque pull away from him as they climb the Joux-Plane pass during Tuesday's 16th stage of the Tour de France.

"I had a problem on the last climb. I had no energy left," said Armstrong, who came back from cancer to win the Tour last year. "I am lucky that this race goes on for three weeks and that I had a lead of 7 1/2 minutes."

He said he didn't eat properly before the race and was lacking sugar.

The day's route of 122 miles passed near the spectacular cable cars that run to the 10,560-foot summit of Carron from Val-Thorens, the highest ski resort in Europe.

Between the narrow winding mountain passes, which made for energy-sapping climbs and potentially dangerous descents, riders passed through

March gets some more Madness

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — The field for the NCAA men's basketball tournament will expand by one next season with an "opening-round" game the Tuesday before the first round begins.

The NCAA, which confirmed the 65-team field Tuesday, said the winner of the game between two of the lower-ranked conferences will move into the brackets as a No. 16 seed.

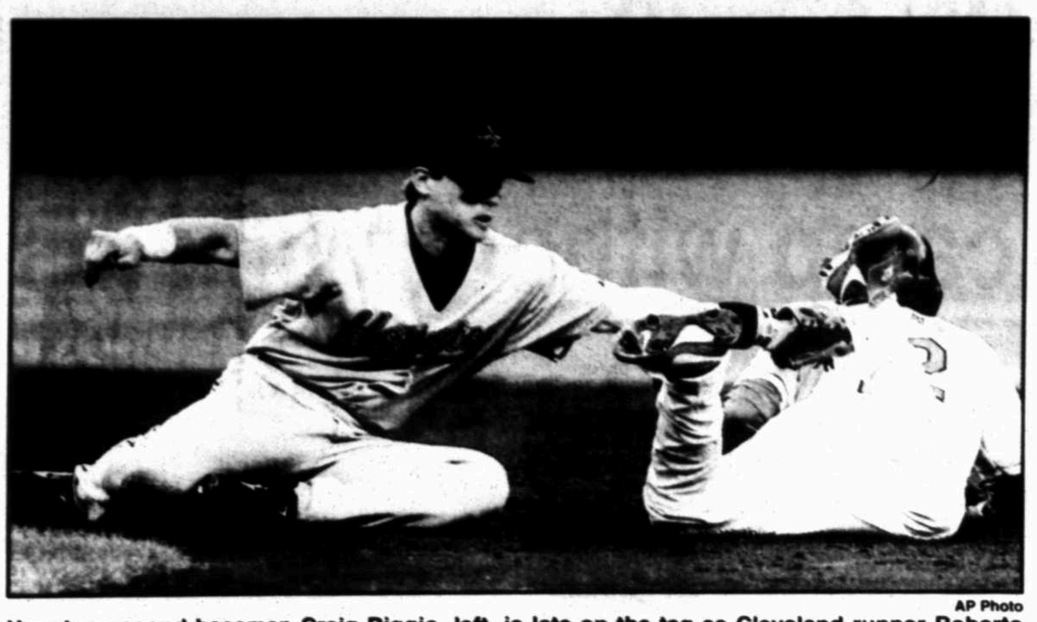

The tournament field is expanding because 31 conferences will receive automatic bids next year, two more than last season. The committee always selects at least 34 at-large teams.

The additional automatic bids will go to the year-old Mountain West Conference and the Western Athletic Conference, which didn't have one last season after eight members left to form the Mountain West.

The Division I Men's Basketball Committee is recommending the opening-round game be played on Tuesday, March 13, at the University of Dayton Arena, which is a host site for first-

Indians' double-play duo does in Astros with four twin-killings

Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Curtain calls are usually reserved for home runs. For the long ones. For the ones that give the home team the lead or maybe even win the game.

But on Tuesday night, a 4-6-3 double play in the eighth inning was so good that it had the fans begging for more.

Roberto Alomar and Omar Vizquel, take a bow.

The Indians' middle infielders turned four double plays — including a jaw-dropper in the eighth — and Manny Ramirez homered twice to lead the Cleveland Indians to an 8-2 win over the Houston Astros.

"You don't see many standing ovations for a double play," said Houston's Jeff Bagwell. "Everybody knows that when you play in Cleveland, you don't hit the ball up the middle. I would love to play shortstop or second base like them. I can't. Nobody can."

Ramirez, whose future in Cleveland could be determined in the next two weeks, hit a pair of two-run homers and drove in five runs. He hit his 15th homer in the fifth off Shane Reynolds (6-7). He added another two-run shot in the sixth — his 1,000th career hit — as the Indians improved to 5-1 since the All-Star break.

Alomar went 2-for-4, scored twice, drove in two runs for Cleveland and recorded his 400th career steal.

He also combined with Vizquel to put on a two-man show of spectacular defense that would be nearly impossible to top.

"You look out there and you go, 'Guys it's not that easy,'" said Indians starter Dave Burba, who benefited from three double plays. "They're fun to watch and I just thank God that they're on my team."

After turning double plays in the fourth, sixth and seventh innings, the Vizquel-Alomar duo provided a spine-chilling finale.

Daryle Ward hit a hard smash up the middle that Alomar backhanded and flipped with his glove to Vizquel, who caught it barehanded and threw to first in one motion to complete the double play.

"All you want is a base hit, and all you get is a double play," said Ward. "They really put on a show. Incredible."

Alomar and Vizquel both downplayed their acrobatics. In fact, for a while, neither realized the fans wanted them to come out of the dugout after the top of the eighth.

