Reagan submits his final budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today sent Congress a $1.15 trillion farewell budget that attacked his biggest economic failure, the federal deficit, by offering up again some of his cherished ideas about reducing the size of government.

The president's ninth and final spending plan — out of balance like all of his others — is largely an academic exercise, certain to be overhauled to reflect the priorities of a Democratic-controlled Congress and an incoming president, George Bush, after his inauguration Jan. 20.

Bush aides said that the president-elect agreed with the general thrust of the Reagan document, especially the absence of any new taxes, but still intended to submit his own recommendations after taking office.

If Reagan's ideas were adopted in their entirety, the deficit would fall to $92.5 billion in the 1990 fiscal year, the lowest since 1981 when he took office.

"This budget shows that a gradual elimination of the deficit is possible without raising taxes," Reagan said in his budget message. "It can be done in a reasonable, responsible way — with discipline and fairness. New taxes are not required."

In his proposals for the fiscal year that starts Oct. 1, 1989, Reagan advocated terminating a total of 82 government programs, slashing spending on farm programs by $9.7 billion and trimming the growth in Medicare and Medicaid, the giant health programs, by about $5 billion. The Pentagon's budget, on the other hand, was awarded a big spending increase.

The budget would provide increased spending for two of the government's most pressing new problems, bailing out hundreds of insolvent savings and loan institutions and cleaning up contaminated nuclear weapons plants. AIDS research and space exploration would also receive increases.

While Reagan was presenting his budget only 11 days before leaving office, many of its broad outlines were expected to be adopted by Bush, who has said he will unveil his own proposals to a special joint session of Congress soon after aking office.

In two key respects, the two budgets will be alike. Both men pledged to cut the deficit, which is projected to climb this year to $161.5 billion, without resorting to new taxes and without touching Social Security.

But Bush is expected to seek a smaller increase in defense spending while allocating more money in such areas as child care, cleaning up the environment and housing the homeless.

Skeptical Democrats believe Bush will find it impossible to fulfill all his campaign promises for higher spending while relying on a "flexible freeze" on other government programs to eliminate the budget deficit without resorting to new taxes.

"President Reagan's final budget is really irrelevant at this point," Rep. William Gray, D-Pa., former chairman of the House Budget Committee, said today on "CBS This Morning." "It is a farewell gesture that every president is required to do. It only becomes relevant if George Bush today, tomorrow or this week says, 'that's my budget.' I don't expect him to do that."

British jet crashes along highway after engines fail

KEGWORTH, England (AP) — Both engines on a brand-new Boeing 737 apparently failed before the plane crashed along a highway, killing at least 44 people, officials said today. Aviation experts said the chances of double-engine failure were about 10 million to one.

"So far the evidence, although by no means conclusive, is consistent with the right engine having stopped before impact and there are also signs of fire in the left engine," Transport Minister Paul Channon said in an interview on British Broadcasting Corp. television.

Officials raised the number of confirmed dead to 44 late today. Eighty-two people were injured in the crash.

Investigators recovered the flight recorders from the wreckage today, hoping they might shed light on what caused the accident. Firefighters pumped foam onto the crumpled jet to prevent seeping aviation fuel from catching fire.

The Belfast-bound British Midland Airways jet carrying 126 people broke into three pieces on the edge of Britain's main north-south highway, the M1, in central England on Sunday night.

The twin-engine Boeing 737-400 narrowly missed the small town of Kegworth and plowed into an embankment just a few hundred yards short of the runway as the pilot struggled to make an emergency landing at East Midland Airport, 100 miles north of London.

■ Witnesses say crash reminds them of Lockerbie tragedy, related graphic — 2A

Ham radio operator Mervyn Solloway said he heard "not a shouted message, but a bit of a frantic one to say, 'We've got problems with the other engine.' That was the last I heard from the aircraft."

British Midland Airways said sabotage was not suspected in the crash, which came less than three weeks after a bomb blew apart Pan Am Flight 103 over the Scottish village of Lockerbie, killing all 259 people on board and 11 on the ground.

William Tench, retired head of Britain's Air Accident Investigation Board, said the odds against both engines failing on a Boeing 737 were 10 million to one.

"I would look for some inadvertent technical mistake such as something incorrect being done to the engines during turnaround, either inadvertently or deliberately," Tench said.

British Midland said the jet was delivered just 12 weeks ago and had flown less than 500 hours. It grounded its other 737-400 for inspection.

Pilot Kevin Hunt, a 25-year veteran, was among the badly injured cut from the wreckage. The last survivor, a woman, was pulled from a tangle of metal and crushed seats more than seven hours after the crash.

Nigel Clifton, manager of the Queen's Medical Center in Nottingham, said many of the injured suffered head injuries and broken limbs. He said most of the victims were Irish.

The plane's two giant wings, heavily loaded with fuel, remained virtually intact. The severed tail section of Flight BD92 loomed from woodland alongside the highway, surrounded by wreckage from the severed center and nose sections.

"It makes you wonder how anybody walked from it," said Leicestershire county Chief Fire Officer Barry Pearson.

Spelling bee winner will visit Capital

Can you spell rhodochriosite? Would you like to visit the White House and the national monuments? If the answer to these questions is "yes," then you can enter the Reporter-Telegram's Spelling Bee — provided you have not yet passed the eighth grade and are younger than 16.

The local winner will be awarded a trip to Washington, D.C., to participate in the 62nd annual Scripps-Howard National Spelling Bee the week of May 28-June 3. Airfare for the winner and escort will be provided by American Airlines. Scripps-Howard will provide several tours of the nation's capital city and cash prizes of more than $14,500.

Students from public and private schools in Midland, Glasscock, Upton and Martin counties will be having preliminary spelling bees in their individual schools. The regional spelling bee, which will determine the winner who will go to the national competition, will be April 15 in Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Auditorium.

The National Spelling Bee was begun in 1925 by the Louisville Courier-Journal and included nine sponsoring newspapers. In 1941, Scripps-Howard acquired the rights to the competition.

Dee Pitts of the Reporter-Telegram is director of the local Bee. Local winners will need Social Security numbers to enter the White House. For additional information, call 682-5311, ext. 160.

Rochester may have to pay $7 million in restitution

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Odessa real-estate developer Louis Rochester, who last month was meted out a five-year probated prison sentence on a federal bank-fraud conviction, could be ordered to pay $7-million in restitution if U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton rules against Rochester and upholds a request by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. that Rochester pay a $7-million defaulted note.

The judge reportedly was considering the order today, according to court officials.

The FSLIC in a letter to Bunton asked that the 70-year-old Rochester pay almost $7.2-million on a defaulted Odessa Savings Association loan made to Arlington developer James Pruett.

Rochester, though denying he had signed the note, was a partner with Pruett on the Stagecoach Estates housing development that was to be financed by the loan.

Pruett had defaulted on the note.

Rochester was a director and later an advisory director of the savings association and has made the association profitable in joint developments.

Rochester, who was indicted on 25 counts, including racketeering and concealing assets, was convicted by a jury on four counts of fraud involving the Stagecoach development.

On each of the four counts, Bunton sentenced the millionaire Rochester to five years in prison, suspended the sentences, and placed him on probation.

Tobacco industry ads declare 'Enough is enough'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The tobacco industry, bidding to stem the tide of anti-smoking rules, today took out newspaper ads around the country declaring "Enough is enough" and touted a survey indicating three of four Americans do not support smoking bans in workplaces and restaurants.

The industry's counter-initiative through its lobbying organization, the Tobacco Institute, comes during the week marking the 25th anniversary of the first of the surgeon generals' reports to declare smoking a health hazard.

A spokeswoman for the institute, Brennan Dawson, noted some anti-smoking groups are pushing for a "smoke-free" society. "To achieve their purposes," she said, "anti-smokers are turning to censorship, harassment, punitive taxes, and intrusion into personal and private decision-making."

"The majority of Americans, according to objective polling, do not support these anti-smoking efforts," she said.

The institute's poll was conducted by the Washington firm of Hamilton, Frederick & Schneiders, which said it randomly telephoned 1,500 Americans over age 18 between Nov. 23 and Dec. 6, 1988. The respondents included 1,099 nonsmokers and 401 smokers, the firm said.

An overwhelming number of those polled indicated they are satisfied with current levels of smoking restrictions, and opposed outright bans in the workplace or public areas. The survey has a margin of error of plus or minus three points.

Among the findings:

— Eight out of 10 people believe it should be left to employers and their employees to determine workplace smoking rules, without government interference. Even among non-smokers, more than 70 percent supported that approach.

Not all students learn to read at same level

EDITOR'S NOTE: In observance of "The Year of the Young Reader" programs being held this week in Midland, the Reporter-Telegram is publishing a six-part series detailing several issues that affect children and their reading skills. In today's installment, methods educators use to teach reading and some problems they and their students encounter will be reviewed.

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Before a child can read, he must understand the letters of the alphabet and their corresponding sounds.

A, e, i, o, u are different from b, c, d, f, g, h, j, k, l, m, n, p, q, r, s, t, v, w, x and z, he learns. And then there's that letter, y, which could go either way.

Children are taught that these sounds, when said in conjunction, form words.

Educators call this the phonetics approach to teaching reading.

There is a word for everything in the whole world, the small person must then fathom.

A word, he learns, is a symbol for an object's meaning.

The key to unlocking the mysteries of the universe is found in that seemingly scant bit of instruction.

Getting the child to put the key into the lock and turn it, however, can be a different story.

"Gifted" children, those whose test scores merit the designation, readily turn the key and are often

THE YOUNG READER:
new words ... new worlds

reading by the time they enroll in school, explained Pat Mauer, the school district's coordinator of the Gifted Education Midland (GEM) program and Carver Elementary principal.

The gifted child's parents may be well-educated and provide for the child a middle-to-upper-level socio-economic environment, she said, though stressing gifted children also come from families with low-income levels.

There might be lots of books around the house or a computer sitting on a desk in the den.

GEM students read for fun. They read the encyclopedia to access information about a subject. They like to read biographies of people about whom they're curious.

Because of the "prior knowledge" the gifted student brings to class, a teacher has the luxury of accelerating instruction into higher levels, Ms. Mauer explained.

"Emphasis is turned to content and using the medium to confront important ideas," she said.

During this study, the child is exposed at an early age to methods of "critical thinking" and the "language experience," which is comprised of speaking, reading, writing and listening.

For example, GEM sixth-graders conduct a "Readers' Theatre," in which they present stories they've read in a play form.

The procedure hones the child's skills in critically analyzing a story and emphasizing character relationships.

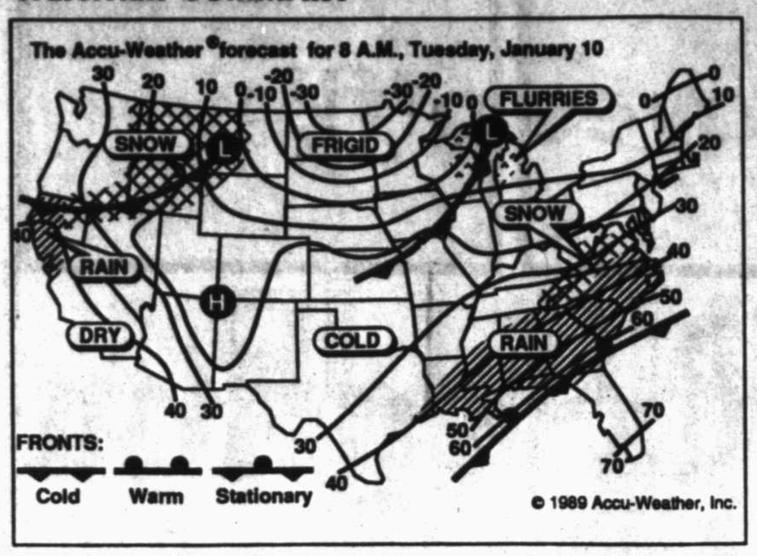

"The most important thing is to give them as many different experiences as you can," Ms. Mauer said.

Embodying the majority of elementary students are the ones who fall in the middle. They aren't in a gifted program, but aren't, as one educator described, the "reluctant readers."

One reading teacher concurred with Ms. Mauer that the "average" child who is read to by his parents brings a greater bit of knowledge with him to the classroom.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Temperatures to be warmer

From Staff and Wire Reports

Clear skies and slightly warmer temperatures are in the forecast for tonight with with low reaching into the middle 20s and winds from the southwest at 5-10 mph, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tuesday will be sunny and warmer with the high in the lower 60s, and winds continuing from the southwest at 5-15 mph.

Sunday's high of 45 was 36 degrees cooler than the record high of 81 set for that date in 1969. The overnight low of 19 was 12 degrees warmer than the record low set for this date in 1967.

STATE

Clear skies were over West Texas early this morning, while high-level clouds covered North Texas and low overcast skies prevailed in South Texas.

Scattered rain was along the coast. The low clouds and rain were the result of warm moist gulf air flowing over cooler air at the surface over South Texas.

The Texas forecast called for generally clear skies over the western part of the state and mostly cloudy skies elsewhere tonight. Scattered showers and thunderstorms were expected over South Texas and Southeast Texas tonight.

NATION

Moist Gulf of Mexico air in tandem with cold air produced a potpourri of sleet, freezing rain and snow today from the lower Mississippi Valley across the Tennessee Valley to the central Appalachians.

In Michigan, snow combined with winds up to 60 mph Sunday to reduce visibility on the Mackinac Bridge and forced the Mackinac Bridge Authority to close the structure to traffic for an hour, authority spokeswoman Lorraine Garries said.

