A dead battery?

Failure of a battery and a guidance instrument forced officials of Space Services Inc. of America, the first privately financed U.S. space rocket, to put a 24-hour hold on its launch. Conestoga I originally was scheduled to lift off this morning from Matagorda Island. The launch is now expected to take place some time Thursday.

Reagan, Habib to discuss Middle East peace plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is conferring on his Middle East peace plan with Philip C. Habib, who received the Medal of Freedom for his negotiations in a region where he says the situation remains "extremely tenuous."

The president presented Habib the nation's highest civilian award Tuesday, within an hour of returning to the White House after a 17-day California vacation.

Before a scheduled meeting with the ambassador later today, Reagan planned to host a luncheon in honor of Icelandic President Vigdis Finnbogadottir, who is taking part in a Washington celebration of Scandinavia.

Although Habib and the president saw each other briefly at the White House Tuesday afternoon, the meeting today provided their first opportunity to confer in person after the envoy's recent three-month negotiating trip to the Middle East. During that time, Habib negotiated a cease-fire in Lebanon and the departure of Palestinian guerrillas from west Beirut.

The 62-year-old Habib, a retired career diplomat who was called back to service in 1981, told Reagan and a White House audience that included Cabinet members, senior White House staff members, and diplomats, that "there still is a great deal to do" in the Middle East.

"The situation remains extremely tenuous," he said. "So far, we're on track. I'm a chronic optimist and I'm convinced it's going to stay on track."

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said no further travel plans for Habib have been set.

"He'll report today and give his perspective," Speakes said. "They'll discuss what Habib can do."

He said the ambassador would continue to play a role in the Middle East peace efforts, although Habib's next tasks have not been determined.

The spokesman said that further meetings are planned for Habib at the State Department and that the envoy will also take some time off.

Reagan's presentation of the Medal of Freedom to Habib and today's meetings were intended to focus attention on the Middle East peace initiative that the president announced last week.

Ambassador Philip Habib receives the Medal of Freedom, the United States' highest civilian honor, in White House ceremonies Tuesday. The 62-year-old Brooklyn native was honored for his successful shuttle diplomacy in helping settle the Mideast crisis.

Despite Israel's rejection of the plan and its defiance of Reagan's call for a freeze on new Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank and Gaza strip, the administration held out hope that Israel eventually would soften its position.

John Hughes, the State Department spokesman, said Tuesday that the United States does not regard Israel's rejection of Reagan's Middle East peace proposal as final and plans to apply "proper pressure" on Israel and other parties to get the initiative moving.

"The president is very serious and very determined about this initiative," Hughes said. "That seriousness and that determination are not diluted by the initial Israeli response."

Rejecting Reagan's peace plan, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin sent a letter to the president over the weekend declaring that the West Bank will never again be a part of Jordan.

Reagan had proposed that the West Bank and Gaza strip be granted self-government in association with Jordan.

Hughes said Reagan is devising ways to continue the dialogue about his plan "and to bring proper pressure to bear on the various parties to get this peace initiative moving."

Asked what he meant by "proper pressure," Hughes said the United States would try to be "persuasive" in explaining the merits of the plan to Israel and other parties.

Habib greeted Reagan on the White House South Lawn Tuesday afternoon as the president's helicopter arrived from Andrews Air Force Base.

Among those flying aboard Air Force One was Marjorie Habib, the ambassador's wife. The couple had not seen each other since Habib left for the Middle East early in June at the start of Israel's invasion of Lebanon.

During the nine-minute award ceremony, Reagan said that Habib "accomplished ... the vital first step which made it possible for launching a fresh start in the quest for peace."

Fund plan temporarily saves 12 local IRS jobs

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Although 19,000 Internal Revenue Service employees were spared furloughs after Congressional leaders approved a temporary funding manuever Tuesday, an IRS spokesman said today that a long-term solution is needed quickly to keep a host of government agencies functioning.

According to local IRS officials, the patchwork funding decision helped avoid a layoff of 12 employees in the Midland-Odessa area offices.

Scott Waffle, IRS chief of media relations, said President Reagan's Aug. 28 veto of a $14.2 billion spending bill deprived many government agencies of the supplemental appropriations needed to operate through the end of this year.

Waffle said the IRS layoffs, announced Friday after funding expired for personnel in the tax collection, criminal investigation and employee plans and exempt organizations divisions, have only temporarily been prevented. He said layoffs may again be required in the next one to two weeks unless additional funds are obtained.

Although IRS happens to be the first government agency experiencing the money shortages, Waffle said departments throughout the federal bureaucracy may find their wallets empty within a week or two.

He compared the funding drought to one point last year when the government was forced to suspend operations for about five to six hours while Congress scrambled to arrange supplemental appropriations.

Congressional committee chairmen approved an internal transfer of a reported $24 million in IRS funds Tuesday to avert the impending furloughs, which would have included between 1,300 and 1,400 IRS employees in Texas.

According to Robert Ray, group manager of the Midland IRS office, two members of his 22 person staff would have been furloughed. Jim Garner, of the Odessa IRS office, said ten of his approximately 20 person staff would have been forced out of work.

Waffle said furloughed employees would be out of work and without pay until additional funding could be arranged. If a more permanent solution to the budget problems isn't reached soon, Waffle said the 19,000

Annexation could awaken eastside Midland

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

When the Midland City Council completes the lengthy process of annexing almost 11 acres north and northeast of the city limits in November, the complexion of east Midland could change.

For decades, the east side has been the sleepy part of Midland with little growth in residential or commercial development. Along Fairgrounds Road — now the eastside city limit — and County Road 1160 North are long stretches of open land, some of it verdant with cotton plants.

But developers have plans for growing more than cotton on that land. Out of the 10.94 square miles approved on first reading for annexation by the City Council on Aug. 24, 3.72 square miles was requested by developers who are planning residential and commercial ventures on their land. If these dreams come to fruition, landowners sandwiched in between the requested annexation areas could soon view a fast-paced increase in the amount of traffic on their narrow streets.

And some of the wide open fields now stretching to the horizon will be filled with houses.

MOST OF MIDLAND'S growth has spurted out to the northwest and west sides. But with the boom in Summer 1981 of population and skyrocketing land prices in that area, several developers turned their eyes toward the east side and its large tracts of undeveloped land.

The first request for annexation, according to Richard Hennessy, came in October 1981, and that was from the Midland Homebuilders Association. Hennessy, director of planning and community development for the city, put the staff to studying an annexation plan. Before that was completed, several more requests for annexation of land east and northeast of the city limits hit Hennessy's office.

"We incorporated the other requests into the study," he said.

Unlike the ideal situation in which the tracts of land requested for annexation would run adjacent to each other, these showed up in various clumps. To make the annexation continuous, the city staff added the areas in-between.

The jump of development across the breadth of Midland wasn't expected by the city planning department, Hennessy admitted.

"No, we didn't see the growth out there coming, but we weren't surprised. Land prices were increasing substantially in areas that had the growth. This usually prompts growth elsewhere at more reasonable costs," he said. "That was the principal reason why much of the development was redirected."

AFTER THE HOMEBUILDERS' plan for one section of land, requests for specific developments came from Wright Cowden Jr., Adobe Meadows, Pavilion Park, Midland National Bank, Goodrich Hejl and West Texas Consultants.

While developers claimed land prices along the east side were cheaper, Hennessy said he hasn't noticed plans for larger lots. He pointed out that developers had requested smaller lot-size developments for the northwest side, citing high land costs.

"The density of the development proposed here (northeast) very nearly is the same kind of density being proposed in areas where the growth was in the north and northwest. Maybe it's because the developer wanted a similar density in these new areas or be able to offer this land at substantially lower costs," Hennessy surmised.

According to zoning plans submitted to the planning office by these developers, "it will be quite dense out there."

Adobe Meadows calls for 400 units of single family, 400 units of multi-family and 10.5 acres of retail; Mockingbird Meadows, the Homebuilders Association development, includes 1,600 units of single family, 1,700 to 2,000 units of multi-family and 45 acres of retail; Pavilion Park has plans for 600 units of single family, 400 to 500 units of multi-

The sleepy east side of Midland could explode with development in a few months after the City Council completes annexation of about 11 square miles. Developers' plans for four square miles call for 2,900 single family units, 2,700 to 3,200 multi-family units and 90 acres of retail.

Film to have both Dallas, West Texas premieres

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Former Midlander Terry Jastrow and his wife, actress Anne Archer, announced today in a news conference that the movie "Waltz Across Texas," filmed here last fall, will have its world premiere in Dallas Oct. 12 with a West Texas "Tux and Boots" premiere to follow on Oct. 22 at Midland's Hodge Theater.

The premiere will be complete with movie stars, champagne and country western dancing following the movie, with all proceeds from the evening going to High Sky Girls Ranch. Tickets for the premiere will be priced at $100 per person.

This story didn't begin today, but a number of years ago when Jastrow conceived the idea of filming a love story set against the search for black gold — told in a manner which centered on the positive aspects of human nature. The dream went a step further. He wanted the project to be an independent production filmed in Midland with he and his wife as the stars.

Then he set out to make his dream a reality.

Two years ago Miss Archer and Jastrow were in Midland to announce this project. Then they were looking for

Cause of Indiana representative's death investigated

WASHINGTON (AP) — District of Columbia pathologists are completing final tests to determine the cause of the death of Rep. Adam Benjamin Jr., the 47-year-old Indiana congressman whose body was found in his apartment Tuesday.

Dr. Douglas Dixon, the deputy medical examiner who conducted an autopsy on Benjamin's body, said he found nothing in the initial examination to indicate foul play in the death.

However, he said, no cause of death would be certified until toxicology tests had been completed.

"I have no suspicion that drugs were involved, but the examination would not be complete without such studies," he said. In response to questions, he said he found evidence of heart disease, but that death could not be attributed to that disease until all tests were completed.

Adam Benjamin Jr.

BENJAMIN, A third-term Democrat who represented the steel town of Gary, Ind., was found dead by an aide Tuesday morning.

The aide, Peter Visclosky, went to Benjamin's one-room efficiency apartment a half-block from the Cannon House Office Building after the congressman failed to appear for a morning appointment. The apartment has no telephone.

Benjamin, a graduate of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., and Valparaiso University law school, served 10 years in the Indiana Legislature before winning election to Congress by defeating the then-chairman of the House Rules Committee, Rep. [illegible] J. Madden, in 1976.

He was re-elected easily in 1978 and 1980 and was seeking his fourth term at the time of his death. He was unopposed for the Democratic nomination.

In Congress, he served on the House Appropriations and Budget committees, as well as on the Democratic Steering and Policy Committee. He was chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on transportation.

REP. JAMES R. Jones, D-Okla., the Budget Committee's chairman, said he was "shocked and saddened" by Benjamin's death, calling Benjamin "as solid as a rock as a legislator and as a person." Rep. Floyd Fithian, D-Ind., called Benjamin a "prodigious worker."

> ...Benjamin is "as solid as a rock as a legislator and as a person..." and a prodigious worker."

Benjamin also was a lecturer in the social sciences at Georgetown University in Washington and taught a course on the federal budget process. He was scheduled to receive an advanced degree in international and comparative law from Georgetown next month.

He is survived by his wife, Patricia Ann, and three children.

Meanwhile, Gary Mayor Richard G. Hatcher holds the key to who will succeed Benjamin in Indiana's 1st District. Under Indiana law, Hatcher, as 1st District Democratic chairman, gets to pick the person who will run in Benjamin's place in the Nov. 2 general election.

The 1st District is heavily Democratic and political observers say the nominee is virtually assured of becoming a Congressman.

Gov. Robert D. Orr says he will call a special election to choose someone to fill out the remainder of Benjamin's 1982 term.

Only about 9,000 people have visited the South Pole. The first to reach it on Dec. 14, 1911, were four Norwegians led by Ronald Amundsen. British explorer Robert F. Scott and his team of four arrived second, on Jan. 17, 1912, and all died of cold, scurvy and starvation on the return trip.

Judge surprised by verdict in Hinckley trial

WASHINGTON (AP) — The presiding judge at John W. Hinckley's trial says he was surprised "but not outraged" when jurors found the man who shot President Reagan innocent by reason of insanity.

U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker said public outrage over the verdict resulted from a mistaken belief that jurors would only consider the bloody scene outside the Washington Hilton Hotel.

"I would not have been surprised if it were a guilty verdict," Parker said in a recent interview. "I was not outraged. Hinckley put up a good defense."

The judge said the night of the June 21 verdict, he was working in his chambers as the dinner hour approached and was about to excuse the jurors for the night.

"I was thinking of having them deliberate another half hour or so," Parker said. "That's when they sent a note saying they had a verdict. I asked the marshal to knock on the door, and they gave it to him in a sealed envelope.

"WHEN I OPENED the envelope in the courtroom, I was surprised but I didn't show it," Parker recalled. "I decided to read the verdict myself so nothing would go wrong.

"I heard an outcry in the courtroom. I didn't know what it was. I was later told it was the Hinckleys (the defendant's parents) who were overcome. That was understandable."

Before the verdict, Parker said, "People said 'no jury is going to find that man not guilty by reason of insanity.' They're going to think back to what happened, forget about other evidence and say 'this man is going to be put away. They're going to ignore the evidence.'

"They (the jurors) didn't. They took seriously their responsibility," Parker said.

Prosecutors at Hinckley's trial showed the jury slow-motion videotape of the shooting of Reagan, White House press secretary James Brady and two law enforcement officers outside the hotel on March 30, 1981.

Defense lawyers countered with psychiatrists who testified Hinckley suffered from severe mental illness. They said he was unable to distinguish the real world from his fantasy of forming some kind of magical union with actress Jodie Foster.

IT WAS THE mention of Miss Foster during the trial, and her appearance on videotape once, that prompted Hinckley to leave the courtroom several times during his trial.

Hinckley's absences ranged from several minutes to several hours. But Parker said he was prepared to order Hinckley to leave for longer periods of time if his courtroom behavior began to affect the jury.

"At no time did I discern it was rubbing off on the jury," Parker said. "That I would not have tolerated."

In the wake of the public's outrage over the verdict, several jurors called his chambers, but Parker said he was away at the time and never got back in touch to discuss the case with them.

If he had?

"I would have asked what troubled them," Parker said. "I was interested in hearing from their point of view about the conduct of the trial, how it could be improved."

THREE DAYS after the verdict, five of the 12 jurors testified before a Senate subcommittee that the law should be changed to allow defendants like Hinckley to be found insane but still be punished. One said Hinckley "should have been guilty by reason of insanity."

The judge estimated he has received nearly 1,500 letters since the verdict, most expressing resentment and many blaming him for the jury's decision.

A common thread running through most of the letters is a plea to keep Hinckley in the Washington mental institution where he now resides. Only Parker can order him released.

Parker showed a reporter 98 of the letters, bound in a scrapbook. Only two of them praised the judge. Some were from crackpots, but others were written by doctors, ministers, businessmen and a clinical psychologist.

Typical of the criticism was a letter from a Mobile, Ala., couple who wrote Parker, "This jury and you and this trial with that verdict has let loose a monster in our country that will pursue us for eons to come.

"Our justice system in the country is the laughing stock of other countries, and now they can claim their right to laugh, when our president is shot in plain view of the public and Jim Brady's life is ruined.

"How much more proof is there that our justice system is sick when this crime proves that the victims lose, not the criminals."

Reporter to go on talk shows

BOSTON (AP) — A reporter freed after eight days in jail for protecting a source says he'll rest, then hit the talk-show circuit before deciding whether to return to work at his newspaper.

"I am a little upset and tired," said Paul W. Corsetti, 33, after his release Tuesday from the Middlesex County Jail in Cambridge. "I have continued to think for the last eight days what I'm going to do next."

Corsetti said he has scheduled appearances on talk shows in New York, Washington and Boston.

A 90-day contempt-of-court jail term for the Boston Herald American reporter was commuted to time served earlier Tuesday at the urging of Gov. Edward J. King.

"I've had my job all along," Corsetti said. "It's whether or not I want to return. I've got to have some time off to think about it."

Noguchi's pleas for funds often unread, testifies official

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pleas from demoted coroner Thomas Noguchi for money to improve the administration of his department were routine and sometimes went unread, a high county official has testified.

Noguchi is attempting to regain his job as Los Angeles County coroner, after being stripped of the title by county supervisors alleging he mismanaged his department and sensationalized the deaths of movie stars such as Natalie Wood and William Holden.

Harry L. Hufford, the county's chief administrative officer, was called as a hostile witness Tuesday by Noguchi's lawyers.

In lengthy questioning by Noguchi's attorney, Godfrey Isaac, the administrative officer pleaded a faulty memory on some details of Noguchi's demotion. But he acknowledged that Noguchi had repeatedly sent him letters asking for increases in his budget so that administration of the coroner's office could be improved.

Sometimes, Hufford said, he did not read the letters but staff members informed him of their contents. He said such letters were not unusual and he made no special note of them.

Isaac quoted from a letter written by Noguchi about three weeks before his demotion in which he stated his department could not endure further budget tightening without "serious and irreparable harm to the administration of justice."

The administrative officer recounted a private meeting he had with the former Los Angeles County coroner last March, in which he asked Noguchi to step down.

"Members of the board of supervisors had asked me to request that he resign and seek employment in other county services," Hufford said. "I felt that all the board members wanted it."

He said he met with Noguchi and offered him the alternative of working in another job that would utilize his skills as a physician but would not involve management.

"He indicated to me that his job was his life and he would not accept such an option," Hufford said.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Inflammatory bowel disease may affect height

Dear Dr. Solomon: My nephew has what the doctor calls inflammatory bowel disease. My brother (the boy's father) and his wife are both very tall, but my nephew is at best of average height and probably even shorter. Is this caused by his medical problem and, if so, can anything be done to correct it? — Grace, Nashville, Tenn.

Dear Grace: Where the onset of inflammatory bowel disease occurs before puberty, a youngster's growth may very well be affected. This is usually the result of poor food intake as a consequence of the disease and its symptoms. Good nutritional habits and an adequate intake of calories are particularly important for these patients.

Some patients may require treatment with drugs or even surgery to control the inflammatory bowel disease before they can achieve an adequate dietary intake.

Dear Dr. Solomon: After reading your books and your column for many years, I have a better understanding of the problems that may be caused by overweight. I know from my own experience that as I grow older and become less active, I tend to put on a few pounds each year even though I don't eat any more than I used to. I'm trying to correct this by following the recommendations in your books "Stop Smoking, Lose Weight." What I would like to know is how early the problem starts? In other words, when should a mother be on the lookout for to recognize such a problem in her children? — Mrs. N.C., Tulsa.

Dear Mrs. C.: There is no minimum age at which good nutrition becomes important. In fact you might say that concern for good nutrition should start even efore birth, since what the mother consumes will affect the child.

One study of more than 2,500 nursery school children, three to six years of age, showed that more than 12 percent were already above 120 percent of their ideal body weight. However, these children usually have fewer fat cells than do obese adults, so they may be more successful in achieving permanent weight loss if placed on an appropriate diet.

I would emphasize, however, that there is no minimum age at which nutritious, well-balanced meals that provide an appropriate number of calories become important. Good diet and good health are important at every age.

For A.C. (Pittsburgh): I have treated patients who were obese because of the problems they have in their hypothalamus. The diagnosis and treatment is difficult, but not impossible. It is of great satisfaction to help someone with this problem.

For Ms. C.C. (Philadelphia): Yes, I have seen patients with Idiopathic Hypoparathyroidism, a relatively rare condition resulting from either absence, fatty replacement or atrophy of parathyroid glands. One of my patients had malabsorption and did not absorb nutrients properly. The condition is correctable with proper medication.

Turtle wins his room and board

Owner and trainer Val Brown attributed the victory to Knucklehead's diet of cod liver oil, beef liver, smelt and earthworms.

"He's won his room and board for the year," she said.

Landon carries on love affair with politics

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Alf Landon, the grand old man of Kansas who fell in love with politics when Teddy Roosevelt ran for president, has lost none of his interest in people and news.

As he approaches his 95th birthday on Thursday, the Republican party's 1936 presidential nominee says he's never seen such global disorder.

"In all of my years, I've never seen the world in so much turmoil," Landon said in a recent interview. "There isn't a nation in the world that really has a stable government today, except for the United States of America.

"But we're fortunate. Despite the criticism of President Reagan's domestic policies, his leadership will enable him to go down in historyas a strong leader in a world in turmoil."

Arthritis has forced Landon to give up riding his old horse, Red, and friends must speak up because the old man refuses to wear a hearing aid. Although Landon occasionally forgets a name in a political anecdote from 50 years ago, he pronounces himself in generally good health.

"Of course, at 95 you're not just as active as you have been," he said. "But that doesn't mean I'm not keeping up with what's going on in politics."

Landon remains fiercely loyal to the Republican Party, which nominated him to run against — and get swamped by — Franklin D. Roosevelt 46 years ago.

Landon had a law degree and enjoyed a successful career in the oil business and broadcasting. His 70-year love affair with politics was launched by his father's political fervor in the 1912 campaign of Theodore Roosevelt, who was running under the Progressive (or "Bull Moose") banner.

Twenty years later, at age 45, Alf Landon became the party's nominee for Kansas governor and served two terms, from 1933 to 1937.

It was Landon's tight-fisted operation of state government in the Depression and his handling of the worst political scandal in Kansas history that caught the eye of Republicans nationally.

Landon reacted swiftly and sternly to the revelation that nearly a million dollars in state school fund bonds had been taken from the state treasurer's office in 1933, and the proceeds converted to the personal use of Ronald Finney, son of a prominent Emporia banker.

Within hours, Landon had National Guardsmen stationed at the door to the treasurer's office, with the office closed until a full accounting could be made.

The state wound up losing $708,000, although much of it was recovered through legal action.

"In all of my years, I've never seen the world in so much turmoil. There isn't a nation in the world that really has a stable government today, except for the United States of America."

—Alf Landon

Landon plans to be on hand Thursday when President Reagan delivers a Landon Lecture at Kansas State University. But otherwise, he wants to keep his birthday a quiet occasion and asked his wife of 52 years, Theo, to cancel a family dinner. But his daughter, U.S. Senator Nancy Landon Kassenbaum, will be there anyway.

Although Landon stays out of the limelight, he's far from forgotten. Richard Nixon delivered a Landon Lecture 12 years ago when he was president, and Gerald Ford gave one after he left the presidency.

In recent years, former Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker and Chinese Ambassador Chai Zemin, among others, have called on Landon at his home.

As Landon neared his birthday, he offered no predictions about reaching 100.

"I'm taking them one year at a time," he said. "But for the first time I am coming to think the prospect is not so attractive, with all the world in turmoil and upset like it is."

On the other hand, the prospect of winning football seasons by the University of Kansas Jayhawks and the Kansas State Wildcats excites him.

Warm Midland weather continues

Midlanders will see a replica of the past few days through Thursday as the Permian Basin continues a pattern of warm weather.

Tonight is expected to be fair, as is Thursday, with lows in the middle 60s. Temperatures are expected to climb into the middle 90s once again on Thursday.

Winds will be southerly at a calm 5-10 mph tonight and Thursday.

Tuesday's high of 92 was seven degrees cooler than the record high of 99, set in 1930. The overnight low of 67 was 12 degrees off the record low of 55, set for that date in 1957.

Annexation could awaken east Midland

family, 20 acres of retail and 6 acres of offices; and Ranchland Fairgrounds East, which is the West Texas Consultants project, includes 300 units of single family housing, 200 to 300 units of multi-family and 15 acres of retail.

IF THESE ARE developed fully, it will mean 2,900 single family units, 2,700 to 3,200 multi-family units and 90.5 acres of retail space.

One of the first signs that eastside Midland is waking up will be increased traffic counts. Rambling off names of several major streets in Midland, such as Garfield and Midkiff, Hennessy said, "Look at what's happened to the major streets. And you have to realize that the most recently approved subdivisions at higher densities haven't been built and aren't yet contributing traffic. It's going to go higher on traffic. We'll see more than what we're seeing now."

Hennessy said the city's philosophy concerning annexation is that an area which is beginning to develop should be brought within the city limits so the development can be controlled. "That's why we, the staff, encourage annexation at an early date."

A subdivision in the county can't be controlled unless the developer included covenants. And only if the residents can afford to take the violator to court can the covenants be enforced, said Hennessy.

Because these developments lie outside city limits, "a developer doesn't have to fulfill his active role. In developing an area in a proper fashion, the developer plays a major role. In areas outside the city limits, the developer doesn't fulfill his entire role. He doesn't pave streets to meet city standards. And often he doesn't put in a drainage plan and drainage is a problem for the residents," Hennessy said.

ADDITIONAL PROBLEMS arise when the developer fails to include enough right of way so streets can eventually be constructed wide enough to accommodate all the traffic.

If developed according to city standards, the developer can make sure the streets will be wide enough and pass on his costs to the homebuyer. But in an area that is annexed and the streets are too narrow for the traffic load, the cost of widening those streets are borne by all the taxpayers, according to Hennessy.

"Part of the platting process is to make sure there is enough right of way for a road so the cost is borne by the developer. The developer recovers his cost in the sale of lots rather than have the taxpayers pay for it later."

At the Aug. 24 meeting, residents of Skyview Estates objected to being annexed and the council agreed that if they could get their development platted by Nov. 2, that part would be erased from the annexation ordinance. If so, that would lower the 11 square mile figure.

Skyview Estates will be bounded by Loop 250, Wadley Avenue and County Road 1160 North.

In Hennessy's opinion, location of this development may mean it will come before the council for annexation in a few years.

"THERE WILL BE discontinuity," in the sense that the annexed area will have that piece blocked out of it, according to Hennessy. "If development out there occurs, in a few years it would be in the path of growth" and would have to be annexed. "It would be in the same position as Melody Acres," he said, referring to the last annexation of land north of Midland. It once was left out of an annexation move, but the council went back a few years later to annex Melody Acres when rapid growth in the area became apparent.

However, this theory on annexation hasn't been applied to land south of the city limits.

"There is a sizable development occurring there. The longer it goes, the more difficult it becomes to annex it," Hennessy said, adding that annexation of that land is a major policy decision to be made by the City Council.

But until the council comes up with a decision on that area, Hennessy said, the planning staff will concern itself only with the requests for annexation from landowners.

Breach of contract suit starts Thursday

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A former Odessa insurance adjuster who claims that an insurance company has breached its contract and engaged in unfair trade practices in not honoring her $35,000 claim for theft of wearing apparel and perfumes is to go to trial at 9 a.m. Thursday in federal court in Midland.

The woman, Teresa Ann Douthit, claims her clothes and personal items were taken from her home in June 1981 just after she and her husband, businessman Bobby J. Douthit, had separated. In the lawsuit's petition, the woman says she left the Douthit residence on June 10, 1981, filed for divorce, which subsequently was granted, and, when she returned to the house on June 23 to pick up her belongings, the clothes were gone.

After a "thorough investigation" into the claim, the suit's defendant, American Manufacturers' Mutual Insurance Co., has refused to honor Mrs. Douthit's claim. American holds that the woman has "engaged in a course of fraud and false swearing" by denying "personal knowledge of the identify of the person who removed the clothing, by denying knowledge of circumstances of their disappearance and by submitting values on her proof of loss in excess of those which existed as of the date of the alleged loss."

American's stance apparently will be that her then-estranged husband took the clothes. And since he then was a co-owner of the household insurance policy and her husband, the woman's claim is not valid.

However, the woman, who has since remarried, notes through her attorney, Ruff Ahders of Odessa, that in the October 1981 divorce proceedings, Judge R.L. McKim of the 161st State District Court in Odessa had "stripped (Douthit) of any benefits" of the policy.

"Even if the jury finds that Bobby Douthit stole or destroyed the clothes..., Teresa Douthit may still recover (her loss)," Ahders said in a written reply to American's motion for a summary judgment by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

Ahders is claiming that the insurance company may have deceived Mrs. Douthit on the policy's theft coverage.

"There still is the question of fact as to whether or not the insurance company in this case deceived Mrs. Douthit," Ahders says in a pre-trial motion. "The jury should have a right to listen to the facts and determine the true facts in this case and have an opportunity to rule on whether or not the insurance company in this case misrepresented anything to Mrs. Douthit."

The insurance company is contending that no theft of Mrs. Douthit's wardrobe and personal items took place.

"AMMI's position is that no theft occurred," says defense attorney H. Jerome Gette of Dallas. "There is no coverage."

"AMMI concedes that if a third person, not a party to the insurance contract nor acting under the control of a party to the insurance contract, stole Mrs. Douthit's clothes, then there is coverage," Gette says.

Furthermore, the insurance lawyer says his client is not guilty of unfair tactics and practices.

"Texas case law has consistently held that the mere failure of an insurance company to pay where there is a disputed coverage question is not a violation of the DTPA (Deceptive Trade Practices Act) or the insurance code."

Mrs. Douthit, who has assumed the Morrow surname in her new marriage, says the clothes, footwear, hats and lingerie taken from the Douthit residence were purchased in Europe and in the United States.

Listed among the missing articles were 80 dresses, 38 pair of denim fashion jeans, 62 pairs of shoes, eight pairs of boots, 15 sweaters, 70 blouses, 10 fashion hats, 15 bras, 30 pair of underpanties, 15 handbags, three goosedown coats, three leather coats, six long evening gowns, 25 bottles of perfume and five bathing suits.

Mrs. Douthit's civil case against the insurance company initially was filed in 161st State District Court in Odessa but, at the request of the insurance company, was transferred to federal court in Midland.

The Foreign Ministry's press department chief, Tadeusz Kochorewicz, stopped short of saying the special group was an anti-terrorist commando unit.

"It does not consist of officials but of people prepared for action," he said. "Its purpose is to cooperate with the Swiss authorities to liberate the hostages."

"The safety of diplomats is the duty of the host country and the decision on use of means to liberate the hostages belongs to the hosts," Kochorewicz told foreign journalists.

Poland already has given Swiss police permission to enter its embassy in Bern, paving the way for a possible raid to end the three-day-old siege by terrorists threatening hostages with death unless Poland lifts martial law, frees political prisoners and ends repression.

The Polish government has a special anti-terrorist group that works under the Interior Ministry and has foiled hijackings. The group wears black berets and is armed with revolvers and knives.

Kochorewicz said the occupiers of the embassy had "terrorized" their hostages, "simulating shooting and putting firearms to their backs.

"We also received information from Swiss authorities and from released hostages that the terrorists have anti-tank projectiles, gas masks and are heavily armed," he said.

The Polish army newspaper Zolnierz Wolnosci said Tuesday that the embassy takeover was "the consequence of a coordinated and concerted long-term, anti-Polish action of the imperialist states under the personal patronage and with active involvement of U.S. President Ronald Reagan."

It was the first time the Polish media named Reagan in connection with the takeover, which the U.S. State Department has condemned.

Members of the so-called "Revolutionary Home Army" seized the embassy Monday, threatening to blow up the building and all inside unless the Warsaw government ended martial law within 48 hours. They subsequently pushed the deadline back to Friday and released eight hostages, while holding five.

In a flood of coverage of the crisis, the press also quoted Swiss officials condemning the seizure as a "criminal act." The Polish news agency PAP said the United States had been put in an awkward situation by the siege, and also mocked the U.S. condemnation of the seizure.

After averting funds, Congress back to battle

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress returned to Washington today to resume its battle with President Reagan over spending priorities after temporarily averting the furlough of one-fifth of the Internal Revenue Service work force.

More than 19,000 IRS employees were spared at the last minute Tuesday when two key Republican senators put aside their problems with the Reagan administration and agreed to allow the agency to temporarily shift $24.5 million of its own funds into its payroll.

That stopgap action will get IRS through the next several days. But it does nothing to forestall the chance of wholesale layoffs in several federal agencies within the next few weeks due to Congress' slowness in approving money bills this year. Aides say that unless legislation is enacted quickly, military personnel might find themselves working for free after next week.

The IRS workers — most of them involved in tax collections and criminal investigations — had prepared to begin an unpaid, unplanned "vacation" from work today because Congress and the White House cannot agree on spending priorities.

The IRS furloughs, affecting workers in every state, were threatened by Reagan's veto of a $14.2 billion emergency money bill that included $260 million to help the tax collecting agency meet its payroll for the rest of the month.

The IRS problem temporarily out of the way, Congress was returning from a 2½-week recess to confront the veto, which Reagan cast on grounds the measure was too big for the budget.

Although leaders of both parties concede an uphill battle, the Democratic-controlled House will try Thursday to override the veto. A two-thirds vote in the House and Senate is necessary to enact the bill over Reagan's objections.

If the override fails, Congress will have to write a new supplemental spending bill. But quick action along this route is unlikely because members of both parties are upset by the veto.

Facing those bleak prospects, Sens. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., and James Abdnor, R-S.D., chairman, respectively, of the Senate Appropriations Committee and the subcommittee that handles IRS money, agreed late Tuesday to permit IRS to shift funds to its payroll account. Rep. Edward Roybal, D-Calif., chairman of the House panel with jurisdiction over IRS funds, earlier had lent his approval.

There was no explanation why Abdnor, who steadfastly fought the temporary solution, gave in. But the agreement was announced after he had talked via telephone from South Dakota to Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan in Washington and to Hatfield in Portland, Ore.

Earlier in the day, an Abdnor aide, Mike Freeman, said the senator was unhappy because IRS, without congressional approval, hired 2,000 new employees earlier this year. "If they had not done that, they wouldn't be in this fix," said Freeman.

Funding maneuver may save IRS jobs

employees may again face furloughs around Sept. 15 and employees in the examination and appeals divisions may be furloughed around Sept. 20.

Layoffs in the examination division would effectively close Midland's IRS office, according to Ray, since 19 of the office's 22 staff members work in the examination area. Two Midland IRS employees do criminal investigation work and one is a taxpayer assistant.

But Ray expressed confidence that a solution to the depleted operating funds would be reached.

"I'll be surprised if anybody goes home on furlough," he said. "I just don't see it happening."

The House of Representatives will reportedly consider a vote to overturn Reagan's veto of the spending bill Thursday.

Meanwhile, reports are that the National Treasury Employees Union, claiming that employees are entitled to 30 days notice prior to a layoff, appealed the furloughs before the Merit Systems Protection Board Tuesday.

Jastrow's film to have Dallas, Midland premieres

After securing the funds, most of which came from Texas oil men, they were back last year looking for locations and locals to be a part of the filming.

Last fall, the production company of Astor Corporation, formed by Miss Archer and Jastrow, began and completed filming of "Waltz Across Texas."

The movie, filmed entirely in the Midland area, employed approximately 300 locals — behind and in front of the camera. For many of them, it was their first experience in the movie business. Area locations filmed included a bank, several ranches, a private club, private offices, a restaurant and a country-western dance hall.

In June Jastrow announced that if the premiere wasn't held here, there would be a local screening possibly in conjunction with a charity effort.

He also said at that time that although Astor Corporation was in negotiations with MGM for domestic distribution, that they were "seriously contemplating not selling it to MGM, but instead going with an independent film distributor," because they are "just as effective getting films into theaters as studios."

The independent film distributor named was Atlantic Releasing.

Jastro announced today that they have "closed the deal with Atlantic Releasing. MGM wanted to buy out the rights."

Astor Corporation didn't want to sell all its rights to the film and, as Jastrow said, "independent film distributors are more amenable to listening to the independent film maker."

Among the rights retained by Astor Corporation is the "right to release it in Midland and Odessa. We are arranging the theater and the dollars that come into the box office come into our company."

The movie will open to the public the day after the local premiere.

High Sky Girls Ranch, which will receive the proceeds from the premiere, approached Astor Corporation about being the charity involved in the premiere following Jastrow's June Midland visit.

"They came to us and said they had just completed a fund raising drive for additions at the ranch. They needed just in excess of $1 million and they raised $956,000," Jastrow said, adding, "we were delighted to be of help.

"On the Waltz premiere they'll make enough money to kick them over the $1 million mark," he said.

Those attending the movie on the night of its Midland premiere will, at its close, "be let into the Stardust with their 'Waltz Across Texas' ticket," Jastrow said. Performing at the Stardust that night will be the Waltz Across Texas Band. Both the band and the club appear in the movie, Jastrow said.

The Waltz Across Texas Band is better known locally as Pepper Martin's band.

The movie's theme song is sung by Waylon Jennings who, when he saw the film, according to Jastrow, "went back to Nashville, got his musicians and recorded Waltz for us for free." Smiling, Jastrow said, "It was a beautiful gesture."

— Terry Jastrow

"People are antagonistic toward studios and lend a helping hand toward independent film makers," Jastrow said.

Overseas distribution has already been sold to Warner Brothers, Jastrow said.

"We were at Cannes with Warner Brothers for the film festival," Jastrow said. Although the movie was not ready for release at that time Warner Brothers showed a "12-minute production reel." The response was "very positive."

Part of the movie's appeal for overseas as well as domestic distribution is that it "does not have censorship problems."

One of the advantages of filming independently is cost, Jastow said. "An independent can film for one-third of the dollars a studio can." "Waltz Across Texas" would have cost Warner Brothers "$6 million. We made it for less than $2½ million."

Jastrow, who was by the age of 22 the youngest producer in ABC's history, worked for a number of years for ABC Sports. He still does shows for them including producing the special, History of the U.S. Open, which aired in June, as well as directing ABC's U.S. Open coverage this past summer. In addition, he also directed the British Open in Scotland and the PGA in Tulsa.

Miss Archer, who has starred in "Hero at Large," "Paradise Alley," and "Lifeguard," is currently filming "Second Family Tree," a mid-season release for NBC-TV.

As far as movie making is concerned, Jastrow will begin filming another Texas-made movie this fall. Once again Jastrow is interested in making a movie which deals with "the positive aspects of human character." For now, "That's what I think needs to be made and that's what I'm going to make."

Snelson pleased with bill's passage

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midland Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson was delighted Tuesday with the prompt passage given his legislation to allow school districts to borrow funds before their tax rolls are certified.

The bill was given approval by the Senate without debate, and in barely more time than it took to call the names of the senators.

"Is that a record?" asked Sen. Betty Andujar, R-Fort Worth, as the senators left the chamber. "It may be," Snelson replied.

Snelson said the bill "permits us to solve a problem for a lot of school districts" which have encountered difficulties because their tax rolls haven't been certified, meaning they cannot borrow funds, under existing law.

The problem arose as an "inadvertent result" of the 1979 property tax code changes passed by the Legislature, he said, and affects some counties which have not received figures from their countywide appraisal districts.

Snelson said he knew of no districts in the Midland area which were seeking to borrow funds but were unable to do so, but said he had not checked with all the school districts in the area.

School leaders praise session's timing

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Public school administrators worried about how schools are going to pay their bills say the special legislative session couldn't have come at a better time.

On Tuesday, the first day of the session, the Senate quickly approved a proposal that would allow schools to borrow money before their property tax rolls are certified and the tax rate is set.

Superintendent Billy Reagan of the Houston Independent School District said the inability to borrow money until tax revenue comes in — much of it in late January, five months after school opens — had emerged "as a major crisis in the state of Texas."

"This could be a catastrophic situation," warned executive director Charles Matthews of the Texas Association of School Administrators prior to the Senate vote.

To borrow money for maintenance expenses — primarily teachers' salaries — a school district would have to first adopt a budget. The district could borrow only up to 75 percent of the previous year's income.

The proposal by Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson, D-Midland, was sent to the House on a 28-0 vote.

Although the education bill was the first measure put to a vote, Gov. Bill Clements actually called the Legislature into special session for another purpose, and that was to keep in the Unemployment Compensation Trust Fund from going broke.

Reagan noted, however, in testimony before the Senate Education Committee, "We are particularly grateful this session came along."

On Tuesday, the House Committee on Employment Practices approved Speaker Bill Clayton's bill to replenish the fund set up 44 years ago to pay benefits to jobless workers. The fund recently has been drained by widespread layoffs and would run out of money before Thanksgiving at the current rate of withdrawal.

Clayton's bill would increase the fund ceiling from $325 million to $500 million and increase the maximum tax levied on Texas employers from 4 percent to 6 percent of the first $7,000 an employee makes. In addition to increasing the present minimum rate from 0.1 percent to 0.4 percent, there would be a special tax of 0.3 percent for the last quarter of 1982 and another 0.1 percent tax for the first quarter of 1983.

