Wildfires sweep much of Florida

PALM COAST, Fla. (AP) — Wildfires raged across 100,000 acres of Florida brushland Saturday, destroying homes and sending hundreds fleeing in what officials called the worst fire disaster in Florida's history.

Gov. Bob Graham declared a state of emergency and mobilized the National Guard to help exhausted firefighters battle the blazes, which cut highways and communications and were responsible for at least two deaths.

Fires burned in 29 of Florida's 67 counties, and Graham said they had caused "the most extensive damage and the most intensive damage in the history of Florida."

The worst threat was along a 100-mile stretch of the northeast coast from St. Augustine to Cape Canaveral, where fires forced mass evacuations.

"The state is in the throes of a major disaster with wildfires," said Paul Wills of the state Division of Forestry headquarters.

"From Cape Canaveral up to St. Augustine, you can count seven or eight huge fires, including two of 5,000-and-more-acres," he said.

Despite the magnitude of the destruction, Division of Forestry spokesman Larry Amison said the state was fortunate Saturday in that "only a handful" of new fires broke out, and none of them were classified as major blazes.

"And a great number of the fires that we reported (Friday) as major fires are under control now," he said. "Almost all of them except on the east coast."

At least 150 houses, worth $90,000 and more, were destroyed in the Flagler County area south of St. Augustine known as Palm Coast, said county Sheriff Robert McCarthy.

"That's on the conservative side," he said.

Power lines and phone service were knocked out throughout Flagler County. One Florida Power & Light worker estimated the fire knocked down as many as 300 poles.

State and county officers toured the neighborhood, searching burned-out remains of houses where only water heaters, refrigerators and skeletons of cars were recognizable.

Evacuees, including 135 families who spent the night at a school, were unable to obtain information about the fire or the homes they left hurriedly Friday afternoon. Police were awaiting removal of downed lines before allowing residents to return.

"Flames were shooting up in the trees," said Roy Corbin, who turned on yard sprinklers before he left his house in the Palm Coast Belle Terre neighborhood. "It would be a miracle if it made it."

Hundreds of residents of this 3,000-home area spent Friday night in hotels or Red Cross emergency centers.

In Volusia County, some residents were evacuated from areas outside Ormond Beach, New Smyrna Beach and Daytona Beach.

By Saturday night, the worst of the Volusia fires had expanded to 25,000 acres. "That's the hot item now," Amison said. "I haven't been told of any evacuations yet, but I wouldn't be surprised if there were some."

Troopers also closed Interstate 95 near the Palm Coast exit because of a downed power line.

One of the largest fires, covering 4,000 acres just outside Perry in Taylor County, was contained Saturday afternoon, said Taylor County Sheriff's spokeswoman Deen Chambers.

Amison said National Weather Service predictions of a 50 percent chance of thunderstorms on Sunday could be a mixed blessing.

"If we get a lot of rain, it would help," he said. "But a lot of times you get thunderstorms without much rain and with high winds. That could make it worse."

Firefighter Robert Tabor, 50, died late Thursday in a blaze that burned 1,000 acres of prime North Florida timberland. Near the town of Navarre in the Florida Panhandle, firefighter Randall Garrett, 49, died Friday night of a heart attack while battling a blaze.

Festival brightens downtown area

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Balloons, pink and white striped Hoola-Hoops, a stage, stands and kids presented a colorful picture for all those who entered Midland Center Saturday through the back door.

Main Street next to Midland Center is blocked off this weekend for Celebration of the Arts' children's activities and kids of all ages were busy Saturday enjoying the variety of talent being presented from the Showmobile stage.

Inside, Midland Center has been converted into an arts and crafts fair, with local artists presenting their work for show and for sale. Included in the booths are, among others, oils, watercolors, pottery, quilted selections and handmade porcelain dolls.

Across the center stage at Midland Center is a banner, done in balloons, heralding Midland's second annual Celebration of the Arts. The annual event is sponsored by Midland Arts Assembly, the umbrella organization for the arts in Midland.

This year, the free-admission festival was scheduled for two days. Hours today are noon to 6 p.m.

During the Invitational Preview Party for Visual Artists Friday night, the door prize of a trip for two to Cancun, Mexico, via American Airlines and Lones Great Destinations, was won by Mrs. O.H. Berry. The $500 Centennial Award for Visual Artists was won by Baron Wilson.

One of the most popular events during the festival is the Run for the Arts, held on Saturday morning. The run includes a one-mile Fun Run and two serious runs, a two-mile and 10K.

Overall winners in the run were, in the two-mile John Harris, time 9:58, and Amy Cumings, time 13:14. Second place overall went to Mike Garza and Charlotte Larson and third overall went to Steve Stallings and Tammy McEndree.

In the 10K, David Moore, time 32:54, and Pam Allen, time 38:43, were the overall winners. Second place overall went to Tom Quigley and Lana Booth and third to Doug Grosso and Nancy Casebier.

Overall winners for the Fun Run were nine-year-old Reid Dunbar, time 7:09, and 10-year-old Anita Bennett, time 7:22.

Along with the artists booths, food booths and continuous performaces by local talent, the festival also offers Midlanders a chance to see artists demonstrate their craft. The demonstration tents have artists working in stained glass leading, quilting, pottery throwing, jewelry making, drawing, wood carving, candy making, watercoloring, cake decorating, cum paste flower creations and ice sculpting.

In addition, this year's event includes a Time Capsule which will be inserted into the wall at Centennial Plaza during the July 4 centennial festivities. For a nominal fee, those who want to can sign their name or write a note on a long scroll provided by the Midland Arts Assembly.

School boundary legislation could upset racial balance

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Legislation dictating the manner in which Texas school districts shall establish school boundaries could destroy the ethnic balance among racially integrated schools, local educators claim.

House Bill 1543, introduced by Rep. William Messer, D-Belton, and approved on a 134-1 vote of the House of Representatives, reportedly was created to prevent the splitting of peer groups at various schools as the result of increased discipline problems, crime, drug and alcohol abuse, and suicide among school-age children.

It's purpose is to "reduce the effect of those problems on school assignment within a district," Messer said.

The bill reads, in part, "each district shall attempt to assign all elementary students to a single middle school and all junior high school students to a single high school. If a district assigns fewer than 30 percent of the students advancing from an elementary school are assigned to any single middle or junior high school, or if fewer than 30 percent of the students advancing from a middle or junior high school are assigned to any single high school, a student who is not assigned to the school to which the largest percentage is assigned is entitled to transfer to that school."

In addition, "if less than 100 percent of the students of a middle or junior high school who attended a particular elementary school are assigned to any single high school, a student who attended that elementary school is entitled to transfer to the high school to which the largest percentage of those students was assigned," the bill reads.

But MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi said the legislation could be "damaging" to school district desegregation plans across the state.

For example, if fewer than 30 percent of the students attending Travis Elementary School were to advance to San Jacinto Junior High School and the majority were to advance to Alamo Junior High School, the students not assigned would be entitled to transfer to Alamo.

Using San Jacinto Junior High School as an example, Baressi also explained that an estimated 87 percent or 310 students, who presently attend San Jacinto advance to MHS; while approximately 13 percent or 46 students (the majority of whom are minority) attend LHS.

Under the provisions of the bill, all 46 students would be eligible to transfer to MHS if it were to become law, thus creating a possible racial "imbalance," he noted, adding that the impact of the movement of predominantly white rural students eligible under the elementary provision also would jeopardize the ethnic balance mandated by the 1976 federal court ruling which "effectively" integrated the high schools.

Libyan leader pays surprise visit to Sudan

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — Libya's Moammar Khadafy paid a brief surprise visit to Sudan on Saturday, congratulated his North African neighbor for ousting its "reactionary regime" and called on other Arab countries to follow Sudan's example.

The Libyan leader, a bitter foe of deposed President Gaafar Nimeiri, said that by its coup last month, the Sudanese military has "given the example of how armies can take the side of the masses."

He urged Arab people to "to liberate their countries."

"I also call on the armies in the Arab world to join the masses and oust reactionary regimes," Khadafy added.

The Libyan leader then flew to Saudi Arabia for a meeting with King Fahd, official sources in Jidda reported. No details were available, but Arab diplomatic sources said Khadafy and the king planned to examine ways to end the 4½-year-old Iran-Iraq war, support of the Palestinian quest for an independent state and improvement of Saudi-Libyan ties.

Relations between Saudi Arabia and Libya were at their lowest ebb in 1982, when Khadafy blamed the kingdom for the glut in world oil markets, and objected to American warplanes flying Islamic holy areas in Saudi Arabia.

Khadafy's four-hour stop in Khartoum kept up the process of Libya and Sudan's drawing closer that began soon after Sudan's April 6 coup. Libya was the first country to recognize the new regime that ended Nimeiri's 16 years as president.

The radical Arab leader's trip to the Sudanese capital was spent almost entirely inside the terminal at Khartoum Airport. He stepped outside only for a brief walk in a parking lot.

He met in the airport VIP lounge with Gen. Abdul-Rahman M.H. Swareddahab, coup leader and chairman of the ruling Transitional Military Council, and Prime Minister el-Gazouly Dafaallah.

Prison workers blamed for tranportation error

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A prison inmate died after being placed in a transport van instead of an ambulance for a three-hour trip back to his unit from the prison hospital in Galveston, where he was undergoing treatment for cancer, officials say.

David C. Dixon, 62, serving an 18-year sentence for a Harris County murder, died of cancer of the pancreas and jaundice March 5 while riding in a van after he was discharged from the Texas Department of Corrections' medical unit at the John Sealy Hospital in Galveston.

"It was employee error," Dr. Armond Start, TDC's medical director, told the Dallas Times Herald. "He was supposed to have gone by ambulance directly back to our regional facility (the Huntsville Unit hospital). They didn't do that."

State Rep. Ray Keller, R-Duncanville, called the incident "pitiful" and said that the employees involved should be fired.

Keller, who is active in prison system matters, also said he was especially upset about the case in light of the recent settlement of a 13-year-old prison reform lawsuit against the state.

"Stuff like that is going to keep them (prison officials) in trouble with the federal court," Keller said. "If people like that got fired on the spot, it would quit happening."

Start said that "employees involved have been well chastised. This is not going to be tolerated by us."

Donna Brorby, one of the prisoners' attorneys in the reform lawsuit, said she had received numerous complaints from seriously ill inmates about uncomfortable trips back to their units. She said TDC has an insufficient number of ambulances.

Dixon had been receiving treatments for cancer of the pancreas but was being sent back to the Huntsville hospital because he was not responding to treatment, Start said. Doctors had planned to allow him a few weeks of rest before attempting treatments again.

Woman offers gunman coffee

ARLINGTON (AP) — Ann Elliott, faced with a gunman who crashed through her apartment door, did what she considered the logical thing — she made him a cup of coffee.

"I don't know why I took it so calmly," she said after the gunman fled following the incident early Friday. "But it does seem odd to say I've been someone's hostage."

Ms. Elliott, who was released unharmed, was the most fortunate of several victims in a crime spree that began early Friday and stretched across Arlington and Fort Worth, police said.

Arlington police were searching for two men believed responsible for a shooting, a robbery, a rape and an attack on a police officer.

Raoul Gomez, 20, of Arlington, was shot in the chest and forearm about 5 a.m. after he agreed to give a man a ride from a convenience store, police said. Investigators said the man apparently had fled Ms. Elliott's apartment moments earlier.

Gomez was in fair condition at Arlington Memorial Hospital, officials said.

Police said the spree began about 12:30 a.m. when a couple was forced inside a north Arlington apartment. The man was bound with tape and the woman was raped, authorities said.

The suspects' descriptions closely resemble those of two men who broke into a far east Fort Worth apartment at about 2 a.m. and robbed the people inside, police said.

The men fled in a van and car belonging to the people in the apartment, police said. One of the victims told police the suspects might be headed to an apartment complex in Arlington, where he lived, authorities said.

When officer James McRobbie arrived at the Arlington complex, he was greeted by gunfire, police said.

"McRobbie spotted the stolen van and was investigating when a man jumped out from in front of it and started firing," said police spokesman Jim Willett.

McRobbie's car was struck twice, but the officer escaped injury. The officer returned fire before the suspect escaped, Willett said.

Seconds later, a frightened gunman burst through Ms. Elliott's door and into her bedroom. The man spent nearly three hours watching the developing manhunt through a window, Ms. Elliott said.

Ex-UT students imprisoned for armed robbery released

AUSTIN (AP) — Two former University of Texas students who staged 10 armed robberies to keep from having to ask their parents for more spending money have been released after serving three months in prison.

State District Judge Jon Wisser on Friday ordered Joseph Center and Bryan Geer, both 22, to serve the balance of their sentences on probation.

Center, a former cheerleader for the UT football team, and Geer, a filmmaker and honors student, were arrested last June 25 after a holdup at a motel.

The two students pleaded guilty to using an unloaded pellet gun to rob the motel. It was the last of 10 robberies the two admitted carrying out.

Center and Geer pleaded guilty Jan. 21 to aggravated robbery and were sentenced by Wisser to 10 years in prison.

Andy Forsythe and Erik Goodman, the students' attorneys, asked Wisser in April to release their clients from prison and place them on probation.

Forsythe said the non-violent nature of the crimes, their good behavior in prison, and the fact that neither of them had been in trouble with the law before made them prime candidates for "shock probation" — a short stay in prison and probation.

"We don't get many robberies here where the robbers use an unloaded pellet pistol that never leaves their britches," Forsythe said.

David Reynolds, Travis County assistant district attorney, told Wisser that he opposed the probation.

"We will oppose any form of probation in a case of strong-armed robbery. But I doubt that they will be any more of a problem," Reynolds said.

Bush visits Grand Ole Opry greats

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Vice President George Bush took a break from his official duties Saturday night when he shared the Grand Ole Opry stage with some of country music's biggest stars.

Bush, who said he is an avid country music fan, accepted a white Opry jacket from Roy Acuff, "the king of country music," during the televised weekly segment of the show.

"I'm nervous," Bush told Acuff. "There's too much talent around here."

He said he and his wife, Barbara, "go to sleep listening to you and wake up to it (country music)."

After Acuff's presentation, Bush took a seat onstage with his wife and Gov. Lamar Alexander as comedian Minnie Pearl told tales of Grinder's Switch, her character's hometown.

"This was just like a night off with down-to-earth people," Bush said before leaving the Opryhouse.

He was to spend the night at the nearby Opryland Hotel before a breakfast meeting Sunday with Alexander at the executive mansion.

Earlier in the day, during a visit to Johnson City, Bush said that the killing of an American soldier in East Germany continues to complicate efforts to negotiate an arms control agreement with the Soviet Union.

"We have been totally unsatisfied with the Soviet response," he said. "Ironically, at the beginning, it looked like there could be a more favorable response.

"There were some articles in a couple of Soviet journals ... there was the meeting with the Soviet generals. All of which led us to believe that they wanted to accept procedures that would avoid this kind of thing in the future."

Maj. Arthur D. Nicholson was shot in the chest by a Soviet guard March 24 as he and an American sergeant were in a restricted military area in East Germany.

According to State Department information, Soviet soldiers prevented the sergeant from giving medical aid to his comrade.

Bush said an apology and compensation were in order. "Instead, there's been a hardening of the Soviet position," he said.

"There's no question that that affects the feelings of the American people...and the feelings of the administration."

Bush was at East Tennessee State University to dedicate an endowed chair to study medical treatments for the elderly at the Quillen-Disher School of Medicine.

Discussing the federal budget, the vice president said impending cutbacks were a bitter pill that Tennessee Valley Authority residents would have to swallow for the national good.

The Reagan administration has proposed a 70 percent reduction in the federal utility's non-power budget for fiscal 1986.

"There are some significant cuts...some things the government has been doing at high levels that won't be continued," Bush said. "But I say to people that are adversely affected that the most important thing for the country is to get the deficit down."

On other subjects, Bush noted that some newspapers have called the Rev. Jesse Jackson's efforts to free American prisoners in Lebanon "grandstanding," but he reserved judgment "until I know exactly what role Jesse is playing."

The Reagan administration's efforts to free imprisoned Americans in Lebanon were considerable, he said, but fell short of paying ransom.

Lebanese Christians ready?

By FAROUK NASSAR

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Dismayed by defeats on the battlefield and Israel's reluctance to come to their rescue, Lebanon's Christians appear ready for the first time in four decades to share power equally with their Moslem foes.

But Christian readiness to compromise might have come too late to sway the powerful alliance of President Hafez Assad's Syrian government and Lebanon's Druse and Shiite Moslem militias.

The current surge of sectarian fighting in Beirut suggests that the alliance is bent on keeping up the military pressure, to force the battered Christians to the negotiating table on Moslem terms.

The fragmented Christians have been showing signs of flexibility since Druse and Moslems routed their main fighting force in south Lebanon last month.

The defeat left an estimated 6,000 fighters of the Lebanese Forces, the leading Christian militia in the 10-year-old civil war, virtually trapped in one-tenth of Lebanon's territory with their backs to the Mediterranean.

Israel's prime minister, Shimon Peres, and defense minister, Yitzhak Rabin, have stressed they are not willing to risk Israeli lives to help the beleaguered Christians, their former allies.

It was only after Israel withdrew from the southern Christian town of Jezzine east of Sidon last month that Druse and Moslem militias unleashed their offensive, spearheaded by Syrian-supplied tanks.

In a string of appeasing moves, the Christians have since shunted aside the Lebanese Forces' pro-Israeli commander, Samir Geagea, and have declared support for a civil war settlement under Syria's tutelage.

Moslem leaders have stressed they will not deal with the Christians until they sever all links with Israel.

Elie Hobeika, president of the Lebanese Forces' executive committee, closed the militia's liaison office in Jerusalem on Saturday, and ordered personnel who have been in Israel since 1983 to come home.

The strongest signal that the Christians are ready to talk came from their elder statesman, former President Camille Chamoun, 85.

Chamoun declared last week: "Syria is our first neighbor with whom we aspire to forge close cooperation ... This cooperation is imperative and I believe it will bring a final end to civil warfare in Lebanon."

It was the first time a leader of the Maronite Christians, the dominant force among Lebanon's 1.9 million Christians, had been so conciliatory toward Syria.

In 1958, Chamoun asked U.S. Marines to land in Lebanon to fight off a Syrian-influenced Moslem rebellion.

The Maronites have traditionally resented Syria's influence among Moslems and Druse, who make up the other 2.1 million of Lebanon's 4 million inhabitants.

Chamoun's statements indicated that after dominating politics since Lebanon obtained its independence from France in 1943, the Christians have run out of options.

Restitution ads suggested

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge, considering whether to send three defendants to prison, has suggested the use of magazine ads to find victims of a mail-order credit card scheme the trio operated last year.

U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer on Friday gave the defendants 45 days to prepare a report on how they plan to repay $271,000 to 7,200 people who lost money in the scam.

The order also requires the three — Susan Maddox, Richard Hunt and Mary Tubbs — to provide a plan for informing the victims of their scam that restitution will be made. Buchmeyer strongly suggested that they use magazine advertisements.

"I view what you did as a very serious crime ... So I want you to give me a reason to put you on probation, a reason to give you a lesser sentence," Buchmeyer told the defendants.

According to prosecutors, the defendants operated the company last year by telling potential customers via advertisements in national publications that they could obtain any major credit card by simply mailing a $35 application fee to the company.

Instead of sending customers the credit card of their choice, the company shipped them a booklet outlining 10 easy steps to good credit, authorities said.

Before Buchmeyer's decision Friday, the defendants said they never intended to defraud the public and promised to repay every customer who felt bilked by the operation.

"I've never done anything like this before," Buchmeyer said. "But you are three very unique defendants. I've never had a group ... that offered to make restitution."

"It was very creative," Ms. Maddox said of the judge's order. "He obviously cares about finding us another way (of rehabilitation)."

BALANCE

According to Baressi, the bill would apply to the following: rural students attending nine elementary schools, "in-city" students attending six elementary schools; and secondary students attending the district's three junior high schools, two freshman and two high schools.

Bill Jackson, president of the MISD Board of Trustees, said plans are under way to "fight" the legislation, noting "we have contacted our attorney to see what schools are affected or to see if we are exempt."

HB 1543 specifies that a school district may deny a transfer to comply with desegregation requirements imposed under federal law. MISD currently operates under a federal desegregation rule handed down Sept. 17, 1976 by U.S. District Judge D.W. Suttle.

"If it is decided that MISD is exempt, proceedings will be filed to request that we be waived from complying with the state law," Jackson said. "Right now, that's our only defense. The bill makes no provision for overcrowded classrooms".

Rep. Kelly Godwin, R-Odessa, said he has been assured by attorneys that the bill would have no effect on Midland or Ector County ISDs.

Godwin, who voted in favor of the bill, said "I was against it at first, but I changed my view after I was convinced that the legislation would not affect our schools."

Ector County schools would be exempt from compliance due to the wording of the district's own desegregation order, according to ECISD Superintendent Bill Holm's interpretation of the legislation.

"Our federal court order specifies that we follow the rules established under federal law.

"I don't know why a bill like that was brought out in the first place," Holm said. "It's just another state rule that should be left up to the local school districts to determine."

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, called the proposal "an interesting concept," but noted he would not support the legislation if it had the potential for destroying the ethnic balance among school districts.

"I don't plan to vote for it at this point," he said. "There's been very little interest generated by this bill. In fact, the only school district I've heard from is MISD. But if it presents problem for any school in my district, I would not support it," he said.

Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, could not be reached for comment.

Said Jackson: "MISD is committed to maintaining two separate but equal high schools. If this piece of legislation were to become law, it would have the potential to destroy that equality along racial lines."

ARTS

The major contributor for this year's festival is the Davidson Family Charitable Foundation. Benefactors, who also helped make the two-day festival possible, include Mr. and Mrs. George Conly, Mr. and Mrs. Lynn Durham, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Herd, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Innerarity, the Kruger family, Mr. and Mrs. John Redfern Jr. and Mr. and Mrs. George Staley.

The steady stream of traffic moving through Midland Center Saturday promised that this year's Festival will serve its purpose, which is to provide a platform for local talent by hosting events such as the annual Celebration of the Arts.

Panel proposed on Baptist rift

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A task force of Southern Baptist Convention leaders has drafted a proposal calling for a committee to iron out a rift between conservative and moderate factions within the denomination.

The plan calls for formation of a panel to "determine the sources of the controversy in our convention and make findings and recommendations regarding these controversies."

The proposal, written this week by seven state presidents of the Nashville-based convention, is to be presented to other state leaders June 10 on the eve of a national meeting in Dallas.

"The committee will be made up of 15 persons representing both sides of the controversy as well as those we consider bridge-builders and middle-of-the-road people," Bill Hickem, president of the Florida Baptist Convention and task force chairman, said Friday.

Two key candidates for president of the 14.3 million member convention — the Rev. Winfred Moore of Amarillo, Texas, and the Rev. Charles Stanley of Atlanta, have said they back the formation of a committee to resolve the conflict.

The dispute centers on conservatives' claims that the denomination is heading toward theological liberalism. Moderates counter with claims that conservatives are trying to control positions of power and impose doctrinal uniformity.

Several conservative Baptist leaders have threatened to withold funds from the denomination if Stanley, a conservative, is not re-elected.

West Texans concerned with agriculture, poll reveals

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The biggest problem facing West Texas today is the "agriculture situation," if responses to a questionnaire distributed by freshman Congressman Larry Combest are an accurate measure.

Forty-four percent of the 9,600 respondents named agriculture as the biggest problem in the region followed by 35 percent who cited the "water shortage"; 9 percent who said "education"; 8 percent who said "crime"; and 4 percent who named other problems.

On the question of the biggest national problem, 60 percent of the West Texas respondents answered, "federal deficit." Second was "threat of war," listed by 13 percent; "interest rates," cited by 9 percent; "unemployment," 4 percent; "taxes," 1 percent and "other," 13 percent.

Despite their concern over problems in agriculture and fears of a water shortage, a majority of West Texans — 60 percent — were optimistic about the prospects for continued economic recovery while 15 percent were pessimistic and 25 percent were unsure.

Combest asked, "What is the best way to reduce the federal deficit?" and 43 percent advised him to cut social services while 38 percent wanted to cut defense spending. Only 8 percent suggested "raise taxes," while 11 percent offered various other suggestions.

An overwhelming number of respondents — 76 percent — favored a constitutional amendment requiring Congress to balance the federal budget each year, but 20 percent said no to that proposal.

Just under half of those who answered the questions favored a "flat-rate" tax system with limited deductions in place of the present progressive income tax system.

Dog lost during hurricane in 1983 back with owners

LA MARQUE (AP) — Bear, a 50-pound red chow dog who disappeared nearly two years ago during Hurricane Alicia, is finally back with his owners.

"After a year we had just about given up hope," Harriet Fretwell, 38, said. "But I just knew he wasn't dead. I felt like we would know if he were."

After months and months of advertising and offers of rewards, a friend of the family visiting the Galveston animal shelter recognized the dog there and led to the reuniting of Bear with the Fretwells.

"My friend was there looking for a cat. It was pure luck," Ms. Fretwell said Thursday.

"Bear didn't recognize me until I pulled the car keys out of my purse, shook them and said 'C'mon Bear, Let's go take a ride in the car.' "

A crooked tooth in the dog's mouth made her certain that the dog really was Bear, who disappeared in August 1983, when the hurricane blew down a backyard fence and the animal escaped.

"People would call and say they were convinced they had found our dog," she said. "We'd drive all the way there and the dog they were talking about would be an Irish setter or something like that. We drove all over chasing leads but without any luck."

Ms. Fretwell said the reunion between the dog and her two sons, Perry 16, and Richard, 15, was just like in the movies.

"As soon as Bear saw the boys he let out with the strangest yelp and he actually started to have tears in his eyes," she said. "I'm still in shock over this. I look out into the backyard just to make sure he's really there."

Woman recounts abortions for pro-choice campaign

AUSTIN (AP) — Participating in a pro-choice campaign, a woman studying at an Austin Lutheran seminary told details of three abortions she had.

"I've only shared my story with one or two people until now" Barbara Hennessy, 28, said at a Capitol building news conference Friday. "One-and-a-half million women have had abortions. I feel there are 1½ islands out there all feeling like they're the only ones."

Hennessy read a lettter she had written to the Texas Abortion Rights Action League telling why she had decided to have the abortions.

The organization is participating in a national effort to collect letters from women who have had abortions.

"The first one was in my sophomore year in college," Ms. Hennessy said. She said she decided to have the abortion because she wanted to finish her education instead of starting a family.

She said she had a second abortion while applying to seminary school.

Reasons for the final abortion, she said, were "economics" and lack of time.

Monday, a representative from each state will take the letters to Washington, D.C., to be read from 7 a.m. to midnight to show support for legalized abortions.

"We are encouraging people to feel the personal connections they share with women who have had to choose abortions. These are the people our opponents like to believe don't exist," she said.

One letter read was sent by a woman who had an abortion while she was a 20-year-old college student. At the time abortions were illegal, the letter said.

The U.S. Supreme Court legalized abortions in a 1973 decision.

"No one knew where I was," the letter said. "If something had happened to me, there would not even have been any way to find me."

Vietnamese refugee charged in Austin shooting arrested

AUSTIN (AP) — A Vietnamese refugee charged in a fatal shooting and stabbing earlier this month in Austin has been arrested in California, police say.

Sheriff's deputies in Santa Clara County, Calif., arrested Hoang Dinh Pham, 17, on Friday in San Jose on a capital murder warrant, said Austin police Sgt. Howard Hall.

Pham is one of three Vietnamese charged in connection with a May 8 attack at an Austin apartment that killed one man and critically injured two others.

Another refugee who had been held without bail in Austin since his arrest the day after the slaying Ba Ngoe Bui, 29, was released Friday for lack of evidence, authorities said.

During the attack, three Vietnamese fatally shot and stabbed Bui, and critically injured two others, who are still hospitalized, police said.

Loeffler: We need weapons

SAN ANGELO (AP) — The United States would have no defense against chemical warfare without its own arsenal of the weapons, according to U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler.

"The Soviets will have us on our knees," Loeffler said. "We would have nothing to defend ourselves.

"If we have the capability, the Soviets are not as likely to use it, because they would know we could retaliate in the same way," the congressman said.

Loeffler, R-Hunt, was interviewed Friday night prior to addressing a banquet for graduating San Angelo Central High School seniors. He answered other questions on the defense budget and also affirmed he is moving closer to a candidacy in the 1986 Republican gubernatorial primary.

Hospital lawsuit dropped

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox and officials of the Hermann Hospital Estate say his decision to drop a lawsuit against the trust could make it easier for the hospital to increase charity medical care.

Mattox announced Friday that he dismissed the suit because trustees agreed to create a $100 million charity care endowment by 1990.

Officials also feared it would be difficult to fill the board's three empty seats until the suit was settled.

"I think the representatives of the estate have acted in good faith," Mattox said during an Austin news conference. "I believe we can ultimately reach a conclusion to this entire matter."

Mattox said his office retains the right to file another suit, if necessary.

NASA to test gymnasts

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Seven world class gymnasts will participate in motion sickness tests that researchers hope will help them understand why astronauts get sick in space.

The gymnasts, including two 1984 Olympic medal winners, will perform under tests at the Johnson Space Center to see if they react differently than non-athletes to severe motion stresses.

Tests will include rides on a variety of motion-producing machines and flights on the KC-135, a jet aircraft used in astronuat training to simulate weightlessness.

Nine convicted in drug ring

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal jury convicted nine people accused of operating a decade-old drug and racketeering ring and ordered the confiscation of several million dollars worth of property belonging to the defendants.

The panel deliberated two days before reaching a verdict in the massive trial, which lasted seven weeks and included about 175 witnesses.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

State highway construction funding 'on the road again'

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — While $3.7 billion will provide a lot of highways in Texas over the next biennium, highway officials and legislators say there's justification for putting even more money into road construction.

Unfortunately, they say, the money simply isn't availble.

That may sound very much like what was being said before last summer's special session, which resulted in additional vehicle registration fees and gasoline taxes going into the Department of Highways and Public Transportation's programs.

DHPT Engineer-Director Mark Goode says the additional funding has helped, and that Texans will soon be seeing proof of that.

But, he says, there remain unfilled needs, if Texas continues to grow at the expected rate between now and the year 2000.

"I'm very optimistic," Goode says. "I think we're going to be able to accomplish a tremendous amount of good things...we'll be able to respond to congestion in major metropolitan areas."

And, he says, rural areas and urban areas will be seeing rehabilitation work underway this summer.

"We've already increased our lettings to take care of that," Goode reports.

In fact, he says, DHPT has, at this point of its fiscal year (which began Sept. 1) more work under contract than for all of the prior fiscal year.

By the end of the fiscal year, the amount of work under contract should be double that for fiscal 1984, he adds.

But, he cautions, "we're going to be in a catch-up situation for some time," since construction of highways requires a great deal of planning — and right-of-way acquisition, utility adjustments and similar work.

It may be five or six years before projects now being prepared are actually under way, Goode notes.

DHPT's efforts are being helped by other changes made in the special session, in addition to the increased funding.

The right-of-way donation program set up by the Legislature is "going real fine," Goode comments — with major right-of-way contributions for projects in Austin, Houston San Antonio and North Texas.

But while the changes have alleviated the short-term problems, Goode cautions that long-term problems with highways still remain.

DHPT could use one-third more money than it has, Goode says.

What was done in 1984 was significant, "but it's not going to solve the problem," Goode says. "We told the Legislature that at the time."

"If we're really going to respond to the increased population in Texas — and we project a 50 per cent increase between now and 2000 — we need more money...any way you go."

Rep. David Cain, D-Dallas, chairman of the House Transportation Committee, agrees with Goode.

"I think that's right," Cain says of the department's arguments that more money will be required.

"But we (legislators) understand, and I understand real well, that there just isn't the money to do that," he says.

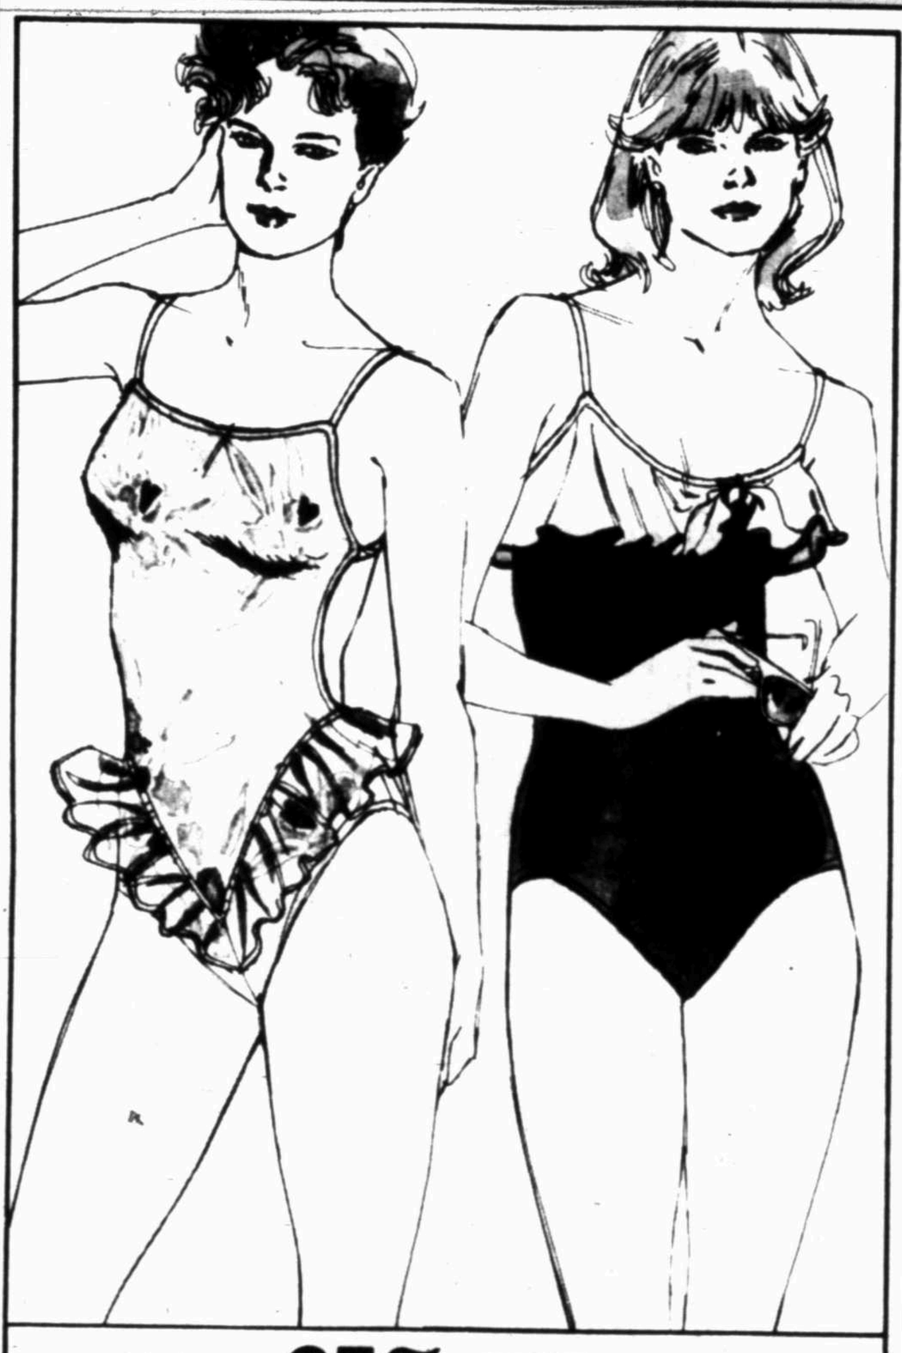

"We're trying to make the money go as far as we can...I agree we're not funding them up to what their 20-year plan would indicate."

The House and Senate have approved biennial budget recommendations for DHPT to provide approximately $3.7 billion in construction funds for fiscal 1986 and 1987.

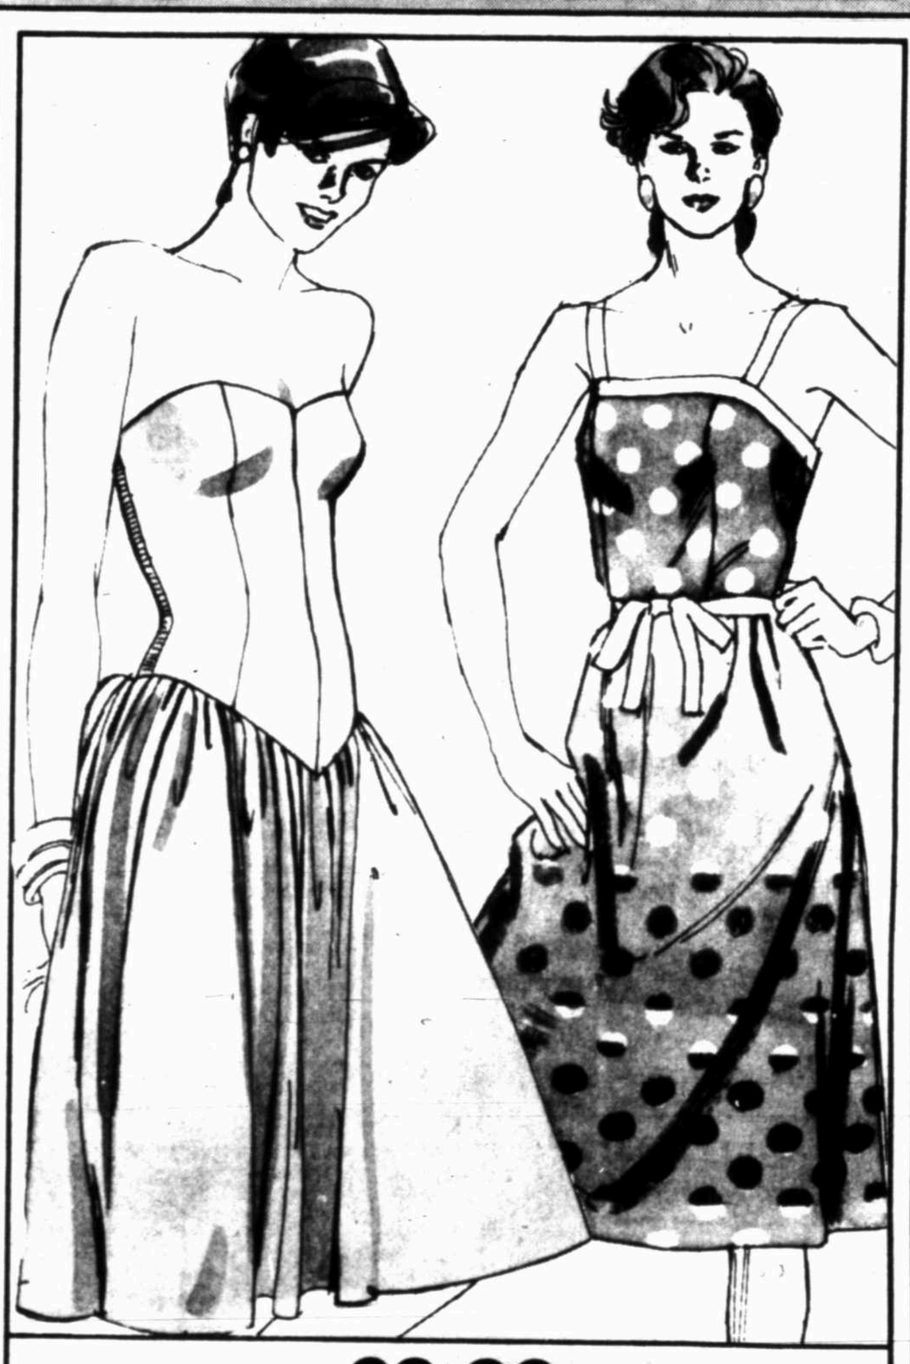

It may seem that, for the present, there is "more money than projects," Cain says — but that "once projects start coming on line, we will need more money...There really are more projects that need to be done than we can afford."

Radio Marti begins broadcasting to Cuba Monday despite threats

WASHINGTON (AP) — Radio Marti, the Reagan administration's long-postponed project to broadcast news to Cuba, will go on the air Monday morning, Florida Sens. Paula Hawkins and Lawton Chiles said Saturday.

Mrs. Hawkins, a Republican, and Chiles, a Democrat, said they received word from the White House earlier in the day that the station will begin beaming programming at 5:30 a.m.Monday, the island's independence day. It will broadcast on a seven-day-a-week, 14-hour-a-day schedule, they said.

"For over 25 years, Cuba has had to listen to the lies of Fidel Castro," Chiles said in a statement released by his office. "Radio Marti will shed light and the Cuban people will never be in the dark again."

Mrs. Hawkins also issued a statement, saying "I'm pleased that the voice of freedom and truth will at last be heard in Cuba.

"It is a lot less expensive, and often more effective, to fight communism with the truth instead of bullets," she added.

Reagan administration spokesmen could not immediately be reached to confirm the senator's statements, but sources already had said programming could start as early as Monday despite concerns that Havana may try to jam the signal, whose frequency is 1180 AM.

"It's imminent, I know that," Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., said Saturday as reports first surfaced that the federally financed, 50,000-watt station in the Florida Keys would start beaming a diet of programs ranging from major league baseball scores to broadcasts that paint a less than rosy picture of life under communism.

Rogene Waite, a Voice of America spokesman, confirmed that officials are concerned about the possibility that President Fidel Castro would try to jam broadcasts by the station, which is named for 19th-century Cuban patriot Jose Marti. There is also a fear that Castro might retaliate by interfering with the signals of commercial stations in this country.

"Everyone takes the threat fairly seriously," she said.

When Radio Marti was under debate on Capitol Hill two years ago, Castro beamed back music and political programs that were heard as far away as Salt Lake City. Charles Z. Wick, director of the U.S. Information Agency, told a congressional panel this year that several American stations have sought damages from the government.

Damages in case of Cuban interference are provided under Radio Marti legislation.

Contrary to administration hopes, Congress placed the station under control of the Voice of America, which is required to maintain balance in its news reports.

Reagan now has to break into tax code

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — One of the first things President Reagan has to do after his European trip is decide how to follow through on his promise to simplify the tax code and make it fairer.

Lawmakers agree something should be done to close loopholes, but they can't agree on whose loopholes should be affected, or how to do it.

Enter the Great Communicator and the lobbyists.

In Madrid last week the president confused his own staff, Congress and about 3000 lawyers who get paid big bucks to influence the Internal Revenue Code when he declared that his tax-simplification plan "will not only cut rates but make them less progressive."

He added: "We believe that there is nothing progressive about tax rates that discourage people from climbing up the ladder of success."

White House spokesman Larry Speakes shrugged off questions from traveling reporters. So far it is a mystery as to whether Reagan was signaling a major change in tax policy or perhaps only suggesting that people who work hard and make money shouldn't have to give so much of it to the tax collector.

The idea of "progressivity" was written into the 1913 tax law and has been the foundation of every subsequent modification in tax law. It means the richer one becomes, the more he or she should pay in taxes.

Until now, there has been no suggestion that the administration's bill would shift the tax burden from one income group to another. The stated goal has been not to increase federal revenues, but to make the tax code fairer while remaining "revenue neutral."

In designing an administration tax reform bill, which could go to Capitol Hill as early as this week, the president has had the help of Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III and White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan — two close advisers who switched jobs three months ago.

Regan laid a plan now referred to as "Treasury I" on the president's desk at Thanksgiving last year. It would end assorted tax breaks and result in lower tax rates for individuals and businesses.

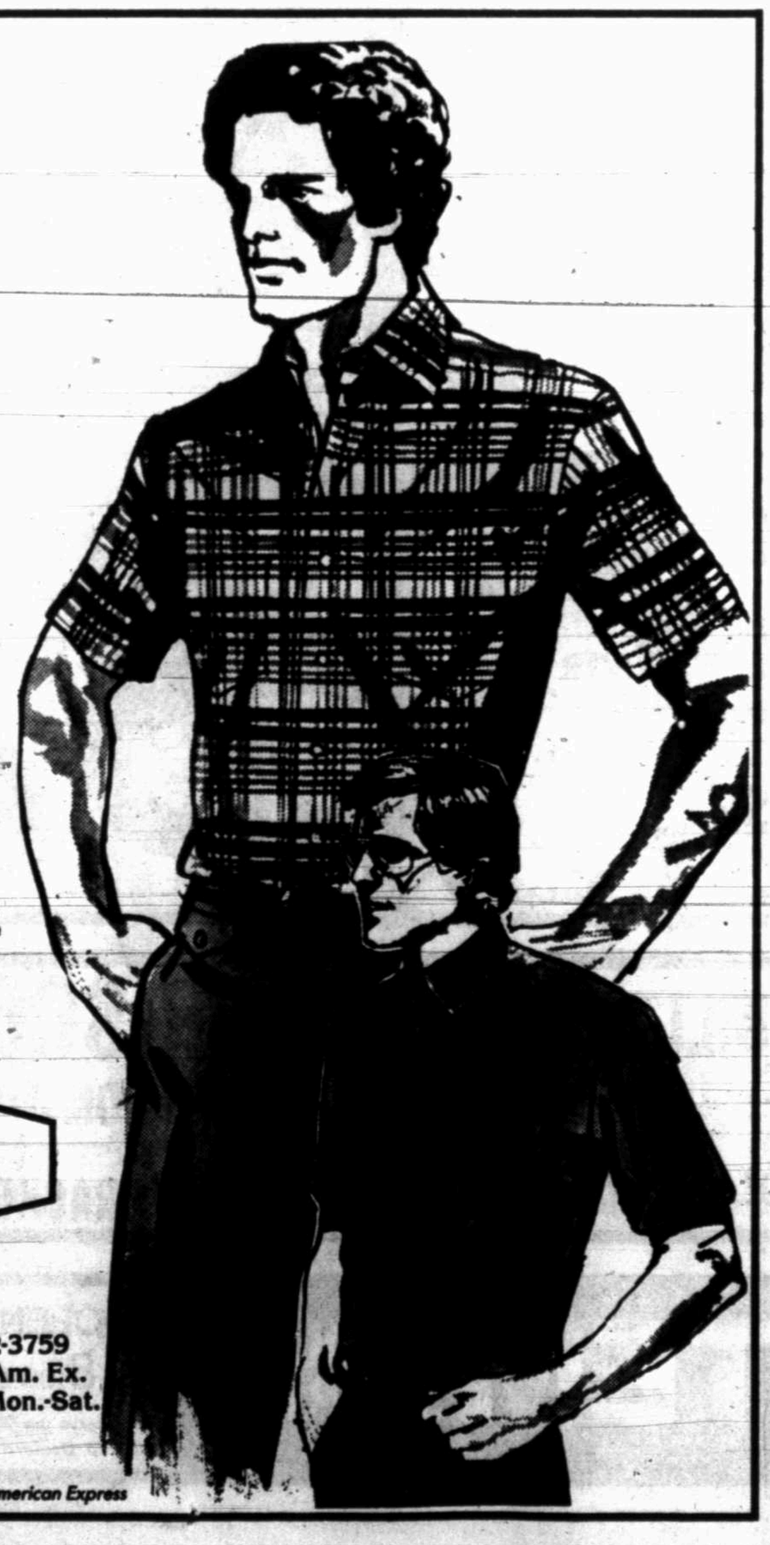

Baker couldn't possibly see all the groups who wished to influence his thinking so he turned them over to his right-hand aide, Margaret Tutwiler. She listened and distilled the essence of their advice and complaints to pass along to Baker.

Incumbents PAC in campaign donations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly three-quarters of the record $112.6 million in campaign donations by special interest groups last year went to incumbent members of Congress, the Federal Election Commission reported Saturday.

The biggest spender of these groups was the National Conservative Political Action Committee, or NCPAC, which contributed $19.3 million.

The next largest spenders were the Fund for a Conservative Majority, at $5.5 million, and the National Congressional Club, the political organization of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., which spent $5.2 million.

Political action committees, or PACs, sent 72 percent of their contributions to House and Senate incumbents. Just 16 percent of their money went to candidates challenging congressional incumbents. They gave still less — 11 percent — to candidates seeking a seat where no incumbent was running.

The FEC said the $112.6 million total included PAC contributions to Senate, House and presidential candidates. It also included $7.7 million given to federal candidates not seeking election in 1984 for the purpose of retiring debts or preparing for future races.

For candidates seeking election in 1984, contributions totaled $104.9 million.

The PACs gave $1.5 million to presidential candidates. But not counted in the total was $22.2 million in "independent expenditures" made by PACs. That was spending for or against candidates that was legally independent of the candidate's campaign. More than $17 million of that spending was in the presidential race.

Senate and House incumbents received $60.5 million from PACs. Incumbent House Democrats got the biggest share, $38.8 million.

Democrats got the biggest portion of the PAC contributions, $63.9 million, or 57 percent. Republicans got $48.7 million, or 43 percent.

The FEC's figures covered contributions and spending in a two-year period, considered the 1984 election cycle. Earlier figures given by the FEC were preliminary and covered the first 18 months of the two-year campaign.

"Although PAC contributions to federal candidates continued to rise, the rate of increase slowed dramatically over previous years," the FEC said in a written statement.

Political appointees' days numbered

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has devised what it hopes is a way to replace politically appointed U.S. ambassadors without making it appear they are being fired.

U.S. officials said the White House decided several months ago without announcement to limit envoys who are political appointees to 2¼-year tours of duty.

The new approach enables the administration to "depersonalize" the replacement of politically appointed ambassadors by informing them they are subject to the same time limitations, the officials said.

It also permits the White House to trim down a long list of Republican Party contributors and other well-connected conservatives who have expressed interest in becoming ambassadors.

The White House had no public comment on the new policy.

The U.S. officials, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said thus far about 30 envoys have been notified they are being replaced under the so-called "2¼-year rule."

They said that one exception to the rule is former Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, who has served as ambassador to Japan for more than eight years.

The new rule was triggered by the administration problem in finding a graceful way to replace political appointees without offending them. The issue came to a head last winter at the conclusion of President Reagan's first term when the administration decided a shakeup of its ambassadorial corps was overdue.

According to the officials, career diplomats who are ambassadors generally will have three-year assignments. Previously, there had been no fixed term.

The officials said a possible exception to this rule is Arthur Hartman, a veteran foreign service officer who soon will complete four years as U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union.

Prize-winning playwright dies after long illness

Burrows

NEW YORK (AP) — Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright Abe Burrows, co-author of such Broadway hits as "Guys And Dolls," "Can-Can" and "How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying," has died at his home here after a long illness. He was 74.

Burrows, who died Friday, had been ill with Alzheimer's disease, his grandson, Nick Grad, said Saturday from Beverly Hills, Calif.

Burrows was one of Broadway's pioneers of putting comedy to music, and has been ranked among American theater greats such as Richard Rodgers, Alan Jay Lerner and Agnes DeMille.

Burrows started out in radio comedy, writing the show "Duffy's Tavern," and was co-author with Cornelia Otis Skinner of the late 1940s hit "We Take Your Word."

He ventured into theater when he wrote and directed "Can-Can," a 1953 musical about a racy Paris dance hall that featured lyrics by Cole Porter.

He also co-wrote the romantic comedy "Guys And Dolls" with Jo Swerling, which in the 1960s made his name nearly as well-known in the theater world as George S. Kaufman's and George Abbott's.

Eight protesters acquitted

CHICAGO (AP) — Eight people have been acquitted of charges they trespassed at a South African consulate after arguing they broke the law to avoid what they considered the greater harm of that nation's racial policies.

The eight acquitted Friday were charged with trespassing after they refused to leave the Chicago consulate during protests on Jan. 15 and Feb. 7.

"This is a victory for all of us," said Northwestern University professor Dennis Brutus, a critic of South Africa's apartheid policy of racial separation who testified during the trial.

An Illinois statute says, "Conduct which would otherwise be an offense is justifiable by reason of necessity if the accused...reasonably believed such conduct was necessary to avoid a public or private injury greater than the injury which might reasonably result from his own conduct."

Eruption remembered

TOUTLE, Wash. (AP) — A small parade, a scientific open house and a few small stirrings from Mount St. Helens itself marked the fifth anniversary Saturday of the volcano's cataclysmic eruption.

Scientists have detected an increase in the number of shallow earthquakes in the mountain over the past several days and a slight swelling of the mountain's 800-foot high lava dome.

Scientists cautioned that it's still much too early to say whether the volcano, which has been quiet since September, may be building toward an eruption.

On May 18, 1980, Mount St. Helens staged its biggest eruption, leaving 57 people dead or missing and clogging rivers around the mountain with volcanic debris.

