Body clock takes toll on shift workers

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's 5 a.m. and no matter how much you try to fool it, a little clock with thousands of years of memory is ticking away deep in your brain saying sleep, sleep, sleep.

That's no problem for most people.

But for millions of Americans whose jobs call for them to be awake and alert when most of the world is sleeping, it's a nightmarish war against all their instincts.

No matter how successful they have been in sleeping during the day, the message pounds on with a hypnotic sameness: Sleep, sleep, sleep.

The toll is both personal and intimate — as in strained personal relationships — and impersonal and threatening — as the airline pilot or nuclear power plant controller whose impaired abilities imperil others.

That was the picture painted Wednesday for a House subcommittee by a group of shift workers and the medical researchers looking for ways to ease their burden.

They all found it easy to explain the problem and hard to offer solutions.

"Deep within our brains lies a legacy of our evolution on this rotating planet," said Dr. Martin Moore-Ede of the Harvard Medical School. "Throughout the millions of years of human evolution, the Earth has been rotating once every 24 hours, subjecting all its inhabitants to a highly predictable cycle of day and night."

In response, humans developed timepieces that "beautifully equipped us for the environment of our origins," he said. "They time our sleep and wakefulness, the levels of hormones in the blood, the temperature of our bodies, and virtually every other aspect of our physiology and behavior."

That illustrates the problem: The human remains best equipped for the kind of early-to-bed, early-to-rise lifestyle that worked best for the cave dwellers whose main task was to go out every morning and hustle up something to eat.

It was barely 100 years ago — a blip on the evolutionary chart — that the electric light bulb turned night into day.

Add dozens of other developments like the airplane and expensive assembly line equipment that cried to be operated 24 hours a day, and modern society has been turned upside down for the estimated 20 million workers — about a fourth of the workforce — expected to keep things running at night.

The solution?

Until researchers learn more, essentially there is none except for the relative handful of workers who, for whatever personal reasons, take a liking to an odd shift and opt to stay on it long enough — weeks or months — for their own body clocks to finally get the new message.

For the majority who prefer shifting back and forth between nights and days to being stuck on the night shift all the time, about all employers can do is take note of the physical and emotional problems and follow two basic approaches, acknowledged Rep. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., chairman of the House oversight subcommittee of the Science and Technology Committee.

Those approaches would be based on research that shows it takes a long time to adjust to strange sleeping hours and that it's easier to move the body clock forward than backward.

The application, then, would be to keep people on one schedule long enough for them to adapt rather than constantly switching them back and forth — on a weekly basis, for example.

Clark dies peacefully

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Barney Clark, "a very stoic, very strong man" who traded a peaceful death from heart disease for a painful, uncharted medical odyssey, died 112 days after becoming the first human to receive a permanent artificial heart.

The end Wednesday night for the courageous retired dentist came "in peace and with dignity," said University of Utah Medical Center spokesman John Dwan, shortly after the 62-year-old Clark died of "circulatory collapse due to multi-organ system failure."

His death at 10:02 p.m. MST followed a day of medical setbacks in which Clark was returned to intensive care and fell from fair to critical condition.

The heart was disconnected after Clark was declared dead, Dwan said today.

Barney Clark

It was a quick, quiet, painless death, Dwan said.

Clark was "a very stoic, very strong man," said Helen Kee, hospital director of nursing. "A man who chose to do what he did knowing this could be the result."

His death came almost 16 weeks to the minute after he was rushed into surgery late Dec. 1, life rapidly draining from his tissue-thin natural heart.

Without the experimental device, he would have become one of 8,000 to 10,000 Americans who die each year from cardiomyopathy, a degenerative, inoperable disease of the heart muscle.

He had been suffering since Saturday from a fever and increasingly severe kidney failure, problems that doctors said were probably caused by a common virus. By Wednesday, he had colitis in his bowel and evidence of pulmonary hypertension in his lungs.

Dr. Chase Peterson, university vice president for health sciences, said doctors also worried that Clark might have suffered an infarction — or death of tissue — in his bowel, which would have killed him in two or three days.

Related Story, P. 2A

An autopsy was performed today in the pathology laboratory at the medical center. Dwan said he didn't know the results, and added the artificial heart was taken to a laboratory for study.

The air-driven, polyurethane heart began pumping in Clark's chest early on the morning of Dec. 2. He went on to celebrate Christmas and a Jan. 21 birthday that his family thought he would never live to see.

Clark, from the Seattle suburb of Des Moines, spoke publicly just once about the mechanical heart, in a taped interview made March 1 and released a day later.

He acknowledged life with the device had been hard. "But all in all it has been a pleasure to be able to help people," he said.

Dwan said Clark was expected to be buried in Seattle, but had no other details on the funeral arrangements.

Just after noon Wednesday, the medical team rushed to Clark's room, alarmed by a brief but sudden drop in the amount of blood his heart was pumping. The problem then mysteriously began correcting itself.

No mechanical problems were found, and "it's my understanding that the heart was working perfectly" until Clark died, Dwan said.

With Clark at his death were Dr. William C. DeVries, the surgeon who implanted the plastic heart, attending physician Dr. Lyle Joyce and Dr. Robert Jarvik, the heart's inventor. Cardiologist Dr. Fred Anderson and hospital staff members were also present.

Dwan would not say if Clark was awake in the moments before his death. He said Clark's wife, Una Loy, was in an adjacent room and the mood "was quiet and dignified."

"Mrs. Clark, needless to say, was tremendously saddened," Dwan said. He said she was her brother and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Ferral Mason, when the moment came.

"She was crying," he said, but otherwise in control.

"I think that she's been preparing herself. She's a very bright person and she knew what was happening."

Clark's son, Dr. Stephen K. Clark, a surgeon in Seattle, was unaware his father had died when contacted by telephone.

"Thanks for the information," he said. "In a way, we were expecting that, but I have no comment."

Mrs. Clark had been in contact by telephone all day with her son and the couple's other two grown children, Gary Clark and Karen Shaffer, also of the Seattle area, Dwan said.

Gary Clark, reached by telephone, said he still believes in the artificial heart program, but would recommend it to others "if and only if they were healthier than my father was when he went in."

Reagan announces missile system

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is challenging the nation's scientists to share his "vision of the future" and develop an impregnable high-technology defense against missile attack by the end of the century.

Reagan announced his surprise initiative in a nationally televised speech Wednesday night, appealing for public support of his embattled defense budget, defeated in the House less than an hour before he spoke.

The president and some of his top aides stressed that Reagan was attempting to turn long-range U.S. policy away from reliance on massive nuclear offensive weapons and deterrence and toward a foolproof defense.

Related Story, P. 12B

"In recent months, my advisers, including in particular the Joint Chiefs of Staff, have underscored the necessity to break out of a future that relies solely on offensive retaliation for our security," Reagan said.

Saying that he has reached a decision offering a "new hope for our children in the 21st century," Reagan announced he has ordered an intensive research program aimed at an "ultimate goal of eliminating the threat posed by strategic nuclear missiles."

Reagan acknowledged that "this is a formidable technical task, one that may not be accomplished before the end of this century."

Yet, he added, technology has reached a level of sophistication "where it is reasonable for us to begin this effort."

The speech came shortly after the Democratic-controlled House rejected Reagan's proposed 1984 defense budget and substituted a Democratic plan that would halve the administration's 10 percent spending hike. The vote was 229-196.

Reagan, with the GOP-dominated Senate about to take up the 1984 budget, urged his audience to "tell your senators and congressmen that you know we must continue to restore our military strength."

But Reagan's proposals for record Pentagon spending and the futuristic missile defense ran into immediate opposition on Capitol Hill.

Byrne withdraws from Chicago's mayoral race

CHICAGO (AP) — Mayor Jane Byrne, spurned by her party and facing legal hurdles in her write-in bid for re-election, abruptly quit her week-old campaign as Democratic leaders lined up behind a congressman hoping to become the city's first black mayor.

Rep. Harold Washington, who upset Mrs. Byrne in the Democratic mayoral primary, commended the mayor for "coming to her senses" after she withdrew Wednesday night.

Mrs. Byrne, 48, said she was abandoning her controversial re-election effort because a successful campaign couldn't be waged in the three weeks before the April 12 election.

Related Story, P. 2A

The mayor's statement made no reference to her desertion by Democratic leaders, saying only that she had decided to drop out because a "long and cumbersome" legal battle was likely over her attempt to simplify the write-in voting process.

"This process will tend to lead to further confusion among the voters and cause a delay in the decision-making process of the electorate," the statement said.

It did not make clear whether she intended to endorse Washington, saying only, "I encourage everyone to please vote on April 12th." But she also said, "I urge no token write-in to take place."

Edward Vrdolyak, a leading Byrne supporter in February and chairman of the Cook County Regular Democratic Organization, called a meeting today to present a unified front in support of Washington.

Mrs. Byrne's withdrawal came the same day Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachussetts joined 12 southern Democrats stumping for Washington to close ranks behind the party's nominee.

However, a Byrne aide played down the national pressure on the mayor, who had failed to gather much support in any quarter for her write-in campaign.

"I think it was her decision (to drop out) with local considerations," said Robert Saigh, the mayor's deputy press secretary. "I am saying (she felt) no national pressure."

Saigh said Mrs. Byrne would have no comment.

Low-interest loan program canceled

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Lack of interest on the part of area lending institutions has forced the Permian Basin Housing Finance Corporation to cancel a program that would have provided low-interest loans for first-time, single-family homeowners.

Bond underwriters for the program sought commitments from area lenders last week to determine whether there is sufficient interest to pursue the program.

Ken Smith, assistant vice president for Rauscher Pierce Refsnes, said when only three area savings and loans had committed themselves to about $5 million by Tuesday morning, the decision was made to cancel the program.

"You have to have a total of around $15-20 million in order to make a program work. It's just not viable otherwise," Smith said. "If the demand is not there, there's no use trying to work with it."

Analysts: Gasoline prices can only go up

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite OPEC's decision last week to cut the base price of its crude oil by $5 a barrel, the big drop at gasoline pumps has ended and retail prices "have no place to go but up," say industry analysts.

Oil companies, eager to widen their shrinking profits, have started raising prices to gasoline dealers, and increases for American motorists are expected to show up soon.

"I see retail prices, which have eroded so much in the past 18 months, as having bottomed out — and they have no place to go but up," industry analyst Dan Lundberg, publisher of the Lundberg Letter in Los Angeles, said Wednesday.

"If the oil companies get their way, it (the price) is not going to go any lower," said Vic Rasheed, executive director of the Service Station Dealers of America.

That would be an abrupt about-face from February, when retail gasoline prices fell 6.7 percent — the largest monthly decline on record, according to the government. A federal report also said gasoline prices last month were 16.6 percent lower than in March 1981, when the national average price peaked at about $1.38 a gallon.

The government does not report specific prices, but a March 11 survey by the Lundberg Letter showed a national average price for all grades of gasoline at $1.12 a gallon.

The National Weather Service forecasts rain or snow for most of the nation. Temperatures will be colder.

Partly cloudy skies expected

Instead of getting rain, Midland was fogged up and somewhat dampened this morning.

For tonight, though, the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport has forecast partly cloudy skies, a low in the lower 40s and winds at 10 to 15 mph from the south and southwest. But the weatherman made no mention of rain.

Skies are to be partly cloudy Friday, when the temperature is to peak in the lower 70s. Winds are to be southwesterly at 20 to 30 mph and gusty on Friday.

Wednesday's high temperature of 68 degrees was well below the record high of 85 degrees for the date in 1972. The overnight low of 35 degrees was only eight degrees higher than the record low of 28 degrees for the date in 1974.

Clark's sons glad he took risk

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Saying Barney Clark "proved it can be done," one of the retired dentist's two sons said he was glad his father took the risk of becoming the first recipient of a permanent artificial heart.

"I'm still glad it happened (the transplant)," Gary Clark said late Wednesday after learning of his father's death. "As far as the program goes, I do believe in it."

Gary Clark, of Bothell, Wash., and his younger brother, Dr. Stephen Clark of nearby Bellevue, learned from the news media that their father had died. "In a way we were expecting that," said Stephen Clark upon hearing the news.

A family member said daughter Karen Schafer of Seattle was in New York and unavailable for comment.

Gary Clark said his 62-year-old father "proved it can be done," but added that other candidates for the implant should be in better medical condition than his father was at the time of the operation.

"I think he did what he set out to do. When he went into this program he wanted a better quality of life and at the same time he would like to make a contribution to mankind," the younger Clark said.

Hospital personnel who worked with Barney Clark did not expect his death to be so sudden, said medical center spokesman John Dwan.

Clark's wife, Una Loy, 61, was in an adjacent room with her brother and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Ferral Mason, when Clark died, Dwan said.

"Mrs. Clark, needless to say, was tremendously saddened," Dwan said. "She was crying," but otherwise in control, he said.

"It's been very emotional for all of us. All of us have gained a very strong attachment to Dr. Clark and his family," said Dwan.

Phone calls expressing sympathy and admiration for Clark started to pour almost immediately after his death, from as far away as Australia and Sweden, Dwan said.

Clark made "a tremendous contribution to mankind. It's sad for us to see him go. We've gotten very close to the Clark family," Dwan said. "Every day of knowing him and his family was a gift. They were easy to like. They were almost symbolic of what we would like America to be like — a strong, strong family."

Dr. William C. DeVries, the surgeon who implanted the artificial heart Dec. 2, and Dr. Lyle Joyce, who assisted in the surgery and also was one of Clark's attending physicians, were with Clark when he died, Dwan said.

Also present were Dr. Robert Jarvik, the heart's developer, and cardiologist Dr. Fred Anderson and other hospital staff members.

Clark died "in peace and with dignity. The mood in the (intensive care) unit was quiet and dignified," Dwan said.

Helen Kee, director of nursing, said the doctors showed no more emotion than they would with any other patient dying and that they acted very professionally.

"Dr. DeVries and Dr. Joyce are very professional people. I'm sure they have feelings and are saddened also. But they're professional physicians and they go about their business," Dwan said.

Mrs. Kee said she had "a feeling of emptiness" after the death. "We became used to Dr. Clark being with us. And Mrs. Clark being with us. All of a sudden we weren't going to have him with us," she said.

Clark's relationship with the staff "was a very good relationship...this was obviously special," she said.

Clark has always been a giver

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — From his teen-age years hustling odd jobs to help his widowed mother keep her house, to his last days as the first human with a permanent artificial heart, Barney Clark was a giver.

His generosity of spirit was well known to friends of the rangy dentist with the deep-dish smile, and it endeared him to millions more during the 112 days Clark battled for life with the softly clicking device in his chest.

"All in all it has been a pleasure to be able to help people," Clark said in his only public assessment of his unique role.

He was surprised that thousands of well-wishers considered him a hero and showered him with letters of encouragement. President Reagan and his wife sent telegrams.

But if Clark was giving, he also possessed what one doctor called "a kind of pioneering toughness that you don't see in all of us."

The retired dentist from the Seattle suburb of Des Moines, Wash., was suffering from cardiomyopathy, a degenerative disease of the heart muscle. The air-driven, polyurethane pump was his only hope for life and he seized it.

His wife, Una Loy, said that quality — decisiveness — best suited Clark to be the first mechanical heart patient. "He is his own man. He makes his own decisions," she said.

Clark's decision to journey into the medical unknown spoke for itself.

Dr. Chase Peterson, University of Utah vice president for health sciences, said just hours before Clark's death Wednesday that he couldn't have made the same choice.

"I would not have it done to me if I were as close to being terminal as Dr. Clark was Dec. 1," Peterson said. "He's been a very tough customer."

That toughness was tested to the limit as Clark survived four operations, seizures, depression, disorientation, nosebleeds and prolonged periods of pain and discomfort before the complications overwhelmed him.

Clark was born 62 years ago in Provo, Utah, an only child whose father died when he was 12. He peddled hot dogs and vegetables and delivered newspapers so his mother could meet the mortgage payments on their house.

Clark met his future wife of 39 years while in the seventh grade. His social worker at the University of Utah Medical Center called it "really a love match."

Indeed, Mrs. Clark, who spent all 112 days with her husband in the hospital, seemed cut from the same cloth. Peterson affectionately referred to them as "two rugged old Rocky Mountain sagebrushes. They're tough people. They are eager for life."

Clark, a dedicated Mormon, worked his way through Brigham Young University in Provo and graduated near the top of his class from the University of Washington Dental School. Shortly after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, he joined the Air Force, serving as a bombardier instructor.

The Clarks raised three children, Stephen, Gary and Karen, all of whom are married and live in the Seattle area.

The 6-foot-4, 225-pound Clark loved to golf, and once was president of the Rainier Golf and Country Club before heart disease forced him from the greens and from his dental practice.

Byrne folds in her mayoral re-election bid

By SHARON COHEN

An Analysis

CHICAGO (AP) — Four years ago, Jane M. Byrne came up holding aces in her pauper's bid to become mayor. But in her political gamble this year, she turned up nothing better than jokers.

Mrs. Byrne ended her latest longshot bid, as a write-in candidate, Wednesday night — folding her hand just a week after vowing to stick it out until the end.

Mrs. Byrne, 48, said in a statement that she didn't have enough time to properly wage a successful campaign before the April 12 contest. Hours earlier, the Board of Election Commissioners had denied a request by her attorneys to change ballot envelopes to help write-in candidates.

Allies had abandoned her. Her campaign chief quit. Her media strategist during the primary quit three days ago after pressure from the Democratic National Committee.

Meanwhile, presidential contenders in the nation's capital joined local aldermen in the City Council to line up behind her opponents.

Even Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., a one-time staunch Byrne backer, came to her home turf Wednesday and endorsed the Democratic nominee, U.S. Rep. Harold Washington.

It was one of the final blows for Mrs. Byrne, who had been labeled a sore loser, a spoiler and a hypocrite for launching a write-in campaign just three weeks after promising to support Washington, who defeated her Feb. 22 in the Democratic primary.

Some politicians contended she was trying to appeal to "raw racism," currying those who wouldn't vote for Republican Bernard Epton but wouldn't vote for Washington because he is black.

Washington said Wednesday he was gratified by Mrs. Byrne's latest switch, but predicted he will still win April 12.

Epton praised the mayor's decision. "We happen to think the mayor has shown good judgment in withdrawing from the race," he said in a statement. "The people from the city of Chicago have already spoken."

Mrs. Byrne, knowing she had triumphed once before as an outsider, began her write-in campaign with enthusiasm. In 1979, when she scored Chicago's political upset of the century by defeating the machine candidate, Mrs. Byrne was a party pariah.

But by this week, Mrs. Byrne was "recognizing the agony of being on the outside looking in," Alderman Roman Pucinski said.

In many ways, the situation was bleaker than in 1979, said Don Rose, the political strategist who masterminded Mrs. Byrne's first maverick campaign.

This time, Rose said, she was "publicly vilified much more than in 1979 when she tended to be ignored or dismissed laughingly as a candidate."

Mrs. Byrne tried to brush off the criticism, saying she was best able to run the city. Running a write-in campaign was a risk, Mrs. Byrne said a week ago, but "I'm willing to take that risk even if it means the end of public life and public service."

Unlike 1979, however, the mayor faced a three-way race, a record to defend and a major obstacle in not having her name on the ballot.

Reagan announces new missile system

"I was deeply troubled by what I heard about the president's plans for militarizing outer space," said Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

"This is not, as the president suggests, a shifting of our national genius away from war, it is a call to siphon off the meager and inadequate commitment which now exists to rebuild America," Hatfield said.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., complained of "misleading red scare tactics and reckless Star Wars schemes of the president."

Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said Reagan's futuristic proposal was good because "there are a number of potential means for new defensive weapons." But he cautioned that "there is substantial time and money involved and it will require a careful examination of existing treaties" limiting anti-ballistic missiles and outlawing weapons in space.

In asking for support for the administration's 1984 defense budget plan, Reagan said the Soviets have "built up a massive arsenal of new strategic nuclear weapons" while at the same time "spreading their military influence in ways that can directly challenge our vital interests."

He showed four photographs taken from U.S. spy planes of Cuba, Nicaragua and the Caribbean island of Grenada, all ruled by leftist governments.

The pictures showing Soviet-made helicopters and anti-aircraft guns at a Nicaraguan airfield and at a 10,000-foot aircraft runway under construction on Grenada had been released earlier.

But the two pictures of a Soviet intelligence-gathering communications complex at Lourdes, Cuba, and Soviet MiG warplanes at an unspecified base in western Cuba were new. Defense officials said these were the first reconnaissance pictures of Cuba to be made public by the U.S. government in 20 years.

As for his futuristic anti-missile plans, the president, without specifics, called on the "scientific community who gave us nuclear weapons to turn their great talents to the cause of mankind and world peace — to give us the means of rendering these nuclear weapons impotent and obsolete."

Chicago's Byrne abandons re-election efforts

Kennedy had supported Mrs. Byrne in the Feb. 22 primary, in which she and Cook County State's Attorney Richard M. Daley lost to Washington. The following day, Mrs. Byrne endorsed Washington.

But the mayor, often criticized for mercurial decision-making, stunned the city three weeks later by announcing her write-in campaign.

At that time, she said neither Washington nor Republican mayoral nominee Bernard Epton, a millionaire lawyer, had offered any programs for the city.

Washington was low-key in his reaction to Mrs. Byrne's withdrawal, saying it "doesn't mean much."

"I have criticized her for injecting herself into the election process," said Washington, a two-term congressman. "Since she has reversed, all I can do is commend her for coming to her senses."

Epton, who had conceded Mrs. Byrne's campaign likely would draw white votes from him, said of her withdrawal, "I think it is good, certainly can't be bad."

"We happen to think the mayor has shown good judgment in withdrawing from the race," Epton said in a statement. "The people from the city of Chicago have already spoken."

Referring to Mrs. Byrne's write-in bid, Kennedy cautioned at a luncheon that "Republicans in Washington are watching to see if they can turn the Democrats against one another. The nation, the world is waiting to see if this city is a house divided against itself."

In her withdrawal statement, Mrs. Byrne cited a decision earlier Wednesday by the Chicago Board of Election Commissioners to deny a request to change ballot envelopes to help write-in candidates. Hours later, she filed suit in circuit court to force the change.

Loan program canceled

The PBHFC was authorized to sell up to $33 million in bonds to finance the program. The money was to be distributed to area lending institutions as they arranged home loans.

Smith said if about $20 million in commitments from area lenders had been secured, the 30-year, fixed rate mortgage loans would have probably carried an interest rate of between 10¼ and 11 percent.

Loans would have been restricted to owner-occupied, single-family homes. Loan limits were to be $70,620 for new homes and $60,500 for existing homes.

Counties and municipalities participating in the PBHFC include the city of Big Spring and Andrews, Dawson, Ector, Gaines, Glasscock, Howard, Martin, Pecos, Reeves, Terrell, Upton, Ward and Winkler counties.

Midland County and the cities of Midland and Odessa are excluded because they each have housing finance corporations and are not members of the PBHFC.

Trudeau: American ingenuity needed

OTTAWA (AP) — Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau says the United States should use American ingenuity to devise "an abundance" of arms control proposals to suggest to the Soviet Union, rather than stick with President Reagan's "zero option."

Trudeau told Vice President George Bush, in a lengthy preamble to an after-dinner toast Wednesday night, that Canadians "want more evidence of flexibility on both sides" of the arms talks in Geneva, Switzerland.

Bush was heckled by small groups of anti-nuclear demonstrators at each stop on his 14-hour trip during which he met with Trudeau and top Cabinet ministers. The visit was described as a continuation of the vice president's consultations with European NATO members on nuclear weapons policy in January and early February. It was his first visit to this country since taking office.

Trudeau said ingenuity and ardor should be applied in formulating "an abundance of solutions that would be shown to the other side."

In response, Bush said the United States was serious in its "double track" approach combining arms reduction talks with plans to deploy cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Western Europe at the end of this year.

"We want a major arms reduction. We want a major verifiable reduction in nuclear arms," the vice president said.

At a news conference earlier, Bush said arms control "is a driving, motivating desire" of President Reagan. "I'm telling you the truth. He is committed to arms reduction."

Foreign Minister Allan MacEachen said at a separate news conference that Canadian officials told Bush they believe it is time to propose an alternative to the zero option.

Lawmakers debate ban on 'tent citys'

AUSTIN (AP) — A ban on camps in Texas' roadside parks was debated by lawmakers who were told that last year's "Tent City" near Houston was inhabited not by needy homeless, but by vagrants and criminals.

Rep. Tony Polumbo, D-Houston, presented to the House Transportation Committee on Wednesday a measure that would outlaw camping in roadside rest stops operated by the state.

Houston's "Tent City" was closed down last month by health officials. At one time during its nine-month existence, about 300 people lived in the park, which measures less than two acres.

"Tent City" gained national media exposure when its residents claimed they were displaced victims of "Reaganomics."

Polumbo said news reports about the camp were meant to "kick Texas" because of its good economic condition compared to other areas of the country. The international reports, he said, were used as propaganda that democracy does not work.

"Were these people truly down and out and needy?" Polumbo asked his colleagues. "Should we allow our roadside parks to be used for this purpose?"

Polumbo's proposal was referred to a subcommittee.

Harris County Sheriff's Captain Kenneth Berry testified that by the time "Tent City" was closed on Feb. 7, four people had died — two drowned in the nearby river, one burned to death in his tent, and one died of pneumonia.

"I feel like these people needed a place to stay and were looking for help" at first, said Berry, but he added, "In my opinion, the criminal element moved in and obviously the good people moved out."

Betty Cook, who told the legislators she represented "the do-gooders," operates Sheltering Arms, a volunteer-run home for the needy five miles away from "tent city." She said only three of the "Tent City" residents applied for space in her facility.

Two, she said, a father and son, were kicked out for breaking a house rule against drinking alcohol on the premises.

Rep. Tony Polumbo, D-Houston, argues before the House Transportation Committee at the Capitol in Austin. Polumbo wants to pass legislation outlawing "tent cities" like the one set up in a roadside park near Houston which attracted as many as 300 jobless people until it was shut down last month.

Legislators: Time to lower rate ceiling

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas bankers say the credit card business — even with a 24 percent limit on interest rates — is a tough one, but several lawmakers say the state should roll the interest ceiling back to 18 percent.

"If lending institutions can't make money at 18 percent, they certainly are bad managers," Rep. Smith Gilley, D-Greenville, told the House Financial Institutions Committee on Wednesday.

The committee is considering several bills that would force down interest rates on credit transactions. Gilley compared the 1981 law raising the limit from 18 to 24 percent to a recent gang rape in Massachusetts.

The 1981 law "allowed lenders of this state to perform an act on consumers that might be similar to what happened on a pool table in Massachusetts a few weeks ago," he said.

But Lamar Ball of Southwest Bancshares in Houston said the bank credit business — such as VISA and Master Card — are risky ventures that have not been money-makers over the past five years. The 1981 loss was $10 million, he said.

Armed with a series of charts, Ball testified that Southwest Bancshares, a bank holding company, has $250 million worth of credit card business.

"Our costs are extremely high," he said, adding that three major Texas banks' credit card operations lost money over the past five years.

Gilley, one of several legislators testifying for a lower interest rate maximum, and Texas Consumer Association lobbyist Jim Boyle complained that bank card rates have not reflected drops in other rates.

Banks have "callously refused to lower rates to reflect their lower costs," Boyle said.

"They will attempt to get you to focus on their right hand while their left hand is picking your wallet," he testified.

Ball testified that most bank cards have been charging 21 percent interest. Some have dropped as low as 18 percent in recent days, a decline Boyle said was due to the pending legislation.

Committee Chairman Bill Coody, D-Weatherford, who has filed three bills to knock down interest rates, sent the bills to subcommittee.

Coody was unsympathetic to the bankers' arguments.

"I wept at the thought of that for five years you people lost money. I couldn't hardly sleep last night," he said sarcastically.

Ball said it would be difficult for the committee to "reconcile the emotions related to high interest rates and the business case I have presented here today."

Purdue University economics professor William Dunkelberg, testifying on behalf of the Texas Retailers Association, said the credit card business is "a very expensive deal and it's very hard to operate, even with these kinds of interest rates."

"If we lock ourselves into an 18 percent ceiling, we could have some major difficulties in the next two years," he testified. "You can't make money at 18 percent today."

Headless torso found last month remains unidentified

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The headless torso of a sexually assaulted girl lies wrapped in a sheet on a stainless steel table in the "cold room" of the Medical Examiner's office, leaving no clue to the girl's identity or the reason for her brutal death.

Identified only as autopsy number 441-83, a black female between 9½ and 10½ years old, about 5-foot-4 and 70 to 75 pounds, the remains lie waiting for a family member, a friend or a schoolmate to identify her.

"We're baffled," homicide Capt. Leroy J. Adkins of the St. Louis Police Department said Wednesday. "We don't really have anything to go on. We've tracked literally hundreds of leads but nothing has panned out."

The girl's body was found Feb. 28 in the basement of an abandoned apartment building on the city's west end. Police say a lack of blood at the scene indicated she was killed somewhere else several days earlier and dumped there.

She was clad only in a yellow V-neck sweater with the label ripped out, her hands bound behind her back with nylon cord. An autopsy showed she had been sexually molested and probably strangled before she was beheaded.

"She still has her appendix and there are no visible scars on the body," said Dr. Mary Case, St. Louis deputy medical examiner and one of several officials trying to piece together the girl's life.

"We know she had not eaten for about eight hours before she was killed and that she had no previous broken bones or serious chronic diseases — but not much more," she said.

Of the 50,000 children who disppear each year, 3,000 become homicide victims, according to Kristin Cole Brown of Child Find, a non-profit national organization which tracks down missing children. Another 8,000 cases of missing children remain unsolved one year later.

Ms. Brown said the organization had recorded only one similar case — the July 1981 abduction of a 6-year-old Hollywood, Fla., boy whose head was found three weeks after he disappeared.

Adkins said the case of the beheaded girl may go unsolved if the girl was brought here from some other area or if a relative was involved in her death.

Jetliner loses landing gear

CASPER, Wyo. (AP) — Passengers aboard a Boeing 737 that bellyflopped on a runway and skidded to a halt in a shower of sparks praised the pilot for keeping control of the plane as federal investigators began interviewing crew members about the accident.

The Frontier Airlines jet was landing Wednesday at Natrona County International Airport on a flight from Denver when the landing gear apparently collapsed and the jet bellyflopped, skidding 4,000 yards.

The engines burst into flames that were quickly extinguished, and only one minor passenger injury was reported.

"Apparently all three" sections of the landing gear collapsed when the plane hit the runway, Frontier spokeswoman Carol Luther said.

"We're very pleased with the way the crew handled it, and the way the airport handled it, and we're very pleased that nobody was injured," she said.

Airport crews expected to use four cranes to move the plane today the quarter-mile to a ramp where it would be ready for National Transportation Safety Board inspectors from Washington, D.C.

George R. Baker, chief of the NTSB's Denver office, said there is a history of similar failures on the Boeing 737, with at least a dozen over the past five years.

An investigation into the failure of wheel rims on the landing gear of another Frontier 737 jet was ordered because of an accident Monday in Denver, he said.

Passenger Michael Plante, a real estate developer from Denver and a private pilot, said as the jet touched down it felt as if the plane were landing on its right landing gear.

"I looked out the left window and saw the left engine was smoking. It felt like it had just been a bad landing, but not that bad," Plante said.

"I would rate it as a very superior performance on the pilot's part," he added, saying the pilot had kept the aircraft "well-centered on the runway."

The landing sounded like a dishpan scraping against the ground, said Leo Nordon of Haddon Heights, N.J., another passenger.

Pollsters sign up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two well-known political pollsters have signed on the bandwagons of the two leading candidates for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination.

Peter D. Hart has been hired by former Vice President Walter F. Mondale to do the campaign's survey research. Hart is head of the Washington research firm that bears his name.

William Hamilton has signed a contract to conduct polls for Sen. John Glenn, the Ohio senator who is scheduled to formally announce his candidacy next month. Hamilton's firm — William Hamilton and Staff — is based in Chevy Chase, Md., a Washington suburb.

Other announced and unannounced Democratic candidates — Sens. Gary Hart of Colorado, Alan Cranston of California and Ernest Hollings of South Carolina and former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew — have not yet chosen pollsters, the campaigns said.

Critics say Reagan transformed into 'neo-Keynesian'

By OWEN ULLMANN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some people are calling President Reagan names these days. They say he's become a Keynesian, and if that doesn't make him bristle, probably nothing will.

They say Reagan is embracing huge budget deficits, increased federal spending and tax cuts to stimulate demand and revive the economy — the same medicine that British economist John Maynard Keynes prescribed in the 1930s to lift the world out of the Great Depression.

"Indeed, in the best Keynesian tradition, his (Reagan's) emphasis has shifted from supply-side dogma to boosting demand as a means of reviving the economy," states Walter Heller, chief White House economist in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations and a professed "neo-Keynesian."

It is the very cure that Reagan has blamed for making the U.S. economy deathly ill over the past two decades. He had come into office promising to overturn the Keynesian approach, which has guided industrial societies for a half century.

An Analysis

Reagan's brand of policy, dubbed "supply side" economics or "Reaganomics," was promoted by his administration as the antithesis of Keynes' belief that government must play a central role in achieving and maintaining a healthy economy.