"Richie Sexson pushed me and said, 'Get out there'," Alomar said. "I guess sometimes you can amaze yourself."

Vizquel was coming to the plate to hit when he realized the fans were still standing and clapping.

"It felt weird," he said. "They were clapping so I guess they liked it. I thought there was something going on up in the stands."

Burba allowed one run and nine hits in seven innings to get his first win since June 21. The right-hander walked three and struck out six, including Richard Hidalgo with the bases loaded in the third.

Reynolds was charged with eight runs and seven hits in 5 2-3 innings. He walked a career-high six.

Craig Biggio went 3-for-4 for the Astros, who went 6-9 in interleague play.

Ramirez has now homered three times and is batting .409 (9-for-22) with nine RBIs since returning from the disabled list last Friday.

The right fielder's agent, Jeff Moorad, told the Associated Press during Tuesday's game that he has had talks with Indians general manager John Hart about Ramirez.

Moorad said the Indians have not made a contract offer, and have indicated they are willing to hold off on serious talks until the end of the season as long as they are still in contention for a playoff spot.

With the July 31 trading deadline approaching, the Indians have to decide if it's worth the risk of possibly losing Ramirez if they can't re-sign him after the season.

Hart confirmed that he has spoken to Moorad.

"We've had on-going conversations," Hart said from his Jacobs Field suite shortly after Ramirez connected for his second homer. "We did talk about some of the parameters of a contract. ... But I still get the sense that I've gotten all along, that Manny wants to explore the (free-agent) market."

Alomar doubled with one out in the fifth, and stole third to become the 36th player since 1898 to steal at least 400 career bases. Ramirez followed by hitting a 2-2 pitch into the stands to make it 4-1.

After the Indians added two more runs in the sixth on left fielder Moises Alou's error and Alomar's sacrifice fly, Ramirez again connected, this time to right-center for an 8-1 lead.

Notes: The Indians went a major league best 13-5 in interleague games. ... Alomar was given the third-base bag after his 400th steal. Ramirez was given the ball following his 1,000th career hit.

Baseball draws the line at players crossing the lines

Associated Press

Baseball is a game of inches, and that includes the ones where the players can stand.

Just to make sure everyone is clear on that, umpires have started ordering obliterated batter's and catcher's boxes to be redrawn by grounds crews in the middle of games.

On Saturday, Boston's Carl Everett reacted violently to a lesson in crossing the lines administered by umpire Ronald Kulpa, twice making contact with the ump after Kulpa retraced the batter's box at Fenway Park for the hitter's benefit.

A day earlier, New York Mets reliever Dennis Cook was ejected from a game for hitting Everett and then suggesting that the Red Sox slugger might not have been plunked if he had stayed where he belonged, inside the batter's box.

But who could see the batter's box at that point? The chalk lines were long gone, erased by seven innings worth of players pawing away at them.

Now, while Everett waits to hear how much his temper tantrum will cost him in games and money, baseball has decided to make things simpler. Sandy Alderson, executive vice president for operations in the commissioner's office, reminded the umps this week that they can have the lines spruced up in the middle of the game.

It happened Monday night in Baltimore, where home plate umpire Angel Hernandez ordered fresh lines painted in the fourth and seventh innings.

"They've given us the authority to do whatever we feel is necessary," said crew chief Gerry Davis, who was working the Montreal-Boston series at Fenway Park. "Every time the line is there, it makes it easier to point out when someone crosses it.

"I think for years, the hitters have obliterated the back line. It's a little unusual for someone to stand so close to the plate."

The rule book is clear: The batter's box is 4 feet wide and 6 feet long — plenty of room, it would seem, to find a place to stand. There are 6 inches between the edge of home plate and the inside of the box, a sort of no-man's land designed to keep the hitter off the plate at least a little bit. That's the disputed distance that got Everett in trouble.

"Our interpretation is, his foot cannot be closer than six inches to the plate," crew chief Randy Marsh said after Kulpa decided that Everett was anchored inside that demilitarized zone.

The message is: don't step over the lines. Just to make sure, they'll be freshened up midway through the game, the same way the grounds crew drags the infield.

The catcher's box is supposed to be 43 inches wide and 8 feet from the back of home plate to its back border. Hernandez cracked down on that, too.

"He was tight on both of us," Orioles catcher Charles Johnson said. "He was watching the other catcher, too. He gave me a warning, told me to make sure to keep my foot in the box. He watched me the whole time."

Johnson said it was a new experience for him.

"I can't remember anything like that," he said. "I guess they're just breaking down on catchers coming out of the box. I know a catcher sometimes comes out of the box when you have two strikes on the hitter, or if you want to pitch around a guy you go out a little farther than normal. That's what they're looking for."

'Hounds fall short in Wichita

Staff Report

WICHITA, Kan. — For the second night in a row, the Midland Rockhounds couldn't come up with enough offense at Wichita.

The 'Hounds could only manage two runs again as Kris Wilson held them in check, leading the Wichita Wranglers to a 5-2 win over the 'Tuesday night at Lawrence Dumont Stadium.

It didn't matter that Dionys Cesar — who had only one home run on the season prior to this week — hit a solo homer for the second game in a row, as the 'Hounds failed to mount many serious threats against the Wichita pitching staff. Unlike in Monday's 4-2 loss, the 'Hounds never even tied the game against the Wranglers.

Wichita's Larry Huff singled home a run in the first inning off Kevin Gregg (3-11) then got a run-scoring double from Nick Ortiz in the bottom of the fourth for a 2-0 lead. The 'Hounds cut it to 2-1 in the next half inning when Jacques Landry doubled off the left-centerfield wall to drive home Oscar Salazar, but that's as close as they got.

