Black and bewitching

Ready to play tricks if it doesn't get a treat in the form of a new owner is this 7-month-old male house cat. Solid black, the long-haired feline can be adopted for a fee at the Animal Control Shelter, 1601 Orchard Lane. For more information call 683-2028.

Product fears again cut way across U.S.

By ANDY O'CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

One million caramel apples were recalled in four states after a child found a stick pin in one of the treats, and a contaminated brownie prompted two New England states to halt the product's sale as new contamination fears threatened to steal Halloween 1982.

In Michigan, meanwhile, a processor recalled all Hygrade Ballpark Franks from five states after two consumers found razor blades in the frankfurters — an act by a "misguided employee" who has not been caught, officials said.

Thirty-six confirmed cases of food and drug tampering and hundreds of false alarms have been reported since the seven Tylenol killings a month ago in Chicago, raising new concern about the celebration that makes fun of fright.

"I'm afraid ... someone who read about the Tylenol put something in some candy and somebody will give it to a kid on Halloween and the kid will get sick," said Doreen Valley, who found a pill after eating half a brownie in New Hampshire.

More than 40 towns have banned Halloween, others have set limits on when kids can go door-to-door and Gov. William O'Neill of Connecticut canceled the traditional candy handout at the governor's mansion.

"It is sad that these cautions must be exercised to such an increased degree this year," O'Neill said, "but the safety of our young people comes first."

In Washington, Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, pledged that emergency legislation will be introduced next month, when Congress returns, to make it a federal crime to tamper with food, drugs or cosmetics.

The president of Carnival Products Inc. ordered the recall of more than one million of its caramel apples in the Dakotas, Minnesota and parts of Wisconsin after a child found the pin in it while eating the candied fruit. The youngster was not hurt.

"We just don't want anyone to get injured," said Leonard Brooks, the company's president.

The apple was bought at a Park River, N.D., supermarket by a man identified as Leland Thorstienson.

"The man who bought it brought it back," said James Mosolf, manager of the store, Leeves Super Valu. "He was furious. We didn't pull it out. We don't know how it got there. The police just took the apple."

Peggy Lawton Fudge Brownies were removed from store shelves and emptied out of vending machines in four New England states Friday because of a white Demerol pill that fell out of a brownie purchased Thursday by Mrs. Valley.

Mrs. Valley, 26, of Franklin, N.H., felt light-headed and went to a hospital, where she took medicine to make her vomit.

William Wolf, general manager of Peggy Lawton Kitchens Inc. of East Walpole, Mass., said the company believes the pill wasn't mixed in with the batter at the factory. But officials, distributors and store owners cleared the brownies from shelves and vending machines in New Hampshire, Connecticut and parts of Massachusetts and Maine.

In Sandwich, Mass., a couple from Merrimac, N.H., thought they found a white pill Friday in a Peggy Lawton brownie they were eating, police said, but it turned out to be a lump of flour.

"We've been baking the brownies for 34 years and now I guess we are victims of hysteria," said Lawton Wolf, owner of the East Walpole, Mass., bakery and William Wolf's father.

Lawton Wolf said his company would take back any products "our customers don't feel comfortable with," but said he thought the bakery goods were still safe.

Union City to stop 'two-timing'

By DEBORAH ZABARENKO
Associated Press Writer

UNION CITY, Ind. — It will be the best of times in Union City, Ind., and Union City, Ohio, where for six months each year one hour separates the twin farming communities.

From May to October, the 2,500 Ohio residents go on Eastern Daylight Time, or what locals call "fast time," while the 4,000 people in Indiana stay on Eastern Standard Time, or "slow time."

But Sunday, daylight-saving time ends, and both towns can synchronize watches, at least until spring.

The six-month time warp has created confusion in the two small towns, separated by Stateline Road, a two-lane blacktop bordered by shops, a bank and neat homes that quickly give way to farmland.

After making any appointment, the usual Union City question is, "Is that fast time or slow time?"

"As long as the time zone stays where it's at, we're probably going to have problems," said Mayor Bill Fulk, who when not administering city government, works as a milk hauler.

For Fulk, the problems start around 6 a.m. every morning when he picks up raw milk from Indiana dairy farms and trucks it across the border to an Ohio processing plant, where it's already 7 a.m.

"We're an hour late before we get started," Fulk said.

James Nelson, the mayor of Union City, Ohio, said he sometimes gets his times confused when he goes to Indiana for ceremonial functions. Ribbon-cuttings at Indiana factories often find him there an hour early, getting a complete tour of the new plant and looking irritatedly at his watch.

Most factories, including the local Westinghouse plant which manufactures small horsepower motors, solve the time problem by never changing their clocks. To correct for the time change in Ohio, they change the starting times for their shifts. A worker who starts his job at 3 o'clock during the summer comes to work at 4 o'clock in the winter.

The area's one hospital, Union City Memorial, stays on slow time year-round because it's in Indiana, but the ambulances, firefighters, police and coroners who work with hospital officials come from both sides of the border.

Some Indiana stores run on Ohio time to suit their eastern patrons, but Fulk said they could take advantage of the time difference by staying on Indiana slow time.

That way, when Ohio shops closed at 9 p.m. EDT, shoppers could move across the state line to shops that would stay open an extra hour, until 9 p.m. EST, an extra hour.

In the past, most Indiana merchants preferred fast time, but the sour economic climate persuaded more of them to stick to slow time this summer, Fulk said.

Kids under 16 can evade the official 11 p.m. curfew by slipping over the border during summer evenings, Fulk said. Ohio teens on fast time can party until 11 p.m., then move west to Indiana and stay out another hour.

"But they still have to get home to fast time," Fulk said.

Chamber of Commerce chief Benny Fuller, who serves both towns, sa;s he likes watching more late-night television in the summer on slow time because Union City receives mostly Ohio stations.

Spring forward, fall back

Most of the nation will "fall back" to standard time early Sunday and regain the hour in bed they "lost" last April when daylight-saving time went into effect.

Daylight-saving time comes to an end in most of the country at 2 a.m. Sunday. Clocks should be set back one hour.

Daylight-saving time was first used during World War I and again during World War II. Congress adopted it nationwide in 1966, with the exception of Alaska, Hawaii, and the portion of Indiana in the eastern time zone, which are always on standard time.

Man convicted of cruelty to animals in dogfighting case

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A Midland County Court-at-Law jury sitting in judgment on a pit bulldog case Friday convieted 23-year-old Willie Howard Whitmire of cruelty to animals, fined him $1,000 and gave him a one-year probated jail term.

Prosecutor Mark H. Dettman had sought jail time for the defendant but allowed that the jurors "are the ultimate determinators."

Whitmire is the first of eight defendants to be tried on the Class A misdemeanor charge of cruelty to animals, which carried a maximum one-year jail term and a $2,000 fine. Two of the eight co-defendants have jumped bail and are fugitives.

Whatever the outcome of subsequent trials, which are to begin Nov. 8, Dettman said the state has "no intentions of giving the dogs back" to their owners and will take legal action to find caring homes for them. The pit bulldogs were gathered up and carted to a veterinary hospital after a raid on the dog fight about midnight Aug. 29 southeast of Midland.

In closing arguments in the two-day trial, defense attorney Rusty Wall contended that the state did not prove its case. He said that Whitmire was at the site of the alleged dog fight but that his "mere presence alone" there did not make him guilty of the offense.

"I waited to hear clear, convincing evidence that the man (Whitmire) is guilty of the offense," Wall said, "and I never heard any."

He said that the "one small piece of evidence" — of Whitmire running when sheriff's deputies and Texas Department of Public Safety troopers converged on the dog fight — was only proof that he tried to evade peace officers and did not prove that he pitted dogs against each other.

The state's prime witness, Sheriff's Deputy B.J. McDaniel, testifed that he observed dogs barking and yelping, saw men lifting dogs in and out of a 16-foot plywood arena and spotted blood and cuts on some dogs. He said the dogs looked underfed.

However, another deputy, Mike Love, a 25-year veteran dog trainer, said the dogs were "fighting trim" and appeared well cared for and well fed. He said they did not seem to need medical attention, Wall noted.

The defense attorney also said the "state of Texas must meet its burden of proof rather than...arouse our emotions."

In response, Dettman said the dogfight case natually "arouses this type of emotion."

"It turns my stomach," he said of the sport, which he contended Whitmire engaged in "for sick satisfaction."

"It's a sick, sick sport," Dettman said. "We're going to give everyone of them (defendants) a chance to get what they deserve for this sick activity." He said the eight to 10 participants around the arena Aug. 29 were "laughing and shouting like this was a football game."

He referred to Wall's pointing out that none of the three state witnesses, including DPS Trooper Sue Rudie,

Congressional candidates a study in opposites

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

election 82

Opposites attract, the saying goes, and in the case of the 21st Congressional District nothing could be more true.

The 60-ish Charles S. Stough remembers the Depression and World War II; the mid-30ish Tom Loeffler has lived in a prospering country free of war with only the involvements coming in the Korean and Vietnam conflicts.

Stough, a Democrat, made the Army a career, retiring in 1963. Loeffler's life has centered on ranching at Hunt and politics in Washington, D.C.

Loeffler lives in the 21st District; Stough, by way of redistricting, was pushed over the line into the 23rd.

They agree on a need to beef up national defense, but they are strongly polarized on Reaganomics. And they both want to be the congressman from the 21st District.

1983 will mark the first year Midland will be encircled by the 21st District line. Until redistricting last year, the city had been represented by Democrat Kent Hance of Lubbock in the 19th District.

Loeffler, a Republican, is going for re-election to a third term. Stough, who has been campaigning on a low budget, said he joined the race "to give the people a choice."

Loeffler, the deputy minority whip in the House, contends that Reaganomics is working. Stough, however, claims that he hasn't seen anything "trickling down" to the average person.

"THE BANKRUPTCY rate continues. Unemployment rate has jumped," said Stough. "Prices haven't gone up on farm products. Reaganomics has worsened.

"I just don't think people can afford to wait. They're out of a job and when unemployment benefits run out, these people get desperate. Loeffler has bought the program and he thinks it will work."

Stough noted that Republicans in their campaigning "have made much of the inflation rate and interest rate reductions. In 1931, President Hoover had 0-rate inflation because everyone was unemployed. Last week, the stock

WEATHER SUMMARY

'Ghoulish' evening not in forecast

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport has conjured an ideal forecast for trick-or-treating tonight, although fair skies may allow moonbeams to spotlight the devilish activities of some tricksters.

Today should be fair and warm with a high in the upper 70s and southerly winds at 10-15 mph. Goblins will find tonight to their liking, with a low near 50 and winds from the south at 5-10 mph. Sunday's high should hover near 80, with southerly winds at 10-15 mph.

Friday's high, a seasonal 73 degrees, fell easily shy of the record 90 set in 1933.

Sunset tonight is at 7:01; sunrise Sunday, allowing for daylight saving time, is at 7:04 a.m.

actually saw any dogs fighting that night.

"I'm shocked that Mr. Wall would even question that there was a dog fight," Dettman said. "I don't think there's any question at all that there was a dog fight."

Dettman said people, including spectators, who encourage and promote dog fights are "just as guilty as anybody out there of cruelty to animals....It's not as if I happened to be at a 7-Eleven (store) when it got robbed."

He offered another analogy in referring to Whitmire's five-second dash after lawmen arrived at the pit site. Whitmire stopped running after Rudieordered him to halt.

"When a police patrolman arrives at a fire and someone starts to running, 'guess who's the arsonist?" Dettman asked.

"He (Whitmire) was there, and he was running because he knew what was going on out there...It's a planned-out sick, sick sport."

Bush evacuated following arrests

GARDEN CITY, Idaho (AP) — Two young men were arrested outside a restaurant here where Vice President George Bush was dining Friday night after Secret Service agents saw that one was carrying a shotgun. Bush was pushed under a table by his guards.

The weapon was empty and the two men appeared to be unaware that Bush was inside, said Secret Service spokesman Joseph Petro in Washington.

"At the moment, we are treating it as unrelated to the vice president," Petro said.

Bush was "evacuated from the restaurant as a precaution," he said.

You won't find a treat-hunting trickster under a mask like this. And neither is it "E.T." chasing a new supply of candy. What appears to be a space creature or some such goblin is actually a dwarf tape worm, shown at 240 times magnificaion by the scanning electron microscope at Battelle Memorial Institute in Columbus, Ohio. The openings in the "forehead" are not eyes; they are suction orifices for by which the intestinal creature attaches itself to the body. It's a close encounter most would rather avoid.

market had its biggest downturn in any one day since the 1930s."

The Democrat contended the rates may have dropped to give the Republicans an edge on election day and that the rates will jump up again soon afterward.

While the prime interest rate is down to 11½ and 12 percent, Stough said the average customer is still having to pay 14 to 16 percent on a loan. "It's not trickling down, to coin a phrase," he said in picking up one of Reagan's favorite economic philosophies.

A member of the House Appropriations Committee, Loeffler said the program for economic recovery that was pushed by the president and adopted by Congress "is the proper course to pursue. This program consists of reducing the growth of federal spending, lowering taxes, curbing regulatory intrusions and maintaining thepolicy of moderate to steady growth in the supply of money. It has begun to show dramatically piositive results."

HE CITED THE same inflation and interest rate statistics as Stough, adding that the inflation rate had been 12½ percent but has dipped to 5 percent today.

But the congressman views the declines as a positive, lasting note.

"I believe we're on the fringes of pulling out of the recession. We're establishing an economic base that is solid. There will be job opportunities in the private sector for each and every American who wants a job," Loeffler said in countering Stough's arguments.

Not only have interest and inflation rates dropped, but another good sign of a solid recovery — not a temporary Bandaid — is an increase in housing starts in September, said Loeffler, citing a jump of 14½ percentage points.

"Traditionally, the barometer indicating we're moving out of recession is when the housing industry begins to pick up again. High mortgage rates had peaked at 17½ percent and now they have dropped to 14½ percent. And for VA and FHA loans, it's 12½ percent. That's the lowest rate since August 1980."

LOEFFLER ACKNOWLEDGED the drop in prime interest rate is attributed to the Federal Reserve. But he doesn't believe the Fed will jerk the rate back up after the election. Instead, he said, "we need to maintain a steady growth in the supply of money available. We need to maintain a responsible amount of new money" but it doesn't mean overprint, causing inflation to jump up again.

Looking to the presidential election two years ago when the prime rate swooped downward just before the election and went jetting upward right after, Loeffler denied that the circumstances are similar.

"Two years ago, there was a constant running of the printing press. All we did then is fuel inflation and we got back into a horrible economic situation. That's why the stock market and Wall Street today have been so negative toward accelerated printing of money above the moderate rate of growth."

In Loeffler's view, an inflation rate of 5 percent is acceptable. "That is a range where the economy will continue to grow and people can move ahead," he explained.

Declining interest rates, coupled with a tax break that has been on the books for a year, should prove incentives for businesses to begin expanding, according to Loeffler.

BOTH MEN AGREE the country needs to build a stronger military posture and that some waste could be cut out of the Defense Department's budget. Loeffler pointed out that while Congress did increase the Defense budget, they cut the amount that had been requested.

"We looked at defense spending just as any other function of government and attempted to weed out the fraud and waste. The president had asked for a 10¼ percent increase and they got a 7 percent increase over the next five years."

That increase, he explained, is a "real" increase, or the amount above what had been figured in for inflation.

Loeffler also noted that he has been active in the area of energy. "Twenty-eight years of insane government policy has brought us to a position of vulnerability and continue to plague the viability of the free market system. A case in point is what has happened today with the price of natural gas. We could have had an adequate supply of gas and oil at adequate prices."

Instead, gas today flows out of state "because of inequities in the pricing system. The laws of supply and demand would supply energy at a fair price."

The 97th session of Congress was successful, in his opinion. "First, we achieved reduction in growth of federal spending for items that are controllable, then a reduction in taxes and a reduction in defense spending."

The entitlement programs, which include Social Security, will be tackled next. "Seventy percent of the federal budget is uncontrollable" and it's these programs which get an automatic cost of living increase. And once the problem with a dwindling Social Security fund is solved, the effects should ripple down into other entitlement programs, said Loeffler.

STOUGH DIDN'T discover he no longer lived in the 21st District until he was issued a new salmon-colored voter registration card. On his old one, used to file for the race, the 21st District is listed.

"They moved my house out of the district by 600 to 700 yards. I looked up the rules and regulations and there's nothing in the Constitution that requires me to live in that district.

"It's just not a significant matter at all," said Stough. "I don't think it worries the people in the district."

Loeffler didn't start his active campaigning until the last three months, and in that time he has visited all counties in the district.

Stough is campaigning "eyeball-to-eyeball. I've run some ads in small newspapers and some radio spots."

He contended that his money has come in small pieces from people while Loeffler's has come in large chunks from numerous political action committees.

"I've done what I can do, considering the resources available to me. I know I'm the underdog. At least I'm giving the people a choice."

Midland police investigating robbery of supermarket safe

Midland police are investigating Friday's mid-day aggravated robbery of an undetermined amount of cash from the Furr's Super Market safe at 2208 N. Big Spring St.

Witnesses to the robbery, which was reported at 12:12 p.m., told police an unidentified black male entered the store armed with a blue, semi-automatic pistol and demanded all the money inside the safe. Employees relinquished an unspecified amount of money and the man fled in what they described as a light-colored vehicle.

Witnesses told police the man was between 28 and 30 years old, about 6'2" and 170 pounds, with brown eyes and black hair. He was wearing a brown jacket with blue-and-gray plaid pants. A police report stated the weapon may have been a .380-caliber pistol.

The police report indicates the man may have been accompanied by an unidentified white male.

Police also are investigating the theft of a 1966, two-door Chevrolet valued at $900 from the driveway at 3217 Boyd

Lively reported the beige Bel Aire — license number BTV-153 — stolen at 8:18 a.m. Friday. He said the car had been locked and the keys were not in the ignition.

A police report indicates the car may have been taken between 11 p.m. Thursday and 7 a.m. Friday.

More than 2,800 persons cast absente ballots by closing

Absentee voting closed Friday after more than 400 persons swamped into the Midland County Elections Office, boosting the total absentee count to 2,802. The number also includes 14 mail-out ballots which must be returned to the office by 7 p.m. Tuesday.

Janeice Builta, elections administrator, said 469 persons voted Friday at the office which was moved recently to a new building at Washington, B, Pecos and Front streets.

This past week saw the bulk of the absentee voters coming into her office with a tally of 1,642 persons voting in the five days. As the week progressed, the voting got heavier.

On Monday, there were 216 voters recorded; on Tuesday, 247; Wednesday, 365; Thursday, 345; and Friday, 469.

"This has been heavier for this kind of election," said Ms. Builta, noting that non-presidential years usually see a light voter turnout.

"We've had a lot of senior citizens and handicapped people come in."

This is Ms. Builta's first year as elections administrator, and, so far, "I've enjoyed it. It's been interesting."

In following the election code that states no electioneering will be allowed in the office, Ms. Builta said she hasn't hada radio turned on because of the numerous political advertisements.

Animal control director issues warning about rabid skunks

Rabies tests on a skunk captured in southwest Midland earlier this week came back positive Friday, prompting the city's animal control director to warn parents not to let their children near the furry critters.

Dalton Byerly said animal control officials captured a skunk Wednesday after a man reported his 4-year-old son had been petting the animal. The boy was not bitten by the skunk, said Byerly, "but it certainly could have happened."

"That's the worst thing in the world to do, for children to pet skunks," he said.

As a precaution, because of the close contact involved, the skunk was shipped to Austin for rabies tests, he said. Rabies can be transmitted if a rabid animal's saliva contacts an open wound on a person.

Byerly said another rabid skunk was discovered in Midland about two months ago. He said wild skunks are wandering into populated areas with increasing frequency and are just the right animal to attract small children.

"They're not fearful of man at all," he said. "They're very cuddly and cute looking. They almost look like a cat."

He said the skunk population is increasing because the animal has only two natural enemies: the great horned owl and man. "And the great horned owl is becoming pretty scarce around here," Byerly said.

Skunks often exhibit abnormal behavior during mating season, which is occurring now and will run into December. For instance, he said, mating season often finds normally nocturnal skunks moving about during the day.

Collins' campaign rhetoric varies little

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Sticking to the same rhetoric he used almost a year ago in the early stages of his campaign, Jim Collins continued to berate U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen on the Windfall Profits Tax and other spending bills during a stopover Friday at Chaparral Aviation.

This time, however, he added a twist by bringing along Frank Naylor, undersecretary of the Department of Agriculture, who praised Collins and President Reagan. The race between Collins and Bentsen will be decided in Tuesday's general election.

Fighting to grab the senate seat which Bentsen, a Democrat, has held for two six-year terms, Collins reiterated his charges made here in February that the incumbent caused the Windfall Profits Tax to be increased by $50 million.

"When they called on Bentsen he said, 'I vote on increasing it $49 billion.' How could anyone from Texas want to add $49 billion. What we need in the Senate is not someone who would let President Carter or some other bureaucrat tell him what to do. The biggest weakness Lloyd Bentsen has is he's lost touch with Texas."

A reporter pointed out that the House — in which Collins has served for 16 years — had submitted a bill calling for $276 billion in revenues from the WPT while the Senate's version called for $177 billion. Bentsen had worked to get the compromise at $49 billion.

"The Democrats control the House," said the Republican of the Democratic majority. "We were outnumbered. The answer is to send more Republicans to the House. There are only 10 oil producing states. It is an uphill fight."

In his opinion, "Bentsen has forgotten the oil and gas industry in Texas," he said, adding that not all Democrats in the past have lost touch with Texas. "Sam Rayburn (former speaker of the House) did a great job when he was in."

Collins also contended that Bentsen is responsible for the 21½ percent interest rate that financial institutions were charging several months ago. Pointing out that Bentsen was on the Joint Economic Committee, Collins said, "When Bentsen got in, interest rates were 6½ percent. By the time Bentsen was through interest rates jumped to 21½ percent."

Naylor remarked that recent moves by President Reagan will help the American farmer and should bring some interest down for some of their programs. "We still face a difficult year."

After stating that Collins has worked with the Department of Agriculture, Naylor added: "I've been associated with four presidents in my career. This is the first president who said we won't use food as a weapon. Opportunities for Third World sales are improving."

Collins said the race with Bentsen is close and a strong turnout is needed in West Texas.

The rigors of the whistlestop campaign were evident, however, when in his opening remarks Collins said that Texas was the second largest agriculture producing state of the 58 states.

His wife, Dee, was sitting next to him and poked him, saying, "It's 50 states."

"What did I say — 48 states?" asked the candidate.

"No, 58," she replied.

"Are we planning on annexing some countries," a reporter asked rhetorically.

Strake tells Midlanders he's in lead

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Citing endorsements he has received from various newspapers around the state, including his hometown publication The Houston Chronicle, George Strake said Friday afternoon that the wind has changed and he is the leader in the lieutenant governor's race.

Strake, Republican candidate from Houston, is challenging incumbent Democrat Bill Hobby — also from Houston — for the second highest post in the state. He held a news conference at Midland Regional Airport as the Tuesday election date deadline loomed on the horizon.

"We're coming down to the final tally. I feel like in the last week the wind is turning and it's at my back," he said, explaining that the latest poll showed him almost neck-and-neck. Strake, 47, predicted he would win with 52 percent of the vote.

To support his theory, Strake said a radio station poll in Houston gave the Republican the lead with 55 percent of the vote while a San Antonio television station's poll showed him in the lead by a margin of 54-46.

He noted he had received the endorsement of former State Sen. Bill Moore, who has been in the state senate 32 years and worked with five lieutenant governors. As chairman of the Democrats and Independents, Moore reported that Hobby would receive the lowest rating of the five, Strake related.

Strake also recalled a flap that had occurred last week when Gov. Bill Clements reportedly didn't predict a win for him. That misunderstanding was cleared up with a news conference "at that little airport in Houston, I don't want to mention the name," Strake said of Hobby Airport.

Looking back to his first news conference in Midland when he announced his entry into the race, Strake said he has since traveled 356 days and 80,000 miles and gained a few more gray hairs.

Turning from his race, Strake said he believes "Texas is on the verge of a major breakthrough" of getting more Republicans elected to state offices. With 2½ million more people in Texas, he said, "We're on the verge of something that could be a major shift."

He pointed out that people in Texas are more willing to "look at the person rather than the party. You are a Democrat or a Republican in May (for the primary) but an American in November."

Joking, he quipped that people who normally vote Democrat but pull the level for a few Republicans won't mean that "Granddaddy will come back to get you."

Texas politicians begin final push for votes

By The Associated Press

Absentee voting ended Friday as Texas politicians began their final campaign drives for votes in Tuesday's general election.

"I still say positively that I will win with not less than 52 percent of the vote," Republican Gov. Bill Clements said in an Austin news conference launching a border-to-border campaign swing that will end Monday with appearances with Vice President George Bush in Dallas and Houston.

Mark White, Clements' Democratic challenger, answered with an Austin news conference in which 18 candidates for the state Senate and House supported White in his argument with Clements over utility rates.

"It is terrible for the governor of Texas to tell the people of Texas that Mark White can't do anything about the "pass-through" (of fuel cost increases) from the utility companies," said Rep. Doyle Willis, D-Fort Worth. "Doesn't the governor know the Legislature can do away with the pass-through by statute or do away with the whole (Public Utility) commission."

In a release from White's campaign office, Alan Erwin and Garrett Morris, former PUC members, said Clements was wrong in saying he could do nothing about the pass-through provision. "The fuel adjustment clause is a regulation of the commission, not a law," the two said. "It can be changed at any time by members of the Public Utility Commission.... Second, it is not true that eliminating the fuel adjustment clause would cause fuel bills to increase. Eliminating the automatic pass-through of costs would let the PUC examine fuel cost increases more closely and make the utilities negotiate for more competitive fuel prices."

