New figures could support U.S. recovery

By The Associated Press

The government's report of a 0.6 percent jump in Americans' personal income in March could help support the economic recovery believed to be under way, economists say.

New government figures on the nation's Gross National Product for the first quarter of the year were due to be released today. The Commerce Department last month estimated the GNP was growing at a rate of about 4 percent, its steepest climb since the first quarter of 1981.

The increase in personal income was the biggest for any month since last fall and compared with a 0.1 percent gain in February, Commerce officials said Tuesday.

The department also said personal consumption spending rose 0.4 percent in March after declining slightly in February.

Economists said they expected further gains in consumer spending.

Robert Ortner, chief economist at the Commerce Department, said he was particularly encouraged by the gain in income because $9 billion of the total $14.6 billion increase was due to bigger paychecks. Overall income gains during the recession often have included big increases in unemployment benefit payments.

Ortner said surveys have shown people gaining confidence and saying they will increase spending. "With personal income rising, they've got the wherewithal to back up those promises," Ortner said.

The March income increase, the largest since the 0.7 percent gain of last November, appeared to be more than enough to keep income rising faster than prices. The government's Consumer Price Index for March is due to be released Friday.

On Wall Street, meanwhile, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks skidded 8.70 points Tuesday, to 1,174.54 as investors took profits after the recent market boom. The Dow had risen in each of the previous eight trading sessions as investors appeared more confident that the economy would not sink back into recession.

In other economics developments:

—William Isaac, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., unveiled a plan to make sweeping changes in the federal system that insures savers' money in banks. Large depositors would no longer, as a practical matter, get full protection for their savings above the current $100,000 limit; and risky banks would pay more for their insurance coverage.

—Humberto Calderon Berti, the oil minister of Venezuela, said in London that the OPEC oil cartel should keep its prices at $29 or $30 a barrel for at least two years. Last month the 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreed to reduce their base price by $5 a barrel, to $29, in order to prevent a price war.

—In Houston, Shell Chemical Co. said it plans to abolish 700 work positions and terminate 575 workers employed by Shell contractors to reduce costs. The decision resulted from a "thorough and orderly examination of our chemical business and the changing environment in which we compete," the company said.

MC ready to bridge gap

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

A gap separating Midland College from Wadley Avenue finally will be bridged, according to MC President Dr. Jess H. Parrish.

Widening a bridge over the Northwest Drainage Channel will keep more than one thing flowing smoothly — it also will span a break in communications between the college and the city.

The decision to improve the present bridge on I Street was made with the City Council in late March, Parrish told college trustees during a board meeting Tuesday afternoon.

"We discussed everything from an extension of Haynes Avenue on through trying to do something with the present exit," he said. "We do agree we have a problem concerning our entrances and exits."

Installed about five years ago, the bridge provides a second exit from the campus — one badly needed when special events are scheduled at the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center.

At the time of construction, MC administrators were strongly opposed to the exit or, as it was then called, entrance. According to Dr. Al G. Langford, former MC president, administrators feared another entrance would invite unnecessary traffic from outside motorists hoping to avoid the intersection of Wadley Avenue and Garfield Street.

A gate to Midland College will swing open when a bridge is widened and a traffic light installed at the intersection of North I Street and Wadley Avenue.

City officials, however, stopped outside traffic by installing a gate at the west entrance/exit — which they kept locked most of the time.

With enrollment hitting record highs, MC administrators decided they wanted the gate open.

The city, however, wanted it closed.

"(The gate) was put in as a temporary access only," Fred Baker, director of public works, said.

With the growth of northwest Midland came a growth in the amount of drainage flowing through the channel, he pointed out. The present bridge is inadequate and "hinders the holding capacity of the bridge."

"The college did not need (a second entrance) in the early stages to be open 24 hours a day," Langford said. "But now, as enrollment has grown, it certainly doesn't need to be closed 24 hours a day."

During the joint meeting, Parrish said the council voted to order a traffic light to replace the gate. The light, which will be installed at I Street and Wadley Avenue in September, will blink yellow during the day. It can be controlled to ease heavy traffic leaving the campus after evening events on campus and during the noon rush hour.

The city also is drawing plans for an expanded bridge. The college will share in the costs, Parrish said.

No prices were given at the board meeting, but Baker said the cost would be around $300,000 during the City Council meeting March 31.

One possible alternative to using the Wadley bridge was extending Haynes Avenue on the north boundary of the campus. Parrish said he was opposed to dumping more traffic on Garfield because it already services the major entrance to the college.

Another alternative was making the circle around the campus one-way. Administrators adamantly opposed the concept, citing the inconvenience of traveling two miles to reach a building a few hundred feet away.

Still another proposal was to provide a low water crossing, controlled by flood gates, at the drainage channel.

Widening the present bridge would be less expensive, Parrish said.

Police force handles shortage other cities would appreciate

SEAL BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Police in this peaceful coastal community get little experience with murder cases, so their chief is shipping them off to a place with no crime shortage: nearby Los Angeles.

Seal Beach Police Chief Stacy Picascia isn't complaining about his city's low murder rate — only two slayings last year — but wants his officers to increase their experience with violent crime.

So Detective Bob Davis and Lt. David Maiten of the 40-member Seal Beach police force are working for two weeks with homicide detectives in Los Angeles's 77th Street Division, about 20 miles to the north of Seal Beach.

"We just don't have the incidence of murders," said Picascia. "It's just to get the experience built up in them for (investigating) any homicide or attempted homicide.... A murder is a murder. If they can investigate that, they can investigate anything of a lesser degree."

During their stint at 77th Street — which leads Los Angeles police divisions in numbers of murders — the Seal Beach officers are observing all facets of homicide investigations.

Picascia said the two officers "enjoy the training they're getting — and it makes them appreciate it back here."

Man held in shotgun slaying

A Midland woman is dead and a suspect is in custody after a shotgun slaying on the southside late Tuesday night — the second such homicide this week.

Pronounced dead at the scene was 31-year-old Shirly Dianne Bolton Long of 1304 S. Atlanta. Police said she died of a shotgun blast to the neck shortly before 11 p.m.

A 29-year-old man described by police as the woman's common-law husband was arrested at the scene. He remained in the city jail this morning and formal murder charges were expected to be filed sometime today.

Services are pending at Thomas Funeral Home. No other details were available.

Although unrelated, her death marks the second time this week that a Midland resident has been killed by a shotgun.

Foy Johnson, 60, was killed by two 12-gauge to the chest in front of his home at 509 S. Weatherford St. about noon Sunday.

The suspect in that case, 60-year-old Henry Dirl Rice of 1901 E. Front St., remains in county jail under $50,000 bond.

Police said Johnson's death ended a continuing feud between the men over a fight they had three years ago. Details of the fight were not available.

City chooses new finance director

Former Ortloff employee to begin work Monday

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

A new finance director for the city of Midland was hired Tuesday afternoon when the City Council approved the city manager's choice of Troy A. Gifford.

He will replace Grant Walton, 40, who submitted his resignation March 2. The action came after the council discovered in February the city was $1 million short in sales tax rebates and had not been informed of the shortfall. Because of that, the city has cut its budget for the rest of the year by $1.8 million.

Gifford, 40, formerly with the Ortloff Corporation and a Midland resident since 1978, will start his job Monday. He received a master's degree in business administration from Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene.

When Walton resigned, City Manager James Brown noted the finance director had offered to stay on in another position. According to Mayor G. Thane Akins, that decision will be made between the new director and Walton.

Akins said Brown had selected Gifford out of the applicants and presented his choice to the council during an executive session Tuesday. "We reviewed and it looked good," said the mayor, noting Brown had authority to make the final decision.

Gifford will be making the same salary as Walton was, which is $49,000 a year, according to the city manager.

"We found in our investigation," said Brown, "he had done fund accounting, which governments do." He also had been a controller at Hardin-Simmons for four years. At Ortloff, Gifford first was a financial systems analyst and then moved up to controller.

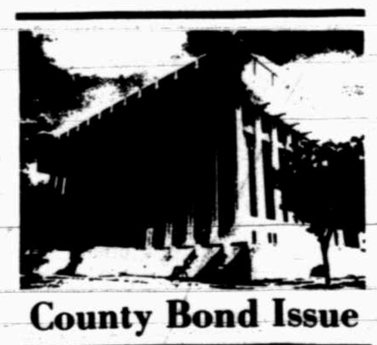

In talking with references, Brown said he was told one of Gifford's strong points is that "he has a good ability to give reports, he can reduce things to a readable form. He came so highly recommended from a number of people. Hardin-Simmons said he was superior to anyone they'd had."

One of Gifford's first duties will be to address the issue of getting monthly reports on the financial status and on the sales tax rebates to Brown and the council.

Courthouse issue has pros, cons

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last in a four-part series examining the history of Midland County Courthouse and issues surrounding the bond issue to expand it. This part looks at the pros and cons.

County Bond Issue

Any debate on the need for an expanded Midland County Courthouse and Jail might focus more on the time to build, how, where and how much rather than on "if" the expansion is needed.

Any opposition, if at all, to Saturday's $11.69 million bond election to finance the doubling of courthouse-jail space is low-key. Likewise, active campaigning for the proposition seems so conservative and reserved that it could be termed "laid back."

Commissioners who called the election apparently have not sought endorsements to support the expansion. They are allowing voters to decide — without the commissioners' pressing influence.

The issue comes at a time when Midland is struggling to recover from the aftermath of prosperous times, dropping interest rates and a slowdown in inflation. The timing, too, comes when the countywide population escalated to 100,000 and county services lagged.

Two other county courthouse bond issues — 41 years apart — passed when the city and county were experiencing hard economic times. In 1929, at onset of the Great Depression, Midland voters approved a $150,000 bond issue to finance a courthouse. Four decades later, in 1970, when Midland was in an economic slump similar to the present one, voters approved a $1.95 million bond program to renovate and expand the courthouse.

"The need (for an expanded courthouse and jail) was created by the growth that we've had," said Commissioner C. Wallace "Wally" Craig, a real estate broker. "Though the economy is not too great now, I am expecting it to grow. In the long-term, Midland is going to be a viable and going thing."

Primarily, the courthouse needs expanding to accommodate its ever-growing judiciary and criminal-civil dockets.

Midland County is "pressed and compelled" to upgrade its jail, which 13 years ago was likened to a "medieval dungeon" by citizens who toured the jail.

"The jail is the focal point of the whole expansion," said Craig. "There are more productive things to spend money on than the jail, but really we don't have much choice" due to pressures by the federal courts and Texas Commission on Jail Standards to make jails more "decent" for prisoners.

"I'd rather spend money on the roads, the library, museum" and other productive endeavors. However, the law requires jails and the jailing of those accused and convicted of crimes.

Courthouse issue has pros, cons

Davis Brown Craig Wright Ahders Henderson

"Treat them (prisoners) humanely," Craig said. "However, don't make it nicer to stay in jail than to stay out."

Declaring his opposition to the bond issue was Midland lawyer Vernon Reichle: "If we can't do it without raising taxes, I'm not for it."

"I think it's something that's needed," said another Midlander, "but they're calling it at the wrong time."

A 28-year-old Midland professional woman, homeowner and mother said she would be voting for the issue, "because I don't think there's much question that there's a problem with the jail." Though she noted that "money is tighter than it was a while ago, I think I'll probably vote for it."

Midland businessman Roscoe V. Jackson said he likely would vote against the issue and the increase of county property taxes by 25 percent to pay off the indebtedness if the issue is passed.

"Oh, Lawd Almighty," he said. "I'm going to move somewhere else. I don't see it. I think I'll vote against it."

Current tax rate is 18.03 cents per $100 valuation. The bond issue would raise it to 22.43 cents.

Casting a favorable view on the bond issue was Commissioner Win Brown.

"Taxes are a necessary evil," he said. "I don't like taxes (just) as much as the next person, but if we're going to progress and get ahead, we are going to have to live with the only funding source we have — taxes." Brown suggested that county government is the "best entity" for the efficient handling of tax dollars.

Lou Brown, who like her husband is active in state Republican Party circles, said she favors the bond proposal but fears it will falter.

"I really feel it's needed, but I feel it's going to be very difficult to pass. I think the present economy precludes the fact that more and more people are going to vote themselves more indebtedness at this time."

Commissioner Durward Wright, who voted with his fellow commissioners in calling the bond election, is not a flag-bearer for the bond issue. He's opposed to its passage.

"Midland County has a pressing need for expanded jail facilities, office space and courtroom space," he said. "I do not favor the bond program as proposed," he said and outlined his reasons for opposing the program:

—"I disagree with the concept.

—"I feel that needs can be achieved for about one-third the cost if a different concept is utilized." He did not elaborate but said he would air the "different concept" should the bond issue be defeated.

—"Our economy is in a current downturn, and county officials should be more aware of satisfying current needs with some growth factors built in rather than attempting to plan for several decades of growth at the rate we have experienced for the past three years."

Nonetheless, said Wright, a financial counselor, if the voters approve the bond issue, "I will adhere to their wishes and cooperate to the fullest to see that their wishes are brought to completion."

Wright noted that in his "dissenting from the majority opinion on this issue, I feel that I am following the dictates of my best judgment and the majority opinion of the people I represent in Precinct 1" in west Midland and southwest Midland County.

COUNTY ATTORNEY J. Scott Henderson noted that the county is in need of an expanded and upgraded jail.

"I think it (the timing) is off, but the law and the growth and need for government don't wait for better times — can't wait for better times."

County Judge Bill Ahders seemed exuberant and positive over the bond issue. "There are no cons — all pros," the judge said. "Everybody I associate with is all for it. They realize the great need for Midland County to house prisoners — to keep people who need to go to jail in jail." In addition, he cited the need for a full-size courtroom for 318th State District Court Judge Barbara Culver and a courtroom for County Court-at-Law Judge Willie DuBose. At present, Ahders and DuBose share the same courtroom.

The courthouse expansion calls for six county and district courtrooms to allow for future growth in the judiciary; in addition, the Commissioners' Courtroom will double as the county judge's courtroom. Currently, Midland is served by three state district courts and two county courts but only has three full-size courtrooms — not including the peace judges' courtroom.

SHERIFF Dallas Smith is virtually out of cell space. "Last year, we were up to 125 or so (prisoners)," he said. However, the inmate count "is cyclic; it's never in a straight line."

In recent months, the weekday jail population has been in the 80s but increases to 90 or 95 on weekends.

Smith observed that federal courts and the Texas Commission on Jail Standards mandate that prisoners be afforded "decent," safe, clean and secure quarters and that they are well fed, exercised, counseled, possibly entertained by reading material and television programming and given medical attention.

"A lot of these prisoners aren't always penitentiary-type prisoners," said the sheriff, "nor are they people who don't have others who care for them — mother, father, brother, sister, spouse...You know, we have a number of people who are arrested for drunken driving. It's a misdemeanor offense; it's serious. But it's a person who has a family...What about a juvenile who runs away from home?"

Convicted prisoners are punished by serving time in jail. But many others are incarcerated — if there's room — while awaiting trial; they're simply accused.

"The system says you've got to be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt," Smith noted. "The county jail is the place to keep someone (an accused person) until the court or the jury decides what to do with him...The jail is not for punishment — in most cases."

ULTIMATELY, the citizenry is responsible for ensuring adequate court and jail facilities, said Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis.

"If the people follow their mandate, they will comply and meet those modern-day needs," he said of judicial and jail standards imposed by the state and federal governments. "It's their (the people's) responsibility — not ours (the commissioners'). We just cast votes as servants of the people."

Whatever is the people's choice, the courthouse is the "apex" of the county and should be a "showplace," said Davis. "You don't want a courthouse thrown up there like a tin barn." He reflected on courthouses built in the late 1800s and early 1900s. "They were showplaces," Davis said. "They were short of big castles."

Should the public vote down the issue, "the alternatives are not pleasant to consider," speculated Davis in an apparent reference to continued cramped quarters. "And we will (somehow) comply with the needs for Midland County. We don't have much choice in the matter. We are going to comply." He didn't elaborate.

Should the bond issue fail, the commissioners could call another election on the same proposal. Were that to fail, the county's governing board possibly could bypass the electorate and issue certificates of obligation (CO) rather than the general obligation (GO) bonds and borrow money against the county's tax revenues. But even then, the citizens could petition for an election on the CO route and force the commissioners to submit the proposal to a vote by the people. For general obligation bonds to be issued, they must be approved by the voters.

Davis prefers a vote by the people.

"You don't spend millions of tax payers' dollars without the consent of the governed," he said.

Police seek two robbery suspects

Police today were looking for two suspects in the robbery of a man and woman at Midland Park Mall Tuesday afternoon.

The victims, Willard Earl Young of 1212 E. Parker and Ellarene Wiley of 1605 E. Hickory, told officers they were accosted by two black men and robbed of $1,320 in cash and jewelry on the north parking lot of the mall about 2:30 p.m.

One man was described as about 34 years old, weighing 150 pounds and having a thin moustache. He was 5 feet, 7 inches tall, dark complected and wore beige trousers and a blue denim cap.

Police Roundup

The second man was about 29 years old, 5 feet, 9 inches tall and weighed 210 pounds. He was light complected, had a thin moustache and beard and was wearing a black dress shirt and blue jeans. He had a Spanish accent and was wearing white tennis shoes with blue stripes.

Both men were possibly armed with knives and may have been driving a 1976 Chevrolet pickup with a gray camper shell. No injuries were reported.

About 400 absentee ballots cast

Midland County's $11.69 million courthouse bond issue attracted 440 absentee voters in the two weeks leading up to Saturday's bond election.

Of the 440 votes cast, 431 were in-person votes and nine were mail-out ballots, Janeice Builta, elections administrator, said today.

Builta termed the absentee voter turnout as "light," particularly in view of the April 2 Midland city-school election which drew more than 800 absentee votes, Builta said.

For the bond issue, absentee voting began April 4, included 12 voting days and ended at 5 p.m. Tuesday.

To date, 43,657 Midland County residents are registered to vote in the county's courthouse-addition, jail-expansion bond election, which will be at 29 polling places in Midland County.

Builta exhorted citizens to vote Saturday.

"People should vote," she said. "Vote as you please, but please vote. "People should go and express how they feel. It doesn't make any difference whether it's an issue or people (running for election)."

Police seeking hit-and-run driver

ODESSA — Police today are looking for a hit-and-run driver who struck and killed a young boy here Tuesday.

Reid Verdoza Rodriquez, 4, of 613 S. Lee St. died at Medical Center Hospital shortly before 8 p.m. Police said the boy was hit by a pickup truck as he attempted to retrieve a balloon in the 700 block of South Grant near the intersection of May Street about 10:30 a.m.

The boy and an unidentified neighbor woman had crossed the street after a shopping trip to the nearby Bill Sears Super Market, according to police, when the balloon flew out of his hand and he turned and darted into the path of the pickup, which was southbound on Grant at the time.

The driver, a white or Hispanic man with a medium build and a heavy moustache, according to witnesses, did not stop. The pickup was described as light blue or gray in color and had a camper shell with a rear door hinged at the top.

Services are pending at the Easterling-Wilson Funeral Home. Names of the boy's parents were not available.

City Hall phone lines functioning

Although city government operations are still slightly fragmented by continuing construction on City Hall, the city office telephone numbers are back together again.

The main phone number for city offices, 683-4281, will now connect callers with offices located in the City Hall annex at Weatherford Street and Louisiana Avenue.

Offices for the city manager and the legal, utilities and public works departments had been operating under temporary phone numbers after being moved from City Hall to the annex.

Soviets patrol Texas coastline

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — Soviet submarines and warships routinely cruise the Gulf of Mexico and the Texas coastline and patrols may increase as Moscow steps up its activities in Cuba, military officials say.

Information gathered by Naval intelligence sources indicates that the last time the Soviets were spotted near the Texas shoreline was between Nov. 25, 1982, and Feb. 1, said Lt. Aaron Long, a Washington spokesman for the Navy.

"We know they came into the Gulf of Mexico and proceeded up the coast, making a semi-circle at some point in the Gulf," Long said. "They came within 50 miles offshore from the Texas-Louisiana border."

He said the vessels spotted were a Soviet guided missile cruiser, a guided missile frigate, a diesel submarine and a supply ship.

"They could be on information-gathering missions, masked as fishing fleets ... monitoring airwaves, phone calls, mapping the surface or observing shipping trends," Lt. Col. Richard Zucker told The Port Arthur News in a story published in Tuesday's editions.

Zucker, chief of long-range planning for the Air Force, said the patrols are apt to become more frequent because the United States has detected increased military activity by the U.S.S.R. in and around Cuba.

Midland County leads skunk count

Midland County led all Texas counties in the number of rabid skunks reported during March according to a Texas Health Department report.

And the problem continues in April with the discovery Thursday of another rabid skunk — the 23rd found in the county this year — on County Road 140 between Midkiff and Cottonflat Roads.

Rice Freeman Zachery, Midland Animal Control spokeswoman, said the skunk was shot while chasing two dogs in a county resident's back yard. She said the animal was sent to Austin for testing and the results came back positive late Monday.

She said the skunk was the 12th found in the county since Jan. 1. Eleven skunks have been discovered inside city limits during 1983.

By contrast, Midland recorded only eight rabid skunks in all of 1982, two in 1981 and none in 1980, according to Animal Control records.

Ms. Freeman Zachery said Midland County's 13 skunks were easily the most found in any Texas county during March. She said other counties reported five skunks or fewer during the month.

If anyone discovers a skunk exhibiting abnormal activity — chasing pets or wandering during daylight hours — Ms. Freeman Zachery suggests that one adult be assigned to watch the skunk from a safe distance while another telephones Animal Control.

Prisoner's death of heart failure

BIG SPRING — A Big Spring man found dead in his Big Spring City Jail cell Tuesday was a victim of heart failure, according to the preliminary autopsy report by a Malone-Hogan Hospital pathologist.

The body of Raul Gonzales, 49, was discovered by Sgt. Troy Hogue at 5:15 a.m. while on rounds. Gonzales had been jailed on a public intoxication misdemeanor charge.

Hogue reported that he had checked the cell block three times during the night, but thought Gonzales was only sleeping.

Ector County school trustees conclude tuition debate

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Ector County Independent School District trustees closed a chapter Tuesday night on charging tuition for transfer students which could have read as high as $2,500 per student per year.

For the second year in a row, out-of-district students who attend public schools in Odessa will not be charged a tuition.

The ending of the story about the MISD students who attend ECISD schools shouldn't be affected by the tuition decision, according to Parker Humes, MISD board president.

About 70 students living in the Ridgewood Subdivision, located within Midland County and MISD are attending the closer Odessa schools. Residents in the 4,000-acre area, which also includes Mision Estates, developed by HBF Corp. of Midland, are seeking annexation into the Odessa school district.

Last year, ECISD voted to charge a tuition of $1,260 per student transferring into the district. Trustees said the tuition was necessary because of an expansion in the district's enrollment.

Residents of the affected area appeared before both school boards requesting tuition be waived. The possibility of a tuition-exchange between the two school districts also was discussed.

According to Dr. Joseph P. Baressi, MISD superintendent, a tuition-exchange could work if about the same number of Odessa students were transferring into Midland schools. Last year only 10 students from Odessa transfered to Midland. This year there were none.

ECISD trustees gave the residents a year to find a possible solution before charging tuition. In February, the residents presented a petition to Ector school trustees requesting annexation into the district.

Under the Texas Education Code, the residents said they could annex into ECISD without approval of the MISD trustees.

ECISD trustees approved the annexation and Ector County Commissioners are expected to follow suit. However, according to Commissioner of Education Raymond Bynum, approval also must be granted by the Midland County Commissioners.

"Any time there is land involved where the end result goes over the county line it must be passed by both (county commissioners)," Bynum told the Reporter-Telegram from Austin last week.

MISD administrators said they will appeal all decisions in favor of the annexation, noting ECISD boundaries were set by the State Legislature in 1921 and cannot be changed by local jurisdiction.

Bynum refused to comment further on the case because "that will all be part of the legal argument."

If Ector County Commissioners approve the annexation, Midland school officials will appeal to Bynum. If a party wishes to appeal his decision, it must be before the State Board of Education, Bynum said. If the appeal process goes further, a district court in Travis County will hear the appeal.

The decision made by Odessa school trustees to waive tuition will be reconsidered annually, said Susan Rutherford, ECISD communications specialist.

Humes said he felt the decision will not hurt Midland's case if appeals are necessary.

"I feel sure they'll judge the appeal on the merits of the entire annexation case," Humes said.

Penguins find Antarctica in U.S.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Truckloads of penguins, resembling tuxedo-clad waiters on holiday, trooped in noisy confusion down ramps and hallways into a frozen wonderland — a bit of Antarctica in Southern California.

Like true tourists, the penguins of Sea World craned their necks for a better view of the mini-South Pole, scrambled cautiously up an imitation mountain, jumped over genuine whale bones and sampled the crushed ice that masquerades as snow.

Many gave in to temptation and flopped on their oversized bellies to skid across the ice as they moved into their elaborate new home Monday night.

The marine zoo's $7 million "Penguin Encounter," which opens for the paying public May 28, was conceived as "a window on Antarctica — the most pristine, spectacular place on this planet," said Frank S. Todd, Sea World's curator of birds.

With a wall of mirrors that gives the illusion of endless expanse and almost countless penguins, the exhibit is "the only place anywhere in the world where you can see penguins doing what penguins do," without going almost to the South Pole, Todd said.

Todd said more than 300 penguins, the largest collection anywhere and the world's only self-sustaining captive colony, will settle in the exhibit, offering a tiny version of the Antarctic rookeries that can hold 80,000 birds packed shoulder to shoulder.

The birds were rounded up Monday from the nondescript refrigerated room where many have lived since 1976. They arrived, with shivering handlers, in the back of a freezer truck. In groups of about 40, they were hustled down a carpeted ramp, through a freezer that will soon be full of penguin food — mostly fish — along a hallway lined with photographers and television cameras and up yet another ramp to the 5,000-square-foot exhibit.

The 3-foot-tall Emperor penguins strutted regally like members of a formal wedding party. Their stately bearing was tarnished a bit by a habit of sledding over the ice, propelled by their toes and guided by their wings.

The little 15-inch Adelies were much less sedate. Cackling and squawking, they were herded up the last ramp. A few decided against the trip and snapped at their wranglers' gloved hands.

One ruffled bird, the stereotype of an absent-minded professor with an unruly mop of yellow feathers on top of his head, was so overwhelmed that it required step-by-step guidance with firm hands on back and stomach.

An ersatz iceberg reaching over the 148,000-gallon swimming pool, which stretches under the land, was a popular hangout for Adelies. Several curled up and went to sleep.

After nine expeditions to the frozen continent, Todd is an expert on penguins. The exhibit is his creation; he drew its rooms and rocks in the dirt with a stick before architects got involved.

He said he's tried to give penguins everything they could want. "About the only things we can't do is, I can't have penguins diving to 900 feet and I can't let them migrate — I just can't produce 500 miles of pack ice," he said.

But with lighting keyed to Antarctic time and crevices and barren rocks, the birds should breed and raise babies for visitors watching, invisibly, behind a 70-foot one-way glass panel, he said. The big Emperor fathers will each carry one egg on their feet for two months, until the mothers take charge of the newborns.

The colony, established originally at the request of the National Science Foundation, is used by researchers from many institutions, Todd said.

Lawmakers protect 'monster'

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — State lawmakers are getting into the swim of things by giving official protection to a Loch Ness monster lookalike named "Champ," said to inhabit the depths of Lake Champlain.

The Lake Champlain Phenomena Investigation claims to have collected reports of about 170 sightings of what could be Champ over the past 200 years. Nine sightings were reported last year, the group said.

Ford: 'Inflexibility' could hurt defense

DALLAS (AP) — President Reagan's "inflexibility" in paring his proposed budget and extending his deadline for building up the military could jeopardize the nation's defenses, former President Gerald Ford says.

Delivering the keynote address Tuesday at the annual meeting of Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc., Ford said Reagan should extend his defense budget projections from five years to six years in order to "extend the cash flow."

Ford's audience of 600 business leaders and political leaders included former Texas Gov. Bill Clements and Lady Bird Johnson.

"I don't know what is so sacrosanct about building the defense program in 60 months," Ford said. "I think you can get the same hardware, the same program and every year incrementally improve your military capability — but do it in six years rather than five years."

Ford said that because of Reagan's and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's "inflexibility, the Congress is going to reduce the budget, and they're going to reduce it in the wrong places."

Ford said he generally supported Reagan's economic policies, but added that, "I happen to believe that there has to be some reduction in what the president proposes to the defense budget."

Ford said "we have to have the B-1 bomber...the MX missile system, and I strongly support a 600-ship Navy," but added that he believed Reagan should extend the deadline for the defense budget.

"My difference of opinion with the president comes on how quickly you have to spend $1.6 trillion. President Reagan and Secretary Weinberger want to do it in five years," Ford said.

In Washington, Reagan administration spokesman Larry Speakes said the president intends to fight for greater defense spending than the five percent boost approved by the Senate Budget Committee. The president originally wanted 10 percent.

Top Senate Republicans scheduled a White House meeting with Reagan administration officials to explore a possible compromise, although it was not clear whether Reagan would attend.

The Budget Committee already has voted, 17-4, to slash Reagan's 10 percent defense buildup by half.

DA: Doctor will testify man was sane at time of murders

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Cameron County District Attorney Rey Cantu says a court-appointed psychiatrist will dispute earlier testimony by witnesses and testify today that a young farmer was sane when he killed a schoolteacher and her fiance, who tape recorded his own death.

Psychiatrist Joel Kutnick of Corpus Christi examined defendant Paul Wolf, 21, of La Feria, on State District Judge Darrell Hester's orders last month, Cantu said.

Wolf is charged with murdering Leticia Castro, 26, a fourth grade teacher from Pharr. He faces trial later for the slaying of his wife's former husband and Miss Castro's fiance, Billy Staton.

Wolf has pleaded innocent by reason of insanity to the killings.

Psychologist Curtis Wills of Beaumont testified Tuesday that Wolf was insane when he clubbed Miss Castro with a hammer and bludgeoned Staton with an iron bar July 16, 1982.

Cantu challenged Wills' diagnosis and read from a publication titled the American Psychiatric Association Statement on the Insanity Defense.

"The line between an irresistable impulse and an impulse not resisted is probably no sharper than that between twilight and dusk," the statement said.

Wills agreed and said it's "a very thin line."

Wolf's attorneys rested their case after Wills testified.

Two other mental health professionals testified last week that Wolf was unable to handle the stress caused by the screams of his wife's child over having to visit her natural father.

Staton was divorced from Wolf's wife, Sherry, and is father of their daughter, Melanie, who was 2½ when the killings occurred.

Melanie was taken to a psychologist after she began displaying fear over visiting her father.

Her psychologist, Bert Levine of McAllen, testified Melanie suffered from "severe panic reactions" when she was with Staton or his parents. He said he advised the Wolfs to keep the child away from her father.

The mothers of the two victims testified Tuesday, however, that Melanie was happy when she was with her father.

Staton's mother, Neta Staton, said Melanie would be crying when she went to the Wolf house to pick her up, but would "be laughing and happy as she could be" as soon as she and Melanie drove away.

Miss Catro's mother, Maria Castro, said Melanie "was very happy" when she was with Staton and Miss Castro.

Cantu alleges that Wolf and his wife ambushed Staton and Miss Castro using Melanie as "bait" the last time Staton came to visit his child at the Wolf house that mid-July evening.

Mrs. Wolf will be tried later for the two slayings.

Staton had concealed a mini-cassette recorder under his shirt hoping to gather evidence showing the Wolf's displayed animosity toward him over his visitation rights.

Instead, he recorded his own slaying on a tape Cantu calls "23 minutes of murder."

Wolf, who testified in his own behalf, says the so-called "murder tape" actually depicts an unplanned attack.

He said he and friend Glenn Henderson planned to videoptape the visit between Melanie and Staton to demonstrate how the child reacted.

Instead, he said, he got so "enraged" when Melanie began to cry that night that he bludgeoned Staton in the head with an iron bar. He then went outside where Miss Castro was waiting and he and Henderson each clubbed her with a hammer.

Construction worker dies in cave-in

AP Laserphoto

Construction worker Eddie Moore is carried by Houston paramedics after being trapped by caving mud for more than an hour. A fellow worker died in the mishap.

HOUSTON (AP) — One of two construction workers buried when the walls of a trench collapsed found an air pocket and survived as a crew dug for 2½ hours to rescue him, a paramedic says, but his coworker died.

Eddie Moore, 45, was in serious but stable condition Tuesday night, a Hermann Hospital spokeswoman said. Officials said he had a broken leg.

Demetrio Lozano Garcia, 34, of Richmond, died Tuesday in the rubble of the 30-foot-deep excavation, officials said.

"We didn't think either one of them would be alive," said Houston Fire Department paramedic T.P. Litzinger, one of the workers who freed Moore. "He's lucky to be alive."

Litzinger credited five members of the construction crew with saving Moore.

"They just kept digging and digging and digging until they found him," he said.

Officials said Moore was located under about four feet of dirt about half an hour after the 4:10 p.m. accident. Workers realized he was alive 15 minutes later and shoved an air line into the pocket.

Garcia was found lying beneath Moore, Litzinger said.

Armando Martinez, a foreman for the work crew, said the two men were in the center of the hole tying off a sewer line when a wall caved in. He said the men tried to run but were caught at the northeast end of the hole.

Officials said workers were installing a pump station for a sewage treatment plant. Martinez said the project was begun Monday.

Litzinger said workers had to dig carefully for fear of additional cave-ins.

Martinez said the men were planning to use long boards to shore up the walls today.

A spokeswoman for ICB Inc., the company doing the work, said the firm would have no comment on the accident Tuesday.

SMU senate refuses to recognize gay group

UNIVERSITY PARK (AP) — Alumni, trustees and students joined forces and persuaded student leaders that a homosexual student group did not belong at Southern Methodist University.

The Student Senate debated the school's denominational beliefs and philosophy for four hours Tuesday before refusing to recognize the Gay and Lesbian Student Support Organization as an official campus organization.

Students, SMU's board of trustees and several alumni lobbied the Student Senate heavily before the 17-11 vote against recognition.

The group's founder, Robert Rios, said it will explore alternative methods of seeking recognition.

"If this were not SMU, we would not have been defeated," Rios said. "SMU has not seen the last of this group. We'll be back again by doing whatever it takes to be recognized."

SMU president L. Donald Shields said he questioned the group's purpose.

"The response I have received from the trustees and board of governors has been totally negative," Shields said. "I think they felt as I did that there were some serious questions about this group in terms of resources being available to them."

Several senators who voted against recognizing the group said alumni had held private meetings with them during the past week urging them to vote against the group. Other senators said the school's board of governors would have vetoes any vote in favor of recognition.

"We're at a private university and the board of governors has the power to do whatever it wants," said sophomore senator Ted Brabham, who argued against recognition.

Man holds mother hostage

HOUSTON (AP) — Police officers stormed a mobile home and arrested a man who held his mother hostage 12 hours after telling neighbors he was the Messiah.

Kyle Wilson, 21, was charged with burglary and bond was set at $10,000 Tuesday, officials said.

Special Weapons and Tactics officers were called to the trailer park Monday after a constable's deputies answered a burglary call. Officials said Wilson is accused of breaking into a neighbor's trailer with a crowbar.

The SWAT team arrived to find Wilson had taken his mother hostage and barricaded the trailer's door and windows with wood and mattresses and armed himself with a .22-caliber, semi-automatic rifle.

Anti-nuclear protestors convicted

AMARILLO (AP) — Two anti-nuclear protestors convicted two years ago of trespassing at the Pantex nuclear weapons assembly plant near here face prison sentences for climbing its fences a second time.

A third woman also was convicted and faces sentencing.

A federal jury took just half an hour Tuesday to convict the defendants, Ladon Sheats, 49, of Berkeley, Calif., Kathleen Jennings, 24, of Pittsburgh, and Christine Eirene, 32, also of Pittsburgh, of trespassing at the plant Feb. 16.

