Oil, natural gas prices increase

From Wire Reports

Oil prices began the new year with a strong rally and natural gas prices reached their highest level in two years Monday in a dual dose of good news for the energy industry.

An OPEC oil minister attributes oil price increases to cartel members' adherence to production levels agreed upon last month. The hike in natural gas prices on Monday's spot market came amid what experts said was a combination of bitter cold weather and a fresh dispute between pipelines and gas producers over a government ruling that went into effect last Friday.

Oil prices surged higher Monday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, where contracts for February delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the U.S. benchmark crude, settled at $17.69 per 42-gallon barrel, up 99 cents from Thursday's finish. The market was closed Friday for New Year's Day.

Futures prices for refined products traded on the exchange also rose.

Wholesale heating oil for February delivery jumped 2.77 cents to close at 52.76 cents a gallon, while wholesale unleaded gasoline for February delivery climbed 2.29 cents to 46.11 cents a gallon.

The market started off higher following the statement by the oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, said Peter Beutel, assistant director of the energy group at Elders Futures Inc.

Mana Saeed Oteiba was quoted by his country's state-run newspaper, Al-Ittihad, as saying oil prices would rise within a few days to the $18 benchmark set by OPEC ministers because the cartel's members have adhered to its production ceilings and pricing guidelines.

During their December meeting in Vienna, the ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreed to maintain an official price of $18 a barrel and a system of production controls based on a collective ceiling of 15.06 million barrels a day.

"While I don't think many people are believing" Oteiba's statement, Beutel said, the minister's comments still gave the oil market a firm undertone.

Andrew Lebow, a trader with Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc., agreed that conjecture about OPEC production boosted oil prices Monday. "There was no concrete news today that would warrant the market being up a dollar," he said.

Beutel said the market was beginning the new year on firm footing.

"It shows what a difference a year makes, even if it's only a few days," he said.

However, he cautioned, "I don't see anything to sustain this kind of movement upwards, at least for the first quarter."

Icy temperatures and snowy weather across the country added to the demand for heating oil and boosted energy futures prices in general Monday. Lebow said supplies of heating oil distillates were "tightening up."

Technical factors also contributed to the rally, the analysts said.

Executives at several large users of natural gas, including steel and paper mills and auto manufacturing plants, said gas supplies appeared to be plentiful but that they had adjusted to the higher prices where possible by switching to No. 6 fuel oil.

The recent decline in fuel prices is expected to keep gas prices from climbing much further because many industrial users of natural gas have spent millions in recent years to install oil-burning units.

Natural gas was priced as high as $2.10 per million British thermal units Monday on the spot market, up from $1.70 a month ago and $1.50 early last year.

Freezing drizzle, snow may hurt Basin area travel

From Staff and Wire Reports

Freezing drizzle and heavy fog caused the National Weather Service to issue a winter storm watch today with snow accumulations of 2 to 4 inches expected in Midland as early as tonight, said NWS forecaster Pat Tyra.

Along with icing up of roads over bridges and overpasses, the heavy fog last night and this morning caused several flights to be canceled at the Midland International Airport, airline officials said today.

Southwest Airlines station manager Danny Gholson said Flight 964 from Albuquerque was unable to land around 11:30 p.m. Monday. Flight 964 was also scheduled to leave Midland for Dallas this morning and was canceled.

Other Southwest Flights unable to land this morning included Flight 760 from Austin with El Paso as a destination. Flight 765 from El Paso to Austin and Flight 356 from Oklahoma City and Dallas with Dallas as a return destination, Gholson said.

America West manager Connie Heimbach said Flight 234 from Phoenix scheduled to land in Midland at 11:05 p.m. Monday had to bypass the Permian Basin and land in Lubbock.

Forty-three passengers on America West Flight 234 were bussed from Lubbock to Midland last night, she said.

This morning America West Flight 841 from Lubbock was unable to land in Midland at 7:30 a.m. today, Ms. Heimbach said.

Flight 841's destination was Phoenix and passengers were being transferred to other airline flights scheduled to leave this morning, she said.

Atlantic Southeast station manager Pat Maxwell said Flight 2499 never left Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport for its scheduled landing in Midland at 11:19 p.m. Monday.

Also Flight 2491 scheduled to arrive in Midland at 9:40 a.m. today never left Dallas, Maxwell said.

Maxwell said passengers were being rerouted to an American flight scheduled to leave this morning.

He explained that pilots are able to take off with less visibility than they need to land.

Officials with American and Continental airlines reported no delays due to the weather.

Thousands flood aid centers as temperatures plunge

Associated Press

Thousands of people jammed homeless shelters as an "arctic outbreak" of icy air and wind-whipped snow knifed into the Northeast today and continued to grip the nation's midsection, breaking records for electricity usage.

Western states, meanwhile, braced for a new storm after snow squalls on Monday piled up to 14 inches of snow on higher elevations of Oregon, California, Nevada and parts of Utah.

A storm that dumped up to 8 inches of snow on the Atlantic states headed offshore, but little relief from ice-stickened roads was in sight as wind-chill as cold as minus 70 degrees were predicted for the rest of the week.

"Some areas in the East Coast are saying this is going to be the coldest since '78. It's the coldest I've seen it in the last three years," said Dan McCarthy, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service's Severe Storms Center in Kansas City, Mo.

Since Saturday, at least four deaths were blamed on the weather.

Temperatures plunged below zero across Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Iowa. The lowest temperature in the nation this morning was 25 below zero in Huron, S.D., and Warroad, Minn., slightly above Monday's low of 31 below in West Yellowstone, Mont.

However, with winds gusting to 30 mph, it felt as cold as 64 below zero at Rochester, Minn., and 59 below at Mason City, Iowa.

"It's just an arctic outbreak," said Greg Dickey, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Chicago. "We have a large area of arctic air that's been seeping down from the upper reaches of North America."

Homeless people normally satisfied with heating grates and makeshift cardboard roofs swiftly crowded shelters in Chicago, Detroit, New York, Dallas, Des Moines, Minneapolis and Indianapolis.

"We're pretty full up," desk clerk Ernie Boling said about the Lighthouse Mission in downtown Indianapolis. "We have 55 beds in the back and 20 on the floor, and we're all full."

In Chicago, where temperatures dipped to 9 below this morning, city officials said they expected the 38 city-run homeless shelters and 12 warming centers to fill their 2,500 beds overnight.

Police in New York City declared a cold weather emergency, meaning they could transport the homeless to the city's 26 shelters, which housed 9,775 people on Monday as 6 inches of snow fell on the city.

Other problems included frozen fuel lines and batteries.

The AAA Chicago Motor Club office in South Bend, Indiana, said motorists calling to have their car batteries jumped could expect a one- to two-hour wait for service because of the volume of calls.

Commonwealth Edison Co. in Chicago said it set a record high for winter electricity usage between 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. Monday with 12,258,000 kilowatts, shattering the previous record of 11,713,000 kilowatts set on Dec. 18, 1985.

"People are using greater amounts of electricity for furnace motors, electric heat and heat pumps," said spokesman Ron Russell.

Kathy Turner, a spokeswoman for Iowa Power, which serves 239,000 customers in central and southwest Iowa, said Monday the utility appeared to have met or exceeded the electrical usage record of 855,000 kilowatts set Dec. 19, 1983. In the Midwest, only far south Texas was expected to escape extreme cold.

Snow accumulations ranged from 2 inches in the northern mountains of North Carolina, up to 8 inches in eastern Massachusetts, and 7 inches in Connecticut, New York's Long Island and Michigan.

Economic center nears reality with completion of fund effort

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

The initial $4.6 million needed to turn a "a collective vision of the future" into a reality at the Permian Basin Center for Energy & Economic Diversification has been raised and officials expect to occupy a 30,000-square-foot facility within a year.

At a press conference this morning Dr. Duane Leach, president of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, announced that with the 18-month fund-raising effort behind it, the development board is ready to break ground at the center's site at State Highways 1788 and 191 between Midland and Odessa early next month.

Leach pointed to three specific donations which were critical to the success of the fund-raising efforts. "The start-up gift of $500,000 from the Odessa Industrial Development Council; the 180-acre site of unparalleled potential donated by the Scharbauer family; and, the $1 million challenge grant by the Cyril Wagner Jr. and Jack Brown families really 'got us off the dime' and solidified support for the center," Leach said.

The role of the center will be to act as a catalyst between private enterprise, area communities, federal agencies and the resources of the University of Texas system to foster economic growth and independence, Leach said.

"The center reminds me of a hummingbird feeder," said James Roberts of Andrews, chairman of the center's development board. "It will sustain and nurture existing businesses throughout the region, but its nectar will spawn multiple marriages between private industry, government and the university system.

Development in Fonseca case to be revealed soon

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A major development in the case of accused arms dealer Victor Fonseca is expected to be announced Wednesday morning after months of negotiations, attorneys for both sides said this morning.

"It will be an announcement in reference to the case," District Attorney Al Schorre said. "That's all I can say now."

Schorre declined to comment on rumors that charges against the 47-year-old Portuguese national would be dropped. He also declined to say if testimony against the man would be presented again to a Midland grand jury.

Jeff Hinkley, one of Fonseca's court-appointed attorneys, said this morning talks about the substance of the charges against his client have been going on for several months, but he declined to comment on the contents of the announcement.

"My hope would be the announcement would be something favorable to Mr. Fonseca. I hope the case is not going to be pursued any further," Hinkley said.

"I still hold to my initial belief that Mr. Fonseca has not committed a crime against the state of Texas," he added.

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, who was widely praised and criticized for the months-long sting operation involving a plot to sell stolen missile parts to Iran, could not be reached for comment this morning.

But Schorre said he and Painter have met several times in the past few months on the case.

On Dec. 1, 1987, State District Judge Vann Culp threw out a Sept. 16, 1987, indictment against Fonseca, who was charged with conspiracy to commit theft over $20,000. At that time, the ruling was expected, attorneys for both sides said.

Men prefer makeshift shack to Chicago warming centers

By ED WHITE

CHICAGO (AP) — When frigid wind rattles the home of Harold Thomas and Tommy Ray, they pull their coat zippers a little higher, push their hands in their pockets a little deeper and pray for warmth a little longer.

They can't throw a rug to stifle the draft. There are no windows to slam shut.

Thomas, 35, and Ray, 37, live in an open shack along the Chicago River. It's built with rotted wood, discarded sheet metal, grimy canvas — and the hope that some day they'll have money to put a real roof over their heads.

"It's not much, but it's our home," said Ray as he invited a visitor to sit in a rusty chair.

"It's the only home we have," he said Monday.

The men are among Chicago's estimated 25,000 homeless. But unlike those who crowd city "warming centers" and overnight shelters to escape single-digit temperatures, Thomas and Ray choose to survive outdoors just west of the downtown Loop.

They're tired of roaming the streets, and they distrust strangers found in the shelters. So for nine months, they've lived in a shack in a small lot filled with trash and rats.

A friend lives a few yards away — in a cardboard box.

"This is the second time I've been homeless," said Thomas, a carpenter who hasn't had full-time work in more than a year.

"Some people say 'get a job,'" he added, tossing more wood on a roaring fire that sends ashes and sparks around the filthy shack. "I'm willing to work. I just need a place to clean up. Look at me — I'm a mess."

Each has a scraggly beard and wears layers of garments. Thomas' boots have holes while Ray's toes are chilled in vinyl sneakers.

For meals, they often chew doughnuts washed down with water stored in a plastic jug.

"I've lived in shelters, abandoned buildings, abandoned cars, abandoned trucks. You name it," said Ray, a house painter who has lived on the streets since 1981. "I complain a lot. I made my bed hard, so I've got to sleep in it, but it shouldn't be this hard."

Their misery is contrasted by the area's prosperity.

Just north of the shack is the sparkling headquarters of Montgomery Ward and Co., and the printing plant of the city's largest newspaper, the Chicago Tribune. To the east is the East Bank Club where wealthy members pay thousands of dollars to stay in shape.

Above the shack are tracks used by trains carrying commuters between Chicago and the suburbs.

"They seem friendly," Ray said of the passengers who often return waves. "But I can't say they're concerned."

The men don't know how long they plan to live outdoors. They don't have a permanent address, so they can't receive public aid.

They want full-time jobs.

"The thing that we have is determination and courage," Ray said. "Because if we lost that, we might as well go lay in the snow and die.

"Only God can determine how long we can hold out. I have never lost the faith that it might get better."

As the sun fell, Thomas stoked the fire that provided the evening's only light. Hours later, at 11 p.m. Monday, the temperature dipped to minus 9 degrees.

"If you know someone who needs a carpenter," he said to the departing visitor, "tell them to give me a call."

The 30,000-square-foot building which will constitute the first phase of development at the Permian Basin Center for Energy & Economic Diversification should be completed and occupied by early 1989, according to Dr. Duane Leach, president of UTPB.

CENTER

"The center and its projects are going to be the 'bell cow' which will lead us in to the 21st century," Roberts told a group of about 60 center supporters and community leaders meeting in Midland this morning.

Univeristy of Texas Regent W.F. "Bill" Rhoden of Midland told the group that one project which may be suited to this area and the center is the "rail gun" research project being developed by UT-Austin. "I have prevailed on the board to convince them that the staging area for the rail gun should be in the Midland-Odessa area," Rhoden said.

"Applying the technology developed by the state's universities is a goal of the regents which the Center will help fulfill." The board has pledged $2 million toward construction and development of the center.

The $2 million pledge, along with a commitment by Southwestern Bell to furnish a fiber optics communications center, helped area supporters exceed the $3.6 million target necessary to receive the $1 million grant from the Brown and Wagner families.

"Today there is a sense of accomplishment that disparate groups from around a 22-county area can come together behind a single idea," said Leach, who was among the 11 founders of the Texas Permian Basin Foundation, the non-profit organization which will own and operate the CEED.

In its efforts to expand the economic base of the Permian Basin beyond its traditional oil and gas base, the center will emphasize:

— providing an information base on the oil industry, which will be of value to developers of new products and services;

— identifying potential applied projects using ongoing research within the UT System;

— providing space for joint use by commercial and university groups in product and business development;

— facilitating techology transfer from public sector laboratories into useful private enterprise projects through licensing and formation of venture capital firms;

— developing field and market tests for projects;

— entering contracts and accepting grants for applied research endeavors; and

— inviting UT operations such as the Bureau of Economic Geology, the Petroleum Technology Extension Service, UT Lands Office and others to establish field stations or research units at the center.

One killed in stone-throwing incident

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli soldiers today shot and killed one Palestinian and wounded seven others during a clash with stone-throwing protesters in the Gaza Strip, the army said.

"There were severe disturbances of order in Khan Younis during which one local man was killed and seven wounded," said an army official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The military said five Israeli soldiers were injured in stone-throwing incidents in the towns of Khan Younis and Rafah, about 50 miles south of Tel Aviv.

The death brought to 24 the number of Arabs shot to death by Israeli soldiers since a wave of increased unrest began Dec. 8 in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The Arab-run Palestine Press Service identified the dead man as Ali Mohammed Dahlam, 25, of Khan Younis. The news agency said his 16-year-old cousin, Basil Dahlam, was wounded.

Also today, police said a firebomb was thrown at an Israeli bus carrying tourists through an Arab neighborhood in east Jerusalem. It exploded but there were no injuries.

Youths in Gaza City used stones to block the main shopping thoroughfare, Omar Al Mukhtar Street, where shops were closed in a commercial strike.

Maher Nasser, a spokesman for the United Nations agency that administers refugee camps, said Israeli troops in four or five vehicles had entered Al Shati camp while demonstrations were taking place.

He said the sky was black from the smoke of burning tires in the towns of Khan Younis and Rafah.

Palestinian moderates threatened a campaign of civil disobedience to protest the Israeli actions in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, seized during the 1967 Middle East War.

Mubarak Awad, a campaign organizer, said Palestinians would be urged to boycott Israeli products, withhold labor and taxes from the Israeli market, and dress in black to protest the Israeli crackdown on Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

About 60,000 Palestinians from the Gaza Strip and 55,000 from the West Bank go to Israel each day to work in factories or on assembly lines, and Israel has become dependent on the cheap source of labor they provide.

Awad, a Palestinian with U.S. citizenship, said 14 moderate Palestinians were organizing the disobedience campaign.

"People are open and ready to act. They got a little feeling of power (during the unrest) and they don't want things to die down and return to the way they were before," said Awad, who has challenged authorities by staying in Israel after the expiration of his visa.

Awad said he envisioned marches of hundreds of Palestinians to prisons, where they would demand to be jailed along with their brethren.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, speaking on Israel army radio, said acts of civil disobedience would only harm Palestinians.

"I don't think it will happen because the residents of the (occupied) territories also have their own limitations. Whoever disobeys will make his own life miserable...," said Peres. "Whoever suggests making conditions more difficult will just be kicking the ball into his own net."

Israel has come under international criticism for its shooting of protesters and its issuance of deportation orders against nine Palestinian activists accused of instigating unrest.

The United States, Israel's close ally, and Egypt, the only Arab country to have made peace with the Jewish state, warned Israel that deportation orders could cause more unrest.

Four of the Palestinians who were ordered deported appealed to a military review board Monday, said their lawyer, Felicia Langer.

"We requested that the orders be immediately canceled, because they are in flagrant violation of international law," Ms. Langer said.

She said her clients, now in Gaza prisons, had begun a hunger strike and were determined "to fast until the end." If the military review board denies the appeals, the prisoners may petition the Supreme Court.

Hamadi denies charges, calls for hostage release

DUESSELDORF, West Germany (AP) — A Lebanese on trial for kidnapping two West Germans in Beirut today denied any role in the crime, but issued a statement in court calling for the release of the one hostage still held.

The statement by defendant Abbas Ali Hamadi was read to the packed courtroom by defense attorney Eckhard Hild. It called for the release of Rudolf Cordes, a West German businessman held hostage in Lebanon since Jan. 17, 1987.

"While the defense rejects any direct or indirect participation of (Abbas) Hamadi in the abduction of Cordes, the defense calls on the kidnappers to set him free immediately," Hild said.

Asked by one of the judges whether it was his statement, Hamadi responded in German: "I authorized him (Hild) to read that statement."

Court officials, speaking to The Associated Press on the condition of anonymity, confirmed the statement was Abbas Hamadi's.

Abbas Hamadi is charged with kidnapping Cordes and another West German to win freedom for his brother, Mohammed Ali Hamadi.

Mohammed Hamadi was arrested in Frankfurt on Jan. 17, 1987, and accused in the hijacking of a TWA jetliner in which an American sailor died. He is being held in Frankfurt and will be tried later.

Shortly before Abbas Hamadi's trial opened today, the group that claims to be holding Cordes in Lebanon released a statement in Beirut accusing West German authorities of mistreating Mohammed Hamadi.

The statement, which did not offer evidence of mistreatment, was delivered before dawn to a Western news agency, along with a snapshot of Cordes.

Abbas Hamadi, sporting a full beard, was dressed in a gray sportscoat for the first day of his trial.

More than two dozen police officers guarded the heavily fortified courtroom. Witnesses are expected to include his brother.

The trial in Duesseldorf was held in a former police barracks gymnasium that was converted into a courtroom for leftist terrorists in the 1970s.

Abbas Hamadi was shuttled to the courtroom in an armored police van, said Duesseldorf court spokesman Klaus Forsen.

The trial will explore Middle East terrorism and may provide firsthand views of the hijacking of the TWA jetliner in June 1985 to Beirut.

Mohammed Hamadi was allegedly involved in the incident, which left an American sailor dead. Thirty-nine Americans were held hostage for 17 days before being released. The jet was flying from Athens, Greece, to Rome when it was hijacked.

West German authorities refused a U.S. request to extradite Mohammed Hamadi but say they will try him on hijacking charges in Frankfurt. No trial date has been set and no indictment has been issued.

Mohammed Hamadi was arrested at Frankfurt Airport on Jan. 13, 1987, for carrying explosives.

Abbas Hamadi then allegedly helped arrange the kidnapping of Cordes and the Jan. 20 abduction of Alfred Schmidt in Lebanon. Schmidt was freed Sept. 7.

A third Hamadi brother, Abdul Hadi Hamadi, is security chief in Beirut for Hezbollah, a radical Shiite group close to Iran.

Court officials allege that he also participated in the kidnappings.

"The defendant (Abbas), his brother Abdul Hadi Hamadi in Beirut, 'Tahsin' (an alleged accomplice), and other unknown persons decided at the latest on Jan. 15, 1987, to kidnap a German in Lebanon, to force the West German government to refrain from extraditing Mohammed Ali Hamadi to the United States," according to a summary of the indictment against Abbas Hamadi.

The summary, provided by court officials, said Abbas Hamadi and his conspirators kidnapped the second West German to "emphasize their demands."

Despite adequate aid, famine remains days away in Ethiopia

WASHINGTON (AP) — The top U.S. aid official said today that foreign help has kept food supplies in Ethiopia adequate, but that the country could plunge into a famine in as short a time as two weeks.

Alan Woods, administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development, blamed a long drought and Ethiopian government agricultural policies for the country's food problem.

"It's a circumstance where the relief agencies have been able to keep up with the lack of food up to this time," Woods said on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America."

But he added, "It's very much on the edge, and two weeks from now it could have gone over the edge. It's that close."

Woods said the United States has sent nearly 250,000 tons of food and other countries have added 300,000 tons to help the northeast African country where a 1984-85 famine killed an estimated 1 million people.

In attacking the country's Marxist government, Woods said its agricultural policies "frankly are inappropriate and do not encourage the growth of surplus food which can then be sold in times like this."

Woods said the goal of U.S. efforts is to provide feeding centers where families can pick up a month's worth of food before returning to their homes.

He said that in the last drought people came to towns in hopes of getting food that wasn't available and ended up "basically too weak to return home."

He said the estimates of the number in danger of starvation range from 5 million to 7 million people, with 40 percent living in the provinces of Eritrea and Tigray, where rebels have attacked relief convoys. The Soviet Union has given the Ethiopian government military aid in its fight against the rebels in the two provinces.

Officials estimate that more than 1 million tons of foreign food is needed for Ethiopia this year. Woods said he expects that goal to be met.

Analysts feel intervention by United States unlikely

By RUTH SINAI

WASHINGTON (AP) — Violence between Israelis and Palestinians has sparked calls for U.S. intervention to breathe life into the Mideast peace process, but such action is unlikely in the waning months of the Reagan administration, U.S. officials and analysts say.

With November elections coming up in both the United States and Israel, the administration is unlikely to undertake any Mideast initiatives or risk involvement in another failed peace move, they say.

"Renewal of high-level diplomacy is not likely at all until after the elections in both countries," said Sam Lewis, director of the congressionally funded Institute for Peace and for seven years U.S. ambassador to Israel.

