Reagan sees 'global responsibilities'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, declaring "we are a nation with global responsibilities," says U.S. troops are in Lebanon and Grenada to protect America's interests against a Soviet "network of surrogates and terrorists."

The president went on nationwide television Thursday night to address the concerns of an American public shaken by the startling deaths of more than 200 Marines and sailors in Beirut and the invasion of the tiny island of Grenada.

In strong terms, he defended U.S. actions on both fronts and blamed the Soviets for encouraging the troubles in Lebanon and Grenada.

"The events in Lebanon and Grenada, though oceans apart, are closely related," Reagan said. "Not only has Moscow assisted and encouraged the violence in both countries, but it provides direct support through a network of surrogates and terrorists.

"It is no coincidence," he said, "that when the thugs tried to wrest control over Grenada, there were 30 Soviet advisers and hundreds of Cuban military and paramilitary forces on the island."

And he noted that 7,000 Soviet advisers and technicians are in Syria, which, he said, "makes no secret of its claim that Lebanon should be a part of a greater Syria."

He opened his address with a reminder of another Soviet act: "Some two months ago, we were shocked by the brutal massacre of 269 men, women and children, more than 60 of them Americans, in the shooting down of a Korean airliner.

"Now," he added, "in these past several days, violence has erupted again."

He vowed that those responsible for the bombing of the Marine barracks in Beirut "must be dealt justice. They will be."

The president said before U.S. and Caribbean forces invaded Grenada on Tuesday it "was a Soviet-Cuban colony being readied as a major military bastion to export terror and undermine democracy. We got there just in time."

He said the foremost mission of American forces on Grenada was to guarantee the safety of U.S. citizens there. "The nightmare of our hostages in Iran must never be repeated," he declared.

Reagan put American actions in a broader context when he said:

"We are a nation with global responsibilities. We are not somewhere else in the world in the world protecting someone else's interests. We are there protecting our own.

"The world has changed," he added. "Today our national security can be threatened in faraway places. It is up to all of us to be aware of the strategic importance of such places and to be able to identify them."

Reagan said he ordered the invasion of Grenada because of an urgent request from that island's neighbors "that we join them in a military operation to restore order and democracy in Grenada. ...

"These small, peaceful nations needed our help," the president said, adding that three of the countries do not have any arms and the others have only limited forces.

"The legitimacy of their request, plus my own concern for our citizens, dictated my decision," said Reagan.

About 3,000 American troops and 400 from six Caribbean nations have landed on the island since a predawn invasion Tuesday. "It is our intention to get our men out as soon as possible," the president said. But he gave no timetable.

More than a third of the 1,000 Americans living on the island had been evacuated by late Thursday. All the others were reported safe as the invasion force conducted mopping up operations.

Reagan said the number of Cubans on the island was larger than the invaders thought and that they were a military force.

"Six hundred have been taken prisoner and we have discovered a complete base with weapons and communications equipment which makes it clear a Cuban occupation of the island was planned," he said.

"Regrettably," he said, Cuban President Fidel Castro "ordered his men to fight to the death and some did. The others will be sent to their homeland."

The president said he was sorry about the casualties on Grenada. "They were small in number but even one is a tragic price to pay," he said.

In Lebanon, Reagan said, the United States "will do everything we can to ensure that our —en are as safe as possible."

He said there was strong circumstantial evidence that the terrorists responsible for the bombing were the same that destroyed the American Embassy in Beirut several months ago. While pledging that, "those who directed this atrocity must be dealt justice," he didn't name any roup as being responsible.

He said the obvious purpose of the attack was to weaken American resolve and force the withdrawal of American and French troops from Lebanon.

"Let me ask those w say we should get out of Lebanon: if we were to leave Lebanon now, what message would that send to those who foment instability and terrorism?" he said.

And Reagan also asked:

—"If America were to walk away from Lebanon, what chance would there be for a negotiated settlement producing a unified, democratic Lebanon?

—"If we turned our backs on Lebanon now, what would be the future of Israel?"

—"Can the United States or the free world, for that matter, stand by and see the Middle East incorporated into the Soviet bloc? What of Western Europe's and Japan's dependence on Middle East oil?

At a glance

Lebanon

JUSTIFICATION

—Reagan said American forces remain in Lebanon "to help bring peace and stability to the vital Middle East." He said U.S. forces joined the multinational peacekeeping force "to help stabilize the situation in Lebanon until a government could be established and a Lebanese army mobilized to restore Lebanese sovereignty over its own soil."

INVOLVEMENT

—The president described the mission of U.S. Marines in Lebanon as designed "to secure a piece of Beirut, to keep order in their sector and to prevent the area from becoming a battlefield. Our marines are not just sitting in an airport."

—"Let me ask those who say we should get out of Lebanon: If we were to leave Lebanon now, what message would that send to those who foment instability and terrorism?" the chief executive asked.

FUTURE

—Reagan, noting that Lebanese president Amin Gemayel will soon hold national reconciliation talks with warring factions, said the United States will "accelerate the search for peace and stability in that region" and said his administration will work more closely with American allies to achieve that goal.

Grenada

INVOLVEMENT

—President Reagan said that violence in Grenada and in Lebanon, where more than 200 U.S. Marines died in a terrorist bombing, "are closely related. Not only has Moscow assisted and encouraged the violence in both countries, but it provides direct support through a network of surrogates and terrorists."

—"It is no coincidence that when the thugs tried to wrest control over Grenada, there were 30 Soviet advisers and hundreds of Cuban military and paramilitary forces on the island." The president said the Soviet and Cuban governments were notified at the time of the invasion their citizens would be protected. "Regrettably, (Cuban president Fidel) Castro ordered his men to fight to the death and some did."

BACKGROUND

—President Reagan said that after the coup against leftist Prime Minister Maurice Bishop last week, "Grenada was without a government, its only authority exercised by a self-proclaimed band of men."

JUSTIFICATION

—"I believe our government has a responsibility to go to the aid of its citizens if their right to life and liberty is threatened," he said.

Vice president warns against isolationism

HOUSTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush, continuing his vigorous defense of President Reagan's policies on Grenada and the Middle East, said today that the United States cannot practice isolationism when faced with foreign governments that are obviously immoral.

Bush compared 1930s Europe and Central and South America of the 1980s, saying he often was tempted to ask people accusing the United States of imperialism "if it would have been moral or immoral to replace Adolph Hitler."

Bush said he hoped discoveries of Cuban armaments on the island of Grenada would change the opinions of many Americans who criticized the invasion there.

"I am hopeful that when they see those Cuban arms and when they see the big lie of Fidel Castro ... they will realize this is a tough world we are living in," Bush told about 400 members of the Forum Club, a local civic organization.

In Dallas Thursday night, Bush said he had warned the Lebanese government during a visit that the United States expects it to "go the extra mile" in upcoming peace talks.

Bush, weary from his trip to Beirut 48 hours earlier, told 1,200 Republican loyalists at a $1,000-a-plate dinner that the Reagan administration would not alter its commitment to Lebanon because of a terrorists' bombing that killed more than 200 U.S. Marines.

Bush prefaced his remarks on his trip to Beirut by saying, "I want to share with you some of my experiences there in Vietnam ... there in Lebanon."

The vice president said he informed Lebanese President Amin Gemayel that the United States expected Lebanon to aggressively seek compromise among its warring factions.

"I wanted him to understand ... how badly we felt about this, how much uncertainty had been created by this act, how determined this president was to do what he set out to do and help with the reconciliation of Lebanon," Bush said.

But he said he also impressed on Gemayel "how it was absolutely essential that the Lebanese themselves go the extra mile in terms of compromise, the extra mile in terms of (peace) talks ... It is essential that they know that the American people are willing to help in this quest for freedom, but it is essential that they know that we want to see some compromise and some action on their part."

Agents in Bush tour don't respond to shooting

HOUSTON (AP) — Two Secret Service officers who witnessed the fatal shooting of a doorman at a fashionable westside condominium complex never tried to catch the fleeing gunman or bothered to write down the license number of the getaway car, police say.

The two officers were making a security check of the neighborhood in preparation for an overnight visit by Vice President George Bush, who was planning to stay at The Houstonian less than two miles away, said special agent Bill Livingood.

They arrived at St. James Condominia just moments before the doorman, Gregory Chafin, 25, was shot and killed by a man armed with a .45-caliber rifle, said homicide detective Steve Garza.

Livingood declined to comment in the incident.

However, he said, the officers were members of the Secret Service's uniform division and assist in protecting the president and vice president. Officers of the division are trained to use firearms, he said.

There was no indication that the shooting was related to the vice president's visit, police said. Bush was to dedicate a school and speak to the State Bar of Texas on Friday.

Police said the gunman drove to the front of the 25-story building were Chafin was working, climbed out of the car and started firing.

Several people ran out of the building after hearing shots, and a contractor working on the 21st floor yelled at the suspect. The gunman turned his weapon at the building and started firing, Garza said.

At least five shots hit several windows but no one was hurt.

United Way reaches 1983 goal

Dan Mendell, chairman of the United Way of Midland campaign, tops out the logo.

Chairman lives up to 'Oklahoma guarantee'

Earlier this year, United Way Campaign Chairman Dan Mendell had given an "Oklahoma guarantee" the 1983 goal would be reached. This morning he made good on that promise when he announced the fund-raising effort has reached "$1,729,410 with more to come."

"The community should be proud," Mendell said. "Our United Way team should be proud we have reached our goal. But we aren't through yet. Our goal was set four months ago. There have been many dramatic changes in Midland since then. New, unforeseen needs are being pressed on the United Way. We are going to work just a little longer, we are going to strive just a little harder. Achieving the goal is a milestone. But meeting the community's needs is our mission."

These funds will sustain the levels of service offered this year by the United Way's 22 agencies. In addition, the United Way can begin supporting the Palmer Drug Abuse Program. And there are others that need assistance, according to Mendell.

"Big Brothers/Big Sisters needs United Way help in 1984. The Shelter for Battered Women and Children has served 20 percent more people in the first 10 months of 1983 than it did in all of 1982," he noted.

"Our primary provider of assistance to the truly needy, the Salvation Army, is stretched beyond its limits and requires an additional allocation from United Way to get through the last two months of this year."

Mendell said four major employee campaigns still are working with several companies and some independents still considering their pledges. When these come in, they will put the United Way drive beyond its goal.

He thanked the Midlanders who contributed to help United Way reach its goal.

Referring to the portion of the campaign that is completed, Mendell said, "What our community has accomplished so far is a miracle. Because of Midland's current economic circumstances, 52 substantial supporters of last year's campaign were unable to pledge or sharply reduced their level of support. Our losses amounted to more than $152,000. But other Midlanders rose to the challenge."

The campaign reported 168 new gifts from individuals and about 77 businesses making corporate pledges for the first time. There were 57 new employee campaigns involving more than 1,000 workers. And regular United Way contributors gave more with 165 individuals, 115 businesses and 106 employee groups substantially increasing their donations.

"Our community has pledged more than $255,000 new dollars. That generosity covers the loss and provides $103,000 toward the challenge of 1984," said Mendell.

"Everyone who has brought us this far and those who will take us beyond should be proud. Our reward will be the good work that will be done in Midland in 1984."

Author: Nation needs 'living museum' ranch

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Best-selling author James Michener says preservationists should honor a uniquely American way of life by putting together a working ranch as a "living museum" of cowboy and cattlemen history.

And Texas might not be a bad place for it, he said.

Michener, who has spent the past two years researching his upcoming novel "Texas," said Thursday that not just historic buildings should be saved and restored.

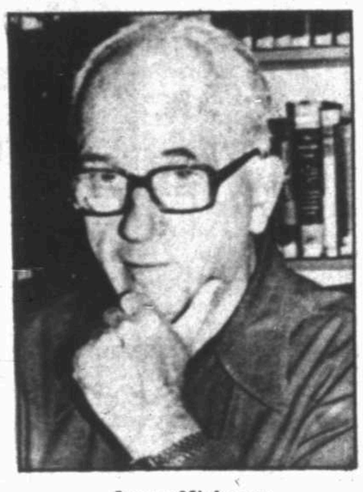

A legacy showing how people lived — and why — is just as important, he told members of the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

A working ranch, one not less than 1,000 acres, would be a fitting tribute "to the local cowboys who gave this area of the country such color," Michener said.

"What is really needed is real buildings in a real setting that have been recovered from occupancy," he said. "This is one of our great heritages."

A number of states "from North Dakota to Nevada" would provide a good home for the project, but Texas would be "one of the most appropriate," he said.

"What is discouraging is that some ranchers in Wyoming and Texas have the money to do this and it hasn't been done," he said.

James Michener

Michener's speech kicked off the 37th annual meeting of the national preservation society.

Mayor Henry Cisneros introduced him by saying that the Pulitzer prize-winning author "having written about such an expansive place as space, now is undertaking to write about Texas."

Jury to decide guilt of man in Gulf trial

HOUSTON (AP) — Jurors must decide whether a Colorado man was caught "red-handed" in a $15 million bomb-extortion plot against a Gulf Oil Chemical Co. refinery or was coerced into participating in the scheme out of fear his wife would be harmed if he refused.

The federal court jury today was expected to begin deliberating the fate of Theodore McKinney, 46, of Durango, Colo.

McKinney was the only one of five people named in a 12-count indictment to be tried on the charges. If convicted, McKinney would face up to 105 years in prison and a $105,000 fine.

The other four defendants, also from Durango, pleaded guilty to lesser charges and received sentences ranging from five years' probation to 40 years in prison.

In closing arguments Thursday, Assistant U.S. Attorney Ron Woods called the five defendants "failures, losers, complete zeros in life."

Five explosives were found in September 1982 at Gulf's Cedar Bayou plant 30 miles east of Houston. One exploded harmlessly, and the others were safely defused.

Extortionists threatened to blow up the billion-dollar refinery unless they were paid $15 million. Gulf shut down the plant for five days, but no other explosives were found.

"It could have been another Texas City disaster out there," Woods said, referring to the 1947 blast set when a ship exploded in the Southeast Texas port city, turning the surrounding area to powder and killing more than 500 people.

McKinney and Michael Worth were arrested Oct. 1 at a Phoenix, Ariz., phone booth. Prosecutors claimed the two were talking to Gulf officials, giving them information about where to drop the money.

"Both had their heads inside the phone booth with their ears screwed up to the receiver," Woods said.

Suspect jailed in savings and loan bombings

DALLAS (AP) — Police say they aren't quiet sure what they have in the arrest of a former State Department operative jailed for investigation of recent robberies of Dallas savings and loan institutions in which sophisticated homemade bombs were used.

"He may just be as bad as we think he is. But at the same time, he may just be somebody who shoots off his mouth. We don't know where he fits in," police spokesman Bob Shaw said Thursday.

"No, we do know some things for sure," Shaw corrected. "We know he robbed those banks and he had some pretty sophisticated technology in doing so."

Police say that after they arrested Howard Virgil Crank II, 48, about 1 p.m. Wednesday outside a Dallas restaurant 12 witnesses to the robberies identified him in a police lineup.

Nita Crank, 40, wife of the suspect, said her husband told her he "trained Thai mercenaries in Laos" for the State Department during the late 1960s, the Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story today.

"He said the mercenaries were backed by the CIA," Mrs. Crank said. "Their job was to prevent the North Vietnamese from coming into South Vietnam through Laos. He was very proud of the work he did there. He helped them build bunkers and actually managed their operation."

CIA officials refused to confirm or deny any connection between Crank and the agency.

U.S. State Department officials confirmed Thursday that Crank had been in Saigon from 1966 to 1974 as a public safety adviser for the Agency for International Development, which trained local police forces.

Betty Sneed, a State Department spokesman, said the purpose of the police advisory program was to "train local police officers in Vietnam."

Crank, a former police officer in a Los Angeles suburb, is being held in lieu of $350,200 bond on multiple charges. He is a suspect in savings and loans robberies on Aug. 8, Sept. 2 and Oct. 21 and of an attempted robbery on Oct. 21 of the same institution that was robbed on Sept. 2.

Crank performed frequently at Dallas night spots as a classical guitarist and singer under the name of Sonny Bourbon, a tuxedoed entertainer who could create a soft, easy-listening atmosphere.

Police arrested him after getting a call from someone who had seen videotapes of the robbery suspect on television.

A .22-caliber twin-barrel derringer was found in his pocket, Lt. Mel Southall said.

Aliens' suit against INS successful

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Efforts are already under way to provide more material — in both English and Spanish — to inform detained Central American aliens that they can apply for political asylum, says an Immigration and Naturalization Service official.

Testimony ended Thursday in a class-action suit brought by five Guatemalan and Salvadoran refugees against the agency. INS district director Hal Boldin, the government's final rebuttal witness, said he had no objections to what they were seeking.

Boldin said his office has begun trying to accommodate complaints of attorneys for the plaintiffs concerning visiting hours, use of telephones, lower bonds, space for consultations and the provision of Spanish language legal forms at the Port Isabel Detention Service Center.

In the suit, the plaintiffs seek to make permanent a temporary restraining order issued in late 1981 by U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela that requires the INS to inform Salvadorans and Guatemalans of their right to request political asylum.

The suit also alleges that INS officers have cajoled Central American aliens at the detention center into signing voluntary departure forms that allow the INS to deport them.

INS officials denied the charges, and Boldin said he found virtually all of the plaintiff's requests reasonable.

He said he learned "just yesterday" of three self-help documents in Spanish that he found agreeable and said he would do his best to make such material available in the Port Isabel detention center.

A Marine Honor Guard practices for ceremonies at Dover Air Force Base in Dover, Delaware, on Thursday. In background is a C-5 Galaxy cargo plane, the same kind that will bring bodies of Marines killed in Beirut back to this base.

No word received on return of Marines

DOVER, Del. (AP) — Accommodations were prepared for families of servicemen killed in the bombing of the U.S. Marine headquarters in Beirut so they can attend military ceremonies when the bodies are returned to Dover Air Force Base.

However, officials at the base said Thursday that they still had no word on when the bodies would arrive.

"We have approximately eight (families) now who have called and asked to be notified when the remains arrive in Dover," Marine Major Rick Stepien said.

More than 200 servicemen were killed Sunday when a truck loaded with explosives was driven into the lobby of the headquarters in Beirut. Marine personnel records were destroyed in the blast.

Stepien said accommodations were being prepared on the base for any family members who might come to the ceremonies, but he said the families would be responsible for their own transportation to Dover.

The bodies are being identified in Frankfurt, West Germany, before being shipped to Dover.

"We will be notified when the aircraft departs Frankfurt," said Major Robert W. Groom, base spokesman, who added that he did not expect all the bodies to be shipped at once.

Stepien, part of a 20-man Marine liaison team which is helping with the preparations, said military ceremonies will be held in a huge hangar on the base after the bodies arrive.

Rear Adm. Neil M. Stevenson will give the invocation, a 38-piece contingent of the U.S. Marine Band will play and a Marine color guard and 14-man escort will be on hand for the 20-minute ceremonies.

Groom added that officials are expecting a "distinguished visitor," but he did not know who it would be.

The bodies will be shipped to Dover in standard, military transfer cases. The base mortuary staff will transfer the bodies to metal caskets.

Stepien said Marine escorts from Quantico, Va., will be brought to Dover and one Marine will escort each body to its hometown.

Free trips arranged for families

LANHAM, Md. (AP) — Relatives of Marines wounded in the Beirut bombing have been offered free airline tickets to West Germany, where many injured servicemen are being treated, an airline spokesman says.

William G. Ziegler, a World Airways vice president, said Thursday that two round-trip tickets would be provided to Marines' relatives for travel from any of six U.S. cities served by World to Frankfurt, West Germany.

According to the Pentagon, at least 78 Marines were wounded in Sunday's bombing, with most of the injured evacuated to military hospitals in Europe.

Ziegler said the airline is asking relatives to contact Amvets, a Lanham-based organization for wounded veterans, to arrange for the tickets.

The cities served by World are Honolulu; Los Angeles; Oakland-San Francisco; Newark, N.J.; Baltimore-Washington; and Kansas City, Mo. The airline has one flight a day to Europe from the Baltimore-Washington International Airport.

Morgan Ruhl, Amvets executive director, said the organization had received only one call from an Ohio family by Thursday, but he added more calls were expected today after people hear about the offer.

The number for Amvets headquarters in Lanham is 301-459-9600. Ruhl said phones will be answered from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. The project will be in operation for the next 30 days, he said.

No more cranky cars

Car self-starters were introduced in 1912. Since it was no longer necessary to crank up, women drivers started to come into their own.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

Sunny skies and mild weather are forecast for most of the nation Saturday, according to the National Weather Service. West Texas, the western Plains, the Great Lakes and New England could get showers.

Sunny, warm weather predicted

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is predicting today's partly cloudy skies will disappear, turning sunny and warm by Saturday.

Tonight's low should reach the upper 40s, accompanied by southeasterly winds at 5 to 15 mph. Highs in the lower 70s are forecast for Saturday, with winds from the east blowing 5 to 15 mph.

Thursday's high of 71 was 18 degrees below the record high of 89 for that date set in 1950. The record low was 34 just three years ago. The overnight low was 50 degrees.

Extended forecasts

Sunday Through Tuesday

West Texas: Widely scattered thunderstorms Sunday otherwise partly cloudy. Highs low 70s north to mid 80s Big Bend valleys. Lows mid 40s Panhandle to mid 50s southeast and extreme south.

North Texas: Partly cloudy and mild Sunday and Monday. Mostly fair and mild Tuesday. Highs 70s. Lows 50s.

South Texas: Patches of rain or showers south, central and southwest portions Sunday and most all sections Monday. Variable cloudiness and little change in temperatures. Lows mid and upper 50s interior to 60s south and along the immediate coastal plains. Highs 70s to some 80s extreme south.

Temperatures warmer

By The Associated Press

The dome of cool canadian air that brought readings in the low 40s to much of Texas Thursday morning shifted into the southern Mississippi Valley and temperatures over Texas were 10 degrees warmer this morning.

The coolest place in the state was San Antonio where it was 43 degrees at 4 a.m. Corpus Christi had a balmy 70.

Skies remained clear over most of the state except for the trans-Pecos region of West Texas where multilayered clouds pushed in by an upper-air low produced some widely scattered light rain showers.

Fighting continues in Grenada

POINT SALINES, Grenada (AP) — The last defensive stronghold on this tiny Caribbean island fell to U.S. invasion forces, but Cubans and Grenadian soldiers fought on the run today in the mountains around the capital, U.S. officials said.

Late Thursday, U.S. artillery pounded Cuban positions in the hills overlooking the captured air field where American troops seized Soviet and Cuban arms on the southern tip of the island.

Eight U.S. troops were reported dead, eight were missing and 39 were wounded. An undetermined number of extra U.S. troops arrived Thursday, bolstering the force of 2,800 Marines and Army Rangers already on Grenada, the smallest nation in the Western Hemisphere.

Journalists on the first media tour U.S. officials allowed to the island reported intense artillery fire in the mountains Thursday night three to five miles east of the airport here. Military officials also said U.S. jets made some strafing runs.

The reporters were returned to nearby Barbados after a six-hour tour.

"The fighting was super intense," said Army Maj. Jim Holt of the 82nd Airborne Division based at Ft. Bragg, N.C.

The unfinished airport area thundered and crackled with artillery and machine-gun fire as helicopters and transport planes ferried in the additional troops at dusk.

U.S. military officials said the Marines and paratroopers crushed the final stronghold of the island's defenders Thursday. One military source said the U.S. forces controlled about two square miles around the airstrip that was under construction with Cuban assistance.

No Grenadians were known to have died, U.S. officials said, and the number of Cuban casualties was not known, nor was the number of Cubans still hiding and fighting in the hills around the capital of St. George's.

Navy Cmdr. Ronald Wildermuth, a spokesman for the Joint Military Information Bureau in nearby Barbados, said of the remaining defenders: "We can't tell what the real figure is. If we had cleaned them all out we would know. But that's not done yet."

Pro-Cuban Gen. Hudson Austin, the leader of last week's bloody Marxist coup that led to the invasion Tuesday, was reported by U.S. intelligence forces to be holed up with a woman hostage in the southern end of the island.

A dozen journalists were flown into Grenada by the U.S. military and shown barracks where the multinational Caribbean invasion force was guarding many of the 800 prisoners, including 600 Cubans, taken since the invasion started.

The reporters were shown hundreds of cases of arms stacked in five large warehouses at the airfield. Some of the cases with Soviet and Cuban markings were cracked open to reveal automatic rifles and ammunition.

Army. Lt. Col. Frank Akers said there were enough weapons seized to outfit 8,000 to 10,000 guerillas "for a very long time."

A number of the Army officers with the journalists said there were more Cuban soldiers fighting than they expected. A Pentagon press officer, Lt. Col. Gene Sands, said it was not known how many ground forces were still resisting, nor how many of them were Cubans.

Initial reports at the time of the invasion estimated there were about 600 Cubans, most of them construction workers working on extending the runway and support buildings at the airfield.

But President Reagan in a speech on Thursday night in Washington said there were nearly 1,000 Cubans, most of them part of a combat engineering unit, opposing the American-led invaders.

Reagan had long been concerned by the Soviet-Cuban orientation of the island's Marxist leaders, and claimed the 10,000-foot airport runway posed a strategic threat.

"It turned out, the number was much larger and they were a military force," Reagan said. "Six hundred have been taken prisoner and we have discovered a complete base with weapons and communications equipment which makes it clear a Cuban occupation of the island had been planned."

Reagan said the U.S. combat forces blocked Cuban plans to take over the Caribbean island for use as "a major military bastion to export terror and undermine democracy."

U.S. officials said 14 more Americans were evacuated from Grenada Thursday afternoon. Earlier in the day, U.S. officials said 377 people, 343 of them Americans, had been airlifted out. Most of the 1,000 Americans in Grenada before the invasion were students or staff at St. George's University Medical School.

As the fighting dragged through its third day, the House Foreign Affairs Committee voted Thursday to apply the time limits of the War Powers Act to the Grenada operation, meaning Reagan would need congressional approval to leave troops there beyond 90 days.

Reagan said Thursday night "It is our intention to get our men out as soon as possible," but he gave no timetable.

Further anti-U.S. protests were reported around the world, including the ransacking of a U.S. consulate in Bolivia.Some of the sharpest condemnations has come from the Soviet Union.

In London, Secretary-General Shridath Ramphal of the Commonwealth — the Britain-linked group of nations to which Grenada belongs — denounced the American operation as "flagrant aggression."

Leaders of six other English-speaking Caribbean islands said they had requested the invasion and contributed about 370 troops and police to the occupation force.

Cuba said Colombia and Spain had offered to assist in the evacuation of captured Cubans from Grenada.

The United States offered to send the Cubans to Barbados under authority of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States to await transfer home by the Cuban government, but the proposal was rejected by the Cuban government.

Many of the St. George's medical students evacuated from Grenada said on their arrival in the United States they had been concerned about their safety in the aftermath of the military coup and the killing of former Grenadian officials.But others said that, before the U.S. invasion, they felt no danger from the rebel government.

Grenada, formerly known as a scenic spice island, covers 133 square miles and has a population of about 110,000.

Grenada looks, sounds like war zone

EDITOR'S NOTE: AP Caribbean News Editor Dan Sewell was among 12 journalists who toured part of the Grenada war zone Thursday, the first such visit U.S. officials have allowed since the invasion of the island Tuesday.

By DAN SEWELL
Associated Press Writer

POINT SALINES, Grenada — For a small war that was supposed to be winding down, it was awfully noisy and awfully busy here.

As wave after wave of U.S. soldiers and machinery landed Thursday at the half-built airport here, American artillery pounded away at defense positions miles to the east. At times the big guns throbbed steadily, like a headache. Thick black clouds of smoke swelled up from the green hills.

U.S. military officials escorted 12 journalists through a small corner of the Grenada war zone for nearly six hours, offering a chance to see and hear and smell the action.

Only it didn't really smell like a war is supposed to smell. The airport was being built on what was once a beautiful beach. The beach is gone, but not the sweet and fresh sea breezes that once cooled it.

The American, Caribbean and British journalists, however, did see and hear a lot. They saw five warehouses and hundreds of stacked crates of Soviet and Cuban machine guns, automatic rifles and ammunition.

"If you're talking about guerrillas, it's enough for a very long time," Army Lt. Col. Frank Akers said.

Akers and others who acted as the journalist's hosts struck several common refrains. One was how brave and professional were the Cuban soldiers they had encountered — and were still encountering.

The respectfully blamed the Cuban fervor and skill for dragging the invasion skirmishes into a third full day. "We didn't expect so many fighting so hard," Army Sgt. Major Willie Forbes said.

The reporters saw where Cuban soldiers and airport construction workers — up to 1,000 Cubans in all, apparently, compared with initial estimates of only 600 — had been living on Grenada. The visitors peeked into cinderblock homes and saw hardwood floors and, in one, a five-piece stereo sound system. Many of those barracks buildings were now being used to hold prisoners.

AP Laserphoto

Boxes of ammunition bearing Soviet writing are stacked in a Cuban warehouse discovered by U.S. Marines on the island of Grenada.

They heard how, when the invasion began, the Americans intercepted a Cuban radio message to Havana. The message, from a Cuban woman, asked whether planes were coming to evacuate the Cubans. The answer came back: "No." Later, the same woman sent another radio message to Havana, asking permission to surrender. This time the message came back: "No. Fight on for the glory of the revolution."

The woman was later found dead.

The journalists did not see the ultimate tragedies of war; the only dead body they saw was a cow, lying comically on its back with its stiff legs sticking up.

Dozens of Cubans, some appearing worried but others calmly smoking cigars, were viewed by the journalists in the detention barracks. Sitting in the dirt warmed by 90 degree temperatures and a bright sun, many Cubans wore straw hats.

One prisoner, a barefoot Grenadian in blue jeans and a bright green shirt, writhed on his back and protested to the guards standing over him. "I don't understand what the problem is," the prisoner whined. "I was just going to my home. I'm not anybody."

"That's a member of the People's Revolutionary Army," U.S. Army Capt. Jorge Cottos told the reporters. "We find they fight in civilian clothes during the day."

The journalists heard several times how Grenadian soldiers had changed from their uniforms in hopes of either blending into the civilian population to avoid capture or to set up sniper ambushes later — or both. American officers said they were relying on Grenadians to turn in fellow citizens.

The prisoners were ostensibly under the control of the 300-member force from other Caribbean nations that came onto the island after the American invasion. But it was clear the Americans were in charge of the prisoners, too.

At one point one of the members of the multinational force ran up to an American officer and said, "Sir, I am supposed to have 29 prisoners, but I only sight count 21."

"There's a reporter here," the embarrassed officer hissed. He pointed to another American and said, "Take your problem over there."

Another time, two American soldiers came running up to Cottos with several maps and documents. "Sir, what do we do with these documents we found? Should we take them over to the CIA?"

Cottos pointed and said, "Over there," and then talked to the reporters of things other than the Central Intelligence Agency.

The journalists heard over and over from the soliders how grateful the Grenadians were for the invasion, but they did not see any greetings of jubilation traditionally showered on liberators.

More than 300 Grenadians had been short-term refugees, forced by the fighting out of their homes into an encampment here. Many of them were returning to their homes Thursday, trudging past the reporters. They looked tired and hungry and some of them were sullen. Children who would ordinarily have been scampering and shouting on this day hugged their mothers' skirts.

In this friendly tropical nation where in normal times people line up to meet off-island visitors at neighbors' homes, few Grenadians on Thursday spoke or waved to the American journalists. The network television crew, which would normally draw crowds of dancing, chanting children and even some adults, was all but ignored.

But the Rev. Carl Geers, 69, a Roman Catholic priest from Cincinnati who had been in Grenada three months, said most people in St. George's were delighted when the Marines arrived.

Photos indicate bunkers under construction

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Intelligence photographs show evidence that missile storage bunkers may have been under construction in Grenada, prompting the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff to urge an immediate invasion, according to a report today by the Knight-Ridder news service.

The photos showed four concrete shelters 200 feet long and 40 feet wide, with walls 12-to-18 inches thick, under construction about 800 feet from the new airport runway at Point Salines, Knight-Ridder said. The story was carried in the Philadelphia Inquirer and other Knight-Ridder newspapers.

The photographs were taken by a spy on Grenada who relayed them to sources off the island using a scanning device and a radio transmitter, according to Knight-Ridder, which said the information was compiled from Pentagon, congressional and independent sources.

The bunkers still were under construction and were only about a third complete, as were the aprons and concrete runways intended to link the bunkers to the airport, the report said.

"It was the first clear evidence that a Soviet-Cuban construction unit was building more than runways," said one source quoted in the article.

Asked for comment on the report, an unidentified high-ranking administration official told Knight-Ridder, "I can't confirm that. ... I haven't heard that."

An unidentified Pentagon source said the Joint Chiefs were particularly worried because of the size of the buildings under construction.

"The dimensions ... right down to the width of the doors and the thickness of the concrete, matched perfectly with the dimensions of Group Soviet Forces missile bunkers in Cuba, Poland, East Germany and the Soviet Union," the source said.

Searchers reach basement of bombed-out Beirut post

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Undeterred by sniper fire, searchers today reached the basement of the bomb-devastated U.S. Marine post at Beirut's international airport. The Pentagon put the American death toll at 225.

Marine spokesman Maj. Robert Jordan said the base took "some sporadic sniper fire during the night" that caused no casualties. He said the Marines did not fire back.

Jordan said the sniping from southeast of the base did not interrupt the round-the-clock search for more victims in the rubble of the Marine command post, shattered by a suicide terrorist's truck bomb Sunday.

"We are still working 24 hours a day," he said. "They (the searchers) are now working on the rubble of the first floor and basement."

He said it would be at least another full day before he would be sure the Marines have been through the entire building.

Jordan said today that 1,000 of the Marine peacekeepers have used a special telephone connection to call home to say they survived the bombing.

The telephone arrangement at the airport would be kept up until every Marine and Navy man on the base when the blast occurred had a chance to call, Jordan said.

Marine chaplain George Pucciarelli, 35, a Roman Catholic priest from Boston, said rescuers could see two bodies in the rubble but had been unable to extract them for fear of bringing down a huge slab of concrete. Marines were working on the area with jackhammers to try to retrieve the bodies.

Also at the site today was Navy chaplain Ken Griffin, 37, of Louisville, Ky., a Southern Baptist minister who arrived from a warship offshore.

"I was awe struck by the whole thing," Griffin said. "The mutilation of the bodies, the quick decomposition. There may be some we will never be able to find. I really feel badly for the families."

Asked how the surviving soldiers had responded, Griffin said: "They can't believe it, they can't understand why it happened."

Searchers also were digging today for two missing Frenchmen in the ruins of a nine-story apartment building that had been headquarters of a French paratroop company in a Beirut seafront residential area. France's Defense Ministry said the French casualty toll was 56 killed and 15 wounded.

About 300 Marines and other U.S. military personnel were sleeping when the terrorist rammed a truck packed with a ton of explosives into the lobby. The blast wounded 75 men.

On Thursday, Nicole Gemayel, the 15-year-old daughter of Lebanese President Amin Gemayel, led a march by hundreds of people to support the presence of the U.S. Marines, French troops and other soldiers in the multi-national peacekeeping force.

The demonstrators marched to the residences of the U.S. and French ambassadors and carried U.S. and French flags. One banner read: "U.S. Marines — Heroes Of Peace."

Marine commander Col. Timothy Geraghty said Thursday that new security measures had been taken, "essentially sealing off" the U.S. base.

Pioneers all!

Long before there were tall buildings in Midland, fine residential areas, modern schools and hospitals, there was a dream. It was the dream of the pioneers of this region — the petroleum pioneers.

They were a rare breed of men and women. Individuals who believed that hard work would bring success. They were gamblers who punched holes in the earth in hopes — and the belief — that their machines and their pipe would find that elusive commodity — oil!

Sometimes they were successful. More often than not, they weren't. Fortunes grew and fortunes fell. The work was back-breaking hard and endless. The odds were staggering. The challenges were awesome. It was a nightmare, but it bore hope.

Those early-day pioneers weathered the challenge and gave to the Permian Basin a legacy. It's a legacy of individualism, the work ethic, ruggedness. And it's a legacy of hope for the future because they proved that where there's a will, there's a way.

Today the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers are meeting in Midland in their biennial celebration honoring the early-day men and women of the industry. We welcome them back with the realization that all in the industry are pioneers — of the past, the present or the future.

That is exciting!

Language dilemma

The ethnic pluralism of the United States which makes us unique in the family of nations has long been a source of pride among Americans who like to point out to the rest of the world how peoples of different cultures have learned to live harmoniously under the same roof.

The unity, however, in the words of one U.S. senator, is almost as fragile as the balance of nature itself and is being threatened by the growth of groups advocating bilingualism.

Sen. Walter D. Huddleston, a Kentucky Democrat, believes the bond which has held this country's diverse elements together for the past two centuries has been the English language. With Rep. Norman D. Shumway, a California Republican, he has proposed a constitutional amendment to make English the official language of this nation.

The ELA — English Language Amendment — introduced by the two lawmakers, has the active support of former U.S. Senator S.I. Hayakawa, the California Republican who is a semanticist by profession. He helped form a group calling itself "U.S. English," which is dedicated to maintaining "the blessings of a common language — English — for the people of the United States."

Supporters of the proposed amendment are gravely concerned that the spread of bilingual education programs will lead to biculturalism and, eventually, to the creation of two possibly hostile societies, the children of which will find themselves suspended between two worlds.

Hispanic groups, on the other hand, contend that bilingual education will make a positive contribution to the understanding by Spanish-speaking people of the American democratic process. They deny that bilingual education is aimed at the creation of a society that has Spanish as the only language.

The issue is a thorny one which merits the fullest discussion and exchange of ideas. It is to be hoped that the ELA eventually will be exhumed from the congressional subcommittees to which it has been relegated. Only then will we have extended debate which will throw more light and less heat on a development of such potential influence on the future of this nation.

Suicide for all

"Oh, it's one strike and you're out at the old nuke war...."

We cannot finish the song, because it really is not funny.

There will not be a second or third strike. There will not be a chance to ask questions. At least there won't be if the NATO countries proceed as planned with a first-strike nuclear policy.

The proposed new NATO policy will authorize the use of tactical nuclear weapons to repulse a Soviet attack on Western Europe. It calls for a "very early" attack with nuclear weapons before enemy troops can advance.

This would be an excellent military tactic in a vacuum. It would stop the enemy. But there in no vacuum, and the Soviet commanders would reply in kind.

This would mean the destruction of Western Europe. In return we would launch missiles aimed at Warsaw Pact cities, including those in the Soviet Union.

And without the vacuum the Kremlin would launch missiles aimed at American cities. Perhaps people would survive in the Southern Hemisphere, which is small comfort.

