FNB announces plan to correct problems

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

The First National Bank of Midland announced Friday a workover plan to clean up its financial affairs and procedures. Chairman of the Board Clarence Scharbauer Jr. said "a rebuilding phase is beginning" for the bank.

The bank's goals are to strengthen capital, improve funding liquidity and satisfy federal requirements to improve certain procedures.

Management has identified the bank's problems and is moving quickly to correct them, Scharbauer said.

Key to the plan involves a guarantee by the 20-member board of directors to add $40 million of capital to the bank.

The board, which includes some of Midland's wealthiest and most respected citizens, has agreed to underwrite $20 million of a common stock offering. No date has been set for the offering, a spokesman said, but it will be made sometime this summer, probably within the next 90 days.

The bank's directors also will purchase collectively $20 million of the bank's subordinated debentures. These are unsecured notes backed by the bank's integrity rather than by liens to property.

FIRST NATIONAL'S bail-out plan also includes confidential arrangements made with other, unnamed Texas banks to provide up to $250 million in funding if First National so requests. Bank officials would not give further details or name the banks involved.

The new plan has been reviewed in detail by federal regulators and other financial institutions, however, and it was well received, according to Donald McCall, chief executive officer.

The arrangements were made "to reduce the funding pressures which occurred because of the reduction in our bank's deposits," McCall said. "Our reduced deposits are the direct result of reduced cash flow available to the energy industry from other parts of the country."

Since September 1982, the bank has lost $300 million in deposits. During the same period, loans and loan losses increased, creating an "imbalance," which depressed FNB's earnings.

Bank officials say this is primarily due to the downturn in the oil and gas industry, which makes up the biggest portion of the bank's business transactions.

Banking sources contend that large out-of-town depositors lost confidence in the bank and withdrew their jumbo certificates of deposits last fall.

MCCALL SAID First National's plan will be of substantial and immediate benefit to the bank's financial position, but he would not give details. The plan will be discussed further during FNB's annual meeting May 26, he said.

In addition to the financial plan, First National said it has already begun putting into effect a permanent set of improved plans, policies and procedures based on a formal agreement between the bank and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

American hurt in hotel fire

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — A fast-moving fire gutted a hotel filled with sleeping foreign tourists Saturday, killing 42 people and injuring at least 60 including some who leaped from upper floors, witnesses and officials said.

An American guest was among the injured, the officials said.

They reported 36 tourists and six hotel employees were killed and the wounded included 56 tourists and four employees, but many of the bodies have not been identified.

When the fire broke out, many of the guests panicked and stampeded to the stairs or rushed to windows instead of seeking safety on the roof of the six-story Hotel Washington, officials said.

"I smelled smoke and opened the door but the whole place was engulfed in flames," Franz Eisen Fuhrer, of Austria, said from his hospital bed. "I threw myself off the balcony of my room on the second floor and broke both legs."

Officials said 131 guests were registered at the hotel and most of them were asleep when fire erupted at 7:30 a.m.

U.S. Consulate officials identified the injured American as Joseph Lee Carr of Illinois. They said he had second-degree burns, but was conscious and in satisfactory condition. No hometown was given.

Another survivor, Vanda Ozcanoglu, told the Anatolia News Agency that many guests on the upper floors jumped to their deaths while trying to escape the racing flames. Firefighters helped Mrs. Ozcanoglu and her husband, Afer, from their first-floor room, Anatolian said.

"My wife heard a noise...She woke me up. I opened the door and saw the flames," Afer Ozcanoglu told the agency.

City officials and firemen blamed the fire on an explosion of a butane gas cylinder used for cooking in a coffee shop on the ground floor. The hotel is in a busy downtown district in the European side of Istanbul, where there are many medium-cass tourist hotels.

Firefighters extinguished the blaze after a two-hour battle. Only a concrete skeleton of the hotel remained. Windows, wood and furniture had virtually disintegrated.

Among the foreigners who perished were three Austrians, a West German and a French citizen, while the injured included visitors from Syria, Kuwait and Egypt.

Greek television said the dead included 12 Greeks from Salonica on an Orthodox Easter visit to Istanbul.

Firefighters said they rescued at least two dozen guests without injuries.

The dead and injured were taken to five hospitals, and there also was confusion about their identities.

One of the Greek survivors, Sutas Dimitrios, 31, said ringing bells alerted the guests a half-hour after the fire started.

He said thick smoke kept him and his wife, Paraskiri, from reaching the elevators on the third floor.

"We jumped to a second floor balcony and from there to the ground," he said.

"I was on a five-day holiday," said Ingrid Flaysinger, of Austria. "My roommate, Maria Loslina, also Austrian, was still trying to find her luggage in the smoke as I jumped from the second-floor balcony. I haven't seen her since."

UTPB battle started by 'greedy' Odessa civic leaders

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a two-part series looking at the battle between Midland and Odessa over The University of Texas of the Permian Basin. While it's not exactly the McCoys vs. the Hatfields, the UTPB fight is only another round in the longtime feud between the two cities. And it appears neither city is ready to put down its guns.

HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

That highway stretching across 15 miles of flat fields between Midland and Odessa, dotted with oil rigs and equipment and service companies, has a lot of cracks in it.

Some people feel those ruts should be patched.

Others would like to see the grimy asphalt chewed up and spit out.

Arguments between Midland and Odessa about effluent waters, airports and cancer treatment equipment are as flat and narrow as Highway 80. Still, the resentment is a part of the history of these two Petroplex cities.

It looks like it also will be part of the future as the two battle it out over The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

About halfway down that road is an airport that is shared by the two cities. It was the site of a major battle years ago.

Although named by the Civil Aeronautics Board as Midland-Odessa Regional Air Terminal, the airport is owned and operated by the City of Midland.

Seems like Midland won that round.

But they lost another one.

Midland was defeated in its battle to gain approval for building UTPB on a section of land that was to be donated by Midlander Clarence Scharbauer.

The land was located halfway between Midland and Odessa, south of Interstate 20 and west of Farm to Market 1788.

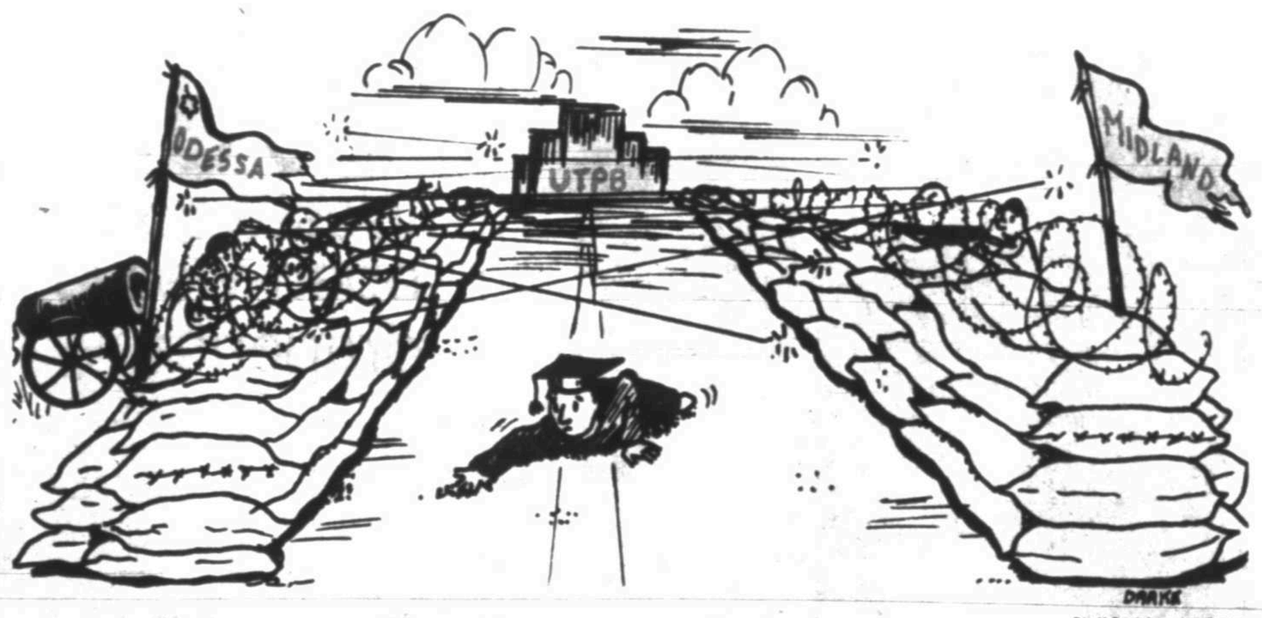

Although Odessa originally had agreed to the site, the city later decided it wanted the university within Ector County.

It was a time to be greedy, Odessa civic leaders said of the broken gentlemens' agreement with their neighbors to the east.

"It's time to get real selfish," the late Odessan Herb Atkins, chairman of the UTPB Ector County Site Availability Committee, said in June 1969. "We run a terrible risk of seeing UTPB located outside of Ector County. Since we've come this far, it is time to get overly selfish."

Only months before, on Dec. 27, 1968, chamber of commerce presidents Martin Allday of Midland and W.G. Leggett of Odessa had announced the joint effort for an upper level university at a press conference at — ironically — the Regional Airport.

Odessa man dies in crash

From Staff and Wire Reports

IRAAN — An Odessa man was killed late Friday when his single-engine plane crashed near the West Texas town of Iraan.

John K. Klassen, 26, was attempting to land in a Crockett County field about 6:40 p.m. when he apparently lost control of the plane, said Texas Department of Public Safety trooper R.B. Babbitt.

Babbitt said Klassen's plane nosedived into the field and burst into flames.

Klassen, a former welder in Midland, was pronounced dead at the scene by Peace Justice Al Fields.

Klassen's body was taken to Dennis Box Funeral Home in Iraan.

Georgians mourn train's passing

UNION POINT, Ga. (AP) — No one ever wrote any folk songs about the "The Mixed," an unusual combination of freight and passenger train that won't pass into railroad history as one of the finest ways to travel.

When people rode the Seaboard 108 from Atlanta to Augusta — and they rarely did — they had to ride in a battered old coach on the back of a slow, noisy, dirty freight train.

But on Friday, when "The Mixed" died, hundreds of people — almost as many as rode it all last year — came to mourn its passing, in a celebration of the glory days of passenger trains.

"Only three types of people ever rode this thing," said Jon Grant, an information officer with the Public Service Commission. "School kids, railroad freaks and reporters."

And that's exactly who was on board when the 108 — once dubbed "The Disorient Express" by a cynic — pulled out of Atlanta's Hulsey Freight Yard Friday at 9:01 a.m., one minute late. Almost all the 170 passengers had some connection with railroading, either through jobs, family or a pervasive passion for rail-related hobbies. The engineer's caps aboard could have outfitted several train crews for life.

To show everyone a good time, Seaboard hid the old, battered coaches and borrowed a few newer, less battered ones from a rail museum. To hold all the extra people, there were four coaches leaving Atlanta instead of one, and only one boxcar, instead of the usual 100.

Coming back, the 103 — the number given to The Mixed on its reverse Augusta-to-Atlanta trips — had seven coaches for 340 passengers, and seven boxcars.

Without stops for freight operations, but with several stops for passengers along the way, the trip from Atlanta to Union Point — halfway to Augusta — and back took nine hours and 12 minutes.

"People don't want to ride this train," said Ray Chamberlain, the tobacco-chewing flagman on the trip to Augusta. "They can drive in a whole lot shorter time. They got airplanes now, and Interstate 20 opened up."

When the Public Service Commission held hearings several months ago on Seaboard's request to drop the service, just about everyone agreed that service was bad. The train was a slow nightmare for passengers, even if it was cheap. Patrons paid $5.74 for the 150-mile trip to Augusta, but sometimes had to ride more than 12 hours to get there.

The train was also a headache for Seaboard, whose charter required it to haul the passenger coach back and forth, six days a week, whether there were any people on it or any freight in front of it. Seaboard lost more than $47,000 a year, and only 627 people rode the line in the first 11 months of last year.

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox accompanies Pete Riddle, who is pushing his mother-in-law Beula Bradshaw, as they exit the Greencrest Manor Nursing Home in Greenville Friday. Mattox ordered the nursing home closed after the state filed charges of negligent medical care.

Lack of good care closes nursing home

GREENVILLE, Texas (AP) — A judge denied a request that would have allowed a Northeast Texas nursing home to remain open, and most of its 72 patients were immediately transferred to other facilities Saturday.

Dr. William Hubbard, chief of the longterm care division of the Texas Department of Health, told State District Judge Tom Ryan of Plano in an eight-hour hearing Saturday that investigators found strong evidence of a lack of care by the staff at the Greencrest Manor nursing home.

Hubbard cited several cases where employees allegedly failed to notify a patient's doctor of "massive changes of conditions."

Attorney General Jim Mattox flew from Austin to this Northeast Texas town Friday to personally deliver an order closing the home. He told Ryan Saturday that "irrevocable harm or damage would not be done in transferring the patients."

But F.S. Carruthers, a Greenville physician who had about 20 patients in the nursing home, disagreed, saying that the transfers could harm doctor-patient relationships.

The health department issued a complaint Thursday accusing the home of negligent medical treatment. Greencrest Manor is owned by Hillhaven Home Health Services Inc. of Tacoma, Wash.

All but 12 of the 72 of the patients at the home were already moved to other homes within a 50 mile radius of Greenville Saturday afternoon. The remaining 12 were to be moved later Saturday and Sunday, Hubbard said.

A survey by the Greenville Herald-Banner found 45 beds open in Hunt County nursing homes, and the health department reported that 600 were available within a 50-mile radius, which includes Dallas.

Greenville attorney Harris Morgan, a lawyer for the nursing home, said testimony given by relatives of patients at the home proved the staff gave profession and "excellent care." Another lawyer for the home, Steve Greenberg, said the closing was unfair because it was "ordered by someone in Austin not familiar with the facts."

But Hubbard testified that in one case investigated at the home a patient was not given any treatment for seven days for a heart attack.

He said the patient complained for six days of chest pains and was only given oxygen. Hubbard said a doctor was finally notified.

Contributors favor incumbents, Democrats

WASHINGTON (AP) — It cost an average of $370,000 to win one of the 27 congressional seats from Texas last year. And, in general, campaign contributors overwhelmingly favored incumbents and Democrats in providing the money.

An Associated Press analysis of campaign finance figures compiled by the Federal Election Commission (FEC) showed:

—The 21 incumbent House members from Texas who sought re-election last year raised an average of $375,000 each during 1981 and 1982. That compares with an average $123,000 each for 72 non-incumbent Democrats and Republicans who ran.

—The 51 Democrats who sought a House seat from Texas raised an average of $198,000 each, compared with an average $158,000 for each of 42 Republicans who ran.

—Thirty House candidates not affiliated with either major party reported raising an average of $142 each.

Incumbents and Democrats were also generally the biggest beneficiaries of contributions from political action committees (PACs) — the contributing arms of corporations, labor unions, professional assocations and other organizations. The analysis showed:

—The incumbent House members raised an average of $112,000 each from PACs, compared with an average $23,000 raised by each non-incumbent Republican or Democrat.

—Democrats seeking a House seat received an average of $57,000 from PACs, compared with an average $26,000 for each Republican.

—Corporate PACs, the biggest of the various PAC contributors, gave an average of $48,000 to each incumbent seeking re-election, compared with an average $8,000 to each non-incumbent Republican and Democrat.

—Democratic candidates raised an average of $20,000 each from corporate PACS, and Republican candidates an average $13,000.

—Not a single PAC contribution was reported to any of the candidates not affilicated with one of the two major parties.

The figures appear to reflect both the Democratic traditions of the state and the tendency of contributors to back incumbents, who are better known and have established track records with certain constituencies.

They also demonstrate the financial difficulties generally faced by Republicans seeking election to Congress from Texas and of challengers trying to unseat well-established incumbents.

The AP analysis was based on preliminary data compiled by the FEC from campaign finance reports for the election cycle which began Jan. 1, 1981 and ended Dec. 31, 1982.

The FEC figures include contributions and spending for candidates in both last year's primaries and general elections in Texas' 27 House districts.

They show that overall, 123 candidates raised $16,721,967 and spent $15,419,915 in their efforts to win election to the House.

The 27 winners each raised an average of $416,000 and spent an average $370,000 in gaining election. Losing Democrats and Republicans each raised an average of $76,000 and spent an average $75,000.

In the analysis of the overall contributions gap between incumbents and non-incumbents, six districts were included where all candidates were non-incumbents because no incumbent sought re-election.

The gap grows even wider if the comparison is limited to the 21 districts where non-incumbents sought to unseat incumbents. In those districts alone, non-incumbents reported raising only an average $73,000 each, compared with $375,000 each for the incumbents.

Also in those districts, non-incumbents reported receiving an average $11,000 each from PACS, $3,600 of it from corporate PACs, compared with the incumbents' average of $112,000 from PACs, $48,000 of it from corporate PACs.

Following are campaign expenditures and contributions for 1981 and 1982 for the 27 congressmen elected last year from Texas, according to preliminary figures compiled by the Federal Election Commission.

The figure before the name is the district. The first figure after the name reflects total expenditures, the next figure total contributions and the figure in parentheses total PAC contributions:

Texas' winter visitors help Rio Grande Valley's economy

HARLINGEN, Texas (AP) — The flocks of "snowbirds" — winter visitors who migrate to the semi-tropical Lower Rio Grande Valley each year — nearly all have returned to their native habitats.

But area businesses still are counting the much-needed coins the visitors left behind — and already are making plans for next season.

The millions of dollars "winter Texans" dropped into local coffers meant more than ever this year to a border economy suffering the aftermath of the 1982 Mexican peso devaluations, say area business leaders.

An Edinburg researcher who surveys winter Texans each year estimates they spent at least $93 million in the Lower Valley this season.

Carl Rush, director of Pan American University's Bureau of Business and Economic Research, said, however, that the figure is conservative. Others estimate the amount as high as $400 million.

But Rush and others say the Valley communities that have developed a winter tourist trade over the years — such as Mission, McAllen, Weslaco, Harlingen and Brownsville — have come to depend on the winter Texans' money just as they would any other industry.

So the losses in revenue from Mexican shoppers were not totally replaced by the winter Texans, Rush said.

Still, were it not for the winter Texans, the city of McAllen would be looking at about a 2 percent higher unemployment rate and 10 percent fewer retail sales during the winter months, said Alden Schiller, McAllen Chamber of Commerce executive vice president.

The latest Texas Employment Commission figures put unemployment in McAllen at 16.6 percent, while the metropolitan area rate is at 20.4 percent.

Brownsville's unemployment statistic now stands at 16.6 percent, while the metropolitan area figure, which includes Harlingen and San Benito, is 17.4 percent.

The winter Texans, said Schiller, "were very important in offsetting the peso devaluation affects. We lost 35 percent of our retail trade market with the peso devaluations."

"There are certain commercial sectors that would not have weathered the peso devaluations nearly as well as they did" had it not been for the winter Texans, said Sarah Cahill, director of economic development for the Harlingen Chamber of Commerce.

Daring couple weds on 'flying' trapeze

HOUSTON (AP) — A preacher said, "I thee wed," and the couple leaped from the trapeze that was their altar into a safety net 60 feet below.

The marriage of aerialists Arturo Gaona and Naomi Rosas Garcia was the finale of the 47th Arabia Temple Shrine Circus show Friday night. The two exchanged vows before 4,000 spectators.

"I love the idea," said Gaona, a fourth-generation circus performer and the star of The Flying Gaona act.

"I haven't done this in quite a while," she said. Mrs. Gaona, 30, retired in 1982 after performing with the act for 10 years. "There's been no time to practice. I just want to be married like everyone else."

WEATHER SUMMARY

The National Weather Service forecasts rain from Maine to West Virginia and from Maryland to Georgia and for parts of Washington.

Mother Nature gives moms nice day

If yardwork or the golf game were put off Saturday, Mother Nature is giving Permian Basin residents another chance with a few more days of sunny skies and hot temperatures.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, temperatures will climb into the middle 80s today and the upper 80s Monday. The low tonight will be in the upper 50s.

Winds should be south to southeasterly at 10-20 mph today.

Saturday's high of 85 was 15 degrees cooler than the record high of 100, set for that date in 1947. The overnight low of 51 was 10 degrees warmer than 1938's record low of 41.

Wiesenthal: Diaries faked by Nazis

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Speculation mounted Saturday that Nazi supporters forged the purported Hitler diaries in an effort to whitewash the image of one of history's bloodiest dictators on the 50th anniversary of his rise to power.

Professor Hans Booms, president of the West German Federal Archives that pronounced the diaries fakes on Friday, said they probably were forged after 1964 and that there were indications they "came from the right corner," a reference to old Nazis or their younger sympathizers.

Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal told The Associated Press in a telephone conversation in Vienna that he strongly believed Nazi "bigshots" living in South America faked the diaries to boost Hitler's reputation in history, and that these Nazis were the same ones who forged British banknotes during World War II.

"I am pretty certain the East Germans, suspected to have had a role in the fakes, have nothing to do with them," Wiesenthal said. "They are not interested in whitewashing Hitler, and West German neo-Nazis are just too primitive even for this kind of job."

Wiesenthal said the fakes probably were done by the same Nazis in South America who were "engaging in disinformation in 1943-44."

He asserted that Gerd Heidemann, the Stern magazine reporter who claimed to have unearthed Hitler's diaries, visited former prominent Nazis in South America two years ago along with former SS Gen. Karl Wolff, personal aide of SS Chief Heinrich Himmler.

"At the time it was said that he (Heidemann) wanted to write Wolff's memoirs, and that, therefore, they went to South America to talk to (Himmler's) subordinates," Wiesenthal said.

He said among prominent Nazi functionaries visited were Klaus Barbie, the "butcher of Lyon" later extradited to France; Josef Mengele, the doctor of the Auschwitz extermination camp; and Walter Rauf, sought in West Germany and elsewhere for the death of 250,000 Jews as inventor of the "gas wagon."

Wiesenthal has dedicated his life to hunting down Nazis responsible for the extermination of 6 million Jews. The purported diaries made no mention of the Nazi death camps.

Excerpts of the purported journals began appearing two weeks ago in the weekly Stern magazine and other publications, all of which have stopped printing them since the government announcement Friday. Two of Stern's chief editors, Peter Koch and Felix Schmidt, resigned Saturday.

The West German tabloid Bild-Zeitung talked to Wilhelm Hoettl, a former SS officer and comrade of former SS Gen. Wolff. Wolff, who served seven years in prison for his part in the killing of 300,000 Jews, is the colleague of Heidemann, who reportedly got Stern magazine to pay $3.2 million for the documents.

Stern's chief editor, Henri Nannen, said Friday the magazine "will do all it can" to clear up the matter, and that "we must stand ashamed before our readers."

Heidemann has not been available for comment for several days, but The New York Times quoted his wife Gina as saying in an interview in Hamburg. "We will always believe in the diaries."

She reportedly accused the West German government of trying to "suppress the truth" by labeling the diaries fakes and was quoted as saying, "It would have been a joy to tell the world the reality about the Fuhrer. We have received letters and telegrams, above all from youths, who are overjoyed finally to learn the truth."

Bild-Zeitung said former SS officer Hoettl was responsible for printing the faked British pound notes during World War II, which Hitler planned to drop all over England from Luftwaffe planes in an effort to ruin the British financial system.

The plan failed. When crates filled with the notes were found after World War II, experts agreed they were among the best counterfeit bills ever produced.

Asked where he thought the Hitler diaries came from, Hoettl was quoted as saying, "from experts in the GDR (East Germany). Every secret service has its counterfeit department. It is quite possible that experts from the era of the counterfeit pound notes survived."

Hoettl was quoted as saying East Germany had a political interest in the fakes because "Hitler looks good in those diaries, and the millions for them help the GDR out of its foreign exchange shortage."

Hoettl's theory was that by making Hitler look good, especially with the contention that he knew of Rudolf Hess' 1941 peace bid with Britain, the Soviet bloc hoped to convince the world that the West was just as aggressive as the Nazis.

Source allegedly East German

LONDON (AP) — The wife of the West German reporter who claimed he tracked down Adolf Hitler's diaries indicated the source for the forged volumes was a senior East German official, the Sunday Times of London said.

It said a Sunday Times reporter confronted Gina Heidemann, wife of Stern magazine reporter Gerd Heidemann, and asked who was the source of the 60 volumes.

"Perhaps you can guess, If I tell you...It's the highest possible over there," Mrs. Heidemann was quoted as saying in the interview in Hamburg.

Did she mean East Germany?, the reporter asked.

Mrs. Heidemann nodded, the paper said.

The Sunday Times, which entered a contract to pay Stern $400,000 for serialization rights, cautioned, however, that her suggestion should "be treated with some skepticism."

The paper said Heidemann, a 51-year-old journalist, was interrogated by Stern executives in Hamburg, but the Times was refused access to him.

FNB clean-up plan announced

The Comptroller is empowered by Congress to do whatever is necessary to make banks perform properly. There are many legal and accounting avenues open to the Comptroller; the least onerous is to issue a written agreement outlining steps a bank must take to satisfy federal regulators.

"A constant and open dialogue has been established with the Comptroller's office in the formulation and implementation of this agreement," McCall said.

He said he was confident the move will result in "marked improvement in our overall performance."

NO DETAILS of the agreement were made public. A First National spokesman who asked to remain anonymous said the Comptroller was formally notifying the bank to take steps "that we should have been doing anyway."

McCall noted that while the agreement calls for implementation in the next three or four months, First National already has completed several of the plan's stipulations.

Bank officials were upbeat about the new financial and procedural plans. Scharbauer said they "represent a milestone for First National, which has experienced a period of difficulties during recent months as a result of the dramatic downturn in the energy industry and weakening of the Permian Basin economy."

The First National Bank of Midland has announced a plan to clean up its financial affairs.

Scharbauer said, "A rebuilding phase is beginning for First National; one that is a direct result of the aggressive new management team here. This team, led by Don McCall, is receiving the full support of the board of directors.

"With the guidance received from federal regulators, it has identified our existing problems and is working quickly and effectively to rectify them."

The new management team, which assumed leadership of FNB in April, has said its objectives are to cooperate fully with regulators as well as to improve communications with its customers and the public.

In connection with these goals, the bank has decided to adjust its first quarter 1983 balance sheet to reflect a reclassification of previously announced quarter-end deposits.

THE CHANGE involves money in First National from other banks. In preliminary figures released in April, the bank classified this money as deposits. In the revised figures, money from other banks will be classified as borrowed funds.

The official quarterly report, with revised figures, will be released next week.

The total liability side of the bank's balance sheet will remain the same, but the loan to deposit ratio will be higher, "causing some excitement," according to the spokesman.

The ratio was 110 percent at year-end, a figure considered too high by banking analysts. To reduce the ratio, First National would have to either increase its deposits, or decrease the number of loans it makes by turning them down or suggesting customers deal with other banks.

"The decrease in previously released first quarter deposits is due to a more accurate reflection of the bank's financial position during the entire quarter," McCall explained.

ADDRESSING FIRST quarter results, McCall said, "We are obviously anticipating future loan losses as our loan portfolio is reviewed. We have elected to apply first quarter earnings to the allowance for possible loan losses in order to maintain that reserve at a level comparable to year-end." The reserve was $50 million at Dec. 31, 1982.

The bottom line is that for the first quarter 1983, First National will show neither a profit nor a loss, but will break even, because it decided to move its excess income into the allowance set aside for possible loan losses.

McCall said that although FNB paid a dividend of 30 cents per share to its shareholders during the first quarter, payment of dividends in the rest of 1983 is not likely.

Recent months have been difficult for First National and the entire West Texas business community, Scharbauer said, "but it is not the first time that any of us have experienced such economic adversity. It is the nature of our West Texas economy. We have weathered such storms in the past and we are doing so again."

He said the bank, which was founded 93 years ago, will continue to be an integral part of the community it serves and will continue to respond to its customers' financial needs.

'Greedy' Odessa starts UTPB battle

A statement was read calling for expansion of the Odessa College taxing district, established some 20 years before, to include the geographical area of the Midland Independent School District. Also, a Midland campus of Odessa College would be established.

In addition, the resolution stated the two cities would join together in an effort to develop an upper-level college campus between Odessa and Midland.

"To best serve the needs of the expanded junior college district, which includes proposed campuses in both cities...it is agreed that the land offered by Clarence Scarbauer...would be the most suitable location, and we would recommend this site," the proposal stated.

"The basic tenets of these recommendations are founded in mutual trust and confidence among the people of our two great cities, whose primary objective is the establishment of a senior level college in this area to serve the needs of our children," the statement continued.

"We enter the project as trusted partners with our ultimate goal the improvement and enhancement of educational facilities and opportunities for our young people."

Some six months later, Odessa shredded that agreement.

"We should just forget the bill says the college could be located at Terminal or anywhere outside of Ector County," Atkins told about 30 members of the Ector site committee. "We can best serve our community by ignoring those terms of the bill...None of us would be able to live with ourselves if the college were located so much as a mile outside of Ector County."

That feeling, and the feeling of betrayal expressed by Midland community leaders, may have resulted in the financial and enrollment problems UTPB faces today.

"There's been a lot of controversy over everything," said Bill Collyns, advisor to the chairman on community and regional affairs at The First National Bank of Midland.

As a former editor of The Midland Reporter-Telegram, Collyns remembered those fights. He also recalled his sometimes scathing editorials written in Midland's defense.

"Even in the old railroad days (the communities fought) about where to put the railroads. And they fought about where to put highways..."

And those fights go all the way back to arguments between ranchers who first settled this bleak and wealthy land.

"It probably goes back from the cowboys down through the military days," Collyns said, laughing. "But in fact — it's been good for both towns."

While competition fosters growth, some people feel the two communities may have seen more development had efforts at joint projects lasted.

Few, however, did.

The past year's controversy over four-year status for UTPB, again pitting Midland against Odessa, is not unexpected.

Although the school has caused hassles before, Collyns said at one time the campus was to be the joining factor of the two communities.

"We came the nearest to working together that two cities have ever been," Collyns said of those early efforts to provide an upper-level school.

But then Odessa, just as they did recently, "pulled out the rug," he said.

In an effort to bolster the enrollment at UTPB and provide a four-year degree in the area for Permian Basin students, a cooperative plan was developed last fall between UTPB, Midland College, Odessa College and Howard County Junior College.

Some Midlanders feel the agreement, like others before it, probably won't be kept.

A recommendation made in October by the University of Texas System Board of Regents called for a four-year academic degree with freshman and sophomore courses to be taken at area community colleges and UTPB providing the final two years. The plan also called for joint hiring of faculty between the four schools and the participation of all students in sporting events, concerts and libraries on any campus.

Enter Friends of UTPB, a 3,000-member group of citizens — mostly from Odessa. And the direction for UTPB changed.

The group, pushing for four-year status at UTPB, maintains adding freshman and sophomore students won't hurt the enrollments of junior colleges much. Backers of the junior colleges, however, say it will and cite the unnecessary duplicaton of lower-level courses at UTPB — courses presently offered at the community schools.

With the help of Sen. John Montford of Lubbock and Rep. Jay Gibson of Odessa, the Friends have their legislation calling for four-year status. The bill has passed the Senate and is expected to move into the House for consideration within the next couple of weeks.

During a Senate subcommittee hearing last month, Montford asked Midlanders who were testifying if it were true that Midland opposed UTPB in the first place.

It wasn't.

The establishment of UTPB is said to have been conceived by a couple of Midlanders, according to some who were involved in the story from the first chapter — which was started back in the late 1960's.

On April 5, the PSC decided enough was enough, spurring Friday's turnout to see the end of a tradition that began 150 years ago.

"I hate to see this thing end," said A.J. Sankster, who works in the Hulsey Yard. "But it was just lack of interest. I've seen it leave Atlanta many times with nobody on it."

As the train rolled past houses, farms and fields, children played on the big, soft seats and grownups stared out the window, seeing the beauty of the countryside and the ugliness of its litter. Boarded-up, faded red brick depots marked the intervals between tiny towns. Some people read, some slept, and one held a TV, getting a surprisingly watchable picture from somewhere in rural Georgia.

At the changeover in Union Point, passengers who had paid an extra $3 got a box lunch of fried chicken, cole slaw and potato chips. There was a little excitement as a reporter who spent too long in town caught up in a police car and flagged down the train for an emergency stop.

On the trip back to Atlanta, flagman C.M. Corley let people come back and ride in the caboose. "All y'all riding in here, hanging out the windows, if this was a real passenger ride, we wouldn't allow that," he said.

"But we're just trying not to get anybody hurt," he said. "This is the last day. Let 'em do what...they want to."

Ruckelshaus plans to fill agency with old acquaintances

WASHINGTON (AP) — William D. Ruckelshaus is drafting a management team at the Environmental Protection Agency to reflect his own image — that of a proven administrator with a middle-of-the-road political record who has served at the agency before.

Ruckelshaus, President Reagan's choice to succeed Anne M. Burford as administrator of the EPA, has wasted no time in making personnel decisions. And he is drawing heavily on old acquaintances to fill the agency's top posts, sources said. But in terms of policy matters, he has indicated he is taking a more circumspect approach.

Alvin Alm, a Harvard government professor, is in line for the agency's No. 2 job, and Ruckelshaus has tapped six others for top posts, according to the sources who spoke on condition they not be identified.

Mrs. Burford resigned in March amid allegations of mismanagement, political manipulation and favoritism towards industry under the "superfund" hazardous waste cleanup law.

Ruckelshaus won unanimous support for his nomination Friday from the Senate Environment Committee. He is expected to win Senate approval Tuesday and be sworn in perhaps as early as Wednesday.

While he was moving to fill the numerous vacancies left by Mrs. Burford and a dozen of her top deputies, Ruckelshaus is taking a much more cautious approach toward signaling changes in administration policies.

Repeatedly during his confirmation hearings, he dodged efforts by senators to pin him down to specifics, saying he needed more time to study complex policy questions.

Alm was staff director of the Council on Environmental Quality in the Nixon administration at the time that Ruckelshaus was serving as EPA's first administrator. Alm served for three years as assistant administrator for policy after Ruckelshaus had left the agency.

Agency sources said Alm would be nominated to serve as deputy administrator. Alm did not deny the rumors, saying only, "I am just not in a position to comment."

James Barnes, who served as Ruckelshaus' top staff assistant at EPA, confirmed that he expects to transfer to the EPA, probably as acting general counsel. Barnes is currently general counsel at the Agriculture Department. He said he was transferring temporarily, but EPA sources said Barnes was in line for the top legal job on a permanent basis.

Fitzhugh Green, a top EPA official from 1971 to 1977, returned to the agency in the past week to run the Office of International Activities. In an interview, Green said that acid rain would be a priority issue he would be dealing with.

Two dead, 13 injured in smuggling attempt

DEL RIO, Texas (AP) — Two illegal aliens were killed and 13 others injured Saturday when a truck carrying them crashed after trying to run two border patrol cars off the road, authorities said.

The border patrol cars had chased the a pickup truck for 12 miles at speeds of up to 90 mph north of Del Rio on U.S. Highway 277, said Jack Richardson, chief patrol agent for the Del Rio sector.

The driver of the truck tried to run the two units off the highway before the truck's left front tire blew up, causing the truck to overturn and burst into flames, Richardson said.

One illegal alien was pronounced dead at the scene Saturday morning by Val Verde Peace Justice Mike Deaton. The alien had not been identified late Saturday, said Donato Guajardo of Don's Funeral Chapel in Del Rio, where funeral arrangements for the victim were pending.

A second man, Martin Villanueva-Navarro, 19, was pronounced dead at 2:30 p.m. Saturday at Methodist Hospital in San Antonio. He was taken to San Antonio with Hilario Padilla-Rivera, 23, who was in undisclosed condition Saturday.

Four men and one woman were admitted to Val Verde Memorial Hospital, hospital administrator Larry Dorsey said. Seven other Mexicans were treated for injuries at the Del Rio hospital and released into the custody of the border patrol, Dorsey said.

Two Border Patrol agents at the scene were able to pull two men from the burning vehicle, Richardson. Several others were scattered around the truck.

Charges of involutary manslaughter and felony charges of alien smuggling will be filed against the driver, Richardson said.

Trainee found dead

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A circuit judge issued warrants Saturday charging a Texas man with the stabbing death of a young woman whose body was found in her 15th floor room at a downtown hotel.

Police said Diana Marie Ferrell, 22, of Dallas had been stabbed repeatedly in the back, chest, abdomen, neck and arms. The young woman, a recent graduate of East Texas State University, was to have graduated this week from a training school operated by Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

Arrested several hours after the discovery of Mrs. Ferrell's body early Friday at the Holiday Inn Riverfront was a fellow trainee, Laverne Simmons, 35, of Converse, Texas.

Warrants were issued Saturday charging Simmons with murder and robbery. He was held without bond held at City Jail pending his arraignment on the charges.

Program saves farmers

EARTH, Texas (AP) — With a name like Earth, this tiny West Texas town is supposed to be closely tied to the terrain.

And to the dozen farmers lined around two lunch tables in La Tierra Restaurant — the Earth, in Spanish — there is just such talk. "PIK," said one, tipping his hat over an eye, "has been a Godsend. God save our lands."

There is a murmur of agreement — PIK, the federal government's new fangled Payment-In-Kind program that pays farmers not to plant crops this year, has saved many a farmer in Earth, a town of 1,000 between Amarillo and Lubbock.

"We're just a little town, but PIK has meant many farmers here aren't on the brink anymore," said La Tierra employee Judy Templeton.

SHE LISTS her husband and most of the town as having been ensured survival "for at least a year" through a government program that has idled more of the nation's cotton and grain acreage than ever before.

An estimated 36 percent of the country's 82 million acres will be cropless in 1983, the Agriculture Department says. About 1.2 million of the nation's 2.3 million farmers are participating in PIK, including 99 percent of Earth, town officials say.

Citizens State Bank of Earth Vice President Donald Clayton describes PIK as "having finally brought a real optimistic outlook to this community."

LAST YEAR, hail wiped out 2 million acres of cotton around the area, while record corn and wheat crops crowded storage bins around the country. Former President Carter's grain embargo with the Soviet Union added to farmer's fiscal woes, while others chided Mother Nature.

Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower also has blamed the federal government for a "Band-aid" solution by initiating PIK for one year to silence farmers upset by a cost-price squeeze that he said gives growers an increasingly smaller share of the consumer food dollar.

"Things did look bleak for farmers before PIK. About five farms were foreclosed around Earth last year, and without PIK, this town could have disappeared," Clayton said. "But now, I can't think of one farmer here who isn't in PIK."

WHILE MOST farmers this year are elated with a program that pays them in excess crops that can be resold or used as feed grain while their lands are idled, farm equipment suppliers are taking it on the chin.

"Agriculture-related businesses that sell seed and chemicals will lose big because that land isn't being planted," Clayton said.

Many large farm combines now lay idle in some Earth fields where wheat inches skyward. Clayton said sales also are way off at the Earth Agricultural Supply store, which is across the street from a checkerboard field rich in a brown-red soil and offset by spring's green wheat.

UNDER PIK, about half the field is allowed to be planted. The rest can lay fallow. But the greening of Earth and assurance of fair payment for idling half the town's acreage has restored much of the government's image.

Couple wanted in murder of Dallas policeman found dead apparently of murder, suicide

DALLAS (AP) — A couple wanted in the brutal slaying of a Dallas policeman apparently killed themselves Saturday after officers surrounded an Arkansas farmhouse where they were hiding, authorities said.

The bodies of Vernon E. Morales, 44, and Rosemary Concilio, 38, were taken 5 miles north to Little Rock for autopsies after authorities found them on a bed in the house.

Investigators with the U.S. marshal's office inspect a house Saturday where accused murderers Vernon E. Morales and Rosemary Concilio were found. U.S. Marshal Charles Gray said one suspect apparently killed the other and then committed suicide.

Capital murder warrants were issued Thursday night for the pair in the slaying of officer Ronald Baker, who was shot five times and run over twice by a van. Police believe the 24-year-old patrolman was killed after he stumbled onto a drug deal in an apartment complex parking lot Monday.

Dallas police were en route to Arkansas Saturday to question three other people who were at the farmhouse where Morales and Ms. Concilio were killed.

U.S. marshals, Arkansas state police and FBI agents surrounded the building about 4 a.m. and ordered the suspects to surrender, said Deputy U.S. Marshal Jim Hall.

Two men and a woman emerged from the house, then two shots were heard inside, said Hall. Officers lobbed teargas canisters into the building and entered to find the bodies of the two suspects, he said.

U.S. Marshal Charles Gray said one suspect apparently killed the other and then committed suicide.

Police fired no shots, Hall said. "We did hear the two shots but we didn't fire them," he said.

The woman taken into custody for questioning is Morales' 21-year-old daughter, who was renting the farmhouse, Hall said. The two men also were staying at the residence, he said.

Morales and Ms. Concilio arrived at the farmhouse about 10 a.m. Friday, Hall said.

Dallas police, meanwhile, were continuing to investigate reports that a third person may have been involved in Baker's killing, Lt. Ron Waldrop said Saturday.

He said investigators also were checking the possibility that a theater manager's slaying Friday may have been connected with Baker's death.

The body of Ingrid Phillips was found Friday in a cemetery near her theater and near the apartment complex where Baker was killed. Investigators said witnesses' descriptions and the circumstances of the two killings led them to speculate there might be a connection.

Mrs. Phillips had been shot once between the eyes.

"She was executed," said Detective Thomas McKee. "She appeared to have been kneeling down when she was shot."

"We'll rule out as much as we can and confirm as much as we can," Waldrop said.

Capt. Grant Lappin said investigators traveled Friday to a rural area of northeast Oklahoma where authorities recovered a red Pontiac Trans Am in which Morales and Ms. Concilio were believed to be traveling.

Baker's killers fled in a van, which Texas Rangers found abandoned Tuesday night in a remote wooded area near Palestine in East Texas, police said.

The arrest warrants were issued after police questioned a 44-year-old man who contacted them Thursday, investigators said. Municipal Judge Barbara Rosenberg denied bond for both suspects.

Burglar caught drunk

HOUSTON (AP) — A bottle of bourbon was the first cause of Edd Lewis Jr.'s undoing. The second was a visiting state prison official.

Now he has been sentenced to 22 years in the Texas Department of Correction for burglary.

Lewis pleaded guilty Friday to the charge, which was filed after he was found passed out in a church, surrounded by church possessions and a bottle of bourbon.

After he was taken to Harris County Jail, a state prison official touring the newly opened building recognized Lewis as TDC inmate who never returned from a furlough, said Assistant District Attorney Charley Davidson.

Defense attorney Cheryl Irvin said Lewis had intended to fight the burglary charge. But she said her client decided to plead guilty after a social worker Lewis claimed he had been looking for in the church said she did not know him.

Prosecutors agreed to drop the escape charge.

Lewis, 42, was arrested March 7 after an organist for an Episcopal church in downtown Houston found him sprawled on the basement floor.

Friends find missing body

HOUSTON (AP) — Friends of a 27-year-old man who disappeared Thursday found his body Saturday afternoon, slumped in his car at a Rice University parking lot, officials said.

Police were questioning two men in the slaying of Rick Bowen, a construction company official who was last seen at a business dinner at a hotel.

But no charges were filed against the pair, who detective Jim Binford said were suspects in the use of Bowen's credit cards.

Clemmie Webber of Orangeburg, S.C., the National Mother of the Year said in an interview modern life makes it tougher for women to be good mothers. Mrs. Webber was honored Thursday in the S.C. House of Representatives for her April 23 claiming of the title.

'It's hard to be a good mother these days'

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Even the "national mother of the year" concedes it's hard work.

The high divorce rate, the economy and the need to budget time conspire to make "effective mothering" tougher these days, says Clemmie Embly Webber of Orangeburg.

But the 69-year-old retired South Carolina State College chemistry professor says meeting the women who traveled to New York for the "mother of the year" competition April 23, a couple of weeks before Sunday's Mother's Day celebration, did her heart good.

"My faith in what I call effective mothering was restored," Mrs. Webber said.

Women who become mothers have more pressures than ever, she said.

"I think the economy is a factor — the pressure to own things," she said. "And we have not learned to budget our time. Each day demands a few quiet moments for the family. I find that missing due to the hustle and bustle of these days. The high divorce rate has affected that need for family time together."

Mrs. Webber is a slight woman with a quiet way, a product of rural South Carolina, where she grew up with two educator parents.

"I didn't know we were poor until my father tried to borrow money to send me to medical school," she said. She didn't go to medical school, but she eventually succeeded in earning a Ph.D. in chemistry.

She has always remembered her own mother's message.

"She taught me that if I really wanted to do something to do the very best I could," said Mrs. Webber. "She always stressed the value of education. And she urged us to use a small portion of our first salary and invest it in land."

Mrs. Webber never became a real estate mogul, but she did save up and buy the home where she grew up, so she could pass it along to her children — a son and two daughters.

Busy mother of five, graduates, makes all A's

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Starting college later than most, Mary Bowman Kathman didn't want to be a mediocre nurse, so she decided not to be a mediocre student.

So while mothering five children, the 34-year-old nursing student buckled down and produced a perfect 4.0 grade average at Florida Junior College.

Besides finishing at the top of her class of 5,000, college President Benjamin Wygal announced at Wednesday night's commencement, Mrs. Kathman also scored third best in the state on Florida's nursing exam.

Getting her associate in science degree the week before Mother's Day was only appropriate for Mrs. Kathman, who said Friday that "getting the children to their appointed rounds" was her biggest difficulty during the past two years. Her husband, Jack, worked the night shift at the U.S Postal Service when she had to study.

She made an A on the test.

With a daughter almost 15, 10-year-old twins, one girl 6 and one 3, Mrs. Kathman was relieved to complete two years of 5:45 a.m. wake-up alarms. During that time, she functioned as cook, baby sitter, chauffeur, mother and baseball scorekeeper as well as student.

She said she "burned out" during high school, so she got married. When she was pregnant with her youngest child, she mentioned to her obstetrician that she would like to have a sixth child.

"He told me that first I should do something for myself. This was the first time I realized I was just existing for other people," she said. "I took one course and I was hooked."

Fair compared to high-wire act

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The president of the budding 1984 World's Fair compares his business to staging a high-wire ballet without a safety net.

While critics may feel that the wire is greased, that the ballerina is in midleap and that the dancer meant to catch her is looking the other way, Petr Spurney says everything is in balance. He is unruffled, even smiling.

One year is left before the gates at the 84-acre riverfront site are to open May 12, 1984, allowing the envisioned hordes of tourists, clutching wads of money, to rush in.

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., flew in recently to express concern that only Japan and Australia had signed on for pavilions.

Spurney soothed Long. The fair is in "serious negotiations" with 24 other countries and none of them had said no, he reported, adding that there is plenty of time.

One reason Spurney cited for the hangup was that the Knoxville World's Fair, in landing 23 nations, had made a maneuver that caused some international irritation.

"Knoxville gave some nations free space for pavilions and charged money for others," he said. "China, the hit of the fair, did not pay for their space. Now every country is holding back and watching. They're saying, 'If China gets a deal, I want a deal.'"

Another problem an entrepreneur faces nowadays is that world's fairs are getting to be as common as crabgrass.

After Knoxville 1982 comes New Orleans '84; then Tsukuba, Japan, in 1985; Vancouver, Canada, 1986; Queensland, Australia, in 1988; Paris in 1989; and Chicago and Seville, Spain, in 1992.

In view of Spurney's conception of the World's Fair business, it is perhaps fitting that the "one-year-to-go" celebration on May 12 will feature a high-wire act.

Some of the fair's critics worry that the six-month extravaganza will be seen as too expensive for the average vacationer and thus fall short of its goal of at least 11 million visitors. Its admission is already higher than Knoxville, where adults paid $10. Here it will be $15, or $14 for those under 11 or over 55, and many of the shows will cost extra.

Fire kills four family members

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Three children and their father were killed in a suspicious fire that swept their home early Saturday, and the youngsters' mother was critically burned, officials said.

The blaze, which started about 2:15 a.m. in the kitchen of the single-story frame home in south Richmond, began in a spot where it was "unlikely for a fire to start that late at night," fire investigator A.L. Collins said.

A gasoline can was found in the kitchen, and a neighbor told police she had heard what sounded like a fight inside the home at 1 a.m. The living room showed signs of a struggle, authorities said, and investigators reported finding blood in the living room.

Neither Collins nor police Detective W. Ray Williams would comment on the gasoline can, the blood, or their possible connection with the blaze.

Williams identified the dead as Michael J. Carroll Sr., 29, and his three children, Michael J. Carroll Jr., 12; Maurice Carroll, 8, and Jerome Carroll, 5. Gwendolyn Carroll, 28, the children's mother, was reported in cricical condition with burns at the Medical College of Virginia Hospital.

The bodies of the children were found on the floor of their bedroom, and the parents were found on opposite sides of the living room, officials said.

The fire was reported by a neighbor who saw smoke in the area.

Rent It or Own It

by Bob Howle

When using a circular saw, it is very important that the workpiece is securely supported by sawhorses. Remember to place it with the best side facing down as the blade of the circular saw tends to roughen or splinter the material. Consider marking a cutting line along the material or use a rip fence guide for this purpose. Turn on the saw and allow it to attain the highest speed required before applying it to the workpiece. When cutting, keep the blade moving evenly by holding the saw firmly.

If you have a specialized type of project you are contemplating, we suggest a visit to BOB's RENTAL CENTERS INC., 2700 Rankin Hwy., 685-1271 & 2909 N. Big Spring, 684-8294. Come and talk to our experienced staff. Let us show you the tools and equipment the professionals use and that is available to rent. Renting is a logical and economical way to professionally accomplish those special tasks and save a lot of time and money at the same time. Open 8-6 Mon.-Sat.

HANDY HINT:

Moving a circular saw too quickly through a workpiece will slow the speed of the blade.

Judge the speed at which the saw cuts smoothly and move the saw evenly through the work.

Mayor, Council flare up again in 'Windy City'

CHICAGO (AP) — Mayor Harold Washington squared off again Saturday against a dissident City Council faction over who will control the chamber, with little hope of a compromise in sight.

A special session was called Saturday, and although each side lacked enough support to control the council, each had enough strength to thwart opponents. Washington is supported by 21 aldermen, and his opponents number 29 in the 50-member council.

The special session was called by the anti-Washington faction led by Alderman Edward Vrdolyak, which hopes to approve the record of a council meeting on Monday during which Vrdolyak continued conducting business after the new mayor found he couldn't muster a majority of the council and gaveled the session to a close.

In that session, Vrdolyak and his supporters awarded themselves key committee chairmanships and other posts.

Washington, who as mayor also serves as president of the council, contends the latter part of the session was illegal because he had adjourned the meeting.

Vrdolyak says Washington started the feud by indicating the Democratic party's "Old Guard" was going to lose several committee chairmanships and other posts of honor in a sweeping reorganization of the chamber.

"That's when I knew it would be war," said Vrdolyak, who is also Cook County Democratic Chairman, in an interview published in Sunday editions of the Chicago Sun-Times. "I'm not the kind of guy that you can tell 'Go sit in the corner ...' Nobody can blow me off like that.

"There's the mayor — the new guy on the block — telling me I'm out," he continued. "He (Washington) thinks he's the king."

And the increasingly drawn-out battle to control the council, already moved into court Friday, has begun to take on racial overtones.

Washington, the city's first black mayor, has the support of the 16 blacks and five white independents on the council. The so-called "Vrdolyak 29" is a coalition of regular Democrats — 28 whites and one Hispanic alderman — who traditionally have carried out the mayor's will.

On Friday, opposition members ignored a warning by Washington and convened a council meeting only to have the mayor cast a veto.

After determining they could not muster the 34 votes needed to overrule Washington's veto, the aldermen moved to adjourn.

Byrne's acts investigated

CHICAGO (AP) — The Cook County state's attorney's office is investigating a "broad spectrum of possibilities" of wrongdoing involving $2.5 million in city loans approved by former Mayor Jane M. Byrne for a private contractor.

The V.N. Deprizio Construction Co. was hired by the city to lay track for a rapid transit line extension, but the financially ailing firm has stopped work on the $13.4 million project after several liens were filed against the company.

"A loan of taxpayers' dollars to a private company which has a contract with the city is unprecedented and certainly bears investigation," Cook County State's Attorney Richard M. Daley said Friday.

Daley spokesman David Devane added, "We're not 100 percent sure a crime's been committed. We have a broad spectrum of possibilities we could look at."

Mrs. Byrne and several of her top administrators last year approved two loans to Deprizio Construction, of west suburban Melrose Park, whose contract involves laying track for an extension from the Northwest Side to O'Hare International Airport.

Two weeks after the second group of loans was approved in September, the company donated $3,000 to the mayor's re-election campaign, according to the Chicago Sun-Times.

Deprizio Construction halted work on the line in March, filed for protection under federal bankruptcy laws in April, and still owes $1.5 million of the money it borrowed, Devane said.

Byrne aides who approved the loans have said they were made to keep the company solvent so it could complete the project on schedule.

Ship under fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. Navy support ship off the Lebanese coast near Beirut came under artillery or mortar fire today but was not hit, Pentagon officials said.

A Pentagon spokesman, Lt. Col. Erik Opsall, said "reports we are receiving from Lebanon indicate that approximately five artillery or mortar rounds landed within 500 yards of a U.S. Navy support ship near Beirut."

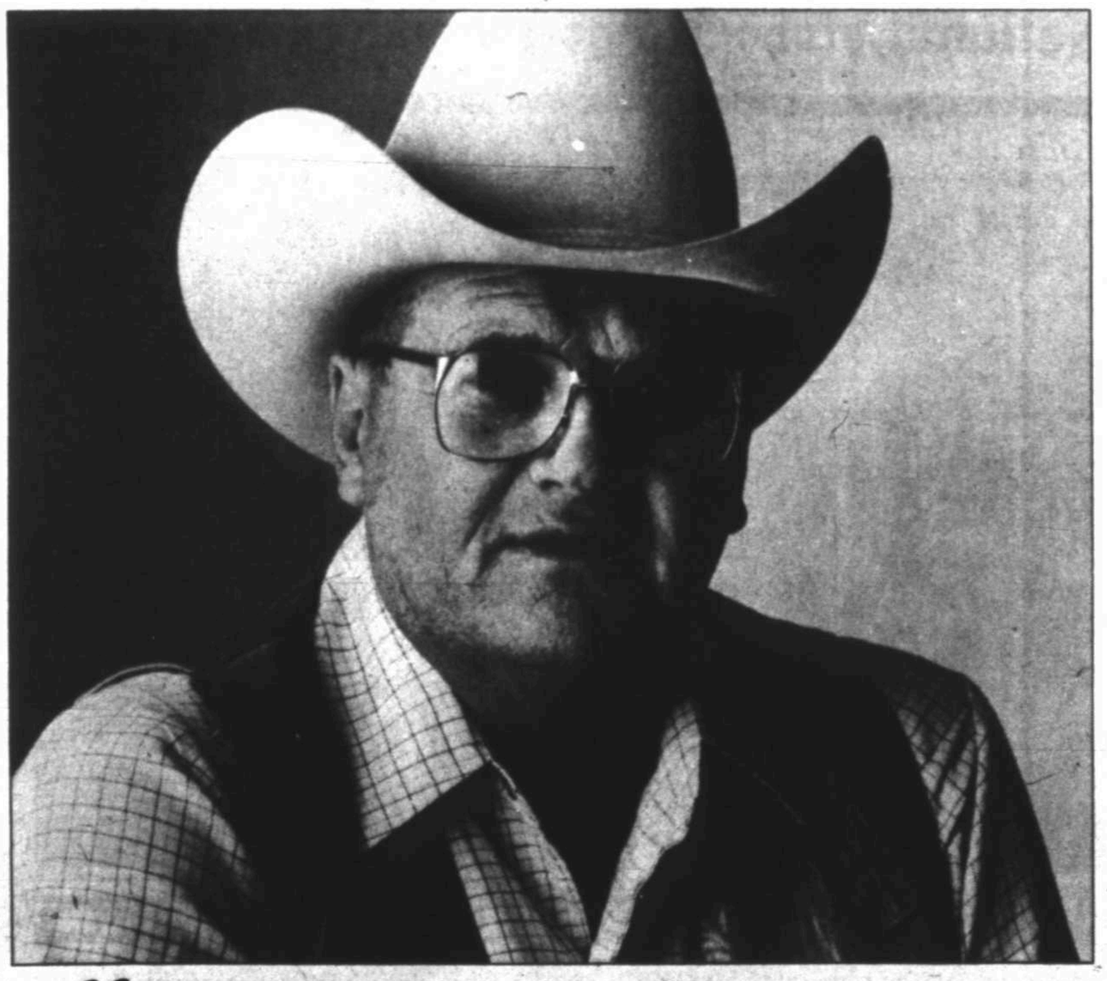

He said the lightly armed, non-combatant craft did not return the fire. "There were no casualties, no damage and no return fire," Opsall said.

Other sources identified the ship as the USS Fairfax City.

Children still in shock after earthquake

COALINGA, Calif. (AP) — The tree-lined streets where children played are now the private property of strangers — National Guard soldiers hauling water, news crews chasing stories, bulldozers finishing the destruction that last week's earthquake began.

The youngsters of Coalinga, unable to enter many houses because of structural damage and fears of aftershocks, often look like refugees in their own yards. In reality, some are more like prisoners, afraid to leave home turf for the suddenly frightening world beyond:

—Jarrod Tadlock, 6 years old, boasts that he was never scared, but 12-year-old Brad Hames is frightened to leave his front yard."I'm scared to go in the house 'cause it might fall down on me," the boy said. "I've been staying around here. I'm afraid to leave the house."