"We didn't get much accumulation, it was just blowing," Garries said, adding it was only the third time in 11 years that the bridge was forced to shut down because of weather.

Snowfall totals across Michigan's upper peninsula ranged up to 13 inches, but the lower peninsula had snowfall totaling 1 to 4 inches.

Winter weather also affected the Northwest today, with snow falling over eastern parts of the Pacific Northwest, Montana and Idaho. Between 6 and 12 inches of new snow was expected in parts of Idaho by tonight.

Strong winds were blowing across the Rockies' east slopes in Wyoming and Montana. Winds gusted to 60 mph in the upper Yellowstone River Valley in Montana.

Witness says 'it seems miracle' that British jet did not explode

KEGWORTH, England (AP) — Joe Weston-Webb heard the jet come low over his home and instantly thought of Lockerbie. There was a crash, stunned silence, then screams from passengers trapped inside a concertina of smashed seats.

"It was horrendous," he said. "It seems a miracle that any one got out alive...and I can't believe that it all didn't go up in flames."

The British Midland Airways Boeing 737-400 jet, with 126 people aboard, crashed beside the main north-south highway in central England Sunday as it attempted an emergency landing at East Midlands Airport with an engine on fire.

The second air disaster in Britain in less than three weeks sent a collective shudder through this village of 2,000 on the edge of the airport as residents remembered the Scottish town of Lockerbie and the Dec. 21 crash of Pan Am Flight 103.

All 259 people aboard that Boeing 747 died when a bomb ripped the plane apart in the air, and 11 people in Lockerbie were killed by falling wreckage.

"We have been very lucky," said George Mellors, 46, another Kegworth resident. "It could easily have been another Lockerbie."

David Harris ran into his garden and watched in horror as the plane flew 60 feet over his head and crashed nearby, turning the night sky red.

"Thoughts of Lockerbie came into my mind," he said. "The pilot did well to avoid our built-up area in Kegworth village. It was only seconds away from hitting the center of the community."

Flight 92 from London to Belfast hit an embankment on the side of the M1 highway about a half-mile from the airport and broke in pieces.

Rachel Meadows, 19, of Derby, said she saw the plane come down just yards away as she was driving on the highway.

"It seemed to clip the embankment on one side of the motorway and then just bounce across before it plowed into the trees. There was an almighty flash but it didn't explode. A lot of cars on the motorway began to brake hard. I thought it was going to be a massive pileup but luckily no cars were hit by the plane."

When he arrived, everthing was silent. "People started screaming later," he said.

"The seats were all slapped on top of each other where they had gone forward. And the seats had all gone forward toward the cockpit end and the people had all been shunted together. There were people in a sort of concertina, you had to take the seats from the back of the people in front to get them out," Weston-Webb said.

Many seemed to have smashed ankles and legs and facial injuries, he said.

Police Inspector Graham Ward said: "It was a terrible sight. Everything was done to pull people out as quickly as possible. We had to flatten trees across fields to get to the plane."

CRASH

American investigators from Boeing and General Electric Co., which helped make the plane's new CFM-56 engines, were to join British investigators at the crash site.

Survivor John McCrea said passengers were being served dinner when the plane got into trouble soon after takeoff from London's Heathrow Airport.

"The captain said 'prepare for emergency landing' or something to that effect, so we braced our heads and about five seconds...afterward we were down on the ground with a crash," McCrea said from his bed at the Derby Royal Infirmary in nearby Nottingham.

Belfast lawyer Mary McHugh, 26, another survivor, said: "I thought we were all going to get burned alive. I just thought: 'That's it, I'm dead.' I was terrified of burning to death."

At least four British Army soldiers serving in the troubled Northern Ireland province were killed. The Royal Ulster Constabulary, the Northern Ireland police force, said "several" of its officers were on board.

As East Midland Airport, the airline's home base, reopened today, 55 relatives of the dead and injured were flown in from Belfast.

Queen Elizabeth II said in a message of sympathy that she was deeply shocked by "news of a second major air disaster, and relieved to learn that there were, on this occasion, many survivors."

The plane took off at 7:52 p.m., and about eight minutes later the captain reported "severe vibrations in one of the engines," said British Midland Chairman Michael Bishop.

Hunt reported an engine on fire, then said he had it under control and asked for clearance for an emergency landing.

READ

But establishing a fluency in the phonetics lessons might take a little longer, explained Peggy Hailes, a fourth-grade teacher at Lamar Elementary.

In kindergarten through the second-grade, the letter-sound association is stressed. Once a child is versed in that, the focus will ascend to comprehension mastery, Ms. Hailes said.

"Here come the thinking skills. Not details, but thinking skills.

"Too often, reading turns them off. (There sometimes) is very little reading done in reading class. There are too many work sheets," the Lamar teacher explained.

A good reading teacher will read to her students and even stretch above their supposed level, Ms. Hailes added.

Once again, the message that "parents play an integral part" was mentioned.

"The attitude (of the parent) shows up in the child. Parents who are involved with their children have the most successful kids."

The third subset of children — those who would rather do almost anything than read — are the students Jones Elementary teacher Nancy Dyer dubs her "reluctant readers."

Ms. Dyer heads Jones' "Enrichment Reading" program, which is geared to the child who doesn't like to read.

"There is nothing medically wrong with them. They've just had large doses of television, pop culture, a hectic life and a mobile family" in many cases, she explained.

"Let's face it. Mom is stretched in so many ways. Bed time and lap stories have gone by the way."

In addition, the reluctant reader may suffer from a low self-esteem, she surmised. If he feels he isn't good at anything, he likely will feel "I can't master this either" when it comes to reading.

In her classes, children take an active role in reading. They form storytelling groups and act out stories which often are presented to other classes.

Parents, here more than ever perhaps, must take an active part in countering the reluctant reader's move away from books.

Not only is a mother stretched in many different directions, the teacher is as well, Ms. Dyer stressed.

"There just aren't enough hours in the day. We can't always provide the culture and background knowledge the child needs" to be an accomplished reader. "He must bring experience to the page he reads."

"Skill 'em and drill 'em is dead," Ms. Dyer added. "Set them loose and let them read. Get them 'the magic card,' the library card."

Taking children to the museum or to a play are other ways a parent can help the process of cultural integration.

A parent who reads to his child for a mere six minutes a day, research shows, can increase a child's potential for becoming a better reader.

In the Year of the Young Reader, children will be taught, she hopes, that reading doesn't have to be boring.

"They're turned off, but they're also maybe a tiny bit lazy. In a visual world, it's easier to get information, drama and comedy through the visual media," Ms. Dyer added.

Tuesday: Reading, writing and thinking...how they are related.

BUDGET

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, called Reagan's proposal "amiable fiction."

Reagan will leave office with a budget that proposes collecting $1.059 trillion in revenues and spending $1.152 trillion, leaving a budget deficit of $92.5 billion.

The deficit, if realized, would be the lowest since a $73.7 billion imbalance between spending and revenues in 1981, the year Reagan took office with a pledge to balance the budget by 1984. Reagan saw that promise swamped by a tide of red ink which has almost tripled the national debt.

In his budget message, Reagan blamed the huge deficits on the severe 1981-82 recession, which reduced government revenues, and on the refusal of Congress to go along with his spending cuts. But he predicted that the deficit could be totally eliminated by 1993 if Congress adopts his spending cuts. Similar predictions of future budget deficits in past Reagan budgets have proved to be wildly optimistic, however.

"We have an opportunity this year to put the worst of the deficit problem behind us and enable the next administration to begin its term of office with a clean slate," Reagan said.

Reagan's $92.5 billion deficit target for 1990 would be well within the Gramm-Rudman requirement which sets a $100 billion deficit goal for 1990. This law establishes declining deficit targets leading to a balanced budget in 1993, holding out the threat of across-the-board spending cuts if the targets are not met.

Many private economists believe Reagan's 1990 deficit estimate is based on overly optimistic assessments about how the economy will perform, including expectations that growth will continue at a rapid clip while inflation and interest rates both decline.

Among the 82 individual programs recommended for termination by Reagan are the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Legal Services Corporation, the Economic Development Administration, the Appalachian Regional Commission, direct loans by the Small Business Administration, Amtrak railroad passenger subsidies, mass transit grants and subsidies to airlines serving small airports.

Reagan has tried and failed over the years to get Congress to go along with these proposals.

The president's final budget protects his defense buildup, one of the hallmarks of his presidency, by proposing a 5.4 percent increase to $315.2 billion in spending authority, 2 percent higher than the expected rate of inflation. As part of the increase, the budget seeks a 44 percent increase in spending authority for development of the spaced-based Star Wars nuclear defense shield.

Spending authority reflects not only the checks that will be written in a given year but also authorization for outlays on weapons systems that are begun in one year but paid for in future years. Defense outlays for 1990 are projected at $303 billion, compared to estimated outlays of $298.3 billion in 1989.

The president also proposes making a downpayment of $900 million to start cleaning up and modernizing the government's aging nuclear weapons facilities, a project that the Energy Department estimates could cost as much as $128 billion over the next two decades.

Likewise, the budget projects spending $16 billion this year and $9 billion next year to bail out hundreds of insolvent savings and loan institutions.

In the area of cuts, Reagan's budget proposed trimming the huge Medicare program, which provides health care to Social Security recipients, by $3.2 billion below the projected increase for 1990, primarily by reducing the fees received by doctors and hospitals.

Minister says Libya doesn't have chemical weapon plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Libya's foreign minister says his country does not intend to produce chemical weapons "for the time being" but is seriously worried about possible U.S. military action against Libya.

"I don't think our know-how will enable us — even if we decided to do (so) — to produce chemical weapons in the very near future," Foreign Minister Jadalla Azouz Ettalhi said Sunday.

"We have never had a plan to produce chemical weapons," he said on the CBS program "Face the Nation."

Under further questioning, the Libyan official qualified his position, saying, "We have not the intention. We have no plan for the time being."

The United States contends that a plant in the city of Rabta, about 60 miles southwest of the Libyan capital of Tripoli, is a factory for producing poison gas. Libyan officials say it is a pharmaceutical plant.

Meanwhile, Newsweek magazine quoted an unnamed foreign official this week who claimed to have seen the U.S. data on the plant and said it included construction blueprints and details of the clandestine commercial network through which the plant was assembled.

U.S. intelligence sources told Newsweek a machine-tool shop 100 yards from the plant has already started turning out stainless-steel bomb casings.

The magazine said some of the evidence comes from sources in Hong Kong and Singapore who helped in tracing the dummy corporations through which the plant's components were bought.

"We also have some hard-won human intelligence," an unnamed U.S. source in Europe told Newsweek. "We have talked to people who were on the site."

Ettalhi said the Rabta plant would be opened for inspection by Western diplomats, journalists and technical specialists once it is ready to start up operations. He gave no specific date for this.

Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi has offered the United States a one-time inspection of the Rabta facility, but U.S. officials said such a visit would be inadequate because the plant could quickly be modified to hide evidence of chemical weapons production.

SMOKING

— About 74 percent believe restaurants should be allowed to offer both smoking and non-smoking sections to customers. More than 60 percent of the non-smokers agreed.

— Fifty-three percent said they believed that excise taxes — amounting to about a third of the price of a pack of cigarettes — should stay the same (38 percent) or be reduced (15 percent).

— Fifty-seven percent said they believe cigarette advertising restrictions should remain the same (38 percent) or be lifted entirely (23 percent), as opposed to banning all advertising.

The institute's newspaper ads declared "Enough is enough!" and said that meant "enough taxation...enough legislation...enough control...enough censorship...enough harassment...enough discrimination" against smokers.

There was no answer over the weekend at the offices of various anti-smoking groups that were called for comment on the campaign and survey.

Restraining order blocks 3-week-old INS policy

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A federal judge this morning issued a temporary restraining order blocking a 3-week-old immigration service procedure that attorneys suing the government maintain has left hundreds of Central Americans living in tents and shanties in the lower Rio Grande Valley.

"One would be blind not to recognize that we have a problem," said U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela, upon issuing the order.

Vela set a hearing for 9 a.m. Thursday, when he said he would consider converting the restraining order into an injunction against the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Attorney David Ayala, representing the INS, this morning asked the judge to delay considering the restraining order until Thursday to give the government a chance to prepare.

"Your honor, the Immigration Service is not to blame for the plight of the people who are out there," Ayala said.

The judge's restraining order restores the right of asylum seekers to travel further into the United States and submit their applications in the INS districts where they intend to live.

Hundreds of Central American asylum seekers have set up camp in the Rio Grande Valley to await the processing of their applications. Some 300 applicants camping in a field near Brownsville have been ordered to leave the primitive tent city by this afternoon.

"Leave for where? That's the dilemma," said Bonniy Campos of Nicaragua.

Ms. Campos, 30, and his wife have been sleeping under sheets of plastic supported by tree limbs for the past week in the field across the street from the Casa Oscar Romero shelter for Central American refugees operated by the Roman Catholic Church.

More than 300 people have set up camp in the field because Casa Romero is filled to its court-restricted capacity of 200.

The U.S. policy preventing the asylum seekers from leaving the area, which was effective Dec. 16, also limits the Central Americans' ability to work during the waiting period, at least 30 days.

Previously, aliens who entered the country illegally in southern Texas were allowed to pursue their asylum applications in other cities, often Miami or Los Angeles.

U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service officials say the change was adopted to reduce huge case backlogs in those cities and curb frivolous refugee claims. The INS maintains that most of the 300,000 asylum applicants who passed through the Harlingen District last year were ineligible for political asylum because they merely wanted to better themselves economically.

