Window washing involves skills, hazards

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Richard Dahl was an agitated man Monday, and it showed.

Dahl, vice president of Jobs Building Services Inc., a Dallas-based firm which handles what he estimates is 92 percent of the industrial, high-rise window- washing in the West Texas area, was in town on unpleasant business.

He was tired, disturbed with people whose curiousity seems piqued by tragedy, and upset that his friend, employee and colleague, Douglas Keith "Doug" Edmunds, lay in critical condition in Odessa's Medical Center Hospital after falling from the north face of Midland's First National Bank building Saturday.

Edmunds, 42, fell while working from a "sky genie," a one-seat descent apparatus suspended by rope from the building's roof. While the exact circumstances of the accident are unclear, a support rope apparently snapped and Edmunds plunged, depending upon whom you talk to, either 15 or 4 stories before a safety line — or perhaps a tangle of lines — broke the fall and swung him against a concrete planter at the building's base.

Eyewitnesses said that Edmunds fell from the 15th floor, but Dahl contends that Edmunds fell only four stories since the last window that Edmunds had cleaned was on the fourth floor.

Dahl said Edmunds may be able to provide more details when he recovers sufficiently to describe the accident.

According to Edmund's wife, Leona, her husband of 22 years is a veteran window washer who long ago learned to master his trade and control the fear that can be as much a part of his work as sunshine and a "squeegee."

"He's an old pro at it," Mrs. Edmunds said. "That's all he's ever done. His dad broke him in window cleaning when he was in his teens.

"My husband was known throughout Detroit and Houston as the best window cleaner. In other words, I'm trying to say he had all the knowledge, all the know-how."

Knowlege and know-how are essential tools of the trade, Dahl said, enabling window washers to overcome obstructive onlookers, the elements and fear.

Dahl, a window washer for 10 years who still takes an occasional turn "if I want to relax," said that curious people milling around window-washing worksites are his greatest concern. He warned that a tool tumbling from a suspended scaffold can wreak havoc below.

"There are just a lot of good things about being a window cleaner," Dahl said, but people who come too near designated worksites are not on the list.

"Stay away from it. At least take heed to what the warning says: 'Men working overhead,'" Dahl said.

Weather, while an occupational hazard, is a manageable concern for an experienced cleaner, Dahl said. Rain, lightning and winds over 15 mph mean a day off to a wisened window washer, he said.

The "sky genie" chair is especially important in areas where wind gusts occur suddenly, Dahl said. Within 20 minutes of an unexpected wind, a cleaner can lower himself to safety. By contrast, a cleaner working on a scaffold might need 45 minutes to reach ground.

Despite the apparent hazards, an experienced cleaner with properly

Permanent peace sought

By The Associated Press

Britain today put new pressure on Argentina to declare a permanent peace in the South Atlantic, saying hundreds of captured Argentine troops on the Falkland Islands could die of exposure and illness if there is more delay.

The warning came from the commander of the British task force after Argentine President Gen. Leopoldo F. Galtieri and his two junta partners were the targets of violent demonstrations Tuesday night by thousands of Argentines angered at the defeat in the Falklands.

The junta has said that if Britain reinstates British rule over the islands there will not be peace in the South Atlantic.

In a press statement released by the British government in London, Rear Adm. John Woodward said the care of 15,000 Argentine POWS on the Falklands posed "a major disaster relief problem."

"The Argentines must appreciate that I cannot keep their troops dry and warm and fed while we are still subject to attack. They must face the facts and call a halt to all, repeat all, hostilities," Woodward said.

He said the prisoners, some of whom have been on the Falklands in wintry conditions since the Argentine invasion April 2, were "already suffering from malnutrition, exposure — in some cases hypothermia (subnormal body temperature) — trench foot, scabies and diarrhea."

Galtieri, forced to cancel a public appearance because of the demonstrations, went on national television to vow Argentina will never accept London's plans to reinstate British rule in the Falklands.

He said Britain must not "proceed to establish a colonial regime, with which there will be neither definitive peace nor security. It will be Great Britain's responsibility for deepening the conflict."

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher ruled out any future Argentine say in the running of the islands, rejected a call from the Labor opposition for a United Nations trusteeship and vowed she would "not negotiate on the sovereignty of the islands in any way except with the people who live there."

"I hope we have restored once again the dominance of Britain and let every nation know that where there is British sovereign territory it will be well and truly defended," she told the House of Commons Tuesday..

British Defense Secretary John Nott said Tuesday night he believed the fighting was over but raised the possibility Argentina could continue to strike at British forces from its bases on the mainland.

Israeli commandos advance on guerrilla positions

By The Associated Press

Israeli commandos, advancing under covering shellfire from their Lebanese Christian allies, stormed and captured a Palestinian guerrilla stronghold near the paralyzed Beirut airport today, the state-run Lebanese radio reported.

The report said the Israelis took the science faculty campus of the Lebanese University, along the main runway of Beirut International Airport.

According to the reports, the action was aimed at eliminating a major Palestinian stronghold controlling access to the airport and some of the Palestine Liberation Organization's enclaves in Moslem west Beirut.

There were conflicting reports on which forces were involved in the new outbreak of shelling and fighting today, which shattered a few hours of relative calm in war-devastated Beirut.

On Tuesday, Israeli and Syrian tanks battled near the airport for four hours, breaking a four-day-old cease-fire between Israeli forces and their Syrian foes.

The Syrian regular army, which has 1,000 men stationed in the Beirut area, was not observed intervening in the battle for the science faculty.

Private Lebanese radio stations reported that Israeli and Syrian forces were involved in artillery battles elsewhere in Beirut's mountainous outskirts. But those reports were not verified.

Israeli commanders said their gunners did not take part in the two hours of heavy shelling that preceded the reported assault on the PLO camp on the science campus. Associated Press correspondents said most of the fire seemed to come from Christian artillery entrenched in the hills above the airport.

Members of the Christian Phalangist militia Kataeb were fighting openly with the Israelis against their common Palestinian enemies for the first time since Israel's army reached the Beirut area in a 11-day thrust northward to wipe out Palestinian guerrillas in Lebanon.

Correspondents reported seeing Phalangist liaison officers in olive-drab uniforms with Israeli units positioned all over Beirut's mountainous hinterland.

An Israeli commander, who identified himself only as Col. Arnon, watched the shelling of the airport from Baabda near the palace of Lebanese President Elias Sarkis and told AP correspondent Alex Efty:

"The Christians are doing the fighting, trying to take the university back from the terrorists. The Christians are fighting by themselves, we are not becoming involved, we are just looking."

But the Lebanese state radio report said it was Israeli commandos that captured the modern, six-story buildings. The fall of the campus "raised fears that the Israeli forces would advance westward to take over the airport and storm into the refugee camps of Bourj el Barajneh," the radio said.

Israeli commanders have said they would not invade Beirut because they did not want to get involved in bloody house-to-house fighting.

A PLO communique said: "Our forces are locked in fierce combat with all weapons against the Israeli enemy, who is trying to capture the science faculty of the Lebanese University."

U.S. working to form strong central government in Lebanon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, seeking to take advantage of the situation created by Israel's invasion of Lebanon, is working to establish a strong central government in the war-torn nation to assume control after the withdrawal of foreign troops.

Philip C. Habib, President Reagan's special Mideast envoy, is engaging in dicussions to that end in Israel, Lebanon and Syria, and the administration has appealed to all interested parties to support his mission.

Left open so far is the question of whether U.S. troops might participate in an international peacekeeping force in southern Lebanon. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has indicated that U.S. participation is a possibility.

But Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker said Tuesday he would oppose sending U.S. troops in Lebanon on any basis. And Israel's U.S. Ambassador, Moshe Arens, has been saying in recent days he doesn't think it would be necessary.

But the Israeli government does look to the United States to play a leadership role in determining the future course of events in Lebanon, and Washington appears ready to play such a role.

The administration's emerging post-invasion strategy is evident from public and private statements by administration officials, including Haig.

The goals of Israel and Washington in Lebanon coincide in most important respects. Where there have been differences, Washington has been moving steadily toward the Israeli view.

After first voting approval of a U.N. Security Council resolution calling for an immediate and unilateral withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon, Washington is now linking an Israeli withdrawal to a withdrawal of Syrian forces as well.

Syria has had 30,000 troops in Lebanon since 1976 as part of an Arab peacekeeping force. Haig said Sunday the Syrians have been there "too long." At the same time, the administration is no longer pressing Israel for an immediate withdrawal and seems reconciled to an Israeli presence for some time.

The call for Syria to withdraw its troops is one example of how the administration is looking beyond the question of whether Israel was justified or not in invading Lebanon t Reagan administration also has wanted the Soviet-backed Syrians to get out.

Fund-raisers differ greatly

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Republicans ate steak with President Reagan and paid $1,000 for the privilege, while Democrats helped their gubernatorial candidate by coughing up $5 for a weiner roast and a bottle of beer.

A who's who of GOP leaders, including former President Gerald Ford and White House Chief of Staff James Baker, joined 3,500 others at Tuesday night's black-tie dinner that raised more than $3.5 million for the re-election campaign of Texas Gov. Bill Clements.

A few blocks away at a downtown hotel, about 2,000 enthusiastic Harris County Democrats raised money for their candidate, Texas Attorney General Mark White, by auctioning off party mementoes and handing out videotapes of "Bedtime for Bonzo," a movie starring the president.

Walter Mischer, a Houston businessman and chairman of the GOP dinner, said contributions totaled $3,551,000. Clements' aide Mary Jane Maddox said the amount topped the previous record for a fund-raising event for a single candidate, which she said was $2.9 million at a previous dinner for Clements.

Reagan praised Clements as a "great governor" and told the audience, "The best future governor of Texas is the present goverenor of Texas."

"He has reduced the number of state employees and cut taxes at the same time. He has brought in corporate executives to lend their expertise to make state government more efficient. He launched an effort to control waste and fraud," Reagan said.

Among the speakers at the Democrats fund-raiser was humorist John Henry Faulk, who said he was offended by the GOP affair.

"I am fascinated by the crassness of having a $1,000-a-plate dinner when within five miles of where they are holding it, there are families that a $1,000 represents an entire year's food budget," Faulk said.

White was in Wyoming on a legal matter and could not attend, but telephoned and said, "I understand the Republicans are going to raise $3 million. Tell them they'll need a lot more than that to beat Mark White."

A few hours before the dinner, Clements appeared at a news conference flanked by former Democratic governors John Connally and Preston Smith, who gave him their endorsements.

Great Britain's Falklands armada smaller than Irish forces

LONDON (AP) — Britain sent its most powerful naval armada assembled since World War II to recapture the Falkland Islands, but the 9,000-member force that brought a much larger Argentine garrison to surrender was 1,000 fewer than the number of troops permanently stationed in Northern Ireland.

By any reckoning, Britain and Argentina took significant human and material losses in their 10-week-old undeclared war. But placed in the context of other wars fought this century, the battle for the Falklands was on a very limited scale.

Britain had 25,000 men and women serving with its task force in the South Atlantic, including 9,000 ground forces, and the Falklands conflict was Britain's biggest military operation since the Suez crisis of 1956.

The British-French fleet assembled then was larger, but without today's missile systems was less powerful. The fleet, and paratroops dropped on the Suez Canal in Egypt, never achieved their object of overthrowing Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser, who had nationalized the British and French-owned waterway.

The United States, under President Dwight D. Eisenhower, opposed the action and Britain and France called it off.

Only 7.3 percent of Britain's total armed forces of 343,650 men and women were detached to the Falklands fight, compared with the 4.67 million under arms in World War II.

Argentina was engaged in its first major conflict since the 1865-70 Paraguayan War and reportedly had about 15,000 men on the Falklands when they surrendered Monday night. That represented only 3.8 percent of its total armed forces of 185,500.

By major war standards, casualties were light.

After the surrender, Britain estimated the number of Argentine dead at 700, and possibly as many as 1,000, and acknowledged about 250 of its own personnel dead or missing. These figures could change as both sides sort out their losses.

Britain lost 765,399 men in World War I and 265,000 in World War II. The United States lost 47,752 men in Indochina, including 14,589 in 1968, the year of the Tet offensive in Vietnam.

Both Argentina and Britain have suffered heavy losses of ships and planes in the Falklands conflict.

The British Defense Ministry has acknowledged the loss of 19 aircraft, including eight Sea Harrier fighters, while claiming to have destroyed 79 Argentine combat aircraft and helicopters since May 1.

During the Battle of Britain in World War II, Royal Air Force planes shot down 75 German aircraft in a day — Aug. 15, 1940 — losing 34 fighters themselves. All told, the battle over southern England resulted in the destruction of 1,733 German and 915 British aircraft.

Britain's worst losses in the Falklands fighting were in Argentine attacks on the Royal Navy task force. The Defense Ministry says at least five ships — two destroyers, two frigates and a merchant vessel — were sunk. Four other ships were damaged in attacks June 8.

Argentina sustained heavy loss of life with the May 2 sinking of the cruiser General Belgrano, with 342 men missing and presumed dead by Argentine count.

During World War I, again on a single day — May 31, 1916 — 14 Royal Navy ships and 11 German ships were sunk in the Battle of Jutland, killing 6,097 Britons and 2,545 Germans.

Argentine police fire tear gas into a crowd of about 5,000 anti-government demonstrators outside Casa Rosada, Government House, in Buenos Aires Tuesday night. The crowd protested the cease-fire declared on the Falkland Islands.

Riot police corral 5,000 Argentines

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — President Gen. Leopoldo F. Galtieri, like a singer who peeks through the curtain and sees a hostile audience, canceled his live performance and left 5,000 cursing Argentines at the mercy of riot police swinging clubs and firing tear gas.

Galtieri was scheduled to address Argentines gathered in the historic Plaza de Mayo on Tuesday evening, but at the appointed hour found the crowd in an anti-government fervor over Argentina's defeat by Britain in the Falkland Islands.

The president did not appear. Later he taped a 10-minute speech saying Argentina still wants sovereignty over the islands. The speech did not explain why Argentina surrendered.

The demonstrators had been waiting for hours, cursing Galtieri and the military establishment in obscene chants, calling for the death of "Yanquis" and predicting the downfall of the junta Galtieri heads.

They accused military leaders of treason and selling out the young men who died fighting the British. They hurled coins and stones on the police guarding the pink presidential palace overlooking the plaza.

The rioters also cursed Argentina's defeated military commander on the Falklands Gen. Mario Benjamin Menendez, who had vowed to fight to the death.

"Menendez, coward!" the Argentines screamed. "You said you'd only come back in a coffin!"

The anti-government demonstration, comprised mostly of young people, was small compared with patriotic rallies in the plaza in the weeks following the April 2 invasion and occupation of the islands Argentina calls the Malvinas.

Authorities allowed the crowd to express itself for a few hours, then called in riot police.

Helmeted, flak-jacketed forces arrived in assault cars and within 15 minutes the plaza was virtually deserted under a dissipating cloud of tear gas. Remnants of small fires set by the demonstrators flickered out.

The police charged into isolated and retreating pockets of demonstrators, clubbing them. The officers also charged a group of about 50 journalists, beating some and trampling others.

Retreating demonstrators set fire to two buses near the far end of the plaza and broke shop windows on side streets. Two news photographers were reported injured by rubber bullets fired by police.

Galtieri defiant despite defeat

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — President Gen. Leopoldo F. Galtieri, defiant despite Argentina's defeat on the Falkland Islands, says there will be no lasting peace there if Britain reimposes "a colonial regime."

The president's tough talk came Tuesday night as police fired tear-gas and rubber bullets at about 5,000 anti-government rioters in downtown Buenos Aires. The riot forced Galtieri to cancel an appearance outside and tape his speech instead.

The protesters were furious at the ruling junta for losing the Falklands on Monday, ending the 74-day undeclared war for sovereignty over the South Atlantic islands Argentina calls the Malvinas.

Speaking on nationwide television and radio, Galtieri said Britain's triumphant recapture of the Falklands capital of Stanley "will not be the last act in a national undertaking" and that Argentines would eventually fulfill "our aspirations over the Malvinas."

He said Britain must "accept that the islands will never be what they were before April 2, in which case we maintain our willingness to negotiate toward the recuperation of our sovereignty. Or, proceed to establish a colonial regime, with which there will be neither definitive peace nor security. It will be Great Britain's responsibility for deepening the conflict."

Britain has said it intends to restore the Falklands' colonial administration because that's what the islanders want.

Galtieri also blamed the United States for the British victory over the Argentine troops, who strongly outnumbered Britain's 9,000-man force. Britain says it took 15,000 Argentines prisoner.

"They fought with more courage than weapons against the overwhelming superiority of a major power backed by the military technology of the United States of America," Galtieri said.

U.S. support for Britain, he said, "unexpectedly became the end of Argentina and its people."

Galtieri's speech left much unsaid. Argentines officially have been informed only that a cease-fire was in effect, and the president offered no explanation of what specifically happened to end the conflict.

He did not use the word surrender and the only reference to the situation in the islands came in the first sentence of his speech:

"The combat in Puerto Argentino (Stanley) has ended. Our soldiers fought with a supreme effort for the dignity of the nation."

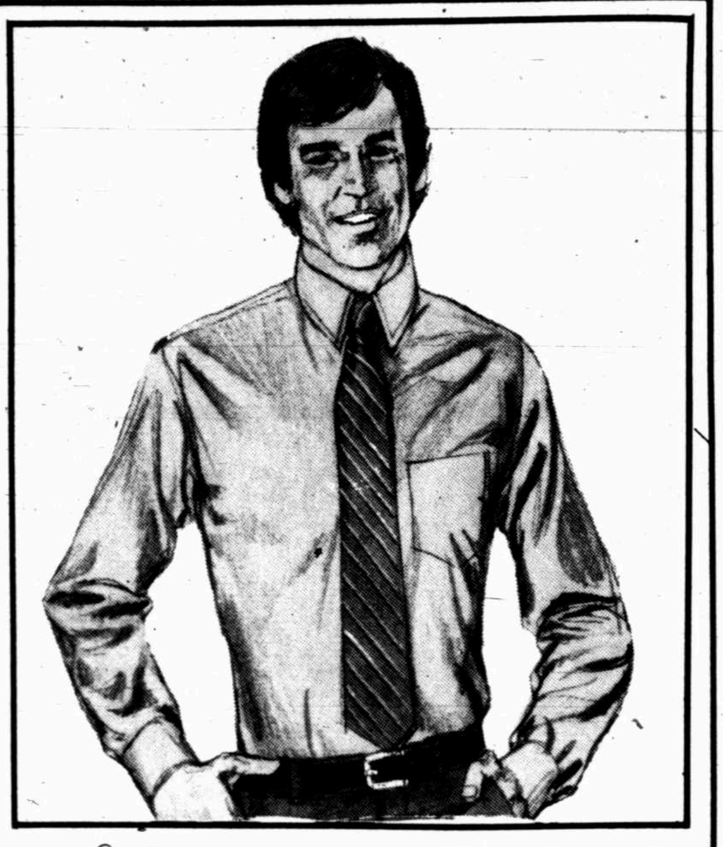

Galtieri told fellow Argentines the conflict had given them new heros, "men of flesh and bone of the present who will be honored by us and generations to come."

U.S. hopes Great Britain, Argentina will negotiate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Now that the fighting in the South Atlantic is over, U.S. officials hope Britain will negotiate a settlement with Argentina because they say the alternative will be continued Latin American hostility toward the United States.

American sensitivity to its relations with Latin America was reflected in low-key official statements Tuesday, which pointedly refrained from celebrating Britain's victory in the Falkland Islands despite U.S. backing for the British cause.

President Reagan welcomed the end to the fighting but his statement made no reference to the surrender of Argentine forces.

Soviet Union takes hard line efforts to reduce weapons

By BARRY SCHWEID

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Soviet Union is taking a hard — and even sarcastic — line toward the United States as the two countries approach negotiations on a new treaty to reduce strategic nuclear weapons.

While President Reagan has soft-pedaled the "adversary relationship," Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko used the U.N. special session on disarmament as a platform for attacking U.S. weapons policies.

Accusing the Reagan administration of trickery and "concoctions of all sorts," Gromyko said Tuesday a "military frenzy" and "a spirit of militarism" were driving the United States to seek supremacy over the Soviet Union.

Gromyko

The aim, Gromyko said, is "to keep it scared, as simp apparently could not resist baiting the United States and its allies a bit.

Brezhnev questioned whether North Atlantic Treaty Organization doctrine was based on the "dangerous premise" of possibly using nuclear weapons first.

Reagan, who addresses the session on Thursday, has played down differences with Moscow since he outlined his treaty proposal in a Mother's Day speech last month.

"Basically, the primary problem today," he said May 24, "is reducing the store of nuclear arms that threaten the peace of mind, certainly, of all the people of the world, and do pose a threat to all of us physically."

Reagan may strike a tough stance in his U.N. speech. But, so far, his recent statements sharply contrast Gromyko's — and the president's own scathing attack on the Soviets in his first presidential news conference January 1981.

In classically Cold War rhetoric, Reagan then said the Soviets "reserve unto themselves the right to commit any crime, to lie, to cheat."

Gromyko is customarily hard on the United States in his U.N. speeches. This time, he peppered his 80-minute address with accusations of barbarism, deceit and "notorious sins."

Beneath it all was the Soviet contention that there is a rough equivalence in weapons now between East and West.

The Reagan administration takes the approach that the Soviets gained significant advantages in land-based intercontinental ballistic missiles while the United States eased development of nuclear weapons in the 1970s.

U.S. defense spending is being boosted even while the United States is pursuing arms control agreements with the Soviet Union. At Geneva, meanwhile, the administration says it will give top priority to reducing that Soviet edge in heavy ICBMs.

Calling this approach trickery, Gromyko accused the administration of glossing over the U.S. edge in long-range cruise missiles, strategic bombers and ballistic missiles on submarines.

This, Gromyko said, is "being deliberately muddled" and hushed up.

Israeli soldier questions Lebanese war

By TOM BALDWIN

BAABDA, Lebanon (AP) — "We have to talk to the Palestinians," said a tired Israeli soldier. "You can't stop them just by killing them."

The soldier would not give his full name. He identified himself only as "Simon," a gardener from a kibbutz farm in northern Galilee. He sat on the terrace of a flower-ringed villa drinking beer while his Lebanese host, a Christian named Tino Jose Chidiac, was on the street outside welcoming passing Israeli patrols as liberators routing Palestinian guerrillas and Syrian troops.

"I have seen lots of blood," Simon told a reporter. "I have seen too many houses that have been crushed and citizens with no homes. And all the time I was thinking it could happen to us."

Simon, a veteran of the 1973 Middle East war, had been fighting in Lebanon for the past 10 days as his unit moved up the Lebanese coastal road through Tyre, 12 miles north of the Israeli border, chasing Palestinian guerrillas to this hillside suburb near the presidential palace on the fringes of Beirut.

"There is no solution in war and fighting," said Simon. "I can assure you I am not the only Israeli who says this."

Then, digging in his fatigue pockets, Simon produced a letter from his eight-year-old son Navon he received Tuesday morning. It contained a picture drawn in crayon of a half-track, a tank and a cannon firing a shell and a scribbled tangle of orange that the father said must be a target in flames.

"I have never shown my son how to draw such things," he said. "I have taught him not to hate Arabs, although I have not taught him not to hate terrorists."

Simon continued reading from his son's letter as he sipped his beer and looked down on Palestinian refugee camps and guerrilla-held positions near the Beirut airport.

"Dear Daddy," the soldier read. "I want everything to be easy for you in the army. And please come home soon. No one will keep you in the army. Do a good job and please come home."

Pointing to his Lebanese host, Simon asked, "Why do I have to come and visit this kind man in a uniform and on a half-track (armored car)? I want to visit his home as neighbors and he can visit with me and my family.

"If there is no military way to find a solution, let's find another way," said Simon, who was part of the "Peace for Galilee" operation Israel launched June 6 to drive Palestinian guerrillas beyond artillery range of northern Israel. "I want them (the Palestinians) to stop fighting."

American sticks it out near Beirut

DOHA, Israeli-held Lebanon (AP) — Bill Chatham was indulging his favorite hobby — reading the dictionary — when Israeli tanks rumbled up the hill and carried the war to his front yard.

What he did was what any survivor of the Bataan death march in World War II and 18 rigorous years abroad as a petroleum engineer might have done.

"We stayed, naturally. We aren't cowards," he said.

Chatham, a 72-year-old native of Woodbury, N.J., and his Lebanese-born wife Charlotte, live in a ranch-style home in this suburb in hills above Beirut.

From their house, the Beirut airport was visible Tuesday through shimmering haze, less than two miles away. The airport marks Israel's northernmost advance on the Lebanese capital in the Jewish state's invasion launched June 6 to wipe out Palestinian guerrillas.

It was about 10:30 Saturday morning, Chatham recalled in an interview, that the war came to the neighborhood which he described as "always quiet, like a church."

"They came all of a sudden," he said. "We could hear the shooting and the others (Palestinians) were in the bushes down the hill."

He said the battle, which lasted into Saturday night and included Israeli air strikes, was "just a lot of noise."

When it was over, the Israelis were in command of the area.

Two windows in the house shattered from concussion blasts, an Israeli tank crushed Mrs. Chatham's trellis over the front walk and bashed a fender of her car.

She had gone shopping in Beirut that day and came home in the the midst of fighting. "People were putting out fires," she said.

Some neighbors fled Doha, but most stayed, Chatham said. Streets were littered with spent bullet cartridges. Down the hill, the ground was scorched black from the heat of artillery blasts. Israeli armored vehicles were parked 100 yards away, their crews basking in the sun.

Pope makes references to Poland

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Troubled Poland was seldom far from the thoughts of Pope John Paul II as he hurried through a day-long visit to this tranquil city.

The pope — whose next trip is likely to be to Poland in August — referred subtly but often Tuesday to events in his native, martial law-administered country, where an open challenge to Communist rule was crushed last December in a sweeping military crackdown.

John Paul returned to the Vatican Tuesday night.

The pope invoked the word "solidarity" 47 times — an indirect but inescapable reference to the independent Polish labor movement suspended when the Warsaw regime decreed martial law — in an hour-long speech to the 149-member International Labor Organization.

The pope also met briefly and unexpectedly with Solidarity activists who were outside Poland when martial law was imposed, made a point of blessing the bearer of a "Solidarnosc" banner and often wove events in Poland into the broader context of his appeals for social justice, human dignity and workers rights.

The pontiff's address to about 1,800 ILO delegates was the cornerstone of his 13-hour visit to some of Geneva's best known international organizations.

He told them that workers' rights to associate freely are "severely threatened, often flouted."

Workers, he asserted, have a fundamental right "to form freely or join an association of their own choosing, and to run it."

The pope was clearly speaking about the stalemate in Poland between martial law authorities and trade unionists when he appealed for "dialogue and cooperation....to resolve opposition, without seeking to destroy the opponent."

Turkish national held in attempt on pope's life

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — Swiss authorities said today they are holding a Turkish national suspected of being involved in the May 13, 1981, attempt on Pope John Paul II's life.

Justice Ministry spokesman Ulrich Hubacher told a reporter the suspect, arrested 10 day ago, was charged with having supplied the pistol with which the convicted attacker, Mehmet Ali Agca, shot and seriously wounded the pope. Agca, also a Turk, is serving a life sentence in an Italian prison.

Italy has asked Switzerland to extradite the suspect, whose name was not disclosed.

Two charity organizations join efforts

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

United Way of Midland Inc., and the Midland Unit of the American Cancer Society will join forces to cooperate in their fund-raising and educational programs in the workforce.

Jack Steele, president of United Way of Midland Inc., and Emily Gifford, American Cancer Sociey president, announced today at a news conference that the relationship between the two organizations will begin July 1 when the American Cancer Society and United Way combine their efforts in the business and industry sector only.

Although approximately 80 cities throughout the nation have initiated this concept, it is new to Midland. Steele said the two organizations will form a unique liaison committee, with representatives from both organizations.

"(The agreement) will help facilitate getting the American Cancer Society programs into business and industry," Mrs. Gifford said. "The relationship will also give us the opportunity to make people in the workplace aware of the many free services such as hospital equipment and counseling provided by the American Cancer Society."

"This kind of creative growth can only benefit both organizations, as well as the public," Steele added. "United Way of Midland has seen a need to give our support to more health-oriented programs, and through this arrangement with the American Cancer Society, we will be helping to support a quality health organization."

Steele said the United Way developed a long-range plan in the spring of 1980, outlining not only goals for the agency, but also its strengths and weaknesses. The plan resulted in the need for the United Way to be more flexible and diverse in funding health services.

In the past, United Way participating agencies have been supported on a deficit funding basis, but Steele said the long range plan has helped develop procedures for special grants and purchase-of-service funding, as well as other approaches.

"We expect to be considering other new types of agency relationships in the near future," he said. "As our agencies and the community change, we want to be responsive to new funding formulas which may be better ways to meet new needs."

An ad hoc committee studied and recommended that the American Cancer Society join United Way in an effort to offer the business and industry sector an opportunity to support the American Cancer Society through United Way contributions as well as receive the cancer education programs.

Mrs. Gifford said that in the past, the American Cancer Society has had some difficulty "getting into the workforce," but the "United Way visibility will open the door to the workforce."

Steele and Mrs. Gifford agreed that the American Cancer Society will continue to have its own April fund-raising program, education programs and its year-round memorial, special gift, legacy and special events.

Mrs. Gifford noted that, in Texas and Midland in particular, the American Cancer Society receives a larger than average return of the American Cancer Society's contributions.

"Midland County residents received education programs, hospital equipment and rehabilitation valued at $181,861 last year. Midlanders have also been very generous in supporting the American Cancer Society's huge research program," she said.

In other cities that have joined their efforts, Mrs. Gifford said the American Cancer society has steadily reached increasing numbers of employees with its educational programs.

Both Steele and Mrs. Gifford said they see this trend as an indication the public will accept and support the relationship between the two organizations.

Window washing involves skill, hazard maintained equipment is on relatively safe ground.

Jerry Bailey, the area director of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, called window washing "a unique occupation" because of the skills and hazards involved. But, he said, "as long as they follow guidelines and good work practices, it shouldn't be that dangerous."

Yet even under ideal conditions, a whisper of fear underlies a window cleaner's work.

Mrs. Edmunds said she occasionally reflected on the danger involved, but "I felt that he had to do what he loved doing."

"I used to say: 'Aren't you ever afraid?' And he used to say: 'No, don't ever back off from anything.' If he was ever afraid, he never showed it."

Dahl readily admits fear, but tempers it with a professed love for his work.

"Yes, we're all afraid. But we learn to turn it from fear to respect, just like riding a motorcycle.

"Ninety-five percent of the people who are washing windows enjoy their business," he said.

"It's all he's ever done," said Mrs. Edmund, of her window-washing husband. "He loved it. And he was so very good at it."

Dahl simply called Doug Edmunds, who manages Jobs Building Services' operations throughout West Texas and cleaned several structures in downtown Midland, "the best."

That's high praise for one of a group of people who regularly scale man-made pinnacles to provide others with a clearer window on the world.

Rescue workers remove injured from a derailed Amtrak train near Emerson, Iowa Tuesday. At least one person was killed and 150 injured when the track the train was on was wiped out by floods as a result of heavy rains.

Clean-up work continues after Iowa derailment

EMERSON, Iowa (AP) — Railroad crews worked through the night to remove the wreckage of an Amtrak passenger train from the flooded tracks where it derailed, killing one passenger and sending 16 others aboard to the hospital.

The National Transportation and Safety Board, meeting in Council Bluffs, Iowa, Tuesday night, appointed four committees to investigate the derailment of the San Francisco Zephyr early Tuesday morning three miles west of Emerson in southwestern Iowa.

In all, 150 people were injured, mostly suffering cuts and bruises.

An Amtrak spokesman said the railroad believes floodwaters from adjacent farms washed out part of the Burlington Northern Railroad tracks.

Burlington Northern crews were on the scene early today removing the last of the wreckage from the tracks.

Engineer Joe Schwartz of Omaha, Neb., a 30-year railroad veteran, said he and another crew member had been talking about the water along the railroad right-of-way just before the 12-car, two-engine train jumped the tracks.

"We came around a curve, saw the water and put the train in emergency," Schwartz said. "Then, we derailed."

Jack Crandall, head of Iowa Disaster Services, said, "The engineer said he was going 76 mph and was rounding a bend and suddenly there was no track in front of him."

Wayne Hatton, regional vice president for the Burlington Northern in Chicago, said the San Francisco-bound train had been delayed leaving Chicago and was running 45 minutes late when it derailed. He said he did not think speed contributed to the derailment, however.

At a news conference Tuesday night, safety board vice chairman Patricia Goldman said the committees will study the train's operations, human factors, track and signal conditions and the role of the weather in the derailment.

"We'll be looking at all aspects of the accident," said Ira Furman, a spokesman for the NTSB. "Speed is an unknown at this time and will be part of the report.

Some of the 286 passengers, 12 Amtrak attendants and six Burlington Northern employees had to be evacuated from the wreckage by boat because of 3- to 4-foot-deep floodwaters.

Pam Dickson, an Amtrak spokesman in Chicago, said railroad officials believe the high water flowing from fields into a creek washed out part of the track bed, causing the derailment.

Terri N. Thomas, 19, of Santa Maria, Calif., was killed when she was caught between two cars as the train jolted off the tracks.

Mrs. Thomas' 1-year-old baby, whom she was carrying to another car to feed, was thrown back into a car to safety.

Julie Delmatto, 30, of Columbus, Ohio, said she saw a woman, whom she later was told was Mrs. Thomas, walk past her with the baby in her arms. She said she had looked at her watch and it was 3:10 a.m.

Just before the derailment, Mrs. Delmatto said the train "started to jiggle, like it was hitting bumps. Then there was a big crash. The lady with the baby flew backwards and was caught in between two cars," Mrs. Delmatto said. The baby was thrown into the car behind.

Jury finds ex-convict guilty of burglarizing used-car office

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A 31-year-old ex-convict accused of burglarizing the used-car lot office of former Midland police officer John Roundtree, 38, last Feb. 19 was found guilty of the crime Tuesday by a seven-man, five-woman jury in Judge Vann Culp's 238th State District Court.

Deemed guilty after about 2¼ hours of deliberation was Michael Ferrell Brown, who was charged with breaking in the business, Sherry's Auto Sales at Front Avenue and the Old Bankhead Highway, about 8 p.m. on Feb. 19, breaking windows and driving off in a 1971 Lincoln sedan.

After getting hold of Brown at police headquarters, Roundtree was indicted for hitting Brown in the police station's interrogation room after Brown allegedly "clenched" his fist at the ex-policeman. Roundtree served on the force from August 1972 until his resignation in May 1981.

The jury deliberated on Brown's punishment, which ranged from five years to 99 years or life in prison, for about an hour. But Brown, on advice of his defense attorney, James Eubank, opted to have the judge, rather than the jury, set punishment. At the onset, he elected to have the jury set punishment.

Brown today was to be sentenced to prison for seven years.

Todd Sickle, Brown's co-defendant in the case, is awaiting trial for burglary in district court. Also on the docket but in Midland County Court is Roundtree, who, if convicted of assaulting Brown, could be sentenced to jail for up to a year, fined $2,000 or placed on probation.

Brown's range of punishment for the burglary was enhanced to life due to his 1977 conviction for forgery in Cameron County. Otherwise, burglary of a building carries a punishment range of two years to 10 years in prison.

In arguing for his client's acquittal, Eubank focused on Roundtree's admitted assault on Brown, on an inconsistency in Brown's identification by witness Bill Marshall, and on the lack of fingerprints and keys to connect Brown to the stolen Lincoln sedan.

Eubank cast suspicion on Roundtree's having the "run of the police station" nine months after he was off the police force.

"They (police) have got a problem," Eubank told the jurors. "John Roundtree's got a problem; he's got an indictment on an assault case."

Eubank attacked the testimony of Marshall, Roundtree's friend, who said he saw Brown break out of the auto sales office and spotted Sickle, Brown's brother-in-law, speeding away in another car.

Marshall testified that Brown was clean shaven — "clean-faced" — and short-haired at time of the burglary, Eubank said. However, a police photograph taken of Brown after his arrest later on the night of Feb. 19 showed Brown sporting a beard and long blond hair.

"There's hardly any resemblance at all," Eubank told the jury.

Eubank said that Brown just happened to appear at the used-car lot after the burglary. "Mr. Brown showed up at the wrong time," he said.

Later, Eubank recalled Marshall's reply to a defense question: "'Mr. Marshall,'" Eubank said he asked the witness, "'are you as sure that it was Mr. Brown (who burglarized Roundtree's used-car lot) as you are he was clean shaven?'" Marshall said "Yes."

Eubank also pointed to the lack of fingerprints connecting Brown to the burglary, to the lack of police officers testifying at the trial, and, "to a police officer taking the evidence of a bloody shirt and washing it the next day — no evidence."

"To give them (police) the benefit of the doubt," said Eubank, "let's call it sloppy police work."

The defense attorney gave a twist to the "reasonable doubt" courtroom charge.

"It's almost safe to say they (prosecution) proved him (Brown) not guilty beyond a reasonable doubt," Eubank said.