—Cindy Richardson says her 4-year-old boy is coping well, but her 11-month-old son can sense the adults' fear.

—Diane Castoe sent her kids to the San Francisco Bay Area after the quake. Now they don't want to come home.

Social workers worry that the temblor that ripped this town apart on Monday has left the children of Coalinga in danger of suffering psychological aftershocks in the years ahead.

"They've lost their Teddy Bears. It's like their whole security blanket has been ripped out from under them," said Sue Gonzalez, one of three psychiatric social workers assigned by Fresno County to help quake victims recover from the trauma that took away homes and livelihoods.

Even before the quake hit, there were problems in Coalinga, said Julie Gale, a social worker permanently assigned to the city that has been declared a federal disaster area. She said unemployment already was high. So was alcoholism.

Coalinga sits amid the rolling farm-rich foothills of the western San Joaquin Valley. But most of Coalinga's income has been sucked from the ground by the pumps that see-saw outside of town, pulling oil from the earth.

Children growing up here have been somewhat isolated from many of the pressures of the world, but that peace was shattered when the temblor — rated at 6.5 on the Richter scale — hit at 4:42 p.m., taking with it 563 homes, 141 businesses and most of the children's sense of security.

Whatever security was left vanished with the aftershocks, many topping 4.0, Ms. Gale said. Now 1,000 people are homeless, schools are closed and adults are faced with millions in damage.

"Everybody is lost and confused and looking for an answer, and there is no answer," said Arthur Martinez, the third county social worker assigned to Coalinga. Ms. Gale said this was the hardest thing for the youngsters, particularly those between the ages of 3 and 6.

Although Ms. Gale has not seen any children or adults professionally since the quake, she has seen changes in the youngsters around her.

While some children remain idle, many will go through some form of "regression," Ms. Gonzalez predicted. They might go back to sucking their thumbs or wetting the bed or demanding hugs or a bottle.

If those signs aren't heeded, the social workers said, there could be trouble ahead. "I know there's concern that after this initial period is over, we might see some regression in school, some fighting," said Ms. Gonzalez.

The three social workers said it was important to be honest, to admit there were problems and that things would not be normal for a while. It's a mistake to pretend everything's OK.

Cause of quake believed found

COALINGA, Calif. (AP) — Scientists said Saturday they believe they have found an uncharted fault responsible for the powerful earthquake that devastated Coalinga five days ago.

Seismologists believe they have mapped the temblor epicenters northeast of the city, geophysicist Gary Fuis said. Aftershocks measuring above 4.0 on the Richter scale were continuing to rock the town Saturday.

Fuis said the experts believe the fault lies in a 20-mile-long fracture 30,000 feet beneath the ground surface. No actual breakage of the ground from the Coalinga quakes has been found. The area has never been known for ruinous earth activity.

Meanwhile, officials in this city some 200 miles southeast of San Francisco said they had a "second disaster" on their hands in the form of mountains of paperwork in connection with townspeople seeking disaster aid.

The Highway Patrol began turning people away from the disaster assistance center four hours before it opened, as about two dozen agencies prepared for a barrage of claims, city spokesman Bob Semple said.

An earthquake that registered 6.5 on the open-ended Richter scale damaged or destroyed 2,000 of the city's 2,700 houses and 212 small businesses. No one was killed, but Walter Fratti was critically injured, remaining in a coma and on hospital life-support equipment.

"Now the second disaster comes," said Semple, standing amid rows of tables heaped with aid forms. "I am sure that's the way a lot of residents will feel."

Day-to-day life includes tasks unknown to townspeople before the four-block business district was destroyed.

Indians pursued

Gen. Andrew Jackson was ordered on Feb. 19, 1818, to pursue Indians into Florida, which was then a colony of Spain.

Buy A Big Diamond Now And Save Big With 10-Month Interest-Free Financing.

A special limited time offering of diamonds one carat and above.

There's no better time to buy a diamond of one carat or more. Because right now, our Diamond Club Plan lets you take 10 full months to pay when you make a diamond jewelry purchase of at least $1500. With no finance charges whatsoever.* And a 0% down payment with approved credit. But free financing is only the beginning.

What makes our large diamonds different? For one thing, the confidence you'll have coming to one of the nation's most reputable jewelers. While we price our diamonds competitively with "bargain" diamond stores, we offer a diamond policy that assures you of complete satisfaction.

A money-back policy that's a real gem. If you are not satisfied with your diamond, for any reason, you may return it within 60 days from the date of purchase for a full refund.

A trade-in policy that's truly a cut above. After you own one of our diamonds you may want to trade it in for a diamond of greater value. Select a diamond that is double the value of your stone, as determined by us, and we'll give you full credit for the current market value of your diamond.†

A one-year limited warranty that warrants your attention. If, within one year, your diamond is damaged or lost from its original mounting, we will gladly replace it. Ask for full warranty details when you come in.

There's no better time than right now for diamonds. And no better place to find the perfect large diamond than right here. But these are just a sample of the tremendous selection of fine diamonds you will find in our store right now. But come in soon. Diamond values this rare won't last forever.

*If payments are not made as agreed, finance charges will be 13.4% annual percentage rate with a 50¢ minimum finance charge.
†Trade-in policy does not apply to all stones.
All stones are not available in all stores. Call for exact locations.

Man shot because of team

LYNN, Mass. (AP) — A 29-year-old man was in poor condition Saturday after being shot apparently because he criticized the Boston Bruins in a National Hockey League playoff game.

After watching Thursday night's game on television at a local club, Ronald Murphy of Lynn said he didn't like the way the Bruins played and thought the New York Islanders should have won, police said. The Bruins won 5-1.

An unidentified man sitting at the bar, who had drunk with Murphy on other occasions, told Murphy he shouldn't have said that and asked him to "come on outside and I'll blow your brains out," police said.

Moments later, patrons heard a gunshot and Murphy crawled back into the club, bleeding from the front of his head.

Police were seeking his assailant Saturday.

Woman wins money on error

TOWSON, Md. (AP) — A 62-year-old woman was awarded $115,000 in damages for the psychological trauma she claimed to suffer when she was erroneously diagnosed as having cancer.

The Circuit Court jury made the judgment against Dr. Raphael Hernandez, a surgeon, and Dr. Samuel C.H. Lee, a pathologist, finding them guilty of malpractice.

Virginia Anderson said the two St. Joseph Hospital doctors diagnosed her five years ago as having colon cancer and scheduled her for surgery.

Upon obtaining a second opinion, Mrs. Anderson was diagnosed as having colitis, an inflammation of the large intestine. The Glen Arms woman said she now lives in constant fear that she will develop cancer and will not go to a medical doctor.

11-year-old burns to death

RUNNING SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — An 11-year-old girl on a mountain outing with classmates burned to death when a sleeping bag draped over a heater caught fire, engulfing their cabin in flames, officials said.

Ishita Patel, of Cerritos, began the outing Monday with her sixth-grade class from Wittman Elementary School. The fire broke out shortly after 2 a.m. Friday, sheriff's Sgt. George Hudson said.

Running Springs is a San Bernardino Mountain resort about 75 miles from downtown Los Angeles.

Workers could have been richer

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. workers represented by the United Auto Workers would have been richer by $150 apiece had they accepted a profit-sharing contract offered last October, the Detroit Free Press reported Saturday.

The workers rejected "wage bonuses" tied to profits in favor of a 60-cents-an-hour raise, according to the newspaper's analysis.

But the nation's No. 3 automaker, saved from bankruptcy by a government bailout in 1981, announced at its annual meeting last week that 1983 profits may hit $400 million and that it planned early repayment of its federally guaranteed loans.

UAW estimates show the raise in the current contract will net each employee about $1,300 over the 13-month life of the agreement, while the contract rejected by the workers would have generated about $1,450, the paper said.

Ex-lawmaker dies after surgery

FORT WAYNE, Ind. (AP) — Former Indiana congressman E. Ross Adair, who served in the U.S. House of Representatives from 1950 to 1971, died Saturday after multiple heart bypass surgery at Lutheran Hospital here. He was 75.

Adair served 10 terms as the 4th District representative, becoming the senior Republican member on the House Foreign Affairs Committee before his defeat in 1971 by Democrat J. Edward Roush in 1970.

Adair was admitted to Lutheran Friday morning and underwent six coronary bypasses during nine hours of surgery, Dr. Michael H. Schatzlein said. Schatzlein said Adair died at 12:30 p.m. of congestive heart failure.

Adair was appointed ambassador to Ethiopia by President Richard M. Nixon. He resigned the post in 1974.

In 1976, he was named to Bowen's privacy commission and during the 1976 presidential campaign, he was named to an advisory committee of the President Ford Committee.

Explosion forces evacuation

AMITE, La. (AP) — A propane truck collided with a car and flipped over in downtown Amite on Saturday, forcing the evacuation of more than 100 people within a half-mile radius.

Each of the home delivery truck's 850-gallon twin tanks was about half filled with liquid propane gas when the accident occurred about 12:45 p.m. on Louisiana 16, said state police Sgt. Bill Thomas.

Two people received minor injuries in the collision, police said. Details of the accident were not immediately available. Hazardous materials experts were summoned to the scene to right the truck.

Mayor admits to assault charge

NORTH PLAINFIELD, N.J. (AP) — Mayor Steven Novak, calling it an "unfortunate incident," had pleaded guilty to hitting his administrative secretary and throwing an ashtray through the window of her home.

Novak, 35, pleaded guilty in Municipal Court here Thursday to one count of assault and one count of criminal mischief and paid $200 in fines and court costs, said Theodore Gast, his attorney.

The secretary, Mary Lou Spadafora, 34, filed the complaint against Novak, saying he struck her and threw an ashtray through the window of her home on April 27.

Novak issued a statement through his lawyer, saying he had no intention of stepping down as mayor. He has been in office since 1974.

'Darth Vader' wanted for theft

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (AP) — Authorities in five cities are searching for an elusive bank robber they've dubbed Darth Vader because he wears a black mask like the villain in the movie "Star Wars."

The armed bandit has hit seven banks in the last three years, making off with thousands of dollars in cash. Police refused to give an exact amount.

The robber enters banks, usually Bank of America branches, and slips on a pair of mirror-lens sunglasses after he arrives, Smith said.

Attached to the glasses is a homemade black mask that extends from the bridge of his nose to his chin and has been molded to fit the contours of his face.

FBI agents nicknamed the bandit for the masked "Star Wars" villain and "the name stuck," Mountain View Detective John Raabe said.

Witnesses tell of roach food

PITTSBURGH (AP) — An inmate complained of cockroaches in jailhouse food as he testified at a federal hearing on whether Allegheny County officials have obeyed a court order to clean up the county jail.

"I noticed there were roaches in the cake and the bread as well as the spaghetti and beef stew," inmate James Broadie told U.S. District Judge Maurice Cohill on Friday.

"Each time I noticed these things, I would tell the other inmates not to eat that because it had roaches in it," said Broadie, who worked in the prison dining room after being jailed on a bank robbery charge.

Broadie said he was reprimanded by prison guards for warning his fellow inmates.

Police say man lied about death

WOODLAWN, Md. (AP) — A 36-year-old paraplegic man who is confined to a wheelchair was charged with the murder of his wife Saturday after police alleged he fabricated a story about gun-wielding intruders committing the crime.

Police Cpl. John Grumbach said a gunshot wound in the thigh of the suspect, Robert L. Young, was apparently self-inflicted.

Young told police that two men entered the couple's home in suburban Baltimore on Friday night, shot his wife Geraldine, 37, in the head, and then came through the house and shot him. Young said the intruders also wounded his dog as they fled through a rear door.

Grumbach said homicide investigators concluded that the story was "fabricated" after a night-long investigation, during which a .32-caliber handgun — the weapon believed to have been used in the crime — was found in the bathroom of the Young home.

Reagan pays tribute to American mothers

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan paid tribute to American mothers on Saturday and said his administration had "made some solid progress in bringing relief to your financially strapped families."

In a radio speech from his mountaintop ranch on the eve of Mother's Day, Reagan called on Americans "to recognize the enormous strength and contributions of women, wives and mothers." He said that women have not been given due credit for their role in history, largely because men have written most history books.

"But the truth is, the Wild West could never have been tamed, the vast prairies never plowed, nor God and learning brought to the corners of our continent without the strength, bravery and influence of our grandmothers, great-grandmothers and the women who came before them.

"Living through blizzards, plagues, prairie fires and floods, these women made homes and started families, organized churches and built schools," said Reagan. "They served as teachers, field-hands, physicians and the center of the family."

Reagan said that today millions of American mothers "are quiet, everyday heroes struggling to stretch budgets and too often maintaining their families alone."

He noted that inflation was running at 12.4 percent when he took office but said it has dropped to half of one percent for the last six months. In terms of grocery prices, Reagan said the lower inflation rate means a loaf of bread costs only 2 cents more now than in 1980.

If the 1980 rate of inflation had been maintained, said Reagan, milk would cost 16 cents more, hamburger 18 cents more and a dozen eggs as much as 50 cents more.

"We estimate that a family of four on a fixed income of $20,000 has $1,700 more in purchasing power this year than they would have had under the old inflation rate," said Reagan.

Also addressing American families in the Democratic response to Reagan's comments, Sen. Lawton Chiles of Florida criticized the Republican budget proposal for 1984 that would raise taxes only slightly and allow federal deficits to climb near the $200 billion mark for the next several years.

Every citizen would soon feel the pinch from such a proposal, Chiles said, "in your purse or pocketbook. You'll see whether interest rates come down or whether they are driven back up and economic recovery stops in its tracks."

"The fact is, their budget plan doesn't do anything now — right now — to promote economic recovery," Chiles said.

"Good sense — the kind of sense you use to manage your household budget — should tell us the best idea is not to let our expenses get too far ahead of our income," he said.

According to spokesman Mark Weinberg, Reagan telephoned Lebanese President Amin Gemayel "to commend him on his courage and leadership" in helping Secretary of State George Shultz gain agreement with Israel on the withdrawl of Israeli troops from Lebanon.

Federal agency finds drill problems

LOWER ALLOWAYS CREEK, N.J. (AP) — A federal agency found "significant deficiencies" in a disaster drill conducted last fall at the Salem nuclear power plant, a federal official said Saturday.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency will release a report this week citing several problems with the drill conducted Oct. 13 by state, county and local emergency workers, Philip McIntire, a FEMA official in New York City, told The Associated Press.

McIntire said the federal agency's criticisms are directed at state and local disaster preparedness officials and not the plant's operators.

On Friday, Public Service Electric and Gas Co. was fined $850,000 — the largest ever levied by the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission — for two safety failures in February.

The Feb. 22 and Feb. 25 problems with the automatic shutdown systems represent the "most significant" safety failures at a nuclear power plant since the Three Mile Island accident in 1979, the NRC said.

The October drill was conducted to evaluate the response by plant and government officials to a major accident at the facility, situated on a man-made island in the Delaware River about 20 miles southeast of Philadelphia.

"We're not saying that there were major problems with the plan," said McIntire, chief of FEMA's Region 2 Natural and Technological Hazards Division. "We're just saying that the people didn't do what they said they would."

State emergency officials disputed that there are "serious deficiencies," arguing that minor problems exist but they can be corrected when the next drill is held sometime this fall.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission requires all nuclear power plant operators to have a plan to evacuate residents living within a 10-mile radius of a plant in the event of an accident. About 16,000 people live within that distance of the Salem facility.

Roger Garelik, a FEMA spokesman in New York, said the report will cite the drill for lack of adequate and properly trained personnel, failure to demonstrate evacuation procedures and general confusion.

The report said that radiation monitoring equipment was not placed properly and that Salem County emergency workers were not adequately trained to use dosimeters, devices that measure radiation levels.

Garelik said the report is intended to tell state and local officials what corrective measures must be taken. Unlike the evacuation plan for the Indian Point nuclear plant in Westchester County, N.Y., the Salem evacuation plan itself is not being questioned, although it is still under review, he said.

The NRC on Thursday ordered that the Indian Point facility be shut down June 9 unless adequate plans are developed to protect the safety of 288,000 residents within a 10-mile radius of the plant.

John Christiansen, a planner with the state Office of Emergency Management's Radiation Emergency Response Team, said FEMA did not take into account that many volunteers couldn't participate in the drill because it occurred during the day when many had to work.

John Tatum, acting chief of Emergency Management's Operational Planning Bureau, also disagreed with the FEMA report, calling New Jersey's response plan to nuclear accidents "one of the most detailed types of protection plans I've ever seen."

"The state has demonstrated that it can protect the public against disaster," Tatum said.

The Salem I generator is scheduled to begin a one-week re-start process within a week, after winning recent NRC approval to resume operations. The plant has been closed since the February problem with the shutdown systems.

Police find 'hot' equipment

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Police recovered $28,000 worth of stolen computer equipment within two days after falsely spreading the word that it was radioactive, authorities say.

"I'd like to take credit for that one, but the uniforms thought that one up," Detective Alvin Correira said Friday.

The equipment was reported stolen April 30 from a truck en route to Maryland and Virginia.

Police passed the word in the vicinity of the theft that the stolen video terminals and other equipment "contained a large measure of radioactivity," Correira said. In fact it was not radioactive.

A woman called police two days later and said the equipment was on her front porch, police said.

The equipment, sold by Compugraphic Corp. of Wilmington, was not damaged, police said.

One of Christo's "Surrounded Islands" takes on the appearance of a giant lily pad in this fisheye lens view taken from the outer edge of the pink plastic fabric. Desert: Art form etched in landscape

EL CENTRO, Calif. (AP) — The desert is so vast and awesome that mere mortals are dwarfed by its expanse.

Perhaps that's why, when prehistoric Indians appealed to the forces that ruled their forbidding world, they did so on a grand scale.

Now the desert, like a Sistine Chapel the size of New Hampshire, wears the nearly indelible mark of hundreds of entreaties — a mysterious art form that left huge pictures and designs etched across the arid landscape.

From the air, the desert along the Colorado River from Needles, Calif., to Yuma, Ariz., seems a vast canvas covered with doodles: human figures, often in pairs up to 158 feet high, pumas, horses, lizards, quail and snakes, including a strikingly realistic 150-foot-long rattlesnake.

The designs, called geoglyphs by the few archeologists who study them, range in age from 150 years to nearly 10,000 years.

Designs from simple swirls to staggering complexes of mazes, rectangles, circles and spirals are scraped in the desert's pebble pavement or built of hundreds of rocks laid end to end.

But even the abstract designs were far from doodling, says archeologist Jay von Werlhof. They were serious business.

"These people earned their livelihood through a one-to-one relationship with their environment," he says. "These were crisis-oriented things, not something just to be seen or deciphered. It was the doing of it that was important, not the finished product."

Even the abstractions, he believes, "are pure symbolism. We just don't know what the symbols are. Scientific minds didn't make them and you can't unravel them by science alone."

Von Werlhof, of Imperial Valley College in El Centro, has been studying and cataloging the geoglyphs for more than four years.

Boma Johnson, of the Bureau of Land Management in Yuma, works with Indian groups and records in hopes of deciphering the giant artworks.

But the religious connection, he says, seems firm.

"They looked at religion as a totally practical experience. I doubt whether they would really consider it a religion at all; it was life. It was a regular thing that went on constantly."

At least 250 geoglyphs and rock alignments have been located in the vast deserts of California, Arizona and Mexico. Most were found in the past four years, since a farmer and pilot named Harry Casey became intrigued with them after taking a course from Von Werlhof.

Casey spends about 100 hours a year in the air searching for new geoglyphs and "almost everywhere there's a flat spot you see something, even if it's not very impressive. There must be a lot we're overlooking."

Johnson says, "I suspect that whenever you have desert pavement and there are humans in the area, it won't be long before they discover it is an excellent medium for displaying ideas."

The pavement is a surface layer of pebbles, cobbles and rocks a few inches deep and cleansed of soil and silt by eons of wind and rain. Scraping pavement away exposes a lighter layer, a composite of rocks and soil, that stands out in sharp contrast.

Johnson and others believe most circular geoglyphs are "dance circles" cleared, probably unintentionally, by the shuffling feet of many dancers. Von Werlhof suspects mottled areas near some geoglyphs were staging areas where dancers milled about before performing.

Scars in the fragile desert remain.

George Patton trained his Army tank corps there before World War II. The tracks cut by the heavy treads are almost as clear today as when the noisy battle wagons made them four decades ago. The tanks rolled over at least one geoglyph, leaving behind a headless figure of a body.

Four-wheel drives and motorcycles prowl the desert these days. Dramatic geoglyphs, made by a people and culture that's gone forever, are marred by the tracks. Someone named "Joe T" left his name in huge letters alongside a human figure and other designs drawn centuries ago.

That's where another BLM archeologist enters the story. His role may be the most difficult of all.

"These things are so fragile and so sensitive. Once they're destroyed, they're gone forever," says Pat Welch, of El Centro, who's trying not only to study the figures but to protect them.

"I think we have a responsibility to interpret these things to the public, to make people more aware of their cultural heritage," Welch says. "Archeology is everyone's past."

Christo completes $3.1 million effort to drape 11 islands

MIAMI (AP) — What has pink spots, speaks two languages and has suddenly developed a craze for modern art?

It's the city of Miami, transformed into the canvas for the latest venture of Bulgarian-born artist Christo, a $3.1 million aesthetic extravaganza dubbed "Surrounded Islands."

"It's exhilarating; it's exciting," declared Miami Mayor Maurice Ferre, whose taste in indoor art ranges from El Greco to Picasso. "Christo's making a major statement about monumentality in our times."

Since last Wednesday, greater Miami's 1.6 million residents have watched the azure waters of Biscayne Bay, where 400 pink-clad workers flitted in powerboats to construct the coral-colored vision.

By Saturday afternoon, the last of 11 spoil islands between Miami and Miami Beach was being dressed in a tutu 250 feet wide, floating on the water like a flamingo-tinted flapjack and shimmering in the May sun.

"It's made a happy time in Miami," said downtown restaurateur Mary DeMascolo. "People from all over the world are looking at it."

A weekend flotilla of sailboats and outboards plied the waters of the seven-mile-long archipelago, hastening to see a display that will be dismantled in two weeks. Overhead, chartered helicopters and planes buzzed to give passengers a closer view.

Motorists crossing the bay's four causeways and driving shoreline roads gawked at the 6.5 million square feet of woven polypropylene and asked themselves: "Is it art?"

A majority of readers replying to a Miami News telephone poll published Saturday don't think so. Two-thirds of the 145 respondents found the outdoor event not aesthetic, but pathetic.

"The man is very fortunate to come to America where weirdos can come and do things that are weird and get away with it," declared Harold R. Williams of Hialeah.

Dade County's business leaders endorsed the experimental artwork, noting the artist's pink meant green for them.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz walks with Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam, center, at Damascus airport Saturday. Shultz is in Damascus to try and persuade the Syrians to withdraw their troops from Lebanon.

Israelis threaten to redeploy forces

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir hinted Saturday that Israel might retrench its forces in southern Lebanon if Syria refuses to withdraw its own troops under a U.S.-sponsored agreement.

The Cabinet on Friday tentatively approved a withdrawal accord with Lebanon that had been drafted by U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz. But reports indicated Saturday that opposition to the agreement was growing in Israel and southern Lebanon.

"If Syria does not fulfill its promise to evacuate Lebanon, we will take care to deploy and position ourselves in the safest possible arrangement for IDF (Israel Defense Forces) soldiers and the IDF in general," Shamir said in an interview with Israel Radio.

Shamir refused to specify what he meant, but Israel has made clear that it would remain in Lebanon at least until the Syrians occupying the eastern sector of the country start to leave.

"I don't want to go into details but obviously the security of the army and the security of the Galilee are what concern us most," Shamir said, referring to the part of Israel that borders Lebanon.

Defense Minister Moshe Arens said on Israel Television that "if the Syrians and Palestinians do not vacate Lebanon, we will have to consult with Lebanon and the United States about what should be done."

He said consultations with the Americans might begin Sunday, when Shultz returns from his visit to Jordan, Syria and Saudi Arabia. Shultz was scheduled to meet Shamir on Sunday and then fly to Paris.

President Reagan, at his California ranch, telephoned Lebanese President Amin Gemayel to express hope that the Lebanese Cabinet and Parliament will soon approve the agreements with Israel, White House spokesman Mark Weinberg said.

The Israeli Cabinet approved Shultz' draft withdrawal accord in principle, but said it wanted clarifications of "a number of security and political problems."

Shamir said Israel was "not satisfied" with a provision that would make Maj. Saad Haddad second-in-command in southern Lebanon without a combat role. Haddad quit the Lebanese army during the 1975-76 civil war and formed his own militia in southern Lebanon. Israel has supported the militia.

Shamir said Israel would work to give Haddad "an important, perhaps decisive role in the security zone." Israel wants Haddad to stay in the south and guard against possible activity by Palestinian guerrillas.

Several Israeli ministers have raised the possibility of a unilateral pullback 15 miles south of the existing lines to the Awali River.

The United States and Lebanon oppose a partial withdrawal, saying it would divide Lebanon into Syrian and Israeli areas of control.

Advocates of partial withdrawal counter that Israel would be removing its soldiers from the Beirut area and from the Chouf mountains, where Lebanese right-wing Christians and leftist Druse fighters have ambushed, bombed and fired upon troops.

Having some troops in place would also leave Israel in control of the south, which borders Israel.

Reports said that residents of both sides of the Israeli-Lebanese border were unhappy with the tentative agreement.

An aide to Haddad told Israel Radio on Saturday that residents of south Lebanon were shocked by what they called Israel's "betrayal" of Haddad. The aide was not identified.

The radio reported that many south Lebanese were fearful that with Haddad's power diminished and the Israelis withdrawn, they would be killed by anti-Israeli forces seeking revenge.

A leader of the Israli residents along the border told the radio that he did not believe the Lebanese army could keep guerrilla rockets away from Israeli settlements in the Galilee. "Frankly, I'm advising the people here to start cleaning out their shelters," said Avraham Broshi.

Shultz: 'Difficult negotiations' ahead on Syrian withdrawal

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Saturday the Syrian government objects to parts of the Israeli-Lebanese troop withdrawal agreement and it will take "very difficult negotiations" to get Syrian troops out of Lebanon.

As Shultz left Damascus for Saudi Arabia on his Middle East peace mission, a Syrian government spokesman, who asked not to be named, called the withdrawal draft "an act of submission to the benefit of Israel, and (it) does not constitute an agreement."

Shultz was met in Jidda, Saudi Arabia, by Foreign Minister Prince Saud who said, "We hear there is a breakthrough" on the withdrawal issue.

"We are hopeful that implementation for the withdrawal of Israeli troops in Lebanon will bring back the independence and territorial integrity of all Lebanon which we have all been looking forward to," Saud added.

Shultz plans to confer with King Fahd on the withdrawal plan and President Reagan's peace initiative before leaving Sunday morning for a stopover in Jerusalem. He then continues onto Paris, ending his Mideast peace shuttle.

Prince Saud told reporters that Syrian President Hafez Assad was expected to arrive in Jidda sometime Sunday, but it seemed unlikely there would be another meeting between Assad and Shultz.

Shultz had met for four hours with Assad to encourage Syria to withdraw its estimated 40,000 troops from Lebanon in accordance with Israel's tentative agreement to remove its 25,000 soldiers.

He said he explained to the Syrians the agreement, which the Israeli Cabinet reluctantly approved "in principle" on Friday.

Of the Syrians, Shultz said, "It is fair to say they are hardly enthusiastic about the agreement that the Lebanese and Israelis have worked out."

But, he said, Assad told him, "The door is open for further talks."

Lebanon will contact Syria directly to try to obtain a Syrian agreement on troop withdrawal, Shultz told U.S. reporters who accompanied him to Damascus.

"My guess is these will be very difficult negotiations," Shultz said.

Shultz declined to say which features Syria would not accept.

The agreement with Israel provides for a removal of its troops over a two-to-three month period. But Israel wouldn't begin the withdrawal unless Syria first agrees to remove its troops.

Shultz said he couldn't predict when withdrawal will begin, "but it will take a little while."

"We weren't surprised" at Syrian objections to the agreement, he added. Syria has said it wouldn't agree to any pact that gave Israel a political or military advantage in Lebanon.

Features in the agreement provide for Israeli security in southern Lebanon.

The Syrian government spokesman who criticized the draft said: "President Assad stressed that Syria cannot agree to what affects Lebanon's independence, freedom and interests, Syria's security and interests, and consequently the security and interests of the entire Arab nation.

"President Assad stressed that there isn't any logic that justifies Israel obtaining gains as a result of its invasion of Lebanon. In fact, when it dictates such conditions, it dictates its presence in all Lebanon, and not only in part of it," Assad told Shultz.

Christian-Druse fighting raises fears

By TERRY A. ANDERSON

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Christian-Druse fighting that has spilled into this battered city, killing at least 23 people last week, raises questions — and fears — about what will happen when Israel and Syria withdraw their armies.

Leaders of the secretive Druse sect, an offshoot of Islam, claim their long-time enemies, the Maronite Christians, are preparing for an all-out war when the occupation armies withdraw.

Druse leaders charge the government of President Amin Gemayel can at best do nothing about it and at worst might join in.

The right-wing Christian Phalange militia accuses the Druse, under leftist Progressive Socialist Party leader Walid Jumblatt, of persecuting Christian residents in the Chouf and Aley mountains and of sending the rain of shells and rockets onto east Beirut and its Christian suburbs.

With a troop withdrawal agreement between Lebanon and Israel within sight and hopes forming that Syria will go along, the mountain fighting presents Gemayel's struggling government with a serious internal problem.

Jumblatt distrusts Gemayel and has said that without a political agreement and security guarantees he will not allow the Lebanese army to enter the mountain regions.

While not as heavily armed or well-organized as either the rightist militias or the resurgent army, the Progressive Socialists and their allies could field a tough force ranging from several hundred to a few thousand militiamen. Their fighting skills were proven this year when they threw the Christians out of Aley, the largest city in the mountain region.

Gemayel has vowed to bring to justice those responsible for the shelling of the capital. He has placed his army and tiny air force on alert and said he will order it to attack anyone who bombards the city again.

A Lebanese family inspects their car, destroyed in the overnight shelling of Christian East Beirut early Saturday.

An Analysis

After almost a year of occupation, the Israelis have virtually given up on attempts to intervene in the fighting. They make no effort to disarm the two sides or to stop the movement of armed militiamen.

The Chouf and Aley provinces lie in a spectacular region of tiny Christian and Druse villages perched on the steep mountain ridges looming over Beirut or tucked into narrow ravines.

U.S. Navy support ship comes under fire during Beirut battles

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A U.S. Navy ship supporting the Marines came under fire in the Mediterranean Sea off Beirut on Saturday during furious Christian-Druse battles that have left 23 dead and 84 wounded in the past three days, officials said.

A Pentagon spokesman in Washington, Lt. Col. Erik Opgall, said about five artillery or mortar rounds landed within 500 yards of the ship, but "there were no casualties, no damage and no return fire."

There was no indication who fired the rounds. Informed sources identified the ship as the Fairfax City, which provides support for the U.S. Marines in the Beirut peacekeeping force.

Another round landed earlier in the day at Beirut airport, where the 1,200 U.S. Marines are stationed, and ricocheted into the sea without exploding, according to a Marine spokesman. No one was injured, he said.

"A rocket or RPG (rocket-propelled grenade) round landed in the area of operations we are in, skidded across the runway and into the ocean," said Marine Maj. Fred Lash. "We don't know what it was, but we don't consider it was fired intentionally at us. Just something that came into our area."

The airport and Marine area are four miles south of the center of Beirut, below the foothills where Christian and Druse militiamen pounded each other all day long.

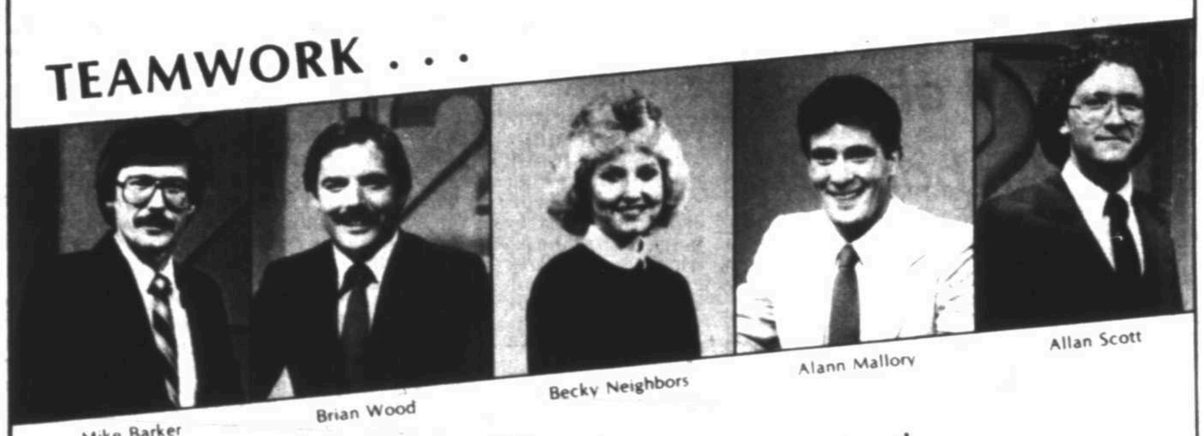

More than 500 cars and several apartment buildings were burned by shelling in the Christian eastern half of the city and in a cluster of oceanside Christian-populated towns on the capital's northern outskirts, police said.

The state-run Lebanese television station said most of the Beirut shelling came from Syrian-controlled territory in Lebanon's central mountains.

The station said the Lebanese army commander, Gen. Ibrahim Tannous, called the Syrian army chief, Maj. Gen. Hikmat Shihabi, for the second time in 48 hours and warned that the Lebanese army will strike at the source of fire in case Beirut is shelled again.

He urged Shihabi to rein in Syria's leftist Lebanese allies, according to the station. The station did not say what Shihabi's response was.

Critics question effectiveness, cost of pope's travels

EDITOR'S NOTE — Pope John Paul II is preparing for his second visit to his native Poland. It will be his 18th foreign trip since he was elected pope in 1978. Some in the Roman Catholic Church say the trips are worthy; others claim they are a waste. Here is a report by a correspondent who covers the pope in Rome and has gone on some of his travels.

By SAMUEL KOO

VATICAN CITY (AP) — At the start of his reign, Pope John Paul II described himself as a messenger who would travel the world to see his flock.

Four and a half years, 17 trips and 37 countries later, and as he prepares for a second pilgrimage to his troubled Polish homeland, the question has been raised in and out of church circles: What has he accomplished and are the extensive travels worth it?

His critics say his overseas travels are costly, produce dubious results and are risky to the pontiff, who has been the target of two assassination attempts.

But others insist his tours are instrumental in spreading and strengthening the Roman Catholic faith and serve to promote human dignity and world peace.

The pontiff, who will be 63 on May 18, is returning to Poland for a week-long visit in June — his 18th trip abroad since his election in 1978. He also made more than 30 trips within Italy.

Other trips in the planning stage for 1983-84 would take him to nearly 20 countries including Canada, Peru, Chile, Argentina, Indonesia, South Korea, India, Australia, New Zealand, Austria, Switzerland and several countries in southern Africa.

HIS FREQUENT journeys have drawn some criticism from church circles, with his detractors claiming he travels in a style that befits a king, delivering bland or contradictory statements to suit people of all persuasions and engaging in a political balancing act that might backfire.

— The auxiliary bishop of Madrid, the Rt. Rev. Alberto Iniesta, apologized to Spanish Catholics for what he called the "fatuousness and triumphalism" of the pope's visit in November, estimated to have cost $10 million.

— The Rev. Gianni Baget Bozzo, a religious affairs writer for Rome's leftist newspaper La Repubblica, complained that the pontiff was seeking "universality at the price of ambiguity."

But many church leaders in and out of the Vatican say John Paul, through his travels, has strengthened the church and planted the seeds for a better future — something whose impact can be gauged only in the long term.

Jim Cantwell, spokesman for the Catholic information office in Dublin, says there is little evidence to suggest the pope's 1979 visit to Ireland had brought the Catholic-Protestant conflict in Northern Ireland closer to resolution.

"There has been no drop in the violence," he said. "What is important is how he affected individuals in their private lives and beliefs, something which cannot be measured. If peoples' complex motivations change as a result, that will take a long time to assess."

The pope has carried out many missions as a traveler:

EVANGELISM AND PASTORAL DUTIES

There is no dispute that John Paul has reached millions of Roman Catholics in remote corners of the world, helping them reaffirm their faith and overcome their sense of isolation.

Cardinal Jaime L. Sin, archbishop of Manila in the Philippines, says the pope's 1981 visit there resulted in heightened awareness in everyone's mind about social justice and human rights.

The trips also enabled the pope to get to know local bishops, and he used that knowledge in making major church appointments. One recent example was the Rev. Giuseppe Pittau, whom the pope met in Japan and brought in as deputy head of the Jesuits.

Churchmen in several African and Central American countries have reported an increase in the number of converts and church attendance following papal visits. In Ireland, the number of applicants for the priesthood increased by 20 percent in 1980, a year after the pope's visit. But no similar increases were recorded in other countries.

PEACEMAKER AND MEDIATOR

John Paul visited Britain at the height of its Falklands war with Argentina. In order to avoid the appearance of favoring the British in the conflict, he hastily arranged a trip to Buenos Aires to balance the church's position. His fervent appeals did not stop the war, but Argentine politicians and churchmen said his visit created a "peace ripple effect" and diluted the country's fighting spirit, sapping the popularity of the military government and eventually leading to its downfall.

"It is evident that his presence here during the war's transcendent moments prejudiced us," said Gen. Leopoldo Galtieri, who was president of Argentina at the time.

As a mediator, the pope was widely credited with averting a war between Argentina and Chile in 1978 over ownership of islands in the Beagle Channel off South America's southern tip. The negotiations, however, have since hit a snag and remain deadlocked. Church sources said the Vatican has hinted that failure to come to a quick agreement might delay papal visits to those predominantly Catholic countries.

John Paul's strong appeals for peace went unheeded in Northern Ireland and El Salvador.

CHRISTIAN UNITY

On the first-ever trip to Britain by a Roman Catholic pontiff, John Paul pursued further steps to bring closer the Anglican and Roman Catholic churches. The 1982 visit produced a joint declaration to form a new panel to work at overcoming doctrinal differences blocking the unity of the world's 760 million Roman Catholics and 65 million Anglicans, who include Episcopalians in the United States.

Following the pope's 1979 meeting with the patriarch of the Eastern Orthodox Churches in Istanbul, Turkey, representatives of the two churches began in earnest a theological dialogue to examine differences separating them.

DISCIPLINE OF CLERGY

During his trips to Latin America and the Philippines, the pope faced the issue of militant clergy calling for direct church action to alleviate poverty and political repression. He enjoined priests to stay out of politics. At the same time, he reminded them of their responsibility to help achieve social justice and fight against human rights abuses.

The papal ban on priestly politics gained acceptance in most countries. A notable exception was in leftist Nicaragua where five priests still serve in government posts. Clergy in some countries like Brazil and the Philippines, citing the papal statements on social justice and human rights, are continuing their confrontations with government authorities.

GOVERNMENT RELATIONS AND HUMAN RIGHTS

The Vatican has used papal trips as an occasion to call on host governments to ease any repressive policies or grant amnesty to political prisoners.

A month before the pope arrived in Manila, President Ferdinand E. Marcos ended eight years of martial law, and the military government of El Salvador announced on the day of his arrival there plans for elections and an amnesty commission.

But in Nicaragua, backers of the Sandinista government shouted him down during a Mass, from an altar on which no cross was permitted.

And in Guatemala, military strongman Efrain Rios Montt ignored a papal plea to spare the lives of six convicted prisoners, sending them to a firing squad days before the pope's arrival. But Rios Montt said later the government had abused its authority, and lifted a stage of siege and promised elections.

Fleet Street veteran remains liberal voice of British middle class

LONDON (AP) — The Observer, Britain's oldest Sunday paper, once campaigned for the dismantling of the British empire. Nearly two centuries later, the veteran of the wars of Fleet Street remains the liberal voice of Britain's middle class.

In a crowded field of nine daily and eight Sunday newspapers, few of which make money, The Observer has survived for 191 years and publishes its 10,000th issue today.

The paper, with a current circulation of 800,000, first appeared on Dec. 4, 1791, when King George III sat on the British throne, the French Revolution was raging and George Washington was president.

The four-page broadsheet was given over mostly to advertising:

"Dr. Howell's Celebrated Powders, the only effectual remedy ever yet discovered for curing all kinds of fits."

But it also recorded the goring of a man by a tormented, over-driven ox, a fire that burned with great violence near Old Dock, Shadwell, and the "uncertain and even wretched existence of an old harpy" who kept five prostitutes in her hovel near Exeter Change.

Editorially, it promised to be "Unbiased by Prejudice — Uninfluenced by Party."

A few changes of heart later, The Observer once again is politically independent, although decidedly liberal in outlook.

"We're liberal with a small 'l,'" Editor Donald Trelford said in an interview, distinguishing his newspaper from Britain' Labor Party. "We are strictly non-party and have been for a generation."

The Observer once campaigned in favor of dismantling the British Empire and has supported many post-World War II social reforms such as ending capital punishment and legalizing abortion.

"We care very much about such things as race relations; we care about the Third World," said Trelford.

A distinguished group of writers, including George Orwell, Arthur Koestler and Kenneth Tynan, gave the paper the progressive character it retains.

LAST CHANCE LET'S DANCE

I would like to thank the many people who responded to our invitation to form the Road Runner II Singles Dances Club. The response, although encouraging was not sufficient to form the club. Therefore, we are re-running this for those people that either did not see the first letter or who procrastinated and did not take advantage of the opportunity. There is no maximum limit on membership, but we feel that a minimum of 300 mixed members are necessary to ensure a good turnout at the dances. If you are interested please let us hear from you after reading the following letter.

If you like to dance, but are tired of the bar scene, we would like to extend to you an invitation to join and help form a country and western singles dance club. The club will be very similar to the current Road Runner C & W Dance Club and will be strictly a non-profit organization. Other than a nominal door charge, there will be no hidden cost.

The club will sponsor at least six dances with a live band at a location large enough to accomodate the membership. Beer and set-ups will be furnished. On alternate months the club membership will meet at a public facility such as the Stardust. The membership will be kept informed via a newsletter. To fund the club we are seeking 150 ladies membership at $15.00 and 150 men's memberships at $25.00. If you are interested in joining please send a check or money order for the appropriate amount to: P.O. Box B-9-C, Midland Reporter Telegram Midland, Texas 79702 and include your name, age, address, home and work telephone number along with a self addressed stamped envelope. Any monies raised above the amount needed to fund the club will either be refunded proportionately to members or be refunded proportionately to members or applied to the benefit

Yours Truly,
Susie Hitchcock

Swedish navy continues sub hunt

AP Laserphoto

Fisherman Fredrik Dahlstrom pulls up his nets Friday at Alno Island, outside the town of Sundsvall in Sweden, where the Swedish Navy continues to hunt for foreign submarines which are thought to be trapped in the area. So far, the patrol boats seen in the background have not been successful in finding any submarines.

SUNDSVALL, Sweden (AP) — The Swedish navy, trying to blast a suspected Soviet submarine to the surface, dropped 14 depth charges Saturday into the bay of this northeast coastal town after saying there had been "observations."

Military sources and witnesses said patrol boats dropped 11 depth charges southeast of Alno Island at 1 p.m. and three more rolled into the water 2½ hours later.

"Shock waves came like a big baseball bat banging on the boat from underneath. Then came the explosions," said a reporter, one of a group who ventured into the search area in two small plastic boats.

Navy officials, sticking to the news blackout imposed by the search command, would not confirm the number of depth charges dropped. They said helicopters and patrol boats scanned the water with electronic devices after each barrage, but would not disclose the findings.

The navy suspects two "mini-submarines" are hiding in Sundsvall Bay and presumably a regulation-size "mother" sub is in nearby waters.

A Swedish parliamentary commission concluded that the Soviet navy sent "mini-subs" into Swedish waters near Stockholm last October when a Swedish task force made a futile two-week search for intruders. Such subs, some said to be rigged with treads for crawling along the sea floor, are not believed to be used by Western navies.

Lt. Col. Evert Dahlen of the defense staff said the Swedish navy, armed with new powers to attack intruders without warning, was trying to force up any submarines in the bay. The government has warned that alien submarines violating Swedish waters will be forced to surface at the risk of being destroyed.

Saturday's explosions occurred 12½ miles outside Sundsvall.

The depth charges were dropped after the navy said it had "observations" at 10:30 a.m. Saturday. It did not specify the nature of the observations.

The navy and local authorities banned non-resident civilians from parts of the island-dotted district where searchers are concentrating on an area of up to 512 acres.

Soldiers with automatic rifles and submachine guns guarded key military installations on some islands.

Pravda criticizes ministers for failing to produce enough consumer goods

MOSCOW (AP) — Three Soviet ministers were publicly criticized Saturday for failing to produce enough consumer goods.

A Central Committee decree on the front page of the Communist Party daily Pravda accused them of "permitting underfulfillment of established goals to increase production of goods of prime necessity and mass demand."

The decree demanded "complete fulfillment" of targets, and hinted that the ministers would be held personally accountable if shortages persisted.

Named were the minister of light industry, Nikolai N. Tarasov, the minister of machine building for light and food industry and household appliances, Ivan I. Pudkov, and the minister of the chemical industry, Vladimir V. Listov.

Communist Party leader Yuri V. Andropov has demanded better management of consumer industries in a drive to expand the output and quality of clothing, appliances and other household goods.

Terrorists kill alleged informant

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — The body of a man killed by a guerrilla group for allegedly informing to security forces was found Saturday near the border of the Irish Republic, police said.

They said the dead man was dumped by the side of the road in southern County Armagh in a border area known as "bandit country" because of frequent terrorist attacks there.

The Irish National Liberation Army, a leftist offshoot of the outlawed Irish Republican Army, said its guerrillas shot the man for supplying information to security forces.

Feminist writer scandalizes China

EDITOR'S NOTE — China's most outspoken feminist writer has scandalized conservative social critics with her famous second divorce and a sensational novel about love, love affairs and loveless marriage. She talked about it recently in an interview in her Peking apartment.

By LIU HEUNG SHING

PEKING (AP) — On April 6, 1980 Yu Luojing packed her few belongings and scribbled a note to her second husband: "I have found a room in a peasant's house and I will not return."

She walked out the door and filed for divorce from the electrician she had lived with for what she describes as four dreary years.

The grounds: no love.

She also wrote a sensational novel, "A Springtime Fairytale," about that loveless marriage and her tortured love affair with a married, elderly editor.

It touched off a furious debate about marriage, morality and art. Her personal divorce became a national ethical question. Her book was banned as "a work that pollutes the soul."

It has become an underground best-seller.

"Love is so complex, it is ever changing," China's most outspoken feminist said in a recent interview with The Associated Press. "I am still searching for its meaning. Every love affair is a process of learning as much about yourself as your partner."

"We had nothing in common," the 37-year-old writer said of her second husband, frankly admitting she only married him as a her ticket to Peking.

"IF SOMEONE is dirty, they can easily take a bath. But what do you do when you can't communicate?"

She said her husband guffawed in all the wrong places in sensitive plays and hooted like a hooligan at sports events.

After several more forbidden love affairs and an abortion, the plain looking but radiant Ms. Yu is married again and calmly in love with her third husband, a metallurgical engineer.

"He stands by his principles and he leaves me alone to pursue my career. He doesn't feel he possesses me," she said.

"As for my sex life," she says with astonishing candor about a taboo topic, "I don't enjoy sex and barely make love once a month with my husband. I admire him for respecting my feelings.

"Many young women in China today think sex is everything and seek sexual liberation because of their unhappy sex lives."

Her individualism stands out in a society where a divorcee still is stigmatized and a girl is expected to marry the first man who seriously holds her hand.

Ms. Yu rejects women's liberation groups as self-indulgent and official women's federations as stodgy. She has one child from her first marriage, to a peasant who she claims raped her on their wedding night, but she never sees the child and wants nothing to do with children.

IN WESTERN terms, Yu Luojing wants her space and takes it, seeks her personal fulfillment first and demands a man who understands. She says women have the right and power to change their lives and she has done it.

"I see my mission in life as writing about love and my own unfortunate experiences which are shared by many other Chinese women," she said.

She wrote a poem that no official writer in the women's federation would dare write. It is in praise of her third husband, Wu Fangjun:

"Where is there a lover who permits
"my skepticism and testing and allows
"me to tour the world of men, carefully
"examining, comparing
"and returning to him in the end?
"Fangjun has such style and guts."

Her books are censored because of explicit passages about sex, including her nightmarish first wedding night, or they are banned as immoral tales about a degenerate, opportunistic woman. "A Springtime Fairytale," wrote an official newspaper, "exposes others' shameful secrets in order to give vent to the author's discontent. It is an outstanding reflection of bourgeois liberalism."

HER DIVORCE was debated in a law journal and became the subject of thousands of letters, pro and con, published throughout China. She said she personally received more than 1,000 letters of support from women who described their marriages as emotionally sterile.

Her divorce was granted, then overturned after her husband protested in print. She won on appeal in a higher court when she demanded it uphold the new 1981 marriage law that said divorce must be granted when there is no mutual love and mediation fails.

Many traditionalists, however, still oppose divorce as being frivolous and an excuse for immoral people to leave their spouses. More important things than mere love, they argue, hold marriage together.

Yu Luojing says loveless marriage is an especially grave problem in China where couples are trapped by Confucian morality wrapped in the jargon of undying socialist love.

"I'm sorry for my critics," she said in the interview. "There are too many hypocrites who are deeply unhappy in their marriages of convenience. I know — it happened to me."

Official statistics are not disclosed. Since the new marriage law went into effect, however, the divorce rate has increased 54 percent in Peking, according to well-informed Chinese sources.

YU LUOJING, who comes from a family of intellectuals persecuted during Mao Tse-tung's 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, admits her first two marriages were strictly for survival and convenience.

Filipinos protest Japanese 'invasion'

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — About 40 demonstrators jeered Japanese Prime Minister Yashuhiro Nakasone as he entered the Asian Development Bank in Manila Saturday.

The demonstrators carried signs denouncing "a second invasion of the Philippines by Japanese." Police stood by with bamboo sticks but allowed the demonstrators to shout and pass out leaflets to passing motorists.

Japan provides the largest share of funds for the bank, which gives low-interest loans to Asia's poorer nations. Nakasone arrived Friday.

Clerical trio opposes apartheid

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — A Roman Catholic, a Dutch Reformed minister and an Anglican bishop form the clerical triumvirate in the intensifying church struggle against apartheid.

Their clerics' robes have not shielded them nor their churches from the white-minority government.

"The attacks occur because the church is more and more openly opposing the policy of apartheid and calling attention to its implications, which are devastatingly oppressive," says Archbishop Denis Hurley, the 67-year-old president of the Southern African Catholic Bishops Conference.

Hurley, archbishop of Durban since 1951, is the senior of the nation's three most prominent activist clerics. Colored (mixed-race) Rev. Alan Boesak, at 36, became the youngest president of the 70-million-member World Alliance of Reformed Churches last year. Black Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, 51, is general secretary of the South African Council of Churches, representing 12 million South African churchgoers, 88 percent of them black.

Since 1977, when 18 major anti-apartheid organizations were banned, these men and their churches have increased their role toward ending the domination of 4.7 million whites over 21 million blacks.

They have integrated church schools, agreed to marry couples across the color line and opposed the forced resettlement of blacks from "white" areas into tribal homelands. At congregation-level, multiracial groups try to change attitudes about sharing power.

Boesak, the most overtly political of the three, wrote recently, "Any church that would continue to support a political system that is so blatantly unjust or exploitative as ours cannot be seen truly as a member of the body of Jesus Christ."

"I would say that apart from the labor unions, which I have called the cutting edge of the liberation struggle, the hope for fundamental change coming fairly peacefully would be the churches," Tutu says.

His Council of Churches spends more than half of its $3.2 million annual budget on legal aid for political prisoners and support for their families. Other programs include community development, health clinics and scholarships. Seven of the council's 11 top staff are black, reflecting the mainly black Protestant member congregations who make up 63 percent of South Africa's Christian population.

In September, a government-appointed commission opened an inquiry into the council's activities.

Four Americans, one Nepalese stand on world's highest peak

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — Four Americans and a Nepalese stood atop Mount Everest for about 30 minutes Saturday while five other Americans were climbing the world's highest mountain in hopes of reaching the summit in a few days.

Larry Nielson, a 35-year-old teacher from Olympia, Wash., became the first American to scale the 29,028-foot peak without the aid of an oxygen mask, Nepal's Tourism Ministry said.

The others to reach the peak Saturday were identified as Peter Jamieson, 27, manager of a mountaineering shop in Durango, Colo.; Gerard A. Roach, 39, a computer scientist from Boulder, Colo.; photographer David Breashears, 27, of Newton, Mass., and veteran Nepalese Sherpa guide Ang Rita, 34.

They started their final ascent along the southeast ridge early Saturday morning from a camp at 26,200 feet and reached the peak at about 4 p.m. local time.

With their conquest, 131 people — including 14 Americans — have scaled Everest.

A Sherpa and three men from Washington state will set out for the summit on Wednesday, according to a message sent by their base camp. The Americans are Phil Ershler, 31, of Bellevue; Gary Neptune, 37, of Olympia and Jim States, a 37-year-old doctor from Spokane.

On Friday, the team's main financiers will try to conquer Everest. They are Dick Bass, 53, of Dallas and Frank Wells, 51, of Burbank, Calif. The two are on what they call their "seven summit odyssey" — a plan to climb the highest peaks on seven continents within a year.

Nicaraguan troops combat rebels

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Government troops were engaged in fierce combat Saturday with rebels who regrouped and invaded Nicaragua again from Honduras after being driven out, Defense Ministry sources said.

The sources, who asked not to be named, claimed that the Honduran army was giving the rebels transportation and artillery support.

They said the latest attack into northern Nicaragua began Friday night, hours after the Defense Ministry announced government forces had rebuffed 1,200 insurgents who had entered the country April 30.

There were no reports on how many rebels entered the country Friday night. The sources said the fighting was at Macarali in Nueva Segovia province, 185 miles northeast of Managua.

The Defense Ministry had announced Friday that seven Nicaraguan soldiers were slain and 18 were wounded in repelling the insurgents, and claimed 90 of the invaders were killed.

Honduras has denied it is harboring or supporting the Nicaraguan insurgents.

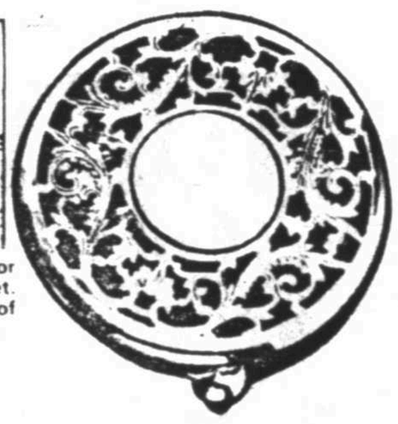

The military sources said combat also continued Saturday in the isolated Caribbean coastal province of Zelaya Norte, where rebels have been trying to reach the Bonanza gold mine, 350 miles northeast of Managua.

The rebels in northern Nicaragua are from the Nicaraguan Democratic Force and many are former members of the national guard of the late rightist President Anastasio Somoza, ousted by the Sandinistas in July 1979.

Other insurgents, most of them former Sandinista supporters, are fighting in the south near the Costa Rican border.

A communique said to be from the armed forces of the Democratic Revolutionary Alliance based in San Jose, Costa Rica, claimed its forces killed 22 Nicaraguan soldiers Thursday at La Fonseca, 28 miles north of the Costa Rican border, and killed or wounded 15 others at Morrito on Lake Nicaragua.

Dead boy's mother would settle for kiss

Though she mourns, she knows he's happy

Seven-year-old Samuel Creech died.

His mother called me Tuesday afternoon. Her son had Reye's Syndrome.

I'm not related. I'm not a friend of the family. I'm a journalist.

"Samuel died April 2," the woman said. "I wanted to know if you would write an article. I set up a memorial fund for research."

She told me her name at the beginning of the conversation, but I quickly forgot it. I was engrossed in another story. This phone call sounded like another routine "will you write something about this memorial fund?" I began blocking out most of the conversation. She whispered something about reading my articles.

I moaned to myself. Not again. I just wrote two Reye's Syndrome articles — one about a child who survived the rare disease and a follow-up story about a visiting doctor who pioneered the treatment for the mysterious killer.

Samuel Creech. Just a name. A faceless name.

"I'm sorry," I told the woman on the other end of the line. I need to get back to work, I thought to myself.

I politely explained we, the paper, couldn't write a story on every Reye's Syndrome victim.

She asked for the address of the visiting doctor. I gave it to her. She asked for the telephone number of the woman whose child lived. I did not have it.

I told the woman that I heard something about a Reye's Syndrome chapter in Texas. I gave her a Midland doctor's number.

I started to doodle. While scribbling on my pad, I began drawing cirlces around the 7-year-old's name. My mind wandered as the woman talked.

"I just thought...maybe, the paper could write this story...for research...for money to be sent to Denver," the woman continued. "The paper wrote a story on Samuel already. You see, he was partially blind. He was deaf. Samuel was having his tonsils out and your paper wrote the story."

A knot tightened in my stomach, inching its way to my throat. I felt a chill.

Samuel? Where did I hear that name.

I'm a journalist. Dozens of people cross my path each week. I write their stories. I forget most of their names within a month.

Sammy! The face connected with the name.