In Toutle, about 30 miles northwest of the volcano, residents observed their annual Volcano Daze with a small parade that included two high school marching bands, a handful of antique cars, three fire trucks, and a small model of the volcano pulled by two boys on motor bikes.

Chickens take to the air

RIO GRANDE, Ohio (AP) — Chickens whose wings are used for flight instead of food took to the air briefly and indignantly Saturday in the 14th annual International Chicken Flying Meet.

But none matched the world-record performance of famed Lola B., a barnyard bantam who in 1979 set the world record of 302 feet, 8 inches.

That short distance stands tall in the world of competitive chicken-flying because the basic fact of the sport is that chickens don't much care for flying.

Most choose to stay earthbound, taking wing only when threatened. True to form, most of the 246 fowl from four states who competed at the Bob Evans Farm in this southeastern Ohio hamlet did little more than squawk and flutter to the ground. The winning chicken, named Bill Dance, flew 180 feet.

United Airlines, 5,000 pilots agree to resume negotiations

Associated Press

United Airlines and its 5,000 pilots agreed Saturday to resume negotiations in a two-day walkout that grounded most flights of the nation's largest airline.

The Air Line Pilots Association agreed to resume negotiations Monday with United in Chicago, as proposed by Helen Witt, the chairman of the National Mediation Board, said David Jewell, a union spokesman.

United spokesman Chuck Novak said the company also had agreed.

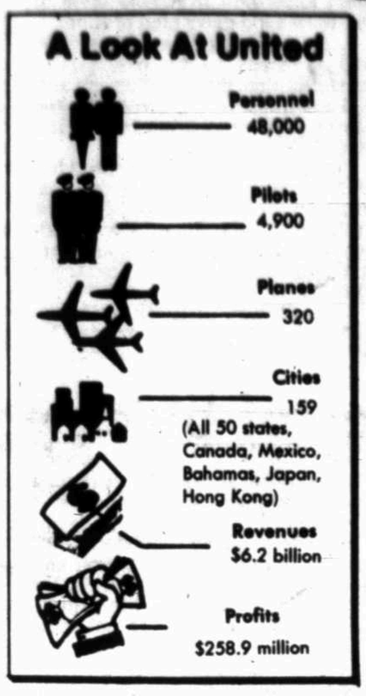

The strike's effects were widespread Satuseay, as uickeu ageots scrambled to find alternate bookings for passengers left stranded, while other airlines added planes, Amtrak added cars and travelers stood in lines.

Two senior citizens group from Chicago were stuck in Nevada, and airport managers added up revenue they were losing in landing fees.

The strike began after contract talks broke down early Friday over a company demand for a two-tiered pay system that would put newly hired pilots on a lower scale than their predecessors. The pilots, who had not struck since 1951, had worked without a contract since April 1984.

Novak said the company is already screening 5,500 applications to permanently replace the striking members of the Air Line Pilots Association.

But ALPA President Henry Duffy, who joined the picket line at National Airport outside Washington, D.C., said the company's threat to fire striking pilots is "very hollow..."

"Trying to replace 5,000 pilots...with people off the street is going to be a hard act," Duffy said. He said United pilots have thousands of hours of experience and the company is seeking replacements with as little as 250 hours.

United spokesman Joe Hopkins said "several hundred" pilots had crossed picket lines, but First Officer James Good, ALPA communications chairman, said "less than 1 percent of pilots have crossed picket lines and less than 2 percent of flight attendants have crossed picket lines."

United had to cut its operations sharply, with only 165 flights, or 11 percent of those normally scheduled, getting off the ground Friday and 220 flights scheduled Saturday, the airline said. It usually has 1,550 flights daily. The airline was serving 51 of its usual 139 cities Saturday, said Eileen Golab, a United spokeswoman in Chicago.

Passengers found seats on remaining United flights and other airlines, Hopkins said from Chicago, where the union and the airline are based. "I think for the most part, across the system, it's going fairly well."

Good sympathized with passengers but defended the strike, saying: "We're very unhappy about it. And we really do apologize to the American public for the inconvenience. It's not something we did lightly, and it's not something we went into frivolously for a couple of bucks."

About 95 senior citizens from Berwyn, Ill., had to spend an extra night in Reno, Nev., after their Friday flight to Chicago was canceled, and another Chicago-area group of about 90 senior citizens also was stranded.

About 70 members, drawn from each group, picketed with pilots after the pilots and pharmacies chipped in to buy medicine.

"People have just been great, just fabulous," said Marge Martin, 57, activities director for the Senior Connection Club.

Both groups had reservations on other airlines, and expected to return home Sunday.

Police continuing search of destroyed fortress

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Slowed by the collapse of some of the charred rowhouses adjoining the fortress home of the radical group MOVE, police on Saturday searched for more weapons and clues in the aftermath of the deadly police raid.

Wind and overnight rain made the walls of some of the roofless rowhouses, standing like charred dominoes, fall into the rubble. Sixty-one houses were burned; 11 people died.

"The search is continuing. They are going to look through adjoining properties," said Robin Farmer, press aide to Mayor W. Wilson Goode.

On Friday, police finished a four-day search of the MOVE compound after finding a rifle, two shotguns and three handguns.

No automatic weapons were found. Goode had said Friday: "Why does a group that calls itself back-to-nature feel it is necessary to fortify themselves inside a house with machine guns, with automatic weapons and shoot thousands of rounds at police officers and firefighters?"

Police believe some members of the radical cult may have fled to neighboring homes. Eleven bodies, including those of four children, were found this week in ruins of the MOVE house. Two other MOVE members fled the home and are in police custody.

Police dropped a bomb on the MOVE house Monday to break up a rooftop fortification after a lengthy exchange of gunfire that followed an attempt to evict the group. The ensuing fire ignited the west Philadelphia neighborhood, destroying 53 houses and damaging eight others. An estimated 270 people are homeless.

Goode met with about 300 people from the area Saturday, and later said he told them the homeless might need to stay in emergency shelters for another week or two until temporary housing is readied. Reporters were barred from the session, held in a neighborhood gym.

"This has been a difficult week," Goode said after the meeting. "We're working 24 hours a day to tell the people that we care about their problems and their concerns and want to as quickly as possible make them whole again."

AP Laserphoto

A Philadelphia policeman watches as flames rise from the burning row houses Monday. The fire started in MOVE headquarters and destroyed 61 homes. Firemen, fearing gunfire, waited about an hour before starting to fight the fire.

U.S. Rep. William Gray III of Philadelphia, chairman of the House Budget Committee, toured the area with Reps. Robert Edgar and Thomas Foglietta, two Democratic colleagues from the Philadelphia area.

"The major thing we've got to do right now is to heal this area and heal this neighborhood," Gray said.

The neighborhood is considered a crime scene and was cordoned off by police, but residents complained about sightseers.

"People think this is a tourist attraction. It's not," said Timothy Lewis, 22, whose home stands just outside the fire zone.

"There are too many sightseers. They just want to see what happened here. There's really nothing to see, just a lot of burned out houses. ... Why don't they go to the park, or on a picnic or to the zoo?"

Some of the homeless picked through donated clothing taken to a recreation center converted into a one-stop aid station. Charitable agencies have received so much clothing that they have asked donors to give money instead.

The Insurance Federation of Pennsylvania set up a center to process claims in a van stationed in a city park.

"We decided to treat this like any other insurance disaster. All member companies who did business in the area have sent an appraiser so we can assist these people quickly," said spokesman Lee Feibinger.

"The biggest problem is to match up the policy holder with the proper company since all the papers were destroyed in the fire. We also want to get an idea of what their losses were," he said.

Navy investigating surgeon's appointment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Just two months after "overall performance" problems led to suspension of his surgical privileges, the top heart and chest doctor at Bethesda Naval Hospital was performing lung surgery on a presidential candidate and being quoted in the press as a medical authority.

There must have been at least some feeling of vindication for the surgeon, Dr. Donal M. Billig, who had found a new career in the Navy — past his 50th birthday — after leaving a New Jersey hospital in a hail of charges and counter-charges about competence, judgment and honesty.

But it wasn't to last long.

Billig's right to practice at Bethesda, a giant facility in the Maryland suburbs outside Washington, was suspended again last November amid new allegations of incompetence. Then he was formally ousted from surgical practice there last month.

Now, while Billig appeals his ouster, the Navy has begun a closed-door investigation into how he got appointed so quickly to a top surgical position at one of the nation's best-known hospitals, the "hospital of presidents" where top government officials and members of Congress often go for specialized care.

Billig isn't talking publicly about his problems. And Navy officials won't comment on published reports that Billig's fellow doctors had complained that too many people were dying in heart operations he performed. But the public reasons for his dismissal are still striking for someone in such a high position.

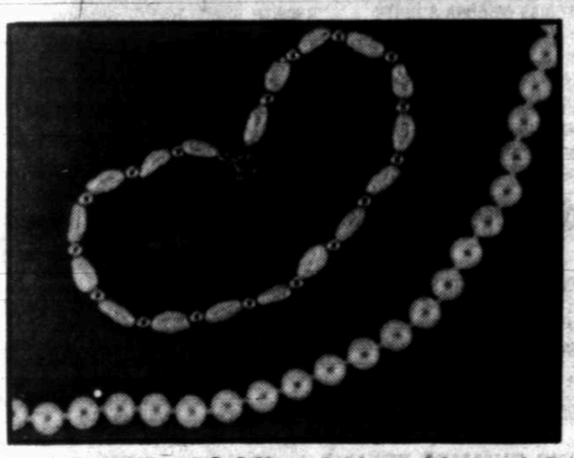

The 54-year-old doctor, according to the hospital, had an "insufficient level of surgical competence" and demonstrated "professional behavior contrary to medical staff bylaws."

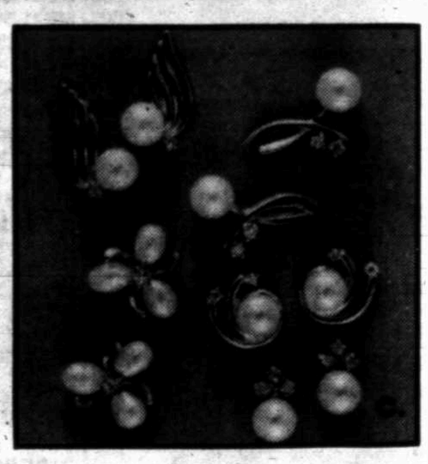

The Navy is giving no details of what led to Billig's earlier suspension in October 1983 — beyond the citing of "overall problems" — and he was back on the job within a month.

Pope challenges youth to shun 'unbridled sex'

NAMUR, Belgium (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Saturday challenged Belgian youth to shun "unbridled sex," drugs and expensive fashions and said they must "avoid the traps which our society sets to exploit the weak."

Some 45,000 young people packed a fairgrounds in this French-speaking town for the evening service.

When the pontiff appeared, many chanted "Happy birthday to you, happy birthday to you" in English, and "Long live the pope" in French. John Paul turned 65 on Saturday.

Earlier, in a paper he delivered to 17 Belgian bishops at a private meeting in Mechelen, near Brussels, the pope said steps taken by the Second Vatican Council 20 years ago to modernize church practices have caused occasional "disarray and division" among the world's 800 million Roman Catholics.

In the paper, which was released to reporters, the pope noted "the spiritual weakness of Christians" and said "the Christian tissue of society must be remade."

The pontiff was on the third full day of his trip to Belgium, where the majority Catholic population has given him a tumultuous welcome after cool receptions in the Netherlands and Luxembourg earlier in the week.

In his address to the young people in this town on the Meuse River, 40 miles southeast of Brussels, John Paul urged his audience to avoid "the promise of easy, immediate pleasure, unbridled sex, drugs of all kinds, artificial gadgets, expensive fashions, thought-destroying noise, illusion-mongers and dream merchants — every modern idol which fosters our egoism in all its aspects."

Major U.S. churches firmly oppose Contra aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress seems to be wavering on aid to Nicaraguan rebels, but major American churches are not. Long opposed to military aid to the Contras, they are gearing up for a new fight against other kinds of assistance.

Most mainline churches say they do not agree with President Reagan's characterization of the Contras as freedom fighters. Typical is the stand of the United Methodist Church accusing the Contras of "inflicting terror, torture and death upon innocent civilians."

In fundamental disagreement with Reagan on this issue, church spokesmen say supporting the Contras is immoral and illegal. They do not agree with the president that the Sandinista government has imposed a Communist dictatorship.

The administration contends that the churches have succumbed to a made-in-Managua disinformation campaign and are ignoring attempts by the Sandinistas to subvert churches in Nicaragua.

"The debate has reached the point where many American Christians are going to have to decide whether to believe their own missionaries in the country or the State Department," said George Chauncey, director of the Washington office of the Presbyterian Church, USA, in an interview.

Administration officials admit they don't know how to confront church opposition.

"They are really formidable," said Langhorne A. Motley, assistant secretary of state for interamerican affairs. "We don't normally think of them as political opponents, so we don't know how to handle them. It has to be a kid-glove kind of thing."

A State Department official who didn't want to be identified lamented that the churches get special attention in Congress. "If you have a priest or a nun in your office, you listen," he said.

Churches which have adopted formal positions against aid to the Contras include the Methodists, Roman Catholics, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, American Lutherans, some Baptist churches and the Unitarian Church.

The administration can claim significant religious support for its policies only among some fundamentalist preachers, such as the Rev. Jerry Falwell of the Moral Majority and the Rev. Tim LaHaye of the American Coalition for Traditional Values.

In an interview, LaHaye was critical of the leadership of major churches. "They may masquerade as mainline church leaders, but the truth is they are liberals. Conservatives stand with the freedom-fighters and oppose a socialist-Marxist takeover" in Central America.

The Southern Baptist Convention and the Mormons have not taken a position. Jewish organizations generally are not vocal on the issue.

Church officials voiced satisfaction when the House of Representatives rejected military or other Contra aid last month.

Black youths set fire to homes of black policemen

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Mobs of black youths went on a rampage after a riot victim's funeral Saturday and set fire to the homes of five black policemen in a township east of Johannesburg, witnesses reported.

They said police and soldiers in armored cars fired tear gas and rubber bullets to disperse the crowds, and at least two youths were injured.

In another development, about 9,000 black miners staged an illegal strike at the Blyvooruitzicht Gold Mine west of Johannesburg over the dismissal of two colleagues, the mine and the mine workers' union said.

The rioting occurred at Duduza, a black township about 30 miles east of Johannesburg, after the funeral for Sonto Thobela, a 19-year-old black student activist who perished when her home was firebombed a week ago.

Witnesses said an estimated 15,000 mourners attended the funeral and burial service and hundreds of youths then attacked the policemen's homes, which were not occupied.

Blacks working for the government are frequent targets of black militants battling the white-minority government's racial separation policies.

Police headquarters in Pretoria said other townships were relatively quiet after nine months of sporadic unrest that anti-apartheid groups say has left more than 350 blacks dead.

The miners' strike began Friday night.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Officials: Sixty-two died in Japanes mine blast

TOKYO (AP) — Sixty-two coal miners died in a mine explosion that may have been caused by a leak of methane gas, officials said Saturday. Police probing the disaster questioned mine officials and seized company documents.

The blast occurred Friday at the Mitsubishi Mining Co.'s Minami Oh Yubari mine near Yubari, a town on the northern island of Hokkaido about 560 miles north of Tokyo. It lifted coal carts from their tracks, and many miners suffered broken bones from being slammed against mine walls by the force of the explosion.

Miners died either from the force of the explosion, or of carbon monoxide poisoning, said an official of the government's Mine Security Management Bureau in Sapporo, the capital of Hokkaido.

Rescue workers carried 61 bodies out of the mine, and the 62nd victim died in a hospital early Saturday, police spokesman Chigeyoshi Motoi said. Twenty-two miners were hurt and 10 remained hospitalized.

International Trade and Industry Minister Keijiro Murata, appearing on national television from the accident scene, said the government "intends to fully investigate the cause of the accident, but (I) cannot say whether the company was fully responsible for the accident because our investigation...has not been completed"

A police spokesman said officers searched mine company offices and seized 80 documents.

Japan passes rights law

TOKYO (AP) — Parliament has approved a law that requires equal employment opportunity for men and women, and allows women to work later hours and more overtime.

However, the law passed Friday stops short of providing penalities for employers who do not comply. The law takes effect next April 1.

"Companies will probably take another look at policies relating to labor. But what kind of effect it will have — we'll have to wait and see," said Yoshinori Yanaka, an official at the Labor Ministry's Women's Bureau.

According to the Labor Ministry, women made up 39.5 percent of Japan's work force in 1983. For the first time that year, more than half of working women were married.

But women still earn an average of only 53 percent of what men earn. That is partly because the number of women employed in part-time jobs has gone up as the female labor force has increased.

Three held in Arab's death

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Police have arrested a soldier, a policeman and a student for questioning about the fatal shooting of a Palestinian taxi driver last month, police and Israeli Television reported Saturday.

The television broadcast said the three detained Friday were a soldier from West Jerusalem's Rehavia quarter, a policeman from the suburb of Maalei Adumim and a 24-year-old woman from the town of Gilo in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

According to the broadcast, they are being questioned about the murder of 32-year-old Hamis Tukagiji who was shot on April 22 as he was driving his taxi on Jerusalem's outskirts. Police said they believed he was killed in reprisal for the shooting death of an Israeli cab driver, David Caspi, two days earlier in an Arab suburb of Jerusalem.

Israeli Television said police were investigating to determine if the weapons used to shoot Tukagiji belonged to the detained soldier. It also said the three detainees were not related to Caspi or family friends.

The Israeli media has said police believed Caspi was killed during a robbery.

Blast kills six people

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — An explosion killed six people and injured one in a town near the Afghan border which anti-Marxist guerrillas use to stockpile ammunition, newspaper reports said Saturday.

Pakistani papers said a bomb exploded Friday in the marketplace of Teri Mangal. The reports gave few details.

Afghan guerrillas have used Teri Mangal to store ammunition and explosives for their war against the Marxist government of Afghanistan and the Soviet troops supporting it.

Up to 80 people died in a huge explosion in Teri Mangal last September. Pakistani officials first said that blast was caused by exploding ammunition, but later said it had been caused by high altitude bombing by Afghan warplanes.

Thieves break into abbey

GRANADA, Spain (AP) — Thieves broke into the 17th-century abbey of Sacromonte, stealing paintings, sculpture and jewelry worth an estimated $2 million, police said Saturday.

Missing was a 1797 Francisco de Goya painting and art works from the 15th, 16th and 17th centuries, police said.

They said the thieves broke into the abbey late Friday night by boring a hole through a wall and forcing locks on doors to the abbey's museum area.

One of the three German Shepherd guard dogs inside the building was missing, police said, and the museum's caretaker told police he did not hear the dogs during the night.

Miss Liberty goes on the block

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Statue of Liberty is for sale — in Mexico.

Well, not the real Statue of Liberty that has stood in the mouth of New York harbor greeting immigrants to the United States for nearly 100 years, but a replica built for filming an American adventure film.

The filming of "Remo: The First Adventure," starring actors Fred Ward and Joel Grey and directed by Guy Hamilton, is over.

And those working on the movie now are wondering what to do with the 75-foot-high polyurethane foam and fiberglass model. It sits, torch held aloft, atop a dusty hill in the southern part of the city, facing the famed volcanoes Iztaccihuatl and Popocatepetl and attracting the curious up a dirt road leading to the site.

One idea for disposing of the Mexican imposter is to try to sell it to an amusement park in the United States to capture what the film's associate producer Judy Goldstein calls "statue fever," expected to break out next year when the real Miss Liberty celebrates her 100th anniversary.

If no one wants the fake, it may have to be destroyed.

"We don't want to destroy her," Ms. Goldstein said in a telephone interview from Hollywood, Calif. "No one can bear the thought of having to get rid of her."

Ms. Goldstein said the model is identical in scale to the 151-foot-high statue on Liberty Island, off the southern tip of Manhattan, but duplicates the original only from about the middle of the chest to the top of the torch.

"It's an exact replica," she said. "It's the only one that's ever been done to scale."

She said it cost about $500,000 to build but wouldn't say how much the producers would like to sell it for. She said a number of people, both in the United States and Mexico, have expressed interest in it but wouldn't identify them.

The model was designed by John Jensen. Planning began last August and the work was finished in March.

Filming of "Remo," scheduled to be released in October by Orion Pictures, included shots of the Statue of Liberty in New York.

But for the actors to do stunts in, on and around it, a replica had to be built.

To do so, the designers fashioned a wooden and pipe base, covered it with polyurethane foam and sculpted Miss Liberty's prominent features. The crown was built of wood.

The foam and wood were coated with fiberglass and painted a light green to match the oxidized color of the copper skin of the original. Seams, rivets and even stains under the nose were duplicated.

A 75-foot replica of the Statue of Liberty looms over the southern part of Mexico City. The model was built as part of a film set, at a cost of about $500,000. With filming completed, the movie's producers are looking for a buyer.

Sikhs claim police crackdown violated rights

By BRAHMA CHELLANEY

SAIDON-LEHAL, India (AP) — Sunder Kaur, daughter of the village council chief, said she was washing clothes when police broke into her home and took away her two sisters and two sisters-in-law.

"They beat up the womenfolk at home with staves and whisked them away. No male member of the household was present," she said.

Bhupinder Singh, 13, and Rajinder Kaur, 10, the offspring of a village priest, said police took away all adult members of their family.

Acchri Kaur, 70, said, "I was hit with the butt of a rifle."

The residents of Saidon-Lehal, a farming village 15 miles east of the Sikh holy city of Amritsar, were giving their accounts of what happened in a police crackdown last Tuesday which they said was prompted by villagers' protests against the opening of a liquor store.

Civil rights activists say the police action in Saidon-Lehal is one example of a widespread abuse of emergency powers granted to fight terrorism in Punjab state in northwest India.

Sikh extremists are fighting for an independent homeland for the 13 million-member religious minority. A wave of terror bombings blamed on Sikh militants planting booby-trapped transistor radios killed 85 people across northern India the previous weekend.

The government of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi introduced a bill in Parliament Saturday that would impose the death penalty for terrorist acts that cause injury or death, and give security forces sweeping new powers for the next two years.

The opposition said the legislation would be open to abuses.

When a group of reporters visited Saidon-Lehal last Thursday, almost all of the 1,200 residents trooped to a square to tell their stories.

They said hundreds of police and paramilitary troops encircled the hamlet on May 14, fired shots in the air, entered homes and took away nearly 100 residents to the nearby town of Mehta Chowk.

Village spokesmen said 27 men, nine women and a child were still under detention, but the local police chief said only five men were being held "on specific charges," including criminal intimidation and attempted murder.

"How can you believe the villagers' tales? The women who they claim are missing may have gone to their parents' homes in other villages," said Police Superintendent Harpal Singh.

Cloudy, warm conditions anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Warm temperatures will return to the Permian Basin today, but skies will remain partly cloudy, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. Today's high should be in the upper 80s, with winds from the south at 5-15 mph. Tonight will be partly cloudy with a low near 60, and Monday should be a repeat of Sunday, with partly cloudy skies and a high in the upper 80s.

Saturday's high of 73 was 25 degrees below the record for the date of 98, set in 1946, while the overnight low of 56 was 10 degrees above the 1971 record low of 46.

STATE

Heavy rains drenched parts of South Texas this morning for the second day in a row. The strongest thunderstorms toppled power lines and trees near McAllen, and golfball size hail pounded a portion of Laredo Friday night.

Heavy thunderstorms were scattered over a large portion of South Texas early today, with some showers extending off the middle coast. Other light showers were detected over the South Plains.

Light winds were common across most sections of the state. A notable exception was in South Texas, where a strong northwest wind of 15 to 25 mph was reported. A thunderstorm gust of 56 mph was clocked at brownsville.

Predawn temperatures cooled to the 50s and 60s with the 70s confined to the south. The readings ranged from 54 at Amarillo and Lubbock to 71 at the Corpus Christi Naval Air Station.

NATION

Rainshowers drenched much of the Northeast on Saturday, while scattered showers and thunderstorms developed across the nation's midsection.

Thunderstorms in northern Indiana produced marble-size size hail at Fort Wayne, while pea-size hail occurred at Buffalo, N.Y., and Cheyenne and Laramie, Wyo.

An inch to an inch-and-one-half of rain was reported in the Berkshire Mountains and the northern Connecticut River Valley of Massachusetts. Cummington Hill, Mass., was drenched with 2.48 inches of rain.

Sporadic storms dumped up to 4 inches in New Jersey on Saturday and late Friday.

Car restoration 'a hobby'

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

When Bob Burns was in the sixth grade in Hobbs, N.M., he rebuilt junked lawnmowers and sold them. Now he restores classic cars for $20,000 and more, but says he actually made more money on the lawnmowers.

"It's just a break-even deal for us," he says of the restoration jobs. "We just enjoy it."

At Burns Paint and Body Shop on South Garfield, collision repairs are the main business, but the proprietor and Ed Morris, one of his employees, have made a hobby of catering to classic-car hobbyists. Burns points with pride to a lushly restored 1931 Ford Model A pickup belonging to Tom Canton, who uses his remodeled Model A to help advertise his home remodeling business.

"We did this one about three years ago," says Burns. "He'd had it for years and years. It was just a pile of junk."

Now it looks like it had just rolled off the Ford assembly line in 1931. Inside the shop, Morris is working on a 1932 Model B for Chris Scharbauer, adding such modern touches as shock absorbers to the original chassis. Some customers want their cars restored as completely as possible to the original condition, but others want to update the cars with a few unobstrusive modern conveniences, according to Burns. Most often replaced are the electrical system, the brakes and the coolant system:

"There's a lot of guys who put in a little Toyota air conditioner," he says. "It just depends on what you want."

It also depends how much money you have — "You can't hardly do one right for less than $20,000," Burns says. "That MG out there was $40,000."

But if you do have the money, it's a good investment, he says.

"It will appreciate in value. Ten-fifteen percent a year, that's as good as any IRA in town."

Burns begins his restoration jobs by consulting Bill Harrah's car library in Reno, Nev.: "We slow down and research the whole deal before we start."

Engine parts are easier to find than body parts, "But it's all out there. You just got to go digging," says Burns. "The stuff's pretty readily available if you know where to go."

CENTENNIAL CHRONICLES

Sheep, cattle led Midland industry

By LYNN MASHBURN
and ELIZABETH MASHBURN

Lynn Mashburn, a 24-year resident of Midland, has a bachelor of arts degree in American studies from Stephens College. She has been a past president of the Midland City Council PTA and Permian Civic Ballet Association and was a docent for Museum of the Southwest. In 1975 she wrote and recorded Midland History facts for the Bicentennial observance.

Elizabeth Mashburn, a graduate of Midland High School, in 1984 received a bachelor of arts degree with honors in history from the University of Texas-Austin.

Cattle, oil and cotton have long described Midland, Texas. Of these, cattle characterize the community's first major industry, ranching. Sheep, however, instead of cattle started Midland's ranching industry. In 1882, Herman Nelson Garrett, known as Midland's first permanent resident, brought his flock of 300 sheep to the railroad side-car stop then known as Midway.

Five years later, in 1887, John Scharbauer grazed his sheep ranching enterprise from Taylor, Nolan and Mitchell Counties into Midland County. He chose this area to establish a permanent home and ranching headquarters. Upon his arrival, Scharbauer found little more than the railroad section car which he used for sleeping. He grazed his sheep northeast of present-day Midland and built his first ranch at Marienfeld, which in 1890 became known as Stanton. This venture was so successful that in 1892-93 Scharbauer took 90,000 head of sheep to market. This shipment is believed to be the largest number of sheep sold by one man in Texas during that century.

The transition from sheep ranching to cattle ranching was inevitable. Sheep raising was not easy. The sheeps' vulnerability to predatory animals, market fluctuations and frequent disagreements over grazing rights between the cattlemen and sheep herders added to the difficulty. Around the turn of the century large scale sheep ranching in this vicinity was phased out in deference to the predominant cattle ranching. Several cattle ranchers had begun settling in West Texas and had headquarters in Midland. Among these were the Cowdens who came from Palo Pinto and ranched in the Sand Hills prior to starting the famous JAL Ranch in eastern New Mexico. O.B. Holt brought his herd of about 300 cattle from the community of West, Texas and settled at Clabber Hills in Andrews County. Samuel Edmonds Townsend, who bought his first two cows by paying for them with fish, came from Abilene and located 17 miles southwest of Midland. Other pioneer ranching families included the Jowells, the Holloways, the Brunsons, the Slaughters and the Crowleys.

THESE FAMILIES found the West Texas terrain and climate ideal for raising cattle. It has been said, "hard land is good cattle land." Midland's location, situated between the sandy land to the south and the somewhat sandy area located near Andrews to the east of Big Spring, made it an excellent "hard" place for grazing cattle. Native grasses were abundant, supplying inexpensive feed. Winters milder than those characteristic of the Panhandle allowed cattle to roam the open range all year, alleviating the need for the construction of shelter barns.

Surface water was not always readily available. Water, however, could be obtained from wells dug at relatively shallow depths of six to 100 feet, or from many of the small natural sinks that dotted the land.

Reportedly, Nelson Morris of the "C" Ranch was the first rancher around Midland to use windmills for the large scale watering of cattle. Windmills were fairly economical since they were operated by the frequent West Texas breezes.

Unfortunately, these windmills were not designed expressly for the West Texas weather or the West Texas thirst. In 1890, Bill Oden, a ranch-hand in Pecos County, perfected the windmill for more efficient water usage in West Texas, bringing a boon to ranchers and townspeople alike.

Furthermore, Midland's location above the quarantine line was advantageous to the cattle industry. In the early 1890's South Texas experienced a devastating tick fever epidemic among cattle. Most of the cattle in South Texas were quarantined; not allowed to roam free or to be sent to market for fear of spreading the disease to other cattle. In the Midland area, fever, mange and pests were virtually unknown and fever-carrying ticks were not found in West Texas pastures.

AS THE CATTLE industry prospered in the Midland area, so did the number of people who found it a lucrative endeaver. These newcomers originally acquired their ranch land in one of two ways: from the State of Texas or from the Texas and Pacific Railroad.

Soon after the organization of Midland County, the Texas Legislature passed the "Absolute Lease Law." This law allowed ranchers an absolute lease of designated holdings at 50 cents per acre. Stockmen also acquired ranchland from the Texas and Pacific Railroad. The State granted the railroad alternate sections of land with the condition that the railroad sections be sold within 12 years or title reverted back to the State.

The railroad's price per acre also averaged fifty cents, but often the better land sold for a higher price. In the late 1800's acquiring ranchland from either the State or the railroad proved advantageous because prices were comparable, the land was of good quality and both the State and the Railroad let the stockmen own the land absolutely. After some years land was also acquired by homesteading or by purchasing land from another landowner.

Hospital to honor Midland lawyer

Midland attorney Tom Sealy talks with young Texas patients during his recent visit to Denver's National Jewish Hospital/National Asthma Center. All school-aged inpatients attend regular classes in the medical center's Stanely Kunsberg School, a state-approved extension of the Denver Public School System.

From Staff Reports

Midland lawyer and civic leader Tom Sealy will receive the 1985 Humanitarian Award Thursday from the National Jewish Hospital/National Asthma Center at its annual fundraising dinner gala to be held at Green Tree Country Club.

Sealy, a partner in the law firm of Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin and Browder visited the reknowned hospital in Denver recently.

"The NJH/NAC Humanitarian Award is presented annually in Midland and other cities to recognize people who demonstrate great humanitarian concern and outstanding community service," said a report from the foundation.

The hospital is used by many residents of Midland, where respiratory problems are particularly prevalent.

"NJH/NAC is the only facility of its kind in the nation," said Bill Reeder, a Midland businessmen and chairman of the dinner event. "Over the years, many chronically-ill Midland residents have received medical care at a level that is available only in Denver."

Since NJH/NAC was founded in 1899, more than 647,000 days of care have been provided to Texas residents, said the report. The hospital is internationally recognized for its research into lung-related diseases.

Research being conducted at National Jewish is directed toward clinical applications to benefit all victims of asthma, emphysema, chronic bronchitis, tuberculosis, occupational and environmental lung diseases and immune-system disorders, said the report.

"The goal of the research and patient care at NJH/NAC is to reduce the lifetime health care costs for its patients by returning those chronically-ill children and adults to more healthy and productive lives."

Sealy is involved in various community activities and organizations including Midland Memorial Foundation Hospital and the University of Texas Law School Foundation. He is past president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, served as a member of the Governor's Committee of 75 on Education Beyond the High School and has long been active in the governing policies of The University of Texas.

Those interested in the $250-a-plate, black tie dinner, may contact Reeder at 683-2281. Those interested in the NJH/NAC may call its toll-free "lung line," 1-800-222-LUNG.

Basin investigators elected by state group

HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

An investigator with the Midland County District Attorney's Office last week was elected to the board of directors of the Texas Law Enforcement Intelligence Unit Association.

J.D. Luckie was elected to one of five positions representing 88 agencies across the state at the annual meeting in Dallas.

The Permian Basin is being represented further with the election of Lt. Jerry Green of Odessa. He and Luckie join members from Dallas, El Paso and Austin on the board for one-year terms.

The organization "encompasses major metropolitan areas such as Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, El Paso and Lubbock," Luckie said. "But it's also good for smaller towns where they may not be able to afford to have all of the people up to date on criminal activities that could be going on in their area."

Dealing with information on drug problems and organized crime ranging from the Mafia to motorcycle gangs like the Bandidos, the organization provides intelligence officers throughout the state with a means of communication, Luckie said.

"The officers involved in gathering intelligence information come together four times a year to meet and pass on information in reference to different problems we're having," Luckie said. "They're all related. I may have some information on a guy down here and they have never heard of him but he's in their town now. This is a way of passing intelligence information through the state."

During the last meeting, members focused on organized-crime families which are moving to Texas to escape law enforcement crack-downs in Miami.

"They're causing so much heat down there that it's costing the different organizations a lot of money in confiscated planes, ships, heroin, cocaine and marijuana," Luckie said. "They're looking for an area that's not so hot, like the Beaumont/Houston area. They need a port of entry and they're looking further up the coast."

GARY OTT

If I could create characters...

There's this scene in a novel I was reading the other night where an aspiring young author admits being lonely and in need of female company.

But rather than desiring a kind and understanding woman with whom he can share his inner-most thoughts, he longs for a 30-year-old Swedish housekeeper who can't speak a word of English.

When asked how the language barrier would solve his loneliness problem, he replies: "I don't want her for a friend. My friends will be the characters in my book."

He has a point — not necessarily regarding the value of female company, but rather about writers getting to create people. That's the beauty of fiction. The writer can come up with anything he wants. He has no bounds. If he wants a character to be virtuous, he can do it. All he needs is the right combination of words.

If his storyline is in need of a villain, no problem. He can whip one up, and no doubt make him far more interesting than your basic real-life bad guy.

You don't get that kind of freedom in some types of writing. Take your average newspaper reporter, for example. No matter how boring the city council meeting might get, he can't start making up his own quotes, regardless of how much more intriguing it would make his story. He must stick with reality.

People who write columns have a little more lee-way. They can stretch the truth. If they are writing about a conversation they overheard, they can spice it up some. Give the speakers a little more insight. Make the one-liners a bit funnier. Add a few wrinkles to the old man's face.

But even with columnists, there are limits. An unwritten rule says there is a fine line between acceptable exaggeration and outright lying and it is considered in very poor taste to wander across that line with any semblance of regularity.

That's a shame. It restricts the development of characters you read about. Given a free hand, most column writers, not to mention reporters, could come up with a whole lot more interesting people than the ones they write about.

Let me give you an example. Given absolute freedom, my heroes would be:

— People who have seen life from enough different angles that they have learned the only way to get by in this old world is to laugh a great deal and dare the day-to-day problems to get them down for more than two hours at a time.

— Men and women who possess a razor-sharp tongue, not the kind that hurts people intentionally, but one capable of putting a loud-mouthed boor in his proper place without the loud-mouthed boor knowing exactly how and when the cut was applied.

— Women who are bone-crushingly beautiful, but don't seem to care.

— Men who have craggy faces, complete with bags under the eyes, more than their share of wrinkles and the faint remnants of a battle scar or two. The kind of man whom upon first sight, you can't tell if he is 35 or 48.

— People, both men and women, who somehow manage to combine enough book knowledge with just the right amount of street smarts to come up with the perfect mixture of conventional wisdom and good old-fashioned savvy.

— Men and women who have been hurt in the past and while they don't show it with their words, the sadness becomes obvious when you look into their eyes.

— People who give an outward appearance of gruffness and cynicism, but, after talking to them for any length of time, you realize they possess a deep concern for people in general.

— Men who insist a broken relationship had no effect on them, but everytime you spot them they are having an affair with a barstool and doing their best to live out a country-western song.

DEATHS

Robert J. Wilson

Services for Robert J. Wilson of Midland will be at 11 a.m. Tuesday at the Ellis Chapel with Elder J.E. Barrington of Primitive Baptist Church officiating. Burial will be at Resthaven Memorial Park with Ellis Funeral Home handling arrangements.

Wilson died Friday at his home following a lengthy illness.

He was born August 11, 1902 at DeLeon and was reared there. He moved to Midland in 1926 from Beeville. He was with Lone Star Distributers before he retired in 1967. He was married to Mary Vanderslice. She died Feb. 25, 1983.

Wilson was a member of the Primitive Baptist Church.

Survivors include two daughters, Mrs. John (Wandal) Burton and Mrs. Gene (Doris) Farris, both of Midland; three brothers, T.H. Wilson and J.D. Wilson, both of Midland, and Ira B. Wilson of Sarasota Springs, Fla.; three sisters, Mrs. Irene Woodruff and Mrs. Ellen Vest, both of Midland, and Mrs. Pearl Lane of Abilene; eight grandchildren; 15 great-grandchildren and one great-great-grandchild.

The family requests memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland.

Billy Dean Walker

STANTON — Billy Dean Walker, 45, of Tornillo, died in a truck accident Thursday near Tulia. Services were scheduled for 10 a.m. Monday at the First Baptist Church in Stanton with Dr. Bobby Walker of Lubbock officiating. Burial was to be in Lone Wolf Cemetery in Mitchell County under the direction of Gilbreath Funeral Home of Stanton.

Walker was born Feb. 20, 1940, at Mesilla, N.M., and had lived in Tornillo for 15 years. He was married to Nancy A. Labbe Dec. 30, 1974, in El Paso. He was a truck driver, a veteran and a Mason.

Survivors include his wife, of Tornillo; two sons, Michael Walker of Odessa and Andrew Walker of Vernon; a stepson, Stephen Swanson of California; a stepdaughter, Karen Lee Swanson of Dallas; and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W.A. Walker of Stanton.

Hickey died Thursday and was a member of the First Christian Church.

Potters 'traditionalists,' speaker says

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE
Staff Writer

Most potters would find themselves philosophically right at home in Midland, according to Helene Warren, a geologist and ceramic analyst from Albuquerque, N.M.

Potters "in general tend to be very conservative," Ms. Warren said. George Foster, an ethnographer who studied contemporary Mexican potters, found that "the most conservative people in the village were the potters."

"Any potter is a traditionalist. Once they find out a way that (making a pot) works, they'll keep that tradition rather than mess it all up by doing something else."

Ms. Warren, in town Saturday to speak at a pottery seminar sponsored by the Midland Archaeological Society and the Museum of the Southwest, has spent the past 20 or so years analyzing pottery from various archaeological sites in the Southwest. She has done contract work for numerous government agencies, including the National Park Service.

In Texas, Ms. Warren has analyzed intrusive wares — pottery from sites outside the state, primarily in New Mexico — which have turned up in prehistoric Texas sites.

Her concern is mainly with the geological aspects of pottery, the analysis of materials found in the ceramics, the tiny bits of rock or other materials which help bind the clay together and keep the pottery from breaking when it is fired. Ms. Warren examines these bits of rock — temper — to determine what they are and where they come from.

"Potters mixed temper — the non-clay materials — into the clay to lighten it, to prevent breakage in firing and use. Temper strengthens the pot by preventing cracking," she said. A crack may form in the pot, but it "hits something, like a grain of sand, and (the crack) can't grow through it."

Temper can be "crushed rock or crushed potsherds," ground up burned bone or shell or even straw.

By examining thin sections of potsherds under a microscope or sometimes through chemical analysis, Ms. Warren first identifies the temper and then attempts to locate its source. Temper is generally harder to find than clay and so is confined to fewer potential sources.

She may look at hundreds or thousands of potsherds to determine the distribution of a certain type of temper. Again, she relies on the prehistoric potters' conservative tendencies.

"Prehistoric potters used the same kind of temper through the years," Ms. Warren said. Often "a change in temper indicates a change in people" making the pottery. However, sometimes a group of people moved into a new area and adopted the pottery-making traditions of the people already living there.

Many West Texas prehistoric Indian sites contain at least a few potsherds from vessels made in New Mexican pueblos. These intrusive wares are significant, Ms. Warren said, because they can provide more exact dates than the native Texas pottery. These New Mexican wares have been dated by counting the growth rings on still-preserved timbers found in the pueblos. Such tree-ring dating is very exact; for example, certain pottery types are known to have lasted for as little as 25 or 50 years.

Pottery from New Mexico is common in West Texas, she said, because of the extensive trade between the pueblo and the Plains Indians. Early Spanish explorers, including Francisco Coronado in 1541, wrote about this contact between the pueblo and Plains Indians. Plains Indians came to the pueblos to trade buffalo hides for pottery and cloth, while "groups of pueblo Indians went out to hunt buffalo."

And why should Plains Indians trade hides for pottery? Because "people on the move don't have the expertise or know-how to make pottery. The pots the pueblo Indians were making were quite attractive...the Plains Indians apparently took a liking to them," she said.

Not every pueblo made its own pottery, either. Along the Rio Grande, in central New Mexico, some pueblos supplied specialized wares. One pueblo may have had a good clay source, so the Indians took advantage of it and made pots to trade to their neighboring pueblos, according to Ms. Warren.

Through her work with several contemporary pueblo potters, Ms. Warren has found that potters who know each other usually can identify each other's pots. Each potter has a distinctive way of making pots which shows up in his or her work.

Although several Southwestern archaeologists have attempted to identify prehistoric pots made by one potter or family of potters, these studies have not been very successful.

"You really need to have a potter to make those kinds of determinations," according to Ms. Warren. "There's so darn much in pottery, it's hard to decide what variables to look at which will make any sense."

AGENCIES

While organized crime in Midland may be scoffed at by many, Luckie said the area is a prime target for laundering drug money.

"Especially with all of the FDIC take-overs," he said, "it would be easy to go in and offer someone 6 percent if they'll let you take over their business and keep it out of the hands of the government. A man who is going broke, his family is depending on him and he's losing everything can find himself over-extended, but these organizations with their cash can bail him out. They can launder the money through and, eventually, in maybe five or six years, they'll oust him out."

Another form of organized crime spreading through Texas are the survivalist groups such as MOVE, which gained publicity in Philadelphia last week. Luckie said one group reportedly has offices in Crane.

"They believe that the end is coming very soon and they will survive," Luckie said. "They're very proud to show an 8, 9, or 10-year-old boy how to cut someone's throat with a knife."

Many of these white-supremist groups have been linked to "numerous" armored-car robberies, Luckie said. And because many live off of welfare and food stamps, even without their presence in an area, they still affect local citizens.

J.D. Luckie

The state intelligence organization, which includes federal, state and local agencies, sends out newsletters to members in addition to the four meetings.

"It's just a way to keep tabs on them," Luckie said.

CATTLE

The relative ease of land acquisition brought many hopeful settlers to West Texas. At first, cattlemen took advantage of the open range and let their herds mingle with others' so the cattle would have access to the scarce water supplies.

FENCES, HOWEVER, were inevitable. Drift fences came first in this area. Blizzards in 1886 and 1887 made the establishment of these fences necessary. When the north wind, sleet and snow blew on the open range, cattle turned their backs to the storm and moved southward, often for many miles. The drift fences also facilitated the rounding-up of cattle in the spring by keeping the cattle closer to home.

Territorial fences soon evolved from drift fences. Ranchers realized that enclosures could keep their herds and their neighbors' herds separate. Fences also proved practical for working cattle and for winter feeding. These early fences were the common four or six wire barbed-wire fence. Wire had to be shipped in at a cost of $4 to $5 a hundredweight delivered on the range. Since wood was quite scarce, mesquite was commonly used for fence posts, taking advantage of the land's available natural resources.

In addition to the Midland area's natural conditions for cattle raising was the advantageous man-made condition, the railroad. As the cattle industry grew, a greater number of cattle were shipped to the Midwest markets from the Midland depot. Soon Midland became the largest cattle shipping point on the Texas and Pacific Railroad. Long, sometimes disastrous, overland cattle drives were eliminated and speedier delivery to market made possible. For a number of years, the average annual export of cattle from Midland amounted to $1.5 million exclusive of registered stock.

Most ranchers had at least a few head of registered stock which they used exclusively for breeding purposes and herd improvement. This improvement became possible only after ranges were fenced and livestock could be segregated.

THE ORIGINAL stock for this region was almost exclusively the Longhorn, a hardy, rangy breed with great survival powers in all sorts of weather and range conditions. Soon, newcomers brought Herefords, Durhams and Polled Angus to the Midland area. The ranchers bred the Longhorn with the Herefords to produce an even bigger animal that was also well suited to the West Texas climate. By 1890, the average market weight had advanced from 1,500 to 1,650 pounds using the same amount of feed and resulting in a larger profit.

Prosperous cattle ranching remained at the forefront of Midland's economy until the 1930's when oil became the predominate industry. After 50 years of being a ranching community Midland's complexion changed to exemplify a town built by oil money rather than by cattle money.

Cattle, however, have never been completely replaced. Herds of cattle are often seen grazing in the shadow of an oil derrick or a pump jack. Lease royalties from oil and gas discoveries have not only financially aided ranching operations but also have actually saved some ranchers. Several of the longtime ranching families have expressed that ranching is their main business but that oil is often their major income source.

Many of today's relative newcomers, the oilmen, have obtained ranches for themselves. A certain amount of prestige accompanies being able to include "rancher" in one's list of accomplishments. Midland's rank in the oil industry these past 50 years owes much to those early ranchers whose progressiveness and foresight laid the foundation for the city which celebrates it's 100th birthday.

Centennial Chronicles will appear on this page each Sunday through July 7 in observance of Midland's Centennial. The columns were contributed by local writers in cooperation with the Midland Centennial Commission.

CARS

And if you can't find it, there are many companies making reproduction parts for such classic cars as the Model A, which was last manufactured in 1931. But not all the cars which Burns restores are 50 years old. When the price of most new cars passed $10,000, he says, a market for restoring the convertibles of the '60s was created.

"1960s convertibles can be restored for less than the price of a new car," he says. "We do a bunch of those."

For $10,000 to $15,000, a customer can fix up an old Cutlass or Camaro and cruise around in a certified classic which will continue to appreciate in value. And he will own a piece of history.

"That is a part of American history," says Burns, pointing to Canton's Model A. "That stuff needs to be saved. That's why we're trying to get some of these done by the Fourth of July," so they can be driven in the Midland Centennial Parade.

Burns usually restores cars for other people, but he has the hulk of a 1914 Model T roadster set aside for himself when he can get around to it. Model T's were popular with car buffs 15 years ago, then Model A's came into vogue, "And stuff from the '40s is getting hot now."

Morris has been specializing in the classic jobs for Burns, and he clearly enjoys the craftsmanship involved.

"There's a lot of time and work involved, but it's worth it, especially when the customer comes and sees it," he says.

"He paints them, he puts them together — he does it all," says Burns. "I keep Ed busy all year round on these."

Burns keeps his other employees busy on more conventional body-shop work. Classic-car restoration is only a small part of his business, and Burns insists he doesn't make much money on it, but "it doesn't cost me anything, and we enjoy it. And it's just a real good advertisement" for his regular business. When people see what he can do for a '31 Model A, "They think, 'If he can work on that, he can work on my new car.' "

People of our community who make a difference.

Steve Partlow

"I'd never lived in a town that was so open to helping new people...The people just sold us...They didn't even know we were thinking about moving here, yet they made us feel welcome," Steve Partlow, Midland area director of Young Life, recalls his visit to Midland in 1976.

Mr. Partlow recounts that he became involved in Young Life as a youth in Dallas, Texas. During college he served as a Young Life volunteer. After completing his education, Mr. Partlow joined the Dallas staff. By 1976 Mr. Partlow and his wife, Candy, knew it was time to move on and start a Young Life organization where one had never existed before, in a town they could call their own.

Several Midlanders had been writing to the regional headquarters in Dallas and requesting that a Young Life organization, designed to introduce adolescents to Jesus Christ and His relevance to life today, be started in our community. The Partlows accepted the challenge. At first, this enthusiastic leader says, "It was really different. No one knew what it (Young Life) was." Most importantly he says they discovered, "Midland is open to anything you want to do for Midland."

Today, 170 to 420 young people attend the weekly meetings. Mr. Partlow says one of the best things about the Midland group is that it helps students from various secondary schools discover common ground.

"I enjoy being involved in Midland - not just in Young Life but in every aspect," says this active volunteer. Mr. Partlow's photography skills are utilized by many organizations. A six year United Way volunteer, Mr. Partlow serves on the Communications Sub-committee. In addition, he serves on the Advisory Board for Midland County Families in Action and on the Midland Crime Commission. He is proud to have served on the Spiritual Task Force of Objectives for Midland and to be an alumnus of Leadership Midland.

Mr. Partlow's many community involvements make him particularly aware of the tremendous resource coordination that takes place in Midland. The way that Midland organizations share their resources and avoid duplication of equipment is unique, according to this volunteer. This cooperative spirit is part of why he says, "It's (volunteering) fun in Midland."

Mr. Partlow sums up his involvement in our community this way, "There's a lot of vision left for Midland, for me, for Young Life...I hope to stay a lot longer."

Strong faith, a vision for the future, and a commitment to serve is why Steve Partlow makes a difference in Midland.

Cub Scout Day Camp begins on June 3 and June 17 with week long sessions at Hogan Park. Cubs who have completed the second grade may participate. The fee is $25 per session which includes a camp T-shirt, hat, craft supplies, and soft drinks. New boys are welcome to join.

Two Lad & Dad weekends are planned at the Buffalo Trail Scout Ranch in the Davis Mountains June 15 & 16 and June 22 & 23. The fee is $20 and participation is open to any 8, 9, or 10 year old boy and a male partner.

A special Mom & Me weekend will be held July 13 and 14 for Cub age boys and their Moms, also at the Scout Ranch. The fee is $25.

Long term summer camp for Boy Scouts, ages 11 and older kicks off on June 9 and runs for four consecutive weeks. Activities at summer camp include hiking, camping, archery, rifle range, nature, swimming and horseback riding. The fee is $65.

For more information contact the Buffalo Trail Council at 684-7171 or visit the Scout Service Center, 1101 W. Texas, Midland.

Handicap awareness program planned

From Staff Reports

The Junior League of Midland will sponsor an introductory workshop at 9 a.m. Thursday at Midland Community Theatre II to usher in "Kids on the Block," a handicap awareness program featuring puppets to represent various disabilities. The public is invited to attend.

Created by Barbara Aiello, a special education teacher in Washington D.C., the program is designed to provide children and teachers with an opportunity to learn and ask questions about various handicaps and experiences.

For information, call 682-2973 between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. Monday.

Wheels, tires said stolen

From Staff Reports

A Midland man reported his 1984 Ford pickup was stripped of its tires and wheels sometime between Friday night and Saturday morning, according to Sheriff's Office reports.

Herman L. Gunter, 306 Shanks, told Sheriff's deputies the four wheels valued at $500, the five tires valued at $500 and a spare wheel worth $70 were taken between 8 p.m. Friday and 8 a.m. Saturday, and the pickup was left sitting on concrete blocks. The total loss was $1,070, reports said.

Sometime the same night, two tires worth $550 were taken from a 1968 Camaro owned by Deanna Carter, Route 3, Box 700, according to reports.

Democrats to meet

Midland chapter of the Texas Young Democrats will hold its May meeting at 5:30 p.m. Monday in the RepublicFirst National Building, second floor conference room.

The agenda includes consideration of the proposed new constitution and by-laws, election of a permanent secretary, planning for the upcoming State Executive Committee meeting and a discussion of significant legislation presently being considered by the Texas Legislature.

The meeting is open to the public.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

'Kids' College' looks good

By H.A. TUCK

When you talk about success stories, "Kids' College at Midland College" has to rate as one of the school's all-time greats.

Parents lined up well before 7 a.m. last Monday to register their children for one or more of the two-week courses in July. Although more than 350 children already have signed up, there are some openings in nearly all the classes. This is because the organizers for Kids' College — after last year's huge turnout — added additional courses and sections to accommodate larger numbers.

