Senate says plan 'risky'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration plans to protect Kuwaiti tankers in the Persian Gulf starting next week are being met with warnings from the Senate that the proposal is as risky as putting U.S. Marines into Beirut in 1983.

Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., who just returned from a visit to the area, said Wednesday the plan means "what we're seeing is the United States being sucked into the violent and savage" war between Iran and Iraq. Kuwait is an ally of Iraq.

"The environment surrounding our Navy in the Persian Gulf is as dangerous as the exposure of our Marines in Beirut," warned Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., former chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, agreed, saying, "We're not neutral now. We're getting away from that fig leaf of neutrality...It's not a bluff anymore as it was in Beirut where we wound up with 241 body bags."

They referred to the Oct. 23, 1983, attack on Marine headquarters in Beirut by a terrorist driving an explosives-laden truck. The blast killed 241 U.S. servicemen who were part of a peacekeeping force in strife-torn Lebanon.

"You can't say combat is not imminent when we just shipped 36 bodies back to Dover," said Glenn, referring to the U.S. servicemen killed in the May 17 Iraqi missile attack on the Navy frigate Stark. A total of 37 sailors were killed.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd today called for a halt to next week's plans to protect Kuwaiti tankers until Congress is assured that U.S. servicemen will be protected.

"No new commitments should be entered into, in my opinion, until we're completely satisfied that a militarily effective plan based on capabilities as well as past praticies, with an insurance factor for the unpredictable, has been developed and will be implemented," the Virginia Democrat said in a speech on the floor.

No Kuwaiti tankers should be protected until after the Navy finishes its investigation of what happened aboard the Stark, Byrd said, and until the administration sends Congress a report on the military dangers and defenses for U.S. servicemen in the gulf.

The blunt concerns were raised as Congress returned from a Memorial Day recess and began looking hard at the administration's plans to put U.S. flags and American captains on Kuwaiti tankers in the gulf. But despite the warnings, no legislators called for a change in U.S. plans.

Iranian officials have warned that the U.S. move will not deter Iran from targeting the Kuwaiti tankers.

Reagan issued his own warning Wednesday, telling Iran the United States won't back down on its promise to keep open the gulf, home of much of the oil used by Western nations.

Reagan, in an interview with European journalists, refused to say exactly what the United States will do if Iran attacks.

"I don't think that's a question that I should even attempt (to answer)," he said, adding, "We will defend ourselves. I think it's far better if the Iranians go to bed every night wondering what we might do than us telling them in advance. I doubt that Iran would ever declare war on the United States, knowing what the inevitable consequence would be."

Reagan said the Navy is "not out to attack, but if fired upon, we'll fire back."

Tornado watch to continue today

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Odds this morning were that a tornado watch — if not a warning — would continue throughout the day for Midland County and most of the surrounding area, a National Weather Service meteorologist said.

As of this morning, there were thunderstorms to the north of Midland around Andrews as far north as east of Lubbock moving in a northeasterly pattern, the NWS said.

"There's been no changes since yesterday (Wednesday). It's the same weather pattern," said Richard Davis at the NWS of the weather alert in Midland which initially went into effect in southern Midland and all of West Texas at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday.

The 2:30 p.m. tornado watch which went into effect in Midland Wednesday was upgraded to a tornado warning at 8:10 p.m. that same day.

"Level six" clouds — the most intense of all storm clouds according to NWS classifications — were the reason meteorologists issued the tornado warning which was downgraded to a watch until 10 p.m. Wednesday, and further downgraded to the severe thunderstorm warning — still in effect at 10 a.m. today, Davis said.

"Level sixes were in the area all last night. Those are the ones we look for producing large hail and tornados," Davis said.

Tornado warnings were first issued in eastern Pecos county at 5:48 p.m. and followed for Upton and Midland counties later on Wednesday night, the meteorologist said.

Although no weather or law officials spotted tornadoes or funnel clouds, unofficial sightings abounded, Davis said.

Three tornados were sighted by the public — one three miles south of Fort Stockton, another one 2½ miles southwest of Midland and a third one five miles south of Interstate 20 in Midland, Davis said.

Six funnel clouds were reported to the NWS — one three miles south of Fort Stockton; one 15 miles northeast of Crane; one 10 miles south of Midland; two south of Midland around the intersection of Midkiff and Cotton Flat Roads and one about three miles south of Fort Stockton, Davis said.

Although Midland Police and Midland County Sheriff's department officials said they had no official reports of damage this morning, residents in southern Midland begged to differ.

Jan Robison, said he sat in his car last night outside of his mobile home at the Twin Oaks Mobile Home Park on Cotton Flat Road until the violent hail storm passed.

A bathroom window and a skylight in his home were broken and the windshield of his Ford Escort station wagon was cracked, Robison said.

Glass fell outside when the window was broken and Robison just "put a bucket under the skylight" for the duration of the storm.

Blind radio operator made pleas for help — 2A

SARAGOSA — With the exception of a few isolated incidents, the press and the police in this tornado-ravaged community displayed professionalism toward each other, agreed survivors, law enforcement officials and newsmen.

As many as 400 news representatives converged on the devastation over the last five days, according to one lawman's estimate — adding occasional insult to injury in an already tense situation.

Houston Chronicle reporter Roy Bragg, who covered the weekend tragedy, said, "The percentage of reporters misbehaving was probably equal to the percentage of lawmen over-reacting.

"The deputies had been overworked and real tired and the reporters were just trying to get the best stories," Bragg said.

On Tuesday, Midland Reporter-Telegram assistant city editor Rick Brown was arrested outside the Saragosa cemetery where funeral services were being conducted for 16 of the 29 victims of Friday's deadly tornado. About 162 were injured.

Brown contended he did not provoke or harass Deputy Sgt. Gary Ingram, but merely requested he be allowed to proceed south on State Highway 17 to cover Gov. Bill Clements' arrival in Balmorhea.

Brown said he approached Ingram a second time to ask the deputy's name. It apparently was his persistent questioning that ignited a spark of smoldering frustration and led to his arrest.

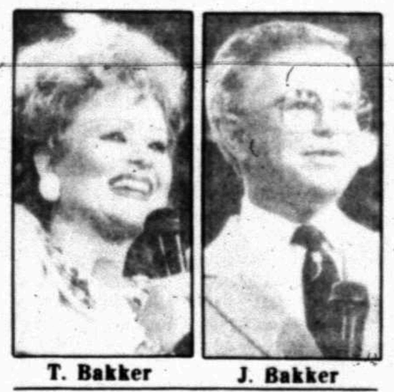

Several other media representatives agreed that Reeves County Sheriff's deputies got a "little feisty."

Houston Chronicle photographer Dave Einsel said, "You could see how things were wearing on them. Something was bound to happen if somebody pushed them too far."

Ingram said Brown's arrest was the only incident involving what he called "unprofessional conduct" by the press.

Bakker may start new ministry if he can't return to PTL

T. Bakker

J. Bakker

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — Disgraced evangelist Jim Bakker dared anyone to prove he is homosexual, and said if the Rev. Jerry Falwell won't let him return to "save" the PTL empire, he may start a new ministry in California.

"I believe in miracles and I would like to have my ministry back if the people want us back," Bakker said Wednesday night in an appearance with his wife, Tammy Faye, on ABC News' "Nightline."

"If Jerry Falwell won't let us go home," he said. "I dream of building another city, maybe in California. I dream of maybe going back on television someday."

In March, Bakker handed his multimillion-dollar PTL television network and Heritage USA theme park over to Falwell and admitted to a sexual encounter in 1980 with church secretary Jessica Hahn.

Falwell said Wednesday he learned that Bakker and an associate had sex with Ms. Hahn and that a third person tried to, and that Bakker had had homosexual problems as far back as 1956. Bakker's denomination, the Assemblies of God, cited the allegations of bisexuality when it defrocked him last month.

"I've looked into the homosexual charges," Bakker said. "I would again say if anyone has these charges against me I want them to come forward publicly with this proof."

Mrs. Bakker added, "I've been married to this man for 26 years, and I can tell you one thing: he's not homosexual or is he bisexual."

Falwell, on ABC's "Good Morning America" program today, said, "I have deepest sympathy for Jim and Tammy Bakker.

"Obviously, I would not have said what I said yesterday without incontrovertible evidence," including taped and sworn statements, Falwell said.

Along with the sex scandal, a financial scandal at PTL materialized soon after Bakker's departure. Falwell said Wednesday the ministry is $70 million in debt.

But Bakker said there was no financial disaster when he was at PTL.

"Why is now it being talked about going into bankruptcy?" he asked. "I would come back today to save the ministry that we spent a lifetime building and to honor the commitment to our wonderful partners and friends."

It was Bakker's second "Nightline" appearance in as many nights from the couple's home in Palm Springs, Calif.

On Tuesday, he accused Falwell of misleading him into giving up 518,000-member PTL by arguing the move was needed to prevent a hostile takeover by the Rev. Jimmy Swaggart. Bakker also said Falwell, the independent Baptist founder of the Moral Majority, agreed to return the ministry to Bakker at some point, but went back on his promise.

Senate OKs increases to gasoline tax, sales tax

Clements: Temporary increase height of irresponsibility

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Bemoaning the need to slap another Band-Aid on Texas' gaping fiscal wounds, the Senate Thursday unanimously passed an $890 million gasoline tax increase and a $294 million, four-month extension of last summer's temporary sales tax hike.

Gov. Bill Clements, who wants lawmakers to make the sales tax increase permanent, called the Senate's temporary extension "the height of irresponsibility and an example of political gamesmanship." House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Stan Schlueter said he will ask the House to accept the gas tax bill but appoint a conference committee to negotiate on the sales tax.

Meeting in special session last summer, the Legislature increased the state sales tax from 4.125 percent to 5.25 percent and boosted the gasoline tax from 10 to 15 cents a gallon. Without further action, both increases will expire Sept. 1. With Clements' backing in March, the House passed two bills making those higher rates permanent.

Sen. Bob Glasgow, chairman of the Senate Tax Policy Subcommittee, said senators extended the sales tax increase through Dec. 31 to maintain revenue flow into the Treasury while the state prepares for a thorough tax reform. He hopes lawmakers can overhaul the tax system during a special session. Clements said he will call in June or July. The regular session ends at midnight Monday, and all sides agree no resolution will come to the estimated $5.8 billion, 1988-1989 budget shortfall.

"I still hope in the special session — if we have time — that (we) can figure out a fairer way to raise revenues for the state of Texas rather than have the consumers pay for it without any regard to what their income is or whether or not 10 percent of the business are paying 92 percent of the franchise tax," Glasgow, D-Stephenville, said.

"These are stop-gap measures," said Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who presides over the Senate. "This is the best we can do under the circumstances."

Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Canyon, said Texans are growing weary of the Legislature's handling of the budget. "We've been doing it in special session after special session," he said.

"We have consistently battled with taxes and cuts in the budget and taxes and cuts in the budget, and I think all of us are tired of the Band-Aid approach."

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, said senators had no choice. "I think everybody recognized that it was a fall-back position, but this way the schools and everybody can go on and plan to open like we'd hoped they would," Sims said. "I just felt like it was something that had to be done."

Sen. Hugh Parmer, D-Fort Worth, said the Legislature could have undertaken thorough tax reform this session if Clements hadn't promised to veto any tax increase greater than $2.9 billion. "If we were not operating under an unreasonable threat of a gubernatorial veto based on artificial numbers, this Legislature could have done the job," he said.

But in a blistering attack on Hobby and the Senate, Clements said failure to make the temporary taxes permanent could jeopardize the state's ability to take out short-term loans in September to keep the Treasury solvent. "The Senate is playing games with the future of Texas," the governor said.

"The people of Texas are not amused and do not agree. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby has placed himself in the dubious position of being the one responsible for drawing us closer to a cash flow problem. If such a problem develops, Mr. Hobby is to blame."

Treasurer Ann Richards, who watched the Senate action by Hobby's side, said she can't solve the cash-flow problem until lawmakers balance the budget. "Until they do that, any of these measures just help, they just keep it from getting worse than it is," she said.

"The rest were very nice...He (Brown) kept insisting he had to get to Balmorhea. I told him to wait," Ingram said.

Many reporters said the lack of organization led to "wear and tear" on both the press and lawmen.

John Gonzales of the Dallas Morning News said, "The community was not media oriented. They did not realize they had the power to control the media if they wanted to."

Gonzales said he searched for media "ground rules," but found none.

In addition to the lack of organization, one newsman said police had difficulty corralling reporters who were constantly looking for variety in their stories.

"There was so much competition between reporters to find new angles...You really had to reach to get something different," said Jay Lewis, assistant state editor of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

To make matters worse, Lewis said the rescue and clean-up efforts were hampered by severe weather conditions in the days that followed the disaster.

"Everybody was scared, tired and grieving. Everybody had been imposed on," he said.

John Steiger, a photographer for KPRC-TV in Houston, said deputies ran him off a Balmorhea school campus while he was filming the delivery of food donations.

Deputies limited the number of news representatives from viewing the rites at Monday's rosary services. The few who were allowed in the school building were asked to share their notes with other television, newspaper and wire service reporters, Steiger said.

"We were getting chased away from a lot of scenes not involving people. I think the deputies were making their own policy. They were deciding what you could and couldn't do," he said.

Saragosa resident Phillip Lopez agreed, "We certainly didn't have any problems with the media. If anyone's to blame it's the police. They kept running reporters off when they didn't do anything wrong.

"I think the feeling among most of the officers was 'I gotta badge. You do what I say.'" he added.

But Melton Rasberry, who heads the Texas Department of Public Safety office in Pecos, said the press was free to move about at will.

"We don't keep the press out unless there's a life-threatening situation. We didn't turn anyone away," Rasberry said.

Pecos Police Chief Ed Krevit said a minor confrontation between lawmen and the media occurred early Saturday when police threatened to arrest reporters if they didn't vacate the Pecos Funeral Home parking lot where corpses were being unloaded from a school bus.

"Some of the bodies were in compromising positions," Krevit said.

"I don't think (the media) would've liked to have seen a member of their family in that condition on the six o'clock news. In some cases, the press failed to understand that," he added.

Bill Spencer of KOSA-TV in Odessa said he didn't understand why his and other news crews were told to leave the premises.

"We weren't trying to do something grotesque by shooting the faces of dead people as they were unloading. We wanted to be able to describe the scene to everyone around the country...it was a damn morbid scene."

Another confrontation also occurred Saturday morning when a Reeves County Hospital official asked police to escort a TV cameraman from the emergency room where he was filming.

Hospital public relations director Nancy Vitolas said, "Most of the press was very professional and very helpful."

But she added, "There were a few that were very insistent and would not follow our rules."

Reeves County Sheriff Raul Florez noted that lawmen led another television reporter from Saragosa after he questioned a deputy attempting to rescue a victim trapped under broken concrete.

"Back then we weren't interested in answering questions," Florez said. "We were interested in saving peoples' lives."

Saragosa resident Anthony Fleenor cited problems with the news media during Tuesday's funeral service when cameramen followed weeping families to the victims' graves.

"Some people just didn't want to see themselves crying on TV or on the front page of the newspaper," Fleenor said.

New York Times Houston bureau reporter Peter Applebome said, "In a perfect world, if people are going to have a funeral Mass after a terrible disaster, they don't want cameras around.

"On the other hand, that's the media's job. Stories like that are a nightmare to cover. Most journalists don't enjoy it. It's something you have to do," he said.

Saragosa resident Javier Candelas said he saw only "exemplary behavior" on the part of the media.

"Jeez, we realized they had to find the best picture for the front page," he added.

What Saragosa residents are more afraid of is "the press losing interest like what usually happens," said Saul Candelas.

One newsman contended that apathy among the press would have led to little or no aid.

"If it wasn't for these herds of vultures of the press descending on the town," said Houston Chronicle reporter Bragg, "there would be no aid for these people. Nothing."

Blind amateur radio operator made urgent pleas for help

SEMINOLE (AP) — A blind amateur radio operator could not see what a tornado did to his hometown of Saragosa, but he used his skills to broadcast urgent pleas for help across the state.

"Chief communicator. Yes, that's what it amounted to," said 30-year-old George Toone, who was visiting his parents near the doomed town Friday night. "Everyone else was out rescuing people."

It was Toone's radio broadcasts that passed the word to radio listeners across West Texas that something terrible had happened.

"Get me ambulance people, get me fire department people," he recalled yelling into his radio. "I was just hysterical."

Toone, who has been blind since birth, said he was relaxing at his parents' home on a visit from his home of Seminole when he heard on a radio scanner that a tornado had been spotted on Interstate 10.

"One of the deputies came on the scanner and said, 'Saragosa's gone!'" said Toone, who then began broadcasting on his own battery-powered radio and sent the first signals for assistance.

He and his father, Dale, then drove into town. The workshop that once housed the elder Toone's tractors and farm implements had been flattened.

The younger Toone, a former sheriff's dispatcher who owns radio stations KIKZ-AM and KSEM-FM in Seminole, later hopped into a Reeves County Sheriff's Department vehicle and operated their radio as well as his own in a frantic appeal for help.

In the chaotic wake of the twister — which killed 29, injured 162 and snapped power and phone — he said he could only imagine its fury.

"If you want to know the truth," he said, Tuesday, "I'm glad I couldn't see it."

While rescuers searched throughout Friday night for bodies amongst the rubble, Toone relayed information from emergency workers to other agencies.

He guessed at least 300 sets of ears were tuned to ham radio sets across the region that night because of tornado warnings issued by the National Weather Service.

Witness says he was concerned Secord would steal planes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former CIA operative Felix Rodriguez testified today he had been concerned that Richard V. Secord might try to steal aircraft used in dropping supplies to the Nicaraguan rebels for fear of being shut out when the CIA resumed aid to the Contras.

In his second day before the congressional Iran-Contra hearings, Rodriguez suggested that Secord — a retired Air Force major general recruited by White House aide Oliver L. North to run the airlift — wanted to seize the assets of the Contra rebel supply operation in the summer of 1986.

It was anticipated at the time that CIA would resume managing the operation later that year, because Congress had voted to lift its restrictions on U.S. government help for the rebels.

Rodriguez was asked about his earlier testimony that he put Contra guards on the airlift planes to make sure they were not stolen.

"Who were you concerned about, trying to steal those aircraft?" asked Sen. Paul Trible Jr., R-Va.

"I was concerned that they would receive orders from the owner, which was Gen. Secord, and take the airplanes somewhere else," Rodriguez replied.

Secord had testified previously that he wanted to donate the assets of the resupply effort to the CIA when the congressional ban was lifted. Nevertheless, Secord's staff drew up an option paper which discussed selling the assets to the CIA.

Iran-Contra Affair

The investigating committees also scheduled a closed-door session today to take testimony from Joe Fernandez, the former CIA station chief in Costa Rica who went by the pseudonym of Tomas Castillo. Fernandez left the agency after being disciplined for helping the Contra support effort during the congressional ban.

Also to testify in public today was Lewis Tambs, who retired last year after two years as U.S. ambassador to Costa Rica, in which post he maintained close ties with the Contra aid network.

The testimony this week has represented a new round of a common refrain in the hearings: distrust by various factions in the Iran-Contra affair.

Rodriguez, who served as a coordinator of the airlift in El Salvador, linked Secord with former associates of Edwin Wilson, a former CIA official who was convicted of selling arms to Libya's Moammar Gadhafi. He said today he expressed concerns about these connections to North, who brushed them aside.

Elaborating on his testimony Wednesday, Rodriguez said North was "critical" of Congress and bragged that his activities were protected at high levels in the Reagan administration from his adversaries at the Capitol.

Rodriguez said he believed that North was referring to President Reagan when North said, as the two of them watched a televised House debate on Contra aid in June 1986: "Those people want me, but they can't touch me, because the old man loves my ass."

The Cuban-born Rodriguez, who used the alias Max Gomez, also said he and his associates were angered when they learned from testimony before the investigating committees that millions of dollars raised by North's associates were stored in Swiss bank accounts at a time when North was complaining of inadequate private contributions to buy quality aircraft for the Contra resupply effort.

This revelation during the joint House-Senate hearings "infuriated a lot of people who believed in this cause and in democracy," he testified.

At another point, Rodriguez opened his briefcase and unfolded a red banner with hammer and sickle that he said was captured from Salvadoran insurgents, who he said were backed by the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua and were armed by the Soviets and trained by Cubans.

Testifying Wednesday about internal disputes among those aiding the Contras, Rodriguez said he had heard the rebels were being sold hand grenades for $9 each.

He did hint that missile batteries on Iranian soil might be targets.

"Now, it is true that the Iranians have placed missiles on shore that can reach targets at sea," he said. "That has to be considered with regard to more than just shooting at another vessel or shooting at an airplane."

But that's about as specific as anybody would get.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, for instance, was asked whether an attack on a Kuwaiti tanker carrying a U.S. flag would be regarded as an act of war.

"The rules of engagement have all been laid out. And, as I said (Tuesday), we are there as a deterrent force, not to initiate any offensive action. And we would not characterize any incident as an act of war."

The White House said the U.S. ships will begin escorting the Kuwaiti tankers "within the next week or so."

Sasser warned, "I think it's just a matter of time until the Iranians do" hit a U.S.-flagged ship.

"I think the administration erred in going forward on the reflagging without fully consulting Congress," Sasser said at a news conference.

But Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said, "We have a difference of opinion on that," saying at the same news conference that the White House had adequately consulted with the Senate.

Warner and Glenn spoke shortly before leaving for the gulf, where they planned to consult with U.S. allies and American Navy officials. Sasser had returned from doing much the same thing.

All three supported Reagan's pledge to keep the gulf open to shipping, but they disagreed on exactly how to do it.

If the Iranians attack a U.S.-flagged ship, said Warner, "the world is fully aware of the capabilities of the United States, not just in the gulf, to retaliate."

Glenn said an Iranian attack would be less likely if the Navy force in the gulf is beefed up, but he declined to say what types of ships he thinks should be moved there.

Legislators agreed that U.S. allies, particularly France and Great Britain, should be asked to help protect gulf shipping.

Glenn noted that French and British naval vessels are already in the gulf, but Warner commented that "so far as I know, there is no coordinated plan now between the U.S. and its allies."

Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., in a speech on the Senate floor, said, "We should not have to share the burden alone" and said American allies must be pressed to help.

Sasser and Glenn also said the current action should fall under the scope of the War Powers Act, a 1973 law requiring the White House to consult with Congress when American forces are in danger of being in combat.

"I think the act is being broken," said Sasser, a comment seconded by Glenn. White House officials have said they don't think the law applies to the current situation, although they have promised to consult with Congress.

Falwell denied he hoodwinked Bakker and said Bakker either has a terrible memory or is dishonest or emotionally ill.

"When you consider the condition this ministry is in, to say that Jerry Falwell and this board stole PTL on March 17 is like accusing someone of stealing the Titanic just after it hit the iceberg," he said.

Only upon learning of PTL's financial condition and the extent of the sexual allegations against Bakker, Falwell said, did he decide it would be "a disservice to God and to the church at large" to let Bakker ever return.

