Crude oil futures continue to drop

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures resumed their drop this morning after hectic trading Friday ended a week which saw prices skid to their lowest level in nearly two years.

Analysts said traders remained disturbed about the worldwide oil glut and an apparent lack of commitment within the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to cut production.

At noon (EDT), the October delivery contract for West Texas Intermediate stood at $13.91, down 27 cents from Friday's close.

"There is a great deal of bearish enthusiasm out there today," Anthony Annunziato, an energy trader for Shearson Lehman Hutton in Houston, said this morning.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the October contract for delivery of WTI fell 31 cents a barrel to $13.87 in the first hour of trading today. The contract recovered 4 cents during the first three hours of the day.

The near-month contract dropped 30 cents Friday to close at $14.18 after rising 32 cents on Thursday.

Longer-month contracts were falling faster than the October price this morning, which Annunziato called an unusual development. "The 'wet' barrels — soon to be produced to fulfill October delivery contracts — are stronger than the 'paper' barrels being traded for delivery next spring," he said. That implies that long-term price expectations are still weak.

Permian Basin crude purchasers had not reacted to the latest price drop by midmorning, holding the line at $14, but one buyers representative said that the posting wouldn't hold for long if the spot market stays below the $14 mark.

There does not seem to be anything "of serious consequence" driving the market, which appears to be "looking to make a bottom" at its present range, Annuziato said.

The American Petroleum Institute will issue its weekly report on crude and refined product inventories Tuesday, he said.

Peter Beutel, an energy analyst with Elders Futures Inc., said prices started Friday firm amid speculation that OPEC's price monitoring committee might hold an emergency meeting. But with those prospects unconfirmed, prices took a nose dive, he said.

"The sellers came out of the woodwork...," Beutel said.

The Saudi Arabian newspaper Al-Sharq Bali quoted unnamed high-level Arab oil sources Friday as saying Venezuela and Algeria called for a special meeting later this month of the price monitoring committee to help stem the decline in oil prices.

But the newspaper also said a moderate member of the five-member committee was opposed to the meeting.

Snow eases battle against forest fires

■ Related stories — 7A

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Shivering firefighters rejoiced as snow eased their battle against blazes that have blackened the oldest national park, but a forecast for warm, dry weather kept them on guard.

"I just love it. It means we might get to go home earlier," firefighter John Massey said Sunday as snow dusted much of Yellowstone National Park.

Three to 4 inches fell in areas south of Mammoth Hot Springs. Humidity was as high as 90 percent, and temperatures in the mid-30s combined with winds of up to 30 mph for a wind chill index of 19 degrees.

"Things for the short term are better here," park spokeswoman Amy Vanderbilt said.

In the Sierra Nevada foothills of California, a wind-whipped fire that began Sunday charred 10,000 acres of brush and timber, destroyed 13 homes and seven to 17 other structures, and burned boats in the water at affluent Lake Wildwood, officials said.

About 1,200 firefighters fought the blaze today, according to California Department of Forestry spokesman Charlie Jakobs. A firefighter suffered minor hand burns when flames engulfed his bulldozer, forcing him to wrap himself in an asbestos blanket and take refuge under his vehicle.

Light snow and low temperatures also helped firefighters in Idaho, and rain and cooler weather slowed fires in Colorado.

In northwest Oregon, officials closed millions of acres of state-protected forests in an effort to curb the number of fires caused by human carelessness.

In Montana, crews took advantage of the cool weather to carve lines around a forest fire north of Yellowstone and another that has scorched more than 30,000 acres in and around Glacier National Park near the Canadian border.

At Glacier, two firefighters were injured when a tree fell across the back of an open truck carrying crews to a 30,400-acre fire, officials said.

At Yellowstone, the light snow had firefighters shivering around propane heaters Sunday night. Fire managers joked thatfears before the weekend of another "Black Saturday" — when fires on Saturday, Aug. 20, sent blazes roaring across 150,000 acres — melted when "White Sunday" arrived.

Firefighters were pulled off the lines Sunday when the chill set in.

"Our hoses were freezing up as fast as we put them out," said Wayne Jones, a fire crew chief from Bushnell, Fla.

Today's forecast was almost as good as Sunday's weather: a chance of rain or snow, temperatures no higher than the 50s and light winds.

But by Tuesday, a drying trend is expected, with temperatures climbing back into the 60s and 70s.

"In five or six days we could be back in a more severe weather situation," Bill Baden, Forest Service director at the Interagency Fire Center in Boise, Idaho, said today on the CBS "This Morning" program.

Firefighters took advantage of Sunday's good weather to shore up their defenses against the wildfires, which have blackened about 900,000 of Yellowstone's 2.2 million acres since June in what firefighters call the worst fire season in the West in 30 years.

The weather allowed park officials to reopen the west entrance and the road from there to Old Faithful and Madison Junction north of the famed geyser. The rest of the park remained closed to visitors.

Residents of park headquarters at Mammoth were allowed to return home, but were told to be ready for another evacuation if flames from a 263,400-acre fire threatens the area again.

A 328,100-acre fire in the park's northeast quadrant expanded significantly, combining with an 87,500-acre fire. But weather conditions helped firefighting crews, enabling them to attack the blaze directly.

Delegates reassured by aims of peace meeting

EDITOR'S NOTE: On Aug. 8, 1988, more than 1,000 women from 63 nations met in Dallas for "Global Peace...from Vision to Reality: An International Women's Conference." The five-day event included lectures, workshops and multi-national entertainment with one basic premise: peace is possible. Staff writer Anntoinette Moore attended the conference. This is the second of a two-part series about her experiences.

DALLAS — Helen Perkins didn't expect her peace journey to take her to the Northpark Kiwanis Club.

But the Melbourne, Australia, resident was both startled and delighted to be awarded a year's honorary membership in that organization.

While in town to attend "Global Peace...from Vision to Reality: An International Women's Conference," Ms. Perkins and several other delegates were invited to the Kiwanis meeting.

"We were welcomed, then asked to say a few words about our country and the conference," she said, smiling. "I said there was a wonderful energy here, a wonderful atmosphere."

When some of the Kiwanis members commented on the hot Texas weather, "I said, 'That's because you Texans have so much warmth, you spread it around.' "

Ms. Perkins was hosted by a Dallas family. Ada N. Amoji, a delegate from Port Harcourt, Nigeria , was her roommate.

"Ada and I are sisters in one family, just born in different countries," she continued.

The self-described "late bloomer" — at 40 she went back to college and ended up graduating the same year as her son — has long been working for peace. Ms. Perkins, who is operations manager for UNICEF in Australia's Victoria State, would like to bring people from diverse elements of society together to work on peace issues.

"I think sharing what we have in common is very important, not our differences."

Ms. Amoji agreed.

"Life is so difficult now, in Nigeria, with high inflation and unemployment," said the educator and president of the Nigerian Association of Rural Women.

This group teaches rural women — who do much of the farming — money-making skills, such as dressmaking, food preservation and arts and crafts, and improved farming techniques.

"I want to give hope, to spread the good news of global peace — to calm the men down," she added.

During the five-day conference, delegates heard people such as Dr. M. Scott Peck, a noted psychiatrist and author. There were panel discussions on peace education and peacemaking in some of the world's political hot spots, as well as work sessions to develop peace proposals.

On the last day, spokeswomen from each of these 10 work groups presented their proposals. A West German, Gertrude Kosmanoff, spoke about her group, composed of women from 13 different nations.

"Some women in the group were concerned that we were talking too much about the personal, about peace in the family," she said. "Some were concerned that there was not enough time to wait until everybody in the developed countries has inner peace."

TWA pilot says he thinks Hamadi fired shot that killed U.S. diver

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — The pilot of a TWA jetliner hijacked to Beirut in 1985 testified today that Mohammed Ali Hamadi fired the shot that killed U.S. Navy diver Robert Stethem.

But under questioning by defense lawyers, Capt. John Testrake said he did not actually see Hamadi pull the trigger. And he said either of the two hijackers could have led Stethem to a cabin door where he was shot.

"It was my recollection that the most violent of the two men was in the companion way. I was in extreme stress and not taking notes of these details, it's only recollection," Testrake said.

Testrake testified he believed Hamadi, a Lebanese Shiite Moslem who is on trial on charges of air piracy and murder, was the most violent of the two hijackers.

The pilot said he had a chance to get a closer look at defendant during a court recess. After the break, he told the court:

"I want to make an important statement. ... I did say before that one of the two (hijackers) appeared to do more of the communicating and the other more of the violence.

"And looking at this man now, I was struck that this man fit the second of the two descriptions...that this is the man who I recall had stood in the forward entryway and shot Stethem."

Under questioning, however, Testrake said he could not recall if Hamadi or the other hijacker was with Stethem at the time of the shooting.

Hamadi has acknowledged being one of the hijackers, but denied killing Stethem, of Waldorf, Md. If convicted, Hamadi faces life imprisoment.

Testrake, of Richmond, Mo., was at the controls of Flight 847 when it was hijacked June 14, 1985. The flight from Athens to Rome was diverted to Beirut and 39 Americans were held hostage for 17 days.

Hamadi was arrested at Frankfurt Airport in 1987 after explosives were found in his luggage.

Also today, Testrake described the moments after takeoff from Athens Airport.

"About five minutes after takeoff I turned off the seatbelt light. Almost immediately after that we began to hear strange noises that came from behind the cockpit bulkhead. I asked the co-pilot to check."

He said the co-pilot looked through a peep-hole in the cockpit door and told him: "We have been hijacked."

Testrake said the co-pilot had seen a man brandishing "a chrome-plated pistol."

He said the men kicked violently at the door, breaking a panel at the bottom, then burst into the cockpit carrying the pistol and two hand grenades.

Waco man becomes 14th fatality of Delta crash

Fadal

DALLAS (AP) — Services are pending for a 64-year-old Waco man who became the 14th fatality of the crash of Delta Flight 1141.

Edmond Fadal died Sunday, 11 days after the Boeing 727 went down at Dallas-Fort International Airport. Fadal suffered burns when he tried to go back into the fiery wreckage in a futile attempt to save his wife.

An unidentified woman taking calls for Connally-Compton Funeral Directors in Waco said a time and place for services may be set today.

Fadal was pronounced dead at 1:43 a.m. Sunday at Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas, where he had been listed in critical condition since the crash.

His wife, 65-year-old Marian, died with 12 others in the Aug. 31 accident. There were 94 passengers and crew members who survived.

Fadal family friends and longtime traveling companions, Jean and Frank Nix, also of Waco, had joined the couple on the Delta flight for a trip to Lake Tahoe.

Mrs. Nix said she and her husband were upset to learn of Fadal's death, but not surprised, given the extent of his injuries. "We knew it was coming," she said. .

Fadal suffered from smoke inhalation and severe burns over 60 percent of his body, hospital officials said.

"He had mostly third-degree burns over 50 percent of his body," said hospital spokeswoman Paula Turner. "He never did improve from critical condition."

Mrs. Nix, 54, said Sunday the three of them escaped from the jet wreckage without severe injuries, but Fadal returned to the plane for his wife.

"The plane broke open right in front of us," Mrs. Nix recalled. "We all unbuckled our seat belts and tried to run out...We never looked back."

But when the Nixes and Fadal noticed Mrs. Fadal was not with them, Fadal ran back to the wreckage.

"That's when (Edmond) first ran back to get her," Mrs. Nix said.

Nix, 65, tried to stop Fadal from going back into the plane, but Fadal kept running, Mrs. Nix said. Both men sustained most of their burns when returning to the aircraft, she said.

Nix finally was able to pull Fadal away from the plane, but not before both men were burned, Mrs. Nix said.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair skies are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, with southerly winds 10-15 m.p.h., becoming easterly by midnight.

Tuesday is expected to be partly cloudy and cooler with a less than 20 percent chance of thundershowers. The high will be in the middle 80s and winds will be out of the southeast 5-15 m.p.h.

Sunday's high of 93 was nine degrees cooler than the record high of 102 set for that date in 1930. The overnight low of 57 was six degrees warmer than the record low of 51 set for this date in 1975.

NATION

Rain fell today from northeastern Minnesota across the Plains to Arizona, while a storm dusted Wyoming's northern mountains with less than 4 inches of snow.

Showers and a few thunderstorms also were scattered in the central Gulf Coast states, the Tennessee Valley, the southern Ohio Valley and central Mississippi Valley, and the Florida peninsula.

Dry weather prevailed across the rest of the nation, with clear skies over Washington state, Oregon, California, Nevada, Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, and much of New England.

Today's forecast called for widespread rain and much cooler air from the Great Lakes through the middle Missouri Valley into the central Rockies; scattered showers and thunderstorms from the lower Great Lakes into the middle Mississippi, lower Ohio and Tennessee valleys; the central Gulf Coast and extreme southern Florida.

STATE

A large area of cloudiness associated with a low pressure system moving across the Rockies continued to brush the westernmost parts of Texas early today.

Most of the clouds drifted across the New Mexico border into the Texas Panhandle and Far West Texas. Except for some low-level clouds and fog in parts of South Central Texas and along the coast, skies were clear over the remainder of the state.

National Weather Service forecasters are calling for mostly fair skies across the state tonight. Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms are possible in the Panhandle, Far West Texas and along the coast.

OIL

Crude prices on Tuesday and Wednesday hit their lowest point since Oct. 29, 1986, when they reached $13.73 per barrel. The following day the price leaped to $15.04 a barrel.

Contracts for refined oil products traded on the exchange also declined.

Wholesale unleaded gasoline for October delivery plunged 0.93 cent a gallon to 42.06 cents, after rising 0.40 cent the previous session. Analysts attributed the decline to the end of the summer driving season on Labor Day.

The October wholesale heating oil contract, which gained 0.24 cent Thursday, fell 0.90 cent to 40.97 a gallon.

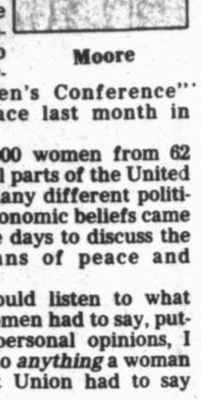
Soviet prejudice unexpectedly surfaces

Know thyself.
— Inscription at the Delphic Oracle, in Greece



Moore

The often painful process of self-knowledge has a way of creeping up on you when you least expect it.

This truth was impressed upon me during my recent attendance at "Global Peace...from Vision to Reality: An International Women's Conference"' which took place last month in Dallas.

More than 1,000 women from 62 nations — and all parts of the United States — with many different political, social and economic beliefs came together for five days to discuss the ways and means of peace and peacemaking.

Although I could listen to what most of these women had to say, putting aside my personal opinions, I could not listen to anything a woman from the Soviet Union had to say without skepticism.

The Soviet women filled me with a deep unease, regardless of what they said.

It was almost impossible to shut off my internal dialogue of rejection. I think if one of the Soviet women had said, "The sun is shining" (which it certainly was during the 100-plus-degree weather in Dallas) my gut-level reaction would have been, "Yes, so you say, but what's the real story?"

I could listen to the acting ambassador of Nicaragua, as she berated the Reagan administration for its Central American policy, although I knew she was presenting just her side of the story. But I could accept that she spoke from her own experience, even if I rejected that experience as false.

I had never been confronted with this particular prejudice before. Despite my heroic efforts, it remained, lurking in the nether regions of my supposedly modern mind, waiting to pounce when I least expected it.

Since I am not known for my ultra-conservative political beliefs, my anti-Soviet bias was a startling revelation.

Where did it come from? And why was it Soviet specific? Apparently Soviet "satellites" such as Cuba or "client states" such as Nicaragua didn't count.

And then I remembered all those air-raid drills in my Austin elementary school during the early '60s: the shrill bleating of the alarm bells; our teachers herding us out of our classrooms into the dark, cool cavern of the hal'

We crouched on the wooden floor next to the wall, our hands clasped behind our bent necks. Tornadoes or nuclear attack were the reasons for the drills.

China, although it had nuclear weapons, had yet to develop a missile which could reach the continental U.S. The Soviet Union was the big threat.

In October of 1962, the Cuban missile crisis made the drills all too real. I remember the thick tension which enveloped our school, as the teachers tried to keep their fears locked inside themselves.

During those Cold War times, anti-Soviet paranoia strangled most U.S. attempts at rational dialogue with the U.S.S.R. Nikita Khrushchev pounded his shoe on the table at the United Nations and said, "We will bury you!" and we believed him.

This perceived "Communist threat" soaked into my consciousness and slanted my perception of all things Soviet. But as time passed and other concerns took center stage in my life, "The Red Scare" paled.

Now, when "glasnost" — openness — and "perestroika" — restructuring — have become the buzzwords of Soviet-U.S. relations and even our conservative president has blessed an arms-reduction agreement with the "Evil Empire," those Cold War days seem like quaint relics of long ago.

Or so I thought, until I found my sophisticated intelligence neutralized by these "relics" more than 25 years later.

Yes, peace is possible, but it requires more than just political solutions. A conference delegate from South Africa put it this way:

"Change always starts here first," she said, placing her hand over her heart.

Colombian says 'injustice something big'

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE
Staff Writer

DALLAS — A committed Christian from Colombia offered this "small homework" for American women:

"Just close your eyes and imagine what you have around your house," said Zulma Ramos Ramirez of Bogota. Mentally "open your refrigerator and look; think where each one of those products came from.

"How did it get there? And how much money do you think the people who grew or produced it got for their work?"

Ms. Ramirez, attending "Global Peace...from Vision to Reality: An International Women's Conference," is a member of the peace and justice committee at her Mennonite church.

Although she was raised a Catholic, a "personal encounter with Jesus" caused her to embrace the Mennonite faith. Perhaps 95 percent of Colombians are Catholic, she said.

She spoke about the deteriorating political and economic situation in Colombia, which — according to columnist Jack Anderson — the CIA calls "another Lebanon."

"In our country, injustice is something big," she claimed.

For example, although Colombian law requires children to get at least a fifth-grade education, "that is never fulfilled. There are not enough schools, not enough teachers." Many of the children have to work to support their families.

"For every 10,000 inhabitants who get some schooling, only one gets to the university," she continued. Yet, people want to go to school.

"If you go out at night (in Bogota), at, say, 9 o'clock, you see streets full of people that are trying to attend school." This is after a full day's work.

But families of military personnel have no problem getting education, Ms. Ramirez said. There are schools, hospitals, houses, even a university for the military and their dependents. Much of the money to support these institutions comes from the United States.

Unemployment is also a major problem. Even with a university degree, there are few jobs, she said.

"One of the most important things that I would like to get across to people is that our country is not poor. We have much to offer, not only because the land is rich...but because the people are really ingenious people."

"Poverty makes people very ingenious," Ms. Ramirez added, "because they have to make life worthwhile.

"It is a poverty that has been imposed on us, because the upper class has sort of sold the country to foreign indebtedness," she claimed.

"The people are tired of poverty and hunger and miserable jobs and no schools and no health care. All this injustice has brought about frustration that now has become almost an open war."

Then, there is the drug problem.

Many Colombians have become wealthy through drug trafficking, she asserted. And some of these drug lords "are very much loved in some parts of the country" because they have provided the poor with money, food, hospitals and housing.

To rural peasants, "it is like having Robin Hood."

Colombia is also mired in a long-running civil war.

"There has been too much bloodshed," she said sadly. "And I have always felt that it is as painful for the guerrilla's mother to have her son shot and killed, as it is for the soldier's mother to have the same thing happen.

"The open violence has to stop, but we have to continue protesting against injustice."

The conference gave her a new perspective.

"I have much hope — after hearing the people from Israel, after hearing the people from Ireland — my hope burst," she continued. "If they did it, we can do it, too.

"And I think the best way to work is with women, especially teachers. And make it (peace) a classroom issue."

Ms. Ramirez's faith also gives her hope.

"I truly believe that God wants a change. It's like we human beings always do. After we've messed up everything, we remember that he's there, and we should have listened to him from the beginning.

"I came here because God wanted me to come," Ms. Ramirez said. "If I am less me, and let him work through me, the love will continue flowing, because he is love and justice."

PEACE

Ms. Kosmanoff reminded delegates that "40,000 children around the world die every day and that more than $1.5 million is spent every minute on the arms race."

Her group's goals included eliminating prejudice, developing spirituality, peace education, networking, educating minorities and converting war-related industries to peace-based ones.

Ann Banks, a South African of Zulu, English and Irish heritage who lives in Johannesburg, was reassured by many of the proposals presented at the conference.

"We're on the right track with our approach," said the nursing instructor who works with South Africa's independent National Family Planning Association. "I hope the recommendations can be coordinated."

She has taken some small steps for peace in her own country.

"Carl Rogers (the American psychologist) came and trained 40 of us in Johannesburg to be facilitators in conflict-resolution group encounters."

During such encounters, about 14 people, both black and white and with different political views, are brought together, she explained. In South Africa, where the races are rigidly segregated, these intensive, face-to-face meetings tend to destroy stereotypes.

"We need to start with the 'hidden fault,' in us," she said. "Our own deep and subtle prejudices that we may not see as prejudices" such as seeing only the labels we give people — drug addict, criminal, etc. — not their humanity.

Ms. Perkins and Ms. Amoji also were enthusiastic about the conference.

"I think it has shown that people from many different backgrounds, religions, ideologies, classes, political persuasions, can come together and can come out with something positive to offer mankind," asserted Ms. Perkins. "And I think it has shown the power that women have when they do come together."

Upon her return to Melbourne, she plans to work for the inclusion of a peace education curriculum in the public schools.

"I have a feeling of achievement, of fulfillment," said Ms. Amoji. "I want to organize women's groups, to give them pep talks on how they can achieve peace in their communities, in their homes.

"I'll tell them (the rural women) how they can achieve economic self-reliance," she continued. With economic self-reliance, "there will be peace, within the family, within the community and within the society."

And what would she tell women in West Texas?

"As mothers, we have to nurture peace, because it actually comes from the nuclear family circle and then radiates to the community," the Nigerian educator said. "Make sure that you impart peace to every member of the community in everything you do in every area of your life."

Ms. Perkins concurred.

"Be united, forget the barriers that divide you and recognize that...you can, as a community, collectively and individually, work for peace.

"It's not all that difficult," she claimed. "And it only starts with one small step."

DELTA

"We had to be lucky to be sitting there because there was a gaping hole in front of us," Nix told the Waco Tribune-Herald

"The plane was not engulfed, but heat and smoke was everywhere. Ed rolled out of the plane next, but before he could get back to the plane to get his wife, it became engulfed in flames. He rushed to get his wife, but I had to pull him back. It cooked his face. He had to be restrained," said Nix.

The crash of 1141 came a little more than three years after DFW's worst air disaster, the crash of Delta Flight 191 which killed 137 people.

Meanwhile, a physician during the weekend refused to allow National Transportation Safety Board investigators to interview the Delta flight's pilot over the weekend. Capt. Larry Davis is listed in good condition at Parkland, where he is being treated for back and facial injuries.

As the investigation continues, NTSB is conducting tests behind closed doors in the engineering offices and laboratories of its Washington headquarters.

FIRES

Lower temperatures raise humidity, and the moisture is soaked up by tinder-dry trees, said Joe Halliday, chief naturalist for Yellowstone's west district.

The wood will "be less likely to burn, although the fire shouldn't have much trouble," Halliday said.

"Basically with this cold front that's moved in, it's going to put us kind of in a holding pattern," said park spokeswoman Marty Tobias.

Cabinet officials, who toured Yellowstone National Park over the weekend on President Reagan's orders, said the fires must be extinguished, and said the policy of letting naturally ignited wildfires in national parks and wilderness areas burn unless they threaten property or people hasn't worked.

"The most important thing is to concentrate our efforts on getting these fires under control and then out," Interior Secretary Donald Hodel said Sunday at the Boise Interagency Fire Center in Idaho, which coordinates Western firefighting efforts.

"The old policy has to be reviewed and altered," Hodel said. "Nobody who has seen it operate this year could say it was a success."

Hodel was accompanied by Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng and Deputy Defense Secretary William H. Taft IV.

Taft said two Marine battalions — 1,200 men — from Camp Pendleton, Calif., would be sent to help fight fires. About 2,300 Army soldiers from Fort Lewis, Wash., have already been dispatched.

Small community puts big emphasis on college

GROOM (AP) — In this largely rural community in Carson County, teachers are preparing to send Travis Britten off to college.

But first, they've got to get him into second grade.

Travis, 6, began first grade this month. In Groom, teachers say they work their lessons around the idea that the student is college bound. Most of the time, they're right.

"That's the way I teach my English IV class," Janetta Lamb, a Groom teacher, said. "They're college bound."

All 15 of the students who graduated from Groom High School in May have enrolled in a college. Principal Kenneth Sweatt said he is not surprised by the high percentage of students continuing their education.

"We'll be close every year," he said. "The community puts quite an emphasis on education. It's expected. Most of them go to school somewhere."

According to Sweatt, the graduating class comes close to 100 percent each year. Stability, he said, is one of the key factors, with most students spending all 12 years in the Groom system.

Also, most of the teachers in the system have been teaching in Groom for several years, Sweatt said.

Judy Babcock, a Groom teacher and administrative assistant who handles college counseling, said that going to college has become "the thing to do" among graduates in the community.

"The fear is that if they don't go, they're not going to have anything to do," she said.

Small schools, she said, seem to have an advantage in preparing students for college.

"Since there are just 15 students, it's easier for me to keep an eye on each one," Ms. Babcock said. "They don't get lost in the shuffle."

Sweatt said he believes a higher percentage of students from rural communities go on to college than do their metropolitan counterparts, in part, because vocational opportunities are not available at the smaller schools.

Officials from area districts of similar size agreed that rural district students were more likely to at least attempt higher education.

"We have this trend, too," Don Johnson, Channing High School principal, said. "We have a high, high percentage that go to college."

Johnson said that of last year's 12 graduates, 11 went on to college and one entered the military.