But in referring to the assault case pending against Roundtree, Eubank noted: "It was certainly in Mr. Roundtree's best interest that this defendant get convicted."

Prosecuting attorney Steve Bruneman assaulted Eubank's attack of the evidence against the defendant.

"If you have no defense, the best you can do is to attack the state's case," Bruneman said.

The prosecutor suggested that whether or not Roundtree had the "free run of the police station" or "whether the man was clean-shaven or not" was immaterial to the actual burglary. He said the state only had to prove that Brown committed the burglary.

"There are some minor inconsistencies," Bruneman said, "but they are not fatal."

Officials feel ruling mandates educational aid for aliens

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Congress should help pay to educate the growing number of illegal alien children in Texas classrooms now that the Supreme Court has ruled they are entitled to free schooling, public school officials say.

"They had impact aid for the Cuban and Vietnamese children that have been brought in. We were hoping to get some type of subsidy to help us," Assistant Superintendent Tom Keller said Tuesday.

KELLER AND OTHERS said they were not surprised at the Supreme Court's ruling on Tuesday that the children of undocumented workers are entitled to a free education.

The court struck down a Texas law that had allowed school districts to charge tuition or refuse admission to illegal aliens.

Brownsville schools began enrolling illegal aliens in November 1980 after the system lost a federal district court fight over its policy of refusing such children admission.

About 1,600 illegal aliens from Mexico and Central American countries are among the 30,000 students enrolled in Brownsville — and illegal alien enrollments are even higher in Houston and Dallas.

Dallas school officials predicted Tuesday that the ruling could bring as many as 5,000 aliens into the Dallas Independent School District during the next few years.

"I would not be surprised at all to see our illegal alien enrollment double next year," Superintendent Linus Wright said.

The district had about 1,300 illegal alien students during the 1981-1982 school year, he said.

The superintendent of the Houston Independent School Distict, Billy Reagan, said the cost of educating the expected influx of alien children would be "phenomenal."

He said the ruling would serve as a "magnet for these people."

Cooler weather forecast for area

Temperatures crowded the century mark in the Permian Basin on Tuesday, but if National Weather Service forecasters are correct, air conditioner thermostats can be lowered somewhat the next couple of days.

A high of 96 was recorded Tuesday, still 10 degrees off the all-time record for the date set in 1960 but above the expected high Thursday of 90.

The low of 61, meanwhile, was well above the 48 degrees that greeted Midlanders last June.

Fair skies are forecast, with winds to be southeast at 5-10 mph tonight and southerly at 15-20 mph Thursday.

No precipitation is expected, and the yearly total remains at 4.92 inches.

Odessan linked to Kermit slayings

KERMIT, Texas (AP) — Law enforcement officers want to question a paroled Odessa man about the abduction of a Kermit woman and her daughter, who were found stabbed and buried in a shallow grave.

Michael Eugene Sharp, 28, was named in an aggravated kidnapping warrant issued Monday by Peace Justice Lee Rutledge.

Winkler County sheriff's officials said Tuesday the warrant resulted from information supplied by the woman's 14-year-old daughter. The girl, who was naked and bound by the hands, escaped from her abductor Friday and traveled five miles on foot over rugged terrain before reaching help.

Sheriff Bill Sage said Sharp's co-workers had seen a composite picture developed from Selena Kay Elm's description of her abductor and had said Sharp "was probably the guy." The workers also said Sharp had been driving a blue pickup like the one described as having been used in the abduction.

Sgt. Mike Eggleston said records showed that Sharp had a tattoo similar to that described by the survivor.

"That's the way we clearly identified him — a large winged horse on his upper left chest," Eggleston said.

He said investigators waited outside Sharp's home until midnight Monday but he did not return.

He said Sharp, also known as Michael Eugene Owensby, had worked for at least a month at an oil drilling site two miles from where the bodies of Brenda Kay Broadway, 31, and Christi Mechelle Elms, 8, were found.

Sage said that their investigation indicated Sharp probably knew Ms. Broadway, but declined to elaborate.

Eggleston said authorities had determined the the slayings occurred one-half mile inside the Ector County line and that therefore any murder charges in the case would have to be filed in that county.

The bodies were found in a 26-inch-deep grave next to a cattle-watering tank 16 miles southeast of Kermit. Both had been stabbed in the heart.

Ms. Broadway and her daughters were abducted about 12:30 a.m. Friday at a car wash in Kermit and were taken to a stock tank.

'Palatable' tobacco program sought

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tobacco-state congressmen, threatened with a rebellion that could abolish the price support program for their constituents, are trying to come up with a program more palatable to critics.

"We have here in Washington people I would consider and call concrete cowboys, who have never seen a stalk of tobacco," said Republican Rep. Larry Hopkins of Kentucky, where tobacco is the number one cash crop.

"I am very sensitive to and highly offended by the people who want to do away with a crop they know nothing about," Hopkins complained Tuesday of narrowly unsuccessful attempts last year to dismantle the complex program.

But jarred by those attempts — last year's Senate challenge failed by a mere vote — the House Agriculture tobacco subcommittee Tuesday endorsed a package of changes and forwarded it to the full committee.

It requires that tobacco farmers bear the full cost of federal price supports through assessments of a few cents on each pound of tobacco. And it forces nonfarming institutions like corporations to give up their valuable, government-issued acreage allotments.

The bill also gives the agriculture secretary authority to curb scheduled increases in price supports for flue-cured tobacco, the largest U.S. tobacco type. A 400 million pound surplus of flue-cured tobacco has accumulated as demand for cheaper foreign imports cuts into the market.

"The tobacco growers are not only willing but anxious to see that by their contributions the taxpayers are not laible for any loss," said Rep. Charles Whitley, D-N.C.

Critics have complained said that "fuedalistic" production restraints for decades have concentrated control of the nation's tobacco crop in the hands of those holding about 500,000 federally-issued acreage allotments, many of them nonfarmers. Those producing tobacco without an allotment are subject to penalties.

They also claim it's contradictory for the government to spend millions of dollars to support tobacco prices while pumping millions more into an effort to discourage Americans from smoking tobacco.

But the southern congressmen say the program bolsters market prices for tobacco, the financial lifeblood of many small, family farmers. They say the production controls keep tobacco prices high and thereby discourage increased consumption.

A recent study by the General Accounting Office, the investigating arm of Coe study also found that 35 percent of the allotments are owned by non-farming interests. Although many of those owners are individuals, a number are corporations, schools, public utilities and other institutions who rent or lease them to producers.

The bill requires producers of burley and flue-cured tobacco, which account for the bulk of the 2 billion pound U.S. crop, to contribute to a special fund that will be used to cover any price-support program costs other than normal administrative expenses. Administrative costs have been running about $13 million a year.

Although that assessment would be set by the government in conjunction with marketing associations, the subcommittee estimates it would run about 2 cents a pound for burley and 3 to 4 cents a pound for flue-cured. In the case of flue-cured, non-producing allotment owners also would pay the 3- to 4-cents-a-pound fee.

The bill also would force non-producing allotment owners like corporations or schools to either sell their allotment to tobacco producers by the end of next year or forfeit it for redistribution by local officials to tobacco farmers. The same would apply to individuals who own allotments but have no land on which to grow tobacco. The GAO study found that corporations hold less than 2 percent of the allotments.

Arizona joins ban on Mexican fruit

By The Associated Press

Arizona has joined California in banning citrus imports from Mexico after fruit flies were discovered in oranges from south of the border.

Arizona's action came Tuesday, four days after California officials halted imports because Mexican fruit fly maggots were discovered in a shipment of oranges to San Mateo and Santa Clara counties south of San Francisco.

Arizona's ban excludes mangoes and other non-citrus produce, said Glen Thaxton, quarantine-division director for the Arizona Agriculture and Horticulture Commission.

Mel Reis, an agricultural economist with California's Bureau of Market News, a division of the state Food and Agriculture Department, said three truckloads of oranges from Mexico — about 62 tons — were unloaded in San Francisco Tuesday.

Four other truckloads of about 86 tons were unloaded in San Francisco Friday and Monday, Reis said.

State agriculture officials immediately dispatched county agriculture commissioners to find out when the orange trucks entered the state.

George Buxton, program supervisor for the state Food and Agriculture Department's Interior Quarantine Division, said agriculture commissioners in San Francisco, San Mateo and Los Angeles will try to determine whether the oranges arrived after the import ban.

The Mexican fly does not pose nearly the threat to California produce as did an infestation last year of Mediterreanean fruit flies, officials said. The medfly infestation cost California farmers up to $73 million in losses.

"It's nothing like the medfly" because the Mexican insect feeds on a much smaller range of produce, said Stan Caplan, Santa Clara County agricultural biologist. He said host food for the Mexican fruit fly include citrus fruits, avocados and mangoes.

He said it is doubtful whether the Mexican fly could survive the cold of the Northern California winter.

Wheat growers seek curbs on land used for production

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Association of Wheat Growers says the Agriculture Department could solve part of the nation's grain problem by offering farmers payments to take land out of production next year.

"Our aim is to reduce wheat stocks and this should be the goal of the department as well," said Wayne Nelson, president of the association. "Nearly all the wheat program options being considered by USDA would lead to higher surpluses in 1984."

The association's recommendations came as the House Agriculture Committee prepared to open hearings on emergency farm legislation which would include tighter federal curbs on production and payments to farmers in exchange for taking land out of production.

As part of its argument, the association released a special study prepared by Schnittker Associates, a Washington-based consulting firm.

The study showed that programs could be designed to reduce U.S. wheat inventories by 150 million to 250 million bushels in 1983-84 by having farmers reduce acreage 20 percent plus cutting back an additional 10 percent in exchange for payments computed at $4 a bushel.

"The U.S. wheat economy is at a crossroads," the study said. "Decisions by the secretary of agriculture and other government officials during the next month or two can help begin a recovery from the present price and income recession, or they can lead to even lower prices and financial hardship next year."

'Social climbing' roof rats bring more than dislike to Southwest

By BOB CORBETT
Copley News Service

It's the social time of the year. The posh parties, the escargot, the date palms, the ivy-covered walls, the secret trysting places.

It's a great time to be alive — especially if you are a roof rat.

Listen, roof rats are special. They can go anywhere, carte blanche. However, they prefer the older, better established neighborhoods, places steeped with tradition, money and, more importantly, lush vegetation.

It's their social milieu. They even have one of those double names that are associated with the upper class. Scientifically, they are known as

RATS!

Roof rats are impossible to keep track of. But give them an inch and they'll take over your whole house.

Rattus rattus.

FOR SOME STRANGE reason, however, and despite their pedigree, nobody likes them. Unfortunately, like "The Man Who Came to Dinner," they're hard to discourage.

The roof rat is, first of all, a nuisance. Give him half an inch and he'll take your house.

It's almost impossible to keep track of the roof rat. There's no way to calculate the numbers. The best estimates of its spread come from the number of home owner complaints.

The animal borders on the incredible. His body length can reach 10 inches. His tail is longer than that. He likes to nest in areas with thick vegetation. Almost any bush, tree or haphazard woodpile will do.

Athletically, he's a superrat. He can squeeze into small holes. He can climb any pipe, either vertically or horizontally; jump 4 feet from a flat surface; drop 50 feet without being injured; climb brick or other rough surfaces; scamper up vines, shrubs or trees; do a balancing act on power lines; swim a half-mile in open water, and travel through sewer lines against strong currents.

In addition, he'll eat his way through almost anything — lead sheeting, adobe brick, cinder block and aluminum. It helps sharpen his teeth.

He's also something of a gourmet. He thrives on snails, devouring them fastidiously from the outside of the spiral shell to the inside. It's one of his calling cards. He also is fond of the pits from date palms, fresh fruits and vegetables.

THE HIDDEN WORRY about the roof rat, however, is that he can serve as a vector — a carrier — for fleas that can spread the bubonic plague, the "Black Death" of the Middle Ages. It's the proximity between the roof rat and humans that bothers the experts.

The bubonic plague is endemic to the Southwestern section of the United States. Every year, there are small outbreaks — 15 to 20 cases — that are often fatal.

So far, in modern times, these outbreaks have been kept under control in the United States. However, they shouldn't be taken lightly. History graphically illustrates that the bubonic plague can be catastrophic.

In the mid-1300s, the plague swept through Europe and Asia. Three-quarters of the population was affected. More than 25 million people died.

Although the roof rat is a wily creature, he can be defeated. The most effective means is the use of poisoned bait in the outdoor setting. However, this must be done with great care, especially if a home owner has children or domesticated pets.

ALSO, IT INVOLVES a proper procedure, a definite set of steps that must be followed. This involves the removal of all other food and water sources except the bait, the destruction of the rats through poisoning, the rat-proofing of the home, and then the elimination of dense vegetation the rats so dearly love. If the rats have already invaded the home, experts advise the use of large-sized snap traps, something larger than the regular mousetrap.

Basically, the roof rat is shy. He avoids open areas. For that reason, experts advise using sparse vegetation, minimizing the use of ivy and trimming trees and other shrubs away from the home.

Group trying to stop 'on air' liquor selling

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — A citizens group fighting radio and television advertising of alcohol products is claiming partial victory as a Sommerville, Mass. liquor producer withdraws a hard-sell vodka ad from Boston radio station WITS.

But the group says it still objects to liquor ads being broadcast on public airwaves at a time when tens of thousands of deaths annually are pinpointed to alcoholism.

The vodka producer, M.S. Walker Co., substituted another ad for the original with more of a public service approach: encouraging "responsible" drinking while still working in two mentions of Cossack Vodka and the name of the producer.

The narrator is the same, Nancy Eckersley, the wife of Boston Red Sox star pitcher Dennis Eckersley.

"M.S. Walker Co. and WITS have taken responsible steps in the right direction," said Michael Jacobson of the Citizens Coalition on Alcohol Advertising.

"However, the new ad is still an ad and it violates the longstanding voluntary ban on radio and television liquor ads," he said. "Unless broadcast liquor advertising is halted now we can look forward to massive new advertising campaigns that boost liquor sales and increase the misery, sickness and death associated with alcohol problems."

Jacobson said the coalition would withdraw its objection to liquor broadcast ads if time were granted for counter-commercials or if the ads were broadcast only between 11 p.m. and 7 a.m.

The coalition's original protest came three weeks ago when the Walker ads began during Red Sox games and were hailed by the company as a "revolutionary breakthrough."

At that time, Jacobson said the commercials "trade on the mystique of a star athlete who is a hero to young fans. The underlying message is: Be like someone rich, famous and talented — drink vodka."

He said the ads ignored the "hideous reality" that "we've got teenage drinking at epidemic proportions" and that 26,000 people died in alcohol-related car crashes last year.

CRMWD releases agenda

BIG SPRING — Consideration of acquiring additional ground water rights will be on the agenda of Colorado River Municipal Water District directors when they meet in Big Spring June 24.

The district has made some surveys looking toward the strengthening of reserves for meeting demands of cities on the west end of the system in months of peak demand. The board will consider authorizing the general manager to proceed.

Other major items on the agenda include:

—Authorizing the president to execute a contract to issue approximately $16 million water and sewer bonds on behalf of the city of Odessa;

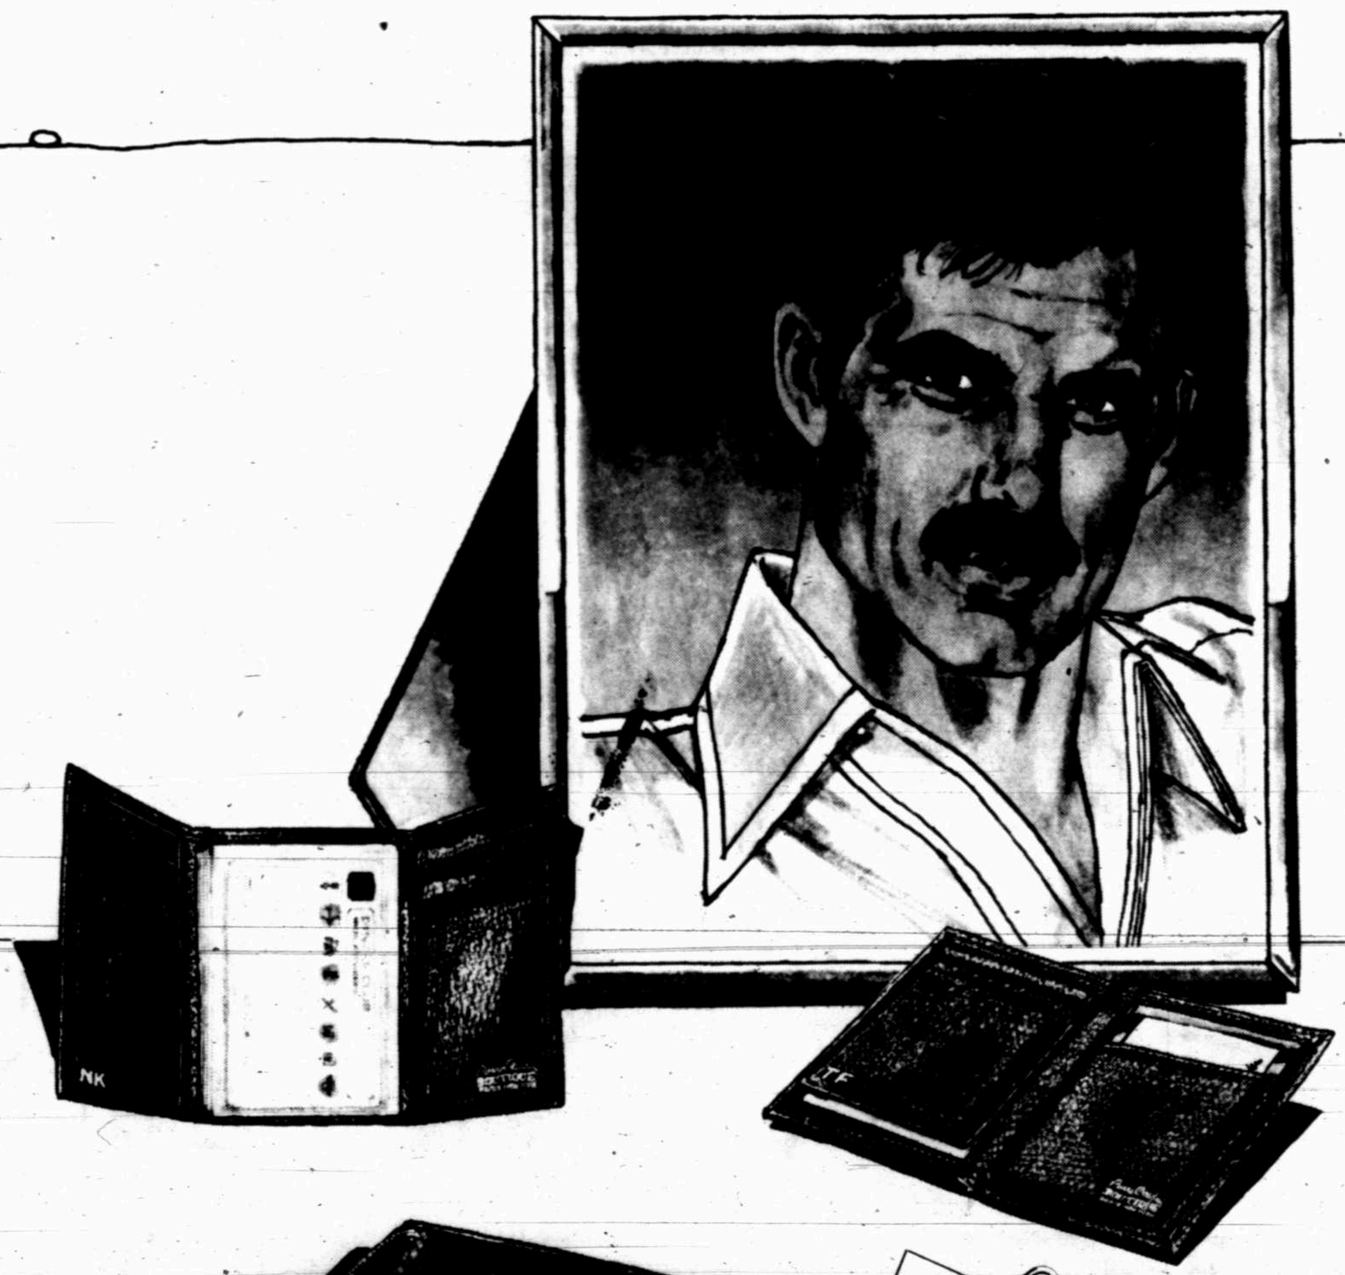

—The discussion of proposals submitted to the city of Midland for increasing the volume of water available to that city.

A request of Sayres Operating Company, tabled at the previous meeting, to reduce its contract quantity by about one-half will be considered again, as will a request from Mabee Petroleum Company to stay temporarily its contract quantity. The board is due to elect officers at the meeting.

Release possible

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government might release more than 1,900 Haitians, many of whom are awaiting hearings on their requests for political asylum.

Attorney General William French Smith announced Monday he will consider releasing the Haitians if they have attorneys and can guarantee their appearances at immigration hearings to determine if they should be expelled from the country. Currently, 1,910 Haitians without proper documents to be in this country are being held by the federal government.

Gangster runs 'family' from prison cell

By CLARA HEMPHILL

OTTAVIANO, Italy (AP) — Two years ago, a notorious Neapolitan gangster named Raffaele Cutolo declared war on his rivals from a prison cell with wall-to-wall carpeting.

Since then, more than 300 people have been slain in a bloody battle for control of the extortion rackets that rake in millions of dollars a year and the trade in contraband cigarettes and hashish in the towns around the Bay of Naples.

The violence has escalated this year and the war between clans of the criminal organization called the Camorra now claims nearly one victim a day. The most recent victim was an 11-year-old girl, killed by a bullet meant for her father, a prosecutor who investigated organized crime.

Officials say Cutolo built up an empire from his cell in a prison near Rome. He has a 15th-century castle in this town, his birthplace, on the slopes of the volcano Vesuvius. A small army of followers here wear five points tattoed on their hands between their thumbs and index fingers to show they're his men.

THE PROFITS from crime have brought prosperity to this town. Unlike the neighboring villages that are poor, decayed and half-abandoned, Ottaviano is clean and bustling, with palm trees and rose bushes in the central square and BMWs and Mercedes cars zooming down tree-lined streets. "Cutolo's Auto Showroom" and "Cutolo Furniture" are among the budding businesses.

Construction is booming. Cement trucks clog the streets and workmen up on scaffolding build and repair walls even during the traditional three-hour lunch break, when most Italian towns are deserted.

For years, Mafia-type Camorra gangs in the Naples area collected "protection money" from shopkeepers, took a cut of the profits from the fruit and vegetable markets, and smuggled in contraband cigarettes with speedboats that are faster than police craft.

Each Camorra faction had its own neighborhood, and no one stepped into another's territory. Cutolo was leader of one of the gangs.

"Then Cutolo said, 'I want to be boss of bosses,' " said Riccardo Boccia, the prefect (government representative) in Naples. "He said: 'I'm going to make everyone pay protection money to me.' He upset the equilibrium."

CUTOLO NAMED himself boss of the Nuova Camorra Organizata, the New Organized Camorra. The other half-dozen formed a loose federation called the Nuova Famiglia, the New Family, and the war was on.

The victims include not only those Cutolo believes have betrayed him or oppose him, but also their wives and sisters and any possible witnesses to the crimes. The Nuova Famiglia has killed many of Cutolo's men, including 11 in this town this year.

Cutolo, 40, has spent half his life in jail and for years lived in a cell which Italian journalists said had color television, curtains, a private bath and a refrigerator stocked with liquor.

Police say he ran his organization without impediment in prison, sending orders to his men by telephone, in letters on monogrammed stationery or through messengers who visited him in prison.

Boccia said local officials asked repeatedly for Cutolo to be transferred from his luxurious cell in Ascoli Piceno northeast of Rome. But for years the requests were denied.

"HE STAYED there a lot longer than necessary," said Boccia, who also acts as chief of police for Naples.

Finally, Naples Mayor Maurizio Valenzi, a Communist, made a personal appeal to President Sandro Pertini in Rome to transfer the gangster.

Pertini agreed, saying: "I know that Cutolo had wall-to-wall carpeting in his cell and 20 members of the Camorra who waited on him." Cutolo was moved to a maximum security prison in Sardinia in April.

His power in jail seems to have waned since then, but he still seems to run Ottaviano.

The town government recently approved 180 million lire ($144,000) to restore his 100-room villa that dominates the town. The money was from government funds earmarked for people whose houses were damaged or destroyed in a devastating earthquake in 1980.

THIRTY MEN worked for a month on the restoration of the Medici villa and walled gardens graced with trees and marble sculptures before the national press — and the national government — got wind of the project.

Boccia blocked the funds, and the work stopped in mid-May.

Cutolo, whose father was a small-time gangster and whose mother was a peasant, was the godson of American gangster Vito Genovese.

Genovese returned to Italy from the United States in 1943 as an interpreter for the U.S. Army. He was one of the American gangsters credited with reviving the Camorra in Naples after World War II. He died in a U.S. prison in 1967.

In 1963, Cutolo killed a man who flirted with his girlfriend. He was sentenced to 24 years for that murder and to 14 years for the attempted murder of a policemen in 1970, while on parole.

IN 1977, a court ruled he was insane and ordered him held in a mental hospital. He had some friends dynamite the hospital wall and he escaped in 1978. In 1980, after he was recaptured, a court acknowledged his "semi-infirmity of mind" but ordered him to finish his sentence in a regular prison.

The psychiatrist who testified that he was insane, Aldo Semerarari, was found decapitated in this town April 1, in a Camorra murder that has baffled police.

About 80 percent of the Camorra murders are unsolved. Boccia says there has been an undervaluation of the problem on the part of some police officials, judges and prosecutors in the past.

Pino Arlacchi, a sociologist who studies the Camorra, said: "Cutolo has a strong lobby that goes as far as the Justice Ministry. There's a lot of corruption and a lot of fear."

Lebanese exiles may soon return to homeland

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — Samir Bustani is one of many Lebanese exiles who believe Israel's invasion means that it will shortly be possible to return home and pick up the broken threads of their lives.

"I'm far from being pro-Israeli, but maybe they have ended the chaos in my homeland," the 43-year-old businessman said. "Anyway, I think there is a chance worth taking. So I'll be returning home as soon as I can."

He is among tens of thousands in the expatriate Lebanese community here who have mixed feelings about the Israeli lightning war that overran a third of their country in little more than a week and turned the complex, blood-stained pattern of its politics inside out.

As it was for the Vietnamese during their long war, Paris has become a kind of "capital-in-exile" for Lebanese who fled the 1975-76 civil war and the almost constant fighting that has punctuated life there ever since. Most of the exiles represent Lebanon's once-thriving, influential class of businessmen and bankers — poorer Lebanese lacked the means to get out — and perhaps three-quarters or more are Maronite Christians.

Like most of them, Bustani is grieved by reports of the ravages and death toll coming in the wake of the Israeli invasion. But, he said, "terrible and, in so many ways, inexcusable as it is, maybe it had to be.

"It wasn't possible for Lebanon to continue as it was. I say that as a Lebanese. We couldn't solve our problems. It is a tragedy the Israelis have sought to solve them for us, but maybe it is better than no solution at all."

He watched the invasion from the sidelines, but he is no stranger to sudden death in Lebanon. His mother died in a bombardment in Beirut by left-wing Lebanese militia during the civil war.

Such memories — 40,000 Lebanese died in 1975-76 — have understandably embittered people like Bustani toward their fellow Lebanese who manned the other side of the barricades. In many cases, they are especially bitter toward the Palestinians in their midst who were at least partially to blame for the problems that led to civil war.

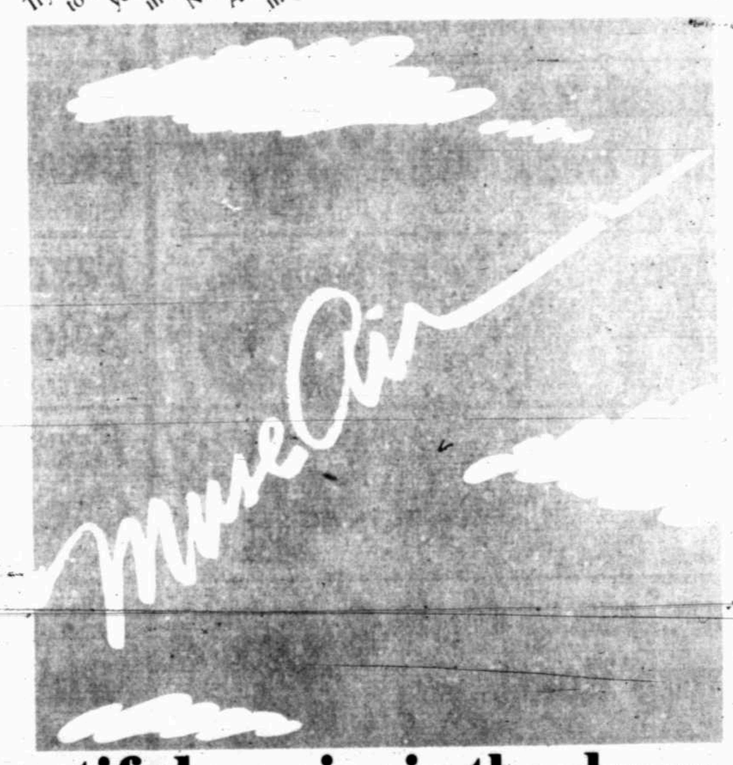

However, he emphasized it would be a sizeable error to assume that Lebanese Christians so hated their Moslem compatriots that they were ready to throw in their lot unreservedly with Israel.

"Above all, it would be a mistake for the Israelis to think so," he warned. "I myself have a brother and a niece who are ardently pro-Palestinian and anti-Zionist. Our mother's death didn't affect how they feel. The last I heard, my niece was at PLO headquarters in Beirut.

He believes much depends on how Israel now handles the question of Lebanon's right to political self-management, something largely denied to it since 1976 by the PLO and Syria's so-called peacekeeping army.

"It's unrealistic not to expect the Israelis to continue military occupation for quite a while, possibly many months," he said. "But if they become political occupiers too, they'll be making a disastrous error. If they simply try to install puppets in power, the vast majority of Lebanese will see it as a Quisling government and refuse to follow. All political advantage for the Israelis will be lost, in that case. In fact, only the extremists and Israel's enemies would benefit in the long run."

Seattle paper merger foes expected to sue

SEATTLE (AP) — Foes of a joint operating agreement between The Seattle Times and Seattle Post-Intelligencer say they will sue to block the arrangement, which U.S. Attorney General William French Smith approved Tuesday.

"We'll file a lawsuit as quickly as we can" in U.S. District Court in Seattle, said William Dwyer, lawyer for a coalition of opponents, including P-I employees, advertisers and publishers of some suburban dailies.

P-I Publisher Virgil Fassio said court action would prolong the P-I's financial agony. He said the paper faces a $5 million operating loss this year, and predicted that even with the merger arrangement, the paper isn't expected to make up what it lost so far this year.

It was unclear what a lawsuit would do to the newspapers' plans to begin operating under the agreement June 28.

Under the 50-year agreement, advertising, circulation, printing, production and most business functions of the P-I and Times will be combined and operated by the Times. The news and editorial departments will remain separate.

The Times will stop publishing its 2-year-old morning edition. The P-I will drop its Sunday paper, although it will be allotted six pages in the Sunday Times for its own material. The P-I will be 2½ inches longer when printed on the Times' presses.

Fassio and Times General Manager Harold Fuhrman disputed arguments by foes that competition will disappear once the two dailies begin operating jointly.

"I don't think readers will notice any particular change," said Fuhrman.

Fassio and Fuhrman said the papers will continue to compete "fiercely" on the news pages.

"The approval...guarantees that Seattle will be a two-newspaper town," said Fassio. "Now we can put aside the severe financial problems that have given the P-I losses for more than 13 years."

Fuhrman said prices of the two papers are not expected to increase because of the agreement. He said Times employees will vigorously promote advertising in the P-I.

Firefighters watch as restaurant burns

CLEBURNE, Texas (AP) — Firefighters from this North Texas community watched from their truck parked at the city limits as a restaurant about 100 feet away burned to the ground.

The restaurant's owner said he is furious that the firefighters did nothing to help, but merely watched as he tried to extinguish the flames with a garden hose Tuesday.

Tommy Wallace, an assistant chief of the Godley Volunteer Fire Department and a paid lieutenant in the Cleburne department, said city firefighters were prohibited by ordinance from fighting fires beyond the city limits.

The restaurant, Charlie Perkins' Barbecue, burned before volunteer firemen could arrive, witnesses said.

Perkins said in the 30 minutes it took for volunteers to arrive from Godley, 10 miles away, the flames consumed his restaurant.

"There's a creek that crosses the road at the city line, too," Perkins later said. "If a man fell in there drowning on the wrong side of the creek, I guess they'd let him drown."

The restaurant is about three blocks from the center of town, but Perkins' parking lot extends to the city limits. Johnson County is divided into rural fire districts.

"We called the Cleburne Fire Department and they just laughed," said Bob Burks, an Arlington resident who recently leased the restaurant from Perkins.

Burks was sleeping in a nearby mobile home when the fire began at 3:30 a.m.

Cleburne Fire Chief Lloyd McVicar said the city sent a fire truck to the scene because the wind was blowing sparks from the blaze toward a house in the city.

"If a fire originates inside the city and goes outside the city lines, the fire department will fight it," he said. "But if it starts outside, as long as it's not endangering the city limits, the fire department won't fight it."

Workers walk off pool jobs

HOUSTON (AP) — The pool manager and three lifeguards have walked off their jobs rather than honor a Czech fraternal order's policy of barring blacks and other minorities from the lodge's swimming pool.

Terry Wetzel resigned as pool manager Tuesday, a day after SPJST No. 88 Lodge Pokrok directors voted to exclude guests and restrict use of the pool to members and their families. There are no black members of the lodge, order officials said.

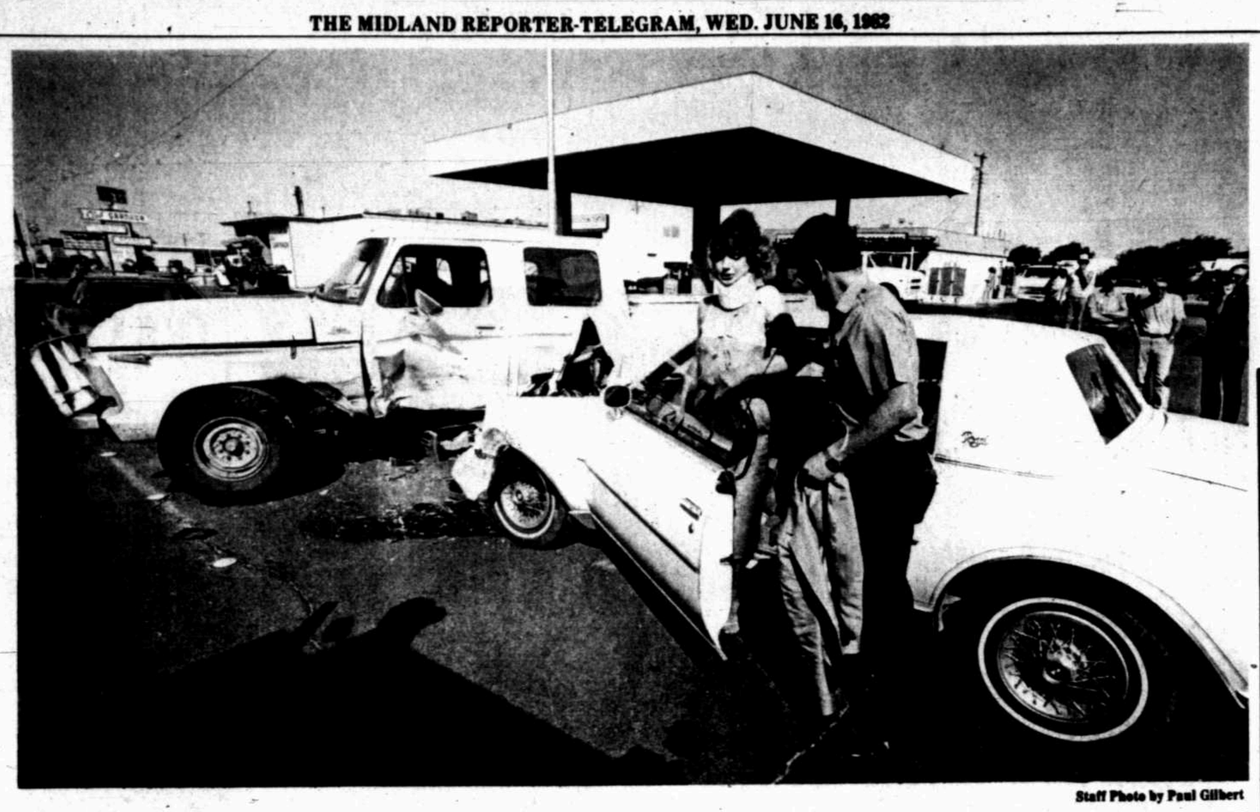

Three lifeguards walked off their jobs Friday when the directors ordered the pool closed three hours early rather than admit black members of a boys' baseball team.