Bakker said he was not sure how much money PTL had paid him in recent years, but estimated his 1986 salary was $1.1 million. Falwell said the couple was paid $1.9 million last year, not including bonuses and other benefits.

"Tammy and I had nothing to do with our salary," Bakker said. "But our board cared about us and they would tell us, 'Jim and Tammy you earn every penny that we give you'...And I feel that we should have said no."

Falwell, however, said the Charlotte (N.C.) Observer had quoted three board members as denying they had approved such large salaries for top PTL leaders.

"Regardless of board approval, when you have a payroll you can't make, and when you're cutting off hundreds of people who depend on the ministry to survive for their salary, I think it is very very irresponsible and insensitive to be taking out scores of millions of dollars over many years for top management," Falwell said.

This year's salary scale would have been $2.4 million for the Bakkers, he said on "Good Morning America."

The Bakkers also said their recent severance demands were negotiating positions. Falwell said those demands included lifetime salaries of $300,000 a year for Bakker and $100,000 a year for Mrs. Bakker, hospitalization insurance, rights to their books and records, attorney fees for dealing with the Internal Revenue Service, phone service for a year, a maid and secretary for a year, their Tega Cay, S.C., home and its furnishings, two cars, and security.

"Those were just some suggestions of where to start," Bakker said. "Honestly, we'd go back to PTL and work for nothing if God wants that."

Bakker said, in fact, he had thought quite a bit about coming back.

"We would like to come back to PTL," he said. "It's our love, it's our baby. We built it, and if we do come back, if God allows it, we have already picked about a 25-person board of the greatest leaders in this country that we would submit ourselves to."

STORMS

Hail resembling grapefruits was reported in Midland, Davis said.

Light fixtures were shattered and the car was dented outside the home of Mrs. Diana Price, she said.

"We've even got some of it saved in the freezer.

"We were out shopping last night during the storm and my husband saved it because he didn't think we'd believe him," Mrs. Price said of the hail which struck her home near Rankin Highway off County Road 130 West.

The huge and hard-driving hail storms stretched to the southern limits of Midland County. But as the storm crossed the city in a diagonal fashion, the hail and overall intensity of the storm died out, Davis said.

When the sky appears to take on a greenish hue, there is hail forming in the clouds, Davis said.

This is usually characteristic of tornado weather but not mandatory by any means, he added.

Perhaps surprisingly, no airplanes canceled landings at Midland Regional Airport, said Larry Ramon.

Airline carriers are the only ones capable of making that decision unless runway conditions prevent a landing, an airport spokesman said.

Power lines were not affected badly in Midland or Ector counties Wednesday night, according to Stan Garrison with the Texas Utilities Electric Co. in Midland.

"One fuse was blown on Cloverdale at County Road 1050. Lightening caused a fuse to blow service and it cut the power to 34 customers for one hour," Garrison said.

Statistics just in this morning concerning the Saragosa tornado Friday showed that the tornado touched down on the southwest side of the tiny town and moved across field, said Andy Anderson of the NWS office in Lubbock.

It traveled in a northeast direction and then moved to the north and weakened, Anderson said.

As tornadoes change direction they often weaken and die, the Lubbock official explained.

Damage to the town was one-half a mile wide, its path was about three miles long and its duration was about two to three minutes, Anderson said.

That is a relatively short period of time, he added. Tornadoes can travel for a short distance or one, which Anderson remembered, traveled 120 miles.

In issuing tornado warnings, weather officials use information gathered from the public, ham spotters — those who "risk life and limb and get in their cars and sit right under the tornados — and radar information," Davis said.

When scanning the skies for evidence of a tornado, the first thing to look for is the bottom of the thunderstorm — the area closest to ground, Davis said.

"You would normally have a kind of a doughnut-shaped cloud coming down from the base of thunderstorm cloud. If the cloud is moving in circular motion this is an indication there may be a tornado trying to form.

"Sometimes it may look like a solid mass dropping and rotating in circular motion," Davis explained.

A tornado can form in two to three hours — as in the case of Saragosa — or in as little time as 30 minutes, Anderson said.

While it is common knowledge May and June are thunderous months in West Texas, the consecutive days of tornado warnings and watches is unusual, Davis said.

Moist weather systems from the Gulf of Mexico are in overabundance in West Texas and this is making it difficult for the drier weather systems from the West to move through the area, Davis said.

The concoction's results is what Midlanders are experiencing currently.

There is no hope of these severe weather conditions changing until at least Friday, Davis said.

System for 'fairer' national organ distribution announced

CHICAGO (AP) — Transplant agencies will be forced this fall to standardize procedures in deciding who should receive organs, or face loss of funding under the guidelines of a new national organ distribution network.

The new system, announced Wednesday night at the annual meeting of the American Society of Transplant Physicians, was devised in an attempt to make distribution of organs more fair, and could result in fewer public appeals.

"The idea that 'I retrieved it and it's mine' is simply not defensible," Dr. John McDonald, president of the United Network for Organ Sharing, or UNOS, said in announcing the guidelines.

"Not only is it the law, it is the right thing to do."

Beginning Oct. 1, all of America's approximately 110 organ procurement agencies, 200 transplant centers and numerous transplant tissue-typing laboratories will have to participate in the Organ Procurement and Transplantation Network or risk losing federal Medicare reimbursements.

The computerized network was established by UNOS last fall under a $300,000 federal contract. The network also was one of many recommendations made by the National Task Force on Organ Transplantation, which was formed under the 1984 National Transplant Act.

Under the contract, UNOS is required to collect data on all organs donated in this country, maintain a list off all those awaiting transplants and serve as a watchdog for centers with unusually poor results.

About 10,000 Americans are awaiting organ transplants, including 9,000 in need of kidneys. Because of donor shortages, only about 20 percent actually get kidneys, according to Dr. Robert J. Corry, president of the American Society of Transplant Surgeons.

"The thrust is that a patient in New York will be evaluated for an organ on the same basic scheme as anywhere else, that the public will know there's a common denominator in which the decision is being made," said Dr. Robert Gordon, a transplant surgeon at the University of Pittsburgh, which has been using a similar scoring system for more than a year.

However, some doctors are opposed to the new system.

"I am willing to fulfill any criteria. But somebody must show me that they do better than I do. And until that time comes, I don't want anybody to tell me what I have to do," said Dr. Folkert O. Belzer of the University of Wisconsin.

Under the new system, organ procurement agencies and transplant centers will have to distribute most organs based on a point system approved Tuesday by the UNOS board of directors.

The agencies also will have to share access to kidneys considered near-perfect matches, which comprise fewer than 5 percent of all donated kidneys.

Among the factors to be considered in the point system will be the patient's time on the waiting list, medical urgency and proximity to the donor.

"All recipients must have equal access to available organs," McDonald said. "Equal access implies that transplantation is to be formed for medical reasons, that there be no preferential treatments, that organs not be purchased, that there be no profiteering in the distribution of organs."

Because some transplant cases receive more media attention than others, patients' families often mistakenly believe that is the best way to get organs, which are still very much in short supply, said Dr. Samuel Matheny, director of the U.S. Office of Organ Transplantation.

European view of Gorbachev not realistic

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says he hopes Europeans who trust Mikhail Gorbachev more than him "wake up soon" but at the same time he says he hopes to have a summit meeting with the Soviet leader this fall.

"It is up to General Secretary Gorbachev now to set the date," Reagan said Wednesday.

In an interview, Reagan said he is optimistic about prospects for an agreement to abolish medium-range missiles from U.S. and Soviet arsenals in Europe.

"I do believe that great progress has been made (in negotiations), more than in all the years since World War II, and that we have the best opportunity for beginning the reduction of nuclear weapons that we've ever had," Reagan said.

The president was questioned for 29 minutes in the Oval Office by television reporters from the six countries that will be represented along with the United States at the economic summit next month: Canada, Britain, West Germany, Italy, France and Japan.

Asked if he is worried by recent polls in West Germany showing that people think Gorbachev is more popular and credible than he is, Reagan said, "Yes, and I hope they'll wake up soon."

While saying he did not mean to insult Gorbachev, Reagan said, "I do believe that on the record of abiding by treaties, on the record of striving for peace, that the United States' record is one that the people should have confidence in, more confidence than the Soviet Union, which has a wrong record of violating treaties and of using subversion in order to spread its influence throughout the rest of the world."

Reagan noted that Gorbachev has accepted in principle a summit meeting in the United States. "Now it's simply a case of when will that take place."

He said the United States has been closely consulting with its allies on a Soviet proposal to eliminate medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

"There seems to be some pretty general agreement on the basic terms of what we're negotiating," Reagan said, adding, "We're hopeful of getting rid of those in the world."

However, Reagan said, "There is no thought on our side of totally denuclearizing Europe at the same time that this would leave the Soviet Union with a great superiority in conventional weapons."

On other points, the president said:

— His credibility has been damaged by the Iran-Contra affair but "it has not been done by anything that has been proven — quite the contrary. It has been the image that has been created by our own, particularly Washington, press corps in describing what took place."

— "The dollar is at the place where it should remain. We don't look for any further serious drops in the value of the dollar."

"It's always referred to as the dollar being overvalued and then suddenly the dollar losing value," Reagan said.

"We've had a feeling that the currencies of some other countries have been undervalued and that everyone will be better off if those currencies have come up so that maybe it isn't all just our dollar — that they have come up."

— He will not permit a "barbaric country" like Iran to close down oil-shipping routes in the Persian Gulf. However, he won't say how far the United States will go in retaliating for an attack on a U.S. ship because "it's far better the Iranians go to bed every night wondering what we might do."

— While he does not want to appear to be trying to influence the outcome of British elections next month, he has "great admiration for the manner in which Prime Minister (Margaret) Thatcher has handled not only the domestic affairs but the international affairs."

If a new British government embraced unilateral disarmament and sought the removal of U.S. nuclear bases from Great Britain, "I would try with all of my might to persuade that government not make those grievous errors, and yet...we've had a friendly relationship that has survived Labor governments in the past, as well as Conservative governments there."

— The United States and Japan seem to be making some progress in resolving a trade dispute on computer chips but "we still have not reached what I think must be the answer, and this a return to abiding by the agreement that both our countries had made" to control unfair trading practices.

Children reportedly sang on way to their death

By JEFFREY ULBRICH

LYON, France (AP) — Forty-five children sang in happy innocence of their fate as trucks took them to Nazi extermination camps where most would be killed, a witness testified at the trial of Klaus Barbie.

Barbie is accused of directing the roundup of the children from a shelter in Izieu, 45 miles east of Paris, while he headed the Gestapo in Lyon in World War II. He is now 73 and charged with crimes against humanity.

Prosecutors say he arrested, tortured and deported hundreds of Jews and members of the French Resistance to Nazi concentration camps. Barbie was not in court Wednesday.

A man who was working in a field in Izieu on April 6, 1944, said Wednesday that he remembered Barbie and the German soldiers driving up to a house that was being used as a shelter for children whose parents had been deported.

"He had a soft hat," Julien Favet, 72, said of Barbie. "He questioned me, looked me over from head to foot. It was him. I swear it."

Favet, who was not arrested because he was not Jewish, said he heard the children's voices raised in song as they were driven away.

Favet formally identified Barbie in 1983, during the judicial investigation.

Of the 45 children and seven adults taken away from the Izieu home, only two survived — Rene Wucher, a child who was freed because he was not Jewish, and Lea Feldblum, an employee of the home who now lives in Israel.

Prosecutors say Barbie ordered and personally directed the roundup. The prosecution has what experts say is a telegram Barbie sent to his superiors describing the action at Izieu.

Sabrina Zlatin, now 80, was a nurse in charge of the children's home. She was away when the Germans conducted the raid, but her husband, Miron, was taken away and shot to death at a German work camp in the Soviet Union.

"For 43 years I have carried Izieu in my heart," she said Wednesday.

Glaring at defense attorney Jacques Verges and the empty defendant's box, she shouted, "These 44 children, what were they? Were they Resistors? They were innocents!"

Dr. Leon Reifmann was a medical student helping at the home. He escaped by jumping out a window and hiding in the garden, but his parents, sister and a nephew died in the Nazi camps.

"My hope was to find a person who would have expressed regret," he told the court. "I have not heard that here. My hope has been deceived."

Barbie declared May 13 that he would not attend the trial on the grounds that he was kidnapped from Bolivia, where he had lived for three decades, in 1983 and brought to France illegally. The Bolivian government expelled him.

Soviets deny Kremlin sent arms to Iran

MOSCOW (AP) — The official Soviet news agency denied the Kremlin sent arms to Iran and said "disinformation" to that effect was published in a U.S. newspaper to distract attention from the Iran-Contra affair.

The New York Times reported Wednesday that the Soviet Union quietly delivered more than $18 million worth of weaponry to Iran in December.

"One does not require too keen of an imagination to see that the point at issue is an act of disinformation hostile to the U.S.S.R.," the official news agency Tass responded Wednesday.

"It goes without saying that the Soviet Union did not carry out the deliveries, and The New York Times report has been described by competent Soviet circles as an ill-intentioned fabrication."

Tass said, "Some people would like to divert public attention from the resounding scandal over the unlawful shipments of American arms to Iran, involving many high-ranking figures from the U.S. administration."

The Times, citing the records of a French arms dealer, Jean-Louis Gantzer, said the Soviet shipment included SA-7 anti-aircraft missiles and launchers that were taken from a Warsaw Pact depot in Poland.

Iran and Iraq have been at war since September 1980. The Kremlin has not expressed public support for either side but is believed to be Iraq's largest arms supplier, furnishing as much as $2 billion in weaponry a year.

Western specialists, however, have said that Iran has acquired weapons in the past from the Soviet Union's East bloc allies such as Czechoslovakia and through Soviet-aligned Arab nations such as Syria.

Soviet media and officials have accused the United States of prolonging the Iran-Iraq war by the covert weapons sales to Iran in 1985. Some of the proceeds were used to finance Contra rebels fighting the Marxist government of Nicaragua.

Tass, in a separate dispatch, said a U.S. contention that it is neutral in the Iran-Iraq war and leading a United Nations effort to bring it to a peaceful end is "a sheer lie."

NATO defense threatened by financial woes

By ROBERT BURNS

An Analysis

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Even as NATO was polishing up a public pledge this week to spend more on conventional defenses, one alliance member was privately saying it no longer could afford one of its military tasks.

The Belgian government told its NATO partners that it would not, as previously planned, replace its nuclear-tipped Nike air-defense missiles with the more effective but costlier Patriot system. The Nike rockets will be dismantled and not replaced, it said.

Although Belgium plays a relatively small role in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, its financial pinch points up a dilemma facing the alliance as it moves toward less reliance on nuclear weapons.

The governments of the alliance say they worry that nuclear disarmament will expose Western deficiencies in conventional defense. Yet most of them are reluctant to spend more money to fill the gaps.

In what has become a ritual at meetings of NATO defense ministers, the alliance declared Wednesday that the members were determined to increase national defense spending by at least 3 percent a year. Officials say privately there is little chance they will do it.

The ministers said the West's conventional defenses must be beefed up to meet the challenge of numerically stronger and rapidly expanding Warsaw Pact armies capable of overrunning NATO forces in days.

The issue has become even more pressing in light of improved prospects for a U.S.-Soviet deal to reduce nuclear arms in Europe.

If — as envisioned by the superpowers — the 316 U.S. medium-range nuclear missiles in Western Europe are withdrawn in exchange for removal of more than 1,300 nuclear warheads atop Soviet SS-20 rockets, NATO will have lost a key part of its nuclear defenses.

Reliance on non-nuclear defense would become even more pronounced if, as proposed by the Kremlin and under study by NATO, the two sides also eliminate shorter-range nuclear arms.

U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said he told his NATO counterparts that progress in nuclear arms control talks "underlined and emphasized" the importance of improving conventional forces.

Yet there are few signs that NATO members are ready to take up the challenge.

Belgium is not the only alliance member to scale back its defense spending. Britain, one of the key powers in NATO, has said it plans to cut expenditures by about 5 percent over the next three years.

Only four NATO members besides the United States — Italy, Luxembourg, Norway and Portugal — are expected to actually increase defense spending by 3 percent this year. That means 11 members will fall short of the alliance goal, and a similar result is expected for 1988.

The U.S. buildup in defense spending under President Reagan also appears to be nearing an end. The House last week approved a freeze in defense spending at this year's level. Reagan has requested the equivalent of a 3 percent increase, but even the more generous Senate version of the bill would fall short of that.

"We all need to do more, but, unfortunately, defense ministers don't write checks," Weinberger said. "One of the problems is, of course, that conventional forces cost more than nuclear forces. Cost seems to be a primary factor in the minds of a lot of people."

Island aborigines vow to reject nuclear dump

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — The Yami aborigines say they were duped once into accepting a nuclear waste dump on their remote island. They vow they won't be taken in again, even if a second dump is camouflaged by a park and exhibit on nuclear energy.

Leaders of the 2,700 Yami on Orchid Island, an 18-square-mile island about 240 miles southeast of Taipei, say they didn't oppose construction of a nuclear dump in 1980 because they were ignorant of nuclear radiation.

Now they worry about contamination of their traditional fishing grounds.

The Chinese Nationalist government in Taipei, which governs the island, says the Yami need not worry about the low-level waste. The new subterranean dump, like the one built earlier, will face the ocean, and hills on three sides will insulate it from the nearest residential area three miles away, officials say.

"As done now, the dump will be used to store low-radiation waste like clothes, gloves and sludge used or produced during a plant's operation," Tsai Chao-ming, director of the Radiation Waste Administration of the government's Atomic Energy Council, said in a recent interview.

"The little radiation leaks, if any, would be blocked by the hills and residential exposure should be minimal," he said.

Officials said the government chose Orchid Island for the dump site because the main island of Taiwan is too densely populated. Besides the Yami, about 100 non-aborigines — mostly government officials and tourist businessmen — live on Orchid Island, which is known for its white beaches, coral reefs and orchids.

But Liao Pan-chia, a Yami member of the Taitung County Assembly that governs Orchid Island, says it is the least appropriate dump site.

"Orchid Island is a tiny place and Taiwan has plenty of mountains which can serve as nuclear waste dumps," Liao said in an interview. "If they dump all the nuclear waste here our future generations will find no place to live."

Work on the $9 million, 8-year project is scheduled to begin in 1989. The first-phase is to be completed in 1991, a year before existing storage facilities for nuclear waste from Taiwan's three nuclear plants are expected to be full.

The nuclear plants, which help generate electricity for Taiwan island, produce about 12,000 barrels of nuclear waste annually. The expanded dump complex will be able to store the waste through this century, officials said.

To make the project more appealing, the government wants to convert 247 acres over the two nuclear dumps into a park that will include a lake and an exhibition hall to publicize the safety of nuclear energy.

Last year, about 100,000 foreign and Taiwan tourists visited Orchid Island. Six thousand toured the existing nuclear dump site and this, the government says, underscores the safety of the nuclear facility.

Shih Nu-lai, a Yami writer who lives in Taipei, disagrees.

Report finds JAL crash caused by faulty repairs

TOKYO (AP) — A government report has concluded that a 1985 Japan Air Lines crash that killed 520 people was caused by faulty repairs made to the 747-SR jet by the Boeing Co. seven years earlier, a newspaper reported today.

The nationwide daily Asahi Shimbun said the conclusion was detailed in a 600-page report prepared by the Transport Ministry's Aircraft Accident Investigation Commission.

Asahi quoted the report as saying that when Boeing repaired the aft pressure bulkhead in 1978, there was "lack of appropriateness in the work supervision method, including inspection."

The strength of the repaired part decreased to about 70 percent of what it should have been, according to Asahi, which obtained a copy of the report.

Boeing Co., the Seattle, Wash.-based maker of the plane, has acknowledged its repairs were a factor in the disaster.

The plane crashed on a central Japan mountain ridge on Aug. 12, 1985, killing all but four of the 524 people aboard in the worst single-plane accident in history.

A member of the investigation commission, asked about the story, said only, "We are surprised to see the newspaper article."

Nicaraguan media control hinges on U.S. Contra aid

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — The Nicaraguan government will maintain control of its mass media as long as the United States continues to support the anti-Sandinista rebels, Nicaragua's culture minister said Wednesday.

Freedom of the press will be restored "when the United States...ends its undeclared war against my country," said Culture Minister Ernesto Cardenal.

"A country in a state of war also has to have control of its mass media," said Cardenal, 62, a former Catholic priest.

Cardenal is attending a five-day conference planning the celebration of the 500th anniversary in 1992 of Christopher Columbus' historic voyage to America.

He said La Prensa, an opposition newspaper closed by the Sandinista regime more than a year ago, "was a mouthpiece for the enemy and for Reagan."

"As long as we are in a state of war and La Prensa is in favor of the enemy and Reagan, it will not reopen...." he said.

The Reagan administration opposes the Sandinista regime, which ousted dictator Anastasio Somoza in 1979, and is backing Nicaraguan rebels known as Contras.

American's sentence cut

MILAN, Italy (AP) — An appeals court, ruling that cocaine had caused temporary insanity, reduced the prison sentence of a South Carolina woman convicted of murdering an Italian playboy.

A lower court last June convicted 29-year-old Terry Broome of Elgin S.C. of second-degree murder in the shooting death of Francesco D'Alessio, a Roman racehorse owner and playboy. It sentenced her to 14 years in prison.

The appeals court upheld the conviction but reduced the sentence to 11½ years. It ruled that when Ms. Broome shot D'Alessio in his luxury Milan apartment on June 26, 1984, she was suffering from temporary, partial insanity due to the effects of cocaine.

Ms. Broome has spent nearly three years in jail since her arrest in Switzerland a few days after the slaying. The time served counts toward her sentence and she could be released on parole in three years.

Ms. Broome had come to Milan, Italy's fashion capital, as an aspiring model.

Prosecutor Alberto Liguoro conceded that Ms. Broome did not plot the murder and had acted under the influence of drugs and alcohol.

U.S. asks for recognition

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — The United States has asked to be made a permanent member of a predominantly Latin American committee planning celebrations for the 500th anniversary of Columbus' landing in the New World.

U.S. delegate John Goudie, a Cuban-American businessman from Miami, Fla., on Wednesday asked the panel's 31 permanent members to make the United States an equal partner.

The U.S. delegation has been taking part as one of nine observers since the meeting began in San Juan on Tuesday. An organizer said the petition likely would be voted on Saturday.

Colombian delegate German Arciniegas said all Western Hemisphere countries should be made permanent members if they wish. He noted that the Bahamas, where Columbus first touched ground in the New World in 1492, is not a permanent member.

Fighting budget fire Bill Clements-style

Gov. Bill Clements seems destined to go down in Texas history as the guy least likely to be voted "most congenial" by Democratic legislators. The reason is simple: His attention to budgetary concerns is keeping legislators burning the midnight oil as this session nears its conclusion. And he's only given hints of budging from his position.

Problem is there's still no clear-cut solution to the state's budgeting "crisis" and legislators could wind up back in Austin for a special summer session.

