Moody Back To Work
DALLAS, Texas, Aug. 30. (AP)—Mr.
Moody, 33 years old, was prepared to return to his office as attorney general of Texas, Monday to spend a busy month before he formally assumes the reins of government following his victory Saturday in the democratic run-off primary of Governor Miriam A. Ferguson by a majority of approximately two to one.
Moody, after having devoted the most of the past two months to campaigning, announced that he now intends to give his attention to pressing the prosecution of a suit in which the state is seeking to recover $121,000 in alleged excess profits from the Hoffman Construction company, highway contractors.

The attorney general maintained his ratio of lead over Governor Ferguson as returns Sunday were added to those reported Saturday night. When the Texas Election Bureau closed tabulating returns for the night at 8 p. m.
Sunday, totals in the gubernatorial contest unofficially were 469,152 for total vote in the primary is estimated

Mexican Protest On Calles Jokes Heard

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 30. (AP)—Local newspapermen assert they are reliably informed the Mexican government intends to instruct Ambassador Calles at Washington to protest to the United States government against the "libelous campaign conducted by some American newspapers in making the private life of President Calles and some of the members of his cabinet."
The local journals do not give the names of any American newspaper nor specify what they have printed.
"The Mexican government," the newspapers assert, "would have precedent for such a protest in the protest of the United States embassy in Mexico City made to the Mexican government during Woodrow Wilson's administration, when actors in some of the theatres of the capital used Mr.
Wilson as the butt of jokes."

Early Returns In County Voting Do Not Show Changes

Estacado, one of the two counties in this county that has remained unreturned until early this afternoon, joined the balance of the county in voting their share of Fergusonism.
It is revealed in complete unofficial returns received by the Journal overnight, that the county has voted for Ferguson, eleven of which went to Ferguson, and 20 to Moody, and according to reports from Becton, the ratio of ballots is about the same. Other votes were as follows:
—Allred 21; Pollard 2; Ball 6; Hatcher 12; Bradley 18; Witchee 6; Johnson 18; Holcomb 8; McCurdy 4; Brashear 25. Becton is a little larger box than Estacado, and is reported to contain about 75 votes.

Hockley and Cochran counties also gave Moody and anti-Ferguson candidates a big majority. The vote in Cochran county, complete, follows:
Ferguson 99; Moody 193; Allred 187;
Pollard 85; Ball 131; Hatcher 127;
Bradley 164; Witchee 115.
The Hockley county vote, complete follows: Ferguson 37; Moody 789; Allred 546; Pollard 259; Ball 232; Hatcher
468; Bradley 608; Witchee 421.
Durwood H. Bradley, candidate for District Attorney, and H. L. (Bud) Johnson, candidate for re-election as Sheriff, the two storm centers of the entire campaign in Lubbock county, are both elected by good majorities.
The former polling a plurality of nearly two to one, and the latter now holding a lead of 597 votes, with Becton still out. The box is claimed as strong Johnson territory, however.

The County Commission's race in Precinct No. 3, still hangs fire due to the Becton box. Braashear gained 22 votes in the Estacado report, bringing his lead to 37, making it necessary that Becton go almost solid for Mc-Curdy if he overcomes the lead. Other offices over the county were decided in tabulations Saturday night.

One Killed And Five Shot In Chicago War

CHICAGO, Aug. 30. (AP)—One robber was killed, a second probably fatally injured, and three detectives and an official of the Chicago Surface Lines were wounded last night in a spectacular gun fight between police and a group of robbers who attempted to seize $5,000 at a West side car barn.
A young woman of twenty, expensively costumed and pretty, who had acted as chauffeur and "look out" for the robbers, was captured under gun fire. Another girl companion and one of the robbers escaped. The police surrounded the car barn as the result of a "tip off" from an employee of the street car company, who had been urged to join the robber band.

Pola Sobs Loudly As Broadway Bows Before Valentino

(By the Associated Press)
NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—Broadway where Rudolph Valentino once worked as a dish washer, today paid farewell tribute to the man who died at the height of his career a "Shiek of the Movies."
The famous thoroughfare was lined with many thousands of people, including a mounted squad, patrolled the route and stood guard outside the funeral parlors and the church.
Pola Negri, the Polish actress who announced before Valentino's death that she was engaged to marry him, and Jean Ackers, the dead actor's first wife, who had said that she was reconciled to him just before his death, followed the body into the church.
Miss Negri, dressed in deepest mourning and sobbing audibly, was immediately behind the silver-bronze casket. Behind her came Miss Ackers and bringing up the rear of the little cortege of women were the representatives of Miss Winifred Hudnut, his second wife, and Mary Pickford.
Audience Is Hushed
As the casket, decked with flowers from the automobile load that followed the procession, was carried up the pews on the shoulders of eight pallbearers, a solemn hush fell upon the audience.
The prelude of the procession
"Miserere" of Spohr rose from the pipes of the organ. Those in the church stood with bowed heads.
Rev. Edward Leonard officiating at the mass, marched slowly forward surrounded by his assistants and altar boys, lace covering their black surplices. The voices of an unseen sextet, rose from the Epse as Father Leonard sprinkled the casket with holy water.
The sobs of Miss Negri could be heard above the voices of the sextet.
After the service the casket was carried to Capbell's funeral church awaiting the arrival of Valentino's brother, Alberto, who is on the sea, to decide the final burial place.