A first-strike nuclear policy is totally naive and suicidal. There is no way that an atomic war can be contained once it has begun. For just as we would respond to a Soviet attack, the Kremlin will respond to a NATO nuclear attack.

Furthermore, if this policy is adopted, it will turn the people of Western Europe against their governments and the United States. This would give the Russians a tremendous political victory.

The ultimate answer to the security issue is bilateral disarmament. Until that is achieved, we should strengthen NATO's conventional forces so that they can repulse Soviet aggression.

Above all we must remember that a first-strike nuclear attack or any nuclear attack would be suicidal for both sides.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Auditor hounded for his honesty

WASHINGTON — A year ago, I reported that a Defense Department auditor had blown the whistle on improprieties by a major defense contractor — and was being punished for his disclosures. Not only did the Pentagon brass do nothing to correct the abuses, they harassed the honest investigator and tried to force him out of his job.

Jack Anderson

The unsung hero was George Spanton, a respected, career auditor with the Defense Contract Audit Agency. He spent years ferreting out waste and mismanagement in the defense establishment, without getting into trouble.

Then he was assigned to keep an expert eye on Air Force contracts with Pratt & Whitney — and the roof fell in on him. My associates Donald Goldberg and Indy Badhwar have pieced together more of the story.

Spanton discovered that Pratt & Whitney was overcharging the Air Force for spare parts that could be purchased only from the company. He reported excessive labor costs and complained of serious difficulty in gaining access to the company's files.

All that was embarrassing enough. But then Spanton committed the unforgivable offense: On Feb. 11, 1982, he wrote a memo questioning Pratt & Whitney's lavish wining and dining of government officials, some of whom were in a position to look the other way when the company overcharged the taxpayers.

Spanton found that Pratt & Whitney played the generous host to "high-ranking military and civilian personnel, including generals, admirals, congressmen, Air Force test pilots and other DOD employees."

At the very least, this entertainment was a violation of Defense Department regulations — by both Pratt & Whitney and the freeloading employees who accepted the company's largesse.

Spanton knew his memo would touch some raw nerves in high places. So he wasn't surprised when, on July 7, 1982, he was visited by John Batson, a special agent in the Defense Criminal Investigative Service. Batson informed Spanton that he was the subject of a criminal investigation.

Unfortunately for the vengeful authorities, Batson — like Spanton — is an honest cop. After an exhaustive investigation, Batson filed a report that said: "All significant leads have been followed, and available evidence does not indicate that Spanton was involved in any criminal activity ...."

Batson not only gave Spanton a clean bill of health, he also confirmed the auditor's charges. Batson reported that in the period from 1978 to 1980 Pratt & Whitney had spent at least $500,000 entertaining government officials.

At this time, the matter has also been investigated by the FBI and the Air Force's Office of Special Investigations, and evidence is now in the hands of a grand jury. Pratt & Whitney vigorously disputes all charges of wrongdoing.

Meanwhile, the big brass have tried unsuccessfully to force Spanton into retirement or get him to accept a transfer that would have gotten him out of Pratt & Whitney's hair. This fact, too, was dutifully reported by Batson.

Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, is planning hearings on the Spanton case. He wrote Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger: "We must reward the George Spantons of the world and punish those who muzzle him."

Weinberger's response was ambiguous: "I know you share my view that no one should be disciplined or removed on the basis of unverified rumors." Did he mean Spanton — or his persecutors?

Footnote: Government employees who have stories to tell but want their identities protected can contact Whistleblowers Anonymous, Box 2300, Washington, D.C. 20013. No one will blame them for wishing to avoid the harassments that Spanton has gone through.

• • • WHOPPER OF THE WEEK: For political reasons, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan is stoutly insisting there's no evidence that huge federal deficits drive interest rates up.

It's a contention that flies in the face of conventional wisdom — to say nothing of contradicting the view ardently held by President Reagan's conservative backers and some of the Treasury's own economists.

The trouble is that the administration is coming under fire from the Democrats (and even White House economist Martin Feldstein), who want to lower the deficits even if it means raising taxes. And tax increases are anathema to Reagan's hard-core supporters.

So Regan ordered a study prepared. Though some of the economists who worked on it regard deficits as harmful, they obediently reported that there is no historical evidence linking deficits and interest rates.

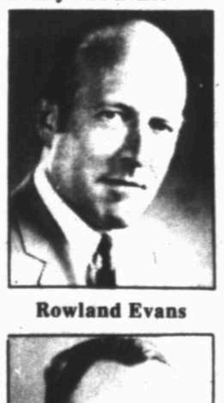

The reason deficits drive interest rates up is that they force the government to compete with home buyers and businessmen for the limited amount of money available for borrowing.

INSIDE REPORT:

Reagan cutting losses in Beirut

WASHINGTON — During agonizing hours following Sunday's Beirut massacre, the Pentagon deflected a long-anticipated move to seek Israel's help out of the Lebanese quagmire, pushing hard instead for the earliest possible exodus of the Marines consistent with American credibility and honor.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

For weeks, during slowly-escalating sniper fire against the undefendable Marines, high administration officials in the State Department and White House had eyed the U.S.-supplied military might of Israel as a last-ditch, surefire response to Islamic extremists. It was presumed at State and in the intelligence community that if a disaster happened, the Syrians would be behind it and Israel could handle Syria.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, backed to a man by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, objected. He feared that a turn toward Israel would plunge U.S. stock in the Arab world to dangerous lows, opening up the oil-rich Middle East to a new chapter of Soviet exploitation.

So well did Weinberger carry that argument into the West Wing basement when President Reagan summoned the National Security Council last Sunday that the "Israeli option" is now a dead letter. It will remain so, unless the savage act against the Marines can be laid at the doorstep of Damascus. With or without help from Israel (help it might not wish to give), Weinberger set the U.S. firmly against any military response.

"The Israeli card looked potent until the time came to play it," one policy insider said. The result of inducing an Israeli strike against Syrian forces in Lebanon would be "psychic satisfaction," he explained, but the closer U.S.-Israeli strategic partnership would drive the wedge deeper between Washington and moderate Arab states.

From the moment Sunday's deliberations began, Weinberger suggested he was prepared to fight within the administration against a new U.S.-Israeli military partnership. As the first top official to comment on the massacre, following Reagan himself, Weinberger hinted pro-Iranian fundamentalists of the Shiite sect were to blame. He had no firm evidence, but his insinuations purposely left the way open for Reagan to pursue new understandings with Syria while the CIA and allied intelligence services search for who really did it.

With the instigators of last April's murderous assault on the U.S. Embassy in Beirut still undiscovered after months of probing, it is doubtful that the world soon will learn the identity of last Sunday's terrorists. That makes revenge or sensible retaliation difficult. "The president is not vengeful," a White House aide told us, "because he knows we have not been able to locate or even identify the perpetrators."

That alleviates concerns of Weinberger and the Joint Chiefs that seeking reprisals with the help of Israel's awesome military power would damage the U.S. throughout Islam, from North Africa to the Persian Gulf. Instead of retaliation, the Pentagon wants new ways to guarantee maximum security for the Marines for as brief a time as possible before withdrawing them.

Reagan, who faces devastating political problems at home arising from the Beirut disaster, cannot allow even veiled suggestions that the U.S. will turn tail and run. The president needs time and political changes in Lebanon to prepare removal of the Marines from Beirut's shooting gallery. He is being urged by a variety of advisers inside and outside the administration – including Henry Kissinger – to make a new push for the 1982 West Bank peace plan, using all his influence to force both Israel and Jordan into line.

But no breakthrough on his long-becalmed peace plan is expected in time to facilitate a graceful withdrawal from Lebanon as soon as Reagan wants it and needs it. Weinberger is clearly telling the president that he cannot wait that long to bring out the Marines.

Reagan refused to listen to the secretary of defense and the Joint Chiefs when they warned that he would be creating a disaster waiting to happen if he sent the Marines to Lebanon. Now that Weinberger has been proved tragically correct, the president's ear, for the moment at least, may be more closely attuned to the Pentagon.

Grandiose hopes of a miraculous breakthrough on the West Bank or anywhere else in the Mideast seem as detached from the cold, new reality in this capital as an American-backed Israeli military thrust against Syria. Despite his statement on Monday that the Marines were staying, Ronald Reagan was getting ready to cut losses as soon as he can do it without running away, and that could be the beginning of wisdom.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak write for Field Enterprises.

CHARLEY REESE

Mushroom cloud has silver lining

Nuclear proliferation, aside from allegedly being what worried Amy Carter most in 1980, is one of those false issues which befuddle people.

Charley Reese

It is a false issue because there is no way to stop other nations which have the capacity and inclination from acquiring an atomic bomb or two. India and China cannot feed their own people but they can make atomic bombs.

It is a false issue because the signers of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty talk a good game, but are all greedy to sell nuclear technology and fuel to anybody who can float a loan to buy them.

It is a false issue because acquiring one or two, or even several, nuclear gravity bombs does not make a nation a nuclear power except in the semantic sense. Let us suppose, for example, that Argentina, which seems to be interested in nuclear weapons (it refused to sign the non-proliferation treaty) builds a few A-bombs.

What will they do with them? Bomb the Falklands? A small military garrison on an island full of sheep is not militarily a proper target for a nuclear bomb, especially when the troops and the sheep belong to a nation which can rain nuclear missiles on Buenos Aires in retaliation.

The Argentines can acquire a few atomic bombs, if they want to make the effort, but not an intercontinental delivery system or the civil defense for their urban populations. Some people seem to be so frightened of nukes that when they hear the word, they stuff their minds in the nearest closet.

A nuclear bomb is still a bomb. It must be delivered to the target. If it is and if it detonates, it does what a conventional bomb does only more so, though not infinitely more so. It does not save you from bankruptcy, re-vamp your economy, train your army, and provide the industrial base to make you a major military power.

Atomic bombs serve essentially three functions: (1) to intimidate an opponent; (2) to massacre civilians; and (3) to destroy an opponent's industrial and military complex. However, to accomplish two and three requires lots of atomic bombs and the means of delivering them.

We have legitimately lots of things to worry about but whether or not a few Third World nations acquire atomic bombs is not one of them. They would not be a threat to us if they exploded them on their neighbors and you can be sure the Soviet Union and the United States are not going to wipe out the northern hemisphere just because some tinpot dictator nukes another tinpot dictator.

Actually, it might not be a bad idea to issue each Third World nation a couple of nukes each. The nuclear bomb has kept the United States and the Soviet Union from going to war. It could be that if small nations were faced with a choice of living together or dying together they might be less inclined to start wars.

Wars are started by people, not by weapons, and people usually start them because they think they have something to gain by doing so. The virtue of nuclear weapons is that they make it extremely difficult to confine the nasty side of war to the soldiers and peasants whom most leaders consider expendable. Nobody has yet figured out how to have a nuclear exchange without destroying a lot of valuable property, rich property owners, politicians, and bureaucrats on both sides.

That is the silver lining, so to speak, of the mushroom cloud. Nuclear technology has drafted the world's elites and put them on the front lines. This has created the most cautious elites in the history of the world.

Charley Reese writes for Sun Belt Syndicate.

Seven wounded in anti-government protests

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Riot police clashed with hundreds of protesters in three cities and arrested at least 66 people in demonstrations by opponents of Gen. Augusto Pinochet's military regime. Seven people were reported wounded by gunfire.

All major opposition parties backed the "Day of National Protest," but it was less extensive and less violent than those sparked in six previous months by high unemployment and lack of political liberties.

Only in Concepcion, a port city 300 miles to the south, did the government authorize an opposition rally. About 10,000 people gathered in a vacant lot there to hear Gabriel Valdes, president of the main opposition Christian Democratic Party, urge Pinochet to "abdicate" after 10 years of authoritarian rule.

Police used tear gas to disperse more than 100 youths who tried to march from the rally to the main downtown square. Officials reported 57 arrests in the capital of Santiago and nine in the port city of Valparaiso, most of them at universities.

The military governor of Santiago prohibited a rally called by the National Workers Command, prompting its leaders to call for scattered peaceful protests. The Command includes five federations representing about a fifth of Chile's one million workers and is led by Rodolfo Seguel, president of the Copper Workers Confederation.

Seguel, two other leaders of the Command and several followers were beaten and kicked by 10 policemen during a silent march by about 100 people to the copper workers headquarters. Earier they delivered a list of labor grievances to Pinochet's office.

"We want to return Chile to democracy in a peaceful way, and we ask the government to reflect on the violence of the police today," Seguel said after being clubbed on the neck.

Despite a new decree setting prison or exile terms for those who call such unauthorized demonstrations, none of the labor leaders was arrested. The president announced the new measure Wednesday.

Radio Chilena reported a seventh demonstrator was hit by bullets fired from an unmarked car in the southern suburb of San Miguel.

Soviets may be searching for airliner

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's Maritime Safety Agency said its patrol boats today spotted a Soviet rescue ship which appeared to be conducting an underwater search for the wreckage of a South Korean airliner shot down by Soviet planes Sept. 1.

Agency patrol vessels saw the Georgi Kozumin in international waters, 15 miles north of Moneron, a small island north of Japan off the northeastern Soviet coast, a maritime official said. Four other Soviet ships surrounded the Georgi Kozumin, according to the official

The Georgi Kozumin was displaying international navigation signals warning that it was "conducting dangerous operations" and that other vessels should stay away, said the official.

Iranian backed militia leader, Hussein Musawi (seated) is surrounded by his militiamen Thursday as he tells reporters he had no involvement in the bombing of U.S. Marine and French posts in Beirut, but praised the act and said he hoped to participate in future attacks. Honduras says war probable TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Honduras is asking for closer links with the United States because it expects war with leftist Nicaragua, and a Nicaraguan spokesman says a U.S. invasion of his country is imminent.

Citing the prospect of war with Nicaragua, Honduras said Thursday it had asked to become an associated free state of the United States, much like of Puerto Rico, a U.S. commonwealth. It requested the "indefinite presence of U.S. troops on Honduran soil."

Meanwhile, Nicaraguan army Capt. Hugo Torres, a political liaison with his country's armed forces, said Thursday the U.S.-led invasion on Grenada "is a prelude to an invasion of Central America ... But (the United States) are going to get bogged down in Nicaragua and the consequences will be serious..."

In Tegucigalpa, military chiefs from Honduras, El Salvador, Guatemala and Panama ended a strategy session in which, according to sources, they discussed the alleged threat posed by Nicaragua rulers to Central American security.

Also Thursday, the foreign ministers from Mexico, Venezuela, Colombia and Panama announced they will join their counterparts from El Salvador, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Honduras and Costa Rica on Nov. 17-19 in Panama for another meeting to seek a way to avert war between Nicaragua and its neighbors by demilitarizing the region.

Nicaragua has threatened military action against Honduras and Costa Rica if attacks by CIA-backed rebels based in those two countries do not cease.

About 3,500 American troops have been conducting land exercises in Honduras since August and U.S. warships have been off Central America's coasts since June.

Honduran army spokesman Col. Cesar Elvir Sierra called the military chiefs' meeting Wednesday and Thursday "very positive." Foreign Minister Edgardo Paz Barnica said a meeting of Central American presidents — excluding Nicaragua's — is being planned next.

At the meeting, the chiefs in effect revived the Central American Defense Council, an anti-communist organization set up in 1963, but inactive, except during a brief war between El Salvador and Honduras in 1969.

Paz Barnica said the chiefs "established formulas for consultation for the defense of our countries."

Sources, who insisted on anonymity, said the Nicaraguan situation figured prominently in the discussions.

Nicaragua, was a founding member of the council, but was not invited to the discussion.

"Honduras does not wish a war with Nicaragua," Paz Barnica said. But earlier, Interior Minister Oscar Mejia Arellano warned: "The Honduran army has its finger on the trigger .... A war with Nicaragua cannot be discarded."

Honduras made a request of $10 billion in U.S. aid over the next 10 years to a U.S. commission headed by former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger on Oct. 14, during a visit.

In a statement Thursday, Honduras said it also proposed to Kissinger that the United States and Honduras have a treaty, like the one between the United States and South Korea, that would fortify "the sovereign exercise of our defense."

Nicaragua's Defense Ministry said anti-aircraft fire repelled an attack Thursday night by a rebel plane on a geothermal power-plant, 35 miles west of Managua, the capital. A ministry statement said the plane "fled northeast in the direction of Honduras from where it came."

Torres — the Nicaragauan army spokesman — said rebels in speedboats attacked Potosi, a port 106 miles northwest of Managua, on Tuesday but caused no damage. Raids on the Pacific port of Corinto on Oct. 10 destroyed 3 million gallons of fuel, forcing Nicaragua to tighten gasoline rationing.

Civil rights groups criticize bill

LONDON (AP) — Some civil rights groups are criticizing a new government-sponsored anti-crime bill, claiming it would give police excessive powers.

The legislation, introduced Thursday, would make the tape-recording of all police interviews with suspects mandatory and form an independent authority to hear complaints against the police — currently investigated by the police themselves.

But police would be able to detain a suspect without filing any charges for a maximum of 96 hours, set up random road blocks and stop and search suspects under extended powers.

The respected National Council for Civil Liberties welcomed the recording of interrogations and an independent body to hear complaints against the police.But it joined other civil rights groups in condemning the proposed legislation as nothing more than a new presentation of the original bill which gave police excessive powers without effective safeguards.

Ships escorted from ice pack

MOSCOW (AP) — The last of dozens of ships has been escorted out of an Arctic ice pack in which they had been trapped off northeastern Siberia, the official news agency Tass says.

The last ship freed, the tanker Igrim, reached an "area of easy-to-break ice," off Yakan peninsula on Thursday and was on its way to Vladivostok on the Sea of Japan, Tass said.

It said a convoy of seven cargo ships and tankers, led by the atomic icebreaker Leonid Brezhnev, would start sailing from Blossom Cape off Wrangel Island to the Arctic port of Pevek.

Up to 90 ships were reported endangered earlier this month by an early Arctic freeze.One sank and another was seriously damaged by the ice, Soviet press accounts said. No deaths were reported.

Body of American climber found

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Two Polish climbers found the frozen body of an American climber who disappeared three years ago near the summit of a Himalyan peak, the Indian Mountaineering Foundation says.

Thomas Mutch, 49, suffered a head injury while climbing the 23,545-foot Nun Peak in India's Ladakh region. He vanished after his two companions went down to seek help.

The foundation reported Thursday that the Polish climbers, Boilun Agrez and Pillack Jerzy, found Mutch's body about 660 feet from the summit. His rucksack was still strapped to his shoulders, the climbers said.

The two were unable to bring Mutch's body down from the mountain, but took several photographs to identify the victim and the location.

Search continues for ship

PEKING (AP) — An air and sea search continued today for a missing U.S. oil drilling ship caught in a South China Sea typhoon three days ago. Rescue officials said they had no idea about the fate of the vessel or crew, which included 42 Americans.

The last sign of the 5,926-ton Glomar Java Sea, lost in Typhoon Lex, was a weak distress signal picked up by a Japanese merchant ship 600 miles away early Thursday, the drilling vessel's owners, Global Marine Drilling Co. of Houston, Texas, reported. Counting the Americans, the ship has a crew of 81.

A U.S. rescue center in Okinawa said a Navy aerial search failed to turn up any sign of the vessel and there was no evidence of its location after the typhoon.

The statement by Air Force Lt. Col. Jack Gregory, spokesman for the U.S. West Pacific Rescue Coordination Center, contradicted a report from the U.S. Embassy in Peking that said the center believed the ship had run aground off the north coast of Vietnam.

The embassy said the message came from the rescue center, but there were no details on what led to that conclusion, said embassy officials who declined to be identified.

Global vice president Richard Vermeer said in Houston that a report of the ship sinking has not been verified. He said it is a "physical impossibility" the ship could have been spotted 300 feet underwater in the poor weather conditions.

"We certainly are not in agreement with that report," Vermeer said. "The visibility is not very good. I'm just questioning whether you could see anything that far under those conditions."

Vermeer said he still held out hope the ship would be found.

Vermeer said the ship was reported listing 15 degrees Wednesday and in the path of the typhoon, which packed winds up to 75 mph and churned 26-foot waves. But he said the 400-foot vessel was designed to withstand worse storms.

But an official for Arco China Inc., which leased the ship for exploration in China's Yingge Sea Basin south of Hainan Island, said today, "Our thoughts are divided, but we are not optimistic." He declined to be identified.

Hainan island lies off China's southern coast and is separated from Vietnam by the Gulf of Tonkin.

On Thursday night Arco China reported radio contact with "some sorts of floating objects" had been made by search craft, which included 11 Chinese ships and U.S. aircraft.

The U.S. air search began Thursday and continued until darkness, but it was hampered by bad weather with "low ceilings and poor visibility," Gregory said. The typhoon's strong winds prevented the air search from starting on Wednesday, he said.

The rescue center was notified on Wednesday that the ship's position was about 50 miles south of Hainan Island and 150 miles east of Vietnam.

Then the rescue center learned that a Chinese tug found anchor buoys from the Glomar Java Sea but no debris in that area, Gregory said.

Midland High wired for final 4-5A push

Welbornless Sky Dawgs make key adjustments

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The glamour of the District 4-5A football race seems to have evacuated Midland's Memorial Stadium this weekend as Midland High's Bulldogs host the Abilene High Eagles at 8 p.m. today.

Neither team has a realistic shot at a playoff berth, and instead has settled into a battle for fourth place. Meanwhile, the Lee's and Permian's of the 4-5A world face what would seem to be easy outings in Abilene and Big Spring while Odessa High and San Angelo face a key survival struggle over in Odessa. Midland is the odd man out it seems.

HOWEVER, THE Bulldogs of MHS are hoping tonight's clash will be a springboard for a strong finish.

"Our seniors look at this game from a 4-4 record standpoint, knowing the season still could be one of the best ones in a long time with a strong finish," said MHS coach Pat Culpepper.

Abilene High also figures this game can work for the good of the "program". "We think we have made some progress this year at Abilene High. The San Angelo win was a big one for our program and we can finish pretty good in the last two weeks," said AHS' first-year coach Don Cumpton.

The Bulldogs have not been short on effort this season, but the Sky Dawgs have been grounded by a rash of injuries. Again quarterback James Welborn is expected to be out of action tonight after suffering a knee injury against Odessa High two weeks ago. He may be back for Lee next week.

But offensive tackle Steve Lindsey hurt a leg on Monday in practice and is listed as probable for tonight. Tight end Darrell Davis has arthritus in a knee and may be replaced by Greg Hatcher, a backup center.

CULPEPPER HAS also made massive changes for the defensive unit this week. Junior varsity player Evan Poer will start at halfback and Mike Stanton earns a start at rover. Keith Byrd has moved to safety in an effort to get him in a position to cover the entire field while Jimmy Essman and Albert Reed have been moved to the defensive end slots.

Jeff Alsup, who completed only two of 17 passes while throwing four interceptions in replacement of Welborn last week, will again be at quarterback, but Culpepper says that adjustments have been made to benefit Alsup.

"Jeff's arm is just not mature enough to make the throws that James could, so we've made some adjustments in pass patterns that will aid Jeff. If he shows the same poise he did in the fourth quarter against San Angelo, he will be fine.

"John Atlee had his best game at linebacker last week and that was encouraging. He had 15 first-hit tackles," said Culpepper. "Abilene High runs the sweep so well that the key for us will be the play of Jimmy Essman and Albert Reed at the two defensive end slots. They will have to be very aggressive Friday."

CUMPTON DOESN'T expect an easy battle, despite the Bulldogs' injuries. "We don't know if Welborn will play or not, but they still have those great receivers in Allan Foret, Todd Shiplet and Darrell Davis. I've never seen receivers like that on one team in my life," Cumpton said.

"The tailback (Randall) Collins is a very good back also. Midland High is not limited to just throwing."

What has bothered Cumpton this year is the mistakes his team has made. "We have made some awful mistakes this year at the most critical times. When we don't make mistakes, our team has played very well. The trouble is that we have given up a lot of easy points with mistakes on our end of the field."

The key to the Eagle offense this year has been tailback Guy Sims, a 155-pound junior. Sims ranks seventh in the league rushing race with 579 yards and a 4.5 per carry average. Quarterback Mickey Russell ranks fifth in passing with 466 yards in the air.

However, MHS ranks third offensively in the league while AHS is last. Collins, with four straight games over the 100-yard mark has moved into sixth place rushing with 620 yards, only 42 yards behind Permian's Britt Hager.

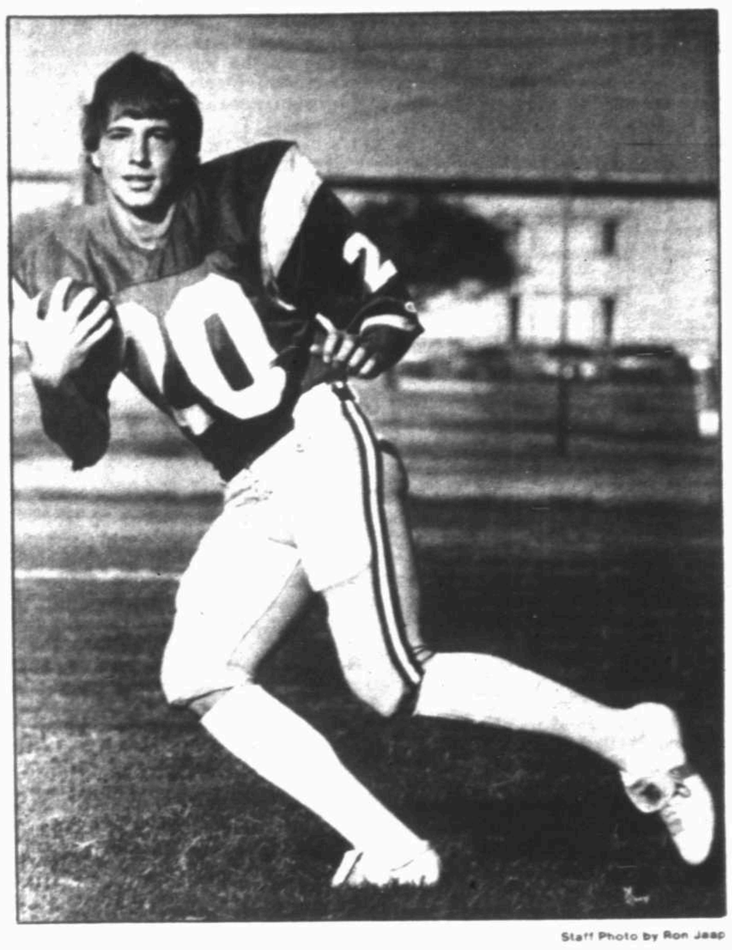

Welborn still leads the 4-5A passing chase with 1,349 yards, but Permian's Rex Lamberti is moving close with 1,055. Foret and Shiplet look to have a lock on the receiving titles. Foret has 541 yards in receptions while Shiplet has 456. The closest to that pair is Big Spring's Robert Porras with 315 yards. Abilene High's Sims has caught 12 passes for 250 yards and his 20.8 yards per reception ranks second in the league with those who have 10 or more receptions. Foret's 33 receptions is another league leading mark.

NBA gates open for 38th season

By The Associated Press

Six of the nine teams with new head coaches open their 1983-84 National Basketball Association seasons tonight as the league starts its 38th year.

Those openers include Atlanta and Mike Fratello at New Jersey, with new Coach Stan Albeck; Boston and K.C. Jones at Detroit, with Chuck Daly; San Diego and Jim Lynam at Portland and Golden State and John Bach at Seattle.

In other openers tonight, Indiana is at Milwaukee, Los Angeles at Kansas City, Utah at Denver, New York at Cleveland and Washington at Philadelphia.

THE OPENERS tonight will be played without the regular referees used by the NBA. The officials and the league have not reached an agreement on a new contract and union counsel Richie Phillips says there will be picketing at the game in Landover, Md. if no agreement is reached by gametime. According to the league, the officiating will be handled by substitute referees who worked the exhibition season.

Bill Fitch of Houston, Mo McHone of San Antonio and Kevin Loughery of Chicago must wait until Saturday to begin with their new teams. San Antonio is at Houston for the game that also marks the debut of Ralph Sampson with the Rockets and New Jersey is at Chicago.

Phoenix is at Dallas in another Saturday opener.

Despite the preponderance of coaches with new teams, all of them have NBA experience.

Three were head men last year — Fitch went from Boston to Houston, Albeck from San Antonio to New Jersey and Loughery from Atlanta to Chicago.

Four others — Fratello, Bach, McHone and Lynam — are going from the assistant coaches' ranks to their first head coaching jobs.

Daly and Jones previously had head coaching jobs and are back this season. Daly was at Cleveland in the 1981-82 season and Jones was at Washington for three seasons from 1973-1976.

"I'm very excited and optimistic," Jones said. "This will be our first season at the helm and I feel we have a real solid nucleus of players returning from last year's team, which finished 56-26."

"I have a solid background in defense and that is how you build winners," Daly said. "Turnovers and too many shots blocked really hurt the Pistons last season. If we improve in those two areas, our defense should be substantially better. The playoffs is our immediate goal."

TWO MORE teams will make the playoffs in each conference under the NBA's new postseason format.

The Bullets, at 42-40, missed the playoffs last season and they have a tough first game against the 76ers, who won 65 games and lost only 17 and then rolled to the title with a 12-1 mark in the playoffs.

Philadelphia is hoping to break a 15-year string of the NBA champions failing to successfully defend the title. No team since the 1968-69 Boston Celtics have repeated as NBA champion.

The Bullets, with a bruising front line of Rick Mahorn, Jeff Ruland and Greg Ballard, are considered one of the most physical teams in the league.

"The strategy for the coming season," Bullets Coach Gene Shue says, "will be no different from last year in that we plan to control the tempo of the game by playing strong defense and utilize the 24-second clock in a control-type offense."

Illinois smells roses as big game nears

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Evidence of the importance of the Michigan game to Illinois fans is all over this college community of 100,000.

"This is what we've been waiting for — 20 years of football rolled into one afternoon," said Miller Winston, selected by the Champaign-Urbana News-Gazette as the top Illini fan. "Everybody is electrified that we're in this position."

Illinois' position is this: undefeated in five Big Ten Conference games, tied with Michigan for first place, and close to the Rose Bowl bid that goes with a league title.

"If we win Saturday, we have an excellent chance of winning our last three games and going to the Rose Bowl," said Winston.

The last time that happened was the 1963 season. The last time the Illini beat Michigan was 1966 and they did it only once in 24 years.

"The fact that it's Michigan makes it even more exciting," said Winston.

The excitement took various forms in the community:

—Winston paid the quarterback club $775 for the privilege of joining Illinois Coach Mike White on the sidelines as an honorary assistant. "I really dislike Michigan and (Coach) Bo Schembechler and I want to be there when he walks across the field and shakes Mike's hand after we kick his butt. It'll be worth every penny of it."

—The owner of the Rose Bowl, a local lounge, decorated his stage with an Illinois flag and the school colors, and planned to display fresh roses on the bar. The Rose Bowl will be the site of the official team party when Illinois gets the bowl bid, said Sunny Norman.

—Disc jockey Stevie Jay of WLRW said listeners were requesting — and he was playing — the new recording by The Highriders, "Rose Bowl Bound."

—Desperate fans advertised for tickets. One of the more creative said: "Help! Dad expects to see the Michigan game. If I don't have two tickets he may stop paying my tuition." And, scalpers advertised tickets at many times the official price.

—The T-Bird, another local bar, sold raffle tickets and the three winners got to smash pumpkins — one bearing a likeness of Schembechler. One contained two tickets on the 40-yard line.

Bruises and smiles show in District 4-5A

Rebs edge 'Dogs in season finale

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The Midland Lee Rebels had to fight off a persistant Midland High charge Thursday night as they held on to win their final District 4-5A volleyball game of the year, 16-14, 13-15, 15-10 at Lee Gym.

The Rebels had a chance to win the match in the second game, controling the scoring most of the way before the Bulldogs fought their way back in it. Lee led by an early 9-2 count and was serving at 13-10 when MHS made its final push.

Lee senior Felicia Farias reached the 13-10 score with a service ace and followed with a net serve which turned the ball over to the Bulldogs, who were unwilling to give it back. MHS' Charlotte Hines served the final five points, getting help from the Rebels on two illegal hit calls and two spikes that went out of bounds. The fifth point was a dink by Laura Martin that broke a 13-13 deadlock and set up the winning point.

The Bulldogs took the early lead in the third game, 4-0, but the Rebels came back to tie the game at 4-4, 6-6 and 9-9 before taking charge for good. It took 17 serves between the two teams before the final six points were tallied with Farias serving an ace for the winner.

During that final stretch, Farias also tallied three spikes while teammate Lesa Burnett added a spike and service ace.

In the first game, Lee jumped out to a commanding 11-4 lead and was up 14-8 before Midland High tied the game at 14. Burnett spiked a winner on defense to give the Rebels the ball and on her first serve came up with a two-hit call against the Bulldogs for a 15-14 lead. On Burnett's final serve of the game, Farias ended a long volley with a spike and a 16-14 victory.

"Felicia and Lesa played good," said Lee head coach Janice Baulch. "They had good sets and good hits. It was an overall team effort and that's about all you can say about it. People gave everything. The players on the court to those on the bench, you couldn't ask for anything more. Midland High also played hard."

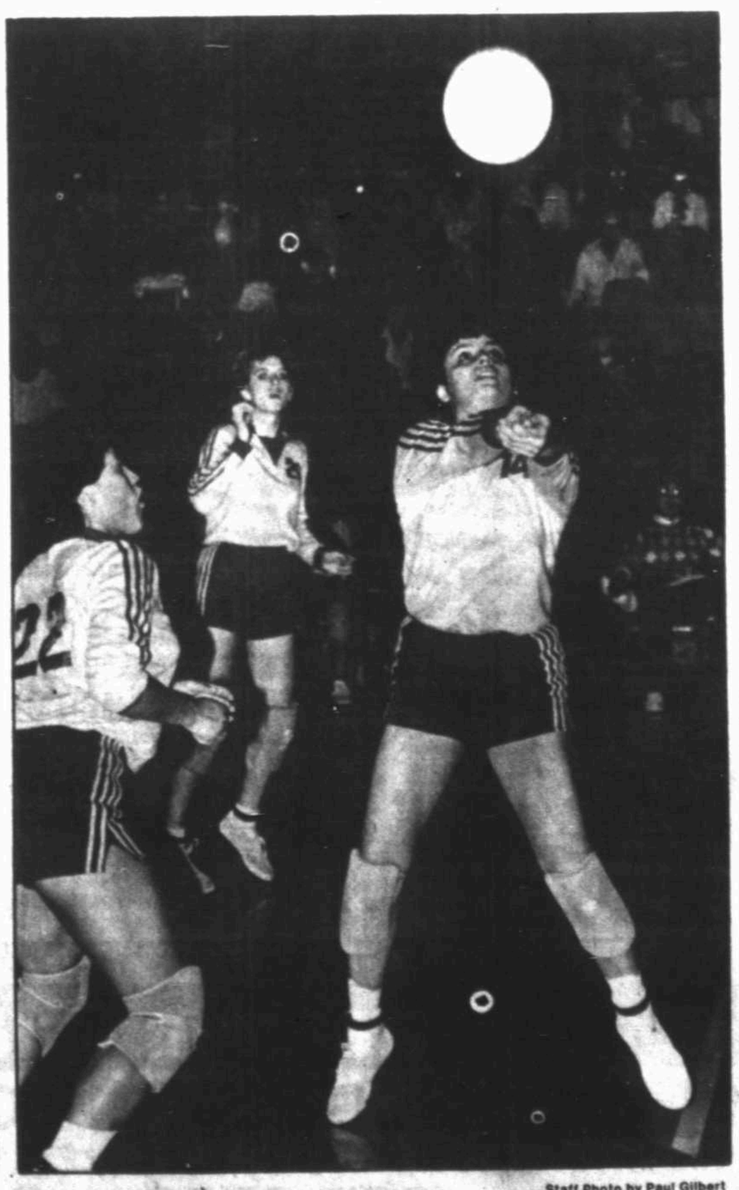

"It's the way we always play," said MHS coach Linda Jolly about the rally that fell short of victory. "We played well in spurts but weren't real consistant."

With the victory, Lee finished the 1983 volleyball season with a 9-5 4-5A record (18-11 overall) to finish third place in the standings while the Bulldogs were 7-7 (16-13).

"The season was a successful one, maybe not as successful as we'd have liked it to be but I can't complain about third place," said Baulch. "The girls played hard and tough. They did a fantastic job this year."

"We could have done better," said Jolly. "The girls did the best they could but there were a lot of games we could have taken."

In junior varsity action, it was Midland High that came away with the three-set victory, 15-11, 10-15, 15-4. The MHS JV was 11-3 in district play.

Oilers becoming NFL's incredible shrinking team

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — Continuous losing, as the Houston Oilers are beginning to discover, can have far-reaching impact. In terms of exposure, the Oilers are rapidly becoming the NFL's incredible shrinking team.

Not only are more and more ticket holders refusing to watch second-rate football, as evidenced by the meager attendance of 39,462 for last Sunday's game against Kansas City, but fewer and fewer fans are being subjected to the Oilers on television.

The latter reflects a command decision at NBC and proves the peacock isn't sleeping on the job. NBC, in what could generously be termed a mercy killing, has reduced the Oilers' television network from 26 stations to 12.

By pulling the plug on the NFL's losingest team over the past two years, NBC has spared its affiliates in North Texas, Oklahoma and areas of New Mexico and Louisiana.

The Oilers, who previously received the most widespread coverage of any AFC team other than Denver, are now seen only south of the Dallas-Fort Worth area in Texas and south of Shreveport in Louisiana.

"We've sort of redefined the Oilers network," says NBC director of sports information Tom Merritt.

"We realized they're not doing that well, and felt we could put in some better games. As far as I know, there hasn't been any hue and cry over the change from North Texas or West Texas."

Credit for NBC making an effort to replace the monotony of Houston's losing with genuine professional football probably goes to Barry Boesch, the radio/TV columnist for the Dallas Morning News. Boesch, in a recent column, outlined the plight of NBC's Dallas-Fort Worth affiliate KXAS.

"It seems so cruel, so heartless," wrote Boesch. "Week in and week out, NBC has subjected the Dallas-Fort Worth area to Houston Oiler games. What have we done here to make NBC hate us so much?"

Boesch backed his thoughts with the plea of frustrated KXAS station manager Frank O'Neal.

"There is a sense up there (New York) that we must be interested in Houston because we are Texas," said O'Neal. "We've tried really hard to be selective, but not with much success."

Success, this time, was just around the corner. The Sunday following Boesch's column, KXAS and 13 other NBC affiliates were blessed with Pittsburgh-Cleveland, instead of the Oilers' fiasco at Minnesota. On most weekends, until Houston regains a measure of legitimacy, a more attractive alternative will continue to be provided.