Clements told the news conference his daily telephone polls, of 200 people, indicated the percentage of undecided voters had fallen in the past week from 30 percent to about 22 percent. He estimated the total turnout on Tuesday would be between 2.6 million and 2.8 million, compared to 2.3 million in 1978.

Clements said those on his three-pronged final campaign trip will include former Gov. Preston Smith; former Attorneys General Will Wilson and John Ben Shepperd; state Sen. Buster Brown, R-Lake Jackson; television star Amanda Blake; Oscar Moran, state director of the League of United Latin-American Citizens; golfer Byron Nelson; and past and present members of the Dallas Cowboys professional football team.

Bob Poteet, Citizens Party candidate for governor, issued a release opposing the scheduled execution of convicted killer Ronald Clark O'Bryan on Halloween. Friday afternoon the U.S. Supreme Court overruled Texas officials who asked that the Sunday execution be allowed. The case remains on appeal.

Bentsen employing some 'negative' campaign techniques

From Our Washington Bureau

By PHILLIP SWANN

WASHINGTON — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, is trying to prove that a little "negative" campaigning can be a plus in his race against Rep. James Collins, R-Dallas.

The conventional political wisdom says an incumbent stands behind his record and rarely even mentions his opponent's name. This is especially so if the incumbent holds a comfortable lead, as Bentsen does, according to most polls.

But the Bentsen troops have waged a massive frontal assault on Collins. The drive perhaps culminated this month when the senator issued a statement that said:

— Collins once passed out a copy of a John Birch Society magazine article that was critical of Bentsen. Therefore, the Dallas congressman might be a supporter of the society's extremist views, including the theory that Communists are running the world.

"Strangely...Mr. Collins has never repudiated the society, nor has he given any kind of apology for associating himself with it," the release said. "Does Collins agree that Eisenhower was a communist? Or that Reagan is a lackey of the conspiracy? He has not said."

— Collins may have been involved in Nelson Bunker Hunt's attempt in 1979 to corner the silver market. The Bentsen release charged that Collins, acting on Hunt's advice, invested in silver stocks in 1979. He then co-sponsored legislation that would have increased the government's silver stockpile by 50 million ounces, thereby increasing the value of privately owned silver.

"is it just coincidence that the interests of Congressmen Collins and Hunt interwined so closely on silver? ...I don't know.," read the statement, which was written by Bentsen campaign manager Jack Martin.

— Hunt is behind the National Conservative Political Action Committee's effort to defeat Bentsen.

"Terry Dolan, chairman of NCPAC, makes all the public statements, but Hunt is pulling Dolan's strings," the statement said. "When it comes to James M. Collins, whether it be extremist gutter-style politics or investments in precious metals, all roads lead back to Nelson Bunker Hunt."

Texas delegation observers are somewhat puzzled by Bentsen's campaign strategy.

But has the Bentsen strategy been successful? Some observers say yes because it has kept Collins on the defensive. The senator has increased his lead in the polls over the last several months.

Bentsen supporters say that Collins and his conservative backers earlier this year actually fired the first shots in this war of "negative campaigning."

The Collins camp, trying to paint Bentsen as a liberal, has run a series of ads attacking the senator's record. NCPAC has poured thousands of dollars into the state for anti-Bentsen ads and the John Birch Society and other conservative groups have lambasted the senator.

The political experts say Bentsen apparently believes it is necessary to attack the attackers, hoping to defuse their charges. But if the Texas Democrat is so far ahead in the polls, why does he continue to try to shoot holes in the Collins character, they ask.

"It makes it look like he's a little worried about the race," said one Texas delegation staffer.

A Bentsen spokesman acknowledges that the anti-Collins campaign was prompted by what Bentsen considers an inaccurate portrayal of his record by Collins.

"You've got to respond to that (alleged misrepresentation of his record)," says Jack Devore, Bentsen's campaign spokesman.

Devore adds that the press release this month linking Collins with the John Birch Society "does not go too far."

"He (Collins) has not disavowed the John Birch Society," Devore says. "So it's a fair question whether Collins agrees with Birch or not."

Replies Collins campaign spokesman Lysette McSoud: "It (the John Birch Society) has nothing to do with our campaign. It's not our place to say anything about them."

McSoud says that Bentsen's anti-Collins pitch shows that the senator is "panicking...Bentsen will not talk about his record. He doesn't want to talk about the issues."

For Thompson, Texas was 'Blood and Money'

DALLAS (AP) — Tommy Thompson couldn't wait to leave his native Texas but kept returning to it to write his best-selling books, his brother says.

Thompson died Friday in Los Angeles of liver cancer that was diagnosed only weeks before. The 49-year-old writer, author of the sensational crime books "Blood and Money" and "Serpentine," and a best-selling novel, "Celebrity," had just negotiated a $2 million contract with his publisher when he died.

"He wanted to be a writer since he was 8 years old," Larry Thompson, said from his Houston law office. "He's one of the lucky people in life who knew early on he what he wanted to do, and did it, and did it well.

"He was just my mean older brother when we were growing up," said Thompson, 42. "He was an achiever, but nothing really extraordinary. I remember, when he was a junior, he ran for editor of the 'Daily Texan,' the UT student newspaper, and he got beat.

"He thought his career in journalism was over."

"I remember Tommy when he was here as a cub reporter," said Charles Dameron, now associate managing editor of the Dallas Times Herald, who was assistant city editor when Thompson was hired fresh out of the University of Texas.

"He was a Fort Worth boy, just a great big gawky sort of kid, hot-to-trot, anxious — he hustled. We put him on the police beat, the cop shop. I don't recall his writing, just that he did his job well. He obviously wanted to be a newspaperman, and he did it."

Thompson left the Times Herald "under circumstances that had nothing to do with the quality of his work. That was another time and another era," Dameron said, refusing to elaborate.

Dan Cobb, now executive managing editor for news at the Houston Chronicle, was city editor when Thompson, at age 23, was city editor at the Houston Press, the youngest city editor at a major metropolitan daily.

"He was a hard worker and a hard player," Cobb said. "Frankly, a breath of fresh air at the Houston Press, which had a reputation of being shallow and distorted. He had integrity."

More than 400 pay tribute to La Grange's 'Sheriff Jim'

LA GRANGE, Texas (AP) — More than 400 mourners paid tribute Friday to T.J. Flournoy, the sheriff who achieved unwanted fame for challenging efforts to close the bordello that inspired the hit musical "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas."

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and nearly 100 lawmen from surrounding counties attended the 45-minute services in this East Central Texas community 65 miles southeast of Austin.

Flournoy, 80, died Wednesday at his home following a long battle with heart problems. He was buried in the city cemetery.

Known as "Sheriff Jim" for almost four decades, Flournoy was credited with solving every murder and bank robbery in Fayette County during his 34 years in office.

He gained fame when he resisted efforts to lock up the "Chicken Ranch," Texas' most famous bordello which was known locally as Miss Edna's Boarding House. Flournoy blamed the demise on "outside interference."

Former Texas Gov. Dolph Briscoe ordered law enforcement officers in August 1973 to close the establishment after reports by Houston television personality Marvin Zindler.

Zindler later sued Flournoy for $3 million, claiming the sheriff beat him, tore his clothes and used abusive langmage. Flournoy denied the accusations.

The suit was settled out of court for an undisclosed amount. Flournoy said about $20,000 had been raised for his defense fund.

When he retired in 1980, he said he was tired of being reminded of the Chicken Ranch.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The controversy over whether or not Vivian Wood, candidate for district clerk, was executive secretary to Judge Perry D. Pickett when he was presiding judge of the 39-county 7th Judicial Administrative District seems rooted in semantics.

In campaigning for district clerk, Ms. Wood says she was executive secretary of the judicial district for about a year when she was a deputy clerk under her opponent, incumbent Madge Wallis, from January 1977 to October 1978.

"...Her (Ms. Wood's) claim to have served as executive secretary of the Seventh Judicial Administrative District is incorrect," Ms. Wallis, 58, said via a newspaper advertisement in Thursday's editions. "It has never had a designated secretary."

Asked about that statement, Ms. Wallis said Friday: "I have no comment to make on anything."

Ms. Wood did. "All I did was do the duties," she said Friday. "I would think you're an official secretary if you are paid. It (the job title) is a matter of semantics."

Pickett, who was administrative judge in the last four years of his 1954-1980 tenure as judge of Midland County's 142nd State Judicial District Court, explained his stance on the campaign controversy.

"It's just a question of interpretation," Pickett said Friday. The judge said that Ms. Wood had volunteered to handle his secretarial chores — bookkeeping, making various judicial assignments and typing correspondence. She did this while a full-time clerk in the office but was paid "a small amount" from the administrative district fund.

Ms. Wallis, a Democrat, has been district clerk since 1965.

"They (deputies) would volunteer to keep my books up, make assignments of various judges and type correspondence," he said. "She was paid a small salary. It really wasn't an official secretary. It was just volunteer work...with the consent of Madge (Wallis)." A different deputy would serve the judge in each of the four years he was administrative judge.

"It's unfortunate," Pickett said of the dispute between the two candidates. "They both worked for me. They're both friends of mine."

For the most part, Ms. Wood concurred with the judge's viewpoint.

"I agree with him," she said. "I was obviously designated to do the duties. The other people in the office knew I was designated to do the duties. She (Ms. Wallis) is trying to discredit my qualifications."

Ms. Wood, 44, the Republican candidate for district clerk and an assistant purchasing agent for a major oil company, noted: "The fact is, I did the duties.

"I think it (Ms. Wallis's advertisement) was an attempt to discredit me. I did the work. I don't care what they called me. If they want to call me a 'general flunky,' I did do the work. I just would prefer that people think I did not lie, and I didn't.

"I have tried very, very hard to run a clean campaign and to stick to the facts," she said.

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — "Average" automobile insurance rates in Midland County rose more than the statewide average in the 1976-1982 period, the State Board of Insurance reports.

SBI figures show that statewide, auto insurance rates since 1976 rose at a rate "below the general rate of inflation."

In 1976, the statewide average cost of coverage for such a driver was $290 per year, Daves said.

The coverage, on the same 1976 car, under new rates would be $353, he says, or an average annual increase of 3.3 percent.

If a new car is purchased in 1982, "thus bringing the increased value of the vehicle into calculation," the average cost for basic coverage would be $419, or an average increase of 6.3 percent.

The increase for Midland County, based on a 1976 car, shows an annual increase of 5.0 percent. Based on the 1982 car, the increase would be 8.2 percent annually.

Heroin use as painkiller increases in Britain

LONDON (AP) — British doctors are increasingly using heroin as a painkiller for terminal cancer patients and others suffering from severe pain, despite a 35 percent increase in the number of registered drug addicts last year.

"In this country, heroin is a drug of very longstanding clinical value," said Jasper Woodcock, director of the Institute for the Study of Drug Dependence, a private non-profit research foundation. "There has never been this campaign to demonize heroin such as went on in the United States when addiction became such a problem."

In contrast to the United States, where both the medicinal and personal use of heroin is banned, British doctors have been able to prescribe the drug for most of this century.

Total legal consumption of heroin in Britain has grown from 92.4 pounds in 1970 to 235.4 pounds in 1980 according to the latest available statistics provided to the institute.

Heroin is most frequently given to terminal cancer patients, but it is also prescribed for those in severe pain after surgery, heart attacks, respiratory problems and even childbirth.

In addition, the country's 3,850 registered drug addicts can receive reducing doses of heroin in cost-free rehabilitation treatment at National Health Service clinics, although most are given methadone, the synthetic narcotic.

According to Home Office statistics, the number of registered drug addicts in Britain rose 35 percent from 2,850 at the end of 1980 to 3,850 at the end of last year. The true number of addicts, however, is estimated at closer to 20,000, because most shy away from cash-short clinics where supplies of pure heroin are limited.

Woodcock said the evidence of British doctors prescribing heroin and morphine for the relief of pain is that patients only rarely develop an addiction to those drugs.

"One of the signs of addiction is the development of tolerance, which means a necessity to keep increasing the dose. That is one of the signs that doesn't not seem to occur for a patient receiving a strong analgesic (painkiller) for pain in cancer, for instance," Woodcock said.

He likened the response of such patients to the way most people react to alcoholic drinks.

"Some people who want the effects of alcohol need to drink more and more and more, but most of us get the effect we want by drinking the same amount all the time."

He explained that unlike street addicts, such patients do not require increasing doses or suffer withdrawal symptoms. Doses are carefully controlled and experience has proven that when the cause of pain subsides, the need for a painkiller disappears.

At Michael Sobell House, a London hospice providing care mainly for victims of terminal cancer, 90 percent of the patients receive heroin at some stage in their treatment, according to Dr. Robert J. Dickson, consultant radiotherapist. The 25-bed facility treats about 250 new patients a year.

Dickson said the degree of pain is the "main indication" of whether heroin should be used, although it is sometimes given to relieve deep depression.

Some patients receive heroin for as long as two to three years, Dickson said, while others do not require it until the final weeks of their lives.

Dickson said patients usually have no idea they are receiving heroin and are grateful for respite from excruciating pain.

"There is no attempt to deceive them; they just don't ask," he said.

The effectiveness of heroin as a pain reliever is unquestioned, but doctors on both sides of the Atlantic debate whether it is better than numerous available substitutes, especially morphine.

Heroin, a white, bitter powder known medically as diamorphine or diacetylmorphine, is derived from morphine. Heroin and morphine produce similar results, immediate relief from pain and a feeling of peacefulness, with few side effects. They are considered equally addictive.

The main advantage of heroin, Dickson said, is its solubility. It takes about 10 times as much morphine as heroin to prepare a syringe solution of equal potency, he said.

Heroin is the addicts' choice because of its greater potency and availability. Its clinical use is banned in the United States and most other countries because of concerns over storage, theft and diversion to illicit sources.

Groups lobbying for the legalization of medicinal heroin in the United States claim the ban deprives terminal cancer patients of the one thing doctors can give them: relief from pain.

But research carried out recently on 166 patients at New York's Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center concluded: "Heroin has no apparent unique advantages or disadvantages (over morphine) for the relief of pain in patients with cancer."

Immunity deficiency may be caused by virus

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Growing evidence suggests that an immunity deficiency which mostly strikes homosexual men may be caused by some unknown "transmissible agent," such as a virus, a government researcher says.

In less than two years, federal officials have recorded more than 665 proven cases of the diseases known collectively as Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, said Dr. James W. Curran of the national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Curran, in San Francisco for meetings with city Health Department officials and University of California researchers, said 60 percent of the syndrome cases diagnosed so far have proved fatal within a year.

The newly identified syndrome is characterized by a breakdown in the body's immunity system which allows a number of deadly infections to strike.

The syndrome is marked by two major lethal diseases: a form of cancer known as Kaposi's sarcoma and an illness called pneumocystis pneumonia. It also includes a large number of lesser-known illnesses known as "opportunistic infections."

The diseases are most widespread among gay men, but they also have stricken intravenous drug abusers, Haitians living in the United States and hemophiliacs.

Reports confirm that the diseases are being found in clusters of cases where homosexual victims have had sex with others who develop the disease, Curran said.

"There may be an illusion of transmissibility here, and the possibility of a transmissible agent certainly hasn't been proven, but the likelihood is growing stronger," he said.

Soviet freighter rescues two shipwreck survivors

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — Two shipwreck survivors who watched two companions disappear into the waves and a third die in their rubber dinghy have been rescued by a Soviet freighter after four days adrift.

Debbie Scallings, 24, of New Orleans and Bradford Cavanagh, 22, who is believed to be from Massachusetts, were in fair condition Friday at Carteret General Hospital. The pair, who had had no food or water since their sailboat sank in a storm Sunday off the North Carolina coast, are being treated for dehydration and exposure.

They told the Coast Guard they put the body of the dead woman overboard Thursday, shortly before they were rescued. The two men jumped overboard Wednesday, they said.

Coast Guard spokesman Mike Erdley said the Coast Guard sent a rescue plane out Thursday afternoon to look for the two missing men. The search was called off Thursday night.

"At this point, we do not plan to resume the search," he said.

He declined to identify the woman and the two missing men until next-of-kin were notified.

Erdley said the Coast Guard was still unclear about many details of the incident.

"In talking with the survivors, they told us their vessel took on water and sank rapidly Oct. 24," he said. "They told us that on Oct. 27, two men left the life raft and began to swim. Why? We have no answer to that."

Of the woman who died, Erdley said, "We don't know the cause of her death. In our briefing with the survivors, they said she suffered bruises while abandoning ship, but to what extent, we have no idea. Whether they were fatal injuries, we can't determine."

Five people were aboard the 58-foot ketch Trashman when the ship reported it had lost its sails and was taking on water Sunday in hurricane-force winds and 25-foot seas.

The Coast Guard sent a C-130 plane, which circled for several hours until the boaters reported by radio that they no longer needed assistance.

After the plane left, the ship suddenly filled with water and sank. The Trashman's life raft was blown out of reach by the winds, but the five managed to launch an inflatable boat used as a tender, the survivors told the Coast Guard. The tender, however, was not outfitted with provisions.

The Olenegorsk, a Russian freighter out of Murmansk, found the tender drifting about 87 miles south of Point Lookout, N.C., and took the survivors on board. Cavanagh and Ms. Scallings were given medical treatment by a Soviet doctor as the ship headed for the U.S. coast.

The Coast Guard contacted its office in Washington to get permission for the Soviet ship to enter U.S. waters, where the survivors were transferred to a Coast Guard ship two miles off Fort Macon, at the southern end of the Outer Banks.

A Coast Guard spokesman said both survivors were groggy but coherent at the transfer, apparently from the medication received on the ship.

Erdley said the Trashman had been traveling from South Portland, Maine, to Fort Lauderdale, Fla., for delivery to a customer. The ketch was manufactured by the Cadama Corp. of Wilmington, Del.

Gauge of economic health up slightly

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main gauge of future economic health rose a modest 0.5 percent last month, officials said Friday. President Reagan quickly seized on the report as "another patch of blue" proving recovery from the recession, but private economists were not so sure.

The new increase in the Index of Leading Indicators — following a 0.2 percent August decline — was the fifth gain in six months, the Commerce Department report said.

It also said the accompanying Index of Coincident Indicators — showing where the economy actually was in September rather than where it might be going — dropped 0.8 percent to a new low point for the recession.

The president, whose economic policies are a main issue in Tuesday's congressional elections, embraced the first part of the report without mentioning the second.

In remarks prepared for a campaign stop in Salt Lake City, Reagan said: "This morning, Americans awoke to see another patch of blue. The leading indicators, which measure the vital life signs of our economy to forecast its future direction, were up in September.

"Pretty soon, even the die-hard doom-peddlers will have to admit it: America is on her way back, and we will lead the way out of this worldwide recession."

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige was a bit more restrained in his comments back in Washington, but he did say the index increase "strengthens the prospect that recovery is near."

The president concentrated on the overall leading indicators increase. But private economists noted that a main reason the index went up was that stock prices had soared in September.

"That reflects a growing belief in American business that some kind of recovery is in fact out there," and therefore is indeed a positive sign, said Otto Eckstein, chairman of Data Resources Inc.

"But measures of production (in the index) showed a small change or no change or even a minus," he said.

"I don't think October was the month of the upturn; maybe November is the month and maybe not," Eckstein said.

The report said five of the index's 10 components improved in September, with a gain in building permits for future home construction providing the main support for the stock-price rise.

Also pushing the index upward was September's increase in contracts and orders for new plants and equipment, a rise in the nation's money supply and a very slight gain in orders for consumer goods.

On the negative side, two jobs-related components dropped sharply as the average workweek declined and initial claims for unemployment benefits rose. In addition, there was a drop in prices for sensitive crude materials and a decrease in businesses' liquid assets.

There was no change in the rate of business deliveries.

The index is designed to forecast trends in the overall economy. And in the past, several months of gains have heralded the ends of recessions. However, those monthly increases were usually much bigger than the ones recorded since March.

Commerce figures indicated the index has risen 4.2 percent in the past six months compared with an average of 8.4 percent in the six-month periods preceding recoveries from the seven previous recessions since World War II. The increases were even greater — 12 percent and 11 percent — in the six months before the most recent recoveries in 1975 and 1980.

John M. Albertine, president of the American Business Conference, said the new gain merely "suggests that not all the signals currently emanating from the economy are negative."

"It is becoming increasingly clear that the economy is stalled at the bottom of the recession," he said.

"The good news," Albertine said, was that current conditions should give the Federal Reserve Board "maneuvering room" to pursue policies that could bring even lower interest rates.

September's increase put the leading indicators index at 130.4 percent of the 1967 level, while the coincident index declined to 130.3 percent.

The report revised August's leading indicators gauge upward, making it a 0.2 percent decline rather than the 0.9 percent estimated one month ago. The September figure is also subject to later revision.

De Lorean indicted on drug trafficking charges

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Maverick automaker John Z. De Lorean was indicted Friday by a federal grand jury on charges of drug trafficking and racketeering in a $24 million cocaine deal. His bail, doubled to $10 million, was posted less than fours hours later.

De Lorean, 57, who left General Motors Corp. to build a futuristic supercar but saw his company fall into bankruptcy, was accused of conspiring with two other men to distribute cocaine flown in from Colombia. He remained in Terminal Island federal prison awaiting processing of release papers.

The grand jury returned the 11-count, 18-page indictment — which also charged De Lorean unlawfully used a communications facility — after more than two days of hearing evidence. De Lorean was named in nine counts and two other counts named only his two co-defendants. Some counts named more than one man.

"I have no reaction whatsoever to the indictment because I haven't read them," said Joseph Ball, De Lorean's attorney. "My reaction I'll have to express in court by a not guilty plea."

Four hours after the indictment was announced, Ball and Bernard Minsky, another De Lorean attorney, went to the federal court clerk's office and posted the bond.

Ball presented a certified check for $250,000. He said they also were giving as collateral the deeds to a De Lorean country estate in San Diego County valued at $3.7 million, and a New York cooperative apartment valued at $5 million, as well as a pledge of property in New Jersey for which he did not give a specific value.

Asked why they agreed to the increased $10 million bail, Ball said, "I don't give a damn if it's $100 million as long as they let him out. He's not going to run off. He's going to be here and get the property back."

Ball said De Lorean must report twice a week to a pretrial services office, either in California or in the New York-New Jersey area. His travel is restricted to those places, but Ball said he expects him to remain in Los Angeles at least until after his arraignment.

The indictment, which also names William Morgan Hetrick and Stephen Lee Arrington, accused De Lorean of using telephones and trips across the county to set up cocaine deals, through which the government has alleged he hoped to save his car company.

U.S. Attorney Stephen S. Trott, who announced the indictment at a news conference, said it was an example of the kinds of action being taken under President Reagan's crackdown on narcotics traffic.

"This represents the kind of thing you're going to be seeing in the future," Trott said.

Asked why bail had been doubled, he replied: "It's very normal ... the bail fixed in a criminal case has a tendency to vary with the charges."

De Lorean's arraignment was set for Nov. 8, and Trott said he expected the case would be set for trial within 70 days after that.

"Beyond that, none of us will be having much to say about the substance of this case and the evidence," Trott said. 'We're not going to be talking about this case."

The indictment supersedes a previous complaint filed last week against all three men.

It also includes the new charges of racketeering and use of a communication facility identified as Federal Express. The indictment does not make clear how Federal Express was used other than to say that De Lorean used it in the conspiracy to distribute cocaine.

It was not known whether "Federal Express" referred to the successful Memphis-based shipping firm that specializes in overnight deliveries of small, high-priorty packages.

E.T. costumes No. 1 this Halloween

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — E.T. may have spent his first Halloween hidden under a sheet in Steven Spielberg's hit movie, but not so this week.

As trick or treaters hit the streets this Halloween, you'll be seeing many E.T.s; some short, some tall, some with elaborate masks, some in homemade costumes with E.T. wrinkles down to their toes.

With worries over product contamination threatening to hold down sales of "treats," one of the few bright spots for retailers this Halloween is E.T. The extra-terrestrial has so captured the fancy of fans that they have been shelling out anywhere from $55 for elaborate, life-sized latex masks of E.T. to $3.49 for less ornate costumes for children.

"The reception has been just phenomenal. It must be (E.T.'s) magic light," said Robert L. Hermann, senior vice president of McCall's Pattern Co., referring to the orange glow from the creature's heart. McCall's has sold thousands of patterns for its E.T. Halloween costumes for children.

The pattern, which retails for $4, is the most expensive of McCall's line and is the company's best seller in October among 700 patterns. Jill Irvine, notions buyer at Los Angeles-based Home Silk Shop Inc., said the chain's 19 stores in California and four in Arizona sold about 1,000 of the McCall's pattern in 10 days. She added that purchases of materials to make the costumes have been ranging from $30 to $45 each.

By week's end, Don Post Studios Inc. of North Hollywood expects sales of its latex E.T. masks to total 30,000 to 35,000. "It's the highest sale of any one mask we've ever had," said Steve Koch, vice president of the 44-year-old party-supply firm.

The masks are retailing for $40 to $55 at various stores across the country, including Sears, Roebuck & Co., Toy World, TG&Y, J.C. Penney and Rasco Stores. "Despite its expense, it is one of our most successful masks," a spokesman for Sears said. "E.T. is our No. 1 seller by far," a Penney's spokesman said.

E.T. may be Halloween's star, but sales of other costumes and masks are faring well, too. "In general, Halloween merchandise is really going well," a spokeswoman for Toy World said. "Sales are up substantially, which is really a surprise with the economy as it is. Everyone wants to escape, I guess," the Penney's spokesman said.

Collegeville Flag & Manufacturing Co., a costume maker based in Collegeville, Pa., has sold well over 1 million of its E.T. costumes for children, according to Sales Manager Sam Cornish. "That's far and away more than any of the other costumes." The outfit sells in stores for between $3.49 and $5.99.