They could be sentenced to prison for up to a year.

Sheats and Miss Jennings were members of the so-called Pantex Six, who were convicted two years ago of trespassing.

The Pantex plant is the final point for assembly of nuclear weapons.

Child abuse laws considered

AUSTIN (AP) — A Senate committee considering changes in child abuse laws watched a videotape closely as a 5-year-old girl showed, with dolls, how she was abused sexually.

The tape was designed to illustrate the use of videotapes in court and was played Tuesday for the Senate Jurisprudence Committee in presentation of a bill by Sen. Hugh Parmer.

Parmer's bill would allow TV tapes of abused children to be shown to grand juries and trial juries.

Parmer, D-Fort Worth, said that experienced social workers can talk with abused children before a TV camera and obtain a lucid description of what actually happened.

At-large voting system opposed

VICTORIA (AP) — Lawyers for the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Education Fund have filed a lawsuit challenging at-large voting systems in a Gulf Coast county and say they plan other similar actions.

MALDEF attorney Jose Garza of San Antonio said suits would be filed by Thursday against the New Braunfels school district and the city council and school board in Pecos.

Inmates release hostages without 'deal,' official says

AP Laserphoto

George Petsock, the warden of Western Penitentiary in Pittsburgh, meets with the media outside the prison wall Tuesday afternoon after two inmates surrendered and released the hostages they had been holding for six days.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Two inmates who held a pair of hostages at gunpoint for six days in a prison basement "were not promised anything" beyond initial protection when they surrendered, officials said.

"There was no deal. The inmates were not promised anything. We didn't agree to anything," said Superintendent George Petsock at the State Correctional Institution after the hostages were released unharmed Tuesday.

"The one guarantee that we gave them...(was) we would have federal authorities standing by to monitor the release," Petsock said.

The inmates, Richard Henkel, 45, a convicted bank robber, and Louis Coviello, 26, a convicted murderer, were moved to Lewisburg Federal Penitentiary and put in separate cells Tuesday night, said Assistant Warden Clifford Kinney.

"If you caused the (other state prison) inmates to be locked up for six days and two staff members to be abused mentally, then you're going to face a lot of animosity," Petsock said.

Henkel, of Pittsburgh, and Coviello, of Dunmore, planned to escape Thursday morning on the ride to a hearing for Henkel's trial on a murder charge, prison spokesmen said. The inmates were being strip-searched when they took Kostas "Gus" Mastros, 51, and Danny Kohut, 39, hostage, officials said.

Mastros, a 30-year prison employee, walked out of the basement room unexpectedly at 10:28 a.m. Tuesday and asked for a cigarette. He was given two packs and a plate of food.

Negotiators, who had traded food for information from the inmates, did not immediately realize that he had been freed, said Ken Robinson, spokesman for the state Bureau of Corrections.

Social Security bill signing set

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is ending two years of bitter partisan conflict over Social Security by signing a rescue plan that raises the retirement age while forcing workers to pay more and retirees to take less.

Reagan was signing the $165 billion legislation into law today in an elaborate ceremony on the South Lawn of the White House. Invited guests included congressional leaders of both parties, members of the reform commission which drew the blueprint for the rescue package and leaders of senior citizens groups from all 50 states.

In all, White House aides said, about 800 people had been invited.

Among provisions of the plan Congress passed last month are:

—Higher payroll taxes in 1984, 1988 and 1989.

—A six-month delay in July's cost-of-living increase in benefits.

—A first-ever levy on benefits going to more affluent retirees.

—Mandatory Social Security coverage for new federal workers and employees of non-profit organizations beginning Jan. 1.

—A GRADUAL increase in the retirement age from 65 to 67 in the next century.

The ceremony, with Reagan's political allies and opponents in attendance, marked a truce in the ongoing skirmishes the president has been engaged in with members of Congress over defense, budget and foreign policy issues.

It was only after Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., embraced the recommendations of the National Commission on Social Security Reform in January that Congress was able to draft legislation to avert the impending collapse of the system, which serves 36 million beneficiaries.

Prior to that, moves to refinance the giant retirement system were stymied by partisan arguments.

However, this may not be the last the public will hear about Social Security.

Already, some Democrats are talking about moves to make a return to a retirement age of 65 a plank in the party's 1984 presidential platform.

Meanwhile, some conservative Republicans say the rescue package relies too heavily on higher taxes and there is more trouble ahead that will require more changes.

PENSION EXPERTS HAVE said Social Security's margin of safety will be thin in the mid-1980s, but it should pile up large surpluses starting in 1990. The reforms do not address the separate crisis confronting Medicare by the end of this decade.

In 1977, Congress passed a rescue plan that was supposed to maintain the solvency of Social Security into the next century through higher payroll taxes. But a sagging economy and high unemployment cut into payroll tax revenues, and that, combined with growing numbers of beneficiaries, brought the system near to collapse.

Supporters of the current plan say it differs from the earlier legislation because it is more comprehensive.

The biggest impact on the program's beneficiaries — retirees, disabled workers and their relatives — will be a delay in their annual cost-of-living increase from July until next January.

That delay will cost a typical retiree who gets $408 a month about $14 a month, or roughly $80 over the six months.

Thoughtful robbers call police to rescue victim

BALDWIN PARK, Calif. (AP) — Two men tied a janitor to a chair while stealing money from a bowling alley, then kept their promise and called police to ensure their victim would be rescued, authorities said.

"It's unbelievable, but they actually called," said Lt. John Young. "A man telephoned and said, 'Yeah, I just robbed a bowling alley there and left a guy tied up.'"

Young said the incident occurred about 3 a.m. Sunday when two men broke into Park Bowl and confronted the janitor, 64-year-old Henry Magness.

"The men were wearing nylon masks over their heads and one was armed with a pool cue," Young said. "They had socks on their hands for gloves and were going to burglarize the place and apparently didn't know the janitor was there. They told him they didn't want to hurt him."

The men tied the janitor to a chair in the bar and then ransacked arcade games, vending machines and the jukebox.

One of the men told Magness "he needed his car. But then he told him not to worry because the car could later be found in San Bernardino. And he said he'd let police know he was tied up," Young said.

The men left in the car, and the victim freed himself and called police shortly before 4 a.m. "An hour later we got the call from the burglar," Young said.

Policies promote erosion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers in more than a dozen states, encouraged by the benefits of federal agriculture programs, are on the verge of plowing millions of acres of easily erodible land unless Congress moves to stop them.

"At least 5 millions acres of fragile grasslands are in danger of being plowed under and blown away unless Congress acts quickly to stop subsidizing the sodbusters," says Sen. William Armstrong, R-Colo.

Armstrong, whose own state has lost a half million acres of such grassland to cultivation in the last three years, said the problem is also serious in Montana, Wyoming, South Dakota, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Texas, California, New Mexico, Arizona, Kansas, Oregon, Washington, Georgia and Alabama.

With the backing of nearly two dozen Senate colleagues and most conservation and farm groups, he is pushing for federal sanctions against farmers adding to the 41 million acres of cropland now eroding at extreme rates. That's about 10 percent of all U.S. land devoted to crop production.

Armstrong and others fear that if federal policies are not changed, future generations will be denied the land they'll need to meet their food and fiber demands.

Peter Myers, head of the Soil Conservation Service, acknowledged that federal price support, farm credit and disaster assistance programs may sometimes encourage tillage on lands that are generally unsuited to being tilled because the soil is highly prone to wind and water erosion.

And for that reason, Myers told the Senate Agriculture conservation subcommittee on Tuesday, the administration supports Armstrong's plan to deny federal farm program benefits to producers who put fragile lands under cultivation in the future.

The plan could protect about 248.4 million acres of rangeland throughout the nation, but especially in the Great Plains and West.

Soil erosion has been a major concern of government and farmers for decades as it eats away at the productivity of America's more than 400 million acres of cropland.

According to the congressional Office of Technology Assessment, fertile topsoil is being lost to water erosion at an annual average rate of more than five tons an acre nationwide.

Child abuse program has 'outstanding' results

FORT BENNING, Ga. (AP) — A program requiring Fort Benning soldiers to report cases of child abuse and take courses in how to spot it has produced "astounding" results in three years, officials say.

The Army Family Advocacy Program, which began in April 1980, was made mandatory for soldiers by Maj. Gen. David Grange, then commander of the post, to help curtail child abuse within the military.

"The results have been astounding," said Mary Behrend, coordinator of the program. "We had 125 confirmed cases of child abuse or neglect in 1980, 115 in 1981 and 85 last year."

Rick King, the principal case worker at Benning for the Muscogee Department of Family and Children Services, said the program also has resulted in a significant increase in the number of reports of child abuse.

"Because we've had more reporting, it makes you think there's more child abuse," King said. "But what it really means is that we've made the problem more visible, which has probably prevented some abuse from ever happening in the first place."

Ms. Behrend teaches soldiers and commanders what child abuse is, how to recognize it and how to report it. She also teaches commanders how to rehabilitate the abusers.

"You might not expect it from the Army, but the commanders here are genuinely concerned about family problems," Ms. Behrend said.

When a case of child abuse is confirmed at the Army post, Ms. Behrend's agency works with military police, company commanders, chaplains and Martin Army Community Hospital workers to help the child and parents. Each case is investigated and corrective actions are recommended.

The program also tries to prevent child abuse, both by making the problem more visible and by educating military police about the problem.

Salad honors harvest

BELLE GLADE, Fla. (AP) — To celebrate the winter harvest in a big way, farmers tossed a salad so large that it had to be mixed in a swimming pool and seasoned with 112 gallons of dressing.

The seven-ton salad toss took place in a 24-foot-wide by four-foot-deep aluminum pool and included 36,000 heads of lettuce — romaine, leaf lettuce, Chinese cabbage, Napa and bibb. Also included was 300 pounds of carrots, 400 pounds of red radishes, 120 pounds of white radishes, 250 pounds of celery and 180 pounds of tomatoes.

No onions.

The big salad was the star attraction at Belle Glade's fourth annual Black Gold Jubilee during the weekend.

Vegetable products from Belle Glade's rich dark soil, known as muck or black gold, is the region's bread and butter.

Whitmire wants Houston to shuck cowboy image

By DAN BALZ
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HOUSTON — After 150 years of hype and hoopla about cowboys, Houston Mayor Kathy Whitmire thinks it's time for a change.

According to a front-page article in the Houston Chronicle recently, the mayor, who never would be mistaken for someone who just rode into town, has quietly spread the word that she wants Houston to shuck the cowboy image in favor of the finer things in life.

She told the Chronicle:

"The city of Houston is a city of diversity. We have world-renowned contemporary architecture, as well as historical landmarks like the battleship Texas. We have a great ballet, as well as one of the largest rodeos, outstanding theater, opera, symphony and visual arts as well as the massive space center, the Astrodome and the (Texas) Medical Center."

"Our western heritage is an important facet of our image," she continued, "but it is only one dimension of a city that has many unique features."

George Grosz, chairman of the Greater Houston Convention and Visitors Council put things a bit more bluntly:

"I don't want to sell Houston as a cow town. Fort Worth does that, and they do a good job, and that's probably what they are. (You can be sure he will never receive the key to the city of Fort Worth.) But Houston is a cosmopolitan city, one of the few cities that has all the arts. I think we ought to capitalize on that and sell it as a world-class city."

In somewhat less earnest tones, the Texas Tourist Development Agency has the same thing in mind.

It recently launched an advertising campaign featured on the front page of the Austin American-Statesman and aimed at New York and Los Angeles.

The ads say not all Texans "like J.R...do the cotton-eyed Joe...own an oil well...drive a pickup...or remember the Alamo." Can you believe it?

These Texans apparently are alarmed that the Lone Star state cannot shake its stereotype, which is, in the words of Frank Hildebrand, that of "a John Wayne movie set...all cattle, cowboys and cactus, a big, flat state and little else."

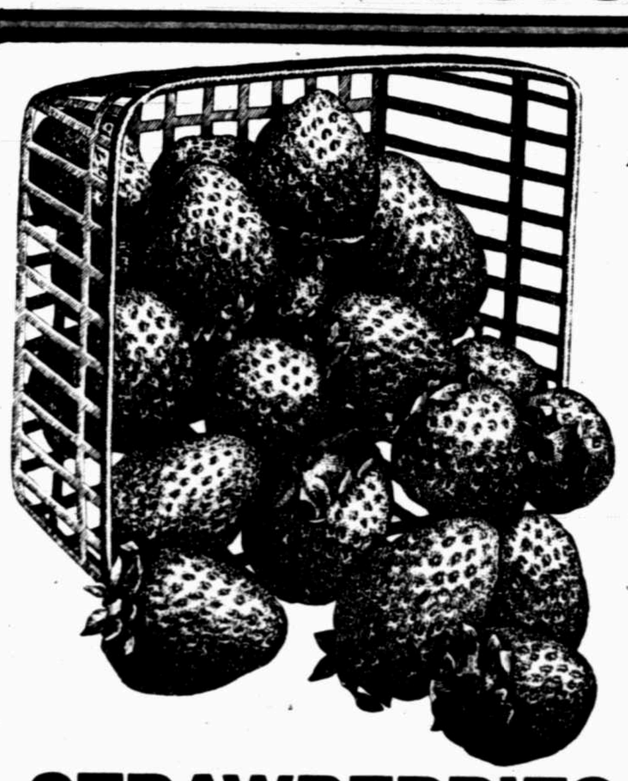

Hildebrand, executive director of the tourist agency, knows about this stereotype not by instinct but through scientific evidence. His agency has paid for attitudinal surveys of Americans that have revealed this disturbing truth.

But Whitmire and the tourist board miss the point. Every city worth its salt boasts of its symphony and repertory theater.

Trident missile's first stage malfunctions in test launching

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The failure of a Trident missile in a test launch from a submerged submarine brings to four the number of misfires from 23 underwater tests, the Air Force said.

The first stage of the test missile malfunctioned Tuesday for undisclosed reasons and the missile self-destructed 55 seconds after launch, said spokesman Dick Castellucci of the Space and Missile Test Center at Patrick Air Force Base.

The test was conducted from the submarine USS Casimir Pulaski in the Atlantic Ocean, 50 miles off Cape Canaveral. The Navy testing program for the missile started in January 1977.

Inmates lauded for behavior

LONDON, Ohio (AP) — London Correctional Institution inmates behaved "very well" while leaving a prison factory during a fire that left nine prisoners slightly hurt in the evacuation, officials said.

The fire was reported in a basement area Tuesday where soap-making ingredients are stored. Smoke spread through the upper three floors of the prison soap factory.

Firm: Flxible buses don't fly

NEW YORK (AP) — The Grumman Corp. says in a $500 million lawsuit that it was deceived about the durability of Flxible Co. buses when it bought the company, but the seller said the allegations are "totally without merit."

Rohr Industries of Chula Vista, Calif., named in Grumman's lawsuit filed here Tuesday, said Flxible's Model 870 bus had been thoroughly tested before the 1978 sale. Rohr added that problems with cracks in bus frames had been disclosed to Grumman, of Bethpage, N.Y., in 1977.

The buses, sold to New York, Los Angeles, Houston and other cities, had to be redesigned and fixed after an eight-month investigation.

Babysitter starts fire in prison

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Christine Falling, a babysitter serving a 25-year sentence for killing three youngsters in her care, has become a disciplinary problem and recently set fire to a mattress, prison officials said.

Miss Falling, 19, has been put in solitary confinement for 90 days because of the fire at Broward Correctional Institution two weeks ago, said Florida Corrections Department spokesman Vernon Bradford.

Onion growers crying over peeling profits

VIDALIA, Ga. (AP) — Few tears are shed by the onion growers of Vidalia — except when counterfeiters try peeling away some of the profits from their eminently edible bulb.

Vidalia onions, recognized for their sweetness and mild taste, are sold at premium prices as fast as they can be harvested in May and June. Some go to mail-order buyers as far away as Japan and Britain.

But with increased demand has come some unscrupulous competition from distributors who can make huge profits by selling ordinary onions labeled as Vidalia sweets.

The annual harvest of Vidalia onions pours an average of $9 million into the economy of this south-central Georgia town of 12,500 people — "big bucks for an area this size," said Chamber of Commerce Executive Vice President Dick Walden.

To protect their economic interests, a group of 47 growers in Toombs and Montgomery counties have joined the chamber to promote their onions and discourage counterfeiters.

Grower Jack Todd and his fellow association members label each sack with a registered "Yumion" tag to make things harder for counterfeiters.

Each tag costs 15 cents, cutting into profit margins. "But's it's worth it if we can preserve our quality and our good name," Todd said.

A 50-pound bag of Vidalia onions sells for $18 to $20 compared to $6 for a 50-pound of the same hybrid grown in Texas or Florida.

"We don't have any quarrel with other growers in Georgia, Texas or Florida," Todd said recently. "There are a lot of good onions grown outside of our area. We just ask that they call them what they are and not call them Vidalia onions."

What makes the Vidalia onion so special is a mystery to Todd.

Officially, it is an F-1 Yellow Granex 33 hybrid, which was first grown in Texas and introduced to Toombs County in the late 1930s.

"Some people think it's the low sulfur content of the soil around here," Todd said of the Vidalia's sweetness. "Others think it's a combination of the soil and climate around here. Whatever it is, it produces an onion that's a little bit milder, a little bit sweeter and a little bit better than any other onion."

Liquor lobby says charges about alcohol ads all wet

WASHINGTON (AP) — Allegations that alcoholic beverage producers are targeting advertising toward problem drinkers are "irresponsible" and "grossly unfair," an industry group says.

The Distilled Spirits Council of the United States said Tuesday that there was no truth to charges made by the Center for Science in the Public Interest.

The center, a non-profit consumer group founded by Ralph Nader, asked the Federal Trade Commission to launch an industrywide investigation of the alcoholic beverage industry. But even before the request was made, FTC Chairman James C. Miller III said such a probe "would not seem appropriate."

Nevertheless, Bruce Silverglade, the center's legal director, said, "The industry's efforts to treat problem drinkers as its best customers and urge them through advertising to drink even more represent outrageous conduct that must be fully investigated and brought to a halt."

READING SKILLS

The Reading Skills Test will determine your ability to read and interpret what you have read. Test items will include passages from reading materials which have been classified as practical reading, prose literature, drama, and poetry. The different areas mentioned above will not be labeled specifically in the test.

Following are some of the skills associated with the Reading Skills Test.

MAIN IDEA

Finding the main idea is another way of actually asking you what the paragraph is about. The main idea is usually found in the first sentence of a paragraph — but not always.

INFERENCE

This is a skill that asks you to reach a logical conclusion by using your ability to reason.

SPECIFIC FACTS OR DETAILS

Concrete facts, statistics, etc. that give support for the main idea.

PRACTICAL READING

The category of practical reading includes useful reading normally required of any adult. Handbooks, recipes, contracts, indexes, library entries, advertisements, and applications are examples of practical reading.

EXERCISE 1

Be it so if you will, but, alas! it was a dream of evil omen for young Goodman Brown. A stern, a sad, a darkly meditative, a distrustful, if not a desperate man did he become from the night of the fearful dream. On the Sabbath day, when the congregation was singing a holy psalm, he could not listen, because an anthem of sin rushed loudly upon his ear and drowned all the blessed strain. When the minister spoke from the pulpit, with power and fervid eloquence, and with his hand on the open Bible, of the sacred truths of our religion, and of saint-like lives and triumphant deaths, and of future bliss or misery unutterable, then did Goodman Brown turn pale, dreading lest the roof should thunder down upon the gray blasphemer and his hearers.

And the breath and the bloom of the year in the bag of one bee:
And the wonder and wealth of the horn and the heart of the gem.
In the core of one pearl all the shade and the shine of the sea.
Breath and bloom, shade and shine, wonder, wealth, and — how far above them —
Truth, that's brighter than gem,
Trust, that's purer than pearl,
Brightest truth, purest trust in the universe — all were for me
In the kiss of one girl.

Mother: What could be keeping them?
Father: They're late, obviously.
Mother: Yes, they're late. It never fails.
Father: That's the way things are today, and there's nothing we can do about it.
Mother: Absolutely right.
Father: When we took this apartment, they were quick enough to have me sign the lease, they were quick enough to take my check for two months rent in advance.
Mother: And one month's deposit.
Father: ... and one month's deposit. They were quick enough to check my references, they were quick enough about all that. But now? But now, try to get the ice box repaired, try to get the leak in the john fixed. Just try it ... they aren't so quick about that.
Mother: Of course not ... it never fails. People think they can get away with anything these days. And, of course they can. I went to buy a dress yesterday. (Pause.)

Archbishop: Church must be people's voice

HERMOSILLO, Mexico (AP) — Like all clergymen in Mexico, Monsignor Carlos Quintero Arce is bound by the country's constitution to stay out of politics — not even speak publicly of them. Nevertheless, he speaks out.

The 63-year-old archbishop of the capital of this northern state says the church must be the voice of the people and Roman Catholics must see that the laws of their country do not conflict with the moral laws of the Gospel.

"There is separation of church and state in Mexico and that is a good thing," the monsignor said in a recent interview, "but Christians must participate in the political and social process. The Christian must commit himself to being, through his faith, a light to the world."

The Mexican constitution strips the clergy of the right to vote or participate in politics. Any statement by a bishop is interpreted here by many politicians as interference by the church in matters legally beyond its jurisdictions.

Quintero Arce considers this attitude a legacy of the violent years of revolution and the 19th century reform laws that did away with many of the rights of the church.

This is being overcome slowly, he maintains.

"The church does not seek to control the state," he said. "It does not seek power. The words and the attitude of the bishops are only to light the path of the people.

"The church is neither leftist nor rightist. It is evangelical. It opposes capitalism and it opposes collectivism because both go against the dignity of man."

Although not an arbiter of politics, Quintero Arce is a respected voice throughout the country and state politicians have been known to visit him for long chats.

Unlike other Mexican bishops, Quintero Arce does make statements on political issues.

Speaking of President Miguel de la Madrid's campaign for "moral rerewal," Quintero Arce claims that corruption at all levels continues to be a Mexican plague and contends that people are not convinced of the government's good intentions because there has been no attempt to investigate officials of previous adminstrations.

Earlier this year, the attorney general's office in Mexico City said it investigated but rejected allegations that de la Madrid's predecessor, Jose Lopez Portillo, diverted public funds "for individual or improper uses."

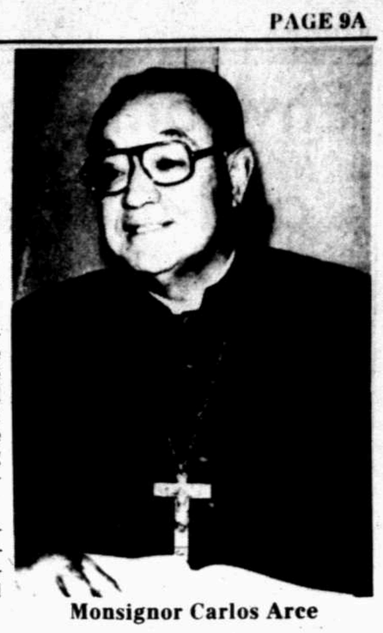

The monsignor brushed aside contentions of goverment officials that prosecution of previous government officials would amount to "vengeance" and would be an attack on the country's political system.

"But this is not a question of vengeance," he said. "As the elders of the tribe would say, things must be equal." If there is a reason to investigate, then there should be an investigation. It is a matter a justice, not of vengeance.

"We must have an attitute of honesty in the public and private sector. We cannot have again the reports of millions of dollars stolen in Pemex, (the state-owned oil monopoly), for instance, or in any of other state agencies."

He added: "The church must educate and preach honesty and the truth expressed in its social doctrine — a vision of man as a son of God and not limited only to human enviroment. The church must share the agonies of the people suffering low salaries, high taxes and unemployment."

Quintero Arce holds that Mexicans are now mature enough politically to "demand a more active participation in the political and social process."

People try to make living selling goods at flea market

NORTH LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Maybe it's a sign of the times, times that have made junk worth something again. First it was the estate auction, then the garage sale, and now it's the flea market.

Not the kind of California flea market where people show up on Saturday mornings at the drive-in movie lot with a camperful of kids and castoffs, but districts of a city, streets lined with stalls, shops and salesmen hawking vegetables, geegaws, plaster panthers and old clothes. Flea markets; the kinds of marketplaces you see in Naples, the kinds of places the Arabs call casbahs.

Take J.T. and Mary Barker. They make their living out of a two-ton van permanently parked on the west side of Pike Avenue. There, in stacked boxes and crates are potatoes, tomatoes, grapefruits, cabbage and even a gourd or two. Next door is a brick building. Once a gasoline station, it's now a flea market managed by D.H. Pigg, a white-haired gentleman who is clever at avoiding reporters.

Not so shy is Billy Terry, 37. He buys goods from liquidation ventures and sells them at flea markets and auctions. "I'll buy anything from mouse traps to bulldozers," said Terry, dressed in a gray tweed cowboy hat, jeans and a plaid shirt.

Pigg, Terry and the Barkers typify the growing number of entrepeneurs who buy, trade and sell in flea market districts spurting up across the state. In Hot Springs, for instance, at least 10 flea markets do a good business selling everything from old clothes to used furniture.

Wearing jeans, a sweat shirt and a blue toboggin, Mrs. Barker, 50, said she and her husband got into the business three years ago when the state ordered expensive improvements at their produce market. "So we decided to hit the streets," she said.

"We have a picnic here everyday," Barker said. Even the family pet, a golden retriever named King, makes the outing. "We like to be out in the open, and we like to talk with friends," like Frank Donahue who brings Barker three cigars almost daily.

Some days, the couple doesn't clear a quarter, Barker said. On others, they may make $60. He negotiates prices: "I'm a real chisler. Times are tough, and they're looking for bargains."

In the neighboring Senior Citizens Flea Market are straw hats, plaques with snarling panthers and rhinoceroses, a washstand, plaster elephants and golden and orange owls about 18 inches high. A woman looks at a bowl with popsicle sticks and beads glued around it and asks, "What's that?"

Test makers flunk street-language test

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — McGraw-Hill Inc. employees scored Cs and Ds on a street-language exam written by some high school students who were dismayed by the company's own standardized tests.

None of the eight employees who took the test could correctly define "turf," and only one knew the proper reponse to the question, "Who is buried in Grant's tomb?"

Ninth-grade basic English students at Hill High School in Winston-Salem devised "The In Your Face Test of No Certain Skills" after they had trouble relating to a standard achievement test, said teacher Rob Slater.

"They were taking one of these tests one day and one of my students looked up and asked what the reason for the test was, because all it did to him was make him feel academically inferior," Slater said.

"After the test was over, I asked them if they wanted to get even," he said. "They took it from there."

Eight of 10 copies of the test sent to McGraw-Hill Inc. in Monterey, Calif., were completed by employees ranging from clerks to executives, Slater said.

The consensus at the company was that "turf" means "the street." But Slater said the correct answer was "black shoes," which often have cleats and are used on grass.

Seven employees said Grant is buried in Grant's tomb. The correct answer is "your mama."

The test also asked the definition of "G.Q.," with the following choices: A. food food, B. cat litter, C. pig shoes, D. nice rags.

Environmentalists join anti-nuclear groups

LONDON (AP) — After years as lonely pressure groups, Britain's environmentalists are teaming up with its burgeoning anti-nuclear movement, confident they can form a "Green" political force like that in West Germany.

Buoyed by the West German Green Party's capture of 27 of the 498 seats in the Bundestag in the March elections, British environmentalists and their more prominent soulmates in the peace movement are getting set to stage Britain's first "Green" rallies April 27-29.

There's no talk of forming a British Green Party yet. But the rallies scheduled for London, Leeds and Bristol are expected to accelerate a campaign aimed at making peace and anti-pollution major issues in Britain's next general election, widely expected to be called later this year.

Scheduled speakers at the rallies will include the West German Green Party leader and legislator Petra Kelly and U.S. consumer advocate Ralph Nader.

"Until you can get our election system changed to proportional representation, a British Green Party would be banging its head on a brick wall," said Des Wilson, head of the 20,000-member Friends of the Earth, which has organized the rallies.

"What we aim to do is to unite the Green movement to ensure that Green issues are prominent in the manifestos of the major parties."

Those issues span everything from using solar energy instead of nuclear energy and taking lead out of gasoline, to banning insecticides and blood sports.

The nuclear issue promises to be bigger in the next election than in any previous one as the planned December deployment of U.S. cruise missiles in Britain draws nearer.

Both major parties are making strong pitches — the main opposition Labor Party with a unilateral nuclear disarmament pledge, and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservatives with a vigorous campaign that seeks to undermine the peace movement as naive and dangerous.

Radical pacifist: Nuisance or hero?

NAHA, Okinawa (AP) — Ryosho Taira, 75, is a radical pacifist, a fading breed on Okinawa. Some people here consider him a nuisance; others call him a hero.

In 14 years as mayor of Naha, Okinawa's capital and largest city, Taira has challenged both the U.S. and Japanese administrations. He was first elected mayor in 1968 on a socialist platform calling for the total withdrawal of U.S. forces occupying Okinawa since World War II.

In 1972 this string of small islands reverted to Japanese sovereignty after 27 years of U.S. military rule, but the bases remained as part of the U.S. defense structure in Asia.

"American egoism" is what Taira calls U.S. strategic interests in Okinawa. "Why do they have to go out of their way to cross the Pacific and base so many troops here, spending a lot of money and causing us grief — instead of thinking of ways to avoid war in the first place?"

Eleven years after the islands were returned to Japan, the mayor's crusade continues, but the battle is now against the Japanese government in Tokyo, which some activists claim is a more stubborn adversary than the Americans ever were.

Ryosho Taira

TAIRA HAS led a recent movement to challenge in court the government's right to continue expropriating real estate for the U.S. military — including about 800 acres of land belonging to the city of Naha.

His local political popularity adds legitimacy to an otherwise weakening leftist movement that seeks to drive the U.S. military off the land that it leases from the Japan Defense Agency.

Okinawa is the main island of the Ryukyu chain, now Japan's southernmost prefecture. U.S. bases occupy 20 percent of Okinawa, with more than 32,000 military personnel among a population of about 1.1 million.

Even if the Americans lacked an eager official host in the Japanese government — which relies heavily on U.S. forces for defense — observers say it is doubtful they would ever want to pull out of the strategically located "keystone of the Pacific."

Political power in Okinawa shifted from Taira's Social Masses Party to the conservatives with the election five years ago of Gov. Junji Nishime, a member of the Liberal Democratic Party that has dominated Japanese politics for most of the postwar period.

HOWEVER, TAIRA'S views are still widely supported by Okinawans who, according to the latest public opinion polls, have not flagged in their opposition to the huge U.S. military establishment.

A 1981 joint poll by the Tokyo newspaper Asahi Shimbun and the local Okinawa Times showed nearly 80 percent of those surveyed wanted the American presence removed or scaled down.

Two-thirds said they "felt insecure" about the bases, harboring fears of being hurt in military mishaps or engulfed in war. Only slightly more than one-fourth favored the U.S.-Japan Security Treaty, compared to 55 percent support for the pact in a nationwide poll.

Okinawans living near the bases complain about noise, pollution, crime and property damage. Reports of mountain forests being set afire in military exercises, aircraft making emergency landings in sugar cane fields and stray shells falling on farmhouses are not uncommon.

Okinawa's most conservative elements, including the governor, advocate reduction of U.S. forces to levels closer to those on the main islands. Okinawa, with less than 1 percent of Japan's total area, hosts 75 percent of the permanent U.S. bases.

U.S. OFFICIALS say the American contribution to the Okinawan economy, directly and through rent paid by the Japanese government, is substantial although much diminished since reversion of the islands. One official estimated that 10 percent of Okinawa's gross product — the total value of goods and services — is linked to the bases.

U.S., Soviets should seek understanding, report says

By WILLIAM GIANDONI
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The United States should seek an understanding with the Soviet Union on Central America, similar to the Kennedy-Khrushchev agreement that ended the Cuban missile crisis in 1962, a group of prominent U.S. and Latin Americans suggests.

The recommendation came in a report released last week a six-month-long "inter-American dialogue" conducted under the co-chairmanship of Sol M. Linowitz, former U.S. ambassador, and former Ecuadoran president Galo Plaza. Involved were 46 individuals, among them two former Latin presidents and more than a dozen former cabinet ministers.

The dialogue focussed on what Linowitz characterized as the major problems in U.S.-Latin American relations. They included Latin America's financial crisis, economic development, human rights, migration, the peacekeeping functions of the Organization of American States and the hostilities in Central America.

Most of the findings and recommendations were similar to those that have been made by other groups and individuals.

But, in suggesting "that the U.S.-Soviet understandings of 1962, 1970 and 1979 with respect to Cuba might provide the basis for a wider accord that could enhance the collective security" of Central America and the Caribbean, the Linowitz-Plaza group broke new ground.

Reflecting a widespread — but erroneous — impression of the 1962 agreement between John F. Kennedy and Nikita Khrushchev, the report said that "the heart of the original understanding was that each side would cease actions regarded as aggressive and threatening by the other.

"The Soviet Union removed strategic facilities from Cuba and pledged not to reintroduce them, and the United States pledged to end threats to invade or efforts to subvert the Castro government," the Linowitz-Plaza report affirmed.

According to State Department files, access to which the Copley News Service obtained, the actual wording was different.

The 1962 missile crisis was eased when Washington received an "unofficial translation" of Khrushchev's letter of Oct. 26, which had him saying that Soviet ships "will not carry any kind of armaments" to Cuba.

But the official translation of the Khrushchev message, subsequently made by the State Department, shows that the Soviet leader actually had said "that our ships bound for Cuba are not carrying any armaments." The official and unofficial versions of that letter were made public 11 years later, in Nov. 1973.

Tanzania stuck in economic doldrums

By JAMES R. PEIPERT

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP) — Six days a week Dar es Salaam's grandiose, Chinese-built railway station stands silent and deserted, a troubled monument to one of the biggest aid projects ever undertaken in Africa.

Only on Wednesday mornings, and sometimes not even then, do any travelers hurry beneath the station's soaring vaulted roof, supported by 12 massive, marble-veneered pillars, to board the dark blue passenger coaches for the journey to neighboring Zambia.

On other days, giant portraits of Presidents Julius Nyerere of Tanzania and Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia peer down on a grand staircase leading to cavernous but empty waiting rooms.

Kaunda laid the foundation stone for the station Oct. 26, 1970. During the next six years an army of 10,000 to 20,000 Chinese and some 50,000 Africans pulled off one of the most spectacular engineering feats on the continent — a 1,162-mile railway linking this Indian Ocean port with Zambia's copper belt.

The Chinese, sometimes breaking into Maoist songs, built 147 stations, 300 bridges, 21 tunnels and 2,200 culverts along the route through Tanzania's southern highlands.

The Tanzania-Zambia Railway, known by the acronym Tazara, was to free landlocked Zambia from dependence on transport through white-ruled South Africa. But the railway has fallen into disuse because of quarrels between Tanzania and Zambia — and, experts say, mismanagement, technical problems, lack of skilled staff and a shortage of rolling stock.

Passenger service has been cut back from five times weekly to once a week — leaving Dar es Salaam at 10:45 a.m. The trains, however, are frequently delayed by locomotive breakdowns.

The amount of freight carried by Tazara also has declined and, according to mining sources, about a third of Zambia's copper ore still goes by rail routes terminating in South African ports.

IN DAR ES SALAAM'S debilitating heat, some relief can be found at an ice cream emporium owned by Englishman Paul L. Mullen, Tanzania's leading Walt Disney fan.

"Welcome to our world, where every day is Disney day," says the sign outside his usually crowded Sno-Cream parlor across from St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church.

Inside, the Disney ditty "Whistle While You Work" from the 1938 animated cartoon "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" wafts from a tape deck somewhere behind a styrofoam Disney Magic Castle looming over the soda fountain and Tiki Juice Bar.