The special taxes would be used to pay interest on loans from the federal government to pay benefits until the increased taxes would take effect.

Jim Oliver, director of the Legislative Budget Board, said the board had run projections through a computer to come up with the special taxes.

"I hope the Legislative Budget Board's projections are correct. I only say that because if they are not, we're in deep trouble," said Nolan Ward, chairman of the Texas Employment Commission.

He said the fund already had paid out $317 million this year.

Clements said in a statement the problem "has been ballyhooed out of all proportion."

The Dallas City Council today will be asked to designate Dr Pepper's time-and-temperature and roof signs as city landmarks, saving them from demolition slated in compliance with a city sign ordinance.

DALLAS (AP) — The rooftop sign that has reminded residents of this city to take a break for a Dr Pepper since 1948 is in danger of being torn down because of a city ordinance.

But company officials say they plan to fight the 9-year-old ordinance that bans rooftop signs after 1982. Some city officials and conservationists have said they will aid the battle.

City councilmen today will consider a request by the City Planning Commission and the Landmark Committee to exempt the sign from the ordinance by designating it a local landmark.

The art deco neon sign, mounted next to a "10-2-4" Dr Pepper rooftop clock tower, dates from the days when the company urged Texans to "drink a bite to eat."

The sign, next to the 126-foot-3-inch clock tower, was erected in November 1947 and first turned on in the spring of 1948.

Assistant City Manager Victor Suhm has joined in the request by Dr Pepper, which also seeks to protect the company's "time and temperature" ground sign. It is larger and closer to an intersection than the law allows.

"The signs help identify the national headquarters of the Dr Pepper Co.," Suhm said. "Dr Pepper is known internationally, and its identification with Dallas is an amenity to the city."

"Fortune" magazine said the tower was the second-tallest such structure in the state, behind the Mercantile Bank tower downtown, when it was erected in 1947.

Senate salutes member with inoperable cancer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Sen. John Wilson, who has inoperable lung cancer, had to rise from his wheelchair to take the oath of office as assistant presiding officer of the Senate.

"My feelings go so much deeper than just caring about you," Wilson told his colleagues, "and my feelings for this state go so much deeper than just caring about it."

"In fact," he said, "the foundation — the principles — upon which this great country was founded are more alive and well in Texas than anywhere in the world. Those principles are democracy and freedom and free enterprise and Christianity. We are the standard bearer, I think, for the world."

Several senators appeared on the verge of tears Tuesday during Wilson's remarks and the 21 speeches praising him.

When Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby announced that Wilson, D-La Grange, had been elected by acclamation, spectators in the balcony joined senators in giving him a standing ovation.

Wilson, 43 on Tuesday, took the oath of office from Gov. Bill Clements, who said, "I can't think of anything I'd rather do."

Wilson's election as Senate president pro tempore means that he will have an opportunity to serve as governor for a day.

He announced in June 1980 that he had a form of lung cancer that usually leaves its victims 10 to 15 years to live. He was elected to his first term in the Senate that year and is a candidate for re-election this year. Wilson, a rancher, served in the House for eight years.

He has sponsored major legislation in the Senate, and he has undergone cancer treatment since the disease was discovered.

"Truly, John, I think you've added another chapter to profiles of courage," said Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson, D-Midland.

"He does what in his heart is right," said Sen. Carl Parker D-Port Arthur.

"For many of us he serves as the conscience of the Senate," said Sen. Jack Ogg, D-Houston. "If it's character, honesty, integrity or courage, you spell it 'W-i-l-s-o-n.'"

"He exemplifies in my mind what a devoted public servant should be," said Sen. John Traeger, D-Seguin.

Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson, said he points to Wilson "as a good example of what people should elect to public office."

"He shows you don't have to go along to get along," said Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Fadls.

Wilson, in a husky voice, responded by saying that when he and his wife, Pinky, left La Grange on Tuesday, "I had no idea anything like this could be possible."

"I want to thank you for the honor you've bestowed on me today," he concluded. "Thanks a million."

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Dear Mr. and Mrs. Streeter of Paoli, Penn., and Mr. and Mrs. Burns of Glen Ellyn, Ill.: Your sons have found a place to stay at Texas Christian University.

You can reach them at the Tuckers' house. That's TCU Chancellor William E. Tucker and his wife, Jean.

Tim Streeter, a sophomore, had been sleeping where he could — and that included one night in his bedroll on the artificial turf of the football stadium.

Tom Burns, a senior, was ready to call it quits by last Friday — the final day to get a total tuition refund.

Neither could find a place to stay.

TCU, affiliated with the Christian Church, The Disciples of Christ, has a fall enrollment of 6,881, a 4.9 percent increase over last year and the highest in 16 years. Dormitories usually have a waiting list the first four weeks or so until school settles down and students drop out or move to apartments. But the waiting lists are longer this year.

Both young men needed some place cheap and close to campus since neither has a car.

Streeter, 19, had been making daily visits to the dean of students' office to see if it could help.

The Tuckers, meanwhile, had discussed the possibility of housing two students during the crunch because their own children are away at college.

"Bill came home after talking with a vice chancellor," Mrs. Tucker said. "Housing was almost at the desperate point. Realizing our children were away, we asked ourselves, 'why don't we see if our bedrooms are needed until the dormitory situation is settled?'"

A secretary in the dean of students' office, remembering that Streeter had been on the doorstep every day looking for a place to stay, tracked him down on campus to offer him the room.

"You've got to be kidding," was his incredulous reply.

"I just couldn't believe it at first," Streeter said.

The fine arts pre-major said he is trying now to get a bicycle since the Tuckers live about a mile from campus.

Burns, a senior marketing major, is still hopeful of finding an apartment soon. He had resigned himself to returning home, but about 8 a.m. Friday, he got the word. After a few second thoughts, he took the offer.

Said Streeter:

"A big room, private bath, telephone, a refrigerator and use of the washer and dryer.

"It's five times better than the dorm."

Warm Midland weather continues

Midlanders will see a replica of the past few days through Thursday as the Permian Basin continues a pattern of warm weather.

Tonight is expected to be fair, as is Thursday, with lows in the middle 60s. Temperatures are expected to climb into the middle 90s once again on Thursday.

Winds will be southerly at a calm 5-10 mph tonight and Thursday.

Tuesday's high of 92 was seven degrees cooler than the record high of 99, set in 1930. The overnight low of 67 was 12 degrees off the record low of 55, set for that date in 1957.

Annexation could awaken east Midland

family, 20 acres of retail and 6 acres of offices; and Ranchland Fairgrounds East, which is the West Texas Consultants project, includes 300 units of single family housing, 200 to 300 units of multi-family and 15 acres of retail.

IF THESE ARE developed fully, it will mean 2,900 single family units, 2,700 to 3,200 multi-family units and 90.5 acres of retail space.

One of the first signs that eastside Midland is waking up will be increased traffic counts. Rambling off names of several major streets in Midland, such as Garfield and Midkiff, Hennessy said, "Look at what's happened to the major streets. And you have to realize that the most recently approved subdivisions at higher densities haven't been built and aren't yet contributing traffic. It's going to go higher on traffic. We'll see more than what we're seeing now."

Hennessy said the city's philosophy concerning annexation is that an area which is beginning to develop should be brought within the city limits so the development can be controlled. "That's why we, the staff, encourage annexation at an early date."

A subdivision in the county can't be controlled unless the developer included covenants. And only if the residents can afford to take the violator to court can the covenants be enforced, said Hennessy.

Because these developments lie outside city limits, "a developer doesn't have to fulfill his active role. In developing an area in a proper fashion, the developer plays a major role. In areas outside the city limits, the developer doesn't fulfill his entire role. He doesn't pave streets to meet city standards. And often he doesn't put in a drainage plan and drainage is a problem for the residents," Hennessy said.

ADDITIONAL PROBLEMS arise when the developer fails to include enough right of way so streets can eventually be constructed wide enough to accommodate all the traffic.

If developed according to city standards, the developer can make sure the streets will be wide enough and pass on his costs to the homebuyer. But in an area that is annexed and the streets are too narrow for the traffic load, the cost of widening those streets are borne by all the taxpayers, according to Hennessy.

"Part of the platting process is to make sure there is enough right of way for a road so the cost is borne by the developer. The developer recovers his cost in the sale of lots rather than have the taxpayers pay for it later."

At the Aug. 24 meeting, residents of Skyview Estates objected to being annexed and the council agreed that if they could get their development platted by Nov. 2, that part would be erased from the annexation ordinance. If so, that would lower the 11 square mile figure.

Skyview Estates will be bounded by Loop 250, Wadley Avenue and County Road 1160 North.

In Hennessy's opinion, location of this development may mean it will come before the council for annexation in a few years.

"THERE WILL BE discontinuity," in the sense that the annexed area will have that piece blocked out of it, according to Hennessy. "If development out there occurs, in a few years it would be in the path of growth" and would have to be annexed. "It would be in the same position as Melody Acres," he said, referring to the last annexation of land north of Midland. It once was left out of an annexation move, but the council went back a few years later to annex Melody Acres when rapid growth in the area became apparent.

However, this theory on annexation hasn't been applied to land south of the city limits.

"There is a sizable development occurring there. The longer it goes, the more difficult it becomes to annex it," Hennessy said, adding that annexation of that land is a major policy decision to be made by the City Council.

But until the council comes up with a decision on that area, Hennessy said, the planning staff will concern itself only with the requests for annexation from landowners.

Breach of contract suit starts Thursday

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A former Odessa insurance adjuster who claims that an insurance company has breached its contract and engaged in unfair trade practices in not honoring her $35,000 claim for theft of wearing apparel and perfumes is to go to trial at 9 a.m. Thursday in federal court in Midland.

The woman, Teresa Ann Douthit, claims her clothes and personal items were taken from her home in June 1981 just after she and her husband, businessman Bobby J. Douthit, had separated. In the lawsuit's petition, the woman says she left the Douthit residence on June 10, 1981, filed for divorce, which subsequently was granted, and, when she returned to the house on June 23 to pick up her belongings, the clothes were gone.

After a "thorough investigation" into the claim, the suit's defendant, American Manufacturers' Mutual Insurance Co., has refused to honor Mrs. Douthit's claim. American holds that the woman has "engaged in a course of fraud and false swearing" by denying "personal knowledge of the identify of the person who removed the clothing, by denying knowledge of circumstances of their disappearance and by submitting values on her proof of loss in excess of those which existed as of the date of the alleged loss."

American's stance apparently will be that her then-estranged husband took the clothes. And since he then was a co-owner of the household insurance policy and her husband, the woman's claim is not valid.

However, the woman, who has since remarried, notes through her attorney, Ruff Ahders of Odessa, that in the October 1981 divorce proceedings, Judge R.L. McKim of the 161st State District Court in Odessa had "stripped (Douthit) of any benefits" of the policy.

"Even if the jury finds that Bobby Douthit stole or destroyed the clothes..., Teresa Douthit may still recover (her loss)," Ahders said in a written reply to American's motion for a summary judgment by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

Ahders is claiming that the insurance company may have deceived Mrs. Douthit on the policy's theft coverage.

"There still is the question of fact as to whether or not the insurance company in this case deceived Mrs. Douthit," Ahders says in a pre-trial motion. "The jury should have a right to listen to the facts and determine the true facts in this case and have an opportunity to rule on whether or not the insurance company in this case misrepresented anything to Mrs. Douthit."

The insurance company is contending that no theft of Mrs. Douthit's wardrobe and personal items took place.

"AMMI's position is that no theft occurred," says defense attorney H. Jerome Gette of Dallas. "There is no coverage."

"AMMI concedes that if a third person, not a party to the insurance contract nor acting under the control of a party to the insurance contract, stole Mrs. Douthit's clothes, then there is coverage," Gette says.

Furthermore, the insurance lawyer says his client is not guilty of unfair tactics and practices.

"Texas case law has consistently held that the mere failure of an insurance company to pay where there is a disputed coverage question is not a violation of the DTPA (Deceptive Trade Practices Act) or the insurance code."

Mrs. Douthit, who has assumed the Morrow surname in her new marriage, says the clothes, footwear, hats and lingerie taken from the Douthit residence were purchased in Europe and in the United States.

Listed among the missing articles were 80 dresses, 38 pair of denim fashion jeans, 62 pairs of shoes, eight pairs of boots, 15 sweaters, 70 blouses, 10 fashion hats, 15 bras, 30 pair of underpanties, 15 handbags, three goosedown coats, three leather coats, six long evening gowns, 25 bottles of perfume and five bathing suits.

Mrs. Douthit's civil case against the insurance company initially was filed in 161st State District Court in Odessa but, at the request of the insurance company, was transferred to federal court in Midland.

The Foreign Ministry's press department chief, Tadeusz Kochorewicz, stopped short of saying the special group was an anti-terrorist commando unit.

"It does not consist of officials but of people prepared for action," he said. "Its purpose is to cooperate with the Swiss authorities to liberate the hostages."

"The safety of diplomats is the duty of the host country and the decision on use of means to liberate the hostages belongs to the hosts," Kochorewicz told foreign journalists.

Poland already has given Swiss police permission to enter its embassy in Bern, paving the way for a possible raid to end the three-day-old siege by terrorists threatening hostages with death unless Poland lifts martial law, frees political prisoners and ends repression.

The Polish government has a special anti-terrorist group that works under the Interior Ministry and has foiled hijackings. The group wears black berets and is armed with revolvers and knives.

Kochorewicz said the occupiers of the embassy had "terrorized" their hostages, "simulating shooting and putting firearms to their backs.

"We also received information from Swiss authorities and from released hostages that the terrorists have anti-tank projectiles, gas masks and are heavily armed," he said.

The Polish army newspaper Zolnierz Wolnosci said Tuesday that the embassy takeover was "the consequence of a coordinated and concerted long-term, anti-Polish action of the imperialist states under the personal patronage and with active involvement of U.S. President Ronald Reagan."

It was the first time the Polish media named Reagan in connection with the takeover, which the U.S. State Department has condemned.

Members of the so-called "Revolutionary Home Army" seized the embassy Monday, threatening to blow up the building and all inside unless the Warsaw government ended martial law within 48 hours. They subsequently pushed the deadline back to Friday and released eight hostages, while holding five.

In a flood of coverage of the crisis, the press also quoted Swiss officials condemning the seizure as a "criminal act." The Polish news agency PAP said the United States had been put in an awkward situation by the siege, and also mocked the U.S. condemnation of the seizure.

After averting funds, Congress back to battle

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress returned to Washington today to resume its battle with President Reagan over spending priorities after temporarily averting the furlough of one-fifth of the Internal Revenue Service work force.

More than 19,000 IRS employees were spared at the last minute Tuesday when two key Republican senators put aside their problems with the Reagan administration and agreed to allow the agency to temporarily shift $24.5 million of its own funds into its payroll.

That stopgap action will get IRS through the next several days. But it does nothing to forestall the chance of wholesale layoffs in several federal agencies within the next few weeks due to Congress' slowness in approving money bills this year. Aides say that unless legislation is enacted quickly, military personnel might find themselves working for free after next week.

The IRS workers — most of them involved in tax collections and criminal investigations — had prepared to begin an unpaid, unplanned "vacation" from work today because Congress and the White House cannot agree on spending priorities.

The IRS furloughs, affecting workers in every state, were threatened by Reagan's veto of a $14.2 billion emergency money bill that included $260 million to help the tax collecting agency meet its payroll for the rest of the month.

The IRS problem temporarily out of the way, Congress was returning from a 2½-week recess to confront the veto, which Reagan cast on grounds the measure was too big for the budget.

Although leaders of both parties concede an uphill battle, the Democratic-controlled House will try Thursday to override the veto. A two-thirds vote in the House and Senate is necessary to enact the bill over Reagan's objections.

If the override fails, Congress will have to write a new supplemental spending bill. But quick action along this route is unlikely because members of both parties are upset by the veto.

Facing those bleak prospects, Sens. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., and James Abdnor, R-S.D., chairman, respectively, of the Senate Appropriations Committee and the subcommittee that handles IRS money, agreed late Tuesday to permit IRS to shift funds to its payroll account. Rep. Edward Roybal, D-Calif., chairman of the House panel with jurisdiction over IRS funds, earlier had lent his approval.

There was no explanation why Abdnor, who steadfastly fought the temporary solution, gave in. But the agreement was announced after he had talked via telephone from South Dakota to Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan in Washington and to Hatfield in Portland, Ore.

Earlier in the day, an Abdnor aide, Mike Freeman, said the senator was unhappy because IRS, without congressional approval, hired 2,000 new employees earlier this year. "If they had not done that, they wouldn't be in this fix," said Freeman.

Funding maneuver may save IRS jobs

employees may again face furloughs around Sept. 15 and employees in the examination and appeals divisions may be furloughed around Sept. 20.

Layoffs in the examination division would effectively close Midland's IRS office, according to Ray, since 19 of the office's 22 staff members work in the examination area. Two Midland IRS employees do criminal investigation work and one is a taxpayer assistant.

But Ray expressed confidence that a solution to the depleted operating funds would be reached.

"I'll be surprised if anybody goes home on furlough," he said. "I just don't see it happening."

The House of Representatives will reportedly consider a vote to overturn Reagan's veto of the spending bill Thursday.

Meanwhile, reports are that the National Treasury Employees Union, claiming that employees are entitled to 30 days notice prior to a layoff, appealed the furloughs before the Merit Systems Protection Board Tuesday.

After securing the funds, most of which came from Texas oil men, they were back last year looking for locations and locals to be a part of the filming.

Last fall, the production company of Astor Corporation, formed by Miss Archer and Jastrow, began and completed filming of "Waltz Across Texas."

The movie, filmed entirely in the Midland area, employed approximately 300 locals — behind and in front of the camera. For many of them, it was their first experience in the movie business. Area locations filmed included a bank, several ranches, a private club, private offices, a restaurant and a country-western dance hall.

In June Jastrow announced that if the premiere wasn't held here, there would be a local screening possibly in conjunction with a charity effort.

He also said at that time that although Astor Corporation was in negotiations with MGM for domestic distribution, that they were "seriously contemplating not selling it to MGM, but instead going with an independent film distributor," because they are "just as effective getting films into theaters as studios."

The independent film distributor named was Atlantic Releasing.

Jastro announced today that they have "closed the deal with Atlantic Releasing. MGM wanted to buy out the rights."

Astor Corporation didn't want to sell all its rights to the film and, as Jastrow said, "independent film distributors are more amenable to listening to the independent film maker."

Among the rights retained by Astor Corporation is the "right to release it in Midland and Odessa. We are arranging the theater and the dollars that come into the box office come into our company."

The movie will open to the public the day after the local premiere.

High Sky Girls Ranch, which will receive the proceeds from the premiere, approached Astor Corporation about being the charity involved in the premiere following Jastrow's June Midland visit.

"They came to us and said they had just completed a fund raising drive for additions at the ranch. They needed just in excess of $1 million and they raised $956,000," Jastrow said, adding, "we were delighted to be of help."

"On the Waltz premiere they'll make enough money to kick them over the $1 million mark," he said.

Those attending the movie on the night of its Midland premiere will, at its close, "be let into the Stardust with their 'Waltz Across Texas' ticket," Jastrow said. Performing at the Stardust that night will be the Waltz Across Texas Band. Both the band and the club appear in the movie, Jastrow said.

The Waltz Across Texas Band is better known locally as Pepper Martin's band.

The movie's theme song is sung by Waylon Jennings who, when he saw the film, according to Jastrow, "went back to Nashville, got his musicians and recorded Waltz for us for free." Smiling, Jastrow said, "It was a beautiful gesture."

"There's nothing new about what I'm doing. We can make studio pictures — first class studio pictures — for the popular price."

— Terry Jastrow

"People are antagonistic toward studios and lend a helping hand toward independent film makers," Jastrow said.

Overseas distribution has already been sold to Warner Brothers, Jastrow said.

"We were at Cannes with Warner Brothers for the film festival," Jastrow said. Although the movie was not ready for release at that time Warner Brothers showed a "12-minute production reel." The response was "very positive."

Part of the movie's appeal for overseas as well as domestic distribution is that it "does not have censorship problems."

One of the advantages of filming independently is cost, Jastow said. "An independent can film for one-third of the dollars a studio can." "Waltz Across Texas" would have cost Warner Brothers "$6 million. We made it for less than $2½ million."

"There's nothing new about what I'm doing," Jastrow said. "We can make studio pictures — first class studio pictures — for the popular price."

Jastrow, who was by the age of 22 the youngest producer in ABC's history, worked for a number of years for ABC Sports. He still does shows for them including producing the special, History of the U.S. Open, which aired in June, as well as directing ABC's U.S. Open coverage this past summer. In addition, he also directed the British Open in Scotland and the PGA in Tulsa.

Miss Archer, who has starred in "Hero at Large," "Paradise Alley," and "Lifeguard," is currently filming "Second Family Tree," a mid-season release for NBC-TV.

As far as movie making is concerned, Jastrow will begin filming another Texas-made movie this fall. Once again Jastrow is interested in making a movie which deals with "the positive aspects of human character." For now, "That's what I think needs to be made and that's what I'm going to make."

Snelson pleased with bill's passage

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midland Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson was delighted Tuesday with the prompt passage given his legislation to allow school districts to borrow funds before their tax rolls are certified.

The bill was given approval by the Senate without debate, and in barely more time than it took to call the names of the senators.

"Is that a record?" asked Sen. Betty Andujar, R-Fort Worth, as the senators left the chamber. "It may be," Snelson replied.

Snelson said the bill "permits us to solve a problem for a lot of school districts" which have encountered difficulties because their tax rolls haven't been certified, meaning they cannot borrow funds, under existing law.

The problem arose as an "inadvertent result" of the 1979 property tax code changes passed by the Legislature, he said, and affects some counties which have not received figures from their countywide appraisal districts.

Snelson said he knew of no districts in the Midland area which were seeking to borrow funds but were unable to do so, but said he had not checked with all the school districts in the area.

The Dallas City Council today will be asked to designate Dr Pepper's time-and-temperature and roof signs as city landmarks, saving them from demolition slated in compliance with a city sign ordinance.

DALLAS (AP) — The rooftop sign that has reminded residents of this city to take a break for a Dr Pepper since 1948 is in danger of being torn down because of a city ordinance.

But company officials say they plan to fight the 9-year-old ordinance that bans rooftop signs after 1982. Some city officials and conservationists have said they will aid the battle.

City councilmen today will consider a request by the City Planning Commission and the Landmark Committee to exempt the sign from the ordinance by designating it a local landmark.

The art deco neon sign, mounted next to a "10-2-4" Dr Pepper rooftop clock tower, dates from the days when the company urged Texans to "drink a bite to eat."

The sign, next to the 126-foot-3-inch clock tower, was erected in November 1947 and first turned on in the spring of 1948.

Assistant City Manager Victor Suhm has joined in the request by Dr Pepper, which also seeks to protect the company's "time and temperature" ground sign. It is larger and closer to an intersection than the law allows.

"The signs help identify the national headquarters of the Dr Pepper Co.," Suhm said. "Dr Pepper is known internationally, and its identification with Dallas is an amenity to the city."

"Fortune" magazine said the tower was the second-tallest such structure in the state, behind the Mercantile Bank tower downtown, when it was erected in 1947.

School leaders praise session's timing

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Public school administrators worried about how schools are going to pay their bills say the special legislative session couldn't have come at a better time.

On Tuesday, the first day of the session, the Senate quickly approved a proposal that would allow schools to borrow money before their property tax rolls are certified and the tax rate is set.

Superintendent Billy Reagan of the Houston Independent School District said the inability to borrow money until tax revenue comes in — much of it in late January, five months after school opens — had emerged "as a major crisis in the state of Texas."

"This could be a catastrophic situation," warned executive director Charles Matthews of the Texas Association of School Administrators prior to the Senate vote.

To borrow money for maintenance expenses — primarily teachers' salaries — a school district would have to first adopt a budget. The district could borrow only up to 75 percent of the previous year's income.

The proposal by Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson, D-Midland, was sent to the House on a 28-0 vote.

Although the education bill was the first measure put to a vote, Gov. Bill Clements actually called the Legislature into special session for another purpose, and that was to keep in the Unemployment Compensation Trust Fund from going broke.

Reagan noted, however, in testimony before the Senate Education Committee, "We are particularly grateful this session came along."

On Tuesday, the House Committee on Employment Practices approved Speaker Bill Clayton's bill to replenish the fund set up 44 years ago to pay benefits to jobless workers. The fund recently has been drained by widespread layoffs and would run out of money before Thanksgiving at the current rate of withdrawal.

Clayton's bill would increase the fund ceiling from $325 million to $500 million and increase the maximum tax levied on Texas employers from 4 percent to 6 percent of the first $7,000 an employee makes. In addition to increasing the present minimum rate from 0.1 percent to 0.4 percent, there would be a special tax of 0.3 percent for the last quarter of 1982 and another 0.1 percent tax for the first quarter of 1983.

The special taxes would be used to pay interest on loans from the federal government to pay benefits until the increased taxes would take effect.

Jim Oliver, director of the Legislative Budget Board, said the board had run projections through a computer to come up with the special taxes.

"I hope the Legislative Budget Board's projections are correct. I only say that because if they are not, we're in deep trouble," said Nolan Ward, chairman of the Texas Employment Commission.

He said the fund already had paid out $317 million this year.

Clements said in a statement the problem "has been ballyhooed out of all proportion."

Senate salutes member with inoperable cancer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Sen. John Wilson, who has inoperable lung cancer, had to rise from his wheelchair to take the oath of office as assistant presiding officer of the Senate.

"My feelings go so much deeper than just caring about you," Wilson told his colleagues, "and my feelings for this state go so much deeper than just caring about it."

"In fact," he said, "the foundation — the principles — upon which this great country was founded are more alive and well in Texas than anywhere in the world. Those principles are democracy and freedom and free enterprise and Christianity. We are the standard bearer, I think, for the world."

Several senators appeared on the verge of tears Tuesday during Wilson's remarks and the 21 speeches praising him.

When Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby announced that Wilson, D-La Grange, had been elected by acclamation, spectators in the balcony joined senators in giving him a standing ovation.

Wilson, 43 on Tuesday, took the oath of office from Gov. Bill Clements, who said, "I can't think of anything I'd rather do."

Wilson's election as Senate president pro tempore means that he will have an opportunity to serve as governor for a day.

He announced in June 1980 that he had a form of lung cancer that usually leaves its victims 10 to 15 years to live. He was elected to his first term in the Senate that year and is a candidate for re-election this year. Wilson, a rancher, served in the House for eight years.

He has sponsored major legislation in the Senate, and he has undergone cancer treatment since the disease was discovered.

"Truly, John, I think you've added another chapter to profiles of courage," said Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson, D-Midland.

"He does what in his heart is right," said Sen. Carl Parker D-Port Arthur.

"For many of us he serves as the conscience of the Senate," said Sen. Jack Ogg, D-Houston. "If it's character, honesty, integrity or courage, you spell it 'W-i-l-s-o-n.'"

"He exemplifies in my mind what a devoted public servant should be," said Sen. John Traeger, D-Seguin.

Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson, said he points to Wilson "as a good example of what people should elect to public office."

"He shows you don't have to go along to get along," said Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Fadls.

Wilson, in a husky voice, responded by saying that when he and his wife, Pinky, left La Grange on Tuesday, "I had no idea anything like this could be possible."

"I want to thank you for the honor you've bestowed on me today," he concluded. "Thanks a million."

TCU chancellor housing students

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Dear Mr. and Mrs. Streeter of Paoli, Penn., and Mr. and Mrs. Burns of Glen Ellyn, Ill.: Your sons have found a place to stay at Texas Christian University.

You can reach them at the Tuckers' house. That's TCU Chancellor William E. Tucker and his wife, Jean.

Tim Streeter, a sophomore, had been sleeping where he could — and that included one night in his bedroll on the artificial turf of the football stadium.

Tom Burns, a senior, was ready to call it quits by last Friday — the final day to get a total tuition refund.

Neither could find a place to stay.

TCU, affiliated with the Christian Church, The Disciples of Christ, has a fall enrollment of 6,881, a 4.9 percent increase over last year and the highest in 16 years. Dormitories usually have a waiting list the first four weeks or so until school settles down and students drop out or move to apartments. But the waiting lists are longer this year.

Both young men needed some place cheap and close to campus since neither has a car.

Streeter, 19, had been making daily visits to the dean of students' office to see if it could help.

The Tuckers, meanwhile, had discussed the possibility of housing two students during the crunch because their own children are away at college.

"Bill came home after talking with a vice chancellor," Mrs. Tucker said. "Housing was almost at the desperate point. Realizing our children were away, we asked ourselves, 'why don't we see if our bedrooms are needed until the dormitory situation is settled?'"

A secretary in the dean of students' office, remembering that Streeter had been on the doorstep every day looking for a place to stay, tracked him down on campus to offer him the room.

"You've got to be kidding," was his incredulous reply.

"I just couldn't believe it at first," Streeter said.

The fine arts pre-major said he is trying now to get a bicycle since the Tuckers live about a mile from campus.

Burns, a senior marketing major, is still hopeful of finding an apartment soon. He had resigned himself to returning home, but about 8 a.m. Friday, he got the word. After a few second thoughts, he took the offer.

Said Streeter:

"A big room, private bath, telephone, a refrigerator and use of the washer and dryer.

"It's five times better than the dorm."

Health inspectors see role as educators

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

It has been estimated that the food and beverage service industry ranks fourth among all the industries in the nation, making it one of man's principal occupations.

Because of changing lifestyles, eating out has become both popular and necessary.

Therefore, good food service should be a source of pride for any community.

And the people who enforce city codes and state laws regarding sanitary food and establishments are the health inspectors, or sanitarians.

But the health inspector has usually been stereotyped as an impersonal, adverse agent who visits a city's food establishments unannounced for the purpose of closing down a particular business.

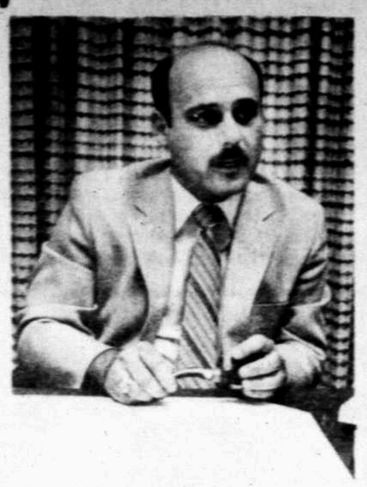
IN FACT, Donald C. Goodrum, chief sanitarian at Midland City-County health department, said a health inspector strives to be a "personable, fair professional who works to develop a good relationship with the food industry's owners to produce maximum results in terms of food protection."

Although the health inspector's visit is unannounced, he does not arbitrarily give an unfavorable report.

"Our sanitarians are educators," he said. "We don't immediately seek legal action against every violation that we find. We attempt to work closely with owners to correct problem situations and assure the public that they're getting the best food service possible in Midland.

"The cooperation between this health department and Midland food service establishments is very good. We must rely on industry to manage itself for the most part. Voluntary compliance is far better than forced compliance."

The Midland City-County Health Department inspects all public and semi-public establishments, such as hospitals, schools, employee cafeterias, and office building dining rooms. The health department also inspects limited types of establishments, including private clubs, fraternal orders, societies, churches and religious organizations.



"We don't immediately seek legal action against every violation that we find. We attempt to work closely with owners to correct problem situations..."
— Donald Goodrum

MOBILE FOOD vendors are also supervised by the health department. Goodrum said these vendors must have food that is prepackaged in an approved environment and must have an approved vehicle to maintain temperatures.

Goodrum said 600 permits were granted food establishments in Midland County in 1982. The establishments must have these permits renewed annually.

The city code and state laws govern the food establishments. Although the city code requires one inspection every six months, Goodrum said the department makes inspections at the frequency needed to ensure compliance.

"Food service permits can be temporarily suspended for failure to comply with any of the standards," he said. "A permit can also be suspended for repeat violations. The permit is immediately suspended if there are gross violations such as total lack of refrigeration or sewage backup into the establishment — all food service operations immediately cease. Voluntary closure of the establishment is usually the case here."

REGARDING THE sanitarians, their role and the philosophy of the department, Goodrum added: "We operate this division (health inspection) of our health department with four sanitarians — Walter Teinert, Fred Sperry, Jean Parkinson and Alice Cone. In addition to education and experience, the sanitarian must be in touch with the community, he must be personable, be public relations-minded and above all must be able to use good judgment. Our sanitarians strive to be fair, impartial and consistent.

"Because of the nature of some establishments, more inspections are needed than for others," he said. "We attempt to see each business every six to eight weeks."

He added that an inspection is made every time a complaint is registered at the department, assuring confidentiality of the complainants.

"When we make an inspection, we look for many things," Goodrum explained. "The food must be from an approved source, it must be clean, free from spoilage, free from adulteration and misbranding.

"THE FOOD MUST be safe for human consumption. The food must be protected while stored, prepared, displayed, served or transported. It must be free of contamination. All perishable food must be kept at proper temperatures — 45 degrees or less and 140 degrees and above."

According to Goodrum, food protection programs are preventive programs and it is the citizens who are concerned with the regulation of restaurants and other food establishments.

"Citizens' complaints are very valuable to us because they tell us where the problems are before we could ever find them ourselves," he noted. "The food industry is very competetive. The public is constantly demanding higher levels of food sanitation. Midland demands the best; therefore, we have the backing of the community and industry — our problems here are less than in some cities that don't place a high priority on food service."

When there are problems, it has usually been attributed to the establishment's management — either because of money or because "they don't see a need to remedy the situation," Goodrum said.

"THE CONDITION OF a restaurant is relative," he explained. "What is clean to one operator would be filthy to another. Restaurants are owned, managed and operated by people with different values and priorities. Everyone recognizes that good sanitation means good business, but achieving good sanitation costs money.

"It is a price that must be paid for safe food, water, pure air and all the other factors which reduce disease and increase enjoyment and well being."

According to Goodrum "the price" of disease is greater than keeping the establishments sanitary.

"The possibility of foodborne disease is ever present," he said. "Foodborne disease can be caused by an infected worker, faulty equipment, negligence, improper practices or poor hygienic practices."

While the public will judge a restaurant on its surface conditions, it is rarely aware of those conditions of immediate public health concern, such as refrigeration, insect and rodent activity, plumbing and personnel practices, Goodrum said.

"WE SEE THAT poisonous or toxic materials are identified, properly stored and used," Goodrum explained. "Food service personnel must maintain a high degree of personal cleanliness. Food equipment and utensils must be properly designed and in good repair. Food contact surfaces must be clean and sanitized. Proper storage and handling of equipment and utensils is important. We also check to see that the dish washing machine functions properly."

Other sanitation items checked are sources of water and ice, sewage disposal, plumbing, toilet and handwashing facilities, garbage and rubbish removal, floors, walls, ceilings and vermin control.

"Each time we make an inspection, I hope we leave some information that will be of benefit and value to the owner," Goodrum said.

Buffalo paper plans end of publication

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Shocked reporters wept as officials at the Buffalo Courier-Express announced the 148-year-old morning newspaper will cease publishing because "our hopes were overrun by our losses."

"I don't think any of us saw it coming," night metro editor Sam LaSpada, 44, a 15-year veteran, said Tuesday as the newspaper's owners said the paper will fold Sept. 19 unless a buyer can be found.

John Cowles Jr., president of the newspaper's parent, Cowles Media Co., said finding a buyer was "unlikely" because the paper has lost almost $26 million the last three years.

He said the paper had lost about $8.6 million a year since Cowles Media bought the paper in 1979.

"Under the circumstances, Cowles Media can no longer prudently continue publication of the Courier-Express," Cowles said in a statement read to the paper's 850 full-time employees Tuesday afternoon. "Unfortunately, our hopes were overrun by our losses."

"It's like wiping the sweat off the brow of a dying person," said copy editor Bill Coughlin, 52, a 36-year veteran. "They're just trying to make us comfortable, trying to lessen the shock."

"I knew they were losing money. I thought they would survive," said photographer Ron Schifferle, who had been with the newspaper for 28 years.

The Courier-Express recently had increased its staff, ordered new equipment and introduced new features in its battle with its cross-city rival, the Evening News, for circulation in a shrinking blue-collar market hard hit by layoffs at local steel and automotive plants.

The city's population declined by more than 105,000 from 1970 to 1980, and local unemployment in July stood at 12.5 percent.

The Evening News has also said it is losing money, although that is expected to change with the demise of the Courier-Express.

Roger Parkinson, the Courier-Express publisher, said the decision to close the newspaper came at a Sept. 1 meeting of Cowles Media's board of directors.

Lawyers say sentence too harsh for mother of battered boy

HOUSTON (AP) — Attorneys for a young mother sentenced to 45 years in prison for letting her boyfriend torture her 3-year-old son to death say the penalty is too harsh.

But Assistant District Attorney Jack Frels said he hopes Eva Lott "serves a living hell."

A jury convicted Ms. Lott, 27, of murder by omission Friday for failing to protect her son, Tommy, from her boyfriend, Gary Ray Barber, who now is serving a life sentence in prison.

Ms. Lott began to tremble and weep Tuesday as State District Judge Dan Walton assessed the sentence. She could have been given a life sentence and fined $10,000.

She had asked that the judge, rather than the jury, determine punishment.

Dr. Ben Raimer, a pediatrician who has researched child abuse cases since 1974, testified the child's body showed signs he had been abused for three to six months.

Testimony showed the boy suffered injuries to his scrotum and rectum; scalding burns over 25 percent of his body; a gash that separated his nose and his upper lip; and cigarette burns, puncture wounds, bruises, cuts and rope burns.

Ms. Lott's attorney, Victor Blaine, said he had hoped for a lighter sentence.

"The type of crime she was accused of committing, sentencing her was not going to deter anyone else from committing it," said Blaine, adding he has given notice the case will be appealed.

Nixon says China needs U.S., will maintain relations

PEKING (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon says that despite China's displeasure with some U.S. policies, Peking will not break relations with Washington because "without us, they would be down the tube."

Nixon, visiting China to mark the 10th anniversary of the resumption of relations, gave his blunt assessment in an interview broadcast Tuesday night with the ABC News program, "Nightline."

"The Chinese leaders are not stupid," Nixon said. "They know we are still the richest country in the world and the most powerful and, without us, they would be down the tube."

Nixon apparently referred to Chinese rivalry and conflict with the Soviet Union. He said the Soviets "pose an even greater threat today than 10 years ago" to the Chinese.

Although China now denounces the United States as a superpower, he said, "they know we have no designs on them and fear the Soviets do. They need us to hold the line against the Soviets."

Nixon called the Sino-U.S. relationship "indispensable to our future as well as to the Chinese. Even if there were no Soviet threat, it would be a tragedy of history...if we did not have a cooperative relationship."

Nixon said the strength of both the Shanghai Communique, the foundation of renewed U.S.-Chinese ties which his administration signed, and the Reagan administration's recent document limiting arms sales to Taiwan, is that the two sides "agreed to disagree" on the Taiwan issue.

"We have not agreed fundamentally on the future of Taiwan," he said, "but we have in effect put the issue on the back burner through a very skillfully worded communique."

China has said it will seek a peaceful resolution of the Taiwan problem while the United States indicates that arms sales to Taiwan will depend on whether there is a threat from China, Nixon said.

"We are not out of the woods on the (Taiwan) issue" because it would be raised each time the United States sells arms to the Nationalist Chinese regime, Nixon said.

County grand jury to study shooting

The Midland County grand jury today was to consider possible indictments stemming from the Aug. 27 shooting of 12-year-old Kristina Lynn Guentert on the parking lot of Taco Plaza in south Midland.

The girl was struck in the mouth by a .38-caliber bullet just after she had gotten out of her mother's car while she was on an outing with her family and relatives. The shot had been fired across the parking lot, as one man was stalking another after a pickup truck had crashed into a house five blocks west of the fast-food restaurant.

The girl, daughter of Joseph J. and Sandra Guentert of 4809 Teakwood Trace in the Green Tree Estates in northwest Midland, was listed in stable condition today in Midland Memorial Hospital's intensive care unit.

District Attorney Vern Martin said he was not certain of the route the grand jury might take in considering criminal action against the enraged homeowner who allegedly fired the shot, which accidentally hit the girl, or the man driving the pickup which rammed into the the brick house, setting off the pursuit.