As the E.T. trick or treaters gather goodies, they may discover their bags filled with plenty of Reese's Pieces, the candy used in the film to lure E.T. out of the woods. Sales of the candy, produced by Hershey Foods Corp., have skyrocketed since the June release of "E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial." E.T. has had more of an effect on Reese's Pieces than Halloween," said a spokeswoman for Hershey. For example, in the month after the film's release, sales of Reese's Pieces rose 65 percent.

Such brisk selling of E.T. merchandise is one reason why Los Angeles-based MCA Inc., parent of Universal Studios, which released the film, recently clamped down on unauthorized E.T. goods.

Avery paintings mainly land-, seascapes

NEW YORK (AP) — Paintings of Milton Avery (1885-1965) open up great swaths of space and color at the Whitney Museum of American Art here, in a retrospective through Dec. 5.

It's the most comprehensive exhibition of this American artist's work ever assembled — about 90 oil paintings and about 40 works on paper, watercolors, monotypes and gouaches.

The subjects include domestic scenes, landscapes and seascapes — the latter two predominating.

The earliest work dates from 1931, and the latest from 1963: There are changes as the years elapse, but there is always the same wonderful use of clear, flooding color in harmonious and confident balance.

The main difference is Avery's progression toward greater simplicity, to the point where in his last years the landscapes and seascapes with rare human figures have retreated substantially but not completely from realism toward abstraction.

Also, the paintings tend to increase in size, to become very large, calm canvases glowing with flat masses of color.

In "Sailfish in Fog," 1959, there are three simple, flat shapes in red on a plain background of a different red. In "Sand, Sea and Sky," 1960, there are three colors — ivory, a darker, creamy shade and dark brown, washed on to a canvas divided into three angled sections by two straight lines.

Fluoridation programs resumed

ATLANTA (AP) — Cavity-fighting programs in 13 states have resumed after being cut back by a summer shortage of fluoride chemicals for public drinking water, says an official of the national Centers for Disease Control.

In July, 45 cities serving about 2 million people in 11 states halted fluoridation of their drinking water, said Dr. William Bock, the CDC's chief of dental disease prevention.

Four cities curtailed their programs, Bock said Thursday. The cutbacks stemmed from a "severe shortage" of the two chemicals commonly used in fluoridation of public drinking water.

But Bock said Thursday that as of last week, a system serving a portion of Seattle was the only one that had not resumed normal fluoridation operations.

The longest shutdown was three months, involving a Seattle system. But it would take at least nine months before the shortage would cause a 25 percent loss in benefits to dental health, Bock said.

"I don't think there was any consequence, really," he said.

The chemicals — sodium silica fluoride and hydrofluosilic acid — are produced from by-products of phosphate fertilizers. A slump in the fertilizer industry caused manufacturers to stop fertilizer production while they tried to sell their large inventories.

"This is the first time we've ever seen this happen, and we've been in the business for a long time," said Jack Cerrone, a vice president of Chemtech Industries Inc., a St. Louis chemical company that distributes hydrofluosilic acid.

"We thought water fluoridation was recession proof," he said. "It costs so little...anywhere between $3 and $30 per person per year."

U.S. farmers curtailed use of phosphate fertilizer and relied on a buildup of phosphate fertilizer residue in the soil to carry them through the 1982 growing season, Cerrone said.

The farmers were trying to avoid high interest rates on loans to buy the fertilizer, he said.

The most recent national survey showed a 33 percent decline in tooth decay from 1971 to 1980 in about 40,000 children aged 5 to 17, Bock said.

A 1975 survey showed about 4,700 American cities treated their water with one of the fluoride chemicals that had been affected by the shortage. About 2,000 others used other substances, including sodium fluoride, which also is used in toothpaste.

Spain's Socialists savor landslide victory

By MARK S. SMITH

MADRID, Spain (AP) — The street-cleaners swept up the red roses, and pictures of Pope John Paul II replaced posters of Felipe Gonzalez after an all-night fiesta celebrating the Socialist landslide in the Spanish general election.

Gonzalez, the 40-year-old Seville attorney who in December becomes Spain's first Socialist prime minister since the 1936-39 civil war, relaxed at his Madrid home.

Early Friday, when the magnitude of his party's triumph became clear, he telephoned King Juan Carlos to report the results and express satisfaction with the way the election was carried out, officials of his party reported.

The rightist leader whose party ran second, Manuel Fraga Iribarne, told reporters: "Our opposition will be loyal and democratic, but also active and effective." Fraga was a cabinet minister under the late dictator Francisco Franco.

The Interior Ministry said final returns from the voting Thursday gave Gonzalez' Socialist Workers Party 46 percent of the vote and 201 of the 350 seats in the lower house of the Cortes (parliament), a majority of 52.

Fraga's Popular Alliance won 105 seats; the centrist Union of the Democratic Center, which headed the outgoing government, was reduced to 11, and the Communist Party got 5. Regional parties and other small factions got the rest.

The vote came after a tense three-week election campaign during which there were frequent rumors of a coup by Franco diehards in the army to block the expected Socialist victory. At the start, the government said it had broken up an army plot to seize Madrid and arrested three colonels. Bomb blasts by Basque separatists in northwest Spain punctuated the campaign.

The independent Madrid newspaper El Pais hailed the vote as a "milestone in the development of Spanish political life."

Workers at Socialist Party headquarters said thousands of congratulatory phone calls and telegrams flooded in, including one from U.S. Ambassador Terence A. Todman. The embassy said in a statement to the press that the election was "a resounding indication of the voters' endorsement of the democratic process. We look forward to working with the new government and continuing the excellent relations between our two nations."

The capital cleaned up after an all-night celebration by Socialists and their supporters. Posters of the pope replaced those of Gonzales in preparation for the pointiff's arrival Sunday for a 10-day visit.

The election fiesta began in the city's main square, the 17th century Plaza Mayor, where tens of thousands sang and danced, then moved on to the streets around Gonzalez' election headquarters in the Palace Hotel.

The celebrants tossed up red roses — the Socialist Party emblem — and chanted rhythmically for "Fe-li-pe" until he appeared on the balcony of his suite.

Gonzalez will take office after a series of constitutional steps beginning with a meeting of the election board Nov. 2 to certify the results.

The king, whose staunch support of democracy foiled an attempted military coup in February 1981, opens the first session of the new Cortes on Nov. 16. After it convenes, the king will name Gonzalez prime minister, the Socialist majority in the Cortes will ratify him, and the change of government will take place by Dec. 2, within 35 days of the election. It is Europe's longest interregnum.

Until the change, centrist Premier Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo continues to head a lame-duck government.

Calvo Sotelo called the election five months ahead of schedule because his centrist alliance was breaking up. He was among the many centrists who failed to win re-election to the Cortes.

Ambassador tells El Salvador · U.S. could stop aid in protest

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The U.S. ambassador said Friday that American aid to this war-torn Central American nation could be stopped unless the government checks rightist "thugs" accused of murdering thousands of Salvadoran civilians.

"You don't have to kill people in the night. You don't have to decapitate people" to defeat the leftists, Ambassador Deane R. Hinton said at a Chamber of Commerce luncheon.

"The Mafia must be stopped," Hinton said. "The gorillas of this Mafia, every bit as much as the guerrillas in Morazan and Chalatenango, are destroying El Salvador.

"If not, the United States, in spite of our commitment to the struggle against communism, could be forced to deny assistance to El Salvador," he said.

The El Salvador Human Rights Commission says 38,000 people have been killed in three years of civil war, 80 percent of them civilians caught in crossfire or slain by rightist death squads allegedly linked to the security forces.

Hinton's speech was one his strongest statements against rightist violence. It followed by one day a 24-hour visit by U.S. Undersecretary of Defense Fred C. Ikle to El Salvador.

The American Embassy had denied reports Ikle was sent to warn rightist leaders that continued civilian deaths could jeopardize American aid.

Congress must approve any U.S. aid to El Salvador, which this year totals $320 million in economic and military assistance. Continued congressional approval is contingent on the improvement of this nation's human rights record.

A recent congressional report accused the Reagan administration of doing little to investigate allegations that Salvadoran forces have killed thousands of unarmed civilians.

In fighting Friday, leftist guerrillas attacked three military outposts in the town of San Jose las Flores north of the capital, killing at least 25 soldiers, a low-ranking officer said.

The officer, who asked not to be named, pointed out to visiting reporters a site where he said five soldiers died. The guerrillas apparently suffered no casualties.

On a road close to the town, about 10 miles north of San Salvador, civil defense officials reported that the guerrillas ambushed an army truck.

Irish mother begs for son's return

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — The mother of a 16-year-old Catholic boy feared abducted by Protestant extremists pleaded with her son's kidnappers Friday, "Take me and let my son have a life and future."

Police said they were taking seriously a coded telephone call from the Ulster Freedom Fighters claiming they had kidnapped Eamonn Farrell, missing from his home in Roman Catholic-populated West Belfast since Wednesday.

The boy's mother, Sheila Farrell, made a sobbing radio appeal: "Please take me, take me and let my son have a life and future. I will go in his place. Let my gentle, sensitive, good Catholic child go."

"We must treat it as a case of abduction," said Assistant Chief Constable William McAllister.

Hundreds of extra police were brought in to join the search for Farrell, after a week in which tit-for-tat abductions and terrorist attacks left six men dead.

As the search went on, the Irish National Liberation Army, a Marxist offshoot of the mostly Catholic IRA, threatened in a coded telephone call to a Belfast radio station that it will kill three Protestants for every Catholic slain.

Over the years of political violence here, guerrilla groups have worked out an informal understanding with police and the news media to use certain code words in such calls.

Forty miles southwest of Belfast on a remote hillside in Armagh, another search came to an end when security forces found the body of a Protestant militiaman kidnapped in the border county a week ago.

The body of Thomas Cochrane, 55, a part-time Ulster Defense Regiment sergeant abducted on his way to work, was found dumped beside a mountain trail, police said.

Steve Van Zandt releases solo album

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Miami Steve Van Zandt, guitarist since 1978 in Bruce Springsteen's E Street Band, has his first solo album out, "Men Without Women," on the EMI America label. The artist is listed as Little Steven and the Disciples of Soul.

"I would like to be looked at like a new act," Van Zandt says. "Let people judge what it is rather than what they think it should be. When the Asbury Jukes was formed, people thought it sounded like the E Street Band. Five years later, people said this has nothing to do with the E Street Band. I'm trying to skip that five years if I can. I just wouldn't really want to any way exploit my past, which hasn't been entirely my own.

"Even interviews I'm ambivalent about. It's a kind of glorification of a singer's opinions. I stopped signing autographs a few years ago. I always felt funny doing that. I felt I was encouraging people to think they were different than I was. I don't like the whole celebrity thing about performing."

Van Zandt, whose 32nd birthday is Nov. 22, said records were important to him, growing up. "They were the only thing that got me going in the morning, got me to school. And I looked forward to listening more after school. I remember there being songs you didn't understand very many of the words. It didn't matter at all. Musically and emotionally, you knew you were being spoken to. You were definitely being moved."

These days, Van Zandt says, "I think rock is art sometimes; it can be a valid art form. It can be an artistic expression just like anything else.

"PEOPLE WHO HEAR YOUR show or record can just dance or they can be inspired or motivated to change their life or change the world. You don't set any limitations. You hope maybe you can change the world. Why not?"

Van Zandt wrote a lot of the first three Asbury Jukes albums. He wrote one song on each of Gary U.S. Bonds' two recent albums and he has written all the songs on "Men Without Women."

That phrase, he says, is a metaphor for loneliness. "The work of touring rock 'n' roll is kind of lonely. That is where it comes from. Good relationships are like a reward in some way for your work."

Van Zandt went out of music for a couple of years in the 1970s and worked in construction, as his father does.

"I lost the desire to play," he explains. "I didn't like what was happening on the radio. Being a guitar player, I thought if I heard one more guitar solo, I would die.

"To sort of get back into it, I joined a touring oldies show, doing Holiday Inns. You work five or six nights a week. Then the minute you step out of it, it disappears. They don't advertise and the audience doesn't care, as long as you play some vague rendition of those old hits they remember. I was in the background. It was awful."

BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN AND VAN Zandt decided to get Gary U.S. Bonds out of that circuit and into a rock club circuit, where audiences listen. He says, "We got into the studio and Gary was much better than his early hits indicated. He turned out to be one of the greatest rock 'n' roll singers I've ever heard.

"We kind of hoped record companies would get interested in other people from his era who are still still around and still great. It's yet to happen, if it's going to.

"Companies are more interested to sign someone who writes his own songs and sings them. I don't always necessarily think that's the best way to make music. Frank Sinatra wouldn't get signed today."

Van Zandt isn't related to the late Ronnie Van Zant and his brothers Donnie and Johnny. He hadn't heard of them until Lynyrd Skynyrd's plane crash and somebody shocked his mother by sending her a bouquet and condolence card.

TV economist Rukeyser says country's mood shifting

By CHRISTOPHER SULLIVAN

OWINGS MILLS, Md. (AP) — President Reagan's successes are symptoms of a turnaround in attitude toward business that should buoy the stock market in the coming decade, says TV's chief economic commentator, Louis Rukeyser.

"The basic mood of this country is shifting," says the host of "Wall Street Week," the Public Broadcasting Service show which commands an audience of more than 8 million viewers each week.

"After a kind of an ideological binge in this country, when we were anti-business, anti-profit, that has subsided," says Rukeyser.

He adds, "I think Ronald Reagan is more a symptom of this phenomenon than its instigator."

The host of one of non-commercial broadcasting's most popular programs, Rukeyser has invested his economics and journalism training — along with shares of wit, timing and refreshingly irreverent, literate TV style — to capitalize on the shifting mood.

Along the way, he has been selling off the unprofitable notion that economic news is interesting only to the rich — or to no one at all.

"WALL STREET WEEK" IS produced at the Maryland Center for Public Broadcasting here and distributed within hours of the weekly stock market closing on Friday. Each week, Rukeyser interviews a top financial figure, helped by a panel of brokers and other professional analysts.

Rukeyser recalls with a smirk that he once was asked which was the most important analysis for predicting the stock market — fundamental or technical?

"I said, 'Neither — psycho...'"

Later, he elaborates. "In fact, I think you need it all. Fundamental, technical, psychoanalysis. We're in an area where there's no true expert."

So unpredictable are the influences on stocks' fluctuations that a joking Rukeyser could tell viewers in an August show that the market, in "the biggest single week in the history of investing," was simply observing his return from vacation.

"Now, to be fair about this," Rukeyser said in his monologue that opened the show, "there just may have been one or two other reasons (for an 81-point gain in the Dow Jones Industrial Average and then-record trading volume on the New York Stock Exchange). ...

"Modesty forbids me from taking all the credit."

STILL, IT'S CLEAR that sometimes "Wall Street Week" itself exerts a measurable influence on investment. Once, after a panelist praised a NYSE firm called Nucor, heavy trading was reported in an AMEX company called Newcor.

NEW YORK (AP) — Treasured Icelandic medieval manuscripts are on show in this country for the first time, in an evocative exhibition, "Icelandic Sagas, Eddas, and Art," at the Pierpont Morgan Library here through Nov. 14.

The precious relics include age-darkened fragments, single pages, as well as complete volumes, all diligently inscribed on vellum with quill pens in ink made from willows. Many of them are colorfully illuminated, embellished with ornate initials and borders, with some full-page illustrations of the texts.

As well as being the pride of Icelanders, their literature has had wide recognition and influence outside, too. The texts of the early manuscripts in this show were major sources for medieval literature in northern Europe, and the sagas are probably the most important Nordic contribution to world literature.

The poetic texts of the Edda, such as the Snorra Edda, from which an illuminated manuscript is shown, set out the great legends of the Norse gods which were later the inspiration for Wagner's Ring cycle of operas.

The sagas, prose narratives, tell of early history — including the Vinland voyages, the sagas of Eirikur the Red and his son, Leifur the Lucky, and the intriguing possibility that they and other Scandinavian voyagers were early explorers of America.

Former football player remains 'blithe spirit,' works at new craft

By ALAN GREENBERG
By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — In "Force Seven," an NBC pilot, he played a one-eyed martial-arts expert.

"We infiltrated subversives without using guns and stuff," he recalled. "We kicked people's brains in, literally. It was kind of fun."

And doesn't it somehow gladden your heart to know that Fred Dryer is still having fun? Still slipping through enemy lines and stomping the stuffing out of the bad guys?

Somehow, it wouldn't be right if Dryer had retired from the Los Angeles Rams and got stuck selling real estate or stock options. Too serious. As an actor, he can remain a blithe spirit, plunging himself (and us, vicariously) into a world of make-believe.

Or can he?

"I'm centered into something, without bringing any bull to it," Dryer said. "You can't be a dilettante. You realize it's a sunny day outside and all your friends are at the beach, but you're in a class studying acting, so get on with it."

Dryer's been working at his new craft since 1981. Studying under Nina Foch, reading scripts, interviewing, auditioning at the networks, and anticipating the phone messages left on his answering service like a kid does Christmas presents.

"THERE COULD BE a message for me for a job that could change my life," Dryer said.

Messages or no, Dryer, 36, already has gone through some pleasant changes. One is that he says he can give more of himself in relationships now that he's just Fred Dryer, instead of Fred Dryer, Rams defensive end.

In short, he's finding out that Father Murphy was right all along.

"Merlin Olsen always told me, 'You won't grow up until you're out of football,'" Dryer recalled.

"Football was a very emotional business. A lot of times, you were on the verge of tears. The emotional roller coaster was so great...I didn't hide behind playing football, but I lost myself in it...That's why I was good. I gave it all my waking thoughts. But I needed something else in my life."

But when the Rams waived him at the start of last season — Dryer's suing the team for $5 million for breach of contract — Dryer thought the something else might be sports announcing. Until a guy at NBC asked him if he's ever considered acting.

He had. In high school.

"I WANTED TO TAKE drama when I was in high school but the athletic peer pressure was too great," Dryer said. "It was too feminine to consider and too threatening to the people I ran with."

Now, it seemed a natural. And even though Dryer says, "I run into a lot of people who don't know me from Adam's house cat," he admits his being an ex-Ram has opened some sound stage doors.

But he doesn't want to walk through all of them. Some day, Dryer wants to be big on the boulevard. He'll take the side streets for now, but he wants to avoid short cuts, which, however lucrative, could lead to a career dead end.

"It's up to me to develop myself," Dryer said. "I've been very choosy. I do that purposely. I don't want to be doing things just to be doing them. I'm trying to shape a career."

He's mostly done pilots and TV movies. In "Starmaker," Dryer played "a sleazy jerk" who got beat up by Rock Hudson outside a mansion. Hudson broke a knuckle when he accidentally punched the camera. Dryer got $7,500 for 10 days work.

Dryer plays a sportcaster in "Cheers," a fall replacement.

BUT THE ROLE he's proudest of airs Nov. 30 on CBS during Sweeps Week: "Something So Right." Dryer plays a father on the lam from his wife (Patty Duke Astin) and troublemaking son (Ricky Schroeder) who belatedly returns to vie for his son's affections after another father figure (James Farentino) has come on the scene.

"It's so real life," Dryer says, briefly at a loss for words. "It's like Kramer vs. Kramer."

Is he a good actor?

"Yeah...But it's all very subjective. The question is: Do you believe that guy? I think the things I've done are believable."

Strait-laced football people weren't always so sure. Recall Dryer living in his battered, white Volkswagen van. Dryer showing up once in the Super Bowl dressing rooms dressed like a 1920s reporter. Dryer entering the Rams mess hall carrying his own personal giant dog dish, loading it up with natural foods, and leaving. In some ways, he was ahead of his time.

While Dryer admits that "when I was 21, 22, 23, I was on Pluto," he is miffed that anyone might still consider him spacey. Are not his hard, muscular body and successful careers in football and acting testimony to his dedication?

"PHYSICALLY, OF COURSE, it (acting) is not as demanding," Dryer said. "But mentally, the preparation is just as keen, if not keener...I got all that Conan the Barbarian stuff out when I was playing. Football was such a catharsis. I used my problems to motivate me. Now, I'm going into self-analysis. You use your life experience acting.

'Cats' sets Eliot's widow purring

By CHRISTOPHER RICKS
By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Broadway's new hit musical, "Cats," whose lyrics come from T.S. Eliot's "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats," celebrates what has been called the poet's most life-loving work.

Does the sound of "Cats" make old possum, lying so low, turn in his grave? But if T.S. Eliot's widow is sure that Andrew Lloyd Webber's musical extravaganza does not vex the ghost of Eliot's ghost, it is not for the rest of us to caterwaul. For Valerie Eliot has done more than allow these actable "practical cats" to prance before London's — and now New York's — very eyes and ears. She has done more than permit, she has purred.

"The naming of 'Cats' is a difficult matter," writes Eliot in the first line of the book's first poem. So it was a happy omen that the London production to which Mrs. Eliot gave her blessing was one in which the cat Deuteronomy (a deutered cat) was played by a Mr. Blessed. Mrs. Eliot has bestowed some of her husband's unpublished poetry on LLoyd Webber and director Trevor Nunn, including the eight lines — regarded as too sad for children — about the end of Grizabella, the glamour cat who sinks into destitution and even perhaps prostitution. And Mrs. Eliot has written two touching pages for the book of the musical, ending with an affectionate postscript about the poems: "PS: Whenever he was unwell, or could not sleep, TSE would recite the verses under his breath." In its love, this sentence sounds as if it were addressed — under her breath and beyond his death — to TSE himself.

Eliot liked to put on a grave front, and then twinkle about it, as when he revised nonsense poet Edward Lear's hopefulness ("How pleasant to meet Mr. Lear!"):

"HOW UNPLEASANT TO meet Mr. Eliot! With his features of clerical cut, And his brow so grim And his mouth so prim..."

But if his brow was grim, it was not simply high. He always believed that if there were to be any new life in the theater, it would have to come from below, from what started out as entertainment, impure and simple, and not as art. (And not, not, as art.)

When the great music-hall comedienne Marie Lloyd died in 1922, Eliot devoted his London Letter (to The Dial magazine in New York) to her genius. "I certainly did not realize that her death would strike me as the most important event which I have had to chronicle in these pages."

He used to insist that fine art is the refinement, not the antithesis, of popular art. He was unsentimental even about Shakespeare:

"The Elizabethan drama was aimed at a public which wanted entertainment of a crude sort, but would stand a good deal of poetry; our problem should be to take a form of entertainment and subject it to the process which would leave it a form of art. Perhaps the music-hall comedian is the best material. I am aware that this is a dangerous suggestion to make. For every person who is likely to consider it seriously, there are a dozen toy-makers who would leap to tickle aesthetic society into one more quiver and giggle of art debauch."

In the 60 years since Eliot wrote that, the music-hall comedians have gone. (Playwright Samuel Beckett put them back on stage in "Waiting for Godot.") The musical survives for a while, a form of entertainment which now Andrew Lloyd Webber, with Mrs. Eliot, must hope to have made into a form of art.

IN ANOTHER OF HIS London Letters to New York, transplanted American Eliot described the theatrical season in a way which strikes home again now at a time when London once again sees theater after theater likely to close:

"What is spring without the opera? Drury Lane and Covent Garden mourn: The singers have flocked, we are told, to New York, where such luxuries can be maintained...England sits in her weeds: Eleven theaters are on the point of closing, as the public will no longer pay the prices required by the cost. Considering the present state of the stage, there is little direct cause for regret."

Eliot believed that the drama was originally ritual; and that ritual, consisting of a set of repeated movements, is essentially a dance.

So he would not have made a song and dance about cats, especially as his cat poems are themselves full of singing and dancing. Again, he might have welcomed the abolition of actors' selves, with cats transmogrifying them into mogs, the cats of British slang, for he was sure that it was the vanity of actors, their underlined self-expression, which blocked any new true theater. Charlie Chaplin or a juggler was Eliot's ideal. Not that he was hopeful. "Occasionally attempts have been made to 'get around' the actor, to envelop him in masks..."

STILL, HE WOULD BE likely to judge that at least "Cats" aims at the right kind of impersonality, the right kind of extinction of the actor's individuality. An actor playing Hamlet is liable to murmur, with the poet and critic Samuel Taylor Coleridge, "I have a smack of Hamlet myself, if I may say so." An actor playing Skimbleshanks, the railway cat, is more likely to be impersonally on the right lines.

The poems started out as modest gifts of love. They were for the delight of Eliot's young godchildren. They grew, the children and the poems. Eliot joined the children's literature writers who have no children and who therefore write with a special sympathy and poignancy: Lewis Carroll and Edward Lear.

When "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats" came out in October 1939, it was a relief to many from both the tension of war and highbrow anxieties about modern poetry. One month after the start of World War II, here was a world, a society, still going strong. More than any other kind of poetry, light verse depends upon social confidence, and Eliot managed to keep people's spirits up rather as his poetry had unexpectedly done during World War I, when E. M. Forster, at the time of that horror, was grateful for the drawing rooms of Eliot's "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock" and other observations.

Then again, there was another kind of relief, like the sort felt when Picasso kindly condescended to draw fluffy little chicks. For T.S. Eliot, this most difficult of modern poets, the author of "The Waste Land" and the 1948 winner of the Nobel Prize in literature, was now prepared to rhyme "cat" with "mat."

Director competes with himself at box office

NEW YORK (AP) — When director Ted Kotcheff put the wraps on his latest film "First Blood," one thing he never counted on was having to compete with himself at the box office.

But that's exactly what's happening.

Orion Pictures is releasing two Kotcheff films at the same time, "First Blood," which stars Sylvester Stallone, and "Split Image," starring Michael O'Keefe.

And the reason these two films are coming out at the same time, Kotcheff says, is because Orion did not know how to market "Split Image" — the story of a teen-ager who joins a religious cult.

"They didn't know what to do with it," said Kotcheff over breakfast one morning. "I finished that film last January and it's been sitting on the shelf ever since.

"The film doesn't fall into any specific category or genre, and that throws them," he said.