That's a likelihood because of the Legislature's professed inability to reduce state spending to a limit the governor will accept, and Clements' resolve to reject any figure that exceeds his. He says he'll do it and we believe he will.

Now, all of the teeth-gnashing in Austin, while transforming the legislative process into a Hollywood version of Judgement Day, really is only a result of the good governor's recognition of an unseemly development: the reality of a state suffering under the economic consequences of the worst financial downturn since the Great Depression while trying to live within the scope of spending increases authorized under a prior administration. Even before the current session began, Clements had looked at the state's financial picture, no doubt, and was well aware of the fact that meeting the financial obligations already enacted would require a good amount of legislative pride-swallowing and tight-fisted executive management if Texas is to weather this "storm".

To make matters more difficult, he also obviously recognized the human frailty of those in political positions to go for the status quo rather than step back, regardless of the severity of the dilemma. Fortunately, from Clements' vantage point the interest of the state's taxpayers has to take priority status. That meant holding to a course that would result in a budget bearing the least amount of fat. He has done that and the budget figure has dropped over the weeks.

In the end, of course, compromise will come — even if only after a bill is enacted that exceeds Clements' limit (which is likely) and the governor vetoes it (which is even more likely). From the taxpayers' viewpoint, though, Clements has done what he should. He has held the legislators' feet to the proverbial fire in the interest of keeping state spending in line. In doing that he probably will not get the budget he sought, but neither will the legislators.

But the final version of the budget should look more like what the taxpayers truly can afford.

Another View:

Chaos in Cap's store

Caspar Weinberger displays an unusual management style for a secretary of defense. Instead of pushing the Army, Navy, and Air Force toward a unified strategy under strong central management, he has mostly raised money and let them spend as they please. Now, as famine years follow the feast, the absence of a strategy by which to allocate the cuts is proving all the more harmful.

The current defense budget debate shows how hard it is for Congress to provide the coherence that should come from Weinberger. Yet Congress remains determined to cut. The House reduced the administration's request of $312 billion to $289 billion. The Senate Armed Services Committee approved $303 billion.

Apart from the Strategic Defense Initiative, SDI, few major weapons systems are being touched, leaving military readiness all the more vulnerable. Weinberger can stand by, complaining, as the cuts affect military muscle. Or, he can develop a strategy to guide those cuts sensibly.

When the services are left to themselves, they strive for independence. The Navy builds carriers to wage its own air war while the Air Force invests in long-range bombers. Interservice missions, like airlift and sealift, get short shrift because neither the Navy nor Air Force takes pride in being a transport service for the Army.

During defense budget booms, each service always tries to order as many new weapons as possible, knowing production lines mean jobs and a political constituency. With no one to check the services' appetite for complex, gold-plated weapons, each generation of tank or plane becomes far more expensive than the last. Congress has lately refused extravagant defense spending, because Reagan refused to raise taxes to pay for it.

That led to stretching out weapons purchases and cutting military readiness. Though these are the worst ways to cut defense, Congress can seldom resist them. Buying fewer planes than planned saves money in the short term, but each plane will eventually cost more. To save more, Congress reduces money for ammunition, maintenance, and training, gaining immediate budgetary relief — and crippling military preparedness. Last year, Congress found 33 percent of its cuts in stretchouts and 22 percent in readiness.

This year, Les Aspin, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, has tried to save readiness accounts and begin eliminating some redundant weapons. But he faces an uphill fight, without much support from the administration. The administration and Congress need to match weapons to strategy. That means cancelling wasteful programs in their entirety, leaving room for other weapons to be bought in economic quantities.

Why, for instance, does the Navy need 15 carriers, too few to fight the Soviet Union and too many for gunboat duty? The Navy has failed to make the case for the two new carriers it requests.

Helicopters are sitting ducks on a battlefield, yet a bizarre pact with the Air Force bars the Army from building planes. That agreement ought to be cancelled instantly, and with it the monstrous helicopter armada the Army has had to build.

The Air Force needs to be saved once more from spending itself out of the sky with planes too expensive to be bought in sufficient numbers. Congress might cancel the Advanced Tactical Fighter and clamp controls on the Stealth bomber.

Congress likes to tinker with a thousand line items in the defense budget and, in any event, is in no position to frame basic missions and strategies. That task can only be performed in the Pentagon by Weinberger.

Some selling tactics don't say enough!

WASHINGTON — Despite the best efforts of federal and state enforcement agencies, American consumers are fleeced of an estimated $1 billion a year by mail and telephone hucksters who stay either an inch or two within the law or a jump ahead of it.

Jack Anderson

The gall of these glib merchandisers is often nothing short of amazing. One questionable offer for a "power motorboat with outboard motor" was recently addressed to Jack Anderson at our Washington Merry-Go-Round office. It was supposedly part of a product test survey "amongst a very select few individuals." There was a finer-print notation that the vessel was of "polyvinylchloride" construction.

Our reporter Karen Talley called the phone number on the mailed offer from an organization called Warner Marketing Research of Culver City, Calif., and learned what less suspicious individuals discover only when they take delivery: The boat is a small, inflatable rubber raft with a tiny battery-operated trolling motor somewhat more powerful than an eggbeater. The $197 pricetag is for "shipping, handling, ownership transfer" and distribution fees, according to the operator who answered the phone.

When told that the reporter was calling for Jack Anderson, the operator gave no sign of recognizing the name, or what Anderson does for a living. Instead, the operator suggested that in addition to the demographic area the notice was mailed to, he might have been chosen "because he's a sportsman." (Word of Anderson's prowess as a softball spectator is obviously getting around.)

The operator described the 5-foot-by-10-foot inflatable raft in glowing terms, saying it can be used for "fishing, scuba diving, duck hunting and rugged white-water rafting." It will retail for "at least $700," he said.

A company executive later cautioned that the boat should not be used in rough water, and a Federal Trade Commission official said $75 is a more likely price for the product.

The operator claimed that the boat is a test product "for one of the biggest manufacturers in America," but declined to identify the manufacturer by name. He also said the firm making the offer is registered with the Better Business Bureau.

In a later interview, a company official refuted this claim. Indeed, a BBB supervisor in Southern California said the company had ignored the bureau's request last year for information about its merchandising practices.

In a consumer advisory, the Better Business Bureau warns that, "based on the tremendous volume of consumer feedback received by the bureau, we can report that offers of this type frequently contain serious misrepresentations regarding the true value of the gifts, and often underestimate the amount of money you will have to spend."

The advisory points out that consumers may want to contact the U.S. Postal Service, the FTC or their state's attorney general, but warns: "Keep in mind that law enforcement action against these firms is very difficult."

Difficult, but not impossible. The attorney general of Arkansas took Warner Marketing Research to court last year after a number of consumers were left up the creek without a tire pump. Assistant Attorney General Rhonda Hill said the company signed a consent decree agreeing to repay several hundred dollars to disgruntled customers and promising that any future mailings in the state would "show a picture of the product or disclose that its chambers are inflatable."

The company's marketing tactic "is a sin of omission, rather than commission," Hill explained. The mailed offer "didn't say folks would get the Queen Mary," she explained, "but it also didn't say the product was a rubber raft." Since signing the consent decree, the company hasn't been heard from in Arkansas, she added.

TIMING IS EVERYTHING: Anyone who is in awe of the supposedly all-powerful, super-shrewd Washington lobbyist should consider this gem: While the joint Senate-House committee is busy exposing the skulduggery that surrounded diversion of Iran arms sales profits to the Nicaraguan contras, a New Jersey weapons manufacturer, Jersey Arms Works Inc. of Cherry Hill, is earnestly lobbying Congress for legislation that would eliminate entirely federal export controls on arms to the contras and other "freedom fighters." You've got to admire the lobbyist's nerve, but his timing seems to be a little off.

GEORGE F. WILL

Demos should grab Henry Jackson's banner

WASHINGTON — This weekend, on the other edge of the continent, in Seattle, a gathering will commemorate the 75th anniversary of the birth of Henry Jackson, the greatest President the United States never had. As the Democratic Party prepares for the problematic presentation of itself in 1988 as suitable custodian of the nation's security, it should consider Sen. Jackson's career as it is recalled in a new collection of essays, "Staying the Course: Henry M. Jackson and National Security," edited by Dorothy Fosdick.

George F. Will

The great period of foreign-policy creativity after the war was primarily the product of liberal Democratic internationalists, whose tradition Jackson continued. But in the 1960s and 1970s, as the Democratic Party lurched leftward, Jackson came to be called a "conservative," a strange fate for a progressive elected from a state so liberal that James Farley once said there were 47 states and "the Soviet of Washington."

In April, 1945, days after American soldiers liberated Buchenwald, Congressman Jackson walked into the concentration camp. He walked out a changed man, stunned by the sight of the stakes of politics in the age of totalitarians. Twenty-three years later, he read Robert Conquest's "The Great Terror: Stalin's Purge of the Thirties." He concluded that the Soviet regime's assault on human rights expresses an internal dynamism inseparable from external adventurism. Therefore human rights must be a focus of U.S. attempts to tame the Soviet Union.

In 1972, the Kremlin imposed its "education tax," ostensibly to require emigrants to compensate the state for blessings received from it. Actually, the tax was designed to deter emigration. The Nixon administration, drunk on detente, was pushing legislation to extend credits and "most-favored-nation" tariff treatment to the Soviet Union.

Jackson drafted legislation that said MFN status could be granted to "nonmarket" countries only if they respect the right to emigrate. This enraged the Soviet Union and American business interests. In a two-year fight, Jackson prevailed. Today, Presidents still can not give communists all the favors that many capitalists advocate, and the same unholy alliance still hopes to unravel Jackson's handiwork in the name of detente.

In August, 1972, while the Senate was debating ratification of the ABM Treaty and approval of the SALT I Interim Agreement, Jackson proposed approval language that said, in effect: The Interim Agreement is unsatisfactory and the ABM Treaty is tolerable only if SALT II is much better. Jackson's language said that a subsequent agreement must correct the inequalities of SALT I by providing for equality in the carrying capacity of missile forces — warheads and throwweights. (The Soviets were allowed advantages in every category of weapons SALT I covered.)

Jackson's language said that if such an agreement protecting the survivability of U.S. land-based missiles were not achieved by the end of 1977, when the Interim Agreement expired, that failure could jeopardize our supreme national interests and be grounds for withdrawal from the ABM Treaty.

Jackson started with few supporters and was fiercely opposed by many, including many Republicans, who sought to prolong the election-year euphoria produced by the Moscow summit. But Jackson prevailed and seven years later the Senate stipulation that Jackson had engineered was one reason why SALT II was not ratified. In 1986 at Reykjavik, Paul Nitze cited Jackson's language to Marshal Akhromeyev, chief of the Soviet armed forces, as a reason the United States could not accept, as it did in SALT I and SALT II, unequal ceilings on strategic forces.

Today Jackson's party is making a fetish of the ABM treaty, although compensating strategic-arms limitations are a decade overdue. And Jackson's party is making a mockery of the Constitution's treaty-ratification procedures by trying to ratify SALT II with an appropriation bill. (It would forbid the expenditure of any funds for strategic systems that would exceed the limits of SALT II — an agreement that the Soviet Union is violating in various ways.)

The bipartisian commission on Central America, appointed by President Reagan, was Jackson's last important initiative. It recommended some military aid and much more economic aid, and was instantly denounced by the Democratic Party's chosen spokesman as "a war report." Jackson is not to blame for the fact that the commission's report failed to achieve the result he had hoped for. It did not raise the debate above the puerility of the categories largely set by liberal Democrats who say there is a choice between "political" and "military" solutions.

Still, Jackson's record is a banner to which Democrats could repair. He served 42 years under nine Presidents, not one of whom was a better President than he would have been.

Washington, D.C. starting to get 'testy'!

Washington has gone absolutely daft by insisting that everybody take tests to find out if we are fit to serve the country.

Art Buchwald

I was walking down Pennsylvania Avenue when a man with a clipboard stopped me and said, "Have you ever committed adultery?"

"Of course not. That would make a mockery of my marriage vows."

"Don't be a wise guy," he said. "This is a test to see if you are worthy of running for President of the United States."

"Are you saying if I haven't committed adultery I can be a candidate?"

"No, but if you have been unfaithful the public has a right to know the names of those involved. How do you feel about wife-swapping?"

"You mean wives swapping recipes and needlework designs? I have no objection as long as my meal is on the table when I get home at night." I started to walk away.

"Not so fast," a second man said as he got out of a van. "I have to give you a lie detector test to find out if what you told this gentleman is true."

"I don't want to take a lie detector test."

"If you refuse you'll never work for the Department of Agriculture as long as you live."

"I don't want to work for Agriculture. I'm happy doing what I'm doing."

"Then you have to be tested for AIDS."

"What the hell for?"

"You could have gotten infected being happy doing what you're doing."

"Beat it or I'm calling that cop over there who is having his eyes examined."

The policeman came over. "Officer," I said, "these guys are bothering me. Tell them to bug off."

The cop said, "OK, but first I have to give you a literacy test to make sure you're not one of them aliens that should be kicked out of the country."

"I am not an alien."

The lie detector man said to the cop, "Don't let him go. My machine shows he could be a heterosexual."

"So what does that mean?" I asked.

"You have to be tested for heterosexuality," the man answered. "And if the results are affirmative your file will go to the Miami Herald."

The cop objected, "He can't be tested for that until I test him for dope."

"I don't know anything about cocaine," I protested. "All I'm trying to do is go to lunch."

The man who was doing the survey on adultery said, "You can't eat unless you've been tested for cholesterol."

He started taking blood out of my arm.

"I resent this," I yelled.

"You have to have a high cholesterol count before Congress will grant you immunity."

"I don't want immunity."

"Is that because you are afraid they're going to find out about the adultery?"

"Can they do that by testing my cholesterol?"

"This government can do anything by testing. That's why they are so morally fit."

"Testing is wrong," I said.

Another man stepped up and started wrapping wires around my arms.

"Who are you?" I demanded.

"I'm the psychological tester for this block. Whenever someone refuses to tell if he has been an adulterer I find out what else he's trying to hide."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Twisters spotted across state

Associated Press

Intense thunderstorms were reported across portions of Northwest Texas and West Central Texas early today after a night of severe weather, including several tornado sightings.

A flash flood watch covered a vast area of North Texas through tonight as forecasters predicted as much as three to six inches of rain was possible across the area generally west of a line from Lampasas to Paris.

Heavy thunderstorms dumped nearly three inches of rain at Wichita Falls, where some minor street flooding was reported, and about four inches of rain at Electra, where some roads were closed.

Intense thunderstorms were developing across a vast area of the state at dawn, prompting forecasters to warn of the possibility of dangerous lightning, high winds, hail and flash flood producing rainfall.

Tornadoes were sighted at several locations around the state Wedesday night.

The National Weather Service posted tornado warnings in several West Texas counties Wednesday because of twister sightings, and much of that area and north Central Texas were under a tornado watch.

Tornadoes were spotted near such diverse towns as Fort Stockton, Hamilton and Aspermont, but no injuries or serious damage was reported. A funnel cloud menaced Midland and a storm pelted the city with baseball-sized hail at about 9 p.m.

A Pecos County deputy sheriff reported a funnel cloud three miles south of Fort Stockton, which is about 45 miles east of Saragosa, the town virtually destroyed by a tornado Friday that killed 29 people and injured 162.

About 300 miles to the east, a tornado was reported 10 miles east of Hamilton, and another one 5 miles north of Hamilton.

About an hour later, a tornado warning was issued for northwestern Bosque County after a tornado was indicated by radar 10 miles east of Hico, a town 20 miles north of Hamilton.

Flooding was reported in the town of Evant, 15 miles south of Hamilton. Authorities said the storm dumped almost 4 inches of rain as it passed through.

Another possible tornado was sighted on radar six miles southwest of Aspermont, 60 miles northwest of Abilene

Showers and thunderstorms were reported earl today over the Concho Valley, Permian Basin, the South Plains and the Trans Pecos.

Other showers and thunderstorms were located over the Red River Valley between Sherman and Wichita Falls at dawn.

Forecasts called for partly to mostly cloudy skies statewide through tonight with a good chance of showers and thunderstorms over the state.

Officials dispute traffic deaths study

From Staff and Wire Reports

Authorities in Midland and Austin said Wednesday they question a just-released study of traffic deaths that shows country roads are far more dangerous than city streets.

The study, released by the New England Journal of Medicine, found that the teeming streets of Manhattan are the safest in the nation, while the country's highest death rate is found in Loving County, west of Midland.

The study calculated the number of traffic deaths per 100,000 population in each county, a standard of measurement that state authorities found suspect.

From 1979 to 1981, four people died on Loving County roads, the study said. Since the county had just 91 residents, that's an annual highway death rate of 1,465 per 100,000 people, it caluclated.

The national average is 18.7 deaths per 100,000. Manhattan's rate is 2.5.

"I think the use of population (for the study) is very unfair to the rural communities," said Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter Wednesday. "Not every one killed in a particular county lives there.

"It could be someone from Massachusetts just trying to drive fast."

Lt. Jimmie Rhoads of the DPS in Midland said he had never heard of a death rate calculated strictly by population figures.

"Population is really not what is important," he said. "That doesn't indicate what your exposure is. The exposure can be figured by how many miles you travel."

However, Susan P. Baker, who directed the study, stood by her figures.

"People are going to be surprised that the death rates are highest not where there's the most traffic but basically where there's the least traffic," said Ms. Baker, head of the Injury Prevention Center at the Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene and Public Health.

"It's no coincidence that the county that has the fewest people per square mile has the highest death rate per 100,000 people," she said.

But Painter, a former Department of Public Safety trooper, said "it's evident to me that whoever conducted the study had never been to West Texas."

The condition of rural roads have little to do with traffic deaths, the sheriff said.

"People that live in rural areas adapt to the areas; they have enough intelligence to watch for bad road conditions," he said.

Mike Cox, DPS spokesman, said the study was "certainly interesting." However, Cox said the DPS computes traffic death rates by the number of deaths per 100 million vehicle miles traveled.

In 1986, Texas had 3,568 traffic deaths, and of those, 1,940 occurred in towns with a population of less than 5,000, Cox said.

Of the 234,120 injuries in traffic accidents, just over 58,000 were in rural areas, Cox said.

Some DPS figures tend to agree with the conclusion of the study. Cox said the latest overall traffic death rate statewide is 2.4 traffic deaths per 100 million vehicle miles traveled. That same figure for rural Texas is 2.9, he said.

"So though there is a slightly higher death rate (in rural areas), in real numbers, the deaths occur more frequently in urban areas," he said.

However, "I personally would feel much safer driving through Loving County than I would driving through Manhattan, and I've done both," Cox said.

According to the study, the highest death rates were seen in counties with fewer than five people per square mile. And most of these counties with high death rates are in the western half of the nation, especially the Rockies.

Esmeralda County, Nev., for instance, has 777 residents spread over 3,587 square miles, or 0.2 people per square mile. Its death rate was 558 per 100,000.

Manhattan has 64,000 residents per square mile. Philadelphia, which has 12,000 residents per square mile, had 4.1 deaths per 100,000.

Ms. Baker said other studies have shown that the death rates per million miles traveled are highest in rural western states and lowest in the Northeast.

According to the study, speeding is an important ingredient in the difference in the death rate, as are bad country roads, less seat-belt use, poor access to emergency care and more use of pickup trucks and jeep-like utility vehicles. Ms. Baker noted that these vehicles overturn easily, and that people are also exposed to fatal injuries when they ride in the back of pickups.

"The implications are that rural counties need to give greater attention to such things as enforcing the speed limit, improving the roads and enforcing seat belt use," she said.

Richard Crow, Loving County's deputy sheriff, said most of the victims recorded in that county are people passing through on Texas Highway 302, a two-lane road out of El Paso.

"It's a long, lonesome highway, and people tend to drive a little bit faster on it," he said.

In an accompanying editorial in the journal, Dr. William H. Foege of Emory University called the recent congressional vote allowing rural speed limits to rise to 65 mph "an impressive display of overriding the scientific evidence."

Encyclopedic learning

Breanna Dorner, left, read 500 books and Jeremy Randall read 295 books to help raise money for the purchase of encyclopedias for Greenwood Elementary School. Students in grades two through six who took part in the program agreed to read a minimum of seven books in a seven-week period. Pledges for each book read were collected from family and friends and used toward the purchase of The World Book Encyclopedia. World Book Inc. matched the money raised by the students with a contribution to help purchase 18 sets of encyclopedias to be kept in the classrooms.

Mysterious odor tests patience of doctor, nurses

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

To registered nurse Norma Eckelkamp, the smell in the Garfield Street doctor's office where she works is like something "you can't print," she said Wednesday.

To Dr. J. Oliver Gooch, 73, an eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, the smell — believed to be sewer gas — is a bother to his allergy-prone patients and a potential danger he'd like removed.

The odor — which includes a component of dangerous hydrogen sulfide gas — is particularly bothersome because it seems to congregate in the office's testing area, he said.

Gooch's wife, Lois, 56, a Mayo-clinic-trained registered nurse who conducts office testing, said patients often must spend three hours at a time in the testing rooms.

Some patients are unable to complete testing because the odor stimulates their allergies, she said.

Workers in the office began smelling the odor — which comes and goes at different times of the day — "quite some time ago," Gooch said. Over the past six weeks, it has gotten progressively worse, he said.

The hydrogen sulfide nature of the gas is of even greater concern because "it can blow up if you get enough concentration of it," Gooch said.

The doctor, whose office is located at 401 N. Garfield, already has spent more than $1,000 to combat the smell, which he believes emanates from a city sewer line running just north of his office.

Higher education bill to raise graduate tuition

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — House-Senate negotiators today approved a higher education reform bill that allows Texas public universities to double tuition at the graduate and professional-school level.

The compromise adopted the Senate version of the tuition plan. Senators last week rejected a House proposal that would have permitted boards of regents to set tuition for all students — including undergraduates — at a level up to twice the minimum proscribed by the Legislature.

Resident undergraduate and most graduate students now pay $16 in tuition per semester credit hour. That figure, which becomes the minimum for grad students, gradually increases up to $22 per hour in the 1993-1994 school year.

Prospective doctors, lawyers, dentists and veterinarians — all of whom could be affected by the doubling provision — pay higher tuition. This fall, law school students will pay a minimum of $48 per semester credit hour, medical students will pay $3,600 for the year, dental students will pay $2,500 per year and veterinary students will pay $2,400.

Claiming that the graduate and professional courses are more expensive to teach or might need extra money to hire or retain top-rank professors, Senate Education Committee Chairman Carl Parker said regents should have the flexibility to charge higher tuition for them.

Another provision in the bill — and the only one changed by the negotiators — would allow financially needy Mexican nationals to pay in-state tuition at four border universities: the University of Texas at El Paso, Sul Ross University, Laredo State University and Pan American University. The conference committee added a provision limiting that tuition break to 8 percent of the students enrolled at each institution.

