Report on flag

The Rebel flag committee was expected to report to the Midland school board at today's 4 p.m. meeting, but several members of the committee say a proposal is not ready. The committee, appointed Feb. 23 by school board trustess to develop a solution to the controversy surrounding Lee High School's Rebel flag, is expected to request more time to discuss the issue.

Public meeting set

A public meeting on construction plans for Wadley Avenue has been slated from 7 to 8 p.m. today at Trinity School, 3500 W. Wadley Ave. The city has awarded a $1 million contract for the reconstruction of Wadley from Whitney to Godfrey streets. A pipe will be installed beneath the street to help drainage. The city of Midland engineering staff and street commission members will explain the sequence of construction events that will affect businesses in the area.

AUSTIN — The Senate Education Committee chairman on Monday called a Texas Supreme Court deadline for school finance reform meaningless. "At least two or three members of that court over there do not have the strength of character to stick by their guns, and they're going to look for some way not to shut the schools down, in my opinion," said Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur. The Supreme Court gave lawmakers until April 1 to devise a plan to equitably fund poor school districts.

Saddam close to crushing uprising in south

■ Bush administration debates whether to become more deeply involved in protecting rebels.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Administration officials said on Monday that President Saddam Hussein may be close to crushing the rebellion against his authority in southern Iraq. The officials, monitoring intelligence reports from the region, also predicted that he would then prevail over the Kurdish uprising that still threatens Baghdad's control over northern Iraq.

The Iraqi leader strengthened his position as the Bush administration debated whether to become more deeply involved in protecting the rebels by carrying out its threat to prevent any flights by Iraqi helicopter gunships, which offi-

Firefighters labor amid apocalypse

GREATER BURGAN OIL FIELD, Kuwait — The wind ripples over a deathly lake of crude. Like stationary tornadoes from hell, scores of oil fires roar red, black and searing.

An American oil firefighter places another pinch of tobacco between his cheek and gum, and spits.

"We kill oil wells," drawls Mike Petrus, a 33-year-old Texan. "I guess that makes us special."

Petrus and his colleagues have got a lot of killing to do — fleeing Iraqi troops ignited about 600 oil wells in Kuwait which burn about 6 million barrels of oil daily, crude worth more than $100

Troubled INS stands at crossroads

By Dan Freedman
Hearst News Service

This is the first of a four-part series by Dan Freedman, legal affairs writer for the Hearst Newspapers Washington bureau. Freedman spent three months preparing the series, traveling to California and Texas to observe the agency's operations firsthand. He also read dozens of documents and interviewed more than 75 current and former INS officials as well as immigration rights activists and outside experts on immigration. Some outsiders and many INS, Justice Department and other Bush administration officials agreed to interviews only on condition that they not be identified.

HOUSTON — As part of Operation Dragon, an undercover immigration agent from the Border Patrol outpost in Blaine, Wash., came here in January 1990 to set up a sting against a phony green-card sales operation.

But before the Blaine agent and his Immigration and Naturalization Service team could brandish badges and guns and lead the suspects away in handcuffs, they discovered that their targets — the green-card peddlers — were also undercover INS agents.

The Blaine team had stumbled across a task force from the INS Houston office. With hidden video cameras and one member posing as a crooked INS employee, the Houston agents had set themselves up in a suite at the Residence Inn motel on the Southwest Freeway.

They had hoped to ensnare Chinese alien smugglers in the market for green cards, which entitle the bearers to reside permanently in this country. In the wrong hands, the cards were worth $14,000 each.

It didn't take long for the Blaine agent to realize that there was something strange about this particular band of green-card peddlers. They looked like, well, cops doing undercover work, one agent recalled.

■ Related story/3A

The Blaine investigators went to the motel desk clerk, identified themselves as INS agents and asked who was in those rooms.

"Well, you guys are," the baffled clerk responded. A short while later, the Blaine-led agents phoned their Houston counterparts. The two embarrassed INS teams met, flashed IDs — and laughed and cursed at what had happened.

Now, more than a year later, the Houston episode has come to symbolize what many in and outside the INS say is the service's long-standing reputation for gross disorganization and mismanagement.

Why, one Houston agent asked, didn't officials at the INS Washington headquarters "walk across the hall" to

High court to tackle cigarette suits case

■ A defeat for tobacco companies could lead to billions in claims, boost prices $2 a pack.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court agreed Monday to decide whether cigarette makers may be exposed to lawsuits — potentially worth billions of dollars — that accuse them of concealing the dangers of smoking.

Anti-smoking activists said a defeat for tobacco companies could raise cigarette prices by more than $2 a pack, or even plunge the industry into bankruptcy.

Cigarette companies said they welcome the high court's action, noting they had urged its intervention.

The justices will resolve lower court conflicts over this question: Does federal law shield manufacturers from accusations that they do not give smokers adequate warnings about health hazards?

The court will study the issue in a long-running battle between the tobacco industry and the family of Rose Cipollone, a New Jersey woman who died of lung cancer.

A ruling, the first by the justices in a dispute over the dangers of smoking, is expected in 1992.

In other action, the court:

'Dances With Wolves' dominates Academy Awards

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Dances With Wolves," Kevin Costner's epic Western that takes the side of the Indians, dominated the Academy Awards on Monday night with seven Oscars, including best picture and director.

Kathy Bates, the demented recluse in "Misery," and Jeremy Irons, the sinister Claus Von Bulow of "Reversal of Fortune," won Academy Awards for best leading performances.

"Dances," which had led with 12 nominations, also won for sound, original score, film editing, cinematography and Michael Blake's screenplay adapted from his own novel.

"I'll never forget what happened here tonight" an exultant Costner said as he held up the best picture trophy he shared with co-producer Jim Wilson. Costner also won an Oscar for his directorial debut, a three-hour, big-budget film with subtitles that Hollywood had scorned, but which became a box-office and critical sensation.

"I'd like to thank the academy — I've been waiting a long time to say that!" said a teary Miss Bates, an upset winner who was a relative unknown in films despite a long stage career. Most observers had predicted that either Anjelica Hus-

Midland voters choices' in acting categories were popular ones, especially at the box office. Actress Julia Roberts, for her work in "Pretty Woman," and Kevin Costner, for his acting in "Dances with Wolves," were the favorites among the more than 200 callers to the Community Pulse.

Local callers echoed the sentiments of Academy voters in selecting Costner's "Dances with Wolves," as the Best Picture of the year.

All three winners were overwhelming choices by voters.

Unlike those casting ballots in Hollywood, Pulse voters had a "none of the above" choice to plug in their own pick. Among those overlooked by the Academy but mentioned by callers were Helen Mirren, for "The Cook, The Thief, His Wife & Her Lover," Mel Gibson's "Hamlet," Patrick Swayze for "Ghost" and "Pretty Woman" for Best Picture.

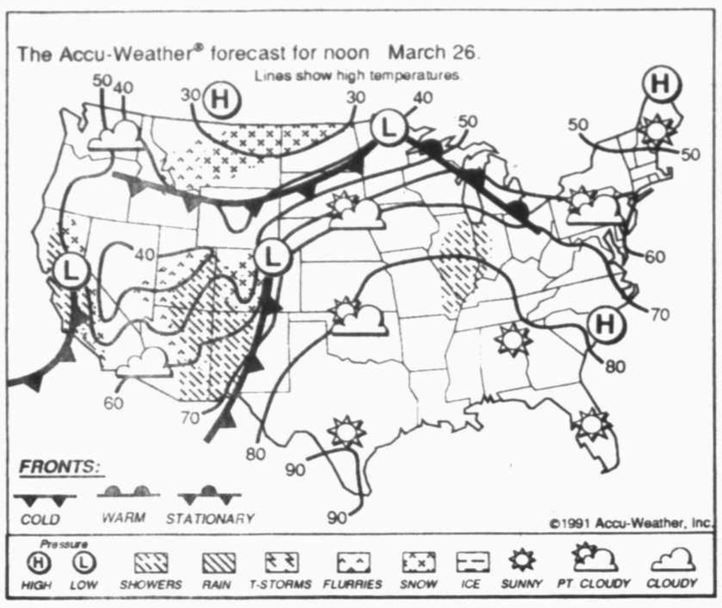
WEATHER SUMMARY



Cloudy, windy day forecast

Today's forecast calls for low clouds in the morning, then partly cloudy and windy weather with possibly patchy dust, a high in the mid-80s and southwest winds increasing to 25 to 35 mph, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a low in the lower 50s.

Wednesday is expected to be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-70s.

After an overnight low of 52, Monday's high was 87 compared with the record high of 90 set in 1938. The record low for today's date was 20 set in 1965.

STATE

Gusty winds buffeted the Texas coast and West Texas on Monday, causing blowing dust over the South Plains.

Meteorologists blamed the high winds on a low-pressure system to the west and high pressure to the east.

Westerly winds were clocked at between 46 and 55 mph in Guadalupe Pass.

The National Weather Service said blowing dust is likely again Tuesday, with a chance of late-afternoon thunderstorms.

Some showers fell Monday between Houston and Beaumont, but they were light, with little accumulation.

Dense fog and occasional light drizzle is likely for today in South Texas. Conditions in South Texas are expected to be warm and breezy through Wednesday, with widely scattered showers or thunderstorms in Southeast Texas. Today's highs should be mostly in the 80s and 90s, with lows tonight in the 40s and 50s.

NATION

A Pacific cold front crossing the West on Monday produced rain, snow and strong gusty wind across California and Nevada and parts of Oregon, Utah and Arizona.

Blue Canyon, Calif., in the Sierra Nevada between Sacramento, Calif., and Reno, Nev., got 20 inches of snow in 24 hour, bringing their total snow cover to 68 inches.

Crater Lake, Ore., got 6 inches of snow during the night. Six inches of snow also was reported in the Frazier Park area of the Tehachapi Mountains in Southern California.

Up to an inch of rain soaked lower elevations of Southern California during the night. Up to 1 to 2 inches of rain was reported in the hills and mountains.

Mount Wilson, Calif., got 1.53 inches during the six hours up to 4 a.m. PST.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

IRAQ: Officials predict Saddam will prevail

(From 1A)

cials said have been an important instrument in crushing the last rebel strongholds.

Iraqi security forces continue to fly helicopter gunship assaults on the rebels, administration officials said, despite an attempt last week by United States military commanders in the Persian Gulf to stop the attacks by warning Iraq such flights would be considered a threat to allied forces.

Kurdish rebel spokesmen in Syria appealed for the United States to intervene against the Iraqi aircraft, arguing that the planes are flying in direct violation of the tentative cease fire agreement made between American and Iraqi commanders on March 3 in a meeting at Safwan, Iraq.

The Pentagon has not carried out its implied threat to shoot down armed helicopters even though last week U.S. warplanes shot down two Iraqi warplanes.

U.S. warplanes are flying combat patrols night and day over Iraq and monitoring all air activity with AWACS surveillance planes, Pentagon officials said.

Tracking helicopters is somewhat more difficult because they fly at low altitudes, officials said; but they expressed confidence that they could shoot down the gunships if ordered to do so.

The administration's explanation on Monday of its policy on Iraq's use of the helicopter gunships was called "murky" by one official, who reflected the unresolved policy questions among President Bush's senior advisers on how deeply American air forces should get involved in protecting the insurrection from Baghdad's attempt to quash it.

"We have the threat out there," one official said, referring to the helicopters, "but at the same time we do have the problem of not getting involved in their internal affairs."

Unlike the Reagan administration, which gave Afghan rebels American-made Stinger anti-aircraft missiles to shoot down Soviet helicopter gunships, the Bush administration is indirectly aiding the rebels without acknowledging it, officials said.

While Bush has warned Iraq against helicopter flights and the use of chemical weapons, and shot down Iraqi warplanes far from allied lines, he has avoided direct involvement in Iraq's civil strife.

One official said that Bush was to meet with his senior advisers this week to resolve "a whole variety of gulf issues," including perhaps the Iraqi helicopter issue.

The Pentagon's reluctance to go beyond its warning on Iraq's use of the gunships is signifcant because the helicopters are a crucial factor in Iraq's success against lightly-armed insurgent forces.

The rebellion itself, the official said, may be in its final stages.

The insurrection in southern Iraq "is not over yet," said one administration official reviewing the daily intelligence reaching senior officials in Washington, but the Iraqis "have control of what is going on and they will be moving into mopping it up pretty soon."

When this mopping-up operation is completed, the official said, "the north will not be as much trouble" because the insurgents "just can't deal with" the helicopter gunships.

At the Pentagon, a senior official said that there had been no change in the basic assessment that Saddam's government forces will ultimately prevail against the insurrection. "The government forces are the ones with the tanks, the armored personnel carriers, the good radios, and centralized command," he said.

The State Department spokesman, Margaret D. Tutwiler, would only say that fighting continues in both southern and northern Iraq. "In the north, government forces appear to remain largely in control of Mosul," the largest city in the region, as well as Kirkuk, the oil-producing center in north-central Iraqi, where government troops were "still hard pressed by the dissidents," she said.

"Overall levels of fighting in the south continue to be relatively lower," Miss Tutwiler said, "but heavy fighting occured over the weekend in several locations in the general area of the lower Euphrates, where the government at least lost control over several towns."

Kurdish rebel groups said on Monday that two Iraqi fighter-bombers and five helicopters attacked the Kirkuk area in two raids early on Monday morning, causing heavy caualties, according to radio broadcasts from Iran monitored by the British Broadcasting Corporation. The rebels said they shot down one helicopter.

Administration officials said they could not confirm that fixed-wing aircraft were used in the attacks, but U.S. officials reiterated that helicopter gunship assaults were continuing. A Pentagon official said that he believed no fixed-wing aircraft have been flown by Iraq since Friday.

Also on Monday, the Pentagon said the U.S. Army's VII Corps was fanning out to forward positions in the Euphrates Valley in southern Iraq, but officials said these forces were only re-occupying the positions previously held by units of the XVIII Airborne Corps.

FIREFIGHTERS: Scores of oil fires roar red, black

million.

On Monday, Petrus and four other specialists with Boots and Coots Co. of Houston turned off a well that had spewed crude over an area the size of a baseball diamond.

The action, demanding lots of technique but only a few turns of a wrench, was one of the first moves in the biggest job these men have ever had.

Firefighters expect it will be at least two years before plumes of smoke cease to blacken Kuwait's skies, turning day into night and filling the air with poisonous hydrocarbons.

In some places the oil lies almost a foot thick. In others, tufts of desert brush poke their blackened heads above the goo. Barbed wire hid under the crude in several places — a grim reminder of war.

Heading the crew was Boots Hansen, a stocky, white-haired 65-year-old known as the "little general" to his men. The tough-talking Texan doesn't suffer fools gladly and supervises operations closely, even down to putting a "Boots and Coots" decal on the door of a Chevy van.

"Wanna go for a ride, fellas, and watch us get dirty?" Hansen said, cracking a rare, wry smile as the day began. He and his men wear bright white to fight oil fires. By the end of the day they are smeared black.

Other companies, like Red Adair's team, wear red. Joe Bowden's Wild Well Control Inc. of Spring, Texas, wears yellow.

"Some people may say we look kind of funny, but if there's an oil fire in the neighborhood, I don't think people would care what you look like as long as you put it out," Bowden says.

Bowden's business card tells it all. On one side, Wild Well Control Inc. is spelled out in letters that belong on the side of a Western saloon. On the other, an oil well fire in technicolor assaults the eyes.

Second in command is Ace Abner, 62, of Odessa, Texas, wiry and "mean as a snake," as Petrus describes him.

"Ole Ace could whip four of you, any of you," Petrus said. "I know I wouldn't mess with him."

Then there's Joe Carpenter, a 54-year-old from Houston.

"He's a welding fool," Abner says.

It took Carpenter just 300 hours to build the firm's tush hog, a 70-foot-long horizontal crane that firefighters use to place explosives or capping devices on the well.

Rounding out the crew are Petrus and Larry Nixon, a 33-year-old from Spring. Both men both sport mustaches, chew tobacco and call each other cousin, shortened to "cuz" in their deep Texas drawls.

They haven't had much contact with Arab society, although several have worked in the region before.

The only thing that seems to rub them the wrong way is bureaucratic wrangles with the government. The latest one involves Saudi Arabia — Saudi customs authorities apparently have held important firefighting equipment at the border for several days.

The firefighting team has decided to ship the equipment from other Persian Gulf states and to fly as much in as possible to avoid the slow land route.

"They just do things differently out here," Abner says.

INS: Reviews of documents show troubled agency check whether other units had undercover operations going? Why, another wondered, didn't the INS officials in Houston who knew something about both operations "put two and two together?"

(From 1A)

Reviews of dozens of internal documents, government audits and private sector studies on the INS, as well as more than 75 interviews with current and former INS officials and outside immigration activists show that, besides tolerating wasteful duplication as in the Houston case, the service:

■ Maintains different legal standards in its four regions, resulting in immigrants receiving unequal treatment. What happens to a prospective immigrant often depends more on the whims of powerful INS regional commissioners, district directors and Border Patrol sector chiefs than on a uniform policy set by INS headquarters in Washington.

■ Fails to keep up with millions of applications for benefits or changes in immigration status, resulting in lengthy delays and foulups for immigrants "yearning to breathe free," as the poet Emma Lazarus wrote a century ago.

■ Suffers low morale, stemming in part from the service's snail-paced efforts to reform itself from within.

Studies of the INS dating to the 1970s paint a pattern of poor financial management and warring factions struggling for control. One report by a leading think tank here, the Brookings Institution, called INS "the beleaguered bureaucracy."

The latest such bomb to hit the agency exploded in January when the General Accounting Office, the auditing arm of Congress, issued a scathing report. It concluded that the INS has done nothing about "overlap" in its investigative force, that the agency's books are in "chaotic" and "deplorable" condition and that its decentralized management promotes "fragmentation" bordering on anarchy.

The turmoil within the INS has had a marked effect on U.S. citizens as well as prospective immigrants.

INS inefficiency can be seen in the two-hour traffic jams in which cars crawl from Tijuana, Mexico across the border into San Ysidro, Calif.