As for "First Blood," a film about a Vietnam War veteran who returns home to fight another battle, Kotcheff says Orion had no trouble coming up with a marketing plan.

"It's an action adventure and they plan to open it wide in about 1,200 theaters all at once," he said.

Kocheff says the reaction from critics over "Split Image" has primarily been positive, but has not beem strong enough to change Orion's marketing plan.

The movie originally was called "Captured" and it was to be released last summer. But Filmways, the distributor at the time, was taken over by Orion and the new studio decided to put the film through some market research tests before releasing it.

"This is the first time any one of my films has undergone such extensive scientific testing," said Kotcheff, whose previous films include "North Dallas Forty" and "The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz," starring Richard Dreyfuss.

He said Orion collared about 200 young people, herded them into a room, placed them in seats with levers that move up or down for like or dislike and recorded the results.

Despite his disdain for this type of research, Kotcheff says the result of the testing was very favorable. But Orion still wasn't satisfied. So they did some more tests. That was when they decided to change the title.

"When quizzing audiences after the film, they found that what interested young people most was the almost schizoid personality of the main character and the way he reconciles this duality," said Kotcheff.

Roacl to White House starts at Holiday Inn

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It's Saturday, so this must be L.A. and Walter F. Mondale is in another hotel room. Mondale is no fan of hotel rooms, but he wants to be president of the United States and that means overcoming the old "fire in the belly thing."

That phrase is politicians' shorthand for the 1974 decision by the former Democrat senator from Minnesota to drop out of the presidential race. It wasn't just the decision, but how Mondale defined it:

"I admire those with the determination to do what is required to seek the presidency, but I have found that I am not among them."

He added that he didn't want to spend the rest of his life in Holiday Inns. Two years later, as Jimmy Carter's vice presidential running mate, Mondale would laugh and say, "I've checked and they've all been redecorated."

The Los Angeles hotel room where Mondale found himself recently is fancier, but hardly more inviting, than the Holiday Inns that depressed him in 1974. But he's there because he figures that's where he must start on the road to the White House.

Traveling that road better than five days a week for the past two months, Mondale has his eyes on two elections, the midterm balloting next Tuesday and the big one in 1984.

He's out there making friends, picking up IOUs from Democratic candidates large and small, testing campaign themes, striving to prove that this time, he has "fire in the belly" — that all-consuming ambition to become president.

During his California swing, the former vice president helped out Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., who is running for the Senate, and several Democratic congressmen. He also spoke at a fund-raising dinner for legislative candidates.

The receptions were good. They almost always are, for Mondale is an accomplished stump speaker.

"Maybe I'm kidding myself," he said during an interview in his hotel room, "but I think I'm getting a very good reaction."

Mondale is a good enough politician to know that, like a good stage performer, he cannot afford to let his act get stale. So he has seized on trade as a big, crowd-pleasing issue in his speeches. He takes a tough stand against countries that flood the American market with their automobiles and television sets but erect barriers against U.S. exports.

"We've been running up the white flag, when we should be running up the American flag," Mondale declared recently to the cheers and applause of a union audience. "We have got to get tough, and I mean really tough, with nations that use our markets but deny us their markets."

No matter how much applause Mondale gets, or how many hotel rooms and bad meals he endures, the fire-in-the-belly question lingers on.

"It will come down to Kennedy and Glenn," says a Democratic Party leader who speculates on the 1984 presidential race only on the condition that his name not be used.

Besides Mondale, Sens. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts and John Glenn of Ohio are the contenders most often mentioned for the Democratic presidential nomination.

"Why not Mondale?" he is asked.

"The fire in the belly problem, it's still there."

Other party professionals are just as quick to conclude that Mondale has overcome that problem.

None of the prospective Democratic candidates are considered flawless. Talk about Kennedy inevitably turns to his "Chappaquiddick thing." With Glenn, it's the "dullness thing."

None of those perceived handicaps is insurmountable. John F. Kennedy overcame the "Catholic thing" and Ronald Reagan the "age thing."

But they must be surmounted, and that's one reason Mondale is spending so much time in hotel rooms this year.

"Was it important that he show determination?" asks Jim Johnson, a Mondale adviser. "Yes. Did he show determination? Undoubtedly."

Mondale also must deal with his poll problem. Two Gallup polls of Democrats this year indicated that Mondale trailed far behind Kennedy as their choice for a nominee in 1984. In February, Kennedy was preferred by 54 percent, Mondale by 31 percent. The gap widened in July, when it was Kennedy by 58 percent and Mondale by 30.

"I don't think these polls mean anything right now," says Mondale. "I don't think people are concentrating on the presidency or the nomination."

What the public wants today are answers to America's problems, he says, and not "the politics of blame" as practiced by President Reagan.

New vending machines do lot more than swallow coins

ATLANTA (AP) — Buy a Coke and play a video game. Buy two and get a discount — or maybe even a cents-off coupon — from a sophisticated new line of vending machines that do a lot more than swallow coins.

Coca-Cola USA says its new generation of robotic vendors will play video games, give coupons, offer discounts on multiple purchases and sell cans and liter or two-liter bottles, all the while making change for paper money.

"They go beyond talking," company spokesman Tony Tortorici said Thursday.

"You can play with one and you can make a deal with that baby. For example, if an ice cold 12-ounce can costs 40 cents, you can get two for 75 cents. It's programmed for multiple purchases."

"Another one, yet to be refined, will give coupons for so many cents off on some future purchase," he said.

What do the games offer video arcade buffs?

"There's a little monkey sitting in a palm tree, throwing down cans of Coke at a Coke delivery man who attempts to catch those cans. You can move him back and forth and if you miss a can, the game will electronically laugh at you. The monkey laughs at the delivery man," said Tortorici.

The first computerized Coke machine came out a year ago — one that talks in synchronized computer voice. About 3,500 are now in service, Tortorici said.

Several suppliers make the machines, which cost $200 to $500 more than a conventional machine, which does no more than blink a light when it is out of change. The old-style machines run $1,000 to $1,500 each, Tortorici said.

The new machines have been tested in limited areas since they "jumped off the drawing board over the past year," and should be in the marketplace by Jan. 1, Tortorici said.

Like any new gimmick, the talking machines may lose their novelty, so a bottler who buys one probably would move it around to various locations — unless it was in a spot with a constantly changing traffic flow, such as a hotel.

The machines may be new, but the reason for them is as old as the soft drink business: to gain an edge over other products, said Tortorici.

"They are designed to increase sales of soft drinks. If they do that, fine," he said. "If they don't, out they go."

Bourse stages comeback with high-brow mall

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It was once the financial center of the city and a major grain trading center of the nation. Later, it would be a wax museum.

Now, the Bourse building is staging a comeback as one of the more fashionable shopping centers and office buildings in Philadelphia, after a two-year, $19 million renovation.

"We felt the building had financial viability and the potential to be a magnificent landmark," said Ronald Kaiserman, one of the developers. "It was the chance to produce a beautiful public place — and to make money."

Located within sight of historic Independence Hall and the Liberty Bell, it serves as a reminder that Philadelphia was a leading city in America long after the days of the Continental Congress.

The Bourse was built in 1895, modeled after an exchange in Hamburg, Germany. Large Corinthian columns finished in Mycenean marble flanked the trading floor where brokers wheeled and dealed. In its heyday, it housed offices of AT&T, McCormick Steamship lines, grain dealers and export agents.

There were machinery exhibits for visiting businessmen, a swank cafeteria for the brokers, and a large ball on a pole on the roof that dropped each day at noon to help ship captains set their clocks in the harbor.

Each year after Christmas, the brokers stopped trading and had a grain fight, flinging flour, oats, rye and wheat in a wild battle. The hijinks were briefly interrupted by World War I, then resumed during the booming '20s.

But the building began a long decline during the Depression. The Board of Trade left for Chicago. AT&T cut back on its rental space and then left. By 1967 the once-proud building was the home of a wax museum. Finally, it stood vacant.

Kaiserman bought the building for $2 million, "about what we would have paid for vacant ground."

It was a wreck. There was water damage from a leaking roof, chunks of the Corinthian capitals were missing, the tiled floor was damaged beyond repair.

The renovation started in 1979. The columns were repaired, the tile in the Great Hall was replaced, and a skylight at the bottom of a light well was raised seven stories to the roof.

Most ambitious of the changes was tearing out two brick walls on either side of the light well, reinforcing them and replacing them with a new glass curtain wall that opens up what had been a closed, confining space.

"We thought we could do something different," Kaiserman said. "We were trying not to create your typical mall."

Typical the stores are not. They tend to be highbrow — and high-priced. Yves St. Laurent has a large store for men and women in one corner. In another, the centuries-old Caswell-Massey Co. offers exotic perfumes, including one they used to sell to George Washington.

The Bourse is listed on the National Register of Historic Landmarks and its exterior had to remain untouched to retain its tax benefits.

Salvager lives in castoff lighthouse

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Emmett Wiggins says a love of the water inspired him to live in a 146-year-old lighthouse he towed 8 miles from the mouth of the Roanoke River to his home in Edenton.

Wiggins has spent many of his 61 years in boats, pulling riches from the seas in his marine salvage business. When a friend offered him the castoff government lighthouse in 1955, Wiggins began his biggest salvage operation ever.

Now he lives alone in the restored 1836 structure, a two-story house with cupola and wide porch that has been the subject of several newspaper and magazine articles and the focus of many paintings.

"I've just liked water all my life," Wiggins said. He says he has been building boats since the fifth grade, when he assembled a kayak, and has always lived near the water.

Wiggins' house once held a light on top of its roof, 35 feet off the ground.

The original light was a whale oil lamp whose flame was magnified by a large prism-type lens manufactured in Paris in 1888. Wiggins still has the lens but now uses a light bulb instead of the whale oil lamp.

Moving the lighthouse took 36 hours, a crew of men and a little money, Wiggins said. The men loaded the house on a barge and moved it up the river to the head of Edenton Bay.

"I did nothing to it but install electric current and put water in it to make it livable," he said. "It's a very solid structure. Captains used to stay out here weeks at a time."

Wiggins said the light tenders kept logs like sea captains. From those logs, he said, he has learned that previous residents once watched Civil War battles, including the sinking of the ram Albemarle, a Confederate ship known for its speed.

"There were times when the captains in the lighthouse couldn't get out to the lighthouse unless they would walk out on the ice," he said.

Wiggins still does some marine salvage work. In 1960, he rescued 140 tons of marble from the Atlantic Ocean off False Cape, Va.

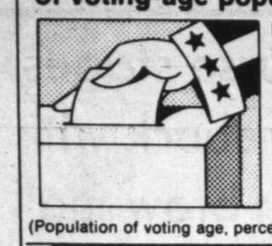
Women will make up majority of voting-age population in November



By November 1982, women will represent 52.4 percent of the national voting-age population. There will be eight million more women than men, five million of whom will be aged 65 and over. Men 18 to 24 have a slight majority over women, but by age 45 women clearly predominate.

Reagan thinks Democrats in for surprise

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says the Democrats are due for a surprise if they think they can gain votes next Tuesday by making his administration the election issue. That's what they think. Some Republicans do, too.

As a result, even some of the president's most favored candidates, those who got his hands-on campaign help, have been careful to leave a little running room between themselves and the administration.

Reagan will have appeared in 13 states in behalf of Republican candidates when he completes his off-year campaigning tonight. Two states got extra attention: he's gone twice to Nevada, for embattled Republican Gov. Robert List and Senate nominee Chic Hecht, who is challenging Sen. Howard Cannon; and Utah, where GOP Sen. Orrin Hatch faces a stiff challenge from Salt Lake City Mayor Ted Wilson.

There has not been a discernible pattern to the Reagan campaign effort. Some, but not all, of his time has been spent in swing states, where Republicans think they have a good chance of capturing one Democratic Senate seat.

Another is Virginia, where Rep. Paul Trible faces Democratic Lt. Gov. Richard Davis for the seat of retiring Sen. Harry F. Byrd Jr. Byrd is an independent, but he voted with the Democrats on matters of Senate control.

When there was talk of a return Reagan engagement in Virginia, Republicans there worried about handing the Democrats an opportunity to tie them more tightly to the administration and the recession. That went double in the Washington suburbs of northern Virginia, where Democrats have made an issue of reductions in the federal work force.

The president didn't go back.

Republicans don't say out loud that they'd prefer to go it alone, not even Michigan gubernatorial nominee Richard H. Headlee, who protested to the White House when the Detroit News quoted administration officials as saying the president wouldn't campaign for him because he couldn't win.

"I'VE GOT A heavy load to carry as it is, but I'd be willing to have him come," Headlee told the News later.

When Reagan campaigned in Columbus, it took some coaxing to turn out the slate of Ohio Republican candidates to appear with him. They were wary of too close an identification with the administration, for unemployment is the issue there, as elsewhere in the industrial Midwest.

The mixed emotions of GOP candidates also show in California, where Reagan didn't campaign. He appeared at summer fund-raising events for gubernatorial nominee George Deukmejian, and for San Diego Mayor Pete Wilson, running for the Senate against Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. The White House wants Brown beaten, but it is evident that California Republicans didn't think Reagan could help much.

He has spent three days in his home state since Labor Day, and his only political gesture was a handshake with Wilson. Presidents are a sure draw for fund-raising affairs, and they pull out campaign crowds no state candidate could hope to attract alone.

SOME, BUT NOT all, of Reagan's campaigning has been for down-the-line administration supporters like Hatch. The president also went to New Jersey, for the Senate campaign of Rep. Millicent Fenwick, who opposed some administration social spending cuts and said while he was there that they didn't always agree. She's been emphasizing that ever since, with Democrat Frank Lautenberg trying to depict her as the local representative of Reaganomics.

National Weather Service better than wooly worms

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Hurd Willett, professor emeritus of meteorology at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and expert on sunspots, believes we are heading into the coldest winter of the 20th century.

Reid Bryson, who runs the Institute for Environmental Studies at the University of Minnesota, has looked at volcanic dust patterns and predicts an unusually cold winter.

The venerable Old Farmer's Almanac, which combines the use of a 191-year-old formula with a reading of solar activity, calls for an extremely cold winter.

Sandra Glover, the woolly worm expert of Boone, N.C., has yet to issue her winter prediction based on an analysis of the caterpiller's black and rust-colored bands.

Who is most likely to be right next spring when the temperature and precipitation charts are compared to the predictions?

It's too early to tell, but if history is any indicator, the National Weather Service, which has yet to issue its prediction, will be the winner in the winter forecasting sweepstakes.

That is not to say that the weather service's forecast will be stunningly accurate. In the long-range forecasting game, coming up with the right numbers about 60 percent of the time is considered hot stuff.

COMPARE THAT TO ONE of the the nation's most popular predictors, The Old Farmer's Almanac. According to a study by two meteorology professors at the University of Illinois, The Old Farmer's Almanac hits the mark about 51 to 52 percent of the time, which isn't much better than the 50 percent accuracy record anyone could achieve flipping a coin.

In fact, that's exactly what John Walsh, associate professor of meteorology at the University of Illinois at Urbana, did. "We went through the recent five-year period — from 1975 to 1980 — and verified The Old Farmer's Almanac monthly forecasts and their seasonal forecasts for each region. We compared those with random chance. In other words, whenever they forecast a temperature or precipitation, we compared it to a coin toss. They're on the right side of the coin toss, but not by much," said Walsh.

Judson Hale, editor of The Old Farmer's Almanac, acknowledges that in some regions his publication's forecasts have been less accurate than the flip of a coin. In others, however, he contends the forecasts have been 97 percent accurate.

The little yellow-covered journal, based in Dublin, N.H., has been in the weather prognostication business longer than any of its competitors. It relies in part upon formulas developed in 1791 by Robert B. Thomas, founder of the compendium of weather predictions, information on animal fertility cycles and down-home advice and recipes.

HALE SAID THAT SINCE 1960 a former top official of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Robert Head, has used his expertise on solar radiation — the energy and heat produced by the sun — to refine the almanac's forecasts. "We feel the cycles in our old formula were based on the sun," said Hale. "We feel the radiant energy that comes to earth from the sun fluctuates, and it fluctuates in a pattern. Preparing our forecasts is an eight- to nine-month process utilizing a computer, but it does not conflict with a formula devised 191 years ago."

Despite the Illinois study questioning the almanac's accuracy, Hale said he doesn't recall a forecast by the National Weather Service in the last 15 years that wasn't identical with The Old Farmer's Almanac.

Like Robert Head at the Almanac, MIT's Hurd Willett bases his long-range weather predictions on sunspot activity. Sunspots are cool areas on the surface of the sun, believed to be caused by disturbances in the sun's magnetic field. "In the eastern part of the country, this could be the coldest winter of the century," said Willett, who predicts temperatures 4 to 5 degrees below normal in the Northeast and 6 to 8 degrees below normal from Delaware south.

"THIS IS A PERIOD OF decreasing sunspots and presumably of solar winds," Willett said. "We tend to get the coolest weather during the long cycles of low sunspot activity."

Reid Bryson, at the University of Wisconsin, also feels we're in for a cold winter, but he doesn't believe anybody can accurately predict extremes. "The closest we've come to that was when we said last year that, here in Wisconsin, it would be the third coldest for Januaries, and it was the second coldest."

Bryson's group uses several factors to come up with long-range forecasts, including the upper air patterns used by the National Weather Service and other traditional meteorologists, surface temperature variations in the central Pacific Ocean, and volcanic activity around the world.

Bryson believes that the important aspect of the volcanic eruptions is the amount of sulphur dioxide, rather than dust, they hurl into the air. The sulphur dioxide rises to the stratosphere, he says, where it forms sulfuric acid droplets that reflect sunlight and heat.

"This year there were 23 major eruptions around the world," said Bryson, and thus the prediction for a cold winter.

Sandra Glover, professor of biology at Appalachin State University in Boone, N.C., finds her source of weather information closer to home. Glover, on a leave of absence to do fieldwork this year, is an expert on the life and times of the woolly worm, or fuzzy bear, the caterpiller of the tiger moth, Isia isabella.

AROUND THE END OF OCTOBER of each of the past seven years, the media have flocked to Boone to hear Glover's winter weather forecast, a forecast based on the color of the woolly worm's fuzz. Glover could not be reached for comment, but Gay Clyburn, university information director, said, Glover collect 500 worms every year.

The woolly worm has 13 segments, each with its own band of fuzz that is hard to differentiate with the naked eye. Clyburn explained that Glover "believes those segments correlate with the 13 weeks of winter." Rust-colored segments indicate warm weather, while black segments indicate cold weather, Clyburn said.

Of course, Clyburn noted, "this year the woolly worms in my backyard are all brown, and the ones in my secretary's backyard are all black. Maybe that means it will be warm on one side of the state and cold on the other."

Sen. Proxmire to spend about $100 on campaign

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — In an era of million-dollar campaigns, Democrat William Proxmire of Wisconsin says $100 is about all he intends to spend in his bid for re-election Tuesday.

That skimpy amount could embarrass some of Proxmire's Senate colleagues, many of whom have topped the million-dollar mark in campaign spending, Federal Elections Commission figures show.

"Proxmire apparently is unique in the Senate," a commission spokesman said. "It frustrates a lot of senators to see how little he spends."

Proxmire, 66, a 25-year Senate veteran, says about a third of the $100 or so re-election budget will be for postage to return unsolicited campaign contributions.

Of the total, $42 was required to have his nomination papers printed, Proxmire told the state Elections Board. He said he did not have a campaign committee and had no plans to organize one.

Despite such frugality, and perhaps in part because of it, a recent poll showed Proxmire strength nearly equal to his 1976 standing among voters when he won re-election with a whopping 72 percent of the vote.

The poll showed Proxmire running well ahead of his Republican challenger, state Sen. Scott McCallum of Fond du Lac.

When many of his Senate colleagues are spending millions to win renomination and re-election, how has Proxmire managed to campaign on a proverbial shoestring?

Fellow Democrats attribute Proxmire's success to a reputation he has cultivated as a Senate maverick, his well-publicized attacks on alleged government waste and his seemingly incessant campaigning, among other things.

Proxmire, elected in 1957 to succeed the late Sen. Joseph McCarthy, has won re-election four times. His re-elections, in order, were by 57 percent of the vote, 53 percent, 71 percent and 72 percent.

"He's probably the nation's No. 1 campaigner for any office and the only person in the country who can get away with not spending money for a U.S. Senate seat today," said state Attorney General Bronson La Follette. "He's an absolute, consummate politician."

With Halloween near, couple relives tragedy

PITTSFIELD, Maine (AP) — Christopher King did not measure his life in seconds or his safety in inches.

He approached Halloween 1981 with all the enthusiasm of a 7-year-old. He would be Dracula, with a flowing cape and ghoulish mask.

Across town, Karen Huff, newly married and 23, spent the afternoon of Oct. 31, 1981, at a party, then returned home to change clothes before driving to a friend's house.

Children were already out trick or treating in the gathering dusk as she drove south on Hartland Avenue. So she was being careful, switching on her headlights and driving well below the 40-mph speed limit.

Rudy and Bonny King felt the gentle nudge of anxiety parents sense on this holiday. They worried about too much candy. They knew about trick or treating after dark. They had heard warnings about traffic and unsafe costumes.

Christopher scrambled in and out of the car, increasing his cache of candy. By the time the family reached Hartland Avenue, he had ripped and eventually discarded his costume.

It was just after 6 p.m. and the sun, below the horizon, cast a deep yellow reflection across the western sky. Street lights were on, but Police Chief Spencer Havey said later there were too few to illuminate the roadway.

Mrs. King, holding her 3-month-old son, Ryan, admonished Christopher to watch for traffic. Her husband also cautioned his son, but decided not to walk him across the street. Neither parent gave a second thought to his blue jacket and dark pants.

"Maybe I was tired or just lazy, I've played it back a million times," King recalls, "He is a little boy, but he was starting to grow up. He didn't want to have Mom and Dad lead him to the door."

Midway, Christopher pulled down the mask. That eliminated his peripheral vision.

King could see a small Datsun coming, headlights on, traveling at what appeared to be a prudent speed. Christopher would safely reach the sidewalk.

No one is certain what happened next. There were no screeching tires or shattering glass, only a soft thump and the wave of panic that gripped Karen Huff as she realized she had hit something.

"I never saw him. I never touched the brakes."

The impact lifted Christopher onto the car's hood, driving his head into the windshield wipers and carrying him 30 yards down the street.

Havey said his investigation showed that if Mrs. Huff's Datsun had been traveling faster than 25 mph, or hit him a second sooner, Christopher would have died.

As it was, his neck was broken and only the feverish work of emergency medical technicians saved him. "They lost his pulse twice on road," Havey said. "I thought the boy would die. Maybe he should have."

Christopher's will to live helped him through the night and a nine-day coma. His parents borrowed a camper and lived in the hospital parking lot.

"I guess it was one of those things you do when you love your son," Mrs. King says.

A year after the accident, Christopher remains paralyzed from the neck down. Doctors at Yale-New Haven Medical Center in Connecticut have implanted a device like a heart pacemaker to help him breathe more normally. If it works, Christopher may undergo physical therapy in Boston at year's end.

"We don't talk about the paralysis. Chris has accepted how he is; he does the best he can do with it," Mrs. King says.

"He handles it a lot better than most adults would," says his father.

Christopher studies with a tutor for a few hours a day. He is learning Spanish from other patients and teaches new words to his parents on weekends.

Visits to New Haven are made easier by Rudy King's transfer to Fort Devens, Mass., where he is a National Guard officer. Military insurance helped pay for Christopher's treatment.

As autumn deepens, the Kings find themselves reliving Halloween.

"We won't ever let the kids go trick or treating again. It's just too painful," Mrs. King says. But Christopher intends to celebrate by being a Smurf at a small party in the hospital.

Karen Huff, meanwhile, was so shaken by the tragedy that she could not even get out of her car. She took a leave of absence from work and didn't leave her home for nearly a month.

Police tests showed the car did not fail mechanically, and that drugs and alcohol were not factors.

"If it hadn't been for my husband and cousin (a Pittsfield police officer) I never would have made it through this. I'm just getting to the point now where I don't blame myself," Mrs. Huff says.

The Kings do not blame Mrs. Huff, although they have not spoken to her since the accident.

"She has had enough suffering, too," Mrs. King says, a sadness coming to her soft hazel eyes. "It's coming Halloween."

Novel tells 'what it was really like' in Vietnam

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. (AP) — John Del Vecchio was a 25-year-old combat journalist at a firebase on the edge of the A Shau Valley in Vietnam when the seed was planted for what has become a highly praised novel.

"You write about this place," a soldier told Del Vecchio, "People gotta know what it was really like."

The novel, "The Thirteenth Valley," has gained acclaim from critics and veterans for doing just that.

"When I went over there, I never anticipated doing a book," Del Vecchio said in a recent interview. "Maybe I subconsciously took notes for some articles, but I never thought about a book."

In fact, he became a combat journalist by accident in the Army. The graduate of Lafayette College with a bachelor's degree in psychology and a concentration in civil engineering was drafted in December 1969 and says he was "conscious of wanting to go to Vietnam. I felt at the time that what I was reading in the newspapers was half the story."

Del Vecchio went to journalism school and by 1971 he was in the field with the 101st Airborne, writing "good news" stories for Army publications "like the (soldier who was an) Eskimo who was cold in Vietnam. People don't realize how cold it can get in the mountains in monsoon season."

As a combat correspondent, Del Vecchio would go into the field with a unit for three to five days, spend two days in the rear to resupply and write up the stories and go back out again. He said he traveled with about 12 different infantry companies during his 11 months in Vietnam: "Some were very good, some quite poor. But most were excellent."

But toward the end of his tour, Del Vecchio said he came to realize the risks he was taking. "For example, sometimes I'd go out ahead of the 'point man' on patrol to get photos of the unit coming into a clearing or setting up an ambush."

He downplays winning a Bronze Star in combat: "I just pulled a guy back into the bushes."