'Outraged' gay community aides in arrest of professor's murderers

NEW YORK (AP) — Aided by tips from an "outraged" homosexual community, police arrested two men and a 15-year-old boy — the last captured early today — in the sadistic murder of a University of Florida nutrition professor.

Two of the suspects in the slaying of Howard Appledorf, known for his defense of "junk foods," were arrested separately on the East Side and were being held on warrants issued in Florida, said police spokesman John Clifford.

Earlier Tuesday, 21-year-old Gary McNichol was arrested in a car belonging to Appledorf, whose trussed, suffocated body was found Sunday in his condominium near the Gainesville, Fla., campus. Police said his killers ate a ritualistic meal beside him as he died.

McNichol, who led detectives on a chase that reached speeds of 100 mph and careened the wrong way down one-way streets, was charged with grand larceny of Appledorf's car, illegal possession of his credit cards and reckless endangerment because of his driving, according to police. There were no injuries in the chase.

Gainesville investigators arrived Tuesday to question McNichol.

State Attorney Eugene Whitworth had said McNichol would be arraigned today and could be returned to Florida today or Friday if he waived an extradition hearing; otherwise, it could be 30 to 60 days.

The disposition of the other two cases was not known early today.

Gainesville police said earlier Tuesday the case was wrapped up.

"I can tell you the case is solved. We know who committed the homicide act," Gainesville police Capt. Richard B. Ward said after McNichol's arrest.

All three suspects were "well known" in New York City's gay community, police said.

Authorities said they used descriptions of two people seen with McNichol at an East Side bar frequented by homosexuals to recognize and arrest Paul Everson, 19, of Roslindale, Mass., and a juvenile who was not identified because of his age. The two were taken into custody late Tuesday and early today in an area containing several gay bars.

Clifford cited the "tremendous cooperation of New York's gay community" in the arrests.

"The gay community was outraged" by the killing, said Lt. Joseph Pirello, in charge of Manhattan South detectives.

The killers "broke the unwritten rule in the gay community," Pirello said. "To kill a lover in a lover's quarrel is one thing, but to kill a guy after you've ripped him off...."

Appledorf, a 41-year-old bachelor, was known for his defense of fast-food chains while arguing there was no such thing as "junk food." His head had been stuffed in an ice-filled canvas bag, and a cigarette was ground out on his stomach. In a semicircle nearby were plates and wine glasses from a ritualistic meal, police said.

The word "murder" spelled backward and forward was smeared in peanut butter on the walls of his home.

On Monday, Gainesville police said they were seeking three men involved in a recent attempt to cash a $900 check belonging to the victim. They had been released from jail Thursday after the case was settled out of court at Appledorf's request.

A friend of Appledorf's said the professor had let the men stay with him one night, but refused to post bail for one man later arrested in the check case.

The WWII German submarine U-505 is shown being moved from Lake Michigan to Chicago's Museum of Science and Insustry where it found a permanent home. The sub's crew and American sailors serving with the USS Guadalcanal Task Force will reunite Thursday for the first time. The U-505 was captured by ships of the task force on June 4, 1944, off the African coast and was the first sub to be captured on the open seas.

Leadership Midland applications due

Applications are due Friday from people who are willing to commit themselves to participation one full day on the second Thursday of each month for nine months in Leadership Midland.

Persons who have demonstrated management and/or leadership ability, have shown an interest in community affairs and have time and talent to offer the community are eligible to participate in the program. Leadership Midland, designed to provide intensive training for leadership in areas strategic to the city's well being, is beginning its fifth year.

Application forms should be completed and returned to Leadership Midland Recruitment Committee at the Midland Chamber of Commerce, P.O. Box 1890, by Friday. Additional applications and information may be obtained by calling Leadership Midland director Alison Peeler at the Chamber of Commerce at 683-3381.

Each individual selected for participation in Leadership Midland or that person's employer will be asked to pay a fee of $325 to defray expenses of the program. Partial scholarships will be available on a limited basis for qualified applicants who may require assistance.

Employers are urged to support in the recruiting of new and promising men and women for the 1982 program. Applicants who are selected for the program will be notified within two weeks.

German sailors to be reunited with captors

CHICAGO (AP) — Twelve members of a World War II German submarine crew and some of the American sailors who captured them are being reunited in a meeting organizers think will "help toward peace."

It begins Thursday when the Germans are scheduled to arrive at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport from Frankfurt and head to a German restaurant for dinner with up to 65 Navy veterans.

Jim Sanders, who was a flight deck officer aboard the USS Guadalcanal at the time of the capture 38 years ago, said the Germans later will be able to tour the U-505 sub on which they once served. The craft w is on display at the Museum of Science and Industry here.

"Former enemies are about to become friends," Sanders, 63, said Tuesday.

THE SUB with 59 men aboard was captured June 4, 1944, off the African Coast. It was the first Navy capture of an enemy vessel during wartime since 1815.

For most of the Germans, it will be their first opportunity to "fraternize" with the American sailors who watched as they fled their crippled vessel, Sanders said.

The Americans weren't permitted to talk to the captured Germans, but often listened to them sing in the evenings and "would send in requests," Sanders said.

"They were pretty darned handy at singing as a group. Hitler taught them to sing in the Hitler Youth, you know."

Several of the Germans speak English and at least two of the Americans have offered to serve as interpreters for the reunion.

AMONG THE German officers and family members attending will be Karla Lange, widow of the submarine's captain, Cmdr. Harald Lange.

Sanders said he doesn't expect it to be an awkward occasion.

"I never saw any malice (between captives and captors) then, and I think that's a good sign. I want this reunion to help toward peace," he said.

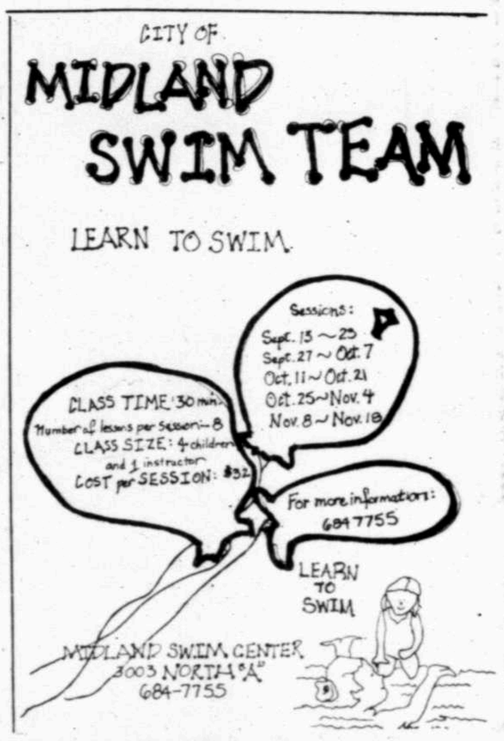
"We want these Germans to feel at home. This is not national policy, of course, but it's very important they feel comfortable. I am an optimist. I think we can avoid war again."

Sanders, now an attorney in Paterson, N.J., said American planes opened fire on the sub after it was spotted on sonar by his aircraft carrier's destroyer escort.

STRICKEN BY depth charges, the sub surfaced with a jammed rudder, Sanders said. "The Germans did the smartest thing they could do — they got off the sub and into the water as fast as they could. It saved their lives. As soon as we could see no one was manning the deck gun, the shooting stopped."

Years later, Sanders said, Hans Gobeler, a mate in the sub's "commanding room," wrote to him. "He said they were lucky to be alive. By 1944, the U-boats were getting picked off — and every time they came into port, they saw the attrition.

"I saw them coming aboard. Their general air was one of relief, and some of them were smiling. They were loyal to their ship — but they saw the handwriting on the wall, too," Sanders recalled.



Midwife begins program at MMH

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Sandra Haldeman, a certified nurse-midwife began orientation Tuesday at Midland Memorial Hospital to implement the hospital's in-patient midwife program, according to Arlene Strickland, MMH public relations director.

Also, five more physicians have been approved recently to MMH's associate medical staff.

Ms. Haldeman, of Odessa, is one of two midwives that MMH intends to hire for the program which is designed exclusively for MMH obstetrical department patients who are not under the care of a private physician.

The midwife program was the result of a plan designed by Midland's obstetricians to provide the best quality care for indigent patients and drop-ins. The program was approved by MMH's governing boards July 29.

All "normal delivery" patients who are accepted into the program will have their babies delivered by Ms. Haldeman in the hospital and can participate in all of the educational programs, Ms. Strickland said.

She added this program will not include home births.

Patients who will be accepted for the program include those who are not under the care of private physicians and those who attend the Midland City/County Health Department prenatal clinic.

Even though Ms. Haldeman is only in the orientation phase of the program, it would be possible for her to deliver a baby this week, Ms. Strickland said.

Ms. Haldeman is certified by the American College of Nurse Midwives and is licensed by the state. During the past six years, she has worked with the Permian Basin Planned Parenthood in Odessa and instructed perinatal care at Odessa College. Her credentials include a bachelor's of science degree in nursing from the University of North Carolina and a master's of science degree in maternal newborn health nursing from the nursing school at Yale University.

Other additions at MMH include the approval of five MMH associate staffmembers. The physicians were approved recently by the MMH board of trustees. They are: Dr. John Bray, a pediatric intensivist; Dr. Eric Svenson, a radiation oncologist; Dr. David Snyder, a medical oncologist; Dr. Kirby Tarry, a urologist; and Dr. R. Shelton Viney, a vascular and general surgeon.

Texas town flat broke

PETROLIA, Texas (AP) — The coffers of this North Texas community will contain only $118 if all the city's bills are paid, a councilman says. But the 755 residents of this town say they paid more than enough taxes, and want to know where all their money went.

City alderman could collect delinquent taxes to put the town squarely back in the black, but say they don't have enough money to hire an attorney to do it.

Residents packed first into city hall, then overflowed into a nearby firehouse Tuesday night to hear city officials explain themselves.

"We're already belly up," said councilman Harold Riney. "They (residents) just don't know it yet. We have just got to have those taxes."

He told the crowd the city is "flat broke."

The council did not adopt a 1983 budget, nor did they set a 1983 tax rate, although both items must be considered, he said.

"If we pay our bills, we will have about $118 left," Riney said. "We have salaries to pay and I don't know how we are going to pay them."

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, Sept. 9, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actor Cliff Robertson celebrates a birthday today. This is also the day in 1956 when Elvis Presley made his first appearance on The Ed Sullivan Show and then zoomed to stardom. The months ahead will be very lucky for those with the desire and financing to enter into partnerships or start their own businesses. Individuals who work for large corporations will also do especially well. Count on new contacts and neighbors to add spice to your social life. Children's problems are resolved in unique and wonderful ways. A phone call in mid-March plays a pivotal role. Consult with mate before planning your weekends.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may decide to end a partnership or financial arrangement. Keep your temper under control! An outburst could jeopardize a long period of good work.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Work demands your complete attention. You tend to glamorize what you are doing. Face reality and you will get much farther. A member of the opposite sex finds you attractive.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Avoid loaning money to a friend or relative. A cash-flow crisis of your own deserves top priority. Problem with child or loved one proves easy to solve.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Avoid signing papers or making decisions affecting the law. The price is reduced on an object you have wanted, but it still may not be a bargain. Wait a while longer.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Mixed results are obtained at work. Once you stop brooding, everything falls into place quite quickly. Do not buy anything until you discuss it with a family member.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Postpone making a financial decision today. Get expert help. Taxes and credit problems loom, but there is light at the end of the tunnel.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An active day for those at work or on shopping expeditions. Now is the ideal time to make those decisions you have been postponing. Romance brings you good luck.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You score big gains, thanks to another's actions. Your moral support helps a family member get back on track. People in sales have an extraordinary day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): To make new career gains, go against the tide. You win the right kind of attention by being a maverick now. Be more consistent in your dealings with a child.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Someone may be sweet-talking you at work. Ask questions and check to be sure that you get honest answers. Otherwise, you would do well to return to a former boss.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20—Feb. 18): Fresh starts are possible. Deal with a money problem to quickly iron out any misunderstandings. Romance changes your outlook for the better. Have faith in yourself.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Call or visit relatives. Someone who offers financial help cannot follow through. Forget the doomsayers and move forward with a project you know to be promising.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	Pass	Pass	3 ♡
3 ♠	4 ♡	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣.

The rarest of all squeezes is the "squeeze in one suit." This example, which appeared in the 1969 Italian Championship, is credited to Pietro Forquet, regarded by many as the greatest bridge player of his time.

The bidding is self-explanatory. However, North's decision to bid four hearts can be attributed only to the faith he had in his partner's dummy play.

West led the king of clubs and continued with the ace. Declarer ruffed and drew three rounds of trumps. His first problem was what to discard from the table. Most players would sluff a black card just in case they could score North's fourth diamond, and then they would have to concede defeat. But Forquet discarded the seven of diamonds. He used dummy's ace and queen of diamonds to ruff two clubs, reducing the hand to this position:

♠ 7 5 4

WEST
♠ A Q J 6

EAST
◇ J 10 8

SOUTH

◇ K

Declarer now cashed the king of diamonds, and West found that he was squeezed in spades. If he discarded a low spade, declarer would lead a low spade, West would be forced to win the jack, and then he would have to concede the fulfilling trick to declarer's spade king. So West parted with his jack of spades.

Forquet had a brilliant rejoinder—he exited with the king of spades! West could win the ace and queen, but then was forced to concede the tenth trick to the seven of spades that declarer had preserved so carefully in dummy with his discard at trick four!

Sweden's immigrants facing increasing racist-like situations

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Burning crosses, firebombs and other anti-immigrant activity have shattered Sweden's usual summer tranquility, jolting a nation that prides itself on good relations between natives and immigrants.

Worried authorities have ordered special police patrols onto streets in downtown Stockholm and have set up special programs to educate Swedes and non-Swedes about immigration.

Incidents that began in late July have carried the mark of the Ku Klux Klan and the Skinheads, groups of head-shaven young toughs who participated in race riots in Great Britain during the summer of 1981:

—In Segeltorp, a Stockholm suburb, a Chilean family who fled their country after the 1973 military takeover found a burning cross, symbol of the white supremacist Klan, on their front yard.

Since that incident, three more Klan-inspired crosses have been discovered in or near residential areas where many immigrants live.

While authorities say there is a KKK presence in Sweden, there is no evidence that it is linked with any U.S. Klan group. Its membership is believed to be tiny.

—In early August in Trollbecken, a group of men yelling racial slurs attacked a kiosk owned by Turkish immigrants, who hid inside as the youths smashed windows and doors with steel bars.

"We were terrified. We feared for our lives," owner Ozcan Sen told reporters.

—Later in the month in Kumla, 100 miles west of Stockholm, an immigrant fired a gun after repeated harassment, seriously wounding a 14-year-old boy.

—Other attacks have included stabbings, property damage and firebombs thrown into bars frequented by young immigrants. Police say many of the assaults were carried out by Swedish Skinheads, youngsters who shave their heads, wear heavy boots and say they "simply don't like immigrants."

Immigrants and their children, many of them Swedish citizens, make up about 1.1 million of Sweden's 8.3 million inhabitants. Most come from Finland, Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey, but a large number of Latin Americans arrived in the 1970s.

In a newspaper article, former Immigration Board Director Kjell Oberg accused the authorities of not taking seriously immigrant complaints of harassment.

Sen, the Turkish kiosk owner, complained that it took police two hours to arrive, but police denied it. They said two officers were dispatched to the scene within 30 minutes.

"Obviously, racist violence is overshadowed in the election campaign by other issues," said Immigration Ministry spokesman Tommy Westerteg, referring to the Sept. 19 parliamentary elections, which have centered on economic issues.

Bill might increase tension

MEXICO CITY (AP) — An immigration bill before the U.S. House of Representatives would increase tensions between Mexico and the United States if approved, according to a study by the Center for Third World Studies.

The study said the law would promote racism and human rights abuses against undocumented workers in the United States by encouraging more extensive raids by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

The Simpson-Mazzoli bill, already approved by the U.S. Senate, for the first time would provide for sanctions against employers who hire undocumented workers.

The center is a private institution headed by former President Luis Echeverria. It receives government funding.

OAS addition urged

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Alejandro Orfila, secretary-general of the Organization of American States, says there cannot be an inter-American system without the participation of the United States.

"We should not deceive ourselves; there cannot be an inter-American system without the active and respectful participation of the United States, and if the government of that country...has shown its desire to participate actively in this organization we should accept its collaboration," he was quoted as saying Monday in the official El Nacional newspaper.

Orfila said, however, that there is a consensus among Latin American nations for a meeting this year or early next year to discuss inter-American politics in the wake of the Falklands crisis. Many Latin Americans were disappointed by U.S. support for Britain in the South Atlantic fighting.

Languages' recognition proposed

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The incoming administration of Miguel de la Madrid should consider recognition of Mexico's 56 Indian languages as national languages along with Spanish, says an official in the Public Education Ministry.

Salomon Nahmad, the ministry's director-general of Indian education, was quoted Monday by Excelsior newspaper as saying that recognition would affirm Mexico's cultural and ethnic pluralism.

"The position of the Indians is a clear example of the resistence of oppressed cultures against the aggression of the dominant societies," he was quoted as saying.

Over 100 die from starvation

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — The death toll from starvation in the easternmost Indonesian province of Irian Jaya, formerly Dutch West Papua, has reached 119, with the discovery of seven more bodies, the National Antara News Agency said today. Another 367 people were in critical condition, it said.

Hamburg Pa.'s four-footed police officer is Ginger, a 3-year-old German Rottweiler belonging to officer John Ayella of the Hamburg force. Ayella started using Ginger on his rounds two years ago and she accompanies him on foot, in the patrol car and on his cycle. When she's on the cycle Ayella insists she wear goggles and a seat belt.

Couple finds love at second sight

DALLAS (AP) — Once wasn't enough for Evelyn Anderson Foster and Chester Cantwell, who remarried 44 years after they exchanged nupitals for the first time and 31 years after they divorced.

"It's a fairy tale," said the bride.

"The best thing that has ever happened to me," said the bridegroom after the Friday night ceremony.

The couple first met in East Dallas in January 1938 when Cantwell ran a Texaco service station. Evelyn, then 19, had graduated from Mesquite High School the year before and often bought gasoline at the station.

The pair only exchanged pleasantries until the morning she went into the station to pay for a soft drink.

"He followed me in, took my money, closed the door and kissed me," she said. "Then he asked me for a date."

After numerous 25-cent movies and late night strolls, the young couple decided it was love. But her parents, the late Nina and Millard Anderson, opposed it. One Monday morning, Cantwell took matters into his own hands.

Evelyn said Cantwell called and announced, "Pack your bag; we're going to my folks' in Oklahoma and get married."

In Duncan, Okla, the couple went to his parents' home and called the preacher out of a movie to read their vows in the sanctuary of the First Baptist Church.

Eight days later, the Cantwells returned to Dallas.

"Mother and Daddy met us and were ecstatic," Evelyn said. "Mother covered us with hugs and kisses. You'd have thought the wedding was all her idea."

The couple moved into an apartment and Cantwell brought home $25 every two weeks. Over the next 13 years, the marriage produced a son, Harold Wayne, and a daughter, Diane.

There were problems, too.

Things grew tight financially, the couple said, and Cantwell was drafted into the Army during World War II and sent to Europe. Upon returning home, he worked nights, while his wife worked days.

"We were under too much of a strain and we didn't know how to cope," she said. "We made each other miserable."

In 1951, the couple divorced.

"It took a year and a half," Evelyn said. "In those days divorce didn't come easy."

The next year, Evelyn married Gerald Foster. He was 24½ years older than she, the same age as her father. He died in 1980.

Cantwell lived in Oregon for 12 years before moving to Oklahoma City, where he now resides.

Six feet appear at least as good as four

HAMBURG, Pa. (AP) — Who is that goggled companion with the long snout riding on a Honda 500 motorcycle behind officer John Ayella of the Hamburg police?

It's Ginger, Ayella's 3-year-old German Rottweiler and his partner when he's riding the cycle, in the police cruiser or on foot patrol. She's the first canine on the Hamburg force and possibly the best-known motorcyclist in this part of Berks County.

"Ginger saved a guy's life a few weeks ago," Ayella, 35, says, giving credit to his canine companion.

Ayella had cornered an armed man who reached for his gun, which, Ayella says, turned out to be empty. Ginger bit the man's coat when he reached toward his pocket, giving Ayella time to get out of his patrol car and disarm the suspect.

If he hadn't had faith the dog could do the job, Ayella says he would have had to fire.

"One lady who heard about it sent down a steak for Ginger," he says. "That night I had spaghetti and the dog had steak."

It was, Ayella says, Ginger's first "bite" in two years on the force, but it wasn't the first publicity for the patrolling pooch. She's become a familiar figure around town for her police work and her prowess on Ayella's bike.

"Since she's been on, I haven't had a burglary on my shift," Ayella says.

Ginger sits behind Ayella in a carpeted seat made of plywood and metal tubing. Ever safety conscious, the Hamburg police officer insists that his partner wear goggles and her seat belt.

"When I start out she sometimes knocks the goggles off," he says, "but she leans right with me when I have to steer."

Nancy Reagan may intervene in aiding heart victim's adoption

BOSTON (AP) — First lady Nancy Reagan will see whether she can help a couple in Quincy adopt a sick 3-year-old Peruvian orphan, Mrs. Reagan's press secretary says.

Children's Hospital in Boston has agreed to admit Anita Asto for heart surgery, and an operation on the child is scheduled for Thursday.

The Deborah Heart and Lung Center in Browns Mills, N.J., also offered to perform the surgery and provide hospitalization free.

THE CHILD is in the temporary custody of Robert and Diane Ulchak of Quincy, Mass., and her medical visa expires Oct. 19.

When Peruvian newspapers reported the child's financial plight, Ulchack said, "They're in quite an uproar over here. They want to know what the girl is doing in the United States and why she isn't getting the proper treatment."

The Ulchaks, both 36, arranged for Anita to be brought here to have the operation. The couple say they may not be able to afford to adopt her if they are forced to return to Peru with her and then bring her back to the United States.

The Ulchaks already have adopted a 16-month-old Peruvian boy.

ANITA HAS a life expectancy of about two more years without the surgery. She was born with only one of the two normal heart ventricles.

Officials at Children's Hospital announced during the weekend that a fund drive has netted enough money for a downpayment on hospital costs following surgery, which a local cardiologist has offered to do for free.

Mrs. Reagan's press secretary, Sheila Tate, told the Boston Herald American in a telephone interview, "I can assure you it will be very closely looked at and if there is anything that can be done, she will do it. We'll see what's possible and talk to all the right people."

The amount received from the fund drive was not immediately known, but John Wilhelm, vice president for finance at the hospital, said pledges from the Boston area would "enable us to admit Anita and schedule her surgery as soon as possible."

Hospital officials had said a $5,000 deposit for hospital costs — which could exceed $25,000 — would be needed for them to agree to perform the operation. The hospital has depleted its fund for free foreign care.

The need for funds for the operation was reported Friday, and donations poured in.

Dr. Aldo Castaneda, the cardiologist who has offered to operate, said that the operation would not cure the child's condition, but it "will increase the oxygen concentration in her blood, allowing her to live a more normal life for a number of years."

The farming picture

The dean of agriculture at Texas A&M University says the nation's economic ills ultimately will create good opportunities for America's farmers. For some farmers, though, the improving farming picture forecast by Dr. H.O. Kunkel may arrive too late.

In West Texas, farmers are all too aware of what can happen when violent weather destroys crops two or three years in a row and when rising prices farmers must pay for land and machinery drive them to the brink. To top it all off, when the prices farmers are paid for their crops won't even cover the expense of the previous planting the farmers are caught in a no-win situation.

The situation has only been growing bleaker for farmers in recent years and many — faced with heavy farming debts — have abandoned their fields and tractors to find other lines of work. That's an extremely sad situation.

But if what Dr. Kunkel is predicting comes to pass, farming's dark cloud may have an honest-to-goodness silver lining.

"Although the current depressed economic condition discourages students from looking at agriculture as a career option, the situation should create substantially increased needs for agriculturalists within the next decade," Dr. Kunkel noted.

A manpower assessment by the U.S. Department of Agriculture has indicated a severe shortage of trained professionals will become acute in the farming industry by 1990. If the current price-cost spiral continues to strangle the farming industry, few farmers will remain afloat by that time.

Agriculture is an extremely important segment in American life today. During the last few decades when the growth of technology sent many farmers to the cities in search of better paying jobs and a better standard of living, the importance of agriculture to the American way of life was not diminishing but increasing. We shouldn't forget that.

Now America's farmers are in deep trouble. It's time to re-evaluate the situation and to start giving farmers the attention they deserve before the worsening farm situation eliminates all the options.

No help on interest

While the tax bill recently passed will probably boost morale for some Americans as well as raising revenues, one of the most common claims in its favor is one of the least logical. The claim is that higher taxes will bring interest rates down. Rates have fallen since Congress acted, but the fall is not an effect of heavier taxation. There is no direct way that higher taxes make for lower rates of interest.

Interest rates — the price that lenders charge borrowers for money — are driven up or down by two major forces. One is the supply-demand balance. When lenders supply more money and borrowers demand less, interest rates fall. Higher taxes bring the government more income and thus mean the Treasury has less need to borrow. But higher taxes leave less income with businesses and families; they reduce the profits and savings available to be borrowed.

The second important influence on interest rates is what people think their money will be worth when loans are repaid. If high inflation is the expectation, borrowers must pay high interest to make up the lenders' loss in the dollars paid back. If people expect inflation to go down, lenders and borrowers can settle for a cheaper price. The question of the tax hike's impact on interest rates is a question of its impact on inflation expectations. Expectations are powerful but imprecise. The tax impact on them is equally imprecise.

This year, a dramatic drop in inflation helped start interest rates falling before talk of higher taxes filled the air. The earlier talk was of anti-inflation persistence by the Federal Reserve. Gradually, Paul Volcker's Fed had built belief that it would not print more money to finance federal spending. However, Mr. Reagan and Congress lost credibility: Many feared that their prospective deficits would eventually force the Fed to act against its principles and reignite inflation by again pumping up the money supply. Mr. Reagan's reluctant switch in favor of higher taxes, pressed on him by leaders of his party in Congress, slightly refurbishes his anti-inflation image. To that extent the tax hike may weaken inflation expectations and may help to bring interest rates down. It may be helping now.

But only somewhat. Even with added revenue, federal deficits will be mountainous for years to come. And for all their resolve about raising taxes, Congress and Mr. Reagan show no comparable resolve to control other spending.

Until federal spending is brought under control by matching additional taxation with an equal amount in spending cuts, it is foolish to paint the tax bill as a major breakthrough for lower rates of interest.

Another View:

Pressing the point

The Reagan administration, in scaling back the sanctions to be imposed on European companies selling American technology for a Soviet natural-gas pipeline, has demonstrated its willingness to defuse the confrontation with the European allies on the issue. It is time now for some give on the European side.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige successfully importuned President Reagan last week to impose less sweeping sanctions against a British firm violating the ban that were imposed on two French companies last week.

There was a concern that an imposition of full sanctions against John Brown Engineering Ltd., the Glasgow company involved, could trigger layoffs serious enough to cause grave problems in U.S.-British relations.

As the decision now stands, John Brown, which began loading six turbines manufactured under U.S. license aboard a Soviet freighter on Tuesday, will be banned from future access to American oil and gas technology. But across-the-board sanctions of the sort applied to the French companies will not be imposed.

In the interest of evenhandedness, the sanctions against the French companies — and against expected violations by Italian and other European companies — will be brought into line with the treatment of John Brown.

The decision by no means ends the crisis in U.S.-European relations that was brought about by Reagan's decision in June to punish European companies, whether U.S. subsidiaries or not, that participate in construction of the Siberia-to-Western Europe pipeline. However, the new move is an eminently sensible gesture that should make it easier for the Europeans to edge back from their side of the precipice.

The Reagan administration, according to reports from Washington, would consider lifting the sanctions entirely if the Europeans would agree to cooperate with the United States in an alternative strategy of tightening controls on future technological transfers to the Soviet Union, and limiting export credits.

So far, the European response is said to be disappointing. Washington should press the point, however, in the high-level conference that could take place as early as this week.

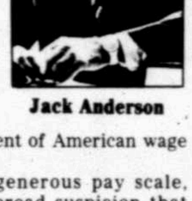
WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Fund misuse uncovered in Congress

WASHINGTON — Congress returns to Washington today from its extended Labor Day recess. Members have been back in their home districts, and presumably they've been getting some heat on the charges of moral turpitude, drug abuse and self-legislated tax breaks that have surfaced in recent months.



Jack Anderson

It's all been enough to make an incumbent cringe. The American voter can be forgiven if he or she wonders just what our senators and representatives have been doing to justify the compensation that puts them in the top 1 percent of American wage earners.

Despite this generous pay scale, there's a widespread suspicion that members of Congress use campaign contributions for expenses that should properly be paid for out of their own pockets.

House Ethics Committee rules prohibit the use of campaign funds to pay for official expenses — which are supposedly covered adequately already — or for personal expenses that should be paid for personally. Unfortunately, it's left up to the individual member's judgment to decide what's official and personal, as opposed to political.

Working with an investigative team from The City Desk, a Washington-based bureau for regional and city magazines, my associate Tony Capaccio found many expenditures of campaign funds that certainly lend weight to the suspicions of abuse. Consider these typical examples:

— Rep. Beverly Byron, D-Md., spent $2,000 in campaign funds on drapes for her district office in Frederick and frames for some antique Harper's Weekly prints that hang in her Washington office. She said she "was not aware" of House rules that prohibit such use of campaign contributions. "It won't transpire again," she said.

— Rep. James Florio, D-N.J., used $897 of campaign funds last November to pay the Federal Telephone Service bill for his offices in Stratford and Camden, N.J. A Florio spokesman said the congressman didn't know this was inappropriate; because of our inquiry, Florio asked for guidance from the House Ethics Committee and the Federal Election Commission.

— When Rep. Robert Badham, R-Calif., moved his Orange County district office last year, the staff laid out $363 in campaign funds for new wallpaper on the old place "to make the landlord happy," as a spokesman explained.

— Rep. Tom Bevill, D-Ala., spent $489 of his supporters' campaign contributions on framing and matting photographs that hang in his Capitol Hill office. A spokesman said the expenditures were "perfectly legal" under FEC rules, and explained that the House ethics rules are "guidelines to go by — not law."

— Rep. Fernand St. Germain, D-R.I., spent $580 of campaign funds for a parking space near his district office. One of the congressman's aides said the parking space was "a good football kick away" from both the district office and the campaign headquarters, and said that a St. Germain employee "may slip in there, but nobody uses it regularly." What's it for, then?

— Rep. Dan Daniel, D-Va., borrowed a book from the Library of Congress in September 1980, a study of the U.S. military's shortcomings called "Crisis in Command." Eleven months later, he paid the library $10 after apparently losing the book; the money came out of campaign coffers. An aide explained that Daniel had used the book as background for campaign speeches. The aide added that the book was found recently, and the campaign fund will be reimbursed.

— Every Christmas, Rep. George O'Brien, R-Ill., throws a party for his Washington staff. The 1980 shindig cost $1,151.63 — and came out of campaign funds. "I don't regard it as an official expense," he said, explaining that his staff, "spiritually, at least, contributes to my campaign."

— Rep. Robert Young, D-Mo., spent $55.64 in campaign money on a wedding gift from Garfinckel's department store in Washington for an employee who was transferred to his St. Louis office. A spokesman said Young didn't think taxpayers' money should have been used for the gift and said the wedding present "is connected with her work in the district." Young's campaign fund also was tapped to buy a $93 television set for use in the congressman's Washington office.

— In 1981, Rep. Ken Holland, D-S.C., a member of the Ethics Committee, spent $1,010 in campaign funds for a Betamax video recorder and tapes. "It's a damn effective political tool," he explained. "I don't go out and film the latest episode of 'Dallas.'" The machine is being used to tape lectures, floor debates and speeches for donation to two universities that are collecting Holland's congressional papers.

— Rep. Gillis Long, D-La., dipped into campaign funds for $314 last year to pay the House cabinetmaker to replace a glass partition in Long's Washington office. A spokesman, apprised of the Ethics Committee regulations, said, "I see your point. You might be right there." Long also spent $1,192 in campaign funds last year for Coca-Cola, which was consumed by his staff and visitors to his office.

— Rep. Bud Shuster, R-Pa., spent $170 in campaign funds last year for an in-office coffee service. Said a spokesman: "Have you ever dealt with the House restaurant? You never know when constituents will be coming into the office to talk politics or official business."

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Imposition of exchange controls lamented

PUERTO VALLARTA, Mexico — This tropical paradise's own daily newspaper, Vallarta Opina, summed up the growing reaction to the imposition of exchange controls in Mexico without one word.

William Glandoni

Cartoonist de la Torre did it simply with a drawing of an obviously foreign — read it U.S. — tourist scurrying along the Malecon, suitcases in hand, looking from side to side at the wolves watching him from behind every palm tree.

The tourist De la Torre drew could have been the Mexican businessman, the industrialist who depends on export from Mexico of his products or on import of raw materials for their manufacture, or the pensioner who lives here on a Social Security or retirement check.

They all feel subject to monetary discrimination.

All are well aware that Mexico needs dollars, that their dollars initially at least doubled in peso value after devaluation.

Yet the Mexican Treasury Secretariat (Hacienda) set an arbitrary value of 69.50 pesos on dollars that were on deposit in Mexican banks in mid-August.

Many restaurants, shops, hotels and other business places quickly posted hand-lettered signs notifying the public that they accepted dollars for 60 or 70 pesos — still a bargain when compared with the old rate of 45-50 pesos paid before, but a ripoff for those who had to pay 90-100 pesos for each dollar they re-purchased before returning home at the end of their holiday.

Fortunately for Mexico's image abroad, the financial crisis that brought all this on — the worst in the nation's history, by all accounts — erupted as summer vacations were ending for most foreigners. So the stories of the vicissitudes tourists suffered will be mostly second hand.

Those foreigners still here in Puerto Vallarta, for example, appear to be mostly experienced travelers, along with a considerable number of resident tourists, particularly retired persons from the United States.

For all practical purposes, these permanent tourists make their homes here, but return to the United States every six months to renew their tourist cards and legalize their next 180 days in Mexico.

Many of them are among those persons, other foreigners and Mexicans who had deposited their funds in dollar accounts in Mexican banks. The estimated total of what are now called "Mexdolares" is close to $12 billion, or $12,000 million, as Mexico figures it.

Obviously, in that astronomical total there is much more than tourist or pensioners' money involved.

But the plight of the tourist or pensioner in Mexico now is typical of that faced by all those whose funds are frozen in Mexdollar accounts.

Among the restrictions that the treasury imposed in the wake of the devaluation was a ban on transfer abroad of dollars deposited in Mexican accounts. The treasury decreed that what it calls Mexdollars can only be exchanged for pesos at the rate of 69.50 pesos to the dollar.

The fact that the Mexdollar rate was so much lower than the parallel market rate prompted one Mexican financial writer to term the action "expropriation" of the dollar account.

That, along with the initial refusal of Mexican banks to cash U.S. dollar checks and traveler's checks for more than pesos at the Mexdollar rate angered U.S. pensioners who have been receiving Social Security or other retirement payment by checks from abroad, as well as Mexicans who wanted to collect dollars owed them in the normal course of their business.

One elderly tourist who has lived most of the last 20 years here said, with a grin, that it made him so mad, "I would leave tomorrow, if there were some better place to go." He plans to stay though.

"The government will come to its senses sooner or later," he commented prophetically. "But it will be a long time before we will trust our dollars to Mexican banks again."

Getting loan isn't simple for everyone

Bankers have been receiving a tarnished image lately, mainly because they have been making a lot of bad loans. I think they're getting a bad rap.

Art Buchwald

I was in the bank the other day where my nephew was applying for a loan to buy a car. The bank demanded a co-signer for the note and I was happy to oblige.

The flinty eyed vice-president took out a form consisting of 20 legal-sized pages and said to me, "You have to fill this all out. We want to know everything about both of you; where you were born, the names of your relatives, your education, how many times you have been arrested, and a complete list of all your assets and liabilities."

"You're very thorough for a $5,000 loan."

"We have to be," Flinty Eyes said. "This bank's reputation is on the line every time someone borrows money from it."

My nephew and I started filling out the blanks when a well-dressed man came up to the desk.

"I'm from Dryup Securities," the man said, as he shook Flinty Eyes' hand vigorously. "I'd like to borrow $500 million in government securities for three months at 16 percent."

Flinty Eyes brightened up and he pulled open his top drawer and started piling bonds on his desk. "Help yourself," he said.

The man stuffed them in a suitcase. "Do you want me to sign for them?"

"Your word is good enough for me," Flinty Eyes said. "Just see they don't get lost."

The man walked away and I said, "You didn't even ask his name."

"Dryup Securities is a solid institution. I'm not going to embarrass a man with questions when he deals in government securities. You forgot to fill out your wife's church affiliation."

I went back to the application and a diplomat with a walrus mustache came up. "Senor, I am from the government of Mexico, and I wish to borrow a billion dollars, because the peso has just gone to hell."

"Of course, sir." Flinty Eyes rang a buzzer for a guard and said to him. "Take this Mexican official down to the safe and give him a billion dollars."

"Thank you, senor. You are a good neighbor."

I was impressed. "You really make quick decisions."

"If I had said no he would have gone to Chase Manhattan for the loan, and my bosses would have been furious."

"Do you really want six references for a lousy $5,000 loan?" I asked.

"Those are the rules," Flinty Eyes said. "We have to have ironclad safeguards when someone wants to buy a car."

The Finance Minister of Poland came up and gave the vice president a $10 bill. "That should take care of the August interest on our $2 billion loan."

Flinty Eyes smiled. "Thanks a lot. We didn't expect this until September."

"Poland always pays its debts."

My nephew and I finally finished filling out the forms.

Flinty Eyes took them. "It will take 10 days to check you out," he said.

"That long," I laughed.

"Consumer credit is not something we treat lightly. If you don't hear from us, you'll know we decided you're a rotten risk."

We got up to leave. Flinty Eyes' secretary came over. "Braniff Airlines wants to renew their loan."

"Then renew it. Why are you always bothering me with details?"

Juror says he tried to date defendant's girlfriend

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A juror in a murder case has testified that he tried to date the girlfriend of a defendant, later voting to sentence the man to death.

Steven Cunningham, 19, testified Tuesday that he talked with Ramona Escareno during the trial of Adam Miranda, 21, on charges stemming from the 1980 slaying of a convenience store clerk.

But Cunningham said, "I didn't tell her nothing about the case. It was about me and her going out, that's all."

Deputy District Attorney Curtis Hazell argued that Ms. Escareno had led Cunningham on and described her behavior as an unsuccessful attempt to sway the jury on behalf of her boyfriend.

"If (Cunningham) were genuinely interested in only romance, then certainly it's a lot easier for him if (Miranda's) not around, isn't it?" said defense attorney Joe Ingber. "Not that I attribute his vote to that factor...But if it was only one-tenth of 1 percent of his motivation, it was wrong."

The Superior Court hearing was for co-defendant Arnold V. Gonzales, 22, who was sentenced to life in prison with no chance for parole for his role in the killing.

The woman, who also said she was a friend of Gonzales, testified earlier that she and Cunningham talked about the case. Jurors are instructed not to discuss cases with anyone while a trial is under way.

Ms. Escareno said Cunningham indicated that the jury would not hand down a death penalty for Miranda, even though it subsequently did. Miranda has not been sentenced formally, and his attorneys are expected to argue in a Sept. 16 court hearing that he deserves a new trial because of Cunningham's action.

"Adam deserves 100 percent impartiality and he didn't get it," said Ingber.

Judge Kathleen Parker denied a new trial for Gonzales, saying she was not convinced Cunningham's action had damaged the defendant's right to an impartial jury. The judge said she did find "some kind of romantic attachment" between Ms. Escareno and Cunningham.

Ms. Escareno said she last heard from Cunningham the day after the jury decided on the death penalty for Miranda.

"He called me and he wanted — he just asked me how I was doing. And I told him I wasn't doing too good," she said. "He told me he was sorry because he didn't want to vote for the death penalty, but he did it because he didn't want to delay things."

Cunningham testified that Ms. Escareno, a frequent spectator at the trial, had approached him but then rejected his offers for dates. He said she told him, "Wait until the case is over."