It can be seen in long lines at airport international arrival terminals in New York, Atlanta and Seattle.

It can be seen in waits of a year or more endured by applicants in Miami for legal status and INS benefits.

Outside critics charge — and the INS denies — that the service's chief uniformed division, the Border Patrol, uses excessive force on illegals crossing from Mexico.

To INS employees themselves, the "overlap" problem is the most frustrating. The Houston case is not the first example of crossed wires.

In Corpus Christi, for instance, special agents showed up in 1987 at a bakery and a chemical company to check whether employers were following the 1986 immigration law requiring that jobs be denied to illegal aliens.

According to Gary Renick, in charge of the INS investigations unit in San Antonio and head of the nationwide organization of agent chiefs, company managers at both places told the agents that they had checked the firms' records only two weeks earlier. "We said, 'No, that wasn't us.' It turned out it was the Border Patrol."

INS Commissioner Gene McNary, who declined to be interviewed for this series, acknowledges serious internal problems but maintains that many of INS's worst shortcomings are being addressed through new management initiatives, according to INS sources and an internal memo.

But McNary's most sweeping recommendations — including strong doses of centralized control — were rejected. Instead, last November, his boss, Attorney General Dick Thornburgh set up a three-man team headed by Norman Carlson, former director of the U.S. Bureau of Prisons, to come up with a new plan.

McNary protested but finally acquiesced in the Carlson team's drive to replace several inexperienced or ineffective INS headquarters managers.

In the 100 years since it was organized as the Bureau of Immigration within the Treasury Department, the INS has wrestled with a dual identity. It is at once responsible for letting immigrants in and keeping them out, leading some critics to suggest these functions should be divided and given to different agencies.

Throughout this century, the INS has seemed less and less able to cope with each succeeding wave of immigrants — from the Eastern and Southern Europeans of the early 1900s to the Latinos and Asians of the 1980s.

Also, the INS has had to navigate the changing tides of U.S. laws governing who can and cannot enter.

Congress often has viewed immigration policy as a variety of patronage in its rawest political form. Immigration gates have been opened or closed to various nationalities, depending on which ones have political clout or which succeed in tugging on national heartstrings. During these wide swings, the INS has become little more than a gofer.

Although the agency has been part of the Justice Department since 1940, officials there historically have neglected it.

The 1980s proved to be the service's most stressful decade yet. The INS handled more than 3 million legalization applications under the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act. Surprisingly, snags were few, although a companion effort to legalize alien agricultural workers bogged down because the service failed to check the documents and criminal histories of applicants adequately.

Current and former INS officials say that while the service concentrated on the legalization flood, it neglected basic day-to-day functions of bookkeeping and management.

As a result, the INS today is gripped by serious foreboding about its ability to handle future immigration challenges, INS sources say.

With a billion-dollar budget, the agency has 17,000 employees including 4,900 Border Patrol agents assigned to police the 6,000 miles of land borders; 1,600 investigative special agents, who enforce immigration laws away from the borders; 2,800 inspectors, who check travel documents of those arriving at land, air and sea ports, and 1,950 examiners, who process and review applications for citizenship and various immigration benefits.

Arrayed against this lineup are the estimated 3 million Latinos who try crossing the Southwest border illegally each year; 457 million aliens and U.S. citizens who pass through U.S. ports of entry, and the 2.9 million applicants for benefits or changes in status.

Now, the agency must cope with the Immigration Act of 1990, which represents another historical shift in immigration policy by Congress, this time toward Europeans with professional skills.

At the same time, the agency is reconsidering applications of 150,000 refugees of El Salvador and Guatemala and reviewing asylum requests of 350,000 first-time applicants from those countries — an "unbelievable burden," according to Doris Meissner, who was acting INS commissioner from 1981 to 1982.

Reviewing such a massive number of asylum applications would not have been necessary if the INS had done them right the first time, said Arthur C. Helton, refugee project director for the Lawyers Committee for Human Rights.

In the past, Helton said, a "hard-nosed anti-alien mentality" dominated the service's judgment of asylum cases. It did not consider whether U.S. law was meant to protect the Salvadorans and Guatemalans who had a "well-founded fear" of political persecution if they returned home, he said.

The staggering workload is not the only complication in the INS's efforts at reform.

"We are never going to have this agency under control unless — and until — the American people, through Congress, decide what they want to do about immigration," said one veteran INS manager, who asked not to be identified. "We're an easy target. But there's nothing wrong with our people or our agency structure — we just get third-rate resources."

Others, however, say the service shoots itself in the foot through incompetent management.

"We have brought ourselves to our knees, and a lot of it has to do with the caliber of leadership or lack thereof," said another INS official, who also asked not to be identified. "It's terrible how ripped apart we've become."

OSCARS: Bates, Irons win

(From 1A)

ton or Joanne Woodward would walk off with the prize.

"This is great!" Irons said. He thanked his wife, who is in England, saying "I wish you were there to carry this, because you helped me win it."

Whoopi Goldberg, the fake psychic who surprises herself by contacting the dead in "Ghost," and Joe Pesci, the maniacal mobster of "GoodFellas," won Oscars for supporting performances.

"Hold on to your dreams, don't let anyone take them away," Blake, who struggled for years to sell a screenplay, said in an acceptance speech he directed to young people. He brought to the podium an American Indian woman who translated his remarks into dialect.

"Ever since I was a little kid I wanted this," said an emotional Goldberg, who had struggled since receiving a best actress nomination for her screen debut in the 1985 film "The Color Purple."

"When I was a little kid, I lived in the projects. You are the people I watched. The people who made me want to be an actor," she told the star-packed crowd.

She became only the second black woman to win an Oscar and the first since Hattie McDaniel was honored for the 1939 film "Gone With the Wind." "Ghost" also won an Oscar for original screenplay.

Pesci was much more subdued, saying "It's my privilege, thank you," and walking off.

Comedian Billy Crystal emceed the show in style, starting off with a hilarious musical tribute to the five best picture nominees for the 63rd annual ceremonies, which took place at the Shrine Auditorium and was televised by ABC-TV.

"Dick Tracy," Warren Beatty's big-budget detective adventure, won prizes for makeup and art direction, and the best costume award went to the French period drama, "Cyrano de Bergerac." The sound effects editing prize went to "The Hunt for Red October."

The Oscar for best documentary feature went to "American Dream" and the documentary short subject award went to "Days of Waiting."

"Journey of Hope," a Swiss movie, won the award as best foreign film.

"GoodFellas," Martin Scorsese's searing gangster epic, dominated the critics' awards this season and was nominated for six Oscars, including best picture and direction. Scorsese, who received a best director nomination for 1980's "Raging Bull," has never won the prize.

Other nominees for best actor were Richard Harris for "The Field"; Gerard Depardieu, "Cyrano de Bergerac"; and Robert De Niro, "Awakenings."

Depardieu, making a movie in Mauritius, was staying away from the ceremonies amid controversy over a magazine interview that quoted him as saying he had participated in rapes as a youth. He said the statement was untrue, and categorically denied saying that he had participated in rape.

For the ninth time in a dozen years, Meryl Streep was nominated as best actress, this time for "Postcards From the Edge." Other best actress nominees: Kathy Bates, "Misery"; Anjelica Huston, "The Grifters"; Julia Roberts, "Pretty Woman"; and Joanne Woodward, "Mr. and Mrs. Bridge."

Behind the statistics: INS mismanagement affects lives

By Dan Freedman
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — For 14-year-old Benjamin Santillan, a simple walk home in January from church in Clifton, Texas, turned into a two-week nightmare.

U.S. Border Patrol agents scooped up the junior high school student in this small town near Waco, asked whether he was a U.S. citizen and hurled racial epithets at him when he said no. Then they gave him a free ride to the U.S.-Mexico border at Del Rio where they booted him out of the country.

According to Vanna Slaughter, administrator of the U.S. Catholic Charities immigration counseling service in Dallas, the agents refused to listen to Santillan's insistence that his mother, a native of Mexico, was now a legal immigrant under the amnesty provisions of the 1986 immigration law.

Nor did they let him explain that she was on the verge of applying to have him legalized as well under the new Immigration and Naturalization Service "family fairness" program, Slaughter said.

In a telephone interview, Santillan said the officers denied him a chance to go home and retrieve documents that would have proved he was on his way to legal status.

"We've been here for a long time," he said in accented but fluent English. "I was angry. They were saying bad stuff about us. Someone from here wouldn't like people from another country calling you stuff."

Don Nielson, spokesman for the INS Southern Regional office in Dallas, denied any mistreatment of Santillan. He said the youth had jumped off a bicycle and run away when agents approached, that he had signed statements saying that he had no local address and that he had declined an offer to let him make a phone call.

"He evaded every safeguard there is to protect a kid in this situation," Nielson said. "All he had to do was tell the truth once."

Santillan's mother Olga said she thought he had been kidnapped or worse when he did not arrive home. But her troubles were far from over when Benjamin called from the Mexican city of Durango to say that he was safe at his grandparents' house.

It took two weeks of calls to the INS Dallas and San Antonio district offices, the intervention of Rep. Chet Edwards, D-Texas, and reports in the Waco media before Benjamin Santillan was able to walk across the Rio Grande River bridge into Eagle Pass, Texas, and rejoin his loved ones in Clifton.

For the Santillan family, it was a joyous occasion. For Slaughter, it was another day at the office.

She also cited the case of Miguel de Jesus Castillo, a Salvadoran building maintenance man in Dallas who applied for amnesty in 1987 under the 1986 immigration law.

Although he met all the qualifications, he moved twice while his application was pending.

He filed change-of-address forms with the INS. Even so, the Dallas office mailed three notices to Castillo's old address, asking him to appear for an interview. When the notices came back, Castillo went down in the service's computer as an "FTA (Failure to Appear)" case.

After hearing nothing, Castillo inquired. Finally, the INS interviewed Castillo on Jan. 24, gave him initial approval and sent him home with a much-prized work authorization card. But when he got home, he saw that the card had someone else's name and identification number.

On a return trip to the INS office, he gave the card back, but officials declined to issue him a new one because they said he was "unqualified" for amnesty. Despite church recommendations and documents showing he had lived and worked in Dallas for years, and despite the fact that he was the father of three U.S.-born children, Castillo was told that his only recourse was to appeal the decision.

According to Slaughter, INS officials admitted that Castillo's name had appeared on the computer's "application denied" list because of the change-of-address mixup.

Slaughter and others at Catholic Charities mounted an intensive lobbying effort for Castillo.

Castillo thought his problems were over when the INS told him it would give him a work authorization card after all. But when he went to pick up the card, he found once again that it had a wrong name and number.

Jane Friday, spokeswoman for the INS Dallas district office, said that despite the two mistakes, Castillo finally was issued a card with his correct name and file number on it on March 13.

"It was just some confusion," Friday said. "There was never any attempt to keep him from getting anything."

COURT: Makers welcome action

banning airline captains over 60 from piloting large planes.

■ Rejected an appeal that it give medical patients a share of the profits if their extracted blood or organs become a source of lucrative scientific research. The court, without comment, turned away arguments by a Seattle leukemia victim who sought to sue California education officials and researchers.

■ Left intact a California anti-loitering law aimed at protecting children at their schools and other public places where they gather.

Tobacco industry critics were jubilant over the court's action in the smoking case.

Richard Daynard, a Northeastern University law professor who heads an anti-smoking group, said a loss for the cigarette companies would mean they "finally must bear the responsibility for the death and disease they cause. It would make the price of cigarettes reflect their true social costs."

An avalanche of lawsuits by smokers could force the industry to increase the price of a pack of cigarettes by more than $2 to pay off legal claims, he said.

The American Cancer Society estimates that 390,000 Americans will die in 1991 from smoking-related diseases, including 143,000 from lung cancer.

CRIME: 1990 is evaluated

(From 1A)

17.7 percent, from 2,029 to 2,388 For the same period, murders in Midland climbed from six to nine.

The number of rapes in Texas rose 10 percent, from 7,953 to 8,749. Sexual assaults in Midland jumped 34.5 percent, from 49 to 66.

Robberies throughout the state shot up 16.9 percent, from 37,910 to 44,319. Citywide, 121 robberies were reported in 1990, an increase of 18.6 percent over 1989's 102 robberies.

Aggravated assaults in Texas increased 15.5 percent, from 63,978 to 73,889. Midland recorded a 59.5 percent increase, from 484 to 772 aggravated assaults.

Midland Police Chief Richard Czech said the overall increase of violent crimes in Midland is not necessarily representative of a trend in a more violent community.

Violent crime figures tend to seesaw, he said.

"As far as violent crimes, it is hard to figure out (statistics) because they are spur-of-the-moment . . . passion crimes and a number of other things done spontaneously, usually," Czech said.

But Czech did speculate on why robberies may have risen.

"It may be a sign of our times. . . . Robberies usually go up because of our (depressed) economy," Czech said.

He said the jump in assaults could be attributed to the increase in reported incidents of domestic violence.

Despite an increase in violent crimes in Texas, the crime index declined 1.3 percent. Crime incidents decreased from 1,346,846 in 1989 to 1,329,339 in 1990.

Murders, rapes, robberies, aggravated assaults, burglaries, thefts and motor vehicle thefts are included in the crime index.

This equates to a slight drop in the crime rate. In 1990, 7,825.9 crimes were committed per 100,000 population, down from 7,926.8 crimes per 100,000 in 1989.

Although the crime rate also decreased in Midland, the overall amount of crime was significantly lower than statewide figures on a comparative basis. In Midland, the crime rate was about 60.9 per 1,000 population (6,088 crimes) in 1989 and 60.2 (6,018 crimes) in 1990.

The drop in the crime index largely was due to a decrease in some property crimes, according to Col. Joe Milner, DPS director.

Burglaries were down 8.1 percent, from 342,360 to 314,507. Thefts decreased 1.4 percent, from 741,642 to 731,080. In Midland, burglaries decreased 26.7 percent, from 1,955 to 1,434 and 3,144 thefts were recorded in 1990, a 0.6 percent drop from 3,164 in 1989.

Czech attributed the local decline to good police work and public support through crime prevention.

Wasteful 'aid' irks Americans

Few aspects of federal spending so anger the American people as the multi-billion-dollar foreign aid program. Sometimes, in fact, it seems as though the major criteria for serving in government is being able to spend other people's money on measures to benefit far-fetched schemes around the globe.

Over the past four decades, there have been horrendous stories in which dictators and other regimes have used U.S. dollars, food, and other help to suppress legitimate opposition and other freedoms within their borders.

Despite repeated pledges from the U.S. State Department, Congress and other leaders, this travesty continues. U.S. Sen. Robert Dole, the Senate GOP minority leader, took note of it the other day in an article that he wrote for the Washington Post.

Before noting Dole's objections, we concede the obvious: U.S. foreign aid has done exceptional good around the world these many years. But there have been terrible injustices which, year after year, American officials promised to correct. These failures have so upset the average taxpayer that he resents much if not all foreign aid. This year's $15 billion is no exception.

Dole lamented the fact that he supported U.S. subsidized agricultural credits designed to alleviate food shortages in the Soviet Union. Instead of using the American aid for humanitarian purposes, as intended, Dole said the Kremlin misused the credits to "bribe republics that seek democracy, telling them they will get grain only if they give in to (Mikhail) Gorbachev's schemes, manifest in his phony 'union treaty,' to keep them under Moscow's thumb." Dole noted our aid also is being used to prop up the Yugoslav government against those seeking new freedoms. All of this says nothing of the murderous Soviet record in the Baltics.

It only adds insult to injury to know that we have been duped by those we sought to help and that innocent people have paid the price of Moscow's treachery.

Dole will introduce legislation denying U.S. aid to nations suppressing economic and political freedom. If passed, don't bet that the Soviets and others will abide by it. Nor that the White House and State Department will get tough except in rare instances. We are admittedly a bunch of suckers. And, for all our good intentions, we have wasted a terrifying amount of money.

LETTER

Student contends schools needed

I agree and disagree with Janna Hudson (Letters, March 17). There are many bad and good features of year-round schooling. At-risk students may have better grades. Sports do well, considering that the kids do not have time to get out of shape. It eases overcrowding.

To do this, you need more teachers, and it requires an increase in salaries and more expensive benefits. Teachers need to be able to teach more than one subject and/or grade. Teachers will never have an off-period due to meetings. Duplication of educational materials will be necessary. A rise in stress on teachers will occur due to more hours at work. All the materials in a classroom will need to be taken out of it and put into storage. That requires even more space.

Some say adding portable buildings is the answer. Actually, that makes it worse. It leaves out bathrooms, cafeterias, libraries, etcetera. Each portable building costs $25,000. The MISD has purchased 53 of these, that is already $1,305,000.

The possibility of adding permanent buildings to existing schools has also been considered. New buildings would have to pass new, more rigid building codes than the ones existing when the schools were originally built. This problem could require expensive modifications which would only use up more of the limited space on the campuses.

The best solution to the problem of overcrowded schools is to build additional schools. This would require the passage of a bond election where voters would approve additional taxes to pay for the new schools. An earlier bond election did not pass because not many people voted, and there was misunderstanding about where the money would be spent. Another bond election is being organized for which the school board and some concerned citizens are working to improve the education of voters about the problem of overcrowding.

The consequences of overcrowding are severe. It will mean additional and unwanted stress for students, families, and staff. This limits creativity. Because of the larger population it will result in more discipline problems. A decrease in principal and teacher morale will most likely happen.

JACK ANDERSON

Saudis seek new order in Middle East

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — The Saudis will emerge from the war against Iraq with their own version of the New World Order. It is one that will pay back friends for help as well as enemies for hindrance.

Anderson

That is good news for the United States and Egypt, but bad news for King Hussein of Jordan, President Ali Abdullah Saleh of Yemen and Yasir Arafat of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The pre-war way in which the Saudis dealt with foreign policy matters was a simple one — royal diplomacy. Large sums of money were shelled out to help Iraq, Jordan and other Arab countries, but in some cases the money was pocketed at the higher echelons of government and did not help the little people.