"In essence, South Texas has been turned into a de facto detention area and asylum applicants are trapped there," says the suit filed Friday on behalf of asylum seekers by immigration attorney Linda Reyna Yanez, Robert Rubin of the San Francisco Lawyers' Committee for Urban Affairs and the Harlingen-based Proyecto Libertad immigrant advocacy group.

It accuses the INS of depriving immigrants of adequate access to the asylum procedure as required by the Refugee Act of 1980, and of implementing a policy change without publishing it in the Federal Register for public comment.

Legal officer Susan Timberlake with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees visited the tent city southeast of Brownsville last Tuesday and said she witnessed "difficulty and hardship."

Sunday, sheriff's deputies told those living on the litter-strewn campsite that they had 24 hours to vacate the private property.

Highway department plan to cut trees needles residents

AUSTIN (AP) — Local citizens are irate over a highway department plan to cut down hundreds of loblolly pines along a scenic, historic stretch of Texas 21 east of Bastrop — purportedly to improve safety.

"A prudent driver isn't going to have trouble in there," said Don Fries. "Let's put a little responsibility on the individual, not Mother Nature."

Fries, who has an undergraduate degree in forestry, helped form a citizens group — Save The Pines — to try and stay the state's ax.

But the highway department contends the trees — some decades old and 40 feet tall — may pose a hazard to motorists, the Austin American-Statesman reported.

"We're not happy with the prospect of cutting trees," said Randall Dillard, spokesman for the highway department's District 14 that includes Bastrop County. But, he added, "We're concerned about the safety."

In 71 accidents along the stretch from 1982-1987, six people were killed. Forty-four accidents involved fixed objects, probably trees in most cases, said Dillard. The accident rate on the stretch is 54 percent higher than those on similar roads, he said.

The 5.7-mile divided highway was once part of El Camino Real (King's Highway) that linked San Antonio and Nacogdoches beginning in the early 1700s.

'Skinhead' group recruits members at Houston clubs

HOUSTON (AP) — A band of youths who call themselves "Skinheads" is passing out business cards and frequenting youth-oriented nightclubs in an effort to recruit members to the neo-Nazi group, its leader says.

The Houston-area group now numbers about 15, but is trying to bolster its ranks and also raise money to open an office and start a telephone information hotline, said Toby Whitehead, who claims to head the organization.

Whitehead, a 17-year-old unemployed high school dropout, said his group calls itself the National Socialist Skinheads of Houston.

"We're not violent, but we will respond to violence with violence," Whitehead said. "We're training in hand-to-hand combat."

A Houston police spokesman said some people in the Houston area try to look like Skinheads, but he had no reports that any of them have become involved in illegal activity.

Officials estimate there are about 2,000 Skinheads in the United States, that they range in age from 14 to 27 and that their number is increasing. Members have been linked to racial violence against Jews, blacks and homosexuals.

"These kids have developed a subcultural style which has a great deal of meaning to them as street warriors trying to clean up what they see as the unwanted elements in American society," said Eric Anderson, a Yakima, Wash., anthropologist who wrote a master's thesis on the Skinheads.

"They certainly pose a threat to those individuals they don't like. There are going to be victims," Anderson said.

Generally, Skinheads are said to be young and impressionable people who are guided by older, more experienced racist groups such as the Ku Klux Klan, the White Aryan Resistance or the Aryan Nations.

Whitehead said he decided to form a Skinhead movement because of the "large number of non-whites moving to Houston," and that he contacted the Aryan Nations about it.

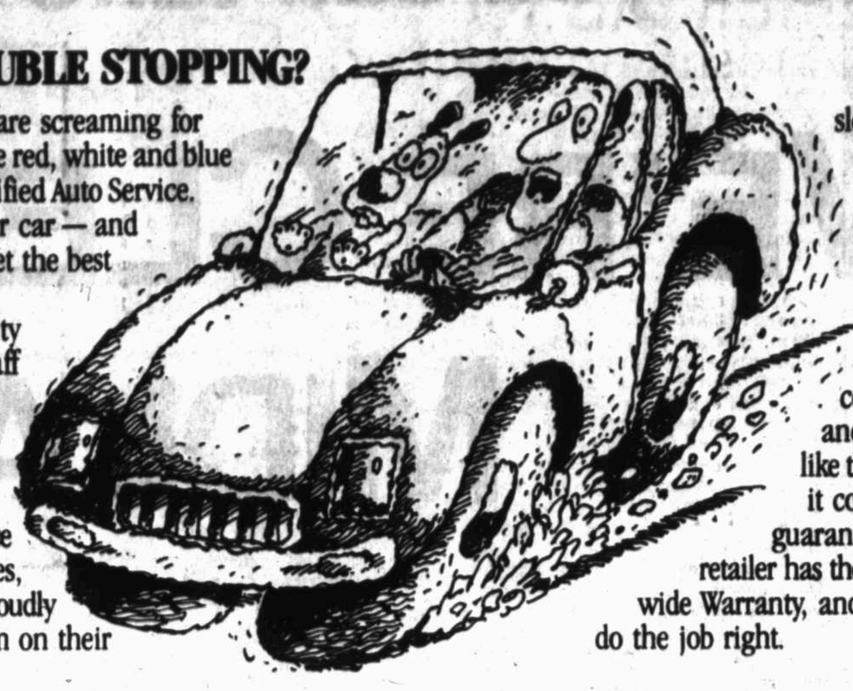

"The Fuehrer told me not to give any interviews and not to have any photographs made," Whitehead told the Houston Chronicle in an article published Sunday. He declined to identify the "Fuehrer."

Freshmen want education to pay off, survey reveals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Entering college freshmen are getting less aid from the federal government and are increasingly interested in making their educations pay off in cold cash, according to a survey of more than 300,000 students.

The annual survey nonetheless found that students entering college in 1988 were more likely than their 1987 counterparts to want to pursue graduate study despite the financial obstacles.

And although students are more interested in making money, they seem less interested in business careers as a means of reaching that goal, the survey said.

The findings released Sunday by the American Council on Education and the Higher Education Research Institute at the University of California at Los Angeles are based on questionnaires filled out by 308,007 freshmen entering 585 two-and four-year colleges and universities. The results were adjusted to reflect the total population of 1.64 million first-time, full-time entering students and have a margin of error of plus or minus two points.

Only 15.6 percent of freshmen entering school last fall received Pell grants, the government's major aid program for low- and middle-income students, the survey found. That was the lowest level since the survey began 23 years ago and less than half the 31.5 percent who received Pell grants in 1980.

Freshman participation in other federal aid programs also fell, while students reported greater reliance on family contributions, savings, loans and institutional grants.

The amount of Pell grant aid awarded to students actually rose nearly 57 percent from 1980 to 1988, or 17 percent taking inflation into account, according to The College Board, a New York-based lobbying group.

Victoria Tripp, an Education Department spokeswoman, said 11 percent of Pell money went to vocational students in 1980, compared with 27 percent in 1988. "That figure will increase to one-third in the early 1990s," she predicted. "The money is targeted to those students and there has been a proliferation of those schools."

Supreme Court agrees to review Missouri anti-abortion law

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, acting in an appeal urging reversal of its landmark 1973 decision that legalized abortion nationwide, today agreed to review a Missouri law regulating abortions.

The justices said they will study a federal appeals court ruling that struck down key provisions.

Even before today's action in the appeal filed by Missouri officials, the case had become the most-watched battleground in the continuing political war over abortion. Justice Department lawyers also are urging the high court to use the case as a means of undoing its 1973 ruling, called Roe vs. Wade.

But nothing in the brief order issued today suggested that the justices will reconsider Roe vs. Wade.

Most Americans think homelessness growing problem

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans generally agree that homelessness is widespread and worsening, and most are dissatisfied with the government's response and would be willing to pay more taxes to combat the problem, a poll has found.

A plurality of the 1,084 adults surveyed in the Media General-Associated Press poll primarily faulted society rather than the homeless for homelessness.

A plurality also said the federal government is chiefly responsible for solutions.

The poll exhibited the broad reach of homelessness: Six in 10 said homeless people were in their communities, and three-quarters said the problem plagues communities of all sizes, not just big cities.

Accordingly, respondents rated the problem as extraordinarily severe. Sixty-eight percent called it "very serious" and 24 percent said "fairly serious." The remainder gave it less importance.

The national poll, conducted by telephone among a random sample of adults Nov. 10-20, had a 3-point margin of error. It was completed before winter's cold increased attention on the homeless.

Still, nearly seven in 10 respondents said homelessness was getting worse, a quarter said it was unchanged, and 3 percent saw improvement. The remainder had no opinion.

Views were divided on the responsibility for solutions. Thirty-two percent said the federal government was primarily responsible; 24 percent said state governments, 18 percent said local governments and 9 percent said private charities. The rest had no answer.

Wherever prime responsibility lies, only 27 percent said the federal government was doing enough to prevent people from becoming homeless, and 58 percent said it was not. The remaining 15 percent had no opinion.

A solid 60 percent said federal spending on programs for the homeless should be increased, and 86 percent of that group said they would be willing to pay higher taxes for that purpose. That totaled 52 percent overall, an unusually high level of acquiescence to higher taxes.

On specific programs, 62 percent said the federal government should spend more on housing for the homeless, and as many favored the preventive measure of building more federally subsidized housing for the poor.

In virtually all these measures, homelessness was seen as severe and worsening by a greater share of women, Democrats, liberals, minorities and younger people. They also were more apt to blame society and to favor a greater federal response.

Seventy-eight percent of women rated the problem as "very serious," compared with 56 percent of men, for example. Eighty-three percent of Democrats said it was getting worse, compared with 54 percent of Republicans. And sixty-four percent of liberals said society was at fault, compared with 37 percent of conservatives.

An economic division also existed among respondents, with lower income Americans more likely to view the problem as serious and to favor greater responses. Of those with family incomes less than $25,000 a year, for instance, 73 percent favored more subsidized housing, but among those earning more than $50,000 just 54 percent agreed.

Deficit located by JCEE testing

Add to recent revelations of youthful failings in reading and geography the news that most high school students wouldn't know a government deficit if it jabbed them in the ribs. This less than reassuring report on the economic grasp of juniors and seniors, just short of voting age, comes from a survey sponsored by the Joint Council on Economic Education. A multiple-choice test on some basic economic points was given to 8,200 students scattered over 42 states. Most of them scored poorly.

Inability to pick a correct description of the budget deficit was one of the shockers. Only 45 percent realized that red ink flows when government spending exceeds tax revenues. Three-quarters of the students were wrong in defining inflation, and two-thirds missed on the meaning of profits.

A disturbing thought is that the deficit, inflation and other economic problems are major issues facing elective officials in this country. They should have responsible guidance from the voters in setting economic priorities — reduction of the deficit being a particularly pressing one. Many youths casting ballots for the first time evidently are in no position to help.

The survey showed that economic ignorance is more pronounced among students who have taken no high school course in either basic or consumer economics. But even those who studied basic economics answered, on average, only 52 percent of the questions correctly, hardly a passing grade. Those who took no economics course got 37 percent right.

This dismal performance is not simply a matter of inadequate formal instruction in economics. Any study of American history or government should cover the obvious economic choices the nation's leaders perennially face, and related controversies dividing the electorate. And a casual acquaintance with the news should, over time, give a reasonably aware teen-ager a glimmer of what is meant by deficit financing.

So the schools must bow to another embarrassing account of ragged scholarship. They are challenged to reduce yet another form of illiteracy among prospective graduates. But the high schoolers may be more educable in economics than in other subjects more remote from everyday experience. The youngsters, after all, know what it is to have money in their pockets (sometimes too much). And they know what develops when they spend it faster than they earn it: a miniature version of the national debt.

Enemy from within concerns Khomeini

WASHINGTON — The Ayatollah Khomeini is a sexist in the extreme. Women in Iran are virtual slaves when they are cooperative and subject to torture and death when they get uppity. It is poetic justice that Khomeini's misogyny is one of the policies that has hurt him most in supressing his enemy from within — the People's Mojahedin.

Jack Anderson

Khomeini's repressive security force, the Komiteh, delivered that bad news to the ayatollah — but with some delicacy — when it recently briefed him on the status of the People's Mojahedin.

We have seen a copy of the secret briefing report from the Komiteh to Khomeini. It says that, "One of the (People's Mojahedin's) most dangerous and attractive propaganda methods is its adherence to the issue of equality between men and women."

Predictably, equality is "propaganda" to the ayatollah, who can't conceive of any other reason someone might treat women well.

The Komiteh's report to the ayatollah came after the People's Mojahedin embarrassed him with a surprise military drive last July, in which the revolutionaries took over key Iranian cities. Komiteh had to admit that "almost everyone but the intelligence units of the Islamic Republic" knew the Mojahedin was coming. The ayatollah was forced to take his enemy from within more seriously. He declared a cease-fire against his external enemy Iraq and now is focused almost solely on eliminating the People's Mojahedin.

The top-secret briefing by the Komiteh took special note of the co-leadership of the Mojahedin by Massoud Rajavi and his wife Maryam. Mojahedin members pay almost as much attention to Maryam as they do to Massoud. Her picture is held aloft on placards, and her inspiring speeches are reprinted for her followers. It must rankle Khomeini to see a woman so far out of "her place."

But the Komiteh tried to assure Khomeini that the attention paid to Maryam Rajavi is a front.

"Although the organization itself does not value women, to advance its power-seeking goals, it publicizes the issue in practice and carries on a great deal of rhetoric about the equality of the sexes," the Komiteh reported.