TO REAGAN, there is nothing wrong with the American economy that can't be fixed by less government: less spending, less taxation, less regulation.

Keynes advocated large government budget deficits and tax cuts in bad times to stimulate demand by putting money in consumers' pockets. Reagan advocated balanced budgets, and tax cuts that would stimulate supply by encouraging people to work harder, save more and invest in the production of new goods and services.

To Reagan and his followers, Keynes was a dirty word — the embodiment of all the failed economic policies and all the economic problems of the past.

But the supply-side rhetoric of two years ago has given way to economic deeds that bear Keynes' imprint:

—Reagan's 1980 campaign pledge to balance the budget by 1983 has given way to record deficits. Under his latest estimates, the national debt, which reached $1 trillion in 1981, will double by 1986.

—FEDERAL SPENDING, which Reagan promised to curb, continues to rise significantly, boosted in part by the large increases he sought for the Pentagon and in part by Congress' refusal to cut non-defense spending as much as he wanted. This year, federal spending is expected to equal 25 percent of the gross national product, the highest figure since World War II.

—The supply-side income tax cuts that Reagan had won from Congress in 1981 were supposed to stimulate saving and investment, administration officials explained at the time. But nowadays, the administration is counting on the tax cuts to stimulate consumer demand to keep the economy on a path toward recovery.

—After repeatedly denouncing public jobs programs as counterproductive "quick fixes," the president is now actively supporting a $4 billion-plus jobs program working its way through Congress to aid the unemployed.

"Gone are the Reagan mirage of balanced budgets, his pledges of no tax increases, his dreams of a shrinking federal sector and his steely opposition to public jobs programs, his hopes for cutting Social Security to size, even his dedication to keeping hands off the private sector," Heller said on the Public Broadcasting Service's "Nightly Business Report" Wednesday night.

A COMMENTARY appearing in a recent issue of Business Week magazine declares: "Reaganomics as originally conceived and implemented is dead.

Reductions 'wreak havoc' ACLU says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reduced spending for the Legal Services Corp., an agency the Reagan administration tried to kill, has "wreaked havoc on the delivery of legal services to the poor," the American Civil Liberties Union said earlier this week.

The ACLU also said that Congress, by bowing to the Reagan administration's attacks on the agency, has contributed to the reduced ability of the poor to get legal help.

"It is clear that legal services attorneys and staff are waging a valiant struggle to maintain a minimal program with a precarious future," the ACLU said in a 27-page report.

"Yet the deluge of needy clients is overwhelming and growing ever larger. Thousands of Americans whose legal rights have been violated have no redress."

A spokesman for Legal Services said officials would not respond until they read the report.

But Donald P. Bogard, who was picked by Reagan to head the semi-autonomous corporation, has said that despite "our limited resources" the agency has continued to fulfill its responsibilities.

In recent congressional testimony, Bogard said that for most states last year there were more legal services lawyers working than in 1981.

Bogard was scheduled to appear before a Senate appropriations subcommittee today.

The Legal Services program, an outgrowth of President Lyndon B. Johnson's Great Society, provided legal aid to more than a million clients last year.

President Reagan, who has harbored a dislike for the program since he was governor of California, has twice asked Congress to abolish it. Accused of promoting political causes at taxpayer expense, it has survived but has suffered deep cuts in its budget.

The ACLU, noting that spending was reduced from $321 million in 1981 to $241 million last year, said the cuts "have had a devastating impact on fundamental fairness." The proposed budget for the fiscal year that begins in October is $257 million.

The number of lawyers working for legal services declined by 28 percent last year, the ACLU said. Some of the most experienced attorneys left the agency and more than 300 field offices were closed around the nation, it added.

The ACLU report by Loren Siegel and David Landau said many local legal services outlets now only provide emergency help. Also, the report said, whole areas of representation — such as family law, consumer cases and Social Security eligibility — have been sharply curtailed or abandoned entirely.

It gave some examples of Legal Services Corp. reductions:

—In Philadelphia, the number of legal services lawyers has dropped from 98 to 42.

—Miami has 22 attorneys for 350,000 poor people, down from 35 in 1981.

—In economically depressed Eastern Michigan, 15 lawyers serve 157,692 poor persons, or one per 10,513.

—El Paso has six lawyers, compared to 13 last year, or one attorney for every 14,233 persons.

—The San Francisco legal assistance foundation had 43 lawyers in 1981 and 17 in 1982.

"The rural poor, who have historically lacked professional legal services, are once again beyond help's reach," the ACLU said.

Historian to speak at Altrusa banquet

"U.S.-Chinese Relations: From Mao to Reagan" will be dealt with by historian Dr. Frank N. Samponaro in his talk at the 1983 International Relations Banquet of the Altrusa Club of Midland at 7 p.m. today.

Foreign exchange students attending Midland's two public high school will be honored guests at the banquet in the Midland Woman's Club.

Last summer, Dr. Samponaro, associate professor of history at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, toured China and other places in the Orient.

He has traveled extensively in Europe and Mexico. His major research field is modern Latin American history, while his emphasis is on Mexico.

Dr. Samponaro holds a B.A. degree from Yale University, an M.A. from the University of Texas, and the Ph.D. from the State University of New York. He taught at the University of South Alabama, Southhampton College of Long Island University and the State University of New York before he joined the UTPB faculty in 1974.

He and his wife live in Midland.

Judge Barbara Culver of Midland's 318th State District Court is chairperson of the club's International Relations Committee, which is arranging the banquet. Committee members are Dr. Virginia Johnson, Annie Ford, Maridell Fryar, Loleta Guffey, Gloria Hinojosa, Elsie Ingram, Carol Reinert, Lavern Sanders and Susan Edwards.

New allergy treatment uses nasal spray, not injections

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — A new "safe and simple" method of treating allergy patients uses a nasal spray, rather than the standard injections, according to a New York allergist.

Dr. Robert E. Reisman of the State University of New York at Buffalo told the American Academy of Allergy and Immunology here earlier this week that the process is so easy the patient can do it at home.

And it's less expensive than a series of shots at a doctor's office, Reisman said.

The standard method for desensitizing an allergic patient is to inject a small quantity of allergen — the substance to which the patient is sensitive.

Be more observant and you will make fewer mistakes.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Take your time when preparing papers for the boss. It is more important to be correct than fast. A new relationship raises more questions than it answers. Be cautious about making commitments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You find yourself on a financial rollercoaster, but a solution is near. Show more confidence in yourself and your associates will follow suit. Shower loved ones with affection, not criticism.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may be tempted to buy some clothes or a piece of furniture you cannot afford. Put your credit card back in your wallet! You bypass obstacles on the road to romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A chance encounter proves lucky, but a blind date may not be everything it was advertised. Make the best of things. We learn from our mistakes. Business activity picks up and so do profits.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Someone takes a fancy to you and you benefit financially. Avoid self-deception. Financial discussions turn up tips from experts. Romance flourishes. A shopping trip yields some splendid bargains.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Spiritual concerns are strongly favored. Meditation will bring answers to pressing problems. A prospective investment looks most promising. Reaffirm a romantic commitment. Honest communication improves family relations. Speak from the heart.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A more aggressive approach to business will prove beneficial. You feel creative but find others uncooperative. Moonlighting could be the answer to a cash shortage. Better employment opportunities lie ahead.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Changes in your life highlight your need to become better organized. You are very busy! Forget gossip and attend to important work. Negotiations are best postponed. Delay signing agreements.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look on a leadership role as a challenge. Loved one seeks your assistance. Some unexpected sympathy eases tension. Remain cautious where spending is concerned. A roving eye attracts attention this evening!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your self-confidence gets a boost when someone decides to take a big chance on you. Be tactful if you are counting on renewing a contract. Pushiness will defeat your purposes.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	2 ◇	2 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ♠.

An end play is a fairly simple maneuver. But it is not always easy to spot what form the end play should take. This hand from a recent team match is a case in point.

The bidding started the same way at the two tables. At one table South chose to rebid three no trump, an eminently sensible choice in our opinion. After a diamond lead, he had nine running tricks.

At the other table South elected to rebid four hearts. The safest lead would have been a trump, but West was reluctant to lead a singleton and chose instead to attack with a low spade. That quickly presented declarer with an extra trick when East correctly played low and the nine won. Now declarer had nine tricks, and it was obvious that an end play would be needed to score the tenth.

Declarer drew three rounds of trumps. West sluffed two diamonds. Now the high spades were cashed, ending in dummy, and a low club was led. East carefully played the jack of clubs. As the cards lie declarer could have gotten home by rising with the ace of clubs and exiting with a club, but that is not a natural line. Instead, he finessed. West won the king and exited with a club, and declarer eventually had to concede two diamonds for down one.

South overlooked the almost sure end play. West was marked with the ace of diamonds for his overcall, and declarer should have used that knowledge to advantage. After drawing trumps and clearing spades, declarer should have led a diamond from dummy and ducked in hand!

Best defense is for East to win the diamond and shift to a club. Declarer counters by rising with the ace of clubs and exiting with the king of diamonds, forcing West to win. Now West has the choice of cashing the king of clubs or conceding a ruff-sluff. Either way, declarer loses only two diamonds and a club. The line must succeed whenever West has the ace of diamonds, regardless of the lie of the rest of the cards.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Magnet, radio waves, computer may aid dignosis of ailments

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Doctors say an experimental way of viewing organs using a magnet, radio waves and a computer yields clear pictures that could lead to the early diagnosis of a variety of heart ailments.

Without risking the patient's health with X-rays, drugs or surgery, doctors will be able to use a scanning device called nuclear magnetic resonance to monitor the heart and detect even subtle abnormalities.

The technique has been used on about 350 patients since November at the University of California in San Francisco to examine damage from heart attacks, hardening of major blood vessels, disease in the sac surrounding the heart, lung tumors and brain diseases.

"We have enough experience at this point to tell it works," Dr. Peter Lanzer said earlier this week at a meeting of the American College of Cardiology in New Orleans.

"We hope we will eventually be able to distinguish various pathologies of the heart muscle," Lanzer said.

The technique has been used to take pictures inside the body since 1973 but is not widely available in hospitals.

When an NMR scan machine is turned on, a strong magnetic field makes the hydrogen atoms in the patient's body line up. A radio wave then hits the atoms, knocking them out of alignment and making them resonate back and forth. The energy released by that movement is detected by computer, which composes an image.

Drugs may work against AIDS

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — Three drugs show promise as possible weapons against Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, says a scientist researching the mysterious ailment that destroys the body's immune system.

In preliminary research, the drugs apparently enhanced the action of T-lymphocytes, cells that are a key defense against disease, Dr. Michael Grieco told a meeting of the American Academy of Allergy and Immunology here.

In the past year, 1,200 cases of AIDS have been diagnosed, mostly among male homosexuals, drug abusers, Haitians and hemophiliacs or other blood-transfusion patients.

The fatality rate is estimated at one in three cases. AIDS kills by lowering the body's defenses and permitting an onslaught of infections such as pneumonia and cancer.

Grieco, director of the R.A. Cooke Institute of Allergy in New York, said the drugs appear to act on the T-lymphocytes, which turn the body's immune system on and off. AIDS somehow destroys the T-lymphocytes.

Scientists may soon produce vaccine against mononucleosis

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Scientists may be on the verge of producing a vaccine against a virus that causes mononucleosis and is strongly implicated in several types of cancer, a researcher says.

If encouraging results with animal tests continue, it could become the first vaccine to prevent cancers, but would be aimed only at specific types of cancer.

"Continued advances in this area should result in the realistic possibility that it might be possible to prevent certain types of cancer with an antiviral vaccine," microbiologist Gary R. Pearson of the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., said earlier this week.

Ironically, developing a vaccine may be "the only way one can prove that a virus is responsible for human cancers; that is, to prevent the cancer with an appropriate vaccine," he said.

"Preliminary results indicate that owl monkeys immunized with (vaccine) preparations are protected against infection with this virus," called the Epstein-Barr virus, or EBV, he told an American Cancer Society seminar.

As for human tests, he said, "I suspect that within a couple of years (a vaccine) should be ready, but I wouldn't want to be held to that."

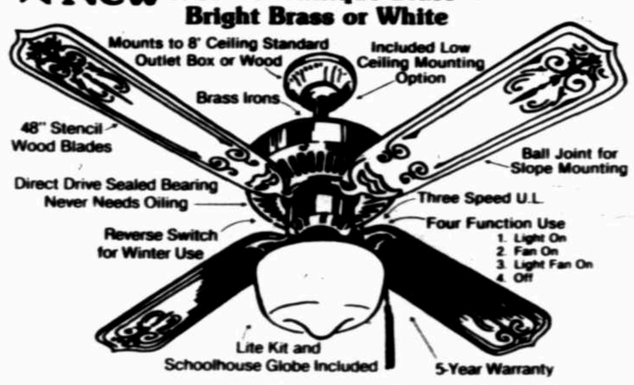

The virus clearly causes infectious mononucleosis, a disease that periodically sweeps college campuses and other concentrations of young people, he said.

And, based on a variety of evidence, "most people now believe that EBV is at least a co-factor in causing several human cancers," specifically African Burkitt's lymphoma and nasopharyngeal carcinoma, Pearson said.

Both cancers are rare in most of the United States. But Burkitt's lymphoma, in which the virus was first identified, is common in Africa. And nasopharyngeal cancer — cancer of the nose and throat — is more common among Eskimos of Alaska and reaches almost epidemic proportions in southern China.

A vaccine would almost certainly be tested first against mononucleosis, at least in the United States, Pearson said.

Champion bull rider started out at young age

HOUSTON (AP) — The rodeo clown with the gnarled fingers has just bumped into the world champion bull rider and the air is awash with mutual admiration.

Charley Sampson, the best bull rider in the world, still looks up to Myrtis Dightman, same as he did when he began hanging around the rodeo ring in Gardena, Calif., a Los Angeles suburb.

"Every time I went out there, he'd be following along behind me," Dightman, 46, recalled at the Houston Rodeo and Livestock Show, where the two met by chance recently. "One time he showed me a picture and says, 'What you think of me sitting up there on this steer?' I said, 'It's OK. But go to school, get an education.'"

"He said you can ride bulls a long time after you get out of school," said Sampson, 25. Accordingly, Sampson clenched his teeth and finished high school before going on the national circuit.

"When he won the finals in '81, I was glad. When he won the world, I was double glad," said Dightman, a native of Crockett and a resident of Houston.

Dightman does not claim to have had much to do with Sampson's success, although he does recall passing along this bit of bullriding wisdom: If you slip down to the bull's side, don't try to hang on.

"If you can't ride him on the top, you can't ride him on the side," he reasoned.

Sampson is hardly cut from the classic cowboy mold. He's short — 5-foot-4 — he's black and he was born not in a dusty, rural setting, but in Watts, the Los Angeles slum.

Seeing Dightman was the one bright spot of the Houston rodeo for Sampson. A broken ankle suffered in a Baton Rouge rodeo reduced him to a spectator for this show, the first major rodeo of the season. Almost as bad, a reporter wanted to him to talk about himself, a task Sampson obviously hates.

So his face lit up when a familiar voice called from behind a beer stand and the two were reunited, as they are occasionally every year.

Sampson became interested in riding during a Cub Scout outing to a stable.

"After that, every day I used to go to the park where there used to be a pony ring," Sampson said. "I used to give the man a quarter and ride around the ring." One day he ran out of quarters and arranged a barter system with the stable manager, trading work for rides.

About two years later, when he was 12, Sampson discovered a rodeo ring in the area, where he began competing in roping events.

"One day, the guy that owned that ring said, 'Get Pee-Wee and put him on a steer,'" Sampson said. He declined at first but was persuaded when the man who had taken him to the arena threatened to leave him there.

"I was all scared and stuff," Sampson said. "The first steer bucked me off and knocked the wind out of me. I said, 'I told you I didn't want to ride him.' But they brought out another one.

"The second one was easier. I rode him and just started riding steers every week."

That was a rougher beginning than many cowboys get today. Sampson said the quality of riders is steadily improving as rodeo becomes more sophisticated. Now a beginner can go to a school and view videotaped riding lessons.

"When I started, you just got on," said Dightman, who said he was chiefly a rodeo clown and never liked riding bulls. But he said he did so for the money for several years starting in the early 1960s.

Back then, a black cowboy like Dightman often had to compete with promoters before he got a chance to compete with other performers.

"One time I went to a rodeo in Liberty. They wanted to put me out," he said. Dightman said he struck a deal, offering to ride a bull which had never been ridden for a full eight seconds in exchange for a ride in the rodeo.

"He made 22 rounds (rotations) in eight seconds, but I rode him," Dightman said. "After that, he (the promoter) said, 'Bring him along with the rest of 'em.'"

At another rodeo in Tennessee, Dightman said, "there was folks come in out of the hills and they'd never seen a black man. The little kids would want to touch you but they was afraid you might be nasty or something."

Probation programs to be funded

AUSTIN (AP) — Two House committees have agreed to eliminate $90 million in prison construction money and use it for other programs, such as adult probation and halfway houses.

Keller said a big part of the $60 million would establish restitution centers with 1,000 beds.

'Ugly' pageant funds refused

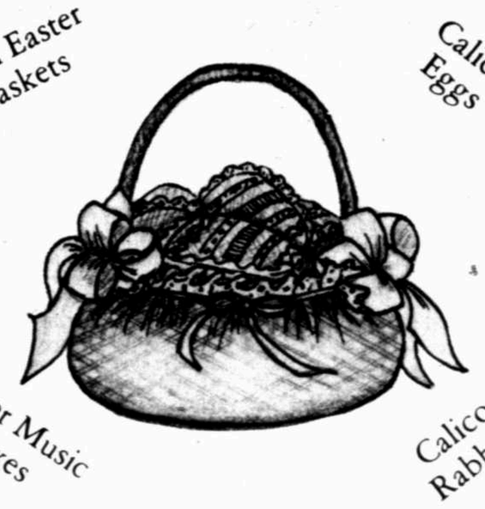

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The Knox County Commission, which turned down funding for the Miss USA pageant, also refused to back an "Ugliest of the Ugly" show.

Two city officials, claiming to be founders of an Ugly Club, are planning the pageant May 11, the day before the finale of the Miss USA beauty contest is held at Civic Coliseum.

Backers of the Miss USA pageant weren't able to get the commission to contribute $100,000 of the $600,000 they originally said was needed to produce the show in Knoxville.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Obese children may not be obese adults

Dear Dr. Solomon: I met some friends for the first time in many years and many of them had their children with them. What surprised me was that some of the kids who I remembered as being chubby were now thin, and some of those who had been thin were now more than pleasingly plump. Is it unusual for children to change so much as they grow older? — Mrs. H.E., New York City, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. E.: Various studies have shown a lack of correlation between obesity in childhood and obesity in later years. For example, one Swedish study of 24 overweight children found that none of them was obese four years later.

The Committee on Nutrition of the American Academy of Pediatrics has stated that most obese infants do not become obese adults, and that most obesity in adults cannot be explained by obesity in infancy.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I read about the diet recommended by some committee that's supposed to prevent cancer. But I'm almost certain I read about the same thing in your column a long time ago. If these recommendations are so new, how come you were able to write about it several months ago? — Sully, Fort Worth

Dear Sully: The diet recommended by the National Research Council as a possible means of preventing cancer is similar to the prudent diet recommended by the American Heart Association some time ago. I believe it is this latter diet that you may have read about in this column.

In brief, the diet calls for reduction in intake of calories from fats; the inclusion of whole-grain cereals, fruits, and vegetables; cutting down on the consumption of salt-cured, salt-pickled, and smoked foods; and avoiding the excess consumption of alcohol.

Even if these changes in the diet have no effect on the development of cancer, the recommendations are sound and could be of siginificant benefit.

For Hillary, Frederick, Md.: The procedure for obesity to which you refer, jejunoileal bypass surgery, has been associated with a number of disorders. With my own patients I stress nutritionally well-balanced meals, exercise, and behavior modification. Such an approach to weight control is completely safe, relatively inexpensive, and effective, if you stick to it.

Celebrities in risky role as amateur diplomats

Taylor, Hope among those who foray abroad

NEW YORK (AP) — From the movie set and the playing fields, actors and athletes are leaping into foreign affairs, sometimes risking careers, personal safety and their government's ire to become freelance diplomats.

The most recent such foray was Elizabeth Taylor's trip to Israel in January. Other members of this diplomatic "corps" are fellow actresses Liv Ullmann and Jane Fonda, comedian Bob Hope, boxer Muhammad Ali, tennis star Arthur Ashe and baseball immortal Roberto Clemente.

Miss Fonda earned the scorn of many Americans in 1972 when she went to Hanoi during the Vietnam war and met with North Vietnamese officials.

Actor Ed Asner received a death threat last year after he criticized the Reagan administration's policies in El Salvador.

Three months later, CBS canceled the "Lou Grant" television series, in which Asner played a newspaper editor, blaming poor ratings. Asner said at the time, "I greatly regret that my speaking out should have helped dampen the acceptance of the show, but I wouldn't have changed a thing."

Although celebrities say they are championing causes close to their hearts, many add they also are speaking for people who have no voice. "I did what I thought was my duty as an American citizen who had access to the media," Miss Fonda said after her North Vietnamese trip.

Asner suggested the motivation might go beyond simple concern for the common man. "In many ways perhaps it is ego," he said. "It is the ego of knowing that perhaps if I open my mouth and say something, it will get other people to think about it. It is massaging the humanitarian ego."

Although celebrities seem not to have greatly affected the course of American diplomacy, all have attracted attention, sometimes at considerable embarrassment to the U.S. government.

In 1978, Ali made a 12-day tour of the Soviet Union in which he greeted Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev with a bear hug and a kiss and praised Soviet society for its orderliness.

In 1980, President Jimmy Carter dispatched Ali to Africa to try to win support for the boycott of the Moscow Olympics. The trip backfired when Ali said in Tanzania he might reconsider his mission because the State Department hadn't told him the Russians gave aid to black African nations.

Aviation pioneer Charles A. Lindbergh may have been the first prominent freelance diplomat when he made several visits to Berlin from 1937 to 1939. Lindbergh was decorated by Nazi officials, and, to the chagrin of many in Congress, called on the United States to stay out of the war.

Athletes have also felt the need to speak out. Ashe, who is black, told the U.N. Committee on Apartheid in 1970 that South Africa should be expelled from the International Tennis Federation and urged a worldwide athletes' boycott of South Africa.

Since then he has played tennis several times in South Africa and has helped organize tennis development programs. He has said he believes contact, rather than isolation, will wear down apartheid.

Concern for his fellow man cost Clemente his life. The Pittsburgh Pirates outfielder was killed on New Year's Eve 1972 when a plane carrying supplies to earthquake victims in Nicaragua crashed after takeoff from Puerto Rico.

Miss Ullmann, the Norwegian actress, became a goodwill ambassador for UNICEF, the United Nations Childrens Fund. In 1981, she testified on Capitol Hill to urge the Reagan administration not to cut voluntary U.S. contributions to the organization. Congress eventually increased the contribution.

In the 1970s, Vietnam was a focus of celebrity attention.

In contrast to Miss Fonda's controversial trip, Bob Hope went to Laos in 1972 to urge a North Vietnamese official to free American prisoners of war, then reported back to then-Secretary of State William P. Rogers.

Lately, the Middle East has been the choice spot for freelance diplomats. Miss Fonda and husband Tom Hayden, now a California Assemblyman, traveled to Lebanon last summer to meet with Israeli soldiers.

In January, Miss Taylor went to Israel on a mission to "bring peace between Israel and Lebanon." Injured in a car accident on her way to a meeting with then-Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, she canceled a scheduled meeting in Beirut with Lebanese President Amin Gemayel.

The U.S. Constitution guarantees Americans the right to speak out. It has restricted foreign travel by withholding or revoking passports, but the extent of its power to do that is a subject of legal debate. It has tried to ward off missions by some celebrities.

The Pentagon said it tried without success to dissuade four Americans last fall from attempting to rescue American POWs they believed were still being held in Laos. According to published reports, actors Clint Eastwood and William Shatner were among the financial backers of the mission, headed by retired Army Lt. Col. James 'Bo' Gritz.

Hodding Carter, the State Department spokesman in the Carter administration and now the host of Public Television's "Inside Story," said the government objects to unsanctioned diplomatic missions because they can send the wrong signals, create the impression that American policy is divided and serve the propaganda of foreign governments.

"Always, professionals are concerned about amateurs dealing with things classically identified as affairs of state," Carter said.

He added, however, that ultimately, the activities of celebrities abroad were considered by officials to be little more than "an annoyance."

Lawmakers go to dogs, cats, etc.

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — A lawmaker barked approval for a bill that would allow tenants 60 and older to keep dogs, cats, birds, fish, mice, gerbils, hamsters, guinea pigs or chinchillas as pets in public housing projects. Turtles were added to the list.

Two backers admit they have some conflict of interest. The grandmother of Sen. Greg Lunn of Tucson, Dorothy Lunn, wants to keep cats in her rooms at the city-owned Tucson House. And Sen. Luis Gonzalez, also of Tucson, wanted turtles added, saying his grandmother prefers them to the other creatures named.

A House committee approved the measure by a vote of 11-0 with one of the votes an "arf" from Rep. Jim Skelly of Scottsdale. "I love dogs, cats — I love them all," he said.

"This is obviously a weird idea and grandma's apple pie and all that," said Rep. Pete Goudinoff.

Odessan files class-action suit

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Jim Golden, who operates a repossession service in Odessa, has filed a class-action suit in federal court against the American Recovery Association (ARA) which Golden says is violating the Sherman Antitrust Act. He charges it is breaching its contract by assessing him and other ARA members funds for legal expenses.

ARA assessed each of its members $100 after the American Lenders Service Co. (ALSCO), Golden and other repossessors and ALSCO franchisees sued ARA for its alleged refusal to expand membership and to let ARA members advertise as they wished in ARA's nationwide directory.

Golden seeks a declaratory judgment to preclude ARA from enforcing assessment of the legal fee funds, which Golden says violate ARA bylaws, and from expelling ARA members who refuse to pay the assessment.

Golden contends that ARA membership and listing in the ARA directory is vital to his business, which specializes in repossessing vehicles and merchandise for banks, credit unions and other money lenders when the debtor "has forfeited possessory rights by defaulting on loan terms."

"...Membership and listing in the ARA directory confers a substantial economic benefit because of the substantial advertising value of the directory which facilitates referrals to ARA members from potential clients," says Golden's petition which was submitted to U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton by his attorney, Bogdan Rentea of Odessa.

Golden, who notes that the ARA membership is made up of about 350 entities, says the repossession trade is highly competitive.

In an ARA trade letter date Jan. 4, ARA Executive Director Huey Mayronne noted the association's board of directors voted unanimously to assess each ARA office $100 "for legal defense of this groundless lawsuit."

Golden argues the ARA bylaws "do not specifically give" ARA "the right to assess its members for any sums over and above annual dues."

Golden cites a bylaw which says the ARA board governs the "affairs" of the association and is "charged with the management of all of the affairs of the association."

Golden contends ARA bylaws provide that any ARA officer or director shall be reimbursed for legal fees but is not to be reimbursed if any claim or liability arose "out of his own negligence or willful misconduct."

Golden says ARA wants funds for the fees in advance of determining any guilt of negligence or willful misconduct.

Defendants in the Golden vs. ARA suit are, according to the petition, ARA President Jack Whaley of California; ARA vice president Don Thornton of Arkansas; ARA secretary-treasurer Mike Baldwin; ARA past president Donald Blanchette; Kevin J. McGivern; Wiley Nugent Sr., Robert S. Schuman, John Van Da Walker, Bob Wilson, Mayronne and Hard Times News co-editors David E. Wright and Art Christensen.

In the initial suit which gave rise to ARA's assessing its membership for legal fees, ALSCO franchisees and other repossessors complain of ARA restrictions, including those of membership and advertising in the trade directory.

Plaintiffs in that suit are:

—ALSCO and ARA members and ALSCO franchisees Ruthnan Bigelow, Clark Beermann, John Asmussen, Rayburn Adkins, Leonard Stamm, J. Ace Carter, A.M. Sprague, Scott Thompson, Dave Schwebe, Golden, Robert Mathews, Shirley Hare, Robert "Bob" Hodnett, U.L. Frasier, Charles Rogers, H.O. Ernst, E.R. Engdahl and Tim Dietz.

—ALSCO franchisees Don Magill, Les Snodgrass, Jerry Mudge and Larry Jackson who are not members of any trade association.

—ALSCO franchisees Ralph Dexter, Wayne Pollock and Richard Zimmerman who are not members of ARA but who hold memberships in other trade associations.

Accidental poisonings happen most often to children under five

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Because youngsters are naturally curious and haven't learned to recognize danger, accidental poisonings happen most often to children under 5 years old.

It happens and children die. It happened in Stanton last week. Mr. and Mrs. Steven Klein's two children swallowed medication they found in a bureau drawer at their grandmother's Midland home.

While 2-year-old David Klein survived, 9-month-old Sharon Klein died March 15. The medication, an anti-depressant, was not contained in a childproof bottle.

Since the beginning of March, three other children, under 3 years old, were rushed to Midland Memorial Hospital's emergency room: All had swallowed medication.

They were lucky — they survived.

According to Arlene Strickland, MMH public relations director, all homes — even those with children occasionally visiting — should be childproof.

"Those who are taking medication and do not have children at home will put the bottle next to the salt and pepper, on the dining room table or on the window ledge," she said. "This is the classic place for children to get into medications."

According to the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, recent statistics from poison control centers show that since safety packaging was introduced in 1970, ingestions of aspirin have declined by 65 percent, lighter fluids by 74 percent, oven cleaners and other lye preparations by 66 percent, antifreeze solutions by 61 percent and paint solvents by 55 percent.

Each year the third week in March is designated as Poison Prevention Week to make people more aware of accidental poisonings.

According to Ms. Strickland, all five of the accidental poisonings seen at MMH this month could have been prevented.

"Those who are taking medication and do not have children at home will put the bottle next to the salt and pepper, on the dining room table or on the window ledge. This is the classic place for children to get into medications."

"Don't read any further! Go, right now and throw out any old medication you have," said Ms. Strickland. "Check your bottles for childproof caps. If they don't have them, ask your pharmacist. Don't wait until next week, do it now."

From her own experience as a mother of a 2½-year-old son and looking at statistics, Ms. Strickland explained, "You can't depend on children under 5 years to understand medication is harmful. It's up to the parents, grandparents and friends to prevent accidental poisoning."

Michael Ellis, director of the Texas state poison center in Galveston, said, "This week is the perfect opportunity for adults who have small children, and even those who just have small children visit occasionally, to take a look at their homes — look for poisons."

Ms. Strickland warned that one tablet or capsule swallowed by a child could be fatal.

"Just because a child has taken one tablet and looks normal doesn't mean he's not in danger," she said. "One tablet prescribed for a 130-pound adult can be lethal for a 25-pound kid.

Some medications are coated," she added. "There is a delay in the absorption rate and a parent may not see the effects immediately. Another factor is whether the child has food in his stomach. More food will slow down absorption.

"If you even suspect a child has accidently taken any medication or swallowed anything suspected poisonous come immediately to the emergency room and bring the container of anything you suspect the child has taken."

While Ms. Strickland said MMH "can and does treat and answer all poison inquiries, the Galveston poison center also can be reached by dialing 1-409-765-1420.

Although prescribed medications and aspirin, especially children's flavored aspirin, are common causes of accidental poisoning, Ellis said one swallow of some household products also can potentially kill a child.

"The fact that a product may both smell and taste bad does not seem to affect small children," he said. "On a one swallow basis, you can get just about anything down before your taste buds and nose tells you that it doesn't taste good."

According to Ms. Strickland, "Everybody thinks the cleanser, bleach and soap powder has to go under the sink — it doesn't. Put these products on a high shelf in a closet, get locks on the doors or invest in a lock box."

In 1982 the Galveston poison center received about 35,000 telephone inquiries, Ellis said.

"About 20,000 of these involved a victim being exposed to a potenially toxic substance and in about 75 percent of these cases a child under 5 years was involved," he added.

Always use child-resistant caps

The Food and Drug Administration, which tracks all accidental poisoning cases through its clearinghouse, offers these ideas for guarding against the "wrong stuff getting into the wrong person:"

—Always use child-resistant or safety caps on prescription and nonprescription medicines.

—Keep dangerous products either locked up or out of reach of children.

—Don't tell children that medicines or vitamins are candy or taste like candy.

—Remember that many items kept around the house are poisonous, including detergents and other household cleaners, perfume and even some plants.

—Keep syrup of Ipecac handy to induce vomiting.

—Have the number of your physician, the poison control center or local emergency number next to the telephone.

—Never store dangerous products in food or drink containers.

—Don't take medication in front of small children.

'Rolling saucers' send couple searching through scrap yards

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

As Midland couples go, Ken and Mary Jane Strobel have led a rather normal life. They've got a teen-age daughter, drive a Buick and, until a few months ago, worked for local oil companies.

But the Strobels have been acting rather strangely of late — for the past several months, in fact.

The peculiar behavior began last summer, when two shiny "rolling saucers" disrupted their normal routine.