The Wranglers added the runs they needed in the bottom of the sixth off Gregg as Paul Phillips doubled off the wall in right to drive home a run then Jeremy Dodson drove him home with a single to make it 4-1.

Cesar homered in the top of the seventh off Wilson (7-2) to make it 4-2. That was one of the few chinks in Wilson's armor on the evening, as he gave up only five hits in seven innings and struck out seven.

The biggest drama for the 'Hounds came off the field. Less than three hours before the game, manager Tony DeFrancesco felt lightheaded and was taken to a hospital. Webster Garrison managed the game in his place, although DeFrancesco is expected back on the bench for tonight's 7:05 p.m. game.

RockHounds' Thomas charged

WICHITA, Kan. — Midland RockHounds' outfielder Gary Thomas has been deactivated from the roster with a sexual assault charge pending.

Thomas, who hasn't been accompanying the 'Hounds during their current road trip to El Paso and Wichita, was arrested Monday and charged with sexually assaulting a woman in her 30s. Thomas was released on a $15,000 bond.

Thomas hadn't made an appearance with the team since July 11 when he came in as a defensive replacement in center field during a game at Christensen Stadium. His place on the roster has been taken by outfielder Greg Martinez, who was called up from Modesto. Martinez started in Tuesday's 4-2 loss to Wichita, playing center field, hitting leadoff and going 0-for-3 with a walk.

USA Swimming lifts ban on bodysuits for Olympic trials

Associated Press

The governing body of U.S. swimming, bowing to pressure from suit manufacturers, voted Tuesday night to lift the ban on full-length attire at the Olympic swimming trials next month.

USA Swimming, which voted just last month to ban the high-tech bodysuits because of concerns there would be enough for everyone, reversed course after its board held a special meeting via conference call.

"This was not an easy decision and there are merits to both sides of the issue," said Chuck Wielgus, executive director of USA Swimming. "But with the U.S. Olympic team trials being just three weeks away, it was important to get this issue resolved."

That means any full-length suit approved by FINA, the world governing organization, will be allowed at the trials in Indianapolis on Aug. 9-16. The suits already were cleared for use at the Sydney Olympics and all other meets.

Basin Bombers edge Arkansas

TULSA, Okla. — Midland's state champion Basin Bombers baseball team needed nine innings to defeat Arkansas 6-5 Tuesday in the 13-year old World Series.

The Bombers won in the bottom of the ninth when Rocky Gutierrez drove in Craig Elliott with the winning run. Relief pitcher Jamison Watts pitched the final five innings and struck out batters to keep Arkansas at bay and give the Bombers a chance to win.

The Bombers will face Tennessee this morning at 8 a.m.

Wildcats win second game

BROKEN ARROW, Okla. — The Midland Wildcats won their second game at the USSSA 13 and under World Series, defeating the Lincoln Nebraska Dodgers 12-5 Tuesday.

Barry Keiffer was the winning pitcher for the Wildcats, who pounded out 14 hits. Matt Roam led the way by going 4-for-4 and hitting for the cycle.

Brandon Britto and Justin Hamilton were both 3-for-3 as Hamilton doubled. Jake Pulliam was 2-for-3.

The Wildcats will play the Oklahoma City Mudcats at 8 a.m. today.

U.S. Women's Open vies for viewers with British

GURNEE, Ill. — The U.S. Women's Open is the premier event on the LPGA Tour schedule, a major championship with a history and tradition — not to mention a purse — that no other tournament can match.

And yet when the women tee off Thursday at the Merit Club, they'll be going right up against the British Open and Tiger Woods' bid to complete the career Grand Slam.

"Obviously, I think we'd all prefer to have the week to ourselves as far as the attention goes," said Karrie Webb, the world's No. 1 golfer.

So why don't they? Blame television. And the PGA of America.

The U.S. Golf Association, which puts on the Women's Open, didn't plan for things to work out this way. When it initially chose the Merit Club to play host to the U.S. Open, it gave the club the 1999 tournament.

But then the PGA of America decided the 1999 PGA Championship would be played at Medinah Country Club, in another Chicago suburb. Throw in the Western Open and the Ameritech Senior Open, and the Chicago area would be playing host to a PGA major, an LPGA major and two other high-profile golf tournaments in a span of just six weeks.

That's a lot of competition. Too much competition, the USGA decided, and gave the Merit Club the 2000 Women's Open, instead.

When it came time to pick a date for the 2000 tournament, officials from the USGA, Merit Club and NBC, which is televising the event, looked at their options and decided this was the best weekend to hold the tournament.

Sure, most of the regular golf media would be in Scotland covering the British Open. And yes, there are PGA Tour (the B.C. Open) and Senior PGA Tour (Instinet Classic) events this week.

But unlike most other weeks of the year, the "only" real competition would be the British Open, and its television coverage would end before the Women's Open's began.

"Whenever you do it, you're going to have a conflict," said Marty Parkes, senior director of communications for the USGA. "Now you've got golf on in the morning and then there really isn't a lot of competition."

Added LPGA commissioner Ty Votaw, "In looking at how do you make lemons out of lemonade, they said, 'At least we'll have TV audiences to ourselves in the afternoon.'

"I'm a 'Glass is half-full guy,'" he added. "There are negatives, but there are positives to be pointed out, too. ... Certainly, having the golf audience to ourselves will hopefully generate one of the largest TV audiences we've ever had."