Lewis noted that the United States and Israel have rejected the only major initiative proposed in recent years by the Arab world and the Soviet Union: an international forum for peace talks between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

The United States views such a conference as opening the door to Soviet involvement in hitherto U.S.-dominated peace diplomacy in the region, while Israel fears pressure from the participants to cede land in return for peace.

U.S. Jewish and Arab leaders have called for stepped-up American diplomacy as an essential component in resolving the Israeli-Arab tensions which have resulted in bloody rioting over the past month in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Israeli troops seeking to quell violent demonstrations in the territories captured by Israel in the 1967 Mideast war have killed 23 Palestinians and ordered the deportation of nine others.

"The only way to solve this thing is to sit down and talk peace with a responsible Arab leader," said Morris Abram, chairman of the umbrella organization of major Jewish groups in the United States.

The one time that such direct talks were held yielded peace with Egypt in 1979, "and that still has to be the formula — direct talks," Abram said.

The 1979 pact with Egypt, the only peace treaty between Israel and an Arab state, was brokered by President Jimmy Carter.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, on a Mideast visit last September, offered U.S. help for direct talks between Israel and Jordan, Abram said. "He had the right idea, but (Jordan's King) Hussein was too afraid."

FONSECA

Culp ruled the indictment was faulty because it was too general, did not specify the owner of the allegedly stolen parts, and did not describe them adequately. Because of that, Hinkley argued, his client could not prepare an adequate defense.

Fonseca was arrested Aug. 19, 1987, at Midland International Airport following an elaborate, five-month sting operation conducted by the Midland County Sheriff's Department.

He was arrested as he inspected crates filled with what was supposed to be the missile parts — but instead were barrels filled with sand and gravel.

Although no longer indicted, Fonseca remains jailed in lieu of $500,000 bond on the original charge of engaging in organized criminal activity.

PRICES

"We've gotten to the point where we can burn fuel oil more cheaply," said Carl J. Schleck, who buys energy for more than 100 plants operated by the James River Corp. of Richmond, a major producer of paper products.

"Our only choice is to switch our facilities wherever we can to fuel oil, and we started that this week," said Richard J. Fillman, vice president of corporate energy affairs at the Bethlehem Steel Corp. Natural gas costs represent more than 20 percent of the steelmaker's annual operating costs, he said. "We're having to pay higher prices and that hurts us on the bottom line," Fillman added.

A new rule put into effect last Friday by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission permits pipeline companies to reduce the amount of gas they are obliged to buy from producers by whatever volumes the producers sell directly to other customers, rather than to the pipeline.

The anticipation that many producers would refuse to sell gas under these terms prompted some utilities and major industrial users of natural gas to increase spot market orders, forcing up prices, said John E. Olson, an energy analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., in Houston.

Instead, most pipelines and producers reported Monday that shipments were normal. In addition, many pipelines were operating close to capacity. "We've not had any difficulty of supplies being held back," said Dan Dienstbier, president of the gas pipeline group of the Enron Corp., in Houston.

The Southern California Gas Co., the nation's largest gas utility, said last Friday that it would temporarily cut off shipments to 800 business customers to avoid shortages to residential customers. The utility buys much of its gas supplies on the spot market, where until recently prices were lower than in longer-term contracts.

"There clearly is a diminishing of excess gas supplies in the spot market," Dienstbier of Enron said. "When it gets really cold, the spot market gas isn't there."

He and other executives and analysts said that gas supplies generally were plentiful but that isolated shortages similar to the one in southern California were possible during the winter months. Some analysts say a gas shortage might occur next winter because of slowed drilling activity.

Natural gas prices are followed closely in the oilpatch. A sustained increase, to $2 per million BTUs through the winter, would offset some of the lost revenue anticipated from falling oil prices. Also, more of the nation's natural gas reserves, which are far more plentiful than for oil, could be tapped at higher prices.

But natural gas prices cannot climb much further if oil prices are weak, because so many natural-gas users can switch to oil when it becomes less expensive.

Paul J. Milbauer, an analyst with Cyrus J. Lawrence Inc., in New York, attributed most of the tightness in the spot market to uncertainty over the impact of the new ruling, known as Order 500. He said spot prices were likely to decline to about $1.50 per million BTU's after the winter season of peak demand.

School makes move against tough principal

PATERSON, N.J. (AP) — Protest chants and the singing of "We Shall Overcome" greeted school board members who voted to draw up insubordination charges against an inner-city principal renowned for get-tough policies.

The board voted Monday night to direct its attorney to draw up the charges against Joe Clark, a principal cited by the Reagan administration for improving his high school.

About 500 singing and jeering parents, students and other residents joined Clark at the meeting to back his methods, which include roaming the halls of Eastside High School in this aging industrial northern New Jersey city with a bullhorn and baseball bat.

He recently came under fire for expelling 60 students without notifying the board and for locking fire doors in violation of fire codes. He later readmitted the students under board orders.

Clark said the expelled students were chronically failing and that he told them to get an education at alternative schools because they did not belong at Eastside. He said the doors were locked to keep out drug dealers.

Later Monday, on ABC-TV's "Nightline," Clark said some of the expelled students were as old as 21.

"At some point you have to go to work and become a contributor rather than become a leech on the building, taking away from the educational process of other, younger people," Clark said.

The dispute surrounding Clark, who is black, once again focused national attention on Eastside High, a school of 3,000 students, mostly black or Hispanic.

U.S. Education Secretary William J. Bennett visited the school in 1986 and praised Clark's no-nonsense approach to educating minority students. Clark's methods also have the backing of many community leaders and the city's law-and-order-minded mayor, Frank Graves.

The school board, comprised of six white, one black and two Hispanic members, voted 7-1 with one abstention to order its attorney to draw up charges of insubordination and unbefitting conduct against Clark.

The board announced its vote after going into a private session to discuss the matter, a move that caused the audience to boo and yell "chicken." The crowd chanted "We want Joe!" when Clark entered the auditorium.

After the decision was announced, the Rev. Fred LaGarde, of the Community Baptist Church of Love, ran to a microphone and led the audience in singing "We Shall Overcome." Board members pounded gavels, adjourned the meeting and walked out to boos and yelling.

If the board later votes to formally file the charges, it could suspend Clark for 120 days while the matter goes before state Education Commissioner Saul Cooperman. Clark would be entitled to a hearing before an administrative law judge, who would recommend to Cooperman whether to fine, suspend or dismiss Clark, or drop the charges.

Clark would not discuss how he would respond to any charges, saying his attorney would handle the matter.

When asked why Clark was not permitted to address the board publicly Monday night, board President Judith Moran said, "I think he's already been out in the public."

After the board members left, Clark told the audience his efforts as principal have been to ensure that minority students would have the opportunity to become "doctors, lawyers, teachers, congressmen.... "

"They're coming for me today but I declare they'll be coming for you tomorrow," he told the audience, which responded with cheers.

After the meeting, LaGarde said, "Why is it when we get a black leader who doesn't act as the power structure (wishes)...that they try to assassinate him, to cut him down."

AIDS-stricken teacher may sue officials

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An AIDS-stricken special-education teacher barred from the classroom because of his disease may sue Orange County school officials for violating his civil rights, a federal judge ruled Monday.

U.S. District Judge William P. Gray granted a request by Vincent Chalk's lawyer to ask a jury to award him damages for emotional distress arising from his removal from the classroom. No trial date was set.

Chalk, 43, who teaches the hearing impaired at Irvine High School, was put on administrative duties last fall after his superiors learned he had AIDS.

The Orange County Department of Education ordered him to to take a desk job that kept him away from direct contact with students, and Chalk challenged the decision.

Gray initially ruled Chalk could be barred, but the 9th U.S. Circuit of Appeals reversed that decisio Nov. 19, saying the case falls under provisions of the 1973 federal Rehabilitation Act barring job discrimination against the handicapped.

Chalk returned to the classroom in November.

The judge asked Chalk's attorney, American Civil Liberties Union lawyer Marjorie Rushforth, if her client was willing to spend "his last remaining year in litigation."

"He's determined to seek damages for the violation of his rights," she said. Outside the court, Ms. Rushforth said her client was willing to settle the matter out of court, but added no offer had been made.

Workmen drag a boom into the Monongahela River as part of the clean up of the one million gallon spill of diesel fuel Monday in Pittsburgh. A fuel tank collapsed Saturday and the spill has caused water shortages for thousands of people in the Pittsburgh area.

Residents deal with depleted water sources in wake of spill

WEST ELIZABETH, Pa. (AP) — Dry spigots forced thousands of residents to buy bottled water or lug buckets from tank trucks in the aftermath of a million-gallon oil spill that shut off water in Pittsburgh's suburbs.

"I was shocked when I got home," said Judy Schramm, pouring water into a plastic container from an emergency tank. "Not a drop came out of the spigot. Nothing. I just don't think people prepared enough."

Ms. Schramm, of Robinson Township, was among 23,000 area residents left without running water. Thousands more faced empty lines later today. Five of seven school districts that closed to conserve water Monday remained shut today, extending the holiday weekend for 18,000 students.

"It's really a bad situation. It's close to panicky," said Joseph Facenda, senior vice president at Giant Eagle supermarkets, where bottled water sold out almost as quickly as it hit the shelves.

On Saturday, a 40-year-old Ashland Oil Co. tank crumpled and spilled 3.5 million gallons of diesel fuel as it was being filled. A dike captured 2.5 million gallons, but 1 million gallons poured into the Monongahela River 27 miles south of Pittsburgh.

The Monongahela, which usually churns with commercial traffic, has been closed from the Ashland terminal to Pittsburgh since the spill. The Coast Guard hoped to re-open it today.

No existing water supplies were polluted. But water companies shut down their intake pipes from the Monongahela and Ohio rivers as patches of the clear, smelly oil flowed as far away as Newell, W.Va., 53 miles downstream.

"Most of our tanks are depleted. They're empty," said Robert Ross, vice president of Western Pennsylvania Water Co., which serves 750,000 people and had to close one of its two Monongahela River intakes.

About 10,000 West Penn customers in North Fayette Township were without water late Monday, as were 13,000 customers of the Municipal Authority of Robinson Township.

Ross estimated it would be "at minimum three to four days, more than likely five to six days," before the pump was turned back on. About 50,000 people would be immediately affected by a water shutoff.

Another company, West View Water, was down to its last reserves and had urged conservation to make it through this morning.

"Conservation is the pass word for the time. This is a regional disaster," said Joseph Dinkel, a West View spokesman.

Gov. Robert Casey declared a disaster in Allegheny, Washington and Beaver counties around Pittsburgh so the National Guard could haul water. More than 70 tankers, each holding 400 gallons of water, were available along with eight larger tankers.

The Red Cross set up a shelter at Pittsburgh's convention center for those forced to rely on steam heat. Pittsburgh's water comes from the Allegheny River and was unaffected.

The state ordered mandatory water conservation in affected areas. Businesses were told to curtail nonessential use, and residents were asked to significantly reduce usage for at least the next two to three days.

Communities downriver in Ohio and West Virginia also were alerted.

About 30,000 gallons was siphoned off the river by late Monday, and 1.4 million gallons sopped up from the tank site, officials said. Workers spread 23,000 feet of booms to trap the oil.

"There will be a considerable amount of oil lost to the environment. Eventually, the oil will break up and go into a dilution state and totally dissipate out of the water," said Jerry Saseen, on-site coordinator for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

It would take at least three or four days — possibly weeks — for oil to be skimmed off or diluted enough to meet federal standards that would allow water companies to take in water again.

Biologists say nature will handle some of cleanup

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Emergency crews vacuuming diesel oil from the fouled Monongahela River won't get every drop of the million-gallon spill. But if they get enough, Mother Nature will take care of the rest, biologists say.

"By springtime I expect the problems will not be very significant" thanks to the dilution of unrecovered oil and the action of bacteria naturally found in the water and riverbed sediment, said Edward Berkey, executive vice president of the Center for Hazardous Materials Research at the University of Pittsburgh.

"This is not to say there will be zero effect, but the biological system will be well along to recovery," he said Monday. "Within one to two years, you won't know it happened."

The bacteria slowly convert diesel fuel and other hydrocarbons into carbon dioxide and water.

"Nature is only going to do the final cleanup. You'd have to get 99 percent plus of it out before you rely on the natural activity," Berkey said.

Where bales of hay might once have been used to sop up the oil, emergency teams, aided by private workers, have stretched 23,000 feet of flexible, tubelike booms across the river at various places to collect the oil.

At seven points between downtown Pittsburgh and the collapsed Ashland Oil Co. tank 27 miles upstream at West Elizabeth, pumps sucked the oil through hoses into tanks to be hauled to an Ashland refinery for reprocessing.

In an ocean spill, oil can be herded into one area and dissolved with chemicals.

On rivers that's extremely difficult, said Jerry Saseen, on-site coordinator for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

"Part of the problem is the steep embankments of the river. They can't get the equipment in," he said. "We're at the mercy of the river."

Under even ideal conditions, mechanical means can't remove all the oil because winds and waves emulsify some of it, mixing it with air and water and making the oil sink where the booms can't stop it.

The emulsified oil is a major concern, according to water treatment officials who fear their submerged intake pipes and treatment facilities could be contaminated.

"You don't clean up an oil spill, you try to mitigate it," said EPA spokesman Ray Germann. "You have to minimize the seriousness of the situation. You can't make it go away."

Damage to fish and plants, however, is being minimized because of the season, Berkey said.

"The great thing about this is that it happened in winter," he said. "Winter is a dormant biological period. Most of the ducks have gone south. The fish aren't spawning. Biological systems are most vulnerable when rapid growth is taking place."

As of Monday, emergency teams had removed only about 30,000 gallons of the fuel that entered the river, the Coast Guard said.

Whatever oil remains in the river must be left to dilute and be consumed by bacteria, which actually find an energy source in petroleum fuels, the product of geologic forces on ancient plants and animals.

"Only when you get into synthetic man-made chemicals do we find nature is not fully able to break them down," said Charles Boylen, biology professor at the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in New York state.

Dilution will occur as the diesel fuel is mixed with ever-increasing volumes of water, first from the Allegheny River, which joins the Monongahela to form the Ohio in downtown Pittsburgh.

The Ohio and its tributaries then empty into the Mississippi in Cairo, Ill.

The unrecovered oil will represent only a small fraction of the hundreds of millions of gallons of water per day that flow past any point in the lower Ohio River system, Berkey said.

"You've got a very wide river, rapidly flowing and a very long river," he said.

Reagan misses budget deadline

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has missed the first deadline of 1988 for preparing the next federal budget, saying it was being asked to do the impossible.

By law, President Reagan was required to submit to Congress on Monday his blueprint for anticipated federal spending of more than $1 trillion during the next fiscal year.

That, said White House budget director James C. Miller III, was impossible. And with Congress in accord, the first deadline of the new year was broken.

"I do not see any way to prepare a responsible budget proposal for transmittal before mid-February," Miller said in a letter sent Monday to congressional leaders.

The administration was supposed to submit a spending outline for fiscal 1989, which will begin on Oct. 1.

But Miller said the Jan. 4 submission date in the law was based on the assumption that Congress would finish its fiscal 1988 legislation last September.

"As you know, final (tax and spending bills)...for fiscal 1988 were not concluded this year until just before Christmas," Miller said. He said it will take the administration 45 days to absorb the details of those mammoth bills and adjust and complete the budget for fiscal 1989.

Miller said "the Department of Defense, in particular, must completely redo its budget request."

How you play suit combinations can make a world of difference. A wrong decision cost the eventual winners of the Spingold Team Championship 10 International Match Points on this deal.

Both teams reached four spades on virtually identical auctions. In both rooms, East won the queen of clubs and continued with the king. Both declarers ruffed with the ten of spades, and both Wests overruffed with the jack and shifted to the jack of diamonds.

In one room, declarer covered with the queen and captured the king with the ace. He immediately shot back a diamond. West's ten completed the defensive book, and he led a third round for his partner to ruff away the table's winner. Declarer eventually had to concede a heart for down one.

In the other room, East did not cover the jack of diamonds. He won the ace and finessed the nine of diamonds, losing to the king. East had no way to get to his partner for a ruff, so declarer was able to take the heart finesse, draw trumps via the finesse, then cross to the table with the ace of hearts to discard his heart loser on the queen of diamonds.

Which line do we prefer? Frankly, neither. Since both major-suit finesses must be right if the contract is going to succeed, we would try the heart finesse after winning the ace of diamonds, and use the entry to take the trump finesse. After drawing trumps, declarer can lead a diamond to the nine, and he doesn't have to worry about possible ruffs.

El Paso mayor can't forgive or forget Def Leppard leader's 1983 racial slur

EL PASO, (AP) — A Hispanic leader says it's time to forgive heavy-metal band Def Leppard for a racial slur the lead singer made 4½ years ago, but Mayor Jonathan Rogers disagrees.

The mayor wants rock fans to boycott the group's concert next month.

At issue is a comment that lead singer Joe Elliott made at a concert in Tucson, Ariz., on Sept. 7, 1983, one day after the band played El Paso on what Rogers had proclaimed "Def Leppard Day."

In an effort to arouse his Tucson audience, Elliott said the band had played the night before in El Paso, "that place with all the greasy Mexicans."

Rogers heard about the comment and organized a Def Leppard record boycott with the League of United Latin American Citizens. He vowed "the band will not be welcome in El Paso again."

When the mayor was told last week that the band is scheduled to play Feb. 15 at the Special Events Center, he reiterated his stand.

"They insulted a majority of our population, and I urge people to stay away from the concert," he said.

But John Garcia, LULAC district director, said, "Apparently, (Elliott) was sorry for what he said, and we can't continue to hold a grudge."

Three weeks after his comment, while the band was in Tokyo, Elliott found out about the controversy. He phoned an El Paso radio station to deliver a public apology, which was recorded and broadcast several times. The band offered $10,000 for needy children. Rogers and then-LULAC district director Joe Loya snubbed the apology. Hispanic groups in El Monte, Calif., accepted the money.

Garcia disagreed with Loya's refusal to accept the apology or money.

"The money would have been of great value for scholarships," he said. "As far as the band goes now, I'd let the youth of El Paso decide if they feel Def Leppard's music is of value to them."

Elliott, 28, told the El Paso Times in a telephone interview last week that he still regrets making the comment.

"What I said then was not meant the way it came out, and it was a ridiculously stupid thing to do," the Englishman said on the eve of a concert in Florida. "Believe me, I've spent many a sleepless night over that incident, and I did my best to right a wrong. There's got to be room for forgiveness."

Elliott said he was trying to stir up the Tucson crowd by comparing its noise level to the din made the night before in El Paso.

Cooley

HOUSTON (AP) — Famed heart surgeon Dr. Denton Cooley, who performed the first successful heart transplant in 1968 and the world's first artificial heart transplant in 1969, filed for personal bankruptcy protection claiming debts of about $100 million.

Cooley, doing business as Cardiovascular Associates, Southwest Apartment Homes, Point of the Southwest, Southwestern Plaza, Texas American Bank Building and Cool Acres Ranch, filed Monday under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code.

Cooley, 67, listed among his assets real property valued at $44 million including several undeveloped tracts, at least one apartment complex, a six-story office building, two beach houses and oil and gas royalties.

Other assets include six vehicles, including two Rolls-Royces.

Among his debts were 11 unsecured debts of $26.5 million ranging from $19.9 million owed to First City National Bank of Houston, which is itself in the process of being reorganized with the help of a Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. contribution, to $523 owed a local sandwich shop.

Cooley's filing said he has $2.7 million in tax liabilities, but he indicated that at least a portion of that is under contest.

Cooley's wife, Louise, told The Associated Press Monday evening her husband was at the Texas Heart Institute, but hospital officials said he would not be in until today.

The native Houston doctor, founder and head of the Texas Heart Institute at the Texas Medical Center in Houston, performed his first heart transplant in 1968, almost a year after Dr. Christiaan Barnard first removed the diseased heart of a South African man and sewed in a new one.

Cooley did 21 other transplants within the span of a year, but he abandoned the program after most of his patients died when their bodies rejected the donor organ.

He resumed transplants in July 1982 after the drug cyclosporine was proved to combat rejection.

"We are very proud of her," said Bill Barnes, a longtime friend and agent of the model and actress, who is the granddaughter of author Ernest Hemingway. "She had a very wonderful stay there."

Miss Hemingway, 32, entered the center in Rancho Mirage on Dec. 4 and was released during the weekend, said Barnes. She went directly to her family home in rural Idaho, he said.

Her sisters — actress Mariel Hemingway, 25, and Muffet, 36 — were with her at the home in rural Ketchum and are proud of Margaux's decision to face her drinking problem, said Barnes.

"She has never felt better. It is all extremely positive," he said.

LONDON (AP) — Timothy Dalton, the latest actor to star as James Bond, will set aside secret-agent antics to team with actress Vanessa Redgrave on the British stage.

Dalton, 41, first appeared as Agent 007 in last year's "The Living Daylights." His new role is as tavern owner Cornelius Melody in Eugene O'Neill's "A Touch of the Poet," opening Jan. 28 at London's Young Vic Theater.

The tale of strife and romance following the American Revolution will run three weeks at the Young Vic before moving to Brighton and later to London's West End.

Exploratory work on a new Bond film is under way, Dalton has said, and his involvement is "highly probable."

DENVER (AP) — Democratic Gov. Roy Romer says he got his blue cashmere overcoat back as a holiday gift from a person who took it by mistake at a party given by Republicans.

Romer said at a news conference Monday that the person who took it at the party in Denver several weeks ago "was on his back in Hawaii while I was shivering here. But I got it back this morning."

The governor refused to identify the person, but said the man apologized profusely for mistaking the coat for his own.

'Hero's' rescue not done for reward

A Massachusetts man who came to the aid of a police officer being attacked by a mob received a $2,500 Carnegie Hero grant, but he won't be spending it all himself.

Gerald D. Crowley says he will split the grant with the police officer he rescued — Officer David Poole. Crowley's reasoning is simple: "I'm splitting it with him because I helped someone this one time and I'm getting all the awards. He hasn't gotten anything and he does this every day."

Crowley was honored for helping Poole who was being attacked at an amusement park by a crowd of people. Poole later said Crowley was the only person who even offered to come to his assistance.

Perhaps Crowley is being a little too modest in trying to downplay his role in rescuing the officer. Without question there is a segment of the population that looks down on officers and their responsibility to uphold the laws of this land, even at the risk of losing their lives.

But making the decision to place oneself in a similar position when an officer is threatened is a noteworthy move and should not go unnoticed. More than likely law enforcement officers would be glad to know that there are those individuals around who care enough about the people who risk their lives day and night to help them in life-threatening situations. But it isn't a decision that any and every person can make on a given day and the fact that Crowley made a decision in favor of helping the officer truly elevates him to the lofty heights of a modern-day hero.

"Actually, I think it's embarrassing," said Crowley. "I didn't do it for any reward."

No, real heroes never do.

UNICEF's tough goal

UNICEF, the international agency devoted to children, knows how to get attention.