Now they're known to spend hours on Mondays roaming scrap yards, mining flea markets and visiting garage sales in search of rather unlikely treasure.

They're prone to stare covetously at the wheels of a reconditioned '57 Chevy, or make long faces at the driver of a late-model car whose matching set of wheelcovers is no longer matched.

And they're inclined to drive along highways — at something resembling a crawl — as they peer into ditches, bushes and fields, searching for the seemingly ambulatory auto parts that have become their livelihood.

Hubcaps.

On Feb. 15, the Strobels opened Midland's Hubcap Annie, where they sell, clean and repair hubcaps. They serve an average of 40 customers per day in the hubcap haven at 4003 W. Wall St.

They've chased the chrome-plated covers since last summer, when they lost two from their car and searched in vain to find replacements at local salvage yards and body shops.

Mary Jane said an auto parts dealer quoted them a price of about $130 apiece for replacement originals.

As she leaned against the counter at Hubcap Annie, Mary Jane said she told the salesman: "I don't want to buy a new car, I just want two hubcaps."

On a trip to Marble Falls in October, friends took the Strobels to a Hubcap Annie in Austin. After talking with the manager, one of the original "Annie's" sisters, they left with two, like-new hubcaps for about $75 apiece. They also departed with a keen interest in starting a Midland Hubcap Annie franchise.

Early this year they visited Memphis, Tenn., to confer with the original "Annie," Nancy Utley.

She began collecting hubcaps more than a dozen years ago. Her husband, a Memphis police captain, found ample opportunity to contribute as he patrolled the city's highways and backroads.

About six years ago, when hubcap heaps overwhelmed the Utley's garage, backyard and swimming pool, she held a yard sale to dispose of her collection.

Now, after appearing on TV's "Real People" and assuming a catchy moniker, Ms. Utley has pioneered her hubcap hobby into a blooming business with about 40 franchises.

"Annie" led the Strobels through a two-day training seminar and sent them home with supply catalogues and a trailer filled with about 600 hubcaps.

Ken recalled retrieving about 20 hubcaps found along the road during the 130-mile trip from Memphis to Little Rock, Ark.

Mary Jane said the original stock of 600 hubcaps has grown to near 2,000, in any number of sizes and designs. She said they can usually order any hubcap not in stock from "Annie's" vast wheelcover warehouses in Memphis.

One customer, Ray McGee, said the Strobels also offer "needles in the haystack." After searching throughout Odessa for hubcaps to suit his 1977 Ford, McGee found them at Hubcap Annies.

"We've had a lot of fun with it," Ken said. "It's interesting, it's easy, it's fun to meet a lot of new people."

The Strobels are thinking of expanding the business into Odessa. Ken, confident that the hubcap business is virtually "recession proof," said: "We're going to make a living at this."

He took early retirement after 30 years with an oil company to start their business. Mary Jane said she was still working for an oil company when "come to find out, our business was so demanding, it was either me quit or hire somebody else.

"I didn't know anything more than where to put the gas in and where to put the key," she said. "But when you wash and catalogue more than 1,000 hubcaps, you get to know what they go on and what they do."

FORT WORTH — Memorial services for Lee O. Tyndall, 68, of Fort Worth, father of Carol Deramus of Midland, were Monday in Greenwood chapel here with the Rev. David Mitchell and the Rev. Daniel Toven officiating. Burial was in Greenwood Memorial Park.

He died Saturday.

Tyndall was born Sept. 27, 1914.

Other survivors include his wife, three daughters and six grandchildren.

Police look for rape suspect

Police continue to search for a man suspected in the early morning rape of a Midland woman in the downtown area Tuesday.

The woman, in her mid-20s, told officers she was leaving the Yucca Theater about 1 a.m. after trying out for a part in a play. A man armed with a pistol confronted her outside the theater, forced her to walk to an area four blocks away and then raped her on the ground.

The man — who police said bears a resemblance to a man suspected in a rape just west of the downtown area several weeks ago — was described as black, in his mid-30s and about 5 feet, 11 inches tall. He wore a green jacket and had a cloth tied around his head.

In a burglary complaint, Christina Miller of 501 W. Nobles Ave. said a television set and assorted stereo equipment worth a total of $2,025 were taken in a break-in at her residence Wednesday. Entry was gained through a window.

Two-year-old struck by backing car

A 2-year-old Midland girl escaped serious injury after she was struck by a car backing out of a driveway late Wednesday afternoon.

Anna Villarreal of 1410 S. Fisher St. was released after treatment for head lacerations at Midland Memorial Hospital. According to the Department of Public Safety, she was hit by a car as it backed out of the driveway at her home shortly after 4 p.m.

Driver of the car was identified as Aurora Canto, no street address available, of Midland. The girl had been playing behind the vehicle at the time.

Odessa police seek armed robbers

ODESSA — Police are looking for two men who reportedly held up the Whataburger fast-food restaurant at 1900 E. 8th St. Wednesday night.

A woman employee told officers two Hispanic men armed with pistols entered the restaurant shortly before 10 p.m. and escaped on foot with an undisclosed amount of money that had been placed in another employee's cap.

The men appeared to be in their early 20s and wore ski masks and bandanas over their faces, according to police.

White says crime can be reduced by better education

AUSTIN (AP) — Most of the people serving time in prison today are poorly educated, and Gov. Mark White says that proves his point that crime can be reduced by better education — in and out of prison.

"What we do in education determines what happens in the prisons — how big they have to be or whether they have to be as big as we have them today," White told a group of reformed ex-convicts Wednesday.

He said most "people in prison today didn't get a good education. They can't go to work for the IBMs of this world because they are not qualified."

"I intend to see that it (education in prison) is required. Many of them need the discipline," White said. The former criminals met in Austin to speak in favor of a bill that would restore their voting rights.

Then, when they are freed, White said, "they will have an economic future. They won't be cast out in the same position they were when they got in trouble the first time."

The group was organized by Citizens United for Rehabilitation of Errants which spent the day in the Capitol talking with state officials.

White said education can keep people from getting in trouble in the first place. "I don't mean beginning in high school, but in kindergarten and pre-school," White said. "We need to build a winning attitude into those young people at an early age."

Man to be retried on alien-smuggling charges

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Prosecutors say a Dayton, Ohio, man will be retried on charges of smuggling aliens into the United States in connection with an operation that resulted in death for five Salvadorans last fall.

Walter Harris is charged in a 13-count federal grand jury indictment of conspiring to smuggle aliens into the country and of smuggling aliens across the Texas-Mexico border.

His trial was declared a mistrial Wednesday after the seven-man, five-woman jury told U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela it could not reach a unanimous verdict.

The jury, which began deliberations Tuesday afternoon, reported that 10 people had voted to convict Harris and two had voted for acquittal.

Vela set a May 2 pretrial hearing in the second trial for Harris.

Four Salvadorans suffocated Oct. 4, 1982, in an abandoned 18-wheel tractor-trailer that had been used to transport 26 aliens to Edinburg from the Mexican border 15 miles south.

The truck was owned by Harris' firm, Fealy, Inc., but testimony during the trial indicated Harris did not always have knowledge of the whereabouts of his vehicles after they were leased.

Prosecutors had contended the scheme to transport the Salvadorans was devised in Dayton last summer and that Harris had participated in the plan with at least one of the men already sentenced in the operation.

The 26 aliens locked inside the truck began to suffer, and four died, in the sweltering heat of the truck when a fan that provided air failed.

The body of a fifth Salvadoran who had wandered away from the truck after the back door was opened was found two days later near a drainage canal.

The aliens told authorities they had paid up to $1,500 each for the ill-fated ride.

Harris' trial was the first to come of the October tragedy.

Three men were sentenced in U.S. District Court in Laredo in January for their pleas of guilty and no contest in the alien smuggling attempt.

U.S. District Judge George Kazen sentenced Larry David McCoy, 41, of McAllen to a total of five years in prison for his guilty pleas to conspiring to transport and transporting illegal aliens.

Edward Gene Hunter, 39, of Pharr was sentenced to a total of seven years in prison after he pleaded no contest to the counts against him. Robert James Manners received a 18-month sentence for his guilty plea to conspiring to transport aliens. Manners was required to serve 49 days of the sentence, according to federal court records in Brownsville.

Five other people allegedly involved in the alien smuggling scheme, including Hunter's wife.

GISD board names football stadium

Other action included approval of textbooks, reappointment of teachers and aides, the 1983 summer swim schedule and the 1983-84 school calendar.

The stadium was named J.M. King Memorial Stadium in honor of the late J.M. King, who donated land for the school plant, including football and practice fields, according to James Warlick, GISD superintendent.

Recommendations made by the textbook committee were approved as were reappointments of the 71 elementary and secondary teachers and aides.

Also approved was the summer swimming schedule. The pool will be open during the summer from 1 to 6 p.m. Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and from 5 to 10 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays.

In other action, the seven-member board approved the calendar for the upcoming school year and resignations of Herschel and Jane Burleson. Burleson was the boys basketball coach and Mrs. Burleson was a teacher.

Trustees also discussed options for telephone services and a gas line for the school building under construction. The building will include 25 classrooms, two gymnasiums, two shop classrooms, two home economics classrooms, a band hall and an auditorium.

Tentative plans call for the building to house high school students.

A special meeting to canvass ballots was set for 7 p.m. April 4. Trustees are expected to hear representatives from several phone companies concerning installation of phone service in the new school building at that time.

White still wants to elect PUC commissioners

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White says he is sticking with his campaign vow for an elected Public Utility Commission because he thinks Texans "are extremely concerned about it."

White told a news conference Wednesday that despite a current coolness among legislators for an elected commission he plans a "one-on-one" campaign to sell his proposal.

And if that doesn't work, White said, "I'm prepared, if necessary, to go directly to the people with this issue."

White said he was not committed to a special session on an elected commission, "but there's always that possibility."

"I am extremely serious about having an elected commission, and I am going to be talking directly with members of the House and Senate over the relative merits of that elected commission," White said.

"The strongest argument of all is once you have an elected commission, you are going to find those commissioners going into the communities and facing the people they are regulating and explaining their actions. And today you don't have that even under the most favorable circumstances," White said.

Gas company sues Dallas lawyer

A LaJolla, Calif.-based gas company which alleges Dallas lawyer William D. Neary has not paid his share of the bills in a joint well operation in southeast Midland County has filed suit in federal court for foreclosure of its operator's lien on Neary's oil and gas rights unless he pays his share — $50,013.90 — of the bills.

The suit's petitions says Western Natural Gas Co. owns 51 percent of the working interest in the well, Heidelberg No. 1, and that Neary, as trade trustee, owns 49 percent.

Under an operating agreement of Jan. 1, 1981, Western and Neary agreed to share the well's operating expenses. But according to Western, Neary has declined to pay 49 percent of those expenses.

Driving insanity

In the wake of increasing traffic fatalities and injuries caused by drunken drivers, the state finally has decided to get tough with drivers who drink. A bill recently approved by the Texas Senate significantly increases penalties for drivers who drive while intoxicated and abolishes use of "deferred adjudication." The bill is a good one, but it could go a step further.

Introduced in the Senate by Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Hereford, the bill has been sent to the House where it is awaiting assignment to a committee. The bill answers some concerns of those now pushing for stricter laws against drunken driving. For example, in addition to forbidding use of deferred adjudication in DWI cases, it also mandates jail time for repeat offenders.

It provides a good means for getting tough with drunken drivers, a public concern evidenced by the formation of such groups as MADD (Mothers Against Drunk Drivers). A Permian Basin Chapter of MADD, which supports tougher laws as a deterrent to drunk driving, is currently being organized. That is an example of the public sentiment currently against drunk driving.

Statistics from MADD verify there is a need to be concerned about the United States' DWI problem. The organization notes that more than 25,000 people die each year in this country from alcohol-related accidents — one person each 21 minutes.

Sen. Sarpalius presented startling statistics himself during the Senate debate of his bill, noting that during 1981 there were 100 DWI accidents a day — accidents that killed 1,082 people and injured 27,751 others. The accidents caused $3.5 billion in damages, making driving while intoxicated a most expensive and dangerous pastime.

Providing harsher penalties for those convicted of DWI is one realistic means for dealing with the problem, but there are rehabilitation aspects that should not be overlooked, too. Sarpalius' bill could be strengthened if it provided a requirement for those convicted of DWI first offense and receiving probation to attend driver training courses, a tool many judges already are using.

Overall, though, it's a good step forward in the war against drunk driving, a war that touches each of us. We hope the members of the Texas House agree.

All in a name

Governors from both sides of the political fence took a look at the economy the other day and were encouraged by what they saw.

Tennessee's Republican chief executive, Lamar Alexander, put it this way:

"People are still a little shell-shocked because they've hoped so long for a recovery, but things are getting better with increased sales of autos, homes and in stores."

Bruce Babbitt, Arizona's Democratic governor, likened the warmer economic climate to the coming of spring:

"I detect a sense of optimism, with people waiting to see the first blossoms of spring. The drop in gasoline prices has been a big plus."

It is difficult for some to admit that what critics of the administration have been calling "Reaganomics" has had anything to do with the steady rise out of an 18-month recession. President Reagan recently took note of the upturn in the economy and couldn't resist a little political needling. He said:

"When it wasn't working they called it Reaganomics. Now what are they going to call it?"

Another View:

Oil price fortunes

The troubles of OPEC, which recently reached shaky agreement on a lower base price for oil and production quotas in an effort to stabilize falling oil prices, will undoubtedly go down as one of the top news stories of 1983. But reactions to the precipitous oil developments have almost taken on the character of a "that's good, that's bad" comedy routine.

One of those who sees some bad in the situation is Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker. Concerned about the impact of declining oil prices on Americans' conservation habits and on oil tax revenues needed to reduce federal budget deficits, he has suggested a new tax on oil.

The merits of the idea aside, such hand-wringing over lower oil prices must seem a little incredible to motorists who waited in gas lines during the 1973-74 Arab oil embargo and again in 1979-80 while oil prices soared, helping bring on the current recession.

There is cause for hand-wringing, of course, a major one being the possibility of an all-out price-cutting war that could deal a dangerous blow to oil-producing countries with large foreign debts and to the banks that have lent them enormous sums.

Mexico, Venezuela, Nigeria and Indonesia owe a total of about $140 billion, nearly a quarter of the debt amassed by the developing world. The recent cut in the OPEC benchmark price from $34 to $29 a barrel is expected to deprive them of tens of billions of dollars of income.

But consider some of the good news. The OPEC action is expected to reduce the U.S. inflation rate by 1 percent this year, save the average American household $85 a year in energy bills, lower interest rates, and boost our gross national product, fueling U.S. economic recovery.

President Reagan has applauded the oil price decline as "more good news for the world economy." Lower prices should help debt-ridden non-oil producing countries such as Argentina. The global economy will also be aided to the extent that other nations ride the coattails of U.S. recovery.

But experts find gloom even in this scenario, pointing out that world economic recovery will boost the demand for oil, erasing the current glut, and could once again put OPEC in the driver's seat. Respected think tanks forecast another oil shortage crisis by 1990.

For the time being, we might as well sit back and enjoy the turn in oil fortunes — but without relaxing the conservation efforts that have helped break OPEC's stranglehold and will be vital to keeping the cartel's hands off our economy in the future.

ART BUCHWALD

From: Glitz, Chief of Shredder and Hit List Division
Dear Sir,

Art Buchwald

Assume, in spite of some changes you will make in agency, you will want up-to-date information on EPA employees who are clean air fanatics, pro-environmentalists, and have relatives who belong to National Audubon Society. Your predecessor, as well as the secretary of Interior, found these lists most helpful in serving EPA political interests of the country as mandated by Congress.

This is updated report for week of March 7, 1983.

Duncan Plowright — Denver office. Was photographed in 1970 at Earth Day Demonstration while student at University of Utah. Wife was once engaged to leader of "Save the American Bald Eagle Club" in Santa Fe, New Mexico. Plowright's brother Zeth was attorney for class action suit to remove poison gas from U.S. Army chemical depot on runway at Denver Airport. Plowright spends all his time citing our friends for EPA violations, despite warnings from his superiors in Washington that Justice Department does not have lawyers to prosecute cases. He is extremely dangerous and could cause trouble in 1984 elections.

Mathilda Meriweather — Detroit. Was observed by one of our political informants having lunch with a Canadian environmental official, code name Pierre, and was overheard discussing acid rain and its effect on lakes and wildlife along Canadian border. Two days later same informant observed her going into movie theater to see documentary on nuclear war made by Canadian Film Board. She failed to report seeing this picture to her superiors. Meriweather has mother who lives in Toronto, and could easily be subjected to blackmail by Canadian Royal Mounted Police.

Suggested we eliminate Meriweather's job in budget cutback, and turn over her duties to Sig Dolby, a consultant firm that now represents the Heavy Sulphur Coal Producers Association.

Frank Mulch — San Francisco office. Is considered in Northern California as a career environmental elitist. Goes back-packing with his family every summer in High Sierras. Has opposed strip mining by private sector in Redwood forests. In tapped telephone conversation he was quoted as saying James Watt "was off the wall, and his elevator didn't go to the top floor," an obvious allusion to the secretary's sanity. Mulch roomed in college with Thomas Wilkie, a notorious member of the Sierra Club, and our information is they still keep in contact. He is the type of person who won't be satisfied until the White House is turned into a bird's nest.

Hubert Deplatz — Newark office. We have received five complaints on Deplatz from the "How-Now Dioxin Chemical Company," located in New Jersey. The chairman of the board claims Deplatz is waging a vendetta against "How-Now" and cited a report Deplatz submitted to EPA without first letting company lawyers edit it. This violates the verbal understanding our agency has with all chemical companies, that they will have first crack at changing EPA reports before they are sent to Washington. Deplatz, a civil service employee, cannot be fired, but there is nothing in the regulations that says he can't be transferred to Nome, Alaska.

Digby Pester — St. Louis office. Pester has requested $500,000 from EPA billion dollar Superfund to clean up toxic waste dumps in St. Joseph, Missouri. When EPA political experts turned down his request, because it would help elect a Democratic mayor, Pester went over our heads and contacted "60" Minutes.

Mike Wallace was seen sniffing around St. Joseph's last week with a camera crew. Pester is a smoking gun, and if he is interviewed the fallout could be hazardous to President Reagan's political health. Suggest we give St. Joseph $500,000 immediately even if it means depleting the capital of the Superfund.

This is just a high-priority list of EPA troublemakers. I am appending a longer one of 2,000 names which you should have in files.

Your predecessor tried to get rid of as many pro-environmentalists in the agency as she possibly could. But unfortunately she was unable to finish the job. The greatest tribute you could pay her is to pick up the torch and take up where she left off.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

EPA lets dirty air get dirtier

WASHINGTON — The function of the Environmental Protection Agency, of course, is to protect the environment. But the people who run the EPA seem more interested in protecting the environment's industrial polluters.

Jack Anderson

Take the matter of "particulate pollution." This is the visible soot and dust that people suck into their lungs. EPA officials decided the existing standards were too strict, so they decided to run a "cost-benefit" analysis of its proposed relaxation of the standards. This means determining whether the cost of enforcing a regulation is worth it in benefits to the public.

The idea of equating human health and dollars-and-cents is pretty crass. In fact, Congress made an explicit exemption from the cost-benefit yardstick in the Clean Air Act.

But the determined particulate-pushers at EPA went ahead with their cost-benefit study anyway. They justified this nose-thumb at Congress by citing a White House executive order that instructed federal agencies generally to run cost-benefit studies whenever a rules change was being considered.

But guess what: The EPA's proposed looser standard flunked its cost-benefit test. EPA staff studies and a $200,000 report by an outside consultant agreed that letting the air get dirtier would be far more expensive, in terms of additional health-care costs and workdays lost due to illness, than the amount saved by having a looser standard to enforce.

One EPA study found that the existing tough air-pollution standards had prevented as many as 40 million lost workdays. Another showed that hundreds of lives would be lost from lung disease and thousands of illnesses caused if the standards were relaxed.

Embarrassed by this bureaucratic boomerang, EPA officials simply kept the studies away from the agency's science advisers, whose job is to provide relevant data for new regulations.

Sheldon Meyers, director of planning and standards for EPA's office of air quality, said the studies were not allowed to be used because they hadn't been "peer reviewed" by other scientists. My EPA sources suggest it was because the results weren't what the agency brass wanted to hear.

At any rate, EPA next contracted with Mathtech, a respected consulting firm in Princeton, N.J., to do the required cost-benefit study. But the Mathtech report, a draft of which was seen by my associate John Dillon, was even less palatable to the EPA poohbahs.

Mathtech estimated that relaxing the air-pollution standards would save about $20 billion over a nine-year period. But it estimated that keeping the current standards would save $78 billion over the same period.

Slapped down by their own cost-benefit studies, EPA officials abruptly reversed themselves. They cited a provision of the Clean Air Act that says the EPA should not use the cost-benefit ratio as a basis for setting pollution standards.

The reason EPA was established in the first place was that Congress considered health more important than money. So clean-air standards should be enforced even if they are expensive. EPA officials chose to ignore this in hopes that the cost-benefit studies would help them justify a relaxation of the standards; then, when things didn't work out the way they had hoped, they changed signals.

Footnote: The White House has told EPA it wants to see the study, but it's unlikely the results will be used. Nobody thinks the study "produced good results," an administration spokesman said.

MIDEAST PARADOX: Both sides in the Israeli-Lebanon dispute are citing the late Egyptian President Anwar Sadat as an arguing point. His name was invoked by President Reagan, for example, when Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir called last week at the White House.

Reagan pointed out that the Egyptian leader was first ostracized by other Arab leaders for signing the Camp David accords, and eventually was assassinated by Moslem extremists. Reagan suggested that Lebanese President Amin Gemayel faces the same fate if he signs a separate peace with Israel. Gemayel's brother, Bashir Gemayel, who cooperated with the Israelis, was also an assassination victim.

In their private sessions together, Reagan told Shamir that it was "unfortunate" that Egypt had had to break away from its Arab allies to sign the Camp David accords. He reminded Shamir of Sadat's fate.

The Israelis countered that Sadat was a bold leader who had the courage to break with the rest of the Arab world and sign a peace treaty with Israel, thus bringing the first hope for an end to decades of Arab-Israeli hostility. With the kind of support the United States gave Sadat, the Israelis argued, Gemayel could sign a bilateral peace treaty with Israel and advance the cause of Middle East peace.

But Shamir was unable to persuade Reagan that Gemayel would succeed if he could be assured of solid U.S. support, and that Reagan's hopes for an overall peace settlement agreeable to all parties is a chimera.

GEORGE F. WILL

Black political clout untapped

WASHINGTON — Anyone who anoints himself leader of an organization called People United to Save Humanity thinks spaciously, and Jesse Jackson, founder of PUSH, is thinking of entering the Democratic presidential primaries.

George F. Will

He probably would get only a small sliver of even the black vote. Being frivolous with the franchise is a luxury of the comfortable. Besides, Jackson's complaint against the Democratic Party is, to say no more, unconvincing. It is that the party holds blacks "in contempt." Actually, it has promised much to blacks, it has kept its promises and, given the parlous state of the republic's budget, there is not much more, aside from "affirmative action," it can promise at the moment.

A Jackson candidacy would be unserious. But the untapped strength of the black electorate is serious and, for Republicans, ominous.

Winning re-election in 1982 as Pennsylvania's governor, Richard Thornburgh got 20 percent of the black vote, about double what most Republican candidates got, nationwide. But in 1978 he got more than 50 percent. True, in 1978 he was helped by the Democratic Party's entanglement with Frank Rizzo, Philadelphia's polarizing mayor. But in 1982 Thornburgh was endorsed by many state and national black leaders (including Jesse Jackson), yet could not counter the bitter, galvanizing hostility blacks feel for Reagan's policies and for Reagan personally. This bitterness may be the most underestimated force in U.S. politics today. Reagan is becoming the fourth factor in transforming the black electorate into a formidable anti-Republican sword.

A paper prepared by the Joint Center for Political Studies, a black research organization, notes that three events turned blacks into the Democratic Party's most cohesive block. One was the relief provided by the New Deal. Another was Harry Truman's civil rights legislation and 1948 civil rights plank that provoked Strom Thurmond's Dixiecrat candidacy. The third was the Republicans' nomination in 1964 of a candidate, Barry Goldwater, opposed to the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Today, the paper says, "not only are the black poor dependent on government transfer programs; the black middle class is also heavily reliant on the public sector for employment opportunities and contracting arrangements." This limits the extent to which the GOP can appeal to blacks even if it invigorates the private sector.

In 1956 Adlai Stevenson got only 61 percent of the black vote, and four years later John F. Kennedy got only 68 percent. But since the civil-rights revolution the Democrats' share (according to Gallup) has been: 1968 — 85 percent, 1972 — 87 percent, 1976 — 85 percent, 1980 — 86 percent.

True, Jimmy Carter got all but 14 percent of the black vote and lost all but six states. But momentous consequences can flow from changes at the margin in democracy. Of the 17 million blacks of voting age, only 10 million are registered and only 7 million voted in 1982. If 11 million voted, that would mean at least 3.5 million more Democratic votes.

In 1969 there were 1,160 black elected officials. Last year there were 5,160. But that is just one percent of all elective offices. Aside from two Mississippians elected during Reconstruction, Ed Brooke (R-Mass.) is the only black to serve in the Senate (1969-79). Only 52 blacks have served in the House, about half during Reconstruction; most — 21 — of the blacks elected in this century are now in Congress.

Only 14 congressional districts (three in Chicago) have black majorities. But blacks comprise at least 20 percent of the population in 86 districts which may be decisive in the Democratic primaries. Only 26 are northern urban districts. The other 60 are in the South.

Fifty-three percent of all blacks live in the South. But in four of the five states with the most electoral votes (California, New York, Texas, Illinois — a total of 136 electoral votes, more than half of the 270 needed to win), there are more than one million black voters. Twenty-eight of the nation's largest cities have more than 100,000 blacks. Thirty cities with more than 30,000 residents have black mayors. In 24 of the 25 largest school systems, a majority of the students are black or other racial minorities.

No candidate since Dwight Eisenhower in 1952 has won the presidency without carrying at least three of these six northern industrial states: Illinois, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania. In these states there are approximately 5.5 million blacks of voting age — a lot of them hitherto unregistered.

Republicans who are not dismayed by these numbers do not understand the political potential of the black vote, or the social failure represented by the fact that 11 percent of the electorate is essentially inaccessible to one party.

Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law. Ps. 119:18

Pioneer pilots recall early years of flying

SUN CITY, Ariz. (AP) — Probably few Luke Air Force Base pilots flashing across Valley skies in their super-powered jet fighters are aware of the pioneers who blazed the trail for them.

World War I aviators flew in flimsy two-winged planes without radio or parachute and many without even a compass. They were part of the aviation section of the Army Signal Corps, the forerunner of the the Air Force.

"We started from infancy," said Tom McClung, one of eight of them who live in Sun City.

"Everything was pretty crude," commented Robert Matthews, who flew bombing runs over northeast France in the two-seater DeHavilland "4" planes he said became known as the "flying coffin."

"The DeHavilland gas tank had no protection," the 88-year-old former stockbroker explained. "One bullet, and the plane would catch on fire."

The tank was located between the pilot and "observer," who from his rear seat acted as bombardier and gunner.

Bombing runs were made during the day, Matthews said. Because there were no compasses on board, pilots "flew by map and visual contact."

Matthews, a native of Wisconsin, said four bombs, weighing about 110 pounds each, were strapped under the wings of the aircraft and could be released by the "observer" one at a time or all at once.

Although bombing runs were at low flying levels (about 3,000 feet) the former pilot claimed there was little fear from ground artillery fire in that day. The threat was from enemy pursuit planes.

Despite the sophistication of today's aircraft, McClung feels flying in the old two-winged Jennies "was more exciting."

The Jennies, later used for barnstorming, were the standard training planes for World War I pilots.

"We flew in open cockpits, without compasses, without parachutes and with only four instruments:" an altimeter, a tachometer and gas and oil pressure gauges, said the 88-year-old McClung.

Before taking off, pilots had to check the varnished fabric-covered wood frame fuselages, to make sure none of it was torn, and also tighten the turnbuckles on the wings.

McClung remained at Mather Field, near Sacramento, Calif., throughout the war and is credited with inventing a protective metal unit for tents to keep them from catching on fire from hot stove pipes.

Sam Price, 89-year-old retired colonel who flew state-side through both world wars, feels the same as McClung about early-day flying.

"Today, you set the instruments, tell the plane where to go and it will go there."

The eight-cylinder plane he first flew was made of wood, wire and linen, and its 90-horsepower engine would let it cruise at 65 mph.

Price, who was a "school kid" when he saw the Wright brothers fly, remained with the reserves after World War I. Put on active duty in 1940, he was serving as co-pilot on a general's plane when World War II broke out, during which he flew C-47s while also serving as commanding officer at several air bases.

Price, a registered pharmacist, remained with the Army into the Korean War as executive officer of base hospitals.

Harmon Kopperud, now 87, recalls being tested for "high" altitude flying by having a hood placed over his head. Enlistees who didn't pass out within a certain time period went on to flight training.

Kopperud, who later became a flight instructor, did most of his flying in the Jennies, which he likened to the Model T Ford.

Invited into the cockpit of a jetliner, during a flight to the Orient about 10 years ago, the former South Dakota banker said he was overwhelmed by the number of instruments facing the crew.

Howard Russell, 85, was all set to get into combat flying after landing in France during World War I. By the time combat training, in English and French pursuit planes, was finally over, so was the war.

Road blocked to protect salamanders

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. (AP) — In spring, the thoughts of salamanders turn to love, which is why Framingham police blocked Hemenway Road with barriers and flashing lights last weekend.

Naturalist Jorie Hunken said the salamanders were trying to slither from hibernation spots in a nature reserve to a shallow pool for mating on the other side of the street — and being flattened by passing cars.

"The permanent shallow pond is perfect to breed in," she said.

Every year in March, two salamander species attempt to make the five-minute crossing, Ms. Hunken said.

Selectman John King ordered police to re-route traffic on Hemenway Road to save the tiny amphibious creatures.

Before the road was blocked, two 6-inch-long creatures were killed. Ms. Hunken said people drove around the roadblocks and flattened two more salamanders, both of the rare blue-spotted variety. The more common salamander is spotted yellow.

The roadblock was lifted the next night, after it was presumed that all available salamanders had a chance to get to the pool.

"If it's for salamanders, it's fine with me," said Barbara Uftring of Hemenway Road.

"The detour's really no inconvenience — not as long as I'm saving salamanders," said another neighbor, Joel Gribens.

King, also a Hemenway resident, said, "We've gotten requests to close roads for various reasons. This is the first of this particular nature."

New York exhibit gets visitors to 'take a dive'

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — As workers put finishing touches on a new exhibition at the American Museum of Natural History, some of the younger visitors warily skirted past a temporary barrier to take a peek.

"Is anyone inside that?" asked a little girl, standing beneath the bulbous, space-age diving suit, a white and black contraption with mechanical claws resembling one of those flexible plastic toys enlarged about 20 times.

Afterwards, when the children had been shooed away from the exhibit and the workers had departed, Dr. Sylvia Earle, a deep sea diver and explorer, walked quietly towards that same diving suit, which is called Jim 9 and is part of the exhibition, "Exploring the Deep Frontier."

It is a three-quarters-sized replica of the one she used to set a world record for the deepest ocean bottom walk by a woman.

Earle made her historic ocean floor walk in September 1979, wearing an updated version of the "Iron Man" diving suit, named for Jim Jarratt, the pioneer diver who tested the original on the condition that it be named after him. Jarratt used those primitive models a half century ago to locate the sunken Lusitania. Earle's suit, using the same principle of flexible joints, was built and equipped with space-age technology. When she stepped onto the Pacific Ocean floor, she was 1,250 feet beneath the surface. For the next 2½ hours, she explored the bottom freely, since the suit, similar to ones used by astronauts, was life-sustaining.

"As I stepped from the platform, I was aware that I was venturing onto a terrain in some ways comparable to the surface of the moon," she said. "Not only do the slopes and craggy ridges of the deep sea floor resemble a moonscape, but they also are equally unexplored. And until recently, they have been just as inaccessible."

A marine scientist, conservationist and oceanographic explorer, Earle came to New York to help publicize the exhibit. It is based, in part, on her research into deep sea exploration sponsored by the National Geographic Society. The exhibit traces mankind's age-old quest to explore the sea, while evoking connections between outer space and ocean exploration. Along with capturing the history of deep sea diving in pictures, models, films and graphics, the exhibit also reminds us of some grand sea fantasies ranging from Moby Dick to Jules Verne, from "Jaws" to James Bond.

End of an era at Midland College

TERRY WILLIAMSON

But that's what you can expect when you realize that the end of an era has come. Basketball will never be the same in Midland.

There will be no more slam dunks from tiny 5-6 Spud Webb. There will be no more of Chester Smith's dominating board work. There will be no more of Nate Bufford's bombing raids. MC isn't the national champion anymore. And Coach Jerry Stone — who knows about Coach Jerry Stone?

IT ALL came home on a recent visit to the MC campus this week. The activity was heavy, but nothing you wanted to see.

Gene Bartow, the one who gave up the bright lights of UCLA to make the low light University of Alabama-Birmingham a national basketball power, was on campus in an effort to recruit Smith.