GIRLS, EVER HEAR THE CHARLEY STORY?

Once a young girl was sick in bed. The family doctor came and felt her pulse and looked at her throat and then prescribed calomel and castor oil and she's been in a day or two.

Beside her on the night stand was a cigarette butt and some ashes. The doctor poked it with his finger. "Is this yours?" he asked.

"No," said the girl. "It's Dad's. He was in just before you came. I wish it was mine."

"Why?" said the doctor.

"Oh, because I'm a back number," said the girl. "I feel like a Priscilla when I go any place. Tell me, doctor, is it bad for you to smoke?"

Said the doctor. It won't kill you unless you're a fiend or constitutionally below par. But I'll give you some advice, not as your doctor, but as a man to a woman, if you don't mind. Keep yourself above us, my dear. That's where we want you and need you, above us."

"But smoking isn't degrading, is it?" said the girl. "Surely a thing like that doesn't run you down. And we don't want to be above anybody. We just want to be equal."

"Well, you'll have to decide that for yourself," said the doctor. "I'm not here to preach. But a little story just popped into my mind. Tell it to you. It's about my nephew, who just got married. When he came home one day and announced his engagement I happened to be there. "Well, Charley, I hope you'll be very happy," said I. "You bet we'll be happy!" said Charley. "We don't do a darn thing alike and we haven't a taste in common. Jane's a prize! Everything she does is different. She doesn't even smoke! I think if I married a woman who smoked, I should stop it myself. My wife's just got to be different. I won't have her smoking me."

"Sweet disposition, I'd say," said the girl to her.

"Not so good," said the doctor. "But here's a typical man."

That night the doctor said to his wife, "I had to spring that 'Charley' story again. It's the only thing that gets them. Mind you, that nice little Brown girl wants to smoke just to be smart! Isn't it a shame?"

Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Lattimore, 1816 16th Street, and his mother, Mrs. M. A. Lattimore, and Mrs. E. S. Jones, sister of Mrs. H. A. Lattimore's, returned Sunday night from Carlsbad, N. M. where they visited the famous cavern. They left here Friday evening.

Wild, Wild Dolls of Paris Shops Completely Enrapture Germaine

Germaine's new doll family, left to right, above, the wicked aristocrat, Pierrot; below, the Dutch peasant, the Spanish lady; center, another peasant.

PARIS

Dear Cousin:

It was very amusing to receive your letter, in which you spoke of my being so sophisticated, living in Paris, monitoring over to Deauville, and keeping two perfectly charming men of the world hanging.

Your note came after I had spent hours doing—guess what? Playing with dolls with all the rest of a five-year-old.

You see, I really adore dolls, these very marvelous dolls we have now, that look so wise and knowing—and sometimes so very wicked. It occurred to me that since Jimmie is in the hospital, I would send him some little gift to remind him of me, and I thought nothing would be more appropriate than a saucy little doll.

So I started out with the usual result that before I finished my search I had bought about a dozen dolls for different people—had, then sent, to my home, and already I have become so attached to them I cannot bear to part with them.

The most amusing are a Pierrot and Pierrette. Pierrot is a most melancholy-looking object in a costume of silver satin with his black buttons and a wide collar of black tulle. The cap is made of satin and fits as well as if it had been done on his head by Reboux.

Pierrette is charming, also, in white with frills of pink maribou, very expensive looking, and very flirtatious—so that you understand the distracted frown that Pierrot wears.

I found a Spanish lady, with a mantle and a high collar, that is a regular Carmen in her gold and brocade. She even wears jewelry. I think I shall give her to Jimmie. She is disturbing enough to keep any man from

Devotedly, Germaine.

TROUBLES ARE RELATIVE

Five young fellows in New York were going about their robbery business. They went around to the Lexington bank in the Bronx where they thought a little robbery was needed. A clerk in the bank objected, so they shot the clerk.

Refusing this to be against the law, a gang of rough policemen chased the five young fellows and captured them. After a short trip to the jail house, the robbery was forgotten.

"Where you young fellows robbing banks and shooting people?" asked a detective. "Yes," admitted the men, "we were robbing banks and shooting people."

"Then," said the detective, "you will have to stay in jail. We might even hang you. That's what we might do." Upon hearing this, the five young fellows broke down and wept bitterly. "We wish you wouldn't hang us," said they.