"Boesch made it a campaign and brought awareness to local stations that they could request a different game if they so chose," advises Merritt.

"What it boils down to is whether we can physically get another game to them. If there is no problem with phone lines, we'll make every effort to provide a better game."

NBC isn't exactly happy over the downturn in fortunes of the Oilers. During the glory years of 1978-80, Houston rivaled Pittsburgh as the network's top attraction. And, because of geography involving AFC teams, the Oilers normally played to more affiliates than the Steelers.

"Our best year in the ratings race with CBS was 1980, and the Oilers had a lot to do with the closeness of it," said Merritt. "We really capitalized on the appeal they had with Earl Campbell and Bum Phillips. From a selfish standpoint, I'm anxious to see them doing well again."

Contributing to the shrinkage of the Oilers' television exposure is the probability all remaining home games will fail to sell out. What that means is a blackout of their largest market, plus the Golden Triangle area. In other words, the Oiler network will be just 10 stations for Astrodome games.

ABC's Monday Night Football, of course, is out of the question for any time in the forseeable future. After providing Frank, Howard and Dandy Don with some of their most unforgettable moments during the Phillips era, particularly with a 35-30 1978 win over Miami, Houston's made only one appearance (1981). Don't look for the Oilers back before 1985, at the earliest.

"It's disappointing, but not totally unexpected," says Houston marketing director Rick Nichols of the reduction in Oiler televison exposure. "We understand NBC's position as far as ratings. If it has another game that can generate more interest to fans not in proximity to Houston, it's hard to fault them for showing it."

Unser close to Indy title

PHOENIX (AP) — It's going to be the fox against the hound in Saturday's Miller High Life 150 Indy-car race at Phoenix International Raceway.

Tom Sneva, who will be trying to win this race for the fourth straight time, will get some of the attention, but the spotlight is focused mostly on the culmination of the season point battle.

Al Unser needs to finish sixth or better in Saturday's 150-miler to sew up his second national driving title and first since 1970.

The 44-year-old will be playing the conservative fox to Teo Fabi's desperate hound.

Fabi, who won his third race Sunday at Laguna Seca, drawing within 15 points of Unser, who was forced to drop out of the race just 11 laps from the end with a broken axle.

Unser says the experience of his 20 years in Indy-car racing should help defuse any pressure he might otherwise be feeling in the finale of the CART-PPG Indy-Car World Series.

"Winning the championship is the most important thing for us," said Unser Thursday during a break in an open testing session on the one-mile Phoenix oval.

"I've still got the lead and he (Fabi) is gonna have to try to win the pole and win the race," added the three-time Indianapolis 500 winner. "I'm gonna take what the car gives me Saturday.

"I never start out a race thinking 'do this" or 'do that. If I'm able to run whatever position, and I can better myself, I'll do it. But the championship is more important, so it doesn't pay to risk your neck to run fifth if you can't do it."

Unser has led the standings all season despite winning jut one race. But Fabi, the remarkable Italian Indy-car rookie, has hung tough, although he insists Unser has the title all but wrapped up.

Braves making move for Rose

ATLANTA (AP) — The Atlanta Braves, who earlier said they had no interest in Pete Rose, have informed his agent that they now have an interest in the first baseman and want to talk.

"Ted (Turner) called and asked us to contact Rose's agent and say we have an interest," Braves executive vice president Al Thornwell said Thursday. "We told his agent there is an interest."

But Thornwell said the Braves have not arranged a negotiating session with Rose or his agent, lawyer Reuven Katz.

Turner was out of town and unvailable for comment Thursday.

Jon English is still trying to play in last three games

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jon English, Tulane's disqualified quarterback, has asked a federal appeals court to order the NCAA to allow him to play the last three games of the college football season.

English, son of Tulane's first-year Coach Wally English, was declared ineligible by the National Collegiate Athletic Association when he transferred to Tulane and tried to play without sitting out a season.

The one-year layoff is required by the NCAA's transfer rule, and English has lost successive challenges of it in court. He has sat out the last two games, although he was allowed to play in six games under court order while judges considered his arguments.

English's lawyers went to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Thursday to ask for a temporary order that would allow him to play Saturday at Baylor.

In arguing the case, English has now gone through four steps of the NCAA administrative procedure, including two hearings, to three state courts and two federal courts.

Lee Rebels sweep up on grid foes

The Midland Lee junior varsity and sophomore teams again used high-octane offenses to gain victories Thursday.

The Lee JV rasied its record to 6-3 with a 33-11 win over Abilene Cooper while the sophomores ended their season at 8-1 with a 34-7 win over Lamesa's junior varsity. Midland High's Bullpups travel to Abilene High Saturday for a 1:30 p.m. game.

Dirk Bergoon led Lee with touchdown runs of 80 and two yards. His 80-yarder opened the scoring for Lee and Lawrence Medlock scored from one-yard out while J.B. Brown converted the two-point run for a 14-3 halftime lead.

Kevin Witt opened the second half scoring with a 30-yard TD and Medlock's kick made it 21-3. Bergoon scored again after Cooper returned the kickoff for a touchdown to make it 27-11 and Brown's 55-yard romp ended the scoring.

Touchdown runs of eight and four yards by Tony Brown helped Lee sophs jump to a 28-0 halftime advantage over Lamesa. Anthony Dickens caught a seven-yard TD pass from Todd Sparks and Novert Morales had a 20-yard run. Dickens kicked two extra points and Carl Long had a two-point conversion.

In the second half, Lamesa scored a touchdown from eight yards out in the fourth period, but Lee answered with a 12-yard TD from Chris Alexander and the final 34-7 margin.

The Lee junior varsity will end its season next Thursday with a 7 p.m. contest at Memorial Stadium against Midland High's JV. MHS defeated Lee's JV earlier this year in a wild-scoring affair, 28-26.

The Lee sophomores' only loss this season came at the hands of Odessa Permian's junior varsity, 18-0, but they did defeat Permian's sophomores by a 12-0 count.

The MHS JVs are 4-4 on the season and could tie Lee's JV record wise with a victory over Abilene High Saturday and a repeat win over Lee on Thursday.

The MHS-Lee confrontation will be a preview of things to come the following night when the Bulldog and Rebel varsities tangel for the city championship at Memorial Stadium.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, October 29, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actor Richard Dreyfuss, Pittsburgh Pirates pitcher Jim Bibby, actress Kate Jackson, singer Melba Moore and Chicago Sun-Times cartoonist Bill Mauldin celebrate birthdays today. Also born on this date: English poet John Keats and Scottish biographer James Boswell. You will have to spend money to make money in the months ahead. Products connected with the sea bring you good luck. You land a major new account when you expand your social circle. Although a family member means well, he/she is not a good matchmaker. Depend on your neighbors and co-workers. The financial outlook is excellent. Golden investment opportunities arise.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Romance and travel go together now. Enjoy the good luck a companion brings you. New financial resources become available. Do not squander them. A "bargain" could turn out to be a gyp.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keep family members informed of your comings and goings. Otherwise, they could feel threatened. Stop telling mate how to live his or her life. Nagging damages your relationship.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Use a direct approach and mate will come around. Those dealing with people at a distance have good luck. Couples need more time alone. Show greater practicality and your finances improve.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your heart and head tell you the same thing. A personal decision is long overdue. Do not be put off by criticism. Keep receipts when entertaining for business purposes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not take what someone says as a personal attack. His or her suggestions are meant kindly. Bite your tongue. A child's actions give you food for thought.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): If planning to diet, start now, not Monday. Regular exercise helps you feel better. Put your intentions on paper so that your whole family can see them and offer helpful ideas.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Adopt a new approach to a family problem. Although travel keeps you away from your loved ones, they remain supportive. A romantic mystery needs to be cleared up without further delay.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New financial benefits are yours if you make the right decision. You enjoy teaching a sibling or friend the right way to do something. Take no chances. Resolve your differences with loved one.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The recreational possibilities are endless. Get together with someone who shares your interests. A last-ditch effort to raise the extra cash you need proves successful. Romance moves you in new directions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A family member encourages your romantic hopes. Someone who has been in seclusion needs to get out and socialize again. You are less flexible when you are not in control.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Prizes and awards will be given to those who make a special effort. Change your attitude if your ideas do not fit a particular situation. Listen to what a child confides.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Sharing is the key to a happy weekend. A visit to the countryside or a park brings special pleasure to couples in love. A charitable organization makes demands. Its goals are excellent!

Prime-time TV week offers sex

NEW YORK (AP) — This was a landmark week for sex and nudity on television.

"St. Elsewhere" had a sexual-bondage scene that was too hilarious to be taken seriously. "Bay City Blues" showed the first bare bottom on any body beyond the diaper stage. And, in "Hill Street Blues," Joyce Davenport offered her husband, Frank Furillo, "a lukewarm bubblebath with a backrub chaser."

Yes, you CAN do that on television — at least on NBC's most sophisticated, realistic programs, all, incidentally, produced by Hollywood's major mind mint, MTM Enterprises. The trick is clever dialogue, written for credible characters, and all part of a tasteful package.

"By and large our tastes are the same as theirs," said Ralph Daniels, NBC's vice president for broadcast standards.

This doesn't mean that Steven Bochco, executive producer of "Hill Street" and "Bay City," and Bruce Paltrow, executive producer of "St. Elsewhere," don't have problems with NBC's censors.

Paltrow had to lobby hard to keep intact the kinky scene from last Wednesday's "St. Elsewhere." Dr. Victor Ehrlich, the show's good-natured, hard-luck lover, meets a cheerful girl-next-door type in the laundromat. She invites him to her apartment, then asks him to tie her hands to the bedposts.

"For a first-timer, you know your knots," says Roberta (Jean Bruce Scott).

"The manual says be prepared," responds Ehrlich (Ed Begley Jr.).

Before anything can happen, Ehrlich accidentally locks himself outside Roberta's apartment building. He tries to break in with a credit card, but a cop catches him first. Maybe if he had been from the Hill Street Precinct, the excuse of having a woman in knots would have washed.

"You're laughing at this, why can't we put it on?" Paltrow said he told NBC's censors. "It's not sex, it's comedy."

"Our sense was that the audience wouldn't see it that way," said Daniels. "There were no consequences shown. There was a casual, joking, almost-winking attitude about it. A lot of women would have been justifiably concerned."

So NBC and Paltrow compromised — he got his scene, in return for a reference that sexual bondage was, in Daniels' words, "not the predominant women's preference."

Brandon Tartikoff, president of NBC Entertainment, said proven producers, like Paltrow and Bochco, have "a little more leeway to veer off five degrees and do things that never have been tried before."

Opening lead: Jack of ♠.

The old stock market adage that bulls make money and bears make money, but hogs get their just desserts, applies to the bridge table as well. Observe this hand.

South elected to open in his four-card, rather than his five-card suit, to facilitate a rebid. North temporized for a round with his two heart bid, then jumped to four clubs to show his fit. Since North was now marked with no more than a singleton diamond, South elected to gamble on a slam, which West greedily doubled.

When dummy appeared, declarer realized at once that West's double was based on the fact that he held both missing club honors. Had there been no double, South surely would have made the percentage play of two club finesses. Now, armed with the knowledge that the percentage line was doomed, he cast about for an alternate.

Declarer won the king of spades, cashed the ace and ruffed a spade in hand. Three rounds of hearts followed, declarer sluffing a diamond. The ace of diamonds was cashed, and a diamond ruffed on the table. Declarer returned to his hand with a spade ruff, in the process reducing his hand to three trumps, then ruffed his last diamond on the board.

Declarer and East were now down to nothing but three trumps each. Declarer simply led the ten of clubs from the board and ran it. West won the queen, but he was end played. He was now forced to lead from his K-7 of clubs into declarer's A-J tenace. So declarer lost only one club trick.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? El Paso Products' employee buyout progressing

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

ODESSA — An employee purchase of El Paso Products' petrochemical subsidiary in Odessa — which may never occur if El Paso Co. finds a buyer who will pay more than the employee-management team for the unit — is moving forward.

Chemicals president O.R. Clements said Thursday, "We anticipate all employees will have broad participation in the program," with the incentive being continued employment, and "the incentive in profit-sharing."

The chemicals unit of Odessa's El Paso Products has not shown a profit since 1981, but Clements said it has definite "possibilities of becoming profitable."

It has reduced workforce and tightened operations this year by laying off 600 employees; leaving a slimmed workforce of 1,200 nationwide and 700 locally. About $25 to $30 million was trimmed in overhead.

Clements estimated the net worth of the chemicals subsidiary as $200 million, and said El Paso Co., which was recently bought by Burlington Northern railroad and resources company, wants to get full value for the company.

Stock ownership will be minor after the buyout, Clements said. Employees "aren't expected to have a major equity position in the firm."

Clements does not want to layoff more people. "Hopefully, that's behind us," he said. "Our employees are cautiously hopeful about the buyout, even though there are tire kickers (other firms) around, who want part or all of the chemicals company, which will have a new name."

The buyout has a Dec. 31 deadline. Merrill Lynch & Co. has been retained by El Paso Co. as investment banker for the sale and has sought outside buyers. Georgia-Pacific Co., the Atlanta forest products firm, considered buying the chemical unit but decided not to.

Other companies, according to Clements, have considered buying only part of the business, which has three petrochemical plants in Texas and four plastic-film plants — two in California, one in Delaware and one in Wisconsin.

"El Paso wants to sell the whole thing," and not just part of it, Clements told the Reporter-Telegram.

"It's in the interest of the stockholdefs of El Paso Products," who will have the hydrocarbons business remaining in Odessa dividended out if this year-end transaction takes place, Clements said, "... all offers must be entertained, and the best one chosen.

"We believe our offer will be the best," he said of the buyout plan. Clements said, "We want the employees to feel they have a part of it (the new chemicals company) and think, 'What's good for the company is good for me.'"

There may be longterm financing from El Paso Co., or longterm contract commitments to sell raw materials to the new company, involved in the transaction. El Paso supplied 88 percent of the chemical unit's need for feedstocks in 1982.

The company can make and market from these chemicals butadiene, etylene, propylene, low-density polyethylene, styrene and polypropylene.

Prices paid for the products have been depressed. As a result, El Paso Products posted a $54.6 million loss in 1982 including nonrecurring writeoffs totaling $25 million.

Through the first half of this year El Paso Products lost $12.9 million. Its 1981 profit, the most recent made, was $8 million.

Donoghue's Money Fund Average (Averages for all 248 taxable funds)		37	8.59	8.67

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 248 money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT of Holliston, MA 01746 increased $682.3 million to $162.7 billion for the week ended October 26, 1983. The taxable funds' 7-day average yield decreased to 8.59% from 8.65%. The taxable funds' 30-day average yield decreased to 8.67% from 8.71%. The taxable funds' average maturity stayed at 37 days for the second week.

William E. Donoghue says, "The $682.3 million increase in taxable money fund assets this week is the largest asset gain since the introduction of bank MMDAs. The largest asset inflows were reported by institutional funds whose 7-day average yield of 9.01% is higher than other money market rates currently available."

Yields represent annualized total return to shareholders for past 7- and 30-day period. Past returns are not necessarily indicative of future yields. Investment quality and maturity may vary among funds. x - average term to next rate adjustment date; g - one-time sales charge; r - restricted availability.

Actor James Drury, star of the television series "The Virginian," recently acquired the movie rights to a book about how the moon was formed. He plans to make the movie in 1985, using a sound stage near Conroe, Texas.

MMH has profit for fiscal 1983

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

During the first meeting of the new fiscal year Thursday, Midland hospital officials were informed they pulled a profit of almost $1 million for the 1983 fiscal year, which ended Sept. 31.

According to the trustees' finance chairman Tom Bruner, the profit is a first for the usually red-ridden Midland Memorial Hospital.

"This will go a long way in improving our standing in the financial community," Bruner said.

The $233,000 excess of revenues over expenses and about $726,000 in investment income and contributions are unaudited figures, MMH president Ray Branson said. Investment income and contributions are used for the purchase of equipment and considered non-operating income.

Because of changes from the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act, the profit of $959,000 may change, Branson said. Audited figures are expected to be released in November.

"We think we're in good shape because our auditors have checked it — like a pre-audit," Branson explained later. "But even a minor change could wipe it out."

Statistics on admissions, emergency room visits, births, surgeries and Medicare utilization for the last year also were given.

In other action, Betty Sumner and Pete Snelson were appointed to fill the positions of trustees Martin Neill and George Veloz, who resigned before their terms expired. The two, who will serve for the remainder of the year, will be voted on later to determine if they will continue in the positions until the terms end Jan. 31, 1986.

According to Branson, patient days in 1983 increased 7.4 percent over 1982; occupancy increased 6 percent; births increased 9.5 percent; same day surgeries increased 19 percent; total surgeries increased 6.2 percent and the average daily census increased 7.4 percent.

Down from 1982 were emergency room patients (11.6 percent) and Medicare utilization (6.5 percent).

The increase in patient days is healthy considering the recession, Branson said. He attributed the growth to "effective marketing of services" and "physicians' confidence in their specialties."

With the increase in births, MMH averaged about 200 newborns per month in 1983. Because of the economy, Branson said he didn't think births would continue to climb as drastically. "We need another (professional) football strike."

An increase in the use of physicians' private offices was the cause of the decrease in emergency room visits, which had risen steadily until 1983, Branson said.

Seventy percent of the patients admitted at MMH go to surgery, he explained, adding, "We're principally a surgical hospital."

Other statistics given included an increase in admissions from 10,275 in 1982 to 11,047 in 1983. Branson said he believes MMH is capturing a larger share of the market than it has previously.

Employee turnover at the hospital has declined from 92 percent in 1980 to 72 percent in 1981. More recent figures were 59 percent in 1982 and only 36.2 percent in 1983.

In other action, officials were told the $15 million, 77-bed expansion would be delayed two months. Revised scheduling calls for bids to be opened Feb. 1, 1984, with construction to start about 30 days later.

An open hearing with the Texas Health Facilities Commission is scheduled Friday on a request for a new CT Scanner, a sophisticated machine which provides X-rays of cross-sections of the human body. Expansion to accommodate the new piece of equipment is "virtually complete," according to trustee John Dorn, and the machine is expected to be delivered a week after the hearing, pending approval.

Two million in junior lien revenue bonds were approved in September to finance the CT Scanner, renovate space to accommodate it and construct the parking garage.

A special meeting of the directors will be held at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday to open bids for the parking facility, to be built on the east parking lot.

During the directors' meeting, approval was given to sole-bidder First City National Bank for the two-year depository contract, beginning Jan. 1, 1984. Pat Estes abstained from the vote because of a conflict of interest.

Banquet honors officers' families

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

A Midland organization which supports all law enforcement agencies deviated Thursday night from its annual appreciation awards to recognize survivors of deceased peace officers.

Midland's Two Hundred Club presented plaques to the surviving families of Deputy John Lightfoot, of the Midland County Sheriff's Office and Officer L.H. "Jack" Burney, of Midland Police Department, during the club's annual Law Enforcement Appreciation Banquet.

Al Mitchell, a member of the club's excutive committee and emcee for the evening at the Holiday Inn, asked Sheriff Dallas Smith and Chief Wayne Gideon to present the awards to the families.

Lightfoot and Burney, who both died this year of natural deaths, were remembered as "excellent men who were appreciated."

"The Two Hundred Club began in 1978 when five civic-minded business leaders in Midland agreed that all enforcement officers in the community needed to be recognized for, and assisted in, their efforts to make Midland a better place to live and work," Mitchell told the capacity crowd of peace officers and their families Thursday night.

The founding members — W.F. Roden, Aaron Giebel, Thomas C. Brown, William B. Blakemore II and Clayton Williams Jr. — "reached in their own pockets for funds from 1978 to 1982," Mitchell added. All five were given plaques for their service.

"In 1982 the Two Hundred Club opened membership to a maximum of 50 members. This is an exclusive club. At the present time, in addition to the original five founding members, the club membership totals 37," Mitchell said.

One of the purposes of the club is to provide funds to Midland peace officers' families who are injured or killed in the line of duty.

"No peace officer has been killed in the line of duty since the beginning of the club," Mitchell said. "But if it happens, we're here for the family."

Other goals include providing special equipment not furnished by the taxpayers, establishing a higher education endowment fund a a local college to assist the children of any peace officer killed in the line of duty, providing immediate funds for those surviving families and funding the Annual Law Enforcement Appreciation Banquet.

Guest speaker at the dinner was actor James Drury, who played the lead in the TV series, The Virginian, from 1962 to 1971. Drury became acquainted with the Texas Rangers Association during his nine years on the show. He is currently on the association's board of directors.

During the banquet, the following Midland law enforcement agencies were recognized: Midland County Sheriff's Department, Midland Police Department, Regional Commander's Office of the Department of Public Safety, the Criminal Law Division of the DPS, the DPS Intelligence Division and Narcotics Division, the Midland Constable's Office, Federal Bureau of Investigation, U.S. Marshal, and all retired peace officers. Also, Midland's district, county and city attorneys and all federal, state district, county and municipal judges and justices of the peace were shown appreciation.

"And a special recognition for a group of people — the most important in the lives of a peace officer — the wives," Mitchell said. "The lady must learn how to cope with the stress of her husband's job, while continuing her other duties. If she fails, the officer will most likely fail."

Although the banquet was held for a serious subject, it wasn't without a touch of humor.

Throughout the evening, several door prizes were given. When the Midland Police Department took all, Sheriff Dallas Smith said, jokingly: "We'd like a recall on some of those and I'd like to talk to you afterwards, Al (Mitchell)."

"I don't believe I want to talk to him," Mitchell answered.

'The Virginian' rides into town

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

While many Midlanders admired the man from the old television series — "The Virginian" — the actor Thursday returned their veneration.

"I'm privileged to be among real live heroes," said James Drury, who was guest speaker at the Two Hundred Club Annual Law Enforcement Appreciation Banquet at the Holiday Inn.

"The acting profession is wonderful to be involved in because you get to know all kinds of people from different walks of life," Drury said. "And those who acted on horseback used the Texas Rangers as models. To play heroes, you've got to know them in real life.

"I've been fortunate to rub elbows from time to time with you and have seen the real drama," he added.

Drury, who became a Los Angeles County deputy reserve when he starred on The Virginian, said he has a great appreciation for the peace officer.

"The peace officer's image is often mistaken," he said earlier during an interview with the Reporter-Telegram. "They do a remarkable job under the circumstances they have, like underfunding."

Because Drury has had a "love" for hunting and gun collecting all his life, it was easy when someone on the set of The Virginian asked him to join the West Hollywood Posse.

"I've maintained my certification," he said. "It's a great organization."

Drury has been living in Houston for the past nine years and said he visits Midland quite often.

"I guess I could have stayed in California and become a California cowboy, but L.A. is a finished city," Drury said. "Houston is a boom town. There's more happening in Texas than anywhere else in the world."

Petrochemical firm sues Interior Department

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland's Texas American Petrochemicals Inc., which claims the U.S. Department of the Interior overcharged it $505,308.67 for 356,328 barrels of off-shore crude oil between October 1977 and January 1981, is seeking up to $1.5 million in treble damages from the U.S. government.

Texas American, which owns a small refinery in Michigan, said in its petition in federal court in Midland that DOI prices exceeded those allowed under the Mandatory Petroleum Price Regulations.

Texas American is seeking treble damages, its says, since DOI's overcharging was intentional and not by mistake.

The petition says that in 1977 the DOI's U.S. Geological Survey (now the Minerals Management Service) contracted to sell Texas American royalty crude oil accruing to the government from oil leases in the public domain.

The DOI administers off-shore royalty crude oil programs under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act of 1953.

The act says the petition, empowers the secretary of the Interior to grant leases for the exploration of and drilling for oil.

In its complaint against DOI and James Watt, former secretary of the Interior, Texas American specifically alleges:

—USGS "improperly added" an administrative fee of 0.5 percent of the price of royalty oil sold to Texas American. The alleged overcharge: $97,559.40.

—USGS charged prices for royalty crude oil in excess of the ceiling prices then allowed under the price regulations, made misapplication of phased decontrol formulas and miscalculation of lower-tier and upper-tier ceiling prices, and improperly added a surcharge. The alleged overcharge: 205,732.47.

Eighteen agencies coordinate local disaster drill

Ice, snow storm provides setting

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

This is a drill:

Thursday, an ice and snow storm crippled West Texas for the second straight day, resulting in several disasters involving persons and property.

It was a fictional stage Thursday, as representatives of 18 agencies gathered at the Texas Department of Public Safety to practice their functions as members of the District 4A Disaster Committee. The committee is charged with coordinating relief in the event of disasters in any of the 21 West Texas counties in the District.

The exercise, which consisted of in-office work at DPS Midland headquarters, involved fictional disasters set against the backdrop of an 8-inch snow, drifts of 5 feet, temperatures ranging from 12 degrees to 28 degrees, and freezing drizzle.

Disasters with which the various agencies dealt included a midair collision between two aircraft, a refinery fire, a petroleum tank truck wreck at a truck stop and resulting fire, a ruptured high pressure gas line explosion, a hazardous materials truck wreck and dumping into the Pecos River, a stranded motorist due to ice and snow, rabid animals in some areas, a hepatitis outbreak, a major loss of electricity due to ice and snow, and the evacuation of several facilities due to weather, hazardous materials spillage, gas line rupture and fires.

"I hope we never have this many disaster occurrences at one time, but that's always a possibility."
— Lt. Jimmie F. Rhoads, DPS Safety Education Service

"I hope we never have this many disaster occurrences at one time, but that's always a possibility," said Lt. Jimmie F. Rhoads of the DPS Safety Education Service.

Agencies taking part in the exercise were RACES, Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation, Texas Department of Human Resources, Texas Railroad Commission, Adjutant General Department, Texas Department of Agriculture, Texas Air Control Board, General Land Office, State Board of Insurance, Texas Department of Water Resources, Texas Department of Health, Public Utilities Commission, State Department of Highways and Public Transportation, Texas Employment Commission, Texas Aeronautics Commission, Governor's Division of Emergency Resources, Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, and Comptroller of Public Accounts.

Rhoads said that through such a simulation the various agencies "can learn the responsibilities of other agencies, what their capabilities are in relation to theirs, and how it all fits together."

Chairman of the District 4A Disaster Committee is Captain Tony White of Texas Highway Patrol, Midland. He is assisted by August Koenning Jr., Regional Liaison Officer for the Midland Region.

Counties in District 4A are Gaines, Dawson, Borden, Andrews, Martin, Howard, Loving, Winkler, Ector, Midland, Glasscock, Ward, Crane, Upton, Reagan, Reeves, Jeff Davis, Presidio, Brewster, Pecos and Terrell.

Nineteen Disaster Districts exist statewide, with the ranking Highway Patrol Officer in each district serving as chairman of the various district disaster committees.

Texas artist explores color, form in works

By ANDREW SELSKY

SHERMAN (AP) — Photography, developed in the 19th century, inspired some artists to reach beyond merely recording reality and begin to experiment with color and form.

Jennifer Spencer of Sherman, who recently earned a doctorate degree in art from Illinois State University, has brought the movement full circle with a style of art called photo-realism.

Artists who rebelled at photography's precise reproduction created paintings that weren't lifelike, but rather seemed to be a crazy mix of colors. Staring at one of those well-done paintings, the viewer might feel the colors seem to move, and the canvas itself might seem to become three dimensional.

"After the invention of photography, imagery declined and the artists became more inclined to look at the relationship of colors to one another," Mrs. Spencer said.

Artists realized that imagery and the effect of color movement work against one another.

"You have to forget the imagery to see color move," she said. In other words, forget what you're seeing — like looking at a book and forcing yourself not to read the words. That's quite difficult, so early artists painted those unrealistic canvases to avoid having viewers distracted by realistic images.

However, some artists eventually left that idea and started painting lifelike scenes again, hoping their viewers were sophisticated enough to forget the imagery and see instead the effect of swirling colors.

Mrs. Spencer explained, "It's a matter of training the eye" to appreciate a work of art on two levels.

Similarly, her artwork exists on two levels. First, one sees life-size and lifelike paintings of people. The paintings are so realistic they look like huge photographs, hence the name of the style of the art.

But to appreciate the second level requires a trained eye. Colors in the very realistic image painted up there on a large section of plywood can actually move...sort of.

This reporter looked at slides of her artwork recenty during an interview. I didn't get the effect. Colors in the projected slides on her living room wall wouldn't move for me.

"That's the danger of my art," she said. "People are not going to see the (color movement) because the image is too well defined. But it's easy for me to forget the image. It's a matter of training your eye."

Colors react differently with one another — certain colors "pull together"— and she uses the behavior of the colors to make her art a cohesive unit.

Texas woman testifies about son's suicide

WASHINGTON (AP) — Her voice trembling, a Texas woman whose 18-year-old son shot himself to death two months ago has told a congressional committee that it can happen in any family — and that parents need to be on guard.

"When we talk about suicide, so many people think of kids on drugs or alcohol and kids who've been in trouble with the law, but I'm here to tell you different," said Elaine Difiglia, 38, of Plano, an affluent Dallas suburb where six teen-agers have committed suicide since February.

"It can happen in the best and happiest of homes," Mrs. Difiglia told the House committee, which is studying crisis assistance for teen-agers. "It can happen to you."

In a hushed committee room on Thursday, Mrs. Difiglia, dressed in a blue suit with a gold butterfly pin on her lapel, described how her son, Scott, committed suicide without warning only hours after chatting cheerfully with her on the telephone.

"There isn't a day or an hour that goes by," she said, breaking into tears, that she doesn't wish "I could talk to Scott, to laugh with him again, to hug him and tell him that I love him and let him know we care."

The suicide epidemic in Plano sparked widespread alarm in the Dallas area and prompted expanded efforts to combat suicide among teen-agers.

Judie Smith, program director of the Dallas Suicide and Crisis Center, told the committee that nationwide 6,000 people under age 25 commit suicide each year and that for every one who is successful, an estimated 50 others try and fail.

One major cause of such suicides, she said, is "the failing of the family as an institution." The Dallas area, with one of the nation's highest divorce rates, also has the second highest suicide rate among adolescents, she said.

A community such as Plano has grown rapidly and the relocation of families has resulted in their leaving behind "friends that are so important in times of crisis," Mrs. Smith said.

The pressure on children to succeed is also intense, with the children setting "high expectations for themselves with overt and covert messages from their parents," said Mrs. Smith.

"High goals of being accepted into a prestigious college, becoming the star football player, being chosen a cheerleader or homecoming queen, or making straight A's may be an unrealistic burden for these teen-agers who are achievement oriented," she said.

Children need Halloween guidelines

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas State Department of Health urges Texas parents to be sure their children are not tricked while out being treated this Halloween.

"Children should only go to homes that have outside lights on as a sign of welcome," said Dan Sowards Jr., chief of Hazardous Product Control at the department. "They should be warned not to eat any of their treats before they get home. And all treats should be examined before youngsters eat them."

Sowards had other tips for Halloween:

— Costumes should be decorated or trimmed with reflective tape which glows in a car's headlights.

— A natural mask of cosmetics is better than a loose fitting mask which restricts breathing or obscures vision.

— If swords or knives are carried, they should be made from a soft or flexible material such as rubber or soft plastic.

MMH profitable in fiscal 1983

Directors also approved paying $218,106 in architectural fees and $181,144 for indigent care for the month of September. According to Branson, indigent care for 1983 increased from $700,000 to $1.2 million. The figure was revised to $1.3 million while the actual amount of indigent care expenses for the fiscal year came to $1.4 million.

Approval was given to sell a piece of property, owned by the hospital district at 1607 Griffin St., to Gerald L. Cox Jr. Cox will pay $1,000 in cash plus assume the closing cost and any taxes.

Directors also turned down a request from Midland County to offer a discount on bills for any county indigent patients treated in the hospital. According to trustee Walter Parks, "I would hope we would write a letter to the county making it clear that the matter is always open to discussion if they come up with any other points they would like to tell us."

—USGS "failed to timely certify the crude oil sold to Texas American as other than lower-tier oil." The alleged overcharge: $202,016.80.

In laying the background for its grievance, the Texas American petition notes that the federal government enacted the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act (EPAA) in wake of the 1973 Arab oil embargo. The price regulations were "to control rapidly inflating prices through...ceiling prices which a producer could charge for various categories (such as "old" and "new" oil) of domestic crude oil.

In referring to the regulations, the U.S. Department of Energy in 1974 had noted that small independent refiners might experience "severe competitive harm" if they had to pay "substantially higher prices...for uncontrolled crude oil." The DOE had noted that "much of the crude oil sold by state and local governments is purchased by small independent refiners.

Federal price regulations were repealed by executive order in 1979. Subsequently, prices of lower-tier ("old") oil and upper-tier ("new") oil began to equalize through the phased de-control of crude oil.

'Bubble boy' doing well, doctors say

HOUSTON (AP) — Doctors say they are encouraged by the condition of a 12-year-old boy who underwent an experimental bone marrow transplant that could free him from the plastic, germ-free bubble he has lived in since birth.

The boy, identified only as David, suffers from severe combined immune disorder, a rare defect that has left his body without the ability to fight germs. He has lived longer than any other person born with the disorder.

One week ago, David received less than 2 ounces of specially treated cells taken from his 15-year-old sister's bone marrow. His physician, Dr. William T. Shearer, said Thursday that David has shown no adverse reaction to the procedure.

Doctors said they will not know for at least three months whether David will be able to leave his isolation unit at Texas Children's Hospital and live safely in the germ-filled world.

Shearer said the boy was in "especially high spirts."

"He's doing all the normal things he would if he were at home. So far, everything is going very well," Shearer said.

'The Virginian' rides into town

Although he has never been a peace officer full-time, the actor is a member of the board of directors of the Texas Rangers Association Foundation, which like the Midland Two Hundred Club, raises funds for officers and their families.

Besides his interest in law enforcement, Drury also has ventured into the mortgage, oil, precious stone and movie business. Although he hasn't been on the "big screen" for several years, he has acted often in the theater.

Currently, Drury has acquired the movie rights to a book about the earth.

"It's the most exciting story for a motion picture I've ever read," he told the crowd Thursday.

"I read the book — 'The Birth of the Moon' — a month ago," he said. "It's authored by Lewis Manson, a geophysicist who's theory is that the moon is really part of the earth."

Drury said he plans to begin filming the picture in 1985. He said he would like to use the "world's largest sound stage that is being built in Conroe, near Houston."

Texans reclaim $490,000

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans with unclaimed and abandoned deposits have had $490,000 returned to them since Oct. 5 by Treasurer Ann Richards.

"The figure is still rising," she said.

Since the list of 20,000 names of people and organizations who have $50 : more in the Texas Treasury Unclaimed Money Fund was published in 35 Texas newspapers, the department has received more than 5,000 telephone calls and almost 10,000 pieces of mail.

"The response to this effort has been overwhelming," the treasurer said. "Our telephones begin ringing early in the morning, and they continue to ring at a fast clip all day long."

State law says that bank accounts and other types of accounts which are abandoned or unclaimed must be turned over to the state treasurer, who then is responsible for holding the funds until claimed by the righful owners.

Ector County deputy injured in collision

ODESSA — An Ector County Sheriff's deputy was treated and released at Medical Center Hospital Thursday, following a collision in Odessa.

According to the Odessa Police Department, Deputy Freddie Lee Hobbs, 52, of Odessa, was westbound on West 2nd Street and Thomas Allen Putoff, 37, of Midland, was southbound on Vine Street when the two cars collided.

Hobbs' car went on its side and Putoff's van-truck made a complete circle before stopping, according to Odessa police.

Putoff was not injured, and Hobbs was treated and released at Medical Center Hospital.

People pay $50 to walk in fire

Copley News Service

LAKESIDE, Calif. — Cannon Goodnight stood barefoot and excited before a bed of red-hot embers. He clenched his right fist, closed his eyes, turned his face to the starlit sky and sucked in several great gulps of air.

Goodnight was determined to walk across the burning embers in his bare feet because Hal Slater told him that by doing so he could turn his fear of getting burned into power.

Fear is simply illusion, Slater contends. Goodnight paid Slater $50 to convince him of that.

Goodnight clenched his right fist because Slater said the power would reside there. He closed his eyes because Slater told him to imagine that the bed of burning coals was really a patch of "cool, green moss."

Muscles in Goodnight's right leg tightened; his breathing got rapid and loud; he pumped his fist against is leg; he was just about ready to go. Then he stepped away. The two dozen other potential "firewalkers" standing around the bed of hot coals sighed collectively, but said nothing.

THEY HAD ALSO paid Slater $50 to be led over the coals that night. And, like Goodnight, they all had signed a waiver absolving Slater of responsibility if they got burned. Goodnight was the first volunteer.

Apparently, Goodnight had not quite transformed all of his fear into power. The material before him still seemed a lot more like burning coals than cool, green moss.

Then Goodnight did it. He slid his feet a final time through the soaked and gushy grass surrounding the coals and walked in three brisk strides over the pyre of oak.

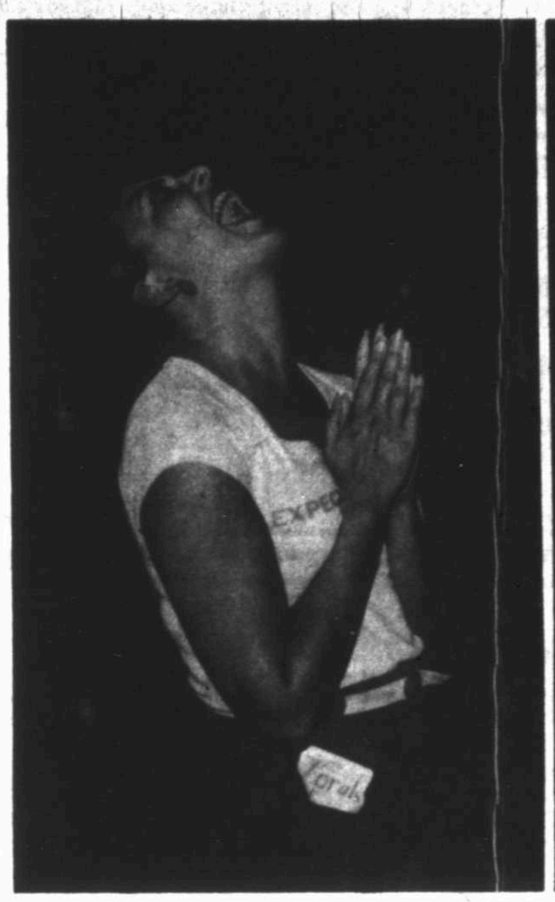

When it was over, Goodnidht thrust his fist skyward and the others rushed up and hugged him. He whooped like a triumphant Indian brave and the others chanted: "Cool, green moss. Cool, green moss. ..."