Dram shop law passes Senate unanimously

Bar owners could be liable for drunken patrons' actions

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Bar owners and party givers could be partially liable for the damages their drunken patrons and friends cause under a bill that unanimously passed the Texas Senate Wednesday.

Sen. Bob Glasgow, the bill's sponsor, said bars support the so-called dram shop law because they fear perhaps heavier liability from a Houston case now pending before the state Supreme Court. "If we're going to have a dram shop law, they want to know what their burdens of proof are and what their elements of proof are going to be," Glasgow, D-Stephenville, said.

The bill establishes a three-part burden of proof:

— It must be "clearly apparent" to the person selling or serving the alcoholic beverage that the patron is "obviously intoxicated to the extent that he poses a clear danger to the public and himself."

— Only the last person to serve the alcohol would be liable.

— Plaintiffs must prove a "proximate cause" between the intoxication and the damage done.

"There obviously probably would not be 100 percent of the liability because the driver has got to do something negligent to cause an accident: speed, failure to yield a right of way or something," Glasgow added.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, pointed out that most bars' liability insurance policies would not cover such incidents. "If you meet the provisions to be liable under this act, the provisions of those policies wouldn't apply and you wouldn't be covered," he said, adding that he expects some insurers would come up with plans that would cover the liability.

The Senate attached the dram shop law to a House-passed bill that otherwise made minor changes in liquor regulations. Rep. Mike Millsap, D-Fort Worth, and the House sponsor of the measure, said he did not know whether he would accept the changes or request a House-Senate conference committee to negotiate a compromise.

In other action Wednesday, the Senate passed and sent to the governor a tough anti-hazing bill that places fines of up to $10,000 on individuals and organizations involved in collegiate hazing incidents that lead to death. Less-serious hazing or failure to report hazing would bring a maximum penalty of $1,000 and up to 180 days in jail.

"In the last nine years, 40 young people have died (from hazing) in this country, two in the last two years in Texas," said Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, and the bill's sponsor. The bill "is serious, but it will not stop their fun and I hope it will save some lives in the future," he added.

The action came on adoption of a conference committee report that reinstated the serious penalties the Senate proposed but the House deleted. Both chambers have agreed on the final version.

Forces of life, death are truly 'awesome'

Todd

It is disconcerting what the press and sporting types who sometimes cast around words like nondescript confetti have done to the word "awesome."

Such-and-such team is "awesome" because it has players who charge in unison like a raging bull. There's nothing awesome about a charging bull. The situation could be precarious and ominous but hardly awe inspiring.

The wonders of the universe, the unlimited power of The Almighty, and the monumental powers within nature are awesome. But should something bullish be termed awesome?

Daily, words are tossed around like chalk cast on granite. Their meanings are abused and shattered.

How about awful and terrible? Awful suggests awe inspiring. Terrible denotes extreme alarm or fear.

Indeed, what is alarming? What is overwhelming and overpowering? What is dreadful? What is fearsome? What is heart-rending? What is sorrowful? What is awesome?

Powerful forces of nature can be both awesome and dreadful. The tornado which struck the West Texas community of Saragosa last week was both. Its unfortunate effects were heart-rending. The death and destruction which the tornado left in its wake were grievous and dreadful. A tornado, a phenomenon of nature, is neither good nor evil. It is a force which follows nature's laws.

"Untimely" death, if that can be, always is sad. It is sad but good and healing to feel grief and to sense grief. And it is kind and wholesome to empathize — to share in the grief of others. The grieving and crying experience says there is hope for the human heart. It is not without love.

Death comes to all mortals. Survivors, who are awaiting their turn to the grave, rarely are prepared for accepting death. Nevertheless, it comes.

And there are those who celebrate the hope of inevitable death. They are inspired by a new adventure — perhaps eternal life. The pathway to life is death. Often, that path harbors suffering and anguish. Eventually, consolation comes to survivors — those who grieve and those who rejoice.

Afterward, life is refreshed and begins anew.

Is that not awesome and wonderful?

Ed Todd is a staff writer for The Midland Reporter-Telegram.

FOCUS sponsors meeting with MISD officials

From Staff Reports

A community-wide meeting of Midlanders who are "very concerned about the quality of education" of youth will be held at 7:30 p.m. next Tuesday under the sponsorship of the education committee of Federated Organizations of Concerned Citizens United to Service.

Midland Independent School District board members and MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi are to participate in the meeting in the Midland Federation of Black Women's Club Building at 1700 E. Wall Ave., according to James Fuller, president of the Midland Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and FOCUS board member.

"The primary objective of FOCUS is to address issues that impact east Midland," said Fuller.

Midland's east side is predominantly minority — black and Mexican-American.

"The citizens of east Midland, to put it candidly, are very concerned about the quality of education of their young people now as well as in the future," said Fuller, who is a Midland College instructor. "And their concern is shared with the remainder of Midland."

In part, the meeting is to explore the controversial court-ordered single-member-district method of electing board members, Fuller said. In addition, the meeting is to seek out and explore "explanations of long-range goals" of the school system and how the MISD board is confronting problems in education.

In a letter to the MISD board, FOCUS Interim Chairman Rev. J.L. Williams said that FOCUS is "looking forward to sitting down with you to explore common interests and concerns about education and educating the young."

Williams is pastor of the Greater New Hope Baptist Church in Midland.

FOCUS membership includes The Midland Federation of Black Women's Clubs, which is made up of more than 15 organizations; the NAACP; fraternities and sororities; the Black Advisory Council, the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, the Black Coalition of Texas Democrats and the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs Inc.

God will destroy courthouse in revenge, jailed man says

GILMER (AP) — In an unusual news conference in the Upshur County Jail lobby, a man imprisoned with his wife for keeping their children out of school declared that God would destroy the courthouse in a show of vengeance.

Jack Howell, who began a 265-day sentence May 5, said he and his wife, Diana, would remain behind bars until "God tells us to leave."

Howell, 46, made his statement Wednesday in what Sheriff Dale Jewkes said was the first news conference ever called by a prisoner here.

"I want to give this man every opportunity to have his say," Jewkes said.

The Howells were found guilty of violating the state's compulsory school attendance law and not paying an $8,000 fine. The original fine was only $5, set by a justice of the peace.

The fine escalated after the case was appealed to county court, where a jury assessed a $100 fine for each day the Howell's two children were out of public school.

Howell said he and his common-law wife are being jailed illegally and he plans to seek legal action against the Gilmer Independent School District, Upshur County and the state of Texas.

Last week, Longview accountant Joe Baker tried to intervene for the Howells, hiring a lawyer for the couple and setting up a court hearing to review the case.

Gooch has had all office plumbing lines cleaned out with a Roto-Rooter machine, he said, and added new venting to the roof of the about 3,500-square-foot office.

Now, "you just can't find any more ways to spend it," he said, adding that fighting the obnoxious smell is like fighting "a horrible ghost."

City Fire Marshal Jerry Petree confirmed Wednesday that Fire Department instruments detected the gas in an area around the office. "But we couldn't determine where it came from," he said.

Gooch is trying to work with city staff to remove the smell, but he's dissatisfied with the response he's gotten so far, he said.

Public Works Director Fred Baker said today that a plumbing inspector would visit the site "in the next day or two" to determine whether the office complied with city statutes for the venting of sewer gas.

The city already has flushed out the main sewer line that runs just north of the office, Baker said. The line is buried about 10 feet deep and "serves about almost three-quarters of a section," he said.

"From out point of view, if there's any gas in his building, it's coming from his own plumbing system," said the public works director.

A theory that the smell comes at different times of day because near by Midland Memorial Hospital is depositing large amounts of waste at those times "is just unlikely," he added.

He pointed out that if sewer vents on the building were below the level specified by city statutes, the gas — which is heavier than air — may be congregating on the building's roof and flowing in when doors are opened.

Police seek hijacker of city bus

FORT WORTH (AP) — Police today were looking for a man who hijacked a city bus, stabbed a woman passenger to death and injured the bus driver, police said.

The driver escaped, swam the Trinity River, walked to Interstate 30 and flagged down a motorist, who drove him to the hospital, said police and the motorist.

Police found the woman dead in the back of the bus, which was left in a parking area in Trinity Park west of downtown. The woman was Johnnie Gray, 34, an emergency room clerk at John Peter Smith Hospital, said Mike Mayo, night administrator for the hospital. Mayo said hospital officials were notified by police of Ms. Gray's death.

"It's kind of hard to believe," said Mayo. "We deal with this all the time but you're never ready for one of your own."

Sgt. Paul Kratz said police did not know the hijacker's motive, but that the bus' coin receptacle had not been broken into.

Bus driver David Jeanfreau, 22, of Arlington, was treated at Harris Hospital-Methodist for a stab wound to the neck and released.

The suspect was described as a black man, about 6 feet tall with medium build and a beard, wearing a white cap and light-colored shirt

Other portions of the bill, based on recommendations from the Select Committee on Higher Education, would strengthen funding for basic and applied research and boost the power of the renamed Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board. It also would give colleges more flexibility but greater accountability in handling fiscal matters.

The bill now returns to the House and Senate for agreement on the compromise, after which it goes to Gov. Bill Clements' desk.

Crime Stoppers seeks data on trooper shooting

Midland Crime Stoppers again is asking for the public's help to apprehend the person who assaulted a Department of Public Safety trooper last Jan. 11.

According to investigators, at 12:15 a.m., Trooper Ken Pittman was monitoring radar 13 miles south of Midland on State Highway 349, when he clocked a van traveling south at a high rate of speed. Pittman tried to stop the van, but it increased in speed, a rear door flew open, and a shotgun blast was fired at the windshield of Pittman's vehicle. Pittman was unable to control the car, which ran off the road.

Someone then left the van, and walked toward Pittman, firing the shotgun twice more. Pittman fired back, and may have hit one of the suspects.

The first suspect was described as a Hispanic male, 20 to 30 years old, with dark hair. The second man was described as a Hispanic male in his 30s. The van was described as metallic brown, a GMC or Chevy custom.

Crime Stoppers will pay a $1,000 cash reward for information leading to the arrest and indictment of those who assaulted Pittman. In Midland, Crime Stoppers can be reached at 694-TIPS, and in Odessa at 333-TIPS. Callers do not have to reveal their identity.

Police have suspect in camera theft

From Staff Reports

Midland police have a suspect in the theft of a video camera from a local store, according to reports.

Police said a video camera with a built in videocassette recorder valued at $1,395 was stolen from National Video, 3323 N. Midland Dr. Reports said the theft occurred Monday about 9 p.m.

The suspect in the theft was described as a Hispanic male, about 20 years old, 5-feet-7-inches tall, weighing approximately 130 pounds with black hair and brown eyes.

Police are also investigating the burglary of a building in the 1000 block of West Loop 250. According to reports, a 19-inch portable color television set valued at $399 was stolen. Police said the burglary occurred between April 1 and Wednesday.

Police Roundup

Assorted canned food and meats valued at $50 were reported stolen from a residence in the 1900 block of 1900 block of North Tyler Street, police said. According to reports, the burglary occurred Wednesday between 9 a.m. and 6 p.m.

In other reports, police are investigating two vehicle burglaries. An AM-FM cassette and radio valued at $159 was reported stolen from a vehicle parked in the 500 block of South Baird Street.

A gas-operated weed trimmer valued at $130 was reported stolen from a vehicle parked in the 900 block of Manor street, police said. According to reports, the burglary occurred Wednesday between 3 p.m. and 4 p.m.

MHS senior wins national Hispanic scholar award

From Staff Reports

Paige Prado, a member of the senior class at Midland High School, has been named a recipient of an Honorable Mention Award by the National Hispanic Scholar Awards Program, MHS Principal Jimmie Kelly has announced.

This local high school student is among 500 Hispanic students from throughout the United States who will receive honorable mention awards of $100 each. An additional 500 students will receive scholarships for one year's study at the college of their choice.

The National Hispanic Scholar Awards Program, sponsored by The College Board and funded by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, has distributed a total of 3,200 scholarships and awards since its inception in 1984.

Students enter competition for the Hispanic awards by taking the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test in their junior year of high school, identifying themselves as Hispanic, and indicating an interest in the program. From this applicant pool, winners are chosen on the basis of their overall academic achievements, including their grade point average, high school records, scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Test, and other criteria such as personal qualities and community involvement.

This year's winners were selected from a pool of 3,200 semifinalists. The names of all semifinalists are listed on a roster of outstanding hispanic students, which is released to colleges and universities to encourage institutions to seek out these talented students as potential candidates for admission.

CDRI to sell native plants

From Staff Reports

The Chihuahuan Desert Research Institute will hold a sale of drought-tolerate plants native to West Texas from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday on the sidewalk of ClayDesta National Bank in Midland, according to Dennie Miller, executive director of the Alpine-based research organization.

The sale will benefit CDRI, which was founded in 1973 to promote the scientific exploration of the desert and to educate the public on the desert's processes, Miller said.

The 30-species of native plants on sale will include cacti and succulents, mountain mahogany and purple sage shrubs, and the Mexican buckeye tree.

"Most plants will be trees and shrubs for landscaping," Miller said.

CDRI, which is headquartered on the Sul Ross State University campus at Alpine, operates a 500-acre Chihuahuan Desert Visitor Center, which includes an arboretum and botanical gardens three miles southeast of Fort Davis off the highway — Texas 118 — to Alpine.

The Chihuahuan Desert includes much of Mexico, West Texas and New Mexico. About 80 percent of the desert is in Mexico, Miller said. The desert's southern boundary begins at Mexico City.

She was named drug abuse awareness counselor in 1986. She earned degrees from the University of Texas at Austin and Sul Ross State University.

Mobile post office in place

From Staff Reports

Residents of Saragosa have a mobile post office in the place of the one that was destroyed in last Friday's tornado, according to Midland Postmaster Bill Williams, and he said "very little" mail was believed lost in the tragedy.

Williams said postal workers went to Saragosa Monday, and put up the mobile station on the site of the old post office. It will operate until a new permanent post office is constructed, he said.

"The people of Saragosa can go there and transact their business, just like they always have," Williams said. "We didn't miss a day of service, because Monday was a holiday."

Williams said highway department workers helped clear the site so that a new station could be opened.

The mobile station will be open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on weekdays, and from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday.

Very little of the mail at the post office was lost, Williams said, because when the tornado hit, the boxes fell with the locks facing up, protecting most of the mail.

FOP to help rebuild town

From Staff Reports

Officers from the Midland Chapter of the Fraternal Order of Police plan to travel to Saragosa Sunday to help "start building the town again," the chapter president said this morning.

Midland Police Officer Leonard Hendon said he is "rounding up" officers for the trip, which will also include officers from Odessa, San Angelo, Andrews, Lamesa, Brownfield and Levelland. The effort to help the tornado-ravaged town is being sponsored by the FOP Lodge Number Two in Pecos, Hendon said.

Hendon also said some of the FOP lodges in New Mexico might participate in the effort.

In a letter sent this week to the 40 members of the Midland lodge, Hendon said "We are going to help clean up or start building the town again. Whatever tools or equipment you have, try and bring them."

New Mexico downplays El Paso farmers, expert says

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — A water expert for the city of El Paso, Texas, says lawyers for the Elephant Butte Irrigation District are trying to make New Mexico farmers sound more important than El Paso farmers.

Lee Wilson said Tuesday during a break in the water hearing that lawyers for the irrigation district are using rhetoric, such as referring to the Mesilla Valley as the fertile crescent, to downplay the importance of agriculture in El Paso.

Wilson said El Paso farmers are just as good as New Mexico farmers.

"When you compare crop with crop, and cereal values, like oats and barley, the districts are pretty much the same," Wilson said. "And El Paso has been catching up in crop values."

The water hearing on whether El Paso should be allowed to drill water wells in southern New Mexico's Hueco Bolson resumed Tuesday.

El Paso is seeking 10,000 acre-feet of water a year from New Mexico. The city also has applied to drill 266 wells in the Lower Rio Grande Basin between El Paso and Las Cruces.

Bill Saad, irrigation district manager, has said El Paso wants the water only because it's inexpensive.

Wilson said Saad's testimony can't be given much weight because he is not an expert.

Steve Hubert, lawyer for the irrigation district, said Saad is not an expert, but he testified to outline what the irrigation district does and how it works.

Texas joins effort to stop benefits

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas has joined federal officials to crack down on illegal aliens receiving government benefits, a move Gov. Bill Clements says should amount to huge savings for the state.

Clements and Immigration and Naturalization Service Commissioner Alan Nelson signed an agreement Wednesday giving the state permission to use federal computers to verify the status of people applying for entitlement benefits.

"We are delighted...The cost savings under this agreement — both to the state and to the federal government — are tremendous. This program when it's fully implemented, will give us a savings in Texas of about $75 million," Clements said.

Bankers push plastic for profit

By JAY GOLDINGER
Copley News Service

Banks, savings and loans and other financial institutions are trying to stuff more credit cards into your wallet and enticing you to use them. Unless you pay off your balance at the end of each month, all that easy credit can pile up interest charges that no longer can be totally written off at year-end.

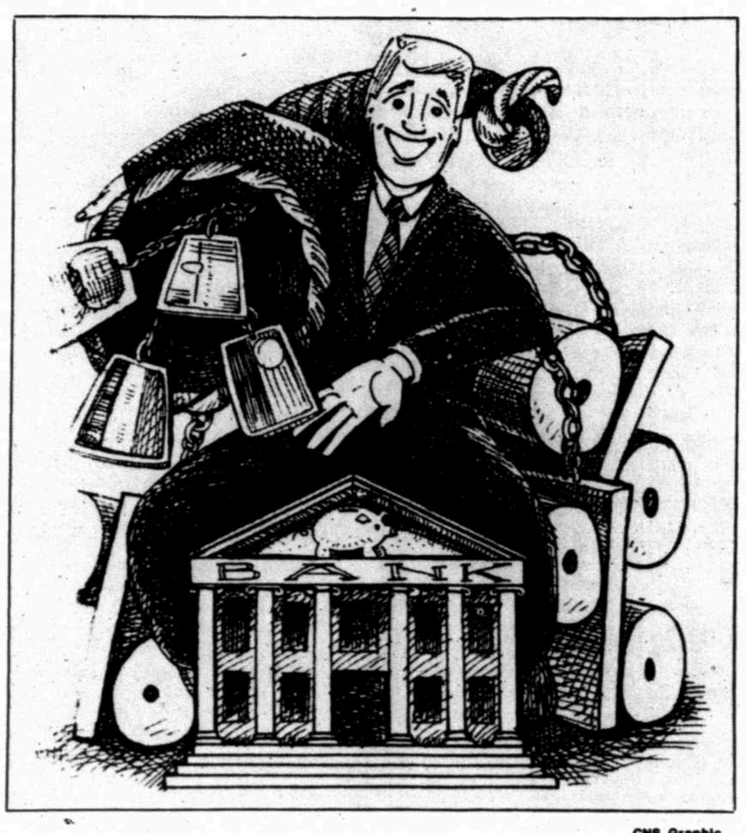

The result: you can find yourself deeper in debt and unable to deduct 100 percent of the interest expense. You lose both ways.

Meantime, the bankers are cleaning up, largely at your expense.

Consider this. The bank or financial institution issuing you a VISA or MasterCard makes money three ways.

First, you pay a membership fee — normally $25 to $50 a year. You think you're paying for the privilege and convenience of charging purchases. But, in reality, that fee is just one of three income streams that flow into the banker's corporate vault.

Second, the bank collects a fee from the merchant who accepts your credit card. That fee typically ranges from 1½ percent to 3 percent of the purchase price. Now, you may say, "Fine, I don't pay that fee; the bank collects from the store directly." Only half true.

CNS Graphic

INDEED, THE bank extracts its fee — that second income stream — from the shopkeeper. But you can bet the family dog that this fee (called a merchant discount) is factored into the price you paid. Look at gasoline stations that have one price if you put your purchase on a credit card and another — lower — price if you pay cash.

Third, the bank or financial institution socks you with interest on any balance you may carry from one month to the next. And here's where you could really be getting gouged today. Even though banks pay maybe 5 percent for funds from the Federal Reserve, they rent out those dollars for anywhere from 15 percent to 22 percent, depending, quite frankly, on how much they can charge before state regulators step in or consumer groups start howling.

Hence, the banks pocket that difference. And while they claim it goes to pay their expensive overhead — staff, computers, rent — bank insiders agree it's a huge profit maker. Indeed, financial institutions are fighting like wounded lions to protect that fiscal prize in the wake of rising complaints by consumer groups and concerned lawmakers.

Lately, though, we're seeing some new sales pitches in our mailboxes. One is called, crassly enough, the More Card. Issued by People's 1st Thrift of Salt Lake City, the mailing is scattergunned nationwide, and it dangles as promotional bait "more" things than you get from a typical VISA card.

FOR INSTANCE, there's no annual fee. Plus, it has an immediate credit line of $2,500. And instead of the minimum 5 percent monthly payment, More Card holders are only required to pay 3 percent a month of what they owe.

And if you're short of cash or have immediate bills to pay, the More Card will send you a $500 "cash advance" check.

All of this is prominently trumpeted in the pitch letter signed by Daniel B. Aiken, who is identified as vice president and "Director of Card Service."

But what's buried in tiny print on the back of the More Card "invitation" (apparently sounds better than "application") is the fact that anyone who carries and uses a More Card and doesn't pay off the balance at month end is clobbered with a 21.9 percent annual interest rate charge. That's one of the steepest rates we've ever seen.

We called Daniel Aiken — the signature on the sales letter — three times, but he was "in a meeting." He never did return our call. Is the name phony? We checked the phone book and, indeed, he does live in Evansville, Ind., headquarters of Credit Thrift Financial Co., which owns People's 1st Thrift.

HAL LASHER, a Credit Thrift vice president for public relations, was more forthcoming. He defended the 21.9 percent interest rate by stressing that there is no annual fee. Asked if the easy credit with high limits wouldn't encourage people to spend and charge beyond their means, Lasher claimed only the most creditworthy and, therefore, financially responsible people, are offered the More Card.

Besides, he added candidly, "We, and any financial institution, have a vested interest to make sure the customer uses the card. It's not like we sit back and say, 'Don't use the card,' because then we don't get paid."

Still, Morgan White, an investment counselor and financial adviser to wealthy individuals, frets that credit cards like More are too seductive and too expensive, even though there is no sign-up or membership fee.

"The real issue here," says White, "is whether the cardholder has the financial wherewithal to support that new and costly debt load."

Or, he asks, are credit cards like More just a plastic shovel for digging people deeper into the hole?

Electronic payments may lead to cashless society

By SUSAN BURKHARDT
Copley News Service

The check busters have a message: Educate, educate, educate.

Members of the National Automated Clearing House Association — America's largest electronics-payments network — said that significant marketing and research efforts are necessary to bring about greater consumer and business acceptance of electronic payments.

"I don't think we'll eliminate the check in my lifetime, but we've made significant inroads toward a cashless society," said Richard D. Brandt, NACHA chairman, and executive vice chairman of Ranier National Bank, Seattle.