A court judge asked. The young fellows became known as the "cry-baby robbers." In return, they said the detectives did not treat them nice while in jail. The claim was made that had men poked them in the eye, punched them in the nose, and acted very inhospitable in various and sundry other ways.

Ignoring all this, the jury sentenced the robbery to serve from 17 to 25 years in the penitentiary. Were they downcast? No. They laughed and took it good naturedly. The fact is, they were so relieved to learn they were not going to be hung—they did not mind the prison sentence.

So perhaps there is a moral in this for all of us. Troubles, like everything else, are only relative. With so many bad things that could happen to do not, we certainly shouldn't feel downcast over the few that do.

Would you laugh at a prison sentence? Perhaps you would if it was less than you expected?

TOO MUCH DISARMAMENT
Just at a time when we thought that the morale of our military forces was at its lowest ebb, when grumblings were heard from every branch of the service, when dissatisfaction was supposed to be rife, a wave of rather intense sentiment sprang up that shows most of those suppositions incorrect.

Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, retired, made the statement: "The infantry continues to be the backbone of the service." Such a loud howl immediately arose that it looked as though another war over which won the war was imminent. Only this time, the net war, if any, was dragged into the fight.

Aviation, said aviation, can win a war lone-handed. The chemical division said the same thing about itself. The artillery conceded that aviators were handy as observers, but asked what good observation is without shells following it. The cavalry, realizing it didn't do much in the last war, satisfied itself with the promise that it will "show" us in the net. Even the supply service and medical corps put in their claims.

But one proud old branch of the service stood with bowed head and let the controversy rage. General headquarters had nothing to say, for it has been crushed, disarmed. Thousands of type-writers have been taken from it. By a single stroke of merciless reduction, the number of the army's paper forms was reduced from 1985 to a mere 483.

General headquarters knows who won the last war. It knows that there were more triplicate copies of the 1308 forms than there were strapping bulls on the whole continent. It knows that the volley and thunder of a battery of typewriters strikes terror to the heart of an enemy.

Of course, headquarters is not completely discouraged. It knows that it can win a little war with only 483 paper forms, but the military experts can't tell just how big a war is going to be. At least, they never have.

SOMEBODY'S COMIN' TO CALL

Mother's been sewin' from mornin' till night. Hiding the finished things far out of sight. Seems kinda queer, but I guess it's all right. Somebody's comin' to call.

Father's been savin' his money of late. Plannin' on bills that he says will be great. Keeps tellin' mom that he hardly can wait. Somebody's comin' to call.

Sister's been fixin' the house up. What for? Honest to gosh, now that isn't like her. Somethin' is bound to make such things occur. Somebody's comin' to call.

Grandma's arrived and she's rushin' about in on the secret. There isn't a doubt. Seems that I've heard every one of them shout: "Somebody's comin' to call."

Funny to me how excited they grow. Somebody's important. They've all told me so. Still there is only one thing that I know: Somebody's comin' to call.

IN NEW YORK
SEE-SAWING UP
AND DOWN BROADWAY

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—Those garish carnival electric signs that the world has come to know as "the great white way" are surrendering—as in all New York—to the craning necks of the new steel giants.

Another generation, coming to see the "street of frivols" will find a white way, but the "gay" will be missing.

The shadow of the future already begins to be cast by the classic grid-iron which slowly encircle the Broadway zone, creating those amazing canyons in which scurry the midday humans.

And with their coming, the old order changes. Lighting effects are created to match the majesty of these weirdly beautiful achievements of the tower. Most impossibly incongruous would be an electric river of toothpaste flowing across the side of one of these skyscrapers. And, eliminating the incongruity, there is no place for signs on these 35 and 45-story buildings.

Lighting arrangements will take on an artistic quality. Sheer breath-taking beauty will replace the garishness of the present. Indirect and diffused lights will throw streams of shaded gold into the angles and towers of the new "zoning law" architecture which gives so cubic a tone to Manhattan's present skyline.

The man "who runs the bright lights" was telling me about it the other day.

Oh, yes, there is such a man. Only he doesn't recognize the title. You see Broadway, like Main Street, has an improvement association, and there are men and committees who make its affairs their interest. And one of these considers the matters of signs and electric light.

Just now, I am told, the "bright lights" have reached a saturation point. Like the victim of some strange fever that brings slow death, delirium marks its progress.

And Broadway, at present, is a delirium of glaring signs.

In the days when the name "white way" was becoming familiar to every tongue, Broadway was content with one or two giant signs and a myriad lesser sparklers. Then the gyrations of a couple of chewing gum imps centered the attention of the eye. Now there is optical chaos. A scintillant typewriter pegs off its endless message, a giant tube pours out endless gallons of bedazzled electric toothpaste, peanuts dance the Charleston and every available inch of space seems to have been grabbed by the signmakers.