"I'm moving to a new spiritual level in my life," said the exhilaraten Goodnight, "a level that will become a channel to the Holy Spirit. After this tonight, my word will become law — whatever I say I will do, I will do. Now that I've walked on fire, I'm wondering what's next."

Goodnight said he makes his living as a image consultant.

"Before, I would do seminars for 20 people, but now I can do them for 1,000, if I like," said Goodnight. "This took away all those limits for me."

Slater, a former automobile salesman, listened to all that and was pleased.

CNS Photo

Zorah Peters, left, exults after safely completing a stroll over burning embers. Robert Lee, right, paid $50 like Peters to walk barefoot through the fire.

SLATER AND HIS wife, Carol — who both wore buttons reading, "This is no ordinary person you're dealing with" — operate their own seminar-giving enterprise, known as Advanced Communication Training, from their office in nearby San Diego.

They employ a practice called Neuro-Linguistic Programming which, according to their brochure, is a "systematic and sensory-based description of the relationship between states of consciousness and physiology. Understanding this relationship will permit the trained communicator to achieve nearly any desired outcome."

It will even turn fear into power and allow anyone who wishes to walk on hot coals without any ill effects, or so claim the Slaters. More than half of the 25 people attending did choose to walk over the coals. It is strictly a matter of choice, although peer pressure plays a powerful role.

There was no gimmick — the glowing coals were between 1,800 and 2,200 degrees Fahrenheit, claimed Slater, who hammered home the notion of how dangerous the exercise could be to the ill-prepared. He cautioned everyone: "Don't run, but don't linger."

Most got through the coals in three quick steps, ostensibly protected by the power of their minds, although the thoroughly soaked grass surrounding thd embers may have helped protect soles against chinks in concentration. Certainly there were no lingerers.

IT WAS AN ordinary setting: the backyard of a simple, yellow, stucco home in a middle-class neighborhood. Out front, Charlotte Tenney, who walked the coals for the first time in September and now was a full-fledged disciple, sat at a folding card table collecting $50 from seminar participants.

They included a dentist, a masseur, a salesman, a teacher, some members of a local women's club and heir friends and relatives. Most were dressed in shorts and sports shirts and sneakers and they all looked ordinary enough.

Among the first to try it, Rhonda Morris, 27, was burned and in obvious pain. She whimpered, cried, hugged people and tramped her feet in the soaking grass for several minutes after her walk. But the next morning Morris defended the experience.

"My left foot feels fine, the blisters had disappeared by morning and there are only some red snots left," she said. "But half the blisters are still there on my right foot and it's real tender. It really hurt afterward."

DEAR ABBY

Mother fears for lovesick daughter

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I need some advice fast. I have a 13-year-old daughter who is crazy in love with a 19-year-old neighbor boy. Today, you hear about 12- and 13-year-old girls getting pregnant, and I am out of my mind with worry. So how do I keep my precious daughter from making this mistake?

Abby, I pray every night, and I know God hears me, but I need to know how to handle this in a calm manner. Every time I think of it, I cry. I hear her talking to her friends on the phone, and I know she is in terrible danger. She "loves" this boy so much, she would do anything he asked her to do. (I pray to God she hasn't already done it.)

I can't lock her up. I have talked to her about love, making love, and how important it is to save herself for marriage, but I'm not sure I got through to her. Please help me. I am desperate. — GOING CRAZY

DEAR GOING: First, have a calm, non-judgmental, heart-to-heart talk with your daughter and find out what the relationship is between her and the 19-year-old neighbor man — not boy. Does he have a serious interest in your daughter? Or is she (like many 13-year-old girls) living in a dreamworld?

If your daughter is sexually involved with this young man, have a talk with him. Does he know that sexual intercourse with a minor is statutory rape? And does your daughter know everything she needs to know about how to prevent an unwanted pregnancy? (Don't make the mistake some mothers make in thinking that if they discuss this with their daughters it's the same as giving them permission. It's not.)

If your daughter has a father, include him in this discussion. She's his daughter too. (P.S. Prayer is wonderful. But it's a very unreliable contraceptive.)

DEAR ABBY: After a homosexual male has had a sex-change operation and becomes a female, is he then a heterosexual, bisexual or is he still a homosexual? This is not a joke, Abby, it's a question that has been puzzling me for a long time. — CURIOUS

DEAR CURIOUS: If the sex-changed female chooses for her sexual partner another female, she is a lesbian. If she prefers males exclusively, she is heterosexual, and if she enjoys sex equally with both males and females, she is bisexual.

'Family of the Year' award nominations end Saturday

Nominations for "Family of the Year," sponsored by The Midland Wards of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, will be accepted through Saturday.

The winner will be announced by Mayor G. Thane Akins at a public award presentation, 7:30 p.m., Nov. 18 at the chapel, 2101 Tarleton St.

The sponsoring Church's members are not eligible for nomination.

The "Family of the Year," is in conjunction with the observance of National Family Week, Nov. 20-26, established in 1979 by former President Jimmy Carter. The joint congressional resolution calls attention to the important part the family plays as "the basic strength of any free and orderly society."

Nominated families should be active in the church and community, have high moral standards and exhibit family solidarity.

Persons who wish to nominate a family may send the name, phone and address of the nominated family to "Family of the Year," P.O. Box 80232, Midland, Texas, 79709 no later than Oct. 29. Participants are asked to include comments about why the family qualifies for the award. The person nominating should also include their name, address and phone.

Children's books written for Halloween reading

Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — It's witching time again, and here is a selection of children's books in the chilling and thrilling spirit of the season.

For young children, Felicia Bond captures with whimsy "The Halloween Performance" and the trepidation of waiting for one's stage cue. The little mice who perform for their parents are winsome, and the satisfaction of Roger, the mouse who plays the jack o' lantern, is contagious.

"It Hardly Seems Like Halloween," complains the young hero of David S. Rose's wonderful picture book. All dressed up, dragging his trick-or-treat bag and accompanied by his dog, he wanders through the night. "Where are all the wizards and terrible lizards?" Of course, the wizards, lizards and all the phantoms he has imagined materialize behind him, around him — but just out of his sight. Young readers will enjoy the inside joke, and respond to the rich and evocative art work.

There are plenty of ghosts and goblins in James Stevenson's "What's Under My Bed?" Many readers 4-8 already know Mary Ann and Louie and their wry grandpa. To reassure them about their nighttime fears, grandpa recounts the scary night he once had as a child, and the two children then reassure him.

Alfred Noyes' thrilling ballad, "The Highwayman," probably has convinced more students of the worth of poetry than any other poem. This edition is distinguished by the stunning illustrations of Charles Mikolaycak, which are filled with the drama and suspense of the tale. Readers 10 and up will be mesmerized by the rhythm, and will listen for the ghost of the highwayman riding, riding — perfect reading for Halloween.

Study: Many bypass operations needless

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of heart patients who are candidates for coronary bypass operations could avoid, or at least delay, the surgery with no added risk of death or severe complications, according to a 10-year study.

The National Institutes of Health study said there has been a trend toward performing bypass surgery on patients with less severe heart conditions. In these cases, it said, the operations do not prolong life any better than more conservative drug therapy.

Many heart disease patients with mild chest pain and those who survive heart attacks without complications do not necessarily need coronary bypass operations, the $24 million study said.

If heart specialists adopt the study's recommendations, up to 25,000 of the estimated 170,000 bypass operations performed annually in this country could be avoided or postponed.

Because the operations typically cost between $15,000 and $20,000, resulting in a total annual cost of about $3 billion, this could represent a yearly savings of up to $500 million in health care costs, the report said.

The study, which involved screening thousands of heart patients at 15 medical centers, resulted in a randomized clinical trial involving 780 patients, most of them white men with an average age of 51 years.

The researchers found "no significant difference in survival between medically or surgically assigned patients overall."

"At six years, 90 percent of the medically assigned and 92 percent of the surgically assigned patients are alive," said the report.

Coronary bypass operations involve using a blood vessel taken from another part of the body to carry blood around heart arteries clogged with fatty deposits. The detour increases blood flow to oxygen-starved tissue, decreases pain and reduces the possibility of massive heart attacks.

The Coronary Artery Surgery Study, known as CASS and sponsored by NIH's National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, said data does not support a trend toward more bypass surgery for patients with moderate symptoms with the intent of increasing their long-term survival.

However, the study did find that bypass patients suffered less chest pain, and required less subsequent drug therapy than heart patients who received other forms of treatment. They also did not have as many limitations placed on their activity.

These "quality of life" factors also should be considered when deciding upon therapy, it added.

Dr. Eugene Passamani, the institute's project officer for CASS, told a news briefing that most bypass operations are used to treat angina pectoris, the severe chest pain that arises with activity.

Fungus, AIDS link studied

BOSTON (AP) — Federal scientists are "working around the clock" on a theory that a plant fungus may cause AIDS by spewing out chemicals that suppress the body's natural defenses against disease, a researcher said.

Although the research is still in its early stages, the scientists suspect that the fungus — found in cultures of some AIDS patients' blood — produces a substance that mimics a drug usually given to organ transplant patients.

That medicine, called cyclosporin, suppresses immunity so that the body won't reject the new organ.

The doctors, with the National Institute of Allergy in Bethesda, Md., said the fungus may be the primary cause of AIDS or may somehow contribute to the patients' immunity suppression.

However, the researchers cautioned that this fungus may turn out to be simply another opportunistic infection which takes advantage of the body's lack of defenses.

Victims of acquired immune deficiency syndrome lose their ability to ward off disease, and they frequently die of rare illnesses like Kaposi's sarcoma, a cancer.

"We are working around the clock on it," Dr. Thomas Folks, one of the scientists, said in an interview. "We are very excited about it."

The fungus — Thermoascus crustaceus — is ordinariily found in plants in many parts of the world and has never been known to cause disease in humans.

Experimental herpes vaccine tested

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

NEW YORK — Researchers at the New York State Department of Health have said they produced an experimental vaccine that protects laboratory animals against some strains of herpes. The scientists predicted that the technique eventually could be used to innoculate humans against sexually transmitted herpes.

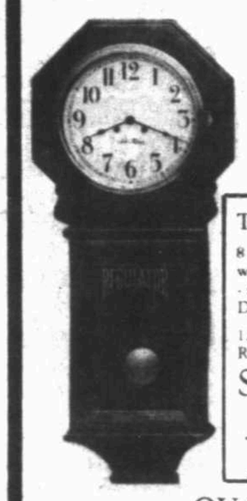

The researchers, who also manufactured vaccines against hepatitis and influenza through genetic engineering techniques, said it now appears possible to produce a single vaccine to simultaneously guard against as many as a dozen diseases.

While clinical trials on humans are several years away, the scientists reported 100 percent protection in mice against the Type I herpes virus, which causes cold sores in humans. A separate vaccine against Type II herpes simplex, genital herpes, is being animal-tested.

Enzo Paoletti, a senior research scientist at the Health Department's immunology laboratory, said that while many more animal tests were required, a "reasonable hope" exists that a human vaccine against genital herpes can be developed.

Travel possible during pregnancy

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am pregnant for the first time and my husband and I would like to do some traveling before we get tied down with the baby. Is there any reason I should not travel while I am pregnant? If I can travel, is there anything I can do to make things easier for myself? — Ann, Detroit

Solomon

Dear Ann: In response to your first question, I suggest you ask your obstetrician if there is any reason you should not travel. Pregnancy, itself, is not a contraindication.

As for your second question, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists suggests the following: Try to travel during the second trimester, the fourth, fifth, and sixth months of pregnancy. If you are traveling by car, wear a seat belt and make frequent stops so that you can walk around and thus increase the circulation; if you are traveling by air, try to get an aisle seat so that you can get up and walk around without too much difficulty; if you're traveling a long distance, a train might permit more freedom than a bus.

If you will be engaging in exercise during a trip, stick to familiar sports and avoid becoming overheated; if you will be out in the sun, use a sunscreen since your skin may be more sensitive during pregnancy. Finally, if you plan on doing any traveling overseas, ask your physician about the advisibility of being vaccinated.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been following the questions and answers in your column about the value of exercise, if any, in preventing heart attacks, and I'd like to ask a question of my own. Suppose a person has a heart attack, does the fact that he was a physically active person before the heart attack make any difference? — Cal, Timonium, Md.

Dear Cal: Individuals who engaged in vigorous physical activity before they suffered a myocardial infarctin have a lower fatality rate during the first two years after the attack than do individuals who were less active. This is the conclusion of a group of Finnish researchers who reviewed almost 500 cases of myocardial infarction.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have heard that steroids can work wonders in patients with rheumatoid arthritis, but I have a nephew with rheumatoid arthritis who asked his doctor about it, and the doctor said that he would not prescribe steriods for him. What gives? — Mrs. A.H., Youngstown, Ohio.

Dear Mrs. H.: Dr. Steven Abramson, of the New York University School of Medicine, explains that steroids do not prevent the long-term destructive effects of rheumatoid arthritis, even though they have a positive effect on symptoms in the short term. I assume that your nephew's physician is looking for more than a quick fix.

Friars 'roast' over discovery that Diller crashed party

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Phyllis Diller says attending a men-only Friars Club roast in disguise fulfilled a "great fantasy" for her. But her architect friend, Howard Rose, has some explaining to do.

The 66-year-old Miss Diller combed her short hair like a man's, wore a false mustache and dressed in drag for the Oct. 20 Friars Club roast of comedian Sid Ceasar. It also was attended by 2,200 men, with comedian Buddy Hackett as roastmaster.

But Rose, who got her a ticket, has been invited to the Friars' next board meeting Nov. 12 to explain how Miss Diller got in, Jean Pierre Tebet, director of the 79-year-old male bastion, said Thursday.

Tebet said he assumed Rose "will be reprimanded...if, indeed, he is the person who invited her."

Women are not permitted, he said. "It's never happened before. It's against the rules."

Miss Diller, contacted in Israel where she is playing in a celebrity golf tournament, said Rose "didn't break the rules. I did."

It was "a great fantasy of mine" to attend a stag roast, she said.

Asked why the Friars Club bans women at its roasts, Tebet explained, "The language gets kind of graphic."

Hamill

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dorothy Hamill, winner of the Olympic gold medal for figure skating in 1976, says she was wrong to think life would be "a piece of cake" after her Olympic victory.

"I wasn't used to being treated as a star," said Miss Hamill, as she set out Thursday on a winter tour with the Ice Capades.

"I was a simple girl from Riverside, Conn., who won the Olympics at 19. I had to grow up all of a sudden," she said.

"I had to be without my family, who I missed. I had to live in strange hotels every week; travel, which is very taxing; do the interviews, which I certainly wasn't able to handle."

As a result, she wound up hospitalized with a bleeding ulcer two years after her Olympic triumph.

But these days, she said, those problems are behind her, and she has a full professional schedule. On the Ice Capades tour she will perform nine times a week through the end of the year.

That's in addition to television work. She also has a book coming out next month, called "Dorothy Hamill On and Off the Ice."

LONDON (AP) — Actor Laurence Olivier, Princess Margaret and a host of other actors and friends gathered to pay tribute to the late actor David Niven as a man "who gave millions so much happiness."

"We're not here for anything so solemn or ponderous...as a memorial service. That would not be his style," said Niven's close friend, British playwright John Mortimer, at a service Thursday at St. Martin-in-the-Field Church in Trafalgar Square.

For Niven, "the bad times, the dotty film directors, the misadventures, all became subjects for laughter, but laughter without malice, without bitterness.... I shall hear it always," he said.

Niven died July 29 after a battle with amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, or Lou Gehrig's disease. He was 73.

Lord Olivier, 76, read from the Bible as a choir sang "The Lord Is My Shepherd." Others in attendance included Niven's widow, Hjordis, movie stars Douglas Fairbanks Jr., Deborah Kerr and Sir John Mills and film director Sir Richard Attenborough.

"This is a service of thanksgiving, of gratitude for the man who gave millions so much happiness," Mortimer told the congregation.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A hearing on whether "Tonight" show host Johnny Carson should pay his estranged wife $220,000 monthly support has been postponed and a court session scheduled for today on whether a new judge should be assigned to the case.

Pending resolution of their divorce, Joanna Carson has asked for $220,000 a month.

Cowboy Hall of Fame's director urges withdrawal of new book

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Dean Krakel, director of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame, has asked the Library of Congress to withdraw its book titled "The American Cowboy."

"My faith in our national library has been shattered," Krakel said on Thursday. "There are enough serious errors, in my opinion, in the 228 pages to require that this book be recalled like a new automobile model whose brakes are suddenly discovered to be faulty."

The book, written by Lonn Taylor and Ingrid Marr, describes the cowboy as "a laborer — a common, ignorant, ditch-digger-type laborer. The only difference between the cowboy and other laborers is he must often ride a horse out to where he is to do his labor."

Bullet taken from newsman's neck

LOS ANGELES (AP) — One of two bullets that hit television anchorman Jerry Dunphy in an assault outside KABC studios has been successfully removed from his neck, and the newsman continues to recover, a hospital spokeswoman says.

Dunphy, also wounded in the arm Monday night, spent 50 minutes in the Hollywood Presbyterian Hospital operating room Thursday for the neck wound. The procedure took 20 minutes, said hospital secretary Lavonne Bishara.

The surgeon, Dr. David Ditsworth, made an incision less than one inch long and used local anesthetic, she said, reading from a prepared statement.

"The neurosurgeon indicates that Mr. Dunphy has no neurological deficits and expects no further problems from the neck wound," she said. "Mr. Dunphy's left arm continues to progress satisfactorily."

Young man's laughter dies in Beirut terrorist bombing

By DEBBIE MANN

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Tim McMahon was a lanky 14-year-old when we first moved into the house across the street in a typical suburban Austin neighborhood.

Since he was the same age as my little sister Jacquie, he was closest to her. They ran around in the same crowd during the summer and Tim was always a welcome sight at our house.

He was the kind of boy who always had a grin on his face and a twinkle in his green eyes. He could comfortably carry on a conversation with my father, always starting, "Hey, Mr. Mann."

During the few summers we lived there, my sister Cindy was a lifeguard at the pool and helped coach the swim team, of which Tim was one of the few older members. He was always encouraging the younger swimmers and was there for the team picture when they finished in first place.

During those hot days, Tim and Jacquie and the rest of their friends would spend their lives at the pool. The boys practiced diving off the high board, trying to create a wave big enough to douse the girls working on their tans.

Cindy remembers Tim as one of the best of the group. He would push the lifeguards so far but he knew when to get serious. He never went over the limits.

I remember Tim folding his already long body into our Chevette as we headed for the pizza restaurant or to a movie. We were all laughing and joking and feeling close and happy.

Four years ago Wednesday, Tim gave Jacquie her first "real" kiss but it was a short-lived affair. Their friendship was more important. He was 15, she was 16 then.

We moved out of the house before Jacquie and Tim graduated from high school. My parents divorced and Jacquie leaned on Tim's friendship. Then she came to Corpus Christi to live with me and we lost touch with Tim.

But last February, Jacquie visited Tim in Austin. He had joined the Marines, buzz haircut and all. He told her he might be sent to Lebanon and he was very excited about it. He told her he was going to marry a neighborhood girl in December.

We thought he must have been doing well in the Marines to be sent into action.

Last Sunday, when I heard about the explosion and deaths in Beirut, I thought of Tim. But I didn't know if he was still there and I thought chances were slim that he was asleep in that building so far away.

Sunday night, Jacquie had a dream. She called his mother the next day and found out Tim was missing. They wouldn't tell his mother any more than that.

Tuesday, Cindy called from Austin. A television station there had a special report. They showed the flag at Anderson High School at half-mast and interviewed a teacher. They confirmed what we had feared. Tim didn't make it.

When I opened the paper yesterday morning and saw his name, I cried again. There's something devastating about seeing it in black and white.

In a single flash, all the laughter and goodness in that 19-year-old vanished.

I don't deal well with death. No one close to me has died when I've been old enough to realize what it meant. But Tim, private first class, knew. His father had been a Marine.

It's painful to know only one sentry with an unloaded gun stood between Tim and that truck. He and the rest of those boys deserved more than that. It was our responsibility to give them all the protection necessary.

We failed.

Marine colonel expects more violence

AUSTIN (AP) — The Marine who led the unsuccessful mission to rescue American hostages in Iran predicts that U.S. servicemen in Lebanon will be plagued by more violence.

"The object is to, psychologically and physically, show they don't want us there. No question about that," Col. Charles Beckwith told the Dallas Times Herald Thursday.

Beckwith led the Army anti-terrorist team that tried to rescue the American hostages in Iran in 1980. He is now retired.

Beckwith, who runs a security company here, said he was "not prepared to comment right now on whether it is right or wrong" for the United States to be in Beirut.

"If it's determined by the president to be prudent, then I support it," he said.

But Beckwith added "we've got to do some soul searching and decide exactly what we want to accomplish there."

He predicted security will be increased at the Marine installation in Beirut, where a bomb killed more than 200 American servicemen Sunday.

"It's unfortunate; it's a tragedy," he said. "We have to lick our wounds a little bit and determine what course to take."

Beckwith said that Marine Commandant Gen. Paul X. Kelley's visit to Beirut will result in "some very positive action on the part of where the Marines are located.

"Surely they will move them to a more defensible position. And I certainly think the rules of engagement will be changed to rules that protect the lives of American servicemen," he said.

Beckwith said the nature of the U.S. peacekeeping mission left the Marines vulnerable.

"You have to remember what the nature of the force is," Beckwith said. "It is there purely for show and to help keep the peace. They weren't sent to be in an offensive mode. They weren't even equipped to do that, so if someone decides to come in and attack you, you are very vulnerable."

The United States should not underestimate the terrorists, he said.

Beckwith called the dual bombings of the French and American bases "a carefully planned and thought-out suicide mission," adding that the explosives used in the attack probably were a type normally difficult to obtain.

No change in Marines condition

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A Brooke Army Medical Center spokesman says that the conditions of two U.S. Marines airlifted here from Beirut remains unchanged today.

Lance Cpl. Terry L. Hudson, 22, of Prichard, Ala., remains in critical condition with burns over 40 percent of his body and severe lung damage, said Capt. Julio Reyes, burn unit administrative officer.

He said that Sgt. John E. Gibson, 25, of Springfield, Mo., is listed in serious condition. But family members said he seemed improved and had even started joking with them.

Both Marines were transported to the medical center's burn unit here Tuesday from a military hospital in West Germany.

Bush confused over location of U.S. troops

DALLAS (AP) — Vice President George Bush, quickly recovering from a mistaken reference to Lebanon as "Vietnam," told Republican loyalists he has warned the Lebanese government that the United States expects it to "go the extra mile" towards peace.

Bush said in a speech to 1,200 people at a $1,000-a-plate dinner Thursday night that the Reagan administration's commitment to Lebanon remains unshaken by the terrorist bombing that killed more than 200 Marines and Navy personnel.

Weary from his quick visit to Beirut 48 hours earlier, Bush prefaced his remarks by saying, "I want to share with you some of my experiences there in Vietnam...there in Lebanon."

Peoples Does Not Have Problems!
No more likelihood of contracting hepatitis at People's Restaurant, N. 4400 Big Spring St., than in any other restaurant in Midland, according to Don Goodrum, chief sanitarian of the City-County Health Department.
Business has dropped off drastically at People's in Midland, say restaurant officials, after an outbreak of infectious hepatitis in Lubbock was linked with a People's Restaurant in that city.
"We have no reason to believe that there is a problem with People's in Midland at this time", said Goodrum. "It's a very nice restaurant and well-maintained. We inspected it Oct. 13 on a routine inspection, and four very minor violations were noted. Out of a possible 100 score, People's Restaurant scored 92. That is above average."
The local People's Restaurant is a franchise operation, not a company run store.

Humorous letter may help case

NEW YORK (AP) — The brother of a former Army doctor convicted of killing his wife and two children says he hoped an obscenity-filled letter he sent to Attorney General William French Smith "might appear to be somewhat humorous" and would help his brother's case.

James B. MacDonald, 41, was held on $100,000 bail Thursday on charges of mailing a threatening communication after telling a federal magistrate he also wrote to President Reagan and FBI Director William Webster seeking freedom for his brother, former Capt. Jeffrey MacDonald.

According to court documents, the letter demanded action from Smith "or I'll personally drag (you) through the streets of Washington ... and then I'll personally feed (you) to the pigs out on the ranch."

Teams search for cause of fire

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — Investigators were continuing to search for the cause of a fire at the Diplomat Hotel that pulled thick smoke through the air-conditioning system of the oceanfront resort, routing 320 guests and employees.

Firefighters donned air packs and ran in teams of two Thursday to fight the fire, which began in a first-floor garage storage room. Traffic was diverted from the area around the hotel, site of the annual AFL-CIO convention, as smoke poured into the street.

Five firefighters and five other people suffered smoke inhalation during the blaze, which took 8½ hours to extinguish because the smoke was so dense, fire officials said.

Jetliner forced to abort landing

WASHINGTON (AP) — An American Airlines 727 jetliner was forced by other planes first to abort its first landing try and then stop its first takeoff attempt at Baltimore Washington International Airport Thursday night, according to the Federal Aviation Administration.

The jet, arriving from Dallas, aborted its first approach to BWI shortly after 9 p.m. when a controller noticed "a decrease in separation" between it and the plane behind it. Less than a half hour later, as the plane was starting its takeoff to continue its trip to Washington National Airport, the pilot stopped the plane after being advised that another plane had suddenly turned on to the runway, according to the FAA.

No injuries or damage to the plane were reported.

High court won't hear case

ATLANTA (AP) — The father of 4-year-old Nickolas Blackburn says he is elated that the state Supreme Court won't hear an appeal by his ex-wife, who lost, regained and then lost custody of the boy after she had an illegitimate, racially mixed daughter.

Kathleen Blackburn, 28, has 10 days to seek reconsideration of the court's decision Thursday not to hear her appeal of a lower court order giving custody of Nickolas to Mark Blackburn, 24.

"Maybe it's over with," Blackburn said. The case has been in the courts since 1981, when a judge found Mrs. Blackburn an unfit moral example because she had an illegitimate daughter following her divorce from Blackburn.

'Slave' may have lived on land

DETROIT (AP) — A lawyer for a family accused of keeping two retarded men as slaves on their dairy farm says he believes at least one of the men lived on the property when farmer Ike Kozminski bought it.

Kozminski, 60, his wife, Margarethe, 54, and their son, John, 30, were charged with involuntary servitude based on FBI affidavits. The younger Kozminski surrendered Thursday and was freed on $10,000 bond, the FBI said. His parents were freed Wednesday on $50,000 bond each.

Authorities said Robert A. Fulmer, 57, had lived on the farm about 40 miles west of Detroit since 1967, and Louis Molitoris, 59, since 1972. Attorney David Goldstein said Thursday that one of the men was on the farm when Kozminski bought it more than 10 years ago.

Man faces prison after acquittal

BRIGHTON, Colo. (AP) — A 21-year-old man faces 14 years in prison after being acquitted of criminally negligent homicide but convicted of felony child abuse and third-degree assault in the death of his lover's 3-year-old son.

Daniel Arevalo was convicted Thursday in the courtroom of Boulder District Judge Murray Richtel.

Reagan wants credit for school progress

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says his administration deserves credit for spurring a wave of school improvements across the United States with the critical report issued last April by the National Commission on Excellence in Education.

Reagan, in a taped interview that originally was to have been aired today on ABC-TV's "Good Morning, America," also defended his attempts to cut federal school aid and declared, "Our problem is not a case of not spending enough. It's a case of not getting enough for what we're spending."

Asked by David Hartman what was the single most important step needed to improve the schools, Reagan replied, "In a sense, we did it. When we appointed the commission ... and they came in with their report a few months ago ... they made specific recommendations" on improving the teaching profession, raising graduation standards and eliminating "fluff courses."

"Well, today over 40 percent of the larger school districts in the United States, based on their recommendations ... have taken action to stiffen the requirements for graduation from high school," Reagan said.

Fugitive captured

VARNADO, La. (AP) — After eluding lawmen for nearly seven weeks in southeast Louisiana's tangled cypress marshes, a fugitive known as the "swamp rat" has been arrested — in the swamps — on charges of first-degree murder and armed robbery.

Charles Lee Hall, a former mental patient, "just went from one swamp to another" as hundreds of officers hunted him in boats and helicopters and on foot until finding him Thursday night, said Washington Parish Deputy W.E. "Sleepy" McGehee.

Hall, 42, was charged in the shooting death of retired engineer Leander L. Keller Jr., whose body was found Sept. 10 in a canal in St. John the Baptist Parish, about 50 miles from where Hall was apprehended.

He was returned to the parish to go before a judge today.

Police said Hall left his Manchac home earlier this year and apparently lived at several camps deep in the state's densest marshes.

Initially, Hall was wanted only for questioning in Keller's death. On Oct. 18, however, an arrest warrant was issued.

Authorities said Hall was spotted Thursday morning at a camp near Bogalusa, where he allegedly fired shots at some boaters who reported the incident to the sheriff's office.

Ten deputies went to Gum Swamp, on the Pearl River about seven miles north of Bogalusa, and arrested Hall without incident about 8:30 p.m. Deputies said he was armed, but they did not identify the weapon.

McGehee said Hall identified himself as Kenneth Lee Johnson and "told them that he had been shooting squirrels and living on that in the woods."

Brucellosis outbreak traced to goat cheese

ATLANTA (AP) — Twenty-eight out of 29 cases of brucellosis in the Houston area have been traced to goat cheese.

The national Centers for Disease Control reported Thursday that a case of possible brucellosis — a bacterial disease characterized by fever and headache — was reported to the Houston Health Department on April 7. By July 19, 29 cases had been identified.

All but one of the 29 patients had eaten goat cheese before their symptoms began, the CDC said in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report. Twenty-three reported buying the cheese from vendors selling out of their cars.

Additional cheese purchased from a vendor for analysis turned out to be unpasteurized cheese made in Mexico; attempts to isolate the Brucella bacteria in it were unsuccessful, but 20 patients so far have shown positive signs of Brucella, the CDC said.

The Atlanta-based federal health agency said 3,316 cases of brucellosis were reported between 1965 and 1978.

Welcoming Timothy Mooney, left, and Michelle, are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Mooney of New Orleans. The Mooneys met their son and his wife, among students rescued from St. George's University Medical School in Grenada, at a Houston airport.

Couple describes fears before Grenada rescue

HOUSTON (AP) — A medical student airlifted from St. George's University Medical School on Grenada says the "greatest sound in the world" was an American soldier kicking in the door to a dormitory room where he, his wife and 50 other were huddled.

"'American soldier — freeze' were the first words we heard," said Timothy Mooney, 23, of New Orleans, upon arrival Thursday at Houston Intercontinental airport.

"It scared the hell out of us, but that was the greatest sound in the world," he said.

Mooney and his bride, Michele, 21, flew to Texas from Charleston, S.C., for a tearful but happy reunion with their families.

Mrs. Mooney said she and her husband were with about 250 students who awoke at dawn Tuesday to the deafening roar of anti-aircraft carriers, bombs, mortar and automatic weapon fire.

"We felt our lives were in serious danger," she said. "We were terrified.

Mrs. Mooney said she and her husband were not only afraid the Grenadians would not let them leave the island to safety, but that they would be wounded by gunfire.

"By the time our group was waiting to be rescued — crammed into the five rooms in the dormitory building closest to be beach — we were convinced anything could happen," she said.

The campus became a battleground for invading multi-national troops and defending forces.

"We'd actually been worried and afraid since Prime Minister Maurice Bishop was assassinated during the coup last week," Mooney said.

"Especially when the students were confined to campus during the subsequent curfew and and a 'shoot to kill' order was issued," she said.

Their fears increased when Radio Free Grenada began broadcasting messages the night before the invasion warning, "The imperialists are coming — take arms."

Mrs. Mooney said a student body poll only a few days before the invasion indicated about 75 percent wanted to leave "as soon as possible. We were about third and fourth on the list to get out."

But they missed the first helicopter off the beach and laid in the sand and shallow water for cover until another arrived.

The couple had only been in Grenada since Aug. 20, the day they were married. Mooney had been attending medical school while his wife taught English and did volunteer work.

Both said the invasion was necessary.

"It was just a terrible situation, and the people there were very desperate to get rid of the new military government," she said.

Reagan says forces blocked Cuban takeover of Grenada

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says the U.S. combat force that invaded Grenada three days ago blocked Cuban plans to take over the Caribbean island for use as "a major military bastion to export terror and undermine democracy."

Reagan made the charge in a nationally broadcast speech Thursday night, after Marines and Army paratroopers, who seized control of Grenada earlier in the day, discovered new caches of Cuban weapons and supplies. One warehouse contained munitions stacked to the ceiling.

The president praised the invasion as a "brilliant campaign," which U.S. officials say encountered stiffer-than-expected resistance from Cuban and Grenadian defenders. He said the attack was "now in the mopping-up phase" and "it is our intention to get our men out as soon as possible," but he set no timetable.

The president's denunciation of Cuban goals followed mounting international protest — even from traditional U.S. allies — against the invasion by 3,000 American troops and 300 security personnel from six other Caribbean islands.

But Reagan argued that if the United States had not invaded Grenada and overthrown its leftist, military government, the Cubans would have seized control of the tiny island in the near future.

"Grenada, we were told, was a friendly island paradise for tourism. But it wasn't. It was a Soviet-Cuban colony being readied as a major military bastion to export terror and undermine democracy. We got there just in time," he said.

When Reagan spoke, eight American soldiers had been killed since the invasion began Tuesday, eight were missing and 39 wounded, the Pentagon said. One intelligence source said the Cuban death toll was at least 30, and Grenadian casualties were not known.

He said the U.S. force "discovered a complete base with weapons and communications equipment which makes it clear a Cuban occupation of the island had been planned."

Earlier Thursday, the Defense Department partially lifted the veil of secrecy that has covered the U.S. operation and showed reporters an eight-minute videotape of a warehouse in Grenada that contained ceiling-high stacks of ammunition and captured arms of Soviet and Cuban origin.

U.S. blocks U.N. resolution

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United States, abandoned by most of its allies and denounced as an aggressor, today blocked passage of a U.N. Security Council resolution to "deeply deplore" the U.S.-led invasion of Grenada.

The voting, shortly before 3 a.m. EDT, followed three days of debate by more than 60 speakers. Most of them deplored the invasion Tuesday as a violation of international law and the United Nations Charter.

In debate Thursday night, U.S. Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick said the U.S. and Caribbean forces invaded the tiny island nation to stop "an authentic reign of terror" following the murder of Grenada's prime minister.

Voting for the resolution were France, the Netherlands, the Soviet Union, Poland, China, Jordan, Malta, Pakistan, Guyana, Nicaragua and Zimbabwe.

Britain, saying it had "serious doubts" about the invasion, abstained, as did Togo and Zaire.

But United States vetoed the resolution that had enough votes to pass. As one of the five permanent Security Council members, the United States can veto a resolution receiving the nine or more votes needed for adoption.

Only the Caribbean nations of Saint Lucia, Barbados, and St. Vincent and the Grenadines, three participants in the military operation, backed the United States without reservation.

To win the broadest possible support, the resolution's sponsors, Nicaragua, Guyana and Zimbabwe, used the phrasing "deeply deplores" instead of "condemns."

The resolution called for an end to the "armed intervention in Grenada" and the "immediate withdrawal of invading troops." It deplored "the death of innocent civilians."

U. S. deputy delegate Charles M. Lichenstein said his country was not pursuing any "imperial goals," as the Soviet delegate alleged in debate.

"As we are able, we will assist in the establishment and the restoration of democratic institutions, particularly when they have been cruelly and violently destroyed," Lichenstein said. Then he raised his hand to signal the U.S. veto.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick argued that U.N. Charter prohibitions against the use of force was "not absolute."

"They provide ample justification for the use of force against force in pursuit of the other values also inscribed in the Charter — freedom, democracy, peace," she said. "The Charter does not require that peoples submit supinely to terror, nor that their neighbors be indifferent to their terrorization."

As the debate got underway, Mrs. Kirkpatrick challenged the credentials of Grenada's delegate to bar him from the rest of the debate.

The delegate, Ian Jacobs, had addressed the Council on Wednesday, urging it to strongly condemn the U.S. action.

While the U.N. Secretariat prepared a legal brief on the credentials question, Jacobs sat in the gallery reserved for non-participating U.N. delegates.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick called Grenada's governor general, Sir Paul Scoon, the "sole remaining symbol of governmental authority" on Grenada.

Today's late model used cars are a better buy than ever before. They are built better, they get better mileage, and even the exteriors and interiors stand up far longer. Most important of course, is the price. There's much more value for the money in today's late model used car. BUT, because cars are being driven for a longer time by the original owner, it's more important than ever WHERE you buy a used car. Our reputation for offering good value for the money is your best assurance. Buying your used car

THE CAR IS IMPORTED. THE IDEA IS REVOLUTIONARY.

DODGE CONQUEST

When it comes to performance imports, your Dodge dealer has an offer for you. Conquest imported for Dodge. This isn't just an economy car in wolf's clothing. Conquest runs with the best of them. Turbocharged 2.6-liter MCA jet engine, 5-speed manual overdrive transmission, and, adjustable steering column come standard. The cockpit comes straight from an X-wing fighter. And driving Conquest, you'll feel like there's no competition on the planet.

WE ARE DODGE.

Petroleum Pioneers celebrate

It's almost like Fourth of July

By DAVID C. SODAMANN
Business-Energy Editor

It's not quite like the Fourth of July, but the last Friday in October, in odd-numbered years, is in Midland a day when the achievements of the "Founding Fathers" are remembered. Youngsters don't light sparklers to add glitter to the occasion. Oldsters' lusterous smiles and sparkling personalites do just fine.

It's that day again.

Today, the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers are gathered in the Tall City for their 13th biennial reunion and celebration. The organization is comprised of oilmen with more than 30 years in the 'patch to their credit and their wives or widows. Counted among the hundreds of members are many of the men who made the Permian Basin what it is today, the "Founding Fathers," survivors of an era when pioneering for petroleum was a way of life.

The Tall City stands at the heart of one of the most prolific oil producing regions in the world. One-fifth of all oil and natufal gas produced in the United States is found in the rocks beneath the skyscrapers. Around the city in every direction, as far as the eye can see, across an expanse of 100,000 square miles, oil wells pump and gas wells flow. They yeild the hidden wealth of eons past. It was the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers who unlocked the secret stores.

Sixty years ago, when the first, gutsy explorers came to West Texas in search of fountains of wealth, Midland was scarcely more than a tiny, dusty cowtown in the midst of a windswept wasteland. Those lucky, optimistic, gambling, adventursome men of vision, those wildcatters, discovered their fountains of wealth, and today, thanks to them, Midland is the richest city in America.