Note this grabber in its 1988 State of the World's Children report: "One death in every three in the world is the death of a child under the age of five."

Millions die of diarrhea, measles, tetanus, whooping cough, acute respiratory infections, poor nutrition. Many of those deaths are preventable: $5 would buy a full course of vaccination, 50 cents would buy antibiotics and a dime would buy a salt-and-sugar solution that combats dehydration.

The clincher: Give generously. That appeal should make giving easy.

Unfortunately, good causes such as UNICEF often lose their audiences before they get to the bottom line. Blame it on a loss of interest after previous generosity yielded scant results. Blame it, too, on frustration with corruption and bureaucratic bungling that thwarts effective use of foreign aid.

But UNICEF offers hope and it offers reason to go on giving. For the state of the world's children in 1988 is markedly better than it was in 1980, UNICEF says, and it can be markedly better yet by the end of this decade.

Nearly half of the children in developing countries are being immunized against six killer diseases, compared with less than 10 percent a decade ago. That has saved 1.4 million young lives a year. Another 600,000 children are saved each year because their parents have learned how to administer oral-rehydration therapy. These are the statistics of success.

And there is hope, too, because people worldwide can readily learn to make children healthier.

"Health promotion is the great need and the great opportunity of our times," says UNICEF. The medical technology is in hand and affordable even in hard economic times.

Needed now is a massive communications effort by teachers, religious leaders, politicians, journalists, health professionals and business and labor officials. They can inform more parents in developing countries about the benefits of immunization, oral rehydration, breast feeding, birth spacing, hygiene and growth monitoring. Spreading that word becomes easier with increasing literacy and access to mass media.

If the efforts of recent years can be sustained or accelerated, UNICEF says, there is a chance to achieve one of the "more important goals that the world community has ever set for itself."

That goal is child survival, and with it the development of healthy children into productive adults. Those are doubly moving words. They offer joy and hope for what has been accomplished. And they tell us to press ahead to finish the job.

NRC's moves stymie safety efforts

WASHINGTON — The utility companies that finance nuclear power plants have found a friend in the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. This is the federal office which is supposed to keep an eye on the nation's 100-plus nuclear plants.

Jack Anderson

An investigation by Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-Conn., concludes that the NRC has all but stopped its conscientious inspectors from ordering safety improvements at the plants. The reason? The improvements may cost more than the bosses at the NRC think they are worth.

In industry jargon, changing a nuclear power plant to make it safer is called "backfitting," and the NRC's record on backfits has been less than aggressive.

In August, a federal court tried to put an end to one NRC policy on backfitting. That policy required the regulators to prove a backfit was needed, and that the increase in safety was worth the price. If you are deciding whether to remodel your kitchen, the cost/benefit analysis makes sense. If you are deciding whether to make a nuclear power plant safer, cost/benefit calculations may get in the way of preventing a disaster.

In a stinging opinion, the federal court told the NRC that the cost-/benefit approach to safety improvements was wrong.

Apparently, the cheerleaders for nuclear power at the NRC were not cowed by the court. They came up with a proposed clarification of the old rule, which sounds suspiciously like business as usual.

Here's how NRC Chairman Lando Zech explained it to Gejdenson's committee: "The court specifically rejected the proposition that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 forbids the NRC from ever considering economic costs in the backfitting process."

Translation: They left us a loophole.

The federal court, in fact, allowed the NRC to consider the price tag if the modification does more than make the plant "adequately" safe.

Given the NRC's track record on regulating the nuclear power industry, Zech and his chums on the committee are capable of stretching this loophole into a six-lane expressway. Source inside the NRC and congressional experts told our associate Stewart Harris that they fear the NRC will merely lower its standard for what constitutes adequate protection of public health and safety. That way, the NRC can use its cost-/benefit analysis to reject a safety improvement simply by saying the backfit is not needed to make the plant "adequately" safe.

Gejdenson's report says the new backfit policy at the NRC has now been written around the loophole and "lends itself to abuse and convenient interpretations."

Zech himself hinted at this strategy in testimony before Gejdenson's committee. He said the NRC believes in making the plants safer, "but that the process will be carefully managed to assure that the backfit is either required for safety or that the safety benefits are commensurate with the resources investment."

That is small comfort to the Union of Concerned Scientists, the nuclear safety group that brought the backfit issue to federal court.

That group's attorney, Ellyn Weiss, told the Gejdenson committee a disturbing story. In 1986, defects were suspected in vitally important pumps used in four different nuclear plants to circulate coolant around the reactors. Without coolant, the reactors can turn into nuclear disasters. The shaft in one pump at the Crystal River Three plant in Florida had actually snapped and the pump shafts at the Davis-Besse plant in Ohio had cracks. By April 1987, the NRC told the other plants to check their shafts for trouble, but two weeks later the agency backed off. "Inside NRC," a trade publication, reported that NRC staffers were told they would first have to analyze how much it would cost to fix the problem and whether the cost was worth it — this, even before they could order the research needed to find out whether there was a problem.

Gejdenson's report is appropriately called "NRC Coziness with Industry." An NRC spokeswoman declined our request for comment on the report until the NRC sends its formal response to Gejdenson's energy and environment subcommittee.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Our feathered friends are making a good point that the skies are too crowded for them and us. Birds which were sucked into the engine of a B-1 bomber over Colorado brought the plane down in a crash that killed three crewmen last September. Now geese have grounded the Air Force's $149 million Boeing 747 that circles the skies at all times carrying the manpower and know-how to wage war. The airborne command post is supposed to be the last refuge for the president and his military commanders to carry on during a nuclear war. But, the Soviets don't need fancy missiles to knock out our defense system. A flock of trained killer ducks will do.

Analysts say Khomeini may live for years

WASHINGTON — Top U.S. intelligence analysts, studying an extraordinary revelation in Tehran that the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini has written a new will, have concluded Uncle Sam's No. 1 enemy, though close to 90, is not all that sick and may last many more years.

The surprising revelation came in a U.S. intercept last month of a clandestine Iranian broadcast. Khomeini's own voice was heard talking to the notorious Hashemi Rafsanjani, speaker of the Majlis (parliament). "Appoint a person to take this (will) to the Majlis," Khomeini said.

"And what about the old will?," the aging Shiite fundamentalist was asked. "Bring back the (will) we previously sent there," Khomeini replied. He then said the new will must be "sealed" with wax, then delivered to "the holy shrine" in Tehran. U.S. officials say the broadcast would not have been allowed if Khomeini were close to death.

DOLE'S TRAVELLING MAN

No sooner had William Brock, Sen. Robert J. Dole's presidential campaign manager, returned from a week-long mission in Japan for the Chrysler Corp. than he was off for a Caribbean vacation.

He was scheduled to vacation about 10 days, leaving before Christmas and returning to work Monday. Former senator Brock, who quit as secretary of labor to run Dole's operation, was following the end-of-year holiday schedule customary for members of Congress and the Cabinet.

But presidential campaigns do not shut down during that period, and Dole himself was working Iowa on New Year's Eve. Staffers grumbled it was impossible to get key decisions during Brock's absence.

BUSH'S OHIO MAN

Vice President George Bush's Ohio backers informed his national campaign staff that former governor James Rhodes' self-starting push for a formal state committee endorsement of the vice president could hurt their high-flying chances.

They reported to Washington the endorsement attempt would only cause party friction and provide no tangible benefit. Most county chairmen back Bush anyway, and the bankrupt state organization cannot help him. What's worse, negative ratings for the 79-year-old Rhodes are sky high after his failed comeback bid for governor in 1986, and he could only hurt Bush against Sen. Robert J. Dole's Ohio challenge.

Bush's Ohio managers believe Rhodes' late start for the vice president is an effort to ride him into re-election as Republican national committeeman so that he could have some say on the 1990 state party ticket. Determined to give the forlorn Ohio GOP a new face, many of the Bush backers want a new national committeeman.

ANGRY JUSTICE

Justice Department officials are fuming because President Reagan accepted their opinion that the new independent counsel (special prosecutor) law is unconstitutional but rejected their recommendation that he veto it.

That heightened tension between the White House staff and Justice that began with the unsuccessful fight to confirm Robert Bork for the Supreme Court. Justice lawyers complain that presidential aides avoiding confrontation with Congress makes for bad policy.

The White House staff position was that a veto would have left Reagan politically exposed in view of the number of independent counsels investigating past and present Reagan administration officials, including Attorney General Edwin Meese.

ANGRY NSC

A senior member of President Reagan's national security staff is steaming over Commerce Department planning for increased trade with the Soviet Union that is bypassing both the White House and Pentagon.

Stephen I. Danzansky, the NSC's top foreign economic planner, is supposed to be coordinating the trade-boosting plans that have split the administration. Instead, he is sometimes left in the dark when important trade meetings are called by Commerce.

National security adviser Colin Powell has told aides he will insist on imposing White House direction over the new trade proposals being considered privately at Commerce.

CHARLEY REESE

Israeli occupation isn't cause of hostilities

The State Department is up to its old Israel-bashing tricks again. Palestinians riot, throw firebombs and stones, and the State Department blames Israel for stopping the riots with force.

Charley Reese

Worse, it does a cheap shot statement that Israeli occupation is responsible for the riots.

The State Department since Woodrow Wilson's day has been a branch office of Wall Street. Since it traditionally puts the financial interests of big business ahead of the national interests of America, not to mention the human rights of people in other countries, it is no surprise that olless Israel is on its bitch list.

Just to set the record straight, the Israelis have not over-reacted or used excessive force in quelling riots. Nor is Israel to blame for the occupation of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Those areas were occupied in 1967 in the course of Israel responding to an aggressive war launched by Egypt, Jordan, and Syria. It is standard procedure to occupy territory taken in the course of a defensive war. It is standard procedure to dispose of the occupied territory, or settle the question of its sovereignty, in the process of negotiating a peace treaty to end the war.

The 1967 war has, with the exception of Egypt, not ended. Hostilities ceased as a result of a negotiated ceasefire. Israel asked for and has been ready for the last 20 years to negotiate peace treaties with Jordan and Syria, at which time, the question of occupied territory would be settled.

You should note that when Egypt agreed to negotiate a peace treaty, ending the 1967 war, the Sinai which had been captured and occupied in that war, was returned to Egypt.

It was the Arab countries, however, which refused and continue to refuse, save for Egypt, to negotiate an end to the 1967 war. The Israeli occupation of the West Bank, Gaza, and the Golan Heights is therefore perfectly legal. It is Arab intransigence, not Israel's, which leaves the matter unresolved.

Furthermore, it was Egypt, not Israel, which broke off negotiations for Palestinian autonomy and which continues to refuse to negotiate. It was Jordan, also intended to be a party to the negotiations, which refused and continues to refuse to participate.

That is particularly ironic since Jordan, which claims title to the West Bank, has in fact no legitimate claim. In 1948, when the Arab countries attacked in violation of the United Nations partition of the remaining two-fifths of the Palestine Mandate (Jordan was created out of the other three), Jordan seized the West Bank areas and annexed them.

The Jordanian annexation was such a blatant violation of international law that not even all the Arab countries recognized it. It was that territory which Israel re-took after Jordan joined Syria and Egypt in attacking Israel in 1967.

And while speaking of intransigence it is the Arab countries which insist on a judenrein (no Jews) policy. Moderate King Hussein has decreed the death penalty for any Arab who sells his own land to a Jew. No Jews are allowed to settle in Jordan. After the Jordanian occupation in 1948, Jews were expelled from the captured areas, including those whose families had lived there for generations and generations.

The Israelis did not expel Arabs but rather granted them citizenship in the new state, guaranteed them freedom of religion, and designated Arabic as one of two official languages for Israel.

One reason there is now trouble is that there is a generation of young men who were born and lived under Israeli occupation. Israeli occupation is, in fact, so benign that these young men have no idea how bad it was living under Jordanian rule.

Hussein has killed thousands more Palestinians than the Israelis. Even the PLO freely admits that 75 percent of its martyrs have been created by Arabs, not Israel.

Shuttle nozzle breakup adds weeks to launch

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA officials say it may be as late as mid-August before America's astronauts again fly into space.

Officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said Monday that the puzzling breakup of a rocket nozzle part during a test may add six weeks to 10 weeks to the delay in getting the shuttle Discovery off the ground.

That could push the resumption of shuttle flights into mid-August, 2½ years after an explosion destroyed the shuttle Challenger and killed its crew of seven.

NASA at first hoped to be able to fly again in the summer of 1987. But the complexity of redesigning the shuttle booster rocket caused that first-launch date to slip steadily — to February this year and then to June 2.

The new failure has pushed that liftoff target even farther into the distance. A full-scale test firing of the redesigned booster on Dec. 23 was considered a success until engineers found pieces of an 8-foot-diameter "boot ring" inside the nozzle and on the ground outside.

The industry magazine Aviation Week and Space Technology said in its Jan. 4 edition that the most optimistic launch date is September and that shipment of the aft rocket segments to the Kennedy Space Center at Cape Canaveral, Fla., has been delayed until March 24 at the earliest.

Five months is required to prepare a shuttle for flight after the booster rocket segments arrive by rail at Canaveral.

Morton Thiokol Inc., which builds the rockets in Utah, was to have shipped aft sections for the first flight by rail last Saturday, but the shipment was delayed. David Drachlis, a NASA spokesman at Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., said that if everything goes well, the shipment might take place in the latter half of February.

The boot ring, 2 inches thick and 7 inches wide, was used for the first time in the December test. The ring attaches a flexible boot that allows the rocket nozzle to swivel in flight.

"At this point, we know we are not going to use the component," said Sara Keegan, a NASA spokeswoman. She said it wasn't certain whether a version of the ring that had withstood an earlier full-scale firing will be used instead.

Of the delay caused by the latest problem, Ms. Keegan said, "Our best guess is somewhere in the area of six to 10 weeks. That's our best assessment of what the problem is going to entail."

John Thomas, an official at the Marshall Space Flight Center, said through a spokesman that the delay will be held to the six-week to 10-week range if the earlier design of the boot ring is used and everything else remains on schedule.

Thomas was in charge of redesigning the shuttle booster rocket after the January 1986 Challenger explosion.

Morton Thiokol officials said close examination of the test-fired booster rocket showed no failures other than that in the rocket's nozzle. Company spokesman Rocky Raab said engineers picking apart the solid-fuel motor Monday found that the rocket's case-to-nozzle joint worked as designed, preventing gases from escaping.

Failure of a rubber-like O-ring seal in one of Challenger's booster joints was blamed by a presidential commission for leaking super-hot gases that ignited the explosion which destroyed the spacecraft.

In another development, an internal report by NASA safety experts concluded the space agency still lacks the skilled engineers, clear guidelines or leadership to ensure the safety of manned spaceflight, The Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported in today's editions.

The agency is falling into a "safety second" mind-set despite heightened safety concerns after the Challenger accident, according to a report prepared by a committee of safety experts for senior NASA officials.

"As one worker put it, 'Their words say safety, but their actions say don't worry about it,'" the newspaper quoted the report as saying.

"The concern for (shuttle) safety which peaked shortly after the Challenger accident appears to be waning, and in many areas this has been translated by workers, engineers and supervisors to a 'business as usual' attitude," the report said.

George Rodney, NASA's new associate administrator for safety, reliability, maintainability and quality assurance, requested the study.

On Monday he said, "There are elements of truth in all those statements. The report did emphasize some issues we needed to work (on). All of them are things that we are taking various actions on."

Report says NASA still lacks manpower to ensure safety

ATLANTA (AP) — An internal report by NASA safety experts concludes that two years after the Challenger disaster the space agency still lacks the engineers, guidelines or leadership to ensure the safety of manned spaceflight.

The report was prepared by a committee of safety experts for senior officials with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and obtained by The Atlanta Journal-Constitution, which published details in Tuesday editions.

Safety is taking a back seat to schedule pressures and costs despite agency efforts at reform, spurred by the January 1986 Challenger explosion that destroyed the shuttle and killed seven astronauts.

"As one worker put it, 'Their words say safety, but their actions say don't worry about it,'" the committee said in its report.

The committee cited "disturbing signs" that that some pre-Challenger safety problems identified in the aftermath of the accident still exist.

NASA officials Monday acknowledged the problems singled out by the committee but said they already were working to correct them. Committee members said they had hoped the report would be sent to Congress. NASA officials Monday said the report was not meant for public consumption.

The eight-member Safety Risk Assessment Ad Hoc Committee submitted the report in August after a three-month review of the agency's revamped safety policies, procedures and personnel.

The committee, which included five outside safety experts and three agency officials, was appointed by George Rodney, the NASA's new associate administrator for safety, reliability, maintainability and quality assurance.

"There are elements of truth in all those statements," Rodney said Monday. "The report did emphasize some issues we needed to work (on). All of them are things that we are taking various actions on.

"The fact is, we are still recovering," he said. "We are not perfect by a long shot. We are still redoing things. We have had a lot struggles and we will be struggling for some time."

The report acknowledged that significant agency efforts were under way to identify and correct many flaws in the safety system. Nonetheless, committee members said they were disturbed by their findings.

"There is a critical lack of space systems engineering skills within NASA and NASA support contractors' organizations," the report said. "If they do not possess these skills, the hazard analyses, which are the cornerstones of the risk assessment, are usually incomplete and superficial."

"It is unlikely that this situation will improve or that a meaningful safety assessment can be made without a change in management policy and a redirection of personnel resources," it said.

Taste changes hurting consumption of eggs

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The legendary ham 'n' eggs breakfast is gradually giving way to lighter fare among many health-conscious Americans, and Agriculture Department experts say the trend is hurting poultry producers.

"Americans are reducing their consumption of eggs, pulling down egg prices," economist Jack S. Ross says. "A recent report by a government-sponsored panel of health specialists recommends that doctors monitor their adult patients' cholesterol level and prescribe corrective diets for risk cases."

Ross continued: "If doctors heed this report, there is no doubt it will hurt demand for high-cholesterol foods, contributing further to the long-run decline in egg consumption."

Older Americans in the 50-plus age group are the greatest consumers of eggs, he said. They were brought up by parents who often ate eggs for breakfast.

But younger people, the baby-boomers, consume fewer eggs, probably as a matter of preference, Ross said. Therefore egg consumption is expected to decline in the future.

The U.S. per capita consumption of eggs was around 251 eggs last year and could dip to 246 eggs, on the average, in 1988. Since 1975, when the average dropped to 276, per capita egg consumption has been at the lowest levels since USDA began keeping records in 1909.

Before that, the low mark was 278 eggs per person in 1935 during the Depression. Egg consumption climbed to 400 eggs in 1945, the final year of World War II. The rate has been below 300 annually since the early 1970s.

Ross said wholesale egg prices this year may average 59 cents to 65 cents a dozen for Grade A large eggs in cartons on the New York City market, compared with an estimated 62 cents last year.

"Production costs likely will be a little higher than 1987's 62-cents-per-dozen average," he said. "Hence, the outlook for the industry is not bright."

Ross noted that the egg industry can expand output fairly quickly when prices go up. Producers operating below capacity can increase production rapidly by keeping older hens longer through forced molting.

Since 1980, annual production of table-type eggs has been around 5.2 billion dozen, and little change is expected in 1988, he said.

"Even though egg prices have been weak since last spring, the industry shows no inclination to curtail production," he said. "Overall, the flock size and replacement pullets have changed little; forced molting is high, and slaughter of hatchery hens in 1987 was below 1986."

Only about 1,800 producers own flocks of more than 10,000 laying hens, compared with approximately 6,000 commercial owners a decade ago, Ross said. The trend will continue toward fewer and larger egg producers as stronger operations buy out inefficient and financially pressed operations, he said.

Meanwhile, another USDA official is emphasizing the bargains now available.

H. Conner Kennett, director of poultry in the department's Agricultural Marketing Service, said egg production this winter is up about 1 percent from a year ago and that prices are down about 20 cents a dozen from the year-ago New York wholesale price.

NATION IN BRIEF

Most states offering less low-income child care

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most states are offering less low-income child care than they did six years ago, according to a survey by the Children's Defense Fund.

Assuming an inflation factor of 24 percent over the period, the survey released Monday concludes that 28 states invested less in child care in 1987 than they did in 1981, and 22 states were actually serving fewer children than they did in 1981.

The Washington-based advocacy group said inflation and cuts in the federal Social Security Block Grants were key factors in the decline. With the cuts and inflation, the value of the grant which states use for a variety of services dropped 50 percent in 10 years, the fund said.

Drugs in animals eyed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Food-producing animals that are put on drugs to promote growth or control parasites will have to be more stringently tested under new guidelines proposed by the Food and Drug Administration.

Drug producers would have to develop new residue tests to detect smaller amounts than previously required of drugs which might cause cancer. The FDA said about 80 percent of U.S. livestock and poultry receive some type of drug during their lifespan.

Gerald Guest, the FDA's director of veterinary medicine, said Monday that federal inspectors would use the tests to check for residues in the meat, fat, livers and kidneys of food animals, and in milk and eggs.

New POW medal planned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prisoners of War or their nearest surviving relatives will be eligible for a new military medal, with applications available within a month or so, officials say.

The Defense Department estimates there have been 142,200 American prisoners of war. Maj. David Super, a Pentagon spokesman, said Monday that the Pentagon will set up a toll-free telephone number for application requests.

Awarding of the medals will take from 45 to 90 days because of the need to verify military records, Super said. The medal was authorized by Congress for any American serviceman taken prisoner during World War I or later conflicts and will be issued without charge.

Scout cookie tax reassessed

FORT COLLINS, Colo. (AP) — City Council has decided to reassess plans to tax Girl Scout cookies after receiving protests from across the nation, the mayor says.

Mayor Larry Estrada made the announcement Monday after meeting with representatives of the Girl Scouts and other charitable organizations.

An ordinance to tax products sold by charitable organizations has been on the books since 1987. But officials announced only recently that it would be enforced. Boxes of Girl Scout cookies would have been subject to a 5-cent tax.

In response to numerous calls, the city came up with two proposals, said Pete Dallow, director of administrative services.

One would exempt every local charitable organization from a sales tax on food; the other would allow them to hold two or three tax-exempt fund-raisers each year.

"We are hoping that within the next three to four weeks we'll come up with an ordinance or create an amendment that exempts sales by charitable organizations," said Estrada.

Brothers drown in icy lake

EVESHAM TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Two young brothers drowned in the frigid waters of a pond, officials said.

Christoper Fuller, 9, and his brother, Steven, 5, died at Garden State Hospital in Marlton on Monday, more than three hours after they were pulled from ice-covered Barton Run Lake, officials said.

They died of drowning, said hospital spokesman Ed Kanis.

Police searched for the boys after their mother reported them missing, said police Sgt. John Wainwright.

"We were hoping to find them walking in the area or sledding," said Wainright. "It just didn't turn out like we wanted it to."

The search turned to the pond after articles of clothing were discovered on the surface, he said.