But the shadows of giants creep slowly over the scene. The great Paramount building begins to shut out the sky at 44th street and 45th street signs to be blanketed by steel mountains. At Lexington avenue rises the Greybar building, which will be the world's most spacious structure. At Sixth avenue rises 42 stories of stone and steel; at 45th street the tower of an entire planet's yours free—subject to this very reasonable set of rules and regulations. Go to it.

It's been suggested, again and again, that commercial aviation can't prosper without a subsidy.

Well, all this government-provided equipment is, to an extent, a subsidy. Besides, Secretary Hoover isn't the man to go as far as he has without having satisfied himself that private flying concerns — for he's dead set against governmental commercial aviation — can make money at it, know they can and are ready to go ahead with it.

Experts expect to see the plane cutting in decidedly before long, on certain classes of railroad business.

Captain James V. Martin, one of the foremost of them, predicts, for instance, that not much more railroad building will be done in future. He thinks the present lines will be kept in repair, to handle such freight as coal and grain and pig iron, but he believes most of the passenger traffic and less bulky and weighty commodities will travel by air before many years are past.

It will be economical, too, he contends, for the very reason suggested previously—a plane may be relatively expensive to operate, but it operates on the freest of all roadbeds.

As for the element of danger — "There'll be accidents, yes," Congressman Piorrello H. La Guardia, a very practical aviator, told me some time ago, "but no more—maybe not so many — as there are here below—railroads and automobiles."

"Only we're used to these land accidents. They don't shock us. We think of an airplane crash as something terrible. It's a new thing. That's all. To be in an airplane accident is no worse than to be in a railroad or an automobile accident."

WASHINGTON
LETTERCOMMERCIAL AVIATION PLANS
WILL BE WORKED OUT QUICKLY

By CHARLES P. STEWART
NEA Service Writer.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—Airplanes will be at least as common as motor buses within a couple of years at the outside, they think at the commerce department.

Secretary Hoover has a habit of thinking out his plans to the last detail before saying anything about them for public consumption. When he does finally announce a plan, it's fully completed and he's ready to put it through in short order.

It was thus with his plan for commercial aviation development. One day hardly anybody knew there was such a plan. The next day, there it was, "ill-fledged" with experts already started on the job of making it a reality. Establishing an air line is no such lengthy undertaking as building a railroad.

The commerce department must provide considerable group equipment. Regulations will have to be evolved. But all this can be done rapidly in surveying a surface road, tearing down comparison with the slow work of hills, building up hollows, constructing culverts, bridging rivers, laying rails and getting rolling stock in motion over them.

Of course, in a sense the government aviation program will be worked out gradually, but where "gradually" means a matter of years from a railroad standpoint, it means only months from aviation's.

The necessary facilities being in readiness, the commerce department simply will say to private aviation: "There are your landing fields, with all the conveniences and appurtenances that go with them. There are your beacons and sign posts. Here's your radio to communicate with planes in transit. There's the air. The entire plant's yours free—subject to this very reasonable set of rules and regulations. Go to it."

It's been suggested, again and again, that commercial aviation can't prosper without a subsidy.

Well, all this government-provided equipment is, to an extent, a subsidy. Besides, Secretary Hoover isn't the man to go as far as he has without having satisfied himself that private flying concerns — for he's dead set against governmental commercial aviation — can make money at it, know they can and are ready to go ahead with it.

"Here lies the body of William Jay, Who died maintaining the right of way."

He was right, dear right, as he used to say.

But he's just as dead as if he'd been wrong.

THEY FLIT AMONG THE CORAL REEFS

BY AUSTIN H. CLARK
Smithsonian Institution

In beauty of coloration and in the curious arrangement of the colors the little butterfly fishes are almost without a rival among the fishes of the world. Indeed there are few living creatures of any sort more beautiful than they.

The butterfly fishes live chiefly about coral reefs where they abound. They are found in all warm seas. There are about two hundred different kinds.

They are all small, only a very few kinds being large enough for use as food.

It was in Porto Rico many years ago that I first became acquainted with these lovely little fishes, and wherever I have been in the regions where they live I have always spent much time in watching them. As they flit about among the corals and the sea-fans they call to mind the gaudy butterflies flitting among the flowers, and one can readily see the reason for their name.

The two kinds shown in the picture came from the Philippines.

Helpful Health Hints

SQUARE MEAL IS ONE WELL
ROUNDED WITH VITAMINS

BY DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor Journal of the American Medical Association and of Hygeia the Health Magazine.

A square meal must contain carbohydrates, fats, proteins, mineral salts and water, with sufficient quantities of vitamins "A," "B" and "C."

Vitamin "A" is most abundant in animal fats and green vegetables; vitamin "B" is in yeast, cereals, nuts, eggs, the internal organs of animal, and root vegetables; vitamin "C" is in fresh juicy fruits and green vegetables.

The best foods for supplying good protein in the diet are meat, eggs, milk, fish, and cheese.

Some foods contain practically no vitamins. These are margarine, made entirely from vegetable fats, hard bacon fat, pork fat, highly milled cereals such as pure white flour and corn flour, sugar, tapioca, custard powders, bananas, tea, coffee, chocolate and some beer.