Our Saudi and diplomatic sources in Riyadh predict that the Saudis will continue to be generous with foreign aid in the future, but it will not be like the handouts of the past that had no strings attached. Now the Saudis will demand that their good will and money will buy them something.

The new Saudi aid program will be Islamic — people-to-people — instead of leader-to-leader. The Saudis will work through the mosques instead of the monarchies and dictators. They will set up joint business ventures, particularly in the poorer countries such as Egypt, to give the underprivileged a chance to work and an avenue out of impoverishment.

The new embrace between the United States and Saudi Arabia will be a strong one. That is because last August, King Fahd, in his summer palace at Jeddah, asked Defense Secretary Richard Cheney and Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf for help to protect Saudi Arabia from Iraq. King Fahd was reluctant to bring American troops to his country, but Cheney and Schwarzkopf didn't have to twist his arm. When Fahd did ask for help, the pair "already had a plan in their pockets," our sources said. It was a revision of the prescient war game that Schwarzkopf had ordered up last July at his Central Command headquarters in Tampa, Fla. The war game became the draft for Operation Desert Storm.

The Saudis will pay the $16.8 billion they have promised toward the cost of the war, possibly more, but it will not be easy for them. The perception of Saudi Arabia as a deep-pockets nation is erroneous.

Certainly Saudi Arabia is one of the best credit risks in the world because it has one-third of the world's known oil reserves. But $16.8 billion is not chicken feed. It is more than half of the expected Saudi oil revenues for this year. If the United States were to hand over a similar percentage of its wealth, it would amount to nearly $1 trillion.

The Saudis will put off other payments on some contracts as they did in the 1970s when they had a cash-flow problem. Some intelligence analysts are even predicting a small recession in Saudi Arabia.

Gone are the days when Saudi Arabia would hand out money to countries like Iraq simply to pacify the restless neighbors. The Saudis are now ready to play tough. One Saudi intelligence official, speaking on condition of anonymity, predicted that King Hussein of Jordan "will disappear." He would not expand on the remark.

"The depth of the Saudi animosity toward King Hussein at the moment cannot be gauged," a Western diplomat told us. He said the United States may be interested in rehabilitating King Hussein, but Saudi Arabia is not. King Hussein spoke vigorously in defense of Saddam Hussein during the Persian Gulf War, and the Saudis think he went beyond just appeasing the huge, pro-Saddam Palestinian population in Jordan.

CHARLEY REESE

Official lies don't encourage confidence

So another failed covert attempt to overthrow a foreign government comes to light — this time, an ignominious band of 500 Libyan guerrillas recruited, trained and armed by the United States in the Chadian desert.

Reese

So another official lie to the American people comes to light. This time, the claim made publicly by an official State Department spokesman that the release of $5 million in military aid to Kenya was linked to an improvement in that country's sorry human rights record. Turns out, the government now admits, it was payoff for granting temporary refuge to the Libyan clandestine guerrillas whom it appears never fired a shot in two years but had to flee the new government in Chad, which is pro-Libyan.

I've had some people accuse me of being cynical, but it is hardly cynical to resent being lied to by your own government. In fact, it is the government which is cynical.

I guess I'm old-fashioned, but after I'm lied to, I distrust the liars, even if they happen to be the leaders of my own government. It's not that I expect them to spill all the national security secrets. I have no objection at all to a government remaining mum about necessary secrets or replying, No comment. But lies by government officials to the people they are governing is characteristic of dictatorships, not constitutional republics. We expect Saddam Hussein to lie to the Iraqi people; we expect George Bush to tell the truth to the American people.

These clandestine operations, however, necessarily corrupt our own government. If we dislike the government of Libya, there are two moral choices: one, we can simply sever all relationships with it. Two, we can ask Congress to declare war. Absent those two actions, however, it is none of our business what kind of government Libya or any other foreign country has or what its policies are.

Furthermore, attempting to overthrow a foreign government is a direct violation of the United Nations Charter. Those who wrapped themselves in the United Nations flag — including Mr. Bush — to justify war against Iraq cannot blithely violate the U.N. Charter without exposing themselves as first-class hypocrites.

Attempting to overthrow a foreign government is also a violation of what passes for international law, so those who claim respect for that also stand as first-class hypocrites if they condone these clandestine actions.

If the position is to be whatever my government does is okay and whatever another government does isn't, then well and good. That's just blind old goose-stepping nationalism and we can dispense with all this foo-faw about democracy, principles, international law, new world order, sanctity of borders, etc. and so forth to the point of upchuck.

If you are going to condone the ruthless pursuit of whatever someone in Washington tells you is our national interest even to the point of criminal behavior, then at least be an honest imperialist. Cut the bull about ideals.

As for me, it seems not all that unAmerican to leave other people to hell alone so long as they do not physically attack our shores or our Constitution. Beyond trade and commerce, as George Washington advised, we should have little to do with other nations. We have more than enough motes in our own national eye and more than enough needs toward which to devote our energies and resources.

Besides, as I've often said, and this latest Libyan fiasco illustrates, we are not really competent imperialists. But look also at the debris in the Persian Gulf. Have we brought peace and stability to that region? Not yet. And I wouldn't try to stand on one leg until we do — unless of course you happen to be a petrified stone stork.

Of course, Washington may say we have — but then there is that problem of the forked tongue.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Punish errant cops, leave good ones alone

Whenever the bad news reverberates — cops beating up suspects or otherwise disgracing the uniform — some of us old police reporters shudder involuntarily.

Murchison

The cops, our cops — instinctively we want to speak up for them. We know what kind of crummy, stinking job they have and what human refuse they often encounter in the way of business.

Haven't we sat around the police station — the cop shop, in Newspaperspeak — often enough, listening to the police radio crackle the news of a cop's day: robberies, car chases, family disputes, calls to rescue treed cats, now and then a sure-enough (as we enjoy writing) bullet-riddled corpse? In the long, tedious night watches, we have talked to the cops, over time gotten to know them, viewed snapshots of their families.

Yes, cops have families. You find this out mainly when a cop is killed in the line of duty. "Survivors include a wife and three children ... " That's the group seen on the evening news, wearing sunglasses at the funeral.

The cops, our cops! We hate hearing them maligned, and, yes, sometimes it turns out that our protective instincts were well placed: Accuser X proves to be a dirty, lying scoundrel.

Then on other, sadder occasions, it turns out that Accuser Y was right. The cops, our cops, exceeded their authority, perhaps to the point of beating the bejesus out of somebody who'd done nothing remotely bad enough to deserve it.

Maybe the famous Los Angeles videotape is not the end of the story. And, again, maybe it is. What can be said in exculpation of shadowy figures lifting clubs, bringing them down on the body of someone in their custody? Very well, this someone out in L.A. was no petunia. His past criminal record had not deprived him, even so, of the law's protection.

Those shadowy figures — we old cop shop reporters have seen such figures before in different contexts. We have all known, heard about, read of cops who were no credit to their profession.

This is the tenuous, terrible nature of the world. Criminals may be men, but so are cops, given the general unavailability of angels for police work or, indeed, any other kind of secular employment. A few of us older hands have actually known journalists who fell short of moral perfection, though I can't think just now who they were.

At all events, the right response to a police beating isn't to give police in general a beating. What do we want to do, castigate, berate and flagellate the honest majority over the sins of the errant minority?

I recall too well the last time kick-the-cops was widely fashionable. My cop-shop days were the late '60s, days of widespread violence in American life. In the gap between civilization and anarchy stood the cop — my cop and yours.

Smug college students spat in his face, called him "fascist pig"; black militants threatened his life. Around 1970, as I recall, urban terrorists murdered several big-city cops just because they were cops.

No one needs thus to advise the cops. How well they know it already. Cops are the most illusionless people you will meet. They have seen it all — murder, rape, child abuse, car wrecks, every form of non-military violence and degradation. They see it because we hire them to look at it and, to the extent possible, Do Something About It. How would we like a job like theirs, we civilians who sit comfortably in front of our television sets, tut-tutting, second-guessing, pointing accusatory fingers?

The Los Angeles scandal is a great tragedy. We must not make it greater by cop-bashing and breast-beating. Punish the bad cops in Los Angeles and wherever else they disgrace the uniform. But leave the good cops alone to do their job — a job they do mighty well if you want the truth.

Parker: Court won't close schools

Associated Press

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate Education Committee chairman on Monday called a Texas Supreme Court deadline for school finance reform "meaningless," saying justices would be reluctant to enforce their order by closing schools.

"At least two or three members of that court over there do not have the strength of character to stick by their guns, and they're going to look for some way not to shut the schools down, in my opinion," said Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur.

The Supreme Court gave lawmakers until April 1 to devise a plan to equitably fund poor school districts. If the deadline is not met, a court order to halt state spending on public education is to take effect.

A House-Senate conference committee finalized a proposed school finance compromise bill Monday that would transfer local property tax money from wealthier to poorer school districts.

But the bill's fate was uncertain, with some lawmakers saying chances did not look good for House passage.

The two House Republicans on the conference committee — Reps. Kent Grusendorf of Arlington and Troy Fraser of Big Spring — did not sign the bill, according to the Senate secretary's office.

Grusendorf earlier said he was concerned that local property taxes would increase significantly under the measure.

If the compromise bill does not pass, Parker said he will not try to put together another before the court deadline.

"As far as I'm concerned, they can vote for this or we can go back to court," said Parker, a leader in negotiations.

But other lawmakers said that has not been decided. Some said they were not willing to predict what the court might do in regard to the April 1 deadline.

"I don't ever gamble," said House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth.

The Texas Supreme Court unanimously ruled unconstitutional the current $14 billion-a-year school finance system, which relies on state aid, local property taxes and some federal money.

Differences in local property wealth now lead to wide disparities in education funding, and the court said poor districts must be equitably funded.

But Parker said a supplementary court ruling, which said absolute equity may not be required for a constitutional system, indicated the court was given to "political posturing."

He said he wouldn't be surprised if the deadline were extended.

"With the courage that the Supreme Court has shown thus far, it's pretty well meaningless, I think," Parker said of the April 1 deadline.

Lewis said he and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock have discussed writing the court a letter asking for more time if the conference committee bill fails, "to let us see if there is a solution."

"If there's not, it might be time to let them do it," Lewis said.

The House-Senate conference committee last week agreed on a plan that would set a minimum local property tax rate for school districts. It ultimately would shift an estimated hundreds of millions of dollars in local property tax money from wealthier to poorer school districts.

The plan also would cost an estimated $1.4 billion more in state aid over the next two years.

Meanwhile, Rep. John Culberson, R-Houston, said he was working on getting the needed 100 votes in the 150-member House for a proposed constitutional amendment to bypass the school finance problem.

The amendment, which also would require Senate and voter approval, would say that designing the school finance system is the job of the Legislature, not the courts.

Lewis said, "If that's what the majority of this House wants to do, we'll probably run it out and see what happens."

Filched flamingos ruffle feathers

DALLAS (AP) — Birds on the endangered species list could soon include plastic pink flamingos. The rosy lawn ornaments have become popular targets of thieves and pranksters Dallas neighborhoods.

Metal legs are the only remnants of the filched flamingos after thieves, including the so-called "pelican crew," hit homes in the Mountain Creek Lake area, residents say.

Homeowners, in the latest pilferings, received oversize "ransom notes" demanding $32,000 and signed by the pelican group.

Nancy Prather discovered her three flamingos missing from the front yard of her home in Grand Prairie, a Dallas suburb. She said she has been victimized three times in the past six years.

"I think it's weird that they repeat this over and over, but maybe they can't find that many people with pink flamingos in their yard," said Ms. Prather, who didn't report the first two thefts to police.

But after the latest thefts Wednesday, she changed her mind. Despite never paying a ransom, she said three of four birds stolen in the earlier incidents were later returned.

Across Mountain Creek Lake, in the Oak Cliff area of Dallas, Judith Moon said she has also lost flamingos to the thieves, but some of the ornaments have since been returned.

Grand Prairie police detectives also said they have been investigating similar cases, but like the other police agencies, have no suspects.

"It sounds like a college prank," said Dallas Police Detective Patrick Boyd. He said students at a community college near the neighborhoods may be the pranksters.

Ms. Prather was not amused. She said the bird pilferers don't know much about wildlife, either.

"(It seems) they would have enough sense to know the difference between pelicans and flamingos after all this time," she said.

Gorbachev bans rallies for next three weeks

N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Monday night sharpened his political rivalry with Boris N. Yeltsin, the president of the Russian republic, by ordering a ban on all public rallies and demonstrations in the capital for the next three weeks.

Insurgent anti-Gorbachev political groups had been planning to continue their sizable demonstrations of support for Yeltsin in Moscow during a special session of the Russian Parliament this week.

In the session, the communist opposition is expected to try to strip Yeltsin of his position.

Yeltsin, who has called on the Soviet president to resign, will be fighting for his political life as Gorbachev partisans accuse him of destabilizing the nation by denouncing Gorbachev as a failure at reviving the nation's economic and political life.

The ban was the clearest sign yet of the Gorbachev government's deep concern over Yeltsin's strong popularity and the daily tattoo of accusations that Gorbachev has turned away from true reform and re-embraced hardline communist traditions to protect the Kremlin establishment.

The ban, from March 26 to April 15, would also cover another critical moment for the nation, the introduction of steep nationwide price increases by the Kremlin, scheduled for April 2.

The Gorbachev government began deploying soldiers in February to patrol with police in all major cities and regions of the country.

The patrols were instituted in the name of preventing economic crime, but they are widely viewed by the public as a pre-emptive move to deal with potential public outcry against the ending of most government price subsidies.

The ban, issued tonight by the Gorbachev Cabinet as an order to the heavily insurgent, often anti-Kremlin Moscow City Council, can only heighten the considerable political passions already generated by what the Soviet public sees as a shadow showdown between Gorbachev and Yeltsin.

It is far from certain that either the City Council or the public will comply with the ban against demonstrating.

The city government, led by Gavriil K. Popov, a leading Gorbachev critic, had authorized a pro-Yeltsin rally Thursday.

One move to counter the ban might be for the insurgents to appeal to a new constitutional review committee that their civil rights are being violated.

The order, in which Gorbachev instructed "all necessary measures to ensure appropriate public order in the capital," gave no precise reasons for the Kremlin concern over rallies.

In the past three years of Gorbachev's own democratization reforms, public marches and rallies have become a commonplace here, with never an instance of violence.

The rallies in behalf of Yeltsin lately have been notable for their turnouts. More than 100,000 Muscovites were in the streets two weeks ago, cheering Yeltsin and shouting for Gorbachev's resignation in a peaceful demonstartion in an approved area near the Kremlin.

The attempted ban comes at a time of almost daily crisis and confrontation.

(Story may end here; additional material follows.)

Rising inflation, the target of the pending price increases, is stalking the exhausted economy, and about a quarter of the nation's miners are on strike, repeating two-year-old demands for economic help.

Far more portentous for the Kremlin, however, the miners are becoming more political and demanding that Gorbachev admit failure and resign.

The government has been trying to avoid direct confrontation with the miners, mindful that the challenge to Yeltsin, the price hikes, and agitating strikers eventually might prove explosive.

Last winter, Yeltsin accused Gorbachev of deceiving the public with his reform promises.

When Gorbachev announced the referendum that took place this month, in which the voters supported his vague promise to protect a "renewed" national union, Yeltsin instituted a more practical plebiscite for the Russian republic.

Public support for Yeltsin seems to grow with each new Kremlin challenge to his stature.

County drops drug task force

■ Ector County officials to administer 17-county task force.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Midland County Commissioners decided to relinquish the county's administrative role in the 17-county Permian Basin Drug Task Force to Ector County during their meeting Monday.

They took the action to avoid liability claims against Midland County should any lawsuits be filed against the task force, Midland County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer said.

Midland County, which had sought to divide liability insurance costs among the task force members, is without insurance coverage for the Midland County Sheriff's Office and the task force, he explained.

"These guys (task-force investigators) are all carrying Midland County Sheriff's Office badges, roaring around out there, and we have no liability insurance," Seltzer said.

"Midland County and Midland County alone would have been liable" in the event of lawsuits, he said, "because we have no cost-sharing and no liability sharing agreements with any of the other counties."

Seltzer and Ector County Judge Jim Jordan have discussed Ector County's willingness to take on the grantee's role. The Ector County Commissioners' Court is to take action on the task force issue in its April 8 meeting in Odessa.

Seltzer and Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter will then write the Governor's Criminal Justice Division, which oversees the task force funding, notifying it of the change in administration.

Ector County has insurance coverage for its law enforcement operations.

"We've got liability (insurance)," said Ector County Judge Jim Jordan, "and we can add it (task-force coverage) to our policy without much additional cost.

"Anybody that's floating out there without some kind of liability coverage on their police is kind of asking for it," Jordan said.

Pending the April 8 vote, Midland County also will no longer be the task force's grantee — the entity that seeks federal funds, about $850,000 annually, through the Governor's Criminal Justice Division to operate the task force.

The county had been responsible for coming with about $220,000 annually, a matching 25 percent of the federal grant, if the task force could not pay the share from drug forfeiture funds.

If Ector County officials want to take on the grantee's role, Seltzer said, "We are more than willing to let them.

"The original concept was that it would rotate among the bigger counties involved, primarily Midland County, Ector County, Howard County, Andrews County," he said. "No one said anything about anything until I got into office (in January 1991) and discovered that our

Jane Goodrich, poet and pianist, poses with her Steinway & Sons Parlor Grand piano. Mrs. Goodrich, a Midland resident for six years, won a Golden Poet award last year for her poem, "Dreams."

Poet stays busy to keep mind sharp

Dreams are made of magical things
Wishes that soar on gossamer wings
There have been dreams since man began
And there will be dreams 'til the end of time
For hope springs eternal in ev'ry soul
The young have dreams and also the old;
And yet without dreams, where would we be?
Today's dreams are tomorrow's reality

From "Dreams," by Jane Goodrich

She says she's not a poet, and she's certainly not a dreamer.