Divers from Medford Township's Manpower Emergency Response Diving Team found the boys in the pond, said Wainwright. Efforts to revive them failed.

Weed-killer threat less

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency is still requiring a warning label on a widely used weed-killer although it says the chemical poses less of a threat to groundwater than feared.

The EPA said Monday studies show the chemical cyanazine's risk in the environment is negligible but it is going to retain warnings against its use where the water table is high. The labels, which also warn of possible birth defects, will continue to be required because of early animal tests which concluded the weed killer could pose a danger to workers.

Cyanazine, which is used on up to 25 percent of the nation's corn crop, is sold under the trade name Bladex by the DuPont Co. EPA said it had been unable to find any cyanazine in 400 samples from 200 wells in four counties studied.

Jet fire causes evacuation

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A fire in a power generator connected to a Continental jet caused a hasty evacuation at the airport gate Monday when the ground crew noticed smoke coming from the unit, airport officials said.

All 129 passengers and seven crew members on the Boeing 727 got off safely, and the grease fire in the auxiliary power generator burned itself out at Palm Beach International Airport, officials said.

"No problems whatsoever," said John Kohar, Continental's station manager at Palm Beach International.

Fire officials said the fire would have gone out when the crew turned off the power unit before takeoff.

The plane was undamaged, and mechanics replaced a gasket on the generator, which powers lights and air when the plane is on the ground, Kohar said.

Flight 656, bound for Newark, N.J., was initially scheduled to leave at 6:35 a.m. and took off at 11:22 a.m. It was delayed two hours before the incident and for a period afterward due to snow in Newark.

Worn tiles of Senate corridors being replaced

WASHINGTON (AP) — The footsteps of the Senate's great — and those of millions of ordinary citizens — are being erased this week as workmen replace thousands of decorative tiles trod underfoot since the Capitol's Senate wing opened in 1859.

The tile, most of it at least 130 years old, is being jackhammered out of Senate corridors in a four-phase project. Eventually, at least 20,000 of the ceramic squares — 20 percent or more of the total — will be replaced with replicas.

Although many of the tiles are worn, they do bear the imprint of history.

"Many millions of people have trod on them," said Elliott Carroll, executive assistant to the Architect of the Capitol who is in charge of the replacement project.

Those millions include every American president since Abraham Lincoln, hundreds of senators, thousands of lobbyists, thousands of foreign dignitaries, uncounted scores of millions of American and foreign tourists.

The old tile, an intricate, multi-colored carpet of sinuous mid-Victorian floral and geometric design, is being broken into bits and hauled away by contractors as debris.

The reason: Many of tiles, which for the most part measure 6 inches by 6 inches by 1½ inches deep, have been badly worn by all of those footsteps.

In high-traffic areas some of the designs have been all but obliterated.

Others show little or no apparent wear.

But to keep a uniform appearance, all of the tile in each separate area is being replaced.

According to the architect's office, the grout that holds the individual antique tiles in place is so strong that the only feasible way to remove them is to break them up.

The replicas, paid for by a $1.5 million appropriation, are being quickly cemented into place.

The work is the culmination of a long process that involved photographing all of the Senate's historic tile floors and the reconstitution of a moribund English pottery.

The new tiles, as the old, were made in Stoke-Upon-Trent, Staffordshire, England. The original firm: Minton, Hollings & Co. The new manufacturer: H&R Johnston Co.

"It has taken some time," Carroll said. "The company had lost the technology of making these encaustic tiles. It took some years before they could do the research to redevelop it."

The original tile installation began in 1856 and took four years to complete. Replacing the old with the new may take several years in four separate phases of which the first has now begun.

Virtually every visitor to the Senate since the Capitol's expansion in the middle of the last century has walked on the tile, conducting conversations weighty and casual over its surface.

Abused boy temporarily 'spared' return to father

NEW YORK (AP) — A boy allegedly abused by his diplomat-father has been temporarily spared from returning to Zimbabwe despite an attorney's argument that the African country believes the United States kidnapped the youngster.

The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled Monday that 9-year-old Terrence Karamba can stay in a Long Island foster home while lawyers battle against his immediate transfer to State Department custody.

The three-judge panel tentatively scheduled a hearing on the boy's appeal for Thursday.

"We want the status quo of the child maintained for a short period time," said Circuit Judge Ralph K. Winter.

The panel sent the case back to federal court for Judge Jack B. Weinstein to appoint a guardian to represent the boy, who was placed in foster care Dec. 11.

The boy was removed from his family after his elementary school teachers here noticed suspicious scars and injuries.

City attorneys said the boy's father, Floyd, an administrative attache to the Zimbabwean Mission to the United Nations brutalized the boy.

Weinstein has ruled that because of Karamba's diplomatic status, the boy should be turned over to the State Department for return to Zimbabwean mission.

But attorneys for the city Human Resources Administration and Legal Aid Society said that transfer will result in his being returned to the southern African country against his will. They said the boy needs counseling to make the transition easier.

"He is terrified of going back to Zimbabwe," Legal Aid lawyer Henry Weintraub told the judges.

Weintraub said the boy has been under tremendous psychological stress and had attempted to jump from a moving car and from a second floor window to avoid returning home.

FCC ordered to reinstate minority preference rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — Policies designed to increase minority and female ownership of radio and television stations will soon be back in place at the Federal Communications Commission.

The FCC may reinstate the policies as early as next week, in response to orders from Congress cutting short efforts by the commission to dismantle the preference programs, FCC spokesman John Kamp said.

The agency put the policies on hold in December 1986 while it conducted an inquiry, saying it wanted to determine whether the policies are constitutional.

But members of Congress who support the policies inserted language in the massive 1988 spending bill passed before the holiday recess giving the FCC no choice in the matter.

"The number of broadcasters that are minorities or women show it's not an open market," said Meredith Fauls, an aide to Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn. "The only way you have any kind of level playing field is to give minorities and women preferences."

Weicker, ranking Republican on the Senate Small Business Committee, worked with Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, and Sen. Frank R. Lautenberg, D-N.J., to insert the language in the spending package. Lautenberg had earlier sponsored similar legislation, which he said would promote diversity in broadcast programming.

The number of women and minorities who own broadcast stations has grown from under 50, or less than 1 percent of the total, when the policies were adopted in 1978 to more than 300, or more than 3 percent, said Thomas Hart, a Washington lawyer who represents a group of minorities and women who lobbied for the preferences.

The largest growth has been in black- and Hispanic-owned radio stations, he said.

One of the policies that will be resumed allows broadcasters in danger of losing their licenses to sell their stations to minority-controlled interests for up to 75 percent of fair-market value.

One such broadcaster whose license is in jeopardy is KGMC-TV, an independent UHF station in Oklahoma City that is controlled by the family of convicted stock speculator Ivan F. Boesky.

STORM

Department of Public Safety officials said all roads were open today and the Midland Police Department reported three accidents this morning due to icy roads.

The combination of a cold air mass from Canada, moisture from the southeast Gulf area and moisture from the Pacific southwest is expected to bring snow into the Permian Basin as early as tonight through Wednesday, Tyra said.

Tonight is expected to be cloudy with freezing drizzle expected. Snow could fall by midnight today, according to NWS forecasters.

Winds today are expected to be southeast at 10 to 20 mph with the low expected to be in the mid-20s.

Wednesday will continue to be cloudy with a 50 percent chance of snow. Additional accumulations of 2 to 4 inches are possible.

The high Wednesday will be in the mid-30s with southeast winds at 10 to 20 mph.

STATE

A second wave of bone-chilling air was expected to surge into North and West Texas tonight — possibly carrying snow and freezing rain — as shelters for the homeless braced for a full house and forecasters warned farmers to protect their livestock.

"All of Texas is going to be cold," warned Ed Delgado, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Fort Worth. "A very strong ridge of high pressure across the Plains is moving south."

North and West Texas will feel the brunt of the wintry chill, with overnight lows in the Dallas area expected to fall into the low 20s or teens by midweek, Delgado said.

"A surge of cold air is coming through right now," he said Monday afternoon, "and behind that is a second surge of even colder air."

Forecasters predicted a slight chance of light snow or sleet for Dallas on Tuesday, with highs in the upper 20s. "The rest of the week looks very cold, with another chance of snow on Thursday," Delgado said.

The National Weather Service reported that freezing drizzle and fog was developing Monday night in the Permian Basin of West Texas, whose center is the Odessa-Midland area. Officials warned that roads were likely to become slick and possibly icy and that the fog would cut visibilities to less than a mile.

Only far South Texas is expected to escape extreme cold, and the citrus crop should not be affected, Delgado said. Overnight lows in the 30s are expected in the Houston area and the Hill Country.

The Salvation Army in Dallas, meanwhile, was making plans to shelter as many as 1,500 homeless people.

Raises not included in county's budget

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County officially entered into a new fiscal year Monday when commissioners activated a new budget that failed to include employee salary increases for the second year in a row.

Despite efforts by Sheriff Gary Painter to push for a 3 percent across-the-board pay raise, commissioners voted to hold the line on salaries for yet another year.

Painter had suggested that the court raise salaries by picking up 3 percent of each employee's Social Security contribution. He said employees would garner about $20 per month more in take home pay under the plan than they would under a standard raise in gross income.

However, the court nixed the proposal agreeing with Commissioner Guy McCrary, who asserted that he could not justify the increase to taxpayers despite the fact that the local economy has rebounded somewhat from last year's drop in oil prices.

Meanwhile, commissioners approved a budgetary amendment ordered by Midland County's three district judges to increase the county auditor's salary by $200 per month. District court reporters also received a $100 per month pay raise under the amendment.

State law gives district judges the power to order salary hikes for those positions. The judges also have the authority to hire or fire those employees.

The court also corrected what Commissioner Durward Wright called "an oversight" by restoring funding for the Midland County Historical Commission's program to place markers on points of historical interest in the county.

At the request of Director Nancy McKinley, commissioners approved the $500 allocation not included in the original budget and also increased the allotment for expert help from $300 to $500.

With $70,000 in its bank account, the historical commission is prepared to move ahead with plans to construct a new museum to house present and future county artifacts, Mrs. McKinley said.

Mrs. McKinley said the growing collection makes the present facility — located in the basement of the Midland County Library — inadequate in terms of space.

"We want a place that has adequate heating, constant temperature and lighting to house this collection," she said.

Mrs. McKinley said the historical commission proposes that it split with the county the cost of constructing the new museum on a site located behind the main library.

"We want you to know how much money we've got and what we want to do with it. And we want the county's help," Mrs. McKinley said.

In other action Monday, commissioners authorized County Auditor Floyd Jarnigan to advertise for bids for long distance telephone service.

Also, the court set hourly rates for students in Vocational Occupational Education, set this year's holiday dates, appointed members to serve on the Courthouse Flower Fund and adjusted the hourly pay rate for part-time employees.

In addition, commissioners voted to pay county and precinct officers on a salary basis rather than on a fee basis. And the court assigned 10 employees to hear wage complaints presented to the Salary Grievance Committee and set mileage allowances for county employees at 23 cents per mile.

Commissioners fixed travel expense accounts for county trappers at $1,800; law library employees, $300 per month; county commissioners, $350 per month; county welfare workers, $25 per month; and justices of the peace, $200 per month.

Investigation begins into plane crash

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A federal aviation investigator and two inspectors were in Midland today probing into the cause or causes of a twin-engine airplane crash that killed the aircraft's pilot and sole occupant shortly after take-off Monday morning from Midland Air Park.

Killed on impact was the pilot, Melvin Leon Anderson, a 49-year-old certified flight instructor who was employed by Basin Aviation at the Air Park. The aircraft was en route to Ruidoso, N.M.

Probing into the crash and the pilot's background were Armond Edwards, investigator with the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) in Fort Worth and Anthony "Tony" Pirrello and Walter Alexander, aviation-safety inspectors with the Federal Aviation Administration in Lubbock.

The twin-engine aircraft, a low-wing propeller-driven craft owned by Midland rancher-oilman Murray Fasken, crashed just southeast of the entrance to Greentree Country Club housing addition.

In its plunge into a pasture, the aircraft severed TU Electric power lines and resulted in the loss of electric power to 1,317 customers in Greentree, Melody Acres, Greenhill Terrace and Crestgate housing additions.

Power was interrupted at 9:48 a.m. It was restored in three segments: at 11:03 a.m., 1:15 p.m. and 1:32 p.m. Monday.

"That gets to be top priority when people are without service," said TU Electric spokesman Sara St. Clair.

A witness to the crash said the airplane was "just out of control and nose diving." Another witness heard "this sputtering" and roar before the explosion and fiery crash.

The crash was at least the third accident involving twin-engine aircraft taking off from Midland Air Park.

On May 3, 1982, a twin-engine Piper Navajo piloted by Fred Michna of Midland made a gear-up crash landing onto Cedar Avenue after the airplane's engines failed. Jet fuel — kerosene — inadvertently was pumped into the aircraft's fuel tanks shortly before takeoff. The plane's piston-powered engines required aviation gasoline to operate. No one was injured in the street landing.

Public response sought on MISD's new AIDS cirriculum

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Superintendent Joe Baressi calls the school district's new AIDS curriculum conservative, yet not "Pollyanna-ish," and Midland citizens will be able to make a judgment of their own Thursday night.

A public hearing soliciting response on Midland Independent School District's AIDS education unit for use in high school health classes will be held Thursday at 7:30 p.m., in the Alamo Junior High School auditorium, 3800 W. Storey Ave.

Baressi said the district and the committees who wrote the AIDS unit are "still in the input stage," and will make appropriate changes "if any" after Thursday's meeting.

School board approval could come as soon as their next meeting which is slated for Tuesday, Jan. 12, at 1:30 p.m., he added.

Should the policy be approved then, the superintendent said the curriculum would be implemented in the health classes before the school year's end.

Students in grades nine through 12 take the semester-long health class at their scheduling convenience and it is a requirement for graduation, Baressi said.

More than two-thirds of the high school students take the class in grades 10, 11 or 12, he added.

The five-day-long AIDS education unit is a part of the larger unit which teaches children about sexually transmitted diseases (STDs), Baressi said.

Units on reproduction and communicable diseases precede the AIDS unit, the policy states.

At a later time, AIDS education may be taught in seventh grade life science classes — a subject taught the entire school year, Baressi said.

In elementary levels, concepts of deadly and contagious diseases and the immune system may be addressed in response to AIDS, the superintendent explained.

Condoms as a means of prevention of transmitting AIDS during sexual intercourse are mentioned in the two video tapes which complement the written portion of the high school unit, Baressi said.

However, abstention from sexual activity is mentioned throughout the unit as the only sure way of preventing the spread of infection, he maintained.

The curriculum has been available for review at the central administration offices at 702 North N street, however, as of Monday, only 10 citizens — including members of the media — had perused the policy.

The unit was written with the help of a vast amount of resources including similar units in the Dallas, Lubbock and Victoria independent school districts, the policy states.

Five incumbent county officials so far running unopposed

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

After Monday's 6 p.m. filing deadline for March 8 primary elections, five Midland County incumbents — all Republicans — will run unopposed in the November general election unless write-in candidacies materialize.

Current officeholders who have logged no opposition are Sheriff Gary Painter, District Attorney Al Schorre, County Attorney Mark Dettman, Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe and Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield.

Also running unopposed in the Republican primary — and with no Democratic opponent on the horizon — are U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith and State Rep. Tom Craddick, according to spokespersons at state Republican and Democratic headquarters in Austin.

In addition to county-wide races, balloters in the March 8 primary will tally their support for a presidential candidate in what is commonly called "Super Tuesday," Midland County Elections Commissioner Bettye Calvert said today.

Thirteen states in addition to Texas will hold presidential primaries on that date.

Statewide offices set for primary elections are U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's seat, and those of several Texas Supreme Court justices and railroad commissioners.

Locally, the Midland County Republican Party is fielding primary candidates in all nine countywide races, according to Party Chairman Dean Rucker.

The Republican primary race for 142nd Judicial District judge pits incumbent Pat Baskin — who changed his party affiliation last month from Democratic to Republican — against local attorney Nick Taylor.

In the Precinct 1 county commissioner's race, incumbent Durward Wright is opposed by Michael Roadcup, an associate pastor at Midland Baptist Temple.

Two Republicans have filed in the Precinct 3 commissioner's Republican primary — Gerald Cox Jr., owner of Cox Masonry, and Larry R. Wollschlager, a petroleum geologist.

The Republican primary race for the Precinct 1 Constable's spot saw filings from two candidates. They are and Ron Rice, incumbent, and Hugh Buzzell, a Midland Memorial Hospital security officer and former Midland County deputy sheriff.

On the Democratic side, filings were recorded for two of the county races, according to Joanne DeWitt, acting secretary for the Midland County Democratic Party.

Three candidates filed for the Precinct 3 county commissioner's primary. They are incumbent Scott Welch, Louisa Valencia — owner of Valencia's Upholstery — and Pat Ramirez — owner of the Goodnight Trail grocery store.

In the commissioner's Precinct 1 primary, one candidate filed — Mark Spears, a Alamo Junior High School science teacher.

'White activist' files for presidential primary

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram

AUSTIN — Last-minute filings for president — including a "White activist" — and the state Supreme Court — including one former state senator — marked the final day of registration Monday for the March 8 party primaries.

Texas' first foray into "Super Tuesday" politics will feature six Republican and 11 Democratic presidential hopefuls vying for the state's 111 GOP and 196 Democratic national convention delegates. At least one of the two parties in 20 other states will hold primaries or caucuses on Super Tuesday, when 797 Republican and 1,444 Democratic delegates will be up for grabs.

Locally, it appears that Republican Congressman Lamar Smith of San Antonio, Republican state Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland, Democratic state Sen. John Montford of Lubbock and Democratic state Rep. Jim Rudd of Brownfield will face opposition in neither the primaries nor the Nov. 8 general election. State Rep. Larry Don Shaw, D-Big Spring, drew a primary opponent in Cecil Gilstrap of Big Spring and a GOP opponent in Troy Fraser of Big Spring.

In the presidential race, 37-year-old David Duke of Metairie, La., president of the National Association for the Advancement of White Persons, filed in the Democratic primary. Other unexpected Democrats included Dallas oilman William A. Williams, 61, and Norbert Dennerll Jr., an educator from Columbia Station, Ohio.

Former Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado, former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt and Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee completed the field of Democratic contenders Monday. They joined Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, Massachussetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri and right-wing extremist Lyndon LaRouche Jr. of Virginia, who previously filed.

Dettman: 21 DWI arrests made holiday weekend

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The number of arrests for driving while intoxicated over the long New Year's weekend was about normal, and though a special police unit was called off a DWI patrol, the reassignment resulted in a pleasant surprise.

From just after noon on Dec. 31 to just after midnight on Monday, 21 DWI arrests were made by police, Department of Public Safety troopers, and Midland County Sheriff's officers, according to County Attorney Mark Dettman.

"It is about what I would have expected," Dettman said of the arrest tally. "I'm sure there were many more intoxicated drivers out there than were arrested, if we had had more police officers out there."

The six-member Midland police Selective Enforcement Team was scheduled to resume a special DWI patrol from 8 p.m. to 4 a.m. over the long weekend, but instead was reassigned to hunt for two robbery suspects, police spokesman Cpl. Jim White said.

Questions about evidence prolongs hearing

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A pretrial hearing for a 34-year-old man accused in the poisoning deaths of three people was prolonged Monday because of questions concerning the admissibility of evidence accumulated during the course of investigations and searches.

David A. Dowler faces trial Jan. 18 for the June 1987 poisoning murder of Leza Kay Chandler, 30. He has been indicted in the cyanide poisoning deaths of 28-year-old Lisa Blythe Krieg, who died Aug. 16, 1983, and Juan Antonio "Tony" Casillas, 29, who died Feb. 12, 1986.

Dowler's attorney, Tom Hirsch, Monday sought to block mention of the deaths of Ms. Krieg and Casillas during the course of Dowler's trial because linking the three deaths would be "extremely prejudicial" to his client, he told 358th District Judge Bill McCoy.

McCoy denied Hirsch's motion, saying he would rule on the introduction of extraneous offenses as the trial progressed.

The judge also refused to order the return of as many as 1,000 pictures, as well as the personal writings of Dowler, which were seized by Odessa police during a search of his home at 3707 W. Louisiana St. in Midland.

Hirsch argued the seizure of writings violated state law relating to what may and may not be seized under a search warrant.

The photographs, Hirsch said, included a number of "innocent parties" in various states of undress, some completely nude, and were extra copies of pictures made from film submitted to Dowler's film processing business.

It is not unusual for photographic processing labs to make extra copies of such pictures, Hirsch said, but contended copies of the pictures seized from Dowler's home had been "circulated" throughout the Odessa Police Department, which needlessly exposed innocent parties to embarrassment.

McCoy refused to order immediate return of the writings or pictures but said he would look at the pictures to determine if they are relevant to the Dowler trial.

After determining Hirsch did not have actual proof the pictures had been circulated among police personnel, McCoy said he was aware such things have happened on occasion and he would have no trouble issuing an order to secure the pictures to prevent possible circulation.

Hirsch also questioned the admissibility of audio and video surveillance evidence gained using Kerri Dawn Middleton — a friend of Dowler and Ms. Chandler — who discovered the young woman's body.

Calling Ms. Middleton to the stand, Hirsch attempted to show she had been induced by police investigators to meet with Dowler and lead him into conversations about Ms. Chandler's death.

Ms. Middleton rejected Hirsch's suggestions, saying she voluntarily went to police a few days after the death of Ms. Chandler because Dowler had called and said he wanted to meet and talk with her and she was "afraid for my life."

She agreed to set up a meeting with Dowler and allow investigators to equip her with a "body wire" so police could monitor the conversation.

On at least two other occasions, she said, she allowed police to place electronic devices prior to subsequent meetings with Dowler.

FILINGS

At GOP headquarters, former Delaware Gov. Pierre "Pete" Du Pont became the final presidential candidate to file the requisite 5,000-signature petition Monday. The other Republicans — Vice President George Bush, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, former televangelist Pat Robertson, Congressman Jack Kemp of New York and former Secretary of State Alexander Haig — had previously filed for the race.

Former state Sen. Lloyd Doggett of Austin, who lost a bitter race to Republican U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm in 1984, filed for the Democratic nomination for Supreme Court Justice Ted Robertson's seat. Robertson is seeking the nomination for Supreme Court chief justice against John Humphreys, a Dallas attorney.

District Judge Marsha Anthony of Houston and former Congressman Jack Hightower of Vernon are also running for Robertson's seat. Hightower blasted Doggett's late entry into the race as a "hasty decision."

Opponents for Justice Raul Gonzalez include Democrat Art Vega, a San Antonio lawyer, and Republican Charles Ben Howell, an appeals court judge from Dallas who lost a high court race in 1986.