Stone was in Dallas on a "recruiting" mission, but most feel that he is the one being recruited by none other than North Texas State University, the school that almost took Webb out of his hip pocket a mere year ago.

Webb is keeping his options open now that Bill Blakeley has been ousted as basketball coach at NTSU, but it is for sure this time that he won't be returning to Midland College — his two years are up.

Bufford is on the way to Southern Illinois on a look-see mission and he can't come back to MC either. The era has ended.

"Is Coach (Stone) going to North Texas?" asked Webb. "I've been hearing his name mentioned."

WHO KNOWS the answer to that? But more to the point is Webb still going to NTSU where he signed a national letter of intent last year before deciding on staying at MC? "I don't know if they will still want me, but I'm going to graduate from Midland College so I'm not really bound to go there anyway," Webb answered.

Smith says, "I don't know where I'm going yet. Both UAB and Mississippi are interested."

Bartow, who has had UAB in the NCAA playoffs three years in a row, is more than interested in Smith. He would have already signed Smith if Chester would have put his name on the dotted line. But that's not done until April 13.

"We have a good point guard at UAB and good rebounding strength," Bartow said. "But we desperately need a good shooting forward to be right back in the NCAAs and we feel like Chester is it.

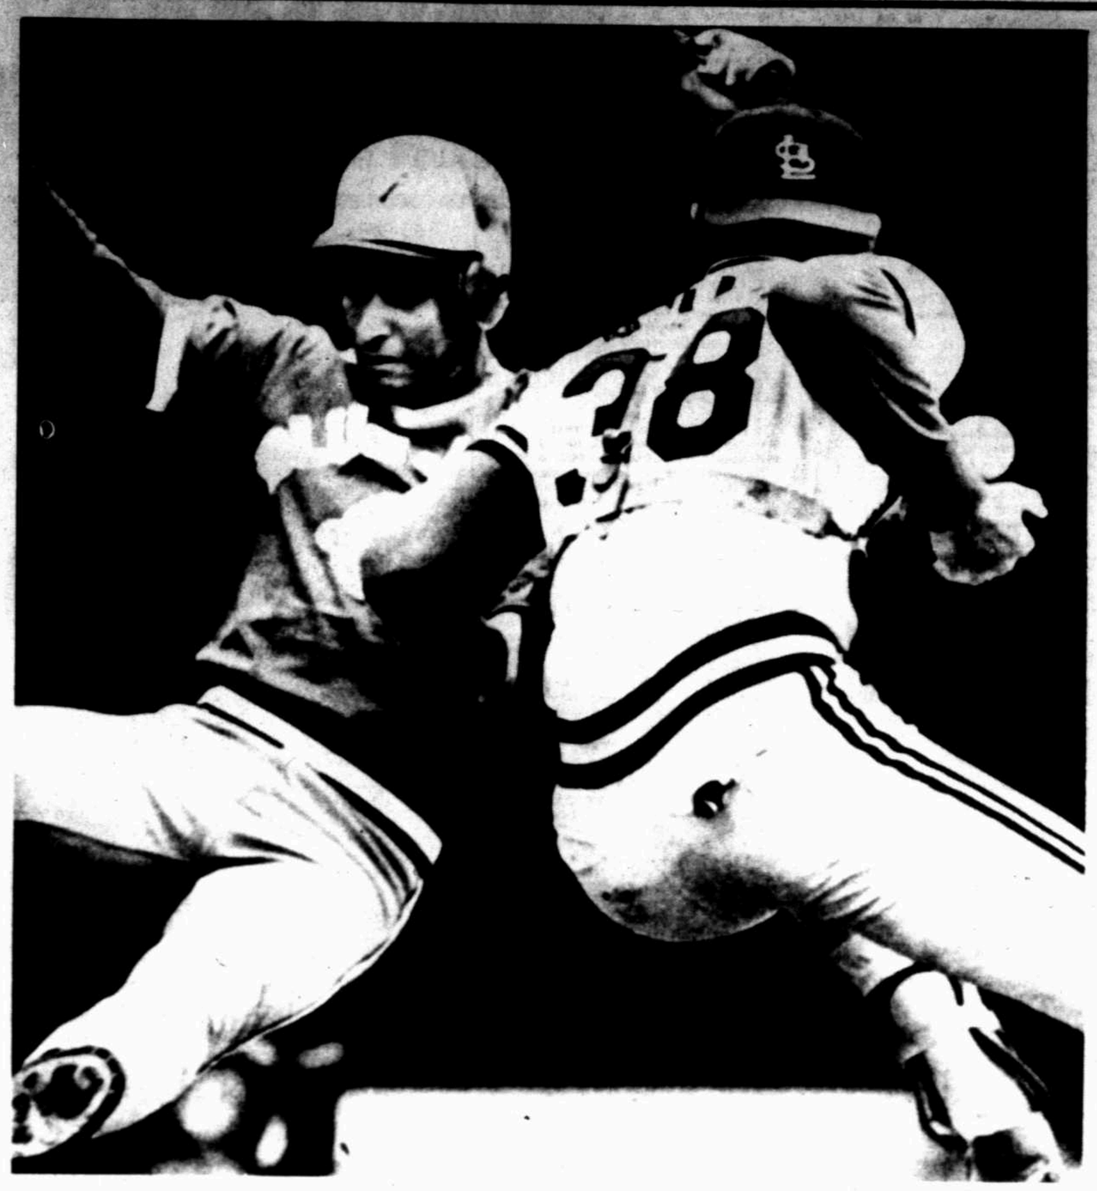

"I have nothing against taking junior college players. We have had some good freshmen, but we have lived with the junior college players. When I was at Memphis State we went to the national finals with Larry Kenon and I got him out of Amarillo College."

BARTOW'S UAB team recently lost, 71-63, to Oklahoma in the first round of the NCAA tournament, but he has made a coaching life of being in that tournament.

"I would pick Virginia right now to go all the way, but I picked them early last year too and we (UAB) ended up beating them," he said.

It's nice to see that Chaparral basketball is attracting such coaches as Bartow to Midland. That's what we have wanted all along — to have a nationally known product. But it's sad to see a national power leave town en masse.

But you can always count on Coach Stone to rebuild with sights on Hutchinson, Kan. Can't we Coach? Or can we? Jerry, where are you anyway? Please call home.

Jamie Quirk of the St. Louis Cardinals reaches to tag Toronto Blue Jay Damase Garcia but the ball pops out of his bare hand and Garcia scores in the fifth inning of Wednesday's Grapefruit League game in St. Petersburg, Fla.

MHS beats Snyder, 4-2

SNYDER — After suffering back-to-back District 4-5A shutout losses, the Midland High Bulldogs have rediscovered their winning ways. Unfortunately, the 4-2 eight-inning victory over Snyder's Tigers doesn't count in the league standings.

The Bulldogs used strong pitching by first-time starter Steve Wootan and consistant hitting from the lineup to set the pace for the victory.

"Wootan did a heck of a job," said MHS coach Tim Whalen. "He struck out two and only gave up three hits. He didn't walk anybody. I was really pleased with him. That was really his first outing this year. He pitched one game on the JV earlier. He did a great job for us."

Wootan went seven innings before being replaced by Jose Carrasco in the top of the eighth.

Going into the eighth tied 2-2, Midland came up with the winning runs when James Pitts, 3-for-4, led off with a single and moved to third on a hit-and-run situation when Snyder's shortstop mishandled Mike Foulds grounder. Foulds went on to steal second.

Carrasco brought home Pitts with a single to left field and Jeff Magness added a single to left to score Foulds for the final run of the game.

The Bulldogs came away with 10 hits which Coach Whalen hopes will help rebuild his team's confidence at the plate. He was pretty pleased with the performance himself.

"It was kind of new," he said jokingly about the hitting. "I couldn't stand it. I still don't know how to act. We had four guys who didn't get any hits but they put the ball into play."

The victory improves Midland's record to 7-8 on the year. On Saturday the Bulldogs travel to Odessa to take on the Bronchos at 2 p.m.

Reds' Redus collects fourth homer

Leadoff round-tripper doesn't help, Royals win 8-2

By The Associated Press

As a leadoff man, Gary Redus is certainly getting on base for the Cincinnati Reds this spring training. He's not only stopping at first, either.

"There's nothing wrong with the leadoff man hitting home runs," says Redus, who has hit four for Cincinnati in exhibition play, including one in the Reds' 8-2 loss Wednesday to Kansas City.

Redus also walked three times and stole a base for a perfect day, something he was accustomed to last season with Indianapolis of the American Association.

The Reds expect Redus to be as much a running threat as a slugger. Last season in the minors, he stole 54 bases in 59 attempts. He also had 29 doubles, nine triples and 24 home runs among his 146 hits. One of his homers this spring was a grand slam.

"What I need to do is hit more singles," Redus said of his slugging. "I need to work on my base stealing. I'm not trying to hit home runs. I'm just trying to get on base as much as I can."

Exhibition Baseball

Despite Redus' long-ball proficiency, Cincinnati Manager Russ Nixon is content to keep him in the leadoff spot for the time being.

Greg Pryor rapped a two-run double and Frank White and John Wathan added RBI hits to key a 12-hit attack that powered the Royals over the Reds. Pryor's double off Greg Harris in the sixth inning snapped a 2-2 tie. Kansas City starter Vida Blue walked eight batters in the first five innings but surrendered just two runs, both on Redus' homer.

In other action, Steve Carlton, the National League's four-time Cy Young Award winner, was pounded for nine hits in five innings as the Montreal Expos beat the Philadelphia Phillies 6-1. Gary Carter led the Montreal offense with three hits. Al Oliver drove in two runs and Roy Johnson started the assault with a first-inning home run.

Spring sensation Mike Brown, who leads California with 13 RBIs, doubled home the tying run in the ninth inning and drove in the winner with another double in the 11th, lifting the Angels to a 7-6 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Dave Collins' two-run single in the fifth inning off Bob Forsch rallied a split squad on Toronto Blue Jays to a 3-2 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals. The world champion Cardinals also learned that they will be without second baseman Tommy Herr for at least six more weeks. Team officials said Herr, idled all spring with a knee injury, will undergo arthroscopic surgery Friday.

Bob Karkovice hit a two-run homer in the sixth inning and Jim Stegman added a solo shot in the seventh to help the Chicago White Sox rout another group of Blue Jays 10-1. Gene Richards and Joe Pittman led San Diego's 19-hit attack with three hits apiece and Tim Flannery slammed a three-run homer as the Padres walloped the Oakland A's 13-2.

Home runs by Bob Skube and Ben Oglivie — his fifth of the spring — in the fourth inning powered a Milwaukee Brewers' split squad to a 3-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians. Steve Trout, making his first appearance in 10 days because of a sore shoulder, pitched four scoreless innings as the Chicago Cubs defeated the rest of the Brewers 4-2.

Atlanta center fielder Brett Butler threw out pinch runner Nick Capra at home plate for the final out of the game, preserving the Braves' 5-4 victory over the Texas Rangers. Butler also had three hits and drove in a run for the Braves.

Lance Parrish homered and Lou Whitaker had four singles and a sacrifice fly to lead the Detroit Tigers to a 5-2 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers. Bob Stanley pitched five hitless innings of relief as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Houston Astros 9-5.

Home runs by Dale Berra and Dave Parker led the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 4-1 victory over the New York Mets. Manny Castillo singled home the winning run with one out in the 10th inning, giving Seattle a 6-5 victory over the San Francisco Giants to end the Mariners' five-game losing streak.

Rick Dempsey's single with two outs in the eighth inning drove in the winning run as the Baltimore Orioles defeated the New York Yankees 5-4.

Unbeatens going separate ways

Midland High's Chuck St. Germain and Midland Lee's Damon Polk will be going different directions again this week in efforts to remain unbeaten in their track specialties.

St. Germain is unbeaten in three 800 meter efforts this year and posted a season best of 1:57.2 last week in Big Spring. This week St. Germain travels with his Midland High teammates to Hobbs, N.M., where he will be favored once again.

Polk has won all four outings in the 110 meter hurdles this year and is a key cog for the Lee Rebels, who are unbeaten in four track meets this year. Both those marks go on the line Friday and Saturday in the San Angelo Relays.

Polk owns a 13.99 as his best in the highs and is rarely pushed in this event. He also is coming off his second win in four tries in the 300 intermediate hurdles after twin wins at the Mustang Relays in Andrews last week.

But the Lee team has been the talk of the West Texas track season, winning just about every title in sight. They will face some new faces this week in San Angelo and depth could be another key.

The Bulldogs have also become a vastly improved team from a rugged start at Fort Stockton. They have placed second and third in the last two weeks and are beginning to show some depth with the exception of field events where they are hurting.

Two weeks in a row the Bulldogs have won both the 1600 and 400 meter relays, and Allan Foret, a sophomore, has victories in both the 100 and 200 meters this year.

Lee's Isaac Garnett has won three of his four efforts in the shot put, winning last week with a sup-par 54-feet. Lee's sprint relay has won three weeks in a row, but has not been able to defeat Odessa Permian in the 1600 relay this year and Lee will have to face Permian again this week. Lee's Carl Piccolo is also coming off his first 1600 meter victory of the season, but his times have been off of last year's district pace when he qualified for the Region I meet.

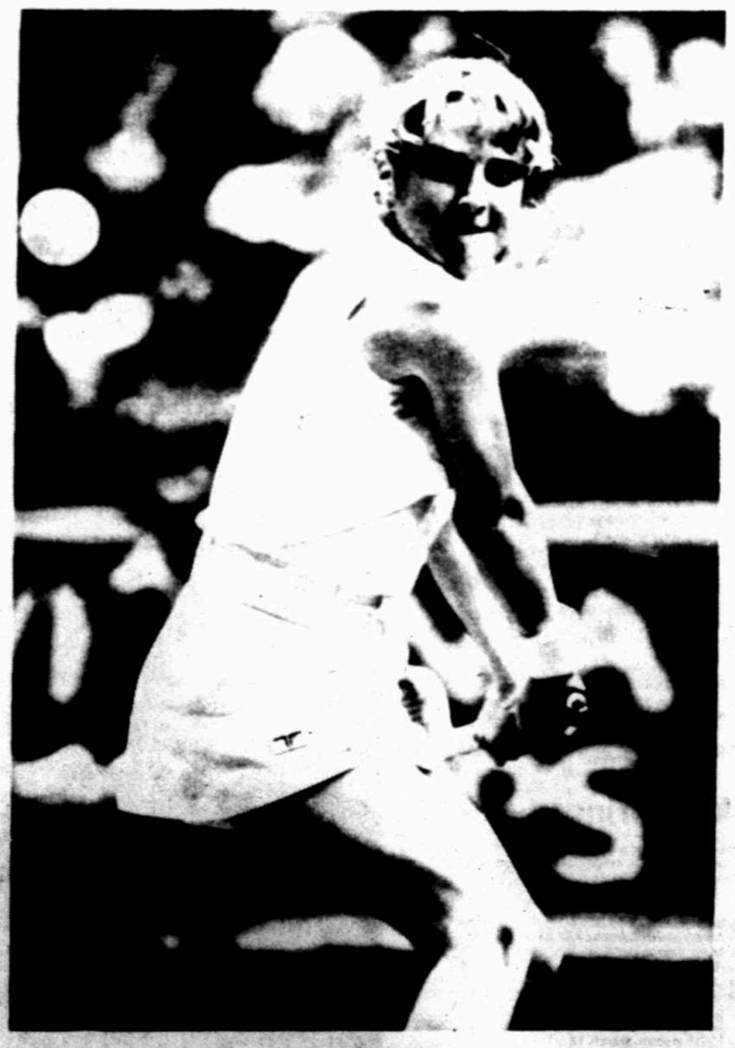

The Midland High and Lee girls are also showing great improvement over years past. Lee's girls set two records last week in Andrews by scoring 132 points and tying for the team title with Lovington, N.M. Both are firsts for Lee.

The MHS and Lee girls will be in Seminole this weekend. Midland High placed third in the Canyon Reef Relays in Snyder last week.

Brenda Haven was a twin winner in the long jump and triple jump last week and Felicia Farias won for the second week in a row in the high jump. Lee also got its first victory in the 800 meter relay last week.

Midland High's Claire Hardy, the 4-5A cross country champ, returned to form last week with a record setting 11:53.8 in the 3200 meters for her first win of the year. Tina Knight was a triple jump winner while Penny Griffin was a winner in the long jump.

All of the local tracksters are pointing for the District 4-5A meet where Region I berths can be earned. District meets for girls and boys will be held in Odessa's Ratliff Stadium this year. The girls will perform April 8 while the boys are scheduled the week after.

Lot of new faces so far for Cubs

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

MESA, Ariz. — The Midland Cubs were into only their third exhibition game of the season against the Oakland A's Class AA farm club Tuesday, which usually means one is not seeing what one usually gets.

Normally, the current Midland roster could wind up at Class-A Quad Cities or Salinas or even Geneva but Chicago Cubs farm director Gordon Goldsberry said that may not necessarily be true, this year.

As he tried to keep track of games going on simultaneously at three adjacent diamonds, Goldberry indicated when the Chicago and Des Moines clubs make their cuts, it might dictate some changes in the pitching. "But this could be very close to the team Tom (manager Tom Harmon) will take back to Midland.

"We want the players who were at Midland last year playing in a Tripple-A situation to see how they will respond," Goldsberry said.

ALTHOUGH MOST of the current talent is from last year's A club, there were a few familiar faces in the lineup, like catcher Don Hyman, shortstop Bruce Chaney, and pitcher Carlos Gil. And out in the bullpen was Tom Millner, who spent the winter in Midland before reporting to the minor league camp March 9.

"We're looking at Chaney as a shortstop this year," Goldsberry said. "He has good defensive ability, with some power."

Goldsberry's words were almost prophetic as Chaney drilled a double into the right-center field hole. It was one of the few hits Midland was to get off Albany (Eastern League) pitching.

Since the Cubs lost only 1-0, Midland's pitching wasn't bad either. Gill, one of the hero's of Midland's second half pennant drive last year, worked the first three innings, giving up the lone run.

Gill spent the early weeks of spring training with Chicago and said, "Yes, I got a chance to pitch, only when I did I threw too many pitches."

Joe Housey and Joe Panteleo followed with three shutout innings each. Housey, drafted by four clubs out of Southwest Louisiana university, was 6-11 at Salinas last year, but broke into pro ball with a 10-2 year at Geneva in 1980.

Panteleo, a 21-year-old right hander from Brooklyn, was a 17th round pick last June out of Lamar University and posted a 2-1 record at Salinas and was 2-2 at Geneva.

CUB PRINTS — Shawon Dunson, Chicago's No. 1 draft choice and the first pick in the June free agent baseball draft, was playing shortstop for Quad Cities against Modesto on the next diamond...Goldsberry wants the youngster to get in a good season in A ball before moving him up to Midland...Another familiar face in the Midland infield is Jim Payne, a Chicagoan who batted .284 at Salinas last year and got in about 18 games at Midland... The Albany manager, coaching third base and wearing the number 96, was an outright imposter. It wasn't Bill Voiselle, the old New York Giants pitcher who made his home town Ninety-Six, N.C., famous by wearing that number throughout his career, but someone named Pete Whisenant...I guess that was OK, however, because Bill died a few years ago.

Sonics defeat Spurs, 137-117

NBA Roundup

By The Associated Press

Will the real Seattle SuperSonics please stand up?

The Sonics started the season as if they would challenge for the National Basketball Association title, winning their first 12 games.

But they quickly settled into mediocrity and a few weeks ago it began to look as if they might not even make the playoffs as they won just nine of 30 games.

On Wednesday night, however, Seattle handed the Midwest Division-leading San Antonio Spurs their worst defeat of the season, 137-117. It was the Sonics' seventh triumph in their last eight games and gave them a 40-30 record.

"We're getting back to the way we started the season," Sonics Coach Lenny Wilkens said. "We're not quite there yet, but we're getting there step by step."

Seattle got 27 points and 13 assists from Gus Williams, 24 points from David Thompson and 23 from Fred Brown in its victory over San Antonio.

Wilkens praised his team's defensive effort, particularly Thompson, who held George Gervin, the NBA's second-leading scorer, to 14 points, 13 under his average.

Taking on a top scorer is "a challenge that I like to accept," said Thompson, an all-star who lost his starting role at midseason only to regain it recently. "I got a lot of help from the front line, though. We just weren't going to give him (Gervin) anything easy."

Celtics 114, Hawks 102

The Celtics, who had lost five of their previous seven outings, had a 12-point lead before the Hawks scored nine in a row to cut the deficit to 71-68 in the third quarter. But Boston responded with seven of the next nine points to rebuild its advantage to 78-70 and the lead never fell below five again.

76ers 104, Bucks 101

Philadelphia bounced back from Tuesday night's loss to New York to beat Milwaukee for its 58th victory in 68 games and 24th straight at home.

Marques Johnson led the Bucks with 24 points. His basket with 2:34 remaining in regulation tied the game at 93-93, and there were no more points until the extra period.

Cavaliers 84, Knicks 81

Cleveland beat New York for the first time in 18 tries as Phil Hubbard had 22 points and 13 rebounds and Jeff Cook made three free throws in the final 10 seconds.

The Cavaliers, who snapped a six-game losing streak, led 73-63 early in the fourth quarter, but the Knicks cut the deficit to 81-79 with 1:01 remaining. They had a chance to tie it with two free throws with 26 seconds left, but New York center Bill Cartwright missed both.

Nets 124, Jazz 104

New Jersey outrebounded Utah 57-30 and pulled away from the Jazz with 41 points in the fourth quarter.

The Jazz had rallied from a 12-point deficit to trail only 83-78 after three periods, but the Nets scored the first eight points of the fourth quarter to pull comfortably ahead again. Mike Gminski had four of the eight points on free throws and he went on to score nine of his 13 points in the period.

Pistons 109, Pacers 96

Kelly Tripucka, who averaged 32 points in six games against Indiana this season, scored 38 points as Detroit handed the Pacers their fifth straight loss and 17th setback in 18 outings.

Tripucka hit 10 of 12 field goal attempts in the first half and scored 26 points to lead the Pistons to a 58-46 halftime edge.

By The Associated Press

NBA Roundup

Will the real Seattle SuperSonics please stand up?

The Sonics started the season as if they would challenge for the National Basketball Association title, winning their first 12 games.

But they quickly settled into mediocrity and a few weeks ago it began to look as if they might not even make the playoffs as they won just nine of 30 games.

On Wednesday night, however, Seattle handed the Midwest Division-leading San Antonio Spurs their worst defeat of the season, 137-117. It was the Sonics' seventh triumph in their last eight games and gave them a 40-30 record.

"We're getting back to the way we started the season," Sonics Coach Lenny Wilkens said. "We're not quite there yet, but we're getting there step by step."

Seattle got 27 points and 13 assists from Gus Williams, 24 points from David Thompson and 23 from Fred Brown in its victory over San Antonio.

Wilkens praised his team's defensive effort, particularly Thompson, who held George Gervin, the NBA's second-leading scorer, to 14 points, 13 under his average.

Taking on a top scorer is "a challenge that I like to accept," said Thompson, an all-star who lost his starting role at midseason only to regain it recently. "I got a lot of help from the front line, though. We just weren't going to give him (Gervin) anything easy."

Celtics 114, Hawks 102

The Celtics, who had lost five of their previous seven outings, had a 12-point lead before the Hawks scored nine in a row to cut the deficit to 71-68 in the third quarter. But Boston responded with seven of the next nine points to rebuild its advantage to 78-70 and the lead never fell below five again.

76ers 104, Bucks 101

Philadelphia bounced back from Tuesday night's loss to New York to beat Milwaukee for its 58th victory in 68 games and 24th straight at home.

Moses Malone had 25 points for the 76ers, including two free throws with five seconds left in overtime.

Marques Johnson led the Bucks with 24 points. His basket with 2:34 remaining in regulation tied the game at 93-93, and there were no more points until the extra period.

Cavaliers 84, Knicks 81

Cleveland beat New York for the first time in 18 tries as Phil Hubbard had 22 points and 13 rebounds and Jeff Cook made three free throws in the final 10 seconds.

The Cavaliers, who snapped a six-game losing streak, led 73-63 early in the fourth quarter, but the Knicks cut the deficit to 81-79 with 1:01 remaining. They had a chance to tie it with two free throws with 26 seconds left, but New York center Bill Cartwright missed both.

Nets 124, Jazz 104

New Jersey outrebounded Utah 57-30 and pulled away from the Jazz with 41 points in the fourth quarter.

The Jazz had rallied from a 12-point deficit to trail only 83-78 after three periods, but the Nets scored the first eight points of the fourth quarter to pull comfortably ahead again. Mike Gminski had four of the eight points on free throws and he went on to score nine of his 13 points in the period.

Pistons 109, Pacers 96

Kelly Tripucka, who averaged 32 points in six games against Indiana this season, scored 38 points as Detroit handed the Pacers their fifth straight loss and 17th setback in 18 outings.

Tripucka hit 10 of 12 field goal attempts in the first half and scored 26 points to lead the Pistons to a 58-46 halftime edge.

NCAA Playoffs

By The Associated Press

The college basketball season is approaching Oscar time, with the main producers and directors in Knoxville, Tenn., tonight, while the sport's biggest star takes the stage in Ogden, Utah.

The NCAA Tournament, down from 52 teams to 16, resumes with fifth-ranked Indiana meeting No.12 Kentucky and runner-up Louisville taking on ninth-ranked Arkansas in the Mideast Regional at Knoxville.

The regional is loaded with three conference champions and features three of the four coaches still in contention who have captured a national championship. To wit:

Meanwhile, in the West Regional at Ogden, fourth-ranked Virginia with 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson takes on No.11 Boston College and No.16 North Carolina State meets Utah.

On Friday night, the East Regional at Syracuse, N.Y., pairs third-ranked St. John's with No.18 Georgia and eighth-ranked North Carolina, the defending NCAA champion, with Ohio State.

If Kentucky and Louisville win tonight, it would set up the first collision between the two perennial powers since 1959, although the schools are located only 80 miles apart. The Louisville players are trying not to think about that.

"If we don't win (against Arkansas), there's no matchup at all," said Lancaster Gordon, the Cardinals' second-leading scorer.

"You start thinking about too many teams, it can distract you," echoed Rodney McCray.

Crum says Arkansas is probably quicker than any team Louisville has played."We're not slow, but we're not as fast as they are," he said.

"I think our team believes they can beat them," said Coach Eddie Sutton of Arkansas. "If it were a seven-game series, we'd be in trouble, but it isn't. It's just one game."

Indiana beat Kentucky 62-59 at Bloomington in December, but the Hoosiers are without high-scoring Ted Kitchel, who underwent back surgery last month.

"I don't think the earlier game has much bearing whatsoever," said Knight.

"I really like the attitude of my team right now," said Hall. "They have a new look in their eye. They're anxious to play. Indiana is a team you have no trouble getting prepared for."

At Ogden, North Carolina State's Jim Valvano calls the Wolfpack's match with Utah "a team of destiny meeting a Cinderella team. This is a grade 'B' movie we have going here."

The Wolfpack have come from behind to win their last five games — three in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament, plus NCAA victories over Pepperdine, 69-67 in double overtime, and sixth-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas 71-70.

"We have obviously had five incredible games," Valvano said. "I'd get nervous if we ever had the lead. I wouldn't know what to do."

Utah got there by defeating Illinois 52-49 and then upsetting seventh-ranked UCLA 67-61.

"When we were 7-10, if anyone had suggested we'd wind up in the final 16, I would have wondered where they broke out of," said Coach Utah Jerry Pimm. "We questioned ourselves for a while, but our tough early schedule helped us in the long run and now we're playing our best basketball of the year."

Oregon State has revenge motive, home court

NIT Roundup

The Associated Press

The Oregon State basketball team has a revenge motive and the home-court advantage in tonight's National Invitation Tournament game against Fresno State in Corvallis.

And Fresno State Coach Boyd Grant is a little concerned about the situation, particularly the home-court advantage.

"We sure have gone through a lot of traveling recently," says Grant, who feels his team might not be as fresh as it can be for the quarterfinal game. "They're playing at home where they're tough to beat.

"What will really beat us is we don't have much time to prepare. The Bulldogs have all the advantages in this game."

After an opening-round victory at home over Texas-El Paso, the Bulldogs flew to Lansing, Mich., on Sunday, and beat Michigan State 72-58 the next night. Then the players flew home Tuesday for a day of classes and were back on the road Wednesday, heading for Oregon and one of three NIT games tonight.

In the others, Wake Forest meets South Carolina at Greensboro, N.C., and Texas Christian plays at Nebraska. The last of the quarterfinal games will be played Friday night when Mississippi meets DePaul at Rosemont, Ill.

Oregon State will not only be trying to get a ticket to New York for the NIT semifinals next Monday night at Madison Square Garden, but will be trying to avenge a 43-42 defeat by the Bulldogs earlier this season.

"This will be a rematch and provides us with a chance to rectify an earlier loss," said Beavers Coach Ralph Miller, who recognized his Pacific Coast Athletic Association foe as "a formidable oponent."

"It also gives us an opportunity to earn a trip to New York City," added Miller, "so a lot is riding on the game and we will do our best to succeed."

Grant is hopeful his Bulldogs can play as well as they did against Michigan State.

"If we play like we did at Michigan State," he said, "we can play anybody."

The Bulldogs do have a couple of advantages. Fresno State has the nation's leading defense, giving up fewer than 54 points a game.The 30-second shot clock may also prove a plus. Fresno State had time to adjust to it during the regular season. It was used in PCAA.

"The clock has not really bothered us and wasn't expected to," noted Miller.

Meanwhile, Wake Forest Coach Carl Tacy has other problems — most notably the South Carolina's fast break.

"We have to find some way to close out their explosive fast break," Tacy said. "Although they don't have great speed, they are explosive getting the ball down the court on the break and we'll have to be equal to that and do well on the boards. I think we'll be ready for that challenge. Those are two big keys I see right now."

Wake Forest, 19-11, will have the home-court advantage in this game. It's especially pleasing to Tacy since his Demons are road-weary after a victory at Vanderbilt.

"Vanderbilt was a good victory on the road — it seems like that's where we've been playing most of our games recently," he said. "It's good to be back home against South Carolina."

South Carolina has a height advantage with 7-foot sophomore Mike Brittain, who scored a season-high 15 points against Virginia Tech, and 6-8 Jimmy Foster.Brittain averages only 4.5 points and 2.2 rebounds but has improved steadily while playing the high post. Foster, at the low post, leads the Gamecocks with 17.2 points and 8.8 rebounds per game.

"One reason we do it is Brittain is a legitimate offensive threat outside," Gamecock Coach Bill Foster said. "Plus, we don't want Foster too far from the basket. We want him operating as close to the hoop as we can get him."

Robots taking over, worry Congress

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The use of computers in manufacturing began arousing concern in the late 1950's when workers became scared that robots could one day take their jobs away. But initially public interest in the social ramifications of automation was greater in Europe than in the United States.

Now that the Japanese and West Germans are successfully replacing workers with robots and U.S. steel and auto industries have begun modernizing their obsolete plants, Congress has finally decided to study the impact of robots on the future of the U.S. work force.

The initial conclusion? There are too many imponderables and unanswered questions to make one.

At a hearing of the Joint Economic Committee this week, two scientists offered conflicting testimony about the effects, prompting the chairman, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., to order a representative of the Office of Technology Assessment (OTA) to stop "hedging" and come up with estimates of how the robot revolution could disrupt the American work force.

Citing predictions that robot sales will rise 35 to 50 percent a year, Bentsen said millions of jobs could be lost to robots by 1990.

Dr. Robert Ayres, a professor of engineering at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh, told the committee that robots are becoming mainstays in factories here and may replace more than 5 million workers in manufacturing jobs by the year 2000.

However, John Andelin, assistant director of the OTA, a nonpartisan scientific research arm of Congress, testified that the employment impact of robots is "hard to predict, and we lack confidence in those predictions currently publicized."

The technology office is currently making a study of automation in the workplace which is scheduled to be completed this fall. It has already issued a technical memorandum that stressed the difficulty in predicting the impact of robots.

Andelin said robots are still in only "limited" use, even though they were introduced into industry two decades ago. He cited reports that fewer than 5,000 robots were used in the U.S in 1981, about two-tenths of one percent of the 2.6 million machine tools used in a single industry, metalworking.

Ayers said that industrial robots have had a "negligible impact" on unemployment so far, and in the future would not put a large number of workers "at risk." He said the use of robots would be concentrated in five northern tier industrial states — Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin, Indiana and Illinois — where about half of all metalworking employment is located.

The technical study discussed all sorts of "robotics," including robots, computer-aided design and manufacturing, computer-aided process planning, automated materials handling, and automated storage and retrieval systems.

The document claimed that "it is too soon to know how widespread the applicatons of automation will be" and that "there is little evidence" that any group — including private industry — is seriously considering the long-range worker needs and occupational skills requirements involved.