Big color figures of Donald Duck, Mickey Mouse, Bambi, Captain Hook and Snow White decorate the walls. They provide a backdrop for fountain attendants in white shirts and yellow scarves dispensing peppermint ice cream cones, made from powdered milk, banana splits and chocolate fudge sundaes.

For 21 years, as long as Tanzania has been independent from Britain, Mullen's Sno-Cream has been a refuge from the tropical sun and a little shrine to private enterprise in a socialist society.

WHEN THE "LONG RAINS" come to Dar es Salaam — from late March through May — an umbrella is useful on a tour of the national museum, where the roof leaks.

Water cascades down on glass exhibition cases containing such items as the fossilized bones of man's ancestors from Olduvai Gorge in northern Tanzania and exquisite wooden masks of the Makonde tribe on the southern border with Mozambique.

The edges of fragile, antique maps of Africa, some as early as the 17th century, have blackened with mildew.

The museum apparently has a low priority in a country with financial problems.

In Tanzania's shortage economy, there's a flourishing black market in just about everything from soap to automobile engines, tires to electrical generators. To supply the so-called "magendo" market, pilferage and grand theft have become as common as power blackouts:

Playboy wants women

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — Cable TV's Playboy Channel wants women. Not the type with staples in their navels who achieve pin-up popularity in the altogether. No sir, the rabbit-ears version of Hugh Hefner's bunny-hopping magazine wants women viewers, not just women-watchers.

Playboy magazine can succeed by attracting male readers and male-oriented advertisers. But television is a family medium skewing more heavily to female viewers, and the Playboy Channel needs this additional constituency to flourish.

"If we're going into the home, we can't only appeal to men," says Paul Klein, the former programming chief at NBC who now is president of the Playboy Channel. "If we were advertiser-supported, it wouldn't matter."

The Playboy Channel is competing with other pay services, like Home Box Office and Showtime, for the cable subscriber's discretionary dollar. There are only a limited number of extra charges a household is willing to absorb on its monthly cable TV bill.

Currently, the channel, which is in its second year, has 400,000 subscribers, paying from $7 to $10 for the service. Playboy's research says that 40 percent of its viewers are female, with half of those watching alone and half watching with their spouses or boyfriends.

"In one divorce settlement, the wife got the Playboy Channel," says Madeline David, the executive producer of "4Play," billed as the first adult situation comedy. It debuts on Playboy May 6.

In March, Playboy's viewers were asked to rate the channel on a scale of 1 to 5. Twenty-three percent of the male viewers gave Playboy the highest rating, while only 9 percent of the female viewers said they liked it a lot.

"If a family is going to pay for televised sexual entertainment and titillation, the woman wants to be part of that decision," says Klein. "Some women say there are no programs on Playboy for them. What we're trying to do is find programs for them."

According to Playboy's research, male viewers prefer women prancing around in as many states of undress as possible. Women want some stories to go with the pictures.

"We have women say they want more male nudity, but I don't think they really want it to watch," says Klein. "They want it to have equality, but when it's on they actually abhor it. Having men's portraits doesn't seem to work. Playgirl isn't that big a seller.

South, declarer at three no trump, thought he was choosing between two equal lines of play for his contract. Truth is, he simply rolled the dice — and they came up snake eyes!

We can't blame South for being so impressed with his 150 honors that he bid three no trump. Had North not been so pitifully weak, that contract could have been a laydown when there was little play for eleven tricks at a minor-suit contract.

West led his fourth-best heart, and when dummy came down declarer realized that, to make his contract, he would have to run nine tricks. If the opponents gained the lead before then; they would have at least four heart tricks to cash to defeat the hand.

Declarer saw that, if he could bring in either minor suit, he would have nine tricks. But which minor-suit finesse should he take? He had eight cards in each suit, so it seemed to be a toss-up. Mentally, he flipped a coin and took the diamond finesse. When that lost, the hand fell apart and declarer ended up down four!

But wait, you say. The club finesse would also have failed for the same result.

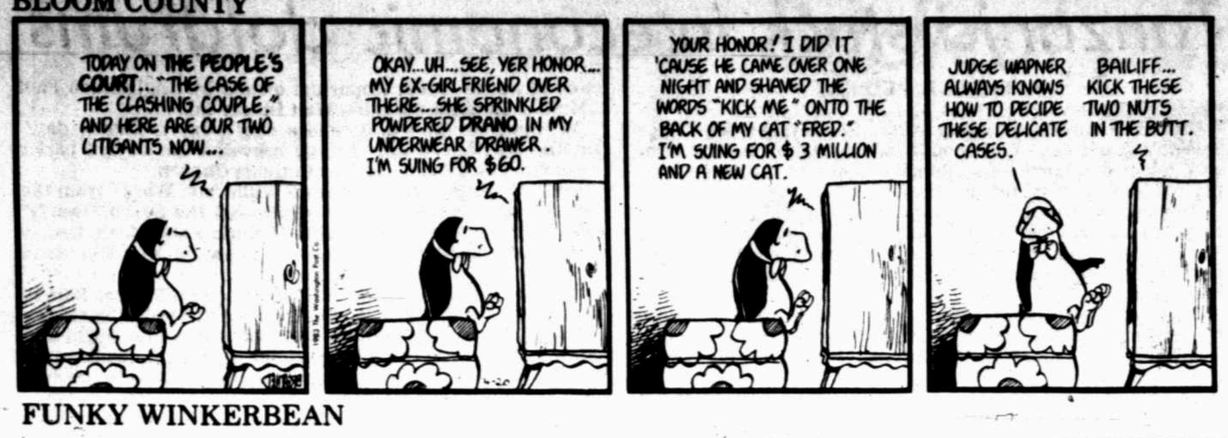

Right you are. The club finesse would have failed, but the contract would not if declarer combines his lines of play.

The two lines of play are not really equal. If East has the king of clubs, declarer can bring in the suit even if it breaks 4-1. A 4-1 diamond split, however, would mean that declarer can score only three tricks in that suit.

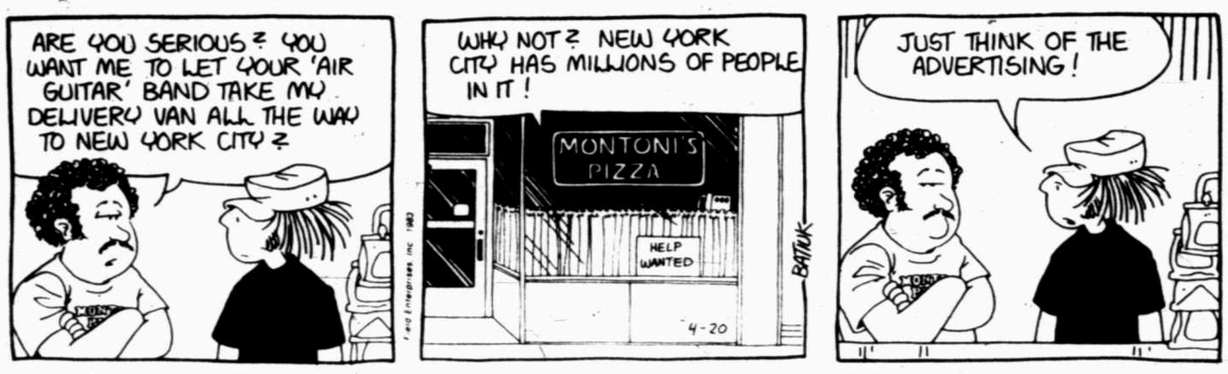

Even more important is the fact that declarer might not need a diamond finesse to run the suit! By first cashing the ace-king of diamonds, declarer gives himself the extra chance of dropping a doubleton queen of diamonds off-side. If it doesn't drop, declarer can then fall back on the club finesse. As the cards lie, the queen does fall and declarer has nine tricks without having to bank on any finesse at all!

Vote for bonds

There's more than enough justification for Midland County voters approving Saturday's $11.69 million bond proposal to finance an expansion of the county courthouse and jail facility.

— A number of years of unprecedented growth has caused overcrowding of county offices and the jail, and created the need for an expansion of county governmental services — an expansion which can't come about without the necessary additional space.

— The jail situation is approaching the critical stage since the number of inmates regularly housed there in some instances violates federal regulations. If that continues to be the case and that point is raised in civil rights lawsuits, the jail eventually might be closed down.

— If not approved now, it can be effectively argued that the expansion will have to be voted at a later date and a costlier figure.

Economically, the bond issue couldn't come at a more inopportune time. Nearly everyone agrees on that point. But, realistically, voters should look at the long-range, not the short. While the local economy appears to be starting to recover from the doldrums of recent months, overall the economic strength of the Permian Basin region will continue for decades. Oil is the base for our economy and while that base means unavoidable fluctuations, it also means importance.

In years past Midlanders haven't allowed economic slumps to discourage them from approving needed construction and expansion projects. At the onset of the Great Depression in 1929, Midland voters approved a $150,000 bond issue to help finance the present courthouse. At that time, voters undoubtedly were thinking about the Midland of today, not the pre-Depression Midland. The people of the Tall City should think about the future of Midland when deciding how to vote Saturday.

While the future is important and worth planning for, however, the bond proposal mainly addresses the Midland of today. The growth Midland experienced in recent years surpassed the abilities of local government to respond. Now Midland and Midland County are attempting to catch up with that growth. Much of the bond issue addresses additional jail space, courtroom space and space for additional workers needed to carry out the county's business. If those needs aren't addressed, the life of every taxpayer in Midland County will be adversely affected.

This is not a popular bond issue, but what bond issue is? Taxpayers resist tax increases rightfully, in most instances. But the bonded indebtedness of Midland County is only about $600,000 and the needs to be addressed with these bonds are pressing.

Voters should go to the polls Saturday and vote in favor of the bond issue. The time may not appear right, but justifiable needs do not always wait for the right moment to present themselves.

Washington's win

There will be no end of speculation and analysis concerning the meaning of the election of Harold Washington as mayor of Chicago, particularly as it pertains to race relations and to the prospects of the Democratic Party in 1984. But several things are clear even now: (1) A well-organized black vote is, more than ever, something to be reckoned with in American politics; (2) the old Daley machine, at least in name, is no more, though no one, of course, can be sure whether that's really a good thing or predict what will replace it; (3) we can all be grateful that this election is over.

To anyone with even a vague memory of what the civics-book version of American politics is supposed to be, the Chicago election was an abomination, maybe not altogether the "political race war" that columnist Mike Royko called it, but something close to it.

To mitigate the charges of racism, Harold Washington's Democratic opponents explained their defections by pointing to his record of financial irresponsibility which, among other things, briefly landed him in jail in 1972. They also pointed to his break with the machine — better to support a Republican than a renegade Democrat, particularly one who kept saying, "It's our turn." Even though that declaration may have been intended only to suggest a new organization, maybe a new machine, run by a new crowd of politicians, that was offense enough.

And yet, now that it's over, the returning perspective is also likely to suggest that the racism and other ugly things that occurred in Chicago the last few months may have been no different from what occurred in Atlanta or Detroit the first time those cities elected black mayors. Somehow it may be something that, despite all of this country's record of racial progress, the political process still has to get out of its system.

For all the obvious racism among the Chicago electorate — the fact that this contest would not have been even close had Harold Washington not been black — it still has to be remembered that he received a larger percentage of white votes than many people expected and that without those votes he could not have won at all.

Soviets fear papal visit to Poland

WASHINGTON — Josef Stalin once sneered at the power of the Vatican by asking, "How many divisions does the pope have?"

Jack Anderson

But Stalin's successors in the Kremlin don't share his contempt for the leader of the Roman Catholic Church. In fact, my intelligence sources say the Soviet leaders fear Pope John Paul II more than any other human being.

That's why Yuri Andropov's KGB allegedly tried to have the pope assassinated two years ago. And that's why the Soviet hierarchy and their puppets in Warsaw are so worried about John Paul's visit to Poland in June. They're afraid the pontiff's visit to his native land will fan the flames of rebellion in Catholic Poland — flames that were supposedly stamped out by the declaration of martial law in December 1981.

The Soviet leaders, as paranoid as any ideological fanatics, believe the Polish-born pope's visit to Poland in June 1979 helped to inspire the formation of the Solidarity movement a year later. They are afraid that equally momentous developments could follow his June visit.

So the Polish communist regime is taking two specific precautions to prevent the papal visit from turning into a political disaster:

— The Polish government is insisting that John Paul's itinerary include a meeting with Gen. Voycek Jaruzelski, in hopes that this will give the military regime legitimacy in the eyes of the people.

— The regime is trying to discourage a meeting between the pope and Lech Walesa, the acknowledged leader of the outlawed Solidarity. Any meeting between these two charismatic Poles could strike sparks that would scorch Jaruzelski and inflame anew the Solidarity movement.

The Vatican is resisting the Polish government's attempt to manipulate the papal visit. John Paul is no political babe in the woods, and he's not about to give the Polish regime everything it wants.

Sources close to the Vatican have sketched out to my associate Lucette Lagnado a likely compromise: Pope John Paul will meet with Jaruzelski as the Polish government desires — but only at the price of a meeting with Walesa.

On balance, this may work out to the advantage of the Polish people in their struggle against the communist regime. Any prestige that may rub off on Jaruzelski from his meeting with the pope will be neutralized by John Paul's speeches appealing for "social justice" — a political statement couched in terms that are still permissible for a spiritual leader.

On the other hand, a meeting between the pope and the leader of an outlawed movement will encourage the Poles to continue their fight for freedom. Walesa has already hinted that Solidarity is ready to resume active measures against the government, and he's counting on the pope's visit to be the catalyst for the union's resurgence.

Meanwhile, U.S. intelligence experts will be keeping close watch on developments preceding the papal visit — specifically, what happens during the first week in May.

Solidarity's underground leaders have called for demonstrations both on May Day, the traditional socialist workers' holiday, and on May 3, the 192nd anniversary of the Polish constitution. Solidarity is counting on the regime's reluctance to use force in suppressing Polish workers' demonstrations during a week that is revered by both communists and Poles of all political persuasions.

LIVING IT UP: The Pentagon's lavish expenditures on creature comforts aren't limited to our own generals and admirals. Foreign brass hats are treated with equal extravagance.

Buried deep in the Pentagon budget is a $12 million slush fund earmarked for "emergency and extraordinary expenses." They're extraordinary, all right. In 1981, at least $1.3 million was doled out to show visiting dignitaries a good time in this country.

While the Pentagon officially lists $381,055 in outlays from the slush fund for "Distinguished Visitors," my reporter Rhonda Quagliana found that this greatly understates the amount that was actually spent wining and dining the foreign poohbahs.

The visitors were responsible for their own transportation to the United States, but once they got here, U.S. taxpayers paid close to $1 million for carting them around in military aircraft. The bills also covered meals, booze, hotels, laundry, phone calls — even engraving for photo albums.

An eight-day grand tour by Japanese Admiral Tsugio Yata and three aides cost $21,576 in airfare around the United States, plus $3,865.52 for their room, board and miscellaneous expenses. They stayed in such plush hostelries as the Stanford Court in San Francisco and the Watergate in Washington.

Four New Zealand military guests of the Army cost the taxpayers $1,572 for three nights at the Stanford Court.

One night at the Waldorf Astoria in New York cost $550.23 for four Tunisian guests.

One dinner for four Spanish military officers and their American hosts at the Windows on the World in New York cost $483.06.

The Navy spent $345.50 on a guided tour of Disney World for the commander of the Royal Saudi Naval Forces. A Navy spokesman would not say how many of the 12-member party were Saudis and how many were U.S. escorts.

Sandinistas say pope was misled

WASHINGTON — Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., said recently that "no one who saw how the Sandinistas treated the pope on his recent visit to that land can doubt" which way Nicaragua is going.

William Giandoni

Yet some U.S. Catholics have taken up the cry first voiced by Nicaraguan Marxists that Pope John Paul II provoked mobs in Managua to heckle him.

The tone of their criticism of the pope echoes that of Nicaraguan Interior Minister Tomas Borge, the only surviving founder of the Sandinista movement.

Borge, as interior minister, is in charge of police and security activities in the Central American republic. In that role, he controls the "divine mobs," they call them, whose chanting of revolutionary slogans made it hard, if not impossible, to hear the pope as he preached at mass in Managua the day he spent in Nicaragua.

Borge has told interviewers that the pope "disillusioned" many Nicaraguans, not for what he said, but for what he didn't say during his visit March 4.

According to Borge, the Sandinistas were not disrespectful of the pope.

"Disrespectful were those who did not tell the pope of the necessity that he say an "Our Father" for the fallen, and those who made him believe that the church can treat the rich and poor equally," Borge said.

The "fallen" to whom he referred were 17 young men, all of them high school students, that the Sandinistas said had died at the hands of anti-Sandinista guerrillas. They were given a mass burial in Managua the day before the pope arrived.

Mothers and other women relatives of the 17, dressed in black and wearing photographs of their dead, were grouped together in the throng, officially estimated at some 600,000 or more, that gathered to pay homage to John Paul II.

Critics of the pope, identified as "Maryknoll lay missioners," said that the women were disappointed that the pope did not make some specific mention of them, or their dead, in his homily.

What has been overlooked in many commentaries on the pope's visit to Central America is that, from the moment he set foot on Nicaraguan soil, the Sandinistas sought to turn his visit to their political advantage.

Daniel Ortega, the "coordinator" of the Sandinista governing junta, devoted virtually all of his welcoming words to an attack on the United States. He alleged that from January 1980, to now, that is, even during the Carter administration, the United States has been backing "infiltrations from Honduran territory against our country."

Ortega also declared that "our experience shows us that one can be a believer and a revolutionary at the same time ... and that patriotic and revolutionary Christians are an integral part of the Sandinista Popular Revolution. ..."

That last flies in the face of the pope's and the church's insistence that Marxism and Catholicism are incompatible.

In reply to Ortega's speech, the pope made allusion to the travel restrictions the Sandinistas had imposed on occasion of the papal visit, by sending greetings to "the thousands and thousands of Nicaraguans who have not found the possibility of being present as they would have desired."

And he reprimanded Father Ernesto Cardenal, Sandinista minister of culture, for defying his request that priests get out, and stay out, of government.

Later, in Leon, Nicaragua's second city, the pope emphasized his support for parents who object to an educational system "inspired in atheism," as Nicaraguan church spokesmen say the Sandinista's is.

Borge, and a lay missioner cited by the Central American Historical Institute, Georgetown University, Washington, D.C., were among those who said that Archbishop Miguel Obando y Bravo of Managua had misled the pope about the Sandinista revolution.

Borge said that the archbishop "has been converted, not into a religious leader, but into a (reactionary) political leader."

Quite obviously, the Sandinistas fear the popularity of the archbishop of Managua. Public opinion polls indicate he is the most popular individual in the country, in part because of his early support of the revolution against the Somoza dynasty.

More than a year ago, the government ruled that Obando y Bravo could not celebrate Sunday mass on television, as was his practice even during the Somoza dictatorship.

This year, the church was prohibited from broadcasting Easter services even over the church-owned radio station.

Tax cheaters object of IRS 'squeal rule'

I know it is going to come as a surprise to some people, but the Internal Revenue Service has a "squeal" rule. If someone is cheating on his or her taxes, and you tell the IRS where to look, and they manage to collect the hidden money, you can get a reward of up to $50,000.

Art Buchwald

You would think that the tipster money is what attracts income tax whistle blowers to the IRS, but this is not always the case.

"I would like to see the man in charge of tax cheaters."

"I am that person. May I help you?"

"I want to tell you about a man who bilked you out of two million dollars over five years."

"Before you do, may I ask you why you are telling me this?"

"Because I'm a patriotic American, and I feel everyone should pay his fair share of taxes, so we can protect our way of life."

"That's good to hear."

"The person also happens to be my third husband, and you'll never meet a more devious rat in your life."

"Then you have a personal motive in turning him in?"

"There's nothing personal about it. I'd turn him in if he were a stranger. Anyone who runs off with his secretary when he's married to a wonderful woman who gave him the best years of her life deserves to feel the full weight of IRS on him."

"You say he's been cheating on his taxes for five years. Why did you come to us now?"

"I found these love letters in his closet last week. Smell them. Have you ever sniffed such cheap perfume? Now most women would have immediately gone to a lawyer like Marvin Mitchelson. But I'm not the vengeful type. I decided to come here instead. I said to myself: 'Rose, it isn't what he did to you that matters, it's what he did to his country. The money he has cheated from the United States could be the difference between war and peace, freedom and slavery, and prosperity and recession.'"

"Did you say anything else to yourself?"

"Come to think of it, I did. I said, 'Rose, I'd like to see that blonde floozy's face when she sees Milton behind bars.' But that was just a second thought, and it's not why I'm here today."

"I understand that. You say Milton cheated us out of two million dollars. Do you know where the money is?"

"He spent a lot of it. He had a boat, he bought me fur coats, jewelry, and a new BMW. Believe me if I knew it was Uncle Sam's money I wouldn't have accepted any of it."

"How did you find out he was not declaring his full income?"

"I discovered he was also paying for a penthouse apartment on Park Avenue for his tootsie, and it suddenly dawned on me it must be coming out of the IRS's pocket. So I immediately came down here to let you know. I can't live with a man who lies on his income tax return."

"Are you aware that the IRS pays rewards to people for turning in tax cheaters?"

"I'm not here for the money. I just want to help my country and President Reagan and our fine boys in the armed forces, and the senior citizens and the poor and the homeless, and everyone else who depends on our tax dollars for support. If Milton has to suffer horribly for his cheating ways, I can live with that too."

"Well, Rose, I'll turn you over to our criminal investigators, and you can provide them with the leads for a full investigation. We can't tell you how much we appreciate your visit."

"I was only doing my duty as a citizen."

"We know that, and as a small token of our appreciation we'd like to present you with this American Flag. If it weren't for selfless patriots like yourself, our job would be so much harder."

An open letter from Jerry Falwell on the nuclear freeze

Fellow Americans:

War in any form is abominable. We all know that. But there is something at least as abominable, and that is life without liberty—life without the freedom to write and speak and pray.

I don't want the American people, especially our children, to be cremated in a nuclear explosion.

What I do want for them is to have the chance to love life and truth and God.

Our national task and challenge, therefore, is both to prevent a nuclear war and to insure peace with freedom.

I for one refuse to sit back and wait for the Soviets to enslave us or to destroy us in a rain of nuclear warheads.

And that is why I'm writing you this letter today. I feel that I must speak out on our alarming national defense situation.

This message is for every American who wants to make sure our country has the military strength to prevent war and keep us free.

We cannot afford to be number two in defense! But, sadly enough, that's where we are today. Number two.

And fading!

So, I urge you to cast your ballot today for Peace Through Strength and to preserve freedom.

I promise you I will publish the results of this poll all over America. Here are the questions:

1. Are you willing to trust the survival of America to a nuclear freeze agreement with the Soviet Union, a nation which rejects on-site inspection of military facilities to insure compliance?
   Yes ☐ No ☐
2. Are you for stopping those U.S. strategic weapons programs aimed at restoring nuclear parity with the Soviet Union?
   Yes ☐ No ☐
3. Do you believe our NATO partners should be outnumbered in "theater" (intermediate range) nuclear weapons?
   Yes ☐ No ☐

There they are: three burning issues. Three straightforward, uncomplicated questions.

Here are three additional issues you might think about:

1. Is the Soviet regime likely to permit freedom of thought and religion under Uri Andropov, the former head of the KGB?
2. What would happen if Moscow and Peking patched up their quarrel?
3. What would be the effect on the nuclear balance if we cancelled the MX and the B-1 programs, while the Soviets went ahead with their programs to build two new ICBMs and two heavy bombers?

And, you might also ask yourself: what would happen if the President of the United States received a call on the "hotline" some day, and the Soviet President said: "Give up or be destroyed?"

If our President said no, it could mean that more than half our people would be incinerated in a nuclear attack. If he said yes, the United States would no longer be the land of the free and home of the brave.

But right now—at this very moment—it is not too late to rebuild our defenses.

What is needed is a loud and clear call from the American people.

Now, I can predict what will happen when this letter goes out. The "anti's" and the "ultra's" will start screaming: "There goes that warmonger again. He won't be satisfied until we have a nuclear showdown."

I've endured that kind of abuse before. And I will now.

It is incredible, but those of us who believe in peace with freedom, who believe that peace can best be insured through strength—which means moral as well as military strength—have to put up with this kind of abuse. So be it.

Let's review the basic points: war in any form is abominable.

The lesson of history is that weak nations cannot "buy" peace with treaties. "Deals" with tyrants don't work.

There is only one sure formula for peace with freedom and that is through strength.

Therefore, unless the leaders of this country have military strength at least equal to that available to the Kremlin tyrants, we can in time expect either an attack or nuclear blackmail.

Do we have such strength? These are the facts:

1. The Soviets have almost a two-to-one advantage in nuclear weapons. And type for type, theirs are bigger than ours and newer.
2. The Soviets are building new strategic bombers and submarines, and testing new missiles. All we have in production is the new Trident submarine.
3. The Soviets have a nationwide civil defense program to protect their people, a massive bomber defense network, and anti-ballistic missiles to protect Moscow. We have no civil defense program to protect the American people, a tiny air-defense network, and no missile defense at all.
4. In conventional weapons, the Soviets have four times as many tanks and artillery pieces and over twice as many men in uniform ready for war.

While the Soviets have been building up during the last decade, we have:

1. Cut our Navy in half.
2. Cancelled the production of Minuteman missiles.
3. Delayed the Trident program.
4. Cancelled the original B-1 program.
5. Spent years debating the best way to protect MX Missiles, while building none.

So, if you fear for the safety of your children and your friends, cast your ballot today for Peace Through Strength.

All of us must rally at this critical time and make our voice heard.

We have a President who wants to build up our military strength. But he is catching it from all sides. The "freezeniks," "ultra libs," and "unilateral disarmers" are after him.

He and the loyal members of Congress need to know that you are with them.

Do send in your ballot right away.

This letter is being printed in major newspapers and mailed to millions of Americans.

We will tabulate your ballot and thousands of others and send the results to President Reagan and the Members of Congress.

It is time for patriotic, God-fearing Americans to speak up and let the nation's leaders know where you stand on the critical issues of national defense.

No matter how you look at it, the peace of the future is going to be decided by strength. Is it going to be American strength or Soviet strength?

Vote now for Peace Through Strength. I promise you, your voice will be heard.

Sincerely,

Jerry Falwell

Reverend Jerry Falwell

In addition to casting your vote on the ballot below, I urge you to write and/or phone your 2 U.S. Senators and U.S. Representative and tell them directly how you feel about these vital issues.

As Marc Lalonde, finance minister, looks on, Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau hold aloft a copy of the nation's budget.

Canada plans economic initiative

OTTAWA (AP) — The government plans to combat Canada's severe recession with a four-year recovery program allocating $1.95 billion for public works and an equal amount in tax incentives for industry.

Marc Lalonde, finance minister in the Liberal government of Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, announced the initiatives Tuesday night in a nationally televised budget speech to Parliament.

He said the $3.9 billion program — $4.8 billion in Canadian dollars — would "spur recovery and restore as quickly as possible the economy's capacity to generate the new jobs Canadians need."

Recession has hit Canada even harder than the United States. Unemployment has climbed over 12.5 percent, dislodging inflation as the country's top economic problem.

Lalonde estimated Canada's deficit for the new fiscal year at $25.4 billion, with the new programs adding $1.5 billion of the total. He predicted that the deficit would increase again next year, then begin to diminish.

Final figures for the fiscal year just completed are not ready, but Lalonde estimated the deficit at $20.5 billion.

Pat Carney, finance spokesman for the opposition Conservatives, said the deficit could drive up interest rates and smother the recovery. She scorned Lalonde's description of his document as a recovery and jobs budget.

"What he's trying to recover is his lost prestige," she said. "The only job that's being protected is his own."

Ian Waddell of the socialist New Democratic Party said Lalonde's job creation program falls short of the massive stimulation his party contends the Canadian economy needs.

"It's not really a job recovery budget. It's really a wait-and-see budget," Waddell said.

To help pay for the new programs, the government will raise the federal sales tax by 1 percent, but not until October 1984. This "special recovery tax" will expire at the end of 1988, Lalonde said.

The finance minister predicted a strong recovery, with real gross national product up 2.3 percent over 1982 average output and inflation down to 6.3 percent.

Although employment should grow steadily, progress on unemployment is likely to be slow, Lalonde said. He predicted an average of 12.4 percent unemployed in 1983.

The $1.95 billion public works program will provide investments in airports, highways, ports, high technology, research facilities and other areas, the finance minister said.

A set of tax incentives — also adding up to $1.95 billion over four years — is designed to promote job creation and productive investments, he said.

The new budget also offers a sop to Canadian tourists, who now will be allowed to bring back $100 worth of goods duty free every three months up to a maximum of $300 yearly. Both levels are about double the present limits.

Last-minute changes in the budget increased the public spending program and this year's deficit by $150 million because of a controversy over leaks of the earlier figures.

A television cameraman in Lalonde's office Monday for a pre-budget story caught key pages of the budget speech on videotape. The station broadcast the tapes, including the amounts of the estimated deficit and the proposed spending program.

By tradition, Canadian budget details are kept secret until announced in Parliament. Opposition leaders clamored for Lalonde's resignation Tuesday, bringing other business to a halt in the House of Commons.

In his speech, Lalonde said he did not consider the leak damaging, but nevertheless "decided to change the portion of the budget which would otherwise have been prematurely in the public domain."

Trudeau's sparkling wit, charm losing luster among Canadians

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

TORONTO — Fifteen years ago a dashing, witty law professor named Pierre Elliott Trudeau became prime minister, giving Canadians a giddy sense that their country was taking a chance on a new kind of leader for a new era.

Trudeau, 63, is now the longest-serving head of government in a Western democracy. And while he has maintained his ability to charm an international audience, the charm has worn thin at home.

An insoucient attitude and willingness to unleash a biting tongue once was part of the Trudeau appeal. But now, they provide grist for regular eruptions of outrage in the Canadian media over what is seen as the prime minister's insensitivity.

Canadians looked to Trudeau, the bilingual offspring of a French-Canadian father and English-Canadian mother, to hold their country together when separatists seemed to be gaining strength in Quebec.

In the crisis sparked by Front for the Liberation of Quebec kidnappings in 1970 and then in the province-wide independence referendum in 1980, Trudeau stood firm as champion of a united Canada.

But at the same time he presided over increasing economic troubles, with unemployment cresting recently over 12.5 percent.

Despite the advantage of undistinguished opposition leadership, Trudeau and his Liberal Party have sunk to new lows in the polls — the choice of only 30 percent of the electorate in the latest Gallup Poll.

Less than two years remain in Trudeau's fourth term in office. It is likely to be his last, although a harsh and sometimes dirty leadership squabble among the Tories has revived speculation that Trudeau might run again, especially if former Prime Minister Joe Clark regains his party's top job.

Trudeau first became prime minister on April 20, 1968, to a chorus of praise from Canadian and foreign observers.

When Trudeau joined the Liberal Party and entered politics in 1965 as a member of Parliament, he was known in Montreal from his days as editor of the magazine Cite Libre, part of the intellectual renaissance that transformed Quebec — formerly a conservative, clergy-dominated society — in what was called the "Quiet Revolution."

Ministers gather in Panama

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Five Central American foreign ministers are holding urgent talks today with their counterparts from Mexico, Venezuela, Panama and Colombia in an effort to avert war between Nicaragua and Honduras.

"We prefer that they hit each other over the head with microphones rather than fight with bullets," Panamanian Foreign Minister Juan Jose Amado said.

The Central Americans were asked to meet by the other four ministers, who call themselves the Contadora group after the Panamanian beach resort where they drafted a regional peace plan on Jan. 5.

The Contadora members said the Salvadoran and Guatemalan governments reacted coolly when they visited Central American capitals last week, but Costa Rica, Honduras and Nicaragua accepted their invitation immediately.

Amado said the talks would begin with bilateral contacts held in strict secrecy "to encourage free and open discussion." He was not sure whether they would be held here or in Contadora.

The Reagan administration, which recently expressed concern that the Soviet Union may base missiles in leftist Nicaragua, is watching the meeting closely, officials here said.

U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz discussed Central American issues this week with Mexican Foreign Minister Bernardo Sepulveda, a member of the Contadora group.

The Reagan administration cut off military aid to Nicaragua's Sandinista government in 1981, two years after the Sandinistas seized power in a revolution. It claims the Nicaraguans are smuggling Soviet and Cuban weapons to leftist guerrillas fighting to topple the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador.

The United States and Honduras, Costa Rica, Guatemala and El Salvador all have accused the Sandinistas of building a huge military establishment with Soviet and Cuban help that is far beyond Nicaragua's defense needs.

The Sandinistas deny the smuggling accutations. They accuse the Reagan administration and the Honduran government of secretly training and arming Honduran-based exiles to mount terrorist raids inside Nicaragua.

Nicaragua claims more than 800 people have been killed since the exiles intensified their attacks during the past three months, and says it is "on the verge of war" with Honduras.

The Contadora declaration calls for nonintervention by foreign powers in Central America, removal of all foreign military and other advisers from the region, and talks between Nicaragua and Honduras to settle their differences.

The United States has a contingent of 55 military advisers assigned to El Salvador, and increased the number of military advisers to Honduras from about 15 two years ago to between 50 and 100, depending on need.

In addition, U.S. troops held joint exercises with Honduran forces late last year and early this year. Among other things they taught the Honduran soldiers how to deploy rapidly by air along the Nicaraguan border.

Intelligence sources in Central America estimate there are about 2,000 Cuban military advisers in Nicaragua.

Mexican policy undergoing changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz says Mexico, long at odds with the U.S. view of the turmoil in Central America, may now be moving toward a more even-handed policy toward the region.

Shultz said Tuesday night that after two days of talks with top Mexican officials, "nobody took issue" with the American position that arms flows to Salvadoran rebels from Cuba and Nicaragua are a major source of conflict in the area.

Speaking to reporters on the return trip to Washington from Mexico City, Shultz said his discussions with Mexican Foreign Minister Bernardo Sepulveda "gave me some encouragement that he does see it that way."

Implicit in Shultz's remarks was the possibility that Mexico, which has been on friendly terms with Nicaraguan authorities, may be in a position to moderate their policies.

Shultz spoke on the eve of a renewed effort by Mexico, Venezuela, Colombia and Panama to determine whether there is enough common ground among the parties to the conflict in Central America to pursue a peace initiative.

The foreign ministers of these four countries toured Central American countries last week and were meeting again today in Panama to discuss future strategy.

After Shultz's consultations in Mexico, which involved three U.S. and three Mexican cabinet secretaries, the two governments issued a joint statement that indicated they were as far apart as ever on the Central American issue.

The vaguely worded statement said the United States and Mexico agreed to "promote processes of dialogue and negotiation" in Central America for the purpose of bringing peace to that embattled region.

The statement did not specify the type of negotiations which should be conducted. Mexico long has advocated negotiations between the government and the guerrillas in El Salvador as a means of settling the conflict there.

The United States, saying it wants to preserve the integrity of the democratic process now under way in El Salvador, has favored negotiations limited to enabling the rebels to participate in the electoral system.

Mexico has minimized the importance of the external support for the guerrillas while suggesting the conflict in El Salvador basically is a reflection of decades of repression and injustice.

In his remarks Tuesday night, however, Shultz said that Sepulveda recognized the importance of suspending arms flows from one country to another if peace is to be achieved. "That's really what's taking place from Cuba and Nicaragua to El Salvador," he said.

Shultz appeared skeptical about the prospective peace initiative Mexico and the three other countries are undertaking but said he hopes it bears fruit.

As U.S. officials see it, a decision by Nicaragua to halt its assistance to the Salvadoran rebels could represent a boost to the Salvadoran government in its efforts to gain the upper hand over the guerrillas and consolidate a democratic system.