The lone late filer for the Court of Criminal Appeals was district Judge Tom Rickhoff of San Antonio, a Republican who will oppose Democratic incumbent Chuck Miller of Austin.

Democratic U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen picked up a primary opponent in San Antonio college professor Joe Sullivan. Republicans opposing the three-term veteran include Congressman Beau Boulter of Amarillo, Houston businessman Wes Gilbreath, former state Rep. Milton Fox of Austin and Georgetown engineer Ned Snead.

Late entrants in the Railroad Commission races include: Democrat-turned-Republican P.S. "Sam" Ervin of Dallas and Houstonite Dale Steffes in the Republican primary and retired Austinite John Thomas Henderson on the Democratic side. They join Republicans Ralph Hoelscher of Miles and Ed Emmett of Round Rock and Democrat Jerry Langdon of Midland in opposing incumbent Democrat Jim Nugent of Kerrville.

CRASH

Then, on Sept. 24, 1982, a Louisiana Department of Corrections twin-engine Beechcraft Baron flown by Alex Sheets of Baton Rouge, La., crashed into the Warfield Apartments moments after the pilot took off downwind about mid-runway.

One of the plane's four occupants, which included two prisoners and an unauthorized passenger, later died of injuries.

About 15 months after the crash, the NTSB determined that the pilot violated five standard flight procedures, including inadequate flight planning and preparation, improper emergency procedure, not having retracted the landing gears immediately after takeoff, and not maintaining air speed.

The SET reassignment resulted in the arrests in Odessa of Robert Charles Sanders, 715 S. Lincoln St., and Eddie Sanders, 601 S. Lincoln St., White said. Both were charged with one count of aggravated robbery, and bond for each was set at $50,000, White said.

Robert Sanders was also charged with theft by repetition, and bond on that charge was set at $5,000, White said.

The arrests were expected to clear at least two recent convenience store robberies in Midland, police said.

Midland police arrested six persons over the weekend for DWI, White said.

At least 40 people died on Texas roads over the weekend, exceeding the 35 fatalities which the Department of Public Safety had predicted in Operation Motorcide.

About half of the fatalities occurred in a 10-hour period, between late New Year's Eve and early New Year's Day, the DPS reported.

While the New Year's fatalities exceeded predictions by five deaths, fatalities over the Christmas weekend came in six under the forecast 42, for a two-period total of 76 deaths — one less than the estimated 77, DPS said.

The DPS' 102-hour period for each weekend ran from noon Wednesday through midnight Sunday.

Despite the fatalities, Dettman said he is optimistic that the trend of DWI arrests is headed in the right direction.

"I am still of the opinion that the total number of DWI cases is decreasing because of increased public awareness," Dettman said.

Lamar Smith announces he will seek re-election

From Staff Reports

Smith

U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio, will seek a second two-year House of Representatives term, he said today in Midland.

"I guess Democrats know a Republican district when they see one," Smith 40, told a crowd of about 15 gathered at the Midland County Courthouse this morning.

Smith, 40, faces no opposition from either Democrats or Republicans in the 1988 Congressional race.

In 1986, he beat out former Democratic state senator Pete Snelson in the race.

The representative, elected Freshman Class GOP Whip in the House, said his greatest accomplishments during the past year have been his on-going battles with reducing the federal deficit and with battling drug abuse in West Texas.

Smith announced last fall that the U.S. Customs Service has committed to putting a $15 million aerial radar surveillance balloon in the Big Bend area by January 1989.

The balloon was one of Smith's campaign promises dealing with tackling drug abuse in his 21st District.

"Also, I continually fight to bring sanity to the embarrassing lack of an energy policy in the federal government," he said.

Smith's campaign treasurer will once again be Midland oil operator and Midland County Hospital District board president Frank Cahoon.

Midlander sentenced after pleading guilty in shooting

From Staff Reports

A 20-year state prison sentence was handed down to a Midland man this morning after he pleaded guilty to the July 21, 1987 shooting death of another man in an east Midland alley.

Jesse Fennell, 24, 1911 Nash Ave., received the sentence from 142nd State District Judge Pat Baskin, according to defense attorney Tom Morgan.

Fennell pleaded guilty to voluntary manslaugher, a second-degree felony, and there was no special finding of a deadly weapon, Morgan said.

"That means he will be paroled quicker, possibly substantially quicker," Morgan said.

Under current guidelines of the state Board of Pardons and Paroles, Fennell will have to serve about three years. If there had been a finding of a deadly weapon on a 20-year sentence, he would have been required to serve at least six years and eight months, Morgan said.

Fennell pleaded guilty to killing 24-year-old Irl Connally, 1102 E. Magnolia St. According to police reports, Connally was shot once in the left side of the chest about 10:30 p.m. His body was found lying face up on the edge of a dirt alley behind 1815 E. Oak Ave., between Fairgrounds Road and Peterson Street.

Fennell surrendered to police about an hour after the shooting, according to police.

In a statement given to detectives three hours after the shooting, Fennell admitted killing Connally with a .38-caliber handgun after the two men exchanged words about Fennell's son. The two exchanged blows, and after the gun fell out of Fennell's front pants pocket and Connally walked toward him, the gun "went off," according to the statement.

A gold ring valued at $500 and a gold ladies' pinky ring valued at $200 were reported stolen from a vehicle parked in the 1200 block of Burchill Drive. Reports said the burgalry occurred between 7 p.m. Jan. 2 and 7:30 a.m. Monday.

Pastor candidate for commissioner nomination

From Staff Reports

Michael Roadcup Tuesday announced he is a candidate for the Republican nomination for County Commissioner, Precinct 1, vying for the seat presently occupied by Durward Wright.

A Midland resident since 1978, Roadcup served four years in the U.S. Marine Corps and is associate pastor of the Midland Baptist Temple.

"This is where I was thrown into the political process," he said. "People expected me to know all about the men and women running for public office. It was necessary to be informed and involved."

Roadcup said he's running for office because he has "heard the frustration of voters over unopposed candidates" while serving as poll judge for Precinct 102 in several local elections.

Roadcup received a bachelors degree in Christian education from Tri State Baptist College in Memphis, Tenn. He and his wife Andree have two children, Michael Jr., 6, and Elizabeth, 4.

Union head dedicated to improving workers' conditions

By ENDELIA J. OBREGON

AUSTIN (AP) — The office on East First Street looks like something out of the 1960s: A red-and-black United Farm Workers banner tacked on a wall, a painting of the Virgen de Guadalupe, a photo of UFW founder Cesar Chavez alongside buttons announcing a boycott.

It may be 1987, but the struggle that began then is far from over for Rebecca Flores Harrington, director of the Texas Farm Workers Union. Call her a dreamer for spending so much time and energy in what sometimes seems to be a losing battle. But one thing she can't be called is a yuppie.

"God forbid!" said Mrs. Harrington, who lives in East Austin with her husband, Jim Harrington, director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union and their two sons and daughter.

She has devoted herself to the cause because she knows firsthand the rigors of being a farm worker. Growing up in Atascosa County south of San Antonio, she remembers traveling to Michigan to harvest cherries and to Ohio for onions. The workers also migrated intrastate, picking cotton in Corpus Christi and Mathis, and strawberries around Poteet and Pearsall. Mexican-American girls, however, weren't eligibile to compete for the title of queen of the Poteet Strawberry Festival.

"I guess everything in your life forms you," said the 43-year-old Mrs. Harrington.

WHEN SHE was 13, the family moved to San Antonio, where schools were segregated de facto. Fox Tech High School was the Mexican-American school, and she soon found herself tracked into vocational school. She graduated third in her class. But when she applied to San Antonio College, she learned that her diploma was no good.

"I had to take the G.E.D." high school equivalency test, she said, shaking her head.

"They couldn't take my diploma because it was vocational. If they did that to me, imagine how many others were kept out. I had to go five nights to take five different tests. I had no problems with it. But it really shocked me about what that meant. It's those little things they put up in your way that can deter you."

She transferred to Texas A&I University in Kingsville, which to her was then "the worst school in the world in terms of racial oppression." She returned to San Antonio and enrolled at St. Mary's University, where she said the campus was so insular that the students were unaware of Vietnam.

She became "radicalized" when she got a job as a claims representative at a Social Security office.

"It was so structured and regulated," Mrs. Harrington said. "I nearly went nuts. 'This can't be my life,' I thought. 'I have to change the direction of my life.' "

IN 1970 she went to the University of Michigan, where she earned her master's in social work.

She met Jim Harrington, who was at the University of Detroit and working in the 1970s grape boycott led by Cesar Chavez, and in the legal project for the Office of Economic Opportunity.

"Everyone was getting together for (people's) rights — blacks, gays, women, farm workers, — it was fantastic," she said.

She and Harrington were married in 1972, and in 1973 moved to the Rio Grande Valley town of Pharr, where they lived for the next 10 years. In the Valley, with its large population of farm workers — almost 100 percent Mexican-American — Mrs. Harrington began organizing their efforts for better wages and working conditions.

Rebecca Harrington , director of the Texas United Farm Workers Union, has devoted her time and efforts to the cause becuase she knows firsthand the rigors of being a farm worker.

State Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos remembers those years he helped Mrs. Harrington organize farm workers in the Valley.

"Here it is 1987 and she's still working at it," said Barrientos, a former migrant farm worker. "I dare to say she hasn't gotten rich doing that. Dedicated is the word to describe Rebecca Flores Harrington."

MRS. HARRINGTON admits: "All I live and breathe is the United Farm Workers. About the only other thing I do is Girl Scouts and some short-term projects with the National Council of Women and the Law and SANE (the Save Austin Neighborhoods and Environment)."

The Harringtons moved to Austin thinking it would be easier to get legislation passed to benefit farm workers if they were close enough to lobby the Legislature. She considers gaining workers compensation and unemployment compensation for farm workers — victories that were won through the courts — to be their greatest achievements.

"I think the workers comp is the more important one because so many injuries can put them out for the season," Mrs. Harrington said. "It's important to be able to bring in something on a weekly basis so they can pay hospital bills that are so expensive these days.

Unemployment benefits are especially important in times such as the freeze of 1983, which destroyed crops that some agricultural experts estimate will take about a decade to fully recover.

"I hope I never see anything like that again," Mrs. Harrington said. "It destroyed families. They waited for disaster unemployment assistance. But by the time they declared the place an emergency and the workers got their checks, it was three months. You tell me if you could've made it three months without any money coming in."

The United Farm Workers was founded in California to fight for the right of farm workers to unionize and obtain better wages. Because so many of the farm workers were migrants from Texas, the Texas UFW was organized — with Mrs. Harrington as the sole staff person — to continue the struggle for improved working conditions.

THOSE IMPROVEMENTS include prohibitions against the use of short-handled hoes that forced laborers to stoop while working, and requirements that employers make available portable toilets, fresh drinking water and handwashing facilities on the field.

Mrs. Harrington said that despite the law that requires these facilities, they are not strongly enforced by the Texas Health Department, under whose jurisdiction they fall.

Mrs. Harrington is aware that some consumers may argue that making these facilities available will drive up the price of food.

"A sack of onions which weighs roughly 60 pounds is paid at 50 to 60 cents," she said. "That means that farm workers get less than 1 cent per pound. At grocery stores, onions are about 39 cents a pound. The farm worker gets 1 cent out of that. The rest goes somewhere else.

"Even if workers were to double the amount they earn in wages it still wouldn't be much added to the price, yet it would make a tremendous difference in the lives of the farm workers."

Besides, Mrs. Harrington said, society is already paying for that inequity in wages through the high cost of food stamps, health care, poor education, illiteracy and high dropout rates.

"THAT'S A much bigger drain than an increase in wages," she said. "And it reflects terribly on us that the people who feed us three times a day at times can't feed themselves."

The Catholic Church has been supportive of the union, she said, as have many middle-class Hispanics who grew up as farm workers.

"They're good about not forgetting," she said, with a hint of pride in her voice. "They remembered us in the Valley after the freeze. They were not out in front. But they did call and offer us financial support."

Mrs. Harrington says she realizes she is fighting an uphill battle. Too often people think that once a law is passed, the problem is over.

New chief justice says 'judges not politicians'

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The first Republican in modern times to serve as chief justice of the Supreme Court of Texas starts his new job today amid continued controversy over the method of selecting judges in Texas.

Ironically, when Tom Phillips of Houston took the oath of office Monday afternoon, he became the only appointed member of the nine-man court — as well as the only Republican. The other eight justices are Democrats who won their seats at the polls.

Gov. Bill Clements picked Phillips to replace resigning Chief Justice John Hill. He will serve through the end of the year and has already announced his plans to run for the seat in November.

Phillips, a 38-year-old graduate of Harvard Law School, urged the courts to "confine their role to judging. Judges are not politicians," he said. "Politicians are answerable to the people for the results of their efforts; judges must answer to the people only for their adherence to the rule of law."

While Phillips pledged to work toward "a court that places principle above politics and integrity above expedience," Hill clashed with Justice Oscar Mauzy over Hill's continued push for an appointed judiciary. Democrat Hill left the high court in mid-term to work toward that goal.

"The present (elective) system of selection, with its dependence on massive contributions from lawyers and businesses, gives an appearance of impropriety that must be removed," he said. To the average Texan, Hill added, appointing a judge creates "not nearly as great a judicial motivator as the need for substantial — and increasingly substantial — future contributions."

Mauzy, a Democrat elected in 1986, called an impromptu press conference to critice Hill for "politicizing what previously has been a non-political event." He pointed out that none of the eight other justices has joined Hill's call for an appointed judiciary.

"I'm going to fight...for the people to continue to have the right to elect their judges at all levels," Mauzy said. "As a citizen, I resent very much anyone trying to take away from me my right to hold public officeholders accountable for their actions."

Former Chief Justice Jack Pope praised Phillips' "pleasant but aggressive approach to every problem" and called Clements' appointment of Phillips "a display of merit selection."

"Courts belong to the public, and that public wants judges who are fair," Pope said.

A former briefing attorney for the Supreme Court, Phillips first reached the bench when Clements appointed him judge to fill an open seat as a district judge in Houston in 1981. He has already filed in the March 8 GOP primary to run for the final two years of Hill's unexpired term.

Phillips has pledged to work for "changing the method of selecting judges" and "limiting the size of campaign contributions made to judges" but he made no mention of those issues Monday.

Murder victim names two suspects in letter

CORSICANA (AP) — Last July, a Dallas man mailed a letter to two men, accusing them of robbing his residence nine months earlier and demanding a return of the stolen items.

Dwight Bradley also warned the men in the letter that they should not try to harm him because he had made copies of the letter that would be turned over to authorities if anything happened to him.

Bradley was murdered a few days later, although it was more than four months before his remains were found, and authorities said they are looking for the two men the victim named in his letter. No arrests have been made.

As promised, Bradley made copies of the letter. Bradley's attorney, James Paul Barklow of Dallas, turned over to authorities a copy he said he received last July 27 from another attorney that Bradley had left the letter with.

Bryan Dunagan, chief deputy with the Navarro County sheriff's department, said Bradley was reported missing on Aug. 4, eight days after Barklow got his copy of the letter.

Bradley reportedly borrowed a car from his brother-in-law to run errands and never returned, officials said. The car was found burned on an Ellis County road.

A witness told police he saw the vehicle in flames and heard what he believed to be three or four gunshots coming from the site, Dunagan said. Law enforcement officers recovered a shotgun shell at the location.

More than four months later, on Dec. 7, a man collecting aluminun cans along a service road off Interstate 45 near Rice, a community 10 miles north of Corsicana, found skeletal remains that later were identified as Bradley's.

His family made tentative identification by clothing and four gold teeth, and officials added their confirmation two days before Christmas.

The letter is a piece in a bizarre puzzle that authorities have been trying to put together since Bradley's body was discovered.

"(Dwight) said he was going to get his 'stuff' back from the guys that took it. He said he left letters with people in case anything happened to him," Barklow said.

Bradley's letter was written to two of the three men he felt took part in the Oct. 2, 1986 break-in of his home, Dunagan said.

"I want the Money and Jewelry you stole from me and I can not get back at you for what you done to my mother," reads the letter, which was released Monday by investigators.

"If anything happens to me this letter has been Xeroxed twenty times. It has also been given to ten lawyers and other people. If anything happens to me they will notify the Police and the F.B.I.

"I am not trying to get you in trouble I just want what belong (sic) to me. And the Lord will take car (sic) of the rest."

Bradley also wrote, "I know about the Judge you killed" and another man.

Law enforcement officials have not been able to find any record of such murders, Dunagan said.

Priscilla Davis says settlement may be canceled

FORT WORTH (AP) — A much-publicized $5 million settlement agreed to between Priscilla Davis and her ex-husband, T. Cullen Davis in a wrongful death suit, is no longer a settlement, Priscilla Davis says.

The announcement of the non-settlement came Monday night during a meeting of the Fort worth chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi.

Priscilla Davis, who spoke at the meeting about her plans to write a book and sell a screenplay about her life, said the settlement is off because Davis and his lawyers broached the agreement by announcing details of the settlement to the news media.

The settlement had been in a personal injury and wrongful death suit Mrs. Davis had filed against her ex-husband in connection with the shootings at the Davis mansion Aug. 2, 1976.

A man dressed in black shot to death Andrea Wilborn, 12, Priscilla's daughter from a previous marriage and Stan Farr, a former Texas Christian Unviersity basketball player, who was identified as Mrs. Davis' lover.

Wounded in the shooting spree were Mrs. Davis and a houseguest, Gus "Bubba" Gavrel.

Mrs. Davis, Gavrel and another witness, Beverly Bass, all identified Cullen Davis as the man in black.

Davis was acquitted in the Wilborn slayiung in a 1977 trial in Amarillo.

A civil court jury in Fort Worth last year deadlocked 8-4 against Davis in a $16.5 million suit brought by Mrs. Davis and Andrea's father, Jack Wilborn.

Davis, once considered one of the world's wealthiest men, later filed for bankruptcy and was relieved of $650 million in debts in bankruptcy court last Dec. 2.

On Dec. 16, Eddie Roush Jr., a lawyer for Cullen Davis, announced that a $5 million settlement had been reached with Mrs. Davis.

"There is no deal," she said Monday night. "We're dropping it. There is no settlement. It was not filed."

"Unfortunately, they (Cullen's lawyers) chose to go to the press. By doing that, they violated the agreement," she continued. "We're going back to court. The end of the movie has not been written yet."

David Burrows, a lawyer who represents Mrs. Davis, confirmed that he has notified Roush that he would have to either convince him and his client that they can honor the contract or the case would be tried again.

"This is somewhat unfortunate because we want it (the suit) settled and we were satisified with the terms," Burrows said. "I can't talk about terms of the agreement because that was part of the deal."

STATE IN BRIEF

Rookie firefighters buy lots of ice cream

EL PASO (AP) — When a group of rookie firefighters graduates from the training academy, veterans know they're going to get a good dose of fire 'n' ice cream.

Every time a firefighter does something for the first time — like going on a first run, or making his debut behind the wheel of a fire engine — his colleagues shout, "Ice cream!" and he has to treat the whole fire station.

Any firefighter who makes a minor error has to do the same. Rookies end up making the most purchases for the crews of the city's 25 fire stations.

"I had to buy three half-gallons of ice cream for my first 10 shifts. That was 25 years ago," Deputy Chief Albert Williamson said.

No one remembers when or why the tradition started. Shorty Williams, a retired district fire chief, said the custom was in full force when he joined the department in 1949.

The buyer gets to choose the flavor and brand.

"It's got to be good, though," firefighter Danny Valles said. "None of this three-for-a-dollar stuff."

Rescuers not afraid

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Three men whose dramatic rescue efforts saved a neighbor from perishing in his burning home said they acted instinctively and did not have time to be afraid.

"We were only concerned about getting the guy out of there," said Ted Lopez, 34. "I cut my foot on glass from a window we broke, but didn't notice it until everything was all over."

Lopez, John Blackburn, and Cleat Wertz were among several neighbors who rushed to the blazing home of Joseph Stevens Sr., 65, as flames leaped from the structure late Sunday.

They pulled Stevens' son, Joseph Stevens Jr., 32, through a bedroom window after he was overcome by smoke. He was listed in good condition late Monday at Village Oaks Regional Hospital, where he was being treated for smoke inhalation.

Lopez said the elder Stevens, who escaped through the front door, yelled, "Joey's still in there! I think we've lost him."

Governors to go hunting

AUSTIN (AP) — Oklahoma Gov. Henry Bellmon will take a break from that state's Legislature to join Gov. Bill Clements on a weekend hunting trip near Pampa, Clements office says.

Reggie Bashur, press secretary to Clements, said the two governors plan to hunt quail on a ranch owned by Amarillo oilman T. Boone Pickens.

Clements also plans a quail hunting trip to South Texas the following weekend, Bashur said.

Boerer sweaters drip with glittering drama

By BARBARA DeWITT
Copley News Service

Women used to buy hats to perk up their spirits, but now it's often a Bonnie Boerer sweater, one of those tastefully glitzy cotton knit sweaters with feathers, jewels and sequins dripping from its dramatic designs.

"And they have names, like 20th Century Fox, My Heart Belongs to Daddy, and This Bud's for You," says Bonnie Boerer, whose own persona is as charming as the sweaters she designs. "Customers get a kick out of the names, which merely indicate the mood or theme."

While devouring her favorite foods, nachos and Diet Pepsi, the 36-year-old New York designer talks about her newest collection, which includes an Art Deco group.

In it are a sweater that has the signs of the zodiac in a huge jeweled applique called Outrageous Fortune and also the Daddy sweater. On that one, there are no hearts or men; it's a picture of a girl and her mother, and the message is rather subtle.

And there's the Down and Out in Beverly Hills sweater that's white with faux leather animal print trims in silver.

At the other extreme is a collection of elegant, Oriental-themed sweaters with gold braid, birds and butterflies in rich jeweled appliques.

Boerer's sweaters, with their unmistakable designs and reasonable prices ($100 to $190), have charmed women across the country, and those who collect them eagerly await the next season's collection.

There are even Boerer groupies, those women who Boerer says have given her a tremendous compliment by wearing her sweaters to her department store fashion shows.

That ability to listen, paired with her commercial taste level and her drive and endurance, has made Boerer one of the country's leading designers of contemporary knitwear. She started her company in November 1983 with four employees. That first year, sales totaled $12 million, and for 1987 they will top the $30 million mark.

Alternately munching nachos and puffing on cigarettes, (I don't smoke that much! she quips), she reflects upon her success.

Boerer's parents were in retail, she says, so she literally grew up in the business. She attended the Tobe Coburn School for Fashion Careers at age 20 and went to work at Macy's in New York, where she was kept from promotion to buyer because she was too young.

"At a great financial risk to my parents, my father borrowed $1.5 million for me to open my own business. And I paid my father back, with interest, in three years."

— Bonnie Boerer

"So I went somewhere else and became a buyer for a chain of 500 stores," Boerer snaps, the pain of that early disappointment still evident in her voice.

