Judge blocks federal plutonium-dump plan

(NYT) — A federal district judge in Washington has erected two major impediments to the Department of Energy's plan to open a repository for plutonium bomb waste in New Mexico, ruling that the dump requires the approval of Congress and the state of New Mexico.

The department has been trying for years to get the approval of both Congress and New Mexico to open the project, the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant, near Carlsbad, N.M. A major issue has been New Mexico's demand for money for improvements to the roads over which waste-laden trucks would travel to the plant, known as WIPP, as well as training for hospital and emergency

Richards invokes plight of jobless in plea to Bush

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Invoking the plight of the unemployed in Texas, Gov. Ann Richards on Monday called on President Bush to use the peace dividend to help states create jobs for people stranded by the shrinking defense industry.

Richards, in a high-profile role at a conference of governors in the nation's capital, criticized her fellow Texan in the White House for what she called a failure to provide a safety net for people thrown out of work by defense cuts.

"They are going to continue to cut defense, and no one disagrees," Richards told reporters on the White House lawn after a contentious meeting between

Queen Elizabeth II

Queen to mark 40

LONDON — In the midst of one of the periodic outcries over the behavior of some of the more junior members of the royal family, Queen Elizabeth II will observe the 40th anniversary of her accession to the throne on Thursday. Since it is also the anniversary of the death of her father, King George VI, there will be no celebration on the day — only a BBC television documentary, which its producers say is intended to show how serious and hard-working the queen really is.

Cold War series

Like a secret agent who carries an invented history and clean passport to a new post, the CIA is struggling to create a new, post-Cold-War identity. If Robert M. Gates, the director of central intelligence, could have his way, the spy agency would shed its popular image as a hotbed of operators who conduct covert actions around the world, or seduce foreigners into committing treason in the interests of America's national security./3A

Willie's farm aid

IRVING — Singer Willie Nelson gathered Monday with farmers and Dallas Cowboys President Jerry Jones to announce Texas Stadium as the site of Farm Aid V. About 30 bands and individual musicians have committed to perform at the March 14 event, Nelson said. It's the fifth such mass concert Nelson has sponsored to raise money for U.S. farmers. "As our economic condition worsens, it's easier now for people to understand what we were talking about back in 1985 when we said when the farmer goes under, everybody goes under," Nelson said. Farm Aid Inc. has handed out more than $10 million to farm organizations and service agencies in 41 states. Nelson serves as president.

Japan rips Americans' work ethic

■ U.S. workers are losing the drive 'to live by the sweat of their brow,' prime minister says.

By David E. Sanger
N.Y. Times News Service

TOKYO — In the latest critique of the United States from a Japanese political leader, Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa said on Monday that America "may lack a work ethic," and that some of the country's economic ills came about because too many American college graduates headed to Wall Street in the 1980s rather than "producing things of value."

Miyazawa's comments, made on Monday during a nationally televised debate in Parliament, seemed bound to further inflame the angry exchanges between the United States and Japan. Two weeks ago, the speaker of the lower house of Parliament, Yoshio Sakurauchi, touched off protests in the United States when he termed American workers "lazy" and said a third of the work force was illiterate. Japanese government officials, including Miyazawa, denounced those characterizations.

In many respects, Miyazawa's statements, along with criticism of American management by another leading member of the Liberal Democratic Party, Kabun Muto, seemed more measured than Sakurauchi's. Moreover, they echoed comments often heard in the United States. But they also reflected a widely held view here that fundamental problems in the American workplace, rather than just a cyclical downturn, have led to shoddy products and ultimately to national economic decline.

On Monday night, Japanese government officials raced to interpret and explain away the prime minister's comments, aware that in a

Ruling on Sunday banking draws little area interest

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Some Texas banks are open for business on Sundays now, and more may join them in the future, but local bankers say they aren't all that interested.

The U.S. Office of Comptroller of the Currency ruled some time ago that a federal statute allows national banks to remain open on any day that is not designated by the comptroller's office as a bank holiday.

A survey shows that Midland bankers don't think there is a demand for Sunday banking, and none have plans at this time to open on Sundays.

Several of the bankers — from Texas National Bank, First City, Texas, Midland, and NationsBank Midland, said they believe their automated teller

Poor '91 cotton crop brings debt to most area farmers

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

What started out to be a "real good" crop for 1991 tapered off to a poor crop that's keeping many cotton farmers in debt.

"This crop promised more and delivered less than any crop we have had in a long time," said Charlie Wright, general manager of the Midland Farmers Cooperative Cotton Gin.

What the 1991 crop delivered to the co-op was a harvest that yielded 10,800 bales of cotton, which is below the gin's average of 12,000 bales per year and far below the 1990 crop of 15,700 bales.

What the crop brought to most Midland area farmers was debt.

"There won't be any farmers that will make money farming this year," Wright said. "They will all lose money." In recent years, not even the sale of cottonseed is paying the ginning costs.

Farmers are losing because production costs, living expenses and money interests are exceeding their income.

"We had a bad crop," Wright said. "The quality was bad, and the price was bad. Three strikes, and you're out."

Much of the West Texas cotton crop similarly was affected.

But the good news that has sustained many a farmer is the promise of a better crop next year.

Right now, prospects for a better crop look promising. But they've looked good before and faltered.

Recent rain, drizzle and snow have added underground moisture to the soil and if there's "decent planting rain (this spring), we'll make a better crop," Wright said.

The planting rain ensures that the cottonseed will germinate. The stems and leaves break through the soil's crust in seeking sunlight, and the roots seek out underground moisture.

Last year's crop didn't start off well. Planting rains were late in coming, so much of the crop got planted late.

With occasional rains during the hot growing season, the crop looked promising.

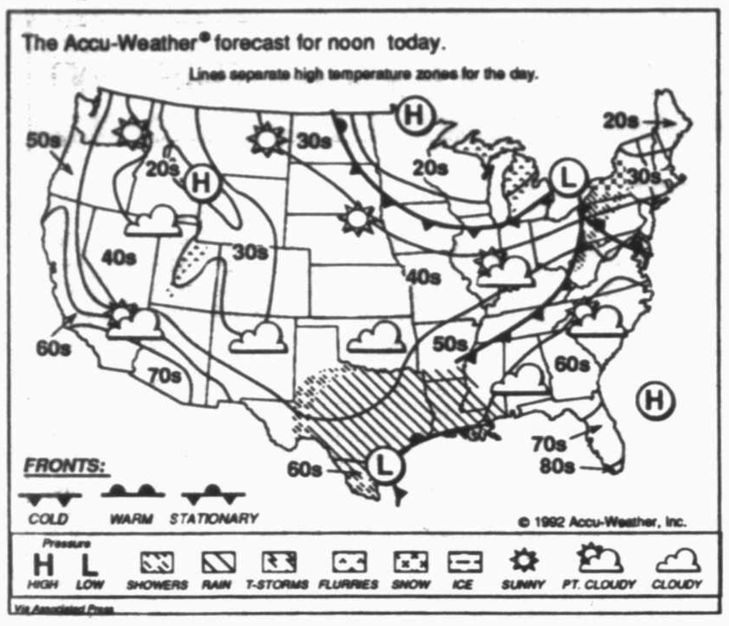

But the weather didn't cooperate.

Cool weather and unseasonably heavy rain in September hampered the maturation of bolls. Many didn't open. Cotton, a hot-weather crop, needs plenty of sunshine to flourish.

The crop missed a "conditioning frost," which kills some upper-stalk

JAPAN: U.S. may lack work ethic, official says

time of deep recession and growing American-Japanese tension — epitomized by a new wave of "Buy America" campaigns — words that might otherwise be overlooked are creating a backlash in the United States.

The Foreign Ministry issued a statement on Monday night noting that Miyazawa also was critical of excesses in the Japanese economy, and said: "The prime minister regrets any misunderstanding which may have been caused." Masamichi Hanabusa, the ministry's chief spokesman, added: "The prime minister has no intention whatsoever of criticizing American workers."

But Miyazawa, led into the discussion of the economic problems facing America by Muto, appeared to be doing exactly that.

Muto, who until recently was minister of international trade and industry, the country's most crucial trade official, said he had heard Americans would not buy a Detroit-made car that was produced on a Friday or a Monday, because on those days workers were either preparing for a weekend of play or recovering from one.

"I think Americans should learn how to work properly from Monday to Friday," Muto said. "That's a good idea for everyone."

Miyazawa quickly chimed in, ticking off several problems facing America. He said that in the 1980s, "American college graduates landed high-paying jobs on Wall Street, and, as a result, you and I have seen that the number of engineers able to make products has fallen year after year."

He said that while the United States was once the world's greatest source of industrial goods, its tradition of "producing things and creating value has 'loosened' too much in the past 10 years or so." Miyazawa, who is a near-fluent English speaker, used the English word "loosened" to emphasize his point, one that is often heard from Japanese industrialists.

As if in summary, Miyazawa paused and said: "I have thought for some time that they may lack a work ethic," and obliquely suggested that some Americans had forgotten how "to live by the sweat of their brow."

Miyazawa may well have thought that he was saying nothing unusual because such critiques are commonplace here — not only on television, but also at the negotiating table. Similar arguments have emerged from the awkwardly named Structural Impediments Initiative, in which Japan has urged Americans to work longer hours and greatly improve worker training, while the United States has urged in return that Japanese take more vacations, save less money, and buy more on credit to increase consumer spending and therefore the purchase of imports.

But for most of the last few years, such criticisms were scarcely noticed. That has changed in the last month, with President Bush's ill-fated visit, new arguments over automobile trade, and suggestions from some Bush administration officials that the American recession was at least partly "made in Japan."

The tone of Miyazawa's comments on Monday seemed more explanatory than argumentative, and he touched on a number of other practices.

RICHARDS: Governor invokes plight of jobless

(From 1A)

Democratic governors and President Bush.

"What we do disagree about is that there is no plan whatsoever to take care of those people who are now out of work. In Tarrant County, Texas, we've lost 11,000 employees in one county," she said of layoffs in the Fort Worth area.

"You can replicate that all across this nation. It's going to continue. We are already in a recession. And this administration has not laid out any plan whatsover to rectify that."

Richards was among a group of Democratic governors who disrupted a carefully staged White House ceremony by springing an attack on Bush's economic program just as he was asking for their support in getting it through Congress.

Bush outlined his economic revival plan for several minutes and asked the governors to help him rally support on Capitol Hill for passage by his March 20 deadline.

But just as reporters were being ushered from the room so Bush could speak privately with the governors, Colorado Gov. Boy Romer insisted that the media be allowed to stay while Democrats aired their objections to the plan.

Romer, vice chairman of the National Governors Association, said he did not want to leave the impression that all the governors had agreed to "go to Congress and convince them that your approach alone is the only approach."

The Democrats said they believe deeper defense cuts than the $50 billion proposed should be considered. They also called for higher taxes on the wealthy and chided the adminstration for using budget "gimmicks."

Bush angrily challenged Romer to be specific, demanding to know whether the Democrats were calling for a tax increase and where they would further cut defense.

"Do you want it to be $100 billion, and if so, what bases do you want to close?" asked the clearly annoyed Republican president. "What weapon systems do you want to knock off right now? Or do you want to lay off the people?"

At one point, Bush insisted the Democrats come up with a deadline of their own if they had a problem with March 20.

"If that date isn't good, what date?" he said. "Is there a feeling on that one?"

Richards, taking a more conciliatory approach, replied, "I suspect that the Congress is going to move very quickly, not only because we're going to urge them to do that, because it's the right thing to do."

The session reflected the partisan divisions in the governors association during a presidential election year, and the problems Bush faces getting bipartisan agreement on an economic revival strategy.

The glib Richards, an immensely popular figure among national Democrats, has helped lead the opposition since she arrived for the winter meeting of the governors on Friday. Her repeated references to the hard-hit economy of Fort Worth and Tarrant County carried a particular sting for a president who calls Houston home.

SUNDAY: Midland bankers don't see a demand

machine services are sufficient to meet their customers' off-hour needs.

Chuck Cowell, executive vice president with First City, noted that "the volume of transactions on our ATMS shows our customers' needs are being met — they can make deposits, withdrawals or transfers 24 hours a day, seven days a week."

Jane McCrary with NationsBank offered a similar sentiment, and noted that her bank also offers extended hours on Fridays to allow customers to wrap up business before the weekend.

Since national banks were given the right to open on Sundays, some state banks want the same right from the Texas Banking Department so they can remain competitive.

However, John Grist, president of Midland American Bank, a state bank, said, "We see no demand for Sunday banking in Midland. However, we haven't polled our customer base to get an accurate presentation. Midland American Bank is not interested in Sunday banking. There are only two banks in Midland with Saturday hours, and we're one of them. Our Saturday business, while it is good, indicates that Sunday would, in my opinion, be carrying (things) a bit far."

For his part, Wayne Merritt, president of Texas National Bank, suggested that banks in Texas would first have to adjust to having Saturday banking hours — if that becomes the norm — before adding Sunday hours. "Right now, I don't see a rush to Sunday hours," he said.

The Texas Finance Commission may vote on the issue at its next meeting in Austin on Feb. 28. The nine-member commission oversees the state departments that regulate banks, savings and loans and consumer credit in Texas.

So far, the matter has drawn little public attention. The Independent Bankers Association has written a letter to the commission in favor of the idea.

Most banks that want the option of opening on Sunday are located in high-traffic areas, such as around shopping malls, in large retail grocery stores or tourist sites.

Banks in smaller towns don't believe there would be enough business to make opening on Sundays economically feasible.

Opening for business on the Sabbath also has some emotional overtones, as demonstrated by the now-repealed "Blue Laws" that prohibited many businesses from operating on Sundays.

Still, even bankers in smaller communities around the state say they would have to open if their competitors did.

Banks in tourist areas such as Galveston and Corpus Christi would welcome Sunday business because weekends are when they have more customers who need banking services.

Also, with many holidays now scheduled on Mondays, banks often are closed for three consecutive days.

First Interstate Bank of Texas has had 30 branches open on Sundays in Randall's supermarkets in Houston for more than a year. A BankOne, Texas branch near a major mall in Fort Worth began opening on Sunday recently, and a branch in Abilene also plans to take that step.

foreman overseeing a crew laying telephone cable three blocks from the White House. "I've worked all over the country in construction, and very seldom do you find a worker who is lazy. They would feel the pinch if we'd stop buying Toshibas and Sonys and Toyotas."

"The American work ethic is legendary and has promoted the greatest prosperity in the world and throughout the world, including other countries like Japan," echoed presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater. He warned that the comments could encourage Congress to pass new trade restrictions.

The indignant outbursts of economic chauvinism were provoked by Miyazawa's observation that Americans have lost the ambition to "live by the sweat of their brow."

"I have long thought that they lack a work ethic," Miyazawa told an parliamentary committee in Tokyo.

The charges capped a splurge of America-bashing by Japanese leaders.

Two weeks ago, Yoshio Sakurauchi, the speaker of Japan's lower house of parliament, triggered a "Buy American" backlash when he described U.S. workers as largely lazy and illiterate.

And the prime minister's observations came after former Japanese trade minister Kabun Muto said Monday that Americans work hard only three days a week. U.S. workers slack off on Fridays to plan their weekends and "cannot throw themselves wholly into their work Mondays as they played too hard Saturdays and Sundays," Muto told parliament during a discussion of the auto industry.

In Washington, the latest criticism from Japan sparked sharp responses from politicians, economists and hard hats.

House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., said the prime minister's remarks were another "ignorant expression of Japanese racism or ill-informed 'worker-bashing'."

to Read.

Modeled after similar contests in several major cities, the "Bee for Literacy" is an opportunity for leading businesses and other organizations to field teams of their best spellers to compete for trophies.

"The contests are good-natured, complete with support from the teams' own cheering squads, and they are good fun for a good cause — fighting the serious problem of adult illiteracy," Wingo said.

Signed to participate are Team Bank, Texaco, Arco Oil and Gas, Penny Quick Printing, First City Texas, Texas Instruments and Chevron. The Reporter-Telegram also provides the cost for a team entered by Midland College; at least two other teams can be added. Representatives of interested companies should contact the Need to Read office at 685-4572 for additional information and to become involved in this year's event, Wingo said.

The $500 donation and entry fee also provides for team members' lunches and a spelling bee T-shirt for each.

Pronouncer will be Dr. Larry Griffin, division chairman of communication studies at Midland College, with Bill Dingus of Exxon serving for the third year as master of ceremonies. "His quick wit and fast-paced humor gets part of the credit for the success of the past bees, and we're most fortunate to have him involved again this year," Wingo said.

Unlike other spelling competitions, each organization fields a team of three, with members allowed to consult when considering words to spell. Words selected are from the 1992 "Words of Champions" and Webster's Third New International Dictionary with study copies of the booklets given to all team members as teams are registered.

A one-time-only option allows a team to "buy an easier word" or pass its word to another team for a cost of $100, while members of the audience may compete for prizes in an audience-only segment for $5 each. First-, second- and third-place trophies will be awarded to winning teams.

The public is invited to attend and $10 tickets include cost of the catered buffet lunch.

All fees go directly to Midland Need to Read, which currently has 135 volunteer tutors working on a one-to-one basis with 135 clients in the program designed to combat adult illiteracy in Midland.

leaves so that sunshine can get to the middle- and lower-stalk bolls and prime them for opening and fluffing out.

Then, off-and-on rains during the harvest season kept mechanical cotton-strippers out of the fields longer than most farmers wanted.

And the net result was a poorer quality cotton in strength, staple, and whiteness. And the price of West Texas cotton dropped lower than the already depressed cotton prices in the Cotton Belt.

"There was a bumper crop made in the nation this year (1991 crop)," Wright said. The production resulted in a surplus of cotton and a drop in prices.

1990-planted cotton fared well in the Midland area, as it did for many of the farmers.

"The majority of them (farmers) made a little money last year (off of the 1990 crop)," Wright said, but "not much."

Marc Traweek, who went "bust" farming cotton and now is the co-op's gin superintendent, figured that the damp and cool growing season and the usual influx of insects cut the 1991 cotton crop in half.

Many farmers are worried about getting the 1992 crop planted. At 40 cents a pound on the market, cotton is below the break-even price range.

"There are lots of guys out there who are worried to death about getting financing," Traweek said. "Bankers are tough to work with. I don't guess you could sell a bale of cotton today. It's dirt cheap."

The nation's economy is tied to agriculture, Traweek said.

"Historically, when agriculture has been good, you could farm and make a living," Traweek said. "When farmers were making money, the rest of the country was doing good. When agriculture is bad, the rest of the country suffers."

BLOCKS: Judge erects two major impediments

crews in radiation safety, and oversight by the the Environmental Protection Agency. Estimates of these cost have run as high as $600 million.

The judge, John Garrett Penn, in a ruling filed on Jan. 31 and made public on Monday, issued a permanent injunction prohibiting the Energy Department from opening the repository, on which $1 billion has been spent since 1983. The Department of Energy maintains that the repository is safe and ready to open for testing, apart from bureaucratic obstacles like the approval from other government agencies. The energy secretary, James D. Watkins, has made opening the repository a top goal.

Penn had issued a temporary injunction on Nov. 26, while he considered the question of who could legally approve transfer of the site, 26 miles east of Carlsbad, from general public use to the custody of the Department of Energy. The department has said for years that it would prefer congressional action, but if that could not be obtained, the land could be transferred by an administrative action of the Department of the Interior.

But Penn ruled that Congress must act before the Energy Department could begin putting wastes into the storage rooms and corridors dug into a salt formation 2,150 feet below the desert. In his opinion granting the temporary injunction, Penn said that the Interior Department could not issue the transfer if it was permanent, and that the waste emplacement appeared to be permanent. The Energy Department had argued that the initial placement, of 4,000 to 8,000 barrels of waste, was reversible if it did not work, and therefore was not permanent.

In the November order, Penn said: "Defendants have presented no convincing evidence that the hazardous waste materials they seek to introduce in the WIPP site can be retrieved."

The Interior Department initially gave the Energy Department the land about a decade ago, but specified then that it was not giving permission for the wastes to be stored.

In his new decision, Penn added another hurdle: that under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, the nation's basic toxic waste management law, the Department of Energy would also need a permit from New Mexico.

"It's the largest legal victory in the battle over WIPP," said Dan Reicher, a lawyer with the Natural Resources Defense Council, which led one of the suits against the plant. "What it essentially says is that the Department of Energy has got to deal with Congress and the New Mexico regulators if it has any hope of ever opening this facility."

Fred Lash, a spokesman for the department, said the government would appeal the decision. He added: "We have felt that we've complied with the regulations" on obtaining a state permit.

Lindsay A. Lovejoy, an assistant attorney general in New Mexico, said on Monday night in a telephone interview that it would be "a matter of some months" before the New Mexico Environment Department could process the application, including analyzing it and holding public hearings.

"When this thing came in it was five volumes, and a permit will be a similar size, with a detailed set of operating rules," he said.

The Federal Environmental Protection Agency is preparing rules on radioactive waste disposal, and New Mexico wants the Energy Department to wait at least until those rules are issued before putting waste in place, if not actually delaying long enough to see if the site passes the new rules.

He added, however: "I think everybody has said that if the terms and conditions are appropriate, the project can go forward."

Among the terms and conditions, said Lovejoy, were preparations for 25,000 truckloads of waste.

CIA struggles to create a new, post-Cold War identity

Editor's note: This is the third in a series of six articles about the direction of U.S. foreign policy after the winding down of the Cold War with the Soviet Union.

By Elaine Sciolino
N.Y. Times News Service

Standing in a non-descript conference room in a convention hotel in East Brunswick, N.J., James T. Fitzgerald does what he has been doing for the last 25 years: pitching the Central Intelligence Agency to aspiring recruits.

"It's not like the James Bond movies," he explains to 28 men and a woman, college graduates invited to the orientation on the basis of their resumes. "The more you learn about the CIA, the more you read about it, the more unromantic it becomes."

For an hour, Fitzgerald works with the group but never uses the words "Soviet," "enemy" or "covert," or even "espionage." Rather, he tells his audience that the mission of the agency is now so diverse it "could probably staff a small university."

LIKE A SECRET AGENT who carries an invented history and clean passport to a new post, the CIA is struggling to create a new, post-Cold-War identity. If Robert M. Gates, the director of central intelligence, could have his way, the spy agency would shed its popular image as a hotbed of operators who conduct covert actions around the world, or seduce foreigners into committing treason in the interests of America's national security.

A child of the Cold War nurtured on an us-vs.-them mentality, the CIA is longing to be accepted as a benign arm of the government bureaucracy, the place to come for cutting-edge information on everything from the effects of the AIDS epidemic on the emerging leadership of Africa to the possibilities of war in the Middle East over water resources.

In fact, some of the recruits said they were attracted to the CIA not by the prospect of spy-movie adventure. They came for job security.

"I'm trying to get into something more structured, more stable than the job I have," said a 27-year-old man, an economics graduate who is working as a supervisor of cashiers in an Atlantic City casino. "All I need to do now is count," said the candidate, who asked not to be identified. "I'm choosing the CIA because the benefits are good. The government takes care of you."

ONLY A DECADE AGO, the agency was leading clandestine military operations against the Soviet Union or its proxies in countries like Afghanistan, Angola and Cambodia. Those covert operations have ceased, as the Soviet Union withdrew from regional conflicts, then broke apart.

"In terms of dollars, the investment in covert action has already plummeted," said Gary E. Foster, the CIA's deputy director for planning and coordination.

Gates has even approved the recommendations of an "openness task force" to declassify millions of documents and make senior officials accessible to the public. "Transparent is now the operative word," a CIA reformer says — a revolutionary idea in an environment where success has been measured by the ability to remain opaque.

Still, the covert side has not disappeared. The agency argues that it still needs covert operators, in part to sift the increasing volume of information that is coming from newly opened societies. And it continues to give recruits a small gray pamphlet that promises adventure and unpredictability in the "clandestine service."

"The call may come in the middle of the night or on a rainy Sunday morning, or it may interrupt a dinner party or a daughter's graduation," the pamphlet says. "If it is urgent, the case officer exits his social and cover life to meet with an agent in a corner of a deserted park, at a table in a bistro, or in a safehouse."

BUT NOW, the way to move up in the agency is no longer to run successful operations against the Soviet enemy.

The MBA who can trace a tortuous money trail through a foreign banking system is coming to be more important than the trench-coated spy who can follow an enemy agent through a back alley overseas. As Fitzgerald tells his young charges: "We're really looking for economists these days."

Similarly, the skills of thousands of people who collect Soviet military communications with satellites and other technical means are becoming obsolete.