"We try to prepare them for college. Here in our neighborhood, there's not a lot for them to come back to."

Bill Mayfield, superintendent of Happy schools, said that most students in his district attend college, but attributed it to the work of the schools.

"I think in a lot of cases they have more counseling in that area."

Miami Superintendent Allan Dinsmore said that rural students in this area seem college-oriented, but that it is not a universal trait among small districts. He said the lifestyle and economic condition of the people in the community seems to be the determining factor.

"In Miami, the community and the people in the community value a good education," Dinsmore said. "They're willing to put forth the effort in materials and time."

In Groom, Ms. Lamb said students realize few opportunities exist in small towns.

"They see that there's nothing for them here and they've got to get away," she said.

Sweatt maintains that Groom educators do nothing out of the ordinary to direct students toward colleges and universities, but points to the newly adopted school motto as an example of the district's philosophy.

A sign outside the school reads, "Excellence Now. A commitment to the future."

"I think we have an excellent little school system here," he said.

Pope's visit inspired Texas Catholics

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Pope John Paul II inspired Texas Catholics to recommit themselves to their faith, their families, their communities and their immigrant neighbors, said church officials who are celebrating the first anniversary of the papal visit to San Antonio.

"I don't think anyone in church can say they are in church because of the papal visit," said the Rev. Greg Nevlud, pastor of St. Francis of Assisi Catholic Church. "But I think it has increased evangelizing by not only the priests, but by the laity."

Catholic church officials in San Antonio celebrated the Sept. 13-14, 1987, papal anniversary Sunday with an evening Mass.

A historical marker at a plaza near Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church also was scheduled to be dedicated and blessed Sunday, but the installation was postponed.

Last year, more than 300,000 Texans saw the pope when he celebrated the only Sunday Mass of his 10-day, nine-city tour of the United States at a 144-acre lot in northwest San Antonio in an area known as Westover Hills.

The pope's Texas visit also included speeches to Catholic Charities USA in Municipal Auditorium, an address at San Fernando Cathedral to men and women studying to become priests and nuns, and a speech in Spanish to parishioners in Plaza Guadalupe.

Today the papal Mass site near Sea World of Texas is the home of a Stop-N-Go convenience store and the future home of a Dairy Queen restaurant and a shopping center. Landowner A. Wayne Wright said other developments could include a McDonald's, a 16,000-seat amphitheater, a golf driving range and another shopping center.

But Wright said, "from an economic standpoint, (the papal visit) didn't have an impact on Westover Hills."

Cardinal William Baum, who was in San Antonio a year ago with Pope John Paul II, celebrates Mass at San Fernando Cathedral in San Antonio. The cardinal blesses Kirk Rojas, 1, while his mother, Olga Rojas, receives the Eucharist.

But for the Catholic community, Pope John Paul II's 22-hour stay in San Antonio may have helped strengthen community and religious bonds, officials said.

"I see a lot of good curiosity coming out of it," the Rev. Virgilio Elizondo, rector of San Fernando Cathedral, told the San Antonio Light. He noted some 300 adults recently completed a five-week course that explains Catholic customs.

As for more visible work, Catholic leaders say they have stepped up efforts to help immigrants and have begun to revamp programs to strengthen the family.

"We redoubled our efforts in the amnesty program," said the Rev. David Garcia, a key figure in the papal-visit planning who now is archdiocese director of vocations.

Monsignor Marvin Doerfler, director of social services for the archdiocese, said the focus has shifted from helping aliens seek temporary resident status to the second phase of the amnesty program — teaching English and civics classes to potential citizens.

In another area, the pope's comments also spurred the local church to study the adequacy of its work with the family, said Archbishop Patrick Flores.

A consultant will arrive in San Antonio in October to assist the church in teaching couples communication skills and methods to break cycles of family violence.

"I'm not going to pretend that we're doing all that needs to be done," Flores said. "That's not going to be a one-year assignment. It's going to go on."

Pilot of Delta flight didn't expect to live, woman says

GREENVILLE (AP) — The pilot of ill-fated Delta Air Lines Flight 1141 did not expect to survive the jet's crash, said his Sunday school teacher.

"I think he thought he was going to die," said Ed Wichern, who talked with Capt. Larry Davis at Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas about the Aug. 31 crash at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport that killed 14 people.

Davis said when he realized his plane wasn't going to make it, he said, "It's all right with me, Lord," according to Wichern, a teacher at Aldersgate Church where Davis is a member.

"I think he said something like, 'You don't get out of a cockpit in an airplane crash like that with fuel flooding over you,'" Wichern said Sunday.

The 48-year-old Davis was piloting the Boeing 727 when it crashed seconds after takeoff and burst into flames. The three-man cockpit crew and some 91 passengers survived the crash.

"We feel like God intervened," said Wichern. "Otherwise, why would so many people live through a plane crash like that?"

The pilot was trapped in the cockpit for 30 minutes and was the last to be removed from the plane.

"I told him it must have been a scary 30 minutes," said Wichern. "He told me, 'What 30 minutes?'"

Davis doesn't fully recall the time he lay injured in the plane, said the Rev. Ralph Anderson, pastor of Aldersgate, an interdenominational Bible church in Greenville.

But Anderson said some passengers recalled Davis seemed to be directing them out of the aircraft even though he was unable to move. The pilot is recovering from back and facial injuries at Parkland in Dallas.

"His jaw is wired together, but you can understand him pretty well," said Anderson. "I think he will be up to his first interviews (today), and he hopes he can come home in a few days," Anderson told members of Wichern's Sunday school class.

Davis is eager to be interviewed by National Transportation Safety Board investigators, Delta officials have said. But Davis' doctor has not given the go-ahead, saying he may be up to the interviews early this week.

Erroneous report sends flight back to airport

GRAPEVINE (AP) — An erroneous report that someone had seen something fall off a Delta Airlines Lockheed L-1011 taking off from Dallas Fort-Worth International Airport forced the airplane to dump its fuel and return to the airport.

Delta spokesman Henry Conley said Delta Flight 1014 to Orlando, Fla., which was carrying 130 passengers and a crew of 11, was later allowed to leave after airline maintenance employees thoroughly checked the plane and found nothing wrong.

"It could have been something on the runway — maybe he kicked it up when he took off," Conley said.

Conley said an unknown person called the D-FW control tower and said they had seen something fall off the plane. The tower then contacted the plane's crew, which dumped its fuel and returned to D-FW at 5:55 p.m., about 50 minutes after it pulled away from the gate.

Former chancellor apparently to sell spacious residence

HOUSTON (AP) — The chancellor emeritus of the American Educational Complex had previously said he would give back his spacious residence built with public funds, but the Houston Chronicle reported he has listed the home for sale at $525,000.

Luis Morton Jr. placed the elaborate Spanish-style residence near Killeen on the market about six weeks ago, shortly after paying off the mortgage he used to gain a $475,000 loan from the school's pension plan, the newspaper reported in a copyright story Sunday.

Although a 1978 special state audit showed that the college paid the $247,456 cost of building and furnishing Morton's hillside home, a real estate agent said the college will not benefit from its sale.

"The college is not involved one bit," said listing agent Robert Whitney. "It's for sale or trade, just like we advertised it."

W.A. Roach, chairman of the AEC Board of Trustees, said he will check with a college lawyer to determine whether the school has any legal claim on Morton's residence.

Roach acknowledged that Morton had said publicly in the past that he intended to return the home to the college and was making legal provisions to do so.

"I think at one time that he had it in his will," Roach said. "But I don't know that it was necessarily promised. I don't know if he was just talking."

Whitney said that if Morton cannot get his asking price, he hopes to trade it for an Austin-area ranch or for apartments near the University of Texas that he could rent to students as income property.

"He just doesn't need that big mansion for he and his wife to roam around in," Whitney said.

The former chancellor does not have a listed telephone number and could not be reached by The Associated Press for comment.

Morton resigned in April amid numerous problems. His successor, Phillip R. Swartz, resigned four months later. The AEC is a Killeen-area consortium consisting of the tax-supported Central Texas College and three related operating units that offer education contract services to the military.

Hostage expects to be freed today

West German writes letter of expected release

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A letter attributed to a West German hostage says he expected to be released today and links his fate with a Lebanese Shiite Moslem on trial in Frankfurt for hijacking and murder.

A copy of the brief letter purportedly written by Rudolf Cordes appeared in German on the front page of Beirut's An-Nahar newspaper. The letter could not be authenticated.

An accompanying statement in Arabic said Cordes would be released within 48 hours. There was no immediate explanation for the discrepancy.

In Bonn, a West German Foreign Ministry official expressed optimism that Cordes would be released soon. The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said he could not confirm the newspaper report.

The letter said: "To the government of the Federal Republic of Germany, I am to be released on Monday.

"Please inform my family, but please do everything regarding Mohammed. Please help. The hostage-takers expect something, especially now that I am freed."

The letter referred to Mohammed Ali Hamadi, who is being tried in Frankfurt, West Germany, on murder and air piracy charges in the 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner during which U.S. Navy diver Robert Stethem was killed.

Hamadi has acknowledged taking part in the hijacking, but says an accomplice killed Stethem.

Hamadi's brother, Abdul-Hadi Hamadi, is believed to head the Holy Warriors for Freedom, which claimed responsibility for the Jan. 17, 1987 kidnapping of Cordes, 55, Beirut manager for Hoechst AG, one of West Germany's largest chemical companies.

Abdul-Hadi is Beirut chief of the security apparatus of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, or Party of God, which is believed to be an umbrella group for Shiite factions holding foreign hostages in Lebanon.

Mohammed Ali Hamadi was arrested at Frankfurt Airport in 1987 after explosives were found in his luggage. Another brother, Abbas, was convicted by a West German court in April of complicity in the kidnappings of Cordes and West German engineer Alfred Schmidt in a bid to free Mohammed.

Abbas was sentenced to 13 years in prison. Schmidt was released last September in what the Holy Warriors for Freedom called a goodwill gesture.

On Aug. 14, the West German magazine Quick published a letter attributed to Cordes that requested that West German officials release Hamadi so he could be released.

There was no way to determine if Cordes wrote the letter published today or if the accompanying statement was indeed from his captors.

An-Nahar said the letter was delivered to its west Beirut offices at dawn today along with the statement signed by the Holy Warriors for Freedom.

The German letter's reference to other hostages indicated Cordes may be held with other foreigners, but the Holy Warriors for Freedom only has claimed to hold Cordes.

The Arabic-language statement said the German-language letter was written by Cordes and added:

"We would like to inform those concerned that new developments toward the release of the West German Cordes will be announced within the coming 48 hours. "Therefore, a representative of (Syrian) President Hafez Assad and the West German ambassador are requested to come to the Beaurivage Hotel within this period."

Besides Cordes, 17 foreigners are missing and believed kidnapped in Lebanon. The hostage held the longest is Associated Press correspondent Terry Anderson, who was abducted March 16, 1985.

Hurricane gathering strength as it churns toward Jamaica

KINGSTON, Jamaica (AP) — Hurricane Gilbert, packing 110 mph winds and torrential rain, churned westward toward Jamaica's underbelly today after skirting the southern coasts of Puerto Rico, Haiti and the Dominican Republic.

High winds and heavy rain preceding the storm drenched the capital of Kingston overnight, toppling trees, causing local flooding and littering streets with branches. Authorities said there were no immediate reports of injuries.

Most Jamaicans stayed home, boarding up windows in preparation for the hurricane's expected arrival just south of Kingston later in the day. Some companies broadcast appeals for technicians and electricians to report to work.

The weather bureau predicted Gilbert's center, 140 miles southeast of Kingston before dawn, would pass south of Kingston and hit the southern parish of Clarendon.

Flash flood warnings were issued for the parishes of Portland on the northeast and St. Mary on the north. The north coast tourist region from Montego Bay on the west and Ocho Rios on the east, far from the southern impact zone and separated by mountains, was expected only to receive heavy rain.

Officials urged residents in the higher risk areas along the south coast to seek higher ground.

"It's certainly one of the larger systems we've seen in the Caribbean for a long time," said Hal Gerrish, forecaster at the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

Forecasters at the center said the eye of Gilbert was 140 miles southeast of Kingston at dawn today. Maximum sustained winds were near 110 mph, with tropical-storm force winds extending up to 250 miles to the north and 100 miles to the south.

Prime Minister Edward Seaga of Jamaica alerted all government agencies, saying Sunday night: "Hurricane Gilbert appears to be a real threat and everyone should follow the instructions and hurricane precautions issued by the Office of Disaster Preparedness in order to minimize the danger."

Forecasters said the hurricane had been gaining strength as it passed over the ocean after it dumped 5 to 10 inches of rain on the Dominican Republic and Haiti, which share the island of Hispaniola.

"We should know within about 72 hours whether it's going to be a major threat to the United States," said Martin Nelson, another meteorologist at the center. "It's moving at about 17 mph to the west and normally hurricanes take a northward turn after they pass central Cuba."

Storm warnings were posted today for all of Jamaica, Cuba's southern coast and the Cayman Islands.

Cuba's official Prensa Latina news agency said a state of alert was declared at midday in the Cuban provinces of Guantanamo, Holguin, Santiago de Cuba and Granma.

In the report from Havana received in Mexico City, Prensa Latina said civil defense officials were broadcasting bulletins on national radio and television recommending emergency measures and providing information on the storm.

Subjects of King of Brunei benefit from his $25 billion

By HARI S. MANIAM

BANDAR SERI BEGAWAN, Brunei (AP) — A man ranked the wealthiest in the world runs this tiny oil-rich Moslem kingdom, and diplomats report little dissent from people unencumbered by income taxes, medical payments or tuition fees.

King Sultan Hassanal Bolkiah rules the enclave on the northeastern tip of Borneo from his 1,788-room palace. Earlier this month, Fortune magazine called him the richest man in the world, worth $25 billion.

Citizens of this southeast Asian nation do not appear to object to the king's rule because he spreads some of the money around.

"They (the people) are well looked after, with free education, medical treatment, cheap housing, good pensions and any one doing well in his studies can easily get a university education abroad at the government's expense," said one diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity.

He said there are no beggars, and about half the workforce is employed by the government. The per capita income is estimated at about $18,000, one of the highest in the world, according to bankers and diplomats.

All the money comes from oil and gas, which Brunei exports mainly to Japan.

A Brunei government official said recently that 1986 exports amounted to $2.03 billion — 99 percent of it oil and gas. Imports for the same year totaled $785 million in cars, foodstuffs and other goods.

The nation, about the size of Delaware, covers just 2,226 square miles, much of which is not suitable for cultivation, an agricultural officer said.

Without daily newspapers, the nation's 227,000 people get their news mainly through state-run radio, Television Brunei and some government publications.

An official in the Planning Unit said Malays form the majority of Brunei's population, but there are also about 60,000 Chinese and other non-Malays.

About 87,000 people are employed and of these 28,000 are foreign workers, including foreign maids, doctors, lawyers, engineers, accountants and others.

Brunei has no elected Parliament and Sultan Bolkiah rules the nation with the help of a Cabinet comprising two of his brothers and about seven other people.

The 41-year-old monarch, who studied in neighboring Malaysia before a stint at the British Military Academy in Sandhurst, England, in 1966, was crowned the 29th King of Brunei in 1967 by his father Sir Omar Ali Saifuddin, who abdicated in favor of his son.

The king loves polo and has about 200 Argentine polo ponies, some of which are kept in air-conditioned stables. He has two wives and six children.

In the 14th and 15th century, Brunei was a large empire stretching from the northern Philippines to most parts of Borneo, but when the colonialists came Brunei shrank. Brunei became a British protectorate in 1906 and won its independence on Dec. 31, 1983.

The country has no income tax, gasoline is cheap and there are no major taxes on cars, which are imported from Japan and elsewhere. Diplomats estimate foreign reserves at $20 billion.

The King has powers to detain and hold without trial anyone deemed to be a threat to the security of the nation. On July 14, the government released 34 such detainees, leaving just six still in custody.

Diplomats say there appears to be no long-term threat to Brunei's economy as the 120,000 barrels of oil being pumped daily is expected to last "well into the next century".

Brunei is officially known as Brunei Darusalam.

Darusalam means abode of peace "and there is indeed peace here" said a diplomat, who added "they could have added prosperity to it."

IRA bombs home of civil servant

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Two IRA bombs today badly damaged the home of Sir Kenneth Bloomfield, head of Northern Ireland's civil service, but Bloomfield and his family escaped serious injury.

The Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility for the attack in a statement issued through its Republican Press Center in Belfast. The IRA said other civil servants in the British province should resign their posts.

Police said two bombs exploded at about 6:15 a.m. outside the house in Helen's Bay, County Down, on the eastern outskirts of Belfast. They said the blasts ripped gaping holes in the brickwork and shattered windows in nearby homes.

Bloomfield, his wife Mary and their son were asleep in the back of the house when the bombs went off, police said. They said the family was taken to a hospital. They were released after being treated for shock.

"There was a clear intention to kill Sir Kenneth and anybody else in the house at the time," said a spokesman for the Royal Ulster Constabulary, who requested anonymity. "They intended to completely blow up the house."

A third bomb was defused by British army experts, police said.

British news reports said Bloomfield had no police or army guard at his home, which is 150 feet from the road 10 miles east of Belfast.

In its statement today, the IRA warned other civil servants involved in "formulating British military strategy or advising the administration in this field to resign the posts or face the consequences."

The outlawed IRA is fighting to end British rule in the predominantly Protestant province and unite it with the mainly Roman Catholic Irish Republic.

Sixty-nine people have died in Northern Ireland so far this year in sectarian violence.

Wood in great demand

More than one-third of the world still relies on wood for cooking and home heating. In some parts of the world the search for wood has resulted in the leveling of whole forests.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Head of Mexico union, 3 others die in crash

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The head of a union of government workers and three other men were killed in a plane crash in northwestern Mexico, the Excelsior news agency reported.

Jaime Quintero Hernandez, leader of unionized workers in the Department of Finance, died Sunday when a six-seat Cessna 210 crashed near Rancho la Nopalera, 1,200 miles northwest of Mexico City in the state of Sonora, according to Artemio Maldonado Morales, commander of customs guards in the region.

Hernandez was flying from the town of Sonoita to the state capital of Hermosillo following a labor arbitration, Excelsior said.

The plane crashed shortly after the pilot radioed that he had to make an emergency landing, the news service quoted Hermosillor airport inspector Roberto Sanchez as saying.

A search was started immediately, Sanchez said, and the plane was discovered hours later on a hill near Rancho la Nopalera. Debris from the plane was scattered over more than 1,000 yards.

Sanchez said the cause of the accident was being investigated and the bodies of the four victims were being flown to Hermosillo.

Gorbachev visits Siberia

MOSCOW (AP) — The official Tass news agency reported today that Mikhail S. Gorbachev left Moscow for a city in Siberia, indicating the Soviet leader had returned from his summer vacation.

On July 30, Gorbachev met in the Kremlin with visiting Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher of West Germany, then dropped from official view.

Soviet officials, speaking on condition they not be identified, said Gorbachev had gone on vacation in the southern Soviet Union, as he does every year.

The personal lives of Kremlin officials remain little known, despite the increased openness in society inaugurated by Gorbachev, and no official announcement was made of the Soviet leader's whereabouts in August.

In a dispatch labeled with the Russian word for lightning, indicating news of the greatest importance, Tass today announced Gorbachev's departure for Krasnoyarsk from Moscow.

U.S. Army chopper crashes

SCHWAEBISCH HALL, West Germany (AP) — A U.S. Army helicopter struck high tension wires and crashed into a field, injuring the two pilots and four soldiers on the ground, the military said Sunday.

The 5th Corps headquarters in Schwaebisch Hall said the helicopter crashed Saturday afternoon near Bad Mergentheim, 95 miles southeast of Frankfurt.

The pilots, from the 3rd Cavalry Regiment stationed in Fort Bliss in El Paso, Texas, were seriously injured, the statement said.

Fort Bliss spokesman Brad Rose identified the pilots as Capt. Carl Stephen Filip of El Paso and 1st Lt. Kenneth Johnson, whose hometown was not known. Filip is a member of the 3rd Armored Cavalry at Fort Bliss and Johnson is a member of an Ohio National Guard unit attached to the 3rd Armored Cavalry.

Four U.S. soldiers on the ground were injured when they tried to rescue the pilots from the wreckage, the statement said. The four men suffered minor burns from power lines that were dragged down by the helicopter, the statement said.

The helicopter, a Bell OH-58, was taking part in military maneuvers.

Mir receives supplies, mail

MOSCOW (AP) — A cargo rocket brought fuel, food and mail today to the three Soviet cosmonauts manning the orbiting Mir space station, the Tass news agency reported.

Tass said the Progress rocket docked with the Mir at 5:22 a.m. Moscow time (9:22 p.m. EDT Sunday) with the help of automatic on-board systems.

"It brought supplies of fuel for the united propulsion system of the station, foodstuffs, equipment, apparatus and mail," Tass said. The news agency had announced the launch of the Progress-38 on Saturday.

Tass said the three Soviet spacemen aboard the Mir — Vladimir Titov, Musa Manarov, Valery Polyakov — are feeling fine, and that on-board systems are working normally.

Last week, two other cosmonauts, a Soviet and an Afghan, had difficulties when they separated their Soyuz capsule from the Mir for a return to Earth. Equipment problems and human error delayed their landing by a day.

Pope preaches for peace in Zimbabwe

BULAWAYO, Zimbabwe (AP) — Pope John Paul II traveled today to the violence-wracked provincial capital of Matabeleland and preached reconciliation and peace.

"It is only eight years since your struggle for national independence (in Zimbabwe) was brought to an end," the Roman Catholic pontiff said. "Even after that, many people in Matabeleland did not find true peace....The civilian population continued to suffer from guerrilla warfare and other forms of violence."

The pope celebrated Mass at Ascot Race Course on an altar festooned with white Madonna lilies. Many in the crowd of 50,000 waited at the race track six hours for the Mass.

The pope began the Mass speaking in Sindebele, the tribal language of the Ndebele of Matabeleland.

John Paul flew from Harare, the capital, to Bulawayo, Zimbabwe's second largest city and provincial capital of Matabeleland, early today. He was welcomed by Joshua Nkomo, a senior minister in the government and the province's political chief.

The pope's one-day visit to this western province is the most sensitive part of his three-day trip to Zimbabwe, which began Saturday. The pope is to travel on to the black-governed countries of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Mozambique during his 10-day tour of southern Africa.

Before the Mass, John Paul was welcomed by Bishop Henry Karlen.

In 1984, the Swiss-born Karlen and President Robert Mugabe clashed after Karlen accused government troops of atrocities involving hundreds of civilians in Matabeleland.

Mugabe denied the allegations and accused the bishop of siding with rebels.

"The people of Matabeleland have suffered much during the liberation war," Karlen said in his welcoming speech. "The blood of 10 missionary martyrs of the diocese of Bulawayo has flowed into the soil of this area. May this blood bear abundant fruit."

Until recently, Matabeleland was the center of a tribal-based insurgency that began shortly after Zimbabwe gained independence in April 1980. Hundreds of people were killed in the conflict between the rebels and government troops, among them the 10 Catholic missionaries.

Suspected rebels shot and killed Killian Knoerl of the Matabeleland diocese on April 19, hours after the government announced a general amnesty for rebels. The government said 113 rebels surrendered under the amnesty and that there have been no rebel-related killings since.

The amnesty came four months after Mugabe and Nkomo, formerly his chief political rival, signed a unity accord.

Mugabe and Nkomo led rival guerrilla armies during the seven-year war that led to white-ruled Rhodesia becoming black-ruled Zimbabwe.

Mugabe, a member of the Shona tribe that accounts for 70 percent of Zimbabwe's 8.5 million people, accused Nkomo of controlling the rebels in Matabeleland, Nkomo's Ndebele tribal stronghold. Nkomo denied the charge.

The Ndebele make up about one-quarter of Zimbabwe's population.

Dukakis: 'George Bush has failed'; Bush defends adviser who resigned

Associated Press

Democrat Michael Dukakis declared today that "George Bush has failed" in three critical foreign policy tests, while Republican Bush took a new shot at Dukakis on military policy.

Malek

Bush also defended Frederic V. Malek, his adviser who abruptly left a top Republican Party post Sunday after a news story saying he counted the number of Jews in a federal agency for then-President Nixon in 1971.

Dukakis, in Philadelphia, said the three key points of his national security policy would be a solid domestic economy making the United States strong in international trade, unwavering opposition to terrorism and a stepped-up effort to halt international drug trafficking.

"In each of these three areas, George Bush has failed," Dukakis said in remarks prepared for delivery today. "I want to beat our foreign competitors; he's willing to settle for second best. I want to crack down on terrorism; he knuckled under to the ayatollah. I want a real war on drugs; his answer to drug kingpins like Noriega is J. Danforth Quayle."

General Antonio Noriega is the Panamanian leader charged in U.S. federal court with drug violations. Quayle is Bush's vice presidential running mate.

Bush, meanwhile, said in Washington that Dukakis would lean on international organizations too much rather than take action as the Reagan administration did in Grenada, in attacking Libya and in escorting ships through the Persian Gulf.

"We cannot abdicate our responsibility for leadership," Bush said in Washington before leaving on a campaign trip to New Jersey, the Midwest and California.

He also named a 13-member national security panel, including former secretaries of state Henry A. Kissinger and Alexander Haig as well as Zbigniew Brzezinski, who was former President Jimmy Carter's national security adviser.

Brzezinski said he was proud to have served Carter, a Democrat, but of the two current presidential candidates Republican Bush "is the one who can best fashion an effective bipartisan foreign policy."

Bush was asked by reporters about Malek, who resigned as deputy chairman of the Republican National Committee after a report Sunday in The Washington Post that he compiled figures on the number of Jews in high-ranking positions in the Bureau of Labor Statistics during the Nixon administration.