The security force thinks the Rajavis' marriage is a sham. "If we study the organization's approach to the opposite sex in depth and consistency," the Komiteh reported, "we come to the conclusion that even the marriage of Maryam and Massoud was a recourse to prove the faith of the organization in the equality of men and women. It is likely the marriage took place to show the organization's support for the issue, as clearly indicated by the decision to include Maryam in the leadership of the organization. Following this move, letters sent by supporters to the leadership confirmed that the move not only did not create a backlash among supporters, it enhanced recruiting and loyalty among the female supporters."

How did Komiteh explain this defection of Islamic women from their place at the bottom of the pecking order? "On the one hand, a Moslem woman loves Islam. And on the other hand, the capitalist and Zionist views on the liberty and equality of the sexes, constantly trumpeted into the ears of people the world over, naturally influence a number of Iranian girls and women," the Komiteh told Khomeini.

So the Iranian women who join the People's Mojahedin are fooled by capitalists and Zionists into thinking that they, too, have some hope of human rights. The gospel, according to the ayatollah, says that is poppycock.

But many Iranian women aren't listening. More than one-third of the People's Mojahedin is made up of women who go into battle with the men against Khomeini's Revolutionary Guard.

For the record, Khomeini is not averse to using women in his own fighting forces, but not because he thinks they are equal to men on the battlefield. He puts women in the front lines, because he thinks the sight of women dying will inspire his men to fight with more ferocity.

TOWER'S AGENDA — President-elect George Bush has reached an understanding with his Secretary of Defense John Tower: that the defense budget will have to be cut. Sources in Bush's inner circle say that he knows he cannot reduce the deficit without cutting military spending or raising taxes, and he can't raise taxes after his pledge not to do so. Bush is wary of Soviet attempts to seek an accommodation in the arms race, but he knows the Soviets are driven by financial problems of their own. The reality will be a diminished military threat from the Soviet Union that will permit Bush to cut his own defense spending. He will also try to persuade our allies — such as Japan, West Germany and South Korea — to share the burden of their own defense.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Moammar Gadhafi has invited the United States to visit his chemical weapons plant — R.S.V.P. Thanks, but no thanks. Gadhafi's tour is designed to convince the United States that he isn't making bombs, he's making fertilizer. We already know that he's familiar with fertilizer. But the chemical weapons question will only be answered with an unannounced visit to the plant. Gadhafi is already familiar with unannounced visits from U.S. emissaries. It appears to be the only way to get his attention.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Jan. 9, the ninth day of 1989. There are 356 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Jan. 9, 1793, what's generally regarded as the first successful balloon flight in the United States took place as Frenchman Jean Pierre Blanchard traveled between Philadelphia and Woodbury, N.J.

On this date:

In 1788, Connecticut became the fifth state to ratify the Constitution.

In 1861, Mississippi seceded from the Union.

In 1942, the Joint Chiefs of Staff was created.

Freshmen quarters in D.C. 'not bad'

WASHINGTON — Bill Sarpalius of Amarillo spent about $300,000 and Greg Laughlin of West Columbia spent roughly a half million dollars to win election to Congress. For all that, once they got here, they found themselves assigned to dinky two-room offices.

Roberson

The two freshmen Texas Democrats were not being singled out for shabby treatment in the U.S. House of Representatives. Almost all freshmen members go to the end of the line for office accommodations.

As senior members leave Congress or move up into grander quarters, those junior to them take their offices. And the freshmen draw lots for the leftovers.

"We drew 29th out of 33 (new members)," said Laughlin's administrative assistant, Tim Richardson. "We were scared to death. But actually, it isn't bad."

In addition to their two-room offices, where nine staffers are stacked, each man was given another room nearby. Both are on the ground floor of the Longworth House Office Building, about a half block from the Capitol, and neither has any view to speak of.

Last Tuesday, after a mass swearing-in ceremony on the House floor, Sarpalius, 40, and Laughlin, 44, held a joint reception, where they re-enacted their oath-taking with House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Fort Worth. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, was among the 300 well-wishers who stopped by.

The crowd included 20 supporters from Laughlin's 14th District — which he took away from two-term Republican David (Mac) Sweeney in the November election.

Sarpalius, who represents the 13th District, took the seat vacated by Republican Beau Boulter when he ran unsuccessfully for the Senate against Bentsen.

The two new House members, whose annual salary is $89,500, were warned before they came here about the high cost of housing in the District of Columbia and nearby suburbs.

But Sarpalius, a divorced father, complained that his new one-bedroom apartment across the Potomac River in Arlington, Va., is costing about $1,200 a month — twice as much as he pays for his larger apartment in Amarillo, which he will keep.

Laughlin, who moved into a house in suburban Falls Church, Va., with his wife and two children last week, says he will not try to maintain a home in West Columbia but will bunk with family and friends when he returns to the district.

Both lawmakers may soon get a raise. A presidential commission has recommended that members of Congress and federal judges receive a boost to $135,000. Now that President Reagan has approved the recommendation, Congress will have 30 days to defeat the raise or accept it.

If the measure somehow comes to a vote, Sarpalius says he will vote against the pay raise. But he would not refuse the increase if it is approved, partly because it is in a package that would also ban members of Congress from accepting fees for speeches or appearances. These honoria now are limited to $26,850, an amount that most members receive.

* * *

Both new members got the committee assignments they wanted.

Sarpalius, who holds two degrees in agriculture, was named to the Agriculture and Science and Technology committees. That ought to make his constituents happy, given their historic interest in farming and ranching and their new zeal for attracting high-tech industries.

Laughlin, a lawyer, chose Public Works and Transportation as his major committee and also won a spot on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. His sprawling district, which reaches from Austin to the Gulf Coast, is about the size of West Virginia. It is bordered by 240 miles of coastline.

George W. Bush, the eldest son of the president-elect, wants folks to know he is a man of his word.

"I promised to up (to Washington to help his dad win the presidency) and I said when the mission was over, I would go back to Texas. And here I am," said Bush in a telephone interview from his office at Harken Energy Corp., the Bedford-based company that merged with young Bush's oil company in Midland earlier this year.

Bush joked about the "Prince George" title given him by columnists Roland Evans and Robert Novak last week. "When you call next time, just ask for Prince George," he laughed.

Bush said he is "moving around the state," thinking about what to do next. He admits he is considering a run for the Republican nomination for governor.

Asked if he figured being the president's son would be an advantage, Bush gallantly said: "I've always thought being George Bush's son was an advantage."

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Kinder, gentler resolution means safer cats!

George Bush has asked for a kinder, gentler America, and I want to do my part in 1989.

Understand that I am usually a kind and gentle person. I am kind to animals, except cats, and I am gentle when it comes to children, unless they are screaming in the seat behind me on an airplane.

Grizzard

But I must admit there are things that cause me not to be kind and gentle, and these are the things I want to learn to accept and be kinder and more gentle about in 1989.

Let us start at the beginning:

Cats: The thing about cats is they are not to be trusted. A friend of mine's cat snuck behind me once and jumped on my head, causing me to spill the coffee I was drinking. It went all over my lap (the coffee). The cat stayed on my head and danced the merengue.

I did not handle the situation with kindness nor gentility. I reached up and removed the cat from my scalp and bit one of its ears off.

Ever tasted a cat ear? They're terrible. But I'm a new man now. If a cat jumps on my head in 1989, I'm not going to bite its ear off. I'm going to poison it, but with a quick-acting potion so it won't suffer for long.

Screaming children in airplanes: I'm not going to ask the flight attendant, "May I have a napkin so I can gag the screaming child?" I'm going to buy the kid a drink. Maybe it will go to sleep.

People affiliated with certain religious organizations who ring my doorbell at an inappropriate time in order to save my soul: Normally I take out my Uzi machine gun and attempt to blow these people away. From now on, I'll fire a few warning shots before I attempt to blow these people away.

People who drive 8 miles an hour in the passing lane on interstate highways: I hate people who do that. They should be arrested and flogged. But that's the old me, not the kinder, more gentle me.

From now on I'm not going to get behind such people and pretend I've got machine guns behind my headlights and fire until the cars erupt in flames.

I'm simply going to take down their tag numbers and find out who they are, where they live, and then I'm going to their houses and bite their cats' ears off.

People who cheat in the 12-items-or-less express lane in supermarkets: Previously, I have dog-cussed these people and put curses on them, like, "May your children grow up to be liberal Democrats."

I'm not going to be that mean-spirited anymore. What I'm going to do is go to the vegetable bin, grab a large cucumber and beat them about the head and shoulders with it.

Telephones: Telephones never work for me. I either can't get a dial tone, or I get one of those awful noises that sounds like a cat who's just had its ear bitten off, and I slam the receiver down and throw the telephone against the wall.

Not anymore. All I'm going to do now is throw a rock at the television every time I see Cliff Robertson.

Liberal Democrats: I have no use for these people and when I've run across one at a cocktail party, I've said things like, "Well, how many vicious criminals did Michael Dukakis furlough today?"

But in the immortal words of Dan Quayle, "That was uncalled for."

From now on, I'm going to sneak up behind them and jump on their heads. I'd bite off one of their ears, but it might make me sick.

CHARLEY REESE

Persuasion can be sneaky way of hiding truth

In the film version of "Zorba The Greek," there is a mine cave-in while Zorba is inside the tunnel. We hear the crash of boulders and see clouds of dust billowing out of the mouth of the tunnel.

Charley Reese

Zorba's intellectual friend and employer shouts frantically, "Zorba! Zorba! Zorba!"

Finally, from out of the billowing clouds of dust, Zorba strides and shouts back, "What?" And, every time you are face to face with communication, that's the question, you should ask: what is this person trying to communicate.

In today's world, chances are good it will seldom be the truth. Most of the voices chattering at us these days are engaged in persuasion — an attempt to sell something, if only an idea.

Here are some devices which often are used to obscure the truth and to make a sale:

Statistics. Always put your mind on red alert when you encounter statistics. To properly evaluate statistical information, you need two things you almost never get with the statistics — the definitions upon which the statistics are based and some indication of the reliability of data collection process. Statistics, like photography, are expert liars because they SEEM authentic.

Studies. Sociological studies — often nothing more than mailed out questionnaires — are like Biblical quotations: at least one can be found that appears to support any proposition. Again, unless you know the details of how the study was conducted, you cannot properly evaluate the results. One of the worst abuses of so-called studies is called extrapolation. For example, a survey in Boston with an inadequate sample claims 5 percent of lawyers are alcoholic. As bureaucrats across the country seek to extract public funds this becomes 5 percent of ALL lawyers are alcoholics. In fact, you cannot be sure even 5 percent of Boston lawyers are alcoholics.

Opinion polls. To have any idea at all of the poll's usefulness, you must know precisely how the questions were worded and what kind of sample was taken. Even then, and assuming the best of all possible methodology, you've done nothing but a gussified version of talking to the town gossip. So what if x-percent of the people think the earth is flat or that Elvis is still alive? The only people who have any interest in opinion polls are those who intend, for one reason or another, to manipulate public opinion. A lot of this junk originated in the advertising industry — as a means to find better ways to sell stuff — and has been dragged out into general public discourse — often as a substitute for logical argument. Whether 10 percent or 90 percent think abortion should be legal has no bearing on the moral question. Neither morality nor truth can be determined by a majority vote.

Authority. Citing a so-called authority like a child playing Simon Says is an ancient substitute for a sound argument. Today, the bad habit has been carried to ridiculous extremes by citing celebrities as authorities for subjects they know nothing about. Nor does mere vocation translate into competence, intelligence, or integrity. Colleges today tend to so condition students that some graduates have no opinions of their own and automatically cite someone else's.

Print. Some conservatives seem particularly prone to this fallacy — the belief that if something once appears in print and you properly cite it in a footnote, the matter of its truth has been resolved. That's ridiculous. More falsehood than truth finds its way into print. All publication tells you is that something has been published.

Thinking is actually fun and the world would be a better place if more people took it up even as a hobby. Alas, it's about as unpopular today as it was when the best people tossed their sewage out of the window into the street and both public opinion and authorities were agreed that bathing was injurious to your health.

Akihito vows to work for peace

TOKYO (AP) — Emperor Akihito today set the tone for his reign by pledging to work for peace and preserve Japanese democracy, but said he faced "awesome responsibilities" after the death of his father, Hirohito.

The four-minute speech was Akihito's first public statement since he ascended the Chrysanthemum Throne when Hirohito died of cancer Saturday at age 87. It was delivered at the Imperial Palace during a simple ceremony attended by Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita and 237 other dignitaries.

Outside, hundreds of thousand of Japanese streamed past to pay their respects to Hirohito, who reigned for 62 years.

"Shrouded in sorrow and overwhelmed by the awesome responsibilities I undertake, I stand humble before you," said Akihito.

"I pledge myself to continue in the spirit of his late majesty, making his desire to constantly be at one with the people my desire as well, joining together with you to preserve the constitution of Japan, and thereby execute my duties faithfully," he added.

Japan's post-war constitution, which bans the emperor from any role in government and limits him to ceremonial functions, formed the basis for the country's democracy. It limits the emperor's role to signing bills into law and serving as "symbol of the state and the unity of the people."

"I do fervently desire the further development of Japan, peace on Earth and enhanced well-being for all peoples," Akihito said.

He spoke clearly and solemnly, with the new Empress Michiko, 54, on his left, and their son, Crown Prince Naruhito, 28, on his right.

By Japanese tradition, Akihito's statement was his first Imperial Rescript, in which a new emperor sets a tone for his reign.