History seems to support that thinking. In 1998, when Se Ri Pak beat Jenny Chuasiriporn in a playoff on Monday, the Women's Open drew a 2.6 rating on Sunday, said Jon Miller, senior vice president of NBC Sports.

But last year, when the Women's Open went head-to-head with Woods' victory at The Memorial, it only drew a 1.4 rating.

"We initially chose this weekend because we wanted to avoid a head-to-head competition," Miller said. "By having the British Open going off the air before ... we are free and clear all afternoon long from any men's golf."

But will people want to spend an entire summer day watching golf? Or will most people watch the British Open and then turn off the television and head outside?

"I don't know that people necessarily get 'golfed out.' I don't know anyone who will watch all five hours of the British Open," Miller said. "If you've got a compelling event and you've got stars like Juli Inkster, Karrie Webb and Annika Sorenstam, people are going to find their way to the T.V. set."

Players have mixed feelings about the scheduling. While they're happy about the potential increase in ratings, they'd rather not share the spotlight.

Especially not for this tournament.

"It's hard," admitted Inkster, the defending champion. "I wish it wasn't up against the British Open. But you know, this is our tournament. This is our national championship. This is our biggest tournament of the year, and we're just going to have to go out there and play some good golf and bring the media to us."

BRITISH: Woods getting better

(From 1C)

"I just try to keep getting better and see how good I can get," he said.

O'Meara had said before the U.S. Open that he thought Woods was the best player the game had ever seen. A 15-stroke victory at Pebble Beach, the largest margin ever in a major championship, did nothing to convince him otherwise.

"He's got the complete game," O'Meara said. "He's got power, accuracy, high, soft long irons, good touch, good imagination, good trouble shotmaker, great putter, tough mentally, great heart, determined to win ... what's missing?"

Only a British Open, and Woods hopes to take care of that over 72 holes on an Old Course that evolved on the links land off the Firth of Forth more than 500 years ago.

"If there's any two tournaments you want to win, and have them on specific golf courses, you're going to want to win the U.S. Open at Pebble Beach and win the British Open at St. Andrews," Woods said.

"It's just ironic it happened to be in the same year, and ironic the fact I get to have the chance to complete the Grand Slam on the most historic golf course ever designed," he said. "It's just a wonderful opportunity."

And it's ironic that the last man to complete the Grand Slam was the very man whose records Woods is chasing — Jack Nicklaus, who is back for perhaps his final Open on a course where he won twice.

"Back in those days, nobody really talked about the Grand Slam," said Nicklaus, who finally won his first British Open in 1966 at Muirfield and went on to complete the career slam three times over by 1978. "It wasn't until three or four years later that I found out I was one of only four guys who had done that."

That hasn't been the case with Woods.

From the time he won his first major, the 1997 Masters by a record 12 strokes, the countdown to Nicklaus' benchmark of 18 professional majors was under way.

Perhaps he will approach that someday, depending on his health and desire. Woods isn't willing to look past Thursday, when the Open begins on a course that is hard, dry and fast, a test unlike any other major championship.

Four holes have been lengthened, but that shouldn't be a problem. The Old Course is so firm that Woods found some spots in the fairway to actually be faster than the greens.

"You go out there 40 yards away from the green, hit a putt and it runs fast, then slows down on the green," Woods said. "It's different to what we are used to playing in the States. It's also different than we're used to seeing in British Opens."

That brings an extra element of luck normally associated with a British Open, where the wind can shift in direction and intensity without notice, where humps and bumps along the fairway can cause a ball to carom into one of the 112 bunkers, some with walls so steep the only safe play is backwards.

All of this will be facing Woods this week, along with several players determined to give him a better run than they did at Pebble Beach.

"He's got 72 holes to play like the rest of us," said Nick Price, the 1994 British Open champion. "If he plays well, all eyes are focused on him. But he's got to play well. If he's not at the top of his game, I think he's very beatable. And he knows that."

Ernie Els has had great success at St. Andrews, primarily in the Dunhill Cup. He is coming off a victory at Loch Lomond, his first in 18 months. Lee Westwood has won three times in the last three months, starting with a comeback victory over Woods in Germany.

Old Course worries Europe's hottest golfer

If only this Open weren't at St. Andrews.

While Woods won the U.S. Open by 15 strokes following four other tournament wins and three seconds, Westwood has won three titles since May 21, placed second and fourth, and come in fifth behind the record-setting Woods at Pebble Beach.

He just doesn't perform well at the home of golf.

The burly Englishman tied for 93rd when the Open was last here in 1995 and has a poor record when playing on England's team in the Dunhill Cup over the same course.

scenic villages and the town of Albertville, host city of the 1992 Winter Olympics.

There was no more verbal jousting between Armstrong and Marco Pantani, the 1998 Tour winner, though their public spat — centering on Armstrong's decision to ease off and let Pantani win a stage last week — may have given both riders extra motivation.

Pantani built up an early lead, before dropping back at the start of the day's final ascent up the Col de Joux-Plane. As the Italian faltered, Armstrong, who said he would be thinking during the race about their dispute, sprinted past.

Ullrich, Virenque and Roberto Heras went wheel-to-wheel with Armstrong, and it was Heras who had the strongest legs, opening up a 39-second gap over Armstrong with 12 miles to go.

Suddenly, the strength seemed to drain out of Armstrong.

At the peak, he was 1:30 behind Ullrich and more than 2:00 behind Virenque and Heras.