Good Foods

Obviously, there are plenty of good foods, indeed sufficient to satisfy the appetite of anyone, which provide the necessary vitamins.

When vitamin "A" is absent, the body stops growing, the blood cells fail to develop and the person loses resistance to infection. In infants, its absence means a very poor development of the bones and of the teeth.

If vitamin "B" is absent from the body, the person may develop beriberi, but even before this disease appears, there is loss of appetite, weakness, loss of weight, an inclination to puffiness, swelling of the body and disturbances of digestion.

Means Scurvy

The absence of vitamin "C" means scurvy, but even before this disease there may be loss of energy and pains in the joints and limbs. This is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism.

More and more physicians are realizing that an adequate diet is fundamental to the proper control of any disease condition, and indeed fundamental to the prevention of all diseases.

WOMEN HOG RAISERS

The past few years a large number of men who had heretofore been successful hog raisers have quit the business on account of low prices as compared to the high price of feed stuff. This has caused a number of farm women to engage in the business, and some of them have made an outstanding success.

The Community Magazine, published at Albert Lea, Minn., gives the following in its August number, which is of more than passing interest:

"Many farm women are actively managing their own farms, doing a great deal of the manual labor themselves as well as handling the problems of financing, planning, rotations, sanitation and marketing, according to the research department of the National Association of Farm Equipment Manufacturers, which has recently surveyed the farming methods of nearly 800 ton-litter winners in 25 states from Oregon to North Carolina and from Texas to North Dakota."

"Mrs. A. F. Huser of Colorado, Mrs. B. C. Green and Miss Helma Seymour of Minnesota, Mrs. Andrew Jackson of Iowa, Mrs. C. C. Perry of Oklahoma and Miss Vera Divan of Wisconsin are 1925 ton-litter hog winners in the state-wide contests conducted by their agricultural college extension departments. Ruby Randall of Georgia was also a winner with her brother, Boyd. Several of these ladies are champions in their farm specialties, beating everybody in their state. Miss Divan is the two-year champion of Wisconsin and has hundreds of ribbons and a bank account to show for her work. Mrs. Green produced the heaviest litter of Chester Whites in the United States last year.

"Tremendous strides are being made in economical hog production at the present time, and experiment stations and manufacturers are finding many new facts as regards sunshine and air in producing more profit from the hog. Windows are now set in central hog houses so as to give as many hours of sunlight every day of the year as possible, and open air lots for the young pigs are arranged for early spring when the first warm days come, the direct rays of the sun aiding growth and bone building. Sanitary pens, ventilation systems, feed and litter carriers and running water from farm water systems, spraying of the quarters, all help cut labor costs and increase health and profits from the pigs. Women are apt pupils in learning and applying these scientific facts of farming."

If women can make a success of the business in the North, where hogs have to be housed half of the year, Texas farmers, with markets in every large city, and pasturing the year around, should do even better.—Sherman Democrat.

THE VANITY CASE

BY CAROLYN WELLS COPYRIGHT 1926 N.E.A.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

MRS. PRENTISS, sees mysterious lights in the Heath household next door one night and the next day Harbor Gardens, Long Island, is agog over the murder of MYRA HEATH and the disappearance of her husband, PERRY.

House-guests of the Heaths are LAWRENCE INMAN, heir to Myra's fortune, and BUNNY MOORE, beautiful, vivacious, to whom suspicion points because of her strange actions.

Myra Heath never used cosmetics, never wore color, yet when her body was found she was heavily rouged. She was a collector of glass, and it was a rare old bottle from her collection that the murderer used to kill her. Candles were burning at her head and feet; nearby was a card marked, "The Work of Perry Heath."

The strange thing about Heath's disappearance is that the windows and doors were locked on the inside the night before and were found that way in the morning. Fingerprints of Bunny and Inman were found on the bottle.

At the Country Club the murder is discussed by SAM ANDERSON, Heath's rival for the club presidency; AL CUNNINGHAM, who is trying to solve the crime, and others. Meanwhile TODD HUNTER BUCK, Mrs. Prentiss' nephew, has met Bunny and fallen in love with her.

Bunny is amazed to get a phone call from Heath. He phones her again, saying Inman is the murderer. Bunny faints under a grilling by DETECTIVE MOTT, and Inman confides to Buck that he saw Bunny ascending the stairs after the murder. Mott questions all the servants and tells them to keep quiet.

Anderson invites Cunningham to his house and there, while waiting for his host, Cunningham is suddenly confronted by Perry Heath, who disappears as mysteriously as he had appeared. Shortly afterward Anderson comes in.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXXIV

Anderson's voice was lost as he entered the house and made for the dining room. He had pushed Cunningham ahead of him, and soon the two were sitting down to a very appetizing chafing dish supper.