Ms. Escareno testified that Cunningham approached her and called her five or six times to ask her out and discuss the case.

She gave contradictory testimony about her relationship with Miranda, saying that he was her boyfriend but also saying that the two had never dated.

Lawns need care now for next year

WASHINGTON (AP) — The calendar says fall is approaching, and that means it's time to give your lawn a little extra attention to keep it healthy for next year.

Many lawns, particularly bluegrass and ryegrass, will need an application of fertilizer at this time of year.

They require different proportions, however, so check with your county extension agent for advice. In general, though, too much nitrogen should be avoided. It can cause top growth, leading to winter damage.

Water the lawn deeply also, particularly if rainfall has been sparse, as is often the case at this time of year. And a treatment for broadleaf weeds can help too.

This season also brings out the lawn landscape specialists selling lawn rebuilding, fertilizing, liming, aerating and insect and weed control.

Be particularly cautious of those selling door-to-door, checking for licenses if your community requires them.

Children locate their dying father

CONCORD, Mass. (AP) — A man dying of bone cancer has found peace at last since six children from his first marriage located him after a search that lasted nearly 25 years, his wife says.

George West "needed to free himself to find inner peace," said his wife, Emma. "If he goes tomorrow, he can go in peace."

Two children from West's first marriage, Arthur West, 36, and his sister, Helen, 38, were at his bedside Monday in Middlesex County Hospital as he celebrated his 65th birthday. Also on hand were the four children from his second marriage to Emma.

The rediscovered family has been a tonic to West, unable to lift himself from the bed he has occupied since April, his wife said.

"He's been all excited," she said. "We kept hoping some kind of miracle would get him out of the hospital. He can't walk or sit up. But his mind is fine, better than most of us."

The children lost track of their father after he separated from his first wife, Gertrude, 32 years ago in Mississippi. The couple was eventually divorced, and all but one of their children now live in Milwaukee.

One of his sons, George "Willy" West, began searching for his father as a teen-ager in 1958. He spent nearly a quarter-century running classified ads and following up leads. He finally located West through a Baldwin, Mich., woman who was Emma's aunt.

George, 40, from East Moline, Ill., and another brother, James, 34, saw their father three weeks ago.

Mrs. West said two other members of the family, 43-year-old Bobbie and Larry, 32, who have never seen his father, are to arrive soon.

Mrs. West didn't know at first whether to tell her husband that his first family had found him, fearing the shock might weaken him. The news came last month when West's son George called his own 24-year-old son, also named George.

West was frightened at the news, his wife recalled, wondering if his first children might want to kill him for leaving them.

"Why would they want to do that?" Emma asked her husband of 26 years. "They know you're half dead already."

The first thing West did on meeting each child was ask forgiveness.

"But they said, 'We didn't come here for that,'" said Mrs. West. "You could tell right away they loved him — you had to know it was real."

POSITIVE THINKING

Think yourself into what you'd have yourself be

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

You can think yourself to failure or you can think your way to success. Belief is a form of thought. All the believing you ever do is done in your mind. You can disbelieve yourself into a frustrated existence or you can believe yourself into a successful life. It is up to you. We do not half realize the power of thought — either to destroy or to create. Thoughts actually are forces. You can't see them but they are substantial nevertheless. Thoughts are dynamic power.

Think negative thoughts and you thereby activate negative forces, drawing back to yourself negative results. Like attracts like. Send out hate and you get back hate. Send out fear and you get back fear. Send out defeat and you draw defeat to yourself. Conversely, send out positive thoughts and what comes back? Postive results, of course. You defeat yourself, or you gain victories, by the thoughts you think.

A young woman came in tears to ask if I thought her father a "bad man." I said, "No, your father is not a bad man. He is just a man who handled himself badly."

The father, an officer in a small-town bank, had a social climber wife. She wore clothes with a flair — and a woman who wears clothes well usually wants more of them. Also, she had ambitions to be a leading socialite in town. So she harassed her husband for more clothes, a bigger house, better cars, furs and what have you. The financial pressure on this man became acute. He didn't have that kind of money but had invested in the frantic hope of improving his situation. Despite being a banker, however, he didn't do well and soon found himself in trouble — deep financial trouble.

He was a moral man who would never think of dishonesty. But he did think of it and that tripped him up. One night a thought flashed up in his consciousness: "You have easy access to money. You could use a little. You would not be stealing it — just using it temporarily to handle pressing personal obligations. You could put it back before the bank examiners came and nobody would know the difference." But he knew this thought was very wrong — stupid, in fact — and he repulsed it forcibly.

At this point he was sovereign over himself, over his actions. His mind was acting as judge.

Sometimes a person will say, "I have bad thoughts" and complain of feeling guilty because of such thoughts. It is not consistent with a decent person's self-image to have such thoughts. And so they punish themselves with guilt feelings for being something other than their ideal selves. But you never need feel guilty simply because a bad thought comes into your mind. If your mind, acting as judge, repudiates the bad thought, you are even stronger morally as a result than before the thought came. It is only when you hold a bad thought, nurse it, cultivate it — and finally accept it (and act on it) that real feelings of guilt are incurred.

So the banker repulsed the dishonest thought. A few nights later, working alone late at the bank, he found the thought had come again — "Just borrow for awhile." Again he repulsed it, but not quite so forcibly this time.

Night after night the same thought advanced upon him. His repulses were becoming less and less forceful — and finally one night the thought had grown so strong and beguiling that the man's fingers reached out and performed the act which his mind had been building up.

As so often happens, the first step in the wrong direction leads to another step, and another. The thought is always ancestor to the deed. The inevitable happened. His "borrowing" was found out. This poor fellow is now serving a 20-year term in the penitentiary. Not a bad man; just a living demonstration of what happens when a man takes a bad thought, nurses it — and lets it grow until it takes over and destroys him.

All destructiveness, all failure, originates in thought! And all creative, powerful living likewise originates in thought! So get a good thought, build it up, develop it. Get a faith thought, make it grow. Don't let it stop on a minimum level. Let it take over. Make a giant of it, and it will make a giant of you.

U.S. halted biological warfare research in late 1960s — except at Fort Detrick

FREDERICK, Md. (AP) — The United States officially renounced biological warfare in 1969. But here, in a small corner of the military base where the American germ weapon effort was located, Army scientists are still involved in "medical defensive BW research."

With little public attention, the researchers are trying to discover vaccines or antidotes to any germ weapons that might be used against American troops.

The effort is based in a two-story Army lab in a corner of Fort Detrick, the sprawling base that was once the headquarters of U.S. chemical and biological warfare efforts.

Officials are sensitive about describing their work, which has continued since 1969, when President Nixon renounced American use of biological weapons and ordered the destruction of existing arms. But he said that a defensive effort would continue to guard against possible germ attacks by an enemy.

"What we're doing is uniquely medical. We're involved in medical defensive research," said Col. Richard Barquist, the doctor who heads the Army Medical Institute of Infectious Diseases.

Part of the research here involves recombinant DNA, or gene splicing, to try to develop a better vaccine for anthrax, one of the most-studied germ warfare diseases because it is hardy and highly virulent. The current anthrax vaccine is painful and slow-acting.

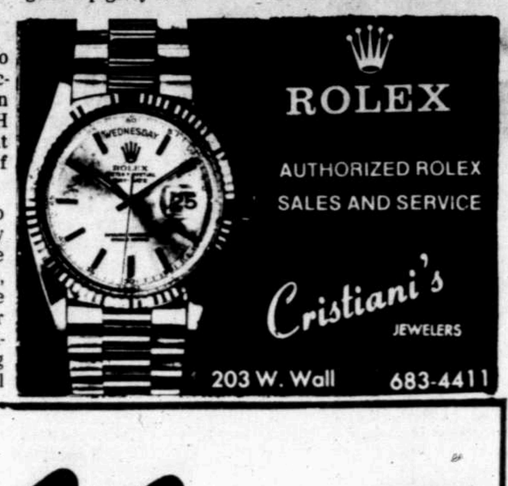
The Army has also contracted with Molecular Genetics of Minnetonka, Minn., for recombinant DNA research into a vaccine for Rift Valley fever, a virulent north African disease that could be encountered by U.S. troops operating in the Mideast or Persian Gulf.

Barquist is quick to note that the gene-splicing work has been approved by the NIH advisory committee that oversees the safety of such projects.

"We're just trying to use the tools provided by modern biology" to come up with better vaccines, he explained. "We'd like to see if we can use to our advantage the technological wave sweeping through bio-medical research."

About a mile from the Army labs are two grim reminders of the large-scale research and weapons program that made Detrick, created during World War II, the world's largest consumer of guinea pigs by 1960.

The highest structure among the center buildings is a seven-story, red brick building with boards replacing the windows. It once housed research into some of the most dangerous diseases, such as anthrax, tularemia and botulism.



Divisions hurting Arkansas town

SPARKMAN, Ark. (AP) — This woodland village of 662, where store owners greet customers by name, is a town divided.

On the morning of Aug. 20, a 12-year-old boy was stabbed to death beneath the bleachers at school. Another 12-year-old boy, a close friend, has been charged in the stabbing as a juvenile.

The victim, Eric Daniels, was black. His friend, the son of school board member Dr. George Taylor, is white.

Since the stabbing, black parents have kept their children out of school. And amid talk of boycotting businesses and setting up "freedom schools," the parents are pledging to keep their children away from classes until changes are made in the school system.

"I want my children to get an education, but I want protection for them first," said Roosevelt Pigg, who works in the sawmill in this timber-dependent community.

"I have no idea how it's going to end," said Mayor Jeff Dunn, who is president of the all-white, five-member scool board and owner of Sparkman's only drugstore. "If I told you I did, I'd be lying."

Taylor's son is in Little Rock undergoing psychiatric tests, which Deputy Prosecutor Tommy May said were requested by his parents.

Eric's father, Edward Johnson, said the boys had played on the same baseball team and were friends.

Sparkman seems to be a tranquil town. There is no theater or bowling alley; children hunt and fish in the wilds once roamed by the Caddo tribes. The police force is made up of one part-time officer. Taylor is the only physician.

The population is almost evenly divided among blacks and whites, and there are 200 black children among the 500 pupils in kindergarten through the 12th grade.

Louis Craig, spokesman for the black parents' group, Concerned Citizens of Dallas County, said the group's action is "over education and security, it is not racial."

About 25 white parents have kept their children away from school, which opened Aug. 13, because of agreement with the blacks on the issues.

The blacks demanded the resignation of Taylor from the school board and two men from their school jobs, Taylor because of his son and because he "calls the shots" on school hiring, Craig said.

Five of the 34 certified personnel are blacks.

Taylor, recovering from abdominal surgery, said he would "love to" comment but his lawyer had advised against it.

The blacks also have demanded the resignation of Superintendent John Moore and elementary school Principal John DeLaughter.

The parents contend that Moore, who also refused comment, did not notify Eric's parents of the death and did not cancel classes or the football practice that was going on nearby. Sheriff Lee Hornaday said he tried to reach Eric's mother; a grandfather found out about Eric's death while on the streets.

DeLaughter was unavailable for comment, partly because Moore won't allow reporters on campus. The blacks say they want DeLaughter to resign because of his attitude toward students and for purportedly saying he could not work with some black teachers.

Blacks discuss setting up a "freedom school" to educate their children during the boycott, but they say they hope it won't come to that.

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The city of McCamey has received approval from the Texas Department of Health for a solid waste disposal facility southeast of McCamey in Upton County.

The site covers 50 acres.

The permit was approved with the usual TDH provisions, and special provisions for fencing the site (including a lockable gate) and provisions for signs in English and Spanish warning that scavenging is prohibited, and that violators will be prosecuted.

Short circuit blamed for fire

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Police blamed a short circuit in electrical wiring for a fire Monday that destroyed several floors of an office building at a downtown complex owned by the state Pemex oil monopoly.

Authorities said three firemen were treated for minor burns or smoke inhalation while fighting the spectacular pre-dawn blaze.

Spinach suprises: Delicious dishes

By DIANE SAVAGE
Copley News Service

No matter how many Popeye cartoons I watched as a kid, they still couldn't get me to eat my spinach. But now that I've grown up a bit I love it — cooked plain or in a souffle or raw in a salad. Persians long ago used spinach as a medicine. (They must have been on the same track as Popeye!) Originating in northern Asia, the leafy green vegetable is now popular the world over. You may have noticed the world "Florentine" used in the names of various dishes. This means that the dish is garnished in some way with spinach.

WHEN SHOPPING, look for spinach with large and tender leaves. They should be crisp and green, never soggy. Rinse well before cooking (spinach is often sandy) and drain. Remove tough stem ends. Store, if necessary, for up to five days in the refrigerator, wrapped in plastic to preserve freshness.

Most green vegetables retain more of their color when cooked in an uncovered pan. Spinach is the exception to this cooking rule. Because of the very small amount of water used in cooking (you should use only the water that clings to the leaves after washing) a cover or lid must be used to generate steam.

To make a spinach ring, press cooked, seasoned, chopped spinach into a buttered ring mold and allow it to stand a moment, then unmold onto a serving platter and fill the center with any desired sauce, or with another vegetable. Spinach is an nutritious addition to a vegetarian diet, excellent as a source of vitamins A and C, and high in fiber content and minerals. Popeye was right: You'll "fight to the finish" if you eat your spinach!

SPINACH PUDDING

2 lbs. spinach, cleaned
4 eggs, separated
2 medium-size rolls
1 cups milk
Salt to taste
Dash of mace
¼ cup butter
2 tbsps. bread crumbs

Soak rolls in milk. Steam spinach for 3 to 5 minutes. Drain and puree in food processor in several batches. Beat egg yolk until creamy, add soaked rolls, salt, mace and spinach. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Grease a covered pudding form well, sprinkle with bread crumbs. Pour in mixture, cover, and cook a pan of boiling water for about 45 minutes. Serve with melted butter on the side. Serves 4 to 6.

SPINACH PANCAKES

1 lb. spinach, cleaned
¼ cup butter
2 eggs, separated
¼ tsp. salt
cup flour

Steam spinach 3 to 5 minutes; drain and chop very fine. Cream butter with egg yolks, add salt, spinach, and flour. Mix well. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Bake on a greased griddle. Make pancakes small (about 3 inches in diameter). Serves 4 to 6.

CHEESE AND SPINACH DUMPLINGS

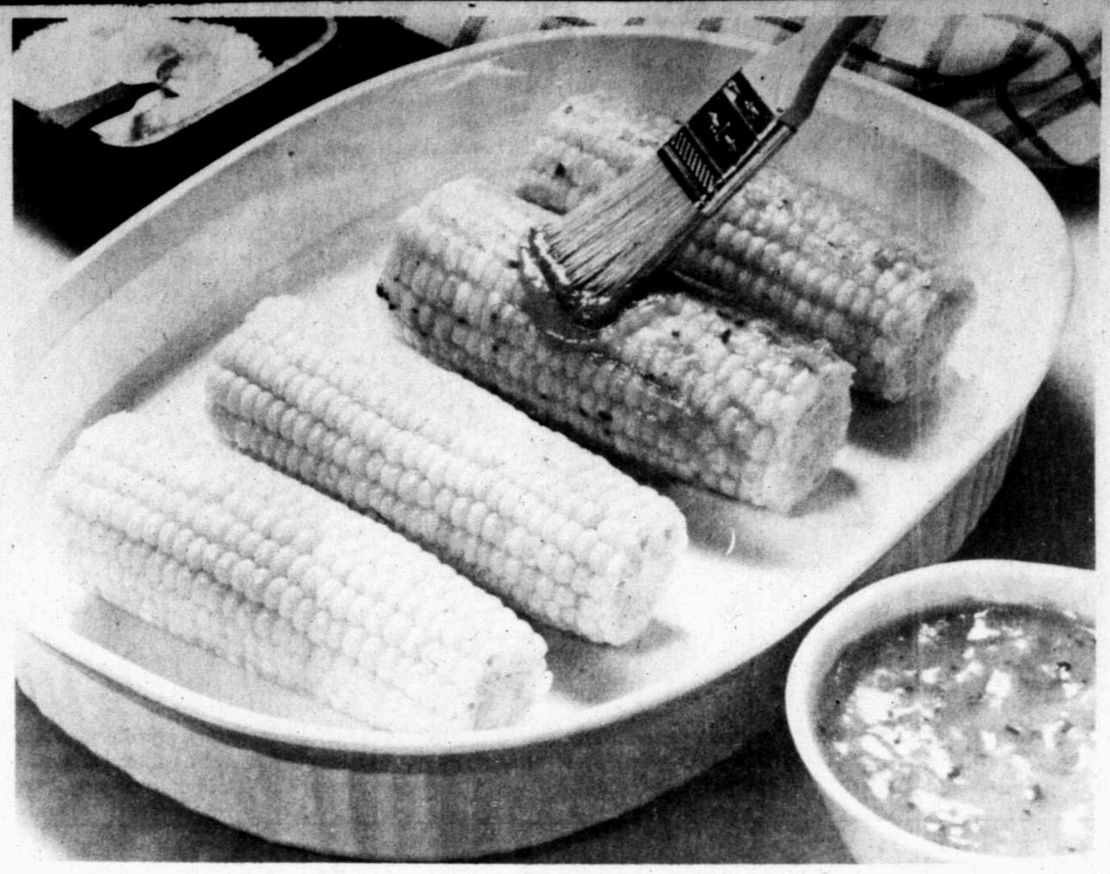
2 lbs. spinach, cleaned
1 lb. cottage cheese
5 egg yolks
2½ to 3 cups freshly grated Parmesan cheese
⅛ tsp. nutmeg
¾ cup flour
½ cup melted butter

Bring spinach to a boil in salted water and drain thoroughly at once. Puree in a food processor or blender, or chop very fine. Drain again if necessary. Press all the liquid from the cottage cheese, as it must be very dry. Beat the egg yolks, then mix in the drained cottage cheese, spinach, 2 cups Parmesan cheese and nutmeg. Beat well with a wooden spoon. Shape into balls and roll lightly in the flour. Use a large deep skillet and almost fill it with water. Bring to a boil and reduce heat and almost fill it with water. Bring to a boil and reduce heat to low. Carefully add the dumplings one at a time. Cook over low heat until they rise to the surface. Drain well. Pour the melted butter over them and sprinkle with the remaining Parmesan cheese. Serves 6 to 8. (Ricotta may be used in place of cottage cheese in this recipe.)

SPINACH SOUFFLE

3½ cups spinach, cooked
2 tbsps. butter
3 tbsps. flour
½ tsp. pepper
1 cup milk
2 cups Cheddar or Swiss cheese, grated
6 eggs

Press cooked spinach through a sieve. Melt butter in a saucepan. Blend in flour and pepper. Add cold milk and cook until mixture is thick. Stir in cheese and strained spinach. Cook until cheese melts. Separate eggs. Beat egg yolks well. Beat egg whites until stiff but not dry. Pour mixture over egg yolks. Fold in egg whites. Pour mixture into a buttered casserole or souffle dish. Place dish in a pan of hot water and bake at 375 degrees for 45 minutes or until a knife when inserted comes out clean. Serves 4.



Pizza Corn

Pizza sauce adds flavor to corn-on-cob

Corn-on-the-cob is a vegetable that's easy to love — it's sweet, flavorful and fun to eat. And it needn't be reserved only for summertime feasts, since the taste of fresh corn is available year 'round in convenient frozen form.

If you're a culinary purist, serve corn-on-the-cob with just butter and seasonings. If you're a little more adventurous, enhance the natural sweetness of corn with a zesty pizza-flavored sauce.

Pizza Corn is so easy to make, children can help. After combining sauce ingredients in a small bowl, place frozen ears of corn in a glass baking dish. Brush the sauce over ears and cook in microwave oven.

PIZZA CORN

1 envelope instant tomato soup mix
1 teaspoon instant minced onion
1/2 teaspoon basil leaves
1/3 cup water
2 tablespoons margarine or butter, melted
1 pkg. (4 ears) frozen ears corn-on-the-cob
Grated parmesan cheese

In small bowl, combine soup mix, onion, basil, water and margarine. Let stand until thickened. Place corn in 11x7 or 9x9 glass baking dish. Brush entire mixture on corn. Cover and microwave on HIGH five minutes. Turn ears over and rearrange; rotate dish 1/4 turn. Let stand three minutes. Microwave on HIGH 5-1/2 to 7-1/2 minutes; let rest two minutes. Before serving, spoon sauce over corn and sprinkle with parmesan cheese. Makes four servings.

Fast foods: Nutritious or 'junk food'?

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Registered Dietitian
Copley News Service

Have you ever wondered just how many calories you are taking in when you order a hamburger, french fries and a shake at your local fast food restaurant? Are you getting your nutritional money's worth or is it junk food?

One national hamburger chain has thoughtfully provided its customers with a handy little pamphlet called "Nutrition You Can Count On." Inside, it lists the principal nutrients of their most popular food items — the calories per serving, the grams of protein, carbohydrate and fat, the milligrams of cholesterol and sodium, the percentages of the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowances (U.S.R.D.A.) of vitamins A, C, thiamine, riboflavin, and niacin, plus the minerals, calcium and iron.

THESE SIMPLE, easily read figures allow customers to make far more intelligent choices in food selections. Will the average person actually take the time to look at the figures and choose accordingly? Probably not, but those who are weight-conscious or aware of other nutritional problems, such as high cholesterol or high-sodium related diseases, can certainly benefit.

Looking at the calories only, this particular chain offers four different hamburgers that range from 260 calories for the smallest to 780 for the largest. A hearty chicken sandwich supplies 680 calories, the char-broiled steak sandwich is 630 calories. A roast beef sandwich is only 300 calories, but a filet of fish sandwich a whopping 550 calories.

WHY ARE THE CHICKEN and fish sandwiches higher in calories than the roast beef? Because they are dipped in batter and deep fried. If you remove the batter and leave it on the plate, you can skip a lot of unnecessary calories.

A hot dog is 320 calories, a chili dog is 330, and a chili cheese dog is 380 calories. By adding a slice of American cheese you get 50 more calories and 70 calories for Swiss cheese.

A serving of french fries is tabbed at 250 calories and onion rings at 330. Carrot cake is 250 calories and an apple turnover is 400. A regular shake will give you 490 calories, carbonated beverages 240, and ice tea 2 calories.

A CHILI CHEESE DOG is the highest in cholesterol at 175 mg per serving and the hearty chicken sandwich is the highest in sodium at 1,070 mg per serving. The regular salad is the lowest in both cholesterol and sodium. The lo-cal Italian dressing is the lowest in calories, but the highest in sodium at 470 mg. It contains no cholesterol. The blue cheese dressing has only 15 mg of cholesterol and 210 mg of sodium, but the Thousand Island dressing has 445 mg of sodium and 15 mg of cholesterol.

BREAKFAST RANGES from 480 calories for hot cakes with syrup and butter, to 140 for an English muffin with butter and jelly. Scrambled eggs are low in calories at 150, but high in cholesterrol at 625 mg and sodium at 505 mg.

A "Sunrise" sandwich with sausage is listed at 420 calories, 120 mg of cholesterol and 2,850 mg of sodium. The same sandwich with bacon lowers the calories to 380, the cholesterol is 105 mg, but jumps the sodium to 4,000 mg. Clearly, if you are trying to lose weight or have cholesterol and sodium (salt) problems, these are very poor choices.

DOES THAT MEAN you can't eat in a fast food restaurant? No, you can order very wisely — by asking for one of these handy little nutrition guides to help you.

Gourmets prize wild sorrel again

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

During the first half of this century, a good many American cooks prized wild sorrel for use in making soups and sauces. For a time sorrel went out of fashion, then in the 1970s interest in it was renewed — perhaps because French chefs' use of this herb was widely publicized. Nowadays it is still free for the picking and the cultivated variety may be bought in some food markets.

Sheep Sorrel (Rumex acetosella) goes by the common names: field sorrel, red sorrel, sourgrass, rabbit ears and sour dock. In the U.S. it grows in open dry fields and in acidic soil along roadsides. Pringle writes, "The word sorrel comes from a German word meaning sour and there are other tart-tasting plants called sorrels which are not closely related to sheep sorrel. About 30 kinds of wood sorrel (of the genus Oxalis)

SORREL CREAM SOUP

About 5 cups of sheep-sorrel leaves
¼ cup butter
½ cup chopped onion
3 cups fresh or canned chicken broth
2 large egg yolks
1 cup heavy cream
⅛ teaspoon Tabasco sauce
Salt and pepper to taste

Wash the sorrel leaves and remove most of the larger stems. Chop the leaves finely; you should have about 5 cups.

Melt the butter in a large stainless-steel or enamel saucepan over medium heat, and then add the onion. Stir and cook until the onion is wilted.

Add the sorrel and continue to cook for a few minutes, until it is wilted.

Pour in the chicken broth and bring the mixture to a boil. Reduce the heat and let it simmer.

In a small bowl, beat the egg yolks. Add the cream, then a little of the hot broth to warm the mixture.

Stirring rapidly with a wire whisk, add the egg-cream mixture to the soup. Turn up the heat, but don't let the soup boil.

Add Tabasco sauce, salt and pepper. The soup can be served hot or chilled. Makes 6 servings.

Note: A stainless-steel or enamel pan is recommended since sorrel is acidic and will discolor an aluminum pan and add a metallic taste to the soup.

Use microwave magic on late summer fruits

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

As summer swings into full bloom, so do the luscious, sun-ripened fruits that flood the stands and supermarkets during these months.

Since fruit is at its sweetest peak and prices at a seasonal low, it's a good idea to stock up. Fresh fruit serves as a delightful light dessert on these balmy summer evenings. If you find your own fruit trees oversupplying the demand, canning and freezing (check your microwave cookbooks for handy tips) are handy answers to save the surplus. Dried fruit also renders a healthful tasty snack or dessert, great for picnics and outings.

THE PLEASURE of that first juicy bite is nothing short of paradise. After so many such bites, however, it's fun to experiment with the vast assortment of recipes available that stretch such an experience into a variety of textures and tastes.

One such alteration involves no microwave, requiring instead a number of people and a bottle of vodka. "Inebriate" a watermelon by cutting triangular "plugs" as deeply as possible into the fruit. Pour some vodka into each hole, wait for it to sink in, then continue to ply your melon with liquor. When saturated, chill the watermelon a couple of hours until completely stewed. After a few slices, you may follow suit.

The microwave does come in handy when preparing fruit juice. Before squeezing, warm citrus fruit in the microwave for a few seconds. The fruit will give more juice and you will find that it is easier to squeeze. After juicing, save the rinds to grate into cakes, frostings or jellies. The rinds grate more easily when frozen.

To soften fruit that is dried out and hard, sprinkle it with ½ to one teaspoon water and heat 1 to 2 minutes.

Now for some recipes utilizing the season's fruit harvest:

PINK RHUBARB SAUCE

2 cups rhubarb (cut into 1-inch pieces)
2 to 3 tbsps. water
Dash salt
½ cup sugar
1 piece stick cinnamon
Red food coloring

Place rhubarb, water and salt in 2-quart casserole. Cover, cook in microwave oven 4 minutes, gently stirring twice. Add sugar and cinnamon; cook 1 minute. Add few drops food coloring. Let stand, covered, until cool. Remove cinnamon stick. Chill before serving. Makes 4 servings.

BAKED BANANAS

6 medium green-tipped bananas
3 tbsps. lime juice cup honey cup sherry or rum
3 tbsps. butter or margarine
¼ cup red currant jelly
½ cup flaked coconut

Peel bananas, place in shallow baking dish. Brush all over with lime juice. Mix honey and wine, spoon over bananas; dot with butter. Cook in microwave oven 8 minutes. Turn dish completely around after 4 minutes and spoon syrup over bananas. Dot with jelly, sprinkle with coconut. Serve warm. Makes 6 servings.

PEACH CONSERVE

2 cups chopped peaches
1 (1 lb., 4 oz.) can crushed, drained pineapple
1 (8 oz.) bottle chopped maraschino cherries
Maraschino cherry juice
7½ cups sugar
1 (6 oz.) bottle liquid fruit pectin

Combine peaches, pineapple, cherries and juice in 4-quart casserole. Cook, covered, in microwave oven for 10 minutes. Stir in sugar. Return to microwave, uncovered, 15 minutes. Stir every 5 minutes. Mixture should be boiling. Stir in liquid fruit pectin. Cook 10 to 15 minutes longer. Temperature should read 228 F. Stir 5 minutes to cool. Pour into jars or glasses. Seal with paraffin. Makes ten 6-ounce glasses.

GRAPE JELLY

6 cups Concord grapes
2 cups diced apples
1 cup water
¾ cup sugar for each cup juice

Combine grapes, apples and water in 4-quart casserole. Cook, covered, in microwave oven for 15 to 20 minutes or until fruit is tender. Stir every 5 minutes. Strain juice, using several thicknesses of cheesecloth or jelly bag. Measure juice. Return to microwave oven. Bring to boil, about 10 minutes. Add sugar. Stir well. Cook to 220 F, about 30 minutes. Stir at 5-minute intervals. Pour into glasses to set. Seal with paraffin. Makes two to four 8-ounce glasses.

Recipes in this column are tested in 625- to 700-watt microwave ovens. Foods are cooked on HIGH (100 percent power) and uncovered unless otherwise specified.

Geri Klamm had quite a surprise waiting for her at Mile High Stadium Saturday nigt. When she left, her last name was Cordy and she had a husband named Don Cordy. The couple had planned to be married and Don made arrangements for a minister to be present at the Minnesota-Denver football game. It came as a surprise to Geri as the couple were married in the stands at halftime before 77,000 fans.

Tougher beef cuts may cost more

By MERLE ELLIS

Beef round is one of the best beef buys — and one of the biggest beef rip-offs — in many of today's meat markets. Does that sound like a contradiction?

It is! But that's all right. As Walt Whitman once said, " . . . do I contradict myself? Very well, I contradict myself. I am broad and contain multitudes." So does a beef round. It can be the best of buys and it can be the worst of buys.

I don't know why they call it the round. The same part of any other animal is called the leg. We speak of a leg of lamb, a leg of veal, and a leg of pork, but when we speak of the hind leg of the beef animal we call it the round. And when we separate it into its component parts we call them all kinds of different things, charge some rather ridiculous prices for them and call it all merchandising.

There are three muscles in the beef round as it is merchandised today. Each of those muscles is sold separately and each for a different price in most markets. The pricing of these various cuts is totally without logic. The toughest among them often costs the most, while the most tender is a dollar a pound less. Learning a little about the reality of the round can save you a lot of money.

A market in my neighborhood had a variety of different cuts of round in its meat case recently, selling for different prices — from $2.19 to $3.98 a pound. But the differences in price did not reflect any differences in quality or tenderness.

The most tender of the three muscles of the hind leg of a beef animal is the top round. It lies on the inside of the leg and does less work, so it stays more tender. The other two muscles, the bottom round and the eye of the round, are located on the outside of the leg. They work harder and get tougher.

You would expect to pay a bit more for the tender part and a little less for the tougher cuts, right? Not in the market I was shopping in last week — not, for that matter, in most markets!

The eye of the round labeled "breakfast steaks" was going for $3.98 a pound. The eye is always the most expensive cut of the round in spite of the fact that it is tough. A fried breakfast steak from the eye would be almost as tough as the sole of my boot — but it is cute. That's probably why it's always the most expensive. Bottom round was $3.09. It's just as tough but not nearly as cute.

The least expensive of the three muscles, sold separately, was the top round — the most tender part. It was $2.79 a pound, cut 3/4 inches thick. Cut 1-1/2 inches thick and labeled "London Broil," it was $2.99 a pound. Either way it was cheaper than the tough stuff. It boggles the mind!

What is even more mind-boggling is why anybody would buy any of those cuts of the round when in the same meat case "Beaf Round, Full Cut — BNLS" was selling for $2.19. Full-cut round is all three: — top, bottom and eye, all in one. Why pay a premium for the component parts when you can buy them all and save? It doesn't make sense.

Full-cut round steak often is one of the best beef buys in most meat cases. It is also, for my money, one of the most flavorful steaks beef has to offer. Granted, it's not the most tender — no part of it, at any price, is as tender as a T-bone — but the flavor is fantastic, and properly prepared, there is no more delicious piece of meat.

My love for beef round steak may well stem from the fact that it was the steak that I grew up with. Sunday dinner at Grandmother's house usually was centered on two things: fried chicken and chicken-fried steak. The former a rooster, the latter a round.

A slab of beef round steak about an inch thick was dusted heavily with seasoned flour, then pounded with the edge of a heavy plate until most of the flour was beaten into the meat. Then the steak was turned over and the same process applied to the second side. When the steak was nearly twice as big around and half as thick as it started out to be, and after it had absorbed as much flour as could be beaten into it, it was cut into serving-size peices, dipped in egg and then in fine cracker crumbs and fried in lard in a heavy black skillet.

After it was browned nicely on both sides, it was covered and cooked slowly over low heat on the back of the stove for 30 or 40 minutes, until it was so tender you could cut it with a fork.

Beef round is a marvelous and versatile piece of meat. It can be used for all manner of different dishes from chicken-fried steak to Stroganoff, from "Chinese stir-fry," to "Swiss steak." Be careful though — don't pay a premium for the parts. Look for Full-cut Round.

Making playmates

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

"Cooperative" playgroups, or "do-it-yourself nursery schools" are one answer for young children without playmates.

These are simply playgroups organized by mothers with young children. A small group of children meets regularly in each other's homes under the supervision of one of their mothers. Mothers take turns serving as coordinator of the playgroups.

These playgroups are an effective way for mothers to help young children learn about the outside world and how to get along with others in a small, intimate environment. The plan works best when there are truly conscientious mothers with similar goals and ideas about the organization of a cooperative playgroup for their children.

STARTING A GROUP

Some playgroups start among mothers who already know each other and whose children knew each other, while others might start in a newly established neighborhood or in very mobile communities.

An interested mother might invite a group of others with children of the same ages to meet with her and discuss the idea.

SETTING GUIDELINES

For the guidelines, which each group sets for itself, here are some ideas:

1) Keep groups small — three or four children seems to be the ideal number for ease of supervision.

2) Decide how often the goup will meet, which day or days, and time of day appropriate for the children and the supervising mother of the day.

3) Make a calendar of each mother's supervising days.

4) Agree on a schedule of activities, discipline and steps for deciding when a child is sick and how to arrange for a substitute supervisor.

5) Exchange a list of emergency telephone numbers, emergency-treatment permission slips and notes about each child in the group.

In the notes include likes and dislikes, abilities and interests, allergies and any restrictions on activities, along with other helpful guidelines for working with each child.

MAKING SCHEDULES

Schedules could include a planned project, a storytime, songs and games, a snack, free play and pick-up time.

Whatever the schedules might be, it's important to agree on consistency to avoid confusion for the children. Also, set a definite arrival and departure time.

Food questions answered

By MINNIE BERNARDINO
Los Angeles Times

Q: I have a number of cans of Bumble Bee tuna and I was told that some serial numbers have been recalled. I would appreciate it if you would reprint the serial numbers that are involved. I have inquired at a few stores and they couldn't give me any information.

A: The lids for the recalled Bumble Bee tuna cans have numbers on the top of two lines that start with 21 or 22. The 21 or 22 is followed by two or three other numbers on the same line. According to Virginia Pingree, consumer-communications specialist at Castle and Cooke, Inc., which owns the affected Hawaiian Tuna Packers, the estimated 41.7 million cans were processed in Honolulu in 1981 and 1982 (the first number "2" stands for Hawaii in the serial code, and the proceeding "1" and "2" stand for 1981 and 1982).

Five cans have been reported to contain small holes caused by accidental puncturing from wire baskets used during retort heat processing. To prevent further damages, the baskets have been banned for use by the Food and Drug Administration. No illnesses have been reported, according to the FDA, but deadly bacteria could enter into the holes and could cause botulism, they added. Consumers are asked to return said cans to where they were purchased for reimbursement or exchange.

Q: I have a recipe for an ice cream dessert that calls for 1/3 cup Cointreau or Grand Marnier. Since the liqueur is rather expensive, about $14 for a bottle, is there something else I can use to replace it?

A: How about using a scant 1/3 cup orange juice and about 2 to 3 teaspoons brandy extract? Better yet, a scant 1/3 cup orange juice plus 1 tablespoon brandy or bourbon or other whiskey. A third alternative is to check the liquor store for less expensive brands of orange-flavored liqueurs.

Q: How do you sweeten a flat-tasting watermelon?

A: Simply sprinkle the cut-up watermelon with sugar and let stand in the refrigerator for at least half an hour for the sugar to dissolve into the pulp of the fruit. Soaking the fruit in syrup or sweet liqueur marinade for salads or compotes also will sweeten flat-tasting fruit. The sugar sprinkling and the second solution are also applicable for other fruits like other types of melons, berries, peaches, etc.

Q: I am planning to make small cream puffs filled with cream filling for dessert for a wedding dinner party for 50 people. Can I make the puffs in advance to freeze? Also, would you advise doubling or tripling the recipe? My recipe calls for 1/2 cup of butter, 1 cup water, 1 cup flour, 1/8 teaspoon salt, 1/4 cup sugar and 4 eggs and will make about 4 to 6 dozen small puffs. If they freeze well, can you give me some tips for reheating them so that they are crisp?

A: Cream puffs, large or small, freeze well for one to three months. For crisper puffs, it is better to freeze them unfilled, although ice-cream or whipped cream-filled puffs have been known to freeze well also. The secret to making good firm cream puffs is to see to it that the beating is sufficient after the addition of each egg so that the batter is smooth and glossy. In order to achieve this, avoid making too large a batch at a time. You may triple your recipe to serve that many people; however, for best results, divide into two batches, making 1 1/2 times the recipe per batch.

Smaller puffs also require less baking time than the larger ones. Bake the small puffs at 450 degrees for 10 minutes and reduce the oven heat to 325 degrees. Then continue baking about 15 minutes longer or until the puffs are an even, delicate brown. For crisper puffs, remove the puffs from the oven then cool on racks for 10 minutes. Turn the oven off and after the 10-minute period return the puffs to the oven to dry for another 10 minutes.

Pork loin with onions

DINNER FARE
Pork Loin and Onions

Fruit Salad

PORK AND ONIONS
As served in the American Bounty Restaurant of the Culinary Institute of America, Hyde Park, N.Y.

2 to 2¼ pound boneless smoked pork loin (in one piece)
1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespon cooking oil
3 cups sliced onions
2 cloves garlic, minced
12-ounce can beer
1 cup beef broth
2 tablespoons tomato paste
1 teaspoon black pepper
1 tablespoon cider vinegar

Cut pork in half crosswise. In a heavy Dutch oven or pot that has an oven-proof cover, melt butter with oil; add pork and over medium heat brown on all sides — do not scorch. Remove meat.

Add onion and garlic to pot and cook, stirring constantly, until soft. Add beer, broth, tomato paste, pepper and vinegar. Bring to a boil; simmer for 5 to 10 minutes. Add pork.

Cover and braise in a preheated 350-degree oven, basting every 15 minutes, until pork is tender — about 1½ hours. Slice pork ¼-inch thick and serve with the sauce. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Dental fraud claim rebutted

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "On to Him in St. Louis," who accused the dental profession of fraud due to the advent of dental insurance. Perhaps this uninformed reader, as well as a large segment of the population, will be enlightened by the following:

No dentist in the course of an examination can willfully crack, break or dislodge a good filling unless he uses tools designed for archeological expeditions!

It is necessary for the dentist to check all fillings carefully to be sure there is no unsealed or cracked surface through which bacteria could enter and cause decay under the fillings, leading to toothaches, lost fillings and the need for root canal work or extraction of the tooth. Unfortunately, even the best of fillings may eventually require replacement due to the stresses of chewing, poor oral hygiene, improper diet, a bad bite or grinding one's teeth.

About dental insurance: It benefits the PATIENT — not the DENTIST. I cannot keep track of the number of patients who have suggested that I "pad" the bill and falsify dates of services in order for them to obtain greater financial benefits than deserved. People who have neglected their teeth for years suddenly want "everything" done if their dental insurance covers it.

Also, I have never known a dentist who would participate in a "kickback" arrangement with a root canal (or any other kind of) dental specialist.