"I've resigned because I don't want to be part of any discrimination," said Wetzel, who is a teacher at a local Lutheran school.

SPJST is the abbreviation for the Czech name of the group, which translates to the Slavonik Benevolent Order of Texas. "Pokrok" is a Czech word meaning progress.

Lodge President Larry Pflughaupt said in order to preserve the ethnic integrity of the Czech order, only members of "the Caucasian-type race" are admitted.

"Morally, it's not correct, but I have to go by the wishes of the members," said Pflughaupt, who has been a member of the lodge for 22 years.

MC trustees reopen on-campus housing issue

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

On-campus student housing, a concept shunned by Midland College trustees and administrators in the past, will be seriously considered during a special meeting with Preston Geren, architect, at 4 p.m. Tuesday.

Called during the regular meeting of the MC Board of Trustees Tuesday afternoon, the special session will be held to discuss possible plans for on-campus housing for athletes, a concept Dr. Jess H. Parrish, MC president, and trustees previously had termed as necessary for athletes attending Midland College on scholarships, but not as one of the purposes of a community college.

Geren, who will submit floor plans for apartments, which possibly could house four students in two bedrooms with a living area and kitchen joining them, also will be questioned about the windows that blew out of the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center Saturday night, according to Parrish.

The almost-50 feet of glass that was blown out by the wind was the second such occurrence. "It looks to me like a design flaw," Parrish told trustees.

In other action Tuesday, trustees informally approved the proposed operating budget for the 1982-83 fiscal year. According to a report submitted by Bob Phillips, vice president of fiscal affairs, the proposed overall budget reflects a 10.1 percent increase from the 1981-82 budget.

The assessed tax valuation, which is estimated to increase from $2,990,819,292 to $3,233,065,586, would increase the tax rate from 10.3 cents to 10.4 cents and the tax income, with a 97 percent collection, from $2,988,128 to $3,295,140, Phillips said.

State funds are up 8.9 percent over 1981-82, from $2,005,873 to $2,188,957, while federal funds from the Federal Energy Grant, which brought in $6,000 in 1981-82, will not be included in the proposed 1982-83 budget.

Local funds from tuition and fees reflect a 5 percent increase, according to the proposed budget. In 1981-82, $300,000 was brought in due to tuitions. An additional $15,000 should be generated in tuition during 1982-83, if the budget is approved in August.

Although the local school contract with the Midland Independent School District will drop from $105,000 to $51,500, due to decreasing enrollment in the joint vocational program, the state-funded Adult Basic Education program, which contributed nothing in 1981-82, will bring in $56,000 next year.

Most of the equipment for the Associate Degree of Nursing Program, which will begin this fall with 24 students, was budgeted for the 1981-82 year, therefore, there is a decrease in funds allotted for the program in the 1982-83 budget.

Budgeted funds for general supplies for the ADN program will decrease from $12,000 in 1981-82 to $2,500; library expenses will decrease from $16,000 to $1,000; and equipment will decrease from $90,252 to $25,000.

In other major action, trustees approved the elimination of the women's golf program next year. According to Parrish, Temple College, the only other community college in the state with a girls' golf program, plans to drop it next year.

"We had to fight and scramble for any type of tournament play," Parrish told trustees. "It was hard to get even dual-matches.

"I think it is a disservice to the students we recruit."

Trustees also approved a low bid of $217,418.80 for data processing equipment from Poise Co. and Digital Equipment Co. for a software-hardware package.

Group contends cuts threaten environmental gains

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation has made "impressive progress" in cleaning up the environment, but the gains are now threatened by government budget cutbacks, an environmental group said today.

The Conservation Foundation, a nonprofit research group, charged that the Reagan administration is scaling back critical research and monitoring programs, eroding the data base needed to make the right decisions.

"Because of the budget cuts, the information base for environmental policy, always weak, is likely to be even weaker in the future," the report said. "The perennial dilemma of whether available information is sufficient to justify action will become more pervasive and difficult."

The foundation said future decisions will be governed more by "ideology, instincts and self-interest."

The report found the most severe knowledge gaps involved research on toxic substances.

"Many potentially toxic chemicals have not been tested at all, many more have not been tested adequately," the foundation said.

The foundation's report was a response in part to the budget cuts. The president's Council on Environmental Quality, whose main task is issuing an annual environmental status report, has had its staff and budget cut 50 percent by the administration.

Fire-victim rescuer victim of traffic fine

DALLAS (AP) — He may be a hero, but Jessie Thomas says he didn't feel like one when he was ticketed for driving over a fire hose after he left a burning apartment that he had searched for victims.

Thomas, 38, said Tuesday he faces $52 in traffic citations after he stopped at the apartment fire last week in the Dallas suburb of Garland.

He said he smelled smoke last Wednesday at the English Village condominums, then heard the building manager scream that a child might be inside the burning unit near him.

Grand jury indicts man in connection with attacks

DALLAS (AP) — A county grand jury has indicted a 24-year-old man in connection with a bizarre series of sex-related offenses, including attacks of women at health spas.

Steven Charles Phillips, a roofer, was named Tuesday on felony charges of burglary, assault, rape and sexual abuse. He is accused in three separate attacks May 14 and May 15 on two Dallas women and another woman in nearby Carrollton.

Survey: Jeeps involved in high rate of accidents

By ANN JOB WOOLLEY

DETROIT (AP) — It took only seconds for the Jeep that Charles Callihan was driving to skid out of control on an icy highway bridge near Seattle.

The rollover — at about 40 mph — threw the 25-year-old Callihan from the vehicle and killed him. His brother-in-law, a passenger, survived with a skull fracture. Today, nearly nine years after the accident, he still suffers blackouts and seizures.

A third occupant lost three fingers because he hung onto the roll bar as the Jeep overturned.

"It happened on a wide, four-lane freeway, with not a car in sight," Callihan's father, Joe, says. "He had the Jeep well under control. There was no booze, no drugs involved. My son had a spotless record. He had never even received a ticket...I talked personally with the police and there were eyewitnesses, too."

Callihan now calls the Jeeps "the most unsafe vehicles on the road" and says "they ought to be outlawed."

BUT AMERICAN Motors Corp., whose subsidiary Jeep Corp. manufactures the vehicles in CJ5 and CJ7 models, says the Jeeps are not at fault for the accidents.

"They (Jeeps) are safe if driven with some discretion," AMC Chairman W. Paul Tippett Jr. told a stockholder at the company's annual meeting in April. The stockholder had voiced concern over the increasing numbers of product liability lawsuits being filed in Jeep rollover accidents.

"Both my children drive CJs," Tippett said. "If I didn't think they were safe, they wouldn't be driving them."

At a press conference later, Tippett added that the lawsuits and the accompanying publicity "are not impacting Jeep sales at all. They've been up every month this year."

He noted that AMC won two Jeep cases in jury trials this year but he would not comment further.

AMC HAS not revealed how many Jeep lawsuits it faces or has settled in recent years, but E.C. Gilbreath, a Fort Smith, Ark., attorney representing some plaintiffs in the cases, has been trying to keep a running tally.

His records show the first Jeep lawsuit was filed in 1970 and the numbers have increased to 39 in 1980 and 33 in 1981 for a total of 187 in his files, Gilbreath said. Most of the lawsuits involve rollovers and most involve Jeep CJ5s and CJ7s, he said.

A majority of the ones that have been closed "were settled by a payment," he said, adding that he does not keep track of whether the payments were court-ordered or out-of-court settlements.

The list includes 49 deaths, 24 instances of paraplegia or quadriplegia and about 100 other injuries, he said.

"I would think that would be an abnormally high rate" for the deaths and injuries, Gilbreath said.

Two studies back up his claims but have been blasted by AMC as being unscientific and inaccurate.

A FEBRUARY 1980 study by the Highway Safety Research Institute at the University of Michigan, prepared for the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety in Washington, D.C., concluded that Jeeps and other utility vehicles roll over at least five times more in accidents than the average passenger car.

The rates of death and disabling injury per accident are twice as high in the utility vehicles compared with passenger cars, the study said.

Researchers blamed the utility vehicles' short wheel base and high center of gravity for the alleged instability.

AMC says the conclusions were flawed because researchers relied on nine states' accident reports which are "inadequate, inaccurate and inconsistent across the nation and from one time period to another."

An October 1980 study by the Phoenix, Ariz., testing firm of Dynamic Science Inc. was publicized by the Insurance Institute as showing the likelihood of Jeep rollovers.

But a New York research firm which evaluated the study for AMC said the study does not "establish that the Jeep CJ5 is 'extremely vulnerable to rollover in even moderate-speed driving maneuvers on the highway.'"

THE DISPUTE continues in courtrooms across the country, especially in Nevada where AMC is petitioning the state Supreme Court to stop a state district judge from disseminating a court opinion blaming the company for a Jeep rollover accident that disabled an Ohio man.

AMC settled for $5 million hours before the court opinion was filed, but the judge says the company knew of his opinion beforehand and also had been told he would order them to pay the plaintiff $5.1 million.

Joe Callihan says he watches the legal maneuvering with interest, but he never filed suit in his son's death.

"We (he and his wife) were so upset we didn't take any action," he said. "We didn't want to and we still don't want to...I'm not interested in suing anybody."

Hinckley: He won't testify in own defense

By LARRY MARGASAK

WASHINGTON (AP) — John W. Hinckley Jr. told the judge in his trial today that he will not testify in his own defense. "It's totally my decision," the presidential assailant said.

Hinckley, accused of shooting President Reagan and three other men, was called to the bench by U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker after Hinckley's chief attorney, Vincent J. Fuller, told the court, "We will not put him (Hinckley) on the stand, your honor."

Parker asked Hinckley: "Mr. Fuller represents that you do not intend to take the stand. Is that correct?"

Hinckley answered quietly: "Yes, sir."

Parker: "You discussed this with Mr. Fuller? This is your decision, not Mr. Fuller's?"

Hinckley: "It's totally my decision."

Parker also ruled that the defense may call two additional psychiatrists for limited questioning. Then, after closing arguments from the defense and prosecution, the judge will give the jury instructions and it will decide the case.

HINCKLEY'S LAWYERS made clear at earlier bench conferences that their client wanted to take the stand, but they advised against it at the time. They never closed the door on the possibility later, however.

Parker had asked opposing lawyers to prepare legal memoranda on whether Hinckley had waived his right to testify when he did not take the stand while the defense was presenting its case.

Hinckley angered Parked on Tuesday by blurting out "You're wrong" at a psychiatrist called by prosecutors.

Parker sharply rebuked Hinckley for his courtroom conduct and vowed, "I don't intend to let it go unnoticed, nor do I intend to see it repeated."

After testimony ended for the day Tuesday, chief prosecutor Roger M. Adelman surprised the courtroom by telling the judge, "Your honor, tomorrow morning we will rest our case."

"What did you say?" asked the startled Parker. "Did I understand you to say there is no more live testimony?"

"That's right," Adelman said.

"WE MAKE these judgments as we go along and we feel that we are in a position where it is prudent to rest our case now."

Adelman had been expected to call two more psychiatrists to rebut the defense contention that Hinckley was insane.

"Well, I'm taken a bit by surprise," said the top defense lawyer, Vincent J. Fuller.

Hinckley has acknowledged shooting four men, including Reagan, on March 30, 1981, but he contends he is innocent by reason of insanity.

The last prosecution witness, prison psychiatrist Sally Johnson, testified Hinckley's reason for shooting the president was not to win the love of actress Jodie Foster.

"You're wrong," Hinckley blurted out, his mouth contorted into a scowl. The comment was not loud enough to be heard by everyone in the courtroom.

MINUTES LATER, as his lawyers were talking with the judge at the bench, Hinckley glared at Mrs. Johnson and mouthed:

"Go to hell. Go to hell." And, "I hate you, you bitch."

Mrs. Johnson turned toward Hinckley for a fleeting moment as a U.S. marshal gestured to defense attorney Judy Miller, who spoke to the defendant to calm him down.

After the jury was dismissed and Hinckley started to leave, the judge said to his bodyguards, "Wait. Bring the defendant back."

Parker said court personnel reported to him that "immediately before the last recess, Dr. Johnson made a statement and you retorted — you responded to it."

"NOW I AM sure you realize that such conduct is not to be condoned," Parker continued. "If you don't, you should.

"I don't intend to let it go unnoticed nor do I intend to see it repeated.

"Do you understand what I'm saying?"

In a weak voice Hinckley responded, "Yes I do."

Mrs. Johnson is a staff psychiatrist at the federal prison at Butner, N.C. She interviewed Hinckley 57 times during the four months he spent there following the shooting.

Until Tuesday, Hinckley greeted her warmly in the courtroom and one defense attorney suggested during cross-examination that the defendant wanted to establish an "ideal friendship" with her.

With the case winding down, Parker told jurors they would be housed in a motel once deliberation begins. They have been allowed to return home nightly since the first day of jury selection April 27.

Byrd says Donovan should take leave of absence

By JAMES H. RUBIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd says Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan, whose alleged ties to organized crime are under investigation, should take a leave of absence "for the best interests of our country."

The West Virginia Democrat said Tuesday on the floor of the Senate that President Reagan should ask Donovan to step down, pending the outcome of the federal investigation.

In a letter to Reagan, Byrd said he wasn't prejudging the case.

"But I do know that the welfare of our great nation must come before the interests of any individual, and therefore think it would be in the best interests of our country for Mr. Donovan to step aside until all the questions about his alleged conduct have been satisfactorily resolved."

Also, Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., said he wants to know more about the White House role in a 1981 investigation by the FBI into Donovan's past. He said he is concerned that the White House may have interfered in the probe.

Moffett is planning to call today for a House resolution seeking administration documents in the Donovan case.

IN ANOTHER development, Leon Silverman, a special federal prosecutor, said he has asked the FBI to investigate whether the killing of Fred Furino, a Teamster Union official, is linked to the Donovan case.

The body of Furino, 52, was found in the trunk of his car in New York City last Friday. He had been shot once in the back of the head.

Furino, a former vice president of Teamsters Local 84 in Fort Lee, N.J., figured as a potential witness in Silverman's investigation into Donovan.

Silverman, a court-appointed special prosecutor, is looking into allegations of mob ties involving Donovan and his former firm, Schiavone Construction Co. of Seacaucus, N.J.

Donovan has repeatedly denied any connections with the underworld. He is in Europe this week, vacationing and addressing an international labor group.

The FBI, which looked into Donovan's past in early 1981 to determine his fitness to be labor secretary in the new Reagan administration, heard charges that he associated with Salvatore Briguglio, a reputed underworld figure who was killed in 1978.

THERE WAS also an allegation that Donovan paid off Briguglio to help rig bids on construction projects.

Furino was an associate of Briguglio, according to the FBI.

The FBI has said it did not substantiate any of the charges. But in early 1981, the FBI turned over to White House counsel Fred Fielding information that it withheld from the Senate Labor Committee which was considering Donovan's nomination.

The Washington Post reported Tuesday that Fielding was given an FBI report dated Jan. 12, 1981, which said Donovan had "close personal and business ties with known La Cosa Nostra figures" and that "this information was corroborated by independent interview of confidential sources."

FBI Director William H. Webster has defended the agency's conduct in providing the material to the White House as proper in such background checks, which are not intended as criminal investigations.

The explanation has failed to satisfy members of Congress, including Moffett. He said he wants to know why Fielding "was passing judgment on the thoroughness of the FBI inquiry, to what degree has the administration influenced the progress of the Donovan probe and equally important, has the executive branch acted to restrict the Senate's (Labor Committee) access to that information."

IN HIS statement calling for Donovan to temporarily relinquish his job, Byrd said, "I want to underscore the extreme urgency which we attached to this matter. The American people must have confidence in the president's Cabinet. These are the individuals who make the day-to-day decisions which affect the lives of all of us."

Chief's trial will start Monday

MUSKOGEE, Okla. (AP) — A U.S. district judge has postponed until Monday the start of testimony in the embezzlement and misappropriation trial of the leader of the Choctaw Nation.

A six-man, six-woman jury was seated Tuesday in the trial of Hollis Roberts, 39, who is accused of mishandling $10,700 in tribal money in 1981.

Federal Judge Luther Bohanon delayed the start of the trial until Monday because of scheduling conflicts on the court docket.

Roberts originally was indicted on four counts, but one was dismissed in preliminary action. He faces two counts of embezzlement of $5,000 each and a $700 misappropriation charge.

The indictments, handed down after a 10-month investigation by the FBI, accuse Roberts of mishandling tribal money between January and March 1981. He has pleaded innocent to the charges.

An end to the 'crisis'

With the surrender of the Argentines Monday evening, the war for the Falkland Islands came to an end. Looking over the statistics of the 74-day undeclared war, one cannot escape the conclusion that it was costly in terms of military equipment and human life.

Was it worth it? In the view of many, war is never "worth it." Viewed from the perspectives of the two nations — Argentina and Great Britain — the battle was a matter of principle. Argentina was attempting to reclaim the islands. Great Britain was acting to protect numerous British subjects living on the islands and part of what remains of the British Empire. Those two nations likely believe the war was worth the price.

There are those who will claim — correctly — that the British "punished" the Argentines in the war. Yes, the British punished the Argentines but were within their rights in doing so. The world should not forget it was Argentina which decided to invade the islands on April 2. That was an act of aggression that must be recognized as such. If Argentina expected it's action to be interpreted as retaliation for the British claim to the islands, it was a belated act. It was, in fact, 149 years late because British rule was established in the Falklands in 1833.

No doubt the British fought so fiercely to regain the islands to show the world Britons will not tolerate such hostility, that force will be countered with violent force. From all reports, the indication was that the British fought bravely and fairly, but with a vengeance. If one can overlook the 1,000 or so casualties in the war (which is, understandably, difficult to do) Great Britain's response to Argentina's aggression was refreshing. The underlying message was "aggression among nations is not to be tolerated — at any cost."

The point was well taken, as Argentina can attest. But now that the shooting has stopped an even greater challenge faces the two nations — negotiating a settlement that will be just and, most of all, lasting. During the past few years it has been illustrated time and again that the 20th Century is not the time for a policy of colonialism. And Great Britain has endured the trials and tribulations associated with defending part of her empire more than a few thousand miles from home.

As negotiations begin, as they should, to bring about a lasting peace in the Falklands, of prime concern should be the future of the islands and their inhabitants. Without a determination of that future and a commitment from all concerned to abide by the future course the Falklands "crisis" will be far from over.

Helms hits the churches

There is still charity in the U.S. Senate. Kindly Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., says that America's churches should do more to feed the poor.

Hungry Americans no doubt agree with the generous gentleman. They also would be happy if the Senate voted for more domestic aid programs.

Religious leaders had testified on the need for food stamps. In response, Helms criticized churches for claiming that they are unable to do more to feed hungry people.

He accused religious leaders of refusing to accept the challenge and preferring to use money for extravagant sanctuaries.

It is true that some religious leaders spend too much for sanctuaries, television ego trips and material goods. But they are in the minority. Most religious leaders are dedicated to serving God and their fellow human beings.

Instead of spending extravagantly, most churches are having financial troubles. Donations are down because of the recession, and they must cut costs despite inflation.

The religious leaders testified that their groups could not meet the problem of hunger. They said that caring for the poor should be "the common responsibility of the community."

Helms suggested that they might hold charitable telethons to raise money.

Another View:

Budget isn't settled

The House has adopted a budget resolution putting itself on record as supporting record peacetime increases in defense spending, substantial cuts in programs for the poor and a deficit in the range of $100 billion next year. This is neither good policy nor a very plausible prediction of the eventual outcome of this year's budget decisions. From the point of view of House members, however, the action serves a useful purpose. It shields them from administration jibes blaming their inaction for the current economic situation.

House and Senate conferees must now meet to reconcile differences in their resolutions. This won't be easy. The Senate resolution calls for almost $20 billion more in spending next year than the House version and a deficit $16 billion higher. Part of this discrepancy comes from a certain amount of flim-flam in the House resolution needed to bring its deficit estimate below the magic $100 billion level. But there are real — and important — differences in the allocation of spending between the two plans.

The Senate, for example, would take much of its savings from curbing government pay and cost-of-living adjustments in pension programs. The House would make smaller reductions in these expenditures — about $14 billion less over the next three years — and instead cut entitlements for the poor and discretionary domestic programs by about $35 billion more over the same period.

The Senate, however, is also under pressure to agree on a budget resolution so as to get its conservative flank in line for the impending vote on raising the debt ceiling. This should bring a relatively speedy splitting of differences with the House — without much attention to what that may imply for subsequent legislative and appropriation actions.

That is why a resolution agreement would be only a temporary lull in the budget battle. A budget resolution, after all, is not a legislated program of spending and taxes. It is, only the dim shadow on the wall of the cave — a faint reflection of a reality yet to be discerned. When the time comes for the House Ways and Means and Senate Finance committees to report out the bills needed to increase taxes and to cut aid to families and the aged — or for the agriculture committees to curb farm supports and food stamps — new fighting can be expected.

The discipline of budget reconciliation can be invoked to try to keep the committees in line, but without the political momentum of last year — and last year's promised sweetner of voting tax cuts to follow — it's not likely that the process will work with last year's precision. Even with last year's discipline, after all, the deficit voted in the budget resolution turned out to be less than a third of the actual deficit for this year.

Congress can take credit for having adhered to the ritual of its set budget procedures at a time when many feared those procedures would disintegrate. It can also feel proud of having done so in the unprecedented circumstance of having — for all intents and purposes — no presidential budget to work from as guidance. But next year's budget is far from settled.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

PLO military chief is Arafat's opposite

WASHINGTON — Salah Khalaf, the 48-year-old, chain-smoking military chieftain of the Palestine Liberation Organization, is "a priest conducting his duties with intense identity with his religious beliefs, but without public acclaim, because it is enough for him to know that acts and accomplishments speak for themselves."

Jack Anderson

This is the conclusion of U.S. intelligence experts who have prepared a psychological profile of the man whose mission is to withstand the Israeli attack on PLO power bases in Lebanon. Yasir Arafat is the PLO's well-publicized "front man," while Khalaf is the group's nuts-and-bolts military strategist.

The personality profile, obtained by my associate Indy Badhwar, provides a marked contrast to Khalaf's opposite number in the Israeli-PLO conflict, Gen. Rafael Eitan, the Israeli chief of staff. At first glance, Khalaf's credentials would seem to be no match for Eitan's gung-ho military background.

But Khalaf is considered by Western intelligence anlaysts as the best the PLO has to offer. And, like Israel's Eitan, he is considered willing to operate in the shadow of Numero Uno. In Eitan's case, the leader he pays obeisance to is Menachem Begin; in Khalaf's case, it is Arafat.

"His style demands that he stay in the shadow of his leader," the confidential profile says of Khalaf. "It is suspected he is less comfortable in the limelight than Arafat, and welcomes the number two spot for its privacy."

Unlike Gen. Eitan, however, Khalaf is regarded by Western intelligence analysts as far more effective than his boss in promoting the PLO cause. This, the confidential profile says, is because "his greater discipline has equipped him for contributing meaningful and precise views of the Palestinian movement, whereas Arafat might shoot from the hip."

Khalaf and Arafat have been buddies since their student days in Cairo. But while Arafat is an inveterate trimmer, always open to compromise to protect his political position, Khalaf is an able and willing decisionmaker, according to the psychological profile.

Where Arafat "hesitates to do anything that will disturb his congeniality with others," Khalaf is blessed — or cursed — with "objectivity and rationality." Though he is every bit as politically savvy as Arafat, the profile concludes that "his more private style makes it less obvious." There is no question that Khalaf is totally dedicated to the Palestinian cause.

He is acutely conscious of his own political skills but applies them "carefully and deliberately," according to the intelligence analysis. And though he is overworked and under constant strain, he seems to welcome this stress as self-ennobling.

One of Khalaf's stronger traits is that he is not wrapped into a narrow political ideology. "Khalaf is not ruthless, but cunning," the intelligence profile states. "He lacks the nihilistic philosophy and, therefore, has not the middle-class Baader-Meinhof behavior" — a reference to the West German rich-kids' terrorist group.

Just as the hard-charging Gen. Eitan seems to be the perfect sidekick for the strong-willed Begin, the able but self-effacing Khalaf seems to be the ideal cohort for the insecure showman, Arafat.

ADVICE FROM DADDY: A few weeks ago, I reported that Environmental Protection Agency boss Anne Gorsuch, in the midst of her personnel cutbacks, had found room on the agency payroll for her live-in, 26-year-old babysitter, Mary Wigginton, at $23,950 a year.

There's a footnote to the story: When Wigginton was first questioned, she put in a hurried call to a consultant in EPA's Denver office for advice. The consultant told her to talk to my office and be completely honest.

As it turns out, the consultant was Wigginton's father, Peter, who was signed on for a 130-day stint with EPA at $129 a day last January. Wigginton pere says he was hired because of his professional experience, not for political reasons. "I am really good," he said. "I know my business."

UNDER THE DOME: United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick has been having a rough time lately. Her feud with Secretary of State Al Haig has been well reported. The other day, when she showed up to testify at the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations, the only senator present was chairman Bob Kasten, R-Wis. Kirkpatrick confided to him that she might not be long for her job, pointing out that the average tenure for U.S. ambassadors at the United Nations has been 18 months, and she's in her 17th month.

— Rep. Phil Crane, R-Ill., suffered a humiliating defeat at the hands of Rutgers University students last March. Invited to speak at the university's Camden campus by three student congressmen, Crane accepted — only to be informed that the full student congress had decided to invite another Illinois Republican instead — former Rep. John Anderson.

— Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., is slyly passing the partisan word on the economy: "Reagan-mortis has set in."

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Genocide charges levelled in Guatemala

WASHINGTON — Human rights activists have embarked on a campaign to convince the United States that Guatemala is trying to exterminate the Indian half of its population.

William Giandoni

They hope to block the perceived plans of the Reagan administration to resume U.S. military aid to the embattled Guatemalan government.

Their allegation, which apparently originated in Nicaragua, is that as many as 3,000 Guatemalan Indians have been killed by the Guatemalan army since March 23. That was the day a coup led by younger army officers ousted the former president, Gen. Romeo Lucas Garcia, and installed a junta headed by Gen. Efrain Rios Montt.

The charge of escalating violence was first voiced in the United States by the Washington Office on Latin America (WOLA), quoting the Committee for Peasant Unity (CUC) of Guatemala as the source of the 3,000 estimate.

A 23-year-old Guatemalan Indian woman, Rigoberta Menchu Tum, who called herself "a revolutionary Christian," repeated it at a conference here June 2 organized by the Council on Hemispheric Affairs and NISGUA, as the National Network in Solidarity with the People of Guatemala prefers to be called.

Oxfam America, a Boston-based group, offered a lower estimate, 500 killed since the coup, but said at a press conference on the occasion of the June 8 release of its 64-page report on political violence in Guatemala that "perhaps" as many as 3,000 peasants may have been slaughtered.

Actually, talk of "genocide" against the Indians originated with Col. Francisco Gordillo Martinez, a member of the Guatemalan government junta, who so termed the various massacres in western Guatemala that he blamed on "the terrorists." Gordillo told newsmen the end of April that "the army is never going to deceive the Indians or kill them because we know that they represent our identity."

The Guatemalan National Revolutionary Unity (URNG) front, based in Managua, Nicaragua first publicly denounced "the barbarous genocide that the coupist junta, with the support of the U.S. government, is carrying out against the Guatemalan people."

That accusation was aired over Managua radio stations May 6, days and weeks before it was picked up in the United States.

The Nicaraguan radio reported that "the URNG said that the military junta that took power in Guatemala in the wake of the March 23 coup has launched a campaign to exterminate the population in extensive sectors of western and northern Guatemala. The razing of villages and hamlets and the burning of woods and planted fields have forced thousands of peasants to seek refuge in the mountains and neighboring towns. This is the result of the mass extermination campaign launched by the Guatemalan coupist junta, the URNG explained," according to the Nicaraguan radio.

U.S. State Department sources say that Guatemalan National Revolutionary Unity is an organization set up at the direction of Cuban President Fidel Castro. URNG brought together the four guerrilla organizations that have been fighting the Guatemalan government for years. Until they signed their proclamation of unity in January 1982, the Guerrilla Army of the Poor (EGP), the Rebel Armed Forces (FAR), the Organization of People in Arms (ORPA) and the Guatemalan Labor Party (PGT), as the communists are known in Guatemala, had not coordinated their attacks on the government.

Almost a week before the first mention of the genocide charge by U.S. human rights groups, Radio Havana accused the Guatemalan junta of "genocide" and estimated "that since Rios Montt's junta rose to power, 3,000 peasants have been killed. ..." That was May 13.

A comparison of the transcript of the Cuban broadcast and the text of the longer Peasant Unity Committee statement that WOLA released May 18 indicates that the Cuban radio broadcaster was working from it in preparing his commentary.

As for the real situation in Guatemala, State Department spokesmen say that the current Guatemalan junta has practically eliminated poltical violence in Guatemala City and other urban areas. The U.S. human rights groups concede the point but claim that "hidden" killings are going on in rural areas.

Rios Montt has said that "a state of war ... which must be dealt with militarily" exists in western Guatemala, even though he decreed an amnesty for those subversives who turn themselves in during the month of June. The Guerrilla Army of the Poor, the largest of the guerrilla groups, rejected the amnesty even before it took effect.

And the fighting goes on, much as it has for over a quarter of a century, since the Marxist Jacobo Arbenz was overthrown in 1954.

Help is needed in Midland, too

To The Editor:

The Tall City Lions Club, Midland Association of Churches and East Midland Task Force of Objectives for Midland are to be given much consideration for sponsoring Mrs. Coretta Scott King's visit to Midland.

The Chamber of Commerce is to be commended for the private reception at the private Ranchland Hills Country Club for this most esteemed black lady, as her husband, the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Nobel Peace Prize winner had a profound effect on these United States bringing about social change through non-violence.

Most certainly we can appreciate those persons who had enough insight to schedule a public address by this lady for the poor people of the city to have the privilege of hearing this black lady speak and after the gala affair at the club extending to her the privilege of joining in the black "Juneteenth festivities."

Dr. Martin Luther King's efforts and death should not be in vain. We should jointly put forth an effort to make his birthday a holiday the same as the other great men of this country. This in my opinion is the greatest homage we could pay him.

Now, let' put things in its proper perspective. The good book, The Holy Bible, says that charity begins at home and spreads abroad. While we do not deny the efforts directed toward the Martin Luther King Center for Non-Violent Social Change in Atlanta are good, I can't help questioning what we are doing to help our people right here in Midland. Are there not monies here that could be directed toward the erection of a Martin Luther King, Jr. community center?

Have we stopped to think about our children who roam the streets (especially during summer months) searching for something to do? Could a center in our neighborhood not only serve the youngsters but the old as well?

When it comes to destructive criticism of our children we can't be beat. Where does the responsibility for the destruction of our children lie? Or can we not admit the truth? Have we forgotten that we were once young and the trials we as poor, black people encountered? If not, how then can we concentrate and put an all out effort in to supporting an effort in Atlanta and fail to help our own here in Midland?

Let us stop and search our motives for supporting this effort. Are we being fair to the children and poor people of Midland? It is only when we try to help our own can we join in the Negro Spiritual which was one of Dr. King's favorites, "Free at last, Free at last, Thank God almighty we're free at last."

Save wilderness

To The Editor:

As a spelunker and professional cave explorer I am worried about the Guadalupe Mountains National Park. I have hiked and backpacked in this park many times. I will never forget the first time I looked upon the Southeastern escarpment of the Guadalupe Mountains and how tall they towered over the rolling hills and salt plains of Texas. I was lucky enough to hike in the Guadalupes when it was a relatively new national park. The trails were rough and rugged and took many back breaking hours to reach the peak.

I am referring to your story that appeared in Sunday, June 6, 1982 edition titled "Guadalupe's tourist trade increasing." I am not one to want to close the parks to the American public, but in your story you mentioned talk of paving the trails and making horse concessions available. How long will it be before the National Park Service puts in a convenience store on the peak and a cable car tramway and amusement rides? Where do you draw the line?

The National Park Service has a dual purpose to protect and preserve the national parks, while at the same time promoting their usage. The story also mentioned making the park more accessible for the less hardy and for the windshield visitors. I mean how can you "rough it" in a recreational vehicle? I say you should leave the Guadalupe Mountains National Park alone. People who want to visit the park should pay the price and pack in and get the most out of it you can. Enjoy the wilderness.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, June 16, the 167th day of 1982. There are 198 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 16, 1963, the first woman space traveler, Valentina Tereshkova, was launched into orbit by the Soviet Union.

On this date:

In 1917, the first All-Russian Congress of the Soviets was convened.

In 1920, the Council of the League of Nations held its first public meeting at St. James Palace in London.

In 1971, the U.S. Senate voted against a plan calling for total American troop withdrawal from Vietnam by the end of the year.

And in 1976, U.S. Ambassador Francis Meloy and his counselor, Robert Waring, were kidnapped and killed in Beirut, Lebanon.

Ten years ago: Writer Clifford Irving was sentenced to two years in jail, and his wife to two months, in connection with Irving's 750-thousand-dollar sale of a bogus Howard Hughes biography to McGraw-Hill.

Five years ago: Communist Party leaders elected Leonid Brezhnev President of the Soviet Union.

One year ago: The Senate approved a measure to provide federal funds for medical treatment for Vietnam veterans exposed to the defoliant Agent Orange.

Virginia company may help UPI modernize news transfer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Amvest Leasing & Capital Corp., a Charlottesville, Va., investment firm, has agreed tentatively to finance the technological modernization of United Press International, according to The Nashville Tennessean.

"We have said that we're reasonable and prudent. We would like to be involved," B. Harrison Turnbull, an Amvest vice president, was quoted as saying in a copyright story in Tuesday's editions.

The company also helped make financial arrangements for a subscription television station in Joliet, Ill., operated by two of UPI's new owners, Douglas Ruhe and William Geissler, The Tennessean said.

Ruhe, Geissler and two other investors — operating as Media News Corp. — bought UPI from the E.W. Scripps Co. June 2. UPI has been losing money consistently for more than a decade, and the new owners have announced plans to convert to satellite delivery of its news report to save costs.

Turnbull said discussions with Ruhe and Geissler on UPI's technological modernization have been under way for several months, but that no concrete financial proposals have been presented yet to Amvest.

The Midland YMCA is offering two sessions of summer camp at Buffalo Trail Council Boy Scout Ranch in the Davis Mountains July 4 through 9 and July 18 though 25 for boys and girls in grades 4 through 8.

The ranch, located just north of Fort Davis, includes many acres of streams, mountains, trees and scenic views.

Stress management taught

The Positive Lifestyle Center at the Central YMCA, 800 N. Big Spring St., will offer a program on stress management for teen-agers.

According to a press release from the Y, the stress of life is inescapable, even for teen-agers. Stress and tension levels increase anytime demands are made upon a person. Siblings, parents, school and peers can bring about stress for teen-agers.

Through the Y's six-hour stress management course, skills such as relaxation and positive self-talk are taught.

The course will meet in three two-hour classes from 1 to 3 p.m., beginning June 22.

For more information call 682-2551.

Weight management offered at Y

The Central YMCA's Positive Lifestyle Center is planning a special pilot weight management program.

Those who are between 30 and 40 years old, are 10 to 25 pounds overweight and have a desire to lose weight and keep it off qualify for this program.

The program will emphasize changing eating patterns and coping with tension or other factors which tend to cause overeating.

There will be a reduced fee for this program, which will be held Fridays from 9 to 10 a.m., beginning June 18. Nursery services are available.

For more information call 682-2551. The class will be limited to 10 people.

Motherhood recovery class beginning

Midland's YMCAs will add a new women's fitness program beginning Monday.

The class, recovery for the new mother and her baby, will meet Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 10 to 11:15 a.m.

Exercises are designed to help regain body alignment, retone stretched muscles and relieve some of the tension in motherhood.

For more information contact the Central Y, 800 N. Big Spring St., 682-2551.

Suddenly, IBM no longer alone in electronic typewriting field

NEW YORK (AP) — When International Business Machines Corp. unveiled an electronic typewriter four years ago, it kept the rotating "golf ball" printer found on its Selectric line — the overwhelmingly dominant force in electric typewriters.

One could hardly fault IBM for keeping a good thing and adding advanced features to it. And initially IBM also dominated the market for electronic typewriters.

But now IBM finds itself surrounded by a host of competitors that, undaunted by IBM's dominance in the electric field, are slicing into its market share in electronic typewriters and challenging IBM's equipment as outdated — particularly its golf-ball printer.

"AT 3M, WE'VE got something on the ball," proclaims a recent advertisement for Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co.'s new line of electronic typewriters, which use a "daisywheel" printer, a flat disc that is considered faster and quieter than the ball.

The Royal Division of Triumph-Adler AG, the West German concern, makes a "sound comparison" in a recent ad that shows IBM's Model 75 electronic going "clickety-clack" while Royal's 5030 — also with a daisywheel — simply goes "hmmmmmm."