That opened the way for a thrilling battle for the line between Virenque, France's most popular rider, and Heras.

Heras lost control of his bike about a mile from the end and crashed into barriers taking a corner in the narrow streets of Morzine. He got on a new bike, and settled for third place.

Virenque, the top mountain climber in four of the past five Tours, finished the route from Courchevel to Morzine in 5:32:20. It was his first Tour stage victory since 1997.

"It was a great moment for me personally and it brings me a lot of happiness. It is a shame that Heras fell because he deserved to have a chance at the end," Virenque said. "The course today suited me and I never felt that I was lacking anything."

Virenque joined the Polti team after being fired by Festina after the 1998 Tour drug scandal. Festina was tossed out of the race, and Virenque was one of two team members who denied knowingly taking banned substances. He faces a trial in October.

The three-week race, which ends Sunday in Paris, continues Wednesday with a hilly, 93-mile course from Evian-les-Bains to Lausanne, Switzerland.

Organizers said Tuesday they are cutting the number of cars allowed on the route from 1,000 to 500, because a 12-year-old boy died last week after being hit by a publicity car.

Riders stopped at the start of the 16th stage for a moment of silence in memory of the victim.

and second-round games. Then again, that team might have to play somewhere else.

"They could play at Dayton," NCAA spokesman Bill Hancock said. "They will be seeded into line No. 16 and if, on selection Sunday, the committee believes that the No. 1 seed should be assigned to Dayton to play No. 16, then that team could stay in Dayton."

The NCAA's Division I Championships/Competition Cabinet will decide Aug. 3 whether to adopt the recommendation.

The 65-team field will be a first, but it won't be the first time the NCAA has given more than 64 teams a shot at the championship. In 1991, 33 conference champions received automatic bids and six of the teams competed in three play-in games. Those three winners joined 61 other teams in the tournament field.

percent tear.

"I can't run 15 or 20 meters at any kind of speed, not even half speed," he said.

But O'Brien said there was no way he was retiring from the sport.

"It's hard to think about the future right now but I know for sure I'm not finished," he said. "I want to get healthy. I want to have a season. I want to run in some indoor meets. I want to challenge 9,000 points."

O'Brien underwent surgery for tendinitis on his right knee a year ago, and the recovery from the operation took much longer than he had expected.

He participated in the Modesto Relays in April, but the knee continued to give him problems. Last month, he competed in the 110-meter hurdles and long jump at the Grand Prix meet at Stanford, and pronounced himself ready for a decathlon.

His optimism was bolstered by a 16-foot pole vault in a recent low-key meet.

O'Brien overcame a troubled adolescence growing up in Klamath Falls, Ore., to become the "world's greatest athlete," the unofficial title given to the world record-holder and Olympic champion in the exhausting, two-day, 10-event decathlon.

He missed the 1992 Olympic team when he failed to clear an opening height in the pole vault at the trials, but never lost a decathlon again. In September 1992, shortly after the O'Brien-less Barcelona Games, he broke the world record with 8,891 points in a meet in Talence, France. That record stood until July 4, 1999, when Tomas Dvorak of the Czech Republic scored 8,994 at a meet in Prague.

O'Brien said the latest injury ranks as his most devastating setback.

"I've been in a daze just since it happened," O'Brien said. "I'm very disappointed. I go through states of depression. ... I think this hurts even worse than what happens in '92, because we just didn't get a chance."

O'Brien's withdrawal leaves Chris Huffins as the heavy favorite when the trials decathlon competition begins Thursday, and as the best U.S. hope of defeating Dvorak in Sydney.

Huffins, the two-time defending national champion, was stunned by O'Brien's injury.

"Physically and mentally I've been preparing for a long time for this day, where I felt like I was at my best and the only decathlon on this planet I've never beaten was at his best, and we would go at it," Huffins said.

"This doesn't change the job I have to do. Nobody's going to give me a spot, but I hate to see injuries befell anyone, especially someone who's had such a great career as Dan. ... Injuries are part of the game, but it really stinks when they come at this stage of the game."

Oil Recovers

NEW YORK (AP) — Crude oil prices climbed on the New York Mercantile Exchange Tuesday after declining the day before, when OPEC issued a statement saying it would hike production by 500,000 barrels a day unless prices fell.

On Tuesday, it appeared prices may settle into the range set by OPEC that would preclude the production increase. With the possibility of the increase in jeopardy, West Texas Intermediate crude for August delivery rose $1.11 to $31.94 a barrel.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries has been trying to push prices into a lower range that the large industrialized nations — their biggest customers — are comfortable with. A late March production hike had only a temporary impact.

Among other energy commodities, August heating oil rose 1.29 cent to 80.55 cents a gallon, August unleaded gasoline rose 2.17 cents to 98.14 cents a gallon, and August natural gas rose 4.2 cents to $4.044 per million British thermal units.

In London, August Brent crude from the North Sea rose 76 cents to $29.32 per barrel.

Dollar climbs

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar hit its highest level against the euro in seven weeks after U.S. and European reports on consumer prices showed that core inflation remains in check in the U.S., but is higher than expected in the 11-nation euro region.

In late New York dealings Tuesday, the euro slipped sharply against the dollar, trading at 92.65 cents — its lowest since May — down from 93.55 cents late Monday.

U.S. consumer prices jumped 0.6 percent in June, mainly reflecting surging energy prices, while most other prices showed modest increases, the Labor Department reported.

Some traders said June's consumer price index — a barometer for inflation — suggested that the U.S. economy is heading toward a soft landing, and the Federal Reserve will keep interest rates unchanged at its Aug. 22 meeting.