"I know this man and I know him to be without one ounce of bigotry or prejudice in his makeup," Bush said.

Notes that are part of the presidential archives refer to Nixon's search for a "Jewish cabal" that he thought was using unemployment data to put him in an unfavorable light. Malek acknowledged compiling the figures, but said he thought Nixon's notions were "nonsense," and that he had nothing to do with subsequent demotion of two Jewish officials in the bureau.

The report was the second in a week suggesting that people connected with the Bush campaign engaged in activities that were either overtly anti-Semitic or could be construed that way.

Malek, who was Nixon's personnel chief at the time, issued a statement with the announcement of his resignation Sunday saying he didn't want publicity about his actions for Nixon to jeopardize the Bush campaign.

The resignation deprives Bush, at least temporarily, of direct control over the national party during the fall campaign.

Malek's resignation followed the departure last week of Jerome Brentar as co-chairman of Bush's campaign organization for ethnic groups. Brentar, a Cleveland travel agent, had been an active defender of Ohio autoworker John Demjanjuk, who was extradited and convicted in Israel of being a Nazi war criminal.

Last week, the Washington Jewish Week newspaper reported that Brentar was active in groups that denied the existence of the Holocaust and that he had made anti-Semitic statements. The report named several members of Bush's ethnic coalition who had ties to fascistic and anti-Semitic groups.

"What at first seemed to be a few unsettling errors in judgment in the Bush campaign now seems to be growing into a pattern of astonishing insensitivity that is totally inappropriate for an American presidential campaign," Rep. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y., said Sunday in a statement.

Dukakis, who has taken a more aggressive stance in recent days, spoke Sunday with congressional leaders in Boston about his image on national security and foreign policy issues and promised to "restate my positions forcefully" this week.

Among the nearly dozen members of Congress who attended the meeting were Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee; Rep. Les Aspin of Wisconsin, Nunn's counterpart in the House, and former presidential candidate Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee.

Dukakis acknowledged after the meeting that he had some differences with leading defense spokesmen of his party, most of whom are more hard-line, but promised a consensus-oriented approach to setting Pentagon priorities.

"What you see here is an example of the way we're going to make national security policy beginning in January 1989," Dukakis said. "With a president and a Congress that work together."

Dukakis has undergone repeated criticism from the Bush campaign.

Will faithful be called to heaven, or author be called to account?

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Scores of religious fundamentalists are heeding an author's predictions that a prelude to Christ's second coming is near and some are selling their worldly goods to prepare for the end of the world.

The "Rapture" is expected to strike before sunset Tuesday, according to the book "88 Reasons Why The Rapture Will Be In 1988," which was written by former NASA rocket engineer Edgar C. Wisenant.

He used mathematical calculations and biblical interpretations to pinpoint the event to the 48 hours of this year's Jewish New Year — 40 years and 120 days after Israel became a nation on May 14, 1948.

According to his book, millions of the faithful will be suddenly, silently called to Heaven this week and global disasters will follow.

In West Virginia, a minister reported a baptism boom and in Ohio a retired firefighter spent $3,700 for a newspaper ad to tell people that Jesus Christ will return this week to take believers to heaven.

Ed Koval said the cost of the ad in The Blade of Toledo was "a pittance, because if this is true and it does come to pass, what's money anyway?"

Most religious leaders say there is no evidence to support claims that the Rapture will occur this week.

Randy Thompson, director of the Christian Studies Center in New Haven, Conn., said the Rapture appeals mainly to fundamentalist Christians who interpret the Bible as the literal word of God.

"It's just a sign of the times — people are looking for reassurance that it's going to happen," said Dr. E.S. Hanrahan, dean of the College of Science at Marshall University in Huntington, W. Va.

Rabbi Victor Urecki of B'Nai Jacob, a Conservative Jewish synagogue in Charleston, W.Va., said he was being swamped with calls from Christians as Rosh Hashana neared.

"I've been telling people who call that I'll see them Tuesday," he said. "I'm not too worried about it."

But some Christians are taking it seriously and are selling off their valuables in anticipation that they will soon be in the Kingdom of God.

Durham, N.C., television station WTVD reported that several residents last week put their cars and a boat up for sale in anticipation of the event.

Many preachers talked about the Rapture in their Sunday sermons.

"Will it happen? I'm not a date-setter...but I'm not a fool, either," said the Rev. Max Allman of Peoples Memorial Christian Church in Burlington, N.C., who urged worshipers to "check out their priorities."

Allman, pastor of Peoples Memorial, said the event had created a revival at his church, with attendance doubling in recent weeks to more than 700 at Sunday and 350 at weeknight services.

"This has made them (people) understand that in a flash this could all be over," he said.

"The Lord is coming back. I'm looking at it about any time now," said Jerry McLamb, 37, of Coats, N.C. He said he and workers at his automobile engine shop had rushed to complete customers' orders last week, possibly their last.

But not everyone who believes in the return of Jesus Christ says that his visit is at hand.

"I just don't feel that the Lord is ready to destroy the earth," said Chris Avery, whose husband is pastor of the Hill Street Baptist Church in Asheville.

She said Missionary Baptist churches, like many mainstream denominations, teach that Jesus will return and Christians will go to Heaven, but "we aren't looking for it like that."

Setting dates for the Second Coming of Christ began as early as the 14th century, said Jim Megivern, chairman of the religion department at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. He called it "calendarizing," or taking the Bible to its most literal extremes.

James Efird, professor at Duke University's Divinity School, said history has recorded numerous instances where people awaited Christ's coming.

Baptists seek to divert funds to moderate causes

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Moderate Southern Baptists plan to meet in November to develop a strategy for channeling their donations away from conservative causes.

The Southern Baptist Alliance ended its meeting in Nashville this weekend resolved to divert donations to causes favored by moderates within the 14.7 million-member Southern Baptist Convention.

But the group's finance committee — faced with trust funds, foundations, escrow accounts and various other plans — could not settle on a systematic strategy for channeling donations to projects favored by moderates within the conservative-dominated denomination.

Instead, Alliance officials said they would develop a donation plan at the board's November meeting in Charlotte, N.C.

The Rev. Bill Sherman of Woodmont Church in Nashville said moderates must stand up for "broad programs" that contain representation of both left and right factions. He said such programs characterized SBC ministries before conservatives began edging moderates out.

"Our task is neither to repossess the SBC nor replace it," Sherman said. "When I die, God isn't going to ask me, Did you repossess the SBC and what was the score?...He will ask, Did you preach the Gospel? Did you help the helpless?"

The Rev. Tom Graves of Charlotte, N.C., urged moderate Southern Baptists to accept the death of the SBC "as we knew it" and take that as an opportunity to create a more inclusive church.

"There's been a death in the family — no, a death of the family — and life will never be the same again," Graves told about 700 people gathered at the meeting.

Crowd cheers Cuban exiles

MIAMI (AP) — A waiting crowd cried, laughed, cheered and sang as 671 Cubans who had been exiles in Panama and Costa Rica arrived by air after months or years of separation from relatives living in south Florida.

"This is the happiest day of my life," a teary-eyed Elena Socarras, said after being reunited with her daughter, Zoila Menendez of North Miami, on her arrival Sunday from Panama. "I have wanted to live in this country all my life."

Ms. Sacarras had been waiting in Panama for a visa since 1984, when she left Cuba.

Three planes — two from Costa Rica and one from Panama — brought the exiles in an operation organized by the Miami-based Cuban American National Foundation, the first private U.S. group to sponsor refugees under a recently approved federal program.

There were 293 refugees from 102 families aboard the first flight, which arrived from Costa Rica early Sunday at Miami International Airport.

"It was extremely exciting," foundation staff member Fernando Rojas said. "They were all tremendously happy to see their family members, family members who they haven't seen in years."

Sixteen Cubans who had been scheduled to arrive Sunday were left behind in Costa Rica and Panama because of minor problems with their paperwork, foundation spokeswoman Brenda Moreira said. All were expected to travel to Miami by month's end, she said.

Under a special agreement with the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, the arriving refugees were whisked through Customs, immigration and public health checks at a special staging area set up to speed them to official welcoming ceremonies and family reunions at suburban Tamiami Park.

School buses donated for the occasion carried the new arrivals to the ceremonies directly from the international terminal gates.

The new immigration program allows up to 4,000 refugees to come to the United States to live if they obtain private sponsors and proof they have support and medical coverage for two years.

The arrival of the three planeloads of refugees marked the end of a two-year effort by the foundation to get Cubans here from third countries.

Environment issue needs in spotlight

The environment seems to be the forgotten issue of the presidential election campaign. Vice President Bush and Gov. Dukakis are making a big mistake in not paying greater attention to it. With the attention the environment is getting from several quarters, it would not be unrealistic to say that environmental issues could swing a million or more votes.

Dukakis devoted only one sentence to it in his acceptance speech at Atlanta and has referred only obliquely to the environment since then. Bush offered somewhat more — in his acceptance address as well as a few campaign references. But both candidates essentially have avoided the subject. Yet, as an issue, the environment cuts across party lines and represents an important swing vote.

There is much to talk about nowadays on the subject. At the present time, the environment is one of the most discussed public concerns in the nation. Consider these aspects:

■ Questions on the greenhouse effect amid record summer heat.

■ Increasing ozone smog amid destruction of the ozone layer causing, among other problems, more skin cancer from the sun.

■ Massive fires that have devastated Western forests leaving major questions and concerns in their wake.

■ Sweeping pollution of coastal waters caused by ocean dumping of industrial and medical waste, sewage, debris from nearby communities, as well as fertilizer and pesticide runoffs.

■ Poisons and algae are strangling marine life in Chesapeake Bay, Long Island Sound, San Francisco Bay, even Boston harbor.

■ Rising concern about the effects of acid rain.

There's ample evidence that the nation is in the midst of severe environmental problems, but the candidates are virtually ignoring them. This does not reflect the times and is politically unwise.

The subject of nuclear power plants alone creates deep gut feelings across the land. It is not a burning debate at the moment, but has been in the past and will again in the future.

Bush has captured some high ground by promising to call for an international conference on environmental problems if he is elected. But neither candidate has spelled out a comprehensive, credible environmental program. They may find out on election day that clean water and air were the political chemistry needed for victory.

Arms dealer complicated peace talks

WASHINGTON — The agonizing story can now be told about why President Reagan's secret overtures to Iran blew up in his face, with a backfire that turned a noble venture into a political scandal. The records, still under court seal, point an accusatory finger at one man — international finagler Manucher Ghorbanifar.

Jack Anderson

His treachery kept the United States from regaining a foothold in Iran and may have set back the peace efforts in the Persian Gulf by two years.

The story began in 1985 when the White House learned that the struggle to succeed Ayatollah Khomeini had already begun. The Ayatollah's Byzantine regime was divided between the radicals, who wanted to carry on the revolution, and the pragmatists, who believed they should settle down to governing Iran.

The cantankerous Khomeini was an incurable revolutionary who blessed the radicals and anointed one of his clones, Ayatollah Hossein Ali Montazeri, as his successor. But the wily leader of the pragmatists, Speaker of the Parliament Hashemi Rafsanjani, had managed to keep his head an inch below the purge line while he consolidated his power.

Reagan ordered his subordinates to establish contact with Rafsanjani, if possible, and make any moves that would help him gain control of Iran. The hope was that Rafsanjani could bring peace and stability to this strategic area, which is exactly what he proceeded to do when he eventually gained power two years later. It is now clear that Reagan was on the right track.

To implement the president's order, the late Director of Central Intelligence, William Casey, and then-National Security Advisor, Robert McFarlane, turned to Israel, whose covert operations were legendary. The Israelis had also developed a back channel to Iran.

The Israeli contact turned out to be Ghorbanifar, an Iranian, who had access to an official in the prime minister's office. This official, Mousen Kangarlu, code-named the "Australian," was a tailor's son who spoke kindergarten English.

The CIA's professionals immediately notified the White House that Ghorbanifar was an international wheeler-dealer who had been caught in so many lies and self-serving promotions that they had issued a "burn notice" about him. This was a warning circulated throughout the U.S. intelligence community that he couldn't be trusted and shouldn't be dealt with. But the Israeli covert specialist with whom the United States was dealing, Amiram Nir, insisted on using the man.

Ghorbanifar cheerfully submitted to CIA lie-detector tests that lasted five hours. "The only questions he passed were his name and his nationality," snorted George Clair of the CIA. Later McFarlane described Ghorbanifar as "the most despicable man" he had ever met.

From the first, the ignominious but irrepressible Ghorbanifar guided the negotiations in the direction of his bank account. He tried to promote an arms-for-hostages trade that would enrich himself as the middleman. Knowing that the Iranians needed weapons and the Americans wanted their hostages back, he persuaded each side to offer what the other wanted as a "good faith gesture." He escalated the promises that both sides offered and heightened expectations until the Iranians angrily accused the Americans of playing a "cheating game."

But, Ghorbanifar, whose hands were faster than American eyes, also had the White House so confused that Lt. Col. Oliver North complained in a secret memo, "Ghorbanifar always claims to be borrowing and then getting paid in part, and rolling debts and raising costs. (It's) very, very confusing, and it is impossible for us to follow exactly what it is that he is doing."

In the end, Ghorbanifar double-crossed both sides by tipping off Rafsanjani's rival, Ayatollah Montazeri, about the White House mission. In a letter meant for Montazeri's eyes only, but later intercepted, Ghorbanifar wrote, "This is to keep you informed about a matter of vital interest to our beloved country." He went on to describe the mission from the "Great Satan Land."

The radical Montazeri, the ayatollah who is reportedly in charge of assassinations, hijackings and hostage takings, blew the lid off the Reagan overtures in an attempt to discredit Rafsanjani. The repercussions shook the Reagan administration to its foundations after critics learned that profits from the Iranian arms sale had been diverted to the Nicaraguan contras.

PENTAGATE — The Senate investigation into the Pentagon procurement scandal has taken a new twist. Senate investigators have uncovered evidence that some foreign governments may have used defense consultants as spies. The consultants are hired by foreign firms, ostensibly to obtain contract information. But the information is often highly sensitive and secret. Senate investigators believe that might constitute espionage. They are investigating consultants who have had contracts with Belgium, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and South Korea. All are friendly countries, but investigators think some of the operations were intended to secure military information.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Budget cuts may or may not have hurt the level of service at Veterans Administration hospitals. Front-line employees at the hospitals have complained to Congress that the budget cuts are hurting deeply. Congressional investigators counted VA hospital beds and concluded that the higher-ups at the VA closed more than 13,000 of them, but kept that under wraps so as not to bad-mouth the Reagan budget. Now the VA administrator says it isn't so. We're inclined to agree with Rep. G.V. "Sonny" Montgomery, D-Miss., who told the Washington Post the VA is "either oblivious to the problem ... or is toeing the administration line with little regard for its consequences to America's veterans." Neither option is pretty.

'Slease factor' on back burner now

WASHINGTON — House ethics investigators are hearing from witnesses and plowing through stacks of documents as they look into Speaker Jim Wright's financial affairs.

Roberson

In response to allegations against Wright, a Fort Worth Democrat, by Georgia Republican Rep. Newt Gingrich, the committee is trying to learn whether the Texan improperly used his influence, staff, or campaign funds to benefit himself, business associates or political backers.

While Wright is going about the routine business of running the House with little apparent concern for the activities of the committee, some political observers say the "Wright matter" may have caused Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis to refrain from making the Reagan-Bush administration's so-called "slease factor" a major campaign issue.

Early in this election year, the Republican "slease factor" — exemplified by criminal investigations of former Atty. Gen. Edwin Meese and convictions of two former White House officials — was expected to be a major Democratic theme.

"It (the Wright probe) would have to make the Democrats go slow," said Dane Strother, a consultant who specializes in helping Southern candidates. "On the other hand, the Republicans can't talk 'slease,' either. I would be shocked if they said anything about Wright."

Strother added that he believes the Wright matter — which was big news back in June — has faded from public view. "When was the last time you heard about it?" he asked.

Another veteran Democratic campaigner said, however, he doubts that Dukakis is being restrained from discussing Republican ethics problems by Wright's problems. He said he couldn't explain why Dukakis hasn't made it a campaign issue.

Members of the ethics panel are famous for their methodical, if plodding, examination of cases before them. They hired a special counsel, Chicago lawyer Richard J. Phelan, on July 2, but have made no public statement about their probe.

A Wright staffer said, "We're staying as far away from them as we can." But he added: "We have given them tons of documents, and we just hope they hurry up."

The committee met again last week in closed door session but would not comment on what progress it made, if any.

John C. White, the Texan who chaired the Democratic National Committee in the 1970's, spelled out for reporters a prescription for carrying Texas this year:

Recalling former House Speaker Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill's observation that "all politics is local," White said the Democrats should go into Texas with a national message tailored for local consumption on energy, the precarious condition of the financial community and agriculture.

"With (Sen.) Lloyd Bentsen on the ticket, the Democrats ought to go to Texas offering a way to rebuild the state's economy," said White. "If we can't do that, we don't deserve to win."

White, a trusted adviser to Jesse Jackson, the runner-up for the Democratic presidential nomination, still is trying to build bridges between Jackson and Dukakis so that the fiery black orator can help stir up some excitement in the Democrats' campaign.

"You've heard of the August doldrums?" White asked. "Well, this campaign has the September doldrums."

Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Houston, who has a name for himself in Congress and around the world because of his work in documenting and fighting hunger, returned last week from a trip to Vietnam and reported that food shortages there threaten three million people.

Approximately 1.2 million of those threatened by starvation are children 14 years old and younger, most of them in the northern provinces of the country, Leland said.

The congressman led a five-man delegation, including Texas Reps. Albert G. Bustamante, D-San Antonio, and Solomon P. Ortiz, D-Corpus Christi, on the fact-finding trip.

They discussed with top Vietnamese officials the politically sensitive prisoner-of-war and missing-in-action issues. They also raised the possibility of establishing a diplomatic "interest section" in Hanoi to improve communications between the United States and Vietnam.

The two countries do not have diplomatic relations.

The congressmen returned with 12-year-old Nguyen Hoang Dun and his 15-year-old sister, Nguyen Thi Kim Anh, children of Houston resident Son Van Nguyen.

"The father, formerly a civilian employee of an American company in Vietnam, has been desperately trying to reunify his family following his escape from that country in the early 1970's," said Leland.

Let's deal with South Africa, but do it fairly

Foreign policy debates in America are frequently conducted in terms set by communist propaganda — but, for less sinister reasons, than one might at first think.

Charley Reese

There are three things which frighten an American liberal out of his skin — to be thought a racist, to be thought a sexist, and to be thought a red-baiter.

The consequence of the latter fear is that most American liberals simply pretend that the Communist Party, its various overt and covert cadres, its front groups, its agents of influence, and its expensive propaganda machinery simply do not exist. The result is that communist propaganda positions are frequently assumed as if by osmosis without ever thinking them through.

Nowhere is this more clear than in public debate on South Africa. In the U.S., Americans are still acting, like the Marxist-Lenist African National Congress wishes them to act, as if the issue were apartheid. How can the U.S. force South Africa into abandoning apartheid?

In South Africa, however, the debate is what kind of post-apartheid society can be built. The present government of South Africa, in words and actions as clear as could be, sometime ago publicly abandoned apartheid as a policy. That this government, praised by such a long-time South African critic of apartheid as Alan Paton, has received no credit in American public debate only illustrates the simplistic nature of public demagoguery.

The "Journal of Defense and Diplomacy" recently summarized the actions taken by South Africa to rid itself of apartheid. Here is a short summary of a process which began in 1976 and gained momentum in the 1980s under the Reagan Administration's constructive engagement policy, which Congress scrapped by imposing economic sanctions.

From 1976 to 1979, sports and athletic competition were desegregated, job reservation laws were partially scrapped, and 99-year leasehold home ownership was granted to blacks.

Since 1980, leading hotels, restaurants, libraries and sports facilities have been desegregated; Wage Act of 1957 amended to prohibit racial wage discrimination; trade unions opened to all races; Small Business Development Act enacted to serve all races, replacing a biased law; self-governing councils instituted for blacks at local level; blacks join government and quasi-government boards — Housing Commission, Prime Minister's Economic Advisory Council; new constitution adopted by referendum creating parliament for mixed races and asians; blacks vote for mayors and town councils to govern local communities; legalized employment discrimination eliminated; universities desegregated; restrictions on movement of blacks in Western Cape abolished; city business districts opened to all races; Immorality Act of 1950 and 1957 repealed; Prohibition of Mixed Marriages Act repealed; Prohibitions of Political Interference Act of 1968 repealed; Environmental Planning Act amended to repeal ceilings on black workers; forced removal of blacks to homelands ended; freehold land ownership rights extended to urban blacks; Admission of Persons to the Republic Act of 1972 amended to repeal all references to race and color; amnesty offered to Nelson Mandela and other ANC members in prison if they renounce violence; Liquor Act of 1977 amended to allow blacks in establishments in white areas; Reservation of Separate Amenities Act repealed; Black (Urban Areas) Consolidation Act of 1945 repealed, ending some influx control of movements of blacks into urban areas; Black Abolition of Passes and Coordination of Documents Act of 1952 repealed; Black Affairs Administration Act of 1971 repealed; and 34 other laws or parts thereof which deal with influx controls and pass laws were repealed.

Only two major apartheid laws remain — Group Areas Act of 1966 and the Population Registration Act of 1950. Eventually, they will go, too. Let us deal with South Africa on the basis of fact, not propaganda.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Movie protestors give too much temptation

I never would have spent the money to go see the movie "The Last Temptation of Christ" if it hadn't been for all those blue-noses trying to get people to boycott it.

Grizzard

I'm like that. As soon as the do-gooders begin preaching against something, I've simply got to see for myself what the trouble's all about.

When the county fair came one year, the preacher took the ladies' Bible class out to the fairgrounds to try to put an end to the hootchie-cootchie show.

The very next afternoon, me and these two other fools climbed under the tent and received a marvelous blessing indeed.

I can still recall the thrill of watching one of the hootchie-cootchiettes performing what the announcer called her "airplane dance."

"Wait'll you see her tail spin, boys," he said.

When there was all that uproar about "Deep Throat," I couldn't wait to see it. And I still buy an occasional Penthouse magazine because Jerry Falwell is against it, and I even once tried to put leaded gasoline in my car simply because the little sign on the dashboard read "unleaded gasoline only."

Once a rebel, always a rebel.

I went to see "TLTOC." I was disappointed there were no protestors. Earlier I had read in news accounts there were all sorts.

There were cops, though. Four of them. Three to search the purses of those entering the theater and one who sat in an aisle seat, looking quite bored.

"Why are you checking pocketbooks?" I asked one of the policemen.

"You never know what somebody might try to bring in here," he said.

I never thought of that. Some of these fundamentalists go off the deep end and start talking to God.

What if God said to one of them, "Go blow up this movie theater."

I took an aisle seat in the back in case I had to make a quick exit.

The movie: What was all the commotion about? First, there was a notation on the screen that it wasn't based on any gospel but on a novelist's imagination.

Secondly, the sex scene involving Jesus and Mary Magdalene is simply a dream and not much steamier than what you can see on the afternoon TV soap operas, and, thirdly, Jesus comes off as a man of the flesh attempting to cope with a higher plane of spirit.

Duality, and that's sort of the way I had it figured in the first place.

He's scorned, and he's tempted, and, finally, Satan offers him a way off the agony of the cross.

But Jesus won't have anything of it, and you know the rest of the story.

What bothered me, the more I thought about it, was here I sat watching a movie about a man who stands for love and peace and I've got four cops around to protect me from some of his more zealous followers.

Forgive them, Lord, for they have not a clue.

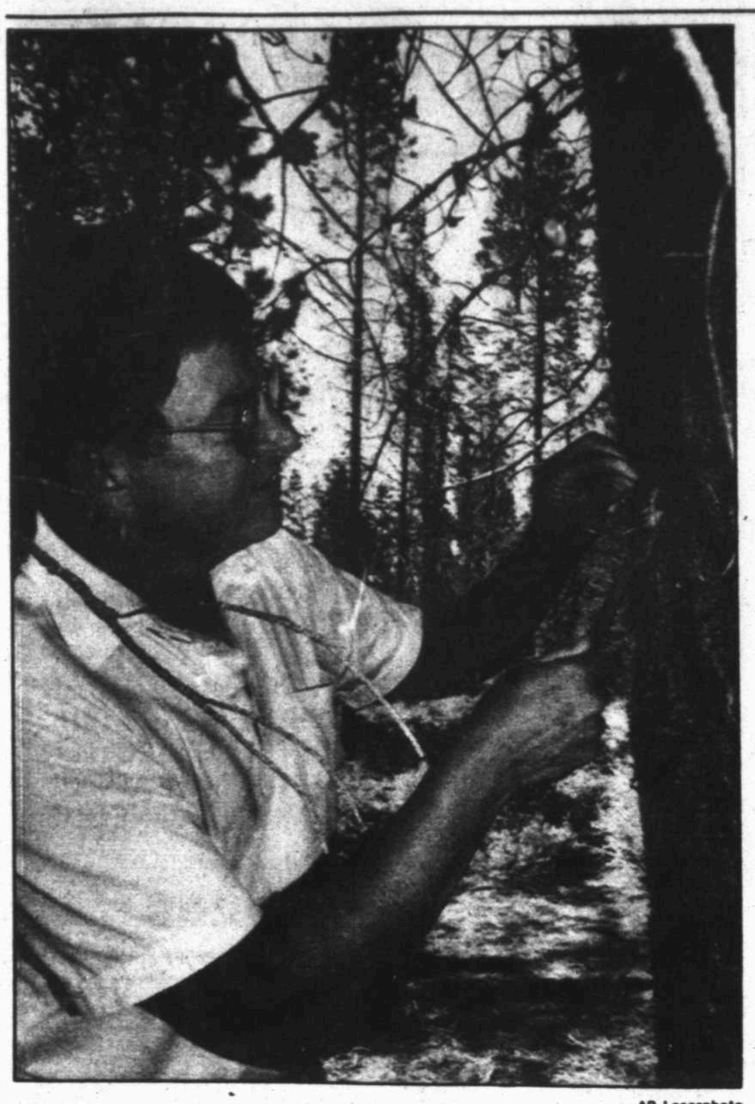
Pine beetles cut way through West's forests



AP Laserphoto

U.S. Forest Service entomologist Russ Mitchell digs into the bark of a lodgepole pine that has been attacked by mountain pine beetles near Bend, Ore.