The overwhelming majority of dentists are hard-working, ethical, conscientious individuals who are interested in providing the best possible treatment for their patients — and only that treatment which is necessary, regardless of insurance coverage or not! — A DENTIST FROM THE ETHICAL MAJORITY, WEST ISLIP, N.Y.

DEAR ETHICAL: I heard from hundreds of irate dentists chewing me out for printing a letter from an obviously uninformed reader. They said that by giving that "nut" space in my column, I validated her paranoid accusations. Not so! Be assured that dentists are the last group of professionals I would intentionally alienate. I need them often to remove my foot from my mouth.

DEAR ABBY: I have a friend who is a very good Catholic. I'm a Catholic, too, but Theresa knows more about Catholicism than I do. Theresa says that if a Catholic gets divorced he is automatically excommunicated from the church. Is that true? — KATHY

DEAR KATHY: No. Theresa needs to update her information. At one time the divorced Catholic who REMARRIED was automatically excommunicated. (That applied only in the United States.) However, that ruling was changed in 1977, and it no longer applies.

'Ringmaster' presents 6,000-piece miniature circus in cellar

The "Little 3-Ring Circus" is the centerpiece of his collection. The 74-year-old retired printer has assembled more than 650 circus posters, 300 programs, and stacks of circus records, stationery, photos, route cards and tickets.

"If it's circus, I got it," Watson said, beaming with pride.

"This house is a museum with all the material I have. It's a shame I don't have room to display it all."

Watson sets up the tiny circus five months a year — from December through April — and welcomes the public to view his free display.

Boy Scouts and others who troop through are greeted by trumpets and cymbals of a circus band, courtesy of a tape recorder. But that's only the beginning of the magic.

"I turn off all the lights and let them see what it looks like at night," he said.

The stands are filled with hand-painted spectators who "watch" 65 elephants, 200 horses and a menagerie of camels, tigers, and lions perform in the center rings. The show, built to one-eighth-inch scale, is modeled after a circus of the 1940s.

Using his kitchen table as a workbench, Watson began by building a thread-spool-size circus car 35 years ago. With a single-edged razor, he has carved more than 100 circus wagons and 40 railroad cars out of soft, bass wood.

"It's like a model railroad. It will never be completed," he said.

His oldest circus posters are two that date to 1892, announcing a Sells Bros. Show. He figures the posters are worth $300 apiece.

All the posters are printed in vivid colors, and feature ferocious-looking animals and daredevil feats. Advance men of another era traveled ahead of the circus wagons, posting the notices in upcoming towns.

"They were real works of art, all these advertising pieces. The idea was to make a big splash," Watson said.

For example, two hippos with mouths agape rise out of the water in a 1945 billboard-size poster that announces a Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey circus.

Gargantua, the 500-pound gorilla, scowls at the customers in another poster that calls him "the world's most terrifying living creature."

In the heyday of the circus, from 1895 to the late 1930s, Watson estimated there were 20 to 25 shows traveling the country by rail. Another 30 "mud shows" plodded along dirt roads from town to town. He estimates there are now only 12 to 14 outdoor shows performing under canvas.

Watson was bitten by the circus bug while he was a boy growing up in nearby McKees Rocks. Like many youngsters, he carried poles and equipment into the shows in exchange for free admission.

Now, when the circus is in town, Watson is not far from the center ring.

"I'm down there at the station when the train pulls in. I loaf in the back yards, visit with friends and go see the show. I go down and watch them pack up," he said.

He finds it hard to explain the lure of the big top, but said it is something that most people can't resist.

"Circus is a magic word. I don't care how old you are or how young you are. People get a certain gleam in their eye when you mention the circus," he said.

Firm transforms vans into 'social' luxury vehicles

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A decade or two ago, we knew them as love buggies or sin bins, gaily decorated vans crammed with flower kids and hippies.

And funny smelling smoke.

Shaded, portal windows only hinted of the debauchery therein, and nice girls avoided such shabbily suspicious digs as a trollop might a vice cop.

But times have changed, and so have the vans. Unlike Rodney Dangerfield, they're finally getting respect.

From mothers and daddies, no less.

And while the auto industry struggles through an historic slump, luxury van sales are on the upswing. The Wall Street Journal, quoting auto makers, says:

And one reason is a spunky, spritely new van-conversion firm called Tra-Tech which is churning out cushy models almost as fast as it can get the chassis.

"Once a fad, the van now has a permanent place in the market," says Bob Isham, Tra-Tech's founder, president and chief operating officer.

Industry figures showed van sales up 21 percent in the first half of the year while passenger car sales fell 11 percent. Tra-Tech's story is even more dramatic.

Purchasing the assets of a mortally wounded van division in July 1979, Isham and a partner spent a grim year and a half disposing of an inventory of 300 vehicles.

"Gas hogs," grumbled money conscious consumers.

But for the 1982 model year, sales skyrocketed from 3.4 million to $19.5 million with production exceeding 3,000. Isham projected a 1983 figure of 7,000.

Why the renewed popularity?

For one thing, gasoline prices stabilized. And the latest van models purportedly get 35 to 40 percent better mileage than the older ones.

Depending on size and model, said Ishham, the new vans get 17 to 19 miles per gallon.

He pointed out that as cars got smaller, the appeal for vans increased. Said he:

"Everybody thought when they began downsizing cars there would be no market for vans...Instead, it created a need for vans."

For one thing, they carry twice as many passengers as most cars. But Isham thinks it's equally important that the Tra-Tech vans are "social" vehicles.

"They are still fun to drive," he said. "They are not just purely functional."

A Tra-Tech survey indicated that a van owner is generally male, 30 to 40, married with two children, considers himself a professional of some sort and earns more than $75,000 annually.

Though used for trips, vacations and business, Tra-Tech vans are committed more than half the time to family use.

"Women soon commandeer them for hauling the kids to soccer games and whatever," said Phil Wetherby, Tra-Tech's vice president and national sales manager.

Tra-Tech purchases the bare bones vans from Ford, Dodge and General Motors and transforms them cosmetically and conventionally into luxury vehicles.

The overhaul consists of some $6,000 in "improvements," including installation of bigger, unbreakable plastic windows and sporty exterior paint jobs.

Molded plastic wall panels like those found in airliners are used for the interior because they're tough and light, don't absorb tobacco odors and are easy to clean.

A quadrophonic sound system, color TV, 40-channel CB radio and imported European leather seats head the list of options for the van owner who wants everything.

Tra-Tech vans come in two models, the Texan and the Statesman, and are not to be confused with the hot rod shop models known fondly as "Penthouse," "Tunnel of Love" and "The Experience."

Although Tra-Tech is a wholesaler, the vans retail on the average between $16,500 and $17,500 with a "loaded" van selling for roughly $19,000.

With its main plant here, and with additional facilities in Pontiac, Mich., and Marietta, Ga., Tra-Tech may be the largest van-conversion company in the United States.

It's got to be the most interesting.

"We have fun. I love the business and I still get excited about our vans," said Isham, 43, with a boyish grin. "But we're very good business people too."

However, there were more than a few shaky moments.

The van market, which perhaps peaked in the mid-1970s, plunged drastically as the decade ended in the midst of a gas shortage and rising gasoline prices.

Big no longer was beautiful.

But Isham and his colleagues gambled that the public would buy a quality converted van that could perform a variety of functions, not the least of which was social.

Anyone who doubts this philosophy need look only to Texas Stadium and the tailgate parties preceding Dallas Cowboys football games.

Isham said a Fort Worth doctor telephoned him after returning from a Colorado skiing trip and reported seeing five Tra-Tech vans at the resort.

"That does make us a little bit proud," he smiled.

Tra-Tech officials say they are not worried that the major auto companies might produce stylish, elegant vans on their own.

"They can't respond as quickly to the mood and tastes of the public," explained Isham. "To duplicate what we do would cost them maybe twice as much.

Union works for bill forcing Japanese to build cars here

By DONALD WOUTAT
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

DETROIT — Should Toyota, Nissan and other foreign auto giants be forced to build cars and trucks in American factories?

To the United Auto Workers union, worried about saving jobs, the answer is yes. And to the alarm of the Reagan administration, not to mention Toyota and Nissan, the politically potent union has persuaded more than half the members of the House to co-sponsor a bill that would force the Japanese to either build cars here or to sharply curtail their U.S. sales.

The bill is given little chance of passage this fall, particularly in the Senate. But the legislation is gathering momentum as the recession and foreign competition cut into jobs outside of the auto industry — and make more Americans believe that their economic problems might be solved with trade barriers against foreign goods.

Critics contend that blocking Japanese cars from the U.S. market would not only damage trade relations with Japan, but would also allow U.S. auto makers to raise prices in an environment of less competition.

But the backers say the legislation would create employment in an industry where 600,000 jobs have been lost to Japanese competition and two recessions since 1979, many of them for good.

A toned-down version of the original bill introduced Tuesday would require Toyota and Nissan to use an average of about 70 percent U.S. content in the vehicles they sell here, and that amount would increase as their sales increased.

To meet that requirement, the companies would have to build their cars in American factories out of parts purchased mostly from U.S. suppliers.

Even the toned-down version is given little chance of immediate enactment. The measure's strong House support is taken to mean that Congress is eager to back a "jobs bill" in an election year while sending a trade warning to Japan — confident that the bill will subsequently be rejected by the Senate or vetoed by President Reagan.

Whatever its current chance of passage, there are those in and out of government who believe that a domestic-content bill, or something equally strong, is politically inevitable sooner or later unless Detroit manages to stem the import flood on its own or the Japanese change their own trade and investment policies.

"If the UAW gets it through the House this year, they'll consider it an important victory," said one congressional aide. "Then they'll bring it up again next year and get everybody used to the idea. Give them another two years and they might pass it."

Even though the bill is likely to be killed this fall, union backers believe that the stronger the support in Congress, the more likely the administration is to demand an extension of the Japanese government's current ceiling on car shipments here — an agreement due to expire next March 31.

The union has used the local-content proposal as a platform for spelling out how most nations protect their automotive and other industries, arguing that this country's free-trade posture makes it a babe-in-the-woods in dealing with multinational companies.

"It's not just a question of free trade, it's how you deal with international industry," UAW economist Lee Price said. "We say it's perfectly reasonable to impose some rules on those companies. It's quixotic to say you can get other governments to stop regulating multinationals, particularly as it relates to defense of a domestic industry."

Martin S. Anderson, an economist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has attacked the local-content bill as riddled with loopholes that could undermine the goals of its own supporters. But he calls it a good starting point for examining such questions as whether U.S. tax policies penalize the nation in world trade.

"If our manufacturing infrastructure ... needs local-content protection, then at least we can admit we face some fundamental problems," Anderson said. "If we are willing to risk monumental trade protection, then we should be willing to look at other options which previously seemed too large in scope." The opponents range from President Reagan to longshoremen's unions, from imported car dealers to the soybean lobby.

Special Trade Representative William Brock calls it "the worst threat to the international trading system and our own prosperity to be put before Congress in a decade."

Detroit's auto makers, whose escalating efforts to buy more low-cost components from overseas would be limited by the bill, have let their trade organization speak against it while honoring an unstated truce with the UAW.

The two sides offer wildly disparate accounts of what would happen under a local-content law, their arithmetic is consistent with their philosophy, politics, and visions of the future.

The relatively minimal job effects predicted by the administration and the Congressional Budget Office, for instance, reflect a strikingly more optimistic outlook for Detroit in an unprotected market than is entertained by most private analysts or the UAW.

The budget office argues, for instance, that imported vehicle sales have already peaked in this country and that U.S. auto makers plan no sharp increase in purchases of foreign components. Most independent studies sharply disagree with this view.

Thus the various forecasts of the effect on jobs, comparing likely future employment with and without the legislation, range from a loss of 100,000 jobs to no effect at all and gains of 200,000, 520,000 and 941,000 jobs. The Department of Commerce admits that an unpublished Department of Labor study concluded that more than 600,000 auto-related jobs would result — about six times the administration's official mid-range estimate.

The UAW, meanwhile, recently saw fit to boost its own job estimate from 868,000 to 941,000.

(The substitute legislation unveiled Tuesday would make all those estimates obsolete and significantly reduce the number of jobs that might be generated. The UAW, the Reagan administration and others have not yet offered any new job estimates to reflect the major changes in the bill.)

One of the most basic disagreements is over what the Japanese will do if the bill is enacted.

Would the Japanese firms simply go home, as the administration and Congressional Budget Office contend, and leave the world's biggest auto market to others? Or would they do what they have done in other nations with solid import barriers and begin establishing a sizable U.S. manufacturing presence, as the auto union and MIT's Anderson argue?

The inflationary effect of the bill hinges significantly on this question: if the highly efficient Japanese moved here, competition would intensify and car prices would presumably be restrained, tending to offset the high cost of U.S. labor and materials. If the Japanese pulled out, it is assumed Detroit would raise prices at will.

NEW YORK (AP) — United Technologies Corp. stepped into a fierce takeover battle between Bendix Corp. and the Martin Marietta Corp. by offering to acquire Bendix and split the assets with Martin Marietta.

United Technologies' offer was conditioned on Martin Marietta ending a $1.5 billion bid for Bendix, and Bendix dropping its offer for Martin Marietta.

Martin Marietta agreed, but Bendix chairman William Agee rejected the deal and said Bendix would raise its takeover bid for Martin Marietta to about $1.58 billion. Martin Marietta then rejected that bid as inadequate.

"This is the most complicated deal I've ever seen in my life," said Howard Rubel, who follows United Technologies for the investment firm of C.J. Lawrence.

Some analysts said they were puzzled by the United Technologies move, in part because of the conditions.

Alan Benasuli, an analyst at Drexel Burnham Lambert, said, "What perplexes me is that the offer has no teeth — it is conditional on Bendix not buying Martin Marietta."

Rubel and other analysts said they believed Bendix could persuade United Technologies — built up by chairman Harry J. Gray through acquisitions — to make a higher offer.

United Technologies, an aerospace and high-technology conglomerate based in Hartford, Conn., said Tuesday it was offering $75 a share for up to 11.9 million Bendix shares, or 50.3 percent of the company's common stock. In a second step, United Technologies would exchange one share of its common stock for 11.7 million remaining shares of Bendix.

The total value of the offer was estimated at $1.3 billion.

Bendix replied by sweetening its offer for Martin Marietta, raisinng the cash portion of its tender offer to $48 a share from $43 a share, for 15.8 million shares, or 45 percent of Martin Marietta stock.

Earlier Tuesday, Bendix said about 58 percent of the outstanding shares of Martin Marietta were tendered to Bendix by a Saturday night deadline under its previous offer of $43 a share.

Martin Marietta stockholders, however, may withdraw shares they offered to Bendix up to midnight Sept. 16.

Bendix released the text of a letter from Agee to Thomas G. Pownall, chairman of Martin Marietta, in which Agee made it clear he did not expect Bendix directors to approve the United Technologies offer because it was lower than the already rejected Martin Marietta offer.

Bendix stockholders who offer shares to United Technologies for its takeover bid can withdraw them up to midnight Sept. 28, United Technologies said.

United Technologies said that if its bid for Bendix succeeds, its agreement with Martin Marietta calls for Martin Marietta to purchase certain aerospace-electronics operations and other assets of Bendix for $600 million.

Commenting on the offer, Pownall, Martin Marietta's chief executive, said his company would acquire "some Bendix high-technology products used in the aerospace and electronics industries which will complement Martin Marietta's high technology aerospace business."

Gray said the offer followed discussions with Martin Marietta and is designed to resolve "an obviously difficult situation. "Our proposal will enable UTC to further broaden its participation in the automotive, electronics and industrial markets," he said.

Bendix surprised Martin Marietta officials with an Aug. 25 offer to buy the Bethesda, Md.-based manufacturer and defense contractor. After that, Bendix said it intended to swap its stock for the remaining shares.

Martin Marietta responded with a $75-a-share tender offer for 50.3 percent of Bendix, and proposed to acquire each of the remaining Bendix shares for Martin Marietta securities worth about $55.

New York bank likely to face opposition from Californians during take over effort

WASHINGTON (AP) — New York's Citicorp, the nation's second-largest bank holding company, is likely to face strong opposition from California banks in its effort to acquire a financially troubled West Coast savings institution.

The Federal Reserve Board was to begin two days of public hearings on Citicorp's bid to buy Fidelity Savings and Loan Association, a San Francisco firm that was taken over by federal regulators earlier this year.

Under the plan, Citicorp would spend $80 million initially to bring Fidelity's net worth up to federal requirements. In return, Citicorp would be the first commercial bank to breach the 59-year-old legal barrier against acquiring financial institutions in other states.

That action is expected to bring loud protests from some California banks and the state officials who regulate them. Today's hearing in Washington, at which Citicorp and federal officials were to lay out their case in favor of the deal, will be followed by a Thursday hearing in San Francisco that gives opponents their turn to speak.

The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., which insures depositors' money in S&Ls, will pay Citicorp for taking the low-yielding mortgage loans now on Fidelity's books.

That subsidy was estimated last month at $165 million but could be lower if interest rates remain at the lower levels they have reached since then.

Citicorp would repay the subsidy if interest rates fall far enough to make those loans profitable.

The plan was approved last month by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Only Federal Reserve permission now is needed before the merger takes effect.

It was the 13th time this year that the bank board reached across state lines for a merger to rescue a failing thrift, but the other 12 only involved other thrifts. No commercial bank, until Citicorp, was given federal permission to cross state lines.

The bank board said Citicorp's offer would cost the FSLIC $143 million less than the next lowest bid, and $302 million less than if the regulators continued to run Fidelity for 10 years.

The thrift industry — savings banks and S&Ls — has been in a severe earnings squeeze since 1980, when rising interest rates forced thrifts to pay more for new deposits than they were earning on older, long-term loans.

Federal regulators took control of Fidelity, which has 81 California branches, on April 13 when the Oakland-based thrift's net worth reached what they said was the point of exhaustion. The regulators reorganized the institution and based it in San Francisco.

The institution is not related to Fidelity Federal Savings and Loan of Glendale, Calif.

New fuel rules could mean dirtier air

WASHINGTON (AP) — New federal standards proposed for lead in fuels could result in substantial increases in gasoline lead levels in New York and other East Coast cities, a major oil company says.

Crown Central Petroleum Corp. said Tuesday its own estimates showed that lead levels in gasoline could increase by 28 percent in New York City and 12 percent in Philadelphia.

The Reagan administration, presented with new data on the dangers of lead poisoning in children, last month unveiled rules which it said would reduce the amount of lead in gasoline by 31 percent over the next eight years while saving the refining industry $38 million in 1983.

But at a hearing on the rules Tuesday, oil company executives said the change could have the opposite effect in the East.

Some took aim at a proposal that would allow companies who take more lead out of their gasoline than required by the new standards to sell their unused lead quota to other refineries.

California already has more stringent lead requirements than the EPA is proposing for the national standard. Oil executives said many companies which operate refineries in California would likely sell their unused lead quotas to refineries along the East Coast.

Edwin Mampe, an official of Crown Central, said since the older East Coast refineries find it is more expensive to boost octane ratings without lead, they would be willing to buy lead rights.

An analysis by his company predicted such trading could boost gasoline lead levels in the New York City metropolitan area by 28 percent and result in a 12 percent jump in Philadelphia. Similar results could be expected in other East Coast cities, he said.

Mampe and officials from Exxon Corp. and Union Oil Co. said the lead trading provision would be difficult to monitor and would lead to abuses.

"This kind of regulatory program ends up as a nightmare which falls of its own weight," said E.T. DiCorcia of Exxon.

The companies also called unfair EPA's proposal to set two standards — 1.1 grams per gallon of lead for large refineries and 2.5 grams per gallon for small refineries.

They charged this would result in a 2- to 3-cent-a-gallon price advantage for 75 small refiners. They said this would mean a $100 million price advantage at current levels of production which could soar to $250 million annually if the small refiners expanded production to the 10,000-barrel-a-day cap.

The oil executives also charged that EPA's estimates of costs focused completely on what small refiners would save by not having to modernize their facilities while ignoring costs to the rest of the industry from the more stringent standards.

Japanese cars top sellers

DETROIT (AP) — Most new car sales at U.S. dealerships selling Japanese makes fell during the first half of 1982 compared with a year ago, while sales of many European makes per dealership rose, an industry journal reports.

Automotive News said Tuesday that while Toyota, Honda and Nissan remained in the top three spots in sales-per-dealership in early 1982, their sales and sales of nearly all other Japanese makes declined per dealership.

Only sales of the Challenger, made by Mitsubishi Motors Corp. of Japan and sold by Chrysler Corp.'s Dodge dealers, did not decline. Challenger sales-per-dealer in the first half of 1982 were three, unchanged from last year, Automotive News said.

Treasury bill rate down

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on short-term Treasury securities have dipped slightly, but they remain above August levels which were the lowest in two years.

About $5.6 billion in six-month bills were auctioned Tuesday at an average discount rate of 9.605 percent, down from the 9.746 percent of last week, Treasury officials said.

The government also sold about $5.6 billion in three-month bills at an average rate of 8.565 percent, down from the previous 8.604 percent.

Tuesday's yields, a measure of the cost of government borrowing from the public, were the lowest since the Aug. 23 rates of 8.988 percent for six-month bills and 7.748 percent for three-month bills.

The discount rate on the bills auctioned Tuesday understates the actual return to investors. That return, or investment rate, came to an average of 10.24 percent on six-month bills and 8.88 percent on three-month bills.

Beginning Wednesday, in private accounts linked to federal securities:

—Banks and savings and loan associations may pay as much as 9.855 percent on $10,000-minimum six-month money market certificates, down from last week's 10.123 percent.

That ceiling is put at 0.25 percentage point above the higher of two figures: the new discount rate on six-month bills, which is the rate applicable Wednesday, or the average for such bills at the four most recent auctions — 9.54 percent in this case.

—Banks and S&Ls may pay as much as 8.565 percent on $7,500-minimum three-month certificates compared with last week's 8.604 percent for S&Ls and 8.354 percent for commercial banks. Commercial banks are limited to 0.25 point less than S&Ls except when the discount rate stays under 9 percent for four straight auctions, and Tuesday's was the fourth straight.

—There will be no interest limit on another category of accounts introduced just last week.

Mead pays $45 million in largest civil settlement ever

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — In what a lawyer says is the largest civil suit settlement ever by a single U.S. company, Mead Corp. has agreed to pay $45 million to end an antitrust case brought by buyers of corrugated containers.

The settlement announced Tuesday would, with court approval, end litigation that began more than five years ago in federal court in Houston.

The original class-action suit sought damages for 200,000 purchasers of corrugated containers, Stephen Susman, an attorney for the plaintiffs, said in Houston on Tuesday.

The civil case eventually was narrowed to 8,500 plaintiffs, said Dudley P. Kircher, a Mead vice president for communications.

The civil suit in U.S. District Court in Houston was the outgrowth of grand-jury indictments sought by the federal Justice Department in 1978 against 14 companies, including Mead, he said.

He said that of those 14 companies, 12 entered no contest. He said Mead and Container Corp. went to criminal trial and were found innocent.

Mead's chairman and chief executive officer, Burnell R. Roberts, said in announcing the civil settlement: "Our decision to settle the case out of court was especially difficult because we believe the company and its people have obeyed both the spirit and the letter of the law as was proven in the related criminal case in which Mead was found innocent.

"The decision to settle was based solely on the conclusion that it is in the best interests of our shareholders to settle the case rather than to pursue costly and protracted litigation," Roberts said.

In 1979, Kircher said, Mead and 33 other companies were named in the civil class-action suit. The civil case included the same companies in the criminal case, plus others, Kircher said.

It was alleged that the companies conspired to raise the prices of corrugated containers.

Mead was the last remaining defendant in the civil trial, he said. He said the others settled out of court prior to trial for a total of about $330 million.

Of those that settled, 14 were later found innocent of conspiracy, he said.

In September 1980, the jury rendered a verdict of liabilty against Mead, but no damages were set, Kircher said.

He said a special master was appointed by the court to determine damages and that no damages had been set by the court when the company settled Tuesday.

Kircher said that after the original settlements, the court offered the approximately 200,000 plaintiffs in the class-action suit the chance to file claims and that about 8,500 came foward.

Susman said he believed that Tuesday agreement was the largest civil case settlement ever reached with a single U.S. company.

The settlement will result in a charge against 1982 earnings of approximately $22.5 million, or 86 cents per share, Mead said in a prepared statement.

The settlement will be paid in amounts of $1 million in 1982; $2 million in 1983.

Midland's Ortloff Corp. given CO2 processing plant cotract

(SWN) Roy E. Campbell, President of Elcor Corporation, announced that its engineering and construction subsidiary, The Ortloff Corporation, has been awarded by Amerada Hess Corporation, operator of the Seminole San Andres Unit, the process engineering, detailed engineering and design, procurement, and related services for a processing plant to remove carbon dioxide from gas produced as a result of a tertiary recovery project to be initiated in the Seminole Field, Gaines County, Texas. In addition to the removal of carbon dioxide, the plant will remove hydrogen sulfide from the raw gas and recover natural gas and natural gas liquids.

Processing facilities will include inlet separation, compression, glycol dehydration, carbon dioxide recovery, natural gas liquid recovery and sulfur recovery.

Mr. Campbell said, "It presently appears that our return to profitability for the fourth quarter ending June 30, 1982 is continuing and we expect that earnings for the first quarter ending September 30, 1982 will be higher than our fourth quarter earnings."

Elcor's Ortloff subsidiary engineers and constructs processing facilities for the energy, chemical and mining industries. Other Elcor units manufacture roofing products and industrial products.

Modern oil boomers' camps going to ruins in Sooner State

LAWTON, Okla. (AP) — Treadworn tires lay scattered over abandoned campsites and sheets of plastic are pushed around by the wind, remnants left behind in the recent exodus of hundreds of people who have been making the state parks in western Oklahoma their home since last winter.

Single young men and entire families came from all over the United States, from the Chicago suburbs to the Ozarks, lured to western Oklahoma by oil jobs and ads promising fast money.

Their numbers quickly filled the state parks located near the Anadarko basin, straining the facilities at Fort Cobb, Foss Reservoir and Red Rock state parks.

That's changing now. They're slowly leaving the parks as Oklahoma's latest oil boom mellows into a rhythmic melody. But for a while, the parks, too, were booming as makeshift homes for many of those set adrift in these times of economic difficulty.

The people with little money stayed in the free camping areas, eating and sleeping out of their cars, which often contained everything they owned. The few who had a little savings bought small trailers and rented pads where they could hook up to water and electricity for $4.50 a night.

They all hoped to find work in the oil fields, but until they found jobs they needed a place to live. An awkward situation was created in the parks as rangers sought a way to enforce the rules and still meet the needs of these people.

A 14-day limit is imposed on camping sites during peak season, which runs from April 15 through October 15. After 14 days, visitors are required to leave for seven days before they may return for another two-week stay.

However, many of these oilies, a nickname started by the oil field workers themselves, had no money and nowhere to go at the end of their 14-day limit.

"The question arose of who are we supposed to serve?" said Chris Marke, assistant director of the Parks Division of the state Toursim and Recreation Department.

A new policy was initiated at Foss State Park in April. The free camping sites and wilderness areas were shut down and a special area was designated for homesteaders.

" We set aside the north side campground as a site for those who wanted to live in the park," said Foss Superintendent R.L. Pyron. "We charged a $100 deposit, $12 a night and asked for a month's rent in advance. We figured at these prices, not many people could afford to homestead."

Pyron said the new policy was made necessary by the large influx of people in the park, which began in the spring and lasted through mid-July.

Pyron guessed that many people who could not afford the fees simply moved from park to park as they exhausted the time limit.

He guessed some moved on to Fort Cobb.

Occupancy at Fort Cobb reportedly was up 90 percent since last winter. Park Ranger David Carter said that until July there had been a steady group of oil field workers and laborers living in the park.

"We had quite a few families who would rent small trailers and either sell them or abandon them when they left," said Carter.

"Many slept in their cars when they first arrived this winter and normally they would find work in a few weeks. Now they're not finding anything."

During the seven years Carter has been a ranger, he said, he has seen people come and go, but "never like this."

He recalled a man and woman who left a note in their trailer saying they were going to New Mexico and would be back soon,but never returned.

Gulf Coast wildcatters hope for strike in wild blue yonder

By RONE TEMPEST
Los Angeles Times—Washington Post
News Service

MATAGORDA ISLAND, Texas — Here on this remote, scorpion-infested island in the Gulf of Mexico, a small company of capitalists hopes to become the first private corporation to send its own rocket into space this week.

The launching of the two-stage Conestoga I rocket by Houston-based Space Services Inc. of America is scheduled for Thursday at 11 a.m. EDT.

Wednesday's scheduled launching was postponed because of problems with a battery and a gyroscope.

Even if the rocket is successful, it will not be a giant leap for science; the system is primitive by National Aeronautics and Space Administration standards, and the flight will be suborbital. The rocket is almost identical to the one used in the highly successful Aries program conducted by the Navy, Air Force and NASA.

In fact, the rocket booster, a used Minuteman I second-stage, was purchased from NASA by Space Services for $365,000.

But investors in this group of 57 individuals, many of whom are Texans in the oil business, see it as a small first step toward commercial exploitation of space. They envision competing with the space shuttle to take smaller payloads of scientific equipment into space — sensors to help the oil industry find new deposits, for example.

"We hope to have a flight a month by 1987," said Donald K. "Deke" Slayton, the former astronaut who is vice chairman of the board of Space Services and flight director for the launching. "Eventually we hope to get so we are launching about once a week."

Space Services chairman and founder, David Hannah Jr., 60, also has grand visions for the future of private space transport. They include a worldwide, low-level camera system aimed at Earth, which he calls "open skies."

"I'd like to be able to continuously record all the things happening on Earth," Hannah, a millionaire Houston land developer, said Tuesday.

"That way there wouldn't be anything happening in the world of a major nature without the whole world watching over its shoulder. There would be open skies. People could see what was really going on in the Falkland Islands. It would be a tremendous deterrent to war."

Hannah, who has so far persuaded investors to put up $3.7 million for the company's space program (including $2.50 million for Wednesday's launching), said he came up with the idea for Space Services Inc. because of his belief in free enterprise and because he saw "people at NASA who were not being utilized." Oilmen, he said, make ideal investors because sending a rocket into space "is a lot like drilling an oil well. They are used to that kind of risk."

Although extremely small in scale, (the "mission control" from which Slayton will direct the launching is a converted ship cargo container about the size of a walk-in closet), the flight has produced some tension. The company's last attempt to launch a privately built rocket on Aug. 5, 1981, resulted in a dramatic explosion.

In some ways that effort, on an even smaller budget, was more experimental. Then, for example, the entire rocket propulsion and guidance system was built by a team of young scientists, mainly from Stanford University and the California Institute of Technology.

"I personally built the engines," said Eric Laursen, 30, technical director for the first launching. Laursen was here to report on the Conestoga I for a small science publication. "We were more informal, less Establishment than this crew," he said.

After the 1981 failure, Space Services decided to switch from volatile liquid fuel to the more expensive but more reliable solid fuel. Slayton was hired, in part to bring credibility to the effort.

Slayton said at a press conference Tuesday afternoon that the biggest threats to the launching are private aircraft that can wander into the flight path and the capricious nature of weather on the Texas coast.

But Tuesday's problems with Conestoga I were not weather related. Slayton decided to postpone the launching one day after problems cropped up in a guidnce control-system battery and the gyroscope that helps control the direction of the rocket's rotation in flight.

Space Services spokesmen said that both problems could be fixed Wednesday.

The rocket, which is to reach an apogee of 192 miles, is aimed 279 nautical miles into the Gulf of Mexico.

Mexican border guards will begin confiscating groceries

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Americans taking advantage of the devalued peso to buy foods in Mexico at bargain prices will have some of their groceries confiscated at the border beginning today, the government says.

Mexican merchants claim some American shoppers are taking advantage of the country's economic woes to buy up basic foods for resale in the United States, in many cases stripping shelves bare. Many of the items are subsidized by the Mexican government.

The Commerce Department on Tuesday night issued a list of basic foods that cannot be taken from Mexico without written authorization. It said customs officials will confiscate any of the items found in the possession of shoppers returning to the United States.

The prohibited items include such things as tortillas, bread, sugar, rice, beans, pasta, eggs, soap, detergents, vegetable oil, canned foods, beef, pork, chicken, sausage, fresh fruit and vegetables, crackers, wheat flour, corn meal, lard, margarine and milk products, the government said.

But even without the restriction, Americans might have to cut back on their shopping sprees because the peso strengthened sharply in international trading Tuesday, making Mexican products more expensive for shoppers with dollars.

The major New York firm of Noonan, Astley and Pearce quoted 78 pesos to the dollar for buyers and 83 for sellers. The Mexican currency had traded at 115 and 120 to the dollar on Friday, the last business day before banks reopened.

Before the peso was devalued on Aug. 5, it had been pegged at 49 to the dollar. After it was allowed to float, it sank at one point to 135 to the dollar.

In a bid to counter pressure on the peso, President Jose Lopez Portillo nationalized privately-owned banks last Wednesday and imposed a new two-tier currency exchange system, setting rates of 50 pesos to the dollar for importers of essential goods and 70 for everyone else.

Lopez Portilo accused the private banks of helping to "plunder" the country by sending billions of dollars abroad.

Mexican businessmen suspended plans for a shutdown today to protest the nationalization, a prominent business leader said Tuesday.

Business leaders are still upset over the nationalization and plan to fight it, but they have not yet decided on a strategy, said Manuel Clouthier, president of the Business Coordination Council, an association of some of Mexico's top businessmen.

Despite the opposition from business leaders, the nationalization has received the support of unions and opposition political groups. Fears of a run on the nationalized banks faded after they made it through their first day of operations Monday without any sign of panic withdrawals.

Mexico is locked in its most serious economic crisis in more than 70 years. Inflation may reach 100 percent this year and its critical unemployment problem — 40 percent of the work force is without jobs or underemployed — is expected to worsen. A stable peso will make it easier to pay off Mexico's $81 billion foreign debt, the largest in the Third World.

Chrysler, union negotiators haven't discussed economics

WARREN, Mich. (AP) — Negotiators for Chrysler Corp. and the United Auto Workers have not begun to discuss economics, even though the current contract expires in less than a week, a union official says.

Only "one-half of 1 percent" of the issues under discussion since negotiations began July 20 have been resolved, Marc Stepp, UAW vice president in charge of the union's Chrysler department, said Tuesday.

"We've been arguing a lot," he added.

The two sides will not begin discussing economic issues — the final phase of contract talks — before Thursday, when UAW President Douglas A. Fraser joins the negotiations, Stepp said.

He added, however, that he hopes to reach an agreement before the current contract — which covers 43,200 U.S. autoworkers, plus another 40,000 on indefinite layoff — expires Tuesday.

"In the Big Three, traditionally agreements have been reached in the final hours" before a contract expires, he said.

Chrysler spokesman Charles Scales said the company would have no comment.

Bargaining began with the nation's No. 3 automaker demanding that workers share health-care costs through copayments and deductibles. The union has rejected the proposal and demanded that Chrysler boost workers' wages.

The average hourly wage for Chrysler workers is now $9.07.

Chrysler, which lost $3.27 billion from 1979 to 1981, made a $256.8 million profit in the first half of this year.

Meanwhile, in another move showing its financial health has improved, Chrysler announced Tuesday that it will buy back a large part of its former subsidiary, Chrysler Realty Corp.

The purchase price from ABKO Properties Inc. of Wichita, Kan., will be released when the transaction is completed, perhaps later this month, the nation's No. 3 automaker said.

Chrysler said the purchase will give it ownership or long-term lease control of 446 dealership facilities nationwide and help the company hold on to key marketing locations.

Chrysler sold the realty subsidiary, then consisting of about 780 properties, to ABKO in September 1979 for $195 million as the automaker struggled to remain solvent, Chrysler spokesman Bob Heath said. Chrysler lost $3.27 billion from 1979 to 1981.

ABKO and Chrysler had a contract allowing 529 Chrysler dealers to continue to lease their facilities from ABKO until 1984, Heath said.

By buying back the 446 properties, the automaker will retain a hold on them, he said. Some of the dealer leases are just for the properties, while others include land and facilities, he added.

Chrysler has 3,673 dealers nationwide, and most of them own their dealerships, Heath said.

The purchase is subject to approval from the federal Loan Guarantee Board, which guaranteed loans of up to $1.5 billion two years ago to keep Chrysler from bankruptcy.

Earlier this year, Chrysler arranged to sell $500 million worth of receivables from its finance subsidiary, Chrysler Financial Corp., to several banks, allowing the company to expand its wholesale and retail credit for dealers.

Chrysler Realty was formed in 1967 to help the company develop its dealerships. ABKO is a diversified real estate investment firm.

Officals want Harvard plant test stopped

BOSTON (AP) — State officials have asked that testing of diesel engines at a $250 million Harvard University-owned power plant be stopped pending hearings on whether its emissions pose a cancer hazard.

Harvard spokesman David Rosen said today the request does not affect steam turbines or chillers at the plant which supply heat, hot water and air conditioning to hospitals in the area.

Rosen said the diesels are designed to provide electricity, but have only been tested and have never produced electricity.

The state Supreme Court has ruled that the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering was in error when it declined to consider evidence regarding "possible carcinogenic effects" of harmful pollutants that would released into the air from the diesel exhausts.

The high court said it was sending the suit by the neighboring town of Brookline and neighborhood citizens groups back to the department for hearings. Department officials said they did not know when the new hearings would be held.

The department then ordered a halt to the diesel testing.

The plant, located near Boston's Mission Hill area, is called the Medical Area Total Energy Plant and is intended to provide electricity, steam and chilled water to hospitals, educational and research institutions and a nearby housing complex. The six diesel-powered electrical generators were installed just over a year ago.

In a series of hearings on the plant spanning several years, the department had ruled against hearing arguments on the question of whether the plant's diesel emissions might prove carcinogenic.

Willard Pope, staff counsel for the department, said Tuesday the diesel emission question was not heard because it was not introduced in a procedurally timely fashion, and that the main thrust of the hearings dealt with nitrogen oxide emissions, not diesel.

LEARN HOW TO BECOME A MILLIONAIRE IN REAL ESTATE EVEN IF PRICES ARE NOT GOING UP!

NOTHING DOWN

"MAKING IT" IN A RECESSION WITH NO SPECULATION, NO NEGATIVE CASH FLOWS, NO "BALLOONS" AND NO RISKS!

"There are at least seven ways to make money in real estate assuming no appreciation. Real estate is the only major investment that did appreciate last year, but you can make big money safely even if it doesn't!" —Bob Allen

"If you're going to make money you've got to be out of step with the world. You're buying when others are selling . . . selling when others are buying!" —Hollis Norton

Gold has dropped from $800 to the $300 range. Silver has dropped from $50 to $10. Diamonds have dropped about 50%. Most other major investments have gone down in value, but REAL ESTATE went up in value about 3% last year. For those who knew how to buy it CREATIVELY, it went up much more! BUT . . . you don't even have to buy it to make great profits in real estate. Many people are becoming CREATIVELY SELF-UNEMPLOYED because their no-cash investments are bringing them more income than they could make on their jobs. A little information brings FINANCIAL FREEDOM, and it can happen to you!

Can't do it in a recession, you say? YES, you can! It's even EASIER in so called bad times, and thousands are doing it (as shown on the TV documentaries, "Making It!" and "Success!"). Over 90% of all millionaires made their fortunes in real estate and with the NEW, CREATIVE methods of buying, plus recessionary drops in some real estate prices, there's NO BETTER TIME THAN NOW. It takes little or no cash, and only a few hours of simple instruction.

A major university studied the successes of those who practice the methods taught by Robert Allen ("Nothing Down" and "Creating Wealth") and Hollis Norton ("How To Make It When You're Cash Poor"). They projected that 20,000 persons who've learned the simple concepts taught by these men buy over $20,000,000 worth of real estate A WEEK! That's over $1 BILLION A YEAR!

Almost every one of those people started learning "how-to-do-it" in a free seminar presented by Robert Allen and Hollis Norton. The free ninety-minute seminar will demonstrate some SPECIFIC "NOTHING DOWN" techniques you can use right away. You will also learn one of the many ways to ELIMINATE NEGATIVE CASH FLOWS, how to become FINANCIALLY FREE in FIVE YEARS OR LESS, how anyone can quickly establish GREAT CREDIT, how to earn MORE THAN 50% on your little-or-no-cash investments, and scores of other NEW, creative facts! You can buy depressed-price real estate with LESS THAN 10% INTEREST RATES, and even get interest-only financing NOW!