"Well, I suppose you want to hear what I did," Anderson said and paused suddenly as he saw Cunningham staring at him.

So suddenly that he bit his lip, and rising, with a muffled exclamation of pain, he hurried from the room, but was back in a moment.

"Bit my lip," he exclaimed, tenderly patting the bruised place with his table napkin, and resuming his chair. "All right, now, nothing serious. Well, Cunny, I'm like that man who said he didn't accomplish as much as he expected and he didn't expect he would! I thought it would be easy to trace Perry Heath through his bankers. But they knew nothing about him at all. They let me see his bank account, though—I felt a mean ear to look at it!—and only a day or two before he disappeared, he had received a big check from a man named Crandall. I assumed it was payment for a picture, and I hunted down the Crandall man. That's what took the time, for he lived out in a beautiful suburb. Well, I found him, and he had bought one of Perry's pictures and it was his check. But he knew nothing of Perry. He had bought the picture through Carr and Holden—they're Heath's dealers, you know. So I didn't get a bit farther, and I'm disgusted with detective work—my own or anybody else's!"

"So am I!" said Cunningham, so emphatically that Anderson looked up quickly.

"Why, what's come over you?" he inquired, with interest. "I thought Sherlock was your middle name?"

"No, Fairhead's my middle name! Nonsensical, nonsensical, nonsensical—any of those?"

"Explain," Anderson said, smiling at the dejected countenance that faced him.

"Well," Cunningham shot his bolt, "Perry Heath was here tonight."

"What?" Anderson's tone was as explosive as the other's, and he evinced unbounded incredulity.

"Yes, Perry himself, in the flesh. I talked with him."

"Well, if you're going to talk with me, make yourself explicit. I don't get your meaning, my boy."

So Cunningham told him, plainly and truthfully, every word that had passed between himself and the fugitive Heath.

He spoke slowly and straightforwardly, but he kept a wary eye out for any expression on Anderson's face that might warn him how his tale was to be taken.

Sam Anderson said no word until the whole story was told. He watched Cunningham carefully, looking up alertly if the narrative halted, and when the climax was reached he remarked, briefly:

"You were quite right, Al, about your middle name."

That was all, but Cunningham grew hot all over at the searing tone of reproach.

"Now look here, Sam," he began, but Anderson interrupted:

"There's nothing to 'look here' about. You were a double-barreled idiot to let Heath get away, if you had him here. One yell from you would have brought at least three men servants from the house, and more from the garage and garden. You muffed it, Cunny, and that's all there is about that. Now don't whine, and don't apologize. Your stupidity is beyond all apology and whining won't do a bit of good. How did he look? Fit, and all that?"

"I couldn't see very well, it was dark, and, too, I was so flabbergasted."

"You would be!" and Anderson still used that tone of utter exasperation at his friend's stupidity. "Well, all we can do now, is to try our best to get the little girl free and run Inman in."

Anderson spoke with brisk energy, as one who sees his plan of action made clear.

"Earlier said than done," Cunningham growled.

"No, not if you tell your story to the authorities as convincingly as you have told it to me. I deplore your inactivity, but I'm glad to have your evidence. The testimony of an eye witness, repeated at first hand, must have weight, and even that dunderhead Mott can't fail to recognize it."

"You know," Cunningham said musingly, "that young chap next door to the Heaths, he believed all along that Inman was the murderer. But he said, that Inman killed Heath, too, and hid his body in the cellar or pitched it into the sea."

"How clever!" Anderson said, sarcastically. "But now, we know—or at least you know, that Heath is alive—I say, Al, it was dark, are you sure that was Heath?"

"Oh, yes, I know Perry as well as you do, and I could see him clearly enough to recognize him. And you know that little trick he has of tossing back that lock of hair that falls over his forehead, in true artist fashion. Oh, yes, it was Perry all right."

"Well, then Inman didn't kill him in spite of the young man's astute deductions."

"No of course not. Buck doesn't know anything of sleuthing—any more than I do," Cunningham added with a wry smile.

"Don't blame yourself too much, I daresay I hit into you too roughly, old chap. If so, forget it. But I confess I should have liked to come home and find you here with Perry Heath, bound and gagged in a big chair!"

But I had no reason to find and gag him. He came to give helpful information—

"Which you swallowed, bait, hook and sinker! Oh, I don't say it may not all be true, but, on the other hand, it may not. Why, just suppose Perry Heath was the murderer, wouldn't he act just the same way? Suppose he wanted to free the little girl from suspicion, wouldn't he lay the blame on Larry Inman, the only possible suspect except himself? It's a mull, any way you look at it, but I wish I could have talked to Heath, even if he got away afterward."

"I wish you could have, Sam. I'm darned sorry I let him go, but he just vanished, you see."

"Like the Hoojoo. Well, what say, Al, shall we go over to headquarters and acquaint the powers that be with this tale, or shall we sleep over it and give it to them in the morning?"