FEDERAL FUNDING BAD

Expanding involvement of the federal government in the funding of basic research is making the research community "politicized, bureaucratic, and dependent on changing federal budgets," a new study by Cato Institute claims. The study contends that the funding deprives scholars of the freedom to follow research leads where they develop, and emphasizes quantity over quality. The Washington-based conservative public policy research organization examines the possibility for alternative funding and concludes that corporations and foundations could support research adequately without government interference. "He Who Pays the Piper: Federal Funding of Research" notes that Philip Handler, president of the National Academy of Science, told a congressional committee "university presidents have always known that he who pays the piper will one day call the tune."

URGES STUDY RETURN

The Census Bureau is urging America's manufacturing, mining, trade, service and construction sectors to return as soon as possible the 1982 economic census forms which were due February 15, which many have not yet done. The census is taken every five years covering years ending in '2 and '7 to provide a detailed picture of major industries. The data is used as the primary source of facts on the structure and functions of the economy and are the source of benchmark figures for current economic statistics of the federal government, including the gross national product.

POTENTIAL INVESTORS

About 60 cities, counties and states sent representatives to Hong Kong last week to present to Asian investors the advantages of plant and office locaions in American cities. Sponsored by the U.S.Conference of Mayors, the exhibition and conference brought these officials into contact with hundreds of representatives of Asian business and industry. The objective of the effort — entitled "Invest in America's Cities" — was to stimulate economic development in urban areas and create jobs for American workers. Among the major cities represented were San Francisco, San Antonio, Portland, Oakland, Newark, Chicago, Detroit and New Orleans.

NEW ESTIMATES ON WORK HOURS

Did you know that since 1979 the recession has meant the average number of hours worked by men fell by about 50 hours? Did you realize that total hours worked in a year vary considerably by age, race, education, marital and parental status, industry and occupation? For instance, hours worked by industry ranged from less than 800 per year in private household services to 2,070 in mining. These and other questions are answered in a new study done by a Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics which appears in the latest issue of "Monthly Labor Review," a professional journal.

GASIFYING COAL

The first major test of a new concept for converting underground coal into energy-rich gases that could be burned in power plants or upgraded into higher quality fuels or chemicals will be conducted in the Tono Basin near Centralia, Wash. The $3 million project will be co-sponsored by the federal government, the Washington Irrigation and Development Co., and the Washington state energy office. The test is scheduled to take 36 days.

ON CAPITOL HILL

Some of the proposals include:

The domestic content bill, which is one of the most contentious proposals before Congress, would require that up to 90 percent of all components be made in the U.S. as a condition for selling cars here. The bill is stalled.

Legislation to create a Small Business Participating Debenture (SBPD) is a hybrid vehicle that would open up new sources of external capital to the nation's small business. Its sponsor, Sen. Lowell Weicker Jr., R-Conn., says the agency would be a "cross between a stock and a bond. It would make affordable capital available to small business that wants to expand but cannot afford traditional financing and does not wish to go public."

A bill reported out by the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee would increase competition in government contracting by restricting the use of non-competitive contracts. Government statistics show that more than half of $158 billion in goods and services bought by the government last year were purchased without competitive bidding. Last year the Congressional Budget Office released an analysis of the bill, sponsored by Sen. William Cohen, D-Me., which showed that more than $1.5 billion could be saved by broader use of competitive contracting.

Legislation repealing the "earning test" stipulates that workers between 65 and 69 who earn more than $6,000 will have their Social Security benefits reduced dollar for dollar by the amount over $6,000 they earn. It is sponsored by Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz.

A measure placing restrictions on the use of tax-exempt Industrial Development Bonds to finance private development activities was introduced this week by by Rep. J.J.Pickle, D-Tex. Tax-exempt IDBs are issued by city councils and county governments to raise funds for private development.

A bill to stimulate the use of hydrogen as a renewable source of energy has been introduced by Sen. Spark Matsunaga, D-Hawaii. Hydrogen can be produced from water using renewable energy systems such as wind power and ocean thermal energy conversion. It is a clean-burning and virtually inexhaustible fuel source. When burned it produces water as a byproduct.

AROUND AND ABOUT

People completing four years of college can expect lifetime earnings averaging nearly 40 percent higher than high school graduates, according to the Census Bureau. Men should expect lifetime earnings between $1.2 million and $2.7 million while women will earn only $520,000 to $1.2 million . . . A House Subcommittee on Trade will spend March 24 through April 4 in Korea and Japan to discuss trade and economic issues involving legislation pending before the panel . . . The administration is tightening controls on federal employee travel, which costs taxpayers about $5 billion each year. The goal is to reduce the number of unnecessary trips made at government expense. General travel authorization, which permit agencies or groups of employees to travel without management review, has been eliminated.Increased use of discount air fares has also been encouraged and alone saves about $50 million a year . . . Mary F. Wieseman of Rockville, Md. has been named by President Reagan inspector general of the Small Business Administration

Motivated woman succeeds

By BRENDA FINE
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — "Women are conditioned to believe that the most they can ever earn is $15,000 to $25,000 — $30,000, tops. I'm teaching the women who work for me to earn six-figure incomes."

The woman speaking is neither Dale Carnegie nor Professor Henry Higgins. She's Debrah Charatan-Berger. That she's young (26) and attractive merely add luster to her position in the New York real estate market — a market generally acknowledged as the fastest of fast-tracks in the industry.

In less than three years, Charatan-Berger's Bach Realty Company, a real estate brokerage house, has blossomed from a one-room basement office outfitted with a card table and borrowed typewriter, to a company that grosses $500,000 a year, and employs 21 full-time salespeople — all of them women.

"My first break in the business came from a woman," Charatan-Berger recalls. "Later I asked her how I could ever repay her for the faith she showed by hiring me. She told me to go out and do the same thing for other people."

The women who work for Bach have no previous selling experience in the real estate field. They are all ages; some are first-time wage earners.

Debby's success formula seems too good to be true; on paper it would seem doomed to certain failure: "I've never hurt anyone to get what I want. I don't have to." Behind this credo she's an aggressive salesperson — a nice, aggressive salesperson.

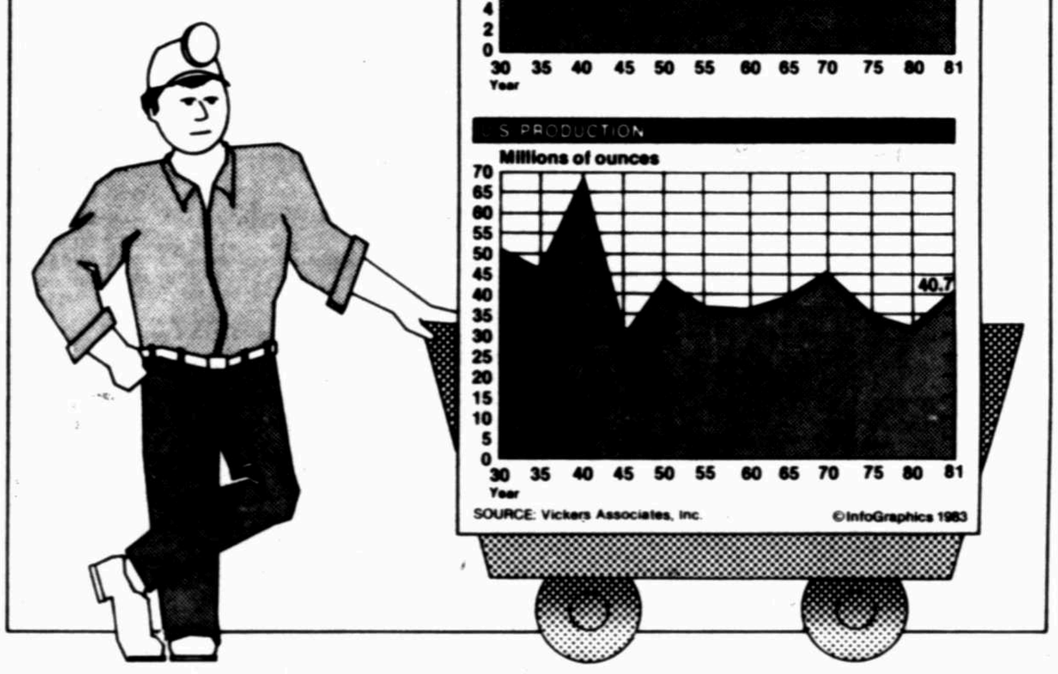

Debby's specialty is selling buildings that will be bought for investment, development and resale. Most of her negotiations are with men, the wheeler-dealers of this big-time industry, with stakes in the millions of dollars.

"If they don't know me, they see me walk in and they figure, 'Oh boy, an easy deal. We're talking 25? I'll offer her 10 and she'll be happy.' At the same time, I'm figuring one of us will have to give — and it sure isn't going to be me!"

One lawyer who represented the other side in a recent deal observed, "She's young, she's aggressive, she's pretty. But more than that, she understands the people she's dealing with."

U.S. silver production

Silver prices are on the way up and interest in silver trading has increased. The amount of silver produced in the U.S. as a percentage of world production steadily declined since 1940, but the number of ounces hasn't varied substantially since 1950.

Airline stocks at full flaps

By Arelo Sederberg
Hearst Feature Service

Prospects for lower fuel costs have resulted in a substantial play in the stocks of America's wilting, profit-starved airline industry over the past several months. But the party may be over for a while.

An analysis by Solomon Brothers' Julius Maldutis concludes that no airline issue will outperform the market over the near term. And Maldutis believes that three lines — Eastern, Pan Am, and Republic — will underperform the market.

Stung by high fuel costs in a recession that curiously produced murderous price wars, airlines have been spurting red ink for years. The loss last year was $599.2 million, compared with $323.7 million in 1981. That is bad enough, but it's not the whole story; the losses would have been much greater if it weren't for sale of assets and tax credits.

Maldutis and other analysts see continuing deep losses in the first half of this year, although a recovery is expected in the second half, and a good 1984 is possible. The airlines still are struggling to find a way to live in the unfettered, competitive world of deregulation.

Many blows have descended, including strikes, foolish fare wars, gimmick promotions, high equipment costs, soaring fuel costs, reduced business and personal travel in a recession, antitrust charges for route conspiracy, bankruptcy threats and competition from small airlines.

Braniff has filed for bankrputcy, and analyst Maldutis believes some other lines are candidates for Chapter 11. "The industry," he says, "now is in a state of constant discount fares."

Maldutis raises several questions, resulting in his conclusion to avoid airline shares.

With economic recovery, will price wars abate? Probably not. With regulation, all lines improved operations when cyclical economic recoveries appeared. No longer; it's uneven. Deregulation rules.

Will the weak carriers continue to price fares at the margin to raise cash? Will withdrawal of some of the price-cutting carriers (such as Laker) from transcontinental markets eliminate price wars? It's unlikely. Several airlines continue to offer deep discount service from important American hub cities.

Will the consumer now travel at full fare? No — travelers are spoiled. Traffic faded when summer fares went up last year and rose last January with the re-institution of $99 coast-to-coast fares.

Owner, Bill Williams Tire Center

When Bill Williams started banking at Texas American Bank back in 1963, he was an employee of the B.F. Goodrich Tire Co. Now he is president of both Bill Williams Tire Center, a Goodrich tire dealer, and West Texas Bandag Recapping, Inc., a tire recapping business to serve the trucking industry.

Since 1963, Bill has worked with some fine bankers: Kent Sloan, Bill Malone, and now Don Flatt, Executive Vice President and Manager of the Commercial Lending Division. Don brings many years of banking experience to his customers. And he knows the tire business, coming from Akron, Ohio, where Goodrich makes those radials.

Fifi D'Orsay still 'bombshell'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Though beset with cancer and almost 79, Fifi D'Orsay remains as exuberant as when she co-starred with Will Rogers and Maurice Chevalier in films of the early 1930s.

"Ooh la la, I am zee little French bombshell who never saw Paris," she says.

The flashing eyes are clear, the face serene, the legs shapely as ever. But gone are the trademark black bangs.

"I lost all my hair," she laments. "Why do you think, darling? Chemotherapy, of course. So I went to May Company and bought this wig. You like it?"

Until last September, Miss D'Orsay had been in good health, still making occasional appearances. She was getting ready for an Elks Club date in Long Beach when she discovered she was bleeding. She was taken to the Motion Picture Country Hospital in nearby Woodland Hills and underwent surgery for cancer of the uterus.

After the operation, she suffered internal hemorrhaging.

"My blood count fell to zero, and they called the priest to give me last rites," she said. "I died! Believe it or not, I died! They called my sister in Florida: 'Come quickly! Fifi's dead!'

"I had another operation, and two weeks later I was Fifi again," she said. "Look at me! I'm full of pep for a woman who was a goner a few months ago. I pray every day. I say, 'Lord, there I was so near the heavenly gates, and you wouldn't let me in. Why? You must have thought I had something else to do here on earth.' "

Miss D'Orsay lives in a two-room apartment in a new building a block from Hollywood Boulevard.

Organist Cherry Rhodes will perform at 8 p.m. Friday in the First United Methodist Church, Main Street at Illinois Avenue. The free concert, sponsored by the West Texas Chapter of the American Guild of Organists, includes works by Bach, Liszt, Guillou and Daniel Pinkman. Adjunct associate professor of music at the University of Southern California, Miss Rhodes also will conduct a free master class Saturday from 9 to 11 a.m. at the church.

ENTERTAINMENT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Although NBC's movie about nuclear terrorism got most of the attention last week, CBS continued its first-place domination of the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings.

NBC's "Special Bulletin," a movie depicting nuclear terrorists, ended up in 37th place in the ratings for the week ended March 20.

"Special Bulletin" used a simulation of news coverage to tell the story of a group of terrorists armed with a nuclear bomb holding the city of Charleston, S.C., hostage in return for the surrender of all military nuclear detonating devices. More than a thousand people telephoned NBC stations and police departments across the country because of the realistic portrayal.

The NBC movie was pushed aside in the ratings by its CBS opposition, "Trapper John, M.D.," which was No. 4, "Newhart," No. 8 and "The Jeffersons," No. 11.

"Special Bulletin" got a rating of 15.1, which means it was seen in 12.6 million homes. A movie about rape on ABC, "The Face of Rage," was buried even further. It finished in 50th place.

CBS won the week with a lead of more than 4 ratings points over second-place ABC. CBS had a rating of 19.6 and ABC had 15.2. NBC was in third place with 14.3. The networks say this means that in an average prime-time minute 19.6 percent of homes with television were tuned to CBS.

For the season to date, CBS leads with a rating of 18.5. ABC is second with 17.3 and NBC is third with 15.4. The current season extends fro.n last Sept. 27 to April 17.

CBS had seven of the Top 10, with "60 Minutes" in first place followed by "Magnum, P.I.," "Dallas" and "Trapper John." ABC's highest-ranked show was "Three's Company" in fifth place.

"The Ninth Annual People's Choice Awards" on CBS was in sixth place. Next came ABC's "Dynasty" and CBS' "Newhart," tied for seventh. They were followed by CBS' "The Wizard of Oz" and NBC's only entry in the Top 10, "The A-Team."

'Gunga Din' Selleck's favorite film

And when Tom Selleck, who plays the laidback Hawaiian detective, traveled on a private jet from Honolulu to the premiere of his first big movie, "High Road to China," what movie did he watch? Right, "Gunga Din."

It's Selleck's favorite movie and it was about the 20th time he had seen it. The 1939 film is considered by many to be one of the greatest adventure movies. It stars Cary Grant, Douglas Fairbanks Jr., and Victor McLaglen, with Sam Jaffe as the valiant waterboy, Gunga Din.

Barbara Mandrell, Steve Wariner share birthday

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

A record sit-down crowd of 5,400 country music fans filled Chaparral Center March 28, 1980. The concert featured the Statler Brothers, with backup provided by a female vocalist and instrumentalist who was then considered, in the trade and by the public, to be an up and coming star.

Originally from Houston, this 31-year-old performer had in 1979 won the Country Music Association's "Female Vocalist of the Year" award, was named "Top Female Vocalist" by the Academy of Country Music and also was "Top Female Vocalist" in the Music City News Cover awards...

Barbara Mandrell.

In 1980 she captivated her Midland audience with her friendly, easy manner and expertise vocally and instrumentally. On Saturday, almost three years to the date, she returns to Midland's Chaparral Center. This time she's the headliner, with backup provided by 28-year-old Steve Wariner.

THE TWO HAVE much in common. Besides sharing the same birthday, both grew up in families where music was a way of life.

"I was born on Christmas day which is kind of unusual," Steve Noel Wariner said in a recent telephone interview. "It's ironic, too, 'cause Barbara Mandrell was born on Christmas day. We've laughed about it and talked about it a lot. Sometimes people kind of forget about the birthday part of it. It's Christmas to most people. I'm used to getting one present and everybody saying happy birthday and Merry Christmas."

Steve had just returned to Nashville after completing one lap of a tour with Barbara. He will rejoin her in Midland Saturday for the 8 p.m. concert. Tickets, priced at $11, may be purchased Friday at Endless Horizons in Midland and Odessa, KBYG-Radio in Big Spring and Friday and Saturday at Chaparral Center. Less than 1,000 seats are left.

Her father and adviser (who prefers to be called adviser rather than manager because he believes it's impossible to manage a person like property and would rather offer advice), Irby, sings and plays the guitar; Mary, her mother, plays piano and has taught music; and her sisters Louise and Irlene have performed with her.

HER FIRST professional performance came in 1960 at a Chicago music trade show. The same year she became a regular on a weekly local live program in Los Angeles called "Town Hall Party."

She was 11 years old.

Steve Wariner began performing at the same age. For him, as for Barbara Mandrell, he was raised around music.

His father, Roy Wariner, had a local band that played weekend gigs around Noblesville, Ind.

Steve says of his father's family, "My whole family's real musical, all my dad's family. They were just raised up on it (country); it's all they've ever known."

Barbara Mandrell

Steve knew he wanted to be a musician when he was 8 years old listening to his dad's band practice. As Steve says, "They would practice in the living room and I'd be by myself in the bedroom, figuring out the songs they were playing."

His chance to perform professionally came when he was 10 and he played bass for his father and uncle's band. It turned out to be a memorable evening.

"The man was going to pay us $4 to play this little dance, but he skipped out with the money," Steve said of the gig.

Today, two of Roy Wariner's five children are professional performers — Steve and his youngest brother, Terry, who plays drums in Steve's band. The others perform, but as Steve says, "It's just a hobby with the rest of them."

Barbara began touring with Johnny Cash, Patsy Cline, George Jones and Don Gibson when she was 13. She later toured with The Mandrells, composed of her father, mother and three non-family members (one of whom was Ken Dudney on drums; he's now Barbara's husband).

Steve began touring at age 17 as the result of an opportunity which was a major turning point in his life and career.

AFTER SPENDING the summer performing at the Nashville Country Club near Indianapolis, he quit when school began that fall. One day he received a call from a friend who told him Dottie West would be performing that night and for him to come for the show.

He did.

During her break he was asked to sing and when he reached the chorus, he heard someone singing harmony. It was Miss West. After the show, she wanted to talk business.

Completing his semester in school and finishing by correspondence, he spent the next three years touring with Miss West. Then he toured with the late Bob Luman.

Another turning point for Steve came when a fellow picker, Paul Yandell, wanted to send a demo tape of Steve's to Chet Atkins. Several months later to Steve's surprise Atkins called.

Atkins took Steve to RCA Records in 1976. Soon afterward, Steve joined Atkins' band and began recording with him.

"He's the man who got me over the big hump and spent time with me at the beginning of my career when I needed someone," Steve says of Atkins.

Both Barbara and Steve are multi-talented. Onstage Barbara plays the banjo, bass, guitar, mandolin, pedal steel, saxophone and dobro. During his childhood and teen years, Steve taught himself how to play almost every string instrument, focusing on bass and guitar. In concert and on record Steve, who is also a song writer, plays his own lead guitar and sings.

NEITHER CAN remember being scared of performing.

"I've never had butterflies," Barbara says. "I've been working since I was 11 in front of the public, and it was no big deal to me. The only time I really suffered stage fright was when I was going down the aisle to be married. I told my dad, 'So this is what it feels like.'"

Steve, who has never been married, says, "I cannot ever remember being scared of performing. I guess I really like the recognition and the response from the people. From the earliest times I can remember performing I've just really loved it."

Performing is Barbara's life.

"I more than like it; it's kind of an obsession — like food or drink, I've got to have it," she says.

Of country music as a profession, Barbara says, "There is no amount of money that could make me do it. I love it. It's not a job, but a total way of life. I have become the property of the public when I leave my house, but I don't mind. I enjoy it because this recognition is something I have earned with a lifetime of work."

Steve feels much the same way.

"I'm doing what I always wanted to do with my life...I really believe I've got the dedication this business demands, and I'm big on making plans and then sticking to them. I'm in this for the long run."

TV leaves terra firma for the high seas, mighty Mississippi

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — Television leaves the security of terra firma, with one program on the high seas and another on the mighty Mississippi.

"Drake's Venture," on public television's "Masterpiece Theater" Sunday night, is more of a personality piece on the English explorer, Sir Francis Drake, than it is an exciting epic. But after a slow start, the two-hour production proves relatively seaworthy.

"The Mississippi," CBS' new vehicle for dear Papa Walton, Ralph Waite, is more apt to make you seasick. The spring trial series of six episodes is buoyantly situated on Friday nights, where it follows the final weeks of "Dallas," in the popular berth temporarily vacated by "Falcon Crest."

Don't miss the show's opening. That's the only way to piece together the background that Ben Walker (Waite) is a criminal lawyer who becomes disgruntled with big-city life. So he shucks it all to buy his own tugboat on the Mississippi, where he hangs his shingle. His caseload is heavy on excitement and danger but short on well-heeled clients.

"Why don't you ever defend people with money?" asks his sassy assistant, Stella, played by Linda G. Miller.

Ben, Stella and Lafayette Tate (Stan Shaw) share the tugboat in a living arrangement that looks like "Three's Company." But S-E-X is not the theme here; L-A-W is.

Ben is white, Lafe is black and Stella isn't a man, so all the major demographic bases seem covered. Lafe, a Vietnam veteran, keeps the tug running smoothly. He's also another legal assistant without portfolio, having joined the floating firm "to escape from the violence of his past," says CBS.

Based on Friday's first episode, the stories are standard TV. Ben defends an unpopular client (Cotter Smith) in a murder case. A scratch-the-surface investigation by the sleuth-lawyer and his two bloodhounds turns up a handful of plausible killers.

What's unique about "The Mississippi" is the on-location shooting along the river and in the state of Mississippi. Although the river is picturesque, "The Mississippi" is shallow.

Except for some sailing ships filmed under blue skies, "Drake's Venture" doesn't dazzle with its locales. An "Around the World in 1,100 Days" extravaganza, with swashbuckling battles against Spanish galleons, would have been too costly, so Britain's Thames Television opted for a more cerebral story.

It's really "Drake's Dilemma," focusing on Sir Francis' intramural squabbles on board, principally with an old friend, Thomas Doughty (Paul Darrow), who starts the seeds of a mutiny because he and his soldiers have been deceived about the purpose of the expedition. Their expected pleasure cruise is, in reality, a worldwide search-and-steal mission against the Spanish.

Drake makes an example of Doughty. He railroads him in a trial and has him beheaded. "This is an end to all traitors," Drake says, holding up the head in an unnecesarily bloody moment.

But aren't these British oh-so-very civilized? Doughty and Drake share a last supper together. "God be with you," Doughty tells Drake before his date with the executioner.

For this act of shipboard justice, Queen Elizabeth is a bit put off when Drake returns to England. But Drake knows that his "specimens" of stolen gold and silver will save his head. Bess certainly did like her baubles.

James Thaw gives a forceful, imposing performance as Drake, a complicated character who was part pirate and part explorer. He commanded with an iron fist and had a single-minded obsession in the pursuit of global navigation and booty. "Where Magellan goes, I go."

Filmmaker not overnight success

"I may be an overnight success story for the public, but I've been in the French film industry for 12 years," says the 39-year-old Illinois native.

Swaim is the first American director to receive a Cesar, the equivalent of an American Oscar, for a French film. He said he is part of a new wave of French filmmakers who think artistic excellence goes hand in hand with commericial success.

"La Balance," to be called "Dime-Droppers" in English, stars Nathalie Baye as a tough-talking streetwalker devoted to her down-and-out gangster boyfriend Philippe Leotard. The film was the outsider in this year's Cesar competition, and it was Swaim's first popular success. The film is expected to open in the United States next fall.

Swaim's first full length film, "La Nuit de Saint-Germain des Pres," a police story set against the backdrop of Left Bank Paris in the 1950s, was applauded by the critics, but flopped at the box office.

"I'm very encouraged to see that the industry was ready to honor a film about cops," he says. "You have to understand that France is a country where cops are not heros, like in the States.

"I think it was a great subject because the French don't know who their police really are — they still have the idea from movies that the cop is the guy in the trench coat, the superman who works alone. Things have changed — they work in teams, they wear T-shirts and listen to Walkmans," he said.

Swaim came to Paris 18 years ago to study anthropology with Claude Levi-Strauss. Although he has made more than 100 commercials, documentaries and short subjects, many of which have been shown at the world's major film festivals, the American with a salt and pepper beard likes to say he started at the bottom, running errands and buying sandwiches for the crew.

Swaim sees his Cesar as just recognition of his Yankee professionalism — a winning blend of technical expertise, investigative research and a good story.

"A film is won or lost in the way it's prepared," he says. "I put everything I had, emotionally and intellectually, into 'La Balance,'" he said.

"I spent months working with the French police observing the milieu I was trying to portray. I took Nathalie to meet prostitutes, and I had a cop help with the dialogue."

Swaim says he has become a product of two cultures, and that "La Balance" which he wrote in French, gave him a chance to reveal his American side.

"For the first time, I didn't try to deny my roots," he said. "The pacing, the fast action, the tension and rhythm of the film are definitely American, but the sensitivity, the passion between Nini and Dede is French." He didn't really discover film until he came to the French capital in 1965 after graduating from the University of California at Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sam Spade, Phillip Marlow, Abbey Garber ...Abbey Garber? He's the guy who solved the "Trenchcoat" caper in Austin.

The "Trenchcoat" Treasure Hunt was open to University of Texas students and the winnings have to be applied to academic purposes. The contest was staged by Jerry Leider Productions to promote its new mystery comedy, "Trenchcoat," starring Margot Kidder and Robert Hayes. It was limited to the 49,000 students at the university.

Garber got a little help from his friends, Barry Epstein and Dick Kranse, who are graduating this year. Asked how he could solve the puzzle so quickly, Garber said, "I've been doing them all my life."

Former paratrooper reveals brutality

LONDON (AP) — A former member of Britain's "Red Devils" paratroopers says in a new book that British soldiers in the Ulster battleground "don't bother to take prisoners — just zap them and trample over them."

But a former commander of British forces in Northern Ireland calls the book a "complete misrepresentation" that unfairly portrays the Paras as "loutish thugs."

The book, "Contact," by former Capt. Tony Clarke, recalls in one sweep: "We're getting high on the violence now...The feeling of uplift every time an Irishman goes down. We don't bother to take prisoners — just zap them and trample over them. Let their own pick them up."

The book is the first to give a soldiers' view of the Ulster war that has been going on for 13 years.

The paratroopers, known as the "Red Devils," are feared in the Protestant and Catholic ghettoes of Northern Ireland for their ferocity, including the killing of 14 unarmed Catholic civil rights marchers in Londonderry's "Bloody Sunday" on Jan. 30, 1972.

Clarke served two four-month combat tours in the province, in 1973 when the violence was at its height and in 1976. His company from the Parachute Regiment's 3rd Battalion operated in Belfast and Crossmaglen, along the border with the Irish Republic.

He claims in the book that the paratroopers once deliberately delayed a car rushing a wounded Irish Republican Army gunman to a hospital and watched him die.

"The guy on the back seat was going cold," he wrote. "What a pity. Never mind. We all cheered and laughed of course."

He said his men carried "buckshee rounds," spare bullets passed on from one rotating unit to another and which they fire without having to account for them later.

Clarke said his men once booby-trapped an abandoned house with their own bomb, hoping to kill guerrillas. He admits, too, that his men frequently beat up civilians sympathetic to militants on both sides.

Retired Gen. Anthony Farrar-Hockley, a highly decorated former commander in Northern Ireland and a 40-year paratroop veteran, said in an interview with The Associated Press: "This is a complete misrepresentation of what the army does in Northern Ireland.

Opera fans close performances

ROME (AP) — Italy's most vocal and demanding opera fans have been the bane of singers for years, but in recent months audiences have turned nasty enough to interrupt or shut down three major productions.

Critics say the phenomenon is not new, but resentment has intensified because financial and labor problems have forced opera houses to skimp on productions. Italian opera fans also object that the managers of the leading theaters are often appointed for their political connections and not their abilities.

In the latest incident, renowned soprano Joan Sutherland and her husband, conductor Richard Bonynge, last week walked out of the premier performance of a production of Giuseppe Verdi's "La Traviata" in Genoa after the sold-out audience repeatedly booed Italian tenor Lamberto Furlan.

"WE ARE artists, not gladiators," the couple said in a statement — and they canceled the rest of their scheduled performances.

That came just a few days after beloved Italian opera star Luciano Pavarotti was booed at Milan's La Scala theater during Gaetano Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor" when the singer's voice suddenly weakened.

"The dissensions were the logical consequence of the prolonged bad

> "It would be a wonderful idea to close the loggione (galleries) for 10 or 15 years for restoration. We all live in fear. It's a kind of terrorism."

management of the theater," said Pieraturo Vertov, vice president of a vocal group of opera buffs called "Friends of the Gallery," according to Milan's Corriere della Sera.

The Friends and other "loggionisti" who sit in the lower-priced gallery seats are well organized, extremely demanding and not shy about showing displeasure.

"It would be a wonderful idea to close the loggione (galleries) for 10 or 15 years for restoration," said conductor Peter Maag, who was booed along with Pavarotti and has worked in most of Italy's opera houses. "We all live in fear," he said in an interview with The Associated Press. "It's a kind of terrorism."

MAAG SAID the public has a right to its opinions "but what is becoming very disturbing now is that they are pre-conceived opinions, maybe even pre-paid demonstrations" against managers with political connections, he said.

Italian opera houses are city-run and depend on subsidies from the local and national governments — and almost all of them lose money. Milan's La Scala is run by a member of the governing Socialist Party, Carlo Maria Badini.

Maag, a Swiss, also said financial difficulties and high-priced stars have forced opera houses to put on fewer productions. That has made each one such an event that everyone is under incredible pressure.

Francesca Eminente, of the artist management firm of Propaganda Musicale, told the AP that audiences are more outspoken now because "overall quality of productions has been declining."

THE STATE subsidizes as much as 80 percent of the opera house budgets, but managers complain the government is years behind in its payments.

The financial problems have been complicated by labor demands for more pay. Entire productions, including Pavarotti's last previous appearance in Italy three years ago, have been closed by striking musicians — and that has created more bad feelings between the fans and management.

Critics say the political, financial and labor problems have aggravated the longstanding tradition of highly vocal audiences. Ticket prices have been increasing about 20 percent a year.

"The tradition really started in Parma, which singers call 'The Lion's Pit.' They all fear playing there because of the audiences," Miss Eminente said.

PARMA RESIDENTS are known for considering themselves Italy's leading opera experts and as the protectors of the tradition of Verdi, who was born in nearby Roncole di Busseto.

The Lion's Pit reputation came about in 1964 when American baritone Cornell MacNeil walked off the stage, shouting at the noisy audience, "Enough you cretins!"

The outraged opera buffs stormed the stage.

Nothing quite like that happened again until "The St. Valentine's Day Massacre" February 14, 1982, at La Scala.

Then a packed house that paid up to 75,000 lire (now $52) nearly brought down the house with boos and foot stomping when it was announced that Spanish soprano Montserrat Caballe was ill and being replaced in a special production of "Anna Bolena."

The angry audience frightened the conductor off the podium and La Scala had to cancel the performance.

Japanese students get poetic telegrams

TOKYO (AP) — College applicants waiting anxiously to hear if they've won a place at university often get the news in poetic telegrams that might just soften the blow for the unlucky and lift the spirits of the winners.

"White hares dance on Mt. Azuma," is the good news for successful applicants at Fukushima University, while the bad news cable says, "The storms on Mt. Azuma still blow fiercely."

At Nara Women's College, new students in the ancient birthplace of Japanese Buddhism get a simple message: "Buddha smiles."

Those who don't make the grade for Kobe University of Mercantile Marine learn "high waves prevent entry into port."

These and other poetic messages are sent out by young entrepreneurs who sell their telegraphic services to applicants who can't be at the university to see the posted test results.

A columnist for the daily newspaper Asahi, who writes about everyday Japanese life, compiled several of the messages sent to students who have applied to a university some distance from their homes.

The universities don't mail out official notifications themselves because, a Waseda University official said, the huge number of applicants makes the process too expensive and time-consuming — and the possibility of error too great.

The messages are very eagerly awaited because in Japan, entry into a top-class university is nearly an assurance of later employment with a large company, with its higher salaries, lifetime employment, and greater opportunities.

In mid-January, about 350,000 students — four times the number of vacancies at the 127 public universities — took this year's two-day unified test covering Japanese, chemistry, physics, mathematics, English, and politics-economics.

Many of those who fail to enter the generally more prestigious public schools will enter one of the 319 private schools, some of which rival the top public schools in status.