After a decade or so when satellites were pre-eminent, it is becoming clearer that they are unable to discern intentions. Aerial surveillance could not penetrate the mosques or teahouses of Tehran to test the depth of opposition to the shah. Nor could it watch Saddam Hussein's inner circle to figure out whether Iraq would use the tanks and troops it had massed on the Kuwaiti border.

"There's no real need for Field Station Berlin, or a variety of listening posts in Germany, which, among other things, listened to Warsaw Pact military communications," said Jeffrey T. Richelson, the author of several books on American intelligence agencies. "Not when there's nothing more to listen to."

CIA soul-searching stems not just from a belief that the world has become safer. There's also the realization that in a world where the postwar enemy has ceased to exist, the CIA and its handful of sister agencies, with their billion-dollar satellites and mountains of classified documents, must somehow remain relevant in the minds of Americans.

THIS SITUATION raises anew a question that Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., asks: Without the Soviet threat, why not just abolish the CIA and let the State Department take over?

For 40 years the threat of nuclear war drove the CIA, along with the other agencies and departments that make up the $30 billion-a-year constellation that is often called "the intelligence community." Included are the National Security Agency, which is responsible for eavesdropping around the world; the Defense Intelligence Agency, the Pentagon's intelligence arm; the National Reconnaissance Office, which manages satellite intelligence; and analytical intelligence pockets tucked away in the State, Commerce, and Treasury Departments.

Few if any CIA officials agree with the notion that the intelligence agencies still need to focus 60 percent of their resources on the Soviet threat. In recent months, the atmosphere has been so cozy that shortly after Robert S. Strauss arrived in Moscow last summer to take up his post as President Bush's ambassador, the KGB handed him detailed wiring diagrams for listening devices in the new United States Embassy. KGB agents wearing visitors' badges are being given tours of the CIA and the FBI.

WILLIAM E. COLBY, a former CIA chief, tells of sitting around a table with the heads of half a dozen Eastern European intelligence services at a planning conference in Bulgaria in November, lecturing them on how to function in a democratic society.

"It knocked me out," Colby recalled. "I told them, 'Well, it is possible to run an intelligence service in a free society. It's a bit of a nuisance,' I said, 'but you can work out relations with Congress and adjust to a bill of rights and an independent judiciary.' "

As the conference unfolded, the Bulgarians agonized over what to do about their old boys schooled in the practice of torture, while others wondered what to do with their potentially explosive files. Colby was so struck by the new mood that he said enthusiastically: "Isn't it wonderful to be allies?"

The overwhelming sense that opponents have become allies has prompted him to tape a message of peace for the Coalition for Democratic Values, an organization of liberal Democrats founded by Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, of Ohio.

"I'm William Colby, and I was head of the CIA," he says in a recent 30-second television commercial. "The job of intelligence is to warn us of dangers to our military. Now the Cold War is over, and the military threat is far less. Now it is time to cut our military spending by 50 percent and invest that money in our schools, health care, and our economy."

THE INTELLIGENCE agencies have so far been only peripheral players in a vital post-Cold-War struggle: the effort to retain American economic primacy among the world's industrial nations.

As the military threat has receded, the belief that American security rests in economic strength has grown. As a result, many analysts are asking: why not give the CIA and its sister agencies the task of making the United States more competitive by spying on foreign corporations and turning over their secrets to their American counterparts?

Ethical objections aside, the critics of such an idea speak of the independence of American companies from government, and say they do not want Washington to become the handmaiden of industry. And as intelligence officers are fond of saying, they may be willing to die for America, but not necessarily for General Motors.

The most the CIA will do, Gates has said, is to scrutinize the trade and financial transactions of foreign governments, particularly those of allies who are helping their industries at America's expense, and to investigate global developments in high-tech areas that affect national security. Together with the FBI, the CIA will also step up efforts to prevent foreign corporations and governments from stealing secrets.

"We know that foreign intelligence services plant moles in our high-tech companies," Gates said during his confirmation hearings last fall. "We know that they rifle briefcases of our businessmen who travel in their countries. We know that they collect information on what we're doing, and I think that the CIA and FBI working together should have a very aggressive program against it."

But, he added: "There is a lot of concern about doing industrial espionage, if you will, and I frankly don't think that U.S. intelligence should be engaged in that."

OTHER OFFICIALS say they cannot become the policemen for American business. The FBI recently reassigned more than 300 of its counterintelligence agents to drug trafficking and domestic problems, reflecting its changing priorities at a time when spying by Eastern European intelligence services has virtually disappeared.

"If it's just a question of an American company getting beat out by another company, I don't think we'd launch a major intelligence investigation," said Wayne Gilbert, assistant director of the FBI's intelligence division. "When a foreign company actually puts agents in a company for a long period of time in a way that directly affects national security, that's when we'll act."

As soon as he was confirmed in November, Gates began defining a new role for the agencies he took

Information agency claims vital mission

By David Binder
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Born 50 years ago during World War II and reforged as an instrument of the Cold War, the United States Information Agency is arguing that even in a world without superpower conflict, its mission remains as important as ever.

The agency's budget has grown even as the Soviet-American struggle waned. The Bush administration's proposed 1993 budget calls for a further increase of 4 percent, to more than $1.1 billion.

Its self-confidence is evident, too, in statements by its managers, who now describe their work as "public diplomacy."

Michael D. Schneider, the USIA's deputy associate director for policy and programs, said that during the Cold War, "there were a lot of issues that were dormant."

"We are doing more in areas that relate to democracy building and privatization of the economy," he said. "In the former Soviet republics and Eastern Europe, they are desperate for expertise on the theory of constitutions, administrative law, setting up open elections, how to deal with environmental issues in a democracy, the role of press, citizen involvement, how to advance credit, how to open a business, how to find out what consumers want."

The new programs include management workshops for professionals in formerly communist countries. Among the most successful is a long-standing visitor program, which brings 2,600 foreign leaders in government, business, science, the press, and labor to this country for about a month each year.

The USIA and its broadcasting arm, the Voice of America, had their origins in the Office of War Information and the Foreign Information Service in 1942.

President Dwight D. Eisenhower issued an executive order in 1953 making the USIA an independent agency. Then as now, some of its senior officials were drawn from the CIA. Then as now, policy guidance on critical foreign-relations questions was provided by the State Department.

A former associate director of the agency, Walter R. Roberts, was asked whether the USIA ever participated in government clandestine operations during the Cold War. He replied: "In the mid-1950s, it subsidized certain book programs and did not immediately say it was USIA money."

He also said that the agency "occasionally in the beginning" provided cover overseas for CIA officers. Except for this, he said, "USIA was always overt."

Two other American outlets, Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty, did have covert origins. They were founded by the CIA, in 1949 and 1951 respectively, to broadcast to the Soviet bloc. In 1971, they were placed under the supervision of Congress.

While the USIA maintained a combative stance during the Cold War, its anti-communist edge was blunted or sharpened depending on the inclinations of the director. During President Richard M. Nixon's first term, for example, Frank Shakespeare, as director, insisted on anti-communist militancy to the point where he came into conflict with Nixon's plans to negotiate with the Soviet Union and China. He was replaced in 1972.

When Ronald Reagan was president, the agency gained visibility and a much bigger budget. Under Charles Z. Wick, a close friend of Reagan, an ideological emphasis was revived, with the USIA barring scores of prominent Americans from its speakers' programs on suspicion of liberal bias.

With no Cold War, flight simulator heads for amusement parks

By Steven Prokesch
N.Y. Times News Service

LONDON — In the days of yore, nations may have beaten their swords into plowshares when war gave way to peace. But in the aftermath of the Cold War, what do you do with exotic semiconductor-crammed military equipment that is not particularly adaptable to tilling fields?

America's GM Hughes Electronics Corp. has come up with one answer: transferring its flight-simulator technology from training pilots to entertaining the public.

Rediffusion Simulation Ltd., a British subsidiary of Hughes, Monday introduced Commander, billed in the company's Pentagonese literature as "the first interactive public entertainment simulator."

Commander is a combination ride and electronic game. A capsule with seats and joysticks for two, along with computer-generated graphics and stereo sound, sits on an accordion-like base, which moves the capsule in response to the pilot's commands. No other product incorporates all these features, Hughes executives say.

The models presented at a news conference in London were programmed to act like fighter-bombers, but others will simulate spaceships, submarines and so forth.

Fighting even a make-believe war is no easy task. Bombing with pinpoint accuracy requires some human talent, even with the aid of a laser-guidance system. The computer-generated graphics of a bombing mission on Commander's screen are familiar to those who saw the replays of American gulf war bombing missions.

How many of Commander's games will be devoted to war vs. adventure will depend on whether consumers' passion for shoot-em-up devices continues to flourish in peacetime.

Given the Commander's size and price — about $76,000 — Hughes is not aiming it at the home market. Potential customers are thought to be museums, amusement parks, arcades and airports.

Commander will first be sold in Europe this spring, and then in the United States and Japan.

For Hughes, entertainment has become serious indeed.

"With the cutbacks in defense spending, a major theme for us at Hughes right now is finding new applications for our technologies," said Jack E. Ottaway, the marketing director of the Hughes Training and Support Systems Group.

Rediffusion, acquired nearly four years ago, is part of that group along with Hughes Training Inc.

Hughes, a General Motors Corp. subsidiary, also is contending with a drop in orders for training simulators from airlines, which have been sharply cutting their planned purchases of jetliners.

Military customers spent $220 million, and airlines $200 million, on Hughes flight simulators last year. Sales from entertainment products totaled $15 million; the group's goal is to raise that to $75 million to $100 million within five years.

About 70 percent of Hughes' sales come from military-related businesses, a figure it hopes to reduce to 50 percent by 1997.

In the first nine months of 1991, GM Hughes Electronic's earnings plunged 49.8 percent, to $266.3 million, on revenues of $5.81 billion. Two reasons that earnings fell were the decline in the flight simulator business and a charge for a cost-reduction program at Rediffusion.

Hughes announced in November that it was working on 150 projects for developing new commercial businesses or transferring technology to GM. These include the electronics and battery for the Impact, the electric car GM is developing; simulation trainers for factories; air traffic control systems; in-flight entertainment and telecommunications systems for airline passengers; stereo products; satellite television, and private satellite communications networks for business.

CIA: Spy agency, a child of the Cold War, looks for new missions

over, arguing that they were still preoccupied, by habit and organization, with a Soviet military machine that no longer existed. If he did not make major changes and specify budget cuts, he said told intelligence officials on Dec. 4, Congress would do it for him.

AS THESE AGENCIES adjust to the new global realities, they are organizing around three loosely connected central concepts: the disintegration of the Soviet Union and the instability this has spawned; the spread of weapons of mass destruction, including a new risk that there are some in the former Soviet Union who would peddle their weapons and their expertise around the world; and the continued existence of totalitarian governments.

President Bush's National Security Directive No. 29, issued in November, dealt with intelligence requirements until the year 2005. It spoke of an urgent need for "a top-to-bottom examination of the mission, role and priorities of the intelligence community."

Gates hopes to devise a plan for restructuring by the end of March. Because the intelligence agencies' budget will surely shrink by billions of dollars, he intends to take the same approach that a wedding caterer might: he'll offer a range of menus for different budgets.

Many intelligence managers resist change, though. At the FBI, Gilbert says he has detected no marked decrease in spying on the United States by the new Russian version of the KGB. That assessment is shared by the CIA.

Arguing that the major espionage cases of the last 15 years have involved people selling secrets for money, Gilbert says the FBI must remain vigilant against those who continue to sell secrets, even if Moscow's Embassy is no longer the primary bazaar.

"We don't want to rush out and have those warm, fuzzy feelings and then suddenly find there are new systems established to infiltrate our services," he said in an interview. "I'm not throwing cold water on the idea that we are one, big peaceful world. I just have to be cautious."

THE CIA, for its part, has taken some tentative steps to reorganize. Last summer, it cleared a wing of one of its buildings to make space for a Non-Proliferation Center that is now staffed by almost 100 experts. At the same time, the agency has disbanded its Soviet insurgency branch and its Soviet disinformation unit. In the last two years, it has cut its Soviet foreign policy staff by two-thirds and its weapons analysis staff by 25 percent. But agency officials are reluctant to make changes that cannot be reversed.

"It's not an on-and-off switch," said George Kolt, director of the Office of Soviet Analysis, lately renamed the Office of Slavic and Eurasian Analysis. "You can't say to someone, 'You do research on Uzbekistan because people are interested in it,' then tomorrow say, 'Go do research in Latvia.' You have to train people. You can't switch people out of the blue."

Critics argue that neither the CIA nor the State Department can cope with the deluge of newly available material since the Soviet collapse. They say that the government is woefully lacking in language skills at a time of need — when, for instance, Ukraine's Foreign Ministry has switched its news conferences from Russian to Ukrainian, and when a recent oil deal between Azerbaijan and Iran was announced in Azerbaijani.

"Before last September, you could follow the non-Russian republics by reading only Russian, because the Russian press was at least as official as the non-Russian press," said Paul Goble, until recently the State Department's leading expert on Soviet nationalities and now at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. "Now the opposite is true, and you're in big trouble if you can't read the local language."

ASKED WHETHER it was difficult to find people to translate newspapers from the various republics, an intelligence official remarked: "Translate them? We don't even get them!"

Gates, during his confirmation hearings, acknowledged that the agency had been so focused on the inner workings of the Kremlin that it had to rely on travelers for information about the republics.

But reorganization and language training will not provide the intelligence agencies with a program that can compare with its grand, global, cloak-and-dagger mission of the Cold War. They are taking on new issues, without the consensus that existed before. Proponents are calling them essential, while detractors say they are make-work — "organizational maintenance," as Moynihan puts it.

"In many ways, the situation today is similar to 1947, when the CIA was first created," said Adm. Bobby Ray Inman, former deputy director of central intelligence. "The essence of intelligence wasn't yet us-vs.-them, but was driven by challenges of the moment: How do you locate scarce resources, or how do you govern a liberated country? You needed encyclopedic knowledge about the world because you didn't know where next challenge would come from."

WHOEVER IS proved right, it is difficult to imagine how analysts or covert operators can get as excited about the environmental impact of Brazil's shrinking rain forest or the dumping of toxic waste in Eastern Europe as they did about the life-and-death struggle between East and West.

Still, senior agency officials insist that the CIA will have no problem finding a mission.

"If ever there was a non-problem, this is it," said John L. Helgerson, the CIA's deputy director for intelligence, in an interview.

"So many people are asking us so many things — on China, on Yugoslavia, on North Korea. Proliferation — it's a growth industry at the moment like no other. We could put everyone in the agency in proliferation and narcotics, and we still wouldn't solve the problems."

Coast Guard returns refugees to Haiti

First returnees say they were fleeing poverty, not persecution.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The United States began its repatriation program for thousands of Haitian refugees Monday, turning over 381 people to Haitian authorities with $15 in their pockets and an uncertain future.

U.N. officials and human rights advocates warned that many of the 12,000 boat people in U.S. custody face death or intimidation at the hands of Haitian security forces if they return to their towns and villages.

Officials at the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, where nearly all the Haitians are being held, said those who returned on two Coast Guard cutters Monday did so voluntarily, while others did not want to go back.

Dozens in the first group said they had risked their lives fleeing in rickety boats to get away from Haiti's poverty and not political persecution.

The United States has denied asylum to most intercepted Haitians, saying they were not political refugees as U.S. law requires. The Supreme Court opened the way Friday for their repatriation by overturning a federal judge's order that had blocked their return for months.

The repatriation caused an outcry among some politicians and advocates of the immigrants who feel that these people would be exposed to political reprisal on their return.

"Had we been any other country — white or Spanish — we would have had a chance," Florence Comeau of the Haitian Affairs Committee in New York said Monday. "The Cubans can come in any time. The Cubans are people, the Haitians are people, but one is light-skinned and the other is not."

In Washington, White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said the repatriation was being monitored by U.S. Embassy officers as well as representatives of the Organization of American States and the Red Cross.

"We have received no credible reports of reprisals against any individual Haitians who attempted to reach the United States, including those who are repatriated after the coup" that toppled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide on Sept. 30, Fitzwater said.

The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees issued a statement at its Geneva headquarters criticizing the repatriation, warning that many returnees could "be exposed to danger."

"Continuing reports of serious human rights abuses and violence by security forces since the overthrow of the democratically elected government of Haiti are cause for great concern," it said.

In London, the human rights group Amnesty International said the United States was responsible for safeguarding the Haitian boat people.

"We don't know that everyone is going to be arrested, tortured or killed, but it is certainly a risk," said spokeswoman Anita Tiessen. Amnesty reported last month that more than 1,500 people had been killed in Haiti since the coup in a systematic campaign of political repression.

The refugees, mostly young men, but also a few women and small children, came ashore clutching small bundles of clothes and other items.

The Red Cross reported no serious illness among the boat people, although many said they had lost weight and were exhausted.

They stood quietly in line and followed instructions without complaint as they were met by port police, immigration officials, U.S. diplomats and a couple dozen foreign correspondents. They answered roll call and were passed through immigration after being identified and fingerprinted.

Argentina to open long-secret files on Nazis

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — After decades of secrecy, the government on Monday displayed some of its files on Nazis who fled to Argentina after World War II and said all would be made public soon.

"This is a debt Argentina is paying to humanity," President Carlos Menem told a news conference attended by Cabinet ministers, foreign ambassadors, Nazi hunters and reporters from around the world.

Experts said the documents might shed light on some of history's dark corners, particularly on how former top Nazis vanished from Europe as the Third Reich collapsed and showed up months and years later in this South American nation.

The Nazis came presumably because Argentina's president then, Juan Domingo Peron, admired Adolf Hitler and his Fascist ally, Benito Mussolini of Italy.

The files now are locked away by the Federal Police, Immigration Department and other agencies. Menem's decree removed them from protection by an official secrets act and ordered them collected by the National Archives.

They are to be turned over within 30 days, and will be opened for public inspection as soon as they are put on microfilm.

Adolf Eichmann, the architect of Hitler's attempted extermination of Europe's Jews, found refuge here. So did Josef Mengele, the "Angel of Death" at the Auschwitz concentration camp. There have rumors of sightings of Martin Bormann, Hitler's top deputy who many experts think died in Berlin in 1945.

"There are all types of stories about (escapes) with the cooperation of ... the Vatican and the International Red Cross," said Shimon Samuels of the Simon Wiesenthal Center for Holocaust studies. "I think it's very important to prove what happened."

Eichmann was kidnapped by Israeli commandos in 1960, taken to Jerusalem for trial, convicted and hanged. Mengele's family say he drowned in Brazil in 1979.

Josef Schwammberger, a commandant at labor camps in Poland, was extradited in 1990 and now is on trial in Stuttgart, Germany, for war crimes.

Schwammberger, now 79, lived here under his own name. So did Mengele, who obtained a driver's license and an identity card from police, the magazine Somos reported over the weekend, after apparently having had at least limited access to the Federal Police files.

Aides said Menem was moved to act by requests from the World Jewish Congress and unfavorable publicity in newspapers for not doing so.

"Today, we are putting at the disposition of the entire world something that for years Argentina has guarded," Interior Minister Jose Luis Manzano said. "It's not as much as has been speculated, nor as little as we would have liked."

Federal Police files on display at the news conference included folders with faded news clips, photographs and typed statements about Mengele, Bormann and others.

It's unclear how many Nazis found shelter here. Some reports put the number in the thousands, but Manzano, the interior minister, said it was "much, much less."

■ Boat people battle each other; 17 die

HONG KONG — Vietnamese boat people battled with homemade spears and axes during a Lunar New Year festival Monday, leaving 17 dead and 119 injured in the worst outbreak of violence in the British colony's camps, police said.

Police said about 300 boat people, apparently from rival gangs of former North and South Vietnamese, fought late Monday in the Shek Kong Detention Center, home to 8,900 boat people. During the riot, someone set fire to a hut.

Fireman doused the fire 90 minutes later and pulled 17 charred bodies from the structure, police said. About 400 riot police, firing tear gas, brought the camp under control. One police officer was slightly injured.

The British colonial government has recently begun to force Vietnamese to their Communist homeland, and tensions have grown between those willing to return home and those who dream of a life in the West.

■ Hope fades for more avalance survivors

GORMEC, Turkey — Three days after an avalanche obliterated a third of this remote mountain hamlet and killed scores of people, small clusters of soldiers and villagers spread out across an icy hillside on Monday and shoveled wearily through the rubble, some with their bare hands, as hopes faded of finding any more survivors.

The avalanche, which officials at the scene said killed at least 50people and left 30 missing among the 370 residents,buried a small military outpost and 13 of the 40 homes.

Gormec, which lies on a steep mountain slope, was apparently the worst hit of several remote villages in the Kurdish area of southeastern Turkey that was struck by avalanches early Saturday. At least 178 people were killed, according to Reuters, including 106 troops posted in the region to fight separatist Kurdish guerrillas.

■ Official: Russians face more hard times

MOSCOW — Russians, reeling from a tripling of prices, a sinking currency and still empty store shelves, are unlikely to emerge from the tough times for another two years, the country's top economic official said Monday.

Assessing the first month of Russia's market reforms, Deputy Prime Minister Yegor Gaidar told a news conference that he believed the rise in prices has slowed and he saw no sign of rapid, uncontrolled inflation.

But he said industrial output continues to fall, including production of oil and other raw materials that are important foreign currency earners. Oil production could drop 10 percent this year compared to 1991, Gaidar warned.

Russia has become a "poor society of poor people," he said, adding that serious difficulties lie ahead. But he said he was committed to reforms intended to create a free market out of the ruins of the former Soviet planned economy.

■ Israeli warns of war, leaves politics

JERUSALEM — Ezer Weizman, the former Israeli defense minister and air force commander who became an ardent advocate of peace with the Arabs, announced his retirement from politics on Monday, warning that the government was leading the country toward war.

An architect of the 1978 Camp David peace accords with Egypt and an outspoken supporter of talks with the Palestine Liberation Organization, Weizman said he was leaving public life because he could no longer influence national policy.

Speaking before Parliament, Weizman, who is 67, said he was resigning as a member of Parliament from the Labor Party.

"After serious consideration I have decided to resign my post in the Knesset and to leave political life," he said. "I leave concerned for the fate and image of the state of Israel in the years ahead. I am troubled by the grave feeling that the path we are taking does not lead to peace, but to an impasse behind which is the horror of war."

■ Kuwait women mobilize, campaign for vote

KUWAIT CITY — During the Iraqi occupation, Kuwaiti women were gunned down in protest marches and smuggled money and weapons for the resistance.

A year later, they're fighting another campaign — for the right to vote.

"Before the war, Kuwaiti women really didn't know what they were capable of," said Sundus Hussein, a computer programmer. She is an organizer of the campaign.

During Iraq's 1990 invasion, petroleum engineer Sara Akbar helped organize about a dozen Kuwait Oil Co. employees who kept enough oil pumping to maintain the machinery and keep the emirate in electricity.

"I know men who wouldn't step out of their houses for the whole seven months" of the occupation, she said, pulling sharply at the white scarf veiling her hair according to Islamic custom. "I knew then that women should have more share of the work ... Everybody should have a chance."

Kuwait's seven opposition groups have been sympathetic and most have added women's rights to their platforms. For the first time, secular and Islamic women's groups are working together toward winning the vote.

Trade official: U.S. won't push for oil reforms

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The top U.S. trade negotiator said Monday that Washington would not pressure Mexico to open its powerful state-owned oil monopoly under a proposed North American free trade accord.

U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills said the United States "will respect the constitutional limitations" of Mexico, which closes the oil industry to foreign investment or exploration.

"We would like as much liberalization in the sectors as possible, just as Mexico would," said Hills, who arrived in Mexico on Saturday.

Hills spoke Monday with President Salinas de Gortari on efforts to draft a free trade pact covering Mexico, the United States and Canada.

The accord would create a market of 360 million consumers with an estimated output of $5.6 trillion.

On Sunday, Rep. Jim Kolbe, R-Ariz., said the United States wanted Mexico to open up its energy and petroleum industries. It would take a constitutional amendment to break the monolopy of Petroleos Mexicanos S.A., or Pemex, and such a move is not considered likely.

Kolbe said if the free trade pact is not signed by September or October, the accord would be delayed until 1993 because of the presidential election.

Habash scandal forces Red Cross chief to resign

PARIS (AP) — The director of the French Red Cross resigned under fire Monday for her role in bringing Palestinian guerrilla leader George Habash to France. But Foreign Minister Roland Dumas rejected calls to quit.