Next was partnership in the Bonnie and Bill sweater company with Bill Paul, but Boerer wanted to go solo, she recalls, in spite of banks turning her down because she was a poor risk: a young woman.

"At a great financial risk to my parents," says Boerer, "my father borrowed $1.5 million for me to open my own business. And I paid my father back, with interest, in three years."

But risk really isn't in Boerer's vocabulary. It all goes back to her sense of what sells, she says. "I had a lot of expertise in sales and knew what would sell. I guess that's my forte."

Taking inspiration from current events, Boerer already has designed her spring '88 collection.

"For those fans who can't wait until the merchandise is available, the theme is Americana, inspired by the great dilemma of people wanting to leave Hong Kong for America, before the crown colony reverts to Chinese rule," says Boerer.

Among her designs is a sweater with gold buttons, stars, braids and blue and white stripes, which she calls America 1, and another sea-faring design with maps and sailboats.

Also in tune with the American lifestyle is a sweater featuring a pink and green hotel with palm trees that looks very much like the Beverly Hills Hotel and also an artful salute to New York's Broadway, complete with street signs and theater marquees.

1987: Return of miniskirts, rise of Lacroix

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The biggest story in women's fashion, 1987, was also the shortest: miniskirts. But how well did they retail?

"Very, very strong" was the short report from Mark Shulman, president of Henri Bendel, the New York specialty store owned by The Limited. Miniskirts represented more than 70 percent of the store's skirt business. "And I know they sold a lot of miniskirts across the country at The Limited," Shulman said.

Mary Hamilton, vice president of fashion merchandising for Emporium Capwell, a West Coast department-store chain, agreed. "As soon as we got short skirts in they sold very well," she said. But she added that on the West Coast, short meant at or just above the knee.

According to Alvin M. Somers, senior vice president of direct marketing at the I. Magnin specialty-store chain, short-skirt sales rose and fell with the temperature. "Early in the fall they were stronger than expected," he said. "They weakened as we got into colder weather." He said short lengths, which represented a third of the chain's skirt stock, worked best in California and the Midwest.

At Barneys New York, according to Gene Pressman, an executive vice president, every short skirt that came in flew out. "We sold long skirts too, but not that many," he said.

Pressman added a prediction for 1988: "I think women are going to turn to pants."

The year's other big fashion story was Christian Lacroix, the Parisian couturier. What has never been revealed is that when his business was born, Lacroix was a corporate consolation prize.

Paul Audrain, now president of the House of Lacroix, joined Christian Dior's fashion house as financial manager in 1974. He was known as the "shadow man" beside Jacques Rouet, Dior's chairman. Audrain began taking over the company's administration as the aging Rouet neared retirement. In 1984, he became Dior's chairman and chief executive officer.

A year later, Financiere Agache, the conglomerate that owned Dior, was taken over by a group of French investors led by a real-estate magnate, Bernard Arnaud.

He "fell in love with Dior," Audrain recalled. "He said, 'You have a wonderful crown and I take it.' " Arnaud became Dior's chairman. Though the two men worked hand in hand, by the end of 1986, Audrain was considering a move to another fashion house. Luckily, Lacroix, the couturier at Jean Patou, was also looking for a new job. Arnaud agreed to finance him in his own house and installed Audrain as its chairman.

And there was acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or AIDS, which continues to take lives and sap energy from New York's fashion business. This year, as last, fashion professionals worked hard to raise funds to fight the disease. This holiday season, as last, many businesses earned the gratitude of their friends by making contributions to research groups instead of buying gifts.

Indeed, this year, at last, the good deeds were abundant.

The list of those in the fashion businesses who died in 1987 from complications of AIDS is too long and too painful to be repeated in full here. But among fashion's best and brightest who died too soon were Willi Smith, the designer, 39; the photographers Bill King, 48, and Peter Hujar, 53, and the illustrator Antonio Lopez, 44.

"My heart went boom boom boom," Audrain said. Now, the fashion world is waiting to see if Lacroix's couture succes d'estime will translate into the boom boom boom of big ready-to-wear bucks.

Resolutions should include fashion sense

By CARRIE DONOVAN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The moment is at hand to make fashion resolutions for the new year: to think about what goes, what stays, what to look for and what to avoid.

First of all, wave farewell to the pouf. Overexposure has finally done in this delightful turn on the party skirt. But don't give up the idea of owning a bit of evening fantasy. It's just that the 1988 versions will take different shapes.

Continue to shorten your skirts, but don't go too far. Midthigh is the hemline of the very few, and almost all of those should be under the age of 30.

Keep in shape, because short skirts and close-fitting silhouettes are here, at least for a while.

Clothes will continue to escalate in cost. But try not to let that make you choose the classic item over the newer shape. A short, curvy jacket with rounded shoulders, for instance, will do more for your wardrobe than another square blazer.

Think about buying something colorful. Owning and wearing too much black can be a bad habit.

Plan a twice yearly attack on your closet. You'll probably find that you wear the same things all the time anyway. The rest just take up space when, instead, they could be donated to charity.

If you see something you are absolutely mad about, buy it. It probably won't be there when you go back. Keep a sharp eye out for sales. But remember, nothing is a bargain if it doesn't fit into your way of life.

Always buy the best-quality goods for the price you can afford; that's investment dressing today. Even better, invest in a three-way mirror. One of these on the wall will truly tell you when your clothing makes you the fairest of them all.

DEAR ABBY

Routine company physical probes too deep

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are both employed by the same large company. Recently we were required to take physical examinations for health insurance.

We were each given a questionnaire to fill out. On the form was a section "for women only." The women were asked: "At what age did you have your first sexual encounter?" (The men were not asked this.)

I refused to answer it, and told the examining nurse that I thought it was nobody's business. She insisted it was "scientific and important to complete the report." As a matter of principle, I left that question unanswered, but I suspect the nurse filled it in for me so the questionnaire would be "complete."

Abby, would you have answered that question? And of what possible use could that information be in a routine health examination? — A PRIVATE PERSON, ATLANTA

DEAR PRIVATE PERSON: Congratulations. You are also a thinking person. I would not have answered that question. It was inappropriate, irrelevant and an invasion of privacy.

Thank you for giving me this opportunity to again tell my readers that they are not obligated to answer a question in a questionnaire simply because it is asked. Leave a blank space, or write in "not relevant" to the questions you find an invasion of your privacy.

DEAR ABBY: I am so disgusted I don't know what to do, but I have to tell somebody, so I'm telling you.

We had a telephone with a clear-ringing bell for as long as I can remember — and I am not young. The phone gave out and had to be replaced, so I just went to AT&T and bought a new one. Well, this phone does not ring. It sounds like a sick turkey!

It cannot be heard if the TV is on, and worse yet, it came in a box marked "Manufactured in China." That did it! I will not have anything in my house that is not made in this country. I am taking this phone back — I don't care if I have to resort to smoke signals. And another thing, why did they change the bell? I was so accustomed to the old ringing sound.

Lord knows we pay enough for telephone service without having to put up with an instrument that not only is made in China but sounds like a sick turkey gobbling. — HAD ENOUGH

DEAR HAD: You may have had enough — but there's more! In order to buy a telephone like the one that gave out, you may have to buy a secondhand instrument. New is not always better. We're lucky these days if what we can get is as good as what gave out.

DEAR ABBY: I have recently become a vegetarian (it's been a year now), and with my new meatless lifestyle, I am faced with a problem: When I am invited to someone's home for dinner, would it be appropriate for me to inform the hostess when I accept that I am a vegetarian? Or should I just wait until I get there, and eat "around" the meat? I don't want to put my hostess to any inconvenience. — MEATLESS IN MARYLAND

DEAR MEATLESS: Tell your hostess in advance. If I were the hostess, I would appreciate knowing if any of my guests required special dietary considerations.

DEAR ABBY: I agree that "printing the cause of death in obituaries often serves no useful purpose and can be painful for those who are suffering from the same disease."

But when the deceased was a long-time smoker who died of lung cancer or emphysema, cause of death should be printed so that those who are still smoking can be reminded that if they continue to smoke and torment non-smokers with their offensive secondhand smoke they (the smoker and the non-smoker) may be next.

You have my permission to use my name, address and occupation. — CHARLES A. WRIGHT JR., ATTORNEY AT LAW, CHICAGO

DEAR MR. WRIGHT (What a great name for a lawyer!): You're Wright. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: So you want to eliminate the cause of death in obituaries?

Why not eliminate age, lest the elderly be offended?

Why not eliminate first names, lest sex be disadvantaged?

Why not eliminate the hometown, lest it be considered unwholesome?

Why not eliminate religion, lest it appear that faith is fruitless?

Why not eliminate obituaries, so that ignorance will gleefully lead us to believe that we'll live forever?

Why not? — C. HARVEY GARDINER, ZEPHYRHILLS, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: Several years ago, I wandered into a small cafe in Santa Fe, N.M. They asked me if I was alone. I was. They then asked me if I wanted to sit at the "maverick table."

I didn't know what that was, so they explained. It was a large table where those who came in alone could sit — and perhaps visit with others who were also alone.

Abby, I sat there and met some of the nicest people — and I didn't have to eat alone.

I think this is such a wonderful idea, but I've never seen it done at any other restaurant. Since so many people are alone and lonely these days, perhaps if you printed this, some cafe owners would consider it. — M.E. SKIPWORTH, WICHITA, KAN.

DEAR M.E.: Great idea! Of course some people prefer to eat alone, but with the "maverick table," at least they'll have a choice.

Exercise increases strength of brain

Associated Press

NEW YORK — It's smarter to exercise than to think about it, according to the Reebok Aerobic Information Bureau.

It says University of Southern California researchers split 48 senior citizens into two groups: exercising and non-exercising.

Intelligence tests before and after 12 weeks of exercise show that the exercising group improved its problem-solving abilities, short-term memory and concentration.

The Midland High and Midland Lee girls step into the District 4-5A spotlight at Chaparral Center tonight while the boys enter a new war zone where the battles really count.

It's "Super Tuesday" where the girls and boys play on the same court, on the same night, a rarity in the land of District 4-5A. Mix in a lot of local rivalry and you have the makings of one of the season highlights in basketball.

The girls will square off at 6:15 p.m. while the boys meet at 8 p.m. Two district games for the price of one ticket. And this is Midland High vs. Midland Lee.

This is the first opportunity for the girls to play prior to the boys and that prospect is greeted with enthusiasm from MHS coach Jane Young and Lee coach Shirley Stephenson, sisters who wear different colors.

"Our kids are excited about being part of the doubleheader," said Young. "I hope this is an opportunity to get people interested in girls athletics. I think this is an idea that the people of Midland will support."

Stephenson added, "What we are really excited about is that we can stay and watch the boys play. We don't get to do that very often. This is one way we can show support for the boys and play, too. I feel like that anyone who loves basketball wants to see as much as possible and you get to see two district games this way."

MHS boys coach Jack Stephenson, who is the brother of Jane and Shirley, is also excited about the doubleheader.

"Anytime Midland High plays Lee, you have an emotional game on your hands. With the girls playing in front of us, that adds to the excitement. I know it gives me an opportunity to see Shirley and Jane's team play and I don't get to do that very often."

Lee boys coach Paul Stueckler has some reservations about the "same night" concept, but doesn't mind sharing the floor with the girls.

"I certainly don't mind the girls playing in front of us. I'm not against that at all, but there are problems with it," said Stueckler. "When we both play on the same night, it makes the practice schedule during the week almost impossible.

"We have to scrounge around the city to find a place where our 30 to 35 sophomore and junior varsity teams can practice. Our varsity has even had to practice outdoors on occasion during the winter. When the girls played on Monday nights, we at least had the practice facilities to ourselves for that one day. We can't do that now and have to be out of our gym by 4:15 every afternoon. We don't get enough practice time."

The girls have already started district play with each team owning 1-1 records. For the boys, however, this is the first step on district hardwood and it comes at an emotional moment.

"Some of our kids have waited since they were seven years old for the opportunity to play in a big game like this and I'm sure Paul's kids feel the same way," said Jack Stephenson. "The way the district is now, whoever gets a hot hand early will have an advantage. And then you add in playing Lee and you have emotion so built up that it just becomes a hair-raising experience."

Stueckler agreed, "It's a big game whether we meet to end the season or to begin it. You know, we start the season with a couple of scrimmages and that is really fun. Then you start the regular season and you get a little more serious. Then district starts and you're scared to death. That's where I am right now. You would think after 34 years of coaching it wouldn't be that way, but it is. I get so scared, I can't breathe.

"That's funny because it's something you look forward to all year."

Physically, MHS is sound. The status of Lee's leading scorer Damon Clay is unknown, who has been sidelined with a twisted ankle. Still, both coaches are satisfied with what they've seen in pre-district play.

"I think both teams are playing very well right now. I saw Lee play in the San Antonio tournament and thought they did a good job," said Stephenson. "We have very similar teams in size, offense, defense, ball handlers and shooters. It should be a hecka'va game. We've played a lot of one and two-point games in the past where some kid comes out of nowhere to be a big factor.

Chaps move into Mesa semifinals

From Staff Reports

MESA, Ariz. — It wasn't a thing of beauty, but Midland College won its opener in the fifth annual Brown Chevrolet Rotary Shoot-Out here last night by defeating Johnson County of Overland Park, Kan., 70-61.

That moves MC to the semifinals tonight against Cypress College, Fullerton, Calif., a 90-72 winner over Fashion Institute of New York. The other semifinal matches Meramec, Mo., against Malcolm X College of Chicago.

Meramec edged host Mesa, 49-48, and Malcom X trounced Southern Alberta Institute of Technology.

The game started as if neither team had seen a basketball since last year or perhaps longer. Midway through the first half, the score was a drowsy 11-11. But MC coach Reggie Franklin finally found a combination and started putting points on the board. That came after Johnson had its only lead of the half at 13-11.

Charles McCovery hit a three-pointer, followed with a steal and a feed to Alex Stanwood. That enabled Midland to run to a 32-24 halftime lead.

THE CHAPS left that spark in the dressing room while Johnson ran off a 14-4 spurt to take a 38-36 lead. That's when Sydney Rice became a force.

The 6-9 freshman, who had played only one semester in high school, threw in 12 second half points, 10 on monster dunks, grabbed rebounds and even had a steal.

Johnson stayed close on the shooting of Tony Harris, who was averaging 41 points per game. Midland's tough defense held off the Cavaliers primarily on a Rice rebound and slam and a McCovery steal that put Midland in front 59-50 with three minutes left. After that it was just a matter of teams exchanging free throws.

Rice ended the night with 12 points and 10 rebounds, plus five blocked shots.

This gives the Chaps a chance to win their third consecutive Mesa title in as many visits.

Los Angeles Laker Magic Johnson ignites the fast break against San Antonio on the way to a 133-115 victory over the Spurs. The Lakers have now won 11 games in a row, an NBA season high.

Newest Rockets mash Mavericks

Associated Press

Last year, Joe Barry Carroll, Sleepy Floyd and Purvis Short toiled for the Golden State Warriors, who finished with a 42-40 record.

This year, all three are with Houston and currently riding a four-game winning streak.

"It's a feeling that we have reached a point of arrival. We can beat people in different ways," Carroll said after the Rockets' 117-107 victory over the Dallas Mavericks on Monday night. "I've come to a team with a winning tradition."

Carroll and guard Sleepy Floyd were acquired by the Rockets in a Dec. 12 trade. Short was obtained in a trade before the season began.

Akeem Olajuwon led the Rockets on Monday with 31 points and 11 rebounds. Short had 25 points and Floyd added 23.

"We're looking at every game as a game we have to have," Short said. "It makes it a lot of fun playing like we are now."

The victory snapped Dallas' five-game winning streak and pulled Houston within 2½ games of the Midwestern Division-leading Mavericks.

"It was an important game to win," Houston Coach Bill Fitch said. "We've really got to have intensity to beat a team as good as Dallas. We had a good effort from almost everybody."

Mark Aguirre paced Dallas with 31 points and 10 rebounds.

Lakers 133, Spurs 115

Coach Pat Riley of the defending NBA champion Los Angeles Lakers expressed dissatisfaction following his team's 10th straight victory. He was much happier following No. 11.

"We have the potential to do all the good things we did tonight on a regular basis," Riley said after the Lakers topped San Antonio. "It seems that when we play a team that runs like the Spurs do, it brings out our best."

After the Lakers beat Portland 98-81 Sunday night, Riley said, "I'm not satisfied. Even with the number of shots missed by Portland, our fast-break efficiency is almost nonexistent."

The Lakers made a season-best 59.3 percent of their field goal attempts against San Antonio, many on fast breaks.

"Our offense has been up and down, even during the streak," Riley said after his team beat the Spurs. "Just because you win doesn't mean you played well. But tonight, we were there."

NBA Roundup

James Worthy scored 23 points and Byron Scott added 21 as the Lakers raised their record to 22-6, best in the NBA.

Celtics 107, Jazz 99

Larry Bird scored 28 points and Danny Ainge added 20, including six 3-point goals, to lead Boston over Utah. Kevin McHale had 24 points for the Celtics, who had to come from behind in the fourth quarter.

One minute into the final period, Utah held an 85-79 lead. But the Celtics went on a 19-5 run and held a 98-90 advantage with 4:53 remaining.

Bird said the difference in the fourth quarter came when "we played really well, came up with some good defense and, of course, Danny hit those 3-pointers."

Ainge was 6-of-6 from 3-point range and made half of them during the final period.

"I hit my first two 3-pointers and it felt good, so I felt I had the range," he said. "I feel just as comfortable shooting the 3-pointer as I do from 20 feet."

Karl Malone led Utah with 25 points and Mel Turpin came off the bench to score 22.

76ers 122, Suns 114

Cliff Robinson scored 31 points and Charles Barkley added 28 to lead Philadelphia, snapping the 76ers' five-game losing streak.

Phoenix led 36-26 with 42 seconds remaining in the first period. But Robinson led a 23-7 run with 10 points to give Philadelphia a 49-43 lead and the Suns never got closer than five points thereafter.

Eddie Johnson paced the Suns with 27 points. Phoenix forward James Bailey was ejected from the game with 7:41 to go after getting into a shoving match with Philadelphia's Tim McCormick.

Cavaliers 122, Nuggets 101

Brad Daugherty came off the bench to score 25 points and Mark Price added 23 for Cleveland. A 28-4 Cleveland run, including 10 by Price, gave the Cavaliers a 38-20 lead late in the first quarter.

Denver rallied to within 50-47 midway through the second quarter, but a 19-6 spurt by the Cavaliers gave them a 69-53 halftime lead and they were never seriously threatened the rest of the way.

Mike Evans paced Denver with 28 points.

DALLAS (AP) — A television report that Dallas Cowboys coach Tom Landry will resign and be replaced by University of Miami coach Jimmy Johnson drew a quick rebuttal from Landry.

The Dallas Times Herald reported today that a Miami television station had reported Monday night that Landry would retire and be replaced by Johnson, who coached the Hurricanes to the national championship in a season culminated by last week's 20-14 victory over the University of Oklahoma in the Orange Bowl.

Told of the report, Landry told the newspaper, "There's nothing like a vote of confidence."

Does Landry plan to resign?

"If I'm going to resign, I don't know anything about it," Landry said. "I'll be at my office in the morning."

Landry was returning Monday from a week-long vacation. He and the coaching staff will begin their 1987 review today.

Cowboys president Tex Schramm was also returning from a vacation in South Florida. But he said he has had no contact with Johnson.

"That's the kind of report you don't dignify with a reaction," Schramm said.

Schramm said he did meet Johnson at a cocktail party in Dallas about a year ago.

Johnson, 44, told a post-Orange Bowl news conference he would consider leaving Miami for the right job, especially if the school toughens academic standards for athletes. He is reportedly being considered for an NFL head-coaching job, and attended Cowboys training camp last summer in Thousand Oaks, Calif.

Johnson told WPLG-TV, in an interview aired Monday night, that he is happy with his current situation at Miami.

"Sometime in the future, I'd like to take a look at professional football, but right now, we have a great program at the University of Miami. We have some outstanding players," Johnson said. "Maybe some day, down the road, I might look at professional football, but right now, I'm happy with Miami."

Zendejas recalls high school lesson

By GERALD ESKENAZI
New York Times News Service

HOUSTON — The way the Oilers' exuberant coach, Jerry Glanville, was talking Monday, Sunday's sudden-death victory over the Seahawks was merely a diversion on the way to Super Bowl XXII.

Maybe the Oilers really are destiny's team, but they wouldn't have won unless a 5-foot-8-inch Mexican-born place-kicker had produced the points to send them to Denver for the American Conference semifinal next Sunday against the Broncos.

Yet, Tony Zendejas, the kicker, contended Monday that he was not nervous as he approached the ball for a 42-yard field goal 8 minutes 5 seconds into overtime. His 29-yard miss with 1:47 remaining in regulation — which would have given the Oilers a 10-point lead and virtually have clinched the game — had not been on his mind.

Zendejas has not worried about kicking the ball since high school in California.

What could be bigger in a 17-year-old's life, after all, than the big game between Chino and Damien high schools?

"I learned way back," said the 27-year-old, who pronounces his name zen-DAY-hass. "I didn't know how good I was. We were playing Damien and we were losing and it was my fault. My miss."

At halftime, he went into the locker room and hung his head. He was sulking.

"I was down, and my coach just slapped me across the face," he said. "He just slapped me and told me I was a good kicker and I might get a second shot. I did. I won the game."

So after that, missing one against the Seahawks couldn't be such a big deal after all, could it?

"I wasn't down, but I had made a mistake on the ball I missed," he said. "I was so anxious to see that ball going through that I looked up and my body followed my head to the left."

The ball hit the left upright. Earlier, a 52-yarder at the halftime whistle had hit the right upright. But he also produced successful kicks of 47 and 49 yards.

He may be the best deep kicker in the league. Glanville trusted him so much in the regular season that Zendejas was called on to kick 12 times from beyond the 40 — and he made 8.

When the Oilers get to the other team's 40, they run rather than risk an interception that could negate a field-goal attempt. In overtime against Seattle, they ran six straight times after getting to the 41.

Zendejas's ability from such long distances has enabled the Oilers to become a gambling team.

"If we're at the 2-or 3-yard line, we don't go for the field goal, we go for the touchdown," said Glanville. "If we don't make the touchdown, we've got the other team deep in their territory.

Chicago 'Cubs' hope to play like 'Bears' Sunday

Associated Press

The Chicago Bears will be looking for revenge when they play the Washington Redskins in the NFC playoffs Sunday.

Last season, the Redskins scalped the Bears 27-13 in advancing to the NFC championship game. The Bears, who were defending Super Bowl champions at the time, played like cubs that day.

"We were disappointed the way we played a year ago," Bears center Jay Hilgenberg said.