From these experiences, and from military archives, he created "The Thirteenth Valley" during an arduous 10-year odyssey in which he wrote the book three times, moved from coast to coast, worked as a carpenter and real estate agent, flirted with bankruptcy, got married, divorced and married again.

It was as difficult an experience as being a soldier in Vietnam, the Stratford, Conn., native said.

Mercilessly graphic in detail, "The Thirteenth Valley" describes the activities of an infantry platoon in the dense jungle of a Vietnam valley that is an enemy stronghold. It makes the reader understand the pain, heat, frustration and boredom of the American infantryman in Vietnam.

While the plot is a composite of several military operations in Vietnam, Del Vecchio said the characters are fictitious.

The novel has some very non-novel aspects, too. There is a glossary of military slang and terms included, along with an extensive chronology of Vietnam history.

Del Vecchio, now 35 and living in a suburb of Danbury, Conn., says he is surprised by the positive reception the book is receiving, although he thinks such a reaction and a revaluation of the U.S. role in Vietnam is overdue.

"One of the lessons we should have learned from Vietnam is that we could fight that type of war successfully. The American soldier in Vietnam was very effective in the long run.

"But for the past decade, the American people have been told that we cannot fight a conventional war and this has led to an emphasis on nuclear arms. That, I think, is very dangerous," the author said.

Clifford Carl Mitchell, convicted in Midland County Feb. 6, 1980, of burglary of a building, was released to Midland County after serving and earning four years of a four-year sentence.

Manuel Olgin Rodriquez, convicted in Midland County Sept. 18, 1978, of possession of heroin, was released to Midland County after serving and earning seven years of a seven-year sentence.

Shirley Whisenhunt, convicted in Ector County April 2, 1982, of forgery, was released to the Department of Public Safety, Austin, after serving and earning two years of a two-year sentence.

GAO report not new

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Health and Human Services spokeswoman says there is "little new" in a General Accounting Office report that says hundreds of committee assignments were juggled at last year's White House Conference on Aging.

The GAO, the investigative arm of Congress, said in an interim report released Thursday that the assignments were changed after the Republican National Committee polled delegates about their political views.

HANDS

What do our hands tell us?

The hands of youth—restless, finger-snapping, rhythm-beating—are searching for answers.

A mother's hands are firm, capable, yet gentle. Dad's hands are big, strong—they represent authority. Grandmother's hands are wrinkled and veined—they tell us about kneading bread . . . and praying. An old man's hands are gnarled and crippled, crossed on a cane, waiting.

Praying hands, working hands, little hands, old hands all grapple with the problems of life.

Some problems are too great to solve alone. It takes a helping hand . . . outstretched to your hand.

With outstretched hands the Church welcomes you, seeks you, extends a joyous invitation to worship God.

The Newspaper BIBLE

THEY JUST WOULDN'T STOP GIVING

Then Moses said to all the people, "This is what the Lord has commanded:

"All of you who wish to, all those with generous hearts, may bring these offerings to Jehovah." (Exodus 35:4-5)

So all the people went to their tents to prepare their gifts. Those whose hearts were stirred by God's Spirit returned with their offerings of materials for the Tabernacle, its equipment, and for the holy garments. Both men and women came, all who were willing-hearted. They brought to the Lord their offerings of gold, jewelry--earrings, rings from their fingers, necklaces--and gold objects of every kind. Others brought blue, purple and scarlet cloth made from the fine-twined linen or goats' hair; and ram skins dyed red, and specially treated goatskins. Others brought silver and bronze as their offering to the Lord.

The women skilled in sewing and spinning prepared blue, purple, and scarlet thread and cloth, and fine-twined linen, and brought them in. Some other women gladly used their special skill to spin the goats' hair into cloth. The leaders brought onyx stones to be used for the ephod and the chestpiece; and spices, and oil--for the light, and for compounding the anointing oil and the sweet incense. So the people of Israel - every man and woman who wanted to assist in the work given to them by the Lord's command to Moses - brought their freewill offerings to Him. (Exodus 35:20-29)

Community celebrated

World Community Day will be celebrated Friday at First Presbyterian Church. The program will begin at 10:30 a.m. in the chapel and a covered dish luncheon will follow in the church's fellowship hall.

World Community Day is a national observance sponsored by Church Women United. It calls Christian women to gather on this day to focus their energies on the crisis of "Scarcity/Abundance" in our world. The annual celebration, observed since World War II, is motivated by the concern of the Church Women United for justice and peace in a global society.

This year's service "Scarcity/Abundance" will look at this universal problem from a Christian perspective. Written by participants in CWU's international Christian Causeways, it draws upon insights gained from these experiences of sharing concerns and building bridges of understanding with Christian women of other countries and cultures.

CWU is the national movement bringing more than a half million Prostestant, Roman Catholic and Orthodox women together into a Christian "community of caring."

World Community Day offerings make possible the mission of CWU, including the Intercontinental Grants for Mission Program that funds projects, national and international, in support of the empowerment of women, human rights, justice and peace.

All women are invited to attend. For more information call Marilyn Hightower at 699-7221.

Hoyt and Marie Eudaly, members of Midland's First Baptist Church, share their experiences from 34 years of missionary service at a recognition program held this month for 27 retiring missionaries at Southern Baptist Foreign Mission Board home offices in Richmond, Va. Some years ago the couple worked in Mexico, and more recently in Nicaragua and El Salvador. The two also spent 25 years at the Baptist Spanish Publishing House in El Paso.

Former football star, singer to speak

Richard Campbell will speak in the morning and evening services at Bellview Baptist Church, 1710 N. Big Spring St., Sunday.

At the 10:50 a.m. service Campbell will share his testimony and will be a part of the church's high attendance day emphasis program. The theme for the day is "Get on Track" with a goal of 375 for Sunday School.

During the evening service Campbell will be featured in concert.

A native of Matador, Campbell graduated from Matador High School where he starred in three sports, receiving football scholarship offers from major universities all over the United States. He chose Texas Tech University, where he was selected to the All-Southwest Conference Team twice and Second Team All-America in 1969.

In January 1970, Campbell was invited to play in two post-season bowl games, the Hula Bowl and the Coaches All-America Game.

It was the coaches All-America game where Campbell's career reached its apex.

Before the contest, Campbell became the first athlete to sing the National Anthem before a game in which he was participating, one which was televised nationally. From his defensive end position, he blocked a punt on the East All Stars 10-yard line and recovered it in the end zone for a touchdown.

Following his graduation from Texas Tech, Campbell pursued a music career. Since 1973, He has been traveling across the United States singing and talking about his conversion through evangelistic crusades. He has recorded four gospel albums.

The church's minister, the Rev. G.A. Magee, invites the public to come and hear Campbell talk.

Church holds seminar on black families

The Rev. Lydia Jackson Furry of Dallas will be the guest speaker at the 11 a.m. service at Hollowell United Methodist Church, 400 South Marshall St., Sunday.

Ms. Furry will also speak at a 3 to 5 p.m. seminar Sunday at the church. Joining Ms. Furry in presenting the seminar will be Dr. Viola M. Coleman, a Midland physician.

The seminar will have as its theme "The Strengths of Black Families and the Role of Black Women." The program is jointly sponsored by the United Methodist Women and the women of the church. A devotional service will precede the seminar at 2:30 p.m.

Ms. Furry is assistant pastor at St. Luke's Community United Methodist Church at Dallas, interim pastor at Wesley United Methodist Church in Pellem and a student at Perkins School of Theology, Southern Methodist University at Dallas, where Ms. Furry is pursuing a master of divinity degree.

At Perkins, she is presently serving as president of the Black Seminarians and working at Channel 13, the public broadcasting station, in the development department.

Her educational background includes a bachelor of arts degree in sociology from Texas Tech University. Ms. Furry has qualified as a licensed trainer in the human development program at San Diego State University. She has also done graduate work in sociology at The University of Texas at Arlington.

Dr. Coleman, a practicing physician on staffs of both Midland Memorial Hospital and Parkview Hospital, received her education at Southern University at Baton Rouge, La., Fisk University and Meharry Medical College at Nashville, Tenn., and Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill.

The church's minister, the Rev. Hadley Edwards, invites the public to attend.

religion in brief

Dr. Hazelip speaks at church

The Golf Course Road Church of Christ, 3500 W. Golf Course road, will feature the nationally known evangelist for the Herald of Truth television and radio programs Sunday.

Dr. Harold Hazelip of Memphis, Tenn., is the dean of the Harding Graduate school at Memphis. He is listed in "Who's Who in American Education," "Who's Who in Religion" and "Outstanding Educators of America."

Hazelip is the principal speaker for both the Herald of Truth television show and the radio program UpReach. Hazelip will speak at 8:30 and 10:40 a.m. as well as teach an auditorium Bible class at 9:30 a.m. His sermon topic is "The Power of Expectation."

The public is invited to attend.

Church hosts breakfast for clergy

ODESSA — Area clergy and their wives are invited to a breakfast Nov. 8 at Westminister Presbyterian Church in Odessa.

Dr. Wayne Oates of Louisville, Ky., will be the featured speaker. His talk will be on "Strengthening the Pastoral Family."

His talk precedes a one-day seminar by Oates at Odessa College where he will speak on "Effective Pastoral Counseling." The OC talk is sponsored by the West Texas Pastoral Counseling Center.

Cost of the breakfast is $2. For more information call 563-4144.

Odessa's Women's Aglow to meet

ODESSA — The Odessa Chapter of Women's Aglow Fellowship meets Wednesday at the Villa Vagabond Inn. An optional buffet luncheon follows at 12:30 p.m.

Patsy Shrauner will be the special speaker. Mrs. Shrauner is well known as a speaker for Christian groups in Odessa and Andrews.

Nursery facilities are available at Morning Star Fellowship Church. Children need to bring a sack lunch. For more information call Ruth Goree at 1-362-7297 or Neomi Myers at 1-368-5324.

Church's youth group surprised

The youth department of the Seventh Day Adventist Church was treated to a surprise party given by Henry and Betty Hardin and their daughters, Angie and Courtney.

The party included a dinner complete with menu; however the items on the menu were not the normal fare. Listed on the menu were such entrees as "on lovers lane," "sunshine bars," "red hearts" and "noise makers" (spoon, carrot sticks, Spanish olives and celery sticks). Translations were not provided for those ordering.

Jehovah's Witnesses go to Abilene

ABILENE — The members of the Midland congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses are attending a two-day assembly in Abilene.

The highlight of the assembly will be the talk by Watchtower district supervisor Frank Bartell on "How Does the Truth Affect Your Life?"

The assembly, which is open to the public, is being held at the Civic Center.

Children wear garb of biblical figures

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Instead of dressing as witches, goblins or ghosts, children are asked to wear the garb of biblical figures for Trinity Church's free Halloween carnival this Saturday night.

"Excluding the devil, he's what we're aiming at," the Rev. Derald McDaniel said Wednesday.

"The supernatural is not just a figment of someone's imagination. We are not trying to make Halloween Christian, but to provide a good, healthy alternative that is fun and exciting."

McDaniel, father of four, said the idea "just came to me five or six years ago, I am not sure how or why, and our Bibleland Costume Carnival has become bigger and better every year."

It is held during "Trick or Treat" night.

The church, affiliated with the Assembly of God, is among the largest in a wealthy section of this suburb of Phoenix. Everyone, regardless of age, religious affiliation or financial status, is welcome at the carnival, which is held on the church parking lot.

Parishioners began months ago preparing booths for 20 Bible-oriented carnival games and arranging entertainment and donations of food, candy, gifts and prizes.

"We make sure every child wins something," McDaniel said.

He estimated the church's out-of-pocket expenses at a few hundred dollars.

The affair last year drew about 500 children and more are expected this time, he said, "because they know they are going to have a real good time."

Most youngsters come dressed as angels and shepherds or Mary and Joseph, the basic Christmas-program types.

"There always are a number of David's and Goliath's — big brother and little brother," McDaniel said. "It was a bit stark, but last year one boy came as John The Baptist, carrying a fake head on a platter."

What about Darth Vader?

"We do get a few, and it doesn't thrill us at all. However, we don't police the costumes all that much. We want the kids off the streets and having fun."

Associate pastor Vern McNally said the Trick or Treat night was planned for this year long before the cyanide deaths in Chicago and subsequent product tampering sparked concern about children being prey to poisoners on Halloween.

RELIGION

Dr. Morris guest speaker

Dr. Harold W. Morris will be the guest speaker for special services being held at the First Church of the Nazarene, Wall Avenue at F Street, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Nov. 7.

Service times are 7 p.m. Wednesday through Friday and 10:45 a.m. and 6 p.m. Sunday.

Morris is retired from the district superintendency of the New Mexico District of the Church of the Nazarene, serving in that position for 16 years. Morris was a pastor for 26 years.

Special music for the services will be provided by the Ballew Singers of Odessa.

Dr. Harold W. Morris

SMU's theology school dean to speak at First Methodist

Dr. James E. Kirby, dean of Perkins School of Theology at Southern Methodist University, will be the speaker Sunday at First United Methodist Church, Main Street at Ohio Avenue.

Kirby became dean at Perkins July 1, 1981. He previously held the same position at Drew Theological Seminary at Madison, N.J. Kirby is the first graduate of Perkins School of Theology to serve as the dean of the school.

A graduate of McMurry College at Abilene, Kirby received his bachelor's of divinity and master's of sacred theology from Perkins School of Theology and his doctorate from Drew University.

Other positions Kirby has held include assistant professor at Sweet Briar College, professor and department head of religion and humanities at Oklahoma University.

Kirby is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. J. Edmund Kirby of Lubbock. His father is a retired minister of the Northwest Texas Conference of the UMC.

Kirby's talk Sunday will be on "New Items for Discussion."

The public is invited to attend.

Dr. James E. Kirby

Mormons publish own King James Bible

NEW YORK (AP) — Mormons have published their own new edition of the King James version of the Bible, coupled with a big section of added materials, and it has received the salutes of an interfaith group.

An "outstanding service to the Bible cause," the Laymen's National Bible Coimmittee said in a citation to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for the new work.

Christian center announces two services

What began eight years ago as a small body of believers has grown into the Life Unlimited Christian center which is announcing two Sunday services beginning this Sunday, rather than one.

Beginning Sunday, service times will be 9:30 and 10:45 a.m. The 9:30 a.m. service will include an adult church service in the main sanctuary and a children's church in the Opera House, with the 10:45 a.m. service being an adult church service. Nurseries will be provided both times.

Sunday School for all ages will begin at 11 a.m. The adult class will meet at the Vagabond Inn. The two adult classes include Bible Principles and Attributes of God.

The 6:30 p.m. Sunday service will remain the same.

All services feature ministry for the deaf.

Life Unlimited Church, I-20 and West County Road South, Exit 115, invites the public to attend its services.

Jessica Savitch proves professor wrong

EDITOR'S NOTE: In college, Jessica Savitch was told by a professor that "there's no place for broads in broadcasting," but the NBC anchorwoman ignored his advice and managed to break through television's "old boys' network." In her book, "Anchorwoman," Savitch describes the changes the broadcasting industry has been through since she started as a radio disc jockey 19 years ago.

By PATRICIA FREEMAN
Hearst Feature Service

Question: How long is it going to be before we have Danielle Rather?

Savitch: (laughter) Soon. Look at how old the male anchors are in the prime-time jobs; they're in their 40s and 50s. How many women have been in the business of anchoring as long as they have, or in reporting as long as they have? I think when the first wave of women anchors and correspondents reachs that age group — maybe in another five or 10 years — we'll see female anchors with Rather's renown.

Q: What brings you to write an autobiograpy after 34 years of life?

A: I'm not a doer of great things — I'm a chronicler of those who do great things. My life and times are not inherently interesting. But there were so many changes since I started my job in radio 20 years ago. It was: "You can't have this job because you're female, your voice isn't hard-hitting, women don't want to watch other women, there's no place for broads in broadcasting," which is what a college professor told me.

Then we went through a stage where the Federal Communications Commission told stations that in order to keep their licenses, they had to hire women. So then I was told, "Well, you have the job only because you're female."

Then we reached the third stage, where we are now. There are still areas where women have not reached upper-level positions in the business, but I think it's only a matter of time.

So, in a short period of time, a lot has happened. I chronicle that — not my life. My experiences are only used to illustrate some of that change.

A: No. In the beginning, women got what I call the three "F" assignments — fashion, features and fluff. Or else they were cookie-correspondents, meaning they covered the governor's wife or the bake sale at the local bazaar.That did not happen to me. I started as a reporter in Texas, and they didn't have the luxury of saying, "Gee, let's not send Jessica on this breaking news story — let's send one of the guys." The guys were out covering something else. So they didn't have the luxury of discrimination.

The days are over, I think, of sending a black reporter to cover a black issue or a woman to cover a feminist issue. There was a time when I would say, "I won't cover that! That's a woman's issue!"

Q: Why?

A: Because I was so sure I was going to be discriminated against, having people do just what you said — which is send a woman out on a woman's story. And, for instance, abortion is not a "woman's issue" — not with all the men who want to have a say in whether or not it should be legal. There's no such thing, really, as a woman's issue and a man's issue.

Q: Do you consider yourself a role model?

A: I never considered myself a role model until I was told I was one. The first time it happened was in Texas when I was asked by a reporter, "How does it feel to lead the women's movement?"

I have felt the pressure that if I fail at my job, I fail not only for myself but for other women coming up the line. Being one of the first women to hold this job is a double responsibility. If I fail, it is likely that people will say, "See, women can't handle the job."

Q: Nancy Dickerson said that women have to be twice as good to get half as far.

A: I don't necessarily think a woman has to work twice as hard to get half as far. It's not quite as hard as it used to be. She has to battle new myths, such as that women can't get old on television. How many older women on television do you see now? Most of us are in our 30s and 40s.

Q: It seems that the phenomenon you're talking about is a problem for women in every walk of life. Often, an older woman is not viewed in the same light as an older man.

A: Yes. It's the same as when you say a man is aggressive — that means he's a go-getter, he's tough, he's incisive. You say a woman is aggressive, and it's negative.

Cocaine abuser had 'the rope around my neck'

WINONA, Minn. (AP) — "I had the rope around my neck."

That's how close Peter Oehler came to committing suicide in February.

There had been a week of snorting cocaine, smoking it, speedballing — mixing it with heroin and injecting it into his veins.

In one year, the 30-year-old dairy farmer from Winona estimated, he had spent $80,000 for cocaine. He had lied to his wife, Joey, run up debts and conned his father out of "a lot" of money, he said.

Oehler said he had sold cocaine to finance a habit so severe he was snorting it every five minutes. And the drug no longer had an effect.

Oehler said when he began using cocaine at Breck High School in Minneapolis at age 15, he got euphoric. At the end, 15 years later, he said he used it merely to try to get over his depression.

"I couldn't feel any sorrow for Joey or anybody around me," Oehler said. "I was just a complete blah. Deep down, I was really hurting. I was confused. I knew I couldn't continue on the way I was."

Adding to the confusion was his loss of memory. He couldn't remember parts of his and Joey's wedding or much about the birth of their daughter, Alicia, who is now 4 years old.

One week in February after he took Joey and Alicia to visit Joey's parents and then returned home to his cocaine, a friend talked to him about seeking treatment. The next day, Oehler walked down to the basement of his home and put the noose around his neck.

"I was very, very sedated and I didn't know what was coming or going. I wanted to feel some real pain," he said, adding that he was paranoid. "It was like falling through a tunnel — I had no escape and everything was closing in on me."

But Oehler stopped and removed the noose because "I really wanted to live. I think I knew there had to be something better." So he entered treatment to rid himself of the psychological dependence that was ruining his life.

Oehler, a powerful man with strong arms and blunt farmer's hands, described his growing dependence on cocaine recently as he sat in the living room of the house on the 400-acre farm near Winona that he and Joey began renting in April.

After graduating from high school, Oehler said, he "snorted" — inhaled the fine powder through his nose — every day for two or three years but had his use under control. "I knew what I was doing. It was acceptable in my circle."

In 1973, Oehler enrolled in the two-year dairy program at the University of Minnesota Technical College in Waseca, where he met Joey, who was studying horticulture. Oehler said he used cocaine about once a month then.

President attacks bafflegab

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The federal bureaucracy, never one to earn praise from Ronald Reagan, is getting new licks from the president. He has resurrected a term for his fellow residents of the nation's capital: bafflegabbers.

"The source of our economic problems is even beginning to dawn on the bafflegabbers and those fancy dudes in Washington," the president said at a speech in Great Falls, Mont., earlier this week before he flew here on a two-day western political trip.

Apparently the only people who knew what the word meant were the president and his deputy press secretary, Larry Speakes.

"They know who they are," said Speakes. "People who talk in circles — isn't that right?"

That is right. The Dictionary of American Slang defines bafflegab as "the ambiguous, verbose and sometimes incomprehensible talk or writing often done by bureaucrats."

The dictionary says that the word, "steadily gaining in use" was dreamed up by a young lawyer named Milton A. Smith of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. The year of its birth: 1952.

In his "Dictionary of American Politics," columnist William Safire says the word runs behind "gobbledygook" and "officialese" in popular usage.

Safire cites a newspaper interview in which Smith explained "we needed a new and catchy word to describe the utter incomprehensibility, ambiguity, verbosity and complexity of government regulations."

For the most part, they keep on swinging to the right in Europe

LONDON (AP) — Spain's choice of the Socialist left in Thursday's election follows a similar trend in France, Greece and Sweden. But elsewhere in Western Europe, the recent swing has been mostly to the right.

Specific reasons behind the political shifts vary in each country. But in many cases, the key issues are the same — a deepening European recession, including record unemployment; rapid inflation that some see as tied to high U.S. interest rates; and East-West relations.

Here is a country-by-country breakdown:

SPAIN: THE Socialist Workers Party triumphed in Thursday's elections, winning a parliamentary majority that enables party leader Felipe Gonzalez to become the first Socialist premier since Gen. Francisco Franco's fascists won the 1936-39 Civil War. The vote, in which the rightist Popular Alliance was runner-up, reflected the polarization of Spanish politics since Franco's death seven years ago.

France — Socialist President Francois Mitterrand's 1979 election victory ended a run of conservative governments which had lasted for two decades. He took four Communists into his Cabinet, hoping to insure peace with organized labor. But after pursuing an expansionist policy with a large-scale infusion of public money, Mitterrand has been forced to retreat to an austerity program that has triggered labor strikes.

Greece — Andreas Papandreou led his Panhellenic Socialist Movement to victory in October 1981, giving Greece its first non-conservative government since 1965. Papandreou promised radical domestic reforms, including nationalization, and suggested Greece would pull out of NATO and the Common Market. But he has had second thoughts and has moderated.

Sweden — Olof Palme bucked a recent rightist trend in Northern Europe by bringing his Social Democrats to power last month, ending liberal Sweden's experiment with "conservatism." He dropped plans by the previous right-of-center government to trim welfare spending. But he has asserted a tough new defense posture, partly provoked by persistent reports of suspected Soviet-bloc submarines prowling neutral Sweden's coast.

West Germany — Conservative Christian Democrat Helmut Kohl ousted Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, leader of the worker-oriented Social Democratic Party, on Oct. 1 in a parliamentary vote. Liberal leader Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who abandoned Schmidt because of bitter disputes about economic spending, joined Kohl as he pledged to trim the budget. But Kohl has only announced measures similar to Schmidt's. At the same time, Genscher's Free Democrats have lost ground to a newly emerging third party, the ecology-minded Greens. Kohl has promised elections in March.

BRITAIN: CONSERVATIVE Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who defeated Labor in 1979, still enjoys high popularity in the polls, above Labor and the new Liberal-Social Democratic alliance. Mrs. Thatcher has pursued a tight-spending policy and denationalized many industries, but has been faced with record unemployment. She is expected to call elections next year ahead of the May 1984 end of her five-year term. In special parliamentary elections Thursday, seen as an indicator of voter mood, the Labor Party did not score the decisive victory it hoped for.

Italy — Moderate-centrist Giovanni Spadolini, leading a five-party coalition excluding only the Communists and neo-Fascists, survived a crisis in August and came back with the same team. But the Socialists, led by dynamic Bettino Craxi, have steadily gained at the polls, offering an alternative to the two major parties, the Christian Democrats and the Communists. In 1981 local elections, Socialists scored their biggest gains in a decade.

The Netherlands — The center-left coalition led by Andries Van Agt fell in May when the Labor Party walked out. In September parliamentary elections, Labor got the largest number of seats but the coalition now being formed is made up of Christian Democrats and right-wing Liberals. It appears certain to enforce conservative fiscal policies and tighten up the traditional welfare state.

Denmark — In September, Denmark got its first Conservative prime minister, Poul Schleuter, in 81 years, and its first non-Socialist government since 1975. Schleuter pushed through an austerity program.

Norway — A year ago, a non-Socialist majority of several parties toppled the government of Social Democratic Labor Party chairwoman Gro Harlem Brundtland. Kaare Willoch, a Conservative, formed a one-party minority government, the first under Conservative colors in Norway in 50 years and the first non-Socialist government since 1973.

BELGIUM: CHRISTIAN Democrat Wilfried Vartens took power a year ago, campaigning on a platform of austerity to defeat a center-left coalition. Shifting to

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Democrat Frank Lautenberg said from the start that he, too, was enamored by the distinctive charm of Republican Rep. Millicent Fenwick, his much better known opponent. But that didn't stop him from insisting he would make a better senator.

Now the race that once seemed certain to land Mrs. Fenwick in the Senate appears to be a dead heat.

Making his first stab at public office, Lautenberg was a virtual unknown until he defeated eight rivals in the Democratic primary last June. Even now, New Jersey voters sometimes confuse him with a GOP gubernatorial hopeful from neighboring New York.

Nevertheless, Lautenberg has erased a 19-point gap in the polls to pull even with the 72-year-old Mrs. Fenwick.