But a poem about dreams netted 93-year-old Jane Goodrich a Golden Poet award last year from the World of Poetry in Sacramento, Calif.

"I don't know how that came out of me," she said of the winning verse. "It just flowed out."

The poem, entitled "Dreams," began as the lyrics to a song she wrote when, as she puts it, she was in her 70s.

"I needed some words," she explained.

On a lark, she entered the words in a poetry contest advertised in TV Guide magazine last year. She didn't give the competition a second thought until she received a letter from contest organizers informing her that her poem was among the top 10 percent of entries.

"I was kind of thrilled," she said. "Everybody likes to be recognized."

Recognition for her poem came in the form of a wooden plaque engraved with her poem. She had to buy the plaque herself, but she said it was worth it.

"I think it was beautiful," she said. "My son was so skeptical the whole time, but when he saw the plaque, he said, 'Mother, it was worth your time, your money, your effort, everything you put into it.'"

She said she moved to Midland with her husband, John B. Goodrich, six years ago in order to be near her son, John S. Goodrich. Failing health forced the couple to move

Man accused in rape, robbery goes to trial

By David Morris
Staff Writer

A 24-year-old woman testified Monday that Darren Coffin told her he was going to make her "feel good" before he raped her repeatedly at her northwest Midland apartment last Sept. 27.

She said Coffin held a knife to her throat, raped her three times and forced her to perform fellatio on him before he fled with $9 from her purse.

Coffin, 31, is charged with aggravated sexual assault and aggravated robbery in connection with the incident. He also was charged in five other attempted sexual assaults that occurred last September in northwest Midland, but indictments were returned only in the Sept. 27 rape and robbery.

Police arrested Coffin, the so-called "Northwest Rapist," Sept. 30 after spotting him on Wadley Avenue driving a car witnesses had linked to the attacks.

Coffin, who was on probation in Ector County for a possession of heroin conviction when police nabbed him, is being held in the Midland County jail on bonds totaling $300,000.

His trial began Monday in 238th District Court after he pleaded innocent before Judge John Hyde and an 11-woman, one-man jury.

Coffin's attorney, Jeff Spain of Odessa, said testimony would show that the alleged victim of the Sept. 27 attack knew Coffin and invited him to her apartment for a night of debauchery.

The victim, however, said she didn't know Coffin and had never seen him before the attack.

Under questioning from District Attorney Al Schorre, the woman said Coffin approached her around 2 a.m. as she was entering her apartment at the Autumn Chase Condominiums, 3814 N. Holiday Hill Road.

She told jurors that Coffin asked her if "Betty" or "Brandy" lived there, and that he turned to leave when she replied "no."

But when she turned to finish unlocking the door, she said, Coffin shoved her into her apartment and held a knife to her throat. After making her shut and lock the door behind them, he forced her to undress.

"He said, 'If you scream, I'll kill you,'" she said, adding that she begged Coffin not to harm her.

"I started crying and my whole body was shaking real bad," she said. "You don't know what his intentions are — you don't know whether you're going to live or going to die."

After making her take off her clothes at knife-point, she said, Coffin dragged her by the hair into the bedroom. During the next hour or so, she said, he forced her to masturbate, perform fellatio, and have sexual intercourse with him. He also performed oral sex on her, she said.

She testified that her assailant got up at one point to use the bathroom but she added that she thought he would catch her if she attempted to escape.

The woman said Coffin got dressed and forced her back into the living room after he was finished raping her. She said he made her give him the $9 she had in her purse but decided not to

Council to review new employee policy

■ Under the proposal, the city could generate more applications from its employees, officials say.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

A policy change that would encourage in-house promotions for city of Midland employees could serve as a morale booster and money saver, a city administrator said Monday.

The proposal is among several employee policy changes expected to go before the Midland City Council for review today.

If approved, employees seeking to move into an open City Hall position would have a five-day application window. Only in-house employees could apply during that time.

City employers, if dissatisfied with the in-house applicant pool, could seek outside candidates after the five-day period expires, Assistant City Manager Susan Thorpe said.

"It doesn't limit us to internal candidates," Ms. Thorpe said.

Federal law requires the city to advertise for outside candidates because it has no written policy allowing only in-house applicants for a position.

Under the proposed policy, the city could generate more internal applications while also giving City Hall insiders an advantage, Ms. Thorpe said.

"We want to recognize the accomplishments and the potential of people inside the city," she said.

The city, she said, also could save money that would have been spent advertising for outside applicants.

Personnel Director David Hunter said the city spends an average $8,000 annually advertising outside for hirees.

The amount does not include money spent by individual departments, which often advertise positions in nationwide publications, Hunter said.

Ms. Thorpe said the city has made an extra effort recently to promote in-house hiring. Promoting Ken Day to airport director and Chuck Gibson to data processing director are two examples of that practice, she said.

Other employee policy changes expected to go before city councilmen today include injury leave and light duty.

An employee injured on the job receives workers compensation money as well as a financial supplement from the city to make up lost salary.

The proposed policy would set a

Woman pleads guilty in connection with shooting

By David Morris
Staff Writer

A Midland woman pleaded guilty Monday in federal court to concealing evidence from authorities in connection with a shooting last fall.

Lois Marie Foster, 39, admitted she lied when she told Midland County sheriff's deputies that she wielded the gun in a Sept. 5, 1990, shooting at the U.S. Postal Office at 10000 Sloan Field.

The shooting, described by investigators as a domestic dispute that "escalated into gunfire," left two people — John Ray McGraw, 43, and Glenda Sue Willman, 18 — slightly injured.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery said the actual trigger man was Mrs. Foster's husband, 49-year-old Lonnie Joe Foster. Mrs. Foster didn't want her husband to go to prison because he is a diabetic and has a heart condition, Beery said.

Foster is scheduled to plead in connection with the shooting on Friday.

In return for Mrs. Foster's plea, entered before U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton III, the U.S. Attorney's Office has agreed to recommend dismissal of the original indictment against her.

She was charged with conspiracy to assault McGraw with a deadly weapon, assault with a deadly weapon, and carrying and using a pistol during a crime of violence.

Mrs. Foster pleaded guilty Jan. 25 to conspiracy to assault McGraw, but withdrew the plea after undergoing a psychological evaluation in Lexington, Ky., Beery said. He said the evaluation showed Mrs. Foster mentally competent to stand trial.

Beery suggested that the Fosters attacked McGraw because he was pursuing a romantic relationship and living with Ms. Willman,

Sentence

A federal judge Monday sentenced the former president of the First National Bank of Andrews to 15 months in prison for bank fraud and ordered him to pay $60,640 in restitution.

William Drew Leigh, 39, defrauded the bank of the money in a scheme he operated between November 1987 and September 1990, Assistant U.S. Attorney William Torrey said.

Leigh pleaded guilty Jan. 18 to bank fraud following an FBI investigation of his activities at the bank. Leigh used his bank credit card to make improper personal purchases, Torrey said.

U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton III sentenced Leigh, who now lives in Boerne. He faced up to 20 years in prison for the offense.

Arrests

Police recently arrested two men in connection with a Midland murder that occurred in October 1982, said J.D. Luckie, chief criminal investigator for the Midland District Attorney's Office.

Jose Hernandez Castellon and Eloy Dan Leija remained in jail Monday with bond for each set at $150,000 by 238th District Court Judge John Hyde.

The men were arrested in connection with the October 1982 murder of Louis Cruz Arreguin at the Dog House Bar, 307 S. Mineola St.

Arreguin, 48, died from two gunshot wounds, in the back abdomen and in the chest.

Castellon and Leija were arrested for the murder in 1982 but charges were dismissed by the District Attorney in 1983, Luckie said. Two key witnesses disappeared at the time because of threats to their lives, Luckie said.

A second grand jury indictment for the murder was handed down March 20.

Witnesses were relocated through the cooperation of the District Attorney's Office, Midland Police Department detective division and the Amarillo and Midland branches of the Texas Rangers.

Leija was arrested in Amarillo by Tedda McAnear, a criminal investigator for the District Attorney's office. Leija was free on bond in Amarillo for solicitation of murder at the time.

Castellon was arrested in Dallas by law enforcement officers there.

Indictment

AUSTIN — A Pecos-area man has been indicted on two counts of buying diesel fuel without paying the state's 15 cents per gallon tax, State Comtroller John Sharp and 143rd Judicial District Attorney David P. Zavoda of Monahans announced Monday.

Armando Alba, 39, of Toyah, allegedly purchased diesel fuel at a bargain rate from truck drivers who had stolen it from their employer, Hidro Gas of Juarez, Mexico. Alba was then able to sell the diesel through his truck stop in Toyah at a price that undercut the only competitor in town.

"Not only was he cheating the taxpayers of Texas, he was also running a fellow business owner into the ground with his scheme," Sharp said.

Alba surrendered Friday to the Reeves County Sheriff's Department and is currently free on $7,500 bond. If convicted of the second degree felony, Alba could be sentenced to between two and 20 years in prison and fined up to $10,000.

Alba's indictment was the result of several months of investigation by the Comptroller's office, the Reeves County Sheriff's Department, and the Texas Rangers. The state has not determined the amount of fuels tax Alba owes.

Since 1988, the Comptroller's office and law enforcement agencies have worked together on fuels tax fraud investigations. The Comptoller's office has conducted more than 250 fuels tax audits, discovering more than $155 million in unpaid state taxes, Sharp said.

Twelve people have been convicted in the fuels tax fraud cases and 17 are awaiting trial. More than 60 investigations remain in progress.

Arrest

SAN ANTONIO — A woman wanted by Odessa authorities was arrested Friday in San Antonio by FBI agents.

The Midland FBI office obtained a federal warrant on March 20 charging Billye Gene Sutton, 37, with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution.

According to Special Agent in Charge Richard D. Schwein, FBI El Paso, the Ector County District Attorney's office had requested federal assistance in locating Ms. Sutton. She had been charged in Ector County as a felony probation violator.

Ms. Sutton is awaiting transfer to Ector County to face a probation revocation hearing.

Guilty pleas

Two Odessa men pleaded guilty in federal court Monday to possession with intent to distribute about 218 pounds of marijuana.

Gerardo Guevara, 39, and Tomas Raymundo Hernandez, age unavailable, were arrested Jan. 29 after attempting to sell the marijuana to undercover narcotics officers in Odessa, investigators said.

Odessa Police Department and Drug Enforcement Administration officers made the arrest, Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery said.

The men, who entered their plea before U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton III, are scheduled to be sentenced May 9.

Also pleading guilty on drug charges Monday were Andrew Finton, 37, for conspiracy to distribute heroin and Dennis Bolton, age unavailable, for distribution of cocaine.

Undercover officers arrested Bolton Feb. 4 in Midland after he sold them about 100 grams of cocaine with an estimated street value of $10,000, Beery said.

Finton was arrested Jan. 24 after he and another man arranged to provide undercover officers with a quantity of heroin, according to testimony.

guys are out there now without insurance, and they are carrying Midland County Sheriff's badges in this 17-county area."

And if the investigators foul up, "We're the ones that get sued," Seltzer said.

In a recent Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission meeting, Jordan said, "Everybody agreed that there was a need for it (liability insurance coverage). They wanted the task force to continue. I think this will be the answer to everybody's concerns."

Jordan said that when he first talked to task force commander Tom Finley about then switch in grantees, "I told him straight up I didn't want to get in a situation of trying to take anything from Midland or for Bro (Seltzer) to think I was trying to steal any program" from Midland County.

"Bro and I have discussed this on several occasions," Jordan said of the Midland judge. "His major concern was potential liability for Midland County, and without liability insurance, I can sure understand why."

Jordan said that if Ector County "didn't have liability insurance, we sure enough wouldn't take on" the task force's administrative role.

His hope is that none of the task-force investigators will "do anything wrong by any stretch of the imagination" to invite a lawsuit, "but there's always some potential there."

Painter, the task force's project officer, said that when Ector County takes on the administrative reins, "It will be business as usual" for the task force's 12 investigators, whom the sheriff had deputized.

But when Ector County takes on the role of grantee, the undercover investigators, who are assigned throughout the 17 West Texas counties on rotating duty stations, will work under the authority of an Ector County-Odessa law enforcement agency, such as the sheriff, police chief or district attorney, and will be deputized in Ector County.

"Anybody involved in working with the public, anybody involved in working with governmental agencies, has to be aware of the possibility of having a civil suit filed against them," Painter said. "And really, that's paramount in your mind."

The filing of lawsuits and going after the "deep pockets," is encouraged by some individuals in the legal system, Painter said.

"We are just a litigious society. And I don't see any relief to that in the very near future unless there's some kind of civil reform.

"And with most legislators being lawyers, I doubt that that's going to happen."

who is Mrs. Foster's daughter.

Ms. Willman and McGraw, a contract driver for the post office, were sitting in the cab of a mail truck at the air terminal post office around 11 p.m. on a Wednesday night when the Fosters drove up looking for McGraw, investigators said.

Beery said the group argued before Lonnie Foster took a .22-caliber revolver out of his vehicle and fired it at the mail truck.

McGraw and Ms. Willman suffered lacerations from flying glass and bullet fragments.

The Fosters turned themselves over to authorities about an hour after the shooting occurred, investigators said. When she called to report the incident, Mrs. Foster told a sheriff's department dispatcher that she had done the shooting, Beery said.

Mrs. Foster is scheduled to be sentenced April 25.

from Houston, she said.

Now she lives in a two-room suite — complete with a Steinway & Sons Parlor Grand piano — at Trinity Towers nursing home. Her husband, who is 96, lives at Terrace Gardens Nursing Center.

She said she visits him twice a week there, and entertains him and his cohorts with piano tunes.

"The minute I enter the door, they say, 'Aren't you going to play the piano today?'"

So she plays. Mostly "things people appreciate and things that have kind of stuck in my mind and fingers." Songs like "Winter Wonderland," "Somewhere My Love," and "When You and I Were Young, Maggie."

Her repertoire has shrunken somewhat since her days at the Ruskin-Cave College Conservatory in southwestern Tennessee, where she earned her bachelor's degree in music in 1916.

She still has the program from her graduation recital. Her then-future husband is listed as an usher.

"He was the most handsome man on the campus," she said. "I was lucky to get him. Of course he thinks he was lucky to get me."

After the two were married in 1920, he moved her to Texas, where he worked for Magnolia Oil Co. She occupied her time teaching music and volunteering for civic organizations. But in 1940, she quit giving music lessons.

"I'd rather just play," she said.

Besides the piano, there's bridge. Less taxing activities include watching the news and reading. It's important to stay active at her age, she said.

"If you don't, you know what happens to you — you just atrophy," she said. "I've got to keep my brain going. When my brain goes, I hope I can go."

But her fellow Trinity Towers residents are not eager to see her leave, said Donna Lowe, Trinity Towers activities director.

"She's a very optimistic person and very motivational," she said. "She's never without a kind word."

Trinity Towers residents and staff alike are aware of Mrs. Goodrich's talent, she said.

"She's a very talented song writer and pianist and poet. We all have a lot of respect for her."

time limit on how long an employee can be absent from work.

The worker would be allowed an up to a 60-day leave before having to seek a time extension from a city review committee, which only could add an extra 30 days. After that, it would be up to the city's personnel appeals board to grant a maximum 90-day extension.

The proposed policy changes also outline other rules regarding leaves of absence.

The rules include requiring the employee to undergo the physician's suggested treatment and perform alternative work duties allowed by the doctor.

Ms. Thorpe said the guidelines prevent workers from taking advantage of the system.

To incorporate state law into municipal policy, the city also is proposing a policy regarding the political activities of police officers and firefighters.

State law, under specified conditions, prohibits them from taking part in certain political activities. The city of Midland's proposed policy would expand the rules to cover all city employees.

steal her the necklace she was wearing because the stone wasn't a real diamond.

Coffin told her not to call the police before he walked out the door and drove away in his car, she said. But after she was sure that he'd left, she went next door to telephone authorities. She said she couldn't call from her apartment because she'd just moved in and did not yet have a phone.

In addition to the victim's testimony, prosecutors produced physical evidence that linked Coffin to the crime scene: a fingerprint on the underside of a toilet seat in the victim's apartment.

Vance Oliver, an identification technician for the Midland Police Department, said the print matched that of Coffin's right ring finger.

However, Oliver said it had not been possible to link Coffin to the attack via DNA testing of semen, hair and saliva samples. Samples gathered at the crime scene and during a medical examination of the victim were too small to test, he said.

The state rested its case against Coffin Monday afternoon. Defense witnesses are expected to testify today.

If convicted, Coffin faces up to 99 years or life in prison and up to a $10,000 fine on both the sexual assault and robbery charges.

NOTICE OF ANCILLARY CONSERVATORSHIP OF MIDWEST LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Pursuant to Article 21.28-A of the Texas Insurance Code, the Commissioner of Insurance issued an official order No. 91-0382 effective March 20, 1991, placing Midwest Life Insurance Company, Metairie, Louisiana, in a state of ancillary conservatorship. This insurance company is domiciled in Louisiana but was licensed to write life, health and accident insurance in Texas.

The Commissioner of Insurance finds that pursuant to Article 21.28-A, Section 6, Texas Insurance Code, the company consented to the appointment of an ancillary conservator.

Under the order, the ancillary Conservator has been appointed to assume control of $5 million in cash and all incoming premiums on Texas policies. Efforts will be made to rehabilitate the company through reinsurance for the protection of its policyholders and the public.

If you are a policyholder of this company, your insurance coverage continues in effect for as long as you pay your premiums. Efforts are underway to place all Texas policyholders with another insurer. If Your policy is assumed by another insurer, your coverage will continue as though nothing had happened. Any policies not assumed will be cancelled, any unearned premium will be returned, and you will be so notified. In either event, contractual claim obligations will be paid by the ancillary conservator, by the insurer, or by the guaranty fund subject to the limitations provided in law. The guaranty fund provides protection for covered claims up to the amounts specified in Article 21.28-D, Texas Insurance Code.