Lee's Robertson performs magic on Mojo

Rebels move back into first place with San Angelo

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

ODESSA — Backed by the strong pitching of Kerry Robertson, the Midland Lee Rebels returned to the top the District 4-5A race with a 6-1 victory over Odessa Permian here Tuesday.

Lee's win, combined with San Angelo's crushing defeat at the hands of the Abilene Eagles, 15-0, leaves the Rebels and Bobcats tied for the district lead with 8-3 records.

Robertson faced 24 batters, allowing three hits while striking out nine as he went the distance in only his second district starting assignment.

"Kerry's had the hot hand lately and I thought he deserved to start after the way he's pitched in relief for us," Lee coach Ernie Johnson said. "I guess I was right since he pitched so good."

ROBERTSON FACED 24 batters, three over the minimum, in raising his record to 2-0, with four saves. His other victory came in relief and in his only other start he was pulled in the third and was not involved in the decision.

"I felt real good out there and my curve was working," Robertson said. "When I get it over its hard to hit."

Dennis Matta provided the clutch hitting for the Rebs as he drove in three runs in a two-for-three performance at the plate.

The Rebels didn't take charge in the game but they did respond well when Permian looked like they might gain control.

Robertson got into trouble in the fifth and looked like he might be losing control when he gave up his only two walks. But some magic, other than Mojo, helped the Rebels get out of the sticky situation.

After Vance Washington opened the inning with a walk, stole second and moved to third on a wild pitch, Mark Fowler walked and stole second.

BUT IN the game-breaking situation it was the Panthers that broke.

When Robertson let go of a high pitch to Ron Squires, Washington edged down the third base line. Despite hurting from a pulled hamstring, catcher Sergio Ochoa caught the wild pitch and threw to Barry Blackwell covering third. Blackwell chased Washington a few steps toward home then threw back to Ochoa who made the tag.

The trouble began when Washington added a forearm to the inevitable collision. The umpire ruled that Washington interfered with Ochoa's ability to make the play on Fowler who was moving from second to third during the melee. Fowler was called out, making it a double play.

The Panthers went from having two men in scoring position with no outs to having two outs with the bases empty.

Robertson struck out Tim Patillo to end the inning.

"It took Permian to wake us up," Johnson said about the incident. "The rule states that a runner must avoid the tag. It was a good call and it got us going."

THE REBELS caem out in the sixth and chased starter Eddie Montez from the mound, scoring five runs with the help of four consecutive singles.

Lead off hitter Steve Woodlee got on when third baseman Fowler failed to handle a routine ground ball. Darrell Holmes then pushed a bunt passed Montez who stumbled coming off the mound. Ditto Rob Walker, and the bases were loaded.

With the infield drawn in, Matta stroked a single between third and short scoring Woodlee and Holmes. When left fielder Matt Ellison mishandled the ball, Walker and Matta each took an extra base.

Darren Webb then bounced one in front of the plate on a run and hit, scoring Walker. On the play, Marty Martinez raced in from first base leaving Montez nowhere to throw the ball when he fielded it.

Ted Lepps sacraficed home Matta and Webb scored on a wild pitch giving the Rebels the big five-run inning.

The Panthers took the lead in the third inning when Kenny Merritt singled to drive in Fowler. Fowler had Permian's only extra base hit as he led off the inning with a double.

But the Rebels responded by tying the contest their next time at bat.

Danny Smedley, substituting for the injured Darrell Holmes at third, hit a high pop up to right. Merritt dropped the easy fly ball as a hustling Smedley trotted into second. After Walker grounded into the second out, Matta singled to right driving in Smedley.

Midland High's Tim Davis is out at the plate while trying to score in the third inning against Odessa High. Broncho catcher Leroy Rodriguez made the play to end the Bulldogs' three-run rally on a throw from shortstop Boyd Cowan.

Bronchos buck Bulldogs, 7-5

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

"We had every chance in the world to win, we just didn't do it," said Midland High coach Tim Whalen after his Bulldogs suffered a 7-5 10-inning loss to Odessa High Tuesday at Memorial Stadium Field.

The inability to put the ball in play in crucial situations, combined with two key errors in the 10th inning, cost the Bulldogs a victory and dropped them to 3-8 on the season while the Bronchos improved to 6-5 for a share of third place in District 4-5A play.

It wasn't the lack of base runners that held down Midland High's scoring (they stranded at least one runner in every inning and two in each of the final three for a total of 16) it was because "we had hitters go to the plate and all they had to do was make contact to give us a chance," said Whalen. "Instead, we were striking out."

Three times in the last two innings, Midland High batters struck out to end the inning with runners standing on third base. Broncho relief pitcher Seth McCann, with one out and Jose Carrasco at third and Tim Davis on second, got Keith Clay and Mike Timlin to go down swinging in the bottom of the 10th to claim his first decision of the 4-5A season.

ON THE field, Midland High played near-flawless baseball through nine innings before losing their defensive control.

Broncho Boyd Cowan led off the inning with a single to shallow left field and went to second when Simon Rodriquez bunted the ball down the third base line into a meeting of three Bulldogs, pitcher John Covarrubias, catcher Tommy Davis and third baseman Judd Ryan. The ball bounced off Ryan's glove and Rodriquez was safe.

Cal Hendrix moved Cowan to third base when his grounder went to shortstop Jose Carrasco who threw to Darren Thorpe at second for the first half of a possible double play. Instead of turning two, Thorpe made an off balance throw into the fence behind first base after colliding with Rodriquez. The error allowed Cowan to come home and Hendrix eventually scored the final run on Benny Armendarez' single to left field.

"The throwing error hurt us but it wasn't what killed us," said Whalen. "Even with that we had a chance to win. All it would have taken was one little old base knock but we didn't do it so they're the winners and we're the losers.

ACCORDING TO both Whalen and Odessa coach Ronnie White, Tuesday's game was a typical Bulldog-Broncho matchup.

"Every time we play one of these games it's been like this," said White. "Every time it seems like we have extra innings or win or lose in the last inning on a freaky play."

"Every time we have a barnburner," agreed Whalen. "In every game there is a lot of excitement. Those games make coaches lose their hair and get gray. I'm doing both."

"We're just thankful we won," said White. "I'd give my left arm to get into the playoffs. It would really give my kids a boost."

Getting into the playoffs is going to take some doing for the Bronchos. With a 6-5 record, OHS trails district co-leaders Midland Lee and San Angelo (both 8-3) by two games and with only three games left, the odds are getting slim, especially since Big Spring and Abilene High are also at 6-5 and waiting for the leaders to stumble.

On Saturday Midland High has the opportunity to help out cross-town rival Midland Lee when the Bulldogs travel to San Angelo for a 2 p.m. game while Odessa High plays Abilene High in Odessa in a crucial third place battle.

Cubs 'bank' on Darryl for 3-1 win

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Anybody who had been out to Cubs Stadium over the weekend would have sworn the teams on the field were imposters.

A fan called the press box and asked what the score was and was told, "2-1."

He demanded to know why the game hadn't started yet. "It's always 2-1 during the conference with the umpires."

Midland's Cubs, the team that had scored 53 runs and given up 44 in four previous games, made it two in a row over San Antonio, 3-1, at Cubs Stadium Monday night and the score wasn't the most difficult part to believe.

Midland pitcher Darryl Banks went the distance, in April, no less, a Cubs Stadium feat that is usually saved for late May or June.

IT WAS Midland's fourth straight win and closed the Cubs to within a half game of first place San Antonio going into tonight's 7 p.m. game, the third of the five-game series.

Carlos Gil, 0-1, will pitch for Midland while the Dodgers will counter with Steve Martin, 2-0, 5.22.

The story of Tuesday's game was Banks, a third year pro out of Reno, Nev.

"He threw close to 130 pitches tonight and hadn't thrown as many as 100 before that this spring," Harmon said.

San Antonio spoiled the shutout in the sixth when Tom Beyers opened with a double and scored on Cecil Espy's single. That cut Midland's lead to 2-1. Banks, 13-6 at Salinas last year, had one uneasy moment after that.

"I WALKED the first batter up in the seventh (Chuck Bailey) on four pitches. That's something I didn't want to do with the score that close."

"But Darryl showed a lot of bulldog," said Harmon, "He got the next three batters on ground balls to the right side and then retired the last six batters in order."

Actually, 11 of the 15 ground outs were to the right side. It was as though there was a groove to second baseman Trey Brooks, who handled seven of the assists.

"With the wind blowing to right and all those lefthanders in the lineup, I was just trying to keep it low on the outside," Banks said.

UNTIL Bruce Chaney singled to lead off the seventh and scored on Rick Baker's hit to make it 3-1, the Cubs could have awarded San Antonio pitcher Rex Howell the game ball. His wildness was largely responsible for the Cubs' two runs in the second.

Brooks singled stole second and went to third on a wild pitch as Tom Johnson walked. Then, Howell uncorked a wild pitch, letting Brooks score before Chaney singled up the middle to plate Johnson.

Otherwise, Howell, 5-4 at Vero Beach last year, matched Banks pitch-for-pitch. Midland had him on the ropes in the first. The bases were loaded on Bill Hatcher's single and two walks. Jim Walsh hit a shot that Howell stabbed and turned into a 1-2-3 double play. "He doesn't make that play and we have a big inning," Harmon said. "He bailed himself out of a deep hole with an excellent defensive play."

Banks walked only three and fanned four, first baseman Franklin Stubbs three times. Howell walked four and needed relief help in the eight from Steve Hammond.

Spud climbs the Beanstalk into the world of giants

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

Can 5-6 Spud Webb survive and flourish in an Atlantic Coast Conference where roam such creatures as 7-4 Ralph Sampson?

"The ACC has a lot of good little guards like Sidney Lowe and Derreck Whittenburg. They are only six feet, not much taller than Spud," assures Jerry Stone, Spud's mentor at Midland College for two years, and one who should know.

"Isn't North Carolina State where Monte Towe played?" Stone pursues. "He was about 5-9, wasn't he?"

Informed it was precisely 5-4, Stone registered surprise.

"Why, they're getting a big guard in Spud, then."

TOWE PLAYED on the Wolfpack's other NCAA champions, back in the 1970s. When David Thompson went on to the NBA from that team, he jammed Towe in a traveling handbag and took him along.

Towe made it on an NCAA championship team in the nation's toughest basketball conference, although there are those who concede the NBA is gaining, now that Sampson's gone.

Ask any Midland College fan and he'll tell you that Spud has Monte beat from here to Raleigh in ability while swearing it's a matter of plain fact, not prejudice.

Maybe there isn't that much difference in how they run a team, but Spud can perform gravity defying feats with his body that could make a gymnast sit up and take notes. Towe, for example, only he wishes he could have dunked like Spud.

Wait until the Reynolds Coliseum crowd lamps Spud coming out of those tall Georgia firs under the basket to stuff one.

OF COURSE, Spud isn't perfect. After all, Monte never got slapped with a goal-tending embarrassment even once, let along twice in one game.

The thing Stone likes about NC State and its attitude is that while some looked upon the 5-6 guard as a gate attraction, NC State is looking at him as a player. Filling up the arena is the least of their worries.

"They are happy to have him," says Stone. "He won't be there to dunk a couple in warm up and then go sit down."

Volvano first spotted Spud in the NJCAAs at Hutchinson, Kan., a year ago as he led MC to the national title.

When Sports Illustrated ran a feature on Spud in its basketball tipoff issue last fall, Volvano checked back with Stone and told him he was still interested.

THEN, when the rush for talent began last week, everybody forgot about Spud, after all, there were the persistent rumors that he was bound for North Texas State, especially if Stone was named head coach of the Eagles.

Stone wasn't named coach. Tommy Newman was. And Spud began to get a few offers, but most still didn't know he was available.

Bradley, Southern Illinois and Oklahoma City U. were hot on the trail. OC's Abe Lemons was so anxious he told Stone he'd give Spud two scholarships, if he'd just come.

Meanwhile, Volvano saw in the paper that Spud had mentioned NC State. He said, "Let's get hold of him." The New York City guard he had been courting went elsewhere, but now with Webb available...

"He's just like he is on television," Spud said of Volvano, who wears his hyper emotions on a sleeve.

"It's going to be crazy playing for him." Spud doesn't sound like he's dreading it.

PERHAPS THE strangest part of this entire scenario is that not one Southwest Conference team thought enough of Spud to contact him or offer him a scholarship. The nation's No. 1 team did come half way across the country in pursuit, however.

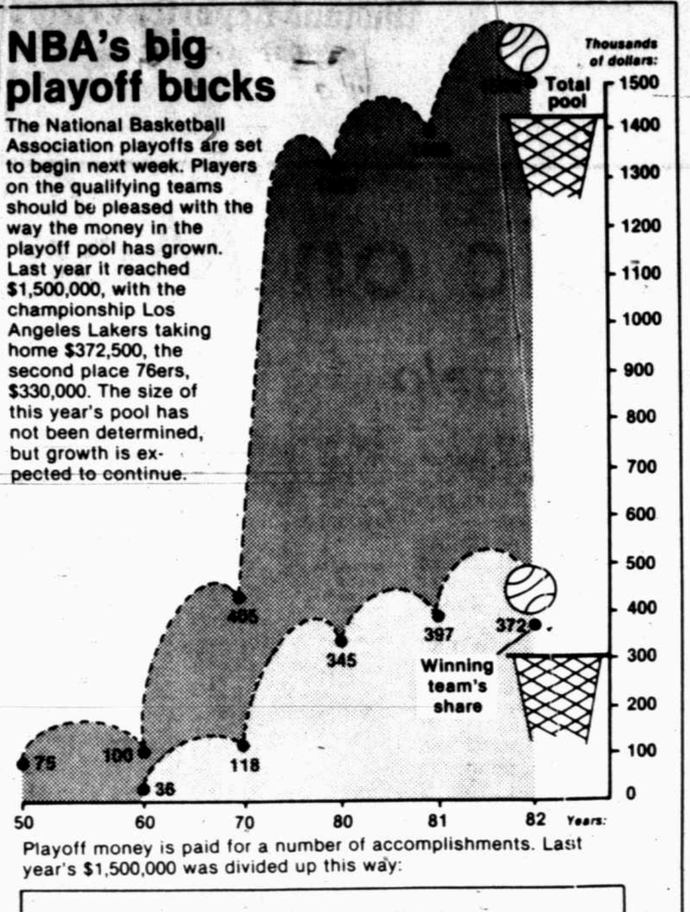

Going to Raleigh will have its drawbacks. It's a long way from Texas, but there are compensations for both Spud and his fans.

The ACC is the most excitingy competitive league in the land, or was up until the 30-second clock. Academically, it's the No. 1 major conference, topped perhaps by the Ivy League and some private and very fussy small colleges.

Since it is the ACC, Chaparral fans will probably see more of Spud on national and cable TV than if he stayed in Texas. And half the fun of watching will be to see the reaction in the ACC when Spud dunks...and the appalled "Did he really do that?" silence when he is tagged with a goal-tending.

NBA's big playoff bucks

The National Basketball Association playoffs are set to begin next week. Players on the qualifying teams should be pleased with the way the money in the playoff pool has grown. Last year it reached $1,500,000, with the championship Los Angeles Lakers taking home $372,500, the second place 76ers, $330,000. The size of this year's pool has not been determined, but growth is expected to continue.

Playoff money is paid for a number of accomplishments. Last year's $1,500,000 was divided up this way:

Bird flies Celtics past slow Hawks

By The Associated Press

Just when then Atlanta Hawks were on the verge of an upset victory, Larry Bird snatched it away for the Boston Celtics.

"You could see for a time that they got the smell of victory," the Celtics' Kevin McHale said of Atlanta's 85-81 lead midway through the fourth quarter. "They were like wolves smelling blood."

But Bird scored eight of his 26 points in the final 3½ minutes and Quinn Buckner hit three-long jumpers to rally the Celtics to a 103-95 victory in the opener of their best-of-3 NBA Eastern Conference playoff series.

In the Western Conference playoffs, Phoenix beat Denver 121-108 for a 1-0 lead in their mini-series. In tonight's openers, New York is at New Jersey in the East and Portland is at Seattle in the West.

"I thought we played well and they played excellent," Bird said. "If we had played this one in Atlanta we would have lost. Atlanta's defense was tough. They forced us into a lot of bad shots and turnovers."

"Atlanta's slowdown pace is tough," said McHale, who scored 12 points for the Celtics. "It's tough for the other team to get into a running tempo. I'm glad it didn't come down to a basket at the end where one shot could be the difference."

Buckner tied the score for the sixth time at 87-87 with the first of his three open jump shots. The Hawks never caught up after Bird put Boston in front 89-87 with two free throws.

Forward Dan Roundfield led Atlanta with 24 points and 20 rebounds, earning praise from Boston Coach Bill Fitch.

NBA Playoffs

Suns 121, Nuggets 108

Guard Dennis Johnson had 28 points, 12 rebounds and eight assists while Phoenix held NBA scoring champion Alex English to 16 points to win the first game of its series with Denver.

The Suns, who lost four of five games to the Nuggets in the regular season, surrendered 32 points to Kiki Vandeweghe and 25 to Dan Issel. But English, who averaged 28.4 points and had 31 points and 20 rebounds in Denver's playoff-clinching victory over Kansas City Sunday, was held in check.

Astros' Spilman gets home run in a pinch

HOUSTON (AP) — It was only his second hit of the season, so Houston pinch-hitter Harry Spilman wasn't expecting a miracle.

But one out short of another Houston loss Spilman hit, a fat pitch from Cincinnati's Tom Hume over the right field fence for a three-run homer to rally the Astros to a 6-5 victory Tuesday night.

"Since it was the Astrodome, I wasn't sure when I first hit it but I thought it had a chance to go all the way," said Spilman, whose blast gave the Astros only their third victory of the season in 13 games. "I expected a hard slider but it was a fastball out over the plate. He made a mistake."

The contest was one of only two played in the National League, as bad weather around the country postponed St. Louis at Montreal, Pittsburgh at New York, Chicago at Philadelphia and Los Angeles at San Francisco. In the other NL contest, Atlanta whipped San Diego 9-2.

"Guys you trade seem to come back and haunt you," Reds Manager Russ Nixon said of Spilman, traded to the Astros three years ago.

NL Roundup

"You've got to give him (Spilman) credit. He hit a bad pitch. If we were machines, I guess we wouldn't make mistakes, but we do. I know the pitch was up. I know it had to be up to go that far."

Cincinnati had taken a 4-0 first-inning lead on a two-run homer by Dan Driessen, a run-scoring double by Johnny Bench and a passed ball by rookie catcher John Mizerock. Another passed ball by Mizerock gave Cincinnati its fifth run in the sixth inning.

Braves 9, Padres 2

Glenn Hubbard and Ken Smith each belted two-run homers to back Rick Camp's route-going pitching as Atlanta downed San Diego. Camp scattered eight hits, walked three and struck out three.

The Braves, who wracked four Padre hurlers for 13 hits, jumped on former teammate John Montefusco for seven hits and five runs in the three innings.

Lee wins track title

Midland schools swept team titles from Odessa in all three divisions Tuesday as the Midland-Odessa Junior High track meet came to a close at Memorial Stadium.

Lee Freshman won the ninth grade crown with 162 points while Midland Freshman was a distant second with 93. Goddard captured the eighth grade crown with 97 points, just edging out Odessa Bonham's 94. Alamo was third with 74. Alamo took the seventh grade championship with 116 points while San Jacinto was a close second with 110.

Fourteen records fell during the two-day meet and another was tied as the three divisions assualted the record books.

Lee's Quintus Hampton was a two-event winner in the ninth grade, winning both the 65-meter hurdles with a record 9.70 and the 220 hurdles with a 30.63. Midland's Darrell Davis shattered the shot put mark by more than five feet with an awesome 65-10. Midland's Jason Fuller set a record in the 600 with a 1:34.49.

In the eighth grade, Goddard got twin winners from Lynn Sullivan (100 and 200) and Doug Bond (high jump and 220 hurdles). Sullivan's 11.70 in the 100 was a record. San Jacinto's Steve Holt set a 600 record with a 1:34.88 while Alamo's Mark Gomez had a record 10.31 in the 65 hurdles.

In the seventh grade, San Jacinto's Kynoy Sisoukrai won both the 100 and 200, setting a 200 record with a 25.24. SJ's Jeff Garza set the 65 hurdle mark with an 11.13.

The meet concluded the 1983 track season for all the teams.

Hot bats swing despite cold weather

By The Associated Press

It was freezing around the American League — but it didn't bother the guys with the hot bats.

In Baltimore, John Lowenstein drove a tie-breaking, eighth-inning homer through a driving snowstorm to help Baltimore beat Texas 4-2 Tuesday night.

In Toronto, Lloyd Moseby crashed a pair of two-run homers, the second one beating Cleveland 9-7.

In Chicago, Greg Luzinski also hit two homers to lead the White Sox to a 13-3 rout of the New York Yankees.

And indoors in Minnesota, Tom Brunansky's tie-breaking homer in the sixth inning triggered the Twins past Seattle 6-2.

The weather also wiped out two other AL games — Kansas City at Detroit and Oakland at California — and four of the six scheduled in the National League.

"It was speed around the bases, bucking headwinds," said Lowenstein, forgoing his home-run trot for a sprint back to the relative warmth of the Orioles' dugout.

AL Roundup

"There was nobody at the plate to greet me. Who's going to come out and shake your hand in that kind of weather? When I got to the dugout, there were only three guys in there. They're not fools."

Blue Jays 9, Indians 7

It was as cold in Toronto as it was in Baltimore, but it didn't bother the Blue Jay hitters, particularly Moseby and Cliff Johnson.

Johnson's two-out, two-run homer in the bottom of the ninth tied it, then Moseby followed Buck Martinez' infield hit with his second two-run shot against the Indians.

"When Cliff hit the homer, I was fired up," Moseby said. "I was still fired up when Buck got on and I got to the plate. I felt relaxed up there because I knew I was swinging good. I already had three hits. I was just trying to drive the ball up the middle.

White Sox 13, Yankees 3

The weather in Chicago was the same as it was in Toronto — but Luzinski's bat was as hot as Moseby's. The designated hitter for the White Sox drove in five runs with a three-run homer off Jay Howell in the first inning and a two-run shot off Bob Shirley in the eighth. They were his first homers of the year for the White Sox.

Chicago, which raked four New York pitchers for 11 hits, sent five runs home in the sixth inning, two on Greg Walker's pinch-single. Steve Kemp homered for two of the Yankees' runs.

Twins 6, Mariners 2

"It's a good feeling to get that one over with. It takes the pressure off," Brunansky said after breaking out of a slump with his first homer of the year, which broke a 2-2 tie with the Mariners.

The Twins added insurance runs on RBI-singles by Lenny Faedo in the seventh inning and Randy Bush and Ray Smith in the eighth. Bush also had a run-scoring double.

Dulin quits MC post

Midland College tennis coach Leon Dulin has turned in his resignation effective the end of the season it was announced Tuesday night at the school's meeting of the board of trustees.

"I just decided I didn't want to coach any more," said Dulin who has been the Chapparal tennis coach for two years. "I've gotten to the point where I'm 45 and I'm spending a lot of time on the road. I have three kids, one of them is married and the other two are 12 and nine and I'd like to spend some time with them. And, that's the long and short of it."

Last year, his first at MC, Dulin guided the Chaparral women to a fifth place finish in the national tournament and the men to eighth. This year he hopes to see the team return to the upcoming national tournament.

Coaching tennis, until coming to Midland, has primarily been a pass-time for Dulin who has been in "college education since 1970. I didn't coach a lot of that time, only about eight years," he said.

Now that he's out of coaching, what are his prospects like at Midland College?

"I'm not sure," he said. "There's a possibility that I will stay, I would like to. I would like to stay in Midland. If there is an opening, I'd like to be considered for it. As it stands, I'm looking for a physical education job in one of the small colleges in Texas.

Eagles shock Bobcats, 15-0

On Saturday Midland Lee embarassed Abilene High with 24 hits enroute to a 19-2 District 4-5A victory. That loss must have made the Eagles mad because they turned around and did a number on San Angelo Tuesday, 15-0, that dropped the Bobcats into a tie for first place with Lee.

Eagle starting pitcher Jay Gravens held the Bobcats to a four-hitter in recording the victory while his teammates banged out 17 hits and played spotless defense.

The victory gives Abilene High a 6-5 district record and a share of third place in the race for one of two state playoff berths. Tied with the Eagles are Big Spring and Odessa High which sets up a big game on Saturday with OHS hosting AHS at 2 p.m. The loser will almost certainly drop out of the playoff picture.

In another big 4-5A drubbing, Abilene Cooper used 20 hits and nine Big Spring errors to gain a 23-3 victory. Going into the game, Big Spring held sole possession of third place and looked to be the best bet to catch leaders San Angelo and Lee.

Leading 7-0 after four, Cooper put the game away with a 12-run fifth inning.

Big Spring will be in Midland on Saturday to take on the Lee Rebels at Lee Field at 2 p.m.

Captains drill Tulsa in tenth

By The Associated Press

Shortstop John Stevenson raced home with the winning run on a wild pitch in the 10th inning Tuesday night as the Shreveport Captains took a 4-3 victory over the Tulsa Drillers.

In other Texas League action, El Paso slipped past Beaumont, 2-1, and Jackson's scheduled game at Arkansas was postponed because of rain.

Stevenson had doubled and stolen third to set up the winning run. Mark Schuster's three-run homer had given the Captains a 3-0 lead in the fourth inning.

Tulsa scored one run in the fifth when Jim Foit singled home Kprge Buechele, who had doubled. The Drillers tied the game at 3-3 in the sixth when Mike Ruble homered after Chuckie Canady singled.

Dennis Long, 1-1, was the winning pitcher. The loser was Larry McLane, 0-1.

Ernest Riles singled home Carlos Ponce with the winning run in the seventh inning as the El Paso Diablos edged the Beaumont Golden Gators, 2-1.

Ponce had doubled. Billy Max had two hits in four trips to the plate for El Paso.

Bryan Cutterbuck, 1-2, who allowed only five hits, was the winning pitcher. George Stablein, 1-2, who gave up seven hits, was the losing pitcher.

Sale of Eagles in works

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Philadelphia Eagles Vice President Susan Fletcher has met with a Minneapolis banker to discuss selling an interest in the National Football League franchise.

Fletcher, who is the daughter of Eagles owner Leonard Tose, said she had a three-hour introductory meeting Monday with multimillionaire Carl Pohlad, 67, who is president of Minnesota's fourth-largest bank.

She said Pohlad had contacted the Eagles about two months ago. Fletcher said she had had serious discussions with several other prospective buyers.

Fletcher, a lawyer who has taken over the Eagles' financial operations, said Tuesday that Pohlad would get back in touch with her at an unspecified date. "The ball is in his court," she added.

Both Tose and his daughter said they would consider selling the team if the price were somewhere in the vicinity of $100 million.

It's just one more statistic

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Baseball, which needed it about the way Germany needs another cannon or Italy a tenor, got a new statistic this year. Game-winning RBI.

Now, one of the charms of the grand old game is that it's already barnacled with statistics. If you want to know the most one-base hits made by an Italian outfielder with a Swedish mother in the second game of doubleheaders, the baseball filberts will dredge it right up for you.

You want to know the most bases stolen in the rain by Cuban-born left fielders, some trivia buff will have it. The records for switch-hitters are kept in triplicate in a vault in New York. You want to know how many hot dogs Babe Ruth consumed between innnings of the 1923 World Series, you can find out.

ONCE, WHEN a figure-happy veteran sports scribe struggled into a Polo Grounds press box lugging a valise, and someone wanted to know what was inside, the late Jimmy Cannon took one scornful look and spat, "Decimal points!"

Our national pastime is really compound fractions, the complicated readouts of prowess, and I have no real quarrel with the logarithms of the sport. Except to wonder why they always give themselves the best of it.

You take batting averages. The papers tell you that Clouts Corrigan "batted" .299 last season. Well, that, of course, means that old Clouts didn't hit at a .701 pace. Seven out of 10 times they got old Clouts out of there. They tell you Clouts got 22 doubles or three triples or 21 home runs. What they don't tell you is, Clouts got 209 popups to short right, 110 groundouts and no telling how many foul balls, called strikes and nubbers along the third-base line.

THAT'S THE trouble with "game winning" hits. I mean, what about "game-losing" hits? What about the double-play balls with the bases loaded in the bottom of the ninth with the game or the flag on the line?

Baseball is a study in failure. Even in his best years, Ty Cobb made an out 6 out of 10 times. Any other business, he'd get fired. Here, they put him in the Hall of Fame.

Baseball, as a sport, adopts an "and the good news is!" philosophy. It's a the-plane-is-lost-but-it's-making-good-time type of approach.

For instance, you may note that Rickey Henderson broke the record for stolen bases (130) last season. He also broke the record for most times caught stealing (42). A jewel thief would be out of business, but never mind that. We deal in the positive in baseball. Don't look for a note on which catchers he stole on. The catchers protest you steal on pitchers. But don't look for a note on which pitchers he stole on, either. There may be a renegade computer some place which will punch up that info for you, but it's contraband. If you don't believe it, try to find out how many wild pitches a pitcher threw the season before in the team media guide. What are ya, a Communist?!

THE GUY who produces the game-winning RBI may have struck out on five previous trips to the plate when he had a chance to blow the game wide open, but one lucky swing and he's a hero. Baseball protects the inept. They say of a guy who goes 0 for 5 but gets a handle-hit ground ball that drives in a run in the ninth, "He's a gamer."

The game-winning RBI is as fraudulent a stat as the RBI itself. To get any non-home-run RBI requires there be Rs out there to be Bled. yon s jin5ams, a guy may bat in, say, 125 runs a season. But on say, the 1927 Yankees, there may be 1,000 runners out there in the course of a year waiting to be knocked in. On some other teams, say the 1963 Dodgers, there may be runners out there only every other eclipse of the moon.

There are other coverups. Such as,

THE SAVE — A really fraudulent stat. This rewards a guy with a salary-negotiation ploy. He comes in a game with a lead and leaves with a lead when it's over. It doesn't matter how badly he pitches. Sometimes, if he pitches badly, he creates a "save" for himself by putting a tying run on base and facing the on-deck hitter. You can get a save pitching no more than one inning and you can get one by pitching the last three innings of a 14-1 game. There are stats to show how many games are won or lost by regular pitchers but no stats to show how many "saves" are lost by inept pitchers. Only his successes, meager as they may be, are recorded.

THE ERA — No, Virginia, this does not have to do with the wage scale of stenographers. This is a piece of mathematical legerdemain which scatters the debris of half or no truth to cloak inability, the ever-lovin' earned-run average. You are asked to believe the ERA, not your eyes. A not-so-hypothetical example will suffice to illustrate its idiocy. A pitcher comes in a game with the bases loaded and two out in the bottom of the ninth, his team leading by two runs. He gives up a three-base hit to the batter. For 200 autographed photos of Boots Poffenberger, how many earned runs did he give up? Answer: none. Those runs "belonged" to the previous pitcher. Did he even lose the game? No. The previous pitcher did. All our hero lost was a "save." He may do something similar to this all season and never have an earned-run average above 1. A pitcher may even avoid being charged with an earned run if he gives up a home run. This can happen if the batter happened to have hit a foul ball on an earlier pitch which the fielder muffed.

THE SACRIFICE FLY — The batter's friend. This is an on-again, off-again rule which spares a batter being charged a time at bat if he hits a fly ball which permits a runner to score from third. This is as bogus a rule as it is possible to write. A "sacrifice" is normally a justifiable forgiveness of a time at bat to a batsman who deliberately chokes up on the bat and just punches a little sure out back to the third baseman in the hope of advancing the runner. He gives himself up. A "sacrifice" fly is a ball hit as hard as the batter can hit it. He's trying for a home run, is what he's doing. This is no more done in the spirit of sacrifice than a guy who gives up rhubarb for Lent.

So, clutch the game-winning RBI to your slide rule, Baseball. Give us some .190 hitter who leads both leagues in game winners, a guy who got lucky on his fifth at-bat. I don't want to know how many winning runs he drove in till you can tell me how many he left there. A LOB (for left on base) is a team stat. Until it's an individual, until we can tell whether the GWRBI is from a hero or from some banjoist to whom the manager says "Well, it's about time!" we'll pass.

Ross jumps to USFL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The signing of Cincinnati Bengals tight end Dan Ross by the United States Football League's Boston Breakers has prompted the National Football League Management Council to suggest a clause in contracts that would prevent players with NFL teams from signing future deals with the USFL.

Ross, who set a Cincinnati club record with 71 catches and a Super Bowl mark with 11 receptions in 1981, signed a reported $1.5 million contract with the Breakers beginning in 1984. He will play with the Bengals next season.

The NFL Players Association opposed the Management Council proposal. Dick Berthelsen, counsel for the union, said that a 1974 federal court ruling in the case of ex-Bengal linebacker Bill Bergey frees a person under a personal services contract to negotiate a future contract.

Chet Simmons, commissioner of the USFL, told ABC Radio Sports that the league had acted on the basis of that ruling.

Controversial measure in natural gas decontrol bill has roots in history

By DORY DEVLIN
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — It may seem startling that Congress has the power to authorize the dissolution of legal contracts. But that precedent was established long ago and may now pave the way for passage of natural gas decontrol legislation.

Most natural gas decontrol bills now pending in Congress include a provision that would allow gas producers and pipeline companies to renegotiate contracts immediately after the legislation is passed. The gas industry favors renegotiation of high-priced gas contracts because demand for gas is currently low but prices remain high.

"The contracts do not reflect what the market is doing," said Dick Lambert, spokesman for the American Gas Association, noting that gas sales to industrial users are down. As a result, utilities are passing high costs on to consumers.

A House Energy and Commerce Committee aide called the pipeline contracts a "rigid mechanism that doesn't allow the system to respond to the market." Renegotiating contracts would provide the "incentive to move toward cheaper gas to reflect current market conditions," he added.

The rationale for allowing the abrogation of private business contracts is rooted in Article I of the U.S. Constitution and dates back to the 1800s in court cases, according to Energy Department officials.

In a 21-page March memo to Energy Secretary Donald P. Hodel, DOE's acting general counsel, Eric J. Fygi, concluded that the constitutional source of Congress' power to authorize the modification of contracts is Article I, section 8, which grants Congress the power to "regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states...."

Although article I, section 10 of the Constitution says "No state shall ... pass any ... law impairing the obligation of contracts," Fygi said this restriction does not apply to the federal government.

In 1824, in a case concerning the licensing of coastal trade ships, Supreme Court Chief Justice John Marshall said Congress has the power to regulate commerce. "This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations," he said.

The strongest court precedent allowing Congress to approve the abrogation of contracts is found in the 1935 "Gold Clause Cases". The Supreme Court upheld legislation stating that bond payments do not have to be issued in gold coins — a decision that moved the country away from the gold standard.

Despite arguments that Congress was overstepping its authority to regulate currency because the measure affected existing contracts which called for payment in gold, the court said contracts "cannot fetter the constitutional authority of the Congress."

"Contracts may create rights of property, but when contracts deal with a subject matter which lies within the control of the Congress, they have a congenital infirmity," the court held.

If passed, a provision allowing the renegotiation of pipeline contracts within decontrol legislation would not mark the first time Congress has regulated contracts within the gas industry. In fact, the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 calls "unenforceable" any contract that prohibits mixing together interstate and intrastate gas.

The contracts subject to renegotiation if Congress passes decontrol legislation with such a provision are primarily take-or-pay contracts between pipelines and producers, but also contracts between pipelines and distributors.

Take-or-pay contracts that force pipelines to take or pay for a set amount of gas increased in cost and number in the late 1970s. Since then, some pipelines and producers have already negotiated new contracts, a House Energy and Commerce committee staffer said.

"Anybody can do it now," Lambert said of modifying contracts. But,"this (provision) would give one party the power (to abrogate a contract) even if the other party didn't want to."