After the national unified exam, students must take tests in mid-March at the individual schools they wish to attend. Most take the exams of several universities in order to ensure entry somewhere in April.

About 100,000 of the applicants this year were "ronin," which literally means lordless samurai. These young people have graduated from high school, failed to enter the university of their choice, and spent a year or more preparing further for the exam by studying on their own or at special preparatory schools for ronin.

European nations retrain jobless

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Swiss watchmakers displaced by Japanese technology are being turned into electricians, and German hardhats are conquering the computer in the effort to arm jobseekers with sharper skills.

West Germany is spending the equivalent of more than $400 million to retrain over 40,000 people now collecting unemployment payments.

In France, 2.5 million people participated in some kind of job retraining last year. Of those, 88 percent now have jobs. About 30 percent of public funds spent on all types of employment-related expenses, including unemployment compensation, go to retraining.

Austria paid $23.5 million to retrain or train 56,669 unemployed or unskilled workers in 1982.

Belgium shares expense with private businesses to offer training in more than 40 occupations. Last year, 29,441 workers passed through job retraining programs.

Part of Italy's program includes $4.2 million to retrain 1,500 laid-off Fiat autoworkers this year, "but it hasn't been very successful," said regional labor administrator Giorgio Zanutto.

The Swiss have no official tally of workers involved, but a government source estimated the number at 3,000-4,000. The emphasis is on the "watchmaking" regions where 45,000 jobs were lost over the past decade as Japan replaced Switzerland as the world's leading producer of watches.

An estimated 200,000 Danes undergo some form of retraining each year, but no statistics on cost are available. Denmark is battling 10.3 percent unemployment.

Such programs have existed for years in Europe, but participants and officials say the global economic crunch gives them a new importance and urgency.

In the United States, President Reagan has asked Congress to increase funds for retraining displaced workers to $240 million from $25 million, said to be enough to help retrain 110,000 unemployed Americans.

In West Germany, where unemployment is at a post-war record 10.4 percent and a new government is forming, unions and management alike fear that federal budget cuts will hurt the job-training program in its hour of need.

"Already there's too many people and not enough money," said Wilfried Malcher of the West German Employers' Association. "In comparison to unemployment, we think retraining is always better."

IG Metall, the largest union in West Germany, also gives high marks to the country's 14-year-old retraining program, particularly as preventive medicine.

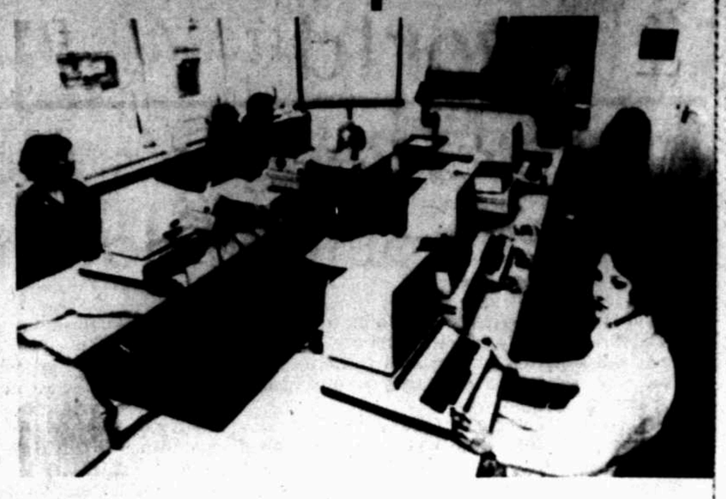

Union spokesman Ulrich Mignon noted that the government pays to retrain people whose jobs are threatened — a category he said included over 200,000 workers as of Jan. 1. "It's money well-spent," he said.

Because the economic slump reduced job possibilities, West Germany cut back its retraining program last year. Government statistics show 42,103 people were retrained, compared with 47,498 in 1981. West Germans risk forfeiture of some unemployment benefits by refusing to be retrained.

Some European government officials said retraining may be breeding a whole new set of workers' woes — for example, by saturating such fields as data processing while more traditional labor markets suffer severe shortages.

"We don't have problems getting companies to volunteer to train these people, since the government foots the bill," said Giulo Santarelli, head of the Lazio regional government in Italy.

Jobless workers are shown being retrained in the field of computer accounting at the Hartnack school in Frankfurt, West Germany, recently. West European nations, facing the greatest unemployment rate since World War II, are retraining millions of jobless workers in an effort to combat the problem.

Swaziland queen dismisses minister

MBABANE, Swaziland (AP) — The Great She Elephant, queen of Swaziland, has dismissed Prime Minister Prince Mabandla, the speaker of Parliament announced.

Speaker Jetro Mamba did not disclose reasons for Mabandla's dismissal Monday. However, Mabandla is known to have angered traditional Swazi chiefs with his modern approach to government, including creation of a commission to investigate corruption.

Mabandla remained in his office Monday, and his private secretary said he was waiting to see Queen Dzeliwe, who is called the Ndlovukazi or Great She Elephant, before acknowledging his dismissal. She has reigned since King Sobhuza died in August after 60 years on the throne.

U.S.S.R.: Reagan's planned system would violate treaties

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union today denounced President Reagan's "bellicose" defense speech and said deployment of a futuristic new anti-missile system he envisaged would violate U.S.-Soviet treaties.

The official news agency Tass said Reagan's plans for new defensive weapons that could destroy Soviet missiles in flight were "a new attempt to achieve superiority in strategic weapons over the Soviet Union and to violate an approximate balance of forces created in the world."

"Deployment of such systems of anti-missile defense would be a direct violation of the Soviet-American treaty on anti-ballistic missiles and its protocol," Tass said.

In a separate reaction to Reagan's Wednesday night speech, Radio Moscow charged he had used phony information supplied by the CIA to back his arguments about Soviet military might and get support to build "super weapons of the 21st century."

"In a bellicose speech over the television President Reagan cited new CIA-fabricated figures about the Soviet military potential and used them to try to justify the unprecedented military spending of the United States," the broadcast said.

"Reagan's statements triggered off a sharp criticism in the Congress," the radio said. "Many congressmen expressed anger at his manipulation with figures about the might of the United States and the Soviet Union."

It made no direct comment about previously classified photographs Reagan displayed during his broadcast but said the president used "fabricated" material during his television appeareance.

151 more Amerasian children leave Vietnam

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — U.S. consular officials and an anxious Oregon father who last saw his Amerasian daughter nine years ago flew into Vietnam today to begin the largest airlift of America's children of war.

A total of 151 children and relatives are scheduled to board an Air France jet in Ho Chi Minh City, formerly called Saigon, for the return trip to Bangkok later today.

"My wife and I went to a lot of Buddhist temples to pray. We don't want anything to go wrong," said John R. Grabski on the eve of a reunion with his 14-year-old daughter Kim Chi Roy.

Grabski, 34, of Hillsboro, Ore., was the only father aboard the flight to pick up the children who will be going to new homes — but not necessarily to their fathers — in the United States.

Grabski, a soft-spoken aircraft maintenance specialist, and his Vietnamese wife arrived in Bangkok Feb. 6 in attempts to insure that their daughter would be included on this fifth airlift of children fathered by U.S. servicemen during the Vietnam War.

The airlifts are part of a new cooperation between Hanoi and Washington, and are organized by the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees and several voluntary agencies.

The Vietnamese granted Grabski a visa but his wife is remaining behind in Bangkok, while their 13-year-old son is waiting in Oregon, Grabski said.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman said the airlift would include 85 children of Vietnamese-American parents; 15 ethnic Vietnamese children and 51 adults.

U.S. Consular officials will give the group brief, final interviews at Ho Chi Minh City's airport and there will be further processing at Thailand's Phanat Nikhom refugee camp before they are flown on to the United States next week.

After today's flight, a total of 181 Americans will have left Vietnam on five flights, the first of which took place last Sept. 30. The sixth is planned for April 28.

U.S. Marines and French soldiers take up positions on a beach south of Beirut as they participate in a joint assault exercise. Lebanon wants further U.S. aid in obtaining troop withdrawal

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The government has set a two-week deadline for obtaining a troop-withdrawal agreement from Israel, beyond which it will seek intensified U.S. pressure on the Jewish state, official sources said today.

The sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said President Amin Gemayel or Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan would go to Washington to plead Lebanon's case in direct talks with the U.S. administration if no agreement with Israel is reached by April 2.

The development coincided with an outbreak of artillery duels between rival Christian militias in northern Lebanon and two shooting incidents involving the Lebanese army in Christian-populated east Beirut.

Police said the fighting in the north pitted militiamen of the right-wing Phalange Party's "Lebanese Forces" militia against the Syrian-backed "Giants" militia of former Christian President Suleiman Franjieh.

The fighting, which erupted Wednesday and continued sporadically today, shattered a four-month-old ceasefire between the two antagonists in the Batroun hills, 40 miles northeast of Beirut, police said.

They said no casualties were reported in the hostilities and could not confirm a charge by Phalangist radio stations that Syrian forces which control much of northern Lebanon participated in shelling Phalangist positions.

Police also announced that six armored police battalions today launched round-the-clock patrols in the Christian and Moslem sectors of the Lebanese capital to support the army in "greater Beirut."

The move, police said, was part of extra security measures taken to curb attacks against the multinational peacekeeping force, composed of 5,400 U.S., French, Italian and British troops.

Grenade and machinegun attacks on the peace force last week wounded five U.S. Marines and nine Italians. One of the Italians died in a Rome hospital Tuesday from complications after surgery to remove shrapnel from his spine.

The new patrols came a day after Lebanese army checkpoints came under fire twice in east Beirut for the first time since the army took over the Christian sector from Phalangist militiamen three weeks ago.

The Gemayel government is trying to build Lebanon's 22,000-man army into an efficient force capable of handling security duties in Beirut and elsewhere in Lebanon, racked by years of Moslem-Christian civil war, Syrian intervention and then Israel's June 6 invasion to smash Palestinian guerrilla bases.

Government officials who reported the two-week deadline for tangible results in the withdrawal negotiations said it was not an ultimatum.

"It is merely a deadline for seeking additional American pressure on Israel and this will be sought by the top leaders of the Lebanese government," one official said. "It means the government is impatient with Israel's foot-dragging."

Wazzan today was quoted as saying Lebanon can make no further concessions in the 11-week-old withdrawal talks that are scheduled to resume under U.S. sponsorship in the Israeli Mediterranean resort of Netanya on Friday.

"The Lebanese position has reached the edge. Lebanon has given all it could give and still maintain its sovereignty and dignity," Wazzan was quoted as saying by the independent An-Nahar newspaper.

U.S. special envoy Philip C. Habib has been briefing Lebanese and Israeli officials on details of a new American plan to break the deadlock in the negotiations.

Foreign relations may resume

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The Soviet Union and Egypt, which broke relations in 1977, will likely exchange ambassadors sometime this year, Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly said in an interview published today.

Aly, speaking to the weekly magazine Al-Mussawar, also predicted that ruptured relations with Bulgaria and Cyprus could be restored this year.

But he said such normalization would not be at the expense of Egypt's close ties with the United States.

The crisis in Cairo-Moscow relations began with the late President Anwar Sadat's expulsion in 1972 of 17,000 Soviet military personnel and was aggravated by Moscow's resentment of Sadat's rapprochement with the United States and Egypt's peace treaty with Israel.

Denmark ends Soviet sanctions

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — The government has ended economic sanctions against the Soviet Union, the first Common Market nation to drop the effort to punish Moscow for its support of martial law in Poland.

The Folketing, Denmark's Parliament, voted 78-68 on Wednesday against a bill under which Denmark would have reimposed import sanctions identical to those of other Common Market nations.

A Danish Foreign Ministry official involved in administering the sanctions said Denmark's imports from the Soviet Union amount only to about 2 percent of its total imports. The sanctions covered only about 2 percent of the Soviet goods, he said.

The Common Market embargoed some Soviet products after Poland's government decreed martiial law on Dec. 13, 1981 to crush a wave of strikes by the now outlawed Solidarity Union. Martial law was suspended Dec. 30, 1982, but tough controls on union activity remain.

LONDON (AP) — A 130-year-old photographic image which could be the world's first news picture, a man plunging to his death over Niagara Falls, will be auctioned Friday at Sotheby's.

The metal-plate picture, taken on the American side of the falls, shows the man clinging to a log in the Niagara River before tumbling over the precipice in 1853. It was taken by an early photographer identifiied as Platt D. Babbitt.

Chunk falls from Pantheon

ROME (AP) — The Pantheon, considered one of the best preserved monuments of Roman antiquity, has been closed to the public until further notice because a marble fragment fell and grazed a 22-year-old tourist on the head.

Giovanni Di Gieso, superintendent of monuments, ordered the closure Wednesday, saying he could not guarantee the safety of visitors to the building.

The 'Midland Style': Conservative, cosmopolitan

By DAVID L. FORREST
Lifestyle Writer

The look of the Midland man is a conservative, designer-conscious, cosmopolitan, yet often quite casual style, according to many in the local fashion industry.

Conservative business wear is very important in the local men's style.

"Midland is a young businessman's town and the businessman is going to be conservative," said Mike Kennedy of Bernie Franks Limited in Midland Park Mall

"The Midlander, colorwise, is a lot more conservative than, say, in California," said Lee Goodyear, clothing consultant at Desmond's.

"Midland is a little more conservative," said Gene Bartus, owner of Gene Bartus Fine Menswear.

"Midlanders know what they want."

"Midland people are very designer-conscious," Kennedy noted.

While Joe Golding, owner of Golding's, also believes that Midlanders like designer clothes, he did not agree that men here are always that conservative in taste.

"It all depends on which age group you're in," he said. "Outside of bankers, lawyers and accountants, very few people are wearing three-piece suits. Midland is a very casual town."

Outside of the office, casual wear does seem to predominate. Even in business suits, because of the warm West Texas climate, vests are rarely worn during much of the year. Two-button coats are also dominant in business wear.

Other clothiers who believe Midland is such a cosmopolitan city there really isn't a single "Midland style."

"I don't think there is a 'Midland style' really, because there are so many people new to the area," said Don Snyder, men's salesman of Sakowitz.

He said people who move to Midland often bring various dress styles from different parts of the country here with them.

"It's such a conglomerate," Duke Snyder of J.E. Barron Traditional Clothing, also said about Midland's men's fashions.

If anything is certain about the Midland style, Sakowitz's Don Snyder said, it's that Midland men are "not just looking for a super-suede jacket and a pair of boots."

Quality, coordination, cotton are key words

By DAVID L. FORREST
Lifestyle Writer

Quality, colors, coordination, cotton, and conservatism are some of the key words in men's clothing this spring, according to many of Midland's men's clothiers. Apparantly a few of these style considerations are dictated by the state of the economy.

One trend area retailers agree on is that bright colors are glowing in men's casual and sports clothes this spring and summer. Red, blue, Kelly green, lavender, jade, pink and other pastel shades are being combined in flashy stripe and plaid patterns.

"As you can tell, there's nothing bland about any of them," said Don Snyder, men's salesman at Sakowitz, as he pointed at a rack of vividly multi-hued sports shirts in the Midland Park Mall store.

With such a mixture of colors available, even more manufacturers have designed their spring clothes lines to make color coordination easier for the buyer. Economic conditions have tightened clothing budgets so much that shoppers often need to be able to make several outfits by combining just afew clothes.

Even more in formal business wear, "versatility when coordinating" is highly important, stressed Gene Bartus, owner of Gene Bartus Fine Menswear in Western Park Plaza.

"The value of clothing is in how often you wear it," said the owner of Gene Bartus Fine Menswear in Western Park Plaza, "especially during hard economic times."

As an investment, he compared an article of clothing that often stays in a closet because it coordinates with only a small part of a man's wardrobe to a parked semi-trailer truck.

"When it's sitting on a lot, it's not doing you any good."

Another important trend noted in both casual and business clothing this spring is a dramatic increase in the use of natural fibers, such as cotton, cotton blends, poplins, linens, silk, and even lightweight wool blends.

"We've done extremely well with the cotton and natural fibers," said Duke Snyder of J.E. Borron Traditional Clothing, 103 N. Colorado St.

"One hundred percent cotton is very, very popular; 100 percent polyester is going to be pretty much out," Mike Kennedy of Bernie Franks Limited in Midland Park Mall said.

Regardless of material, suits and other business wear will remain conservative in style, according to the majority of the area merchants. Many of them said this fashion conservatism is closely related to the state of the economy.

"The poorer the economy, the more conservative the dress. It doesn't matter if the people buying are affluent or if they are poor; they go to the very basics," Goodyear said.

"Even with the economy the way it is," Duke Snyder noted, "people are looking for quality."

Opinions are mixed about how the combination of tighter budgets and higher quality-consciousness will affect men's interest in designer label clothes.

"They're getting away from labels," Kennedy stated.

"Designer labels aren't as big as a year ago, but are still very popular," said Goodyear.

On the other hand, Joe Golding, owner of Goldings, 325 Dodson St. in Midland,said, "We're selling more Polos than we've ever sold."

Designer goods are still flourishing, according to Golding.

For men's western wear, trends in spring and summer clothes seem to also have a high demand for 100 percent cotton, according to Rene Loftis of High Chaparral, 3116 W. Front Ave.

About our cover...

Cover model Gloria Eng, left, of Midland is wearing a formal evening dress from Sakowtiz by Jan Van Velden. The black taffeta top has a silk organza floral bottom, a plunging back and a silk organza ruffle at the neck ($1,325).

Will Hill, right, a production engineer at Cities Service Co., Midland, is wearing office attire for the Midland professional. A navy blue blazer, button-down collar oxford cloth shirt, gray trousers and boa constrictor skin western boots from Wood's Boots in Colorado City, Texas, present a cosmopolitan, conservative, yet casual style for the warming trend.

Natural fabrics, area merchants tell us, are popular in Midland's climate because it allows the body to breathe.

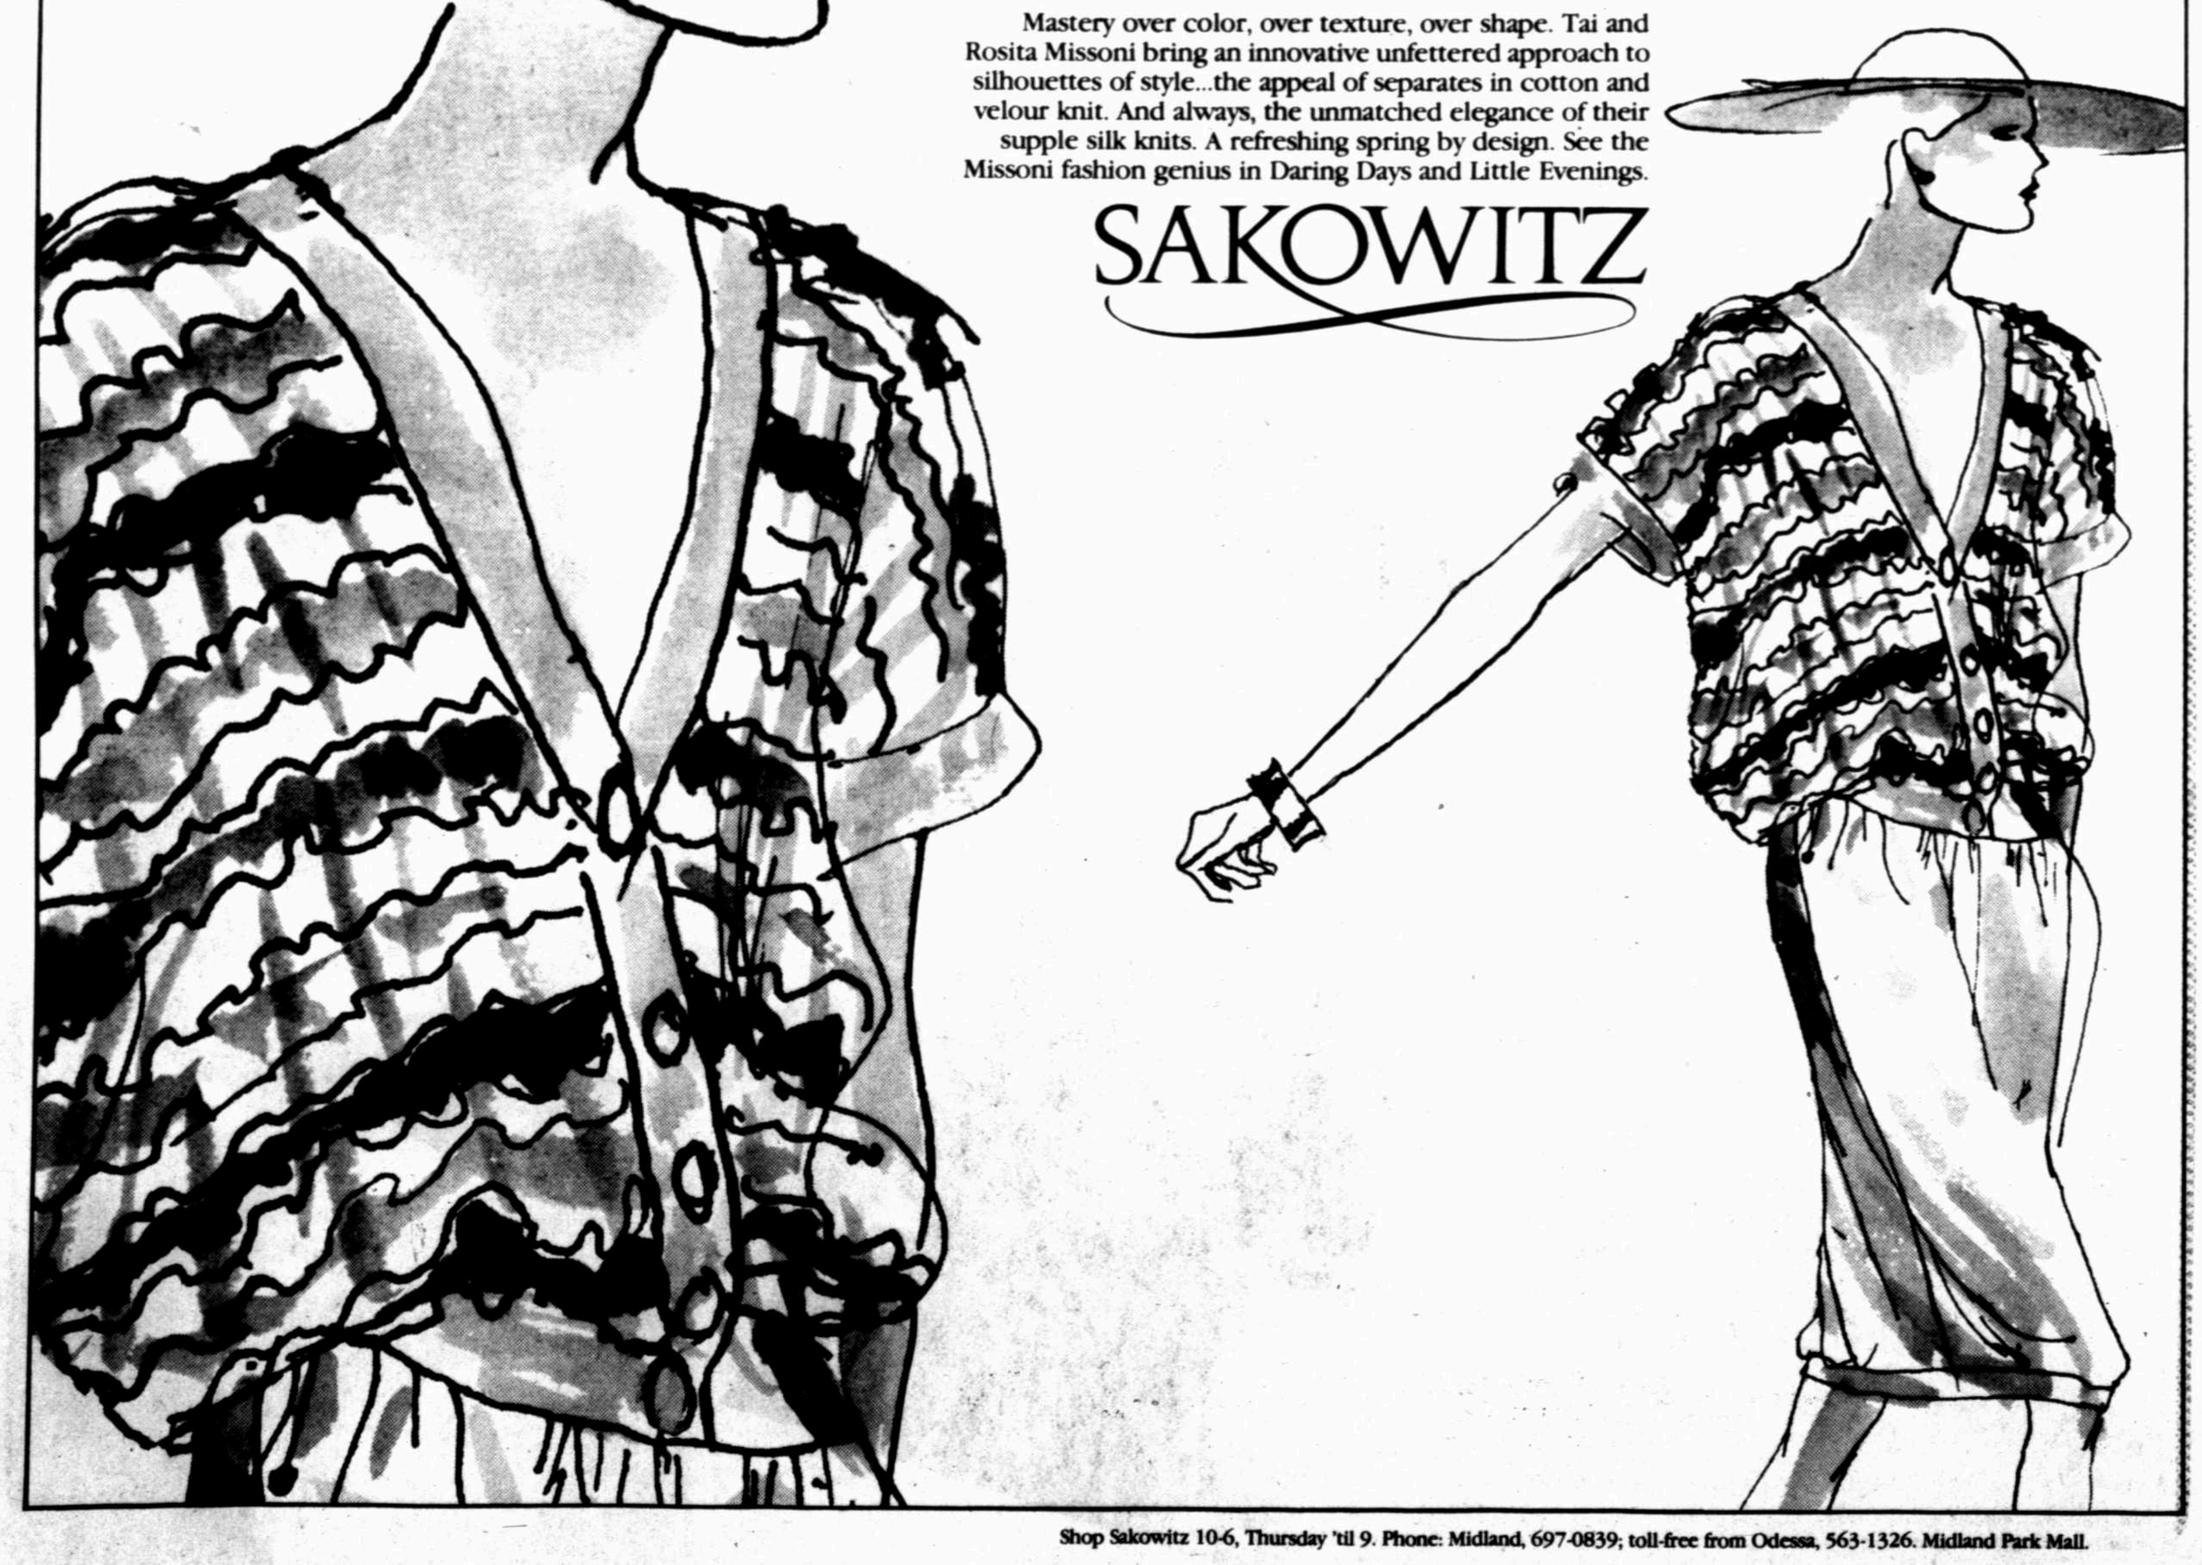

Bottom photo is Michael Leede, a partner in Leede Exploration, Midland, wearing a more formal look with a deep navy blue pin-stripe three-piece suit with white pin-dots on a red tie and a red silk pocket scarf.

Three-piece suits are most commonly seen in Midland among bankers, attorneys and accountants in the business world. Special occasions are another popular place for the three-piece suit, area retailers have observed.

'Double-breasted look' is back, retailers say future uncertain

By DAVID L. FORREST
Lifestyle Writer

Predicting the direction men's fashions will take is not an exact science. If anything, it's an art, and conflicting opinions exist about what the next new style will be.

Some fashion seers in New York prophesize suits and blazers with the double-breasted overlapping front and double row of buttons will make a big resurgence this season.

Some Midlanders have their doubts.

"I don't think the style will last too long," said Joe Golding, owner of Golding's.

"At this point, it's still something of a fad," said Gene Bartus, owner of Gene Bartus Fine Menswear.

The double-breasted suit may actually have some drawbacks in the Midland climate.

"A double-breasted suit has to be buttoned to look right," as Duke Snyder of J.E. Borron Traditional Clothing, pointed out.

This might make it uncomfortably warm for some men in the Midland spring and summer, he said.

"I don't think this is as good a climate for the double-breasted suit as in the north or east," he said.

"The double-breasted suit is going to be popular this season and this fall," said Mike Kennedy of Bernie Franks Limited in Midland Park Mall.

"There is a demand for it," said Lee Goodyear, clothing consultant of Desmond's.

"The double-breasted blazer is never in or out. It's a classic."

One point in this little controversy on which almost everyone agrees is that the double-breasted blazer — especially in navy blue — has an air of timelessness.

As Duke Snyder said, "It's always in very good taste."

Midland professionals pool talent for 'Fantasia' fashion production

By LISA GERLOCK
Lifestyle Editor

Before their very eyes, Midlanders witnessed seven formal evening gowns evolve from only one basic piece of material as hairdesigner Robert Overstreet performed his "Fantasia" magic at the National Hairdressers and Cosmetologists Association's first "Spring Fashion and Trend Release."

One piece of black silk, reversibly lined with white silk, was wrapped, tied, pinned and twisted around the model on stage during the performance to highlight the latest hair designs.

The black material was then pulled up and knotted over one shoulder to create a more romantic style.

The third charm, the same style but different look, was made by adding one long puffed-sleeve on the left arm.

A fourth style emerged when three inches of the neckline was turned down to reveal the reverse white lining. This gave the illusion of trim on the dress. A white sash was added to tie it all together.

A sixth creation was demonstrated by reversing the neckline of the black dress and adding sequined straps and bodice trim.

The grand finale proved, that with some imagination, a wedding gown does not have to be a luxury.

Seventy-six models from Midland danced, twirled and whirled around the stage to show just what can be done when creative "professionals put their heads together," said Alwana Vaugh, Showcase chairman of the presentation.

The show was presented by 23 local members of the NHCA for their first presentation as an affiliation.

Classics make a comeback in formal wear

By DIANE BOOTH
Lifestyle Writer

Although the trend in formal fashions is leaning to traditional styles, anything goes for formal wear.

Women have an array of choices when it comes to dressing for the occasion.

This season, the long and short of it is taffeta, chiffon, aspirin dot and chiana, according to merchants.

Pastels are popular this season according to Sharon Keel, salesclerk, Janee's Boutique, 2304 N. Big Spring St.

The crumb-catcher bodice, which features a layer of lace which protrudes from the bodice, is a new "old" look in both long and short formals.

"You will find every sort of garment represented at a cocktail party," said John Ingram, manager of Julian Gold 2307 W. Wall St.

Women are not restricted to long gowns when the occasion calls for formality; however, there is a trend to return to glamour, said Ingram.

Skirts should be worn so they look their best on a woman, he said.

"In the past few years, there is a real flexibility in what is considered formal wear."

This spring's fashions are designed to "brighten, stimulate interest and to lighten," he said.

The cocktail suit is a wise fashion choice this spring, according to Ingram. A white, silk cocktail suit is suggested for all-around formal wear, said Ingram. "It is a more subtle look."

Some designers are breaking away from the styles they have become famous for, said Ingram.

"The designers are not in their stereotype. They are developing new ideas to relate to a new circumstance.

"Women are no longer willing to be stereotyped."

Tuxedos have become traditional again, said James McCain, owner of Fashion Formal Wear, 801 W. Wall St.

"The earlier trend towards 'mad colors' has faded out, and black, gray, ivory and white are in demand," he said.

According to McCain, a big look this spring is a white pique vest with black tails or gray tails and matching white pique tie and shirt.

Tuxedo jackets are available in short jackets and tails are very popular now, McCain said.

Wing-tip collar shirts are the most popular style right now among the younger set, McCain said. The traditional shirt has never gone out of style. The ruffled shirt is still worn, but it has declined in popularity.