Just want to own your own home or trade up to a better one? Five years ago about 10% of all home sales were creatively financed. Now, the "ROBERT ALLEN NOTHING DOWN" revolution has occurred, and in the past year, MORE THAN 60% of all home sales are financed with the techniques taught in "NOTHING DOWN." (In some cities, more than 90% of all home sales involve creative financing.) Most real estate experts agree, if you want to buy a house in the future YOU MUST know CREATIVE FINANCING techniques.

Take ninety-minutes out of your life to attend this no cost, no obligation, illustrated lecture. You'll learn about America's fastest, simplest, safest road to success and financial freedom. The "Nothing Down" seminar is not just a variation of the old, "fix-up-the-dump" concept with a different name . . . it's a whole new 1980's program for success used by thousands across the country. Attend the no cost, no obligation, ninety-minute "Nothing Down" success seminar. It's presented by a successful associate of the two famous multi-millionaire investors, ROBERT ALLEN and HOLLIS NORTON. (Starting time is 8 P.M., but come early for a good seat. Shriver shatters Navratilova's Grand Slam bid

Connors ousts 'Nasty' friend

AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Martina Navratilova's hopes for a Grand Slam were shattered Tuesday by her doubles partner, Pam Shriver, 1-6, 7-6, 6-2, in the quarterfinals of the U.S. Open tennis championships, the missing link in Navratilova's quest for greatness.

"It was the most disappointing loss, but not the most bitter," said Navratilova, who walked off center court in tears for the second straight year. "I'm glad it was Pam and not anybody else. If I have to lose, I prefer it to be to Pam."

In a night match, second-seeded Jimmy Connors eliminated Ilie Nastase of Romania 6-3, 6-3, 6-4, and advanced to the quarterfinals where he will meet Rodney Harmon, who shocked eighth-seeded Eliot Teltscher 6-4, 4-6, 6-3, 3-6,7-6 in an upset that ranked second only to Shriver's victory over Navratilova.

It was only the second loss in regular tournament play this year for Navratilova and stopped a 41-match winning streak. The loss also ended her chances of winning the $1 million Playtex Challenge, which was to go to the winner of four selected tournaments on four different surfaces.

She had won the first three tournaments — the U.S. Women's Indoors on carpet in Minneapolis; the Family Circle Cup on clay at Hilton Head Island, S. C., and Wimbledon on grass — which entitled her to half of the bonus money, or $500,000.

"The money is the last thing that enters my mind," Navratilova said. "Losing the U.S. Open will hang over my head for another year. It hurts bad when you try for something so hard."

Navratilova blamed her loss on a virus which she said she contracted from a friend's cat during the Federation Cup in late July.

The disease, similar to mononucleosis, is called toxoplasmosis, an infection that apparently attacks the nervous system and results in muscle fatigue.

"This is going to sound like sour grapes and people who know me know I don't make excuses," she said. "But it certainly didn't help ... I couldn't run for the ball or if I could, I couldn't do anything when I got there."

SHRIVER, MAKING her best showing in America's premiere tennis event since 1978, said she had mixed emotions over her victory.

"I'm thrilled for myself, but sad for Martina," the winner said. "She reminds me of myself a little. She's emotional. She's a good friend and she was going for the Grand Slam."

Shriver said the impact of Navratilova's loss did not occur to her until it was match point.

"That was the only time I thought of it," she said. "I was so pumped up on some kind of cloud. I knew what I had to do."

When the match ended, Shriver said she apologized to Martina. "I said I was sorry. I don't know why."

Navratilova said, "We both were ready to cry."

THE CONNORS—NASTASE match erupted briefly in the second game after a rain delay of 1½ hours. Umpire Don Wiley of Redondo Beach, Calif., issued a code warning to Nastase for an "audible obscenity." With Connors at advantage on Nastase's serve, Nastase shouted as Wiley and the umpire said: "Code warning, Mr. Nastase, point penalty. Game Mr. Connors."

Nastase continued his screaming at Wiley and Connors walked around to Nastase's side of the net and calmed him down.

"We have been playing against each other for a long time," Connors said later. "I think the people came out to see a good match."

Abila fights first main event bout

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

FORT WORTH — Rising through the ranks is sometimes a long and hard road to travel for a boxer. He first has to test his skills in the amateur ranks to determine if he has what it takes to become a professional and once he does, he has to find a manager, promoter and a first opponent.

But, becoming a pro doesn't carry any guarantees of success and, until the fighter has proven worthy, the paychecks barely make it an economical career.

Midland boxer Richard Abila is in the process of proving himself. He has fought seven times in progressively tougher and longer matches since giving up his amateur status and has yet to be beaten. He has shown the ability to go the distance in an eight round fight (his longest to date) and he has demonstrated the capability of stopping an opponent quickly with four of his wins coming by knockout.

Now he has to prove himself against a ranked boxer and if the fight goes his way it should mean a ranking among the United States' and possibly even the world's elite bantamweights.

But, it won't be easy. He'll be facing ninth-ranked (according to the August edition of Ring Magazine) Harold Petty and he'll be facing Petty, who is 10-2, in his home town, Fort Worth at the Civic Center. To add even more pressure to the bout, it will be the first scheduled 10-rounder of his career and will be televised on ESPN as the main event on a fight card that starts at 7:30 p.m.

WHILE THOSE pressures might be difficult to overcome, Abila does have one advantage over his opponent and that's knowledge. His manager, Rick Fleetwood, has a video recorder at home with which he records fights of potential opponents. According to Fleetwood, he has 30 rounds recorded on Petty, two against Richard Sandoval who is rated 16th in the world and one against a middle-of-the-road boxer named Sergio Reyes, while Petty's people could only have a possible 3½ rounds on Abila (his first and only appearance on ESPN when he knocked out Carlos Flores earlier this year). Those films have given Abila a lot of information along with a plan of action.

"I've seen him fight lots of times," said Abila. "He's storng but he ain't got a lot of power. He's a busy fighter. I'm going to go in and take my time, fight my fight which is a cat and mouse game. If he comes after me I'll stick and move. If he runs away, I'll go after him."

"It always did before, but I don't know about Petty," said Abila. "He comes straight at you with his head down. He's not a true left-hander. I'll be throwing a lot of right leads."

While throwing those rights, Abila also plans to be on the alert for a little something he picked up from the films, the way Petty throws his right hook.

"He's kind of wild with his right hook, he loops it around," said Abila. "To top it off, he lunges when he throws his right hook and he loses power on it."

"I'll use the straight right and come back with a left hook and then a barrage of punches."

The two losses on Petty's record came from his two fights against Sandoval and both were split decisions. Sandoval is one thing Abila and Petty have in common, they both fought him, and both lost.

While Petty's losses came as a pro, Abila suffered one of only 10 amateur losses, against 295 victories, at the hands of Sandoval. But, Sandoval is an opponent of the future and right now Petty is the one to beat.

THIS FIGHT should give Abila some national notoriety as a bantamweight, but it won't tell the people of Midland much more than they already know about him. Abila, as was demonstrated by his last fight, against Enrique Muniz

Pitt, Washington on top; Clemson falls to 16th

Pitt and Washington, neither of which has played a game yet, held onto the top two spots today in The Associated Press' first regular-season college football poll, while defending national champion Clemson slipped from 11th to 16th after dropping its opener.

Pitt, which gets under way Thursday night against fifth-ranked North Carolina in a nationally televised contest, received 33 first-place votes and 1,082 of a possible 1,120 points from a nationwide panel of 56 sports writers and sportscasters.

Washington, which entertains Texas-El Paso in its opener Saturday, received 16 first-place votes and 1,007 points. Nebraska and Alabama traded places from the preseason poll. Nebraska, which opens Saturday against Iowa, climbed from fourth to third with two first-place votes and 918 points, while Alabama, which gets under way against Georgia Tech, received two firsts and 916 points.

North Carolina remained in fifth place with two firsts and 825 points and Georgia jumped from seventh to sixth with one first and 811 points following Monday night's 13-7 triumph over Clemson.

SOUTHERN METHODIST, which opens Saturday against Tulane, slipped from sixth to eighth. The Mustangs totaled 722 points but trailed No. 7 Penn State. The Nittany Lions, eighth in the preseason poll, moved up one position by trouncing Temple 31-14 and earning 731 points.

Oklahoma and Southern California held onto ninth and 10th places with 593 and 573 points, respectively. Both get under way this weekend, Oklahoma against West Virginia and Southern Cal against No. 11 Florida.

Behind Florida, the Second Ten consists of Michigan, Arkansas, Ohio State, Arizona State, Clemson, Texas, UCLA, Miami and Notre Dame.

Florida nipped Miami 17-14, while Arizona State whipped Oregon 34-3. The others have yet to get under way.

Crane opens '82 on a bright note

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

Crane, an 0-10 team last year, opened the 1982 season on a bright note with a 17-0 win over Reagan County.

The Golden Cranes were lead by tailback Gilbert Ramirez who rushed for 154 yards while the Crane defense held the Owls to 155 yards rushing.

Crane opened the scoring when Junior Sena hauled in a 35-yard pass from Eugene Morris in the second quarter followed by a 24-yard field goal by Junior Bishop with nine seconds left in the stanza.

The Golden Cranes opened the second half with 13 consecutive rushing plays and drove 67 yards to close out the scoring.

Ballinger scored first and last in a seesaw battle with Winters to score a 27-20 victory.

Ozona started their contest with Junction in high stepping fashion when wingback Diego Leal returned the opening kickoff 100 yards for a touchdown. The Lions scored in every quarter in the 33-14 upset over the Eagles.

The Sonora offense gave Wall eight turnovers and a 10-0 win to open their season.

Gery Lacy ran circles around the Colorado City defense to lead the Slaton Tigers to a 20-0 win. Lacy scored on plays of 22 and 55 yards while compiling 200 yards rushing against the Wolves.

Coahoma felt the sting of the Kermit Yellowjackets, losing their opening game 25-0. The Kermit defense shut down every aspect of the Bulldogs' offense as they held Coahoma to 91 yards in total offense.

District 2—4A

Sweetwater was the surprise of District 2-AAAA teams last week as they opened the seasson by crushing Abilene Wylie 56-0.

Pre-season favorites, San Angelo Lakeview, had a tough time with Del Rio but managed to squeeze out a 3-0 victory.

Monahans lost to El Paso Eastwood 34-27 as the Troopers rallied for 22 points in the fourth quarter.

Snyder also suffered a come-from-behind loss, theirs came at the hands of the Big Spring Steers, 9-6.

Using a balanced attack, Fort Stockton scored a 28-7 win over Canutillo to open the season, while No.4 ranked Andrews beat Seminole 17-6.

The Tornadoes met the Twisters and came out on the short end of a 13-6 score as Lamesa lost to Levelland.

District 8—AA

Iaquaniello, a converted tight end, gobbled up 72 yards of real estate on the first play of the second half to give the Buffaloes a 10-0 lead.

Robbie Barnes scored the Buffs other touchdown on a 16-yard scamper later in the third quarter.

McCamey pulled out a 22-21 victory over Iraan in a wild game. Twenty-nine points were put on the scoredboard in the fourth quarter but McCamey's last touchdown allowed the Badgers to score a two-point conversion for the win.

With the help of eight turnovers the Wall Hawks upset Sonora 10-0.

District 7—A

The Greenwood Rangers rallied for two touchdowns in the fourth quarter but fell short in their comeback, losing to Jal, N.M. 19-13.

Statistically the Rangers won the game with 18 first downs to Jal's nine and 275 yards total offense to Jal's 240.

That flash of speed was Darrell Fennell

No. 25, others provide Lee's deep six threat

TERRY WILLIAMSON

Midland Lee's Darrell Fennell wears No. 25 on his jersey, but this is just a note to enlighten some of the Rebel fans who may have seen only a blurred streak racing down the sideline last Friday night at Memorial Stadium.

Yep, that was No. 25 on his way to a 90-yard second quarter touchdown romp against Lubbock Coronado. It was one of the longest runs in Lee football history even though the time span may have been one of the shortest in duration. It was the way the Rebels chose to open the scoring for the 1982 season.

Lee must have been destined to start the season on a flashy note because it was Clarence Smith who appeared to go bonkers the first time a Rebel touched the ball this year. Smith raced 90 yards with the opening kickoff, but his debut was spoiled by the fact that the referee said he stepped out of bounds on his own 39-yard line.

Regardless, the theme is there for all to see. Lee has breakaway speed and every down is a potential deep six. We all loved the days of Calvin Riggs and Jeff McGowan, those brutal fullbacks who carried the load at Lee for the past four years. But the four yards and a cloud of dust attack at Lee may be an era past. It could now be the era of the deep six — the instant excitement, spill your coffee type attack.

IT COULD easily be said that Fennell's run was a fluke — a lucky break — brought about by the great blocks of guard Anthony Adams and halfback Smith, but one has the feeling that more of the same is in store for Lee fans. After all, Fennell broke for 72 yards against Andrews in a scrimmage. With only two weeks of outside opposition, Fennell is beginning to be repetitive with his long distance lightning bolts.

Fennell may just turn out to be the biggest pirate in District 4-5A this year, despite the fact that Lee coach Spike Dykes uses 10 or more backs a game. Fennell ended Friday night with 121 yards, but he carried only nine times.

All Fennell needs is a maroon patch over one eye to be a pirate supreme and he could come by that honestly since he has sight in only one eye.

"The kids say Darrell is the second best rock fighter in Midland," notes Dykes. "He lost an eye when he was young during a rock fight, but it doesn't seem to hinder him a bit, or at least, I can't tell it."

The opposition can't tell it either. After blocks by Adams and Smith, there was nothing left in front of Fennell but Cuthbert Ave., and anything in the rear might as well pull out the white hankies. Goodbye, so long, it's been nice chasing you.

FENNELL HAS pure "goodbye" speed with foot propulsion under a 180-pound frame. Power and speed. It makes a good combination for the Rebels and a nightmare for the opposition.

And Lee passed for 101 yards against Coronado. If that ingredient remains at Lee, deep sixes will come even easier. Luther Johnson, the Rebs' cocky split receiver, caught four passes for 92 yards. Everyone knows Johnson, who was on Lee's state qualifying mile relay team, has speed, but some wondered if he could catch the ball.

While there were some areas of concern in Lee's 17-3 win, the prospects seem brighter than ever for the Rebels.

On the negative side, Lee was just short of terrible on first down plays. They missed some tackles on defense, but didn't allow a TD. They had some critical turnovers, but only a field goal resulted.

However, these things can be expected in the first game for a veteran unit. And veteran is not a word the Rebels can wear yet.

This was the first varsity test for most of the Rebels since not one returning starter is back from last year. Fennell didn't carry the ball once last season and Johnson caught one pass for 53 yards.

So the question now remains — what will the Rebels do when they understand what they are doing?

UT's Luck suffers shoulder injury

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — University of Texas running back Mike Luck has suffered a shoulder injury that caused him to miss practice Tuesday, and injuries have sidelined several other Longhorn players, team officials said.

Luck's injury turned up after last Saturday's scrimmage, said coach Fred Akers. But the running back is due to return in a few days.

Akers said he hopes that tailback John Walker, who was limited to running since the start of pre-season practice, will be given the green light for full duty after doctors examine him Wednesday.

Team officials said tight end Mike Chapman has a badly-sprained ankle that is expected to sideline him until early next week.

Sims gets contract assurances, ends holdout

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — Billy Sims, the Detroit Lions' holdout running back, said he received contract assurances from Lions owner William Clay Ford Tuesday and will return to the National Football League team.

"It's my future and I'm well satisfied with what took place," Sims said after the Tuesday meeting. "I know how he's (Ford) thinking. He's thinking about my security, too. I can understand that. Today's the day. As far as I'm concerned, I'm through with it (the holdout)."

Sims, who talked with Ford at noon Tuesday at the Ford Motor Co. world headquarters in Dearborn, said he would meet with his agent, Jerry Argovitz, before he reports to the Lions.

"Jerry may not be (satisfied), so it's going to be totally left up to me," he said. "And I made up my mind."

Sims, who did not report to the team's training camp when it began nearly six weeks ago, claimed Lions general manager Russ Thomas reneged on a verbal agreement to renegotiate the fourth year of his contract after two years.

A basic collective bargaining agreement between the NFL Players Association and team owners expired July 15 and because of the resulting restrictions on individual bargaining, Sims said he did not expect Ford to discuss contract specifics.

But he said he wanted Ford's assurance that a contract will be considered when a new bargaining agreement is reached. The Lions had already promised to do this in a letter to Sims' attorney, Gerald Tockman of St. Louis.

USOC director would like to see Thorpe's 1912 trophies exhibited

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — The executive director of the U.S. Olympic Committee said Tuesday that he would like to see the International Olympic Committee allow the royal trophies won by American Indian track star Jim Thorpe in 1912 exhibited at the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

F. Don Miller added, though, that a 1975 IOC response to an Amateur Athletic Union plea on the subject doesn't look promising for such an exhibit.

Thorpe's 62-year-old daughter, Charlotte, of Phoenix, Ariz., said Monday she "will not rest" until her late father's body "has been returned to Oklahoma and his trophies are here on American soil."

Thorpe, an Oklahoma Indian of the Sac and Fox tribe, won the pentathlon and decathlon competition in the 1912 Olympics at Stockholm, Sweden. Later that year, it was discovered that Thorpe had accepted $60 a month to play minor league baseball in North Carolina. Miller said Thorpe returned his two gold medals early in 1913.

Thorpe also returned two trophies given at the 1912 Olympics by the king of Sweden and the czar of Russia, Miller said. They were meant to be perpetual trophies, Miller noted, but when the Olympics resumed in 1920 after World War I, the IOC decided against allowing such trophies.

Miller said he believes the royal trophies have remained with the IOC and could be in a museum at IOC headquarters in Lausanne, Switzerland. The medals were re-awarded to second-place finishers soon after Thorpe returned them, Miller said.

"The trophies were never meant to remain with one person," Miller said.

In 1975, the USOC forwarded to the IOC Executive Board a resolution from the AAU saying that Thorpe's eligibility for 1909-13 had been restored. The resolution urged the return of Thorpe's medals.

The IOC refused to reconsider, Miller said, noting that a 1894 Olympic rule prohibiting any pro athlete from participation had not changed. Also, the IOC said in 1975, no one was alive who had authority in the matter in 1912.

Thorpe died in 1953 of a heart attack in Lomita, Calif., and his remains are in a mausoleum in Jim Thorpe, Pa. — a place he never visited. Charlotte Thorpe said she and six surviving brothers and sisters want him buried in Oklahoma. She said their father told them he wanted that.

"What America did to my father is a tragedy," she said, noting that her father worked menial jobs after his athletic retirement and dug ditches for 50 cents an hour during the Depression. "Everybody knows he went on drinking binges. After losing his medals, his honor and his first son, naturally he hit the bottle. Even he was human."

Baker's hitting powers Dodgers to victory over Reds, 8-4

By BEN WALKER
AP Sports Writer

As Dusty Baker goes, so go the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Baker drilled a two-run homer and two-run double Tuesday night as the Dodgers downed the Cincinnati Reds 8-4 and reclaimed first place in the National League West.

The Los Angeles victory, coupled with Atlanta's 3-2 loss to the San Francisco Giants, put the Dodgers one-half game ahead of the Braves.

"When I hit, it makes things easier," Baker said. "We hadn't scored many runs in the last 15 games, but things work right when I hit. I'm not solely responsible, but I am for a big part of it."

Baker's double keyed a five-run third inning as the Dodgers erased a 3-0 Cincinnati lead. A short time later, Baker and his Los Angeles teammates saw the Atlanta loss posted on the scoreboard.

"I glance up at the scoreboard once in awhile," Baker said. "Tonight, I was rooting for San Francisco."

Other NL action Tuesday saw Montreal top St. Louis 7-4; Philadelphia beat Chicago, 7-5; Pittsburgh defeat New York 9-5; and San Diego edge Houston 4-3.

Tonight, all eyes will be on the scoreboard in Atlanta, where the Braves play host to Los Angeles in the opener of a crucial two-game series.

"They call the game hardball in Atlanta, and that's what we will be playing," Baker said.

The Dodgers, who beaten Atlanta nine times in a row this season, plan to throw Bob Welch and Fernando Valenzuela against the Braves, who will go with veteran Phil Niekro tonight.

"We got things set up going into Atlanta with the lead," said Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda. "That makes a big difference. It's nice to pick up three games in three days."

Giants 3, Braves 2

San Francisco won its fifth in a row and pulled within 5½ games of the NL West lead as Chili Davis opened the game with a homer and Reggie Smith added a two-run blast in the fourth.

It was the Giants' seventh straight victory over Atlanta in little over a month. Jim Barr, 4-3, got eighth-inning help from Greg Minton, who recorded his 26th save.

Dale Murphy cracked his 33rd homer for Atlanta, tying him with New York's Dave Kingman for the league lead. The homer boosted Murphy's league-leading RBI total to 100.

Montreal had only six hits, but those included two-run homers by Tim Wallach and Andre Dawson.

The loss reduced St. Louis lead in the NL East to one-half game over Philadelphia and 3½ games over both Montreal and Pittsburgh.

Montreal snapped a 3-3 tie in the fifth by scoring two runs without a hit. Three walks loaded the bases and one run scored on a wild pitch by Jim Kaat, while the other scored on Al Oliver's groundout.

Phillies 7, Cubs 5

Garry Maddox singled in two runs with two outs in the ninth inning for the Phillies.

Maddox had doubled and scored on a run-scoring single by pinch-hitter Greg Gross to give Philadelphia a 5-4 lead in the eighth. But Leon Durham's 20th homer of the season tied it for Chicago in the bottom of the inning.

Pirates 9, Mets 5

Jason Thompson, who became a father earlier in the day, became only the eighth player to hit 30 home runs in a season in both leagues.

Thompson, who hit 31 homers for Detroit in 1977, hammered his 30th homer in the first inning, a two-run blow, and had an RBI single in the eighth.

Mike Easler and Richie Hebner also homered for the Pirates.

Astros 4, Padres 3

Frank DiPino, acquired by Houston from Milwaukee in the Don Sutton deal last week, made an impressive major league debut by striking out 10 in five innings while getting the win.

He struck out the first four hitters he faced, and allowed seven hits and no walks. Dan Boone pitched four innings of one-hit relief for his second save.

MHS varsity, JV beat Andrews travel to Plains on Thursday

The Midland High varsity and junior varsity volleyball teams ran their records to 6-1 Tuesday night with victories over Andrews.

The varsity had the rougher time, going 15-12, 15-10 in getting the victory while the JV squad posted 16, 15-5 wins over the Mustangs.

MHS coach Linda Jolly was pleased with the way her girls played against Andrews saying, "The girls just did a real good job, they really did. They're playing real well right now."

Playing well is important at this stage of the season sine Midland High, as well as the rest of the district, have only a few days left before the 4-5A season gets underway. But, before the Tuesday opener, the Bulldogs will have a varsity and JV matchup against Plains starting at 5 p.m. in Plains and a varsity-junior varsity tournament this weekend in Snyder.

In the tournament, the varsity will play Seminole at 9 a.m. Friday with the MHS JV facing Brownfield at 10 a.m. The tournament will conclude on Saturday.

King hopes Duran will retire after loss to Laing Saturday

NEW YORK (AP) — Don King, who has promoted many Roberto Duran fights, said Tuesday he hopes the 31-year-old former lightweight and welterweight champion from Panama will retire in the wake of his 10-round decision loss to Kirkland Laing last Saturday night at Detroit.

"I'll not only urge Roberto to retire," said King. "I will implore this great little man whom I love and understand to go out with the dignity his career deserves."

After Duran's loss to Sugar Ray Leonard for the World Boxing Council welterweight championship Nov. 25, 1980, King said he wanted Duran to retire and would not consider promoting him anymore. But when Duran decided to continue to fight, King promoted his wins over Nino Gonzalez and Luigi Munchillo and his loss to Wilfred Benitez for the World Boxing Association junior middleweight title.

"I will not stand in his way if he insists on continuing in the ring, but I will not promote him anymore," King said Tuesday.

Duran was scheduled to fight unbeaten Tony Ayala Nov. 19.

Sutton may hinder Baltimore's charge to top of AL East

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

As the Baltimore Orioles charge towards the top of the American League East, they may find an unexpected obstacle in their way: Don Sutton.

Sutton, who won 254 games in the National League during 15 years with the Dodgers and just less than two with Houston, joined the Milwaukee Brewers last week. The trade began to pay dividends for the East leaders Tuesday night as Sutton threw a seven-hitter and struck out nine in shutting out Detroit 4-0.

The victory kept the Brewers three games in front of streaking Baltimore in the AL East. The Orioles won their 10th straight game and 17th in 18 with a 7-2 decision over the New York Yankees.

"I wasn't as nervous tonight as I was the other night against Cleveland," said the 37-year-old Sutton, who was obtained for three minor leaguers on Aug. 30. "The fact that it was cool and I had a couple of fast innings helped. I only threw 110 or 112 pitches. When you can stay out of 20 or 25-pitch innings, it helps."

So did a three-run homer by Cecil Cooper in the eighth, and having Ted Simmons behind the plate, calling pitches for him.

"I've read the box scores long enough to know that the Brewers score runs," Sutton said. "My job was just to keep them close to give them a chance to do what they do best: score runs."

Simmons aided greatly in that chore.

"I think I have the advantage over the hitters over here because I have Ted Simmons as a catcher," Sutton said. "Ted has seen me in the National League a long time, and he knows how I pitch and what I do. I have all the confidence in the world in him and pretty much follow what he calls.

"The curve ball has been my third or fourth pitch the last few years, but tonight it was my first or second," he said. "Ted forced me to use it more than I may have wanted, but he was one step ahead of the hitters."

The victory enabled the Brewers to stay a few steps in front of the opposition, most notably Baltimore, which hasn't lost since Aug. 27. The only other East challenger, the Boston Red Sox, lost 5-4 in 10 innings to Cleveland.

Elsewhere in the AL, it was Chicago 7, California 4; Toronto 2, Oakland 1, and Seattle 5, Kansas City 2.

Orioles 7, Yankees 2

Mike Flanagan won his fifth straight game and John Lowenstein hit his 22nd homer to pace the Orioles.

"A month ago we weren't sure of ourselves," said Flanagan, who combined with reliever Tippy Martinez to subdue the Yankees. "Now things are finally coming together. Now we're steamrolling."

"Our pitchers are finally doing what we felt they were capable of doing and we can't run them out there fast enough," Manager Earl Weaver said. "All of them are doing well. That's what we missed the early part of the year.

"We always seem to come around at this time. We can't explain why we play so poorly in April and it's hard to explain why we play so well in September. Winning is contagious, though. When you're winning, you get the bloop hits, you get the bounces."

Indians 5, Red Sox 4

Alan Bannister's bases-loaded single with two outs in the 10th won it for Cleveland, which tied the game with two outs in the ninth on Toby Harrah's RBI single. The Indians rally came off Red Sox' relief ace Mark Clear.

With one out in the 10th, Miguel Dilone doubled. Rick Manning was walked intentionally and pinch-hitter Mike Hargrove walked to load the bases. Bill Nahorodny hit a check-swing grounder to third baseman Carney Lansford, who forced Dilone at the plate for the second out. But Bannister followed with his single down the left-field line.

Jim Rice and Dwight Evans homered for Boston. Carl Yastrzemski doubled following Rice's homer in the seventh, tying him with Jimmy Foxx and Ted Williams for ninth place on the all-time list for extra-base hits with 1,117.

Mariners 5, Royals 2

Bruce Bochte and Richie Zisk clouted two-run homers, Mike Moore threw a six-hitter for eight innings and Bill Caudill fanned the side in the ninth to earn his 24th save.

White Sox 7, Angels 4

Chicago edged within 4½ games of the Royals in the West as Tony Bernazard had three hits — including a homer. Left-hander Tommy John made his first start in Anaheim since being acquired from the Yankees but was knocked out by a pair of drives off his right leg in the third inning. Chicago lefty Britt Burns made his third start since being disabled with a sore shoulder but had to leave after a recurrence of the injury in the fifth.

Blue Jays 2, A's 1

Lloyd Moseby's run-scoring single with one out in the eighth provided the decisive run. Jim Clancy, 3-0 against the A's this season, scattered six hits before yielding to Dale Murray with one out in the ninth. Murray registered his seventh save.

Twins 8, Rangers 1

Randy Bush and Kent Hrbek homered to spark a five-run fifth and Gary Ward had four hits for Minnesota. Hrbek homered for the third time in three games against Texas this week, while Bush got his second homer in as many games.

Chargers feel they're ready for final assault

One of a Series
By NORM CLARKE

SAN DIEGO — The San Diego Chargers, awesome on offense in 1981, awful on defense and Super Bowl no-shows for a third year in a row, are convinced they're ready for the final assault.

And maybe more.

"If this team doesn't go to the Super Bowl, it isn't going to be because of the defense," says safety Tim Fox, who figures to one of five new starting defenders for the Chargers.

Tired of taking the heat after three years of playoff failures, San Diego's defense has visions of vindicating itself.

How bad was last year's defense? Bad enough to be last in the National Football League in pass defense, give up an all-time record of 269.4 yards passing per game and finish 27th among 28 teams in total defense.

In a humbling 44-23 to lowly Seattle, the Chargers gave up 486 yards. Minnesota got 526 yards in a 33-31 victory and Buffalo 486.

To try to fix the problem, the Chargers hired defensive coordinator Tom Bass from Tampa Bay, traded for linebackers David Lewis and Dewey Selmon and added Fox and Bruce Laird to stabilize a shattered secondary.

The Chargers, 6-5 at one point, rallied to tie 10-6 Denver on the final day of the season, winning the title on tiebreakers.

No one is anticipating a runaway in a division that San Diego Coach Don Coryell considers the NFL's toughest.

Not with the Los Angeles Raiders healthy again after devastating injuries following their world championships. Kansas City, with its best record (9-7) since 1972, plans to open up its offense with more passing. Denver still has its smothering defense but may pay a heavy price breaking in a new quarterback.

The most likely scenario is another Chargers-Raiders shootout down the stretch. After a 7-9 finish, the Raiders have several scores to settle, notably a 55-21 thrashing at the hands of the Chargers.

Quarterback Jim Plunkett has recovered from a broken thumb and Marcus Allen, college football's Heisman Trophy winner in 1981, should feel right at home in the Coliseum, his turf at the University of Southern California and again now that the Raiders' owner, Al Davis, has won his long court fight to move the franchise from Oakland to LA.

Kansas City led the AFC in rushing, thanks to rookie Joe Delaney, but finished dead last in passing yardage. To remedy that, the Chiefs took Tennessee's Anthony Hancock, the first wide receiver selected in the draft.

Seattle quarterback Jim Zorn has mended after breaking his left ankle and the late-season arrival of running back Theotis Brown produced fast results. But the biggest problems are on defense and there appears to be no quick fix.

San Diego quarterback Dan Fouts, who operates the throttle of the Chargers' high-powered offense, says the team has never been hungrier.

"Our entire offense is going to be better, I think, becasue we've had another year to work together and we have the motivation of last year having come up short. That's pretty much on everybody's mind; they're anxious to right that," said Fouts, who has bettered the NFL's all-time single-season passing yardage mark three years in a row.

Yankee Win to begin recuperation

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Yankee Win, the 2-year-old filly who broke her leg in this week's All-American Futurity at Ruidoso Downs, has been shipped back to Texas to rest and recuperate, the horse's owners say.

The horse was moved to the Elgin Veterinary Clinic here after being injured at the start of Monday's race at Ruidoso.

MC golf begins Thursday

Midland College opens its fall athletic activities Thursday when the Chaparral men's golf team swings into action at Hobbs, N.M.

The Chaps are competing Thursday and Friday in a tournament hosted by New Mexico Junior College. The tournament is important for MC golf coach Del Poss, who needs to sort out a flock of freshmen to determine his best players for conference tournament play that opens next week.

"This is a talented group of players, but I've got to find out who can compete under pressure," Poss said. "That's the reason this tournament is so important. We've just got one sophomore and he didn't play much last year, so everyone is even right now."

Other team members include Scott Anagnostelis, Albuquerque, N.M., Del Monte High; Jeff Cranford, Amarillo High; Emil Hale, Midland Lee; Robert Iovinelli, El Paso Coronado; Danny Kloza, San Antonio Lee; Glenn McFarden, Jal, N.M.; Michael Schwartz, El Paso Coronado; and David Stilwell, Comanche.

Western Junior College Athletic Conference play starts next week when the Chaps compete in the tournament hosted by South Plains College at Levelland. Western Texas College, Snyder, hosts the conference tourney Oct. 2 while Midland College hosts the conference teams Oct. 15. Three more conference tournaments are scheduled during the spring semester to determine the loop titlist.

Poss also has his players scheduled to compete in a couple more invitational tournaments this fall.

Vilas has trouble defeating Denton

After the third game, during the changeover, Nastase threw his towel and it wrapped around Wiley's neck. It began to drizzle a little, and the umpire announced there would be another suspension of play.

But Nastase walked onto the court, ready to serve, and Connors went to his baseline. Tournament referee Mike Blanchard nodded agreement and Wiley announced play would continue.

The court was dry before the fourth game was completed.

The day schedule's final match between defending champion Tracy Austin and fifth-seeded Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslavia was halted by rain with Austin leading 5-4 in the first set. The match will be concluded on Wednesday.

Also advancing into the quarterfinals was fourth-seeded Guillermo Vilas, who outlasted hard-serving Steve Denton, the No. 12 seed, 3-6, 4-6, 6-3, 7-6, 6-3.

For Navratilova, it was another heart-breaking loss. Last year, she was beaten by Austin in the final of this tournament on the hard courts at the National Tennis Center. And, as appears to be her fate, she lost after trouncing her opponent in the opening set.

NAVRATILOVA WON the first set in 17 minutes as she broke the 20-year-old Shriver in the fourth and sixth games. Navratilova, who had reached the quarters without losing a set, appeared to be heading for the semifinals when she broke Shriver in the ninth game of the second set for a 5-4 lead.

But Shriver broke back in the 10th game and fought off a break point in the 11th game before holding serve.

After Navratilova held serve to send the second set into a tiebreaker, Shriver lost the first point when she netted a forehand volley, then quickly pulled into a 2-1 lead as Navratilova netted the ball twice.

But Shriver doublefaulted to even the score, then she again took the lead when Navratilova found the net with a forehand volley.

The tiebreaker then went on serve as Shriver won 7-5, tying the match at 1-1.

In the third set, the two held serve until the fifth game, when two unforced errors gave Shriver a 30-0 lead. A forehand down the line made it 40-0 before Navratilova took the next two points.

The Lutherville, Md., player, who reached the final here in 1978, losing to Chris Evert, before shoulder trouble hampered her the next two years, broke Navratilova again in the seventh game, again at 30, for a 5-2 lead.

Navratilova, who had won the last three Grand Slam tournaments — the Australian and French Opens, and Wimbledon — had a break point, at 40-30, in the eighth game, but a cross-court backhand was wide, bringing the score to deuce. When she netted a backhand, an unforced error, Shriver had the advantage, and she closed out the match with a forehand volley passing shot.

Harmon, a 6-foot-4, 185-pound native of Richmond, Va. and a student at Southern Methodist University, was wild-carded into this year's main draw at Flushing Meadow, site of the U.S. Open. Ranked 221st in the world, he advanced to the fourth round by defeating Rolf Gehring of West Germany, Henrik Sundstrom of Sweden and Chris Lewis of New Zealand.

A member of the 1980 Junior Davis Cup team, Harmon and Teltscher, ranked eighth in the world on the Association of Tennis Professionals computer, battled evenly most of the afternoon on the grandstand court.

In the fifth set, Harmon was serving for the match at 5-3, only to fall behind love-40. He rallied to deuce before having to save another break point.

He won the next two points to reach match point, then double faulted. Teltscher went on to break the amateur, then hold serve to knot the match at 5-5.

Harmon finally advanced to the quarterfinals when he won the fifth-set tiebreaker 7-1.

VILAS ROARED from behind for his victory over Denton. The Argentinian, who won his event on the clay at Forest Hills in 1977, dropped the first two sets before capturing the third set and forcing the fourth to a tiebreaker, which he won 7-4.

Then he broke Denton in the eighth game of the fifth set to take control of the match, winning the next game and the match at love.

Also advancing to the quarters were five-time champion Chris Evert Lloyd and Tom Gullikson, both with straight-set victories.

Lloyd defeated No. 16 seed Zina Garrison 6-4, 6-3, while Gullikson downed Jaime Fillol of Chile 6-4, 6-3, 6-3.

Lloyd became the last woman to reach the quarterfinals, where she will face Bonnie Gadusek.

The victory over Garrison was her closest match of the tournament. In her previous three triumphs against Pilar Vasquez, Kelly Henry and Kate Latham, the second-seeded Lloyd had never lost more than two games in any set.

Martin, Stanley, Anderson hit with fine by MacPhail

NEW YORK (AP) — American League President Lee MacPhail has fined Manager Billy Martin and shortstop Fred Stanley of the Oakland A's and Detroit skipperr Sparky Anderson for their part in a controversy last month involving Rickey Henderson's quest for the base stealing record.

The amounts of the fines, in following league policy, were not announced.

Martin, reached in Oakland Tuesday night, was unaware of the fines.

"I haven't received anything yet," he said. "Ask me the same questions tomorrow. If I get fined for giving a double-steal sign, something is wrong with this game."

And Stanley said, "I'm surprised. We're going to have to see about this in the morning. I was told (by A's management) not to say anything until we can get some confirmation and talk with attorneys."

The incident occurred in a game between the A's and Tigers on Aug. 24 in Oakland, when Henderson had 117 stolen bases and was one away from Lou Brock's major league record for stolen bases in a single season. With Henderson on first and Stanley on second, Stanley was picked off, which cleared the way for Henderson to attempt a steal.

Henderson was then thrown out at second.

Anderson charged that Stanley had intentionally been caught off base, while Martin claimed that a double steal had been signaled and that Stanley was picked off while taking a walking lead.

"Whether or not there was actually any wrongdoing, both clubs by their actions and statements created public suspicion of their play," MacPhail said in a statement.

Anderson, when told of the fine before the Tigers' game with the Brewers in Milwaukee Tuesday night, said he figured there was a "99.99 percent" chance he would be fined.

"If I went through that again, I would hope I wouldn't react the way I did," said Anderson, who had compared the situation to the Black Sox scandal and called for an investigation after the Aug. 24 game. He later apologized for his remarks to the league office.

"I can't blame the league for fining me," Anderson said.

Henderson tied Brock's record in Oakland's next game after the incident, and then broke the mark one game later.

Ex-Cardinal Ken Boyer dies of cancer at 51

BASEBALL—Ken Boyer, 51, died of cancer Tuesday and ex-St. Louis Cardinals teammates said he battled the disease right to the end, just like he played third base. "He was a real battler, not a showman like some players today," said former Card Manager Red Schoendienst. "Kenny said yesterday that he believed he could come back from this. He went down fighting."

Boyer more than 2,000 games in his 15-year playing career, which included stints with three other teams. And he was a lifetime .287 hitter, a seven-time All-Star, and five times the Gold Glove Winner for third basemen. August A. Busch Jr., president of the Cardinals, said: "Ken Boyer gave the Cardinals and the baseball fans of St. Louis many great monments to remember, and we will remember him with admiration and respect." In 1964, Boyer was the NL's MVP as St. Louis beat the Yankees in the Series with the help of a Boyer grand slam. Boyer hit .300 or better five times for St. Louis and cracked 255 of his 282 career home runs for the club...

Gold Sox looking for new name to accompany team changes

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — The Amarillo Gold Sox of the Texas League have moved here and acquired a new owner, a supply of players and a stadium. Now the baseball team needs a new name.

Gold Sox owner T.E. Moore Jr. signed Tuesday a three-year player development agreement with the San Diego Padres and agreed to lease Vincent-Beck Stadium from Lamar University here.

The new team, which is yet to be named, will become a AA farm club for San Diego and play in the Texas League Western Division, officials said.