A poll completed this week for The Record of Hackensack found 42 percent of those who said they were likely to vote favoring Mrs. Fenwick and 41 percent favoring Lautenberg. Seventeen percent were undecided.

The telephone survey of 1,061 people has a margin of error of 3 percent.

Mrs. Fenwick had a 39-20 lead in a similar poll taken in September.

Lautenberg and Mrs. Fenwick are locked in an increasingly acrimonious campaign in a state where the unemployment rate is 9.2 percent.

Both agree that the key issue is jobs, and both spend much time — and money — describing what they have done and will do to bring jobs to the state.

But personalities are a major factor in the race for the seat that Harrison A. Williams Jr. resigned after facing near-certain expulsion because of his Abscam convictions.

"I'm running against a person the press loves," Lautenberg said recently. "I like her, but she's not equipped to do this job."

Mrs. Fenwick, a pipe-smoking former fashion model, magazine editor, state consumer affairs director and model for Lacey Davenport of Doonesbury comics, has been well known to New Jersey voters for years.

Recommendations lead to 10 pardons

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Ten persons sent to prison from the West Texas area have been paroled by Gov. Bill Clements upon the recommendations of the Board of Pardons and Paroles.

Sammie Busey, convicted in Midland County April 16, 1981, of robbery and bail jumping, has been released to Midland County after serving and earning three years and five months of a five-year sentence.

Jessie Chavarria, convicted in Howard County March 17, 1982, of burglary, has been released to Tarrant County after serving and earning one year and one month of a three-year sentence.

Johnny Dean Darden, convicted in Howard County Dec. 29, 1981, of theft over $200, and in Tom Green County Dec. 1, 1981, of forgery, has been released to Lubbock County after serving and earning one year and 10 months of a five-year sentence.

Republican interest in Maine contest less than enthusiastic

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

BANGOR, Maine — There are many races Republicans are trying to win this year. Maine may be the one they are trying to give away.

Two weeks ago, Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon, chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, held a Washington news conference in which he claimed Republicans had good chances of beating incumbent Democratic senators not only in Montana and Nevada, but in such seemingly long-shot contests as those in Mississippi and Ohio.

"What about Maine?" he was asked.

"No comment," he replied, sending shock waves through this state and producing headlines that the national party was writing off Rep. David F. Emery's challenge to Democratic Sen. George J. Mitchell.

To offset the damage of the Packwood news conference, the Emery campaign leaked a set of tracking-poll numbers by a friendly pollster, showing the 34-year-old challenger within 1½ percentage points of the 49-year-old Mitchell, who was appointed to the Senate in 1980 when former senator Edmund S. Muskie became secretary of state.

But Republicans outside the Emery campaign still whispered that Mitchell was more than 10 points up and seemingly holding firm.

It was one more in a series of incidents in which the GOP has seemingly gone out of its way to smooth the Democrat's path to election. Meanwhile, Mitchell appeals openly and successfully for GOP votes.

He cites Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., to rebut Emery's contention that in supporting cutbacks in President Reagan's defense spending plans, he has jeopardized national security or jobs in Maine.

And when Emery challenges Mitchell's opposition to the balanced-budget amendment, as he did in a debate here Thursday, Mitchell quotes the leader of the Maine Republicans, Sen. William S. Cohen, who also voted against the amendment as "a sham...a diversion."

Mitchell has the flexibility to seek Republican votes, because he has solid support from the political organization of Democratic Gov. Joseph E. Brennan, who appointed him to the seat and is on his way to an easy second-term victory. He also has strong backing from organized labor and environmental groups.

Emery, on the other hand, has had only token support from his popular Republican colleague, Rep. Olympia Snowe, the holder of Maine's other House seat, who wanted the Senate nomination herself. And in a state famous for ticket-splitting, it is not uncommon to see cars with leftover Reagan strips and fresh Mitchell stickers.

Emery started from behind two months ago, after squandering an early lead in an expensive computerized mail effort so studded with errors that it rebounded. During the summer, mailings to veterans' and elderly groups, criticizing Mitchell, were denounced as "distortions" in the Maine press, damaging the credibility of a challenger who had virtual immunity from criticism during his eight years in the House. Under pressure from national GOP strategists, who had earlier counted the seat as almost certain, Emery dumped his old campaign staff and hired Cohen's two top assistants to run the rescue effort.

Since Tom Daffron became campaign manager and Bob Tyrer press secretary, the Emery campaign has scored more points against Mitchell than it has given away.

New television ads tried to outflank Mitchell by depicting him as an elitist. Though Mitchell is the son of immigrant factory workers, his Bowdoin education, corporate law practice and career as a U.S. attorney and federal judge have stamped him as a member of the establishment.

Emery, by contrast, went to Worcester Polytechnic and was elected twice to the state Legislature and four times to the House before trying for the Senate.

Another ad, criticizing Mitchell's vote against the 1982 tax bill, said that the other three members of the Maine delegation had joined with President Reagan, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., House Speaker Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., and others in a bipartisan effort "to close tax loopholes and expose tax evaders."

Former legislator sentenced

WINDSOR, N.C. (AP) — Former state Rep. Ron Taylor has been sentenced to 20 years in prison for burning three warehouses belonging to business competitor and fellow legislator J.J. "Monk" Harrington.

Taylor, 30, a Democrat who represented Bladen County for four terms, had pleaded guilty to unlawful burning and conspiracy in the fires that destroyed the warehouses April 23. He was sentenced Thursday and ordered to begin serving the term immediately.

Two co-defendants also were sentenced on Thursday. Graham Bridgers of Clarkton was given 20 years for conspiracy and unlawful burning, and Howard Watts, also of Clarkton, got 30 years for conspiracy.

University paper cited

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — A Michigan State University fraternity and the school newspaper have been cited for racial harassment because of a fraternity advertisement featuring a statue of a grinning black man.

The ad, placed in The State News by the Theta Chi fraternity to recruit members, drew protests from campus blacks. The fraternity and the paper were cited by the school's Anti-Discrimination Judicial Board on Oct. 22. The decision was announced Thursday.

Theta Chi, which already was on probation because of the ad, and the paper were ordered, among other things, to conduct cross-cultural awareness sessions and institute affirmative action programs.

Defense allowed

BISBEE, Ariz. (AP) — A judge has allowed two lawyers from Chicago to help defend 10 members of Miracle Valley church charged in a confrontation with police where a church leader was killed.

Superior Court Judge Matthew Borowiec made the ruling Thursday, despite prosecution objections that the move would increase publicity and jeopardize a fair trial.

The defendants are charged with aggravated assault on a peace officer in last Saturday's melee on church property, when sheriff's deputies tried to serve arrest warrants on three members of the Christ Miracle Healing Center and Church.

Suspect cleared

VAN WERT, Ohio (AP) — A man arrested on a parole violation and questioned in the brutal slaying of a postmistress has been cleared in the murder, officials say.

Marion "Sonny" Baumgardner, 45, provided a verifiable alibi Thursday for his whereabouts the day of Betty Jane Mottinger's disappearance in Elgin, said Postal Inspector Tom Strausbaugh.

Mrs. Mottinger was abducted the morning of Aug. 9. Her body was found in a soybean field near Findlay five weeks later. She had been stabbed 12 times.

Lee, Odessa share 2nd heading into final week

Midland Lee's "No Name" Rebels taught themselves a valuable lesson in Friday night's 28-3 victory over Abilene Cooper at Memorial Stadium. It's a lot more fun to dominate than squeeze by.

Domination is the key word for the Rebels' seventh victory of the season. The defense was again superb, but the offense came out of a two-week slumber to erupt for 306 total yards and 28 points. That's 20 points more than they have put on the boards in the last two weeks of play. And is was fun.

Of course, the victory placed the Rebels one victory and an Odessa High loss away from its first state playoff berth since 1976. And nearly everyone in the state feels that Odessa High will lose next week against No. 1 Odessa Permian. So, most feel the Rebels will be playoff bound if they can take care of Midland High, a task that won't be an easy chore, but it is a better prospect than having to beat a Permian.

When the Rebels mix an opportunistic passing game with its vaunted running game, Lee appears to be uncontrolable. When the passing game doesn't work so well, the Rebels can be an average football team. Both worked against the 2-7 Cougars Friday.

But again it was a "No Name" attack that did the job. Clarence Smith was the leading rusher for Lee with a mere 49 yards, but Coach Spike Dykes sent his usual wave of runners at Cooper for a combined 220 yards rushing. In all, Dykes used 13 running backs.

And what made it all go was the passing arms of Paul Cox and Mike Mercurio, who combined on five of 11 passes for 86 yards and three touchdowns. Cox tossed two TD passes, one a five yarder to Mike Barton and another of 35 yards to Damon Polk, who deserves most of the credit since he turned Cooper's Michael Williams into a ball of snow by out acting the safety for the TD. Mercurio hit Luther Johnson with a 27-yard TD bomb on a perfect sideline run and throw play.

Smith added a third period TD with a three-yard run and Kerry Robertson toed all four extra point tries.

And the Lee defense never let Cooper come close to getting the upper hand. The Rebs held the Cooper running game to a mere 70 yards rushing, forcing quarterback Tommy Tarr to go to the air 27 times. Tarr completed 10 for 133 yards, but was intercepted twice by Johnson and Reggie Ellis. Tarr wanted to pass more, but Lee's defensive ends Scott Ackroyd and John Denton were unrelentless in their rush and Ellis played in the Cooper backfield.

Ellis had a phenominal night, maybe his best of the year, and that is saying a lot for the junior linebacker.

The Lee defense pounced on three Cooper fumbles to go with the two interceptions. It was a well-rounded night, one Lee can easily live with.

Lee's first touchdown was set up when Eric Cooper pounced on a Tarr fumble at the Cooper 18. It took only four plays to score when Cox connected with Barton on a corner pool shot.

Cooper didn't die then. The Cougars got a first quarter field goal from 27 yards out from Dan Worsham to narrow the margin to 7-3. A 21-yard pass from Tarr to Scott Kendrick set up the field goal.

Lee controlled the ball most of the way from there, but it was three series later before Lee could widen the margin again. Johnson returned a Cooper punt from the Lee 34 to the Cooper 47 to set in motion a four-play, 47-yard drive. That's when Cox hit Polk for 35 yards. Polk cut in front of Williams, made an acrobatic catch with Williams on his left shoulder, and then made a move to the right only to find only the goal line in his path.

But Johnson wanted some of the glory too. So he came back with an interception of a Tarr pass and returned it from the Lee 35 to the Cooper 42 where a 15-yard penalty put Lee at the 27. Mercurio rewarded Johnson by calling his number three plays later and Lee led 21-3 with 0:58 left in the half. The game was over.

But Lee didn't quit there. They got to the Cooper 10 on the opening drive of the third period where Robertson missed a 29-yard field goal try, killing a 60-yard bid for a score.

However Leonard Freeman got a Cooper fumble two plays later at the Cougar 18 and Lee took it in in six plays with Smith getting the final three. The big play was a Mercurio to Johnson aerial over the middle for 13 yards.

It was then a matter of running out the clock as Dykes put everyone in uniform on the field.

Lee's playoff destiny is still not in its own hands, but with OHS having to beat Permian, it's a good shot. And the Bulldogs vaulted right back into the thick of the race with a 21-0 win over Abilene High. So next Friday's intercity clash becomes the biggest game that series has had in many moons.

Odessa upsets San Angelo; Permian wins

Odessa Permian nailed down the District 4-5A football title Friday night with a 31-7 victory over the Big Spring Steers and Odessa High moved to within one victory of owning 4-5A's second place playoff berth with a come-from-behind 17-14 win over the San Angelo Bobcats.

Permian is the outright district winner and OHS has to defeat Permian next Friday to be sure of gaining the playoffs. If Permian wins that game, and is heavilyfavored to do so, Midland Lee could gain the berth with a win over Midland High. Should OHS and Lee lose Friday while MHS and San Angelo win, there would be a four-way tie for second place and a flip of the coin will decide the winner.

Freddie Alvarez' 22-yard fourth quarter field goal lifted OHS to its win over San Angelo, breaking a 14-14 tie. San Angelo led in the first period 6-0 on a 17-yard run by Greg Thomas, but Odessa High came back to take the win.

Permian had little trouble with the Steers, jumping to a 21-0 lead before Big Spring could get on the boards. Big Spring's third quarter TD is only the third touchdown scored against Permian this year in district play.

Stingy Dawgs stun Eagles with offense

By BOB BRUNDAGE

ABILENE—The Midland High Bulldogs, using a strong balanced offensive attack, combined with the pursuing gang-tackling, stingy defense, rolled to a 21-0 victory over Abilene High Friday night in a District 4-5A encounter at P.E. Shotwell Stadium.

A balanced offensive attack? Yes, it's true. Once they overcame an early slow start, the Midland High offense showed balance, not to mention authority, as they picked up a crucial victory to keep their state playoff hopes alive.

With Mark Page completing 11 of 18 passes for 178 yards, one touchdown and no interceptions, the Bulldogs were able to open up a ground attack led by I-back Ricky Madrid, who had a 138 yards on 25 carries.

Using three primary receivers, tight end Chuck Dickenson, wide receivers Todd Shiplet and Allen Foret, Page picked apart the Eagle defense.

Foret, a sophomore recently called up to the varsity, made the first reception of the night near the end of the first quarter, a 16-yard gain that was the first first down for either team.

THAT ONE pass completion seemed to open up the way for a previously non-existent rushing attack and it lasted until the Bulldogs were on the Abilen 20 when Dickenson came in to attempt his first field goal of the night. He missed, but Abilene was in a hole and the always stubborn Junkyard Dawgs dug in.

After three plays, punter Matt Waldman was called on. The result was a 50-yard kick.

After the return to the MHS 44, Page developed a hot hand while his receivers seemed unable to drop anything they could get close to. His first two passes went to Dickenson for 14 and 15 yards and then he hit a 15-yarder to Shiplet to put the ball on the AHS 11. Madrid ran to the seven before the Bulldogs were rewarded for their efforts when Page hit his fourth straight pass of the drive, completed to Foret. Dickenson kicked the point with seven minutes left in the half.

PAGE PICKED up where he left off on Midland's previous possession with two more completions for six straight and added a 20-yard run of his own. Shiplet caught a 15-yarder to move the ball to the MHS 45, Madrid got five more, then Page's run moved it to the AHS 30.

Foret, running toward the middle of the field near the end zone, turned an apparent incomplete pass into a reception with a diving catch at the two. Madrid punched the ball over on the next play and Dickenson's conversion made it 14-0.

A third quarter threat by Midland reached the Eagle 17 when Dickenson missed his second field goal.

Abilene gave the Dawgs the biggest scare of the night early in the fourth period when they marched 71 yards for first and goal at the MHS five. It was still third and five when defensive back Jay Harkrider was hit with a pass interference call in the end zone to give the Eagles first down on the one. The Junkyard Dawgs rose to the occasion. They stopped Abilene's attempts inside and outside and on the fourth down finally hauled fullback Darrell Denman at the four.

Two possessions later, MHS closed the door for good by giving the ball to Madrid on three consecutive carries, for 13 yards, three and then a 45-yard TD run. Dickenson converted.

"We had to throw the ball tonight. There was no way we were gonna run it," said an elated Pat Culpepper after the game. "They were too big and too tough up front for us to run on. Our two wide receivers are fine athletes and they are smart. Some of those patterns they ran were ones they adjusted after seeing the kind of coverage Abilene was in. And Mark Page was able to get it to them."

Page was as elated with his own performance on the night as he was with victory. He couldn't believe the 178 yards and he credited his success to the offensive line, "The line did a great job tonight, because if I was sacked at all, it was only once."

Next week Midland faces Midland Lee at Memorial Stadium.

"A hat that's too small, all afternoon without a chaw...and you won't me to smile. And today they're bringing me to Lubbock's Jones Stadium, another rug."

There is a Texas Tech

Raiders return home to face Texas

LUBBOCK—Yes, Virginia, Texas Tech does have a football team, just ask Washington, and football-starved fans will have an opportunity to see it for themselves at 2 p.m. in Jones Stadium when the Red Raiders take on Texas.

This will be Tech's first home appearance since the late 1970s, or so it seems. Actually, Tech played Baylor here Sept. 25, but has been on the road four straight weekends. The Raiders were 2-2, not bad, considering the wins were over Texas A&M and Rice and the losses came at the hands top-10ers Arkansas and Washington.

However, they again will be a 7-point underdog against Texas, coming off a 30-17 loss to SMU, but the usual capacity-plus crowd of more than 50,000 will be in the stands.

On Washington, Tech Coach Jerry Moore says, "You can't make mistakes against the No. 1 team in the nation and win. When we had the ball and a 3-0 lead with 11 minutes left, I thought it would be hard for them to score a TD on us if we could make two or three first downs and pin them deep in their own territory."

On Texas, "We are looking forward to playing them in Lubbock, actually just playing anybody in Lubbock.

COACH FRED Akers and the Longhorns are still reflecting on the fluke pass that turned last week's game against SMU around. "The two big plays that hurt us were not your usual, well executed big plays. Sometimes someone's mistake turns out o be their biggest gain, and I think that's what happened for SMU. It's like the fellow said, 'if you fall in a mudhole, you better check your pocket. You might have a big fish,'" Akers said.

Still, Akers hasn't forgotten Tech, "Tech is a much better team than people perceive them to be. Last year, Washington had a tough time with them...the difference this year and last is that last year they had 15 starters injured."

You can also bet Akers will remind his Longhorns that Tech has won three of the last four against UT in Lubbock.

SOUTHERN Methodist and Arkansas, two teams on a Nov. 20 collision course, were heavy favorites to bully two of their Southwest Conference bretheren in home games Saturday.

It's homecoming for the No. 4-ranked and unbeaten Mustangs, who are 7-0 overall and 4-0 in the SWC, and the Texas Aggies will provide the opposition.

Oddsmakers rated SMU a 10-point favorite in the regionally televised (CBS) contest.

No. 5-ranked and unbeaten Arkansas was a whopping 30-point pick to give the Rice Owls their eighth consecutive loss. The site is Fayetteville, where the Hogs are always tough.

TCU has never beaten Houston in six tries.

SMU's All-American tailback Eric Dickerson said being big favorites over the Aggies doesn't mean a thing.

"We're getting to the point now where everybody wants to knock us off," Dickerson said. "If somebody can beat us, they can knock us out of the Cotton Bowl.

"I guess you have made a lot of progress when you get to the point where everybody is pointing at you. It seems we're generating a lot of hatred out there."

SMU Coach Bobby Collins said the Aggie game "is very important for us because it comes on the heels of a big emotional win. We've got to quit thinking about Texas and put that behind us."

HE ADDED, "This conference will just chew you up. You have to be ready all the time. I've been out of a conference for seven years (Collins came to SMU from independent Southern Mississippi) and I'm just remembering the rivalries that build up and the emotion that goes into a conference game.

"I'm getting caught up in all this excitement and I have to calm myself down at times."

Brad Boynton saves Andrews

SNYDER — Brad Boynton's 18-yard field goal here Friday night lifted the Andrews Mustangs to a narrow 9-6 victory over the 1-7 Snyder Tigers in a key District 2-AAAA football contest.

The victory gives the Mustangs sole possession of second place in the district race since Monahans lost to Pecos Friday. The Mustangs still have two games to play in district play, but they now control their own destiny.

Andrews got on the board first in the second period when quarterback Bill Morrison dialed Leo Ruiz for a 20-yard scoring strike, but Snyder came back in the same period when David Nicholson hit Chad Peterson for a 34-yard scoring toss. Neither team hit the extra point as Boynton missed his try for Andrews and Snyder's David Delcy did the same.

It stayed that way until Boynton made up for his second period mistake with an 18-yard field goal to win the game.

Andrews had over 300 yards in total offense to Snyder's 190, but the Tigers kept Andrews out of the end zone.

Snyder's only win this year has come against Lamesa. Snyder is 1-4 in loop play while Andrews is 4-1 and closing in on a playoff berth.

Eden clinches 7-A South Zone title

EDEN—Eden's Bulldogs clinched the District 7-A South Zone championship with a 36-16 win over the Greenwood Rangers here Friday night.

Greenwood jumped to an early lead when Stuart Burleson kicked a 26-yard FG 1:40 into the second period and then passes to John Ellis for 10 yards and a TD with 7:10 left in the half.

Eden, now 6-0 and 8-0-1, stormed back as James Rannefeld passed 73-yards to Junior Madders for one touchdown and Benny Robles return an interception 27 yards for scores to make it 16-10 at half.

Rannefeld recovered a fumble for a TD with 9:59 left in the third period and it was 24-10. Burleson scored with 9:50 left in the fourth period from four yards out, but Eden came back on a 20-yard run by Robles and an 11-yard Junior Medders to James Nicholas pass.

Robles rushed 13 times for 74 yards and James Medders caught two passes for 93 yards. Bill Branks led Greenwood with 77 yards on 19 carries.

STANTON — The Stanton Buffaloes clinched at leaast a tie for the District 8-AA title with a 20-16 victory over the Wall Hawks here Friday night and insured themselves of a state AA playoff berth in the process.

But the celebrating isn't over because Stanton must travel to McCamey next week to take on the Badgers.

Wall and Reagan County also face each other and any of the four teams can

McCamey rallies for 35-27 victory

ELDORADO—McCamey's Badgers, trailing 21-6 in the third quarter, roared back to beat Eldorado, 35-27, in a wild District 8-2A football game Friday night that kept the Badgers in the race for second place.

McCamey is now 3-1 and 6-3, a game back of Stanton and the Badgers close the season at Slaton next week.

Eddie Venegas started McCamey on its come back with an 11-yard run with 8:18 left in the third period, culminating a 56-yard drive. Jodee Stephens then scored on a one-yard run and countered again on a two yard plunge after a fumble recovery at the Eldorado 26 set up the score. David Acosta made the recovery. That made it 28-21 and Eldorado scored on a 71-yard pass from Michael Phillips to Jeff Harlin, but the two-point try failed and D. Stephens TD from the five on a Ray Zarate pass with 59 seconds left finally nailed it down.

Score by periods:

McCamey	0 6 22 7—35
Eldorado	0 14 7 6—27

M—Ray Zarate, 1-run (kick fail).
E—Doug Ussery, 90-run (Danny Pina kick).
E—Jeff Hamlin, 1-run (Pina kick).
E—Ussery, 54-run (Pina kick).
M—Eddie Venegas, 11-run.
M—J Stephens, 2-run (J. Stephens pass).

NFLPA hits owners with labor charge

WASHINGTON (AP) — Less than 24 hours before the resumption of National Football League talks, the union Friday filed an unfair labor practice charge accusing Jack Donlan and Al Davis of trying to bargain directly with the striking players.

The complaint was filed with the Washington, D.C., headquarters of the National Labor Relations Board and relayed to the New York regional office, which is considering other similar charges in the football dispute.

Friday's complaint names Donlan, executive director of the NFL's Management Council, the owners' bargaining unit; Davis, boss of the Los Angeles Raiders; and Marvin Bemoff, an attorney for Davis.

THEY ARE accused of violating the National Labor Relations Act by seeking to circumvent the union, the authorized bargaining agent for the professional football players, by going directly to player representatives with the proposed "Davis plan" for settling the strike.

Ed Garvey, executive director of the union, said in a statement: "They are polling the player reps on the so-called Davis plan. Clearly, that violates the act and we are outraged by the fact that on the eve of the negotiations, just after Jack Donlan finished talking to the general counsel (William Lubbers of the NLRB), they now start calling the player reps directly."

He would not identify which player reps had been contacted.

"And I think it's time the commissioner of the National Football League (Pete Rozelle) get hold of the situation on their side, tell them to start obeying the law and get to the table and get this thing resolved," Garvey said.

ON THURSDAY, Donlan met with Lubbers for nearly five hours, seeking to convince him not to press for an injuction to force the Management Council to bargain on the union's demand for a wage scale.

The text of the complaint accuses Davis, Donlan and Bemoff of "attempting to undermine the union leadership, particularly President Gene Upshaw, by telling individual players that Al Davis can "take care of" Upshaw and make him agree to "the Davis plan." Upshaw is a guard on the Raiders, Davis' team.

The union's complaint, in effect, charges that Davis has behaved as an agent of the NFL Management Council by contacting player representatives directly on his proposal. And it accuses Davis of acting as Donlan's agent in such polling of player reps.

Earlier Friday, Donlan said that, contrary to rumors, no new contract proposal would be on the table when negotiations resume Saturday. "Despite what you have been hearing, I can tell you we don't have an offer for them," he said.

THE SO-CALLED Davis proposal offers across-the-board salary increases to current players.

The owners believe it is the union which will make the next move. "We fully expect the union to make a new proposal," said New England Patriots executive Chuck Sullivan, chairman of the owners' executive committee.

Barring a dramatic move by either side, the negotiations will resume under the direction of mediator Sam Kagel the way they were recessed last Saturday after 12 days in Cockeysville, Md.: with the union insisting that a wage scale tied to a central fund must be part of the collective bargaining agreement and the Management Council insisting the players must drop that concept before any progress can be made.

Sullivan suggested that something's got to happen at the table because "Kagel doesn't want to have to go through what transpired at Cockeysville," and that "it could be a very short meeting" if the players don't come up with a new proposal.

The strike is in its 39th day and has forced the league to call off six regular-season weekends of play, two of which it says could be made up.

NEW YORK (AP) — The slender thread that bound Bowie Kuhn to his job as commissioner of baseball appeared to be unraveling Friday, only three days before team owners were scheduled to vote on his re-election.

Kuhn, whose second seven-year term expires on Aug. 31, 1983, was faced with the prospect of losing his job over four votes in the National League, and even owners who supported the commissioner seemed to be losing hope.

To be re-elected, Kuhn needs nine votes in the 12-member National League and 10 in the 14-member American League. He has at least 11 votes in the AL for re-election, but the four NL owners opposed to his re-election last summer have not wavered from their position.