Courses of action available to policyholders include continuation or cancellation of their policies. Policyholders who wish to continue their coverage need do nothing more so long as their premiums are paid. If premiums are due, policyholders should continue to pay them in the same amount and manner as in the past in order to keep their coverage in force.

To avoid possible loss of coverage, policyholders must continue to pay premiums unless and until similar insurance can be obtained from another company. Policy provisions with respect to filing claims remain in force and must be observed.

Claims will continue to be handled in the standard process as specified in the insurance contracts issued by the company. Policyholders will be notified if there is any change in claims processing or handling.

Policyholders' rights are governed by the Texas Insurance Code, State Board of Insurance rules, and by policyholders' individual contracts of insurance. Policyholders with specific questions regarding policy provisions should seek independent legal advice. No action is required by policyholders under Commissioner's Order No. 91-0382. If any action should be required in the future, policyholders will be notified.

This notice is published pursuant to Article 21.28-A, Section 5A, Texas Insurance Code (Acts 1989, 71st Legislature, Ch. 1082, Sec. 4.02, eff. September 1, 1989).

Prices drop

NEW YORK (AP) — Energy futures prices fell Monday, with refined products closing sharply lower, as traders took profits in a quiet and uneventful session.

The May contract for delivery of West Texas Intermediate fell 48 cents to close at $19.62 a barrel in light trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

There were no news events to sway trading, leaving investors to focus on supply concerns and the big gains the market chalked up last week.

The decline in crude oil erased a 34 cent gain from last week.

Natural gas moved higher Monday, with the May contract rising to $1.390 per 1,000 cubic feet from $1.385 on Friday.

Tool orders

N.Y. Times News Service

Spurred by sharply higher demand from domestic manufacturers, new orders for American-made machine tools climbed 27.7 percent in February from the January level.

The Association for Manufacturing Technology, the industry trade group based in McLean, Va., said new orders increased to $255.2 million last month. The figure is a 31.2 percent increase from February 1990.

Analysts attributed the increase to higher capital spending by American manufacturers in virtually all industries, including aerospace, construction and oilfield equipment.

Dollar rallies

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar shot up to nine-month highs Monday in a powerful rally stoked by unrest in Germany and uninhibited optimism about the postwar U.S. economy.

Gold prices were moderately lower. On the New York Commodity Exchange, gold bullion for current delivery slipped $4.10 a troy ounce to close at $359.

The dollar settled at 1.6865 German marks, up from late Friday's 1.6485. It was the currency's highest level since June 1990.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 137.90 yen, up 0.85 yen from Friday's close.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.7635 from $1.7890 late Friday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late rates Friday, included: 1.4370 Swiss francs, up from 1.4135; 5.7265 French francs, up from 5.6030; 1,253.00 Italian lire, up from 1,225.38; and 1.1618 Canadian dollars, up from 1.1578.

Silver prices were also lower. On New York's Comex, silver bullion for current delivery settled at $3.926 a troy ounce, down 4 cents from late Friday.

Big infusion of cash energizes RTC

■ With an additional $30 billion in its pocket, the RTC plans to rescue over 200 ailing S&Ls, sell an additional 90 and donate housing to non-profit groups.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The savings and loan bailout agency, bolstered by an additional $30 billion in taxpayer money, announced plans Monday to rescue 215 to 225 institutions and give away as many as 3,000 repossessed homes to non-profit groups.

The agency, the Resolution Trust Corp., also announced a series of policy changes designed to speed the sale of real estate, loans, junk bonds and other assets inherited from failed thrifts. It set a goal of selling $65 billion of its $155 billion in assets over the next six months.

President Bush signed legislation Saturday earmarking $30 billion to cover losses in failed S&Ls bailed out through Sept. 30. The trust corporation already had spent $50 billion. Earlier this month, it was forced to halt its cleanup while Congress debated measures authorizing more spending.

With enactment of the new legislation, the agency solicited bids Monday for 90 S&Ls in 24 states, bringing to 97 the number available now. The remaining 98 will be advertised by June 30. Winning bidders are those that require the least government assistance.

Additionally, 20 to 30 now-solvent thrifts will be sold through the agency's Accelerated Resolutions Program, in which regulators finance takeovers before the institutions are officially seized by the government.

"We're going to try to clean up all the ones we have. Unfortunately, we'll still end up with ... new ones," said L. William Seidman, chairman of the trust corporation.

The Office of Thrift Supervision expects at least 160 more S&Ls will fail.

Seidman said the agency expected in May to announce its revenue requirements for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

Midland thrift up for sale

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

The Resolution Trust Corp. (RTC) has put on the sales block 90 savings institutions, including First Bankers Trust & Savings of Midland, the RTC announced Monday. This brings to 97 the number of thrifts available.

The placing of First Bankers on an acquisition list now clears the way for the thrift to be sold to local bidders or others nationwide. The 90 thrifts now being marketed are located in 24 states and range in deposits from $6 million to $3.2 billion. Assets in the package total $38 billion and deposits $30 billion.

First Bankers has total assets of $81.7 million and deposits of $85.6 million. Of the 90 thrifts set to receive acquisition bids, 38 are in Texas, and the remainder are in 23 additional states.

To encourage asset purchases by acquirers of deposit franchises, the RTC will disclose its estimate of the value of the various components of the asset portfolio. The price disclosed and included in the bid package, will be the price at which the RTC will convery the assets at the closing.

David C. Cooke, RTC executive director, said the accelerated sales were made possible by additional funding provided the agency.

Included in the first group of 90 thrifts are 20 major institutions which will be handled by the Major Transaction Group in Washington D.C. The other 70 thrifts will be handled at regional offices in Atlanta, Dallas, Denver and Kansas City.

A listing of the 90 thrifts was printed in the Wall Street Journal Monday. Another 105 thrifts are expected to go on the market in July.

NCR ready to talk buyout

N.Y. Times News Service

NCR Corp. on Sunday ended weeks of resistance and agreed for the first time to meet with AT&T, which has been seeking to acquire it since December.

The announcement is a strong sign that the takeover battle may be drawing to a close.

"Obviously, this is what AT&T wanted, which was to get NCR to the negotiating table," said Jack Grubman, a telephone industry analyst at Paine Webber Inc.

The move by NCR, the No. 5 American computer maker, came four days before a special shareholders meeting to consider the offer by American Telephone and Telegraph Co.

Alaskans still remember Valdez

By Tad Bartimus

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Just as President Bush declared America's swift Persian Gulf victory had vanquished the Vietnam syndrome, so Alaska's Gov. Wally Hickel hails his recent $1 billion settlement with Exxon Corp. as the official end of angst over the nation's worst oil spill.

"We as a people are ready to put this tragedy behind us," Hickel said on statewide television.

But many Alaskans, while praising their governor's bold negotiations with Exxon, also believe the damage caused by the wreck of the Exxon Valdez two years ago has left lingering scars on the psyche of his beloved Great Land.

Hickel, one of the last of Alaska's flamboyant pioneers who helped turn this empty territory into the 49th state, is trying to use the settlement, and the anniversary, to break up what he perceives as the malaise left behind by the thick black crude spilled March 24, 1989.

Housing sales cheer economists

■ The biggest jump in existing home sales in nearly five years has given economists hope the end of the recession is indeed near.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of existing homes shot up 7.9 percent in February, the first increase since November and the biggest in nearly five years, giving private economists hope that a housing rebound may be heralding the end of the recession.

The National Association of Realtors said Monday that the February increase put sales of existing, single-family homes at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.13 million units.

The February bounce, which essentially erased a 7.3 percent plunge in January, was attributed to falling home prices and lower mortgage rates luring buyers back into the market following the end of the Persian Gulf War.

"After months of sputtering, it looks as though many markets across the nation have passed their low point and are regaining strength. People are ready to buy," said Harley Rouda, national Realtors president.

However, analysts were not as upbeat about reports on car sales in mid-March, which showed sales for the two biggest companies, General Motors and Ford, down substantially over the same period a year ago.

Economists believe that if the Bush administration's forecast for a short and shallow recession is to prove accurate, then consumer spending, which plummeted in the wake of Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait, must start showing strength, especially in such big-ticket areas as cars and autos.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady said in a televised interview that he was "optimistic" about the economy's prospects, citing lower interest rates, lower oil prices and rising consumer confidence as positive signals.

Analysts noted that the good news on existing home sales followed an equally upbeat report last week that construction of new homes and apartments shot up 16.4 percent in February while applications for building permits rose a healthy 8.5 percent, the first increase in permit applications in eight months.

Allen Sinai, chief economist of the Boston Co., said that the housing sector typically leads the country out of a recession. If February does prove to be the turning point for housing, Sinai said, then the recession could come to an end between June and October.

The administration is forecasting the recession will be over in the April-June quarter while many private forecasters believe the downturn will last until the fall.

In an effort to cut the recession short, the administration has kept pressure on the Federal Reserve to lower interest rates further.

"I've said for nine months now that there is ample room to lower interest rates. I still think that is the case," Brady said Sunday. "It seems to me that inflation is not the worry; the worry is (a lack of) growth."

Brady made his comments in advance of a meeting this week of the Fed's top policymaking body, the Federal Open Market Committee.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Acquiring bank must honor old interest rate

By Bill Doyle

Q. When a bank or savings and loan association fails and is taken over by another bank or S&L, the 1989 "S&L Bailout Law" gives the acquiring institution the power to reduce interest rates on certificates of deposit issued by the busted bank or S&L.

Doyle

In reply to a reader who had a 12.5 percent CD in her individual retirement account at a failed bank on which the interest was cut to 7.95 percent, you wrote the rate could have been chopped to the savings account rate — as low as 5 percent.

Is the new bank obligated to pay the higher rate — 12.5 percent in this case — from the time the CD was issued until the date it acquired the failed bank? Or can it backtrack and pay the lower interest from the CD's issue date?

A. The acquiring institution, whether it be a bank or S&L, must pay the interest rate set at the time the CD was issued — until a new rate is set. The lower rate can be applied only after that point.

Even then, the acquiring bank or S&L must give two weeks notice. During that period, depositors in the failed bank or S&L can cancel their CDs and move their money elsewhere, without early withdrawal penalty.

There is no way an acquiring bank or S&L can backtrack and renege on CD interest declared before it bought a busted depository institution. That would be a bonanza for the banking industry but a disaster for depositors.

Q. When my husband was alive, we had all our investments in both our full names — his first and last name "or" my first and last name. Since his death, I have been changing this to include my son.

The banks have changed CDs and other accounts to my full name and my son's full name. But when I reinvested U.S. Treasury bills, my investment adviser had left and the woman who took my call, insisting she could handle it, changed the registration to read my first name or my son's first and last name.

Is that correct? Shouldn't my last name be included?

A. A spokesman for the Bureau of the Public Debt says your full name — first and last names — most certainly should appear, if the Treasury bills are held in your name "or" your son's name in a Treasury Direct account. In that case, you would buy the T bills through a Federal Reserve Bank or branch. Registration lacking the full names would not be accepted. Federal Reserve literature gives this example: "Robert Woods or Laura Woods."

However, the Bureau of the Public Debt spokesman notes the federal government has no authority over registration when Treasury securities are not directly held. Because you mention an investment adviser, I assume you make purchases through a bank, a brokerage firm or some other intermediary. In that case, the bank or brokerage is the registered holder. You are the "beneficial" owner — the real owner — and T bills are in your account at the bank or brokerage.

I suspect the woman who handled your T bill reinvestment fouled things up a bit. Experts at the Bureau of the Public Debt recommend that you insist the account be changed to read your full name "or" your son's full name, thereby removing all doubts.

RTC: Activity increases

(From 3B)

"The only thing we can say for sure is we'll need more," he said.

As part of an effort to quickly unload 9,000 single-family homes, more than half of them in Texas, the trust corporation will hold 60 sealed-bid auctions.

If the agency cannot get an acceptable price, it will try to give the properties away to non-profit organizations and state and local agencies who work to provide affordable homes to poor people.

"If they (the homes) have any value to us, we're not going to give them away," Seidman said. But, "we estimate there may be 2,000 to 3,000 homes that will not be economically viable for us to keep because the cost of maintaining them is more than we are likely to realize" from a sale.

The agency has already given away a handful of homes, but never on the scale expected in the new program.

In other initiatives designed to speed sales, the RTC:

—Hopes within a month to sell securities backed by home mortgage loans in its portfolio and later to sell securities backed by its junk bond holdings.

—Will offer deep discounts on real estate sooner than previously. The old policy had limited the agency to selling properties for not less than 20 percent below their appraised value, and only after nine months of trying to sell at higher prices. Now, agency representatives are authorized to offer as much as 20 percent off immediately and 40 percent after six months.

—Set prices on S&L assets and sell them to any buyer meeting the price on the day an S&L is rescued. Generally, the profitable banks and S&Ls that acquire the branches and deposits of failed thrifts are not interested in managing the sour loans and repossessed real estate. So, in many cases, the trust corporation has been stuck with the assets long after the rescue is completed.

Seidman said his agency sold $128 billion in assets last year. It surpassed — by $3 billion — its $50 billion goal for its "great fall inventory clearance sale" during the last five months of 1990.

But, he conceded that, for the most part, those were the easier-to-sell assets such as performing loans and buildings with tenants. Now, the agency is getting down to more difficult assets and must adopt a more aggressive sales program.

"We've yet to see the first buyer who buys from us out of patriotic duty. Therefore, we have to attract them," he said. " Where the rubber really hits the road is dealing with those tough-to-sell ... assets."

VALDEZ: Scars linger

said in an interview. "You always get tragedies, but you put tragedies behind you. You go see grandpa in the graveyard, but you don't camp out there.

"Yes, we've learned a lot, and yes, it could happen again," he said. "As long as you have humankind on this planet, you'll have disasters. But Adam wouldn't have left the garden if he hadn't had hope."

When the huge tanker ran agrouind on Bligh Reef, it soiled a thousand miles of shoreline with nearly 11 million gallons of Prudhoe Bay crude. Experts guess about 10 percent of the oil has been recovered in a $2.2 billion Exxon-funded effort involving thousands of rock-washers; the rest either evaporated, sank or stained rocks, its lingering toxicity still fiercely debated.

With no hope of ever cleaning up all the oil, Alaska officials say this summer's cleanup effort will be limited to areas essential to wildlife habitat and human use.

Yet the fragile ecology of Prince William Sound is not the only casualty in need of mending: The delicate social fabric of hamlets dependent on subsistence hunting and fishing for their livelihoods was rent asunder in the catastrophe.

In the wake of the Exxon Valdez, the mitigating millions of dollars Exxon spread on troubled waters in cleanup hires and business recompense have turned fisherman against fisherman, natives against bureaucrats, the "did gets" against the "never gots."

Thousands of lawsuits still are pending against Exxon, its shipping subsidiary, and Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., the umbrella consortium for the seven oil companies that pump oil from North Slope wells to the port of Valdez.

Those lawsuits represent the hard feelings of hard times since Capt. Joseph Hazelwood's ship ran hard aground in an iceberg-pocked sapphire sea.

Many Alaskans take issue with Hickel's straight-up, straight-ahead development attitude, and continue to glance back over their shoulders at the greatest man-made environmental disaster in the state's history.

"The Exxon Valdez seared our souls in ways it will take a long time for us to realize," said Byron Mallot, president and chief executive of Sealaska, one of 13 native-owned regional corporations. "We won't ever be the same again."

Skip Bilhartz, president of ARCO Alaska, the state's largest private employer, applauded the peace pact negotiated between Exxon Chairman Lawrence Rawl, U.S. Attorney General Dick Thornburgh and Hickel.

Raiders ink Lott

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. (AP) — All-pro free safety Ronnie Lott, left unprotected by the San Francisco 49ers, signed with the Los Angeles Raiders as a Plan B free agent Monday.

It was believed Lott signed a two-year contract at slightly more than $1 million per year.

Lott has been one of the NFL's premiere defensive players for the past decade and was a member of four Super Bowl championship teams with the 49ers.

Lott, 31, was sidelined late last season when he strained both knees, and it was feared he had damaged ligaments.

Hall to resign

HOUSTON (AP) — David Hall, Rice's winningest baseball coach, will resign at the end of the season, athletic director Bobby May said Monday.

"This was his decision and we wish him well," May said.

"I feel it's in my best interests to resign at this time," Hall said. He did not reveal his plans.

Rematch called

NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Tyson and Razor Ruddock will meet in a rematch of their controversial fight in June at the Mirage Hotel in Las Vegas, promoter Don King announced Monday.

The exact date will be announced by King and Ruddock's promoter, Murad Muhammad, at a news conference on Tuesday. It's expected to be either June 22, 28 or 29.

Tyson won a disputed victory on March 18 when referee Richard Steele stopped the bout at 2:22 of the seventh round following a flurry of punches by the former heavyweight champ that sent Ruddock stumbling backwards.

"The public is demanding this fight," King said Saturday. "Now this fight has all the ingredients like Ali-Frazier."

Lee eyes unknown voyage

■ Midland Lee's first UIL soccer playoff appearance is against a team that hasn't allowed a score in nine consecutive games.

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

ABILENE — The Midland Lee Rebels jump directly into the eye of the soccer-playoff storm when they tangle with District 4 champion Wichita Falls Rider at 5 p.m. today on the Hardin-Simmons University soccer field.

The District 3 runner-up Rebels carry an 11-4-2 record into their first-ever bi-district encounter, while the Rider Raiders have been postseason participants each of the five years they have played UIL soccer.

Moreover, the Raiders — who began the season 0-2 but bounced back with a 17-2-2 overall performance — have never lost a bi-district game. And Rider's junior goalie Clint Aday is at his hottest.

ADAY HAS not allowed a goal in his last nine outings for the Riders, who lost only to state semifinalist Duncanville and to Dallas Jesuit, a private school that last lost a game in 1987. Both Rider's losses were 1-0 affairs.

"We don't know a whole lot about Rider, and they probably know very little about us," said Lee head coach Eddie Bull, whose charges earned today's meeting with a 3-1 intra-league playoff victory last Thursday over Midland High that decided the district runner-up. "We do know they're a real good team, though. But we're a good team, too.