"We're growing, and we're growing aggressively," he added. He referred to recent moves by oil companies to offer its customers the opportunity to use a debit card at the gas pump.

AND THE federal government itself is on the leading edge of the electronic payments revolution, said Loretta A. Walker, senior analyst for the U.S. Treasury's financial management service.

About 60 percent of the government's workers are already getting paid through electronic direct deposit, she said. And starting in July, federal workers will be able to make discretionary allotments from their paychecks electronically, she said.

These include volunteer child-support payments, insurance premiums, mutual fund investments and money market deposits.

Also in July, the federal government will begin paying its own bills — to vendors and government program recepients — electronically. The electronic payments program will be phased in gradually.

FOUR GOVERNMENT agencies are targeted for the first electronic conversion: the Health Care Financing Administration, the Department of Labor, the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Department of Education.

It costs the federal government 26 cents to issue a check, but only 3 cents to make an electronic payment through the Automated Clearing House system, Walker said.

However, the real clincher is that Americans someday may be filing their tax returns electronically.

Walker said the Treasury last year conducted a pilot program in three U.S. cities to permit tax preparers to file individuals' tax forms electronically. This year, those that filed electronically and are eligible for a refund will receive it electronically — and three weeks faster than everybody else.

She estimated that by 1989, electronic tax preparation should be available to all taxpayers.

However, she said that the Treasury has not decided how to make it available to those who don't use a tax preparer. The drawback to electronic refunds is that people are reluctant to provide their bank account information to the Internal Revenue Service, she said.

NACHA SECRETARY Ronald W. Davies, senior executive vice president of Maryland National Bank, Baltimore, said that the elimination of the paper check is not on the immediate horizon, but that electronic payments systems have already reduced the growth rates in check volumes.

"While we continue to look at the efficiency of the Automated Clearing House system, there is continued focus on improving the cost efficiency of paper. Therefore, we'll see both trends (checks and electronic payments) continue," Davies said.

"The next (electronic payments) threshold is when we see the amount of checks reach a peak and start to decline," he said.

BRANDT ADDED, "I don't think it will be a consumer-driven movement. It'll be a business decision on how companies want to manage their business affairs." For instance, Exxon is encouraging use of its debit card at the pump by giving its customers the cash price if they use the debit card as opposed to the credit card.

"Companies will provide enough benefits so the customer changes his payment practices," he predicted.

BETTER BUSINESS

Unreal job opportunities usually a scam

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Schmidt

Consumers should be wary of unrealistic employment opportunities, especially ads advertising high-wage positions in other cities. Areas of high unemployment are the first to be hit by individuals and companies seeking personal gain from desperate individuals looking for employment.

Usually these advertisements promise an endless supply of high-wage jobs and end up costing the individual more than he can ever gain. The scam usually begins with a trip to a designated city for an interview. The company is paid a fee for a list of available jobs. After the fee has been paid, the applicant's job expectations are shattered. The list of supposedly current employment opportunities is just that, only a list. The prospective employee must contact these companies on his own, with no help from the person to whom he has already paid the fee. Occasionally, a company on the list is not even seeking employees.

During periods of high unemployment, a reputable employment agency can be a great asset in locating employment for the applicant.

There are certain benefits in using a reputable personnel agency. Some of the advantages are:

- Employers may not express it, but they generally expect a higher quality candidate from an agency than available through their own efforts.
- Employers realize the benefits of qualified applicants obtained through agencies and know the applicant has already been tested and screened for a final interview.
- The placement agency acts as the negotiator between the candidate and the employing company in order to achieve an accurate distinction among the applicants and improve the match for the employer.
- The candidate receives a service and the employer receives a service. Both parties benefit.
- All placement fees are tax deductible, if itemized on your tax form.

Things an individual should look for when choosing a reputable personnel agency are:

- Check out the history and financial condition of the agency. Is it bonded? Find out who the clients have been in the past.
- What are the contract terms? Compare fees in different agencies. A reputable agency will only charge you a fee if you are placed in a permanent position. What is each party obliged to do according to the contract?
- Done the agency have full service recruiting, staffing, stability, reputation and service designed for the local or regional labor market?
- Is the agency making a dedicated effort of professionalism and thoroughness in recruiting and placement for the applicant? Be careful in this area. Many agencies place applicants in positions that are inappropriate just to collect placement fees.
- Does the agency have a community commitment by offering a broader knowledge of local needs and assuring a return of time and money to the community?
- Check the agency out with the BBB at 1-800-592-4433. Don't be afraid to ask questions. After all, it is your time, money and career.

Frozen cheese nuggets follow latest food trend

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

Ever notice how foods, like clothing and hairstyles, go in and out of fashion? Well, for some reason, fried cheese has been popular in trendy restaurants for the last few years and now some frozen foods manufacturers are tapping into this market with their own supermarket-versions.

I love cheese (though I prefer to stay away from fried foods and save my calories for chocolate) and my kids love cheese, so we tried a box of these breaded from-freezer-to-microwave morsels, checking it out for taste, price and advertising accuracy.

Gold'n Lite lightly breaded, frozen cheese nuggets are available in several different flavors, including nacho cheese, onion-garlic cheese, cheddar cheese and ham and cheese bites. The product, from Hormel, also is available in onion rings, mushrooms, califlower, zucchini, chicken bites and whole wheat recipe chicken bites, but that's a different column. Our box was pizza-flavored cheese — somehow, I just can't see my kids even touching something called onion-garlic cheese.

The 8-ounce box of cheese bits cost $1.29 and yielded about two 1-cup servings, each with about 15-20 pieces, so each taste-tester had plenty to taste. (Price listed is from a local supermarket. Price at other locations may vary.)

Label advertising starts off "Mmmm." Hold on, it gets worse: "Bite into Gold'n Lite Pizza Cheese and lead your taste to a fresh new place. Our crispy light breading surounds a spicy blend of Monterey Jack and pizza seasonings for goodness that melts in your mouth. No preservatives. No artificial colors or flavors. Just honest, natural taste that's fun to serve as a sidedish, appetizer or snack."

How can anyone resist something so wonderful and honest as that? Although, in the tastetest we discovered maybe the product's advertising isn't exactly as honest as the taste. (Can you tell I don't believe "honest" is the best word to describe food?)

We found that while the pizza-flavored cheese bits are tasty when hot (but not too hot — microwave ovens tend to leave the cheese hotter than expected in the middle), they tend to lose their appeal when they cool off. In fact, when hot the cheese in these bits can be stretched — just like real fried cheese found in yuppie restaruants. But when they cool off, pizza-flavored cheese bits are more the consistency of Elmer's glue.

They do have a nice pizza flavor, though. If you like pizza.

Over exposure to sun can lead to skin cancer

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

With summer just around the corner, sunbathers are coming out in droves in search of the "golden tan." What these people may not know is that they may pay for their now bronze skin when they get older.

Frequent exposure to the sun's ultraviolet rays may lead to skin cancer. The earlier you are exposed to the sun and the more often you are in it, the greater your chances are of getting skin cancer.

Certain people are more predisposed to skin cancer. Those with fair skin and those who freckle easily are more likely to get the disease than those who have more pigment in their skin. The more pigment in the skin, the more natural blockage it contains from the sun's rays.

Early detection is very important with any type of cancer. Lesions on the skin can be removed fairly easily if they are caught in their early stages. Look for any changes in your skin's coloration or texture and beware of any raised surfaces. These may be the beginning of skin cancer and should be treated immediately.

Ninety percent of all skin cancers happen on body parts that usually aren't covered by clothing. Common places for skin cancer are on the forearms, ears, face and hands.

The best cure for skin cancer is prevention. Stay out of the sun when its rays are the hottest, usually from about 10 a.m.-3 p.m. If you must be outside during that time, wear enough clothing to protect your skin. Any exposed areas should be covered with a sunblock. Those who have more sensitive skin should use the highest degree of sunblock possible.

People in the Sun Belt are especially susceptible to skin cancer because they are exposed to the sun so many months of the year. They should be very careful about the amount of exposure they get and be sure to take extra precautions from the sun's rays.

Sunbathers beware: "If you fry now, you may pay later."

DEAR ABBY

Bit of warmth, love from husband might thaw his chilly wife

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The "Washingtonian" who complained that his wife is a dud in bed sounds like my husband. He treats me like a dog all day, and expects me to be wildly passionate the minute he drops his pants. Through the years he has asked me what he can do to make me more responsive. I have repeatedly told him to please treat me as though I were special to him, and the response would come naturally. He obviously can't do it. One night I prepared a delicious dinner, complete with chilled wine and candlelight. He walked in and proceeded to yell at me for leaving the basement light turned on! Needless to say, that left me as cool as the wine.

A friend once told him he shouldn't be out looking for hamburger when he had steak home in the refrigerator. I would give the same advice to "Washingtonian." He should show his wife the same consideration and tenderness he shows his ladyfriends, and his wife might surprise him. If he doesn't, he will end up with nothing but hamburger. — WISHING IN WALLA WALLA

DEAR WISHING: Today, the issue is not the difference between steak and hamburger — it can be the difference between life and death! Any person who knowingly shares a spouse with anonymous others is taking an enormous risk. You need to be tested for exposure to the AIDS virus — and so does your philandering husband. And you both need to be educated concerning safe sex practices, and follow the instructions to the letter.

DEAR ABBY: You recently published a letter from a woman who was upset because her stepdaughter had invited her husband's ex-wife to her bridal shower.

I laughed. Five years ago, I remarried in a church ceremony, and I did it my way. My stepson was my ring bearer, my teen-age son gave me away, and my guests were all friends of ours. These friends included my ex-husband, my ex-in-laws and my ex-husband's first ex-wife. (I did not invite his second ex-wife — I was his third!) Also invited (and attended) were several people who had been significant people from the groom's past as well as my own. Many of the people I worked with were there, and you should have seen their faces when I introduced these people around!

Abby, my ex-husband and his present wife are friends of mine now. He was at one time an important part of my life, and it seemed only proper that he should be present to share my joy. I suppose this is rather unusual, but my present husband's first ex-wife gave me a beautiful bridal shower.

Life is too short for grudges. — I DID IT MY WAY

DEAR DID IT: It would be ideal if all divorced persons would do it your way, but your way is the exception.

Killer seeks forgiveness before being executed

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Convicted killer Anthony Charles Williams, asking for forgiveness, jumped on the Texas death row gurney with a smile on his face and was executed early today for the 1978 abduction, rape and slaying of a 13-year-old Houston girl.

"Mother, I'm sorry for causing you all the pain," he said in his final statement. "I want to thank all those who helped me. I thank you all."

No one represented the family at the execution.

Williams, 27, was 18 when he was sentenced to death for the killing of Vickie Lynn Wright. A jury took six minutes to convict him and nine minutes to decide the death penalty. He was sent to death row Nov. 8, 1978 — his 19th birthday.

Vickie Wright's mother, Beth, waited outside the prison for word that the execution took place, then said she did not believe prison officials who told her that her daughter's killer was dead.

"We've gone through hell," she said. "I don't believe he's dead. I'm going to have to have an autopsy. I want to see him in his coffin."

Mrs. Wright, accompanied by two of her daughters, said she was bitter that prison officials would not allow her in the death chamber or allow a videotape to be made of the execution.

"There's no provision for the victims," her daughter, Tina, said.

The lethal injection began at 12:12 a.m. He was pronounced dead 10 minutes later.

The execution came despite last-minute appeals filed by attorneys who attempted to halt it for a fourth time.

Six weeks ago, he won a reprieve — his third — from a federal appeals court only a few hours before he was to be put to death.

State and federal courts, including the U.S. Supreme Court, rejected requests for stays Wednesday.

Williams' final appeal alleged an injury he suffered as a child was not properly investigated by his lawyers and that he was not properly evaluated by a doctor who examined him. At his trial, defense attorneys characterized him as a slow learner who suffered difficulties since he was run over by a car.

Williams was kept Wednesday in a small holding cell outside the death chamber. He played dominoes, visited with a brother and sister and read a newspaper. Late in the evening, he talked with his mother for nearly 30 minutes on the telephone.

He ate a piece of fish as his last meal.

Miss Wright was abducted June 12, 1978 outside a Houston bowling alley. Her body — battered with a two-by-four board — was found the next day. She also had been strangled, then raped after she was dead, authorities said.

Williams, a carpenter, denied he killed the girl, but told arresting officers he did abduct her and take her to a field, where he hit her with a board.

Davis ordered not to discuss wrongful-death suit

By MIKE COCHRAN

FORT WORTH (AP) — A judge has ordered Cullen Davis, the defendant in a multimillion-dollar wrongful death lawsuit, not to discuss the case with anyone except his attorneys.

As jury selection continued for the second day Wednesday, State District Judge Claude Williams granted a request for a temporary order restraining Davis from repeat performances of statements he gave to reporters on Tuesday.

Jury selection was scheduled to continue today in the case.

Davis' ex-wife, Priscilla Davis, 45, contends he was the bewigged man in black who wounded her and killed her daughter, Andrea Wilborn, in an August 1976 shooting spree at the $6 million Davis mansion in Fort Worth.

Attorneys for Mrs. Davis and Jack Wilborn — the second of her three husbands and the father of the slain girl — took offense at the defendant's portrayal of himself to reporters as all but poverty-stricken — left only, he said, with "my house and my car."

Lawyers for Wilborn said Davis made "vicious and vituperative" statements about Wilborn to reporters and defamed Wilborn by saying the civil suits against him were based on greed.

They said Davis "impermissibly argued the merits of the case" when he claimed the facts had already been decided when he was acquitted in 1977 of the murder charges filed against him.

The judge granted the gag order, but said he would take no further action against Davis "unless he violates the order."

A jury in Amarillo acquitted Davis of Andrea's death, but that verdict has no legal consequences in the current civil trial, which includes a personal injury suit by Mrs. Davis.

Attached to the request for the restraining order against Davis were copies of a Fort Worth Star-Telegram article in which Davis asserted that his ex-wife has spent the millions of dollars she won in their divorce settlement and is now broke.

"It's all greed," he said of the civil action.

A second exhibit was a copy of a Dallas Morning News story which bore the headline: "Cullen Davis says he has no money."

Both newspaper articles quoted him as saying, "They might end up getting a judgment, but they can wallpaper their house with it."

Davis, 53, once on the Forbes list of America's 400 wealthiest men, maintains his fortune fell victim to an oil slump that plunged his oil-related empire into bankruptcy.

The intruder in the 1976 shooting spree also killed Mrs. Davis' boyfriend, Stan Farr, 30, and wounded a mansion visitor, Bubba Gavrel, now 33. The shootings occurred at a time when Cullen and Priscilla were involved in a long and bitter divorce case.

Additional criminal charges against Davis were dismissed in 1979 when a Fort Worth jury acquitted him of masterminding a murder-for-hire scheme in which the targets included the three survivors of the mansion shootings.

Steve O'Neill to perform at Rumors

Rock, reggae, blues and pop artist Steve O'Neill is scheduled to perform June 2nd through 6th at Rumors, Midland's newest night spot. Rumors is located next to the Tall City Lanes at 3920 West Wall.

Rumors, Midland's newest night club, proudly presents Steve O'Neill in concert June 2 through 6.

O'Neill has received national attention from his music video "When The Mountain Falls", shown on MTV, Friday Night Videos, Night Flight, The Music Channel and other programs. His video was also featured at the Cannes Film Festival, and he has performed on Dick Clark's American Bandstand.

O'Neill has produced his own successful debut album, "Watch Out", which features his original material.

Blending elements of pop, rock, reggae and rhythm and blues, O'Neill has forged a style of music that is right in today's mainstream.

As a performer, O'Neill surrounds himself with a vast array of keyboards. Unlike the new wave groups, he has his roots firmly planted in rock music. With a hard driving guitar sound and a heavy pulsating bass, O'Neill creates the illusion of a full band, although he is aided only by a drummer. This high-energy performance is highlighted by O'Neill's dramatic four octave vocal range which leaves his audiences screaming for encores.

O'Neill has opened for such major artisits as The Romantics, Chicago, Three Dog Night, Todd Rundgren and Uriah Heep.

With credits as a writer, producer and performer, along with his good looks, confidence and charisma, Steve O'Neill represents a new breed of artist that you won't want to miss.

Rumors is the newest addition to Midland's evening entertainment. Open Monday through Saturday, Rumors offers a plush decor, drink specials and music ranging from country to rock. Live entertainment is featured Wednesday through Saturday, and a disc jockey plays your favorite music Monday and Tuesday evenings. Rumors is located adjacent to the Tall City Lanes at 3920 West Wall. Come out and join the fun!

Joey's proudly presents Gary P. Nunn

This weekend, Joey's Restaurant and Bar does it again! Gary P. Nunn and his "Sons of the Bunkhouse Band" (S.O.B.'s) will perform Friday and Saturday, May 29th and 30th, from 9:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m.

Nunn's album, "Home With the Armadillo," was described by Houston Post writer Bob Claypool as "Great stuff, all-around–the kind of Austin progressive country album nobody seems to be making anymore. This one deserves major label release for sure."

John T. Davis, music critic for the Austin American Statesman wrote, "...and the song that could serve as the state anthem and should (in the event True Justice should emerge in the cosmos anytime soon) elevate Nunn to the lower ranks of diety-dom (is) 'What I Like About Texas'." The album consists of nine songs from Nunn's stellar "Austin City Limits" performance in October, 1982.

The Sesquicentennial has not only produced new interest in Texas heritage, but it has also evoked criticism of the current state song, "Texas, Our Texas." Nunn has written a song most Texas know and love. "I Want to Go Home With the Armadillo," is heard in most Texas bars as well as on the ever-popular PBS series, "Austin City Limits."

"The Last Thing I Needed," recorded on Willie Nelson's Country Music Association award winning album, "Always On My Mind," was a piano piece. "South Canadian River Song," co-authored with Michael Murphy, was a piano piece, along with "Loose and On My Way," described by Nunn as the easiest song he has ever written.

Nunn, a keyboard player and composer, is consistently making an impact on the Texas music scene, whether through his simple, heart felt lyrics, or his carefully wrought music. Because Texans join unanimously with "I Want to Go Home with the Armadillo," Gary P. Nunn is a true spokesman for Texas heritage.

Texas musician Gary P. Nunn and his band will play at Joey's this weekend. Admission is $6.50 and tickets are on sale at Joey's and Endless Horizons for the Friday and Saturday evening shows.

Jennings helps Angels end TL skid

From Staff Reports

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The Midland Angels ended a three-game Texas League skid here Wednesday night when Doug Jennings singled home Doug Davis with the winning run in the ninth inning to give Midland a 4-3 victory over the Arkansas Travelers.

Davis singled in the ninth inning, moved to third on a single by Rick Adams and scored on Jennings' single, giving the Angels their first win of the series. The five-game series concludes tonight and the Angels have Friday off before meeting San Antonio at 7 p.m. at Angels Stadium Saturday.

The Angels took a 3-0 lead in the second inning on a walk and four singles. Mark Doran, Damon Farmar and Adams all had RBI singles off of Arkansas starter Sid Weissman in that inning.

The Travs, however, came back to tie it in the fourth inning with a three-run inning of their own. The big blow in the frame was a two-run homer by Mike Fitzgerald, his 12th of the season. The homer came off of Midland starter Marty Reed.

Midland reliever Vance Lovelace pitched the eighth to gain his first decision of the year and Vinicio Cedeno pitched the ninth to gain his eighth save after Jennings had given the Angels the lead in the top of the ninth.

The Angels collected 10 hits on the night, but all of them were singles. The Travs had seven hits and three of them were for extra bases.

Reed had a mixed outing. He gave up six hits in his seven innings of work. He also walked six batters, but KOed seven on strikes. Lovelace and Cedeno gave the Midland bullpen a boost with two innings of one-hit ball.

The victory leaves Midland with a 22-25 season record, tied with San Antonio for last place in the Texas League West.

IN OTHER Texas League games Wednesday night, El Paso defeated Jackson, 7-5 and Tulsa edged San Antonio, 2-1.

Shreveport's scheduled doubleheader at Wichita was postponed because of rain and will be made up as part of a doubleheader tonight that may seem more like a tripleheader. The two teams are scheduled to complete Monday night's game that was suspended because of a power failure.

Darryl Walters had a three-run homer to lead the El Paso Diablos to a 7-5 victory over the Jackson Mets.

Walters' sixth inning homer came after Eric Hardgrave singled and Rob DeWolf reached on an error.

The Mets pulled to within 7-5 in the sixth inning when Zoilo Sanchez singled and scored after a throwing error and a groundout. Greg Jeffries then singled home Gary Jones for the second Jackson run in the sixth inning.

Luis Castillo, 1-1, was the winning pitcher. Dave Lenderman, 1-5, was the loser.

Eddie Jurak scored on a sacrifice fly by Otto Gonzalez to give the Tulsa Drillers a 2-1 victory over the San Antonio Dodgers.

It's a homer...

Mount St. Joseph outfielder Jeff Simmons did his best to catch this three-run homer by Clavert's Don Nace during Maryland state playoff game, but all he accomplished in the loss was a trip to the hospital. He was later released from the hospital, but still had a pain in the neck.

Chaps still alive for national title

From Staff Reports

TYLER — Midland College is still in the hunt for the Men's National Junior College tennis title after two days of play in the national tournament, but still have some ground to cover before staking any claims.

Midland College has scored 21 points thus far, but it has only earned them a tie for the lead with North Greenville, Ga.; Tyler JC, Anderson, S.C., and McLennan Community College of Waco. Abraham Baldwin, Ga., and Jefferson State, Ala., are close behind with 19 points.

The Chaps went through third round action Wednesday with little trouble. The Chaps' No. 1 doubles team of Jean Roussel and Eric Lingg, seeded No. 2 in the tournament and undefeated on the year, had the only scare, winning a 4-6, 6-1, 6-2, three-set victory over Reynoso and Haggar of Florida JC.

Otherwise, it was a cake walk Wednesday. Roussel, playing the No. 1 singles position and seeded third, beat Bret Bridel of DuPage, Ill., 6-0, 6-1 while MC's No. 2 Lingg, seeded first, ran past Consantine Lantsias of Manhattan, N.Y., 6-2, 6-2.

At No. 3, Johan Dysholm, seeded No. 5, defeated Lewis Cochius of Lewis & Clark, Ill., 6-4, 6-1 while No. 4 Giles Ameline, seeded second, won a perfect love match against Tim Peabody of Brainerd, Minn.

Herve Rousseau, MC's No. 5 player who is seeded fourth, won a 6-4, 6-0 match over Tibor Bajusz of Vincennes, Ill., and No. 6 player Lars Nordmark, seeded fifth, was a 6-2, 6-0 victor over Skip Hill of Abraham Baldwin.

MC's No. 2 doubles team of Dysholm-Rousseau, seeded fifth, won a love match against Cartie-Peabody of Brainerd and the No. 3 team of Nordmark-Ameline, seeded fourth, took a another love victory over Kendra-Sitz of Lake City, Fla.