BEND, Ore. (AP) — Swarms of mountain pine beetles are cutting a deadly swath through the West, creating fuel for forest fires as they kill huge, dense plots of trees from Montana to New Mexico and Colorado to California.

The insect, about the size of a big pinhead, destroys about 2 million acres of timber a year nationwide.

Last year it ravaged 2.4 million acres, with more than half of that — 1.4 million acres — on the eastern side of the Cascade Range in Oregon. The year before, 3.4 million acres were wiped out.

By comparison, wildfires have consumed nearly 3.8 million acres this year, an area larger than Connecticut.

"Basically, what we've had is a tidal wave rolling down to the south," says Dave Bridgwater, an entomologist at the U.S. Forest Service's regional office in Portland.

The "wave" has been rolling through an area of lodgepole pine on the eastern slope of the Cascades in central Oregon. Though it prefers lodgepole, the beetle also attacks more valuable pine species such as ponderosa, sugar, Western white and whitebark.

The result is large parcels of dead trees that amount to a tinderbox.

About 4,000 acres of dead lodgepole helped fuel a fire that consumed more than 11,000 acres in the Deschutes National Forest this summer.

Beetle-killed forest land also was a factor in the massive forest fires in Yellowstone National Park, said Tom Hofacker, an entomologist at the Forest Service's national headquarters in Rosslyn, Va.

"The lodgepole pine forest is regenerated through these fires," said Hofacker. "In another 80 to 100 years it gets killed again by the mountain pine beetle. Ten to 15 years after that the trees start falling down, and the stage is set for another fire."

Russ Mitchell, an entomologist in Bend, uses a chisel designed for cracking open human skulls on the autopsy table to dig into the bark of lodgepole pines that are as good as dead.

"I wish I could talk to these things," he said, uncovering a male beetle burrowing under the bark toward a female.

Though the tree still looked green and healthy, it will be red and dead by next spring, overwhelmed by hordes of insects and the accompanying fungus that finishes off the trees.

"One tree will be selected by what you might call pioneer beetles," said Mitchell. "The females pick the tree out."

Trees weakened by a lack of water emit a gas that the beetles can smell, Bridgwater said. The insects also are attracted to the biggest trees in the area, leaving smaller trees alone.

Once the beetle starts boring into bark, it puts out a pheromone, or odor, that attracts other beetles.

Thousands of beetles bore into the tree, enough to overcome the tree's main line of defense, which is to push the beetles out with heavy flows of sap.

"When the beetle has mated, it will begin to put out another odor," said Mitchell. "It says, 'This place is full.' "

Beetles will move on to another tree. Within three years, they can move through an entire stand.

What actually kills the trees is the fungus, whose spores ride along on the beetle's back.

Researchers are looking at pheromones as a way of managing the beetles, Mitchell said.

Wind-whipped blaze forces second evacuation

LAKE WILDWOOD, Calif. (AP) — A wind-whipped fire that destroyed 13 homes and burned pleasure boats on a lake forced residents of this affluent Gold Rush country town to evacuate a second time today.

The fire was fanned by 30 mph gusts and fueled by drought-dry bush, wood roofs and propane tanks which exploded like small bombs, said state Department of Forestry spokesman Charlie Jakobs. Flames destroyed 20 to 30 structures, including 13 homes.

"The fire laid down a little during the night but picked up this morning," he said of the blaze in the Sierra Nevada foothills.

More than 1,220 federal, state and local firefighters were on the fire lines today in one of California's most scenic and historic areas, Jakobs said.

Residents of this mountain town of 4,500 people 45 miles northeast of Sacramento and the tiny town of Rough and Ready were evacuated Sunday, and Highway 49 was closed.

They were allowed to begin returning home this morning, but were ordered evacuated again later.

Nevada County officials declared a state of emergency, initiating a process to make the county eligible for more state and federal assistance.

Most schools in the area were closed. Thick smoke made it unsafe to operate school buses and the Red Cross needed some schools for evacuation centers.

A firefighter suffered minor hand burns when flames engulfed his bulldozer, forcing him to wrap himself in an asbestos blanket and take refuge under his vehicle.

Meanwhile, a new fire broke out less than a half mile from the main blaze and burned 700 acres by early today, said Erin Connelly, spokeswoman for the U.S. Forest Service. She estimated the overall acreage at 12,000.

The main fire, which began Sunday morning along Highway 49 about 30 miles northwest of Nevada City, was apparently caused by an illegal burn of debris, said U.S. Forest Service spokeswoman Ann Dow.

Before their evacuation, weary, soot-smeared homeowners used chain saws and hoses in an effort to keep the fire from spreading.

"We're ready to leave if we have to, but until then we'll stay and help out," resident Gary Hultquist, 41, said Sunday night as he helped hose down a neighbor's burning house. "Everything you got could go up in flames."

Some made sure families and animals were safe, then returned to battle the blaze after nightfall as hot spots glowed in the hills.

"Nobody expected it to come in fast like this," said Mike Fitzgerald, 38, said as he cut down a large, smoldering tree in his yard.

He looked sadly at a neighbor's house that had caught fire and burned as flames hopscotched through the area.

"God, what a heartache. It wasn't that nice a house. It was just a house, but it was their home," Fitzgerald said.

Firefighter Bernie Paul, 31, suffered hand burns after fire swept over his bulldozer.

"I thought I was done for more than once," Paul said. "It feels good to be alive."

Cultural events 'blossoming,' while colleges cut courses

WASHINGTON (AP) — Colleges and universities are losing interest in literature, language and history but Americans are showing a "remarkable blossoming" of interest in cultural events, spending more money on them than on sports events, a government report says.

The report by Lynne V. Cheney, chairwoman of the National Endowment for the Humanities, says the high cost of education may be causing more students to avoid liberal arts subjects in favor of courses that will give them a money-making career.

While the number of bachelor's degrees awarded increased 88 percent in the past two decades, degrees in the humanities dropped 33 percent, said her report released Sunday. Foreign language majors were down 29 percent, English majors 33 percent, philosophy majors 35 percent and history majors 43 percent, it said.

The 73-page report ordered by Congress says too many colleges are neglecting the achievements of Western culture while requiring ethnic courses, treating literary masterpieces as political documents, stressing publishing rather than teaching, and dealing in topics so specialized that they have little meaning outside the academic world.

The report says museums, libraries, educational TV stations, state humanities councils and private historical societies provide so much education that they have become "a kind of parallel school," reaching millions of people outside college campuses.

"The remarkable blossoming of the humanities in the public sphere is one of the least noted, though most important, cultural developments of the last few decades," writes Mrs. Cheney.

The $140 million endowment she has headed since May 1986 provides grants to scholars, colleges, museums, libraries and other institutions to promote the humanities.

Citing a variety of sources, the report gives several examples of increased public interest in the humanities, including record high book sales, a doubling of the number of historical organizations in 20 years to nearly 10,000, and a 660 percent increase in visitors to the National Gallery of Art in Washington since 1957.

Americans who spent twice as much on sports events as on cultural endeavors 20 years ago are now spending more on culture — $3.4 billion compared with $3.1 billion for sports in 1986, said a news release accompanying the report. It gave no details on how the figures were obtained or what cultural events were included.

The report says that while some have argued that television is the enemy of books, people are actually both watching television and reading, with book sales up 400 percent since television was rare 40 years ago.

Mrs. Cheney credits television with increasing the sale of some books which have been the basis for popular dramas or subjects of discussion on educational television shows.

In assessing the academic approach to the humanities, the report says: "Viewing humanities texts as though they were primarily political documents is the most noticeable trend in academic study of the humanities today. Truth and beauty and excellence are regarded as irrelevant; questions of intellectual aesthetic quality, dismissed."

The report says Western tradition is rich and creative, but many colleges are abandoning courses that teach it.

The report says a course in great Western literature is under attack at Columbia University in New York, while Mount Holyoke College in Massachusetts and the University of Wisconsin at Madison require ethnic or Third World courses but have no Western civilization requirements.

NATION IN BRIEF

Medical pupils 'betrayed' by Oral Roberts University

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Oral Roberts University medical students say they feel betrayed by the cancellation of a scholarship program funded after evangelist Oral Roberts said God would end his life unless he raised $8 million.

Although the television preacher-faith healer said the donations would fund full scholarships for medical students at Oral Roberts University, those scholarships turned out to be loans.

New students at the Tulsa, Okla., school have been told the university has canceled the scholarship program for them.

Students also complained Roberts has pressured them to keep quiet about their dissatisfaction, the Los Angeles Times reported in today's editions.

Several students said that at the semester's opening chapel service, Roberts told them not to grumble, warning: "Keep your cotton-pickin' mouth shut!"

Roberts, on his TV programs and in letters to donors this year, has insisted he never promised the medical students anything beyond one year's help. Officials in Roberts' ministry and the medical school declined requests for comment.

Juror falls for defendant

FORT SMITH, Ark. (AP) — A juror who helped acquit 14 white supremacists accused of sedition and other crimes has fallen in love with one of the defendants and hopes to marry him, she said.

"I never knew when I was filling out the jury questionnaire that my life was going to change the way it has," Carolyn Slater, 30 and divorced, said.

She said she and David McGuire, 25, plan to marry — as soon as he gets a divorce.

The federal government contended that McGuire, 25, conspired to kill a federal judge and an FBI agent while working with other members of a now-defunct survivalist group called the Covenant, the Sword and the Arm of the Lord.

"This is who I've been looking for all my life," Ms. Slater said of McGuire.

Some of the defendants were charged with plotting to overthrow the United States government, and others were accused of transporting stolen money across state lines. All of the defendants were found innocent when the seven-week trial ended in early April.

"I know all the stuff he's done," she said. "Nobody's perfect."

Boy ready for challenge

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Thad Mitchell, the youngest pilot to fly coast to coast solo, says he's ready for another challenge.

"We were thinking about maybe crossing the Atlantic on my 17th birthday," Mitchell said Sunday afternoon shortly after completing his flight from San Diego to Jacksonville.

"We were just kidding around," Mitchell, who turned 16 on Saturday, added quickly.

The Pensacola teen-ager landed his single-engine Mooney 201 at Jacksonville International Airport less than 24 hours after leaving San Diego.

Captives forced to dig pit

WOODLAND PARK, Colo. (AP) — Seven campers armed with four shotguns, an automatic rifle and several handguns allegedly took three people captive and forced them to dig a pit for a pig roast, authorities said.

The seven men were arrested by 14 officers from several law enforcement agencies who crept up to the campsite in the mountains north of here and surrounded it Saturday, said Undersheriff Donald Christensen.

There were no injuries.

ASHLEY'S FIRST DAY

Kindergarten proves more frightening for mother than child

Ashley Free stepped from the full-time security of a 5-year-old to the world of public education on Tuesday, September 6. But as it turned out, only his mother was scared.

"I'm so nervous," says Ashley's mom, Lisa, 30, as she drives him and his 7-year-old brother, Seth, to Anson Jones Elementary in west Midland. "I'm nervous for the kids. We've been fortunate because so far we've had good teachers."

Ashley is the youngest son of Lisa and her husband, Larry, 37, who own and operate a carpet and furniture cleaning business and raise guard dogs from their south Midland home. They have two other boys, Randal, 14, and 16-year-old Cary.

As Lisa drives, she has to remind Ashley several times to stay in his seat.

"No, I am not" scared, the boy keeps telling a persistent inquisitor.

"He doesn't appreciate it that girls have that name too," his mother notes. "I keep telling him it was a boy's name first."

Ashley is completely outfitted, and with his "Roger Rabbit" backpack stowed with school supplies and a new box of tissues, he looks a bit like a soldier bound for kindergarten combat. The outfit is complete with new white tennis shoes, starch-stiff blue jeans and an "almost-new" pink and white shirt.

His bright blond hair is combed and parted.

As Lisa Free turns onto Shadylane Drive and approaches the school, she notes "our biggest problem is going to be finding a parking place." But, minutes later, with that accomplished, the LONG WALK begins.

As he tromps across the dew-soaked grass, Ashley — who has been almost silent up to this time — complains about the water messing up his new tennis shoes.

Inside the school, a stream of students and teachers course through the buzzing halls. Lisa and Ashley find his classroom, and finally meet the teacher, Patricia Brown. Mrs. Brown is also nervous, as she is teaching for the first time in seven years.

Mrs. Brown's kindergarten section is the "green apples," as first names are written on stemmed tags placed around the students' necks. Other sections wore red and yellow apple tags.

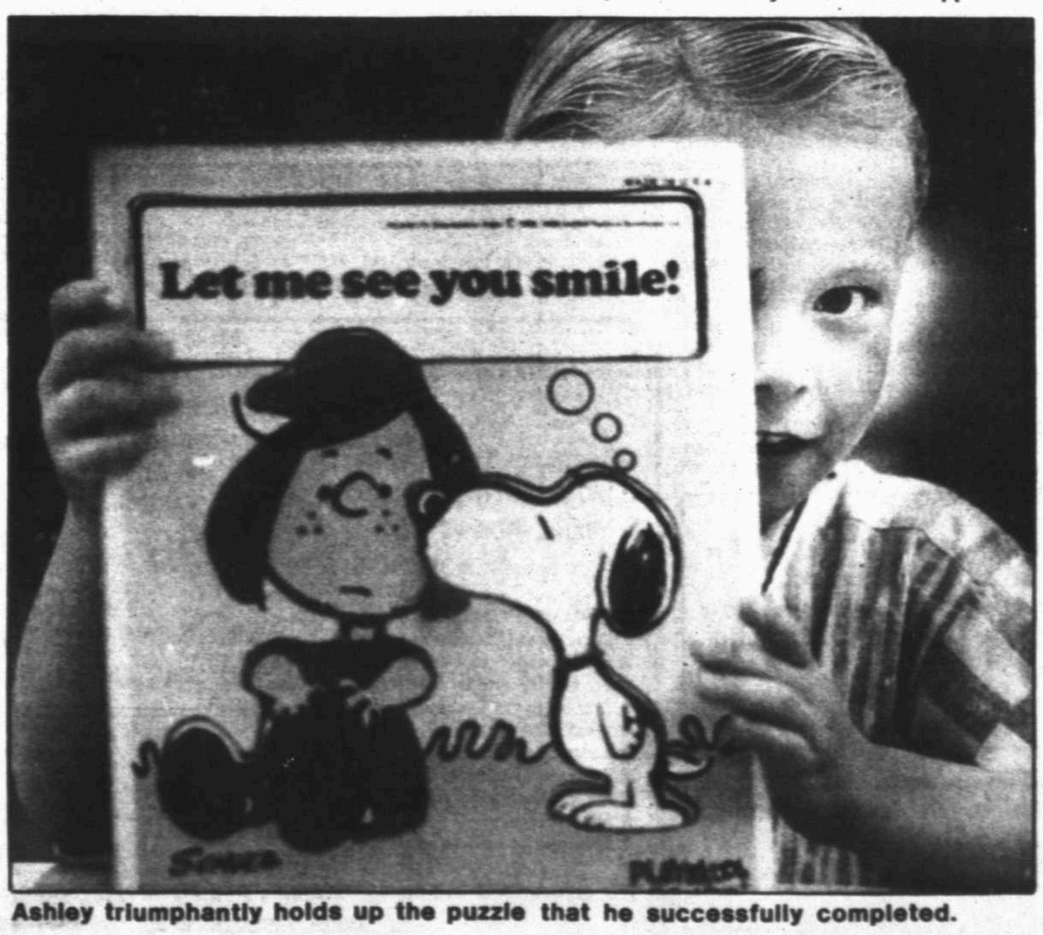
While Mrs. Brown and the other teachers, Kathy Anderson and Cheryl Worley, organize the open classroom and dozens of kindergarteners, Ashley sets his sights on a series of five-piece puzzles he quickly completes.

Next is the picture-taking session, as Mrs. Brown snaps a Polaroid of all of the students. Ashley hams it up for the camera.

The group then settles in to hear the rules of kindergarten. Outside, in halls that have been quiet for nearly an hour, the principal, Dr. Marilyn Odum, estimates that 650 kids, from Ashleys' age to fourth-graders, have descended on the school.

Please see FIRST, Page 2B

Lisa Free gets a big hug from her son Ashley after he survived his first day of kindergarten.



Ashley triumphantly holds up the puzzle that he successfully completed.

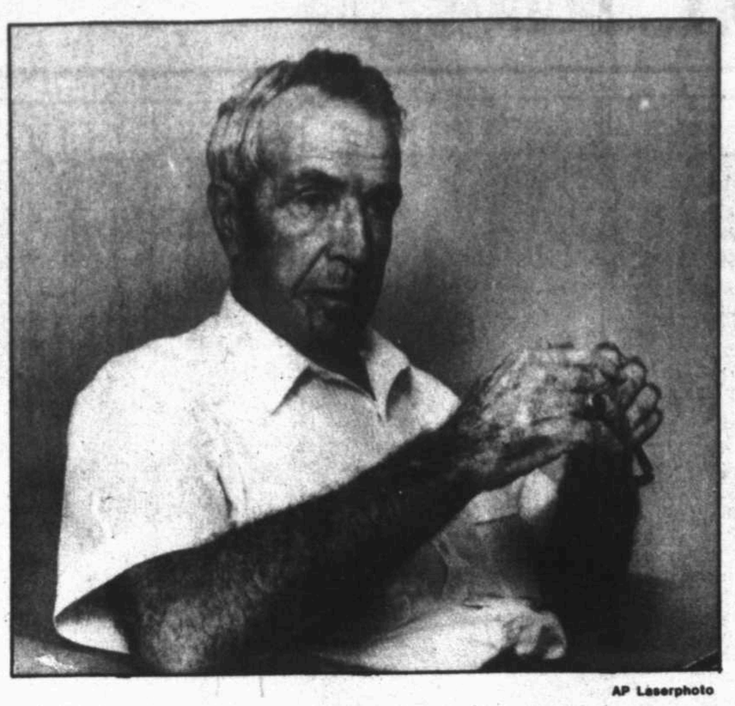
Graveside services for Selestina Martinez Costilla of Midland were scheduled for today at Fairview Cemetery with Father Domingo Estrada of Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church officiating.

Pallbearers were to be Joseph Costilla, Fidel Costilla, Jose Castilla, Johnny Castilla, Jesse Costilla and Gary Garza.

Pilot recalls 1948 Berlin airlift



AP Laserphoto

Former pilot Hugh Dale recounts his participation in the Berlin airlift during 1948. Dale was sitting at his desk when he was called up to ship supplies to the East German city.

ELM MOTT (AP) — Hugh Dale remembers the greatest feat of "airliftsmanship" in history as no big deal.

He would leave office for a day, climb behind the controls of an old C-47 transport plane, fly a trip or two to Berlin and be back at work the next day.

While in the occupation forces in Germany in 1948, Dale took part in the Berlin airlift, in which a city bigger than Dallas was kept alive for more than a year by what American air transport planes could bring in.

After a stint flying Liberator bombers over Central Europe during the war, Dale was flying a desk at the provost-marshal's office at the U.S. Air Force base at Wiesbaden.

In June 1948, Soviet forces closed off ground corridors to Berlin, the united Germany's capital city now buried in the heart of Soviet-occupied East Germany. The only way to supply the more than 2 million residents of the Western half of the city was through the air.

That's when Dale got pulled off his desk job and thrown into the first pitched battle of the Cold War.

"They notified all the pilots sitting at desks and drew up a schedule that said we were going to fly cargo into Berlin," said Dale. "It was a situation developing, and Gen. LeMay and his people came up with their solution to it. That was to supply Berlin by air."

After flying more than two dozen bombing missions, Dale called the airlift "pretty routine."

"The worst thing about it was the weather," Dale said. "It was always fairly bad," especially considering the number of planes flying in and the relatively primitive shape of navigational aids at that time. At Tempelhof, the main point for American cargo planes to offload, "you had one approach and if you missed you had to turn around and come out without landing your cargo."

Flying controls were rigidly enforced in the 20-mile-wide corridors that defined the C-47's path to Berlin, where a transport aircraft would take off every three minutes. Pilots carried everything from coal to food and raw materials for West Berlin's industry in their cargo bays.

Controllers would summon masses of pilots, planes and material to the runways of Wiesbaden. Because that airbase had to share flying space with another airbase, only four hours would be allotted to get that material in the air.

"If you didn't make it into the air in time, you might as well go home," said Dale. "Me and my crew got stranded like that several times."

Dale's stint as a pilot on the Berlin Airlift lasted only through July and August of 1948. By September, the larger, four-engined C-54s had arrived, displacing the smaller C-47s as the aircraft of choice on the Wiesbaden-to-Tempelhof transport run. That meant that much more material could be carried in the same number of airplane flights.

"Once we got the C-54s in there, we went back to what we were doing," said Dale.

Dale said he left Germany in April of the following year, more than five months before "Operation Vittles" ended Sept. 30, 1949. Dale retired as a lieutenant colonel from the Air Force in 1963.

USS Texas ready to be towed in December

HOUSTON (AP) — The USS Texas has sat rusting in its muddy berth on the Houston Ship Channel for more than four decades, but as early as December the historic battleship will be towed to a dry dock where a $13.5 million restoration effort will begin.

The Texas' once-busy gang plank is gone and its deck stands empty after officials closed the veteran of both world wars to prepare for the repair work.

The effort is meant to restore the ship to the watertight condition of the days when its 14-inch guns bombarded Iwo Jima and Okinawa. The Texas is the lone survivor of the pre-World War I dreadnought class of vessel named for the British battleship that was the first high-powered warship in the world.

Texas Parks and Wildlife Department spokesman Jim Eaves said the 74-year-old ship and nautical museum will never again be seaworthy. But historians and others who called for major repairs are pleased that the ship will be preserved for future generations.

"We have a unique piece of history. All of us should be proud that she's going to be restored," said Bernard Olive, a Baytown firefighter who founded the First Texas Volunteers, a battleship restoration group.

"What gets me is sometimes people in the Houston area don't realize how gallantly she did serve in two world wars," Olive said. "She fought in North Africa, Europe and the South Pacific. She was a real workhorse."

Officials plan for tugboats to push the 34,000-ton vessel from its berth sometime in December and take it to a shipyard for repairs. While in dry dock, crews will restore the ship's hull, deck and masts, as well as repaint its gray hull navy blue — its World War II color.

Once completed, two-thirds of the ship's seldom-seen compartments, including the boiler room, dentist's office and officers' living quarters will be open to the public, Eaves said.

A Houston company has already been working under a state contract to rig the ship with hoses and lines so workers can remove flammable oil residue from its 93 fuel tanks. The 573-foot-long ship, with its 12-story-high conning tower, cannot be towed until numerous leaks are welded.

In December, 1.7 million gallons of seawater and oil were pumped out, refloating the "Mighty T" for the first time since 1948.

Eaves said the liquids were used to settle the ship in its berth, but enacted a toll over the years. "The decision was made in good faith back then, but it hasn't helped in preserving her," he said.

Crews will soon begin dredging mud and silt to clear the way for the ship's scheduled departure and its expected return in late 1989.

After the first phase of the restoration project is complete, the Texas will return to an expanded and refurbished berth at San Jacinto State Park.

Eaves said $5.8 million so far has been raised through public and private donations for the $13.5 million project, and the battleship advisory board is trying to raise the rest of the funds.

"The restoration project and the fund-raising have picked up the pace, but we're still $8 million short of our target goal to accomplish the most crucial and essential repairs to the ship," Eaves said.

Students check out of hotels, pack up for their dormitories

DENTON (AP) — Kris Richard wasn't anxious for check-out time and a move to a regular student dormitory, but he enjoyed his brief stay at a hotel suite.

Richard was among 50 students placed in the Royal Hotel Suites when the University of North Texas ran short of campus housing because of record enrollment for the fall semester.

About 4,400 requested campus housing, but the university only had rooms and beds for 4,000.

"I'm enjoying it while I can," said Richard, before moving to campus Sunday.

The housing crunch was so severe, North Texas officials said they are studying the possibility of building a new dormitory. They tried to accommodate some of the overflow this year by converting lounge areas, storage areas and guest rooms into student rooms. But all students were supposed to be in regular student housing by today.

"It's a pain to pack up and move again, especially now that I have to start all over with two new roommates," said Becky Cain, a freshman from Houston.

Enrollment climbed to 24,580, pushing North Texas ahead of the University of Texas at Arlington to become the state's fifth-largest university.

The campus is expected to be the fastest growing through the end of this century, according to the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board.

Students used to being in classes of no more than 30 are being crammed into auditoriums with 500 others. Classroom space is in short supply and faculty are stretched thin — the College of Arts and Science alone added 200 sections, or class periods, to accommodate extra students.

Jimmie Rodgers Jubilee scheduled for Friday

From Staff Reports

KERRVILLE — The 1988 Jimmie Rodgers Jubilee will be held Friday and Saturday on the Schreiner College Campus.

The first musician to be inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame, Rodgers has influenced musicians in all fields. He's been honored by the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, the Memphis Blues Awards and the Country Music Foundation in Nashville.

"His brief career of five years is still shaping the sound of music," says a release from the Texas Heritage Music Foundation. "His death in 1933 of TB cut short the career of one of the most influential musicians of all times."