"Why should I resign?" Dumas said after questioning by lawmakers.

Dumas and President Francois Mitterrand have said they had no advance word that Habash was coming to France. He arrived Wednesday for medical treatment after an apparent stroke and left Saturday.

France's top anti-terrorism investigator wanted to question Habash, but authorities allowed the Palestinian to leave for Tunisia because he was not named on any arrest warrant despite terrorist attacks by his followers.

The controversy prompted the dismissal of five officials and fueled criticism of Mitterrand's administration.

Primary debates show improvement

The Democratic hopefuls had their hands full of visual aids again on their third televised primary debate Friday night. Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa, who held up a dollar bill in the first debate, flourished magazine articles supposedly critical of Arkansas's governor, Bill Clinton. Paul Tsongas, the former Massachusetts senator, again held up his economic plan, now adding last Sunday's health-care editorial from The New York Times.

The displays risk looking cute, but things have come a long way since a candidate named Ned Coll held up a rubber rat in a 1972 New Hampshire debate. Visual aids and all, the debates this year are the best, and getting steadily better.

Robert MacNeil and Jim Lehrer, the PBS anchors, let the candidates discipline the lengths of answers, thus sparing themselves irritating duty as time police. Like the moderators of the first two debates, they asked broad, sensible questions and wouldn't settle for evasive answers.

Freed from ritualistic requirements, the candidates gave the clearest picture of themselves yet. The five were harder than ever on President Bush ("All hat and no cowboy," said Sen. Bob Kerrey of Nebraska) and more respectful of one another. But they displayed clear differences.

Tsongas focuses mainly on the economy, but on that subject he seems the most coherent and consistent candidate; he's not running, he says, to be Santa Claus. Clinton again showed himself best grounded in difficult policy issues like education. That made it the more surprising when he fumbled for a health-care policy.

That subject brought Kerrey to life; he has a well-developed heatlh-care plan; otherwise he seems fixated on consolidating Cabinet agencies. Harkin continues to heap traditional Democratic scorn on "trickle-down" Reaganomics.

Jerry Brown, the former California governor, again showed himself to be lightning quick, sometimes demonstrating impressively thought-out views, at other times merely pouncing, as in the closing seconds when he revived scandal-sheet charges against Clinton. Moderator Lehrer intervened alertly to give Clinton time to answer. Fair, informative: the presidential debates, props and all, are improving and political television matures before our eyes.

Radar guns should raise citizen concern

The Midland Reporter-Telegram reported that an insurance company had donated a laser gun to the Texas Department of Public Safety (TDPS). Have its safety, repairability and reliability yet been established? Do you want to be blinded by a police laser gun? The old radar guns are just now being removed from patrol cars because of carcinogenic effects on the police. What about honest citizens?

The new unit ". . . is more reliable . . ." The old radar units clocked ". . . trees moving at 70 mph," since the old radar guns are unreliable and inaccurate, the honorable thing is for the police and the insurance companies to refund fines and increased premiums based on an unreliable and faulty radar system (particularly in town). Will judges that suppressed evidence of radar fallibility come up with any refunds? Don't hold your breath.

The only reason for an insurance company to donate a laser "speed gun" is to get an excuse to raise premiums. A colored light on a car could give false readings to the laser director. Do you have colored lights on, or in your car?

If the cities and states really need the fines, they should increase taxes so that innocent people could deduct the amount from their federal tax.

Airport 'head tax' article shocks reader

I was shocked by one of the lead articles in yesterday's (Jan. 29th) newspaper about the city leaders moving to adopt the "head tax" for users of the airport. The article goes on to state it "may not be necessary just to keep the airport funds balanced without the addition of tax money." During the airport expansion arguments we were told that this fee would cover the cost of the expansion with the insinuation at least that tax increases would not be necessary.

I am now confused, but it looks to me as if the "city fathers" have found a legal way to get more money from the paying public and the philosophy seems to be "let's get the money and then we can figure out what to do with it."

I hope that I am wrong.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Feb. 4, the 35th day of 1992. There are 331 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 4, 1789, electors unanimously chose George Washington to be the first president of the United States (however, the results of the election were not tabulated until April 6).

On this date:

In 1783, Britain declared a formal cessation of hostilities with its former colony, the United States of America.

CHARLEY REESE

Israel becomes less inclined toward peace

At least Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir made it easy for President Bush to turn down the request for the full $10 billion loan guarantee. And the president ought to have turned it down flat instead of playing political compromise games.

Reese

Shamir and his associates in the Likud government are making it crystal clear they intend to keep up the process of de facto annexation of the West Bank and Gaza and disposing the Palestinians.

"God gave us this land," Shamir said recently in a speech, "and we shall rule it forever and ever."

American Jews who have traditionally feared a right-wing religious government in the U.S. are having their fears justified — in Israel. When religion and government mix, statecraft, diplomacy and common sense often fly right out the window.

For a variety of reasons, Arabs, including the Palestinians, are really ready to make peace with Israel. A bad deal from Fate, however, has put in power an Israeli government that prefers expanded borders to peace, as if a few kilometers of ground in this age of missiles will provide more security than peaceful relations with neighboring countries.

Well, there is nothing we can do about that. Israel is a sovereign country and has the right to make its own decisions. On the other hand, we, too, are a sovereign country and have the right to choose not to finance Israeli expansionism and human rights abuses.

The U.S. has been extraordinarily generous. It has provided $47.5 billion in aid to Israel — all but $2 billion of that since 1975. Unlike other countries, Israel gets all its money at once and often invests it in U.S. treasury bonds to earn interest from the taxpayers with the taxpayers' money. Unlike other countries, it is allowed to spend a large hunk of its military aid money in its own country.

At present, in fact, there's a big scandal going — an Israeli Air Force general was caught skimming millions of U.S. military aid. According to the Wall Street Journal, it's a spreading scandal that could involve American firms, American citizens, and money being diverted into Israeli covert action schemes.

At any rate, the unfortunate irony is that American aid seems to have made the present government less inclined toward peace rather than more so. With Iraq in shambles, Israel — the Middle East's lone nuclear power — can crush Syria or any combination of Arab countries. Shamir no doubt feels he doesn't have to make any compromises. What can the Palestinians do about it?

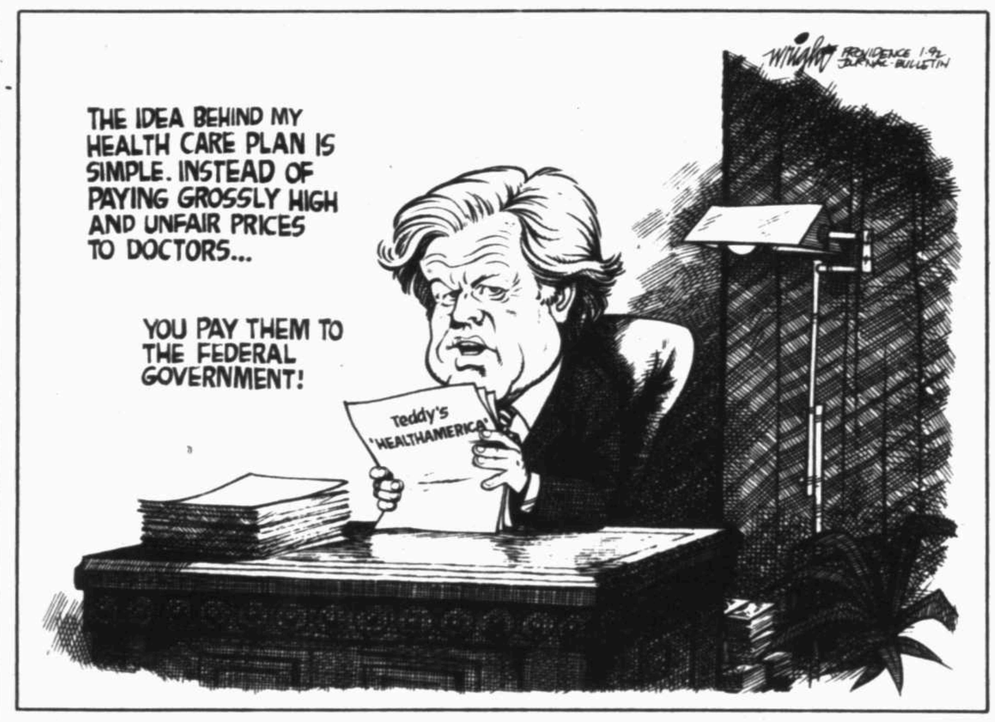

Shamir sounds remarkably like the arrogant British colonialists whom he hated so intensely. Indeed, the Arab world may not be in a position to win a war with Israel but that doesn't mean they can't make life miserable for a state bordering on bankruptcy. Shamir will soon discover that nuclear weapons have limited utility indeed.

Many of the Palestinians on the West Bank and Gaza — now in its 25th year of Israeli military occupation — are so frustrated they would just as soon die as continue under occupation, completely at the mercy of the Israelis. That's always a dangerous situation.

Any fair-minded person can understand their frustration. They are not citizens of any country. They are taxed but they have no voice in any government. Israelis say they are non-Israelis, but their land is Israel's. They are searched and humiliated; their olive trees bulldozed; their land confiscated; their homes searched and sometimes blown up or sealed; they can be deported and are; their electricity and water are cut off to harass them and they are shot and beaten with virtually no recourse.

We as Americans simply cannot condone the Likud government's treatment of Palestinians. Such abuse can't be rationalized away. Shamir obviously cares more about his ideology than he does about the welfare of Jews in the Soviet Union. So be it. It's his choice.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Yeltsin prepares for giant step for mankind

WASHINGTON — President Bush's national security aides passed up much of the hype surrounding the State of the Union address to concentrate on proposals for nuclear-weapons reductions at his first summit meeting with the Russian president, Boris Yeltsin, at Camp David this weekend.

Safire

Early this week, the Russian leader slipped out of Moscow for 48 hours; The Associated Press promptly reported "rumors about his health and about a drinking problem."

It turns out that Yeltsin's disappearance was on the most serious official business. In preparation for the summit, he visited the Black Sea Fleet, whose ownership is in dispute, to demonstrate to nervous Americans his control over the nuclear arsenal of the former Soviet Union.

Yeltsin is getting ready for the next giant leap for mankind: the destruction of nuclear arms at a pace undreamed of by negotiators.

Some of the recent moves have been only newspaper talk. With much fanfare, the Russians announced their huge land-based missiles "were no longer targeted on American cities." Big deal; an arms expert tells me the missiles in silos could be re-targeted in less than 10 seconds. More significant would be the return to port of sea-based nuclear missiles.

The real reductions in prospect are historic: in essence, turning the clock of the arms race back to the early 70s, when the MIRV'ing began. Today's restrictive motto is "one missile, one warhead."

Yeltsin has figured out a way to buy off the Red Army: Pay and house the troops by slashing arms spending. We provide Yeltsinites cover by reducing our own nukes.

Bush called for "funding a program to protect our country from limited nuclear missile attack. . . . too many people in too many countries have access to nuclear arms."

This call for SDI, the much-derided "Star Wars," was hooted at by Democrats who are still zigging while the nuclear threat has zagged. In the past, they opposed a space shield because they were sure it would not stop an all-out attack and it would be destabilizing.

But now the threat is from a limited attack — a missile or two, capable of killing only 10 million Americans — and the space shield would help stabilize the lowering balance between the U.S. and Russia.

Yeltsin knows we will move ahead on anti-missile defenses, because of all the treaties we recently asked his Commonwealth to reaffirm, the ABM treaty was not one. We want that Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty to die quietly.

To counter our unilateral work on SDI, he said in his own lengthy State of the Nuclear Non-Union on Wednesday: "Russia confirms its commitment to the ABM treaty."

That was to restrain us from going it alone. Then he added: "We're prepared to design jointly, produce jointly and use jointly a global security system to replace the SDI system."

They all laughed at Ronald Reagan a decade ago, suggesting that Americans could share technology with Soviets in building a common shield. Gorbachev resisted, breaking up the Reykjavik summit; and our own technocrats did not want anybody to see the secrets of our Skonkworks.

In his own version of a Trollope ploy, Yeltsin is responding to the old Reagan proposal. By buying into our nuclear shield in space; by assigning brains to it who might otherwise be drained, and by renaming it to save face, Yeltsin seeks more U.S. cover to accelerate his abandonment of the arms race.

SDI-nik would kill a terrorist or accidental launch, protecting millions. Seize the moment, Mr. Bush.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Rising Sun gets a rise out of Uncle Sam

Hello, America. This is Japanese Speaker of House, Yoshio Sakurauchi, coming to you. In World War II you listened to Tokyo Rose telling you about your weaknesses. Today , you have Tokyo Yoshio.

Grizzard

Listen closely, please, on your Japanese-made radio.

First of all, you can stick it where Rising Sun doesn't shine. Big Bad United States. What a laugh?

We surprised you at Pearl Harbor with our superior military intelligence and tactics. And we would have defeated you in World War II had you played fair and not dropped atomic weapons on our cities.

Bad, bad mistake. It is payback time. We are economic giant and you are like homeless snake with barely a pit to hiss in.

Your workers are lazy and unproductive. A third of them are illiterate and cannot, as I have heard it said, put a boot in a mule's behind with instructions written on the heel.

Your products are inferior. See the U.S.A. in your Chevrolet. Another mistake. Chevrolet breaks down on New Jersey Turnpike. Toyotas whizz by and laugh at you.

You send your president to us to beg for help with what is left of U.S. economy. He passes out at dinner. Can't stomach wonderful food of Japanese. Another piece of raw carp, Mr. President? Oh, you fall on floor. So sorry.

Your country is getting weaker by day. You are inferior to Japanese. We are, how you say, "workaholics;" you are "loafaholics."

In United States you sit on your itbabooshidasro but still get paid much money. In Japan you would be "88 and out of gate." Japanese workers get job done. Work hard. Take no coffee break. Don't ask foreman for day off to attend wife's funeral. Too busy. Too much to do, so little time.

You, America, are now subcontractors to Japanese. You buy our automobiles. You buy our televisions. If we make snowballs, you buy them in Florida.

We buy nothing from you. American products are joke. How many Americans does it take to install carburetor in Buick?

Ten. One to raise hood. Nine to find somebody who can read instructions to them. Takes two weeks. One Japanese worker can install carburetor in four minutes and put on fender at same time with other hand.

Your president wants us to buy American auto parts. We say, "OK, Mr. President. No problem."

President gets sick and goes home. Then we say, "Hah! Just kidding and good luck in New Hampshire primary."

Old Japanese trick. First, we say we will. Then, we say we won't. Very confusing to foreigners. We have big laugh.

Hear about American blond with pet zebra? She called it spot.

I am regular riot.

We buy your golf courses. Soon we own them all and not allow you to play. So go bowling, Uncle Sam. We buy your tall buildings, your land and your movies studios. We buy it all.

One morning you drive to work in one of our automobiles, if not taking another day off because you are lazy and have no ambition, and all you see belongs to us.

Burger King is Burger Emperor. K mart is Fujimart. Bonzai blue light shoppers!

Theatres show only Japanese films — "Godzilla Eats Lazy Americans;" "Godzilla Tries to Teach Stupid Americans to Read;" "Godzilla Goes on Urban Renewal Binge, Tramples Cleveland."

If Americans are smart, will all fall on swords. First, President Bush. Second, Lee Iacocca.

Tune in tomorrow when Tokyo Yoshio will speak on your second rate education programs, your crime rate and how to run a successful mass prostitution program.

Have nice day.

Noriega was ally in drug fight, defense asserts

MIAMI (NYT) — Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega was a loyal and dependable ally, friend and informer whose aid to the United States in its war against drugs and subversion in the Western Hemisphere won the praise of American officials, his lawyers told jurors Monday.

The narrowly focused initial statement opened the defense case in the trial of the deposed Panamanian leader after an unusual six-and-a-half-week delay.

Jon May, one of the defense lawyers, said the level and quality of the cooperation Noriega gave the United States was "unprecedented among the leaders of Central and South American nations."

The Panamanian leader was "in the forefront" of efforts to intercept shipments of drugs and money, May said, even violating Panamanian laws in his eagerness to help the United States.

"At the end of this case, you may wonder why General Noriega was ever indicted," May told the jury of nine women and three men. Indicted four years ago this week on 10 counts of cocaine trafficking, racketeering, and money laundering, Noriega went on trial just after Labor Day and faces up to 140 years in prison if convicted of all charges.

The defense's opening statement came after an unexpected six-and-a-half-week recess that was declared after Judge William M. Hoeveler had open-heart surgery.

The delay allowed Noriega's lawyers to strengthen their case by going to Panama to interview former Noriega associates who offered depositions in his behalf.

The trial had originally been set to resume Jan. 6 after a brief Christmas break, but was postponed to allow Hoeveler to recover. The trial will be held in half-day sessions until the judge regains full strength, Hoeveler said Monday.

During his opening statement, May did not argue that Noriega had allowed drug trafficking in his country at the express order of the United States, as the defense had hinted in proceedings before the trial.

He also appears to have abandoned the theory, advanced during the four months of the prosecution case, that Noriega and his American allies were both duped by a guns-for-drugs pipeline operated by the Medellin cartel and the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

"There will not be any testimony as to that issue," May said.

"At the very same time General Noriega was alleged to be in bed with the Medellin cartel," May said, the forces he commanded were raiding cartel laboratories, seizing chemicals destined for those labs,

■ Judge gives nymphomaniac probation

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — A judge Monday sentenced a self-proclaimed nymphomaniac to three years' probation and her husband to 364 days in jail for running a bordello in their home.

Broward Circuit Judge John Frusciante gave Jeffrey Willets, a former Broward County sheriff's deputy, the maximum term under a plea agreement reached last month. Frusciante also sentenced Willets to five years' probation and 15 months of house arrest.

The judge ordered Kathy Willets to perform 400 hours of community service.

The Willetses pleaded guilty to multiple prostitution charges and illegally videotaping customers having sex at their suburban Tamarac home.

Police said Mrs. Willets had sex in her bedroom with as many as eight men a day while her husband hid in the closet, taking notes or videotaping the encounters.

Frusciante admonished the Willetses for their pursuit of money in connection with the 9-month-old case.

■ Research narrows cause of Tower crash

WASHINGTON — A federal investigation into the commuter plane crash that killed former Sen. John G. Tower, R-Tex., and 22 others in Brunswick, Ga., last spring has focused on the apparent failure of a hydraulic gear in the plane's propeller control system.

In flight tests last fall in Brazil, where the Atlantic Southeast Airlines Embraer 120 Brasilia involved in the crash was built, a similarly worn gear caused one of the plane's propellers to lose its pitch and thrust, according to test documents released Monday by the National Transportation Safety Board.

When the circumstances were duplicated on an Embraer flight simulator, the aircraft rolled into a left-hand bank from which test pilots could not recover, the documents said.

The ASA plane was approaching the Brunswick Glynco Jetport on the sunny afternoon of April 5, after an uneventful flight from Atlanta, when, according to witnesses, it abruptly went into a steep left bank and plunged into a dense forest.

The NTSB is expected to meet in the next three months and decide on the probable cause of the April 5 crash, which also took the lives of Tower's daughter Marian, 35, and shuttle astronaut Manley Lanier "Sonny" Carter, 43.

■ Russian general seeks prefab housing deal

WASHINGTON — A military team from the Russian-led Commonwealth of Independent States plans to arrive Wednesday in Arizona to negotiate the purchase of up to 50,000 prefabricated housing units for Russian officers made homeless by the shrinking of the old Soviet empire.

This unusual "peace dividend" for the Sun Belt is the brainchild of a Mesa, Ariz., businessman who figured a way the Russians could pay for prefabs worth hundreds of millions of dollars even when the ruble is almost worthless.

The Russians have come prepared to barter some of Russia's immense timber supplies, along with scrap metal, in exchange for the Arizona-made prefabricated houses, the chief of the delegation, Air Force Maj. Gen. Nikolai Stolyarov, announced at a press conference here Monday.

Stolyarov said the former Soviet armed forces urgently needs at least 100,000 homes for officers being ordered back inside Russia from East Germany and the newly independent Baltic nations.

■ Reporters face subpoenas in Thomas case

WASHINGTON — The two reporters who disclosed Professor Anita Hill's complaints of sexual harassment against Clarence Thomas were notified Monday that they would be subpoenaed to appear before a special counsel investigating who may have disclosed the information.

The reports of the accusations prompted an extraordinary new round of Senate confirmation hearings for Thomas, who eventually won approval to serve on Supreme Court.

Lawyers for the reporters, Nina Totenberg of National Public Radio and Timothy Phelps of Newsday, said their clients would not answer any questions that might help the special counsel identify their sources, and they asserted that the Senate was heading for an unnecessary constitutional confrontation.

Theodore B. Olson, representing Newsday, and Phelps, said the special counsel, Peter E. Fleming of New York, had subpoenaed his client to appear and answer questions on Feb. 13. Olson said Fleming also issued a subpoena for Newsday to produce documents relating to the article.

"Neither Newsday nor Mr. Phelps will reveal undisclosed sources or unpublished information," Olson said, citing the First Amendment's guarantee of a free press.

Audit reveals post office cocaine sales

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. Postal Service audit accuses a clerk at the House Post Office of selling drugs in U.S. Capitol buildings and says his supervisor was a major customer.

The audit, obtained by The Associated Press, says the clerk and two other postal clerks admitted taking a combined $28,585 from postal funds under their control.

The U.S. attorneys' office in Washington is investigating the findings, as well as possible embezzlement by a fourth clerk, according to House sources who asked not to be identified.

The four clerks have been fired, House officials said. The audit did not cover activities by the fourth clerk.

Reports on problems at the post office were first disclosed by The Washington Times.

The postal investigators said a clerk with a personal drug problem admitted "he would generally bring at least five $25 packages of cocaine to the post office to sell," both to employees and to others.

The inspection report quoted the clerk as saying his only steady customer was his supervisor. The report said the supervisor usually bought $100 worth of cocaine "at least once a week and more often if she had the money."

The audit said the drug-selling clerk had a $13,997 shortage. The other two clerks had shortages of $10,303 and $4,285.

Scientists discover record levels of ozone-destroying chemicals

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Record levels of chemicals that destroy the Earth's protective ozone layer have been measured above the Northern Hemisphere, a NASA-led team of scientists reported Monday.

They said their preliminary findings raised the possibility of an ozone hole developing this winter over populated parts of the United States, Canada and Europe, exposing people and plant life to higher levels of harmful ultraviolet radiation from the sun.

Using a new space satellite and high-altitude airplane flights, researchers said they had found exceptionally high levels of chlorine monoxide, a dominant form of chlorine that destroys ozone, over parts of Europe, Asia and North America. They said the area subject to increased ultraviolet radiation extended as far south as New England, Britain, France and all of Scandinavia.

Scientists fear that depletion of atmospheric ozone as a result of human pollution will result in an increase of skin cancer, eye cataracts, impaired immune systems, as well as disruptions in agriculture worldwide.

The findings of the six-month multi-agency study were announced in a briefing at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's headquarters here.

Although the chemical stage is set for an Arctic ozone hole similar to the one that appears over Antarctica each winter, scientists at the briefing said they could not predict precisely when it might happen. But they said they expected a dramatic decrease in protective ozone in the north to occur in this decade.

"We believe now that the probability of significant ozone loss taking place in any given year is higher than we believed before," said Dr. James G. Anderson, a Harvard University chemistry professor who was involved in the studies.

In addition, Anderson said, the studies found that chemicals that help deactivate ozone-depleting chlorine and bromine were at significantly reduced levels in the stratosphere above the North Pole. Anderson said the rate at which the atmosphere was able to recover from ozone depletion was reduced because of those low levels of helpful nitrogen oxides, which he likened to part of the stratosphere's "immune system" against illness.

"The immune system of the atmosphere is weaker than it has been before," he said,

The layer of ozone from 9 to 30 miles above the Earth is believed to be under attack by natural and manmade chemicals that drift up into the stratosphere. Destructive chlorine from chlorofluorocarbons, chemicals used in refrigerants and some aerosol sprays, and bromines, compounds from halons used in fire suppressants, are believed to be the chief culprits.

FBI doubles force fighting medical-care fraud cases

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI will double the number of agents investigating medical-care fraud, which the government estimates at $50 billion a year, officials said Monday.

At the same time, prosecutors charged officers of a defunct Denver insurance company with defrauding customers in 14 states. The Justice Department said that Cabot Day Insurance Co. had become "an engine of fraud" for its executives, siphoning off $3.75 million.