The opposition was led by August A. Busch Jr. of St. Louis, Nelson Doubleday of the New York Mets, John McMullen of the Houston Astros and Ted Turner of the Atlanta Braves. Two other owners, William Williams of Cincinnati and Andrew J. McKenna of the Chicago Cubs, were loosely aligned with the NL opposition, but it was not known if they would vote against re-election.

Haas claims sole possession of Disney lead

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Jay Haas, winner of two titles in his last three starts, compiled another 6-under-par 66 and moved into sole control of the lead Friday in the second round of the $400,000 Walt Disney World Classic, the final official event on the 10-month PGA Tour schedule.

Haas birdied the first three holes he played, then had to work hard to keep it going, missing the green on three of the last five holes on the 6,917-yard Palm course, one of three resort layouts being used for the first three days of this tournament.

"I guess I got tired out there. It was kind of a long day," said Haas, who was the last man off the tee.

Howard Twitty, a non-winner for two long seasons, also had a 66 at the 6,655-yard Lake Buena Vista course and was one shot off the pace at 133.

"Hey, I guess there's some life left in the old dog yet, huh?" said Twitty, who has suffered through a difficult year in which he has missed the cut in 16 of 35 starts.

Hal Sutton, who already has set a rookie money-winning record of $165,434, had what he called "definitely by best round as a pro," a 9-under-par 63 at Lake Buena Vista that lifted him into sole possession of third at 134.

Tied at 135, nine under par, were former PGA champ Larry Nelson, Dan Pohl and J. C. Snead.

Senor Sack for All-America

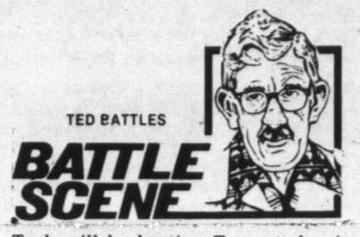
After his performance against Washington last week, Rivera is on a list, the All-America list of everybody-who-has-seen-him. Senor Sack made eight tackles, batted down four passes, sacked the quarterback for an 11-yard loss and generally made a nuisance of himself in a personal vendetta against the Huskies.

Six-three and 280 pounds, not much mobility, but just try to get around him. That's the general impression, but films of Tech's game against Arkansas showed the Senior spotting a Razorback flyer half the width of the field and 10 yards and catching him from behind like he was standing still.

It was kind of like one of those highlight films you'll see of long TD runs by some speedster. The commentator raves about the back's ability to go all the way. "All he needs is a step." Meanwhile, along the sidelines, some 40-year-old striped shirt is not only keeping up with Mr. Mercury step by step, but doing it while running sideways and watching for a clip back up field at the same time. They never explain that.

Of course, it's all done with trick cameras. There's no way Senior Sack could have caught that Arkansas back, but it just illustrates what some Sports Information Directors will do to promote their candidate's All-America credentials.

However, if you are interested in watching an All-America in action,



Tech will be hosting Texas today in West Texas Big Game, which brings us to today's forecast. How did we do last week? No bragging, but you know the guy you've seen around Wall and Colorado with the dark glasses, cane and tin cup...

In the SWC...

Texas minus 7 over Texas Tech—Horns could be nasty after last week's loss to SMU, then again, they could be looking back over their shoulders.

Texas A&M plus 10½ over SMU—Aggies catch Mustangs in the post-Texas letdown. Ponies should win, but it will be closer than expected.

Rice plus 30 against Arkansas—If we were using real money, we wouldn't touch it with a 10-foot pole.

Elsewhere...

Oklahoma minus 22 over Colorado—Risky, since it's in Rockies, but Buffs haven't recovered from Chuck Fairbanks, yet.

Nebraska minus 23 against Kansas—K-State beat that spread last week against Jayhawks and KU won't even be charged up for this one.

Duke plus 2½ over Georgia Tech—Wreck beat Tennesse last week while Blue Devils were clobbered by Maryland Engineers overconfident.

Auburn plus 4 over Florida—Are Gators same team that beat Miami and USC?

Notre Dame minus 11½ over Navy—I know, I know, Irish just tied Oregon last week.

Wouldn't touch with a 10-foot pole...

Miss State plus 14 over Alabama—Emory has been taking lumps this year and he's due to hurt someone. Only trouble Bellard's Bulldogs beat Tide last year, so Bama will be thinking revenge...still...

Minnesota plus 20½ over Michigan—Are Gophers that bad?

If football was a game again

The Washington Post and Los Angeles Times

Now that the striking football players have drawn magnificent throngs of 680 paid to their All-Star games, perhaps it is time for the resident ideologues of the game to consider just what a house of cards pro football really is.

Not too long ago, 680 people would not have been considered that depressing a statistic.

But that was before the sport found out something Hollywood learned decades ago – the product is not enough. It needs another dimension of hype, fan magazines, gossip columns, personal appearances, press agentry. You can't trust word of mouth. Ask Louis B. Mayer.

Hollywood crumbled when the stars it created took over the business. They scuttled the industry, took over distribution, production and put the seven-year contract out of business. They made the term "movie mogul" obsolete. A mogul became a bump in the snow at Aspen.

But never did they go so far as to propose a wage scale for the industry based on seniority. They never argued that the best friend should make as much as the hero in a film. There was always a fine distinction between the Screen Actors Guild and the Screen Extras Guild. Just because he had been there 20 years didn't entitle a spear carrier to a cut of the gross. The grips were important to the picture, but they didn't sell tickets. Directors might share the loot, but they were the coaches in that league.

BUT THE most crippling effect was due to the lack of development of young talent. There were no longer staffs of crack portrait photographers, no crews of media-wise publicists, no drama coaches, talent scouts, make-up men, scripts tailored to fit images or to build up new stars. The talent pipelines were severed.

If the NFL strike should similarly dismantle the fabric of pro football as we know it, we might find a parallel there.

The trickle-down effect should be massive. It may have more effect on college football if the professional game deteriorates.

Consider what a college recruiter tells a blue-chip prepper or a high schooler today. "Son, 11 of last season's lettermen are players in the NFL. The entire offensive line of the Green Bay Packers, the defensive secondary of the Cowboys, and four of the Pro Bowl wide receivers last year came out of our program."

You don't need convertibles or girls to dangle in front of a prospect if you can deal in visions of an eventual multimillion-dollar pro contract.

IMAGINE, if you will, what will happen if that incentive is removed. The assistant coach in charge of recruitment approaches the blue-chipper with the dazzling prospect of an education, the heady appeal of learning to read and write. I mean, what can he say? "Just think, kid, you'll get to learn all the Popes and their proper Roman numerals. You get to memorize all of Napoleon's campaigns and the dates of the War of the Roses. You'll be able to tell your friends all the details of the Louisiana Purchase!"

If the kid wants to know what he'll get of a more practical nature, a coach can tell him: "You'll get a varsity letter, and they'll sew it on for you. You'll get free uniforms and laundering and, if you break a leg, we'll pay for the hospitalization, also, the crutches. Of course, we'll hire someone to take all your entrance exams for you."

"For all of this, what do I have to do?" the kid may ask. "Well," the coach will soothe, "you practice four to six hours a day, including meetings and training table, skull sessions and calisthenics. We have six weeks of spring practice, and a fall practice. You report in summer before school opens. And you have to take two hours of weight training every day all year."

THERE'LL BE a long pause, after which the blue-chipper will say, "And what do I get out of all this?" The coach will say, "The thrill of doing or dying for dear old alma mater. The fun of hearing the school fight song as you're on your own one-yard line when Notre Dame has the ball and a 275-pound offensive front. You get to go to all the pep rallies, see all the bonfires."

The kid will shake his head, "Thanks, but I think I'll get a job in a foundry, instead." Whereupon the coach will scream, "What will become of the Pac-10 if you do that?! The Big 8?" And the kid will say, "Have you ever thought of suiting up students?"

Who knows? We might get back "watch-charm guards," "Pony backfields," "Mighty mites." Cotton Warburtons at halfback, and the guys who run the wrong way in the Rose Bowl or show up late for games because they got stuck in lab class at the Physics Building.

Promoter to bottle Brewers' sod

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A promoter's idea to bottle discarded sod from Milwaukee County Stadium, approved by stadium officials following the Milwaukee Brewers' successful season there, has been questioned by a county official.

John St. John, vice chairman of the County Board's Parks, Recreation and Culture Committee, said the idea by Edward F. Anhalt to sell the sod for $2.75 per vial might be a good idea, but he and other county officials should have been given an opportunity to clear the move.

Unbeatens wary of Goblins

Six risk perfect records

By Associated Press

It's Halloween weekend and the nation's six unbeaten-untied major college football teams are advised to watch out for stray hobgoblins.

The clubs with perfect records are top-rated Pitt, runner-up Washington, third-ranked Georgia, No. 4 Southern Methodist, fifth-ranked Arkansas and No. 7 Arizona State.

Saturday's would-be spoilers are 3-4 Louisville, which visits Pitt; 4-3 Stanford, which entertains Washington; 0-7 Memphis State, Georgia's opponent in Athens; 4-3 Texas A&M, which visits SMU; 0-7 Rice, which travels to Arkansas, and 12th-ranked Southern Cal (5-1), which meets Arizona State under the lights in Tempe, Ariz.

"Who would have anticipated Oregon would tie Notre Dame last week?" Holtz says. "Anything can happen in college football. Hopefully, our players understand our opponents are ourselves. We compare our own performance to what we are capable of doing."

BESIDES SOUTHERN Cal-Arizona State, the only other pairings of Top Twenty teams finds No. 14 Florida State at No. 16 Miami. Meanwhile, sixth-ranked Nebraska visits Kansas, No. 8 Penn State is at Boston College, No. 9 Alabama meets Mississippi State in Jackson, No. 10 North Carolina plays host to Maryland, Oregon is at No. 11 UCLA, Mississippi at No. 13 LSU for a night game, No. 17 Oklahoma at Colorado, East Carolina at No. 18 West Virginia, No. 19 Auburn at Florida and Minnesota at No. 20 Michigan. Clemson, the No. 15 team, is not scheduled.

Pitt returned to the top spot in The Associated Press poll this week after yielding to Washington for more than a month. But Coach Foge Fazio says he hasn't seen "any of our guys going around with their fingers in the air and doing cartwheels."

Besides, the Panthers are heavy favorites to whip Louisville. Washington, on the other hand, figures to have its hands full with Stanford and John Elway, the Pac-10's career passing king, who is throwing at a 62.9 percent clip despite a 10-of-26 effort for a measly 85 yards against Washington State last week.

The Huskies are coming off unimpressive outings against Oregon State and Texas Tech, but Stanford Coach Paul Wiggin says they are "probably the most solid team we've faced this year.

GEORGIA'S VINCE Dooley went out on a limb and conceded that Memphis State's 0-7 "is not good." But, as expected, he also warned that "if we don't play well, we can lose."

The last time Alabama played Mississippi State in Jackson, the Crimson Tide's 28-game winning streak was snapped 6-3.

"In looking at the remainder of our schedule, we had better get our helmets strapped on tightly because there's no looking ahead to anyone from now on," says Bear Bryant, whose 23-1 log against Mississippi State is a large reason for his overall record of 321-82-17.

"WE DID some things against Cincinnati (a 21-3 triumph) that certainly will get you beat. Breakdowns in our kicking game in getting two field goals blocked and fumbling the football inside their 10-yard line is not playing with concentration.

"I think we have been trying to play too many people, but I think now is the time to start playing the people who are going to win for you."

The anticipated Atlantic Coast Conference race between North Carolina (3-0) and Clemson (2-0) has an unexpected entry in 3-0 Maryland (5-2 overall).

Town has close ties with Coast Guard

ANSWER: Believe it or not, Grand Haven.

The Coast Guard and the city of 15,000 located on Lake Michigan across from Milwaukee have been together since 1870, when a lifesaving station was established there.

Every year, 250,000 people turn out for a festival to honor the service that watches over the Great Lakes.

"The Coast Guard is a part of our community, and we're a part of them," says Mayor Marge Boon. "We look at it as an industry that employs 150 people."

The nickname and festival preceded World War II, but it was during the war that the link was cemented. The cutter Escanaba, which had been stationed at Grand Haven prior to the war, was sunk in 1943 while escorting a convoy to Newfoundland. All but two crewmen perished.

Ties between the Great Lakes and the Coast Guard began in 1818 with construction of the Buffalo, N.Y., Light Tower. Today, 49 rescue stations dot the 9th Coast Guard District, known as "The Great Lakes District."

Search and rescue work is "our bread and butter," said Capt. Gordon Hall, chief of operations for the district, which stretches from Massena, N.Y., on the St. Lawrence Seaway, to Duluth, Minn., at the western extreme of Lake Superior.

The district ranks third nationally in the number of search-and-rescue calls it answers. Last year, it handled over 10,500, up from about 7,100 in 1974, says district headquarters in Cleveland.

The increase is due mainly to the growth in recreational boating. Michigan, for example, leads the nation with about 662,000 pleasure boats.

As the "Guardians of the Eighth Sea," the service patrols nearly 5,500 miles of shoreline with 260 small boats, six buoy tenders, five icebreaking tugs, one major icebreaker and seven medium-range helicopters.

Operating the equipment are 2,400 military personnel, supplemented by about 200 civilian employees, 2,000 reservists and more than 5,000 volunteer members of the Coast Guard Auxiliary.

"Where we feel it is people," Hall said, noting that the number of people he has stayed about the same over the past decade while responsibilities multiplied.

One added responsibility has been environmental protection. "Enviromental enforcement was a new mission when it was added in 1972 (with the passsage of the Clean Water Act) and we didn't get a lot of resources then," said Cmdr. Jerome Foley, chief of marine, port and environmental safety for the 9th District.

In addition to cleaning spills that polluters leave behind, Foley's branch is responsible for licensing and certifying American Merchant Marine personnel, inspecting commercial vessels for safety requirements mandated by federal law and protecting ports and vessels in ports "from damage through sabotage, subversive acts, accidents or other causes."

WARREN, Ark. (AP) — She's bitten a deputy sheriff, but otherwise Prissy is the jailer's pet.

Prissy the pig has been held at the city jail since last week when her owner, Joanne Greer of Texas, was arrested on a charge of driving under the influence of alcohol.

Prissy is also picky. A police spokesman who asked that his name not be used called her "a peculiar pig. You usually don't have a pig for a pet that'll follow you around. She won't eat anything but apples and cat food."

And even though the 35-pound pig bit a deputy, the spokesman said — perhaps with relief — "She's housebroken."

An unidentified person agreed to pay Ms. Greer's $120 fine, but until the police have cash in hand, both owner and pig must stay put. Police Chief Tommy Dunaway explained that Prissy was bing kept at the jail because there is no local veterinarian.

Your horoscope

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actress Barbara Bel Geddes (J. R.'s mother on "Dallas"), former Atty. Gen. Griffin Bell, actress-director Lee Grant, Jane Pauley, Dan Rather and the multitalented Michael Landon share this birthday with you. Although business does fine in the months ahead, you may decide to curtail your overactive social schedule at times. Romance is impulsive, but deeply rewarding. You find someone who could change the whole direction of your life. Travel is indicated. Count on it to help further your career. Do not let resentment or jealousy slow your progress. Control your temper and you control your financial future.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A peaceful day that should leave you in a lighthearted mood. Do not let daydreams keep you from facing the reality of a family situation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Romance could be heating up. Avoid accidents by curbing a tendency to do things hurriedly. You quiet mate's anger with an unexpected gift. Check the truthfulness of a promise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A fond ambition nears fulfillment. An older person is instrumental in your solving a family problem. Romantic partner shares an exciting moment and the spotlight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Music and art increase your happiness at being home today. You sweep aside past romantic problems and begin a new adventure. Communicate with family members overseas.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Flattery can work miracles at a family gathering. Your loved ones have trouble getting angry with you even when they think you are being foolish. Enter competitions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep in close touch with a student away at school. A group's objectives are not yours. Have the sense to drop out now. Pursue goals that are important to loved one's future.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Mingle only with kindly, positive people today. Certain plans could fall through at the last minute. You and loved one need to learn more about each other's tastes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You enjoy sharing your Halloween with neighborhood "trick or treaters." Church affairs offer you a chance to meet attractive new people. You find happiness in almost everything you do today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Have a young person accompany you when visiting someone confined to hospital or home. Organize your financial affairs. Spend some time going over bills, check stubs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 21-Jan. 19): An excellent day for travel, romance and visiting old friends. Whether or not you know it, you are in a good position. Avoid babying yourself when things get a little rough.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Try something different today. Evening will be a happy time for those with romance in mind. Seek the company of someone who shares your interests.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do a favor for someone less fortunate than yourself. A candid chat with a positive-thinking friend alleviates your worries.

Tony the Tiger and his little friend are familiar to thousands who visit the Battle Creek, Mich., headquarters of Kellog Co. Kellog threatens to move its corporate office and 700 employees somewhere else unless voters in Battle Creek and a neighboring township approve a merger of the two governments in Tuesday's election.

Renowned archtitect has no set style

HAMDEN, Conn. (AP) — Kevin Roche, one of America's renowned architects, quietly walks among his apprentices in a turn-of-the-century mansion. He makes his way past the young men and women bent over drawing boards and worktables and slips through a set of double doors.

The entryway leads to a kind of America in miniature, a cavernous room nearly overflowing with meticulous models of buildings built or envisioned.

The models, some only inches high and some more than 6 feet, are of many things: a refurbished Central Park Zoo for New York, complete with rain forest and penguin house; a museum for colonial Williamsburg, Va.; a 1.3 million-square-foot corporate headquarters in Connecticut; towering office buildings for Atlanta and Denver.

But the models represent only a few of the buildings lesigned by Roche, this year's recipient of the coveted nternational Pritzker Architecture Prize.

The works of his firm, based in a Connecticut town ıbout 80 miles from New York City, are scattered ıcross America. Among them are the Oakland Museum n California, the Denver Center for the Performing Arts, the headquarters for College Life Insurance Co. of America in Indianapolis and the United Nations Plaza Hotel in New York.

The buildings encompass no common themes which would assign a recognizable style to Roche and his firm, Kevin Roche, John Dinkeloo and Associates. Roche, a soft-spoken man of 60, shies away from defining his work in terms of style.

"Each problem is a special opportunity;" he said recently in explaining the way in which he goes about the design process.

Instrumental in that process is research: a determination of the needs of the people who will inhabit his buildings. A client's budget and functional needs also figure heavily, as does the environment, the surrounding buildings or the topography, of a project.

For Union Carbide Corp.'s nearly completed quarter-mile-long headquarters in Danbury, Conn., Roche conducted a series of interviews with company employees. Emerging from the talks was his proposal to assign all executives uniformly sized offices, doing away with a common corporate practice of giving higher ranking officials larger workspaces.

"Basically a person performs the same functions in an office...and those can take place in what one can consider to be an ideal-sized office...and the only reason to change the size of these offices would be prestige. But that is a very expensive way to reward people," he said.

Roche's ideal-sized office is about 13 feet square and accommodates a desk, a second work surface and seating for four or five people. At Union Carbide, each office has a window. Employees park their cars in the middle of the structure.

Born in Dublin in 1922, Eamonn Kevin Roche earned an architecture degree at the National University of Ireland before coming to the United States in 1948 to study under Mies van der Rohe. In 1954 he became the chief design associate for Eero Saarinen, an influential Finnish-American architect who died in 1961.

Roche and John Dinkeloo, Saarinen's chief technical associate, completed Saarinen's unfinished projects, which included the St. Louis Gateway Arch and the Dulles International Airport terminal outside Washington. Roche and Dinkeloo forged a formal partnership in 1966. Dinkeloo, whose technical and structural ideas have been used widely, died last year.

Kennedy having hard time beyond Massachusetts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy may be having an easy time seeking re-election in his native Massachusetts, but he is getting it hot and heavy in Utah. And in Texas. Not to mention Virginia, Wyoming and Tennessee.

In Senate races throughout the country, Republican candidates are trying to link their Democratic opponents unfavorably to Kennedy, who is a potential 1984 presidential contender and has been traveling beyond his home territory this year to help fellow Democrats.

In Virginia, for example, Republican Rep. Paul Trible, campaigning for an open Senate seat, says his opponent, Lt. Gov. Richard J. Davis, "would align himself with the Kennedys" if elected.

Rep. Robin Beard, R-Tenn., tells voters that Democratic Sen. James Sasser, whom he is trying to unseat, voted "right down the line" with Kennedy and other Senate liberals on foreign aid.

Conservative Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, waging a hard-fought campaign for re-election, says his defeat would give Kennedy virtual control over the Senate Labor Committee even if the Democrats fail to capture the Senate. Hatch is chairman of the committee and Kennedy is its senior Democrat.

The Republican aim is to tar Democratic candidates with a liberal brush, but spokesmen for Kennedy and the candidates say they doubt the GOP's "reverse coattails" tactics are having much effect.

Some of the races where Kennedy's name is surfacing are a lot closer than Kennedy's own bid for a fourth Senate term against millionaire industrialist Ray Shamie. Even the GOP rates Kennedy a shoo-in.

In Utah, despite Hatch's substantial lead in the polls, Democrats believe their candidate, Salt Lake City Mayor Ted Wilson, has a chance to overtake him.

Hatch is fighting back by telling campaign audiences that keeping Kennedy at bay is reason enough to return him to Washington for a second term.

"Business leaders are worried to death that Kennedy will take over," he said in a recent interview.

Utah AFL-CIO chief Ed Mayne said Hatch would "rather run against labor and Ted Kennedy and (former AFL-CIO President) George Meany, who is dead, than against his opponent."

In the Virginia race, acknowledged by both sides to be close, Trible has sought to link Davis with liberal Democrat politicians such as Kennedy. He says the choice for voters is whether they want a senator who "would align himself with the Kennedys" or one who would form a "partnership to help govern America responsibly."

In the Tennessee campaign, Beard points to Sasser's vote in 1977 to help defeat an amendment that would have prohibited use of foreign aid funds to negotiate restored relations with Vietnam.

"On aid to Vietnam," says Beard, "James Sasser voted with Sens. Kennedy, George McGovern, Birch Bayh, Frank Church, right down the line."

In Wyoming, Kennedy's name has been invoked in Republican Sen. Malcolm Wallop's campaign against Cheyenne attorney Rodger McDaniel, who was Wyoming manager for Kennedy's bid for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1980.

The connection is highlighted in a Wallop television advertisement. Wallop's campaign manager, Byra Kite, says it is taking effect because Kennedy's liberalism "doesn't set well in Wyoming."

In Texas, Republican Rep. James Collins has run a television commercial focusing on speculation that had Kennedy been nominated two years ago, he would have chosen Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen as his "liberal running mate."

Jack Martin, Bentsen's campaign manager, said the speculation was groundless and the commercial "has had very little effect."

Bill Carrick, a political director for Kennedy, said the same was true in other campaigns.

"There isn't a case where it has really done any serious damage to a candidate," he said.

Dee Travis, Collins' campaign manager, said, however, "Every time we had an opportunity to show Bensten voting with Kennedy we did it. It definitely helped portray Bentsen as a liberal."

Penny-pincher buys auto

BLOOMINGTON, Ill. (AP) — It took a pickup truck loaded with antique cookie jars, milk cans, children's toy buckets and other containers to get Wini Goben's down payment to a car dealer.

Five hundred dollars down — in the form of 50,000 pennies — got Mrs. Goben of Bloomington, a teacher at Olympia high school in nearby Stanford, a 1981 Chevrolet Citation.

Mrs. Goben had been saving the pennies for six years. One night this week she asked salesmen at Dennison Ford Inc. if they would accept the pennies, and they agreed.

"I think they thought I was joking," she said Thursday.

When Mrs. Goben brought the pennies in, Joe Arduini met her at the door. "Unbelievable," the salesman said. "It goes to show what saving your pennies can do."

The pennies were emptied into a 10-gallon garbage can, which took three men to lift. But even it couldn't hold all the pennies, so several of Mrs. Goben's penny-laden fruitcake tins will accompany the can to the bank for counting.

Soldiers' remains returned to U.S.

TRAVIS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — The remains of four American servicemen arrived Friday at Travis Air Force Base, two weeks after they were returned by the Vietnamese government and identified by Army experts.

The remains, which were flown from Hawaii by military transport plane at 5:35 p.m. PDT, were carried past a military honor guard and loaded into four hearses bound for Oakland, military officials said.

The Pentagon announced Oct. 14 that the Vietnamese had turned over what was described as "five sets of remains" to U.S. officials in Hanoi.

However, defense officials said examination of the remains, mostly bones, revealed that they belonged to four American Navy and Air Force personnel, not five.

—Air Force Maj. Robert D. Trier, who was lost over North Vietnam Dec. 20, 1965. His widow is living in Lauderdale-by-the-Sea, Fla.

—Navy Ensign Donald P. Frye, lost June 19, 1967, over North Vietnam. Frye, who was unmarried, is survived by parents living in Los Angeles.

—Navy Petty Officer Donald P. McGrane, lost June 19, 1967, over North Vietnam. McGrane's parents live in Waverly, Iowa.

Defense officials said they do not have available the names of the next-of-kin of the four Southeast Asia casualties, whose remains were studied at the Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii.

The Vietnamese also provided what was described as "material evidence" on three other U.S. military men unaccounted for in the Indochina war. The Pentagon said military ID cards identified them as:

—Air Force Maj. Roosevelt Hestle Jr., lost July 6, 1966, over North Vietnam. Hestle's home of record at the time he was in the service was Orlando, Fla.

According to Pentagon records, the North Vietnamese have returned 80 remains since the end of the Southeast Asia war in 1973, leaving 2,494 still unaccounted for.

Heterosexual men, women now contracting 'gay' disorder

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A syndrome that makes gay men susceptible to fatal diseases is spreading to heterosexual men and women, and the United States may be on the verge of a "huge outbreak," researchers warned Friday.