The Texas Heritage Music Foundation is a non-profit, educational organization to preserve and perpetuate traditions in Texas music.

This year, in a festival celebrating traditional country music, the Light-crust Doughboys will perform at 12:30 and 7:30 p.m. Saturday. This group's career spans half a century and reflects the living history of western music.

Organized in 1931 by Burrus Mill & Elevator Company in order to promote Light Crust Flour sales, the Doughboys were comprised of Bib Wills, fiddle and vocals; Milton Brown, vocals; Herman Arshpiger, guitar; and Truett Kimsey, announcer. The show was broadcast on KFJZ in Fort Worth five days a week for a weekly salary of $10 per man.

Alex Kennedy will travel from Iowa to emcee the yodeling contest at 5 p.m. Saturday. A founder of the Jimmie Ridgers Memorial Association with Henry Young and John Arnold, Kennedy will bring a collection of tapes of Ridgers music and these will be available at the Jubilee.

Alvin Crow and the Pleasant Valley Boys will play at the evening Western Swing Dance.

The music begins at 10 a.m. with an acoustic set by Jimmie Dale Court, Rodgers' grandson. In addition, Court's Jimmie's Texas Blues's band will play at Cedarberrys Friday.

For more information on the event, call Kathleen Hudson, 1-512-257-2486.

Wax museum director says facility will rise from ashes

DALLAS (AP) — Dr. Blood will live again, but not this Halloween.

Drew Hunter, the artistic director of the Wax Museum of the Southwest that was destroyed by fire Friday, said the museum will be rebuilt and will again repeat its extremely popular Halloween fright exhibition.

Last year the Halloween presentation drew 40,000 people in nine days.

Hunter was completing plans for this year's show, which would have been called "Asylum of Fear," when he and another employee discovered the fire that destroyed the museum and burned an estimated $8 million in wax figures and irreplaceable antiques and props.

The 300 wax figures comprised the largest collection in the nation.

Hunter said he hated to see the wax-sculpted Dr. Blood melt because he annually dressed up as a living Dr. Blood and drifted around the museum, greeting visitors. Hunter even had begun celebrating his birthday on Halloween, although it actually occurred a few days earlier.

"It's one of the things I really enjoyed doing," Hunter said. "I was sort of like a male Elvira, without some of her attributes, and I used to walk around and talk with the museum visitors."

Airport fund not used effectively

DALLAS (AP) — A federal fund established to pay for part of repair and expansion at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport and other facilities is not being used for what it was intended, officials said.

Accumulation of money in the fund is a "crying shame" at a time when airport improvements are needed nationwide, said Andrew Sobel of the Airport Operators Council International in Washington.

The Airport and Airway Trust Fund was established in 1970 so airline passengers and other commercial aviation users could pay for part of the upkeep, expansion and construction at U.S. airports.

The Federal Aviation Administration said the fund's unspent balance has increased to an all-time high of nearly $6 billion, while traffic at the nation's airports has soared beyond capacity.

D-FW Airport could easily use "a couple hundred million (dollars) over the next five years," Oris Dunham, the facility's executive director and incoming chairman of the Airport Operators Council, said Sunday.

"At D-FW Airport alone, we need new runways and new taxiways."

Police probe criminal mischief

Police Roundup

From Staff Reports

Midland Police are investigating a rash of criminal mischiefs that occurred Sunday night, Cpl. Jim White said today.

At least 40 west Midland residents reported to police this morning their car windows had been shot out with a pellet gun, White said.

There are no suspects at this time, the corporal said.

From what the police department can discern, the subject or subjects covered an area spanning the west side of Midland bounded by Wall Avenue north to Loop 250, White said.

Cars hit were parked in front of homes, White said, adding it didn't appear vehicles parked in apartment complexes were vandalized.

There is no monetary estimate on the damage and White said he believed more victims would be calling this morning.

FIRST—— Former nuclear power plant engineer says he was paid for silence

"Did you not get a good night's sleep worrying about kindergarten?" Mrs. Brown asks her 21 "green apples." Ashley sits at the back of the group silently.

After Mrs. Anderson reads from an oversized "Gingerbread Man" book, some of the children — on her cue — start looking in the classroom closets for him. They don't find anything, but he will be found before the week is out.

Two hours after the class is welcomed, all three sections take a trip outside, first to learn the crosswalk rules, then to the playground to learn the rules there. As soon as they can, they stampede toward a curly slide and a group of swings.

Ashley heads to a jungle gym, and moments later sits atop the metal tangle. But play time is soon over, and it's back to the classroom to make gingerbread puppets.

By this time, the three teachers are stealing glances at the clock as the class nears its end.

Outside, a group of anxious parents await their kindergarteners. At 11:15, the kids and parents reunite. Ashley waits.

Five minutes later, Ashley and a handful of other students are led outside. He quickly spots a van, and inside, his mother and father.

Larry Free hugs his son, and then Lisa takes her turn. Ashley is still a bundle of energy.

"How was it?" Lisa asks.

"I liked it," he says triumphantly, adding that as soon as lunch is over, he'll be ready for tomorrow.

FORT WORTH (AP) — A former engineer at the troubled Comanche Peak nuclear power plant today claimed he was paid for his silence by the plant's manager and a subcontractor after he complained of alleged safety defects in the project.

Joseph Macktal, who was an electrical engineer for Brown & Root Inc., and his attorneys have filed a motion with the U.S. secretary of labor to strike restrictive portions of a settlement agreement which Macktal claims paid thousands of dollars to him.

Macktal alleges he was forced by his former attorneys to sign the restrictive agreement with Texas Utilities and Brown & Root, the subcontractor at the plant, in settlement of a labor case.

"The agreement required that he agreed never to voluntarily testify in any court or administrative proceeding concerning Comanche Peak," said David Colapinto, a Washington labor lawyer for Macktal. "In effect, it was a gag order on his testimony of safety concerns about the nuclear power plant."

In the agreement signed in January 1987, Macktal was paid $35,000 by TU and Brown & Root, Colapinto claimed. Macktal said he was discharged from the subcontractor in January 1986 for raising safety concerns about the plant.

In another move, the Fort Worth-based Citizens for Fair Utility Rates wants to ask the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to reinstitute licensing proceedings in the Comanche Peak case.

Hearings before the Atomic Safety and Licensing Board, an arm of the NRC, on the plant were dismissed in July after Citizens Association for Sound Energy reached a $10 million agreement with TU officials.

Allegations have repeatedly surfaced about safety and construction at the project, which is more than nine years behind schedule and, at $9.1 billion, about 10 times the original price projection.

Macktal, of Stephenville, claims to have unresolved safety allegations about the plant which have never been heard by the NRC because of the settlement's restrictive terms.

"I think that the ASLB should immediately reinstitute licensing proceedings because these are serious, unresolved problems," said Colapinto. "But the Atomic Safety and Licensing Board will make the final determination."

Spokesmen for Dallas-based TU, Houston-based Brown & Root and the NRC in Washington did not immediately return phone calls today from the Associated Press.

In an affidavit filed Friday with the labor secretary, Macktal said his new concerns included plant use of Kapton wiring, which has been blamed for electrical fires in aircraft, and alleged defects in design and installation of electrical equipment.

Rap culture's popularity grows

By GLENN COLLINS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Rap is so stupid def, it's bum-rushin' the mainstream. It's housin' 'em all — word, homes.

Translation: Rap is so incredibly fine, it's breaking down the doors of mainstream society. It's bringing down the house — and that's the truth, friend.

The enduring and expanding popularity of rap music — rhythmic, rhymed chanting to a driving beat — has set off an increasingly broad-based cultural trend.

Like early rock-and-roll and the pervasive youth culture it spawned, the influence of rap is now evident in the nation's language, music, fashion and advertising.

Hip-hop, as the culture of rap is called, originated among young blacks in the Bronx in the 1970's. Instead of fading like many previous fads, rap's energy has become increasingly irresistible to an international audience of teen-agers and pre-teen-agers.

As in other subcultural trends that have matured into mass phenomena, rap language and style are entering older, more racially diverse, middle-class and suburban communities.

"Rap has really begun to get around the mainstream culture," said Robert Farris Thompson, a professor of African and Afro-American art history at Yale University.

RAPPERS THEMSELVES are surprised by their broadening popularity. "Our audiences are 50 percent white in some locations, and that would've been impossible a while ago," said the Fresh Prince. The 19-year-old rap star and his partner, D.J. Jazzy Jeff, have sold 1.3 million copies of their album "He's the D.J., I'm the Rapper," in less than two months.

The Fresh Prince, who grew up in Philadelphia, believes an important reason for this crossover success is his witty "Parents Just Don't Understand" rap video appearing on MTV, the cable music channel.

"You don't have to be from a certain background or age or color or place to understand my music," he said.

The song's narrative is set in the suburbia of shopping centers and fast-food outlets and not an urban ghetto. Its conflict between hip teen-agers and square parents is timeless.

Hip-hop words from what was once an underclass subculture are now common parlance among America's youth. "Rappers are persons of words, and those words are getting into the language," said Thompson.

Already entrenched in the teen-age vocabulary are superlatives like "def" (the best). Words like "stupid" (terrific) and "wack" (awful) are now established in both the urban and suburban teen-age lexicon irrespective of class or color.

Hip-hop music and fashion are also becoming international. "Hip-hop, the words, the look, the attitude, it's going strong in Japan, France, Germany, Belgium and England," said Afrika Bambaataa, who recently returned to New York from Italy. "It's spreading around, becoming a worldwide culture."

BAMBAATTA IS a rapper, a disk jockey and record producer and many consider him to be one of the musical progenitors of hip-hop.

Rap's influence on music is growing; gospel is now being sung to the hip-hop beat. Instead of waning in energy as mass acceptance increases, rap has continued to be enlivened by innovations and infusions of new talent.

According to industry estimates, in the last four years stores have sold $240 million worth of rap records and tapes and fans have spent $50 million to see rap groups in concert.

The hip-hop look is taken for granted among urban youths — and increasingly, among suburban teen-agers as well. Necessary to the uniform are untied Reebok, Adidas, Nike or Avia sneakers; baseball caps worn at a jaunty angle; shirts and jackets with large logos; unisex Spandex, denim or bold-patterned pants; gold chains and jewelry spelling out the wearer's name; rings that span several fingers and knuckles, and headphone radios.

The ultimate status symbol is a Jeep with a roll bar for passengers to grasp while rap songs blast from a def sound system.

Some mainstream companies, like Adidas, have simply made formal relationships with performers who were already wearing their products.

Run-D.M.C. — which in 1984 became the first rap group to earn a gold record — had a best-selling record called "My Adidas" before the group formally signed a $2 million contract with the manufacturer in 1987.

Hip-hop's influence on advertising is unmistakable. A print ad in Reebok's new $35 million campaign shows 20-, 30- and 40-year-old whites dancing on a graffiti-bedaubed, hip-hoppy city street.

It and other Reebok ads, adopting the orthography of rap hits like M.C. Lyte's "I Cram 2 Understand U (Sam)," proclaim: "Reeboks Let U.B.U."

NOT ONLY is rap music appearing in mainstream movies like "Colors" with Sean Penn and "Die Hard" with Bruce Willis, but NBC plans to bring rap orthography to Saturday morning television this fall in "2 HIP 4 TV," a comedy-variety series.

Like early rock-and-roll, rap's tough sound and aggressive esthetic can be abrasive and anti-authoritarian, raising concern among some parents and critics about hip-hop's sexual explicitness, macho swaggering and association with violence.

Bambaataa said he thought rap was simply "the latest flowering of something that has been passed down from generation to generation — ritual chanting and storytelling in Africa.

"The mainstream always hoped it would be a fad that would die," Bambaataa said. But instead, he says, the distinctive hip-hop vocabulary, clothes and culture has been important in empowering and giving status to an impoverished and isolated generation of urban young people that society found threatening.

"Much of the history of pop music has been 'black innovation, white imitation,'" said Bill Adler of Rush Artist Management, which represents Run-D.M.C, L. L. Cool J., and Public Enemy.

He sees a difference, however, between rap and previous musical idioms devoured by the mainstream. "Our artists don't cross over and start performing at Harrah's," Adler said.

"Instead, the mainsteam has been coming to us."

Rap has own language

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The hip-hop slang that is finding its way into American speech is traceable to black language and inner-city speech patterns that have long been evolving, said Robert Farris Thompson, a professor of African and Afro-American art history at Yale.

"The rappers are saying 'def,' derived from 'death,'" meaning terrific, he said, "when in the 40's boppers said: 'You kill me. You send me to heaven.'"

Some of hip-hop's grammatical constructions and vocabulary have their roots in West African languages like Mande-kan and Ki-kongo, Thompson said. "For example, the style of rap boasts, and the way in which badness is turned inside out, derives from the metaphoric characteristics of Mande-kan," he said. An examples is a hip-hop word like "stupid," which is turned around to mean "terrific."

These are some other hip-hop words in vogue.

- B-boy, b-girl. n. (from break for break-dance? from beat?) a devotee of rap music
- Bum-rush vt. (reversal of "bum's rush" for eject) to invade, break down the doors
- Chill adj. (from cool, in the teen-age slang meaning) highly popular, au courant
- Chill vi. to relax, lounge, be casual (I was chillin' with my homeboys on the corner)
- Dis vt. to show disrespect (often past tense: I dis'd him)
- Dope adj. (from dope, slang for drugs) superb, outstanding (That's a dope Porsche)
- Fresh adj. new, fashionable (She's so stupid fresh) (considered passe by many rappers)
- Front vi. putting up a front, dissembling (He frontin' so forget him)
- Hard adj. authentic, tough, muscular (Jive me them hard jams every time)
- Homes n. (from homeboy, slang for companion) neighbor, friend (Yo, homes!)
- House vt. (from bring the house down) have a major success, gain great acclaim (Jazzy Jeff housin' the Garden)
- Hyped adj. energetic, exciting (That D.J.'s too hyped)
- Jam n. a musical performance, record or party (That's a def jam)
- Lamp vt. (from lamppost, as in leaning on same) to take one's ease
- Wack adj. bad, dreadful (That new jam is wack)
- Wax vt. impressing, beating someone badly in a competitive duel (He waxing them and they hate it)
- Word adv. really, sincerely (as an interrogative, linked to the response "word up") Word? (Really?) Word up (I'm not lying)

Too-loud music can affect hearing

Researchers say some damage may be temporary

By ROBERT P. STUDER
Copley News Service

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. — Yes, mothers of teen-agers addicted to the blast of rock 'n' roll from stereos cranked up to the max are right — loud music can and does damage the hearing. But the damage need not be permanent and might even be avoided if the volume is turned off from time to time to give the ears a rest.

That, at least, is the implication of research now under way at the Los Alamos National Laboratory and the Central Institute for the Deaf in St. Louis.

Biomedical researchers at the two institutions report that hearing is likely to recover from the effects of loud, continual noise if the sound is cushioned by periods of quiet. And the implications go far beyond the wall-thumping beat of the teen-agers. It also strongly suggests, they say, that factory workers, heavy equipment operators and others working in noisy surroundings may suffer only temporary hearing loss if they are given regular breaks from the noise.

Don Sinex, a neurophysiologist in the Life Sciences Division at Los Alamos, puts it this way: "Our work shows that the inner ear has tremendous recovery powers. Hearing recovers even while the noise continues."

He pointed out that "almost everyone has noticed some hearing loss after being around loud noises, such as the roar of a lawn mower, but hearing seems to return to normal after a few hours or a day of quiet." His research indicates, though, that the process is even more encouraging: Healing begins quickly and continues even when the noise level elevates again.

Using animal studies, Sinex, William Clark and Barbara Bohne of the institute for the deaf, exposed chinchillas, a rodent with ear structure and hearing similar to humans, to noise at 500-hertz, a frequency comparable to factory noise. The sound was broadcast at 95 decibels, about as loud as a power saw, for 15 minutes each hour for periods ranging from four to 40 days. Each 15 minutes of noise was followed by 45 minutes of silence.

"Their hearing sensitivity returned to within 15 decibels of normal," Sinex said. "That's not debilitating by any means. It's considered clinically acceptable."

Sinex said that humans aren't likely to develop permanent hearing problems after one day in a factory, but the risks increase after months and years of exposure. And, typically, the louder the noise, the less sensitive hearing becomes, as if the ear were shutting down to protect itself. He said that researchers still don't completely understand the process of hearing loss and recovery.

But, he added, they do have their suspicions: Loud noise, like all other sound, vibrates tiny hair cells in the inner ear's cochlea, a coil of tissue that looks something like the shell of a chambered nautilus. The cochlea works like a tuning fork, picking up low-frequency vibrations on one end and high-frequency sounds on the other.

The vibrating hair cells, he said, send signals to the brain indicating the nature of a sound, whether it's high or low frequency, loud or soft. Researchers, he said, believe that constant loud noises permanently damage these tiny hair cells, and without them a person becomes deaf.

Disease causes ears to make loud screeching sound

Copley News Service

Don't you just hate it when there's a buzzing sound in your ears that no one else can hear?

Or when you walk into a room and hear a ringing sound no one else can hear?

It's enough to drive you crazy, but it could be worse.

You could come down with what Japanese physician Etsuo Yamamoto of Kyoto University has suffered from for the past 10 years, a disease called "spontaneous otoacoustic emission."

According to the journal Otolaymgology — the medical specialty concerned with the ears, nose and throat — Yamamoto's ears make a loud, high-frequency screeching sound that he can't even hear.

But everyone around him sure can.

Denial is biggest problem to solving hearing impairment

Associated Press

Some 20 million people in the United States suffer from a hearing impairment, according to the Better Hearing Institute, a trade group.

Although hearing problems affect people of all ages, they are most prevalent among adults over 65; one of every three people in that group has a hearing impairment.

But many people still fail to recognize their problem or deny it.

"Denial is one of our biggest problems," says Robert Briskey, staff audiologist at Beltone Electronics Corp., manufacturers of hearing aids and diagnostic equipment.

"Usually family members get tired of hearing, 'What did you say?'" Briskey said.

"They persuade the person to come in for testing. And the best way to find out if you have a hearing loss that warrants assistance is to simply get your hearing tested by a hearing health professional," said Briskey.

He notes some warning signs of hearing loss:

- People seem to mumble more frequently.
- You hear, but have trouble understanding.
- You find telephone conversation increasingly difficult.
- You no longer hear the ringing of a doorbell.
- You have been told that you speak too loudly.

If any of the above warning signs apply to you, experts recommend that you have your hearing tested as soon as possible by a hearing health professional.

You may be surprised at how much you've missed hearing — and at how great the world sounds.

Crossword's popularity not puzzling

By TRISH BARR
Copley News Service

Singer/actor Frank Sinatra does them in ink.

Composer Irving Berlin recently had one dedicated to him in honor of his 100th birthday.

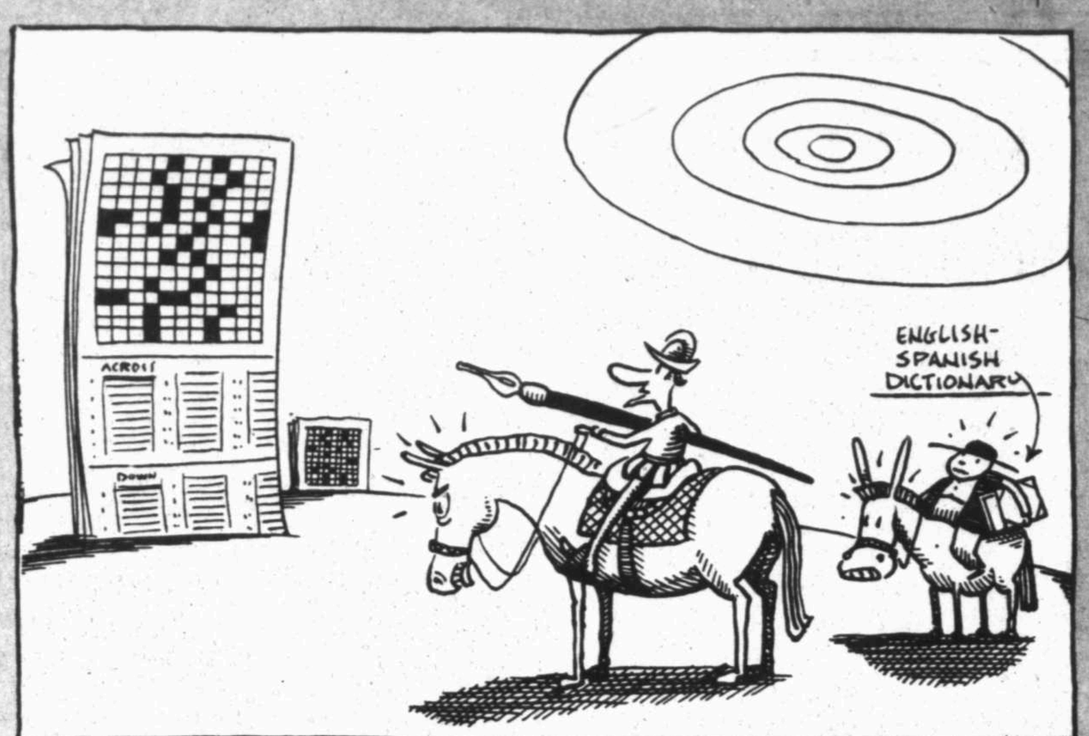
Soprano, former diva and New York City Opera director Beverly Sills claims she's so good at it that she can finish one in 10 minutes.

They're just a few people hooked on crossword puzzles. Despite the electronic age we live in, crosswords have universal appeal.

For example, the Royal Family's Princess Margaret once won a prize for one she made up, and the list of aficionados is legion.

American poet laureate Richard Wilbur and wife Charlene collaborate on their favorites in bed over coffee. Other avid fans include Ellen Burnstyn, Helen Hayes, Eli Wallach, Walter Matthau, Bette Davis, Marlene Dietrich and Joseph Cotten.

This year marks the diamond anniversary of the crossword puzzle, the first having been published 75 years ago on Dec. 21, 1913, in the New York World. Called the "Word-Cross Puzzle," it was based on an ancient word-square game played from the time of the pharaohs.



CNS Graphic

THE CROSSWORD became the rage in the 1920s when the World began printing puzzles daily — Gelett Burgess, the poet who never saw a purple cow and never hoped to see one, composed the first — and Simon & Schuster published a puzzle book that was an immediate sell-out and went into 10 reprintings.

Today, a select group creates puzzles for millions of solvers. Typically, a constructor begins as a crossword-solving fiend who can't help himself — he starts making them. And making money on them (although not much, according to industry experts).

"It takes a long time to get into it. There are lots of tricks and there are lots of pitfalls. It's not a way to earn a living, because it really takes a long time (to become proficient) and it doesn't pay that much," says Trude Michel Jaffe, Los Angeles Times Crossword Puzzle editor.

And it isn't easy to break into constructing. Eugene T. Maleska, considered the present dean of the crossword, says he could hold a Guinness record for the number of his puzzles that were rejected at the start of his career in the '30s. "I had 40 different rejections (letters from the old New York Herald Tribune) in a couple of years," Maleska recalls.

Now he edits the prestigious New York Times Crossword.

Maleska and the Times have high standards that constructors must live up to. While there is no formal puzzle study course, constructors must be excellent spellers ("there's no correlation between IQ and spelling"), and have a good vocabulary, patience, perseverance and, most importantly, a love for words, Maleska said.

And they must "practice, practice, practice. It's a matter of being a doodler," Jaffe added.

WHILE INDIVIDUAL construction styles vary, most start with an already-established diagram and fill in the blanks. A traditional diagram is mirror-imaged. That is, if folded, the two halves mirror each other. If the puzzle has a theme, the constructor begins placing theme words first. Thus, in a puzzle about horse racing, "saddle" might appear on one side of the puzzle, while on the mirror side would be "bridle," each having six letters and having to do with the theme.

After that, according to Erica Rothstein, editor-in-chief of Dell Puzzle Magazines, "It really becomes a matter of trial and error until you get the whole diagram filled with words," keeping in mind that the number of black squares that end the words may be no more than one-sixth the number of total squares. Otherwise "it makes for too many choppy little words," Rothstein said.

And, "You can't start making up words to fit your 'down' things. You've got to have real words," Jaffe said — words that are known, and actually used. Maleska dislikes the use of obscure words that he calls "crossword-ese" — such as avo (a coin of Macao), anoa (a wild ox of Celebes, an island of Indonesia) and esne (a feudal serf). "(Those words) are of no use to ordinary people," Maleska said.

While the words of the puzzle make up its heart, Maleska said, "the definitions are the soul of the puzzle." In clue notebooks he's kept for 50 years are such things as 42 different definitions for eel and 50 for ear. "If you make a crossword puzzle up, you can use an ordinary definition that is not that exciting." So ear can be defined as "an organ for hearing" ("that's not that great") or as "a sound receiver" ("and that begins to be a little more jazzy," Maleska said).

THEN THERE are the words that have no place in a crossword — words that refer to death or unpleasantness — and issues that are sensitive, like sex or religion, Rothstein said.

"People are solving puzzles for fun. They don't want to be reminded of what's out there. We won't put the word 'cancer' in a puzzle even though it can legitimately be defined as a sign of the zodiac," Rothstein said.

There are just as many quirks in solving puzzles. "Puzzle people are just a trifle eccentric," Rothstein said. Some people take their crosswords to the bathtub or work them in bed with their Sunday coffee. Some only solve down and some only across.

"And the real snobs only use ink," Jaffe said.

There are some people who get thoroughly upset if they're deprived of their puzzle. Rothstein can't make it through the weekend without the Sunday Times crossword. In one sense it's her "fix" and in another it's homework.

"It's sort of to keep up with what's going on elsewhere in the puzzle world," she said. "It's my busman's holiday. That's why I like to get the paper Saturday night, because then I can get my homework done and then have Sunday to go out. Otherwise, if it's a hard one and I get stuck I'm home all day Sunday — I can't go out.