The Justice Department's announcement appeared calculated to help President Bush get out the message that his administration is concerned about the rising costs of health care.

An internal Justice Department report on medical-care fraud said its release Monday would be timed with the unsealing of charges against Cabot Day.

The FBI said it was creating a health-care fraud unit to consolidate longstanding efforts to prosecute doctors, clinics, medical supply companies and druggists who bilk the government with phony claims.

The General Accounting Office estimates that health-care fraud is a $50 billion-a-year industry.

In addition to the new FBI unit, which will add 50 agents to the current 46, the Justice Department's criminal division was setting up a health-care fraud unit to coordinate prosecutions nationwide.

"Civil and criminal fraud in the health-care industry costs government, private insurers and American citizens billions of dollars each year and poses a threat to the qualify of the nation's health-care system by unscrupulous health-care providers," Attorney General William P. Barr said in a statement.

In Philadelphia, prosecutors said officials of Cabot Day had collected $5.72 million in premiums from businesses but paid only $895,000 in claims, leaving a net illicit gain of $3.75 million.

U.S. Attorney Michael Baylson said federal officials began investigating after Pennsylvania consumers complained to the state's Insurance Department.

Insurance regulators then discovered, officials said, that the company and its subsidiaries were not licensed by any state or by the federal government.

In all, 568 employer groups and 11,820 employees and their dependents were affected. The scheme left 3,500 workers facing unpaid health care bills totalling more than $5.74 million when the company closed its doors in 1990, officials said.

Two women firefighters refuse promotions

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Two female firefighters have rejected promotions through the city's affirmative-action program, saying they want to be recognized for merit, not special treatment.

Denise Kyle and Elisa Nissen were hired under the program, but said they draw a distinction between the use of affirmative action in hiring and in promotion.

"Affirmative action plays an important role in hiring," Ms. Kyle said. "But once they get on the job, everyone has the same opportunity to advance."

"Why should my family take precedence over the families of guys ahead of me?" Ms. Nissen asked.

Both women had applied to become firetruck drivers. Each would have received a 5 percent raise, from $35,090 to $36,848 annually, the Omaha World-Herald reported Sunday. But they told Chief Don Brunken they did not want promotions through affirmative action.

The two were hired five years ago through the program, which is intended to offset the effects of past discrimination against women and members of minority groups. They were among the five women in the first Omaha firefighter recruit class to include females. There are 10 women and 518 men in the department.

The two women have received both praise and criticism from colleagues.

Mark Lloyd, firefighters' union president, said Ms. Kyle and Ms. Nissen were the first city employees eligible for affirmative action "to stand up and say 'I don't need special treatment.'"

"From their point of view, they want to say, 'I got promoted on merit,'" he said.

But Fire Department employee Linda Wells said their position helps perpetuate hostility that she said women and members of minority groups often sense from affirmative-action opponents.

Mrs. Wells is the only woman in the department who has been promoted beyond the rank of firefighter. She is a paramedic, a job she obtained without help from affirmative action.

Haitians decry refugees' forced return as racist

NEW YORK (AP) — Haitian immigrants on Monday angrily denounced the forced repatriation of their countrymen as a racist betrayal of the American principles of freedom and justice they came here for.

"Had we been any other country — white or Spanish — we would have had a chance," said Florence Comeau, a spokeswoman for the Haitian Affairs Committee in the Brooklyn borough, where most of New York's 300,000 Haitians live.

A few dozen Haitians demonstrated in Times Square on Monday to protest the forced return of refugees. And Mayor David Dinkins urged President Bush to "rescind this inhumane and irrational policy, which is inconsistent with what this country stands for."

"These people think America is a country of freedom, and every day they are talking about Statue of Liberty," said Jean-Marc Joseph, a worker at the Haitian Information and Documentation Center, which helps immigrants with paperwork for work permits and other legal matters.

Despite reports of army repression in Haiti, the Bush administration denied the Haitians political asylum, arguing they were fleeing poverty, not political persecution. The U.S. Supreme Court agreed last week, paving the way for their forced return.

Amnesty International and the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees criticized the move.

"A lot of these people who go back are going to be hurt," said Edward Lewis, director of the Haitian Community Center in Brooklyn. "Most of them are political refugees. But Haiti is a black republic, so they are not given the same treatment" as whites.

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Brooklyn, The Rev. Thomas V. Daily, also condemned it.

"I am anguished by the forced repatriation of the Haitians who sought asylum in our country," he said in a statement. "It was not for frivolous reasons that they fled their homeland. They left in desperation because of intolerable violence and oppression."

Neighbors fight for political lives in senatorial race

■ New redistricting plan pits Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, and Sen. Temple Dickson, D-Sweetwater, against each other.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Bill Sims and Temple Dickson, two Democratic West Texas senators, used to be friendly neighbors, but now they are fighting each other for their political lives.

Because of the new redistricting plan, the two are contending for the same senatorial district that sprawls over a hefty portion of West Texas.

The Democratic primary winner will face the winner of the Republican Party primary, where neither candidate is a resident of the district.

Because of the protracted redistricting battle, a federal judge who imposed his own plan waived residency requirements for candidates in this year's election.

The clash between Sims of San Angelo and Dickson of Sweetwater represents a battle between two contrasting ideologies in the Democratic Party.

Sims, longtime executive secretary of the Texas Sheep & Goat Raisers Association, is a conservative allied with business interests. Dickson, a plaintiff's attorney, will enjoy the backing of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association.

The clash between Sims of San Angelo and Dickson of Sweetwater represents a battle between two contrasting ideologies in the Democratic Party.

The men sit on opposites sides of the fence on issues such as workers' compensation, and product liability reforms sought by big business interests.

"The people in this area have really been hit hard by workers' compensation," Sims said. "I've supported the reform. He's (Dickson) a plaintiff's lawyer, and we all know that. That's the major difference."

Dickson responds by calling Sims "the ultimate insider who apparently equates conservatism with doing what the rich and powerful believe is correct."

The winner will face either state Rep. Troy Fraser of Big Spring or Jim Deats of Boerne. Neither candidate lives in the district. A third Republican, former Kerrville Mayor Charles Johnson lives in the district, but withdrew his candidacy. His name, however, will appear on the ballot.

Karl Rove, a Republican political consultant who is helping Fraser, said he believes Dickson would be a tougher general election opponent than Sims.

INTRODUCING ...

Investigator deciphers mysteries of evidence

■ As part of a civilian team, Karen Hare analyzes crime-scene evidence for the police department.

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff Writer

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Karen Hare poses behind an MP-4, a $5,000 machine that allows investigators to study fingerprints that can't be physically lifted from a crime scene.

She nearly always can be found snooping around the scenes of some of Midland's most gruesome crimes. She has a knack for it, and she gets paid for doing so.

Twenty-eight-year-old Karen Hare earns her livelihood gathering and analyzing crime-scene evidence for the Midland Police Department.

Ms. Hare has worked for the department's identification division for just three years but already has learned to accept the grim realities often encountered on the job.

"You get the gamut here," Ms. Hare said. "Hangings, carbon monoxide poisoning, slashings and shootings. You learn not to take it home with you. But you have to have a strong stomach. It smells worse than it looks.

"I have found myself looking at a dead person and thinking how sad it is, but then I think about how tired I am and how I can't wait to go to sleep," she said. "You can't let yourself become too involved. But in a way, I don't think there's anyone who really gets truly use to it.

"There are certain trouble spots." she said. "Suicides are particularly sad, for example. We try to be extra sympathetic with who we come across because often times it's a family member who discovered the body."

Ms. Hare believes her work is made easier because of the team effort established with the other three employees in the division — Vance Oliver, David Clark and supervisor Bill Knight. All four of them are civilians.

Ms. Hare, a graduate of Midland Lee High School, got a degree in art history from Stephen F. Austin University in 1984. She then taught art in high school and junior high school.

She returned to Midland and applied for her current job after spotting an advertisement in the paper. Since then, she has received over 600 hours of specialized training in areas as diverse as assault and death training and fingerprinting.

Today she is often asked to teach others some of the intricacies of her job — a task she considers one of the perks of the profession.

"Few people get the opportunity to do something they like," Ms. Hare said. "Training others can be a lot of fun, and when they send you off for training they kind of expect you to teach others what you've learned."

Recently, the identification division received two machines for advanced crime-scene analysis.

The Polilight machine, valued at more than $19,000, can detect body fluids, fibers and trace evidence.

"It's like a laser but it has the entire light spectrum, which allows for so much more to be done," Ms. Hare said. "This thing can detect semen in the sheets, vaginal fluids, blood and saliva."

The other new acquisition, the MP-4 allows for more freedom with latent fingerprinting, including fingerprints that can't be physically removed from a surface. The MP-4 costs approximately $5,000, she said.

"The (city) administration has really taken care of us," Ms. Hare said. "We are able to do a lot more here in the last two years. Before that, we didn't have anything to work with. The new equipment has really taken us to new levels."

In addition, a forensic lab for the division should be in operation within a few months.

A former crime novel enthusiast, Ms. Hare said she never expected to find herself doing similar work.

"A lot of times we'll be called to testify in court. That is mostly in the case of penitentiary packets, which is the punishment phase of someone who has been found guilty of a crime. We'll come in and testify about whether they had a previous record through our fingerprinting checks."

Ms. Hare and her co-workers work a 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. shift with one person always on-call.

"We'll do it all on the scene," she said. "We'll photograph the scene — blood spatters and all. And if there is a body, we'll photograph it. But we try not to disturb the scene. (Although) there have been times when we've taken entire walls from porches for evidence."

Once the evidence is collected, the unit will typically confer with investigators to determine what evidence needs to be shipped to a more specialized lab.

After three years, Ms. Hare seems to have adapted well to her job.

"It may be strange, but it really helps to have a sense of humor. You might go a little crazy if you took it all too seriously."

Judge orders Spain to jail for 7 years

■ Attorney Michael Jeffery Spain requests to serve his time in Tennessee.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Odessa defense attorney Michael Jeffery Spain, who pleaded guilty to scheming to have his ex-wife killed, was sentenced Monday by U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton to seven years imprisonment.

"I'd rather be sentenced by you than got away with taking someone's life," a calm, neatly groomed and apologetic Spain told the judge.

Spain, 28, who was arrested in August for plotting to have Jami Leverette Spain, 26, killed for $15,000, was ordered to be on three years supervised release following his imprisonment.

Before sentencing, Spain, who could have received up to a 10-year sentence and a $250,000 fine, said any punishment would pale next to not seeing his baby daughter again. Spain alluded to measures being taken to prevent visitation rights.

Bunton said he would try to fulfill a request by Spain to be sent to a federal camp in Millington, Tenn., or a prison in Memphis, Tenn. Spain has family in Tennessee, according to defense attorney Thomas Hirsch.

After sentencing, U.S. Assistant Attorney Tom Beery, who described the case as "very tragic," said the punishment imposed was adequate in light of Spain's assisting the government in other cases.

Spain's crime — essentially, traveling in interstate commerce with the intent that the murder be committed for pay — was detailed at a detention hearing in August.

Revealed at that hearing was an intricate murder-for-hire plan. According to testimony, police recorded Spain's meetings with a man posing as a hit man. This man had informed authorities of the plot, testimony revealed.

Police, who simulated the death of Ms. Spain, videotaped the payoff in a Las Vegas, Nev., hotel room, testimony indicated.

In October, Spain's attorneys filed their intention to "raise the defense of entrapment and outrageous governmental conduct."

In December, Spain gave up his right to a trial and pleaded guilty to the charge.

School to honor dead teacher

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Remember your seventh grade teacher?

Some educators at Goddard Junior High School hope the memory of one seventh grade teacher goes beyond her students.

Her name was Velma "Val" Butler and she taught social studies to at-risk students and was a former sponsor of the school's National Junior Honor Society. To the shock and dismay of students and co-workers, Mrs. Butler, 46, died in mid-January.

Now there is an effort to rename the school's chapter of the honor society after her.

"Just in memory of her because she was a very special teacher," said eighth-grade teacher Karen Miller, who spearheaded the tribute to Mrs. Butler.

Midland Independent School District Superintendent Joseph Baressi has approved the name change, said Karen Wentworth, principal at Goddard.

A petition has been made to the honor society's national office for final approval, Ms. Wentworth said.

Ms. Miller, who has been with MISD since 1974, said she anticipates the name change to occur before the honor society's induction on April 2.

Ms. Miller recalled an honor society meeting when she announced the move to recognize Mrs. Butler. Sean, Mrs. Butler's eighth-grade son and a member of the honor society, was present.

"The hardest thing I've had to do was stand up and read the letter (petition) in front of him one week after she died," Ms. Miller said.

In addition to the name change, a college scholarship has been created in Mrs. Butler's name.

The scholarship will be available to former students who were enrolled in the at-risk program, and then to former need-based Goddard students.

Contributions to the scholarship fund can be sent to the Val Butler Scholarship Fund, Goddard Junior High School, 2500 Haynes, Midland, 79705.

High-speed chase spans 4 counties

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff Writer

A 34-year-old man led law enforcement officials on a high-speed chase through four counties early Monday morning before one officer shot two of the vehicle's tires, Department of Public Safety officials said.

David William Reed was charged with attempted aggravated assault on a peace officer and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle. He is in custody at the Ector County jail. Additional charges were expected to be filed today, jail officials said.

At 1:51 a.m. employees of a Town and Country convenience store in Howard County reported a theft of gasoline. Officers began pursuit of Reed on westbound Interstate Highway 20 at the Midland-Ector county line.

The vehicle crossed the median and began traveling east in the westbound lane. Two miles later he again crossed the median and eluded a roadblock set up by police. He then began driving east in the westbound lane and narrowly missed a head-on collision with a tractor-trailer, DPS officials said.

Reed then exited Interstate 20 and began traveling north on Loop 338 in Ector County at speeds exceeding 110 miles per hour. After turning south on U.S. 385, one trooper attempted to go around the vehicle in an effort to slow it down, but Reed attempted to ram the officer's car, DPS officials said.

He was finally stopped at 3:20 a.m. in Crane County, one mile south of the Ector-Crane county line when an officer fired four rounds at the two right side tires of Reed's car.

Chamber celebrates Black History month

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff Writer

In recognition of Black History month, the Midland Black Chamber of Entreprenuers has a full schedule of events planned for February.

On Sunday, the organization will host an open house to celebrate its sixth birthday. The event will be from 3 to 6 p.m. at the chamber's office at 2707 N. Big Spring St. Birthday cake will be served and various door prizes will be given away.

Currently, chamber leaders are making room in their offices for 12 computers to be used in various capacities, including a new adult training program intended to help adults become more computer literate.

On Valentine's Day at 7:30 p.m. the chamber will show a videotaped ballet honoring Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. The ballet was written by Gordon Park and also includes footage on Rosa Parks, the woman who's refusal to give her bus seat to a white man has become a part of history.

Statewide charter members of the Texas Association of Black Chambers of Commerce will gather at the Midland Hilton on February 22 for a trade show and a full day of lectures relevant to black chamber affairs.

Registration starts at 8:30 a.m. and the trade show officially begins at 9 a.m.

The entire community is invited to attend the lectures and luncheon. Tickets for the luncheon are priced at $10. Reservations for the luncheon can be made by calling 682-2864.

A performance by the Preservation Hall Jazz Band from New Orleans is set for Feb. 22 at 8:45 p.m. If tickets to the concert are purchased by February 10, they will be available for $35 a pair. For those interested in attending the concert and a reception in conjunction with the performance, tickets are $45 a pair. To receive the discounted rate, tickets must be purchased in pairs. They are available at Regency Cleaners, J & J Beauty Supply and Midland College.

Tickets also will be available on the night of the performance. Reserved seats are priced at $20 each and $24.50 with the reception.

DEATHS

Jean Wilson

Services for Jean (Mrs. Robert H.) Wilson of Midland have been set for today at 3 p.m. at Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. Bob Porterfield, pastor of West Kentucky Baptist Church, officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Wilson died Sunday at her residence.

Russian immigrant works to build new life in Austin

By Enrique J. Gonzales
Associated Press writer

AUSTIN — Albert Achkinadze may have only one regret in coming to America — it's hard on this side of the world to find a button accordion that can handle Russian classical compositions.

Otherwise, Achkinadze relishes his new life in Austin, and he's even dreaming up ways to capitalize on his table tennis prowess. He had long tried to leave the Soviet Union because he felt he was being persecuted for his beliefs. But officials kept denying him a visa to leave.

"I knew there was an absolutely civilized world where you could be treated as a human being," said Achkinadze, 44, with the help of a translator. "The more I read, the more I realized this is the country where I have to live."

The doors finally opened last fall, in the wake of the failed governmental coup. Achkinadze left his home in Simferopol, Crimea, and arrived in this country in September. He was among 179,000 Soviet Jews who were allowed last year to emigrate to Israel and other countries — 22 times the number permitted to leave in 1986, according to the National Conference on Soviet Jewry. The coup also opened the doors for a Jewish family of four who arrived in Austin Wednesday night from Kishinev, Moldavia, officials said.

Achkinadze had first applied for a visa to leave in 1979, while living in the Crimea, a Russian-speaking section of the Ukraine. The bold decision triggered years of troubles.

"First of all, being a Jew, I felt the impossibility of improving my skills in my profession" in the USSR, Achkinadze said. "I always felt a pressure of routine anti-Semitism. I felt anti-Semitism in daily life."

He lost his job as a music teacher at a junior college. He was humiliated publicly in the local newspaper and on television.

"I was going to get married," he said. "The parents of my fiancee put pressure to end the union. I couldn't think about a family living in oppression.

"Many close friends turned their backs to me. I couldn't find a job anywhere. I couldn't earn enough money to eat."

Some acquaintances and relatives helped him eke out an existence, but his life in the Soviet Union was shattered. For those 12 years, he dreamed of what it would be like to live in the United States, and he passed time by listening to jazz.

With the help of the New York-based Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society, Achkinadze came to Austin. The society put him in touch with a network of Jewish groups, Jewish Family Services in Austin.

Don Wilson, the family services director, said the society found him an apartment and provided him with food, clothing, furniture and four months' rent.

"They look after me like a small kid, really," Achkinadze said.

By chance, Achkinadze's passion for table tennis led almost immediately to a job. While playing table tennis at the University of Texas, he met Kenneth Beauchamp, an independent tile contractor. Beauchamp, befriending Achkinadze, got him a job fitting tiles.

In November, Achkinadze competed in the Houston Open, finishing second. He and Beauchamp are members of a local table tennis club and plan to sponsor a tournament in March. The two hope to parlay their pingpong proficiency into a school to teach table tennis and archery.

Meanwhile, Achkinadze hopes to find other work, but he wants an "intellectual job." He is considering going back to school, possibly at the University of Texas.

Achkinadze also has been trying to learn English as quickly as possible and find a sophisticated Russian accordion, with buttons instead of keys. Such an instrument, he says, would allow him to play classical music and jazz.

"I don't like oompah music," he said. He favors Ella Fitzgerald, Al Jarreau and Nat "King" Cole.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Police charge man in burglary case

Staff Report

A 34-year-old Hispanic male was charged with burglary of a building Monday after police observed him removing property from a storage unit at 1101 N. L St., police said.

Valentin Rodriguez, 412 E. Hicks St., was arrested at his apartment early Monday morning after police obtained a felony warrant. The burglary occurred Sunday night at about 11:30 p.m., police said.

Rodriguez was released after posting $7,500 bond, jail officials said.

Police responded to a storage unit burglary call and upon arrival observed Rodriguez placing items from the unit into his 1985 Ford F-150 Pickup. He then drove to his apartment, police said.

A 34-year-old Hispanic female who was with Rodriguez has not been charged, police said.

The estimated value of the items taken is $1,200, police said.

The storage facility is being rented to 29-year-old James Carr, 1011 W. County Road, police said.

Accident injures man

ODESSA — One person sustained minor injuries and another fled the scene in a one-car accident Monday night at Ninth and Grant streets in Odessa, police said.

An unidentified 17-year-old Hispanic male was treated and released at Medical Center Hospital following the accident. Another Hispanic male fled the scene on foot when officers arrived, police said.

According to police, several suspicious items were discovered in the trunk of the vehicle. No other information was available by late Monday night.

KOCV-TV receives $25,000 grant

Staff Report

ODESSA — KOCV-TV (Channel 36/Cable 13) recently received a $25,000 grant from the Meadows Foundation of Dallas for the upgrade of the Public Broadcasting System station's broadcast equipment.

The Meadows monies will help fund a $310,100 equipment improvement project approved by the National Telecommunication and Information Administration. Under the terms of the NTIA grant, KOCV-TV must raise $155,050 in non-federal donations by January of 1993 in order to receive the matching amount.

The station now has a total of $62,000 toward its goal. Other funding includes $32,000 from KOCV members and $5,000 from the Davidson Family Charitable Foundation of Midland.

"We appreciate the backing of the Meadows Foundation in our effort to provide quality television to the Permian Basin," said Dr. Philip Speegle, president of Odessa College, through which KOCV is licensed. "The Meadows Foundation has long been supportive of the Permian Basin, and we consider this reaffirmation of that support."

EPA chooses Louisiana for soil-waste site

DALLAS (AP) — Federal environmental officials on Monday announced they have chosen a north Louisiana waste dump to deposit lead-contaminated soil from west Dallas.

The disposal contract has not been signed, but the Environmental Protection Agency expects to have trucks shipping tainted soil within a few days to a commercial industrial landfill located near Monroe, La., said EPA regional administrator B.J. Wynne.

Wynne said that between 30,000 and 40,000 cubic yards of soil contaminated at a lower level will be taken to the landfill in about 1,818 truckloads.

Texas drug budget will not suffer, official says

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — A proposed $36 million cut in federal aid to state and local law officials who are patrolling the nation's worst drug trafficking zones would be more than offset by increased funding requests for President Bush's $12.7 billion drug strategy, an administration official said Monday.

Bruce Carnes, chief budget officer of the Office of National Drug Control Policy, responded to allegations by Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, that Bush's proposed cuts in federal aid to High Intensity Drug Trafficking Areas, including the U.S.-Mexico border, are evidence that the president is not serious about fighting drugs.

"The president talks a lot about giving increased federal drug interdiction assistance to the border areas, and then this is what we get — a $36 million cut in a program which serves the border," Bustamante said in a statement released by his spokesman, Ben Harrison.

Harrison said Bustamante was on a trade mission to Mexico City on Monday with other members of Congress and was not available for further comment.

Carnes said the administration, in the president's budget proposal last Wednesday, failed to include the $36 million now targeted to designated High Intensity Drug Trafficking Areas because of a philosophical difference with Congress. In addition to the Southwest border, the government has designated Miami, Houston, New York and Los Angeles as high-intensity areas eligible for extra federal money to enforce drug laws.

On one side of the philosophical dispute to which Carnes referred is the Republican administration, which is hostile to direct funding of state and local government activity, including law enforcement. On the other side are Democrats in Congress who see direct aid to law enforcement as a major weapon in the war on drugs.

"Congress sees the program differently from the administration," Carnes said, explaining that last year, despite the fact that the Bush administration failed to include the $36 million in its request, Congress authorized it nevertheless. "I am quite confident Congress will do so again this year," Carnes said.

If Congress does include the $36 million or another amount for the fiscal year which starts Oct. 1, the money would go to all high-intensity drug zones, not just those in Texas.

According to Carnes, overall drug-fighting funding for the Southwest border would rise from $536 million to $575 million this year under the president's proposal, an increase of 8 percent. Federal funding for all state and local anti-drug programs across the nation — everything from law enforcement to drug education to rehabilitation — will rise from $3.3 billion to $3.5 billion, an increase of 6 percent if Congress approves the president's request.

Carnes said this funding increase would more than offset the reduction Bush is asking for in the money targeted to high-intensity drug zones. He emphasized that while the administration is willing to put money into joint federal, state and local law enforcement task forces, it is loathe to hand money directly to local police forces.

But John Curtis, an analyst with the Texas Office of State-Federal Relations in Washington, said he believes the proposed cuts are real and are not just a matter of budget-line juggling. He predicted that "the $36 million is not going to combat high intensity drug trafficking, as the program is set up now."

Also, Curtis said, Bush's proposal would slash the anti-drug abuse block grant program by $10 million, reducing it to $496 million from the $507 million states now are receiving from the federal government. That money goes to the states in a block grant then is funneled to local law enforcement officials.

The block grant program, administered by the Justice Department's Office of Justice Programs, gives states anti-drug money to spend as they see fit.