If you are interested, you may register your child for one, two or three of the afternoon classes that will be held July 15-25 Monday through Thursday. Just come out to the Community Services Deparment in the Administration Building this week between 7 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday. All registrations must be in person.

• • •

Pre-registration for the first Summer Session still is under way, with good numbers of students signing up. The pre-registration continues this week from 7 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday through Thursday in the Office of Student Services, Administration Building. Last day of pre-registration is Tuesday, May 28. Official registration day is May 30, with classes starting Monday, June 3.

UTPB geology students get grants

Three graduate students in the geology department of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin have received a $1,000 grant from The American Association of Petroleum Geologists. Miles W. Gray and Rachelle Brooker both received their award from the Southwest Section of AAPG while Cheryl Metz received her support from the National Foundation. All three are being supervised by Dr. D.R. Womochel, associate professor of geology at U.T. Permian Basin.

Gray received his BS in geology from U.T. Permian Basin. He has worked for Union Texas Petroleum Corporation and Superior Oil Company. He is currently a fulltime student at U.T. Permian Basin. His research sponsored by AAPG involves finding dolomite in the Salt Flat Grabben and other algal mats in West Texas and Southwest New Mexico.

"The Structural Geology of the Precambrian Allamoore Formation of Trans-Pecos, Texas," will be the topic of Ms. Brooker's research which, upon completion, will provide new data on the earliest geologic history of the Chihuahua Tectonic Belt. After completing her BS in Geology at Wayne State University and one year of graduate courses, she transfered to U.T. Permian Basin to complete her MS in geology.

Ms. Metz's research is of particular interest to sedimentologists, paleoecologists and paleontologists. Through her support from AAPG, Metz will provide a better understanding of the upper cretaceous in the San Carlos Formation in Presidio County, a prospective petroleum province. Metz is a graduate of Indiana University and a graduate student at U.T. Permian Basin. She is currently employed as an Engineering Assistant II at First City National Bank of Midland.

A SPOONFUL

Its is not a good idea to use a teaspoon from your regular service to measure out medicine for a child. Although it is common practice, the bowls on teaspoons vary so widely that you run the risk of seriously over or under-medicating the child. Instead, use the medicine spoon provided with the medication or one which can be provided by the pharmacist. It consists of a spill proof tube, with a spoon at one end, calibrated in teaspoons and millimeters. If the child has not yet graduated to using a spoon, ask the pharmacist for an oral syringe.

In this age of medical consumerism, its important to know you can discuss your health interests with concerned professionals. Here at SERVICE DRUG OF MIDLAND we take pride in both our service and our customers, happily answering any questions you may have. MAKING THE GRADE

LEVELLAND — Patricia Angelo of Midland was among South Plains College's 603 students to receive diplomas during the South Plains College's 27th Commencement exercises recently.

Ms. Angelo received an associate of applied science degree in drafting technology.

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Midlander Steven W. Dellenback is among students who are expected to receive degrees during the 113th University of Kansas commencement today.

He is the son of C.R. Dellenback, 3 Fairfax Court.

Kollar

The Midland Downtown Rotary Club has announced the two winners of $600 college scholarships for the 1985-86 academic year.

Mark Kollar, son of Mrs. Kim Kollar, 2604 Whitney, has been named scholarship winner from Lee High School. Kollar plans to attend Texas Tech and study engineering. While attending Lee, Kollar has been a member of the National Honor Society, Junior Engineering and Technical Society, Junior Achievement, Junior Classical League, Trivia Club and Fiction Club. Kollar also is employed at Baskin Robbins ice cream store.

Williams

Holly Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Williams, 1027 Ward, was selected as the scholarship recipient from Midland High School. Miss Williams has been accepted at Washington & Lee University where she plans to major in economics and political science. While attending Midland High, Williams has been active in the National Honor Society, Packbackers, French Club, Junior Engineering and Technical Society, German Club and President's Cabinet. She has also been involved in Teenage Republicans, been a foreign exchange student to Germany and attended the Republican National Convention as a youth delegate.

ABILENE — Monica Beth Hunsinger of Midland has been named to receive a Presidential Scholarship at McMurry College for the coming year.

Ms. Hunsinger is a May graduate of Greenwood High School. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Ray Hunsinger of rural Midland.

Leggott

The Midland Downtown Lions Club selected Ellen Leggott as its Student of the Week. She is a senior at Lee High School.

Miss Leggott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C.R. Leggott, is a member and hold offices in Student Council, Dixie Dolls, Ski Club, National Honor Society, PSAF and Student Council President's Cabinet. She also is a member of St. Nicholas Episcopal Church, Young Life and campaigners.

A consecutive academic award winner, Miss Leggott is the recipient of the Outstanding English Award, U.S. Student Council Award and is listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students. She plans to attend the University of Texas at Austin and study business.

McDaniel

Sam Hollis Studio has awarded a $500 scholarship to Janetta McDaniel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James McDaniel. She is a senior at Midland High School.

Miss McDaniel is a member of National Honor Society. She plans to attend Midland College and study accounting.

Van

Sam Hollis Studio has awarded a $500 scholarship to Midland High School senior Khit Van, neice of Tan and Kim Van of Midland.

She is a member of National Honor Society and the Office Education Association Club. She plans to attend Midland College and study computer science.

SNYDER — Renvy Evans of Midland was awarded the Associate in Arts degree from Western Texas College in commencement exercises held May 10.

Miss Evans was graduated summa cum laude with a grade point average of 4.0. She was named to Who's Who Among Students in American Junior Colleges for 1984-85 and was a member of Phi Theta Kappa, a national honor fraternity for students in junior colleges.

Miss Evans has signed a basketball scholarship with Southwestern Oklahoma University for the 1985-86 season. She lettered two years with the WTC Dusters and in the past year she led the team in steals with 68 through the regular season. She averaged 10.7 points and 6.1 rebounds, shooting .433 from the field. She had 15 blocked shots.

Southwestern Oklahoma, located in Weatherford, has won the NAIA national championship three of the past four years.

A graduate of Greenwood High School, Miss Evans is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bob Evans. She was among the 16 students named to the President's List for the 1985 spring semester at WTC and had also been on the President's List in the 1984 spring semester.

TEMPLE — Temple Junior College has announced the Dean's Honor List and the Dean's List in recognition of high academic achievement for the 1985 spring semester.

Named to the Dean's List was: Leanne Clark of Midland.

Neisig

Andrea Neisig, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Neisig, 2409 Dartmouth, and Keith McDonald, son of Mr. and Mrs. John R. McDonald, 3505 Seaboard, were awarded $500 scholarships from Henry Saranec. Both are seniors at Lee High School.

McDonald

BOISE, Idaho — Boise State University students will receive degrees or diplomas during annual Commencement ceremonies.

Among the graduates is Midlander Deborah Ann Bickel, bachelor of business administration, accounting.

"Making the Grade" features students who have received degrees, awards, scholarships or other honors. Items should be brought or mailed to Education Writer, Midland Reporter-Telegram, Box 1650. State education board favors end of social promotions

AUSTIN — The State Board of Education has given preliminary approval to a rule designed to allow school districts to meet the educational needs of students who in the past have been promoted for social reasons rather than academic achievement.

House Bill 72 prohibited social promotion and mandated that students be promoted solely on the basis of scoring a grade of at least 70 in grade level or course work.

HB 72 also ordered the State Board of Education to devise alternatives to social promotion, and a rule adopted on first reading Saturday (May 11) by the Board establishes several options for school districts to consider in dealing with students who fail to meet academic requirements.

During the next two months, prior to giving final approval to the alternatives, the Board will continue to receive input and suggestions on the options.

One alternative would allow a student who cannot master grade level work to be placed into an "individualized progress" class in grades 1-8 where specialized instruction would be aimed at helping the student master his work as quickly as possible.

The individualized progress class would stress English language arts and mathematics in classes with reduced pupil-teacher ratios to ensure direct and individualized instructional opportunities for the students.

The progress of students in individualized progress classes would be closely monitored to allow students who show marked improvement in achievement levels to be placed back in the regular classroom.

Enrollment in and dismissal from individualized progress classes would take place after parental consultation.

For students in grades 9-12 who have been placed from one grade to the next or who have been enrolled in individualized progress classes, school districts may set up special programs to concentrate on basic English language arts and mathematics instruction and on entry-level job skills.

Before placing a student in such a program, the school district must consider the student's achievement test scores, previous grades, attendance and discipline records, and parental and student aspirations.

After those considerations were made, a student could be placed in the specialized program if the district determined he or she would not be able to function effectively in required courses and would not be able to meet high school graduation requirements.

The specialized program would include a three-hour block, for which three units of credit per year may be awarded, in basic English language arts and mathematics. Job-training skills would comprise a second three-hour daily block, with instruction in citizenship, health and consumer economics incorporated in either block.

A student in the specialized program could earn a diploma if he or she completes a minimum of 21 units of credit and passes the exit-level tests in English and mathematics required for graduation.

Other alternatives for students in grades 1-8 include allowing a student to be placed in, but not promoted to, the next grade level as long as the student is not performing at a significantly lower level than other students in the class.

Promotion also can be tied to a student's successful participation in tutorial or special summer programs.

And finally, school districts will continue to have the option of requiring students to repeat a grade. However, under the proposed rule, no student will be required to repeat any one grade level more than once, and no student in grades 1-8 will repeat more than a total of two different grade levels.

Science students from around state to gather in Austin June 4-7

From Staff Reports

Science students from across the state will converge upon the University of Texas at Austin June 4-7 for the annual Texas Energy Science Symposium for High Schools.

The event, in its 25th year, is expected to attract more than 400 students and their teachers who will hear scientists and engineers discuss energy-related topics.

Selected to attend from this area is Terry Walker, a student at Midland Senior High School. Science instructor, Dan Kallus, will accompany him to the meeting.

Participants will spend two afternoons touring the science laboratories at the university.

Among the facilities the students and teachers will tour will be the Texas Experimental Tokamak (TEXT), a national facility for fusion research built and operated for the Department of Energy by the UT Fusion Research Center.

The symposium is being sponsored jointly by the university and the Texas Atomic Energy Research Foundation, which is made up of ten investor-owned electric utility companies in Texas including Texas Electric. The foundation was created in 1957 for the advancement of knowledge of energy through scientific and educational activities.

Real Estate today

LARGE OR SMALL?

Altough many mass builders are saying "smaller is smarter", this is not always true. Many of today's builders are producing smaller homes, under 1,600 square feet, most with two bedrooms. Their reason for building smaller is certainly affordability; the lower the price, the bigger the market. Also, many of today's buyers are singles or one-parent families who require less living space.

All things being equal, if you are a family with children, you probably wouldn't buy a two-bedroom house just because it was small. Not if a three or four bedroom house were available in your price range. Considering the future re-sale market, a three or four bedroom house is still more desirable and would appeal to more buyers.

Bigger houses are still IN. The average person moves every seven or eight years, more people are working at home, needing extra space and most local zoning boards are becoming more liberal in allowing the conversion of larger homes into multiple units.

Wide open race

Ever since Kent Hance made his party switch, things have been hopping in the 21st Congressional District and it's shaping up like a wide open race for that seat next time around.

Shortly after Hance switched his party affiliation to the GOP with it strongly suspected he will seek the governor's seat in 1986, U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler of Hunt hired none other than Richard McBride, who most notably directed Phil Gramm's election bid for the U.S. Senate last year.

While Loeffler's intentions aren't known specifically, he is known to be thinking in terms of a run for the governor's mansion which would mean vacating the 21st Congressional District seat he has held since 1978. A race by Loeffler would also pit the Hunt congressman against Hance in the Republican Party primary, which would mean a definite loss in experienced representation for the 21st Congressional District and, potentially, for Loeffler politically since Hance enjoys statewide name recognition and the decided advantage of previous statewide electioneering.

Not to be lost in the moves being made by both Hance and Loeffler is the opportunity being afforded any number of politicians who've been rumored as possible replacements for Loeffler if he decides on a run for the Governor's Mansion. Of course, the names will become clearer as announcements are made for the governor's seat, but some of those now being tossed around are Midland's own Ernest Angelo, a former mayor and current Republican Party official; George Bush, son of the Vice President; Tom Craddick, state representative; and Kenn George, a Reagan administration appointee.

But the 21st is a big congressional district with wide-ranging political interests and there are others rumored to be vaguely interested in taking Loeffler's place. Elsewhere in the district, Alan Schoolcraft of San Antonio; Gerry Geistweidt of Mason; Lamar Smith, a Bexar County Commissioner; Jeff Wentworth, a former Bexar County Commissioner; Scotty Light and George Ames, both of San Antonio; Van Henry Archer, a San Antonio city councilman and Jimmy Hasslocher; Bill Jonas, U.S. marshal for the Western District of Texas; State Sen. Bill Sims of San Angelo and former Congressman Bob Krueger all have been considered as possible successors to Loeffler.

Some of those being mentioned may decline a race for the congressional spot. That is, however, a respectable number of likely candidates if the job were to become open.

Losing Loeffler as the district's congressman would be regrettable. He has served admirably and well, but political ambitions being what they are it could happen.

Fortunately as the above list attests, this congressional district is not hurting for representative talent and 1986 is shaping up like an interesting political year.

Another View:
Stick to SALT II

In kinder times, there would be no question but that the United States would decide without much fuss to keep in force the terms of an old, admittedly imperfect arms-control agreement while working on a new and supposedly better one.

For the Reagan administration, however, it is a tough question whether to continue respecting the never-ratified SALT II treaty, which the president at first pronounced "fatally flawed," but later reluctantly agreed not to undercut so long as Moscow didn't undercut it either.

The date at which the treaty would expire is coming up, and even sooner the United States must decide whether to retire some old missiles in order to make room for new ones under the SALT II lid.

Within the administration, a range of opinion is evident.

Important figures on the political side continue to regard SALT II as a symbol of the failure of past arms-control accords to do more to strengthen American security, and as a damaging restraint on American arms-building programs. That the Soviets say they can still live with SALT II is taken as evidence that the restraints aren't tough enough.

It is suggested that breaking out of SALT II, far from complicating the talks in Geneva, will give Moscow added incentive to consider the proposals Washington is making there. Anyway, why should the United States honor an agreement when many questions about Soviet compliance are still hanging?

Elsewhere in the administration, including its military side, there is another emphasis. There is, for instance, a disposition to believe that the Soviets are considerably better placed to deploy threatening new weapons than is the United States without SALT II; to understand why, you need merely look at the bedraggled history of the MX.

Military officials can identify no good military reason to go past the SALT limits. Diplomats worry how American allies would react to the spectacle of an American breakout.

Many observers feel that Congress would react sharply to that spectacle by taking new budget hostages. The best cure to the flaws in past restraints and verification standards, many of these officials feel, is progress in Geneva — something arguably more likely to come in an atmosphere undisturbed by the detonation of SALT II.

Liberal arms-controllers argue that the very process of arms control is as important as the product — the agreements, which so far have turned out to be pretty thin.

At this late date, however, no one can really think that President Reagan is going to change spots and adopt this sort of questionable reasoning. Nor is it necessary for him to do so.

In his own administration, among people devoted to his conservative principles, there is comfortable support for continuing to observe the terms of SALT II. He should do it.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, May 19, the 139th day of 1985. There are 226 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On May 19, 1536, the second wife of England's King Henry the Eighth, Anne Boleyn, was beheaded after being convicted of adultery.

In 1588, the 130 ships of the Spanish Armada sailed from Portugal to attack England.

In 1780, a mysterious darkness enveloped much of New England and part of Canada in the early afternoon. The cause has never been determined.

In 1935, T.E. Lawrence — better known as Lawrence of Arabia — died following a motorcycle accident.

JACK ANDERSON
Analyst wrongly handed blame

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has dumped a full load of government retribution on a Navy civilian analyst who slipped three satellite photos of a Soviet aircraft carrier to a British magazine.

Jack Anderson

He faces 40 years in prison if convicted of espionage charges.

But when an Air Force general showed Congress photos of equal interest to the Kremlin and they were mistakenly released to the public, no one drew so much as a tut-tut.

Why the double standard? That's what we'd like to know.

The Navy analyst is Samuel Loring Morison, who moonlighted for the British magazine with the Navy's full knowledge. He's a grandson of the late author and admiral, Samuel Eliot Morison, who wrote the definitive history of U.S. naval actions in World War II.

In the first place, the espionage laws were never intended to make publication of classified information a crime. In fact, Congress has repeatedly refused to pass such a restriction, knowing that a corrupt administration could cover up its misdeeds by stamping "secret" on embarrassing information, then prosecuting whistle blowers and journalists who exposed the wrongdoing.

What makes the administration's vendetta against Morison additionally outrageous is the Pentagon's failure to take any action against those responsible for a similar disclosure about a year earlier. Two photographs released by the Pentagon told the Soviets everything they needed to know about the capability of U.S. spy satellites to photograph Soviet weapons on the ground or under construction.

So the administration's justification for dumping on Morison — that the photographs he provided to the British magazine told the Soviets how good our spy cameras were — was fatally flawed. The two photos mistakenly released by the Pentagon the year before gave the Russians at least as much information about U.S. satellite accuracy.

The spurious furor over Morison began last August when Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger opened "Jane's Defence Weekly" and saw three U.S. satellite photos of a new, Soviet aircraft carrier under construction. The magazine is an offshoot of the 14 authoritative Jane's military books printed each year on military hardware.

It wasn't difficult for the FBI to identify Morison as the source of the photos. He had the permission of his superiors at the Naval Intelligence Support Center outside Washington to moonlight as an editor of Jane's magazine.

But to add a little melodrama to the case, Morison was arrested at Dulles Airport as he was on his way to London. He wasn't skipping out; he was just on his way to visit his employers at the magazine.

Rewriting the espionage laws and brushing aside the First Amendment, the federal prosecutor explained that Morison had damaged his country's interests by making available "information that foreign analysts could derive from these photographs concerning the capabilities of American intelligence-gathering methods, as well as American targeting priorities."

In other words, publication of the photos tipped the Russians off that we were targeting the Black Sea shipyard where the carrier was being built.

This line of reasoning is absurd, of course. It assumes that the Soviets are so stupid that they wouldn't realize U.S. intelligence would be interested in their first large-deck carrier. In fact, our sources assure us, the Soviets routinely cover up their equipment when U.S. spy satellites pass overhead. Any commander who didn't would probably be shot.

As to the "capabilities" argument, the government claims that the Soviets can't determine the clarity and quality of satellite photographs that are officially released because the Pentagon deliberately makes them fuzzy and less detailed.

Actually, our sources say the Soviets have an excellent idea of the clarity of U.S. satellite photographs — thanks to the non-fuzzed, free-for-the-taking copies of the Air Force photos mistakenly released in 1983.

This incredible episode, hitherto unreported, occurred after a properly closed hearing on defense appropriations before the House Armed Services Committee on April 6, 1983. An Air Force general's testimony included "vu-graphs" of new Soviet aircraft — the SU-27 Flanker and the MiG-29 Fulcrum fighter planes.

When a Pentagon-declassified account of the hearing was released, Soviet military attaches eyes must have popped. There were clear, detailed overhead photographs of their two secret planes. They could tell what time of day the pictures had been taken, from the shadows beneath the planes, and they could identify the airfield that had been "targeted" by the U.S. spy satellite.

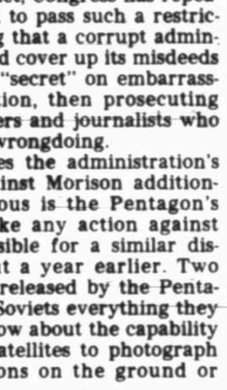

In other words, the Soviets could tell precisely the same things that Morison was accused of enabling them to find out a year later: capability and targeting.

Yet the general who testified — and presumably had some supervision over the declassification process — wasn't reprimanded. Nobody was. An investigation concluded that the "system" was to blame, and as everyone in Washington knows, no one can be held responsible for the system.

GEORGE F. WILL
Cutting strategic arsenal deadly

OFFUTT AIR FORCE BASE, Neb. — Out here on and beneath the Great Plains — the Breadbasket of the Soviet Union — resides part of the U.S. deterrent, the Strategic Air Command. Long ago someone — someone too clever by half — saddled SAC with the slogan "Peace is Our Profession," which was like putting chintz curtains in a tank. Deterrence is a product of a national readiness — material and moral — to wage war.

George F. Will

SAC is at the center of an ongoing calculation, complex but straightforward, of what the U.S. strategic arsenal must include in order to absorb a Soviet first strike and remain able to inflict unacceptable damage on the Soviet Union. One difficult assessment is: What does the Soviet elite consider unacceptable?

The United States can target strategic systems, military support systems, the industrial base, and the leadership elite. This last is crucial because the Soviets have been rapidly increasing investment in dispersed and hardened shelters to protect many thousands of the Soviet elite in a nuclear war. The inescapable conclusion is that those who make and implement Soviet policy regard shelters as war-fighting assets, and regard nuclear war as survivable and winnable.

In commemorations of the end of the Second World War, the great fact of the last 40 years has been too little remarked. It is: Never in history has there been a frittering away of military advantage comparable to that by the United States, relative to the Soviet Union, since 1945.

SAC headquarters is a place to see, in the mind's eye, the change: Imagine how a SAC commander of just 20 years ago would react to the intelligence data that pours in for today's commander. Everywhere that U.S. technical means of intelligence gathering look in the Soviet Union, menacing military activity is noted.

Soviet planners know that in any crisis they will shoot first. And the task confronting Soviet targeters is simpler. There are many fewer targets in the United States than in the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union is larger and its targets are increasingly hardened, dispersed and mobile. A significant and growing fraction of the Soviet target base is mobile. The Soviet Union could hold nearly half its strategic forces in reserve and with the other half do damage to the United States comparable to what the United States would do using all its forces against the Soviet Union.

The good news here is that on June 29, 30 years to the day after the first B-52 was delivered to SAC, the first B-1 will be delivered. The last B-52 was delivered 23 years ago, so the youngest B-52 is older than some members of its crew. The B-1 was killed by Jimmy Carter and resurrected by Ronald Reagan and is a suitable symbol of the difference Reagan has made for the military.

But even — in some ways, especially — in an era of high-tech weapons such as the B-1, the most important variables in the military organization are men and women. The crucial variable of morale may be about to vary adversely, because of a political climate to which Reagan policies have contributed. By shrinking the government's revenue base, and making politically impossible even a small restoration of the base through a tax increase, Reagan has forced Congress to choose between cutting middle-class domestic programs or cutting the military. The result? A nibble from Amtrak subsidies, a large bite from the shield of liberty.

Many of SAC's key personnel — middle-rank men and women operating computers and other complex systems — could triple their incomes by entering the private sector. That so many stay in uniform is attributable to two things. One is a system of military pensions that is a form of deferred compensation. The other is high morale that results from believing the country appreciates what they are doing. This is jeopardized by the drumbeat of criticism of the military, and especially of pensions.

Political rhetoric encourages the public to believe the budget can be balanced by curbing "runaway" military spending and that the key is to cut expensive strategic systems, and eliminate $800 screwdrivers and "scandalous" pensions. But strategic systems are a small slice of the defense budget and Congress mislays more money in a morning than is spent on overpriced screwdrivers. So, pensions become the target of opportunity.

Of course one way to run up the cost of defending the country is to defend Amtrak subsidies by attacking the material and moral incentives that keep trained personnel in the services. One hopes, but not confidently, that the men and women who maintain America's shield are too busy doing so to notice some of the rubbish spoken by persons whose liberty to speak rubbish is the result of the shield.

ART BUCHWALD
Some calls tougher to return

One of the serious charges made against White House aide Pat Buchanan is that he doesn't return people's calls.

Art Buchwald

Buchanan isn't the only one. The telephone is the main form of communication in Washington (except for sending a message to Moscow by putting a trade embargo on Nicaragua), and media people are particularly sensitive as to when (and if) their calls will be acknowledged.

The no-return call in the nation's capital is the cruelest call of all.

This is how the system works. You place the call, but you have no illusions that you'll get through to your quarry the first time around. Government officials worry that if they are that easily available you'll assume they don't have enough to do. So secretaries are trained to automatically inform the caller that the boss is "in conference."

What constitutes a conference in Washington has never been defined. It could be a gathering of 20 people or just two. It could be taking place in the office or on another floor — and for really top-flight executives, it could be held "up on the Hill."

You know you're talking to power when a secretary informs the caller that her boss is "out of town traveling with the President."

Those of us who have been around for a while deal with brush-offs in different ways. I have a friend, Barry Sussman, who, when informed that the person he is telephoning is in conference, always asks the secretary, "Who with?"

When the secretary says she doesn't understand Sussman tells her, "They are probably discussing what I'm writing about. You better break it up and tell Michelle Wilson I'm on deadline and I would prefer to get her side of it before I go to press."

Bruce Henderson, on the other hand, never makes the call himself. He has the pool secretary do it because he has a horrible fear that the person on the other end of the line will make him spell his name.

One person I work with likes to keep track of how his personal stock is doing in Washington. So every once in a while Joe Gradisher calls someone in the administration. When he is given the standard "conference" alibi, Gradisher leaves his name and phone number with the secretary.

Then Joe sets the clock with the hours, days and months on his desk and proceeds to time how long it takes for the official to get back to him.

If the call is returned Joe will just say he was testing the system. If it isn't returned he will put out the word that the appointee is not long for this world.

More and more administration officials and bureaucrats are refusing media calls on the assumption that if they don't talk to the press they can't be misquoted. While this is not a bad strategy it does have its drawbacks. It leaves the journalist free to write whatever he pleases, adding this line to cover himself, "Godzilla did not answer this writer's calls."

Which brings me back to Pat Buchanan, whom I can write about objectively since I've never called him, and therefore hold no grudge because he failed to call me back.

It has been said Buchanan is second to Don Regan in influence in the White House. He is also the President's communications director. If you phone Pat and he doesn't respond within a reasonable period of time, it can be a terrible blow to your reputation. This is particularly true of the opinion makers who do not agree with the administration's policies, but put great store in how fast the President's men answer their calls.

In fairness to Pat, he is quite busy just feeding the journalists who support the administration line and should not be faulted for putting so many unfriendly reporters on "hold." White House sources have told me that after returning one Evans and Novak call Buchanan is wiped out for the rest of the day.

BILL MODISETT

Today's children suffer because of modern mobility

Bill Modisett

I went driving the other day through my hometown, a small farming community of 3,500 people.

My, how life changes!

It dawned on me that today's children suffer because of the mobility of modern civilization.

Progress, if you will, is destroying much of what is good about life. That's sad.

There, in my hometown, was the aging drug store where we youngsters went for an occasional fountain drink. I'm sure it's the same today, nearly three decades later. The pharmacists — brothers — worked behind the counter filling prescriptions and answering a multitude of questions from townpeople and youngsters alike who would stop in for a cup of coffee, a soda, an ice cream cone or just some gossip. An actual soda bar, the kind you hardly ever see anymore with stools and fountains.

On the north end of town, there's a gas station and a convenience store, and near the crossroads downtown is the store where a person can buy a soft drink, candy bar or minnows for fishing.

It's reassuring to know that the places are the same now, years after I quit calling the little town my home (although it will always be my hometown). It's important to have stability in one's life because otherwise life becomes too chaotic to bear. It's easy to do in today's society — a society which stresses speed and money.

That stability is what is missing in too many children's lives. There rarely is stability in society today. Change comes too rapidly and too frequently. The store where a kid buys a candy bar or an ice cream cone today may not be there tomorrow, or if it is it'll probably be called something different. The same person doesn't give your child his haircut every time any longer (and a piece of gum afterwards). Instead, there'll be somebody new who'll cut the hair in a third the time at three times the price with no casual conversation thrown in for pleasantry. Casual conversation has gone the way of the passenger pigeon.

Today a child can't get to know a neighborhood or feel comfortable in his own backyard. I enjoyed that comfort and you probably did, too. But society has pushed it aside for today's youngsters.

There is no one sacred barbershop or soda bar or movie house. It's all been replaced with the trappings of affluence. After all, let's justify it: Mom and Dad both have to work, right? Well, Mom and Dad both have to work if they're going to get ahead, right? Well, Mom and Dad each have their own careers to think of, right?

So much for justification.

That's affluence, folks. But what is our cherished affluent lifestyle doing to our children? They enjoy precious little stability. In their neighborhoods or their homes.

Yes, you can go home again — but the comparison with today may be more than you can stand.

Midland needs reviews for performing arts

What? No more reviews of our performing arts! The Midland Reporter-Telegram has just taken 50 steps backward, assuming the full position of a small town publication.

We NEED reviews to inform the public of the quality (good or bad) of performances offered here.

The arts organizations NEED reviews as part of their resume to send to foundations, corporations, small businesses and individuals to obtain funding.

The performers NEED reviews to help them in the job market. Even Shari Lewis quotes the Midland Reporter-Telegram review in her flyers which are sent all over the world.

The students and amateurs NEED reviews so they may learn from constructive criticism.

In the situation you are creating, there can be no progress for anyone interested in furthering the arts in Midland.

If the Midland Reporter-Telegram allows advance publicity for a performance, without a follow-up review, you are cheating your readers, and telling the arts in Midland they are unworthy of your time and space in the paper.

This is an unprofessional decision.

EDITOR'S NOTE: No decision has been made to permanently discontinue reviewing Midland performances. Work on the upcoming Centennial Edition and plans for expanded entertainment news packaging later in the summer brought about the decision to temporarily discontinue reviews. The decision as how to best provide quality reviews while fully covering the Midland entertainment scene will be made later.

SPEAKING OUT

Only voting gives you right to complain

By MRS. BOB BOWMAN

Mrs. Bob Bowman, a resident of Midland since 1963, formerly served as an election judge, precinct chairman and roving deputy voting registrar.

Last Saturday was another election day for Midland. About 8.5% of the 54,811 registered voters voted. On April 6 we had an election for City Council, Hospital Board and School Trustee seats. Only 8.4% of the registered voters voted. On April 27, 1985, we had a runoff election for Place 7 on the Midland Independent School District board of trustees. Votes in that election represented a 3.9% voter turnout.

I, as well as many others, cannot understand why the majority of Midland's population does not bother to cast their vote. Some have told me they did not know the candidates, so saw no reason to go vote for someone they did not know. Others say, "What difference does my one vote make?" and "After work I was too tired to bother" and some said they had to work and could not make it during the hours the polls were open.

I may be wrong, but I am under the impression that an employer will give each employee time off to cast his vote. The League of Women Voters prints guides, telling details of each candidate as well as with propositions. Civic groups and political parties offer rides to the polls. The candidates spend their time and money telling their viewpoints on what they will or will not do, should they be elected. If one plans to be out-of-town on election day, or plans to attend a sports or civic function, he or she can vote absentee. Absentee voting is held at the Elections Administrator's Office and begins on the 20th day before the election and ends on the fourth day prior to the election. Anyone physically disabled, ill or hospitalized, 65 years or older or who is away at school but is registered to vote in Midland County may ask for a write-in absentee ballot.

Years ago, I could not wait until I became 21 years old so I could vote! The party doesn't concern me, as I vote for the person I feel is best suited for the office. I have said many times, "Since I voted, it gives me the right to complain when an elected official does something I do not like."

Many bills are before our state Senate and House of Representatives as well as in the United States Senate and House. Our senator and representatives are trying to help each one of us, but often they do not know exactly what we want from them. People are quick to cast judgment on the new laws passed, but did they exercise their right to vote for our federal, state and local officials? Those officials may be reached by mail, or when they are in the area, asking for us to come forward and state our opinions to them. Then they will do what the majority has asked them to do. The same goes for our local officials.

In fact, your local officials are more important, as they are the fundamental or grassroots of the system. They make the laws and govern our city and county. It would be wise to get to know them...attend council and commissioners' meetings and see for yourself which one says and does what. If you are dissatisfied with something, call the representative of your district and discuss the matter with him or her. They will not hold it against you if you didn't vote for them, and will advise you to the best of their knowledge. Remember, your local officials are "just a phone call away."

It costs money to hold an election, regardless of how many people vote. The runoff election cost the school district more than $3,000. So why not get your money's worth and exert your right to vote? I am not campaigning for anyone or anything, but I am trying to see if we can get more people to the polls. I feel sure the Reporter-Telegram will print your letters, so how about taking the time to state your reasons for not voting — especially in our local elections that concern our local governing bodies. Maybe we can work out the problem and get more folks interested enough to vote in their elections.

Mrs. Builta and her highly competent staff at the Elections Administrator's Office will help you any way they can if you will just take the time to ask for their help. With me, it seems I can find the time to do what I want to do, but tend to procrastinate on things I would rather not do.

The dictionary defines the word election as "the act or process of choosing by vote among candidates to fill an office position." Do you wish to have someone in office whom you dislike? So, registered voters of Midland County, it's up to you. Let us hear from you!

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

Neighborhood Watch working in Midland

Neighborhood Watch is working!

Since we wouldn't want and can't afford a policeman on every corner, citizen involvement is the best thing that Midlanders have to help law enforcement people fight crime.

Latest crime statistics available show that March 1984 had 96 home burglaries. March 1985 had 85. Of the 827 calls this March to the Midland Police Department by citizens, 98 resulted in arrests. Of these, 11 were for burglaries. That's down almost 9 percent!

We've got a long way to go, but thanks to the Midland Reporter-Telegram and our other friends in the media keeping us alerted, we've made a good start.

Summer's coming with lots of people on vacation and a freer and more relaxed lifestyle, so let's watch out for our neighbors and, hopefully, they'll do the same for us.

Congress isn't ready to 'bite the bullet'

Last year Congress voted itself two salary increases while urging constituents to economize. Now we read that Congress voted to withhold or delay Social Security cost of living increases but voted NOT to decrease its own salaries. Among the voters against reducing salaries was a multimillionaire!

What ever happened to the "dollar-a-year" patriots we once had? Various wealthy men gladly served their country in Washington for one dollar a year as a patriotic gesture.

How times have changed! Also people!

Midland shows its true teamwork spirit

On April 25th at approximately 4 p.m., I arrived (accompanied by over 200 members of my unit with 105 military vehicles) at the Midland National Guard Armory. We were returning to Fort Hood, Texas, after a two-week training exercise at Fort Huachuca, Ariz. Our original intent was to arrive in Midland on April 26th; however, a late change in plans caused us to arrive one day early.

It was our desire to use the Midland Armory facilities to feed and rest our soldiers before continuing to Fort Hood the following day. Unbeknownst to us, the Midland Junior Chamber of Commerce had reserved the Armory Hall for their annual election celebration. It was obvious that these two requirements did not complement each other and could not run concurrently.

Dr. Charles E. Copenhaver of the JCs and Sgt. 1C Jose H. Padilla, Company D (Combat Engineer), 111th Engineer Battalion, Texas National Guard, took one look at the situation (at no urging or request by myself) and quietly and pleasantly went about arranging for another location for the election celebration. I later found out that this was only accomplished with a good deal of effort and at some monetary loss. We caused the inconvenience, but the good citizens of Midland came to our aid.

My soldiers were able to use the Armory facilities to prepare and eat two good meals and to get a good night's rest before continuing on to Fort Hood. My soldiers and I thank you, especially Dr. Copenhaver and Sgt. 1C Padilla. We will always remember Midland, Texas, for the gracious and kind assistance we received. My battalion is a unit of the 1st Cavalry Division, the motto of which is "FIRST TEAM — TEAMWORK!" Yours is a true "FIRST TEAM — TEAMWORK" city.

Have we drawn big zero in economic war?

That was a cute cartoon on the editorial page April 17th showing Premier Nakasone pulling a "BUY AMERICAN" banner behind a World War II fighter.

Ironically, Howard Hughes designed the plane, offered it to the War Department, and was turned down. The Japanese government evinced interest and bought it from Hughes. It took better than two years to solve and overcome the advantages of the highly maneuverable fighter.

Now we're engaged in another battle for survival, albeit economic this time. And judging by our recent encounters with the Japanese juggernaut, we seem to have drawn another big zero.

Carnivals should find somewhere else to camp

In reference to carnivals, I will do my best to keep them from camping on Midland Drive across from K-Mart. You see, this carnival happened to be in my backyard!

The first night they were setting up, they clanged and banged until well after midnight. The next night they opened and I thought I was at Woodstock! The music was so loud, it kept my two children awake. I called the police around 10 p.m. to see how long we had to tolerate this nonsense and they said it "could" go on as long as midnight. She did say they would send a patrolman out to get the speaker re-directed. We were fortunate — they stopped at 10:30 p.m.

The next day, I talked to most of my neighbors and they too were not very fond of having this riff-raff behind our houses. Later in the day, my wife went out in the alley and found two "carnies" peeking through our fence. That was all I could tolerate. I called to find out what we could do, but was told at the city offices that they acquired their land use permit and nothing could be done to move them. I was told all landowners within 200 feet were notified of their coming, but they evidently forgot to put postage on the letters as none of my neighbors nor myself were notified.

Well, if this wasn't enough, they played their music and sounded their sirens and yelled through the PA system until midnight on the weekends. Cars raced up and down the alley and the smell of diesel fumes from their generator permeated my house. Arrests were made almost nightly for gambling and for escaping prison for murder!

No, I don't have anything to be upset about. I do have a videotape from my back door of the carnival at night and it tells the story. Maybe next time the city council members will keep them outside the city limits, away from residential areas where they are less likely to be disruptive to our environment. Hopefully, the "carnies" own actions will have an impact on the matter.

There's no excuse for abandoning pets

This is addressed to the heartless person who was guilty of abandoning a young German Shepherd dog at the isolated north end of Midkiff the weekend of April 20. You should know that your loyal dog, confused and bewildered by this cruel act, patiently awaited your return which was, of course, never to occur.

It takes only a little knowledge of canines to recognize the expectant expression on the face of one who has been dropped from a car — a look that has not yet understood the meaning of betrayal.

How long do you think it would have taken her to learn to hunt, and where, in West Texas, was she supposed to find water? Are you so ignorant that you are not aware of our city's animal shelter or were you simply too lazy to make the effort to take her?

Time and time again I have rescued lost or abandoned dogs, but this time I was truly astonished at how any human being who would have a dog in the first place could abandon such a gentle and loving, not to mention beautiful, animal as this, with no regard for her future well-being.

There are many justifiable reasons for disposing of a pet, but not in this manner. If the animal shelter doesn't appeal to you, a classified ad for a free pet always gets results. I have found many wonderful homes for these pets this way.

Please just take a few seconds to remind yourself that these animals think, feel, love and hurt, just as we do.

Economist: U.S. really suffering from fear of deficit

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — From time to time this weekly report to you has expressed my feeling that the federal deficit, or debt, is not the bugaboo for our economic recovery that some economists and pundits would have us believe.

It is always gratifying when someone who is more of an expert on economics than you are tends to share your instincts.

Warren T. Brookes has been described by the Wall Street Journal as the "outstanding syndicated economic writer." He is the 1985 Distinguished Journalism Fellow at the Heritage Foundation, one of Washington's leading think tanks. So I am going to relay to you what Brookes has written recently for our newspapers.

"At the moment," he wrote, "the U.S. economy may be suffering more from the fear of the deficit than the deficit itself — especially when you realize that the total federal share of the U.S. credit market is about the same today as it was in 1980.

"Thus, when you listen to the Wall Street deficit doomsayers with their apocalyptic projections, you have to wonder if they have done their statistical homework.

"For example, in a recent McNeill-Lehrer TV appearance, former Lehman Bros. chairman, 'Pete' Peterson said that because foreign investors are now buying over 60 percent of the federal deficit, any big drop in the dollar (which might lead to heavy foreign withdrawals) could throw that burden back on the U.S credit market, and send interest rates soaring.

"Either the Treasury, the Federal Reserve and the Office of Management and Budget are all flat-out lying, or Peterson was 'winging it' with totally spurious information."

Brookes pointed out the share of U.S. deficits purchased by foreigners has been going down steadily since 1978, when it was 43 percent, to 9 percent in FY 1984 when foreigners purchased only $15.4 billion of a total federal debt flotation of $170.8 billion.

Noting that in 1984 the federal government directly accounted for only 26 percent of all the credit raised in the U.S. market, Mr. Brookes said, "Mr. Peterson and his doomsaying friends are ignoring the enormous strides made by the Reagan administration in stopping the spiral of federally guaranteed and assisted credit, even as the federal deficits are soaring." He recalled that under President Carter, subsidized and guaranteed federal lending to the public soared from $37 billion in 1977 to $87 billion in 1981.

Brookes' easy-to-understand analysis reminds me of a remark made during a visit to London a year ago by my good friend Lord Harold Lever, one of Europe's leading monetary experts. Predicting the $200 billion deficit would not abort our economic recovery, Harold said: "While you've got easily the biggest deficit in the world, you also happen to have the biggest single economy in the world."

Critics of the president's economic program contend our recovery has been bolstered by foreign investors seeking high interest rates here. So it has, but that is not the only reason for our strong economy. A major reason, according to Brookes, is that U.S. capital outflows to foreign countries have dropped 58 percent in constant dollars since 1981 and are now 41 percent below 1978. He attributes this remarkable decline principally to the cut in U.S. capital gains tax rates from a top of 49 percent in 1978 to 20 percent.

"This huge drop in capital outflow has come during a period when American credit markets have expanded by a record 32 percent in real dollars, which means that soaring American capital is now staying home and expanding here," Brookes added.

"This is why the U.S. economy has created over 8 million jobs since December 1982 and nearly 1.8 million since last October. It is also why the U.S. now has the highest employment ratio in its history and the highest labor force participation rate — almost 65 percent of all adults, which means that even relative to the supposedly 'booming '60s,' the 'constant' basis unemployment rate is now 40 percent lower than it was during the record year of 1966."

Brookes' reports make clear that what President Franklin D. Roosevelt said during the Great Depression of the '30's could apply today to concern about the federal deficit: "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself."

'Ladder' guidelines established

AUSTIN — A rule that governs participation in the teacher career ladder has been adopted by the State Board of Education setting in motion guidelines that will enable outstanding classroom teachers to earn extra money for having participated in advanced academic training and showing above average skills in teaching.

The career ladder, set up by House Bill 72, is designed to keep good teachers in the classroom by allowing them to earn yearly salary supplements of $2,000, $4,000 and $6,000, depending on the career ladder level they attain.

Requirements that allow teachers to advance on the ladder focus on advanced academic training to improve the quality of teachers whose classroom performance evaluations also are used to help determine career ladder advancement.

An amendment to the rule requires school districts to use 1984-85 evaluations of teachers only if past years' evaluations are unavailable or inadequate.

The rule, approved for final adoption, expresses the Board's desire that school districts emphasize advanced academic training as a means of improving the classroom performance of a teacher who is participating in the career ladder.

It specifies that assignment to a career ladder level shall be based on performance, experience, job-related education, advanced academic training and job assignments. Criteria unrelated to the quality of a teacher's performance cannot be used to restrict advancement on the career ladder.

The rule allows local school districts to require stricter performance criteria for career ladder placement if there are insufficient funds to support the career ladder bonuses.

Under the rule, hours of higher education course work and advanced academic training may be counted toward career ladder requirements if they were earned after a teacher received his or her bachelor's degree. Advanced training must be related to a teacher's job assignment.

The rule does not invalidate career ladder assignments made by local school districts and/or selection committees for the 1984-85 school year, however, career ladder decisions believed to be arbitrary or capricious or to have been made in bad faith may be appealed.

'Kids' College' has openings

From Staff Reports

Openings for Kids' College at Midland College still remain, with registration continuing Monday through Thursday.

Kids' College, designed for children ages 9 to 12, will operate Monday through Thursday July 15-25. Classes are being offered from 12:40-2 p.m., 2:10-3:30 p.m., and 3:40-5 p.m. and children may sign up to take one, two or three classes per day. Cost is $25 per class. Some classes also have small supply costs.

Persons wishing to register for Kids' College must do so in person from 7 a.m.-5:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday at the Community Services Department, Administration Building.

Classes being offered include computers, cloth dolls, clay, drawing, exercise, guitar, keyboarding, Kung Fu, math, radio and television, tennis, ballet, needlepoint, photography, reading, science, jazz, watercolor and newspaper production.

MC registering summer students

Only five more days remain to pre-register for Midland College's first Summer Session. Prospective students may sign up Monday through Thursday next week or Tuesday, May 28. Hours are 7 a.m.-5 p.m. in the Office of Student Services, Administration Building.

Official Registration is slated for Thursday, May 30, with classes beginning Monday, June 3.

When students complete pre-registration, they are assigned a time permit that allocates a special period for them to report for registration. That cuts down on the waiting time during registration. It also gives them a better chance to obtain classes at the most desirable times for them.

During the first summer session, Midland College offers a large number of daytime and evening classes. A smaller number is available during the second summer session.

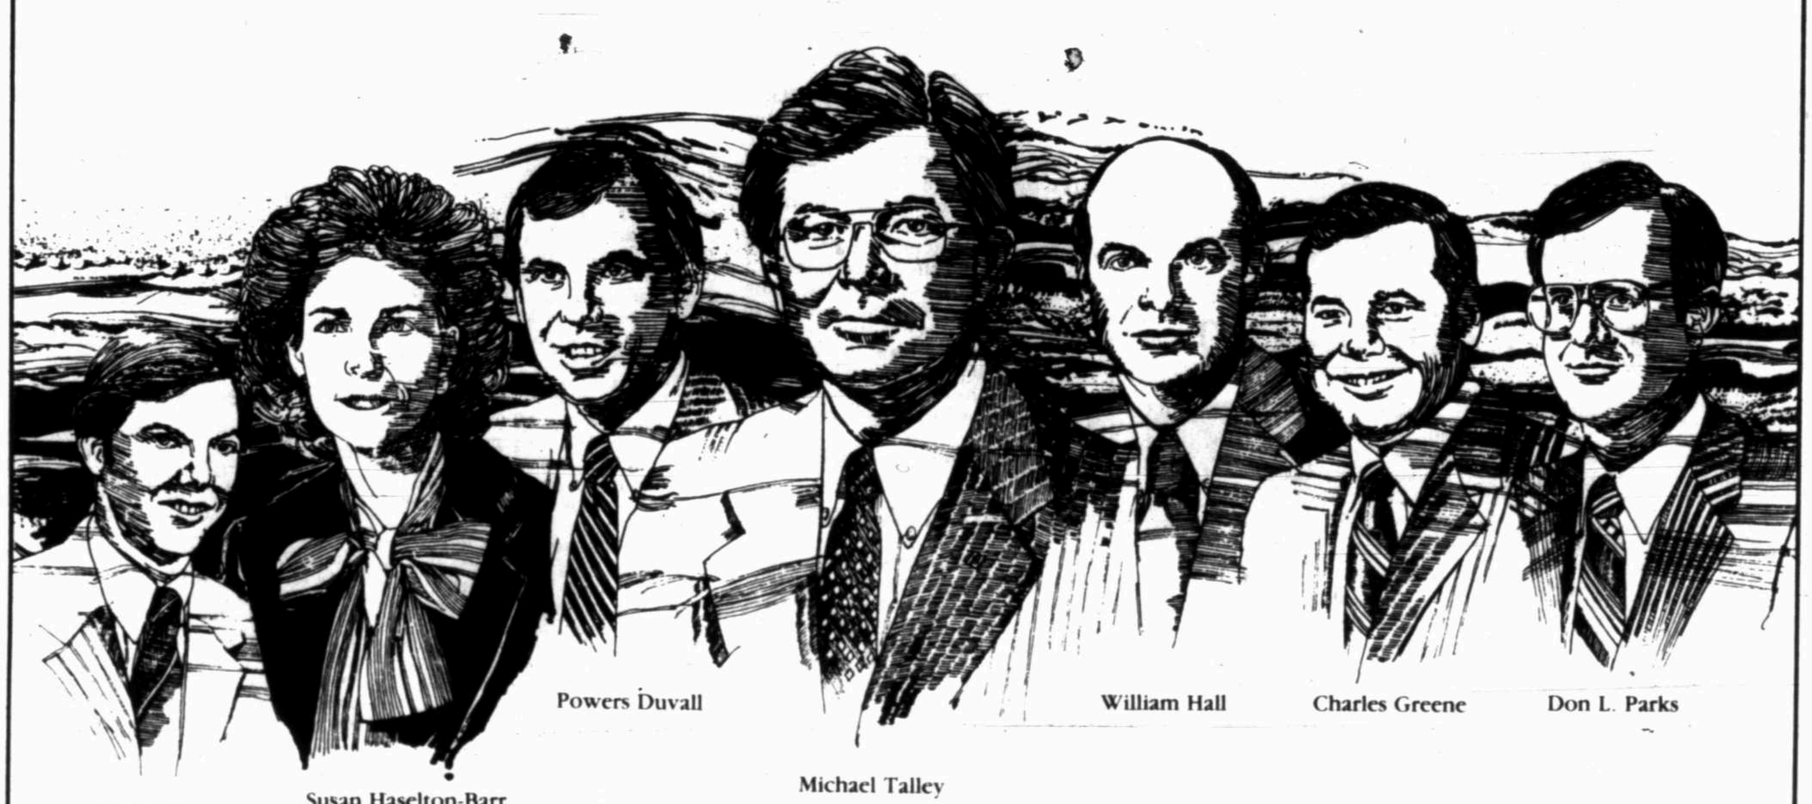

MISD Senior Party planned for May 28

The Midland Independent School District annual Senior Party will be from 11 p.m. to 2 a.m. May 28 at Midland Center.

Activities planned during the party include a slide show presentation, music, dancing, food and drawings for door prizes for cash certificates, gift certificates and merchandise.

Police security will be provided. Tickets are $7 per person and are available only to graduating seniors and their dates. Students may purchase tickets during baccalaureate and commencement practices or at the door.

"Managing Success"

Achieving success in Midland isn't easy —

managing it is harder still. It takes financial, legal, tax and management expertise to make the most of a lifetime's endeavor.

We've been managing success for others in Midland for as long as you can remember. We know oil and gas, stocks and bonds and real estate.

We know the value of success, and how to manage it. We Know Trust.

PROMISE NUMBER 6

Tom Wageman, President, RepublicBank First National Midland.

"Over the past few months, I've been telling you about a new and improved RepublicBank First National Midland.

"New and improved because of all of our personal commitments to give you faster, more personal, more effective service than ever.

"Many of you have seen results. Many of you have given us suggestions on how we can better help you, your business and the community. And those suggestions are being acted upon.

"But the one thing that we want you to know is that we're not stopping now. Simply because we're determined to be your bank. And we know the only way we can achieve that goal is through continued efficient service to you.

"So you'll be hearing from us. After all, we do care as much about you as you do. And that's the most important promise we can make."

All shapes, sizes and ages, the Midland Run for the Arts 10-Kilometer race gets underway at the Midland Center. The one in the Houston Harriers shirt, checking his watch, is David Moore, the winner.

RPI won't RIP, Moore wins run

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Let Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute win an NCAA ice hockey title and the next thing you know one of 'em has won the Midland Run for the Arts.

David Moore took first place with a 32:54 in the 10 kilometer competition held Saturday, finishing two blocks in front of his nearest pursuer.

Pam Allen, 20, a former cross-country runner and all-District 4-5A basketball player at Odessa High, won the women's division.

The 30-year-old Moore, who was transferred from Houston to Midland by Mobil two months ago, declared the weather was ideal for the run, "overcast, not too warm and the wind at 10-15 mph wasn't that bad."

IN THE two-mile run, Boston Marathon veteran John Harris took first in 9:58, beating out Mike Garza, the Midland Lee sophomore, and former Stanton miler Steve Stallings. Amy Cummings was first in the women's division.

More than 200 entered the festival run through the canyons of downtown Midland under brooding skies and in a wind with a nip to it.

A native of Bridgeport, Conn., Moore attended RPI, which last March won the NCAA Division I ice hockey championship over Providence He never ran competitively in high school or college. "When I graduated from college, I realized I'd have to find something else."

It turned out to be running and he has done quite well at it, competing in 18 marathons from Europe to Houston. "My best time was 2 hours and 29 minutes at Houston in 1984. My best finish was a 22nd in the Dallas White Rock with a 2:33."

Moore says, "Oddly, that would have qualified me for the Boston Marathon, which I have wanted to run ever since I took it up, but it comes too soon after the Houston marathon, so it is never the right time for me."

Moore has been running since he was 22 and feels he was fortunate in having Jim McLatchie of Houston as a coach. "He's the ex-Scottish National champion."

"This was a good run, well organized—the police did a good job of monitoring the course—and I hope it does well for the Midland Arts scene. It's a worthwhile cause."

Moore, who does 60 to 65 miles a week in what he calls his "speed season" will step up to 75-80 miles a week with 21 to 24 on a Sunday in the fall in preparation for the Houston marathon.