IT SEEMS SOMEHOW appropriate the Petroleum Pioneers should meet in the nation's number one oil town today. For it was a decade and week ago the Arab Oil embargo began. It was that embargo that made the nation realize just how important the work of the pioneers had been. Had the Permian Basin trailblazers and their kin across the land not done their jobs so well, America might litteraly have run out of gas.

But there's bad to go with the good. Following the embargo, just as many came to realize how important the Petroleum Pioneers were, others for their own largely selfish reasons, came to see the pioneers — and those who follwed their track — as villains. They pose a new challenge for the Permian Basin's Petoleum Pioneers; both those of yesteryear and those who are, in their own ways, pionering today.

> "I think the Windfall Profits Tax is probably as much responsible for the collapse of the industry in 1982 as any single item."

> — Ed Thompson
> Petroleum Pioneer

The earlyday petroleum pioneers were able to achieve what they did because they were free to conduct their business as they saw fit. They were limited only by the ups and downs of the marketplace. That freedom has gradually been erroded. Rules and regulations imposed on the oil and gas industry limit what can be achieved today.

Those who see the petroleum pioneers and their followers as villains have used the embargo, and the change that ensued, as an excuse to attempt to further limit what the oil industry may achieve.

Petroleum pioneers of foresight 20 years ago saw a way to deal with attacks on the oil and gas industry, and created the Permian Basin Petroleum Association. The organization has become one of the most respected voices for the industry.

ED THOMPSON, executive vice presient of PBPA, and a petroleum pioneer in the truest since of the term, recently commented on embargo's effect on the Permian Basin.

As a result of the embargo, Thompson said, "Everybody was mad at the industry because they were backed up in the streets trying to get gasoline."

The PBPA has had a difficult time pioneering a more positive image for petroleum industry sense the embargo.

"It's been either fighting the goernment or fighting the Arabs or fighting both," Thompson said. "Along with most of the consumers, that haven't understood — and still don't, apparently — that the only way we're ever going to have any energy independence is by letting the market place handle the business."

"Apparently the consumer still hasn't learned that all price controls do is force the price up and create shortages.

"I don't know of a single thing that ever had a government price control put on it that didn't end up being more costly and less available and of poorer quality.

"How you get that across, I don't know," Thompson said. "We can work for a month on something, and Johnny Carson can blow it out of the tub with one smart remark on the show."

AS A RESULT OF the embargo, and market manipulation by the OPEC nations, oil prices climbed dramtically during the late 1970s. In response, the anti-oil faction in congress, lead by President Jimmy Carter, saw a chance to reap a windfall for the national treasury. The Windfall Profits Tax Act quickly became law.

"I think the Windfall Profits Tax is probably as much responsible for the collapse of the industry in 1982 as any single item," Thompson said.

"1981 was the first year the tax was paid for a full year. A lot of people really hadn't looked at it that closely. As the price of crude went up they expanded their operations, cost of drilling went out of sight, everything else went up accordingly — it all went up according to the price of crude. Everybody went up because the price went up, and it was going to continue to go up. Suddenly the price stopped going up and these guys had to pay their taxes," Thompson said. When the operators realized how hard they were being hit by the windfall Profits Tax, they stopped drilling.

In the old days, the petroleum pioneer's biggest challenge was to find oil and gas. The biggest challenge facing the petroleum pioneers of today is political in nature. Meeting the demands of consumer's, coping with governmental restriction can be full-time jobs. It takes a pioneering effort and a pioneer's spirit to meet these challenges successfully.

The Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers are not a dying breed. the petroleum industry is still a challenging industry, an industry that requires its workers to be pioneers virtually everyday.

THE ROLE OF TODAY'S pioneers is no less important to the Permian Basin than that of the early discoverers. The Permian Basin will remain one of the foremost oil and gas producing regions of the world only as long as the pioneer spirit survives.

The early day pioneers discovered vast oil and gas fields, but nature limits the amount that may be removed. Many of pioneering spirit today are developing ways to overcome nature's quotas. They're methods are being put to the test. If they succede, the Permian Basin will continue near the top in oil and gas record books.

It has been estimated billions of additional barrels of Permian Basin crude may be nudged from the rocks by new techniques being pioneered in the region today.

Foremost among the schemes is the process of injecting carbon dioxide gas into producing formations, where it helps push the oil toward producing wells.

Billions of dollars are being spent putting the technique to work in the Permian Basin. Carbon dioxide injection has never been tried on such a vast scale before. Those repsonsible for it use in the Permian Basin today are truly pioneers. Through their work, they are truely paving the way for others.

SOME OF THE MOST important pioneering being done in Midland today is done behind a desk. Increased governmental regulation has ceated a need for pioneers in administrative areas, people willing to explore a morass of red tape, sort it out, make sense of it and show others how to find their way through it.

There's as much need for petroleum pioneers in the Permian Basin today as there was decades ago. Each and every man and woman in the industry today is, in their own way, pioneering the future of the Permian Basin.

"When you get knocked around — which, incidentally, never seems to end — you've just got to get up off the floor and keep trying."

Americans treated energy like oxygen

By STEVEN EISENSTADT
Washington Bureau

Ten years ago, Americans took energy for granted.

To most, energy was like oxygen: Its importance was obvious, but its supply was limitless. To have said energy should be conserved because it is needed to power automobiles and heat homes was like saying oxygen should be stored because people need it to breathe.

Like oxygen, energy was secure. Gasoline prices did not deter Americans from buying large, gas-guzzling cars, and cheap heating oil allowed homeowners to keep their thermostats at high settings.

But that changed after the Arab oil embargo of October, 1973.

What was considered an endless and inexpensive resource has become something to conserve, and Americans have had to reshape their daily lives to adjust to the change.

The gas-chugging cars of the 1970s have been replaced by smaller, more fuel-efficient vehicles. Thermostats have been turned down, and more homeowners are forsaking oil furnaces for alternative heating systems.

A lexicon of new terms, such as miles-per-gallon, solar panels and coal conversion have become houseworld words.

The upheaval touched off by the embargo also has forced cataclysmic changes in industry and politics that are still not complete, nor even completely understood, ten years later.

Yet this month, the tenth anniversary of the embargo, energy is not the burning issue it was. Although it is not nearly as far from the nation's consciousness as it was before the embargo, energy is no longer a daily worry for most Americans.

U.S. oil imports have dropped to 3.9 million barrels a day from their 1977 peak of 8.8 million, and oil consumption has decreased to slightly more than 15 million barrels a day from a 1978 peak of 18.8 million.

In addition, world demand for oil from the 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries has fallen to less than 15 million barrels a day from 31 million barrels in 1979, forcing the group to cut prices for the first time.

The amount of oil the U.S. imports from OPEC nations has plummeted to 1.2 million barrels a day from 2.9 million at the time of the embargo.

OPEC was supplying 48 percent of U.S. imports in 1973, but that has been reduced to 30 percent this year. Mexico has surpassed Saudi Arabia as the nation's largest supplier.

Many Americans today perceive not an oil crisis but a glut.

"Energy is not a paramount public concern anymore," said John Marcum, the White House's Assistant Director for Energy, Natural Resources and International Affairs.

"Last year, the U.S. produced 90 percent of the energy it consumed," Marcum said. "We have become somewhat energy self-sufficient."

Many observers, however, do not take such an optimistic view. They say that while the energy situation has vastly improved, it is a delusion to think the nation can achieve energy security.

The American Petroleum Institute, in a report earlier this year, warned that although the share of oil from OPEC states has fallen in recent years, those nations still account for much of the world's proved oil reserves.

The report also said that declining energy consumption in the U.S. is largely because of the recession and that demand should rise as economic conditions improve.

"As demand picks up during economic recovery," the report said, "OPEC's prospects are likely to brighten."

But the nation has taken steps to reduce its reliance on foreign oil and to protect itself should another supply interruption occur.

"Good Oil and Gas Loans Are the Safest Loans in America Today."

Given all the negative press about energy these days, a lot of people are down on the oil and gas industry. They blame it for all kinds of problems.

But that's exactly the opposite of the way we feel at ClayDesta National Bank.

Our bank was started by oil people, is owned by oil people, and is dedicated to serving oil people. We know the business. We like it. And our philosophy isn't going to change just because the economy changes.

Simply stated, good oil and gas lending practices lead to good oil and gas loans. At ClayDesta National, we base energy loans on the value of proved producing properties.

Our people know what they're talking about. We're one of just a handful of Texas banks with oil and gas lenders and engineers on staff. The intelligent professional analysis of proven reserves is the foundation of sound oil and gas lending. And since reserves are going to be there, we know good energy loans are the safest loans any bank can make.

Independent oil operators risked everything they had to establish this great industry. They're still the backbone of it today. And we stand behind 'em.

If you'd like to know more about the way ClayDesta National feels about energy lending, give us a call at 683-2265.

You'll be surprised at how much better you'll feel when you talk to bankers who are high on energy.

You've never seen a bank like ClayDesta.

Geologist remembers Basin as it was

Business-Energy Writer

Charles Vertrees, a retired geologist who paints in a studio above his garage, can still remember 1929 Midland. "It was — and is — remarkable," he said of the city.

"When I came here, I opened the offices of Marland Oil Company, Oklahoma. In 1929 we were in what was called the Hogan Building — supposed to be 12 stories, but at the time it only had five floors and was stalled by financial difficulties."

The building was completed in July of that year.

Vertrees' company, Marland, was taken over by Continental Oil Company — later Conoco, and today a subsidiary of E.I. DuPont de Nemours Co. He worked for Continental for several years, then became an independent operator for some time.

When Vertrees had to monitor wells being drilled in West Texas and eastern New Mexico, in those early days, he faced problems in transportation that have been mostly overcome today by wide, paved roads and highways. In fact, he can remember getting a flat tire almost every day — as much a commentary on the quality of tires available as on the lack of real roads.

"When I came here, there were no roads," he said. "You went pasture-to-pasture, stopping to open the gate and again to carefully close it, or using the bump gates at some places. Ranchers trusted you to close them so the herds wouldn't get mixed-up.

"They used to say there were 27 'gates' between one town and another, that kind of thing," Vertrees said. The only paved road he can remember from that time was a five-mile stretch of blacktop north of San Angelo to the tuberculosis hospital.

"Going north to Seminole," he said, "the best way to go was to follow the old railroad — but you often picked up railroad spikes in your tires."

Vertrees "had important wells I had to watch personally — 350 miles apart, drilling at the same time. I lived for years with bedding and kitchen utensils in the back of my car (a Model T Ford). If I got home once a week I was very lucky." These were the conditions all geologists had to deal with in 1920s West Texas.

Working for Continental from 1929 to 1958, Vertrees was its chief geologist in Midland, in charge of 16 counties in Texas and four counties in New Mexico — the entire Permian Basin was his territory.

People in Midland and surrounding areas frequently closed deals with a handshake. "That's absolutely correct," Vertrees said. "If they gave you their word, that was enough until you could get back to the courthouse and put it in writing (which could be weeks later). They were an honest group of people, and good to deal with."

Vertrees said Midlanders were of a generally high caliber.

Vertrees had come from a poor family and worked in Old Mexico starting in 1919, as a truck driver, earning a then-incredible wage of $360 per month plus expenses. "I had to get money for college. I was reared in Brownsville, and spoke Spanish," so it was a logical decision for him.

He attended the University of Texas at Austin — then confined to its original 40-acre site.

One of his main accomplishments, he said, was helping establish the West Texas Geological Society. As one of its organizers he was present at its first meeting, in a building just west of the old county courthouse. There were 51 geologists present.

WTGS helped disseminate important information about the Permian Basin: history on major discoveries, new drilling methods that came into use, practices geologists used, and other information was collected and published by the society.

Vertrees was elected president of WTGS in 1935. His book, "History of the West Texas Geological Society," notes that "No field trips were held this year due to the depression" and the inability of WTGS to finance a speaker's fee or his expenses.

There were very few jobs at the time, since less oil was needed to supply America's crippled industries. "Personnel reductions had put many geologists out of work," the book notes, and WTGS spent most of its energies trying to find jobs for its members.

One accomplishment made by WTGS under Vertrees leadership was the beginning of a technical library in 1935. Also, it began to collect samples of formation rocks in order to display them for identification reference.

Vertrees became quite good at his artwork after retiring in 1958. He has given several pieces to friends. He and his wife traveled "everywhere," he said.

Of his art, Vertrees said "It's very rewarding because it's something you don't know you can do, but you can try to do it anyway. I find it very enjoyable."

He says he keeps up the artwork "...because I enjoy it and because I have the time." Although it is still enjoyable for him, he said he is not as good at it as he once was, due to an eye operation. His two sons are successful in the oil industry, and Vertrees has good memories of his part, in being a Petroleum Pioneer.

In April 1982 "We just thought it was a good time to sell. We thought the price of oil at $38 a barrel had a good chance of going down. (It) got up there way too high. I want to reiterate, we were not smarter than anybody else, we were just lucky."

—Bob Dean

Decade of change began in October 1973

Washington Bureau

The past decade, has been one of great change in the United States. Americans have learned to conserve energy. New lifestyles have evolved. It was all brought on by the "energy crisis," which was sparked by the Arab's oil embargo begun in October, 1973. Here is how it all started.

October 17, 1973 — Conference of oil ministers of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Iraq, Libya, Algeria, Egypt, Abu Dhabi, Bahrain and Qatar announce a production cutback of 5 percent of September, 1973, level, with a similar reduction each succeeding month until Israel withdraws from Arab territory occupied during 1967 war.

October 19, 1973 — Libya embargoes the United States.

October 20, 1973 — Saudia Arabia announces a U.S. embargo.

October 21, 1973 — Kuwait embargoes the U.S. and cuts production by 10 percent. Qatar, Bahrain and Dubai also embargo the U.S.

October 25, 1973 — Oman embargoes the U.S.

November 2, 1973 — Kuwait cuts production by 25 percent of prewar average.

Novemeber 4, 1973 — Arab oil ministers decide to cut back production to 25 percent below September level. Further reduction of 5 percent scheduled for December.

November 16, 1973 — Kuwait cuts back production to 30 percent below September level.

Novemeber 24, 1973 — Shah of Iran calls for relaxation of oil embargo and says Iran is willing to make up the shortfall, but cannot increase production at present.

November 26-28, 1973 — OPEC ministers confirm embargo and continuation of cutbacks until Israel withdraws from Arab territories.

December 8, 1973 — Oil ministers, meeting in Kuwait, say U.S. embargo will be lifted when Israeli withdrawal begins.

December 22, 1973 — OPEC decides to raise oil prices by 130 percent, effective Jan. 1, 1974.

January 17, 1974 — The United States meets with other Western nations to develop measures to deal with embargo.

February 13, 1974 — Arab oil ministers meeting scheduled for Feb. 14 is posponed indefinitely due to controversy over whether or not to lift embargo.

March 19, 1974 — Arab oil ministers decide to lift embargo. The flow of oil to the U.S. is to be at the Sept., 1973, level.

TULSA (SWN) — Chuck Sullivan and Dan Womack have been promoted to new areas of responsibility in Parker Drilling Company's North American operations. Their promotions, effective immediately, were announced by Robert L. Parker Jr., president and chief operating officer of the company.

Sullivan was named Texas Division contract manager. A graduate of the University of Oklahoma, he joined Parker in 1975 as administrative manager in N'Djamena, Chad, one of the company's international locations. In 1976, he was named human resources manager and worked in Parker's Tulsa corporate office until his 1981 promotion to Texas Division contract representative which relocated Sullivan to the company's Midland, Texas, office. He served in that position until his recent appointment.

Energy upheaval topples presidents

By STEVEN EISENSTADT
Washington Bureau

The energy upheaval of the 1970s, besides throwing the United States into turmoil, also helped topple two presidents, says a former adviser to one of them.

The crisis played a major role in President Gerald Ford's defeat in 1976 and four years later helped kill the reelection bid of his successor, President Jimmy Carter, according to Stuart Eizenstat, former domestic affairs adviser to Carter.

Eizenstat discussed the political effects of the energy upheaval at a recent conference marking the 10th anniversary of the 1973 Arab oil embargo.

He said the embargo and the 1979 cutoff of Iranian oil helred contributed to the presidents' defeats because of what each crisis "did to the American and world economies and to the American psyche."

Americans angered at long gas lines and skyrocketing fuel bills took their frustration to the polls, the focmer Carter aide said.

"The gas lines brought demands for immediate relief and, frankly, our policy response was found wanting," he lamented.

The quadrupling of oil prices after the 1973 embargo and the 120 percent rise in 1979, Eizenstat said, reated an economic quagmire for which neither chief of state was prepared.

The administrations unsuccessfully tried to fight high inflation produced by the crises through policies to reduce energy consumption, which aggravated worldwide recessions, ht said.

In addition, the crises had a profound effect on the American psyche, adding to the "sense of instability and insecurity to which Americans had been so unaccustomed," Eisenstat said.

"The traumas caused by the assassinations of Presiden Kennedy, Sen. Robert Kennedy, Martin Luther King, urban unrest and the Vietnam debacle created an atmosphere into which the 1973 oil crisis seemed to fit all too well."

Eizenstat, now a partner in a Washington, D.C., law firm, said he recognized immediately that the 1979 oil shock "might be the beginning of the end of the Carter administration."

"It is not a mere fortuity that the presidential election following the two oil crises of the 1970s defeated the two incumbent presidents whose teres in office unhappily coincided with those events," he added.

Dorchester reserved

DALLAS — Dorchester Gas Corporation announced recently that based on independent engineering reserve studies for the fiscal year ended August 31, 1983, proven reserves of oil and natural gas liquids increased over one million barrels to 31.9 million barrels — net production of 3.7 million barrels for the year. Reserves of natural gas decreased 5.3 billion cubic feet to 134.1 billion feet — net of production of 9.9 billion. Estimated future net revenues of $683 million increased by $51 million over the previous year. Over the past five years, future net revenues have increased $266 million, adjusted for the distribution to stockholders of units of Dorchester Hugoton, Ltd.

Dorchester gas Corporation, headquartered in Dallas, is engaged in exploration for oil and natural gas and the production of natural gas liquids, refined petroleum products and coal. Dorchester Common Stock is listed on the American Stock Exchange under the symbol DGS.

'Boots' built success helping build oilfields

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

In May 1928, W. D. "Boots" Watson came to Midland for the same reason many other single men came at the time — he was looking for work.

Midland, a dusty little town of about 3,000 people, was at the time becoming a center for exploration and development of the Permian Basin geological province.

Before 1921, West Texas had mockingly been called the petroleum graveyard of Texas. That all changed significantly in 1923 with the Santa Rita discovery well at Big Lake. Santa Rita No. 9, completed in June 1924 for an initial production of 1,500 barrels of oil per day, was the first large well in the area.

By 1928, things were hopping in Midland, fueled in part by the speculative atmosphere of the "Roaring Twenties."

So, Watson rode the train from East Texas to Midland. Not a geologist, landman or engineer, not even a roughneck, he was a laborer willing to start at the bottom of the totem pole and work his way up. He eventually did, becoming a salesman of oilfield supplies.

He had come to Midland because he heard that The William Cameron Company, one of the largest lumber dealers in the United States, was going to open a new yard here to service West Texas oil fields. He thought he might be able to get a job with the Waco-based company.

Watson is a member of the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers who represents an integral part of the oil industry - the oilfield suppliers and salesmen.

"Everything connected with a service company has to be based on contacts, getting acquainted," he said.

"My theory's been that to do business with a person, you need to know him and he needs to know you. The only people you can do business with are your friends, and the only way to make friends is to be a friend."

Watson first began making contacts as a laborer in Cameron's Big Spring location. Later, he was yard foreman.

Lumber was an important commodity in the oil fields of the 1920s and '30s. Derricks of that time sat on wooden rig floors rather than steel. Many major oil companies built wooden camp houses for their employees on location, establishing little communities in the West Texas desert.

Roads during the 1920s and early '30s were mostly unpaved. Because lumber had to be hauled by horse-drawn wagon, lumber yards sprang up fairly close to drilling activity, say within 15 or 20 miles, said Watson.

As a result, Cameron was following the oil play throughout the Permian Basin, starting yards in Crane, Odessa, McCamey. Supply companies had to operate the same way.

It was a rough, ready time to live. Watson said the men who flocked to West Texas in that period were true pioneers because they were coming to a new, unproven locale, isolated from the big cities.

W.D. "Boots" Watson

Watson remembers having to sleep outside in the lumber yard. What few rooms were available were given to the married men in order to make conditions more tolerable for their wives.

"I slept out on the timbers for three months — housing was hard to get. I was right there on the job. I didn't have any money and no one else had much."

Still, Watson said he loved every minute of it.

"In an oil field lumber yard, you had an opportunity to get acquainted with a lot of people," he said. "You had companies from all over the country in here, and a lot of new little fields were being developed."

Watson remembers Mrs. Dora Roberts as a frequent customer at the Big Spring yard.

Watson stayed with Cameron for most of his working life, mostly working in Overton, Texas, rising eventually to the position of vice president and general sales manager.

He left Cameron in 1960 to work for NL Baroid as area manager for its West Texas-New Mexico division. No stranger to Midland, however, Watson settled here permanently in 1961. Throughout his sales career with Cameron and Baroid, he frequently traveled to Midland to make contact with employees and customers.

"(At Texas American Energy) I like the team concept ... with that responsibility has to go authority. I like to give my people the authority to perform the function of exploration or production and let them go. I look at the results ... when you have a good discovery, that's rewarding to you."

Oil watchers getting nervous

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The oil market has stabilized after a big price drop last spring, but while the stability in prices and supplies is welcomed after the turmoil of the 1970s, some veteran oil watchers are getting nervous.

One of their chief sources of concern is the war between Iran and Iraq, which began in September 1980 as a dispute over Iraq's access to the Persian Gulf. The worry now is that the war may spread to other parts of the gulf, possibly leading to a cutoff of oil shipments through that vital waterway.

Here are some questions and answers to help explain why the war, which has not disrupted oil supplies so far, suddenly is seen as a threat:

Q. What exactly is the worry?

A. The worry is that a cutoff of oil from the Persian Gulf could turn the current oil glut into a shortage — the nations around the gulf supply a quarter of the non-Communist world's oil. If that supply was cut, oil prices could begin rising again. And if that situation lasted for several months, damage to the U.S. economy — and to the economies of most oil-importing countries — could be substantial.

Q. If this is so threatening, why don't we hear much about it?

A. While the threat is real, analysts are divided on its implications. For one thing, economists point out that Western industrial nations have strategic oil reserves that could offset lost imports for up to three months. Also, there is almost one month's supply of oil in tankers at sea.

Q. What are the chances of a cutoff of oil from the Middle East?

A. Some people think the odds are growing. Specialists at Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates Inc. said in a recent report: "Growing economic pressures and enhanced military capabilities are increasing the probability that Iraq will take action to cut the flow of Iranian oil exports." Iran has said that such Iraqi action would mean a cutoff of all Persian Gulf oil shipments.

Q. What's new about this?

A. France recently sold Iraq some of its Super Etendard attack aircraft, which are designed to launch French-made Exocet missiles, giving Iraq a new capability to knock out Iran's main oil export terminal in the Persian Gulf.

Q. What would the United States do if Iran tried to stop oil shipments from the Persian Gulf?

A. It is the stated policy of the U.S. government to do whatever necessary to keep the Gulf shipping lanes open. In a recent study, the Congressional Research Service said a major disruption of oil from the gulf would send the price of oil to $100 a barrel from the current $29 and push U.S. gasoline prices to $2.83 a gallon, more than double the current price.

Q. Couldn't other oil producers pump more oil to offset a loss from the Middle East?

A. They could, but it would not make up for what was lost. Retired Army Maj. Gen. Hamilton A. Twitchell wrote in the October issue of Geopolitics of Energy that even if all oil producers raised their output to capacity, the world would be left with a shortfall of about 3.4 million barrels a day. While most of the oil-importing countries are better equipped today than 10 years ago to handle a brief cutoff of supplies, a prolonged shortfall could be damaging.

Father, son pioneers started out small

Business-Energy Writer

Bill Rutter Sr.

Bill Rutter Jr.

It was the height of the Depression. Banks were closed for a "Bank Holiday." Bill Rutter Sr. was living in El Paso, when a man offered him the opportunity to get into the oil business.

"If you'll put up $500 for the crew," the visitor said, "for their groceries and tobacco, we'll give you one-half interest in the well they're drilling." The well, a farmout from Skelly, was located in the Taylor Link field.

Rutter Sr. responded: "I can't do it today, my money's in New York (with J.P. Morgan's Guaranty Trust)."

The banks were closed following FDR's inauguration. That mattered not a whit to the visitor. "Tell the grocer in Bakersfield," he said, "that you're going to pay him — so we can get this well drilled." Rutter did.

A.W. "Bill" Rutter Sr. became partners with Grady and Jess Wilbanks of Big Spring in 1936, when the three drilled their first wells. Today, his son Bill Rutter Jr. and two grandsons are still involved with the company he started, Rutter and Wilbanks Oil Producers.

That first well was drilled with a rig Jimmy O'Quinn lent for a $5,000 production payment. Izzy Weiner, of Jal, put pipe in the well and also took a production payment. Skelly had an override.

The crew worked 12-hour days, stopped drilling at night, lived in a tent, cooking meals on the location.

"My dad didn't realize at the time," Rutter Jr. says today, "that the only cash put into the deal was his $500." The well came in and produced 100 barrels a day — and continued to produce until five years ago, the last time Rutter Jr. looked in on it.

It was difficult to get any money out of that well, initially, because 60 days of flush production in the East Texas field had driven oil down to 10 cents a barrel. But soon, General Thompson exercised martial law to shut-in the East Texas field and oil went to 90 cents per barrel.

Large discoveries were made at Spindletop, Oklahoma City field, the Cushing (Okla.) field, and the East Texas field. But there was no proration scheduling, no way to restrain production, and no orderly marketing system for oil.

"When I first came to Midland, it was 1936," Rutter Jr. recalls. "We had been down to McCamey, and I walked to the post office to get a stamp for my collection while dad met with someone at the Scharbauer Hotel, where all the business deals in town were made.

When France fell in May 1940 Rutter Sr. pulled some strings in Washington to be allowed to serve active duty in a second war (he had served in WWI) and served 57 months onboard ship, from 1940 to 1945. Rutter Sr. earned four stripes in the Navy, and served 13 months before the war started and 44 months after the war broke out.

Rutter Jr. came here to live in 1949. He came into town with his wife on May 28, looked for a house and bought one on May 29.

"The man I bought the house from had a telephone," he remembers, "which was very important, because if we disconnected his telephone it would have taken three or four months to order a new one.

"Not that the phone was much good," Rutter Jr. said. "The town grew so fast. I could come downtown quicker to talk to someone than I could get them on the phone — you picked it up and waited and waited for an operator, while others in town did the same thing."

"(The Spraberry boom) after the war was at the height of the worst West Texas drought, in the early 50s," which made the Dust Bowl look tame, Rutter Jr. said. "About 150 to 200 rigs were drilling southeast of town. We were there. The dust had settled on the roads, six to eight inches deep. It was pervasive; you couldn't see the hood ornament on your car.

"It's 40 to 50 miles; we changed oil and filters each time," he said. The fenced-off caliche roadway was used by all vehicles, including heavy Halliburton trucks.

One could count 50 to 60 rigs within eyesight, on a clear night, during the Spraberry boom. It was a pretty sight, just as big as the Scurry-Snyder boom, he noted.

Arch Rowan, who was the founder of the Rowan Companies, organized a meeting to try to change Spraberry spacing from 40 to 80 acres per well. "I was young and brash," Rutter Jr. said, "and I raised a lot of objections to it." He was surprised when the subject was dropped.

"About a year later it became apparent we couldn't make money on 40-acre spacing," Rutter Jr. says today. "I felt guilty about thwarting Arch Rowan's plan. I sent a letter on Rutter & Wilbanks company letterhead and invited everyone to the Gulf meeting room. And 200 representatives of majors and independents showed up."

Rutter Jr. learned the way of West Texas and was drafted as chairman of the committee on spacing.

The achievement? "We converted one of the largest uneconomic fields in the U.S. into an economic field that has produced several hundred million barrels of oil," Rutter Jr. said.

The spacing changed to 80 acres per well with an 80-acre tolerance. "I thought I was getting the spacing changed in atonement. I had no acreage there — but then we went from four wells to 50 wells in Reagan County in the late 50s."

Rutter Jr. said, "We presented (the spacing change) as recovering almost as much oil per acre on 80 acres with 160-acre spacing. We now know we get even more per acre with the 160-acre spacing."

In 1955, after days of testimony — in the biggest hearing the Texas Railroad Commission held up to that time — the rules were changed.

Rutter Jr. remembers that the Spraberry came in and high-structure wells flared gas, at the rate of a million cubic feet a day. The wells made some natural gasoline and some butane in local processing — but there was no Northern Natural Gas pipeline so a lot of gas was wasted.

Phillips' plant flared gas as a byproduct — and could be seen for 50 to 60 miles. Rutter Jr. said its "monster flare" of tailgate gas, southeast of the town of Spraberry, was very bright. Three miles away, one could read a newpaper at night.

"Edd (of Edd's Trading Post) made a mint with his store, gas station and restaurant. It was expensive — but it was 18 miles closer than anything else."

Rutter Jr. casually mentioned the flare to General Thompson, head of the Railroad Commission at the time, and "Next week the Railroad Commission called a show-cause hearing to find out why Spraberry field shouldn't be shut-in."

Because producers could not make a united front to defend their interests, Rutter Jr. said, all were shut down two days later and a lawsuit had to be filed for an appeal. Soon, the Commission was defeated on appeal — and it allowed producers whose gas was going to a processing plant, not flared off, to continue limited production.

At that time, Northern Natural began a "crash program" to build its pipeline, Rutter Jr. said.

In 1959, the oil business turned bad. "We couldn't get anybody to take the oil," from several Clearfork wells, Rutter Jr. remembered. The Suez canal reopened and imports flooded the market — from the Middle East, where no restrictions existed on oil production.

Rutter Jr. sold the bulk of his production — about 60 percent — in the years 1959 and 1960. There was not a better thing to happen for him "than the fact I couldn't find a buyer for that production," since oil remained at $3.25 per barrel, with eight to ten days per-month allowables, up to the 1973 oil embargo.

"The percentage kept increasing and any increase in (oil) demand went to foreign production," Rutter Jr. said, and by the time of the embargo imported oil accounted for 45 percent of U.S. consumption.

"The domestic industry still had no nourishment," he said, during a time that saw wages doubled and steel prices quadrupled.

Rutter Jr. got back in the business in 1973 — prices were at a level commensurate with the energy value of a barrel of oil. He deals mostly in federal oil and gas leases in the Rocky Mountains.

Nobel revenues decline

ARDMORE, Okla. (SWN) — Noble Affiliates Inc. recently reported results for the third quarter and nine months of 1983.

Revenues for the third quarter declined from last year's level by 23 percent to $73,189,000, while net income decreased by 68 percent to $5,737,000 or $.13 per share. For the nine month period, revenues declined by 30 percent to $221,013,000, and net income was down by 69 percent to $18,671,000 or $.42 per share.

Roy Butler, president and chief executive officer, said that for the third quarter, oil and gas operations showed an operating profit of $14,910,000, which was down from last year's period by 26 percent, but up by 17 percent from the second quarter of this year. Noble's contract drilling and trucking subsidiaries reported operating losses for the quarter, of $3,843,000 and $252,000 respectively, though contract drilling continued with positive cash flow.

Butler predicted that oil and gas production will probably increase over the next several months, as seasonal gas demand increases and as several gas properties and three proven oil tracts in the Gulf of Mexico are brought on stream. The company participated in drilling a total of 138 wells through nine months of 1983, com-pared to 114 for the same period of last year, and at the end of the period, 17 wells were being drilled and 18 were being completed.

Good still looks for better way to do job

By JULIE FAUBEL
Business-Energy Writer

Willie Good says he's lived a happy, useful life and is planning on having a lot more fun. Good retired September 1 from Mobil Oil Corp., after 49 "fun" years. But, his retirement didn't last long. In October, Good opened his own consulting firm in Midland.

"I'm the nervous type. I like to work and I like a challenge. Being my age, I've talked to several doctors and they've all advised me not to stop. They say that historically a man leading an active life, like I have all my life, won't live a year if he comes home and sits down."

Good prides himself on being fair and honest and hopes to help his friends, in his new business, the way they have helped him.

"I was raised to believe that no matter how you're doing a job, there's always a way to do it better. I've always thought that, I told my kids that and I told my wife that."

Good said this philosophy has guided him all his life and especially in his work. His first job in the oil industry came in 1933 with Magnolia Oil Co., which later became Mobil Oil Corp. Like many enterprising young men, Good worked full time while attending Southern Methodist University in Dallas.

"I WORKED IN A filling station on Knox Street. I also worked at a station on the corner of Mockingbird and Preston. They let me work somewhere close to SMU so I wouldn't spend too much time traveling. I worked every day I went to SMU, 40 hours a week. I worked from 2 - 10 p.m. every day selling gasoline and oil and servicing cars, there was no such thing as help-your-self service back in those days. Especially in that neighborhood, we were on the edge of Highland Park and I'd say 50 percent of our customers were colored chauffeurs. I bet they don't have that any more."

After graduating, with a degree in general business, Good headed west.

"I had my first trip to West Texas in 1937. I went and asked Mobil for a job but they didn't have any work for me at that time, so I went to work for a drilling contractor, Champlin Bass Drilling Co., it's Champlin Oil now. I lived in Wink. Wink, at that time, was nothing but boardwalks and tin-shack boarding houses."

Herman W. "Willie" Good

Good said the early days were rough.

"We shared beds; I'd sleep in it for one eight hours and another guy would sleep in it for the other eight hours. It was pretty rough in those days, pool halls, honkey tonks and very few women that were legal.

"I WAS A ROOKIE roughneck, real fair skinned, and they (the crew) knew I was just out of Dallas and never saw a drilling rig in my life. And so we were going to run pipe and when you run pipe in an oil well, you have to cement it. They told me to protect my skin and all, to go and put some of that cup grease on my face to keep it from blistering. Well, I got that cup grease on my face and that cement just came up out of there and hardened all over. It about blistered me all over. They just laughed. They played tricks in the oilfield especially picking on the rookies."

Good had only been roughnecking two months when Magnolia offered him a job in Dunkin, Okla., as a clerk in their machine shop.

Good said after that, his next job was getting married and soon after, he and his new bride moved to Wewoka, Okla. While in Wewoka, with the war in Europe escalating, Good decided to get his private pilot's license so he could be a pilot for the Army. He later decided against it because he didn't want the Army telling him where to fly.

Good said he was able to stay with an "oil company" while he was in the Army.

"My boss said it (U.S. Army) was the biggest oil company in the world. We laid a pipeline from the seashore up to the front. We laid the line, built the tanks and pumped gasoline to the front lines and to the airports. We started out in Africa for about one year and then we were in Italy for two years."

GOOD SAID THE working environment was dangerous.

"We got bombed a time or two. But the biggest danger we had, when we were laying pipe, was the minefields. The army in front of us would clear out the minefields up and down the road. But, we couldn't lay our pipeline on the road, so we had to go over to the side of the road — that hadn't been cleared — and lay our pipeline. We had several men killed trying to do this."

After the war, Good returned to Dunkin, Okla., and Magnolia, where he became office manager. They lived in a camp only one block away from the office.

"Oil companies use to always build camps for their supervisory people and furnish them housing for $10-20 a month. There was a yardman and everything. It was real good. Houses, office buildings, warehouses and storage yards were all there together in one place.

In 1959, Magnolia reorganized and became Mobil Oil Corp. In December of that year, Good moved to Wichita Falls, where he was materials supervisor. Good's final move came in 1966, when Mobil decided to reorganized again.

"They did away with three jobs and gave all three of them to me and they moved four different areas (Wichita Falls, Lubbock, Hobbs, N.M., and Midland) to the Midland area and gave me responsibility of all four and moved me to Midland."

GOOD LAUGHS AS he recalls his first impressions of Midland.

"It's kind of funny to drive up and see this big prairie and then all of a sudden, there appears in front of you, a bunch of big, tall buildings right out of nowhere; and you wonder what you're doing out here really."

As material supervisor, Good's philosophy was simple.

"My boss use to say, 'You know when you work for a major oil company, you can not make the people working for you, like you, but you can make them say you were always honest and fair,' and I always practiced that."

Good said he's learned a lot and has seen a lot of changes in the oilfield.

"When I first started in the oilfield, we worked on steam rigs and most of the work was done by hand; lifting and moving things was all done by hand. Now the oilfield has completely changed. The rigs have gone electric and everything is done by machinery. It's not nearly as complicated an operation as it was.

"A LOT OF WORK is done by computers now — very accurate high fallutin' tootin' kind — where back in the old days, it was all practically hand work. But, probably one of the greatest things to happen in the oilfield is the type of communication we have now. We use to only have a crank-type phone now then we've got radio and everything, it's really made the oil patch operate smother, better and with less hassle.

"When we first started in the material department we only had about one or two grades of different types of materials such as oilfield tubulars and pipe. But since the wells started getting deeper and deeper we got more high alloy pipes.

"The cost of the well used to be about $100,000, that used to be a real expensive well, but now the wells maybe cost as high as a million dollars. And so you have to be much more careful with the type of material you use than you did in the older days.

"I always tried to save the company money. That was my motto. My objective was to try to make or save the company $1 million in one year and that's not much money."

Good does a lot of reading to stay on top of the changes taking place in the oil industry.

GOOD SAID HIS retirement was the main reason he started his own business and he is optomistic about his success.

"I missed the association with my fellow workers and the people I did business with, that's why I opened an office for myself. So far I have several contacts and after the first of the year I plan to really start calling on some customers. I have several offers already."

Trauma of embargo changed Americans' lifestyles

By LAURA LAMBETH
Hearst Feature Service

SAN ANTONIO — Retrofit. Duty cycle. Degree days. R-factor.

Such terms weren't part of our vocabulary a decade ago.

The big energy trauma that started with the 1973 Arab oil embargo changed American lifestyles in so many ways. All of a sudden, it became expensive to drive big cars, or take cross-country driving vacations. We groaned and moaned at our electric bills as they kept climbing higher and higher. Parents started screaming at us to turn off the lights, and we had to remember to close the refrigerator door or the windows. People started buying fans again.

Those are the simpler things. Take a look around you and you can think of countless ways life has changed in the last 10 years.

And what about business? The energy crisis and the resulting higher cost of doing business forced many enterprises to practically disappear. Others just slowed down. Aviation, home building, car sales — just to name a few — have suffered.

BUT ONE INDUSTRY has blossomed. A new way of thinking and living has generated new technology, new sciences and new services.

Energy management censultants, energy auditors and energy systems installers probably weren't even heard of 10 years ago.

Now, products and devices of all kinds have emerged to provide ways to cut down on energy consumption.