Ascots are the stylish addition to a tuxedo this spring, he added. Cumberbunds are used to accent the classic formal look and red is the color.

"Western tuxedos are available have declined in popularity recently," he said.

"Black pants and a white jacket are a popular combination," according to Gary Gullickson, manager of Mr. Penguins Tuxedo Rental and Sales, 411 Andrews Highway in Midland.

"The white or ivory wing collar is the most popular," he added.

Anita McDugle, right, of Dallas, a 'large and lovely' model, displays fashions for large women. Specialty shops in Midland are responding to the nation-wide trend for the demand in large-size fashions.

By Diane Booth
Lifestyle Writer

Clothing for the larger woman is readily available, but stylish apparel may be more difficult to find, said Florida Hyson, manager of Anada, at 18 Village Circle in the Village Shopping Center.

A youthful, flattering look is important to all women, especially the larger woman, said Hyson.

Black and white are big this year, she said.

Sizes vary from 16 to 52 in a straight size to 12 and one-half to 32 and one-half in large sizes.

"Other regular stores do not offer the sizes we do," Hyson said.

"Regular stores might have one size 16 dress. That is where we start."

The garments at the store will not make people "look horrible," she said.

Women who are 5 feet four inches and feel lost their clothes, will find even accessories are scaled to smaller sizes at Yvonne's.

Yvonne Trotter, the shop owner, is a petite. She said her customers jokingly refer to themselves as "Yvonne's pygmies."

Major manufacturers are beginning to come out and hit you with fashion," Trotter said.

Until recently, she added, the emphasis on special sizes has been on large sizes. But clothing manufaturers have discovered 40 million people in the U.S. are 5 feet 4 inches and under, she said.

An estimated 20 million people weigh less than 120 pounds, according to Trotter.

Large models are vogue

Copley News Service

Women come in all sizes, shapes and descriptions.

Not all are tall and thin; some, in fact, are short or plump.

That "growing" is no pun. These women wear the larger sizes, 18 to 20 (8 and 10 are average model sizes), and modeling agents continually search for more such full-figured women simply to keep up with the demand.

At the Big Beauties agency in New York City, owner Mary Duffy says, "There is more opportunity now than ever for big beauties today."

McDugle grew up on a farm in Texas, a "cute, chubby little girl eating all those gorgeous foods my grandmother fixed. Food is love, and I became very dependent on food, as far as nurturing myself goes. When I was bored, sad, angry, happy, it didn't matter, I ate. Eating that way is deeply ingrained, a substitute for whatever you need.

"I still have binges, but I don't beat myself up on it anymore. If I want to eat, I go ahead and eat, then I try to figure out why, and work on that."

Mothers-to-be build wardrobes to wear before, after baby's birth

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

In the days of Scarlett O'Hara, women who were pregnant did not show themselves in polite society until after the birth of their babies. Mothers-to-be were usually expected to eat for two, never lift anything heavier than a book of sonnets and never, never do anything physical.

Times have changed and so have expectant mothers. Today women who work outside the home often work up until time of delivery, take a few weeks off and return to work. Many who are involved in sports or regular exercise programs before becoming pregnant are advised by their doctors to continue their physical activities while pregnant.

Pregnant women also have a need to look their best, possibly more so than at any other time in their lives. With the expantant mothers' expanding waistline and increasingly awkward figure, they can easily become discouraged with their personal appearance. But with today's clothing for expectant mothers, pregnancy doesn't have to be a time of looking dowdy.

"There has always been fashion in maternity wear — you have always been able to get the same fashions as non-pregnant (women)," said Gloria Watson, owner of Margaret's Maternity and Infants Wear in Midland.

Maternity summer sportswear, for example, includes walking shorts, leotards, coveralls and bathing suits. Jogging suits for expectant mothers are available with fall fashions.

"Capri pants or clam diggers (a pant hem-line just below the knee) are popular," Mrs. Watson added. "Bathing suits are always popular. Basically they use the same material (as regular swim wear), but they have to have a flowing shape."

"Dresses are more popular now. During the 1960s and 70s the trend was pants and tops. Now the trend is back to dresses, probably because so many women work during their pregnancies."

Lingerie is also a part of a maternity wardrobe, including maternity bras, panties, pantyhose, slips and half slips, as well as nursing bras and maternity gowns.

"Lingerie is always good and very necessary. You can get just about what you're used to when you're not pregnant. They make lingerie expecially for pregnant women, even matching undies.

Lingerie is just as fashionable as anything else. Nursing gowns have come into their own in the past five or six years," said Mrs. Watson.

Looking good during pregnancy is "really a frame of mind," she said. "You can always look good during pregnancy and it doesn't have to cost a lot."

Kathy Linehan, manager of Upstairs Downstairs maternity wear in Midland, agrees. "Bathing suits do well in the summertime," she said. "Shorts do well, probably because they're more comfortable and cooler. The new fashions in for spring are selling even as not maternity." She said she had also "heard women comment that the clothes are better now."

She stressed one item of apparel that is extremely important for an expectant mother is "a good support bra. Going without breaks down muscles." She said it need not be a maternity bra — any good support bra will do.

Today's maternity fashions are "just good, basic, common sense fashion," she said. "Whatever is in fashion now is what maternity (designers) are coming out with."

Although one popular item for summer maternity wear this year is a one-piece jumpsuit, "we sell more dresses than pants and tops — maybe because (so many women work) in offices in Midland."

"It's interesting that maternity clothes are less expensive for the same quality than non-maternity. People don't want to pay more than they have to for maternity clothes (because they will wear them only a few months.)"

Mrs. Linehan said the jumper-style dress can be worn as a sleeveless dress or with a blouse or sweater for a whole new look. Because of the versatility, she said, the jumper is an excellent choice in maternity wear.

She also recommended a maternity girdle for comfort and back support. "Maternity girdles are not made to be tight — they support the back and tummy and take stress off the back."

The newest innovation in maternity wear is clothing that, with a few minor adjustments, can be worn after pregnancy, according to Maureen Veal, manager of Motherhood Maternity Boutique in Midland Park Mall.

"They're now making pants with adjustable elastic that can be worn after the baby is born. We also have baggie jeans women can wear later. There are a lot of women in today's economy who want something they can wear afterward. In most designs today, all that is needed is a minimum amount of adjustment to be able to wear it after (pregnancy)."

Mrs. Veal stressed the need for looking good during pregnancy, because if a woman indulges in sloppiness while she is pregnant, that sloppiness may become a habit, "and a nine-month habit is hard to break."

"You need to buy clothes whether you're pregnant or not," she said, "and pregnancy is no time to economize."

Anita McDugle, right, of Dallas, a 'large and lovely' model, displays fashions for large women. Specialty shops in Midland are responding to the nation-wide trend for the demand in large-size fashions.

By Diane Booth
Lifestyle Writer

Clothing for the larger woman is readily available, but stylish apparel may be more difficult to find, said Florida Hyson, manager of Anada, at 18 Village Circle in the Village Shopping Center.

A youthful, flattering look is important to all women, especially the larger woman, said Hyson.

Black and white are big this year, she said.

Sizes vary from 16 to 52 in a straight size to 12 and one-half to 32 and one-half in large sizes.

"Other regular stores do not offer the sizes we do," Hyson said.

"Regular stores might have one size 16 dress. That is where we start."

The garments at the store will not make people "look horrible," she said.

Women who are 5 feet four inches and feel lost their clothes, will find even accessories are scaled to smaller sizes at Yvonne's.

Yvonne Trotter, the shop owner, is a petite. She said her customers jokingly refer to themselves as "Yvonne's pygmies."

Major manufacturers are beginning to come out and hit you with fashion," Trotter said.

Until recently, she added, the emphasis on special sizes has been on large sizes. But clothing manufaturers have discovered 40 million people in the U.S. are 5 feet 4 inches and under, she said.

An estimated 20 million people weigh less than 120 pounds, according to Trotter.

Large models are vogue

Copley News Service

Women come in all sizes, shapes and descriptions.

Not all are tall and thin; some, in fact, are short or plump.

That "growing" is no pun. These women wear the larger sizes, 18 to 20 (8 and 10 are average model sizes), and modeling agents continually search for more such full-figured women simply to keep up with the demand.

McDugle grew up on a farm in Texas, a "cute, chubby little girl eating all those gorgeous foods my grandmother fixed. Food is love, and I became very dependent on food, as far as nurturing myself goes. When I was bored, sad, angry, happy, it didn't matter, I ate. Eating that way is deeply ingrained, a substitute for whatever you need.

"I still have binges, but I don't beat myself up on it anymore. If I want to eat, I go ahead and eat, then I try to figure out why, and work on that."

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

In the days of Scarlett O'Hara, women who were pregnant did not show themselves in polite society until after the birth of their babies. Mothers-to-be were usually expected to eat for two, never lift anything heavier than a book of sonnets and never, never do anything physical.

Times have changed and so have exectant mothers. Today women who work outside the home often work up until time of delivery, take a few weeks off and return to work. Many who are involved in sports or regular exercise programs before becoming pregnant are advised by their doctors to continue their physical activities while pregnant.

Pregnant women also have a need to look their best, possibly more so than at any other time in their lives. With the expantant mothers' expanding waistline and increasingly awkward figure, they can easily become discouraged with their personal appearance. But with today's clothing for expectant mothers, pregnancy doesn't have to be a time of looking dowdy.

"There has always been fashion in maternity wear — you have always been able to get the same fashions as non-pregnant (women)," said Gloria Watson, owner of Margaret's Maternity and Infants Wear in Midland.

Lower heels, casual look set pace for Midland spring footwear

By DIANE BOOTH
Lifestyle Writer

Styles in women's shoe fashions this spring are bright and bold but men's shoe designs continue to cling to the traditional and casual look say Midland shoe merchandisers.

The casual look is very popular in women's shoe fashions this season, according to E.J. Pryor, owner of Pryor Shoes, 120 N. Main St.

Lower heels are setting the pace this spring, Pryor said, in styles which vary from latticework pumps to espadrilles and sandals.

Canvas espadrilles in high or low heels and backless sandals with wedge heels are big sellers and cork heels provide a particularly nice touch, he said.

Pump styles are the featured style this season whether they are closed or open toes, or sling backs.

Although styles, colors and designs vary, Pryor said, low heels are dominating the shoe fashion scene. Higher heels are not as important in fashion now, Pryor said.

Comfort plays a big role in the move towards lower heels, he said, "Tall heels are so hard to wear."

"Fresh" and "new" are the words used to describe this year's women's shoe styles, by Bob Myers, manager of Barnes Pelletier Shoes, 2501 W. Ohio St.

"Moderately priced better grade shoes are the biggest movers this season," he said.

Women will not buy shoes unless they are innovative, he said.

"Shoes have to be exciting, young, fresh and new or people are not going to spend the money on them," Myers said.

Closed-toe pumps have a short life this time of year, Myers said, because of the impending warm weather.

"The opened up shoe is popular here."

Demand in dress shoes styles usually plummets as the mercury in the thermometer rises here in the sunbelt, Myers said.

Although he agrees low heels are the trend for spring, he said, heels will get higher again in the fall.

Closed and open-toed pumps and sandals are popular, she said, and are moving ahead of sling back pumps.

MIDLAND FEET

Saddle oxfords in black and white or red and white with thin soles and pointed toes are great go-togethers with sportswear," Matthews said.

Since lots of dress and skirt belts are black patent, most black shoes this season are also done in black patent, he added.

For career or fashion dressing, Susan Atwill, manager of Sakowitz's shoe department, said gray and muted colors such as mauve go with all the season's colors and the popular black and white combination.

Most shoes for dress or business are silhouette or subdued styles with pointed toes which will not detract from the garment, she said.

Lower heels will give way to higher heels this fall, Atwill said, and toes will become more rounded and soft-looking for autumn wear.

The banding or latticework appears to be the primary trend this season for more casual shoes. "This style is more comfortable and bold but expresses a delicate look," Atwill said.

"Ballet flats in soft kid leather are paired with casual apparel this spring. These are athletic-looking shoes that can be worn to non-athletic events," she said.

Lightweight canvas tennis shoes are popping up on a lot of feet, in colors including pink and blue, she said.

Pastels and bold colors are "battling" for attention this year, Atwill said. Pastels create a soft look, but bright colors "bring us out of the doldrums," she added.

Most shoes come in red, white or black. "Red has become more of a basic color," she said, since it goes well with gray, navy, black and white.

According to Ms. Atwill black patent is in demand this spring and it will carry through to fall.

"It is a basic. It tends to pick up colors you wear it with."

"Low heels are most popular for spring," said Wayne Craighead of Grammer Murphy's shoe department, 25 Village Circle in Midland.

The open toed wedge decorated with a bow is very stylish this year.

When it comes down to it, the "clothes you wear dictate the heel you will wear," said Jimmy Smith, owner of Jimmy Smith Shoes, 141 San Miguel Square.

Espadrilles are strong in his store this year whether in a solid canvas or stripes, he said.

Loafers are attracting a lot of attention this spring, but there are not any new developments on the men's shoe scene this season, say Midland's shoe industry experts.

There is a lack of imagination in men's shoe styles, Pryor said, but the boot trend has disappeared and men are turning to traditional styles.

At Dillard's, penny loafers, top siders and boat shoes are the styles men are asking for, said Matthews. "We are not selling many boots."

Topsiders and penny-loafers are the only styles in men's fashions that are in demand now, said Freeman.

Except for a slight drop in price, said Freeman, "things have not changed a whole lot in men's shoes."

Men's stockings now a boost to old suits

Now, says Wayne Duggins, the only full-time sock designer in the United States, men like to browse through the sock department to pick out their own clocked, embroidered, herringboned, striped and checked hosiery.

And not only that, they may choose from mohair, cashmere, silk, wool and cotton in addition to the nylon standards. Duggins, a soft-spoken North Carolinian who works for Burlington Mills and divides his time between his Asheboro, N.C., home and New York, says men's hosiery has finally found status as a fashion accessory rather than a boring necessity.

Since the basic sock is about as comfortable and wearable as you can get, excitement is achieved through colors, blends, textures, fashion designs and new features such as sport socks with a support construction and odor control additives.

"Men are also looking at a new shirt and tie and some great socks to liven up a tired suit and to give themselves a lift," Duggins said.

Since he is constantly designing and testing footwear, Duggins said, he never has less than 100 pairs on hand. "My wife goes through and gives them away about three times a year."

Depending on income, a man can pay anywhere from a couple of dollars for standard nylon to $75 per pair for pure cashmere. Duggins warns against the latter, saying it should be mixed with stretch nylon to give it durability.

As for color, the standards will be joined by teal blue, raspberry, browned golds and a great many novelty patterns for casual wear. He is particularly fond of a wool argyle with a split diamond which has a very country classic look and was borrowed from an old Scottish pattern.

'Bold and clean simplicity' glistens in Midland area

By DIANE BOOTH
Lifestyle Writer

For those who shop around for unique earrings and stylish watches to complement wardrobes, three specialty shops in the Midland area offer jewelry with originality.

The most sought-after items this spring, he said, are colored stones such as sapphires, rubies and emeralds in all shapes.

"Fashion is our utmost consideration," Majors said, "but our nature is to be conservative amnd purchase jewelry which will end up as heirlooms and will not go out of style.

The '20s look predominates this year's jewelry fashions, Majors said. Large button-type earrings and art deco pieces are big this season. Sapphires and rubies have an edge this year, he said.

In 1983, he said, people are looking for quality more than quantity. Larger stones are in demand instead of cluster arrangements.

The popularity of pearls has subsided since last season.

This year's hair and clothing styles make earrings and bracelets important accessories, Majors said. Diamond earrings as well as malachite and black onyx and coral designs are popular as are large button earrings.

Any earring that fits up on the ear is stylish, Majors said. Dangle diamond earrings are also making a comeback. Champagne or yellow-colored diamonds are big this year.

Heavy gold bracelets are in vogue in the wide cuff look and in faceted gold designs. Heavy textured bracelets are "a must for every spring and summer wardrobe."

Ladies watch designs are also slim and are returning to stone dials such as malachite and onyx.

Watch strap designs include textured bracelets and diamond designs. They are regaining popularity, Majors said, because of the trend toward dressing up with ruffles and pleats.

Cuff links are the strongest selling items in men's jewelry. Majors carries oynx, carnelian and lapis cuff links made in France and Germany. A matching ring completes the set.

The cuff links ring set is popular due to more formal and dashing men's suit styles, Majors said.

Monogrammed blazer buttons in 14 or 18 karat gold are a hit this spring and monogrammed acessories such as belt buckles are also popular becasue of renewed interest in alligator belts.

Customers in Majors' stores are mostly people who know fine quality and appreciate fashions and unusual designs. "They will not compromise on quality."

Tailoring is the key to men's and women's jewelry fashions at Kruger's, according to Tom Domer, manager, 15 Dellwood Plaza and 3303 Midland and Permian Mall, Odessa.

Diamonds are as popular as ever for necklaces and amethyst beads are a very unusual accompaniment to many fashion choices, he said.

Pearls are holding their own this season, Domer said, and go with just about any outfit. Multi-strand pearls and single-strand pearls are fashionable and the pastel colored strands are attractive with spring pastels.

Lots of color is the vogue for rings, Domer said. Rubies, emeralds, sapphires and diamonds may be combined to add a burst of color to a woman's hand.

Neck pieces with large stones are also fashionable this season. For instance, Domer carries a heavy gold chain necklace adorned with a large cabachon-cut turquoise stone.

A gold nugget is worth more than its weight in gold, according to Jo Ann Ramirez, owner of the Gold Pan in Odessa, who, after living in Anchorage, Alaska for seven years, uses gold nuggets mined from glacial streams in Alaska and the Yukon.

The gold nuggets are rare, she said, since less than one percent of the world's discoveries are in nugget form. "A one ounce nugget is more rare than a five carat diamond."

The nuggets are nearly pure gold. They contain slight traces of silver, platinum or copper. Assay value is generally between 21 and 22 karats. This is more pure than the gold normally used in the very finest jewelry, Ramirez said.

Because of the increasing scarcity of gold nuggets, she said, authentic gold nuggets will comntinue to increase in value at a greater rate than any other gold form.

Dress up wardrobe with accessories

Copley News Service

Pantyhose, says fashion consultant Sandy Hill, have come of age as a fashion staple.

They are now a definite accessory, along with belts, scarves, hats, jewelry and gloves, all the little items which help finish off a look. And Hill, 27, a former editor at Mademoiselle and Bride magazines, has figured out just how to use these accessories wisely.

The basic rule for accessories is to focus on one important thing at a time, Hill says, "to keep the focus going to one area rather than all over the place. Pantyhose must either coordinate to the outfit or contrast highly for impact. Nude or suntan pantyhose just won't do it because they don't continue the line of color of an outfit.

"The rule is bright legs with bright dresses, white with black, black with black. Shoes now come in all heel heights, the general rule being the shorter the skirt, the flatter the heel. For an interesting look, mix texture in shoes (suedes, combinations of reptile and leather) with texture (opaques, laces, stripes, patterns) in pantyhose."

Hill gets her ideas, she explained, from attending the haute couture collection showings in Paris and New York and from traveling. Accessories, she said, are a quick, economical way for women to update their wardrobes, especially during these recessionary times when saving money is as important as looking good. She advises buying a basic dress in a solid color such as black or red, then dressing it up or down with accessories.

Copley News Service

Along with spring's usual emphasis on colorful bead, stone and enamel jewelry, gold takes on a fresh look, and a favorite from the past — platinum — returns, the Jewelry Industry Council reports.

The chain look, which has long been a fashion favorite, shows up in several different and new designs. Links are much larger, and are seen in circles as well as ovals. In smaller links, chains are interspersed with colored beads and stones in station effects, often with two or three different colors used.

New wider-band bracelets and choker-length necklaces in gold and gold-filled jewelry effect a mesh look for textured interest. Gold is often paired with silver and even in some of the newer watches, with steel.

Midland clothier John Philbeck models his international award-winning design — a three-piece suit he custom tailored for himself. Philbeck's of Midland is a business which features only custom designed clothing of fine fabrics from around the world.

How a man "packages" himself can weigh heavily — for or against him — in the competition for a job or a promotion. For the young man with his eye on the executive suite, he is advised to invest in "blue chip" clothes.

Women do the shopping for most of men's clothing

BY DAVID L. FORREST
Lifestyle Writer

Women who shop for men purchase half or more of the male apparel bought in many Midland's clothing shops, area merchants say.

Three out of seven men's wear retailers say the majority of their customers — as much as 80 percent — buying men's clothing are female. Four out of the seven say about half of their men's wear sales are to women.

"Most men don't have the time to shop," said Joe Golding, owner of Golding's. "Women love to shop."

Women may even have a better idea of what sizes their husbands wear than do the men themselves, Golding said. For example, most men do not know their own sleeve length or collar size, he said, "but I bet if you ask their wives, they'll know."

A man's age makes a considerable difference in whether or not he shops for himself, according to Golding.

"Up to age 35, the guy buys almost everything. Over 35, women buy almost everything," he said.

"A lot of the older men are professionals who don't have time to come in and shop," Snyder said. Men under 35, he said, have "a lot stronger opinions on what they will or will not wear" and so they "make the time" to shop.

However, another men's clothing consultant, Lee Goodyear of Desmond's, said professionals and executives tend to shop for themselves, while the wives of men in other types of jobs usually buy their husbands' clothes.

A woman who selects her husband's clothing may often have different color preferences than the man and it can affect what is purchased.

Snyder said that women often come in Sakowitz to buy suits in different colors than their husbands normally wear to help expand the men's wardrobes.

Some women, however, have a tendency to pick colors they "just happen to like," rather than the shades that might look best on their husband, according to Mike Kennedy of Bernie Franks Limited.

While women may not always make the same clothing choices a man might, most of the area retailers agreed that female shoppers generally do have a good overall fashion awareness.

Gene Bartus, owner of Gene Bartus Fine Menswear said, "They know their clothing."

Dressing for success for the executive suite

While appearance isn't everything, our society set considerable store on it. And just as manufacturers spend fortunes packaging a product to make sure it will sell, how a man puts himself together, how he "packages" himself, can weigh havily - for or against him - in the competition for a job, a promotion, an invitiation to a party or the chance to kiss a pretty woman.

With a limited budget a young man who has his eye on the executive suite would be wise to invest in "blue chip" clothes. A well-cut conservative suit in the best fabric he can afford, with no visible signs of when it was purchased - such as too wide or narrow lapels - can serve the owner for years with no indiciation of aage or obsolescence. A well-cut tweed jacket, for example, is ageless and always in style. A navy blazer and gray flannel trousers will serve him well at cocktail parties or dinner at the boss's country club.

Well-shined shoes, dark hose, neat buttoned-down-collar shirts, ties (on the narrow side this year) in regimental stripes or discreet small patterns, plain leather belts and no jewelry except a watch establish him as a man of good taste.

Leisure wear - or weekend wear, as it is now called - allows for more self-expression. Even so, it's wise to excercise restraint and stick with conservative tennis whites, khaki poplins and near t-shirts, an "in" look everywhere

Whoever said appearances can be deceiving was right. If you look successful, people will think you are successful.

Suggestions offered for men's shopping

Copley News Service

Men often can't seem to buy clothes without consulting women, observes the president of a large men's discount clothing chain were over half the shoppers are women.

— Look at your man's physique. Is he short and stocky? Tall and thin? A large man should rely upon deeper, darker tones and subdued patterns to appear taller and slimmer.

— Decide where the suit will be worn.

suit, Anderson advises, it's important to remember his coat size, waist measurement and height. Often, salespeople can determine a man's suit size by height and weight alone.

— Consider whether traditional or conservative dress is appropriate. Many bankers, brokers, lawyers and other corporate executives require traditional suits. Tailored padded-shouldered, three-piece pinstripe or solid suits in dark colors — navy, gray or charcoal — are most appropriate for conservative dressers.

— Is he sporty? Colors for the sporty dresser vary. Most often, they include brown, tan, gray and navy. Soft plaids and brighter stripes in textured fabrics are often excellent choices.

— Is he high-fashion? Does he follow contemporary fashion trends? Today's fashion-conscious male wears suits with padded shoulders in silk, linen or textured fabrics.

— Check the quality of all garments. Inspect the fabric. Does it feel firm in your hand? In more expensive garments, fabric has a good "feel" to it. Check the lining. Has it been sewn properly? Does it lie flat and neat? When buying a suit, check the collar to ensure that it lies flat and doesn't curl up.

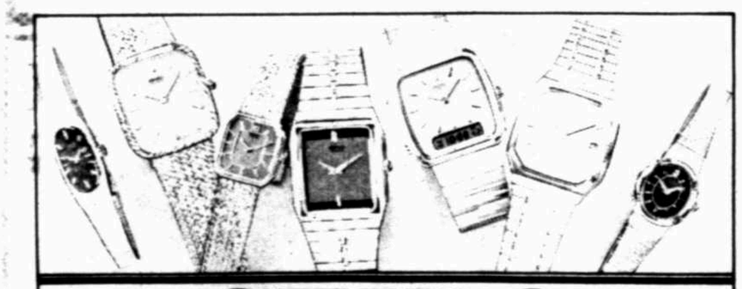

— Check the store's return policy. Can the man return or exchange something he doesn't like? Never have anything altered in advance since most stores won't exchange it for an unaltered garment.

Review his wardrobe periodically. Suggest he donate outdated garments to charity. Find styles to flatter him and reflect his personality. Choose items that can be coordinated easily.

Designers cash in on fitness boom

Copley News Service

Come on now, admit it. Half the reason you signed up for that aerobics class or that jazz dancing session was so you could wear all those colorful new exercise outfits.

And who can blame you? Designers are cashing in on the fitness boom with collections of leotards, tights and leg warmers that make the classic black and ballet-pink combination look like a moth among butterflies.

Women who never pumped iron in their lives (unless it was back and forth across an ironing board) are slipping into striped tank suits and signing up at the local gym.

Lou Rawls and George Benson are becoming cult heroes as scores of women kick and bend to rousing jazz strains. And in supermarkets, leg warmers are beginning to outnumber sweat pants.

It hasn't always been that way. Lucy Marlow, a dancer who teaches fitness classes, remembers when ballerinas used the cutoff legs from thermal underwear as leg warmers. If anything, she says, serious ballerinas dress as drably as possible so as not to attract the attention of hypercritical ballet coaches.

But Marlow's been won over to wearing eye-opening outfits to her classes — all black with a red garter, or a nautical red, white and blue are two of her favorites.

"It's fun," she says simply, "and it gives us all a special lift, especially at the 6:30 a.m. classes."

"These designers have gone berserk not only with cut, but with color," says Martha Laham, fitness director at a health club. "There are all kinds of stripes, pastels and even abstract designs that are possible now because of the advances made in cotton Lycra."

The phenomenon is spilling over from dance and body wear into active wear, says Laham. Designers are coming up with tap shorts, dancer shorts, short flippy skirts with bubbly tops, all coordinated and worn as cover-ups for the leotards.

This dance wear is not something the struggling dancer living in a loft apartment could afford. Leotards run between $20 and $40, tights around $10 and leg warmers from $15 to $22.

But Marlow asserts that keeping fit in style doesn't have to cost a well-toned arm and a muscular leg.

"I make my own headbands out of bits of ribbon, and I find T-shirts on sale that I can wear with tights. People think I come in with a new outfit every day, but that's not so. I mix and match bright colors and change things around."

Unfortunately, men don't have quite so many options.

"Men won't wear anything but jogging shorts and T-shirts," says Laham. "But they have been showing some interest in ripstop."

The lightweight material is similar to parachute fabric and is popular in colorful shorts and sweat suits. Blocks of bright color such as khaki, red and white or gray-white and yellow give the clothes their appeal.

But the fleece warm-up suit still prevails as the active wear choice for men.

Leotards: New, bright, stretchy fashion look

Copley News Service

Having stepped out of the gym and onto the fashion runway, body wear (often called action wear or dance wear) is blossoming and now encompasses everything from variations of leotards and tights to a unitard, a one-piece neck-to-ankle covering.

Formerly only available in dark colors or pink and white for ballerinas, such garments are blooming with vivid colors, stripes, prints, polka dots, ruffles and even hand-painted roses.

There are bright and muted stripes (broad or narrow) worked into longer sleeves with V-neck leotards. There are skimpy tank-topped leotards in colorful polka dots, stripes or even zebra prints. A bit heavier are leotards and pants made from cotton-blend sweat shirt fabrics which often come in gray or blue or burgundy stripes.

Some of the leotards feature miniskirts or headbands to match, and most styles come with coordinating pants, leg warmers, wrap skirts or shorts.

But in all lines, the big news is the new cotton-polyester-Lycra blend fabric (46 percent cotton, 46 percent polyester and 8 percent stretchy cotton-Lycra) which gives flexibility, stretch and more comfort and coolness than the all-nylon leotards and tights that formerly sewed up the dance-wear clothes market.

The explosion in dance-wear styles and colors began several years ago, according to Laura Birdsall of Albert's, one of a chain of California stores selling leotards, tights and lots of accessories.

"We noticed leotards hitting the streets then worn with skirts or pants," she says. "The beauty of it is that they're so versatile. You can wear leotards for swimming, for exercising or out on the street. That makes it nice."

The best-selling colors and prints at her store, she says, are bright purple, turquoise combinations of colors in broad stripes, polka dots and some prints such as tiny stars or contemporary op-art prints. Shiny fabrics such as Danskin's new "Ritstop, almost a wet leather look," will be popular next fall, she predicts.

Styles for mothers-to-be in step with new fashion

Copley News Service

Pregnancy is a special time for a woman. And, thanks to modern fashion designers, today's mother-to-be can stay in step with fashion. Tent dresses and shapeless smocks have been replaced by feminine, stylish clothes for at home and on-the-job.

This spring, maternity fashions echo the popular trends. A tunic, dropped to the knee, makes a lovely flowing dress. Paired with filmy tunic pants (perfect for a growing figure), a tunic makes a long shirt.

And motherhood doesn't have to mean no visits to the pool or beach this spring. Ruffles add drama when they are strategically placed at a strapless top. And specially designed maternity swimsuits provide proper support as well as allowing the sun worshipper to sport a glowing tan.

Maternity fashions are available for every woman, from working wear for the woman who chooses to combine a career with motherhood, to nighttime creations to flatter the full figure.

Fabrics this spring are cool and refreshing, highlighting the naturals, reports Motherhood Maternity Boutiques. Bottom-weights are lighter for spring, including tissue-weight poplins, lightweight denims and chintzed cotton blends. Linen is the favorite choice, blended or on its own.

Checks, cubes and stripes lead the display of new patterns. And contrasting insets, shirring and edgings provide fashion interest. Geometrics also make the fashion scene for spring, for a futuristic approach to dressing.

'Signature hairstyles' belong to few famous persons

CHICAGO (AP) — Throughout history, only a few women have made "headlines" with signature hairstyles that millions rushed to copy, a national group of professional hair stylists points out.

The Helene Curtis Guild of Professional Hairstylists, which has presented the Ten Best Coiffured Women Awards each year since 1958, has pinpointed several signature hairstyles that have turned heads around the world.

What made Bo Derek famous as a result of the movie, "10," for instance, was not just her figure, but the way she wore her hair. The 300 cornrow braids created a hair fashion sensation that swept the country and helped make Bo an overnight star.

The most recent trendsetter was Lady Diana's peekaboo trim that became known as the "Lady Di" cut. The softly layered style created by her London hairdresser gave "shy Di" the most sought-after look of 1981.

Spring styles show tiny waistline

Hearst Feature Service

Spring fashion fever isn't something that can be cured by taking two aspirin and calling the doctor in the morning. The symptoms probably could be minimized, however, by selecting one black and/or white ensemble, then throwing in a couple of pretty pink or blue pastel dresses, adding a short cocktail gown trimmed with ruffles or lace and finally putting a belt on the place where it's going to hurt the worst this spring: the waistline.

If there is one trend that is emphatically underscored, it is that the waistline is back, whether you want it to be or not. Designers have zeroed in on the waist in just about every way possible, including tucking garments so they cling close to the midriff and belting them with such a vengeance that the belt has become the single most important accessory of the season.

Some of the fashion experts say it's because American women are on a fitness binge. They point out with glee that we are collectively getting trim enough to wear garments that nip us at the waist — such as the peplum jacket with its flare at the hipline — cling to our not-too-rounded hips and narrow in at the hemline, in some cases so much that we have to take mincing steps or not walk at all. To be truthful, however, many of the tighter skirts are relieved by open slits or slits closed with buttons.

So if you don't have a nice, trim waist, this is going to be a painful spring — emotionally and physically — as you try to find your midsection underneath all those rolls of, well, skin.

But take heart. While the boldly defined waist is THE silhouette for the first half of 1983, there are some garments that don't fit all that close or that are made of fluid fabrics that suggest more room than is actually there.

WHILE SKIRTS for the most part are narrow, there are some pleats, and in both evening and more casual clothing, some full, floating skirts for those who don't want to glue themselves into a pipestem slim skirt.

As for jackets, cropped tops and tunics, look for an Asian influence which is best described as clean, unadorned and architecturally constructed. You can spot the look if the garment has big square kimono sleeves, long or short.