Captains outlast Angels in 11, 3-2

From Staff Reports

SHREVEPORT — Everett Graham's one out single in the bottom of the 11th inning here Saturday night gave the Shreveport Captains a come-from-behind 3-2 victory over the Midland Angels.

The Angels, facing two days off before opening a homestand with Tulsa Tuesday at Angel Stadium, are probably ready to get out of Shreveport after the series ending loss to the Caps. The loss gave Midland a 4-6 road trip and a 1-4 record against red-hot Shreveport.

The Angels took the lead 2-1 in the top of the 11th inning when Reggie Montgomery's single plated Dan Murphy and Midland looked to be on its way to a win.

However, Shreveport got two runners on base against Angel reliever Julian Gonzalez, who had pitched three shutout innings prior to the 11th. The Angels then called on Ed Delzer, who gave up the game winning single to Graham to take the loss.

Shreveport had not scored since Robby Thompson hit his second homer of the year in the first inning. The Angels tied the score in the third when Juan Cruz scored from third base on a grounder by Murphy that was booted by Augie Schmidt.

Shreveport's Eric King went eight innings before giving way to Matson and didn't give up an earned run.

Midland starter Bryan Price went seven innings, giving up only five hits and one run. Gonzales was sharp for three innings before tiring in the 11th.

The Angels have Sunday and Monday off as they make the swing back to Midland from the Eastern Division tour. They will face the Tulsa Drillers at 7 p.m. Tuesday to open a 10-game homestand and they will have to face Shreveport again during the stay at home.

The Angels started the road trip by winning the series with Tulsa by a 3-2 margin. But trouble came against Shreveport where the Angels managed only one victory in five games.

Tank's Prospect wins Preakness

BALTIMORE (AP) — It was bump-and-run in Saturday's Preakness Stakes for Tank's Prospect, whose owner named him after a famed football player because "he looks like a fullback and he runs like a fullback."

Tank's Prospect, named for former Los Angeles Rams fullback Tank Younger, was bumped leaving the gate, causing jockey Pat Day's left foot to be knocked out of the stirrup. But the bay colt rallied through the stretch and caught even-money favorite Chief's Crown at the wire for a head victory in the $545,700 Preakness.

The son of Mr. Prospector-Midnight Pumpkin did it in record time over the 1 3-16-mile Pimlico course, clipping one-fifth of a second off the mark of 1:53 3-5 set last year by Gate Dancer. It equalled the unofficial mark, caught on hand-held clocks, of Secretariat in the 1973 Preakness. That time remained unofficial, however, because the electric timers malfunctioned.

Eugene Klein, who owns the colt along with his wife, is the former owner of the National Football League's San Diego Chargers. One of his employees was Younger, the club's assistant general manager.

"He's got to be one proud man today, and so am I," said Klein.

Tank's Prospect, trained by D. Wayne Lukas, won $423,200 from a record Preakness purse.

The 110th Preakness was expected to be a speed duel between Eternal Prince and Chief's Crown, the even-money favorite of the crowd of 81,235. Chris McCarron, who replaced Richard Migliore in the saddle, did go to the lead with Eternal Prince at the start, but Chief's Crown, ridden by Donald MacBeth, laid a few lengths off the pace and caught Eternal Prince on the last turn.

"The race went as we planned it, except at the finish," said MacBeth.

Tank's Prospect, an in-and-out performer who came to the Preakness off a seventh-place finish in the Kentucky Derby, caught Chief's Crown inside the sixteenth pole and hung on as Eternal Prince faded to third, 2½ lengths furth back and three lengths in front of I Am The Game.

Day said his left foot came out of the stirrup early in the race when he was bumped by I Am The Game.

"It took me another sixteenth of a mile to get it back in," he said. "We were a little farther back than I liked, but he made it up. I wasn't sure I could catch him, but at the eighth pole, I felt better. Every jump I was closing ground on Chief's Crown."

Day, who whipped Tank's Prospect left-handed through the stretch, said, "I used the stick a lot, but Lukas told me to ride him hard. He said this horse can take some abuse when he's ready."

"I heard it was a two-horse match-race," said a beaming Lukas. "This is as good as any horse in America right now. He was second (to Chief's Crown) in the Breeders Cup and he was awesome in the Arkansas Derby."

The race was run without Kentucky Derby winner Spend a Buck, whose owner decided to skip this second leg of the Triple Crown in favor of the May 27 Jersey Derby at Garden State Park. A victory in that race would bring Spend a Buck a $2.6 million payday.

Both Klein and Lukas said the Jersey Derby may also be on Tank's Prospect's schedule, as is the June 8 Belmont Stakes, the final leg of the Triple Crown.

"The Jersey Derby is not beyond our imagination," Lukas said. "Nine days might be remote, but I'll take nine days to look at that race."

Pavin keeps up Colonial hot pace

FORT WORTH (AP) — The records continued to fall at "Hogan's Alley," and Corey Pavin continued to increase his lead in the Colonial National Invitation Tournament.

But Pavin, who has led or shared the lead all the way, was less than comfortable after matching the course record for 54 holes and establishing a five-shot advantage going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $90,000 first prize.

"I'm certainly pleased with my position now," Pavin said after a 2-under-par 68 that was achieved in occasionally light rain Saturday.

"It was a good, solid round, which is what I wanted," said the 25-year-old who won three international events before gaining his PGA Tour playing rights last year. "But a five-shot lead is not insurmountable.

"I'll have to work hard tomorrow. I really have to go out and concentrate real hard not have any mental lapses.

"Five shots is not comfortable because Colonial is the kind of course that can come up and bite you," he said.

But the normally tough course has been tamed this week by the lack of winds that have produced ideal scoring conditions.

THE STORIED old layout on the banks of the Trinity, called "Hogan's Alley" when the immortal Ben Hogan was winning this title five times, has given up the lowest scores in its history.

Pavin, for example, set a record when he played the first two rounds in 130. And his 198 total for three rounds matched the tournament record and the lowest 54-hole total on the tour this year.

A tournament-record number of sub-par scores have been posted on each of the first three days. And the three-day total of sub-par rounds — 97 — already is greater than the tournament record for four rounds.

And on this day, Colonial gave up the lowest score ever, an 8-under-par 62 to tour sophomore Joey Sindelar, a winner at Greensboro earlier this year. The effort, built around a birdie-birdie-eagle burst, broke the course record of 63 set in 1970 by Dale Douglass.

Sindelar, who started his day's play from the 10th tee, played the back in 30, with birdies on the 17th and 18th.

Turning to the first hole, he hit a 3-wood second shot to within 18 feet of the flag, made the eagle putt and, he admitted, "started to feel a little shakey."

Billy Glasson, stumping along with braces on both his oft-damaged knees, shot a 64 that lifted him into a tie for second at 203 with Scott Hoch and 42-year-old veteran Bob Murphy, whose last victory came 15 years ago.

Chap men make pitch for No. 1 at nationals

From Staff Reports

Midland College's men's tennis team, ranked third in the nation, will bid for the National Junior College Athletic Conference title at Ocala, Fla., Tuesday through Saturday.

The veteran team of five sophomores and a freshman won the Western Junior College Athletic Conference and Region V titles, but will be the underdog in the nationals.

No. 2 Tyler, Texas, JC goes into the tournament as the favorite.

"We're expecting our biggest comeptition to come from within Texas," said Coach Joe Williams. "Tyler not only is ranked ahead of us, but it is the defending national champion. And McLennan, which finished second to Midland in regionals, should be tough. We don't know about some of the other teams, since the other top-ranked schools are from California and they don't compete in the NJCAA."

NJCAA

Sean Strickling, No. 1 singles, leads the Chaps into tournament play. Brad Bailey, Lubbock Monterey, is No. 2 singles. Both won WJCAC and regional titles.

Robert Vrij, like Strickling, a sophomore from Houston Westchester, took No. 3 in WJCAC and regional while John McCauley, the sophomore from Conroe, was No. 4 WJCAC and regional titles.

Emil Bijleveld, Delft, Holland, is the lone freshman on the team and won the No.5 singles and was regional runner up. Andy Bruner, Oklahoma City Northeast, took No. 6 WJCAC singles.

Vrij-Strickling finished second in Class 5A doubles in high school and are the gional No. 1 doubles champs. Bailey-McCauley, ranked as the best juco doubles team, despite playing No. 2, won both WJCAC and regional doubles. Bijleveld and Bruner won WJCAC and regional doubles at No. 3.

The Chaps have been working out in Houston to adjust to the heat and humidity that will be encountered this week in Ocala.

Boesel, Paul join lineup

Indy 500

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Rookies Raul Boesel of Brazil and John Paul Jr. led seven qualifiers Saturday as the tentative 33-car field — the fastest in the history of auto racing — was filled for the May 26 Indianapolis 500.

The four-lap qualification runs by Boesel, Paul, Indy veterans Chip Ganassi, Johnny Parsons, George Snider and Tony Bettenhausen and rookie Jim Crawford of Scotland left non-qualified drivers only the Indianapolis Motor Speedway's "bumping" procedure as a way of making the race with time trials concluding Sunday.

Anyone turning in a faster qualifying run prior to the end of the fourth and final day of time trials Sunday at 7 p.m. EDT would bump the slowest qualified entries out of the lineup, just as Paul did to Derek Daly of Ireland, Bettenhausen to Chet Fillip and Crawford to Kevin Cogan Saturday.

Boesel, 27, was the first to take the green flag for a qualifying attempt on the cool, sunny day, turning in four laps averaging 206.498 mph in a March-Cosworth. That earned him the $17,500 for being the fastest qualifier of the day as the slim Boesel joined car-owner Dick Simon — one of 29 drivers to qualify in the first weekend of time trials — in the field.

The Brazilian, a former Formula One competitor, turned in the 19th fastest overall speed but tentatively earned the 30th spot in the lineup because of the complicated Indianapolis qualifying procedure which rewards first-day qualifiers with higher starting positions than those qualifying on succeeding days.

Ganassi placed one of four-time Indy winner A.J. Foyt's Marches in the field at 206.104; Parsons, replacing Canadian rookie Jacques Villeneuve in a Canadian Tire team March, qualified at 205.778, and Snider earned a starting spot in his 20th Indy 500 in another of Foyt's cars at 205.455.

Paul, in his third and last qualifying attempt of the month, put his March into the lineup at 206.340, bumping Daly, the slowest of the first-weekend qualifiers at 203.082, out of the field.

Bettenhausen put a Lola into the tentative lineup at 204.824, bumping Fillip's March, which had qualified last weekend at 203.961, and Crawford, just beating the end of the qualifying session, bumped Cogan's 203.793 in a March that also was qualified a week earlier.

Crawford made it into the field for the second time this month. The Scottish driver made a first-weekend qualification run of 205.269, but the car was disqualified for being 20 pounds underweight. This time, the team's new car passed inspection.

The average for the 33 qualified cars is 207.830 mph, breaking the Indianapolis record of 203.696, set last May. That also bettered the all-time racing record of 204.669, set by a 24-car Indy-car field last September at Michigan International Speedway.

Daly and Cogan, who have been working with a backup cars all week in case they were bumped, are expected to try to get back into the lineup Sunday. Fillip, however, crashed his backup car during practice Saturday. He was not injured, but the car was badly damaged. Boesel, who started the season without a ride, said, "It's really a dream. The car's not handling the way we wanted. It was pushing badly in the turns. But I think we're solidly in the show."

Bettina new swim coach at Lee

From Staff Reports

John Bettina, a long-time swim instructor in West Texas and Southeast New Mexico, has been hired as the new head swimming coach at Midland Lee, Rebel athletic director Gil Bartosh said Saturday.

Bettina, 33, replaces Charles Guthrie who stepped down because of a long-standing back problem and took disability retirement effective May 1.

Bettina started his coching career as a graduate assistant at Eastern new Mexico where he competed for three years. He then coached in the Amarillo public schools, then spent five years as head coach at West Texas State before thsat schoool dropped its swim program.

Bettina spent two years at Monaghans before he took his present job as swim coach at Hobbs. "I'm real excited about it, It's a good opportunity for me and my family. It's a chance to get back into a good school system where there is a strong interest in swimming," Bettina said. "I know the program was strong before but it's been down the last few years. But with youth swimming so strong (in Midland) I'm looking forward to a good program."

Bettina will report to his new position next fall after finishing the year in Hobbs. He is also expected to teach physical education either at Lee or nearby Rusk Elementary.

Ryan leads Astros to win

National League

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Nolan Ryan pitched a six-hitter for 8⅔ innings and contributed a two-run single to lead the Houston Astros to a 6-5 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Saturday night.

Ryan, 3-2, gained his first victory since April 14 and only his fourth in 11 decisions against the Cardinals. Ryan struck out six to give him a career total of 3,935, 42 ahead of Philadelphia's Steve Carlton on the all-time list.

The right-hander left the game after giving up a run-scoring grounder to Andy Van Slyke and RBI single to Darrell Porter in the ninth. Reliever Mark Ross got the last out for his first major league save.

The Astros went ahead for good with a three-run third, taking a 4-2 lead. Bill Doran walked and went to third on Terry Puhl's single. Doran scored when Kurt Kepshire, 2-4, threw a wild pitch and Puhl scored on Jose Cruz's triple. Jerry Mumphrey singled to score Cruz.

Braves 4, Cubs 3

ATLANTA — Pitcher Rick Mahler belted a three-run double and became the first eight-game winner in the majors this season as the Atlanta Braves downed the Chicago Cubs.

Mahler, 8-2, allowed seven hits in eight innings and ended a personal two-game losing streak after opening the season with seven consecutive victories. Bruce Sutter pitched the ninth for his seventh save and allowed a run before working out of trouble.

Mahler's bases-loaded double came in the second inning, a line drive that sailed over the head of right fielder Keith Moreland and rolled to the fence.

Padres 8, Expos 2

MONTREAL — Dave Dravecky held Montreal to one hit for 7⅓ innings and Kevin McReynolds belted his fourth home run of the season as the San Diego Padres defeated the Montreal Expos.

Until the eighth, Montreal's only hit was Tim Wallach's second-inning double although Dravecky, 3-2, had control problems, walking five.

McReynolds put San Diego ahead in the fourth when he laced a 2-2 pitch just inside the left-field foul pole off Joe Hesketh, 4-2, who yielded three runs in five innings. The Padres scored two more in the fifth on two hits, an error and a suicide squeeze, and broke it open with five runs in the ninth.

Reds 8, Pirates 0

PITTSBURGH — Tom Browning pitched a five-hitter for his first major league shutout and Dave Parker homered for the third consecutive game as the Cincinnati Reds blanked the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Player-manager Pete Rose's two-run double keyed a three-run Cincinnati fourth inning against loser Mike Bielecki, 1-3, as the Reds remained unbeaten in four games on their current road trip. The Reds have won eight of their last 11 games. Browning, 4-2, struck out five and walked two.

Phillies 7, Dodgers 5

PHILADELPHIA — Hot-hitting Von Hayes belted a two-run homer off reliever Tom Niedenfuer to give the Philadelphia Phillies a victory over the slumping Los Angeles Dodgers.

Hayes has now hit in 13 straight games and in 19 of his last 20. In those 20 games, Hayes is 30-for-77, a .390 average.

Larry Andersen, 1-2, was the winner despite pitching only one-third of an inning. Don Carman pitched three hitless innings for his first save.

Giants 8, Mets 2

NEW YORK — Pinch-hitter Gary Rajsich, batting just .147, bounced a two-run single through New York's drawn-in infield and Chris Brown blasted a two-run homer to cap a six-run uprising in the 10th inning that carried the San Francisco Giants past the Mets.

The Mets had won seven straight extra-inning games and were 23-1 in extra innings dating back to July 1983 before the loss. The Giants exploded for six hits in the 10th against reliever Wes Gardner, 0-1, who was recalled from the minors two weeks ago and had pitched only one inning for the Mets.

MC's Strickling off to Tech

From Staff Reports

Midland College tennis standout Sean Strickling has accepted an offer to play tennis for Texas Tech the next two seasons, according to his father in Houston where MC has been training for the upcoming national tournament.

Strickling has been MC's top singles player all spring and has accumulated a record 16-5 and achieved a ranking of 21st in one junior college poll.

The Chaparrals, currently ranked fourth in the nation, arrived in Ocala, Fla., Saturday for the National Junior College Tournament which begins Monday.

MHS tanker to UNM

Andrew Jordan, a three-time participant in the state swimming meet for Midland High, has accepted a scholarship offer from the University of New Mexico, Bulldog coach Jesse Marsh said recently.

Jordan, who also attended the Junior National competition early this spring with the City of Midland Swim Club, took third in the state in the 50 freestyle and swam on 400 freestyle relay and the 200 medley relay in the Austin meet.

Jordan earned all-district, all-region and all-state honors for his efforts in his senior season.

SEPM tennis tourney

The team of Rick Wertz and Joe Gifford were the winners in the Championship bracket of the Permian Basin section SEPM's 5th Annual Benefit Tennis Tournament held Thursday at the Midland Country Club.

Wertz and Gifford defeated Jim Hightower and Charles Hopkins for first place. Winners in the 'A' bracket were Wayne Gibson and Doug Wright, while Dick Neff and Jerry Scott took runner up honors.

In the 'B-1' bracket, it was Jerry Atkinson and Norman Raman with the top finish and John Kimberly and Sandy Sandlin took second. In 'B-2' play, Fred Brumbaugh and Jim Webb earned first and Frank Cahoon and Dan Kozak were runners up.

In all 46 players participated in the tournament and all proceeds were donated to the earth science scholarship fund administered by SEPM.

Polo set for four weeks

A four weekend round robin polo tournament gets underway with two four-period matches today at 2 p.m. at the Midland Polo Club.

The second match should start around 3 p.m. Admittance costs $2.50 per person with all proceeds going to the Midland Ceberal Palsy Center.

Tall Town run set

The fifth annual Tall Town 10,000, sponsored by the Permian Basin Road Runners Club, will be held Saturday at the Midland County Exhibit Building, East Highway 80 and Fairgrounds Road.

The children's mile begins at 8 a.m. with the 10k and two mile races beginning at 8:30 a.m. Awards will go to the top three finishers in each age bracket.

Entry fee is $7 before the race and $9 at the day of the race. Visor caps will be issued to the first 125 entrants.

Contact the Permian Basin Road Runners Club, P.O. Box 10843, Midland.

Boosters to meet

Both the Midland High and Midland Lee booster clubs will meet at 7:30 p.m. Monday as the spring football training period comes to an end.

MHS will meet at the Midland High Youth Center and Bulldog coach Doug McCutchen will give a report on the spring training program which finished Friday.

Lee's boosters will meet at the Lee Youth Center and Rebel boss Jack Tayrien will preview Tuesday night's Maroon-White game, the annual scrimmage that marks the end of Lee's spring training program.

Lee holds hoop clinic

Paul Stueckler, head basketball coach at Midland Lee, will hold his 1985 Basketball School in June and all interested basketball players in grades 3-9 are asked to attend.

Participants will be drilled in the fundamentals of basketball, see movies relating to the sport and will play in a series of games and tournaments.

A pair of two-week sessions will be held, the first is June 3-14, and the second is June 17-28, both at Lee High Gymnasium. Classes will meet Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 9:30. The fee is $20 per session. To register, call coach Stueckler at 694-8379.

ARCO/JOG winners aiming for L.A.

From Staff Reports

More than 270 Permian Basin hopefuls took part in the third annual ARCO/Jesse Owens Games at Memorial Stadium Saturday morning with the winners looking to bigger and better things.

Saturday's winners in the Midland District meet will advance to state competition in Dallas and winners there will earn national berths in the ARCO/Jesse Owens finals in Los Angeles later this summer.

Saturday's winners are as follows:

Saturday's ARCO Jesse Owens track results held at Memorial Stadium. All runners from Midland unless otherwise noted.

Defense gives Celtics near-insurmountable 3-0 lead

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Larry Bird said defense was the key to the 105-94 victory that gave the Boston Celtics a nearly insurmountable 3-0 lead Saturday over the Philadelphia 76ers in the best-of-seven National Basketball Association semifinal playoff series.

No team in NBA history has won a best-of-seven playoff series after trailing 3-0. The Celtics get a chance to clinch the Eastern Conference title in Philadelphia Sunday afternoon.

"We played good defense throughout the game," said Bird, who led the Celtics with 26 points while holding Julius Erving to one field goal in 10 attempts.

"Our defense was really strong and at times took them out of the game," said the 6-9 Bird, who shot 11-for-19 from the field, grabbed seven rebounds, handed out five assists and made four of the Celtics' 17 steals.

"I think they were missing some shots while we were playing good defense and that always makes us look good," he said.

Boston Coach K.C. Jones said: "This is a time for me to smile. We couldn't win down here during the regular season and knew they were going to be very aggressive in their own building."

NBA Playoffs

The teams split six regular-season games, winning all their home games.

"I've been in this building (the Spectrum) for a few years and have never been able to come away with a win, so this is a happy time for me," Jones said.

"I thought when Bird picked up his fourth foul we were going to run into some trouble," he said. "But Scott Wedman came in and gave us a big lift."

Bird got his third and fourth personals within four seconds late in the third period with the Celtics ahead 69-66. He was lifted but came back early in the fourth quarter and scored 10 more points.

"I think K.C. was ready to take me out for a rest anyway," Bird said. "If the game had been on the line, he would have left me in, but Wedman came in and did a great job."

Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham said the game was much like the first two in Boston.

Tank's Prospect, the third choice in the field of 11 3-year-olds, paid $11.40, $3.40 and $3. Chief's Crown paid $2.60 and $2.40 while Eternal Prince returned $3.20.

After I Am The Game came Cutlass Reality, Tajawa, Southern Sultan, Sparrowvon, Skip Trial, Sport Jet and Hajji's Treasure. Hajji's Treasure, the California Derby winner, was running fourth early in the backstretch when he was pulled up.

Hajji's Treasure suffered an injury to his right front leg. His handlers said the leg was packed in ice and the horse was shipped to a veterinary center in Pennsylvania for treatment.

All starters carried scale weight of 126 pounds.

The victory was only the second in eight starts this year for Tank's Prospect, who was purchased for $625,000 at the Keeneland Selected Yearling Sale. His fifth victory in 13 career starts increased Tank's Prospect's career earnings to $1,355,645.

It was the second Preakness victory for Lukas, whose colt Codex scored a controversial victory over the filly Genuine Risk in 1980.

The Preakness fractions were 22 2-5 for the first quarter, 45 1-5 for the half-mile, 1:09 2-5 for the three-quarters and 1:34 1-5 for the mile.

The race also marked the first appearance of a female jockey in the Preakness, Patti Cooksey, who finished sixth aboard Tajawa.

PGA

"I'm trying to prove to myself I can still play," Murphy said after his 65.

Hoch had a 66.

Mike Donald was next at 68-204 and was followed by Hal Sutton, Sindelar and Chip Beck at 205, 5 under par and seven back. Sutton had a third round 67, Beck 68.

BUT THE exceptionally low scoring did not extend to Tom Watson. He struggled to a 73 that left him 15 shots off the pace at 213. PGA champion Lee Trevino had a 68-207. Defending champion Peter Jacobsen was 69-209.

Pavin, who had a four-shot lead after 36 holes, started the cloudy day with a birdie on the first hole, the result of a little wedge shot that nestled in about three feet from the flag.

He was short of the green and bogeyed the fifth, but got the shot back with a wedge to six feet on the next hole.

He parred around — making an important sand save on the eighth hole — until he dropped in a 12-footer for birdie on the 17th.

"I'd missed so many short ones, it was a relief when that one went in," said Pavin, who won the Houston Open and more than $260,000 as a tour rookie last season.

ARTS

PAM Allen, who ran a 38.42, hopes one day to run a marathon, "This year is the first year I've run a 10K. Before I ran the two mile races." She has won all of her 10Ks and all but one of the two-milers.

As for the marathon, "I'm taking it slow. I run every morning, 40 to 45 miles a week. maybe in a couple of years I'll be ready to tackle the longer distance.

In the two-mile, Harris, a three-time Boston Marathoner, took first in 9:58. the 24-year-old Exxon employee said, "It's my first run since Boston. I haven't been doing the necessary interval work for the 10K and I'm just getting over a bike accident, so I stuck to the two miles."

At Boston, "I had a high finish, 358, but my time wasn't what I wanted."

The next competition for Harris will be the June 1 Tall City Triathlon, where he will anchor one of the teams.

Stallings, a 33-year-old CPA and a one-time miler at state for Stanton High, ran a 9:59 to finish behind second place Garza. "Mike has the perfect build for this type of running and John really brought the times down with his pace. Today I wanted speed work. That's what I needed."

Perhaps the most unusual two-mile was turned in by Lisa Sanders who "just ran for fun, I wasn't entered". She pushed a two-wheel tram with her seven-month old son James in it over the two mile course. Crossing the finish line, she said, "There are still a couple behind me."

Reid Dunbar, nine, was the overa all winner in the youth one-mile with a 7:09. Anita Bennett, 10, had a 7:22; Cory Countryman, 12, 7:33; Zach Reed, 9, 7:44; Gil Garcia, 8, 7:46.

Minor leagues like bait stands

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Minor League farm systems could be mistaken for the lakeside bait stand.

Today's promising prospect frequently winds up as the tasty-tidbit to land bigger fish for the parent club.

Chicago Cubs' farmhands nutured in Midland and now in the majors are scattered throughout the major leagues. Lee Smith is one of the few left who came up from the Texas League.

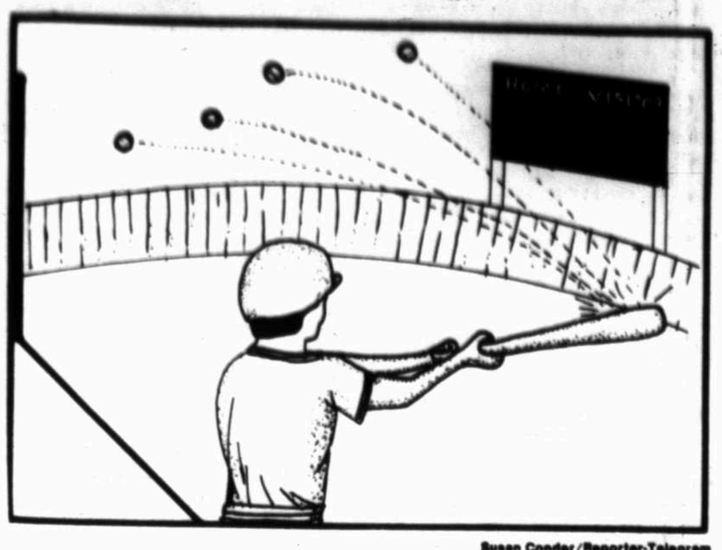

The grass always looks greener on the other side.

The California Angels, Midland's new parent club, is no different. When the Angels were in the Texas League at Shreveport and El Paso from 1972 through 1980, many promising players came up through the system. Today only two remain are with the parent California club, pitcher Mike Witt, class of 1980, who authored a perfect game last September and Daryl Sconiers, currently on loan to Midland during a 21-day rehabilitation program.

But what if the California had hung on to the home growns still in the majors...

THE LINEUP would list Bruce Bochte at first base or perhaps Sconiers, the 1980 Texas League batting champion with a .370 average. Jerry Remy, who thought he won the 1974 batting title, would at second. Jim Anderson, El Paso 1977, would be at short, and Carney Lansford, 1977, at third.

Sconiers and Bochte would have competition from Dave Collins, the belated 1974 batting champion, although the Oakland A could double in the outfield. Another first baseman Willie Aikens, recently released by Toronto, won the TL bat title in 1976.

Susan Conder/Reporter-Telegram

Angel farmhand found happy homer haven in Midland with four in one game.

RANCE Mullniks, 1976 at El Paso and .324 for for Toronto last year at third would give Lansford a battle at third.

Anderson at short and Julio Cruz, 1976 edition, might make a place for himself in the infield.

Except for Sconiers, of course, all are with other clubs.

Remy, a native of Massachusetts, wound up with the Red Sox, where he was a steady regular until slowed down by recurring knee problems.

Anderson is with the White Sox and Lansford hit .300 with the A's while Anderson started the season with the Rangers.

In the outfield, players who came up through the Texas League include Ken Landreaux, 1976-77; Bobby Clark, 1978; Mark Brouhard, 1979; Tom Brunansky, 1980; Bruce Bochte, a first baseman in the TL, 1973.

Landreaux, an early draft pick out of Arizona State, is now with the Dodgers. Clark and Brouhard, both player-of-the-year candidates, are with Milwaukee; Bochte is with the A's and Brunansky with Minnesota, where he hit 32 homers last year.

One of the game's more promising young sluggers, Brunansky left his mark in Midland when he hit four home runs in a single game at Cubs Stadium.

For pitching, there's Witt, 1980, the only player who remains on the Angels. Others in the majors are Jim Dorsey, 1976-78; Frank Tanana, 1973; Ken Schrom, 1977-79; and Mark Clear, 1978; Chuck Porter, 1977-78, who was 6-4 at Minnesota in '84; Dorsey and Clear are with the Red Sox; Tanana toils for the Rangers and Scrhom is with the Minnesota Twins. Clear had and 8-3 record with eight saves in '84.

Floyd Rayford, 1977-78, who wore out Midland pitching, played infield and caught with the Diablos and Brian Harper, 1979-80, are the catchers. Rayford is with the Baltimore Orioles and Harper with the Cardinals.

Of course, several other players have come, made the majors and now are gone, players like Paul Dade, who wound up with Cleveland; relief ace Daniel Boone and catcher Danny Goodwin, a No. 1 draft pick out of Southern University, traded off to the Twins. Goodwin, the Daryl Strawberry-Shawon Dunston of his year, never lived up to his potential once opposing base runners discovered they could run on him with impunity.

Also having made it to the majors at one time were: John Balaz, Ron Jackson, Gil Kubski, Randy Rennicke, Dan Briggs, Sid Monge and Mile Miley.

Aikens had years of stardom ahead of him at Kansas City, but could look to drugs as the cause for a soured career.

At last, Angels home for stretch

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

About the only good thing about the Midland Angels' schedule over the past month is that the club arrives home today and won't have to play until Tuesday.

With only five games at home in the last 27 days, the Angels have been trying to tread water until getting home for the first half Texas League stretch run.

Midland will be home for a 10-game stand at Angel Stadium starting Tuesday with a Baseball Bingo Night game against the Tulsa Drillers at 7 p.m. It also will be Big Spring Community and Advertiser night.

The Texas Ranger farmhands will be in Midland for five nights followed by the Shreveport (San Francisco Giants) Captains. Midland won three of five at Tulsa, the Texas League East leader.

Midland will have 22 of its next 28 games at home before the end of the first half flag chase June 19.

Until going 1-for-6 in the doubleheader at Shreveport Friday night, third baseman Billie Merrifield had been swinging a hot bat, collecting seven hits in 12 at bats and knocking in six runs.

Merrifield and Reggie Montgomery, the team's home run leader with eight, were neck-and-neck in the RBI derby. Montgomery had 37 and Merrifield 36. After that, Tito Nanni and Dan Murphy had 16 each going into Saturday night's final game at Shreveport.

In 15 home dates, the Angels have drawn 29,847 fans at home, an average of 1990 a game. For three Sunday afternoon games, the gate has been 5,940. Sundays have been been one of the slow days at the gate in the past.

May is the last month for the 2 p.m. Sunday and 7 p.m. week night starting times. All games will begin at 7:30 p.m., starting in June.

Other special nights in the Tulsa stand are Knothole Night Wednesday and Ladies Night Thursday and then there is Friday.

Rangers halt seven-game skid with 7-2 win over Chisox

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Larry Parrish rapped out three hits and Cliff Johnson drove in two runs Saturday night as the Texas Rangers snapped a seven-game losing streak with a 7-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

The triumph was the first under Manager Bobby Valentine, who took over from Doug Rader Friday night. Burt Hooton, 1-1, posted his first American League victory, but needed sixth-inning help from Greg Harris, who notched his second save. Britt Burns, 5-3, was the loser.

Burns ran his string of scoreless innings to 19⅓ before the Rangers scored a pair of runs in the fourth inning.

Toby Harrah walked, moved up on a single by Parrish and scored on a double by Gary Ward. Johnson was given an intentional walk and Parrish scored when Don Slaught grounded into a force play.

The Rangers scored a run in the fifth when George Wright bounced into a double play with the bases loaded and they added another run in the sixth on successive doubles by Slaught and Pete O'Brien.

Texas wrapped it up in the seventh on Johnson's two-run single after the Rangers had loaded the bases on a triple by Curtis Wilkerson and a pair of walks off reliever Dan Spillner. Parrish, who had a perfect night at bat, singled in a run in the eighth inning.

American League

Brewers 7, Royals 2

MILWAUKEE — Ted Simmons and Mark Brouhard hit successive two-run doubles as the Milwaukee Brewers broke a tie with five runs in the seventh inning and snapped Kansas City's six-game winning streak with a victory over the Royals.

Moose Haas, 4-2, pitched his third complete game of the season, scattering eight hits. After the Royals tied the score with a run in the top of the seventh on Steve Balboni's eighth home run of the season, Milwaukee loaded the bases with one out in the bottom of the inning against Danny Jackson, 2-2, on Paul Molitor's double and walks to Charlie Moore and Robin Yount.

Simmons, who had three hits, greeted reliever Joe Beckwith with a double to left-center to drive in Molitor and Moore for a 4-2 lead. Brouhard followed with a double off the left-field wall that scored Yount and Simmons. Bobby Clark capped the outburst with an RBI single.

and Jim Gantner singled. Kansas City tied it in the fifth when Steve Balboni

Indians 4, Red Sox 1

CLEVELAND — A month ago, Benny Ayala thought his major-league career was over. But the Cleveland Indians didn't share that belief and Ayala paid dividends with a sixth-inning single that snapped a 1-1 tie and sparked them to a victory over the Boston Red Sox.

"Yes, I did think that maybe I wouldn't get back to the majors," the 34-year-old Ayala said after his line single drove home Andre Thornton with a run that helped Cleveland snap its five-game losing streak.

Ayala, who also had a double, was signed by the Indians on April 19 to a Class AAA contract with the Maine Guides of the International League. The struggling Indians recalled him last Thursday.

Blue Jays 3, Twins 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Jim Clancy and two Toronto relievers scattered nine hits and Jesse Barfield doubled, tripled and scored twice, leading the Blue Jays to a victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Clancy, 1-1, struck out six in 6⅔ innings, his longest outing since being activated last month after a spring training appendectomy.

Toronto took a 1-0 lead against Mike Smithson, 4-3, in the first inning. Damaso Garcia opened the game with a double, advanced as Rance Mulliniks grounded out and scored on Willie Upshaw's sacrifice fly.

Yankees 6, Angels 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Rickey Henderson's two-run single in the second inning and Willie Randolph's two-run double in the eighth powered New York to a victory over the California Angels on as the Yankees strtetched their winning streak to six games.

Henderson, returning to the lineup after missing four games with a bruised elbow, extended his hitting streak to 12 games with a two-out, bases-loaded single off Tommy John, 2-3, that gave the Yankees a 2-0 lead.

Joe Cowley, 2-2, earned his first victory in four starts by holding the Angels to six singles for 6⅓ innings. Rookie Brian Fisher got Reggie Jackson to hit into an inning-ending double play and retired the Angels in order over the final two innings for his first major-league save.

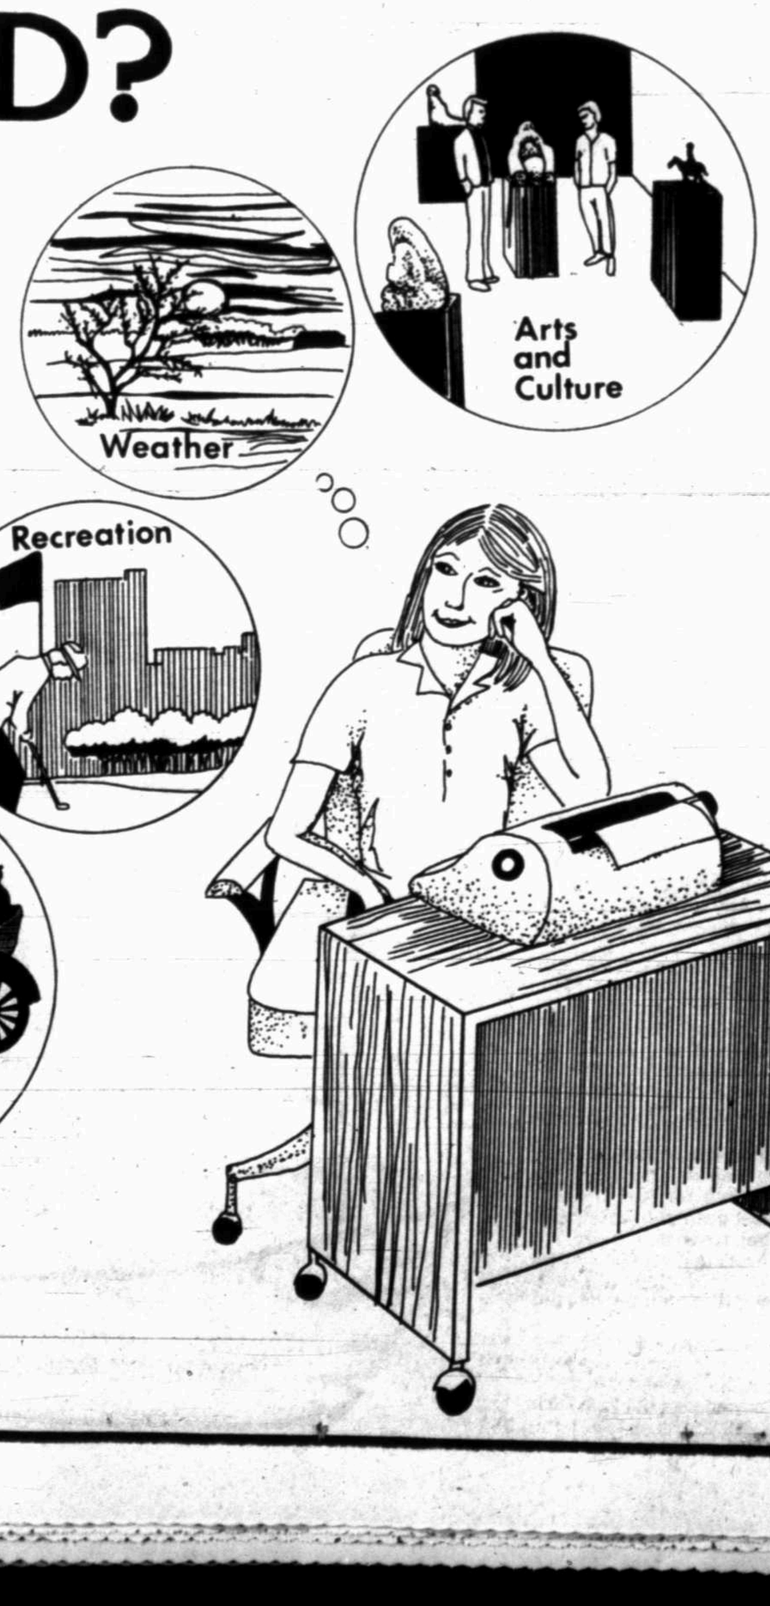

Tigers 9, A's 6

OAKLAND, Calif. — Darrell Evans homered for the fourth game in a row, a three-run shot that produced a four-run first inning as the Detroit Tigers defeated the Oakland Athletics.

Evans' homer, his sixth of the year, helped Detroit starter Dan Petry, 7-2, become the American League's first seven-game winner. Petry allowed five runs and nine hits in seven innings before giving way to Willie Hernandez. Evans also had three singles in a 4-for-4 game, his second such performance in the last four games.

Clinic of the Community Children's Ministry
The Clinic provides minor medical care for children of low-income families who cannot afford to pay a physician for an office visit. Located at 307½ N. Weatherford, the Clinic opened in June, 1983. Founded by the Community Children's Ministry, it has its own Board of Governors, and is privately funded.

The Development Disabilities Center
The DDC is a private, non-profit school established in September 1983, to provide a comprehensive center-based program for children who have development disabilities. The program, which currently has 10 children enrolled, has a staff/child ratio of one to four, providing a quality educational program. Funding is presently derived from tuition revenues and private donations. Assistance is needed in order to grow large enough to meet the needs of children presently on the waiting list, and many others.

THE NEW 740 GLE IS NOW AT YOUR VOLVO DEALER.

BUT IF YOU'D PREFER A CAR THAT'S SLOWER, HAS A SHORTER AVERAGE LIFE EXPECTANCY AND LESS OF A WARRANTY, MAYBE YOU'D REALLY RATHER HAVE A BUICK.

Pound for pound, feature for feature, the Volvo 740 GLE is perhaps the best car in the world today. And you can prove it for yourself. See your Volvo dealer for a test drive this week-end.

Excellent location in quiet neighborhood. 3 BR, 2BA, large living room and super large den with fireplace, beamed ceiling and floor to ceiling wall to wall picture window overlooking lovely backyard. 2 car detached garage. New storm windows and doors. Charming interior decorating and landscaping outside. Water well. Well kept with TLC. $66,500. Call 683-2220 for appointment.

EXPENSIVE RESIDENCE. If you are comfortably wealthy, (can easily afford a new Mercedes, your own jet, Harvard for the kids, and 5 day a week maid service, not to mention the yard man), and if you desire unique, spacious, contemporary living, you might be the person or corporation to consider this architecturally outstanding home. No joke! It is expensive, but worth more than the $mo price tag. $280,000. Call 685-1886 or 683-8206 for viewing.

Get a job

Text by Linda Anderson
Illustration by Suzan Conder

In springtime a young man's fancy may turn to thoughts of love, but when he comes to his senses and returns to reality, a young man's — and a young woman's — fancy probably turns to thoughts of summer employment.

The unemployment rate for young people is usually higher than for other segments of the population. And because many of these teenagers have never been employed before, finding a job may be doubly difficult for them. Many students find the job market a "Catch-22" situation — employers won't hire them because they have no job experience, and they can't get job experience because employers won't hire them.

Each year the Texas Employment Commission in Midland sponsors a "Work-a-Rama" designed to help employees-to-be ages 14-21 find prospective employers. This year is the 22nd annual program, said Ed Miller, TEC manager in Midland, and is taking place now through the end of summer. Students interested in participating may fill out applications at the TEC office, 501 N. Loraine in Midland.

"Last year the work-a-rama placed 549 kids," said Walter J. Pilisko, TEC employment supervisor. "Some of those kids were placed two or three times on short jobs." Last year, for a total of 886 applications, 707 jobs were found for young job-seekers.

Getting through the door when opportunity knocks

Walter J. Pilisko, Texas Employment Commission employment supervisor, said young people seeking work should remember these tips for job interviews:

— Dress appropriately.

— Apply between 9-11 a.m. or 1-4:30 p.m. Early in the week and early in the day is best but don't apply "so early the employer hasn't had a chance to get a cup of coffee."

— Fill out the application neatly. "A sloppy application gives the impression of sloppy work."

— If the student has been employed previously, "it is handy to have the previously employers' names, references and telephone numbers on a card carried in a pocket" because questions about past employment are asked on every application.

— Fast food chains are an good place for first-time employees to start because of job opportunities, availability and "it's good work experience."

Most employed teens work in service industry, Pilisko said, including fast food outlets, construction and retail sales.

Many young summer employees are hired each year at Water Wonderland, a water park located near Midland Regional Airport on Highway 80. Water Wonderland is open on weekends in May and from Memorial Day weekend in late May through Labor Day weekend in early September, said Spooky Mashburn, personnel manager for the park.

"Last year we hired about 100-120 employees," she said. "We're looking at 150 this year and we may have to expand" that number. "We hire all summer. As the crowds get larger, we add employees to be able to handle" larger numbers of visitors.

Fast-food industry also provides "an excellent training ground," said Pilisko. "It's a good, well-rounded education in the world of work."

Gordon Schrank, franchise owner of Chick-fil-A in Midland Park Mall, maintains a staff of 16-18 teen employees throughout the year. With the exception of one or two employees, "everybody here is part-time. The majority don't work more than 15 hours a week. And I don't ask them to work more than five or six hours at a time."

Some young aspiring employees have more difficulty finding jobs than others, Miller said, not because they are lazy or indifferent, but because they are young. "The ones who have difficulty are those who are under 16. Because of child labor laws, some jobs won't hire those under 16."

Students younger than 16 often are hired for garden or yard work, but even those jobs are subject to regulations. "Kids can't legally operate power mowers until they are 16," said Pilisko. "under Federal Child Labor Laws."

Because of a recent relaxation in the child labor laws, Water Wonderland is now able to hire 15-year-olds. Regulations regarding the hours students younger than 16 are able to work only apply during the school year, Ms. Mashburn said. Even so, young employees usually work six- or seven-hour days, 35-hour work weeks and workers are rarely at the park after 9 p.m.

Schrank believes well-rounded individuals make the best employees. The students who work in his restaurant are usually involved in other activities, such as football or band, church choir or youth group. Their working hours are scheduled around their other committments because "outside activities are just as important as their jobs."

Alan White and his bride, the former Melissa Hursh of Stanton, will make their home in Midland following a honeymoon to Cancun, Mexico. They were married at one o'clock Saturday afternoon in St. Ann's Catholic Church. A reception followed at Mission Dorado Country Club.

Parents of the couple are Eileen and Gen. Ed White of Midland and Tommy Hursh of Stanton.

Wedding week activities included the rehearsal dinner hosted by the groom's parents in their Saddle Club Estates home. Out-of-town guests were the groom's sister and brother-in-law, Linda and Tom Spooner and daughter, Ashley, of Denver, and family friends Nell Ann and Earl Roberts of Owosso, Mich. The bridesmaids' luncheon was hosted by Coleen (Mrs. Carl, Jr.) Leonard at La Bodega Restaurant.

Among other pre-nuptial activities were an engagement party hosted by the groom's parents in their home and a kitchen shower given by Polly (Mrs. Bill) Tharp, Jackie (Mrs. Tom) Ingram and Le Rae (Mrs. Glen) Aaron. A display shower was given in the home of Eddie Ray (Mrs. Wayne) Merritt, with the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Lois Church of Stanton, as a special guest.

A lingerie shower and rice bag party were given by Brenda (Mrs. Mark) Hursh, Julie (Mrs. Mark) Dettman, Nancy (Mrs. Milton) Kirby and Ms. Diane Williams. Additional parties included a brunch given by Hazel and Keith Somerville and Evelyn (Mrs. Roy) Minear, a paper shower and cocktail buffet hosted by Shirley and Monty Gist and a poolside "Sips and Dips" party at the home of Charlene and Dick Rosebery, with Sarah and Lowell Branum co-hosting.

MIDLAND HIGH SENIOR Camille Cain was honored by Carolyn and Jay Berry with a graduation party last weekend at the Racquet Club.

Held poolside, the party featured a Mexican buffet served from a table decorated with a pinata and brightly colored serape. Dinner was followed by dancing to music provided by a DJ, with disco lights creating a festive mood.

The daughter of Peggy and G.H. Cain, Camille plans to attend UT-Austin in the fall. Before leaving for college, she will compete for the Miss West Texas crown. She has held several beauty pageant titles during her high school years.

FOUR LEE HIGH SCHOOL graduation seniors were feted Monday evening with a party at Playland Skating Center. The guests of honor were Walter Hickman, son of Gladys and Scott Hickman; James Tom, son of Kay and James Tom; Brad Pearce, son of Glenda and Herb Pearce, and Chris Embrey, son of Raye Ann and Boley Embrey.

The fun event featured skating, snacks and prizes for the most original T-shirts. Decorations included a wall display of T-shirts from various colleges and universities and multi-colored, helium-filled balloons, inscribed with the words, "Cheers" and "Congratulations."

Hosting the party were Janet and Darrell Smith, Carol and Jack Steele, Judy and Yippy Rankin, Debbie and Caleb McCall, Sarah and Russell Neisig, Elizabeth and Byron Greaves and Jean and Thurston Dean.

Walter and Brad plan to attend Texas Tech, while James and Chris will enter UT-Austin this fall.

A MISCELLANEOUS SHOWER was held recently in the home of Kitty (Mrs. Arnold) Adams to honor Prissy Kail, daughter of Geneva and Gene Kail. She and Danny Young, son of Joyce and Maurice Young of McCamey, are to be married June 8 at the First Baptist Church.

Co-hostesses were Lura (Mrs. Dave) Davis and her daughter, Kathy (Mrs. Brian) Chandler, who is to be a bridesmatron in the wedding; Teresa (Mrs. Terry) Tidwell, Mrs. Donna Campbell and Kathleen (Mrs. Woodrow) Wickman. Florine (Mrs. Thomas) Smith, grandmother of the bride-to-be, was a special guest.

Prissy also will be honored today with a rice bag party at the home of Fran (Mrs. Doug) Shamburger and her daughter, Jill.

TO CELEBRATE the opening night of Midland Community Theatre's latest production, "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," a champagne party was held in the theatre lobby following the performance. Hosted by the Ham Hocks, one of MCT's support groups, the party honored cast and crew members and their families.

Special guests were MCT board members and their spouses. Those present included Meg and Skip Branson, Shari and Bob Koziol, Mary Jane and Bob Young, Nancy and Mike Huslage and Arlen Edgar.

JOBS

Working provides one of the most effective ego-boosts available — earning a paycheck. Miller said the TEC receives many calls from parents wanting to sign a release form or work permit so their children under 16 will be able to find jobs. "You don't have to have a work permit in Midland County," he said. "Basically, the child labor laws say if a child is under 18 he cannot work in certain occupations which are considered hazardous.

"In agriculture, as long as he is working for his family," a person under 18 "can operate anything. You have to be 18 to work on an oil rig, legally."

Pilisko said agriculture is not a broad source of employment for students in the area because "we don't have a lot of agriculture," but construction companies "hire quite a few in less-skilled trades.

"Child labor laws are not designed to prevent kids from working. They are designed to prevent the abuse of children in the job market," Pilisko said.

"The main thing is to get the kids working," Miller said. Young workers are still paid at least minimum wage, $3.35 per hour, because the proposed lower wage for students has not been passed, he added.

Though Water Wonderland also hires adults, because the jobs pay minimum wage and employment is strictly during the summer, most applicants are students. "A lot of senior citizens apply," said Ms. Mashburn. "They work well with kids and they are very dependable."

Previous work experience is not required for Water Wonderland employees, she said. Lifeguards must have advanced lifesaving certificates, but they are the only park employees who need prior training.

Schrank said he prefers to hire students with no previous work experience because they won't have any bad work habits and he can train them to his specifications. And his employees tend to stay on the job longer than those at many other fast-food restaurants. "About the only things I fire kids for are lying about being sick and stealing from me," he said. Common mistakes, such as dropping chicken or breaking dishes, usually don't upset him much because "kids are going to make mistakes, but I do that, too. I get angry when one is not responsible and not honest."

Some of the qualifications Schrank looks for in prospective employees are honesty, neatness, cleanliness and an outgoing personality. "I look at the application. If a kid can't spell he probably can't count change." He also places much value on his employees' opinions and recommendations when it comes to hiring.

Water Wonderland is "a good place for kids to learn the skills of working with people," Ms. Mashburn said, and "a good source for kids to get job experience. They learn how to run the cash register and how to deal with people. They learn responsibility."

Schrank believes an employee-employer relationship should be a give-and-take situation based on trust. "I feel a very great responsibility to train them in more than just cooking chicken — how to be responsible people, people with integrity, trusted to handle hundreds of dollars a day ..."

Employment at Water Wonderland isn't all work. "We provide after-hours recreation, recognition programs based on their work. They are motivated to do a good job," Ms. Mashburn said.

Employees at Chick-fil-a also earn more than a paycheck. They have monthly group outings, such as team softball games or trips to Water Wonderland, and yearly Christmas parties. "I think it's important for the kids to know each other socially because they work better together," Schrank said.

National company policy which forbids Sunday openings means Chick-fil-a employees always have Sundays off.

As an added incentive to its young employees Chick-fil-a offers a $1000 scholarship to the college of his choice to each employee who works for the company two years, an average of 20 hours per week, and maintains a "C" average in school, Schrank said.

Teenagers are eager to participate in the job fair, Miller said, but "we need employers to try to provide jobs. We believe work experience is very good for young people, it helps keep kids in school, gives good experience." Some students, especially those of college age, depend on their summer or part-time employment to provide funds to pay for their education.

Students work for many reasons, but need is not always a factor. "About half the kids work because they want to, not because they have to," Schrank said. "Self-esteem is the key. They want to feel they are doing something worthwhile."