And so it goes as the companies scramble for a share of what is soon expected to be a $1 billion chase to replace the estimated 10 million electric typewriters in use in the United States with electronic models.

Electronic typewriters have fewer parts, more advanced features and more reliability than electrics. Many also offer limited memory capacity, which can store 10 to 12 pages of material for later use, and a small display screen above the keyboard.

Several models, such as Xerox Corp.'s Memorywriter, can be upgraded within hours to include the memory functions.

With memory and a display screen, an electronic typewriter begins to resemble a limited word processor — and some industry analysts say that is emerging as a key selling pitch.

"MAJOR COMPANIES ARE looking at electronic typewriters as two prongs: replace the electrics and be able to upscale their typewriters into the low end of word processors," says Clifford M. Lindsey of Dataquest Inc., a market research firm in Cupertino, Calif.

IBM and others will not go that far. Electronic typewriters are "a distinctly separate market" from word processors, which hold and process substantial amounts of information and generally cost several thousand dollars, says Alan J. Macher, a spokesman for IBM's Information Systems group in Rye, N.Y. "Typewriters are significantly lower in price than any level at word processing today."

But the distinction could fade should the prices of word processing components, like other electronic parts, drop further.

Kathryn K. Dillon, an analyst with Gartner Group Inc., a research firm in Stamford, Conn., sees the electronic typewriter market growing about 25 percent to 30 percent annually for the next year or two, "but as the price of word processors continues to come down, it's really going to eat into that market."

Dataquest estimates 210,000 electronic typewriters were delivered in the United States in 1981, bringing the total number to about 400,000 since they arrived in 1978. The firm expects more than 420,000 machines to be delivered this year alone.

Four years ago IBM's U.S. market share in electronic typewriters was 94 percent, but since then — with the market continually expanding — it has fallen to 48 percent, Lindsey says. He notes, however, that IBM shipments still have grown to about 100,000 a year from some 20,000 in 1978.

Ms. Dillon sees IBM's market share remaining dominant but falling to about 35 percent in the next two years.

"IBM has really gotten behind in terms of features," she says. "If they want to protect their market — and we believe that within a year they're going to come out with a higher-end (more advanced) electronic typewriter — they're really going to have to leapfrog the competition, and I'm not sure they can do it."

Deputies find pot in southeast Texas

KOUNTZE, Texas (AP) — Hardin County sheriff's deputies harvested 150 pounds of marijuana Monday found planted in a field off a rural road in Southeast Texas, sheriff H.R. Holzapfel said.

The plants "had already been topped once and they were letting it grow back," he said.

The pot was planted on property owned by St. Regis Paper Co., he said.

Holzapfel said authorities decided to cut down the field — located between the communities of Honey Island and Thicket — rather than waiting until the pot was again ready for harvest.

University students monitor satellite

By JOE WHEELAN

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Until he saw an advertisement in a student newspaper, University of Colorado sophomore Stan Thielke picked up pocket money wiping dishes at the college cafeteria.

Now he's earning $5.50 an hour monitoring an orbiting satellite 335 miles above the Earth.

"This just doesn't compare with where I worked before. I work some strange hours, but I'm learning on the job and it's better than classroom learning," he said.

An electrical engineering and computer science major, Thielke spends 15 to 20 hours a week, at all hours of the day and night, communicating with the Solar Mesosphere Explorer from mission control as it orbits the earth every 90 minutes.

Thielke and 14 other undergraduates have the job of guiding the $17 million, toadstool-shaped bundle of instruments as it collects data on the ozone, the thick envelope of unstable oxygen atoms that screens the Earth from harmful solar ultraviolet rays.

NO OTHER university uses undergraduates to operate a satellite, said Elaine Hansen, mission operations manager at the university's Laboratory for Atmospheric and Space Physics.

The project receives federal money and was organized with the help of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to add to scientists' understanding of how natural forces affect the ozone.

"We've come up with an entirely new approach in mission control, and the most exciting thing is that it is proving to be tremendously successful," Miss Hanson said.

Mission control is a room lit by the fluorescent glow of video display terminals in a cinderblock building on the outskirts of Boulder, with a view of the Rocky Mountains outside.

But Thielke and his schoolmates, supervised by graduate students and scientists, are more concerned with adjusting the Explorer's tilt in space than with their scenic terrestrial view.

"THIS IS it," says aerospace engineering senior Ric Agardy, a command controller. "We're looking at a satellite and experiencing it first-hand. It's exhilarating."

The satellite, built by the Ball Corp. and university scientists, was launched Oct. 6, 1981 aboard a two-stage Delta rocket from Vandenburg Air Force Base, Calif.

It has six instruments that measure natural forces that destroy the ozone as well as the forces that create it. A fan-shaped array of photovoltaic-cell collectors converts the sun's rays into electricity to keep the Explorer soaring through space.

Elizabeth Rank, a University of Colorado student, uses a computer terminal to keep tabs on the Solar Mesosphere Explorer, a satellite that orbits 335 miles above the earth every 90 minutes to collect data on the ozone layer, which screens the earth from harmful solar ultraviolet rays. At left is Paul Willis, a staff member at CU's laboratory for Atmospheric and Space Physics.

"Ozone varies a lot more than anyone expects," Miss Hansen said. "We have found that there is more ozone the further away from the equator you get. We say, 'If you don't want a sunburn, head north.'"

The Explorer circles the Earth pole-to-pole. Its data is transmitted to one of 11 Earth stations operated worldwide by NASA.

THE STUDENT controllers telephone the Earth stations, which stretch from Madrid to the Orroral Valley of Australia, and use a phone hookup to put the data into the mission control computer.

Sara Nabkel, who will graduate next May as an aerospace engineer, says the innovative computer system makes it possible for college students to operate the satellite.

"It takes just two people to monitor because of what the software has been programmed to do," she said.

Miss Hansen says that's why the Solar Mesosphere Explorer is one of the cheapest to operate of all the satellites ever launched.

"It's a Volkswagen," she said. "It's phenomenal."

Lunar eclipse expected July 5-6

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans will get a chance to view a full eclipse of the moon early next month.

The eclipse will occur on the night of July 5-6 and the moon will be totally in shadow for 106 minutes, a length that officials say will not be matched in this century.

A lunar eclipse occurs when the moon, instead of reflecting sunlight, enters the shadow cast by the Earth. It never becomes totally invisible, however, but instead may seem to turn a deep reddish-orange color because of the bending of the sun's rays around the Earth.

This color can vary considerably, depending on the cloudiness of the Earth's atmosphere through which the rays travel on their way to the moon.

For example, in 1963 volcanic dust in the Earth's atmosphere nearly totally obscured the moon from view. And an eclipse in 1968 showed the moon as coppery red in the center and blue-white on the outside edge.

Doctors to soon try nonsurgical test-tube procedure on humans

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Doctors developing a nonsurgical alternative to the test-tube baby procedure say they probably will be ready in a few months to transfer the first fertilized egg from a donor mother to an infertile woman who wants to become pregnant.

The technique, commonly used by cattle breeders, has never been tried on a human, said Dr. John E. Buster, chief of reproductive endocrinology at Harbor-UCLA Medical Center. He said his team has donors and recipients available.

The procedure is still experimental and won't be widely used for several years, he said.

"The principal advantage of this is that it's entirely nonsurgical. The principal drawback is it involves the use of a donor egg," Buster said Tuesday.

With the test-tube baby procedure, he said, "You are subjecting women to surgical and anesthesia risk for a success rate that is quite low."

The test-tube baby procedure results in pregnancy in about 20 percent of all cases, he said.

However, the mother's own egg is fertilized in the test tube and the baby that results carries her genes.

With the new procedure, "she gives that up in order to become pregnant and bear her husband's child," Buster said. But the procedure still fulfills the couple's "basic need — to have a child," he said.

The success rate should be much greater than in the test-tube baby process, he said, partly because the natural birth process is followed closely. Both donor and recipient are monitored until they ovulate at roughly the same time, Buster said.

When both women ovulate, the donor would be artificially inseminated with sperm from the recipient's husband. The egg is successfully fertilized about 30 percent of the time in routine artificial inseminations.

Buster said the fertilized egg drops into the uterus after about four days. Then, before it attaches to the wall of the uterus, it can be removed using a catheter, a hollow tube about the size of a pencil lead.

Checking out companies with Better Business Bureau

DEAR FOLKS:

Today's hint just may save you money and a lot of trouble.

Before you have a chair reupholstered, drapes cleaned, or you mail-order a cookwear set, save yourself a lot of trouble by checking out the company or service with the Better Business Bureau.

Look them up in your phone book, and give them a call...it will take only a few minutes of your time — you don't have to go anywhere or spend money on postage.

The Better Business Bureau is there to help you, and you can help them too.

If you have a complaint about a local company that cleaned your carpet and ruined it, or a roofing firm that fixed your roof and it still leaks or a product that doesn't work or live up to it's advertised reputation, let the B. B. B. know.

The only way we can all help each other is for each of us to do our part.

The B.B.B. is funded by local businesses, not by the government. When you see a sign in a window that says a firm or store is a member, you can be sure that you can count on them to do their best job. — Heloise

HINTS FROM HIM

Dear Heloise: As a college student living off campus I would like to share some of my laundry hints:

Before leaving the apartment I sort my laundry and pre-measure the laundry soap, putting it into plastic bags (no big box to lug back and forth).

As the clothes are finishing the drying cycle, I hang up all shirts, pants, etc., thus never have to iron them. All other items are folded at the laundromat, which means there is less chance that they will sit in the middle of my floor until the next wash day.

Since the laundromat is a little too loud for studying, I spend my time there writing home to Mom and Dad, which sure does make them happy. — A.M. Seward

+ + +

I'm sure it does, and I'll bet it makes your Mom happy to know how efficiently you do your own laundry.

Sometimes that's the only time the kids come home — when they run out of something clean to wear.

You're a luv! — Heloise

LETTER OF LAUGHTER

Dear Heloise: When...
It's a little too little to save
And a little too much to dump.
There's nothing to do but eat it,
And that makes the housewife plump...— Stella McVey

+ + +

That's too true to be funny, but I laughed anyway. — Heloise

PRETTY PANCAKES

Dear Heloise: My mother is a very loving grandmother to my children. Once, while my 4-year-old son was visiting her for a few days, she asked him what he would like for breakfast. Of course, it was pancakes.

She always adds a little vanilla for flavoring. On this particular morning she didn't have on her glasses and picked up the red food coloring by mistake.

It was too late when the drops hit the batter, so she went ahead and made the pancakes, feeling stupid.

But to her surprise my son thought they were great! Only his grandmother could make RED pancakes.

Now it's a firmly established tradition at Grandma's. — Debbie Thate

+ + +

Aren't grandmothers really special! — Heloise

SHOWER CAPS

Dear Heloise: Don't discard that old plastic shower curtain or tablecloth. Instead, cut circles out of any good parts and use them to make shower caps.

Place a narrow length of elastic around your head, pull it as snugly as you like, then add to this measurement about one half inch for seam allowance.

Stitch the elastic to the circle of plastic, about one-half inch from the edge. Almost-for-free shower caps. — Blanche Grady

Recycling is one way to save money. If you have a good idea, send it to Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216. She can't answer your letter personally but she will use the best money-saving hints in her column.

DEAR ABBY

Boy plays doctor, gets painful review from mom

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: At a recent family reunion, my six-year-old nephew was caught by his mother playing "doctor" with his five-year-old female cousin. She punished him by painting his genitals with Mercurochrome and forcing him to sit nude in front of all the relatives while they made fun of him.

Everything seems to be OK with the boy and mother at the moment, but the consensus among the half-dozen or so people to whom I have told this story is that the kid will be "emotionally scarred for life."

If so, I feel that I am an accomplice to it inasmuch as I permitted my nephew to be put on display and ridiculed. Is there anything I can do for the boy beyond some sincere praying? — HIS UNCLE IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR UNCLE: The chances of your nephew being "emotionally scarred for life" are small. But if he seems affected by that humiliating experience, you can assure him that almost all kids play "doctor" out of natural curiosity, and he committed no serious crime. Add, too, that he should not repeat the deed.

And you can tell the boy's mother that for her to have punished her son in that humiliating manner was both cruel and unfeeling.

DEAR ABBY: You used the phrase "gild the lily" in responding to someone who asked if one need send written thanks for a thank-you bouquet.

Abby, the correct quote is: "To gild refined gold, to PAINT the lily." Then it does on to say, "To throw a perfume on the violet, to smooth the ice, or add another hue unto the rainbow ... is wasteful and ridiculous excess" (from Shakespeare's "King John").

It's a shame to see that lovely phrase misused. — PATTI THE PURIST

DEAR PATTI: Sorry. I've been saying "gild the lily" ever since I can remember. I undoubtedly picked it up from another "gildy" party.

DEAR ABBY: I have exactly the same problem as "Macho Man," the 23-year-old man who can't seem to grow a respectable-looking moustache. He said he has tried many times to grow one, and he always gets disgusted and shaves it off because it grows in so sparse it looks ridiculous.

You told him to buy a false one at a "hair goods" store. Well, that would be out of the question for me, because everyone would know it was pasted on, and that would be worse than not having any moustache at all.

I am 27 years old and do not have any facial hair. I mean nothing — nada! Could I possibly have a hormone imbalance? Maybe so, because the rest of my body is also hairless. And get this — I am a full-blooded Italian, and Italians are noted for their hairiness. Am I normal? Or should I see a doctor about hormones? — HAIRLESS

DEAR HAIRLESS: An examination by an endocrinologist might put you at ease, but if your only problem is the absence of facial hair, and you are otherwise healthy, to worry about "hormonal imbalance" would be a bare-faced shame.

DEAR ABBY: I had to laugh when I read about the "cruel" husband who gave his wife $50 and told her to go buy what she wanted for Mother's Day. What is she complaining about?

My husband once gave me a wheelbarrow for Mother's Day so I could clean the garden better.

Another Mother's Day he gave me a ladder so I could shovel the snow off the roof.

I'm 73 years old and I'm not complaining. I'm still using both the wheelbarrow and the ladder. — SUSAN ANDERSON, BEMIDJI, MINN.

Microwave cooking makes summertime easy

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

Summertime and celebration seem to be synonymous in this season of balmy nights and reckless days. It is also a splendid time to lean on the microwave for most of your cooking. When the heat's on outdoors it's nice to play it cool in the kitchen, because a microwave generates no warmth while it works. What better companion to help you throw a summer feast with friends, this being an opportune time for a fair-weather get-together?

If you plan to throw a bash sometime in the near future, you can save a lot of time and hassle during the party by fixing most of your fare beforehand. Since actual cooking requires only minutes, sometimes seconds in a microwave oven, the most time-consuming steps include pre-cooking preparation. Items involved are easily frozen (be sure to label them). You can fit an entire party in your freezer. The possibilities are amazing.

When barbecuing under starry skies, it is still possible to employ the microwave for a better-tasting outcome. Microwave-cook chicken pieces or thick cuts of meat until partially done, then finish them on the grill. Retaining moistness, the barbecue will lend a delightful charcoal flabor without drying the meat. If your bowl of chips, pretzels or crackers have been gracing the table too long, crisp the soggy ones by heating for 15 to 20 seconds, then let stand for two minutes.

"Theme parties" are amusing and no one is left wondering what to appear in. Be it toga or black tie, your meals are sure to be a hit, augmenting any occasion. And with the time saved by microwave cooking, you'll be free to don the lampshade as well.

'Lemon Chicken' different way to prepare chicken

By ROSE DOSTI
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

DEAR SOS: Fung Lum's restaurant in Universal City, Calif., serves a delicious Lemon Chicken. I am sure your readers would enjoy this. — MRS. G.B.

DEAR MRS. G.B.: We are sure, too.

FUNG LUM'S LEMON CHICKEN

1 pound boneless chicken, cut in julienne strips.
1 egg, lightly beaten
3 drops sesame oil
Cornstarch
Salt
Dash black pepper
Peanut oil for deep frying
Water
2 tablespoons white wine vinegar
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1-3 cup sugar
2 drops lemon extract

Combine chicken, egg, 2 drops sesame oil, 3 teaspoons cornstarch, 2 teaspoons salt and pepper until chicken pieces are coated and ingredients are blended. Deep fry at 400 degrees in peanut oil until browned. Drain chicken on paper towels. Cut into smaller pieces. Keep warm while preparing lemon sauce.

Blend together 1-2 cup water, wine vinegar, lemon juice, sugar, lemon extract, remaining 1 drop sesame oil and dash salt in wok or small saucepan. Heat to boiling. Blend together 1 tablespoon water and 1 tablespoon cornstarch until smooth. Stir into lemon mixture. Heat and stir until smooth and clear. Pour sauce over chicken and serve. Makes 1 to 2 servings.

DEAR SOS: About 20 years ago my father used to make a casserole that I would love to have the recipe for. It was a tuna-noodle casserole with bread crumbs on top. — BARBARA

DEAR BARBARA: This may not be exactly the same as your father's recipe, but it's close.

COMPANY TUNA AND MACARONI CASSEROLE

2 cups elbow macaroni
2 cups sliced celery
3 quarts boiling salted water
1 (4-ounce) can sliced mushrooms
1 (10 34-ounce) can Cheddar cheese soup
1-2 cup milk
1-2 teaspoon ground marjoram
Red pepper
1 (7-ounce) can chunk tuna, drained
1 tomato, sliced
1-4 cup fine dry bread crumbs
2 tablespoons butter or margarine, melted

Cook macaroni and celery in boiling salted water 10 minutes. Drain and set aside. Drain mushrooms, reserving liquid. Combine liquid with soup, milk, marjoram and dash red pepper. Mix well. In buttered 2-quart casserole arrange alternate layers of macaroni and celery mixture, mushrooms, tuna chunks and soup mixture. Cover casserole and bake at 350 degrees 20 minutes, then remove cover. Top with sliced tomato. Combine bread crumbs and melted butter. Sprinkle tomatoes with buttered bread crumbs. Return to oven or place under broiler to brown crumbs. Makes 6 servings.

DEAR SOS: Some years ago I enjoyed a beautiful and delicately flavored preserve made with rose petals. I have searched everywhere for the recipe. Can you oblige? — NANCY

DEAR NANCY: Rose Petal Jam is a lovely way to use tender young rose petals from a pesticide-free garden.

ROSE PETAL JAM

Rose petals
2 cups boiling water
3 cups sugar
2 tablespoons honey
1 teaspoon lemon juice
Red food color, optional

Gather red, strong-scented roses or mixture of colors when fully open and fresh. Do not use old, bruised roses. Remove choice petals gently and rinse carefully in lukewarm water. Remove white petal ends, cut petals into 1-4 -inch strips. Pack firmly into measuring cup to measure 2 cups. Place measured petals in saucepan and cover with boiling water. Bring to boil. Reduce heat and simmer 10 minutes or until petals are tender. Strain, reserving petals and liquid.

Add sugar and honey to liquid in which petals were cooked and simmer uncovered until syrup reaches 220 degrees on candy thermometer, about 30 minutes. Add petals and simmer about 40 minutes longer. Add lemon juice and simmer 30 minutes longer. If color is too pale, add a few drops of food color. Pour hot into sterilized small jelly glasses, leaving 1-8 -inch head space. Adjust lids. Sterilize in boiling water 10 minutes. Makes about 2 glasses.

Only recipes of general interest will be printed. We are unable to answer all requests. Please include restaurant address when requesting recipes from restaurans. Brewing perfect coffee requires care, preparation

By HARVEY STEIMAN
Hearst Feature Service

The road to a perfect cup of coffee is not smooth. At every step, the enemy is staleness. More and more coffee lovers are grinding their beans just before brewing — a big help — but the missing link is to have freshly roasted beans.

As every coffee nut knows, green (unroasted) beans keep forever, but roasted beans start going stale as soon as they cool off. A difference in flavor becomes clear to sensitive palates within a week. Within three weeks, the quality of the coffee is obviously impaired.

THE EASIEST ANSWER is to visit your friendly coffee roaster regularly. If you buy whole beans from stores that keep them around in bins and jars, most of the time you are dealing with beans that have already begun to go stale. In a store with light traffic in coffee, it is not uncommon for such beans to be weeks — or months — old.

The hottest device on the coffee horizon is an honest-to-goodness, really truly, swear-to-God home coffee roaster.

HOME COFFEE ROASTING devices have been around for years. They used to be expensive. All required someone to stand there cranking a handle, stirring the beans to keep them roasting evenly. None of them produced the kind of rich, robust, evenly browned beans you could buy from a commercial coffee roaster.

There are two new devices, both of which work on the same principle, that are relatively inexpensive and simple. They resemble a flat pan with holes punched in the bottom. Raw beans are poured into the pan in a single layer and roasted in a preheated oven for 12 to 20 minutes, depending on how dark a roast you like. Then they are shaken in the pan over a sink to remove the chaff — a feathery skin that dries up like autumn leaves and floats away into the air when the pan is shaken.

One variation is the Palani Plantation Coffee Roaster, designed by Frank Elevitch, a Palo Alto, Calif., physician whose background is in medical testing. The other device, the Swiss Home Coffee Roaster, is the brainchild of San Franciscan Murray Jaffe.

Jaffe admits that the home coffee roaster is Elevitch's "original concept." At one point, Elevitch and Jaffe worked together on a version, but came to a parting of the ways several months ago.

"I'm a businessman," Jaffe says. "I charge ahead."

Elevitch first designed a top-of-the-stove stationary coffee roaster that required no stirring. It sold at retail for $40. Or rather, it didn't sell. "We encountered some price resistance," he admits.

THE ORIGINAL $40 coffee roaster looked like a saucepan with the bottom sawed off. A perforated metal plate was suspended an inch or so from the top of the pot. The lid had a hole in the middle.

"The idea was to have a chimney effect," Elevitch explains. "The lid helped reflect heat back onto the beans, and by drawing hot air up past the coffee beans through the chimney, I found they would roast evenly."

Elevitch started tinkering with an aluminum pie plate. He found that by punching holes in the bottom of the plate, he could create a device that roasted coffee properly.

By punching through the pie plate, the jagged edges of the hole that extend downward create more than 600 tiny chimneys, Elevitch claims. It also worked in an oven, not on top of the stove. The inexpensive, stationary coffee roaster was born.

While traveling in Switzerland, Jaffe saw a piece from a food dryer that looked like a solid aluminum cake pan with a perforated bottom. He thought it might make a good coffee roaster. Jaffe arranged to import and sell them as The Swiss Home Coffee Roaster, a purpose for which no one envisioned the device in Switzerland.

JAFFE'S DEVICE HAS NO chimneys extending downward, but he says the critical factor is simply that the beans be arranged in one layer.

"You could take window screen, turn up the edges, put a single layer of beans on it and put it in the oven, and they will roast — but not as evenly as they would on a perforated metal pan. I came up with something more permanent than a metal screen or a foil pan."

Elevitch's foil Palani Coffee Roasters sell for $1 apiece, or $10 for four roasters packaged with a solid metal support ring. He says each roaster can be used 15 or 20 times before it must be discarded (the foil starts to soften).

"It's important to blast the coffee with hot air in the first few minutes to dry it out before it begin to brown. The high sides tend to hold the moisture in and the beans don't roast, they bake. They come out slightly sour."

Jaffe's Swiss Home Coffee Roaster sells for $15. He says it will last a lifetime, and refers to the Palani roasters as "disposable."

Both pans, as our taste tests showed, roast good coffee.

On cooking steaks

By MERLE ELLIS

There are almost as many theories on how best to cook a steak as there are backyards, briquets and barbecue buffs combined, and if you have found the "perfect" way, don't let me talk you out of anything. But if your steaks come out dry on occasion and your backyard feasts sometimes border on fiascos, perhaps I can help. Considering the price of a good steak these days, no one can afford a fiasco.

With very few old-fashioned exceptions, most cookbooks recommend broiling, barbecuing or grilling a steak so-many-minutes on one side, then turning it and giving it an equal so-many-minutes on the other side. I don't know who first came up with this "turn it only once" philosophy of steak cookery, but I'd be willing to bet that it has loused up more good meat than mustard and catsup combined.

Have you ever taken a moment from the cocktails and conversation that seem always to accompany barbecuing a good thick steak to watch what's going on on the grill? If you do, you'll notice that little beads of moisture accumulate on the top of the steak as it cooks. Those, folks, are juices — good juicy juices.

Heat forces them to the uncooked surface of a steak. If you let a thick steak sizzle over the coals for a full half of its required cooking time, a good-sized little puddle of delicious, nutritious, juicy juices will accumulate on top. Then, when you turn the steak "only once" after half the cooking time, what do you do? You dump all those good juices onto the coals in one big sizzle!

What a waste!

You'll keep more of those good juices in the meat where they belong if you turn the steak occasionally while it's cooking. That sort of confuses the juices; they start to rise to the top, but before they get there, you turn the steak and they have to change course.

Turn the steak every four or five minutes as it cooks and you'll have one filled with delicious (though perhaps frustrated) juices. A steak one and a half to two inches thick will require 20 to 25 minutes to cook medium rare.

Before you toss a steak on the grill, trim off as much of the excess fat as you can. Fat is an absolute necessity in a good flavorful steak, but it has already made its contribution before it gets to the barbecue. If you leave it on it's going to melt into the coals and cause flare-ups. That causes smoke and the whole thing gets messy, so trim off the excess fat. Then make little slits in the edges every inch or so to keep the meat from curling as it cooks.

No matter what you do, you're bound to have to contend with flare-ups. They're just part of the barbecue scene. I've found a great way to deal with them. Go to the plant store or wherever you go for your greenthumb things and buy a brass atomizer used to spray a fine mist on plants. Fill it with water and keep it handy when you're barbecuing. It puts out a nice fine spray that will put down a flare-up without putting out the fire.

Study suggests caution should be used in cooking with microwave

By DANIEL P. PUZO
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

More than 18 months ago a Purdue University research team found that disease-causing bacteria survived in turkey cooked in a microwave oven, yet the results of the report were never released to the public until last week.

The tests showed that three different strains of bacteria survived in turkeys prepared in a microwave to commonly recommended times and temperatures. Of the 36 turkeys infected with strains of either salmonelia, clostridium perfringens or staphylococcus, 27 still had some of the bacteria remaining when the microwave cooking process was completed.

THE THREE BACTERIA are the major sources of food-borne diseases that commonly affect the gastrointenstinal tract causing problems including stomach cramps, diarrhea, vomiting and, in some cases, death.

In fact, microwave ovens may be so inadequate in destroying bacteria potentially present in turkeys that the report's authors urge that consumers refrain from cooking turkey in the microwave until further tests are conducted.

The survival of bacteria and other disease-causing organisms is linked to the uneven cooking process of microwave units. The ovens work by bombarding foods with microwaves. However, the microwaves are unevenly distributed throughout the food, and cold spots are created where bacteria can survive.

THE PURDUE RESEARCH project was funded by the National Turkey Foundation of Reston, Va., which received a report of the findings in December 1980. The U.S. Department of Agriculture was also informed about bacteria's survival in turkey prepared in the microwave, according to Karen Jamesen, assistant professor of food science at Purdue, who co-authored the report with Bala Swaminathan.

Neither the USDA nor the National Turkey Federation issued any public warning about cooking turkey in a microwave after being informed of the Purdue work.

A USDA spokesman said the agency did not feel the Purdue research was scientifically noteworthy and that the public was generally informed about cooking meats in the microwave, especially after a problem with pork surfaced last year. At that time, government researchers discovered that trichinae worms, which cause trichinosis, survived when pork was partially heated in a microwave and then cooked by other means. The USDA responded by issuing guidelines for safely cooking pork in the microwave.

"We (the USDA) didn't think the Purdue study was remarkable or worth informing the public about," said Dr. Jack Leighty, director of pathology and epidemiology at USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service. "When we issued a statement on trichinae in microwave pork, we indicated that disease-causing organisms can survive in food cooked in microwave ovens."

LEIGHTY BELIEVES that turkey prepared in a microwave to an internal temperature of 170 degrees F. would effectively destroy all bacteria and organisms. However, there is no way of guaranteeing that the entire bird has reached a particular temperature in a microwave because of the prevalence of cold spots.

A representative of the National Turkey Federation believes the recent release of the Purdue report is untimely considering that more research needs to be done on the subject. Unfortunately, the funding for any additional work is unavailable at this time.

In the meantime, the federation suggests that consumers cook turkey in the microwave according to manufacturers' instructions. But the original reason for the Purdue research project was to determine the best way of preparing turkey in the microwave because of the many conflicting recommendations in cookbooks and manufacturer's instruction booklets.

"We are concerned about the microbiology of turkey cooked in the microwave," said Lew Walts, executive vice president of the National turkey Federation. "We are not in the position to recommend any cooking times or wattages for cooking turkeys in the microwave."

Quick, easy gumbo can also be simmered for more flavor

By MARTHA M. HAMILTON
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

OYSTER GUMBO

2 pieces of bacon, cut in pieces
1 medium onion, chopped
1 clove garlic, minced
1 hot pepper, chopped (substitute few dashes hot pepper sauce)
28-ounce can tomatoes
1-2 to 1 cup fresh or frozen okra, chopped
Bay leaf
1-4 teaspoon thyme
1 pint oysters
Salt and pepper to taste

Cook the bacon until enough fat is rendered to grease the pot, then add the onion and garlic and pepper. I usually chop up a jalapeno or serrano pepper, depending on what is in the refrigerator. How far you go on that score depends on your tolerance for hot food. Add the tomatoes, and when the gumbo comes to a boil add the okra, the spices and the oysters.

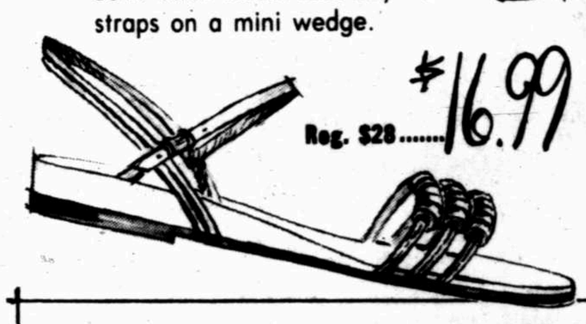

The gumbo would probably be edible in 15 minutes, but 30 minutes is better.

If you have leftover ham, use that instead of bacon but add a little bacon grease in which to cook the onion, garlic and pepper.

Mexican food may be cooked in microwave

By BARBARA HANSEN
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

The microwave oven is a long way from such traditional Mexican cooking appliances as the wood-fired oven or the clay comal set on stones over a fire.

However, many Mexican dishes can be prepared successfully in the microwave, as demonstrated by Claudette Harshberger in her bilingual cookbook, "The Way of the Microwave." ("Como Trabaja el Microonda" is the Spanish title.)

Harshberger wrote the book to fill a gap. No material on microwave cooking was available in Spanish, she said. Therefore, she has included basic information on how the microwave works and how to use it along with the recipes.

Many of the recipes are Mexican. But there also are dishes such as rumaki, Oriental chicken cashew, stuffed mushrooms, chicken divan, scalloped potatoes and macaroni and cheese.

Harshberger suggests following the minimum cooking time given, then cooking the dish further if necessary. A dish can always be cooked longer, she noted, but if overcooked may become inedible.

"The Way of the Microwave" is a 107-page spiral-bound book with recipes side by side in Spanish and English. It can be ordered by sending $7.89 to pan Productions, P.O. Box 72, Coronado, Calif. 92118.

As a preview, try the following recipes:

CAMARONES AL MOJO DO AJO
(Garlic Shrimp)

1-4 pound butter
6 cloves garlic, minced
2 teaspoons capers
1 tablespoon lemon juice or white wine
Salt, pepper
1 pound shrimp, shelled

Place butter in 10-inch dish and microwave on HIGH 1 minute. Stir garlic, capers and lemon juice into butter and season to taste with salt and pepper. Add shrimp in an even layer. Cover with wax paper. Microwave on HIGH 3 to 5 minutes, stirring after 2 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

ARROZ MEXICANO
(Mexican Rice)

2 teaspoons minced parsley
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup chopped fresh or canned tomatoes, with juice
1 (8 1-2 -ounce) can green peas

Place chiles and water in small glass measure and microwave on HIGH 2 minutes. Drain chiles, reserving liquid. Mince chiles. In 4-quart measure, combine chiles, oil, garlic, onion, green pepper and rice. Stir to coat rice with oil. Cover with plastic wrap and microwave on HIGH 5 minutes. Stir. Cover again and microwave on HIGH 2 minutes.

Place chicken broth in 2-quart container and bring to boil. Microwave on HIGH 5 minutes. Add reserved chili liquid, parsley, salt, tomatoes and chicken broth to rice mixture. Stir. Cover and microwave on MEDIUM HIGH 15 minutes. Stir. Microwave on MEDIUM HIGH 5 minutes longer. Remove from oven, add peas, cover and let stand 5 minutes before serving. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

ENCHILADAS CON QUESO
(Cheese Enchiladas)

1 1-2 cups shredded Jack cheese
1 (4-ounce) can green chiles, diced
1 green onion, chopped
6 corn tortillas
2 cups Enchilada Sauce
1 cup grated sharp Cheddar cheese
1-2 cup sour cream

Combine Jack cheese, green chiles and onion, mixing well. Stack tortillas on paper towel, cover with another paper towel and microwave on HIGH 30 seconds. Dip each tortilla in heated Enchilada Sauce. Place 1-2 cup filling in a line in center of each tortilla. Roll up and place seam side down in 9-inch square glass baking dish. Pour remaining sauce over enchiladas and microwave on HIGH 8 to 9 minutes. Sprinkle sharp cheese over enchiladas, garnish with mounds of sour cream and microwave on HIGH 1 minute. Makes 6 enchiladas.

Note: 1 (14 1-2 -ounce) can chicken broth can be substituted for water and bouillon cubes. Heat broth before adding remaining ingredients.

LIVING TODAY

Say "Cheese!": June is National Dairy Month

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent for Home Economics

Cheese has been one of the most popular nutritious foods for people from the high Himalayas to the Sahara region. According to legend, cheese was "discovered" thousands of years before Christ by a traveler who placed milk into a pouch made of a sheep's stomach to carry with him. During the journey, the sun's heat and the enzymes in the lining of the stomach pouch changed the milk into curds of cheese and whey.

Varieties of modern cheeses are known by more than 2,000 names; however, some differ only slightly. The varieties range from soft to hard, and in flavor from mild to sharp.

Many similar cheeses are named for the localities where first produced. For example, cheese with visible veins of blue-green mold was named roquefort because it was made in the village of Roquefort, France. In Italy, a similar cheese was named for the town of Gorgonzola and in England for the town of Stilton. French roquefort is made from ewe's milk in the Roquefort region, while bleu cheese is made from other than ewe's milk elsewhere in France. In the United States and Canada it is blue cheese.

In the U.S. prior to 1851 cheese was made on farms for the family or for local sale. Cheese-making changed from a family art of an industrial operation in Rome, N.Y., where the first factory was built to produce cheddar cheese. American cheese makers have successfully made all types of cheeses, and have created distinctive, original domestic varieties such as brick, colby and mopterey.

CHEESE MAKING

The product obtained by draining the whey after coagulating the casein in milk is cheese, whether fresh or matured. Casein (milk protein) is coagulated by acid obtained from microorganisms or by milk-clotting enzymes added to milk. The resulting curd is cubed, cut, heated, drained and salted. Fresh (uncured) cheese, such as cottage and cream, can be eaten immediately. Drained curds may be "knitted" or "stretched" prior to salting, and this manupilation of the curd affects the final texture of the cheese.

Ripening of the curd includes exposure to temperature-humidity controlled environment. Changes during curing are brought about by specially selected enzymes, bacteria, mold, yeast, or combinations of these. During curing, nutrients, such as protein, fat and carbohydrates are changed to simpler compounds that reduce the characteristic flavor and contribute to the final texture of the cheese.

Different types of cheese are made from various kinds or combinations of milk, such as cottage cheese from skim milk and cheddar from whole milk.

READ LABELS

Cheese is a concentrated source of many of the nutrients of milk, and nutrition information is often provided on the wrapper or container as a service to consumers by the cheese mheufacturers.

The composition of cheese is governed by the definitions and standards of identity specified by the Food and Drug administration. Federal definitions and standards of identity define the food by specifying:

—The ingredients used (including kind and quantity of optional ingredients).

—Composition (maximum moisture and minimum percentage of fat in solids or total mass).

—Requirements concerning pasteurization of milk or an alternate minimum ripening period.

—Production procedures, and any special requirements peculiar to a variety or class of cheese.

COOKING WITH CHEESE

Cheese dishes should be cooked at a low temperature for a short time. Excessive heat and overcooking cause fat separation, stringing and toughening of the cheese.

STORAGE RECOMMENDATIONS

Hard cheese such as cheddar, swiss and parmesan may be kept for several weeks. Soft cheese such as cream, cottage, neufchatel, fresh ricotta, brie and camembert are highly perishable and should be used wthin days after purchase.

Cheese should be refrigerated at 35 to 40 degrees Farenheit. Cut surfaces should be covered tightly with foil or plastic wrap to protect the surface from drying out. Strong-smelling cheeses should be stored in tightly-covered refrigerator jars.