Moore, a businessman who has owned the Gold Sox for the past two years, said a contest will run through September to pick a name for the team, with the winner to be announced Oct. 4.

The minor league franchise will begin its 1983 season on April 8 against El Paso, Moore said. The team will play an exhibition game with the Lamar Cardinals at Vincent-Beck Stadium April 6 and the first of 68 regular season home games is scheduled April 18.

Lou Valentic, Gold Sox general manager this season; also will manage the team next season in Beaumont, Moore said.

Orioles' Palmer Player of Week

NEW YORK (AP) — Baltimore's Jim Palmer, the American League's "Pitcher of the Month" for August, was named "Player of the Week" after pitching two complete game shutouts last week.

Palmer currently on a string of 21 consecutive scoreless innings and 11 wins in a row, pitched the fifth one-hitter of his career over Minnesota last week and shut out the Toronto Blue Jays. He allowed just five hits and three walks, and struck out ten batters.

Black scored Rankin's other two touchdowns on five-yard runs as the Red Devils scored in every quarter.

Tulsa builds up 2-0 lead over El Paso for Texas League title

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Back-to-back triples by Mike Rubel and Tommy Dunbar highlighted a three-run second inning that pushed Tulsa past El Paso, 7-1, in their Texas League Championship game Tuesday.

Tulsa's victory gave the Drillers a 2-0 lead in their best-of-five title playoff with the Diablos.

Rubel opened the bottom of the second by slashing a triple against losing pitcher Bob Schroeck. Dunbar followed with another triple to produce the game's first run.

Donnie Scott then walked, and Jerry Neufang executed a perfect squeeze bunt to score Dunbar and send Scott to second. Steve Buchele followed with a double, scoring Scott.

The Drillers added runs in the third and fifth innings on sacrifice flies by Dave Stockstill and Dunbar, respectively, and Buchele iced the game in the seventh with a two-run homer.

El Paso's only run came in the seventh inning when three straight singles loaded the bases and Dan Davidsmeier hit into a double play, scoring Bill Foley.

Tulsa starting pitcher Tim Henry was the winner, with Jack Lazorko pitching the final three innings to earn his third save in post-season action.

The teams travel to El Paso on Wednesday to continue the series in games there Thursday and Friday.

Forty-Niners lose another Super Bowl starting player

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — The San Francisco 49ers lost another Super Bowl starter Tuesday, with veteran linebacker Willie Harper going on the injured reserve list.

But Coach Bill Walsh said, "We should be better defensively this year. The strength of our club, especially at this moment, is the defense."

Several of the 49ers' offensive starters, especially in the line, are coming back from injuries or playing with slight injuries now.

"The offense is hard to evaluate. The starters weren't together very much in exhibition games," said Walsh. "But as long as Joe Montana stays healthy, along with other people, we'll be a force to be reckoned with."

Quarterback Montana stayed healthy in the preseason games, while backup passers went down with injuries, and completed 46 of 67 passes while suffering no interceptions.

The regular season opens Sunday when the Los Angeles Raiders visit Candlestick Park. The game is a complete sellout, along with all others scheduled at Candlestick this year.

The 49ers had one of the National Football League's best defensive units last season, and certainly the most improved one from the year before, as they rolled to a regular season 16-3 record and became Super Bowl champions.

Harper, going into his ninth NFL season, is recovering from a knee injury. He and reserve offensive tackle Allan Kennedy, also placed on injured reserve Tuesday, will be unavailable for at least four weeks.

Craig Puki, a starting linebacker in the Super Bowl, was traded last month, and Archie Reese, the former starter at nose tackle, recently was cut. Dan Bunz is the new starter at Puki's spot, Milt McColl will start in Harper's place, and John Harty at nose tackle.

"John Harty has become what we'd hoped he would be, a big man who can go after the ball," Walsh said of Harty, a 263-pound second-year pro from Iowa.

Dukes defeat Spokane

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — A home run by Sid Bream became the winning run for Albuquerque Tuesday night as the Dukes defeated Spokane 3-2 in the second game of the best-of-seven Pacific Coast League playoff series.

The win put the Dukes on top 2-0 in the series. The two teams face off in the third game of the series Wednesday in Albuquerque.

The Dukes grabbed its two first runs early in the second inning. Tony Brewer had a lead off single that was followed by a RBI double by catcher Don Crow. Crow was brought in on an in-field out by Larry Fobbs.

The game was delayed for two hours as the third inning was to start because of rain.

Once it got under way again, both teams remained scoreless until the bottom of the fifth when Bream slammed his solo homer over center field.

Spokane began to rally in the seventh when catcher Jerry Narrom lead off with a home run that was followed by a single by Jose Moreno, a double by Rick Adams and a sacrifice fly by Scott Carnes which allowed Moreno to score.

The Indians only two runs came off Albuquerque reliever Steve Shirley, who pitched one-third an inning.

Orlando Pena was brought in to pitch for the Dukes after the Indians scored their two runs and held Spokane off for the rest of the game.

For Spokane, Narrom went four for four.

Steve Brown (14-12) will be the starting pitcher for the Indians Wednesday as Spokane tries to catch up with the Dukes, who are seeking their third straight PCL title. Orel Hershiser will be on the mound for the Dukes Wednesday.

Arbitrator rules NBA proposal OK

NEW YORK (AP) — A special arbitrator ruled Tuesday that the National Basketball Association's proposal of a salary moderation plan was not in violation of the Oscar Robertson agreement between players and the league.

Under the moderation plan, the NBA, in contract negotiations, would seek a limit which each NBA team could spend on salaries. The players contend such a limit would restrict movement of players by restricting the amount of money each team could spend, thus violating the Robertson agreement.

In his ruling, special master Kingman Brewster, a mediator jointly agreed upon by the league and players association to oversee the Robertson agreement, said that in his opinion it was legal to negotiate the plan.

The players union has said it would refuse to negotiate such a plan, while the NBA has filed a suit with the National Labor Relations Board to make it a mandatory subject of bargaining. The NLRB action still is pending.

Larry Fleisher, executive director of the NBA Players Association, said, "It is ludicrous that the NBA can intrepret Special Master Breweter's ruling as a ruling in their favor."

"To quote from his conclusion, Special Master Brewster stated: 'I do declare if given effect by collective bargaining or ottherwise, it would violate the purpose, structure, and some of the explicit provisions of the Robertson settlement agreeement.' How myopic the NBA must be to consider that a victory," said Fleisher.

Owners prepared to up ante

WASHINGTON (AP) — National Football League owners are prepared to raise the ante one more time in an effort to have the players' union drop its demand for a wage scale based on a fixed percentage of gross revenues and avert a strike.

Sources close to the NFL Management Council, the owners' bargaining agent, have told the Associated Press the new offer, while failing to address the players' demand for salaries to be based on a guaranteed percentage of gross revenues, will include "a substantial across-the-board wage hike." Details of the proposal, the owners' first financial offering since an earlier proposal was rejected by the union on July 13, were not made available.

Ed Garvey, executive director of the National Football League Players Association, said the owners' continued failure to address the percentage of gross concept increases the probability of a player strike.

There has been talk of a possible strike by the Seattle Seahawks before Sunday's game.

"There's nothing I can comment on at this time," said player representative Sam McCullum, who was waived by the Seahawks Tuesday. "I can't really comment until I get the complete gist of it."

McCullum said western officials of the NFLPA were coming to Seattle from San Francisco tonight for discussions.

The players' union, in response to McCullum being cut, filed unfair labor practice charges Tuesday against the Seattle with the National Labor Relations Board's Region 2 office in New York. The NFLPA has asked the NLRB to go to court on behalf of the union in an effort to obtain an injunction to have McCullum "reinstated immediately."

The NFL Management Council will present the owners new wage proposal at today's collective bargaining session, the first meeting between the league and the National Football League Players Association since Aug.26.

Federal mediator Kay McMurray will attend the session but will not be participate in negotiations at the bargaining table unless needed.

The Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service had been asked to intervene by the owners last month. The players union has said previously it is premature to seek mediation.

In advance of today's session, management council spokesman Jim Miller said: "We think the players will find the package most attractive."

"We will discuss any offer that is a basis for future negotiations," Garvey said. "It is highly unlikey, however, that a strike can be averted that doesn't address the major issues we spelled out in Chicago."

At last month's meeting of player representatives in Chicago, the NFLPA reaffirmed its demand for substantial wage increases for all players, a guaranteed a fair share of revenues and the elimination of what the union considers incentives for teams to cut higher-salaried veterans.

"If the owners new proposal does not address these issues there cannot be an agreement," Garvey insisted on Tuesday.

The players' union rejected the owners' last offer on July 13, two days before expiration of its old five-year agreement with the NFL.

The July 13 offer would have raised the minimum pay for rookies would jump from $22,000 to $30,000.

A four-year veteran currently makes $32,000 in the NFL. The owners' July 13 offer would guarantee a fifth-year player $50,000.

Under the union's proposal, which is based on a fixed 55 percent share of gross revenues to be distributed from a central fund, rookies would make $75,000 while fifth-year players would earn $140,000.

The Wallace women — daughter Lee, left, and wife Lisa — stand behind George Wallace as he addresses an election-night crowd early Wednesday at his headquarters in Montgomery. Wallace is the front-runner in the Democratic primary race for the gubernatorial nomination in Alabama. He has held the post three times in the past decade.

Wallace facing primary runoff

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Former Gov. George C. Wallace, breaking a four-year hiatus from politics to seek an unprecedented fourth term, failed to gain a majority of the vote and was forced into a Democratic runoff Tuesday against Lt. Gov. George McMillan.

With 74 percent of 4,114 precincts reporting, Wallace had 316,138 votes or 41.2 percent; McMillan had 232,716 votes or 30.3 percent; House Speaker Joe McCorquodale had 197,299 votes or 25.7 percent; former Gov. James E. "Big Jim" Folsom had 12,936 votes or 1.7 percent; and retired attorney Reuben McKinley had 8,942 votes or 1.2 percent.

A runoff election will be held Sept. 28.

Wallace, who once dominated Alabama politics while making fist-shaking forays for the presidency, said before the primary that he expected to face a runoff.

"It's hard to beat them all at one time," said Wallace, 63.

Supreme Court Justice Oscar Adams was leading but appeared headed for a runoff in his bid to hold on to his job and, at the same time, become the first black elected to a statewide office in Alabama. With 43.4 percent of the precincts reporting in the Democratic Supreme Court justice primary, Adams had 153,204 votes; or 46.1 percent; to Jim Zeigler's 91,929, or 27.7 percent; and George Williams' 86,976 votes, or 26.2 percent. If Adams fails to gain a majority vote, he will also face a runoff.

Adams, 57, a former Birmingham attorney, became the first black to serve on the state's highest court when he was appointed to fill a vacancy two years ago. He has the support of Gov. Fob James and numerous lawyer groups in his bid for the office.

Wallace, who first took office in 1963 with the slogan "segregation forever," has shed his racial stands of old and actively sought black votes in the 1982 campaign.

But while many black leaders have voiced goodwill toward the Wallace candidacy, the state's most influential black political organization endorsed McMillan, 38, a Birmingham lawyer with support among moderate Democratic party regulars.

McCorquodale, 61, is a veteran legislator and conservative Democrat who raised a challenge to Wallace's expected rural strength. A former Wallace ally, McCorquodale is a rural Clarke County businessman with backing from farm-bloc interests.

Wallace, who was a presidential candidate in 1964, 1968, 1972 and 1976, has ruled out any more White House contests. And while he all but ruled out a political comeback after he left office in 1979, he found the lure of the 1982 gubernatorial race irresistable.

Candidates won't take 'pledge'

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — For years, New Hampshire politicians have had to take "the pledge" to have a prayer of becoming governor. But this year, three major candidates are refusing to promise they won't impose a sales or income tax.

"There is a clear choice between taxers and tax-fighters," former Republican Gov. Lane Dwinell said in a recent newspaper column. "All the fancy talk, slick advertising and slogans shouldn't obscure the fact that our state is in a fiscal crisis and the issue is taxes."

The state ran a $20 million deficit at the end of the fiscal year June 30. The current two-year state budget is $1.7 billion and there have been predictions that there will be a $50 million shortfall in revenue when the next budget is drafted in January. State revenues now come mostly from a tax on business profits and from the state's monopoly on liquor sales.

Dwinell's favorite in the eight-man GOP gubernatorial primary on Sept. 14 is state Senate President Robert Monier, a conservative who has taken the pledge to veto taxes and keep New Hampshire as the only state besides oil-rich Alaska with no statewide sales or income tax.

Dwinell told GOP voters the alternative is "the spend-and-tax candidate," Louis D'Allesandro, an administrator at New England College in Henniker.

D'Allesandro took the pledge in 1980, but won't this year. He says anyone "with an IQ no higher than the inflation rate" knows the state's money troubles can't by solved by budget-cutting.

He isn't backing a specific tax, but says the state needs both new revenue and tax reform.

Another 1980 pledge-taker — Democratic Gov. Hugh Gallen, who has a free ride in his primary — also refuses to rule out an income or sales tax. So does GOP candidate Leigh Bosse, a state representative who was ousted as House majority leader after he lambasted a budget bill he was supposed to steer to victory.

GOP candidate John Sununu, a professor at Tufts University near Boston, has taken the pledge.

The wild card for November is former three-term Republican Gov. Meldrim Thomson. Beaten by Gallen in 1978 and 1980, Thomson has said he will run as an independent unless a strongly anti-tax candidate appears likely to win the GOP primary.

But Thomson must decide whether to run before the polls close on primary day. Observers say that if Thomson is on the ballot, he could be a spoiler even if he reconsiders and endorses the GOP nominee.

Most observers rate Sununu, Monier and D'Allesandro the GOP favorites; some include Bosse.

Also running are restaurateur John Zareas, who wants to legalize slot machines, and former state GOP Chairman David Gosselin, who says he alone is pledged to veto all tax increases.

Rounding out the field are construction laborer Daniel Fletcher, who wants an income tax, and William Byron. Byron bills himself as "a political unknown — your alternative candidate to the sophisticated political knowns."

McCarthy: Dayton 'trying to buy' bid

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Former Sen. Eugene McCarthy says his opponent in the Democratic U.S. Senate primary — a department store heir who has never held elective office — is trying to buy the nomination by outspending him 200 to 1.

Mark Dayton, 35, has spent more than $4 million, virtually all from his own pocket, to set a state election spending record. The winner of the Sept. 14 primary will face Republican Sen. David Durenberger, who has only token opposition.

In a pre-primary financial report filed last week, McCarthy said he had spent just over $18,000 on the campaign.

McCarthy, 66, who has spent the last 12 years lecturing and making long-shot bids for the presidency, isn't the only name from the past on the statewide ballot. Perennial presidential candidate Harold Stassen, 75, is seeking the Republican nomination for governor, hoping for a return to the office he held 40 years ago as the "boy governor."

Stassen faces Lt. Gov. Lou Wangberg and Minneapolis businessman Wheelock Whitney. Republican Gov. Al Quie is not seeking a second term.

In a wide-open race on the Democratic side, Attorney General Warren Spannaus, 51, is running against former Gov. Rudy Perpich, 54. Spannaus has the endorsement of the party convention.

In 1976, Perpich, stepped up from lieutenant governor to governor when former Gov. Wendell Anderson resigned to enter the U.S. Senate.

The Republican gubernatorial race is expected focus on Wangberg, 41, a former school superintendent, and Whitney, 56, a wealthy farmer.

Florida's incumbent governor to face five-term congressman

MIAMI (AP) — Democratic incumbent Gov. Bob Graham and five-term Republican U.S. Rep. L.A. "Skip" Bafalis swept past their little-known opponents with ease Tuesday to win their respective nominations in the state's gubernatorial primary.

Meanwhile, state Sen. Van Poole was forced into an Oct. 5 runoff against Palm Beach County prosecutor David Bludworth in the Republican primary for the U.S. Senate seat currently held by Sen. Lawton Chiles.

Graham waited less than two hours after the polls closed before declaring himself the nominee.

With 96 percent of the precincts reporting, Graham had 765,681 votes, or 84 percent; to Homestead businessman Fred Kuhn's 86,626 votes, or 10 percent; and Bob Kunst's 57,138 votes, or 6 percent.

On the Republican side, with 95 percent of the precincts reporting, Bafalis, a Fort Myers Beach congressman, had 296,710 votes, or 86 percent; to Winter Park attorney Vernon Davids' 46,395 votes, or 14 percent. Bafalis was endorsed by both the GOP and Vice President George Bush.

In the GOP Senate primary, with 95 percent of the precincts reporting, Poole had 142,035 votes, or 42 percent, while Bludworth had 106,482 votes, or 31 percent. George Snyder, a Sarasota, Fla., businessman and former Maryland state senate president, had 90,778 votes, or 27 percent.

Chiles, a two-term Democratic incumbent from Lakeland, faced no primary opposition.

In one of four new districts gained after the 1980 census, Apollo 15 astronaut Al Worden, a political novice, lost a bid for the Republican nomination.

Arizona state senate president wins Republican gubernatorial nomination

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — State Senate President Leo Corbet won the Republican gubernatorial nomination Tuesday and the right to face Gov. Bruce Babbitt in November, while state Rep. Pete Dunn was nominated in the GOP Senate race.

Dunn will meet U.S. Sen. Dennis DeConcini, who won his nomination easily.

In the Republican Senate primary, with 330 of 1,350 precincts reporting, Dunn, of Phoenix, led with 19,884 votes, or 56 percent, to Mesa real-estate investor Dean Sellers' 15,396 votes, or 43 percent.

DeConcini quickly defeated Caroline Killeen of Tucson, a crusader for energy conservation who has run for several offices, including the presidency. With 341 precincts reporting, DeConcini had 34,649 votes, or 83 percent, to Ms. Killeen's 6,956 votes, or 16 percent.

With 273 precincts reporting, Corbet, of Phoenix, had 17,088, of 61 percent; to Glendale auto dealer Evan Mecham's 10,601 votes, or 38 percent.

Babbitt's only opposition, Steve Jancek, died last month — too late to remove his name from the ballot. Jancek still recorded 5,669 votes, or 15 percent; to Babbitt's 30,523 votes, or 84 percent, after 285 precincts.

Four Republicans were fighting for nomination to retiring Rep. John Rhodes' traditionally GOP seat in the 1st District.

Lawsuit related to estate

HOUSTON (AP) — A genealogist has filed a $16 million lawsuit against a California attorney who accused him of "unlawful and criminal conduct" in the investigation of Howard Hughes' estate.

William A. Jones said in his suit that statements by Los Angeles attorney Paul Freese were "false, slanderous, scandalous" and damaged his personal and professional reputation.

Freese, contacted at his office Tuesday, said he was not surprised because he had "invited" Jones to sue him.

Hughes died in April 1976 aboard an emergency medical flight from Mexico to Texas. He left no will designating the heirs to his vast fortune, worth as much as $2 billion.

Jones, who said he is a professional heirship investigator and genealogist, was hired six years ago by a group of 300 distant cousins trying to disprove the claims of three first cousins represented by Freese.

In September 1981, a jury ruled the three cousins were entitled to share the late tycoon's estate with 18 other relatives.

During that proceeding, Jones said, Freese accused him of being a "confidence man" and accused him of taking advantage of people who were unable to understand court proceedings.

The statement, made during a hearing in the chambers of Harris County Probate Judge Pat Gregory, was intended solely to injure Jones' personal and professional reputation, the suit said.

Polish media say Reagan, others to blame for embassy takeover

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Pouring new scorn on the Solidarity underground and the West, Poland's state-run media has named union leaders, dissidents and President Reagan as responsible for terrorism like the siege of the Polish Embassy in Switzerland.

"The occupation of the Polish Embassy in Bern is a special case," the army daily Zolnierz Wolnosci said Tuesday. "It is the consequence of a coordinated and concerted long-term, anti-Polish action of the imperialist states under the personal patronage and with active involvement of U.S. President Ronald Reagan."

The new commentary was the first direct link of Reagan to the takeover, which the State Department has condemned.

Members of the so-called "Revolutionary Home Army" seized the embassy Monday, threatening to blow up the building and all inside unless the Warsaw government ended martial law within 48 hours. They subsequently pushed the deadline back to Friday and released eight hostages, while holding five.

In a flood of coverage of the crisis, the press also quoted Swiss officials condemning the seizure as a "criminal act." The Polish news agency PAP said the United States had been put in an awkward situation by the siege, and also mocked the U.S. condemnation of the seizure.

"For the administration, with its known anti-Polish stand demonstrated in various ways for months, has no option but to formally condemn and dissociate itself from the attack," the agency said in a dispatch from Washington.

"The terrorist act launched by Polish emigres against the Polish mission was received with surprise and astonishment in the U.S. as no terrorist actions were expected from the Poles," the agency said.

The media, as well as government officials, have linked the hostage takers to Solidarity underground leaflets and publications by dissidents in a tough series of attacks.

"Regardless of the finale, this barbarous act of terror has exposed once again the true face of the entire group of Solidarity activists and their advisers, people who are not only politically but also morally responsible to the Polish nation for the escalation of terror," the hard-line army daily said.

The paper said such leaders of Solidarity as Bogdan Lis, Zbigniew Bujak and Wladyslaw Frasyniuk, and dissident leader Jacek Kuron should not forget the "instructions signed or passed by them verbally."

Lis, Bujak and Frasyniuk are among the most important leaders of the Solidarity underground and evaded capture when the authorites declared martial law last Dec.13 and seized thousands of union activists and leaders.

Soviets lose heavily in Afghanistan

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Soviet troops suffered heavy losses during an offensive launched last week aginst a major Afghan resistance stronghold in the Panjsher Valley, Western diplomatic sources said here Tuesday.

Three MIG aircraft were destroyed and more than a dozen Soviet soldiers captured during this most recent drive against Moslem guerrilla positions, according to diplomatic sources who confirmed earlier reports of a new Soviet-Afghan attack in the region.

Resistance sources in Peshawar said Monday that thousands of Soviet and Afghan troops had begun a massive attack with tanks, trucks and artillery in a bid to gain control of the strategic valley.

They said 1,000 fresh Soviet troops were in the convoy that launched the operation.

Western diplomatic sources confirmed that Soviet commando units had reached the valley from its entrance at Unaba, captured by Soviet-Afghan forces last May.

Elizabeth Chagra said to admit her part

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Elizabeth Chagra, charged with conspiracy in the assassination of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr., wrote a letter to the judge's widow admitting a role in the death plot, a source is quoted as saying.

Mrs. Chagra said her husband, Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra, walked into the kitchen of their El Paso home while she was cooking fried chicken and told her he had decided to arrange Wood's death, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram today quoted a source as saying.

The newspaper and WFAA-TV of Dallas reported that sources said Mrs. Chagra, in a letter from her Bexar County Jail cell, said she delivered $250,000 for Wood's killer.

Jimmy Chagra is charged with paying convicted hired killer Charles V. Harrelson $250,000 to shoot the judge to prevent him from presiding at Jimmy Chagra's narcotics trial. Harrelson's wife, Jo Ann, also is charged with conspiracy, as is Jimmy Chagra's brother, El Paso attorney Joseph Chagra.

Wood was slain outside his San Antonio townhouse May 29, 1979.

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram quoted its source as saying that Mrs. Chagra said in her letter that in June 1979, when she was seven months pregnant, she was dispatched to Las Vegas to make a $250,000 payment "to the people who killed the judge," and that she was chosen because she was the only person her husband could trust.

Mrs. Wood said she would have no comment on news reports concerning the letter. Prosecutor Ray Jahn also declined comment.

Dallas attorney Billy Ravkind, who represents Joseph Chagra, said Tuesday that Mrs. Chagra mailed the letter last week from jail.

Both Jimmy and Elizabeth Chagra have been reading the Bible and becoming religious while awaiting trial, the Chagras' sister, Patsy, told reporters during last month's pre-trial hearing here.

Friday is the deadline for any plea bargains in the Wood case. U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions last week granted a one-week delay of the deadline at the request of the defendants.

Sessions sentenced a federal convict Tuesday to six months for civil contempt of court for refusing to testify in a pre-trial hearing in the Wood murder case.

Sessions found Bradley Bryant in contempt for refusing to answer questions when Bryant appeared as the last witness in the 11-day pretrial hearing.

Bryant, serving a 15-year federal sentence at Philadelphia for marijuana trafficking and mail fraud convictions, reportedly once was an associate of Jimmy Chagra.

Bryant was called to testify in a late prosecution attempt to have Las Vegas, Nev., attorney Oscar Goodman disqualified from representing Chagra on grounds of conflict of interest, because Goodman also had represented Bryant.

Bryant refused to answer prosecution questions about whether he knew Jimmy and Joe Chagra, or whether he ever heard Jimmy Chagra discuss the killing of Wood.

One dead in shooting incident

ROBERT LEE, Texas (AP) — A woman was dead and a game warden was wounded in a shooting at a home in this Southwest Texas town, police said.

Victoria de la Cruz Ortiz, 37, was shot to death Tuesday evening, according to Coke County Sheriff Marshall Millican.

Sparks Burdett, a game warden, was in the intensive care unit of a San Angelo hospital early today, authorities said. Officials declined to release information concerning his condition.

Authorities refused to give details of the shooting, saying only that it occurred at a home in Robert Lee.

Millican said a suspect was in custody following the Tuesday night incident, but no charges had been filed.

Injured persons made millionaires by their lawyers

EDWARDSVILLE, Ill. (AP) — Amid the rolling hills of two southwestern Illinois counties, what locals call a "hidden industry" has thrived for the last 20 years, making millionaires of a few enterprising lawyers and their personal injury clients.

In the quiet courthouses in Madison County and neighboring St. Clair County, high-priced lawyers have won hundreds of millions of dollars in awards and settlements for their clients from such corporate giants as International Harvester Inc. and Norfolk & Western Railway Co.

Forty-seven Norfolk & Western workers were awarded nearly $58 million last month for injuries suffered during the cleanup of a toxic spill at Sturgeon, Mo., in January 1979. It is believed to be the first verdict issued saying that dioxin had permanently injured people.

That jury award made millionaires of 32 of the 47 workers who filed suit — more than the total number of reported million-dollar injury verdicts in any state last year.

Norfolk & Western attorneys have refused to comment on the case, except to say they would appeal.

"The legal community here is an industry," said Bruce Cook, an East St. Louis attorney who won a $15.65 million verdict against International Harvester in St. Clair County this year. The verdict is being appealed.

"We live here. Hire union people. Buy houses and go to the grocery stores," he said explaining the legal profession's contribution to the local economy.

The reputation for big awards given by the counties' jurors, drawn from a largely blue-collar pool, has spread.

"Madison County? I've heard a lot about Madison County," said Janet Elder, research director of Jury Verdict Research Inc. in Solon, Ohio.

Mrs. Elder predicted the latest verdicts would top the total number of million-dollar awards in the entire state of New York, which led the nation last year with 28.

According to Cook, lawyers in the area generally receive about a third of the award in personal injury cases, and about a quarter of what they win for their clients in railroad and barge injury cases.

Two federal laws have made it possible for injured railroad and barge workers to seek out the talented, high-powered lawyers, whose specialized offices dot the southern Illinois countryside.

The Federal Employees Liability Act of 1910 allows injured railroad workers to file personal injury claims wherever the railroad does business. The tracks of a dozen rail lines crisscross Madison and St. Clair counties.

Similarly, the Jones Act of 1915 allows barge and towboat workers to file personal injury claims in the area, and crewmen injured on the Mississippi River from Minneapolis to New Orleans often do.

And while it may take five or six years to get a trial on a personal injury suit in Chicago, the average wait in Madison or St. Clair counties is 33 months.

Seeds for the industry were planted in the 1940s by the late Joseph B. McGlynn of East St. Louis. At the time, Chicago was the center for railroad injury cases and attorneys there had more business than they could handle.

McGlynn started small, but his law practice prospered with the aid of Pinky Lee, a railroad union officer from Cleveland, who steered union clients to McGlynn.

St. Clair County Circuit Judge Hohn J. Hoban, a young trial lawyer in McGlynn's office at the time, said when the firm won a judgment or settlement, it kept 20 percent, gave 75 percent went to the plaintiff and 5 percent was donated to the union's legal defense fund.

The arrangement became known as the "ticket system," and a lawyer to whom union officials would steer their members was said to have a ticket.

Hoban, who has been either a judge or lawyer in the area for 45 years, says the awards historically have stood up on appeal.

"This has been an area where people have been working for the railroad and steel mills for two or three generations," he said. "The seething anger against the companies is evidencing itself in the awards."

The suits have been a financial blessing for the Madison County government as well as lawyers and business people.

Filing fees of close to $100 a case for civil suits greater than $15,000 have helped the Madison County Circuit Clerk's office to operate with a surplus of close to $500,000 in each of the last three years, said Madison County Circuit Clerk Willard Portell. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 15,294 civil suits, excluding traffic violations, were filed.

St. Clair country recorded about 2,660 suits in 1981.

"Few people realize that this is a multimillion-dollar business," said one personal injury lawyer who asked not to be identified. "Some of us lawyers are paying corporate personal property tax, and there are a lot of other taxes we're paying. We rent a lot of buildings. We put our money from these judgments into the local banks."

Mayor Kenneth Evers said Edwardsville, a community of 12,500, had prepared a shoppers guide for jurors.

Lloyd Schwarz, executive vice president of the Edwardsville Chamber of Commerce, said it was easy to tell when court was in session. "You can see (the jurors) shopping," he said. "One of my auto dealers even sold a car to a juror last week."

Indiana community honors vintage car

AUBURN, Ind. (AP) — The wheels of time have moved full circle for the Auburn 12, a vintage car that like its classic cousins, the Cord and Duesenberg, has been out of production for decades.

Few people have ever heard of an Auburn, and fewer have seen one. But 50 years ago the Auburn made its debut on the American automobile market, and the northeastern Indiana community for which it was named honored the four-wheel legend with a parade, auction, shows and other activities.

Organizers have declared this the Year of the Auburn 12, and the festival's focal point will be the Auburn-Cord-Duesenberg Museum, which originally was built to be the administration building for the Auburn Automobile Co.

From those headquarters, the 12-cylinder Model 12-160 began in 1932. The company couldn't have picked a worse time to introduce it — the nation was heading into the Great Depression. Only 1,849 Auburns were produced. The model was discontinued in 1934.

Indians take advantage of stone groupings to create calendar

WASHINGTON (AP) — The mystery of how an ancient tribe of American Indians moved heavy stone slabs to form a unique solar calendar is no mystery at all. The rocks fell into place by themselves, scientists reported last week.

The Anasazi tribe apparently took advantage of a natural grouping of stone slabs to create the now-famous "sun dagger" calander in New Mexico, saving themselves the drudgery of making one, geologists say.

In a report published in Science magazine, scientists say geological evidence indicates the three vertical sandstone slabs that make up the observatory fell into their present position naturally.

The stone structure, through which slivers of light pass to strike nearby markings, was first recognized as an astronomical device about five years ago, and most researchers assumed it was man-made. But how the Indians would have moved and erected the two-ton slabs was puzzling.

The Anasazi, forerunners of today's Pueblo Indians, had an advanced civilization that thrived from about 400 A.D. to 1300 A.D., when it mysteriously declined.

The Indians lived in multistory, Pueblo-styled apartment buildings built into the sides of cliffs. An agrarian society, the Anasazi built irrigation systems, constructed hundreds of miles of roads and developed a trading system that extended into Mexico.

"BECAUSE THERE is a significant difference between the level of skills required to conceive and construct a midday solar marker and those required to discover, observe, and use a natural one," the report said, "the origin of the solar marker is important to our interpretation of cultural development in Chaco Canyon."

The slabs make up the only known ancient device like this that uses the midday sun to create a calendar. Other stone observatories found in the Americas and elsewhere are keyed to sunrise or sunset, scientists say.

Sunlight shining through the slabs, each six feet to nine feet tall, strike two spiral patterns the Indians put on a nearby cliff face. These vertical light "daggers" mark times of the year on the spirals.

The new report says geological evidence in the area indicates the slabs were once a part of a large block that fractured off a nearby cliff.

Years of erosion and freeze-thaw cycles appear to have caused the block to slip away from the cliff, separate and come to rest as three near-vertical slabs, it said.

Other formations in the valley seem to have been caused by a similar action, the authors noted.

Zinc 'vital'

The mineral zinc is known to play a vital role in health, including protection against infection. Trace amounts are needed to assure normal health and development. Meat, liver, eggs, poultry and seafood are the richest sources of zinc.

Peace will restore normalcy to war-weary Israel

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Lebanese war, Israel's seventh major military campaign in 34 years, brings it to another crossroads in its struggle with the Arabs. This article, the first of a three-part series, examines Israel's mood and options in the search for peace.

By CHARLES J. HANLEY

JERUSALEM (AP) — "Behold I have set the land before you; go in and take possession of the land which the Lord swore to your fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give to them and to their descendants after them." Deuteronomy 1:8.

One hundred generations after this injunction to Moses, the fathers and sons of Israel are still fighting for the land.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin says that as a result of the war in Lebanon and the Palestine Liberation Organization pullout from Beirut, "there is reason to expect that we are facing a historic period of peace."

The combative Israeli leader has strong popular support, opinion polls show. But many Israelis — from the academic halls of cream-hued Jerusalem, to Tel Aviv's kosher cafes, to sandbagged positions outside Beirut — are not so sure-handed in their own prophesying.

"OK, WE took out the terrorists. But now I don't know what we're doing here," a 19-year-old artilleryman, haggard and irritable, told a reporter in the Lebanese capital. It was a typical comment among Israeli soldiers who are unclear about the hazy objectives of the Lebanon campaign.

The war has been Israel's most divisive.

At its height, as many as 100,000 Israelis gathered in a Tel Aviv plaza to protest it. Army reservists returning from Lebanon duty publicly expressed misgivings. Former Foreign Minister Abba Eban, of the opposition Labor Party, called it "a dark age in the moral history of the Jewish people." A colonel resigned from the army when it appeared he might have to lead a tank attack on west Beirut.

Many Israeli men in their 30s and 40s have now fought three wars against the Arabs. They are weary and ready to enjoy the fruits of the struggle — an Israel that is developing into a comfortable consumer society.

The dissenters remain a minority, however, and a confident-sounding Begin is laying out new tasks for his nation: Ridding Lebanon of remaining Palestinian and Syrian forces, establishing political stability there and then withdrawing the Israeli army.

But if a historic peace is to be achieved, it must be won chiefly in the stony hills and valleys north and south of this ancient holy city, the area called the West Bank of the Jordan River.

BEGIN AND other members of his Likud coalition government say they want to resume immediately the stalemated Israeli-Egyptian-U.S. negotiations over autonomy for the 1.3 million Palestinian Arabs who live in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, both territories seized by Israel in the 1967 Six-Day War.

Even anti-Likud Israelis say they hope new "moderate" Palestinians will come forward in the West Bank to take part in the autonomy talks, now that the PLO has been battered and driven from Beirut.

But this new Palestinian element has not yet emerged, and the Begin government instead has begun talks with leaders of the "village leagues," a rural-based, Israeli-financed Palestinian group denounced as collaborationist by Palestinian nationalists in the West Bank.

What Begin favors is a limited autonomy plan that would give the Arabs control of social, educational and municipal functions, but retain an Israeli hold on the land itself. This is supposed to permit the continuation of a settlements program under which 25,000 Israelis have already put down roots in 63 West Bank settlements, and an additional 75,000 are projected to do so in the next five years.

Under the Camp David agreements, after a five-year period of autonomy, new negotiations are to open on the final status of the territories. The Begin government says Israel will assert its claim of sovereignty over the them at that time.

The prime minister and the Israelis who are moving into the West Bank, many of them deeply religious, contend they are reclaiming land — Judea and Samaria — granted to them by God millennia ago.

"THERE ARE strong voices in the government that want to interpret the Lebanon victory as a license to continue the de facto annexation of the West Bank and Gaza...No self-respecting Palestinian can accept that," said Shlomo Avineri, a Hebrew University political science professor who served as Foreign Ministry director-general in the last Labor government.

The Palestinian nationalists demand an independent West Bank-Gaza state, something the Begin government — and most Israelis — say they will never allow. And the Palestinians demand first an end to Israel's military occupation of the territories.

"I cannot negotiate with a gun at my head," Ibrahim Tawil, former mayor of the West Bank town of El Bireh, told a reporter.

Tawil, a soft-spoken, U.S.-educated pharmacist, was dismissed by the Israelis last spring in a crackdown on Palestinian nationalists in the occupied territories. He sounds despairing about the chances for accord between Arab and Jew.

"They want to destroy the Palestinians for another 50 years," he said. "But what will happen after 50 years? Do you think I will forget my land, that my son will forget my land?"

For the PLO, the issue is not only the hundreds of thousands of Palestinians living under occupation in the territories, but about 1 million refugees in camps in Lebanon, Syria, Jordan and elsewhere, most of them members of Arab families that fled Palestine when the Jewish state was formed in 1948.

THE PLO charter calls for the return of these people to old Palestine, and the dismantling of the Jewish state.

The Begin government increasingly focuses on Jordan as "the Palestinian homeland."

"We are not dealing with a homeless people that needs a homeland of its own," Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir declared as the PLO's guerrillas were scattered from Beirut to a half-dozen Arab lands.

Sixty percent of Jordan's population is Palestinian, mostly as a result of the 1948 exodus. But King Hussein is resisting this effort to transform his kingdom into a Palestinian state, and the United States supports him.

The Labor Party also focuses on Jordan, but in a different way. It proposes eventual return of a large chunk of the West Bank to Jordan, which controlled it for 19 years before 1967, in return for stringent security guarantees for Israel.

But the Labor Party is weak and disorganized in the aftermath of the stunning Israeli strike into Lebanon, and popular support for Begin's Likud has soared. One poll indicates it would win 66 seats in the 120-member Parliament if an election were held now — a powerful showing.

IN RECENT years the Israeli public has been evenly split on whether to make concessions on the West Bank. Only a minority believes the land is rightfully Israel's, but a large majority wants it kept under close control so that a Palestinian enclave there will not threaten Israel's security.

One of Israel's most active "peaceniks" sounds pessimistic.

Education Professor Janet Aviad, a leader of the Peace Now movement, said in an interview she sees neither a new, conciliatory Palestinian force on the horizon, nor a softening in the Israeli position.

"We're in for an extended fight over the West Bank," she said.

Even after Lebanon, the chemistry is still explosive:

—Driven from Beirut, the PLO has vowed to concentrate a new underground war in the West Bank and Gaza.

—Israel's own Arab population — about 700,000 of the 4 million Israelis — has grown more restive. Police arrested three dozen Israeli Arabs after a series of sometimes violent anti-war protests in the northern region of Galilee. Road signs were painted over with "Long Live the PLO."

—JEWISH SETTLERS in the West Bank have themselves become more militant. Some radicals threaten a rebellion if the government orders them out of this land they treasure as the heart of biblical Israel.

Begin sounds adamant on the question of the occupied territories. But this 69-year-old Polish-born lawyer and onetime guerrilla fighter is a master of surprise.

Begin's annexation of East Jerusalem in 1980, his bombing of Iraq's nuclear complex and annexation of the Golan Heights in 1981, and his devastating thrust to Beirut this year — all unexpectedly upset the Middle East game board. But he also surprised many by accepting a peace with Egypt that necessitated a huge Israeli concession — the return of the Sinai peninsula.

For the ordinary Israeli, peace could be a godsend. It could lighten the economic weight of a defense budget that eats up one-seventh of his tiny country's wealth, and thereby restore some balance to a runaway economy.

It could also restore some normalcy to a society geared to war for two generations, a society whose conflict with its neighbors has made it a troubled, introspective outcast in its own corner of the world.

Martha Griffiths: Tough as alligator skin

ROMEO, Mich. (AP) — Martha Griffiths, who fought for women's rights during 20 years in Congress, is back in politics at the age of 70 — but those who know her say she had never really retired.

"I reached out for a star and I got a whole galaxy," said gubernatorial candidate James Blanchard as he introduced Mrs. Griffiths as his lieutenant governor running mate to thunderous applause at the state Democratic convention.

Mrs. Griffiths says Blanchard, who went to the U.S. House in 1974, the year she left it, "has voted for the rights of women and he's running against a man who thinks they have no rights."

But then she adds, "He told me he needed me, and I am a woman, and I like to be needed."