Teen-agers run their own specialized news service

HAYWARD, Calif. (AP) — The most lively conversation of all was about mud ducks and freaks, back street and funk town.

But while the 12 teen-agers already knew most of the slang words, the newspaper articles they write about young people are more than just vernacular.

The stories are serious business for the teen-agers, who work for the Youth News Service, an organization that sells the articles to papers across the country.

Some of the subjects proposed for stories include suicide, relationships, politics and family conflict.

The ideas are aired during Monday brainstorming sessions in the offices of Pacific News Service, a San Francisco-based news organization that's the main sponsor of the youth project.

With the guidance of two adult editors paid by PNS, the reporters develop ideas for articles.

The reporters work for experience, not money. Volunteer positions are available for anyone 15 to 19 years old who can write.

The colorful slang, including terms like "spitting," "book that," "funky fresh" and "tenda," are the subject of volunteer Yalonda Lofton's next story, about teen slang.

For the uninitiated, "mud ducks" are ugly people, "freaks" are promiscuous girls, "back street" means thugs, "funk town" is a West Oakland gang or can be used to mean Oakland itself, "spitting" is flirting, "book that" means forget it, "funky fresh" is well-dressed, and "tenda" or "tender" means attractive.

Students build better rocker

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Some college design students have taken the roll out of rocking with a chair that just might change the way America sits.

Their "exercise rocking chair" — originally designed for the elderly — combines the soothing motion of a rocker with the safety and stability of an armchair.

It looks like a rocker built inside a frame, anchored by pivots at the bottom. The armrests are stationary, so a sitter can exercise by pumping it with either arms or legs.

Furniture experts say the unpatented design seems to be unique.

"It's a dynamite idea. I see it as the kind of chair you could really have in every living room in the United States. It's not the kind of thing that just Grandma would use," said Patricia Moore, a New York City designer.

"The potential here for waking up an industry is commendable," said Ms. Moore, who once traveled the country disguised as an old woman to document the plight of the elderly.

The chair was designed by five industrial-design students at Rochester Institute of Technology for a competition organized by Armco Inc. of Middletown, Ohio. Ms. Moore, an RIT graduate, lectured the students last fall and judged the competition this spring.

Doctors say rocking increases the heart's output, promotes respiration, discourages lung congestion, stimulates muscle tone and fosters a sense of well-being.

Those qualities have made the rocking chair a symbol of home and old age since before the days of Whistler's Mother.

A traditional rocker, though, can frustrate infirm people who can't hoist themselves in and out without risking a fall.

Selling yourself crucial to successful interviews

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Hanging on the wall of one corporate personnel waiting room is a full-length mirror with a sign asking, "Would you hire this person?"

An intimidating prank?

Not necessarily so. Recent research suggests that a brief glance in a mirror provides only a little less "data" than what many employers use to decide whether or not to hire an applicant.

"They tend to base their decisions primarily on first impressions, not on re'sume's or credentials," says Janet G. Elsea, author of "The Four-Minute Sell: How to Make a Dynamic First Impression" (Simon and Schuster, $12.95). "Usually they make up their minds within the first five minutes of meeting you."

Elsea, president of the Washington-based consulting firm Communications Skills Inc., says most of us know intuitively that appearance, body language, tone of voice and choice of words are critical to making a good first impression. But many promising careers are sidetracked, promotions lost and business relationships damaged, she says, because people don't know how to use good communications strategies.

"The fortune cookie is right," says Elsea. "You don't get a second chance to make a good first impression." And what the fortune cookie doesn't tell you: in first encounters, you get only two to four minutes to make an impression.

"Studies show that people immediately focus on what they can see — age, gender, color of skin, appearance, facial expressions, eye contact, even posture," says Elsea, a former professor of speech communications at Arizona State University who dropped her academic image seven years ago to develop the groomed look of an amiable — but serious — businesswoman. "A number of experts believe what you look like constitutes more than half the total message of a first impression."

Next, people focus on what they hear. Our speaking voices — rate, loudness, pitch, tone and articulation — give additional clues to our personalities.

"The voice alone — not the words — conveys as much as 38 percent of the meaning in face-to-face interactions," claims Elsea. "Nonverbal and vocal communications constitute more that 90 percent of the message during the first moments."

Last and least important is what you say. If people can't get past your visual and auditory impression, they're not going to listen to your words.

In a world where packaging often supercedes content, Elsea says she is "amazed" by the number of intelligent people who have their thoughts in order but don't have a clue as to what they look or sound like.

"I want people to be able to answer key questions about themselves," she says. "What does my face say when I'm disturbed? What do I look like from behind? What does my voice sound like when I'm nervous? What kind of language do I use? Making good first impressions is a matter of raising our consciousness about ourselves."

In workshops with clients such as Honeywell, the World Bank and the Smithsonian Institution, Elsea regularly videotapes sessions to familiarize people with themselves. It can be a tough lesson.

One workshop participant, she recalls, stood up with hands on his hips and declared in a stern voice: "I don't believe my words are so unimportant. People just have to listen to what I say and take me for what I am."

Says Elsea, "I did. I took him to be an angry, threatened individual and moved on to another person's question."

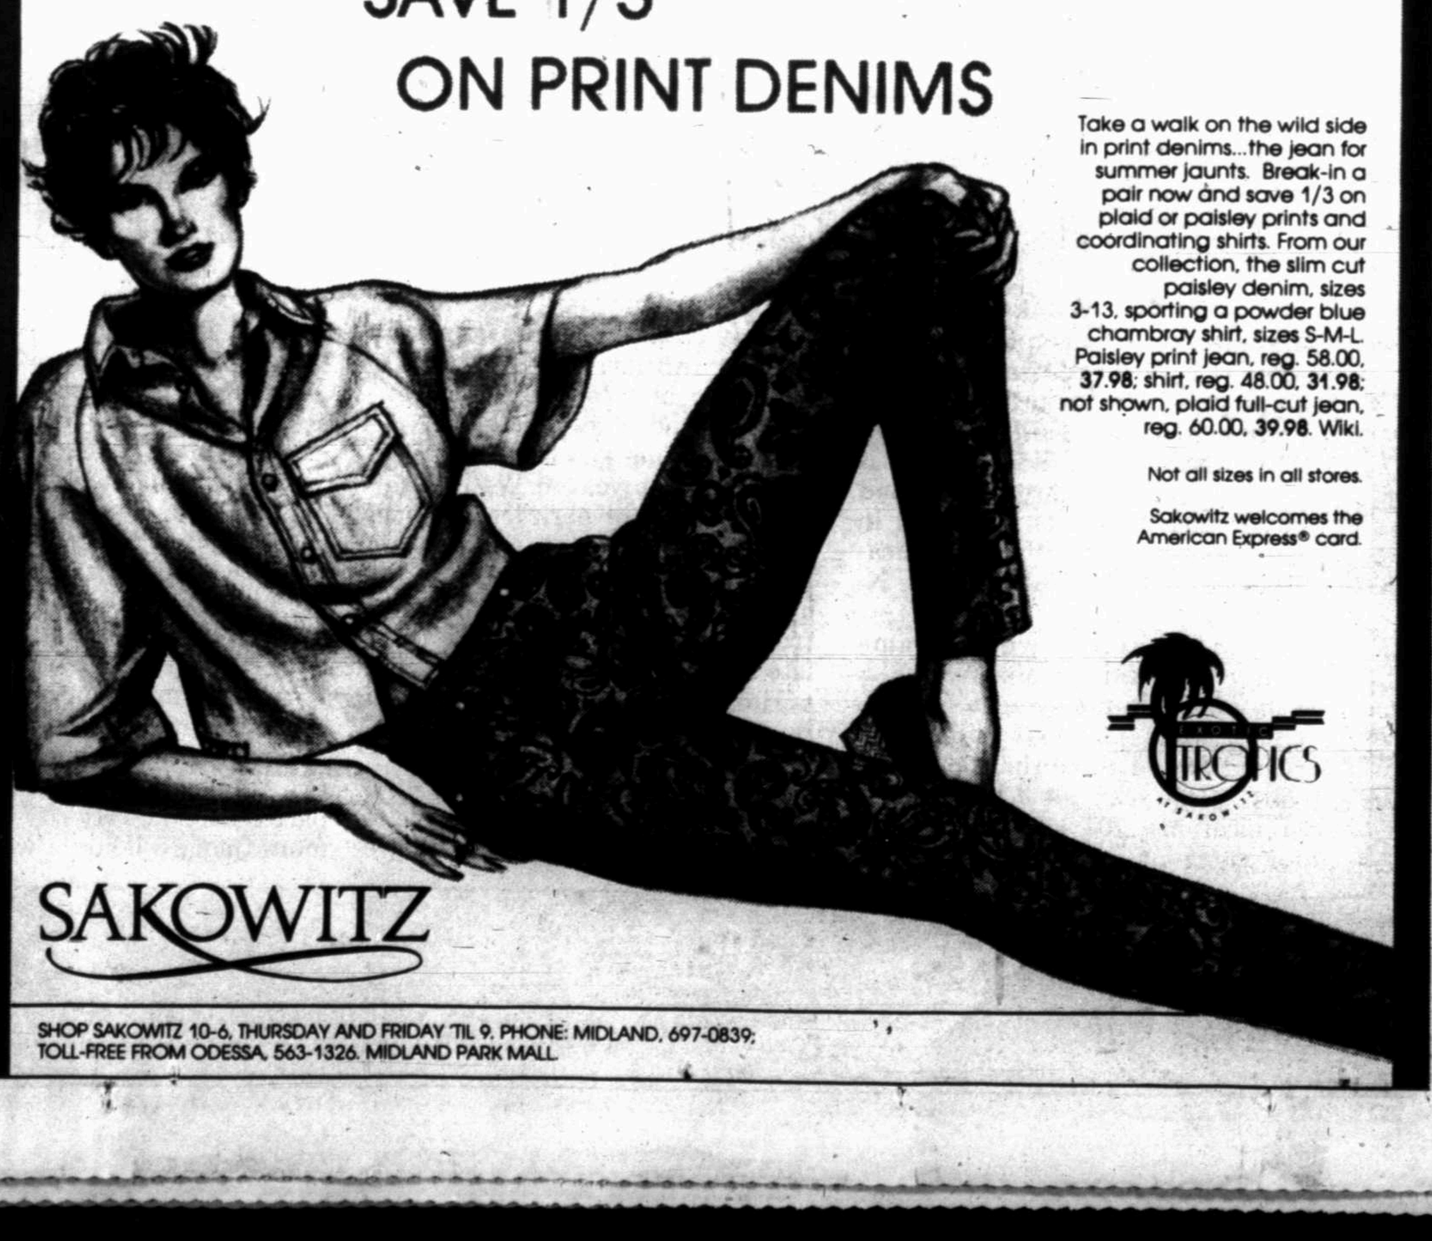

Her message: Modify your behavior to tailor the first impression you want to make. A few of her pointers:

— Look at yourself on film or videotape, moving, gesturing, interacting with others. Candid photographs of yourself in action are next best. As a last resort, study yourself in a full-length mirror. What looks good, and why? Clothes? Weight? Hair style? What looks bad? Change it.

— Remember that your face is the most controllable nonverbal cue, and also the one people rely on to gauge your attitude. Smiling and head-nodding are the most powerful nonverbal cues. A blank expression ranks lowest.

"Preparation and practice is the key in making the new behaviors you choose part of your automatic response system," says Elsea. "And a valuable fringe benefit is that you'll read other people better."

Woman finds life of contentment with herd of goats

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON, N.J. — In her first life, Gail LeCompte was a "die-hard suburbanite." She lived in a trim little house in Ridgewood, played tennis and bridge, and belonged to the women's club. Then came the now-familiar ephiphany.

These days she talks about the position of the American dollar in international markets and French farm-price supports and lines of credit and all those things that an entrepreneurial woman, thrust Vesuvian-like from the dark crater of one existence into the enlightened rim of another, concerns herself with.

Yes, the children are grown and gone, and yes, there has been a divorce. But the metamorphosis of Gail LeCompte had very little to do with wrenching social change or personal passages. It began a while back with Maude and Tillie — who were goats, of course.

Goats are wonderful creatures, "wonn-derrr-fulll," said Mrs. LeCompte, rhapsodic. They are relatively clean and odorless. They are friendly and affectionate. "Yes," she said, "like dogs, except that they do not bark or bite." (The latter is a questionable assertion, but more on this in a moment.)

It was goats that brought Mrs. LeCompte here to a 35-acre farm in the windy Pohatcong Valley. Many years ago, while house hunting in another part of the state, she passed a place that had a goat in the front yard. She was sure she heard the goat say goodbye, and she thought to herself, "My, wouldn't it be the cutest thing to have a goat to say goodbye to our company."

SO SHE BOUGHT Maude and Tillie. Soon, two became four and four became eight and so on. She read books and took courses and consulted with agricultural experts and in time began to market goat milk and make goat cheese. Last November, she wrapped herself in credit, purchased a sagging red farmhouse and barn here and opened the Goat Works, as she calls her business.

Officials at the State Department of Agriculture like to trumpet Mrs. LeCompte as an example of a successful female farmer. And for all appearances she is. She has a cheese manufacturing room in one part of her barn and her products are distributed to some of the best shops and restaurants in New York and Washington.

But the influence of Maude and Tillie, dead these five years, runs deep. Goats are not livestock, exactly, not like cows or sheep or pigs. They have alluring faces. The ears flop innocently down. The noses are curious, but not intrusive. The eyes are large and pleading.

It is difficult to "manage" a creature like this, to herd it indifferently from pasture to pen to milking parlor to — oh, the thought of it — slaughterhouse. Instead, Mrs. LeCompte coos at this flock of 50, a kind of agricultural nanny in blue jeans with her shirt sleeves rolled up.

HERE, FOR INSTANCE, is Empress. "Good morning," the goat herder squeals. "This is a fine warm spring day and goats love days like this. Get up, Empress. What are you doing over there? Everybody else got up. What's with you?"

Empress does not answer. She is content to loll by the salt lick, pregnant and bored. "How are you," says the mistress of the barn to the other does in the pen. "You're such pretty girls and such fat girls, too."

She turns her attention to the bucks. "Here's Centurian, so named because he's one of the bucks of the century. He's beautiful. You're good boys aren't you? What are you doing, everybody? Chewing your cuds? Enjoying the nice warm friendly breeze?"

And do not believe all that nonsense about ill-tempered, cloven-hoofed satyrs who chew on tin cans. Goats have "very discriminating tastes" and even if they ruminate on your shoes or shirt, as they are doing now, that is not biting, "that's just testing. They have to test, don't they?"

AND FINALLY, if all of this seems a little bit too precious, that's O.K., too, because these goats have given Gail LeCompte "a sense of self." Never mind that her mother calls her and says, "Now, Gail, how many eggs a day did you say you get from those goats?"

It is also of no consequence that some men might dismiss a female goat farmer as just another example of the "milkmaid syndrome." She cares little about labels.

So if this savvy and independent livestock manager with muscled forearms wants to call herself "mommy" and some of her herd "little pumpkins," just remember that her success began back with Maude and Tillie, a couple of sweet-faced kids who knew how to say goodbye.

Big buttons come bouncing back

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Buttons — more precisely, big buttons, lots of them — are popping up on jackets. They come in almost as many formations as a professional football team does: single rows, double rows, even triple rows. Other innovations are the V-formation bellhop special and what might be called the W-formation — two parallel rows that widen at the top. Not surprisingly, the most popular color for these buttons is gold, or brass, and they are frequently attached to a jacket of navy blue.

The brass-button look is yet another confirmation of the strength and durability of a classic style. The blue blazer? We all know it as an old and respected friend, one that's trusting enough to allow a few liberties without kicking up too much of a fuss.

So put in a few extra buttons, or even a third row of them. The jacket comes from sturdy stock and can take it, especially when its integrity is left intact. Designers such as Yves St. Laurent and Givenchy, who have buttoned up some of their spring jackets, have done exactly that by insisting upon crisp, almost militarily precise tailoring.

AT WIT'S END

Primer on retired husbands offered

By ERMA BOMBECK

See Jim.

Jim used to run and jump and chase accounts. Jim is going to stay home now. He has a new watch. He will tell you what time it is even when you don't ask.

It is time to get up.

It is time to remove the oil stain from the driveway before it spreads to the rest of the house.

It is time to alphabetize your spices.

It is time to eat. (Lunch/dinner/breakfast/break/snack/party.)

It is time to use the packet of yeast before it expires at noon tomorrow.

Sometimes Jim will act like a house guest.

"Where do you hide the iced tea glasses?"

"The hall bath needs toilet tissue."

"There is someone at the door selling something."

"I'd put the dishes away, but I don't know where they belong."

Sometimes Jim will act like he has hired you for the summer.

"Who was that on the phone and what did they want?"

"Where are you going and what time are you coming back?"

"I don't think that grass can wait another day."

Retired men like Jim bring efficiency to the home.

"It is cheaper to make your own tea bags than to buy ready-made."

"Don't heat up the oven for one baked potato. Do a dozen and freeze them."

Jim likes you to go to bed when he is tired, stay awake when he is not sleepy, turn down the thermostat when he is warm and eat when he is hungry.

See Jim drive a nail by the door to hold your car keys.

See Jim drive a nail by the phone to hold a pencil.

See Jim drive a nail in the kitchen to hold your glasses.

See Jim drive a nail in the desk to hold your unpaid bills.

See Jim drive you crazy.

You are surprised. You did not know you married a man who knew so much about dishwashers, wax build-up, hand-washables, stain removers, children and how to keep bananas from turning brown.

Jim is surprised. He does not know how you have managed to stumble through 40 years of running a house without him.

Everyone is surprised he is busier than ever.

You're not.

Erma Bombeck is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

HILL-THORPE

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Hill of Midland announce the engagement of their daughter Sandra Kay of Houston to Joe Louis Thorpe Jr. of Houston. The future bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Louis Thorpe and Katheen O'Rourke of Houston. The wedding is planned for 7 p.m. June 29 at John Knox Presbyterian Church in Houston.

Miss Hill is a graduate of Lee High School and Texas Tech University. She is a periodontal surgical assistant with Dr. Michael McGuire in Houston. Her fiance is a graduate of Springwood High School and attended Blinn College and the University of Houston. He is project manager for Fisk Electric in Houston.

Entrepreneurs start early

NEW YORK (AP) — Entrepreneurial tendencies emerge early in life, according to the 2,740 respondents to a recent Venture magazine survey conducted to determine which psychological factors helped shape today's entrepreneurs.

The survey showed that 44 percent of those responding were first-born children who, for the most part, had a positive relationship with their fathers.

The leadership qualities and motivation established in childhood spurred on more than one-third of them to hold three or more jobs before the age of 15.

Eager to make their own mark in the business world, two-thirds of the entrepreneurs surveyed started their first businesses before the age of 30.

Sixty-two percent were personally liable for the capital borrowed to launch their ventures.

Queen given tomato as token of affection

Women given tips on etiquette of picking up tab

Hearst News Service

Whether it's a business luncheon that's been in the offing for months or an impromptu dinner arranged in five minutes by phone, there are times when a woman wants to pick up the restaurant check.

How do you get the tab and pay for the meal in one smooth move? Here are some suggestions from Antoine Corinthios, general manager of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in Chicago and regional vice president of Four Seasons Hotels Ltd., Chicago.

When making reservations, state that you are the hostess and will be picking up the tab. And ask which credit cards are accepted.

"Using a credit card is now the rule, not the exception," Corinthios said, "and it's a wise idea. A woman doesn't have to carry too much cash, and she has an instant record of what was spent."

Close to 30 percent of all business lunches at the hotel are hosted by women, he said.

If you'd like to avoid a transaction at the table, leave your credit card with the maitre'd or reservation desk as you enter the restaurant. A simple "just give me the receipt, please," indicates you wish the bill to be taken care of for you. The waiter will bring the card and receipt to your table, if you wish, or you can pick them up as you leave.

If you must use cash, be sure you have enough bills of convenient denominations to avoid an awkward search. If you don't know the restaurant well, ask for a range of food and wine prices. There will be some latitude, so aim high, allowing for extra cocktails and at least a 15 percent tip.

If you are entertaining several people and want to keep the costs within bounds, you may wish to prearrange the wine to be served and specify certain appetizers, entrees and desserts. At the same time, arrange to present your credit card and sign the bill on arrival, before the meal begins. Collect the card and receipt later. If using cash, settle the bill at the desk.

"Some better restaurants now feature what is called the prix-fixe or fixed menu," Corinthios said. "This gives diners the choice of a complete lunch or dinner – appetizer, entree, dessert, coffee – at one all-inclusive price and makes it easier to estimate the total bill."

Lifestyle policies

The policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only.

The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons within Midland. Pictures must be obtained in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Portraits of the future bride and bridegroom in one photograph may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Photos should be black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Quality reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Cabbage Patch gets cleaned up

FAIRMONT, Minn. (AP) — What began with one dirty "kid" has blossomed into a business that's keeping three Fairmont women busy scrubbing fabric bodies, mending cuts and styling hair.

Last fall, Sheila Gorham was puzzled about how to get her child's Cabbage Patch doll clean. After being dragged all over town, to school, play and bed, the doll was losing its sparkle, and the manufacturer warns against putting it in the washing machine or having it dry cleaned.

She shared her dilemma with her sisters, Ginny Burmeister and Lisa Thate, and together the three developed a cleaning method and launched the Cabbage Patch Clinic.

For $9.95 each, the three will wash Cabbage Patch and other similar dolls, mend and replace any worn stitching and trim, and, if desired, style their hair.

Each doll is washed and groomed individually and is treated with "tender loving care," Ms. Burmeister said. They're washed in a baby tub, dried with baby towels and brushed with baby brushes.

"You really have to take great care when you clean them because you know how much they mean to someone else," she said.

The three have been involved in other crafts for about a year and also make and sell dolls that resemble the Cabbage Patch dolls.

"We've seen a lot of tears when they children leave them, but they're all smiles when they come back to pick them up and they're all clean," Ms. Burmeister said.

DEAR ABBY

Man won't forget fiancee's past

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Nothing in this world seems to interest me anymore since I broke up with my fiancee. I was so upset at the time, I wanted to commit suicide, but because I have my parents to support, I couldn't bring myself to end my life.

I cannot seem to get over the hurt of ending my relationship with what I perceived to be the perfect woman. We were so happy together and she seemed so right for me, then shortly before we were to be married I discovered that she had been a prostitute before we met.

Please advise me. — NOT HEALING

DEAR NOT HEALING: It's not where we came from that's important — it's where we're going that counts.

Jesus forgave the prostitute. ("Go, and sin no more.") Should you do less?

DEAR ABBY: I need your opinion as soon as possible on a rather delicate subject. I am an older widow, living alone in a penthouse apartment. There's not much to do up here all alone at night, so I sit on my terrace and enjoy the view. Directly across from me is another penthouse in which two young men live together.

Quite often I see them having parties with young (perhaps teen-age) boys. I see them drinking and smoking, and Lord knows what else is going on over there. On some occasions I see them all in groups — all nude on their private terrace. I wonder if those young men are being raped, or if they're having sex willingly. Should I call the police?

If I report them to the police, will I have to give my name? I'm afraid I might be terrorized by these men if they found out who reported them. — NAMELESS ON THE 25th FLOOR

DEAR NAMELESS: If you honestly believe that your neighbors are raping minors, you should notify the police and be willing to identify yourself. Be aware that the law states that whatever goes on between consenting adults in the privacy of their own home is not your business — or the law's.

For a woman of your apparent means, you are sadly impoverished. Enrich your life with friends — or a hobby.

DEAR ABBY: What happens to a patient's files and medical records after the physician (or psychiatrist) retires, dies, or the patient decides to change doctors?

I have seen both kinds of doctors, and I do not want my medical history read by anyone other than the doctors who have treated me. It's bad enough to know that the doctors' nurses, bookkeepers and receptionists who had access to my files might have opened their mouths at a party. — CONCERNED IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR CONCERNED: In California the patient's medical records are the property of the doctor. In almost every case, if the patient changes doctors, the "old" doctor willingly sends the patient's records to the "new" doctor, but no doctor is legally bound to relinquish a patient's records on demand.

The laws vary from state to state, but in all states, if a doctor believes that it would not be in the best interest of the patient to see his or her records, the doctor will not release them.

Major agencies explain 'the right stuff' for modeling

Associated Press

A top New York model can earn up to $500,000-a-year, but not every pretty girl has the right stuff.

The heads of the four top modeling agencies explain in the May issue of Harper's Bazaar what it takes to make the major leagues of modeling.

The four — Eileen Ford of Ford Models, John Casablancas of Elite, Frances Grill of Click, all in New York, and Nina Blanchard in Los Angeles agreed a model's career starts when she finishes high school at 17 or 18.

Minimum height is usually 5 feet, 8 inches. Models must be slim, but no longer need conform to a special style of beauty. Casablancas says a model can even have a crooked nose, "as long as it suits her face."

As for the California-girl look, Blanchard said there was still some call for the image in television but not in print ads.

"Anyway," she said, "the so-called California girls have mainly come from Sweden and Denmark."

There are many myths on how to get started.

"A neophyte does not need an expensive portfolio of photographs," Ford said. "I just ask her to send us a couple of color slides — full-length and a close-up head shot— that Mom or Dad could take. Those, along with information about her age and measurements, are all we require — except for a self-addressed, stamped envelope."

Grill warned girls not to change their appearance with a perm, hair coloring or plastic surgery before getting a reaction from a major agency. She wants Polaroid shots of girls looking natural: "No dramatic makeup; no attempt at a hyper-fashionable look."

Ford advises against joining a local agency-modeling school.

"You might get some catalog work in Chicago or Dallas. But if you're talking big time, you have to sign with a major — and that primarily means New York City — agency."

Blanchard in California added, "A girl can start out in Los Angeles, but generally she has to leave to really make it big."

New York City and Los Angeles agencies have special days for interviewing would-be models. They also scout the country. If in doubt about the authenticity of someone claiming to represent an agency, check by phone with the main office.

In modeling, a college degree can be a drawback.

"By the time she's finished college at about 21, a girl has already developed her own style and habits, and a self-consciousness that makes being a good model more difficult," Casablancas said.

One lure of modeling is money.

"In the second year, if she isn't earning $75,000, she should be thinking about doing something else," Casablancas said.

In Los Angeles, where there are fewer jobs, Blanchard says a model who isn't making $40,000 a year isn't making it.

Casablancas rates 20 of his 175 models as stars with annual incomes of about $250,000, and another 10 are superstars earning up to $500,000.

Even a superstar model must be careful about her cash.

"There are plenty who've blown their earnings," Ford told Harper's Bazaar, "either through bad advice or because they've allowed a guy to blow it for them."

DR. KURIANSKY

Submission not 'feminine'

By DR. JUDITH KURIANSKY

Q. I don't understand why this keeps happening to me. I'm ashamed because I should know better. But when I go out with a man I seem to get into situations where he expects me to be more intimate than I am comfortable with.

For example, I went out with a man I met at work, and we had a good time. After dinner, he seemed like he was going to pay, but then I ended up offering to pay my share and he only mildly protested and let me put my money down. I didn't want to owe him anything, but I was a little disappointed.

Then, outside he put his arm out for me to take it, and I did. When it came to saying goodnight, it was obvious he wanted me to kiss him. I did, even though I didn't want to. Then I was furious with myself. It reminds me of all the times I give in to men. Why do I keep doing this?

A. You are in conflict. You want to be in control of your own life. But deep down you are also stuck to your earlier habits of letting a man dominate you.

You need to be keenly aware of this conflict. Recognize these competing needs in all your actions. One part of you is the "1980s independent and assertive woman." You are not so desperate for attention that you give in to the old painful exchange of rewarding him with affection for picking up the tab. You'd rather pay your own way and not feel obligations.

But you still have ingrained attitudes. For example, you expect the man to pay for the night's entertainment. It makes you feel taken care of. And you expect yourself, as the woman, to fulfill the man's expectations. If you don't, you fear he will be angry. But then what? Will he leave you? Do you imagine that then you will truly feel abandoned and suffer?

TO GET OUT of this pattern, ask yourself: What really will happen to me if this man is angry that I have not indulged his demands? Am I going to fall apart? No, I do not need his approval so much that I risk losing my self-esteem. I can decide whether I want to kiss him, or go any further. I don't owe him anything. If I don't want to, I don't have to.

Examine why you act submissive in some situations, or play a role you might think of as traditionally "female." Is there something you get out of it? It's probably not just indulgence of the man's wishes. Perhaps in some way this behavior makes you feel gracious or truly "feminine."

Maybe you win his desire, so you get something else in return, like his continued interest. There are always hidden rewards to behaviors we continue but don't like. Maybe you get a sense of power or control over him by making him vulnerable to your flirting. For example, do you reason that money is power; men handle money; therefore they have the power, and the only power you can retaliate with is through sexuality.

When behavior follows a pattern, even if you don't like it, it is even more likely that you are reaping benefits. It is no coincidence that you always find yourself with men who take over. Your antennae are up for this type of man.

You must be attracted to men who are what you think is "strong."

CONSIDER YOUR responsibility in this repeating scenario. You may be giving these men mixed signals. On one hand, you act stand-offish and independent. And on the other, you give them the message to take over.

Some people do indeed impose their will no matter how the other person feels. But the majority will treat us in ways that we invite, even through subtle messages we are unaware of. If you don't want this pattern to continue, be sure you are giving a clear message.

Complain as they may, some people are invested in traditional male-female interactions because it proves to them they are desirable. Are you prepared to give up giving off sexual signals at the risk of not getting the message that your kisses are wanted?

There are always costs, as well as pay-offs to any stance you take in the dating scene. Make your decision on the basis of what makes you respect yourself. No behavior is worth self-denigration or resentment of others afterwards.

Q. My husband and I got into a big argument after we saw a movie the other night, and I wonder who was right. It was a film about a bunch of college students who went to a vacation resort — a lot like the 1960s film "Where the Boys Are" with wall-to-wall youngsters in cars on the highway and bikinis on the beach. But this 1980s version had them all sex hungry, taking their clothes off and hopping into bed. There were even comments like, "There are no virgins over 13 anymore."

I was infuriated and certainly don't want our children to see it. My husband thought it was silly but funny and said I was overreacting. We haven't been getting along together as well since, especially in our intimate life. Why should this silly movie have affected us so much? Don't you think I'm right anyway?

A. It is not as surprising to me as it is to you that one seemingly insignificant experience has triggered a rift between you and your husband. There clearly have been some unresolved issues between you which you both have been denying.

A fuller discussion about what you saw in the movie and what you both found funny or offensive will help highlight exactly what tensions exist.

Talk together about your own teen-age years and the activities you did or did not do and why. It is often easier in a discussion like this to start talking about the scenes in the film and then relate them to your own experiences.

Perhaps you knew girls in school who were considered "loose." You may be very happy that you had "higher moral standards." But was there any part of you that also imagined that they got the boys and you felt left out? Are you not just angry at your husband but all those boys from your youth who snubbed the girls who wouldn't "make out" or "go all the way"?

ENCOURAGE YOUR husband to compare his youth to these teens in the movie. Did he have fantasies of having the freedom to follow his impluses that they showed? Did he admire the boys who were that way?

Then try to relate these earlier experiences and attitudes to your sexual life now. Does he want to do things that you find unacceptable? Is there some heretofore hidden friction between you about certain behaviors? Are you imagining that "he only wants you for your body" and is he resenting not being able to be wanton?

Have courage to discuss these issues. Couples often resist such discussions because they fear their relationship may fall apart if such intimacies are brought out in the open. Yes, there may be tension until you resolve it, but the irony is that if you continued with such strong hidden differences, your intimacy would not be fulfilling anyway.

It is important that you confront these issues, not only for the sake of your relationship, but also for the sake of raising your children. Explore whether you have differing views on sexual messages, expectations or restrictions for them.

MANY COUPLES talk about what time their children should be home, which friends they don't like or whether they should go to college. But they don't talk about messages they should give their kids about sex. They often expect children of the same sex as they are to follow their own pattern.

As for your children seeing such films, you have every right as a parent to make your views known to them. And you have a responsibility to do that. But instead of attacking them or seeming to impose rigid rules, have a calm conversation. Use the opportunity to talk with them about your own, and their, values.

If they have seen the film already, have them articulate how they felt about the characters and the activities. You will get further by approaching such a conversation in the spirit of exploring attitudes then by passing judgments. Teen-agers are especially resistant to being attacked.

It is understandable that you would be offended by any presentation of women treated as objects. You would be even more upset if you perceive you are being treated that way by your husband. And it is certainly counterproductive for teen-age boys as well as to have role models of such behavior.

You also asked me if I thought you were right. As you may know, I don't like to pass judgments. The job of a psychologist is to help you examine your own morals, attitudes and feelings and come to your own conclusions. But in a few cases, I make an exception after you've done that.

ONE EXCEPTION is a situation in which someone is being abused — sexually, physically or emotionally. That is totally wrong. The other is when I feel young people are being taken advantage of, by being exposed to rampant sexuality or aggression.

I am convinced by the evidence that flagrant violence on the screen incites otherwise nonaggressive people to feel more hostile. And I am convinced that wanton sexuality on the screen can contribute to the already staggering rates of unwanted teen-age pregnancies and venereal diseases.

Teens are impressionable. They want to be part of the crowd. The more that random sex is presented as fun, the harder it is for them to say no.

There are those who say that it is unfair to expect movies to present socially desirable situations or to be growth-promoting experiences. Instead, they maintain, they are there to entertain or to reflect whatever is going on in society, good or bad.

I DISAGREE. I think movie makers have a responsibility not to reinforce negativity.

If you have strong reactions to a movie — either negative or positive — write to the producer directly. People often write to magazines and newspapers or to the company, but rarely to the producer. If someone upsets you, you should let that person know directly. And that goes for film producers.

'Hib disease' vaccine available

Hearst News Service

The day-care center has become mandatory for increasing numbers of working mothers, but it also is almost as good as a county hospital waiting room for spreading contagious disease.

And one of the most devastating of the communicable infections that strikes large numbers of children, particularly in day-care centers and kindergartens, is Haemophilus influenza type b. Nicknamed "Hib disease," the infection kills more than 1,000 preschool toddlers each year, infects up to 15,000 and is the foremost cause of acquired mental retardation in school children.

Now, however, a vaccine has been developed to fight Hib disease, and a campaign is underway to inoculate the preschool population.

"Children ranging in age from 6 months to 6 years are the favored targets for Hib disease," said Dr. Michael Linnan, a pathogen specialist at the National Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. "It usually strikes children under 6 and it can cause two severe infections, bacterial meningitis, which is an inflammation of the membranes covering the brain and spinal cord, and what's called epiglottitis, which is the inflamation of that elastic cartilage in the throat that closes to protect the airway during swallowing."

According to CDC statistics statstics, one in 200 American children will come down with Hib disease during the first five years of life.

Although the Haemophilus bacteria usually are found in the nose and throat (and can be spread by adults or children who have no symptoms of the disease), they also can enter the bloodstream to cause bacterial meningitis that afflicts about 60 percent of those children who get Hib disease. Epiglottitis, pneumonia and septic arthritis also can result from a Hib infection.

Linnan said that modern antibiotics have reduced the death rate, but by the time the disease is recognized total recovery may not be possible. After-effects include paralysis, hearing loss and neurological damage that can trigger learning disabilities.

"Moreover, Hib meningitis is the leading cause of acquired mental retardation in the U.S.," Linnan said.

In actuality, Haemophilus influenza type b is not an influenza virus, but was misnamed during the flu epidemic of 1892 when the germ was first isolated. It was not until the 1918 flu epidemic that Haemophilus was correctly identified as a bacteria.

The Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices of the CDC has recommended that the new vaccine — called b-Caspa-I — be given to to all children 24 months or older, and to children 18 months and older who are enrolled in day-care centers.

"The vaccine works, is safe, and will significantly reduce the number of Hib cases in the U.S.," said Cathy Schafer, a spokeswoman for Praxis Biologics, which developed the vaccine. "It's been licensed by the Food and Drug Administration after undergoing extensive clinical tests involving thousands of children, and it's been proven 90 percent effective, with minimal side-effects, mostly elevated tempratures, in only 1.5 percent." Other studies found that children who received the vaccine were protected for four years.

Linnan said the number of children and young infants attending day-care centers multiplies the already serious problem of Hib infection.

"For children 18 months and older, 70 percent of all Hib cases in the U.S. may be attributable to exposure in day-care centers."

Linnan said that researchers have found that a number of Haemophilus bacteria exist, and some are covered with a tough coating that protects them from the body's immune system. These capsular forms, he said, are called type b.

"They are virulent and associated with 95 percent of serious Hib infection," Linnan said.

Dr. Martin Myers, a Hib specialist and director of the division of infectious diseases at the University of Cincinnati's Children's Hospital, said doctors have difficulty diagnosing Hib disease because it is often masked by symptoms of a cold or earache.

"There are no specific symptoms of Hib early on, especially since infants and young children often can not express themselves," Myers said.

Quickly, however, the Hib-infected child becomes cross and irritable, loses his appetite and begins to vomit.

X-rays used to examine wound

Dr. Solomon

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter cut herself when she fell in some glass while running. When I took her to the emergency room, the doctor took care of the cuts and then had some x-rays taken. Since she obviously did not have any broken bones, I would like to know if you can see any purpose in the way my daughter was treated. — Mrs. C.S., Seattle, Wash.

Dear Mrs. S.: I would speculate that the x-rays were designed to locate fragments of glass that might otherwise have been overlooked. The x-rays therefore served a purpose even though there was no question about a broken bone.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would like to know what causes a person to sleepwalk. If a person does sleepwalk, does it necessarily mean that he or she has a serious mental disorder? — Mrs. T.U., Corpus Christi, Texas

Dear Mrs. U.: Dr. Terence D'Souza of Tulane University School of Medicine in New Orleans, says that most sleepwalkers have a family history of the disorder. It may also be due to illnesses that are associated with fever, the use of certain medications and fatigue.

As for your second question, sleepwalking is only rarely associated with serious mental disorders.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother-in-law is in her 70s and she has been living with us for the past few months. I really don't mind this, but what I do mind is that I think she is taking advantage of my wife. I feel it's one thing to provide help to a person who needs help, but it's another thing to do things for a person that the person could do for herself. My wife says that she knows that her mother is too demanding, but she still feels that she has to give in to her. Would you have any advice for us? — Mr. E.J., Chicago.

Dear Mr. J.: If the situation is as you describe it, then your wife is probably doing her mother a disservice by encouraging her to be more helpless than she actually is or has to be. Dr. Lawrence D. Breslau of Case Western Reserve University School of Medicine in Cleveland, points out that some elderly patients adopt an exaggerated attitude of helplessness, which, if permitted to continue, can only be reinforced to the detriment of both the patient and the family.

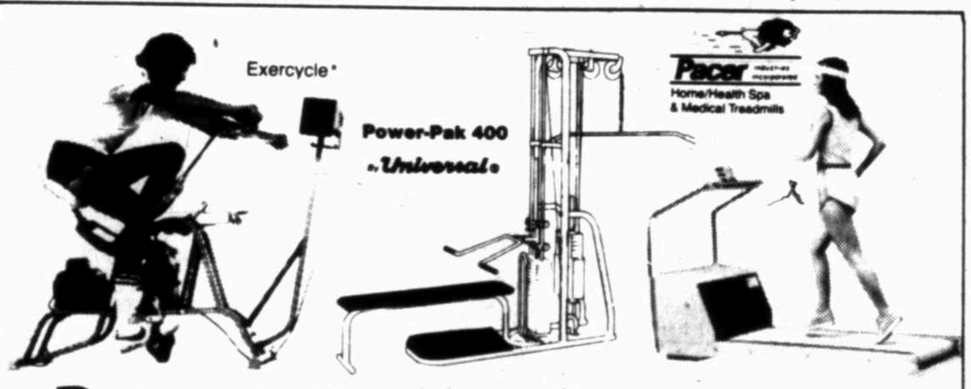

I don't like to speculate about a situation that I am unfamiliar with, but it is possible that your wife's inability to refuse to comply with her mother's unreasonable demands stems from feelings of guilt. What she should realize is that she is not helping her mother by doing for her what she can do for herself, and may in fact be hurting her by undermining whatever independence she does possess.

CHINA

Second violinist Eddie Stein performs at a banquet in Peking.

Sally Chisholm, above, tries out a Chinese-made instrument at a factory at the Shanghai Conservatory of Music.

For one, it was a visit that so moved her, she wasn't ready to return to the United States when the three-week toured ended.

For another, it was great to be home if, for no other reason, to watch the Chicago Cubs on TV.

But for all four members of the Midland-based Thouvenel String Quartet, the opportunity to perform in The People's Republic of China was an experience that will always be remembered, for positive and negative reasons.

The group, accompanied by 21 Midland supporters, toured China for three weeks in late March and early April and performed in several cities there.

"I always prepare myself for the worse," said Eugene Purdue, first violinist. "I went to China expecting large cavernous halls, noisy audiences that wouldn't understand the music and possibly even political ramifications to the music selections.

"But it wasn't that way. The halls were small enough and pleasant to play in. Once the people settled down they were very quiet. They seemed to appreciate what we were doing," he added.

Sally Chisholm, violist, agreed, but noted, "There is a definite difference in the listening habits of the average Chinese worker and fellow musicians. The workers came out of curiosity. In Shanghai (where the two performances were done at the country's best conservatory) the crowd was more knowledgeable because they were musicians."

Eddie Stein, second violinist, concurred on the differences in the two audiences and added, "The noise bothered me a little. Maybe we're spoiled because the Midland audiences are as quiet as any I've ever been around. Also, the flashing lightbulbs were bothersome."

All four agreed the Cultural Revolution had made a definite impact on music in China. That 10-year period (1966-1976) existed when radicals in the communist government seized control of the country and deemed anything culture- or arts-oriented evil. A systematic purging of those forces was conducted and most musicians (along with other members of the intelligentsia) were either persecuted or sent to rural areas where they performed menial tasks.

CHINA

"It was very apparent," said Ms. Chisholm. "We met a man, for example, who had won three international awards before the Cultural Revolution. Then suddenly he was a nobody."

Today, that man, like many musicians who suffered through the 10-year void, teaches music but no longer performs.

It was obvious in other ways, too. The Midland delegation was entertained by several Chinese musicians and, invariably, the performers were quite young; most of them were 17 years old or younger. Someone later explained the reason they were so young is because they had not had their careers interrupted by the Cultural Revolution.

"When we met musicians, they were either young or old," Ms. Chisholm said. Those following in-between were the most affected, she added.

Still, the Quartet members were impressed with their Chinese counterparts.

"Easterners are good technicians," Keith Robinson, cellist, said. "They're quick learners. In some ways they train better (than Westerners)."

But, according to Robinson, they have problems, too.

"The interpretation of the music is harder for them," he said. "The translation is not there. They need to continue to be exposed to the West."

The musical strides realized in China have come despite some obvious obstacles, not the least of which are poor instruments.

"There are no good instruments in the country," Purdue said, matter-of-factly. "There are only two Steinways in Shanghai (the country's largest and most musically-advanced city). We have more than that in this area (Midland).

"I thought they would drool over our instruments, but it didn't seem to compute," he added. "They have mostly new instruments. They need old ones."

In fact, all four members agreed that the four best instruments in China during the time they visited were theirs.

But in many ways it was China itself, especially the people, that impressed the Midlanders. In some cases it even changed their outlook on life. That was particularly true with Ms. Chisholm and Purdue, a husband-wife team.

"I would have stayed longer," Ms. Chisholm said. "I'll probably spend my time differently now. I'll try to help others more instead of just watching television. It makes me feel good directly from having been there."

Purdue agreed the trip made an immediate impact on him. He was particularly impressed with their society.

"People in our group kept asking why there was no crime there. No one could come up with an answer. I think it's their society that solves the problems.

"Here we expect some agency to solve our problems. We could learn from them. It was the most honest country I had ever seen. It's their people, not their government, that makes it possible," he said.

For Robinson and Stein the effect was somewhat different.

"I learned a lot about this country," Stein said. "It made me realize how progressive we are, and how much China wants to be. You can see it in the people and the modernization efforts there."

Robinson agreed.

"It strengthened my values, not changed them," he said. "I was eager to get back. I missed home. It was good get back and watch the Cubs on TV.

"China will be a reference point for me in the future. It had no direct effect on me."

Busy travel season foreseen

WASHINGTON (AP) — Summertime, while no longer synonymous with vacationtime, will see Americans take 126 million pleasure trips from June through August and spend $85 billion doing so, a travel industry study forecasts.

That would mark a 5 percent jump from the 120 million vacations taken a year ago, when pleasure travelers spent just under $80 billion, the U.S. Travel Data Center said in its annual outlook.

The center, a research arm of the nation's travel and tourism industry, based its projections on monthly telephone surveys of 1,500 adults. No percentage-of-error figure was given.

While two decades ago, more than half of all vacations were taken during the summer months, only 40 percent are done so now, the center's director, Douglas C. Frechtling, told a news conference.

This has occurred "particularly as winter vacation destinations have grown up — not only the Caribbean for sun, but also the ski resorts that have been developed for winter recreation," he said.

Changes in the population, including increasing numbers of single adults and childless couples whose vacation schedules aren't dictated by the school year, also are a key factor, Frechtling said.

"There's a lot more flexibility, and Americans are taking advantage of that," he said.

The 5 percent boost in vacations, if it develops, would mark a rebound from the modest increases of 2 percent last year and 1 percent in 1983 and an 11 percent plunge in 1982, when Americans were struggling out of an economic recession.

Frechtling, an economist, said the recovery for the leisure industry was slower than expected because Americans spent their extra money on cars and household goods, especially entertainment products such as video cassette recorders.

"This (buying) explosion drained away $100 billion more in discretionary spending power that could have financed a vacation travel boom but instead went to buy these items," he said.

"We believe that this pent-up demand is completely satisfied and that now consumers are free to spend their extra money on vacation travel in the coming summer months," he said.

As to where travelers are going, an ocean beach is the top intended destination. It was chosen by 37 percent of the respondents, up from 29 percent in last year's survey.

Vacationing in small towns or rural areas, which includes country resorts and campgrounds, also is planned by 28 percent of those surveyed, up from 22 percent a year ago. But those intending to vacation in cities declined.

By region, the South is projected to remain the travel destination, attracting 70 million visits. Residents of the Great Lakes states will be the most frequent travelers, taking 72 million trips, the study said.

Foreign travel also will increase by an average 5 percent as Americans take advantage of the strong purchasing power of the dollar abroad, the study said. It projected 5.7 million trips to Canada or Mexico, up 4 percent from the summer of 1984, and 3.2 million trips overseas, a 10 percent jump.

Other findings of the study:

— The average round-trip distance traveled will be 900 miles, up from 870 miles last year, but 48 percent of the trips will be less than 500 miles.

— The family automobile or recreational vehicle will be used on 84 percent of trips, down from 86 percent last year. Use of air travel will increase to 12 percent from 10 percent in 1984.

— Hotels and motels will be used as accommodations on 42 percent of trips.

Fine print brings question 'why leave home with (or without) it?'

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Read all the fine print on travel insurance policies concerning what could happen — accidental death, dismemberment, loss of sight, trip cancellation, bankruptcies, tour company defaults, hijackings, lost baggage, stolen passports, medical evacuation — and it is a wonder that anyone ever leaves home.

However, you should quickly realize that the insurance companies are getting richer daily be cause these things seldom happen to the vast majority of policy holders.

Like all insurance, travel policies take many forms. Simplified, they mean a guarantee against loss or damage to life and property by paying a premium in proportion to the risks involved.

When you look at the premium for flight insurance, say just $10 for $300,000 worth of insurance, you'll begin to get an idea of how safe air travel really is.

On the other hand, should you insure your luggage and personal effects for $500 during a two-week trip, the premium is double that of the $300,000 policy. Why? Lost, delayed and misdirected baggage is a big problem. It costs the airlines about $50 million a year just to search for missing and misdirected bags.

AT TODAY'S hectic travel pace, baggage insurance is a must, and not just for airline trips. On a typical three-week tour of Europe, for example, just one bag makes anywhere from 32 to 50 transfers in airports, buses, hotels and points in between.

Next, look at the wisdom of trip cancellation and trip interruption insurance: a good idea or a waste of money? The choice is yours, but remember that in the last six years, 120 airlines have gone out of business through bankruptcy or simply called it quits. Consider, too, that about 10,000 passengers are bumped from flights each summer month. This isn't even considering the main purpose most people take out such insurance — personal problems such as sudden illness, accident, etc. With those odds, trip cancellation-trip interruption insurance is almost a must these day.

Buying travel insurance is easy. Buying the right policy is not so easy. The problem lies not so much in the legalese of the policies, which is getting better, but simply in the fact that there are so many different coverages, so many variations from so many companies that selecting the right policy at the right price is a challenge.

BEFORE LOOKING for more coverage, check those policies you already have: You may be protected through existing homeowners, tenant, life or other personal insurance. Or perhaps you have a group policy that covers some travel aspects that you may have forgotten or overlooked. These could be through a lodge or association, a company or business policy, etc. Probe these carefully before buying more (perhaps unnecessary) insurance for travel.

There are four major types of insurance available for today's traveler: trip cancellation-interruption, baggage and personal-effects insurance, accident-sickness protection, medical evacuation.

Trip Cancellation and Interruption — A good policy should cover: any loss of deposit if you are forced to cancel your trip prior to departure; any additional expenses if you are required to postpone or miss an initial original flight for a more expensive alternate; reimbursement in case of bankruptcy or default of any airline, cruise line or tour operator; reasonable expenses should your travel be delayed or should you be forced to interrupt your trip. The best policies also cover you for additional expenses required if a travel companion cancels and you must pay higher occupancy rates at hotels, etc.

Baggage Insurance — Your policy should pay for baggage and personal effects if they are lost, stolen or damaged; provide a sum (usually $100) for emergency purchase of essential items if baggage is delayed more than 24 hours. Note: There are many limitations and exclusions among the many different baggage policies offered, so check these carefully.

ACCIDENT AND Sickness Protection — Insurance should pay a specific maximum amount selected by you for loss of life, limb or sight. Some policies have a double indemnity clause for travel in a public conveyance or common carrier. It should pay medical expenses for injury or illness while traveling. Some even include ski injuries and dental emergency treatment. In others, the language is ambiguous. Note: There are a number of exclusions and limitations in these policies. The big one is that no company will pay for treatment during your trip for any illness you've suffered 90 days prior to departure.

While travelers with Blue Cross-Blue Shield or other medical plans covering foreign destinations may not wish additional travel accident-sickness protection, be aware that Medicare coverage does not include accidents or illness that occur outside of the United States.

Also you should learn what type of coverage is offered by the various travel illness-sickness policies.

Medical Evacuation — In case of serious illness, your insurance should pay for emergency medical care and transfer to the closest medical facility. If required, it should also pay for proper air transport to your home.

ALL OF these types of travel insurance are found, in one form or another, within the four major travel insurance packages offered by the three principal sellers of such policies. These are: Tele-Trip, from Mutual of Omaha; Travel Insurance Pak by the Travelers Corp., and Travel Guard and Travel Guard Plus from Sentry Insurance.

While the basics are found in all the packages, there are sufficient differences in rates, limits of liability, etc., so read the policy carefully.

With three of the four package plans (not Travel Guard Plus), you can choose which of the segments you want — baggage, cancellation and interruption, accident and sickness, medical evacuation.

You may, for example, just want the baggage and trip cancellation interruption portions and opt to skip the others.

With the same three packages, you then select the maximum amount of insurance desired for both baggage and travel accident sickness, plus the number of days.

To give you an idea of what a typical rate package might include and cost, let's take a 14-day trip with complete coverage:

THIS WOULD include $500 for loss-delay of baggage; $1,000 in pre- and post-departure cancellations and trip interruptions; $25,000 accidental death; $2,500 accident or injury medical expenses, and $10,000 for emergency evacuation.

Average cost for this package would run from $75 to $88 depending on the company and the rate structures.

While this article has concentrated chiefly on the comprehensive travel insurance programs sold through travel agencies, others are offered through senior associations and groups, some independently. One is Carefree, provided through ARM Coverage Inc., 9 East 37th St., New York, N.Y. 10016.

Addresses for the headquarters of the other programs are:

Travel Insurance Pak, Ticket & Travel Service, The Travelers Corp., 3600 Wilshire Blvd., Room 864, Los Angeles 90010.

Tele-Trip, Mutual of Omaha, West Dodge Station, P.O. Box 31685, Omaha, Neb. 68131.

Travel Guard, Sentry Insurance, 1800 North Point Drive, Stevens Point, Wis. 54481.