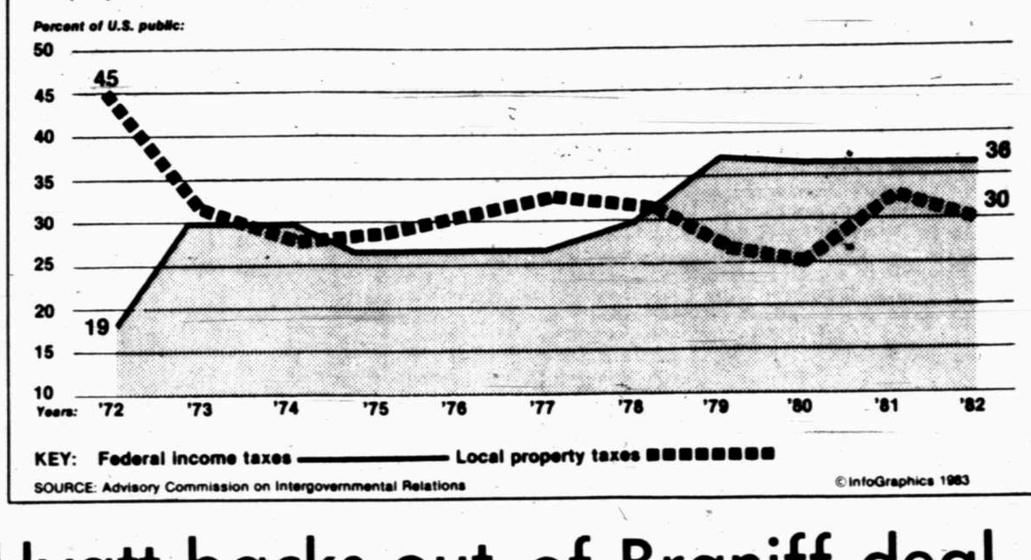

Markup of natural gas decontrol legislation is currently going on in the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. In the House, however, where many bills have been introduced, markup isn't expected until June.

Decontrol legislation reaching the floors of both houses most likely will contain a contract renegotiation provision.

"Most people in this town understand that high-priced contracts have got to be changed," Lambert said.

Which tax is the most unfair?

Local property taxes and federal income taxes have competed with each other for ten years for the title of "most unfair" in the eyes of American taxpayers. A yearly survey puts the income tax easily ahead. Property tax was in first place until the inflation of the '70s put many taxpayers into higher income brackets. Then the passage of Proposition 13 gave many the feeling property taxes were being assessed more fairly.

Hyatt backs out of Braniff deal

DALLAS (AP) — Former Braniff International employees hoping to fly again with the grounded carrier were dealt another blow when the Hyatt Corp., the latest and perhaps the last suitor, backed out.

The Chicago-based hotel chain, which had offered about $35 million to put 31 Braniff planes and 2,000 former employees back to work, actually informed Braniff officials it was withdrawing its offer before Braniff's board of directors met Monday to discuss the plan.

Hyatt said Tuesday that its letter was delivered Monday afternoon to Braniff, only hours before the Texas carrier filed a plane of reorganization in federal bankruptcy court in Fort Worth.

"In order to avoid further acrimony, it seems in the best interests of the parties involved that Hyatt withdraw its proposal," the Hyatt letter read. "We truly regret any hopes that have been raised and dashed among a wonderfully loyal and dedicated group of Braniff employees."

Braniff chairman Howard Putnam said Hyatt was the last potential partner with which Braniff was formally negotiating, but added he would welcome any new offers until May 16, the last day Braniff could submit to the bankruptcy court plans to resume air service.

Hyatt said Braniff's situation was unwieldy, and pleasing courts and creditors was a difficult task.

"The proposed transaction is complex and must be completed under difficult time constraints. This requires a higher degree of cooperation and support than has been forthcoming," Hyatt said.

Braniff's reorganization plan sets up a Dallas-based maintenance operation and leaves the door open for resumed air service. But Braniff has only until May 16 to come up with a plan and $60 million to put planes back in the air before its remaining aircraft are put on the auction block.

Putnam said a Braniff board member Tuesday talked 40 minutes with Hyatt chairman Jay Pritzger trying to convince the head of the hotel chain to resume talks.

Representatives of Braniff's unions met Tuesday night with retired pilots Glenn Shoop and Jack Morton, who helped bring Hyatt and Braniff together, and drafted a bitterly worded letter to Braniff's board accusing the airline of refusing to deal in good faith.

Marvin Schlinke, president of Local 19 of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, said he hoped there would be an investigation into Putnam's handling of the Hyatt negotiations.

"We said he should resign and put in someone more impartial to deal with Hyatt," Schlinke said, adding that he believed Putnam catered more to creditors than former employees.

Hyatt initially offered $10 million in a plan that called for creditors to provide $50 million in notes and the hotel company to get 80 percent control of Braniff. But the creditors vetoed that proposal, and Hyatt increased the offer $35 million, said Braniff vice president for finance M. Philip Guthrie.

Braniff plans to run its maintenance operations at Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport and Dallas Love Field.

Putnam estimated that the operation, which would employ about 200 former Braniff workers, would gross $10 to $15 million the first year and give unsecured creditors about 10 cents on the dollar.

"It's not big. It's small. But without a flight operation, it's the best we can come up with," Putnam said.

Braniff, whose flight system once included North and South America and Europe, faced a $1 billion debt when the carrier ceased operations May 12 and filed for bankruptcy protection in U.S. Bankruptcy Judge John Flowers' court the next day.

Last fall, Braniff and Pacific Southwest Airlines announced a joint operating venture that would have used Braniff planes and former Braniff employees.

The plan was approved by Flowers and a federal district judge, but was shot down by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Braniff's employee groups sent a telegram to the company Sunday evening saying they fully supported the Hyatt proposal, which they said had been "sweetened" to meet the terms recommended by Braniff to get the airline back into operation.

Paine Webber pursues Rotan Mosle

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Shaking off near disastrous troubles in 1980, Paine Webber Inc. made its first major expansion move in years Tuesday by announcing its intention to acquire Houston-based Rotan Mosle Financial Corp., the largest brokerage firm in the Southwest.

Rotan Mosle's fortunes in recent years have closely paralleled the boom-and-bust cycle of the energy business, which it promoted with research and helped finance with supersalesmanship.

In a transaction that would be worth about $77.5 million at Tuesday's closing stock prices, the owners of Rotan Mosle would receive 1.49 million shares of Paine Webber's common stock. The agreement is subject to approval by directors of both firms.

With the acquisition, Paine Webber joins other large financial-service firms in a merger wave that has seen some of the nation's largest and most prestigious independent regional brokerages swallowed up by larger national firms. Although there has been a hiatus in the merger fever in the last year, five prominent regional brokerages were acquired by financial conglomerates in the seven months between August 1981 and March 1982.

More significantly for Paine Webber, the acquisition reflects how dramatically the brokerage that ranks eighth nationally in capital base has resurrected itself from 1980 back-office foulups that stemmed from the confluence of its acquisition of Blyth Eastman Dillon & Co. and surging stock market volume for which the brokerage was unprepared.

The mess brought Paine Webber to the brink of financial collapse. Regulators have privately acknowledged that Paine Webber technically violated federal capital rules briefly in 1980 — a condition that, except for unusual forbearance by government officials, would have mandated an emergency merger or liquidation.

In the years since, under the new leadership of chief executive Donald Marron, Paine Webber has taken steps to shore up its management and clean up its financial condition. "We wanted to have good strong management, good cash flow and a very solid balance sheet before accelerating our expansion," Marron said in an interview.

Earnings released by Paine Webber on Tuesday were testimony to both the firm's own recovery and continuing strong stock market volume.

Texas bankers have duty to lend

DALLAS (AP) — Texas bankers have an obligation to lend money in Mexico, despite that country's crippled economy, the chairman of a large Texas bank holding company says.

Ben F. Love, chairman and chief executive officer of Houston-based Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc., said Tuesday, "Texas banks have a duty to do business with Mexico" because of Mexico's $83 billion foreign debt.

But Love added that because of recent peso devaluations, "it would be ideal to have no loans to Mexico."

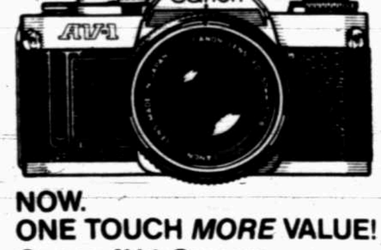

Vice Chairman Charles C. Beall expressed optimisim the economic situation in Mexico would improve.

Beall said that at the end of March, the bank's "total exposure to Mexican borrowers was $307 million, or three percent of total loans."

"While we continue to view the problems in Mexico with concern, we believe the country's current government has taken the appropriate actions to resolve its problems," he said.

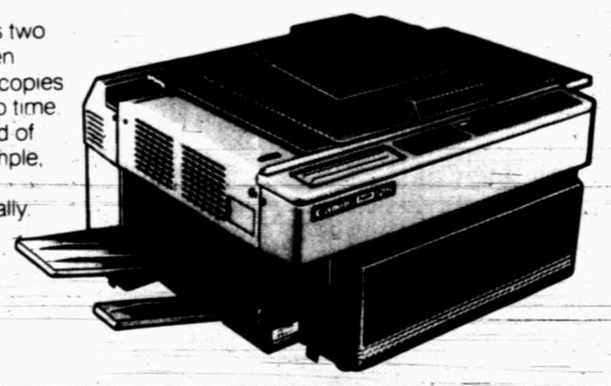

Love, in Dallas for the organization's annual shareholders meeting, reported Texas Commerce Bancshares had a record 19 percent increase in earnings during 1982.

Stock market gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market advanced moderately today, rebounding from Tuesday's setback.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, off 8.70 Tuesday, rose 5.70 to 1,180.24 by noontime today.

Gainers held a 5-3 lead over losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

In Tuesday's session the market encountered some selling after a stretch of eight consecutive gains. But analysts noted that prices stabilized late in the day, suggesting that no rush to take profits was in the offing.

Interest rates, which rose fairly sharply in the credit markets Tuesday, also leveled off today.

The government reported this morning that the gross national product, adjusted for inflation, grew at a 3.1 percent annual rate in the first quarter of the year. The figure was about a percentage point below previous estimates, but it didn't appear to cause any great concern among traders.

General Public Utilities led the active list, up ⅝ at 9½ in trading that included a 310,000-share block at 9¼. On Tuesday the Supreme Court ruled that regulators considering whether to allow a restart of GPU's undamaged Three Mile Island nuclear reactor in Pennsylvania need not take into account the psychological effect on nearby residents

The NYSE's composite index gained .39 to 91.57. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 1.92 at 409.89.

Volume on the Big Board came to 41.66 million shares at noontime, against 45.79 million at the same point Tuesday.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Super NOW best for checks

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Until recently, I always kept my money in a savings account. I know I could have earned more sending it to a money market mutual fund, but I like the convenience of dealing with a local bank and especially, federal agency insurance.

Then, when banks were allowed to offer the new money market deposit accounts, I was probably among the first to sign up for one. At last I'm getting a "money market yield" on my savings.

When I made my most recent deposit, I was told the bank will soon be offering a "super NOW account." The teller said this will be even better than my present account. Should I move my money to a super NOW account?

A. That depends on whether or not you expect to write a lot of checks. A money market deposit account, which banks and savings and loan associations have been able to offer since Dec. 14, allows only three checks and three preauthorized transfers a month. A super NOW account, which banks and S&Ls have offered since Jan. 5, will have unlimited check-writing privileges.

Doyle

Both types of accounts require $2,500 minimum balances. Banks and S&Ls can pay any interest they like on them. However, usually the super NOW accounts pay slightly less interest than money market deposit accounts.

So if your bank account is strictly a savings account, stay with the money market deposit account. But if you intend to use it as a checking account, switch to a super NOW account.

Your reasons for keeping money in a local bank are similar to those of most people. While they were growing in size to more than $320 billion, the money market mutual funds drained much of that money out of banks and S&Ls. Just the same, the money in savings accounts still exceeds the total of the money market fund industry.

Q. My husband is 57 and will retire at the end of this month. We are taking his pension money in a lump sum. Seeing as we are some years from Social Security, we will have to use some of this pension money to live on. But, we also want to realize good interest on the money we don't have to spend.

We do not want any risk with this money. What do you suggest we do with it?

A. The first thing you should do is decide whether to put that money in a rollover individual retirement account or use the 10-year averaging method for paying income tax on it.

If the money goes into a rollover IRA, you will have to pay income taxes only on the amounts you withdraw. If you use 10-year averaging, the money will be taxed as if it were received over 10 years, also reducing the total tax bite.

The choice between rollover IRA or 10-year averaging has to be made according to each family's overall financial situation. Based on the informatuion you supply, the rollover IRA seems to be the better route.

That still leaves the question of where to put the money. Since you're clearly adamant about taking no risk, the natural suggestion is to open the rollover IRA at a bank or savings and loan association with federal agency insurance, where it will be covered by federal agency insurance.

Q. I read that a husband can pay his housewife a salary, which she can then use to open an IRA and-or Keogh retirement plan. I also read that Social Security taxes would be due on the housewife's wages. Where can I get more information on this?

A. No! No! No! You badly misunderstood what you read. A husband can't pay his wife for doing housework, any more than a wife can pay a husband for doing dishes or other chores around the home, and use the salary for IRA and-or Keogh plan purposes.

When one spouse has a business, he or she can hire the other spouse to work in that business. But it has to be to do a business-related job — not housework.

Furthermore, Social Security taxes are paid on the hired spouse's income only if the business is incorporated. If a self-employed husband hires his wife, no Social Security taxes are paid on the wife's salary.

Q. I have invested in a tax-free municipal bond fund. If this fund makes capital gains distributions, will that also be tax-free?

A. No. A mutual fund of that type invests in municipal bonds issued by states and their political subdivisions. Because interest from municipal bonds is not subject to federal income tax, the fund passes on that interest to its shareholders as dividends, free from federal income tax.

Capital gains distributions come from the net profit a mutual fund realizes by selling securities it has owned. Some of the sales are at a profit; some at a loss. The net profit — if any — is passed on as a capital gains distribution.

Capital gains distributions are taxable as capital gains. You are required to report them as such on your income tax return. If your fund makes capital gains distributions, the Form 1099 the fund sends you each January will list which portion is a long-term capital gain and which portion is a short-term capital gain.

Q. I say the high certificate rates announced by some banks are scams to dupe people into thinking they are getting more interest on their money. Over the same period of time, I received more dollars in interest from a bank offering 10.25 percent than I did from another bank offering 10.375 percent.

How can a person "shop around" and not be duped by so-called higher rates?

A. It's not easy. There are dozens of different ways to compute interest. The biggest variations usually involve frequency of compounding. If interest is added to your account and compounded daily to earn more interest, you naturally earn more than if interest is compounded monthly, quarterly, semiannually or annually. Some banks don't compound interest at all.

The best way to shop around is to ask each bank for the "annual percentage yield." That's the actual number of dollars per $100 your money will earn on an annual basis.

Answer to today's Crossword Puzzle

Big banks go to congress with hats in hand

By WARREN T. BROOKES
Hearst Feature Service

OPINION

A few years ago I enjoyed a vicarious private jet-romp via Public Television through the financial centers of Europe with David Rockefeller and "the men from Chase Manhattan."

It was an exhilarating experience, replete with intimate moments of in-flight discussions with the Great One about the noblesse-oblige of lending to the Third World nations (LDCs — loans to developing countries). We were even treated to a side excursion to a five-star gourmet meal in Provence, France, where the truffles were richly toothsome.

But I didn't know then that some day I'd get to pick up the tab. The money Rockefeller was spreading around to all those Third World countries that begged at his hotel-suite audiences in Vienna was the same $12-32 a barrel I was paying OPEC for the privilege of staying warm, recycled into unredeemable credit to nations whose economic policies would even embarrass Karl Marx.

Now Rockefeller's bank is hat in hand on Capitol Hill, looking for tax dollars to help the International Monetary Fund (IMF) deal with that bad debt. (Chase's share is 2.2 times its equity.) If the big bankers succeed, about 2 cents of every income tax dollar you just declared will wind up going through IMF's international money laundry back into the coffers of the likes of Citicorp, Morgan Guaranty and Chase Manhattan.

Ironically, this IMF contribution would not be made until the end of this year, when experts like Robert Weintraub, Chief Economist of the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, argue "the crisis, such as it is, will be on its way out.

"In fact," Weintraub says, "the problem was never as serious as it was 'sold.' Out of $250 billion in LDC borrowing, U.S. banks hold about $108 billion, and of that only Mexico ($25 billion) and Venezuela ($14 billion) ever presented really serious problems. Since Mexico devalued so sharply last summer, many of its trade balance problems are beginning to ease. This means that most of these really scary scenarios of a world-wide banking collapse are just imaginary nonsense. Besides, the IMF has $47 billion in gold, more than it needs to cope."

WHAT WORRIES Weintraub, and should worry the big begging banks, is that the "price of this IMF expansion will be much tougher regulation on the banking industry — and I wouldn't be surprised if a lot of banks are having second thoughts."

Not enough, apparently, to stop the "fix" that is more or less on in Congress these days to give the Reagan Administration what it is asking for — $8.4 billion in additional U.S. "subscription" capital for the IMF. In turn, the IMF will use this money to create "special drawing rights" (SDRs) and "General Agreements to Borrow" (GABs — or is it GRABs?) to keep the LDCs from going into default on their nearly $500 billion in loans from the West.

For some banks, the stakes are very large: Citicorp has $9.8 billion out to LDCs, $7.6 of it to Brazil and Mexico alone. This amounts to 203 percent of its total equity value.

The SEC says the top 10 banks are now "exposed" to the tune of nearly $44 billion, which is 1.5 times their total net worth. If none of these loans was repaid, the top banks would fold. While there is almost no likelihood of that happening, its potential looms large and hangs heavy over Washington, particularly under the barrage of arguments skillfully marshalled by Treasury Secretary Donald Regan on the role of this credit and the IMF in supporting the huge volume of U.S. sales to Third World countries (30 percent of our exports).

"Four out of every five new jobs in U.S. manufacturing in the 1970s came from foreign trade," Regan told the Congress in February. "Every $1 billion increase in exports results in 24,000 new jobs." And vice versa.

REGAN WARNED WE could see a $25 billion reduction in total exports to the LDC countries "if banks were to pull out entirely from new (LDC) lending this year." This translates into 600,000 manufacturing jobs — enough to frighten any Congressman.

Fortunately, there's at least one person on the Hill who is not impressed. Sen. Gordon Humphrey of New Hampshire argues sensibly, "If we bail out all these banks and their bad debtors, we're simply resorting to political allocation of credit by IMF. The credit-worthy, both here and abroad, will lose out to credit-unworthy. The market and the economy lose."

Sen. Humphrey argues that subsidies of any kind have a way of being a "zero-sum" game, since they reward more costly behavior. "Why can't we look for market-based solutions and force both the banks and the nations to come to terms with their own problems, instead of subsidizing their continuance? Why, for example, should sound American businesses and consumers have to pay sky-high interest rates just because a lot of big banks have to compensate for a lot of very bad loans?"

In fact, Weintraub argues that his "bail-out" might ensure even higher interest rates, as banks go on loaning to keep their LDC creditors afloat, charging higher rates here to support them.

Since 1981, while the rates banks pay to borrow money (on certificates of deposit) have dropped 6 points, the rates they charge on consumer installment credit and autos have fallen less than 2 points, and mortgages less than 3.5. This means that the banks, not the consumer, have pocketed most of the interest rate drop in the form of a higher "spread" between what banks pay for money and what they get for it. First National of Boston just reported that in 1982 its domestic "spread" more than doubled, even as its overseas "spread" dropped by 15 percent! (They have over $1 billion in LDC loans.)

Congress should pause and find out how much the taxpayer is already paying in good money to subsidize bad banking.

River watcher respects the water

COOCHIE, La. (AP) — Life on the water has been good to Sam Virden. After years at sea, he's content to captain a boat that spends most of its time tied up at a dock, guarding the flood gates that keep the mighty Mississippi in its channel.

"The river is nothing, really," says Virden, 68. "I've pushed ships through 35-to-50-foot seas in the North Atlantic. I've spent a life at sea."

Now nearing retirement, he commands the 85-foot Kent, ready to protect the Old River Control Structure, a series of flood gates, from runaway barges or powerless boats.

"I respect the water but I'm not scared of it," Virden says. "I was born on a 25-foot boat close to Grande Isle during a storm...You learn a lot when you've spent most of your life at sea."

Virden spends his days watching the river, tinkering with inventions and complaining to his bosses, Army Corps of Engineers officials, on the evils of long-distance commuting.

The Old River Control Structure that the Kent guards keeps the great river from changing its course into the Atchafalaya Basin.

"We didn't live in a house until I was 12 years old. In those days if you had 25 cents in your pocket you were better off than I am now with a $100 bill in mine. You talk about poor. All you had to do was find us and you'd find the poorest people in the world."

"It's not the same, of course, but it's still an important job even if I do have to drive 140 miles to work," said Virden.

There is little glamour to the watch at Coochie.

With more than 100 barges passing each day, there always is the danger that one might work loose and be carried into the Old River channel to crash against the already weak structure.

A new $300 million set of flood gates is under construction. When finished, it should eliminate the hazards posed by the Old River Control Structure.

Unlike many seamen, Virden is a good swimmer. He once had to swim for his life and his difficulty in shedding enough clothing to stay afloat made an impression on him.

"That's why you'll never see me on board with a belt or boots. You go overboard and you don't have much time. Clothes get in the way. I'm always ready to get naked if I have to make the bank. It's a good precaution."

Virden said, however, that doesn't mean he's afraid.

"My father never worked for a salary in his life. He died at 86. He always trapped, fished and hunted for a living.

"We didn't live in a house until I was 12 years old. In those days if you had 25 cents in your pocket you were better off than I am now with a $100 bill in mine. You talk about poor. All you had to do was find us and you'd find the poorest people in the world.

"When I got old enough I shipped out. I've worked in Singapore, Africa, the North Sea, you name it. Once, I worked for the Geological Survey for a dollar a day and took a break from merchant ships during the war to join the Coast Guard. It's been a good life."

Transferred from the New Orleans district a couple of years ago, Virden refused to move from his home in a New Orleans suburb to this rural community about 50 miles north of Baton Rouge.

He works aboard the Kent for a few days and on his time off drives the 140 miles to Marrero to be with his family.

Inventions during his spare time led to patents for a core borer and an oil skimmer.

The borer, used to bring up soil samples to determine oil or gas content, could be used offshore by the petroleum industry but Virden said he hasn't pushed it.

Is melted chocolate bar still a bar?

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you melt a chocolate bar, is it still a chocolate bar or is it something else?

That's the question confronting the U.S. Customs Service, and it wants help in deciding.

The question comes up because a Canadian company, Comet Confections, wants to open a plant in Vermont.

Comet would be bringing in the chocolate from Canada, melted and shipped in large tank trucks.

When that chocolate crosses the border, the question of duty arises. Thus enters the Customs bureau. But current regulations just don't mention liquid chocolate.

The rules do mention bars or blocks of chocolate weighing 10 pounds or more. The duty on those is two-tenths of a cent per pound.

Stephen Creskoff, a Washington lawyer who represents Comet, said his client's chocolate would certainly be a block weighing more than 10 pounds if the heat in the tank trucks were turned off, so it should qualify for that rate.

But Customs officals suggested that instead of classifying the liquid as a large block, it should be placed in the category of "other" chocolate. If it is "other," the rate would be 5 percent of the value.

Facing this sticky dispute, Customs called for public comment in a notice in the Federal Register. Interested persons can send in their opinions until May 23. Letters should go to the Commissioner of Customs, Regulations Control Branch, Room 2426, 1301 Constitution Ave., NW, Washington, D.C., 20229.

Camp can be enjoyable

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Sending the kids to summer camp can be an expensive proposition, but a little work in advance can save you money and increase your youngsters' enjoyment.

Alice Goldsmith, one of the authors of a new guide, "Summer Camps & Programs," said camps have "changed tremendously" over the past 15 or 20 years.

Camping programs are shorter than they used to be, she said; there are more four-week programs available, for example. There is also a greater variety of activities. "People are broadening their horizons," looking for specialized camps or programs which feature travel and new experiences, Ms. Goldsmith explained.

A full summer at camp can run several thousand dollars, but it need not, she said.

There are generally two types of camps — private and agency-sponsored. Private camps are usually run by an individual for profit. Costs vary tremendously, Ms. Goldsmith said. A typical price for a private camp is about $200 a week, not counting transportation to the camp and "hidden extras" for things like supplies.

Agency-sponsored camps are run by organizations like the YMCA, the Boy Scouts or religious groups. Ms. Goldsmith said they usually cost under $100 a week, and most agencies will not turn anyone away because of lack of money, but will work out a sliding scale of fees if necessary.

"WATCH OUT for the brochures that promise everything," Ms. Goldsmith said.

The most important thing about a camp — particularly for younger children — is the staff. "The worst horror...would be a bad staff," Ms. Goldsmith said. "That's something that you just can't overcome. If a physical facility is substandard that's bad also, but somehow having staff members that aren't responsive to the needs of children would be the worst thing that you could have..."

Try to talk to the director of the camp, Ms. Goldsmith said. "You also have to check references. Get names of children who have gone through the program the previous year. Call or write to these people and check on the kind of experiences that their children have had."

The ratio of counselors to campers also is important. "Usually a ratio of one (counselor) to five (campers) is generally good," Ms. Goldsmith said, but it is important to understand what the numbers mean. Do the figures include counselors only, for example, or is the entire camp staff added in?

"SUMMER Camps & Programs," which includes descriptions of more than 250 individual plans, also offers a list of basic questions parents should ask. Among them:

—What are the ages of the campers? Check ages of all the campers and those who will be in your child's immediate group. Make sure there are other youngsters who are the same age as your child, particularly if it is his or her first experience away from home.

—How many children attend camp at one time? Programs with fewer campers may be better for younger children, but even larger camps are usually broken into divisions.

—What are the living accommodations? How many children live in a cabin? Do counselors stay with the youngsters or do they have separate living quarters? What are the bathroom facilities? How primitive — or lavish — are the accomodations?

—What are the camp's medical services? Is there a nurse or doctor living on the premises? How far is the nearest medical facility?

—What is the background of the camp director and staff? How long has the director owned or managed the camp? What are his or her educational qualifications? What are the ages of the counselors and how are they chosen?

Andropov still challenged by Brezhnev machine

Konstantin U. Chernenko

MOSCOW (AP) — Five months after taking over as Communist Party chief, Yuri V. Andropov is meeting stiff challenges from the Brezhnev political machine led by Kremlin ideologist Konstantin U. Chernenko, Soviet sources say.

The latest and strongest signal of divisiveness and infighting within the ruling Politburo, the sources say, was the postponement of a party Central Committee plenary session scheduled for the last week of March.

The strength of the Brezhnev machine in the upper echelons of the party frustrated Andropov's plan to call the plenum and ram through a number of major personnel and policy changes, according to the sources, who spoke on condition they not be named or otherwise identified.

The informants say the plenum now won't be held until June, delaying changes Andropov hoped to make by at least two months. It remains to be seen if, during that period, he can muster the backing to restart the shakeup he began shortly after taking over following Leonid Brezhnev's death last November.

Such plenary sessions are never announced in advance, making it impossible to confirm officially that one either was planned for March or postponed.

Andropov also was reported by other sources to have been hospitalized in mid-March for heart and kidney ailments, but he reappeared in public March 25.

According to Western diplomats, the 69-year-old Andropov has shuffled procedures inside the top decision-making bodies in an attempt to short-circuit the 71-year-old Chernenko's phoenix-like political resurgence.

But the moves have not been totally successful so far, as the reported postponement of the plenum indicates, the Soviet sources claim.

Andropov also has not been named president, a ceremonial post Brezhnev held in addition to party general secretary. This could be a sign of disarray, or simply because Andropov does not want the extra title.

Growing concern, especially among regional party bosses, about the heavy-handed manner Andropov was using in shaking things up has caused the old party regulars to rally around Chernenko, the sources said.

Since Andropov became party leader, he has created what observers say is a closer link between the KGB, which he ran for 15 years, and the domestic police agency by naming allies to run both organizations.

He also has fired the railway minister, made the chief of the Young Communist League the head of the state publishing committee, made the head of that committee the chief of the Central Committee propaganda aparatus and named a number of other new department heads.

But the party machine, where Andropov has few alliances, continues to run the country day to day, observers and Soviet sources say, and holds equal political power with the KGB and the Defense and Foreign Ministries — all of which owe their allegience to the Kremlin boss.

Realizing that, Andropov evidently has decided he can't chance further alienating the men who run the machine Brezhnev built during his 18-year rule.

"The progressives," as one source labeled the Andropov faction, "will eventually win but it's going to take time."

One Western diplomat who closely follows Soviet leadership matters described the situation at the top of the Kremlin hierarchy as "disarray."

A further sign of the political infighting came earlier this month when Chernenko failed to go to Berlin for a major ideological celebration marking the 100th anniversary of the death of Karl Marx.

East German diplomats have since been told that Chernenko was ill. But others in Moscow speculated that the political atmosphere in the Kremlin was so tense that Chernenko was afraid to leave town.

He may have taken a lesson from the experience of Nikolai A. Tikhonov, the premier who visited Yugoslavia last month only to return home and find he had a new deputy — Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, an Andropov supporter.

Doctor: More women waiting to have children

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Forty and pregnant — for many it would be a nightmare. For Lorraine Elliot it was a dream come true.

"I felt good being pregnant and grateful. Maybe other people thought I looked strange, but I was glad," she said.

Mrs. Elliott, now 42, delayed both marriage and children because of her career. She was an aide to the late U.S. Sen. Clinton Anderson in Washington, D.C., then later a director in the state Employment Security Department.

The Albuquerque woman is one of a growing number who wait until later in life to have children. The number of women giving birth between the ages of 35 and 39 has risen by nearly 50 percent over the past 15 years, said Dr. Roger K. Freeman, medical director of Women's Hospital in Long Beach, Calif., and author of a book on high-risk pregnancy.

Mrs. Elliott met her husband Bill, a real estate broker, in Washington. She was 34 and he was 29 when they married. Their first child, Adrienne, was born a year later.

They both wanted a second baby, but Mrs. Elliott was reluctant to have a child after her 40th year.

"I had decided that if I didn't get pregnant before my 40th birthday, I wouldn't have one," she said.

Her reluctance was not unusual. In spite of the growing number of women having babies in their 30s, the number of women who are pregnant in their 40s is small.

"Less than 5 percent of all pregnancies are in women 40 or over," said Dr. Kent Argubright of the University of New Mexico Hospital's high-risk pregnancy clinic.

Mrs. Elliott's reasons for not wanting to wait too late were varied, but one of the prime considerations she had, she said, was the increased risk of the baby having Down's Syndrome.

Down's Syndrome, or mongolism, is a form of mental deficiency. The chances of a woman in her 20s having a mongoloid child is one in 2,500, Argubright said. The risk is one in 100 over the age of 40 and increases to one in 30 at the age of 45.

"But those aren't bad odds," Argubright said. "In fact, I've had patients tell me if they could get those kinds of odds at Santa Fe Downs, they'd be there all the time."

In addition, tests, known as amniocentesis, can be administered during pregnancy to determine whether the fetus has Down's Syndrome.

Although Mrs. Elliott's physician suggested the tests, she and her husband decided not to have them done.

"My husband asked me if I was prepared to have anything done about it if we found there was something wrong," Mrs. Elliott said. "I, am a Catholic. I told him I didn't believe in abortion. We talked about it and decided that we would love the baby whatever happened."

The child, Noreen, now 2, was born healthy and normal.

Mrs. Elliott said she had a great deal of discomfort during the pregnancy in her 40th year, but she attributes the problems to something other than her age.

"I gave up smoking with the second one, and that made me gain weight. I gained 52 pounds. I didn't quit with the first one and only gained 15 pounds. A lot of my problems were because of the weight I gained," she said.

Pregnancies in women over 40 carry no greatly increased risk to the mother as long as she is in good health to begin with, Argubright said.

"There has been more wear and tear on the body by the time a woman reaches 40, and this is the age when some medical problems such as diabetes or high blood pressure may begin to show up, but if none of those problems is present there's no great danger to the mother," he said.

Argubright said there is a slight increase in the number of Caesarean, or surgical, births in women over 40, and the chance of miscarriage increases with the mother's age. But he called the increased risk "very slight, probably less than 5 percent."

But to be 42 and the mother of a 2-year-old child? Mrs. Elliott said she had no regrets.

"I know it sounds corny, but I never felt fulfilled until I had children. Having them has been the highlight of my life.

"Yet I'm glad I waited. I came from a large family. There were nine children, and I was the oldest of the girls. I saw how difficult it was for my parents and even though I knew I wanted to have a family eventually, I wanted other things first, things like a career and travel."

Mrs. Elliott said she has had no real problems raising her children so far.

"I'm a better mother than I thought I'd be. I have more patience than I thought, and my husband has been very helpful and supportive," she said.

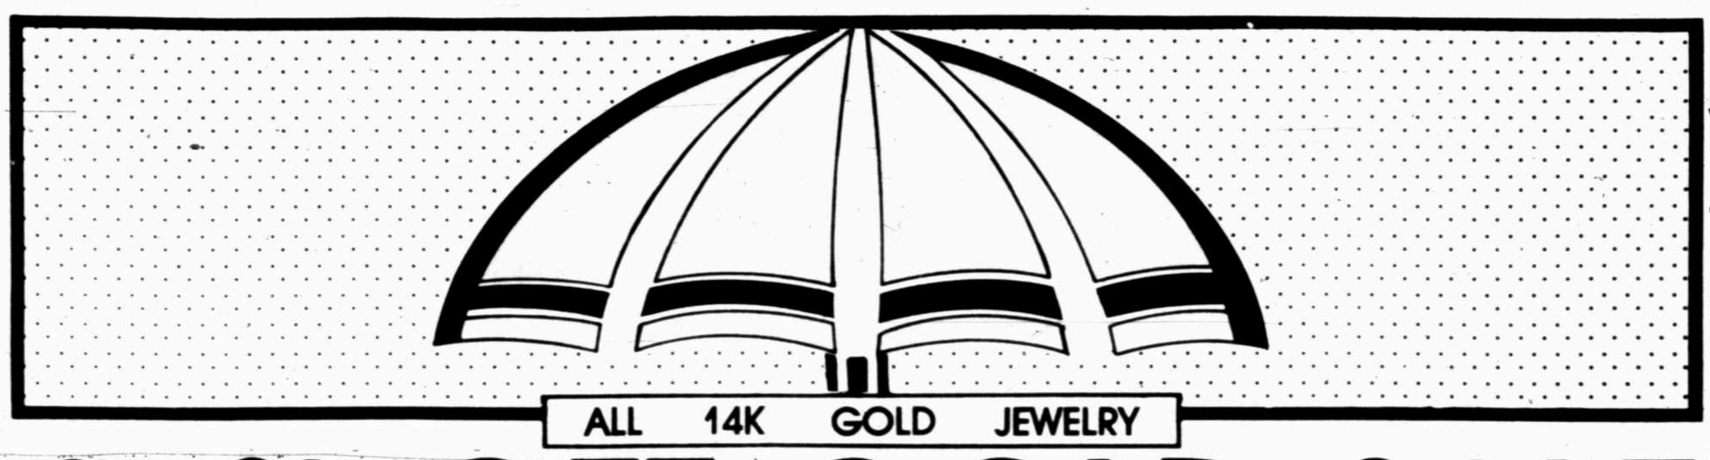

There are some aspects of being an over-40 mother of young children that can be frustrating, however.

"I've been mistaken for my daughters' grandmother at times. I guess I knew it was going to happen."