I wrote a story about Sammy. I'm the one who banged out the human interest piece about three small boys who were touring the hospital.

They were deaf. Sammy was there. He was rambunctious. He kept tugging at my blazer.

Sammy hugged me before I left the interview. The story was warm, interesting. The pictures were fantastic. So good, in fact, Sammy stares at me from a wall across the newsroom.

Sammy died April 2. I wrote a story about him months ago. Tuesday, I couldn't remember his name.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The above was written by Gail Burke of The Reporter-Telegram news staff for several reasons: To acknowledge to herself the professional perils of dealing, as a journalist, with human events on a daily basis, to let her supervisors know how easily this can happen and how she felt about one case in which it did happen. It was not written for publication.

Last Mother's Day Annel Creech got a corsage from her son. Today she'd settle for a kiss.

Annel wants to spend today alone. She's going to ignore Mother's Day, maybe go to the office and do some work.

Easter for Annel will never be the same and she's already "not looking forward to Christmas."

This morning, while youngsters rustle up crayon-colored cards or gather daffodils for their mothers, Annel will mourn for her son.

Seven-year-old Sammy Creech died Saturday — April 2 — the day before Easter.

Tears welled in Annel's brown eyes as she glanced at Sammy's pictures scattered throughout her office at HNG Oil Company.

"I don't think I could handle being anywhere Mother's Day is emphasized," she said.

Sammy was partially blind and deaf. He was in and out of hospitals most of his seven years.

"Before Sammy, I was afraid of handicapped children," Annel said. "I was perfectly happy with Sammy. I spent that last Saturday with him. Just for him. We colored; played with his Hot Wheels...Sammy loved Hot Wheels. And we went to get a hamburger...Sammy couldn't pass up a What-A-Burger. I'm glad now that I had that day with him."

The young boy's handicaps didn't take him away from his mother. Reye's Syndrome stole Annel's only child.

The disease affects all the body's organs, especially the liver and brain. It usually follows the flu, chicken pox and sometimes a mild cold.

It was the beginning of spring vacation when Sammy's dad came from Sonora to get him. On March 27, Steve Creech took Sammy to Sonora. Sammy and his dad talked; they laughed. The next day Sammy came down with flu-like symptoms. On March 29 he slipped into a coma. Four days later he was dead.

"At first I thought if he had been with me — maybe — it wouldn't have happened," Annel whispered. "But then I realized it didn't matter. I wonder, why? He had handicaps. He suffered his whole life. I wonder why? Why did God put him through so much?"

Since that day when the last breath of life left Sammy's small body, Annel has been trying to find out more about the mysterious killer that took her son.

She read an article in the newspaper about a Midland couple whose daughter survived the almost always fatal disease. She read about a doctor who passed through Midland. He works with Reye's Syndrome victims.

Annel tried to call the Midland woman. There was no answer. She wrote the doctor. It's too early for a response.

But Annel can't just sit. She has set up a fund for Sammy — The Samuel Clay Creech Memorial Fund at First National Bank. The money will go to the American Reye's Syndrome Association in Denver.

"I tried to find a chapter in Texas, but there wasn't one," Annel said. "The people in Denver said there are two research projects that will begin at the end of the year. The money will come back to Texas for these projects.

"Nothing will bring Sammy back, but maybe, just maybe, somebody will be helped. Sammy never had a bad day. He always laughed.

"The doctors don't want a panic started, but people need to know about this disease. They say it happens during January and March. Sammy went into a coma March 29. One day he was OK; now he's gone."

Now the 26-year-old mother is alone.

After Sammy's handicaps were diagnosed as genetic, Annel had a tubal ligation. Two years ago she and her husband divorced.

"I've always been alone. I know my mom wants me to come to Hobbs for Mother's Day, but I want to be alone. Sammy and I stayed home alone."

Sammy was her life. And today hurts.

"I stay up as late as I can," she said. "I try not to dream. I may not have quite accepted it yet. Sometimes I think he's just gone away. I know Sammy is totally happy now. He can see; hear. He doesn't hurt anymore."

Eighth-grader enjoys being Senate page

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Like any 14-year-old Midlander with a zeal for life and the youthful energy to back it up, David Malone crams his days with schoolwork, sports and socializing — the staples of life for an eighth grade boy.

But unlike most his age, David squeezes in the activities while holding down a job in the state capital, where he runs errands, fetches messages and helps 31 legislators conduct serious business inside the Senate chambers in Austin.

David, an eighth grader at Goddard Junior High School, is among 29 seventh and eighth graders serving as Senate pages — the 15 male and 14 female "gofers" who help keep the sometimes bumpy legislative process running a bit more smoothly.

Although he's learned much about government and dealing with people since beginning work in January, David said it was Austin's attractions more than the political transactions which originally lured him to the job.

"I've heard Austin, Austin, Austin, party town and all this good stuff. I thought at 14, getting paid...living in Austin...away from my parents," he mused, his voice trailing off dreamily. "I don't really know if I wanted to know all this government stuff, but I'm kind of glad I learned it. It's a lot more interesting than I thought it would be."

It was David's sister, 25-year-old Robin, an aide to Rep. Ashley Smith, R-Houston, who interested him in the page program.

"I thought it would be a good opportunity for David and I to get to know each other again," said Robin, who recently graduated from law school and leaves for England in October to study international law. "Having always lived in Midland, he really hasn't had to face a whole new group of people. It's been great to see him learn and grow up."

Armed with a recommendation from Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, David applied, interviewed and was accepted into the program.

Robin said her brother's arrival in Austin was none too soon, coming shortly after she began hobbling on crutches following an automobile accident.

"He washed my clothes and kept our apartment straight. He was a life saver," she said. "I try to keep the house because he did such a good job at the start.

"She's been all right," said David, with a teen-ager's talent for understatement. "I kind of waited on her" the first few months. Now, "she's kind of like a mom."

David returns to Midland most weekends and sleeps on a fold-out couch in Robin's one-bedroom apartment during the week. Despite the close quarters, Robin said being surrounded by a sibling has been a pleasure, not a pain.

"We're only at each other's throats momentarily," she said, laughing. "We're really not here enough for it to matter that we don't have our own space. It really has been a great experience for us."

David, son of W.H. "Bill" and Skippy Malone, 2105 Winfield Road, said he'll cherish many memories when he returns to Midland at May's end.

Cancer-striken youth's wish has been granted

With his uncle, Tom Pitman of Midland holding him, 7-year-old Bryan McClinton gets his wish. The youngster from Pittsburgh, Pa., has cancer and the Make a Wish group paid for his and his mother's trip to Midland.

From the wellsprings of humanity sometimes pours forth unsolicited generosity.

Such as that exhibited by members of a Pittsburgh, Pa., organization called Make a Wish. It gave a 7-year-old, cancer-stricken boy just the birthday present he asked for — a trip to visit his uncle, aunt and cousin in Midland.

"I want to go to the (Carlsbad) Caverns, go see an oil well and see fossils," said Bryan McClinton, as his uncle, Tom Pitman of Midland, knelt beside him at the American Airlines gate immediately after the youngster and his mother, Debbie McClinton, arrived at Midland Regional Airport Saturday afternoon.

"He was really excited on the plane," said his mother. "The (chemotherapy) treatments so far are working real well...I think we'll just keep crossing our fingers and hoping."

Bryan suffers from neuroblastoma, a severe form of cancer which spawns tumors of the embryonic nervous system and nerve cells.

When Pitman, his wife Mary (Ms. McClinton's sister) and their daughter Lisa moved from Pittsburgh to Midland in August 1981, Bryan already was feeling ill.

"Four or five years ago, shortly after my wife and I were married, his mother and father were divorced...and we became quite attached to each other," said Pitman. "I really haven't done any more than the other uncles or grandfather have; it was just a relationship that developed between the two of us...

DEATHS

Billy Joe Sandel

FORT WORTH — Services for Billy Joe Sandel, 54, of Fort Worth and formerly of Lamesa, will be at 2 p.m. Monday in Greenwood Chapel in Fort Worth. Burial will be in Greenwood Memorial Park.

He died Saturday.

He was born in Lamesa, where he lived several years and was a newspaper commercial printer. He was owner of Sandel Laundry and Dry Cleaning in Fort Worth.

Survivors include a daughter, Pamela Piedfort of Abqaiz, Saudia Arabia; a son, Richard Sandel of Midland; two sisters, Ines Greaves of Midland and Mrs. James Adams of Tulia; a brother, Wayne Sandel of Harvey, La.; and three grandsons.

Ola Brookshire

PECOS — Services for Ola Lea Brookshire, 77, of Pecos and mother of Joyce Hoffman of Midland, will be at 10 a.m. Monday at West Park Baptist Church with the Rev. Eric Lovell officiating. Graveside services will be in Evergreen Cemetery in Ballinger.

She died Friday in a San Angelo hospital after a lengthy illness.

She was born March 28, 1906, in Belton and was married to Jack Brookshire, who died in 1961. She was a member of West Park Baptist Church in Pecos.

Other survivors include four sons, two daughters, two sisters, 18 grandchildren and 10 great-grandchildren.

Midland man arrested for DWI, failure to help

A 32-year-old Midland man was arrested and booked for DWI and failure to stop and render aid after his vehicle collided with a motorcycle in the 4300 block of West Highway 80 at 11:12 p.m. Friday.

Operator of the motorcycle, Jesus Parsley, 20, of 1803 Hemlock, was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital by ambulance for treatment of injuries to his back and neck, according to a police report. He was treated and released.

Parsley told investigators he was westbound on the north service road of Highway 80 and attempting to make a right turn into the parking lot of the Sidewinders Club when he was struck from behind by a vehicle which fled the scene. Officers stopped the vehicle and arrested the driver at 1207 Burchill.

Police also investigated the theft of a U-Haul trailer loaded with household goods and two saddles from All Rich Storage at 2315 Florida Friday evening. Penny Chenoweth of Route 9, Box 9436, Space 9, told officers the trailer was taken between 6:30 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

Ms. Chenoweth valued the household items at $2,000 and the saddles at $1,500.

Ricky Wade Johnson, of 4001 E. Highway 80, No. 8, reported the burglary of his trailer house around midnight Friday. According to police reports, Johnson returned home about 11:50 p.m. and saw the screens had been removed from the trailer's windows. He notified the police department from the office of the manager, Wayne Young, and, when returning, saw two Mexican males running from the trailer parked at space 8.

The other trailer, a new one, was empty and the only damage reported to it was a broken window, valued at $20. Johnson reported a stereo, television set, jacket, shoes and shirts missing from his residence. Total value was placed at $580.

Randy Smith, of Hobbs, N.M., reported the theft of tools from a job site at 2605 Idlewilde, at 9:50 p.m. Friday. The tools, valued at $365, were taken between 10:30 a.m. and 7 p.m. Friday, according to police reports.

In other action, several automobile burglaries were being investigated by police.

Joyce Ellison, of 310-B Mariana, reported a cassette player, wallet, checkbook and credit cards were taken from her automobile. Total value was placed at $250.

A stereo radio valued at $210 was taken from a car parked at 1913 Jacotte Court. According to the victim, Ybes Pedro Ortez, the stereo was taken sometime between Thursday and Friday morning.

Cancer-striken youth's wish has been granted

"When we left (Pittsburgh) he had not been diagnosed as having cancer. He was not feeling all that well. They thought it was because we were going was why he was kind of down in the dumps."

Pitman last had seen Bryan in August 1982. "He had just finished up a week in the hospital for his chemotherapy treatment," he said. "He was feeling badly, throwing up. We didn't get a chance to enjoy him and he didn't get a chance to enjoy us. But he's feeling much better now."

Within the past four or five months, said Pitman, Bryan has undergone an operation for removal of a "very large tumor" from his stomach. "(Doctors) thought that might be the source tumor. They have still found some of the cells of the tumors in his system, however, which is why they haven't declared him secure...Apparently he is making some progress or the doctor wouldn't allow (the trip)."

The trip was made possible by the donation to Make a Wish of $800 for round-trip fare to Midland for the McClintons. The organization also acquired several hundred dollars spending money for Bryan.

"I was surprised that he had wanted to come down here," said Pitman, who serves as head of security and safety at First National Bank. "I would have thought he would have gone to Disneyland, something of that nature.

"But we're glad to have him down...We're kind of leaving it open to see what he wants to do. We'll probably take him to the (Petroleum) Museum, Sandhills of Monahans, Fort Davis, Carlsbad Caverns. Water Wonderland has invited us to bring him there."

Goddard JHS student enjoys being paged

When fire scorched the capitol earlier this year, David said, the clean-up was a bit frustrating until the pages decided to bend their coat-and-tie dress code and change into some "grubbies."

He's become fast friends with Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston. David said Washington hosted him for a weekend in Houston, bought him dinner at one of Austin's fancier spots and is planning a page picnic later this month.

"I really think he's just an all-around friendly guy," said David, who imitated Washington during Page Day, April 29, when pages took over the senators' desks for a mock session.

Although he describes Washington as his favorite senator, David said all the legislators "really seem like they're sharp. All of them work a lot. They really seem like they're on the ball."

David said he's made many friends among his fellow pages and also among the staff of Senate sergeants-at-arms.

Busy pages, with the help of a teacher from Austin, manage to jam about 1½ hours of school work into each day. The longest legislative session thus far ran from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Schooling, including science, English, social studies and math, is usually crammed in both before and after each session, David said.

"We're doing as much as we were in Midland, it's just that we've got less time for doing it," he said, adding that with the help of a Midland teacher he's managed to qualify for honors algebra next fall at Midland Freshman High School.

David said he'd like to return to the capitol some day as a sergeant-at-arms.

Beyond that, David said he'd like to go to law school or play football, plans and dreams as varied as a 14-year-old's can be.

And what about politics?

"I might want to be a senator someday...someday," he said. "I really don't know, that's a little hectic."

St. Ann's to have final meeting

St. Ann's School is winding down the year with the final PTA meeting and the annual field day this month.

The PTA will meet at 7 p.m. Thursday in the gymnasium, when the sixth grade play will be presented.

Also, the 1983-84 PTA board officers will be installed. They include the following: Mr. and Mrs. L.G. Langley, president; Mr. and Mrs. Al Enriquez, president-elect; Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hennessy, recording secretary; Mr. and Mrs. Brian Martin, treasurer; and Mr. and Mrs. Michael Dunn, corresponding secretary.

St. Ann's annual field day will be held from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. May 26 at Hogan Park.

AGRICULTURE

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Conditions have changed drastically from too wet to too dry over most of Texas during the past month, leaving young crops, pastures and ranges suffering from lack of moisture, says Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Many young crops are making only limited growth, and some recently planted crops are slow in emerging due to lack of moisture, Carpenter said. In irrigated areas such as the Rio Grande Valley and Winter Garden, farmers are watering their crops heavily, but this practice is pushing up production costs. Farmers in the South Plains are applying preplant irrigations.

Some cotton and grain sorghum is still being planted in Northeast Texas, and grain sorghum planting remains active in West Central Texas (San Angelo area). Cotton planting continues in far West Texas, and some cotton and grain sorghum planting has started in the South Plains. Most of the corn and sugarbeets have been planted in the South Plains and Panhandle.

Cotton in the Rolling Plains and West Central Texas will be planted according to a uniform planting later in May in an effort to combat the boll weevil, noted Carpenter.

Soil temperatures still remin cool in some northern sections, according to reports by the Agicultural Weather Service Center at College Station. Temperatures at the 4-inch depth for the last week averaged 63 degrees F. at Bushland, 66 at Lavon Dam (near Dallas), 68 at Lubbock and Pecos, 55 at Vernon and 66 at Waco.

Soil's salt content must be considered

Salinity, or salt content, in soils is a very important factor that must be considered because of its effect on plant culture. Salinity buildup, the result from the dissolved solids found in the irrigation water, an excess of fertilizer salts, or both; can be a problem in Midland. The principal salts found in the irrigation water are the cations (calcium, sodium, potassium and magnesium) and the anions (chlorides, sulfates, carbonates and bicarbonates).

The soluble components of fertilizers, also, go into soil solution and affect soil salinity levels. The effect of salinity on plants is to interfere with the movement of water into the plant root. Through a process known as reverse osmosis, the water moves from a solution of low concentration to a high concentration. Thus, when dissolved solids in the irrigation water become as high, or higher, than that in the plant sap, the water movement into the plant slows. Leaf scorch results and the browning of leaf edges and tips means that cells have not received moisture.

There are limits of the salt content in water that can be used on various plants. Salt sensitive plants such as roses, greenbeans or strawberries are difficult to grow in water with 2,500 to 3,500 ppm total dissolved solids.

All Midland water, both from wells and the municipal supply, contain varying amounts of salt. When this water is used for irrigation of plants, the water is taken up by the plants, or evaporates from the soil surface, but most of the salt is left in the soil. Consequently, repeated shallow watering withough drainage can result in marked accumulation of soluble salts in the soil.

The key to salinity control is water management. Salts can be leached past the root zone by occasionally applying heavy amounts of water. It is generally wise to avoid applying water by sprinkling that hits the leaves.

For more information on salinity, please contact me at the County Extension Office, 682-9481, Ext. 433.

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

STANTON — It's a place to chew the fat, crack a joke, cuss the weather.

Oh yes, and get a haircut.

What else could it be besides a small town West Texas barbershop?

"I was gonna retire when I got 65, but I can't get anybody to buy this or rent it," said 68-year-old Stan Reid, who has barbered in downtown Stanton for decades. "All the young barbers come out of school and they're all stylists. There's just not any old barbers left — kinda like blacksmithing and shoe cobbling."

In 1924 Reid came to Stanton, where he went to high school and first began barbering as a 15-year-old.

"That was all free gratis back then, out in the back yard on a stump," he said. "Dad had been cutting our hair and we didn't like the way he did it — straight across the top of the ears and shaved in back — so I got to practicing on my brothers and sisters and cousins. I started out with those ol' handclippers — didn't ever use electric clippers until I got into the CCC camp."

That Civilian Conservation Corps duty came in Lamesa in the 1930s. Reid served as company barber, ambulance driver and taxidermy and woodwork instructor. Upon his release, he went to barber school in Fort Worth and returned to the Permian Basin to conduct his first professional haircut and shave in 1937.

Reid barbered two years in Midland and two more in Valley Spring before returning to Stanton to buy the downtown shop in 1941. However, the call of the soil garnered most of his attention at that time, and he had another barber handle the cuts and shaves while he farmed. The one day of the week that was the exception, however, was Saturdays, when demand forced him to help out.

"Haircuts were 25 cents...and about that time we had nine barbers here, and not as many people as we have now," Reid recalled.

But it was the tug of the razor which helped keep him in business in an era in which commercial razors were of questionable value. "Sometimes I'd shave eight or 10 before I'd cut a head," he noted. "A lot of those fellows would only get a shave once a week because that's all they could afford. Giving all those shaves is what drove a lot of barbers to drinking — taking a nip to steady their nerves, and then another."

Most of the younger crowd in those days, said Reid, liked their hair cut short, tapered in back, and supported by prominent sideburns.

But that was to change as the hair dropped to the floor in varying amounts through the years.

Reid sold the shop in 1949 and moved to San Saba, where he remained until returning to re-purchase the business in 1952. "I'd've come back sooner if I could've," he recalled.

Reid since has seen decades of styles come and go in the shadow of the striped barber pole.

"They started cutting it shorter after the (second World) War," he said. "Then in the '60s, some were getting it cut real short, even burrs. That's when we really made money. I made as much then at $1.50 as I do now at $4...After the Beatles, a few started growing hippie, shoulder-length hair, then medium semi-long over the ears. There's very few with shoulder-length hair anymore."

Having given thousands of haircuts through the decades, it's to be expected a couple would stand out in Reid's mind. One Midland man who was virtually bald, he remembered, would come in twice a week to have his head shaved in the hope it would bring his hair back. It didn't.

And then there was the occasion during the height of the Mohawk rage when a youngster kept after him to leave only a tomahawk-like strip of hair from front to back.

"I never will forget how that little booger convinced me his mama wanted him to have that," Reid recalled with a chuckle. "We looked out the window and saw his mother coming from across the street and he said, 'Oh, my mama's gonna kill you.' She came in and hit the ceiling, and when the boy saw his head it was just shining. He had his sister go across to the grocery store and get him a paper sack so he could make him a hat to wear out."

But beyond those now-comical memories, Reid has found great intrinsic rewards in operating Stanton's only barber shop, now open Wednesdays and Thursdays.

"It's about the only place in town they have room to sit down and tell jokes and talk things over," the four-time grandfather said to the drone of electric clippers. "If a guy was just listening he'd learn everything. He might get a little confused, but he'd learn all the remedies."

Almost 3 million Moms will be called

Texans will be making an estimated three million long distance calls to phone home and wish Mom a happy Mother's Day today.

"Nationally, call volumes will average (about) 29,000 per minute this Mother's Day," said Sam Ogletree, community relations manager for Southwestern Bell. "It's always one of our heaviest calling days, and it's Mother's Day in Mexico too."

This year's national projection of 42 million long distance calls doubles the number on an average Sunday. International calls are expected to total 1.2 million.

Ogletree said most Mother's Day calls are placed in late morning and early afternoon and after 6 p.m. "We advise customers to avoid those times and consider calling in the early morning or mid-to-late afternoon to avoid peak calling periods."

He also suggested customers dial direct or use calling cards to speed up calls and save money.

Forty percent discount rates will apply on calls made before 5 p.m. today. From 5 p.m. to 11 p.m. the discount is 25 percent, and from 11 p.m. to 8 a.m. the discount is again 40 percent.

Calls placed out-of-state receive a weekend discount of 60 percent all day Saturday and up to 5 p.m. Sunday. At 5 p.m. Sunday the rate changes to 40 per cent until 11 p.m., when it goes back to 60 percent until 8 a.m. Monday.

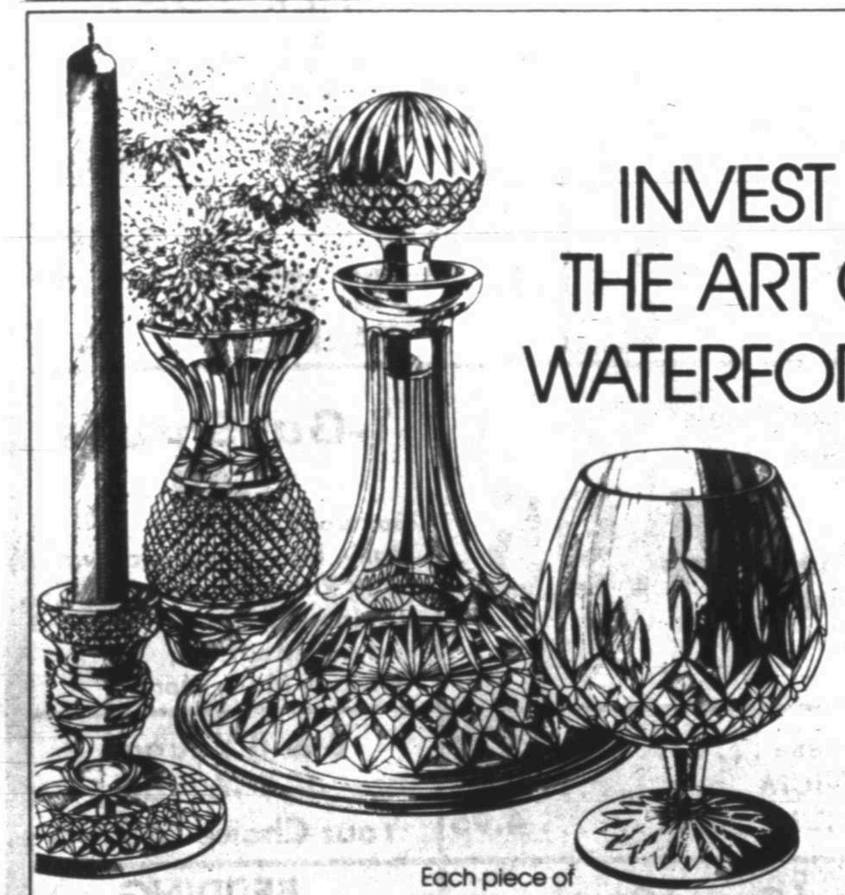

Complete information about long distance calls, discount periods and international dialing can be found in the customer guide section in front of each White Pages directory.

Many callers can reach almost 100 foreign countries and areas by dialing their own calls, the least expensive way to call overseas, according to Ogletree.

Callers who do not have international direct-dial capability will still pay direct-dial rates by placing station-to-station calls to other countries through the operator.

education in brief

Teachers' group to have last meeting

The Classroom Teachers Association of Midland will have its final meeting at 4:15 p.m. Monday in the Houston Elementary School library.

New officers will be introduced.

New schools' PTAs will meet

Quanah Parker and Santa Rita Elementary School PTAs will hold a joint meeting at 7 p.m. Monday in the Parker cafetorium.

The groups, formed in March in anticipation of the two schools opening next fall, will be presented charters by Cathryn Whitfill, second vice president of the Texas PTA.

The building will be open for tours following the meeting.

Midlander honored at UT Austin

Mary Margaret Cloyd, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Cloyd of Midland, recently was honored as a College Scholar at the 35th Annual Honor Day Convocation at The University of Texas at Austin.

Miss Cloyd, a senior in the School of Nursing, is a member of Phi Kappa Phi, national honor society of UT-Austin, and Sigma Theta Tau, national honor society of the School of Nursing.

College Scholars are students who excel in scholarship and maintain a 3.5 or better grade point average on all UT-Austin hours.

Midlander to be in honors program

Susan E. Hodges, a student at Lee High School, has been selected for the Undergraduate Honors (UGH) Work Program at the New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology.

As an UGH participant, Ms. Hodges will work part-time in one of New Mexico Tech's four divisions and earn a substantial portion of her college expenses while attending classes fulltime.

She is the daughter of Howard C. and Shirley L. Hodges, of 3304 Whitney Drive.

School volunteers to be saluted

Several activities are scheduled for Midland School Volunteer Appreciation Week, Monday through Friday.

Every school volunteer will be awarded a certificate at the school or schools in which he or she serves.

A luncheon scheduled for 11:15 a.m. Tuesday at Green Tree Country Club will recognize the Outstanding Volunteer from each school. Texas PTA second vice president Cathryn Whitfill, of Pasadena, will participate in this salute to volunteers.

Kindergarteners can visit school

Several Midland Independent School District elementary schools have scheduled Kindergarten Roundup during which students who will enter kindergarten for the first time in 1983-84 and their parents are invited to visit their assigned schools and register early.

On May 11, the kindergaten roundup at Burnet will be from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the school library while Parker Elementary's kindergarten roundup will be at 1:30 p.m. at the school, 3800 Norwood.

Because Santa Rita Elementary School is not completed, Parker also will be the location for the Santa Rita roundup, at 1:30 p.m. May 12.

Bowie will have its roundup at 9 a.m. May 12 and Emerson will have its roundup at 9:30 a.m. May 18.

All students who enter kindergarten for 1983-84 must be five years old on or before Sept. 1, 1983. In order to register, parents must bring their child's immunization record and birth certificate.

San Jacinto honor roll named

Almost 30 students were named to the honor roll for the fifth six-week period at San Jacinto Junior High School.

Seventh graders were Melissa Akins, Misty Borland, Macey Bray, Carole Campbell, Mary Foster, Oliver Garcia, Jeffrey Larremore, Heather Latimer, Elizabeth Link, Laura Oei, David Pine, Donna Selman, Luis Valdespino, Walter Warren, Leslie Whitsit, Kimberly Williams, Mary Yeager and Robert Younadim.

Eighth graders named to the list were Melanie Bell, Jill Bramlett, Trisha Carver, Connie Culpepper, Holly Herd, Kathleen Kleine, Douglas Macha, Lauri Marburger, Cathy Roberts, Norma Tarango and Leanna Walvoord.

Local business student awarded

Tracy S. Neece, of 4805-B Bedford, received The National Business Association Award of Merit for Outstanding Achievement in Business Education at Southwest Texas State University School of Business in San Marcos.

Mrs. Neece is a graduating senior at SWTSU. She is president of Pi Omega Pi and a member of Kappa Delta Pi and Alpha Chi. She was named to the Dean's List and was nominated for the Outstanding LBJ Senior Student Award.

She is the wife of Mike Reece of Midland and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Forqueran of New Braunfels.

Midlander serves on alumni group

Ed McCabe of Midland was elected secretary of the 36-member Board of Directors of Trinity University Alumni Association.

McCabe, a 1980 graduate of Trinity, will serve a three-year term.

Midlander honored at SWTSU

Mark Blane McHugh of Midland was among 282 Southwest Texas State University students receiving awards during SWTSU's recent School of Science Awards Day ceremony.

McHugh was recognized for a scholarship in the Department of Biology.

Midlanders in Tech honor society

Midlanders Shelley Paxton and Sharla Short recently were initiated into the Texas Tech University chapter of Phi Kappa Phi, national honor society.

Students must rank in the top 2 percent of the junior class or the top 10 percent as seniors and graduate students.

Ms. Paxton is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Paxton of 1210 Neely. She is a senior political science major.

Ms. Short is the daughter of Harry and Linda Short of Midland. She is a senior biology major.

Midlanders on honor list at UT

Those students included David Meriwether Bledsoe, 1507 N. C St.; Shirley Diane Cassin, 1209 Douglas; Bret Gregory Drake, 2412 Emerson; Sampson Call Driskill, 1604 Cimarron; Jay Henderson Hardy Jr., 4302 Skyline; Patrick Hunt Hickey, 2 Hanover Drive; Rodney Earl Mack, 2605 Camarie; Terry Dean Payne, 4806 Bowie; Gregory S. Spencer, 4713 Spring Meadow; and Mark Edward Vasicek, 1502 Douglas.

Midlander gets Texas Tech award

Greg Simolke of Midland received the 1983 Earl D. Camp Award from the Texas Tech University Department of Biological Sciences. The award, honoring a former biology department chairman, carries with it a $1,000 stipend.

Simolke is the son of Mr. and Mrs. D.G. Simolke of 2803 Metz Drive.

Headstart applications available

Applications for the Midland Independent School District's Head Start Program may be picked up at Bunche Early Childhood Center, 700 S. Jackson St., from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Children who are four years old on or before Sept. 1 and meet income level requirements are eligible for the program. Children also are accepted on eligibility, special needs and the date of application. Parents should bring proof of income, birth certificates and shot records.

For more information, persons may call 683-6176.

Alamo JHS PTA has last meeting

The Alamo Junior High School PTA will have its final meeting at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the auditorium. Dr. Joseph Baressi, superintendent, will be the guest speaker. 1983-84 officers will be installed, the choir will perform and a reception will follow in the cafeteria with student projects on display.

Kindergarteners may pre-register

A Kindergarten Pre-Registration Day for all children who live in the Greenwood Independent School District is scheduled for 9 a.m. top 2 p.m. Wednesday in the elementary building.

All children who will be 5 years old on or before Sept. 1, may pre-register. Parents should bring updated shot records and birth certificates.

Persons who are unable to attend may contact Bob Pheil at 683-6354.

LFHS librarian elected to association

Diantha Dawkins, Lee Freshman High School librarian, was elected to the Texas Library Association.

Serving a three-year term, Ms. Dawkins will represent the 1,534 members of the Texas Association of School Librarians (TASL). TASL is the largest division of the Texas Library Association, which is composed of college, public, special and school librarians.

MC summer pre-registration to be held

Midland College's pre-registration for the first summer session opens Monday, along with early counseling for first-time students.

Pre-registration continues through May 25, with the official registration date scheduled May 26. Classes start June 1 and continue through July 6.

Persons planning to attend the first summer session may visit the Office of Student Services in the Administration Building this week from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday. Hours on Friday are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Beginning May 16, MC will be open from 7 a.m. until 5:30 p.m. Mondays through Thursdays and closed on Fridays.

Enrollment for the first summer term is expected to be around 1,000-1,250 students.

According to Dr. Don Hunt, vice president for instruction, almost all the academic courses and many vocational subjects are offered during the first session. Very few vocational classes are offered during the second session, he said.

Bulletins listing class offerings are available from the Office of Student Services, from all Midland banks and from the Midland County Public Library. Information about specific courses may be obtained by calling 684-7851, extension 166.

Pilot-poet flies to beat of own music

Midlander writes of flight, love, honor, death

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Herm Hodges' flight is by song and wing.

His wings are those of an airplane, and his song is the philosopher's ancient medium: poetry.

As fledgling eagles we flew the moon rose exposing herself as a shy lover darting from cloud to cloud finally disappearing where we met our gods while they mused themselves with nature's pyrotechnics there
we humbled ourselves
feeling naked with our horsepower and slide rules

His aspiration whispers that of aviation writers Richard Bach of "Illusions," Ernest K. Gann of "The High and The Mighty" and the venerable Antoine de Saint-Exupery of "Night Flight." Hodges flies and writes out of their common love: the exhilaration of flight, its beauties, challenges, mysteries and its parallels to earth-bound life.

We flew between fog and darkness losing ourselves
among thousands of planets

In his 1975 "Flight Odyssey," a collection of free-style poetry, Hodges writes of flight, love, honor and death.

I would like to think that in death, I would depart with balls to the wall a thunderous roar
with four flashing propellers along side to enter Valhalla in first class
if not dated style
It must be embarrassing to explain to your fellow pilots who departed before you
why
you elected to arrive in a 1967 Chevrolet

Poetry is no way for modern man to make a living; it's a luxury Hodges affords though flying, which he has been doing since age 14 when, in the late 1950s, he took his first flight in a 1957 Piper Tri-Pacer monoplane at Big Spring.

"I got up on the flightline washing airplanes for free rides," Hodges recalled, "and then I got a job refueling and washing...You had to beg, borrow and steal to get a free ride. I ended up a couple of years later soloing in that airplane.

Afterward, Hodges enlisted in the U.S. Navy and by design became the first jazz French hornist in the U.S. Naval Band.

"That was the elite band. Still is.

"Actually, it (music) was a means to an end. I wanted a diversified career. I wanted music, and I wanted to fly. They (the Navy) had the best music school in the service, and I qualified for flight training in the Navy program."

His musicianship fared well, but his Naval flight training fizzled after the Navy required its cadets to be college educated. Despite that, he flew...to the beat of his own music.

In a sense, he equates flying with music.

"Jazz is a free-moving type of music. You're ad-libbing mostly. You're all individuals playing your own style, but you have to make it come together.

"There's a lot of parallels between music and flying," Hodges said. "You have to have a lot of self-confidence to do either."

and living machine

By the time Hodges bailed out of the Navy in the early 1970s, he had earned his airline transport rating, had logged 3,000 hours flying and had earned an associate degree in fine arts from the University of Michigan.

Then he flew for a communter airline in the Washington, D.C., area, "got totally bored," changed airlines and flew cargo from Alaska to Mexico City and went to another carrier for "very challenging" flights over the Rocky Mountains.

Later in his flying career, the poet-pilot flew a modified B-17 Flying Fortress of World War II vintage in fighting forest fires in the Northwest.

"Very few people retire from fire bombing," Hodges reflected. "Except for wartime, it's probably the most dangerous flying there is....You're always down in the valley. Sometimes you're down on the fire, and you're in the smoke, and you can't see where you're going."

We have chosen the unexpected way to live and would not change places for politics
or pensions

For a time, he spiced up his flying career to be a mercenary who flew cargo in the Middle East and Africa. He has hauled tons of freight. That "midnight cargo stuff" gets a pilot "out of step" with the world and is "not the glamour part of flying." As he views it, glamour would be flying as a captain for a major airlines; the equipment and pay are good.

Now in Midland, Hodges, 39, is a freelance pilot whose last job was flying a corporate jet.

"You kind of get to the point where you'll fly just about anything that's available."

Flying is his pastime and his vocation.

"You're right on the tip of the arrow; if something goes wrong, the passengers may never know how close they've come to purgatory."

Midlander in Profile

Our way of life is unique in its uniqueness we find our salvation

Of all the airplanes — from that Tri-Pacer he first soloed to cargo jets and airliners — he has piloted, Hodges' most prized ship is the aging but durable DC-3, a twin-engine cargo-passenger aircraft which dates back to the 1930s and which is still flying.

"It's a physical airplane in that you have to do everything yourself. It's a pilot's airplane. It's purity — a pure way of flying."

The contrast, of course, is in today's jets, which in many — but not all — respects is making propeller-driven aircraft obsolete.

"Once you get in jets, it's hard to get out because they are a much easier way of flying due to technology and speed."

Though the swept-wing jets leave the "prop jobs" in their wake, Hodges has a love affair with the old DC-3 workhorse.

With the reverence of a priest entering
Rome the first time
I feel I should ask forgiveness of any aeronautical transgression as I approach this member of the royal family

Aside from "Odyssey," Hodges' other literary works include "Seasons of Loving" and "Northbound Flight." He is working on another poetry collection, "Winter Reflections From Love Point Farm." It was at Love Point Farm in Chesapeake Bay where Hodges did much of his writing, which is similar to that of lyrical poet Rod McKuen.

"I always thought that I'd like to go back there and retire, except," he sighed, "it's not there anymore." A highway removed it from the earth. The farm, like a crashed aircraft, is no more.

When an airplane is suddenly reduced to scrap metal
The first feeling is of being betrayed of finding your lover with another man
The first question you ask yourself is why

Airports' needs to be discussed

The airport development needs of Midland, Ector and several surrounding counties will be discussed during a regional planning meeting of the Texas Aeronautical Facilities Plan at 10 a.m. Friday in Odessa.

The meeting, conducted by the Texas Aeronautics Commission, will be in the Commissioners' Courtroom in the Ector County Courthouse at 300 N. Grant.

City and county elected officials, airport board members, airport managers and representatives of the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission will take part in the discussion. Area citizens interested in air transportation and airport development are invited.

The development needs of area airports identified in the Texas Aeronautical Facilities Plan will be reviewed. The TAFP is an expansion and update of the Texas Airport System Plan developed for Texas and the Federal Aviation Administration by the Texas Aeronautics Commission.

The plan was first published in January 1979. The TAFP revision is scheduled to be complete by mid-1984.

Availability of state and federal funds for airport development also will be discussed during the meeting.

For more information, contact Merrill Goodwyn, Texas Aeronautics Commission, at (512) 476-9262.

Greenwood students awarded

Greenwood High School students Julie Moellering and Carrie Otto were named recipients of Rotary Youth Merit Awards.

Miss Moellering serves as drum major and secretary-treasurer of the marching band. She also serves as vice president of the senior class, student life editor of Raconteur and as a teacher's aide. Named to the All-Region band, she participated in concert band, one-act play and UIL headline writing contests. She was named to the all-star cast at zone and district competitions.

Miss Otto serves as librarian and historian of the band. She participated in concert and marching band and served on the band council. A chairperson on the student council, she was active on the safety committee and S.M.I.L.E. Committee. Named to the A-honor roll, she was the girls basketball manager and participated in UIL spelling contests.

In celebration of femininity: the Albert Nipon collection

We invite you for informal modeling of the new fall '83 collection. Tuesday and Wednesday, May 10 and 11, from 12 to 3. Envoy Steven Flynn will be on hand to assist with your selections and take special orders in the Fashion Salon.

Memorable fashions that create a very special image for the contemporary woman...she is fashionable without being trendy and especially aware of her individuality. Pearl and Albert Nipon create timeless and classic designs that are at once distinctive yet subtle. The collection features original and exclusive fabrications, unexpected color combinations, figure-flattering silhouettes and signature detailing to add grace to each creation. From the fall collection, we sketch: Two-piece suit in grey wool sharkskin. Sizes 2 to 14. Studio III.

Workshop offered on historical interpretation

To help area communities prepare for Texas' 1986 Sesquicentennial Celebration, the Texas Association of Museums is offering a workshop at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum in Midland. The project is co-sponsored by the Texas Historical Commission and the Texas Committee for the Humanities with funding by a Public Discussion Grant from the committee.

The Midland workshop will be from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday and will be conducted by experts in historical interpretation. Registration fee is $7.50 and may be paid at the door. Phone inquiries sould be made to TAM Director Amanda Stover, 512-472-0641.

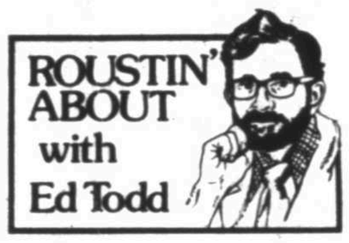

The workshop will instruct participants how to accurately research local history, identify historical objects and match the objects with historical data to create effective, visually appealing exhibits. The workshop is designed to benefit lay historians — especially teachers, librarians, museum volunteers and members of local heritage groups — by providing them with contemporary techniques of historical analysis, artifact interpretation and exhibit design.

Persons will be given an opportunity to participate in a three-year endeavor comprised of 30 to 50 local history projects across the state. The end result will be a series of exhibits and public programs in the participating communities during the sesquicentennial year.

Midland workshop topics and faculty include: "Where is the Past? — The New Community History and Where It Comes From," Lonn Taylor, deputy director of the Museum of New Mexico; "What is the Past? — Using Objects as Historical Sources," Conover Hunt-Jones, museum consultant; "Turning Lead into Gold — How to Synthesize Research into Exhibits," Sam Hoyle, Air Defense Museum in El Paso; "The Treasure Hunt — Potential Local Resources for Local History," Ron Tyler, historian, Amon Carter Museum.

Local humanities advisor, Dr. Roger Olien, will be at the workshop and do a wrap-up session detailing strengths and drawbacks of area research facilities.

Burglaries shatter women's security, alter emotional state

Marlene's parakeet was kidnapped.

Laura's car was egged.

Both women are distraught, inflamed, frightened and insecure. And it wasn't just the stolen parakeet or the egged car which altered their emotional state.

Their houses were burglarized. And now the women are considering leaving their neighborhood, which quickly is losing its respectability. Both women, out of discretion and fears of more burglaries, chose to remain anonymous and to use pseudonyms in relating their stories.

Laura, a schoolteacher, is considering changing fields. The teen-agers she teaches, who are virtually uncontrollable, occasionally engage in school-ground sex, smoke pot, pop pills, slash tires and break windows. Many already are on juvenile probation.

Marlene, a 26-year-old single secretary, has a cloistered, respectable work environment.

Her homefront insecurity was born when her house was burglarized while she was out playing softball. When she returned home, the door was ajar. Her television set, cassette deck, sound system and her beloved Creeky Bird were missing.

"The parakeet was the only human taken," said the petite secretary. The 2-year-old white-and-yellow bird had mastered a bit of English, such as "Creeky Bird, pretty boy" and "Creeky Bird, good boy" and was taking lessons in "I love you."

"He was a loveable little creature — loved to fly on people's heads," she reflected. "My bird always had freedom around in the house, so he could get out and fly his laps...He probably flew on the burglar's head, he swatted him off, and he probably jumped right back on the burglar's head and went out the door with him."

But she doesn't know.

"Police searched around the house and trees" for the parakeet but to no avail.

Her grief mostly was over the loss of her free-flight companion; her frustration is over the $72 monthly payments on merchandise she no longer has, and her distress is due to the invasion of her privacy.

"It's so depressing to be a victim of a crime," she said."It's almost kind of like being the victim of rape: Your privacy has been invaded; my place was halfway ransacked."

Laura's house was twice burglarized. In the most recent break-in, which was two days prior to the burglary of Marlene's house, her and her husband's two television sets, microwave oven, camera, wall clock and jewelry were stolen.

She was disturbed by that invasion.

And she was not pleased that her car and house were splattered with raw eggs and her car was dented. And over at the school where she teaches, she was upset over her windshield being broken, apparently with a baseball bat, and with the slashing of tires of cars belonging to some of her fellow teachers.

"I'm furious," she said. "One girl set fire to the bathroom, it happens all the time."

Her students, who represent a cross-section of ethnic groups, largely are from a depressed socio-economic class and generally lack discipline.

"Children in other cultures work out their problems in different ways," she lamented. "The kids don't listen to their teachers. They're smoking in cars and doing other things," including dealing in drugs.

Sex on campus?

"Yeah, we have that, too."

Recently, she collected an "arsenal" — straight razor, bullets, switchblade knife, and brass knuckles — from her students.

"I'm not the only one (teacher)" who faces those and similar circumstances. "And our school board says that these things never happen."

"I talked with my principal today about teachers having some sort of insurance to protect my body and belongings."

She described her principal as a "good disciplinarian" who "demands their (the students') respect and gets it, though they don't like him." His assistant is not so effective.

The 29-year-old teacher has been in education for several years and probably will continue in that role.

"I don't mind teaching," she said. "In fact, I enjoy it."

She even has misgivings about leaving her neighborhood, which lately has been beset by burglaries.

"I want to get out. But running away — I don't know if that is going to do any good."

THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT

City Councilman will be sworn in; Mayor pro-tem selected

Councilman-elect David Godfrey will be sworn in and outgoing Councilman Carroll Thomas will bid goodbye during Tuesday's City Council meeting beginning at 10 a.m. in City Hall Council Chambers.

Re-elected Councilmen Jesse Hatfield and Gordon Marcum II will be sworn in and a mayor pro-tem will be elected.

In other action, the council will consider giving notice for the sale of $7 million in Certificates of Obligation to fund improvements at Midland Regional Airport. Councilmen also will review ordinances establishing a local truck route and an ordinance creating a "no truck" route.

Before the council for consideration will be a resolution to approve the naming of three new neighborhood parks, an ordinance establishing "no parking" on the east service road connecting Front and Big Spring Streets and an ordinance extending the school zone for Trinity School on Godfrey, north of Wadley Avenue.

The council will consider resolutions accepting offers for additional right of way on A Street, awarding a construction contract for a fence around the emergency radio tower at City Hall and possible lease arrangements with American Airlines at Midland Regional Airport.

In other action, the council will review cable television rates, consider creating a zoning use classification for private elementary and secondary schools, and consider a request by Scott Steenson and John Bass for a waiver of public sidewalk regulations at Polo Parkway and Loop 250.

Public hearings will be conducted on several requests, including a request by Elm Grove Day Nursery for a specific use permit to run a day nursery on the east side of Fairgrounds Road, about 450 feet north of the intersection of Pine and Fairgrounds.

Public hearings also will be conducted on a specific use permit sought by Vicky Summerlin for a day nursery at 604 Brooks Drive, and a request by Phillips and Coston for an alcohol sales permit for a restaurant on the west side of Colorado Street, between Texas and Wall Avenues.

Another public hearing will allow comment on the designation of blighted areas for industrial development bond financing.

PBRPC

The Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission board of directors will consider resolutions on grant applications from three area Head Start programs during its monthly meeting at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday in the PBRPC building at Midland Regional Airport.

Directors will review a grant request from the Midland Independent School District to the Department of Housing and Urban Development. MISD is seeking $272,442 from HUD to pay salaries and buy supplies for its Head Start program from Sept. 1, 1983, to Aug. 31, 1984. MISD expects to match the grant with $101,966.

Big Spring Independent School District is seeking $329,619 from HUD to fund its Head Start program for the same period. BSISD plans to offer $82,404 in matching funds.

The Community Council of Reeve's County is applying to HUD for $14,000 and $1,200 grants. The $14,000 would buy a new van for Pecos Head Start Center and the $1,200 is for play equipment for the Saragosa and Pecos Head Start Centers.

The board also will consider an application by Clover House, Inc., which provides intermediate care for alcohol abusers in the 17-county PBRPC area. Clover House is seeking $11,901 from the Texas Commission on Alcohol

Mullins Center of Odessa, a facility which provides detoxification and transitional living facilities for alcoholics, is applying for $15,937 from TCA.

Finally, the board will consider the appointment of Peggy Phipps of Monahans to the Regional Alcohol and Drug Abuse Advisory Committee.

Midland County Commissioners

Senior citizens and juvenile offenders will be the focus of the Midland County Commissioners' Court attention when the panel meets at 9 a.m. Monday in the courtroom at the County Courthouse.

Pat Summers will talk about the Midland County Elderly Nutrition Program. Later on the agenda, the commissioners are to consider releasing funds from the Midland County Committee on Aging.

Lorraine Miles will discuss the 1983 telephone budget for the Juvenile Probation Department. And commissioners will consider certifying four juvenile detention facilities.

Jerry Mack will seek approval of the plat for Jer-Mac Subdivision.

Commissioners also will consider appointments to the Mental Health-Mental Retardation board of trustees and deeding county property along A Street to the city of Midland as street right of way.

MISD Board of Trustees

Midland Independent School District Trustees will consider recommendations for granting performance-based salary supplements to 26 teachers during a regular meeting at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the board room of the administration building, 702 N. N St.

Recommendations are made after the PBSS advisory board examines applications and supporting data submitted by each PBSS applicant.

Also on the agenda is a report on a drug and alcohol use survey administered to 883 Midland juniors in February. Results of the survey, conducted by UTPB graduate student Wanda Mohr of Midland, indicate the number of Midland eleventh graders who use drugs and alcohol is less than the national average. However, those students who use drugs use them on a higher daily average than students do nationally.

Trustees also are expected to hear a report on Lee and Midland high schools following an evaluation conducted by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

Bids for renovating the MHS office area and for replacing the Lee Freshman High School's office air conditioning system are expected to be awarded.

Agency sought to aid elderly

The Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission's Area Agency on Aging is accepting applications from the 17 counties in the region to contract for supportive and nutrition services for the elderly under Title III of the Older Americans Act.

The contract period begins Oct. 1 and ends Sept. 30, 1984. The deadline for receiving applications is 4 p.m. June 3.

To receive an application, an agency must send a letter indicating its intent to apply for funds and requesting the appropriate applications. The applications include Title IIIB Supportive Services, Title IIIC1 Congregate Nutrition Services and Title IIIC2 Home Delivered Nutrition Services.

Eligible counties include: Andrews, Borden, Crane, Dawson, Ector, Gaines, Glasscock, Howard, Loving, Martin, Midland, Pecos, Reeves, Terrell, Upton, Ward and Winkler.

For more information, applicants may contact W.E. Smith, project director, Area Agency on Aging, P.O. Box 6391 ATS, Midland Regional Airport, Midland, 79711; or call (915) 563-1061.

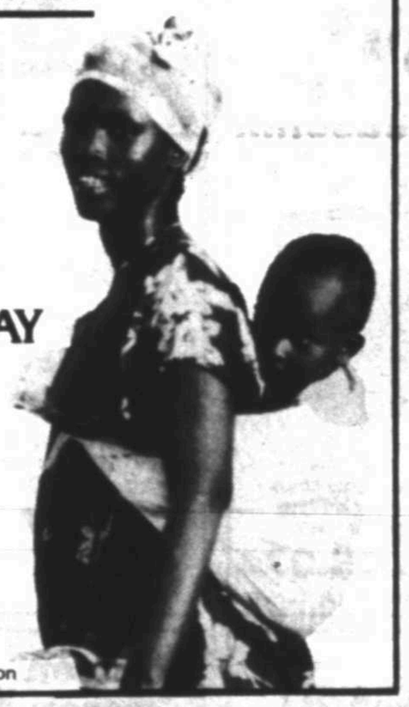

PBRPC will review bond issuance

The Permian Basin Housing Finance Corporation board of directors will review and comment on the proposed issuance of $4 million in revenue bonds for a multi-family housing complex in Big Spring during a 2:30 p.m. meeting Wednesday.

The bonds would finance a 120-unit apartment complex at a total cost of $4,236,000. Because the city of Big Spring has dissolved its housing finance corporation, the proposal by Bent Tree Apartments has been sent to the PBRPC Housing Finance Corporation for consideration.

Respected be-bop trombonist Kai Winding dies in New York

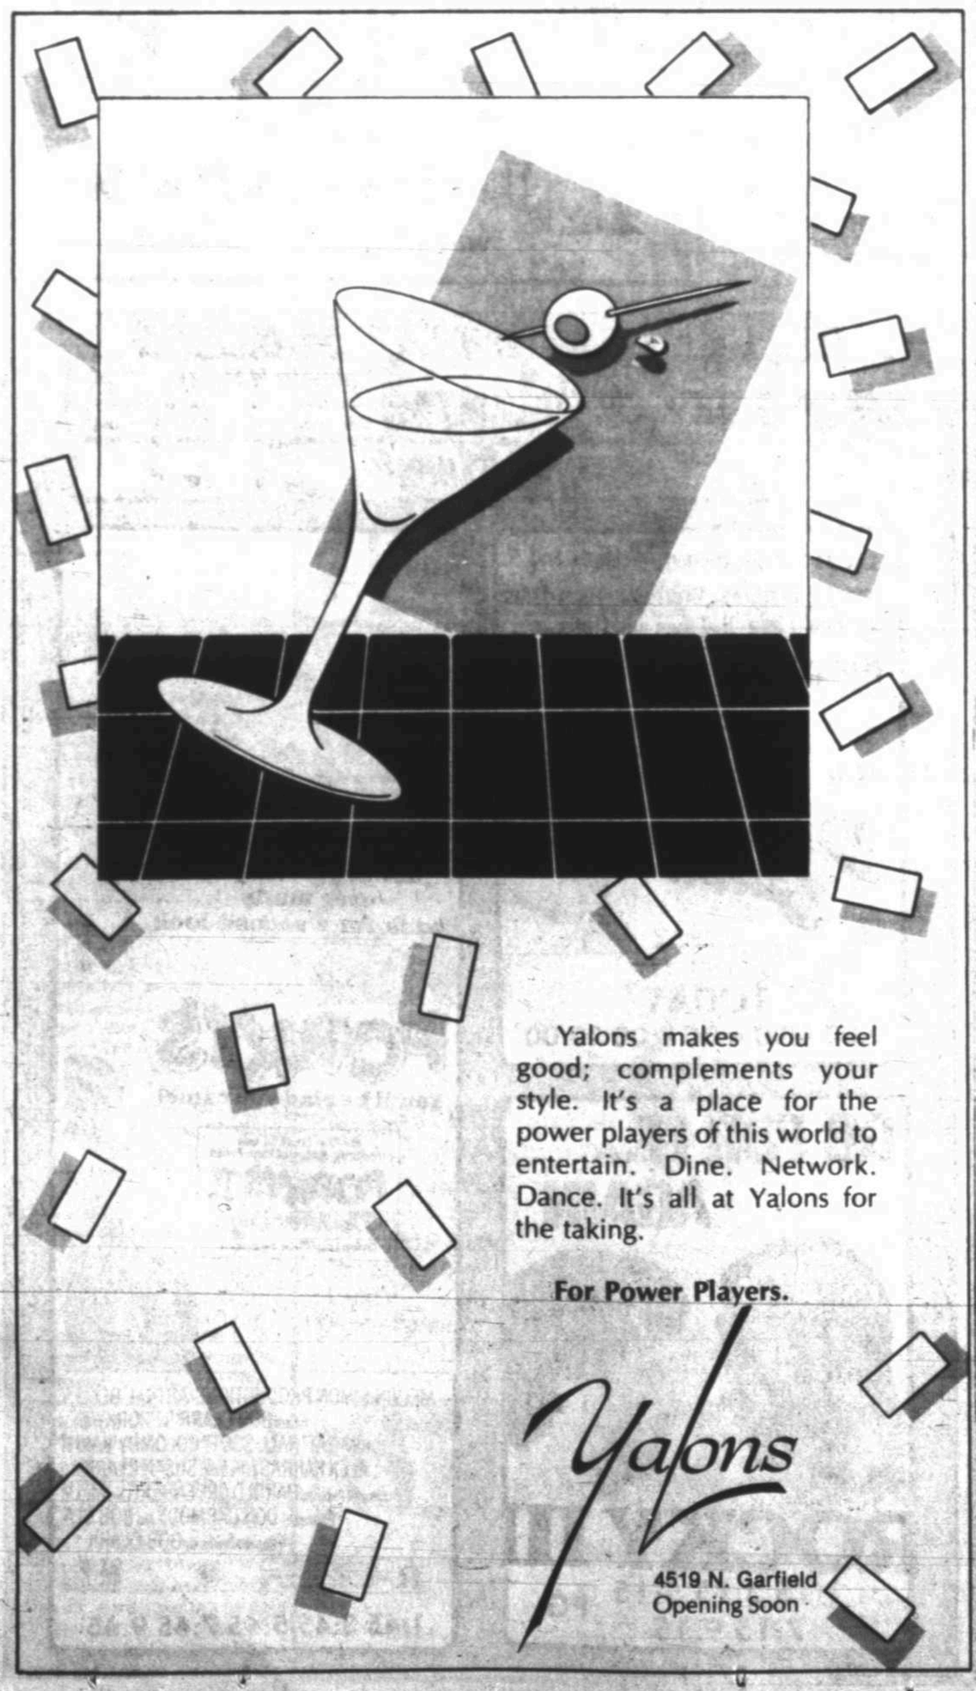

YONKERS, N.Y. (AP) — Kai Winding, a respected jazz trombonist who began his career in the be-bop movement of the 1940s, has died at the age of 60.

Winding, who recorded the hit "More," died Friday at St. John's Riverside Hospital in Yonkers. Jack Egan, his friend and one-time publicist, said the musician had undergone operations for a brain tumor last December and in late March.

Winding, once praised by jazz writer Nat Hentoff for "unusally expert and warmly imaginative trombone artistry," played the jazz circuit with Stan Kenton, Charlie Parker, Miles Davis and other famed musicians.

Born in Aarhus, Denmark, in 1922, he came to the United States in 1934 and took up the trombone.

Symphony to perform 'Requiem'

ENTERTAINMENT

The solo work performed for the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's final concerts of the season, slated for Monday and Tuesday, is Verdi's "Requiem Mass."

Completed in 1874 in memory of Allesandro Manzoni, this piece is considered to be one of the greatest works ever written for chorus and orchestra.

It features the symphony and chorale and solos by four well-known guest artists — Marjo Carroll, Dr. Lester Senter, Laurence Paxton and William Rhodes.