The rite, in the palace's main ceremonial hall, was an important milestone in the transition to Akihito's new imperial era of Heisei, or "Achieving Peace."

On Sunday, Hirohito's body was wrapped in a white cloth and placed in a coffin made of Japanese cypress at the palace in preparation for the Feb. 24 burial. Representatives of more than 130 countries, including up to 50 heads of state or government, are expected to attend.

Hirohito's era, called Showa, or "Enlightened Peace," ended with his death, and according to Japanese tradition he becomes known as Emperor Showa. His reign stretched from Japan's descent into militarism and defeat in World War II to its impressive recovery into an economic superpower.

Hirohito was revered as a living god until he was forced to renounce his divinity at the end of World War II, and Japanese soldiers fought and died during the war in the monarch's name.

Two old soldiers have hanged themselves since learning of Hirohito's passing, saying in suicide notes that they wanted to follow the emperor in death. An 87-year-old former army man hanged himself Saturday, and the body of a former navy officer was found Sunday hanging from a tree in a temple compound.

Afghan guerrillas break off talks

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Afghan guerrilla leaders refused today to resume direct talks with the Soviets, accusing Moscow of playing political games aimed at securing its communist proteges in Kabul a place in a post-war government.

The guerrillas promised not to attack departing Red Army troops but said their decision to break off negotiations means fighting is likely to continue after Feb. 15, when the 50,000 Soviet troops remaining in Afghanistan are to withdraw under a U.N.-brokered accord.

The Pakistan-based guerrilla leaders ended talks with Soviet Deputy Foreign Minsiter Yuli Vorontsov Saturday, deadlocked over the composition of a post-war government.

But Vorontsov later told reporters that Moscow would find a way to support its Marxist allies in Kabul if a broad-based government that includes communists is not in place Feb. 15.

Moslem insurgents, who have been fighting the Soviet-backed communist regime in Kabul for a decade, have unanimously rejected the participation of any of its members in a post-war government.

Today, the spokesman for the U.S.-backed insurgents, Sibghatullah Mojaddidi told a news conference:

"Because the Soviets use threats, look for war rather than peace, and disrespect Afghans' right of self-determination, we believe that negotiations are unproductive and unnecessary.

"The Soviets have threatened that if their terms are not accepted they will supply new weapons, not deployed before, to (Afghan President) Najib's regime after the withdrawal," said Mojaddidi. "The Soviets' efforts to impose a government of their choice on the Afghan nation will protract the war and kill our people."

Although Mojaddidi ruled out the cease-fire sought by Vorontsov, he promised that Moslem guerrillas would not attack departing Soviet soldiers.

Arab nations trying to link chemical, nuclear bans

WORLD

Foreign Minister Moshe Arens of Israel today accused Iraq, Libya and Syria of having chemical arms, telling conference delegates that these weapons have been used "by countries that made no attempt to hide or disguise their hostility to Israel."

PARIS (AP) — A campaign by Arab states to link nuclear and chemical disarmament has threatened to jeopardize a consensus at an international conference called to bolster flagging talks on a chemical weapons ban.

At the conference Sunday, the Soviet Union announced it will start destroying chemical arms stockpiles this year, but U.S. officials said the Soviets are merely playing "catch-up" because the United States has been routinely destroying stockpiles of aging chemical arms since the early 1980s.

Delegates from 16 Arab countries at the 150-nation conference argued that a ban on chemical weapons would be discriminatory as long as another weapon of mass destruction exists for a few countries, Israel among them.

Vice Premier Tariq Aziz of Iraq led the move Sunday against a ban on chemical arms unless nuclear weapons are also banned. He said Israel has "nuclear weapons as well as chemical weapons and missiles that can reach many Arab cities."

Israel called the Iraqi statement "blatant hypocrisy." Iraq is known to have used chemical weapons in its 8-year war with Iran.

Foreign Minister Moshe Arens of Israel today accused Iraq, Libya and Syria of having chemical arms, telling conference delegates that these weapons have been used "by countries that made no attempt to hide or disguise their hostility to Israel."

Also today, Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati said negotiations with Iraq for lasting peace were "volatile" but added his country is ready to agree to an international ban on chemical weapons whether or not Iraq signs.

The two countries have observed a cease-fire since Aug. 20, but negotiations have been deadlocked.

The five-day conference, which ends Wednesday, is aimed at giving new political impetus to a 1925 Geneva Protocol that prohibits the use of such toxic chemical and biological agents.

A final statement is to be adopted by consensus, meaning differences could block an accord or leave it grossly weakened.

Another foreign minister scheduled to address the conference today was Jadalla Azouz Ettalhi of Libya, which Washington accuses of building a factory to manufacture poison gas.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Sunday that in talks with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, he had persuaded the Soviet Union to look into the U.S. allegations.

Shevardnadze said in a speech to the conference Sunday that the Soviet Union will not wait for disarmament negotiators in Geneva to reach an accord banning use, production and stockpiling of chemical arms. He said a new Soviet facility to destroy chemical weapons will go into operation this year.

The envoy said his country has stopped production of chemical weapons, an announcement first made in April 1987.

"What they are doing is playing catch-up ball," said a senior official of the U.S. delegation, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Delegation members said the United States has been destroying limited quantities of aging chemical weapons since the early 1980s, while continuing to manufacture modern chemical arms.

Lynn Hansen, director of the bureau of multilateral affairs at the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, said the Soviet position "now corresponds to our own position...We simply don't get the press, because for us it's more routine.

"When they do it, all of a sudden it's news," Hansen told reporters.

The United States and the Soviet Union are the only two countries to admit possessing chemical weapons. According to U.S. estimates, about 20 countries possess or have the ability to manufacture chemical weapons.

The only existing document on chemical weapons, the 1925 Geneva Protocol, bans only their use, and without enforcement power, is regarded as inadequate by many nations.

The United States halted production of chemical weapons in 1969 but resumed 18 years later to counter the Soviet build-up. The Soviet Union says it has 50,000 tons of chemical arms stockpiled, while the United States has about 30,000 tons. However, both those figures are thought to be largely underestimated.

MacArthur thought U.S. needed Hirohito alive

WASHINGTON (AP) — General Douglas MacArthur and others directing the occupation of Japan after World War II resisted powerful U.S. and allied opposition in keeping the late Emperor Hirohito on the Chrysanthemum Throne, where he reigned for another 43 years.

The emperor's prosecution for war crimes, execution, imprisonment or exile was favored by 70 percent of Americans in a public opinion poll seven weeks before the end of the war. Some allied governments had similar views.

MacArthur, supreme commander of the U.S. occupation of Japan, was the best known of those resisting demands for punishing the monarch who died in Tokyo Saturday at the age of 87 after a 62-year reign marked by military expansion, crushing defeat, reconciliation, dramatic economic growth and new heights of prosperity and prestige for his country.

Prime Minister Hideki Tojo and six other Japanese officials were convicted and hanged as a result of the Tokyo war crimes trials. Tojo's testimony at one point threatened to implicate the emperor in whose name the militarists had overrun East Asia.

Documents released in Washington 25 years ago by the State Department show that MacArthur and other U.S. officials decided retention of Hirohito was vital to maintaining order in the former enemy country and carrying out their mission of democratic reform.

But those planning Japan's future were also aware that the emotions of war had generated powerful sentiment in America and other allied countries for prosecuting and ousting the mikado as responsible for aggression and atrocities of the imperial military command, the documents showed.

George Gallup, director of the American Institute of Public Opinion, declared June 23, 1945, that "the average American" thinks Hirohito "should be treated like any other war criminal."

In his latest Gallup poll, he said, 33 percent of those questioned said Hirohito should be executed, 17 percent said "let the court decide his fate," 11 percent said "keep him in prison the rest of his life" and 9 percent wanted to exile him. Only 4 percent favored ignoring him as a mere figurehead, 3 percent said "use him as a puppet to run Japan." Other replies or no opinion accounted for 23 percent.

MacArthur wrote in his memoirs that Hirohito had already been stricken from the list of potential war crimes defendants when the monarch first visited him Sept. 30, 1945. Hands trembling, the emperor offered to bear sole responsibility for the war, MacArthur wrote, adding that, "I knew I faced the First Gentleman of Japan in his Own Right."

Four months later, the five-star general messaged Washington that Hirohito's indictment and execution could trigger a convulsion, potential chaos and guerrilla warfare in Japan. One million occupation troops might be needed, MacArthur said.

NATION IN BRIEF

Lack of child care cited

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The neglect of today's children could lead to deficiencies in tomorrow's work force, Lt. Gov. Marlene Johnson of Minnesota warned participants in the second Women's Agenda Conference.

In the concluding session of the conference Sunday, participants also were asked for a renewed commitment to maintaining legalized abortion and the development of a national coalition.

Johnson said a lack of adequate child care kept many parents from participating in the economy.

Ms. Johnson also said there was a need for women in leadership positions and called on her listeners to work to develop leaders from within their ranks.

The conference, organized by the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, began Friday. It was sponsored by more than 50 organizations nationwide.

Theater won't air 'Burning'

PHILADELPHIA, Miss. (AP) — The owner of the town's only theater vowed not to show the film "Mississippi Burning," a fictionalized account of the killings of three civil rights workers here 25 years ago.

"We're not going to show it. No way. It's not worth it," Lula Ellis, who owns the Ellis Theater, said Sunday. "I just see no reason why we should play it."

Ellis had said that church groups were threatening to boycott the theater if it showed the movie, directed by Alan Parker and starring Gene Hackman and Willem Dafoe.

On June 21, 1964, civil rights workers James Earl Chaney, 21, who was black, and whites Andrew Goodman, 20, and Michael Schwerner, 24, disappeared after they were released from jail in Philadelphia. They had been stopped on speeding charges after they had been investigating the burning of a church by the Ku Klux Klan.

The three were found 44 days later, shot to death and buried in a soggy earthen dam in Neshoba County.

Other theaters in Mississippi will run the movie.

Fewer divorced remarrying

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of every three men and women walking down the aisle in the United States has been married before, but the remarriage rate for divorced Americans has been declining, according to a National Center for Health Statistics report.

The government report also shows that most divorced men marry divorced women and that of those divorced Americans remarrying in 1983, the women were on the average 34 years old and the men, an average 37 years old.

The report is based on samples of records from states that compile marriage and divorce statistics.

Hospital shaken by murder

NEW YORK (AP) — The savage beating death of a pregnant 34-year-old physician at Bellevue Hospital has triggered a major police investigation and a review of security at the shaken institution, officials said.

"This is a major case and at least 50 detectives are assigned to it," Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward said after the body of Dr. Kathryn Hinnant was found in a laboratory office Sunday morning by her husband.

BULL

Joey Astling, above, of Lakewood, Colo., must wear a helmet after suffering a head injury, while a bull bears down on Jim Leatherberry of Kalispeil, Mont., right.

Player No. 1 in this dangerous game is most of the time someone about 5-6, 5-7, weighing in at 150 pounds, maybe more, maybe less. Player No. 1 is accomplished at his sport. He has plenty of rides in back of him. Plenty more, he hopes, to come.

Player No. 2 is a bit larger than player No. 1.

Player No. 2 averages between 1,200 and 2,200 pounds. He has not been schooled in how to play the game, how to act or how to react. All Player No. 2 knows is that when Player No. 1 hops up on his back it's time to get him off.

Fast.

And that is essentially what bullriding is all about.

Bulls don't care for the fact that there is a human being perched on their backbone. Maybe it hurts to have someone sitting on top of you, I don't know. It's likely no one has ever actually asked a bull why he gets so riled up when a scrawny little cowboy wants to take him for a ride.

'I got stepped on in the chest ...that was probably the most pain I had ever been in.'

—Todd Steinbock

The Cowboys and Bulls got together for a four night engagement last week at the Ector County Coliseum in this year's edition of the Sand Hills Hereford and Quarter Horse Show.

Rodeo for short.

Todd Steinbock is 20, but he looks more like 16. He's been riding bulls since he was a 12-year-old in Golden, Colo.

When he was 12, Steinbock said, "Dad put me up on one and I been on 'em ever since. I can't get off. It's addicting."

Eight years he's been riding, and fortunately he has never been seriously hurt.

"Oh," he said, "I got stepped on in the chest and dislocated my collar bone" late last year at the Mountain States sectionals in Cheyenne, Wy. "That was probably the most pain I had ever been in."

Steinbock said that he was out of action for about a month after the bull stepped on him. (Stepped on his chest, mind you).

Was he out of action for a month because he was scared to get back on?

"No," he said. "It just took that long to heal up."

Steinbock, like probably most of the others in town for the Ector County show, will ride about 90 rodeos this year, a lot of times they'll do two shows a week.

It is, after all, a living.

And how long will it continue to be a living?

"Until I can't do it anymore, I guess."

Kevin Nordahl is a virtual old man up next to Steinbock.

Please see BULL, Page 2B

Ruth Ray

Services for Mrs. W.G. (Ruth) Ray are pending at Ellis Funeral Home.

At 29, Nordahl, a Helena, Mont., native has the kind of sense of humor it would seem necessary to keep a bullrider going.

"I'd rather get up on a bull," Nordahl said, "than get run over by one of those football players. Those guys are out there for 60 minutes. I only have to face a bull for eight seconds."

While Nordahl's sense of humor keeps his fellow bullriders going, it is his attitude that probably keeps him going. Nordahl does not look at rodeo as merely a job. It is his life.

"I love it," he said. "It's the thrill of it. The natural high. The money. The people. We're just like one big family. Everybody helps everybody."

Nordahl, who also wrestles steers, says he is not afforded too much practice time in the more dangerous event.