The Fed has boosted interest rates six times over the past year to slow economic growth and keep inflation in check.

In other trading, the dollar also was quoted at 1.6736 Swiss francs, up from 1.6560, and 1.4751 Canadian dollars, up from 1.4815. The British pound rose to $1.4975 from $1.4941.

Currencies of the 11 countries participating in the euro are no longer traded separately and are tied to the euro by a fixed rate. Based on Tuesday's euro rate, the dollar was worth 2.1108 German marks, up from 2.0906; 7.0792 French francs, up from 7.0115; and 2,089.65 Italian lire, up from 2,069.66.

Energy costs mar inflation report

By Jennine Aversa
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Soaring gasoline prices and a record jump in the cost of natural gas were largely responsible for a sharp increase in consumer inflation last month. Most other prices were tame.

"People are paying a lot more at the gasoline pump, and inflation is a lot higher as a result, but outside the energy sector, inflation is low," said Mark Zandi, economist with RFA Dismal Sciences.

The split picture left economists divided about whether the Federal Reserve will push interest rates higher next month to keep inflation in check.

After a tiny rise in May, the Consumer Price Index, the most closely watched inflation gauge, shot up a seasonally adjusted 0.6 percent in June, the largest increase since March, the Labor Department reported Tuesday.

The jolt came from an expected leap in energy prices, which hit their highest point in 14 months with a 5.6 percent bounce.

Outside the volatile energy and food categories, inflation's "core" rate rose just 0.2 percent for a third consecutive month, suggesting that most other prices remain under control. The core performance matched many analysts' expectations.

Economists believe surging energy prices will ease in coming months as oil-producing nations boost production. Still, some analysts worry to what extent existing energy price increases might eventually spill over and push up other product prices.

In June, skyrocketing energy costs were reflected in higher costs for airline fares and other transportation prices.

"I don't think the Fed can safely go to sleep for another couple of quarters," said Tim O'Neill, chief economist for Bank of Montreal and Harris Bank.

The Federal Reserve has boosted interest rates six times over the last 13 months to slow economic growth and keep inflation in check.

June's CPI report offered ammunition not only for economists who think the central bank will leave interest rates unchanged at its Aug. 22 meeting but also for those who believe rates may be raised.

Those who favor leaving rates alone cited the low monthly core rate and pointed out that core inflation advanced at a 2 percent rate in the second quarter, compared with an increase at a 3.2 percent rate in the first quarter. Some analysts said those figures suggest moderating core inflation.

Analysts in the camp of an interest-rate increase were uneasy that surging energy costs will spill over into other product prices and foment an upward drift in core inflation. They cited figures that show core inflation rose at a 2.6 percent rate in the first six months of this year, compared with a 1.9 percent rate for all of 1999.

On Wall Street, stocks slumped despite strong profit reports by major companies and the mostly unsurprising inflation report. The Dow Jones industrial average lost 64.35 points to close at 10,739.92.

So far this year, overall consumer prices have been rising at an annual rate of 4.2 percent, compared with a 2.7 percent increase for all of last year. The pickup in this year's prices results mostly from rising energy costs.

In June, gasoline prices rose 8.8 percent, the biggest increase in three months. The surge reflects a number of factors including refinery capacity problems, tight inventories, higher crude oil prices and new environmental regulations.

Prices for natural gas grew by a record 7.8 percent, surpassing the previous record in 1972. Economists blamed that on supply shortages.

Higher energy prices took their toll on air fares, which rose 1.5 percent.

Food prices rose by a slim 0.1 percent, as falling costs for fruit, dairy products and poultry helped blunt higher prices for beef and vegetables.

Elsewhere in the report, the price of tobacco products, including cigarettes, fell 1.3 percent. Clothing prices dropped 0.6 percent, the biggest decrease since the beginning of the year, reflecting discounting by merchants. New-car prices declined by 0.1 percent as manufacturers offered various incentives.

Prescription drug prices rose, however, by 0.3 percent. Economists have blamed rising drug prices on increased demand by aging baby boomers and the introduction of more expensive new drugs.

Technology stocks lead market lower

NEW YORK (AP) — Technology stocks led the market lower Tuesday as investors locked in some gains from that group's rebound despite some strong profit reports by major companies and a mostly tame reading on inflation.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 64.35 to close at 10,739.92 after falling as much as 101 points during the session.

Declining issues outnumbered advancers by about a 3-to-2 margin on the New York Stock Exchange and the Nasdaq Stock Market. NYSE composite volume came to 1.105 billion shares, almost even with Monday's tally.

The Federal Reserve has boosted interest rates six times over the past 13 months to slow economic growth and keep inflation in check. With recent reports suggesting that the Fed's rate increases are working, some economists believe the central bank will leave rates unchanged at its meeting Aug. 22.

Merrill Lynch, General Motors and Johnson & Johnson led the early parade of second-quarter profit reports with better-than-expected results. However, the day's most anxiously awaited reports weren't released until after the close, when both Intel and Microsoft topped Wall Street forecasts.

Intel fell $3.313 to $143 in Nasdaq trading before its report, making it the Dow's biggest decliner, but then recovered to $144.25 in extended trading on other markets. Microsoft struggled higher in advance of its report, rising 31.2 cents to $78.50, and then advanced to $79.938 in extended trading.

Among other leading names, Honeywell slipped 18.8 cents to $36.875 and Philip Morris rose 56.3 cents to $24.063 after both companies matched Wall Street profit forecasts.