"We'll just try and be in the best shape — both physically and mentally — that we can be."

In another bi-district game, District 3 champion San Angelo (15-1-2) will take on District 4 runner-up Fort Worth Richland 12-5-3. That game will follow the Lee-Rider match and help determine the area matchups.

District I champion El Paso Coronado and District I runner-up El Paso Austin each emerged with victories last week in bi-district showdowns against the District 2 representatives from El Paso.

Coronado (16-3) nipped El Paso Del Valle 2-1, while Austin (14-4-1) got by El Paso Hanks 5-3.

El Paso High, which defeated Rider in the area round three of the past four years, won the District I title outright, but the discovery of an ineligible player cost them their playoff berth.

WHILE THE Rebels are not a playoff experienced team, plenty of veterans dot the roster, and Bull said Thursday's tie-breaking playoff with MHS helped his team prepare for the pressure of the postseason.

"Our kids are real excited. They know they've played well," Bull said. "That playoff did a lot to help our maturity, which is something we'll need to rely on.

"Rider has good size, and they play very similar to the way San Angelo plays in that they knock it around until they can get you to over-committ. Of course, that's something we've been working on," he said.

Lee will attack Aday with good depth at the forward position. While Sweeper Chris Murray leads the Rebs with eight goals on the season, Forwards Mark Steward and Danny Grossman each have seven goals, and Tim Tucker, Julio Silva and Todd Meade have 10 goals between them.

"Not only is our depth good at forward, but our speed is excellent," Bull said. "We've got an aggressive bunch of kids. They want to score," he said. "We have four or five guys that are constantly looking for an opening, and Hardin-Simmons has a good, wide field, which is to our advantage."

The field at Hardin-Simmons is grass and re-conditioned a couple of years ago to accommodate the National NAIA Womens' Tournament.

Local teams sit on top of 4-5A race

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

Midland Lee and Midland High hold down the top two places in the District 4-5A baseball standings as the league schedule enters its third week today.

Coming off an 11-6 win over San Angelo Saturday to take sole possession of second place, MHS plays host to Odessa Permian at 4 p.m. in Angels Stadium.

District-leading Lee, which split a doubleheader with Lubbock Estacado and Wolfforth-Frenship in its 4-5A open date Saturday, returns to league competition today by traveling to Odessa High for a 4 p.m. game at Fly Field.

As MHS, 7-7 overall and 3-1 in 4-5A, goes for its fourth straight win, Permian is coming off its first district victory of the year. The Panthers (6-6, 1-2) are fresh off a 13-9 win over Abilene High, but will face a Bulldog batting order that is hitting .384 in loop play.

"As long as the kids feel good about their hitting and are confident at the plate, we are going to get our hits," said MHS head coach Rick Wood after defeating San Angelo.

In the win over the Bobcats MHS smacked out 12 hits, with three going for extra bases. Junior outfielder Jeremy Burton stayed in his batting groove, with a 3-for-4 performance that increased his average in district play to .714. He also owns the team lead in district RBI with eight.

Hitting clean-up in the order, senior James Madrid is at .500 in 4-5A games while junior third baseman Jimmy Stanton is batting .429.

Scheduled to pitch for the Bulldogs is junior lefthander Dewayne Culpepper (4-2), who tossed a complete-game shutout in his last outing against OHS last Tuesday. Should Wood decide to go with a right-handed pitcher, junior Brian Rounding will be available and in form after a slow start because of playing for MHS' playoff basketball team and a bout with the flu.

The team as a whole has come around after a slow pre-district start, and MHS' overall record is at .500 for the first time since 4-5A play began.

"We are a young team, but I thought by district we would be able to compete with the people in this district. But we are really farther along than I thought we would be at this point," Wood said.

For Lee (11-6, 3-0), senior lefthander Jeff Johnston will probably get the call to pitch against the Bronchos. Johnston is 5-1 for the year, with his only loss being a 1-0 decision against Plainview in the Carlsbad, N.M., tournament.

In nine full innings of work in 4-5A play, he has not allowed an earned run while striking out nine and walking two, gaining credit for two wins in the process.

The Rebel bats also have hardly been silent. Senior infielder Keith Bell's 2-for-3 performace against Permian last Tuesday earns him top honors in the Rebs' list of district averages at .667

He is followed by sophomore pitcher/designated hitter Julian Urquidez, who is hitting .625 in 4-5A play. Senior shortstop Shane Greeley comes in at .556 and senior first baseman Brad Sanders is batting .500. Junior second baseman and lead-off hitter Allen Chase follows at .455.

Sanders and Chase are tied for the team lead with four RBI apiece in district games.

Lee will be playing a surprising OHS squad that is 10-3 overall and coming off a win over perennial league favorite Abilene Cooper. The Bronchos upended the Cougars 8-6 Saturday in Abilene to even their 4-5A record at 2-2.

Sooners climb to NIT finals

■ Oklahoma has has to come from behind against rival Colorado, but joins Stanford in the title game.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Oklahoma flew 1,500 miles to continue doing what it's done for nine years against Colorado — win basketball games.

Jeff Webster scored 24 points as Oklahoma defeated Colorado for the 24th consecutive time and advanced to the final of the National Invitation Tournament with an 88-78 victory Monday night.

The Sooners trailed by 14 points with 13 minutes remaining, but rallied to continue a streak that started on Feb. 13, 1982 as Colorado missed 15 of 16 3-point attempts in the second half.

In the previous meeting between the Big Eight rivals, Colorado blew an 18-point lead to lose 69-68 at Boulder on Feb. 27.

"I thought if we were in the 6-8 point range with 10 minutes left, we would win," Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said. "If we got close, we thought we would win, and I think Colorado thought they would lose."

Colorado (18-14), making its first postseason appearance since 1969, was led by center Shaun Vandiver with 31 points.

"Oklahoma has a lot of tradition and pride, and a team like that isn't going to lay down," Vandiver said. "I didn't really think about the streak. I was just concerned about keeping the right direction."

Stevie Wise scored 18 points for the Buffaloes, but was just 5-for-23 from the field, including 1-for-9 from 3-point range.

Texas Rangers' pitcher Bobby Witt
...one of five starters making spring waves

Ranger hurlers full of promise

PORT CHARLOTTE, Fla. (AP) — Through a gloomy spring training season afflicted by injuries, salary squabbles and trade requests, a bright spot is emerging for the Texas Rangers.

The Rangers' five starting pitchers are showing the potential and results expected by manager Bobby Valentine. The quintet of Nolan Ryan, Kevin Brown, Bobby Witt, Kenny Rogers and Scott Chiamparino has pitched a combined 65 innings this spring and given up 58 hits and 16 walks with 32 strikeouts. Their combined earned-run average is 2.21.

That's a good sign for Valentine, who insists a team is usually as good as its starting pitchers. His other theory is a championship team needs to get a combined total of 75 victories from the five starters, an average of 15 per pitcher.

"This is as close to having five guys who can win 75 as we've come," Valentine said. "When you're building a team, you're constantly trying to upgrade at every position, and starting pitching is one of the places that we're having success doing that."

They each have their question marks. Ryan is 44 years old; usually knuckleballers are the only ones pitching at that age. Witt was brilliant in the final four months of last season, but inconsistency has been the hallmark of his career. Brown hasn't pitched much in the last two Septembers because of injuries. Rogers is being converted from a reliever to a starter, and Chiamparino has made just six starts in the majors, all last September after being acquired from the Oakland Athletics.

"There's always going to be question marks about a team's starting pitchers," Brown said. "Very few teams ever have five solid starting pitchers returning."

IT NEVER has been the Rangers' luxury, but Valentine does have the luxury of knowing whom his five starting pitchers are. This might be the first camp in Rangers history where there hasn't been competition for at least one of the five starting spots.

They're also five talented guys who can throw hard, with fastballs that can register 90-plus mph. The manager is not going to cringe when one of his starters rears back and throws his fastball. The likes of Paul Kilgus, Dewayne Vaughn and Jamie Moyer do not exist in this rotation.

It would be illogical to suggest that the five will reach Valentine's goal of a combined 75 victories by each winning 15. The Rangers need one or two of them to be workhorses, possibly even win 20 games, doing for the Rangers what Dave Stewart and Bob Welch did for the Oakland Athletics last year.

That brings us to Brown and Witt. There's no doubt that's what the Rangers were hoping for when they made Witt the third pick overall in the 1985 draft and Brown the fourth pick overall the next year.

Both have been on the verge of becoming a more dominant major-league starter, so this is as good a time as any to knock that door down.

"I think we can do it," Witt said.

Witt was that type of pitcher over the final fourth months of last season when a 12-game winning streak enabled him to finish with a 17-10 record, a 3.36 ERA and 221 strikeouts, second in the league to Ryan. Brown was the Rangers' workhorse in the first half of last season, winning 10 games in the first half before the elbow problems took over.

"I'm going to aim high, and I know Bobby has his high expectations, too," Brown said. "I'd like to go nine innings and win every game. There hasn't been a year yet I haven't wanted to win 20 games. But it's not something easily attainable. A lot of things have to go right for you."

What the Rangers really need from the two are innings, preferably 200 or more. Witt threw 222 innings last year, the first time he has thrown more than 200 in his five-year career. Brown has been on a course to do that the past two years until arm injuries forced the Rangers to shut him down in September. Two years ago it was a shoulder problem, last year it was the elbow.

"I'm not worried about that," Brown said. "I don't think that was anything but two unfortunate incidents happening two years in a row. It was just something freakish beyond my control. I've never had any problems throwing innings before. I threw 140-150 innings in a short college season, and I don't think I've lost anything from that. If anything, I'm stronger than when I was in college."

If Brown and Witt became the workhorses, it lessens the expectations on Ryan, Chiamparino and Rogers. With Ryan, age is the only question. Otherwise he has shown no signs of slowing up. The past two years he has delivered 200-plus innings, and counting intrasquad and B games as well, he has thrown more than any other pitcher so far this spring.

"Who knows?" Rangers general manager Tom Grieve said. "He may pitch until he's 50."

Rockets burn in another victory

NBA Roundup

CHICAGO — Houston ended the NBA's second-longest single-season home winning streak at 26 games and extended its own overall winning streak to 12 in a row Monday night by beating the Chicago Bulls 100-90.

Kenny Smith had 25 points and Sleepy Floyd added 21 as the Bulls lost for only the fourth time in 35 games this season at Chicago Stadium. The Bulls had not been defeated at home since a 109-101 loss to Portland on Dec. 8.

The 1985-86 Boston Celtics hold the NBA single-season record with 31 straight home victories. The 1977-78 Portland Trail Blazers and 1988-89 New York Knicks also won 26 in a row at home.

The triumph was the Rockets' 15th in their last 16 games. They held their opponents to under 100 points for the fourth straight game and 36th time this season.

Magic 115, Warriors 106

ORLANDO, Fla. — Scott Skiles scored 13 of his 31 points in the fourth quarter and Orlando used a 21-13 spurt at the start of the final period to pull away for a victory over Golden State.

The victory was the third straight for the second-year Magic, which has won 11 of its last 15 home games and increased its victory total to 24 — six more than in its inaugural season.

Golden State, starting a five-game road trip, dropped its second in a row despite getting 33 points from Tim Hardaway and 32 from Chris Mullin.

Dennis Scott scored 25 points and Jerry Reynolds came off the bench to add 23 for Orlando, which led 80-76 after three quarters. Skiles hit a pair of 3-pointers and Scott made one to fuel the decisive burst that enabled the Magic to open a 101-89 lead with just over five minutes remaining.

Jazz 109, Bucks 98

SALT LAKE CITY — Karl Malone had 37 points and John Stockton 17 assists as Utah won its fifth straight game while snapping Milwaukee's four-game winning streak.

Jeff Malone and Thurl Bailey added 17 points apiece for the Jazz. Dale Ellis led the Bucks with 25 points and Jay Humphries added 22.

The Jazz led most of the way, but Ellis' 3-pointer with 6:18 remaining pulled the Bucks to 86-80. Then the Jazz had a 9-4 spurt to secure the victory.

Karl Malone scored five of his 12 fourth-quarter points during the spree, which left Jazz in front 95-84.

He also had nine points in the opening period as Utah took a 28-22 lead. The Bucks started the second period with a 9-2 spurt to take a 31-30 lead on a basket by Ellis with 8:47 left in the first half.

But Utah had an 11-0 run to take a 41-31 lead. The Jazz led 51-43 at the half. The Bucks never got closer than six points the rest of the way.

The Jazz took its biggest lead at 58-43 on the second of two free throws by Karl Malone with 9:49 remaining in the third quarter.

Bullets 113, Nets 106

LANDOVER, Md. — John Williams scored a season-high 24 points and Harvey Grant added 20 as Washington won its third straight game and handed New Jersey its 16th consecutive road loss.

The three-game winning streak matches the Bullets' longest of the season. Washington had a pair of three-game streaks between December 19 and January 4, a stretch in which the Bullets won six of eight.

New Jersey has lost 26 of its last 27 road games and 30 of 35 overall. The Nets' only victory away from home in the last four months was at Miami on Jan. 26.

Pistons 118, Nuggets 94

DENVER — James Edwards had a season-high 32 points and reserve Vinnie Johnson added 27 as Detroit used a 70-point second half to overwhelm Denver, handing the Nuggets their seventh straight loss.

Detroit led 27-22 after one quarter, then rested its starters for most of the second quarter. The Pistons' reserves got all 21 of their points in the period as Detroit led 48-45 at halftime.

The Pistons shot 57.7 percent from the field, including 65 percent in the second half. Edwards was 12-for-18 and Johnson hit 11 of 15 shots.

Denver shot just 38-for-101, including 3-for-17 on 3-pointers.

Lakers 99, Kings 89

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — James Worthy scored 26 points and Magic Johnson had 19 points, 14 assists and 12 rebounds as Los Angeles beat Sacramentofor its 12th straight win over the Kings.

Johnson had his 11th triple-double of the season for the Lakers, who haven't lost to the Kings since Jan. 10, 1989.

Los Angeles led 80-67 entering the fourth quarter, but Sacramento outscored the Lakers 17-7, including a 10-1 run capped by Bill Wennington's tip-in, to make it 87-84 with 5:46 left in the game.

The Lakers (50-20) then put the game away by outscoring Sacramento 12-5 the rest of the way.

Clippers 106, Suns 94

LOS ANGELES — Charles Smith scored 25 points and Danny Manning added 8 of his 18 points in the fourth quarter as the Los Angeles Clippers upset cold-shooting Phoenix, ending the Suns' club-record eight-game road winning streak.

The victory was the Clippers' sixth in nine games and third in a row, matching their season high. They had not put together a three-game winning streak since the first week in December.

Kevin Johnson had 22 points for the Suns, who shot only 29 percent in the third quarter and dropped their first game away from the Memorial Coliseum losing at Portland on Feb. 22. The defeat dropped them three games behind the Pacific Division-leading Trail Blazers and 2½ behind the second-place Lakers, who won 99-89 at Sacramento.

Ron Harper added 19 points and Norman had 18 for the Clippers, who never trailed after Olden Polynice gave them a 56-55 lead with 9:22 left in the third quarter.

Arizona leaders seeking to keep Mariners

Associated Press

Arizona civic leaders, city mayors, lawmakers and others met with Commissioner Fay Vincent on Monday at the urging of Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz, amid an impasse that could result in another spring training team moving.

The clubs that make Arizona their spring training home "aren't looking for assurances" from their hosts, but rather for tangible responses to their needs, Vincent said.

The Seattle Mariners and the city of Tempe broke off negotiations on training camp improvements for Diablo Stadium.

Vincent called that "a very disturbing element" but said he will use "all the good offices I have" to keep the Mariners from leaving Arizona.

However, he said he wouldn't block the Mariners' departure.

And he said officials at Monday's meeting didn't give him assurances about facilities or money.

The Cleveland Indians already have announced they will leave Tucson after next spring's training. If the Mariners also go, only six teams will be training in the state and playing each other in exhibitions. That can work, Vincent and others said, but they also said it won't work as well as having eight teams.

Mariners president Gary Kaseff was quoted Friday as saying, "We don't feel there are any other viable sites in the Cactus League."

Spring baseball in Arizona reportedly pumps $160 million into the state's economy annually.

"We have to get the Mariners satisfied," said Vincent, who declined to explain his involvement. "I intend to use all the good offices I have to make sure negotiations between the Mariners and whoever is interested in them are conducted in the proper spirit."

Vincent has criticized the Mariners' facilities at Diablo Stadium as being in need of renovation.

In on-field news Monday, Chicago Cubs manager Don Zimmer announced that Gary Scott, a 22-year-old who has never played above the Double-A level, will be his opening day third baseman. Scott is hitting .512 this spring with 10 RBI and seven doubles.

New York Mets manager Bud Harrelson filled one hole in his pitching staff by creating another when he selected Wally Whitehurst to be his fifth starter.

Harrelson announced he will move Whitehurst out of the bullpen and into the Mets' starting rotation. Whitehurst replaces Sid Fernandez, who is expected to miss about nine weeks with a broken ulns bone in his left arm.

Whitehurst, Julio Valera and Anthony Young were the main candidates to replace Fernandez in the rotation.

The Los Angeles Dodgers signed left-handed pitcher John Candelaria, a non-roster spring training invitee, to a one-year contract.

The 37-year-old Candelaria has appeared in seven games this spring. He is 1-0.

NIT: Stanford advances

(From 1C)

Stanford 73, Massachusetts 71

Stanford took the inside track to the final of the NIT.

Center Adam Keefe scored 24 points and forward Andrew Vlahov added 20 as Stanford used its inside power to beat Massachusetts 73-71 Monday night and advance to its first NIT championship game.

Keefe and Vlahov each had 14 points in the second half as Stanford withstood a late rally by Massachusetts, which trailed almost the entire way. Vlahov grabbed 11 rebounds and Keefe got 10 for the Cardinal, which outrebounded the Minutemen 42-31.