"In bullriding, you have to have a lot of reaction but in steer wrestling, you practice a lot. In bullriding there's a lot of danger so I don't get on too many practice bulls. I save the bulls for the real rides.

Jim Shoulders and Donnie Gay are generally recognized as perhaps the two best bullriders of all time. Nobody could do it better. Nobody.

Until now.

At the National Finals Rodeo in Las Vegas last December, Sharp did something even Shoulders and Gay have only dreamed about.

At the NFR, each bullrider has 10 go-rounds, or 10 chances at averaging the highest score. The more bulls ridden and the better they are ridden, the higher the riders score and the best chance at winning.

Jim Sharp was given 10 bulls. All 10 of them went down with barely a whimper.

In 10 rounds, Sharp rode more than 17,000 pounds of bulls. But at the Sand Hills Hereford and Quarter Horse Show, Sharp stood in the locker room looking very much unlike a world champion. He was the last person you would have guessed to be the best at riding bulls.

Five-feet six, 150 pounds, Sharp stood in the corner, almost as if he didn't want to bother any of his fellow riders as they preapared.

With his arms folded, looking straight ahead, Sharp doesn't mince words. Better put, he doesn't talk very much. Mostly just answers with a few words at a time:

On riding all 10 bulls at Vegas and being crowned world champion: "Felt real good. Kind of like a dream come true."

On what bullriding as a profession is like: "A lot of fun ridin' 'em. It's a little dangerous. Just you and the bull."

On injuries in his career: "Never been hurt real bad. Pulled a muscle one time in my leg. I got hit in the head with a horn once."

Jim Sharp is at the top of his profession and he is only 23. He has at least 10 years, if not 12, left before things begin to slide some.

In his third year at the finals, he achieved perfection. Literally.

And how do you top perfection?

Not many people know how. But Sharp does.

"I'll just try to go out and do it again."

Stormie Jones back in Pittsburgh hospital

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The world's first recipient of a heart-liver transplant is back in Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh for tests to determine if her liver is working properly.

Stormie Jones, 11, was admitted around midnight, said hospital spokeswoman Lynn McMahon. Her mother, Lois Purcell, accompanied her from their home in the Fort Worth, Texas, suburb of White Settlement.

Recent blood tests found elevated levels of body toxins that the liver should be removing, said Miss McMahon. Stormie looks well and is in good condition.

Couple found inside automotive service firm

From Staff Reports

Two Midland residents were trapped inside an automotive service business early today after a burglar alarm alerted police, part of a busy weekend for uniformed officers.

The couple, a 24-year-old man and woman, also 24, were found inside J and K Automotive Repair, 606 S. Pecos St. about 3 a.m. by a K-9 officer and his dog, according to police.

Officers were dispatched to the scene at 2:54 a.m. after the alarm was tripped, according to spokesman Cpl. Jim White.

When the man was searched, validation stickers for state vehicle inspection certificates were found in a pocket, White said.

The man is believed to be an illegal alien, and U.S. Border Patrol agents had asked he be held until they could check his background, the spokesman noted.

Police Roundup

The couple, who list the same address in Midland, are expected to be charged with burglary of a building, according to police.

An hour later, police were dispatched to Sportsman's Den, 2202 N. Big Spring St., to investigate another reported alarm. When they arrived, they found the business had been burglarized.

According to investigators, someone pried a door of the business open just before 4 a.m. with a crowbar or similar tool, then smashed a gun case. A .45-caliber semi-automatic handgun and a nine millimeter semi-automatic pistol with a total value of $1,083 were reported missing.

A number of used handguns also may have been stolen, according to police.

In other reports, police are still searching for two men, one who assaulted a police officer with a brick and another who stabbed a man in the neck following an argument.

When officers were called to 4534 Sinclair Ave. between 11:15 p.m. and 11:30 p.m. Saturday night, they found Jose Ortiz Jr., 34, with a stab wound in the neck. He was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital, where he was treated and later released, according to police.

Ortiz told officers he was in his home when the suspect, who Ortiz knows, came to the door. The man was drunk, Ortiz said, and the two got into an argument that spilled outside. Once outside, the suspect pulled a knife and stabbed Ortiz, then ran away, according to police.

The suspect was described as a Hispanic man, 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighing about 140 pounds.

Police have no detailed description of the man who assaulted Officer Alvin Navarette, 24, who was attacked while investigating a fight in a convenience store parking lot, White said.

Navarette was on patrol about 8:45 p.m. Friday when he saw two men fighting near the 7-Eleven at the intersection of Midkiff Road and Illinois Avenue. When the officer approached the men, both fled. One was apprehended near Dellwood Lanes, questioned and released.

Navarette chased the other man into a back yard at 3500 Thomas Ave., and when Navarette rounded a corner, he was hit in the chest with a brick before the suspect escaped.

Stanton farm worker killed in tractor mishap

From Staff Reports

STANTON — A 35-year-old Stanton farm worker, Jose DeJesus "Joe" Alvizo Sr., was killed in a farm accident Saturday when he was twice ran over by a tractor he was trying to jump-start with booster cables running from a pickup truck to the tractor, Martin County Sheriff Dan Saunders said today.

Alvizo was working on the Theodore Wells farm in the Lenorah community seven miles east of Stanton when the accident happened.

His 10-year-old son, Joe Jr., witnessed the mishap.

The sheriff said that Alvizo, after connecting the battery cables to jump-start the tractor, was using his pocketknife to make a circuit at the starter to crank up the tractor's diesel engine instead of "getting up in the cab and turning the key on and making sure it (the tractor) was out of gear."

The tractor was in gear when the engine started up, Saunders said. And Alvizo, who was standing on the left side of the tractor, was run over by dual-wheels of the 10-row tractor.

The driver-less tractor made a circle in the cotton field and again rolled over Alvizo, who had been using deep-breaking plows on the land. The plows were trailing a "packer" to break up clods of topsoil.

The son, who was "too little to run and jump up on the tractor," drove the pickup about six miles to another farmer worker, Saunders said. That worker, Ben Froshe Jr., about 18, got into the pickup, sped to the senior Alvizo, and "ran and jumped on the (run-away) tractor and killed it."

Alvizo was dead by then, Saunders said.

Two Odessans injured in collision

From Staff Reports

Two Odessa residents were injured in a head-on collision late Sunday near the intersection of U.S. Highway 80 and the Bankhead Highway, the Department of Public Safety reported.

Betty Watson, 61, suffered chest injuries in the 8:20 p.m. accident and was in the critical care unit today at Odessa Medical Center today, an employee in the nursing office said. Her condition had "stabilized," the spokeswoman said.

Royal Ernest Caswell, 48, suffered head injuries in the collision and was treated at OMC and released, the spokeswoman said.

According to reports, Caswell was driving southbound on the Bankhead Highway when he turned east on U.S. 80 and struck the vehicle driven by Ms. Watson.

AA midwinter conference begins Friday at the Hilton

From Staff Reports

The 19th annual Mid-Winter Conference of Alcoholics Anonymous is being held Friday through Jan. 15 at the Midland Hilton, Wall Avenue and Loraine Street.

Founded in the mid-1930s by the late Bill Wilson and the late Dr. Bob Smith, AA is not allied with any other group in or out of the treatment field.

The organization is self-supporting through the voluntary contributions of its members and has no religious affiliation.

The primary purpose of AA, as stated in its basic textbook "Alcoholics Anonymous," first published in 1939, is to carry the message of sobriety to the alcoholic who still suffers.

Guest speakers for the conference come from outside the Permian Basin area. Those speakers and the time of their talks are Gary N., Dallas, 8 p.m. Friday; John A., Laguna Beach, Calif., 11:15 a.m. Saturday; Sammi H., Thompson Falls, Mont., 8 p.m. Saturday; and Hank J., Marina del Rey, Calif., 10 a.m. Jan. 15.

The conference also features a talk by Karen A., Laguna Beach, Calif., at 10 a.m. Saturday. This speaker is a member of Al-Anon Family Groups, an independent, self-supporting organization founded in 1951.

Al-Anon and AA are separate fellowships, related only in having the common cause of helping those who have been affected by alcoholism. Al-Anon members are those whose lives have been affected by another's drinking.

The conference includes a general meeting of Alateen, chaired by Mandy B. of Midland, at 2 p.m. Saturday. Alateen, established in 1957 as part of the Al-Anon Family Groups, is for teen-agers whose lives have been affected by someone's drinking.

Registration begins at 1 p.m. Friday on the mezzanine at the Hilton. Registration fee is $20 for adults and $2 for Alateens. Hospitality rooms are open throughout the conference, except for meeting times.

The conference is open to the public. All interested parties are invited to attend.

Supreme Court asks Justice for view of election ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today asked the Justice Department for its view of a ruling that creates an election district in Baytown, Texas, in which blacks and Hispanics represent a majority of eligible voters.

The court wants to know what department lawyers think about an appeal by city officials who said the federal Voting Rights Act does not require such realignment favoring a coalition of two separate minority groups.

The justices are not expected to say whether they will grant full review to the city's appeal until hearing from the Justice Department.

Baytown's population in the 1980 census was 56,917 — with 9,348 Hispanics and 5,096 blacks. Combined, the two minorities comprised 25 percent of the city's population.

Since the city was formed in 1947, no black or Hispanic ever has been elected to the City Council.

TU Electric delivers security message with January bills

From Staff Reports

If someone claiming to be from TU Electric wants to enter your home, ask for identification.

That's the security message included with the company's bills during January.

TU Electric also reminds its customers that a real employee of the electric company "will be glad to show an identification card bearing the employee's photograph," according to a company press release.

Asking to see the ID is a first step in preventing criminal activity by an imposter masquerading as en employee of the electric company. "If you still have doubts about the person's authenticity after seeing an ID, call your TU Electric office for verification," the press release added.

The company urges customers to not allow strangers claiming to be from TU Electric to enter their homes until they are convinced the strangers are employees of the company with a legitimate reason to be there.

If a person refuses to show proper TU Electric identification, the company urges the customer to wait for the person to leave and then call the local TU Electric office or law enforcement authorities.

3 women taken for a (trail) ride

By JO ANN MITCHELL

BORGER (AP) — Billie Montgomery, Donna Hudson, and Debbie Wood all share a common love of horses and riding.

And they have shared that interest on numerous trail and wagon rides.

Last summer, the women went on the 89er Wagon Train, an annual commemoration of the Oklahoma land rush, from Caldwell, Kan., to Guthrie, Okla. Ms. Hudson and Mrs. Montgomery also took a 100-mile cross-country ride from Tahlequah, Okla., to Fort Smith, Ark. They've gone on smaller day rides, too.

On the 89er ride, they were dubbed "The Three Amigos."

Mrs. Montgomery, who rides paso fino horses for their comfort, calls her mount "Briana." Mrs. Montgomery now has 14 paso finos, including a 6-month-old colt.

"He thinks he's Mr. Big Shot and has learned to cross the creek. He fell on his nose one time. He's really a character," she said.

She says he's training for riding and getting a taste of the trail.

Donna Hudson has a quarter horse named "Cajun." Ms. Hudson was a champion barrel racer in her native Colorado.

"Lady," a registered quarter horse, is Debbie Wood's mount.

Mrs. Wood's husband bought her the horse last year to aid her in a weight-loss program and she resumed riding, a sport she had enjoyed as a child. Her horse was not quite ready for the wagon train ride.

The 89er Wagon Train started in 1986 but Mrs. Montgomery didn't make it that year. She was taking part in the Texas Sesquicentennial Wagon Train. However, in 1987 she went on the ride, and plans to take part in the centennial 89er Wagon Train in 1989.

"I'll probably go back next year. The wagon train has about 40 to 45 wagons and outriders for the wagons, plus additional riders in the back. There were probably about 75 to 80 riders in the train," she said.

Participants came from Arkansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Texas and Kansas.

Mrs. Wood said she enjoyed the beautiful sunsets, but could do without some of the aspects of roughing it — such as showering in a horse trailer and washing her hair in a bucket.

Mrs. Wood and Ms. Hudson slept on cots under the stars, but Mrs. Montgomery and her husband, Merle, slept in their wagon.

The women recall at least one minor disappointment on the trail. They had looked forward to trying a Marble City, Okla., restaurant that served Squaw Bread burritos.

"We didn't realize how popular it was but the man in front of us ordered the last one...So next year we'll know where to go," Mrs. Montgomery said.

They also missed fording the Cimarron River at Guthrie, as the original 89ers did. Last year rains had swollen the stream and made the river bottom dangerously boggy.

"They didn't want the saddle horses to be bogged down," she said.

In April, Hudson and Mrs. Montgomery went on a 100-mile cross-country ride, starting in Tahlequah, Okla., and ending up in Fort Smith, Ark.

"We strayed through mountains and one day we went through a game preserve, but we didn't see any animals. One year the cross-country ride members saw elk bedded down there but I missed it. The country is beautiful with a rock-strewn creek to cross," she said.

The group has made shorter day rides, such as at Timbercreek development near Amarillo. Mrs. Wood and Mrs. Montgomery say they have enjoyed the canyons in the area.

"We went through an area called Buzzard's Roost Canyon, and it was aptly named. When we came out of the mesa, there were 50 buzzards sitting there looking at us as they gathered to roost," Mrs. Montgomery said.

Meeting new people has been one of the advantages of their trail rides, the women say.

On one of their day trips with the Palo Duro Arabian Club, a California car pulled up to their rendezvous.

"It was a young Yugoslavian man in his 20s who was touring the United States. He was driving down I-40 and someone told him about the trail ride. One of the cowboys put him on a well-trained quarter horse and put his cowboy hat on him.