MC tennis coach Joe Williams is pleased with the performace so far, but thinks today's matches will determine the tournament leader. Williams feels that North Greenville had the easiest draw in the tournament.

Today MC was scheduled to face Tyler in three matches and had one match each against leaders McLennan, Anderson and Florida JC.

Lingg and Ameline are due tough singles matches against a Tyler players while Dysholm and Rousseau draw a doubles match against a Tyler duo. Dysholm also meets a McLennan player in the singles while Nordmark draws and Anderson foe in singles. Roussell and Lingg catch an Anderson team in doubles.

This could turn out to be the make it or break it day for the Chaps.

The good news is that the Chaparrals have all their guns still alive in the tournament. It is much like a single elimination tournament in that you are not allowed to play anymore after a loss. Points can only be earned from a victory.

The national tournament, being held on the campus of Tyler Junior College, runs through Saturday.

Dallas' 'Too Tall' Jones wants to end career on up note

IRVING (AP) — When Ed Jones signed a 2-year contract two months ago, he set a retirement date for Too Tall Jones, the defensive end.

After 12 seasons with the Dallas Cowboys, Jones has decided to end his career after the 1988 season. That is why you can find him almost every morning at the Cowboys practice facility, trying to revive a career that was almost without life last December.

"Football has been very good to me," Jones said last week on the first day of the club's 3-day minicamp. "That's why it's time to think about going out on a positive note. If I'd retired at the end of last season, I would have been a frustrated individual. Going out on a losing season would have been very sour.

"Now, though, I can think about turning things around and going out as a winner."

Based on statistics, the 1986 season was one of Jones' worst. It reflected the Cowboys' roller-coaster 7-9 season.

Defensive coordinator Ernie Stautner said two weeks ago Jones must rededicate himself if he is to remain a starter.

Jones said he didn't read Stautner's comments. Clearly, though, he knows his predicament.

"I fell down in the sack category last year and now everybody is ready to panic," Jones said. "But that was just one year in the life of a defensive end. Of course, I know that I'm supposed to get to the quarterback. I fell down in that area. But that doesn't mean I can't come back."

Jones, who turned 36 in February, didn't have a sack in the final five games. He finished with 5½ sacks, his lowest total in 10 seasons. To those who watched him closely, especially Stautner, Jones disappeared into the arms of opposing blockers in the final games.

Furthermore, he registered sacks in only four games and had only 1½ sacks against division opponents.

Doubts tend to multiply when you turn 36 after a sub-par season.

"As far as my play, I know that it could have been better," Jones said. "But really, the whole team has needed to rededicate itself. I'm not just talking about Ed Jones. It's time for all of us to rededicate."

STREAKS

San Diego's 6-4 loss to the Philadelphia Phillies on Wednesday night was its fifth straight defeat, giving the Padres five five-game losing streaks this season.

STATS

Greg Gross's two-run ninth-inning homer against the Padres was his first home run in 1,618 at-bats since April 30, 1978, when he homered off the Chicago Cubs' Tommy Boggs. Gross has seven career homers in 3,432 at-bats, one per 490 at-bats.

SWINGS

Last season, New York Mets outfielder Darryl Strawberry hit five of his 27 home runs off left-handed pitchers. This season, six of his 13 home runs have been off left-handers, including his last four.

Jordan talks defense after award

NEW YORK (AP) — NBA scoring champion Michael Jordan wants everyone to know that he can play defense, too.

"I try to play both ends of the court," the Chicago Bulls guard said Wednesday after receiving the Seagram Sports Award as the NBA's player of the year. "I was second in the league in steals and I had more blocked shots than any guard."

Last week, Magic Johnson of the Los Angeles Lakers was named the league's Most Valuable Player by a panel of writers and broadcasters.

The Seagram Award is based on a computerized evaluation of a player's performance in seven categories: scoring, field goal percentage, free throw accuracy, rebounds, blocked shots, assists and steals.

"I'd like to thank the computer," Jordan said during a ceremony at Madison Square Garden. "If it wasn't for that, I might not have gotten an MVP award this year."

Jordan, who averaged 37.1 points a game, said he was disappointed that he didn't receive the league's MVP award.

"But I wasn't angry," he said. "I had a great season, but so did Magic."

Johnson, who averaged 23.9 points and 12.2 assists per game, led the Lakers to the league's best regular-season record. If you believe the computer, though, Jordan was the better overall player.

Bulls' Michael Jordan ...player of the year

Jordan received an 80.81 rating, compared with 75.61 for Johnson. Larry Bird of Boston was third at 75.58 and Akeem Olajuwon of Houston was fourth at 73.74, just ahead of Philadelphia's Charles Barkley at 73.09.

Jordan scored 3,041 points this season, joining Wilt Chamberlain as the only players in NBA history to top 3,000 points in a season. He also led the league in minutes played and twice scored 61 points in a game.

Despite his impressive statistics, Jordan said he wasn't completely satisified with his performance.

"I didn't lead the team in turnovers, but I had too many," he said. "I want to play as errorless basketball as I can."

Jordan's scoring average was 8.1 points higher than that of runner-up Dominique Wilkins, the largest margin for a scoring champion since 1962-63. He knows it's a standard that will be difficult to match next season.

"I guess I did create a little problem for myself," he said. "When you average 37 points one year, they expect you to average 40 the next year. Maybe I've created an expectation I can't reach."

Jordan said the highlight of his season was scoring 61 points against Detroit in an overtime victory March 4.

"I felt like I could do anything that night," he said. "Whenever we needed a big play, I was able to come through."

Gordon Wood: Still the legend, but around noon

Williamson

You would think that any high school football coach who had 405 victories, 88 losses, 12 ties, 26 district titles and nine state championships under his belt would find retirement a bit dull. But not this one legendary Gordon Wood.

Texas high school football is Gordon Wood and we've seen a year go by without him on the field at Brownwood where he spent 26 years winning 257 games, 15 district titles, sharing two others and grabbing seven state crowns. So how is retirement, Gordon?

"Well, it ain't half bad," says Wood. "I don't do much of anything, and I don't do that until around noon."

And if you believe that, there is this swamp land....

Last Saturday, Wood made a trip to Midland to speak at the Greenwood sports banquet at the Midland Hilton. That's no big deal except for the fact that it was one of the worst Saturdays in a wet Midland spring. It rained all day, tornado warnings were out, but Wood showed up.

"They (Greenwood) asked me to be here, so I'm here," was the way Wood tells it.

But Gordon Wood doesn't coach football any longer. Brownwood has named its football stadium after him, so he has a press box to sit in during the fall months. He misses football only to a degree.

"To tell you the truth, I don't miss football at all this time of year. And I only miss it during the fall when they're playing the games. I miss it some then," said Wood.

But he still goes to all the home games of the Brownwood Lions and claims that he has no problems of second guessing while in the press box.

"First of all, Randy Allen (who replaced Wood at Brownwood as head football coach) is one of the finest young coaches ever to come around and I don't have any problems with him in that way.

"On the other hand, second guessing is 20-20 hindsight at best. That's one reason I always sit in the press box wherever I go because I can't stand to hear the fans saying they should have done this or that. Kids everywhere play the best they can. I even sit in the press box when I go to Southwest Conference games."

Although Wood is extremely loyal to Brownwood, where he still lives year round, he admitted that "I don't always go on the long road trips." But he usually finds a stadium that will let him in the press box.

"I don't see too many other games that Brownwood isn't involved in, but I did go to see the San Angelo-Midland Lee game last fall in San Angelo. I have to tell you, that was one fine high school football game between two great teams.

"I think Lee might have won a state championship with that team if their quarterback (Rodney Johnson) hadn't gotten hurt in that game. I was really impressed with the Lee offense. Now there's a machine that can really present some problems for your defense.

"They call that thing they run at Lee the wishbone, but that's a real farce. They're not in the wishbone very often. They're all over the field and can do just about anything out of it."

Wood's career 405 high school victories is a record that many consider untouchable. No one is in sight of that kind of victory total, but Wood says that it will be broken one day.

"I don't think it's going to happen in the near future, but someone will break it," said Wood. "It may be trite to say that records are made to be broken, but it's true in this case.

"For instance, I had to spend three years in the Navy and a lot of young coaches don't have to do that anymore. And for most of my coaching career, they allowed only one team from each district to go to the playoffs and now two can go. That's going to give someone a lot more chances at playing a lot more games."

Does Wood regret not being able to send a few more teams to the state playoffs that the new rule now allows?

"That's a funny one because I was really against the rule when it first came out, but I've turned 180 degrees on that," says Wood. "Allowing two playoff teams is the best thing they've ever done in this state for football. The morale of kids goes down when you're out of the race, but now I've seen as many as six teams still having a shot at the playoffs on the final week of the season. And it's been proven that second place teams aren't the patsies that everyone expected when they started the new rule."

Wood's tireless work at trying to get the UIL's "No Pass, No Play" rule changed has been well documented, but he claims to be out of "politics" for now.

"We weren't quite as successful with No Pass, No Play as I would have liked," said Wood. "It looks like they're going to change the rule to three weeks instead of six weeks when failing a subject, but the best rule they could have is that an athlete plays when passing and sits out when failing. Right now we have kids avoiding the tougher courses in droves to protect themselves from No Pass, No Play.

"Dr. (Lauro) Cavazos, who is president of Texas Tech, recently said that we are not educating the blacks and Mexican Americans in our schools. He said that by the year 2000, the minorities will be the majority. We need to recognize that fact because then our majority won't be productive. No Pass, No Play hurts the minorities more than anyone and that's a situation we can't live with."

Somehow, one gets the feeling that Gordon Wood starts some of his days before noon.

Red Sox' Clemens puts record on hold for Niekros

Associated Press

With his younger brother watching, 48-year-old Phil Niekro pitched a four-hitter. But Boston's Roger Clemens was there, too, and his performance was good enough to keep the brothers Niekro out of the record book.

'He's one of the best pitchers in baseball," the elder Niekro said of Clemens, who gave up six hits Wednesday night as the Red Sox beat the Cleveland Indians 1-0. 'He's overpowering. We were overmatched tonight."

Phil and his 42-year-old brother Joe will have to wait until Saturday before they have a chance to become the winningest brothers in major league history. Together, they have won 529 games, matching Gaylord and Jim Perry.

"A loss is a loss, whether it's by one run or 10 runs," Niekro said. "Joe was here with the permission of the Yankees and I wanted him to be a part of it. Now I'll go to New York to watch him pitch Saturday. Hopefully, he'll fare a little better than I did tonight."

'Our guy pitched a very good ball game, their guy pitched a better one, that's all," Cleveland Manager Pat Corrales said.

Clemens, 4-4, struck out eight and didn't walk a batter. He got out of four jams with third base occupied and earned his second shutout of the year and fifth of his career.

American League

'It's just amazing to see him go out there and pitch," Clemens said of Niekro ... He's a great pitcher. I didn't have much time to rest between innings because he throws a lot of strikes."

The game's lone run came on a single by Jim Rice, a wild pitch, a walk, a fielder's choice grounder and a sacrifice fly by Bill Buckner.

Niekro, making his 700th major league start, also lost his bid to move into a tie with Gaylord Perry for 11th place among all-time winners. Niekro has won 313 games.

Tigers 4, Rangers 3

Jack Morris, Eric King and Mark Thurmond combined on a three-hitter and Kirk Gibson hit a two-run homer for Detroit, which swept a three-game series with Texas.

Morris, 6-2, gave up all three hits, all solo home runs — two by Pete O'Brien and one by Ruben Sierra — to gain his 150th major league victory.

The Tigers have won 12 of their last 14 games, including their last four. The Rangers have lost 10 of their last 13.

Athletics 4, Blue Jays 1

Mark McGwire hit his league-leading 17th homer and Luis Polonia added a solo home run to lead Oakland. Starter Moose Haas, 2-1, got the victory, while Joe Johnson, 2-4, took the loss for Toronto.

Polonia extended his hitting streak to 13 games when he led off the fifth inning ith his second homer to give Oakland a 3-1 lead.

Orioles 8, Angels 6

Cal Ripken Jr.'s two-out single in the sixth inning drove in the tie-breaking run for Baltimore. It was the Orioles' fifth straight win and their 16th in the last 21 games. Califronia has lost five straight.

The Orioles added a run in the seventh when Mike Cook was charged with a balk before delivering his first pitch in relief.

Jack Howell hit two home runs and Brian Downing had a solo shot for California, while Baltimore's Rick Burleson hit his first homer.

Mariners 6, Yankees 5

David Valle drove in two runs and Lee Guetterman earned his first major league victory for Seattle.

Valle drove in a fifth-inning run with a sacrifice fly to tie the score 4-4 and singled in the go-ahead run in the seventh off reliever Ron Guidry, 0-1. Guetterman, 1-0, came on at the start of the sixth and pitched two hitless innings, striking out two and walking none in his first appearance of the season.

White Sox 3, Royals 2

Harold Baines and Jerry Royster hit home runs for Chicago. Baines' homer, which broke an 0-for-10 slide, came off loser Charlie Leibrandt, 6-3, with two outs in the sixth inning. It tied the game 1-1.

Ozzie Guillen led off the Chicago seventh with a triple to center and scored on Fred Manrique's single to give the White Sox a 2-1 lead. After Manrique was picked off at first and Ron Karkovice struck out, Royster homered into the left field bleachers.

Frank White and Steve Balboni homered for Kansas City.

Twins 7, Brewers 2

Gary Gaetti homered in the second inning and two Milwaukee errors highlighted Minnesota's four-run sixth.

Frank Viola, 3-5, allowed five hits, walked two and struck out seven in six innings to win his first game since May 7. George Frazier pitched the last three innings, giving up just one hit, to record his first save and help the Twins to their first two-game winning streak since April 26.

Milwaukee has now lost four straight games and 16 of its last 18.

TOO TALL

That is why Jones rises at 6 each morning and why his workouts begin at 7 a.m. He belongs to the predawn health club whose members include Herschel Walker, defensive end Jim Jeffcoat and former Cowboys running back Todd Fowler.

They often begin their workday with wind sprints. Perhaps they are masochists. But Jones said he has rediscovered a zest for football by adding pain to his life.

"The reason I've worked harder this off-season than any other is because I don't want to go out a loser," he said. "I want people to remember me for the good years. I don't want to be considered one of the missing links on a losing team."

Jones was not the only defensive lineman with problems last season. Struggling with a pulled hamstring and sprained shoulder, Randy White registered only 6½ sacks and missed the Pro Bowl for the first time in 10 years.

White, Jones and John Dutton had only one sack among them in the final five games. If not for the play of Jeffcoat, who had a career-high 14 sacks, the defensive line would have been the No. 1 blame for the Cowboys' first losing season in 22 years.

Cowboys Coach Tom Landry fulfilled his pledge of starting a youth movement by drafting Nebraska tackle Danny Noonan in the first round. If Noonan can win a starting job, he will dramatically change the defensive line's average age.

Dutton is also 36, and White is 34.

The Cowboys now have six first-round draft choices in the defensive line. Landry has informed the team that he plans to use each of them this season.

Landry plans to begin a rotating system for the defensive line by sending in fresh players on passing downs. In recent seasons, the Cowboys regularly replaced only Dutton on passing downs.

Jones could be replaced by Kevin Brooks or Don Smerek on obvious passing downs. Jones likes the idea.

"When Coach Landry started talking about rotating defensive linemen, my eyes just lit up," he said. "I've never been so selfish that I had to spend every minute on the playing field. I believe in rotating players, in getting fresh bodies into the game. You can do a lot of damage by getting fresh bodies in there."

Landry said that every backup lineman will play both positions during training camp. But he is leaning toward Brooks and Smerek as the backup ends.

It would be difficult for Noonan, who played nose tackle in college, to make the switch to end.

So if Jones falters, Brooks would be the logical replacement.

"Ed Jones will have to come back," Landry said. "He has an age factor to deal with now. When you get to be 34, 35 or 36, you might be able to have some good games. But you won't have a lot of good games. That's why we've got to get some other guys ready to play."

Davis has Astros back on track

Associated Press

Relaxation and simplicity apparently are the keys to Glenn Davis' strength.

Feeling at ease, Davis extended his hitting streak to a career-best nine games, driving in five runs on three hits, including a two-run homer and a two-run double Wednesday night as the Houston Astros beat the Pittsburgh Pirate 7-2.

"I feel relaxed and things are falling in for me," Davis said. "It was a special feeling tonight. I was in a natural flow and I was making good contact."

"It has been an exciting week for me," said Davis, who started slowly this season. "I learned some valuable lessons during the slump. One of my biggest problems was thinking too much."

And when things go well for Davis, Houston enjoys the ride.

"When Glenn's hitting the ball it makes it a lot more simpler for the rest of us," teammate Denny Walling said. "All we have to do is get on base for him."

Davis was a major part of Houston's third straight victory, but Nolan Ryan, Aurelio Lopez and Dave Smith contributed by combining on a three-hitter.

Pittsburgh scored both runs off Ryan, getting two hits in the first six innings. Lopez, 2-0, earned the victory by pitching the seventh and Smith allowed one hit over the last two innings for his seventh save.

Trailing 2-1, Davis put the Astros ahead in the seventh with a two-run double and Craig Reynolds added another two-run double to give Houston a 5-2 lead.

Davis' two-run homer came an inning later.

Don Robinson, 4-2, took the loss for the Pirates, who dropped their third straight.

The Pirates led 2-1 in the fifth on pitcher Rick Rueschel's two-run single. Houston had taken a 1-0 lead on a double by Walling, who had four hits, and an RBI single by Davis.

"When you have a person like Davis, he can carry a club because he can hit the long ball," Houston Manager Hal Lanier said. "I knew it was just a matter of time for him."

Cubs 4, Reds 1

Brian Dayett hit a two-run, first-inning single and four Chicago pitchers held Cincinati to five hits.

"The last couple of games, we've been a hit away from breaking it open," Dayett said.

He said his two-out single in the first inning visibly inspired the Cubs.

"You could really see it in the team," he said. "They were happy, instead of coming up empty-handed."

Jamie Moyer, 5-3, allowed four hits and over five-plus innings for the win. Ed Lynch allowed one hit in 1⅔ innings, entering in the sixth and defusing a bases-loaded, none-out threat by allowing just one run.

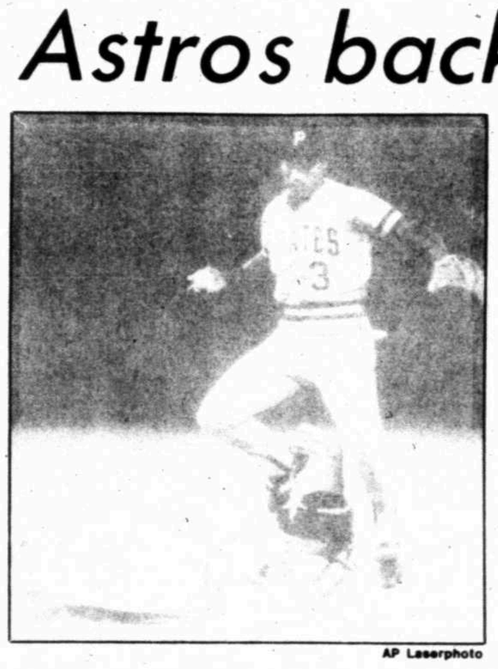

Moyer pitched out of a pair of early threats. He struck out Bell with runners on first and third to end the first inning, and escaped a bases-loaded situration in the third when Bell hit a fly out to the warning track in left field.

Moyer opened the sixth by walking Eric Davis and Dave Parker. Lynch entered the game and walked Bell to load the bases, but Cincinnati scored just one run — when Nick Esasky hit into a fielder's choice.

"We had a couple of opportunities to score," Reds Manager Pete Rose said. "Games usually come down to clutch hitting or clutch pitching, whatever. Tonight they got the clutch pitching."

Lee Smith earned his 13th save, pitching the final two innings in relief of Frank DiPino.

"The bullpen did a great job," Moyer said.

National League

Mets 4, Giants 3

Darryl Strawberry and Gary Carter hit consecutive homers leading off the ninth inning, giving New York a sweep of its three-game series with San Francisco.

Strawberry hit his second homer of the game and 13th of the season off Mark Davis and Carter hit his fourth, first since April 20, off Jeff Robinson, 3-4. Roger McDowell, 2-1, pitched 2⅔ innings and Jesse Orosco got the final out for his 10th save.

Phillies 6, Padres 4

Greg Gross hit his first home run in nine years, a two-run shot, and Juan Samuel had a solo homer and an RBI single, leading Philadelphia over San Diego and giving the Padres their fifth five-game losing streak this year.

Don Carman, 3-3, allowed five hits over 5⅔ innings for the Phillies, who won their third straight. Steve Bedrosian, Philadelphia's fifth pitcher, got the final two outs for his 10th save.

Dodgers 6, Expos 4

Fernando Valenzuela pitched an eight-hitter and helped himself with a two-run single and Franklin Stubbs hit a two-run homer, enabling Los Angeles to beat Montreal for the first time in six games this season.

Valenzuela, 5-2, struck out three and walked two while getting his third complete game and ending Montreal's three-game winning streak.

Edmonton can grab Stanley Cup

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia Flyers have been a great comeback team so far in the Stanley Cup playoffs. But defenseman Mark Howe doesn't think they should press their luck.

"We're fortunate to still be playing," Howe said as the still-alive Flyers looked ahead to Game 6 of the Stanley Cup finals tonight against the Edmonton Oilers.

"We were down by at least two goals the last three games and managed to win two out of the three," Howe said. "If we keep falling behind like that, they're going to nail the coffin shut on us."

It has been this way with the Flyers so far in the playoffs:

They came back from a two-goal deficit to beat the Montreal Canadiens 4-3 in the clinching sixth game of the Wales Conference finals.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1986, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

FRIDAY, MAY 29, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Get your ideas down on paper and protect them with copyrights or trademarks. Grand gestures mean nothing. Go with those who make substantial proposals and have a good track record of financial responsibility. Be sure to give children a fair shake. They need your encouragement. Set a good example. Learn to deal with stress in a positive way before it takes its toll on you. Get more exercise and recreation.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: patriot-orator Patrick Henry, USO hero Bob Hope, President John Fitzgerald Kennedy, Cincinnati Reds outfielder Eric Davis, actor Anthony Geary, producer-director Stacy Keach Sr., auto racing's Al Unser, Lisa Whelchel of "The Facts of Life."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Work conditions are better than in the recent past. End the week on a positive note. Take a co-worker to lunch and explain your thinking. Romance dominates the evening. Dress your best.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Prepare for a day that could be filled with surprise announcements and mysterious happenings. An unexpected visitor could inspire romance. Do not put off seeing a doctor if something has been bothering you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Optimism rules the day and the ensuing weekend. Get out and socialize and you will feel light of heart. Follow the dictates of your conscience. Deal with any money problems right away.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Clear up the paperwork on your desk before taking off for the weekend. A drive in the country will refresh your spirit. Try to get more sleep.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Turn away from those who waste your time and try to spend your money. A friend's boyfriend is a user. Help her see the light before it affects her other relationships. Call home.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your feelings are your best guide today. Trust your instincts. You can gain an edge on the competition by getting an early start. Postpone traveling until tomorrow. Challenge a decision you think unfair.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be more considerate of others at place of employment. Now is not the time to stir up controversy. Communications need to be clear and concise to prevent confusion.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Travel can be risky but not if you take precautions. A well-planned trip brings good luck and romance. Avoid emotional involvements that could try your patience. Your popularity is zooming.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Ask key questions and you will get the information you need to close a business deal. Success comes through a creative venture involving a relative. Do not allow others to run your life.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A close relationship makes you vulnerable in a way that may bother you. Join or start a support group. A large check comes your way if your ideas are good ones. Be original!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New partners are close by and anxious to help. Free yourself from hangers-on. A child needs to talk with you. Do not put this conversation off. Grown offspring also need help.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A success now will lead to career advancement, new responsibilities and more money. Excellent trends favor you in finance and romance. A platonic relationship intensifies. Take your time about making a new commitment.