In addition to these companies providing comprehensive travel insurance packages, there are almost a score more specializing in major medical emergency aid and insurance for international travel.

Yugoslavian city has bargain prices

By JOHN SINOR
Copley News Service

DUBROVNIK, Yugoslavia — To sit at a sidewalk cafe in this ancient walled city on a street of steps no wider than a car is to taste the full flavor of the Old World.

We sipped slivovitz, a local brandy with just the hint of plum flavoring, for 14 cents a shot and discussed the photos we had been taking of the city.

Dubrovnik is a photographer's paradise with its cobblestoned streets, ancient cathedrals, statuary and beautiful little bay.

But take your pictures before you take your brandies. They will be more likely to be in focus.

Slivovitz may be cheap, but it is far from being weak.

The walls of the city were built in the seventh century, although the city itself has been destroyed by earthquakes and the resultant avalanches a couple of times since then.

It has been rebuilt each time, stronger than ever.

Yugoslavia is a socialist country, but it is not run by Russia. The late Marshal Tito boldly said his country could get by quite nicely without the U.S.S.R., thank you.

Earlier in the day, when we were following a local guide along the crowded streets, he gathered us up into a tight little group and said, almost in a whisper:

"Although the communist government will not let us fly our real flag, we do have one."

Then, from his briefcase, he produced a white flag with a picture of Dubrovnik's patron, St. Blaise, on it.

He may have committed a minor crime by showing it to us, but he did so with great pride.

Statues of St. Blaise and even his relics — a little grisly but hidden by precious stones — are on display quite openly.

A statue of another hero of Dubrovnik's past, Orlando the medieval knight, stands in the city's main square.

Orlando gained his glory by helping save the city from Arab pirates in the eighth century. He went up in stone in 1418.

For many years after that, the distance between the statue's raised fist and his elbow was the official measurement in Dubrovnik.

A housewife buying dress material would say, "Give me eight Orlando's elbow of that."

CNS Photo

This open-air market is in the walled city of Dubrovnik.

There are other shopping surprises in Dubrovnik than the brandy. I could have bought a 100 percent wool sport coat for under $30 and a three-piece suit, again all wool, for about $50.

There also are good buys in perfumes, jewelry, woodwork, and arts and crafts.

Dubrovnik has been called "the Pearl of the Adriatic" and is becoming more and more popular as a tourist attraction.

Venice very Italian

Copley News Service

The quiet of a walk deep in the maze of back-sdreet Venice is suddenly interrupted by a group of men standing outside the market, shouting, pointing fingers and shaking fists at each other.

To a stranger, it appears the action might turn into an old-fashioned street fight, but the townfolk know better.

Isabella Parmiggiani, a 20-year-old Milan college student, reassures a visitor this is no prelude to an out-and-out brawl, but a common occurrence throughout her homeland.

"They are just discussing," she says, with a casual shrug, "politics, the weather, wine. It is just talk."

Of such moments are the charms of Venice revealed as you stroll the narrow, winding back streets:

Around a corner, a flagstone street leads to a hidden courtyard and a former centuries-old palace that serves as an apartment where a mother hangs our her children's clothes to dry.

Wind deeper into the labyrinth and you are certain to get lost. But, oh, what a way to explore this city of 117 islands, 150 canals and more than 400 bridges.

Walk through a narrow passageway and view a scene out of the 13th century. Boys and girls are playing soccer. In a nearby smoke-filled tavern, several men are sitting at a table playing cards. Women are buying fresh vegetables in a corner market where racks of cheese hang from the ceiling.

Family vacations survivable

Associated Press

The family vacation can be a great getaway — or a disaster — depending on how it is planned.

"The family vacation is a delicate social event," said Paul Rosenblatt, Ph.D., University of Minnesota professor of family social science, in the June issue of Redbook. "The rest of the year family members have built-in breaks from each other — they go to work, to school, they visit with friends.

"But on vacation, people have to spend every minute of every day having fun together — or they think they do. It can be very stressful."

Another aspect of the problem was pointed out by Robert Feiner, Ph.D., director of clinical training at Alabama's Auburn University.

"What's bad in a family can get worse on vacation," he said. "You see your mate in a new light, and it's not always a flattering one."

Feiner's point is backed up by the Family and Children's Service Agency in Minneapolis, which gets a record number of requests for counseling the day after Labor Day.

Vacation tension can be eased by following some simple "Don'ts":

— Don't expect too much.

— Don't overschedule. "People try to do too much," Feiner said. "They turn the vacation into an endurance contest."

— Don't turn it into a guilt trip.

— Don't think money buys fun.

— Don't neglect your spouse.

This 74-year-old home will be on the Gingerbread Trail June 1-2 in Waxahachie.

Waxahachie's 'Gingerbread Trail' schedule set

From Staff Reports

The Ellis County Museum Inc. will sponsor the 17th annual Gingerbread Trail June 1-2 in Waxahachie. The Gingerbread Trail and Tour of Homes, organized by the museum, is designed to further interest in historic heritage.

"Gingerbread" is a type of architecture associated with elaborate and fanciful ornamentation prevalent in the 19th century. Five homes and one building displaying this type of architecture are on this year's tour: the homes of Mrs. and Mrs. J.C. Howle, 1107 W. Marvin, built in 1908; Joe and Marijo Williams, 807 W. Marvin, built in 1911; Mahoney-Thompson home, 604 W. Main, built in 1904; Glenn and Dean Morton, 210 S. Hawkins, built in 1887; and Bill and Margaret Spalding, 207 W. Hawkins, built in 1870; and the Hancock Building, owned by Dr. and Mrs. Richard Redington, 205 S. College, built in 1890.

Tours will be conducted from 10 a.m.-6 p.m. both days. Also open for tours will be Ellis County Courthouse, Ellis County Museum, Fine Arts Museum, Sims Library, Singleton Plaza, Hawkins Spring and St. Paul's Episcopal Church. In Getzendaner Memorial Park visitors will view the historic Chautauque Auditorium.

Tickets are now on sale at Citizens National Bank, First National Bank, Waxahachie Bank and Trust Company, Waxahachie Chamber of Commerce and other financial institutions in Waxahachie. Tickets may also be ordered by mail from the Gingerbread Trail, P.O. Box 11, Waxahachie 75165. For more information call (214) 937-3118, (214) 937-3996 or (214) 937-2390.

California's desert spectacular

By BURR SNIDER
Hearst News Service

John Steinbeck wrote that California has only two seasons, spring and summer, but it definitely was neither we encountered at our Joshua Tree camp. We had driven through a classic winter storm, and once in the desert had set up camp in a freezing rain and a wind that cut through you like a razor and turned your hands blue in minutes. The cold, bad enough during the day, got very serious indeed once the sun went down.

We had come for the spring blooming of the desert flowers and for the great bouldering to be had on the fantastic Joshua Tree rocks, for which this time of year is usually good. You can climb here in the summer, but you have to do it early in the morning before that sun cranks up like a furnace to cook you.

Those marvelous rocks are huge, sensuous, pneumatic monsters, so full and fat they look as if they'll burst their skins. Boxcar-sized, they were stacked and tilted in crazy piles by immense geological forces eons ago. Tawny tan in color and wind-and rain whipped to a wonderful smoothness, they put you in mind of Henry Moore's sculptures.

We finally got a tent up and a camp established, and we expected the wind to die down when darkness fell. But a real squall was on the desert and some gusts were hitting upwards of 50 mph. This made cooking a tedious chore, but we built a roaring fire, nipped medicinally off the tequila and heated up some pot roast and noodles before crawling into the tent and our sleeping bags.

VERY LATE at night, the wind finally let off for a few minutes and I bundled up and walked out into the desert a couple hundred yards to watch in the vast silence the constellations wheel across the sky.

A fire still burnt at another campsite. It looked like an atavistic scene out of prehistory, dancing red light and animated shadows thrown up on to a huge monolith of a boulder, light which probably could be seen for 15 miles in the desert flatness. A fat sliver of a moon and every star in the universe was visible above the godforsaken desert desolation, quiet and cold as death, but teeming somehow with the very soul of life.

The wind was back again in the morning, hammering at us, gusting tents out of their stakes, toppling cooking stuff, cutting through clothing. Even the desert sun wasn't strong enough to take the chill off. Some climbers were already high up on the boulders, but we didn't feel a strong need for such extreme exposure on this chill morning. We drove north and east through the town of Twentynine Palms and found a trail that took us to an oasis called Fortynine Palms, a true anomaly amidst all that barren waste. Surrounded by palm trees, cottonwoods and lush ferns, a little spring-fed several shallow pools with precious, sustenance-giving water.

By the next day, conditions were mellow enough for climbing. The nice thing about Joshua Tree is that there are no long, arduous approach hikes to the climbing routes. You roll out of your bag, eat a leisurely breakfast and stroll over to the rock. You can just boulder around for small-time kicks or get more serious and rope up for some real vertical thrills. Or you can just throw up a top rope for protection and play around with climbing problems without fear of falling and then stroll back to camp for lunch.

The sunset, now on a warmer desert, was an outpouring of color across the entire sky, hot purples and fiery corals exploded above the blue mountains before darkness advanced and turned all to a cold, blue crystal clarity. In the midst of it we grilled steaks, cooked up some spuds and finished off the last of the tequila to ease our aching muscles.

Getting there: To reach Joshua Tree National Monument, take Interstate 10 east from Los Angeles until you hit Highway 62. Drive north to the town of Joshua Tree from which you can enter the Monument, or continue on to Twentynine Palms, where there also is an entrance.

For campers: No water or firewood is available in the Monument at Joshua Tree, so campers must provide their own. The Park Service provides campsites only on a non-reservable, first-come, first-serve basis.

Exceptions are groups of 15 or more who may reserve campsites by contacting: The United States Dept. of the Interior, National Park Service, Joshua Tree National Monument, 74485 Palm Vista Drive, Twentynine Palms, Calif. 92277, (619) 367-7511.

Rose Festival will open this month

New York Times News Service

When the Portland Rose Festival opens May 31, there will be more blooming in and around the Oregon metropolis than flowers.

True, the annual Rose Show, scheduled for June 5 and 6 at the Lloyd Center, is billed as the largest and oldest rose show in the country — dating back to the 1880's.

But the festival, running through June 16, comprises more than 50 events. Among its highlights are the traditional Grand Floral Parade, beginning at 10 A.M. June 8. But as parades go during the festival, this is only one. There is the Starlight nighttime parade in downtown Portland June 1, preceded by the Starlight Run, drawing thousands of amateur runners — many in costumes — tracing a 4.25-mile course. And there is also the Junior Parade, on June 5, featuring more than 10,000 children and their homemade floats.

More information and brochures containing schedules and ticket application forms are available from the Portland Rose Festival Association (220 N.W. Second Avenue, Portland, Ore. 97209; 503-227-2681).

Vaccine not widely necessary

ATLANTA (AP) — Not every American should be immunized with meningitis vaccine, which is recommended for stopping outbreaks and protecting some travelers, according to the national Centers for Disease Control.

A vaccine is now available for several different types of meningitis, but not for "serogroup B," the type most common in this country. Work on a vaccine for that type is continuing, the CDC said recently in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

Meningitis is swelling of the membranes around the brain or spinal cord.

The currently available vaccine is recommended to control outbreaks of some types of meningitis or to protect travelers to areas hard-hit by meningitis, including parts of sub-Saharan Africa, the CDC said.

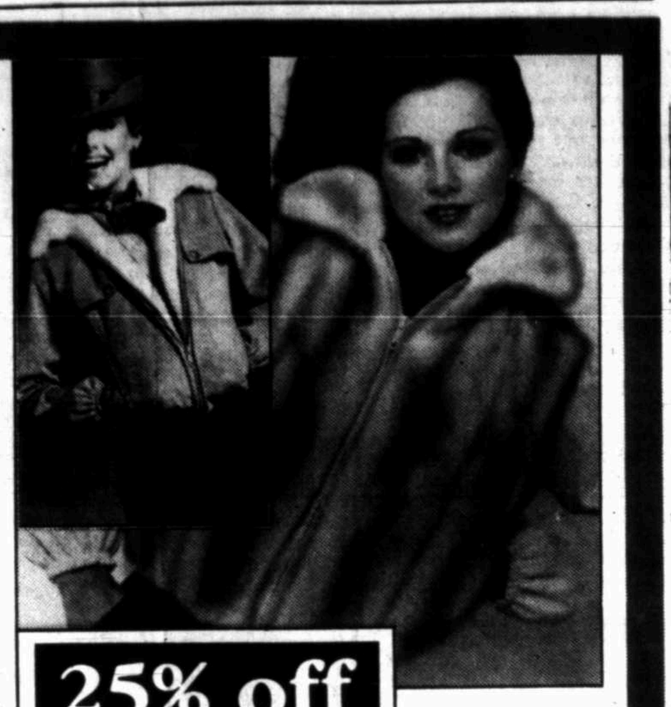

But most Americans do not need immunization, and many meningitis patients are children who are too young to benefit from a vaccine anyway, the agency said.

Treatment centers may be using unreliable lab tests

CHICAGO (AP) — Methadone treatment centers across the nation waste up to $75 million a year on unreliable lab tests for the presence of certain drugs in urine samples, researchers say in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

In an evaluation of 13 laboratories serving 262 centers in 26 states, approximately 90 percent of these labs failed to find cocaine, morphine and barbiturates in a large percentage of 100 samples, the researchers said.

As a result, treatment centers may be getting a false picture of how effective they are in combating drug abuse, said the researchers at the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, who conducted the study in 1981.

Passports are always useful

By 'GENE BURKE
Copley News Service

Q. I plan to visit American Samoa for a few months and may stay there permanently. Do I need a passport?

A. If you stay more than 30 days, you must obtain an entry permit from the Governor or Attorney General, Pago Pago, American Samoa, 96920. Your application must state length of stay and reason for visit. While you do not need a U.S. passport, I recommend that you secure one since you most likely will want to travel to other areas in the Pacific if you plan to prolong your stay or reside permanently in American Samoa. All travelers need proof of citizenship, so if you have a passport it will fill that requirement.

Q. What kind of a passport do I need to work in a foreign country, and is a visa necessary?

A. Your regular U.S. passport is issued to be valid for 10 years for all purposes, and all countries. Visa information and requirements must be secured by the traveler. You should contact the representatives of the foreign countries you plan to visit or stay in for work purposes. These offices are listed in the Congressional Directory that is available in most libraries or telephone directories.

Q. The country I plan to visit does not require a passport of U.S. citizens, I understand, but does want proof of citizenship. What should I take with me if I don't have a passport?

A. You may need a birth certificate, a naturalization certificate or other document. It is best to check with the appropriate embassy or consulate for the requirements.

If you wish personalized information about passport requirements, send your questions to 'Gene Burke, c/o Passport Agency, 11000 Wilshire Blvd., Room 13100, Los Angeles, Calif. 90024.

Burke is consultant to the assistant secretary for consular affairs at the State Department.

Senderens' newest restaurant in Paris showing signs of success

New York Times News Service

Like a crisp, totally Parisian breath of fresh air, chef Alain Senderens opened his new restaurant — Lucas Carton-Alain Senderens — the first week of May. Early signs, at least, suggest it's going to be a great success.

Senderens' new restaurant — housed in one of the finest settings in Paris, the turn-of-the-century Lucas-Carton on the Place de la Madeleine, just up from the Place de la Concorde and a few blocks from the Opera — replaces his previous establishment, the Archestrate, which is now closed and up for sale.

"I guess you could say all we left was the wood," remarked Senderens of the work that's been going on at the landmark Lucas-Carton over the past three months. In reality, it was less a renovation than a thorough housecleaning.

The new Lucas-Carton is a tasteful blend of old and new: Crisp white ceilings, walls and linens, and sprays of bright spring flowers serve as a stunning backdrop for the undulating, carved wooden panels, expanses of mirrors, beveled glass room dividers and spotless windows that give out onto the place. A few discreet spotlights in the ceilings blend quietly with the Art Nouveau light fixtures.

For Senderens, it's not a new home, but a return to a familiar one. Just 21 years ago this month he left his work as a member of the kitchen brigade at Lucas-Carton, later setting up his own restaurants, working his way up to the top Michelin rating, three stars for Archestrate.

Although the menu at Lucas-Carton is basically the same as that served at the Archestrate, the new kitchens are about five times the size.

A meal at Lucas Carton-Alain Senderens costs about 600 francs (about $63) a person, including wine and service. Fixed-price meals may be had for about $43, not including cheese and wine, or about $53 including cheese and wine; these prices do not include the 15 percent service charge. The restaurant, at 9 Place de la Madeleine, Paris 8, is closed Saturday, Sunday and holidays. Reserve several days in advance for lunch, several weeks for dinner. Telephone: 265.22.90.

Thousand Islands' fairy tale castle open to visitors

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

Boldt Castle is a fairyland castle in a fairy-tale setting, but unfortunately this story didn't have a happy ending.

George C. Boldt, an immigrant from Prussia, arrived in the United States in 1864 with big dreams but no money. In a classic rags-to-riches tale, he worked a menial job in a hotel into a mighty empire, becoming owner of the legendary Waldorf Astoria Hotel in New York City and the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel in Philadelphia.

His dream was to build a castle for his princess, his young wife, Louise. It was to be the grandest castle ever built, modeled after the 16th century German castles on the Rhine River, which he had seen when he was a child.

EVER THE ROMANTIC, he decided to give the castle to his true love on her birthday, Feb. 14, Valentine's Day. He bought an island in the middle of the St. Lawrence River, the Thousand Islands region between New York and Ontario. He had the island reshaped into a heart, and called it Heart Island.

He employed 300 workmen for two years to build his magnificent $2 million, six-story, 120-room castle overlooking the river. The family would come out to the island in summer to picnic and play, and stayed in the playhouse until the castle was completed.

Then, just before the castle was completed, tragedy struck. His wife, the love of his life, died suddenly in January 1904. Boldt sent out an urgent telegram to the workmen to stop work and go home.

Boldt never returned to his castle, and the building was never completed. Since then, the ravages of nature and vandals have torn and tattered the mansion.

If there is any joy in this story, it is the happiness this castle provides to the thousands of tourists who visit the island and the partially completed castle every year. It is now owned by the Thousand Islands Bridge Authority, and is being restored to its former glory.

THE ONLY WAY to get to the castle is by boat. But that is no problem because numerous excursion boats ply the waters of the islands every day in summer. They leave from Alexandria Bay, N.Y., as well as three cities on the Canadian side. They include an unlimited stop at Heart Island, as well as one or two hours cruising the beautiful island-studded river.

Once on the island, visitors are free to roam wherever they want, poking into deserted buildings, walking through half-finished formal gardens and exploring the castle. It is like peering into a man's dreams.

The first structure on the island was the playhouse, or Alster Tower, a mansion in its own right. This summer home was used by the family until the mansion was to be completed.

In the basement was a two-lane bowling alley, and the first floor contained a ballroom called the Shell Room because of its unusual ceiling. There also was a billiard room, grill, library, cafe and kitchens, with bedrooms on the second floor.

Although the building is closed now, by peeking through a window the curious can still see the remains of the bowling alley and exquisite interior details.

BOLDT HAD a lagoon built halfway around the island, with a landscaped promenade skirting it. He built an ornate Arch of Triumph, which still stands, serving as the water entrance to the lagoon.

He built a powerhouse on a tiny islet connected to the main island by a small bridge. It was built in the guise of a medieval castle. Inside was the generating plant that would supply electricity for lighting, to pump water for domestic use and to run the motors for the elevator and other machines in the castle.

But it is the castle that attracts the most attention. Boldt brought craftsmen from all over the world to create his chateau. He imported spotless white Carrara marble from Italy for the fireplaces, and had mosaics and tapestries imported from Europe to decorate the building. The granite for the building was brought from his quarries on a nearby island.

Visitors get an eerie feeling walking into the castle today. Some of the intricately carved ceilings can still be seen, but they are peeling and falling. The magnificent marble stairway rising through the middle of the house was never completed, and is now a makeshift wooden one.

Naked light bulbs hang by exposed wires. In places, the walls have been defaced by vandals. Scattered around the house are rusted radiators and half-finished bathrooms. There is no elevator in the empty shaft.

A STAIRWAY LEADS down to the basement level. Here is Boldt's elegant indoor swimming pool in a circular room, now just a a muddy pond in the basement. Also in the basement were to be a lounge, organ mechanical area, boiler and passageways leading to other buildings on the grounds, so servants and supplies could be moved about the island without the family having to see them.

The dining room on the first floor has been reconstructed and filled with antiques to show the opulence in which the family would have lived once they moved into the castle, which was to serve only as their summer home. The ballroom now serves as a theater where visitors can watch a slide show about this unusual house and the man who built it.

Entrance to the castle today is through the billiard room because the main entrance is closed. The first floor also contained a library, reception room, Boldt's offices and the grand hallway and staircase that spiraled upward through a skylighted entrance hall.

The second and third floors were mainly bedroom suites, each with bathrooms, closets and fireplaces. Boldt could invite 50 guests to spend the night in his home, besides family members.

THE FOURTH FLOOR contained several more bedroom suites, as well as servants' quarters, a reading room and an observation platform. Stairs led from here to the Tower Room, the top floor of the chateau used for entertaining.

Nearly all the rooms in the house were all but finished, only lacking the final details and furniture to make them complete. But that was not to be.

Fate intervened, and Boldt's dream became a nightmare. His Sleeping Beauty would never awaken in her fairy castle.

But for modern-day visitors, Boldt Castle is a dream come true.

The six-story dream castle of George C. Boldt stands deserted and unfilled on an island in the middle of the St. Lawrwence River. The 120-room medieval castle was to be a present for his wife, who died just before the mansion was to be completed in 1904. Boldt never returned to the castle.

Grimm legacy revisited

New York Times News Service

Once upon a time — 200 years ago, to be exact — there was born in the city of Hanau on the Main River, just to the east of Frankfurt in Germany, a child named Jacob Grimm. And the following year, he was joined by a brother, Wilhelm.

In the course of their lives, the brothers traveled north: to Steinau, where their father was town magistrate; to Marburg, where the brothers attended the university; and to Kassel, where they lived and worked for most of their lives.

Their legacy to the world is its most famous and beloved fairy tales: Snow White, Sleeping Beauty, Little Red Riding Hood and Hansel and Gretel, among others — translated into 140 languages and told and retold to generations of children.

This year and next, the 200th anniversary of the Brothers Grimm will be observed with festivals, fairs, concerts, parades, exhibitions, symposiums and other events in Germany, especially along the 370-mile Fairy Tale Road between Hanau and Bremen. In Steinau, for example, the 400-year-old Grimm family home now serves as the tourist office. And on weekend afternoons throughout the year, fairy tales are dramatized in the 140-seat Steinau marionette theater.

To the east of Marburg in Asfeld, stands a statue of a child wearing 14 petticoats and a hat that resembles a cupcake. The hat — still worn by many Alsfeld girls on feast days — is the authentic "red riding hood."

And in Kassel, a focus of many of the Grimm bicentennial observances, there stands the Brothers Grimm Museum, with first editions, early illustrations, family portraits and other exhibits devoted to the brothers.

More information and a brochure titled "Fairy Tale Germany" are available from the German National Tourist Office (747 Third Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017; 212-308-3300).

Resorts offer activities for children

KIAMESHA LAKE, N.Y. (AP) — For single parents or young working couples with children, vacations are a time to reaffirm the meaning of family and to provide "R and R" for fatigued adults, says an expert in the recreational field.

"A growing number of resorts are answering the needs of parents by providing a structured camp-like vacation environment for children along with activities for parents," notes Michael Catalano, a children's camp director.

"Parents will be able to do more than be 24-hour baby sitters, can have the fun and personal time they've looked forward to all year, minus the guilt of leaving Junior behind, thanks to the care-giving and activity offerings of a family resort," he adds.

Catalano, director of the year-round children's camp at The Concord resort in the Catskill Mountains region of New York State, offers these tips for parents considering a family resort vacation:

— Read the brochure outlining the resort's activities for kids, explaining how it works to your children before you arrive so it's no surprise when you enroll them in the camp.

— If you need any additional information, don't hesitate to call the children's activity director, who should willingly tell you the counselors' qualifications. If you have any lingering doubts about the program or staff, request a personal meeting when you arrive.

— Become familiar with the camp's safety measures: is there a formal registration system that enables the camp to keep an accurate "head count" of children in its charge at all times? Does the camp offer a "permission to leave" clause by which an older child can come and go at will? If your child has a health or behaviorial problem or needs periodic medication, is the camp prepared to deal with it — and how?

— If your child is of nursery age, is there at least one camp administrator with formal experience in child development or a related health profession?

— Does the camp require a signed medical release that will ensure prompt attention to injury even as the parents are being notified?

— What are the camp's age divisions, counselor-to-camper ratio and ability to give special attention to a particular child, when necessary? If too many children or too wide an age span are lumped together, will your child's attention span and skill level be compromised — as well as his desire to continue at the camp?

— How does the camp structure a child's day? Is it jam-packed with activities beginning right after breakfast and continuing at a breakneck pace through the afternoon? Or are there restful periods, too, when a child can discover the calming side of vacationing? Is the schedule flexible enough to accommodate a tired or unhappy child long enough to get him back to normal? Can parents and children take their meals as a family if desired?

— Does the camp attempt to engage pre-teens and teens in activities that are wholesome and diverting — under the guidance of watchful professional caretakers?

— How many hours of the day can a family spend as a family — and if a relaxed parent feels so inclined, can a child be picked up early from camp for some extra togetherness without upsetting the camp schedule?

— Does the resort offer additional baby-sitting facilities to enable parents to enjoy a quiet late supper after the kids are tucked in bed?

Steinbeck's Cannery Row no longer exists

By MILES CORWIN
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MONTEREY, Calif. — John Steinbeck described Cannery Row 40 years ago as a "poem, stink, a grating noise" and said it was an amalgamation of "splintered wood, chipped pavement, weedy lots, junk heaps, sardine canneries of corrugated iron, honky-tonks and whorehouses."

Steinbeck would have a difficult time recognizing his old haunts if he and his drinking partner, Ed (Doc) Ricketts, whom he used as a character in a number of books, wandered about the Row today.

Instead of honky-tonks and whorehouses, there are gift shops and antique stores. Instead of junk heaps and weedy lots, there are hotels and restaurants. And on the site of the last fish cannery to operate in the area, there is the biggest attraction on the Row, the lodestone that is bringing tourists in record numbers to Monterey — the $40 million Monterey Bay Aquarium, which opened in October.

Steinbeck, a former marine biology student, would appreciate the aquarium, said Alicia Harby-De Noon, who used to pal around with Steinbeck and Ricketts and now lives on Cannery Row above her antique store. But if Steinbeck saw the traffic and parking problems caused by the aquarium, she said, he'd "turn tail and run."

MANY MONTEREY residents have the same ambivalence. The aquarium is a tremendous educational resource for the community, they say, and attracts millions of dollars in tourist revenue. The traffic and parking problems near the aquarium, however, are bedeviling some local merchants by driving away regular customers and disturbing many residents who fear that their quiet, scenic city may never be the same again.

The aquarium, some residents say, has been too successful. The facility's administrators estimated that attendance there during the first year would be about a million people, and the city agreed to provide parking for the extra visitors.

The aquarium, however, drew a million visitors in only five months and the city moved too slowly to provide enough parking for even the original estimate.

The aquarium is the most technically sophisticated and the largest in the country. The concept is ambitious, the design is magnificent and some exhibits — such as a three-story-high tank that contains a living kelp forest — give visitors a glimpse into a world previously accessible only to scuba divers.

Without any advertising, the aquarium began attracting huge crowds from the day it opened — up to 14,000 a day on weekends. The visitors jammed the streets and took up all the available parking slots within blocks of the aquarium.

Since the aquarium opened, inquiries to the Monterey Peninsula Visitors & Convention Bureau about accommodations and other tourist-related matters have tripled. Restaurateurs have been delighted: Business has increased by about 40 percent on Fisherman's Wharf.

BUT MANY MERCHANTS in the neighborhood near the aquarium suffered a dramatic drop-off in business. Many of their regular customers were scared off by the traffic and absence of parking and so shopped elsewhere.

Harby-De Noon, whose antique store was once a market that Steinbeck used as a model for Lee Chong's grocery in the book "Cannery Row," said her business is off about 25 percent. Her store, like Lee Chong's, is "not a model of neatness" but a "miracle of supply." If the traffic problems do not abate by summer, she said, she has little hope of selling much from her vast supply of bric-a-brac and antiques.

"The city simply left the merchants floundering," said Harby-De Noon, a voluble, flamboyant woman who was invited to the premiere of the 1982 movie "Cannery Row" but walked out in the middle because it was not true to the book.

"I have to make appointments with customers early in the morning because they won't dare come by here later. I dread to think what the summer will be like."

Merchants and residents blame city officials for not providing for the crush of people. City officials blame the previous administration, which was in office when the aquarium was planned. The previous administration blames the unexpected success of the aquarium.

Special employee benefits rare

CLEVELAND (AP) — Few American companies provide employee benefits for day care or financial planning or club-recreation memberships, according to a survey by Management Recruiters International.

Only one-third of the 1,979 companies polled offer at least one of the three benefits.

The most popular of these is recreation-exercise facility or club membership, followed in turn by financial planning and day care.

"Large companies by a better than 2-to-1 margin are more apt to provide at least one of the three benefits," says the search firm. "About half of the companies with a workforce of more than 1,000 employees offer at least one of these benefits, contrasted with benefits given by 22 percent of companies with fewer than 100 employees."

COLOR FOR SERENITY
Avoid bold and animated colors in rooms intended for study and rest. Soft and muted colors add a sense of relaxation and provide a restful backdrop for work or study. The same is true of a kitchen. Shocking colors tend to slow down the pace of food preparation and clean-up. Analyze the use of time of a specific room. If it is strictly a daytime room, then evaluate the color plan in terms of natural lighting. An evening room, on the other hand, will be viewed mainly in artificial light. Test colors under the corresponding conditions before making final selections. Allocation of color is not a simple procedure but one that requires some advance planning.
Advance planning should be done before making any decision on decorating. We'll be happy to advise you on all phases of color and style coordination for your home or office at WINDOW DECOR, 30 West Industrial Loop, 685-0875. China ideal place to visit by ship

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SHANGHAI, China — Let's talk about the reality of traveling in China; a truth that has been somewhat muted by too many writers who tell you about the undeniable glory of China without mentioning the very great problems facing unprepared tourists.

Problems such as:

— Unspeakably filthy public bathrooms.

— Crowded, unkempt, extraordinarily polluted cities.

— Hordes of pushing, shoving Chinese who kick you aside like a mangy dog.

— Streets choked by traffic; smoking buses and cars in the big cities and bicycles in the small ones.

— The continual spitting by the Chinese who coat their sidewalks with phlegm.

— Hotels that fall far short (with a few notable exceptions) of even minimal North American standards.

— Overtaxed transportation systems which force you to rely on aging, overcrowded buses and CAAC, the China national airline. CAAC has one of the poorest safety records in the world, with four major disasters in just three years.

— Meals that are barely edible, and a mere shadow of the Chinese food one can get in Hong Kong — or San Francisco, for that matter.

— Stores that sell generally second-rate merchandise, the really good stuff having been shipped abroad.

NONE OF THIS is to discourage you from traveling to China. It remains one of the most exciting and enriching travel experiences in the world, but it is not one to be taken lightly, or without proper research and preparation.

Many people — as many as 60 percent in most groups — get sick while traveling in China. The combination of polluted air, long days spent touring the vast reaches of the country, and the average age (elderly) and health (poor) of the people who can afford the expense of a trip to China, can be deadly. Most of the illnesses are respiratory in nature, with Chairman Mao's revenge a secondary health problem. Compounding the difficulties is Chinese medical care. While good doctors are available in the big cities, it is often impossible to find one in the countryside.

All these complications have daunted otherwise adverturous — but not foolhardy — tourists. It is one thing to be 25 and go charging about the Chinese countryside; it is something quite again to be 75 and attempting the same thing.

That is why, for a good many people, the best way to see China — to experience this fascinating place where fully one-quarter of the world's population lives — is by ship.

A VISIT TO CHINA by cruise ship eliminates, or at least circumvents, many of the major problems and complaints of tourists to China.

You don't have to worry about second-rate hotels; your ship is your hotel. Most meals are taken on board ship where health (and culinary) standards are much higher than they are in China. Your ship often docks in the heart of a city, with many tourist attractions (and the ubiquitous government Friendship Stores which sell all kinds of Chinese merchandise) within walking distance.

There are also the usual benefits of a cruise ship vacation: first-run movies, low-cost booze at the bars, good wines in the restaurant, dancing until dawn in the ship's lounges, service given by well-trained waiters and stewards, and contact with home via daily news and sports reports.

All of this may seem like a mockery of visiting China to some — most of whom, I suspect, have never faced the reality of travel in this country. But to many people a cruise is the only practical way to see China, the one method by which they can enjoy at least a little of the mystery and excitement without endangering their health and safety.

That is why a cruise vacation to China has become so popular of late. A number of companies — Lindblad, Cunard, Holland American, Heritage, Pearl Cruises of Scandinavia, and Royal Viking to name a few — provide cruises to China. There are also regularly-scheduled cruises from Hong Kong to Shanghai on less luxurious, Chinese-owned vessels.

A RECENT CRUISE on the Royal Viking Star provided a glimpse at cruising in Chinese waters. The ship, a 28,000-ton collection of casinos, restaurants, bars, theaters, gymnasiums, shops and staterooms, left Hong Kong and spent two days at sea before reaching the first Chinese port; time for people to savor the adventure, and time, too, for Robert Bruce, the ship's China expert, to give several lectures about the country.

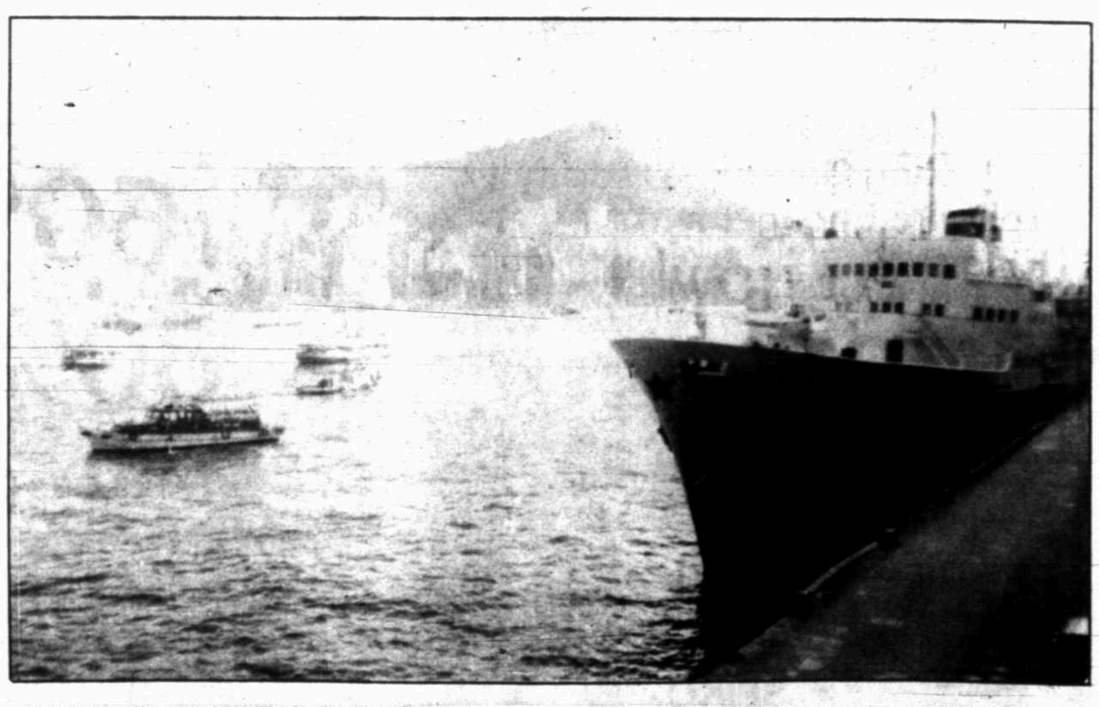

But no amount of information could truly prepare passengers for that first hesitant step into China, the beginning of an adventure denied most Westerners until recent years. Buses awaited to take passengers through the traffic-clogged streets of Shanghai to see the usual tourist attractions. That first morning they saw the Jade Buddhas and visted a jade factory (with an obligatory stop at the factory's store; credit cards accepted). After lunch on board they went to a Children's Palace, which proved the highlight of the day.

At the Palace, a school where particularly talented Chinese children receive specialized instruction, youngsters greeted the visitors, took them by hand, and sat with them as their classmates gave a performance of singing and dancing.

THAT EVENING the ship left for two more days at sea as it made its way along the China coast. It was a time for watching movies, washing the Shanghai pollution out of your hair, dressing up in a tuxedo for a formal night's banquet, and resting up from first encounters of the Chinese kind.

A favorite site for photographers in Beijing, the opulent Hall of Prayer for Good Harvests is a masterpiece of 15th century architecture.

A Russian cruise ship docks in Hong Kong harbor. Tourists from many countries visit China and Hong Kong by ship.

After another day at sea, and another round of drinks, the ship docked at Xingang, the port for Peking, and the great adventure of the tour began. Following a five-hour bus ride through the cities and countryside, the travelers reached Peking about 1:30 p.m. and immediately set off to the Summer Palace where they, along with multitudes of Chinese, walked through the former summer residence of the emperors and took a boat ride across the palace's polluted lake.

IN THE AFTERNOON ship's passengers pushed their way through the Forbidden City, were taken to the Peking Friendship Store (the largest one in China).

The final half-day in Peking was spent at the Temple of Heaven, where the emperors came to worship, followed by another ordinary lunch and a second five-hour bus ride, this one back to Xingang and the ship.

IF YOU GO:

Royal Viking Line's 1985-1986 14-day China cruises begin at $3,667, double occupancy, for a standard double room and run as high as $11,227, double occupancy, for a penthouse suite. Airfare is additional. For more information contact your travel agent.

Completion of the 202,000 square foot Plaza Shopping Center on Loop 250 is expected by March 1986. It is located in the vicinity of Midland Park Mall and will list Mervyn's and Service Merchandise as anchor stores.

New loop shopping center planned

Mervyn's, Service Merchandise are tenants

From Staff Reports

A new 202,000 square foot shopping center has been announced for Midland.

Dean A. Beck and Associates will develop Midland Plaza, a new community shopping center located east of Midkiff Road on Loop 250. The new center will include Mervyn's, Service Merchandise, and a number of small stores to serve the shoppers' needs. Plans call for completion of Midland Plaza by March 1986.

Midland Plaza is owned by Midland Plaza Associates, a Texas limited partnership, with Dean A. Beck and Associates, Los Angeles, serving as general partner.

Dean A. Beck and Associates is a real estate development and investment firm specializing in shopping centers of various dimensions. Among their projects are developmets in Santa Fe Springs, California; Cypress, California; Santa Ana, California; and Tucson, Arizona. Their offices are located in Los Angeles.

The president of Dean a. Beck and Associates is Dean A. "Tony" Beck. Prior to forming the company, he was senior vice president of Carter Hawley Hale Stores, in charge of all real estate, construction and store planning. Carter Hawley Hale owns Neiman-Marcus, The Broadway, Bergdorf Goodman, Wanamakers and Thalhimers. Senior management of the company includes Russell G. Beckner of Los Angeles and Michael G. Beckner, a former Midland resident.

"We believe that the Midland Plaza will be a real asset to Midland," said Russ Beckner, vice president of development for Beck. "The convenient location, refined architecture, and carefully-planned shopping environment combine to make Midland Plaza one of our finest projects yet. We are really excited about opening next year."

Plans for Midland Plaza include over 202,000 square feet of development on an 18.34 acre site adjacent to Loop 250. Mervyn's will occupy 75,000 square feet, while Service Merchandise will occupy 50,000 square feet. The remaining 77,000 square feet will be available for lease to small retail shops with needs of 1,000 to 10,000 square feet.

Mervyn's is a value-oriented depatment store chain specializing in clothing and accessories for the entire family, as well as linens, window treatments, decorative housewares, shoes and toys. New professional organization forms in Permian Basin

By SUSAN LINDSAY
Business-Oil Writer

The Drillsite Supervisors Association, a new professional organization for the oil and gas industry, has been organized in the Permian Basin.

DSA is composed of drillsite supervisors interested in promoting safety, efficiency and improved working conditions in the business, said Ray Sharbutt, co-founder of the organization.

One problem, associated with independent oil operators is insurance and retirement plans, he said. "It is very rare to find a driller who has worked with the same company for several years. With all of the job changes, you may not even get set up on a company's insurance and retirement plan before you move to a different company."

Sharbutt said he is confident that DSA insurance and retirement programs could be established if enough members are interested in the programs.

He said he hopes the association will establish a more international cohesive professional unit within the industry.

"Working on a rig, you meet people from all over the world. You work with the once and may not see them again for many years. That's one of the purposes of the club. It would be nice to have an organization to bring the drillsite community together," he said.

Sharbutt said he would like the association to expand internationally, because of the large number of people who who have worked for both local and international companies.

The organization also has possibilities of scholarships for members to attend drilling technology school and scholarships for member's children, conventions, seminars and newsletters and directories, he said, adding that his priority now is building membership.

"We're brand, brand new right now," he said. "Membership now is the 10 board of directors. But, I have talked to a lot of people and I expect membership to be 1,000 or better."

To become a member, one must file for an application. Annual membership dues are $25 for an individual and $100 for an organization.

Membership is open to anyone who has worked as a driller, toolpusher, company representative, drilling foreman or superintendent, consultant, logger, fisherman, directional driller, coring engineer, mud engineer or casing tong operator or anyone who would like to hold one of these titles in the future, he said.

DSA was founded in November by Sharbutt and T.R. Hendricks.

The men applied for non-corporate status, established a 10-member board of directors and created a logo.

Members of the board are Sharbutt, Hendricks, Dennis Elam, Phil Graves, Buddy Lintzen, Frank Pool, J. Ray Reid, Joe Roper, Kitty Sharbutt and Clark Straughn.

The logo is a stylized double stud adapter, said Sharbutt. "It was chosen for what it represents: a double stud adapter is required to flage up two dissimilar connections: for example, from the operator's wellhead to the contractor's BOP," he said.

"In order for DSA to be an effective association we must always keep this relationship in mind. The contractor's needs and the operator's requirements are the purpose of employment for all drillsite supervisors," he said.

MCI attacks AT&T over new accounts

WASHINGTON (AP) — For months, to hear MCI Communications Corp. executives tell it, customers have been complaining they asked to be hooked up to one long-distance company but ended up being served by another: American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Then, one day in early April, a computer tape listing AT&T customers was delivered by mistake to MCI. MCI checked the tape and identified 604 customers that should have been theirs, said Bob Jackson, an MCI executive in MCI's northeastern region.

By calling those customers, MCI said it discovered some, indeed, had signed up for MCI's long-distance service.

Also in April, AT&T discovered a programming error on a computer tape had given AT&T credit for extra customers. AT&T caught many of the erroneous line assignments before it sent the tape to the local phone company to order connections, but reported it had submitted invalid orders covering 61,000 telephone lines, AT&T Washington spokesman Pic Wagner said this week.

That was enough for MCI, which complained to the Justice Department.

"We have furnished you with evidence indicating thousands of bogus AT&T presubscription orders from all regions of the country," MCI stated in a filing with the Justice Deparment's antitrust division.

The department said Thursday it would investigate MCI's claim that AT&T was "actively interfering" with its attempts to sign up customers, The Washington Post reported today.

AT&T's Wagner denied any intentional effort to steal customers.

"It would make no sense for us to deliberately irritate customers," he said Thursday.

An attorney for the NYNEX Corporation, the local phone company that serves New York and parts of New England and which switched the tapes, confirmed the mixup Thursday. However, the attorney, Saul Fisher, said in a telephone interview from White Plains, N.Y.: "We have no reason to believe this is anything but an inadvertent error."

AT&T, MCI and the other phone companies are asking Americans to pick one long-distance service to be reached by dialing "1" instead of using lengthy strings of numbers. The plan is designed to give all phone companies "equal access" to customers.

No recession in 1985 says bank economist

DALLAS — Most of the worrisome signals in the U. S. economy can be traced to problems that are temporary — including a delay in tax refund checks from the Internal Revenue Service — and the nation's fundamental economic health should remove any fear of a recession in 1985, says RepublicBank Corp. Chief Economist Dr. William E. Gibson.

"Presently the case for expecting a recession in 1985 is not at all convincing and is not likely to become so. The economy's fundamentals are pointing up, not down," Dr. Gibson states in the new May issue of the corporation's monthly Economic Perspective.

In addition to the delayed tax refund checks, which totaled approximately $6.8 billion in the first quarter and $27 billion on a seasonably adjusted annual rate, another temporary restraint on the economy is the strong dollar.

"While the strong dollar has undeniably held the economy back — by somewhere in the range of 1-2 percentage points of real growth — its impact last quarter was overstated by gyrations in the net export account. More fundamentally, the dollar is likely to weaken on balance for most of 1985, and it appears that this trend has begun," he says.

At the same time, the basic determinants of economic growth and expansion — including personal income, consumer sentiment, consumer debt, business inventory levels and business investment — remain solidly positioned. And, leading economic indicators have registered sizable increases in three of the pst four months.

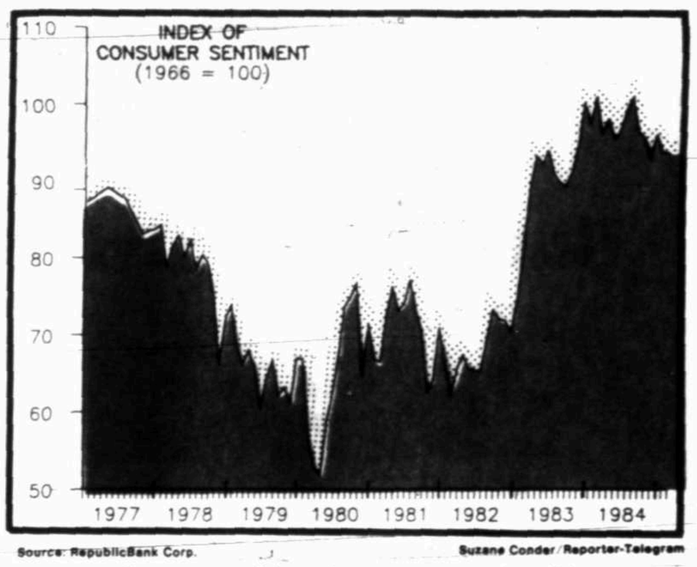

Another factor depressing economic statistics is the difficulty in fully measuring the output and growth of the service-producing sector.

"This means that reported statistics understate how strong the economy actually is," Dr. Gibson says. "This understatement will not soon be remedied in the statistics, but it does mean that things are not as bad as they appear."

Americans still have another piece of insurance: "Should all else fail and recessionary forces become strong, the economy has a powerful further line of defense — the Federal Reserve. The Fed does not believe that a recession is desirable or appropriate and will almost certainly take steps to short-circuit weakening trends," he says.

If sluggish economic indicators continue to appear, the Fed probably would shift toward a more accommodative monetary policy to rekindle the expansion and offset the problem areas.

"Thus, both on fundamental grounds and due to policy considerations, a recession in 1985 appears less likely than a continuation of the economic expansion that began at the end of 1982," Dr. Gibson states.

Grads find tight job market

WASHINGTON (AP) — A million high school seniors will hunt for permanent jobs in the next few months, and they will compete in a somewhat tight market run by employers who apply tough standards to the Class of '85, job market analysts say.

Graduates with extensive vocational education in fields ranging from construction to business office skills are paid about 50 cents an hour more and will work an extra two to three weeks a year compared with those who didn't take such instruction, says research scientist Morgan Lewis.

About half the seniors looking for permanent jobs enrolled in such courses and have a 50 percent chance of getting work for which they were trained, said Lewis, of the National Center for Research in Vocational Education at Ohio State University.

Whatever happened to the 'answer man'?

By JOHN PAUL PITTS

Remember putting a tiger in your tank; trusting your car to the man with the star and learning all about driving from the "answer man"? Remember gasoline commercials, and all those wonderful additives that always made one brand superior to the others, protecting our tanks from rust and our carbuerators from water, scum and gum?

The gasoline commercials are gone now — maybe forever. They went the way of the free road maps, green stamps, and the free steak knives and drinking glasses that came with each fill-up. I must say I miss it all, and I wonder if and when it will come back.

I rather enjoyed pulling into a service station and having five neat, uniformed attendants race to my car to check the oil, water, battery, and tires, and wash my windshield. I would buy ten gallons of gas in my VW, hand the attendant $2.50 and drive away with a free steak knife, while the crew chanted how much they appreciated my business.

TO BE SURE, there are still a few service stations around that are given to some of the old traditions, but at one time their kind was the norm — not the exception. When it came to marketing, the major oil comanies had few equals. It might be stretching it a bit to say the word "service" originated at the corner service station of the thirties, forties, fifties and sixties,, but it would not be stretching it in the least to say that's where service was refined to an art. After all, they didn't call them "service" stations for nothing.

But it's a new marketing concept that prevails today in the gasoline-selling business.

Now I go inside a store and get in line — behind a kid buying twinkies...a roughneck buying cigarettes...a student buying a six-pack of beer...somebody buying a hot dog and somebody else buying a loaf of bread, just to give the man my money before I can pump the gas into the car.

Need a quart of oil? Get it yourself. Need air for a low tire? That's 25 cents, please. Need water for the radiator? Go look for it. I'm sure we have a hose out there somewhere. Want to get fawned all over? Join a country club.

THOUGH SOMEWHAT DISTANT, and removed from the time when one chose his service station as closely as his doctor, today's no frills no fawn approach to selling gasoline is unquestionably a more economical approach to owning an automobile. And it's one that many of us seem to prefer. I must confess, I buy price too.

Still, I am amazed at how quickly the oil companies reversed their marketing strategies. It seems overnight. One day Exxon, Shell, Gulf, Chevron, Texaco, Arco and the others were intensely competitive, aggressive marketers, pushing a brand of gasoline with clever promotions, jingles, movie stars, service and gimmicks. The next all the glamour was gone. Suddenly, we had generic gasoline, with no visible drive on the part of marketers to distinguish their brand from the other guys. Any advertising budget major oil companies have now is spent on institutional ads, telling the public how they care about nature and what wonderful products they are making to save lives and make life better.

SURE I KNOW all about OPEC and the energy crisis and the gasoline lines, and I am sure that had some effect on gasoline marketing concepts. But that was yesterday.

Selling gasoline today is as competitive as it was before the embargo. There's a lot of it to sell — a surplus, but we don't see the oil companies really hustling to sell gasoline like they once did.

The brand name signs are still on the corner service station, but the push to push the brand is gone.

Who knows why. Maybe they found it was easier to split a pie than fight over it. Or, maybe the gasoline consumers finally caught on to the fact that there was no significant difference between gasoline brands.

Far be it that this lowly-paid journalist should try to second guess a $300,000 a year vice president of marketing for a major oil company with his studies, experts, stats and charts. It just seems to me the oil industry is making a mistake by no longer merchandising brand name gasoline.

There's not that much difference between brands of milk and bread either, but the bread and milk companies don't act that way. There's not a dime's worth of difference between the top of the line and the bottom of the line cosmetics, but try to convince a wife that her favorite expensive "Essence of Heavenly Almond Balm" is no better than Jergens or Corn Huskers lotion.

Brand advertising and aggressive marketing would be good for the oil industry. It could restore downstream excitement, competition and enthusiasm that could work its way up, over and into the upstream side of the business. It would also benefit the consumer, who always profits from healthy competition. Who knows? Something seems to have gone flat in the oil business, and perhaps it all started at the pump.

Valero may sue InterNorth

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Valero Energy Corp. of San Antonio, Texas, has threatened court action to block a proposed $2.3 billion acquisition of Houston Natural Gas Corp. by InterNorth Inc. of Omaha, InterNorth has reported.

A lawsuit filed Thursday in San Antonio by InterNorth and Houston Natural Gas asks the federal district court to determine InterNorth's rights under its agreement with Valero. The suit also asks the court to rule that federal anti-trust laws would allow the proposed acquisition.

InterNorth also said in a news release issued Thursday that it plans to sell its 50 percent interest in Valero's 480-mile west Texas pipeline.

Sam Segnar, chairman and chief executive of InterNorth, said the energy firm's offer of $70 per share of all HNG shares is not affected by the lawsuit. The offer is due to expire May 31.