Miss Carroll, Metropolitan Opera Auditions winner, will sing the soprano part. Dr. Senter will sing the mezzo soprano role.

Tenor Laurence Paxton is making his second appearance with the symphony and chorale here. He appeared last spring in the symphony's presentation of the concert version of Bizet's "Carmen."

Bass-baritone William Rhodes, who also sang last spring, has appeared with the symphony on other occasions.

The "Requiem Mass" grew from a project of Verdi's to commemorate the death of Rossini by inviting the formost Italian composers of the day to collaborate in a Requiem Mass, each composer contributing a movement. The work would be performed on Nov. 13, 1869, the anniversary of Rossini's death, in San Petronio, Bologna, where he had grown up. The ties of friendship that had existed between Verdi and Rossini were not strong ones, but Verdi viewed his death as a national disaster.

Verdi had composed the last section of the movement when the plan fell through. Several years later (1873) when Verdi learned that Alessandro Manzoni, author of "I Promessi Sposi (The Betrothed)," died, he vowed when he visited the grave to commemorate his hero in a great musical work.

Thus the Libera me of the Rossini Requiem became the closing section of the Manzoni Requiem. It was first performed one year to the day after Manzoni's death — May 22, 1874.

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's performances of this masterpiece will be presented Monday at Odessa's Permian High School Auditorium and Tuesday at Midland's Lee High School Auditorium. Concert time is 8 p.m. Tickets will be available at the door.

Chinese moved by 'Death of a Salesman'

PEKING (AP) — A Chinese audience was enthralled Saturday night by the portrayal of an American family torn with shattered illusions in the first Chinese production of Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman."

Miller, who came to Peking to direct the play, appeared on stage for the final curtain of the Chinese-language performance and received a five-minute standing ovation from the audience of 1,300, including a number of Peking's foreign residents.

"It was very moving to see it come across in Chinese," Miller said after the Peking premiere of his 1949 Pulitzer Prize-winning play.

Cao Yu, one of China's foremost playwrights, told a cast party, "I was very moved by the death of Willy Loman. I felt that he is one of us."

Miller told the cast he had been prepared to fail after some people in the United States suggested a Chinese audience would not understand the play and propragandists would use it to underscore the shortcomings of American capitalism.

"We are all human...I hope nobody tries to make us simple," he said.

Although Chinese audiences are not known for being quiet, the theater was silent as Loman's wife told her sons she had discovered their father's suicide plans, saying to them, "He put his whole life into you and you've turned your backs on him."

The audience laughed at the salesman's suffering neighbor who brushed off Loman's advice to take vitamins to build up his bones with the remark, "There's no bones in a heartburn."

And, moved by the salesman's death, they shifted in their seats.

Midland piano students to audition Thursday

Almost 300 Midland music students will be participating in 1983 keyboard auditions of the National Guild of Piano Teachers beginning Thursday and continuing through May 25 at Crestview Baptist Church, 3300 Thomas Ave. The auditions are open to the public to watch between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Adjudicator for the auditions is Dr. Gladys Lawhon of Denton. Ms. Lawhon holds degrees from Texas Woman's University and a doctorate in musical performance from North Texas State University. She studied with Ernest Hucheson at Julliard School of Music.

Retired from the faculty of North Texas, Ms. Lawhon is a private piano teacher in Denton and a longtime judge for the National Guild of Piano Teachers throughout the Southwest and Hawaii.

In the forthcoming auditions, students will not be competing against each other, but will be performing against prescribed Guild standards of excellence.

The Guild's purpose is to judge a student on his or her merits and capabilities in various phases of musicianship.

The Guild, which was organized in 1929 at Hardin-Simmons University, Abilene, by Dr. Irl Allison, still maintains its national headquarters in Texas. Auditions are being held nationally, where more than 100,500 piano students will participate in 700 centers across the country.

Pianists who achieve certification will receive a gold or bronze embossed pin and a year's membership in the National Fraternity of Student Musicians and Piano Hobbyists of the World.

Dr. Gladys Lawhon

Midland piano teachers who will be represented with students in the auditions include: Jane Aldrin, Pamela Bristol, Mrs. James Crawford, Natalie Eustace, Mrs. James C. Finley, Mrs. C.J. George, Mrs. Benton Howell, Mrs. Troy Martin, Mrs. Wayne Matthews, Dr. Betty Morris, Harriet Motter, Mrs. Hans Roweck, Mrs. Eldon Wetsel, Beverly Wise, Judy Congdon and Mrs. Donald K. Thompson.

'Profiles in Dance' makes annual debut Saturday at Midland High

"Profiles in Dance," slated for Midland High School Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. Saturday, marks the 30th annual spring program presented by the pupils of the Bingham Dance Center. The program is open to the public at no charge.

Performing specialty dances will be Tina Cass, Jennifer Martin, Kristina Stevens, Leagha Lockhart, Anne Embrey, Mary Kernaghan, Michelle Boone, Lisa Lechwar, Nancy Summer, Sully Hunt, Pam Cooper, Meridith Mapes, Caroline Sheffield, Tracy Logan, Alicia Thompson, Janel Zieba, Bill Coplen and Julie Swift.

MC Community Jazz Ensemble schedules Mother's Day concert

In honor of Mothers Day, the Midland College Community Jazz Ensemble has a special performance slated for 4 p.m. today at Dennis the Menace Park, South Garfield Street and Indiana Avenue.

The concert, co-sponsored by the Midland Parks and Recreation Department and MC, will last until about 5:15 p.m. The jazz ensemble consists of 20 members under the leadership of Don Grant, music coordinator at MC. Those residents who would like to bring their instruments and play along are invited to do so.

The concert is free.

Churchill's art tours U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1925, a group of amateur artists submitted their paintings to a panel of three experts. One entry was questioned. A judge thought it was done by a professional.

The painting in question was created by Winston S. Churchill and won first prize. Art was a hobby he started when he was 40.

Landscapes, seascapes and still lifes by the late statesman will be on exhibit From May 11 through July 3 at the National Academy of Design in New York. The paintings will then travel to the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, where they will go on exhibit in September.

Rosemary Clooney steams into home town

CINCINNATI (AP) — In a cheery homecoming, singer Rosemary Clooney arrived on a riverboat, received a congratulatory telgram from President Reagan and was greeted by about 5,000 well-wishers who heard her sing old favorites at an outdoor concert.

Like other local talent — including Doris Day and Andy Williams — Ms. Clooney was a product of Cincinnati Western Hills High School and worked at WLW, the old Crosley Broadcasting Co., before heading to Hollywood.

Friday was proclaimed "Rosemary Clooney Day" here. Arriving in this Ohio River City aboard the Delta Queen, she sang for 50 minutes at Fountain Square Plaza, opening with "Tenderly." Some people hummed along with "April In Paris," "Someone To Watch Over Me" and a medley of Gershwin songs.

"You know I grew up near this river and I always wanted to get on that boat," she said. "It was a dream come true."

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The hairy question of whether Utah Gov. Scott Matheson should shave off his newly sprouted beard has a good number of constituents bristling at the prospect that he might keep it.

The governor put his razor aside a month ago, after he suffered a mild heart attack. But now that he feels better and is expected to resume full-time duties in three weeks, Utah's first lady Norma Matheson has proclaimed her disapproval, saying the beard must come off if it doesn't look distinguished and orderly soon.

The governor's mansion has received more than a few letters in support of Mrs. Matheson's ultimatum.

One letter stated simply: "I don't like it." Another writer said the bearded governor looked like "a tinhorn gambler." A third described his appearance as that of a "down-and-out bum," and a fourth said the Democrat resembled a "motorcycle gang leader."

One letter moved from insult to practicality: An anonymous card suggested Mrs. Matheson smear gum on the governor's whiskers to force him to shave.

CLEVELAND (AP) — Dennis J. Kucinich, the controversial former mayor in office when Cleveland defaulted on millions of dollars in bank loans, says he is considering a return to the city's political scene.

While he would make no commitment, Kucinich said Friday that he may seek election to the City Council seat vacated last week by the sudden death of Ward 12 Councilman Joseph W. Kowalski.

Kucinich, 36, was mayor from 1977 to 1979, when Cleveland became the first major U.S. city to default since the Depression. Although he narrowly defeated a recall bid during his term, he lost badly in his re-election bid to current Mayor George V. Voinovich.

Since then, he has been working on a book about his political experiences. He also lost a primary bid last June for the Democratic nomination for Ohio secretary of state.

Client sues attorney

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A $7.5 million lawsuit claims that "palimony" attorney Marvin M. Mitchelson sexually assaulted a client, but Mitchelson said Saturday the suit is "phony" and "vindictive."

The Superior Court suit, which also alleges breach of an oral contract and wrongful imprisonment, was filed Friday on behalf of Patricia French of Long Beach.

Ms. French claims that Mitchelson, who is noted for winning huge settlements in divorce and former live-in companion cases, agreed to represent her in a palimony suit, accepted a $5,000 retainer, then performed no legal services for her between Aug. 13, 1981, and May 11, 1982.

Instead, the suit claims, Mitchelson "without consent ... touched and harmed (her) person and engaged in unconsented to and-or illegal sexual acts with and upon (her)" in his Century City office.

Mitchelson, 55, vowed to fight the suit in court. "After we prevail in the case, I will be filing an action for malicious prosecution," he said Saturday, calling the suit a "vindictive, ridiculous thing."

He said Ms. French paid him to investigate her claims, which he did. She became disgruntled when he told her she had no grounds to sue a "very prominent minister whose name I won't reveal," Mitchelson contended.

Ms. French's suit also contends that she was locked in Mitchelson's office against her will. As a result, the complaint continues, Ms. French suffered "serious and permanent injuries to her health" along with "severe fright and shock."

The feel of victory suited Midlanders Alan and Cindy Burr Saturday during the "Newlywed Game" at Midland Park Mall. The couple played the live version of the game, hosted by Bob Eubanks, against three other couples. Participants were selected from 100 applicants drawn at random, who were then interviewed personally. During the interviews, four couples were chosen to play and three alternates picked. First prize, which went to the Burrs, is a trip for two to Hawaii.

Kathryn Crosby to appear in Midland

For the past three years, Kathryn Crosby has been working on a book — "My Life with Bing" — the story of her years of marriage with Bing Crosby.

She now is on a nationwide tour to introduce the book and will appear in Midland Wednesday at 2 p.m. at Dillards in Midland Park Mall. The autograph party will be held at the store's main entrance.

The tour began in late April in New York City where she appeared on three major network morning news shows and autographed books at Macy's in Herald Square.

A native Texan, Mrs. Crosby was in her hometown of West Columbia April 23 for a San Jacinto celebration. She is making a number of appearances throughout the state while she is here.

Kathryn Crosby

"I really have been in Bing's office writing it for three years," Mrs. Crosby states in a news release. "I've been down in our basement pulling out old pictures, trying to decide which ones to use — the usual ones you would expect to see, or some of the cute family ones that are so close to us.

"I had gotton so obsessed with the writing, I couldn't let it go," she gives as her reason for taking three years to finish the book.

"The nice thing is that Bing kept all his letters. God love him, he saved all my letters to him. And when he was away, he kept a trip diary. Now every memory triggers another memory."

The completed text includes 182 pages of pictures plus the text. It has been described as the "true story" of Bing's life and loves, his rocky romance and passionate but troubled marriage and his famous children and friends.

Bob Hope has said of it, "Here, at last, Kathryn Crosby shares with the American public an intimate portrait of her life with Bing that only she and his closest friends knew. You'll meet the real Crosby in it...and be sure to give him my best, as always."

'American Gothic' altered woman's life

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — Nan Wood Graham, the dour-faced woman in her brother's famed painting, "American Gothic," at first hated the portrayal. But now, 53 years after agreeing to pose, she says it saved her life from being "very drab."

Grant Wood convinced his sister in 1930 to be the model for the prim woman in the dull dress, next to the bespectacled man grasping a pitchfork. The painting has become a symbol of the American Midwest.

Mrs. Graham, 83, says her brother wooed her into posing by promising no one would recognize her. He was wrong.

Today she admits being stung at first by critics who said she had a face that would "sour milk," but later she began to relish the attention.

"Grant made a personality of me," she says. "I would have had a very drab life without it."

Despite America's fascination with the sturdy couple outside a white frame house, Mrs. Graham said in a recent interview that the painting has always been misinterpreted.

She said her brother didn't intend to depict a married couple, but a small-town father with his spinster daughter. The model didn't fit the role — Nan Wood was 30 and married when Wood sought her help.

The male model was Wood's 60-year-old dentist, Byron H. McKeeby.

Mrs. Graham returns to the limelight next month when the original "American Gothic" goes on exhibit at New York's Whitney Museum of American Art. That will be the first stop on a 15-month, four-city exhibition of Wood's work.

Mrs. Graham, the only living member of Wood's immediate family, plans to be there.

She also will be featured in a 30-minute television documentary about Wood being produced by public TV station KTCA in St. Paul, Minn., for telecast this fall in conjunction with the exhibition.

The display's last stop is San Francisco's M.H. DeYoung Memorial Museum in August 1984.

Financial support for the documentary and the exhibit comes from Burlington Northern Inc., the Seattle-based railroad and natural resources company. Chief executive officer Richard M. Bressler said the railroad's role as one of the first shippers of Midwestern grain gives it "a great kinship" with the culture Wood immortalized.

The exhibition of more than 65 pieces of Wood's art was organized by the Minneapolis Institute of Arts, second stop for the paintings, lithographs and drawings Wood created between 1929 and his death in 1942.

Thirteen Lerner's lucky number

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK — Thirteen generally is considered an unlucky number. But not for Alan Jay Lerner, whose "Dance a Little Closer" has come to town. It's his 13th Broadway musical.

"When 'Brigadoon' opened quite a while ago, some time before the Crimean War, I was told our opening night was March 13," recalls the 64-year-old lyricist-librettist. "They asked, was I superstitious? I said no.

"I went home and suddenly realized there were 13 people in the cast, 13 songs, 13 sets and I had 13 letters in my name. The show opened and got unanimous good press. And from that day on 13 became my lucky number."

The year was 1947, the "Brigadoon" composer Frederick Loewe, with whom the short, dapper, Harvard-educated tunesmith went on to write "Paint Your Wagon," "Camelot" and that fairest of megahits, "My Fair Lady."

Lerner, whose last visit to Broadway was in 1979 with "Carmelina," which died fast despite a lush, romantic Burton Lane score, has written the book and lyrics for "Dance." He's also directing it.

His collaborator on this go is "Annie" composer Charles Strouse, and the leading lady is Lerner's wife, Liz Robertson, whom the oft-wed lyricist married in 1981 after her triumph in a London revival of "My Fair Lady."

Rare pictures of Hopis on display

SNYDER — Photographs and watercolor paintings chronicling the ceremonial year cycle of the Hopi Indians are on display at the Diamond M Museum here.

The exhibit — "The Year of the Hopi" — is circulated by the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Service.

The photographs were made by an artist named Joseph Mora when he toured the southwestern part of the United States from 1903-06. Shortly after they were made, cameras were banned from the public dances and remain banned today, thus increasing the importance of the documentary value of these photographs.

Hopi artifacts, on loan from the Museum of the Southwest, also are on exhibit. This part of the exhibit includes a Hopi sash, baskets, a pot and jewelry similiar to objects seem in the photographs.

The show, which is open at no charge to the public, closes May 29. Hours are Tuesday-Friday 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturday-Sunday 1-4 p.m.

Choreographer Balanchine's estate goes to personal assistant, dancer

NEW YORK (AP) — Most of choreographer George Balanchine's $869,000 estate has been left to his personal assistant and to a principal dancer in the New York City Ballet.

Balanchine, who died here of pneumonia April 30 at age 79, named his personal assistant, Barbara Horgan, as executrix of his estate in a will filed Friday in Manhattan Surrogate's Court.

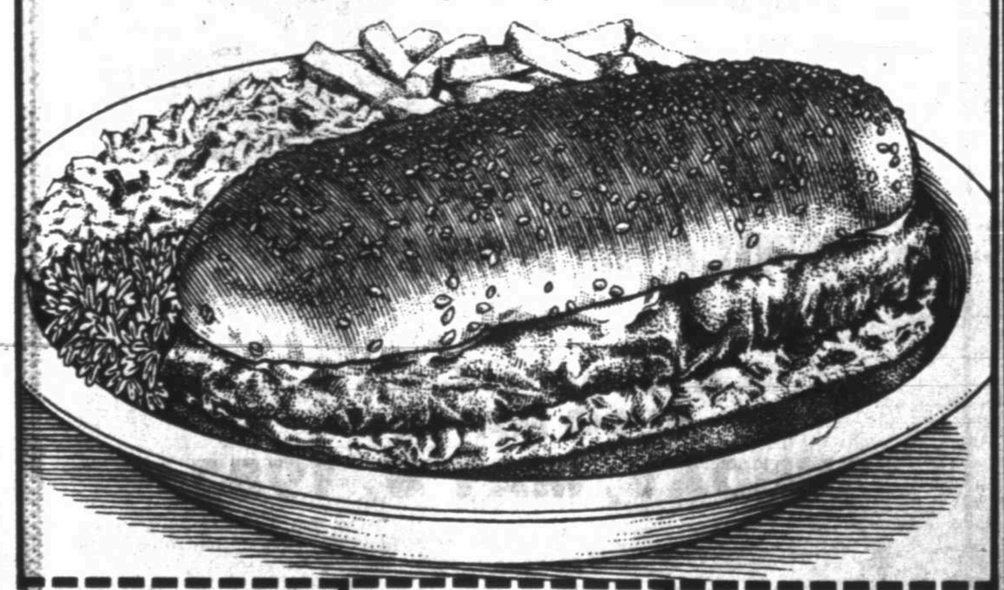

Miss Horgan also was given his $150,000 Long Island condominium in Southampton and will share royalties with dancer Karin Von Aroldingen Gerwitz from 37 Balanchine ballets.

The dancer also was left Balanchine's $200,000 Manhattan cooperative apartment and his Mercedes-Benz car.

Rebel string of track titles ends at nine

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

LUBBOCK — Despite setting two new school records, tying another and pulling off an amazing coup in the 1600 meter relay, Midland Lee's consecutive string of track titles closed out at nine here Saturday at the Region I track meet.

District 4-5A member Odessa Permian, who had not beaten Lee this year in a track meet, scored 64 points to win the team title while Killeen Ellison was second with 48 points and Lee third with 41.

But after a horrible performance in Friday's qualifying at Texas Tech University, there were few frowns for Lee fans Saturday as the Rebels did a turnaround. On Friday, Lee's sprint relay team, which was favored to win the Region I title, dropped the baton. It almost sent the whole Lee team into a state of shock.

Lee recovered Saturday by qualifying Damon Polk in the high hurdles and the 1600 meter relay team for the state meet in Austin next Saturday. Midland High's lone entry, Chuck St. Germain, also captured a state berth in the 800 meters.

Polk entered Saturday's high hurdle finals having never been beaten in a finals this year. He posted a 13.9 for second place, but lost his unbeaten string.

"I was watching for O.D. Wyatt's (Wayland) Mason to my left and didn't see the Eastern Hills guy (Andrew Livingston) on my right, and he beat me," Polk said. "The unbeaten thing is over, but I'm going to Austin and that's what counts right now."

Polk set a Lee school record in the 300 hurdles with a 37.47, but finished only fourth to miss another Austin berth.

FOR A time it looked like Polk would be Lee's only state qualifier, but Coach Sam Volpe made a daring move late in the meet to gain a state berth where no one expected one to come. Volpe scratched sophomore Marc Brackens from the 400 meters, an event he couldn't place high, and inserted him into the 1600 relay with sophomore Walter Jones and seniors Carlton Johnson and Luther Johnson.

"I didn't mind Coach Volpe's move at all. I'd rather be going to Austin," said Brackens after Lee posted a school record time of 3:14.5 to place second behind Permian's 3:13.7.

"I think the move did it for us. Marc ran super and so did everyone else. I didn't think we could run that kind of time, but we did it with two sophomores and I think that's special," said Volpe.

Jones produced a 48.39 leadoff split and Brackens followed with a 48.30 to move Lee into first. Carleton Johnson held the lead with a 49.21, but Luther Johnson lost the lead to Permian's Dennis Alexander despite a 48.74 split. Alexander posted a 47.6 split of his own.

ST. GERMAIN recorded a personal best of 1:55.90 to gain his 800 meter state berth, but the big story was another 4-5A dual between St. Germain and Permian's Bruce Bennett. Bennett won the 4-5A 800 title in 1982, but St. Germain took the title away from him this year.

"It's been fun racing with him and we have had some battles and I guess we will have another one next week in Austin," said St. Germain. "I got boxed in on the first lap and lost some time, but I had the lead back and just couldn't hold it."

Midland High coach Johnny Williams said, "Chuck did get boxed in, but he ran a smart race because he got out of it early by dropping back and moving to the outside on the first lap. He was spiked twice doing it, but it saved him."

Lee had a near miss at another state berth in the high jump as Michael Barton placed third with a 6-8, tying his personal best and the school record. Odessa High's Thomas Taylor won the event with a 6-10, but it took him three tries at 6-8 where he almost went out when he was ruled over the bar when the wind blew the bar off.

Had Taylor missed that jump, Barton would have gone to state by clearing his 6-8 jump on the second try. "It's disappointing not going to state, but I've never been over 6-6 in practice. Both of my 6-8 jumps have been in competition and I did about as well as I could," Barton said.

ISAAC GARNETT, who many thought had a shot at state in the shot put, finished fourth with a 57-3, not his best. He was second until the fifth of six throws when three passed him. Eric Cooper didn't gain the finals with a 52-2 in the prelims, six inches short of qualifying.

Jones produced a 10.65 in the 100 meters, but finished fifth and Wayne Brandt was sixth in the pole vault, despite matching his personal best of 13-6.

In the AA division, Reagan County's Gregg Fisher qualified for state in both hurdles, placing second twice and Stanton's Timmy Bryand won a state berth with a winning 12-6 effort in the pole vault.

Panhandle ran away with the team title with 72 points while Stinnett was a distant second with 36.

Lee's pitching still up for grabs as playoffs near

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

With the first game of the 1983 bi-district playoffs a couple of days away, Midland Lee coach Ernie Johnson hasn't decided who he will start on the mound against the Monterey Plainsmen. He wants to take one more look at his pitching staff before making the choice.

"None of them have really been throwing very good," said Johnson about his four-man staff of Craig Ray, Kerry Robertson, John Denton and Bryan Willis. "I haven't been satisifed with what I've seen this week. I'll probably decide on Monday who will throw. I might not tell him until Tuesday though."

Tuesday is as long as he can put off making the decision. The District 4-5A Rebs and District 3-5A Plainsmen have an appointment that day at Lubbock's Lowery Field at 4 p.m. There is also a return engagement on Friday at 2 p.m. at Lee Field, a possible doubleheader.

WHILE JOHNSON is still pondering his pitching situation, Montery coach Bobby Moegle has already made up his mind. "We'll go with Kevin Short," he said. "I don't really have a better pitcher (between Short and Danny Riddle), but he's probably been the best in the big games we've played. We don't have the outstanding pitcher that we've had in the past."

Facing Short will be no surprise to Johnson. "Riddle no-hit us (in the Tournament of Champions) but I think Short is the best," he said.

AS FAR as offensive production is concerned, the Rebels will have to face the two Monterey pitchers anyway. When not on the mound, Riddle is the Plainsmen's third baseman and has a season's average of .571 going into the game, 32-for-56. Short, who is also a first baseman, has a .400 average, 36-for-90.

The No. 2 hitter on the team is center fielder Billy Lance, 44-for-99 for a .444. Designated Hitter Phil Edwards is at .397 and outfielder Curtis Hogan has a .375. In all, 10 Plainsmen are above .300 to help the team's .367 average.

Lee isn't without its big hitters either. Shortstop Barry Blackwell led the Rebels and District 4-5A with a .521 average, 25-for-48 (4-5A hitting only) and provides both speed and power in the lineup. He led the team in doubles with six, triples with three, home runs with two and stolen bases with six.

Behind Blackwell is outfielder Steve Woodlee at .429, 18-for-42 (all singles); Rob Walker at .351 and Dennis Matta at .349. Three others are in the .300 range. As a team, the Rebels are taking a .337 average into the game.

Moegle has a theory on the high hitting percentages of the two teams. "We just haven't seen real good pitching," he said. "Ernie told me he's seen some good fastballs but not much breaking. The best pitching we've seen this year probably came against Midland High — Tim Davis and Jose Carrasco."

HOWEVER, BOTH coaches see pitching as the key to success.

Will it be a high scoring series?

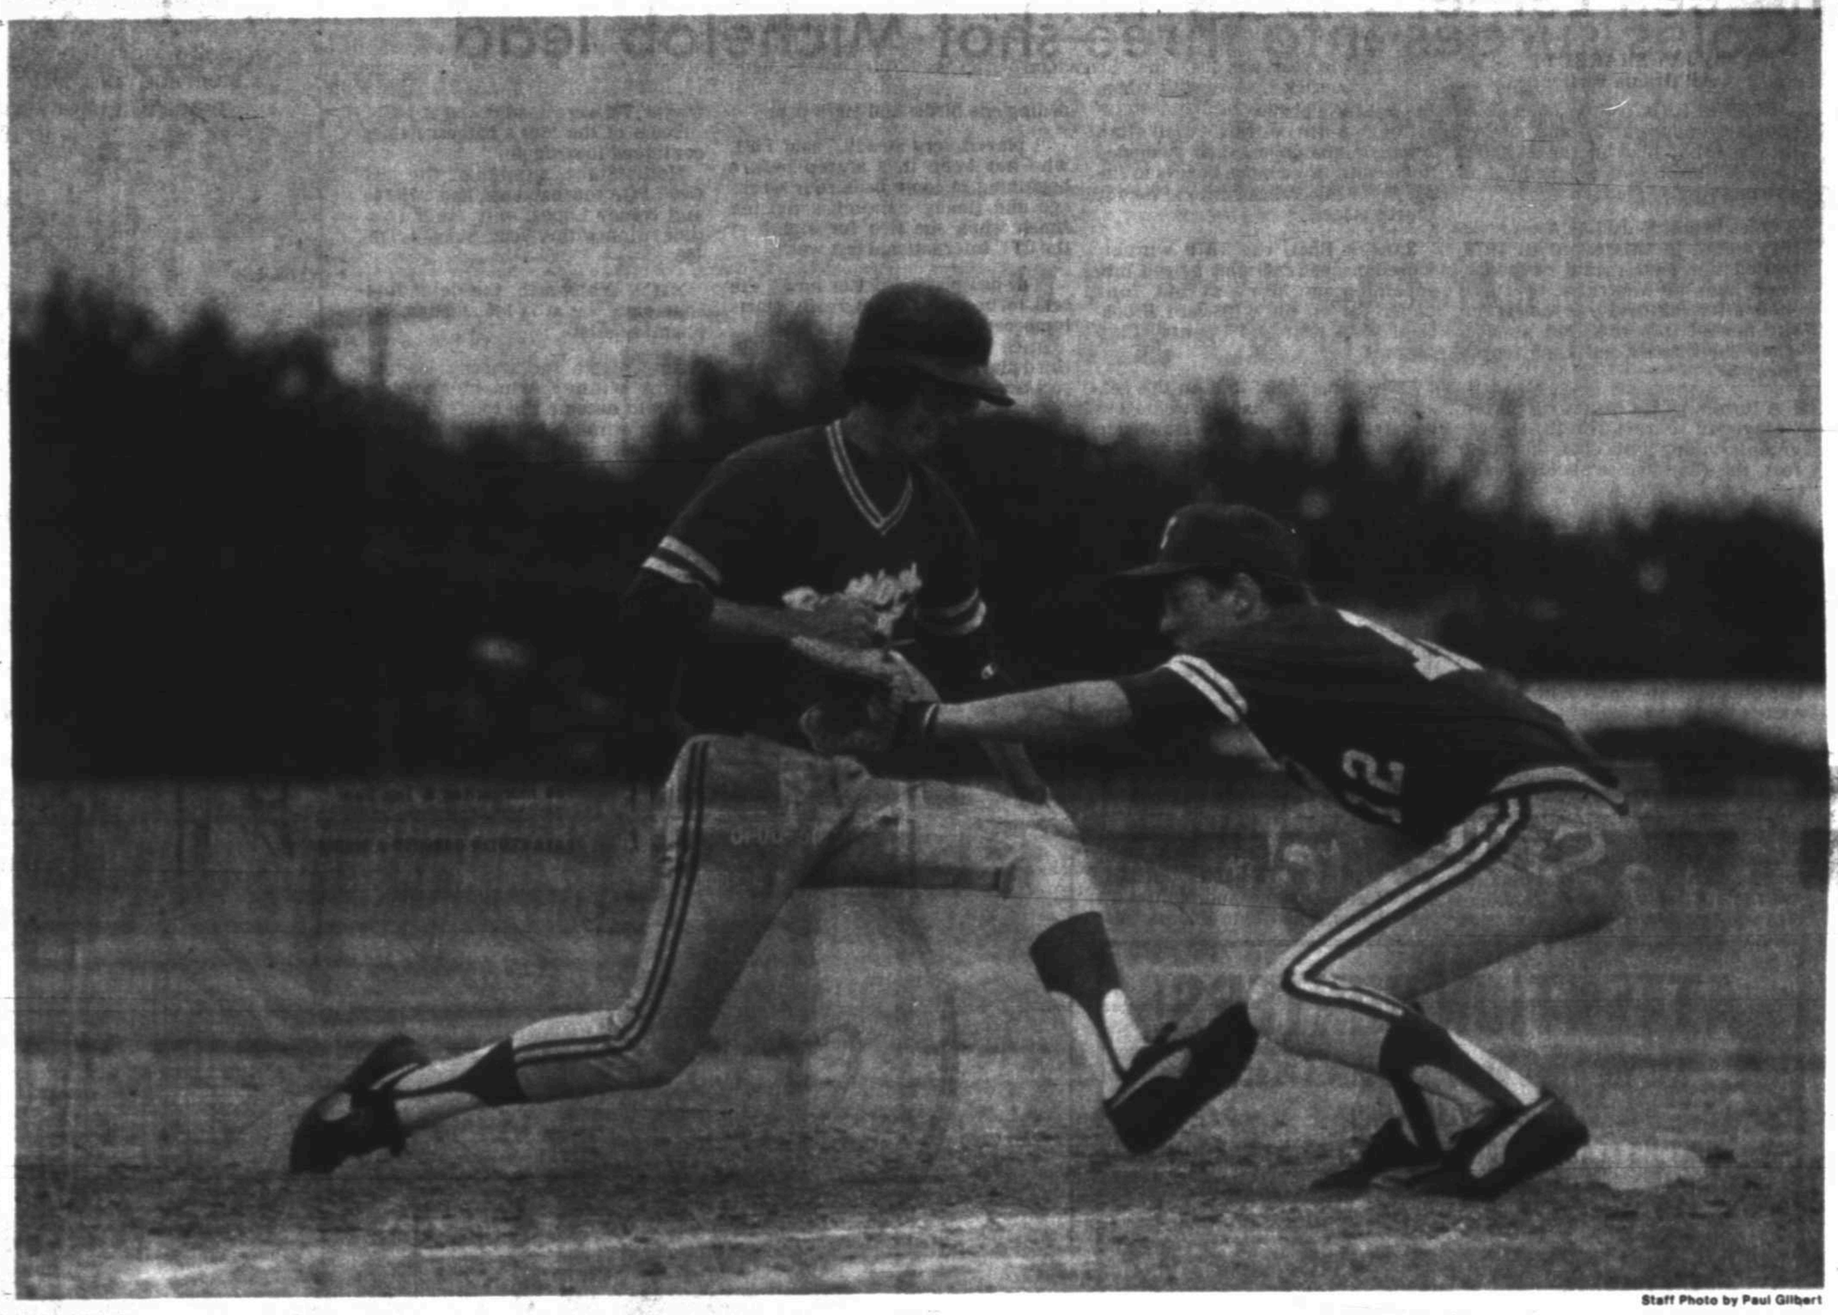

"It never has been," said Moegle. In the years we've played against each other, the good pitching has come to the top. I don't know how good Lee's pitching is now, or ours for that matter, but I would say they'll rise to the occasion and it won't be nearly as wild as it has been in district play."

"I think some runs are going to be scored," said Johnson. "If our pitching can keep their scoring down, it will give us a chance."

IN ANOTHER 3-5A vs. 4-5A matchup Tuesday, Lubbock Coronado hosts San Angelo at 4 p.m.

The Bobcats won the 4-5A with an 11-3 record and are paced by catcher Henry Klepac at the plate with a .479 average. Augie Alcala is going into the game at .384.

For Coronado, No. 2 in 3-5A, Kent Meador has a .412 average and has driven home 22 runners.

Midland Lee's Rob Walker has the ball in his glove as Midland High's Judd Ryan returns to first base on a pickoff attempt during the final 1983 regular season game for the two teams. Though the Bulldogs eventually won the game, the Rebels moved into the playoffs which will begin on Tuesday at Lubbock's Lowery Field against the Monterey Plainsmen at 4 p.m.

Sunny's Halo claims 109th Kentucky Derby

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Trainer David Cross let his 35-horse public stable dwindle to two so he could concentrate on troubled but physically talented Sunny's Halo.

Cross' devotion paid off Saturday when the colt won the $531,000 Kentucky Derby.

The impressive victory came in the rain with flashes of lightning crossing the sky. It was the kind of day that would have forced Sunny's Halo out of the swimming pool last year.

Swimming at Hollywood Park was part of Cross' rehabilitation program for the Canadian-bred colt, who suffered shin splints and a wrenched left front ankle late last year.

There was nothing wrong with Sunny's Halo on this rainy day, as he stole the thuunder from 19 other 3-year-olds, including Marfa, who has been much publicized for his occasional bad mannners on the track. Marfa behaved Saturday, but he had to settle for a fifth-place finish.

"It just wasn't our day, and a good horse beat us," said trainer Wayne Lukas, who sent out the entry of Marfa, Balboa Native and Total Departure.

SUNNY'S HALO, ridden by Eddie Delahoussaye, stalked Total Departure into the final turn, took the lead at the top of the stretch and went on to a two-length victory over Desert Wine. Caveat was another neck back, and a length in front of Slew O' Gold.

It took 2:02 1-5 for Delahoussaye to gain his second consecutive Derby victory. The 31-year-old Cajun won last year on longshot Gato del Sol. This time, he rode the second choice behind the favored Lukas entry.

"I told a bunch of other jockeys last Sunday that it was the dream of my life to win two Kentucky Derbys," said Delahoussaye, who was riding Sunny's Halo for only the second time. He got a chance to win the Derby, when David J. Foster, a 67-year-old Toronto stockbroker who owns Sunny's Halo got in touch with the jockey a week before the Arkansas Derby April 16.

"I just got it all back today," said the 48-year-old Cross, of his decision to concentrate on the rehabilitation and training of Sunny's Halo. "I'm very happy for the people in Canada, and also for the people in California and Arkansas."

Cross is a native of Victoria, British Columbia, who also is a U.S. citizen with a residence in California. Sunny's Halo's two other victories this year were at Oaklawn Park in Hot Springs, Ark. — the Rebel Handicap and the Arkansas Derby.

1906 — Short on able bodies, the Philadelphia A's inserted pitcher Chief Bender as a reserve outfielder in the sixth inning of a game against the Boston Red Sox and he hit two inside-the-park homers to spark the A's to a victory.

Diablos beat Cubs, 7-5

Bill Max went 5-for-5 and delivered a two-run single in the seventh to lift the El Paso Diablos to a 7-5 win over the Midland Cubs before 2,207 fans at Cubs Stadium Saturday night.

It also gave the Diablos the series, 3-2.

Involved in 56, 33 and 49 run games within the last week, the Diablos ran in a couple of pitching ringers to bolster a weary hill corps in the finale of the Texas League series. Rene Quinones, picked up in a trade from Juarez of the AAA Mexican League, arrived just in time to start and turn in 5 2/3 effective innings, at least, in El Paso pitching terms. Then, Jack Lazorko, obtained from the Texas Rangers' Tulsa farm club during the off season, celebrated his release from the Disabled List with 3 1/3 shutout innings to pick up the win.

DOUG WELENC, 1-4, was the loser, the victim of four unearned runs in a five-run fifth. Last year's leading winner in the Texas League with 13 gave up an infield single to Mike Felder to open the seventh.

Lefthander Neil Bryant came on in relief and after a sacrifice and a walk to Bobby Glenn Smith, gave way to Roy Soff.

Smith stole second and Max singled up the middle to plate both runs.

Don Hyman hit a two-run homer in the sixth to tie it at 5 for Midland and earlier Randy LaVigne powered his fourth homer over the centerfield fence with one on and one out in the fourth. It gave LaVigne, who is wearing new glasses, 11 rbi for the series.

HYMAN ALSO doubled home a run in the third and A.J. Hill stretched his batting streak to 22 games with a two-out double in the fourth. Hill has hit safely in every game in which he has batted this season.

For the Cubs it was a long night of frustration as Quinones, who was 14-8 for the Mexican League champions last year, and Lazoroko combined to hold Midland to six hits. The Diablos came up with three double plays, two with runners on second base.

Midland led 2-0, going into the fifth, when the Diablos, with the help of two errors, erupted for five runs with Felder singling home one run, Juan Castillo two more and Max and CArlos Ponce knocking in one each with hits.

The Cubs now go on a 10-game road swing through the East, facing Tulsa and then Shreveport starting Monday. When the Cubs return home, it will be against Tulsa and Shreveport.

Greenwood, Stanton capture state honors

AUSTIN — Greenwood's Renvy Evans captured second in the 100 meter hurdles and fourth in the triple jump at the Girl's State High School track meet here Saturday.

Evans' ran the 100 hurdles in 14.8 finishing second to Dwana West of Klondike (14.3). In the triple jump Evans hit 36-feet even. Jonell Miles of Prarie won the event with a 37-foot-¼-inch jump.

The 800 meter relay was one of the closest and most exciting races of the day as the Rangers' finished two seconds behind Carlisle. Unfortunately that was only good enough for sixth place.

Mary Tollison of Stanton finished fourth in the 3200 meters, covering the grueling distance in 12:21.8.

Tewell leads favored Trevino in Houston by three

THE WOODLANDS, Texas (AP) - Doug Tewell, who started the day tied for 10th place, fired a six-under-par 65 Saturday to overtake crowd favorite Lee Trevino and move into a one-stroke lead after three rounds of the $400,000 Houston Coca Cola Open.

Tewell, winless on the PGA tour for three years, was five shots behind Trevino at the start of the third round but shot seven birdies and only one bogey for the lowest 18-hole score of the tournament.

Trevino, drawing the biggest gallery, lost the lead with his second bogey of the day at No.15 just as Tewell was beginning a charge with birdie putts on 15, 16 and 17 to go seven under par for the tournament with a 206 three-round total. He shot 69 and 72 in the first two rounds.

Trevino, trying to win his first tournament in two years, finished with an even-par 71 for a 207 total and second place.

John Cook, who started the day at two under par, shot a third round 68 for a 208 and third place.

Tewell made his only bad drive of the day on 18, where he eventually two-putted to save par.The only other blemish on his round came at No.8 when Tewell hit into a bunker, pitched up 10 feet short and two putted for a bogey.

Trevino, who started the day with a two-stroke lead, was locked in a battle with Jim Nelford after nine holes, each shooting six under par for the tournament.

Trevino bogeyed the par 4, 426-yard No.8 hole to drop to five under, whileNelford birdied the hole to take a one shot lead in the tournament.

Nelford shot a bogey on No.8 and both golfers birdied the ninth hole to make the turn at six under.

Nelford fell off the pace with a bogey on 13 and finished the round with an even-par 71 for a 209 total, three shots off the pace in fourth place.

David Graham, who started the day in a four-way tie for second place, shot a frustrating nine on the par 5 first hole, making trips into the woods, the rough and a sand trap before two-putting.

Despite the rugged start, Graham played the rest of the front nine in even par and he played sub-par golf on the backside for a 73 and a two-under par 211 for the tournament.

The third-round leader has won the Houston Open in three of the last four years. The exception was last year, when Bob Shearer led after three rounds by five strokes but eventually lost to Ed Sneed in a sudden-death playoff.

Braves post easy win over Astros

National League

ATLANTA — Bruce Benedict had three hits and three runs batted in and Bob Horner homered as Pascual Perez and the Atlanta Braves routed the Houston Astros 10-1 Saturday.

Perez, 5-0, gave up six hits, walked two and struck out four in seven innings before Terry Forster finished up. Perez had been sidelined since April 26 with a staph infection of the forehead.

The Braves, who had 12 hits off three Houston pitchers, scored all their runs in the first five innings. Horner hit his seventh homer in the second inning and the Braves chased Joe Niekro, 1-3, with a four-run third inning, two of the runs scoring on Benedict's bases-loaded single.

Houston scored in the fourth on an RBI single by Bill Doran. Atlanta added a run in the fourth on a triple by Ramirez and catcher Alan Ashby's error.

The Braves added four runs in the fifth on RBI singles by Benedict and Brett Butler, a run-scoring grounder by Perez and an error by left fielder Jose Cruz.

Reds 7, Mets 5

NEW YORK — Sizzling Johnny Bench cracked a triple and two singles and drove in a pair of runs and the Cincinnati Reds survived late flurries by New York to beat the Mets 7-5.

Bench, who has collected 15 hits in his last 27 at-bats for a .556 average over seven games, supported winner Bruce Berenyi, 3-2, with his latest solid hitting performance.

Berenyi shut out the Mets for seven innings before leaving in the midst of a three-run rally in the eighth. Mookie Wilson singled home the first run and two more came in on George Foster's infield single and Danny Heep's sacrifice fly.

Reliever Tom Hume posted his fifth save, but not before giving up Mike Jorgenson's two-run homer in the ninth.

Giants 5, Pirates 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Darrell Evans belted three hits, including his fourth homer of the season, and Fred Breining pitched a five-hitter, leading the San Francisco Giants past the Pittsburgh Pirates 5-1.

The victory was the fourth in a row for the Giants, while the Pirates lost for the fourth straight time. Breining, 3-3, struck out six and walked one.

Expos 3, Phillies 2

MONTREAL — Tim Raines singled home Montreal's winning run with two out in the ninth inning and Bill Gullickson tossed a four-hitter as the Expos battled back for a 3-2 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Bobby Ramos, playing for injured catcher Gary Carter, was hit by a pitch by Porfi Altamirano, 1-1, with one out in the ninth. Ramos went to second when Brian Little beat out a bunt single. Doug Flynn ran for Ramos, went to third on a grounder by Jim Wohlford and scored on Raines' single to center off Sid Monge.

Coles surges into three-shot Michelob lead

ROSWELL, Ga. (AP) — Janet Coles shot a 2-under-par 70 and surged into a 3-shot lead in the $150,000 Lady Michelob golf tournament in swirling winds Saturday.

Coles, whose only LPGA tour victory came in this event in 1978, trailed her first round co-leader, Jane Lock of Australia, by three shots after the first four holes. But she moved into the lead at No.9 when she birdied and Lock took a bogey 5.

A former UCLA basketball player, Coles had a deft touch on the greens, sinking putts of 20, 25 and 40 feet, the first two to save par and the last for a birdie.

Lock, a three-time Australian Amateur champion, then struggled home with three more bogeys to finish at 75-142, falling into a tie for fourth place.

Sandra Post, the 1979 winner, scored a steady 69 and moved into second place alone at 140, four under par on the 6,123-yard Brookfield West Golf and Country Club course.

Coles, who ranks 13th on this season's money list, had three bogeys and four birdies on the front side and retained her lead at the turn by playing solid golf on the back, recording one birdie and eight pars.

"I played very steady," said Post, who has been in a slump before beginning to come back four weeks ago and finally claiming a top ten finish when she tied for eighth at the CPC International last week.

"I'm just playing better now," she said. "The tournament really starts tomorrow. Sunday is Sunday."

Alice Miller remained lodged in third place alone for the second consecutive day, shooting a 73-141.

Lock was tied for fourth place at 142 with Debbie Austin, who shot 70.

Marty Dickerson, 72, and Mary Dwyer, 73, were deadlocked at 143.

Some of the tour's biggest names continued to struggle.

Hollis Stacy, winner of the last two LPGA tournaments, had a 73-145 and Nancy Lopez, only other two-time winner this year, skied to 78-150.

Kathy Whitworth, the defending champion, was at 71-146 and Jan Stephenson 74-146.

Amy Alcott, the season's leading money winner, who needs only $5,010 to become the tour's sixth $1 million winner, ballooned to a 78-147, apparently having trouble with an injured left hand.

Islanders in Stanley Cup

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — Mike Bossy used his magical scoring touch to collect four goals Saturday night, leading the New York Islanders into the Stanley Cup finals with an 8-4 rout of the Boston Bruins.

The Islanders, who eliminated Boston in six games, will continue their quest for a fourth consecutive National Hockey League championship Tuesday night in Edmonton against the Oilers.

Bossy, who has scored at least 50 goals in each of his NHL seasons and was the 1982 playoff Most Valuable Player, struck for his second hat trick in this series and third since postseason play began. He scored three times in the second period as the Islanders blew open a tight game.

His hat trick tied a Stanley Cup record set by Edmonton's Mark Messier earlier this spring.

Bossy's fifth career playoff hat trick moved him into second place on the all-time list behind Maurice Richard of Montreal, who had seven. Bossy stands third in postseason goals with 67 in 86 games. Richard had 82 in 133 games and Montreal's Jean Beliveau had 79 in 162 contests.

Mission Country Club.

Never has so much been so easy to attain.

The most beautiful, well-planned, comprehensive golf and country club in West Texas is on its way toward completion. And now, for a limited time and as little as $1500 down, you can be on your way to enjoying the most desirable membership opportunity Midland-Odessa has ever seen.

With its man-made lakes, waterfall, hundreds of trees, and magnificent clubhouse, Mission Country Club is destined to be one of the most dramatic social and athletic gathering places within the Permian Basin.

As part of Mission Dorado, a totally planned residential, commercial and business center sprawling over 2,262 acres, Mission Country Club has been carefully designed to provide an open and comfortable center of activity for members and their families.

Its clubhouse was conceived by world-famous architect O'Neil Ford. And in addition to an excellent championship golf course, Mission Country Club's plans also include a separate Athletic Center, with tennis, racquetball, steam room, exercise room and swimming pool.

Mission Country Club's new 18 hole course is opening in July of this year. An initial payment of $1500 now will secure your private or corporate membership, and entitle you to the immediate use of all existing facilities. Once your initial corporate membership has been acquired, subsequent memberships will be available at a substantial reduction.

Mission Country Club promises to be the most exciting country club in our part of the state. Call us today, or take Highway 80, then exit north to Old Bankhead Highway.

There's never been anything like it. And there's never been a better way to attain such a quality membership.

MISSION COUNTRY CLUB
Let it be yours.

Bosox score first shutout

American League

BOSTON — Dwight Evans and Jim Rice belted consecutive homers in the third inning and Tony Armas hit a grand-slam to cap a five-run seventh as the Boston Red Sox routed Seattle 8-0 behind the five-hit pitching of rookie Mike Brown.

With their fifth consecutive victory and 10th in 12 games, the Red Sox improved their record to 15-9 and retained their lead in the American League East.

Brown, 2-2, walked three and struck out two en route to Boston's first shutout of the season.

Blue Jays 7, Royals 4

TORONTO — Willie Upshaw drove in four runs, three with a homer to highlight Toronto's six-run second inning that carried the Blue Jays to a 7-4 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

One-out singles by Ernie Whitt and Rance Mulliniks off Dennis Leonard, 3-3, started the big burst. Jesse Barfield's double, Alfredo Griffin's single and Dave Collins' single each drove in one run before Upshaw hit his sixth homer of the season, over the right-center field fence.

George Brett went 3-for-5 with four RBI to extend his hitting streak to 18 games and rise his batting average to .466.

Orioles 8, A's 6

BALTIMORE — Ken Singleton drove in three runs with a homer and a single and Rick Dempsey added a solo home run as the Baltimore Orioles rallied to beat the Oakland A's 8-6.

Singleton hit a two-run homer in a four-run second inning and put Baltimore ahead 5-4 with a single in the third off Chris Codiroli, 3-2.

Oakland scored three runs in the first off Mike Flanagan, 5-0, when Jeff Burroughs hit an RBI double and Kelvin Moore rapped a two-run single.

Angels 6, Tigers 5

DETROIT — Doug DeCinces' one-out home run in the 12th inning gave the California Angels a 6-5 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Fred Lynn led off the 12th with a single but was thrown out trying to steal second. Then DeCinces sent a 2-0 pitch from reliever Aurelio Lopez, 1-1, into the upper deck in left field. Luis Sanchez, 3-1, was the winner in relief.

The Tigers got solo homers from Lou Whitaker in the first inning, John Wockenfuss in the second and Chet Lemon in the fifth. Tim Foli and Bob Boone had RBI singles for the Angels in the second inning and Brian Downing had an RBI-single and Boone a sacrifice fly in the fourth.

White Sox 4, Indians 3

CHICAGO — Jerry Dybzinski's two-run triple in the second inning and right fielder Harold Baines' spectacular catch led Chicago to a 4-3 victory over the Cleveland Indians, the fourth consecutive victory for the White Sox.

Dybzinski's triple followed a single by Mark Hill and a double by Lorenzo Gray. The former Cleveland shortstop scored the third run of the inning on a single by Rudy Law to give Chicago a 4-0 lead. Juan Eichelberger, 0-1, was the loser in his first start for Cleveland.

The Indians got a run in the third on a double by Ron Hassey and a single by Mike Fischlin. They then collected five hits in the fourth off LaMarr Hoyt, 2-4, but were held to two runs by Baines' play.

Yankees 8, Twins 7

MINNEAPOLIS — Rick Cerone's three-run homer capped a five-run eighth inning as the New York Yankees came from behind to gain an 8-7 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Reliever George Frazier, 1-1, earned the victory after taking over for Dave Righetti in the sixth. Goose Gossage put down a Minnesota rally in the ninth after the Twins scored runs on Darrell Brown's RBI double and Gary Ward's run-scoring grounder to gain his second save.

Sunny's Halo with Eddie Delahoussaye up, wins the Kentucky Derby in the rain Saturday at Churchill Downs. Placing second was Desert Wine (left) with Chris McCarron up.

Sunny's Halo will run for second jewell

SUNNY'S HALO was the least-raced 3-year-old to win the Derby since Jet Pilot did it in 1947.

The lightly raced and obviously fresh-and-fit colt will now head for the 1 3-16 mile Preakness May 21 at Pimlico. Should he win that and move within a step of the Triple Crown, Cross and Foster will have a major decision to make, one Cross would like to think has already been made.

Cross said Sunny's Halo would not start in the 1¼-mile Belmont Stakes June 11 at Belmont Park.

"I just don't believe in running a horse a mile and half in June with 126 pounds up," he said. But he admitted that Foster could change his mind with a Triple Crown on the line.

It won't be Delahoussaye's decision, but in the opinion of the jockey, "I think we've got a good chance of winning the Triple Crown."

But the Preakness and the Belmont are in the future. Saturday was a time for Foster, Delahoussaye and Cross to bask in the colt's victory.

BATTLE SCENE

Cubs Stadium reclaims place

One couldn't help feel a twinge of jealousy. Was Dudley Field, the jai lai court to the west, stealing Midland's thunder? Had the Tall City's Cubs Stadium lost its touch?

It was with a twinge of envy that the Diablos' 35-21 affair with Beaumont was recited here for Midland fans. A sincere effort was made, but I'm afraid the envy showed through.

But after Thursday night, all is right with the world. It is once again our oyster. Calls and inquiries have poured in from near and far. Welcome back to to Ebbets Field West.

They all want to know about it. Well, more accurately, they want to be sure somebody isn't pulling their leg. Texans, after all, have been known to boast.

"HELLO, THIS is Springfield, Mass. I'm with the Union-Leader. Is this where they...."

That's usually when the laughing begins. It's maybe five minutes before they regain their composure. I try not to let the irritation show. The calls are handled with as much dignity and solemnity as the circumstances demand. Maybe, a giggle or two slips out, but it is blamed on mesquite fever, a spring malady in Texas.

In answer to the juvenile attempts to be funny, it is patiently explained, that, "No, this was not a YMCA Pee Wee League game or a gang of Little Leaguers who had gone wild on loco weed." This, it is emphasized sternly, was a real, genuine, sure enough professional baseball game...and that's professional as in the players receive legal tender for services rendered.

It is then endeavored to explain, above the wisecracks, how something like 18-18 after three innings could actually happen beyond your local recreational slow pitch softball league. "Hey, slow pitch players would keel over in exhaustion, if they had to do all that base running." Sometimes the patience wears thin. "I mean we're talking about nine homers, 10 or 12 doubles and the outfielders who have to chase those things to the fence."

IT IS explained about the wind, 30 to 40 mph, the altitude, the thin air and the drought. The caller asks about Pitcher Mark Effrig and those 11 runs in one inning and he is assured that El Paso Manager Tony Muser is not the Marquis De Sade in flannels and that he had gone through a week when the team's earned-run-average exceeded 10 with a shorthanded staff.

"Effrig's earned run average? Well, it was 23.00 going into the game and it was 47.00 when he left, but...." more laughter.

More jokes. "No, Maxfli centers didn't wind up in Reach, Wilson, Spaulding, or whatever, baseballs by mistake."

TEXAS LEAGUE records blew away like tumbleweeds in a sandstorm in those first three innings. After all, the score was 18-18.

Midland scored 11 runs on 10 hits in the first and El Paso scored 13 runs on 13 hits in the second inning.

While emphasizing the gravity of the occasion, it is admitted that the situation was not devoid of humor.

American League

BOSTON — Dwight Evans and Jim Rice belted consecutive homers in the third inning and Tony Armas hit a grand-slam to cap a five-run seventh as the Boston Red Sox routed Seattle 8-0 behind the five-hit pitching of rookie Mike Brown.

With their fifth consecutive victory and 10th in 12 games, the Red Sox improved their record to 15-9 and retained their lead in the American League East.

Brown, 2-2, walked three and struck out two en route to Boston's first shutout of the season.

Blue Jays 7, Royals 4

TORONTO — Willie Upshaw drove in four runs, three with a homer to highlight Toronto's six-run second inning that carried the Blue Jays to a 7-4 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

One-out singles by Ernie Whitt and Rance Mulliniks off Dennis Leonard, 3-3, started the big burst. Jesse Barfield's double, Alfredo Griffin's single and Dave Collins' single each drove in one run before Upshaw hit his sixth homer of the season, over the right-center field fence.

George Brett went 3-for-5 with four RBI to extend his hitting streak to 18 games and rise his batting average to .466.

Orioles 8, A's 6

BALTIMORE — Ken Singleton drove in three runs with a homer and a single and Rick Dempsey added a solo home run as the Baltimore Orioles rallied to beat the Oakland A's 8-6.

Singleton hit a two-run homer in a four-run second inning and put Baltimore ahead 5-4 with a single in the third off Chris Codiroli, 3-2.

Oakland scored three runs in the first off Mike Flanagan, 5-0, when Jeff Burroughs hit an RBI double and Kelvin Moore rapped a two-run single.

Angels 6, Tigers 5

DETROIT — Doug DeCinces' one-out home run in the 12th inning gave the California Angels a 6-5 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Fred Lynn led off the 12th with a single but was thrown out trying to steal second. Then DeCinces sent a 2-0 pitch from reliever Aurelio Lopez, 1-1, into the upper deck in left field. Luis Sanchez, 3-1, was the winner in relief.

The Tigers got solo homers from Lou Whitaker in the first inning, John Wockenfuss in the second and Chet Lemon in the fifth. Tim Foli and Bob Boone had RBI singles for the Angels in the second inning and Brian Downing had an RBI-single and Boone a sacrifice fly in the fourth.

White Sox 4, Indians 3

CHICAGO — Jerry Dybzinski's two-run triple in the second inning and right fielder Harold Baines' spectacular catch led Chicago to a 4-3 victory over the Cleveland Indians, the fourth consecutive victory for the White Sox.

Dybzinski's triple followed a single by Mark Hill and a double by Lorenzo Gray. The former Cleveland shortstop scored the third run of the inning on a single by Rudy Law to give Chicago a 4-0 lead. Juan Eichelberger, 0-1, was the loser in his first start for Cleveland.

The Indians got a run in the third on a double by Ron Hassey and a single by Mike Fischlin. They then collected five hits in the fourth off LaMarr Hoyt, 2-4, but were held to two runs by Baines' play.

Yankees 8, Twins 7

MINNEAPOLIS — Rick Cerone's three-run homer capped a five-run eighth inning as the New York Yankees came from behind to gain an 8-7 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Reliever George Frazier, 1-1, earned the victory after taking over for Dave Righetti in the sixth. Goose Gossage put down a Minnesota rally in the ninth after the Twins scored runs on Darrell Brown's RBI double and Gary Ward's run-scoring grounder to gain his second save.

Sunny's Halo with Eddie Delahoussaye up, wins the Kentucky Derby in the rain Saturday at Churchill Downs. Placing second was Desert Wine (left) with Chris McCarron up.

Sunny's Halo will run for second jewell

SUNNY'S HALO was the least-raced 3-year-old to win the Derby since Jet Pilot did it in 1947.

The lightly raced and obviously fresh-and-fit colt will now head for the 1 3-16 mile Preakness May 21 at Pimlico. Should he win that and move within a step of the Triple Crown, Cross and Foster will have a major decision to make, one Cross would like to think has already been made.