Unisys tumbled nearly 18 percent, or $2.516 to $11.609, after the struggling computer systems company posted disappointing results. The stock continued lower to $11.25 in late trading.

Health insurance stocks fell sharply after Aetna issued a warning that its second-quarter results would come in well below analysts' expectations. Shares of Aetna fell $6.937 to $59.688, a loss of more than 10 percent.

Overseas, Japan's Nikkei stock average fell 1.98 percent, Germany's DAX index fell 0.32 percent, Britain's FT-SE 100 fell 1.15 percent, and France's CAC-40 fell 1.58 percent.

Home buyers may face larger downpayments

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some 200,000 first-time and low-income home buyers per year could be forced to make bigger downpayments on houses with government-insured mortgages if Congress doesn't act soon, a financial industry group warned Tuesday.

The Clinton administration wants Congress to extend the two-year program, and the White House's budget request includes an extension. But Republican-sponsored legislation that would extend the downpayment program has languished in the Senate, despite an overwhelming House vote in early April.

Rep. Rick Lazio, R-N.Y., chief sponsor of the legislation, said in a statement, "A simplified, more affordable downpayment process can mean the difference between homeownership and continuing to rent for thousands of Americans."

Officials of the financial group, which represents banks, thrifts, mortgage companies and brokers, and life insurance companies, said some consumers would be unable to afford a home if the required downpayment is increased.

The group plans a lobbying push and advertising campaign.

The downpayment program, enacted by Congress two years ago, expires Sept. 30. It allows a "streamlined" calculation for downpayments on FHA-backed mortgage loans that results in smaller required downpayments and more money that can be borrowed.

The new calculation makes a significant difference for mortgage loans above $125,000 — of which the FHA insures some 200,000 annually.

Say, for example, someone wants to buy a $150,000 house with closing costs of $3,000. Under the old calculation, the buyer would be allowed to finance $144,450 in a mortgage — comprised of 97 percent of the first $25,000 of the total $153,000 ($24,250), 95 percent of the next $100,000 ($95,000) and 90 percent of anything over $125,000 (in this case, 90 percent of $28,000, or $25,200).

The difference between the $153,000 total cost and the $144,450 for the mortgage leaves a downpayment of $8,550.

Under the "streamlined" calculation, the $3,000 closing costs are not included in figuring the amount of the mortgage. It is simply 97.75 percent of the total $150,000, or $146,625. That leaves a smaller downpayment of $6,375.

Lazio's bill cleared the House on April 6 on a 417-8 vote. Besides extending the downpayment program, it also would allow teachers, police, firefighters and emergency medical personnel to obtain low-cost mortgages.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Alternatives to traditional retirement plans can make sense

By Eric Tyson

Q: My income has increased substantially. The bad news is that I was not aware of the IRA and 401(k) consequences. The portion of my income I may now contribute into a 401(k) has dropped from 15 percent to 4 percent, and I no longer qualify for either a traditional or Roth IRA. My plan is to retire in 15 years in my late 50s. Currently I have $200,000 in my 401(k), $35,000 in various blue-chip and technology stocks, and about $3,000 in IRAs. Through my company, I can defer a large portion of my income into a "non-qualified plan" with the same investment options as my 401(k). Currently I defer $11,000 annually into this plan, and I also have about $400 per month to invest. What do you think of my approach?

Tyson

A: Presuming that you are maximizing contributions into traditional retirement plans which offer substantial tax benefits and security, contributing money into a non-qualified plan can make sense. With non-qualified plans, you can shelter large sums from taxation. Also, these funds can be made available in the event of financial hardship.

The downside to non-qualified plans is that your funds aren't as secure as they are in other plans such as your 401(k). Your assets in the plan are ultimately accessible to the employer and the employer's creditors. In some cases, employees have had to p ursue costly litigation to secure their non-qualified plan money.

A legal approach to increase the security of your assets in such plans is to have your assets placed in a "rabbi trust." With such a trust, an independent trustee holds your assets separate from your employer. You are still at some risk even with a rabbi trust, though, because your assets are not protected in the event that your employer gets in financial trouble and creditors pursue the assets.

So long as you work for a larger, more stable employer and you're not sheltering too much into a non-qualified plan and you're comfortable with these small risks, putting money into your non-qualified plan is fine. Given your other substantial assets, pu tting $11,000 annually into your non-qualified plan seems OK.

Q: I will be leaving my current job soon. I have $25,000 in my 401(k) that I would like to roll over into an IRA. I'm 36 years old and would like to invest the money for the long term. What do you advise?

A: The first and most important decision an investor should consider is how you would like to allocate your investment dollars. In other words, what portion of your money do you wish to put into stocks vs. bonds, U.S. vs. international stocks, etc.?

Presuming you're willing to be moderately aggressive, at your age I would recommend that you consider investing about 75 percent in stocks, with one-third of that overseas, and 25 percent in bonds.

As regular readers of my column know, I'm a fan of investing in the best no-load mutual funds. Select one of the larger fund companies or leading discount brokers such as Vanguard, Fidelity, TD Waterhouse or T. Rowe Price, and centralize your fund invest ing in a single account.

With your assets, you could invest in several funds to properly diversify your assets. Alternatively, you could minimize the funds you're investing in by selecting a "fund of funds" offered by many of the leading fund providers listed above.

NFL: 'Skins ink Samuels to huge deal

(From 1C)

Marshall Faulk to a seven-year, $45 million deal.