In February, InterNorth paid $68 million for half of the Valero pipeline and set up a natural gas marketing system with Valero known as NorVal. The agreements involve transporting and selling natural gas within Texas through Valero's pipeline.

InterNorth said the lawsuit against Valero results "from threatened legal action by Valero to seek an injunction" against InterNorth's offer for HNG stock.

In Cleveland, qualified high school graduates with vocational training can expect to find jobs with smaller-size companies, says David A. Mikita, director of manpower for the Greater Cleveland Growth Association.

"The disadvantage comes to those who took college preparatory classes who didn't go to college" and now are unable to compete successfully with graduates with saleable skills, Mikita said of the Cleveland-area job market, where unemployment is 8.6 percent.

Even vocational education, which former Secretary of Labor Willard Wirtz calls "the surest way to a first job," is no guarantee to future advancement.

"What more and more of them are going to have to do is a continuing liberal education at the college level," said Wirtz, labor secretary from 1962-69. "A kid coming out of high school faces pretty rough competition. They're playing hard odds."

Nationally, openings reflect the changing nature of the U.S. economy, where 70 percent of the jobs are in the service sector. A mere 20 percent of U.S. jobs are in manufacturing, marking a generally steady 35-year decline.

Work at fast-food chains and bottom-run work in retailing is available nationwide, and higher-paying, higher-skilled jobs are in plentiful supply across much of the South and the West.

But work much above the $3.35 an hour minimum wage may be hard to find in parts of the economically hard hit "rust belt" of industrial states and some of the farm states, job market analysts around the country say.

The jobless rate last summer among 16- to 19-year-olds who were high school graduates was 16.1 percent and the current rate among teens generally is 17.7 percent. The national civilian unemployment rate in April was 7.3 percent.

Serpentine plugs to be discussed

The Permian Basin section of the Society of Economic Paleontologists and Mineralogists will meet Tuesday at Midland Center.

Speaker for the meeting will be Truitt Mathews of Baylor University, who will present "Petroleum Potential of Serpentine Plugs and Associated Rocks, Central and South Texas."

According to Matthews, Serpentine Plugs are formed by submarine volcanic activity along the major fault zone in the ancient Gulf of Mexico. The hydrocarbon traps are situated along a belt, extending 240 miles from Milam County southwestward to Zavala County, Texas. To date the plugs have yielded approximately 47 million barrels of oil and significant quantities of natural gas.

The meeting begins at 11:30 a.m. For reservations, call the association at 683-1573.

Offshore revenue plan revealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Budget Committee has adopted a plan to split an estimated $2.6 billion in offshore oil revenues among Louisiana and six other coastal states, says Rep. John B. Breaux, D-La.

The proposal could possibly go to the House floor for consideration as early as next week, staff at Breaux's office said today.

Under the plan, Louisiana would get $700 million.

Breaux said the plan, adopted by the committee Thursday, would distribute $6.8 billion of the $6.8 billion that has been in escrow since 1978. The federal government would get $4 billion, Texas $372 million, California $375 million, Alaska $323 million, Alabama $73 million, Mississippi $15 million, and Florida $30,000.

The plan would provide the seven states with 27 percent of bonuses, rentals and interest that have been paid into the escrow account.

TRC reports oil violations

AUSTIN (AP) — The state Railroad Commission assesed a total of $17,500 this week in penalties for unplugged oil wells and pollution violations.

Pure Energy Co. of Houston must pay a $6,000 fine for illegally using pits for saltwater disposal and posing a threat to groundwater.

Betty Whitehead Production Co. of Buna must pay a $6,000 penalty for a well left unplugged since 1983.

Paul Fuga of Dallas must pay a $2,000 fine for saltwater leaks and a well left unplugged between September 1981 and November 1984.

YOU ARE INVITED TO AN IMPORTANT FREE SEMINAR

DUE FOR A LUMP SUM PAYMENT WHEN YOU RETIRE OR CHANGE JOBS?

ROLL IT OVER TAX DEFERRED.

LET JERRY SMITH, MIKE MOORE, AND J. F. BELL, MERRILL LYNCH ACCOUNT EXECUTIVES, TELL YOU WHY.

At this seminar you'll learn how the Merrill Lynch IRA rollover plan helps protect your lump sum profit sharing or pension plan distribution from current taxes – and gives you the flexibility to keep your assets growing tax deferred.

You'll find out how you can take the lump sum, put it into a Merrill Lynch Individual Retirement Account, and simply continue your tax deferment – including any subsequent IRA gains and earnings – until you want to take it out. Which you can do without IRS penalty—at age 59½.

And why you must act within 60 days in order not to lose this tax deferment.

Other advantages

Avoiding current taxes is only one benefit. Another is the Merrill Lynch rollover IRA itself.

Unlike most, it lets you keep any stock you receive in your distribution. And gives you genuine flexibility. You select your IRA investments – from stocks and bonds, to money market funds, government securities and more – and you can shift investments anytime your goals change or new opportunities arise.

To take complete advantage of our vast IRA rollover experience, be sure to attend this free seminar. Reservations are important. To make yours, mail the coupon or call today.

May Petroleum announces quarterly profit

DALLAS (SWN) — May Petroleum Inc., a Dallas-based domestic oil and gas exploration and production company, has announced a profit for the quarter ended March 31, 1985.

Net income was $110,000 for the three months ended March 31, 1985, compared to a loss of $301,000 in 1984. The net income per share was $.01 as compared to a loss of $.04 per share a year ago.

"The decreases in general and administrative expenses and depletion, depreciation and amortization expense are the primary reasons we were able to report a profitable period. We anticipate continued earnings for the year, if we do not have further deterioration of oil and gas prices and of gas markets," said Charles E. Ramsey, Jr., president and chief executive officer of May Petroleum Inc. In addition, one significant prospect is currently drilling and four are waiting to be tested. Based on preliminary tests and logs, significant discoveries have been made by the company, according to Ramsey.

Total revenues for the three months ended March 31 were $6.7 million, compared to the $8.0 million recorded in the same period in 1984. Oil and gas sales totaled $6.1 million for the first quarter from production of 1.8 equivalent billion cubic feet (EBCF) of oil and gas. Oil and gas sales for the same period in 1984 were $6.9 million from 1.9 EBCF of oil and gas. The decrease in revenues is primarily due to a softening of oil and gas prices which the company experienced beginning last year.

For the first three months of 1985, funds provided by operations totaled $3.4 million, a decrease from the $3.6 million reported in the first quarter 1984. Long-term debt decreased to $38.8 million at the end of the first quarter, down from $42.9 million at the end of 1984.

During the quarter, May participated in drilling 18 wells, five of which were successfully completed as producers.

Elam set to speak in Shreveport

Jack G. Elam, independent oil operator and petroleum geologist, will be the guest speaker to the Shreveport Geological Society May 21, 1985. His topic will be a synopsis of the tenets in his recent book, "Creativity in Oil Exploration, or How to Find Oil and Gas Economically." The book is published by and available at The Permian Basin Graduate Center.

Elam is the 1966 past president of the West texas Geological Society and is a member of the Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists and the American Association of Petroleum Geologists.

He received his bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of California at Los Angeles. He was awarded his doctorate from Fensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

It's Muse Air's new Preferred Service, starting June 4.

If our new Preferred Service doesn't pry you loose from that crowded seat the other guys give you, we don't know what will. Preferred Service has extra-wide, first-class, two-by-two leather seating. And not just a few rows, but the entire front half of every plane.

Extra wide. Two-by-two. First class.

An extra 6" of leg room.

You'll have a wider aisle. And plenty of room to relax, sit back and work. Or just relax and stretch out into an extra 6" of leg room.

A price that sits every bit as well as you do.

You'd think a first-class seat would cost first-class bucks. Far from it. We've priced Preferred Service only a few dollars more than our everyday low fares. But the price gets you more than just a wider seat. You get free drinks on all flights. Early boarding. And a level of service that borders on pampering.

More than just a wider seat.

In fact, we think you'll be amazed by all the complimentary extras. Like pastries in the morning. Almonds, cheese and crackers later in the day. Deluxe snack trays and international coffees on longer flights. We even throw in a hot towel to help you freshen up.

What's up in back? You don't fix what ain't broke.

Starting June 4, back in our Competitive

A new, wider aisle up front.

Muse Air Preferred Service: The whole front half. Instead of a few measly seats.

Muse Air Competitive Service: In the back, the same great service we've always had.

Exxon Co., U.S.A. has announced that two of its employees have retired.

LEWIS D. "CY" LOCKE retired April 1 with 37 years of service. He was assigned as senior administrator in the Midcontinent Division, general accounting.

In 1948, he joined the company as a clerk in St. Elmo, Ill. In 1965, he moved to Evansville, Ind. and in 1974, a transfer took him to Midland.

EUGENE H. "GENE" MIXSON retired May 1 with 32 years of service. He was assigned as land advisor in the Central Exploration Division, Land Section.

Mixson, who joined the company in 1953, is a native of Waco. He received his LLB degree from Baylor University in 1948. He is a member of the American Association of Petroleum Landmen, Permian Basin Landmen's Association and the Texas State Bar Association.

The board of directors of United Bank, N.A. of Midland recently elected four new officers to the bank's staff, announced Wayne Merritt, chairman and chief executive officer, and Don B. Jones, president.

CODY L. BUCK was elected vice president in the commercial lending division. A 1975, graduate of Baylor University with a BBA degfree in finance, he has worked for several banks and bank-related organizations. He served as an energy loan officer for the National Bank of Commerce in Dallas and as regional credit manager for the Southwestern United States for Manufacturers Hanover Leasing Corp. at New York. Buck was reared in Hobbs, N.M.

PAULA C. McKINNEY, vice president and auditor, began her banking career as a VOE student at Midland's First National Bank in 1970. She graduated from Texas Tech University in 1975 with a BBA in finance and worked for a Lubbock bank before joining the U.S. Treasury Department as an assistant national bank examiner. In 1980, she was promoted to national bank examiner. She joined First National Bank of Midland in 1983 as a special projects coordinator, and continued with Republic First National in both the cash management and audit departments. She joined United Bank in late April.

DEAN CHURCH, credit officer, joined United Bank in September 1984 as an officer trainee, and was assigned to various departments. He spent most of his training time in the credit department. He graduated from Texas Tech University in May 1984 with a BBA in finance. He was reared in Friona.

LOUIS B. SANCHEZ, loan operations officer, has 10 years experience with First National Bank of Midland before joining United Bank in late April. He had been loan operations manager at FNB. A native of Midland, he graduated from Midland High School and attended Sul Ross University. He has completed several banking courses through the American Institute of Banking local chapter.

First City National Bank Chairman Tony Martin and President Bill Franklin announce a promotion in the bank's staff.

BARBARA HORSLEY has been promoted to collateral officer in the credit department. She is a native Midlander and has been employed with the bank since 1978.

She is active in the American Institute of Banking and has been valedictorian of two of the AIB courses. She is also involved in the United Way, the American Business Women's Association and Casa de Amigos.

CONRAD E. COFFIELD has been elected to the board of directors of RepublicBank Midland, according to William J. Mewhorter, president.

A Midland resident since 1966, Coffield is the senior partner in the Midland office of the Texas and New Mexico law firm of Hinkle, Cox, Eaton, Coffield and Hensley.

Coffield is a life fellow of the Texas Bar Foundation and a member of the American, Texas, New Mexico, and Midland County bar associations. He serves as a trustee of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame, and on the Board of Governors for the Midland Community Theatre.

Namedropping policy

Business Namedropping is intended to inform our readers of promotions, achievements, and changes among the professional business personnel and leaders of Midland.

New presidents, chairmen of the board, directors of major coporations or new officers of organizations are normally treated separately as free-standing stories.

Namedropping generally appears in the Sunday edition but may be published during the week if necessary.

Information for Sunday pages must be in the Business-Oil Department by the preceding Thursday at noon. Items published during the week should be in the department two days in advance.

All information must be submitted in writing and include the name and telephone number of the person submitting it.

If a photograph is included, the person in the picture must be dressed professionally.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Information for Namedropping may be sent to the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Business-Oil Department, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702.

Basin, U.S. rig counts mixed

The Permian Basin rig count slipped one while the U.S rig count gained 60 rigs.

Locally, Midland County gained two rigs, putting 11 to work this week. Ector County dropped a rig, leaving 18 in the county. Glasscock County lost two rigs, lowering the count to five. Martin County held steady with 10 rigs for a third week.

Lea County, the most active county in the Basin, went from 24 to 25 rigs this week, while Andrews County dropped from 25 to 23 rigs. Upton County jumped from nine rigs to 13 while Lubbock County moved in one rig after four weeks of no drilling activity.

For the week, the count is 286. A week ago the count was 287. A year ago the count was 319.

The state of Texas went from 677 rigs last week to 682 this week. New Mexico added a rig, putting the state's total at 66. Oklahoma added six rigs, raising the count to 254. Louisiana added two rigs, putting 288 to work in the state. Kansas leaped from 54 rigs last week to 90 rigs this week.

Alaska held steady at 16 rigs this week. California fell from 71 to 66 rigs. Canada went from 109 to 132 rigs.

For the week, the count is 1,901. A week ago the count was 1,841. A year ago the count was 2,270.

Scientists debate use of plastics

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Amid the seaweed and broken shells, a small stretch of beach on Long Island Sound recently yielded several clear plastic soda bottles, an assortment of plastic bags and a dented plastic milk jug. Despite the continuing action of wind and weather, all remained largely intact and are likely, experts say, to remain that way for several years.

Recently, growing concern about plastic pollution and its resistance to decay has renewed the debate over whether the use of degradable plastics — those that readily decay — should be required. The issue has attracted global concern, as shown by the decision of the Italian government in January to ban all nondegradable plastic bags by 1991.

Despite the advances in the last decade in degradable technology, plastics manufacturers seem reluctant to make the switch. The companies fear that one of their product's main selling points — its long-lasting reliability — might suffer, and that there will be an unreasonable demand that all plastics be made degradable.

"When you spend all your energy developing higher-quality plastic, you don't want to do anything that will detract from that," said Bob Weis, manager of patents and licenses at the polymer division of E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

In any case, this technology has been applied to the manufacture of the plastic rings that hold six-packs together. Degradable six-pack carriers are mandated by law in eight states, including New York, Connecticut and California and, according to Donald Hudgin, president of the Princeton Polymer Labs, a contract research organization, such legislation is now pending in 22 states. The legislation was prompted by concern for birds and animals found with the rings around their necks or in their stomachs.

But the widespread use of degradable plastic in products such as cups, bottles and bags remains distant, and will come about only through further legislation, experts say.

Even without such additional action, however, some manufacturers have come to view degradability as a possible marketing asset.

"We were trying to find a point of differentiation," said Don Cryer, director of marketing at Webster Industries, explaining his company's decision to produce degradable garbage bags under the brand name Good 'n Tuff. Acknowledging that Good 'n Tuff sales were "mixed," so far, Cryer said a survey conducted for the company showed there was consumer interest in degradable products.

Cryer pointed to the price of Good 'n Tuff bags as proof that degradable products need not be costlier. Indeed, in a suburban supermarket, the bags were found to be priced recently at 89 cents, while the leading brands, Hefty and Glad, cost $1.39 and $1.29, respectively.

Two of the country's largest chemical producers, the Union Carbide Corp. and the Dow Chemical Co., are also exploring new markets for degradable plastics.

Michael Caparon, the marketing communications manager, for Dow said his company had one degradable resin — used in the manufacture of plastics — in the "semi-commercial" stage and was looking at "five or six different applications" for it. He said the price of such products would be "very, very competitive," and added, "It's really not that difficult."

Most plastics are highly stable materials that degrade chemically only very slowly, as tin cans, for example, turn to rust. In addition, the absence of natural enzymes capable of breaking down plastic makes it, as currently produced, non-biodegradable.

William Bailey, a chemistry professor at the University of Maryland, said that biodegradable plastic would be particularly useful in the manufacture of fishing lines and gear. Environmentalists estimate that more than a million sea birds and 100,000 sea mammals die annually by becoming entangled in or ingesting bits of the 298 million pounds of plastic fishing gear that commercial fleets lose each year.

Bailey has discovered that the addition of an organic compound known as an ester creates a biodegradable plastic that can be broken down by microorganisms in the presence of water.

Manufactured from the byproducts of petroleum refining, plastics are composed of repeating hydrocarbon molecules linked in long chains known as polymers.

Degradable plastics can be made by using a wide variety of additives that reduce the stability of the polymer, making it more susceptible to destruction by the forces of nature. Only a few additives, however, yield plastics that break down under controlled conditions and at a predictable rate.

Degradable six-pack rings, which according to manufacturers account for nearly 25 percent of those produced, are made from polyethylene in which some of the repeating ethylene molecules have been replaced by organic molecules sensitive to ultraviolet light emitted by the sun. These molecules react in sunlight to break the polymer chain.

As the chain breaks, the plastic becomes brittle, disintegrating into flakes that become tiny particles over a period of weeks or several months.

House considers approval of 'baseline' checking accounts

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Consumer groups, representatives of the disabled and organizations for the elderly are urging lawmakers to approve "baseline" checking accounts for Texas — a proposal which has received enthusiasm from banking officials.

Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, and Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, are sponsoring the legislation, which would require banks to provide no-charge accounts on which low-income persons could write a limited number of checks (and make a limited number of deposits).

Schlueter's bill, HB 2361, received support during House Financial Institutions Committee hearings from groups including the Gray Panthers — who argued that many elderly persons cannot afford the charges assessed on checking accounts, and are therefore forced to use cash.

Other problems arise with security for the elderly, the group noted.

Stephanie Thomas, Coalition of Texans with Disabilities, said disabled persons often are on fixed incomes — and would benefit from the baseline concept.

Among the questions raised by the committee — and which have been raised by banks — was how persons would qualify for the accounts.

Carol Barger, Consumers Union, said she hopes that there would be something other than a "means test" arguing that banking is a necessary service in modern society, and as such, should not be tied to any "welfare stigma."

Barger said some type of restriction is needed to prevent persons from opening multiple accounts to keep the number of checks within any account below the minimum.

Don Cavnes, Texas Bankers Association, said he feels there are problems with the legislation as it has been proposed — but said TBA is willing to work with the legislation and other parties in an effort to find a solution.

Legislators also are being asked to approve legislation providing for additional regulation of trust companies by the Department of Banking.

Banking Commissioner James Sexton and department general counsel Jorge Gutierrez say the current statute isn't clear regarding authority over companies chartered outside Texas.

Trust companies, Gutierrez noted, are "supposed" to be chartered at $500,000 or more, but said there have been two failures in the last 18 months of trust companies.

In the case of one, he said, the company had invested in distribution rights for water filters and East German toys in Europe, so the bill also would restrict investment of paid-in capital.

The bill (SB 1447 by Sen Ike Harris, R-Dallas) was amended in committee to provide that it doesn't apply to trust operations of other financial institutions, after concerns were raised by the Texas Savings and Loan Department and Texas Credit Union League.

Air Control Board members plan to meet next month to work on fees to be charged industries for new and amended permits, as provided under legislation renewing the ACB under the "sunset" review process.

SB 725 by Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, provides for fees of $50 to $50,000 for permits and permit changes.

The new charges will result in collection of some $7.8 million in additional money for the General Revenue Fund over the 1986-87 biennium, according to the Legislative Budget Board.

ACB and other state agencies have been told by the LBB that they should adjust charges for services to ensure collection of 25 to 50 per cent of the cost providing those services.

ACB has set up a special "ad hoc" committee to work on structuring the fees, and ACB staff members have been meeting with industry representatives to discuss concerns.

Part of the difficulty has been in determining what constitutes a "facility" for the purpose of fee assessment, as well as whether fees should be charged for facilities granted an exemption from permitting requirements.

Human testing of vaccine expected soon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Human trials could begin this summer on a potential malaria vaccine designed to defend millions worldwide against one of the most deadly infectious diseases, say scientists who have promising results from animal tests.

In reports published Friday in the journal Science, researchers say they have successfully produced large quantities of a protein from the surface of malaria organisms and used it to immunize animals.

Results with mice and rabbits, as well as laboratory tests with human cells, indicate a variation of the purified protein could become the first human vaccine against the disease, they say.

Using genetic engineering techniques, the scientists say they took genes responsible for making the protein coat of the protozoan organisms that cause malaria and placed them into bacteria.

These microorganisms, in turn, produced large quantities of the surface protein. When the protein was mixed with aluminum hydroxide to heighten immune response, it protected animals against a key stage of malaria infection.

The animal results were so positive that human trials of a candidate vaccine could begin as early as this summer or fall, said the researchers from the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research in Washington and Smith Kline and French Laboratories in Philadelphia.

"The results we saw with animals were so positive that we are optimistic," Wayne T. Hockmeyer of Walter Reed said in an interview, acknowledging that it still is unknown if the surface protein will build enough immunity in humans to completely fend off the disease.

Hockmeyer said the scientists are gathering data to submit for Food and Drug Administration approval of preliminary human testing. The first trial, involving perhaps 30 volunteers, will be designed to establish safety, dosage levels and initial immune response, he said.

If all goes well, he added, the next phase involving exposing people to malaria organisms could come by early winter.

Malaria is the world's most serious tropical disease, with an estimated 150 million new cases cropping up each year, the World Health Organization says. The disease, which chronically afflicts 220 million people, kills more than one million a year in Africa alone.

The latest research builds on work reported last year by Dr. John B. Dame and colleagues at the National Institutes of Health. They used advanced genetic engineering techniques to cut intact genes from the DNA of the malaria strain that most affects man, Plasmodium falciparum.

DNA, or deoxyribonucleic acid, is the basic genetic material of heredity. Genes are segments of DNA that instruct an organism to make specific chemicals or proteins.

Scientists used gene-cutting techniques to isolate and reproduce a gene that makes the protein coat for a key phase of the Plasmodium falciparum organism.

This protein coat triggers an antibody response against an early, infectious stage of the organism, called sporozoites, and prevents it from getting established in the body, researchers said.

The new reports by Hockmeyer, W. Ripley Ballou and Carter L. Diggs of Walter Reed, and James F. Young, Mitchell Gross and Martin Rosenberg of Smith Kline shows this approach works in animals and in human cells cultured in the laboratory.

Damson earnings up over previous year's quarterly figures

NEW YORK (SWN) — Damson Oil Corp. earned $.35 per common and common equivalent share during the first six months, which ended on March 31, of its 1985 fiscal year compared with a loss of $.15 per share during the same period in fiscal 1984.

Damson earned $2,741,000 on total revenues of $48,756,000, after preferred stock dividend requirements of $1,663,000 during the first six months of fiscal 1985. During the same period of fiscal 1984, the company lost $1,146,000 on total revenues of $37,334,000 after preferred stock dividend requirements of $1,943,000.

In the second quarter of fiscal 1985, Damson earned $.33 per common and common equivalent share, compared with a loss of $.05 per share during the same quarter of the prior year. Damson earned $2,594,000 on total revenues of $26,148,000 after preferred stock dividend requirements of $831,000 during the second quarter of fiscal 1985 compared with a loss of $360,000 on total revenues of $19,202,000.

Automobile financing becomes more creative

Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — You've been eyeing the gleaming yellow Mercury Cougar in that showroom you drive past every night. You know you need a new car, but the Cougar costs $15,000. That means you probably need a $3,000 down payment just to qualify, and your old clunker isn't worth that much as a trade-in.

The sharp rise in new car prices in the last few years has put more and more motorists into this position: They can afford the payments, but can't come up with the 20 percent down payment typically needed to buy the car they want. (Some lenders are now offering purchase loans up to 100 percent on new cars, but the industry standard has been 80 percent.)

This common dilemma has led to a boom in the car-leasing business, perhaps the most popular method of buying a car with no money down. As much as 40 percent of the car "sales" at some dealerships are a lease rather than an outright purchase. And now banks have come up with a new twist on the conventional auto loan, offering financing with no money down that is structured like a lease and has a balloon payment due at the end of the contract.

In some cases, leasing or taking out such a loan can be a better deal than buying the car with the conventional 20 percent down. But figuring out which is the most economical can be difficult, especially if you sometimes use the car for business. And recent changes in the tax laws have muddied the numbers even further, to the point that even some tax accountants are a bit confused.

ONE THING IS CLEAR: If you have the cash or a trade-in, buying the car with a 20 percent down payment is the cheapest way to go — provided you use the car exclusively for personal affairs. The monthly payments will be higher with the straight purchase, but after taking everything into account, owning a car is cheaper than leasing one, and the gap between the two widens as the price of the car goes up.

However, if you can deduct all or part of the costs of ownership against your income taxes because you use the car for business, the best deal is not as obvious. Owning is cheaper than leasing for less-expensive cars, but for a $40,000 vehicle, you might be better off with a lease than a purchase under the new tax laws.

Your tax savings will depend on how well you can document your business use. Beginning this year, car owners will have to start proving just how much they use their autos for business. New Internal Revenue Service regulations require car owners to keep a detailed mileage log of business trips. Thus, business-use deductions may be more difficult to take.

IF YOU HAVE NO down payment, there are distinct advantages to the new bank-loan programs that allow you to buy with no cash and then have a "balloon" payment due at the end of the loan term, typically four years. These loans are structured very much like a lease, but you get the advantage of being able to deduct the interest you pay on the loan from your income taxes — something you can't do with a lease — and if you use the car for business, you can lower your income taxes with depreciation and other tax provisions.

There are also advantages to a lease. You don't own the car, and thus don't have to worry about selling it or trading it in when you want to buy a new one. You simply give it back to the owner and walk away.

And the monthly lease payments can be well below what it would cost to buy the vehicle, partly because of tax benefits the leasing company gets. Tax law changes in 1981 created an incentive for auto manufacturers, banks and others to go into the business of leasing cars to others. The owner of the car, in this case the leasing company, gets tax credits and depreciation benefits as well as profit from the actual lease payments from the customer.

THUS, LEASING COMPANIES and car dealers are often willing to lease cars for less than a customer would pay for a bank loan to buy the car. The current charges at some dealerships are equivalent to 11 percent financing.

Here's a summary of the various ways of buying a new car, examining the financial and tax implications of each:

CONVENTIONAL LOAN — Banks, savings and loans and credit unions traditionally require a buyer to put 20 percent toward the purchase price of a new car for two reasons. A substantial down payment is a sign of the buyer's financial strength and commitment to taking care of the vehicle. And because the car declines in value so rapidly in the first year, a bank loan for only 80 percent of the vehicle's purchase price will ensure that the institution can get most of its money back if the car is repossessed and sold due to buyer default.

With a purchase, you pay full principal and interest on the loan and have the car fully paid off at the end of the loan term. You can deduct the interest you pay on the loan from your income for tax purposes. On a $12,000 car financed with a 14 percent loan, the interest over four years will be about $3,235, while the interest on a similar loan to buy a $40,000 car will be $10,784. You can also deduct state sales tax on the purchase.

If you are buying the car for business, you can take an investment tax credit of 6 percent of the purchase price up to a maximum of $1,000 for 100 percent business use. (If the business use is less but is at least 50 percent, you deduct an equivalent proportion. For instance, for 70 percent business use, you could take 70 percent of the applicable tax credit. If business use is less than 50 percent, you can't take the investment tax credit.)

YOU CAN ALSO depreciate the vehicle over the four-year loan term in proportion to the amount of business use. The depreciation deductions are 25 percent of the purchase price the first year, to a maximum of $4,000; 38 percent the second year, to a maximum of $6,000; and 37 percent the third year, to a maximum of $6,000. If the car cost so much that it is not fully depreciated after three years, you can take another deduction in the fourth year and subsequent years, to a maximum of $6,000 annually. (If business use is less than 50 percent, you have to use the straight-line method of depreciation, proportional to the amount of business use.)

BALLOON PAYMENT LOAN — These loans are structured like a lease, but the finance charges are slightly higher at banks than you can usually get from a car dealer or a credit union for a conventional type of purchase.

You borrow the full amount from the institution, but pay back only part of it during the loan term. If the bank, using industry guide books, estimates that in four years the vehicle will be worth, say, half of what you bought it for, you have to pay off half the purchase value of the auto. Thus, for a $12,000 car, you'll owe $6,000 at the end of the term.

YOU PAY PRINCIPAL and interest on the half of the loan you are paying off, and you pay interest-only on the other half. On the $12,000 car, financed at 16 percent for four years, you pay $192.15 a month to pay off $6,780, and you pay $80 a month as interest-only on the other $6,000, for a total monthly payment of $272.16.

You also can deduct the sales tax and interest payments, and if the car is for business use, take the investment tax credit and depreciation.

At the end of the term, you owe the balance of $6,000 in a single "balloon" payment. You have several options. If the vehicle is worth at least $6,000, you can give it to the bank and walk away, or you can sell it and repay the loan, pocketing any profit. Or you can refinance the car and keep it. If the car is worth less than $6,000, you still have to pay off the loan, and will be required to come up with some cash if you turn the car in to the bank.

LEASE — Lease payments are calculated much the same way as balloon-payment loan payments, with the amount based on the leasing company's cost of borrowing. Terms vary widely, depending on where you get your deal. You can shop for the car you want and lease it directly from the dealer or through a bank. Or you can go to a leasing company and let the agent find the car for you at the best price he can. As with a purchase, the amount you owe is based on the price negotiated for sale of the car.

THERE ARE TWO kinds of leases. In a "closed-end" lease, you are guaranteed to owe nothing at the end of the contract term, no matter how much the car may have depreciated beyond the original estimate. With an "open-end" lease, you could owe something, but you could also have some equity if the vehicle is worth more than the agent thought it would be when the papers were first signed.

Leases typically require you to pay license fees as well as the first month's lease payment in advance, and some firms also may require the last month's payment in advance. In addition, most leasing companies charge a fee at the end of the lease that can range from $200 to $350 to cover the cost of preparing the car for sale.

Graduate Center offers two geology courses

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer two courses on traps in Carbonate rocks.

"Stratigraphic Traps in Carbonate Rocks," will be taught May 29, from 8:30 to 4:30 p.m. This course focuses on standardized depositional sequences of primary, carbonate rock properties including texture, composition, sedimentray structures and fossils. Emphasis is placed on identifying 6 standard sequences produced in eolian and marine depositional environment so that the shape, trend and thickness of each rock body can be predicted. Dr. Wayne M. Ahr, Professor of Geology, Texas A&M University, will instruct. Fee is $140.

"Diagenetic Traps in Carbonate Rocks," is scheduled May 30, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. This course is designed for geologists with experience in working cores, samples and rocks. Engineers and geophysicists could benefit, but it is primarily a "rock" course. Dr. Wayne Ahr will instruct. Fee is $140. The registration fee for the students taking both courses is $250.

From the oil and gas systems specialists at Ernst & Whinney.

Operations? Investments? Why not invest in the information to manage them?

Wall Street's troubled by use of junk bonds, takeovers

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

By his own account, Fred Joseph and his colleagues run the hottest investment game in town — his town or anyone else's.

Joseph is senior executive vice president of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., the Wall Street firm that controls the market in hostile corporate takeovers through the use of junk bonds.

Hostile takeovers aren't new. Neither are junk bonds — the popular name for the fast-growing category of speculative, high-yield securities that are either unrated or considered below investment grade by the companies that rate debt issues.

What is new — and troubling to some in Congress and Wall Street — is the synthesis of these two into a new, untested form of corporate takeover. Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., has proposed legislation to block the use of junk bonds in hostile takeovers for the balance of this year. Domenici, a veteran of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, has a sympathetic ear to the oil companies that have been the prime targets of junk bond raiders.

Today, Joseph and other Drexel officials find themselves commuting to Washington to try to quell the anxiety in Congress over junk-bond financing. That's understandable. By its foresight and good fortune, Drexel dominates the business.

"We do sit at the switch, which is not uncommon in investment banking," Joseph said in a recent interview. "Investment banking firms sit at all kinds of switches all the time."

"... In the takeover business, which is a business guys don't like to fool around in, if you want to raise money you've got two choices.

"You can go to Drexel, who's raised all the money that's been raised (through junk bonds). Or you can go to someone else and see if they can do it.

"It's the usual thing of any intermediary — which is all we are — if you get credibility with both sides you're going to have some stroke," said Joseph, an affable, shrewd Harvard MBA and Wall Street veteran who will be Drexel's next president.

Drexel, one of the top half-dozen investment firms with $750 million in capital, has stroke.

Many of the institutions buying the junk bonds — particularly savings and loan institutions — rely heavily on Drexel to tell them whether the deals are sound or not.

A successful junk bond financing ends up leaving a company more deeply in debt. In the case of hostile takeovers, with heavy bidding pushing up the final price, the increase in debt can be huge.

As Business Week has noted, about $24 billion in outstanding new-issue junk bonds — or 80 percent — were floated in the past three years, when the economy was growing and interest rates were generally stable or declining. Could these companies issuing these bonds generate enough cash in a recession to meet their debt obligations? Could they remain solvent if interest rates spiked upward again? Drexel's betting they can. There is a lot riding on its judgment.

The first reason not to worry, says Joseph, is that Drexel knows what it's doing. The second reason is that the junk bond-hostile takeover market isn't that big, despite the noise it creates, he says.

The total amount of capital available to finance junk bond takeovers at any one time is no more than $6 billion, he estimates. That's a fraction of the $425 billion in rated bonds and $75 billion in high-yield junk bonds now on the market.

But there are apparently many others who want in on the game. At least 10 other investment firms want to follow Drexel's footsteps, he says. And there are plenty of would-be raiders. "The fact is," Joseph said, "we have turned down at least two dozen deals for each one we've taken on.

"The guys that are calling us with deals are just mind-blowing, and we have, in fact, virtually not taken on a deal from someone who wasn't an existing client or very responsible."

But even if Drexel's judgment is as good as its record thus far indicates, its luck could turn, or other less prudent firms could start making deals.

There is a lot of money that could conceivably chase the high returns paid by junk bonds. "The market is very broad. As a practical matter, almost every casualty company, half of the life companies, almost every big money manager, almost every big bank trust department, (the) mutual funds, pension funds through their advisers, all are active players in the high-yield market."

"Junk bonds used in leveraged takeovers are being sold to people who shouldn't buy them — like S&Ls," said Nicholas F. Brady, chairman of the investment banking firm Dillon, Read, which represents Unocal. "If somebody is going to be the guardian angel to be sure all the S&Ls have a diversified portfolio, that's fine. But the ones that are the most desperate will buy the highest yielding junk bonds."

It's true that restricting the use of junk bonds in hostile takeovers would limit the ability of raiders like Pickens to force corporate management to do right by its shareholders. But it would not prevent takeovers.

A cooling-off period would provide time to measure the longer-term implications of the junk bond-hostile takeover phenomena. That is something Joseph and Drexel don't have a solid answer on: "I don't know and I don't think I can really begin to tell you whether, long term, it does or doesn't hurt."

Gas company names president

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Ron B. Gardner, executive vice president of the Colorado Interstate Gas Co. since August, was named president and chief operating officer of the firm on Wednesday.

Gardner, 40, takes control of day-to-day oeprations from Peter J. King Jr., who is nearing retirement age.

King, 63, was elected vice chairman for CIG, but will move gradually away from executive control of the firm.

King said he will work with Gardner to insure a smooth transition at the top of CIG, whose major customers include the city of Colorado Springs and Public Service Co. of Colorado.

"I'm still going to help him however he wants me to," King said. "Generally, my work now will be more on a policy level and selective projects where I can give assistance."

King will be 65 in August 1986, but, he said, CIG and its parent company, the Houston-based Coastal Corp., have no mandatory-retirement policy. He has been president of CIG since 1977.

Gardner is a native of Oklahoma and graduated from West Texas State University with a degree in economics. He joined CIG in 1980.

At CIG, his responsibilities have included engineering, administrative services, and computer systems.

Drilling applications decline

AUSTIN — A total of 3,139 drilling applications were processed by the Railroad Commission in April, according to RRC Chairman Buddy Temple. In March, the total was 3,162.

So far this year, oil and gas operators have filed 11,793 applications. Through the same period of last year, they had filed 12,486.

The April total included 2,310 applications for permits to drill new oil and gs tests, 80 to deepen existing holes, 254 to plugback existing holes, and 71 for service wells. Operators also filed 424 amended drilling applications.

Applications for new oil and gas holes in April included 255 in the San Antonio area (District 1), 79 in the Refugio area (District 2), 179 in Southeast Texas (District 3), 107 in deep South Texas (District 4), 66 in East Central Texas (District 5), 99 in East Texas (District 6), 372 in West Central Texas (District 7B), 148 in San Angelo area (District 7C), 292 in the Midland area (Distict 8), 305 in the Lubbock area (District 8A), 324 in North Texas (District 9) and 84 in the Panhandle (District 10).

Vickers elected to Pogo board

HOUSTON — J. A. Vickers has been elected to the board of directors of Pogo Producing Co.

Vickers, who is active in a variety of investments, was born in Colorado and moved to Kansas at an early age. He attended Regis College and the University of Oklahoma. During World War II he served in the U. S. Coast Guard.

He heads The Vickers Companies and is the majority owner of VAL Farms, a large commercial farming complex in eastern Colorado.

Bracken reports well completions

OKLAHOMA CITY (SWN) — Bracken Exploration Co. announced the completion of 12 wells in the Anadarko Basin of Oklahoma and the Texas Panhandle since the first of the year. Several of these wells were completed as part of the Company's Bracken 1984 Private Drilling Limited Partnership which was formed in November 1984.

One of the most important of the new wells is the Kenner 1-30, a development well in Roger Mills County, Oklahoma, which extended Morrow production to the southeast. The well flowed 2,429,000 cubic feet of gas per day on a 6/64 inch choke with 10,122 psi flowing tubing pressure from a depth of 18,200 feet. Another important well is the Benjamin Stout 1-4 in Dewey County, Oklahoma, which has been completed in the Chimney Hill-Hunton formation from perforations at 16,792-16,800 feet. The well tested 2,242,000 cubic feet of gas per day on a 8/64 inch choke with 4,255 psi flowing tubing pressure. An offset to this well is scheduled to be drilled during 1985. The Company owns a 13 percent and 10 percent interest, respectively, in the Kenner and Benjamin Stout wells.

Seven development wells were drilled in the Hucmac field in Dewey County, Oklahoma, significantly extending the field to the south with production from the Morrow and/or Chester-Parvin formations. The Wion 1-8 flowed 295 barrels of oil and 94,000 cubic feet of gas per day from the Morrow formation. The Johnnie Clark 2-8 tested 197 barrels of oil and 287,000 cubic feet of gas per day from the Chester-Parvin formation. Bracken has a 16 percent and 12 percent interest, respectively, in these Company-operated wells. The remaining wells completed in the area are averaging 88 barrels of oil and 245,600 cubic feet of gas per day at depths ranging from 9,500 to 9,700 feet. Bracken and its 1984 drilling program own interests averaging 34 percent.

An exploratory well in Hemphill County, Texas, the Glisan 1-12, flowed 1,500,000 cubic feet of gas per day, without stimulation, from the Upper Morrow sand, at a depth of 14,400 feet. This well opens additional production from the Buffalo Wallow field, extending Morrow production to the east. The Company has a 25 percent interest in the well.

The Company's 1984 drilling program has a nine percent interest in each of two development wells in Roger Mills County.

Financial planners explain factors which influence families

Hearst Feature Service

Financial planners offer no standard recipes for the 7.5 million U.S. families who now earn $50,000 or more because each family is different. Here are factors which can influence financial plans:

— Age: Whether you're saving for a down payment on a home, the education of a child, retirement or building an estate for your heirs can make a big difference in the types of investments and insurance you need. Generally, investments with the highest returns also involve the greatest risks. Younger people have more years to recoup if investments turn sour, but those facing retirement may want to stick with safe investments.

— Temperament: Do you get ulcers when a risky growth stock you own goes down a point? Would you rather accept the lower return of a good old blue chip or bank savings account in exchange for a good night's sleep?

— Income and assets: The higher the income, the more attractive the returns on tax-free and tax-deferred investments. The greater the assets, the greater the incentive for estate planning.

— Faith in the economy: If you believe inflation has been licked, you may want to invest your faith in safe, fixed-dollar bank certificates, bonds, life insurance, annuities and related products. If you believe the nation is headed back toward double-digit inflation, you may be happier with common stocks, real estate and other investments which are influenced by inflation.

— Balance: Most legitimate financial planners don't recommend that you put all your eggs in one basket. Your own mix of high-risk, super-safe, inflation-proof and other investments should depend on all the factors cited above.

— Morality: To meet the needs of the socially conscious, investment houses have come up with a variety of investments. There are funds which don't hold gold stocks from South Africa, others which avoid polluting industries and firms with military contracts. While some limited partnerships are involved in developing shopping centers, office complexes and other projects others invest only in existing properties.

Government faces $85 million bill on unpaid steel loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The ailing Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp. has left the federal Economic Development Administration with an $85 million bill for unpaid loans that were government-guaranteed, an EDA spokeswoman said.

Nine insurance companies that issued the loans in 1980 and 1981 "have demanded that we pay up," and the government will pay within 30 days, Christy Lay Bakaly of EDA said Thursday.

Wheeling-Pittsburgh filed for protection under bankruptcy laws on April 16, becoming the largest U.S. steel producer this century to file for bankruptcy court reorganization.

The company, which in 1983 was the nation's eighth-largest steelmaker, took out two loans — one for $63.5 million, the other for $36.5 million — to help finance construction of a rail mill and install pollution-control equipment, Ms. Bakaly said.

The government guaranteed 90 percent of each loan. With Wheeling-Pittsburgh having repaid a portion of the obligation, the government's liability to the insurance companies is $85 million, according to Ms. Bakaly.

She said the companies are Aetna, Connecticut General, Massachusetts General, Metropolitan Life, Mutual Life, New York Life, Northwestern Mutual, Prudential and Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association of America.

The loans were part of a 1978 EDA program to guarantee up to $550 million in loans to steel companies without access to capital markets to finance modernization.

Slug your drilling costs with DynaSweep

When you use DynaSweep as part of your drilling fluid program you can expect to increase penetration rates and lower the mud bill. The final result: reduced drilling costs.

■ DynaSweep, when used as a slug, sweeps up bottomhole drilling cuttings and carries them to the surface. It's made from all natural cotton lint and treated with a special surfactant for rapid wettability. It contains no asbestos and is environmentally safe. DynaSweep is simple to use. It works with conventional circulation equipment and a shaleshaker.

■ DynaSweep performs especially well in high penetration, solids-free, low viscosity, drilling fluids. It also works well in water- and oil-based muds and polymer systems.

■ A sack of DynaSweep is added as a slug directly to the suction pit and pumped down the drillpipe and out through the bit's jets. As they leave the jets DynaSweep fibers expand into a net-like matrix, picking up cuttings as they travel up the annulus. Both the cuttings and expended DynaSweep are left behind at the shaleshaker.

■ One sack of DynaSweep does the work of ten sacks of gel when used as a gel-sweep. This also lowers your mud bill.

■ DynaSweep has no effect on the rheology or water loss characteristics of the existing system. And it works in both anionic and cationic systems. Because no special equipment is required, DynaSweep is ideally suited for reentry and completion.

■ DynaSweep is supplied exclusively through your drilling fluid service company. DynaMaterials provides technical assistance and training. Call or write today for more information on ways to incorporate DynaSweep into your drilling fluid program. Slug your drilling costs.

■ It's time you looked into DynaSweep's cost-saving benefits.

DynaSweep's all-natural cotton fibers "sweep" cuttings from bottomhole in low viscosity fluid systems, keeping your mud bill low and your penetration rate high

PETRO SOL X-25
PENETRATING SCALE SOLVENT

(The Solvent That Will Revolutionize Well Bore Treatment)

Oil Producing, Water Injection, and Water Disposal Wells Are All Candidates for this Application

PETRO SOL X-25 is a solvent compound of many surface active agents combined specially for well bore and formation cleanup. Problem well bores have massed in their filter cake combination compound scale such as: calcium sulfate, calcium carbonate, iron sulfate, ferric iron, ferrous iron, iron oxide, magnesium, aluminum, plus many more intangibles that have accumulated in the well bore throughout the history of the well. These scales are often dense, massive, and impermeable. To make the problem more serious these scales are normally saturated with oil and/or coated with paraffin or asphaltic deposits. Most well bore treatments address two problems: dissolving paraffin and water wetting the well bore. This is normally followed by an acid treatment to remove calcium carbonate and iron sulfite scales. Although this treatment is sometimes successful, many times the undissolved or broken up matter remains in the well bore and is transported into the adjacent formation with the followup acid treatment. This condition then creates plugging of the formation, extended cleanup time, and the undissolved material is still there. Petro Sol X-25 was designed to dissolve, disperse, and bring out of the well bore acid insolubles and well bore build up. A followup acid treatment is recommended for remaining calcium carbonate scale.

Advantages:

1. Paraffin and asphaltic deposit solvent.

2. Paraffin dispersant - Aids the solvent in removing paraffin deposits. Paraffin dissolved by Petro Sol X-25 is retained in the oil phase. This prevents dissolved paraffin from separation or reforming down hole or down stream.

3. Calcium sulfate solvent - Dissolves effectively dense, massive and impermeable calcium sulfate scales.

4. Water wetting - Water wets oil coated formations and particles. Effective in dispersing and penetrating oil coated acid insolubles such as drilling muds and silica.

5. Emulsion block remover - By dissolving, dispersing, water wetting and detergent action helps prevent plugging in formation and breaking stable emulsions in water or crude oil.

6. Low surface tension - By dissolving action and water wetting Petro Sol X-25 penetrates dense and sometimes impermeable scales leaving formation or well bore in good condition for following treatments.

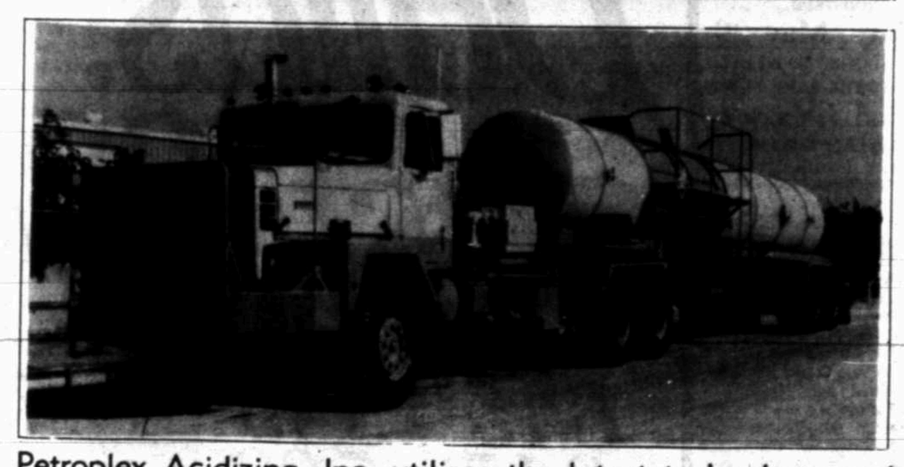

7. Silt and fine suspension - Suspends acid and solvent insolubles. Prevents reaccumulation and plugging flow channels.

8. Sequesterant - Sequesters calcium, magnesium, aluminum, and iron, the binding salts and compounds that hold many scales together.

9. Well bore conditioner - Petro Sol X-25 is designed to dissolve and disperse paraffin and asphaltic deposits; dissolve calcium sulfate scales; penetrate and sequester iron sulfate, ferric and ferrous iron, magnesium, aluminum, and calcium; penetrate the binding salts and compounds that bring these scales together. It removes emulsion blocks and suspends fines, water wets well bore face, and conditions the well bore for that designed treatment or other treatments to follow.

10. Formation cleaner - The same scale that is in the well bore is many times within the pores or flow channels of the formation. The use of Petro Sol X-25 is then recommended not only for well bore, but formation treatment also.

Petroplex Acidizing, Inc. utilizes the latest technology and equipment to give you better service on your well treatment needs.

PETRO SOL X-25 is an exclusive product of Petroplex Acidizing, Inc. with over 150 successful jobs completed. It is easy to see the many advantages in the process which treats a multitude of problems in treatment. Due to the low cost (250 lot for $2.40 per gallon) of Petro Sol X-25, one can afford to use the uncut product for complete coverage of the zone of interest.

Petro Sol X-25 is mixed on a daily basis in our new blending unit for better quality control of the product. All calcium sulfate scales are not identical. Therefore, scale samples can be tested and the formula altered to meet your treatment needs.

Actress Stockard Channing is playing the mother of a handicapped child in the Broadway play "Joe Egg."

'Jolly' Stockard Channing

By FRED ROBBINS
King Features Syndicate

"I do not have a mind that's set on striving for things. I really do believe in 'play it as it lays.' Things either happen for you or they don't, and the only way to be happy is to ride with the tide and make the most of whatever turns up."

Speaking so forthrightly is actress Stockard Channing, who has been lighting up the Broadway sky in a riveting revival of the Peter Nichols play "Joe Egg."

Like the character she plays in this penetrating drama — the mother of an incurably handicapped child — 41-year-old Ms. Channing has experienced the good and the bad and has managed to deal successfully with each situation.

A decade ago, after a lackluster seven-year stint on the New York stage, she was confronted — but not dazzled — by the glittering promise of major Hollywood stardom. Cast romantically opposite two of the biggest "names" in movies, Warren Beatty and Jack Nicholson, in "The Fortune," she bowled over the critics, who universally hailed her as an "overnight sensation."

She was, said they, a worthy successor to such smart-dumb comedy stars of the past as Judy Holliday and Marilyn Monroe. But "The Fortune" flopped. Even bigger failures were the next three in which she starred — "Dandy, the All-American Girl," "The Big Bus" and "Sweet Revenge."

Eventually, Ms. Channing found herself in two successes in a row, the first of which was the comedy "The Cheap Detective," playing private eye Peter Falk's naive secretary. Then came the mega-hit of that year, "Grease," the John Travolta musical in which she was streetwise Rizzo, Rydell High's lustiest Pink Lady.

Famous, Ms. Channing did indeed become. From coast to coast, in a single Technicolored flash, she became the dream fantasy of millions. But a joker lurked in the deck. Her hordes of fans were mainly teen-age males. And there isn't much future for an actress of 34 — Ms. Channing's age at the time — in playing 18-year-olds.

She reverted to young adult roles in "The Fish That Saved Pittsburgh" and "Rally," with David Carradine, but with such dismal results that her screen career stopped dead in its tracks.

"There are repercussions when you have several flops in a row," Ms. Channing admits. "I couldn't get arrested for a while there. That gave me a grounding I never forgot."

Realist that she is, she further observes, "You can't sit around and wait for a movie career to happen. It will or it won't. You can have no expectations in the movie business. The focus, as I've always reminded myself, has to be on performing itself, and the pleasure you derive from it. And all I ever set out to do was, simply, to act."

Like the dauntless heroines in Saturday afternoon serials of yesteryear, Ms. Channing was rescued at the eleventh hour.

Television threw her a lifeline, a five-year, $2 million contract to set up her own production company to turn out TV movies and a comedy series. Her partner in this enterprise, named Little Bear after a pet dog, was then-husband David Debin. Their first production, "Silent Victory," a television drama about deaf movie stuntwoman Kitty O'Neill, was successful.

Next came the comedy TV series that, said network execs, would make Ms. Channing the "new" Mary Tyler Moore.

Originally titled "Just Friends," the series was soon re-dubbed "The Stockard Channing Show." Under either title, there were too few laughs. The Nielsen rating race went to other programs. Ms. Channing did not become a second Mary Tyler Moore, which she'd never wanted to be in the first place. And after two seasons, the series vanished from the tube.

Along with her TV show, her marriage failed, and the actress, who says, "Life deals us a new hand every week," shook the dust of Hollywood from her heels and went back to Broadway.

And everything since has been, to use one of her favorite words, "jolly."

Most exhilarating of all, professionally, has been her breakthrough as a dramatic star in "Joe Egg."

Speaking of this first triumph of hers in a straight play on Broadway, Ms. Channing reports, "Walter Matthau once said to me that every performer needs 31 big breaks. Well, I've had about 10, this being the latest. And you do need to keep stoking the fires with big breaks, because that's the way our business is.

BETWEEN THE LINES

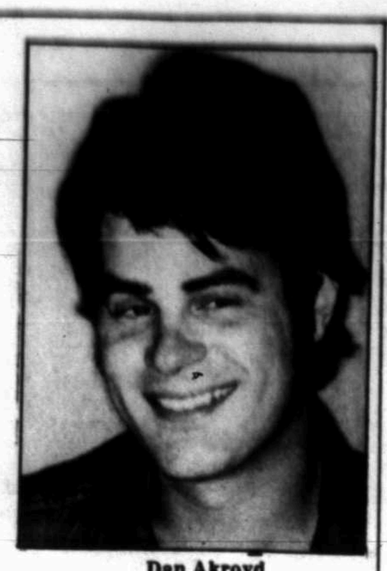

John Belushi

Q. A friend and I strongly disagree about who played Julia Child in a "Saturday Night Live" sketch in the late '70s. He insists that it was John Belushi who yelled, "Remember, save the liver!" while bleeding to death. I'm convinced it was Dan Aykroyd. Who's right?