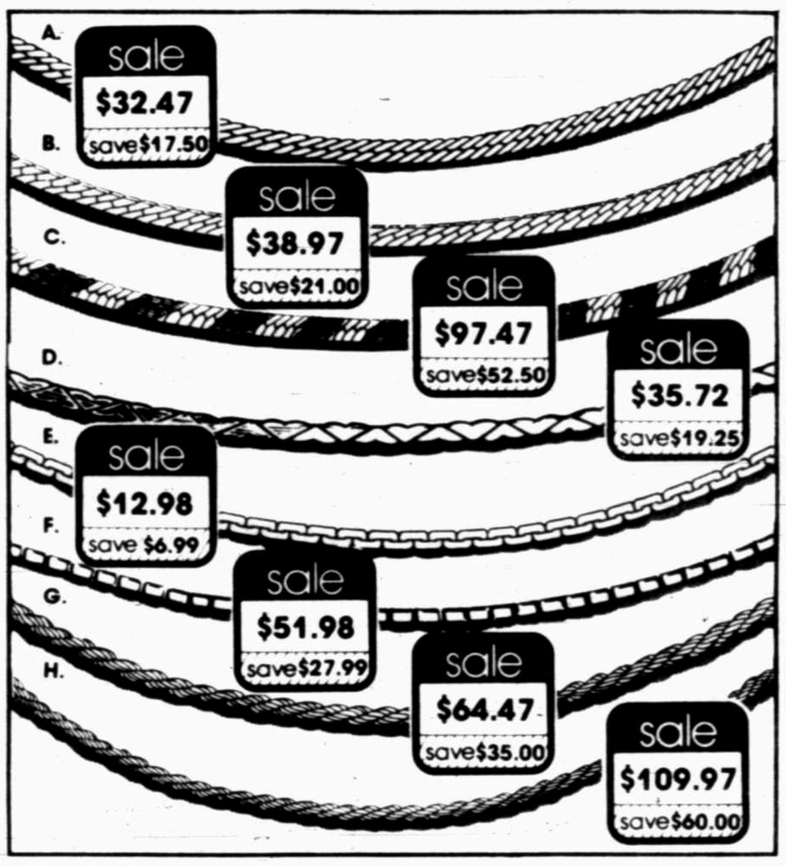

There was one time in particular, however, that being mistaken for a grandmother bothered her more than usual.

"It was right after Noreen was born. I had worked hard at losing all that weight, and I had bought some designer jeans. I thought I looked pretty good. But I went to an outdoor political gathering and had the girls with me when someone asked if they were my granddaughters.

"My ego was certainly deflated," she said, "but it wasn't an unreasonable thing for someone to assume."

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

TENS, electric shock treatments not same

Dear Dr. Solomon: My doctor has told me that if certain treatments he is now using do not work, he may try electrical stimulation to relieve my pain. Is this the same as shock treatments? — Duffy, New Brunswick, N.J.

Dear Duffy: Your physician is probably referring to a type of treatment called transcutaneous electrical nerve stimulation, or TENS. Aside from the fact that an electric current is used in both procedures, TENS has nothing to do with electric shock treatments.

With TENS, electrodes are placed on or near the painful area. The current passes through the area and, it is hoped, alleviates the pain. The patient feels nothing except, possibly, a slight tingling sensation.

You should be aware that for some unknown reason, TENS is effective with some people but not with others.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been donating blood fairly regularly. It is almost painless and I feel good knowing that I'm doing some good. But when I give blood, how much of what I've got am I giving? And how soon can I count on getting it back? — Douglas, Wilmington, Del.

Dear Douglas: A donation of blood amounts to approximately one pint. The average man has 10 to 12 pints of blood, while the average woman has about eight or nine pints. The lost fluid is replaced by the body within a few hours; the red cells are replaced more slowly.

A gift of blood enriches others with no cost to the giver.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I think it is extremely inconsiderate for people to smoke in a restaurant even though they may have a legal right to do so. But aside from the annoyance, it seems to me that when I breathe their smoke, it's the same as if I'm smoking myself. Is this true? — Jo, Cleveland, Ohio

Dear Jo: The results of at least one study support the point you make. Nonsmokers who worked with smokers were found to have nicotine in their saliva and urine. The person who smokes is not only adversely affecting his or her own health, but that of the nonsmokers in the area.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I only have one child, so maybe I'm more nervous than women who have more than one child would be. But my son had a nosebleed the other day and I thought the blood would never stop coming. The bleeding finally stopped when I put a cold towel on his forehead. I'd like to know what causes this bleeding and if there are any other things I can do if something like this happens again. — Mrs. J.A., Evansville, Ind.

Dear Mrs. A.: According to Dr. David A. Zwillenberg, of the Jefferson Medical College of Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia, cold compresses on a child's forehead may make the parent feel better, but they have no effect on stopping a nosebleed. The most common causes of nosebleeds in children are scratching and the insertion of a foreign object into the nostrils.

To treat a nosebleed, have the child sit erect and pinch the nose closed for about two to three minutes. If the bleeding continues, of course, the child should be seen by a physician or taken to the nearest emergency room.

Finally, you can be assured that nosebleeds in children are usually not as serious as they often appear to be.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have had a condition for some time where my fingers would get a bluish color, and my doctor now tells me I have Raynaud's phenomenon. He says I might want to try biofeedback, but I don't like to go through the motions just to feel that I'm doing something. I don't expect a guarantee, but I'd like to know that something at least has a chance of working before I get involved. Would biofeedback give me this chance? — Kaye, St Paul, Minn.

Dear Kaye: Biofeedback has been reported to be effective in the treatment of Raynaud's phenomenon. The purpose of this form of treatment is to teach patients to regulate skin temperature changes.

David P. Guy, the director of physical therapy at Vanderbilt University Medical Center in Nashville, says that biofeedback compares favorably with other forms of physical therapy. He bases his conclusion on the results of treatment of seven patients by methods that included hot packs, paraffin baths, and electrical stimulation as well as biofeedback. Guy notes that biofeedback has the advantage of not being dependent on an external source of heat to increase finger temperature.

For Sharon, Lexington, Ky.: The disease to which you refer, systemic lupus erythematosus, is predominantly a disease of women of childbearing age. Unfortunately, the outcome of pregnancy in these women is generally poor, both for the mother and for the fetus.

Dr. Martin L. Gimovsky, of the University of Southern California School of Medicine, Los Angeles, suggests that women with the disease should seriously consider permanent sterilization. In one group of patients he studied, fewer than one-half of 65 pregnancies resulted in a surviving newborn infant. Spontaneous abortion was also a common finding in these patients.

For Janet, Altoona, Penn.: I don't know what movie you are referring to, but according to Dr. Stanley Von Hagen, of the New Jersey Medical School in Newark, having a person who has taken a drug overdose, drink black coffee or walk around is useless. What is important is to initiate vomiting as soon as possible.

Vomiting, however, is not indicated in all cases of ingested poison. Strong acids or alkilis, for example, cause a certain amount of damage when they pass into the stomach. By the same token, vomiting can cause further damage as the poisons are brought back up.

It should be clear that no attempt to induce vomiting should be made while the patient is unconscious, since this could cause death by suffocation.

Power plant won't be operating until '85

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

GLEN ROSE — For centuries Comanche Peak has thrust 1,229 feet skyward as an eternal monument to the awesome forces of nature.

It sentineled the final retreat of rivers of ice before the onslaught of primeval hunters, witnessed the spiraling smoke of the peace pipe shared by red warriors and the first Texans, endured the gutting plow blades of European descendants.

Now it has been challenged, and with it, the powers which spawned it.

Having yielded both its name and might to a greater sovereignty, Comanche Peak seems destined to become but the answer to a trivia question in the future.

Even today, shout that appellation toward the massive ridges and the echo comes back clearly: Comanche Peak...Nuclear Power Plant!

That facility but five miles southward is itself a mountain, its steel and concrete domes rising from the oak-lined shores of Squaw Creek Reservoir to paint twin summits of grey against the clouds. But there is a difference — this peak was formed by the hand of man, who hopes that its vastness will harbor the unleashing of incredible amounts of energy.

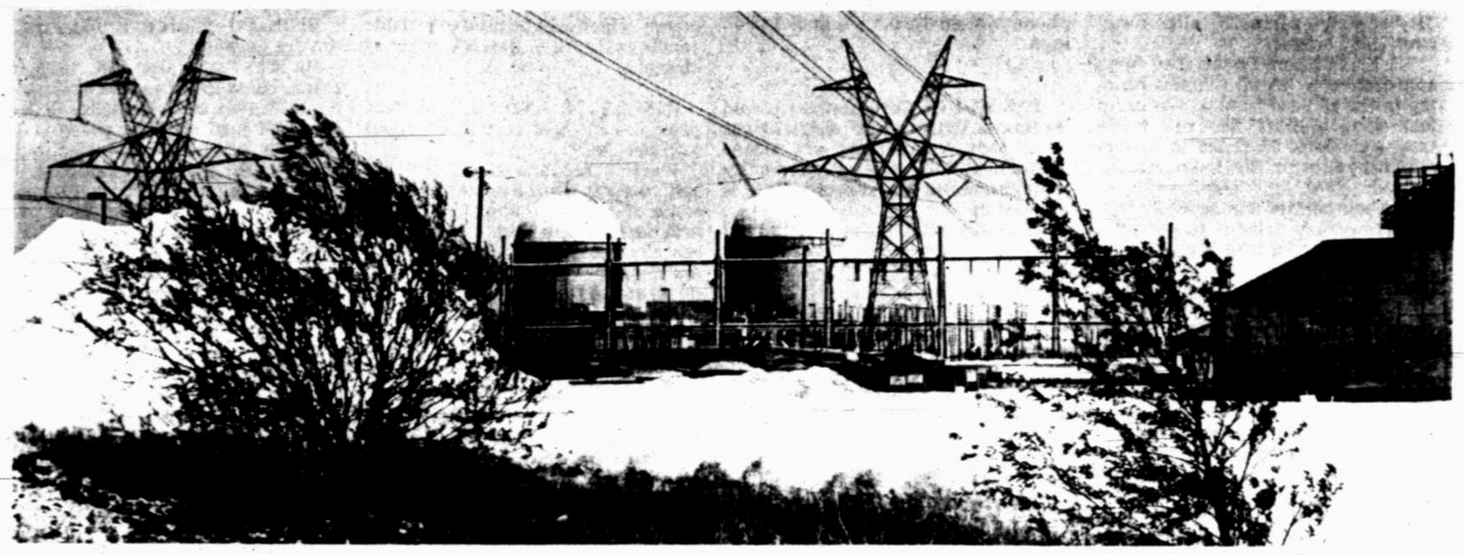

"To the people of the service area," said plant public information coordinator Tom Gosdin during Tuesday's news media tour, "it will mean a reliable source of energy and an alternative to fossil fuel."

To the sparrow which entered its doors to seek out its heights and overlook a simulated fuel assembly, however, it meant a nesting haven not unlike the gnarled oak limbs and rocky crevices of Comanche Peak. But no shifting strata will groan within this man-made fortress, as natural geological events will yield before a mystery forever hidden from the naked eye of man: The splitting of minute particles to unshackle their immense energy.

Comanche Peak was not shaped in a day, however, and neither has its namesake been. Its owners conceived the project more than a decade ago, but its beginnings were not until Oct. 18, 1974. Twin units were originally expected to begin supplying energy to one-third of Texas a couple of years ago, but the $3.44 billion project likely will not reach fruition until 1984-85.

Meanwhile, the hardhats of construction workers daily deluge the site, while pre-operational testing wages war against a timetable which specifies a day in May as arrival date for the first radioactive fuel.

"We're really far along on our pre-operational testing program," noted Homer Schmidt, his features a sphere of paleness against the crimson warning lights of the Starship Enterprise-like control room. He is manager of nuclear services for Texas Utilities Generating Company, which is responsible for the plant's operations and serves as an agent for its owners — Texas Electric Service Company, Dallas Power & Light, Texas Power & Light, Texas Municipal Power Agency, Brazos Electric Power Cooperative Inc. and Tex-La Electric Cooperative of Texas Inc.

The twin domes of Comanche Peak nuclear generating station rise in the distance giving birth to a milestone in Texas' search for alternative energy sources.

When that first shipment of Uranium dioxide enriched with Uranium 235 does arrive, it will mark as monumental a moment in man's quest for energy in Texas as the first flames brought into existence by human hands rubbing two sticks together.

It will arrive as did the dummy fuel shipment Tuesday — as a 1,650-pound mass of thimble-sized pellets encased in fuel rods. Carefully bundled in a coffin-like container, the shipment will be hoisted from the unloading bay via a powerful pully system to an upper level. There it will be removed by the same white-gloved hands which addressed the dummy shipment, inspected carefully, and inserted into its nuclear reactor home as part of the fuel core. The 65 fuel assemblies — each with a value of $650,000 — will produce enough energy to service a city the size of Fort Worth and have a life span of one to three years.

That a nuclear power plant is capable of unleashing tremendous amounts of energy goes unquestioned. What bothers some who remember Three Mile Island and its near-nuclear tragedy, however, is whether it can do it with a reasonable degree of safety for man and the environment.

"It's no more dangerous than other energy sources if you look at the whole fuel cycle," said Gosden. "It's not without risks — nothing in life is risk-free. But the risks are identified and we have many safety factors."

If Stephen F. Austin — the first man ever to pinpoint Comanche Peak on a map — were around a year hence to witness the real-life exploration of those risks, it's not unlikely the mountain of man's own making would bear the designation "landmark" rather than its nature-forged counterpart.

After all, one but witnessed the lapping flames of the Comanche's campfire, while the other is fated to spawn heat and scintillation a billion times greater.

Specialist: Computers like pencil, paper

Staff Drawing, Jan Drake

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

As a tool, the computer is about as smart as a pencil and paper, costs more, but is faster and more accurate than a mathematical wizard if its calculations are right.

"Basically it's a tool," computer specialist Greg Taylor told a group of Midland County employees and officials in a management workshop. "It's comparable to the pencil and paper. It's similar to a pocket calculator. It works with numbers, and it works with words."

Taylor, a staffer with Texas A&M University's Texas Agricultural Extension Service, wasn't trying to sell the county government workers on computers. He was just trying to educate them on the state-of-the-art in office equipment.

"We're going to have a good week," TAEX economist Dennis Fisher had said in giving an overview of the workshop, which is geared to helping the county's 325 employees to be more efficient and productive. "We're going to be educated one way or the other."

Unlike the pencil, the computer has memory and speed.

"It's a high-powered tool to help you do your work," said Taylor, who then explained some computer jargon, such as "hardware" and "software."

"The hardware is similar to the pencil and paper," he said. It's the "works" — the basic machinery. "The software is from up here (the head)."

Taylor likened the computer to a high-speed robot — an amazingly speedy idiot at the commmand of the operator.

"It could do very little without memory," he said.

He briefed his students on computer terminology, such as memory-related terms as the byte, which is eight bits; a bit, a binary digit; ROM (read only memory) function, and peripheral components, which are merely computer-related devices, such as the keyboard, printer, monitor, storage disk, plotter and modem, a device which receives information over the telephone wire.

The computer is fast. The microcomputer can make 250,000 calculations in a second; the minicomputer, 1 million calculations, and the mainframe, 10 million calculations. A calculation is a mathematical function, such as an addition or multiplication.

Despite its speed and accuracy, the computer is a dullard.

"The computer is a very stupid thing," Taylor said this week even as computer salesmen in their pinstripe business suits in the Midland Center were "selling" other county employees on the virtues and versatilities of the computer. "When you turn the switch on, it has to know what you want it to do."

Even the salesman, including those who were marketing a brand one salesman termed "nothing better invented," acknowledged the computer's limitations even though it can have instant access, for example, to updated information in the most detailed encyclopedia and technical journals. "A computer can do nothing but add," said a salesman. Said another: "A computer is a big adding machine."

To communicate with the computer requires a specialized language similar to legalese and journalese.

"It would be nice if we could have a computer that could talk plain language," Taylor said. "We don't have that yet."

Hospital to donate to organ bank

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

ODESSA — WANTED: Organ donations, preferably kidneys. Inquire at Medical Center Hospital.

This "ad" probably wouldn't be found tucked away in the columns of the newspaper classifed section, but it's a notice that one Odessa hospital wants everybody to know about.

In a news conference at Odessa Medical Center Tuesday, Stephen Haid, supervisor of retrieval services for Southwest Organ Bank in Dallas, said 16,000 patients in the U.S. are waiting for kidney transplants, 500 in Texas.

Since February, Medical Center's operating room nurses and physicians have removed two pairs of kidneys and a pair of eyes that were immediately flown to Southwest Organ Bank in Dallas.

The Dallas bank, a clearinghouse for donor organs, made a worldwide search for compatible recipients.

While one set of kidneys was given to a local person, the other set was used for research. But the eyes were successfully transplanted in four patients.

"Medical Center's operating team will be doing more and more organ retrievals," said Melinda Snider, Medical Center's nurse coordinator for Southwest Organ Bank.

Because one potential source for cadaver organs is community hospitals where most traumatic injuries are treated, Haid said, the organ bank works closely with hospitals, such as Medical Center and Midland Memorial Hospital.

The organ bank's primary purpose is to recover cadaver kidneys for transplant, but Haid said other organs also are considered for donation.

"We coordinate the donation process with the appropriate transplant organizations," Haid said.

Ms. Snider, whose job includes educating the public about donor organs, said signing the back of "a drivers license does not totally suffice" when desiring to donate organs.

Under the Texas Uniform Anatomical Gift Act, a donor's closest living relative must give his consent to the organ donation.

"It's important for the donor's family to know how he feels about organ donations," Ms. Snider said. "The family has to live with the decision."

Dr. N.C. Galloway, a nephrologist (kidney expert), said the "60,000 patients in the United States currently on dialysis are not all potential recipients, but we will be attempting to obtain as many donor organs as possible."

Galloway added that with the proper blood and tissue match about one-fourth of these people could function fully again.

In Texas, 300 transplants were performed last year. Haid said the success rate for transplants has improved drastically since the first operation in 1954.

He estimated that it costs $40,000 a year for a person on dialysis and the cost of successful transplant is $25,000.

Haid said donor kidneys can be preserved up to 48 hours and every attempt — through a computer search — will be made to use the cadaver kidneys in the Permian Basin, West Texas area.

But if no match is found locally, kidneys will be transplanted in patients in other areas of the United States, or Canada, Japan or Europe, Haid said.

More information can be obtained by calling Melinda Snider at Medical Center Hospital, 333-7111, or Southwest Organ Bank, 214-821-1910.

Twelve new teaching positions created at MC

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Little was said Tuesday about legislation that could change the concept which built Midland College.

A bill approved by the Senate Education Committee was met with disappointment by Midland College administrators, trustees and supporters who traveled to Austin last Wednesday.

Trustees were silent Tuesday, however, when MC President Dr. Jess H. Parrish made a short and simple statement about the bill:

"We have no definite plans on future action," he said.

Trustees also accepted the resignation of physical education instructor and tennis team coach Leon Dulin, approved the addition of 12 new teaching positions and elected new officers during the Tuesday board meeting.

THE BILL, introduced by Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, calls for the addition of freshman and sophomore students at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin. Area community college administrators fear four-year status at UTPB will draw academic students away from their campuses.

SB 1014 was approved by the committee in a 6-2 vote. Parrish said he does not know when it will be presented to the full Senate. Nor does he know when HB 726, a companion bill sponsored by Rep. Jay Gibson, D-Odessa, will reach the House.

"It may be as early as next Monday," Parrish said in a flat voice. "It may be as late as the following Monday."

Trustees accepted the resignation of Dulin, who came to Midland College two years ago. His resignation, ending a 25-year career in coaching, is effective at the end of the semester.

TWELVE NEW teaching positions, to be filled as budget and state allocations allow, were approved. In order of priority, the positions are mathematics-chemistry, nursing, real estate-management, English, respiratory therapy, emergency medical technology/fire science, electronics, data processing, government-economics, physical education, accounting and commercial music.

According to a statement from Dr. Don Hunt, vice president of instruction, the positions are needed because of enrollment and course growth. The following reasons were listed on the statement:

—Mathematics-chemistry: Part-time mathematics instructors taught 168 students in fall 1982 and 171 student in spring 1983. Part-time chemistry instructors taught 22 students in the fall and 35 in the spring.

—Nursing: The program is finishing its first year of implementation. The ratio of faculty to students must be one for every 12 students under the Rules and Regulations of the Professional Nurse Education, Licensure and Practice, revised last October.

ASSIGNMENT WILL be medical, surgical and fundamentals of nursing with secondary assignment in student clinical experience.

—Real Estate-Management: Rules and regulations state a full-time person must coordinate the program. Secondary responsibility will be teaching management. Part-time real estate instructors taught 145 students in the fall and 140 in the spring. Management part-time instructors taught 63 students in the fall and 74 in the spring. The position also is needed to reduce the number of management interns per instructor.

—English: A full-time instructor is needed to teach day classes. The assignment does not include needed faculty assignment responsibilities in the English laboratory. Part-time instructors had 188 students in the fall and 182 in the spring.

GISD board considers out-of-district transfers

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

It's hard for a child to travel 40 to 50 miles to school each day.

It also is hard on a closer district to allow a few students to transfer — when there is a possibility that more may be only a few paces behind.

Greenwood Independent School District trustees Tuesday night ran with the idea of allowing out-of-district students to transfer in before side-stepping a decision until the next board meeting May 24.

Other items on the agenda included the following:

—Tabling the installation of a new gas line and phone system.

—Approval of an application for federal block grant money.

—Appointment of a special education fiscal agent.

—Reorganization of the GISD Board of Trustees.

—Approval of additional personnel appointments.

—Report on the senior trip.

Only children of school employees are allowed to transfer into the school district under present policy, said Superintendent James Warlick. However, at least six families presently have children attending under the hardship policy, in effect several years ago and disbanded when GISD enrollments began growing.

"ANY TEACHER or school employee's child may come in, or (those) hardships that were granted in the old policy years ago, and I don't even know why they were granted," Warlick said.

According to Board President Patsy Herrington, several families that were denied transfers took the decision to the Texas Education Agency in Austin several years ago. TEA has since revised the policy to allow for district "discretion," Warlick said.

Doctor announces veterinary cooperative

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

A new veterinary clinic planned for Midland not only will provide round-the-clock emergency medical attention for animals, but also help mend the fractured personal lives of several area veterinarians.

Dr. Tom Green, vice president of the Permian Basin Emergency Veterinary Clinic Professional Corporation, said the clinic — a cooperative project among 23 veterinarians — will provide efficient emergency care while excusing each veterinarian from the burden of being continually "on call."

"It's impossible for every one of us to be on call 24 hours a day," Green said. "It kind of makes a recluse out of a veterinarian. You finally find yourself very reluctant to make any plans."

He said the 23 corporation members — veterinarians from Andrews, Midland, Monahans and Odessa — will share the estimated $175,000 to build and equip the facility and then staff the clinic on a rotating basis. Groundbreaking for the project was scheduled for this afternoon. Green said he expects the clinic to be completed by July 1.

"We hope it will make us humans again," said Green, a Midland veterinarian who almost two years ago participated in initial planning for the Permian Basin Emergency Veterinary Clinic.

Green said the 2,100-square-foot metal building, to be constructed about two miles west of Midland Regional Airport along the north service road of U.S. Highway 80, will include surgical and isolation wards, an intensive care unit, a lab, X-ray facilities and an apartment for the on-duty veterinarian.

"Somebody will be actually living at the emergency clinic," said Green. "It's going to relieve a lot of the problems with people locating a vet. Until they can talk to someone personally, they are in a panic. This relieves that panic state. They can instantly get an answer."

Green said under present conditions, most veterinarians must make special arrangements — at great expense to the animal's owner — to provide emergency, 24-hour treatment.

He said such arrangements put the burden of paying for a "temporary" emergency clinic on one person, while the new emergency clinic will spread the cost of maintaining one facility among many animal owners.

Dr. Tom Green

"No one facility has enough critical patients that we maintain 24-hour critical care. As far as the public is concerned, it (the clinic) will cut the cost of critical care tremendously.

The clinic will be open 24-hours on weekends and holidays, and on weekdays from 5:30 p.m. to 8 a.m. the following morning. Unless a life-threatening condition dictates otherwise, Green said, owners will transfer their animals to a traditional veterinary clinic during business hours.

Green said the clinic is designed to stabilize and treat critically injured animals, so surgery will not be performed except in extreme emergencies. "The purpose of this is to provide emergency care, not to substitute for regular veterinary care."

He said a $35 fee will likely be charged for each initial exam and estimates will be provided on the cost of additional treatment. Because pet owners sometimes ignore their veterinary bills if the animal dies, Green said no credit will be accepted at the clinic and a deposit based on the estimated cost of treatment may be required.

A rotating schedule will have each veterinarian on-duty every 23rd day and weekend. Green said long-range plans call for hiring an emergency care specialist to staff the clinic full-time.

A board of directors will govern clinic operations and a review committee consisting of three veterinarians will review each case to ensure quality care according to Green.

Any profits from the clinic will likely be re-invested in the facility for at least the first 10 years, he said, adding, "there are thousands upon thousands of dollars of equipment that can be purchased that would benefit the clinic."

GISD board of trustees considers out-of district students to transfer

Ms. Herrington told trustees she recently was approached by a family living on the boundary of Midland and Glasscock counties about transfering on a hardship basis. The students were told to attend Garden City schools, some 25 miles away from their home.

Warlick, meanwhile, was approached by three families residing in the El Paso Natural Gas camp located in Midkiff. Students there travel some 40-50 miles to attend either Rankin or Big Lake schools, he said.

Warlick pointed out several problems that may arise if the district returns to accepting students on hardship transfers.

ENROLLMENT NOW is high enough that the district is balancing between playing AA or 3-A ball. If an influx of students from out-of-district enroll in GISD, the school may be forced to compete with larger schools in the 3-A division.

He also said an agreement between GISD and the Midland Independent School District of "they don't take our students and we don't take theirs" may be violated.

A new junior and senior high school building, expected to be ready for occupation next fall, should help ease overcrowding; however, trustees brought up questions concerning enrollment growth in the future.

Trustee Charles Gardner said he strongly opposed re-opening of the hardship transfer policy, citing the possibility many more students may apply to transfer.

"They are just kids," Ms. Herrington said sarcastically. Turning serious, she added, "But there is no reason for them to have to ride a bus 25 miles either."

Trustees voted to table the item until a policy on transfers is written and reviewed.

Also tabled were items pertaining to the installation of a new gas line to accomodate the increased load from the new building and a new phone system forboth school buildings.

JOE MOLINA of Energas Co. said estimates indicate the district's gas load would multiply six times instead of doubling, as originally thought, when the new building is hooked up.

Presently, GISD's 2-inch lines hold about 4 million BTUs. According to Molina, estimates show about 25 million BTUs would be used after the new school is added.

A 4-inch line would have installation costs of $38,000, Molina said. That price could increase by $10,000 to $20,000, depending on how much rock must be broken when installing the line. The figure is based on $4.65 per foot. Preliminary studies conducted by Energas show about 2,000 feet of rock, Molina said.

Trustees voted to table the item until further studies can be conducted.

A committee was formed to study phone system alternatives following two meetings of discussion on the item. Serving on the committee are Ms. Herrington, Ted Pearce and Ted Benton.

Trustees voted to allow Forsan Independent School District to continue serving as special education fiscal agent for the 87-20 Co-op and to allow Region 18 Education Service Center to apply for federal money through the Block Grant Program.

According to Warlick, the block grant money is based on average daily attendance. To receive it, a district must apply and, once accepted, will be monitored by the federal government. About $4,000 would be awarded to GISD if it were accepted.

However, ESC offered to do the paperwork, thereby receiving money which will be used to provide services to the district free of charge.

INSERVICE AND other services provided by ESC cost GISD about $225 per day.

Warlick recommended allowing ESC to apply for the money. "I know some of you have hang-ups on federal money," he said. "But I don't see any sense in taking the taxpayers' money when we could let ESC do all of the paperwork."

Warlick said ESC would be monitored, not GISD. Also, GISD paid ESC about $3,700 this year for services.

He added the school district now accepts federal money for school lunches and transportation.

In other action, Ted Pearce and John Underwood were sworn in as trustees. Also, all three officers were re-elected with Ms. Herrington continuing as president, J.D. Hanson as vice president and John Underwood as secretary.

A report on fund raising for the senior trip to Disneyland May 21-24 was given by Max Dickerson, high school principal, and Chris King was presented with a placque of appreciation for 15 years of service as a GISD trustee.

Following an executive session, trustees authorized Warlick to add six elementary teaching positions and three secondary teaching positions. According to Warlick, "We feel we're too crowded in our classrooms and we feel we need to reduce some (of the class loads)."

MC board of trustees creates twelve new teaching positions

—Respiratory Therapy: The position is required by the Joint Review Committee for Respiratory Therapy Education in order to add a second year to the program. Primary assignment is clinical director of the program.

—EMERGENCY MEDICAL Technology/Fire Science: Midland Fire Department offered its facilities to provide more class offerings and recertification in emergency medical technology. Last fall, 56 students enrolled in fire science classes, taught by part-time instructors, and 35 enrolled in the spring. Primary teaching area would be emergency medical technology training and recertification for firemen. Secondary assignment would be fire science technology. Odessa College presently retrains Midland firemen.

—Electronics: Part-time instructors taught 62 students in the fall and 55 in the spring. The position is needed because of time spent in the laboratory.

—Data Processing: The fastest growing area of the college, student contact hours have more than doubled over last year. Part-time instructors taught 94 students in the fall and 226 in the spring.

—Government-Economics: Primary assignment would be government with secondary responsibility in economics. Part-time instructors taught 98 students in the fall and 119 in the spring in government and 34 economic students in the fall and 41 in the spring.

—Physical Education: Part-time instructors taught 96 students in the fall and 114 in the spring. Primary assignment is activity classes; secondary assignment is health and physical education lecture classes.

—Accounting: In the fall, 107 students and in the spring, 97 students had part-time instructors. The position would allow more instructors now teaching accounting to teach more office education and general business classes.

—Commercial Music: To begin this fall. Presently there is a 3/5 position in commercial music and another full position is needed.

In other action, trustees elected officers for the 1983-84 year. Replacing Fred S. Wright Jr. as president is Kenneth A. Peeler. Peeler was replaced as vice president by Wm. Hoyle McCright Jr. Gloria Hinojosa was re-elected secretary.

Despite the dazzling and glittering talk of computer salesmen, "You (as a beginning computer operator) are going to be frustrated; I don't care what the salesmen say," Taylor said.

Christmas in April provides repairs for widow's home

By Diane Booth
Lifestyle Writer

Lottie Mauldon, 77, wants to live in her own home for as long as she is able.

Mrs. Mauldon, a widow since 1971, is in fair health, but her modest home, converted from a U.S. Army barracks, needs some help.

Christmas in April, the home repair program for the elderly, handicapped and low income in Midland, is helping the senior citizen improve conditions in her house.

"As long as I can stay here, I will stay," she said. "I will know when I can not stay here any longer."

But, she said, "I ain't no spring chicken any more."

The three-room, gray-beige stucco dwelling has been Mauldon's home since 1949. She and her late husband, Charlie, bought it in Odessa and had it moved here.

Mrs. Mauldon said she learned of CIA from a neighbor and decided to ask for help to replace her warped backdoor, several damaged door and window screens and repair two windows broken in hailstorms.

The damaged doors and windows allow dirt in her home, which soils theinterior and irritates her allergy and sinus problems.

When Bobby Trimble, CIA's president, visited Mrs. Mauldon, he found a tangle of appliance cords and other wires throughout her home. All the cords and wires were operating off of one breaker switch.

Trimble decided the situation required immediate attention.

An electrician working for CIA installed a new service panel in her home which has eight electrical circuits.

To help take the edge off sweltering summer heat, CIA also plans to return to Mrs. Mauldon's home to install a new motor in her air conditioner.

Bare lightbulbs in each of the three rooms will be replaced with fixtures.

Lottie Mauldon is one of the recipients of home repairs made possible by the community through the Christmas in April project.

The original wiring was installed by Mrs. Mauldon and her late husband. "We never did get it wired like it ought to be," she said.

The collection of wires, plugs, outlets and cords never caused her any problems, she said. "I put up new cords every so often," she said. "When they needed replacing I would go out and get a new one."

Mauldon learned to live with her limited electrical supply. If she wanted to use her broiler oven, she unplugged all of the otherappliances except the refrigerator.

"I know what to put on and what not to," she said.

Mrs. Mauldon said her system never failed. "It just goes on smooth as a dollar. I have been doing it since 1949."

Although Mauldon is glad CIA upgraded her electrical system, she said it never really concerned her.

But Monte Allison, the electrician completing the work on her house said, the improvements will make him feel better about Mrs. Mauldon's safety, even though she did not appear concerned with what he described as a potentially hazardous situation.

"I do not see how it works the way it is."

Mrs. Mauldon's children and grandson, who all live out of town, help out on occasion, but she said they have their own families to care for.

"These are just things you have to put up with," she said as she glanced around her turquoise kitchen.

Her only income is Social Security. "I just barely get enough to make ends meet," she said. "You have to do with what you have."

A Midland resident since 1927, she said she settled here when the town had one grocery store, one dry goods store, one doctor, and one post office.

She worked as a clerk in local stores for several years, but quit work to care for her late mother and mother-in-law. After their deaths, she did not return to work for health reasons.

Advised by her doctor not to exert herself too much, Mrs. Mauldon suffers from high blood pressure. But she takes pride in trying to keep her home neat and caring for herself.

The older woman hopes CIA's efforts will help her remain on her own in the only home she has known for more than 30 years.

The repair program is "real nice," Mrs. Mauldon said, because it "helps people who need it and can not fix things themselves.

"It will be a whole lot nicer here now."

Roy E. Campbell

Campbell chairs PPPB campaign drive

Roy E. Campbell of Midland made his first official appearence as the Midland chairman for Planned Parenthood of the Permian Basin's 1983 fund raising campaign yesterday at a coffee held at the Pastoral Counseling Center.

The goal of the six-week campaign is to raise $90,000.

Campbell, president and chairman of the board of Elco Corporation in Midland, is active in community and civic activities including the Texas Society of Professional Engineers and American Management Association.

He is a member and immediate past chairman of the board of trustees of Midland Memorial Hospital; past president of Midland Youth Centers; past director and chairman of the Permian Basin Section of the Society of Petroleum Engineers, AIME; past director and vice-president of the National Organization of Societies of Petroleum Engineers, AIME; and past president of the Petroleum Club of Midland. Campbell is a graduate of Rice University.

"I believe very much in their services and purposes," Campbell said was his reason for joining the Planned Parenthood campaign. "Their primary purpose is to ensure that every child is a wanted child."

He said he considers the health, educational and referral services Planned Parenthood provides the community is very important.

Cancer Society conducts study in crusade

The American Cancer Society is conducting a special health survey in Midland this month as part of the Society's local educational and fund-raising crusade.

The survey is a major feature in this year's educational crusade pamphlet being distributed by hundreds of local ACS volunteers door-to-door, as they also seek contributions to help support the Cancer Society.

"In addition to a personal self-test one can take to determine his or her own risks in getting certain types of cancer, along with safeguards to keep risks low, the pamphlet includes this rather innovative survey," said Caroline Hundley, chairman of Midland's 1983 Residential Cancer Crusade.

According to Hundley, the survey is a detachable, confidential questionaire on individual health awareness and activity which can be completed in approximately five minutes. It is then mailed to the ACS.