"Oh, let's leave it till morning. Nobody of importance will be there this time of night, and I don't want to go clear out to Mott's house. I should think morning would be time enough."

WINNERS IN BIG CONTEST ARE TO BE CHOSEN SOON

COLOR-PAGE IN JOURNAL DRAWS LARGE NUMBER OF CONTESTANTS

Winners in the Journal's Color Page contest, for youngsters of the city fifteen years of age and younger, which were to have been announced in Sunday's paper, will be announced in the Journal for Tuesday, August 31.

This delay in announcing the winners of the $10, $5, $3 and $1 prizes for the best colored pictures, was due to the fact that the response was even greater than had been anticipated; and with the great number of these pages which were turned in for the contest, the pages running into the hundreds, the contest staff has been kept working overtime in the effort to keep the contest straight, and to handle the large number of the entries efficiently.

The Color Page, carrying the names of a number of local advertisers, which ran in the Daily Journal Sunday and Monday, August 22 and 23, has proved itself one of the most popular contests sponsored by a newspaper for

FEDERAL LABOR MAN HERE; WILL REMAIN A WEEK

A. M. ROBERTSON TO MAKE SURVEY OF COTTON SITUATION

A. M. Robertson, of Fort Worth, representative as a special agent of the Texas Farm Labor Division of the U. S. Department of Labor, arrived in Lubbock Sunday for a stay of the week, during which time he will make a survey of the cotton picking situation as it will be brought forward later when cotton begins to mature.

Mr. Robertson's survey will include an investigation of when the pickers will be needed, and how many will be required, for the general situation; and specific questions of the amount to be paid for the picking, whether or not houses will be furnished, with fuel, or without, and as to whether transportation for the pickers will be paid by the farmers upon delivery by the Labor Department of the pickers.

A meeting will be called of the farmers of this section, Mr. Robertson said, during the latter part of the week, with the exact date, time and place to be announced some time later. At this meeting, when it is expected that a large number of farmers will meet for their own benefit in organizing, a discussion will be had of the needs of the trade territory in regard to this situation, and just how the farmers will meet their own needs.

Mr. Robertson will be in Big Spring over the first, where he will hold a meeting there for this same purpose, and will return to Lubbock in time for the meeting to be held in Lubbock Saturday.

Mexican General And Party Saved Following Storm

(By The Associated Press)

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, Aug. 30.—General Serrato, military commander at Matamoros, and a party of soldiers accompanied by two Americans, arrived in Matamoros yesterday after having spent four days without food or adequate clothing, on the beach about sixty miles below Matamoros.

The general on an inspection tour of the beach posts, was caught Wednesday by the high tide caused by the Gulf storm. His chauffeur, became panic-stricken as the waters rose and fled with the automobile, containing the hats, clothing and food of the party. Using pillowcases and coats to protect their heads from the blazing sun, the party started its long march up the beach to civilization. After covering about fifteen miles they found the automobile, which had been overturned by the driven in his hasty flight, the car being partly submerged with almost of the food supply destroyed.

The tide extended back to the sand hills, where the party took refuge. After the waters subsided they finally got the motor to operate and returned to Matamoros.

"And let Heath put a few hundred more miles between himself and us! Though I don't suppose any search party about pick him up now, the trail is too cold. Well, so be it, then. Come on out to the porch and have a night-cap and a smoke and tomorrow we'll deliver the police, to no good what- ever!"

"You scoff at everything, Sam, but what have you to offer as a better plan of pursuit. If you'd been here, what would you have said to Heath?"

"First of all, if you want the truth, Cunny, I'd have marched him straight to headquarters. If Mott wasn't there I'd have sent for him, p. d. q. And then I'd have made Heath tell his story under oath. Then we'd have had something to go on, some actual evidence. I say, suppose we go over to —Every good city in Texas has good Light and Power Service. There is not a good city in Texas that lacks good Light and Power service. This is why public utilities services are called that. They are essential services.

This service that builds up communities when it is good and holds them back when it is poor is unique in the fact that which helps the community also helps the utility, and what is bad for the community is also bad for the utility.

This Company is a Community Builder First. It recognizes that in building the communities of the South Plains, that it is building itself.

To this end we are at all times seeking the best co-operation of the people of the South Plains Cities and Towns, this fact is evident by the unequalled service that we are rendering to 31 Pan-handle Cities.

REVOLT FEARED AGAINST SPAIN

Army Officers Said To Be in Plot To Overthrow General Rivera, Dictator

(By The Associated Press)

LONDON, Aug. 30.—A serious situation prevails in Spain. It is rumored that a group of army officers has challenged the authority of General Miguel Primo de Rivera, the dictator premier, who has ruled with a strong arm since September 1923, when a coup d'état he overthrew the government of the Marquis of Albuquer.