Father's system solves math problems

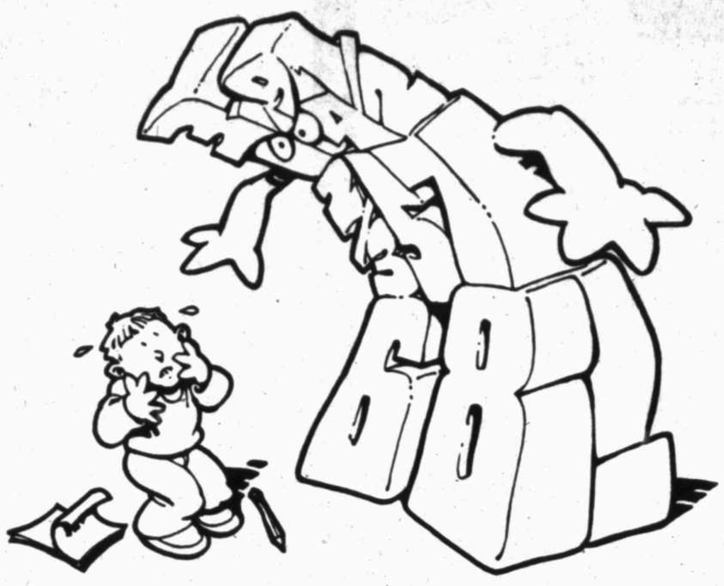

By ROBERT P. STUDER
Copley News Service

Because a Japanese father — a teacher of mathematics — had a son who was struggling with arithmetic in the second grade of his elementary school in Japan back in 1951, 1.5 million youngsters in 14 countries are learning today that math doesn't have to be boring. In fact, it really can be fun.

That was the year that Toru Kumon came to realize, from helping his son, that poor ability in mathematics is caused by a basic weakness in calculating. And that this weakness is an outgrowth of educational systems that must "move the child along" to keep up with the rest of the class, even if the child doesn't really understand what has been learned.

And so Kumon compiled some special work sheets for his son to study for a half-hour each day after school, repeating problems until he could solve them easily. And after a year of this, the boy, young Takeshi Kumon, had mastered equations. What's more, before he finished elementary school, Takeshi not only had mastered equations, but could handle third-year high school differential and integral calculus as well.

The basic educational philosophy learned that year, and in similarly successful neighborhood classes, was the spark that led in 1958 to the founding of the Kumon Institute in Osaka, Japan, which today enrolls about 9 percent of all school-age children in Japan and which currently enrolls a million and a half students in 14 countries, including the United States, Canada, Australia, Brazil, England, West Germany, Taiwan and the Philippines.

CNS Graphic

SIX THOUSAND of them, in 180 classrooms, are in the United States and Canada. Fifty of those classrooms are located in Southern California, with another dozen in the San Francisco Bay area. The institute, through franchising, is now the largest private educational organization of its kind in the world and Takeshi — the youngster who was struggling with math in the second grade back in 1951 — is president.

Kumon Institute, which has North American divisions in California, Texas, New Jersey and Toronto, Canada, is designed, according to its founder, to "give each child the opportunity to reach his own infinite potential."

At the same time, the institute says, it is bringing to parents in the United States the kind of educational philosophy that in recent years has enabled its Japanese students to surpass even Japanese public school students who, in turn — because of many factors including longer school days and years and more intensified study drills — already rank well above their American counterparts in standardized tests in both math and science.

Unique to the Kumon method of teaching, according to its advocates, is a two-part theory that emphasizes lessons geared to the individual's ability and self-learning through repetitive drills, predeveloped in a sequential order from basic line drawings (and even learning how to hold a pencil properly) through to calculus and statistics. There are 19 levels in the total program.

BUT UNLIKE conventional methods of learning, they add, the child is required to achieve a certain level of proficiency before advancing to the next step.

"This demand for the perfection of each skill before going on to the next allows the child every opportunity to completely master the mathematical process before being introduced to a harder level of work," they say.

Consequently, they emphasize, "each child is motivated by accomplishment. And the reinforcement given through the supplemental nature of the Kumon method of study serves to positively reinforce other skills that the child builds on in other area of life — such as the ability to concentrate and a positive attitude toward accomplishment.

And because of the individual instruction and pacing of the lessons, any student may start the program at any time — from as young as 2 years to adults wishing to brush up on math skills.

The teaching method, according to Martin Doerner, manager of the international school's western United States branch in Torrance, Ca., uses simple work sheets that break the most basic elements of math into separate units to be mastered at the individual's own pace. This differs, he said, from most schools, where a child who has not mastered a specific skill is pushed ahead to a level beyond capability in order to stay with the rest of the class, while a student who quickly catches on to a skill must be held back to wait for the rest of the class to catch up.

CLASS SESSIONS take from 20 to 30 minutes at a time, usually twice a week, and another 15 minutes per day in homework. They are timed to encourage students to come in after their normal school hours, he said.

Young children taught about financial choices

New York Times News Service

Harold Moe is not sure why his children treated their allowances so differently. When his daughter, Kari, was 5, she would dutifully take one of the three dollars she received and put it in a savings account. She spent the remainder on books.

His son, Rolf, was a different story. "It was as if his pockets were on fire," said Moe, author of "Teach Your Child the Value of Money" (Harsand Press, 1987). "If Rolf started out with a dollar, he felt he had to divest himself of that dollar within the next eight hours, especially if he passed by a video game."

Using an allowance to help children understand the nature of money is not a simple task. Children today are subject to television commercials and other messages telling them where and how to spend their money.

"Our society expects children to become successful consumers at a very early age," said Dr. James U. McNeal, a professor of marketing at Texas A&M University in College Station. "Parents push them and marketers pull them."

McNeal has spent the past few years studying how children under age 12 learn to use money. That research has shown that the purchasing acumen of young children has little to do with how much money they receive in their weekly allowance. It is more a matter of their parents' behaviors.

"There is a very clear relationship," McNeal said. "If the parents are wise consumers, the children become wise consumers."

That wisdom may not be present until early adolescence. Developmental psychologists say many parents have unrealistic expectations for their children when it comes to managing money. Chief among these is trying to teach a young child to save for a long-term, abstract goal like college. The dollar a week that Kari Moe put aside probably had less to do with the concept of saving for the future than with the attention her parents paid to her when she did it.

"When you talk about saving to a child who is 6 or 7, you shouldn't make it for more than a few weeks," advised Dr. Martin Ford, a developmental psychologist and associate professor of education at Stanford University in Stanford, Calif. "A 7-year-old can't plan any farther into the future than that."

Moe said that when his son was 8 or 9, "he realized that if he saved his money for two weeks he could buy a toy he wanted."

"That's when he first realized that he had a choice of what to do with his allowance," he said.

By the time children are 14 or 15, developmental psychologists say, their ability to plan for the future is usually in place. Children this age are ready to start receiving their allowances on a biweekly or monthly basis — pay periods that require more astute financial planning if the money is to last.

Children who occasionally or even frequently squander their allowances may, in fact, have an advantage over those who spend it all on parent-suggested items. One value of an allowance is to permit children to make relatively small mistakes in a controlled situation. You can do less financial damage dribbling away your allowance at age 11 than making the same mistakes with credit cards a decade later.

Allowances are teaching tool

New York Times News Service

"The clue that children are ready for an allowance is when they realize that money does something," said Harold Moe, a family financial consultant in Holman, Wis.

"That first allowance has to be enough to buy something. A dime won't buy anything today."

For most children, that initial understanding of money occurs around age 5. Although some parents do not give allowances — instead, doling out money as the children ask for it — children typically receive 50 cents a week to start, said Dr. James U. McNeal at Texas A & M University. National studies show that family income and where the family lives have little effect on that first allowance.

It is "very dangerous" to give an allowance for specific chores, advised Dr. Martin Ford, a developmental psychologist at Stanford University.

"Children should be expected to do appropriate chores because they're members of the family," he said. "If you pay children to do something, they will tend to believe that the reason they're doing it is to get money."

Although the base amount should be given unconditionally, it is important to provide occasional opportunities for the child to earn a bit extra by doing additional jobs around the house. This helps a child see the relationship between work and money without feeling that he or she should be paid for all work performed.

Finally, be clear about any limits on how an allowance should be spent. Does it include school lunch money? Can it be spent on candy? Ask the children how they would like to spend it. Help them think through the consequences of their purchases, but unless what they want is unsafe, allow them to make mistakes.

"If parents are making the decisions, the children aren't learning anything about themselves," Ford said.

Math club helps young 'phobics' cope with numbers

BLOOMSBURG, Pa. (AP) — Senie Ward of Bloomsburg never thought she'd like math.

"I thought at first I wasn't going to do good, and I liked it a lot and kept on going," says Ward, 12, of the Mathaphobia Club, a program developed by a Bloomsburg University professor and his college students.

For the past 10 to 12 years, the club has been meeting once a week at Bloomsburg University to help students develop a new outlook toward math.

"We do a tremendous job of changing attitudes," says Richard Donald, professor of curriculum and foundations at the university.

More than 5,000 children have passed through the program. In addition to progressing in math, they usually improve in a second subject — such as reading or language arts — as well.

For Senie Ward's sister, Maricka, the club is a way to reinforce her existing talent, according to her parents.

Mary and Richard Ward enrolled their daughter in the program even though she was doing well.

"It's much easier when you're working with somebody," says Maricka. "It helps you a lot. Math is my favorite subject."

The 250-member club, open to Grades 1-5, is filled. Membership is free.

About 130 university students majoring in elementary education, special education and early childhood education work with students to improve their math skills.

Donald says he has found the club to be as popular with the college students who teach it as it is with the children.

"My students love it," he says. "They've heard so much about teaching. They're dying to teach."

Research has shown children may begin to fear math even before they reach school, Donald says. The child may be influenced by a parent who wasn't a good math student, teachers who pass on negative attitudes and peers who also can color his perception with words such as "Only nerds are smart in math."

"One of the important things is it's away from the textbook," Donald says. Meetings are conducted in a very informal setting.

One student uses a lifesaving ring made of pasteboard. Numerals from zero to nine are placed on the ring, which is attached to a chalkboard. When the student adds or multiplies numerals on the ring correctly, she is rewarded with a candy Life Saver.

"It's not so much the Life Saver (that is important), but the reward," Donald says.

DEAR ABBY

Best help for retarded might not be at home

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Judy in West Virginia" who cared for Maria, her 10-year-old blind and retarded child at home, Judy is to be commended for having lasted so long. She needs to recognize that she is not equipped to spend every waking hour caring for her child — however well-loved.

Her decision concerning whether or not to place Maria in a facility should not depend on what her relatives think. Such critics are ignorant of the toll caring for a multi-handicapped child at home takes on the child and the entire family.

Facilities for the mentally retarded are able to give 24-hour supervision and care, help the child socialize at her own pace and level, and train her in some basic skills. However much Judy tries, her closeness to her child as well as the guilt trip imposed by the relatives renders her unable to do these things effectively.

The federal government sponsors a program to enable the mentally retarded person to reach his/her maximum potential. The ICF/MR program (Intermediary Care Facility for the Mentally Retarded) is usually supervised and sometimes managed by the state. There is some governmental subsidy, which varies from state to state. Information is usually available from the regional mental health center. If not, Judy should write to the Department of Health and Human Services in Washington, D.C.

Judy has done all she can. Now it's time for her to give that responsibility to the specialists. At first it may be very hard and leave a terrible void, but for the child's sake, it's better at 10, rather than 20 years later when health or other problems occur.

My husband and I placed Sherry, our retarded teen-ager, in such a facility after much deliberation by us, and criticism from relatives. I thought I would not survive the experience. I found fault with everything and everyone until I realized that after the initial shock of separation, Sherry was better controlled and, believe it or not, happier there than she had been at home. Now, eight years later, I could kick myself for having waited so long because of my own pride and the interference of relatives.

Good luck to Judy! — RELIEVED IN TEXAS

DEAR RELIEVED: Thanks to you and many others for the helpful input. Interested parents should consult the special education department of their local school district, and for more information, they should write to:

The Association for Persons with Severe Handicaps (TASH), 7010 Roosevelt Way N.E., Seattle, Wash. 98115. Please enclose a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for a reply.

DEAR ABBY: I want to give you and your readers the benefit of my own experience, which is worth a lot. My first husband, "Larry," appreciated unusual gifts, so for our first anniversary I had his name tattooed on my left breast, above my heart. Larry loved it. After 14 years of marriage, he died in an automobile accident.

Two years later I married "Mark," who never really liked seeing "Larry" over my heart, so I found a tattoo parlor and had "Larry" covered with a fancy floral design. It took a lot of doing, but it was well worth it.