Opening lead: Nine of ♠

In this column we have frequently suggested to our readers that aces were made to capture kings, not to be wasted on air. A reader from Virginia writes that he followed our advice, and it got him into the doghouse. He submitted this hand.

The auction was routine. With 15 HCP and no four-card major, South's jump to two no trump was automatic, as was North's raise on a balanced minimum.

We do not know what inspired West to find a spade lead—we would have made the more plebian lead of a heart and declarer would have had no problem. Realizing the lead was obviously top-of-nothing, marking East for the ace-queen, declarer countered elegantly by offering East a juicy piece of bait, which East found irresistible. Declarer called for dummy's king. East won and continued with queen and another spade. When West turned up with the ace of diamonds, an overtrick was there for the taking.

"Had I ignored your advice," complains our Virginian, "and allowed dummy to win the first trick, the contract would have been defeated. I think I will quit reading bridge!"

We feel the cure might be worse than the disease. Our bits of advice are generalisms, and are, in principle, sound guides—but not gospel. Had our correspondent put as much thought into his play as he did into his letter, he would have found the winning defense at the table, and would have had no need to enter into correspondence with us.

Since he had no entry to his hand and South was marked with the remaining spade honors, the holdup play at trick one was mandatory. Now if his partner had a trick, the spade suit would serve as the line of communication.

Eastwood says state must give more money for county services

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Clint Eastwood, the mayor of Carmel who straddles a horse in his tough-guy Westerns, has taken to straddling political fences.

Eastwood told a news conference Wednesday that the state must give more money to counties for courts, law enforcement and other services.

The County Supervisors Association of California called the news conference to announce opposition to Gov. George Deukmejian's proposal to rebate $700 million to taxpayers.

Eastwood

Eastwood said he also supported the rebate and that this was "a little bit of a contradiction, maybe." He suggested that one compromise to save money might be consolidation of small school districts and that "I'd like to see some sort of a middle ground."

"Though I support the rebate program of the governor's, that's after we take care of the counties," Eastwood told a rally of about 200 county officials and others on the Capitol steps.

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Singer-songwriter Bruce Hornsby, who has a plug for the governor of his home state on an album cover, says his Virginia upbringing helped him make music.

Hornsby

Gov. Gerald L. Baliles welcomed the Williamsburg native on Wednesday, ushered him into his office and received as a gift a copy of Hornsby's album in circulation in England. Hornsby is pictured with his band, the Range, on the cover, and he is wearing a "Baliles for Governor" cap.

Hornsby, who will embark on a tour of Europe next week, said he got two Baliles hats after his brother, a University of Virginia law school student, worked in Baliles' 1985 campaign. He said his songs are "about our experiences from growing up, and this is where we grew up. So we write about it."

Hornsby's debut album "The Way It Is" won him a Grammy this year.

"We're very proud of him," Baliles said. "Unlike so many other lyrics, his have a message."

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — Linda Evans, star of television's "Dynasty," has bought a palatial 11,000-square-foot mansion in suburban Lakewood.

Evans

The price of the early 20th-century Carman Villa, built for the pioneering Joseph Carman family, has not been made public, but in 1984 it was listed for $1.2 million, according to the Pierce County Assessor's Office.

The house was sold by owners Jack and Dena Streff. The sale was expected to be final June 5, officials said Tuesday.

Ms. Evans' publicist, David Dyer, said in Los Angeles he could not reach her for comment and that he was not familiar with the purchase.

• • •

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music singer George Jones is giving away 100 tickets to farmers for a concert in North Carolina.

Concert promoter Mike Patton said Wednesday that Jones is donating the tickets to his concert June 5 in Ronda. The tickets normally cost $13 in advance and $15 at the door.

Jones made a similar donation in March in Texarkana, Texas, to show his concern for financially pressed farmers.

TORONTO (AP) — Alice Munro won the Governor General's Award for English-language fiction for her short story collection titled "The Progress of Love."

The award ceremony Wednesday marked the third time Munro, 55, of Clinton, Ontario, has won the prize. She received it in 1968 for "Dance of the Happy Shades" and in 1978 for "Who Do You Think You Are?"

Like many of her other works, Munro's latest collection focuses on the drama of day-to-day life.

• • •

Lennox

Ms. Lennox and her partner Dave Stewart are in Israel for a week and are scheduled to give concerts in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem.

The two were answering questions Wednesday when Stewart started strumming his guitar and Ms. Lennox grabbed a microphone, jumped on the table and belted out the song "Missionary Man."

"This is what we do at press conferences to relieve the boredom," said Ms. Lennox.

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Academy Award-winning actress Jessica Lange and Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright Sam Shepard are expecting their second child this month, her spokeswoman says.

Lange

Miss Lange's publicist, Lisa Kasteler, refused to provide details of the pregnancy or the actress' whereabouts, saying only: "She's due this month."

The longtime unmarried couple moved from Santa Fe, N.M., to rural Virginia last year. Their first child, Hannah Jane, was born in January 1986. The actress has another daughter, 5-year-old Alexandra, by ballet superstar Mikhail Baryshnikov.

Miss Lange, who won a supporting actress Oscar for her role in "Tootsie," co-starred with Shepard in "Frances," "Country" and the recent "Crimes of the Heart." Shepard won a Pulitzer for the play "Buried Child" and was nominated for an Oscar for his role as Chuck Yeager in "The Right Stuff."

BERLIN (AP) — Britain's Queen Elizabeth II got a 21-gun salute at an annual British military parade staged in belated honor of her birthday and seen as a symbol of Britain's commitment to the Allied defense of West Berlin.

The queen, who celebrated her 61st birthday on April 21, stood on a platform as 1,000 British troops, tanks and other military vehicles filed past on Wednesday.

At the end of the parade, the troops saluted the queen with a 21-gun salvo and she reviewed the troops, riding in a carriage drawn by four white horses.

Dollar mixed

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against all major currencies in quiet European trading today, but in Tokyo it rose against the Japanese yen for the sixth consecutive day. Gold prices were up.

All European money centers except London, Milan and Madrid were closed for the Acension Day holiday today, so volume was low.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar closed at 143.50 yen, its highest since it hit 145.40 on April 9. Later, in London, it was slightly lower at 143.30 yen.

—1.8140 West German marks, down from 1.8225

—1.5030 Swiss francs, down from 1.5085

—6.0475 French francs, down from 6.0725

Stark attack invites scrutiny of oil policy

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The surprise attack on the frigate U.S.S. Stark, in the Persian Gulf to protect the oil flow to U.S. allies, is certain to focus American attention on the plight of the declining domestic oil industry, according to oil experts and politicians interviewed here Tuesday.

It also invites fresh scrutiny and criticism of the Reagan administration's energy and foreign policies.

Oil producers and policy analysts have been warning for several years that oil and national security are inextricably intertwined.

In a letter to President Reagan, Raymond H. Hefner Jr., an Oklahoma City producer and chairman of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, said, in effect, "We told you so." Hefner and other oil producers had been attempting to get the president's attention and win his support for what they see as rescue measures for the U.S. oil industry for several years.

"The tragic 'mistake' of May 17 in the Persian Gulf, ... is, I'm sure, another worrisome burden on you," Hefner worte. "But that burden might have been much greater had the warplane been sent by a hostile nation. One has to wonder if the next time it won't be, praying, of course, that there is no next time. You could then face a crisis and a decision ... whether to retaliate and risk all-out war."

Hefner told the president that U.S. presence in the Middle East "could be be reduced greatly by lessening our overdependence on those oil supplies."

By its unilateral defense of oil supply lines in the gulf, the United States is "subsidizing both OPEC and our major trade competitors at the expense of American energy independence," says one Dallas independent oilman.

"The true cost of Persian Gulf Oil is more than $140 per barrel when the expenditure required to maintain a military presence in the Mideast is included," says L. Frank Pitts, owner of Pitts Oil Co. "That compares with $19 a barrel for oil produced in the United States.

"We are subsidizing Middle Eastern oil-producing countries–the very people who are setting artificially low prices in order to drive American oil companies out of business," he said.

Michael Pate, a lawyer who specializes in energy matters in both the Texas Legislature and in Congress, said the American people until now have preferred not to think about the relationship between oil and the potential for war.

"When they see missiles hitting the Stark, and the loss of 37 Navy men, people will awaken," Pate said. He cautioned that it may take seven years to develop a producing well, and said the number of U.S. wells has declined from 4,500 in 1981 to less than 800 now.

Awareness probably will not translate into immediate aid to boost the shrinking domestic oil industry, according to Joe Story, an independent consultant who has worked in Middle East oil fields.

"Congress is confused about the relationship between oil and national security. I don't think the departments of state, defense and energy talk much to one another," Story added.

The Energy Department recently released a study detailing a serious threat to national security posed by declining oil supplies, but the president so far won't budge from his opposition to an oil import fee — the most drastic of the recommendations offered by producers and oil policy analysts to ensure a healthy domestic industry.

Without the president's active support, chances are slim that Congress will approve broadening the "percentage depletion allowance," that would save producers an estimated $460 million a year in taxes and increase domestic production by the equivalent of 370,000 barrels of oil a day. The fate of the Stark may persuade the president to re-examine his position, according to one energy spokesman.

Henry Schuler, a widely-quoted researcher who studies the international oil business at the Georgetown Institute for Strategic Studies, reacting to Defense Secretary Weinberger's assertion that American ships will continue to deter attacks on Persian Gulf shipping, said the administration may find it impossible to shore up moderate Arab states in the gulf.

"It is a misplaced set of priorities that permits this government to think it can provide energy security by sending American forces and material to protect a region of the world that is probably beyond protection," Schuler said, "when at the same time it is unable to take the difficult, but far less painful, steps of developing energy resources in this country."

Gas prices heading for triple digits again

WASHINGTON (AP) — The average price of a gallon of gasoline should rise to a dollar a gallon this summer, the Energy Department predicts, and reach $1.04 by the spring of 1988.

That's an increase after inflation of 11 percent over last summer, the department says. The average, counting taxes and lumping together all grades and kinds of service stations, was 87 cents in the summer of 1986.

The quarterly forecast from the department's Energy Information Administration was released Wednesday. It says the higher prices will slow the growth of summer driving and reduce the use of gasoline this summer.

Driving increased by 5 percent from summer 1985 to summer 1986, when prices were falling and overseas travel dropped because of terrorist attacks abroad, but this year's summer increase over 1986 should be 2.1 percent. Gallons used in the summer should decline 1.2 percent to 7.18 million barrels per day, about 51.6 million gallons per day, the forecasters said.

Normally, more miles driven should mean more gasoline sold. But "increases in vehicle efficiency projected for 1987 and 1988 more than compensate for the impact of increased driving activity on motor gasoline consumption," the report said in predicting lower demand for fuel.

Fed: Banking prospects brighter

DALLAS (AP) — The move toward interstate and intrastate branch banking — and the eventual turnaround in the oil and agriculture industries — should return Texas banks to the prosperity they once enjoyed, a Federal Reserve Bank executive says.

"Interstate banking will lead to an infusion of capital into Texas that would not otherwise occur," said Harvey Rosenblum, vice president and director of research at the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas.

"Statewide branch banking will probably come to Texas, and it probably won't be long. It will bring costs down."

Rosenblum spoke Wednesday at the fourth annual economic conference for editors and reporters sponsored by Texas A&M University's Center for Education and Research in Free Enterprise.

County-wide branches, by allowing consolidation of resources and personnel, he said, "does away with a lot of overhead," he said.

As a result, many existing banks will no longer be needed, he said.

"My own staff is predicting that the change from unit banking to branch banking will reduce the number of banks in Texas by 60 percent over the next 10 years. Considering that there now are about 2,000 banks in Texas, you're talking about the elimination of 1,200 banks," Rosenblum said.

The economic think tank's conference covered a variety of issues facing both Texas and the nation, including tax revenue, tax reform, cause and effect of trade deficits, and the future of the oil and gas industry.

The program concluded with Louis Rukeyser, host of the public television show "Wall Street Week," receiving the "Free Enterprise Man of the Year Award" bestowed by the Texas A&M center.

Although Rosenblum gave an upbeat outlook for banks and savings and loans in Texas, he cautioned editors not to be impatient.

"Things probably will get better, but I think it's going to get worse first," Rosenblum said.

He said almost 30 banks, or savings and loans, have been shut down so far this year in Texas "and we'll probably see one or two more (today)."

Rosenblum said estimates are that about 60 banks will be closed during 1987 in Texas, southern New Mexico and northern Louisiana — the areas under the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas — compared with 32 closings in 1986. Nationwide, the projection is for 200 closings, compared with 144 in 1986.

"In the period from the 1950s through the 1970s, we basically had eight to 12 bank closings a year in the United States, so we have some cause for alarm," Rosenblum said.

In 1979, the Federal Reserve Banks in Dallas and Kansas City had the most profitable banks in the nation, he said. By last year, that had turned completely around, he said, and the Southwest and Midwest were on the bottom.

"In states like Texas, where there has been no statewide or interstate branch banking, the banks have been very closely tied to the local economy," he said. "There has been very little potential for diversity. But that will change with the move toward branch banking."

Although a downturn in the oil and agricultural industries brought the Texas banking industry to its knees, there have been increasing problems for financial institutions this decade, even during times of economic expansion, he added.

Twenty percent of the nation's 12,500 banks had losses in 1986, and in the fourth quarter of last year, well over 30 percent lost money, Rosenblum said.

Chase follows Citicorp debt reserve lead

By BILL MENEZES
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Chase Manhattan Corp. says its decision to accept a quarterly loss of $1.4 billion by building up its reserves reflects a prudent and flexible policy of weathering bad loans to developing nations.

The nation's third-largest bank-holding company said Wednesday its decision to strengthen its reserves by $1.6 billion also would mean an $850 million loss for 1987.

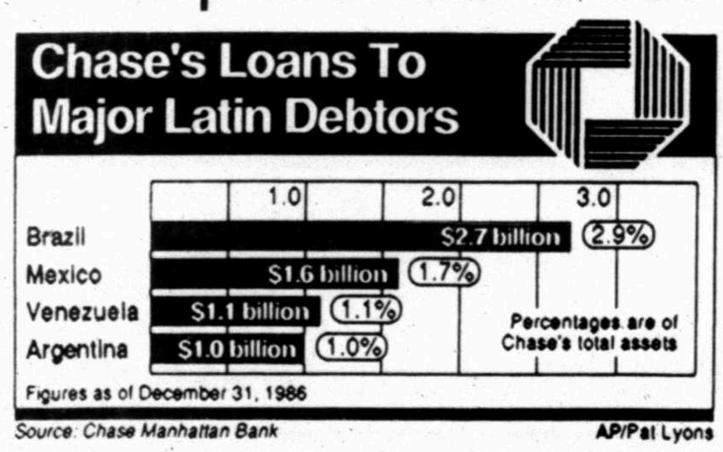

The announcement made Chase the third major U.S. banking concern in a week to take such steps against possible bad Third World loans.

Chairman Willard C. Butcher said in a statement the move was appropriate in light of recent tremors in the Third World debt situation, including Brazil's suspension of interest payments on $6.7 billion worth of medium- and long-term debt to foreign banks.

"We think that what we're doing is prudent on the one hand, and helps our flexibility on the other," Chase President Thomas G. Labrecque said in a telephone interview.

Labrecque declined to speculate on whether Chase's move would intensify or ease tensions between banks and Third World nations in debt rescheduling negotiations. He said Chase believes a solution to the staggering problem of Third World debt is possible, "but not through any form of debt forgiveness."

He also said Chase had been contemplating the action for a considerable period of time, but expedited it after Citicorp, the largest U.S. bank-holding company, took a similar step last week.

Citicorp said it would add $3 billion to its reserve to cover potentially bad foreign loans. That action will mean a second-quarter loss of $2.5 billion, the biggest ever for a U.S. bank, and an annual loss of $1 billion. Chase's second quarter loss of about $1.4 billion would be the second worst for a bank.

On Tuesday, Norwest Corp. of Minneapolis said it was adding $250 million to its loan-loss reserve for losses on its $650 million portfolio of foreign loans.

Chase made its announcement after the stock market closed. The company's stock on Wednesday dropped 50 cents a share to $37.25 on the New York Stock Exchange.

With more than $6.7 billion in loans outstanding to developing nations, Chase is one of the largest lenders to the Third World. The addition to its reserve for bad loans would boost the total to more than $2.7 billion, or 4.1 percent of total loans outstanding.

Increasing bad-loan reserves would allow Chase and other banks to take any future losses from bad loans against the reserves rather than earnings.

The move by large U.S. banks to take precautions against possible bad Third World loans was bound to intensify a debate on whether such action would help or hurt debt negotiations with the Third World.

Some analysts have suggested that boosting the reserves could indicate the banks are willing to take losses in writing off some of their loans rather than grant further concessions on debt repayment.

"It gives the banks more leverage in dealing with the Third World," said Claire M. Percarpio, an analyst with the credit rating firm of Duff & Phelps in Chicago.

Money, job openings top chamber agenda

By DEANNA J. NEAL

Budgets and resignations were the main items of discussion at the monthly meeting of the Midland Chamber of Commerce board of directors Wednesday.

Treasurer Curtis Neeley told the board that a failure by the chamber to meet membership goals was cause for concern. Current chamber membership stands at 1,434. Mark Kimball, vice president of membership, said a mid-August membership drive is being planned under the direction of Joanne Langston. "A successful drive will allow the chamber to get back on track with its budget projections," noted Neeley.

Charles Spence, chairman of the search committee seeking a replacement for the recently vacated executive vice president post, reported that a candidate is coming to Midland next week to look at the job and be interviewed. "We feel confident we can fill the post within 60 days and get the best person for the job," Spence said.

President Wayne Merritt said he had received copies of reports compiled by the Economic Development Task Force that will provide the basis for initiation of an economic development program. "I was extremely impressed with the quality of information contained in the reports."

Steve Davidson, vice president of community development, announced that Tracy Elms, a two-year member of the government affairs committee, will chair that committee after the recent resignation of Greg Holmes who has accepted a position in California.

Sherre Parker, director of Clean Midland, also announced her resignation due to a planned move to El Paso. That post will be assumed by Sharla Hotchkiss.

Hank Henry of Texas Instruments conducted an analysis of chamber publications and offered his suggestions for improvement of several brochures and publications. Henry says his analysis broke down the chamber membership by category and indicates the largest category of members are small business and wholesalers. "The publications need to be redesigned to reflect these industries, rather than concentrating so heavily on the oil and gas industry. I recommend more focus be placed on retail to communicate to a wider scope of the chamber's membership." Henry added that he felt the publications did promote economic development in Midland.

Faithful watchers of this weekly spot may recall some lighthearted marketing suggestions I have made from time to time — including such things as posed photos with a Rafael Septien cardboard cutout at a candy store or Jim Bakker at the Motel 6.

It might therefore seem reasonable to assume that no scam is sacred to a true aspiring capitalist, such as myself. But even I find myself disturbed by some of the items being readied for hucksterizing in conjunction with the visit of Pope John Paul II to the United States this fall.

The marketing of "Pope-sicles" and "popie bears" — teddy bears wearing papal miters — as has been reported by the Associated Press, is beyond the realm of even questionable taste.

In the age of six-foot bronze giraffes and air-conditioned dog houses being auctioned off for the benefit of a television ministry, it takes some doing to stand out in the area of poor taste.

A John Paul II lawn sprinkler with water spouting from the pontiff's hands being marketed as "garden art" by a pair of self-styled Detroit-area sculptors certainly comes close to the tasteless mark in my book.

It's easy to understand that souvenir venders are anxious to capitalize on the visit of the world's most visible religious leader. "The whole event is like a Super Bowl eight times over," one South Florida businessman gearing up for the papal visit told AP. "Entrepreneurs have the opportunity to make a year's income in the period of a month."

Nevertheless, it's too bad they can't try to do it with a little better taste. And the church is powerless to enforce any type of restraint. "About the only thing we haven't had proposed is a pope statue with a clock in its belly," said a spokesman for the U.S. Catholic Conference. "And I figure someone will have those to sell before this is over."

Let's hope not!

Similarly beneath contempt are unscrupulous entrepreneurs seeking to capitalize on the growing "AIDS paranoia" that is taking a more stifling grip on the nation daily. With alarming frequency, nationally distributed classified ad sections are filling up with suspicious sounding packages of vito-fortified, immunostimulating enhancements being hawked as "preventatives" for Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.

Carefully skirting Federal Drug Administration guidelines for advertising "cures and remedies," modern-day snake oil salesmen are preying on the public's deepest fears and the scarcity of concrete knowledge about the disease to make a buck. Despicable hardly seems harsh enough to describe such activity.

While we are on the subject of the crassness of commercialism, there is now a non-issue afoot in the form of suitability of using Beatles' music to tout goods. Sixties' music purists are outraged by the fact that the White Album anthem — Revolution — is being used by Nike to promote its line of "Air" shoes.

Come on gang! The Beatles' weren't mini-deities. They were four guys from Liverpool who made great rock 'n roll music.

They weren't writing and performing the Bible or Shakespeare; it was mass appeal pop (as in short for popular) music.

To my way of thinking, if Michael Jackson (now the owner of the publishing rights to the Beatles catalog) wants to allow the use of yesterday's pop music — yes, even Beatles music — to boost today's products, that's his business.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

'Dealing with dunderheads' requires patience, diligence

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I hold a number of corporate and municipal bonds. All are in registered form and I receive semiannual interest checks. We moved more than a year ago and I informed each paying agent bank of our new address promptly. Most made the change, but five banks continue to send the checks to our old address. I wrote those five a second time. No change.

Recently, I wrote the chief executive officer of each of those companies, enclosing photocopies of the check and the envelope showing the post office notice to "Notify sender of new address." No replies.

The situation is becoming critical, since the post office will discontinue the forwarding service soon — some say a year, some 18 months. When that happens, I assume the checks will be returned to the banks. What then?

With a local bank, I was able to go in person and get things straightened out. But the offending banks are in cities in different parts of the country. Any suggestions?