Bush budget slashes military construction fund

The State

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon wants to slash almost by half the money allocated for military construction in Texas in fiscal 1993, lawmakers said Monday.

The Bush administration is asking Congress for $10.2 billion in military construction funds, $122.8 million of which would be earmarked for Texas, according to a budget request released Monday.

The submission is part of the $286 billion Pentagon budget request, which was sent to Congress last week. Details of the construction request normally are released several days later.

"The $122 million request for Texas projects is barely half what Congress approved last year," Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said. "Only high priority items appear to have been included."

Texas is receiving $238 million in military construction monies for fiscal 1992.

"This request reflects the hard realities of today's defense budget," said Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio. "South Texas did fairly well — there's a lot of money in the proposed budget for San Antonio bases as well as for Laughlin AFB in Del Rio."

Fort Hood is the biggest Texas winner, with the administration seeking $33 million for barracks upgrades at the Central Texas Army post. New barracks and renovation of existing housing is needed, since Fort Hood will be gaining 13,000 soldiers this year as part of a military restructuring.

Although the $33 million is $13.7 million less than what was received this year, Rep. Chet Edwards said he was not disappointed with the funding for his district and the state as a whole.

Despite the fact several defense programs with Texas ties are at risk, especially the B-2 bomber, "Defense is still a billion dollar business to Texas," he said.

"That will continue in the fiscal '93 year," said Edwards, who is a member of the House Armed Services Committee.

The San Antonio area also is a big gainer under the Pentagon's request, with $50.5 million of the $122 million request going to area bases, including $27 million for the new hospital under construction at Brooke Army Medical Center.

The Pentagon funding request also includes $21.3 million for chemical waste and fire training facilities, underground fuel storage tanks, renovation of the wastewater collection system and an industrial waste pretreatment facility at Kelly Air Force Base.

Bentsen, D-Texas, said he was "especially pleased" by the funding for Brooke Army Medical Center and Kelly AFB.

"All of these Texas projects help to inoculate the bases against possible closure in the future," he said.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, also was pleased by the funding for Brooke and Kelly.

"We've got a good military construction budget, and in terms of military construction we will have money to complete the Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio," he said.

Edwards said he expects action within the next three weeks on the defense package.

"The next three weeks will be a critical time," he said.

Richards sees no conflict in lottery bid, aide says

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards sees no conflict in the in-law relationship between a state-hired consultant and an executive with the company the state wants to handle the first Texas lottery game, a spokesman said Monday.

"As far as she's concerned, there hasn't been anything that's been shown to her yet that is a conflict of interest," Richards' press secretary Bill Cryer said.

Richards has seen a report by state lottery officials on the controversy, Cryer said.

"They just outlined their position on what happened in the contract. Everything went along as it should have been," he said.

Richards is in Washington D.C. attending the National Governors Association conference.

Meanwhile, two state representatives plan to meet with Texas Lottery Director Nora Linares to review the chain of events that led to the state's selection of Scientific Games Inc. to print the instant, scratch-off tickets for the July startup of the lottery.

John Pittman, who was hired last November by State Comptroller John Sharp to a $1.3 million consultant contract to help the state develop the lottery, also was involved in composing the specifications for the contract won by Scientific Games. That contract will be worth several million dollars.

Pittman is the son-in-law of Jim Culver, vice president for marketing and a shareholder for Scientific Games. Pittman's wife, who serves as secretary-treasurer for Pittman's consulting company, is Culver's daughter.

"The accusations of conflict of interest ... didn't surface until way late in the game," Cryer said. "Everybody that was involved in the contract letting, all the firms and everybody else, knew exactly who this man was."

State Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston, said the relationship is a "nightmare" for the start of the lottery because it will undermine public confidence in the integrity of the game.

Wilson, sponsor of lottery legislation, has set up a meeting with Ms. Linares. State Rep. John Corona, R-Dallas, a lottery opponent, will also join the meeting.

Texas Republican Party Chairman Fred Meyer, and House Republican Caucus Chairman Tom Craddick of Midland have called on Sharp to urge Ms. Linares to resign.

"This entire matter certainly calls into question the validity of your pledge to run the cleanest lottery in the country," Meyer and Craddick said in a letter to Sharp.

Steve Levine, a spokesman for Sharp, said the comptroller would not ask Ms. Linares to resign.

"Mr. Meyer continually opposed the lottery, as have Republican members of the Legislature. John Sharp and the comptrollers office, on the other hand, will do their best to put in place a state lottery the people of Texas can be proud of," Levine said.

Corona said he wants to talk with Ms. Linares before he comments on whether she should resign.

Ms. Linares has said that state officials knew about the relationship between Pittman and Culver, after a losing bidder for the consulting contract brought it to the state's attention.

She said Scientific Games had the best bid, and that safeguards were in place to prevent Pittman from having any influence into the selection of a contract winner.

But Corona said, "This is an outrageous conflict of interest. My fear is that what we are looking at now is the early stages of scandal and political scheming."

ABA leaders oppose doctor-assisted suicide

DALLAS (AP) — Leaders of the American Bar Association on Monday overwhelmingly opposed state laws that would let doctors help terminally ill patients die.

The ABA's policy-making House of Delegates rejected a proposal to encourage enactment of state laws "permitting voluntary aid in dying to terminally ill persons who request such aid in ending their own lives."

"Once doctors have a license to kill, it becomes a duty to kill," said John Pickering, a lawyer from Washington. "There is a bright line between refusing medical treatment ... and intentional killing."

Similar proposals have been opposed by the American Medical Association.

Sally Determan, a lawyer from Washington, said patients weakened and exhausted by terminal disease are vulnerable to the urgings of family members confronted by "rapidly diminishing inheritances" and hospital costs not covered by health-care plans.

She said a patient's choice should not be "contaminated by coercion."

Television journalist Betty Rollin, whose book "Last Wish" told about aiding her mother's death, replied emotionally to the objections.

"You have to rescue these people," she said. "This is an emergency, not a theoretical situation. If Mr. Pickering saw my mail, he would change his mind."

Bert Tigerman, a Beverly Hills, Calif., lawyer who introduced the proposal, said state laws offer no relief to terminally ill people but instead have "condemned them to slow, painful and degrading deaths."

Tigerman recounted the suicide of his own brother-in-law, who shot himself after learning he had cancerous brain tumors, and that of a client.

"These things should not have to happen," he said.

After a voice vote made the outcome apparent, a show of hands appeared to indicate about 50 votes in the 518-member House favoring the proposal.

The rejected proposal would have included these safeguards:

- Aid given in dying should end a life "swiftly, painlessly and with dignity."
- Such aid be provided only by doctors and "without undue influence or duress by relatives, friends or caretakers of the patient or physician."
- Requests for aid in dying be voluntary and be made in writing.
- The determination of terminal illness should be made by two independent doctors.

Dr. Nancy Dickey, representing the American Medical Association, said such legislation would tell older Americans they have a duty to die.

William Zeiter, a Philadelphia lawyer representing the ABA's section on science and technology, opposed the proposal but said his group would continue work on a better resolution.

Approval of the proposal would have led to lobbying efforts in state legislatures by the 370,000-lawyer group.

In other business, the ABA delegates voted unanimously to take a more active role in fighting sexual harassment in the legal profession.

They approved a resolution to "educate the profession about the scope and harm of sexual harassment." The proposal also pledged the ABA will work to "ensure that all association staff work in a professional atmosphere that ... prohibits discriminatory practices, including sexual harassment."

Cory Amron, a Washington lawyer, told the delegates such action is needed because sexual harassment continues in all work environments.

Officials seek donations to keep Texas' oldest office building open

AUSTIN (AP) — Renovation of the 135-year-old General Land Office building should be finished this spring, but the historic structure may stand vacant because the Legislature didn't appropriate any money to start a museum there.

So state preservation officials are seeking private donations to operate Texas' oldest office building until taxpayer funding becomes available, the Austin American-Statesman reported Monday.

"We're talking about a big-time challenge," said Dealey Herndon, executive director of the State Preservation Board. "Even though the Legislature didn't approve our appropriation request, we're trying to work out ways to get private funding. And I'm optimistic."

Original plans called for the restored two-story building, at the southeast edge of the Capitol grounds, to house a Texas History Gallery featuring exhibits about the state's public lands.

With reconstruction under way, Preservation Board officials requested $1.5 million in the 1992-93 budget to open the museum. But when the Legislature approved the state budget last July, no money was included for the museum.

The General Land Office building, built in 1857, was originally constructed to house the state's land deeds. In the years since, it has become a part of Texas lore. Author O. Henry worked there and featured it in one of his short stories.

When the restoration started two years ago, two groups that had operated in the building — Daughters of the Republic of Texas and United Daughters of the Confederacy — were both moved out.

1992 Catoico court

Staff Report

The 63rd coronation of the 1992 Catoico Court from Midland High School was presented 7 p.m. Saturday in the school's auditorium. Lisa Evans and Charles (Chuck) Dawson were masters of ceremonies. Crownbearer was Christopher Meek, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Meek. The event was followed by a dance at Midland Center with music provided by "Borderline."

Members of this year's court are:

■ Queen Ty Debra Tucker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Tucker. She is a member of National Honor Society; vice president of student council; member of Academic Decathlon; recipient of Optimist Club Outstanding Youth Award; president of Spanish Club; member of D.A.R.E., D-FY-IT, Senior Girls, school musical, Young Life and volleyball team; academic letter winner; member of track and basketball teams; soccer secretary; member of Youth in Government: listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students; and member of Fellowship of Christian Athletes. She plans to major in interdisciplinary education at Texas A&M University. She was escorted by Todd Daniel Tucker, son of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Tucker.

■ Jennifer Lynn Black, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Black, is a member of National Honor Society; listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students; was sophomore Homecoming Princess; Football Sweetheart; Homecoming Queen; Symphony Belle; member of Canopy Teen Board, All Stars and Senior Girls; was junior varsity cheerleader two years; and varsity cheerleader. She plans to attend the University of Texas or the University of Houston, and major in hotel and restaurant management. She was escorted by Steven Michael Thomsen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Thomsen.

■ Crystal Beth Borland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mike Borland, is a member of Canopy Teen Board; junior varsity cheerleader two years; varsity cheerleader, member of Senior Girls; listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students; member of All Stars and National Honor Society; junior Howdy Week Favorite and Class Favorite; and member of Homecoming Court. She wants to major in psychology at Texas A&M. Her escort was Jeffrey Thomas McIlvain, son of Mr. and Mrs. Tom McIlvain.

■ Cheryl Waite Campbell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard W. Campbell, is listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students; a member of National Honor Society and Gazebo Teen Board; winner of Academic Achievement Award; Symphony Belle; recipient of Outstanding Artistic Achievement Award; member of Teen Court; Top Dawg in English; Outstanding Student in Typing; vice president of her junior class; member of student council and Senior Girls; and Children Church teacher. # Texas men restore vintage plane

By Morgan Montalvo

McGREGOR (AP) — Quick-witted aviation enthusiasts might say pilots Mike McMains and Bill Phillips are "Championing" a cause by restoring a vintage lightplane.

To the Harris Creek next-door neighbors and partners, however, the reasons for returning any aircraft to airworthiness are "plane" enough:

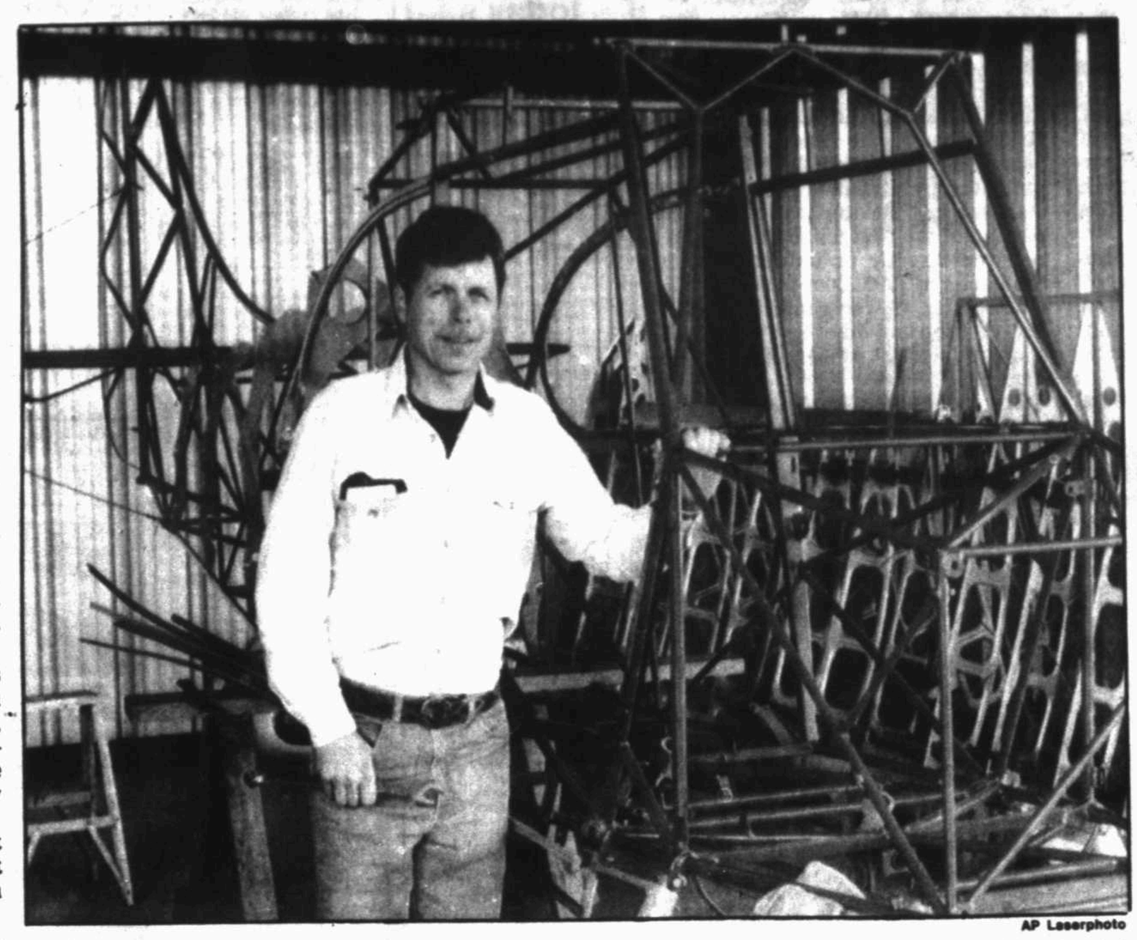

"They're a lot of fun," McMains said of small aircraft in general, and specifically, the 1946 Aeronca Model 7DC Champion he and Phillips are reassembling at McGregor Municipal Airport.

"In a little airplane like that, you can stick your elbow out the window like you would in a car and enjoy the ride," said McMains, a United Airlines pilot.

Aeronca's "7" series of two-seat, fabric-skinned lightplanes are affectionately known in aviation circles as "Champs."

"We don't count the hours we've put into it," said Phillips, a process engineer at M&M Mars, Inc. who weekdays devotes a couple of hours after work to the Champ, along with the customary weekend shifts.

"By the time we finish it, it wouldn't surprise me to find out we each have 800 to 1,000 hours in it."

AP Laserphoto

American Airlines pilot Mike McMains stands by the frame of the 1946 Aeronca 7DC "Champ" that he and a neighbor are restoring out of love, and for the fun of it, in McGregor. The two men work mainly on weekends and say that by the time they are finished, they will have about 1,000 hours each in the restoration of the aircraft.

McMAINS SAID he wants to have the plane flying by mid-summer, "but I'd really hate to make an estimate because it would be wrong."

A former crop duster and corporate test pilot, McMains has logged more than 9,000 flight-hours, including combat over Southeast Asia, in at least 35 types of military and civilian aircraft. Each Thursday, he commutes from his home west of Waco — via Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport — to work as a Chicago-based airline captain.

Monday through Wednesday, however, the 46-year-old aviator trades the whiz-bang gadgetry of a Boeing 737 cockpit for a few simple hand tools.

McMains' first rebuilding project was a diminutive Pitts S-1A aerobatic biplane, purchased in 1984 and now adorned with a stylized Texas flag color scheme.

Over a seven-year period, he made a number of modifications to the popular sportplane, including shortening the wings to increase the aircraft's roll rate.

Unlike his decision to own the Pitts, McMains "didn't go looking for a Champ. I had a friend who started a rebuild project."

The "project" is no stranger to Central Texas skies.

"This aircraft has been in the area at least 20 years, floating through owners," McMains said. "At least that's the impression I got. Just word-of-mouth rumors tell me it's been apart at least 20 years."

Long-lost logbooks and incomplete Federal Aviation Administration records offer some clues to the Champ's history. But where official documentation fails, members of aviation's close-knit community fill in the gaps.

"A local neurosurgeon and pilot, Dr. Bob Saxton, looked at it and said, 'Looks like old Sam Ferguson's aircraft.' Sure enough, it was," said McMains.

FAA DOCUMENTS revealed the Champ was upgraded from 7AC to 7DC standard in 1964, by modifying its 65-horsepower Continental engine to produce 85 horsepower and enlarging the tail to compensate for the revamped powerplant's increased torque.

McMains acquired half interest in the project during early 1991 in exchange for helping a previous owner refurbish the plane.

"When my former partner lost interest in it, I offered to buy him out," he said. McMains purchased the Champ just weeks after his initial involvement and Phillips joined the effort late last year.

"I'm usually helping out with someone's airplane," said Phillips, vice president of the Experimental Aircraft Association's local Chapter 59. "The deal with the Champ really just fell into place."

Restoring the classic aircraft, Phillips said, offers a diversion from "boring holes in the skies" with a modern Piper Cherokee.

"It's almost like being in a kite. Those old planes have an entirely different feeling," said Phillips, 38, whose experience includes about 150 flying hours and perhaps as much time looking over the shoulders of aircraft mechanics and other pilots engaged in restorations.

INFORMATION GLEANED from EAA publications and visits to the organization's annual Wisconsin fly-in convention also play a role in the Champ's recovery, Phillips said.

"In the hangars at Oshkosh, they have demonstrations on fabric covering, doping (application of a glue-like sealant to aircraft fabric) and wing stitching. I learned a little bit, and something about riveting, too.

"Mike has enough experience with fabric," said Phillips, "and there are plenty of people in the chapter with experience, too."

The EAA, headquartered in Oshkosh, Wis., is an international organization of about 130,000 aviation fans and amateur aircraft builders.

Before the Champ's metal tube-and-wood frame receives its new covering of Stits Poly-Fiber, however, long hours of preparation, fabrication and installation remain.

Successful restorations, Phillips said, depend on an equal amount of general-to-specific logic and common sense.

Both men are reluctant to discuss their investment in the post-World War II trainer, although the desired end is similar to playing the stock market.

"The idea is to buy low and sell high, then acquire another project," said Phillips.

CHAMPS, NOW among the most coveted classic lightplanes, command as much as $26,000 for pristine examples, said H.G. Frautschy, editor of The Vintage Airplane, one of five EAA monthly magazines.

"I'd place it near the top — certainly in the top two," Frautschy said of the Champ's popularity. Only the ubiquitous Piper Cub, he said, commands more attention among light aircraft aficionados.

Aeronca manufactured 7,190 7ACs between 1945 and 1948, along with 166 7DCs in 1948 and 1949. The U.S. Army used militarized versions to train pilots.

"As far as postwar training, the Champ was 'it.' The fact that there are still so many ... says a lot for the design," Frautschy said.

Approximately 2,700 7-series Aeroncas are still flyable, according to Federal Aviation Administration records.

The type originally sold for $2,295, "the cheapest of the bunch," said Frautschy.

Champs burn automotive or aviation fuels equally efficiently, at a rate of about three gallons per hour.

McMains said the final cost of restoring the Champ should not exceed $8,000 — a sum that ensures both authenticity and personal safety.

DEAR ABBY

Whether gift new or recycled, it's still thought that counts

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You advised "No Name or City" to send a gracious thank-you note for a set of used luggage received from a relative at Christmastime. Why should such boorish behavior be rewarded with a gracious note? And why would cleaning up the luggage interior make it any more acceptable?

Van Buren

Close relatives gave me a flawed picture frame for an anniversary whose invitation stated, "No gifts, please."

The store had a one-year return policy, and when I attempted to exchange the frame for another size, store records showed that it had been purchased several years prior. The management pointed to further evidence of damage, and proof of use.

I was humiliated, hurt and very angry.

After much deliberation, I simply informed my relatives that due to the original purchase date, the frame could not be exchanged.

Their response: "Too bad you waited so long to return it." — FED UP IN FULLERTON, CALIF.

DEAR FED UP: Who among us is so pure that he or she has not sent a recycled gift a time or two? I still maintain that a set of matched luggage — though previously owned — is quite a splendid gift.

Read on for a letter from "Judy," who shares my view of recycled gifts:

DEAR ABBY: One of the best gifts I ever received was a wallet from my 90-year-old aunt — a wonderful lady named Nellie Bennett of San Diego. It appeared new, but I did find a few things inside which she had apparently overlooked.

I pictured this wonderful old lady in poor health, unable to shop and possibly short on funds, emptying her only wallet to send to her niece with great love. She is gone now, but that wallet will always remind me of her love for me, and mine for her.

If one is not able to shop, or to afford a gift, there can be no greater gift than to take something of one's own and give it to another with love. I hope the recipient of that set of luggage reconsiders, and realizes that someone sacrificed their luggage out of love and generosity — not to get rid of an old cast-off. — JUDY WARREN VASILIAUSKAS, ESTES PARK, COLO.

DEAR ABBY: The continuing abortion controversy is not about killing babies, but about preventing them. People opposed to the procedure have been twisting semantics to promote their side of the issue. The dictionaries will prove my point, because this is where the meaning of words in the English language is explained for everyone to read and understand.

Webster's describes a baby as "newborn," period! Consequently, the abortion procedure should more realistically be referred to as preventing a baby. The people who project those horrible baby-killing images during a woman's early months of pregnancy are trying to characterize women as murderers.

These same people claim they are fighting for the "rights of the unborn." Webster's also states there is no fetus until after the third month of pregnancy. Women get fearfully nervous after missing a period for several weeks if they aren't planning a family. If abortion is readily available by competent doctors at a reasonable price, the chances are much better the procedure will be performed during a rudimentary stage of development when there is no fetus — only an undeveloped fertilized egg.

No one has ever suggested a compromise in the abortion issue. If the procedure were declared legal only during the first three months of pregnancy, possibly the pro-life crowd would more willingly accept it. An undeveloped fertilized egg doesn't describe a baby any more than a seed describes a rose bush. Using the pro-life logic, one could say a vehicle was in existence after a nut and bolt were joined at the beginning of an automobile assembly line.

What rights does a rudimentary ovum or sperm have over a complex, grown woman who has managed to survive in this frenzied and tumultuous world? Some people would treat pregnant women no differently than pregnant cows in the pasture, being concerned only with their potential offspring.

Women who elect to have an abortion only want to take charge of their own lives. What woman in this world wants to kill babies, particularly her own? Not one, unless you, too, fall prey to this continuing semantic malarkey. — WILLIAM W. BLISS, SEDONA, ARIZ.

DEAR MR. BLISS: I couldn't agree more. But it is a mistake to buy the line that many abortions are performed in the middle or later stages of pregnancy. According to Dr. Joan Griggs Babbott, executive director of Planned Parenthood of Los Angeles, more than 90 percent of all abortions are performed during the first trimester. After 12 weeks, it becomes increasingly dangerous for a woman to terminate her pregnancy.

CONFIDENTIAL TO MY CHINESE FRIENDS: Gung Hay Fat Choy! (Happy New Year!) This is the year of the monkey — my favorite primate.

Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS, and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy. It's all in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. ## AT WIT'S END

When dieting, race goes to the masculine

By Erma Bombeck

Every time you turn on the TV set, there's a group of people dancing around in fat clothes who throw them off to reveal their newly starved bodies. Or worse, Tommy Lasorda is shouting at me how stuffed he is from his milkshake.

Bombeck

What these ads never tell you is that it is harder for women to lose weight than it is for men.

How do I know this? Because I've been reading diet plans for years and consider them some of the best fiction around. In all of the charts, there is a great discrepancy between the daily caloric requirements for men and women who want to lose weight. Men reportedly can lose two pounds a week by lowering their caloric intake to 2,000 a day. If I ate 2,000 calories a day, I'd look like a van.

To shed two pounds a week, women have to cut back to 1,300 calories. This translates to half a grapefruit, a piece of tofu and a picture of a cookie.