In eveningwear, the silhouette is either sirenslinky, reminiscent of the days when Lauren Bacall and Rita Hayworth were draped in sexy black garments, or romantic enough to suggest sultry, mint julip-filled afternoons on antebellum porches somewhere in the South.

The short gown, romantically bedecked with ruffles or bordered with lace and as demure as a Victorian spinster, has definitely come into its own. Yes, there are long gowns, some of them true ballgowns with floating skirts and others as close-fitting as streetwear, but if you're going to be with it, then you're probably going to try one of the short lengths.

Daytime skirt lengths hover somewhere around the knee, but you can expect to see shorter and longer styles. Be forewarned — the miniskirt is back, but generally it's worn with tights or opaque stockings so you don't see as much skin as back in the '60s.

And you'll see plenty of skin when you choose your swimsuit — although one woman, after checking out this year's suits, suggested they should be called "seesuits," since they don't look like anything you could swim in and are obviously for tanning or attracting the opposite sex.

THIS YEAR'S SUIT is the maillot (pronounced "mayo"), a one-piece swimsuit that's distinguished by being cut up the sides at the bottom. How high does the cut go? Let's just say that some bikinis in the past showed less of a woman's thigh, and whatever else she has to show. Look for black to be the dominant color in swimsuits, just as it is in streetwear.

Maybe it's a sign of the grim economic times, since spring generally brings out the sunnier shades, but black and white, often coupled together, are the hues that you'll see most often in other than casual clothing or sportswear.

Somehow the black doesn't look as somber, maybe because it sometimes is combined with other shades such as shocking pink, turquoise, flame red and slick yellow. When geometrically combined in stripes, blocks, color bars and banded edges, it's called color blocking and it's definitely the "pattern" to look for when you shop. But don't ignore polka dots, madras plaids, checks — especially the big windowpane checks — and the pretty romantic florals. And when you must have color, there are some wonderful technicolor brights in jade, magenta, emerald and red.

In pastels, you'll see mint, pale ice blue, peach, vanilla and lilac. There are neutrals, as well, with taupe still hanging in there, along with charcoal gray, tobacco brown and almond.

You can take your color in almost any fabric, but the emphasis is on natural fibers such as cotton and linen, which are seasonless and contribute to the non-bulky look this spring.

The linen is sheer or crisp, the organza floaty and fresh, the gabardine lightweight and functional. Silk, jersey, satin, charmeuse, cotton, broadcloth and poplin — you can't go wrong in selecting clothing made of these fabrics.

DENIM HAS BEEN updated in what the manufacturers call "stone-washed," a process that creates a well-worn look from the day you take the garments from the store. So well accepted is the stone-washed denim becoming that it's being turned into everything from body-hugging jeans and pedal pushers to slim skirts and vests.

The jeans are often being worn with another of this year's distinctive silhouettes: the oversized shirt that's styled like a man's dress shirt but is big enough to sleep in, to belt, to go out for the weekend in or to just schlep around in.

But the big shirt as a casual-attire favorite is sure to get a run from the "sweats," which now, in dainty pinks, lavenders and the like, have definitely graduated from the gymnasium and playing fields to become one of America's favorite leisure-hour garments.

Sweatshirt material has been turned into shorts and skirts as well as the typical jogging pant, but any relationship to the stuff the athletes wear is purely unintentional. They're fun to wear, as are the full circle skirts, cropped tops, pedal pushers an shift dresses that herald the return of the '50s look.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am 14 and my boyfriend is 15, and our parents are good friends, so we see a lot of each other. Please don't think I'm a little slut, but I am getting very close to going all the way. I guess I am very passionate for my age, but I can't see anything wrong with kissing and hugging and touching if you feel like it. It's what it leads to that scares me. I am still a virgin (I think), and I intend to keep my virginity as long as possible.

I have read letters from your readers who said they actually got pregnant without going all the way, and that scares me. We have gone too far already, and we can't go back to holding hands now. I know I'm going too fast for my own good, and I feel guilty.

Give me a good lecture if you think it will help. — FOURTEEN AND ONLY HUMAN

DEAR FOURTEEN: You are wise and intelligent to recognize the seriousness of your predicament. You and your boyfriend should see less of each other, and then only in circumstances that will minimize the temptation. Too much togetherness often places a superhuman burden on young and fiery passions.

Your feelings are normal, but, unfortunately, at 14 you can't afford to fully express them.

DEAR ABBY: Please don't think I'm crazy, but I'm a 44-year-old woman who has been madly in love with a 25-year-old man for the last five months. J. has never been married, but I have been married three times. (Widowed once and divorced twice.) I have three grown children who accept our situation because they have never seen me so happy in all my life! Abby, I never knew what love was all about until I met this beautiful, sensitive, caring man. When we are out together, people look at us like we're a little weird. Why won't society accept us? If I were 25, and J. were 44, nobody would think a thing of it.

Do you think we can make a go of marriage? J. is kind and gentle, and as mature as a man of 50. Besides, he makes me happy. — SITTING ON TOP OF THE WORLD

DEAR SITTING: Be less concerned with what "society" thinks and more concerned with what each of you can bring to a marriage. Being madly in love for five months classifies you as "honeymooners." Your chances for making a go of marriage would be better if you tested your love with a long engagement.

By ERMA BOMBECK

I never have luck with having my picture taken. The one on my passport makes me look like I'm too sick to travel and the ones that appear in yearbooks all look like they were taken on a cot in the first aid room.

I guess that's why I never look upon getting my driver's license renewed as a chore. I look upon it as God's way of giving me a second chance to have a decent picture to carry around.

As the woman behind the counter cut my old driver's license in half and told me I could expect my new one within several days, I couldn't help but smile. I was saying goodbye to a picture that made me look like a 75-year-old woman who had just been told by her obstetrician that she is about to make medical history.

Yesterday, the smile left my lips. My new driver's license arrived. For the next three years (156 weeks, 1095 days, 26,280 hours) I have a picture for identification that makes me look like John Houseman with a migraine.

My husband looked at it and said, "What did they ask you to do to make you look like that?"

Actually, I don't know what I expected. People who snap your picture are all graduates of the same school of photography my husband attended: "The Five-Second Click and Advance" . . . no posing, no waiting. I swear I've seen my husband spend a day and a half adjusting his setting, his focus and his light meter over a diseased ground squirrel with its tail up. I fly in three kids from all over the country, clean them up, pose them in front of the Christmas tree for a once-in-a-lifetime picture

I had occasion to use my driver's license as an I.D. in the store the other day to cash a check. She looked at it and then at me. "I used to get these," she said, "but no more."

"What did you do?" I asked.

"I take a cab. Everywhere!"

Spring hairstyles compliment spring fashions

Copley News Service

In spring, a woman's fancy turns to fashion, and this spring, what a lot of fashion there is! Long skirts and minis, wide belts or blousons, culottes or crinolines — almost any look you want, from preppy to femme fatale.

There's no longer just one style that you simply have to have, in your clothing or your choice of hairdo, so why not try them all? You don't have to spend a fortune — just go easy on the fashions and opt for the fashion accessories.

Wrap the waist of last year's shirt dress with a wide, wide belt or length of fabric; add a trendy lace collar to your favorite sweater or blouse; tie a floppy poet's bow under the collar of a basic white shirt. It's the little touches that count in pulling a look together.

One of the easiest ways to show you're in style is with the right hairdo. Short hair is gaining, but don't do anything drastic, advise the experts at Goody, a major manufacturer of hair accessories. Just roll your long hair up in the newest look from Paris: the chignon or French roll. Fluff up the front and top of your hair and you'll have a short look without resorting to scissors. Chignon foundations, chignon pins and roll foundations make the styles easy to achieve.

If you've cut your hair and regret it, or just yearn now and then for a long, romantic look for spring's pretty dressed-up styles, here's a trick: use fashion combs to catch up the hair at the nape of your neck, letting a few wisps escape. Your breezy short cut will be transformed into a chic upswept style.

Designers are showing hair accented with boldly colorful accessories, and there are dozens to choose from to update any outfit. Soften work-tailored suits or the new tuxedo looks by tying your hair back at the nape with matching hair ribbons, or one of the adorable and easy-to-use new ponytail holders accented with pom-poms, tassels or colorful cubes.

If you'd like to tame your perm to compliment some of the newly fitted styles, pull the sides back with sleek barrettes in tortoise-look or the new rainbow shades.

Even your athletic clothes need some accessorizing. While you're out there getting in shape for the new spring season, keep your hair off your face prettily with headbands or pull it up into two ponytails and with extra-thick, comfortable braided elastic ponytail holders.

A new season is the perfect cue for a new hairstyle, so when your fancy turns to fashion, turn to hair accessories — and your own ingenuity.

Pleats not permanent: Require special care

Copley News Service

Numerous pleated and fluted garments are available for your spring wardrobe. But as you look at all the pleated designs, which can you depend on to give you the desired service as you wear and care for the garment?

Clothing sold as "permanently pleated" does not really carry a "forever" promise. For pleats to be permanent, they would actually have to be sewn in, says the International Fabricare Institute, the worldwide association of launderers and dry cleaners.

IFI suggests you check the fiber content tags of new clothes before you buy. Many of the natural fibers, such as silk, wool, cotton and rayon, with their very limited ability to hold creases, are used in pleated garments today. But combined with a high percentage of synthetic fiber, these blends will give you better pleats.

Special finishes can be applied to the fabric to give it greater pleat retention. However, the pleats on a soft, loosely woven wool, sheer rayon or silk will have a tendency to open up in wear alone. Don't expect sharpness in pleats over the long run in outfits made of these elegant materials.

1. Look for high percentages of synthetic fibers on the hangtags or assurances that the pleated material has been treated with a special finish that will encourage pleat retention.

2. Examine for bias cut of sheer fabrics carefully. They have a tendency to distort, with lines becoming uneven during wear-and-care procedures. The developing distortions and unevenness cannot be corrected easily.

3. Consider that a loss in pleats can develop in wear and care from contact with body heat and moisture or from water used to remove a beverage or food stain.

4. Remember to wear your pleated garment with care. Trust it to your professional cleaner to maintain its sharp appearance.

Italian family of designers specialize in fine jewelry

Copley News Service

— Design is man's great contribution toward changing reality.

— Taste cannot be defined, but it can be cultivated.

— Italians are geniuses in creating a man-made environment, but they don't know how to behave as a society.

— Americans have the capacity of developing their own tremendously creative potential, and they're good at attracting people of genius and quality from other countries.

— The roots of the future are in the past; that's why history is so important.

Thus speaks Gianni Bulgari of Rome, an Italian businessman best known as one of the three grandsons of Sotiro Bulgari, a Greek immigrant who, a century ago, founded the House of Bulgari, a jewelry firm known worldwide.

Today "Bulgari" (pronounced BULL-garr-e) is synonymous internationally with fairly ornate, high-quality gold chain and coin jewelry sold in only five shops throughout the world.

The company is run by Sotiro's three grandsons: Gianni, in charge of international corporate development; Nicola, who handles business in the Americas; and Paolo, who manages the European operation.

"Italians have the genius of creating a man-made environment," said Bulgari. "They don't know how to behave as a society, these Italians, but they are recognized today for their contribution in shaping things, in enjoying the environment."

But even though they design well in Italy, Bulgari said, that the taste behind the design cannot be defined.

"If taste could be defined, then it would be at the mercy of everyone. But you can develop taste if you have a strong interest in developing it. To do so, you will have to pursue your own natural interests and add to your cultural information. You will be more or less successful depending on your own natural resources."

Designing clothing and jewelry is vastly different, Bulgari said, because clothing designers take relatively inexpensive raw materials and create something which eventually can be thrown away. Jewelry, however, is not a throw-away item, but designed to last.

Bulgari and his brothers work with a team of designers in Italy to create Bulgari jewelry. First a sketch is made, then worked in a wax or clay model before the final piece is made.

A series of gold-ringed historical coins on heavy neck chains made by Bulgari in the early 1970s is considered to be the firm's "signature," he said, but the company is coming out with many other new designs. One of the newest is a "collapsible ring," a ring made of several interlocked arcs which flattens when taken from the finger. Other new pieces of jewelry combine precious stones and heavy gold chains in unusual designs.

(The only piece of Bulgari jewelry Gianni himself wears is a Bulgari watch.)

Bulgari jewelry ranges in price from "million-dollar items, sold primarily in the Middle East, to hundred-dollar items, sold in the Western countries," Bulgari said.

Getting that jewelry to them is part of the business. The main problem of international commerce, he said, is management; finding the right person to run the business on a day-by-day basis. Another problem internationally is guarding against copyists.

"It is difficult to defend yourself. Although I think I can tell one of our pieces, there is no sure way to tell a copy from an original. So the only way to proceed is to be far ahead of the copiers in your designs."

Denim goes everywhere

Western denim jackets have been popular since the 1950s. The cowboy jacket was part of the jeans uniform of young people who created the counterculture.

Now the denim jacket has returned, but this time around it has more status. Men and women are wearing denim jackets as a versatile fashion accessory. And they are wearing it from Paris to Los Angeles, from prep school to city streets.

On college campuses, jean jackets are worn by young men and women for a cleaner countercultural look. Some women use denim jackets over tuxedo shirts and bow ties and reverse silhouette corduroy jeans for a dressed-down, dress-up look. Men are wearing denim jackets as an alternative to sports coats for a dressed-down business look that is crisp but casual.

To achieve the desired worn appearance, Wrangler Westernwear experts advise washing a new jacket about three times prior to wearing.

Copley News Service

Fashion is more than the sum of its parts. The total look depends on the panache — the verve — with which the parts are put together. Whether you're a silk shirt and gray flannel type, a high-fashion buff or a somewhere-in-between middle-of-the-roader, the accessories you choose for your suit, little "black nothing" or your pants and shirt give what you wear a fashion signature that is distinctively yours.

Today, with the price of clothing continuing to skyrocket, more and more women are relying on accessories to enliven and extend their wardrobes. Shoes with miniature incurving French heels, a patchwork quilt handbag, a black silk bow tie worn next to the skin under a shirt, a super scarf that doubles as a wrap, gloves in a vivid color, a pair of thin-line New Look sunglasses — these are some of the accents that zap up a wardrobe.

If your budget's in a bind and won't stretch to accommodate a suit in the new tender violet, a lavender belt and sunglasses rimmed in mauve will give last year's white suit this year's look. Want to give your navy blue blazer a new lease on life? Team it with a cherry red shirt and sunglasses with matching red cat's-eye frames that are all the rage in Paris.

When it comes to above-the-neck accessories, the new breed of sunglasses has been stealing a march on costume jewelry, according to the folks at Corning optics. You can't take your necklace off and tap it on the table to emphasize a point or make a dramatic gesture with your earrings. What's more, with several pairs of sunglasses at your disposal, you need never experience an identity crisis. You can switch from looking (and feeling like) a competent executive to looking as mysterious and alluring as the heroine of a spy movie.

In psychiatric jargon, consciously assuming a new identity is known as role-playing. Psychotherapist Thomas Nissley, director of the Ridgelea Institute in Stamford, Conn., encourages his patients to "try on" new roles as part of their therapy.

He says: "Role-playing is the best way to get people to move out of a 'stuck place' in their personalities. I encourage my patients to imagine themselves as somebody else, somebody they'd like to be. As they go through the motions, feel the feelings and think the thoughts, they discover they're not stuck — they have options. Role-playing is a way of giving yourself permission to let another facet of your personality surface."

That's what sunglasses, which range from far-out and sexy to mysterious and sultry, can help you do. And sun-sensitive lenses can add to your mysterious image. They are, says a Chameleon Sunglasses designer, intended to "give you a new outlook on life." Try them on for size. But also try them to give some new and fascinating aspects of your personality a chance to emerge.

Knowledge of terms often dollar-stretching device

Copley News Service

Everyone wants to save money, especially considering the ever-increasing cost of new clothing. Shopping at discount stores and factory outlets can really make a difference in savings, but discount shopping can end up costing you more if you don't know what to look for.

What does it mean when a blouse is marked "imperfect?" Does a "second" shirt have a major flaw that you don't notice at first glance? "Irregular," "distressed" and "damaged" are some other common names for inferior merchandise.

It pays to know what those names mean. The following explanations of some of the most common classifications will give you a head start the next time you go shopping with the intention of saving a fistful of dollars.

IRREGULAR OR IMPERFECT — This refers to a non-perfect article with a minor flaw which rarely affects wearability. A seam may be double-stitched, a label could be placed incorrectly in a pair of shoes, buttons on a blouse may be slightly off. These flaws won't affect the garment and can be easily corrected at home.

If you shop for irregulars in a first-quality store, the imperfections will be slighter than if you shop in a second-rate store. Other examples of irregular or imperfect flaws to look for include: an irregularity in the crossweave of the fabric, an emblem in the wrong place, irregular hemlines, missing buttons, uneven zippers and different sleeve lengths on the same garment.

SECOND — A definite flaw, such as a slub or rough spot, can mar the look as well as the wearability of a garment marked "second." Sometimes a second will be only slightly imperfect, but anything marked "third" or "reject" is usually not worth the savings.

RETURNED — Clothing is returned to manufacturers or stores for many reasons, from incorrect sizes to recognizable flaws. Usually, returns are a good bargain. Check them carefully.

DAMAGED — A hole, tear, grease spot, stain or run will cause a garment to be marked "damaged." Sometimes these flaws are repairable, but are often too drastic to be worth the trouble.

DISTRESSED — Out-of-season or out-of-style clothing is often marked "distressed." This is a great way to save money if you can wear the garment during the next season, or if you are handy with a needle and thread.

Home sewing updates wardrobe

Copley News Service

Keeping up with fashion doesn't always require large sums of money or long hours at a sewing machine. One of the prettiest, easiest and least expensive ways to brighten up your wardrobe is with the addition of ribbons and trim.

By stitching ribbon on a tailored pantsuit, for example, you'll create a fashionable tuxedo look. In the same way, plain sweaters turn into expensive-looking originals by adding satin ribbons and bows.

MATERIALS: Preshrunk 100 percent polyester ribbons in any color, pattern or width desired. C.M. Offray ribbons, which have virtually no shrinkage, are recommended.

TUXEDO LOOK: Suggestion: use velvet ribbon on a flannel, tailored pantsuit. 1. Stitch ribbons along the seamlines, hem, collar and cuffs of the jacket. 2. Stitch ribbons along side seams of the trousers.

Another way to update your wardrobe is to convert outdated culottes into a fashionable slim skirt. Follow these simple directions:

MATERIALS: Culottes or gaucho pants with full legs; sewing machine; matching thread; straight pins; tailor's chalk or felt-tip fabric marking pen; iron.

PREPARATION: 1. Rip crotch seam to about 9 inches below the waistline. If zipper is in center-front or center-back, rip crotch seam to one-half inch below bottom of zipper. 2. Reinforce seam to keep it from coming unstitched. 3. Take out hem.

BASTING: 1. Take off skirt. Mark new seamlines with fabric marking pen or tailor's chalk. 2. Re-pin with right sides together. 3. Baste. 4. Trim away excess fabric, but leave generous seam allowances.

STITCHING: 1. Gently press seams open. 2. Try on skirt again; make adjustments if necessary. 3. Machine-stitch seams. 4. Trim seams to five-eighths inch, and overcast. 5. Hem skirt. 6. Press all seams open.

Designer producing uniforms for nurses

Copley News Service

The princess of fashion — Diane Von Furstenberg — has added another fashion first with her new designer nurses' uniforms. The 11-item collection includes safari skirt, wrap skirt, classic pleated pants, V-neck jumper, tuxedo-look blouse and lab jacket — all in traditional, sparkling white.

Although many hospitals now allow colorful uniforms, most require the traditional white. And many nurses prefer the white uniform for its professional appearance. Patients need to have confidence in the competence of the medical staff attending them, and there is something about a white uniform that bespeaks calm, competent care.

Of course, easy care is a must for nurses' uniforms and Von Furstenberg has taken that into consideration. Her collection is cut from white cotton-polyester for fast washing and drying and durability. And the interchangeable separates make the collection a fashion plus as well as providing a variety of looks at an affordable price.

The designer uniforms cost slightly more than regular ($26 to $36) but are still within range of most budgets. And, of course, they sport the white-on-white DVF signature that is famous worldwide.

In addition to appearance and easy care, comfort is important to women who spend hours on their feet, often walking 10 miles per day on the job. In addition to those features, the Von Furstenberg uniforms are also extremely functional. Pockets are cut very deep and the uniforms allow bending and stretching with ease.

"I know nurses need blouses and dresses that don't have large, droopy sleeves," says Von Furstenberg. "They want pants and skirts in which they can easily move and bend. I have created designs that stand up to the rigorous demands of a demanding profession."

Women in white, carrying on the traditions of a demanding and satisfying profession, have a right to expect fashionable work clothes, claims the designer.

Proper care necessary for fine clothing

Copley News Service

Spring is in the air and, unfortunately, so are most fashion prices. Luckily, haberdashery styles — crisply tailored skirts, slacks and jackets with natty menswear accessories — are once again in vogue and perfect for the career woman. Worth paying a little more for, these classic menswear looks are smashing and enduring additions to a working wardrobe that really earns its keep.

Although men have come to expect fine tailoring, only recently, with the influx of traditional menswear makers branching out into women's apparel, have women been introduced to that kind of quality. And with the escalating costs of clothing, today's fashion- and budget-conscious woman is treating it as a long-term investment.

Sero Shirtmakers — manufacturers of fine men's shirts for 30 years — recently expanded their expertise to include a full line of shirts, blouses and sportswear for women. So who better to give advice on how to spot a well-made, high-quality garment that'll give you lots of fashion mileage.

Here are some tips from the experts at Sero to aid in your selection:

SEAMS: Turn the clothing inside out. All seams should be finished to prevent fraying and unraveling, and allow a smooth fit on the body. In addition, a well-made garment will have extra stitching at stress points.

COLLAR: Since this is the focal point of a shirt or a jacket, pay careful attention to the collar. With shirts: Does it button comfortably at the throat without gapping? A round- or pointed-collar shirt should lay flat; button-down shirts should roll softly in a generous curve. Jacket lapels should also lie flat, and notches should be cleanly stitched.

FIT: Good-fitting clothing should allow you to move comfortably. Hug yourself. If the garment stretches uncomfortably across your back, you probably need a larger size. Also, sleeves should be full enough so elbows can flex freely. Shirttails should be long enough to stay put in skirt or pant waistbands. And fabric shouldn't pull or pucker across the bustline.

FABRIC: When buying a plaid or striped blouse, make sure the design is sewn into the fabric, rather than simply "stamped" on. That way, it won't fade away with the wash water. On all garments, check that stripes, plaids or other designs are straight and matched at the seams. Pockets and plackets should line up, too.

BUTTONS: Usually the easiest way to spot an inferior garment, they should be evenly spaced and fit into button holes snugly enough so they won't pop open, yet easy enough to open and close. Give a slight tug. Are they sewn on well?

After you've made your selections, you'll want to ensure that they last many years by caring for them properly:

— Apply body lotions, deodorant, fragrance and makeup before dressing, and allow them to dry completely so they won't stain fabrics.

— If you stain your clothing, remove the stain as soon as possible — before it has a chance to set. And never iron a stained garment, as that's a sure way to make the stain permanent. If you soil your favorite blouse during dinner, remove it with some club soda.

— Wash or dry clean your clothes only as needed, since cleaning weakens the fabric. It isn't necessary to launder after each wearing.

— When hand- or machine-washing, turn your clothing inside out. That way the unseen inside will weather the normal wear-and-tear, rather than the visible outside.

— Stuffing your washer beyond the manufacturer's suggestion only defeats your purpose. ... Water has to move freely between garments to clean them thoroughly.

— If you're hand-washing, rinse until the water runs clear to eliminate all traces of soap. And press the water out rather than wringing, which can stretch a garment out of shape.

— Ironing is also hard on fabrics. Pull permanent-press shirts out of the dryer as soon as it stops spinning. You'll only have to touch up collars and plackets.

Spring sewing: Create your own fashion image

Copley News Service

Welcome spring! The joyous season of renewal.

This spring, you can create a wardrobe to carry you through those balmy days — shaping a new and better you.

You can create an entirely new image by taking advantage of the knowledge and experience and easy-to-follow patterns designed by the fashion leaders of the sewing world ... Butterick and Vogue.

Clothes for this spring are an exciting mix of soft, graceful lines reminiscent of a gentle afternoon breeze.

Colors on the horizon for spring include white — stark, startling and stunning — or combined with black for strong visual effects; black — alone or shown with exotic slashes of deep teal, purple, cobalt blue, magenta or red; and a range of very soft "chalkier" tones that could almost be described as washed-out colors — destined to be the new neutrals. Watch for pearl gray. Away from the brights and accents of the past comes a range of cool, acidulous colors: China blue, Parma violet, anise green and citron yellow.

Skirts for spring are long or short — whatever suits your individual style and taste, but remember to balance your clothing according to the design and your figure lines. Vogue and Butterick catalogs and magazines give expert guidance and direction, if you are a novice seamstress.

Popular new accessories include hand-knitted or crocheted belts and collars; glamorous, waist-defining and exciting hip-riding belts done in marvelous designs with silvery mesh cord, heavy cotton yarn or suedelike strips; charming, antique, one-of-a-kind crocheted collars that add a whimsical touch to your image.

Vogue Pattern 8621 is an example of soft and sophisticated lines, giving the opportunity to have a design which can be worn during the working day and right on into the evening hours when time doesn't permit a change of outfits.

Butterick Pattern 4764 brings asymmetrical lines into focus with an interesting, two-button closing for the jacket. Team the shoulder-padded jacket with slim-fitting pants, skirt and tops, and you have a stunning versatile, weekend-away wardrobe.

Butterick Pattern 4742 — the slinky "slip top" Little Black Dress that suits so many occasions in varied lives. Wear it with a long, sophisticated, silky, three-quarter jacket for an ultra-chic look, or a lively, cardigan-style jacket for a pungent note. Another interesting cover-up would be a soft, silky stole wrapped casually and pinned at your shoulder.

Copley News Service

If you work in a building in which the temperature seems to fluctuate minute by minute, planning your wardrobe can be a real problem. You can be too warm one minute and freezing to death the next.

Think jacket. Coordinating cover-ups can be worn or taken off, depending on the thermostat. So much more attractive than keeping an "old sweater" in the desk drawer to be whipped out when needed.

Temperature aside, planning a career wardrobe can still have its problems. You can't just buy haphazardly and hope something will go with something else. Begin with a basic suit or two and build from there.

Add blouses, scarves, belts and accessories to change the look. Then add two or three separate skirts to go with the blouses. Then a dress or two to be worn alone or with the jackets ... then slacks ... and so on. A properly built wardrobe will give you something to go with something every day of the week.

Shoes and bags should be quality and basic in color. A good leather handbag in a neutral tone will last forever.

How you dress says a lot about where you're going.

If you are beginning a new wardrobe, for whatever reason, start right. Attend a color analysis course to learn the best colors for you. I attended a "Color Me Beautiful" course and it has paid for itself a thousand times over.

When choosing your color course, be sure the instructor is qualified. Just reading a book and cutting up swatches does not make one an analyst. Also, be prepared to eliminate a lot of things from your closet. It becomes very difficult to wear anything that isn't your color.

Wardrobe 'capsule concept' practical

Copley News Service

Janet Wallach has been in the fashion industry for over 20 years — first as a designer and later as a fashion director. Her job requires frequent travel — up to 40 weeks per year. To keep her travel hassles to a minimum, Janet developed her "capsule concept" — a small, compact wardrobe that explodes into many different looks.

Busy women, from executives to housewives, have found that building a wardrobe on the capsule concept simplifies both their lives and their budgets.

Any woman can capsulize her wardrobe without buying all new clothes. The basics for building a separates wardrobe are simple: two jackets, plus three skirts, plus four blouses, plus two sweaters, plus one dress equal 48 outfits.

To capsulize a basic dress wardrobe: five dresses, plus two jackets equal 15 different looks.

To begin, a woman has to choose two basic colors such as red and black or navy and wine. Then, various combinations can be made, because all the pieces are coordinated. There are two simple rules to follow.

First, clothes must be coordinated in color, fabric and shape, so they are interchangeable. Second, only two principle colors may be used.

To get started, Wallach advises hanging all your clothes by color to discover what colors you wear most and what new combinations you can create. This gives you an idea of your individual style and the kind of clothing you like — prints or solids, for example. Study newspaper ads, fashion magazines and window displays to see what colors and textures you can use to update your wardrobe.

Positive image necessary for career

Copley News Service

A woman's conduct and appearance, even the perfume she wears, can sometimes have as much effect as her professional and corporate knowledge on how well she is accepted by her male peers and supervisors.

If a woman sports sheer chiffon and heady floral perfumes at board meetings, chances are she will not be taken very seriously. On the other hand, it's not necessary to wear a severe black suit and a cologne that smacks of after-shave lotion.

It's important for each woman to find and develop her own style that is somewhere between overt, helpless femininity and mannish behavior. The following tips from Charles of the Ritz are designed to do just that.

FRAGRANCE. Learn the subtle art of fragrance application, and remember that scent intensity should be less concentrated for day than for evening. After your morning shower, spray on a subtle cologne at pulse points only (inside wrists, behind knees, base of throat, crook of arm, behind ears). Hold the bottle about 8 inches away from your skin when you spray to produce a light, subtle scent.

Other ways to achieve a subtle scent include adding a drop or two of perfume to the water when you wash your delicate lingerie, and a spray of cologne on the ankles of your pantyhose.

SKIRTS. Stick to comfortable, easy-to-sit-in skirts. If you wear a slitted skirt and have to spend a great deal of time holding it closed, it can damage your image of composure. Drindl, gored or pleated skirts make it much easier to sit down, feel comfortable and look composed.

BLOUSES. If the lace from your lingerie shows through your blouse, it is too sheer. Add a vest, sweater or blazer to give you a new, tailored look. Silk or silk-look blouses are great for the office. They convey a confident, professional yet feminine feeling.

SWEATERS. If your boss doesn't wear a sweater, don't wear one. A key point to moving up the career ladder is dressing in the same style your boss does.

JACKETS. One jacket can coordinate with several skirts or pants, providing several different looks and pulling your whole fashion look together.

JEWELRY. A few good basic pieces go a long way. Accent the quality, not the quantity of your jewelry for work. A pair of gold earrings, a gold neck chain, tiny pearl earrings, a good watch — they all produce a feminine, attractive, businesslike appearance.

HOSIERY. Today's fashion looks range from textured tights to glittery pantyhose. Whatever your style, keep it in good taste and make sure you have no runs. Nothing will detract more quickly from your image than runs in your stockings. You don't want to reflect an uncaring, careless attitude about your dress or your work. Keep a spare pair of neutral pantyhose on hand for emergencies.

SHOES. Pay attention to run-down heels and toes — other people will. A little extra care, such as waterproofing leather shoes, goes a long way.

MAKEUP. Keep it simple and subtle. Use your makeup to enhance your good features. If you go out on the town directly from work, apply your evening makeup just before going out. Glittery eyeshadow and heavy eyeliner look out of place at work.

Follow these simple guidelines and you will be on your way up the career ladder. And remember, an easy way to assess your appearance for work is to ask yourself two questions: What are my professional goals? Does my image reflect them?

A GOOD USED CAR... MORE CAR FOR THE MONEY.

Year in and year out...cars depreciate in value. You've heard it. But it's not true! Cars only depreciate each year in price, not in value, because the next year's models have arrived.

There's a difference between price and value. Today's late model used cars, specially those that received good care, actually can give you as much value as a new one. When you can buy a good used car for thousands of dollars less than a new one...that's real value. Our reputation for offering good value for the money is your best assurance...buying your used car.

2. Up to $1000 DISCOUNTS

$75 to $1,000 Discounts On Prospector Option Packages.

Prospector option packages contain the kind of equipment truck buyers prefer. They are a tremendous value now during our Dodge Truck Prospector Days. Dollar savings depend, of course, on which pickup or Ramcharger and package you select.*

3. 11.9% Annual Percentage Rate Financing

With 11.9% financing, you could get significant savings over the course of your loan. The difference between 11.9% and a typical bank loan rate of 14.5% over a typical loan period can amount to a very healthy bonus.

69 Business Property, Office Warehouse Space for Rent

If you're presently renting retail or office space, you already know some of the disadvantages-frequent cost-of-living rent increases, leases that give the landlord all the advantages, costly sales overrides on your retail sales. In short, you're not in control.

From a pure economic standpoint, ownership beats renting. Consider these advantages:

- Your mortgage payments are fixed and not subject to escalation or overrides to a landlord.
- You receive tax deductions for interest and tax payments.
- You get a tax deduction for depreciation over the next 15 years.
- You have control over your space, and no one can cancel your lease.
- You can buy enough space to meet your future growth plans and lease the expansion area until it's needed.
- All maintenance and upkeep is furnished through the Owner's Association.
- Your real estate investment gains value.

In addition to all this, Mission Square is strategically located in one of the city's fastest growing areas; North Big Spring and Loop 250, just northeast of ClayDesta Plaza.

Mission Square is an ideal location for professionals, service businesses, and a variety of retails stores. Contact our office now, for a full color brochure and further details.