And this industry has become a part of ths city's growing economy.

Or, at least, it's trying to be. Businesses aimed at selling energy conservation to homeowners find their target customers largely indifferent.

AND LOCAL BUSINESSES that are ready to give advice on ways to cut energy co ts are astounded. "Homeowners need a lot more education on energy control," says Richard Ortt, owner of Sun Zone Energy Control Systems Inc. "The average consumer is just resolved to go ahead and pay the bill, and adjust their budget accordingly."

Ortt, 33, moved here from Canada in May to open a dealership through the 3M Co. He offers window film, weather stripping and caulking products, as well as other conservation techniques.

"San Antonio seems to be laid back in the area of energy consevation," he says. He adds he's still not sure why, but perhaps since Texas is closely knit to the oil industry, philosophies might be different here. Since people in power are connected to energy production industries, "it could hurt the hand that feeds you."

In Canada, he says, the energy conservation industry is promoted heavily because it results in more jobs in construction and services.

In San Antonio, unlike some other places, homebuilders don't have to have new homes certified to prove they are "energy efficient."

"No air infiltration tests are done on new homes," says James Burkholder, 29-year-old president and owner of Utility Savers Inc. A former plant engineer with a local supermarket distribution center, he recently entered the business of retrofitting, which means upgrading a home or business with energy saving products.

HE, LIKE ORTT, predicts that energy conservation services is a growing industry because experts are needed to advise the typical consumer. He's added a step by applying engineering sciences to the consultation service.

"Engineering firms are trying to deal with energy conservation in an intelligent manner," he emphasizes.

Many businesses, he says, have "come and gone like flies." That's because they only pick up one product, try to sell only that, and "don't offer a broad range of services, without any solid engineering approach."

Consumers haven't been able to understand such things as "R-factors" — in insulation, the measure of resistance to hot and cold air, so the higher the R-factor, the better the insulation value. So the public has been "turned off" to claims of energy saving devices, he says.

And many energy managment experts say people have been ripped off, to.

"I am amazed, I am aghast and literally shocked at some of the things I've seen in new homes," Delores Crum of Energy Dynamics says in dismay. "New home construction is pretty shoddy."

CRUM AND HER husband, Richard, were social workers with Texas Department of Human Resources before they decided to enter energy control. Richard Crum had worked in the state's low-income weatherization program. But he realized low-income consumers really weren't the big users of energy, since they typically don't have central air and heat and other hungry appliances in their homes.

"It was obvious to us the weatherization program needed to be done for the middle and higher income homeowner," Delores Crum says.

The Crums wanted to be different from their competitors by being problem-and-solution oriented instead of product-oriented. "The hard-sell unfortunately has been more the rule than the exception," she agrees. "People can claim whatever they want (about their products)," she explains. "Te average consumer doesn't know the difference."

She cites examples where a salesperson might claim a hot water system will save 50 percent on utility bills. But according to U.S. Department of Energy studies, water heating is only 20 percent of th average household utility bill.

And claims about storm windows cutting utility costs by 50 percent are simply not true, she says. Windows are just 12.5 percent of the air infiltration problem. The rest includes electric outlets, doors and attics. And air infiltration only accounts for 30 percent of heating and cooling costs, according to Department of Energy studies Crum quotes.

"People need to be educated," she insists.

CPS SAW A NEED to provide education on conservation and set up a free consultation service in 1977. The utility will send an energy auditor to a home and spend 2 1/2 hours analyzing it before making energy conservation recommendations.

Yet, only between 3 percent and 4 percent of CPS' customers have taken advantage of the free program, says CPS spokesman McCullough.

"We can make it available, but the customer has to invite us in for us to do something."

But energy management consultants might get busier in the near future.

A new rate proposal pending before the San antonio city council in November will offer bigger rewards to those who cut back on utilities. And other programs are planned to offer incentives and loans to those who need to weatherize or purchase high efficiency equipment.

CPS, ranked the third largest of municipally owned utilities in number of customers behind Los Angeles and Puerto Rico, is also considering setting up a certification program for new homes to give a stamp of approval to those claimed to be energy efficient.

WHY, ON THE 10th anniversary of the oil embargo, are new energy conservation measures still being considered?

"As you can see, we haven't been sitting idly," explains McCullough. "But some projects have been tried in other cities with success and we're looking at their experience.

"We need to reward those who are prudent in their energy usage."

Energy analysts predict that utility rates in Texas will more than double in the next three to four years, catching up to New York, which now has the nation's highest utility rates.

McCullough says "modest" increases will come every 12 to 18 months until the 1990's, when the nuclear plant is on line.

MEANWHILE, THE PAST decade was a start for new developments in the energy conservation business. Must experts expect the next decade to be even more overwhelming in new technologies.

"Technology has gotten better the last part of this decade," says Burkholder of Utility Savers. "It's taken a good 10 years to get education programs out. New prodects are constantly developing."

And what about the next 10 years? Burkholder foresees cogeneration development, where homeowners and business generate their own electricity through wind and solar power devices.

"A lot more will be tapped. We've had a great deal of awareness in energy deveopment, and it will be perfected the next 10 years."

Just last week still another new business announced its move into San Antonio. Called Solar Age of San Antonio, the company is owned by Ken Jordan, a native San Antonian who has returned after living in Dallas several years.

It is a dealership of Albuquerque-based Solar Age Manufacturing. The company's system is a solar collector on the roof which heats space and hot water without running water or fluid through the heat panel.

Marketing the new product will be tough, he admits, even though his system costs only $2,000 after federal tax credits vs. comparable systems on the market at $15,000 to $25,000. "Anything new or barely new is hard to incroduce."

"I just hope I can get the word to enough people so they will understand," he adds thoughtfully.

Fina reports higher income

DALLAS (SWN) — American Petrofina Inc. recently announced net income for the third quarter of 1983 ending September 30 was $22,975,000, or $2.12 per share, as compared to $12,696,000, or $1.17 per share, in the same period last year.

Net income for the nine months was $31,898,000, or $2.94 per share, as compared to $39,566,000, or $3.66 per share, during the first nine months of 1982.

Gross revenues for the third quarter rose to $565,145,000 from $540,121,000 in the third quarter of 1983, while gross revenues for the first nine months were down to $1,583,543,000 from $1,723,328,000 in 1982.

A fourth quarter dividend of 80 cents per share has been declared by the Board of Directors to be paid December 15, 1983, to shareholders of record December 2, 1983, bringing payments for 1983 to $3.20 per share.

Commenting on results for the third quarter, Paul D. Meek, president and chief executive officer, said, "Operating income from all three segments of the Company's operations improved as the third quarter progressed."

Results of the petrochemicals and plastics segment continued to recover as the National's economy improved, particularly in the automotive, housing and appliance industries. He noted that operating income from the refining and marketing segment, while down from the third quarter last year, was substantially ahead of the first two quarters of 1983. He added that operating income in the production and exploration segment was substantially improved compared to the same quarter year because drilling expenses were reduced.

Oilman found friends, happiness amidst desolation

Business-Energy Writer

Pat Fletcher arrived in Odessa in 1946, leaving San Antonio's Randolph AFB to take a new position with Atlantic Refining. He was disappointed in arid and desolate West Texas at first.

"All those unsettling feelings disappeared after I wore out two pair of shoes. We love our friends, and West Texas," Fletcher said.

In late-40s Midland there were only 17,000 people, and "Cuthbert Avenue divided the city from the cotton fields.

"When I first moved to Midland in 1949," Fletcher recalled, "I heard one of the geologists say he would drink all the oil produced in Midland County. He thought the county had little potential for oil and gas." Years later, sizeable discoveries in this area have proven that to be a foolish offer.

With 43 years' service with Atlantic (Now ARCO), Fletcher retired in August, 1976.

Atlantic was the company Fletcher worked for — at a Texas Gulf Coast facility — after graduating from the University of Oklahoma, with a degree in petroleum engineering. Then came WW II, and he was called into the service in 1941. After his service was completed, he was named assistant superintendent for Atlantic's district production office, based in Odessa.

"When I arrived in West Texas," he said, "I thought it was a rather arid desert, a desolate place. My impression of West Texas was rather poor.

"I realized I was here permanently — which was different from simply traveling through. My heart sank. I wondered how my family would take it. But we all moved to Odessa and when we had trouble finding a house, the company built one for us." It was not long before the company moved all operations into Midland.

"We made a number of discoveries," Fletcher said of his Midland Atlantic team. "I remember the Block 12 field, Andrews County, was on University Lands," and one time there were 15 or 16 time-expiring leases that all became void at midnight on the same night.

"We had to demonstrate a measurable amount of oil on each of those leases, and the wells were all at the completion stage. Berte Haigh (of University Lands) and I stayed there until well after midnight, making sure there was an amount of oil we could measure in each of those tanks," he said.

Haigh typifies Fletcher's memories of dealing with Midland's "handshake" business community. "He is one of the most dedicated employees of any organization — a fine gentleman and a man of his word."

For Midland businessmen, a "handshake was as binding as a written and executed instrument," he said. "They remembered — and were men of their word."

Fletcher took on more responsibilities, his company moved to the Petroleum Life building, and he assumed both West Texas and New Mexico territories as regional production superintendent.

From the 1950s Fletcher remembers "No one ever locked their houses. Someone might want to borrow something — or drop by and wait for you to get home." He describes how undesirables were simply escorted through town when the sheriff, Big Ed, who'd heard they might be coming through to cause trouble. "Right about then, the phone would ring in Odessa."

On management, "Delegating authority is one of the most important tools a manager has," Fletcher said. "One: Get good people that have a wealth of knowledge and experience, and let them know their authorities and responsibilities. Two: Let them exercise the authorities given to them with a free hand. Don't be afraid they're going to make mistakes — but tell them how they could do it better if it happens."

Atlantic was "very successful," Fletcher said, in obtaining good thinkers that are solid and stable. "They're aggressive but they treat people well."

Fletcher got a big promotion in 1955 when he was named operations manager for Atlantic — in charge of drilling, production, engineering and the operation of several gasoline plants.

Although he considered going into business for himself — very seriously at times — Fletcher felt too much a part of the company. He said he continued to like the work, the people involved and the challenges of running an oil company district office.

Atlantic was building itself up into one of the biggest producers in the Permian Basin.

In 1973, when the Sinclair acquisition took place, "We doubled in size," Fletcher said. "We suddenly had twice as many wells and twice as much production."

After his 1976 retirement, though, Fletcher was never bored. "I have little patience for people who retire and say they have little to do, and time on their hands," he said. "With my interest and other distractions (geneaology, fishing, hunting, golf, woodworking, etc.) I wonder how I ever had time to work!"

His geneaology work has taken him to southern Ireland, England and the Mormon Church's extensive records facility in Salt Lake City. He has found that his great-grandfather Fletcher came from southern Ireland to America in 1850, due to the Potato Famine, and lived in New York State before coming to Texas.

Petroleum pioneer Pat Fletcher was disappointed by the arid desolation of West Texas when he arrived in 1946. However, he found friends and happiness here by the time he "wore out two pair of shoes."

Higher oil prices likely short term

HOUSTON — Nervous upward pressure will continue on oil prices, probably until the end of the year, when new developments unfolding in the three-year war between Iran and Iraq will have led to a cease fire.

This is the analysis of the currently tense situation by Petroleum Information International in a recent issue.

A cease-fire, reports the weekly publication, could cause worse than usual pricing softness in next spring's oil markets as both countries produce and export more oil.

PI International says prices on the spot market for crude surged recently with the news that French warplanes were being delivered to Iraq, but the rally weakened as signs of any seasonal demand upturn failed to materialize.

PI International notes that the Iran-Iran drama is gaining momentum and is looking "like a scenario in which anything could happen."

However, the weekly publication that reports on worldwide oil and natural gas developments, points out that "enough of the cards have already been played to permit offering a plausible forecast. If correct, stable crude oil supply and, possibly, some softening in oil prices for a part of next year could result."

A cease-fire, PI International says, will enable Iraq to resume exporting crude oil from the Persian Gulf, bolstering its economy and preserving the Hussein regime.

While "that will be hard for Iran to swallow," PI International says, Iran can repair leaking facilitis in its Nowruz oil field and begin cleanup operations. Profits from its oil exports will rise and "eventually" it may garner some war reparations.

Debate over decontrol's effect continues

By STEVEN EISENSTADT
Washsington Bureau

One of the major reasons for America's drive toward increased energy security in the wake of the 1973 Arab oil embargo was the dismantling of oil price controls under Presidents Carter and Reagan.

Analysts say decontrol has stimulated the petroleum industry to record levels of activity and, coming at a time when Americans were reducing their energy consumption, has enabled the country to reduce its dependence on foreign oil.

Yet others contend the government's abandonment of energy regulations, while it worked for oil, may not be adequate to deal with the consequences of a new crisis should one occur and discourages development of alternative fuel sources.

Regarding oil, however, few could argue that decontrol has not been successful.

Since decontrol, records have been set in the number of completed oil wells, active drilling rigs and investments in oil and gas operations, according to the American Petroleum Institute.

In addition, prices for gasoline declined after decontrol went into effect, the API says.

According to the group, the number of 1982 well completions increased 9 percent over 1981 and more than doubled the 1976 total. There were more exploratory wells last year than anytime since 1956.

Since decontrol, there have been more drilling rigs at work than at any other time in American history, the API says.

In fact, those levels were so high that the industry was not able to sustain them. Oil companes, particularly in Texas, have hit hard times as the development of new supplies have exceeded demand.

Gasoline prices, which averaged $1.27 in 1981, before decontrol went into effect, dropped to $1.14 in March of this year.

Despite decontrol's positive effect on the nation's oil picture, there is a long line of critics who are attacking the Reagan administration's insistence that the free market alone is best suited to run the nation's energy system.

They contend that in a new energy emergency, the free market would not be able to hold down prices and allocate supplies fairly and that government help is needed to spur the growth of new energy technologies, such as solar power and synthetic fuels.

John Dunlap, the Secretary of Labor undgr President Ford, says the Reagan administration's policy would "quickly go up in political smoke" in a new crisis.

The administration's approach confuses "the invisible hand of the market with the Holy Spirit," charges Robert Fri, a former energy official in the Ford administration.

Fri said that without federal subsidies, it will be too expensive for entrepreneurs to develop and market new energy technology.

The controls on oil prices dated from 1971, when President Nixon imposed wage and price ceilings, and continued during the 1970s through a series of energy laws.

But President Carter, using powers granted in one of those laws, announced in April, 1979, that he would begin phasing out oil price controls in June of that year, with all remaining controls to be dismantled at the end of September, 1981.

President Reagan, one week after taking office, moved up that date to January, 1981, and oil decontrol went into effect.

The administration presently is fighting for legislaion that would decontrol natural gas prices.

Pioneer missed Midland first time he drove through

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

Fred T. Hogan's experience upon arriving in Midland for the first time more than 55 years ago is a classic example proving that first impressions are not always accurate. Midland was so small and unassuming then, in 1925, that Hogan literally drove right through and didn't realize it until he saw a railroad sign in Odessa.

He returned to Midland, however, and has been here ever since. From that first impression of Midland, one might never have guessed that the small West Texas town would become the administrative and financial center of the Permian Basin oil industry.

Both Hogan and his father played a role in that happening — the elder Hogan invested in Midland's future by erecting a 12-story office building, now known as the Petroleum Building, just north of the courthouse. It was Midland's first skyscraper, the tallest building between Fort Worth and El Paso at the time it was finished in 1929. The building eventually attracted oil companies to the city from other locations by providing much-needed office space.

Originally from Montana, Hogan and his father, independent oilman and investor T.S. Hogan, had been drilling some dry holes in Eddy County in 1924. Later, a potential business client of his father, a consulting geologist from New York City, wanted to invest in a wildcat well to be drilled near McCamey, Texas.

Hogan sent his son to Midland to scout around the area.

"I remember so well driving down from Amarillo to Midland," Hogan recalls. "I was told to stay here at the Llano Hotel. Well, I drove through Midland and didn't realize it until I saw the sign for Odessa near the railroad station there. Midland only had about 3,000 or 4,000 people then. Well, I turned around and went back to Midland."

The Llano Hotel, located on Wall and Main opposite the original First National Bank Building, was at the time the administrative center from which decision-making oilmen operated.

San Angelo had been the center following the discovery of the Big Lake oil field in 1923. Later discoveries in the 1920s in Crane, Winkler, Howard and Pecos counties, and in the Artesia field in New Mexico, moved the oil play further west, making Midland more nearly the geographic center of the Permian Basin. This was the most significant thing which made Midland a headquarters for oil and gas development, Hogan said.

It was thus in the middle 1920s that Midland began to grow.

From 1926 to 1929, oil companies based in Midland produced "a lot of oil," from various fields in the Permian Basin, Hogan recalls. About 24 oil companies ran district and exploration offices in Midland. The speculative atmosphere of the United States economy in the 1920s, before the Great Depression, also played a part in Midland's first "boom."

Although Midland might seem geographically isolated, it is not an island. Events have proved time and again the city is not immune to changes in the nation's economy. National events reached out to Midland in 1929, when the speculative atmosphere evaporated after the stock market crash.

In addition, huge discoveries in East Texas prompted most oil companies to leave their Midland offices to follow the oil boom to the other side of the state. The Petroleum Building, built by Hogan's father and then known as the Hogan Building, stood only a quarter occupied during that time. But, it was standing ready in the middle 1930s, when oil companies began to drift back to Midland as the country gradually came out of the Depression.

By 1935, oil production in East Texas had stabilized, the price was on its way back up from the low point of 10 cents a barrel, and there was renewed interest in the oil fields in West Texas. Humble Oil, a forerunner of Exxon, moved a number of personnel here in that year.

During the 1940s, especially during World War II, oil companies concentrated on maintaining production in the Permian Basin. After the war, many Ivy Leaguers came to Midland to get into the oil business.

Although the industry has seen its ups and downs, it will always be the vital cog in Midland's economic machinery, Hogan said.

"The oil industry in West Texas and the Permian Basin will be busy for many years to come," he said, "trying to find oil and gas and maintaining reserves. Reserves are the name of the game."

He pointed to a recent article in Oil and Gas Journal which said that by the year 2000, more than 75 percent of U.S. oil needs will have to come from fields not yet found, in order to meet demand.

"It's going to be active for many years."

Hogan thinks the most significant change which occurred in his lifetime is the way oilmen do business.

"The simplicity of doing business when we came here was your word was your bond. Now, your problem is government regulation, the added cost of doing business.

"When I came here and I'd go out to a rancher to buy a lease, he would want to know what I was offering, and then, he'd go into town and check up on me. You did that in the cattle business — in every business — to find out if the offer was standard. When I went back in a week or two, I had to be nonchalant about it.

"If you agreed on a deal, you'd shake hands and that was it — but, you'd better deliver or you'd never make another deal in the area."

Hogan was attracted to the oil business for the same reasons other oilmen are: the people one meets in the course of business, the friends one makes, and the possibility that a person might hit it big.

"The Petroleum Pioneers are the people from every walk of life that you've met in the oil industry," Hogan says. "There is no other business in the world like it."

Hughes Tool says sales are down

HOUSTON (SWN) — Hughes Tool Company (NYSE-HT) reported net sales of $286.8 million for the quarter ended September 30, 1983, down 15.8 percent from the $340.5 million reported in the third quarter of 1982. The company reported a net loss of $4.1 million for the most recent quarter, compared with net income of $23.0 million for the same period last year.

The loss per share for the three months was $.07, compared with earnings per share of $.42 for the third quarter of 1982.

For the nine months ended September 30, net sales were $869.4 million, down 31.1 percent from the $1,261.6 million reported in the same period in 1982. A net loss of $25.1 million was reported for the nine months, compared with net income of $135.8 million for the same period last year. The loss per share for the nine months was $.45, compared with earnings per share of $2.42 a year ago.

Gross margin rate for the nine months was 21.3 percent, compared with 33.9 percent for the same period in 1982. Operating income was $7.0 million for the third quarter.

"U.S. drilling activity continued its upward trend throughout the third quarter, although the quarterly average of rigs running was still below the first quarter average," said James R. Lesch, chairman and chief executive officer. "We expect drilling activity to continue its increase through the remaining months of this year, following its normal seasonal pattern." Lesch noted that drilling activity as of mid-October was up 32 percent over this year's low of 1,807 rigs running, which occurred in April.

The average rig count in the U.S. for the third quarter was 2,149 rigs, up 12 percent from 1,917 in the second quarter. In Canada, rigs running averaged 214 in the third quarter, a 96 percent increase over the second quarter's 109. In other non-communist countries, rotary rigs in the third quarter averaged 1,258, down slightly from 1,279 in the second quarter.

Nobody wants oil emergency, but they expect one

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — California's freeways would be flooded with highway patrolmen to enforce the 55-mph speed limit. The governor would take control of 65 million gallons of gasoline and diesel fuel a month for use in police cars and fire trucks, ambulances and other high-priority users.

Those are some of the tools that authorities could use if an international curtailment of oil supplies should occur again as it did exactly 10 years ago. It is an emergency nobody wants but everybody expects.

And, with the Iran-Iraq war threatening to shut the Western world's oil lifeline through the Persian Gulf, emergency planning has taken on a sudden urgency.

Although the United States has drastically curbed its oil imports and substituted Mexico for Saudi Arabia as the United States's main foreign supplier, a shutdown of Middle East petroleum shipments would still have a dramatic impact here: Europe gets 40 percent of its oil through the Persian Gulf, Japan more than 60 percent. Under international agreements, the United States is pledged to share its own oil supplies if an emergency interrupts shipments to Europe and Japan. Tankers of oil normally headed for the United States would be diverted to its allies.

THE FLASHPOINT OF any energy crisis would be the Strait of Hormuz in the Persian Gulf, the route for a never-ending line of ships carrying 8 million barrels of oil daily from Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and other producers.

If the fighting between Iran and Iraq should spill over to include the shooting and sinking of oil-carrying ships, export traffic in the Gulf would cease and "there's no way the shortage could be made up elsewhere," John Lichtblau of the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation, said. Stepped-up production by Venezuela, Mexico, Nigeria and the United Kingdom might generate an extra 4 million barrels daily, but the shortage still would be 4 million barrels, about 10 percent of worldwide demand.

Against that potential emergency, the United States has a major new weapon: the strategic petroleum reserve, 360 million barrels of crude oil stored in caverns in Louisiana and Texas, ready to be pumped into a refinery network. The reserve is equal to 90 days' worth of total U.S. oil imports and more than 180 days' worth of imports from the Middle East.

The reserve is "a true national insurance policy, and every barrel stored takes us further beyond the need to resort to such shortage-sharing methods as allocation and rationing," William Vaughan, assistant secretary of energy for emergency preparedness, said recently.

Although the Reagan administration considers the reserve a security bulwark, there are no detailed plans on how to use it, other than to put the oil up for auction.

THE ABSENCE OF A plan is "like having a loaded rifle when there's a bear coming for you, and not knowing how to shoot," Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., chairman of the energy subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee, said. A test simulation of an oil-supply emergency indicated that gasoline prices would jump to $2.83 a gallon, according to documents disclosed at a recent hearing of Synar's subcommittee.

"We need to take a look at how and when we should draw the reserve down," Sen. James A. McClure, R-Idaho, chairman of the Senate Energy Committee, said.

Energy Secretary Donald P. Hodel refuses to say under what circumstances the strategic petroleum reserve would be used. The administration's basic policy has been an affirmation that government action would be unnecessary because higher energy prices would curtail demand.

However, a senior Department of Energy official said "we would take a very hard look " at using the strategic reserve if all oil shipments from the Persian Gulf were curtailed, threatening the economic health of America's allies.

Beyond that general principle, the federal government has no plan to allocate gasoline or other fuels in the United States and is leaving the job of emergency planning to state and local governments.

CALIFORNIA HAS MOVED into the vacuum with a plan issued in September with little notice by the state Energy Commission.

Under the state plan, the governor would first call for voluntary reductions in oil consumption, appealing to Californians to obey speed limits, use public transportation or form carpools. The California Highway Patrol would step up its enforcement of the freeway speed limit.

For a deeper, longer-lasting emergency, the governor would exercise the power to allocate a limited amount of gasoline for police and fire service vehicles and for those users with special needs, such as farmers. A total of 6 percent of all gasoline and diesel fuels supplies in California would be reserved for allocation by the governor.

The state would call on local governments to put their energy emergency plans into use. The initial emphasis would be on averting panic by asking consumers to voluntarily use less gasoline.

Officials believe that Californians can curb their gasoline consumption significantly without disrupting their working life or endangering their health and safety. But the effort would depend more on a calm reaction by the public than on government rules.

IRONICALLY, THE memories of the supply shortages of 1973 and 1979 could worsen the next emergency. Industry, business and farmers all have increased their ability to store gasoline and diesel fuel. If these users become worried, they could start panic buying of fuel to fill their storage tanks, thereby precipitating the very shortage they fear.

Shamrock's profits improve

DALLAS (SWN) — Diamond Shamrock Corp.'s third quarter after-tax income from operations was $38.9 million, compared to $42.3 million in third quarter 1982 and $26.3 million in second quarter 1983.

Sales and operating revenues for the three months were a record $1 billion, compared to $773.2 million in last year's third quarter. Sales and earnings include one month of results from the Natomas Co. businesses acquired Aug. 31.

"Quarterly income from operations has continued to improve since the first of the year," said W. H. Bricker, chairman and chief executive officer, "due to better profit margins and volumes for refined products and the recovery in industrial chemicals markets. However strong competition in refined products markets is still keeping a lid on profit margins," he said.

"In addition, demand in energy markets has lagged behind the economy's rate of expansion. In particular, purchases of natural gas remain curtailed, and coal markets have shown little improvement throughout the year."

But as demand catches up, Bricker said, Diamond Shamrock's energy businesses are positioned for strong earnings growth. "We can deliver an additional 150 million cubic feet per day of natural gas as markets recover, and we have significant additional coal production capacity. By the time we acquired Natomas," he noted, "our daily average oil production was up about 10 percent from the first of the year. And our acquisition of Natomas should increase daily oil production six times over."

"A very important prospect," he added, "is our large interest in the Mukluk structure in the Alaskan Beaufort Sea, where we are partners in an exploratory well scheduled to begin drilling in about a week."

Bricker also noted that the company continued to improve its balance sheet during the third quarter, bringing debt as a percentage of capitalization down to 34.4 percent, compared to 36 percent at the end of the second quarter and 41 percent at first quarter's end.

For the three months ended September 30, after-tax income from operations was $0.42 per share. A gain from early retirement of sinking fund bonds increased net income by $804,000 to $39.7 million or $0.43 per share. This compares to $0.66 per share in the same period last year, and $0.38 per share in this year's second quarter. Per share earnings in the latest quarter are based on an average of 91,968,464 common equivalent shares outstanding during the three months, including, for the month of September, the shares issued in exchange for Natomas stock.

For the nine months ended September 30, after-tax income from operations was $69.8 million, or $0.91 per share, versus comparable earnings of $103.3 million, or $1.64 per share in 1982. Net income for the nine months was $73.9 million, or $0.96 per share, compared to $138.9 million, or $2.21 per share in the same period last year, reflecting extraordinary gains from stock-for-debenture exchanges in both years and early retirement of long-term debt in the latest quarter. Sales and operating revenues for the first nine months were a record $2.8 billion in 1983 and $2.4 billion for that period in 1982.

Commenting on operations during the third quarter, President and Chief Operating Officer J. L. Jackson said:

"In exploration and production, customer curtailments of natural gas purchases were offset by higher natural gas prices, lower exploration and production expenses and increased oil production. Earnings in this segment rose modestly due to the addition of results for Natomas's exploration and production businesses acquired in September.

"We expect some improvement in natural gas demand during the coming colder months, and average daily oil production for the year should be above the 1982 level without factoring in Natomas's production. Natomas's Indonesian fields are producing oil at levels significantly above last year's, and will provide a handsome complement to our existing oil and gas business.

"In refining and marketing, profit margins and quarterly results remained below those in last year's third quarter, but earnings increased markedly over the second quarter. Sales volumes of refined products were up, and our two refineries averaged almost 100 percent capacity utilization compared to a national average in the upper seventies. Prices for motor fuels have begun to decline slightly, as the traditional winter downturn in sales volumes escalates price competition.

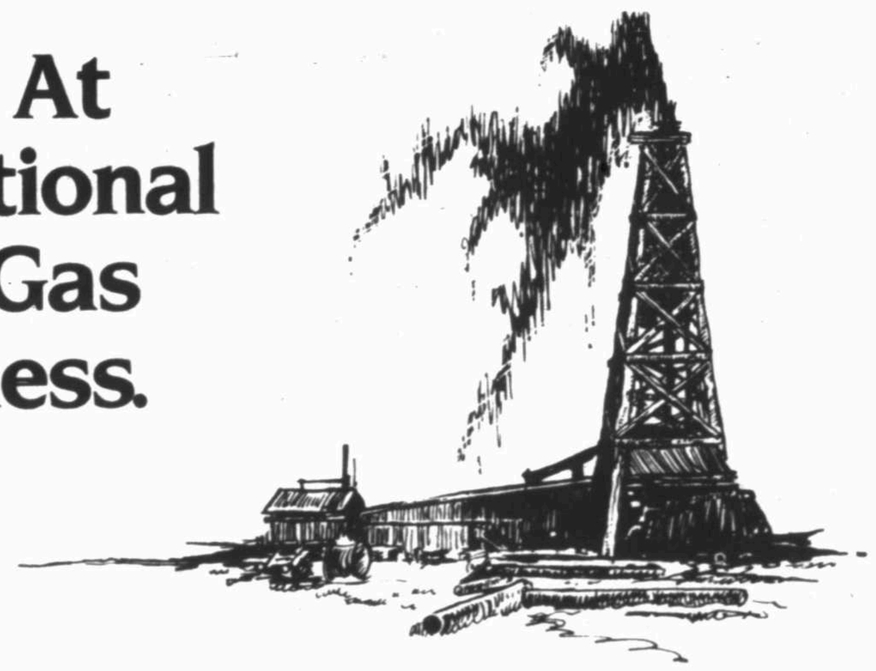

"Slack demand for residual gas and liquids held natural gas processing earnings below third quarter 1982 results, despite higher liquids prices.

"In year-to-year comparison, coal earnings fell short of last year's third quarter. However, if accounting adjustments and reimbursements are excluded, earnings in the latest quarter exceeded those in third quarter 1982. We expect fourth quarter coal earnings to be essentially even with the third quarter.

"Driven by the improving economy, earnings in industrial chemicals have risen dramatically over last year's third quarter after progressively increasing each quarter this year. Operating rates are running above industry averages in our chlor-alkali business in particular, and have ample capacity for continued, substantial earnings improvements," Jackson said.

Here's Why At ClayDesta National Bank, Oil & Gas Is Our Business.

Ever since the discovery of gas and crude in the Permian Basin, Midland has attracted countless independent energy pioneers who came here with a hat full of dreams and a pocket full of leases.

And with the kind of hard work (and a little luck) that only oil and gas people can understand, these operators have made our city one of America's great energy centers.

But factors like the economy, government regulations, and imports have changed the face of the oil and gas industry forever. And as a result, the kind of financial backing an oil and gas man needs now is a lot different from what he needed just a few years ago.

Backing the oil and gas industry is a major part of ClayDesta National Bank's business. It makes up the biggest single component of our loans. And because our bank was built by oil and gas men, we know how to handle the special needs of independent operators.

Quick response. Sometimes you've got to have an answer now! Oil men who deal with ClayDesta National will tell you they can usually measure response time in days not months.

Personal attention. Any oil man's relationship should be one-on-one with his banker, not with a department. And frankly, our oil and gas customers tell us ClayDesta National is the friendliest bank they've ever been in.

Commitment. There aren't many things more important to an oil man than knowing his bank will stand by him. You get a commitment from ClayDesta National, and you've got a commitment.

Asset strength. We opened just a few months ago with the largest capital structure of any bank in West Texas history. Since then our deposit base has grown more than 1000%, while our loan-to-deposit ratio is less than 50%. But most importantly, because of our sound relationships with other financial sources, truly no oil and gas deal is too big for ClayDesta National to handle.

Expertise. Not many things are worse than talking to a banker who doesn't understand your business. We're one of just a handful of Texas banks who have full-time engineers and oil and gas lenders on staff, ready to work with you.

Positive attitude. Let's be honest. A lot of people think energy loans are a dirty word these days. But those independent oil and gas operators who risked all they had to establish this great industry are still the backbone of it today. And we stand behind 'em. At ClayDesta National Bank, energy lending is OK!

The oil and gas industry has kept this part of Texas looking great for nearly a century.

And at ClayDesta National Bank, we think it's looking better all the time.

First secretary says things aren't better second time

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Former Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger believes that those Americans who think the energy problem has gone away because the U.S. is awash in oil are making a mistake similar to that of individuals who marry a second time.

"A second marriage is a triumph of hope over experience," said Schlesinger, the nation's first secretary of Energy. "The hope is that on the second go-around things will get better. But experience tells you otherwise."

The reality is, said Schlesinger in a lenghty interview, that "we are more vulnerable today than we were in 1973, even though the oil markets themselves are in a better state of repair."

Schlesinger, who was named secretary in 1977, accused the Reagan administration of a "lukewarm" effort to achieve energy independence and charged that the president has done little to protect the country against another embargo in the future.

Schlesinger, secretary of Defense in the Nixon and Ford administrations, also contended that the administration has done virtually nothing to develop alternative sources of energy and predicted that President Reagan's efforts to deregulate natural gas will fail.

SCHLESINGER ALSO FORECAST that it will be at least another decade before nuclear energy has any chance of making a comeback.

He dismissed the administration's proposals to dismantle the Energy Department as "whistling Dixie" and praised Energy Secretary Donald P. Hodel for getting the administration to change its energy conservation policies.

Until a couple of months ago, the administration dismissed conservation as a meaningless tool in helping the nation reach energy independence.

A lecturer at the Georgetown Institute of Strategic Studies, Schlesinger said the major consequence of the oil embargo for the world economy was a "faltering" of economic growth.

"In the industrial countries, unemployment has risen substantially and difficulties have been experienced in controlling inflation," he said. "In the underdeveloped countries, hopes for growth and rising living standards have been blighted. In all countries, social problems have grown."

Schlesinger, who also served as CIA director, said that from the standpoint of an economic historian, "looking back to this era from the 21st century, the year 1973 will stand out as marking a watershed."

"THE OIL PRICE explosion separated the postwar era of unparalleled economic expansion from the current one of unexpected economic difficulties," he explained.

Schlesinger said that administration efforts in the synthetic fuels area "have diminished substantially in recent years because of the surplus of oil."

"There is no sense of drive or urgency with regard to synfuels at this juncture," he said. "There is a growing disinterest on the part of both the firms and a weakened willingness to support such ventures by the U.S. government."

Schlesinger rejected suggestions that Congress disband the Synfuels Corporation which has the responsibility for developing synfuels.

"I would be reluctant to see that happen," he said. "I think that while the instrument is not working as intended the policy objective remains important to develop the technologies so that we are less dependent on imported oil."

"At the moment our imports are down to about 5 million barrels a day, but this is a temporary manifestation," he said. "By the early 1990s our own production of crude oil will have fallen by a million to a million and a half barrels a day. We will probably be down to about 7 million barrels a day and imports will have risen again to perhaps 45 or 50 percent of our total oil consumption. That is, we are in a temporary period of remission with regard to the energy problem."

SCHLESINGER SAID HE EXPECTS that within "a decade or more we may have some significant breakthrough with regard to solar energy. But that is not in our area of greatest urgency. The greatest problem for the U.S. remains liquid fuels."

Discussing the future of nuclear energy, Schlesinger said that it will be at least a decade before "nuclear energy has any strong possibility of coming back. If it comes back, it will come back because the public has become worried about the greenhouse effect and because nuclear energy has the great benefit of being pollution-free."

But before this occurs, he said, "there will have to be a change in the public psychology, in which the kinds of risks that they perceive in the Three Mile Island incident fade and the risks of greater dependence on fossil fuels become more apparent."

Schlesinger said efforts to deregulate natural gas "will go nowhere. The primary beneficiary of the deregulation of old gas are the majors, and there is no need for incentives at this time for discovering old fields that we already know about. Congress is in no mood to deregulate old gas."

"Now, if you can move along three, four, five years, as the reserves of old gas begin to run down, I think that the congressional mood may change, but for the time being there has been no substantial movement, and I would expect none," he explained.

Schlesinger said the administration "acknowledgement of the importance of conservation" is a step in the right direction.

"THERE IS AN acknowledgement of the need to work on alternaives and, notably, renewable alternatives, which in the past the administration has tended to scoff about," he said.

"Moreover they have come to recognize the necessity of government support of research and development activities, including some of the less popular areas," Schlesinger said.

"They have recognized that the government has a substantial role to play, that the Department of Energy runs the fuel production facilities for the nuclear industry, that it runs the Naval Petroleum Preserve," he added.

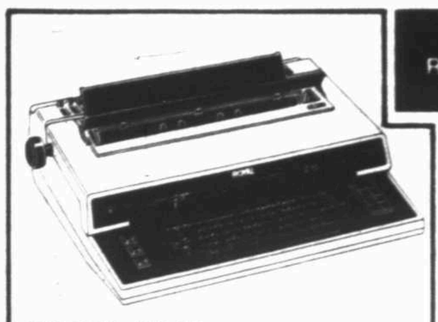

"It struck me that when you have all those scouts sitting in check all day, sharing information, it seemed like such a waste of time for them — when they could be using their time to do individual scouting and other things. I felt a commercial scouting service could do just as well."

Embargo forced planning

By WILLIAM K. RASHBAUM
Hearst Washington Bureau

In the 10 years since the 1973 Arab oil embargo was declared, the United States has taken measures to safeguard itself against another such energy supply interruption.

Innovative technologies have been developed to produce electricity without oil while conforming to environmental standards.

Some of the most interesting sources of energy, and perhaps those with the most potential, involve the generation of power from different types of waste products.

After the 1973 oil embargo, many municipal utilities found themselves faced by imponderables. With the price of oil skyrocketing and uncertainties about future energy-demand growth, the prospect of constructing plants that they might not need — or be able to fuel — changed the outlook of many utilities executives.

One of the major questions raised by the embargo was how to plan for the future. The radical changes in energy usage habits resulting from conservation in the face of shortages and higher rates left utilities in the dark about the future. They were hesitant to speculate and reluctant to build new plants based on those speculations.

It was a different world, and the rules were not yet written. From 1930 to 1970 the price per kilowatt hour of electricity had effectively gone down — that is, it rose more slowly than the inflation rate or the cost of living. In 1973, the price of electricity rose faster than those indicators.