Steve Lederman
Princeton, N.J.

A. You both are. We checked with a "Saturday Night Live" staffer and he remembered the sketch right away. But, as he recalls, when they first did it, Aykroyd was Child. Later, though, they did other sketches about her and switched roles each time. So, at one time or another they both played her.

Dan Akroyd

Q. Could you tell me about actor-magician Harry Anderson from "Night Court"?

C. Cauldwell
Houston

A. He's 32, from Newport, R.I., but when he was young, his parents divorced and he lived with them individually, in a number of places, including their hometown, Mainistee, Mich. One of the other places was Las Vegas, where his mother worked, in between her five marriages, and where young Harry learned to handle cards.

At 16, he says — no one is quite sure this is true because he is known to have an active imagination — he went out on his own as a street performer, working a shell game in New Orleans (he was arrested) and in San Francisco, where an angry customer punched him in the jaw.

He turned, instead, to magic and began to perform in clubs and on college campuses around the country. In 1977, he met mentalist Leslie Pollack, they formed an act and were married six months later. They now have a daughter, Eva Fay, 4.

Meanwhile, he was spotted by an agent while performing at Hollywood's Magic Castle and installed as the opening act for Kenny Rogers and then for Debbie Reynolds. Those appearances led to one on "Saturday Night Live," which led to a stint as Harry the Hustler on "Cheers" and to "Night Court."

Next up: a summer concert tour of his magic act and a Showtime special.

Q. Jayne Torvill and Christopher Dean, the ice-dancing team from the Olympics, really stole our hearts with the perfection and beauty of their skating, but I haven't heard anything about them lately. What are they doing now? Are they still performing?

E.D.T.
West New York, N.J.

A. They seemed to have disappeared over the last six months, but it turns out that they've been rehearsing in a warehouse in Sydney, Australia, for a tour.

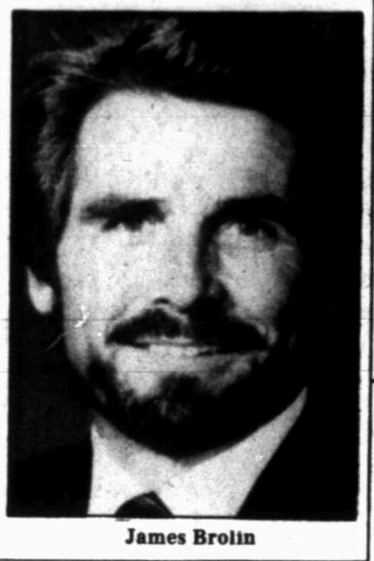

That tour got under way last month in New Zealand, should last about a year, and will encompass many countries, including this one. In the meantime, while you're waiting, there is a videotape available of their more famous performances.

Q.Please tell me about James Brolin from "Hotel." How old is he, does he have a family, where does he live, what are his hobbies?

L.D.
Kihei, Maui, Hawaii

A. He's 44 (birthday: July 18) and has two sons, Josh, 17, and Jess, 13, with his ex-wife, Jane, from whom he separated a year ago. (The marriage lasted 17 years and was characterized by separate lives, periodically, and separate residences.)

He now lives both in Los Angeles and on a ranch in Santa Barbara where he raises horses and has, among other occupants, a lion. Other hobbies: car racing, speedboating, fishing, motorcycling, flying and fixing up houses.

James Brolin

Q. Please settle a bet. I say Charlene Tilton is less than 5 feet tall.

A "Dallas" fan
Fresno, Calif.

A. She may look shorter because most of her height seems to be hair. She is 5 feet even. Sorry.

Q. My favorite actor is Adam Baldwin of "My Bodyguard" and "D.C. Cab." Could you tell me how old he is, where he's from and what he'll be doing next?

Jodie Burke
St. John's, Nfld., Canada

A. He's 22, was raised on Chicago's exclusive North Shore and in nearby Winnetka, and his next project will return him to those surroundings. He started shooting a CBS movie of the week called "Welcome Home, Bobby" in Chicago last month.

Q. What, if anything, is "Chips" star Erik Estrada up to these days? Or did his bad press and hot-shot attitude sink his star ship?

Pat McKinnis
Henderson, Nev.

A. According to one of his reps, "He just finished a feature in San Francisco that doesn't have a title, and he's thinking about a couple of TV movies." Another film called "Where's Parsifal?" which co-starred, among others, Laurence Olivier, was also finished.

Basically, then, his bad press and attitude didn't exactly finish him, but it did make him a few enemies. (One long-running feud with "Chips" co-star Larry Wilcox was very publicly "ended" near the end of the show; others were not.)

So, reportedly, did an abbreviated, and critically panned, performance off-Broadway last year in the play "True West." After making many declarations of wanting to pay his dues and spend time onstage learning his craft, he left the play somewhat abruptly, to, as he explained, make a movie.

"Anyway, I'm glad of the opportunity to be in this play, which I love, portraying a character I feel is right for me. The worst thing is to get the wrong job. That's because, if you fail in it, you feel like a fool, and if you succeed in it, you have to keep doing it. But with the right job, when everything works, you don't mind doing it for a very long time. And I have felt great joy working in this play."

"Joe Egg," though, is not the only recent happiness-making development in the constantly changing life of Ms. Channing.

Her great gray-green eyes sparkled even more than the only piece of jewelry she wore, a simple gold wedding band topped by diamonds. "Yes, I'm married again," she says, "and have been for over two years now."

"My (other three) marriages have all had other aspects — of the outside world — attached to them. And they were entered into with earnestness and high hopes, which were not always fulfilled.

"My expectation of marriage is a certain kind of peace, of tranquility. I like the intimacy, the ease of marriage, and I expect a certain flow between my husband and myself. That's what I try for. But when that stops and it seems that it's never going to come back, I have to confess, I do have a tendency to think maybe we should leave the party.

"My previous marriages had a beginning, a middle and an end. And they were not of short duration. They were not like any six-month wonder. We're talking five or six years each here...Maybe I have seven-year itch."

Certainly, it was a "seven-year itch" with Hollywood that catapulted her back to the stage and a new love, David Rawle, a friend from her teen-age years.

Though she and Rawle had lost track of one another over the years, he caught her Broadway show while visiting New York, then went backstage and invited her to lunch.

"STARTING WITH that lunch," says the actress, "we found something else was happening, and it took us both by surprise. Suddenly, in a matter of days, we fell madly in love with each other..."

Ms. Channing and Rawle had first met in Boston, when he was a student at Harvard and she was a Radcliffe freshman.

It was inevitable that she would have gone to Radcliffe, or some other university equally prestigious. Growing up on Park Avenue, the daughter of a wealthy shipping magnate, Susan Williams Antonia Stockard, as she was christened, had a privileged childhood.

She was, in every way, an Irish-Catholic "princess." This meant dancing schools, riding instruction, designer frocks, family trips to Europe. She attended Chapin, an exclusive private school in Manhattan, to which she was chauffeured in a limousine. Her coming-out party was a costly affair at the St. Regis Hotel.

At Radcliffe came "freedom," and the admission — never confided to any family member — that she planned to go into the theater.

Looking back on her life up to this point, she says, "I did all the things I was expected to do. But I knew from when I was quite young that this most conventional life, with all its trappings, was not for me. And yet, quite soon, I made a very conventional marriage."

Against her parents' wishes, she was married at 19, and for nearly five years afterward, to a Boston-rich, Harvard-educated young stockbroker, Walter Channing Jr. She continued on as an American history major at Radcliffe, where she was graduated cum laude in 1966, while at the same time making a half-hearted stab at being the white-gloved, Junior League sort of wife.

The latter role eventually got lost in the shuffle, when Ms. Channing became a member of the Theater Company of Boston, appearing, finally, in some 35 plays there.

"My first husband," she says, "had no idea that I would have these inclinations. He wanted me to be a business wife. He grew more conservative and I didn't. That really did break up our marriage, and it was very painful...I'm a very independent person, and there's a gypsy in my soul. And the people I married later understood that."

AS A divorced woman of 23, and a well-trained actress, Ms. Channing settled in New York — well-cushioned by a trust fund, still in effect, set up by her father — and soon found acting opportunities of various sorts.

There were bit parts in movies made on location in Manhattan — one in Barbara Streisand's "Up the Sandbox" that ended on the cutting-room floor, and another, as a nurse, in "The Hospital," starring George C. Scott.

And, before Hollywood claimed her services, there were numerous plays including a revival of "Arsenic and Old Lace."

Along the way, the actress found herself giving marriage a second try, this time with Paul Schmidt, a young professor of Slavic languages at the University of Texas in Austin.

"We'd had a long, enduring friendship and romance," she says. "In some mad desire to anchor our lives, we decided to get married. It was a totally unconventional marriage. We made no commitments to observe the usual vows. We were more like family than lovers. He lived in Texas, I lived in New York, and we never lived together."

The actress characterizes herself as being "sequentially monogamous."

Explaining this, she says, "I've had relationships in my life with people that I didn't marry. I am extremely romantic. I like grand passions. I'm very fond of them; they suit me...I like to experience other lives. I like pouring myself into another person, and vice versa, without the clutchiness. But those are the ones you stop and take the time for. The rest are like fast food. The lives that I've experienced have all been different lives. And sequentially. One after the other. I'm a faithful person."

Rattlesnake roundup to highlight Laredo Frontier Days celebration

LAREDO — The world's largest international rattlesnake roundup will highlight the Laredo Frontier Days celebration Friday through May 26.

Cash prizes and trophies will be awarded for longest rattlesnake, heaviest rattlesnake, smallest rattlesnake, rattlesnake with the most rattles and the most snakes collected by one individual.

The three-day celebration will be kicked off by a country-western dance from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Friday at the Laredo Civic Center ballroom.

Other Laredo Frontier Day festivities include a tug-of-war featuring area law enforcement organizations, nightly dances, a 5K run, watermelon and pie eating contests, educational seminars on rattlesnakes, a parade, trade fair, food concessions, and an arts and crafts show.

A special feature will be colorful re-enactments, complete with artillery, cavalry and uniforms—of the "Battle of the Bales," a 1864 Civil War battle fought in Laredo. Visitors can further experience the excitement of the era by camping at an original civil war campground.

Sponsored by the Laredo Mexican-American Chamber of Commerce, Laredo Frontier Days is designed to foster community and cultural awareness in Laredo, and raise funds for the LMACC.

The daily one-time admission fee is $2 for adults and $1 for children. For more information, call Eliza Rairie at (512) 727-5181 or write the Laredo Mexican-American Chamber of Commerce, P.O. Box 2245, Laredo, Texas 78041.

'Lost in America' Yuppie comedy

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

"You'll get the promotion, we'll move into the house and we'll be happy," says Julie Hagerty to her husband early in "Lost in America," which has been hailed by many critics as possibly the quinessential Yuppie comedy of the 1980s.

Director, writer and star Albert Brooks does deftly capture such Yuppie fixations as the linkage between materialism and happiness described by Ms. Hagerty's lines.

Despite her presumed Yuppieness, Ms. Hagerty's character is a bit unhappy that her life lacks a certain spontanteity.

"Now, I can be irresponsible," Brooks, who plays Hagerty's husband, reassures her with telling illogic, "I'm in a position of responsibility."

Brooks' character is eagerly anticipating a big promotion. He has even started making arrangements to trade in his trendy little Saab for that loftier mechanical status symbol, a Mercedes-Benz.

Suddenly, though, his buttoned-down, dress-for-success life falls apart when he's turned down for the promotion, apparently because he has made himself too valuable in the position he now holds.

Brooks simply freaks out. "Listen to me," he screams at his boss, "I MUST get what I deserve."

What he gets is fired.

With manic intensity, he sells everything he and his wife own, which, with them being affluent and acquisitive Yuppies, is quite a lot. He buys a motorhome and still manages to end up with a $145,000 nest egg. Inspired by his all-time favorite movie, "Easy Rider," Brooks wants to take off cross-country in the motorhome on a journey in search of the real America.

Ms. Hagerty is a tad hesitant at first, but agrees to the plan after Brooks reminds her that they had wanted to wander the countryside when they were in college, but hadn't had enough money, "so we watched TV instead."

To the tune of "Born to be Wild," the couple trundles out of Los Angeles in their air-conditioned 30-foot-long Winnebago.

Incongruously, their first stop is Las Vegas, where the couple plans to be remarried in one of that city's quickie wedding parlors then camp out under the stars in the desert to reaffirm their new way of life.

Surrendering to the temptation to celebrate a last hurrah of materialism, they instead end up sleeping in an expensive but tacky hotel room watching porno flicks on cable TV.

It also turns out that Ms. Hagerty's character has a compulsive gambling streak and in matter of hours manages to lose virtually all of the $145,000 nest egg in the hotel casino.

Brooks' offbeat sense of humor has an edge to it which cuts deep even while provoking laughter as the penniless couple roams the Southwest desperately trying to reclaim the good life.

This is Brooks' third feature film. His first movie, 1979's "Real Life," was a wildly satirical look at a documentary filmmaker's crazed attempts to record a "real all-American family."

His second full-length work, 1981's "Modern Romance," was a funny but bittersweet look at love in the '80s.

Sharp social satire is Brooks' forte and to try to make his points, he usually ends up playing a fairly obnoxious, very neurotic character — sort of an uncute Woody Allen.

Some viewers may find it hard to completely enjoy one of Brooks' films, simply because his characters are deliberately made difficult to like. This is very true of "Lost in America," in which Brooks plays a man who acts like an almost a complete jerk at times.

"Lost in America" is such a clever film, however, that it is well worth the effort to try to get to know that all-American — and very funny — jerk.

"Lost in America," rated R for some strong language and adult situations, is now showing at the North Park Cinema.

'Rustler's' parody of B-grade Westerns

"Rustler's Rhapsody" may not cause a lot of whoopin' and hollerin' among fans of hard-riding Westerns, but it can elicit pleasant chuckles from film afficionados.

"Rhapsody" is a parody of the B-grade Westerns cranked out by movie studios, especially Republic, from the 1930s on through the 1950s.

The film's hero is the gaudily overdressed Rex O'Herlihan, the Singing Cowboy — obviously a satiric composite of Gene Autry, Roy Rogers and Rex Allen — played as a deadpan caricature by Tom Berenger.

The story is narrated by Rex's sidekick, who tells of the time Rex rode into a rough and rowdy frontier town with the thoroughly suburban name of Oakwood Estates.

This town is populated with a variety of stock Western characters, all of whom are given some sort of a weird twist.

There's Miss Tracey, a hooker with a heart of gold who doesn't actually go to bed with her customers. She just talks dirty to them.

There's a power-mad cattle baron played by, of all people, Andy Griffith. This atypical cattle baron is more than a little effeminate and when angered mumbles "Golly gee."

And, of course, there's Peter the town drunk who eventually reforms himself to become the hero's sidekick. Before cleaning up his act, though, the character — nicely played by G.W. Bailey — begs drinks from strangers by offering to give them a synopsis of what's happened so far in Oakwood Estates.

Rex, however, doesn't really need such a briefing. This slightly jaded cowpoke — who in fact has apparently never poked a cow in his life (he writes home to his mother for money) — has rode through so many of these identical B-Westerns that he pretty much knows what's going on and even what's going to happen in the future.

At first Peter doesn't believe this, but has to concede that Rex is right when he asks questions like "Don't you have a very pretty but somehow asexual schoolmarm?"

Rex starts systematically cleaning up the town by shooting the guns out of the villain's hands.

Through all of this, director Hugh Wilson handles most of the action segments so well that he proves he could direct a serious Western if he were so inclined.

The most effective humor in the movie consists of ironic film buff jokes about the incongruities in old Westerns. In one wry scene, for example, three marksmen firing repeating rifles with telescopic sights can't hit Rex, but he can pull out his little pearl-handled six-shooter and blow the guns right out of their hands.

In another scene, the narrator says he was always jealous of 1960s spaghetti Westerns because they had great background music and the characters got to dress in sharp-looking raincoats even when it was 120 degrees in the shade.

One of the nicest twists that film trivia buffs will notice is that Rex's rival, Bob Barker, is played by Patrick Wayne, son of the late, great John Wayne.

Not all of "Rhapsody" is so clever. The movie has some lengthy dead zones almost completely devoid of any good jokes and a few of the running gags, like the cattle baron's dubious sexual orientation, become lame very quickly.

While the movie is certainly uneven, it is infinitely better than the other recent satiric Western, Paul Bartel's "Lust in the Dust," which depended on an ugly, obese transvestite for the bulk of its alleged humor.

"Rhapsody" also falls far short of the frantic funniness of the most successful Western parody, Mel Brooks' "Blazing Saddles," but at least "Rustler's Rhapsody" shows far more affection for the Saturday matinee heroes it celebrates.

"Rustler's Rhapsody," rated PG for some off-color humor, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

'Defcon' starts with bang, ends with whimper

"Defcon 4" is a science fiction film about nuclear Armageddon that starts off with a bang — literally — but ends with an embarrassingly pathetic whimper.

At first, the movie focuses on a small band of American astronauts orbiting the earth aboard a top secret space station.

This small space station is equipped with a formidable array of thermonuclear missiles, which apparently can be used either to defend the station itself from attack or dropped down upon the world below.

The lonely three-person crew doesn't seem to spend a lot of time worrying about the possibility of World War III. Instead, they get depressing recorded messages from their families, watch pornographic films, take drugs and generally rub each other the wrong way. It is a believable portrait of boredom in orbit.

Their routine is shattered after war does erupt and rapidly escalates into a horrible global nuclear conflict.

Helpless as they are, the astronauts watch their world blow up while they sit safely in space agonizing over whether or not to add their missiles' hefty megatonnage to the havoc below.

Then they just have to wait, sitting by their radio hoping to catch some faint electronic whisper of what has become of their planet.

Up to the point that the space capsule finally re-enters the atmosphere, the film works well. The acting is good, the special effects excellent and the situation engrossing.

It is only once the movie is firmly back on earth that "Defcon 4" goes wrong — dramatically and utterly wrong.

The movie suddenly turns into a low-budget exploitation film about the astronauts facing cannibalistic war survivors led by a fascist prep school drop-out.

The script wavers wildly between being completely simpleminded and completely incomprehensible. The production values plummet so violently that one can't help but wonder if the filmmakers blew their entire budget on the nice special effects at the beginning.

The dramatic tension evaporates abruptly and none of the actors are good enough to struggle on against the stupid plot's deadweight. That doesn't really matter too much, though, since the majority of them get killed off at a brisk pace.

By the time it mercifully ends, "Defcon 4" has degenerated into such a devastatingly bad mess that it could be called a dumb con on the unsuspecting viewer.

"Defcon 4," rated R for considerable violence and brief nudity, is now showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

Art auction may bring $6 million

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

The North Africa of the Ottoman Empire, Asia Minor, Egypt, Syria and Palestine tantalized the 19th century European mind. Over a century ago, European and British artists traveled to what is now called the Middle East to capture in paint the people, the customs and the land.

The experience caused French painter and writer Eugene Fromentin to write in 1858, "The Orient...escapes conventions, it lies outside all disciplines, it transposes, it invents everything, it overturns the harmonies with which landscape painting has for centuries functioned."

An important private collection representing this type of work, the Collection of the Coral Petroleum Corp., assembled by the corporation's chairman, David B. Chalmers, will be auctioned by Sotherby's in New York Wednesday. The collection, which is on pre-sale exhibition through Tuesday at Sotheby's New York galleries, is expected to bring in excess of $6 million.

"The 61 paintings we will offer are a testament to the fabulous vision of the Orientalists, while the consistent quality of the collection is a tribute to the connoisseurship of Mr. Chalmers," said Nancy Harrison, director of Sotheby's 19th century European paintings department in New York.

"With an unerring eye for quality, Mr. Chalmers assembled this monumental collection in an effort to better understand and appreciate the Islamic way of life."

Evocative and exotic, the work of the 19th century Continental and British artists who came to be called Orientalists painters has been an area of growing interest to scholars, museums and collectors.

"This is certainly one of the most fascinating collections to appear at auction," said David Nash, senior vice president and director of fine arts at Sotheby's. "Each piece is a superb example of its kind."

Vibrant with color and detail, important as art and documentary, the broad appeal of Orientalist paintings was recently dramatized by major exhibitions held at London's Royal Academy and The National Gallery in Washington, D.C.

In Washington, the 102-piece exhibition, "The Orientalists: Delacroix to Matisse," was viewed by over 350,000 visitors. Eighteen of the 61 paintings being auctioned Wednesday were included in that exhibition.

"The exhibition convincingly demonstrated that Orientalism is not a passing fashion, but one of the most fundamentally important of all 19th century movements, a key element in both Romanticism and Realism and clearly linked to Impressionism and early 20th century art," Ms. Harrison said.

One of the highlights of the Coral Collection is the oil by Englishman Thomas Seddon, 1821-56, of an Arab Shaykh, which is believed to be a portrait of Sir Richard Burton, a key figure in European-Middle Eastern relations.

Completely immersed in Islamic language and culture, Sir Richard was able to pose as a Moslem doctor in order to enter the sacred city of Mecca. The painting is expected to bring $100,000 to $150,000.

However, the best known artist whose work is included in the sale is Eugene Delacroix, 1798-1863, considered by many art historians to be the greatest Neo-Baroque Romantic painter of France.

In 1832, Delacroix was invited to join a French diplomatic mission which was negotiating with the Sultan of Morocco. During his six-month trip, he kept seven notebooks of pen-and-watercolor sketches and written notes.

For the next 30 years, the artist would draw on these and myriad other observations in his notebooks for his great Orientalist canvases, painting harem subjects, lion hunts and other scenes from Arab life.

His work included in this auction, "Chevaux Sortant de l'Abreuvoir (Horses Leaving the Watering Pond)," centers around a subject he was fascinated by — Arabian horses. Painted in 1857, it has the bold greens, blues and reds most typical of Delacroix. The oil is expected to bring $300,000 to $400,000.

The single highest estimate in the auction is the $1 to $1.5 million expected for Englishman John Frederick Lewis' "An Intercepted Correspondance, Cairo."

"An Intercepted Correspondence" was sold at Christie's in 1979 for $451,000, at that time a record price for any Victorian picture," said Ms. Harrison. "Since then, not one major Lewis has appeared at auction; the Coral Collection has two."

Lewis (1805-76), considered the best of the English Orientalists, lived in Cairo for a decade, where he adopted the dress and manner of a wealthy Ottoman Turk.

In "An Intercepted Correspondence," a woman of the harem has been discovered in possession of an illicit love-message in the form of a bouquet of flowers and another wife betrays her by bringing her before the scowling Pasha for judgment.

This elaborate scene of harem life, painted with mutiple color glazes, can be viewed as a model for the genre, said Ms. Harrison. The other Lewis included in the auction is titled "A Turkish School in the Vicinity of Cairo, Egypt."

During the last half of the 19th century, Realism had a strong impact on Orientalist painting. The works of Frenchman Jean Leon Gerome, 1824-1904, have been used as a model for one of the new categories of art Realism called forth, "ethnographic" painting, particularly as it relates to Orientalist painters.

The National Gallery of Art's exhibiton catalogue "Western Art and its Encounter with the Islamic World" places Gerome heading a school of painters who took pride in being able to distinguish between the physiognomies of Circassians, Turks and Egyptians as well as between the finer shades of Mauresque, Mamluk, Ottoman and Byzantine architecture and decorative detail.

The catelogue states: "The high finish and meticulous rendering of detail in most 'ethnographic' paintings encouraged the spectator to accept them as literally truthful images. Yet, closer inspection of pictures in this genre can reveal some observational inaccuracies.

"Despite the fact that since 1834 all almahs, or prostitutes, had been banned from Cairo, Gerome's 'Dance of the Almah," 1864, (not in the Coral Collection) still includes a glimpse of the characteristic pink-and-yellow banded buildings of Cairo through the door."

The fact that the Coral Collection is "virtually unique in its quality" is most clearly seen in the works of Gerome, said Ms. Harrison.

"In the National Gallery exhibition, seven of the 15 Geromes came from the Coral Collection, and of the remaining eight, seven came from European and American museums. The last major Gerome to appear at auction was sold at Sotheby's in 1981 for $187,000 and is now on loan to the Boston Museum of Fine Arts."

In addition, the collection includes works by American, Swiss, Russian and Spanish painters.

Musical 'Working' to be at Permian Playhouse

ODESSA — The musical "Working" opens at 8 p.m. Friday at the Permian Playhouse.

Each character in the cast represent workers interviewed by the noted author Studs Terkel for his book by the same name, "Working". Music, lyrics and dialogue remain true to the exact feelings and wording of these workers interviewed from across the United States.

Mike Higgins leads the cast in the roles of Mike LaFevre, the steelworker, and Frank Decker, trucker.

An office scene is composed of Frances Heltzel, editor, Kelly Hachtel and Lee Ann Morren, secretaries and Mike Schlueter, a corporate executive. Neil Collinsworth, one of the youngest members of the cast, portrays newsboy, John Rolfing.

Betty Henderson, a teacher at Permian High School, is cast as Rose Hoffman, the teacher.

A grocery scene gathers Shauna Allen, checker; Chauncey Swain, boxboy; Gerald Lopez, Toby Lopez and Kent Smith as migrant workers. Meter readers are represented by Larry Thibeault, who reveals how the gas man gains excitement in his day, and Teresa West sings a song that all housewives will enjoy; yet, Bonnie Chambers as Roberta Victor explains why she refused to be just a housewife.

A mill scene brings Winnifred Huffman to the stage as Grace Clements with a solo by Robin Palmer and a dance by Sophie Dedemandes. Rogers Tilley portrays a stone mason who sings about how his work lasts and the pride he feels in doing a good job.

Act II begins with a diner scene as Frances Heltzel portrays Delores Dantes, a waitress, who is a one woman show. Lee Ann Morren and Kelly Hachtel explain the crazy days of a telephone operator as Tana McAdams reveals what it is like to be a receptionist.

Brian Ameel represents a seaman, Booker Page, and Mike Schleuter explains what it is like to retire after working for 30 years at one job.

Kent Smith talks about the life of a fireman and how saving lives and putting out fires shows something he did on this earth.

Shannon Summers heads a chorus of cleaning women as Maggie Holmes. The all-American boy of the show is Larry Thibeault while Dominic Lopez portrays the rebel.

Coy Sharp is directing and designing the musical with G.W. Shepherd, vocal/orchestra director and dances are by Judy Gorlin. "Working" plays through June 15th. Call Permian Playhouse for resevations.

Folk festival through June 2

KERRVILLE — A number of newcomers are added to the roster of the Kerrville Folk Festival every year and 10 first-timers are playing in 1985, including Peter, Paul and Mary.

The 11-day festival is in its 14th year and runs Thursday through June 2 at Rod Kennedy's Quiet Valley Ranch, presented this year in association with "Texas Monthly." During the nine nights of concerts, 63 performers will play for an hour or so on the Outdoor Theater stage.

Original artists returning this year who played in the first festival in 1972, include Carolyn Hester, Allen Damron, Bill and Bonnie Hearne, Bobby Bridger, Gary P. Nunn, Bill Oliver, Robert Shaw, Peter Yarrow, Kurt Van Sickle, Ray Wylie Hubbard and Rev. Charlie Sumners, Jr.

Other returning artists include Jerry Jeff Walker, Townes Van Zandt, Shake Russell, Rusty Wier, Nanci Griffith, Guy Clark, Marcia Ball, Lindsay Haisley, Butch Hancock, David Amram, Bob Gibson, Dee Moeller, Peter Rowan, Tom Paxton, Riders in the Sky and Billie Joe Shaver.

Also scheduled to perform are 40 New Folk finalists who play on two two-hour daytime concerts the first weekend.

For ticket, concert, camping or motel information, call the festival office weekdays after 10 a.m. at 1-512-257-3600, or write Folk Fest, P.O. Box 1466, Kerrville, Texas 78029.

UTPB to offer art courses

ODESSA — The U.T. Permian Basin art department is sponsoring two courses this summer that offer learning opportunities for the accomplished artist as well as the person who is learning how to express themselves artistically.

Pam Price, associate professor of art, will be teaching "Silkscreen" and "Advanced Drawing II" Monday through Thursday during the University's first six-week session which begins June 4.

The classes can be taken for credit or under the University's "Encore" program, which allows anyone to participate in the class for no credit.

In describing the silkscreen course, Ms. Price said, "One of the more appealing features of this course is the fact that each student will learn how to construct their own silkscreen frame so at the end of the class they'll have the proper equipment to continue working in this medium on their own."

Ms. Price said the other course, "Drawing II," will be equally exciting and rewarding for advanced students as well as beginners.

"There are no prerequisites except a willingness to be creative and I would even recommend this class to business majors because we will emphasize creative problem solving..."

Ms. Price is represented by three major galleries in the Southwest and was awarded the Amoco Award for Outstanding Teaching at the April 24 Honors Convocation of the University.

TCU to conduct dance workshops

FORT WORTH — For the 20th consecutive summer, dance workshops will be conducted at Texas Christian University on both credit and non-credit basis.

Offered for non-credit students aged 13 and up are a two-week session June 10-21 in either ballet, modern dance or a combination of the two as well as a three-week workshop June 24-July 12. Curriculum for the latter includes ballet technique, modern technique, jazz and theory and terminology. Therewill be special coaching by invitation only.

The non-credit courses are open to dance teachers as well as to students with at least three years of prior training.

The five-week session June 10-July 12 may be taken for three hours of university credit in ballet, modern dance or jazz and ballet variations. Students must take at leasttwo technique classes.

Students taking the session for credit must make arrangements for admissions, housing and board through the TCU Office of Admissions, Box 32905, Fort Worth, TX 76129.

Non-credit registration may be arranged through the TCU Department of Theatre, Ballet and Modern Dance, P.O. Box 32889, Fort Worth, TX 76129.

Concert will benefit MHMR, girls' ranch

Hoffbrau Steaks of Midland presents the first annual "Concert in the Park," to benefit the High-Sky Girl's Ranch and the Mental Health/Mental Retardation of Midland. The concert will be held Memorial Day, May 27, at Hogan Park.

It will begin at 4 p.m. with a chili cook-off judged by local area personalities. Music by the Midland based country group "Show Down" will open the festivities. The fireworks begin at dusk with music by Ray Wylie Hubbard and the Buggs Henderson Band; both favorites in the Midland-Odessa area.

All proceeds of this event will be donated to the above charities. The High-Sky Girl's Ranch helps girls from many walks of life. The homeless, the abused, and girls with all types of family problems.

MHMR helps the community with these objectives: to promote mental health, prevent mental illness, and improve the care and treatment of the mentally ill.

Food and beverages will be served at the concert — net proceeds also to be donated to these charities.

This is an opportunity for the business community of Midland and Odessa to band together for a cause that directly benefits the less fortunate citizens of the Permian Basin. Your tax deductible contribution for a block of seats at the concert will not only benefit these organizations that need our help to continue their services, but can benefit the company as well.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

City, regional magazines can help plan trip

By BARBARA TILLMAN

Often magazines which are thought to have little or no educational value turn out to be quite acceptable and useful. One such group, sometimes overlooked, is that of city and regional periodicals. They document ethnic and geographic differences and foster current awareness and a sense of history. Also, people who are planning a trip to a certain area will likely find much needed information. Many cities, and virtually all states, have a publication depicting and extolling the virtues of their particular locale. Naturally, libraries cannot subscribe to each and every one. Usually those magazines which have special appeal to one's own area are the most sought after. Therefore, the following reviews will offer an insight into a few of the regional publications to which we subscribe.

The first one to be discussed has a simple enough title. It is merely called "D." As one might suppose, it is about Dallas. The creative graphics give this magazine a flashy outward appearance and a definite highbrow quality. There are hints on designer discount shopping, exclusive eating clubs, luxury hotel weekend accommodations and faraway vacation planning. There is also an emphasis on business and politics. The magazine is thick and attractive and appeals to many West Texans who like to run over to Dallas for a shopping or business trip.

By contrast, the magazine DALLAS takes an entirely different approach. Published by the Chamber of Commerce, it is a business-oriented periodical reporting economic indicators, individual company profiles, management tips and the merits of the community. It's purpose is to inform and the editors use a no-nonsense and polished style. The magazine has been popular since 1922 and its success has been aided by business executives, investors and civic-minded citizens.

The editors of TEXAS MONTHLY have taken on quite a task. As we well know, Texas is large and very diversified. Every effort is made to create the same effect in this magazine. There are long articles on almost anything that might have made news in the state. Also included are excerpts from recent books, photo-essays, and short newsy and witty bits. Within the more than 200 pages, one can find a monthly guide to events occurring in major Texas cities and regional centers. Camping guides are not left out, and there are special sections on other activities. In short, this is a professionally written publication and its usefulness cannot be denied.

To leave Texas for a change of pace, we find NEW MEXICO MAGAZINE. The land itself is unique and this publication reflects its beauty and difference. The main highlights include events, people, places, cultural traditions and natural resources. It is perhaps the color photographs which lend such charm to the magazine. The illustrations accompanying the articles serve to show prospective travelers what to expect in the state.

SUNSET: THE MAGAZINE FOR WESTERN LIVING is a regional periodical directed specifically to readers in 13 western states (including Hawaii). However, it also has great appeal. There are four editions published which are divided into: Central, Desert, Pacific Northwest, and Southern California-Hawaii. This means that such things as travel and gardening are geared to readers in those areas. The home is a primary focus in this magazine. Anything from remodeling to food and entertainment is included. Practical advice for those in the middle to upper-middle income areas is offered and the articles are usually short and well written. Our library subscribes to the Southern California-Hawaii edition as there seems to be quite a demand for a publication devoted to this particular area.

Other regional periodicals to which we subscribe include ARIZONA HIGHWAYS, OKLAHOMA TODAY, YANKEE and TEXAS HIGHWAYS.

Barbara Tillman is periodicals librarian at Midland County Library.

Perelman humor meshes well with Marx Brothers

"That Old Gang O'Minee; The Early and Essential S.J. Perelman," edited and with a foreword by Richard Marschall; William Morrow and Co.; illustrations; 160 pages; $12.95.

By ED HUTSHING
Copley News Service

A Review

Humor can be lighthearted, merry, ribald, roughhouse, and, above all, jolly. It also can be insane, full of non sequiturs and wildly outrageous. But, like a rare and delicate flower, its moment of exquisite bloom may be extremely brief.

Mark Twain was a jolly humorist, but he had his dark side. Ogden Nash was lighthearted and merry, but he could and did create one of the most viciously humorous attacks in politics with his "Four Prominent Bastards." Anyone widely read can go back all the way to Chaucer for the roots of humor in the English language; certainly in Chaucer's case, it was ribald and raunchy.

S.J. Perelman, however, was unique. And it was the wild and wacky side of his work that meshed so well with the Marx Brothers. Being contemporaries, Groucho and Perelman left it difficult to distinguish between the chicken and the egg. They had, what editor Richard Marschall calls "anarchic humor garbed in playful irreverence." Which brings to mind Chico saying, "Irrelevant is a large gray animal with a long nose."

In this current work, Marschall has collected written sketches and cartoons by Perelman for Judge magazine from 1925 to 1931. Some of the frames of reference will be lost on younger readers who may not be aware of the slang and the prominent figures of the Roaring '20s. At other times, Perelman is straining, attempting to find his style, like a man searching in a dark closet for something he really didn't lose there.

It is a very young Perelman, not the S.J. Perelman of New Yorker fame who actually hit his stride in the 1930s through the '70s. It was in that half century that Perelman became the stylist most aped by young college humorists, Max Shulman being one of his devotees. In my salad years as a writer and an editor for the Stanford Chaparral, I confess to several pastiches of the Perelman persuasion which brought some chuckles around the campus.

Alas, Perelman is gone, Shulman is buried in television and the dearth of humor, generally, is something to be deplored in this country. Certainly the college humor magazines, once the cradle for America's humorists such as Theodor Geisel, Gluyas Williams, Robert Benchley, Peter Arno and Bennett Cerf, as well as serious writers like Robert Sherwood, Corey Ford and Nathaniel West, no longer seem aimed at anything but scatology or infantile behaviorism.

At any rate, this volume celebrates the very young Perelman and should be read with understanding and sympathy. There are flashes here and there of the future Perelman, but they are only glimmers of the rich harvest that is to be. In the later works in this volume, there is evidence of the madness of Groucho's style of switching horses in the middle of a sentence.

For those who cherish Perelman, this book is a must, coupled as it is with his cartoons, which have the daffy quality of his lines. Nothing, however, achieves the brilliance or remains more in my mind than Perelman's line from one of his New Yorker sketches of long years ago:

"I came home to find my wife knitting on an Afghan ... a handsome fellow with limpid brown eyes."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

Monday, May 20, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Good luck remains your companion as you enter a whole new phase of your life. Wonderful gains can be yours if you use all of your talents. Financial barriers fall. Focus on improving your communications skills. You learn something valuable by listening to someone you have previously ignored. Family members draw closer together when they recognize that they have a common goal. Be charitable to someone who once disappointed you. Mate applauds your generosity. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Distinguished actor James Stewart, multi-talented Cher, Mindy Cohn of TV's "The Facts of Life," Yankee broadcaster Bobby Murcer, comedian George Gobel, Israel's Moshe Dayan.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Greater emphasis is placed on written correspondence. Your original ideas and unusual communications skills win you new admirers. Innovative ideas receive a warm reception from higher-ups.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Improve your mind and conversation by reading about current issues. A quiet atmosphere makes concentration easier. Help a loved one without waiting to be asked.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take your time when making important decisions. You want to be sure that you are doing the right thing. Seek other household members' cooperation in keeping expenses down. Accept more invitations.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A friend or professional acquaintance opens the door to new employment opportunities. Let loved ones know that your heart is in the right place. Share the limelight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The bonds of love grow stronger. Couples reach a new understanding. Financial questions could be raised. Give accurate answers. Your honesty convinces someone to take a chance on you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Curb a tendency to be extravagant. If your wardrobe needs revamping, watch for sales. A meeting with key business contacts goes well. Make your point and then sit back and listen.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Adopting a professional approach to your responsibilities impresses someone influential. Your intellectual gifts bring you new financial rewards and greater prestige. Romance soars.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New clients or business agreements will improve your financial position. Be careful not to overreact to controversial or unexpected statements. Someone could be testing you. Maintain your dignity.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If a tempting offer seems too good to be true, perhaps it is! Avoid doing anything that will cause trouble on the domestic front. Romance is more fulfilling than in the past.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Remain true to your ideals. Do not allow distractions or daydreaming to deter you from your goals. Quality is more important than quantity when selecting projects. Go slow in romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Hold on to your money. A business or career decision will be made today. Loved one's declaration sends your spirits soaring. You feel a new contentment. The future looks brighter than ever!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Thank those who have helped you in a tangible way. An unusual artistic idea or business concept could bring in big bucks. Talk out any problems that arise. A younger person offers assistance.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF
©1985 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—There is great argument in our bridge circle about third-hand opening bids. Some of the players are opening any collection of 10 points and then blaming partner for getting them too high when something goes wrong. We would like to hear from you on this subject. E.R.L., Lincolnwood, Ill.

A.—There is almost enough material here for a book, let alone a column. However, if I had to sum up my view of the subject, it would boil down to:

"When you open in third seat with sub-minimum values, always remember that you are doing so despite the fact that you don't have the values for an opening bid, not because you don't have them!"

Whenever you open the bidding, partner will presume that you have a full opening bid and base his responses on that premise. It is the third-hand opening bidder's duty to inform his partner that he does not have an opening bid. He does so by passing at his next turn unless his partner forces by making a jump shift.

That gives rise to another "rule" for opening light. You must be ready to pass any response by partner. Let's consider two hands:

1) ♠5 ♡AJ542 ◇QJ6 ♣J765
2) ♠763 ♡972 ◇AKQ6 ♣854

Both hands have 9 high-cards points and the first hand also has two distributional points. Yet if I were going to open light in third position I would do so with hand 2) but not with hand 1). Why? Because a one heart opening bid would have little lead-directing purpose since any other suit might be better, depending on partner's holding. In addition, should partner respond to one heart with one spade, I would not know what to do. If I bid again, I promise a full opening bid; if I pass, we must be in the worst spot.

By contrast, little harm, and a considerable amount of good, could come out of opening hand 2) with one diamond. No matter what partner responds, you can pass. If the opponents buy the hand, you certainly want a diamond lead and nothing else. It is almost certain that the opponents can't make a low-level penalty double of diamonds. Also, the bid could inhibit the opponents from reaching three no trump since it is quite possible that neither has a sure diamond stopper.

Q.—Are you in favor of a negative one diamond response to a one club opening bid, just in case partner has a "convenient" short-suit club opening bid? J.D., Omaha, Neb.

A.—Unless you are playing a strong club system, I am against bidding one diamond as a negative response. There is nothing wrong with the old-fashioned way of showing a weak hand—pass.

Send any questions for this column to "Goren Bridge," c/o this newspaper. Neither Charles Goren, Omar Sharif or their staffs can undertake to answer all questions personally. However, they will try to answer all questions that include a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

GAME RULES

1) The Midland Reporter-Telegram A.M. 1510 KMND Trivia game is based on skill in answering 10 Trivia questions each week. There will be 14 weekly Trivia Games beginning Monday March 18th and ending Saturday June 22nd, 1985. A total of $2,800.00 will be awarded to first place winners over the 14 weeks. Additionally, 2nd and 3rd prizes will be awarded weekly.

2) Questions for each weekly Trivia Game will be broadcast over AM 1510 KMND at least 4 times per day on the half-hour Monday through Friday, between the hours of 6:00 AM and 6:00 PM. Each question will be read at least two times during the week. The entire set of ten (10) questions each week will have been broadcast over AM 1510 KMND Radio by 6:00 PM Thursday.

3) Questions for each week's game will be numbered from 1 (one) to 10 (ten). The answer to each numbered question must be PRINTED or TYPED on the correspondingly numbered answer line in the official Midland Reporter-Telegram AM 1510 KMND Radio Trivia Game entry form for that week. Each weeks official entry form will be published Monday, Tuesday and Thursday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Hand drawn facsimilies of the entire official entry form also will be acceptable, but machine duplicated copies are prohibited.

4) Contestants may submit multiple entry forms each week. However, each entry form must be mailed postage paid to the designated address in a separate envelope with the number of the weekly game marked in the lower left hand corner of the envelope on the address side. Envelopes must be postmarked by midnight Friday of each week, and be received at the contest address by 2:00 PM of the following Tuesday to be eligible for the weekly drawing.

5) The $200.00 first prize will be awarded to the entrant with all 10 questions answered correctly each week. In the case of more than one entry with all 10 answers correct, a drawing will be held. 2nd and 3rd prizes will be awarded to the next 2 entrants with the most correct answers respectively. Again, in the case of more than one entry form with all 10 correct answers, drawings will be held to determine the 2nd and 3rd prize winners. In the case of no entrants with all 10 correct answers, the prizes will be awarded to those with the most correct answers respectively.

6) Correct answers to each weeks Trivia Game Questions will be broadcast twice on AM 1510 KMND Radio Saturday morning between 6:00 AM and Noon. Trivia Game questions and answers will also be published in the Midland Reporter-Telegram each Sunday. Weekly winners will be announced by both AM 1510 KMND Radio and the Midland Reporter-Telegram each Wednesday.

7) It is not necessary to purchase the Midland Reporter-Telegram to play the Trivia Game. Copies of the MRT are available for free examination at the Midland Reporter-Telegram 201 East Illinois and the Midland County Public Library.

8) All winners must sign a release form acknowledging that both the Midland Reporter-Telegram and AM 1510 KMND shall have the right to publish, publicize, and broadcast his/her name, picture, voice and the fact that he/she won the cash or prize. If a winner is a minor, a parent or guardian must sign a minor's release form prior to the prize being awarded. Winners are responsible for all taxes incurred on prize.

9) NO POSTAGE MACHINE CANCELLED ENVELOPES WILL BE ACCEPTED. Only entries bearing the correct postage and cancelled by the U.S. Postal service or entries hand delivered to the contest address by 6 a.m. Saturday will be accepted.

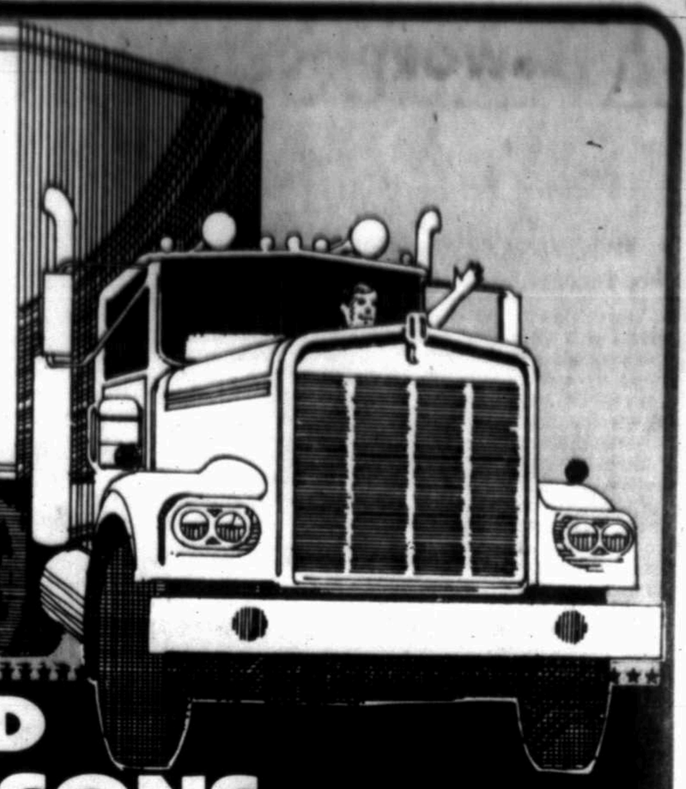

10) Judges decisions will be final in any interpretation of the rules of his game. Employees of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Backcor broadcasting and members of their immediate families are ineligible.

11) The Grand prize, a 4 night cruise on the Mississippi River on the Delta Queen or Mississippi Queen departing and returning to New orleans including round trip air travel to New Orleans. The winner will be chosen in a drawing at the conclusion of the 14 week trivia game. All weekly 1st, 2nd and 3rd prize winners will be entered in the grand prize drawing.

See tomorrows's MRT week #10 official entry form and listen to KMND, AM 1510 tomorrow morning for questions

Avocados more than guacamole

The fruit can be enjoyed year 'round

By PHILOMENA CORRADENO
King Features Syndicate

You're missing out on fine dining pleasure if your acquaintance with the avocado extends only to guacamole or a dainty luncheon salad served in its scooped-out shell. There's so much more in its velvety smooth, creamy flesh. Fit it into any course of a meal — appetizer, soup, entree, side dish, salad or dessert.

California and Florida produce most of the avocados you find in your market. The California varieties, available year round, might be smooth-skinned or, as in their predominant species, the Hass, may have a thick, pebbly skin that turns from green to purple-black as they ripen. They are smaller in size and have a higher oil content than the Florida varieties which are most plentiful from August through December.

Maintain gentle heat when using avocado in cooked dishes. Prolonged or high heat will give the avocado a bitter taste. If adding it to hot food, do so at the last minute and then just heat through.

• • •

Cheesy Crisps might serve as appetizers or accompany soup. They can be prepared three to four hours ahead, refrigerated and baked just before serving.

CHEESY AVOCADO CRISPS
2 pie crust mix sticks
¼ cup warm water
2 teaspoons curry powder
1 ripe avocado, seeded, cubed
Parmesan cheese, grated

Finely crumble pie crust sticks into a bowl. Add warm water and curry powder and work vigorously with a fork until it forms a dough. Continue mixing until dough loses its stickiness. Cut avocado into ½-inch cubes. Divide pastry into 32 equal portions. Flatten each between fingers to form a flat, round patty. Wrap around avocado cubes and smooth out, leaving no cracks or holes. Sprinkle with Parmesan cheese. Place balls on a lightly greased baking sheet. Bake in 375F oven for 15 to 18 minutes or until lightly golden.

Yields 32 appetizers.

• • •

You've a choice of two soups — one a chilled gazpacho that is refreshingly different from the usual; the other, a hot soup with curry powder to complement the delicate, nutty flavor of the avocado.

AVOCADO GAZPACHO
1 fresh avocado
1 (16-ounce) can stewed tomatoes, chopped, with liquid
½ cup pared and chopped cucumber
1 (6-ounce) can cocktail vegetable juice
1 (4-ounce) can diced greem chilies
2 tablespoons finely chopped onion
1 tablespoon fresh lime juice

Peel and cube avocado. Combine all ingredients; mix well. Chill thoroughly.

Yields about 6 servings.

AVOCADO CURRY SOUP
1 quart water
1 whole chicken breast
1 carrot, diced
1 rib celery, diced
½ cup chopped onion
1 teaspoon salt
⅓ cup uncooked rice
1 teaspoon curry powder
1 tablespoon fresh lime juice
1 avocado
1 lime, thinly sliced

In saucepan, combine water, chicken, carrot, celery, onion and salt. Bring to a boil; cover and simmer 25 minutes or until chicken is tender. Remove chicken from broth; stir in rice and curry powder. Simmer 25 minutes or until rice is cooked.

Meanwhile, skin, bone and dice chicken. When rice is cooked, add chicken and lime juice to soup. Heat through.

Peel and coarsely chop avocado. When ready to serve, ladle soup into bowls, top with avocado and garnish with lime slices.

Yields 4 or 5 servings.

Here is a good dish for an informal Saturday company buffet. It's different and delicious.

AVOCADO FIESTA CASSEROLE
2 pounds ground sausage meat
2 medium onions, chopped
2 (1-pound, 2-ounce) cans whole tomatoes
Salt
2 teaspoons oregano, crushed
¼ cup salsa
1 dozen corn tortillas
4 cups grated Monterey jack cheese
2 ripe avocados, seeded, sliced
Sour cream (optional)

Remove sausage from casing. In large saucepan, brown onion and sausage meat; drain fat. Add tomatoes, salt, oregano and salsa; mash to make sauce. Simmer 15 to 20 minutes uncovered; set aside to cool.

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Layer six tortillas on bottom of 13-by-9-by-2-inch baking dish. Spoon one half of meat sauce over tortillas; top with one half of grated cheese. Repeat layers. Bake casserole 25 minutes. Remove from oven; top with avocado slices and sour cream.

Yields 8 to 10 servings.

• • •

For this dish, buy large shells and count on four per serving for an unusual and elegant pasta course. It can be prepared in advance. After stuffing the shells and pouring on the Herby Tomato Sauce, place a piece of plastic wrap directly on the surface and refrigerate up to 3 hours. Add 10 minutes to the baking time specified in the recipe.

AVOCADO-STUFFED PASTA
1 cup grated mozzarella cheese
½ pound ricotta cheese
2 ripe avocados, seeded, peeled, diced
½ teaspoon salt ⅛ teaspoon pepper
1½ teaspoons oregano
1 teaspoon basil
16 large pasta shells
Herby Tomato Sauce

For filling, combine mozzarella, ricotta, avocados, salt, pepper, oregano and basil. Set aside. Cook pasta shells in a large saucepan of boiling salted water for 12 to 14 minutes or until they are cooked al dente. Drain and rinse with cold water. Stuff each shell with one heaping tablespoon avocado mixture.

Pour ¾ of the Herby Tomato Sauce into a shallow baking dish. Place filled shells in sauce. Ribbon remaining sauce over. Cover and bake at 350F for 35 to 40 minutes or until hot.

Yields 4 servings.

Herby Tomato Sauce: Combine 1 (15-ounce) can tomato puree, ½ cup water, 1 medium clove garlic, minced, ¾ teaspoon basil, ½ teaspoon oregano and ¼ teaspoon pepper in a bowl.

• • •

The plainest of meals becomes a feast when it's topped off with an attractive dessert.

AVOCADO PIE
1 prepared 8-inch crumb crust
1 (14-ounce) can sweetened condensed milk
1 ripe avocado, seeded, peeled and mashed
⅓ cup reconstituted lime juice
½ teaspoon salt
Whipped topping
Fresh fruit (optional)
Avocado slices (optional)

In large bowl or blender, combine sweetened condensed milk, avocados, lime juice and salt; blend well. Turn into prepared crust. Chill until set. Garnish, as desired, with whipped topping, fresh fruit or avocado slices.

Yield one 8-inch pie.