Cross said Sunny's Halo would not start in the 1½-mile Belmont Stakes June 11 at Belmont Park.

"I just don't believe in running a horse a mile and half in June with 126 pounds up," he said. But he admitted that Foster could change his mind with a Triple Crown on the line.

It won't be Delahoussaye's decision, but in the opinion of the jockey, "I think we've got a good chance of winning the Triple Crown."

But the Preakness and the Belmont are in the future. Saturday was a time for Foster, Delahoussaye and Cross to bask in the colt's victory.

BATTLE SCENE

Cubs Stadium reclaims place

One couldn't help feel a twinge of jealousy. Was Dudley Field, the jai lai court to the west, stealing Midland's thunder? Had the Tall City's Cubs Stadium lost its touch?

It was with a twinge of envy that the Diablos' 35-21 affair with Beaumont was recited here for Midland fans. A sincere effort was made, but I'm afraid the envy showed through.

But after Thursday night, all is right with the world. It is once again our oyster. Calls and inquiries have poured in from near and far. Welcome back to to Ebbets Field West.

They all want to know about it. Well, more accurately, they want to be sure somebody isn't pulling their leg. Texans, after all, have been known to boast.

"HELLO, THIS is Springfield, Mass. I'm with the Union-Leader. Is this where they...."

That's usually when the laughing begins. It's maybe five minutes before they regain their composure. I try not to let the irritation show. The calls are handled with as much dignity and solemnity as the circumstances demand. Maybe, a giggle or two slips out, but it is blamed on mesquite fever, a spring malady in Texas.

In answer to the juvenile attempts to be funny, it is patiently explained, that, "No, this was not a YMCA Pee Wee League game or a gang of Little Leaguers who had gone wild on loco weed." This, it is emphasized sternly, was a real, genuine, sure enough professional baseball game...and that's professional as in the players receive legal tender for services rendered.

It is then endeavored to explain, above the wisecracks, how something like 18-18 after three innings could actually happen beyond your local recreational slow pitch softball league. "Hey, slow pitch players would keel over in exhaustion, if they had to do all that base running." Sometimes the patience wears thin. "I mean we're talking about nine homers, 10 or 12 doubles and the outfielders who have to chase those things to the fence."

IT IS explained about the wind, 30 to 40 mph, the altitude, the thin air and the drought. The caller asks about Pitcher Mark Effrig and those 11 runs in one inning and he is assured that El Paso Manager Tony Muser is not the Marquis De Sade in flannels and that he had gone through a week when the team's earned-run-average exceeded 10 with a shorthanded staff.

"Effrig's earned run average? Well, it was 23.00 going into the game and it was 47.00 when he left, but...." more laughter.

More jokes. "No, Maxfli centers didn't wind up in Reach, Wilson, Spaulding, or whatever, baseballs by mistake."

TEXAS LEAGUE records blew away like tumbleweeds in a sandstorm in those first three innings. After all, the score was 18-18.

Midland scored 11 runs on 10 hits in the first and El Paso scored 13 runs on 13 hits in the second inning.

While emphasizing the gravity of the occasion, it is admitted that the situation was not devoid of humor.

Sporting success

During the past couple of years or so, the Midland College Chaparrals have carved out a well-deserved reputation in basketball circles, winning the coveted national junior college championship a year ago and strongly threatening again this season. The Chaps are deserving of all the attention they've received lately, but they're not the only quality athletes at Midland College.

That fact was highlighted this week at the annual All-Sports Banquet in Chaparral Center as the college's athletes were honored.

All too often athletes who pay their dues throughout each season, but who fail to score enough points or otherwise cast themselves into the limelight are overlooked and seemingly forgotten while the "stars" receive all the attention.

Team sports particularly suffer from that shortcoming. To a degree, that's the nature of the beast. Every player cannot score the winning point. Every player cannot stand in the limelight for consistently performing above the abilities of others.

But every player who contributes to a team's overall success should be recognized for the role he or she played. That was the purpose of the All-Sports Banquet, to recognize the various little contributions which culminated in overall success for Midland College's athletes this season and, in some instances, in seasons past.

It's not said nearly often enough, but we are appreciative of the efforts of all Midland College athletes. Those efforts sometimes bring personal fame and fulfillment to the athletes, but on more occasions than the players are aware, they bring pride to a large spectrum of Midlanders.

When we're out and about in the state, those players make us proud to say "we're from Midland!"

For being there ...

It has been said that instant availability without continuous presence is probably the best role a mother can play. And that description adequately portrays the demands placed upon the loving, caring individuals today is set aside to honor.

Today, the thousands of mothers in Midland wil be honored along with millions of other women throughout the United States. Mother's Day began in 1907 in Grafton, W. Va. with a small memorial service for the mother of Anna M. Jarvis. Through Miss Jarvis' efforts, Philadelphia declared a day in May of 1908 as Mother's Day. Six years later, President Woodrow Wilson signed a proclamation establishing National Mother's Day.

The day is important because it sets aside time for families to concentrate on the loving thoughtfulness showered upon them by one who unselfishly gives for the benefit of others and asks nothing in return but our love.

To the mothers of Midland, thanks for being there when we needed you.

Belated action

Three and a half years after making full use of left-wing elements in its drive to power, the government of the Ayatollah Khomeini is now outlawing the Communist Party in Iran and expelling 18 or more Soviet officials for spying.

The purpose of this crackdown is lost somewhere in the convoluted mentalities of the people who make up the leadership of the Islamic Republic. One thing is certain, however: The anti-Red campaign is no gesture of understanding toward nations of the West which recently have found it necessary to kick out Russian diplomats.

The ayatollah showed no hesitation in channeling the Iranian Communists' hatred of Americans into the fervor which led to his takeover of the government. And while some leftist fringe groups made trouble for the established order and were liquidated, the official Communist Party continued to enjoy legal status.

For the Iranians to announce that they just now have discovered that the Communists are engaging in espionage and sabotage is not very convincing. Nor is their belated action assured of any success. The Communists have had all the time they need to get their apparatus functioning underground, awaiting the signal from across the border.

The Free World, meanwhile, can only watch developments in Iran and judge the anti-Red campaign for what it is — a public performance of some kind. And an ironic one, at that.

Another View:

The awful news

The nation's economic news is the worst in years to a select circle of Americans — the pundits and politicos who have been ranting about "Reagan's recession."

Inflation and interest rates have reached surprisingly low levels. The stock market is healthy. Productivity in nonfarm business went up at an annual rate of 4.8 percent in the first quarter. That is the best showing in two years.

"The rise in productivity is a good sign because it means we are starting to improve our international competitiveness, which will eventually create more jobs," said David Ernest, vice president of Evans Economics Inc., a Washington forecasting firm.

That must be the worst news of all to the kind of people who have been "viewing with alarm" ever since economic indicators began to rise.

The viewing with alarm people undoubtedly have a plan ready to put into action to reverse the economic upswing. In Congress, in the bureaucracies, in the states, in the layers of special interest groups dedicated to ever-bigger, ever-costlier government, the plan is obvious: spend more, tax more.

In other words, do the same things that derailed the economy in the first place. Then there will be a mounting crisis. Then there will be more government intervention in the people's lives and the economy. Then the American people can be herded farther on down the road to serfdom.

At present it looks as though that might not happen. Things are getting better. The outlook for freedom and prosperity is improving. To the bigger government, bigger tax and bigger spending crowd, that is terrible news.

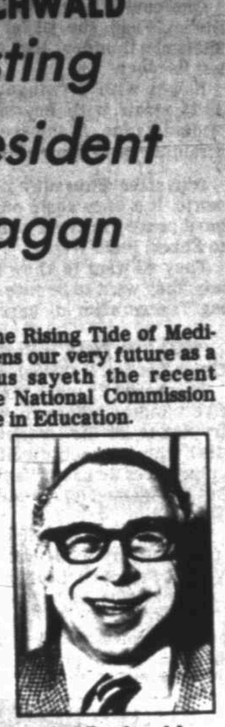

— The Indianapolis Star

ART BUCHWALD

Testing President Reagan

"The Rising Tide of Mediocrity threatens our very future as a nation." Thus sayeth the recent report by the National Commission on Excellence in Education.

Art Buchwald

Here are a few statistics they uncovered. There are 23 million functionally illiterate adults in the country, and 13 percent of all 17-year-olds cannot read, write or comprehend. The average teacher in America makes $17,000 a year and must moonlight to stay out of the poorhouse. There are severe shortages of instructors in math, science and foreign languages. Half of those now teaching these subjects are not qualified to do so.

President Reagan, in his radio address, blames the U.S. government's role in the past 20 years for the country's educational problems. If parents would just get involved in their children's learning process, and we turned our education back to the local communities all would be well again, the president said. He was adamant that the government not increase its activities in education for any reason.

If anyone needs remedial education right now, it's the president of the United States.

"All right, Mr. President. Here is a graph. The red line shows where the Soviets are in education, and the blue line shows where we are. Note the blue line is going down every year and the red line is going up. What does that mean for the nation?"

"American parents aren't doing their job."

"It could mean that. It also could mean the country is not spending enough on education to meet the Soviet threat. Now, Mr. President, here is another chart. It indicates that if we keep turning out people not equipped in the sciences, commerce, or technology, we will soon be overtaken by our competitors throughout the world. As the nation's leader, what should you do about it?"

"Work for a constitutional amendment to bring back prayers in the schools."

"I'm not certain that's the correct answer. Would you consider raising teachers' salaries and getting more qualified instructors to make sure our students are equipped to deal with the tasks that lie ahead?"

"Are you crazy? I need every dollar I can get for defense. Bigger budgets for education are not the answer."

"But where are you going to get the people to build your weapons and learn how to use them if they are illiterate?"

"I don't know the answer to that one. Go on to the next question."

"Do you know what it costs the country in unemployment, welfare, and crime because Americans can't read and write?"

"I didn't know I was supposed to study that."

"Don't you think it's your duty as president to be concerned about the quality of education in the United States? Isn't it a question of national security and survival?"

"I've advocated tax breaks for parents who want to send their kids to private schools."

"That isn't the right answer, Mr. President. You have to consider the illiteracy bomb in this country with the same seriousness you consider the threat from Central America."

"You don't expect me to appear before a joint session of Congress just because Americans can't read and write?"

"It could eventually become a bigger threat than El Salvador."

"If I did that, Congress would take away my tax cut for this year. Are you seriously asking me to choose between the education of our children and a 10 percent tax cut?"

"Mr. President, your homework assignment was to read the report of the National Commission on Excellence in Education last night. Apparently you watched television instead."

"It's not my fault. I didn't know I was going to have a test today."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Guerrillas gaining support

WASHINGTON — While Congress debates the Reagan administration's clandestine operations in Nicaragua, the American public is beset by conflicting information about exactly what is going on there.

Jack Anderson

Are the CIA-supported anti-Sandinista guerrillas a truly popular movement or merely ex-National Guardsmen of the hated Somoza regime attempting a comeback? Are the "contras" — the anti-government rebels — effective freedom fighters? Or is the United States backing a rag-tag bunch of right-wing losers.

To get some reliable, first-hand answers to these crucial questions, I sent my associate Jon Lee Anderson to the troubled region. He has just returned from a week-long foray into northern Nicaragua with anti-Sandinista guerrillas. They belong to the Nicaraguan Democratic Forces (FDN), the major group of U.S.-supported insurgents.

My associate traveled with a well-armed, 50-member guerrilla band led by a commander whose nom de guerre is El Corrion — The Sparrow. Their base camp was deep in the rugged mountains of Nicaragua's Nueva Segovia province, near the Honduran border.

It quickly became obvious that the guerrillas had the support of the populace. They were fed and protected by local peasants at every step. Traveling on foot, and only at night, to avoid detection by government troops, the guerrillas spent the days hiding out in "safe houses," often within shouting distance of government-held towns. If the peasants had wanted to betray them, it would have been a simple matter to tip off the Sandinista militia to their hiding places.

The peasants also provided The Sparrow with up-to-the-minute intelligence on the whereabouts, movement and strength of the Sandinista forces. It is in effect a mirror image of the situation four years ago, when Somoza's National Guard held the towns and the Sandinista revolutionaries controlled the countryside with the enthusiastic support of the populace.

The anti-Sandinista guerrillas' military prowess is not so clear-cut. My associate discovered this to his dismay when he accompanied The Sparrow's band on a planned predawn ambush of government troop carriers along a country road.

Instead of surprising the Sandinistas, the guerrillas were themselves surprised by sniper fire from hilltop positions above them and were forced to pull out. The retreat was carried out skillfully, however, and two nights later the guerrillas avenged their defeat with an attack on the hilltop snipers' nests. The FDN commandos treated the snipers to a half-hour barrage of rockets, grenades and machinegun fire, before returning satisfied to their base camp.

Most of the FDN guerrillas were local peasants, not Somocista exiles. But there were also former National Guardsmen, and they tend to be in positions of command because of their military experience.

Still, the core of The Sparrow's group consisted of locally recruited peasants. In fact, on my associate's last day with the rebel band, he witnessed the arrival of 50 new recruits, all of them peasants from the neighboring province of Madriz.

One of the new recruits was a defecting Sandinista army instructor. There were other ex-Sandinistas in the guerrilla troop. One was Dunia, a star graduate of the Sandinistas' post-revolution literacy campaign begun in 1980. Dunia did so well she was rewarded with a junket to Cuba. She is now the camp medic for The Sparrow's band.

The rebels and their non-combatant collaborators cited a variety of reasons for their disenchantment with the Sandinistas: enforced food rationing, expropriation of the farmers' markets, enforced organization of peasant co-ops, the Sandinistas' anti-religious policies and harassment of the Catholic Church.

The Sandinistas themselves indirectly aided the guerrillas' recruitment of at least a dozen of the new arrivals. They said they had been under increasing pressure to join the militia. Forced to take sides, they chose the "contras."

Still, it was not an easy choice for many. They expressed genuine anguish at being forced — one way or another — to fight against fellow Nicaraguans. It is truly a brothers' war. They know that but for a bit of luck or a slight change in circumstances, they might have been dragooned into the militia — and be sitting in the government trucks the guerrillas ambush.

"We don't want to fight our Nicaraguan brothers," they said. The ones they're after are the Sandinista leaders and their Cuban, East German, Bulgarian and other foreign advisers.

The guerrillas were reluctant to talk about who trained them and where their weapons come from. The rank-and-file soldiers probably didn't know. Higher-ranking guerrillas, however, admitted knowing that the United States was a source of weapons and supplies.

The guerrilla war in Nicaragua is still in rather primitive stages militarily — reconnaissance, the guerrillas building up popular support and consolidating their hold on the countryside.

GEORGE F. WILL

Mondale tired of losing side

WASHINGTON — Speaking recently to newspaper publishers, Walter Mondale said President Reagan has "weakened" America and "squandered the mandate for a strong, sensible defense." It is good that Mondale acknowledges this mandate delivered by the electorate when it dismissed the Carter-Mondale administration.

George F. Will

But his word "squander" suggests that he had a part in nurturing the consensus for stronger defense. In fact, before running with Carter on a platform promising substantial defense cuts, Mondale was one of the Senate liberals who specialized in attacking the defense budget.

To the publishers, Mondale praised using "our resources for conventional strength," and raising the nuclear threshold by doing "everything we can to strengthen weapons that are not nuclear, so that we will never have to resort to weapons that are." But Mondale voted for measures which would have lowered the nuclear threshold.

In 1971 he voted for the Mansfield Amendment to require the immediate, unilateral removal of more than half the U.S. military personnel in Europe. His side lost, 36-41. In 1973 he voted to reduce U.S. ground troops overseas by at least 40 percent. His side lost, 44-51. In 1974 he voted to reduce active-duty personnel and the number assigned abroad by 76,000. His side lost, 44-46.

To the publishers, Mondale endorsed "a defense budget based on coherent strategy and growing at a supportable, sustainable rate." He praised NATO's commitment to three percent growth. But in 1970 he voted to cut the fiscal 1971 defense budget seven percent. His side lost, 31-42. In 1971 he supported a McGovern amendment demanding a fiscal 1973 defense budget with a $60 billion ceiling. His side lost, 26-58. Opponents argued that you could not make coherent strategy by forcing strategy to fit an arbitrary number. (Also in 1971 Mondale voted to kill the Navy's F-14 program, to stop domestic procurement of Harrier aircraft, to slow development of the new main battle tank, and to kill the space shuttle. His side lost each time.)

Although between 1968 and 1972 defense spending plummeted from 42.5 percent to 30 percent of the federal budget, in 1972 Mondale supported a McGovern amendment to limit fiscal 1973 defense obligational authority to 1972 levels, regardless of inflation or the accelerating Soviet buildup. His side lost 33-59. Opponents objected to the capriciousness of setting a dollar figure that would force program cuts not faced up to by the persons setting the dollar figure. In 1973 Mondale voted to freeze defense expenditures in 1974 at 1973 levels. His side lost, 31-62.

To the publishers, Mondale said we should "reaffirm" the 1972 ABM treaty, which he admires. But the Soviet Union was uninterested in negotiating limits to ABMs until Congress voted to proceed with a U.S. system. The crucial measure passed in 1969 by two votes. If it had not passed, there would be no treaty for Mondale to praise. Mondale voted to defeat the program.

To the publishers, Mondale advocated proceeding with "accuracy improvements" on Minuteman ICBMs. In 1974 Mondale voted to ban spending on improved guidance technology until the President certified that the SALT talks would not substantially limit MIRVs. His side lost, 37-49. In 1975 he voted to bar funds for improved guidance technology, without reference to SALT. His side lost, 42-52.

To the publishers, Mondale cited the Trident submarine as one of the programs with which we should proceed. In 1972 he voted to strike $500 million from Trident development and procurement. His side lost 39-47. In 1973 he voted to reduce the Trident program by $827 million. His side lost, 47-49.

To the publishers, Mondale discounted the president's anxieties about U.S. security: "We have weapons like cruise missiles to which they (the Soviets) yet have no effective responses." In 1975 he supported a McGovern amendment to delay flight testing of cruise missiles. His side lost, 33-55. In 1975 he also voted to kill submarine-launched cruise missiles. His side lost, 16-72.

To the publishers, Mondale said: "We must address the vulnerability of our land-based missiles." In 1975 he voted to kill procurement of an additional 50 Minuteman IIIs. His side lost 27-56. In 1976 he voted to kill procurement of 60 additional Minuteman IIIs. His side lost 35-49. He opposes MX. He has consistently opposed the B-1, the available system for modernization of the air component of the Triad. And as noted, he favored slowing development of Trident. So he has resisted timely modernization for all three legs of the Triad.

If there is a President Mondale responsible for U.S. security in the 1980s, he will be glad Sen. Mondale failed so frequently in the 1970s.

It's hard to play Pollyanna as world plays politics

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

SAN SIMEON, Calif. — Regular readers of this column know that I tend to be optimistic but in looking at the simmering state of affairs in the world and how many in Congress are playing politics, I can't help feeling a good bit less than Pollyanna this morning.

Over-riding issues, all involving the Soviet Union, hang fire. The Russians are back in the Middle East with 5,000 of their own elite forces and new weapons in client state Syria. That's a touchy situation since we realize that Syria shares common borders with battered Lebanon and suspicious Israel. A flare-up could convulse the tumultuous region and the Russians will use Syrians to fight.

After a marathon session, the Israeli cabinet approved an agreement for withdrawing its forces from Lebanon but requested "clarifications" on security in southern Lebanon. Although the qualified Israeli approval is a step forward it is only a speck on the horizon of the entire Middle Eastern maelstrom. Secretary Shultz is scheduled to fly to Jordan where he will brief King Hussein, then goes to Saudi Arabia. But it's the last leg of his shuttle where he faces real roadblocks, in Syria. The Syrian regime already is busy condemning the Shultz mission as an Arab "sellout." Secretary Shultz will need to preserve his well-earned patience in the face of this.

Before I get into additional discussion of the bucket of worms entangling Secretary Shultz's endeavors, I want to say a few words about the Washington mess. Down there on a strictly partisan breakdown a House Select Committee on Intelligence voted to cut off funds for CIA covert military operations in leftish-run Nicaragua. The president condemned the action as "irresponsible."

EDITOR'S REPORT

The committee rebuffed the president just six days after his TV address to the joint Houses of Congress. It could be that the majority members were flexing their legislative muscles. They seemed to me to be a little embarrassed by their feckless action. So, the group voted $80 million for friendly nations to block shipment of Soviet and Cuban-supplied weapons to Nicaragua. The method chosen was an ungraceful copout after President Reagan warned what is at stake for us so close to home and the strategic consequences.

Congressional opponents of the action had a very cogent point when they stressed that while the Senate would probably nullify the House Committee's decision, it was a saving blow to the morale of government forces fighting guerrillas in El Salvador. The communists led by the U.S.S.R. have swiftly seized on that subtlety to depict a U.S. government in disorder in Washington.

Don't forget that the president has veto power and with the political forces lined up about equally his veto would, in my opinion, nullify the bill and keep us from making fools of ourselves.

To be sure, Central America and the Caribbean basin are closer to home than is the Middle East. We must, in my view, make an earnest effort to synchronize events in both areas. The Russians do so in their own way to expand the Soviet power base into our hemisphere. That's to drive us into isolation.

While the Kremlin feels it has us on the run, the regime of former KGB boss Yuri Andropov tries to pile up propaganda points. It offered to cut warheads in nuclear medium-range forces targeted on Western allies in NATO. The details are still deliberately ambiguous but are intended to keep the U.S. from deploying Pershing-2 and cruise missiles later this year. Andropov wants France and Britain to include their nuclear armories in the count. Those weapons are under British and French sovereignty and cannot reach the U.S.S.R.

In a wide-ranging interview with some White House correspondents, President Reagan said that Andropov's surprise proposal would be "given serious consideration as we do with any proposal that they make."

"The encouraging thing," the president observed, "was that he made a proposal aimed at something that has been a consideration of ours, and that is that we should be negotiating warheads and not just missiles."

But Andropov keeps absolutely mum about the airlift he personally ordered for assignment in Syria. These include the Russians' most up-to-date SAM-5's, manned by Soviet special units. The Syrians lost nearly all their MiGs and most of their Soviet-supplied armor to Israel during last year's fighting in Lebanon. Andropov, upon being named successor to Leonid Brezhnev, wasted no time getting back in a neuralgic area of the Middle East. Syria's President Hafez al-Assad appealed to him to rebuild Syria's military establishment. Andropov responded to the plea, making sure first that Assad would serve as the Russian Middle Eastern Castro.

It took a unique and imaginative soldier-stateman, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, to boot the Russians out. After taking over from the late Gamel Abdel Nasser, Sadat found the Soviets meddling in every level of society. Then, he embarked on his historic trip to Jerusalem where he worked out peace arrangements with Prime Minister Menachem Begin. Moslem zealots, alas, assassinated this man of vision who sought peace for the largest of all Arab nations.

Without the Soviet presence in the Middle East, it was difficult enough to bring differing factions and religions to even talk together. Now that the Russians have slipped back under the tent bringing their heavy weapons along into Syria their interests are in preventing peace. President Reagan's proposals, I always thought, were simplistic, even naive, given the expanding Soviet dimension.

So, we approach decisive showdowns in key areas. Logic and reason work with others, never with the Russians. They're either at your feet or at your throat.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Compassion

To The Editor:

In today's issue (May 3) you ran an article concerning the plight of a 23-year-old man named Mark Carlton who, after an accidental shooting and subsequent coma, was attacked in his bedroom and stabbed by a burglar while still recovering from the first wound.

These events would have been enough to make most anyone want to give up, but this young man has worked hard and progressed from a wheelchair to a cane, and wants to prove to himself that he can make it on his own. In order to give him an opportunity to do so, his mother, Carolyn Mitchell, bought a 35-foot trailer house and had it installed in her own backyard. From this action came a hassle with the City Council and one neighbor in particular, a Ms. Mona Dunn (who, by the way, is very rarely at her residence in the neighborhood).

This incident brings several thoughts to mind. Perhaps this show of a lack of compassion on a small scale might give us a clue to one of the world's greatest shortcomings at this point in time — the failure to "love thy neighbor." Also, if more people had this young man's will to "make it on his own," perhaps our welfare and food stamp rolls would be shorter. And if we worried more about how things actually are rather than how they look, we might be a little more tolerant of our neighbors.

I am a homeowner and am proud of my home and neighborhood, but if such a situation arose with one of my neighbors, I believe I could "look the other way" for a year or so in order to help a young man such as Mark reorganize his life and learn to make his own way, if possible, in this seemingly uncaring world. I realize that cities must have zoning restrictions and laws, but like any law, they can be waived in special cases.

I believe Mark Carlton's is a special case. I regret his first step toward an independent lifestyle was thwarted.

On your side

To The Editor:

I am prompted to write after reading, "Death of a Dream," Section C, May 3, 1983.

I really don't know if I'm more irritated at the City Council for their decision or the "Lone Neighbor" for her selfishness. (If there were others, the article only quoted one.)

Apparently Ms. Dunn has no compassion for her fellowman. The application states "temporary permit" to aid a young man who has survived near death and needs a chance to become independent. How heartless and uncaring to be more concerned with an "eyesore" when she states she is out of town a good deal of the time and in truth it is her son that lives at that address.

Furthermore, the trailer is in the backyard and the house numbers are side by side. If she comes out her front door and has to look at the trailer, she must be coming out backwards. I'm on your side, Mrs. Mitchell. I wouldn't move the trailer until hell freezes over.

Maybe Ms. Dunn would rather see Carlton in a state institution supported by our tax dollars rather than learning to become independent and return to society.

How could anyone in their right mind deny this request? After all he's been through and after he's come so far you dare take away what he needs to become self-sufficient.

Cut and dried

To The Editor:

Re: May 3 article on the City Council's decision to deny a special mobile home permit.

Assuming that all the information in the article is correct and complete, here are our observations on the matter:

1) Mr. Thomas states that "you can either do away with the zoning ordinances or abide with them." If it is that cut and dried, why then a Special Temporary Permit? Obviously the ordinances are flexible.

2) We take offense to Ms. Dunn's statement about a trailer running down the neighborhood and her being subjected to looking at it. (See our address at the end of this letter.)

3) We believe that the need did outweigh the opposition.

4) Why was a decision made on a tie 3-3 vote? (Excuse our ignorance of our own city's government workings.)

4) We hope Ms. Mitchell keeps the trailer there for as long as she resides there, (unconnected or otherwise.)

In ending, we can only give our good thoughts and prayers to Mark in his struggle to live on his own. Most of us know how difficult it is to make it on our own, even in excellent health. But to come back from what he has experienced is something else; shall we say, special. Good luck, Mark and Carolyn.

Man's law

To The Editor:

After reading the story about Mark Carlton and the trailer house in Tuesday's paper, I could not help but voice my opinion and over-all concern about the situation. Before stating my opinions, I must establish the fact that I do not live in the neighborhood which is affected by the situation. However, I believe the results of the permit request creates a need for us all to take a hard look at the over-all circumstances.

First of all, the article stated 24 public hearing notices were issued to surrounding neighbors. Yet the paper indicated only one responded out of the 24. What happened to the other 23 or was Ms. Dunn acting as the "neighborhood representative?" Also, Carroll Thomas stated "I have always been very careful to vote against a specific use permit if we had people in the neighborhood who object to it." The key word to me is "people" who object. Once again the article indicated opposition from only one individual. I personally believe if Ms. Dunn was indeed the only objectionable citizen response, then I can not see one out of 24 justifying the defeat of the permit request.

Secondly, I cannot help but look at what the Bible teaches us about our neighbor. As I recall, we should love thy neighbor. Now I realize neither of the two parties involved may be seeking to follow Christian principles. Please do not take this wrong because we all fall short in many facets of life as Christians, but if we do not start trying to turn our attitude around, then I believe we are heading toward a breakdown in our society. I believe we should have the basic human need whether Christian or not to get along with each other.

I sincerely pray both parties had discussed the situation together and if they have not, I hope they will take the opportunity to do so in the near future. I know being totally removed from the situation limits my full comprehension of why or how the final outcome was achieved but I believe there may be a lesson in it for us all. I guess I would summarize the lesson as; We had better learn where man's law to protect others ends and where God's law to love one another begins.

K-9 questions

To The Editor:

On Sunday May 1, 1983, there was a letter to the editor from Barbara Tibbitts about the police K-9 Unit. At this time, I would like to answer her two questions.

Her first question was, "Why are the dogs sent into buildings or rooms alone." The Midland police canines are never sent into buildings alone. Before the dogs are sent into any building, the handler gives a warning to anyone inside to come out, or the dog will be sent in. If an "innocent citizen" is inside and comes forward, the officer will confirm his reasons for being inside. This happens often, as an owner will go to his business after hours and will forget to turn off his alarm. With no response to the warning, the dog is given the command to search. The search is directed by the handler on a room to room basis. The canine presents a smaller, darker, faster moving object than a 6 foot police officer with a flashlight. The dogs are sent in off lead to search. Although I don't like to send my canine into a dark room for the chance that he may be killed or injured, I do. I would cry if my dog was killed but not as hard as my wife and two daughters would if I was killed in the line of duty.

The canines of the Midland Police Department are trained to locate suspects and bark as long as the suspect does not move. That is if a person stands completely still, the dog will not bite; but only bark.

To answer Mrs. Tibbitts' second question, the Midland Police Department does not use attack dogs or guard dogs. And of course I agree the public should be made aware of the type of dogs which serve them. The K-9 Unit is served by "Personnel Protection" dogs which are schutzhound oriented and adapted to police work through vigorous training. Attack dogs are just that: they attack anything but his handler. A guard dog does that; he guards a fenced area or home. As you can see, we could use neither. Our dogs are trained first to protect the handler from attack, second to protect other officers and the citizens of Midland. Building search, tracking, narcotic detection and numerous other training is given to your police dogs.

As for the bite in question. First, the man ran from uniformed officers and hid in the church. Second, we did give the Canine Warning to come out or the dog would be sent in. Third, the building was searched for 38 minutes before the man was located in a small, dark closet. The door was opened by the handler and the canine went in. The door was shut by the man and dog and remained shut for a few seconds before being forced open by the handler. The handler in question has worked with the El Paso and Midland police departments for 12 years. He has over 1,000 hours in canine training, has an instructors certificate from Baltimore Police Department, and is a master trainer with the North American Police Work Dog Association. Both the handler and the dog received training from T. Patrick Cahill. Cahill is one of the most respected canine trainers in both the United States and Europe. Cahill set up the canine programs for Baltimore and Washington D.C. Police Departments after retiring from Scotland Yard with 27 years service.

We are very concerned with our K-9 Unit. Both handlers and dogs are retrained weekly, with great emphasis on control. The dogs do obey our commands, as is evident with our dogs placing high in state competition against other dogs from departments, large and small, throughout the state of Texas. A few things that we don't get to read about are: the 3,000 grade school children who have watched our pet-safety program and K-9 demonstrations, the 30 plus burglary suspects removed from buildings in Midland, an attempted suicide victim in a remote area that the doctor said would have died if not located by the dog, the numerous times my dog has saved my life and protected me from serious injury, the unruly crowds that were tamed just by the presence of the canine, the drugs that never made it to your kids. The list could go on and on.

I think that Midland is one of the best places to live and raise our families in this country. We have a progressive police department which is keeping up with the latest standards in police work which includes the K-9 Unit, which I am proud to be a part of.

Voter apathy

To The Editor:

In response to the article in the April 26th edition of your newspaper, I would like to try to answer the question asked by Janeice Builta, "Where's the other 40,000 people who didn't vote?"

It can only be guessed that most of these 40,000 work eight to 10 hours a day in this one-horse town. Some of these could care less about anything but their paychecks and how to spend it. Some others would like to have one they could spend. All of us who drive to and from work do so over these lunar landing strips that are sometimes called streets.

During the last boom period little or nothing was done to relieve our street problems because, according to the city, there was a shortage of laborers, and the utility companies were given permission to tear up more streets. Now the boom is over and the revenues accumulated for street repairs gave way to the decrease in sales tax revenues that no one could see coming even after it was clear our economy was declining. Now some people are getting traffic citations to pay for new patrol cars, that they would not normally have gotten.

The point is those of us who do care enough to vote see very little effort on the city's part to alleviate problems that should be placed higher on the long list of priorities. I've often wondered who the leading force is in this town, the mayor, the city council, the sheriff? It's clear we lack leadership that can see further than a week ahead, people who will seek more public opinion before throwing in an $11 million bond election.

Whether it's streets, parks, Midland Memorial Hospital or the Chaparral Center, there are opinions outside the city hall that should be considered.

Proper poll

To The Editor:

On April 25, 1983, you published on page 3-A, a news item from Houston, stating that a poll reveals that Houstonians back gun legislation.

As a result of a political scientists' poll, one Richard Hofstetter, brings forth figures indicating that three out of every five Houston residents favor a police permit to purchase a firearm.

I wonder if he contacted a proper cross-section in the conduct of his "poll." It is my contention that there must be some native Texans still residing in Houston. Perhaps there are still a few around who look with pride at those great individuals who molded the destiny of Texas, and who never needed a police permit to become patriots.

An excellent example of just what "police permits" lead to can be easily noted by those who do not have their heads buried in the sand, if they will just ask Lech Walesa.

Obviously this recent "poll" in Houston was conducted on someone's ostrich farm. Since the Midland paper carried this item on Houston, I also wonder if this infers concurrence by the Reporter-Telegram. How about a similar poll here in Midland? But, of course, there are probably too many real Texans around these parts to ever come up with results in keeping with those of a "political scientist."

MMH's needs

To The Editor:

The Midland Memorial Hospital situation is still an irritation to me. First of all, aren't the projections for need pretty shakey? Ask the city how well financial projections work. Midland is not, and never has been, a city where future projections work. I don't care what the expert consultants say. Also, how have financial projections worked for the state of Texas this year? Bob Bullock lowers his projections regularly.

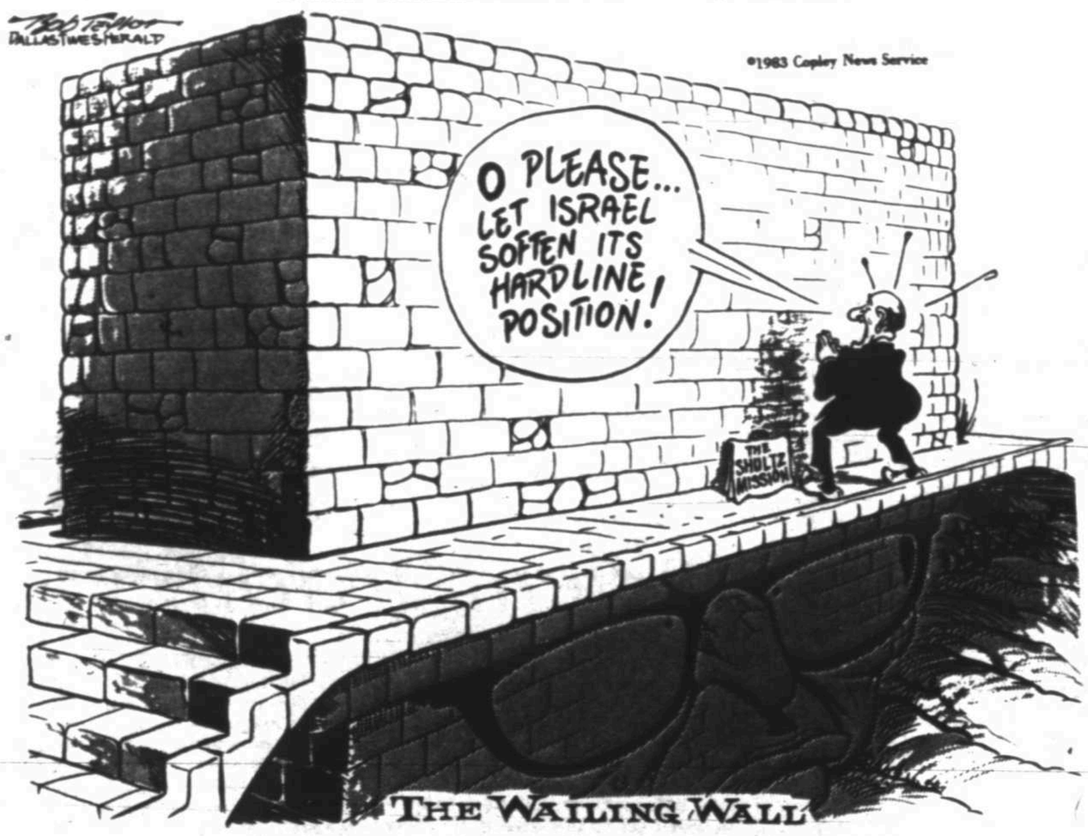

Parkview is willing to provide hospital space at no cost to the taxpayer. Midland Memorial not only can't make a profit, as Parkview must plan to do as a private hospital, but they even constantly increase our tax bite. Maybe our hospital needs some good old American competition.

In order to escape a resounding bond defeat similar to the one suffered by the county jail project, Midland Memorial wants to increase taxes again and let the public pay their new $17 million debt by the year, instead of with a bond. The taxpayers still pay, but are not allowed to choose at the polls.

A businessman said to me that he would like to inherit a building and facilities and try to make money in a business. Why can't our hospital district? (I realize, however, that a public hospital is responsible for indigenous care, which is costly).

We, as taxpayers, may not stop the project, but we can elect a new hospital board that is more concerned about us!

Irony of it all: State politics not yet 'high-technology' profession

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

AUSTIN — Politics always seems to have a large measure of irony.

While Gov. Mark White was announcing plans for opening a new high-technology high school in San Antonio, the Senate was voting it out of its appropriations bill, without providing for teacher pay raises other than the step increases already provided by law.

That appropriations bill was put together by the Senate Finance Committee, which is headed by Sen. Grant Jones, D-Abilene, who celebrated his governor-for-a-day festivities two days after the Senate passed its bill.

At his swearing-in ceremonies, Jones noted that Texas needs to move to an economy which isn't dependent on oil and gas, which are dwindling, but rather to a diversified economy — with technological industries as the base.

That sort of economy will depend, in part, on how well Texas does in educating its citizens.

And that will depend, in great part, on how well Texas teachers perform.

Now let's be clear on something: no one is accusing Grant Jones, or his colleagues, of being against education, or teachers.

Both the Senate Finance Committee and House Appropriations Committee have had to make some difficult choices in putting together the proposed biennial spending bill for the 1984-85 period.

The funds which had been expected when the Legislature prepared to convene turned out not to be there, and that budget crunch — which grew worse instead of better as the session proceeded — has dominated legislative efforts.

But teachers had expected that they would be getting a pay increase, and they had been promised a pay increase by a number of state officials — led by Gov. Mark White.

Three senators — Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin; Ted Lyon, D-Mesquite, and Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo — voted against the Senate bill, indicating the lack of pay raises for teachers was the reason (or at least a reason) they did so.

Doggett said he was "embarassed" by the fact that the Senate recommended $762 million in contingency funding for highways when the contingency funding for education wouldn't increase teacher salaries as much as had been recommended by the Legislative Budget Board.

Rep. Earnestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice, vice chairman of the House Public Education Committee and herself a teacher, believes the argument over whether teachers should receive a 24 percent raise, or 19 percent raise, have obscured the real concerns involved.

"We are facing a crisis in education," she argues. "A lot of people don't believe that, but we are."

"I do not think that public school teachers' salaries will ever be such that there is direct competition with salaries in the private sector," Rep. Glossbrenner comments.

"I do think that it is imperative that if we are to attract the best and the brightest, or at least our share of the best and the brightest...we must have salaries that will allow teachers and teachers' families to enjoy a moderate standard of living."

"That," she adds, "is currently not the case."

"I think the economic well-being of this state is directly affected by the quality of the education system of this state...Our oil and gas resources will eventually be depleted.

"It is imperative that we conserve our human resources, because it is only through our human resources that we will eventually be able to keep our state one which provides a good quality of life for our citizens."

Most teachers aren't in teaching simply for the money, and a number will stay, whatever happens with salary increases — or lack of increases.

But many decide to move on to better paying occupations — which for some Austin teachers has included selling shoes, and waiting tables in a local steak-house.

Education traditionally gets much lip service, and there are periodic alarms about the quality of education, nationwide as well as in Texas.

Turkey strangled by corruption

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — The military government has found corruption an adversary more formidable than any other it has encountered since taking over 2½ years ago.

"The fight against bribery and corruption proved even more difficult than the fight against bloody terrorism," President Kenan Evren has said.

He lamented in a speech that corruption was difficult to combat, "because both parties are guilty and neither side admits to anything."

But the generals appear determined to win their fight before handing the government back to civilians in the spring of 1984. Elections have been scheduled for November.

A new bill submitted to the legislature calls on all public servants, from the premier down to the lowest-paid clerk, to make detailed declarations of personal wealth the day they assume office. They would have to list all their worldly belongings, including property and assets, as well as their wives' jewelry.

Courts will give top priority to any cases of "unjustified earnings" by civil servants, the proposed bill says.

NO ONE IS able to document, not even President Evren, just how widespread corruption is in official ranks. But it is common knowledge that it has become part of daily life.

The most common forms of corruption reported are bribery, influence-peddling and nepotism. It is difficult to find a Turk who has not sought or extended the latter two, sometimes in relatively innocent ways. If one has a relative or a good friend in a state hospital, a scarce hospital bed may quickly materialize or one may be able to go to the head of a long line to see a specialist during clinic hours.

Friends in influential positions are often necessary to win a coveted civil service job in this country of 20 percent unemployment.

The generals' crackdown has produced some results, even though many of the guilty are still believed to be undetected.

Recently a former Cabinet minister, Serafettin Elci, was jailed for 28 months after conviction of nepotism charges. Elci, who served as public works minister in the 1978-79 civilian government of Premier Bulent Ecevit, was found guilty of making three illegal appointments during his term.

LAST YEAR, two former ministers from the same Cabinet, Tuncay Mataraci in charge of customs and monopolies and Hilmi Isguzar of the Social Security Department, were sentenced to 36 and 10 years in prison respectively by the Constitutional Court for receiving massive bribes. Mataraci was accused of raking in the equivalent of $5.2 million.

Customs offices at border posts have long been considered places where bribes frequently are offered and accepted for the clearance of contraband or to fix import documents.

Eleven security officials, including two colonels and a police chief, are on trial here on charges of giving protection to a gang of arms smugglers in return for kickbacks. In a similar case, 10 officers and 12 non-commissioned officers face 22 to 34 years in prison along with 23 suspected smugglers.

Recently two military judges, Lts. Eyup Mentes and Caglar Aksoy of the navy, were sentenced to prison terms of eight years and six years, nine months respectively for taking bribes from the relatives of four suspected terrorists to commute death penalties against them.

CASES OF fraud and graft also have involved local governments. In the southern port city of Mersin, Deputy Mayors Sever Yildizcelik and Necmettin Aslan were arrested on charges of paying out public funds to contractors for a sewage system that was never built.

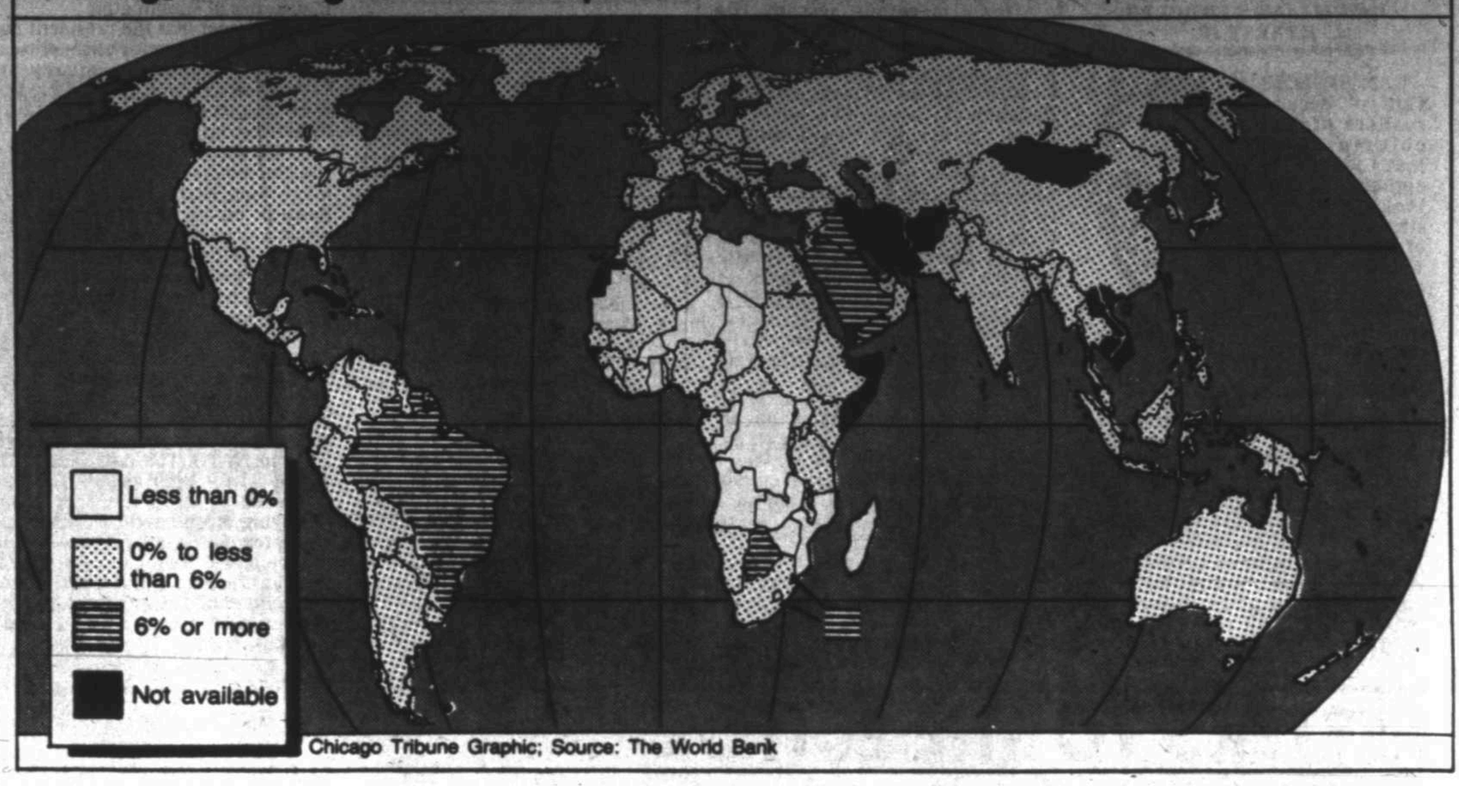

Then there was the case of Turkish airline officials accused of pocketing 100 million Turkish lira ($500,000) in ticket and freight money.

Some observers say red tape in Turkey is largely responsible for bribes, especially petty graft. Lost in heaps of documents required in triplicate for the most routine things, the citizen prefers to pay someone inside to take care of it. The cure, writes columnist and political scientists Mumtaz Soysalg, is the simplify these procedures.

Others claim low salaries in the civil service are the leading cause of graft. Salaries range from $60 to $500 a month. These analysts say the answer lies in fewer, but better paid civil servants.

'Something is Wrong' Egyptian hit

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The most outstanding success on Egyptian television this year is a serial called "Something is Wrong," which deals with surprising frankness with the problems facing the average Egyptian.

The hero of the series is Abdel-Hamid al-Kabbany, a 59-year-old government employee whose $175 monthly salary is barely making ends meet for himself, his wife and four children.

For Egypt's television audience, estimated at more than half the population of 45 million, the program is a radical departure from the traditional soap opera in which people live in expensive villas and drive Mercedes-Benz cars.

Samia Sadek, the small, energetic director of Egyptian television, said the program was made possible by the emphasis President Hosni Mubarak has placed on improving the lot of the average Egyptian.

"Most of our directors have portrayed the middle class as having no problems except the problems of love, and they all have happy endings," said Mrs. Sadek, a career radio announcer appointed four months ago.

"ABDEL-HAMID is from the real middle class, and his salary hardly covers his family's expenses. By telling his story, we wanted to deal with the problems of everyday life. That's why it's so popular. People find themselves and their lives mirrored in the series."

Abdel-Hamid, an honest, straightforward man, is beset by many problems and dilemmas familiar to the average Egyptian: unscrupulous businessmen tempt him with bribes, landlords demand illegal payments before renting apartments for his children, his profiteering butcher and greengrocer sell their best quality products at prices far above the official price.

His oldest son returns from college in the United States with an American wife who must adjust to life in Egypt. His teen-age son wants to make a career of disco dancing.

His messenger boy at the office makes more than Abdel-Hamid moonlighting as a taxi driver. His American daughter-in-law makes twice his pay working at a travel agency.

MOST OF Egypt's 12 million workers are government employees making monthly salaries less than Abdel-Hamid, who is director-general of his office. The annual per capita income in Egypt is $500. People survive because prices of basic commodities and fuel are controlled.

When the late President Anwar Sadat opened Egypt's socialist economy to Western and private investment, he made no changes in government pay scales. The inflation resulting from the influx of imported goods and from money sent home by Egyptians working abroad has made it difficult for government employees to pay their bills.

Many work at more than one job, and many depend on income from sons and daughters in their extended family.

The idea for "Something is Wrong" came from Director Mohamed Nabih, who has worked at television for more than 20 years and says he too lives on a modest government salary.

"I SELECTED this character from among the people that I live with in the real world," Nabih said in an interview with The Associated Press. He said he began with the idea of a civil servant nearing the mandatory retirement age of 60, and the story began to tell itself.

Scriptwriter Abdel-Hai Adib, a successful film writer, said he undertook the project for Nabih on the condition that the censor would not touch his material.

"I have the opinion that freedom is freedom — you cannot cut it to pieces," he said. "We have had enough of revolution and war, we spent 30 years at war. The result now is that our economy is destroyed. Our country now needs the truth. We need to discuss the problems of the people and not let them dream."

Mrs. Sadek, who was appointed by the minister of information, said she ordered the censor to be liberal with the series. Only one passage, which criticized the government-controlled press, was cut, she said.

The first 15 episodes of "Something is Wrong," which were run in March, will be rerun this summer, she said. A similar series called "A Man on the Waves" will be shown in two months.

Hard times swell ranks of Turkish street people

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — They hustle bus tickets, perform acrobatic feats or turn a weekend fishing hobby into a full time profession. One has trained rabbits to tell people's fortunes.

Hard times have swelled the small army of Turks living off the marginal economy in this city of 5 million, sending the newly unemployed or those unable to find a first job into the streets alongside the usual assortment of lottery hawkers, shoeshine boys and junk food salesmen.

After the military takeover in September 1980, police tightened enforcement of an often overlooked ban on street peddlers and other hustlers who paid no taxes and were considered a nuisance.

But with unemployment running at around 20 percent of the 18 million work force, according to official figures, and 400,000 newcomers joining the job market every year, authorities appear to have eased off.

Fishing for istavril, a small fish that thrives in the murky waters of the Golden Horn, for example, has become a growth industry during the last year.

Even on the coldest days of winter, dozens of men were seen shivering in the morning drizzle on the Galata Bridge waiting for their drop lines to jerk with good news. With warmer spring weather, of anglers show up to put food on the table and earn a little extra cash.

"I make about 1,000 lira ($5) a day," said Ali Aydin, who turned his weekend hobby into a full time job after he was laid off from his factory job last year.

"That's nearly as much as I was making in the factory, but now I don't have any recreation. Fishing is no fun if you have to do it to live."

Ergun Can, 14, makes his contribution to the limited family income by selling bus tickets at two cents over the usual 12-cent charge, clearing $2.50 a day.

Although tickets are also sold at newsstands, the young polio victim provides a service to customers who don't want to wait in line. He can be found wheeling his hand-propelled tricycle over the curbs from the bus ticket windows in central Taksim Square back to the crowded bus stops.

Fikret Karaman, 20, who used to work in a garment store, now performs acrobatic feats in Istanbul's well known "Flower Passage," a series of rowdy bistros. Fikret has to compete with groups of wandering musicians, portrait drawers and magicians for the clientele's limited generosity.

"You've got to do something to get by," said Izzedin Senturk, 35, who sells song birds near the Egyptian spice bazaar. Customers are supposed to release the birds after purchasing them as an act of charity, whereupon Izzedin tries to catch them again for a resale.

From the women who sell seeds for pigeons to those working for the pretax minimum wage of $75 per month, the much touted "economic turnaround," which has brought Turkey back from the brink of bankruptcy, still seems very far away.

Arabs fear influence of foreigners

ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates (AP) — Foreign workers have poured so heavily into the oil-rich Arabian Peninsula that they have made minorities of the local Arab populations.

Newspaper editorials in the Persian Gulf side of the peninsula speak constantly of the "danger" they say the non-Arab populations present to native culture and morals.

Crimes by non-Arab foreigners are highlighted in the press. In Kuwait, a recent conference on the problem of Asian labor focused on the impact of Asian nannies on Arab children.

While most of the public criticism is leveled at non-Arab workers, some officials say they are more concerned about the danger to their culture posed by Palestinians, Egyptians or Sudanese.

The foreign worker populations, however, have become the first casualty of the downturn in oil revenues. Many governments are cracking down on illegal aliens and tightening the immigration regulations that 10 years ago seemed little more than obstacles to development.

But no one expects mass expulsions.

"WE NEED these people, they are here because they are needed," said Kuwait's minister for Cabinet affairs, Abdel-Aziz Hussein. Sixty percent of Kuwait's 1.3 million people are foreigners.

Western diplomats say the nations of the Persian Gulf do not yet have the educated elite needed to develop themselves, and the newly rich native people of the area, who traditionally frown on manual labor, refuse to work on construction jobs for foreign managers.

Consequently, the importation of foreigners has risen sharply over the past decade as these nations used their oil wealth to build and run new cities, industries, hospitals, schools and housing projects in their desert lands.

The trend is most striking in this ultramodern capital that 15 years ago was a small settlement of a few hundred homes on a sandy island.

Today, a million foreigners live in the United Arab Emirates, a federation of seven sheikdoms, and the native population is estimated at only 200,000.

ALL COMPANIES in the federation must be headed by a national, but a visitor to Abu Dhabi, one of the Emirates, might encounter only a handful of natives in management posts.

By 1985, the native population of the United Arab Emirates will be only 15 percent of the total population; in neighboring Qatar it will be 17 percent, in Kuwait 36 percent, Bahrain 51 percent, Saudi Arabia 64 percent and Oman 79 percent, according to a study presented to the Kuwait conference.

The biggest foreign populations in the Emirates are Pakistanis and Indians. Officials attribute this to the nearness of India and Pakistan. Karachi, Pakistan, is about a 90-minute flight from here, while Cairo, Egypt, is almost four hours away.

But Dr. Shamlan Youssef al-Aissa, head of Kuwait University's political science department, said in an interview that while most countries talk of the danger of Asian labor, they are really more afraid of Palestinians or workers from poor Arab nations like Sudan and Egypt.

"THEY TALK about helping the Arabs when they attend these Arab League conferences, but unfortunately, they would rather have Asian labor," he said in an interview. "They fear the Arabs and Moslems because they assimilate. They marry and tend to settle down. And the Palestinians, they are a problem. None of the states wants Palestinians."

He said Israel's forced expulsion of 14,000 Palestinian guerrillas from Beirut, Lebanon, last year led to even tighter restrictions on Palestinians.

Dr. Mohammed el-Awad Galaleldin, deputy director of Kuwait's Arab Planning Institute, said it was unclear if Asians were being imported because of a shortage of skilled labor in Arab nations, because the private sector preferred them or for the reasons outlined by Al-Aissa.

"Even companies controlled by Arabs prefer non-Arab labor, maybe because they are more efficient, more productive, cheaper and easier to control," he said. "We don't know really. We are studying the problem."

AT THE Kuwait conference on Asian labor, a college student's paper about the danger foreign nannies pose to Arab children prompted the Kuwait Department of Social Affairs to launch what Hussein called a serious full-scale study of the subject.

Galaleldin said the main concern was that the children were learning the language and ways of their Asian nannies before they learned Arabic and the customs of their parents.

"You have these nannies in every house, irrespective of whether the mother is working or not," he said. "Sometimes you have three or four nannies in one house. It's become a status symbol."

Black art center revives ancient traditions

RORKE'S DRIFT, South Africa (AP) — In a remote valley rich with the lore of fallen Zulu warriors, a black art colony has revived old traditions with a modern touch. It has earned world acclaim.

The Rorke's Drift art center was established in 1962 with Swedish Lutheran Church aid "to nurture the unique artistic heritage of Africa," a white bishop said at the founding.

The center's strength is that the 120 potters and weavers design their own work, never following the patterns or color schemes of others. Each intricate textile pattern, pottery glazing design and tapestry tale is unique. A single small vase can take a day or more, tapestries months.

"The aim is not only to give employment, but to create a cultural dignity and pride. They all must make their own designs, they are artists rather than craftsmen," said Princess Ngcobo, acting treasurer of the center.

She said that since 1975 the nonprofit center has been run by blacks who live and work in the cluster of a dozen buildings, without outside aid. The settlement, nestled against a green hillside, is 20 miles from the nearest paved road and 120 miles north of the Indian Ocean port of Durban. Yet, commercial and private buyers come in a steady flow to the sales shop.

THE COMPOUND includes the stone house of the first Swedish missionary to South Africa, Otto Witt, who arrived in Zululand in the 1870s. The house, now a post office and small gallery, formed part of the barricade in the bloody victory of 140 British soldiers over 4,000 Zulu warriors who attacked the garrison at the settlement in January 1879.

Earlier the same day, the Zulus earned their greatest victory, wiping out 850 British soldiers at Isandhlwana 20 miles away.