During the 1960s, increasing demand required utilities to build bigger plants. Power use was doubling every 10 years. The oil embargo helped cut that growth rate in half.

In the early '70s, along with that decline, came the relization that, whether oil was available or not, fuels are not recoverable resources and would no longer be cheap, whether there was an OPEC or not.

Utility executives began examining the possibilities of using alternative fuel sources. The so-called soft power sources, such as solar energy and wind, did not fit their needs.

Although nuclear power still seemed promising to many utilities at the begining of the '70s, by the end of the decade and after the Three Mile Island incident, it had become much more costly and public acceptance was substantially diminished.

Nuclear power, in the words of one Federal Energy Regulatory Commission staff member, "had become a political football."

There have been no new construction orders for nuclear power plants for almost five years.

Another technology was to burn garbage. The process dates back at least to the Second World War when Europe burned refuse for vehicular fuel after its oil supply had been cut off.

However, according to Dr. R. Eric Leber, director of energy research at the American Public Power Association, the technology has come much further, much faster, in the past 10 years.

One ton of garbage per person, per year, is produced in the United States, Leber said. This creates an enormous potential. In 20 or 30 years, according to Leber, some cities may see 20 percent of their electric power needs being fulfilled by the burning of solid waste.

However, the potential of solid waste as a fuel is limited to urban communities, he noted, because of the concentration of waste within a municipality and the expense of collecting and transporting it in outlying and rural areas where the population is less dense. Leber estimated that five percent of the country's total energy needs might be fulfilled by the burning of solid waste.

But there are possibilities that other biological waste products may be used or transformed into fuel.

Lamar, Colo., could get 30 percent of its power from cattle manure, says Dr. Leber. Approximately 200,000 head of cattle are fattened in Lamar's feed lots and in the nearby town of McClave each year.

A gas-fired 25 megawatt plant went online in 1972 on the assurances of local natural gas suppliers that they could provide enough gas to keep the plant running at capacity, according to Kevin Wailes, superintendent of the Lamar Utilities Board. But the suppliers could not provide what they had predicted and, in 1976, the board began looking into the possibility of buiding a methane digester to produce gas from manure for the plant.

Then, in 1978, the Power Plant and Industrial Fuel Use Act mandated that oil- or gas-fired plants over a certain size convert to some other type of fuel by 1990. Coal was, in most cases, the most economical.

Wailes said converting to coal would have cost about $30 million. The board began seriously considering construction of the methane digester and received a $750,000 grant for a feasibility study from the Department of Energy.

The oil embargo of 1973 "was initially the primary reason it (the project) was entered into," Wailes said.

The methane-burning process was dropped, finally, because it was too expensive. Further, energy prices dropped. Renewed drilling for natural gas resulting from the Natural Gas Policy Act, and an amendment to the Power Plant and Industrial Fuel Use Act repealing the required conversion, contributed to the killing of the project on economic grounds.

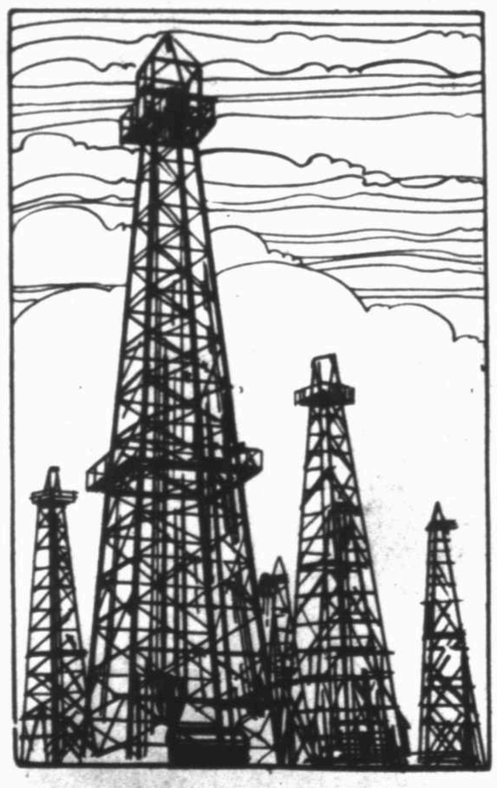

There remain 13 municipal vehicles in Lamar that were converted to run on both methane and gasoline as part of the project. Wailes said that they have had some success with the vehicles, which are in operation.

One of the clearest instances of the influence of the embargo on the utilities industry is the evolution of the so-called co-fired or multi-fired plants.

For Oil 1980s aren't like business forecasts

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

In the world of the 1970s many oil companies saw diversification as another word for survival.

They went on a buying binge that resulted in consumers buying sandwich bags from Mobil Corp., typewriters from Exxon and home furnaces from Atlantic Richfield Co. Today, people live in homes developed on land owned by Texaco Inc. and Gulf Oil Corp. and shop in stores developed by Standard Oil Co. of California.

Partly in reaction to some of the diversification efforts, Congress subsequently passed a "windfall-profits" tax, and states imposed other taxes that the companies are still paying long after the windfall profits have evaporated.

But the world of the 1980s is not what the business forecasts predicted.

President Reagan abolished gas-price controls almost as soon as he took office. Oil demand has been permanently constrained by the unforeseen success of conservation. The world's oil reserves are expected to hold out well into the 21st Century, and crude oil prices have slipped almost 15 percent from their historic highs.

THE COMBINATION of these circumstances with bad luck, bad timing and bad judgment has rendered the oil industry's widespread drive to diversify in the 1970s as a monumental flop. Top oil-company executives label the results of their own incursions into new fields "disappointing." Analysts call them "disastrous."

"I can't think of one diversification move that is unquestionably a success," says William L. Randol, a senior petroleum analyst for First Boston Corp. in New York. "Everything has gone against them, and the whole thing's become an embarrassment."

The lessons have not been lost on this mega-industry, where the big eight oil companies all rank among 15 largest U.S. industrial concerns. In the last year or so, expensive alternative fuel projects have been abandoned, unprofitable chemical operations have been sold, money-losing mines have been shut down.

A close look at financial disclosure statements reveals that:

—The total pre-tax earnings of the eight largest U.S. oil companies would have been almost 8 percent higher in 1982 if the companies had been involved only in the oil and gas businesses.

—Only one company, Standard Oil Co. of California, made more money in 1982 than it would have if oil and gas operations were its sole source of income. About 2.5 percent of the company's after-tax profits came from non-petroleum activites. (Chevron is the only one of the eight companies that does not report its segment earnings in pre-tax terms.) At each of the other seven companies, oil and gas operations subsidized other activites.

—The eight companies received a healthy 16.8 percent return on their petroleum-related assets before taxes in 1982, but no return on assets from either their chemical operations or from other operations ranging from mining to retailing. The 8.2 percent of the giants' total identifiable assets invested in chemicals lost $331 million in 1982. That admittedly was in a recession year for a highly cyclical industry, but performance of these investments has been generally disappointing even in good times. In 1978, when the economy was booming, chemical assets owned by the big eight companies earned less than 7 percent. In 1982, the 12.1 percent of the eight companies' assets invested in other non-oil activities lost $1.3 billion.

—Five of the eight companies have lost money before taxes over the last 5-year period in their businesses outside of petroleum and chemicals, and four of those have never had a profitable year with those "other" operations.

There is no single or simple explanation for what went so wrong for so many.

ONE PROBLEM WAS the high price that the oil companies paid for some of their acquisitions. In 1974, when Mobil bought its first 54 percent of Marcor Inc. — parent of Montgomery Ward and Container Corp. of America — the company paid about 40 percent more per share than Marcor's stock had been drawing on Wall Street. Several years later, Chevron offered to pay a premium of more than 100 percent to buy the shares of mining giant AMAX Inc. that it did not already own, but its bid was rejected.

"The fault you could make with the oil companies is that they were willing to pay such very high prices for these assets that they really look sort of stupid (now)," says David Richards, senior vice president with the Los Angeles money-management firm of Capital Research & Management Co. "They didn't recognize what would happen when the economy turned down. I can't think of one (purchase) that makes any sense. They basically went out and bid the prices of these things well above wht the stock market was bidding them at, and I don't think the stock market is stupid about these things."

One well-respected analyst privy to the details of some of the acquisitions said there were cases in which the companies did not even have a plan for fitting the new purchase into their operations. "When you talked to top management, you found they didn't have a reason for being in the business," said the analyst, who asked not to be identified.

The forays in some cases have represented attempts to succeed in businesses simply too small or too young to thrive in a big corporate environment.

For example, American Solar King Corp. of Waco, Texas, picked up Exxon's solar thermal subsidiary, Daystar Corp., and the assets of a second subsidiary called Solar Thermal Systems, for $2.3 million in 1981 after Exxon enterprises Inc. had invested an estimated $40 million in research.

"Exxon had really done all the right things to start up a little company, but it was hard (for Exxon) to focus on something that little and something that required a highly agile, entrepreneurial style of management," says Brian Pardo, chairman and chief executive of American Solar King, the largest U.S. solar thermal manufacturer.

UPON BUYING THE company, Pardo slashed the work force by two-thirds. With that move and the elimination of the corporate overhead that Exxon had been allocating to the tiny venture, it was immediately profitable. Pardo expects Daystar's operations to contribute about half his company's forecasted $10 million in earnings for this year.

Timing has played a role, too.

Looking to the nuclear-power era that seemed so near back in the early 1970s, oil companies bought uranium mines. Then negative public sentiment all but buried nuclear development, and the mines were sold or idled.

Forseeing a day of $50-a-barrel crude-oil prices, the industry bought tars and shale oil properties. Then crude-oil prices dipped, and the synthetic fuels could not be produced cheaply enough from these resources to compete.

The industry bought copper mines, and the price of copper plummeted. Mobil bought a weak department store chain hoping to make money from its credit-card operations, but market interest rates skyrocketed above what it could charge customers.

A LINGERING recession has hurt nearly every American business, the diversified oil company interests among them. The strong dollar that emerged when American interest rates rose have made oil-company exports such as metals and chemicals unattractively expensive in world markets. Permanent conservation efforts and the drop in demand that grew out of the 1970s have left virtually every energy business — from oil to coal to natural gas — with a surfeit of capacity.

The outcome of oil companies' investment forays — involving millions, even billions, of dollars — has sometimes hinged heavily on luck.

San Francisco-based Standard of California, for example, in 1975 bought 20 percent of Greenwich, Conn.-based AMX for $333 million. In 1978 and again in 1981, the oil company tried to buy the remaining 80 percent of AMAX's shares, ffirst for about $1.9 billion and ultimately for $4.3 billion. Both times it was rebuffed.

Now three years of of on-and-off recession have deeply depressed metal prices. AMAX's profits dropped more than 50 percent in 1981 and turned into losses of $390 million in 1982. The company is expected to lose money again this year — an estimated $225 million. Says California Standard's chief executive, George Keller: "In retrospect, the best thing that happened is they turned us down."

Likewise, Arco decided to sell its 60 percent interest in the Colony Oil Shale Project in Colorado to Exxon in 1980 — a time when crude-oil prices were still rising at a pace that made profitable synthetic-fuel production appear just around the corner. Chairman Robert O. Anderson says the company wanted to free up cash to develop its Alaskan oil properties.

EXXON PAID $300 million in cash and promised to pay $100 million more if the project started on schedule in 1985. But the project became too costly even for a corporation that had become the world's largest industrial company. Exxon abandoned Colony in 1982, paying $382 million to buy out its partner in the project (a requirement under existing agreements) and taking a $106 million write-off against earnings.

And there have been bitter ironies.

Mobil spent $1.8 billion altogether for Marcor, with its healthy paperboard manufacturing arm and Montgomery Ward, the retail industry's perennial poor cousin. In the years since, Montgomery Ward has lost about $240 million before taxes, while the paperboard business has earned $728 million — for a combined annual return of 3.8 percent on the purchase.

Less than a year after completing the purchase, New York-based Mobil allowed itself to be outbid by $800,000 for the Irvine Co., a private Newport Beach, Calif., development company that owns roughly 17 percent of the land in Orange County. A consortium of private investors won the prize with a bid of just over $337 million.

Although Irvine Co. does not reveal its earnings, a spokesman says the company has been "highly profitable" every year since the 1976 sale. And a recent sale of 52 percent of the company's shares fetched more than $500 million, giving the company an estimated value of about $1 billion — a tidy 330 percent appreciation on the original $337 million investment.

NOT EVERY OIL company was seduced by the allures of diversification. Shell Oil Co. largely resisted the temptation.

Since 1979, non-petroleum products have depressed the company's pre-tax profits only twice — and then minimally — and the Houston-based company has been able to develop more reserves than it has depleted by using its cash for little but oil and gas exploration and development.

"It was deliberate," says A.G. Dempster, manager of strategic planning for the company, whose chemical and other assets today represent a small percentage of its total, at 24 percent, than they did five years ago, when non-petroleum assets represented about 30 percent.

Dempster said the company decided in early 1979 that it had plenty of profitable options within its existing petroleum and chemical businesses, and that any flight into foreign fields was risky and not in the best interests of Shell shareholders. "Why would a shareholder who can go out and diversify his own portfolio look to his oil company to act as an amateur mutual fund for him?" Dempster asks.

Today, a mere 3 percent of the company's assets are invested outside of oil, gas and chemicals in such areas as mining (primarily coal), the conversion of coal to gas, solar energy and a joint project exploring the making of interferon by recombinant DNA techniques.

TEXACO INC.'S outlook in the late 1970s also helped the White Plains, N.Y.-based company to avoid most of the pitfalls of diversification.

"I never did believe we were coming to the end of the petroleum era during all that time when people were talking about the world running out of oil and saying that oil companies had better get into something else because there would be no substantial business for them," says John K. McKinley, the company's chairman and chief executive.

In 1978, 95.3 percent of Texaco's identifiable assets were primarily in oil and gas. Today, the ratio is 95.7 percent. The remainder is primarily in chemicals, although the company has coal reserves and is building a government-subsidized project to convert coal to gas at Daggett, Calif.

Texaco also owns Anaheim Hills, a planned community in Anaheim, Calif., that it bought into in 1971 but has been trying to sell for more than two years.

Standard Oil of Indiana, too, largely eschewed diversification in the 1970s — although it did make an untimely and unprofitable mining purchase in 1979. The company's few non-petroleum ventures contributed to the company's profits in four of the last five years and cost the Chicago-based corporation a net $5 million before taxes in the one year they lost money.

NOT ALL OF the oil industry's forays have been unprofitable, of course. The industry began producing petrochemicals decades ago and has seen that business go through boom times as well as busts in the years since. Additionally, industry officials hope their most market-sensitive investments — particularly mining — will rebound with the world economy.

"Many of these metals and earth resources are going to be needed as much or more than they have in the past," says Anderson of Arco, the most diversified of the big eight oil companies.

Further, there is an intangible value in some of the industry's investments that cannot be assessed at the bottom line.

Pardo of American Solar King says his company never could have done the things Exxon did before selling its unprofitable Daystar operation. "We got a lot of very, very good technology," he says. "The kinds of things Exxon could afford to do in the early days, we could not."

Mobil, Standard of Indiana, Shell and particularly Arco are investing to varying degrees in photovoltaics — the conversion of sunlight directly to electricity. A promising energy technology but still an expensive one, photovoltaics doubtless would be much further from a day of widespread economic viability if the oil companies were not bankrolling its development.

MOST INDUSTRY officials and analysts believe a time may come again for oil companies to diversify. While the panic has ebbed, the fact remains that fossil fuels are an exhaustible resource.

"The consumption curve is flattening, which means reserves will last longer," says Dillar Spriggs, president of Petroleum Analysis Ltd., New York. "But I think if, in the next 10 years, they don't find much new oil and gas, they'll start casting around again."

Hodel says oil disruption is fact of life

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Energy Secretary Donald P. Hodel says U.S. oil vulnerability is unlikely to end soon and that the risk of serious oil disruption will be a fact of life for years to come.

Hodel does not forsee a "total energy self-sufficiency" for the United States for at least another 20 years but believes Americans are "much better off today" than they were only a "few short years ago in terms of our ability to weather an oil shock."

"Despite the sporadic energy shortages of the last decade Americans have scant chance of sitting in a gasoline line or of seeing plants close because of lack of fuel," the administration's chief spokesman on energy said in an interview.

Hodel also reemphasized the administration's new interest in conservation as an energy source, saying renewable-energy projects and increased conservation efforts will play an increasingly important role in any long-term energy policy for the U.S.

The president's energy chieftain, Hodel pledged renewed faith in free market energy policies, warned of potentially large oil price increases after 1984, and reaffirmed the administration's determination to press Congress for action on the deregulation of natural gas.

HE SAID THAT unless something is done, the U.S. "runs the risk of running out of natural gas sooner than otherwise would be the case."

The 47-year-old Oregonian pronounced Reagan's energy policy a rousing success, saying the nation's vulnerability to energy supply disruptions has been drastically reduced, "especially through additions to our Strategic Petroleum Reserve (SPR) and through lower levels of oil imports."

Hodel noted that only about a fourth of the oil consumption this year is from abroad, with less than half the imports coming from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC).

"The kind of leverage that once existed in OPEC almost assuredly cannot ever exist again," Hodel added.

Hodel, who took over as Energy secretary after the resignation of James Edwards, said the U.S. has done much over the last decade to mitigate the effects of another sharp break in oil imports.

For one thing, the U.S. and other members of the International Energy Agency, an organization of energy importing nations, have agreed to share, rather than grab for all they can get, if world oil supplies are disrupted.

HODEL, THE FORMER deputy secretary of Interior, insisted the Reagan administration would not sell off crude oil from the SPR simply to keep a nervous market from sending oil prices soaring.

He said that although there may be some concern that an escalation of the Iran-Iraq war could hold up the flow of oil from the Persian gulf a short-term reduction scarcely would be noticed because of the current oil glut.

He also reemphasized the administration's commitment to a "free unfettered market" as the best safeguard against a future oil embargo or other energy disruption.

He said the government tried and failed twice to solve supplyt disruptions by imposing mandatory controls and regulations.

"The administration prefers to let the free market distribute and allocate supplies during an emergency," he said.

"What we know from history is that every time we have started allocating fuel and started fixing prices it has turned out in the end to be a greater disaster than the feared disaster coming from an uncontrolled market," Hodel continued.

"NOW THE KEY therefore would be to try to work within the market system and encourage the major participants, whether it be the companies or the consumers, to make the system work," he said.

Hodel explained that part of the problem of getting the government involved is that "it takes years once the government is involved to disengage it. I've got lawsuits going on right now — billions of dollars trying to sort out the last time the government tried to allocate oil."

The administration has come under fire from many sources for refusing to spell out the circumstances under which it would withdraw oil from the reserve, which has trebled in size to 360 million barrels since Reagan took office.

The SPR will be considered full when it holds 750 million barrels, a level the Energy Department predicts will be reached in the early 1990s.

HODEL EMPHASIZED that U.S. energy security requires "a balanced mix" of resources, including solar, wind and hydroelectric energy and other renewable sources of power.

The administration plan signaled a subtle but important movement away from the government's almost complete reliance on conventional energy sources such as oil, natural gas, coal and nuclear power.

Until now, the administration has played down the importance of conservation and renewable sources and it has consistently urged Congress to eliminate or reduce funding for many of the programs.

During his presidential campaign, President Reagan derided conservation as simply being "cold in the winter and hot in the summer," but the new policy places the admistration behind the importance of conservation.

"We have come a long way in the last decade," Hodel said. "But now people are again generally complacent about energy."

THE U.S., LARGELY because of high domestic oil production and vast supplies of other fuels such as coal, failed to acknowledge that its enormous appetite for oil was outracing its supplies.

"You couldn't continue that kind of consumption growth," he said in an interview. "You are bucking a tidal wave when you think you can withstand market forces."

Overall, the average American's use of oil is now steadily declining — a trend that analysts expect to continue.

In 1982, each U.S. citizen used 22.9 barrels of oil. By the year 2000 the Commerce Department estimates that conservation and fuel-switching will cut per-capita consumption to 16.9 barrels.

Hodel said that if oil supplies were again cut off from the Persian Gulf "we would not be in the same boat again."

"First of all, we have sharply reduced our reliance on imported oil. It is a lower percentage, in the low 30s instead of the low 40s," Hodel said. "Instead of OPEC, and particularly the Arab OPEC nations, being our largest import suppliers, Mexico, Canada, the United Kingdom and Venezuela are our largest suppliers and that immediately has impact."

"BY THE SAME token," he went on, "there are enough empty gas tanks in American automobiles that if everybody went to the service station at the same time, "in space of 24 hours, you could have a local service station run out of gasoline though there is plenty of it in the supply system."

Hodel said that the whole area of renewables and unconventional resources has tremendous promise in this country.

"We have an array of programs for the purpose of researching and in some cases developing geothermal, hydroelectricity, solar, wind, ocean energy, thermal energy conversion, better ways to burn coal, cleaner ways," he said.

"As for the solar potential — consider that the earth receives 178,000 terawatts of energy from the sun," he went on. "The consumption of energy in the whole of the energy systems on earth today is somewhere between 8 and 9 terawatts. Now, there are some problems in drawing on all that energy. But, for all practical purposes, the potential is unlimited."

Hodel said that America's own sources of energy are located in Texas, Louisiana, the overthrust belt, the Gulf of Mexico, offshore California and Prudhoe Bay.

"We don't know what still is to be found onshore or offshore," he went on. "It depends on who you talk to. But the possibility exists that we still have substantial finds in the western overthrust belt and in the outer continental shelf which would provide additional supplies."

HODEL SAID HE agreed with the assessment that the new supplies will be "more expensive than existing because they are either deeper or harder to get to."

Hodel said he expects Congress to "come to grips with deregulating natural gas before they go home for Christmas."

"I think that many congressmen simply are not going to be willing to go home and face constituents who are very concerned about the natural gas crisis and tell them that thy have been unwilling to deal with the iussue," he went on.

The secretary expressed hope that when Congress does deal with gas decontrol it will "recognize just as with oil, it was the decontrol of the price of oil that stimulated production and price reduction."

Hodel said he found the provision in the decontrol bill which allows "obligation of contracts the least desireable portion of our bill but I still don't have an alternative that would make it unnecessary."

THE SECRETARY SAID he favors the contract carriage provision of the proposed legislation but expressed a distress with a "ramping proposal which was written into the bill by the Senate."

"The thing I don't like about ramping is that it provided a federally mandated price level and the proposal we had put a tremendous burden on the people in the industry to negotiate, and on the pipelines, to negotiate the lowest price possible," Hodel explained.

"And we think that that would have resulted in the most direct and immediate benefit to the consumers," he went on. "As soon as you start ramping it, you prescribe the prices that will be paid. That is not exactly a free market but it moves eventually to a free market, and that is better than nothing."

Asked how hard the administration would push to win the natural gas decontrols, Hodell replied: "As strongly as possible because the president is commited to decontrol. He has made that plain, we've worked the issue vigorously. It is a very difficult issue to move through the Congress. If we don't get a decontrol bill, it will be because Congress was unwilling to face up to it."

Hodel said the administration's energy strategy is "an adequate supply of energy at a reasonable price. We think that goal can be best achieved by a minimum of governmental interference in the process of decision-making by those involved in the energy industries."

Hodel said that "potentially, this world has an unlimited energy supply. We are not, in fact, running out of energy. Any statements to the contrary, I think, ignore the tremendous volumes of oil which we already know to exist, not only in conventional sources but in enhanced oil recovery opportunities."

"WE ALSO HAVE the synfuels potential," he went on, "which economically today looks very difficult, but in terms of potential energy supply vastly exceeds the amounts of conventional oil that we have seen."

Asked whether he felt thre is "potential for as yet undiscovered sources of energy," Hodel responded:

"Well, when I'm listening to potentials I always like to include the "black box," because from the time I became involved in the energy industry, there were people who were always trying to sell us on the concept of "black boxes."

"These would be installed at the point of use and somehow, magically, from within, produce the energy required to do all the things that the user wants to do," he continued.

"I don't know what will be in the black box, but for all I know, there is somebody out there today in his garage developing a black box."

Mitchell develops computer production records system

THE WOODLANDS (SWN) — An innovative computer system which provides almost instant access to well history and production information has been developed by Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. and will be marketed by Catron Corp., a Houston-based computer software firm.

The trade name is the Catron Well Information System. "We believe the system will be widely used within the industry, by major oil companies as well as by independent producers," Terry Catron, president of Catron Corp., said. "This is the leading edge of proven technology."

The system was demonstrated today for petroleum industry executives at Mitchell Energy's headquarters in The Woodlands. Mitchell Energy has successfully used the information system in the past year to evaluate acquisition prospects and potential areas of exploration in North Texas.

"If the Well Information System leads you to only one successful well opportunity that otherwise would have been missed, then the system will have paid for itself," said Don Covey, president of Mitchell Energy's Exploration and Production Division.

Principally involved in the development of the system were three members of Mitchell Energy's technical staff: Loren Vogel, North Texas reservoir engineering manager; Chris Veeder, North Texas district geologist; and Ken Gernhart, project manager — information systems.

The system makes well history and production information readily available at the touch of a computer key, allowing more time for interpretation and analysis of data. Such information previously had to be gathered by a technical support staff from various company and public sources, Vogel said. This proved time-consuming and often resulted in key decisions being formed on the basis of limited information, he noted.

Cheap-energy way of life ended overnight

By CYNTHIA KASABIAN
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO -Ten years ago the daily habits of citizens of the United States and the rest of the industrialized world were changed profoundly by two sweeping acts that took place thousands of miles away.

On Oct. 16, 1973, meeting in the tiny Persian Gulf state of Kuwait, the 13-member Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries raised the price of oil 70 percent. The next day, angry about U.S. support of the Israelis in the Yom Kippur war, nine Arab nations embargoed oil to America, the world's largest oil-consuming nation.

The repercussions rolled darkly over the world. Inflation spurted. Economic growth faltered. Much of the wealth of the industrial world shifted into the hands of the OPEC nations. Poor nations teetered on the brink of bankruptcy.

Fuel bills leaped, gas lines formed and citizens took to car pools. Appliances were turned down — or off.

Overnight, a way of life built on cheap energy ended.

"THE OIL PRICE shock had a significant impact," said Nile Rowan, marketing consultant in the values and lifestyles program at SRI International of Menlo Park, Ca. "It basically changed the way we perceived energy. We became a more energy-efficient society. We stopped wasting energy."

Indeed, the oil shock worked a traumatic sort of remedy. Today, OPEC's influence has ebbed sharply as a result of conservation efforts, new energy policies and development of alternative fuels.

But, even though gas lines may be memories, experts agree that to discount the importance of OPEC is a mistake: Of the 670 billion barrels of proven world oil reserves, OPEC still has control of an estimated 450 billion, or 67 percent.

THE OIL SHOCK

After World War II, the world had become increasingly dependent on oil — cheap oil. In the 1950s, when the per-barrel price of oil was about $1.90, consumption doubled.

International appetite for crude doubled again in the 1960s when the price of oil actually declined to about $1.60 per barrel.

"We were becoming committed, almost addicted, to this material which was so much cheaper than any other material available," said George Keller, chairman and chief executive officer of Standard Oil of California. "We were building industries using hydrocarbon fuels which put us in a long-term trap."

OPEC — whose member states are Algeria, Gabon, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Libya, Nigeria,aariaAra Vne and the United Arab Emirates — caught us in the trap during the early 1970s.

AT THAT TIME U.S. oil production peaked; it wasn't possible to increase supplies rapidly enough to keep up with the accelerating demand. In 1973, the United States was consuming more than 17 million barrels of oil daily, more than 63 percent of which was supplied domestically. OPEC supplied the United States with 48 percent of the oil it imported, charging $3.01 per 42-gallon barrel.

In a single day, Oct. 16, 1973, OPEC shot that price up to more than $5 per barrel. Further aggravating the price hike was the embargo that followed the next day, cutting U.S. oil supplies by about 5 percent.

In retrospect, experts say that the reduction of supplies wasn't enough to cause a serious shortage of oil. But at the time, the fear of a shortage caused a U.S. phenomenon: gas lines.

During the winter of 1973, beginning before dawn, drivers would sit in their cars, windows steamed from hot coffee, in hopes of topping their tanks.

Within less than a year, they saw the price of gas at the pump jump from a little more than 38 cents a gallon to 52 cents. Today, the average price per gallon of regular gasoline, if you're filling your own tank, is nearly $1.16.

THE OIL PRICE shock of 1973, and another in 1979 that resulted largely from the Iranian revolution, jolted economies worldwide. By 1980, U.S. inflation had more than doubled to 13.5 percent, pushed up largely by rising energy costs.

Among other industrialized nations, the inflation rate went as high as 21 percent. It reached even greater levels in underdeveloped nations that relied on imported oil. Last year, the average inflation rate in such countries was 38 percent.

"It represented the kind of shock that proved very difficult for both the industrial and developing economies to adjust to," said Edward Fried, senior fellow at the Brookings Institute and former deputy assistant secretary of state. "It was an important factor in the less than subnormal growth that took place in the world since 1973."

Said Keller: "If there was a positive effect, it was the awakening of the entire industrial community to the fact that we had a commodity of international trade which was being used very wastefully."

CONSUMPTION FALLS, CONSERVATION GROWS

"In terms of changing our energy mix and reducing our vulnerability since 1973, the most important element has been conservation," said Daniel Yergin, president of Cambridge Energy Research Associates, research and consulting firm.

By 1982, U.S. oil consumption declined nearly 12 percent, or 734 million barrels a year, from 1973 levels. Additionally, the United States has reduced its reliance on OPEC oil significantly.

During the first four months of 1983, OPEC supplied about 30 percent of U.S. imported oil, down from nearly 48 percent in 1973.

The decline in demand has transformed the oil scarcity of 1973 into what some have termed an "oil surplus" of 1983, meaning that the world today has the capacity to produce nearly 15 million barrels of oil per day more than is demanded. In 1973, that figure was about 3 million barrels per day.

It is largely this excess capacity — called a supply cushion — which prompted OPEC in March to lower its price to $29 per barrel from $34.

THE DEMAND FOR OIL fell due to a combination efforts by individuals, industry and government.

Homeowners went on energy-cutting campaigns, putting on sweaters and insulating their pipes. Some turned to the sun and installed solar panels. Today, the average new home uses about 20 percent less energy than it did 10 years ago.

Wood-burning stoves and fireplaces have regained popularity. Wood now accounts for nearly 10 percent of total residential energy, and is used as the main heat source in some 2.5 million merican households.

A 55-mph speed limit was imposed on highways. U.S. automakers, through congressional pressure and foreign competition, began producing fuel-stingy cars.

The United States and other industrial nations took these steps to reduce vulnerability to future oil price shocks:

IN 1979, after the shah of Iran was ousted from power and Iranian oil production dissipated, President Jimmy Carter began decontrolling the price of oil. In early 1981, the job was completed by President Reagan.

In 1974, 21 nations created the International Energy Agency Agreement — a promise to share energy supplies should another significant interruption of oil occur.

The United States created the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Program, which now holds about 360 million gallons of oil — about 90 days' worth of what we import. The goal is to store up to 1 billion barrels.

Though the United States today is far less dependent on OPEC oil, the problems associated with the oil shocks linger.

TURMOIL AT THE BANKS

As OPEC accumulated wealth, it invested billions of dollars in major banks worldwide. The banks, in turn, recycled the funds

Today, non-OPEC developing countries have more than $660 billion of debt — nearly a six-fold increase over their 1973 load.

"The banking system now is in a most precarious position," said Hang Sheng Cheng, an international economist with the Federal Reserve Bank in San Francisco.

"Thus far we have been able to ride out one potential crisis after another," he added. "However, the world is still faced with a number of very serious problems."

ONE OF THEM is the uncertainty of another oil interruption or major price hike.

"Are we (industrial nations) well positioned to sustain a significantly higher price? No," said Richard Puz, executive vice president in Bank of America's world banking division. "It would abort the present economic recovery that is being led by industrialized countries and it would set off another inflationary spiral."

He added, "Unlike 1973, and even 1979, the mechanism of facilitating those shocks to the economic system, namely the ability to borrow, is curtailed simply because of the mountain of debt that countries already have."

THE FUTURE

While no one is predicting a major interruption in oil supplies in the near future, the stability of the Middle East remains of constant concern.

Just as the Arab-Israeli war spurred the 1973 embargo, and the Iranian revolution helped touch off the 1979 oil price hike, a potential time bomb today is the Iran-Iraq war.

While Keller believes there is a "low probability" of a major disruption of oil supplies resulting from that war, he added, "There are events we can't predict or control."

Keller recently observed that current conditions in the Middle East are more troublesome than at any time since the Iranian crisis.

"It is inconceivable to me that other disputes in the region will be resolved unless there is some easing of the tensions in Lebanon," he said. "The fighting there could spread. It's an accident waiting to happen."

AS FOR FUTURE demand, observers do not expect U.S. oil consumption to rise much through the year 2000.

"We will never go back to the consumption patterns of the last decade," said Norman Higby Jr., a Menlo Park energy consultant. "No one in his right mind will buy a car that gets 10 miles to the gallon."

If oil supplies remain safe and constant, and demand continues its slow growth, oil prices are not expected to increase much soon.

"We're envisioning quite a small increase in the price of fuel products, relative to inflation over the next 15 years," Keller said.

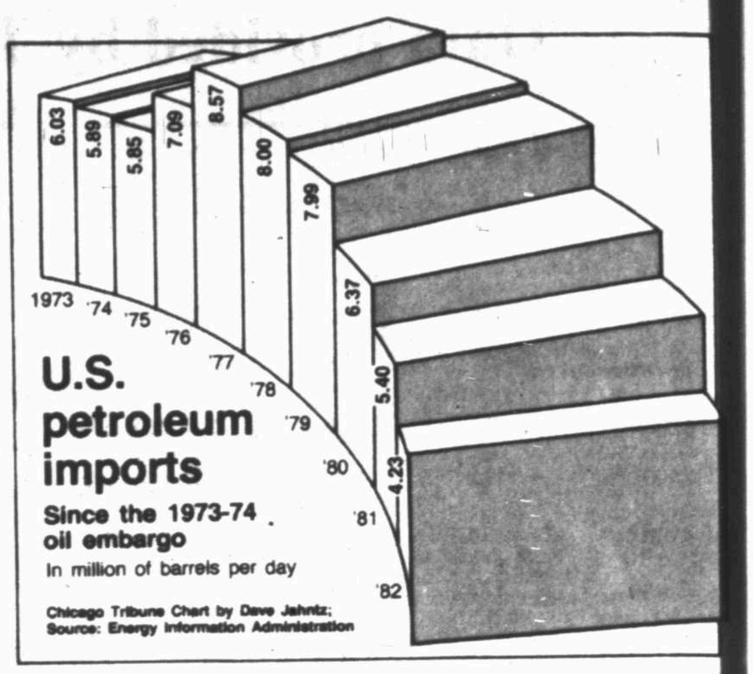

For instance, the per gallon cost of gas is likely to be about 50 cents more in the year 2000 — measured in today's dollars.

BUT, BECAUSE U.S. production of oil is expected to decline gradually during the rest of the century, our reserves will be reduced substantially by 2000.

"That's because onshore, in the lower 48 states, we happen to have the most drilled-up piece of real estate in the world," E.R. Lowry, vice president of foreign operations at Standard Oil, said in a recent speech.

Today, the United States produces about 10 million of the 15 million barrels it consumes daily. Production is expected to drop about 2 million barrels daily by 2000, according to Standard Oil projections.

While onshore and offshore exploration will continue in the United States, and help feed U.S. consumption, by the end of the next decade, our need for imported oil will rise once again — particularly our need for OPEC oil, because those nations hold by far the bulk of proven oil reserves.

Gas prices going up while other energy prices fall

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It seems illogical: Oil prices are down, energy supplies are up, and yet analysts say natural gas heating bills will jump again this winter.

A survey by the Citizens-Labor Energy Coalition, which is lobbying for new controls on natural gas prices, said this week that the average natural gas bill for residential users will be 21 percent higher this winter than a year ago. The group polled natural gas distributors who serve about half the residential gas users.

The survey said about two-thirds of the expected price increase will be due to increased consumption because of an expected colder winter, while the remainder would reflect increases in prices because of deregulation.

Q. Who uses natural gas?

A. The federal government estimates that more than half of all American homes are heated by natural gas, with the fuel accounting for about 25 percent of all energy consumed in the United States. The biggest user is industry, which consumes about 40 percent of the natural gas. Residential use ranks second, accounting for 25 percent.

Q. What makes the natural gas price different from the price of other energy sources?

A. A key difference, in economic terms, is its regulation by the federal government. Since 1954, the Federal Power Commission has regulated the price of natural gas that crosses state borders. In 1978, the Congress sought to change that, figuring natural gas prices ought to be brought closer in line with the price of oil, which is a competing fuel and whose price had quadrupled since 1973.

Q. What controls are there now?

A. Under the 1978 law, the price of natural gas found at depths greater than 15,000 feet — about 3 percent of total production — was freed of federal controls. The law also set a schedule for gradually raising the price of domestic gas discovered after April 1977. Gas discovered before that date would remain under price controls indefinitely.

By contrast, federal controls on oil prices were lifted in January 1981, leaving natural gas as the only primary fuel under federal price controls.

Q. What's wrong with having controls on natural gas prices?

A. Those who favored the 1978 decontrol law said unless natural gas prices rose to an equivalent level with crude oil, energy companies would not spend the money needed to make new natural gas discoveries. Some experts warned that unless price controls were phased out, the fuel would be in short supply by the mid-1980s. Today, however, there is a persistent glut of natural gas on the domestic market — not because production has increased but because consumption has declined.

Q. Why is consumption falling?

A. Part of the explanation is energy conservation, part is the slowdown in industrial activity as a result of the 1981-82 recession. Also, some industrial users have shifted to fuel oil as a source of power. According to the Energy Department, domestic natural gas consumption fell about 8 percent last year. But partly as a result of the 1978 decontrol law, prices rose 24 percent in 1982.

Q. What's being done about these rising prices?

A. The Reagan administration has been pushing for an acceleration of the decontrol process, arguing that the sooner the market is freed of government control, the sooner it will be able to react to the circumstances that have forced oil prices down. Congress has taken several stabs at the issue in recent years, but the issue is so complex and divisive that it may not be resolved anytime soon.

"It's tough on us. Most (well servicing) companies are trying to retain their market share, and we are trying to obtain it, and there's been a collision there. Nobody said it would be a bed of roses, but we believe in (Stimwell Co.) and what we're dedicated to do."

Why Pioneers?

The Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers grew out of an idea among Midland oilmen that some sort of event should be held to honor the men and women who helped create and maintain the oil industry in the Permian Basin, making it the foundation of this area's economy.