It's the same story with exercise. To burn 100 calories, a woman has to bicycle 27 minutes while it takes a man only 22 minutes. A woman has to swim 20 minutes to burn the same number of calories as a man who swims 17 minutes.

Even if a man vacuumed (check dictionary for meaning under "woman"), he could burn 100 calories in 30 minutes while it takes a woman 38.

How they figure those things I'll never know. According to charts, when a woman repairs a car she will burn up 100 calories in 28 minutes. For a man it will require only 24 minutes. Why would it take me four minutes longer to burn off the fat than my husband when both of us drive our cars to the garage when they need fixing?

These are documented facts. However, I have noted another discrepancy. For example, my husband and I can have the same virus, spend the same number of days in bed, throw up the same number of times, have identical temperatures and take the same medication.

When he returns to work he has lost so much weight, he has to hold his pants up with a rope. I, on the other hand, look like I'm retaining Lake Erie.

The only thing I can figure is that it's a hormone thing. Either that or women snack while they're bicycling, swimming, vacuuming, repairing a car or after throwing up.

Professionals debate where to give funds

By Mike Feinsilber
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — In the course of a year, about 12 billion letters get dropped in the mail by non-profit organizations. The message usually boils down to two words: Send money.

Do you wish you had a way to decide whether victims of dreadful diseases have a better claim to your wallet than furry wild things?

How do you handle the appeals for funds that come to you from charities?

It turns out that even people in the field — executives of some of the nation's biggest charities, the people who put their names to those solicitations — are as random as everyone else in dealing with the charitable appeals that come to them.

Dudley Hafner, who runs the nation's sixth-largest philanthropy, the American Heart Association, says he sets a strict budget for the year, usually just before Christmas, specifying how much he's going to give away in the forthcoming year.

By the end of the year, he says, he almost always finds he's exceeded his budget.

"I get emotional about these appeals," he admits.

Two or three organizations — the American Heart Association, naturally, foremost — get 80 percent to 90 percent of Hafner's charitable giving. The rest is divided up between 10 and 20 organizations.

Experts in philanthropy say, in that respect, Hafner is typical.

"We're like everybody else," says Thomas Garth, national director of the Boys and Girls Clubs of America. "You look at the appeal and see if you're able to participate at that particular time. I don't know how much I've given over the year until I start figuring out the income tax."

Garth, who went to Southern Illinois University on a Boys Club scholarship, says he's partial to his own charity and those that support the indigent. But he reads all the solicitations that come his way.

He gets perhaps 20 solicitations a month. He guesses he gets six a year from the Salvation Army — and responds with a check to half of them.

Steve D'Esposito, who runs Greenpeace, estimates he gets 50 to 100 solicitations every year and gives to 10 percent, mostly environmental and activist groups.

"I recycle the rest," he says.

As individuals, Americans give more than $100 billion a year to charity. (That compares with the $530 billion they pay in federal income taxes.)

David Barnes, senior editor of the National Fund Raiser Newsletter, says direct mail elicits something less than half of that $100 billion.

While a "prospecting" solicitation — a mailing not directed at previous givers — might typically draw a contribution from only one recipient in 100 and not even pay for itself, those who do respond tend to remain loyal for seven to 10 years, Barnes says.

Jackie Klipper, senior manager of direct marketing for the nation's fifth largest charity, the American Cancer Society, provides the picture from the philanthropy's point of view.

Direct mail, she says, raised only 8.3 percent of the $326 million the society received directly or indirectly from the public in 1990. Door-to-door solicitations, United Way campaigns, golfing, running and other special events, and banquets are among other major sources.

The society sent 18 million solicitations in 1990 — 12 million to established donors and 6 million to likely donors. On average, 4 percent drew a response. The average gift: $19.

Poor people are proportionately the most generous donors.

A 1989 study conducted for Independent Sector, an organization that tracks trends in giving and volunteering, found that well-to-do people are more likely to give money to charity than the poor.

But among givers, it turns out that the poorest give 5.5 percent of their family income — while the richest give only 2.9 percent.

"It's a result of seeing need," said Brian O'Connell, president of Independent Sector. "When you're poor, you're going to see a lot of it."

Celebrities pick favorite books for librarian's list

By Glenn Adams

GARDINER, Maine — Mark Twain is a hit with actors Martin Landau and Ted Danson. Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney likes a book on President Kennedy and Isaac Asimov picked "Pickwick Papers."

They were among scores of notables asked by the librarian in the small town of Gardiner in southern Maine to name their favorite books for a list she has compiled every year since 1988.

Pat Boone chose the Bible and Yoko Ono favored Naomi Wolf's "Beauty Myth," which says a male-generated myth about feminine beauty keeps women from reaching their full potential.

Elizabeth Dole, who heads the American Red Cross and served as both U.S. labor and transportation secretary, recommends her latest read: "The Killer Angels," a historical novel by Michael Shaara set during the Civil War era.

Fess Parker, the coonskin-capped frontiersman in movies and on television, wrote to Gardiner librarian Glenna Nowell after seeing one of her past lists.

He said his favorite books cover California and Texas history — "Two Years Before the Mast" by Richard Henry Dana and "Napa" by James Conaway.

"Reading early on without the distraction of TV and radio gave me a chance to develop my fantasy faculty and to realize that dreams can be translated into reality," wrote Parker.

Mulroney said he has long cherished "A Thousand Days: John F. Kennedy in the White House" by Arthur Schlesinger.

"My life was touched by John F. Kennedy and he influenced my career," Mulroney said. "His call for excellence in government struck responsive chords in the hearts of an entire generation. . . . Few leaders in history accomplished so much in so brief a lifetime."

Economist John Kenneth Galbraith said atop his list is Evelyn Waugh's "Scoop," a newspaper-adventure-satire. He's also a big fan of Mark Twain.

Twain's "Tom Sawyer" caught Danson's fancy and "Huckleberry Finn" was favored by Landau. Asimov, the science fiction master, said he has read Charles Dickens' "Pickwick Papers" at least 25 times.

Alistair Cooke listed Philip Larkin's "Required Writing."

"It is the last work of a man I believe to be like the best — clearest, most sensible — critic of prose, poetry and jazz (!) since George Orwell," Cooke wrote.

Baseball Hall-of-Famer Tom Seaver described as "totally captivating" Ken Follett's "The Pillars of the Earth."

Most of the celebrities surveyed by Nowell kept their comments brief:

Gene Kelly on James Stephens' "Crock of Gold": "Wonderful Irish fantasy." Sally Field on Edna Ferber's "So Big": "I love all of her works, but this is one of my favorites."

Oxford closes nudist area

OXFORD, England (AP) — Oxford University is closing "Parson's Pleasure," a sanctuary on the banks of the Cherwell River where generations of university dons sunbathed and swam without clothes.

The university said it couldn't afford to hire a lifeguard for the area — and might be held liable if someone drowned.

"What we want to do now is to open the area up and make it available to everybody, for enjoyment of all visitors," said Robert Lucas, secretary of the university parks curators.

The area, whose name harks back to the date when many academics were also Anglican priests, is well away from the main campus. It has been owned by the university since 1865.

Some felt that Parson's Pleasure had been tarnished by the indiscretions of its patrons. "There have been a number of complaints in recent years and it was felt some men were using it to display themselves rather than for genuine swimming," said Sarah Perman, women's officer at the Oxford Student Union.

The university also once had an area reserved for women known as Dame's Delight, opened in 1934. It was closed in 1970.

Inevitably, the passing of Parson's Pleasure provoked nostalgia for bygone days and chance encounters with naked academics.

"There they all were, with their pot bellies and other bits, lying around on the grass. It was really a very sultry, almost erotic, atmosphere," Humphrey Carpenter, a writer based in Oxford, told London's Daily Telegraph.

"There were books being read and half-hearted conversations going on and they all looked very content. The funniest sight was a particularly corpulent don, stark naked, standing there nonchalantly eating a banana. He gave us a sour look as we passed," he was quoted as saying in Friday's editions.

The Times of London recalled the oft-told story of the late Sir Maurice Bowra, warden of Wadham College, and a companion who were surprised by young ladies while sunbathing in the buff.

The companion quickly wrapped a towel around his waist, but Bowra draped his towel over his head, declaring: "I am known in Oxford by my face."

Chaps spank NMMI, 98-66

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Midland College's Kelon Haynie (3) goes for the ball as James Thomas (25) of New Mexico Military Institute hauls it down Monday night at the Chaparral Center.

■ Reggie Franklin misses the trip and Midland College rolls to its eighth conference victory.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

This one was a dunkfest. A rebounding bonanza. A scoring soiree.

It was party time at Chaparral Center Monday night, and Midland College was the life of the shindig, scouring New Mexico Military, 98-66.

The victory also marked the 18th of the year for Midland, which equals last year's win total. In addition, it was MC's eighth win in Western Junior College Athletic Conference play, which also equals last year's league victory mark.

The game was supposed to have featured the return of former head basketball coach Reggie Franklin to MC. But Franklin, now head coach at NMMI, was unable to attend the game due to the death of his step-father in Houston. Assistant coach Porter Cutrell manned the team in Franklin's absence.

Elsewhere in the league, Odessa defeated Western Texas 73-46; Howard downed Clarendon 107-89, and South Plains dropped Frank Phillips, 144-100. New Mexico Junior College was open.

Monday's win was the most dominating performance of the season for MC, not only on the scoreboard but in virtually every other category as well.

MC outrebounded NMMI, 60-33, with Fabian Mina (13) and Ari Rodriques (10) leading the way. Mina, who finished with 10 points, also had five steals. Mina's numbers were even more impressive in that he played sparingly in the second half.

The Chaps as a team recorded 25 steals. Terrance Rone and Kelon Haynie joined Mina with five each. And in the assist column, score it 21 for MC, a mere six for NMMI.

Sure there was a downside, however slight in retrospect. The Chaps hit on only 43.4 percent from the field. Still, the 98 points was the highest point total in the Chaps' last seven games.

MC (18-4, 8-1) jumped out to a 10-0 lead as the Broncos were unable to get on the scoreboard until over three minutes had elapsed.

NMMI (7-12, 4-6) never led in the game, but closed the gap to within six, 28-22, midway through the first half. Having had quite enough of the small threat mounted by the Broncos, MC

Morenz decides

SAN ANGELO (AP) — San Angelo Central quarterback Shea Morenz, one of the state's top high school recruits, on Monday announced he has chosen to attend the University of Texas over Miami, UCLA and Stanford.

Morenz threw for 3,363 yards and 41 touchdowns last season while leading his team to the state semifinals. His oral commitment came two days before recruits can sign binding letters of intent.

"Just to say no to those three schools was the hardest thing I've had to do in my entire life," Morenz said.

Morenz said a weekend visit to Miami tempted him to join the defending national champion Hurricanes.

"When I came back from there, I was ready to sign with them right there," he said.

Irvin has MVP Pro Bowl tale

By Ken Peters
AP Sports Writer

HONOLULU — Michael Irvin's future grandchildren can expect to hear stories of the day their grandfather was the star among the all-stars.

He won't even have to embellish the tale.

"In college, only the best make the NFL,' the Dallas Cowboys' wide receiver said. "In the NFL, only the best make the Pro Bowl. And this is the best of the best."

"This" was the MVP Award of the Pro Bowl, an honor Irvin earned by catching a record-tying eight passes for 125 yards and a touchdown in the NFC's 21-15 victory over the AFC.

"It was worthy enough for me to call home and tell mom," Irvin said. "And it's something I'll tell my grandchildren."

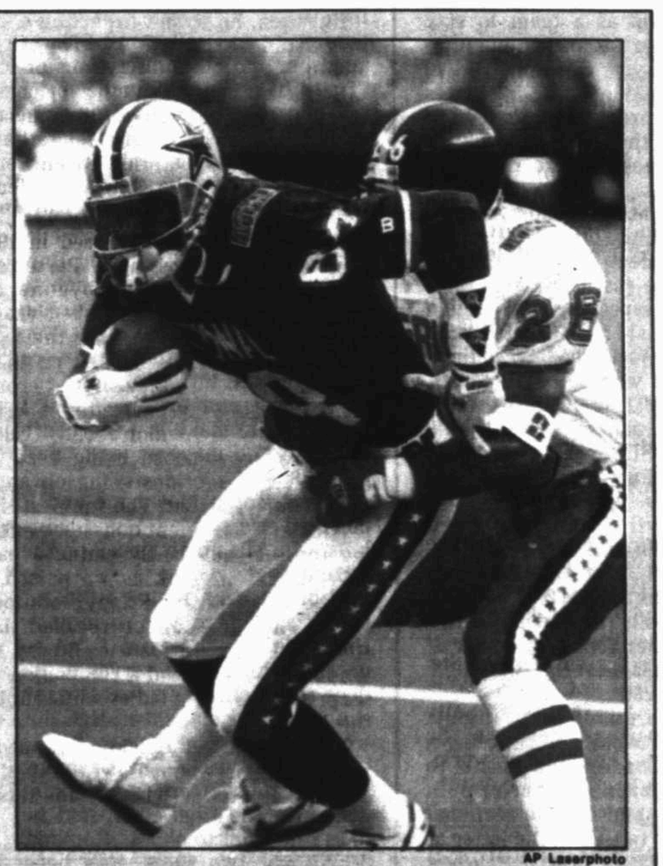

Irvin's eight receptions, matching Steve Largent's Pro Bowl record, was particularly impressive because he — and most of the rest of the players — split playing time with the other all-stars in Sunday's game.

Mark Rypien, MVP of Washington's 37-24 Super Bowl victory over Buffalo a week earlier, also had a fine game for the NFC, completing 11 of 18 for 165 yards and two touchdowns while playing less than half the game.

There were a number of other solid performances — San Francisco's Jerry Rice had seven receptions for 77 yards, including an 11-yard TD pass from Atlanta's Chris Miller with 4:04 remaining that gave the NFC the victory; San Diego's Marion Butts averaged 5.3 yards per carry, rushing 12 times for 63 yards, and, Tim Brown of the Los Angeles Raiders had five receptions for 74 yards.

There is little at stake in the game, with the winners getting $10,000 each and the losers $5,000, and the emphasis is on fun during the players' stay in Hawaii. But the all-star game still had its intense moments.

The competition was heated enough that several pushing-and-shoving skirmishes broke out, even more than in most NFL regular-season games.

AP Laserphoto

Michael Irvin is tackled by Steeler Ron Woodson after hauling in one of his eight Pro Bowl catches.

"The competitive juices come out on both sides," Houston quarterback Warren Moon of the AFC said.

"It was a good game that they'll know is played for real," Detroit's Wayne Fontes, coach of the NFC, said.

"The game was intense," said running back Gaston Green of the Denver Broncos, who played in his first Pro Bowl.

Rypien said: "The intensity is there, the rivalry is there. Our guys knew that going in. Anytime during a game like this, you have fun during the week. But come Sunday, it's time to tee it up."

Playoffs on the line for Lady Rebs

■ Midland Lee's girls may be able to clinch the basketball playoffs with a win over Abilene Cooper.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

With a combination of a Midland Lee win and a Midland High loss tonight, Lee could clinch its first girls basketball playoff berth since 1989.

The Lady Rebels host Abilene Cooper at 8 p.m. in the Lee gymnasium, while MHS travels to first-place Abilene High, which clinched no worse than a tie for the playoffs in its Friday win over Cooper.

In boys action tonight, MHS will come off a 59-58 overtime win over Lee Friday to try to keep its head above water as it hosts AHS, also in first place in the boys standings. That games will be at the Chaparral Center and also starts at 8 p.m.

The Lee boys will try to rebound from their loss to MHS by hitting the road for Cooper. A victory over the Cougars would pull the Rebels into a second place tie with Cooper.

For the Lady Rebels, things could hardly look brighter. Though they suffered the loss of starting guard Lisa Cochran to a tumor that turned out to be benign, the Lady Rebs defeated MHS 52-49 Friday to moved their record to 12-10 and 7-2 in District 4-5A. Cooper is 6-19 overall and in last place in the league standings with a 1-8 4-5A mark.

However, Lee coach Elise Kail did find some flaws after the win over the Lady Bulldogs.

"We played a good ball game against Midland High, but we're going to have to realize we have to be more consistent if we want to do well in the playoffs. Of course, it's really too soon to be talking about the playoffs," Kail cautioned.

The MHS girls were all but eliminated from the postseason with their loss to Lee. The Lady 'Dawgs are 18-8 overall and 4-4 in district, and must play in the Lady Eagles' home gymnasium. AHS is 21-5 overall and suffered but one league loss, 63-43 to the Lady Rebs at Lee.

For the Bulldogs, a victory would pull them to within two games with four to play. MHS is 14-11 for the season, but stumped its toe in the early district season before bouncing back to win three of its last four games. MHS will have to try to stop the most touted played in the district in Tyerone Washington, an All-State player a year ago who should receive plenty of Division I scholarship offers.

The Lee boys are almost in a must-win game tonight, as a loss would drop them to being two games behind Cooper. A win, however, could put the Rebels in control of their own destiny, at least as far as a district playoff is concerned.

MHS kickers seek first 4-5A win

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

Both ends of the District 3 soccer spectrum are in evidence early on in the Tall City.

Midland Lee, perfect at 2-0, owns a share of first place entering today's clash with the Permian Panthers in Odessa.

And two games into the district season, Midland High is still looking for its first win. The 0-2 Bulldogs host OHS, also 0-2, at 4:30 p.m. today at the MHS field, where one team will leave the playing surface in sole possession of last place.

"This is a very important game for us, and I'm hoping the kids understand how important it is and take it seriously," said MHS head coach Tom Esikhati.

"Odessa High is an improved team that we can't afford to take lightly. Their record can be deceiving," he said of the Bronchos' 0-5 overall start.

The Bulldogs take an overall record of 2-4 into today's game. They dropped a 3-0 decision to Lee in the league opener and are coming off a narrow 2-1 loss at Abilene High that was decided by a tie-breaking shootout.

Lee's start has been altogether different than MHS' and just the opposite of the Bronchos'. At 5-0 overall, the Rebels' 2-0 league record ties them with Abilene High for first place. But Permian is 1-0 in District 3, and one of Lee's three regular-season losses en route to a playoff berth in 1991 came, 3-2, at Permian.

"Last time we went over there we stubbed our toe. That's what we'll try and avoid this time," said Lee head coach Eddie Bull, whose Rebels have turned in four shutouts thus far and have yet to allow a goal in loop competition.

Another important District 3 game today features Abilene High at San Angelo (1-0). A win by the defending District 3 champion Bobcats, coupled with a Lee victory, would leave the Rebels alone atop the league standings.

And a MHS win over the Bronchos could go a long way in turning around the season for the Bulldogs.

"We need our crowd to come out and support us," Esikhati said. "A good crowd can go a long way in helping us perform at our best."

The other member of District 3, Abilene Cooper, is idle today.

Olajuwon nears triple-double in win

NBA Roundup

HOUSTON — Hakeem Olajuwon had 21 points, 14 rebounds, and nine blocked shots and helped Houston put down a fourth quarter Indiana comeback, leading the Rockets to a 122-111 victory Monday night.

The loss extended Indiana's losing streak at the Summit to 15 straight games, dating back to March 28, 1979.

Vernon Maxwell was high scorer for the Rockets with 23 points as Houston won their fifth consecutive home game. Olajuwon blocked nine shots for the fifth time this season and narrowly missed the eighth triple-double of his career.

Detlef Schrempf led the Pacers with 25 The loss snapped a three-game winning streak for the Pacers, who lowered their road record to 4-19 for the season.

Kenny Smith scored the first basket of the game and the Rockets never trailed, riding the shooting of Maxwell, who had 10 second-quarter points and 15 at the half, and taking a 62-49 lead at intermission.

After the Pacers cut Houston's lead to 64-54 to start the third quarter, the Rockets used a 10-2 spurt to take a 74-56 lead with 8:02 left.

With Houston leading 99-77, the Pacers made their best run of the game. Indiana outscored the Rockets 18-2, cutting the lead to six points at 101-95 with 5:45 left in the game. But that was as close as the Pacers could get.

Timberwolves 114, Nuggets 99

MINNEAPOLIS — Tony Campbell scored 30 points and the Minnesota Timberwolves used a strong first half to snap a team-record 11-game losing streak with a victory over Denver.

The Timberwolves scored 71 points before halftime and led by as many as 21, but managed only 43 in the second half as Denver used a full-court press to get back into the game.

Rookie center Dikembe Mutombo scored a career-high 39 points and added 21 rebounds, but the Nuggets shot only 38 percent from the field. Mutombo's previous career high was 29.

Doug West had 20 for the Timberwolves, whose last victory came on Jan. 11 against Utah. At 8-37, Minnesota has the worst record in the NBA.

Minnesota, which shot 70 percent in the first half, used three sharpshooting spells to take a 71-52 halftime lead. The Wolves began the game by making eight shots without a miss to take a 19-12 lead. The club made 10 in a row in the middle of the half to stretch the advantage to 48-36, then finished the second quarter with six straight, including a pair of three-pointers by Scott Brooks.

The 71 points were two shy of the team record for points in a half and the 70 percent shooting was second-best in Minnesota history. Denver stayed in the game on the strength of Mutombo's 19 first-half points.

SuperSonics 112, Hawks 110

ATLANTA — Ricky Pierce's 20-foot jump shot with 3.5 seconds remaining capped an 18-6 run in the final five minutes and carried the Seattle SuperSonics to a victory over Atlanta.

The victory snapped Seattle's 10-game losing streak in Atlanta, dating back to a 92-85 triumph on Dec. 5, 1981.

Pierce led the Sonics with 26 points and Eddie Johnson added 22.

Kevin Willis had 24 points and 23 rebounds, including 19 on the defensive end, to lead the Hawks. The loss was Atlanta's third in a row.

The Hawks took a 104-94 lead with 5:32 to play on a 3-pointer by Rumeal Robinson from the left corner. Shawn Kemp started the Seattle comeback on a rebound basket with 5:06 left and converted a three-point play to tie it at 108 with 2:23 to play.

Stacey Augmon tied the game at 110 on a layup with seven seconds left, but he failed to convert a potential three-point play.

After a timeout, Pierce hit the game-winner. Willis missed a 3-pointer at the buzzer.

Kemp had 16 points and 15 rebounds and Benjamin 17 points and 11 rebounds.

Jazz 126, Bulls 123, 3 OT

SALT LAKE CITY — Jeff Malone hit three free throws with 0.5 seconds left in the third overtime to lift the Utah Jazz a victory over the Chicago Bulls.

Malone got two free throws when Michael Jordan fouled him as he drove the lane then earned the third when Jordan picked up a technical foul.

Jordan was ejected for bumping referee Tommie Wood while arguing the call.

Malone shook off 4-for 21 shooting to become the hero. The Jazz as a team shot just 41 percent, including a showing of 26 percent in the fourth quarter.

Warriors 122, Magic 114

ORLANDO, Fla. — Chris Mullin scored 31 points and Mario Elie added a career-high 27, including 11 during a decisive third-quarter stretch, to lead the Golden State Warriors to a victory over the Orlando Magic.

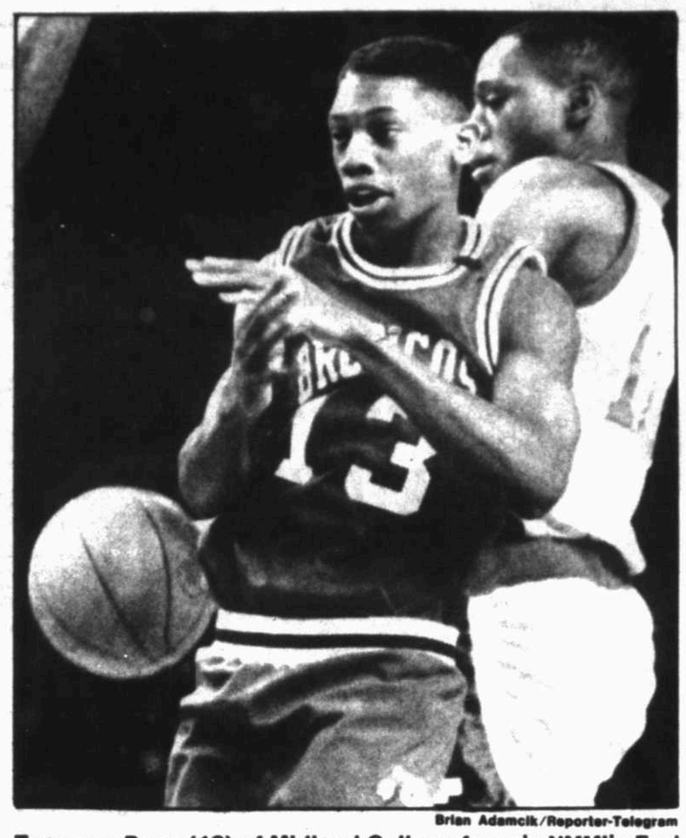

The Warriors improved the NBA's second-best road record to 15-6 by building a 16-point lead in the third quarter then holding off the Magic in the final five minutes.