"There is just something about the challenge of seeing this empty square, of boxes and you know that there are words that go in there ... and you must be able to do it," Rothstein said.

As language changes, dictionary gets fatter

By PHYLLIS BATTELLE
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — Webster's New World Dictionary hits the bookstores this week — offering players of Scrabble and other word games a broad new source of ammunition with which to whip the candy-ass competition. (Yes, Virginia, there IS a noun, "candy-ass". It means a weak, hesitant or ineffectual person — a wimp, sissy.)

Webster claims its new book, cumbersomely nick-named WNWD Third College Edition, is "the world's most up-to-date and authoritative desk dictionary." It certainly is the world's most all-American; among 170,000 entries, there are over 11,000 uniquely "American words and phrases." These are marked with asterisks so the reader can easily spot the ones which are 100 percent Yankee.

But the truth is, the asterisks aren't necessary. What other land is so free and so brave that it could create such corruptions of the king's English as the new entry "kissy-face" (meaning an engaging in kissing, caressing, especially overtly or publicly), "fat city" (a place or condition of prosperity, comfort, success, etc.), "couch potato" (a chronic television viewer), or "poison pill." In traditional linguistics, a "poison pill" is an ingredient which people like the Borgias slip into enemies' drinks. But in Americanese (a word the dictionary doesn't recognize, but probably should), a poison pill is "any defensive measure for preventing the takeover of a corporation by making its acquisition prohibitively expensive for the party attempting to acquire it."

UPDATING DICTIONARIES is the work of career semanticists and grammarians, who claim they insert new words only after they have achieved the status of "common usage" in conversation. Language purists claim that this results in some pretty rotten lingo being given an official stamp of approval when it should be ignored. "A dictionary is more than a tchotchke (a knicknack, collectible trinket, etc.)," charges one critic. "People who let fad words slip into it should suffer agenbite of inwit (a new WNWD entry meaning remorse of conscience)."

Much of the concern is that since the 1960s, new words have cropped up in the speech patterns of Americans at an alarmingly swift rate, and they've been entered into the official textbooks of the English language willy-nilly. While many are colorful, they are simply bad grammar and, as such, should be ignored in our Bibles of literacy. Example: At a panel meeting to separate the acceptables from the bannables in a late 1970s' edition of an American Heritage Dictionary, it was agreed that "who" could be substituted for "whom" in speech — but not in writing. The verb "enthuse" was ruled out: "By God, let's hold the line on this one!" pleaded an editor. Also banned was the verb "premiere," as in "A new symphony was premiered last night" ... "And derrierred at the same time?" a grammarian, observed caustically. (Verb forms of "enthuse" and "premiere," banned in 1977, are now listed in dictionaries. When people distort the language to their language, and the media follows their lead, "you can't fight progress," says an editor.)

MANY DICTIONARIENES — no such word, but who cares? — don't consider it progress to let the people and the media dictate English usage. In fact, it gives them "Aztec two-step" (a new phrase meaning "Montezuma's revenge," which in turn means "acute infectious diarrhea.") They believe that slang corrupts the language, is largely dictated by kids who don't know any better, and if acknowledged at all should be published in special slang dictionaries rather than volumes for Americans who seek erudition.

But Stuart Borg Flexner, who edited Random House's first all-slang textbook, defends modern slang as "perfectly proper" for the big dictionaries. "Adults with an interest in good vocabulary may be shocked," he said in an interview, "but kids are using words that are particularly suitable to their generation. They are quick and expressive, good for a quick-moving society. Kids are taking over our culture," he smiled. "They don't emulate their parents. Their parents emulate them. For example, when you were dating I'll bet you 'necked.' Your parents 'sparked.' Your kids 'make out.' OK. All those words are in the dictionaries now. The dictionaries just get fatter."

Sure enough, all those terms of endearment are in the latest Webster's. And their definitions show how far our society's moral values have come — or gone; "spark" is defined as to woo, court, or pet; "necking" is described as caressing or kissing passionately; to "make out" is to have sexual intercourse.

That's progress in the age of "kissy-face" and "urb" (American for urban area) talk. Today's dictionaries don't use "weasel words" (words that are equivocal, ambiguous or misleading.) Whatsisfaces and whatchamacallits ("thingamajigs") may not approve of all the inclusions. But, as word book publishers know, telling-it-like-it-is can transform a semantic textbook into a page-turner ("any book so interesting and exciting that it draws the reader along, though it may be of little or no literary worth"). And having a book with "legs" is the route to "megabucks"

Y'know-what-I'm-saying?

DEAR ABBY

Pilot's procrastination brings storm to family

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Earlier this year — just before Mother's Day — I phoned my sister to ask if she would please buy a Mother's Day gift for me and drop it by our mother's. I am an airline pilot and sometimes get in tight jams with gifts. Also, I live in Portland, Ore., and my sister lives five minutes away from my mother in Carmel, Calif.

My sister agreed to help me out. No sooner had I written the check for the gift, when my phone rang. It was my sister, informing me that she had reconsidered and decided not to buy the Mother's Day gift, as it would "mean more" if it came from me. Abby, here it was 24 hours before Mother's Day and she flatly refused to help me out. Needless to say, my mother received a belated gift.

Soon after, my sister's birthday rolled around, so I called my mother and asked if she would kindly get my sister a birthday gift. She graciously agreed to. Later she told me she bought a rather expensive bottle of wine for my sister and I immediately sent Mom a check. My sister never acknowledged the gift.

Abby, am I unreasonable to feel annoyed? And shouldn't my sister be sent to "charm school"? — THE CAPTAIN

DEAR CAPTAIN: There is no excuse for failing to acknowledge a gift, but if you're considering sending your sister to "charm school," go with her and learn something about gracious gift giving.

Don't wait until the last minute and then ask someone to buy the gift and deliver it for you. Your penchant for getting into "tight jams" with gifts reflects poor organization, chronic procrastination and an obvious lack of caring.

DEAR ABBY: A 47-year-old man wrote to say that he resented being asked if he was entitled to a senior citizen's discount. I'll be 69 on Sept. 12 and I'm glad to be alive.

I survived 47 anti-submarine patrols in the Royal Canadian Air Force as well as a very serious brain operation. Maybe because I've been in the life insurance business for nearly 40 years and have had my share of death claims — most of them younger than me — I value life so much.

In everyone's life there is usually an inspiration — a mentor. It could be a priest, a rabbi, a swimming coach, a teacher. Such a man was Dick Campbell of Altoona, Pa. He recited a poem in 1950 that truly inspired me. Perhaps you'll want to share it with your readers. The author is unknown.

The clock of life is wound but once
And no man has the power
To tell just when the hands will stop
On what day — or what hour.
Now is the only time you have
So live it with a will
Don't wait until tomorrow
The hands may then be still.

— HERMAN ENDLER, ENCINO, CALIF.

DEAR HERMAN: Thank you for an inspirational message. Happy birthday!

DEAR ABBY: I liked your answer to "56 and Still Learning" on how to measure success. I would like to offer still another description of success:

"A successful man is one who can lay a firm foundation with the bricks others have thrown at him." — SHERRI MELSBY

Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS, how to prevent unwanted pregnancy and how to handle the pain of growing up. It's all in Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." Indian words, names used for political talk

Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — The word "caucus" dates to 1763, says "Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary."

It says it is thought "caucus" probably came into English from an Algonquian Indian word, "caucauas," meaning counselor or one who advises or encourages.

During the time of the American Revolution, many secret clubs and associations in New England took Indian names or used Indian words to be able to talk openly about association business.

Harris discovers new banker in town no pigeon

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Bill Harris and the new banker in town were headed for the tennis courts.

Harris, who insists it was at Texas and not Rice that he won his Southwest Conference tennis championship, figured it might not be much of a work out, but it was sociable.

It was while they were warming up that Bill realized that if he got any money out of this guy, it wouldn't be from a bet, but would be more like something requiring collateral.

"It didn't take long to see that this fellow was no weekend tennis hack," recalled Harris.

After the match was over, Harris and Matt Murphy began comparing notes, and, it just so happened, an old tennis bracket Matt had from the national junior tournament held in Kalamazoo, Mich., many years ago.

It seems that Matt and Bill were bracketed five spots apart. Not only that, but lo and behold, there was a Vern Farquhar.

Vern is the former tennis pro at the Racuqet Club, where the U.S. will attempt to reclaim the Maureen Connolly Brinker Challenge Cup from Great Britain this weekend.

You can imagine what kind of a reunion that resulted in.

A relative newcomer in Midland as the head executive officer at the NCNB Texas National Bank, the sponsor of the International matches for girls under 21, Murphy was informed by a local writer that Midland had a rich and proud heritage of outstanding tennis.

Back when Farquhar was the Racquet Club pro, after each year's U.S. Open, some of the world's top amateur tennis players came to Midland for a tournament.

Legendary names? Well, if Ken Rosewall, Rod Laver, Pancho Gonzales, Illie Nastase, Vitas Gerulitis and players of that ilk qualify, you've got legendary.

Of course, in those days all of the top players were pure as the driven snow.

Wilander proves critics wrong

By RICK WARNER

NEW YORK (AP) — Mats Wilander, once accused of lacking the drive to be No. 1, rose to the top of the tennis world Sunday at the U.S. Open.

The 24-year-old Swede ended Ivan Lendl's three-year reign as champion and took over his No. 1 ranking with a dramatic five-set victory in the longest final in Open history.

Wilander, the 1988 Australian and French Open champion, became the first man since Jimmy Connors in 1974 to win three Grand Slam events in one year by beating Lendl 6-4, 4-6, 6-3, 5-7, 6-4 in 4 hours and 54 minutes.

"I guess it was my turn," said Wilander, who was beaten by Lendl in last year's final, which lasted seven fewer minutes.

"It meant so much to me. I never won here, a Swede never won here and now I'll be No. 1 in the rankings. It was the biggest match I ever played."

Lendl needed to remain No. 1 until Oct. 3 to break Connors' record of 159 consecutive weeks at the top of the rankings.

"I'm not going to sit home and worry about that," he said. "I'm going to worry about how to get it back next year."

Wilander, who will replace Lendl as the No. 1 player when the new rankings are released Monday, took a 4-3 lead after breaking Lendl for the second time in the final set.

Serving for the match at 5-4, Wilander outlasted Lendl in a 52-stroke rally to even the game at 15-all and then fought off two break points before Lendl netted a backhand service return to end the match.

Wilander raised both arms in a victory salute before walking to the sideline, where he began tossing shirts and tennis gear into the stands.

Last year, Lendl and Wilander played 4:47 in another Open final that featured long and grueling baseline rallies.

Wilander had lost six straight matches to Lendl, five of their eight Grand Slam meetings, and 13 of their 19 matches overall.

But Sunday he forgot the past and concentrated on the present against Lendl, who lives just down the road from him in Greenwich, Conn.

It was the first five-set Open final since John McEnroe's victory over Bjorn Borg in their 1980 classic.

Wilander was also the champion of the French and Australian Opens this year.

The 62-minute first set was typical of the match, featuring long baseline rallies that sometimes lasted more than 20 strokes.

Lendl saved a break point in the eighth game when Wilander netted an easy forehand volley and held serve to make it 4-4.

But Wilander broke in the 10th game to win the set when Lendl made two straight backhand errors. Lendl had saved a set point earlier in the game when Wilander hit a backhand inches wide.

Wilander broke Lendl in the second game of the second set on a lunging stab volley and moved out to a 4-1 lead. But Lendl regained his form and won the next five games to even the match.

After squandering six break points in the second set, Lendl finally broke Wilander in the seventh game with a forehand winner to pull within 4-3.

Wilander appeared to be thrown off stride at 30-all when chair umpire Jay Snyder gave him a warning for stalling on his serve. Lendl won the next two points with a forehand volley and a forehand winner.

Wilander took a 30-15 lead in his next service game, but Lendl hit backhand on the next point that nicked the net and skipped past Wilander for a winner.

After Wilander made two forehand errors to lose the game, Lendl served out the 58-minute set at love.

There was only break in the 46-minute third set, and it belonged to Wilander. He broke Lendl at 15 in the second game on a crisp forehand volley.

Wilander, not known as a powerful server, lost only four points on his serve the rest of the set.

One of the key points in the set was a muffed overhead by Lendl at in the fifth game. He could have taken a 30-15 lead with a successful smash and moved into position to break Wilander back. But Lendl hit the ball straight down on his side of the court, then missed two backhands to drop the game and fall behind 4-1.

Avenging Cardinals worry Cowboys' Tom Landry

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Tom Landry understandably fears the Cardinals, the Cowboys NFL opponent here tonight. The Cardinals undoubtedly want revenge for that playoff-depriving loss to the Cowboys last season. And now they are making their Phoenix debut in Tempe, the first NFL game in Arizona.

And as Landry worries, "on a Monday night, no less. I'm sure their incentive will be tremendous. We're expecting a great game from the Cardinals and we'll have to fight to stay with them."

The Cardinals finished 7-8 last year and missed the playoffs after losing 21-16 at Dallas in the regular-season finale.

"In order to make the playoffs, which is our main goal this year, we've got to at least split with the teams in the (NFC) East. This is one of those games," said Phoenix coach Gene Stallings.

"There's 16 games left and they're all important. But after you lose one, it makes the next one doubly important. We had a chance to win one last week at Cincinnati and didn't do it."

In a season-opening 21-14 loss to the Bengals, the Cardinals failed to score twice on first-and-goal situations at the beginning and end of the game.

They have since revamped their goal-line offense and also shuffled their secondary after giving up three touchdown passes, including a 61-yard bomb.

"We got to reduce the points we give up, we got to reduce the big pass plays given up on defense and we got to increase big plays we make on offense and defense," Stallings said. "We had some long drives and showed we could do something right. But we got to score touchdowns."

Dallas also lost its opener 24-21 at Pittsburgh as Luis Zendejas was short on a 49-yard field goal that would have tied the score with 44 seconds left.

"We had Pittsburgh on the ropes. We should have at least went into overtime," Landry said. "We let it get away from us and that's the disheartening thing. But overall, we didn't play very well. We gave up a lot of points and yardage. I was disappointed in our defense."

Landry said he will again start Steve Pelluer, who was 24-of-37 for 289 yards and two touchdowns with two interceptions, including a crucial one in the Steelers' end zone late in the fourth quarter.

Stallings will again start eight-year veteran Neil Lomax, who completed 21 of 31 passes for 227 yards

Oilers stop some hearts

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — After more than 59 minutes of nail-biting tension, Houston running back Allen Pinkett had no choice on his final assignment of Sunday's game against the Los Angeles Raiders.

"There was nothing left to do but do it," said Pinkett, who barreled into the end zone with 31 seconds left, rallying the Oilers to a 38-35 NFL victory.

"The final drive shows how much character this team has."

The Oilers moved 79 yards, converted a fourth down pass and reached the Raider 6 with time running out.

Pinkett, who subbed for injured Mike Rozier, took a pitch from quarterback Cody Carlson, subbing for injury Warren Moon, made the corner and dove into the end zone.

"The man on me, lined up on the center so I knew if I could get around the corner I would probably score," said Pinkett, who scored three touchdowns."

Carlson kept his poise in the fourth quarter.

"When they needed a big drive, they got it," Raider defensive end Howie Long said. "Their quarterback did a great job. We'd hit him and he'd get up and never lose his composure."

The Oilers also put great pressure on the Raiders' young quarterback, Steve Beuerlein, although he completed three touchdown passes in the second quarter."

Oiler defensive end William Fuller got three sacks.

"The sacks were on just basic rushes," Fuller said. "With our pressure from the outside, there's nowhere for the quarterback to go.

"We work as one unit on defense. We are not a selfish ball club.

Carlson recovered from two first half mistakes that resulted in two Raider touchdowns.

"We played hard and if we hadn't won, it would have been tough to come back," Carlson said. "Once we got down there close, I felt good. When I pitched the ball to Allen, I knew we had a chance to score."

Beuerlein took little consolation in his individual statistics.

"I'm not even close to being satisfied," Beuerlein said. "There were a lot of times in the second half when we needed a spark and we couldn't pull it off.

"We had opportunities and didn't cash in and I'm responsible. I feel bad about it."

The Oilers comeback helped nullify a 21-point second quarter for the Raiders when Steve Beuerlein completed three second-quarter touchdown pases of 42 yards to Willie Gault, four yards to Tim Brown and nine yards to Steve Smith.

Carlson, starting his first NFL game, completed touchdown passes of 16 yards to Drew Hill and 12 yards to Ernest Givins.

The Raiders capitalized on two costly turnovers by Carlson in the second quarter en route to their 21-point surge. Carlson fumbled at the Oiler 5-yard line and defensive end Howie Long returned and interception 73 yards to set up a pair of scores.

Houston is now 2-0 and the Raiders dropped to 1-1.

Carlson made his first NFL start an impressive one completing 21 of 34 passes for 276 yards.

Montana comes to 49ers' rescue

Associated Press

Joe Montana, starting the game on the sidelines but finishing it at the controls of San Francisco's hurry-up offense, threw a 78-yard scoring pass to Jerry Rice with 42 seconds to play Sunday as the 49ers beat the New York Giants 20-17.

Montana hit Rice on a fly pattern down the right sideline as the receiver ran between defensive backs Mark Collins and Kenny Hill. Rice went untouched the final 45 yards.

"Basically, it's four guys run flys," Montana said. "Jerry got a step on the guy on the right corner and that was it."

"The chances of it working are pretty good," Rice said. "I recall against Cincinnati last year we won a game like that but we used three guys on one side and I was on the opposite side."

The Montana-Rice score came just 39 seconds after Giants quarterback Phil Simms hit Lionel Manuel with a 15-yard touchdown pass that gave New York a 17-13 lead.

Bears 17, Colts 13

Matt Suhey's 2-yard touchdown run put Chicago ahead, and a fumble recovery by Steve McMichael and pass interception by Vestee Jackson halted late Indianapolis drives.

The Colts took a 13-10 lead on a 12-yard run by Eric Dickerson early in the final period, then drove to the Chicago 37 before Dickerson fumbled with under six minutes remaining.

Bills 9, Dolphins 6

Scott Norwood kicked two of his three field goals in the fourth quarter as the Buffalo Bills overcame four turnovers to edge the Dolphins.

The Dolphins, 0-2, drove from their own 28 to the Buffalo 35, but a fourth-down Dan Marino pass to Jim Jensen was incomplete with 37 seconds left.

Saints 29, Falcons 21

Dalton Hilliard ran for 97 yards and scored a clinching touchdown on a 4-yard run with 8:52 remaining. Hilliard, who twice lost fumbles earlier in the game, capped a 70-yard drive with his scoring run that enabled the Saints to square their record at 1-1 after trailing 14-3 early in the second quarter.

The Saints took the lead for good 19 seconds before the end of the third period when Reuben Mayes scored from the 17 on a sweep of the right side to end a 70-yard drive.

Redskins 30, Steelers 29

Chip Lohmiller kicked a 19-yard field goal with 12 seconds left to give the defending Super Bowl champions their first victory in two games.

Bruins vault over Huskers to No. 2

Associated Press

UCLA's impressive 41-28 victory over Nebraska vaulted the Bruins from fifth place to second in the Associated Press college football poll today while idle Miami held onto the top spot.

Nebraska fell from second to 11th, Notre Dame climbed into the Top Ten and Michigan State and Texas dropped out of the rankings.

Miami's defending national champions, who took over the No. 1 spot a week ago by trouncing Florida State 31-0, received 46 of 55 first-place votes and 1,082 of a possible 1,100 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Three first-place votes and 1,019 points went to UCLA, whose ranking this week is the highest since the Bruins were No. 2 behind Alabama on Oct. 27, 1980.

Clemson, a 23-3 winner over Furman, remained third with four first-place votes and 940 points.

Oklahoma opened its season with a 28-0 victory over North Carolina and held on to fourth place with one first-place vote and 918 points. The other first-place ballot went to Southern California.

Rutgers win brings strife in Jersey

Battles

After Saturday's startling upset, it was inevitable, I suppose, although I never expected it to spread this far.

Of course, it happens all over. In Oklahoma, Oklahoma State is aware of the unfair favoritism toward the University of Oklahoma. Michigan State figures Michigan gets all the best media coverage, as unjust as it may be.

Same thing in Oregon where the Webfoots feel the Beavers are overplayed at their expense.

It's even worse in Texas where Texas A&M, Texas Tech, Houston maintain coverage is biased toward the Longhorns, although you've got to admit UT would have passed up last week's 47-6 publicity for a nice hole in the ground.

So when Rutgers knocked off Michigan State Saturday, it stirred up a hornets' nest of reaction from the Palisades to Cape May back to the Delaware Water Gap.

Rutgers is, of course, the State University of New Jersey, not to be confused with the usually overlooked University of New Jersey.

Last week, through MRT columnist Ed Todd, apparently the local alumni's mouthpiece, the complaint was that NJAA results were not reported in the media.

TODD'S connection with the local UNJ group is mystifying since he didn't even know where it was located at one time and now he is an authority on the schooi....ever since he spoke at an alumni function during a visit by the UNJ president.

What's particularly galling is that he got a $500 speaking fee and I was the one who gave the UNJ its West Texas window.

Now, Ed informs, that the UNJ exstudents for the Stingin' 'Skeeters, in recognition of the state's vicious after-dark swamp maurader, will meet Wednesday night. Since the team did not play last week, no game films will be shown and an assistant coach will not be flying in to discuss the next opponent.

And, Ed relays, since there was no victory last week, no refreshments will be served, in accordance with a long standing tradition.

WHEN Joe Friedhof, a spokesman for the club, was contacted, he said the club is trying to get hold of a film of a Penn State game.

"That's where most of the kids we recruit wind up. One year that carpet-bagger from Brooklyn, Joe Paterno, got both Lydell Mitchell and Franco Harris from us and our Joe Theismann was at Notre Dame and Ed Marinaro was going to Cornell. And Drew Pearson could have played quarterback for us if he hadn't wandered off to Tulsa. You can't lose talent like that and have a good team."

Friedhof, who owned a bakery in Jersey before coming to West Texas with a plan to make Wadley a discussed , instead of cussed, asset of Midland, says, "We can't compete with schools like that for players when they offer them a free education. And the NCAA twiddles its thumbs and lets them get away with it."

The real rub, it seems, is that in-state UNJ students have to pay out-of-state tuition.

Confusing? "Not at all," says Friedhof. "Founders of the UNJ sought a sylvan mountain setting, away from big city pollution, and close to a foreign country where language studies would be more than a class room memory recital. I haven't been out to West Jersey, but I think the press box at the Meadowlands is the highest point in the state, either that or the Prudential Building in Newark."

"They ruled out Presidio," Friedhof explained in, " and located the campus, instead, at Craftsbury, Vt., since it was a little closer. That's why most Garden Staters never know for sure if the school even exists."

Carmine Massimino, an unemployed bouncer from Hoboken, interrupted to complain, "You got the nickname wrong. If you've moved out of state, maybe it's the Stingin' 'Skeeters, but if you're still in Jersey, they are the Stinkin' 'Skeeters.

Massimino was asked what he was doing in West Texas. "Joe got me to come down to do some recruiting." One couldn't help but notice as he fingered a quarter inch of thick chin stubble that the knuckles on his right hand were scabbed over. Apparently Carmine liked jewelry. All the fingers on his left hand were adorned with three or four, plain brass colored rings.

The suspicion grew that recruiting and shanghai might be something Carmine uses interchangeably.

WHEN IT was pointed out to Friedhof that it might be difficult attracting Mitchells, Harris' and Thiesmanns to Craftsbury, Vt., he agreed it was problem now, but sees a light at the end of the tunnel.

"UNJ has been so successful that it is thinking of opening a branch in New Jersey. That should help give us a more viable Jersey identity and at least they'll be able to pay in-state tuition. Who knows, we may soon be playing our games in the Meadowlands, if Rutgers will let us."

Friedhof suddenly remembered, "Hey, I almost forgot the time. It's 7:30 p.m. Wednesday. We were thinking of getting Todd to speak, but his fee is so damned high. But you'all come, ya heah."

Upshaw's bingle does in Bosox

From Wire Reports
Associated Press

BOSTON — Willie Upshaw's RBI single broke a tie in the eighth inning and Tom Candiotti, 12-8, allowed five hits in seven innings as Cleveland beat Boston 4-3, to salvage the finale of a three-game series.

Pinch-hitter Terry Francona led off the eighth by beating out a single to the left of the mound against reliever Bob Stanley, 6-4.

AL

Paul Zuvella ran for Francona and took second on Alfonso Jiminez's sacrifice. Lee Smith replaced Stanley and Upshaw grounded a single through the hole to right, scoring Zuvella.

Doug Jones worked two innings for his 32nd save.

Yankees 5, Tigers 4

NEW YORK — Claudell Washington's two-run homer in the bottom of the 18th inning enabled New York to complete a four-game sweep of Detroit.

The game lasted 6 hours and 1 minute, the longest game by time in the AL this season. Steve Shields, 4-4, the Yankees' sixth pitcher, was the winner despite allowing the Tigers to take a 4-3 lead in the top of the 18th.

Brewers 5, Mariners 3

Don August, 10-6, won it with relief help from Dan Plesac, 30 saves, to move within 4 1/2 games of the Red Sox.

Orioles 4, Blue Jays 2

BALTIMORE — Dave Schmidt, 8-4, survived a shaky first inning to win for the fifth time in six decisions as a starter.

Cal Ripken walked in the bottom of the first and scored on Eddie Murray's double against Mike Flanagan, 11-13, making his first start at Memorial Stadium since being traded by the Orioles last season.

White Sox 3, Twins 2

CHICAGO — Shawn Hillegas, 1-1, allowed four hits in eight innings and Dave Gallagher hit a tie-breaking double with two outs in the eighth off Bert Blyleven, 9-15, who has lost four straight.