"The number of reported cases has probably doubled every six months," according to Dr. Harold Jaffe of the national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Known as Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, the illness begins with a breakdown in the body's natural defenses. It develops into a rare skin cancer or a variety of infections, most commonly a form of pneumonia, according to doctors attending a conference at the University of California in San Francisco.

"The thing that concerns me the most right now is that a recent study (reported in the New England Journal of Medicine) has shown as many as 83 percent of homosexual men may have immunodeficiency," said Dr. Paul A. Volberding, chief of medical oncology for San Francisco General Hospital.

"If so," he said, "that implies that this disease may be highly contagious and raises the possibility that we are going to be seeing a huge outbreak."

Of the 665 cases reported since June 1981, 270 victims have died. Of the total cases, 42 percent have been diagnosed since January, according to Jaffe.

"When we first heard about this, all the cases appeared to be among homosexual men, mainly in New York City, San Francisco and Los Angeles," said Jaffe. "As time has gone on, it has become apparent that other groups are getting the diseases as well."

Researchers have developed statistics on 593 cases reported between June 1981 and Sept. 16, 1982. About 75 percent of the patients have been homosexual and bisexual men who may be spreading the disease through sexual contact, Jaffe said.

Of the rest, 13 percent are heterosexual male and female intravenous drug users who researchers theorize may be sharing needles. Another 6 percent are heterosexual Haitians living primarily in Atlanta and Brooklyn; 0.3 percent are hemophiliacs who require treatment with large volumes of blood; and 5 percent belong to no particular group.

Jaffe said there is no known treatment for the early stages of the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, which doctors speculate may transmitted by a virus. The syndrome produces symptoms similar to those of patients who have undergone chemotherapy or an organ transplant.

Such symptoms can be seen, he said, in patients who have undergone some form of treatment to suppress the body's natural immunity to disease.

"We have received reports from 29 states and the District of Columbia," he said, adding 51 cases have been reported in 11 foreign countries, including Haiti, Canada, Argentina and Western Europe.

Early symptoms of the disease, which makes victims more susceptible to a skin cancer called Karposi's Sarcoma and a host of other infections, include several weeks or months of fever accompanied by 10 to 30 pounds of weight loss, diarrhea and swelling of lymph glands.

Of the 593 patients, 30 percent have developed Karposi's Sarcoma, Jaffe said. Another 51 percent have developed pneumocystis pneumonia, 7 percent have developed both diseases and 12 percent have developed infections.

Of those with both diseases, 68 percent have died. Overall, the fatality rate among the 593 victims has been 41 percent, Jaffe said.

While some victims may have experienced the onset of the syndrome before June 1981, until then the syndrome wasn't generally recognized as part of an epidemic, Jaffe said.

'Private Benjamin' star considers surgery to repair facial fractures

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Eileen Brennan, the "Private Benjamin" star who was struck by a car, is considering plastic surgery to repair facial bone fractures, a hospital official said Friday.

Miss Brennan's condition was upgraded from critical to "stable but guarded" Friday, said a spokeswoman at Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital.

"That first (full) night is so important, but she pulled through it so well that her condition was upgraded this morning," said Christie Plank of the Marina de Rey hospital.

Miss Brennan was listed as critical Thursday with two broken legs and facial bone fractures after she was hit by a car while jaywalking late Wednesday.

Ms. Plank said Miss Brennan's two sisters and niece and nephew were also at the hospital Friday.

Eileen Brennan

The 48-year-old actress, best known for her portrayals of comically shrewish Army Capt. Doreen Lewis in both the film and television versions of "Private Benjamin," was in the intensive care unit and has casts on both her legs, Ms. Plank said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actors Paul Newman and Charlton Heston, opponents on the nuclear freeze issue, finally agreed to a live televised debate of their differences — but most Americans had to stay up late to watch.

The debate was set for early today on the ABC News program "The Last Word," a new live, issues-oriented program that encourages viewers to participate by calling in with questions.

Newman, an outspoken supporter of the freeze movement, appeared in a taped segment of the program Friday. Later, Heston, who opposes a freeze, was interviewed live on the same broadcast.

One of the "Last Word" viewers who called in to question Heston turned out to be Newman. They were polite. They used first names. But at times the discussion took on the tone of a debate, with frequent interruptions.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Joyce Clyde Hall, a high school dropout who turned a small picture postcard business into Hallmark Cards Inc., the world's largest greeting card company, died at home in his sleep Friday at age 91.

Hall ran Hallmark for 56 years, and until his semi-retirement in 1966, no greeting card reached the marketplace unless he had scrawled "OK, J.C." on the back of the original.

He stepped aside as chief executive officer in 1966 when his son, Donald J. Hall, took over.

A private funeral service will be held Monday in the chapel at Forest Hill Cemetery.

Hall attributed his success to the conviction that "If a man goes into business with only the idea of making a lot of money, chances are he won't. But if he puts service and quality first, the money will take care of itself."

Hallmark remained a private firm at the insistence of Hall, who preferred to retain control over his company. It has become one of the largest privately held concerns in the country, with annual sales of close to $1 billion.

Today, 20,000 Hallmark card shops sell everything from bath products to writing instruments. Hallmark cards are manufactured daily in the millions in 20 languages. One of every four greeting cards sent in the United States bears the Hallmark imprint.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Filmwriter, actor and director John Huston has won the American Film Institute's 1983 Life Achievement Award.

Huston, 76, directed such classics as "The Maltese Falcon," "The Treasure of Sierra Madre," "Key Largo" and the "African Queen," all starring Humphrey Bogart. More recently, he directed "The Man Who Would Be King" with Sean Connery and Michael Caine.

"John Huston has devoted his life to filmmaking. In the process, he has made films that have 'stood the test of time' in the hearts of audiences the world over," AFI Chairman George Stevens said Thursday when he announced the award.

The institute will honor Huston at a dinner March 3 at the Beverly Hilton Hotel.

Huston directed his father Walter Huston as the prospector in "The Treasure of Sierra Madre." As an actor, the son's most noted appearance may be that of sinister water and land baron Noah Cross in "Chinatown."

John Huston also wrote such screenplays as "Jezebel," "High Sierra," "Juarez," and "Sergeant York."

NEW YORK (AP) — A television performer known as "Uncle Floyd" has apologized for a parody of talk-show host Joe Franklin, whose lawyer says Franklin "may be generous" and drop his $35 million suit against the performer.

Franklin filed the suit Thursday, charging that Floyd Vivino had slandered him by "maliciously acting a parody" of him.

More than 50 await liver transplants

By PETER MATTIACE
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH — While 11-month-old Jamie Fiske awaits a liver transplant in Minneapolis, 51 other people are waiting here for the same operation, including 15 children who also could die soon without surgery.

Even if a liver suitable for Jamie is found, doctors could decide another desperate child needs it more, University of Pittsburgh officials said Friday.

"There is sort of a priority, but it's hard, very hard, to choose one child today and pass up someone else," said Brian Broznick, organ procurement officer for the University of Pittburgh hospitals, which have the largest liver transplant program in the nation.

"Although this child in Minnesota is very sick, so are the 21 children here. We'd have to determine who is in more desperate need," Broznick said.

Jamie's father, Charles Fiske of Bridgewater, Mass., went before about 400 physicians at a New York meeting of the American Academy of Pediatrics on Thursday to plead for a liver for his daughter.

Jamie, her body yellow from jaundice common to patients with liver disease, awaits a new organ at the University of Minnesota Hospitals. Doctors say she has just weeks to live if no liver is found.

Officials at the University of Pittsburgh hospitals say 30 adults and 15 children have died here in the past 21 months waiting for donor livers that never came.

However, during that period, 98 livers were successfully transplanted by Dr. Thomas Starzl, 57, a pioneer in organ transplant surgery who uses an experimental Swiss drug that helps the body retain the new liver. The same drug is used in Minnesota.

This year, liver transplantations began at the University of Minnesota Hospitals, where three patients are waiting for the surgery, and at the University of Tennessee at Memphis, where no patient is waiting now, officials said. In Pittsburgh, there are usually about 50 patients waiting for liver transplants, Broznick said.

The liver is the largest of the body's internal organs and one of its most varied. It aids in digestion and helps clean the blood. In addition to matching blood and tissue types, donor and recipient livers must be of similar size because the organ is so large, doctors say.

Broznick said up to 15 children in Pittsburgh could qualify for the same liver as Jamie. He said doctors in Minnesota and Pittsburgh and the patient's physician would confer before deciding who would get a donor organ.

Susan Petersen, 18 months, of Santa Rosa, Calif., suffers from biliary atresia — the same liver disease as Jamie — and has been waiting eight months in Pittsburgh for a transplant. Officials here describe say her case as one of the most desperate.

"We don't know how long we have. A donor might never come," her mother, Beth, said Friday from the pediatric ward of Childrens' Hospital.

"It's frustrating," she said. "But you can't sit around or you'll go crazy. We're making posters to reach intensive care nurses, those who can help us when a donor becomes available."

Broznick, in his nationwide search for livers for his patients, calls hospital emergency rooms and other officials who are seeking heart, kidney and cornea donors. When a suitable liver is found, Broznick can send any one of a dozen corporate airplanes owned by Pittsburgh-based firms.

More livers would be available for patients like Jamie and Susan if emergency room doctors and nurses remembered transplant centers when their patients die, Broznick said.

"A lot of physicians don't want to approach a family in their loss," he said. "But 80 percent of the families we talk do in fact donate.

"To them," Broznick said, "it's just a little bit of life at the end of the tunnel so some good, some sense, can come out of their loss."

Small child among those needing livers

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — No serious candidates had been found Friday to donate a liver for 11-month-old Jamie Fiske, who doctors say will die within a month without a new liver.

Ralph Heussner of University of Minnesota Hospitals said the hospital has been inundated by telephone calls since Jamie's parents, Charles and Marilyn Fiske of Bridgewater, Mass., made a nationwide plea for a liver donor Thursday.

"We have had many calls from the public, from people with religious and psychic suggestions," Heussner said. "But we have no serious candidates" to donate the needed organ.

The liver must come from a child who weighed 15 to 17 pounds so it will fit in Jamie's body, and the child must not have died of a disease that would have affected the organ, Mrs. Fiske said.

Mrs. Fiske and Jamie also met with reporters and photographers in Minneapolis, where the baby is being treated.

FDA approves human insulin produced by bacteria

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government has approved use of human insulin produced by bacteria, the first of what promises to be numerous drugs resulting from genetic engineering, the Food and Drug Administration announced Friday.

The insulin is the first drug made through the gene-splicing recombinant DNA technology to win approval in the United States. The product was previously approved in Great Britain and other drugs produced through this technique are being tested around the world.

Bacteria were genetically altered to make the human insulin, called Humulin. The product will be marketed by Eli Lilly & Co., of Indianapolis, under license from Genentech Inc., a San Francisco-based firm that developed the techniques for making it. Lilly is a part owner of Genentech.

Faye Peterson, a spokeswoman for the FDA, said the agency's National Center for Drugs and Biologics took only five months to approve the human insulin after evaluating data from several trials.

Ms. Peterson said human insulin is structurally different from insulin derived from animal sources. To date, it has not shown clinical advantages over insulin made from hogs, she added.

But a specialist at City of Hope National Medical Center in Duarte, Calif., said the new human insulin should not produce allergic reactions in diabetes patients, unlike animal-produced insulins now in use.

Dr. Rachmiel Levine, research director emeritus at the center, where the new insulin was developed in cooperation with Genentech, said it should be on drugstore shelves in a few months. But she predicted it will be "terribly expensive," although the drug firm has not yet set its price.

The human body needs insulin, a hormone made by the pancreas, to break down the various sugars in the diet. But many diabetics are unable to manufacture enough of the hormone naturally and require daily insulin shots.

An estimated 10 million Americans are diabetic, but only 20 percent are dependent on insulin injections. The rest usually are able to control their diabetes through diet and weight control.

The current primary source for insulin is pig and beef pancreases, but authorities say the supply is falling while the number of diabetics is increasing.

The new insulin is extracted from bacteria cultured in a yeast brew in large vats. Pieces of DNA — deoxyribonucleic acid, the basic material of heredity — which guide insulin production are spliced into the bacteria and they make the hormone.

U.S. must 'look outward' in fight against measles

BALTIMORE (AP) — Health and Human Services Secretary Richard Schweiker said Friday that as measles is wiped out in this country, the United States must "look outward to the assistance we can provide to other countries" in fighting the disease.

Schweiker, speaking at a conference at Johns Hopkins Hospital, predicted that in the future all U.S. measles cases "will be imported or within two generations of importation."

He was joined at the conference by the director of the national Centers for Disease Control, Dr. William Foege, who said a case of measles is brought into the United States every three or four days, so it is in nation's interest to eradicate measles worldwide.

"It costs too much to keep measles out," Foege said.

The technology to wipe out measles already exists, and the goal of immunizing the world's children against measles could be achieved if the "social will" were mustered, Foege said.

Because elimination of measles is possible, Foege said every case of the child-killing disease reepresents "a failure of social justice."

Foege said World Health Organization officials have set 1990 as a goal for establishing systems for immunization in all countries, with worldwide vaccinations to follow.

"What is needed now is the social policy for such a breakthrough," Foege said.

"It's not easy," he said, noting that 180 years passed betweeen the development of a smallpox vaccine and its global use.

The CDC announced Thursday that a record low number of rubella cases was reported last year and that the downward trend was continuing.

The measles-like ailment was one of five vaccine-preventable diseases for which the reported incidences in the U.S. last year marked new lows, Schweiker said. The other diseases are tetanus, mumps, polio and measles.

In 1981, measles cases in the United States numbered 3,032, as compared with fewer than 1,400 cases so far this year, according to CDC records. An average of 13,000 cases of measles occurred annually between 1977 and 1981.

"We set out to make measles a memory and we are winning that battle," Schweiker told researchers attending Friday's session of a two-day conference entitled "Conquest of Agents that Endanger the Brain."

"We must ... look outward to the assistance we can provide to other countries" in wiping out measles, Schweiker said, "saving the world's children from a frequent cause of pneumonia, blindness, deafness and encephalitis."

Space nuclear reactors raise controversy

By The Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Quietly buried in the administration's massive expansion of military operations in space is the revival of a controversial plan to launch nuclear reactors in space.

The reason is disarmingly simple: Nuclear plants can generate far more power than the sources currently used solar panels, batteries and radioisotope generators. And the power would be used to fuel increasingly sophisticated satellite missions that are now limited by low power levels.

But the spector of hundreds of nuclear power plants orbiting the earth causes unease in some quarters of the scientific community.

Funding levels for research in space-based nuclear reactors are increasing at a rapid pace, from $6.2 million in fiscal 1982 to $10.4 million this year and an anticipated $15 million next year.

It was only nine years ago, in 1973, that all funds were cut off for research and development of orbit-bound nuclear power plants. Several years before, in 1966, the government launched its only orbiting nuclear reactor, a small 500-watt plant. While the satellite is still in orbit, the reactor died after 43 days, the casualty of a malfunctioning voltage regulator.

In the meantime, the Soviet Union has put in orbit more than a dozen nuclear reactors, including the widely-publicized Cosmos 954 that came to a spectacular end in Canada's Northwest Territories in January of 1978.

"We are in fact way behind the Soviets," an official of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said recently. "It's important that we get off our tails and do something about it."

But while there appears to be a consensus within NASA, the Defense Department and the Department of Energy that research should continue at an accelerated pace, there is disagreement about how accelerated the pace should be and who should run the show.

So bitter has the interdepartmental squabble become that at a meeting of government and private industry specialists at Los Alamos, N.M., last week, an Energy official reportedly threatened contractors with prosecution if they conducted research for Defense and NASA, according to involved sources.

Energy claims that the 1954 Atomic Energy Act empowers that department with jurisidiction over development of space nuclear power.

But aligned against the Energy Department are the Pentagon and NASA, who contend that the system's users, themselves, should call the primary shots.

A concern among government and private industry specialists in the field is that the squabble could abort the resurgence of research.

Testifying before the House energy research subcommittee of the science and technology committee earlier this year, Jack L. Kerrebrock, associate administrator at NASA, described nuclear reactors in space as "the only practical approach" to the growing demand for increased power in space.

Existing U.S. satellite power plants generate up to 10 kilowatts of power, such as Skylab's solar system. Defense and NASA officials foresee the need soon for power of up to 100 kilowatts and more.

Current communications and surveillance satellites, they say, could be greatly improved in their range and ability to deflect enemy jamming through increased power. The same holds true for soon-to-be deployed radar satellites.

The tricky problem of functioning within the Van Allen belts, intensively radioactive areas that affect the efficiency of batteries, would be overcome.

In the more exotic, and potentially lethal, applications of future space technology, such as laser and particle beam weapons, only nuclear reactors could generate sufficient power for an extended period of time, the specialists say.

But there are concerns. Tom Karas, a government consultant in defense and specialist in space technology, worries that safety considerations could be compromised if the decisions are left only up to the "user" agencies, NASA, Defense and the intelligence agencies. "Who's going to be watching how safe they are?" he asked.

He said that while he foresees little hazzard in the nuclear reactors in orbit, accidents and radioactive leaks could occur on ground before the launches and in reentry, such as the ill-fated Cosmos satellite, where the backup system to launch the failing vehicle in higher orbit and out of harm's way failed.

A NASA official close to the research project also voiced concern that if deployment of nuclear reactors comes before research and development has been adequately completed, problems could arise. "There's a hell of a lot in the safety issue that has to be looked at," he said.

But because there are strong advocates for speeded development, he said, the program could run into problems. "Who knows what could happen, given the real world as you go downstream," he said.

"If we get too much money, give it too much attention too fast, pop it out to contractors, we'll end up with the same fiasco that we had in (1966)."

He said he envisions the nuclear-powered satellites to be launched in the early 1990s, although some in the military and the private sector say they could go up before then.

Asked when he thought the earliest deployment could be feasible, he betrayed some of the concern inherent in the project: "When we're damn sure the risk is worth the reward."

Grass makes officials see red

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The grass is turning green at City Hall, but official faces are turning red.

Last week, crews seeded the building's lawn with winter rye grass. This week, city officials issued a statement urging Phoenix residents not to plant winter lawns because they use water that the desert city needs to save.

City water spokesman Chuck Davis said only 13 of the city's 1,229 acres of turf will get winter grass this year, including the seven-tenths of an acre at City Hall.

"I don't think we're being hypocritical because we have cut back our use in so many areas," she said.

Voter profile

Those with higher incomes more likely to vote

The higher a person's income, the greater likelihood he or she will vote. The relationship holds for both blacks and whites, but blacks are somewhat less likely than whites to vote regardless of income, except in the poorest families.

GOP candidate says Nugent 'arrogant'

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

The Republican nominee for a seat on the Texas Railroad Commission says his candidacy would receive a tremendous boost if more people knew what incumbent Jim Nugent is like.

"He's the most arrogant person in state politics — if not all of U.S. politics," 75-year-old John Thomas Henderson of Austin said of Nugent, a Democrat.

Nugent, 60, of Kerrville is ending four years on the Railroad Commission and is seeking his first full 6-year term.

A businessman, engineer and lawyer, Nugent is an 18-year veteran of the Texas House of Representatives, where his wily tactics earned him the nickname, "Supersnake," and the post of speaker pro-tem.

"I've used each and every one of those experiences in the job of railroad commissioner every day. I'm better qualified than any of the other three candidates," Nugent said.

Nugent's three challengers are:

— Henderson, of Austin, a Republican. Henderson is a retired furniture manufacturer's representative and has run twice previously for the Railroad Commission — in 1978, when he lost to commissioner Mack Wallace in the Democratic primary and in 1980, when he lost in the Republican primary.

— DICK BJORNSETH OF HOUSTON, a Libertarian. Bjornseth works as a transportation planner for a private consulting firm.

— Bob Russell, 42, of Austin, a Citizens Party candidate. Russell is an official of a corporation that owns four cooperative apartment buildings housing mostly students at the University of Texas.

Existing law has caused the sale of some Texas natural gas to other states at rates considerably lower than those paid by Texans, Nugent complains.

Henderson said Nugent — by throwing out such red flags as "damn Yankees" and "leeches" in his public statements — has offended many people that Texans need on their side if the regulations are to be improved.

After one of Nugent's outbursts against "damn Yankees," Henderson said a Dallas newspaper said in an editorial that Nugent should re-assess his campaigning because "it is getting obnoxious." Henderson said Nugent "made a complete fool of himself" by such remarks before congressional committees in the past year.

NUGENT DEFENDS HIS REMARKS in Washington. They were carefully calculated to jar Congress into action, he said.

"We're being ripped off, and when you've got a gross inequality and a mistreatment of one segment of American citizens, and you want it to be discussed and seriously considered, you do what you can to raise the profile and make it an issue that will be looked into. And I am doing just that," Nugent said.

Henderson also accuses Nugent of siding with natural gas suppliers in rate cases after accepting their campaign contributions.

Henderson has refused political contributions — a rarity for the nominee of a major party for a statewide race. But he says that's one of the things that's wrong with the Railroad Commission — its members accept contributions from those they regulate.

"I'm out to present the consumer's side of the issue," said Henderson. "I'm not taking any contributions from anyone, any group, any person, even the Republican Party. I don't think it's proper to take money from someone on Sunday and then vote on their rate on Monday."

After he is elected, Henderson said, "I'll be owned by no one. And I want to tell you, it hasn't been that way for a good many years. When you take that kind of money, they own you."

Political pollsters track opinion of public every day of week

WASHINGTON (AP) — With impressive application of technology and money, political pollsters are tracing the ups and downs of public opinion every day of the week in more than two dozen election campaigns across the country.

Looking at the results of thousands of interviews conducted daily, the pollsters say they can tell almost instantly if Lewis Lehrman's ads are striking a chord in New York, if Lloyd Bentsen needs to make more appeals to Hispanic voters, or if Chic Hecht is catching up in Nevada.

Interviewing every day — not once a month or once a week — is what pollster Richard Wirthlin calls "tracking." It first surfaced in campaigns about a decade ago.

"Tracking can pick up very quickly where the changes are beginning to occur — in terms of issues, constituencies and images," says Wirthlin, whose biggest client is Ronald Reagan.

Most of the tracking is being done in Senate races, much of it for well-financed Republican candidates and sometimes in cooperation with the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee.

Japan monitors earthquakes

TOKYO (AP) — Japan is increasingly turning to the wizardry of its electronics industry to catch the approach of major earthquakes and quell the social shudders that have accompanied damaging quakes of the past.

The electronic devices range from radio wave measurements of quasar stars — a means of detecting minute movements in the earth's crust — to radio broadcasts warning of an impending tremor.

Experts insist this technology may save thousands of lives when the next big one hits the geologically unstable and densely populated Tokai area of central Japan, including Tokyo.

Shizuoka Prefecture (state), located in the area most vulnerable to quakes, has estimated that in a worst-case scenario more than 97,000 people would be killed in the Tokai area along Japan's Pacific Ocean coast if a tremor the size of the Great Kanto Earthquake were to hit today.

In that 1923 disaster, which measured 7.9 on the Richter scale, 140,000 people were killed, many in the ensuing fires that consumed congested areas of wood and paper houses. That quake was followed by social chaos in which thousands of Korean residents in Tokyo, rumored to have poisoned well water, were murdered.

Adding to the concern is a well-known theory that major earthquakes recur in 60-year cycles, making the next one due in 1983.

Scientists have yet to master the art of prediction, but Japanese seismologists have high hopes in electronic systems which measure tiny changes in distances between hilltops and beaches, or islands and continental shelves. They say these movements in the earth's crust are one of the most reliable clues to earthquakes.

In a Geographical Survey Institute project, radio waves emitted by faraway stars called quasars are received by two earth stations on different "plates," or major segments of the earth's crust whose clashings are believed to cause earthquakes.

The institute, now working from temporary stations, plans to build permanent stations on Minami Torishima on the Pacific Plate, about 1,062 miles southeast of Tokyo, and on Chichijima on the Philippine Sea Plate, about 688 miles south of Tokyo.

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8¾% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 14½% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 15.75%

Your ERA Real Estate Specialist is now offering a worry-free way to buy and sell a home-the Sellers Security Plan.
First, the Sellers Security Plan can advance up to $100,000 on the equity in your present home to use as a down payment on your next home, providing you purchase that house through an ERA approved broker and your present home qualifies.
Then if your house hasn't sold after 210 days, ERA will buy it, at a price and terms you agree to when you accept the plan.
A minimal application fee and certified appraisal are required to see if your home qualifies.
The ERA Sellers Security Plan. Equity advance and assured sale at a price you can live with.

ERA* REAL ESTATE

*Some conditions and limitations apply. To see if you qualify, call your ERA Real Estate Specialist and review the Sellers Security Plan contract.

TRICK OR TREAT TIME

Keep Our Children Safe this.....

Halloween

Follow these Simple "Trick or Treat" Rules:

(1) Stay in your own or familiar neighborhood...well lighted areas if possible.

(2) Always stay in groups. Small children should be accompanied by adults. Parents should never let little ones go out alone.

(3) Caution children not to eat any of their "loot" until parents can examine it at home. Hopefully there are not any mean people around but wise parents will caution their children to play it safe.

(4) Caution children not to go into a house even if they are invited.

(5) Costumes should be light colored clothing that can be easily seen by traffic.

(6) Stay on the sidewalk; stay out of the street.

(7) Walk on the left side of the road facing the traffic and well off the pavements in areas where there are no sidewalks.

(8) Look both ways before crossing any street.

(10) Don't wear a mask over your eyes when crossing the street or walking along a road that does not have a sidewalk.

(11) Don't let children carry lighted candles or wear flammable costumes.

LET HALLOWEEN BE FUN-TIME...HAVE A VERY GOOD TIME... BUT PLAY IT SAFE SO YOU WON'T GET HURT... AND DON'T DESTROY OTHERS PROPERTY