The British Crown awarded 11 Victoria Crosses to the Rorke's Drift defenders, the highest number ever for a single action. Now visitors are guided by a 76-year-old Zulu who says his grandfather died in the attack. The site includes separate graveyards for British and Zulu dead.

Miss Ngcobo said the setting is appropriate for blacks to rediscover the artistic traditions of the Zulus, still ruled by a white-minority government.

"The aim is not only to give employment, but to create a cultural dignity and pride. They all must make their own designs, they are artists rather than craftsmen."

"They have really benefited spiritually. You can see they have grown in dignity and self-confidence," she said in an interview.

RORKE'S DRIFT artwork has generated international respect, with exhibitions held in Scandinavia, the Netherlands, Italy, England and the United States. The tapestries are especially prized.

The artwork from the pottery, weaving and textiles workshops have generated steady income to pay the center's salaries and operating costs of more than $70,000 a year.

For many years the income from the workshops subsidized the Rorke's Drift Fine Arts School. After emerging as South Africa's premier black art school, the Fine Arts School was forced to close this year because of lack of funds and staff for the 40 students. Graduates include highly regarded graphic artists such as Sidney Moema and sculptors like Zondi Chipa.

Miss Ngcogo, at Rorke's Drift since 1977, said attempts were being made to find money and staff to reopen the Fine Arts School. She conceded there had been tension between the art school and the crafts workshops because the fine arts students tended to regard the weavers and potters as something less than artists.

MALIN LUNDBOHM, a Swedish textile artist who is the only white at the center, said similar splits often occur in the Western art world — "artists must be drawing and painting."

Mrs. Lundbohm was at the center with her husband from 1968 to 1975, the last of three Swedish couples since 1962, and she returned in 1981 for another two-year stay. She said modern Swedish techniques had influenced the methods of the African artists, but the designs, colors and patterns were their own.

Miss Ngcobo said the majority of the black artists have been at the center for 15 to 20 years, and very few new artists are accepted. She added, "It's not a school where you learn and go, but where you learn and stay."

Artists are paid for each work they produce, depending on quality and time spent. Prices are set by the supervisors in each workshop.

Formal education is not required at Rorke's Drift. Some artists do not read or write, and many do not speak English.

"Anybody, disregarding basic education, has an opportunity to express himself in modern material," Mrs. Lundbohm said.

CHEMICAL DYES are used for textiles rather than rare natural dyes. Carpets are in modern and bold colors, but woven on traditional looms in fine karakul wool.

The pottery workshop uses modern glazes and kilns, although foot-driven kickwheels are used rather than electric wheels. Distinctive pottery styles have emerged, primarily scenes of daily life etched in black on unglazed clay and blue etched on glazed desert sand-colored surfaces.

Tapestries often depict village life — water-carriers, women at cooking fires and warriors who endured the manhood ritual of "washing of the spears" in the blood of battle a century ago.

Midland High School seniors Rebecca Caton, daughter of James and Barbara Caton of 50 Carnation, and Tim Davis, son of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Davis of 2503 Fannin, are recipients of Youth Merit Awards from the Midland Downtown Rotary Club. Miss Caton serves as student council vice president and packbacker squad leader. She is a member of National Honor Society, varsity basketball team, Young Life and Midland Christian Fellowship Youth Group. She has received three academic letters and was named all-district in basketball and served as co-captain of the team. Elected Catoico Queen, she is an honor graduate. Davis, who also participated in Catoica Court, is a member of the varsity baseball and football teams. He was the baseball team captain for two years and was named most valuable player in 1982.

Midland High School seniors Kristy Elizabeth Sherman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Sherman of 2308 W. Shandon, and Judd Ryan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Keith A. Ryan of 3204 Sentinel, were named Lioness and Lion of the Week by the Midland Downtown Lions Club. Miss Sherman is a member of JETS and National Honor Society. An honor graduate, she enjoys calculus. She also is the recipient of a Youth Merit Award from the Midland Downtown Rotary Club and is a representative on her church youth council. Ryan, a two-year varsity baseball letterman, is a member of the Industrial Arts Club and enjoys trigonometry.

Woman wants Americans to pay national debt

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Kay Fishburn says the national debt, estimated at more than $1 trillion, is something all Americans share, and she wants them to help pay it off.

Mrs. Fishburn, of suburban New Berlin, said Friday that she and other volunteers have mailed 13,000 invitations since last fall to fellow Americans asking for contributions to a voluntary fund, created by Congress in 1961, for retiring the federal government's debt.

"To honor our predecessors, to ensure hope and opportunity for ourselves and our children, to restore a legacy of liberty and initiative for future generations, citizens of the United States of America have begun to voluntarily retire the public debt of the federal government," the invitation said.

"In proportion to the success you have achieved by the exercise of your talent, energy and freedom as a citizen of this nation, make your tax-deductible gifts payable to the U.S. Treasury, Public Debt Reduction Fund."

Mrs. Fishburn said she was informed by the Treasury that more than $400,000 has been contributed this fiscal year, doubling the amount for the previous fiscal year.

"I check with the Treasury periodically just to see how we're doing," she said.

She declined to specify how much she contributed, saying only that it was a "significant" amount but less than she hopes to donate in the future. Mrs. Fishburn is a registered nurse and occupational health consultant, and her husband, Charles, is a physician.

She said about 30 to 50 other people in communities across the nation have become involved in efforts similar to hers, but there was no formal organization to the campaign.

"It's such an enormous undertaking that no organization could pull it off by itself," she said.

Mrs. Fishburn said her contacts with other interested Americans began about a year ago, after she sent letters to various newspapers and some of them were printed.

Mrs. Fishburn explained Friday that, at the time she started her campaign, "I figured somebody had to say it, and I stuck my neck out to see if it would get cut off. It didn't."

Asked if there had been any response from congressmen or bureaucrats, she replied: "None.

Ice, rest good for tennis elbow

Dear Dr. Solomon: I realize that tennis elbow is not a matter of life and death, and that you have more important things to write about, but what should be done about it? The pain in my elbow is becoming a pain in the neck. — Don, Detroit

Dear Don: According to Dr. Edward C. Percy, of the University of Arizona Health Sciences Center in Tucson, pain relief from tennis elbow can generally be obtained through rest, the application of ice, and the use of nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory medications. These measures can then be followed by physical therapy. If these efforts are not sufficient, local injections of steroids may become necessary.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Explain this if you can. Some guy I know tells me he is taking injections for some problem even though a few people have died from them. Why would anyone do this? — Ralph, Newark, N.J.

Dear Ralph: What are the alternatives? You do not indicate what would happen if the patient were not treated or if he underwent surgery or had some other form of treatment. The possibility of death as a result of the injections may be less than that with any of the available alternative forms of treatment. This not only makes good sense; it's good medicine.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'm being treated for high blood pressure and I go to my doctor every once in a while to have it checked. I've seen machines advertised that say you can check your own blood pressure at home, and I would like to know if this is possible. — Hal, Jackson, Miss.

Dear Hal: A study conducted by the University of Michigan School of Medicine and School of Public Health indicates that patients with borderline hypertension can monitor their own blood pressures at home. Their conclusions were based on a review of 16 patients with mild hypertension.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Will you please explain about blood types? Sometimes I hear on the radio that a certain blood type is needed at a hospital. All blood looks the same to me and I don't understand what the difference is and why blood isn't just blood. — Morgan, Pueblo, Colo.

Dear Morgan: Blood is classified into four major groups — A, B, O, and AB. A patient who receives blood that is not compatible with his or her own blood may have a severe reaction that can even result in death. The reason is that antibodies in the patient's plasma attack the transfused blood.

MOTHER'S DAY LOVE LINES

For the most special mothers in the world!

MOM VERA GALLEGOS,
Words cannot express just how much we love you. You are a wonderful wife and mother. God bless you richly.
Love, Leonardo, Sarah, & Leo

MOTHER MAXINE STEVENS
To the greatest mom in the world, we love you more than you will ever know.
Love, Kitty, Nonie & Jeanie

DANON,
You are the most wonderful mother and wife, Happy Mother's Day.
Love from the three of us,
Jesse, Jo, Jim

TO BIRDIE BILBREY,
Who's been more than just the best mother in the world, but she's been the best friend I'll ever have. The best thing thats ever happened to me was when God gave you to me. Thank you mom for always giving me so much love and help. I love you and need you always.
Debbie

MOM,
Even though we don't always tell you that we love you, we really do.
Love Weldon, Lisa, Sue King

TO BICENTA S. GRANADO,
We think of you everday. Happy Mother's Day.
Love Larry and Diane Reyes

HAPPY MOTHER'S DAY MOM!
Love Kimmie

DEAR MOTHER,
I think you are the most wonderful human being that our almighty father could ever create. You were there when we were just kids, every step of our childhood days. Even now that we are grown up, you are still there to pick us up when we stumble or fall. Most people don't appreciate their mothers until it is to late, but I'm not one of those people. I appreciate you and love you more and more each day God gives me the strength to breathe. May 8th is a wonderful day, a very special day for all mothers, but to me every day is Mother's Day when I see you and your smile of encouragement. I give thanks not only this special day but everyday. I have a loving, sweet and caring mother. With this that comes from my heart I now close. I love you with every inch of my body and soul. Happy mother's Day.
Barbara, Toby, Little Louise & Joseph Walker

MOM,
Thanks for everything you do for us.
Love, Kim, Stasia & Joy

MAMA FELICIANA RENDON,
En este dia especial le ofrecemos nuestro carino y aprecio porque es una madre cristiana y porque en usted tambien encontramos una amiga
Lety & Lisa Rendon

TO OUR GRANDMA MAXINE
Happy Mother's Day, we love you dearly.
Love, Your Granddaughters
Kimie & Kathy Fontenot

TO AUNTIE C.,
Happy Mother's Day with love.
From Benjamin Andrew Avery Sims & Family

TO OUIDA,
Happy Mother's Day to a wonderful wife, mother & grandmother. We love You.
From Charlie, Charlene, Catherine Eric & Benjamin

TO PAULINE R. CARRASCO,
We think of you everyday. Happy Mother's Day.
Love Larry and Diane Reyes

DEAR MOM,
We Love you
Love, Royce & Diana

MOMMY,
You stay gone so long, But when you come back home we love you more and more.
Love Always,
Cookie & J.J.

Here are the facts to prove that Monroe copiers are easier to sell!

In only a year and a half, Monroe is penetrating the copier marketplace with an ever-increasing share. Here's why: First, our aggressive new product introductions are expanding our family of copiers...three more are on the way. Second, Monroe copiers are performance-proven with utmost reliability. Third, we have a service/support network of 350 offices throughout the country...and 70 years of successful experience solving business systems problems. Put these facts together and you have greater sales achievement with higher earnings and advancement opportunity to match.

Show us an impressive track record of copier selling accomplishment and the drive to get ahead, and we'll show you why Monroe is the place for you-in one of the following positions:

Sales Reps

Your 1 plus year of copier sales experience combined with our prime Midland territory offers high first year earning potential.

Sales Manager

You will utilize your 2 plus years copier sales/managerial experience to train and motivate our copier sales force, as you manage our entire copier sales program in Midland. You will oversee sales efforts and develop new markets/maintain current clients.

Marion "Ollie" Oliver

PARAMEDIC PAINTER

Text by David Lee Forrest
Illustrations and painting
by Marion "Ollie" Oliver

An elephant looks dismayed and a slender yellow giraffe glances down disapprovingly at the chubby hippopotamus stuck on the gangplank.

A tiger and a polar bear — who seems to be muttering something under his breath — shove against the hippo's backside to push him on board.

Another bright orange tiger, resting his head on one paw, stares out the ark's window utterly bored with the delay. Off to the left, a rabbit rolls on the ground laughing merrily at the hippo's silly predicament.

Meanwhile, Noah calmly encourages the animals to work together as the first raindrops begin sprinkling down from fluffy pink clouds.

Marion "Ollie" Oliver, a Midland paramedic, painted the whimsical children's view of Noah's Ark in a Sunday school classroom at Kelview Baptist Church, 407 Alta Ave.

"This is for 3-year-olds," Oliver said, "so you don't need Michelangelo-kind of work."

He did the mural at the request of a Sunday school teacher in one week, working "a Monday through a very late Saturday night," he said, to get ready for a Sunday morning class. He used regular house paint so that the hand prints of admiring 3-year-olds could be wiped off with a damp cloth.

The mural is the biggest project the amateur painter has ever tackled and when Oliver began he thought, "This isn't going to work.

"You start laying it in and you have a change of heart and you say, 'Well, maybe it'll work,'" he said. "It's a challenge."

He used "anything to make it humorous and keep it moving for 3-year-olds' attention spans" in the painting, he said.

Oliver's own attention span as a child affected his early interest in drawing, he joked.

"I started drawing when I should have been paying attention in class."

He took art in high school and had "some private lessons, not much," he said.

Born in Odessa and later moving to Midland, Oliver joined the Navy after he graduated from Lee High School. He served in Vietnam in 1968 and 1969.

He returned to Midland 11 years ago and has been with the fire department for almost eight and a half years, the last six of those spent as a paramedic.

"Every kid would like to be a fireman up there on the big truck," the 36-year-old father of three said with a smile.

His art work is a form of "anti-stress therapy" for him, which allows him to escape the occasionally grim aspects of his work.

"It's extremely relaxing," he said. "You get involved in this and you forget about your work-a-day life. You don't have room to think about the last patient or the house fire you went to.

"You take it one day at a time. Sometimes you see someone whose life you saved from a heart attack walking around town. Sometimes you get down there and there's nothing you can do.

"You have the rewards and the downer side. I've been in on two SIDS — sudden infant death syndromes — recently. That's the downer side.

"You go out and do the best you can with what you've got and go on from there.

"The satisfactions — while few and far between — make up for it. I find it extremely satisfying."

Working with the fire department has led Oliver to create a number of dramatic illustrations of a fireman's life. They are very different from his light-hearted children's mural. The pencil drawings he keeps in his sketch book also include several nautical themes influenced by the time he spent in the Navy and the drawings of cowboy and ranch life that come naturally to a West Texas artist.

"I like to do things in a more serious vein," he said. "You want someone to hang around and say, 'Hey, that's worthwhile.'"

Oliver is pleased with his work on the mural, though.

"I've always wanted to do something on walls other than the graffiti you see. It's sort of a secret desire to do something permanent and large scale like that. Plus it's a learning experience. In art you're always learning something.

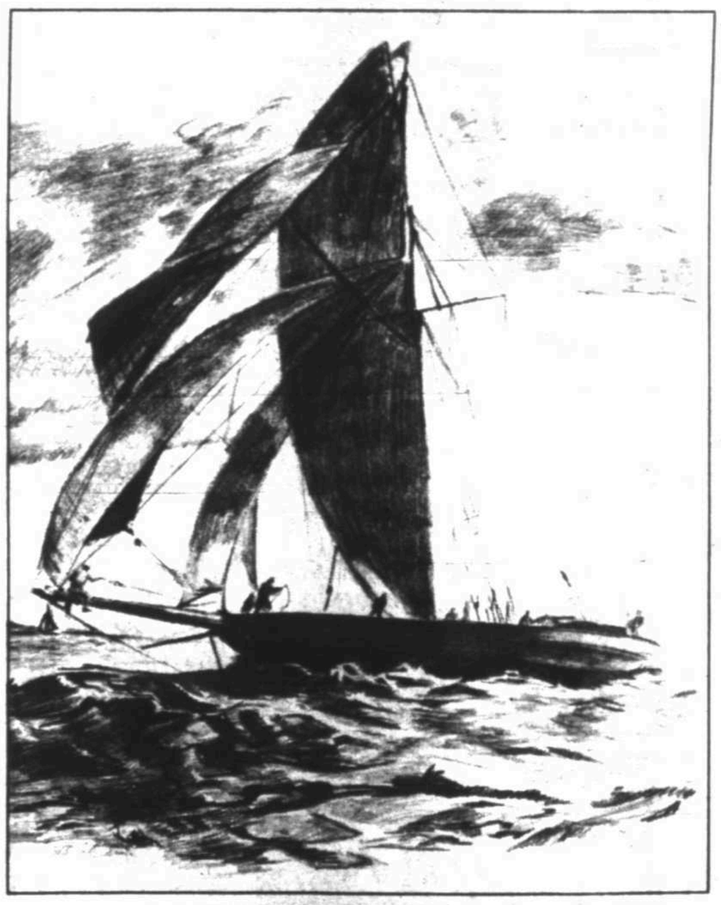

"It's more than a hobby. I'd like to go to school and find out what mistakes I've been making and speed things along. I'd like to do more with it."

Oliver, an active church volunteer, also enjoys doing work that he sees as serving God.

"He gave me the talent and I'll use it for His honor and glory.," said Oliver.

He looked at the colorful mural later and grinned. "It's almost sinful, the amount of fun I had doing this," he said.

Dynasty's tennis pro a heartthrob

Copley News Service

Up until recently if you stopped any woman on the street and asked her who the sexiest man on the tennis circuit is, she may very well have answered Bjorn Borg or Vitas Gerulaitis or even Jimmy Connors. But suddenly along came last season's premiere of "DYNASTY" (the nighttime creme de la soap) and all that changed. Instantly, the sexiest and most sought after "tennis pro," both on and off the courts became Geoffrey Scott, aka Mark Jennings.

As "Dynasty's" contribution to outdoor (not to mention indoor) sports, the character of Jennings romanced three of the most beautiful women on prime time (namely Joan Collins, Linda Evans and Pamela Sue Martin), and in the process stole the hearts of an entire female audience, mine included! With his rugged good looks and romantic appeal, Geoffrey has certainly elevated the idea of taking tennis lessons to a new height.

"I really do play tennis," says the actor who you may remember as the heart throb in the "I'd walk a mile for a Camel" cigarette ads, as well as for his feature roles on "The Virginian" and 'Concrete Cowboys" with Jerry Reed. "But," he continues, "I really think of myself as an actor playing a part and not a tennis pro trying to act. In fact, I probably played better before I was on the show because I had more time to practice."

Although he now spends more time on the set and less time winning one, Geoffrey does believe that exercise is the key to staying in shape.

"I'm not a real health nut," he confides, "but I do know that without exercise the rest of it makes little sense. No matter how many vitamins you take or how much 'health food' you eat, without a regular disciplined program of exercise it's almost like wasting your time on the other things."

When he has time, this heart throb does enjoy playing tennis, skiing and golfing, but he does play them strictly for sport. When it really comes down to getting in shape, running is his forte.

"I do think moderation is important," he continues "and if you're out of shape it's wrong to do too much at once. You can't expect to run a mile right away ... you'll feel awful and get discouraged. Start by just walking a mile and then run maybe an eighth of a mile. And if you can, balance it with some yoga or calisthenics to get you in shape. The more you make exercise a part of your life," he concludes, "the less of a chore it seems. Once you start and pass the two-week mark, it gets a lot easier to make it a part of your life."

When it comes to exercise of the heart, Geoffrey's fantasies include lots of romance, but his idea of the ideal SUPER BEAUTY is as varied as there are women in the world.

"I guess I'm a romantic in my fantasies more than I am in real life," he confesses. "I do love to bring flowers and beautiful gifts, and I like the idea of candlelit suppers ... I just don't do it as much as I'd like to. But, I do believe that if a man and woman are in love they should spend a lot of time together ... and I guess that's a pretty romantic notion."

And just what kind of woman brings out the romance in Geoffrey Scott's soul?

"It's a chemistry," he says, "it's something in her eyes that just draws me in ... and to label her as having to look a specific way is wrong. I don't think we ever really know what attracts us to somebody because attraction itself is still such a mystery. And even if you have in your mind, a certain fantasy of the way you'd like a woman to look, in reality you can be attracted to someone who looks altogether different.

Plant extract used to treat glaucoma

NEW YORK (AP) — An experimental plant extract used to treat glaucoma, one of the leading causes of blindness, may have important advantages over existing drugs and could help scientists discover the cause of the disease, a researcher says.

The new drug, an extract from a relative of the houseplant known as coleus, "significantly lowered" pressure in the eyes of 10 volunteers with normal vision, according to a report in the current issue of The Lancet, a British medical journal.

Glaucoma, an eye disease that has struck nearly 2 million people over age 35, is marked by excessive fluid pressure inside the eye.

"We don't know yet whether this is an important therapy. We think it has a chance of being an important one," said Dr. Marvin Sears, chairman of the ophthalmology department at the Yale University School of Medicine and the director of the new study.

"We believe this is an exciting breakthrough in understanding the mechanism (of the disease)," Sears said in a telephone interview Thursday.

If diagnosed and treated early, glaucoma usually won't cause serious eye damage, but the National Society to Prevent Blindness in New York says more than half of the disease's victims don't know they have it.

The coleus extract, called forskolin, will not be available for general use until more research is done, Sears said.

The most important of the drug's several advantages is that doctors know how the drug works, which means it should be easier to monitor its use. "It would make us all happier," Sears said.

In the cells of the eye, forskolin acts on an enzyme called adenylate cyclase to reduce the flow of fluid into the eye, thus reducing pressure in the eye.

Midlanders raise glittering $37,200 for High Sky

Gerald Nobles, Jr., board member of the High Sky Girls Ranch, gives the audience a closer look at the Saint Louis liquer decanter with four champagne glasses on a silver tray before the bids begin. The set sold for $1,200.

By LISA GERLOCK

The room sparkled at the Midland Country Club Wednesday night as local benefactors gathered for the Ninth Annual Crystal Ball to benefit the High Sky Girls Ranch.

The group was welcomed with music by the Mal Fitch Orchestra of Dallas, clowns, balloons, sparkling lights on the ceilings and a colorful, faceted display of crystal items to be auctioned.

The highest bid of the evening was $9,000 for a pair of Lalique crystal swans on an oval-etched mirror. Other items sold from $600 to $3,000 for a total of $37,200, announced later in the evening.

Attendees enjoyed dancing and a breakfast buffet featuring fresh fruit, sausage, Eggs Benedict, biscuits and gravy and an exotic chocolate-strawberry dessert.

Emcee Dale Robertson kept the evening alive with his stage talents. Credits to his name are 63 major motion pictures and several segments in such television shows as "Matt Houston," "Dynasty," "Dallas" and "Love Boat." He is filming a new series called "American Horse and Horseman."

Auctioneer Joe Skeen kept alert as he upped bids on items, resisted those who insisted on bidding against themselves and tried to convince auctioneers not to climb in increments of $50.

Richard Blythe, dierctor of High Sky Girls Ranch, gave the welcome address to the crowd.

Co-Chairman of the benefit are Alfred Boudreaux and Mrs. Bob L. Johnson.

Sky High board members include Dan P. Black, Mrs. Ross Brunner, Gary Burnett, Mrs. John Hackney, Jack Hauke, Bob Hicks, Steve Huggins, Jack Moore, Kenneth Peeler, Mrs. Ervin Philpy, Mrs. Wilbur Yeager, Jim Alsup, Alfred Budreaux, Holt Cowden, David Hurta, Mrs. Jack L. Bronwyn Conly, left, and Sandra Dragisk take a preview peek of the crystal pieces at the Ball. The auction alone raised $37,200, according to Dorothy Stovell, a chairman of the benefit.

The dance floor was one of the more popular areas during the evening, as attendees danced the night away to the sounds of the Mal Fitch Orchestra of Dallas.

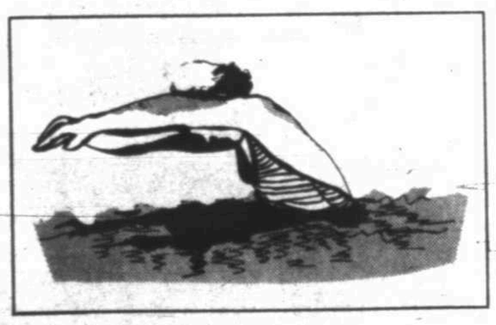

Jack Hauke, board member of the High Sky Girls Ranch, left, and Wynky the clown talk "balloons." Wynky and company performed their balloon magic throughout the evening, distorting balloon shapes in forms of animals, fruits...even "E.T."

"I look like a Pinochio with a sore nose," said actor Dale Robertson, right, after Wynky placed the balloon on his nose. Robertson emceed the event.

Copley News Service

Wine is a fun topic. Besides the history and romance, besides the fascinating people and besides the superb experiences one can have cooking with wine, there is the liquid itself. It offers far more richness of taste experience than any other beverage, and it can make any meal, no matter how mundane, take on a festive air.

Yet people seem reluctant to learn about the subject. Americans consume an infinitesimal amount of wine, compared with the French, Germans, Italians and British. In those countries, wine is viewed not as a feared "alcoholic beverage," but as an integral part of the daily diet; in this country there lingers a residual "demon rum" image because it is, after all, a product that has alcohol in it.

To this day, neo-Prohibitionists warn of the massive danger of all alcoholic beverages, with broadside attacks that equate cheap whisky with fine wine.

Yes, I realize that any wine, even $50 bottles Cabernet Sauvignon, may be abused. But the likelihood of such wines being used intentionally to get a "high" is virtually nil. If someone wanted merely to get a buzz on, the choice would be something higher in alcohol, not something in which the alcohol is down around 11 to 12 percent.

Breaking down the stereotypes about wine — making the differentiation between it and other alcoholic beverages — is one of the goals of the large walk-around wine tastings. The patron pays a modest fee (something between $8 and $20 for most of these functions), takes a glass and wanders around the room tasting this and that.

Usually, wine makers or winery personnel are behind the tables pouring, and they are happy — nay, eager — to answer any question, no matter how dumb it sounds, about wine. It's a great place to taste many different styles of wine, and to determine which ones you like, write them down, and seek them out on store shelves. It saves you the cost of buying various bottles at the shop, taking them home for a taste test and only then finding you don't like them.

Take wine appreciation courses, such as those offered at local colleges.

Worldly possessions often bring mixed blessings

The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

So you think you have some of the good things in life — one of those programmable video tape recorders, a device that answers the phone for you, a gadget that keeps the swimming pool clean and another that automatically turns on the lights when you are out.

Then there are all those goodies in the kitchen — the electric knife, the Cuisinart, the meat slicer, the coffee maker, the ice maker, the juice squeezer and even something that automatically peels the potatoes. That is only part of the list and, what's more, just wait until next Christmas.

Feel good about having all that stuff? Or do you sometimes wonder whether the gadgets are running you instead of you them?

If it is the latter, a lot of experts say you are in good company. Americans apparently feel more harried than ever these days and at least part of the reason is trying to keep up with the demands on their time to purchase, store, service, repair, replace and protect all those supposedly time-saving possessions. Add to them the problems of the extra car, the bigger house and the RV parked on the side lawn, and a fellow may, poor soul, feel absolutely at wits' end.

"Americans are eating up their leisure time by overloading themselves with all kinds of gadgets, until they are worse off than they were before they had all these possessions." That is the judgment of Ernest Dichter, whose pioneering work in marketing and motivational research has helped fuel the spending splurge by inducing consumers to buy things they had not known they needed.

To be sure, material acquisitions, besides being socially and economically sanctioned, enable workers who do not find challenge, status or self-fulfillment on the job to express their individuality off the job and to reassure themselves that they are worthy of a reward. But the more people encumber their lives with possessions, the less time they have to enjoy each one, and the more harried many feel.

"Our obsession with possessions, our concern with having, our need to own the latest and newest of everything — all of these devour much of the time we could spend being," according to John Neulinger, professor of psychology at City College of New York.

The nemesis of many a homeowner is trying to keep up with all the things that keep going wrong. One La Canada, Calif., resident, asked to list the things that went wrong at his house during a typical two-week period, noted clogged downspouts, a roof leak, a dripping water faucet, weather stripping that came off the front door, and a panel that fell off the refrigerator (for the umpteenth time). Also, the exhaust fan above the stove began banging, the drive belt in the vacuum cleaner broke, the furnace pilot light blew out three times in the middle of the night, and the garage door opener, after closing the door on cue, perversely insisted on opening it again. What is more, his wife's car sprang a water leak and suffered a emergency brake cable fracture.

Quite apart from the time required to summon repairmen and wait around for them to show up, the high hourly rates charged by roofers, plumbers, electricians and other craftsmen force many homeowners into inefficient and often inept do-it-yourself patch-up jobs instead of hiring them out.

However, few homeowners have the tools or know-how to do a job as fast and as expertly as a professional. And even when expertise is not a factor, expensive tools typically save little time because of the small scale of household operations. Power-mowing the typical lawn takes as long as manual mowing — longer if you add the extra hours of work to keep the power mower in repair and the time lost in hospital emergency rooms from injuries to toes, fingers and eyes.

Similarly, "labor-saving" appliances may lighten the physical exertion of housework in the modern home, but they save little time. Looking for the right electric carving knife or other mechanized gadget and getting it ready for use often takes longer than doing the job manually. Cuisinarts take longer to set up, and wash out, than chopping vegetables by hand.

Automatic washing machines free people from the drudgery of scrubbing, rinsing and wringing laundry by hand. But studies show that women spend even more time on laundry than their mothers and grandmothers did because they have more clothes and wash them more often.

Vacuum cleaners have escalated standards of household cleanliness, tempting homeowners to spend more time than with broom, dust rag, and rug beater.

"Once you own gadgets, you feel guilty if you don't use them," motivational researcher Dichter observes.

Of course, many men find it relaxing after a sedentary week at work to putter around the house on weekends with their power saw, electric hedge trimmer and other gadgets. Similarly, women get a sense of accomplishment in tidying the house and performing other housekeeping tasks, with or without gadgets.

"Most women still feel there is something noble about housework, and they feel guilty about hiring someone else to do it," according to Judith Langer, whose New York market research company recently conducted an extensive survey of working women. "Even women who assert their hatred for housework seem to feel a special possessiveness about it."(Some just hate it, period.)

What many conscientious homemakers do not bargain for, though, is the time it takes to keep their home stocked with all the detergents, polishes, paper goods, food, drink and sundries that the TV commercials convince them to consider essential for gracious living.

Shopping is much more time-consuming than it used to be, judging by surveys made in 1954 and 1980. Not only do shoppers buy more, but they have more to pick from. Since 1950 the typical supermarket has quintupled its stock, from 2,500 items to nearly 13,000. Just covering all the aisles can more than equal the walk to the neighborhood mom-and-pop deli of old. And waiting to check out can take longer than the selection process, especially if coupon-redeemers and check-cashers are ahead in line.

Infuriated by unproductive waiting, many harried shoppers are taking their trade to convenience stores like the 7-11 where prices are higher but shopping is quicker. However, most working women "will not pay higher prices to save time," Opinion Research Corp. found in a survey. "Nearly all look for bargains when shopping for clothes, and most take the time to compare prices when shopping for groceries and household products."

Even bargain hunters do not always have the time or patience, however, to fully inform themselves about increasingly complicated products and services. Take money management. Americans with a little excess cash used to open a passbook savings account with a fixed interest rate and set their mind at ease. Today they must choose from a dizzying array of alternatives, including certificates of deposit, small-saver certificates, money-market funds and negotiable-order-of-withdrawal accounts, each bearing different interest rates and maturity dates. Confronted with the chaos of so many options, some people do nothing.

Acquiring new possessions, of course, only begins the time-consuming process of ownership. For one thing, the propensity of machinery to go on the blink necessitates repairs that eat up consumers' time, patience and pocketbooks.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Following her recent concert in Midland, Metropolitian Opera star Roberta Peters was guest of honor at a dinner party at the home of Joanie and Bobby Holt. It was a gala affair, with a clear April sky overhead as the 30 guests assembled on the Holts' patio and around the pool for the Mexican supper. Miss Peters and her entourage were very impressed with the beautiful spring evening, but no one more favorably so than the long-time West Texans attending the party. Guitarist Geoff Walker provided background accompaniment.

Miss Peters was accompanied by her husband, Bert Fields, and her pianist, Marshall Williamson, along with Marshall's mother and aunt, who came out from Fort Worth for the concert. Over from Odessa was art dealer Nelda Lee, who was high bidder in the Museum of the Southwest's Auction '83 for tickets for two for Miss Peters' concert and dinner afterwards. She was accompanied by a friend visiting from Sweden.

Midland guests were Ann and Bascom Mitchell, Nancy and Buddy Anguish, Paula and Frank Cahoon, Johnna and Sid Curle, Tita and Zander Kaspar, Terry and Jack Wilkinson, Zuma (Mrs. Charles) Renaud, Louis Renaud, Holly and Barry Williamson, Andrea and Richard Catania, Ruth Cole, Peggy Leeton, Georgia Temple and Pat Hooks.

BETTY AND HORACE TURNER enjoyed a delightful two-week trip in April to London and Paris. Flying first to London where they stayed at the picturesque Charles Dickens Hotel across from Hyde Park, they had the pleasure of dining with former Odessans, Dorthy and Paul Green. Paul is vice president of Hughes Tool Company for its European and Middle Eastern operations.

London is well known for its numerous pubs, and the Midlanders were particularly enchanted with "The Swan," where they enjoyed the traditional English fare. Touring Paris had its delights, including dining in the city's many famous restaurants. Their favorite was the 13th Century Wine Cellar, a restaurant located in what is actually an authentic wine storage cellar.

THE WEEKEND of April 22 was a very special one for Dorothy and Jack Campbell. Not only did it signal his retirement after 37 years service with Exxon, but it was a family reunion, bringing their four children all together for the first time in five years.

Festivities began on Friday afternoon when Jack, who was joint interests coordinator at the time of his retirement, was honored at an office reception by his fellow employees. He was presented a core lamp from the employees and a silver chafing dish by the company. Special touches included a picture of the employees which had been mounted for hanging in his home and a poem written and read by Bill Nolan paying tribute to Jack and his long company service. Two special cakes had been prepared, one Texas-shaped and the other depicting his favorite hobby of golf. That evening, Jack was honored by Exxon with a dinner at Ranchland Hill Country Club.

The Campbells opened their home for a party on Saturday night to enable their close friends to meet their children and grandchildren, Dr. John B. Campbell of San Diego, Lee and J. Kennett Campbell and children, Adriane, John, Daniel and Spencer of Dallas, W. Harley Campbell and son, Chase, of Oklahoma City and Gloria and Mike Wilson of Tulsa.

Wine and cheese and a light buffet were served, and "Happy Retirement" signs and balloons decorated the party rooms. Co-hosting the party were Moira and Leonard Attwell, Dottie and Norman Barker and Elizabeth and Lloyd Haseltine.

WHEN BETH ORMAND and Steve Hall recited wedding vows Saturday evening in Dallas, the bride was carrying the same Bible that her mother had carried in her wedding 25 years ago (Beth's parents, Midland residents, Ann and Don Ormand, celebrated their silver anniversary last September) and also the white beaded bag she carried when she was presented as a debutante at Odessa's Crystal Ball.

The wedding was in Perkins Chapel on the SMU campus, and the reception followed at the Belo Mansion in downtown Dallas. The bride's chosen colors of pink and white were used to decorate both locales. Honored guests at the wedding were the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Ray Ormand of Odessa, and her grandfather, W.D. James of Crockett.

Before leaving for their honeymoon destination of Maui in Hawaii, the newlyweds were surprised with leis given them by Judy and C.D. "Bud" Martin to complement their "going-away" attire. Upon their return from Hawaii, the Halls will make their home in Dallas, where Steve is employed by Transwestern Property Company. Both are graduates of SMU, where Beth was a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma and Steve, of Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

A round of parties in Midland, Dallas and the groom's hometown of Sherman preceded the wedding. To announce the couple's engagement, Judy and Bud Martin and Jennifer and Steve Turney of Fort Worth entertained with a beautiful champagne supper at the Racquet Club. Other parties in Midland were a salad luncheon and kitchen shower given by Carlene (Mrs. Herb) Ware, Angie (Mrs. Carroll) Grafa, Betsy (Mrs. Andrew) Kauffman, Jane Kauffman and Fran (Mrs. Joe) Hilliard in the Ware home; a Cocktail Fiesta hosted by Barbara and Mike Roberts and Betty and Chuck Cerf at the Robert's home, and a "Relaxed Affair" Brunch given by Frances Metcalfe in her home. The maid of honor, Suzanne Ormand, entertained for her sister with a Spinster Weekend Party at Horseshoe Bay.

In Sherman, a cocktail party was hosted by the groom's parents, Nell and Levis Hall, and his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Hall, in the latter's home, and a luncheon was given by another uncle and aunt, Admiral and Mrs. William Kearney Phillips at Tanglewood Country Club. Incidentally, the groom comes from one of Sherman's oldest families, and his father has authored and published a book on their family history. They are owners of Hall Furniture Store, which was established in the 1800s.

Dallas parties included a cocktail/bar shower given by Nancy and Ron Ormand, cousins of the bride; a linen shower and luncheon at the Chaparral Club, Margaritas, Mexican Food and Book Shower, the Hall-Ormand Mexican Express Party, a bus party from Dallas to Fort Worth for dinner at "Joe T. Gracia's," a Sunday Veranda Party, and a personal shower for the bride.

Festivities immediately preceding the wedding were the bridesmaids' luncheon at the Dallas Woman's Club, the rehearsal dinner hosted by the groom's parents at the Lancers Club, and a "Pamper the Bridesmaids" party, which included lunch and swimming at The Mansion on Turtle Creek. A brunch for out-of-town guests will be given today by the bride's parents at the Dallas Hilton Inn.

Real men eat squiche

Hearst Feature Service

A real man may or may not eat quiche, but the ultimate test has to be whether or not he'll eat squiche. That's a quiche made of slugs.

After all, slugs ARE edible. They're cousins of the snail and considered by the French and some Americans to be a gastronomic treat.

According to a University of Washington Arboretum bulletin, the slug is a creature with a meaty body that is easy to clean, unlike the snail which is so small it's difficult to clean. Snails are fed bran for a week to clear out the digestive tract before the body is edible.

The bulletin even suggests how to prepare slugs for cooking. It's much like cleaning a fish, and you'll pardon if we don't go into greater detail, but it does recommend immersing the cleaned-out slug in vinegar to stop mucus secretion.

It also says that eating slugs may not catch on with gourmets, but gardeners might consider dining on them as a method of controlling the critters.

"Gardeners are encouraged to try various preparations and rituals. Note that the slug body lends itself to being stuffed!" the bulletin suggests. "A tasty garlic and bread stuffing might be exactly right. A baby carrot or a slice of zucchini might proye to be the perfect match."

Ingrith Olsen, professor of zoology at the University of Washington and a fan of slugs, says she hasn't eaten slugs and wouldn't as long as there are other sources of protein. Besides, she'd feel bad about eating something of which she is so fond.

Stress alone trigger blood vessel disease

WASHINGTON (AP) — Stress alone appears to be enough to trigger blood vessel disease, even in the absence of such known heart disease risk factors as high-fat diet and high blood pressure, researchers say.

Scientists at Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem, N.C., say their work with monkeys indicates that socially stressful situations may play a major role in cardiovascular disease for some individuals.

In a report published today in Science magazine, the researchers said psychological and social stress appears to influence heart and vessel disease even when high levels of fats are not present.

"Psychosocial factors thus may help explain the presence of coronary artery disease — occasionally severe — in people with low or normal serum lipids (fats) and normal values for the other 'traditional' risk factors," said the report.

The traditional factors believed to increase the risk of cardiovascular disease include cigarette smoking, diets high in cholesterol and other saturated fats, high blood pressure and obesity.

Previous studies with a variety of animals on high-fat diets showed that stressful situations worsened atherosclerosis. This is the buildup of fatty plaques in arteries that thicken and harden the vessels and restrict blood flow.

But Dr. Jay R. Kaplan and colleagues at Wake Forest's Bowman Gray Medical School, including Thomas B. Clarkson and Frances M. Lusso, decided to test the effects of stress on monkeys kept on low fat, almost no-cholesterol diets for 21 months.

They found that monkeys kept in stressful situations developed more abnormalities in their arteries than those living under non-stress conditions, the report said.

The cause of this arterial injury is unknown. But the researchers suspect it may be caused by elevated hormone levels or frequent increases in blood pressure and heart rate, all triggered by stress.

The scientists, working with Dr. Stephen B. Manuck of the University of Pittsburgh, used 30 male macaque monkeys divided equally into stress and non-stress groups.

FABRIC SECRETS

Sewing beads on a garment for added sparkle? It is important to wax the thread with bee's wax to prevent it from getting snarled while sewing the beads in place one at a time. Sew each bead individually, using a back stitch, to make them lie side by side with the thread line running horizontally through them. Bring the needle up from the underside of the fabric, string the bead, and lie it on its side. Then bring the needle back through the material at the end of it and to the right. Next, bring the needle back up in front of the bead, to the left, and string the next bead.

AT LEGGETTS FABRICS we take great pride in being able to meet your total sewing needs. You'll find everything from the pattern itself to the materials and notions. Our staff is very knowledgeable in our field and alwyas anxious to answer any questions you may have. Don't ever feel that your question may be "silly"..we are here to make sure you are comfortable with every aspect of home sewing. You'll find us located at 1541 Parkway, Odessa, 362-8255 and no.9 Plaza Shopping Center.

Tranquil paradise surfaces on tropical snorkeling cruise

BY JOYCE AND ELSON IRWIN
Copley News Service

MOLOKINI, Hawaii — OK, you're afraid of water and you don't care for the feel of fish. So why in the world would you want to go snorkeling?

We kept asking ourselves that question over and over the night before we took to the water aboard the 64-foot catamaran Wailea-Kai, for a snorkel cruise to Molokini, off the coast of Maui.

But once you enter the clear blue waters near this exotic islet, all fear and trepidation jump overboard.

Even the rigors of getting up at 6 a.m. to prepare for this little journey are forgotten as the Wailea-Kai, a charter operated by the Inter-Continental Hotel's Ocean Activities Center on Maui, knifed through the crystal-clear waters toward a peaceful little world only a half-hour or so away.

By 8 a.m., boarding time, the sky enveloping Ulua Beach was bright, and there was no wind stirring. The ocean appeared as a great expanse of turquoise gelatin, and Molokini could be seen with the naked eye, glowing red in the sunshine.

There were about 50 of us stalwarts waiting on the cool sand. Most of us had never been closer to snorkeling gear than the sporting goods department at J.C. Penney. The few who seemed to know what they were doing — along with the catamaran's crew — were assuring the rest of us that everything would be safe and sane.

But the designers of the boat were way ahead of them.

With a draft of only a few feet, the craft soon crawled up to the beach, where a wooden stairway was dipped into the shallow water.

Once aboard, with gear stowed away in the spacious cabin, the crew passed around trays of fresh fruit.

We assembled on the foredeck for pre-dive instructions, which, for most of us, seemed like an old Abbott and Costello routine.

By the time we anchored off Molokini, we had all perfected our mask and fin adjustments, snorkle clearing and all of the other intricate things you have to do to make sure that you'll have a pleasant underwater experience instead of a mouthful of seawater and bleary eyeballs.

One of the crew started throwing pieces of bread upon the water, drawing thousands of "enenue" (and most of the passengers) to one side of the catamaran.

"Piranhas," someone said aloud.

A rumble of chuckles swept across the deck.

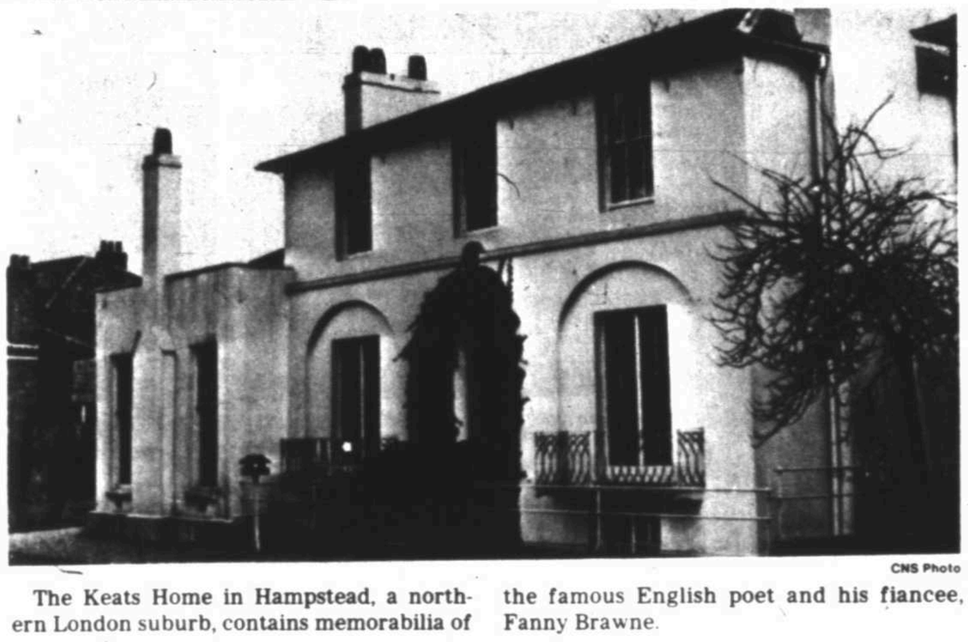

We did get some last-minute instructions about sharks.

"I'll be wearing a blue wet suit," the crew member said. "If sharks come, I want you people to find me and form a tight circle around me."

Wearing bright-orange life vests, we clung to the handrails of the stairway and descended two-by-two (like animals leaving Noah's ark) into the sparkling water.

Snorkelers board the Wailea-Kai for an idyllic cruise to Molokini, off the coast of Maui. The shallow draft enables the craft to crawl up on the beach.

The Keats Home in Hampstead, a northern London suburb, contains memorabilia of the famous English poet and his fiancee, Fanny Brawne.

Village ode to English poet

By JANET SUTTER
Copley News Service

Thou, light-winged Dryad of the trees,
In some melodious plot
Of beechen green, and shadows numberless,
Singest of summer in full-throated ease.

Seated in the garden of his cottage in Hampstead, John Keats heard birdsong nearby and penned "Ode to a Nightingale."

That was a poignant time for the poet, then a medical student, very ill and soon to die at age 25. But he left much beauty behind.

Today, anyone may walk into that garden and through the house where he lived and worked. The rooms and the furnishings are modest but gracious, and contain memorabilia of Keats and his fiancee Fanny Brawne — the poet's letters, manuscripts.

Keats House can be a wonderful, romantic start for a ramble through Hampstead. In this northern London suburb, high on a hill, one might walk in the country (the heath) or in the town, as well as walk through the past, beginning with Mr. Keats, then meet Mr. Shelley along the way. To get to the Keats Memorial House, take the underground to Hampstead station and ask directions to Keats Grove.

Now to proceed on a walk — which can be a LONG one — through eminently picturesque Hampstead village. It's refreshing to the eye, a series of arresting little houses and lanes, up and down hill, quite different from the wide streets and terraced houses of central London.

Lanes carry names like Flask Walk and Well Walk, the latter a reminder of the 17th and 18th centuries when Hampstead's springs made it fashionable as a spa. All about are the blue plaques marking houses where prominent figures lived, such as the painters John Constable and George Romney.

On High Street, the main artery of Hampstead, are many intriguing shops — bookstores where one may browse happily undisturbed and several smart dress shops, with prices to take one's breath away.

Serendipity is always the chief lure of a walk through Hampstead. Two examples are related to Fenton House, a small, lovely mansion built in 1693.

One can literally head in any direction to encounter special byways and vistas.

Treasures from the past housed in British Museum

CNS Photo

The Elgin Marbles, pieces of ancient Greek sculpture from the original Parthenon, are among the impressive art treasures displayed in the Duveen Gallery of the British Museum in London.

By RIVIAN TAYLOR
Copley News Service

LONDON — A tourist guidebook suggests that if it is raining to go to the British Museum. What a pity it would be if a visitor were to put a lot of stock in such advice and it happened to be sunny during his stay here.

Passing up the opportunity to spend some time exploring the wonders of civilization so magnificently collected and displayed in the British Musuem would be unfortunate, indeed.

From the Rosetta Stone to the Magna Carta to a love letter from Admiral Nelson on the eve of his death, this museum offers historical treasures not to be missed.

I flew into town shortly after noon and after checking into my Russell Square hotel, I decided to look for my brother who had arrived earlier from Chicgo. Our rendezvous was the British Museum, three blocks away.

I didn't find him, as I never got past the manuscript room of the British Library, which is housed in the museum. In the three hours before closing I had been unable to discover all there was to see IN JUST ONE ROOM of this wondrous place.

The museum, of course, has many rooms; in fact, more than 50, and the value and variety of the collections they house has no match anywhere. Its reputation as the greatest center of world antiquities is richly deserved. To attempt to tackle it in one day doesn't do justice to it and shortchanges the visitor.

Nonetheless, if one day is all one can devote to it, it will still be time well spent.

To the left of the museum's entrance, the Assyrian Transept displays the winged and human-headed bulls and lions that once guarded the gateways to the palaces of Assyrian kings.

Moving on to the hall of Egyptian sculpture, the Rosetta Stone, an irregularly shaped stone of black basalt that provided the key to the deciphering of ancient Egyptian hieroglyphic writing, stands out as the most noteworthy piece. The inscriptions on the stone were written in the second century B.C. and used two languages — Greek and Egyptian — and three alphabets.

Another impressive area on the ground floor, The Duveen Gallery, contains the famous Elgin Marbles. These pieces of sculpture are from a freize on the Greek Parthenon and depict a ceremonial procession that took place in Athens every four years. Featured are the to-the-death struggle between the handsome Lapiths and the grotesque drunken Centaurs.

Incidentally, of the 92 metopes from the Parthenon, 15 are housed in the British Museum, and the Greek government wants them returned to Greece. But the feeling here is this treasure will remain where it's at.

The classical sculpture galleries house wondrous pieces of art, including what may be the finest example of ancient cameo carving — the Portland Vase. During my visits to the museum, the Portland Vase was shown as part of a special exhibit commemorating the 200th anniversary of the Roman poet Virgil. The cobalt blue and opaque white vase was crafted between 27 B.C. and A.D. 14 during his lifetime and was a luxury item for a wealthy Roman.

More treasures await upstairs: From ancient Egypt are cosmetics, domestic utensils, toys, tools and, of course, mummies. Examples of 4,000-year-old Summerian and Babylonian art include a bull-headed queen's harp and the oldest known example of a land vehicle, a royal sledge.

Back on the first floor, the galleries of the British Library should not be missed.

In the Kings Library — where Karl Marx spent most of his time studying after he was expelled from Prussia and France in 1849 — the collection includes a First Folio of Shakespeare's plays from 1623 and a Gutenberg Bible from 1455. Also, a first illustrated edition of Dante's "The Divine Comedy" from 1481 and a first edition of Voltaire's parable, "Candide," which dates to 1759.

For the young at heart, there's the first English edition of Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland," published in 1865, and the first edition of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island," dated 1883.

On display in the manuscript room are two of the surviving copies of the Magna Carta, the great charter of English liberties granted by King John in 1215 under threat of civil war.

As to that guidebook, all I can say is, "Rubbish." The British Museum should not be missed, rain or shine.

Mexico resort hotels overbooking

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Mexico's tourism department, which had just set new maximum room rates to curb the overcharging of some foreign hotel guests growing out of the latest peso devaluation, has recently been confronted with a new mini-crisis: overbooking.

Some tourists have been told upon arrival in certain resort areas that rooms reserved in advance and paid for were not available; others have been required to accept lodging of lesser quality than that originally booked, and in some cases travelers have had to abort their vacations.

Gogo Tours of Paramus, N.J., a major U.S. wholesaler-retailer of packages to Mexico, and one of a number of operators who have received consumer complaints, decided last month to stop selling trips to Cancun and Cozumel until April 15, according to Fred Niethamer. Those two resorts were among the hardest-hit, said Niethamer, manager of Gogo's Washington-Baltimore regional office.

"In some cases people were getting off planes and being told to get back on." If a client still insists on making a reservation, Niethamer said, "we mark the record to show the traveler was advised there is a severe overbooking problem."

Niethamer pointed out that it should be the responsibility of any hotel operator, when a confirmed reservation cannot be honored due to overbooking, to "walk the guest" to another hotel and provide a room of equal or better quality without additional charge. But that option does not exist when there are no other rooms available.

Another area hit recently by a similar but less severe problem was Nassau, Niethamer said. Tourism to the Bahamas has been booming since Americans became a little less apprehensive about the U.S. economy, he noted.

The American Consulate General at Mazatlan, Mexico, quoted in a State Department travel advisory, warned that "as early as March 26 all (Mazatlan) hotels will probably be overbooked."

Easter week, which traditionally is a time of heavy travel by North Americans to Mexico, and a period when Mexicans enjoy their Semana Santa vacation within their own country, may have seen the climax to a problem that has — at one time or another — affected many of the world's major tourism areas.

The situation is now expected to be normal in most sections of the country, including Mexico City, which was not affected.

Late last year, in a reaction to the severe downturn in U.S. tourism to Mexico caused partly by confusion over the government's currency policy, hoteliers in major tourist areas like Cancun, Cozumel — and, to a lesser extent, in Mazatlan, Puerto Vallarta and Acapulco — apparently began overselling blocks of rooms.

They were worried about the economy and assumed that cancellations would provide adequate space. But when Americans on a sudden winter vacation binge realized in January that Mexico again was a bargain destination and began flying into the major resort areas, hotels were unable to honor all individual and package reservations. One tour operator estimated that overbooking at some properties has been as high as 20 to 40 percent.

The Mexican government, which has always put a high priority on tourism and is in need of the foreign currency it generates, particularly at this time of economic belt-tightening under its new president, immediately recognized the difficulty and promptly took steps to deal with it.

Faced with protests from the U.S. travel industry, which had been contacted by unhappy returning tourists seeking refunds, the Mexican government first called an "emergency meeting" of hotel operators in Mexico City.

"The government is taking steps to rectify the situation," said an official of the Mexican National Tourism Council in New York in a statement last month. He explained that each hotel owner had been directed to discuss with his suppliers in North America ways to reach "an equitable arrangement" to end the overbooking.

In addition, the hotel operators had selected a delegation of 10 representatives to hold "serious work sessions" with travel wholesalers in tourism centers in North America. The group held face-to-face discussions and gave assurances to U.S. tour operators that the problem was being resolved.

At the first meeting, held in New York, the Mexican hoteliers told their suppliers that they had been totally unprepared for the peso devaluation, reported one observer. They asked the travel agents not to sell up to the limit of their room allocations, thus leaving a safety margin.

Tourists with tapes

Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK – It used to be easy to spot the tourists here. They were the ones wearing harried looks and about 47 pounds of cameras, guide books, maps and brochures.

But up-to-date tourists will feature nothing more cumbersome than a "walkman" headphone and a smile, if Pathfinder has truly found its own route to success. The company's innovation is a series of five tapes, each providing a 90-minute narrative to accompany a walking tour of some of New York's most famous areas.

Clever tourists will immediately see the possibilities of snapping souvenir photos along the taped route, ending up with a self-made narrated slide show for the folks back home.

But what makes the electronic guides of this particular venture worthy of note is the quality information contained in each tape. They are highly informative chronicles of both the period of history and the geographical area covered, told in a conversational style.

In the Midtown Fifth Avenue tape (which ranges from 42nd to 59th Streets along the avenue), we learn that the Cartier Building was once traded for a string of pearls. On a tour of the downtown financial district with the Wall Street and Olde New York tape, a chatty voice reveals that more gold is stored in the vaults of the Federal Bank of New York than in all of Fort Knox.

The puzzle of those four large slabs of uncarved stone outside the Metropolitan Museum is solved in the Millionaire's Mile tape. It seems the original builders simply ran out of money before they could commission a sculptor for the marble.

Smoking can cause variety of problems

By JEFF ROWE
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — A year ago, my neighbor's daughter made an appointment to see her family physician.

A nagging winter cold had turned into pneumonia, she feared, because the congestion in her lungs would not go away.

A few tests later, her fears turned to terror when the doctor told her she had lung cancer that was spreading so fast she might not make it to Christmas.

Mary — not her real name — had three children and was divorced from her husband. She was a smoker.

A few days before Thanksgiving, Mary's condition deteriorated rapidly and she was admitted to the hospital. On the day before Thanksgiving, she went into convulsions. Valium calmed her and relieved some of the pain but she died a few hours later, her body racked by a disease many find too frightening to even pronounce.

She had not yet reached her 34th birthday.

The family donated the body to the University of California at Los Angeles, hoping that perhaps science could learn more about the disease often referred to as a lengthy illness or some other euphemism.

Death at a young age is sad; needless death at any age is tragic.

I don't think her physicians ever said Mary's disease was directly linked to her smoking habit. But study after study has linked cigarette smoking so strongly to cancer that only the foolish would ignore the connection.

"Cigarette smoking is the chief, single avoidable cause of death in our society," said C. Everett Koop, U.S. Surgeon General.

If you are one of the 54 million Americans who smoke, however, you may want to ignore Koop's assertion and put your faith, instead, in Reginald Lester, a spokesman for the Tobacco Growers Information Committee. Lester says, "There are no studies in existence which can prove a causal link between cigarettes and any disease."

Well, Reg, the lung cuts I saw in freshman physiology told a different tale. The slice of lung from the non-smoker was pink — normal tissue color; the slice from the smoker was as black and dirty as an air filter that's been on a car 50,000 miles too long.

To tell you the truth, I'm not really that concerned with persuading smokers to grind out their butts and come to the land of clean air. I figure if they want to continue with a habit that turns their teeth rusty and depletes their money, fine.

It does seem to me, though, that too many of the 630 billion cigarettes sold in 1982 ended up as butts strewn on the floors, streets and parks of America. If you were to toss a cup and some food wrappers on the ground after finishing lunch, people would rightly label you a slob. But grind a butt on the floor of a store and that seems somehow acceptable.

What isn't acceptable is this statistic provided by the National Center for Health Statistics: $25 billion was lost to employers in 1982 because of sick smokers.