According to one of the founders, Fred T. Hogan, the organization is not just for Midlanders, but for anone who has worked in the oil and gas industry in any area of the Permian Basin, including southeast New Mexico. To be eligible, a person must have worked in the Permian Basin for at least 30 years prior to Oct. 1 of the year in which application for membership is made.

"We figured 30 years was long enough to test the seriousness of a person," Hogan said with a laugh.

Women are welcome members, he said. His wife, Novadean, for example, is a member in her own right by virtue of the fact she worked for years for an oil company, in San Angelo and later Midland.

Geologists, operators, drillers, landmen, attorneys, pumpers, field and production personnel, truckers, stenographers and secretaries — anyone who played a part in the Permian Basin is eligible, Hogan said.

The biennial Pioneers event, held on the last Friday in October in odd-numbered years, regularly attracts between 500 and 600 people from all over the United States. They come back to Midland to renew friendships, share memories and enjoy a good time.

The first meeting of the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers was held Oct. 28, 1959, at the Scharbauer Hotel on Wall Street in Midland, at the site of the present Midland Hilton. The featured speaker for the event was Lieutenant General Ernest O. Thompson, chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission. It was Thompson who conceived the idea of proration scheduling for oil production.

These 25 individuals founded the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers:

Oil industry can relax, officials say

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The oil industry, fearful of the Reagan administration's proposed contingncy tax — which would have raised $145 billion in new revenues over three years mostly from a $5-a-barrel tax on domestic and importd oil — can relax.

That's the word from top administration officials, who have dropped plans to push for the tax, which was aimed at reducing future budget deficits after next year's presidential election.

The contingency package, which was a key part of Preident Reagan's fiscal 1984 budget, is pending before Congress. As now written, it would take effect only if the deficit grew beyond a certain percentage of the gross national product.

To reduce that deficit, the tax would automatically raise about $145 billion in revenues starting Oct. 1, 1985, the start of the 1986 fiscal year. It also included a 5 percent surcharge on individual income taxes and taxes paid by corporations.

But the tax now appears dead. Its demise is in line with a growing consensus on Capitol Hill thatthat tax increases are not possible as long as Reagan opposes them, the economy continues to recover and interest rates to do not ris sharply.

Reagan, who had supported the contingency measure only reluctantly, has opposed any tax increase effective in fiscal 1984 or 1985.

According to budget forecasts, without the contingency tax the budget deficit is expected to hover around $200 billion over the next three years or more.

In fact, the deficit may even be larger if oil prices continue on their downward spiral. Forecasts of revenues expected to be raised by the much-heralded Windfall Profit Tax on oil were based on rising energy costs, but as prices drop so do revenues from the tax.

Latest Treasury estimates show the tax netting $11.3 billion in fiscal 1983.

When enacted in 1980, the 1983 revenues were expected to hit $19.5 billion.

The tax was passed as a corollary to the phase-out of price cotrols on crude oil. At the time, energy forecasters predicted oil price inflation.

Nearly $1 trillion in windfall revenues were thought certain for oil producers.

To reduce those projected incredible profits and to provide a source of energy-related funding, Congress enacted a tax on profits resulting from decontrol.

A formula was created imposing tax rates ranging from 30 percent for newly discovered oil to 70 percent on oil from existing wells.

According to Treasury, net revenues by fiscal 1990 were expected to add up to $227 billion, after which the tax was to be phased out.

Revenues from the tax were earmarked: 60 per cent for income tax deductions, 25 percent for low-income assistance and 15 percent for energy and transportation programs.

In mid 1979, before decontrol began, the price of oil was $13 per barrel or below. With uncontrolled prices in 1980 topping $35 a barrel and expected then to continue to soar, it was hoped the tax would create a super fund that could reduce other taxes and bankroll new energy programs.

Dec. 14 - Barroso No. 2, near Lake Maracaibo, Venezuela, blows in at 1,500 feet. Its flow begins at 2,000 barrels a day, increases rapidly until it blows wildly at 100,000 barrels, destroys the derrick and blows a column of oil 200 feet into the air. The well blows one million barrels of oil in nine days before it is plugged.

Gas regulations almost hazardous, Standard VP says

CHICAGO — If the nation's natural gas regulations were manufactured products, "they would have been recalled long ago as a significant hazard to consumer's economic health," according to the vice president of public and government affairs of Standard Oil Company (Indiana).

Joe P. Hammond told the 11th Annual Illinois Energy Conference that the 1978 Natural Gas Policy Act (NGPA) has both hurt consumers and discouraged the development of new energy sources. He said that the problem created by those regulations are again confronting Congress.

"Legislators returning from recess last month had two main bills to consider: a Senate proposal that would significantly reduce the burden of regulation and a House bill that would extend and broaden existing regulations.

"Faced with such divergent options, the temptation exists for Congress to adopt some temporary, quick-fix legislaton," Hammond warned. "Or, legislators may use the difficulty of reaching agreement as a convenient excuse to do nothing.

"NGPA has caused higher prices despite the act's claim to be a consumer protection measure," Hammond said. "By holding large portions of domstic gas supplis at unrealistically low prices, NGPA has encouaged the import of higher-priced supplis, as well as the purchase by pipelines of more expensive domstic gas.

"While the volumes of such gas have been relatively small, they have had a disproportionate effect on consumer prices," he noted. "Together, high-cost domstic gas and imported gas made up only 13 percent of the U.S. consumption in 1982, but were responsible for 35 percent of consusmers' gas costs."

Hammond pointed out that although there currently appears to be a natural gas surplus, regulations are laying the foundation for further shortages. He noted that excluding discoveries made in Alaska — "so far from markets that their use is questionable" — the nation's energy producers have failed in every year but one since the mid-1960s to replace production with new reserves.

"Wellhead price decontrol would stimulate new supplies of natural gas, and these new supplies would offer a longer-term offset to price runups," Hammond said. "Not only would free market prices stimulate exploration and discovery of new resources, they would also permit producers to invest in fuller development of existing gas reserves, investments producers cannot afford under the NGPA structure.

"Removing controls on natural gas would dismantle the last barrier that prevents all our major sources of energy from competing in a free market," he said. "Such competition is helathy for all consusmers, ensuring them that energy prices and supply reiflect the value we place upon them."

AGA forecasts larger gas supply

WASHINGTON, D.C. — An American Gas Associaton study released recently projects present United States gas supply could increase by as much as 43 percent by the year 2000.

"This would amount to an increase of 8 trillion cubic feet (Tcf) over a 1982 supply level of 18.7 Tcf. The availability of this additional gas supply at the turn of the century would make it possible for the United States to utilize more gas energy and further reduce its dependence on foreign oil," A.G.A. President George H. Lawrence said.

The report projects a gas supply in the year 2000 ranging between 17 and 26.7 Tcf depending on future technical, social, economic and political conditions.

The study reaffirms that lower-48 state gas production by the turn of the century will continue to be the nation's most important source of natural gas, providing an estimated 12 to 19 Tcf. However, it also points out that a variety of other supplemental sources of gas can play an increasingly important role in the nation's future gas supply picture.

Pipeline deliveries from Canada, Mexico and Alaska are expected to make a contribution to increased gas supply by the year 2000.

The study says sufficient gas energy will be available in the year 2000 to continue to satisfy relatively the same portion of the nation's total energy needs as natural gas satisfies today.

Lawrence said, a significant capital investment will be required by the United States energy industry and in particular by the gas industry to make these levels of gas supply available.

The report estimates that the natural gas utility industry will require about $283 billion to develop and bring to market new gas supplies during the next 17 years. As competition increases for future capital needs, the superior capital efficiency — more energy delivered per dollar invested — of supplemental gas supply projects will help assure that gas energy will make its vital long-term conribution.

The supply forecasts contained in A.G.A.'s "The Gas Energy Supply Outlook: 1983 — 2000," are lower than the Association's previous projections for three reasons:

(1) Decline in projections of future United States energy demand to 90 — 100 quad range at the turn of the century due to increasing conservation and more efficient energy utilization.

(2) Slowdown in economic growth rates, coupled with the uncertain costs of borrowing; and

(3) Changes occuring in the national energy focus towards relying on lower-48 states natural gas supplies and the reduced emphasis on synthetic fuels.

Plan to scuttle DOE now dead

"People who got into the drilling business in the last five years really got a shock (with the downturn). When it came time to bid on a footage basis, they didn't know how to do it. It's tough."

—Joe M.L. Melton

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration's much-touted plan to scuttle the Energy Department as a way to save billions of dollars a year in government outlays and reduce the government's involvement in energy matters is dead, at least for the immediate future.

"I haven't backed away from it, nor has the president," Energy Secretary Donald P. Hodel confided the other day. "We still want to move its activities elsewhere."

"But there seems to be more productive things to spend our time on," he said in a lengthy interview. "There doesn't seem to be great sentiment for dismantlement."

Making good on a campaign promise, President Reagan asked Congress in 1981 to dismantle the four-year old agency and transfer most of its functions to the Commerce Department.

But strong congressional opposition developed, spurred by environmentalists who feared that research into so-called alternative energy sources, already downgraded by the administration, would be lost altogether if the department were dismantled.

OTHER OPPOSTIION came from defense hard-liners, who did not want to place the nation's nuclear weapons production program in a department whose focus is business development and trade.

The nuclear weapons program is roughly half of the Energy Department's present budget; some experts have suggested that aspect be taken from Energy anyway and placed under Defense.

That would reverse the historic decision Congress made in 1946 to take the nuclear laboratories out of the military structrure so that they could be operated and controlled solely through civilian authority.

"When I took the job as energy secretary," Hodel said, "I expunged the word dismantlement from my vocabulary the day I walked in the door."

"Not because I think that the department ought to be kept," he said in an interview.

"It's because the proposal had aroused wide opposition in Congress and elsehere," he said.

"THE PRESIDENT has done an outstanding job of disposing of the regulatory functions of the department that were so objectionable," he went on.

"The remaining functions — research and development, the running of the national labs, the power marketing agencies, strategic petroleum and defense programs will all continue to be done by the federal government," he continued.

"But they don't have to be done in a separate Department of Energy," he added.

Hodel said all the other agency functions could have "fit quite nicely in some other department, so I substituted the word 'merger' — that would be our desire."

"But at the moment," he admitted, "we simply don't have a chance of getting a sufficient number of votes in Congress for any proposal that we are aware of. We keep thinking about it but we don't have an active proposal."

HODEL SAID that, "eventually, again I'm an optimist obviously, we will come up with and work with the Congress on a satisfactory proposal of some kind, and perhaps, combine the department with Commerce or some other department and reduce some of the administrative overhead that we now have."

The agency was created in 1977 as the 12th Cabinet-level department, combining several agencies to coordinate federal energy policy, including energy research, development, regulation, pricing, and conservation.

Although the government had been involved in various energy programs for decades, the numerous agencies responsible had little contact with each other. Prior to 1977, the government did not have a comprehensive energy policy. Rather, it pursued several energy policies, reflected in varying goals and priorities set over the years by presidents and Congresses.

The energy crisis of 1973 underscored the need to develop a comprehensive national energy policy as well as to focus the government's various energy programs. That year, six months before renewed conflict in the Middle East, President Nixon noted that the U.S., with six percent of the world's population, consumed one-third of the world's energy.

Nixon warned that in the immediate future the U.S. might face energy shortages and increased prices and cautioned that America's energy challenge could become an energy crisis if current trends continued unchecked.

NIXON'S PROPOSAL for a Department of Energy and Natural Resources stalled in Congress but after the Middle East conflict, when the nation faced energy shortages, Nixon created the Federal Energy Office in the White House.

Immediately after the establishment of the Federal Energy Office, the White House sponsored legislation to create the Federal Energy Administration as an independent agency. It was quickly approved by Congress.

The winter of 1976, however, turned bitterly cold. After the nation's electric utilities could not keep up with the demand, a newly-inauguarated President Carter named James R. Schlesinger as a new "energy czar."

Schlesigner assembled a team to hammer out the president's energy policy, which included a new Department of Energy, which had been promised by Carter during the campaign.

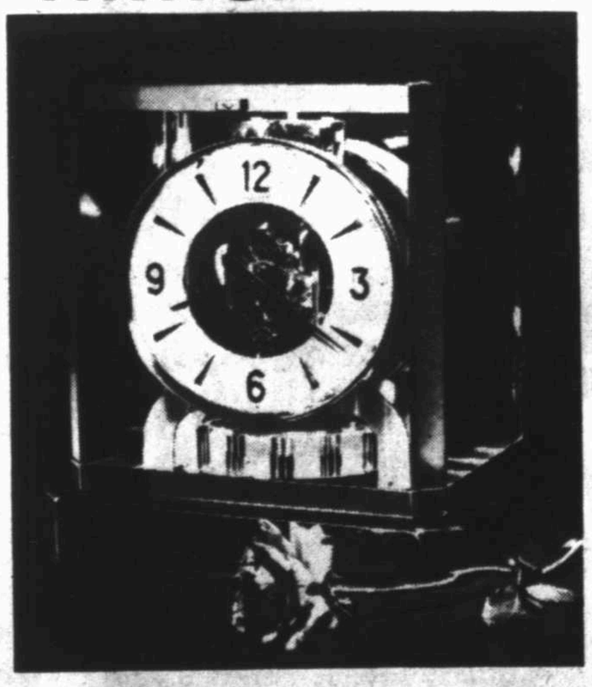

On February 2, 1977, Carter proclaimed a national energy emergency. In a televised "fireside chat" he stressed the need for national sacrifice, conservation and patience, and promised to present a comprehensive energy plan.

Carter described the energy crisis as the nation's greatest challenge and, borrowing from philospher William James, called the coming period of testing the "moral equivalent of war."

It was the beginning of a new era.

Oil embargo caused upheaval in U.S. auto industry

By WILLIAM K. RASHBAUM
Hearst Feature Service

The 1973 Arab oil embargo precipitated a revolution that altered the face of the automobile industry in the United States. It caused radical changes in the product, plants, the union movement, and management-union relations.

Over the past decade, the repercussions of the oil embargo have caused a tremendous upheaval in the U.S. economy — "the biggest revolution in any industry anywhere in the history of the world," according to Al Rothenberg of the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association.

"One out of every six private, non-agricultural jobs in this country is in the manufacture, distribution, maintainance and commercial use of cars and trucks," said Rothenberg, adding that 16.9 percent of the gross national product (GNP) is derived from highway, freight and passenger transportation.

More than 12.8 million people were employed in auto and parts manufacturing, auto sales and service, road construction and maintainence, truck driving and trucking-related jobs, petroleum refining and wholesaling, and passenger transportation. That work force accounts for 16.2 percent of total employment in the nation, according to the Bureau of the Census and the American Trucking Association.

Rising fuel prices and the recession which followed combined to make the downturn in the auto industry worse in this country than the overall affect worldwide, according to a spokesman for the United Auto Workers. European auto sales fell, but not as steeply as in the U.S., and Japanese auto sales went down even less.

ALTHOUGH THE INDUSTRY appears to be recovering in terms of profitability, the UAW spokesman said, with profits rising this year toward the 1978 level, employment is nowhere near where it was before the embargo. He pointed out that, while there were 730,000 hourly auto workers in 1972 and 760,000 in 1978, today there are only 510,000.

Union leadership, according to Arvid Jouppi, an independent auto analyst, has always tried to hold and improve the buying power of the worker. To a lesser degree, union leaders sough job protection — not a primary consideration in the past when jobs were plentiful and the threat of layoffs was insignificant.

In the past, costs resulting from contracts between union and management could always be passed along to the consumer. Now the unions are fighting to protect jobs from overseas competition. They are willing to make sacrifices, as in the case of union give-backs of some worker benefits and salary cuts at Chrysler, in order to keep jobs.

There are new attitudes towards management-union relations. Ties are closer and there is less of the adversarial, polarized squaring off than in the past.

But labor costs were only one of the industry's troubles. American-made autos were perceived as less efficient and shoddy compared to the imports. "The perception that the U.S. auto industry had serious quality problems stemmed from the fact that they tried to retool too fast," said Martin L. Anderson, executive director of the Future of the Automobile program at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

THE THIRD QUARTER of 1973, Anderson continued, just before the embargo, witnessed a buying and driving binge: large car sales peaked, as did the number of vehicle miles traveled per car. Then, with the embargo, people panicked. Gas supplies went down as prices went up; lines grew long at gas stations as tempers grew short. Buyers shunned the big cars and demanded small gas-savers.

Detroit shut down for the first time in the middle of a model year to retool for smaller cars but, by the time manufacturers were ready to make small cars consumers changed their minds again, thanks in part to the Energy Policy Act of 1975, designed to conserve energy usage. Schizophrenia began infecting the auto industry.

Because Congress had convinced the American consumer that the price of gas would remain low, there was a buying spree of big cars and vans from 1975 to 1978. Plans to produce small cars were scrapped.

Then the Iranian revolution and the overthrow of the pro-American shah brought on a second oil price shock in 1979 — just when American auto makers had committed themselves to filling the nation's showrooms with large, gas-guzzling cars.

The second shock didn't hit the Europeans and the Japanese as hard, Anderson said, because they were ready for it. They had responded to the 1973 embargo by raising gas taxes and making more fuel-efficient cars. They had even made their factories more fuel efficient. So, although they were hit economically, their auto industries were in a better position to weather the second storm.

"One significant aspect of the two energy crises," according to Marianne Keller, a director at Vilas-Fischer Associates, a New York investment advisory firm, "was that the Japanese industry made accelerated productivity gains during the '70s while the competitive ability of the American industry (vis-a-vis the imports) was reduced. It lacked small cars and the capacity to produce them."

SOME ANALYSTS believe that, as a result of the oil embargo, the American consumer has subsidized an inefficient domestic auto industry and supported Japanese auto makers by providing them with a willing market for their small, gas-sipping passenger cars. "Voluntary" Japanese import quotas, imposed as a result of political pressure exerted by the U.S., now somewhat cushion American auto makers against the Japanese imports.

The quotas have prevented the Japanese from selling greater quantities of lower-priced cars; to counter that, they raised their prices. The Japanese no longer have any incentive to sell cars as cheaply as they might in this country.

"The U.S. industry and Japanese auto industries have reached a point where they are working together rather than in competition with one another to the detriment of the U.S. consumer," Keller said.

"They (the Japanese) have had to implement a strategy of higher prices per unit," she said, and "have cultivated a new image of mid-size and high performance cars."

MIT's Anderson explained, "The Japanese auto industry basically breaks even in Japan, sells stripped vehicles to the third world and 40 to 50 percent of their production in North America. Each unit that they sell here brings twice the profit of what they sell at home."

Indeed, three years ago, in arguing against the quotas, the Japanese government predicted higher prices to consumers. "We have been very naive in this respect," Keller said.

"The American consumer cannot choose what he wants," she said. "A lot of people can't afford to buy (new) cars now. About 9 million cars have been sold this (model) year as opposed to some 10 million in 1976 after the recession."

"The quota system has been one of the factors in boosting prices," said Keller. "In my opinion, we have not prevented the Japanese from getting stronger."

KELLER RAISED a question which seems to be at the heart of the issues facing both the industry and the consumer: "Is it necessarily bad for this to happen — for the consumer to subsidize the industry — if it is important to the nation's economy?"

She points out, however, that other protected industries, such as steel, have not fared well.

The auto industry's economic position has appeared to be rapidly improving. However, there are doubts among some analysts as to how long-lasting these gains may be.

"The financial health that's being manifested right now is in some ways deceptive," said John Schnapp of Temple Barker & Sloane, a Boston management consultant firm. "It reflects to a great degree the very severe cost-cutting measures the industry instituted and the mild recovery of the market. But it still tends to mask the fact that it remains impossible for the American automaker to produce the vehicles of the character of the Japanese ones in this country at a profit.

"Consequently," he continued, "the share of the market that is occupied by the Japanese companies will remain. Given the severe shortage of those cars and the persistently strong demand for them, one would have to assume that if there were greater availability of Japanese vehicles their share of the market would improve at the expense of the domestic companies. A lot of the health manifested in the American companies is being manifested under somewhat artificial circumstances."

ANOTHER OIL SHOCK?

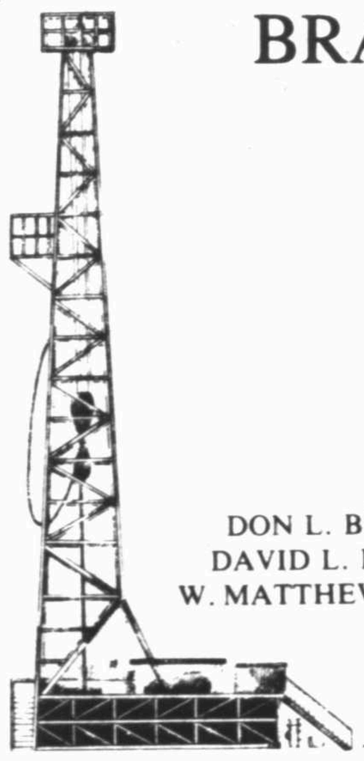

How would the major American auto companies fare if it all happened again, if there was another serious oil supply interruption?

Martin Anderson said that the lessons had been branded on the foreheads of the automakers: "No one wants to relive the past four years."

John Schnapp was less optimistic. "I think we'd see the same movie all over again. And I think that just as consumer behavior in the second oil shock was more severe than the first, my expectation would be that it would be more severe yet in the third.

"With all the same things happening again and with severe impact on the domestics," he continued, "I think the health and the existence of Chrysler would be placed in considerable question. Ford's ability to maintain a North American and a European business operation simultaneously would be at great risk. Only General Motors, because of its financial strength, would have the ability to assure itself of a future anything remotely like the past.

Oil embargo caused great change in U.S.

WILLIAM K. RASHBAUM
Hearst Feature Service

Misty dawns spent waiting on gasoline lines are a distant memory for most Americans. Indeed, today there is a growing feeling of complacency in the United States about oil and energy in general. But life in this country has changed dramatically over the last decade as a result of the 1973 Arab oil embargo.

There are vivid recollections: Fist-fights breaking out on gas lines; German auto workers sending care packages to their out-of-work American counterparts; the anger felt by many Americans toward the Arabs in 1973 and the particularly virulent reaction to the Iranian hostage crisis. Feelings of helplessness plagued many in this country.

Much changed over the course of the decade. The American dream machine — the private car — shrank. Homes got cooler in winter and warmer in summer. Farmers, struggling to harvest their crops, joined cooperatives to guarantee fuel for their machines and fertilizer for their fields.

The price increases in 1973 and 1979, the latter primarily a result of the Iranian revolution, had a violent effect on economies all over the world. By 1980, inflation in this country had more than doubled to 13.5 percent, climbing largely as a result of skyrocketing energy costs.

WE REMAIN VULNERABLE. Today, the United States imports about 32 percent of the oil it consumes and some 30 percent of that comes from the Middle East. Sam Schwartz, executive vice president of Conoco recently pointed out that "this is not an insignificant amount, considering that the 1973 oil shortage resulted from the loss of only six percent of the nation's oil supply, and the 1979 shortage from the loss of only three percent."

The good old days, when fuel was cheap, are over. "The new higher plateau of energy prices is not a temporary thing, it will remain," said Charles R. Hall, a former commissioner of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and vice president of Charles River Associates, a Boston management consultant firm. "We should pioneer and commercialize new technologies, not for large-scale production, but for their potential."

"There is some confusion stemming from the question: 'why does anyone want to pay $50 a barrel for oil?,' " he continued, refering to the development of more expensive alternative fuel sources such as shale oil. "It's like saying: 'Who needs a roof?' when the sun is shining. Sooner or later it's going to rain.

"There is more movement towards corporate and government strategies which might prepare for energy supply disruptions or price surges than there used to be," Hall continued. "However, it seems inherent in people not to plan for the worst.

"Energy policy is like the military," Hall said. "Our army is judged not by how well it uses its weapons, but ultimately by how little it has to use them. We spend money on defense in order not to use our weapons. It's insurance."

Today, the United States has basically two forms of energy insurance:

THE STRATEGIC petroleum reserves, which presently hold about 360 million barrels — roughly equivalent to 90 days worth of imports — and ideally will store one billion barrels of oil.

And the International Energy Agency Agreement, created by 21 nations in 1974. It states that, should another serious supply interruption occur, the member nations will share their energy supplies.

However, many analysts believe conservation has been the most important factor in reducing our reliance on imports and our vulnerability. Between 1973 and 1982 U.S. consumption went down by 734 million barrels a year: nearly 12 percent.

The excess production capacity of the world has increased five-fold since 1973 — from 3 million to 15 million barrels per day. This excess capacity was the primarily cause of the OPEC price drop in March which brought the cost of a barrel of oil down from $34 to $29. OPEC supplied 48 percent of the United State's oil imports in 1973. The amount has declined to 30 percent.

But turnarounds occur with remarkable swiftness. And, despite the discoveries of the past decade and a decline in the rates of oil consumption, the world consumes greater quantities of oil than it has been finding.

MANY PEOPLE TODAY discount the need for solutions to our energy problems. They find solace in the popular view that emerged with the excess production capacity worldwide: That OPEC has lost its power and there is nothing it can do to prevent a downward spiral of oil prices.

But prices appear to have stabilized. OPEC's difficulties developed during a deep and protracted recession which may have ended.

If the economic recovery continues, OPEC's prospects may also brighten. If the OPEC members do not increase production when demand increases, the market could tighten, squeezing prices to up.

Experience and Expertise in
- Snubbing
- Coiled Tubing
- Nitrogen
- Well Control

Snubbing has proven to be the only acceptable means of solving certain downhole problems involving pressure.

Drilling bridge plugs, circulating out sand or bauxite, and milling shale plugs, speeds completions and often avoids costly conventional workovers.

Pulling tubing under high pressure or snubbing under-balanced drill pipe, our customers know "live-well" experience really counts.

Cudd's unique combination of "live-well" services offers money-saving applications for drilling, workover, completion or production problems.

Permian Basin operators find the fastest way to bring in low-pressure, high-volume gas wells is through displacement with coiled tubing and nitrogen. They credit nitrogen jetting as the most economical and safest method, and clean-up is usually five times faster than conventional techniques.

And operators also credit Cudd with the service quality, modern equipment, and "live-well" experience to do the job right, reducing formation damage and enhancing production.

Postwar Europe's history ended day Arabs stopped oil

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst European Correspondent

PARIS — The history of postwar Europe came to an end on October 17, 1973 — the day the Arabs stopped the oil.

In 1973, West Germany, Europe's industrial mainspring but a country almost wholly lacking domestic oil supplies, spent $3.4 billion for imported crude. A year later, that sum had risen to $8.8 billion and that was only the beginning. The French, in similar straits, saw their oil bill jump from $3.5 billion in 1973 to $10.1 billion in the ensuing 12 months.

Those statistics tell the story of the single most traumatic event, except for the two world wars, in modern European history — the Arab oil embargo, decreed as "punishment" for the West's alleged support of Israel in the Yom Kippur war. It was followed by the decision of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) in January 1974 to quadruple crude oil prices.

Nothing, thereafter, was ever the same. Economically, the curtain rang down on Western Europe's postwar set of national "miracles," the unprecedented prosperity of the '50s and '60s which had been built on presumably limitless supplies of cheap oil. Even today's oil "glut" has not reversed the situation. Europe, where full employment was considered the natural order of things in pre-embargo days, has 10 percent unemployment now, a direct legacy of that "Black October" a decade ago.

The political and psychological effects were no less great. Western political unity, especially U.S.-European relations, received a blow from which it never fully recovered. The same can be said of European self-confidence.

THE OIL EMBARGO was total only against two countries, the U.S. and The Netherlands, which were judged by the Arabs to be unconditional supporters of Israel. Other European countries, like Germany and Italy, were subjected to progressive cuts in OPEC supplies of 5 percent a month. By contrast, supplies to Britain and France, considered pro-Arab, were not cut at all.

This formed a pattern that was to be little altered for the next five years or more. Initially, OPEC proved far more skillful at the tactic of divide-and-rule than the Europeans were at defending their common interests, interests which they also had in common with America. Robert J. Lieber, professor of government at Georgetown University, recently wrote: "Relatively minor reductions in oil supplies created the conditions for a wild competitive bidding scramble and enormous price increases ... even though a determined and unified European response could almost certainly have prevailed without additional deprivation of oil."

Attempts to forge a common Western or even European Community front foundered almost immediately. Several countries scampered off on every-man-for-himself expeditions, seeking preferential bilateral arrangements with the OPEC producers for oil in exchange for armaments, political concessions and "premium" prices.

The one positive international response to the sudden crisis was the creation of the International Energy Agency, largely at the instigation of then Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. Its purpose was to achieve through technical and industry channels what it had become clear was unattainable at a political level: a cooperative longterm program among the industrialized nations to (1) coordinate stockpiling programs in order to lessen OPEC's ability to exert blackmail; (2) encourage development of oil supplies from non-OPEC sources and (3) reduce their reliance on oil by developing alternative energy sources.

During its teething time, the IEA was beset by a host of difficulties, not the least being that France, freewheeling its way around the Middle East oil markets, refused to be a member although IEA headquarters was in Paris.. At first the organization seemed to many onlookers to be one more exercise in bureaucratic window dressing or worse. One reason was its controversial decision to adopt a policy of fostering "stable" (that is, high) crude prices in order to encourage both the drilling of new oil fields and the development of alternative forms of energy.

BUT 10 YEARS LATER the IEA's strategy essentially has been vindicated. Europe currently gets 22 million barrels per day of its oil from non-OPEC producers against only 17.5 million barrels from OPEC, a far cry from the pre-embargo era. Although lagging behind the U.S., the Europeans have nonetheless steadily trimmed their dependence on outside oil supplies by increased use of coal, hydroelectricity, nuclear energy and, to some extent, solar power and bio-fuels.

What remains unanswered is whether Europe's present seeming ability to overcome the kind of threat posed a decade ago is real. Have the Europeans genuinely surmounted the problem or have they done so only by sacrificing their future economic expansion? Would they be able to overcome a new cut in oil supplies as now threatens in the Persian Gulf? Nobody knows.

MARKET GAINS FLEXIBILITY

However, a result of the 1973 crisis was to furnish the international oil market with a new flexibility, another way to face up to the OPEC cartel. This was most dramatically illustrated by the rise of the so-called "spot" markets in oil, especially from the late 70s onward.

In the past four years, spot market dealings have sextupled in value. They now comprise fully 30 percent of worldwide oil trade. Even school children nowadays have heard of the fabled Rotterdam market, the hectic center of trading in huge shipments of crude oil and oil products, where enormous deals hinge on a handshake or, more often, terse telex messages from the far corners of the globe. In reality, the Rotterdam spot market is mostly myth.

Far more trading in oil is done in such places as London, Paris and Geneva. Hundreds of tanker cargoes are traded through specialists in these cities and a single one can be worth upward of $50 million.

But Rotterdam retains the force of myth, possibly because there is actually something vitally important to the oil distribution system to be seen in its vast port: sprawling storage tank farms and the giant tankers that regularly go there to off-load, either for storage or shipment by barge up the Rhine to Germany.

Increasingly, the independent spot market dealers face formidable competition from major oil companies like Shell, Gulf and British Petroleum. The latters' marketing tactics have altered drastically in the past few years. Where previously the majors mainly bought and sold crude among themselves to balance their intalsuppl ttoh pnkt,hoping for profitable side deals

Like the growth of the spot market system itself, this is yet another consequence of the earth-shaking changes ushered in by the 1973 embargo. By imposing it, the Arab producers tried to demonstrate their unique power over both the supply and distribution of oil. What they appear actually to have done is to touch off a long train of events proving precisely the opposite.

IPAA to hear economist

WASHINGTON — Nationally known economist Paul London will address the Natural Gas Committee of the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA) when the national trade association meets in New Orleans November 2-4, 1983.

London will talk about the economic benefits of natural gas decontrol from the consumer's perspective. He is one of several speakers to address the associaton during its annual meeting at the New Orleans Hyatt Regency Hotel.

The Natural Gas Committee meets at 10:30 on Wednesday morning, November 2.

Pollster George Gallup will address the entire association at 9:30 Friday morning November 4 with his predictions for the 1984 elections. Also speaking that morning will be Burton Pines, vice president of research for the Heritage Foundation based in Washington, D.C. Pines, a former editor at Time Magazine, will discuss the role of the media in reporting current affairs. A number of other speakers have been invited to discuss other topics of concern to the domestic petroleum industry. A complete rundown of speakers follows:

Wednesday, November 2, 1983.

9:00 a.m. Environment & Safety Committee. Scheduled speaker is Tom Belk, Director of Environmental Protection Agency's Office of Drinking Water. Belk will speak about new underground injection control regulations governing secondary and tertiary oil recovery.

10:30 a.m. Natural Gas Committee. Economist Paul London will speak on consumer benefits from natural gas decontrol.

1:30 p.m. Tax Committee. Scheduled speaker is Fred Z. Mills, president, Petroleum Data Perspectives, Inc. on the current economic health of the industry and the outlook for the future.

3:30 p.m. Oil Recovery Committee. George Stosur, director of the Department of Energy's Office of Oil will speak on current developments in the area of enhanced oil recovery.

3:30 p.m. Public Lands Committee. Principal speaker is Steven Griles, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Land and Water of the U.S. Interior Department. Will discuss current Interior policies impacting on independent producers.

Thursday, November 3, 1983

8:30 a.m. National Stripper Well association. Sen. David Boren (D-OK) is featured speaker following the association's business meeting.

10:00 a.m. Economic Policy & Crude Oil Committees. Eric Zausner, Managing Partner of Booz-Allen & Hsamilton will give a presentation on sustaining a competitive position in the petroleum industry.

12:00 noon Membership Luncheon. Principal speaker is Kye Trout, Jr., Chairman and President of the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

Friday, November 4, 1983.

9:30 a.m. General Session. Speakers in order of appearance: Jon Rex Jones, incoming President of the Independent Petroleum Association of America; Burton Pines, vice president, research at the Heritage Foundation; Pollster Gesorge Gallup, Jr. with an outlook on the '84 elections.

Enstar earnings lower

HOUSTON (SWN) — Enstar Indonesia Inc. reently reported revenues of $28.3 million and net earnings of $6.5 million for the third quarter of 1983, compared with revenues of $38.6 million and net earnings of $12.8 million for the same period in 1982.

For the first nine months of 1983, revenues totaled $87 million and net earnings were $22.1 million, compared with revenues of $118 million and net earnings of $37.6 million for the 1982 period.

The decline in 1983 results is due principally to a lower average price of liquefied natural gas (LNG) in Indonesia, plus curtailed LNG production in the second quarter, noted Chairman Arch A. Sproul.

Through its Virginia International Company subsidiary, Enstar Indonesia had a 15.625 percent interest during the quarter (increased effective September 30, 1983 to 23.125 percent) in a joint venture which explores for and develops oil and natural gas in Indonesia.

U.S. oil company profits up 17 percent

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

Led by Mobil Corp. and Gulf Oil Corp., profits of the 10 largest U.S.-based oil companies rose 17 percent in the summer quarter, to a combined $4.51 billion.

Among the top 10, only Atlantic Richfield Co. posted lower earnings, while the others benefitted from higher profits on refining and marketing operations, stronger chemical manufacturing profits and savings from broad cost-cutting programs.

Mobil, the nation's second-largest oil concern, said Wednesday its earnings climbed 42 percent to $404 million, or 99 cents a share, in the quarter ended Sept. 30 from $284 million, or 68 cents a share, a year earlier. Revenues fell to $14.2 billion from $15.4 billion.

For the first nine months of the year, Mobil earned $1.06 billion, or $2.60 a share, a 30 percent increase from $815 million, or $1.94 a share, in the corresponding period last year. Revenue dropped to $42.9 billion from $47.6 billion.

Gulf, the fifth-largest oil company, cited the benefits of a cost-cutting program in reporting that profit climbed 74 percent to $276 million in the quarter ended Sept. 30 from $159 million in the year-earlier period. Per-share earnings rose to $1.66 from 89 cents, while revenue was unchanged at $7.5 billion.

For the first nine months of the year, Gulf earned $681 million, or $4.04 a share, compared with $674 million, or $3.69 a share, in the year-earlier period. Revenue slipped to $21.4 billion from $22.5 billion.

Texaco Inc., the third-largest U.S. oil company, said its earnings rose 9 percent in the third quarter, to $331 million, or $1.28 a share, from $303 million, or $1.16 a share, a year earlier. Revenue fell to $10.6 billion from $11.8 billion.

For the first nine months of the year, Texaco earned $977 million, or $3.80 a share, a 2 percent increase from $975 million, or $3.74 a share, in the same period last year. Its nine-months revenue fell to $30.6 billion from $36.3 billion.

Earlier this week, Exxon, the nation's largest oil company, reported a 20.5 percent profit gain, to $1.23 billion, and Standard of California, the fourth largest oil concern, posted an 11 percent increase, to $509 million. Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) said its profit rose 5 percent to $584 million, while Atlantic Richfield reported a 9 percent decline, to $405 million.

Here are third-quarter results for the other top 10 oil companies as reported Wednesday:

—Shell Oil Co., the nation's eighth-largest oil concern, said its profit rose 2 percent to $449 million, or $1.45 a share, from $442 million, or $1.43 a share, a year ago. Revenue rose to $5.12 billion from $5.09 billion. Shell's earnings for the first nine months of the year were down 8 percent from last year.

—Occidental Petroleum said its earnings rose six-fold to $151.8 million, or 63 cents a share, from $25.1 million, or 3 cents a share. A key reason was its acquisition last winter of Cities Service Co., a Tulsa, Okla.-based oil company. Occidental, now the ninth-largest oil company, said its revenues advanced to $4.9 billion from $4.4 billion. Its nine-month net income more than doubled.

—Phillips Petroleum, the 10th-largest oil company, reported a 15 percent increase to $176 million, or $1.15 a share, from $153 million, or $1 a share, in last year's third quarter. Revenue slid to $3.89 billion from $4 billion. Profits for the first nine months of the year were down 3 percent.

Oil, gas week declared

SANTA FE — Governor Toney Anaya has declared the week of October 30 through November 5 Oil and Gas Week.

According to the executive proclamation which was signed earlier this month, Anaya's action was prompted by the New Mexico Oil and Gas Expo '83 to be held in Roswell November 3, 4 and 5 at the Eastern New Mexico Fairgrounds.

Over 200 exhibitors and 25,000 people are expected to attend.

The Expo is a cooperative venture between the Roswell Chamber of Commerce, the oil and gas industry, and Eastern New Mexico University's Oilfield Training Center.

This is the second annual exposition. Like last year's, the first two days are open only to members of the oil and gas industry. However, Saturday November 5 is the public's day to view and Expo. In addition, everyone is invited to tour ENMU-Roswell's OTC. Transportation to and from the school from the fairgrounds will be provided. According to program chairman Vince Murphy, these tours will give area residents a first-hand chance to see industry and education working hand in hand.