No details of the situation have reached London, although it is indicated in dispatches from the Franco-Spanish frontier that the Spanish railroads have been put under civil guard and that three Spanish war ships have sailed for Tangier, the international zone in Northwest Morocco, which Spain recently has demanded should be given over entirely to Spanish rule.

Revolt Is Rumored

Information coming out of Spain in recent months has indicated that a revolt against Primo de Rivera's rule was afoot. As recently as Friday a dispatch from the Spanish frontier in France said that it had been learned that a change in the Spanish government was imminent at any moment. Another dispatch reported unrest among the Spanish artillery and engineer corps, because of the premier's method of promoting officers by election instead of by seniority.

All the busses running out of Lubbock from the Union Bus Terminal will carry a Panhandle South Plains Fair banner advertising the fair, according to C. W. Jones, manager of the terminal who secured twenty banners at the Chamber of Commerce Monday morning to be put on the busses.

All automobile owners have been urged by officials of the fair association to get the banners and tie them on the cars and a good response has been received while a large number of cars have not yet been decorated with the banners.

The banners can be had at the Chamber of Commerce office.

Rodgers' Parents Say Last Goodbye To Fearless Hero

(By The Associated Press)

HAVRE DE GRACE, Md., Aug. 30.—A gray-haired mother and father were bidding farewell today to Commander John Rodgers, killed Friday in an airplane fall at Philadelphia navy yard. While the nation waited to honor the hero of the San Francisco-Hawaii flight tomorrow at Arlington national cemetery, simple rites were to be held this evening at the Ancestral Rodgers home at Zion Hill.

The funeral services today were to be private for the family and a few very intimate friends.

Close Friends View Body
Commander Rodgers' body has lain in the Rodgers parlor in a flag-draped casket since last Saturday when it was brought by motor from Philadelphia. Yesterday only close friends of the commander were admitted to the home. Rear Admiral John A. Rodgers, retired, the dead hero's father, preserved his naval bearing, despite his grief, to receive neighbors' messages of sympathy at the door.

Mother Is Prostrated
The commander's 72-year-old mother, who rushed to his bedside at Philadelphia when he called for her, but could not arrive before he died, was nearly overcome with grief when she reached home with the body of her eldest son, and has received no visitors. Another son, Fred, was lost in Alaska 16 years ago.

Tomorrow Commander Rodgers will be buried with military honors at Arlington.

Pat Harrison Would Bar Yanks From Paris

PARIS, Aug. 30. (AP)—Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi, is so convinced that France should make a debt settlement with the United States that he would bar all Americans from visiting France until such an agreement was signed.

If such a step were possible and he had the power he would make such a regulation immediately, he told the Associated Press here today on the eve of his departure for New York. He is going home, he said, to jump right into the fall campaign and put candidates for Congress on record against debt cancellation.

Search For Husband After Wife's Death

GLENDAL, Calif., Aug. 30. (AP)—J. A. Wyckoff, said to be a short story writer, faces a manslaughter charge as the result of the death here yesterday of his wife, Margaret Morgan Wyckoff, motion picture actress, who died following a leap from a speeding automobile.

Police are searching for the husband, who, they declared, abandoned the wheel of the machine and jumped from the car. Mrs. Wyckoff becoming frightened, leaped from the machine before Dave W. Taggart, a third occupant, could reach the wheel and bring the car under control.

According to Taggart, the Wyckoffs recently separated after a brief but turbulent married life. They met last night and were riding to the wife's home in Hollywood to settle their differences when a quarrel arose.

Building In City Nears Million Mark

Building in the city of Lubbock jumped to near the $1,000,000 mark last week when an even $25,000 in permits was issued over the six-day period, all of which was for residences. The lowest permit, except one for an addition to a home, was $3,000, and the highest $5,500. Not a permit was issued during the week for a business building.

The total for the month now stands at $178,910, the highest monthly issuance shown by the records during the year. The year's total is $978,920. It is known, however, that there have been many residences built in the city this year on which there has not been a permit issued, especially during the first six months before a building inspector was authorized to take up his duties.

CHILDRESS, Texas, Aug. 30. (AP)—With both hands amputated, Mrs. W. N. Moles, pioneer resident, returned to her home here Monday from a Quana hospital.

POLLARD VOTE IS MOUNTING OVER J. A. ALLRED

"within the next six months, Moody besieged with the hungry boys with tongues hanging out for favors, will realize that being Governor is not an continual round of pleasure."

He intimated he was not ready to reply when asked whether the outcome meant the termination of "Fergusonism" in Texas politics.

Moody's statement declared the primary result definitely ended the political career of James E. Ferguson.

The run-off contest for one of the two remaining state offices at stake has been definitely settled with returns compiled up to Sunday night. Some doubt remains in the third contest that for attorney general, in which Claude Pollard, veteran Houston attorney, had polled $29,551 as compared with $28,757 for James Allred, 27-year old Wichita Falls candidate, in the race for state treasurer, Gregory Hatcher, incumbent, holds a lead of more than 125,000.