The Warriors have won two games in a row on a four-game road swing, three straight overall. The loss for Orlando was its fifth straight.

Suns 113, Lakers 104

PHOENIX — Tim Perry scored a season-high 27 points and pulled down 15 rebounds Monday night as Phoenix tied a franchise record with their 18th consecutive home victory.

Perry handled a 40-foor outlet pass from Jeff Hornacek and threw down a one-handed dunk with 9:27 remaining to put Phoenix ahead by 13 points.

then went on a dominating run, outscoring NMMI 26-4 in the last eight minutes of the first half.

"The boys felt they could've done something, because we had cut it down to six, but then that run Midland went on put us down by (28)," Cutrell said. "That let us down.

"(Midland) can play. We had some problems guarding their inside group. We played a zone to cut down on their inside game, but then they just shot from the outside. They're good from top to bottom, which is why they're in first place."

James Thomas led a group of four Broncos in double figures with 12 points.

Although the Chap reserves came off the bench to score just 29 points, MC head coach Steve Green was particularly pleased with the rounded effort of his team.

"In spots we pushed the ball as well as we have all season," Green said. "Our complimentary players had a good game tonight. (Chris) McKinney and Ari (MC's two leading scorers) were not involved in our offense hardly at all."

Midland College has won 14 straight against the Broncos, and 30 of the 34 since the series began in 1976. The 31 point margin of victory was the largest ever the Chaps have scored over the Broncos.

MC travels to Frank Phillips Thursday night, trying to duplicate their decisive 107-71 win over the Plainsmen in January. Tip off in Borger is 8 p.m.

MC returns home next Monday against Clarendon.

CHAP NOTE: For what was described by Green as "conduct unbecoming," sophomore post Charles Gentry was dismissed from the team Monday. Gentry, a product of Dallas Kimball who attended the University of Colorado last season, was sixth on the team in scoring, averaging 9.0 points per game. Of Gentry's removal, Green said: "He is officially no longer a Chaparral. His goals and ours are not the same."

Oklahoma St., Kansas move up in new AP poll

Associated Press

The ranks of the undefeated were thinned by one last week, and the two which remained were atop the Associated Press college basketball poll on Monday.

Duke (17-0) remained the No. 1 team for the 12th consecutive poll (that's all there's been), the last three as a unanimous choice. Oklahoma State (20-0) moved up one place to second and the Cowboys were close to a unanimous runner-up, falling four points short.

UCLA (15-1) had been second for six straight weeks until being beaten by Southern Cal at home last Wednesday. The Bruins fell to fourth with Kansas (16-1) jumping from fifth to third.

Arkansas, which had been seventh, rounded out the top five and was followed by Indiana, Arizona, Ohio State, North Carolina and Connecticut.

Louisiana State (13-4) was the only newcomer to join the Top 25 as the Tigers, who were sixth in the preseason balloting, came in at 22nd. Louisville (12-6), which lost two of three games last week, was the team which fell out.

Duke received all 65 first-place votes and 1,625 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters.

Oklahoma State had 1,556 points, meaning the Cowboys were second on 61 ballots and third on the other four. UCLA received three of the other second-place votes and Arkansas the fourth.

Michigan State led the Second Ten and was followed by Missouri, Syracuse, Tulane, Michigan, Southern Cal, UNLV, Alabama, Kentucky and North Carolina Charlotte.

The final five were Oklahoma, LSU, Florida State, Georgia Tech and Texas-El Paso.

Louisiana State had started the season as a team to stay away from with returning player of the year Shaquille O'Neal in the middle, but the Tigers fell for three straight weeks in the poll then dropped out for seven weeks before returning this week.

Losses at UNLV and Arizona, one by 21, the other by 20, and a home defeat at the hands of Louisville cost the Tigers their backers, especially with a tough Southeastern Conference schedule just ahead. Since then, LSU has won 10 of 11 games, the only loss to conference leader Arkansas, while compiling a 6-1 SEC mark, including a 74-53 victory over then-No. 14 Kentucky.

Louisville had also been among the ranked teams in the preseason, but the Cardinals were gone in the first regular-season poll. They returned two weeks later for a run of six of seven polls, never getting higher than 20th.

The Cardinals beat Virginia Tech last week before losing a Metro Conference game to North Carolina Charlotte in overtime and an intersectional matchup to UCLA, the latter at home.

Georgia Tech was the only ranked team with six losses, while three had five — Michigan, Kentucky and Florida State.

Texas-El Paso did not fall from the rankings despite losing its only two games last week, Western Athletic Conference road losses to Utah and Brigham Young. The Miners, who had been 19th, did experience the week's biggest drop, one more spot than Kentucky fell.

Syracuse downs Connecticut, 84-83

Associated Press

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Syracuse junior Mike Hopkins was confident he was going to make at least one free throw when he stepped to the foul line with 3 seconds left and the game against Connecticut on the line.

But then, he wasn't expecting a kiss from teammate Lawrence Moten.

Hopkins' tie-breaking free throw lifted No. 13 Syracuse to an 84-83 victory over No. 10 Connecticut on Monday night. Adrian Autry and Conrad McRae secured the win when they knocked away Chris Smith's pass as time ran out.

"I knew I was 50-50," said Hopkins, who came off the bench to shoot the free throws after McRae was injured on a foul.

"Smith and the other guys were talking to me trying to make me miss. I just said to myself that I was going to make it. I felt confident I would make at least one," he said.

"Then Moten kissed me and it changed everything," said Hopkins, who put up an airball on the second shot.

"I didn't even realize I did it," Moten said. "I'm just so intense. He made the shot and I felt so good for him. He deserves it. He does so much for us that doesn't sho up on the stat sheet. He's our workhorse."

Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim, whose team overcame a nine-point deficit in the final 10:21, said he didn't hesitate to choose Hopkins.

"We got two shots. He's been playing all year long. He's a 50-percent game free throw shooter. We just need one. Other guys can shoot them better, but they've never shot them in games," Boeheim said.

Syracuse took over first place in the Big East from Connecticut (16-3, 7-3) by scoring the final five points of the game after Brian Fair had given the Huskies an 83-79 lead with 2:21 to play.

It was the second straight loss for Connecticut, which was routed 90-57 by by St. John's on Saturday. It was Syracuse's 20th straight victory at the Carrier Dome.

Top 25

No. 3 Kansas 80, Kansas State 58

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Eric Pauley scored a career-high 17 points as No. 3 Kansas routed Kansas State and surpassed the Wildcats for first place on the all-time Big Eight victory list.

The victory was the Jayhawks' 18th in the last 22 games against Kansas State (11-7, 1-4) and gave Kansas (17-1, 5-0) a 50-game lead in their 85-year series. Since the Big Eight was created in 1958-59, Kansas has a 297-170 conference mark to K-State's 296-171.

Pauley, a 6-10 junior working against Kansas State's 6-10 John Rettiger, triggered a 20-6 run at the beginning of the second half.

A three-point play by Kansas State's Askia Jones made it 56-43. Then the Jayhawks took charge, frequently working the ball inside to Pauley and power forward Alonzo Jamison, last week's Big Eight player of the week, who finished with 16 points.

Wake Forest 69, No. 14 Tulane 66

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Rodney Rogers scored 21 points and continued his hot shooting as Wake Forest defeated No. 14 Tulane despite committing 22 turnovers and missing 16 of 31 foul shots.

The Demon Deacons (12-6) held the high-scoring Green Wave (16-2) to its lowest output of the season, nearly 23 points under its 88.8-point average.

Wake Forest, a top-25 team through the first seven weeks of the season, won for only the second time in seven games against a ranked opponent.

The Demon Deacons led 63-53 with 2:58 left, but almost let the game slip away by missing five free throws in the final 1:07 while the Green Wave made two 3-pointers and three free throws.

Baylor roughs up Tulsa, 73-59

Associated Press

TULSA, Okla. — David Wesley scored 26 points to lead Baylor over Tulsa 73-59 Monday night.

Willie Sublette gave Baylor (11-8) a 59-54 lead with a follow shot with 2:28 left to play, then put the game out of reach seconds later with a dunk off a Tulsa turnover.

The Hurricane (9-8), which trailed by 10 points early in the second half, went on a 17-5 run and took the lead 47-45 with 8:39 left. Tulsa appeared to be gaining momentum when Jason Ludwig sank a 3-pointer for a 54-51 lead at the 5:24 mark.

Glanville takes stock car drive

ROCKINGHAM, N.C. (AP) — Jerry Glanville couldn't push the Atlanta Falcons through the recent NFL playoffs. Now, he's hoping to drive a Chevrolet to victory on the NASCAR circuit.

Glanville roared around the North Carolina Motor Speedway track at 140 mph Monday. To the skeptics there, that's considered fast enough by two-time Winston Cup champion Buck Baker to qualify for the Goodwrench 200 Busch Series Grand National NASCAR race at the Speedway Feb. 29.

And that's just what the 50-year-old Glanville plans to do.

"Some people say you need to take time to smell the roses," the combative Glanville said before climbing into the No. 88 Chevrolet Lumina. "I say take time to race."

Glanville, whose Falcons made it into the playoffs in his second season but lost in the second round to the Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins, ran about 30 laps side-by-side with Randy Baker of the Buck Baker Driving School.

After several warmup laps under a clear blue sky, Baker gave Glanville an idea what it will be like with 30 other race cars fighting for position.

At speeds approaching 140 mph, Glanville and Randy Baker — Buck Baker's son and the brother of Winston Cup driver Buddy Baker — traded places several times.

They ran door-to-door around the 1.017-mile track, including the treacherous Turn 2, the site of numerous wrecks over the years.

"What a hoot!" an exuberant Glanville said after emerging from his car.

Both Bakers said Glanville has a lot to learn but showed a lot of poise.

"I think he'll make it," Randy Baker said. "He'll have success after he gets some time in a race car."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You finally break free from longtime bonds. Spring brings an exciting career change or business expansion. You can expect to travel or relocate by midsummer. A casual flirtation could develop into a lasting passion. Focus on creative projects in the fall. New alliances lead to greater financial security next November. Check the references of anyone you hire to work in your home.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Vice President Dan Quayle, aviator Charles Lindbergh, comedian David Brenner, rock singer Alice Cooper.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A good day for meditating on the future. Get to the heart of a matter, even if you may not like what you find out. A young person teaches you new tricks.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Artistic pursuits should prove very rewarding. Do your best to support someone in need of encouragement. Tomorrow brings several important choices. Be a decision maker.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be aware of possible errors in a business report or billing statement. It is essential you correct any mistakes as soon as possible. Avoid repeating gossip or others could point an accusing finger your way.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A health matter may require immediate attention. Do whatever is necessary to protect yourself. Conferences held during afternoon hours will result in new cooperation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Curb your impatience with your work associates today. Losing your temper will accomplish nothing. Travel is best postponed. Review your options if you feel that you are spinning your wheels.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Cancellations could work in your favor in the long run. An out-of-court settlement is possible. Your keen attention to detail pays off. Protect your health. Keep a dental or medical appointment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Let other people take the lead in both business and romance today. This is not a good time to negotiate agreements or sign contracts. Sit back quietly and watch your associates' maneuvers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Career progress comes when you act more self-reliant. Show those in power what you can accomplish. Constructive changes are in the wind. Family and friends are your biggest boosters.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Forward motion is essential at this time. You can no longer postpone acting on recently made decisions. A child enters your life with a bang. Spruce up your living quarters.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Fate places you in the driver's seat at work. Adult offspring cannot be pushed into being successful. Be as patient as possible with them. Take a break and visit friends tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid dwelling on your emotional state today. Plunge into work and creativity! Getting the job done will boost your spirits. Have a heart-to-heart talk with your mate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your career regains its momentum. An influential person is in your corner. Think twice about attempting to hide the truth from your family. You will suffer if rumors spread.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are creative, inventive and community-minded. Generous to a fault, these Aquarians like to think the best of everyone. Tolerant and forgiving, they invariably give people a second chance. Although many of these Aquarians work hard to gain power, they use their influence to help others.

Opening lead: Two of ♡

By and large, man is a lazy animal. Blessed with the most advanced brain in the animal kingdom, Homo sapiens is more apt to react automatically than resort to reason. Here's a simple illustration of our point.

Despite 14 points and a perfectly balanced hand, North could not jump to two no trump because of weakness in the unbid major. When South rebid spades over the temporizing two-diamond response, North chose the suit game.

West led a low heart, declarer played the three from dummy in a flash ("Second hand low," goes the adage), and East made a superb defensive play by inserting the ten. Declarer took the king and tried the trump finesse, losing to the king. Now East completed an excellent defense by underleading the ace of hearts to West's queen. The club shift was automatic, and two tricks there for the defense was declarer's death knell.

Instead of playing by rote to the first trick, declarer should have reasoned along these lines. As long as West can be kept off lead, the contract is safe—sooner or later declarer can take a club discard on dummy's long diamond. The opening lead marks East for the ace of hearts—an underlead of that card at trick one on this auction would be highly unusual.

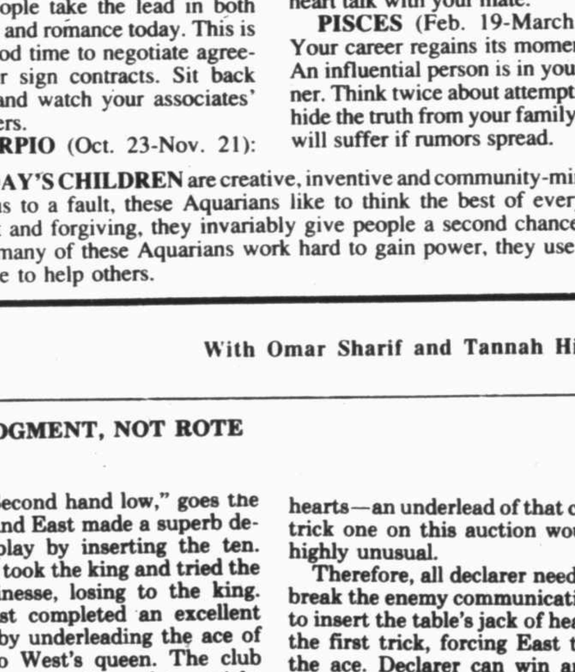

Therefore, all declarer need do to break the enemy communications is to insert the table's jack of hearts to the first trick, forcing East to win the ace. Declarer can win any return, take the spade finesse to deny West entry and then, after drawing trumps, discard a club and score up another game.

Films' George Lucas to receive award at Academy ceremony

LOS ANGELES — George Lucas, producer of the "Star Wars" and "Indiana Jones" film series, will receive the Irving G. Thalberg Memorial Award at next month's Academy Awards ceremony.

The honor is given to a "creative producer whose body of work reflects a consistently high quality of motion picture production," the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences said Sunday.

As a writer, director and producer, Lucas also has been responsible for such films as "American Graffiti," "Labyrinth," "Willow" and "Tucker: The Man and His Dream."

The award is named for the MGM production chief responsible for such classics as "Mutiny on the Bounty," "Camille," and "The Broadway Melody." Thalberg died at age 37.

Previous recipients include Darryl F. Zanuck, Walt Disney, Billy Wilder and Steven Spielberg.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Actress Melanie Griffith says she's surprised she won the role as a World War II spy in the film "Shining Through."

Griffith

"I figured a big star like Meryl Streep, Jane Fonda or maybe Michelle Pfeiffer would get first crack," Griffith told The Tennessean in an interview published Sunday.

"I didn't think I had a chance. I'm not a real star like they are."

In the movie, Griffith plays a secretary who infiltrates Nazi Germany to find the secret of the V-2 rocket.

"I wanted the 'Shining Through' part the minute I read it because it would be my first shot at a bigger-than-life, old-fashioned hero," she said. "Even men don't get great roles like that anymore."

NEW YORK — When Sylvester Stallone's mother decided to have a reconciliation with her former daughter-in-law, Brigitte Nielsen, she did it for all the world to see.

Nielsen

Jackie Stallone turned up at a party Nielsen threw recently at a Los Angeles nightclub to promote her second album of Eurodance music and apologized to her in the middle of the dance floor.

"I said I love her and was sorry for all the crap I said about her," Stallone, 60, told People magazine in its Feb. 10 issue. "I said, 'You're a helluva gal — you just didn't make a good wife for my son."

Stallone once called Nielsen, who divorced Sylvester Stallone in 1987 after a 19-month marriage, "the poorest example of a female I've ever known."

Nielsen, 28, said the reconciliation may have been spurred by her encounter with her ex-husband two days earlier at another party.

"I dragged him behind some palm trees and had a heavy-duty talk with him," Nielsen said. "It cleared some things up, and he was sweet."

PHOENIX — The wife of Sen. John McCain got a surprise when she led a group of doctors to Vietnam to teach modern surgical techniques: She met the surgeons who operated on her husband 27 years ago.

Cindy McCain said two surgeons at Viet Duc Hospital in Hanoi described operating on her husband's broken knee while he was in captivity after his fighter plane was shot down over North Vietnam.

"They were the ones who brought it up," Mrs. McCain said last week on her return from the two-week trip with the American Voluntary Medical Team, which she founded in 1988.

"I knew that someone in Vietnam had operated on John, but I didn't want to bring it up."

She asked to see the operating room and her husband's cell, but was turned down.

Mrs. McCain said she didn't dwell on her husband's surgery. She said she's more interested in improving Vietnamese medical techniques, describing them as equivalent to those used in this country in World War II.

Another notable birthday this week is that of James A. Michener, the author, who turned 85 Monday. On Wednesday his publisher, Random House, will give a black tie dinner for 130 guests, including Walter Cronkite and Stan Musial, at the Pierpont Morgan Library in New York.

"I am amazed and delighted that I will see old friends and happy that Random House is taking the trouble to put this together," Michener said.

Michener, known for his comprehensive books on various parts of the world, among them Hawaii, the Middle East, Spain, Afghanistan, South Africa and Poland, is planning a trip to Antarctica later this month.

Does that mean a book on Antarctica is in the works? "No," he said vehemently. "I only write about places where I've been for a long time. I'm going there because it's the only place I haven't been and if I don't go now I will probably never make it. This trip will complete my obligation to see all the oceans of the world."

Prices recover

Crude futures moved slightly higher Monday on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

West Texas Intermediate for March delivery rose 6 cents to close at $18.96 per barrel in a session that saw the price briefly above the $19 level.

Local crude purchasers such as Scurlock Permian and Texaco Trading and Transportation raised their posted price 25 cents to $17.75.

Producers meet

The West Texas Producers Forum will meet Wednesday at the Petroleum Club beginning at 11:45 a.m.

Guest speaker will be J.M. "Jerry" Fullinwider of V-F Petroleum, who is returning from Russia this week and give a report on Russian exploration.

Cost is $15 per person, and reservations should be made by calling 683-6293 by noon today.

Rates mixed

WASHINGTON — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities were mixed in Monday's auction.

The Treasury Department sold $10.4 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.86 percent, up from 3.84 percent last week. Another $10.4 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.93 percent, unchanged from last week.

The three-month bill rate was the highest since they sold for 3.91 percent on Dec. 30. The six-month bill rate remained the highest since they averaged 4.19 percent on Dec. 16.

The new discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 3.96 percent for three-month bills with a $10,000 bill selling for $9,902.40 and 4.08 percent for a six-month bill selling for $9,801.30.

In a separate report, the Federal Reserve said Monday that the average yield for one-year Treasury bills, the most popular index for making changes in adjustable rate mortgages, rose to 4.23 percent last week, up from 4.14 percent the previous week.

Stocks rise

NEW YORK — Stocks edged up Monday in trading that was marked by swift, if moderate, drops and rebounds. The Dow Jones industrial average closed up 10.73 points at 3,234.12.

After a selloff, the Dow crested near 3,240 in the early afternoon and rode several dips and jumps.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange was average, at 185.3 million shares, down from 197.6 million Friday.

U.S. construction contracts sharply

Cutback is most in 47 years; down again in November, December

WASHINGTON (AP) — Construction spending on homes, office buildings and other projects shrank 9.3 percent in 1991, the sharpest contraction since World War II, the government said Monday.

The severe cutback was concentrated in the first half of the year and spending actually picked up in the past six months, though it was down again in November and December.

Separately, a survey of 300 corporate purchasing executives suggested that as the year began the rest of the economy remained sluggish and the manufacturing sector continued to decline.

The National Association of Purchasing Management said Monday its index of business activity was unchanged in January at 47.4 percent. A reading of less than 50 percent suggests manufacturing is declining; a reading under 44.5 percent would indicate the overall economy was shrinking.

The Commerce Department said residential, non-residential and government spending on construction totaled $404.9 billion last year. That was down from $446.4 billion in 1990 and marked the lowest level since 1985, when $377.4 billion was spent on apartments, factories and other private and government buildings.

Last year's decline also was the first since the recession year of 1982, when spending fell 4.0 percent. It was the steepest since spending plunged 36.6 percent in 1944.

Economist David Berson of the Federal National Mortgage Association said most of the decline occurred during the first half of the year. Construction spending actually picked up at a 5.7 percent annual rate in the last six months, he said.

Analysts attributed the collapse from January through June to the Persian Gulf War, the recession and a glut of already-built structures such as office buildings and shopping centers.

Spending on residential buildings and on government projects fell in December and contributed to a 0.2 percent decline for the month in overall construction outlays. Total expenditures were $407.4 billion at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, compared to $408.4 billion in November.

Spending on single-family homes advanced 1.2 percent in December, but that was more than offset by a 7 percent plunge for apartments and other multi-family buildings. For the year, single-family outlays fell 12 percent, to $95.8 billion, while multi-family spending dropped 22 percent, to $14.9 billion.

Berson forecast continued improvement in the residential sector, particularly single-family homes. The Commerce Department reported last week that applications for building permits, often a barometer of future activity, jumped in December.

Non-residential construction, which inched up 0.2 percent in December, dropped 18 percent during the year, to $96.7 billion. Spending on office buildings fell 21 percent over the 12 months while outlays for other commercial projects such as shopping centers dropped 26 percent.

"The vacancy rates for office buildings and strip shopping centers is still too high," Berson contended, saying the non-residential sector will remain flat and possibly decline further this year.

An exception, he added, might be increased spending on industrial buildings such as factories — "once the economy improves."

Fed Reserve to seal rate, analysts say

- Banks' prime lending rates should show little change in coming weeks if assessment is correct.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal Reserve policymakers gather Tuesday for their first strategy session of the new year and will likely decide to keep interest rates where they are for the time being, many private economists are predicting.

The analysts don't rule out one or perhaps two more modest easing steps in the spring, but they believe for the next two months the central bank will sit on the sidelines.

If that assessment is correct, it would mean that the banks' prime lending rates and other short-term rates that are most directly affected by Fed actions should show little change in coming weeks.

Already, long-term rates, which are more influenced by sentiment in financial markets, have edged. Many analysts believe that movement is temporary and they look for mortgage rates, which are heavily influenced by the bond market, to reverse course and start heading down again.

One of the factors blamed for the jump in long-term rates is market worries over what Washington will end up doing with tax and spending decisions to spur the sluggish economy. Many market participants fear an election-year tax cutting frenzy that will add to a federal budget deficit already projected to hit a record $399 billion this year.

Against this backdrop, the Federal Open Market Committee, composed of the Fed's seven board members in Washington and five of the central bank's 12 regional bank presidents, will meet behind closed doors Tuesday and Wednesday to review interest rate policies and set monetary growth targets for this year.

DeKalb Energy announces layoffs, restructure

DENVER (AP) — DeKalb Energy Co. announced today that it has laid off about 30 percent of its 156 U.S. employees, has restructured its management team and plans to close its Houston office to cut costs.

The Denver-based company in December had announced that it intended to signficantly reduce U.S. capital spending and overhead expenses this year because of poor industry conditions. Last May, the company reduced its work force by 10 percent.

DeKalb officials said the actions announced today will save more than $3 million a year in overhead costs.

> "Natural-gas prices have continued to be very disappointing.
> — Bruce P. Bickner, DeKalb chairman, CEO

"Natural-gas prices have continued to be very disappointing, falling to record lows on the U.S. spot market in January," said Bruce P. Bickner, DeKalb chairman and chief executive officer.