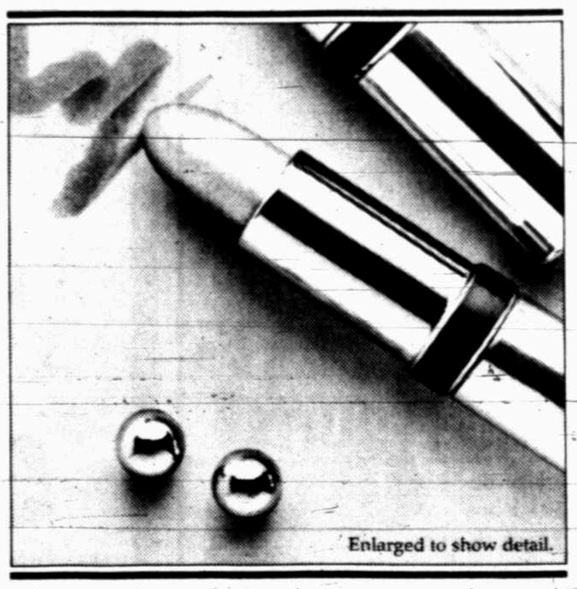

Over 500,000 Texans are expected to be surveyed throughout the state.

"The results of the survey, which I really encourage the citizens of Midland to complete, will be used by ACS volunteers to determine more effective education programs in this part of the state," Hundley said.

If survey results indicate, for example, that few women in this area regularly examine themselves for breast cancer, ACS volunteers will be alerted that programs on that specific problem should be a priority for them, she said.

"Education is a great means of prevention," Hundley added. "At present rates, the lives of about 320,000 Americans will be saved from cancer in 1983. However, we already have the scientific knowledge and know-how to save nearly 145,000 more with the help of earlier diagnosis and treatment."

Brush outer surface plus side edges of roll with melted butter and place seam side down on parchment paper-lined baking sheet. Repeat with remaining ingredients.

Bake at 375 degrees 25 minutes. Dust with powdered sugar; cool 20 minutes before serving. Makes 24 servings.

Note: Strudel cuts easily with a sharp serrated knife. Or after baking 12 minutes, remove strudel from oven, cut into serving portions, push pieces back together and return to oven. Repeat after another 12 minutes, then finish baking.

Look, no bones

To fillet a fish, place the fish on a cutting board or several thicknesses of paper and cut the fish along the back ridge from the tail to a point just behind the head. Then slice across the fish, behind the gill, toward the backbone until you feel it against the blade.

Turn the knife flat with the cutting edge toward the tail and the point toward the cut along the backbone. Keep the blade flat and cut along the backbone all the way to the tail. The fillet should come off in one piece.

To skin the fillet, place it skin side down and grip the tail firmly. Then cut through the meat towards the skin. Flatten the blade against the skin with the point away from you and work the knife forward, keeping it in the same plane and flat against the skin until the cut is finished.

Medical director in cabinet-size post

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Donald L. Custis may be no more than a department head at the Veterans Administration, but he controls a bigger budget than either Interior Secretary James G. Watt or Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige. He also runs the third-largest federal work force in the country.

The soft-spoken, bespectacled physician is chief medical director of the VA's Department of Medicine and Surgery. As such, Custis oversees $7.5 billion of the agency's $25.1 billion budget and 187,546 of the VA's 220,785 employees.

Custis also can't be fired.

While the chief medical examiner is hired by the VA administrator, the job comes with a statutory four-year term. He can be ousted only if he resigns or is impeached by Congress.

Congress gave the job that special insulation to protect it from politics. In the process, it made the medical director one of the most powerful figures in the VA.

Custis, 66, dismisses talk about power and influence with the wave of a hand, but VA-watchers, including congressional staffers and veterans groups, say the former naval officer has been a steadying influence at the VA since he was appointed in January 1980.

Custis, according to these sources, helped keep the agency administratively on track during the flurries of sudden activity that marked former VA administrator Max Cleland's term. More recently, they said, Custis helped lend an aura of integrity at the VA during the turbulent tenure of Robert P. Nimmo, who resigned under fire last year.

But critics say Custis is too cautious, too content with the status quo. They claim Custis, like his predecessors, has dragged his feet on investigating Agent Orange, a dioxin-contiminated herbicide widely used in Vietnam and blamed by Vietnam veterans for numerous health ailments.

After long delays in the study's progress lost the VA some credibility, Congress pressured the agency to turn the study over to the Centers for Disease Control. As chief medical director, Custis has defended the VA's handling of the Agent Orange controversy.

Before joining the VA, Custis served 32 years in the Navy, including tours as chief of surgery at several naval hospitals, commanding officer at a naval hospital in Da Nang in 1969 and later as surgeon general of the Navy. He has received 16 medals for service during three wars, including four for valor in Vietnam.

Custis' central responsibility is the administration of the largest hospital network in the nation — 172 VA medical centers, 226 outpatient clinics, 95 nursing homes and 16 domiciliaries where veterans receive rehabilitative care.

In practice, the job calls on him to be part doctor, part administrator and part politician. He acts as a doctor in deciding whether to approve the testing of new drugs or medical procedures in VA hospitals, as an administrator in reviewing the need for new facilities and personnel and as a politician in defending VA operations on Capitol Hill.

Donald L. Custis, chief medical director of the Veterans Administration's Department of Medicine and Surgery, runs the third-largest federal workforce in the country.

In 1941, VA facilities were in such disrepute that the American Medical Association would not accept VA doctors for membership. World War II forced the VA to improve its operations, Custis said.

Congress helped by raising the pay for VA doctors after the war ended.

The next big improvement came when the VA began affiliating its hospitals with medical schools. Today, 105 of the country's 126 medical schools are associated with VA medical centers, thanks in part to VA's willingness to build additional classrooms for them and to buy equipment that many commercial hospitals cannot afford.

"Fifty percent of all doctors in this country have received some of their training at VA hospitals," Custis said. "We are the single largest medical manpower production assest in this country."

Custis argued that VA hospitals have suffered from a "bad press" partly because revelations about inadequacies or abuses at one facility unfairly tarnish the whole system.

"If there is a problem at a community hospital in Minneapolis, Portland or New Orleans, no one says, 'Well that's typical of all hospitals in Minnesota, Oregon or Louisiana.' But if something happens at a VA hospital, everyone assumes the whole system has that problem," he said.

Now is the time when asparagus fanciers will find the succulent vegetable is at its best. Enjoyed by people all over the globe, it can be steamed, boiled, marinated or drenched in hollandaise sauce.

Peak season is now for tasty asparagus

By The Associated Press

April in America marks the peak season for asparagus, the tender stalk that people in this country eat to the tune of 77 million pounds a year.

This succulent vegetable dates back many centuries. The ancient Greeks picked it wild in the fields, but for some reason never bothered to cultivate the vegetable. The Romans, however, had detailed rules for developing the shoots and ate them boiled, or dried the stalks for off-season consumption.

The early American settlers brought asparagus to the New World, and pioneers took sackloads with them to cultivate as they traveled westward.

Americans usually prefer the shoots tender and green, but in much of Europe they prize a variety that yields thick, white, fleshy stalks which are extremely tender, especially when sheltered from the sun during the growing period. This kind is available in America imported in glass jars or metal containers.

Some of the world's finest asparagus grows in the Lake Constance region of Germany, where I sampled it several years ago; snowy white shoots as tender as butter. Every spring, many Germans visit restaurants which feature nearly two dozen dishes made from asparagus. One popular method is to dress the stalks with hollandaise sauce and serve them with egg pancakes made with bits of bacon in the batter.

French households feature asparagus in more variations than most Americans can imagine. But the French favorite is simply boiled until tender and served hot with melted butter, or cold with vinaigrette dressing.

One of my most pleasant memories is having asparagus with a Chinese family. They served it stir-fried and braised in the Oriental manner and also as a salad to complement a platter of cold cuts.

To prepare the stalks for salad they parboiled them for only a minute, then let them marinate in a dressing in the refrigerator for close to two hours. Here is the recipe.

2 pounds fresh asparagus, with stalk no more than ½ inch in diameter
4 teaspoons soy sauce
1 teaspoon sugar
2 teaspoons sesame-seed oil

Discard tough end of stalk and slice remainder into 1½-inch lengths. This should make about 3 cups of asparagus pieces. Wash asparagus under cold, running water, then parboil by dropping pieces in rapidly boiling water for 1 minute. Drain at once and run cold water over asparagus bits to stop them cooking any more, and to set their color. Spread pieces on paper towel and pat until completely dry.

In a glass bowl, combine soy sauce, sugar and sesame-seed oil, and mix till sugar is completely dissolved. With large spoon, toss to coat each asparagus piece thoroughly with dressing. Chill up to two hours before serving. As a separate salad this serves 4. As part of cold meat plate it is enough for 6 to 8.

Concoct appetizing pastries with phyllo and little creativity

Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE – This year's menu pacesetter is phyllo – the classy, timeless pastry that's so versatile it can be made into appetizers, served as a main dish or as a smashing dessert.

What's more, phyllo delicacies can be frozen or made up the day before and refrigerated until ready to use. And because phyllo wraps around its various fillings, items keep temptingly hot – nice for unhurried table or buffet service.

Eva Kenly, a well-known cooking-school instructor here, says the packaged phyllo dough found in grocers' frozen cases is a boon to modern cooks. The dough once had to be made from scratch – a tedious, time-consuming effort.

It's wise to buy phyllo where there is a good turnover; even then, she suggests that the shopper open the end of the package to check the condition of the dough before purchasing. If the dough appears dry or brittle, don't buy it.

There are generally about 24 sheets of phyllo in a package, and while the dough must be handled carefully, it's tougher than one might think.

"I let the phyllo thaw in the refrigerator overnight," Kenly says."It must be pliale beforeyo unwpts uhas,illings should be made and cooled, butter melted and cooled, with knives and brushes at the ready.

From then on, the only problem is keeping the dough from drying out. Kenly puts a slightly damp kitchen towel on the countertop and covers the towel with a large, clean plastic garbage bag. Then the sheets of phyllo are placed on the plastic bag and covered with the other end of the bag with another damp towel on top.

"Work with only one sheet of phyllo at a time," Kenly instructs. "Always keep the rest covered."

She starts with an appetizer – a mushroom tart topped with cheese.

"When chopped mushrooms are sauteed, they'll look dry, then wet, then dry again. Fillings for phyllo must be cool before wrapping with the dough.

"I like to use asiago cheese. An Italian might faint if he heard me say it, but I think asiago tastes like Parmesan and it's far more reasonable – more like $5 a pound rather than $10 for the Parmesan.

As Kenly starts to assemble the tarts, she spreads a sheet of phyllo on the work surface and brushs half of it with melted butter, folding the other half of the dough over the buttered side and brushing the top surface with more butter.

"As long as the phyllo is sealed with butter, you don't have to worry about it drying out," Kenly says. "A three-inch cutter is just the right size for these two-inch muffin cups. I never throw away the scraps. Just pat leftover dough into a pie dish and use for a pie crust. You don't have to piece it carefully, just pat it down.

"Packages of phyllo differ. Most times the sheets are smooth and moist and easily handled.

Myths broken by nutritionist about sugar and food value

Copley News Service

Candy's dandy! So much so that M and Ms and Snickers bars have been knighted the "official snack foods" of the 1984 Winter and Summer Olympics.

And you thought you had heard it all.

Imagine it — a runner with the Olympic torch in one hand and a bag of sweets in the other.

Tacky, you say? Well, consider the fact that the nutrition consultant for the U.S. Olympic team — whose job it is to see that the nation's top athletes eat well — recommends candy as a source of energy-boosting carbohydrates. Sugar is good for you, she says, in a day and age where many people closely watching their health regard the sweetener somewhat the way they do roach poison.

Who is this woman? Is she the mad operator of an illicit candy-smuggling ring trying to pollute the beautiful bodies of our finest athletes?

No. In her regular work, when she isn't feeding athletes in Colorado Springs, Colo., she's associate director of the Swanson Center for Nutrition Inc. in Omaha, Neb., a nonprofit outfit that pays her salary (the Olympics Committee provides her room and board at the U.S. Olympic Training Center).

Two years ago, she received the outstanding dietitian award of the Nebraska Dietetic Association in a state noted more for its nutritious corn than candy.

Her name is Ann Grandjean and she has a bachelor of science degree from West Texas State University and a master of science from Texas Tech University. She is pursuing a doctorate at the University of Kansas.

And she has worked with hundreds of finely tuned sports addicts, having served as a consultant to the Olympic Committee for five years. One of her studies in progress focuses on the comprehensive dietary profiles of about 200 athletes.

Grandjean's goal is to debunk the myths about nutrition, which, she said, are believed by athletes as well as the ordinary bloke who considers a trip to the fridge for a cold beer about all the exercise you need after turning the TV dial.

Some things athletes eat before a competition in order to gain an edge over rivals actually do harm instead of perk them up, she said.

As for the myths:

She said it isn't true that candy is a source of "quick energy." It IS a source of energy, though.

"The energy used by the muscles in competition comes from food eaten several days to many hours before," she said.

"Athletes training or competing daily must maintain their stores of glycogen, a fuel for the muscles."

Family expansion angers sister

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: A week ago my mother, who is 35, announced she is pregnant! At first I was mad. Now I'm really upset. Everyone in the family is overjoyed – that's all they talk about, and when they do I leave the room. I am 15 and have an older sister, 17, and a younger sister, 14.

This is our stepfather's first child, and I feel it is the wrong time to have a baby. We started adding on to our house two years ago but were unable to finish it because of financial problems. Abby, there just isn't room for another child right now.

I am the only person in the family who feels this way, and when I express my true feelings I am told that I am selfish. I have been very emotionally upset since I heard about this, and I've been getting into a lot of arguments with my family. I know it's not all my fault, but I have no one to turn to.

Can you please give me some advice? – NEEDS HELP

DEAR NEEDS: First, you are very intelligent to realize that you need help in handling your feelings of resentment.

It's not uncommon for siblings to feel as you do when a new baby is expected, but you are overreacting and need to talk to someone who will not make you feel guilty for expressing your feelings honestly. Discuss this with your school counselor, and please write again after the baby arrives. I'll bet a package of Pampers you'll change your mind.

DEAR ABBY: This is a true story. We are two sisters who have the same in-laws because we married brothers. (We also live together.) Our problem is our in-laws, who have made a habit of dropping in anytime they feel like it without calling to see if it's convenient for us. This has developed into a power struggle, and we are losing!

We have tried every method we can think of over the years to maintain our privacy, but either they don't get the message or they choose to ignore it.

We've tried being inhospitable and not speaking, going to our rooms or reading. We've even pretended not to be home. We tried moving without telling them where, but they tracked us down through the post office. We've even moved OUT OF STATE, and they've dropped in on us in the middle of a party and stayed two weeks! Then they moved nearby so they could drop in on us there, and when we moved back here, they moved also! They have held a party at our home by inviting other relatives and all dropping in together.

In short, we have tried everything, save turning them away at the door. We don't dislike them. It's just that they have no other interests, and just drop in on people as a hobby. We invite them for birthdays, holidays and at other times, but simply do not care to have them visit us as often as they do.

We are out of solutions. Please help. – EXASPERATED IN VIRGINIA

DEAR EXASPERATED: Your in-laws are either unbelievably insensitive or they were raised in a foreign culture where "dropping in and staying indefinitely" is acceptable.

In any case, I think it is up to your husbands to handle this gently, but firmly. Try to interest them in some local activities or some kind of volunteer work – perhaps with senior citizens. It would help them. And you. I wish you luck.

Rainy day treat: Spicy red hot soup

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

What I particularly like about the Urvater soup is that you can vary it to suit your own taste. Want it less hot? Omit or cut down on the cayenne. Want less peanut flavor? Add only half the amount of peanut butter called for. We're grateful to Michele for giving us permission to pass along her fine recipe.

SPICY RED SOUP

2 tablespoons butter
2 slices bacon, finely diced
1 medium onion, thinly sliced
¼ pound sweet potatoes, peeled
¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon
¼ teaspoon chili powder
¼ teaspoon cumin
¼ teaspoon cayenne
3 cups chicken stock or water
2 tablespoons tomato paste
½ cup non-homogenized peanut butter
Salt and pepper
½ cup sour cream

Melt the butter over medium heat in a 3- or 4-quart saucepan; then add the bacon. After a couple of minutes, add the onion, then cover the pot and cook for about 10 minutes, or until the onion is translucent. Check the onion every now and then to make sure it is not burning.

While the onion is cooking, dice the potatoes. When the onion is translucent, remove the cover and stir in the potatoes, cinnamon, chili powder, cumin, cayenne and stock. Cover, and simmer for 20 minutes.

Transfer the soup to a blender or food processor. Add the tomato paste and peanut butter and puree until smooth. Season with about ½ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper.

Reheat the soup until piping hot; garnish each portion with a dab of sour cream.

NOTE: you may use white potatoes instead of sweet potatoes.

Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Clam soup with bacon flavor a charmer

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

2 slices bacon
1 medium onion, diced (¼ inch)
1 tablespoon flour
1 medium potato, cubed (½ inch)
6½-ounce can minced clams, undrained
1 cup milk
Salt and pepper to taste
Minced parsley

In a 10-inch skillet, cook bacon until crisp; drain and crumble; leave 1 tablespoon of fat in skillet. Stir in onion; cook over low heat until wilted; stir in flour. In a 2½-quart saucepan, in 1 cup water, gently boil potato until soft — 20 minutes. Stir in onion, clams with their liquid, milk and salt and pepper. Bring to simmering, stirring often. Garnish with crumbled bacon and parsley. Makes 3 servings.

Connie Francis requests stamp recognizing crime victims' burdens

Connie Francis

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Singer Connie Francis has begun a campaign for the U.S. Postal Service to issue a stamp recognizing the burdens of crime victims, who she says suffer silently and get little help.

"There very rarely is (a government) appropriation for victims because they have no voice. There is no money behind them...They are not a special interest group," said Miss Francis, 44. She has been active in crime victim programs since she was raped at a Long Island hotel in New York state in November 1974.

Miss Francis and New Jersey Gov. Thomas H. Kean signed a petition Tuesday asking the Postal Service to issue the stamp.

Helen Hayes

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Actress Helen Hayes, 82, has been given the Madonna Care Center's "Angel of Madonna" award for her humanitarian work for elderly and disabled people.

"I'm always looking for inspiration in life," Miss Hayes said. "That keeps me going, keeps be happy, alive and well and strong and youthful. I feel as well as I did at 30."

Miss Hayes said she skipped two days of filming in Los Angeles to be in Lincoln for the award ceremony Monday, held in part to raise money for the center. She currently is working on a film based on an Agatha Christie novel, where she plays mystery-solver Miss Jane Marple.

• • •

BOSTON (AP) — The father of Jamie Fiske, the tiny recipient of a life-saving liver transplant, brought his chubby-faced daughter to the state Senate where he introduced her as a little "miracle."

The 16-month-old girl clapped happily Tuesday as Massachusetts lawmakers presented a resolution honoring the family.

Charles Fiske accepted the resolution, saying, "If you saw pictures of Jamie prior to the operation, she was jaundiced, yellow...We are here with a miracle that has happened to us. We ask that you offer that same hope to families like ourselves."

Legislation is pending that would require insurers to pay for liver transplants, a bill Fiske has asked state lawmakers to support.

• • •

LONDON (AP) — Producer-composer Andrew Lloyd Webber says he wants a divorce so he can marry dancer-turned-actress Sarah Brightman, 22, who began her acting career in his hit musical "Cats."

The 34-year-old Webber, whose hits include "Jesus Christ, Superstar" and "Evita," married his 29-year-old wife, also named Sarah, 12 years ago. They have a daughter, 6, and a son, 2.

"Unhappily we will be seeking a divorce in the near future," Lloyd Webber said in a statement issued Tuesday.

Saying he also wanted to confirm his "great friendship with Sarah Brightman," Lloyd Webber added: "She and I have known each other professionally for several years, but it is only recently that our friendship developed. It is our present intention to marry when we are able to do so honorably."

• • •

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Queen Sophia of Spain has inaugurated an exhibition at the Prado Museum of 52 Goya paintings owned by private collectors.

Many of the works never have been exhibited publicly and others have not been on display since a similar show at the Prado in 1928, organizers said Tuesday. The show is scheduled to run three months.

• • •

Paul McCartney

BERLIN (AP) — Ex-Beatle Paul McCartney has been ordered to begin making monthly payments of $282 to a 20-year-old woman claiming to be his daughter.

McCartney, 40, was ordered Tuesday by a West Berlin court to make the payments to Bettina Huebers pending the outcome of a paternity suit. The court said payments were retroactive to Sept. 29, 1982, when the suit was filed, and must continue until it is settled.

The mother, Erika Huebers, 41, first publicized her paternity claim two years ago.

There was no immediate comment from McCartney, whose whereabouts were unknown. But he repeatedly has denied being the woman's father.

McCartney has three children by his marriage to Linda Eastman and a stepdaughter by his wife's previous marriage. The couple, married since 1969, formed the pop group Wings after the Beatles broke up.

• • •

Bianca Jagger

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Bianca Jagger, the former wife of Rolling Stones singer Mick Jagger, is trying to help her native country by promoting "Nicaragua Now" documentaries at the Filmex movie exposition.

"I'm sure it's from guilt — guilt over the fact that I've had a privileged life," she said Monday about her work.

One of her uncles was ambassador to pre-Castro Cuba under Nicaraguan President Anastosia Somoza, who was overthrown by the Sandinistas. Her father ran a thriving commodities business.

After the 1972 earthquake that leveled Managua, the Jaggers raised more than $200,000 in relief help. "I visited the barrios," she said, "and I saw a country that was a million miles away from what I saw when I was growing up."

CBS Inc. gets first new boss in 55 years

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS Inc., created 55 years ago from "a patchwork, money-losing little company," got its first new boss in 55 years today when founder William S. Paley retired as chairman.

Thomas H. Wyman, a former Pillsbury Co. executive who has been president and chief executive of CBS since June 1980, was preparing to succeed the 81-year-old Paley as the company's directors gathered in St. Louis for the annual shareholders' meeting.

Paley, who announced his decision to step down as chairman last September, will remain with CBS as a director and as chairman of the board of directors' executive committee. He will also serve CBS as a consultant.

Wyman takes over with the CBS television network dominating in prime time and rising in corporate income. CBS recently began expansion into new areas of communications.

Life receives award

NEW YORK (AP) — Life magazine has been awarded the American Society of Magazine Editors' annual award for general excellence among publications with circulations of more than 1 million.

Other winners of general excellence awards were Science '82 in the 400,000 to 1 million circulation category; Harper's, 100,000 to 400,000; and Louisiana Life, less than 100,000.

Those and seven other awards were announced Tuesday by the society at a luncheon at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. A review of the work of 59 finalists was narrated by Osborn Elliott, dean of the Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism, and Midge Turk Richardson, editor of Seventeen magazine.

The awards are administered by the graduate school and the awards program is assisted by the Magazine Publishers Association.

Awards in other categories went to The American Lawyer for essay and criticism; Foreign Affairs for public service; IEEE Spectrum for single-topic issue; Institutional Investor for reporting; New York for design; North American Review for fiction; and Sunset for service to the individual.

Japan acts to protect its treasures

By WILLIAM WILSON
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Japan strikes us as the most modern of Asian states, so advanced in auto making and electronics that the United States finds itself running to catch up.

At the same time the island nation has an artistic and cultural tradition that stretches back thousands of years BC. Ever since the 17th century, when Japan emerged from the Shogunate and three centuries of isolation, there have been worries that absorption of Western advances would dilute and eventually destroy indigenous culture.

History made the fear into a self-fulfilling prophecy so that by the time of the occupation after the World War II, traditional arts and crafts had become endangered species. Knowledge of ancient techniques was dying of economic obsolescence exacerbated by such factors as a law forbidding citizens to carry weapons. This effectively put sword makers out of business. Thousands of blades were confiscated and destroyed before some quick-witted bureaucrat figured out that such armaments are relatively harmless in the Atomic Age and that, in Japan at least, they are often artworks.

Finally in the mid-'50s, existing laws on the protection of cultural patrimony were consolidated and revised into a unique code that designates "Living National Treasures." That means that individuals and groups deemed masters of traditional ceramics, textiles, lacquers, metalwork and so forth receive annual grants to do their thing and train their successors.

SO FAR 70 PEOPLE and 11 groups have been dubbed ambulatory treasures. That doesn't seem like many, but treasures are rare by definition. Evidence suggests that the small corps of the aesthetic elite are achieving the end of preserving a great tradition, at least for the moment. But a disturbingly large number of those designated as living treasures are advanced in age.

Nonetheless, there is nothing moribund about their exquisite exhibition titled "Living National Treasures of Japan." It was organized as an exchange with the the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, which sent a selection of paintings never before permitted to leave the institution. They are Japanese paintings collected by the museum during the period when Japan so undervalued its own art that it was up to foreigners to preserve it.

Japan's end of the swap is on view at the Japanese American Cultural and Community Center here until May 1. It is imperative fare for anyone who likes to look at high-level objets d'art or think about tradition that tries to rest in the rushing river of time.

About 240 objects are listed in the catalogue, but don't be surprised to find half that number on view. Works are rotated periodically to prevent fading or other damage, a potential exposure to strong light. Obviously the Japanese take their living treasures' offspring seriously.

THEY LOOK VERY Japanese. We instantly recognize the distinctive thick "T" shape of hanging kimonos, the breathtaking elegance of Samurai-style blades and such trademark objects as a gong and a bell based on the ancient "dotaku" type. Everything conforms to historical models, but nothing looks old, because, of course, it isn't.

The bronze of the bell is green all right, but it lacks the variety of patina that the metal picks up after a few centuries in some emperor's tomb. The gong's stand is a beautiful wood, but there isn't a ding in it. Gongs have certainly long since become ceremonial, but you wonder if this one has ever even been struck.

Everything from basketry to handmade paper and inlaid metalwork is visually stunning,

Exile: Protesters arrested

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A Libyan leader living in exile here said earlier this week that at least 30 Libyan university students were arrested earlier this month following protests against Col. Moammar Khadafy's government.

Former Prime Minister Abdel-Hamid el-Bakoush, who was granted asylum in Egypt several years ago, said the disturbances occurred at Gharyounis University in the Libyan coastal city of Benghazi on April 7.

Experts: All attacks can't be prevented

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Embassy in Beirut, heavily damaged in a terrorist attack Monday, was among those diplomatic compounds where security was tightened following the hostage-taking in Iran. But experts say it's impossible to prevent all attacks — especially suicide missions.

A pro-Iranian terrorist group, Moslem Holy War, claimed responsibility for setting off explosives packed into a pickup truck, killing more than three dozen people.

"It points out once again what a perilous occupation diplomacy has become," said Dennis K. Hays, president of the American Foreign Service Association, which represents U.S. diplomatic personnel.

Although the association is satisfied that American security efforts abroad are "working pretty well," he said, "when you have someone willing to die in the attempt of an attack, it's very difficult to stop."

The bombing of the Beirut embassy was the most serious assault on an American embassy since a spate of attacks in 1979 — which included the taking of American hostages in Tehran on Nov. 4, 1979, the burning of the embassy in Islamabad, Pakistan on Nov. 22 and the sacking of the U.S. mission in Tripoli, Libya less than two weeks later.

IN 1980, THE State Department began a five-year program of increasing protection at overseas diplomatic posts — aiming to complete improvements at 25 posts each year.

John Redell of the General Accounting Office, which conducted a follow-up study that found serious delays in the program, says security needs at embassies has changed dramatically.

"In the 1970s, State was gearing its program up to protecting individuals," he said. "The threats were against individuals. But in the 1980s they are gearing up for massive assaults, group assaults..."

He said group assaults were something new and the new program was intended to "buy time" until host governments could provide sufficient local police protection.

The GAO, the investigative arm of Congress, said last year that the program was behind schedule, with work completed at only four posts.

The State Department said in a statement Monday that "significant improvements" had been made at the embassy in Beirut, and that all planned improvements had been completed.

They included establishing perimeter checkpoints to screen vehicles and visitors entering the grounds, security posts manned by Lebanese, security guards and Marines and use of metal detectors to screen of visitors and packages before admisison into the buildings.

NEW BARRIERS WERE added to the perimeter and lobby and consular section to protect against gunfire and forced entry.

Larry Speakes, the White House deputy spokeman, said Monday, "These things are difficult to protect against. You do what you can. We've done what we can. This was clearly unexpected."

The embassy building was virtually closed during the recent fighting in West Beirut because of the danger to Americans, and it was only recently reopened.

The embassy was considered a prime target for terrorists, in part because of the close relationship between the United States and Israel, which invaded Lebanon on June 6.

The embassy in Beirut was damaged by grenades in April 1979. A previously unknown group called "The Arab People" claimed responsiblity.

More than a year later, in September 1980, a pro-Iranian group fired rocket-propelled grenades at the building, inflicting some damage but no casualties. In May 1981 extremists hit the embassy with rifle-fired grenades. There was only minor damage.

Richard T. Kennedy, under secretary of state for management, told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on June 10, 1981 that the State Department was "constructing safe havens in our embassies and consulates, improving buildings access control, installing non-lethal denial systems (against entry by terrorists), and concentrating on other life-saving measures."

HE SAID THE department had also developed a system of contingency planning to insure that it was "not caught unaware and unprepared in a future terrorist attack."

Kennedy said all personnel assigned overseas were given a two-day course on coping with violence, including segments on hostage survival, bomb recognition and residential security.

Hays said the government needs to constantly upgrade its security measures, but without isolating diplomatic posts and personnel.

"We don't want to get to the stage where we are completely cut off from the country and the people, and the embassy has no direct contact," he said in a telephone interview.

As home computer market booms, video game market encounters doom

Hearst Feature Service

The price war in home computers is spelling doom to the video game market, as consumers realize that for the same money or less they can purchase a machine that will do far more than just entertain.

In reaction, leaders in the video game system industry are scrambling to adapt cartridges to computer software. Mattel Electronics and Coleco Industries, Inc., are even coming out with their own computers.

Home computer manufacturers have steadily cut prices and consumers have been responding.

Industry watchers estimate unit sales of home micros may crest at the 6 million mark in 1983, an increase of about 4.8 million from last year and a 5.5 million jump from 1981's 500,000 units sold.

"Home computers are definately encroaching on the video game market with prices at or below the moderately good video game units," said Steve Eisenberg, analyst for Bear, Stearns & Co. in New York.

The Timex TS-1000, with manufacturer's rebate, now retails for $44.95; Texas Instruments' TI-99/4A, also with rebate, today costs $159.95; Commodore's Vic-20 has come down to $99.95 in some stores; and Atari's 400 recently broke the magic $200 level, selling at $199.95.

In comparison, Atari's 2600 video game system has a suggested retail price of $169.95, Mattel's Intellevision II retails at about $150, and ColecoVision sells for just under $200.

"The universality of computers will displace the demand for video games," said Eisenberg. "Commodore and TI will benefit and Milton Bradley, with its new line of (computer) peripherals will probably do well too."

Atari, said Eisenberg, despite its crash in video game market share from 80 percent to 40 percent, will do well in the long run because it has a good line of software for its computers.

Mattel, on the other hand, he said, is not doing as well as it could, and its new home computer, the Aquarius (to be released this week), is rather expensive compared in price to TI and Commodore, which appear to offer more value.

By this summer Mattel also plans to have out its Intellivision Entertainment System, a computer keyboard and adaptor that will sell for $125 to $150. Harry Hendricks, service center coordinator at San Francisco-based Sutro Group, still rates the stock of Atari's parent corporation, Warner Communications as a "hold."

"We don't see them gaining new ground in the video game market," said Hendricks. "Management seems to be unable to deal with the competition from Commodore, Mattel and Coleco."

Hendricks said the video game market is definitely shrinking and Atari hasen't come up with anything unique lately.

"We see Atari continuing to lose market share," said Hendricks. "The stock was hit harder than last year's earnings indicate, but we believe it's now catching up with them. Atari's move to concentrating on computers is certainly following the trend but the quality and price aren't there."

Scott Hillman with the Los Angeles- based software tracking firm, Softsell, said game program sales for home computers are growing rapidly while the video game market is leveling off.

"Consumers realize that for about the same investment they can purchase a real computer rather than something that will just play games," he said.

Hillman points to Mattel, which has adapted several of its Intellivision games for use on the Aquarius, as an example of the shifting trend in video games.

"Mattel is introducing a real nice little machine (Aquarius)," he said. "For any company to be competitive these days they have to start serving the computer game market which is a major trend in the industry."

As demand for home computers grows and for video games diminishes, the entertainment software market becomes all the more competitive.

"Software is subject to price erosion but the top quality software will do well," said Bear, Stearns & Co.'s Eisenberg. "The price erosion will be in the poor quality software. It will be rough sweating for the smaller guys."

Eisenberg believes companies already in home computers and video games may "cannibalize" their operations.

Mort Handel, executive vice president at Coleco said there continues to be strong demand for video games, "but we view the two markets – games for home computers and video games – as the same market."

Coleco, which plans to introduce a computer this summer, produces cartridges for ColecoVision, Atari, and Intellivision video game systems.

"We're viewed by consumers as the number one video game manufacturer," said Handel. "First quarter earnings for 1983 were three times earnings in the first qurater of 1982. As a result of last year's strength we're now the third largest toy company in the country."

Handel expect the video game market to grow.

Black votes crucial to elections

WASHINGTON (AP) — Blacks turned out to vote at a higher rate than whites in eight states in the 1982 elections, as black turnout nationwide jumped substantially, a new Census Bureau report says.

In seven other states, blacks and whites turned out at about equal rates, helping narrow the turnout gap nationally between the races to its lowest point in the last 20 years.

The figures lend support to the arguments of black leaders that blacks will play a crucial role in the 1984 elections because blacks are registering and voting in record numbers.

Nationally, 43 percent of the blacks reported voting in the 1982 elections, versus 49.9 percent of the whites, the Census report said. That 6.9 percent gap is the smallest seen since blacks began to register to vote in the South in large numbers in the 1960s, after federal laws sought to guarantee black voting rights.

Key factors are attributed to the increase in black voting: registration and get-out-the-vote drives targeted at blacks, more black major-party candidates in significant races, and black opposition to President Reagan and his policies.

Police scoops up thieves

YORKTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — It didn't take police long to get the scoop on a pair of ice cream thieves.

The case began when a couple returned home to find that a half-gallon of chocolate chip ice cream had been taken from their freezer, opened, sampled and left melting on the kitchen floor.

Alongside was a small, used spoon.

Suspects from the heist last Thursday were questioned, and Lt. Daniel Morgan said police finally "solved and digested the case" on Monday.

Afghans riots

Riots broke out in Kabul, Afghanistan on Feb. 22, 1980.

Oil dealer: I'm a victim of dioxin

ST. LOUIS (AP) — He's been accused of killing horses and birds, making people sick and wiping an entire Missouri town off the map. But waste oil dealer Russell Bliss sees himself as another victim of the dioxin contamination that has plagued the state since the early 1970s.

"The newspapers have blown this thing all out of proportion," Bliss said in a recent telephone interview. "This dioxin has never been proved to be harmful to people."

Federal officials have confirmed dioxin contamination at Times Beach, the state's most publicized site, and 26 other places in Missouri.

Authorities say it was Bliss' company that sprayed doxin-laced oil from a defunct chemical plant on rural roads and horse arenas throughout the state more than 10 years ago.

And while health officials disagree on what effects the toxic chemical has on humans, dioxin — which scientists say is 200,000 times as toxic as cyanide — has been shown to cause cancer and birth defects in some animals.

Preliminary results of health tests performed on more than 1,200 Missouri residents exposed to the toxic chemical have shown only minor skin rashes, according to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. Finaf results of extensive blood and urine testing should be available within a month, officials say.

The 48-year-old Bliss has been in the waste oil business for more than 30 years. He dropped out of high school to get married and join what was then his father's company.

Those years of collecting waste oil from garages and service stations and selling it to refineries and others have been good ones for a man who admits he "can't hardly read."

His sprawling 200-acre farm, a stable of prize show horses, and exotic, luxury car collection — including a 1952 Mercedes convertible once owned by John Kennedy and a Cadillac Eldorado pickup truck once owned by Elvis Presley — attest to the success of the flamboyant businessman.