"Our big men caused them a lot of problems," said Stanford coach Mike Montgomery. "That's probably an understatement."

Massachusetts ended its season with a 20-12 record, its most wins since 1977.

Keefe didn't score in the last nine minutes, but Vlahov filled the gap for Stanford, getting 10 points in the last 6 1-2 minutes.

"Keefe started getting so much heat that it allowed me to sneak in there and score," said Vlahov, an Australian who missed 11 games prior to the NIT after having surgery on his right ankle.

Vlahov, normally a 59 percent free-throw shooter, made all 12 of his attempts against Massachusetts.

"He worked on his free-throwing shooting during his layoff, and obviously it paid off," Montgomery said.

"When a 59 percent shooter goes 12-for-12, I guess it wasn't meant to be," said Massachusetts coach John Calipari.

Massachusetts, which trailed by as many as 16 points in the first half, rallied to take a 59-58 lead with 5:28 left in the game on a pair of free throws by Harper Williams. But Stanford quickly regained the lead on a 3-pointer by John Patrick and never trailed again.

"We never quit," Calipari said. "We could have lost by 30, but we hung in there and came up just short."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, MARCH 26, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your career accomplishments inspire friends and competitors alike to redouble their own efforts. In October, you will have the Midas touch in money matters. Beware of hangers-on as 1991 draws to a close. You will be very vulnerable in affairs of the heart. Choose a romantic partner who loves you for what you are. Marriage is best postponed until early 1992. Next Valentine's Day should be very special.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, actor James Caan, author Erica Jong, superstar Diana Ross.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Delegate more authority now and you will soon share in increased profits. A new romance is a blessing for someone stuck in a rut. Your optimism is justified where vocational challenges are concerned.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your mind is crystal clear today. You know precisely what to begin or complete. Clean up your own act before playing amateur psychologist. Domestic affairs go extremely well. Have fun this evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): To ensure continued success, you may have to make certain sacrifices on the job. Reopen the lines of communication with erstwhile business associates. It is time to forgive and forget.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Financial gains can be made through confidential channels today. Postpone signing contracts. You sense what needs to be changed and the best way to proceed. Home life begins to feel right again.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You can shine on the job today. Do not let silly doubts hold you back. Have patience with higher-ups, keeping any irritation you feel under wraps. Go your merry way after office hours.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You can cultivate a valuable alliance behind closed doors today. Private talks prove very enlightening. Socializing with your colleagues is fine so long as you do not spend too much.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Go with the flow today at work. Other people will assist you, even financially! Cultivate a calm manner to offset any worries about a romantic partner. Keep in close touch with parents.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New financial gains are possible today. Keep business negotiations strictly confidential. Make overdue changes in your work environment. Romance holds several pleasant surprises.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Turbulent forces are at work; it would be unwise to make a hasty decision about a relationship. Emphasize your desire for stability. Business people express admiration for your expertise.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Retain your enthusiasm for an idea; do not give up easily. To win support, you may have to take people aside and turn on the charm. An older person offers valuable financial advice.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Romance looks rosy. Give loved ones a well-deserved pat on the back. Domestic tensions fade. Greater diplomacy is the key to getting along with difficult work associates.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Efforts to beautify your home will increase its value while giving you a sense of deep satisfaction. Face any domestic problems head-on. "Playing ostrich" will only add to feelings of tension.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are creative, open-minded and thorough. Imaginary playmates are very real to these fantasy-loving youngsters, and wise parents will accept this. Although these Aries will balk at being thrust into the limelight when young, they often seek the spotlight as adults. They make wonderful actors, writers and lecturers. With their keen eye for detail, these Aries like to have everything in writing.

One of the world's great player-writers, James Jacoby of Richardson, Texas, died last month of cancer.

The son of the legendary Oswald Jacoby, Jim first represented the U.S. in the 1965 World Team Championship, losing narrowly to the Italian Blue Team. He was one of the original Dallas Aces and won several world team championships with that squad. His successes in national competition were too numerous to list here. On his father's death, Jim became the syndicated bridge columnist for NEA Syndicate.

In 1990, Jim was among the contributors to the Bols Bridge Tips competition. This was one of the hands he used in a tip he titled "Save the Deuce."

"Perhaps West should have read (partner's double) for a Lightner double, but he opened a low heart. Declarer discarded his spade on the heart ace and played the queen of spades, king, ruffed with the five of diamonds (notice declarer was saving his lowest diamond). Declarer played the three of diamonds, West followed with the deuce and declarer played the FOUR from dummy. Now another ruffing finesse in spades and a return to the ace of diamonds, and suddenly the sacrifice bid at the seven-level became a make!

"Declarer played well, but West should have SAVED THE DEUCE. If he puts up the queen of diamonds when the suit is first led, declarer will be deprived of the second entry to dummy. Note well that this is only the correct play when declarer leads the three-spot. If declarer had led any other diamond, the traditional play by West stops the extra entry."

Jacoby's tip: The deuce should be thought of not as the two-spot but, instead, the lowest remaining card in any particular suit. When the situation warrants it, save the deuce!

Available is a two-for-one package of DOUBLES booklets. For your copies send $3 to "GOREN DOUBLES," care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 4426, Orlando, Fla. 32802-4426. Make checks payable to "Newspaperbooks."

Reba McEntire: God has other things for me to do

NEW YORK (AP) — Country singer Reba McEntire, who lost seven members of her band and her tour manager in a plane crash this month, says the response to the tragedy shows "there's a lot of love in this music business."

She said that Waylon Jennings, who was on tour with Buddy Holly when Holly died, called and said, "'Don't let guilt set in, don't let guilt even touch you.'"

She also heard of tributes radio stations played after the March 16 crash of the plane into a mountain near San Diego.

"Evidently, I was meant not to go on that plane and God has other things for me to do. ... I can sleep now because I have some peace. I'll keep on flying. I'm not going to quit because there are too many opportunities that I have open to me," she said in an interview in this week's People magazine.

She said, however, that she may never again sing, "Sweet Dreams," because she can't imagine turning around during the song and not seeing the band members who died.

"It'll never be the same without my family," she said. "I'll have a new family, and I'll accept them and love them. But those people will be very special in my heart forever."

HONOLULU (AP) — Michael Dukakis claims he's relaxing during his three-month teaching stint, but he hardly fits the Hawaiian definition of "laid back."

Dukakis

"He told someone here he was going half-speed," joked his wife, Kitty.

Aloha shirts and sneakers have replaced his three-piece suits and dress shoes, and the former Massachusetts governor and his wife have settled into a cottage in a lush valley near the University of Hawaii.

Kitty Dukakis

The 1988 Democratic presidential nominee is on anything but a vacation.

As a visiting professor, he lectures 30 students on political leadership twice a week. He also addresses community forums on subjects including universal health care, the issue closest to his heart these days.

As busy as he is, Dukakis says it's a casual existence compared to the one he left in January, when his term as governor ended.

Mrs. Dukakis also expects to keep busy. She plans to enroll in a dance class. She was trained as a modern dancer and taught for 30 years.

The Dukakises said Hawaii is the ideal place to unwind. They are captivated by its beauty and intrigued by its mix of cultures.

"There's a gentleness here," Mrs. Dukakis said.

Dukakis agreed: "This is a very special place ... You could sense it."

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles and Princess Diana will visit Brazil next month, Buckingham Palace announced Monday.

The visit had been scheduled for last October, but was canceled when Charles broke his arm playing polo. The visit will be April 22-27.

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The attorney for actress Dana Plato says his client will plead innocent to robbery charges when she appears in court in May.

Plato, who appeared in the "Diff'rent Strokes" television series, was arrested last month and charged with robbing a Las Vegas video store of $160.

Plato did not appear at Monday's arraignment in Justice Court. A preliminary hearing was set for May 22.

Chaparral Wash & Lube: Prepare your car for Easter driving

Are you planning to take your car out on the road over the Easter holiday weekend? Do yourself and your car a favor by giving it a thorough spring cleaning and a professional oil change at Chaparral Wash and Lube Center, 2300 N. Big Spring.

Chaparral Wash and Lube Center offers the remarkable combination of a quality quick oil and lube change and maintenance check with a free car wash.

All you have to do is relax as the Chaparral technicians give your car the preventive maintenance it needs and no doubt a well-needed car wash as well.

Chaparral owner, Texas Tech graduate and Midland businessman Leon Jeffcoat invites you in to measure the difference that this centrally-located wash and lube center has to offer.

Generally open on inclement weather days, Chaparral's lube center and gasoline pumps are always at your service. With the purchase of gasoline or an oil change, if the clouds are threatening, you'll receive a rain check for your next car wash.

You won't have to lift a finger when you drive in to Chaparral Wash and Lube Center. Just sit back and let the friendly, dedicated technicians pamper your car for a spring fresh look.

Chaparral Wash and Lube has been well known for years for the best car wash Midland has to offer.

Jeffcoat recommends an oil change for your car every three months or 3,000 miles. If you can't remember the last time you had an oil change, then it's surely time to have one. A free car wash is offered with each oil change in the Chaparral lube center.

Prices for the oil change and lube range from $18.50 to $23.50. Pennzoil, Quaker State, Havoline and other major brands of oil are available. For those who prefer using Mobil One, the price is $36.50.

You can count on more than just an oil change and lube in the Chaparral lube center. Technician C.C. Banks enjoys a reputation for being friendly, knowledgeable and able to trouble spot car problems. "C.C., in addition to being personable, has many years of experience in car maintenance," explained Jeffcoat.

Depend on the Chaparral technicians to examine your battery, tires, belts and hoses. Your vehicle is also checked for important proper fluid levels, including brake, power steering, transmission and windshield washer fluids.

As a part of this service, these fluids are replenished, if your car needs it. For an additional charge, Chaparral can install transmission oil, freon, light bulbs and windshield wiper refills. The friendly professionals at Chaparral Wash and Lube can help give your car the look and feel you want for one of your most valuable possessions.

Come by soon and pamper your car with some of the extra Chaparral services you can combine with your car wash. Check out the advantages of a professionally administered detail job from Chaparral.

A detail job includes spraying the engine to remove oil and grime, a thorough cleaning under the hood, hand waxing, carpet and upholstery shampooing, interior dash and door treatment and tire treatment. Prices for this service range from $49 to $79.

A full service car wash, which includes a wash by gentle cleansers, chamois brushes and soft water is just $7.95. Standard vans and Suburbans are just $2.00 extra. Each car is treated to a thorough wash down before it is cleaned gently by the brushes. Vacuuming, hand drying and window cleaning are included in the low price.

Save time while getting your car washed and have your car filled with Texaco gasoline and get a discount towards the wash. Fill up with more than 18 gallons and your wash is free.

Chaparral Wash and Lube Center is conveniently located at the corner of Big Spring and Scharbauer Drive. Texaco, Visa, MasterCard, American Express and Discover cards are accepted. Hours are 8 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturdays. Call 682-8013 for more information.

Chaparral Wash and Lube customers are repeat customers because the service is consistently friendly, professional and dependable. From left are Chaparral lube technician C.C. Banks, Chaparral owner Leon Jeffcoat and customer Harvey Rhoads.

Medical Center Pharmacy offers complementary nutrition guide

Medical Center Pharmacy, at 2203 W. Tennessee, is offering a complementary nutrition guide to its customers. Stop by soon and meet the friendly staff of pharmacists, from left, owner Bob West (and MacGruder the rabbit), Waller Diggs and Bill West.

If one of your dislikes is trying to find parking and/or waiting a long period of time for your prescriptions, come by and meet the family at Medical Center Pharmacy. Give owner Bob West, his brother, Bill and Waller Diggs a try. You'll discover that their personal service is something that has been missing in your former health services relationship.

With front door parking at the pharmacy, located at 2203 W. Tennessee, it's easy to stop by for a visit or for medical needs. Medical Center Pharmacy is located behind Midland Memorial Hospital, in the medical complex building facing Tennessee Street. Since Tennessee is still two-way traffic, access is much easier.

If you haven't visited Medical Center Pharmacy, said Bob, you will be pleasantly surprised with the friendliness and professional help. You probably can't find better record keeping or a more complete offering for insurance and third party functions.

"We are probably one of the oldest Midland stores to be computerized," he explained. Printouts for insurance and income tax purposes are available at no charge upon request.

Medical Center Pharmacy honors most third party services, including PCS, PAID, Medicaid Department of Human Resources and others. In addition, Visa, MasterCard and Discover may be used or a charge account to qualifying customers may be set up if you don't have a third party plan. "Third party card prescriptions cost the same everywhere, but we offer fast, friendly and appreciative service," commented Bob.

Something new at Medical Center Pharmacy is a free 15 page nutrition guide, which will give you some excellent information on supplements, vitamins and minerals. Medical Center Pharmacy is carrying a new line of natural supplements you will want to know more about.

You might also want to stop by and chat with registered pharmacist Waller Diggs, who has practiced pharmacy for 60 years. He admits that things have changed a little bit since then. "We used to roll pills. You just crossed your fingers and rolled the ingredients into a ball. We also used to make emulsions and suppositories and we had to fill our own capsules."

Medical Center Pharmacy is a full-service pharmacy, with a wall full of general, over-the-counter products, including soap, hand lotion, sunscreen, contact lens solutions, hair spray, cough and cold medications, vitamin and mineral supplements and first aid supplies.

"We are well-equipped to handle any prescription from any physician," Bob stressed. "We fully counsel for side effects and proper use or application on each product we sell."

And Medical Center Pharmacy is up-to-date on the latest in pharmaceuticals.

Medical Center is the franchise dealer in Midland for Hollister ostomy products. It also stocks Spenco products, such as Second Skin.

A selection of gifts are available at the pharmacy, including Scent Chips, potpourri and Hummer and Leaning Tree Cards.

For a complete selection of fine gifts and jewelry, shop Son Silks, owned by Bob and his wife Ellen, at 3001 W. Loop 250 North, G-105, between Service Merchandise and Mervyn's. The new phone number is 694-1602.

And try Bob West's Medical Center Pharmacy soon for your next prescription need. You'll enjoy the warm, personal service that awaits you. Store hours are 8:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturdays. Call 682-9441 for more information.

Companion Care offers alternatives to nursing home care

Consider this: A parent who is reluctant to "burden" his/her adult child with his/her needs or an adult child who feels concerns about aging, frail parents sets the stage for guilt, hurt feelings and potential problems.

Most people wish to maintain their independence for as long as possible, and moreover, many do not want to live in a retirement home. Nor do they wish to be in a situation where they are unable to "do" for themselves.

When age, illness or an accident robs you or someone you love of independence, Companion Care of the Permian Basin can help with cooking, cleaning, dressing, driving and other chores.

Companion Care of the Permian Basin, located in Odessa at 2817 John Ben Shepperd Parkway, Building A, Suite 7, offers a variety of services designed to help the aging or disabled in the Midland and Odessa area, including several levels of home care.

"We can help people who are up and ambulatory, and those who are confused and frightened, all the way to clients who are bedbound," assessed Companion Care owner Gary Rector.

Often the Companion Care client needs a full-time live-in companion who can do everything from grocery shopping, errands, cooking and cleaning to medication supervision. It also may be the case that a full-time caregiver simply needs a rest from the stress of constant care.

Those who need a break for a few hours or a weekend are invited to call Companion Care at 563-8012. Emergency situations when the primary caregiver is called out-of-town also may necessitate the need to call for a temporary companion.

When someone has been ill or in the hospital, following cataract surgery, for example, he/she may need short term assistance at home to make the transition back to a busy lifestyle. Companion Care offers help for a few weeks until the patient is back on his/her feet again.

"The basis of Companion Care is to keep people at home and comfortable as long as they want to and are able to remain at home," said Rector. "Companion Care specializes only in the care of the elderly. Companion Care offers people on an hourly basis, three times a week, once a week — whatever. Companion Care is very flexible."

Companion Care is certified by the state of Texas as a home health agency. In business in Lubbock and other cities for three years, Companion Care has recently opened in Odessa to serve the needs of the Permian Basin. Kathy Bailey, R.N., is director of patient services for Midland and Odessa. As a lifelong West Texas resident, Ms. Bailey takes an added interest in each and every client.

Companion Care offers a monthly course for spouses of, or care givers for stroke victims to teach them how to best minister to these patients. The firm also offers ongoing home health aide and nursing home aide classes. These classes are open to anyone interested in learning the necessary skills to become a care giver.

All staff members are bonded, insured and closely supervised by a registered nurse. Companion Care employees work under the physician's orders as needed.

Rates are competitive with nursing home costs. For those reluctant to ask for help, Companion Care is the perfect answer. Companion Care offers the level of help needed by the patient, from occasional visits by a nurse to full-time residential care.

If you are still unsure, remember this: Why go to a nursing home or a retirement home if you can pay nearly the same amount and get quality care in your home?

Call Companion Care at 563-8012 for more information.

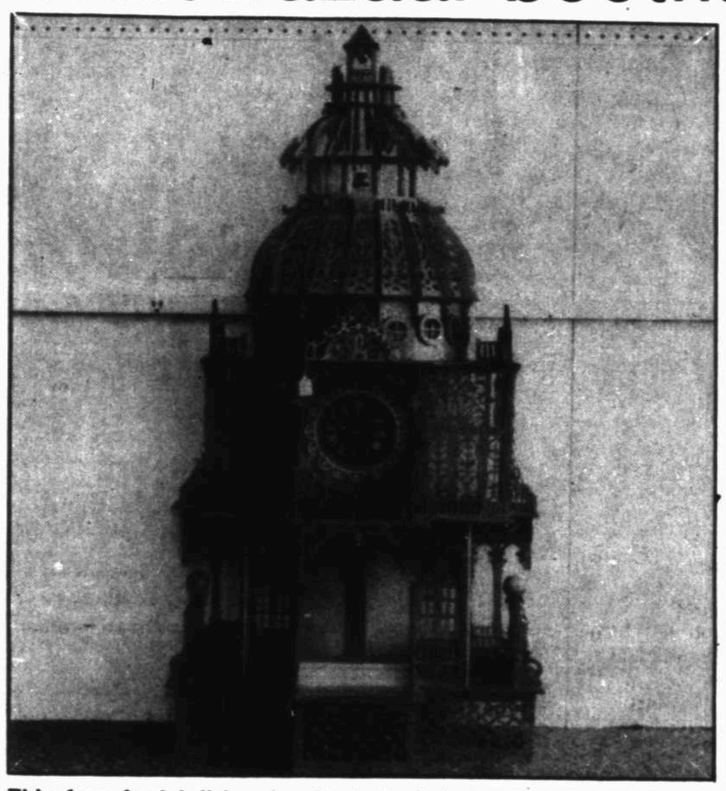
Craft Bazaar booths filled with delightful new spring art



This four foot tall handcrafted clock is just one of the many fine collectibles for sale by local artists and crafters at Craft Bazaar, located at 3712 W. Wall.