"We believe it is in the best long-term interests of our shareholders to conserve our assets and to reduce exploration activities until conditions improve," he said.

Bickner said DeKalb this year will focus on gas exploration in California's Sacramento Valley and will develop certain properties in the Williston Basin of North Dakota.

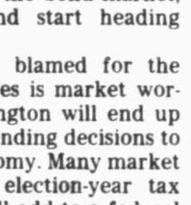

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Brokerages now handle 'deposit brokerage'

By Bill Doyle

Q. My wife and I keep all our money in federally insured certificates of deposit. We don't have enough money to play around with and can't afford to lose any.

We would like to learn what interest rates banks other than ours are paying on CDs, so we can compare and choose the one which is best for us. Where can we get this information?

Doyle

A. One way would be to walk into almost any securities brokerage firm and open an account. Besides handling the purchase and sale of stocks, bonds, mutual funds, etc., the typical brokerage also handles what has come to be known as "deposit brokerage."

In that operation, the brokerage tracks on its computers what interest rates banks and savings and loan associations around the country are paying on CDs. The brokerage then sells the CDs to its customers and collects fees from the issuing banks and S&Ls.

Another way would be to subscribe to newsletters such as Bank Rate Monitor and/or 100 Highest Yields, both published weekly by Financial Rates, Inc., P.O. Box 088888, North Palm Beach, FL 33408-8888.

The Bank Rate Monitor lists interest paid on various types of accounts by banks and S&Ls in 10 cities around the country; 100 Highest Yields lists the top 20 payers on money market accounts, six-month CDs, one-year CDs, 30-month CDs and five-year CDs.

Some newspapers print similar lists of high-interest-paying banks and S&Ls, nationwide and/or locally.

Q. Two "financial services" firms in my home city offer FDIC insured CDs with interest rates much higher than I have been able to find at local banks and S&Ls. What are the pitfalls to such alluring CDs?

A. There's no danger of losing the face value of any CD and its accrued interest, as long as you stay within the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. coverage of $100,000 per depositor at each bank or S&L.

But problems pop up if a bank or S&L at which you have a CD or other deposit goes bust. In that case, FDIC would pay you the amount you deposited, plus the interest up to the day the institution failed. That would be accomplished in reasonably short order, usually within a week or so.

However, your money would earn no interest from the date the bank or S&L went under until you put it to rk elsewhere.

If the CD you had at the failed institution was issued ome time before you bought it, you might have paid a premium price – over the CD's face value. You would lose that premium.

Also, if you bought the CD when rates were high, you would have to reinvest your money at lower interest now that rates have come way down.

Q. We had a $92,000 CD, due to mature March 16, 1992. The S&L at which we had it failed in December and the FDIC paid us $92,000, along with $2,111.14 accumulated interest. We immediately placed the $94,111.14 in CD at another bank. We will not draw any interest out before the maturity date.

For the past several years, my tax planning method of paying estimated income tax quarterly has been to let CD interest accumulate and pay the tax on the previous year's interest.

My plan will be fouled up, if the $2,111.14 interest must be included in our 1991 income. What do you advise?

A. Report that $2,111.14 as interest income on your 1991 income tax return. You have no other legitimate choice.

Interest from CDs with maturities of no more than one year and from which no interest is withdrawn before maturity can be reported on the income tax return you file for the year in which the CD matures. But when a one-year or shorter CD is paid off early as the result of a bank or S&L failure, you are required to report the interest on the return filed for the year you received the money.

Although this is out of line with your planning, it shouldn't foul up your estimated returns. You're in the clear there, as long as you will owe the Internal Revenue Service no more than $500 on April 15 and the tax you paid for 1991, through quarterly payments and/or withholding, was at least equal to your total 1990 tax or 90 percent of your 1991 tax.

Local broker helps clients cope with low interest rates

Van Pearcy, local E.D. Jones & Co. investment broker, spends time getting to know his clients.

During the last four months, Van Pearcy has been extremely busy in Midland. "Most West Texas investors who depend on interest earned from CDs and money market accounts to meet their living expenses are deeply concerned about the decline in interest rates over the past 12 months," he said.

To be more specific, a $10,000 CD purchased in Dec. 1990 would have paid about 7.95 percent or $795 in interest income. By the time that CD matured, the rates on a one-year CD had fallen to around 4.25 percent. An individual who reinvested his or her $10,000 in a one-year CD at the end of 1991 would earn approximately $425 in interest. That's a 46.5 percent cut in income in just one year!

However, Van Pearcy said that the decline in short-term rates need not be a total disaster for most investors. There are attractive alternatives available, but the key is quality and diversification. "And a big factor is finding someone you can trust to help you. This has been our success — being honest and up-front with everybody," Pearcy said.

Because of his soft, conservative approach to helping clients, Pearcy has become well-known in West Texas investment circles.

Pearcy, who is a West Texas native and a graduate of the University of Notre Dame, said that the decline in short term rates is a direct result of the economy's sluggish performance last year. In an effort to jump-start economic activity, the Federal Reserve Board systematically cut the discount rate (the interest rate it charges on loans to banks) six times in 1991.

As the discount rate has fallen, rates on CDs and money markets have followed.

Understandably, investors have begun seeking higher yields. Many have turned to the bond market because the rates on intermediate and long-term bonds have not fallen as dramatically.

Long-term bonds (13 years or longer) currently offer the highest yields. However, investors should be aware that higher yields translate into higher risk. When interest rates increase, the price of long-term bonds fall more dramatically than those of short-term bonds. This will not affect investors who hold their bonds to maturity. But, if bonds are sold before maturity, those who own long-term bonds could lose a portion of their principal if rates have risen.

Intermediate-term bonds, on the other hand, carry less market risk than long-term bonds without dramatic differences in yield. Currently, insured corporate bonds in the 10-year range yield 90 percent of what a 30-year bond offers.

Another attractive alternative for some investors would be quality equity investments, which have historically provided the most attractive long-term returns of any financial investment.

Pearcy states that the most successful approach to quality stock investing has historically been a long-term, buy-and-hold strategy.

He advises clients to build and maintain a diverse portfolio in companies across a broad spectrum of industries and/or invest in good performing equity mutual funds.

If you're interested in visiting with a conservative investment professional, you should call Van Pearcy at 683-1516. Or drop by his E.D. Jones office at 1509 W. Wall St. (next door to Buddy's Flowers). There is no charge for consultation.

Great Valentine gifts for moms-to-be at Dressing for Two

Harriet Whiting

"Oh! I wish you had been here when I needed you!" This comment is a frequent one at Dressing for Two by Stacy as mothers come in for infantwear and baby gifts. Now Dressing for Two is here for those dressing for two.

Dressing for Two is celebrating Valentine's with a drawing for an outfit (no purchase necessary to win!). You may register for it anytime from now through Feb. 23.

Are you looking for a valentine for a mother-to-be? We'll help you select the perfect gift. Of course, we have lingerie and we have gift certificates.

Or perhaps the valentine you choose will be for the nursery. We are as excited as the prospective parents as they make their choices from custom lines.

The winner of the rocking horse in the pre-Christmas drawing is Renae Coit. She says her little two-year-old daughter loves riding it. Renae had the horse custom-painted in hearts and primary colors to go with her nursery bedspread.

The rocking horse is from a custom line that includes wall shelves, wastebaskets, lamps and so on. Discounts are available for larger orders.

Stacy models one of the number of fashions that are for "before" and "after." Stylish and comfortable, these fashions do not appear to be maternity clothes.

Delightful spring clothes are here and are continuing to arrive. From play outfits to career to party (some lease-option) — shades bright to soft — a variety of prints, solids, colors and prices.

For example, come see our Edgar line in lovely royal and fushia with lighter complimentary shades of pinks, blues and lavenders. You can mix and match to your heart's delight. Choose from tops, shorts, shells, jackets and pants.

A number of fashions are before and after. Among these is a Japanese weekend jumpsuit that will make the expectant mom look great in her early months of pregnancy and can then be enjoyed in seasons yet to come. Travis jeans — the ultimate jean — the jean that looks as a jean should — will look good when mom is no longer pregnant. And Dressing for Two has Travis jean shorts, too.

Newly expectant mothers as well as new mothers are delighted with the modern cuts that give stylish comfortable wear without appearing to be maternity clothes.

Come by Dressing for Two by Stacy (phone 520-2229) in Midland Plaza — across Midkiff from the mall — just south of Service Merchandise.

Mid-West Door & Window helps protect you from elements

With cold weather upon us and West Texas spring winds not far away, there's no better time than now to protect your home from the harsh elements with storm windows and doors from Mid-West Door & Window.

Mid-West Door & Window has been providing quality storm windows and doors since 1976. Because it is locally owned and operated, Midlanders know they can trust Mid-West to do the best work in town and be available for service after the sale.

Since Mid-West sells only custom-fitted storm windows, you can be assured of the best fit and the least amount of air infiltration. Storm windows not only provide a more energy efficient home, but create a quieter and more dust-free environment. Not to mention the fact that they give a home's exterior a perky face lift.

Mid-West offers a wide selection of storm windows in all shapes, finishes and prices — there's one for just about every home and pocketbook.

Also available are Peerless storm doors for extra insulation, beauty and security. These doors have tempered safety glass, adjustable door sweeps and double locksets with keyed exterior locks. Mid-West backs up this door with a one-year limited warranty. For a feeling of safety, Mid-West offers a security storm door from Emco with solid steel security studs, solid cast aluminum decorative bars and solid brass key lock latch set with double throw deadbolt action.

Other services offered by Mid-West are complete door sales and installation. Mid-West has a large selection of doors to choose from, including wood and steel doors. These are available with leaded, beveled glass or raised panels to complement any decor. Steel doors are not only great for standing up to the harsh West Texas climate, but they offer added security as well.

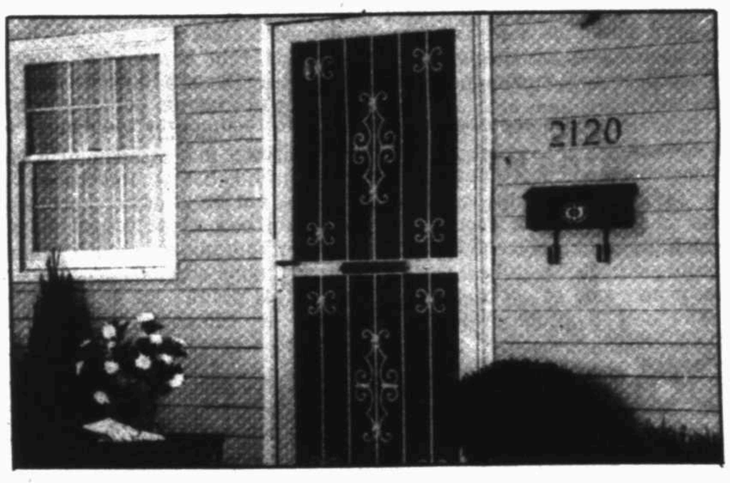

Skylights are also a specialty of Mid-West Door & Window. Skylights and roof windows are a relatively simple way to light up any room, especially one in the interior of the home. They are available with clear or tinted flat, tempered glass or acrylic domes and roof windows are available with electric operators. There's no better way to brighten up your home than with the sun's natural light.

If you're tired of painting and scraping, let Mid-West apply vinyl or steel siding to your home's exterior. Whether it's just the trim on your brick home or the entire exterior, siding is a great way to reduce maintenance and improve your home's appearance for years to come.

Call 682-4632 or come by and visit with Mike Smith and his staff at Mid-West Door & Window and receive prompt, courteous attention.

The showrooms has a large display of storm and replacement windows, entry and storm doors and skylights for your viewing. Free, no-obligation estimates are also available.

Mid-West Door & Window is located at 2400 W. Front St. in Midland.

The Emco security storm door is a beautiful way to protect a home. It incorporates many features never before available on a door of its kind.

Russian viewers turn thumbs down on American TV fare

By T. Elaine Carey
N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — Vasily Andreyev almost got fired this week. His boss caught him sneaking out early to go home and watch American television.

Told that his work wasn't finished, Andreyev pleaded for understanding. "Can't it wait until tomorrow? If I don't leave now, I will miss the beginning of 'Napoleon and Josephine.'"

His boss let him go.

For the first time, Russians have been treated — or in the eyes of some, subjected — to a week of American prime-time television dubbed into Russian.

Warner Brothers International Television Distribution provided movies, cartoons, and prime-time news and entertainment programs to Russian Television, hoping to whet an appetite among viewers that could someday produce big profits.

But most Muscovites who spent a week glued to the tube don't think Warner Brothers has struck gold.

That includes Andreyev, a chauffeur, and his wife, Irina, a secretary, and they are exactly the kind of viewer the company is courting.

"TV is my passion," said Andreyev, 39. He and his wife have an imported color television in their kitchen and watch it while they eat.

Without a doubt, "Murphy Brown" was a bust. "We didn't watch it very long. I mean it just wasn't funny," Andreyev complained.

In one episode, for example, Murphy Brown's secretary reads aloud the newscaster's daily schedule, which reminds her "to buy Tampax." The canned laughter chimes in. Andreyev wrinkled his forehead, looked at Irina and flipped the channel. They watched the Russian news the rest of the night.

"It seems moronic. Maybe you have to be an American to understand this," he said. "What we find out about politics in our country now on the news is far more interesting and more important."

As for American television news, Andreyev doesn't understand why anyone would care about a network news anchor. Here, newscasters are not celebrities. They merely read the news. A few won fame because they dared report about last summer's Communist crackdown and were fired, but they are heroes, not stars.

Even the movies weren't big hits.

"These movies, I watch them with one eye half open. Their plots are weak, and they ruin what could be riveting mysteries with unbelievable romances between people who don't seem real anyway."

"A good mystery or detective story should keep you on the edge of your seat with your brain racing to figure out what happens next or who did it. These American films don't challenge you at all."

He had just finished watching "The Postman Always Rings Twice" and "Bonnie and Clyde."

Cartoons and the miniseries "Napoleon and Josephine" appear to be the only successes. "Bugs Bunny" is a resounding favorite, followed by "Gummi Bears."

American cartoons are faster, more colorful and have a zany edge that Russian ones lack. The slapstick element mesmerized the Andreyevs. "They always do something unexpected," said Andreyev.

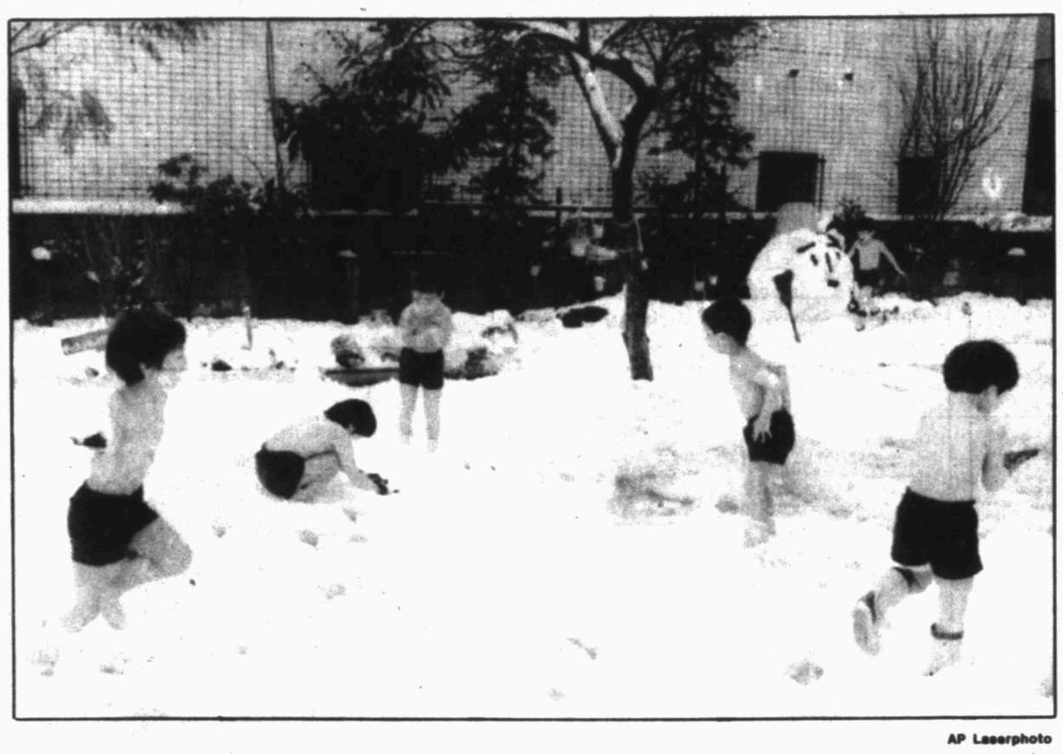

Russian cartoons don't have that quality of appealing to big and little kids at the same time, he said.

"My nephews and I watched 'Bugs Bunny,' and I definitely was the biggest kid laughing the most."

These days, Russians spend much of their television viewing time watching talk shows.

When the Russian legislature's debates were first aired live, national productivity plummeted because so many workers stopped working to watch. That's why the sessions are now taped for nighttime viewing.

While this week's test of American TV wasn't love at first sight, Western companies aren't giving up on the Russians. Next month, a Western group is planning the first-ever public opinion poll to test Russian viewers' preferences.

Savage satire of Middle East gets generally good reviews

By Chris Hedges
N.Y. Times News Service

CAIRO, Egypt — A savage satire of the Middle East, portraying Arabs as hypocritical and unwilling to accept the notion that their governments and mores are bankrupt, has shattered the norms of Arab theater and broken several social taboos.

The production, "In Plain Arabic" by Lenin Ramly, ridicules Middle East culture and politics, showing Arabs chanting slogans rather than discussing differences and blaming "Zionist, Western imperialism" for all their problems.

The biting dialogue in the nearly four-hour play, which at one point includes a Western critique of Arab society that draws frequent applause, is a milestone in the Arab world. It is an example of the increasing artistic and press freedom permitted by President Hosni Mubarak's government and the willingness by some Arab intellectuals to begin to criticize their own societies publicly.

"The play is a call for people to talk to each other with honesty and sincerity," the director, Mohammed Sobhi, said. "We have to understand that we have a problem, and the problem is that we do not recognize that we have a problem."

The events in the play occur in a small student hostel in London with 14 Arabs from across the Middle East.

The actors faithfully mimic regional dialects and slang and often parody rulers, from Col. Moammar Gadhafi, the Libyan leader, to King Hussein of Jordan.

Persian Gulf Arabs spend more time on the disco floor than on prayer mats. The Iraqi is a large, strutting bully who keeps threatening to beat people up. The Syrian nervously glances over his shoulder to see if the secret police are behind him.

The Algerian, reminding the other Arabs that he is from "the country of a million martyrs," objects to everything on principle. The Sudanese is either hungry or drunk, and the Jordanian agrees with everyone, no matter how contradictory the views.

The play centers on a Palestinian student, Fayez Ammar, who early on is beaten up by British thugs. Stumbling on stage, covered with blood, he appeals to his friends for help, describing in detail not only the attack, but also a stinging rebuke.

"I wish he only insulted me but he insulted all of you!" he shouts breathlessly. "He called me an Arab!"

But the rage of the group soon dissipates into bickering.

"Tell me," the Saudi asks of the Palestinian, "were there women in the group?"

In a scene at a disco, in which the Arabs wear white masks and Western clothes, the Palestinian is seduced and lured away by a vamp who turns out to represent Israel. The fruitless and self-defeating efforts to free the Palestinian take up the rest of the play.

The conference convened by the Arabs to address the kidnapping descends into chaos, with everyone shouting that he wants to be the chairman.

"Let me remind you of our permanent agreement never to discuss politics, religion, our origins, or sex," the Moroccan tells the gathering.

The meeting concludes with nothing more than a flowery resolution affirming Arab unity and brotherhood.

When Western students ask to debate the Arabs on whether the Palestinian is a terrorist, the play hits home with a series of acerbic critiques.

An Egyptian journalist, who volunteers to take the part of the West in a practice session before the debate, soon reduces the Arabs to near hysteria and loses both his job and his fiancee.

"If one thousand people disappeared in an Arab country would one of you be courageous enough to open his mouth?" he asks.

An Arab woman asks the journalist: "When you have freedom and civilization why do you have homosexuality, theft, murder, and rape?"

A woman also posing as a Westerner answers: "Oh, you who are so pure, so wise, who never have shame. The scandals you hide outnumber ours. The difference is that we don't lie."

When the debate is held the Arabs walk out before it starts.

"We object to what you are going to say," the Iraqi says.

The reaction to the play has been unusually positive. "The play courageously tackles one of the main problems of our existence as Arabs and Egyptians," said Ismail Adli, the theater critic for the newspaper Al Ahali.

Ibrahim Mourad, a 41-year-old pharmacist, said as he stood in the lobby after seeing the play: "It's an excellent work. The subject matter is new. It's a new way of thought. It helps expose our reality."

Another theatergoer, Dr. Hani Ali Samy, said after the performance: "We have to stand up and be critical. We have to be logical."

Prince Charles starts architecture institute

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles, a stern critic of many modern buildings, said Thursday he is setting up his own Institute of Architecture to teach the "timeless values."

"It is in bringing together the best traditions of the past, and the diverse technological potential of the future, that I hope my institute may become a crucible in which the architecture of the 21st century can begin to be forged," the prince said in a statement.

The new institute, funded by anonymous donors and charitable trusts, opens in October with a one-year foundation course for 150 students from Britain and other countries. The studies will be in addition to students' full-time education in colleges of architecture or civil engineering.

The prince has no architectural training but his attacks on the ugliness and lack of comfort of many modern buildings have won widespread public support.

And his position as heir to the throne is influential enough to have forced the redesign or abandonment of public buildings he has attacked.

Charles made a splash in 1984 when he denounced a proposed extension to the National Gallery in Trafalgar Square as a "monstrous carbuncle." As a result, the extension was redesigned by U.S. architect Robert Venturi and opened last July.

Charles is criticized by modernist architects, who say his position as royal heir gives him too much power and privilege.

Couple who gave 'intimate' concerts fights city hall over Bach taxes

By Laura Myers
Associated Press writer

SAN JOSE, Calif. — The ads for "intimate" concerts brought the vice cops to Bill and Pamela Resch's home, but the only thing she was tickling were the ivories. The city shut her down anyway and is seeking Bach taxes.

"This is crazy," the classical concert pianist said Friday. "If the city went after everybody who was teaching and playing piano in their home we'd have a lot of little old ladies out there who are criminals."

But it's hard to fight City Hall, especially if you turn your home into an occasional Concert Hall with a 1906 Steinway grand piano in the parlor. And if you runs ads touting $25 "intimate, romantic experiences with music."

"No one's interested in giving them a hard time, but what they were doing wasn't allowed," Assistant City Manager Regina Williams said. "Unfortunately, we're stuck in the role of playing the Big Bad City."

Indeed, the city has been attacked as a musical killjoy by local columnists, editorial writers and conservative National Review writer William F. Buckley, who has attended one of the Resches musical evenings.

"If San Jose can't figure out a way to permit an artist to play the piano at night for paying guests, maybe the good old USA just doesn't have it any longer, to make jobs-jobs-jobs-jobs, and let us all be free and affluent, and proud," Buckley wrote.

The city struck its first sour note in the case six months ago.

In July, after vice officers went undercover at one of the couple's 12 to 14 annual "salon concerts," Resch was arrested and fingerprinted in his white tie and tails in front of his wife and several paying guests.

"I don't know why they didn't arrest Pamela, too," scoffed the couple's attorney, Michael Hurley. "I guess they thought Bill was the brains behind the scheme, or maybe they thought they had a conspiracy going."

Thus began what might be called Interlude in Red Tape.

San Jose officials said the Resches were operating an illegal business by charging people $25 each for a two-hour concert in their antique-filled English cottage. The neighborhood isn't zoned for commercial enterprises.

Then, the city said the couple owed back taxes, plus interest and penalties to the tune of $1,125 for the three years they held the concerts, which attracted 20 to 30 guests each time, but no complaints.

The bill was due Friday, but the city gave the couple a reprieve. On Monday, the Resches were scheduled to meet with tax officials to plead their case again.

City Councilman David Pandori, who represents the downtown area where the Resches live, failed to persuade his peers to approve a resolution to give the couple an exemption.

"What bothers me is we've got all these problems in the city and we're wasting time trying to stop something that nobody complained about in the first place,"