Rangers 8, Angels 3

ARLINGTON — Charlie Hough, 13-15, and Ed Vande Berg combined on a seven-hitter and Ruben Sierra drove in four runs as Texas beat California. Sierra hit a sacrifice fly in the fifth and a three-run homer, his 21st, in the eighth.

Athletics 8, Royals 7

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Luis Polonia was awarded third on an interference call in the 11th inning and scored on a sacrifice fly. Polonia lined a double to the right of first baseman Pat Tabler, sprawled on the ground after diving for the ball. Tabler was called for interfering with Polonia as he rounded first base.

Dennis Eckersley, 4-2, the fourth Oakland pitcher, won it despite giving up Danny Tartabull's game-tying RBI double in the ninth.

Ojeda, McReynolds big guns for Mets

Associated Press

Bob Ojeda, 10-13, pitched a five-hitter and Kevin McReynolds drove in all three runs with a homer and single as the New York Mets beat the Montreal Expos 3-0.

Ojeda pitched the Mets' 22nd shutout this season and second straight over Montreal.

The victory and Pittsburgh's loss reduced the Mets' magic number to 12 for clinching the NL East.

McReynolds hit a two-run homer, his 21st, in the eighth to provide insurance.

Martinez, 15-12, lost for the fifth time in six decisions.

NL

Dodgers 5, Reds 3

LOS ANGELES — Jeff Hamilton hit a two-run homer in the ninth inning off Cincinnati relief ace John Franco, capping a three-run rally as Los Angeles maintained a five-game lead in the National League West.

Astros 4, Giants 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Billy Hatcher, Craig Biggio and Buddy Bell hit home runs and Jim Deshaies, 10-12, pitched a four-hitter.

The Giants lost for the 14th time in 18 games.

Hatcher hit his fifth homer in the second inning off Atlee Hammaker, 7-8. Biggio led off the third wih a 400-foot homer to center, his second, and added an RBI double in the ninth.

Bell connected for his sixth homer in the ninth.

Cardinals 3, Cubs 2

ST. LOUIS — Ozzie Smith squeezed home the go-ahead run in the seventh inning and Jose DeLeon, 11-8, teamed with two relievers on a three-hitter as the St. Louis Cardinals won their seventh straight.

Ken Dayley worked the ninth for his fifth save.

Padres 8, Braves 2

SAN DIEGO — Marvell Wynne's first career grand slam capped a seven-run second inning and Dennis Rasmussen, 14-8, pitched one-hit ball for seven shutout innings.

Phillies 7, Pirates 4

PITTSBURGH — Juan Samuel hit a two-run homer and Ricky Jordan and John Russell each got two hits and drove in a run as the Philadelphia Phillies ended a four-game losing streak.

"Once they made it legal to accept money in the open," the informant explained, "It killed our tournament. We couldn't compete with the preposterous purses they were paying."

"Up until then, places like Midland were able to lure players of world class caliber by paying them under the table."

It was explained to Murphy that it was such agreements that spawned the term "tennis bum."

Murphy listened very patiently and then nodded, "I know. I was one of them."

Murphy, it seems, has won tennis titles on four continents, which explains why Bill Harris was impressed so quickly.

It also is a partial explanation as to why Midland has joined such high-toned company as London's Queens Club, LaJolla, Delray Beach and other exotic locales of the world.

Two years ago, Murphy, the liaison for this year's event, was instrumental in bringing the tournament to Willow Bend Polo Club in Plano where the U.S. beat Great Britain 6-5.

Last year the match was held, as it is every other year, in England, at Queens Club in London.

When it came time to find a site in the U.S. for this year's Challenge, Matt was living in Midland.

The reception the Challenge Cup received at Willow Bend made such an impression that Murphy's suggestion of Midland and the Racquet Club carried a lot of weight.

"Or course, Midland is a good tennis city and once I got a look at the facilities at the Racquet Club, Midland and the Challenge seemed a natural."

The Racquet Club's stadium was made for enjoying tournament tennis and there probably isn't another like it this side of Dallas.

"The box seats will be sold on a season ticket basis, but the grandstands will be free. We hope to have good crowds to see these outstanding young ladies play tennis. Midlanders will be watching the stars of the future," Murphy points out.

Among those who have played in the MCB Challenge and gone on to world recognition are Zina Garrison, Kathy Jordan, Sue Barker, Jo Durie and Annabel Croft and Pam Shriver.

A junior version of the Wightman Cup, the MCB Challenge is something like the Midland Angels and the Texas League a few minutes away at Hogan Park.

They may not be big names now, but the Bruce Sutters, Joe Carters, Shawn Dunstons, Fernando Valenzuelas, and Daryl Strawberrys of women's tennis will be on display here this weekend.

Krevitt leads Greenwood

From Staff Reports

BROWNFIELD — Junior transfer Michelle Krevitt led the Greenwood girls cross-country team in the Brownfield Jamboree cross-country meet here Saturday.

Krevitt, who moved to Greenwood from the Dallas area, placed seventh with a time of 14:57 for the two-mile course that wound through Terry County park in Brownfield.

Sherry Burcham followed close behind in with a 13th place time of 15:10. Other Ranger girls in the race included Tammy Anderson, 23rd in 15:39; Tabitha Stanley, 85th in 18:12; and Phaeng Phonosa, 96th in 18:43.

Kane Harris was the top boys finisher for Greenwood with a three-mile time of 19:27, good for 24th place. Harris played varsity football for the Rangers, but opted to run cross-country this year after an outstanding junior track season.

Other Greenwood boys in the race included Bryan Dean, 54th in 20:29; Richard Dennis, 68th in 21:09; and Joe Castleberry, 95th in 24:28. The Rangers didn't post a team score in the boys division, because they lacked the necessary five runners.

Lubbock Coronado and Lubbock Monterey won the boys and girls titles, respectively. Christine Vasquez of Lubbock Coronado won the girls race, while Greg Marmolejo of Lubbock High won the boys race.

Yoo Sun Lee returns home for Olympics

From Staff Reports

Master Yoo Sun Lee left over the weekend to represent the U.S. Taekwondo Union team at the Summer Olympics in Seoul, Korea.

Lee, a Midland resident for 13 years, said, "Taekwondo is a demonstration sport in this year's Olympics. Gold, Silver and Bronze medals will be awarded, but points will not count in the team totals."

Twenty-eight countries will send teams. "Taekwondo is expected to be an official part of the 1992 Olympics in Spain," Lee said.

Lee will be going back to his homeland. He came to the U.S. from Seoul 15 years ago.

NFL

Bubby Brister threw two long touchdown passes and ran for another score to help Pittsburgh take a 29-20 lead with 9:29 remaining. But a 7-yard pass from Redskin quarterback Doug Williams to Kelvin Bryant cut the margin to 29-27 with 4:48 left, and Washington moved from its own 44 to the Pittsburgh 1-yard line in the final three minutes to put Lohmiller in position for his game-winning kick.

Bucs 13, Packers 10

Donald Igwebuike kicked a 28-yard field goal on the final play as the Tampa Bay Buccaneers won an NFL game for the first time since their last road contest with the Packers.

Broncos 34, Chargers 3

John Elway threw two touchdown passes and Tony Dorsett rushed for 113 yards and another score for Denver. Dorsett moved past Franco Harris into third place on the NFL career rushing list with 12,181 yards, 61 more than Harris. Dorsett needs 131 yards to catch No. 2 Jim Brown.

Jets 23, Browns 3

Roger Vick scored the New York Jets' first two touchdowns of 1988 on short fourth-quarter runs and Cleveland, already playing without injured starter Bernie Kosar, lost quarterback Gary Danielson to a broken ankle.

Bengals 28, Eagles 24

Boomer Esiason threw four touchdown passes, two each to James Brooks and Tim McGee, as the Bengals, 1-1, rallied four times to beat Philadelphia, 1-1.

Esiason completed 20 of 32 passes for 363 yards in winning a shootout with Philadelphia's Randall Cunningham, who hit 25 of 36 for 261 yards and one touchdown.

Rams 17, Lions 10

Greg Bell, taking over for the suspended Charles White, rushed for 139 yards and scored a touchdown. Bell, a fifth-year pro who came to the Rams in the Eric Dickerson deal a year ago, carried 27 times and scored on a 1-yard dive.

Seahawks 31, Chiefs 10

Curt Warner scored two touchdowns on short runs and Jacob Green pounced on a fumble in the Kansas City end zone for another score during Seattle's 28-point second quarter.

Sports In Brief

Ken Green makes it two straight victories

Associated Press

FRANKLIN, Wis. — Ken Green won his second consecutive PGA Tour event, sweeping to a six-stroke victory Sunday in the $700,000 Greater Milwaukee Open with a a 68 Sunday for a 72-hole score of 20-under 268 that won him the $126,000 first prize.

Green, 30, a seven-year Tour veteran from Danbury, Conn., earned $135,000 a week earlier by winning the Canadian Open. He became the first player to win consecutive events since Sandy Lyle won the Greater Greensboro Open and Masters tournament in April.

Mark Calcavechia and Dan Pohl both shot 66s Sunday to finish at 14-under 274, along with Donnie Hammond and journeyman Jim Gallagher, Jr.

Hammond shot a 68, as did Gallagher, who is trying to regain his PGA Tour card. Gallagher overcame a double-bogey on No. 15 for his 68.

Fittipaldi wins

ELKHART LAKE, Wis. — Emerson Fittipaldi, 41, won a battle of fuel management as well as the CART Road America 200 Indy-car race to charge into contention for the season driver's title. The two-time Formula One champion, won his second race in eight days and now has 100 points, 28 less than leader Danny Sullivan.

While his competitors faltered because of fuel-related problems, Fittipaldi parlayed good fuel mileage with some crafty driving for his sixth career victory.

Fittipaldi, driving a Chevrolet-powered Lola before a crowd estimated at 48,000, averaged a record 122.215 mph, breaking the mark of 120.155 set by Mario Andretti, last year's winner.

Wire-to-wire

ELKHART LAKE, Wis. — Robert Groff of Northridge, Calif., led from start-to-finish to win the Road America Super Vee event Sunday for his second victory of the season as he defeated Ken Murillo of Santa Rosa, Calif., by 9.76 seconds.

Allison wins 400

RICHMOND, Va. — Davey Allison, setting a record for the fewest races needed to surpass $1 million in career winnings, took advantage of a blown engine by Ricky Rudd and won Sunday's Miller 400, the inaugural Winston Cup event at the new Richmond International Raceway. Allison, who started on the pole in his Ford Thunderbird, averaged 95.770 mph on the D-shaped track, the only three-quarter-mile layout on the Winston trail.

His margin of victory was 3.25 seconds over Dale Earnhardt. Terry Labonte was third, followed by Mark Martin and Alan Kulwicki.

King wins Ping

PORTLAND, Ore. — Betsy King birdied three straight holes on the back nine, then sank a par putt on the 18th hole Sunday for her second straight LPGA victory, a one-shot triumph over Colleen Walker in the $250,000 Ping Golf Championship.

King, the leader after two rounds, overcame three birdies on the front nine to mach par-72 on the 6,285-yard Riverside Golf and Country Club course for a 54-hole total of 3-under-par 213.

The victory, worth $37,500, was her third of the year and 14th in her LPGA career. She won the Rail Classic last weekend and the Women's Kemper Open in March.

Walker, with her 69, broke 70 for the 28th time this year, setting an LPGA record, but sandwiched a 77 Saturday between her opening-round 68 and closing round.

Van Burkleo homers

TOKYO (AP) — Former Midland Angel Tyler Van Burkleo hit a two-run home run to lead the Seibu Lions to a 6-3 Japanese baseball victory over the Hankyu Braves Sunday. Van Burkleo has 32 homers this season.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will find that you are in a good mood most of the time. Better-balanced meals make you feel and look better. A change of environment or employment will improve your mental outlook. Relationship battles fade as you find more areas of agreement. Travel is a luxury you may not be able to afford. Staying close to home and friends will prove more rewarding anyway. Encourage your whole household to save.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Nell Carter, actress Jacqueline Bisset, singer Mel Torme, soap star Eileen Fulton, WWI Gen. John J. Pershing.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Take your cue from those who have held leadership roles before you. Travel will have its ups and downs. Pleasant surprises are featured. Welcome phone calls and a friendly lunch. Widen your social circle.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Prevent jet lag by sleeping as much as possible on the plane and basking in the sunshine when you arrive. A generous gesture shores up a family relationship. To preserve harmony, slow spending!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You can overcome an obstacle to an important relationship if you really want to. Count your cash as well as your blessings before making a final decision. Postpone signing a document until later.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make the most of your special talents today and things will go great. Getting in touch with an old friend will benefit both of you. A mistake teaches someone a valuable lesson.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not read too much into a friend's words or actions. Tomorrow will be a better day for relationships, money and romance. Keep your mind on business no matter what your peers do.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Use your head today and this will be a happy week. An office romance is a distinct possibility. Anxieties and conflicts over money face into the background. You feel more energetic. Travel is best postponed.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Work to get rid of those feelings of insecurity and the strife they cause. You have every reason to be optimistic about the future. Success beckons. You have everything going for you!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You could feel lonesome until a letter arrives from home. Tune in to the energy generated by those around you today. Spending time outdoors clears away mental cobwebs. Regular exercise also helps.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Move a project forward before someone slips it out from under your control. A damaged relationship can be mended. You find the answers to a mystery when you search your memory. Be discreet.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You will dominate the scene wherever you go today. Even strangers turn to you for wisdom and understanding. The loyalty of a longtime mentor remains as strong as ever. Travel brings rich rewards.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Money matters will be in a state of flux for several days. You rebound quickly from a difficult experience. In the end, you will triumph! Worry more about your own welfare than a friend's.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be willing to travel if doing so will improve your finances. Friendships and other relationships are under excellent auspices today. Do not put all your money-making ideas in one basket. Diversify!

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q. 1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AK4 ♡AQ76 ◇93 ♣AQJ8

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	5 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Since North did not cue-bid diamonds, we presume he doesn't have that ace. Even though we are not sure what partner is looking for, we cannot construct a hand for him that won't, at worst, be on a finesse for slam. Bid six hearts.

Q. 2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠AKQ8542 ♡7 ◇J965 ♣8

What is your opening bid?

A.—Your defensive potential could be anywhere from none to two tricks, so we wouldn't open the bidding with one spade. With spades as trumps, you can reasonably expect to make eight tricks—you should add a trick for your four-card side suit. According to the Rule of Two and Three, that qualifies for an opening bid of four spades.

Q. 3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠QJ9 ♡Q1095 ◇KQJ63 ♣8

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—There are two reasons for not bidding two hearts—a reverse bid by you would be a game force and partner has denied holding four hearts. Still, your hand is worth a game try, and two no trump is the obvious choice.

Q. 4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠754 ♡863 ◇AK2 ♣9762

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—You have a minimum response, and nothing has happened that has improved your holding. However, that does not relieve you of the obligation to find your side's best spot. With equal length, go back to partner's first-bid suit, regardless of the quality of your holdings in the suits.

Q. 5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠754 ♡AJ9 ◇KQ85 ♣K85

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—With an opening bid facing an opening bid, you want to be in game. There is no reason, with your perfectly balanced hand, to suppose that a suit contract will be better than no trump. Jump to three no trump—two no trump shows only 11-12 points and can be passed.

Q. 6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠AQJ3 ♡KQ105 ◇Void ♣AKJ53

Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you bid now?

A.—You don't need much from partner to make a game—as little as five cards in one of the majors would do. You can get this message across with an immediate old-fashioned cue-bid of two diamonds.

Ted Koppel says he thinks he's qualified to be secretary of state

Koppel

NEW YORK (AP) — Ted Koppel, who's talked to numerous world leaders as anchor of ABC-TV's "Nightline," says he wouldn't mind continuing those chats in another capacity — like secretary of state.

"Would I someday want to be secretary of state of the United States? Of course," Koppel said in Life magazine's October issue.

"Do I think I would really be qualified for it?" he continued. "In some respects, yes, because part of the job is to sell American foreign policy, not only to Congress but to the American public."

Koppel recalled that some of his most exciting years were the ones spent covering then Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's shuttle diplomacy in the Middle East. They have remained friends, he said.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Cartoonist Gary Larson will give his pen a rest this fall to take a 14-month break from creating "The Far Side," his syndicate says.

Larson

Larson, 38, who lives in Seattle, will stop distributing new cartoons Oct. 30 and will begin again Jan. 1, 1990.

"Even revolutionaries need to refuel," said John McMeel, president of Universal Press Syndicate, which distributes Larson's cartoons to more than 800 newspapers.

Larson, who says he sits down at his drawing table and "gets silly," is famous for cartoons about cows that honk at humans, dinosaurs that smoke and women with beehive hairdos.

During Larson's hiatus, Universal Press will distribute more than 1,000 cartoons he drew in the early 1980s that were published in about 30 newspapers, McMeel said Saturday.

• • •

GEORGETOWN, Ohio (AP) — World walker Steven Newman says he may be staying put for a while after taking a short stroll to the altar.

Newman, who walked 22,500 miles across 20 countries and five continents from April 1983 to April 1987, married Suzanne Neu Woods, 24, on Saturday.

"As of this morning, Steve Newman's wanderlust may have been nipped in the bud," he said.

The couple met last year when Mrs. Newman took her grandmother to hear Newman speak to a group of senior citizens.

• • •

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — Paramount Pictures, responding to criticism from Portugese-Americans about its new movie "The Accused," starring Jodie Foster and Kelly McGillis, says the film is not based on the Big Dan's gang rape case.

Portuguese-Americans have said "The Accused" will open old wounds stemming from the barroom rape here.

The movie shot in Vancouver, Canada, contains a barroom rape scene, but does not portray Portuguese-Americans or any other ethnic group as committing the rape, said Paramount spokeswoman Jane Lanouette.

The movie is not set in Massachusetts and is not based on the Big Dan's case, Lanouette said.

The disclaimer followed reports that the movie was based on the March 1983 gang rape at Big Dan's tavern in a section of New Bedford heavily populated by Portugese-Americans. The case drew national attention.

Six men, all of Portuguese descent, were charged in the case. Four were convicted and two were acquitted.

• • •

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — Dustin Hoffman, who plays an autistic man in his latest film, "Rainman," will attend a premiere here to benefit a local autism center.

"It's extremely gratifying for a person of his stature to pay attention to a very unusual population of people," said Ruth Sullivan, director of Huntington's Autism Services Center.

The actor befriended Mrs. Sullivan's 28-year-old autistic son, Joseph, as he prepared for his role.

Autism is a communication and behavior disorder characterized by impaired speech and an unresponsiveness to other people.

In "Rainman," which co-stars Tom Cruise, Hoffman plays Raymond Babbitt, an autistic man who inherits $3 million from his father. Cruise plays his brother, who tries to trick Babbitt out of the money.

Barry Levinson, whose films include "Diner," "The Natural" and "Tin Men," directed the United Artists production, set for release Dec. 12. The screening at the Keith-Albee Theatre comes one day before the film's official premiere in New York and Los Angeles.

• • •

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Alan Ladd Jr. is leaving his post as chairman and chief executive officer of MGM Pictures Inc. after a string of hit films, including "Moonstruck" and "A Fish Called Wanda."

Ladd, 50, a former president of 20th Century Fox and president of The Ladd Co., also resigned as director of MGM-UA Communications Co.

"Over the past few months, I had received inquiries from third parties regarding other opportunities; I felt that it was inappropriate for me to consider these while still affiliated with MGM," Ladd said. "Recently, I made the decision to pursue other interests."

The recent releases "Moonstruck," which won Academy Awards for actresses Cher and Olympia Dukakis, "Willow," and "A Fish Called Wanda" leave MGM "in the best shape its has been in the past several years," Ladd said.

"We regret his departure," said MGM-UA Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Stephen D. Silbert.

While at 20th Century Fox, Ladd, son of the late actor Alan Ladd, was responsible for such hits as "Star Wars" and "The Omen." Among his other successes are "Chariots of Fire" and "Police Academy."

LIVERPOOL, England (AP) — Rock superstar Michael Jackson ended his European tour with an outdoor concert organizers said drew 125,000 people, and officials said more than 1,500 of the fans were hurt in a crush near the stage.

Organizers said the crowd at Sunday's open-air show on Aintree horse racing course at Liverpool was the largest ever at a rock concert in Europe.

In all, the volunteer first-aid workers of the St. John Ambulance Brigade said they treated an estimated 3,400 fans for minor injuries, mostly hysteria, headaches and minor cuts.

Brigade assistant commissioner Arthur Crook said 1,550 of the casualties were treated after being crushed at the front of the crowd near the makeshift stage because of the pressure behind them.

Integrated circuit marks 30 years

Governor to help honor inventor

Kilby

DALLAS (AP) — Thirty years later, it becomes very clear just how big a discovery Jack St. Clair Kilby made.

In 1958, Kilby was one of two people who demonstrated the first workable integrated circuit, which have come to be known as computer chips.

On the 30th anniversary of his feat, Kilby's former employer, Texas Instruments, planned to honor him today at its Richardson headquarters.

The 64-year-old Kilby and Robert Noyce, who later founded two of the world's largest semiconductor manufacturing companies, were the first to recognize that the basic building blocks of electronics — capacitors, transistors and resisters — could be built from a single semiconductive material. The discovery helped eliminate the expense and time needed to hand-solder electronic circuits.

Kilby constructed a somewhat crude working model from a material called germanium and started an electronics revolution that changed the face of science.

Kilby's work boosted TI to a lofty place among the world's must successful high technology firms and 30 years later has Texas booming as a computer research and development section.

Kilby also was a co-inventor of the hand-held calculator that TI developed to show the commercial possibilities of the integrated circuit.

Moonlighting

It is estimated that up to 15 percent of the nation's urban workforce have two jobs. According to the Personnel Journal, the main reason for workers moonlighting was simply to meet regular expenses.

Abandoning caution doomed thrift

By GEORGE GARTIES
AP Business Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — American Savings & Loan became the industry's biggest financial basket case by abandoning conservative ways, and some worry that a $2 billion federal bailout doesn't do enough to force a return to conservatism.

As details of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's blueprint for reviving the nation's second-largest thrift trickle out, analysts, legislators and competitors are sounding calls for caution.

Some fret over the planned transfer of American to the aggressive Bass investment group and suggestions that the revived company could be allowed to venture beyond the standard S&L business of home loans and savings accounts.

Others recall what they see as regulatory inaction during the company's four-year slide toward receivership, a slide most blame on aggressive management, too-rapid growth and risky real estate loans.

American Savings & Loan Association, with headquarters in Stockton and 186 branches throughout California, was seized by the bank board Tuesday as a prelude to turning it over to the Robert M. Bass Group of Fort Worth, Texas. Bass will pump $550 million cash into the insolvent thrift, and the bank board has committed $2 billion in cash and promissory notes over the next decade.

American continues to operate; its parent company, Financial Corp. of America in Irvine, Calif., announced plans to file a federal bankruptcy petition.

American's problems pre-date the 1983 joining of State Savings & Loan and American Savings & Loan, the merger that gave the company its present form.

State, under Chairman Robert Knapp, was known for making loans on commercial real estate ventures and developments spurned by other S&Ls. American was a virtual opposite, with a large branch network and a portfolio of conservative home loans and savings accounts on which it paid relatively low interest.

Ailing thrifts luring savvy investors

By ANISE C. WALLACE
New York Times News Service

The participation of Robert M. Bass, the Texas billionaire, in last week's government bailout of the American Savings and Loan Association, the nation's largest insolvent savings unit, demonstrated yet again that some very astute investors see attractive opportunities in the beleaguered savings and loan industry.

Low prices, tax write-offs and government assistance have made some troubled savings organizations alluring.

Obviously, smart investors with a knack for finding potential turnarounds may make enormous profits.

But securities analysts say that such a strategy is inappropriate for most individual investors.

For most individuals, who are not in a position to mount a rescue effort like Bass, investing in troubled savings institutions would mean buying stock of publicly traded companies.

Analysts caution that many of these companies may end up in bankruptcy and shareholders would be wiped out.

"Why go for infinite risk even though the upside potential may be a thousand percent?" said Jerome I. Baron, first vice president at Prudential-Bache Securities in New York.

"A thousand percent is awfully small compared to infinity."

Individuals do have another avenue if they want to pursue this strategy.

Merrill Lynch & Co. and Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc. are both planning to offer limited partnerships devoted solely to buying troubled savings institutions.

Since Aug. 18, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the regulator of most of the nation's 3,000 savings and loan associations, has closed, merged or found new owners for 46 insolvent institutions.

Experts estimate that 400 institutions are now insolvent.

And some analysts believe that the regulatory agency itself may be hard put to cover the interest cost of the debt it has assumed in these transactions; the agency's income comes from premiums it collects from financial institutions.

Sears takes deceptive advertising issue to court

By MICHAEL deCOURCY HINDS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Last year, about 400 retailers settled complaints about misleading advertising with the New York City Department of Consumer Affairs.

But not Sears, Roebuck & Co.

Instead of quietly paying a routine $400 fine, Sears has literally made a federal case out of the city's charges that the company ran misleading and deceptive newspaper advertisements, suing the city in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York.

The company contends the city's advertising regulations violate the constitutional right of free speech, conflict with Federal laws and interfere with interstate commerce.

In a related lawsuit filed by the Department of Consumer Affairs in state court, Sears has responded that the advertising language at issue is, in fact, widely used by retailers in New York and around the country.

The fight pits America's largest retailer against one of the nation's toughest retailing codes.

It is a confrontation that some experts say can only hurt Sears, particularly when it is preparing to open a Manhattan outlet.

"All we're asking for is a little bit more useful information for the public to be able to make informed judgments," Christopher Kerr, the senior attorney for the Department of Consumer Affairs, said Wednesday in State Supreme Court in Manhattan.