Hop into spring and the Easter season with a crowd of cheerful, handmade rabbits and spring novelties from Craft Bazaar, located at 3712 W. Wall.

At Craft Bazaar, you'll see bunnies, bunnies and more bunnies, since all kinds of handcrafted rabbits are on display throughout the store. No doubt someone special you know will treasure one of these special bunnies for years to come.

Made by Midlanders for the most part, the selection includes rabbit welcome mats, ceramic bunnies, floppy rabbit dolls and much, much more.

Crocheted Easter baskets, spring flower bouquets, brightly painted wooden tulips and assorted flowers, log and flower centerpieces and other unique, one-of-a-kind hand made items are found under one roof at Midland's newest arts and crafts mall.

If you or someone you know is planning a spring or summer wedding, stop by Craft Bazaar to see the wedding consultant's booth. Catering, silk flowers, and arrangements, invitations, flowers, unity candles, cakes and reception planning are all custom specialties. She also crafts a number of clever items, such as decorated tennis shoes.

New to Craft Bazaar are colorful, framed Southwest and Texana stained glass paintings. These reasonably priced paintings include cactus, iris, mockingbird, adobe houses, Native Americans, chili peppers, shells and more.

Also new is a booth which features airplane shelves, corner shelf tables and other furniture. This crafter also takes special orders, as do most of the others.

Featured in today's photo is the work of one Midlander who specializes in delicate woodcut art. This man's work is incredibly intricate. This crafter's booth also features pendulum clocks, Florida Evergreen cypress clocks and pictures.

Whimsical, decorative, practical and unique doesn't even begin to describe what is available at the Craft Bazaar booths. Patriotic and "Americana" crafts and art are spread throughout the store. Stock up on yellow bows and American flag t-shirts while in the store.

One of the Craft Bazaar crafters is a talented custom seamstress who makes beautiful rompers and jumpers, which have been very popular this year. Or sketch out a design that you like and she can take it from there. She can also repair treasured dolls and favorite stuffed animals. Just drop off your clothes and instructions at Craft Bazaar.

Area crafters have limitless imaginations and their talents are evident at Craft Bazaar. For special occasions, you may custom order decorations to match your home. Or, make arrangements for party decorating. And if you like traditional, Southwestern, country or contemporary decorating, the booths of Craft Bazaar are loaded with great ideas.

Of course, there are lots and lots of children's toys and gifts, including Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle costume/visors, rocking horses, doll cradles and doll benches.

One booth is entirely devoted to school spirit and area schools are well represented in the form of festive sweatshirts, hairbows, corsages, earrings, laundry bags and more. Don't overlook these reasonably priced items as teacher's gifts or graduation gifts at the end of the school year.

Other gift ideas in many price ranges are handmade Barbie clothes, stiffy bow baskets, rag baskets and rag rugs, wrap around bags and pet pillows, country quilt racks, wooden bookends, and collector dolls such as Prince Charles, Princess Diana and Prince Andrew, and Danbury Mint First Lady dolls.

Owners Don and Liz Merckle came up with the concept of involving the crafters of the Permian Basin together in a shared retailing effort. The "mall" idea turned into a successful venture which, so far, has attracted the talents of more than 100 different crafters.

Mrs. Merckle is a talented crafter, and you can see her silk flower designs and jewelry throughout the store. She has recently opened a silk flower room, complete with ready made arrangements and slik flower supplies.

If you are a home crafter, you may want to consider leasing booth space at Craft Bazaar. A 4' x 4' space is $50 per month and many people lease multiple spaces. Each crafter works in the store one day per month or pays a $25 fee. Contact Don Merckle for details.

Layaways and special orders are welcome and gift wrapping is available. Store hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m: Monday through Saturday and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Sundays. Call 689-8852 for more information.

Group opposes medical supplies seizure

Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — A Seattle area group attempting to send medical supplies into the war-torn Persian Gulf region is trying to find out why its efforts ran into U.S.-built roadblocks over the weekend.

Earthstewards Network, a nonpartisan humanitarian group based on Bainbridge Island outside Seattle, expects to learn today (TUESDAY) whether the U.S. Treasury Department will allow it to ship a ton of medical supplies and infant formula to camps in Jordan where refugees from several countries, including Iraq, are massed.

On Saturday, U.S. Customs agents at John F. Kennedy International Airport here detained Earthstewards' shipment as well as 5,000 pounds of medical supplies from the New York area Fellowship of Reconciliation, also bound for Aman, Jordan.

Both shipments are stored at the J.F.K. Airport.

Late Monday, the Treasury Department gave the Fellowship, based in Niack, N.Y., permission to ship its supplies on a Tuesday night flight, but the Seattle group had not yet received permission to move its supplies.

A spokeswoman for the Jordan Society in Washington, D.C, which helped coordinate the Earthstewards' transport, reported that Customs agents say they expect to address the Seattle group's request Tuesday.

Federal officials detained the shipments under regulations designed to ensure that such supplies don't fall into the hands of Iraqi authorities.

But both the Seattle and New York groups insisted that the supplies were meant for hundreds of sick and malnourished victims of the Persian Gulf conflict and would not be used in Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's propaganda war.

Diana Glasgow, one of the directors of Earthstewards, noted that her group's supplies were to be delivered to the Jordanian Red Crescent Society, the Middle East's version of the Red Cross. She said Earthstewards, like the federal officials, wanted to make sure that the supplies would not fall into the wrong hands.

"We're not comfortable just sending supplies into Jordan," she said. "Our concern was that we be present to take the supplies into the camps ourselves." She said it would be ironic if the U.S. government's action in holding up the supplies resulted in Earthstewards having less control over them.

Ramsey Clark, a former U.S. attorney general, who took part in the Fellowship's efforts to deliver supplies, said he believes U.S. authorities held up the medicine to increase the pressure on the Iraqi people to topple Saddam Hussein.

"For the United States of America, which inflicted the harm in the first place ... to have the cruelty and audacity to seize medical supplies going to the sick is barbaric," he said. "It has to be that they want to inflict punishment still on the civilian population of Iraq."

Ramsey said the Red Crescent Society estimated that 3,000 infants died in Iraq for want of medication and infant milk formula from Nov. 3, 1990, to Feb. 6. Another 6,000 civilian deaths resulted from lack of medication and from drinking impure water, he said, quoting the Red Crescent Society.

A Treasury Department spokeswoman said the medical supplies were not detained in order to place additional pressure on Saddam Hussein's regime, but acknowledged that Treasury consulted the State Department in making a decision on the New York group's request to distribute supplies to refugees.

She said that while the shipments were destined for Jordan they might somehow "drift into Iraq."

The Center for Constitutional Rights in New York questioned the legitimacy of restrictions on the shipment of medical supplies. Beth Stephens, an attorney with the group, said all national and international law stipulates that countries cannot hinder the distribution of medical supplies.

The regulations in question require that those wishing to transport medical supplies to Iraq acquire a license.

Trial begins on bid by station to televise California executions

N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A television producer testified Monday that the public should be allowed to see the final gasps of condemned inmates when they are executed in the San Quentin gas chamber.

His testimony came in the first day of a closely watched trial in U.S. District Court in San Francisco that could lead to the first publicly broadcast execution in the United States.

"The camera can give us a direct recording of the sights and sounds of the event," said Michael L. Schwarz, director of current affairs and an award-winning executive producer for KQED television station in San Francisco.

"It can act as a neutral witness and tell us what an actual witness would see."

He said that TV coverage of an inmate's death in the gas chamber "would help us answer the central question raised by executions: whether this is an appropriate punishment for the most horrible crimes committed in our society. It would help us determine who we are as a society."

KQED, which has sued the warden of San Quentin prison, insists that the press has a First Amendment right to broadcast executions because members of the public will be there as witnesses.

Citing prison security and other public policy concerns, the state has maintained that neither journalists nor the general public have a constitutional right to attend or view executions.

"It's important that people have confidence in the activities of the courts," Deputy Attorney General Karl Mayer said during a nonjury trial before U.S. District Judge Robert H. Schnacke. "Exposing an inmate in the act of dying at an execution does not serve that purpose."

"Executions in California have not been and are not intended by statute to be public events," Mayer said. "The general public has never been permitted."

KQED lawyer William Bennett Turner accused the state of "trying to keep the administration of capital punishment a secret" from the general public.

"The government should not be dictating to the press whether it covers a news event and how," he said.

The battle over reporters' access to the death chamber heated up last week, when San Quentin Warden Daniel Vasquez issued a new rule banning all news media from witnessing executions.

It is a marked departure from previous executions, when news reporters were selected to attend. As a result, more news agencies are expected to challenge the state's policy on executions.

"I'm quite satisfied that the First Amendment entitles neither the press nor the television media to be there," Schnacke said in a preliminary finding before the start of the trial.

Even though California wardens have traditionally permitted members of the press to attend executions, he said, that in itself does not establish a constitutional right.

However, the judge said he is concerned that the new state rule banning reporters from executions may be discriminatory, since other members of the public are allowed to attend as witnesses.

KQED, a nonprofit corporation, filed a lawsuit against the prison warden after he turned down a March 1990 request to televise the then-scheduled execution of Robert Alton Harris. The execution, previously set for April 1990, was stayed pending legal appeals.

During his testimony, KQED's Schwarz said he had "ambivalent" feelings about capital punishment, but that he believes there are "some crimes so horrible that the death penalty is warranted."

He also said that he has been the victim of a violent crime.

In the suit, KQED asked that its reporters be allowed to use "the tools of their trade:" video cameras.

NATION IN BRIEF

Events insults native citizens

OAKLAND, Calif. (NYT) — Saying they have a "new vision," leaders of the Native American movement declared that the upcoming 500th anniversary celebration of Columbus' discovery of America is "an insult" to their race.

At a daylong conference at Laney College on Monday, tribal representatives from the United States, Canada and Argentina called for a nationwide campaign to educate the public about the exploitation of Native Americans after Europeans arrived.

They said that Columbus' landing in the West Indies marked the beginning of genocide and colonialism in the Western Hemisphere and that the 500-year celebration — on Oct. 12, 1992 — will mark five centuries of Native American resistance.

"Five hundred years is something we cannot celebrate," said Ed Burnstick, a member of the Cree tribe and spiritual leader from Alberta, Canada. "Those who are going to celebrate the so-called discovery of America by Columbus are living in an unreal world."

June Le Grand, a Cherokee Indian, said the conference, which drew approximately 200 participants, and another larger meeting that took place in Ecuador in July mark the beginning of a movement to educate the public about the atrocities of the past and prevent them from happening again.

"We know we can't keep them from holding this party, but we have to respond somehow," Le Grand said. "All we are trying to do is create a new vision for the next 500 years.

Five officers reinstated

NEW YORK (NYT) — The New York City Police Department said Monday that it was reinstating five officers who had been suspended without pay only last week after they were indicted in Queens on charges of murdering a car-theft suspect.

A department spokeswoman, Suzanne Trazoff, said the five would be given "modified assignments" in which they would be kept off street patrol and not carry their weapons.

She said the department had no choice, under "a relatively new rule" in the state civil service law, but to restore the indicted officers to the payroll. The provision was passed by the legislature and went into in effect last July.

While Police Commissioner Lee P. Brown has made remarks since Friday citing what he termed weaknesses in the case against the five, Ms. Trazoff insisted that the department was not trying to send a message of support for the officers by restoring them to the payroll.

Death penalty approved

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The state Senate approved legislation Monday to restore the death penalty in New York, although a supporter said its chances of becoming law were slim.

The Senate passed the bill 40-18 after nearly three hours of debate. The bill is expected to easily pass in the state Assembly, where it will come up for a vote in the next few weeks.

Gov. Mario Cuomo said he'll veto the death penalty, as he has done in each of his eight years in office.

"Nobody in a position to make a deal goes to the chair," Cuomo said. "Poor people go to the chair and nuts who want to go to the chair."

The fate of the death penalty after Cuomo's veto wasn't certain.

DEAR ABBY

Double dead-bolt locks can open door to a tragedy

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to plead with you to change your answer to a recent letter concerning dead-bolt locks. The writer reported that the homes of several invalids that he had made deliveries to were equipped with dead-bolt locks requiring a key to exit the homes. He also said the windows were secured with iron bars. He suggested that the occupants should wear the key around their neck to facilitate their exit in case of an emergency, such as a fire. You said he had an excellent idea.

Van Buren

Please, please change your answer. Tell everyone that you can reach that they should never, under any circumstances, install double dead-bolt locks on their home or apartment doors! The double dead-bolt lock turns an ordinary home into a tomb in the event of a fire. Smoke conditions found in an ordinary house fire could make it impossible for even the most alert, physically fit person to exit the home under these conditions. (It is impossible to see or even take a full breath when you're gagging from smoke, and terrified.)

I have seen an entire family lying just inside the front door, which was locked from the inside with a double dead-bolt lock. The key was there, but the door was still locked. Unfortunately, this is not an isolated incident. Window bars also prevent firefighters from rescuing trapped occupants in time to save their lives.

How much of a chance would an invalid have in a similar circumstance? Besides, what good would a double dead-bolt lock do for an invalid in the event that an intruder gained entry to the home and wanted the key to unlock the door from the inside to get out?

I simply cannot imagine what the advantage of such a lock is under ANY circumstances. What possible reason could people have to lock themselves inside a building? Locking people OUT makes sense, but locking people IN does not.

Although I expect that my chances of seeing this in print are very slim, I implore you to consider running it in the best interest of your readers.

Fire officials across this country have been advocating the elimination of double dead-bolt locks for many years, to little avail, and we need help. They are prohibited in dwelling units in the state of Michigan, and in our opinion, their sale should also be against the law. — WILLIAM H. CROUCH, PRESIDENT, SOUTHEASTERN MICHIGAN FIRE CHIEFS ASSOCIATION

DEAR CHIEF CROUCH: Your letter will probably fill the entire space allotted to me for one column, but it is well worth it. Thank you for a lifesaving letter. (P.S. In some states, it is also against the law to have a double dead-bolt lock in a place of business.)

Abigail Van Buren's colum is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

AT WIT'S END

Film boredom now sealed with a kiss

By Erma Bombeck

I don't think kissing was ever meant to be a spectator sport. Somehow, sitting on the sidelines watching someone else pick up yardage just doesn't make me want to stand up and cheer.

Bombeck

Yet kissing — or "sucking face," as the late Henry Fonda referred to it in "On Golden Pond" — has become a staple. It's become as predictable to a plot and as lengthy as the perennial car chase. (I could die without seeing another police car meet a truck on a one-way street and end up smashing into a fruit cart.) Love scenes nowadays have all the appeal of watching a guy at a cafeteria scarf down a late lunch.

The thing I've always liked about reading books is that you have to do a little of the work yourself. You have to bring your experience and imagination to it and fill in the blanks.

The author can tell you that Turk is mumbling huskily into Twilight's hair and that she feels herself sinking to the floor, trembling and weak, but when the "fire in the fireplace flickers and dies," you're on your own. Go for it.

The sexiest love scenes I've ever viewed on screen were the ones where you saw nothing. If there was anyone in the theater who didn't sense the electricity between Kelly McGillis and Harrison Ford in "Witness," his body should be outlined in chalk.

In four hours, we never actually saw Rhett Butler have his way with Scarlett, but I figured anyone who could take three steps at a time with a woman in his arms wasn't going up there to clean out his closets.

And if you really want to talk subtleties, talk Cary Grant. He left a legend as one of the greatest lovers on the screen and yet, the reputation was built on "looks" that left little to the imagination.

It's not that I'm against kissing. It's just that it's beginning to seem like a business. The wanting, the buildup, the desire, the restraint, the caution, the unsureness are gone.

My kids sense that movies have changed. Whenever we watch a film together, there is an awkwardness when we get to the kissing frenzy that precedes the bedroom scene.

I hate to tell them that I've seen more intimacy than that in my mind "after the fire in the fireplace flickered and died."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Archbishop dies in Switzerland

PARIS (NYT) — Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, the traditionalist prelate whose defiance of Pope John Paul II caused the first schism in the Roman Catholic Church since 1870, died in Martigny, Switzerland. He was 85.

Lefebvre, a soft-spoken but stubborn Frenchman, was excommunicated in June 1988 for consecrating four bishops to help carry on his battle to return to a Latin Mass and to preserve other practices rejected in the wake of the ecumencial council Vatican II.

"I prefer to be in the truth without the pope than to walk a false path with him," he said to explain his rebellious course.

Lefebvre died Monday in a hospital from complications following emergency surgery a week ago for a cancerous growth in his abdomen.

Rival leaders meet

Earthquake hits China

BEIJING (AP) — A strong earthquake struck a coal mining region west of Beijing early Tuesday, injuring more than 100 people, the government said.

The quake struck at 2:02 a.m. (noon Monday EST) and measured 5.8 on the Richter scale, said Gu Yongxin at the State Seismology Bureau in Beijing.

He said many homes collapsed, but said he did not have detailed information on casualties or damage.

The quake was centered near Datong, a mining center of about 1 million people that is about 170 miles from Beijing. Datong also is the site of famous Buddhist cave sculptures dating from the 4th through the 6th centuries.