For most distinctive flavor, cheese should be served at room temperature, except for cream, cottage and neufchatel, which should be chilled when served.

FREEZING RECOMMENDATIONS

Pieces of cheese larger then one-half pound should be cut into smaller pieces and tightly wrapped before freezing. Use moisture-proof paper to prevent evaporation. The original package, if airtight, may be used for freezing smaller pieces of cheese. Freeze quicking at zero degrees Farenheit or lower. Slow thawing in a refrigerator is recommended.

Chicken sandwiches fitting for a picnic

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

When I was young, chicken salad sandwiches were packed into picnic baskets. Everyone looked forward to them, everyone enjoyed them. However, in recent years there have been warnings about the safety of taking this old-time favorite to outings.

Well, there's some good news. If you handle the chicken as suggested in the following recipe, use commercial mayonnaise and store the sandwiches in an insulated container, they'll make safe eating. Interestingly enough, according to a recent study at the University of Wisconsin's Food Research Institute, the salt and high acid content in commercial mayonnaise help retard spoilage.

CHICKEN SALAD SANDWICHES

2½-to 3-pound chicken
2 cups water
1 small onion, sliced
2 celery tops
Salt and pepper
¾ cup commercial real mayonnaise
4-ounce can chopped hot green chilies, drained (½ cup) or more if desired
¾ cup finely chopped celery
2 tablespoons finely chopped red onion
14 slices whole wheat bread

In a large saucepot, over high heat, bring to a boil the chicken, water, sliced onion, celery tops, ½ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Simmer, covered, until fork-tender — 1 hour. Remove chicken from broth. Strain broth and store in refrigerator for use another time (use within 2 to 3 days.) Cover and refrigerate chicken.

When chicken is cool, remove and discard bones and skin. Finely chop chicken — there should be about 3 cups. In a medium bowl stir together the mayonnaise, chilies, ¼ teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Add the chicken, chopped celery and red onion; stir until well mixed. Chill thoroughly. Spread about ½ cup of the chicken mixture on each of 7 bread slices; top with remaining bread slices. Wrap sandwiches individually in plastic or wax paper. Pack in a sandwich container. Chill until ready to pack for picnicking. Carry to picnic in an insulated container.

Makes 7 sandwiches.

Make-ahead Cocoa Chiffon Roll

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

You can make it ahead and store it in the refrigerator for a few days.

1-3rd cup cocoa
1-3rd cup boiling water
¾ cup sifted cake flour
¾ cup granulated sugar
1½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar
¼ cup salad oil
4 large eggs, separated
½ teaspoon vanilla
Confectioners' sugar
chocolate frosting

Stir together the cocoa and water until smooth; reserve. In a medium bowl sift together the flour, ¼ cup of the granulated sugar, the baking powder and salt; make a well in the middle and add the reserved cocoa mixture, oil, egg yolks and vanilla; beat until smooth. In a large bowl beat the egg whites and cream of tartar until soft peaks form; gradually beat in the remaining ½ cup sugar until stiff peaks form. Add the flour mixture and fold in until blended. Turn into a 15 by 10 by 1-inch jellyroll pan lined with wax paper. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — about 15 minutes. Turn out on a sheet of wax paper generously sprinkled with confectioners' sugar; roll up from the short end in the paper. Cool completely. Unroll; spread with chocolate frosting; roll up

Refreezing seafood

By MINNIE BERNARDINO
Los Angeles Times - Washington Post News Service

Q: I would like some information on the safety of freezing leftover gumbo. If the gumbo is made with crab or shrimp that was purchased frozen, is it safe to freeze it again? If so, how long can it be stored before use again?

A: It's true, there are some dangers in refreezing seafood or any other food item but only if the food had been allowed to sit at room temperature to thaw completely. Microorganism growth will have increased and refreezing will not destroy these microorganisms.

In the case of your gumbo, the frozen crab and shrimp were cooked to kill any bacteria present and unless the dish was left to stand at room temperature for several hours after being cooked, it is perfectly safe to freeze it as an entirely new cooked dish. The only problem that might arise is the loss of texture in the seafood (it will turn tough and dry) when the gumbo is reheated. The dish should be frozen as soon as possible and used within one to two months.

Q: What are sweetbreads? A friend said that they are the same as pancreas but I have always thought that sweetbreads are in the upper part of the animal's body. Can you please clear up this matter? Also, how are sweetbreads prepared for cooking? I heard they have to be blanched prior to cooking, is this necessary?

A: The true sweetbreads are the double-lobed th mus gland of young animals (the gland disappears with maturity) consisting of the large smooth heart sweetbread and the smaller, more irregular throat sweetbread. The more commonly available are the veal sweetbreads which are milky-white, finely grained with a rich delectable flavor. Sweetbreads are often confused with the pancreas gland; some people call these sweetbreads or beef breads but even though they resemble true sweetbreads and can be prepared like them, they have a stronger flavor and are coarser in texture.

As sweetbreads are highly perishable, they should be served within 24 hours and stored in the refrigerator or quickly frozen. To prepare for cooking, rinse the glands in cold running water then soak for about 1 1-2 hours in cold acidulated water (1 quart mixed with 1 tablespoon lemon juice or vinegar). Drain and peel off the thin transparent membrane from the glands. If there are still some membrane left, the sweetbreads may be resoaked in the acidulated water, rinsing a few times.

Blanching tends to remove some of the rich delicate flavor of sweetbreads but it makes them easier to handle by firming them up. For creaming, sauteing, frying, or broiling, sweetbreads may be blanched, but for braising them whole, you may skip the blanching.

Soviet officials tune in to 'The Godfather'

By BRYAN BRUMLEY

MOSCOW (AP) — The video revolution is coming at last to the Soviet Union, providing the ruling elite with a new toy.

At the same time, however, the phenomenon is loosening Soviet authorities' control over what Western movies are available to the public.

"The people at the top were the first to get videos," said one Soviet journalist, who has seen them in the homes of Communist Party and government officials, but does not yet have one himself.

The video wave reached the ruling Politburo and their families first, and is now trickling down through party and government ranks.

Soviet diplomats, journalists and performing artists who are allowed to travel to the West are also beginning to acquire videotape machines and trade and sell tapes among themselves.

Soviet newspapers recently advertised domestically made videotape machines — considerably less sophisticated than Western models and incompatible with foreign-made cassettes.

New Western-made video machines are not available to the average Soviet consumer, although restricted-access foreign-currency stores carry Japanese-made models for about $2,115.

Second-hand electronic stores in Moscow occasionally offer used foreign models, starting at about $5,640.

Blank or filmed cassettes fitting Western models have not been seen for sale in the Soviet Union. A clerk at a foreign-currency store said neither blank tapes nor video movies had ever been sold there.

Black market prices for new foreign-made video players run between $12,690 to $16,920, according to Soviets who have priced them.

Material for the machines comes from the West, generally carried in by those Soviets allowed to travel abroad.

"A friend of mine, a correspondent, just came back from assignment to the Middle East and he brought back a video and several dozen movies," said one Muscovite.

The most popular movies, according to Soviets, are martial arts films from the Far East, recent releases from the West, and pornography. Although some Western movies are shown in Soviet movie houses, no sexually explicit films are available to the public.

Video cassettes of foreign films are circulated on the black market, for as much as $423 a copy, in much the same way as unofficial books and tape-recordings.

There seems little chance that the average Soviet worker, who earns $243 a month, will soon be screening Western movies on a home video, but the machines are reaching more and more people.

Wealthy traders from the republics of Georgia and Armenia in the southern Soviet Union, who amass fortunes peddling fresh fruit and vegetables in big cities, are said to be moving into the market. Foreign sailors reportedly sell Western video players in Soviet sea ports on the Baltic, the Black Sea and the Far East.

The Soviet elite goes to great lengths to protect the masses from the what they call "corrupting influences" of Western movies. Such films, however, are shown to select audiences by Goskino, the state agency that oversees the production of Soviet-made films and the distribution of imported films.

"What they fear most are films that show how people in the West live, how well off they are compared to people here," said Nikolai Pankov, 35. He and his wife Nadezhda, 34, formerly worked as projectionists in six restricted viewing halls at Goskino headquarters in downtown Moscow.

They said they were willing talk about it in an interview because they have been denied permission to emigrate from the Soviet Union and because they have been forced out of their jobs for conversing with foreigners.

Goskino, the couple claimed, obtains films from foreign distributors on approval, makes copies of them, and in most cases rejects the films as unacceptable for Soviet audiences.

The originals are returned to the makers, the Pankovs added, and the copies kept in archives for trusted audiences.

Among movies the Pankovs said were deemed too sexually explicit or violent for the Soviet public, but popular with the elite, are "Last Tango in Paris," "King of Hearts," the "Emanuelle" and the "James Bond" series, "Bonnie and Clyde," and "King Kong."

"The all-time favorite was 'The Godfather'," Nikolai Pankov said. "We showed both parts time and again."

Film distributors in the West were unable to confirm that any of those films had been lent to Goskino for review, or that copies had been pirated.

Officials at Goskino refused to respond to allegations by the Pankovs or to other questions asked by The Associated Press.

Westerners attending court proceedings involving the Pankovs, who have unsuccessfully sued to get their jobs back, claim that Goskino officials confirmed in testimony the existence of the archives and the special screenings.

Soldier claims army not 'safety-conscious'

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — A paratrooper who criticized the Army's Gallant Eagle '82 exercise in which six men died and 156 were injured when they jumped into gusting winds says he's being threatened with a court-martial because he spoke out on the incident.

But the army says Staff Sgt. Shilow Burroughs is a troublemaker, and a decision will be made later this week on whether to court-martial him only because he refused a direct order from his lieutenant.

"They were not safety-conscious on that jump," Burroughs said. "There were 90 people on board my airplane. They did not have enough qualified jump masters and safety officers on there to check that many troopers' parachutes for proper rigging."

Burroughs, 32, a 12-year veteran, suffered a bruised pelvis, a separated shoulder and a nose injury in the exercise March 30 at Fort Irwin, Calif. He was hospitalized after the jump and then returned to the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg where he made complaints to his commanding officers about the jump.

"I went through my chain of command and tried to explain it, but they won't buy it," said Burroughs, a Greensboro native. "I want somebody in the Department of the Army on up the line to realize what's going on down in the lower channels."

Burroughs said he told his lieutenant he wished to be relieved of active jump duty. His captain signed the release, but the lieutenant did not respond favorably, he said.

Old U.S. vehicles in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — Old U.S. military trucks were on display recently at Moscow's vintage car show, but visitors weren't told how they got there. It wouldn't be in line with Kremlin policy to note they came here in World War II as part of a massive U.S. aid program.

A Dodge three-quarter-ton pickup and a 2½-ton Chevrolet truck — both built in the early 1940s and still painted in U.S. Army olive drab — were on display along with a Studebaker-model Jeep and a 1943 Chevrolet sedan.

They were among 100 old vehicles shown by Soviet antique-car buffs who rescued them from junk heaps and restored them.

German, Italian, French, Soviet and other American vehicles, mostly from the 1920s through the 1940s, were viewed by Soviet crowds numbering in the tens of thousands at the Central Army Sports Club parking lot in early June.

Automobiles are still the ultimate private luxury in the Soviet Union, where there are only about nine million private cars. Vintage cars always draw big crowds.

Signs identified the vehicles by manufacturer, year of make, horsepower and top speed, but said nothing about how they got into the Soviet Union.

"We got these trucks from the British during the war years," maintained Vladimir Nowiski, one of the show's organizers, pointing to the U.S. trucks. "They were shipped here between 1941 and 1945. That's all I know."

Nowiski was unaware of the U.S. lend-lease aid program that delivered vast amounts of war materiel to the Soviet army in its battle against the German invaders.

College clinic aids sleep-problem sufferers

EDITOR'S NOTE: "Sleep, that knits up the ravelled sleeve of care," noted Shakespeare. But there are those whose travail remains unravelled; they cannot sleep a wink. Sleep disorders, from insomnia to narcolepsy, are treated at a special clinic at the University of Pittsburgh.

By PETER MATTIACE
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Charles Berry could fall asleep anywhere, anytime. He could nap twice a day. He could snooze over black coffee. He even could sleep standing up.

But when Berry, 40, woke up to his tractor-trailer truck crashing into a steel mill, he finally opened his eyes to a serious medical condition going back 25 years.

"I just thought I required a little more sleep than others. Now I know I have a sleep disorder," he says.

Berry's condition, narcolepsy, was diagnosed at the University of Pittsburgh's Western Psychiatric Institute and Clinic, which opened one of the nation's first sleep disorder centers in July 1974. There are now 32 such centers nationwide.

Each year, about 200 patients with chronic sleep problems check into the hospital's six bedrooms, where doctors and technicians monitor their slumber for two successive nights.

THE BEDROOMS look much like a modern motel, with double bed, mirror, torch-lamp, chair and even a cozy quilt bedspread. A bathroom is nearby. A nearby lounge offers television and magazines to help patients relax.

But there is little privacy in these bedrooms. Patients wear electrodes taped to their heads to monitor brain waves, eye movement and muscle tension.

A microphone above their heads records sleeping sounds and soft red lights on the ceiling allow technicians to look in by closed-circuit television.

It's not home, but the $1,500 examination usually finds the answers to their sleep problems, acording to medical director Dr. Charles Reynolds.

"We can almost always pin down a cause for sleep disorders," Reynolds says. "Then we can tailor a program to help."

About half of those referred to the clinic suffer from severe insomnia.

Others, like Berry, suffer from narcolepsy, a constant sleepiness, or sleep apnea, a condition found mostly in older men who jolt awake frequently each night when they temporarily stop breathing.

A smaller number of patients suffer from "disturbed behavior" while sleeping, such as seizures, sleepwalking, bed wetting and night terrors.

Some psychiatric patients also are studied at the sleep center. Doctors can learn if a person is depressed by sleep patterns and also can quickly test the effectiveness of anti-depression medications through sleep, Reynolds says.

Berry, who lives in rural West Leechburg, says he had trouble staying awake since he was 13, but nevertheless held a job as a long-distance trucker until his steel mill accident two years ago.

There were some close calls on the road.

"I'd just get sleepy and start running off the road. That would wake me up. I had some small accidents, nothing really major," he says.

"It would scare me, especially at night, coming toward a small community. I'd wake up and the community would be gone and I wouldn't remember going through it.

"I never had any thoughts I was different, but it got embarrassing sometimes," Berry says. "I have fallen asleep during conversations and I have gone over to the neighbors' only to fall asleep drinking coffee."

Berry spent two nights and an afternoon at the sleep center, where Reynolds found classic symptoms of narcolepsy.

PAC-restricting proposal making its House moves

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — A proposal to limit the financial clout of Political Action Committees (PACs), which contributed $55.2 million to congressional candidates in 1980, has begun to move in Congress.

The House Administration Committee's task force on elections has opened hearings on the bill which would put a ceiling on the amount congressional candidates can accept from political action committees (PACs).

Under the proposal, candidates would be limited to accepting $75,000 in contributions from PACs or $100,00 in elections involving a run-off. For Senate candidates, the limit would range from $75,000 and $500,000, depending on the size of the state.

Currently there is a limit of $5,000 per election, or $10,000 per election cycle, on individual PAC contributions, but there is no ceiling on how much a candidate can receive in overall PAC contributions. In other words, while a candidate for Congress may receive only $5,000 from a single PAC, he or she could receive $1 million or more from a group of PACS.

The new bill would increase the limtation on personal contributions from the present $1,000 per election to $2,500.

Since 1974, when Congress opened the door to increased PAC participation, PACs have become a booming political industry. In 1972 there were 113 PACs. Today there are nearly 3,000.The nation's leading PAC is North Carolina Sen. Jesse Helm's National Congressional Club, which in the 1979-80 election cycle raised $7.9 million.

PACs, most notably from large corporations and labor unions, have openly solicited political support in Congress. Contributions to Congressional candidates in the last election totaled $55.2 billion, according to the Federal Election commission.

The public has been uneasy about such political philanthropy. A recent ABC News-Harris survey shows that, by a 71-19 percent margin, the public feels that PACs are "poouring too much money into the whole political process".

By an 81-15 percent margin the public feels that PAC contributions increase the influence of special interests on government.

Sponsors and supporters of the proposed new Federal Elections Campaign Act feel that, in addition to the mistrust PACs breed, they have contributed to the increasing cost of campaigning today. Says Rep. Jim Leach (R-Iowa), if this inflationary trend is not curbed, candidates will "increasingly become indebted to either big business or big labor."

Supporters of the PAC-restricting measure basically argue that PACs have served to excessively fragment politics today. Voters who formerlly turned to political parties to form political coalitions have now been forced to turn to issue-based PACs.

One member of the committee's task force, Rep.Bill Frenzel (R- Minn.) charged that the proposed legislation, contrary to its stated purpose, would only hinder party coalition-building with its current wording.

Frenzel charged that the bill is open to interpretations that would read PACs and political parties into the same catagory. Parties would thus also be restricted by the legislation.

Others members of the task force seem to share Frenzel's apprehension concerning the bill. Rep. Lynn Martin, R-Ill., challenged the suspicions of the bill's sponsors, citing the comments of an assemblyman in one state: "If you can't drink their liquor and eat their food and vote 'no,' then you don't belong here."

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Mental health professional obligated to report client's threat

By KENNETH H. WOLF, MSSW, SP

Question: What happens when a psychiatrist or psychologist is treating a person who makes a severe threat to harm himself or someone else? Is the doctor supposed to report such a threat to authorities or does the confidential nature of the doctor-patient relationship prohibit such a report?

Answer: Your question touches upon an important area, which has significant implications for all mental health professionals. Although most states have statutes which establish some degree of confidentiality to protect the information given by a person to a mental health practitioner, most such statutes create an exception to the privilege of confidentiality when, in the judgment of the mental health professional, the client being seen presents a clear danger to himself or others.

If a client makes a threat to harm himself or someone else, the mental health professional is obligated to see that the nature of this threat is not only communicated to the proper civil authorities but, in some cases, to also take reasonable steps to notify any threatened third party.

Courts in some states have held mental health professionals civilly liable in instances where they have not taken reasonable steps to see that such threatening clients are legally restrained or their threatened victims are notified. This obligation is even more important when such clients are being treated as outpatients — that is, with no restriction or control on their activities. However, it also applies to clients who are confined to an institution of some sort. The judgment of the mental health professional as to whether a threat is genuine or severe enough is generally the criterion which is relied upon to determine if a given threat is to be reported.

In creating such exceptions to the privilege of confidentiality of communication between clients and mental health professionals, most states have clearly stated that the privilege of confidentiality is not absolute and, in fact, such statutes impose an obligation upon the professional to report such severe threats. Some states create other exceptions to confidentiality as well. For example, in Texas, mental health professionals are required to report instances of child abuse or neglect, even if this information is obtained in an otherwise confidential clinical interview.

The vast majority of mental health clients are not affected by these exceptions to confidentiality. Unless such an exception exists, confidential client information or identity may be released only by the client's written consent. Confidentiality of client information is necessary to foster the kind of relationship which is needed in order for the person to receive the treatment he needs. Confidentiality should be breached only in the most urgent situations.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Wine can be used to curb, increase appetite

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have just turned off my radio after listening to one of those talk shows where a person can call in and talk with a guest, and I've never been so confused in my life. I won't bore you with the details, but the doctor who was the guest on the program said that the use of wine could be helpful for people who are overweight and people who are underweight. How could it be both? — Sarah, Springfield, Ill.

Dear Sarah: The fact that a statement may be paradoxical — that is, seem to be contradictory — does not necessarily mean that it is not true. Wine has been suggested as an aid to curbing weight as well as increasing it.

Dr. Janet McDonald, of the U.S. Public Health Service Hospital in San Francisco, attributes the succes of wine with both groups of patients to its tranquilizing effect. Obese patients have indicated that when they had wine with a meal, they were able to decrease their intake of calories and thus lose weight. Apparently, the wine both satisfies their hunger and tends to reduce their anxieties.

On the other hand, wine has also been found to stimulate the appetite, also partly as a result of reducing tensions. A number of nursing homes and hospitals now serve wine for this purpose.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son belongs to a boy's club and we attended their annual parent-child dinner a few weeks ago. It was the kind of dinner where each family brought one kind of food which we all shared. As usual it was a real fun affair, but the vomiting and diarrhea we had later that night was no fun. The doctor said it was food poisoning, but I'm not sure I know what that means. I know all of the women who brought food to the diner, and they are all excellent cooks and very clean. — Mrs. N.T., Montgomery, Ala.

Dear Mrs. T.: The most common type of food poisoning is salmonella and, while it seldom causes death, it can be a serious problem for infants, elderly people, and people who suffer from a chronic illness. As you found out the hard way, the symptoms of food poisoning include upset stomach, cramps, diarrhea and fever.

Although salmonella bacteria are found in all types of foods, they occur most often in meats, poultry and eggs. Refrigeration prevents the bacteria from growing and cooking kills them, but they grow rapidly at room temperature. I don't doubt your statement that the women who prepared the food are excellent cooks and very clean, but even a little carelessness can create a condition where salmonella bacteria can thrive. This is especially true when the weather is warm.

For Mrs. C.O. (San Francisco): We have successfully treated women who have had menstrual periods but could not get pregnant. The reason is that many women have menstrual bleeding but do not ovulate. Ovulation is necessary for pregnancy to occur. A detailed evaluation of your hormonal system and your reproductive organs should reveal what the problem is. Once this is determined, specific therapy can often help.

'Love Boat' counseling offered by psychologist

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Before heading to divorce court, a psychologist is inviting combatant couples to spend three days with him on a 33-foot cruiser as a $1,650 solution to their problems.

The psychologist, Ricardo Girona of Toledo, says so far he's had no takers on his Lake Erie cruise-workshop, which he calls a unique approach to marriage counseling.

"In all the years I've been practicing psychology, I've never heard of anything like it," says Girona, who spent 14 years on the faculty at Bowling Green State University.

Girona's cruise isolates couples in a neutral environment and allows him intensive, eight-hour periods to evaluate just what's breaking up the marriage.

Author's roots deep in India

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — When Kushwant Singh brought home a copy of "Midnight's Children," everyone in his family grabbed for it, wanting to be the first to read the internationally acclaimed novel by Indian-born Salmon Rushdie.

Within a few days, however, the thick, hard-bound book was lying around the house, abandoned for want of a reader.

"No one got past the first 100 pages," Singh recalled.

The reason: Rushdie's book "is so hard to read, His words spew out like lava."

Singh, a highly respected editor and author himself, said he "persevered" and finally finished "Midnight's Children," which won the 1981 Booker Award and has been a big seller in the United States and Britain.

Rushdie "told the story of the last 30 years of India," Singh said. "It is highly remarkable. He uses a style of language no Indian author has ever been able to utilize. And he does it effortlessly."

With pride in his voice, Singh (a Sikh) added that Rushdie "is Moslem, but his roots are deeply in India even though he moved to Pakistan before going to London. ("Midnight's Children") is his autobiography as much as India's."

"This is the first really significant work of fiction from the pen of an Indian," Singh said.

"Midnight's Children" is a highly allegorical account of Indian history, both before and after independence from Britain but concentrating on the latter.

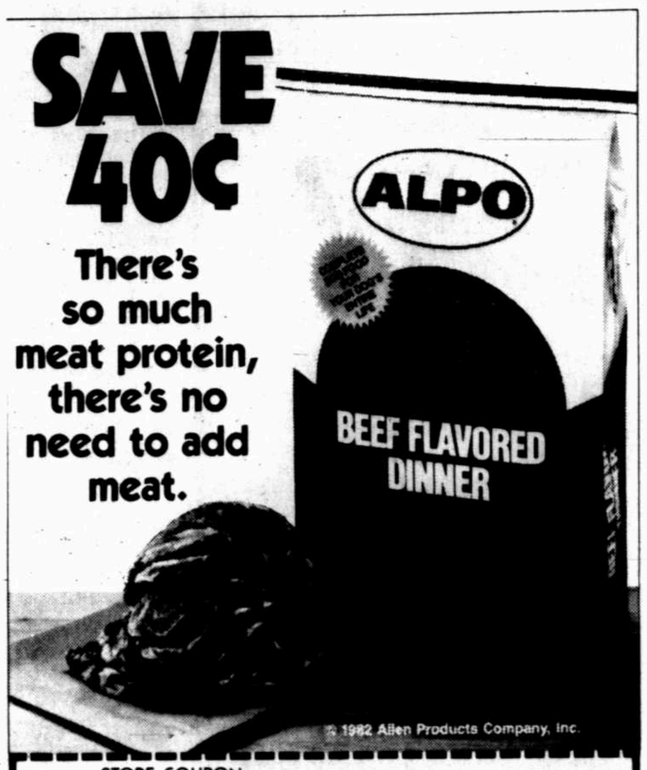

It is the story of 1,001 children born in India during the first hour of independence, which began at midnight August 15, 1947. These children all have special powers, the closer their birth to midnight the more precious the gift.

Two of the children are born exactly on the stroke of midnight, as bells peal across the new nation, heralding its birth, and they have been bestowed the most miraculous powers of all. Naturally, there is a mix-up in their identities at the hospital, and...

Though laced with humor, Rushdie's work has been written with a caustic pen that bares many skeletons in India's closet.

Thousands of workers could be laid off if bill is not passed

By SANDRA EVANS TEELEY
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Thousands of federal workers could be laid off without pay, and public works projects in 40 states may have to be suspended in mid-construction.

A program to keep drugs from coming into the United States, and another to keep U.S. technology from going out, may have to be put on hold for a while.

Laid-off National Archives employees won't be able to return to work on former president Nixon's tapes and papers right away, and some airlines will have to wait longer for money the government owes them for carrying the mail.

Funding for these salaries and programs are contained in an "urgent" supplemental appropriations bill that Congress has been working on for months — funds that are needed just to cover ordinary expenses.

The items are not in dispute on Capitol Hill or in the administration. But they are caught in the middle of a tug-of-war over controversial items that have been tacked onto the legislation: subsidies for home buyers and tax deductions and income limits for members of Congress.

A HOUSE-SENATE conference committee finished its work last week on the bill, but it still must clear two formidable hurdles. First, it must survive a congressional grudge match, with the Senate insisting on repealing tax breaks for members of Congress for their Washington living expenses and the House retaliating with an amendment to limit the outside income of senators.

Once that internecine battle is resolved, the bill then faces the threat of a presidential veto because of its $3 billion mortgage interest rate subsidy program, Congress' quick-fix plan to boost the devastated housing industry. If Reagan does veto the bill, Congress could try to override it or strip the bill of its noncontroversial parts and pass them separately.

But all that takes time — and time is running out for some of the agencies and programs. In addition to the sewer construction projects, for example, some public housing authorities are desperate for operating funds, and 61,000 summer jobs hinge on the bill.

One major concern initially was that some government checks, particularly Social Security checks, would not go out on time because the bill contains the funds for their processing and postage. But this crisis apparently has been delayed, at least until sometime in July, according to Senate aides, through a funds transfer by the Treasury Department.

IN THE MEANTIME, some federal employees have been warned they may have to be furloughed if the bill does not get through soon. According to agency spokesmen, these include:

— Virtually the entire staffs of three Labor Department agencies — the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Employment and Training Administration and the Employment Standards Administration — or about 8,000 employees. Workers have been told that if the funds are not approved by July 1, the agencies will have to begin scheduling furloughs.

— Some 3,000 Education Department employees, more than half the entire staff, have been warned that they could be furloughed for two weeks between July 19 and Sept. 24.

— More than two-thirds of the Treasury Department's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms — or 1,900 of 2,700 employees — would be furloughed if funds do not come through by July 11.

— About half of the staff of the tiny Merit Systems Protection Board, or about 160 workers, would have to go on leave starting July 1.

— All 469 employees of the Commerce Department's Economic Development Administration are waiting for $3.5 million worth of salaries in the bill. Without it, all salaries and expenses, including those for the office of the secretary, will run out sometime in mid-July.

THE APPROPRIATIONS bill would provide $9 billion, almost double the $4.6 billion requested by the administration. It also would rescind $5.7 billion in previously appropriated funds, most of it in low-income housing construction programs, $2 billion less than the cuts that President Reagan had wanted.

The largest chunk of money, other than for the mortgage subsidy plan, is $2.4 billion for sewer construction grants.

If these funds are delayed much longer, "thousands and thousands" of private-sector engineers and construction workers will have to be laid off throughout the country, said Larry Silverman, legislative director for the Clean Water Action Project, an environmental group. In fact, he said, there are as many jobs at stake here as in the housing subsidy plan, which proponents claim will create employment for about half a million persons in housing-related industries.

"If the president vetoes the bill, it will cause an emergency in the sewage treatment field," Silverman said. Already, 40 states have run out of funds for about 10,000 water projects in progress throughout the country, he said. It would take years for the sewage treatment industry to recover from the disruption that could be caused by the funding delays, he added.

In addition, the credit ratings of municipalities could be in jeopardy if funds are held up, because cities will start to default on bonds issued to pay for part of the water projects, Silverman predicted. This would hamper their ability to raise money in the future, he said.

THE BILL also includes $1 billion to fulfill the government's food stamp obligations through September, funds for processing student grants and paying lenders for student loans, for the work incentive program and flood control funds.

Monies are also included for the South Florida Task Force, an administration program to stem the flow of drugs into the United States, and for Operation Exodus, a U.S. Customs Service program to keep American technology out of the hands of unfriendly foreign countries. There are funds to reimburse states for cash and medical aid they provided to Cuban and Haitian refugees.

Raymond to build $520 million plant

HOUSTON (SWN) — A unit of Raymond International Inc. will take part in the design and construction of a domestic gas plant for the Northwest Shelf project in Western Australia.

Estimated cost of the domestic gas plant is about $520 million.

Raymond Engineers Australia Pty. Ltd. of Sydney and Perth, a unit of Raymond International's Kaiser Engineers, Inc. subsidiary is one of three companies in a consortium selected to design and manage construction of the domestic gas plant.

Woodside LNG Pty. Ltd., the onshore operator for the participants in the Northwest Shelf project, announced the selection of a consortium of M. W. Kellogg Co., J.G.C. Corporation and Raymond Engineers Australia Pty. Ltd. as the main contractor for the domestic gas plant on June 4.

Initially, the consortium will undertake completion of the detailed engineering, procurement and management of construction of the domestic gas plant, taking over as soon as possible the supervision of relevant contracts already let.

The Northwest Shelf project also will include a much larger liquefied natural gas (LNG) plant, which is designed to produce 800 million standard cubic feet of gas per day as LNG. Once the project participants are in a position to proceed with the LNG phase, it is expected that the consortium's responsibilities will be expanded to encompass the LNG plant.

The consortium was elected on the basis of its ability to undertake both plants. The plants will be developed from project specifications prepared by Shell Internationale Petroleum Maatschappij B.V. in The Hague. Production from the domestic gas plant and from the LNG plant will be equivalent to 250,000 barrels of oil per day in the form of domestic gas, liquefied natural gas, condensate and liquefied petroleum gas.

Construction of offshore facilities and site preparation by other contractors for the domestic gas plant have already begun. Delivery of gas from the plant is due to start during the second half of 1984.

Woodside LNG, the onshore operator, is a subsidiary of Woodside Petroleum Ltd., which holds a 50 percent interest in the project. Other participants are B.P. Petroleum Development Australia Pty. Ltd. and California Asiatic Oil Company, each with 16-2/3 percent, ahd Shell Development (Australia) Pty. Ltd. and Hematite Petroleum Pty. Ltd., each with 8-1/3 percent.

The Kaiser Engineers organization has operated in Australia for almost 30 years and has about 1,000 permanent professional employees in that country. Raymond is currently taking part in the design and construction of the $1.1 billion Worsley alumina refinery in Western Australia.

Pennzoil to end credit card program

HOUSTON (AP) — Pennzoil announced Tuesday it plans to discontinue its credit card program to all of its 727 filling stations effective Aug. 15, but said the stations will continue to honor Visa and Bank Americard.

"For the relatively small number of Pennzoil cards involved, it just isn't prudent to continue to bear this administrative expense," said T. Wayne Warren, chairman of Pennzoil Products Co.

A Pennzoil spokesman said there are about 12,000 active credit cards, which have been used at filling stations mainly in Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York and West Virginia.

Warren said Pennzoil credit card charges accounted for only 10 percent of the company's annual retail gasoline sales.

Spokesman Bob Harper said Pennzoil notified credit card holders of the decision by mail last week and briefed its distributors and dealers through meetings with salesmen.

Judge dismisses retailers from beef price-fixing suit

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge has dropped two dozen grocery store chains from a seven-year-old anti-trust suit brought by beef producers who accused the chains of fixing beef prices.

The order, which U.S. District Judge Patrick Higginbotham issued Monday in granting a summary judgment, reduces the list of defendants in the suit to two large meat packers, said the retailers' lawyer, Wilson Herndon.

The suit is a combination of 23 cases filed in 1975 by an estimated 1,400 to 1,800 producers, who asked for several hundred million dollars in damages.

The retailers, which include Safeway Stores Inc., the Kroger Co. and the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. Inc., later were dismissed from the suit. But that dismissal was appealed to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which sent the case to Higginbotham's court.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1977 that sellers have no standing to sue indirect purchasers, but the appeals court gave the producers a chance to prove a direct relationship with the grocery stores, Herndon said.

They failed, according to Higginbotham's decision, which releases the retailers from liability for damages.

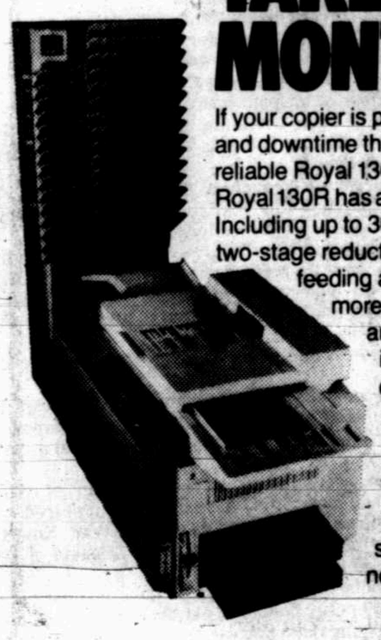

Herndon said the ruling "effectively dismisses" the retailers from the suit.

The retailers dismissed from the suit are Albertson's Inc., American Stores Co., Hardin-Mayfair Inc., Borman's Inc., Circle-K Corp., First National Stores Inc., Food Fair Inc., Giant Food Inc., Grand Union Co., Colonial Stores Inc., Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. Inc., Jewel Cos. Inc., Kroger and Lucky Stores Inc.

Bush stresses Saudi -U.S. cooperation

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Vice President George Bush arrived Tuesday to meet with Saudi Arabia's new ruler, King Fahd, attend a memorial service for the late King Khaled, and reaffirm "the vital importance of the closest possible cooperation" between the United States and the world's largest oil exporter.

Bush was one of many world leaders who came to Riyadh to pay their respects to Khaled, who died Sunday. He led an American delegation that included Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and the chairmen of the congressional foreign relations committees.

Stepping out of his Air Force plane, Bush stood in full view of three grey Airborne Warning and Command Systems aircraft, on loan from the United States and parked at the airport. The planes, with their massive radar discs rising like mushrooms from their fuselages, have become symbols of U.S.-Saudi cooperation.

Bush said his visit came "at a time of great danger and tragedy in the (Middle East) region." Stepping into his limousine, he added, "The visit shows how strongly we feel about the late King Khaled, about King Fahd, and relationships between our two countries."

Bush was met by Prince Badr, deputy commander of the Saudi national guard. He was scheduled to meet later Tuesday night with King Fahd, who as crown prince set out Saudi Arabia's relatively restrained policies in Arab and oil politics.

The U.S. delegation's arrival came amid an incessant traffic of Western and world statesmen, all coming here to extend condolences and to touch base with the new king.

Tuesday's arrivals included King Juan Carlos of Spain, French External Affairs Minister Claude Cheysson, former Japanese Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda, former Italian Foreign Minister Amintore Fanfani, and Pakistani President Zia ul-Haq. Prince Philip and British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym left earlier in the day and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak visited Monday.

Looming in the background as Bush arrived was the fighting in Lebanon and the strain that it has placed on U.S. relations with Saudi Arabia.

One Western source, who requested anonymity, commented that, "there is concern here about the lack of justification for the special Saudi relationship with the United States," since Israel has used U.S.-supplied weapons in the invasion.

"Keep in mind that last July the Saudis struck a deal with the Americans that they would hold back the Palestinians if the U.S. would hold back the Israelis," said the source. "The Americans obviously did not keep their side of the bargain."

Prior to the death of Khaled, the country's government-guided newspapers had been criticizing both the lack of Arab unity in response to the invasion and the U.S. supply of weapons to Israel.

Crew threatens mutiny

CAPE MAY, N.J. (AP) — The crew of a Liberian oil tanker anchored at the entrance to Delaware Bay since May 26 is threatening to kill the ship's captain and to stage a mutiny in a dispute with the ship's owners, the Coast Guard said Tuesday.

The Pakistani and Indian crew members of the Ypapanti also have threatened to flood the engine room with oil and set the vessel on fire, said L.t John Forst, a Coast Coast spokesman in New York.