The Bears expect to play better in the rematch, mainly because team leader Jim McMahon will be back at quarterback. Doug Flutie directed Chicago's offense in last year's playoff loss, while McMahon was recovering from shoulder surgery.

McMahon hasn't played since Dec. 6, when he suffered a pulled hamstring during the Bears-Vikings game. But he is scheduled to start Sunday at Soldier Field.

"With McMahon in there, it will be a whole different game," Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs said. "Here's a guy who's won 90 percent of the games he's played in, a guy who makes the most out of a situation when nothing's there. He's a winner."

The other NFC playoff game, Minnesota at San Francisco, will be played Saturday. In the AFC, Indianapolis plays at Cleveland on Saturday and Houston visits Denver on Sunday.

The Chicago-Washington game matches the Redskins' high-powered offense against an unpredictable Bears' defense, which allowed 75 points in two games before holding the Los Angeles Raiders to three points in the season finale.

The Redskins' offense, ranked third in the NFL this season, will be directed by Doug Williams, who has shared quarterback duties with Jay Schroeder.

Bears Coach Mike Ditka said it doesn't matter which quarterback plays.

"They don't change their offense with the quarterback," he said. "They didn't put the offense in for a quarterback. They put the offense in for the quarterbacks to run, and both are running it quite well."

Vikings-49ers

Minnesota's 44-10 victory over New Orleans in the NFC wild-card game Sunday impressed a lot of people. One was San Francisco Coach Bill Walsh.

"They match up well against anybody," Walsh said of the Vikings, who entered the playoffs with an unimpressive 8-7 record. "During the season, they had bad breaks and they had zany things happen to them, but now they're on track."

Walsh, whose 49ers won the NFC West with a league-best 13-2 record, said the Vikings have "some big weapons."

"Their running backs and receivers are quick, their quarterbacking is excellent and their pass rushing is excellent," he said.

One of the Vikings' big weapons is Anthony Carter, who caught six passes and scored on an 84-yard punt return against the Saints. Carter averaged a league-leading 24.5 yards per catch on 38 receptions this season.

"He'll get you deep, he'll get you short, he'll get you intermediately," San Francisco cornerback Tim McKyer said.

Oilers-Broncos

Houston crushed Denver 40-10 during the players' strike, but Broncos Coach Dan Reeves said that game will have no bearing on the playoff contest.

"We're just getting ready to play their regular squad," he said.

Reeves said he wasn't surprised by the Oilers' 23-20 overtime victory over Seattle Sunday in the AFC wild-card game.

"We felt they would beat Seattle," he said. "We've got our work cut out for us. They've got a lot of good players."

Denver nose tackle Greg Kragen said he was glad the Oilers-Seahawks game went into overtime because "it would wear Houston out a little. I was pulling for Seattle to tie it at the end just to see if they could beat each other up some more."

The Broncos, who won the AFC West with a 10-4-1 record, haven't played the Oilers in the playoffs since 1979. Houston won that game 13-7.

Colts-Browns

The Indianapolis-Clewveland game is a rematch of the Colts' 9-7 regular-season victory over the Browns.

"I'm not a vengeful person, but I'm a little frustrated by the way we played Indianapolis," Browns' receiver Reggie Langhorne said. "I'm looking forward to playing them again."

In their first meeting, the Browns blew two second-half scoring chances when Jeff Jaeger missed a 38-yard field goal and Earnest Byner fumbled the ball away inside the Colts' 5-yard-line.

"They said after that game that they'd see us in the playoffs," Cleveland defensive end Sam Clancy said. "I'm not sure they want to see us, but they got us."

Temple's Perry lifts No. 6 Owls

Associated Press

Tim Perry was recruited by Temple mainly for his defensive potential.

John Chaney, coach of the sixth-ranked Owls, said, "When we first got Timmy, there was no question he was going to be a great shot-blocker. We didn't anticipate his offense to come along like it has."

On Monday night, the 6-foot-9 senior forward scored 16 points to lead Temple to an 86-60 Atlantic 10 victory over Rutgers. More important, he became the 26th player in Temple history to break the 1,000-point plateau.

Perry, who now has scored 1,003 points, also grabbed 10 rebounds and blocked four shots as the Owls raised their conference record to 4-0 and remained unbeaten in eight games this season, defeating Rutgers for the 11th straight time.

It was a big night for Perry, made bigger because his brother, Lee, plays for the Scarlet Knights and a number of their family members were in the stands for the game in Philadelphia.

"I really wanted it bad tonight," Temple's Perry said. "Playing against my brother and with my family here, I wanted to do it tonight."

The brothers were not matched against each other during the game, but Tim was uncomfortable playing against Lee.

"It's pretty hard playing against your brother," he said, "You want him to do well, but you want your team to win."

Mike Vreeswyk had 17 points and Howard Evans 10 points and 10 assists for Temple, while Darren Campbell had 15 points for Rutgers, now 3-6 and 0-3.

No. 8 Oklahoma 109, Austin Peay 69

Harvey Grant's 22 points and 13 rebounds and 20 points and 11 assists by Ricky Grace led Oklahoma.

The Sooners, 13-0, set a school and Big Eight Conference record by going over the 100-point mark for the tenth time this season. Oklahoma had set the previous mark of nine during the 1984-85 season.

Austin Peay, 4-7, had only eight players suited up. Coach Lake Kelly said four others had been suspended for violating team rules and did not accompany the team to Norman. The Governors then lost starting point guard Marshall Ayers early in the game with an ankle injury.

Mookie Blaylock and Stacey King each added 18 points for the Sooners, while Barry Sumpter led Austin Peay with 14 points.

No. 9 Duke 101, William & Mary 70

Danny Ferry's 26 points — 18 in the first half — helped the Blue Devils to their seventh victory in eight starts.

Kevin Strickland and Phil Henderson added 12 points each for the Blue Devils. Robert Brickey, making his first start of the season, scored 11 for Duke.

Jimmy Apple scored 21 to lead William & Mary, 2-7.

No. 10 Purdue 81, Illinois 68

Troy Lewis scored 25 points to pace Purdue in the Big Ten opener for both teams.

The Boilermakers, 11-1, led 32-31 at the half, then Lewis sparked a 9-4 spurt at the start of the second half with a 3-pointer.

The Illini, 9-3, fought back on the shooting of Glynn Blackwell and Ken Battle to within 41-40 with 16:30 left. But the Boilermakers went on a 14-6 spurt to remain safely in front.

Tony Jones added 14 points for Purdue and Blackwell led Illinois with 18.

Lady 'Horns drop to fifth

Associated Press

Iowa women's basketball Coach Vivian Stringer says keeping the No. 1 ranking will be much easier than chasing it.

"It's one thing to speculate and believe you're No. 1 and then finally get it. It's another thing to maintain that ranking. I don't think we own it. We'll have to work much harder and try to improve," she said.

"There is room for improvement," Stringer said.

The Hawkeyes were voted into the top spot Monday, the first time they have held that position.

"I haven't told the team yet. I'll talk with them before practice. I don't need to harp on it, I'll more or less downplay it," she said. "Some teams would maybe rest on it, but I don't think we will."

A nationwide panel of 63 women's coaches gave Iowa 53 first-place votes and 1,247 points after the Hawkeyes beat three Top Ten teams at the Orange Bowl Classic in Miami. Iowa's victims included Texas, last week's No. 1 team.

Texas, which has lost two straight games as a result of a knee injury to All-American Clarissa Davis in the Orange Bowl semifinals last week, fell from the No. 1 to No. 5, the lowest position for the Longhorns since being ranked No. 6 in January 1984.

The Longhorns' 88-58 loss to Ohio State last Saturday was the worst defeat for Texas since Carol Blazejowski led Montclair State to a 102-58 romp over Coach Jody Conradt's team 10 years ago.

Auburn, though beaten by Iowa 72-69 in the first round in Miami, was still No. 2, but had to share the spot with idle Louisiana Tech, which tied the Tigers with 1,140 points.

The Techsters, 10-0, received six first-place votes, while Auburn got two. Tennessee, 8-1, dropped one spot to fourth.

Houston Oilers still get no respect

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers get no respect from the oddsmakers and other NFL teams, but that's fine with Coach Jerry Glanville.

The Oilers, who will face Denver in the semifinals of the AFC playoffs in Denver Sunday, are once again the underdogs.

"I think that's great, and I hope the feeling continues," Glanville said Monday. "It's more fun to be the Rodney Dangerfield of the league and try to get respect in three more weeks."

The Oilers defeated Seattle 23-20 in overtime Sunday in the AFC wild card game. They were underdogs against Seattle and they'll be even less of a favorite against the Broncos.

"We've only been favored in one game we've played all year, so we're just going for upset No. 10," Glanville explained. "We'd all be totally shocked if we were anything but underdogs."

The Oilers were favored to beat Cincinnati, 4-11, in the regular season finale and they won 21-17.

The Oilers hadn't had a winning season since 1980 and finished 5-11 the past two seasons until they rebounded to a 9-6 record this season.

Glanville says the Oilers aren't just happy to have made the playoffs. They want more.

"We have a goal to win four games in this mini-season (playoffs)," Glanville said. "We're not thrilled just to be going to Denver. We are thrilled to go up there and have a chance to win."

The Oilers led the injury-plagued Seahawks into the closing minutes but Steve Largent caught a 12-yard touchdown pass from Dave Krieg with 26 seconds left in the game, forcing an overtime period.

The Oiler defense that had contained the Seahawks throughout the game, stopped Seattle on three plays in overtime, allowing Tony Zendejas to kick a 42-yard field goal with 6:55 to go in the overtime.

Seattle's Curt Warner, the AFC's No. 2 rusher, missed the game with an ankle injury.

The comeback advanced the Oilers to Denver's Mile High Stadium where they'll face not only the Broncos but possibly icy weather.

"We can't give in to Denver or to any other conditions, including the weather," Glanville said. "We went to overtime (losing 13-10) in Cleveland last year and it was 9 degrees.

"We'll mention that to the players and we expect to play as well as in Cleveland and not lose to the weather."

Glanville said he has no plans to take the team to Denver early to adjust to the weather.

The Oilers' injury list Monday contained five players, including four starters, but only reserve cornerback Audrey McMillian, with a hamstring injury, was listed as doubtful.

Cardinals stand to lose powerful Clark by Friday

NEW YORK (AP) — Will Jack Clark stay in St. Louis or will he go?

The Cardinals say he'll stay. Clark's agent says no.

"Jack Clark has indicated to me that he will not re-sign with the Cardinals," Tom Reich, who represents Clark, said Monday.

"Negotiations are continuing," Cardinals General Manager Dal Maxvill said. "I'm hopeful that we can get it done by Friday midnight."

Clark is the most prominent of the 11 free agents who must re-sign with their former clubs by Friday or be barred from re-signing with them until May 1.

"The time for talking, we're past that," Reich said. "I think it's academic with respect to the Cardinals at this point. I expected a St. Louis deal but it's not meant to be."

Maxvill, who said the Cardinals are offering a two-year contract, said he spoke Monday with Bill Landman, an associate of Reich.

"He called Bill at 7:30 this morning but it didn't change anything," Reich said. "The situation with St. Louis appears to have expired. Re-signing with St. Louis is not our direction from Clark."

Reich said that negotiations with the Cardinals reached an impasse in December and that is when Clark began to think about going elsewhere. Reich would not say which teams Clark preferred.

Clark, acquired from San Francisco in exchange for four players on Sept. 1, 1985, hit 35 homers, drove in 106 runs and batted .286 in 1987 before he hurt his ankle on Sept. 9. His homers were 36 percent of the Cardinals' team total of 94.

"We've said from the outset that there are two things that you have to acknowledge about Jack Clark," Reich said. "The first is that he's one of the superstars of the game. The second is that he's injury-prone. The Cardinals are willing to acknowledge the second but not the first."

"I'm happy to acknowledge the importance of Jack Clark to our ballclub," Maxvill said. "We think it's important to re-sign him. Obviously we do or we wouldn't be willing to make the two-year committment."

Clark made $1.3 million last season in the final year of a multi-year contract.

Reich said that Clark was not opposed to hinging a significant part of the money in a new contract to longevity clauses. But Reich said the Cardinals were unwilling to pay Clark as a superstar if he remained unhurt.

Maxvill said that one of the items under discussion was the number of games Clark would have to play to reach certain monetary levels, but Reich indicated that Clark had stopped thinking about such matters.

"It's just not a question of the money or the terms anymore," Reich said. "There are just times when you have to move on and find a new ballclub."

Clark, in addition to missing the final month of the season, as well as the playoffs and World Series, was also hurt the final three months of 1986 and missed two weeks in 1985.

"This is not what we expected," Reich said. "We thought we would be able to work out a deal with St. Louis. Jack wanted to stay in St. Louis. He likes the manager. He likes the fans."

Others facing the Friday signing deadline are Dave Smith, Larry Anderson and Danny Darwin of the Houston Astros; Thad Bosley and Charlie Leibrandt of the Kansas City Royals; Paul Molitor of the Milwaukee Brewers; Gary Gaetti of the Minnesota Twins; Atlee Hammaker of the San Francisco Giants; Bill Gullickson of the New York Yankees, and John Candelaria of the New York Mets.

Stock market rockets over 2,000

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market got off to a running start on 1988 Monday, rising sharply in buying encouraged by an easing of pressure on the dollar in foreign exchange.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials jumped 76.42, or 3.94 percent, to 2,015.25, for its fourth largest point gain ever. The record of 186.84 points was set on Oct. 21 last year, just after the worst of the September-October crash.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 8 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 1,592 up, 194 down and 197 unchanged. Other broad measures of stock price trends also turned in impressive showings.

The only missing element for a classic market rise, many analysts said, was heavy activity. Big Board volume totaled just 181.81 million shares, against 170.14 million Thursday in the last session of 1987.

Analysts said a rebounding dollar against leading foreign currencies provided the spark for the rally, surprising traders who had thought the U.S. currency was in for a bad day.

The dollar's upturn was attributed in large measure to intervention by central banks in the foreign exchange markets. Nevertheless, it seemed to encourage investors who had watched it fall steadily to new lows in the waning days of 1987.

Brokers also said market participants were hopeful for a pickup in the stock market now that yearend selling for tax and portfolio "window dressing" purposes is out of the way.

In addition, a monthly survey of corporate purchasing executives found evidence of economic growth setting a "much brisker" pace in December than it did the month before.

"The overt explanation is the dollar," said Larry Wachtel at Prudential-Bache Securities. "There was fear that it would cascade downward.

"Also, none of the numbers so far suggests that the economy was slowed very much by the crash last fall."

Blue chips leading the advance included International Business Machines, up 5¼ at 120¾; American Telephone & Telegraph, up 1¼ at 28¼; General Electric, up 2⅜ at 46½; Merck, up 5⅛ at 164⅜, and American Express, up 1⅜ at 24.

Energy stocks were broadly higher on the strength of rising oil prices. Chevron gained 2 to 41⅝; Amoco 2 to 71; Atlantic Richfield 3¾ to 72¾, and Occidental Petroleum 1⅜ to 25¾.

But while oil prices were moving up, gold and other precious metals fell in an apparent response to the dollar's turn for the better.

Famed surgeon files chapter 11

HOUSTON (AP) — Famed heart surgeon Dr. Denton Cooley, who performed the first successful heart transplant in 1968 and the world's first artifical heart transplant in 1969, filed for protection from creditors Monday.

Cooley, doing business as Cardiovascular Associates, Southwest Apartment Homes, Point of the Southwest, Southwestern Plaza, Texas American Bank Building and Cool Acres Ranch, sought protection from his creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. He claims to owe about $100 million.

Among his debts were 11 unsecured debts of $26.5 million ranging from $19.9 million owed to First City National Bank of Houston, which is itself in the process of being reorganized with the help of a Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. contribution, to $522.60 owed Sue's Sandwich Shop in Houston.

Cooley, 67, listed among his assets real property valued at $44 million including several undeveloped tracts, at least one apartment complex, a six-story office building, two beach houses and oil and gas royalties.

Other assets include six vehicles, including two Rolls Royces.

Cooley's filing said he has $2.7 million in tax liabilities, but he indicated that at least a portion of that is under contest.

Cooley's wife, Louise, told The Associated Press her husband was at the Texas Heart Institute, but hospital officials said he would not be in until Tuesday morning.

The native Houston doctor, founder and head of the Texas Heart Institute at the Texas Medical Center in Houston, performed his first heart transplant in 1968, almost a year after Dr. Christiaan Barnard first removed the diseased heart of a South African man.

Crude oil production takes dive

DENVER (AP) — U.S. crude oil production declined 4.1 percent in 1987, a year when the oil industry was thought to be showing signs of recovery from its nosedive in the early 1980s, Petroleum Information reported Monday.

Spokesman Jack Ekstrom said 1988 is looking a lot like 1987 because of lagging crude prices.

"Crude production will continue to erode. When it does, that means there will be less money coming into domestic operations to replace the reserves we are using," said Ekstrom. "It's kind of a downward spiral."

Meanwhile, natural gas production, bolstered by increased production from the Gulf of Mexico, increased by 1.7 percent over 1986 to an estimated total of 18.2 trillion cubic feet, according to the Denver-based reporting service for the oil industry.

But crude oil production continued to slump. Petroleum Information said 3.03 billion barrels of oil were produced in the United States in 1987. Daily average production was 8.3 barrels per day, down from a daily average of 9 million barrels in 1985.

"There was a widely held perception that 1987 was a better year than 1986 in the oil and gas industry," said Ekstrom. "These numbers belie that. They reflect the fact that drilling for oil and gas was down for the year below the really depressed level of the previous year."

Pure exploration — the number of wells drilled in search of new fields — dropped 40.2 percent in 1987, and only 3,023 of these wells were officially completed at year's end. A total of 253 of them found oil and 190 found natural gas, Petroleum Information said.

Well completion in 1987 dropped 17.8 percent below the 1986 level. Completions in 1986 were 38.5 percent below 1985 completions.

Speculation drives futures up by $1

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices began the new year with a strong rally after an OPEC oil minister was quoted as saying the cartel's members have been adhering to production levels agreed upon last month.

Prices surged higher Monday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, where contracts for February delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the U.S. benchmark crude, settled at $17.69 per 42-gallon barrel, up 99 cents from Thursday's finish.

Futures prices for refined products traded on the exchange also rose.

Wholesale heating oil for February delivery jumped 2.77 cents to close at 52.76 cents a gallon, while wholesale unleaded gasoline for February delivery climbed 2.29 cents to 46.11 cents a gallon.

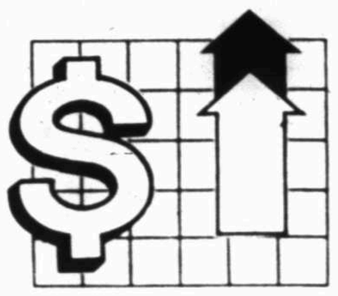
Intervention supports dollar overseas



LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose sharply in early European trading today, continuing a recovery which dealers said was sparked off by Bank of Japan intervention in earlier Asian trading.

Gold prices were weaker.

Traders said failure by European central banks to follow up on intervention by Japan's central bank was slowing the dollar's rapid recovery but that trading was still hectic.

The dollar's turnaround began Monday when four key central banks — the West German Bundesbank, the Bank of Japan, the Swiss National Bank and the U.S. Federal Reserve — all bought dollars, dealers said.

One West German trader said the dollar continued rising in Europe today because "after many traders burned their fingers (Monday), they are now trying the other side."

In Tokyo, the dollar staged a dramatic 3.15 yen recovery from Monday's record low close.

It was the first gain for the dollar on the Tokyo market since Dec. 24 and it was the dollar's largest one-day rise since Oct. 24, 1986.

It closed at 124.80 yen, up from Monday's record low close of 121.65 yen. Later, in London, it was trading even higher at 125.10 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with rates late today:

—1.6095 West German marks, up from 1.5855.

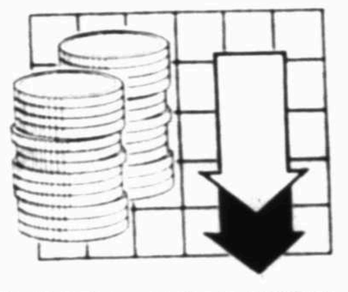
—1.3110 Swiss francs, up from 1.2857.

—5.4485 French francs, up from 5.3615.

—1.8111 Dutch guilders, up from 1.7830.

—1,186.50 Italian lire, up from 1,169.50.

—1.2965 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3000.



In London, the dollar rose against the British pound. It cost $1.8575 to buy one pound, cheaper than $1.8730 late Monday.

Bullion dealers said gold prices were weaker but above their worst levels of the morning in moderate trading. They said the precious metal has been pressured by the stronger dollar.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $475.60 a troy ounce and at midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $477.30, both down from Monday's late bid of $480.00.

In Zurich, the bid price was $477.20, down from $480.80 late Monday. Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $7.58 to close at $477.42.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.49 a troy ounce, down from Monday's $6.51.

Area travelers find the going less expensive

From Staff Reports

Continental Airlines is giving Permian Basin travelers a little more incentive to travel during the traditionally slow winter season by cutting fares and easing restrictions.

Effective Monday, Continental cut fares for all travelers an average of 15 to 20 percent nationwide. The new fares means a passenger from Midland/Odessa can travel to Chicago, Miami or Atlanta for as low as $99 each way.

The move sparked a new round of fare wars, with United Airlines matching Continental's fares, and Northwest Airlines saying it, too, would cut non-refundable fares.

"We're doing this in an attempt to lower fares and spur travel," explained Asa Mooney, supervisor of airport services for Continental at Midland International Airport. "This is during our slack time of the year, which occurs about mid-January and lasts until April."

Continental has three daily departures from Midland International, a non-stop flight to Houston, and two flights to Denver via Amarillo, with connections to other cities across the country, according to Mooney.

At the same time Continental was cutting its fares, the airline eased advance purchase restrictions by reintroducing the two-day advance purchase for its non-refundable Maxsaver fare. This move was also matched by United and Northwest.

Continental further announced that the more than three million members of its OnePass frequent flyer program would be able to reserve confirmed First Class seats on Continental flights at unrestricted coach fares. For example, Midland/Odessa passengers can fly to Denver at the unrestricted coach fare of $215 instead of the regular first class fare of $296.

Direct intervention prompts rebound in value of dollar

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — Direct intervention in currency markets by the Federal Reserve and other central banks appears to be a factor in the dollar's rebound from post-World War II lows, but analysts suggest the respite might be temporary.

The dollar strengthened on most international markets Monday amid reports of heavy buying of dollars by the Fed, the Bank of Japan, the German Bundesbank and other central banks.

The intervention appeared to be in line with an agreement by the seven major industrial nations late last month to coordinate exchange rate policy in an effort to stem the dollar's sharp fall.

Intervention is the direct buying of a currency — in this case dollars — by an official bank. The impact on currency prices can be significant.