Unavailable sales items main issue

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The unavailability of sale items is a side issue in the controversy over Sears, Roebuck advertisements, but it's the central issue for some frustrated consumers.

"We're seeing a pattern of unavailability of sale merchandise at Sears," said Ina Alcabes of the Nassau County Office of Consumer Affairs, on Long Island.

"If the store is consistently advertising merchandise that isn't available, it could only be running the ad to lure consumers into the store."

Gordon Jones, a Sears spokesman in Chicago, said the problem was not widespread.

Sale advertising is often planned months in advance, he said, and sometimes inventories are inadequate to meet demand.

"From time to time, an incident like this does take place despite our planning and preparation," he said.

Macmillan to be bought by investment company

NEW YORK (AP) — Publishing giant Macmillan Inc., target of unwanted takeover offers for four months, said today that it will be bought by the investment firm Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. in a cash-and-securities deal that values the company at $2.36 billion.

The announcement came after reports surfaced that Macmillan officials had negotiated this weekend with Kohlberg Kravis, a private partnership that has helped other large companies thwart unwelcome takeovers.

Kohlberg Kravis specializes in leveraged buyouts, in which a company is acquired through mostly borrowed money repaid from the target company's profits or asset sales.

Macmillan said in a brief announcement that Kolhberg Kravis had formed a subsidiary to begin a tender offer of $85 cash per share for up to 26.1 million shares of the company, or 94 percent of the total.

The announcement said Kohlberg Kravis will offer a package of securities it valued at $85 per share for the remaining 6 percent of the shares. The total offer values the company's 27.76 million shares at about $2.36 billion.

The announcement was the latest twist in a takeover battle waged since May for Macmillan, a large New York-based publishing concern and leading supplier of college textbooks. The company owns other operations that range from the Berlitz foreign language training program to Katharine Gibbs clerical schools.

A group headed by British publisher Robert Maxwell had been attempting to buy Macmillan and last week offered to raise its $80-a-share offer to $84 a share. A group headed by Texas investor Robert Bass has offered $75 a share.

The company had spurned offers from both and sought to restructure itself to thwart a takeover by selling the information division.

The Bass group, which owns about 9.2 percent of Macmillan's shares, had successfully challenged the move in court, but the company said today that because of the planned acquisition by Kohlberg Kravis it is scrapping the restructuring plan.

A secretary answering the telephone at the Bass group's Houston offices said nobody was available to comment immediately on today's announcement.

Andrew Turner, a spokesman for Maxwell Communications Corp., Maxwell's publishing concern based in Oxford, England, said "All we're saying is that we've received this report and are studying it."

Oil prices open weakly

From Staff and Wire Reports

The renewed oil futures plunge which began Friday, resumed this morning with prices opening more than 30 cents lower.

Analysts said traders remained disturbed about the worldwide oil glut and an apparent lack of commitment within the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to cut production.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the October contract for delivery of West Texas Intermediate opened 31 cents lower than Friday's closing price of $14.18.

Hectic trading on Friday drove the price down 30 cents a barrel to after rising 32 cents on Thursday.

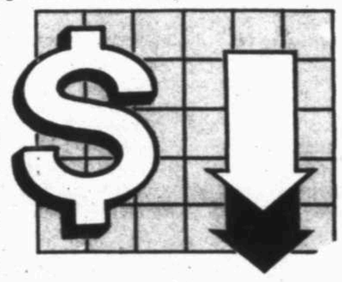
Dollar drops after strong opening

LONDON (AP) — The dollar opened higher in Europe today, but fell against many major foreign currencies following reports the West German central bank intervened and sold dollars, dealers said.

Gold prices fell as much as $11.

In Tokyo, the dollar edged up 0.47 yen to close at 133.42 after Japanese trade figures for August were released. Dealers said the trade surplus of $4.9 billion was lower than many expected.

Later, in London, the dollar was quoted at 133.60 yen.



Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday:

—1.8470 West German marks, down from 1.8490

—1.5605 Swiss francs, down from 1.5620

—6.2785 French francs, down from 6.2865

—2.0900 Dutch guilders, up from 2.0835

—1,381.00 Italian lire, up from 1,379.50

—1.2388 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2395

In London, one British pound cost $1.6955, little changed from $1.6980 late Friday.

Gold prices fell sharply in Europe after oil prices fell again.

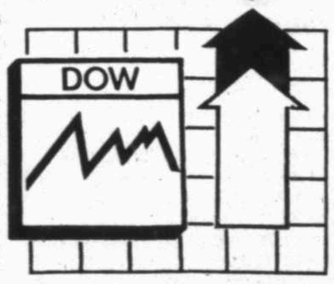
The precious metal opened in London at a bid price of $421.80 a troy ounce, down $5 from the $426.80 bid late Friday. At midmorning Monday, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $418.

In Zurich, gold was quoted at $418.00 when the market closed at 6 a.m. EDT for a local holiday, down more than $11 from the $429.50 bid late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $5.60 to close at a bid $419.18.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $6.39 a troy ounce, down from Friday's $6.63.

Stock prices zigzag to small gain



NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices took a zigzag path Friday, winding up with a modest gain in continued sluggish trading.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which showed double-digit gains and losses at various stages of the day, closed with a plus 5.69 reading at 2,068.61.

That left the average with a net increase for the week of 14.22 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 7 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 846 up, 596 down and 523 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 141.54 million shares, down from 149.38 million in the previous session.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market added $7.83 billion, or 0.30 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained .38 to 150.84.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Disney group takes Polaroid offer public

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Roy E. Disney's Shamrock Holdings Inc. went directly to Polaroid Corp. shareholders with a cash bid that values the company at about $2.6 billion.

Shamrock said Friday it would raise its new bid to $44 a share from $42 if directors dropped their resistance to the takeover attempt.

Polaroid's board of directors last month rejected an unsolicited offer from Shamrock that would have paid $40 a share plus 40 percent of the eventual award in Polaroid's patent infringement lawsuit against Eastman Kodak Co. A percentage of that potential settlement was not included in the new, hostile tender offer of $42 a share, which bypasses the directors.

Gas prices drop a penny since mid-August

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The average price of gasoline in the United States edged downward by about a penny in the last three weeks to 102.49 cents a gallon, an oil industry analyst said.

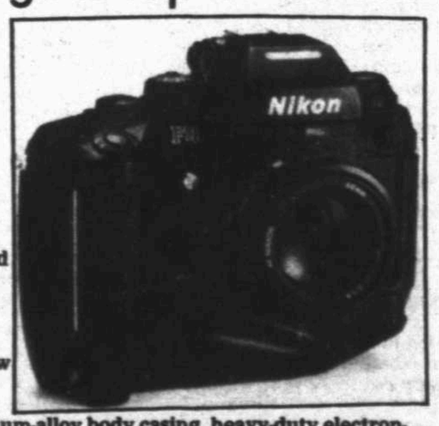
The Lundberg Survey of gas stations nationwide found the average, including all grades, taxes and full- and self-serve prices, dropped .93 cent from the Aug. 19 average to 102.49, Trilby Lundberg said Sunday.

Self-serve prices per gallon were: regular unleaded, 93.37 cents; premium unleaded, 106.44 cents; regular leaded, 90.04 cents.

Full-serve prices were: regular unleaded, 121.70 cents; premium unleaded, 131.57 cents; regular leaded, 117.62 cents.

BUSINESS TRENDS

Auto-focus goes top of the line



The much-anticipated Nikon F4 has finally arrived.

The professional-grade, single-lens-reflex camera takes its place at the summit of Nikon models, features just about every option and convenience a professional picture-taker might want, need or dream of.

Nikon, having built its vaunted reputation on the quality of its top-of-the-line models, does not bestow the "F" designation lightly.

The F4 — with an aluminum-alloy body casing, heavy-duty electronics, a rubber-cushioned exterior and an ability to work with virtually every Nikon lens ever made — seems to fully deserve its moniker.

Even the price is professional: almost $2,500 is the suggested retail cost, including a detachable finder and motor drive but no lens.

Steel firms see higher exports

By JONATHAN P. HICKS
New York Times News Service

American steel companies, stepping up exports in anticipation of a continued weakness in the dollar and tighter supplies, will this year have the highest level of shipments to foreign countries since the early 1980s, industry officials said.

The American Iron and Steel Institute, the industry's trade association, said that export shipments totaled 670,000 tons in the first half of this year, a 25.2 percent increase over the 535,000 tons of steel shipped abroad in the same period last year.

The Washington-based group also said that, based on current shipment patterns, steelmakers' exports for the entire year would range between 1.5 million tons and 2 million tons.

Last year exports totaled 1.1 million tons, the highest level since 1983.

Over the last year, steel companies have revived their international sales departments and established sales offices overseas.

"This year, we're going to see the big increase," said John Jacobson, an economist with the AUS Group in Philadelphia.

"It's possible we'll see a doubling from last year's levels."

Jacobson said that the lower value of the dollar had contributed to foreign interest in American-made steel. But he also credited the rise in exports to "management becoming a bit more focused on the global market."

The USX Corp., the nation's largest steel producer, said last week that it would export more than a million tons next year, its largest export tonnage since the mid-1970s.

The company recently signed an agreement with the Soviet Union for 44,000 tons of seamless pipe, which is used in oil drilling and exploration, by the end of the year.

USX, which is based in Pittsburgh, agreed to ship another 40,000 tons to the Soviet Union in the first quarter of next year.

Tom Ferrell, a USX spokesman, said that there had been additional demand from Japan and China, "and a mixture of other countries" for the flat-rolled sheet steel that is used in automobiles, appliances and construction.

The LTV Corp., which operates the nation's second-largest steel company, said that its exports in 1988 were expected to total about 100,000 tons, a five-fold increase over last year's levels.

A spokesman for the Dallas-based LTV said that "we plan to export considerably more in 1989."

For most of the year, some analysts have doubted whether exports would rise much.

They cited the fact that mills were running at near-capacity to meet the demand of domestic customers and that little additional tonnage was available for export.

But steelmakers are able to export in part because of the operations that had been reopened after modernization and in part because of the higher demand in export markets for specialty steel, of which the supply in the United States is relatively more abundant.

Indeed, little of the flat-rolled sheet steel used in appliances and automobiles is being exported, the steel executives say.

The exports tend to be more of the high-quality, specialty-steel items like coated steel and electrogalvinized steel.

The trade association's figures indicate that the value of steel being exported in the first half of the year averaged $904 a ton, compared with the $450-a-ton average value of the steel products being imported.

Certainly, the steel exports continue to account for a low percentage of total steel shipments.

Even the highest level of exports predicted by analysts is far lower than the peak of 7.1 million tons shipped in 1970.

The level of steel exports has continued to shrink since 1980 — when exports reached 4.1 million tons — principally because of the increased production by foreign steelmakers.

Since then, American steel companies have essentially ceded the export market while they sought to preserve domestic business.

Some steel companies say that the domestic demand has been too strong for them to seek export opportunities.

A spokesman for the Bethlehem Steel Corp., the nation's No. 3 steel producer, said that it would step up its export activity only "if domestic demand eases."

The company, based in Bethlehem, Pa., exported about 100,000 tons last year and expects that figure to be about the same for 1988.

Similarly, Robert Lefley, a spokesman for the Inland Steel Co., said that the Chicago-based company had no plans for exporting steel.

"We're not making any effort to get additional business for export because our focus is on our customer base in the Midwest," he said.

SEARS

Two of the three advertisements in question violate city laws by promoting sales without indicating the savings to consumers, Angelo J. Aponte, the Consumer Affairs Commissioner, said.

Staff members said the agency had received about 200 complaints about Sears advertising and business practices in the last 20 months.

The city is citing a May 1987 advertisement, which reads, "Save 15 percent to 30 percent and more on selected apparel." The problem, Aponte said, is that the advertisement did not say whether the percentages referred to the store's original price, a previous sale price or the manufacturer's list price.

The city is also citing a Sears ad for tires, which Aponte said violated another law by listing only the lowest-priced tire, not the range of sale prices.

The third series of advertisements cited by the city involves a carpet-cleaning service affiliated with Sears.

The suit contends that the advertisements suggested that a discounted price would be available for a limited time, when, in fact, the offer was made repeatedly. "Hurry! Call by Sept. 26," said one ad. It was followed by others saying, "Hurry! Call by Oct. 24," "Hurry! Call by Nov. 28," and "Hurry! Call by Jan. 21."

A secondary part of the city's suit, added during unsuccessful negotiations with Sears last year, involves consumer complaints that advertised goods were not available and that work by contractors affiliated with Sears was shoddy.

City officials said they have settled similar disputes with thousands of retailers, including Macy's and Bloomingdale's, over the past 20 years.

Normally, companies admit they were wrong, pay a small fine and get on with business.

Retailers who originally opposed the consumer-protection laws have come to live with them.

CIRCUIT

Kilby's first integrated circuit had the nine components in a space one-sixteenth of an inch wide by seven-sixteenths of an inch long.

Now, 180 billion integrated circuits later, in a day when more than 700,000 components can be crammed onto a chip, Texas is hitching its hopes to computer chip development and manufacturing.

TI announced last Thursday that it would spend $30 million in the next six months to a year developing a prototype production line at its Dallas headquarters for future-generation RISC chips.

Four other top chipmakers also plan to help Texas become a world center of development for the newest computer rage.

Within about an hour's drive of each other in Austin, International Business Machines Corp., Motorola Inc., Cypress Semiconductor Corp. and Advanced Micro Devices Inc. all are developing RISC chips. Each has established or will establish major research, design and development facilities in the area.

In volume of chip production and number of wafer factories, Texas is second only to California and far ahead of any other state, according to In-Stat Inc., a semiconductor industry statistical source in Scottsdale, Ariz.

Also, Texas can now boast the U.S. chipmaking industry's only two cooperative research efforts, Sematech and Microelectronics and Computer Technology Corp., both based in Austin.

More women learning tricks of traveling alone

By IKIMULISA SOCKWELL
Copley News Service

It's awkward eating alone.

It's embarrassing being pinched in public.

It's degrading to be regarded as little better than a prostitute.

That's what traveling alone often means for a woman.

But it's not deterring them.

It's well-known that the business world goes round due in no small part to the efforts of female travelers, and most of those women have mastered the art of coping alone on business trips. But more and more these days, women are traveling on their own to have fun.

According to a 1987 Study of Media and Markets conducted by the Simmons Market Research Bureau in New York City, more than 12 million American women took their last domestic trip without a husband, relative or friend.

And travel agents say traveling alone is becoming increasingly popular with women between the ages of 35 and 49. A little more than 3 million women in that group traveled alone in the United States last year, an increase of a million since 1980.

Regardless of stereotypes and other possible problems they face, growing numbers of women are taking to the road alone.

One 39-year-old Southern California woman (we'll call her Sylvia) thrives on the adventure.

Evenings may be spent alone, and it may be awkward dining alone. Still, said Sylvia, "I never wanted to be in a position where I said 'I wish I had ...'"

Sylvia, a real-estate agent whose travels have included Hong Kong, Budapest and Rome, said the way a woman projects herself affects how others perceive her.

CNS Graphic

"With some people, no matter what you do, they'll consider you improper," she said.

According to travel agents, in the United States it is commonly perceived that women traveling alone are old maids. And in some areas of Asia, Africa and India, for example, the negative stereotypes go way beyond that — people may contend you're of questionable morals if you're an unescorted woman in a foreign country.

Mideasterners simply are not accustomed to women traveling alone, said Maissa Sanders, a tour guide for Lotus of La Costa Tours in La Costa, Calif. Consequently, the lone female traveler would be observed more by natives than a man traveling alone would be.

Sanders said a great deal of the attention directed at women by Mideasterners depends on how women carry themselves and on the clothes they wear.

Wearing shorts and miniskirts is not acceptable in Egyptian cities, for example, said Sanders. And in Moslem countries, women travelers should dress modestly. Otherwise they might be regarded as morally loose or as prostitutes.

According to Shelly Norris of Balboa Travel Inc. in La Jolla, Calif., most of her female travelers are businesswomen and single mothers.

A few women are "looking for a good time," Norris stated, but the majority just don't want to be bothered with a companion or anyone else.

Vacationing alone has some advantages over being a part of a pair, Sylvia said. "(Alone) you always go out and meet some interesting people," she said. She has kept a list of people she met on vacations and recently took part in a reunion of fellow travelers.

However, there are safety considerations.

Sanders recommends that women travelers tell a travel agent or hotel clerk where they are going. And they shouldn't venture from tourist areas.

"If (the woman) is timid by nature, she's better off not wandering off," Sanders said.

Many travel agents commented that being in unfamiliar surroundings means taking the same precautions one would use at home. Women should not explore dark alleys or accept rides from strangers, for example.

Spending time on an ocean liner instead of land is becoming very popular among women. On a ship it is easier to meet people, according to Mimi Weisband, spokesman for Royal Cruise Lines. On a cruise, everyone has a dining-room seating assignment, so no one eats alone.

In 1982, Royal Cruise initiated a "host program" especially for unattached female passengers, and it has been "extremely successful," Weisband said.

The hosts are men, over 50, who are given a free trip in return for entertaining the single women, most of them around that age, said Weisband.

"Romantic ties are prohibited," Weisband said.

Regardless of special programs offered by cruise ships and tourist spots, travel agents say single women travelers do face such problems as increased prices, but things are improving.

Restaurants now have tables for one that are not positioned near entryways. Cruise ships and some hotels have adjusted rates for solo travelers so that they are not paying twice or three times as much as one person in double-occupancy rooms.

Harriet Craig-Peterson, senior director of marketing at Radisson Hotels, said from the Minneapolis executive office that they do quite a bit of work to accommodate the needs of women. Of their hotels established in 17 countries, many provide little extras specifically directed at women travelers. Room amenities include skirt hangers, hair dryers and terry cloth robes. Women want the same treatment men receive, said Craig-Peterson, equal accommodations and amenities.

With security in mind, she said, locks on room doors have been upgraded and monitors in hallways have been installed, and hotel personnel are specifically trained not to announce the room numbers of women travelers.

The design of hotels and menus also is changing to cater to women. Softer colors in rooms and lobbies are more welcoming to female travelers. Many menus have dropped standard meat-and-potato entrees to favor lighter meals such as salads, said Craig-Peterson.

Feeling safe and comfortable in one's surroundings is important, but Sylvia stated "the whole idea is to have fun (on vacation). It is not an endurance test.

"No guts, no glory," she said, and besides — "I love traveling."

Higher prices boost Texas wool industry

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas sheep raisers this year are enjoying a peak in prices thanks to higher domestic and overseas demand.

Growers in the rugged Edwards Plateau area of Texas and the western parts of the state have seen wool prices exceed $3 per pound for the better grades, compared with about $2 last year. The result will likely be another record-setting year for one of the state's major livestock industries.

Because they raise fine wool breeds such as Rambouillet, Texas ranches produce 80 percent to 85 percent of the nation's fine wool.

Taking all grades into consideration, the price of Texas wool has been averaging about $1.80 for the first eight months of this year, according to government statisticians. That is up from $1.21 for 1987, which was a record average.

Most sheep are sheared in the spring, and it also is a prime time for sending lambs to slaughter. Wool prices averaged $2.30 per pound in April, $2.40 in May and $2.15 in June, said Charles Drain of the Texas Agricultural Statistics Service in Austin.

The high prices are a worldwide phenomenon based on increasing demand, said Christopher Lupton, head of the wool and mohair research laboratory at the Texas A&M agricultural center in San Angelo. Demand from China is considered to be the main reason, Lupton said.

LURE

Most analysts who cover the industry are not enthusiastic about the group in general.

They believe that the industry's widely publicized problems will keep investors from buying the stocks of healthy companies.

The problems will make it more difficult for all savings institutions to attract depositors, thereby pushing up their costs and putting pressure on earnings.

And, of course, an increase in interest rates would hurt their earnings as well.

So far this year, investors have avoided the savings group.

Trading in all savings and loan stocks is off 50 percent from last year, said Joseph A. Jolson, general partner at Montgomery Securities in San Francisco.

Share prices of many of these stocks have lagged behind the overall market since January.

And price-earnings ratios are near their lowest levels of the last 15 years.

Since 1972, the industry's earnings multiple has ranged from 5 to 15, Jolson said, but the average savings institution today is trading at a multiple of 5.8 times this year's earnings.

Since even the stocks of healthy savings organizations are trading at low prices now, most analysts recommend that investors who want to own thrift-industry companies buy the strong ones and avoid the weak ones.

Such analysts as Baron of Prudential-Bache recommend that investors selectively choose stocks of companies that have made changes in their business strategy that will result in strong earnings gains.

He favors the Homestead Financial Corp. in California and the Apple Bank for Savings in New York.

Jolson is one of the few analysts on Wall Street who is bullish on the group.

He believes that the stocks are often misvalued at turning points, becoming overbought at market peaks and oversold during periods of bad news.

Jolson adds that earnings for the group are improving after bottoming out in the first quarter of 1988.

Among the savings institutions recommended by analysts are those in California, where real estate prices are booming and the economy appears relatively strong.

CAUTION

Regulators already keeping an eye on State believed that the merger, which created what was then the nation's biggest S&L, would stabilize Knapp's company.

But American grew rapidly under Knapp, in part by making loans with fixed interest rates, a strategy that has come back to haunt American in periods of rising rates.

In the summer of 1984, bank board analysts were warning that loans made by American and the old State Savings on real estate had been made without adequate analysis of the true value of the properties.

Institutional investors were quietly withdrawing deposits amid a flurry of news reports about loan problems at American.

A real depositor run began in 1984, after the Securities and Exchange Commission forced American to restate its second-quarter results to account for losses on mortgage-backed securities, turning a $31 million profit into a $107 million loss.

Losses from the run eventually were tallied at $6 billion. In August 1984, Knapp was forced out by the bank board and replaced by William Popejoy.

Popejoy, who had once been president of the old American Savings, proceeded to cut costs, laying off 1,500 workers and selling 475 company cars and five jets.

Management added to the company's reserve against bad loans, to the point where the reserve stood at more than $1.2 billion as of June 30.

But after a period of shrinking American, Popejoy concluded the only way to save the company was to expand, adding branches and buying securities backed by mortgages with fixed interest rates.

That's counter to an industry trend in recent years to issue mortgages with adjustable rates to protect the lender against rising interest rates.

Competitors have pressed the bank board to rein in American, concerned that a big rescue would drive up their required payments to the industry's government-run insurance fund, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp.

Stockholders have accused Popejoy of failing to disclose the extent of the company's problems with bad loans and foreclosed real estate.

Critics also have focused on a provision of the bailout that would allow American to engage in merchant banking, something beyond traditional S&L business.

At a U.S. House Banking Committee hearing Thursday, bank board Chairman Danny Wall, seeking to allay fears American could venture onto risky ground, disclosed restrictions on the proposed merchant banking operation.

The merchant bank would be limited to $1.5 billion in assets and would be barred from direct real estate investment or development.

It would be barred from investing in gambling activities, foreign firms, precious metals, commodities, futures and options. And the bank board would have the right to step in to stop activities it deems too risky.

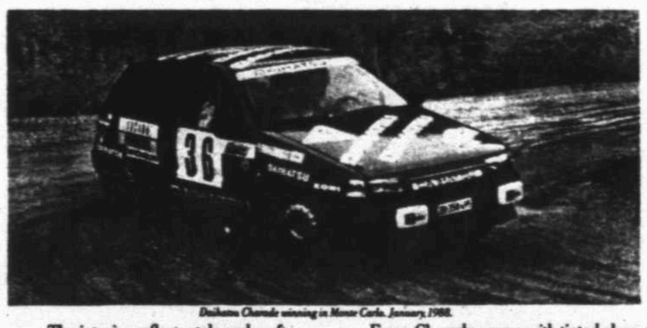
DAIHATSU: The word on the Street.

Everyone is looking for the next performer. And right now they're talking about the new hot car from Japan: Charade by Daihatsu. Read the chart and you'll see Charade's record of wins around the world. A winning combination of quickness and handling for over a decade. The more we test it in racing, the better it works on the street.

- Car of the Year Japan
- Four-time Rally Champion East Africa
- Three-time Rally Champion Monte Carlo
- Rally Champion New Zealand
- Rally Champion Malaysia
- Rally Champion Finland
- World Economy Record Paris
- World Economy Record Singapore
- World Economy Record Australia
- Car of the Year Thailand
- Most Popular Car in Australia



Daihatsu Charade winning in Monte Carlo, January, 1988.

Not only do you get proven performance, but Charade gives you quality and workmanship that you thought came only in more expensive cars. The level of luxury is unprecedented for a small car. Think of it as luxury condensed.

The interior reflects style and craftsmanship. It is perfectly color-coordinated throughout. Door trim incorporates seat material on top and carpet material on the bottom for a perfect interior match. There's a rich cloth liner overhead. And the fold-down center armrests on the CLX add extra comfort.

Versatile, fold-down rear seat triples cargo space.

Every Charade comes with tinted glass all around: windows and mirrors. For an extra touch, there are swing-out quarter windows in the rear.

Charade is low and wide for a small car. The extra width gives you a surprising amount of interior room. Charade's wide track gives you far more stability on the road than other small cars, especially when cornering.

Wide stance for stability.

Charade is quick, with multi-point EFI, fully independent suspension and stabilizers in front and rear. The five-speed transmission is butter-smooth for easy shifting.

Charade is affordable to buy and affordable to own. Daihatsu Charade has an EPA rating of 42 MPG highway and 38 MPG city. That is one of the best mileage ratings in the country.

Get behind the wheel of a winner! Test drive Charade today! Daihatsu may be new to America, but we've been in business in Japan since 1907. The name is pronounced Dī-hot'-sue. It means Large Enterprise.

Charade has been tested, raced and proven around the world. It is the logical evolution & dedication to performance. You know what they say, "Racing improves the breed."

You'll think the world of Daihatsu.