George, who turns 27 in September, has not missed a game in four seasons and has 25 100-yard rushing games. The Titans are 20-5 when he rushes for 100 yards, and George had a career-high 1,762 combined yards and a career-best 13 touchdowns last season as the franchise reached its first Super Bowl in 40 years.

"The only thing that changes is my bank account," he said. "I'll continue to challenge myself and my teammates to have a better season than we had last year. ... I'll take it a season at a time and hopefully at the end I'll have seven rings."

Rookie Chris Samuels is also a multimillionaire, signing a deal worth anywhere from $31 million to $55 million with the Washington Redskins.

Samuels, on offensive tackle from Alabama chosen third overall in the NFL draft, got his first taste of NFL practice later Tuesday.

Unheralded rookie defensive tackle Jerry DeLoach put Samuels on the ground twice, the second time with a takedown.

"I got whipped early," said Samuels, who didn't allow a sack his junior or senior year. "I hadn't hit since the SEC championship. He won that battle then, but I got better as the day went."

Although veteran Andy Heck is listed first on the depth chart at left tackle, Samuels is expected to start right away.

"We didn't draft the guy with the third pick in the draft as a backup," offensive line coach Russ Grimm said.

A gap of about $500,000 between Tennessee and NFL career sack leader Reggie White is too wide to coax the defensive end out of retirement, according to coach Jeff Fisher.

"There's a lot of work to be done and the biggest hurdle is to at least get into the same range of numbers that would work for both sides," Fisher said in a story in The Tennessean on Tuesday.

New Orleans linebacker Jamal Brooks, a rookie, struggles off the practice field carrying teammates' shoulder pads Tuesday in Thibodaux, La. The hot weather forced the Saints to abandon their pads midway through their workout.

"The sooner the better, out of fairness for both sides."

The Titans won't bring the former Green Bay and Philadelphia star in for a physical and discussions about his potential role with the team until the numbers are closer on what is believed to be an incentive-laden, one-year deal.

Rams

Al Saunders was promoted to associate head coach and Bobby Jackson to offensive coordinator Tuesday.

Saunders, 53, joined St. Louis in 1999 as wide receivers coach. He was head coach of the San Diego Chargers from 1986-88, and assistant head coach and receivers coach for the Kansas City Chiefs from 1989-98. He will continue as wide receivers coach.

Jackson, 60, joined St. Louis in February as running backs coach after five seasons with the Washington Redskins.

Giants

Cornerback Conrad Hamilton was waived by the Giants after failing a team physical.

Hamilton made just three appearances last season, including two starts, after injuring his knee and ankle in the team's first intrasquad scrimmage.

He started at cornerback in 1998, after Jason Sehorn's season-ending knee injury. Hamilton had a career-high 91 tackles, 17 passes defended and one interception.

Hamilton originally joined the Giants as a seventh-round draft choice from Eastern New Mexico in 1996.

Eagles

John Frank, Philadelphia's sixth-round draft pick, retired from football even before his NFL career started.

Frank, a defensive end from Utah, reported to the Eagles for a team meeting Saturday — but never reported for practice.

"It was personal reasons. It was a situation where he intended to come," director of football operations Tom Modrak said. "He had gone through some of the minicamps and at the last minute he changed his mind. It caught us all off guard. It was probably a very difficult decision for him."

Frank forfeits a signing bonus of about $63,000.

Frank had a school-record 27 sacks at Utah, and was the 1999 Mountain West Conference defensive player of the year.

Browns

Running back Terry Kirby will miss 7-10 days of practice with two small fractures in his left eye socket.

Kirby was hurt Sunday during a blocking drill. At first the injury was thought to be just a bruise.

Kirby started the first nine games in 1999 and was the Browns' leading rusher with 452 yards and six touchdowns. Errict Rhett, who signed with the Browns as an unrestricted free agent, is the expected starter at running back.

"I already know the offense," Kirby said. "Hopefully, I'll be out only about seven days. I'll be ready for the preseason opener."

The Browns open July 30 against the Philadelphia Eagles.

NABC still objects to Confederate flag's placement in South Carolina

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, S.C. — The National Association of Basketball Coaches has renewed its objection to holding an NCAA regional in Greenville in 2002 unless the state removes the Confederate flag from its current location on the Statehouse grounds.

"We do not see the situation as having been cleared up, and we think the NCAA should move the site out of Greenville," NABC director Jim Haney said Tuesday.

He said the group's NCAA Division I coaches voted Sunday at their meeting in Las Vegas to continue their opposition to South Carolina serving as a host for an NCAA tournament event while the Confederate flag remains in a prominent location.

Earlier this month, the flag was removed from the Statehouse dome and the House and Senate chambers. A similar, more historically accurate flag was then raised near a monument to Confederate war dead on the Statehouse grounds.

Haney said coaches were concerned because the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other groups have objected to the flag's new location, saying it is too prominent a position for what they consider a reminder of slavery and a symbol of Southern oppression of blacks. Flag supporters say it represents Southern heritage and is not a symbol of racism.

"The discussion on this topic in Las Vegas centered around the fact that the NAACP once again had indicated that although the flag had come off the Statehouse ... it was still not satisfactory in their eyes in terms of the new location of the flag," Haney said from the group's Overland Park, Kan., office.

In April, the NCAA said it would move championship events, including the regional scheduled for Greenville, and two cross-country events, unless the state removed the flag from the dome. After lawmakers voted in May to move the flag to the Confederate soldier monument, a statement from the NCAA said the group was "pleased that the governor and state Legislature have been able to reach agreement on the matter."