Described by other Michigan politicians as "tough as alligator skin" with a "steel-trap mind," Mrs. Griffiths has hardly slowed down, much less retired, in the past two decades, says her husband and law partner.

"She's so tough, I can't keep up with her," said Hicks Griffiths, 73.

Mrs. Griffiths was the original sponsor in Congress of the Equal Rights Amendment and lost the biggest battle of her career in June when it died, three states shy of ratification.

It was that issue, Mrs. Griffiths said, that helped her decide "I had at least one more fight in me" when Blanchard came calling.

Richard Headlee, the suburban Detroit businessman who is the Republican nominee for governor, and his running mate, Thomas Brennan of Lansing, both opposed the ERA.

Gov. William Milliken, a Republican who differs with Headlee on ERA, called Mrs. Griffiths "an eminently qualified candidate" who could lure "a large group" of women voters.

Mrs. Griffiths was born in Pierce City, Mo., and got a law degree from the University of Michigan in 1941.

Six years later, with the state Democratic party in shambles, she and Griffiths had 14 people over for dinner in the basement of their Detroit home.

The participants agreed to forge a new coalition of labor and liberals to back G. Mennen Williams for governor in 1948. Williams, now on the state Supreme Court, won the seat six times, and it was 1962 before Republicans recaptured the governor's office.

Mrs. Griffiths was elected to the state Legislature in 1949 and in 1952 was appointed the first woman judge of Detroit Recorder's Court.

In 1954, she was elected to Congress.

Fiercely independent and determined to remain "not beholden to anybody," she fought to win prosecution against sex discrimination in the landmark U.S. Civil Rights Act of 1964 and to improve Social Security benefits for women and children.

She retired from her safe seat because "she didn't want to die there, with her boots on," Griffiths said, and has since served on hospital, college and business boards, including that of Chrysler Corp.

While taking a "pro-choice" position on the right of women to abortion, Mrs. Griffiths managed the unsuccessful campaign of a Roman Catholic nun for her old congressional seat in the Aug. 10 primary.

Mrs. Griffiths admits having followed state issues "only in a general sort of fashion" in recent years but has no qualms about the largely ceremonial duties of the lieutenant governor.

Door from China isn't allowed to be opened very wide

PEKING (AP) — The defection of a Chinese tennis star in the United States highlights a dilemma of the government's new open-door policy as more Chinese travel abroad.

Hu Na, 19, defected late in July during a Federation Cup match in San Francisco. China has demanded her return.

China is worried that if the United States grants Miss Hu's application for political asylum, other defections by prominent persons will follow.

U.S. law permits political asylum to people who prove that a return home would result in persecution.

A ruling in Miss Hu's favor would be politically embarrassing to the communist government at a time when it is hailing its new freedoms and "socialist democracy." It would be costly in terms of a potential brain drain at a time when China desperately needs all its professionals and personalities for modernization of the nation.

Little is known about 19-year-old Miss Hu. Taiwan tennis players, however, have been quoted as saying she was accused in China of adopting Western ways and wearing her hair loose when she returned from other Western tours.

That doesn't constitute real political persecution, according to various foreign diplomatic analysts here. She is not known to be a political dissident or even to be involved in politics, and she actually is one of the elite of Chinese society.

"She is treated better than most people in China," said one diplomat. "China's top leader, Deng Xiaoping, could make a better case for getting asylum because he really was persecuted and purged three times." This occurred during the time of Chairman Mao Tse-tung and his 1966-76 Cultural Revolution.

Chinese officials have declined to say what disciplinary action Miss Hu could face if she returned but have said privately they are concerned about the case and that she would not be persecuted.

Still, Miss Hu could be criticized by her colleagues, forced to write pages and pages of self-criticism, deprived of certain privileges and prevented from traveling abroad again.

Miss Hu was featured prominently in the June issue of China Sports Magazine which described her as a model of socialist dedication to athletics.

Foreigners who witnessed the return of the Chinese women's tennis team from the Federation Cup in Tokyo last year said all were stylishly dressed and coiffed. As they collected their luggage they shouted for their television sets and refrigerators, witnesses said.

China currently is warning against the "sugar-coated bullets" of the West. It is criticizing Western culture while craving Western technology and trying to separate the two.

It is not known how many Chinese have defected to the United States or sought political asylum. The statistics are not disclosed by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service as a rule.

The number, however, is believed to be very small, possibly fewer than a dozen in the last year. During that time a ballet dancer, a musician, a ship's officer and a physicist refused to return. A few defections abroad also were reported.

Miss Hu's defection comes at a time when China dramatically has increased its exchanges with foreign countries in an open-door policy, but the door is not open very wide.

About 7,000 to 8,000 Chinese students are in the United States, about half of all Chinese studying overseas. Sports, scientific, academic and other delegations flock to the United States. In the last six months 2,700 Chinese have visited the United States in official delegations, 55 percent more than during the same period last year.

The potential for cross-cultural benefits and defections is enormous.

Over the years thousands of Chinese have fled to Hong Kong but relatively few professional people have defected. The numbers are low because China only recently has opened the door, because it routinely lets spouses travel abroad and because it scrutinizes any request by an intellectual.

Intellectuals who were persecuted during the Cultural Revolution say they have a hard time getting passports apparently because authorities fear they won't want to return.

One intellectual in his 60s, persecuted for years, was told his wife could not join him overseas on a fellowship, although the sponsoring school would pay. He already had children abroad and the presence of his wife might make it easy for them to stay and seek asylum.

Many non-political Chinese are desparate to leave. Some men and women admit frankly they are out to marry foreigners so that they can leave.

In July, five Chinese men tried to hijack a airliner and passengers said they demanded to go to Taiwan.

Roofs replaced

Nearly 2 million Americans replaced their own roofs in 1981. A building products firm says that half the re-roofing jobs in the country were done by do-it-yourselfers.

Attorney's book recounts Hi-Fi Shop murders

SUN VALLEY, Idaho (AP) — In the seven years it took Gary Kinder to complete his first book, he courted poverty in this haven of the wealthy while his more prosperous friends acquired luxury cars.

But Kinder's long labor to produce a portrait of a Utah family scarred by torture and killing finally has ended with publication of "Victim: The Other Side of Murder."

At an end, too, is Kinder's life as an impoverished writer. The film rights alone went for six figures, although he won't name the numbers.

"For a long time people who knew me said I was taking too long to write this book," said Kinder, 35, who came here after graduation from a Florida law school. He worked nights as a busboy, bartender and bellman, anything to keep his days free to write.

"You have to understand that during that seven years I watched all of my friends become prosperous attorneys who literally were driving Mercedes' in downtown Miami," said Kinder, a Fort Lauderdale native. Still, he never seriously considered abandoning the book.

"A lot of the reason it took so long was that I was a novice," Kinder said. Another reason was a somewhat belated decision to focus his book on a survivor of the grisly Hi-Fi Shop murders rather than on the convicted killers.

Cortney Naisbitt was a 16-year-old high school sophomore in 1974 when he, his mother and three others were herded into the basement of the Hi-Fi Shop in Ogden, Utah, forced to drink a caustic drain cleaner and shot in the head.

Three of the victims — including Naisbitt's mother and an 18-year-old girl who was raped — died of their wounds.

One of the survivors had a ballpoint pen kicked in his ear as he played dead on the basement floor. The other, Naisbitt, hovered near death for months and had to have his ruined esophagus replaced with a section of his bowel.

Pierre Dale Selby and William Andrews, airmen at Hill Air Force Base, were convicted and sentenced to death but have received several stays of execution.

"Over the years I decided the real story was with the victims," said Kinder, who nevertheless exchanged more than 200 letters with Selby and interviewed him numerous times at Utah State Prison.

They had a falling out in 1980 when Kinder — who traveled twice to Selby's native Trinidad to research his background — refused to sign over 10 percent of the proceeds from the book.

But long before that, Dr. Byron H. Naisbitt, Cortney's father, had become upset at hearing Kinder was writing a book about Selby. He summoned the writer to a face-to-face meeting, where Kinder convinced him of the need for victims of crime to tell their story. The obstetrician finally consented.

"Any writer would assume the victims would not want to talk about it," Kinder said. But he hadn't reckoned on Dr. Naisbitt, who ultimately emerged as the book's central figure.

"He's a very charismatic man," Kinder said. "He is a hero. Intelligent people swore that he actually willed his son to live."

Folks mash potatoes to set record

GRAND FORKS, N.D. (AP) — One potato, two potato, three potato, four. Five potato, six potato — nine tons more.

The concoction required 3,755 pounds of flaked potatoes, 1,600 gallons of water, 100 pounds of butter and 25 pounds of parsley.

Staffers mixed the ingredients in a borrowed cement-mixing truck during the football game Saturday in which the University of North Dakota beat the University of Puget Sound.

After 1½ hours of churning, the results were emptied into a container 16 feet square.

KNOX program director John French said records of the event will be submitted to the Guinness Book of World Records, which now lists a 10,286-pound portion served up in Mantua, Ohio, as the pinnacle of mashed potatodom.

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Greg Hood always wanted to be rich and famous. He says he's accomplished half his goal.

Last football season, the 23-year-old Texas A&M student drew his three-foot-long sabre to chase away Southern Methodist University cheerleaders who stepped onto the football field after a Mustang touchdown. SMU went on to win the game 27-0.

At the time, Hood said he was simply enforcing an honored Aggie tradition — keeping everyone off Kyle Field except the teams, officials, band members and A&M's own yell leaders.

But Hood's well-photographed antics made newspapers from Texas to London and rated mentions by television entertainer Johnny Carson and radio commentator Paul Harvey.

"I always said I wanted fame and fortune, and now I've got the fame," he says.

Some questioned the wisdom of using the ceremonial sabre to threaten people, but most were overwhelmingly favorable, he says.

"One old Aggie mailed me a box of cigars and another guy bought me a case of Lone Star," Hood says. "I had some people come up to me, too, and say, 'My dad says if you ever need a job...."

Hood says that at times he gets a little tired of being introduced as "the guy who pulled the sabre," but he says he has few regrets about what he did.

"It was part of my duty as an officer of the day to get people off the field. I've always agreed that it wasn't the best judgment. There were a zillion better ways to do it."

University officials had five options in disciplining Hood — total expulsion, suspension, conditional probation and written or verbal reprimands.

The matter was not serious enough to warrant expulsion and a verbal reprimand would have taranished the Aggie reputation, Hood says. Probation would have amounted to little more than "a slap on the hand," he says.

Hood says he really didn't want to be suspended, but added "I was very pleased with how it worked out."

From his standpoint, Hood said, becoming a campus celebrity for waving a sword wasn't a bad deal.

Earl Anthony's kept himself far from life's gutters

WAUKEGAN, Ill. (AP) — In blue denim and pink polyester, skimpy hot pants and pastel penguin shirts, the faithful line up outside Bertrand Bowling Lanes, at one end of a huge parking lot.

It is 89 degrees and steamy, but the diehards are patient.

They have come to see greatness.

They have come to see Earl.

These bowlers know Earl Anthony as the Doomsday Stroking Machine. The world's greatest pro bowler, he got the name because he looks like he'll go on forever, stroking his 16-pound ball down lane after gleaming lane, in city after featureless city, rolling strike after perfect strike.

He is to bowlers what Jack Nicklaus is to golfers, what Jim Shoulders is to rodeo riders, what Walter Ray Williams Jr. is to horsehoe pitchers.

Watching Anthony bowl is like watching a man mow his lawn. Anthony thinks that's too kind. "It's more like watching the grass grow," he says.

But if each shot looks alike, that's bowling. Greatness is born of consistency.

IN THE 12 years since Anthony left his job in a warehouse to join the Professional Bowlers Association tour, he has won a record 39 championship titles and has rolled 24 perfect games. He has been inducted into the PBA Hall of Fame and has been four times singled out as Bowler of the Year.

In February, when Anthony won the PBA National Championship in Toledo, Ohio, the $38,000 prize made him the first pro bowler to top $1 million in earnings.

In navy pants, white bowling shoes and a light blue shirt with his name on the back, he's warming up as the fans swarm through the doors.

He is 6-foot-1, 197 pounds, with a helmet of reddish-brown hair pruned like the shrubbery at a rich man's estate — often and carefully. His blue eyes, behind wire-rimmed glasses, are fixed on the 10 pins before him.

He takes five strides, dropping his left arm on the third, drawing it back on the fourth, swinging it forward on the fifth.

With that fifth sliding step, he bends his right knee, angles his left foot behind him, sets the ball down with a gentle thud. It hums at an unremarkable 16 mph, 60 feet down the lane.

WHAT HAPPENS NEXT is what is supposed to happen, and what does happen most of the time: The ball hovers on the left side of the lane, then hooks sharply to the right 15 feet from the pins, hitting the triangle with a crack between the 1-pin and the 2-pin.

That sets off a precise chain reaction: the 1-pin hits the 3-pin, the 2 hits the 4, the 4 hits the 7. The ball knocks out the 5 and the 8. The 5 hits the 9, the 3 hits the 6, the 6 hits the 10, the electronic scorekeeper flashes an X, and the fans go berserk.

After a few frames, you know it by heart: wipe off the ball, dry off the hand, take the five steps, watch the pins fall.

Every three frames or so, he hitches his pants up. About every five, he lights another Winston. Once, after nine consecutive strikes, he smiled.

This is what Anthony does, in Cleveland and Cheektowaga, Buffalo and Battle Creek. He does it when he feels like it, and when he does not (which is getting to be more and more of the time).

"It's not something you do because you enjoy it. It's a job, it's going to work," Anthony says. "My life story would not be a best-seller."

He's probably wrong. About 70 million Americans bowl — 21 million of them at least once a month. It's the world's largest participation sport.

THE PRO BOWLERS tour, in its 20th year on ABC, consistently leads the ratings for its time slot, surpassing even the Masters golf tournament.

Still, bowling is ever-mindful of its second-class status in professional sports, which lingers despite automatic pin-setters and sophisticated lane maintenance techniques that have brought new integrity to the game.

Johnny Carson pokes fun at it, marketing experts perceive it as blue collar, and corporations that sink big bucks into pro golf and tennis shun it.

Golf tournaments have sponsors like Manufacturers Hanover and Kemper Insurance; bowling tournaments have Rolaids and True Value Hardware. Golf has the Bob Hope Desert Classic, bowling the U.S. Polychemical Open.

The dearth of big-name sponsors is why it has taken Earl Anthony 12 years to earn what top golfers can earn in three. The campaign to snare them is why pro bowling has no room for bad boys.

"If John McEnroe were a bowler," Anthony says, "he would have been gone a long time ago."

By the PBA's rules, pro bowlers must tuck in their shirttails and polish their shoes. They cannot drink beer or wear jeans on camera. Moustaches cannot extend below lower lips, and beards are prohibited.

No throwing balls or tantrums, either. Marshall Holman once kicked a foul light, broke it and was suspended from the next 10 tournaments.

ANTHONY ONCE dropped his ball in a chair and was fined $10. That and a few speeding tickets are the extent of his misconduct record.

The PBA also has a rule about how pro bowlers should talk to reporters: "Avoid being negative in your responses."

What does Anthony think about the disparity in pay between pro golf and pro bowling? "I think I am paid very well for what I do."

What about bowling's economy-class image? "It obviously has not kept pace with advances in the sport."

As anyone who knows him will tell you, Anthony follows the rules.

"We've always had to be the Boy Scouts of sports," says Carmen Salvino, at 48 the tour's oldest bowler. "That's why I thank God Earl Anthony is out there."

In a sport full of Boy Scouts, Anthony is an Eagle Scout.

He is not a man of extremes; he files his likes and dislikes into two categories — things he enjoys and things he does not enjoy.

Anthony enjoys: playing golf with his wife, reading Westerns and winning. "If I played you a game of checkers, I'd try to beat you," he says.

ANTHONY DOES NOT enjoy: traveling, motels and losing. "I have always wanted to be the best," he says.

Friends say he has loosened up since he first joined the tour, when he parked his motor home at the bowling centers and said little to anyone.

Now he chats with other pros, hooks a fatherly arm around the struggling ones and parks at campgrounds, though he still doesn't sightsee. "I know where the bowling centers are and that's it," he says.

Time joins PAC game

WASHINGTON (AP) — Among the interests that have dipped an oar in the political stream by creating political action committees — the stevedores, the peanut butter makers, the asbestos workers and the chiropractors — is one of the nation's news giants.

Through its political action committee, Time, Inc., has given $24,200 to 57 Democratic members of Congress and $12,850 to 30 Republicans since 1981.

They range from conservative Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, to liberal Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., and include House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., House Republican Leader Robert Michel, Ill., the Democratic and Republican whips and key members of committees whose decisions could affect the fortunes of Time, Inc.

Political action committees, created by donations from business employees and members of unions or special interest groups, exist to funnel contributions to political candidates.

The top seven Democrats and the top four Republicans on the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee are recipients of Time, Inc., PAC money.

So are the chairmen of the Appropriations, Banking, Budget, Commerce, Government Operations, Interior and Judiciary committees of the House.

Sens. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, and Richard Lugar, R-Ind., are the biggest beneficiaries. Each got $2,000.

The beneficiaries of Time's PAC are all incumbents, and most are members of the committees that deal with tax, finance, business, antitrust and postal matters.

Of the 30 senators who are candidates for re-election, 14 got donations from Time's PAC.

Louis Slovinsky, director of public affairs for the firm, said Time has a political action committee for the same reasons any other corporation with annual revenues of $3.3 billion would have one.

"We are a business, and we are affected by legislation and by a lot of the things that affect all businesses," he said, noting that about a third of the firm's revenue comes from non-media enterprises, including a forest-products subsidiary.

Slovinsky said special efforts are made — under what Time, Inc. calls its "separation of church and state doctrine" — to make a sharp distinction between corporate and editorial actions, with each made independently.

"I will lay you odds that 95 percent of our editorial people don't know that Time has a PAC," he said.

Indeed, Jason McManus, an executive editor of Time magazine, said he had been unaware of that "fairly amazing fact."

He saw no problem from the viewpoint of compromising the magazine's objectivity.

Economy leaves education hurting

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Nearly 44 million students start back to a leaner and hungrier school year this month, heading generally for larger classes taught by fewer teachers with older books in shabbier buildings.

Education associations estimate that up to 55,500 teachers could lose their jobs this fall, mainly in the Northeast and Midwest. Federal budget cuts and the sagging economy have finally reached the classrooms.

The "baby bust" of a school-age population that has been in decline since 1971 was expected to ease the schools' financial burden, but it hasn't worked out that way. Educators see the second wave, the children of the post-World War II baby boom generation, coming and are reluctant to close schools they believe they will need again in five or six years. Meanwhile, they cannot afford to keep everything going.

WIDESPREAD UNEMPLOYMENT means lower tax income for state and local governments, at the same time that President Reagan's first-year budget cuts are now reaching the schools. "The school districts are using reduction of school employees to balance their budgets," said Gary D. Watts, chief organizer and director of affiliate services at the National Education Association.

He said NEA expects that 50,000 teachers may be laid off this fall, while the American Federation of Teachers put the figure at 55,500. AFT research director Jim Ward said that is "a judgmental figure" based on a survey of all AFT locals, adding that the pinch would be worst in New Jersey, Michigan, Massachusetts and other northeastern and midwestern industrial states. Sun Belt or energy-rich states can expect to hire more teachers for rising student enrollments, he said, but the net effect is downward.

Although federal funding accounts for only 8 percent of school spending nationwide, it is the specialty 8 percent: math and reading booster courses for disadvantaged children, supplementary money for library books, school lunches and for teaching handicapped youngsters, aid in desegregating and in vocational education, help for schools near large federal and military installations that pay no property taxes. All these programs have been slashed an average of 20 percent from last year's levels.

States with income tax rates pegged to the federal rate saw their incomes drop with last year's tax cuts. In addition, states where industrial unemployment is highest have chopped their overall budgets, with education among the hardest-hit areas.

"Overall, the kids can expect to see fewer options," said August W. Steinhilber, associate executive director of the National School Boards Association. Districts first defer buying new text and library books, he said, and make do with older microscopes and other laboratory equipment.

THEN THEY DEFER maintenance on their buildings and cut back custodial care, and finally they go after extracurricular activities, especially junior high school sports and after-school clubs and socializing.

"Kids will probably have fewer evening programs and will pay more for their lunches. There'll be fewer teachers, fewer administrators, fewer specialists, especially in science and math," Steinhilber said, because businesses and universities are willing to pay more for experts than the high schools can offer.

This comes at a time when business and industry are urging schools to put more emphasis on scientific and technical education, he noted.

Cuts in the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act and in technical training programs will be deeply felt in poor areas, with ominous social consequences, educators agree. Most school security officers were paid under CETA, and their departure has "very scary implications" in urban ghetto schools, said Ward of the AFT.

The AFT is running more workshops on teacher self-defense and legal rights, said spokesman Scott Widmeyer. Baltimore educators report a rising incidence of weapons found on students, while Miami officials recently held a series of meetings on the issue of violence in the schools after a teacher was killed. The United Federation of Teachers found that school crimes were down 22 percent in New York City last year, "but we're concerned whether that trend will continue with fewer school safety people," Widmeyer said.

Firmness can aid schooltime blues

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Youngsters across America are about to begin a major new adventure: going to school. Some of them aren't going to like it.

But a California pediatrician says a firm but positive parental attitude can lighten the trauma of that first venture out of the nest and return lifelong benefits.

Starting school "is a very special benchmark and that's why it's so important...to be very positive about it and to point out that it's part of growing up," said Dr. Martin Gershman of San Francisco. "If education is painful, the penalty is too great."

Gershman, of the California Medical Association's Committee on Maternal, Perinatal and Child Care, said many children are nervous about being away from their parents and fearful of the strange new world they are about to enter. And some parents foster such problems "because they themselves have fears of having their child leave them."

One thing that must be avoided, Gershman said in a telephone interview, is negotiating the issue of going to school. The child must know there is no choice.

"You don't say, 'Do you want to go to school, dear?' You tell the child, 'You are now old enough and you're going to school.' And you tell them, 'This is going to be a great experience. It's going to be fun and you'll meet lots of other children and you're going to love your teacher' and so on."

First-day scenes at kindergartens and first grades are commonly punctuated by frightened, screaming youngsters clinging to departing parents. Gershman advises a firm parental hand.

The child should be told, "I am going to leave you here but I will be back," Gershman said. Though tears may fall, he said, once the parent is gone children soon settle down, "make friends and, with a sympathetic teacher, they will make a rapid adjustment."

Such problems, he said, are diminishing, at least at public schools, since many mothers now work and start children early in day care centers and nursery schools. And "if they've got an older brother or sister in school they can hardly wait to go. They feel sort of left out."

Missiles big part of election

By ABNER KATZMAN

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — Dutch voters, faced with an ailing economy and a quandary over deployment of cruise missiles, choose among candidates from 20 parties today in a Parliamentary election to replace a shaky minority government.

The current, centrist, interim regime has been hobbled by its minority status since May, when a Labor Party walkout broke up a coalition that was only eight months old.

At stake Wednesday are all 150 Parliament seats.

Many of the 20 parties are small pressure groups or religious-based organizations with tiny consti-

An Analysis

The four effective vote-getters, now holding a total of 135 parliamentary seats, range across the political spectrum. Labor is on the left. Christian Democrats and the center-left Democrats '66 are in the center and form the current interim government. On the right is the conservative VVD party whose Dutch initials stand for People's Party for Freedom and Democracy.

Recent polls show the Christian Democrats and the Labor Party running nearly neck and neck. They also indicate that about 40 percent of eligible Dutch voters consider unemployment or maintenance of adequate social security as the major election issues, while 11 percent see deployment of the 48 cruise missiles as the top question.

The economy is reeling under a projected $12.2 billion budget deficit for this year coupled with a 12.6 percent unemployment rate.

But Christian Democratic Premier Andries van Agt said recently, "I think the problem of nuclear weapons will influence the outcome of the election to some degree."

"We think the major issue is the economy," added Christian Democratic spokesman Jan Willem Lohman. "But there's political dynamite lying there, called the cruise missile."

The cruise issue — which has aroused vocal and widespread opposition in several of the NATO nations scheduled to receive the missiles — has made a political minefield of the campaign trail and threatens any upcoming coalition government.

The Netherlands is one of the countries where the North Atlantic Treaty Organization wants to base U.S.-built nuclear cruise missiles targeted against the Warsaw Pact states. There is strong opposition here, as in the other European countries asked to accept the missiles starting around 1985.

Van Agt is considered by political observers to lean toward deployment. And he has stated he favors a government with his present coalition partner, the Democrats '66.

President Reagan presents the Medal of Freedom, the United States' highest civilian honor, to Ambassador Philip Habib, while Habib's wife Marjorie watches Tuesday in the East Room of the White House. The 62-year-old Brooklyn native was honored for his successful shuttle diplomacy in helping settle the Mideast crisis. Habib picked up some of his diplomatic ways from Henry Kissinger.

Habib honored for Mideast work

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — The Yiddish word is "Chutzpah."

Regardless of whether you think it means nerve, guts, daring or just plain boldness, almost everyone agrees that Philip Charles Habib has it, including President Ronald Reagan, who Tuesday gave Habib the "Medal of Freedom," the nation's highest civilian honor.

It's no accident, according to his friends, that this 62-year-old Brooklyn-born son of a Lebanese immigrant was successful despite the "staggering odds" cited by Reagan in negotiating an agreement between two of the most intractable of enemies: Israel and the PLO.

PHIL HABIB learned all about "chutzpah" long ago. He grew up as a Christian in a heavily Jewish neighborhood and earned pocket money, in fact the first money he ever earned, doing chores such as turning on the synagogue lights or buying groceries for Orthodox Jewish families on their Sabbath.

Henry Kissinger, who got to know Habib when he was a key member of the U.S. delegation to the Paris peace talks on Vietnam, describes him as someone who is "as far from the 'striped pants' image as it is possible to be: the antithesis of the stereotype" of a diplomat — "rough, blunt, direct."

Those same qualities have made Habib popular with newsmen even though he doesn't hesitate to insult them. Emerging from a particularly crucial negotiating session last month with Lebanese leaders, reporters and camera crews clustered around him as he left for an inkling of what was going on.

"Sorry boys," Habib said as the cameras started to roll, "this is a silent movie." Nor does Habib look like the public's image of a diplomat, even though he's been one since becoming a foreign service officer in 1949.

Indeed, the stocky, balding Habib seems to have more in common with actor Phil Silvers of TV's "Sgt. Bilko" series, who also grew up in Brooklyn a few blocks away. Like George Shultz and Caspar Weinberger, Habib was on the payroll of Bechtel Corp., where he still is a paid consultant.

BUT UNLIKE HIS cabinet superiors, Habib has never been accused by Israel of any pro-Arab tilt, a small miracle for someone who has travelled as much as Habib has in the Middle East. "It would have killed anyone else," said a close friend who wanted to remain anonymous.

Indeed, after accompanying Kissinger on most of the Middle East shuttles, the seemingly indefatigable Habib suffered a massive heart attack. There were warning signs. About a month before the attack, he collapsed at about two a.m. following almost 48 hours of continuous negotiations.

That occured during the final Kissinger shuttle that succeeded in obtaining a second troop disengagement pact between Egypt and Israel. There was panic in the hotel corridor when news spread of Habib's apparent stroke, later diagnosed as simple exhaustion.

He recovered but then suffered the major heart attack and two subsequent minor ones.

In 1976, Kissinger persuaded Habib to retire, which he did, but not for long. After a triple bypass operation and more heart surgery, he proclaimed himself as good as new. To prove it, he gave up his honorary "diplomat in residence" post at Stanford University and his beloved game of golf.

AT THE SUGGESTION of then-Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, Habib returned to Washington to help the Carter administration formulate policy toward Southeast Asia (where he had served in Vietnam and as ambassador to South Korea) and the Caribbean.

He began gingerly enough, travelling over the Christmas holidays to the Caribbean on what reporters joked was a junket paid for by the taxpayers. But Habib returned with the first Caribbean policy that made sense, indeed the roots of what was to become a hardline stand against Cuban "adventurism."

After Carter lost the 1980 election, Habib went back to California and golf. But it wasn't long before Ronald Reagan discovered this pearl in the rough. Reagan called on Habib in June 1981 to return to Lebanon to try to head off a potential war between Syria and Israel.

He negotiated a cease-fire that lasted for 11 months. When, almost exactly a year later, Israel invaded Lebanon (on June 6, 1982), Reagan sent Habib back with instructions to end the fighting any way he knew how. For Habib that meant setting up shop two blocks from the Israeli shelling of west Beirut.

Refining the shuttle diplomacy he learned under Kissinger, Habib went back and forth among Lebanese Christian, Lebanese Moslem and Israeli negotiators and among Israel, Lebanon, Syria and Saudi Arabia until he had persevered almost as long as the Israelis themselves.

PERHAPS MORE THE diplomat than he ever let on, Habib was careful never to fly over disputed Israeli territory, which often meant changing planes two or three times a day or travelling by road across hot, muggy highways.

And like the Israelis, he won — achieving an agreement for the departure of 8,475 members of the PLO and another 5,200 Syrians and uniformed members of the Palestine Liberation army. It's unlikely that even with the nation's highest award, Phil Habib now will quit.

Only hours before Reagan presented him with the coveted medal, this question was asked at the noon State Department briefing: "Is it true that Phil Habib is returning to Lebanon on September 23rd to try to work out an Israeli and Syrian withdrawal?"

The spokesman said he couldn't answer that question before Habib has had a chance to talk to the president and secretary of state. Habib might find the going a lot rougher now that Israel seems to be digging in its heels against Reagan's controversial Middle East peace plan.

Helmut Schmidt resumes smoking habit

BONN, West Germany (DPA) — Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who quit smoking after receiving a heart pacemaker in surgery last year, has resumed the habit in the midst of the Bonn coalition's current troubles, a government spokesman said here Tuesday.

"He has been smoking again for a couple of weeks now," spokesman Klaus Boelling said. "But it's just a few cigarettes a day."

Ugandan rebel deserters being held by authorities

KAMPALA, Uganda (DPA) — Ugandan authorities are holding more than 100 rebels who are said to have deserted their camps in the countryside west of Kampala following a new offensive by government troops over the past week.

The rebels were paraded before journalists Tuesday in front of the Kampala offices of Vice President and Defense Minister Paulo Muwanga.

Also displayed were ammunition, uniforms belonging to Uganda's paramilitary special forces and the Uganda police, as well as a number of documents, including group photographs said to have been taken at various rebel training camps.

Most of the rebels were said to have been from the "Uganda Freedom Movement" led by former Internal Affairs Minister Andrew Lutakome Kayira.

"The backbone of Kayira has been broken," Muwanga said at a news conference Tuesday. He said that rebel activities would be wiped out from the countryside within the next few months, "if not weeks."

Wounded in Bulgaria

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

SOFIA, Bulgaria (DPA) — Twenty-five wounded Palestine Liberation Organization fighters arrived in the Bulgarian capital of Sofia Tuesday for medical treatment, the official news agency BTA reported.

The men were flown in by a special aircraft from Athens, Greece, where they arrived by ship from Beirut, Lebanon, last week.

BTA said the Palestinians were being treated under an agreement between the Bulgarian Red Cross and the equivalent Palestinian organization.

The men who arrived Tuesday were the first group. More PLO fighters are due soon, the Bulgarian agency said.

Teachers in four states remain off jobs

By The Associated Press

A new wave of teacher strikes hit Pennsylvania and Michigan, canceling the first day of school for thousands of children, but 200,000 students in Detroit were told to report today after teachers agreed to start work while contract talks continued.

In all, about 10,000 teachers in four states were off the job Tuesday, extending summer vacation for more than 150,000 students.

Teachers walked out Tuesday in seven Michigan districts and remained on strike in four more. About 48,000 students were idled as nearly 4,000 teachers stayed off the job.

In Pennsylvania, teachers in five districts walked off the job, joining their striking counterparts in nine other districts. Almost 3,000 teachers around the state are on strike, affecting about 58,000 students.

About 2,900 teachers remained off the job in Illinois, idling about 49,000 students in six districts.

In the northeastern Ohio district of North Olmstead, 270 teachers were to vote today on a contract offer to end a strike which began Sept. 1. Schools for 5,600 students have been kept open with substitutes, non-striking teachers and administrators.

Most of the strikes involve salaries, with many teachers threatened by pay cuts because of high unemployment and federal cutbacks which have squeezed school budgets.

Detroit teachers rejected a strike proposal and agreed Tuesday to a three-day grace period after Detroit Federation of Teachers president John Elliot said talks were progressing. But Superintendent Arthur Jefferson said he wasn't optimistic a settlement could be reached by Friday.

"We work for three days," warned Elliot as he spoke to about 7,000 federation members in Cobo Arena. "If we don't work anything out, then we're out...come Monday we'll be on strike."

Detroit's 11,000 teachers currently earn from $15,000 to $30,000. The school board is asking for an 8 percent pay cut, which would roll back salary levels to the 1980-81 school year.

Elsewhere in Michigan, teachers walked out Tuesday in Kalamazoo and the suburban communities of Troy, Traverse City, Southfield, Waterford, Ferndale, and Suttons Bay. Strikes continued in four more districts.

Pennsylvania's largest new strike came in Bucks County north of Philadelphia, where about 630 teachers walked out after what union spokesman David Horn labeled a "worthless" bargaining session Monday. School board president Charles McHenry said he would try to open classes anyway today, but said the 10,000 students would be dismissed early.

About 154 teachers also walked out Tuesday in Pennsylvania's Greater Nanticoke district. The strike was the first in its history and both sides predicted a lengthy walkout.

In Illinois, about 100 parents — many with their children — marched outside administration offices of District 15 in the northwest Chicago suburbs, where a strike by 550 teachers has kept 10,500 students out of school since Aug. 30.

"My feeling is that District 15 has good teachers and we want to keep them," said one parent, Mary Allenspach. She blamed the school board for failing to resolve the strike, although negotiations with a federal mediator were continuing early today.

Talks were also scheduled Thursday for two other Illinois districts.

Principals now favor test coaching

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer

NEW YORK — For years, students wanting special help to boost their college admissions tests had two choices: Either spend hundreds of dollars for special coaching, or else buy dull test preparation books and spend tedious hours practicing, practicing, practicing.

But this fall, the National Association of Secondary Principals has gone on record favoring coaching for free in schools to students taking the much feared, multiple-choice Scholastic Aptitude Test.

At a news conference Tuesday in Washington, the Reston, Va.-based association representing 34,000 public and private school principals announced it will sell SAT preparation materials nationwide.

Student verbal and math workbooks will be sold to high schools for $5.50 each, teachers' manuals for $10, six videotapes for $725, and a three-disc computer program for $175, the association said.

Executive director Scott Thomson said the group thinks it's time public schools became actively involved in preparing students for the SATs. All students, not just the wealthy, should have access to SAT coaching, he said.

More than 2 million pupils take the SAT each year, but only an estimated 50,000 to 100,000 students take special coaching tgat costs from $100 to $400.

SAT coaching manuals being introduced in bookstores this fall are written in light, sometimes even humorous language.

Palmer denies he's mobbed by women

NEW YORK (AP) — Baltimore Orioles pitcher Jim Palmer denies a publicity release's statement that he's been mobbed by women since he agreed to pose in snug-fitting briefs for underwear ads.

However, he concedes that the modeling job has given him "a certain amount of visibility."

"I don't get mobbed by women. Sometimes they are playfully exuberant, but they're always under control," Palmer said with a smile during an interview Tuesday.

"When people see you in your underwear, they think they're familiar with you," said Palmer, the 36-year-old father of two teen-age daughters.

Palmer, who has won 11 consecutive games for his American League baseball team, said, "I look at those ads very impersonally. When I thumb through a magazine and there I am, it's like seeing somebody else."

Palmer said he looks at the ads he's done for the last three years for Jockey International underwear "as a business," and adds he doesn't feel comfortable as a sex symbol.

Kean

LIVINGSTON, N.J. (AP) — After having spent most of the last 22 days in traction in his hospital room for treatment of lower back pains, Gov. Thomas H. Kean says he's "delighted" to be home.

"It's been frustrating," Kean said from his home here.

Kean, 47, walked out of St. Barnabas Hospital with the assistance of a cane Tuesday afternoon.

The first-year Republican governor said he was told by doctors to rest at home indefinitely. It was feared that he may have to undergo surgery for a disc problem in his lower back.

Kean, who held bill signing ceremonies and kept up with correspondence while in the hospital, said he did not know when he could return to his office in the capital, Trenton.

Fleisher

BALTIMORE (AP) — Pianist Leon Fleisher, his crippled right hand restored after 17 years by an operation and physical therapy, plans to give a comeback concert at the opening of the city's new symphony hall.

Fleisher, 54, who made his Carnegie Hall debut at age 16, will use both hands in public for the first time since 1965 at the Sept. 16 opening of the $22 million Joseph Meyerhoff Symphony Hall.

"I'm looking forward to it with great pleasure," said Fleisher, 54.

The pianist's right hand began cramping and curling as he played long pieces in 1964, forcing him to pause and rest. The condition gradually worsened until he was no longer able to play with both hands, and some composers wrote one-handed pieces for him.

But after an operation in January 1981, Fleisher again was able to use his fingers to clench objects. And since then, physical therapy has given him back the ability to perform.

Andrews

CHICAGO (AP) — Still hospitalized nine days after she suffered a heart seizure, singer Maxene Andrews has told her manager she plans to resume working when she is released. But she'll cut back her schedule.

Hospital officials said Miss Andrews remained in fair condition Tuesday at Northwestern Memorial Hospital.

Thatcher

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher says she's not opposed to divorce, even when there are young children, but she is alarmed at the increase in illegitimate births.

In an interview published Tuesday in the weekly magazine Woman, Britain's first woman prime minister said she disagreed with those who say there should never be divorce when a couple has young childern.

"I know many families where, frankly, it (divorce) was better for the children. So I am not 'anti' in that sense," she said.

"Sometimes incompatibility is so great that there would be no life at all for them (the children) to come home to. You can never quite know what goes on behind someone else's front door, and cannot set out to judge."

NEW YORK (AP) — If Tom Snyder hopes to re-establish his news credentials, it doesn't look as if he's come to the right place.

Snyder, a former NBC newsman and host for eight years on the late-night "Tomorrow" show, began his tenure Tuesday night as sole anchor on New York television station WABC's 11 p.m. newscast.

However, "Eyewitness News" degenerated into a series of cheap jokes, guffaws and some local news stories Tuesday night. National and international news was virtually ignored.

Gaynor to remain hospitalized

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Actress Janet Gaynor was "awake and alert" but still in critical condition after an accident that seriously injured stage star Mary Martin and killed Miss Martin's manager.

Fans and celebrities jammed the switchboards of San Francisco General Hospital on Tuesday as doctors announced Miss Gaynor will be hospitalized for four to six weeks.

Miss Gaynor, the first actress to win an Academy Award, suffered a torn bladder and fractures of her collar bone, pelvis and 11 ribs on Sunday night, when a van collided with a cab carrying the stars.

Lewis said Miss Gaynor may require additional surgery but Miss Martin and Gregory would not. He said Miss Martin was in serious condition and would be in the hospital for about two weeks. Gregory was expected to leave the intensive care unit today, he said.

A hospital spokeswoman said the hospital received hundreds of phone calls and telegrams from stars and fans wishing the actresses well. Among the celebrities were Elizabeth Taylor, Mel Torme, Lena Horne, Katherine Crosby and Doris Hope, wife of comedian Bob Hope.

Cabbie Ronald Drury, 46, the van driver, Robert Cato, and Cato's passenger, John McCue, 30, were treated for minor injuries and released after the crash.

Cato, 36, was booked for investigation of manslaughter, felony drunken driving, reckless driving, speeding and running a red light. He will be arraigned Friday.

Last October, Cato was charged with trying to run down a motorist after arguing with her about her driving, according to the San Francisco Chronicle. The charge was dropped when Cato agreed to seek psychiatric help and perform 10 hours of community service work, the newspaper said.

The motorist, Mellicent Wauters of Tiburon, has filed suit against Cato, but Cato has filed a defense that argues Ms. Wauters caused the incident herself because "she willfully, maliciously, unlawfully and wrongfully used violent, obscene language and gestures," the newspaper said.