"There's not a whole lot we can do," said Forst. "It's in international waters. It's like a little piece of Liberia."

Some of the 34 crew members are claiming the Greek owners of the ship owe them nine months' back wages, said Forst.

Coast Guard spokesman Mike Trachman said the ship left Philadelphia on Nov. 3 with orders from the port not to return until safety regulations were met. It returned May 12 and was denied entry. It anchored at its current position, 17 miles off shore, on May 26.

Not all crew members are involved in the dispute, but none have been allowed to leave the vessel, he said. However, a few officers have been released and have returned to Greece, Forst added.

The Coast Guard has a cutter standing by if needed in the dispute, but since there are no Americans in the crew of 34 and since the ship is anchored in international waters, they have no jurisdiction.

Families of Ocean Ranger victims file federal suits

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Families of six Canadian crewman killed when the Ocean Ranger drilling rig sank during a North Atlantic storm have filed suits in federal court here alleging negligence and the rig's "unseaworthiness" caused the deaths.

The damages sought in the suits total $36 million. The families each ask for $1 million in actual damages and $5 million in punitive damages.

Eighty-four men died when the rig capsized Feb. 15.

Filing suit are the families of crewmen Ricky Lewis Sheppard, 25, Kenneth Joseph O'Brien, 22, Robert LeDrew, 23, Ralph Melendy, 52, and Robert and Stephen Winsor, all of Newfoundland, Canada.

Named as defendants are Ocean Drilling and Exploration Co., its subsidiaries Odeco Engineering Inc. and Odeco Drilling of Canada, and Mobil Oil Corp. and its subsidiary, Mobil Oil Canada Ltd.

The suits allege that the accident was caused "by the negligence of the defendants and the unseaworthiness of the Ocean Ranger."

The suits were filed in the Beaumont court Monday because both companies do business in its jurisdiction, said the plaintiff's attorney, Robert Friedman.

Bell acquires engineering company

Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. has announced the purchase of J & J Engineering Company of Santa Fe Springs, California for cash and notes. The acquisition becomes effective immediately.

J & J Engineering manufactures free point wireline logging tools, backoff equipment and other electrical wireline tools and equipment.

E. E. Runyan, president of Bell Petroleum Services, in announcing the acquisition, said that J & J Engineering's products are compatible with Bell's present product line, manufactured by the company's Bell Systems division in Fort Worth, Texas. As a result, no re-tooling or major changes of the company would be required, Runyan said.

Runyan also indicated that the Santa Fe Springs facility will be relocated to Fort Worth and integrated into the company's current Bell Systems manufacturing facility.

The addition of J & J Engineering to Bell Petroleum is expected to add approximately $1,000,000 to company sales during the first year. This is equal to approximately five percent of Bell Petroleum sales for fiscal 1982, and about 25 percent of the Bell Systems division anticipated sales for fiscal 1982.

Jack Jones, president of J & J Engineering, will relocate to Fort Worth and will report to Don Quick, general manager of Bell Systems. No personnel changes in the company are anticipated.

Cities Service Co. files suit against Chicago bank

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Cities Service Co., seeking to ward off a tender offer from Mesa Petroleum Co., filed suit against a Chicago bank Tuesday in an effort to confound Mesa's efforts to win financing for its offer.

Cities Service said it filed suit in U.S. District Court in Chicago against Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Co., alleging the bank played an illegal role in arranging financing for Mesa's tender offer.

Also, Cities was scheduled to ask a federal court in Wilmington, Del., to block Mesa's $45-a-share offer for 12.1 million Cities Service shares.

It was expected that Cities Service would argue that the Wilmington court should issue a preliminary injunction against Mesa's offer partly because Mesa did not have financing set for the $544.5 million offer last Monday, when it mailed the bid to Cities Service shareholders.

Mesa President T. Boone Pickens Jr. announced Sunday that Mesa signed the final financing agreements with an undisclosed group of banks last Friday.

U.S. District Judge Walter K. Stapleton in Wilmington on Monday ordered Mesa to either move its anti-takeover lawsuit from a friendly court in Beaumont to Delaware or drop it.

A Mesa lawyer said Monday that the company now has several options. He said the main option would be to re-file in Delaware, but the company also could appeal Stapleton's decision to a Delaware federal court of appeals.

Mesa President T. Boone Pickens Jr. said it was "more of a legal thing than anything else."

"I don't think this will mess things up," he said.

The Chicago lawsuit charges that Continental arranged Mesa's tender offer financing in violation of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 and certain regulations of the Federal Reserve System.

Cities Service said it also alleged that Continental attributed inflated values to collateral to support the Mesa financing and that Continental improperly collateralized the financing.

Carol Rhyne, a spokeswoman for Continental, said the bank would have no comment on the suit "because we can't comment on matters of litigation."

The financing arrangement is in connection with Mesa's tender offer for 12.1 million shares of Cities Service common stock. Cities Service management is fighting the offer, and has itself launched a takeover offer for Mesa.

The Cities Service suit asks the court to stop Continental "from arranging, administering, maintaining or otherwise effectuating" the financing for Mesa's tender offer.

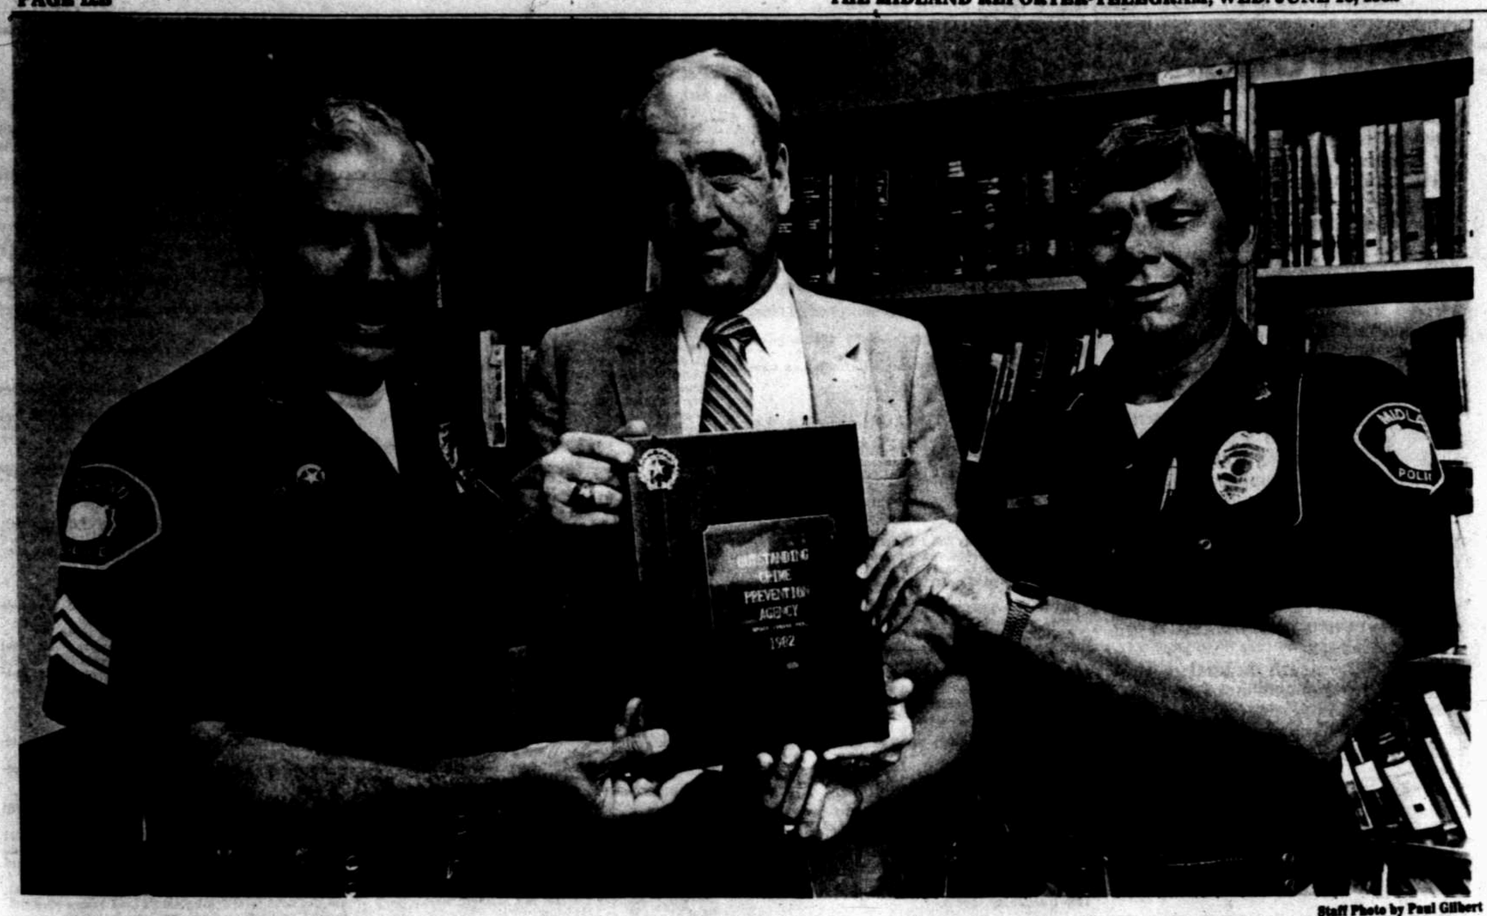

Mesa owns 4.1 million shares of Cities Service.

Cities Service announced Friday that 45 percent of Mesa's outstanding shares were tendered in its bid for a takeover of the Amarillo, Texas-based company.

Following that announcement, Cities Service increased its offer from $17 to $21 per share of Mesa stock.

Diet seems to play role in cancers

By WARREN E. LEARY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Diet appears to play a role in most common cancers and Americans may be able to reduce their risks by eating less fats and salt-cured foods and more vegetables and grains, the National Academy of Sciences said today.

In a major study of the link between diet and cancer, the academy's National Research Council said current evidence indicates many cancers are influenced by what people eat.

"In general, the evidence suggests that some types of diets and some dietary components tend to increase the risk of cancer, whereas others tend to decrease it," said a report issued by the study committee.

"The mechanisms responsible for these effects are not fully understood," it continued, "partly because nutritive and non-nutritive components of foods may interact to exert effects on cancer incidence."

The committee, made up of prominent scientists and food experts, said there is not enough data to specify what percentage of cancer risks can be attributed to diet.

There also is not enough information to say how much any improved diets might lower these risks, it added.

But the committee said some evidence was strong enough to recommend dietary guidelines designed to reduce the risks of developing cancer, including the following:

—Eat less food high in any kind of fats, saturated or unsaturated. The main sources of fat in the American diet are meats, whole-milk dairy products and cooking oils, said the study.

—Eat more fruits, vegetables and whole-grain cereal products daily, especially those high in vitamin C, carotene (a substance that coverts into vitamin A in the body) and other protective products. These foods include oranges, grapefruit, dark-green leafy vegetables, carrots, winter squash, tomatoes, cabbage, broccoli and Brussels sprouts.

—Eat very little salt-cured, salt-pickled and smoked foods, including sausages, smoked fish and ham, bacon, hot dogs and bologna and other so-called luncheon meats.

—Drink alcohol only in moderation. Excessive consumption of alcohol, particularly combined with cigarette smoking, is associated with increased risks of stomach and lung cancer.

The committee cautioned, however, that these guidelines are "interim" and could change as scientists learn more about food components and cancer.

The group recommended that the National Cancer Institute, which in 1980 asked the academy to summarize what was known about nutrition and cancer, review these guidelines at least every five years.

The report said the strongest evidence for a link between cancer and diet was with fats. Human lifestyle studies and animal tests show higher rates of breast, colon and prostate cancers in populations consuming large amounts of fat, it said.

The average American diet gets 40 percent of its calories from fat and the committee said a "moderate and practical target" would be to reduce this to 30 percent.

The committee noted that vitamins A and C, and other non-nutritive substances in vegetables, appear in animal experiments to inhibit formation of cancer-causing chemicals and reduce cancer susceptibility.

But the group recommended against taking high-dose vitamin supplements because it is unclear if these components themselves are protective in humans and because nutrients like vitamin A can be toxic in high concentrations.

The recommendation on eating less smoked, salt-cured and salt-pickled foods stems from higher incidences of stomach and esophageal cancers in populations where such foods are eaten frequently, said the committee.

The study said 20 percent of all deaths in the United States are caused by cancer, and that one-quarter of all fatal cancers are caused by cigarettes.

Ex-CIA agent arrested for alleged Libyan dealings

By ROBERT PARRY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Renegade CIA agent Edwin P. Wilson, arrested by U.S. authorities after being lured from his Libyan haven, is being urged to tell prosecutors what the spy agency knew about his alleged supplying and training of terrorists there, government sources say.

Wilson, who worked at the CIA from 1951 to 1971, was arrested Tuesday in New York as his plane arrived from the Dominican Republic, where he was denied entrance after presenting a phony Irish passport, the Justice Department said.

The CIA has denied any official dealings with Wilson or his alleged co-conspirator, Frank Terpil, in connection with their Libyan activities — and reaffirmed that position after Wilson's arrest.

Wilson, 53, was being held on $20 million bail at an undisclosed location pending a court hearing in New York today. Officials said his location was being kept secret because of possible threats against him.

One intelligence source, who asked not to be identified, said prosecutors had talked with Wilson even before his arrest about cooperating with their investigation into illegal shipments of explosives and terrorist training for radical Libya.

ASKED IF Wilson would agree to cooperate, the source said, "I wouldn't be surprised."

Major unanswered questions in that investigation are what, if anything, did the CIA know about Wilson's activities and did any agency officials assist him.

One high-level Justice Department source, who declined to be identified, said the department would consider making a deal with Wilson for a reduced sentence in return for his cooperation in bringing others to justice.

"I think a lot of guys at the CIA will be shaking...for fear over what Wilson might tell us," this official said.

Wilson faces charges of conspiring to assassinate, for $1 million, a dissident Libyan official in Egypt in 1976, illegally shipping large quantities of explosives and timing devices to Libya in 1976 and 1977, and arranging for former U.S. Green Berets and other Americans to train Libyan terrorists.

Since his indictment in April 1980, the former CIA case officer has been living in Libya under the protection of its strongman, Moammar Khadafy.

PUBLISHED REPORTS have linked Wilson and Terpil to several then-active CIA officials in the mid-1970s. During the Carter administration, the CIA fired two employees for dealing with Wilson and Terpil.

The CIA said those employees helped Wilson and Terpil "without official agency sanction."

Rep. Edward P. Boland, House Intelligence Committee chairman, called Wilson "the kingpin of a whole series of sordid crimes" who could supply information that could lead to other indictments.

"Clearly, there are other individuals who are excellent candidates for such a fate," Boland said.

The House committee is still investigating possible links between Wilson and Terpil and CIA agents. The panel also is questioning the CIA's internal investigation.

Terpil remains at large, but a third co-defendant, Douglas M. Schlachter Sr., who managed the project in Libya, pleaded guilty to a reduced charge earlier this year in return for his cooperation with the government.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT sources who refused to be identified said they had employed a ruse to lure Wilson into a situation where they could get custody of him.

Some sources suggested the trick used on Wilson offered the hope of a new haven for him in the Caribbean or Central America. But all the sources declined to give details of the scheme for fear, according to one source, that to do so "might tip him off to who betrayed him."

Calling Wilson "a major fugitive from justice," Attorney General William French Smith announced the arrest personally at a Washington news conference.

Smith said that, working with foreign law enforcement agencies, the U.S. Marshals Service had determined that Wilson was traveling on an Irish passport under a false name. They tracked him for several days through Western Europe and alerted Dominican officials he might be headed there.

Justice Department officials said Wilson arrived, unarmed and undisguised, in the Dominican Republic about 4 or 5 a.m. Tuesday from a Western European country they refused to name. He was held until five minutes before the departure of a non-stop flight for New York.

At that point, Dominican officials told him he was being denied entry for having false documents and was being sent to his native land.

TWO U.S. marshals, in the Dominican Republic as part of the search for Wilson, were aboard the flight but did not have Wilson in custody. He was arrested when the plane arrived at Kennedy International Airport. He offered no resistance.

At his court appearance Tuesday, Wilson kept his hands in his dark pinstripe suit, sweating profusely in the air-conditioned room. He was surrounded by U.S. marshals.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Lawrence Barcella said the $20 million bail was needed because Wilson had made millions of dollars during the past two years and owns millions of dollars worth of land in Virginia and England.

As additional support for the high bail, Barcella said he had spoken to Wilson in person and on the phone several times during the past two years so Wilson had known that he was a fugitive.

Doctors want tougher testing of foreigners

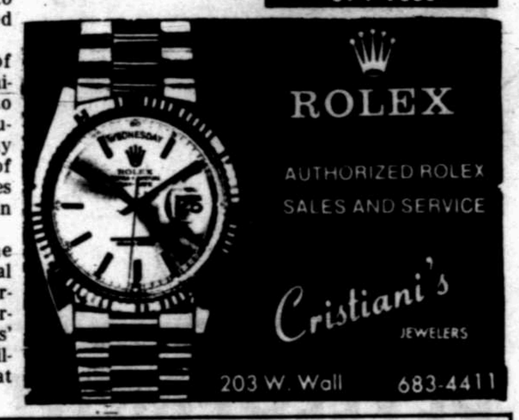

CHICAGO (AP) — Expressing concern about the quality of some foreign medical schools, doctors have asked the American Medical Association to push for tougher testing of foreign graduates who want to practice in the United States.

The AMA's House of Delegates, meeting in Chicago, was scheduled to consider several resolutions and reports today dealing with testing of foreign medical graduates who apply for licenses in the United States.

One report, from the AMA's Council on Medical Education, expresses particular concern about foreign medical graduates' clinical skills — their ability to observe and treat patients.

The report urges that foreign medical graduates be required to demonstrate clinical skills comparable to those of graduates of accredited U.S. medical schools.

Victim appears at hearing of 'hit squad' leader

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — A man who was shot five times and left for dead in the Everglades appeared at a bond hearing as a surprise witness against a suspect police say is linked to at least 100 professional killings.

Bernard Hunwick, 37, of nearby Plantation, has been called the leader of a "hit squad" responsible for 100 to 300 contract slayings nationwide, police say.

His voice trembling with anger, Alan Chafin pointed Tuesday to Hunwick as one of two men who left him for dead on Alligator Alley last May 19.

Chafin, 34, of the Atlanta area, was the surprise witness at the hearing in which Broward County Circuit Judge George Shahood ruled the state had provided sufficient evidence that a "felony had been committed" and denied bail for Hunwick.

Hunwick is being held in the county jail on charges of attempted murder, kidnapping and armed robbery in connection with the attack on Chafin. He was arrested at his $250,000 home on June 8, when police said material seized from his house and car, and information from informants linked Hunwick to the contract killings.

Chafin's appearance Tuesday was apparently in response to defense attorney Fred Haddad's challenge to police to prove their allegations against Hunwick. Police also have said that Hunwick recently teamed with a disaffected mobster for a planned bloody challenge to South Florida's established Mafia.

Haddad last week unsuccessfully asked for a gag order against what he said was prejudicial pretrial publicity. Broward County authorities have since kept quiet about the investigation.

Bill Dimitrouleas, an assistant state attorney, asked Chafin who committed the May attack.

Chafin pointed to Hunwick, a 6-foot-1, 200-pound man whose long, blond hair was knotted in the back, and said: "The man sitting there with chains on his ankles. With blond hair."

Investigators last week said Hunwick headed a free-lance "hit squad" that bought up illicit debts, then forcibly collected them, often killing the debtor.

Chafin said that on May 19, he went to the Banana Boat, a restaurant and lounge, to meet with a man Chafin claimed owed a friend $190,000.

Chafin said he was intercepted there by Hunwick and another man, whom he identified only as "Bobby."

"Barry (Hunwick's nickname) got out of the truck and into my car and pulled a pistol on me," he testified. "He took all my belongings and forced me out of my car and into his pickup."

The men drove to Alligator Alley, which ia a lonely highway that connects Florida's Gulf Coast with Fort Lauderdale, Chafin added.

"I reached into my boot and pulled out a pistol and fired three shots.

McEnroe gains Wimbledon top seed despite tough foes

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Though he faces tough opposition in the early rounds, top-seeded John McEnroe is an odds-on favorite to retain his Wimbledon men's singles tennis title.

Wojtek Fibak of Poland, one of the strongest unseeded players in the field, will be McEnroe's second-round opponent in the most prestigious of all tennis tournaments. Fiery Ilie Nastase of Romania, twice a finalist at Wimbledon, could follow if McEnroe gets by Fibak.

That rotation was created in a draw Tuesday at the All-England Tennis Club.

In the opening round, McEnroe meets American Van Winitsky, ranked 45th in the world. That match Monday will be the traditional center-court opener reserved for the defending champion.

SEEDED SECOND is Jimmy Connors, who is rated at 7-2 by British bookmakers to capture his second Wimbledon singles crown in eight years, while Mats Wilander, the 17-year-old Swedish star who won the French Open in Paris earlier this month, is given a 14-1 shot at winning the championship.

South African-born Andrew Pattison, who now lives in the United States, is Connors' first-round foe. John Alexander of Australia looms as the second-round opponent.

Hard servers often produce the early upsets on the grass courts. Chip Hooper, the 6-foot-7 American with a service estimated at 135 mph will try for such an upset against Peter McNamara of Australia, the No.7 seed.

Heinz Gunthardt of Switzerland is Wilander's opponent in the first round.

Wilander won the French Open crown earlier this month with a week-long series of upsets. He has said he did not expect to do well at Wimbledon, but added that he had not expected to go beyond the early rounds in Paris either.

BJORN BORG, a five-time Wimbledon champion, and four other players ranked in the top 10 in the world, were passing up the tournament. Also not competing were Guillermo Vilas and Jose-Luis Clerc of Argentina, Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia and American Eliot Teltscher.

The tournament lost its first seeded player Tuesday when Raul Ramirez of Mexixo, rated 13th, withdrew just before the draw without giving a reason.

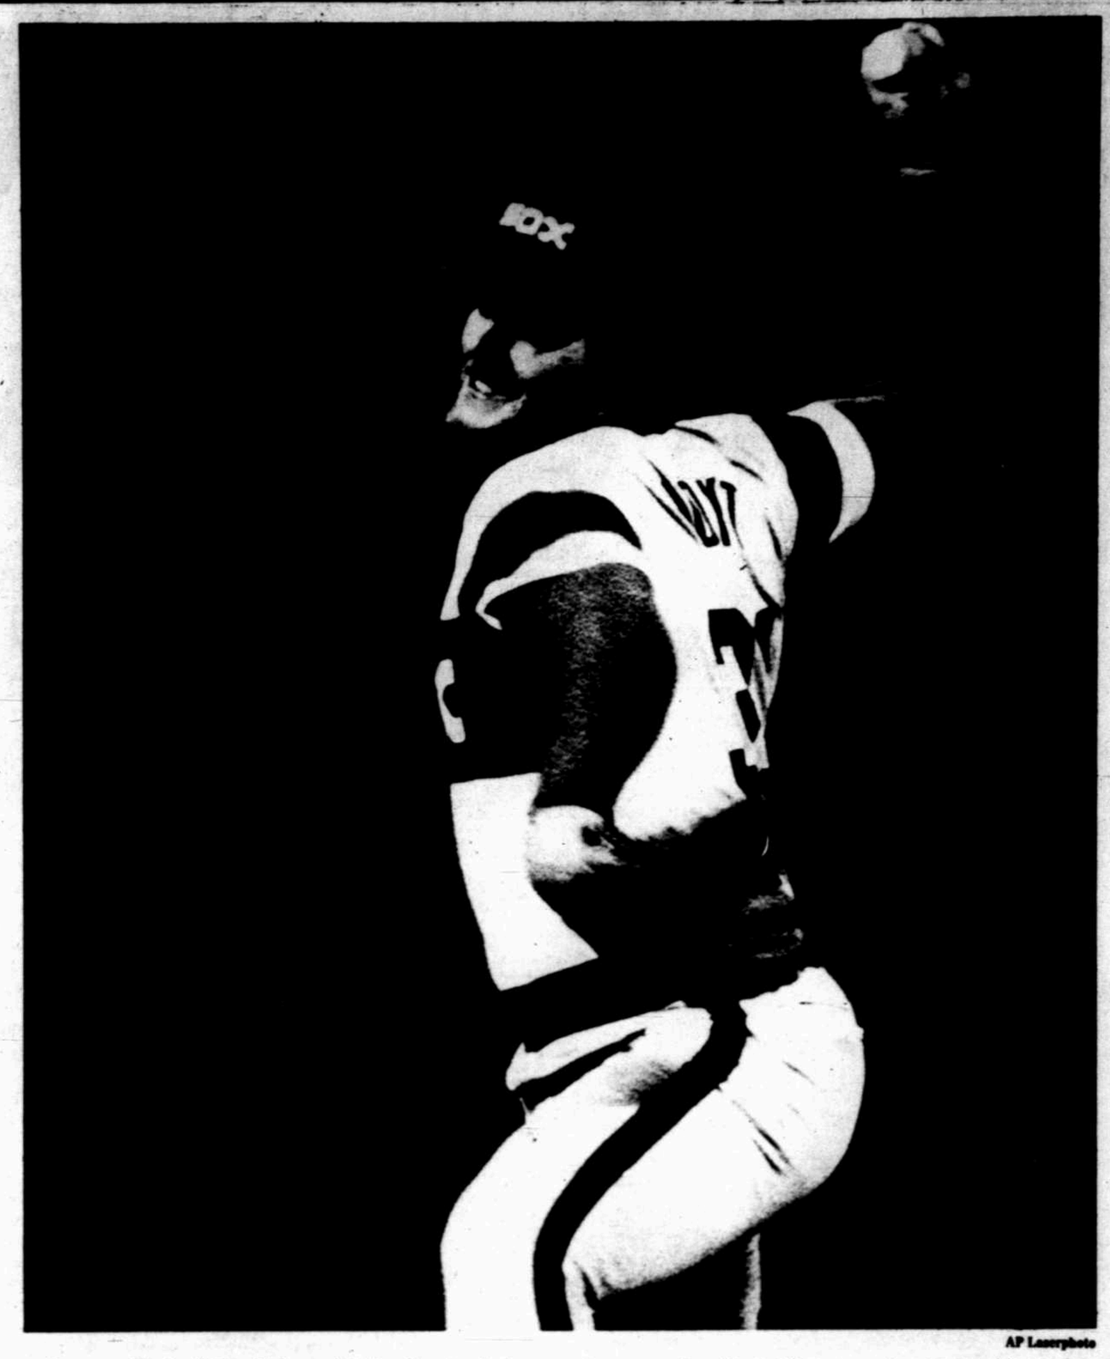

Led by top-seeded Martina Navratilova and second-seeded Chris Evert Lloyd, all of the top women's singles players drew first-round byes.

Zina Garrison of the United States, who captured the Wimbledon junior girlsgloitle last year, takes on American Leigh Ann Thompson in one of the top first-round matches. Garrison, who also won the junior title at the U.S. Open in 1981, reached the quarterfinals at the French Open earlier this month.

The quarterfinals would find Navratilova meeting Evonne Goolagong, Sylvia Hanika of West Germany taking on Yugoslavia's Mima Jausovec, Andrea Jaeger facing Anne Smith, Bettina Bunge meeting Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia, Australia's Wendy Turnbull playing Billie Jean King, Andrea Leand facing Tracy Austin, Pam Shriver playing Barbara Potter and Virginia Ruzici of Romania meeting Lloyd.

Lloyd beat Mandlikova in the finals here a year ago after capturing the Australian and Prench Opens.

King is shooting for her 21st Wimbledon titles. Including in her record-setting 20 triumphs are six singles championships.

MC dropping women's golf

JUCO golf title to be last for Lady Chaps

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

This year's National Junior College golf title for the Midland College women's team was a first, and as it turns out, a last.

Tuesday the MC board of trustees met in a regular session and voted to abolish the women's golf team. It was pointed out to the trustees that no funds had been budgeted for the 1982-83 season, subject to their approval.

"The trustees agreed with that," said MC Director of Public Relations H.A. Tuck. "A lack of competition was cited as the sole reason for dropping the program."

Midland College President Dr. Jess H. Parrish also pointed out that women's golf coach Susan Holland was only on a part-time basis and she had indicated earlier that she did not intend to coach after this season in order to devote more time to the retail business owned by her and her husband.

The idea of dropping the women's golf program wasn't news to the members of the team. According to Tuck, Dr. Parrish and Athletic Director Delnor Poss had met with the coach and players prior to the national tournament held this spring and had discussed the situation with them.

FOR TWO of the Lady Chaparrals, the decision to drop the program didn't effect their junior college golf careers. Wendy Swift and Deborah Latham were sophomores on the team and had used up their eligibility and are off in other directions. Swift intends to continue her golf at the United States International University in San Diego and Latham is going to Southwest Texas State in San Marcus but will not compete.

But, there were five freshmen players on the National Championship team who can no longer compete in the JUCO ranks representing Midland College.

Each of the five golfers were given their release from their scholarships agreements at Midland College so they could actively seek another school for which they could play golf. If they choose to remain at MC, their scholarships will be honored until the end of their sophomore year.

Three of the five have already found another place to play. Jill Himmelman is off to South Florida, Rebecca Bradley to North Texas State and Ann Coombes to New Mexico State University. Coombes doesn't have a scholarship at NMSU, but has bee accepted into the school's beginning women's golf program.

Sabra Srader and Kristi Keith, the final two freshman on the squad, have yet to come to a decision about their future but, according to Tuck, will likely transfer to another school but not play golf. "It's uncertain for them at this point," he said.

SINCE THE school budget has been adjusted according to the loss of the women's program, the money previously alloted has been allocated to the remaining MC athletic programs for use in increasing meal allowance for athletes. Presently, MC athletes receive money for only two meals a day, breakfast and lunch Monday through Friday.

Women's golf wasn't the first MC sport that fell from the school's roster. In 1979, both the men's and women's swimming program was dropped.

In other news effecting Midland College athletes, the Board of Trustees is scheduled for a called special meeting on Tuesday concerning a proposal for on-campus housing. If the proposal passes, it will provide housing for MC athletes and for a limited number of out-of-town students attending the school.

Diablos Rip Cubs, 7-2

EL PASO — The El Paso Diablos showed the Midland Cubs why they are the Texas League leaders with yet another set back Tuesday.

The Cubs, needing a sweep of the series in the far west Texas town to have any hopes of the first-half division title, now find themselves fighting to get their record over the .500 mark.

The Diablo pitching staff has silenced the Cubs bats holding Midland to one run in the first two games of the road trip.

Meanwhile the Cubs pitching staff has been devastated by the Diablo lumber factory giving up 22 runs on 26 hits.

The Cubs only run came in the third when Henry Cotto drove in Javier Fierro. The run was the first in 20.2 innings off the El Paso pitching staff, who then added six more scoreless innings.

The Cubs managed three hits in their "feast" inning against the Diablo hurlers. Midland wound up with seven hits for the night, a difficult to accomplish feat in El Paso's Dudley Field bandbox in nearly mile-high altitude.

Midland moved men to second and third in the fifth, but came up empty handed.

With four games left in the first half, El Paso's magic number for the West Division pennant is two. It could happen tonight if San Antonio should lose and El Paso win.

In tonight's game, Midland will start Carlo Gil, 2-2, while Steve Parrott, 3-3, will attempt to extend El Paso's remarkable string of scoreless innings.

Bill Foley has a 17-game hitting streak going for the Milwaukee Brewers' farmhands.

Reynolds buys NBA's Rockets

Sports, cars, what's the difference?

By SHARON HERBAUGH
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Owning a National Basketball Association franchise is no more risky than being in the automobile business, says the Houston Rockets' new owner.

"I don't see any more problems in the sports business than in the car business the last four or five years," said Charlie Thomas, who owns 20 Ford dealerships here and is chairman of the Great Southern Bank of Houston.

Thomas and Sidney Shlenker, president of Pace Management and former president of the Houston Sports Association, which owns the Houston Astros baseball team, signed a letter of commitment Tuesday and made a cash payment of $11 million to $12 million, said Rockets' General Manager Ray Patterson.

The sale will be presented to the NBA owners in San Diego next week for their approval, and Rockets officials said they do not anticipate any problems.

AT A news conference, Thomas said he planned no immediate changes and supported "100 percent" the offer to keep free-agent center Moses Malone with the Rockets.

"We don't plan on doing anything differently. The record stands on its own," Thomas said. "You're going to see the same team."

The new owners were among a half-dozen groups who had offered to purchase the franchise from Maloof Industries of Albuquerque, N.M.

Contacted in Albuquerque, former owner Gavin Maloof said the amount paid for the team was "substantially more than what we purchased it for."

"The Rockets have been a great investment for us, no question about it. There was no reason for us to sell the team except it was like any other business transaction. We got an offer that was too good to turn down," Maloof said.

THOMAS, WHO said he has wanted for nearly four years to own a professional sports team, said he decided last week to make a bid for the team and set a 5 p.m. deadline Tuesday for the Maloof family to accept or reject the offer.

"He cut right through the tape," Patterson said. "That's the kind of operation and the kind of commitment we need — the ability to make decisions."

The Maloof family, under the direction of the late George J. Maloof, took over the Rockets in May 1979. They were the sixth owners of the franchise, which started in 1969 at San Diego.

The Rockets finished last season with a 46-36 record — third best in the franchise's history. They were eliminated from the NBA playoffs by Seattle in the first round. In 1981 they stunned the NBA by advancing to the championship series before losing to the Boston Celtics.

Reds edge Cards, Tribe rips Orange

Although they were played at the same time and at the same park, the first two games of the National Little League playoffs were as different as night and day.

The Reds, representing the Tower League, escaped a sixth inning rally by the Cardinals of the Mid-City League to take a 5-4 victory in the single elimination tournament while the North Central League Indians pounded out 19 hits to score a 26-0 victory over the Orange team of the Western League.

The Reds scored four of their five runs in the third inning as they chased starting pitcher Gabriel Salazar from the mound. The Cardinals' defense contributed to the Reds success with three errors and two passed balls in the fatal stanza.

That made the score 5-0 and gave winning pitcher Bryan Henson enough breathing room as he held the Cards to four runs on five hits.

In the other game, Jason Stone threw a no hitter for the North Central Indians while his teamates turned the basepads into a trackfield as they scored 26 runs against the hapless Orange team of the Western League.

Stone contributed from the plate as well with two doubles and a triple to lead the 19-hit attack.

Only three men reached base for the Orange team as Stone gave up one walk and two men reached base on errors.

Tower will face the Blue team, of the Eastern League, today at 6 p.m. at Henderson Park, south field.

The winner of that game will then play the Indians for the National League championship Thursday, same time, same place.

Robinson's pic costs 20 cents

NEW YORK (AP) — A postage stamp honoring Brooklyn Dodger great Jackie Robinson was unveiled at a ceremony Tuesday at which the man who broke the major league racial barrier was remembered for more than his accomplishments on the ballfield.

"Because of Jackie Robinson, anything we want in life is possible," said Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley, a college chum of Robinson's and mayor of the city where the Dodgers now play.

Bradley said that when he and Robinson attended UCLA, "we could not dream someday that blacks would be holding positions of great importance in this country."

The mayor, a candidate for governor of California, said Robinson's visibility as the first black man to play major league baseball paved the way for future civil rights legislation. "It is all possible due to the tremendous breakthrough Jackie made in entering pro baseball," Bradley said.

Male cheerleader first on Jills' squad

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — When the Buffalo Jills cheerleaders run onto the field before Buffalo Bills' games during the coming National Football League season, a man will be tagging along.

He is tan and muscular Jerry Ziffer, 27, who at 5-foot-9 and 155 pounds is the first man ever picked for the Jills' squad.

Ziffer, one of five alternates selected for the squad, said, "The women are giving me the more constructive kinds of comments. The men have been giving me the ribs. They've been giving me things like, 'What color leotard will you be wearing? Will they find boots for you?'"

Actually, Ziffer probably will be issued white slacks and a Bills' shirt, according to Chris Sullivan, the Jills' director.

Red Miller to coach USFL's Denver team

DENVER (AP) — Red Miller, former head coach of the Denver Broncos of the National Football League, will be named head coach of the Denver franchise of the new United States Football League, aecording to the Rocky Mountain News.

The newspaper said in today's editions that Miller would be named at a press conference today by Ron Blanding, owner of the Denver franchise in the USFL.

Blanding also is expected to announce his team's nickname and colors.

"All I can say at this time is that our coach will be announced Wednesday," Blanding said Tuesday. Miller was not available for comment.

However, the two met for several hours on Tuesday afternoon, the News said.

Blanding had talked with both Miller and Lou Saban, a former Denver Bronco coach who now is president of the New York Yankees, about taking the head coaching position with his USFL team.

Miller led the Broncos to their only Super Bowl appearance in 1978, when they lost to the Dallas Cowboys.

Texas businessman signs letter of intent to buy Nuggets

By JOE WHEELAN
Associated Press Writer

DENVER (AP) — Texas businessman B.J. "Red" McCombs Tuesday signed a letter of intent to buy 100 percent of the Denver Nuggets of the National Basketball Association.