However, even with their vast resources, central banks are limited in what they can do.

The amounts of money that central banks can pump into the system are tiny compared with transactions on foreign exchange markets that can reach $200 billion a day.

"Even though central banks can coordinate intervention day-to-day, they do not have enough ammunition to fully counter the negative psychology of private investors toward the dollar," said David Jones, a senior economist at Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., a New York based government securities dealer.

Economists also say the Fed's flexibility is severely limited given its apparent reluctance to prop up the dollar with higher interest rates.

The dollar has fallen more than 50 percent since early 1985 against the Japanese yen and the West German mark.

The usual way for a government to keep its currency from tumbling is to raise interest rates. But Fed Chairmist for the Bank of America in San Francisco. "They just don't have any options. If they try to raise interest rates, that will jeopardize what is shaping up to be a weak first half" of 1988.

A rebound in dollar trading prompted heavy buying in Tokyo Monday following reports of buying of dollars by the federal government.

The dollar, which had fallen to record lows against other major currencies in the final week of 1987, rose decisively on Monday after the reports of intervention by central banks.

In Paris, Finance Minister Edouard Balladur said there was a "secret clause" in a Dec. 23 currency stabilization agreement calling for intervention in currency markets when the dollar fell below a certain level.

"The dollar should not fall further; the seven major nations have agreed to cooperate in the foreign exchange market to that end," Balladur said in a statement that appeared in a French business publication.

The official December statement by the "Group of Seven" industrial nations declared further declines in the dollar would be "counterproductive" to world economic growth.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

New S&L eyes Midland

AUSTIN — A decision on a new savings and loan office planned for Midland is due in two to three weeks, the attorney for the association that wants to open the office said this morning.

Heart O' Texas Savings Association, based in San Saba County, has asked the Texas Savings and Loan Department to allow it to move a branch office from Stanton to Midland. The Midland office would be located at Wadley Road and Big Spring.

Austin attorney Tom Rutledge, representing Heart O' Texas, said no one had filed to oppose the relocation. Rutledge said he expects a Savings and Loan Department decision in two to three weeks.

Consumer confidence renewed in November

NEW YORK (AP) — Consumers shaken by October's world stock market collapse recovered a measure of their confidence last month, a business research group reported.

The Conference Board said Monday its December Consumer Confidence Index rose 5 points from November, to 105.8. That made up for nearly half the loss it registered in November.

The index is based on a scale of 1985 equaling 100.

Japanese chips grab almost 50% of market

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Japanese semiconductor companies boosted their share of the worldwide chip market to 48 percent in 1987 as they led an industry-wide resurgence, a report says.

North American companies, most of them in the United States, captured 39 percent of the worldwide market, according to the report released Monday by the market research firm of Dataquest Inc.

Construction spending posts substantial gain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Construction spending shot up 2.2 percent in November, the biggest increase in nine months, as the building industry benefited from widespread gains in both residential and non-residential construction, the government said.

The Commerce Department reported Monday that spending on new construction rose to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $419.5 billion in November, an increase of $8.9 billion from the October rate.

Analysts credited part of the sharp rebound in November to unusually warm weather in many states, but they said the advance may also be signaling better days for at least part of the construction industry.

Bass group may sell off parts of Bell & Howell

CHICAGO (AP) — A group led by Texas financier Robert M. Bass said it may sell one or more of Bell & Howell Co.'s non-core businesses after completion of its $674.6 million buyout of the publishing firm.

The Bass group of Fort Worth, Texas, said in a Monday filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission that it was considering the divestiture of one or more Bell & Howell divisions to reduce the indebtedness incurred in the buyout.

Washington loses only exploratory well

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — The only major oil or gas well being drilled in Washington is being abandoned because Shell Oil Co. officials say chances of finding a profitable field appear slim.

Shell will plug its exploratory well in Walla Walla County after drilling 8,500 feet and finding little natural gas, a spokesman said.

The company had planned to spend $12 million to drill and test a 15,000 foot well, but has given up, said Tom Denman, a spokesman for Shell Western E&P Inc. in Houston.

"We drilled down to around 8,500 feet and decided that there was no commercial opportunities for the well and we decided to plug and abandon it," Denman said in a telephone interview.

The state has had no commercial oil or gas production since the 1940s.

The well, located about 20 miles northeast of Pasco, did punch through the thick layer of basalt rock, Denman said. The basalt, which can be up to 2 miles thick in the region, makes drilling in the Columbia Basin difficult and expensive, Denman said.

Shell officials didn't feel there would be sufficient deposits of natural gas to continue drilling, he said.

The well will be filled with cement this week, and the surrounding area will be replanted with native grasses and restored, Denman said.

He couldn't estimate how much Shell had spent on its fifth well in the region.

From 1980-1984, Shell spent $50 million to drill four wells through basalt rock in the Yakima-Ellensburg areas. All four had signs of natural gas, but not enough to justify commercial production.

Denman said Shell was still interested in exploring the area, and will study data it has accumulated in recent years to determine if it will drill further test wells.

Shell has remained interested in the area because the geologic structures under the Columbia River basalt flows are considered among the largest untested areas in the nation, state officials have said.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Treasury bill maturity date doesn't affect interest

By Bill Doyle

Q. I have purchased U.S. Treasury bills on different dates to have staggered income. As time went on, each T bill has been rolled over on its maturity date. Now, two mature on the same date and another is due to mature almost on that date.

What has happened to bring these maturity dates together? Did I lose money while these dates came closer and closer?

Doyle

A. Treasury bills are issued with maturities of 13, 26 and 52 weeks. The only way the maturity dates of two T bills purchased at different times can coincide is if each bill has a different maturity span.

Let's say you bought a 26-week T bill issued July 16, 1987, and a 13-week T bill issued Oct. 15, 1987. Both will mature Jan. 14, 1988. Voila! Coincidental maturity dates.

If you had purchased two 26-week T bills, the one issued July 16 would mature Jan. 14 and the one issued Oct. 15 would mature April 14.

Since you want staggered income, you'll have to plot your purchases more carefully. You could accomplish what you have in mind by buying a 13-week T bill every month for three consecutive months, or a 26-week T bill every month for six months, or a 52-week T bill every month for a year.

Then, when you roll over each T bill as it matures, the face amount of each automatically will be used to purchase a new T bill. At the time of each rollover, you'll receive the "discount" -the difference between the face amount of the new T bill and the lower price at which it is sold to the investing public.

Under the previous system, a check for the amount of the discount was sent to investors or to their brokerage firms or banks. Under the new "Treasury Direct" system, that money goes by wire to investors' bank accounts or to their brokerage firms or banks.

You did not lose any money as the maturity dates of your T bills came closer and closer. Because you rolled over your matured T bills to buy new ones, your money has been working for you all the time.

Q. We now purchase U.S. Treasury notes and bills through our district Federal Reserve Bank under the Treasury Direct system. The "tender" purchase application must be filled out in duplicate, one copy of which I keep.

Is it necessary to retain that duplicate copy, after I receive the statement showing all pertinent information correctly? Space is scarce in my apartment and I rent only a small safe deposit box.

A. Once you have checked your Treasury Direct statement of account to be sure it is correct, there is no need to keep the duplicate of the tender form. The statement is your proof of Treasury security ownership and a complete record of your account.

You receive a Treasury Direct statement of account every time there is a change in your account, such as the purchase of new Treasury bonds, notes and bills; the redemption of matured securities; the payment of interest and/or discounts.

Q. I am considering the purchase of either U.S. Treasury bonds, notes or bills -- only if the interest they pay is exempt from federal income tax. Is it?

A. Not for one minute. Interest from U.S. Treasury securities is subject to federal income tax. If you buy Treasury securities and fail to report the interest you receive on your federal income tax return, you'll be in big trouble with the Internal Revenue Service.

However, interest from Treasury securities is exempt from state and local income tax, if you live in an area where there are such levies.

Q. Do states with income taxes tax the dividends received from mutual funds which invest exclusively in U.S. Treasury securities?

A. Some do; some don't. Most mutual funds of that type provide their shareholders with a detailed state-by-state breakdown of tax consequences.

GAS is still our middle name.

We are pleased to announce that Perry Gas Companies, Inc. has changed its name to Parker Gas Companies, Inc.

For seven years, we've been part of the Parker Drilling family and yet not many people were aware of it. For over 50 years, Parker has been a world leader in the energy industry. We felt it was time people knew we were part of this strong and respected international company.

But our business is still gas - gas gathering, treating, processing, transporting, marketing and measuring. So while we're pleased to be called Parker, we don't want people to forget that the Permian Basin is still home and that Gas is still our middle name.

Sandinista critics to tell peace panel of non-compliance

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — Opposition leaders in Nicaragua said they would tell an international commission visiting Managua today that the Sandinistas have failed to take steps needed to comply with a regional peace plan.

The commission began its six-day trip Monday in Costa Rica, one of five nations covered by the plan and the only one fully at peace.

In Managua, where the panel planned to meet today, 14 opposition political groups issued a statement Monday accusing the government of failing to live up to the accord. They said 1988 had begun on a "somber" note because of that.

The critics include editors of the opposition newspaper La Prensa, and Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, the Roman Catholic primate who has mediated cease-fire talks between the government and U.S.-financed Contra rebels.

Two negotiating sessions in the Dominican Republic failed to produce more than a brief Christmas truce, and no further sessions have been scheduled.

The commission was to spend two days in Nicaragua, during which Obando y Bravo said he would present a document outlining what government opponents see as the Sandinistas' failure to bring about peace.

The panel also was to hear testimony from both warring sides.

After visits to Honduras, Guatemala and El Salvador, the commission will present the results of its findings at a summit Jan. 15 in San Jose.

The presidents of the five nations then must decide whether to pursue the plan, signed Aug. 7, or abandon it as unworkable. In addition to cease-fires, amnesties and greater democracy in Central America, the peace plan calls for an end to all outside aid to insurgent forces in the region.

With only 10 days to go, the plan appears to be in serious trouble and the presidents are likely to extend its deadline for compliance by several months.

If that take that step, it would be the second deadline extension. The first deadline, Dec. 5, was pushed back when it became clear that full compliance by then was impossible.

The Reagan administration indicated it would probably object to another deadline extension. President Reagan delayed asking Congress for $175 million more in Contra aid, largely at the insistence of Democratic leaders who urged him to give the peace plan time to work.

The United States has given $750 million to the Contras to support their six-year effort to overthrow the Sandinista government, which is supported by the Soviet Union, other Eastern European nations and Cuba.

The peace plan is in trouble not only in Nicaragua but in El Salvador and Guatemala.

An 8-year-old civil war continues in El Salvador, and Guatemala has not been able to achieve a cease-fire with a small but determined band of leftist insurgents that has been fighting the government for 20 years.

Palestinian students raise the outlawed flag of Palestine during demonstrations Monday at Bir Zeit University, near Ramallah in the Occupied West Bank. The students were protesting the death of an Arab woman who was shot by an Israeli soldier Sunday.

Israel claims it had no choice but to deport Palestinians

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli officials said they had no choice but to order nine Palestinian activists deported, and the officials rebutted allegations by the United States and other nations that the move was illegal.

Four of the activists have appealed the ouster orders, handed down Sunday. The same four began hunger strikes Sunday, according to the Arab-run Palestine Press Service. Their attorney said they would starve rather than be deported.

Monday, Israeli officials defended the expulsions as necessary to prevent more unrest in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip. Since rioting broke out there Dec. 8, troops have shot and killed at least 23 Palestinians.

Robbie Sabel, a Foreign Ministry legal adviser, said the deportations were authorized by Jordanian law in effect in the West Bank when Israel seized it from Jordan in 1967.

"Israel's actions are in full conformity both with the law in force in the territories, which is Jordanian law, and international law," he told reporters.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir told Israel radio: "Deportations are the maximum deterrent punishment we have today, and we use this measure in the smallest possible manner. We use it with people that cannot be reformed, who keep inciting and initiating disturbances."

The deportations have been criticized by Israel's normally close allies, Britain and the United States, as well as Egypt, the only Arab country to make peace with Israel. They argue the expulsions violate the 1949 Geneva Convention that forbids deportation of civilians in occupied zones and will only provoke further violence.

Sabel said Israel's Supreme Court has upheld the interpretation of Israeli officials who say the Geneva Convention was intended to prevent mass deportations, not the expulsion of a few hardcore troublemakers.

An appeal must be made within 96 hours of the deportation orders.

A deportee has the right of appeal first to the army's Committee of Appeal, then to a three-judge panel at the Supreme Court.

Lt. Col. Renaan Gissin, an army spokesman, said Israel has deported 19 people since 1985 and orders to deport three others were under appeal before Sunday's decision was announced. Arab reports claim 104 people have been deported since 1982 and about 2,000 since 1967.

No official figures for the 1967-1985 period are available, but an Israeli official said only that "dozens" were deported.

Most deportees have been sent to Jordan because residents of the West Bank and Israeli-annexed east Jerusalem carry Jordanian passports.

Israel rejects criticism by British minister

LONDON (AP) — A government minister who stopped his tour of the occupied lands in Israel to accuse the military of unjustly arresting an Arab youth does not understand the problems there, an Israeli official said.

After touring the Jabaliya regugee camp in the Gaza Strip Monday, David Mellor, junior minister of state at the British Foreign Office, also sharply criticized living conditions in the occupied lands.

"Conditions here are I think an affront to civilized values," Mellor told the British Broadcasting Corp. "It's appalling that a few miles up the coast (in Israel) there is prosperity, and here there is misery on a scale that rivals anything anywhere in the world."

He said he was shocked by the failure of the Israeli government after 20 years of occupation to improve conditions.

Israel's charge d'affairs in London, Moshe Raviv, rejected the criticism as "unbalanced" and said it could aggravate problems in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, where Israeli troops have killed at least 23 Arabs since Dec. 8.

During his tour, Mellor was introduced to the father of a 14-year-old boy who was arrested for throwing a stone at Israeli soldiers nearby.

Mellor then challenged a nearby Israeli officer, saying:

"I saw nothing happen which merited arrest-...Colonel, I think you should look into this. This is not good at all."

The incident was the main story today in the Times of London and other British newspapers and the lead item in radio and television news bulletins.

Raviv said in a statement Monday night: "It is easy to pay a short visit to Gaza and describe the situation in strong language."

"The danger of unbalanced descriptions is that they encourage extremism and aggravate the situation," he added.

"It is more difficult to ask the hard questions. Why has nothing been done to advance a solution to the Gaza problem before 1967? Why after the conclusion of the Camp David accord and the peace treaty with Egypt did the Palestinians in Judea, Samaria and Gaza reject the scheme for autonomy and self rule?"

Egypt captured Gaza in 1948 after the declaration of the Jewish state, and 200,000 Arab refugees remained there. Israel seized the Gaza Strip and West Bank in 1967 during the Middle East war.

Kidnappers accuse Germany of mistreating Shiite Moslem

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Kidnappers holding a West German hostage today accused authorities in West Germany of mistreating the jailed brother of the man who allegedly carried out the abduction.

The statement from the Holy Warriors for Freedom appeared to quash speculation that the captive, Rudolf Cordes, would be released soon.

It said Mohammed Ali Hamadi, a Shiite Moslem arrested in Frankfurt last Jan. 13, was being "treated in the most inhuman manner." The typewritten Arabic statement added: "We do not allow this and will not let it continue."

Abbas Ali Hamadi, Hamadi's brother, went on trial today in West Germany on charges of kidnapping Cordes and another German, Alfred Schmidt, in an effort to win freedom for his brother.

Defense attorney Eckhard Hild read the court a statement in which Abbas Hamadi denied any role in the kidnappings and appealed for Cordes' release.

The statement from Holy Warriors was delivered before dawn to a Western news agency along with a snapshot of Cordes. It was the first photograph of Cordes in captivity since he was abducted Jan. 17, 1987, after his arrival at Beirut airport from Frankfurt.

Cordes, 54, is the Beirut manager for Hoechst AG, one of West Germany's largest chemical companies. In the past two months, there have been frequent reports predicting his release.

Schmidt was kidnapped in Beirut on Jan. 20 and released Sept. 7. Today's Holy Warriors statement said that move was a gesture of goodwill.

"But it appears German officials are the grandsons and renovators of Nazism," the statement said. "They should realize that the hostages' card is not the only and crucial trump. There is a lot that can cause regret over lost chances."

In Washington, L. Paul Bremmer, the U.S. State Department's ambassador-at-large for counterterrorism, said in a television interview that "it's very important not to fall into the trap of equating the terrorists with their victims."

"In a way that's what the kidnappers of Mr. Cordes have tried to do with their announcement this morning," he said on "CBS This Morning."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Lawyers want ex-chief added to defendants in Aquino trial

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Defense lawyers today urged that a former Manila intelligence chief be added to the 40 defendants charged with killing President Corazon Aquino's husband four years ago.

Defense lawyer Rodolfo Jimenez noted a witness had testified Monday that the former chief, Col. Rolando Abadilla, was at Manila airport when former Sen. Benigno Aquino was slain on Aug. 21, 1983.

"All those who appear to have committed a crime must be prosecuted. If you choose only a few without going against the rest, you have a case of selective prosecution. That would violate that constitutional injunction," Jimenez said.

Jiminez did not explain why he, a defense attorney, would recommend that more people be prosecuted in the trial.

However, he appeared to be saying that if mere presence at the airport at the time of the assassination was sufficient grounds for indictment, then Abadilla and all members of the security force also should be charged. And if mere presence was not sufficient for indictment, then the charges against his clients should be dropped since that is all that ties them to the killing.

Aquino was killed when he came home after three years in the United States to lead the opposition to then-President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

Carlucci, Kuwaiti ruler meet

KUWAIT (AP) — U.S. Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci met with the ruler of Kuwait today and reportedly assured him the United States would continue to protect Kuwaiti tankers in the Persian Gulf.

Carlucci, on his first trip to the Persian Gulf region as secretary of defense, also told the emir, Sheik Jaber al-Ahmed al-Sabah, that the United States wanted an end to the Iran-Iraq war, an informed source said.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Carlucci told the emir the United States was determined to protect navigation in the gulf and would continue to escort reflagged Kuwaiti tankers.

Carlucci also met with Kuwait's crown prince and prime minister, Sheik Saad al-Abdullah al-Sabah, and with the foreign affairs, oil, and defense ministers.

The defense secretary arrived Monday on a tour that also was to cover Bahrain, Saudi Arabia and Oman. The U.S. Embassy in Oman reported the visit there was canceled due to tight schedules.

Arabs on trial admit hijacking

ADIYALA, Pakistan (AP) — Five Palestinians on trial for the 1986 hijacking of a Pan Am jetliner today admitted commandeering the plane, but blamed Pakistani commandos for killing 21 passengers.

The admission, the defendants' first, came in a joint statement read by their lawyer in court.

In addition to those killed, more than 100 people were wounded in the hijacking, in which four Palestinian hijackers held about 400 passengers hostage for 17 hours at Karachi Airport.

The flight, from Bombay, India, to New York, was hijacked Sept. 5, 1986, during a stop in Karachi.

"We came to Pakistan to hijack an American airplane to instantly draw the whole world's attention towards Palestine, which is bleeding," said the joint statement read in English by Pakistani lawyer Abdul Basir Qureshi.

The trial began last summer at Adiyala Central Prison, 30 miles southwest of the Pakistani capital, Islamabad.

Four of the hijackers allegedly seized control of the Pan Am jumbo jet at Karachi Airport. The fifth is charged with masterminding the crime.

Brazilian police storm prison

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — A band of seven renegade prison inmates was reduced to four today after police stormed a maximun-security prison in an attempt to free 27 hostages held by the group, authorities said.

Police said two inmates were killed and one was wounded during the battle late Monday at the Jacui prison, in Porto Allegre about 1,000 miles south of Rio de Janeiro.

One policeman and four hostages also were injured in the shootout, said Paulo Solano, spokesman for the Rio Grande Do Sul State Security Department.

Two hostages, a man and a woman, managed to escape in the confusion, police said, cutting to 25 the number held.

Police said the shootout casualties, including the three inmates, had been taken from the run-down 1960s prison. All of them had been hit by bullets.

Haitian coalition joins boycott of junta elections

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — A coalition representing professional, student and labor organizations has joined opposition politicians in calling for a boycott of the national election the junta will hold Jan. 17.

"We declare null any election carried out under the auspices of the present junta," the Civil Socety coalition said in a statement released Monday. It claims it represents nearly 50 civic and religious organizations.

The military run junta, which is led by Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy, issued no response to the coalition's declaration.

Haiti's first presidential and legislative election in 30 years was canceled hours after it began Nov. 29 when thugs rampaged through Port-au-Prince, shooting or hacking to death at least 34 people.

Opposition leaders charged the thugs included supporters of the former Duvalier regime and members of the military.

The independent Electoral Council, which canceled the election because of the violence, was dismissed by the junta, a provisional government established when dictator Jean-Claude Duvalier fled to exile in France in February 1986.

The junta then appointed a new Electoral Council, revised the election law and set the Jan. 17 date for a new election. The new law allows the military to closely supervise balloting and could permit some supporters of the former Duvalier regime to run for office. They were barred from the Nov. 29 election.

On Monday, the president of the former Electoral Council, Ernst Mirville, was barred from leaving Haiti, according to a television broadcast.

TeleHaiti, a private television station, said immigration officials at the Port-au-Prince airport confiscated Mirville's passport. It did not elaborate and calls to Mirville's were not answered.

The Civil Society coalition includes the Haitian Medical Association, all three of Haiti's trade unions, its six major human rights groups, peasant and student organizations and Roman Catholic and Protestant lay associations.

The coalition also includes the Group of Democratic Agreement, an alliance of the four main political parties whose presidential candidates were the main contenders in the November election.

Those candidates — Louis Dejoie II, Marc Bazin, Gerard Gourgue and Sylvio Claude — vowed to boycott this month's election and demanded the junta resign.

There were 22 presidential candidates entered for the November balloting, 76 candidates for the 27-seat Senate and 252 for the 77-seat Chamber of Deputies. Sixty-four former legislative candidates have announced they will not take part in the junta-run elections.

Candidates had to register by midnight Monday, but an official report from the Ministry of Information was not expected until later this week.

As of late last week, about 10 people had registered for the presidential race, including ex-Finance Minister Clovis Desinor, former army Chief-of-Staff Claude Raymond and four others linked to the Duvalier family dictatorship.

Thirty-four people applied to run for president in Nov. 29, but the former Electoral Council, citing the constitution approved March 29, disqualified 12, including Desinor and Raymond, because of ties to the Duvalier regimes.

In other developments Monday:

— Caribbean leaders announced plans to meet Wednesday in Barbados to formulate a united policy toward Haiti, but it was uncertain who would attend.

— U.S. Defense Department sources said in Washington the Navy's 2nd Fleet will conduct exercises in the Caribbean starting around Jan. 11 and they will last for at least two weeks.