Numbers only measure part of the pain, however.

What's really sad is the broken heart Mary's mother is left with. Mary's youngest child will have no such problem, though.

She's too young to remember anything about her mother.

Guide lists smoker's body language

Copley News Service

Cigarette smokers, like golfers, have many theories on the proper grip.

Here, to serve as an introduction to beginners and as a review for the experienced smoker, is a rundown on the various techniques:

— The V-grip. In this position, the smoker controls the cigarette between the index and middle fingers. This is the most popular grip, and the easiest for beginners to master. Done incorrectly, with the remaining fingers clasped, this can look like a Boy Scout salute, however.

— Fist grip. Similar to the V-grip, but the cigarette is held lower in the fingers, very near the palm. Disadvantage is the smoker's hand tends to cover half the face when puffing.

— Thumb and forefinger curl. In this position, the cigarette is grasped between the thumb and forefinger and held inside the curl of the hand. This somewhat hides the cigarette and is recommended for people who are ashamed to be smoking. This grip looks ridiculous when used by women and is not recommended for them.

— Torch carry. This is similar to the thumb and forefinger curl, but instead of carrying the cigarette perpendicular to the fingers, it is held up like a candle. Generally, this grip is used by highly eccentric people.

— Cue grip. The forefinger encircles the cigarette in this technique, and the thumb is used to provide proper leverage. As the cigarette burns down, however, it can burn the index and ring fingers. Recommended for experienced smokers.

Oraflex tested as possible psoriasis medicine

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The anti-arthritis drug Oraflex, which was withdrawn from the market last year, is being tested as a possible treatment for psoriasis, the board chairman of the Eli Lilly & Co. pharmaceutical firm says.

"Preliminary evidence has shown that Oraflex might be useful in effectively treating this condition in a certain percentage of patients," chairman Richard D. Wood said at the company's annual shareholders meeting Monday.

Oraflex, a Lilly drug, was introduced in the United States last May, but was withdrawn from the market in August after reports linked it with the deaths of patients in Great Britain and the United States.

Wood said Lilly is continuing a clinical trial program for the use of Oraflex in treating arthritis and also has begun providing Oraflex to a small number of physicians for treatment of arthritis patients who have not responded to other treatments.

A Lilly spokesman said the testing for treatment of psoriasis began this month and that clinical trials for most drugs last at least two years.

"MIRACLE" Carpet Fibres Are Back AGAIN!!

Due to the overwhelming advertising and promotional blitzkrieg being presented by carpet fibre producers, Boyd's feels a responsibility to itself and the community to make this editorial comment.

During the past 33 years the management of Boyd's has witnessed many unfounded claims made for a long list of "new" and "fantastic" (unreal, imaginary) fibres introduced to the carpet mills for use in carpet production.

You may recall the names of some of these (generic or brand names): Carpet Rayon, Viscose, Fibre "E", Chromspun, Saran, Continuous Filament Nylon, Solution-Dyed this or that, 501, Cumuloft, Inkaloft, Acrylic, Acrilan, Polyester, Fortrel, Verel Kodel, Dacron, Olefin..., Etc! While some of these fibres doubtless assisted the chemical plants in the development of better fibres for our industry, a good number of them also caused considerable grief to both retailers and consumers. This store replaced hundreds of yards, at no charge to the customer, for complaints reported less than a year after installation. Who of you recalls any other store offering such service? Well, these were "Miracle" fibres of yesterday and we do not want a repeat performance for the "Miracles" of today.

What we strongly protest are the flagrant claims such as: "It (carpet made with "X" fibre) stays uniform and always looks fresh". And, "You know that carpet made with.....("X" fibre) is the most thoroughly tested carpet you can buy". Both statements are typically misleading and, in our opinion, totally false!!

An old expression in our business, and one frequently over-looked by new-comers and "Hard-Sellers" in our field, is: "Every carpet will pack, wear-out and get Dirty". Few customers, if any, would deny the simple truth of this observation.

Another fact that Midlanders have learned, some the hard way, is that any reasonable quality nylon carpet will wear for many years. The lesson learned is that a written warranty against wearing-out in 10 years does not apply to what we call "Uglying-Out". Durability is just that: How long a carpet looks good to the owner.

Carpet Needles
BULL WOOL?
There are very fine synthetics!
For sure. That's our claim!
But, remember...we'll remind you,
They're not all the same,
Experiments develop fibres;
To be as good as wool
But experience proves that
Some of them,
Are just a lot of Bull.
J.N. Stalwright

Carpet Needles
Big Deal Blues
Remember carpet rayon?
Or viscose it was changed to?
They sang and sang its praises,
How wonderful--if true.
Continuous filament! Solution dyed!
The sale ads brought the news.
But after the promotion was over,
so many sang the blues.
D. HARDAWAY

THESE TWO "NEEDLES" APPEARED IN THE MIDLAND REPORTER-TELEGRAM IN 1963.

Now, we can honestly express a sincere appreciation to the fibre folks for their development of present fibres that tend to release soil easier. Part of this condition exists from the producer's ability to reduce the irritating static build-up formerly associated with all nylon carpets. There are very few carpets on the market today that do not feature these major, advanced characteristics...soil-hiding or releasing and static-control.

A further disappointment with our fibre producers is their direct-money payments to retail store owners for "Pushing" particular fibre-content carpets. Payments for advertising and "Free" trips add to the enticements for these dealers to stock and sell only a few selected qualities of carpet. How about this: "...America's carpet retailers are earning cash rebates in what is regarded as the broadest-shouldered promotional options plan ever seen in our industry". This is quoted from a recent brochure from...("Y" Producer) requesting us, Boyd's, to enlist in their "Money Market".

At this point, there appears to be no single fibre woven into a particular carpet that is the perfect answer for retailers to claim as the best. Most carpets mills try to provide its customers with a broad range of qualities, from the lowest budget to the highest of luxury. And each of these carpets may contain any one of the highly touted "Labeled" fibers. But again, the many grades will vary greatly in quality and performance.

As Midland's first name in experience and quality carpets for many years, Boyd's will offer every highly advertised fibre available, but will also continue to present ALL those carpets worthy of consideration for use in your home or office. The number one complaint in the carpet industry is faulty installation. Over-Charging is not far behind!

We suggest that your retailer is the primary party responsible for your satisfaction with any carpet purchase.

Thank You,

Pageant winners

Three-year-old Melissa Howard of Midland was named "Mini Queen," of the La Petite Division (3 to 6 year old division), at the West Texas Area "Our Little Miss" pageant last month in Big Spring. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Howard.

Shea Murrell, 11, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Murrell, of Midland, was named the talent winner in the 7 to 12 year old division.

Catherine Furgeson was second runner-up in the "Ideal Miss" division, ages 13 to 17. Miss Furgeson is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Don Furgeson, of Midland.

Moving difficult for child

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — If parents have a good attitude about moving and communicate it to their children it will help the youngsters to adapt to the change in their lives, a specialist in the moving industry suggests.

"Your attitude before the move is extremely important," said Layton Baker, communications director for U-Haul International.

Since moving can be a traumatic experience, make it an adventure for your kids, advises Baker, who offers some tips on helping children understand and adjust to a move:

— Involve the children. As soon as you know you are moving, tell them something about their new home. If you are moving a long distance, write to the Chamber of Commerce for information on the area so the children will know what to expect. If you can learn something about their new schools, it will help build their enthusiasm.

— En route to the new place, it is especially important to keep children entertained.

American Cancer Society area chairman Emily Blonkvist, left, Caroline Hundley, center and Susan Lucas, co-chairmen, count part of $25,300, collected from the local chapter's residential educational and fundraising drive. Goal of the crusade was $20,000.

The Society's area chairmen — Emily Blonkvist, Dana Nipp and Carla Hamblin — turned in donations gathered by more than 500 Midland volunteers.

During the crusade, volunteers distributed special health surveys at area homes, which the Society hopes will be completed and submitted to the organization to assist them in planning future local educational programs.

The survey results will be used by volunteers to determine more effective education programs in this area according to Caroline Hundley, Chairman of the 1983 Residential Cancer Crusade here.

If survey results indicate, for example, very few women in this area regularly examine themselves for breast cancer, ACS volunteers will be alerted so that programs of this nature become a priority.

The society feels it is important to the crusade that the community understand its expenditures.

Here is a breakdown of how each dollar ($1.04) raised last year is being spent this fiscal year in Texas: cancer research, 25 cents; professional education, 16 cents; public education, 22 cents; service and rehabilitation, 23 cents; program development and administration, 6 cents and crusade, 12 cents.

New technique pinpoints common white blood cells

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A recently developed technique has made it possible to detect a new form of the most common white blood cell in the human body.

Dr. Jacob S. Hanker, professor at the Dental Research Center at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and Beverly L. Giammara, senior electron microscopist at the Microelectronics Center of North Carolina, call the new cell type the neutrophil pseudoplatelet. They say it is the offspring of the common neutrophil, an infection-fighting white cell that until now was not thought to evolve into other forms.

Phobias

MONTREAL (AP) — A French-language publication has come up with 600 words to describe phobias, or fears.

The list appeared in a 157-page book called "Neologie en marche." Neologie refers to new words entering the language.

Sample words as they appeared in French include:

— Pisozomophobie: A phobia of pea soup

— Pagodromagonophobe: Someone who doesn't like hockey.

— Tretragoniospherisophobe: Someone who doesn't like baseball.

— Rhombospherisophobe: A synonym for the above.

Midland man wins rose prizes

A Midland man recently captured seven blue ribbons in the annual American Rose Society Spring Rose Show and Convention in San Antonio.

Jim Galyean, past president of the Midland Rose Society, took first place awards with seven of the eight arrangements he entered in the show.

Galyean's awards included Gold, Silver and Bronze Certificates; King of the Show Award for best arrangement in the men's class and the Nora Kalterman National Trophy for best arrangement in the open class. He also won the Artist Award for the best creative design in the Modern, Abstract and Oriental Division.

Galyean is a national judge and a consulting rosarian in the American Rose Society.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I just received the worst present I have ever received — an 11x14 framed picture of my mother-in-law, in living color yet! I've been married to her son for nearly 24 years and she has never liked me.

Her son and I have given her several beautifully framed pictures of our only child — a lovely daughter — but she never displayed any of them. I assume they are stuck in a drawer, which is where I would like to stick hers, but out of respect for my husband, I have it hanging. (I would like to use it as a dartboard!)

Her daughter is her favorite child, so in turn her daughter's child is her favorite grandchild, as she has shown in a thousand ways. This lady really has gall!

I was afraid if I didn't hang her picture it might cause trouble between my husband and me, which I know would delight her. I prefer to have peace in the family so I'm not about to tell her how I feel.

Gee, I'm glad I can unload this on you, Abby. Have you ever had a letter like this before? — DISGUSTED IN N.J.

DEAR DISGUSTED: Yes. Because my column is a trouble dump, more people write to complain, sound off and vent their hostilities than to share their joy.

To balance the scale, I offer the following day-brightener from a mother-in-law who wrote from Cape Coral, Fla. And what more appropriate time to run it than on Mother's Day:

DEAR ABBY: I am enclosing a letter I received from my new daugher-in-law, married one year this June. She took care of me for the two weeks following my surgery. I hope you find it worth printing. — MRS. I. LIBERIES

"Dear Mother: I am writing you this letter in case the hustle of my departure prevents me from telling you all my feelings.

"These last two weeks, everyone has told me how wonderful I've been to come and take care of you, and how much it has benefited you. What they don't realize is that it is I who have benefited from this experience more than I can express.

"During these last two weeks, I have come to know — truly know — a very gracious lady. You! I have learned that you are understanding and considerate, warm, affectionate and compassionate. But the greatest thing that I have discovered is that you are my friend. I wish all daughters-in-law could have the experience I have had. I will never forget the many lessons I have learned from you as well as your wonderful neighbors, who also love you.

"Most of all, I will cherish our new-formed friendship always. You are a great companion.

"In observing you and your many friends and neighbors these past two weeks, I have seen what growing old is all about. Surely, there are illness and hard times, but what has shown through like a bright ray of sunlight is the courage you all carry, and the gusto with which you all live every day to the fullest regardless of the obstacles.

"The most valuable revelation through these observations is that I have discovered that I am not afraid of growing old!

"What a truly wonderful lesson! What a wonderful experience! Thank you for making it possible. All my love, Bettie"

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about drugs, sex and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WIT'S END

Adults become children again

By ERMA BOMBECK

I had a dream the other night that I can't get out of my mind. The adults of the world became the children and the children ran the world.

It was terrible, standing down there wedged among all those knees. I couldn't get a drink of water, mail a letter, or open a door. Cars were even worse. If you didn't kill yourself getting to a window you just sat there on the seat with your legs sticking straight out, staring at the back of the seat. Every once in awhile, the child driving would say, "You sit down or you're going to break your neck. You know I can't drive and yell at you at the same time." But that wasn't true.

At the supermarket, I was just standing there when without a warning, someone whipped me off the floor and forced my legs through a grocery cart seat that was so cold my teeth frosted up.

I never got introduced. Sometimes, someone would say, "Oh, is this your youngest parent . . . or your only girl?" Or someone would say how much you looked like someone, but for all purposes, I had no name.

I took naps when I wasn't sleepy, ate when I wasn't hungry, had sweaters put on me when I wasn't cold and got thrown into swimming pools when I didn't want to swim.

I was tossed into the air when I had an upset stomach, forced to go to the bathroom whether I had to go or not, and ordered to stop crying when I had a perfectly good reason for doing it.

There were apartments with signs on the lawn that said, "NO PETS OR ADULTS." There were movies and rides that announced, "ADULTS MUST BE ACCOMPANIED BY CHILDREN 12 YEARS OR UNDER." Occasionally, everyone would laugh and when I asked what they were laughing about, they would say, "We'll tell you when you're younger."

I never did anything right. I played with chewing gum, wiped my hands off on my dress, leaned back on chairs, made faces in the toaster, and sniffed instead of using a handkerchief. Once when I came into the kitchen with a comb in my hand, I thought life was all over.

I crayoned when I was supposed to, played with strangers when I was told to, and washed my hands 50 million times a day. I was "seen a lot and not heard," given reasons of "Because I said so, that's why" and told with regularity, "You should have gone before you left home."

But the worst part was that people kept telling me, "This is the best part of your life, so enjoy it."

AT WORK

Art involved in selling

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

Q. I don't like the idea of work anymore. I've both quit and been fired repeatedly over the past six years. I only want to do art. I've recently published my first edition of prints and have found some shops to sell for me. But they move slowly and I'm having trouble finding money to produce more. How do I find more money or backers?

A. You've picked a difficult commodity — art — but it is not impossible. Now you have to find an angle. Who does your art appeal to most? Any kind of group, industry or individual? Go after that market.

Or, you can show your work to interior decorators and offer them a percentage of what they sell. Or find an enterprising agent and see if more sales can't be created.

Go directly to banks and other large industries and ask first for a public show in their lobbies, then ask them to purchase some for their own collections. Or, get together a large group of friends, family and colleagues and brainstorm the whole thing.

In one city, a group of 12 investors created a wonderful restaurant specializing in gourmet omelets and wine with an accompanying gallery of folk art. Each investor put in several thousand dollars and today it is a first-rate restaurant and the gallery has become a museum. You might think of something along these lines. Or provide the work to be sold at auctions for charities and other philanthropic or political groups.

Q. Last year, at 31, I moved to our West Coast sales division. But instead of it being great, I was bored, lonely and not as charged up as I had hoped. I tried, but failed to get into an MBA program. Should I try again?

A. No. You crave excitement and a network to plug in to. School is expensive, and why pay for something you can get in the normal process of working?

First, look under your very nose; any corporation is an internal labor force with a myriad of projects, committees, workshops or task forces to join or start. Look in your own department and in others as well.

At the same time, find out what organizations or societies the people you admire belong to, and find one that clicks. Then get fully involved. It's up to you to start the fires and keep them fanned.

Q. I am a disillusioned lawyer. I graduated from law school two years ago with good grades and passed the bar the first time I took it. However, my job hunting efforts have been very disappointing. The only jobs I have been able to find have been temporary or extremely low paying. My question is: With my legal background, what non-legal careers might I consider?

A. Before you think of leaving law, let's reconsider a job search.

No doubt you've sent out dozens of resumes, so don't repeat the senseless procedure. Instead, look strategically for connections.

First, your law school. Call on those professors you were impressed with and ask for referrals and ideas. Then call other students who were in class with you. Then if nothing comes of that, volunteer your legal services for an association or group, like a political or civic one, so that you can in fact work with and meet already-connected people.

Finally, even though you must be feeling desperate, stop for a minute and think about your passions — not just to get employed, but to see what really interests you... sports? games? gadgets? There is an industry around each interest. Go investigate. If it is sports, then every team or sports equipment company needs an in-house lawyer or manager.

Combine your skills with your interests and your own energy will carry you further with those interviews.

Santos is the fourth recipient of the $1,000 award.

Illnesses hit depressed

NEW YORK (AP) — Researchers are beginning to learn why people who are depressed are more likely to get sick — a study shows their disease-fighting white blood cells are weakened.

In a report presented Monday at the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association, Dr. Steven Schleifer of the Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York said laboratory tests showed that the white blood cells of depressed patients were much less able to respond to foreign substances than were the cells of healthy people.

Schleifer and his Mount Sinai colleagues took blood samples from 15 people diagnosed as acutely depressed and from 15 apparently healthy people of the same ages and sex.

Junk thread no bargain

Copley News Service

What is thread? It is that string that holds all your clothes together. Sound vital? It certainly is, so why buy junk?

Junk thread — maybe you didn't even know it existed — not only is it no good for putting your garment together, but can do damage to your sewing machine as well.

How do you recognize junk thread? When you find a big "five spools for $1" sale, don't get too excited until you know what you are getting. Is the thread fuzzy? Dull looking? Thick? Does it break easily? Peel? Knot or twist easily? If so, chances are it is not quality thread.

If you always stick to the good stuff you won't have any problems. Coats and Clark, for instance, makes an excellent thread. Their Dual Duty thread is my first choice for 90 percent of my sewing. The other 10 percent requires the finer, long-staple thread.

Wondering which threads to avoid? Star, American, Talon — and that's only three. Unfortunately, there are many more out there waiting for you.

While we are talking quality, let's talk fabric. When is it OK to buy "cheap" fabric? Not often. Why spend hours of your time, and several of your dollars to make a garment that is going to look like leftovers in a couple of weeks? Give your garment the respect it deserves, buy quality.

Sure, it is great to make your dollar go further, but it isn't much of a bargain if it doesn't work.

Cheap fabric does have its place, however. Children's clothes, for instance, don't need the most expensive fabric. The life span of children's clothes is very short, and most fabrics will survive. Put low-quality fabric into curtains or pillow covers. Or, whip up a few aprons.

Advice for hunting apparel buys given

NEW YORK (AP) — Education is the key for consumers who want to be sure of obtaining quality in clothing, whether they buy designer labels or lower-priced goods, says a designer and manufacturer of men's and boys' apparel.

"Quality does exist, regardless of price," says Calvin Haddad, of Calvin Charles Apparel, who advocates careful inspection of potential purchases keeping these suggestions in mind:

— Quality: The consumer must understand that there are very high quality, well made, durable garments — in contemporary styles — at astonishingly low prices. They must know that higher prices do not necessarily imply highest quality. Without this sense of reality, even a solid knowledge of what constitutes a well-made garment will be insufficient.

— Fabric: Feels good to touch, exudes color, isn't flimsy or rough and scratchy? Then it's probably a quality fabric.

— Color: Many garments today are piece-dyed, meaning the color is put into the woven cloth, rather than the yarn. With flannel shirts, piece-dyeing has a more "manufactured," less natural look. Reverse the fabric. If the plaid or design isn't visible, then it's piece-dyed.

— Stitching: Seams are flimsier today than a decade ago because half the number of stitches per inch are used, to save on thread and manpower. Give the stitching a tug. Does it threaten to tear apart or gape? Then it's no good.

Inside, seams should also have an outer, finished "safety" stitch to prevent unraveling and ripping. An open, pressed and finished inner seam is preferable to a bulky single seam that has been treated to a safety stitch. Tipped or covered open and pressed seams sometimes found in men's better slacks, are an important mark of quality.

— Pockets: Corners shouldn't rip at first tug. The backtacking, or extra seam on the pocket corners, should be secure or it has been improperly sewn. Pockets lined with sateen or firm cotton are preferable to those with tricot or gauze innards that easily rip and lose shape. Unlined pockets are appropriate for jeans, not dress pants.

— Zippers: Zippers should be hidden by an extra overlay of material. If not, corners were cut in the manufacturing process.

Sharing in sewing good idea

Copley News Service

Sharing is such a good idea (unless it is a bad cold you want to trade off!). Why not share in sewing.

Patterns, for example. Have you priced patterns lately? They are out of sight. How many times do you use one pattern (especially if it is an in-style, special design? Once — maybe twice. Why not share that pattern with a friend to halve the cost.

And, not to worry. Just because the two of you use the same pattern does not mean you will look like two sides of the same Popsicle. Each of you will put into your garment you own choice of fabric, buttons, trim — and even personality. This makes for two very distinct garments.

When you find a terrific sale such as "two for the price of one," "buy two, get one free," go together, buy once and share.

Going halvsies to buy a sewing machine is probably not a hot idea, but you can barter with a friend for the use of a machine. Trade hour-for-hour baby-sitting or offer her other services that you do well. It costs nothing and both of you benefit.

Sewing time can be a sharing venture, also. You will be amazed at how much more you can accomplish and how much more fun you have when you gather with a friend of two for a sewing day. A wonderful side effect of time sharing is having someone to say, "Oh, that looks great!" Can't hurt.

Sewing books are a wonderful trade-off. Once you have learned what the book has to offer, trade for another. Double your knowledge.

Don't like to cut out patterns? Another way to barter. Ask a friend to cut out your patterns and offer to sew on her buttons or do her hemming.

See how it works? Sewing does not have to be a lonely job.

Beads made out of paper scraps

Copley News Service

Why not make beads from scraps of paper? It's easy, when your scraps are decorative, high-quality wallpaper, wrapping paper or marbled art paper.

To make the beads, you simply roll a paper strip around a knitting needle, swizzle stick, skewer, dowel or any other long, skinny implement. By applying glue, paint and spray, you'll have brand-new beads, ready for stringing.

Here are directions for the beads:

MATERIALS: Paper-backed wallpaper, or other good-quality decorative paper; utility knife or scissors; straight-edged ruler; No. 2 knitting needle, or any other long, skinny implement; white glue; acrylic paint, any color; paintbrush; clear acrylic spray finish; string for beading.

CUTTING: 1. For small beads, cut wallpaper into ½-by-10-Anch strips. 2. For long beads, cut wallpaper into 1-by-10-inch strips.

ROLLING: 1. Roll paper tightly around knitting needle. As you roll, be sure to keep side edges even. 2. When the paper is almost rolled, apply a line of white glue to wrong side. 3. Press down against glued edge to hold bead together. 4. Let glue dry completely.

FINISHING: 1. Paint edges of beads in matching or contrasting colors. 2. Let paint dry completely. 3. Spray beads with acrylic finish. 4. Let beads dry. Apply at least one more coat of acrylic finish.

STRINGING BEADS: 1. Dip end of string into white glue. Let glue dry. 2. String beads as desired. 3. Make a knot between beads to prevent them from slipping.

Sex roles picked up as early as preschool

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — New evidence that children learn sex-role stereotypes as early as the preschool years comes from a recent University of Rochester study.

Harry Reis, associate professor of psychology and research associate Stephanie Wright tested 92 children, ages 3 through 5, to evaluate their knowledge of so-called masculine and feminine traits.

Most of the 3-year-olds tested identified traits such as "gets into fights" and "strong" as masculine, and "gentle" and "cries a lot" as feminine. The children's ability to identify male and female stereotypes increased in a second testing seven months later. Most of this development came between ages 3½ and 4½.

What's new on the market?

THE PRODUCT — A new deadbolt locking system with a pickproof cylinder.

Manufacturer's claim — That this lock features a cylinder that requires only a quarter turn to throw the deadbolt a full inch into the door frame ... that it has triple guard plates, including one of case-hardened steel, on both the outside and the inside ... that the plates are secured with four 1½-inch heat-treated bolts which make the lock virtually unpenetrable ... that a case-hardened steel pin within the deadbolt will repel all attempts to hacksaw through it ... that the lock's four-sided key is impossible to duplicate except through authorized locksmiths because each one is computer-coded to prevent unauthorized keys from being made ... and that it is available in either a double cylinder design which requires a key to enter or exit through the door or a single cylinder design in which a key is necessary only to enter, good for apartments with limited access because of simplicity and lower costs.

THE PRODUCT — A rechargeable, cordless scrub brusher.

Manufacturer's claim — That the brusher can be used for grimy tile grout, brickwork, woodwork, dirty floors, bathtubs and hundreds of other surfaces ... that it can also be used dry for spot cleaning carpets and upholstery with cleaning powder ... that it is a hand-held tool with 30 minutes of power, enough time to complete most scrubbing tasks ... that it is listed by Underwriters' Laboratories and can be used safely around water and with common household cleaning chores both inside and outside the house ... and that its two brushes, one large and one for getting in corners, are specially designed not to scratch or mar surfaces.

Fewer air passengers bumped from seats

BY
PRESS

The Civil Aeronautics Board reports that airline bumping of passengers declined slightly in December.

The agency said 29,492 passengers with reservations were denied seats during the month. That's down from 32,352 in December of 1981.

Bumping occurs when an airplane is overbooked, a practice airlines say is necessary to compensate for people who make reservations but do not show up for their flight.

Five airlines reported no bumping for the month. They are Best Airlines, Inc., Guy America Airways, Reeve, Transamerica and Wien.

Pacific Express had the highest bumping rate, denying seats to 20.21 out of every 10,000 passengers.

Others with high rates were Capitol Airways, 19.47 per 10,000; World Airways, 17.35; Air California, 8.81 and Delta, 6.95.

Gene splicing forms cancer fighter

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Scientists say they have used gene-splicing techniques for the first time to mass-produce antibodies that can target cancer cells, and hope the advancement will eventually let them customize the disease-fighters.

"What it is right now is a potentially important research breakthrough, but for the long term ... it really has almost unlimited possibilities," a member of the team that produced the genetically engineered monoclonal antibodies said Wednesday.

Scientists at the non-profit City of Hope National Medical Center at Duarte near Los Angeles and at Genentech Inc., of South San Francisco, said they extracted a gene that produces a specific antibody, one that attacks colon cancer cells.

The new gene, along with instructions to turn it on, was then grafted among the bacteria's normal genes.

Now the bacteria, like living factories, churn out quantities of pure antibody, which has been shown to function normally, a City of Hope researcher said. The group also successfully altered the gene to produce a new version of the antibody, he said.

The scientists asked not to be identified.

Similar announcements in the past — the hospital and Genentech have collaborated in recent years to produce insulin and other human hormones by genetic engineering — produced dramatic headlines and some criticism that the research was not first described in detail to the scientific community.

Genentech's Herbert Heyneker outlined the work last week at a Keystone, Colo., symposium on molecular biology.

Monoclonal antibodies, first developed eight years ago using a costly and cumbersome process, have shown great promise for diagnosis and treatment of diseases, especially cancer, and are used constantly for research. Gene splicing should allow them to be produced more cheaply and potently, the scientists said.

Because they seek out and grip target cells, the monoclonal antibodies are already being used to diagnose the presence of germs and cancer cells and show promise for directly attacking some cancers.

Researchers are enthusiastic about efforts to use them as guided missiles that carry bits of anticancer drugs through the blood stream and deliver them directly into cancer cells without damaging healthy cells.

With genetic engineering, "I think now we can improve on existing monoclonal antibodies to make them work better and probably make them a little cheaper," said Heyneker.

The City of Hope researcher said the cancer antibody was chosen only because it was readily available and any medical applications are years away.

"In a sense, this is a marriage of the recombinant DNA technology and the monoclonal antibody technology," he said.

Antibodies, the body's natural defenders, seek out and attack disease-causing agents such as bacteria or some cancer cells. Each of the millions of antibody lines attacks only a specific target.

Monoclonal antibodies provided, for the first time, a way to artificially produce quantities of a specific type of antibody, such as one that destroys colon cancer cells.

Until now, they have been produced by fusing together cancer cells, which reproduce themselves forever, and cells that contain antibodies. The result is a new kind of cell called a hybridoma that produces pure antibody.

One problem with conventional hybridomas is that they are often unstable, sometimes shutting down production or producing altered antibodies, Heyneker said. That shouldn't be a problem with the bacteria product, he said.

More importantly, he said, "With hybridomas, you're stuck with how the cell wants to make it." But with genetic engineering, the gene can be changed in order to customize the antibody, which theoretically might be made more powerful.

Infants' lungs saved

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nine premature infants with breathing disorders were saved by being treated with a substance extracted from the wombs of women about to deliver full-term babies, researchers say.

Dr. T. Allen Merritt and Dr. Mikko Hallman of the University of California medical school in San Diego, said the nine infants they treated suffered from a common, often-fatal condition called respiratory distress syndrome which frequently affects premature infants.

"It is as revolutionary as the first treating of a human with insulin," Merritt said Wednesday of the treatment. "We are now able to restore, as with diabetes, a substance that before was missing."

The substance, known as surfactant, is a lubricant found in the amniotic fluid surrounding a fetus in the womb. It helps inflate the air sacs in the lungs after birth and prevents the lungs from collapsing or sticking together after each breath.

A fetus normally doesn't develops surfactant until weeks before birth — at about the 35th week of development.

Some 8,000 to 10,000 infant deaths each year are linked with RDS. About 40,000 newborns a year suffer from it.

Hallman said the effect of the surfactant is immediate.

"The color improves, the amount of respiratory difficulty lessens," he said.

The babies who were treated weighed about 2.5 pounds and had surfactant injected into their breathing tubes within 10 hours after birth. The amniotic fluid was collected just before the donating women delivered their babies. Full-term babies with developed lungs don't need surfactant.

Merritt and Hallman described their work at a joint conference held by the American Pediatric Society and the Society for Pediatric Research. The research was paid for by the National Institute on Child Health and Development, a federal agency.

Acid slows leukemia

ATLANTA (AP) — Emory University researchers say retinoic acid, a derivative of Vitamin A, has been found to slow down, and in some cases halt, the growth of some leukemia cells in children.

Dr. Abdel Ragab, professor of pediatrics and head of the childhood hematology-oncology program at Emory, and Harry Findley, senior research associate in the Department of Pediatrics, said their findings may be an effective therapy for children with acute myeologenous leukemia.

Results of the study were presented Tuesday at the Society for Pediatric Research which was meeting in Washington, D.C.

Researchers found that retinoic acid, unlike many anti-leukemia drugs, is not harmful to normal bone marrow cells.

In some instances it appears to increase slightly the number of normal cells, which would provide leukemia patients with more white cells able to function in fighting infection, the most common cause of death in children with leukemia.

The Emory pediatrics team said it hopes to begin treating young leukemia patients with oral doses of purified retinoic acid within two years.

MATHEMATICS

RULES FOR MULTIPLYING AND DIVIDING SIGNED NUMBERS AND TERMS.

1. Like signs multiplied or divided have positive answers.
   a)–6x times–2 = + 12x
   b)–15x divided by–3 is–15x ÷–3 = + 5
2. Unlike signs multiplied or divided have negative answers.
   a)–6x times + 3 =–18x
   b) + 9y divided by–3 is + 9y ÷ –3 = –3

PROBLEMS
1.–7 x + 3 =
2. + 81÷–9 =
3.–4 x–7 =
4. 100÷–25 =
5.–3(6) =
6. Are both sides of this equation equal in value?
–4 times–5 = 40 ÷ (+ 2)

COMBINING OF LIKE TERMS

A term is one of the parts of an algebraic expression such as 4x, 2y, etc. When solving an equation, combine all like terms. Solve this equation for x.

3x + 7x = 50

1. Combine like terms:
   3x + 7x = 50
   10x = 50
2. Get the x alone by dividing both sides of the equation by 10.

$$\frac{10x}{10} = \frac{50}{10}$$

PROBLEM 1.
Solve for x. 5x– 2x = 30
PROBLEM 2.
Solve for b. 2b + 3 = 75

PARENTHESES

A parenthesis is used to indicate that several items are to be treated as one term. When there is a number in front of a parenthesis, it means to multiply everything inside the parenthesis separately by that number. The parenthesis is removed after the multiplication has been completed.

Examples:
1. 4(3) = 12
2. 4(a) = 4a
3. 4(3a) = 12a
4. 4(3a + 3b) = 12a + 12b

Always remove the parenthesis before combining like terms.

Example:
5x + 3y + 4(x + 2y)
5x + 3y + 4x + 8y
9x + 11y

PROBLEM 1.
Remove the parenthesis and combine terms.
3(x + y) + 2(x + y)

SETTING UP NEW EQUATIONS

It is possible now to solve word problems by making an equation, removing parentheses if necessary, combining terms and solving for the unknown. Jerry has 3 times as much money as Pat. Together they have $12.80. How much money does each one have?

THINK:
1. How much money does Pat have? (x)
2. If Jerry has 3 times that of Pat, Jerry has 3 times x, or 3x.
3. Together they have $12.80. That means the amounts have been added.
   x + 3x = $12.80
4. Combine terms. 4x = $12.80
5. Solve for x by dividing both sides of the equation by 4.

$$\frac{4x}{4} = \frac{$12.80}{4}$$

$$x = $3.20$$

6. Pat has $3.20
   Jerry has 3 X $3.20, or $9.60

PROBLEM 1.
Nancy is 3 years older than Diane. Their ages added together equal 75. How old is each girl?

THINK:
Diane is y.
Nancy is y + 3.

PROBLEM 2.
Dorothy and Jane have $8.40 together. Jane has five times the amount that Dorothy has. How much money does each have?

PROBLEM 3.
I am thinking of a number. Five times the number equals 240. What is the number?

EXPONENTS AND SQUARE ROOTS

An exponent is a small number written at the upper right-hand corner of another number. It is mathematical shorthand to indicate the number of times you have to multiply the number by itself. For example:

$3^3 = 3x3x3 = 27$
$10^4 = 10x10x10x10 = 10,000$

To square a number you multiply it by itself once. For example: 5 squared (5^2) is 5X5 or 25 and 25 is the perfect square (the square of a whole number).

The sign $\sqrt{\ }$ indicates the "the square root of". To find their square root of a number, find the number that when multiplied by itself gives you the original number. For example:

$\sqrt{16} = 4$ because $4^2 = 16$
$\sqrt{100} = 10$ because $10^2 = 100$

WRITING SKILLS

COMPARISON OF ADJECTIVES AND ADVERBS

Adjectives and adverbs are often used to compare things with one another.

Add -er or -est to short adjectives and adverbs (one or two syllables) when expressing comparison. Use "more" or "most" with longer adjectives and adverbs (more than two syllables).

Examples:
Her brother is stronger than mine.
Her brother is the strongest in his class.
This exercise is more difficult than the other one.
This exercise is the most difficult of all.

A few adjectives and adverbs use different forms when expressing comparison.

For example:

good (well)	better	best
little	less	least bad	worse	worst
many	more	most

PROBLEMS
Write the correct form of the adjective or adverb in these sentences.
1. (changeable) The weather seems _____ than it seemed yesterday.
2. (quick) Lester seems to be the _____ of all the players.
3. (fast) Donny is the _____ runner of the two boys.
4. (little) Mary has _____ money than Jack.

DOUBLE NEGATIVES

Negative adverbs such as "not," "never," "hardly," and "scarcely," should not be used with other negatives such as "no," "nothing," or "none." It is incorrect to say "We couldn't see nothing." Change this sentence to read either "We could see nothing." or "We couldn't see anything."

PROBLEMS
Change these sentences to read correctly by eliminating one of the negative words.
1. We don't have no water pressure.
2. I haven't solved none of my problems in today's lessons.
3. Don't give me no presents.
4. I can't hardly wait for Friday night.
5. You never get nothing done.

PREPOSITIONS

A preposition is a word that shows a relationship between a noun and another word in a sentence. "The book is on the table," the word "on" is the preposition. It shows the relationship of the book and the table. A few prepositions are: about, above, among, at, in, on, of, to, by, for, over. Here are a few clues for troublesome prepositions.

1. One agrees to a thing and with a person. (We agreed with Fred. We agreed to his suggestion.)
2. One may be angry at a thing and with a person. (He is angry at his car and with me.)
3. Between refers to two: among refers to more than two. (The money was divided between the two girls. The answers were distributed among the students.)
4. Into means an action of entering; in means that the action has stopped. (We went into the building. While in the building, we looked for him.)
5. Beside means next to; besides is an adverb and means in addition to.
6. One parts from a person and with a thing. (When the little boy parts from his mother, he cannot part with his teddy bear.)

PROBLEMS
Underline each preposition in these sentences.
1. Birds, flying toward the Southland, darkened the sky.
2. The jury was given instructions by the judge.
3. We were surprised by the applause that came from the crowd.
4. Mr. Findley was the choice of all of the people in the village.
5. Because of the storms, we could not go to camp.
6. In the afternoon we all worked in the hospital for several hours.
7. Beyond the hills the sun set in a blaze of color.
8. He arose at dawn and rang the bell in the tower.
9. All of us except Ralph were sent to the old camp in the mountains.
10. Explain the operation of this machine to the new men.
11. Both of us told our stories to the policeman.
12. The old man stood near the door and smiled at the approaching group.

THE EIGHT PARTS OF SPEECH
By Mrs. Carrie Stegall

A noun's the name of anything,
A man, a lake, a thought, a game.

A pronoun only takes noun's place,
As he for man and it for face.

A verb must act or merely be,
As is and are or run and see.

Adjectives paint pronoun and noun,
As "It was short" and "Balls are round."

Adverb paints itself and others:
So fast, not strong, and quietly hovers.

The prepositions now you see
Upon, beyond, around a tree.

Conjunctions join one to some more,
Not girls or boys but house and store.

An interjection may exclaim,
As Ah! in wisdom or Ouch! in pain.

As surely as you learn this rhyme,
The parts of speech will fall in line.

Study the lessons and complete the problems. To receive the answers, participants should mail a self-addressed, stamped envelope to:

Bird watching on Chesapeake Bay

By JAMES T. YENCKEL
The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — During their fall and spring migrations, vast flocks of waterfowl pass over the Chesapeake Bay area, pausing briefly in their flight at several nearby wildlife refuges. But even in winter, large numbers of birds — Canada and snow geese, whistling swans and a variety of duck species — can readily be seen on an afternoon's drive or hike through the refuges.

At the 14,263-acre Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge, about 12 miles south of Cambridge on Maryland's Eastern Shore, as many as 25,000 Canada geese and 2,000 snow geese customarily winter over between November and April, though a heavy freeze might send them farther south at any time. The brackish tidal marshland and thickets are also home to the great blue heron, about 30 bald eagles and sometimes one or two golden eagles, which have been spotted there.

On the 2,285-acre marsh and timbered island that is the site of the Eastern Neck National Wildlife Refuge (easily visible from the eastern end of the Chesapeake Bay Bridge, but a 60-mile roundabout drive to get there), a winter visitor should be able to pick out whistling swans as well as canvasback, mallard, black and other ducks. Both refuges also are among the few remaining habitats of the rare and endangered Delmarva red fox squirrel.

The two refuges in Maryland are part of a nationwide system of 413 reservations administered by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which has just published a visitor's guide and map to them.

The refuges are listed by state, with a chart that indicates the best season for wildlife viewing, what facilities (such as visitor's center) are available, and whether hiking, camping, fishing, swimming or other activities are permitted. The guide also lists the address of each refuge, where more specific information can be obtained.

At Blackwater, for example, a 4 1-2-mile paved roadway makes a loop through the marshland for a self-guided auto tour. Along the way, visitors can take a couple of short hikes along marked nature trails or climb the 40-foot observation tower. The initial view is often of masses of geese and ducks floating on the numerous ponds, but after a few minutes the visitor begins identifying individual species. The visitor's center is open daily from 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. (except summer, when it is closed on weekends).

Hiking trails take the visitor across the fields and marshes and around the coves and ponds of Eastern Neck, where the peak viewing seasons are during spring and fall migrations. Birdwatchers can pick up a brochure listing more than 225 species of birds that have been identified on the island. Crabbing and fishing are also possible, and boat-launching facilities are available.

In the Chesapeake and coastal areas near Washington, the guide lists six refuges in Virginia — Back Bay, Mackay Island, Chincoteague, Great Dismal Swamp, Mason Neck and Presquile — and two in Delaware — Bombay Hook and Prime Hook.

Vermont's trails lure snowmobilers

The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

Vermont, which for years has lured downhill and cross-country skiers, is making a bid for snowmobile enthusiasts. The state boasts 1,800 miles of groomed snowmobile trails, which are maintained by the 15,000-member Vermont Association of Snow Travelers.

One volunteer group, the Mountain Tamers Snowmobile Club, responsible for about 90 miles of trails in central Vermont, is offering midweek tours in February (snow conditions permitting) to beginning and experienced snowmobilers, especially those from outside the state. The day-long outings can be tailored to the group, but most will cover the club's 54-mile loop through the wooded countryside near Calais and Woodbury.

Two guides, one to lead and one to follow, accompany each tour, and a campfire lunch can be arranged along the route. The tentative cost is $20 per person, with proceeds going to the club's fund for trail-grooming equipment.

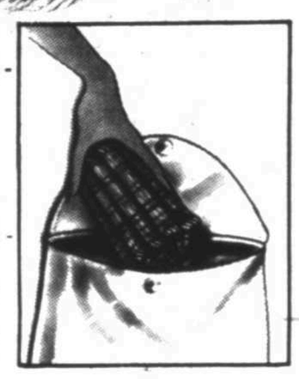

"We ride the ridge tops. You can see for miles and miles," says organizer Milan Cobb Lawson, district engineer for the state highway system, a snowmobiler for almost 10 years. One catch: you have to provide your own snowmobile.

For more information: Vermont Agency of Development and Community Affairs, Montpelier, Vt. 05602, (802) 828-3236 or the Mountain Tamers' tour committee, (802) 223-7061. 787-5651.

TOYMAN GOES AROUND GLOBE

Gordon Young has spent the past 20 years making children happy and he will go to the ends of the earth — including China — to accomplish his task.

A professional in retailing, research, design, and marketing, Young knows all phases of the toy business. He boils the business down to four basic factors: product, packaging, price, and promotion.

Recently, Young made one of a series of trips to the Far East. He often visits Paris, London, Tokyo, Dallas, New York — hitting all the big toy shows. Young visited Hong Kong and mainland China to learn more about how toys are made. He needs to know more because a line of toys he helped design is now in limited production.

Young toured Canton, in southern China. There he observed a small Red Chinese toy-finishing factory in operation.

"WE DROVE 20 to 25 miles down a road that seemed unused," he said. "Stopping in the middle of a field planted in vegetables, we went in a small, clean factory. The 50 young women there were happy to be at work, as they hand-painted plastic 'Charmkins' toys," Young said. The items are made in Hong Kong for an American company, Hasbro Toys.

"They probably couldn't have guessed the idea or the intended use of the toy they were working on, he said. "A Chinese worker would have to spend a full day at work to earn enough money to buy one Charmkin toy, priced at $2.49 U.S. retail."

Young explained that the tedious hand-painting is done with a series of masks and different-colored paint in airbrush guns. Not taking chances with safe materials, the Hong Kong company making the toy for Hasbro ships the Chinese both the plastic toy and all the non-toxic paints needed.

The finished toys are shipped back to Hong Kong to be packaged for sale. Quality of manufacturing and packaging in this British Crown Colony has improved vastly since the sixties, according to Young. There is an unsure atmosphere hanging over the colony because it may be repossessed by China in 1997. Great Britain's lease on the colony expires then.

WHY PAINT A HONG Kong toy in China? Because even the cheap labor available in Hong Kong is not cheap enough to make hand-painted plastic toys without losing money. "You couldn't get someone to do a tedious job like that in the U.S., even for a premium wage," Young said.

Hong Kong wages are about 75 cents, U.S., for an hour of factory work, Young said. In Mainland China, factory work is good for a mere 31 cents per hour. That translates to a monthly salary of about $50.

But the Chinese are happy to work, Young said, and "the younger people are more eager to learn and perform new skills than middle-aged Chinese.

At the Canton Fair, an industrial show, Young saw the Chinese people's ability to make anything from hand-carved ivory to heavy trucks. "Some of the items look very nice," he said. "But getting the price of a few toy items at the show would take a half-hour, as they served one tea and proceeded to calculate the prices."

YOUNG SAID THE Chinese have the ultimate capacity to become the next Japan: they are a relatively primitive industrial power, and are eager for new technologies. Costs of manufacturing even labor-intensive items are very low.

A factory may consist of six people working from one room. Young said all the new China needs is more rewards for hard work — Why would someone work harder when everyone is paid equal wages under Communism?

Young is a serious, quiet, and well-mannered executive, and also works as a toy design-and-package consultant. He is a former market researcher for Ideal Toy Inc., the New York-based toy giant.

Young is unusual, as a Midland business executive who also designs toys. Being part-owner of a toy store certainly keeps him abreast of what's going on.

YOUNG HAS SEEN many of his designs from rough "hand samples" that cost thousands of dollars apiece to make — to the finished production piece that has smooth edges, coming out of an expensive mold made from a perfected hand sample of a toy.

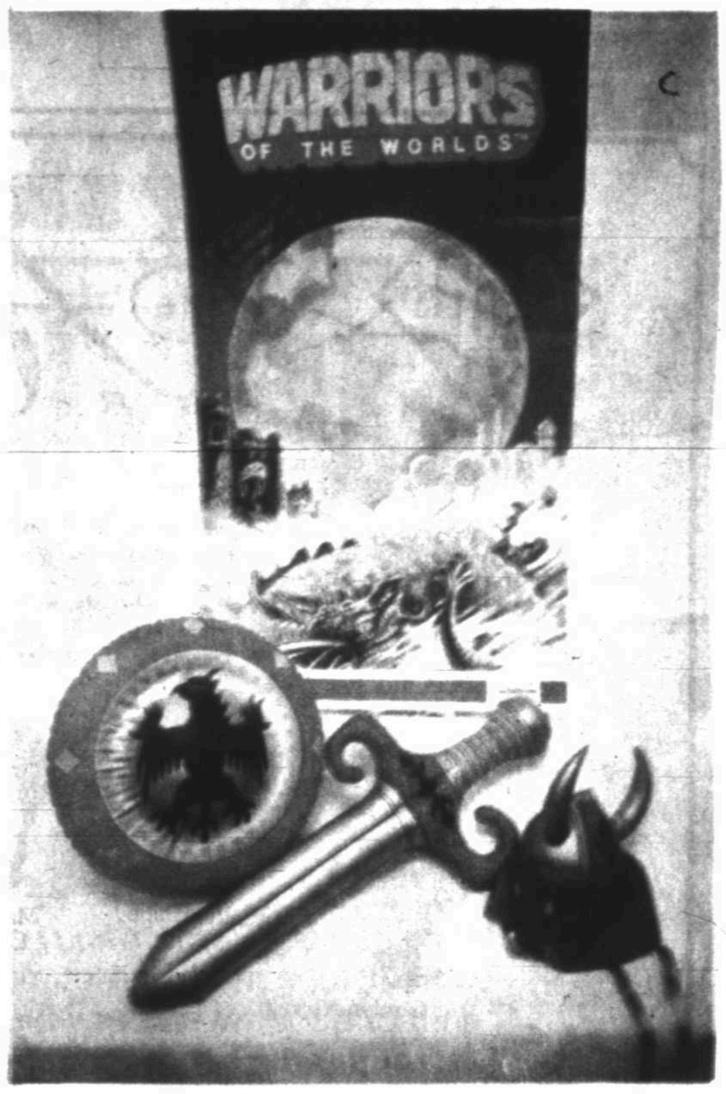

"Gordon has some very good ideas," Bob Peyton said. "Some of them will take hold, and these will become good-selling toys." New ideas are the toughest part of the business, Peyton thinks, since "Toys last one or two years, really hot, and then the newness wears off and something's got to come in to take its place."

A line of toys Young developed is now under manufacture by C. Nordon, one of Hong Kong's three largest toymakers. The toys won't be available in America until this Fall, and not many people outside the toy business have seen them. Some of these toys are pictured here.

C. Nordon is a non-entitiy to American consumers because, for their 25 years in the toy business, they mainly manufactured high-quality toys in Hong Kong for American companies. And those who buy toys for themselves or for children will notice the Hong Kong manufacture of many popular toys.

IN FACT, AN American company, such as TOMY Inc., may own no factories — no equipment — needed to produce toys. They will have a research and development team, and a marketing team. A company like C. Nordon does all their production work on an approval basis.

SEE GORDON, PAGE 3G

C. Nordon's Hong Kong catalogue includes these toys, designed by Midland toyman Gordon Young. Top; stacking and nesting toys, and a take-apart toy, for coordination exercise. Above; "Warriors of the Worlds" combat set in soft vinyl.

PARALLEL PETROLEUM (OTC: PLLL)

Parallel Petroleum Corp. of Midland reports net income for the quarter ended March 31 as compared to a net loss for the same period a year ago.

"Parallel continues to maintain a strong financial position, with working capital of $1,242,943, and no debt," said president Frank S. Delay.

The company earned $57,954 or $.015 per share on revenues of $279,394. A year ago, it lost $72,845 or $.019 per share, on revenues of $179,337 in the same quarter.

Parallel enjoyed positive cash flow of $114,221 or $.029 per share, as opposed to experiencing a deficit of $34,225 in the like quarter a year ago.

Total costs and expenses during the first quarter were $221,440, a reduction of $30,742, or 13 percent, from the same quarter a year earlier.

Parallel adopted the "successful efforts" method of accounting last year. Drilling expenditures on an inception-to-date basis resulted in $1,640,131 (71 percent) being added to the company's balance sheet under producing oil and gas properties. Under this method, $676,119 (29 percent) was charged to dry hole and abandonment costs on the company's income statement.

Gains achieved on the sale of some leasehold interests were $730,339. On an inception-to-date basis, this amount exceeded the dry hole and abandonment costs by $54,220.

ADOBE OIL & GAS (AMEX: AOI)

The company announced nearly flat net earnings and earnings oer share for its first quarter 1983 as compared to the same period a year ago. Operating revenues were down but cash flow was up slightly.

Net earnings were $5.67 million versus $5.9 million in the first quarter in 1982. The company earned 35 cents per common share in the quarter just eneded, versus 36 cents a share a year ago. Operating revenues were $41,703,000 versus $53,864,000 in the same quarter a year earlier.

Cash flow generated by Adobe's oil, gas and coal sales and refining segment was $15,001,000, up slightly from $14,926,000 in the like 1982 period.

Total operating expenses declined by $11 million, from $42.5 million in the first quarter 1982 to $31.4 million in the 1983 quarter.

DAWSON GEOPHYSICAL (OTC: DWSN)

The seismograph exploration company reports revenues and net income for the three and six month period ended March 31 are down from year ago figures.

Revenues for the first half of fiscal 1983 were $6,081,000 versus $8,783,000 in the first six months of fiscal 1982.

Net income was $407,000 or 14 cents per common share versus $1,730,000 or 59 cents a share for the same period a year ago.

For the quarter ended March 31, revenues were $2,686,000 compared to $4,134,000 during the same period a year earlier. Net income was $34,000 or one cent a share compared to $694,000 or 24 cents a share last year.

TEXAS AMERICAN BANK/MIDLAND

President Robert D. Southerland reports the bank's net loans are up slightly from a year ago, to $87,840,000 for the quarter ended March 31, 1983, versus $87,522,000 in the same period a year earlier.

Total deposits were down slightly, to $145,302,000 from $146,548,000 in the same quarter in 1982. Total liabilities were $147,672,000 versus $150,113,000 in the quarter a year ago. Retained earnings were up, from $2,867,000 a year ago at March 31 to $3,940,000 on the same date this year.

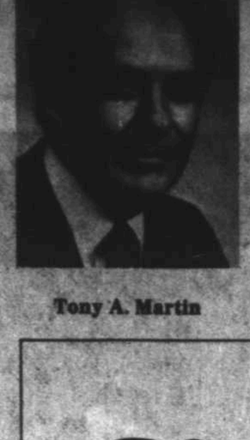

The reserves set aside for loan losses was reduced slightly, to $940,000 from $1,057,000 reported a year ago.

Japan best customer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The "best overseas customer" of the United States is Japan, which bought some $21 billion of American exports last year, according to Robert C. Angel, president of the Japan Economic Institute of America, an American non-profit research organization.

The group's information is obtained from official Japanese government sources.

Japan buys more American manufactured goods than either the United Kingdom or West Germany, Angel added. American chemical, pharmaceutical, photographic supply and aircraft industries sell more to Japan than to any other country in the world, he said.

Martin to attend conference

Tony A. Martin, Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer of First City National Bank of Midland, will be attending a conference May 11-14 at the Aspen Institute in Queenstown, Maryland. The conference is the third in an Aspen Institute series on issues involving Hispanic-Americans and is entitled "Hispanic-Americans and the Business Corporation - their Mutual Interests". Martin is among two dozen leading Americans, Hispanic and non-Hispanic, selected to attend. Accomplished corporate executives, specialists, educators, officials, community leaders, journalists, and other professionals will be sharing their views and knowledge of (1) the economic and social importance of the United States' Hispanic population and (2) how members of that population can be more effectively integrated into American business at all levels - as workers, staff, management, and entrepreneurs.

For more than 30 years, the Aspen Institute has brough together leading citizens from the public and private sectors in the United States and throughout the world to consider individual and societal values and issues. Conferences are held year-round at the Wye Plantation on the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

Hooray for Hollywood biz

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HOLLYWOOD — "Don't believe some of the things you hear about me," Lonnie Simmons warned as he settled back in the plush office from which he runs Total Experience Records Inc., the budding black entertainment conglomerate. "People exaggerate. People misunderstand me sometimes."

In the music industry, Simmons has a reputation for being stubborn and egotistical, leading some, Simmons said, to the wrong impression about him.

But there is no misunderstanding Simmons' skills and achievements. He has built a company whose holdings include a record label, two nightclubs and a new film division. The hub of the company is Total Experience Records, home of the Gap Band — the top funk group in the business — and the impressive young soul duo, Yarbrough and Peoples.

Simmons hopes his fledgling conglomerate may someday match Berry Gordy's Motown empire. That's why some refer to Simmons' company as a mini-Motown.

These days, when people talk about the heads of the major black music-oriented entertainment companies, they mention Simmons along with Gordy, Dick Griffey and Quincy Jones. At 35, Simmons is the youngest of the bunch.

"You don't have to be a tyrant to do what I've done," he observed in the slow, deliberate tones more reminiscent of a straight-laced accountant than an executive with a tough, streetwise background.

"All you have to do is follow sound, smart business practices and be enthusiastic about what you do. I'm thorough, I'm ambitious, I'm imaginative and I'm creative. I'm always looking for new ideas and new ways to do things. And I treat people decently., That's why I'm successful."

Unlike most successful black businessmen, Simmons did not gripe about the difficulty of making it in the predominantly white business world. He just cited a few minor incidents of prejudice and then even downplayed them.

"I don't want to put anybody down," he said. "I've worked hard to get where I am. I don't really have to emphasize the obstacles. Yes, it was tough as a black man, but I knew it could be done, and so I did it. I have worked hard, and I'll continue to work hard and consequently I'll get ever farther. Being black or any opposition by whites won't stop me.

Simmons was all business. He cannily sidestepped personal questions.

Young said last week, "C. Nordon has made toys for every major manufacturer in America. They have factories in Hong Kong, Macao, and Taiwan.

"They have access to factories in the Peoples' Republic of China for hand painting and labor-intensive, fine-detail work. They are big enough to make millions of an item if it becomes popular." The firm has made millions of mass-produced items for American companies and would like to use this expertise to make toys under its own name.

So, C. Nordon wants to become known in America. It wants to make a quality line of Hong Kong toys based on improvements of basic, all-American toy themes, like multi-colored nesting shapes (Young added the star shape to this common toy) and coordination toys that snap apart.

"It's incredible," Gordon Young says, "how much goes into packaging a toy."

THE INFLATED sword and shield were developed, Young said, for safety. The "Warriors of the Worlds" are a take-off of the popular "Masters of the Universe" TV-themed toys, air-filled to insure safe play.

Many a toymaker has lined his pockets with incredible wealth by offering the market an astute copy of a popular toy, like the currently-available knock-off of the toy "Stomper 4X4" that sells for less than a third of the original's price. It gives a merchant different price-points for similar retail items.

Similar retailing cases happen: K-Mart and Jordache recently sued each other, Jordache having suspected "counterfeit" jeans confiscated. It was a case of two companies suing the pants off each other.

C. Nordon plans to market the items in the U.S. through Young. He pitches for C. Nordon at various toy shows in Dallas, New York, Tokyo, Paris, and other cities — while keeping a full schedule of buying toys for Peyton's. Already, some of the toys have been ordered by a chain of American toy stores.

"THE COMPANY only had ideas they adapted from American companies whose toys are made by C. Nordon," in the beginning, said Young. The 35-page glossy catalogue now available shows a full line of colorful and safe playtoys.

Young said he helped the Hong Kong company to "package the toys for America," as well as developing ideas for new toys. One item Young thought of is a set of six plastic eggs, snap-apart style, in an egg crate. What's different about them is, they all contain a tiny soft-plastic animal that is born from an egg — from alligator to penguin.

Young's inflated cube with artwork depicting Jack and his Beanstalk is another item just completed for manufacture. The soft vinyl toys make young furniture as well as being safe to play with, roll on, or throw.