McCombs and Carl Scheer, Denver's president and general manager, announced at a news conference that the agreeement was reached just hours earlier. Details of the reported $10 million sale were not immediately available.

The deal will be closed within a couple of weeks, probably by the first of July, Scheer said.

Scheer said he expects to request formal approval of the sale from the NBA's board of governors immediately. The board is scheduled to meet in Coronado, Calif., next week, and Scheer said he does not expect difficulties in winning approval for the sale.

McCombs, a San Antonio businessman who has automobile and ranching interests in Colorado, said that he plans to be involved in "every major decision" involving the club. He also said he intends to keep Scheer on as general manager and Doug Moe as head coach.

McCombs is part owner of the NBA's San Antonio Spurs and helped establish that franchise after moving the team from Dallas in 1973.

McCombs will to sell his share of the Spurs to win NBA approval as the Denver franchise owner.

McCombs said today he had signed a five-year contract with Denver city officials for the Nuggets' continued use of McNichols Sports Arena. There had been one year remaining on the Nuggets' earlier contract with the city, but McCombs said he wanted to start out fresh.

"I don't bring any miracles here to Denver," McCombs said. "I'm not on any ego trip."

He acknowledged that pro basketball is having difficulties, but said, "We will bring Denver a solid operation that can compete."

McCombs had offered to assume all of the debts from the 34 owners of the franchise, including a $4 million bank loan on the books since 1976 when the Nuggets of the American Basketball Association had to pay admission into the NBA when the two leagues merged.

The franchise also is behind in its paychecks to several players, including high-priced David Thompson and former player Charlie Scott.

A Nuggets owner said McCombs and his attorneys had been able to negotiate "a much better deal" with Denver city officials than had the current Nuggets management for base rent at McNichols Arena. McCombs has said that would be one of his requirements for buying the club.

American League Roundup

White Sox' Hoyt first major league 10-game winner

BY TOM CANAVAN
Associated Press Writer

LaMarr Hoyt has the fundamentals down again. It's just the pain in his pitching arm that's botherng him now.

Hoyt fired a masterful three-hitter to become major league baseball's first 10-game winner this season as the Chicago White Sox blanked the Oakland A's 7-0 Tuesday night.

"I was just happy to keep my fundamentals straight," said the bearded right-hander after ending a personal three-game losing streak. "I mixed up my pitches very well — a good slider, sinker, and fastball. I just wanted to get back to the way I throw the ball best," he said after his first shutout of the season.

Hoyt, who won his first nine decisions, says he's been bothered by stiffness in his right forearm and bicep recently.

"It happened two starts ago in the Texas game," said Hoyt, 10-3. "I started feeling some stiffness in the muscles in my throwing arm. I could still pitch, but I was in some pain."

In other games Tuesday night, Milwaukee downed Baltimore 6-3, New York edged Boston 5-4, Kansas City whipped Minnesota 7-4, Toronto whitewashed California 2-0 and Texas defeated Seattle 5-2. Detroit at Cleveland was postponed by rain.

"Let's face it — a lot of pitchers wouldn't even have been out there throwing with the pain I've been in," added Hoyt.

White Sox Manager Tony LaRussa downplayed Hoyt's apparent problems, which have not caused the pitcher to miss a start.

"It's nothing really serious," said LaRussa. "In the Texas game, he was just slinging the ball. He was out of his natural rhythm. It happens all the time."

Hoyt walked one and struck out seven in lowering his league-leading earned run average to 2.24.

Wayne Gross got the first two hits off Hoyt, an infield single in the second inning and a single to right in the seventh. Rickey Henderson doubled to lead off the A's ninth.

The White Sox scored three times in the first inning on Greg Luzinski's RBI grounder and Harold Baines' two-run double. Steve Kemp's run-scoring ground out made it 3-0 in the second.

Henderson, who leads the league in stolen bases, swiped his 64th base 63 games in the first inning after reaching on a error.

Yankees 5, Red Sox 4

Ken Griffey's two-run homer off reliever Mark Clear capped a three-run eighth-inning rally as New York downed Boston.

"I was just trying to hit the ball hard and keep it going," Griffey said after his third home run of the season and first in the Yankee Stadium made a winner out of reliever Goose Gossage, 3-2.

With the Red Sox leading 4-2, Dave Collins led off the eighth with a double, chasing Boston starter Bruce Hurst. One out later, Collins scored on Andre Robertson's single and Griffey, who earlier extended his hitting streak to seven games, homered to right field.

Boston took a 4-2 lead in the seventh inning on Rick Miller's sacrifice fly and RBI singles by Gary Allenson and Jerry Remy.

Brewers 6, Orioles 3

Bob McClure didn't give roommate Robin Yount an ultimatum, but his neddling about needing some support certainly helped.

Yount clubbed a two-run homer in the first inning and put Milwaukee ahead with a two-run triple in the eighth following a crucial two-out error by Cal Ripken Jr. as the Brewers whipped Baltimore.

"I'd been getting on my roomie because in the last five years he had never hit a homer when I pitched," McClure said. "But I think he's hit five in my last five starts. Maybe I'd better leave him alone now."

Milwaukee's Gorman Thomas added a home run, his 13th, in the ninth.

Eddie Murray hit a solo homer for Baltimore, which lost for only the second time in its last 10 games.

Rangers 5, Mariners 2

Dave Hostetler knocked in three runs with a pair of homers, his fourth in the last four games, as Texas beat Seattle for the first time in five games this season. Hostetler now has six homers since being called up by the Rangers from Denver on May 28.

"This is my biggest night in the big leagues. Hopefully, I can help the Rangers out and stay around a long time," Hostetler said.

"We knew how strong he was. To me, he's a Frank Howard with strength," said Texas Manager Don Zimmer. "He hits the ball as far as anybody in the game today."

Seattle got solo home runs from Julio Cruz and Al Cowens.

Royals 7, Twins 4

Bud Black posted his first major league victory and John Wathan had two hits and scored three times as Kansas City handed Minnesota its 23rd defeat in its last 25 games.

"It's something special and I'll always remember it," said Black, whom the Royals recalled from Omaha of the American Association this week. He surrendered only five hits and one run through seven innings. Dan Quisenberry pitched the final 12-3 innings to pick up his league-leading 17th save after reliever Don Hood gave up a three-run homer to Jesus Vega in the eighth.

The Royals ripped Al Williams, 2-5, for two runs in the first on an RBI single by Willie Aikens and a run-scoring double by Hal McRae.

Willie Wilson's two-run single was the key blow in the Royals' four-run fourth inning.

Blue Jays 2, Angels 0

Dave Revering poked a two-run homer in the ninth inning to back the five-hit pitching of Jim Clancy as Toronto snapped California's three-game winning streak.

"Now that the trading deadline is gone, it's time to start playing some baseball," said Revering, referring to the 8 p.m. EDT cutoff point for major league trades. The first baseman has been played for three teams in the past 12 months.

Clancy, 7-3, walked one and struck out four in pitching his fourth complete game of the season. Angel starter Mike Witt, 3-1, lost for the first time since Sept. 18, 1981. He had won six games in that span.

Rod Carew picked up one of the Angels hits, extending his batting streak to 19 games, the longest of his 15-year career.

Japan's Tigers beat Swallows

TOKYO (AP) — Kim Allen, formerly of the Seattle Mariners, hit a solo home run, his third of the Japanese League baseball season, as the Hanshin Tigers beat the Yakult Swallows 6-4 Tuesday.

The Lotte Orions edged the Nankai Hawks 3-2 on Leon Lee's two homers. It was Lee's 11th and 12th homers of the season drove in all the Orion runs.

Cooney apologizes to fans for defeat

NEW YORK (AP) — One word kept spilling from Gerry Cooney's lantern jaw, the one that Larry Holmes had tagged so often and so effectively: "Sorry ... sorry ..."

Cooney failed to wrest from Holmes the World Boxing Council heavyweight championship last Friday night in the ring in the Caesars Palace parking lot. On Monday night he stepped off a plane at Kennedy Airport apologizing to the several hundred fans who showed up to greet him.

Apparently he needn't have apologized for being stopped with eight seconds remaining in the 13th round. The crowd of well-wishers chanted his name over and over again and carried "Cooney Country" signs. Cooney is from nearby Huntington, N.Y.

"I'm sorry I let them down," Cooney said as the chanting continued. Then, after wiping away some tears, he turned to his fans and said, "I love being back — I'm sorry I've been away so long — and I'm sorry I couldn't bring back the title."

Over 20 couples entered the low ball of the two-some with full handicap tournament, and the next Sunday play day for couples will be July 11.

The right setting is needed to touch off virtuosity

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Just imagine a set of circumstances in which the Mona Lisa couldn't hang in the Louvre but hung on a nail in the back of a body shop in Marseille. What if Michelangelo had to paint the story of Creation on a lavatory wall in Altoona instead of the Sistine ceiling?

Suppose Caruso never got to sing in the Met, Olivier never made it to the Old Vic. What if Heifetz never played Carnegie Hall, Paderewski had to give concerts on an old spinet? Would you give Segovia a banjo? What if Napoleon never had anything more than a platoon of pettifoggers to war with? Supposing Hemingway were published only in pulp magazines.

To hobble genius is to deny it. An object of art hidden away in a cluttered attic is an object of pity.

In sports, too, you need the setting to touch off virtuosity. That's why Rodney Cline Carew is, in some respects, a pathetic victim of history. He has always been in the wrong place at the wrong time. It's not always what you do, its where you do it. One of my all-time favorite theatrical lines comes from the play "Magdalena" where the French general, transferred from Paris to the jungles of Colombia, tries to convince his mistress they will be great lovers amid the hibiscus and orchids in the moonlight, but she won't buy it. "In Paris, great lovers," she tells him scornfully. "In the jungle – two monkeys!"

Rod Carew has simply never played Paris. Or Broadway. He is one of the certified all-time great strikers of the baseball, a magician with the bat, an artist at the plate, a cinch first-ballot Hall of Famer. Carew at bat is one of the greatest shows on earth. But it, so to speak, closes out of town. It has played only New Haven.

Rod Carew has never been in a World Series, that great showcase of the grand old game where even secretaries in insurance offices who never pay any attention to the sport the rest of the year rush home to see if their ticket won the office pool, and where the viewership of the game rises dramatically and it becomes an American ritual, a tribal rite where commerce frequently stops 'til they see whether Valenzuela can get the side out.

Do you think Babe Ruth could have become the towering figure he did if it were not for the 10 World Series? And the Babe only had radio. Television makes the series star 10 feet taller.

President Kennedy said life is not fair, and nowhere is it more evident than in the list of players who have starred in World Series. Banjo hitters get lucky for a week. Sore-armed pitchers find one last no-hitter concealed in the hemorrhages of the muscles. In other words, guys who should never be there take it over. Stars frequently fumble the assignments, probably because too much is expected of them or they try to exceed even that.

Ty Cobb got in only three World Series and then at the very outset of his career. Ted Williams made only one miserable World Series. Walter Johnson and Al Kaline only made it in the deep twilights of their careers.

To give you an idea, Billy Williams and Ernie Banks were absolutely superb baseball players of their time. Billy Williams had the most beautiful stroke at the plate you will ever see. He hit 426 home runs, batted .290, played 18 years and the most consecutive games of any player ever in the National League. He should be in the Hall of Fame but isn't. He should have been in a World Series, but wasn't. Ernie Banks is in the Hall of Fame. But he did it the hard way. He never made the World Series either. He hit 512 home runs and drove in a hundred runs seven times in his career. But Billy and Ernie played on the Chicago Cubs. That's the diamond equivalent of hanging on a wall in a body shop in Peoria.

Rod Carew won seven batting titles in his career. Only Cobb and Rogers Hornsby have won more. You talk of Carew in the same breath with the immortals of the game. But Rod played his career with the Minnesota Twins which is not exactly the Sistine ceiling of baseball.

Rod Carew was a connoisseur's ballplayer, an acquired taste, an inside secret. Rod Carew is just syllables in the ear to most casual fans. He never played the Palace, Broadway, prime time. He never made the fall classic. The fan knows he's good, but it's on an I'll-take-your-word-for-it, or if-you-see-so basis.

When Rod Carew got traded to the Angels in the winter of '79, a lot of fans thought an historical wrong was going to be righted. And, right away, the Angels came as close as Rod Carew was to get to a World Series. They got in the playoff that year, which Carew had done before, but they also won a game in it, which Carew had never done before and which Carew did personally by bringing in the winning run in this instance.

But, then, the fog closed down again. Carew was going to be like the actor who never gets the right part. He was doomed to a supporting role in his chosen profession.

Does this bother Rodney Cline Carew? Keenly. I went down to the Angel locker room to see how this 16-year-veteran was taking life in the shadows. Not well.

"The World Series is why you go to spring training, it's why you go through the 162 games, why you keep your body fit, your mind alert. It's what it's all about," he pointed out.

What sacrifices would a Rod Carew be willing to make for baseball's big tent? For instance, if he had a choice, would he prefer to bat .400 or play in the World Series?

That question was loaded. Batting .400, which Carew almost did five years ago, is almost another dimension, at the very least on a plateau with series stardom.

"Individual goals are very nice," Carew admitted. "Individual achievements are stars in your scrapbook. But they are not the object of this game now, are they?"

Would he rather make a World Series than bat .400? "Yes," said Rod Carew. "You show me a player who would rather hit .300 or even higher than play in the World Series and I'll show you a player who's crazy."

Well, then, if he had it in his power to say, okay, I'll bat .215 if the team will then make the World Series, would he?

Carew grinned. "Well, I have no intention of ever hitting .215," he began. "But I think if you have pride and you want to play where millions are watching, you have to make a clear choice. You have to want to perform at the summit of your profession. You take Billy Williams and Ernie Banks, they played – what? – 38 years between them? They got – what? – 3,200 hits and almost 1,000 home runs between them? And they never showcased in a World Series. That's sad."

No sadder than a Rodney Cline Carew not playing in it. In fact, not as sad.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

National League Roundup

Reuss helping Los Angeles break out of doldrums

By MIKE EMBRY
AP Sports Writer

The Los Angeles Dodgers may be breaking out of their doldrums if pitcher Jerry Reuss' last two starts are any indication.

The defending world champions, sitting 7½ games behind the Atlanta Braves in the National League West, haven't been setting the league on fire this season.

But Reuss, a big 6-foot-5, 225-pound left-hander, has given other teams in the league reason to believe the Dodgers will be challenging the Braves somewhere down the line.

Reuss, coming off a one-hitter against the Cincinnati Reds, stopped San Diego 3-0 Tuesday night, limiting the Padres to only five hits while striking out seven.

The victory, his third shutout of the season, raised Reuss' record to 7-5. It also was the 150th of his career.

And in both games he used a pitch he developed back in high school to puzzle the hitters.

"I can't describe it," Reuss said. "I throw it like a curveball, but it's faster than a curveball. It's not necessarily a strikeout pitch, but I use it to set up strikeouts."

Elsewhere in the National League, Atlanta beat Houston 7-0, St.Louis edged Montreal 3-2 in 11 innings, Chicago whipped Philadelphia 8-5, Pittsburgh trimmed New York 13-3 and San Francisco defeated Cincinnati 4-3.

"There's no doubt I'm back in the groove now," said Reuss, who had lost four of his last five decisions before he resurrected his pitch.

The Dodgers scored all their runs in the seventh inning to break a scoreless duel between Reuss and John Curtis, 5-4.

Ron Cey led off the inning with a homer and Dusty Baker's had a two-run single.

Braves 7, Astros 0

Bob Walk's four-hitter and Atlanta's 14-hit attack strengthened the Braves' claim that they are for real this season.

"I realize things look a little upside down to some people," Walk said of the NL West standings. "They had better get used to it. We've always known we could win. We just needed a little confidence. Everyone knows we are a contender now."

In registering his first shutout of the season, Walk struck out five and walked one in improvipg his record to 6-4. He threw 32-3 innings of no-hit ball before Ray Knight singled to right-center.

"We haven't seen Walk very much," said Houston Manager Bill Virdon, "but that's the best we've seen of him."

Bob Horner provided most of the power for the Braves, driving in three runs on a pair of doubles.

Bob Knepper, 2-8, was tagged with the loss.

Cardinals 3, Expos 2

The Cardinals opened their lead in the NL East to four games with their victory over the second-place Expos.

Willie McGee was the unlikely hero, breaking out of a 1-for-16 slump to deliver an RBI-single with one out in the bottom of the 11th inning.

McGee's hit scored Lonnie Smith, who had a leadoff double off loser Ray Burris, 2-8.

St.Louis tied the game 2-2 with two outs in the eighth on a throwing error by Montreal second baseman Tim Raines. Keith Hernandez scored from third when Raines' throw to first on Smith's hard grounder pulled first baseman Terry Francona off the bag.

Cubs 8, Phillies 5

John Johnstone cracked a two-run homer in the third inning to spark the Cubs to their second straight victory after losing 13 in a row. It was the fourth consecutive defeat for Philadelphia.

Johnstone's homer, his third of the year, came after Bump Wills hit a two-out single. It gave Chicago a 2-0 lead.

Chicago took control with four runs in the sixth for a 7-3 lead, the big hit being Leon Durham's two-run single.

Bo Diaz led the Phillies with three RBI, one in the fourth on a fielder's choice and two in the sixth on a single.

Pirates 13, Mets 3

The entire Pirate lineup got into the offensive act as they battered New York pitchers for 17 hits in the romp.

Jason Thompson did most of the damage, stroking two doubles and a home run and driving in five runs. It was Thompson's 14th homer of the season, but only his first in June.

Pitcher Rick Rhoden, 3-6, helped his cause with two singles, two runs and two RBI. New York's Charlie Puleo, 5-4, was the victim of the onslaught.

Giants 4, Reds 3

Tom Seaver, 3-7, continued to have his troubles, lasting only 11-3 innings in the Cincinnati loss. He pitched to 11 batters, with eight of themlreaching base by hit or walk.

The game was delayed more than two hours by three rain delays.

Chili Davis singled twice and scored a pair of runs and Joe Morgan rapped three hits to lead the Giants.

Bill Laskey, 5-4, was the winning pitcher, but needed relief help in the eighth after the Reds rallied for three runs. Gary Lavelle picked up his fourth save of the season.

Stadler refuses to be bothered about images

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Craig Stadler, the golfer who doesn't look like a golfer, refuses to get all hot and bothered about images.

"I guess I don't fit the mold people expect of a pro tournament golfer," says the paunchy, mustachioed Californian, rated by many as the player to beat in the 82nd U.S. Open Golf championship, starting Thursday.

"I admit I look like any ordinary guy. I don't know why people make such a big deal over it. One good thing is that they at least know I am around. I only wish they'd appreciate me more for my golf."

Winner of the Masters, the first of the Grand Slam events, he is the only player to have won three tournaments on the tour this year and he is the leading money winner with $312,058.

Such dignitaries as Jack Nicklaus, Arnold Palmer and Tom Watson as labeling him as one of the chief threats for the title over Pebble Beach's exacting ocean links.

Stadler is a pillowy, jovial fellow with a heavy reddish mustache, a receding hairline and a 46-inch waist.

They call him "The Walrus."

STADLER IS more amused than annoyed at the nickname, the constant references to his poorly distributed 200 pounds and what has been hailed as an explosive temper.

"That's exaggerated, too," he says. "Sure, I get sore when I make a stupid shot. But it only lasts until I get to my next shot. That's better than letting it seethe in your gut and letting it all out when you get home."

Stadler has become the hero of the truck drivers and the brick layers and little old ladies who do their crocheting on the subways.

He's the prototype as well as the idol of the guy who carries his own bag around the park courses and afterward douses his frustration with a half-dozen beers.

Winner of the National Amateur championship while a sophomore at the University of Southern California, he failed to pass the TPA qualifying school in 1975 but finally made it in 1976.

Hindered by an ungovernable temper, he struggled through his first few years and didn't win his first tour event until he captured the Bob Hope Desert Classic in 1980.

Since then, he has won five more tournaments, three this year. Television fans saw him sweep past the great Jack Nicklaus to win the Kemper Open in Bethesda, Md., earlier this month.

"He could be the next dominant player," says Palmer. "He makes his golf swing work for him. It all depends on his attitude and desire."

Stadler's fresh, down-to-earth image is quite unique in a game in which players look so much alike you can't tell them apart until you toss them on a putting green and watch their stroke.

BOB JONES was the Southern gentleman. Sam Snead was the West Virginia hillbilly with the perfect swing. Ben Hogan was the dour machine in a white cap who dropped half-smoked cigarettes and pressure putts on every green.

Palmer, like Stadler, was the pride of the masses, a greenkeeper's son with a go-for-broke charge but he captivated the ladies also with a boyish charm. Nicklaus created the modern mold — a blond stylist with an impeccable game and manners to match.

Stadler once let his weight balloon to 210 pounds and both he and his pretty, brunette wife, Sue, made a pact to lose weight. Sue, now pregnant with the Stadlers' second child, had lost 40 pounds. Craig got down to 190.

"He felt uncomfortable at 190," says Stan Wood, former golf coach at USC. "When he was heavier, Craig let his hands rest on a roll around his stomach and this was more natural to him.

"He felt it was more important to play good golf than improve his image."

Wood said Stadler was always basically shy and tended to minimize his feats. "I never once heard him brag," said the former coach. "I can understand his occasionally getting mad. He is such a perfectionist, he can't stand to blow a shot."

Walton, Cowens consider ending their retirements

NEW YORK (AP) — Bill Walton and Dave Cowens, both of whom were most valuable players as centers during their National Basketball Association careers, are considering ending their retirements, according to a published report.

Sources described as Walton's close friends by the New York Times were quoted in the newspaper's Wednesday editions as saying Walton soon will meet with San Diego Clippers officials and intensify his training.

The Times reported that Red Auerbach, the Celtics president and general manager, has been telling other general managers that Cowens, 33, has been working out and was considering a return to the club. Cowens retired in October 1980, and is now the athletic director at Regis College, a women's school near Boston.

Walton, who underwent foot surgery in January 1981, was pictured as wanting to determine if the foot could withstand the vigorous physical activity a return to pro basketball would involve.

Walton, 29, has been on the Clippers injured-reserve-list since his retirement in March 1981.

"He told me a couple of months ago he would like to play again," Paul Silas, Clippers coach, said Tuesday. "If it's true, I'll take him to camp and we'll see where it goes from there. I'd be delighted to have him back."

But Greg Lee, who played with Walton at UCLA and one year with the Portland Trailblazers, told RKO Radio Tuesday night that Walton's status remains questionable.

"He hadn't been doing anything extensive on it. He'd been riding his bike some, but it feels pretty good. There's a long step from playing around in the backyard and playing in the NBA. Any talk of a comeback is pretty premature.

"Time will tell. I think it's funny that everyone's written him up, and it's probably the best thing for him," said Lee. "Instead of having everyone waiting for his imminent return, all the pressure is off. They've just written him off and said he's never going to play again.

"He's only 28 years old. I think some time down the road he might surprise some people by playing, but that's just a feeling I have. No one knows."

Lee was house-sitting for Walton in San Diego while the former All-America center attended law school at Stanford. Walton will return Thursday.

Hagler has three bouts set

BROCKTON, Mass. (AP) — World middleweight boxing champion Marvin Hagler, picking up the pieces after a fight with Thomas Hearns fell through, has signed for three multimillion dollar defenses of his title this year.

The first fight will be against Fulgencio Obelmejias, of Caracas, Venezuela, in San Remo, Italy, July 15, Hagler's attorney, Stephen Wainwright said Tuesday.

The other two will be against Frank "The Animal" Fletcher of Philadelphia at Madison Square Garden in New York, Oct. 3, and against Englishman Tony Sibson, the top-ranked World Boxing Council contender, in December at a site to be announced.

All the fights will be telecast via Home Box Office and will be promoted by Bob Arum's Top Rank organization, said the lawyer.

Hagler was to have fought Hearns July 15 in Ontario, but the fight fell through last week when Hearns' camp came up with additional demands.

Hagler already is in training at Provincetown. He will travel to Italy two weeks before the Obelmejias fight.

He probably train from 1 a.m. to 3 a.m. Italian time to ready himself for the bout which will be start at 3 a.m. Italian time to be telecast back to the United States at prime time, said Wainwright.

"Marvin usually trains from 7-9 p.m. in the United States," said Wainwright. "When he gets over to Italy, there will be an adjustment in time for breakfast, lunch and dinner. He is going to have to train from 1 a.m. to 3 a.m., Italian time."

Hagler knocked out the South American Jan. 17, 1981, at the Boston Garden. Obelmejias is the World Boxing Association's No. 1 contender.

Wainwright said Hagler received a telegram last week from the WBA threatening to strip him of his title if he did not fight Obelmejias.

Cameroon holds Peru to scoreless tie in World Cup

By RICHARD BOUDREAUX
Associated Press Writer

MADRID (AP) — Cameroon's soccer team gave cause for a celebration in that African nation merely by qualifying for the World Cup finals.

And on Tuesday night the "Indominatable Lions" earned the first point by a newcomer in the 24-nation tournament.

The only black African team in the final, Cameroon made up for inferior technical skills with strength, speed and agility to hold vastly experienced Peru to a scoreless tie in La Coruna.

"I'm absolutely delighted," said Cameroon Coach Jean Vincent. "Today's result is already an exeeptional achievement."

New Zealand, where rugby is more popular than soccer, made a less impressive but nonetheless respectable cup debut. It fell three goals behind Scotland, battled back with two of its own, then lost 5-2 — but earned a standing ovation from the pro-Scottish crowd at Magala.

THREE OTHER nations are in their first cup final, thanks to a decision by the 150-nation Federation of International Football Associations to expand the tournament from 16 teams and allow more to qualify from outside Europe and South America, the sport's traditional strongholds.

Algeria and Honduras play their first matches in the tournament's 52-year history today against two-time cup winner West Germany and host nation Spain, respectively, while England battles France. Kuwait, the other newcomer, opens first-round play Thursday against Czechoslovakia.

For countries such as these, a draw or even a goal can be a moral victory. "We came to Spain to learn from the soccer giants," said Algerian Coach Maheddiene Khalef. "If we don't succeed in getting into the second round, it will not be doomsday."

THE PRESENCE of teams lacking in international experience is bound to result in some lopsided scores, such as the 10-1 thrashing Hungary gave El Salvador in Elche Tuesday night. It was the most goals ever scored by one team in a single tournament game and equaled the record nine-goal victory margin.

Hungary, which leads Belgium, Argentina and El Salvador in Group Three, got three goals in six minutes from Laszlo Kiss, who took an early lead in the World Cup scoring sweepstakes.

Cameroon, a country where soccer caught on only a decade ago, won more than a symbolic victory by shutting out Peru. It moved into a four-way draw with the three other Group One teams, a day after Poland and Italy also finished 0-0 in their group match.

The Peru-Cameroon game never reached any great heights, but goalkeeper Thomas Nkono and striker Roger Milla were outstanding for the African team. "Nkono stopped the best chances we had," Peruvian coach Elba de Padua Lima said.

New Zealand's loss put it at the bottom of Group Six, behind Scotland, tournament favorite Brazil and the Soviet Union. Scotland, notoriously vulnerable against lowly ranked opposition, was led by John Wark's two goals.

United States among final-round winners

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — The United States, Canada and South Korea won their final-round matches Tuesday night in the sixth William Jones Cup women's basketball tournament.

The U.S. quintet beat Taiwan's Kuanhua team 96-59 after leading 46-39 at halftime. It was the fifth victory against no losses for the U.S. team.

The Canadians, who also had won five straight games, trounced Sweden 53-40 after falling behind Sweden 20-24 at halftime. The Swedes grabbed one victory and suffered four losses.

South Korea downed France 86-65, after a 43-35 halftime lead. The France team had not won any of its matches, while South Korea had two victories against two losses.

Chacon on course for another boxing crown

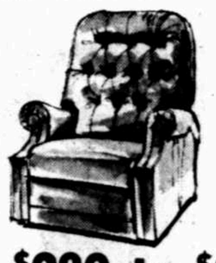

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Former world featherweight boxing champion Bobby Chacon extended his campaign for another title by winning a unanimous 10-round decision over Arturo Leon of Tuscon.

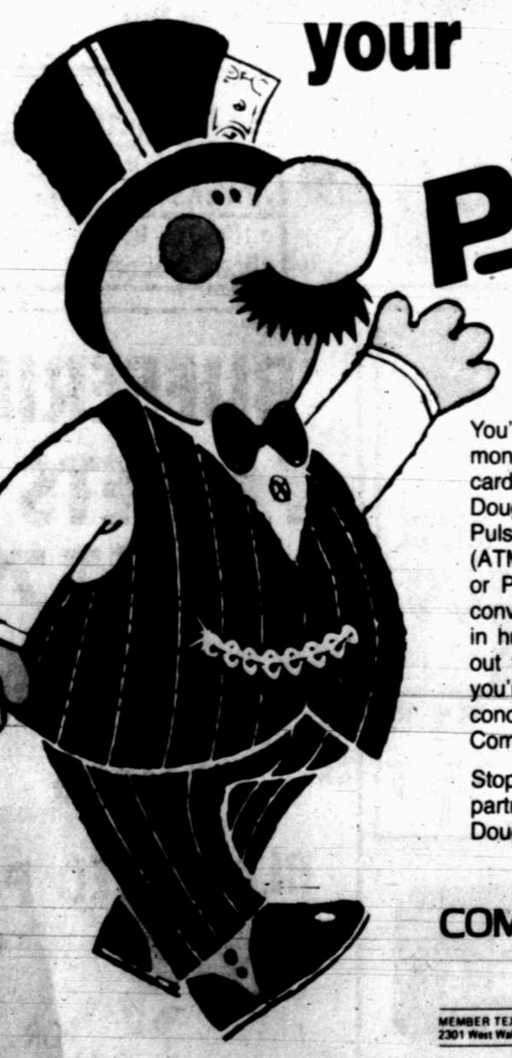

Chacon, 133, of Oroville, who hopes for a crack at the World Boxing Association's junior lightweight title, bettered his record to 50-6-1 as he scored his sixth consecutive victory Tuesday night.

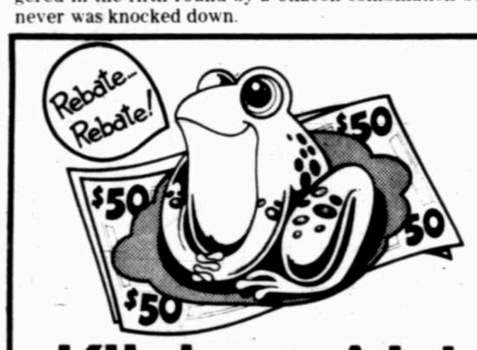

Leon, 40-21-3, knocked Chacon to the floor in the second round — the only round Chacon lost — and later cut him over both eyes.

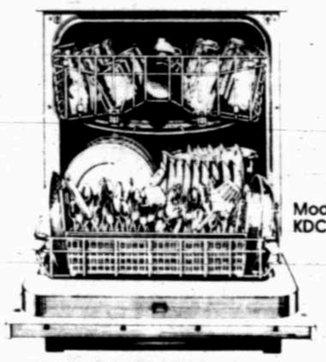

Leon, who emerged relatively unscathed, was staggered in the fifth round by a Chacon combination but never was knocked down.

Buck stops here

Special from Reader's Digest

On Army paydays, the wife of a second lieutenant whom I know hangs the following "husband reminder" on their apartment door: "The buck stops here!"

When we returned by air to the United States after a tour of duty in Okinawa, the flight, which had originated in Saigon, was more than half full of Vietnam veterans, bedraggled, weary and anxious to get home. We landed at Travis Air Force Base, and the stewardess made the customary announcement as to the order in which we would debark. First, all VIPs; then military men accompanied by their dependents; last, all other military personnel.

During the pause that followed, one lone GI rose from his seat, and we all stared curiously as he collected his gear from the overhead rack. Then he turned, smiled and announced calmly, "I am a Very Important Person." With that he marched out of the plane.

— PHYLLIS HALLETT, Ore.

A friend of mine was standing watch one day on his ship. The captain, passing by, noticed some oil on the deck. He asked where it had come from, and my friend said he would check. He slid under some machinery and, after inspecting the leak, slid out and replied, "It's coming from the BRT, sir."

To this the captain said, "Very well, carry on," and left rather hastily. Another sailor, overhearing the conversation, asked just what a BRT might be. My friend answered, "That Big Round Thing."

— MRS. R. DRISKILL, Ala.

• • •

During an Army inspection at my last summer camp in the reserves, I was standing next to a new recruit. As the colonel walked by, he noticed that the man did not have his name tag sewn on his uniform. The colonel asked, "What's your name, soldier?"

The recruit, nervous at his first inspection, looked down at his shirt and replied, "I haven't been issued one yet, sir."

— ROGER CURTIS, Wyo.

When my husband was quartermaster aboard a destroyer during World War II, he and four other shipmates decided to compile the "perfect" love letter. After weeks of adding flowery phrases here and deleting unpromising expressions there, the letter was complete. My husband typed the final version and made four carbon copies, for the men to copy in longhand and send to their respective wives or sweethearts. In due time the men received answers thanking them for the lovely letter. All except one. He got a letter from his girlfriend breaking their engagement. He had sent her his carbon copy!

— GRACE BOSHAW, Calif.

• • •

On his release from Fitzsimons Army Medical Center in Denver, Colo., my husband was given a prescription which read: "Take three times daily until exhausted."

— MRS. H.M. FIELDS, Wash.

• • •

The destroyer on which I served as executive officer was being put into commission. Just before the commissioning ceremonies began, the captain and I discussed some ship business. Then the captain delivered a short address, and I was unexpectedly called upon to speak. Unable to think on such short notice, I stood up and said, "The captain and I were exchanging ideas a few minutes ago, and now my mind is a blank." I didn't realize, until I heard laughter, just what I had perpetrated.

—WALTER K. PARKER, Ore.

We had just been assigned to the Army base at Fort Campbell, Ky., and our 6-year-old daughter was filled with wonder and awe at her father's new occupation. She kept my husband busy answering questions, as we drove around the base familiarizing ourselves with our new environment.

When we entered the commissary for the first time, our daughter noticed a pair of wings on a soldier's jacket. "What do the wings mean, Daddy?" she chirped enthusiastically.

"That means he's a paratrooper. He jumps for a living."

"Do you jump for a living, too?" she asked.

He looked at his single E-2 stripe. "Yes, honey," he said wistfully. "Every time the C.O. snaps his fingers."

— JACQUELINE DONHAM, Ky.

A busload of new recruits arrived at the reception center at Fort Dix, N.J., and was greeted by an old drill sergeant. He began his speech: "Welcome to Fort Dix, men. From now on, I want you to think of the Army as your family and as your home."

Hearing this, one of the recruits broke formation, sat down and lit a cigarette. "Private, what on earth are you doing?" asked the sergeant.

"Well," said the private. "I'm just making myself at home. Like you said, this is my home."

Thinking fast, the sergeant said, "Son, you listen good, and you're right. This is your home. So, as soon as you finish that cigarette, I want you to report to the mess hall to help your mother with the dishes."

Canine's Catch, Fetch contest to be held Saturday

It's time to drag the hound out of the doghouse and into training for that once-a-year prominent canine event known as the Catch and Fetch competition.

This year, the Cycle Dog Food Ashley Whippet Invitational Catch and Fetch contest will start at 7 p.m. Saturday at Hill Park, corner of Cuthbert and North G Street. It is being sponsored by the city Parks and Recreation Department.

There is no fee; all spectators and competitors are urged to attend.

Competition will be divided into the following events: basic throw, catch and freeflight. Prizes will include trophies and/or ribbons.

First place winner, as well as any contestant, will be able to advance to the regional finals to be held June 26 in Dallas. Participating dog-thrower teams will earn points for successfully completed catches at a distance of 15 feet from the throwers box. Points also can be earned for teamwork, leaping ability and style and the novelty of throws and catches performed.

Eligibility requirements call for proof of vaccination upon registration, which can be done before the competition.

Brochures which outline rules and requirements and registration forms are available at the Midland Parks and Recreation office, 300 Baldwin St., from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Further information may be obtained by telephoning 683-4281, extension 280.

Most tournament hands are computer dealt, which has led to a common complaint from players. They claim that computers produce weird distributions. To a certain extent, they might be correct. The deals are "different" from those dealt by hand, but only because they are truly random when hand-dealt ones aren't, and they are nearer the theoretical percentages.

In the recent Vanderbilt Knockout Team Championship, which the ACBL in its wisdom scheduled for Niagara Falls last March, the boards were dealt by hand. This is one of those hands and it is far wilder than anything we have seen produced by a computer. North-South were the veteran North American internationlists Edgar Kaplan of New York and Norman Kay of Philadelphia. East and West respectively were Ron Von der Porten and Kyle Larsen of San Francisco, one of the country's premier partnerships.

With a nine-, an eight- and a seven-card suit around the table, the bidding reached the high plateau in short time. Not surprisingly, Kay did not relish the prospect of defending five diamonds doubled, and his six spades was a reasonable shot.