Doyle

A. You're dealing with dunderheads at those five banks and, perhaps, at the companies whose bonds you own.

Your letters to the CEOs might have squared things away. Each company president or chairman to whom you wrote should have seen to it that the bank acting as interest paying agent corrects your address. The CEO also should have read the riot act to the bank.

As a bond owner, you're a creditor of the company and entitled to the service for which the paying agent bank collects fat fees.

My suggestion is to place a phone call to each of those companies. Try calling the CEO collect. If you can't reach that very top brass, ask for the company treasurer. Explain your problem. The treasurer's office is responsible for all corporate disbursements and should get the bank cracking.

A steady stream of letters complaining about inept and/or slow delivery of checks from interest and dividend paying agent banks come to this corner. Suspicious folks are convinced banks do this on purpose. After all, a bank has the use of the money involved until a check is cashed.

You have good reason to be upset. The U.S. Postal Service now does stop forwarding first class mail after one year. In "hardship" cases, however, extensions sometimes are granted. See your postmaster about that.

If those checks continue to be addressed wrong, explain what's happening in a letter to Consumer Advocate, Room 5910, U.S. Postal Service Headquarters, 475 L'Enfante Plaza, Washington, D.C. 20260-6720.

That office has been known to light fires under recalcitrant mailers. It's a cinch those banks, which do huge mailings of interest and dividend checks, want to stay on reasonably good terms with the Postal Service.

Q. In reading corporate bond price tables, I am unable to tell the face amount of a given bond. I know the price quotations are expressed in percentage terms. But the ability to decipher whether a particular bond is a $1,000 bond or some multiple thereof eludes me. Can you help me?

A. You need little or no help. Most corporate bonds are issued in $1,000 minimum denominations. On Wall Street, "a bond" means a $1,000 face value bond; "10 bonds" means $10,000 face value, etc. The price quotations in newspapers are in percentages of face values.

If you see a bond quoted at "95," that means it traded at 95 percent of its face value. That's $950 per $1,000 face value, $9,500 per $10,000 face value and on up.

It makes no difference what denomination of bond you're looking at. In this example, it's worth 95 percent of its face value.

Tenneco embarks on $30 million exploration program

HOUSTON (SWN) — Tenneco Oil Exploration and Production announced the signing of an exploration agreement with CEPE, the Ecuadorian state oil company, to embark on a $30 million exploration program in the country's Eastern Lowlands.

A group of companies including Tenneco, CSX Oil & Gas Corporation, Yukong Limited, Maersk Olie og Gas A/S and Diamond Shamrock South America Petroleum BV acquired Block 12 in the Oriente last fall in a special bidding round. The block is 200 kilometers southeast of Quito in the jungle east of the Andes Mountains. Drilling will commence in late 1988.

The exploratory effort will focus on one of the least explored areas of a major oil trend that extends into neighboring Peru and Colombia.

Shuttle booster test 'major milestone'

By MICHAEL WHITE

BRIGHAM CITY, Utah (AP) — The first full-scale test-firing of a space shuttle booster rocket since the Challenger disaster was pronounced a success by NASA, and one official said, "You ain't seen nothing yet."

The spectacular two-minute, $13 million test Wednesday with the 126-foot rocket bolted horizontally to a concrete platform revealed no evidence of the leakage that led to the space shuttle explosion, officials said.

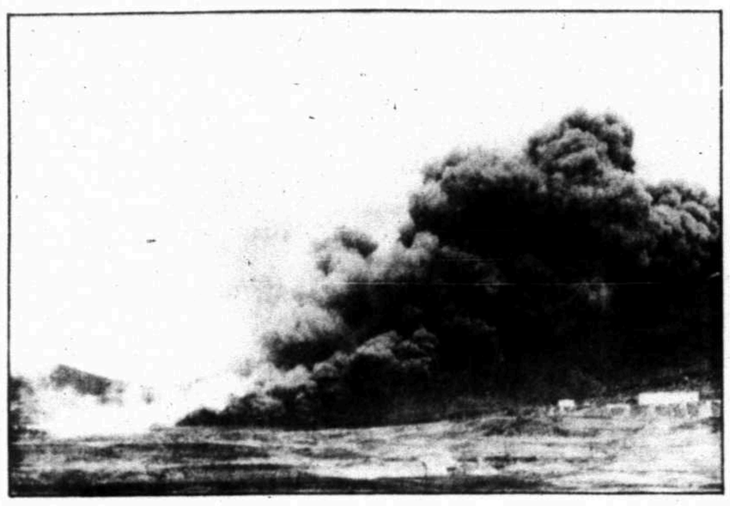

"We're ready to press on and you ain't seen nothing yet. This test is going to kindle some enthusiasm in our folks," John Thomas, manager of NASA's solid rocket design team, said of the firing at a Morton Thiokol Inc. test site 25 miles west of here.

A 600-foot plume of bright orange flame shot from the rocket, scorching a hillside and sending dust and smoke billowing thousands of feet into the air as 1.1 million pounds of fuel burned at a rate of 9,000 pounds per second.

Wednesday's test was postponed from March because of manufacturing flaws.

Thomas said the next shuttle flight could be moved up two or three days because of the test, which was watched by the five-member crew scheduled to fly the shuttle Discovery in June 1988.

"It's step number one to getting us back to manned space flight," said Rick Hauck, commander of the Discovery mission. Two previous launch dates, in July 1987 and February 1988, have been abandoned because of delays in modifying the shuttle.

Morton Thiokol test fired its space shuttle booster rocket Wednesday, the first full-scale test of the rocket motor since the Challenger explosion.

Allan McDonald, one of two Thiokol engineers who had warned against the launch that killed Challenger's seven-member crew, called the test a "major milestone" and said it would give company employees a morale boost.

"We have taken a bashing from the press and everyone else who have given the impression we couldn't get anything right. This proves them wrong. We can do something right," said McDonald, Thiokol director of solid launch design.

The purpose of the firing was to test new booster components designed to withstand cold and strengthen joint seals that help hold together the four-section rocket. Six such tests are planned before flights resume.

The presidential commission that investigated the Jan. 28, 1986, Challenger explosion said cold weather caused rubber O-rings that seal the rocket joints to lose their resiliency, allowing superhot gases to leak and ignite the shuttle's external fuel tank.

The test rocket included heaters to keep the O-rings between 75 degrees and 120 degrees Fahrenheit, and two joints were strengthened by wrap-around bands of a graphite composite.

The third joint was given a back-up O-ring of silicone, which maintains resiliency in cold weather.

McDonald said a preliminary inspection of the booster indicated that no gas escaped through the joints and that the graphite bands reduced bulging of the rocket casing, which may have unsealed Challenger's O-rings.

He said it would take several weeks to fully assess the test.

Thiokol and NASA also collected general performance data to be used in preparing for the full-scale test in August of a booster with redesigned joints.

That booster will include an inner lip that will further brace the joint, improved insulation to protect the O-rings from hot gases and a nozzle assembly with additional bolts to reduce movement during launch.

Thomas said Wednesday's test demonstrated that Thiokol has "gotten their act together again."

NATION IN BRIEF

Program for post-attack nuclear reactors scrapped

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force has canceled its program to develop small nuclear power reactors for use in the aftermath of a nuclear war.

The Air Force on Wednesday cited budget limitations and congressional restrictions for ending the Multi-Megawatt Terrestrial Powerplant Program.

The idea, studied since 1982, was to develop small reactors that could be placed underground at key military bases around the country to ensure a source of electrical power in the event of a nuclear war.

Marine's hearing recessed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The defense for accused Marine Cpl. Arnold-Bracy has asked for public help in finding a "very important witness" who used to live and work in Moscow while Bracy was a U.S. Embassy guard there.

Lt. Col. Mike Powell, Bracy's military counsel, said he was trying to locate a British citizen named Steve Wright who apparently had worked for a time last summer as a freelance soundman for ABC News in Moscow.

Powell declined to explain why the defense team was searching for Wright, although Pentagon sources indicated it might have to do with a sexual encounter Bracy is said to have had with a woman in a diplomat's home in Moscow.

Drug trafficking allowed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Corrupt Bahamanian officials are taking payoffs and permitting large amounts of drugs to be shipped into the United States from the island nation, two former Bahamanian drug dealers have told Congress.

The testimony was presented Wednesday to the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on terrorism and narcotics.

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., chairman of the panel, said the DEA estimates that 40 percent of the cocaine and "much of the marijuana" sent into the United States travels through the Bahamas.

Kerry has co-sponsored a resolution which would rescind the Reagan administration statement to Congress that the Bahamas is helping the U.S. anti-drug effort. That statement is necesary for the nation to continue to receive U.S. foreign aid.

Environmentalists to sue

WASHINGTON (AP) — An environmental group has given the Interior Department 60 days' notice it plans to sue the department over its alleged failure to make timely decisions on endangered species.

Michael J. Bean, a lawyer for the Environmental Defense Fund, said Wednesday in a letter to Secretary Donald P. Hodel the department's Fish and Wildlife Service had neither acted within a year as required nor, in most cases, granted itself an extension of time in 17 pending cases.

The year starts running from the time the service proposes a species for the endangered species list and asks for public comment. It is under no obligation to go ahead, and may decide not to add to the list.

Gun groups 'up in arms'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gun lobbyists have begun their arguments against proposed legislation to ban weapons that cannot be detected by magnetic screening devices.

The House crime subcommittee has been considering several bills that would block the availability of weapons, such as plastic or ceramic guns, that cannot be detected by devices such as airport screening equipment.

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

EDITOR'S NOTE — This day-by-day account of 1787, the year that the U.S. Constitution was written, blends the significant with the small, personal details that bring history to life. The authors spent three years in research and writing, drawing on letters and personal diaries as well as the better-known historical documents. The writers are David D.C. Dutcher, David A. Kimball, Robert K. Sutton and Anna Coxe Toogood, all of the Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia, where the Constitution was created 200 years ago.

Monday, May 28, 1787

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Samuel Vaughan answered Comptroller General John Nicholson's directions on maintaining the State House yard. Vaughan suggested that the two fenced clumps of shrubs and trees should be carefully hoed. The four open clumps needed less maintenance; for the first two or three be hoed or weeded when foul to strengthen the trees and plants. After that, only trimming, replacing dead plants and thinning would be necessary.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Once again, Congress had no quorum.

North Carolina's William Blount wrote from New York to Gov. Caswell acknowledging news of his appointment as a delegate to the Convention. While he would go on to Philadelphia in a few days, "I have not the vanity to suppose my presence and assistance will be of much avail in as arduous a business as amending the Confederation."

CONVENTION TODAY

Nathaniel Gotham and Caleb Strong, Massachusetts; Oliver Ellsworth, Connecticut; Gunning Bedford, Delaware; James McHenry, Maryland, and Benjamin Franklin, George Clymer, Thomas Mifflin and Jared Ingersoll, Pennsylvania, appeared and took their seats.

George Wythe (Va.) reported from the Rules Committee appointed last Friday. Most of the report was aproved and became the Convention's rules of procedure. Rufus King (Mass.), Pierce Butler (S.C.) and Richard Dobbs Spaight (N.C.) all made motions aimed at keeping debates secret until the Convention finished its work. These were referred to the Rules Committee and the Convention adjourned for the day.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson set out from Stratford in a stagecoach, and got as far as Wentworth's, on the road to New York.

George Washington dined "at home" (use of this phrase says a lot about Robert and Mary Morris as hosts) and drank tea with many others at Tench Francis'.

Franklin received a visit from lexicographer Noah Webster "and ladies."

Connecticut's Roger Sherman, still in New Haven, bought blankets, linen, callico and thread worth 17 pounds, 12 shillings and 2 pence from Pearsall and Glover.

LOOKING BACK

Marital Strains

Public service, which often meant long absences from home, seems to have strained an occasional 18th-century marriage. An instance is shown in three letters from William Samuel Johnson's daughter, Elizabeth Johnson Verplank, to her brother, Samuel, written in 1787. Her mother, 58, had borne seven children, of whom three had died since 1782. A grandson, the first, had also died in infancy.

May 29..."I was grieved that we couldn't enjoy the society of Papa, but he was obliged to join the Convention and left us the day after my arrival. I wish I could look forward to the day when he would be free from being a slave to the public. It is I think now time for him to live for his family, it is for our dear Mamma who had experienced so many misfortunes to be ever combatting against the gloominess of her mind. In Papa's company she can support her spirits."

July 25..."I am every day more persuaded that the separation of our worthy parents must continue no longer. Mamma cannot support it. The frequent (illegible word) she had met with to occassion her making use of all her fortitude has been too great an exertion for her not to give way easily to melancholy reflections which destroy her happiness and health."

Aug. 7..."There now appears a prospect of Pappa's settling in New York as the (Columbia) College are determined to abide by their appointment (of Johnson as president) and Mamma says that she can then know where to find Pappa when circumscribed by the walls of the college. You appear much inclined to his accepting the Presidency...and I think it would be better adopted to Pappa's disposition then Domestic fatigue which must necessarily fall upon Mamma, yet she thinks most probable to promote Pappa's happiness."

Shuttle booster test 'major milestone'

By MICHAEL WHITE

BRIGHAM CITY, Utah (AP) — The first full-scale test-firing of a space shuttle booster rocket since the Challenger disaster was pronounced a success by NASA, and one official said, "You ain't seen nothing yet."

The spectacular two-minute, $13 million test Wednesday with the 126-foot rocket bolted horizontally to a concrete platform revealed no evidence of the leakage that led to the space shuttle explosion, officials said.

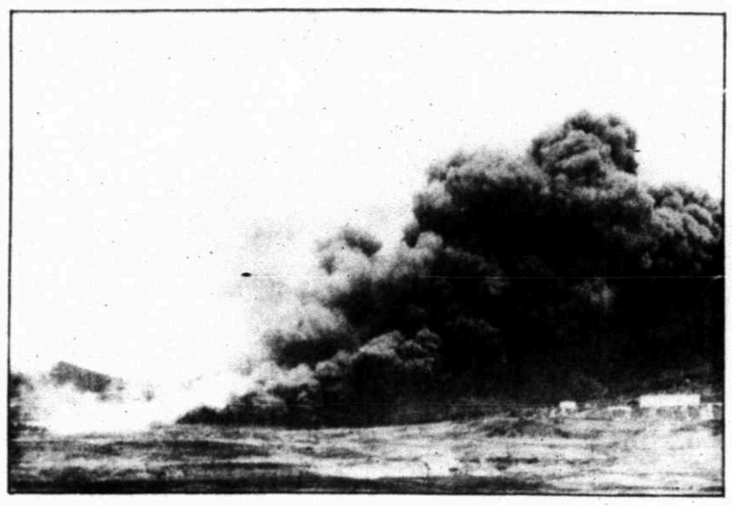

"We're ready to press on and you ain't seen nothing yet. This test is going to kindle some enthusiasm in our folks," John Thomas, manager of NASA's solid rocket design team, said of the firing at a Morton Thiokol Inc. test site 25 miles west of here.

A 600-foot plume of bright orange flame shot from the rocket, scorching a hillside and sending dust and smoke billowing thousands of feet into the air as 1.1 million pounds of fuel burned at a rate of 9,000 pounds per second.

Wednesday's test was postponed from March because of manufacturing flaws.

Thomas said the next shuttle flight could be moved up two or three days because of the test, which was watched by the five-member crew scheduled to fly the shuttle Discovery in June 1988.

"It's step number one to getting us back to manned space flight," said Rick Hauck, commander of the Discovery mission. Two previous launch dates, in July 1987 and February 1988, have been abandoned because of delays in modifying the shuttle.

Morton Thiokol test fired its space shuttle booster rocket Wednesday, the first full-scale test of the rocket motor since the Challenger explosion.

Allan McDonald, one of two Thiokol engineers who had warned against the launch that killed Challenger's seven-member crew, called the test a "major milestone" and said it would give company employees a morale boost.

"We have taken a bashing from the press and everyone else who have given the impression we couldn't get anything right. This proves them wrong. We can do something right," said McDonald, Thiokol director of solid launch design.

The purpose of the firing was to test new booster components designed to withstand cold and strengthen joint seals that help hold together the four-section rocket. Six such tests are planned before flights resume.

The presidential commission that investigated the Jan. 28, 1986, Challenger explosion said cold weather caused rubber O-rings that seal the rocket joints to lose their resiliency, allowing superhot gases to leak and ignite the shuttle's external fuel tank.

The test rocket included heaters to keep the O-rings between 75 degrees and 120 degrees Fahrenheit, and two joints were strengthened by wrap-around bands of a graphite composite.

The third joint was given a back-up O-ring of silicone, which maintains resiliency in cold weather.

McDonald said a preliminary inspection of the booster indicated that no gas escaped through the joints and that the graphite bands reduced bulging of the rocket casing, which may have unsealed Challenger's O-rings.

He said it would take several weeks to fully assess the test.

Thiokol and NASA also collected general performance data to be used in preparing for the full-scale test in August of a booster with redesigned joints.

That booster will include an inner lip that will further brace the joint, improved insulation to protect the O-rings from hot gases and a nozzle assembly with additional bolts to reduce movement during launch.

Thomas said Wednesday's test demonstrated that Thiokol has "gotten their act together again."

NATION IN BRIEF

Program for post-attack nuclear reactors scrapped

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force has canceled its program to develop small nuclear power reactors for use in the aftermath of a nuclear war.

The Air Force on Wednesday cited budget limitations and congressional restrictions for ending the Multi-Megawatt Terrestrial Powerplant Program.

The idea, studied since 1982, was to develop small reactors that could be placed underground at key military bases around the country to ensure a source of electrical power in the event of a nuclear war.

Marine's hearing recessed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The defense for accused Marine Cpl. Arnold Bracy has asked for public help in finding a "very important witness" who used to live and work in Moscow while Bracy was a U.S. Embassy guard there.

Lt. Col. Mike Powell, Bracy's military counsel, said he was trying to locate a British citizen named Steve Wright who apparently had worked for a time last summer as a freelance soundman for ABC News in Moscow.

Powell declined to explain why the defense team was searching for Wright, although Pentagon sources indicated it might have to do with a sexual encounter Bracy is said to have had with a woman in a diplomat's home in Moscow.

Drug trafficking allowed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Corrupt Bahamanian officials are taking payoffs and permitting large amounts of drugs to be shipped into the United States from the island nation, two former Bahamanian drug dealers have told Congress.

The testimony was presented Wednesday to the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on terrorism and narcotics.

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., chairman of the panel, said the DEA estimates that 40 percent of the cocaine and "much of the marijuana" sent into the United States travels through the Bahamas.

Kerry has co-sponsored a resolution which would rescind the Reagan administration statement to Congress that the Bahamas is helping the U.S. anti-drug effort. That statement is necesary for the nation to continue to receive U.S. foreign aid.

Environmentalists to sue

WASHINGTON (AP) — An environmental group has given the Interior Department 60 days' notice it plans to sue the department over its alleged failure to make timely decisions on endangered species.

Michael J. Bean, a lawyer for the Environmental Defense Fund, said Wednesday in a letter to Secretary Donald P. Hodel the department's Fish and Wildlife Service had neither acted within a year as required nor, in most cases, granted itself an extension of time in 17 pending cases.

The year starts running from the time the service proposes a species for the endangered species list and asks for public comment. It is under no obligation to go ahead, and may decide not to add to the list.

Gun groups 'up in arms'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gun lobbyists have begun their arguments against proposed legislation to ban weapons that cannot be detected by magnetic screening devices.

The House crime subcommittee has been considering several bills that would block the availability of weapons, such as plastic or ceramic guns, that cannot be detected by devices such as airport screening equipment.

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

EDITOR'S NOTE — This day-by-day account of 1787, the year that the U.S. Constitution was written, blends the significant with the small, personal details that bring history to life. The authors spent three years in research and writing, drawing on letters and personal diaries as well as the better-known historical documents. The writers are David D.C. Dutcher, David A. Kimball, Robert K. Sutton and Anna Coxe Toogood, all of the Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia, where the Constitution was created 200 years ago.

Monday, May 28, 1787

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Samuel Vaughan answered Comptroller General John Nicholson's directions on maintaining the State House yard. Vaughan suggested that the two fenced clumps of shrubs and trees should be carefully hoed. The four open clumps needed less maintenance, for the first two or three be hoed or weeded when foul to strengthen the trees and plants. After that, only trimming, replacing dead plants and thinning would be necessary.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Once again, Congress had no quorum.

North Carolina's William Blount wrote from New York to Gov. Caswell acknowledging news of his appointment as a delegate to the Convention. While he would go on to Philadelphia in a few days, "I have not the vanity to suppose my presence and assistance will be of much avail in as arduous a business as amending the Confederation."

CONVENTION TODAY

Nathaniel Gotham and Caleb Strong, Massachusetts; Oliver Ellsworth, Connecticut; Gunning Bedford, Delaware; James McHenry, Maryland, and Benjamin Franklin, George Clymer, Thomas Mifflin and Jared Ingersoll, Pennsylvania, appeared and took their seats.

George Wythe (Va.) reported from the Rules Committee appointed last Friday. Most of the report was aproved and became the Convention's rules of procedure. Rufus King (Mass.), Pierce Butler (S.C.) and Richard Dobbs Spaight (N.C.) all made motions aimed at keeping debates secret until the Convention finished its work. These were referred to the Rules Committee and the Convention adjourned for the day.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson set out from Stratford in a stagecoach, and got as far as Wentworth's, on the road to New York.

George Washington dined "at home" (use of this phrase says a lot about Robert and Mary Morris as hosts) and drank tea with many others at Tench Francis'.

Franklin received a visit from lexicographer Noah Webster "and ladies."

LOOKING BACK
Marital Strains

Public service, which often meant long absences from home, seems to have strained an occasional 18th-century marriage. An instance is shown in three letters from William Samuel Johnson's daughter, Elizabeth Johnson Verplank, to her brother, Samuel, written in 1787. Her mother, 58, had borne seven children, of whom three had died since 1782. A grandson, the first, had also died in infancy.

May 29..."I was grieved that we couldn't enjoy the society of Papa, but he was obliged to join the Convention and left us the day after my arrival. I wish I could look forward to the day when he would be free from being a slave to the public. It is I think now time for him to live for his family, it is for our dear Mamma who had experienced so many misfortunes to be ever combatting against the gloominess of her mind. In Papa's company she can support her spirits."

July 25..."I am every day more persuaded that the separation of our worthy parents must continue no longer. Mamma cannot support it. The frequent (illegible word) she had met with to occassion her making use of all her fortitude has been too great an exertion for her not to give way easily to melancholy reflections which destroy her happiness and health."

Aug. 7..."There now appears a prospect of Pappa's settling in New York as the (Columbia) College are determined to abide by their appointment (of Johnson as president) and Mamma says that she can then know where to find Pappa when circumscribed by the walls of the college. You appear much inclined to his accepting the Presidency...and I think it would be better adopted to Pappa's disposition then Domestic fatigue which must necessarily fall upon Mamma, yet she thinks most probable to promote Pappa's happiness."