Packaging the toys in blazing red and brilliant blue boxes, with accurate photos of what's inside, is of paramount importance. "It's incredible," Young said, "how much work goes into packaging. If it's not heavily advertised on TV, and the package doesn't attract buyers, that toy doesn't sell — no matter how good it is."

Artwork for the packaging and designs was accomplished by three Midland freelance artists: Debra Boch, Carol Gugliott, and Maureen Wigzell.

YOUNG TALKS TO the Far East toy connection via a computer terminal at his home. Getting them on the phone requires getting out of bed late at night, because Hong Kong's business day coincides with nighttime in the U.S.

Right now, Young is in partnership with Bob Peyton in Peyton's Toys, a very successful local company. "In 1976, Gordon Young became my partner in Peyton's Toys," Peyton said last week. "Our sales volume now amounts to five times what it was that year," due to expansion from one to four outlets.

"The last quarter of 1982 was our worst-ever in Midland," Peyton said. "It's beginning to pick up now. Many retailers were satisfied they made something in 1982."

Peyton's has four toy and bicycle stores in this area — with the bicycle stores doing very well. A fifth store, located on West County Road in Odessa, was closed last year, because of a bad location and declining business.

INTRODUCTORY OFFER

ONE WEEK ONLY!

MORGAN SILVER DOLLARS are Better Than Gold!

With an average annual increase in value of more than 25 per cent over the past ten years, these genuine Morgan Silver Dollars are outstanding investments — but will be on sale for ONE WEEK ONLY at these introductory prices.
So, Order Today!

Our Morgan Silver Dollars are being offered to the general public, now, at only $16.95 each — $5.43 less than the national "going" price — with a restricted limit of 20 coins, maximum, to any one purchaser.

Each coin is absolutely guaranteed to be genuine .900 pure silver, and this limited quantity offering of Morgan Silver Dollars is possible because of shrewd search and purchasing efforts by our professional buyers.

During World War I, the Federal Government by Act of Congress melted down almost 300-million silver dollars — and the value of existing silver dollars increased phenomenally. Their silver content, of course, has remained the same for more than six decades.

With each Morgan Silver Dollar purchased, we provide the buyer a certificate attesting to the guaranteed silver content of each coin. However, we can guarantee the price of $16.95 each FOR ONE WEEK ONLY because of the potential rise of the international market in precious metals.

If you've always wanted to be the proud owner of a genuine Morgan Silver Dollar and hold American history in your hand, please don't delay! This introductory offer can be made FOR ONE WEEK ONLY at these prices.

Order your Morgan Silver Dollars now, at only $16.95 each (with a maximum purchase of 20 coins).

A look at Life lured Hughes to Midland; Bit by bit his business boomed

"When I came to Midland, you could really feel the vibes in the air in those days."

If you've started your own business recently and now face problems because of the economic downturn, listen to a man who, during the lull of the 1960s, opened a business which was an entirely new concept for Midland:

"You've got to have enthusiasm, motivation, and think your business is going to go gang-busters."

The voice is that of Kingdon Hughes, who in 1962, along with partner Dick Rousselot, opened the Subsurface Library, one of the most valuable geological tools an exploration company can use when researching oil and gas deals.

The library is a repository of old and new oil scout tickets and electrical and sample logs dating back to the 1920s. It covers the entire Permian Basin of Texas and southeastern New Mexico.

WHEN IT opened in August 1962, Hughes and Rousselot thought it would take off like a rocket because at the time, there was no such thing as a public-access geological library in Midland. Geologists had to rely on the libraries of the major oil companies who were based here.

They would "go swabbing" by gaining access to these libraries through their friends in the then-much-smaller Midland oil "fraternity." The majors didn't really like sharing their storehouses of data, but they endured it because it was good public relations.

The library idea was great, but the timing was off, Hughes says.

"We talked to a large percentage of the independent community here and their response was tremendous," Hughes recalls of that time in 1962.

"THEY SAID, 'Oh, God, it's a super idea; just what we need; let me know the day you open.' Well, we opened our doors and nobody came."

It took Hughes and Rousselot much longer — years longer — than they anticipated for the library to turn a profit. They expected a mad rush to join the library; instead, they saw a slow and steady trickle.

The pair kept the library open and continued to acquire logs and scout tickets through the 1960s and early 1970s because "we realized we had something; that the concept was still valid.

"We had a disappointment in the timing of the thing. All it told us was to be patient," Hughes says.

When the Arab oil embargo occurred in 1973, the market for crude oil changed dramatically. Geologists and landmen flocked to join the library.

When the price of crude doubled in 1979, more independents asked to join, and due to space limitations, membership was closed at 400 in 1979.

THE WAITING list today has about 240 names on it; the wait is two and a half to three years.

People call Hughes almost daily "bugging" him about when there will be an opening, he says. Many of them already have access to the library of the major company for which they work, but they are contemplating breaking off to become independent. They would lose access to the major company library, and thus, need Subsurface Library, which caters primarily to small independents.

The ratio of people asking to join to those who drop out is about six to one.

"Apparently, more people are trying to get into the exploration side of the business," Hughes says. "But who knows what's really motivating them?

"With the downturn and the tightness of money, people think we've had tons of members dropping out, but the list isn't moving. That's got to indicate some kind of optimism."

HUGHES BELIEVES the library is an economic yardstick. It is almost anti-cyclical, he says. In boom times when it's easier to turn a deal with less research, the library's pace slacks off a bit.

Today, he notices the pace has picked up again as geologists realize now is the time to do more extensive digging in the old files before a deal can be arranged.

"There is no decrease in activity in the library. It's measurable. Guys are actually working harder. This business is kind of the nuts and bolts side of the exploration business," Hughes explains.

"To keep the oil play moving around here, you've got to have it (geological data)."

Hughes first learned about Midland when Life magazine did a feature story on the West Texas oil boom of the mid-'50s. He was an economics major at Claremont Men's College in California at the time.

"I DIDN'T have the vaguest idea what I wanted to do. I saw the article about west Texas and it turned me on," Hughes recalls.

"It showed independents standing around in the old Scharbauer Hotel with maps under their arms, or spread out on the bed ... some classmates were heading out this way and I came with them.

"When I came to Midland, you could really feel the vibes in the air in those days."

Hughes started with the forerunner of Amoco Oil Company as a "sample boy." He brought samples to Midland from the field and catalogued them so geologists could easily find what they needed and look at it under a microscope.

After 10 years with Amoco, he thought of becoming an independent. His roommate, Rousselot, worked for Joseph I. O'Neill Jr. and also was thinking of going independent.

THE IDEA for the library was born over late-night coffee.

Today, Hughes still dabbles in land work, from an investment point of view, as well as overseeing the Subsurface Library.

He voices a minority view when he says that he doesn't foresee another boom in Midland's future.

"It's natural for the human animal to be optimistic, especially in this business," he concedes. "It's a tough business, and you have to just roll the dice and say 'Let's do it.' But no, I don't think it will boom again. I'm virtually positive about it.

"So many guys go around saying they have something precious that cannot be replaced (oil and gas). I hear them say eventually oil will be back up to $60 a barrel. But, there is too much competitive pressure (from other fuel sources).

"NO COMMODITY has ever been priced on a constantly upward spiral. I don't know why oil would be — there are too many other substitutes for it. Somebody will come along and knock the pegs out from under us again."

Hughes is a member of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association's executive committee. At the PBPA's annual meeting in New Mexico last week, he heard Energy Secretary Donald P. Hodel ask the industry to unite behind the natural gas deregulation bill proposed by President Reagan.

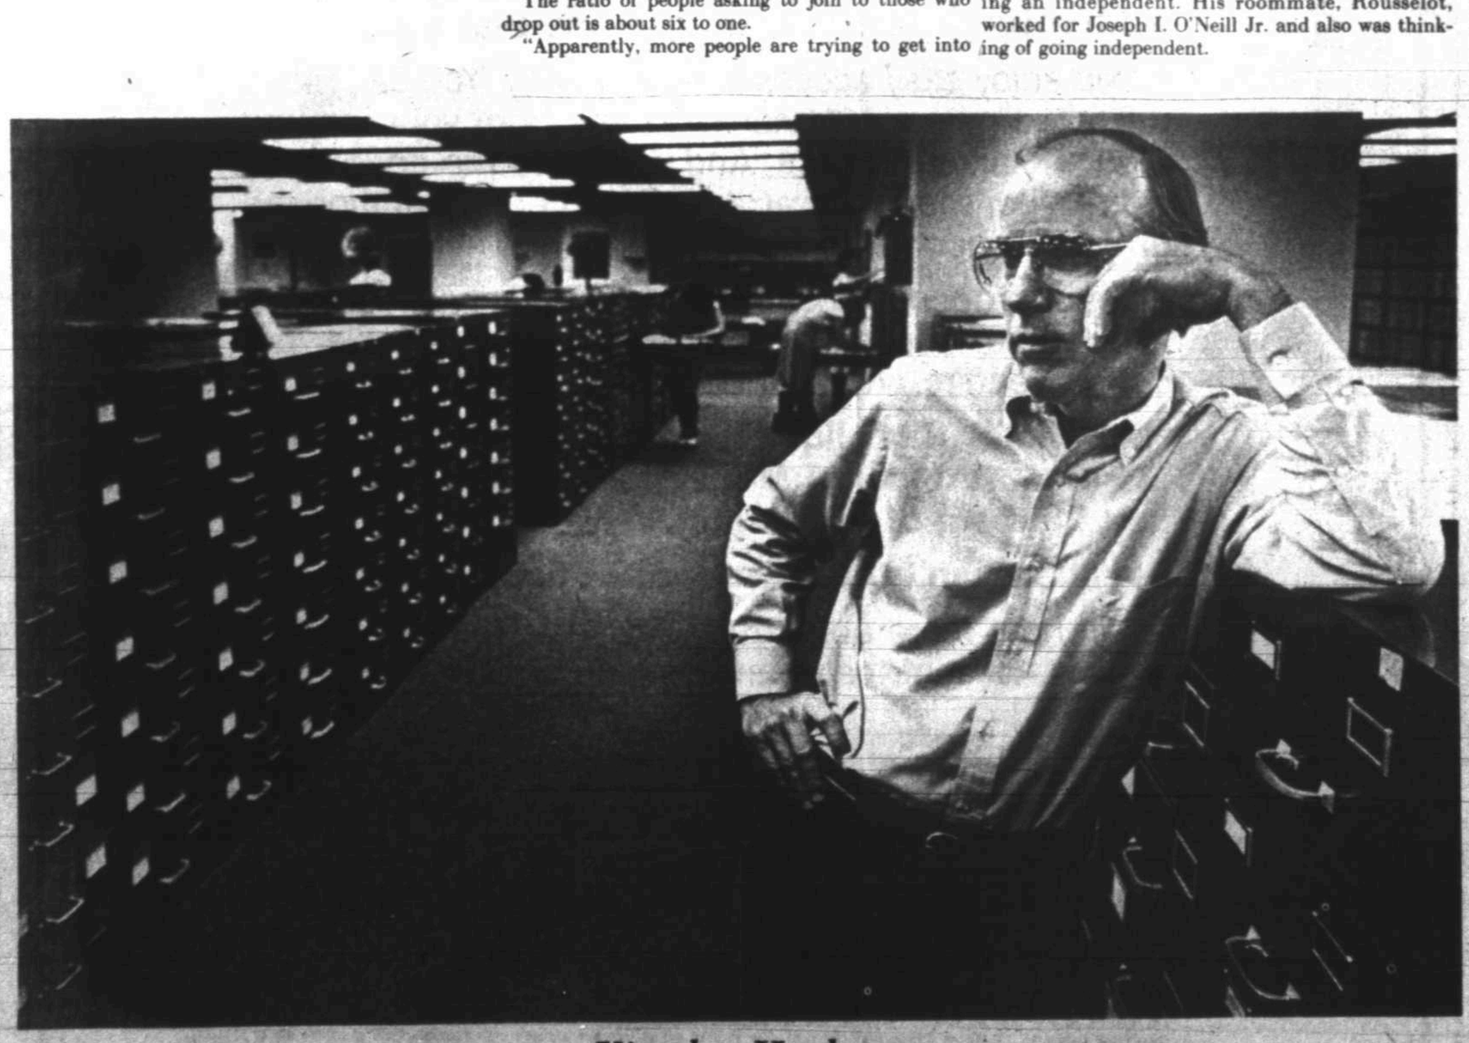

"The nitty gritty of the bill doesn't matter to either Hodel or Reagan," Hughes says. "If the bill goes through in any semblance of what it is today, consumers will love it. But, there is still wide disagreement between the independents. It's pretty hot.

"Depending on where they're coming from, they have a right to be that way. There are some natural gas producers in Midland who are going to be hurt, have their incomes reduced with the way the Hodel bill is now constituted."

HUGHES THINKS deregulation always leads to some loss in income, and thus, local oil and gas men will have to pay a price. He says he worries that the free market aspect of deregulatioon could be taken away from the industry when and if gas prices rise again. He doesn't know if Congress will allow the industry to take advantage when the market someday forces prices up.

"The only reason deregulation is worth the industry going through all this is that, when the gas market turns around, the bill will let us reap the benefits when the free market works.

"I hope Ralph Nader and all the consumer types don't say, 'Wait a minute. They're charging too much for gas. Congress, pass another bill'."

April's final figures surprising

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

Final figures for April building permit activity in Midland have been released and they contain some surprises.

Despite an apparent glut of new apartment units, the city issued a permit last week for yet another structure, a 136-unit complex on Loop 250 to be developed by a Houston firm.

Outside developers continue to express confidence in Midland's economy by buying building permits here. "We just don't have any idea why," said J. B. Keaton, head of Midland's Department of Permits and Inspections.

"They research all this in some manner, though, you can be sure of that."

"No one is going to come in and build something if it's not viable," said a spokesman for a Houston development firm.

By the end of April, Keaton's staff at City Hall had issued 187 building permits for construction valued at $23.45 million. A year ago in April, the city issued more permits — 263 — worth almost the same dollar value — $24.15 million.

Commercial building continues neck and neck with last year's pace: as of April 30, 1983, the city had issued 73 permits for new commercial structures. This is the same amount as was permitted by April a year ago.

Residential housing permit activity has dropped off dramatically from the highs enjoyed a year ago. In April, Midland issued 76 permits for new single family homes, versus almost twice that amount in the same month a year ago.

So far in 1983, there have been 273 residential permits issued, versus 712 a year ago.

Still, the city is selling more residential permits now than it has in the last several months, Keaton said. Some of this may be the increase in building which occurs every Spring.

In April, 22 commercial permits were issued by the city. Among them are permits for two restaurants, the Ramada Hotel to be built at 3100 West Wall, North Park shopping center at Midkiff and the Loop, and three office buildings.

The 16 story Independence Plaza was announced in April and site preparation has already begun on the northwest corner of Illinois and Big Spring Streets.

While there is an abundance of apartment complexes in Midland, last week a Houston developer was given a permit to build a new 136-unit complex at 516 North Loop 250 West, at Manchester Street. Campbell Housing will build the $2.6 million, two-story structure for Manchester Associates, also of Houston.

Phase I of the project will be finished in about six months, according to Campbell spokesman Wayne Townsend.

"We feel like the market is going to turn around," he said last week, although the company realizes there are many apartments available in Midland today.

State's wells yeild less gas

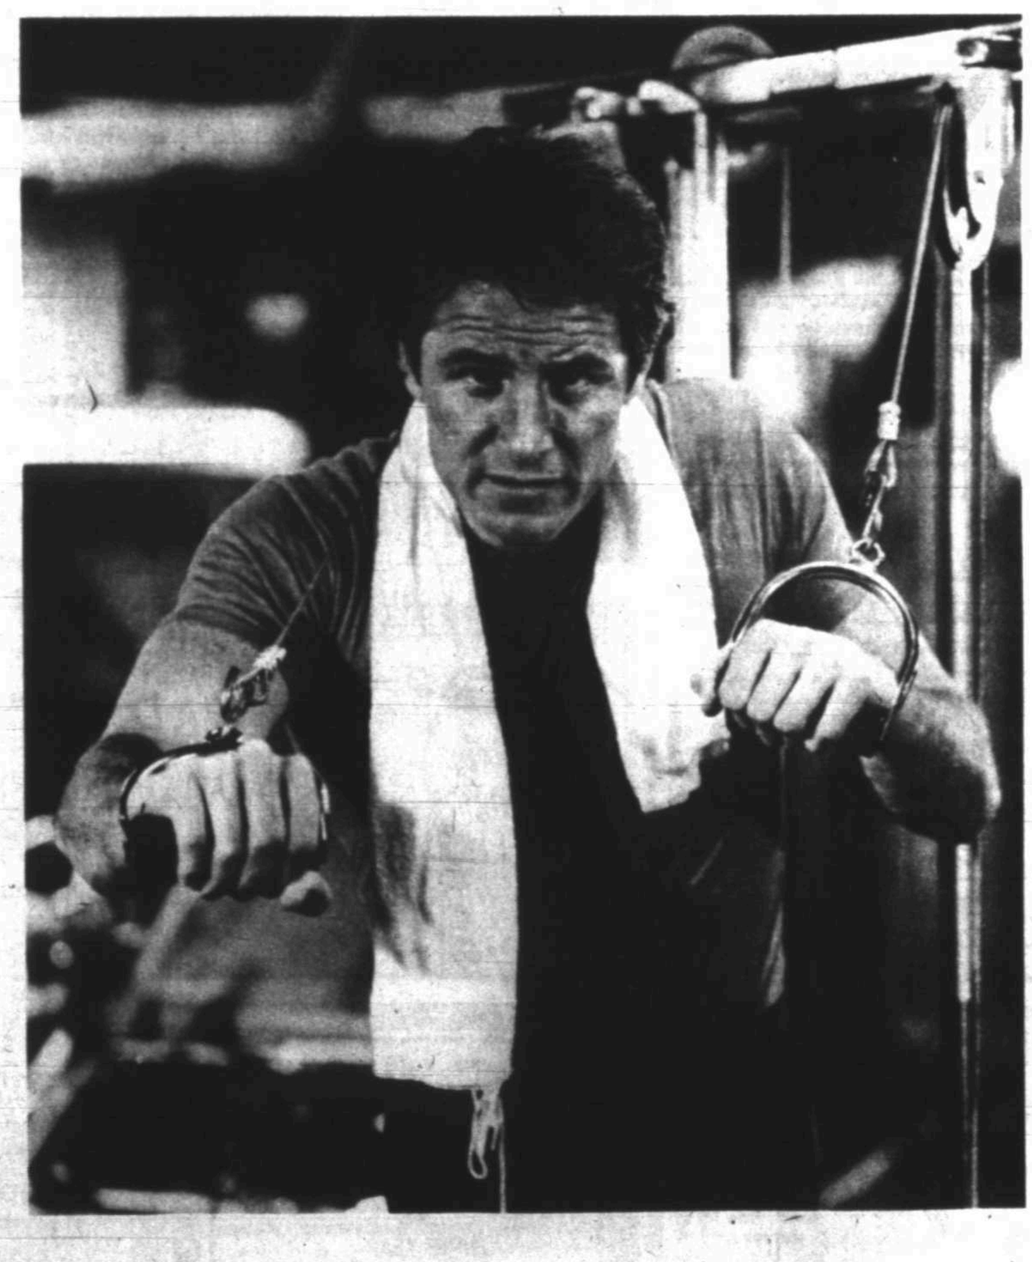

AUSTIN — Rialroad Commission Chairman Mack Wallace has announced that Texas Oil and gas wells produced 497,496,426 Mcf of gas in January, down 10.24 percent from field runs a year earlier.

Marketed gas production totaled 413,257,680 Mcf and reflected a 12.45 percent decrease from the January 1982 volume. Marketed production is the total gas to transmission lines, carbon black and plant fuel and lease use.

Gas exported from Texas in January totaled 223,106,547 Mcf. Exports of Texas-produced gas in January totaled 171,339,730 Mcf, and reflected a 20.69 percent decrease from the year-earlier month.

Midland Lock and Safe Service can secure personal possessions

Over three million burglaries are reported each year, according to FBI records. These statistics continue to rise with alarming rate.

With the odds mounting against you, the time to protect your valuables is now, not after you've been robbed.

Midland Lock and Safe Service will secure your valuables from fire and burglary.

There are as many different kinds of safes as there are needs for safes. At the bottom of the list is the inexpensive portable fire box for storage of important papers and other small items.

The safes range upward in function and price to the larger vaults. Fireproof safes protect against fires and the non-professional burgular.

Money chests or in-the-floor safes provide ample burglary protection and fire safety when properly installed. In both the fire and the money chests there are a large variety of ratings, which can be confusing to the layman.

L.G. Simmons, owner of Midland Lock and Safe Service, is a safe professional — willing to analyze your needs and recommend the right safe for you.

Known for service,Midland Lock and Safe Service provides the largest selection of security locks between El Paso and Dallas.

All major brands are available; Star, Major, Johnson-Pacific, Meilink and Gardall.

If you feel your home or business is in need of more security protection,stop by Midland Lock and Safe Service located at 1408 North Big Spring, or call 682-4202.

There are as many different needs for locks, safes, and other security measures. Whether business or home protection is needed, count on Midland Lock and Safe.

They can be counted on to help one have and hold valuables safely.

Midland Lock and Safe Service: Get the protection you need — where it counts — in a high-security safe. Don't wait until a burglary has ocurred.

Fotomakers offer vacation program

A special comprehensive photography program will be offered this summer at Foto-Makers. The program will begin with the purchase of a camera, at cost plus thirty dollars. Foto-Makers' experienced and qualified personnel will teach you the fundamentals of using your new camera.

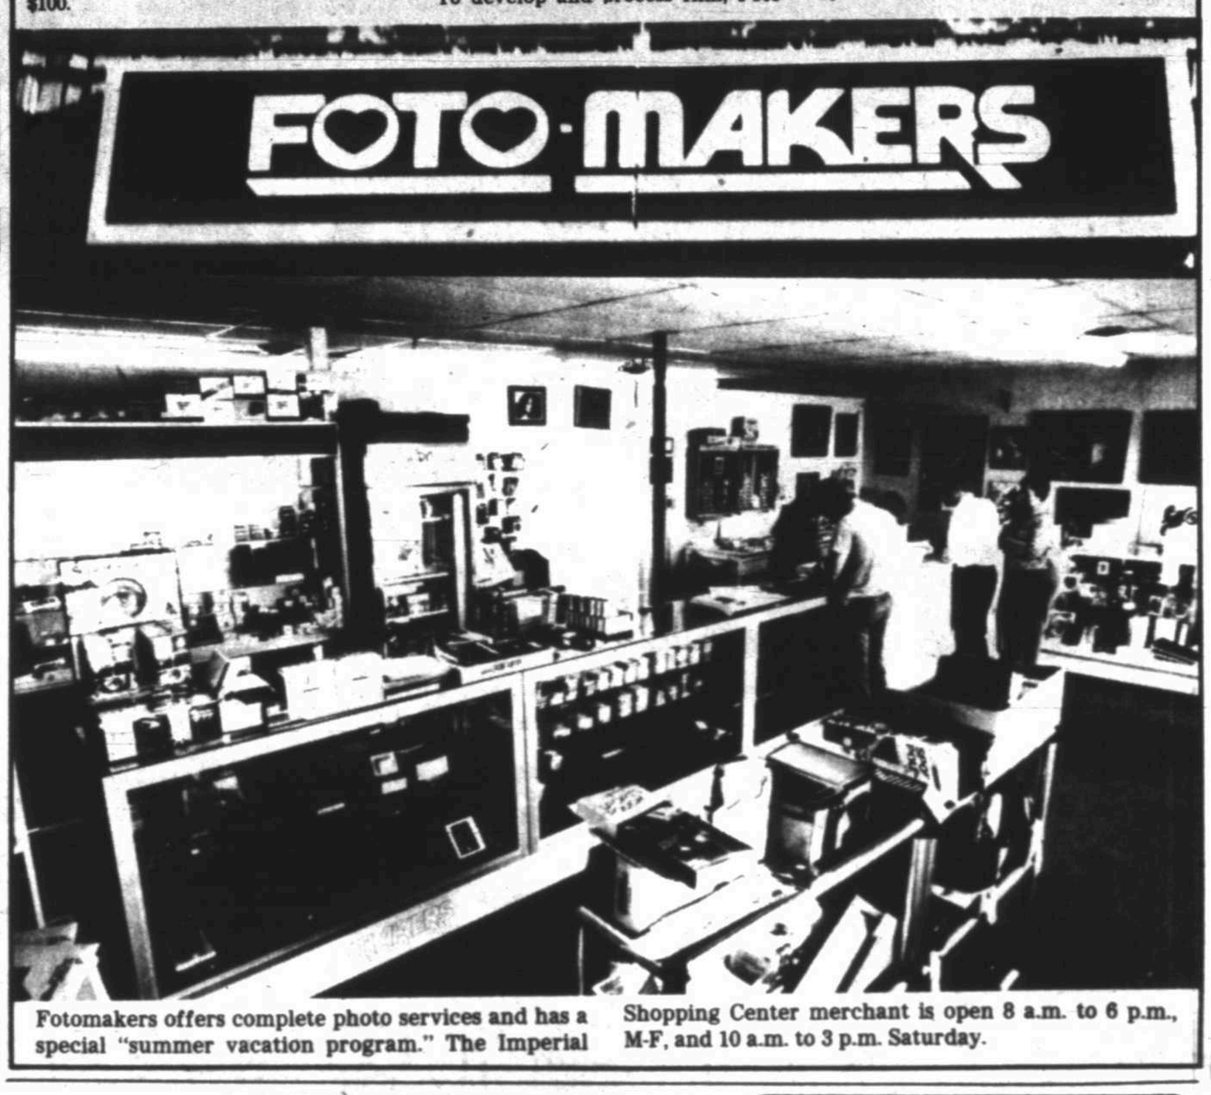

The first rolls of film will be processed free of charge, and total savings in the program are possible over $100.

Foto-Makers will then examine your prints individually in order to solve your specific problems. The summer vacation program is open to photographers of all levels of experience.

Not only is Foto-Makers the largest lab in Midland,it is the only full-line photographic center. All color and black and white services are available on the premises. The main lab is located in the Imperial Shopping Center at Wadley and Midkiff.

To develop and process film, Foto-Makers follows Kodak quality control procedures. As a result, Foto-Makers guarantees prints of consistent high quality.

Foto-Makers' philosophy is one of helping customers. They believe that "You arein here for quality, Demand it." The proof is at Foto-Makers, located in the Imperial Shopping Center open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Saturday.

Fotomakers offers complete photo services and has a special "summer vacation program." The Imperial Shopping Center merchant is open 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., M-F, and 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday.

Help us get to the heart of the problem.

Fashion Floors is your one stop shop

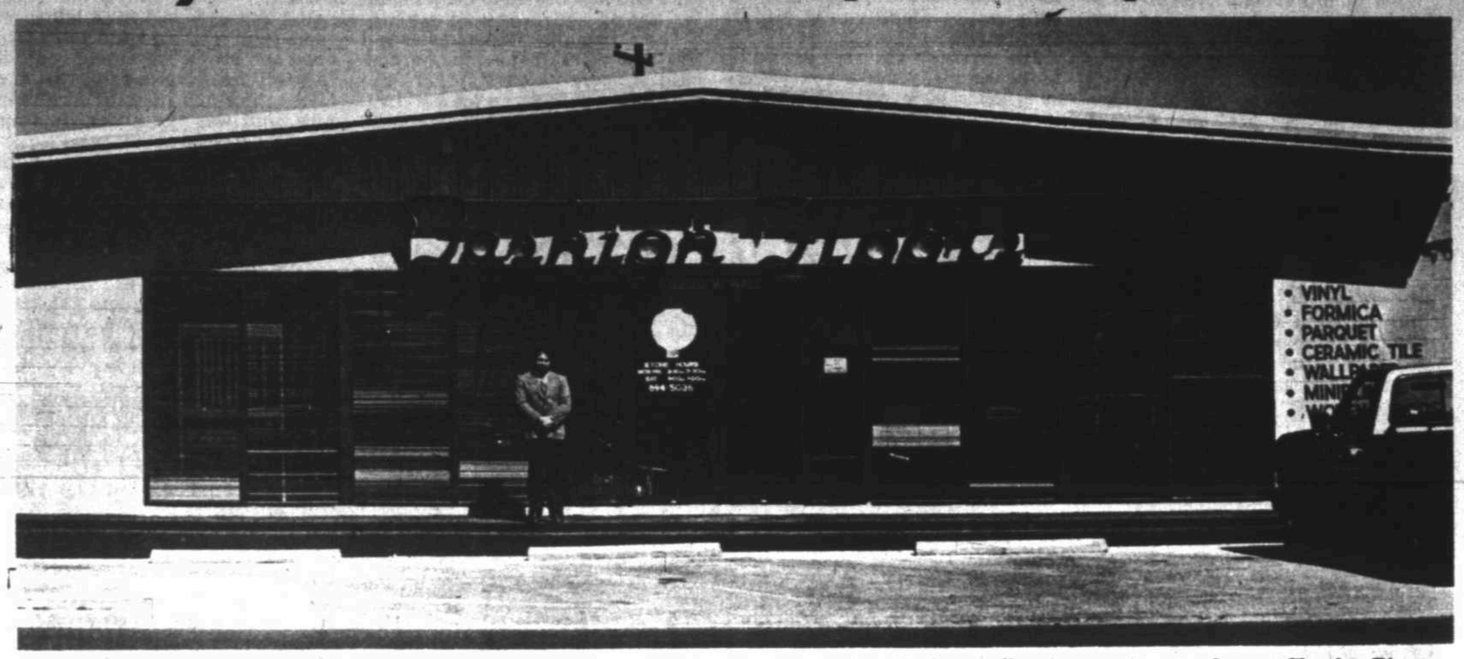

With the situation of the housing market in Midland today, many people find themselves in the position of having to remodel or repair the house they are presently in instead of selling and then buying a new home. Still others would like to remodel their present home, but find that the cost of materials and labor are just more than they can afford. If you find that you are one of these people, where do you turn? Fashion floors, 3300 W. Wall in Midland, can help you whether you have just a small bit of repair to do to your floors and carpet, or whether you are in need of a total remodel.

Fashion Floors is completing its second year of business in Midland. Fashion Floors is more than just a carpet store! They carry vinyl, tile, ceramic tile, formica, mini-blinds, wallpaper, and parquet wood flooring, just to name a few items. They pride themselves on professionalism, not only in the line of products they carry, but also the installation of those products.

Whether you need to match present decor, completely remodel your present home, or if you are building a new home, Fashion Floors is the place you want to go. They carry carpet from Milliken, Alexander Smith, Salem, and Benchmark, as well as Armstrong, Tarkett Gafstar, Congoleum and Mannington vinyls. They also carry mini-blinds by Levolor, woven woods, and vertical blinds. With these major brands, you are more likely than not to find the perfect match to an exisiting decor. Of course, if you prefer, Fashion Floors can help you to choose a completely new decor that will look perfect in your house.

Fashion Floors offers free estimates on any job. The professional installation crews work directly from the store, and all work carries a one year guarantee. Financing is also available.

So if you are in the need of new carpet, vinyl, tile, or just in the process of a complete remodel, call on the professionals at Fashion Floors. Roy Williams, Bobby Stacy, and owner Charles Pierce take the time and effort to see that each and every customer gets only the best in service and materials. At Fashion Floors, you can't go wrong. For more information, call Fashion Floors at 694-5036. They are located at 3300 W. Wall in Midland, across from Berg Motor. Make Fasion Floors your "One Stop Shop."

Fashion Floors, located at 3300 W. Wall in Midland, is your "One Stop Shop" for all of your flooring needs. — Owner Charles Pierce.

Carmen's offers great imports

The widest selection of imported Mexican goods in the United States is located here in Midland. Carmen's Mexican Imports offers the finest of Mexican clothing,decoration and furniture. Rick Hearon manages the constant flow of Mexican imports to this store, owned by his grandparents Roy and Carmen Hearon.

Hand painted ceramic vases, bone figurines, onyx chessboards and suits of armor are but a few of the imported home decorations. Colorfully woven cloths — known as serapes — create beautiful wall-hangings. Bright pinatas hung from the ceiling can be filled with candy, fruit and small gifts.

Carmen's displays a wide variety of hand-embroidered Guatemalan dresses. Elaborate stitching is also found on blouses and skirts sewn by Mexican women of various towns.

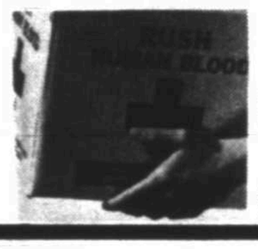

Besides Mexican-import items, Carmen's Mexican Imports carries a full line of household appliances. Stereos, televisions, sewing machines, washing machines and Kelvinator appliances are all available. Owner Roy Hearon offers expertise in sales and service of sewing machines backed with sixty years of experience.

The Hearons offer authentic taste of Mexico Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Carmen's Mexican Imports owners Roy and Carmen Hearon stand with manager Rick Hearon.

All that remains in doubt is speed of recovery

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — With the average work week lengthening, business inventories of unsold goods shrinking and interest rates continuing to fall despite record federal borrowing, economists are no longer questioning that recovery from recession is here.

But doubts remain over how fast the economy will grow and how long the rebound from the two recessions of the past three years will be sustained.

"I think it will be a decent recovery, but not red hot," said Edward Yardeni, chief economist at Prudential-Bache Securities Inc. "I'm impressed with the April numbers, but I'm not convinced there'll be a rocket-ship recovery for the rest of the year."

On Friday, the Labor Department reported the unemployment rate slipped to 10.2 percent of the civilian labor force in April from 10.3 percent in March and a 42-year high of 10.8 percent in December.

While the country remained afflicted with a double-digit jobless rate, economists said other information in the employment report showed greater strength.

The average work week for manufacturers rose to 40.1 hours from 39.6 hours in March, the highest level since June 1981, before the onset of the last recession. Average hourly wages rose to $7.94 from $7.89 in March and $7.82 in December, and manufacturing employment rose.

"Now you are getting more widespread increases in income. You've got blue-collar workers going back to work," said Robert Ulin, chief economist of Bank of New York. "We have the makings of a broader-based recovery."

The improving employment picture should lead to increased retail sales and new orders to manufacturers, he said.

The Commerce Department said this past week that factory orders rose 3.2 percent in March to the highest level since September 1981. Manufacturers' inventories fell 1.5 percent, the 13th straight monthly decline.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said rising orders and falling inventories "mean that future demand gains will have to be matched by further increases in production."

Falling interest rates helped trigger the recovery by making borrowing to buy houses and automobiles less expensive. And rates continue to decline, despite another round of heavy Treasury borrowing this past week.

The Treasury sold $12.4 billion in short-term bills and $15 billion in notes and bonds. The cost of borrowing for the government was the lowest since February for six-month bills, and was the lowest in four years for 10-year notes.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board said the average interest rate charged for new home mortgages fell to 13.13 percent in April, the lowest level since August 1980.

"The recovery is well under way and is broadening into consumer spending," economist Otto Eckstein, chairman of Data Resources Inc., a private consulting firm, said in a recent forecast. "However, this recovery will be accompanied by historically high real (inflation-adjusted) interest rates which will hold down its vigor."

He said recovery is likely to continue through 1984, but that "1985 now appears to be the most likely test period for the durability of this expansion."

Eckstein said a clash between huge budget deficits and rising private demand for capital could disturb the financial system in 1985, a time when recovery and money supply growth associated with an expansion could be rekindling inflation.

In other business and economic developments this past week:

—The Commerce Department said the nation's foreign trade deficit narrowed to $8.4 billion in the first three months of 1983 from $12.1 billion in the fourth quarter of 1982. Exports rose 4 percent while imports dropped 3 percent. It was the first growth in exports since the 18 percent jump of the first quarter of 1981.

—Major U.S. retailers said sales moderated in April following a jump in March. An earlier Easter holiday and poor weather in parts of the country last month contributed to holding down sales gains. Retailers said consumers resumed buying durable goods, such as appliances.

—U.S. automakers reported sales for late April rose 11.7 percent from a year earlier, with the daily rate of 25,494 sales the highest for the period in four years. Automakers also said indefinite layoffs fell 2 percent from the previous week to 225,250. More declines will follow as General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. plan to call back 7,300 workers in the coming week because of scheduled production increases.

Chrysler Corp. said it would pay off $400 million of its $1.2 billion in federally guaranteed loans next month, seven years ahead of schedule.

Automotive News, an industry trade journal, said domestic car production dipped 6.3 percent from a week ago but was up 4.5 percent from the same week in 1982.

—Eastman Kodak Co., which announced a 73 percent drop in earnings for the first quarter, said it was laying off about 1,600 workers.

—Assets of the nation's 305 money-market mutual funds fell $1.7 billion in the week ended Wednesday, the 22nd straight weekly drop, the Investment Company Institute said. Since reaching a record $232.6 billion in the week ended Dec. 1, 1982, before competing funds were authorized at banking institutions, the money-market mutual funds have slumped to $171.6 billion, a 26.2 percent plunge, the industry trade group said.

—Two private polls indicated increase optimism among executives. Dun & Bradstreet Corp. said its index of optimism about profits in the current quarter rose 17 points to 46 in a February survey, the highest level since the third quarter of 1981. Louis Harris and Associates said 98 percent of the executives questioned in a survey in late March expected at least a modest recovery from recession in the next 12 months compared, up from 88 percent in a December survey.

New engineering firm incorporated

Recently, KJC Petroleum Engineering Company, a Midland-based petroleum field consulting firm, was incorporated as KJC Engineers & Associates Inc.

Officers for the firm include James J. "Jim" Piwetz, Jr., president and Sandy Page, secretary-treasurer.

Directors are Don L. Sparks, president of Discovery Operating Inc. and partner of Platt, Sparks & Associates; James J. Powetz Jr.; J. Bynum Sparks, vice president, Discovery Operating Inc. and C. Ronald Platt, partner, Platt, Sparks & Associates.

The firm's offices are located at 800 N. Marienfeld, Suite 102. Telephone number is 683-0858. The firm will continue to handle all phases of drilling and completion for clients in the petroleum industry.

Platt, Sparks & Associates, a petroleum engineering consulting firm with offices in Austin and Midland, Texas, will also occupy the 102 Discovery Plaza address, and mutually complement services offered with KJC Engineers & Associates, Inc. The Platt, Sparks group has been doing petrolum engineering studies and evaluations and serving as client represenative at Railroad Commission hearings for industry clients for more than seven years.

The professional staff includes C. Ronald Platt and Michael E. Locke in the Austin office, and Don L. Sparks, Walter C. Renton, and Bill F. Halepeska in Midland. All are petroleum engineers with the exception of Halepeska, who is a geologist. Platt, Sparks and Locke are Registered Professional Engineers in the state of Texas.

Cairo exchange enduring monument to capitalism

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

CAIRO, Egypt — Briefcase in hand, Abbas Sioufe, 75, picked his way through the jostling crowds on Kasr el Nil Street, moving cautiously over potholes and around cars parked on the sidewalk. Just getting to the Cairo Stock Exchange, he muttered, had become more difficult.

Beyond the Central Bank he turned left. Another stockbroker was up ahead, and together they walked into the exchange for what would be another sluggish trading day. The floor was almost empty. Sioufe took his place by the large circular work table, noting that according to the blackboard Suez Canal Bank stock was bid at 35 Egyptian pounds ($49).

"This place used to be fantastic," said Sioufe, who is one of only seven brokers left in Egypt. "There was action every day and big money to be made. There was so much shouting you couldn't even carry on a conversation."

No more. Still reeling from the era of Gamal Abdel Nasser, who was Egypt's president from 1958 to 1970, the 97-year-old Cairo Stock Exchange is now surely one of the world's smallest and least active. It has no teleprinters or computers, is open only two hours a day and turns over only 9 million shares a year. Yet, remarkably, it has survived, and is an enduring monument to capitalism in the Arab world.

There are similar small — though much younger — stock exchanges in Jordan, Tunisia, Israel, Lebanon and Morocco. Sudan, Oman, Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates are all in the process of establishing exchanges. Kuwait's unregulated exchange collapsed last August, leaving brokers and investors holding $94 million in worthless checks.

"It's been so long since we've had an active exchange that people have forgotten the difference between a share and a bond," said Hassan Sadek, a former cotton futures broker and now the Cairo exchange's government-appointed commissioner.

"I'm not sure economics professors at the university even know the difference anymore. People have just forgotten that to share in the growth of a company is to share in the development of their country."

The Cairo exchange, probably the oldest in the Third World, began when cotton was king and English merchants used to swap shares over coffee in the city's cafes. In 1923, the exchange moved into its present home, an elegant but now shabby stone building with a spacious trading floor and eight Roman columns rising to a domed ceiling.

The market grew steadily. By 1958 annual volume had reached 66 million shares and the number of listed stocks stood at 227. That reflected the health and diversity of an economy that President Nasser was about to dismantle. Among the companies represented were producers of cotton, tobacco, paint, radios and farm produce.

Nasser, a socialist, did not look fondly on the private sector. His regime nationalized much of the economy, decreed that workers receive 25 percent of their companies' net profits and ordered that four workers be placed on every board of directors. Production soon started to decline; efficiency and the economy stagnated.

Basic oil seminar planned

Secretarial Consultants of Midland will present "Drilling For Crude: Prospect to Producer", a two-day seminar designed for petroleum secretaries, engineering assistants, production techs, geological assistants, and support personnel interested in a closer look at drilling, completion and associated record keeping.

It will be held May 25 & 26 at The Holidome, 4300 W. Highway 80, Midland from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

The registration fee for this 2-day seminar is $195.00 per person. This fee includes a non-refundable enrollment fee of $25.00. Personalized instruction, course materials, refreshments and lunch are included. To register by phone, call (915) 694-4935. To register by mail, write Secretarial Consultants, P. O. Box 9115, Midland, Texas 79708-2115.

Foreign trade talk slated

"Business Opportunities through International Trade" will be the topic of a seminar sponsored May 26 by the Existing Industries Committee of the Odessa Chamber of Commerce.

The seminar, to meet from 9 a.m. until 12 noon at the Odessa Country Club, is being held in conjunction with World Industry Week, May 22-27.

According to Bill Warner, chairman of the Existing Industries Committee, the seminar is designed to inform local businesses about how to find international markets, the laws and paperwork involved, financing and other aspects of exporting to foreign markets.

Warner stressed that international markets can be profitable and provide another medium to avoid the cyclical dependence on domestic oil and gas markets.

The five speakers slated for the seminar include Frank Alagna, director of the international development division of the Texas Industrial Commission, who will discuss international trade shows and TIC's international trade Outreach Program.

Also, Bob Gelley with the U. S. Department of Commerce's International Trade Administration will advise participants on the various national programs affecting exporting companies.

Freight forwarding will be the topic of Linda Galbraith with Galbraith International, and Jack Willyard of the Foreign Credit Insurance Association will speak on insuring of goods in foreign markets.

Financing will be addressed by Paul Lester, vice president and manager of the international banking department of the Bank of the Southwest in Houston.

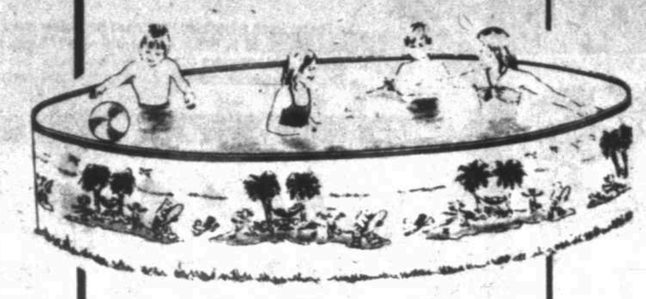

For more information and to make reservations for the $15 seminar, call the Chamber's Economic Development Department, 332-1903.

What's good for GM, may not be good for others

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

The agreement between General Motors Corp. and Toyota Motor Corp. to manufacture jointly a subcompact car for sale in the United States has drawn encouraging words from the Reagan administration but sharp opposition from rival U.S. automakers Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp., which fear a loss of sales.

Late last month, Chrysler submitted a 38-page memorandum outlining why it believes that the agreement would violate antitrust law. The Federal Trade Commission, at which the memo was aimed, is expected to decide on the proposed joint venture within two months. GM has expressed confidence that the plan will win approval, saying it was structured carefully to comply with the law.

This article is adapted from the Chrysler memo, prepared by the Washington, D.C., law firm of Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood.

-0-The GM-Toyota combination violates the antitrust laws and, unless enjoined, will substantially and irreparably injure competition and the public interest. The unavoidable result of the agreement will be to restrain trade unreasonably and to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, assembly and sale of automobiles.

The agreement substitutes combination and cooperation for the vigorous head-to-head competition that until now existed between the firms, and it thereby deprives the public of the price rivalry and product innovations that would otherwise result from the competition between these automotive giants.

Accordingly, the Federal Trade Commission should exercise its authority under the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Act by issuing an administrative complaint and seeking to enjoin GM and Toyota from proceeding with their agreement.

GM is the world's largest manufacturer of automotive products. In addition to its U.S. operations, GM has equity interests in a number of foreign automotive companies, including Isuzu Motors Ltd. and Suzuki Motor Co. of Japan.

GM ranks first in the United States and worldwide in sales of all passenger cars and of subcompact passenger cars.

Toyota, a Japanese corporation, ranks first among foreign automobile manufacturers in sales of cars in the United States; it ranks fourth in sales of all automobiles and third in sales of subcompacts in the United States. Toyota ranks third in sales of all passenger cars worldwide.

In February, GM and Toyota publicly announced that they had entered into an agreement to form a joint venture company for production of a subcompact passenger car to be sold in the United States. Although Chrysler, of course, has not seen the agreement, its understanding of the terms, based largely on public statements by GM and Toyota, is set forth below.

GM and Toyota will name an equal number of directors to the joint venture company's board of directors, and Toyota will designate the new company's chief executive officer. GM and Toyota together will contribute $300 million in assets to the joint venture, in return for which each will own 50 percent of the stock of the joint venture company; GM will contribute its Fremont, Calif., assembly plant and $20 million in cash, and Toyota will contribute $150 million in cash.

Through the joint venture company, GM and Toyota plan to produce a version of Toyota's redesigned front-wheel-drive subcompact Corolla model (called the Sprinter), which Toyota now sells in Japan and which Toyota will sell in the United States beginning later in 1983.

Production at Fremont will begin in 1984 at a rate of 200,000 cars annually. The output initially will be sold exclusively through GM's Chevrolet dealerships. Production may expand to another plant if conditions warrant.

At least half the value added in the joint venture car, including engines and transmissions, will originate in Japan, and the remainder will originate in the United States. The duration of the joint venture will be 12 years and may be extended. Also, its scope may be expanded beyond production of the model.

Because joint ventures can bring new capacity or new products to the market and thus enhance competition, they usually are accorded hospitable treatment under the laws.

Quakes make insurance man's phone jingle

By DEXTER WAUGH
Hearst Feature Service

Ray Stewart has sold insurance for State Farm for 30 years, and "everytime the earth shakes, people get on the phone, interested in getting coverage."

Stewart, a third-generation San Franciscan, worries about earthquakes about as much as anyone else who's grown up in shaky California — not too much.

"I've found that people who carry (earthquake insurance) either have big equities in their homes (or are) retired people who have a lot of money tied up in it and don't want to take the chance of losing everything.

"People who don't carry it are the ones who put minimum down payments on their homes.

"We've been shaking all our lives, but it always worries the Easterners more, who call relatives up after they read about the latest California earthquake."

Although the volume in premiums paid in California for earthquake coverage has grown from $4.6 million in 1971 to more than $50 million in 1981, the number of Californians who have it remains relatively small.

In 1981, it was estimated that only 7 percent of Bay Area homeowners had earthquake coverage. The figure in Southern California was even lower.

In Coalinga, the general feeling of most of the residents there is that "no one here has quake insurance."

"It's not a matter of money," Robert Green, 42, said. "We just didn't think we needed it here." Green is an assistant principal at nearby Avenal High School. His wife's downtown floral shop was destroyed and their two-story home knocked off its foundation.

Don Kerr, a hardware and clothing store owner who suffered more than $100,000 worth of damage to his home and stores, added, "No one I know has quake insurance. You think it's never going to happen to you."

Attorney Ralston Courtney, whose two homes shifted on their foundations, said, "The insurance agents don't talk about it (quake insurance), so you don't think about it and you don't buy it."

After a quake, "there's lots of interest and few sales," said David Simmons, regional representative of the Insurance Information Institute of San Francisco.

"That was beautifully demonstrated in 1971 after the San Fernando earthquake. Lots of interest, very few sales," he said.

"It happens every time," said Michael Enfield, senior vice president of Marsh and McLennan, the world's largest insurance broker. "Whenever there's an earthquake, the interest in insurance and the inquiries rise drastically, but it only lasts for a very brief time."

Most companies don't sell earthquake policies per se but as an endorsement to the regular homeowner's policy. For the added coverage, homeowners generally pay 20 cents per $100 of value for a wood- frame house or $200 in extra premium for a house valued at $100,000.

Most companies also have a 5 percent deductible for that rate, meaning that the homeowner must swallow the first $5,000 in damage to a $100,000 house shaken in a quake.

For a 10 percent deductible, the premium is less, State Farm's Stewart said.

"Almost everybody buys homeowners' policies because they have a mortgage and the lenders require it," Simmons said. "But most lenders don't require earthquake insurance. I personally know of only one that does."

Some years back, Stewart said, State Farm decided the way to cope with sudden, post-quake interest was to declare a moratorium on earthquake insurance. So now, if you live in an area that felt a shock, even if it's far removed from the epicenter, you can't get earthquake insurance from State Farm, the largest seller of earthquake insurance in California, until 72 hours after the last noticeable shock.

Larry Kemper of J.C. Penney Insurance Co. reiterated what other insurance brokers said about receiving inquiries — but not making sales — almost immediately after a quake hits.

He said that his company had received about seven inquiries since the temblor hit Coalinga yesterday afternoon.

Fifty four rules, amendments before SBI

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Fifty four proposed rules or amendments have been submitted to the State Board of Insurance for consideration at the June 8 property insurance hearing.

Thirty of the items are proposed by the Independent Insurance Agents of Texas, with 10 from the Texas Insurance Advisory Association (TIAA).

A number of the items are expected to be withdrawn or consolidated as a result of pre-hearing conference between agent and company representatives.

One item which is attracting attention is a proposal by TIAA for an electronic equipment protection policy, designed to insure computers and related equipment.

TIAA says the proposal is a new type of coverage, and doesn't replace, modify or conflict with any existing policy.

Another proposal involves credit for burglary and fire alarm systems, and extension of the dead-bolt/anti-crime device credit on homeowners' coverage to farm and ranch owners' coverage.

A penalty is being proposed for wood shingle roofs on residential buildings, and deletion of the carpet exclusion in the replacement cost endorsement also is suggested.

Other proposals include credits for use of fire-retardant coatings for dwellings and commercial buildings, credits for fire extinguishers and smoke detectors in condominiums and apartment houses, elimination of the need for a separate endorsement for coverage of vandalism and malicious mischief coverage, and coverage for non-owned auto and hired car liability under the commercial multi-peril program.

Senate Economic Development Committee members gave quick approval to legislation by Sen. O.H. (Ike) Harris, R-Dallas, providing for electronic funds transfer from accounts of customers at financial institutions to the accounts of merchants at financial institutions.

Harris said the bill is another step in development of electronic funds transfer systems and would allow a bank and a retailer to make arrangements for operating such a system.

He reported retailers "had some concerns" earlier on the bill, but said those concerns were met in a substitute.

Malcom Cook, Huntsville National Bank, speaking for the Independent Bankers Association of Texas, said "we do think it's needed to ... allow us to work out the details of what should be a more efficient, less costly payment mechanism."

Cook said the method would be a "payment option," and non mandatory, and provides for a direct payment from an account.

Sen. John Traeger, D-Seguin, commented that could make it "tough" for "us guys who live on the float."

Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, asked about safeguards under the bill.

Cook said the bill would be covered by Federal Reserve Board Regulation E, dealing with electronic funds transfers, and that the Texas Department of Banking also would have authority over such transactions.

Leedom also raised questions regarding liability in fraudulent transactions, commenting that "the merchant is on the hook for a counterfeit check — would the merchant be on the hook under this?"

Cook replied such details haven't been worked out, but likely would be a matter of negotiation involving merchants and banks.

"Somebody's stuck for the bad numbers that go into the machine," Leedom commented. Cook stressed that the approach is to allow another payment method.

"We all know the computer doesn't work all the time; the communication link doesn't work all the time," he said.

"There will be other ways to verify the transaction," he commented. Michael R. (Mickey) Moore, Texas Retailers Assn, said his group had had problems with the mandated sharing provisions of the bill, but said those matters have been worked out.

The State Depository Board has already been advised by the Department of Banking to begin looking at rules dealing with operation of such point of sale terminals, in the event the legislation is enacted.

Midlanders hit in Delaware

Sundown Petrolum Ltd., Estoril Producing Corporation and Vado Energy Inc., all of Midland, have announce the a major Delaware oil strike in Loving County.

The Sundown/Estoril P1 Malcolm Madera located 2 7/8 miles North-Northwest of the Grice Delaware field and 20 miles North of Mentone was finaled to pump 94 barrels of 38 gravity oil, 175,000 cf of gas and 220 barrels of water.

Production was natural from open hole at 4,922. 5 1/2 inch casing was set at 4,900.

The following tops were picked on a ground elevation of 3,167 feet: Bustler 695 feet Top of Salt 1,050; Delaware Lime 4,875 feet; and Delaware Sand 4,908 feet.

Location is 2,173 feet from the South and West Lines of Sec. 8, Blk 76, PSl Survey.

The discovery is expected to lead to the development of a major Delaware field, approximately six miles long by 1 1/2 miles wide. This would make it one of the last few major Delaware discoveries in Loving County.

Bill Ford, president of Vado Energy, and discovering geologist, said this field could eventually equal the production from the Paduca Delaware field in Lea County, New Mexico. The Paduca field has produced over 12 million barrels of oil from 66 wells.

The discovery well drilled by Sundown Petroleum, Ltd. was a 100 foot offset to a well abandoned by Hill and Meeker in 1962. The Sundown well was drilled to a depth of 4,900 feet by rotary rig, where 5 1/2 casingwas set.

NOL spells relief

By DON MASSOGLIA

Since every taxpayer must file an annual income tax return, certain inequities may result for those who experience cyclical fluctuations of income or expense. Inequities result when the progressive tax rate structure is applied to taxable income determined on an annual basis.

The tax law provides partial relief from this inequitable treatment, by allowing a deduction for net operating losses (NOLs). An NOL is intended as a relief provision for business income and losses (from the operation of a trade or business or profession). A salaried individual with itemized deductions and personal exemptions in excess of income is not permitted to deduct such excess amount as a NOL. However, a personal casualty loss can create a NOL for a salaried individual because the casualty loss is treated as a business loss.

An NOL will be allowed against the income of up to 18 other tax years. An individual sustaining a NOL in 1982 must carry the loss to other years in accordance with one of two sequences. Normally, a 1982 NOL would be carried back to 1979, with any remaining loss being carried over to the two succeeding years. Any loss remaining is then caried forward to 1983 and then to each succeeding year through 1997 or until the loss is completely used up. Any portion of a NOL remaining after the 15-year carryforward period is lost forever.

In the second available sequence, the individual may make an election to forego the carryback period and use the loss in the carryforward period 1983 through 1997. This election would be beneficial to an individual who had low-income years in 1979 through 1981 or to a individual expecting high taxable income in the years 1983 through 1997. In addition, if the income tax liability of the carryback years has been offset by investment and foreign tax credits, the carryback of the NOL may merely free up these credits with the possibility of their expiring unused. The election entails offsetting risks, since it increases the likelihood that the NOL will expire before it can be used and it also postpones the time when the NOL will produce a current cash benefit.

The actual computation of a NOL is not identical to the computation of taxable income or loss as shown on Form 1040. To arrive at the NOL for an individual, taxable income must be adjusted by the following items:

1. The NOL carryback or carryforward from another year is not allowed.
2. Capital losses may not exceed the amount of capital gains included in income.
3. Nonbusiness captial losses may not exceed nonbusiness captial gains.
4. The 60 percent deduction for the excess of long-term capital gains over short term capital losses is not allowed.
5. No deduction is allowed for personal and dependency exemptions.
6. Nonbusiness deductions may not exceed nonbusiness income.
7. No deductions is allowed for contributions to a self-employment retirement plan.

If the loss is being carried back to a preceding year, an amended return is filed on Form 1040X or a "quick refund" is filed on For n 1045. In oder to use Form 1045, the Form must be filed within .2 months from the end of the loss year. When the loss is carri d forward, the current return shows a NOL deduction for the prior yea r's loss.

Making Midland A Better Hometown

ON RENTING TO RELATIVES

Congress has finally relented and admitted that a family member can now be treated the same as a stranger in the area of income tax deductions.

A new change in the tax law has wiped out the penalty that discriminated a property owner from renting to family members. Under the old law, anyone who rented any type of real estate to a relative - no matter what amount of rent was charged - was treated by the IRS as having made "Personal use" of the property.

This disqualified the owner from taking the normal, full range of federal tax deductions open to all other owners of rental real estate. Tax deductions for depreciation, repairs, maintenance and other legitimate costs were ruled out. The new effect was to raise taxes on people who leased a house or apartment to a relative, even if they were charging the "going" rate for these rentals.

The revised law now treats rentals to relatives - as long as it is at "fair market" rates - as the equivalent of rentals to non-relatives. The revised law is retroactive to December, 1975.