Bliss, saying that "Every time I talk to the newspapers it just makes it worse," has maintained a low profile since January when he testified before a state legislative committee about his involvement in spreading dioxin throughout the state.

He tearfully told the Missouri House Energy Committee that he had no idea he was spreading dioxin-contaminated oil.

"I swear to all of you I had no idea that oil was bad," the former waste oil dealer said. "I just wish the oil had been disposed of in some other way."

Bliss said he had inspected the tainted oil he picked up from a now-defunct chemical plant near Verona in southwest Missouri. He said he found no reason at the time to suspect anything was wrong before he sprayed it in Times Beach and other areas as a dust control measure.

The company has now been turned over to his son, Jerry.

Known as Jerry Russell Bliss Inc., it is currently operating under a temporary restraining order allowing it to do business as usual, pending a decision by the state Hazardous Waste Commission.

Russell Bliss received the order after state officials found barrels of toxic waste illegally stored on his land and denied his waste transporter license, saying the company was "habitually engaged in waste management practices which pose a threat to the health of humans or the environment."

Bliss also faces federal tax evasion charges of overstating purchases for a three-year period. And he has been named as a defendant in several dioxin-related lawsuits.

Gary Lambarth, who drove a truck for Bliss for 15 years and has agreed to testify against the former waste hauler at the upcoming tax trial, thinks Bliss has been made a scapegoat.

"He's taken an awful lot of unnecessary flak," said Lambarth, who says he is under government protection. "The chemical companies had to know it was hazardous stuff. It was all just a scam with Bliss as the fall guy.

"I was the one who spread the stuff on Times Beach and the horse stables and I'm sure we didn't know there was anything bad in it until 1975. I even sprayed the stuff on Russell's farm," Lambarth said.

Lambarth, who suffers from stiff joints, hair loss and chloracne caused by the chemical, said the real culprits are the chemical companies that produced the deadly byproduct during the manufacture of a herbicide and hexachlorophene, a germicide.

Bliss' attorney, Charles Shaw, said he's considering taking action against Independent Petrochemical Co., which contracted Bliss to haul the dioxin-laden waste, and the now-defunct Northeastern Pharmaceutical & Chemical Co., which generated the waste.

"We have statute of limitation problems," Shaw said. "But I don't think there's any doubt that he's been made the scapegoat in all of this."

Researcher sees future for algae

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Nevada's deserts could bloom with blue-green algae and the nation's most arid state could become the "protein bread basket of the world," a University of Nevada-Reno researcher says.

"It's kind of a dream of mine ... that we might be able to outproduce Illinois and Iowa combined," microbiologist Glenn Bedell said Monday, announcing preliminary results of his research into the algae called spirulina.

Spirulina, a plankton that was harvested as food by the Aztecs, is high in protein, vitamins and minerals. According to Bedell, the algae is perfectly suited for growth in 95-degree mud pools fed by Nevada's hundreds of geothermal wells and springs.

Bedell admits liking the taste of spirulina — "it's kind of like alfalfa or new-mown hay" — but he doesn't think it's ever going to be considered fine cuisine.

"I really don't look at it as health food," he said. "I don't think you're going to convert people in the United States to eating algae intead of steak. Where I see the big market is in animal feed."

The powder is often sold in health food stores. Nutritionists say it should only be considered a food supplement, not a substitute, and could create large amounts of uric acid in the body, which could lead to gout or kidney stones.

In March 1982, a Boulder Creek, Calif., company agreed to pay a $225,000 fine and halt what California state officials said were "outrageous claims" for the product.

Spirulina grows in astounding volumes, Bedell said, with roughly 100 times the yield of soybeans for about the same cost.

"Soybeans, you have a maximum of 700 to 800 pounds of protein per acre," he said. "We're expecting a minimum of around 70,000 pounds per acre. It sounds too good to be true, doesn't it?"

Bedell is helping Oakland, Calif., entrepreneur Neal Townsend turn an abandoned geothermal gasohol plant into a spirulina farm.

Eventually, Bedell said, the plant at Wabuska, Nev., 70 miles southeast of Reno, could have 70 acres of mud ponds teeming with spirulina. The algae would be grown in 20,000-gallon plastic tubes, about 18 tubes to the acre.

For starters, Bedell and Townsend are planning to cultivate spirulina in one tube beginning this spring. Their anticipated yield is about 11 pounds of algae per day.

Spirulina is grown mostly outside the U.S., with the biggest plant is in Mexico, according to Bedell. In powdered form, it sells for about $20 to $30 a pound, he said, and Townsend hopes to sell it on the wholesale health food market for about $5 a pound.

At that rate, he could rake in about $350,000 an acre annually. Bedell said Townsend's costs should be no more than $200,000 the first year and $100,000 a year after that.

He said spirulina eventually could be sold cheaper than soybeans and "pretty well take away the soybean market."

Nevada is the driest state in the United States with an average annual rainfall of 8.81 inches, compared with a national average of 29 inches.

Executives suggest ways to save money

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government could save $46.8 billion in three years if it better managed health, transportation, housing and public lands programs, as well as its own financial assets, a presidential task force says.

The President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control, consisting of some 1,400 business people, released its second round of cost-cutting suggestions.Among the more controversial suggestions: selling millions of acres of grazing lands in 10 Western states and doubling or tripling the grazing fees on remaining federal lands.

The task force proposed raising $20 million by boosting entrance fees, or imposing new ones, at national parks, and saving $1.5 billion by charging "user fees" to private boat owners to help underwrite Coast Guard expenses.

On managing government cash and other assets, the panel said the Defense Department could save $17.9 billion by reducing advance payments to contractors.

Probationers handcuffed to home by new electronic tracking system

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — An Albuquerque man convicted of writing bad checks will be the first probationer monitored by a so-called "electronic handcuff" watchdog system, says the judge who devised the system.

"We started out a little slow," said state District Judge Jack Love of Albuquerque. "But now, it's just a matter of signing the formal judgment and having him come in and get his bracelet."

The man is expected to begin his at-home incarceration Wednesday.

The slow start has come as a variety of problems plagued the probation system, which was ballyhooed in March as a revolutionary change in corrections practices.

The "handcuff" is a cigarette-pack-sized transmitter that the probationer wears on his ankle. It emits a signal that is picked up by a receiver attached to the probationer's telephone, which in turn relays it to a computer.

A printout on the computer will show probation officers when the probationers strays further than about 200 feet from the receiver. If those times vary from the probationer's approved work schedule, then the officers check to see if the terms of the probation have been violated, Love said.

When the development of the device by an Albuquerque company was announced earlier this year, company president Michael T. Goss said it eventually could help slow the crowding of jails across the country because people who are not a threat to society could serve their time at home.

Love initially had planned a six-month pilot program, trying the device out with actual probationers.

The first problem arose when he wore one himself and found that it kept him on too short of a leash. Adjustments were made, but before the program could begin, other judges in Albuquerque's 2nd Judicial District raised questions about whether the method would be fair to the poor.

Love had planned to charge the probationers $70 a month for the use of the equipment, which also would require a telephone in each probationer's home.

The issue went to the New Mexico Supreme Court, which on Friday refused to rule on it, saying an actual case could eventually come before the high court.

But the court told Love that if he did begin the pilot program, he should be cautious to keep it from becoming a news media event.

Love said Monday he would not reveal the names of the people placed on the special probation and would ban cameras from his courtroom when he sentences them.

He also said he had "pared the whole program down to two probationers for not more than 30 days. The manufacturer has agreed to pay the cost of those two."

The Albuquerque man who will be outfitted with the device Wednesday agreed to try it as part of a plea-bargain agreement. The man, who had nearly completed one probation, pleaded guilty to writing bad checks and was ordered to spend three years more on probation, Love said.

He said the man, who also will make restitution to the victim businesses, will spend the first month in the pilot program and the rest of his three years under "conventional probation." The agreement allows him to leave his home only to go to work during the first month.

"That's actually a little more strict than I envisioned, but that was the deal they struck," Love said.

The man did not have a telephone so the manufacturer of the device, NIMCOS, Inc., agreed to pay for that, too, Love said.

He said the second probationer will be named to the program as soon as possible.

"I'll be keeping my eyes open for an appropriate case," he said. "It may come later this week. We'll just have to wait and see."

Groups asked to probe patrol's involvement in deaths

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Three international organizations are being asked to investigate the U.S. Border Patrol's involvement in the drownings of Mexican farmworkers during immigration raids.

The request is being sent to Amnesty International, the Organization of American States, and the United Nations, by the Sacramento Roman Catholic Diocese, El Concilio of Sacramento, and the Central Valley Equal Rights Council of Modesto.

At a news conference Tuesday, Father Keith Kenny, representing Sacramento Bishop Francis Quinn, said of the drowning victims, "These are not criminals. These are people whose only crime is seeking a better way of life.

The groups requesting the investigation say four undocumented aliens drowned when fleeing into rivers or canals.

Larry Webb, center, reads a state health department report to his neighbors near the so-called Minker dioxin site in Imperial, Mo., Tuesday. The report said that 112 of the 130 people tested suffered from blood or urine abnormalities. Listening in are, from left, Ervin Adams, Brian Webb and Dave Davies.

Tests for dioxin leave people confused, afraid

IMPERIAL, Mo. (AP) — Area residents screened for dioxin contamination are confused and frightened after being told by health officials that almost all of them have some abnormality in their blood or urine tests.

"I was terrified," Shirley Abrahamson said Tuesday. "You start talking to all the neighbors and everybody has abnormal blood and urine. I can't believe we all have abnormalities."

"I called my wife at work and she broke into tears," said Larry Webb, one of 130 residents here to be screened after being deemed "high-risk" by the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. "I thought my heart was going to stop beating."

Webb was among 112 residents out of 130 receiving intensive dioxin screening who were notified in a letter from state health officials Tuesday that early lab results showed abnormalities in at least one test. In all, about 1,200 Missouri residents were screened in the CDC examinations.

Those screened all live near sites determined by the Environmental Protection Agency to contain some of the highest levels of dioxin in the state.

CDC officials ordered the intensive health exams earlier this year after the EPA found dioxin in some areas at close to 300 times the level it considers safe.

"All 112 showed some abnormality," Dr. Denny Donnell of the Missouri Division of Health said in a telephone interview from Atlanta, where he is meeting with CDC officials.

"We are not yet in a position to say that these abnormalities are due to dioxin," he added. "Some of the key tests are still being completed."

Webb said he, his wife, Sharon, and their two sons all had an abnormal blood count. In addition, Webb said he had abnormal blood chemistry while his son Brian, 10 had acetone, a flammable organic solvent, in his urine.

For the past decade, the Webbs have lived less than 100 yards from the so-called Minker site in the Meramec Hills area about 25 miles south of St. Louis. The site has been tested as having 300 parts of dioxin per billion parts of soil. The CDC has said it considers levels above one part per billion to be dangerous to humans.

"We are not yet in a position to say that these abnormalities are due to dioxin. Some of the key tests are still being completed..."

"I wouldn't be alarmed by the letters. But then, I'm not one of those people."

Residents received the test results by registered mail about mid-afternoon. Donnell said he sent the results without explanation, directing those affected to consult their own physicians for further information.

"I will agree it is highly technical," Donnell said. "But we expect they will find technical support to continue with their own health care."

Donnell said the battery of test results does not include three liver tests, which he called crucial. He said an overall evaluation will be done when those tests are completed by the CDC and residents notified of the results.

"I wouldn't be alarmed by the letters," Donnell said. "But then, I'm not one of those people."

The Minker site is one of more than 25 sites sprayed with dioxin-contaminated waste oil in the early 1970s. Dioxin is a byproduct of herbicide and germicide production. It has been known to cause cancer, liver and spleen problems, and reproductive failure in laboratory animals. Its effect on humans is disputed and unclear.

Senator tries to undo changes at NHTSA

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican chairman of a Senate transportation panel today began an effort to undo changes the Reagan administration has made in highway safety regulations.

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., announced he will introduce legislation covering a broad range of safety issues, including four major standards axed by the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration.

Among its provisions, the proposed Highway Safety Act of 1983 would:

—Reinstate government requirements for automobile bumpers that can absorb a 5 mph impact without damage.

—Require new cars beginning with 1986 models to have airbags to protect auto occupants in crashes.

—Mandate resumption of auto crash testing and publication of results in something resembling the discontinued "Car Book."

—Upgrade standards for protection of occupants in side-impact crashes.

"I view this as an effort to fill a vacuum created by the withdrawal of federal regulatory agencies from highway safety," Danforth said in an interview. "Highway safety is one area where changing the law really does effect results."

Danforth, chairman of the Senate Commerce surface transportation subcommittee, has a been a persistent critic of the transportation safety administration under administrator Raymond Peck, once nicknaming it the "National Highway Danger Administration." He attempted to reinstate air bags through a system of tax incentives last year, but the effort got nowhere.

"I think these are areas where the state of the art as far as safety is concerned is pretty well known, and it's not a matter any longer of deferring to a regulatory agency's judgment on the subject," Danforth said.

He noted that Elizabeth Dole, the new secretary of transportation, has said highway safety will be one of her priorities and predicted that the administration will be able to go along with at least part of the bill.

Joan Claybrook, who was administrator of the transportation safety administration during the Carter administration, called Danforth's latest initiative "certainly a brash approach for him" and predicted it would command attention from the administration.

"I think it's an important step in terms of putting pressure on the administration and it shows there's strong bipartisan support in Congress for auto and highway safety," she said.

In addition, the bill would require automakers to install anti-lacerating windshields and high-mounted rear stoplights in cars.

Pauken: Criticisms of ACTION just 'much ado about nothing'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thomas Pauken, the director of ACTION, dismisses as "much ado about nothing" a report that the national volunteer organization may be neglecting its anti-poverty mandate and exaggerating its achievements.

"These are very subjective interpretations. This is nitpicking stuff," Pauken said Tuesday after testifying at a House subcommittee hearing on reauthorization for ACTION.

In a preliminary report, the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, found possible exaggeration of job placements through the Vietnam Veterans Leadership Program.

GAO said the ACTION program contended it had placed 1,000 veterans in jobs, but a study of 20 projects accounting for 800 claimed placements found only 344.

"Their figures are way off," Pauken maintained. "We're not doing a body count and they know that. We believe our estimate is far closer than their estimate."

Chronic Polish social ill — alcoholism — scrutinized

By W. JOSEPH CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland — Coinciding with preparations for the scheduled visit of Pope John Paul II in June is renewed scrutiny of what the official media here call "the scourge of alcohol abuse."

Alcoholism is a chronic Polish social problem that has defied the mutual concern of the Roman Catholic Church and the communist government.

The topic commands critical attention these days in the press, Parliament and pulpit.

The Catholic primate, Cardinal Jozef Glemp, has urged Poles to "clean up all those dirty things from our social lives" before the pope arrives June 16 — and condemned "excessive alcohol consumption."

In his Easter message a few days later, Glemp expressed "sorrow that we are not able to help thousands of our brothers afflicted by alcoholism ... enter a proper life."

A taste for strong alcoholic beverages — and a tendency to indulge heavily — are acknowledged features of Polish social life.

Although alcohol's impact on the troubled Polish society defies precise measurement, the nation's Academy of Sciences said in its most recent study of the subject: "The Polish alcohol-drinking custom is an anachronism representing an obstacle in modernizing the country."

Health Minister Tadeusz Szelachowski has placed alcohol abuse ahead of tobacco smoking, "sanitary negligence" and environmental pollution as principal health threats to he country of 36 million people.

"The threshold of inebriation," said the Academy of Sciences report, is crossed daily by 3 million Poles, 300,000 of whom are women. In 1977, the last year fopr which statistics are available, 4.3 million Poles were identified as frequent "intensive drinkers," and the report says that only a small fraction of alcohol abusers needing treatment are receiving it.

The study, which was published in 1980, said 70 percent of the alcohol consumed by Poles is vodka and other hard liquors — a ration, the academy claimed, that is unequaled in the world.

Factors accounting for the persistent, widespread abuse are numerous. A Western analyst in Warsaw ticked off a list that included the typically long, bleak winters; the long nights of a northern European country at the eastern edge of a time zone, and the dulling, flat grayness of Polish cityscapes and countrysides.

Most assuredly, he said, contemporary anxieties, uncertainties and disillusionment are other compelling factors.

"When reality defeats you, you have to turn to something," he said. "This is still very much a police state. They still watch you; they can still bring you in."

Despite the suspension of martial law at the end of last yeear, Poland remains, he said, "a tense country. It's a place where tensions have been built-in" over centuries of division, absorption and struggle against powerful neighbors.

The most recent official attempt to confront the problem — a government measure on "sobriety and countering alcoholism" — is to take effect in mid-May, a month before the pope's seven-day visit to his native country.

It anticipates reducing the number of restaurants and outlets selling alcohol by 30 percent; prohibiting alcohol consumption at the workplace where, according to the Academy of Sciences study, 40 percent of all drinks are taken, and introducing a pricing procedure to curb consumption, particularly of hard liquor.

"Prices for such beverages," the measures states, "should be fixed at levels higher than increases in private incomes."

Price increases averaging 25 percent on alcohol were put into effect early this year with the result that drinking in restaurants has been conspicuously reduced.

A government marketing expert, Maria Litmanowicz, writing in the Communist Party newspaper Trybuna Ludu in March, acknowledged that "price hikes alone will not effect the aims of the measure on sobriety and combating alcoholism."

The newspaper Rzeczpospolita reported that nearly 25 percent of crimes in Poland last year "were committed by persons under the influence of alcohol. The crime-stimulating effect of alcohol is most apparent in crimes involving physical aggression." Intoxicated people, the newspaper said, were responsible for 58 percent of the murders last year.

PLO's part in Polish ceremony protested

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Four Israeli officials decided to leave Poland today to protest the participation of a PLO representative in ceremonies honoring Jewish heroes of the Warsaw ghetto uprising, the Israeli Foreign Ministry said.

The incident which angered the Israelis and other Jewish leaders occurred Tuesday, when a Palestine Liberation Organization diplomat joined in wreath-laying ceremonies at the ghetto monument and then called the Israelis "the new Nazis."

The wreath-laying was part of observances marking the 40th anniversary of the doomed 1943 uprising by Warsaw Jews against the Nazi occupiers.

Fouad Yaseen, the PLO representative, laid a wreath at the monument honoring the resistance fighters and said "They were the victims of fascism and so are we...the new Nazis are Zionists and Israel."

David Rivlin, spokesman for the Israeli Foreign Ministry, told The Associated Press that the four Israeli delegates, who include the Tel Aviv Mayor Shlomo Lahat, decided to leave Poland because "we view the official participation of the PLO representative as an offense to our Jewish feelings on this sacred occasion."

The majority of the 300-member Israeli delegation will remain in Poland to continue their visit, but Rivlin said some of those Israelis planned to avoid participation in any official ceremony.

Rivlin said Israeli officials were "deeply appreciative" of the other anniversary arrangements made by the Polish government but would file a written protest about the PLO participation.

Brazil ready with military aid

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — Brazil, which has the largest armed forces in Latin America, is showing signs of increasing willingness to use its military muscle to help other countries in the region.

One indication is the recent buildup of Brazilian forces on the northern borders in response to tensions between neighboring Venezuela and the leftist government of Guyana.

Veja magazine, Brazil's largest newsweekly, reported that Venezuela would like to count on Brazil as a staging area for its forces in case of armed conflict with Guyana.

Brazil also is continuing an active business in the international arms market, becoming the largest arms exporter in the Third World. The Air Force said this week it sold 12 fighter-trainer Xavante jets to Argentina for $60 million, adding to the nine Xavantes sold to Paraguay earlier.

U.S. intelligence link studied

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — The U.S. Justice Department has sent an official to La Paz to investigate the possible relationships between Nazi war criminal Klaus Barbie and members of American intelligence agencies.

Allan Ryan, from the Justice Department's office of special investigations, said Tuesday he was investigating possible ties between Barbie and the United States, but he refused to elaborate.

Former U.S. agents in Europe have said American intelligence agencies helped Barbie escape from France to South America in 1951 because he was providing information on communist activities.

Rescuers searching embassy ruins

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Searchers combed the rubble of the U.S. Embassy today looking for more buried victims and a log book that might help establish a firm casualty toll from Monday's devastating bomb attack.

U.S. Marine warrant officer Bill Henderson said today the current toll from the explosion was 18 confirmed dead, including eight Americans, and 29 other people missing and presumed dead.

U.S. Undersecretary of State Lawrence S. Eagleburger and Assistant Secretary of State Nicholas Veliotes were to fly to Lebanon today to escort the bodies of the American bombing victims back home.

Palermo gets first female mayor

PALERMO, Sicily (AP) — A soft-spoken pediatrician has become the first woman mayor of a major Italian city, and she acknowledges facing an uphill battle trying to combat Palermo's powerful mobsters and drug traffickers.

Palermo's five-party coalition on Tuesday elected Elda Pucci, a Christian Democrat with limited experience in professional politics, to take on problems that party veterans have struggled with for decades.

Dr. Pucci, 55, has vowed to tackle Palermo's crime, slums and pollution with new approaches.

Another rescue mission planned

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Seven former U.S. Green Berets are here planning another mission to find American prisoners of war reportedly held in Laos, the English-language Bangkok Post reported today.

The newspaper, quoting a high-ranking government source, said police were watching the group closely and would prevent them from entering the neighboring Communist country.

Former Green Beret James "Bo" Gritz has led at least one previous foray into Laos, saying he believed American prisoners were being held by Communist forces there. But Gritz, who was at his home in California today, has to date produced no solid evidence of their existence.

Wounded rescued from freighter

HONG KONG (AP) — A freighter rescued four wounded people from a dinghy in the South China Sea, 10 days after they radioed that their yacht was attacked, the freighter's captain said today.

Police inspect the site, left, Tuesday where two bodies were found at the former residence of convicted murderer Richard Biegenwald, above, in Staten Island, N.Y. Authorities said they expected to find as many as 23 more bodies buried on the property. The puddle at lower left is the hole from which the bodies were uncovered.

Two bodies unearthed in Staten Island yard

NEW YORK (AP) — A muddy yard at the former home of a paroled killer is expected to yield more bodies, say authorities who unearthed the corpses of two young women and are investigating three more slayings in New Jersey.

The remains of two victims were dug up Tuesday from a shallow, common grave at the former home on Staten Island of Richard Biegenwald, who murdered a Bayonne, N.J., prosecutor in 1958.

Biegenwald has been held in Trenton State Prison for the past three months on charges stemming from the shooting death of a New Jersey woman last summer.

"We have reason to believe there are more bodies out there, based on information provided to us," said William Murphy, the Staten Island district attorney.

Five bodies — three in New Jersey and the two on Staten Island — have been uncovered so far in the investigation, authorities said.

The remains were found about 30 inches beneath a pile of debris next to the Biegenwald garage in a quiet, wooded neighborhood of single-family homes. Authorities said digging would continue today.

Murphy would not say how authorities learned there were bodies buried in the backyard of the home where Biegenwald had lived with his mother since his 1977 parole. But Biegenwald's lawyer, Lewis Diamond, said his client's co-defendant in the recent murder case, Dheran Fitzgerald, 52, provided the information.

"The case that was pending against him obviously caused him to make statements about these other murders," Diamond said, adding that Fitzgerald was with investigators when they dug up the bodies Tuesday.

"Biegenwald talked to his mother sometime today and told her to tell me he's made no statements whatsoever about these particular incidents," Diamond said. "So it is based entirely on Fitzgerald's statements."

Biegenwald and Fitzgerald were arrested Jan. 22 and charged in the murder of Anna M. Olesiewicz, 18, of Camden, who disappeared Aug. 28. Her bullet-riddled body was found later.

The investigation of that murder led to the discovery of the two bodies on Staten Island, one of New York City's five boroughs, as well as two other bodies discovered in New Jersey during the weekend, authorities said.

Prosecutors would only link the two bodies found Tuesday.

"When you find two bodies in the same grave, I think you can assume it was done by the same killer," Murphy said. The slayings were believed to have occurred in New Jersey and the bodies brought to New York for burial.

Murphy declined to say how many bodies were thought to be buried at the site. The Staten Island Advance newspaper said it had information from a source it declined to identify that as many as 25 bodies might be found around the 100-foot-square homesite.

But a New Jersey prosecutor, Alexander Lehrer, who alerted Staten Island authorities to the graveyard, called that report "spurious." He said there was "the possibility of at least one more body" at the Staten Island site.

Neither Murphy nor Lehrer described Biegenwald a suspect in any of the newly uncovered slayings. Lehrer said he hopes to file charges by the end of the week or after identifying the four bodies.

Biegenwald, 42, had returned to the house to live with his mother, Sally, after serving 18 years of a life term for the 1958 shotgun murder.

Lehrer said that on Friday, investigators found the body of a young woman "clad only in panties" in a secluded area of Tinton Falls, N.J., with a bullet wound in the head.

School trains chauffeurs who aim to please

TORRANCE, Calif. (AP) — Too many limousine drivers arrive late, go too fast, smoke in the front seat or can't even uncork champagne properly, says Nick Giacobone, whose night school aims to train "perfect chauffeurs."

Believing that drivers at the wheel of sleek $45,000 limos ought to have some idea of what their calling is about, Giacobone started the six-night, $250 course at his limousine company, Executive Coachcraft Inc. in Torrance.

"We produce perfect chauffeurs, teaching them that when they pick up a customer they arrive 15 minutes early. Courtesy is a No. 1 requirement," he said in a recent interview.

"Always 'sir' and 'ma'am' and never use first names. Don't talk unless you're spoken to."

Giacabone, 33, was originally in the business of customizing cars. He got interested in chauffeurs after acquiring a 22-foot Lincoln limo a little more than a year ago, when he saw a television show featuring a smooth star who handled his affairs, business and otherwise, from the rear seat of a long, black Cadillac.

It looked like fun, but after a couple of weeks, Giacobone found the novelty had vanished. However, people were asking to use the limo and he began renting it out for $40 an hour. There was no shortage of takers.

Giacobone began acquiring more limousines until his fleet grew to 35. But he was still having trouble with what he calls "drivers."

"There's a 100 percent annual turnover among chauffeurs and a whole bunch out there who don't know how to act or how to drive," he said. "They're working in a steel mill during the day and then trying to drive a limousine and be a gentleman at night. Only half of these people are chauffeurs. The other half are drivers. There's a difference."

And what is the difference?

"A bad chauffeur is a guy who pulls up late and then only opens one side of the car so everyone has to get in one door," said Giacobone. "As you're pulling away from the curb, he's already loosened his tie and he's smoking. He's wearing white shoes with a brown suit and drives so badly that by the time you get wherever you're going there's a quart of booze down the front of you."

Giacobone has developed a curriculum that includes such subtleties of chaffeuring as uncorking champagne, cleaning fingerprints from Waterford crystal and responding when a guest has heart problems.

His graduates, who dress in dark, three-piece suits, know cardiopulmonary resuscitation and the best sushi bars in town, he said.

"On the road our chauffeurs drive slower, brake gently and sooner and never accelerate to change lanes or negotiate a corner," Giacobone said. "As a graduation exercise, we take our people out with a glass of champagne on the console. If it spills one drop, they don't pass."

Even with training, there are unanticipated problems. One female graduate was doing fine until the night some customers harassed her, wanting a more personal tour.

"When she came back in she said, 'That's it. I quit,'" he said. "Right now she's driving a bus. It's one of those casino runs to Las Vegas. For senior citizens."

Democrats expected to choose San Francisco

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — The Democrats are apparently on their way to San Francisco for their July 1984 presidential nominating convention, with a majority of the site selection committee — at least 14 members — planning to vote for the city by the bay, Democratic party sources said Tuesday.

By the time of the official balloting Thursday in Washington, San Francisco is expected to win 16 of the 27 votes on the committee.

The honor means the host city can expect an influx of between $30 million and $40 million in additional revenues to local business and city coffers from the spending which will take place by the estimated 35,000 visitors.

Despite his pledge of neutrality in the selection process, the emotional favorite of Democratic Party Chairman Charles Manatt, who is from California, has been San Francisco all along. Since Manatt appointed all 27 members of the committee, San Francisco had an advantage going into the competition.

The members of the site selection committee have been wined, dined and have become accustomed to limosine service the past few months at the expense of competing delegations from the five finalist cities - San Francisco, Detroit, Chicago, Washington, D.C. and New York.

POLITICALLY, HOWEVER, San Francisco was favored because party officials are concerned about the shift of the Western states to the Republican party. "The political climate is such that we know we'll do well in Michigan (Detroit) and Illinois (Chicago), but it's less clear that we will do well in California," said one party source.

California is also the home state of President Ronald Reagan, the presumed 1984 Republican nominee, and Manatt reportedly thought it would be to the Democrats advantage to thumb their collective noses at Reagan by having the convention in a state where he served as governor for eight years.

The last time California saw a Democratic convention was on the occasion of John F. Kennedy's nomination in Los Angeles in 1960.

Nancy Pelosi, former chair of the California Democratic party and now chair of the San Francisco Democratic Convention Host Committee, said her group has been "working our hearts out to answer the concerns of the committee" the last few months.

Pelosi, still uncertain of the vote and concerned about the possibility that Detroit had gained the respect of several committee members, echoed the view of party officials, saying, "I think it would be politically wise to have a convention in the West because we give more of the money for the candidates and yet we never get our share of the attention."

IT WAS NOT entirely a cakewalk for San Francisco, which is rated one of the most expensive cities in the country and had an inadequate police force, only 1,971 members, to satisfy the committee. In fact, they spent $125,000 on the committee's two-day visit there.

In addition, there was an unofficial "handshake" deal between the DNC and the host cities to raise $250,000 for the national party as a condition to be placed in the running. Part of the deal includes a committment by the winning city to now raise $1 million for the national party.

To bring its bid up to the standards set by the other competing cities, San Francisco is planning to contribute at least $7 million to help pay for the convention. Pelosi said about $4.5 million of that will come from city funds, another $1 million from the George Moscone convention center, and another $1.5 million from private contributions.

Some of the money will be used to revamp the ceiling of the Moscone center, some for housing and office space for the convention staff and other monies will be used for delegate transportation.

The city also pledged to bring in up to 2,000 additional police officers from surrounding jurisdictions and put together a hotel package of "deluxe, standard and economy" rooms of which more than 50 percent will be $55 and under, said Pelosi.

JOE BEEMAN, NAMED convention manager last month, convienently happens to be a former San Francisco Supervisor and is intimately familiar with the city. Beeman, who refused to discuss the outcome of the vote, would only say he thought many members favor San Francisco because "it's a nice city to come to."

New York, the site of the last two Democratic presidentical conventions, was included in the list as a backup should no other city prove able to provide the appropriate accomodations.

The only other real contenders were Detroit and Chicago. Detroit mayor Coleman Young put on an impressive display, according to site selection committee members, pointing to the high unemployment rate in his city and the jobs the convention would bring. His push was so thorough that committee members up to this week were still receiving calendars and other momentos asking for a vote for Detroit.

And a significant amount of sympathy from site selection committee members affiliated with the labor movement, about six, are leaning to Detroit because of the depressed auto industry there. Now, DNC officials are hoping the labor members on the committee don't vote in a block for Detroit, which although it would make no difference in the outcome, it would prove embarrassing.

THE VOTE AT DNC headquarters here Thursday will be a closed ballot decision whereby all the members will be given a blank piece of paper. If no clear majority exists on the first ballot, which is not expected, the balloting will continue until there is one.

The visit of the members to Chicago was delayed due to the controversial mayorial election there and, for a time, it was rumored that should Harold Washington win the contest, the DNC might be inclined to go there as a favor to the first black mayor in the city's history.

But in the wake of the particularly divisive election, DNC officials feel the city is too "politically unstable" in that Washington may not have full control of other factions in city government. The apprehension that the networks would run footage of the 1968 Democratic convention in Chicago when violent demonstrations broke out around the convention center over the Vietnam issue also hindered the city's chances.

The week-long convention, set to begin July 16, will attract an estimated 35,000 people, including delegates, alternates, guests and 13,000 news media personnel.

The timing of important convention activities, such as nominating speeches, is also being moved up so as to accomodate the three-hour time difference for the networks and newspapers with an East Coast audience and deadline.

The Democrats first went to San Francisco in 1920, the year they nominated Ohio Gov. James Cox for president and young Franklin D. Roosevelt for vice president.

The city was ignored until 1956 when the Republicans renominated President Dwight D. Eisenhower and vice president Richard M. Nixon. The GOP returned to San Francisco in 1964 for a wild convention when Sen. Barry Goldwater was nominated for president.

Committee approves immigration reform bill

By BENJAMIN SHORE
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The Senate Judiciary Committee Tuesday approved and sent to the Senate floor for final passage an immigration reform bill little changed from the version passed overwhelmingly by the Senate last year.

The bill, like its House counterpart, would punish employers who knowingly hire undocumented aliens, grant legal status to potentially millions of aliens who have established permanent residence in the United States, require all job applicants to identify themselves, and streamline the process for importing foreign farm workers when Americans are not available.

The bill tentatively is scheduled for floor debate on April 28. It was approved by an 80-19 vote last year.

The committee voted 13-4 to approve the measure.

By a series of lopsided votes, the committee rejected amendments by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., that would have:

— Ended the employer sanctions after a few years if they were found to promote hiring discrimination, which is a major concern of Hispanic-Americans.

— Added 20,000 visas to the present 20,000 annual limit for legal immigration from Mexico and Canada.

— MOVED FROM JANUARY 1981 to January 1982 the date by which undocumented aliens must have established residence in the United States to be eligible for legalization.

— Liberalized the bill's provision for judicial review of applications for asylum, bringing them in line with provisions in the House bill.

But the committee, following the endorsement of Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., co-author of the Simpson-Mazzoli bill, did accept on a voice vote Kennedy's proposal to extend the legal immigration preference system to the unmarried brothers and sisters of U.S. citizens who petition for their siblings' immigration.

The Senate bill had restricted the preferences for family members to children and spouses. Present law grants preferential status to brothers and sisters, including those who are married and have families of their own.

Simpson said he has been persuaded that while an American definition of "close family members" could be limited to children and spouses, many Asian immigrants include brothers and sisters as well.

Limiting the expansion to unmarried brothers and sisters was viewed by Simpson as a compromise with the overall desire to enforce an annual limit on legal immigration of 425,000 persons.

The bill moving through the House, however, does not deal with legal immigration reform. This and other differences between the House and Senate versions would have to be compromised after final action in each chamber.

Kennedy said he will offer most of his amendments again when the full Senate considers the bill, but committee officials said privately he likely will fare no better on the floor.

KENNEDY'S PROPOSAL to end employer sanctions if the numerous required government studies of their effects on discrimination and burdens on employers show unanticipated harm met with firm resistance from Simpson.

Simpson called sanctions the "keystone" of the legislation and warned his committee colleagues that any suggestion that sanctions someday might be lifted could jeopardize the bill's passage by the full Senate.

But the bill still would require the General Accounting Office, which is the investigative arm of Congress, and various other governmental agencies to submit annual reports to Congress on the effects of sanctions for five years.

Simpson said he believes this constant monitoring and congressional review would have the effect of encouraging employers not to discriminate.

Simpson also opposed increasing the 20,000 annual quota of legal immigration visas for Canada and Mexico to 40,000 each on the grounds that Congress must hold the line on total legal immigration.

However, the House bill, which is awaiting action by the House Judiciary Committee, does include the special treatment for the United States' two neighbors.

Simpson also rejected Kennedy's proposal to move the legalization cutoff date from January 1980 to January 1982, arguing that those who illegally entered the United States after January 1980 had not "earned" the right to be legalized. He called the January 1980 cutoff "fair."

THE HOUSE IMMIGRATION Subcommittee moved the date in its bill from January 1980 to January 1981.

Kennedy's greatest margin of support — seven out of 17 committee members — came on his proposal to grant asylum applicants a greater range of judicial appeal opportunities as they seek to be granted legal residence in the United States.