Larsen led the three of hearts. Von der Porten rose with the ace to fell the king. Obviously, West had to have a very long diamond suit to leap to the five-level vulnerable, and that was confirmed by the fact that he did not lead his own suit — it had to be too long to lead. If West did indeed have a nine-card suit, twelve of his cards were known, for he was marked with three hearts.

Was West's remaining card a spade or a club? If it was a club, Von der Porten saw little chance to defeat the contract. So at trick two he shifted to a club. West ruffed for a very satisfying result.

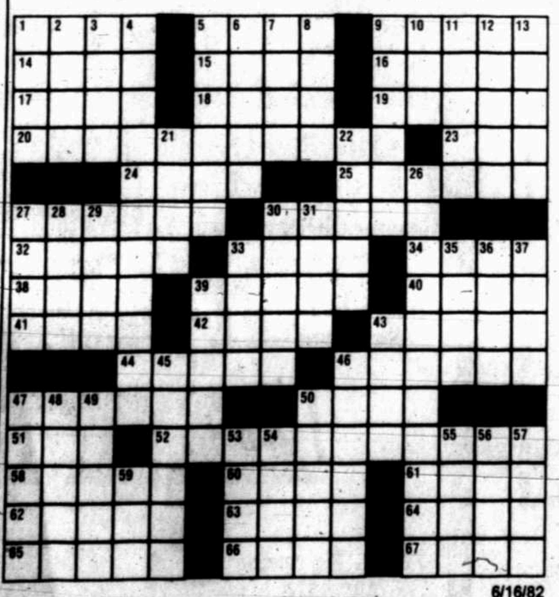

At the other table Sidney Lazard of New Orleans became declarer at six clubs. That contract was unbeatable.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. For a copy and a scorepad, send $1.75 to "Goren-Four Deal," care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 259, Norwood, N.J. 07648. Make checks payable to Newspaperbooks.

Treaty might improve return of stolen cars from Mexico

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The Senate is expected to approve later this month a treaty with Mexico designed to stem the flow of stolen American cars into Mexico and make their recovery by owners easier and quicker.

The treaty, which was initiated in 1979 during the Carter administration, was endorsed by the Reagan administration at a hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Howard Marks, an aide to Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the committee, said the panel is scheduled to vote its approval of the treaty early next week and send it to the Senate floor for a final vote. He said no opposition is expected.

THE MEXICAN SENATE ratified the treaty last December. The agreement would go into effect upon approval by the U.S. Senate.

Thefts of American cars for illegal sale in Mexico now total between 10,000 and 20,000 vehicles a year worth between $100 million and $200 million, Roger M. Olsen, deputy assistant attorney general, told the committee.

Smuggled American cars can be sold easily because Mexico doubles the price of imported cars with a 100 percent tariff. The stolen cars also are sold at prices below those of cars assembled at Mexican plants.

American owners have been frustrated by layers of seemingly uncooperative Mexican bureaucracy that, until recently, has not always helped secure the vehicles' return, Olsen said.

U.S. officials previously have said corruption by Mexican police and government officials has permitted the widespread trafficking in smuggled stolen cars to flourish. Owners of stolen cars frequently have had to pay bribes to get their cars back, if they hadn't already been sold, the officials added.

They cited the April indictment in San Diego of Miguel Nassar Haro, former head of Mexico's counterespionage police agency, on charges of involvement in a stolen-car ring responsible for the theft of $8 million worth of cars annually.

"THIS (TREATY) WOULD be the first step toward putting Mexican public officials on notice that any connection with or knowledge of vehicles stolen from the United States will no longer be tolerated," said San Diego County District Attorney Edwin Miller in a telephone interview.

"It's a good sign, a really significant step toward solving what has become a major international problem."

U.S. Attorney Peter K. Nunez did not return a reporter's call. Nunez succeeded former U.S. Attorney William H. Kennedy, who was fired two months ago by President Reagan for confirming a San Diego Union story that an indictment of Nassar was held up because he was considered a valuable source for the Central Intelligence Agency.

The proposed treaty, which would replace a 1936 agreement that both countries deem unworkable, would:

—require Mexican officials to notify immediately any U.S. government official in Mexico when a stolen U.S. vehicle has been found;

—prohibit Mexican officials from using the vehicles, requiring that they be impounded and protected;

—permit arrangements for the return of vehicles to be handled by local Mexican and U.S. officials;

—specify the standard vehicle ownership identification documents that would be necessary to get a vehicle released by Mexican officials.

Partly because of corruption and partly because of bureaucratic inefficiency, Mexican officials have not been much help to Americans and insurance companies seeking information about stolen cars believed to be in Mexico, Justice Department officials have said previously.

OLSEN TOLD THE Senate Foreign Relations Committee that stolen cars have been "virtually a risk-free criminal enterprise" in Mexico.

But, he said, "Mexican officials have changed their attitude recently" toward cooperation with U.S. law enforcement in correcting the problem.

Semiconductor industry aiming to beat slump

Copley News Service

Will the semiconductor industry's ebullient first-half performance this year prove to be a chip blip?

Increasingly, executives in the industry fear that "the summer doldrums will set in," as Robert Freischlag, senior vice president of Santa Clara's Fujitsu Microelectronics, put it.

However, an upturn should commence anew by the fourth quarter, "and we're looking for a helluva 1983," said Freischlag — and other executives agree.

The "summer doldrums" won't be a seasonal phenomenon: It will represent the depressing effect of a general plunge in capital goods markets. Specifically, the bugaboo is mainframe computers. To a large extent, the slump in capital goods nationally will be offset by a pickup on the consumer side. For the semiconductor industry, this would be in video games (which never felt the recession anyway), home electronics and such. All told, however, it looks like a plateau ahead until late this year.

ACCORDING TO THE Semiconductor Industry Association (SIA), sales last year fell 7.5 percent, to $9.28 billion. That's quite a dropoff, because this industry was accustomed to 25 percent annual growth rates in immediate prior years. In the main, however, the 7.5 percent downtick last year was a great improvement on the 1974-1975 recession, when the semiconductor industry took a horrendous bath.

This year, the SIA is expecting an increase of 8 percent. That's a definite case of lowered expectations, because late last year, the SIA was talking about 18 percent growth this year and a resumption of 25 percent growth in 1983.

"From talking with people, I get the idea there is an incredible amount of optimism in the industry. We feel that if the industry keeps running at its first quarter pace, we could grow 13 percent this year — our high range. However, if things do slow down, then our low range forecast is 3 percent," said Sheila Sandow, an SIA executive.

However, other executives aren't so effervescent. For more than a year, the semiconductor industry's book-to-bill ratio (the ratio of orders on the books to actual shipments) was running under 1-to-1 — a certain sign of troubles. Then, for the first two quarters of this year, it rose above 1-to-1. However, Thomas Skornia, former vice president and general counsel of Advanced Micro Devices, who is starting a venture capital operation, "Third Wave Associates," isn't so sure the positive ratio will hold up for the short term.

"IT'S TRUE THAT the book-to-bill ratio went above 1-to-1 in the first quarter and stayed above it in the second quarter. Orders are still strong. However, there are two sources of strength: small and intermediate-sized customers, who normally live hand-to-mouth or order off the shelves, and the video games companies such as Atari and Mattel.

"Those two groups have been strong, but the orders from the big computer mainframe companies — IBM, Honeywell, Digital Equipment — have been flat. And it will take the orders from the big computer makers to confirm the recovery," said Skornia.

One good sign is that the National Computer Conference just held in Houston was a smashing success: "They were expecting the attendance and number of exhibitors to be down 5 to 10 percent and they were up 5 to 10 percent," said Skornia. Nonetheless, he remains concerned that mainframe computers might not turn around until the capital spending slump bottoms out. And economists don't expect to see the capital spending bottom until at least late this year.

Robert Lorenzini, chairman and president of Siltec Corp., a silicon wafer maker, has similar reservations: "Our low quarter was the fourth of 1981, when we really hit bottom. Then we started seeing strength this January — our shipments were up 30 percent from last year's fourth quarter through this year's first quarter. Also, our book-to-bill ratio in the first quarter was above 1-to-1 for the first time in two years.

Sun's always shining for Dave Garcia

Copley News Service

CLEVELAND — It is 11 o'clock in the morning and it is raining, but Dave Garcia already is in uniform. The game — if there is to be a game this day — is 8½ hours away, yet the manager of the Cleveland Indians sits in the stadium catacombs wearing baseball togs.

"The sun will come out," Garcia says. "The sun always comes out...and if it doesn't, hey, this is only a game. We'll all meet back here tomorrow. That's what makes baseball so special. The sun always comes out."

The thing that makes Dave Garcia special is that he carries his sunshine within him. He loves what he is doing, yet he is able to keep things in perspective. Twice he walked away from managing in the minor leagues so that he might spend more time with his family in El Cajon, Calif.

"And I'm going to do it again," he said the other day. "I am 61 and I won't allow my grandchildren to grow up without me. I don't want to miss it."

It seems an odd time to talk of walking away. Garcia's Indians are the hottest team in baseball. His is a young, aggressive club that he says "makes mistakes and highlight films." It's a club of panache and pizazz, managed by the second-oldest skipper in baseball — the one who has been longest at his trade.

"He's really like a kid," said first baseman Mike Hargrove. "I mean, he has never forgotten how it is to be young. He is young."

"I know it sounds like a cliche," said coach Denny Sommers, "but Dave's a great guy. When we were going bad early, he never got down on the players. We're going good now and he's not blowing smoke. He sits back and says, 'How about this!' "

"Why am I successful?" Garcia asks, leaning back in his chair. "Yes, I think there is a reason. I've always been pretty good at handling people. Keeping players in a good frame of mind is very difficult...it's the toughest part of this job."

Garcia looks toward the ceiling, gathering his thoughts.

"Baseball," he starts. "Nothing about baseball bothers me. We can put too much importance on these jobs we have. They are not that important compared to other things. I've told my players that. Relax, have some fun."

Perhaps the importance of having fun was driven home to Garcia a few years ago, when he learned that Bobby Christian — an infielder he'd counseled before the youngster made the major leagues — had died, much too young, of cancer.

"There was a great kid," Garcia said. "He loved the game. He loved life. I just like being around kids like that.

"Most of us make too much out of so-called strategy. Managing against Billy Martin absolutely gives me a headache...he just wears me out. He's so unorthodox. That's fun, but baseball isn't strategy — it's kids. That's what we are: kids.

'Deep Throat' identity still unsolved mystery

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — As an assistant to Watergate prosecutors Archibald Cox and Leon Jaworski, John Barker was ordered to find Deep Throat. He couldn't.

"Deep Throat" was the name Washington Post reporters Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein used to refer to an unidentified source who provided them with clues and information that led to their reports on the Watergate coverup.

The identity of Deep Throat remains one of the unsolved mysteries of Watergate, although the burglary at Democratic headquarters that led to President Nixon's resignation happened 10 years ago Thursday.

Barker, a Little Rock resident who worked for Watergate prosecutors from 1973 to 1975, theorized that Deep Throat was a cover name for several people.

"We weren't able to pinpoint anyone," Barker said in a telephone interview Monday from Ponte Vedra Beach, Fla. "I wasn't able even to have any good suspicions.

"No one person had access to all that information. It was most likely a literary device by the authors," Barker said.

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Comedian Dean Martin faces arraignment in Beverly Hills Municipal Court on gun charges Friday — the day after his 65th birthday.

Martin

He was charged with having a concealed weapon and having a loaded .38-caliber pistol in his car when a California Highway patrolman stopped him May 9, said Al Albergate, a spokesman for the Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office.

The highway patrolman thought Martin was driving erratically. The comedian volunteered to take a blood test to determine if he was intoxicated and the test was negative, Albergate said.

Martin has been hospitalized for about a week for a complete physical and treatment of anemia and a kidney ailment, according to his agent, Mort Viner.

He was to be released today from Cedars-Sinai Hospital.

Each of the two gun charges is a misdemeanor carrying a fine of up to $500 and up to six months in jail upon conviction.

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Camilla Kimball, wife of Mormon Church President Spencer W. Kimball, has been released from a hospital where she was treated for gastro-intestinal bleeding.

Don LeFevre, spokesman for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, said the 87-year-old Mrs. Kimball was released from LDS Hospital here after doctors were able to stop the bleeding.

LeFevre said Mrs. Kimball was admitted to the hospital Friday.

The ailment may have been a recurrence of a bleeding ulcer Mrs. Kimball suffered previously, LeFevre said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A waiter who was arrested after climbing the 62-story First Interstate Bank building says he's already made some contacts in the film industry, where he hopes to get work as a stunt man.

Ronald Broyles, 28, said he was trying to get publicity to help him land a job as a stunt man when he scaled the building Monday morning using custom-made climbing gear that cost $2,000.

Businessmen not thrilled by proposed jail site

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Sheriff Dallas Smith's envisioned stockade in southeast Midland got a light barrage of flak Monday from a faction which contends that the proposed 7½-acre double-fenced compound would have an adverse effect on the area's economic development.

"Once the fence is built, we're dead," said Ken Peeler, spokesman for a group of Midland businessmen and landowners who have interests near the proposed site within the triangle formed by the Garden City Highway (Texas 158), Interstate 20 and Lamesa Road. "The threat is there."

Peeler said the stigma of a stockade would "inhibit the future development" in the area and suggested that land values there might be depressed due to the stockade.

"It's an industrial-type area, industrial and commercial," Peeler said, and the stockade would have a "bad economic impact" on that section of town.

The sheriff's plans, if ultimately approved by the Texas Commission on Jail Standards, are to have the stockade's military-like double fence and sentry towers constructed this summer, and to have tents pitched and minimum-security prisoners living in the compound.

Later, barracks are to be built for prisoners, as the county jail on the fifth floor of the Midland County courthouse is overcrowded.

"Of course," Smith noted, "the county owns the land at this current site."

The Peeler objection and the desire for additional stockade land may prod the commissioners to seek another site.

One proposal, which the sheriff has mentioned, is for prisoners to work in fields and to garden and farm and grow their own food and thereby relieve the taxpayers of added financial burdens. The commissioners apparently are considering shifting the stockade site to another of around 50 acres if land is available and affordable.

On June 23, the sheriff again is to meet with the Texas Commission on Jail Standards, of which he is a member, to get final approval on the plan. "I feel good about it," he said. "I think that will sell."

In the meantime, the sheriff got the Commissioners' Court approval to seek applicants and to hire 12 additional deputies — nine guards, two jailers and a lieutenant — to man the stockade.

"If they (jail commissioners) say its going to take 50 men, we've got to do something else," he said of the off-chance the commission nixes his plan.

The Commissioners' Court proposes to use the stockade for two or three years and then convert the facility for use by the county's road-and-bridge department after a new jail is built.

"We're going to have to have a bond issue anyway," said Commissioner Durward Wright. He mentioned jail cost of between $6 million and $15 million. "We've got to have a jail."

The jail, which takes up the top floor of the 1929-30-vintage courthouse, has a capacity for slight more than 100 prisoners. And the jail population, like that of the city and county, is constantly on the increase.

Border Patrol officer accused of forcing sex on two women

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Two Mexican women driven around an El Paso neighborhood by an investigator were able to point out the apartment of a Border Patrol officer accused of violating the women's civil rights, the investigator has testified.

Immigration and Naturalization Service investigator Nicolas Gallardo said Tuesday the women identified Border Patrolman David M. Davila's apartment as the place where they allegedly were coerced into having sex with two patrol officers.

Davila and fellow patrolman Robert M. Jacques are charged with violating the women's civil rights by forcing them to have sex, and with obstruction of justice for allegedly falsifying official reports.

Gallardo testified that he drove the women around Davila's neighborhood after they said that was where the activity had occurred. He quoted the women as saying, "That's it," when they saw Davila's apartment.

Former Fort Bliss soldier William Ward testified Monday that he and fellow soldier Warren Palmer brought the women into El Paso Oct. 18, 1980, through a hole in a fence near the International Bridges over the Rio Grande.

He said the four were stopped by two Border Patrol agents, who released the men and said they would turn the women over to Mexican authorities.

The women, Alicia Ortiz and Norma Munoz-Pro, said they were told the soldiers would get in trouble if the women did not have sex with the patrolmen.

Ms. Ortiz since has married Palmer.

Unemployment rates up in all but three states

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unemployment rose in all but three states from April 1981 to last April, according to newly released government figures.

Only New York, North Dakota and West Virginia had lower unemployment rates based on preliminary seasonally unadjusted figures in April 1982, when compared to the same month a year ago, said a report released Tuesday by the Labor Department.

The report did not account for the fractional declines in New York and North Dakota. But it said the fact that West Virginia's unemployment rate was higher a year ago was due largely to the effects of a coal miners' strike.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics said unemployment rose in 47 states and the District of Columbia over the year. The number of states with double-digit joblessness increased five-fold — from three to 15. At the same time, only seven states had jobless rates of 6 percent or less, compared to 15 in April 1981, the report said.

Despite the national trend toward rising unemployment, the level of joblessness actually declined slightly in 37 states from March to April on a seasonally unadjusted basis, according to the report.

The rates went up slightly in nine states: Hawaii, Massachusetts, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Vermont and Wyoming. They remained unchanged in four: Arizona, Maine, Mississippi, Wisconsin and the District of Columbia.

Fifteen states and the District of Columbia had jobless rates of 10 percent or more in April, according to the report. They were: Alabama, Alaska, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Washington state, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

The bureau's April figures for the states — unlike the national jobless statistics — are not adjusted to take into account such seasonal variations as weather and school closings.

Michigan, with its heavy concentration on automobile manufacturing, once again led the way with a jobless rate of 15.5 percent, although that was down from the seasonally unadjusted figure of 17 percent for March.

Nationally, the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for April was 9.4 percent, setting a new post-war record. That rate moved up slightly to 9.5 percent in May. State-by-state figures for May are not yet available.

June car sales show slight drop

DETROIT (AP) — The slim, 0.1 percent drop in domestic new car sales during the first 10 days of June was primarily the result of reduced sales incentives by two major automakers, an industry analyst says.

The five major U.S. manufacturers said Tuesday they sold 173,748 cars in the June 1-10 period, down slightly from 173,936 sold in early June 1981.

Ford Motor Co., which continued a program of price discounts and extended warranties but reduced the number of cars covered by the offer, reported its sales were up 18.6 percent for the period. Chrysler Corp. continued its sales incentive program of five-year warranties through the period and reported a 4.8 percent increase in sales.

Faking social security cards quite common, official says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government investigators said today that phony Social Security cards are being used extensively around the nation to obtain federal benefits.

"Investigations are identifying more and more fraudulently created SSN's (Social Security numbers)," said Daniel F. Lane of the inspector general's office in the Health and Human Services Department. "Once an SSN is established it cannot be removed from the data base."

Moreover, the Social Security Administration has no procedures for alerting other agencies that the cards are fake, Lane said in testimony prepared for a hearing by the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

The panel's staff estimated Tuesday that false federal documents used for personal identification may be costing American taxpayers $24 billion a year.

Based on a 10-month study, the subcommittee said taxpayers are losing untold billions in phony Social Security benefits, food stamps and student loans, and criminals are using the phony IDs to defraud banks, credit card companies and private businesses.

Roscoe L. Egger, head of the Internal Revenue Service, said that phony Social Security numbers can be used to obtain tax refunds. A program begun in 1977 to detect fraud has been partly successful, said Egger.

But he said efforts to prevent undeserved refunds must be balanced against the need to handle proper refunds quickly. The IRS issued nearly 74 million refunds last year, he added.

Lane testified today that "Project Baltimore," a joint federal investigation, has uncovered extensive forgery that has led to 114 convictions, four more indictments and 129 cases under investigation.

But he hinted that the work so far may only be scratching the surface.

For example, said Lane, two New York con men posing as priests were convicted of selling fraudulent Social Security cards and immigration documents to illegal aliens.

Social security may have to borrow from Treasury

WASHINGTON (AP) — Delays in correcting problems with Social Security make it inevitable that the system will have to borrow from the general Treasury to escape the crisis looming in the next two years, a congressman predicts.

Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, the chairman of the House Ways and Means subcommittee on Social Security, said Tuesday that public confidence in the system is at an all-time low because Congress and the Reagan administration have failed to come to grips with its problems.

Federal withholdings will be effective July 1

WASHINGTON (AP) — A typical worker with a spouse and two children who earns the median weekly income of $467 will take home an extra $6 a week under the federal income tax cut that will show up in paychecks starting July 1.

The amount of federal income tax withheld from that worker's paycheck will drop to $53.60 a week, a reduction of 10.1 percent. That is down 14.8 percent ($9.30) from the $62.90 withheld before the first step of the gradual tax cut enacted last year went into effect on Oct. 1.

The cut in withholding will range from 40 cents a week for a single person earning $100, to $13.40 for the $1,000-a-week married worker.

As a rule, the drop in withholding is fairly close to the actual tax reduction at each wage level, meaning most taxpayers are unlikely to see a major shift in what they owe the government or get in refunds when they file their returns next spring.

The Internal Revenue Service has mailed new withholding tables to give the nation's employers time to prepare for the second stage of the tax reduction.

'Con Man of the Year' has turned his life around

By DOLORES BARCLAY

NEW YORK (AP) — It read like a classic movie script, with an array of arresting characters and enough pretzel patterns in the plot to hatch a Hitchcock caper.

Characters: a roguish but charming itinerant writer named Clifford with a pretty and capricious wife and an exotic and sensual blonde lover, a reclusive and eccentric billionaire.

Locale: a tiny Mediterranean island. Switzerland. New York.

Plot: rip off the publishing industry for $650,000-plus with a faked autobiography of the eccentric billionaire.

Denouement: jail.

Sequel: charming ex-con craves credibility as a serious writer.

Clifford Irving, who a decade ago spearheaded the real, infamous autobiography hoax of the late billionaire Howard Hughes, is trying to establish himself as a serious author who can indeed write and who is not just another con artist.

HIS TICKET to literary respect is his new novel, "Tom Mix and Pancho Villa" (St. Martin's Press, $16.95).

"I love this book," Irving said. "It was a real labor of love. It took me five years on and off to write. I researched while I wrote."

It is a romantic adventure set during the Mexican revolution, involving the unlikely Americans who fought with Poncho Villa. One was silent film star Tom Mix, Hollywood's first glamorous celluloid cowboy. The story is told from his point of view.

Mix goes to Mexico in 1913, where he meets the charismatic rebel leader. He journeys with the revolutionaries through war-torn Mexico. In the midst of death and destruction, are Tom's great loves: his Jewish fiance from Texas and a young Indian woman.

Though the book has been well received by critics, who praised Irving for his prose and for his use of action in the novel, Irving had trouble gaining the acceptance of the publishing community.

"There was a lot of prejudice against me from publishers and reviewers," Irving said. "They were not taking me seriously...I was just constantly being referred to as a con man.

"THE PAST is dead to me," he said. "Every interviewer always wants to ask me about the hoax. The subject bores me.

"When I got out of jail, I had a need to justify myself — to convince people that I wasn't a criminal," he said.

Irving was sentenced June 16, 1972, to 2½ years in prison for trying to swindle McGraw-Hill Inc., out of more than $650,000. The writer had told the publishing house he had compiled an autobiography of Hughes as the result of 100 secret meetings.

The meetings never took place, and the book was deemed a fraud.

Edith Irving, the writer's German-born Swiss ex-wife, served two months in a federal facility for her role in the caper.

She had deposited over $650,000 of McGraw-Hill money in Swiss bank accounts and then withdrawn it — allegedly for Hughes. The money was to have been paid to Hughes for material used by Irving in the faked autobiography.

THE IRVINGS were also fined $10,000 each.

Irving filed for bankruptcy in 1976, listing debts of $110 million. He said this included a libel action involving a previous book, and $450,000 he owed for federal taxes on the money McGraw-Hill had given him for the Hughes project.

"I don't consider it a crime now," he said. "I knew I had done something wrong, but I returned the money. I was not out to hurt anyone."

Still, there were those close to him who suffered as a result of the publishing scandal that made Irving an instant celebrity and put him on the cover of Time magazine as "Con Man of the Year."

"If I feel any guilt, that's where I feel it the most," he said. "My kids came out of it beautifully. I saw them a lot when I was in prison and I had a child psychiatrist see them."

The children — Nedsky, 14, and Barney, 11 — live in Ibiza, an island off the coast of Spain, with their mother — Irving's fourth wife, Edith. She divorced him and married a lawyer who handled one of Irving's publishing lawsuits. The children will soon join their father in this country so they can complete their education.

"MY PARENTS died before I did it," he said. "I couldn't have done it if they were alive. Phillip Roth (the writer) once said that no Jewish boy is a man until his parents die."

It was Edith Irving who was perhaps hurt most. She served 14 months in a Swiss prison on fraud and forgery charges. Using the aliases "Helga R. Hughes" and "Hanne Rosenkranz" and a fake passport, she transported the checks from McGraw-Hill to Swiss bank accounts.

She also had to publicly face her husband's love affair with the lithe and legendary Baroness Nina van Pallandt, who revealed that Irving was with her in Mexico during the time he claimed to be interviewing Howard Hughes for the autobiography.

Irving has a bearded, rugged face, lined from weather and worry. The blue eyes that penetrated the hearts of scores of women, are still as blue as the waters off Ibiza. The impish smile and devilish laugh are quick and lasting.

The past may have been imperfect for Irving, but time has blushed well. He is content in his country life on Long Island, where he lives with his love of eight years, Valdi Sherwood.

"I learn a lot from women, but it takes so long," he says. "I've been with the same woman, unbroken and untraumatized."

HIS LOVE life had long been quixotic, beginning as an undergraduate at Cornell, where he wrote his first — and never published — novel and married his first wife.

"That was my first mistake," he said.

After graduation and a divorce, Irving held various jobs — copy boy for The New York Times, Fuller Brush man, wheat harvester, driller of holes in the streets of Ithaca, N.Y., a worker in mines.

"I wanted to collect things to put on the back of a book jacket," he said.

He finally went to Europe and married wife No. 2., who ran restaurants in London. With her, he sailed a schooner from Mexico to France. No one on the 52-foot boat had sailing experience, he said. They had all lied in order to make the four-month journey.

His second wife was killed in an automobile accident.

IRVING'S THIRD wife was a British model.

Irving grew up on Manhattan's Upper West Side, the son of Jay Irving, who had created the comic strip "Potsy."

"My family didn't want me to be a writer," he said. "They wanted me to run my uncle's dress business. I have never reacted well to pressure, so I never caved in to them."

Irving has written 10 books and has started a new one.

"It's called 'Crimes,' but it's not about me," he said.

Irving would not perpetrate the Hughes hoax — or any other — today, he said.

"I'd write about it," he laughs. "I'd make it up."

Votings Rights Act extension foes will continue fight

By MIKE SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate opponents of the Voting Rights Act extension say they'll press on with efforts to block the measure even though it enjoys wide support in the chamber.

Over the objections of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., the Senate voted 86-8 Tuesday to stop a preliminary filibuster aimed at preventing the measure from being discussed on the Senate floor.

Formal debate on the measure was expected to begin today after a second vote in the chamber.

But Helms, a staunch opponent of extending key provisions of the 1965 act, said, "Haste is not a virtue of this chamber. ... Our duty is to take our time."

Tuesday's vote showed that a broad coalition supporting the compromise extension has the votes to decisively defeat efforts to filibuster the measure.

"The vote was a strong indication of what the will of the Senate is," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., one of the original authors of the bill.

AT ISSUE is whether the federal government will continue to have tough enforcement power over states — mainly in the South — that have had poor minority voting records.

Helms and his supporters say it is time to free the South and a handful of Western and Eastern states from continued scrutiny over their methods of holding elections.

Forty counties in North Carolina and parts or all of 21 other states monitored by the Justice Department and the courts are treated like "second class citizens," Helms said.

Supporters say that while more than 1 million black and other minority voters have been registered over the last 17 years, there are still serious violations of their voting rights and these problems will worsen if the federal government removes itself.

Sen. Charles McC. Mathias Jr., R-Md., an early supporter of a tough extension, said the "civil rights laws of the 1960s transformed America."

And the Voting Rights Act, he said, is the "keystone" of those measures and should be extended quickly.

THE COMPROMISE extension was approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee and is sponsored by 77 senators. But Helms is known to be a master of Senate rules and is capable of causing lengthy delays.

Key provisions of the voting rights measure expire Aug. 6, and supporters say privately they expect it to clear the Senate before then.

The House approved a similar version of the extension last fall, and only minor adjustments are needed before the final bill goes to President Reagan for his signature into law. After a year of sending contradictory signals, Reagan has said he will sign the measure.

Voting with Helms Tuesday were Independent Harry F. Byrd of Virginia, Democrat John Stennis of Mississippi and Republicans James East of North Carolina, James McClure and Steven Symms of Idaho, Jeremiah Denton of Alabama and John Warner of Virginia.

Once debate actually begins, opponents are expected to focus on two related issues.

One is a section of the bill under which states can escape continued federal scrutiny. To do that, the states would have to show that over the last decade they had employed no discriminatory practices against black voters. They would also be required to show positive steps taken to increase the percentage of minority voters.

THE EFFECT of those provisions, Helms says, is to keep those states under permanent federal supervision.

There were hints of bitterness on the Senate floor late Tuesday. Kennedy said if a filibuster against the bill continues too long, he might block the transaction of routine business coming before the Senate.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, a voting rights supporter, indicated he might use the rules to force the presence of a majority of the Senate, a suggestion which angered Helms.

Reagan challenges demonstrators' motives

By TERENCE HUNT

HOUSTON (AP) — President Reagan, preparing to address a nuclear disarmament conference, is challenging peace demonstrators to make communist regimes as well as Western democracies the targets of their protests.

"A great many of the peace demonstrators are truly sincere ...," Reagan said Tuesday night, "but I'm equally sure that those who plan and promote some of the demonstrations have motives of their own and I will believe in their sincerity when they promote or demand a peace demonstration on the other side of the Iron Curtain."

The president, who left Houston for Washington at mid-morning, addressed a fund-raising dinner for Texas Gov. William Clements' re-election campaign. Walter Mischer, chairman of the event, said it raised more than $3.5 million and claimed it set a national record in political fund-raising.

In his first public appearance since returning from Europe, Reagan reflected on his 10-day journey and meetings with Western allies. "While we did not agree on everything, our allies understand our commitment, our sense of purpose, our strength of character."

Referring to the more than 300,000 peace marchers last week in Bonn, West Germany, Reagan told the black-tie audience, who paid $1,000 each, "I know you have heard about the hostile demonstrations.

"THEY WERE well organized and orchestrated," he added. "But they were no match for the people who lined the streets in each of the six cities we visited to cheer as we went by, waving American flags and holding up signs that read, 'We love America.'"

The president will fly to New York on Thursday to address the United Nations second special session on disarmament. In protests earlier this week, more than 1,600 demonstrators were arrested as they tried to erect a human blockade in front of the U.N. missions of the five major nuclear powers.

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko told the disarmament conference Tuesday that Moscow would never be the first to launch a nuclear strike. White House officials shrugged it off as old news.

"We'll look at his remarks, study them, but I believe it's something they've said before," said White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes.

Several hundred persons protesting a variety of causes ranging from nuclear weapons to the Equal Rights Amendment to the Khomeini regime in Iran, demonstrated outside Houston's convention center as Reagan spoke.

The president noted that the House and Senate both have approved Republican budgets. He said there were few differences between the two and that House-Senate negotiators "should have little trouble in reconciling what differences there are."

TAKING NOTE of complaints from congressional liberals, Reagan declared "loud voices will be heard — in fact some are tuning up already — denouncing this budget resolution.

"We'll be told we're cutting too deep, depriving the elderly, poor and handicapped of the support they need," Reagan said. "There will be charges that our defense spending is out of proportion and should be cut back."

He insisted, however, "There have been no budget cuts," and said the overall 1983 budget will be larger than the 1982 budget. However, critics say that tightening eligibility standards for welfare programs amount to real cuts in services, and that some of the reductions will gut social programs.

In a warmup speech, former President Gerald Ford said Reagan inherited an economy that was "virtually teetering on the brink of chaos" and said Americans will not be deceived by Democratic criticism of Reagan's recovery program.

Referring to the Carter administration, Ford declared, "Something went wrong in that four-year period, and the truth is they blew it."

REAGAN'S RETURN to his hotel Tuesday night was delayed slightly by an occurence common to the average motorist — but unusual for a president. The chief executive's black Lincoln limousine stopped unexpectedly in the middle of the street and for nearly 30 seconds the entire motorcade stood at a standstill, Secret Service agents surrounding the president's car.

Reagan did not get out of the car and the motorcade then proceeded back to the hotel. Speakes said the limousine simply stalled because of a carburetor problem.

Begin: Peace treaty has surived important test

By EDWARD CODY
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Menachem Begin said Tuesday night that the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty has survived "an important test" because Egypt reacted mildly to the Israeli invasion of Lebanon.

"They did not go to war, concentrate an army," Begin said in a television interview shortly before departing for the United States. "Everything written in the peace treaty exists."

The Israeli prime minister's remarks underline the importance to Israel of Egypt's exit from the Arab confrontation front against the Jewish state through the Camp David peace treaty between Cairo and Jerusalem. Although Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak strongly criticized the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, there was never any indication that Egypt would do anything concrete to impede it.

"The peace treaty between us and Egypt held up," Begin said. "This was an important test."

Begin also hinted that he believes the United States shares at least some Israeli objectives in the 10-day-old invasion, in particular an Israeli demand that the Palestine Liberation Organization must cease to exist as an armed presence in Lebanon. This has evolved as a major Israeli demand for any post-invasion settlement, but Washington has not publicly defined its policy on the matter.

"THE AMERCIANS also understand now, not only do we, that such a situation cannot be reconstituted by any means," Begin said. "All terrorist organization personnel in Lebanon must be disarmed. If they stay in Lebanon, with the agreement of the Lebanese government, then they have to be as residents, not citizens, but without weapons. In other words, all must change in Lebanon."

Begin, responding to a question, acknowledged that there are "nuances" between Israeli and U.S. positions on the Lebanese war. He declined to reveal what they are, but added:

"We are discussing these matters as friends. In recent days great understanding has been reached between the U.S. government and the government of Israel."

Israeli officials quoted earlier on Israeli radio said Begin told his Cabinet in a pre-departure meeting that the Israeli control of the Beirut-Damascus highway will be a major bargaining card in negotiations for a settlement pleasing to Israel. Defense Minister Ariel Sharon said Monday that Israeli troops are maintaining a "massive presence" on the key artery, controlling all passage between Beirut and Damascus for Palestinians and Syrians.

Special U.S. envoy Philip C. Habib had to pass through an Israeli checkpoint on his way to confer Tuesday with President Elias Sarkis of Lebanon, and Sharon said Habib had telephoned him in advance for a guarantee of safe passage from Damascus Monday.

Begin indicated Israel will maintain its occupation of the southern half of Lebanon until its demands are met, raising the prospect of a prolonged Israeli presence if the negotiations for a settlement, as expected, prove long and complicated.

"WE WILL be there until all the security arrangements are made to prevent attacks" on settlements in northern Israel that previously were under the range of Palestinian guerrilla artillery, he said.

As has Sharon, Begin left open the possibility that Israeli troops could attack PLO headquarters inside Beirut, striking out from positions around the Lebanese capital. Any such operation likely would prove particularly bloody. The PLO leadership is headquartered in densely populated residential areas of West Beirut and Palestinian refugee camps with large civilian populations.

Asked about Israeli intentions toward "the terrorist nests and terrorist headquarters left in Beirut," he responded: "I cannot answer the question at this time. ... There is the problem of the field, and in a few days you will find out."

The interview was broadcast on Israeli television as Begin was already airborne on his way to the United States to address a U.N. General Assembly session on disarmament and meet with President Reagan, Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and other administration officials. The television interviewer noted that Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir also is absent for a visit to France.

Bill creates sanctuary

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Gov. Jay Hammond signed a bill Tuesday to create a 49,000-acre eagle sanctuary in the Chilkat River Valley to commemorate the 200th anniversary of selection of the bald eagle as the national symbol.

Hammond noted that the bald eagle is an endangered or threatened species in every state except Alaska, which boasts a population of 30,000 raptors, or birds of prey. Most of the eagles are concentrated in southeastern Alaska with its dense forests and abundant salmon runs.

The legislation specifies that the preserve is intended "to protect and perpetuate the Chilkat bald eagles and their essential habitats...in recognition of their statewide, nationally and internationally significant values in perpetuity."

Dave Cline, Alaska representative for the National Audubon Society, said the Alaska Chilkat Bald Eagle Preserve, located on the northern end of Alaska's Panhandle, will be used by more eagles than exist in the rest of the continental United States.

Each fall and winter some 3,500 bald eagles from as far away as Canada and Washington state gather on an 18-mile stretch of the winding Chilkat River between the lumber town of Haines and the native village of Klukwan.

The river is free of ice during November and December, and the eagles feed on a late run of spawning salmon.

Battles between advocates of logging the timbered Chilkat Valley and those who want to protect the eagles have wracked Haines in recent years. Logging is the only industry in Haines, but conservationists feared that cutting down trees would destroy the eagles' habitat.