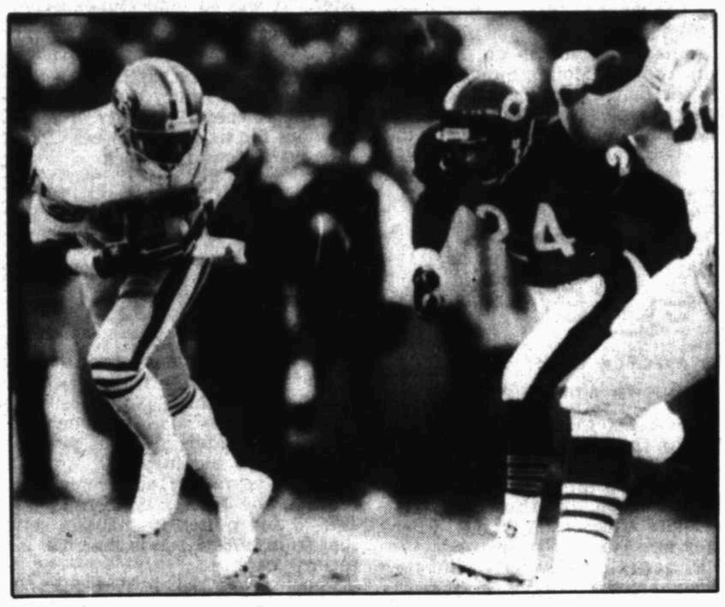

Please, Abby, tell your readers never to have anybody's name tattooed on their bodies where it will show. One never knows what tomorrow will bring. — MARK'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Thanks for the wise counsel. It will be appreciated by tattoo fanciers who are not eager to hold still for additional needling.

49ers trounce Bears, 28-3, for NFC title

49ers' Jerry Rice embarks on 27-yard TD run with pass reception from Joe Montana.

By THOMAS GEORGE
N.Y. Times News Service

CHICAGO — At first, it was a quick death. The Chicago Bears blinked, and swoosh, there went Jerry Rice blazing past them into the end zone.

Then it became a slow death. A 13-play drive here, a 12-play drive there, one consuming nearly five and a half minutes and the other almost seven of the final half, each winding up with the 49ers in the end zone.

WHEN IT was over, it was complete and decisive. The San Francisco 49ers on Sunday beat the biting cold, beat the odds and beat the Bears by 28-3 to claim the National Conference championship before 64,830 at Soldier Field.

San Francisco (12-6) will meet the Cincinnati Bengals (14-4), the American Conference champion, in Super Bowl XXIII on Jan. 22 in Miami at Joe Robbie Stadium. It is a rematch of Super Bowl XVI, won by San Francisco, 26-21, in the Pontiac Silverdome.

The 49ers earned the trip with an offense that was steady and direct and a defense that matched that effort.

NO NATIONAL Conference champion had won the title game on the road in the 1980s. The 49ers had not won a road playoff game in 18 years. But these 49ers are now 7-2 in road games this season and on Sunday did nearly everything right in what was supposed to be Bear weather.

The Bears might have known they were in trouble when they couldn't prevent the 49ers from scoring more than 17 points. In games since 1983 when they have given up 17 points or less, the Bears were 64-0.

San Francisco would have none of that. The 49ers capped the victory with Tom Rathman, a fullback, rumbling 4 yards for a touchdown on a 12-play, 70-yard drive that took 6:53 of the fourth quarter.

The 49ers were led by a superb performance by Joe Montana and Rice and a defense that frustrated Jim McMahon in his first start as the Bears' quarterback since Oct. 30.

Montana was 17 of 27 for 288 yards and three touchdowns. Rice made 5 catches for 133 yards, two for touchdowns. McMahon was only 14 of 29 for 121 yards and was intercepted once as the Bears ended their season at 13-5.

"In my mind, this could have been Joe Montanta's greatest game under the weather conditions," said Bill Walsh, the 49ers' coach.

Mike Ditka, the Bears' coach, said: "We knew we had to put points on the board but we just couldn't do it. It's a bitter loss. The opening drive of the second half was the ball game."

THE 49ERS had put the Bears in a deep hole and set the tone for the second half with a time-consuming drive after quick first-half scores.

This time, to begin the third quarter, the 49ers did not use "instant" Rice, but a 78-yard, 13-play drive that took 5:27 and featured six first downs and a three-for-three success in third-down conversions.

Montana capped it with a 5-yard toss to the tight end, John Frank, and with 9:33 left in the quarter the 49ers led by 21-3.

Chicago had the ball longer than San Francisco in the first half, maintaining possession for nearly 10 more minutes than the 49ers and running 13 more plays. But when the 49ers did have the ball, Rice was somewhere nearby.

Rice — who made three touchdown catches against the Minnesota Vikings in the 49ers' first-round playoff victory — provided two more scores early to spark San Francisco to a 14-0 lead. Kevin Butler's 25-yard field goal 3:06 before halftime made it 14-3 as both teams shivered and raced to the locker room in the biting, snapping cold.

The game began in 17-degree weather, and temperatures had dropped to 15 degrees by halftime. The wind was swirling through the stadium at 29 miles an hour, making the early punting game tricky. A

Bengals beat Bills in AFC

By GERALD ESKENAZI
N.Y. Times News Service

CINCINNATI — In an American Conference championship game devoid of newfangled offensive gimmicks, the Bengals chugged along on the old-fashioned running of Ickey Woods on Sunday to beat the Buffalo Bills and advance to Super Bowl XXIII.

The Bengals produced a solid, all-round performance with a 21-10 decision that set up a Super Bowl rematch against the San Francisco 49ers on Jan. 22 in Miami. The teams met seven years ago, the last time the Bengals were in the playoffs, and the 49ers won, 26-21.

Cincinnati, noted for a spectacular offense that led the National Football League, outdueled the heralded special teams of the Bills — even using a fake punt to set up a touchdown — while its defense kept Jim Kelly under pressure and his runners under wraps.

The significance of the victory barely set in before Coach Sam Wyche of the Bengals complained in the post-game news conference.

"We heard only 1 hour 50 minutes before kickoff that we couldn't go with the style of play that got us this far," he said. "Our style of play has been legal for 17 games. We've used it for three and a half years."

IN A RULING shortly before the game aimed at the Bengals' no-huddle, hurry-up offense, which often caught other teams with too many men on the field, Commissioner Pete Rozelle essentially said quick snaps that drew a penalty would be played over. Furthermore, each club agreed not to fake injuries to counter the quick snap.

While Wyche was speaking in the Bengals' locker room, the Bills were shouting at one another in their locker room. Words were exchanged between the team's senior player, Joe Devlin, and Erroll Tucker. It was apparently unrelated to the fact that Tucker had misplayed a punt and backed the Bills up to their 1-yard line late in the third quarter. Buffalo was trailing by 14-10 at the time.

Their shouting escalated and other players took sides. Several players said afterward no punches were thrown.

It was much more routine on the field, surprisingly so. The Bengals never showed any effects of the late ruling. They converted in clutch situations, 7 of 15 times on third down, while the Bills were shut out in their 10 attempts from third down.

Woods, a rookie, equaled the AFC title-game record of 29 rushes. He produced 102 yards. The Bengals as a team ran the ball 50 times for 175 yards, and that enabled them to hold the ball for almost 40 minutes.

Blessed with the breaks, with good field position, with solid running and an offensive line that outmaneuvered a Bills defense studded with Pro Bowl players, Boomer Esiason needed only 20 passes in a short-attack format. He completed 11 for only 94 yards, threw for one touchdown and had two passes intercepted.

Bengals' Ickey Woods makes tracks.

THE PIVOTAL minutes came in the latter part of the third quarter and the early moments of the fourth while the Bengals were nursing a 14-10 edge.

He got off a wind-aided punt that Tucker appeared to be able to field on the Bills' 15. Instead, Tucker said, the ball sailed. It bounced behind him and came to a stop at the 1-yard line.

The Bills could do nothing and punted. On the next drive, the Bengals appeared to have been stopped themselves.

A third-down run from Buffalo's 33 failed. Wyche kicked the ground in apparent anger. It was now fourth-and-4. Then Wyche kicked the ground again as if to signal for his punting team.

"I WARNED the officials that we had a fake punt," Wyche explained. Then he added, in an ironic tone: "It's called 'strategy.' Some coaches might be able to figure that out."

So the Bengals sent out Johnson, their punter, and the usual punting-team players, including big Brian Blados. But Turk Schonert, the backup quarterback, also went in, slipping onto the field behind the 315-pound Blados. No one saw him until it was too late.

The Bills had no defensive linemen on the field with their punt-return team.

Bears' drummer Alejo Poveca came prepared for 18-degree, minus 33 chill factor weather.

Hey, Baby, it was cold

CHICAGO (AP) — Fog was out this week at Soldier Field. Freeze was in.

A bone-chilling wind numbed noses and turned skin blue during San Francisco's victory over Chicago for the NFC title. Looking around Soldier Field you expected to see igloos and fur trappers. There were ice floes. All you had to do was look at Lake Michigan.

How cold was it?

The thermometer said 17 degrees. The wind chill said 26 below with 29 mph gusting winds. The temperature dropped to 15 during the second half but the wind eased, raising the wind chill to minus-19.

It was so cold ...

— That 2,116 ticketholders stayed home.

— That 30 fans went to the first-aid station, where pans of hot water were provided to resuscitate frozen bunions.

Last week, the fans couldn't see. This week, they couldn't feel. But, for the most part, they didn't care.

Soldier Field was a scene of contrast. On the field were the macho Bears, playing without gloves, wearing short sleeves.

The stadium scoreboard operator ignored that in his periodic messages to those who paid to shiver.

"If you experience stiffness or pain, go to the first aid station," the scoreboard flashed. "If your skin color changes, if you feel tingling or numbness, go to the first aid station. If your unable to, call a security guard."

This week, Soldier Field resembled its reputation. Last week, it was like a scene from the end of "Casablanca." All that was missing Rick and Ilsa.

TED BATTLES

Midland High's nostalgia trip proves huge success

Battles

Less than 10 seconds into the action, Charles Dishman, all-state, vintage 1961, hit a shot from 19.9 range.

The immediate thought was what this sharpshooter might have done had the three-point goal been in vogue back in the good old days.

What followed was not a continuation of Iowa-North Carolina on TV earlier in the day.

It wasn't, anyway, until the last couple of minutes when the outcome hung in the balance and the competitive edge could draw blood.

IT WAS Gary Brewster, 1972, whose basket decided it with less than 10 seconds to go and Charles Johnson, the not-so-old former Midland College All-America who missed the first of a one and one that could have tied it. But Charles was the reason the Odds were that close.

JOHNSON'S spectacular slam dunks provided the Odds with some sizeable first half leads and then Brewster's play-making got the Evens back in the thick early in the second half and made it a Alysheba-Bet Twice the rest of the way.

However, the play of the night came just before half when Dale Pond (1973) hit Johnson with a fast-break slam dunk lob pass that brought loudest roar of the night.

For most, the years hadn't completely robbed the "moves" of yesteryear, but it had raised havoc with the timing.

Still, 76-74 wasn't all that bad for an Alumni game that drew its talent from over the last 30 years. Some of the participants even have grandchildren.

Even so there were complaints, Midland High trainer Doc Dodson, the night's honoree, the one to whom the MHS Odds vs. Evens Alumni game was dedicated, related Jimmy Poteet, a member of the 1959 team, felt neglected because of the 1960 cutoff date.

THE GAME proved a success in alumni response, never a question, and in fan support, something no one took for granted until the promise of a night of nostalgia almost filled the old memory-filled gym.

Bill Worley, the old MHS-Texas Tech footballer, said, "This is only the first and we hope it proves popular enough to move it out to the Chap Center eventually."

Maybe, but perhaps the old gym is the place for it and if it gets that big, make 'em stand in line like we had to do in the old days. Like an old fort restored, it's still interesting and imagination-provoking, but it loses the aura of immediate proximity to the past it had when in a state of disrepair.

Vignettes Saturday night....

Bill Wood (1964), football quarterback, basketball guard and baseball third baseman, now practices law in Denton...The three Gilmours-Scott (1964), Doug (1972), but it's Bruce (1970) who has the gray hair. That's all right, Bruce, Joe Paterno has black hair and mine is gray...the Grecian helps give me a look of maturity...

Ron Taylor, 1973, who led MHS to the state finals and may be the tallest, 6-10, ever to play for the Bulldogs, stays in shape by teaching as a five-belt karate instructor. After college at Midwestern, Ron survived until the last cut with the Houston Rockets in 1977...

A ringer in this old timers game? Charles Johnson just finished playing in a Mexican professional league. Johnson's younger brother, Herbert, who led MHS to a district title a few years back and then starred for Nolan Richardson at Tulsa, is playing in Turkey....

James Cagle, coach of several playoff teams back in the early 1970's, was on hand to help Bob Todd coach the Evens. Out of coaching, Cagle is teaching in Carrollton and Saturday night did nothing to ease the itch he has to get back in coaching....

While a lot of players came in from out of town, a surprising number now live in Midland. Dale Pond, for example, gave up college coaching to return to Midland and raise a family. He has his own business and is director for a church here....

Danny Woods (1972), still with a an accurate eye, is active in Midland youth work ...Harold Howard (1972), the skills that made him one of MHS' finest guards and Austin College's Player of the Year still evident, works in the lab at Midland Memorial....Dick Campbell (1960) has his own construction business here.....Brewster played a year in Italy, in the CBA, was part of an attempted revival of the ABA after UTEP. "My car was in Georgia and I was in New York when the league (ABA) folded and left us to make our own way home."....

WHAT WOULD MHS be without a Zachery around? Saturday four Zachery sons of the late Galberson Zachery, Sr., who for years made sure Memorial Stadium was fit for MHS and Lee football exploits, led the crowd in the school song before tipoff...

Mike Marsh couldn't make it, but Mike Humphrey, his 6-7 twin on the 1960 30-1 Bulldogs, did. "I told coach Todd I would be here, but wouldn't play unless he could find me knee-high purple socks with white stripes." He raised his sweat pants to reveal the thought-to-be obsolete socks.

"Even now it's hard to live with," recalled Humphrey, now around 270 compared to his 240 at UT and 220 at MHS, of that double overtime loss in the state playoffs at Borger that cost Midland the opportunity to prove what was obvious, that it was the best team in the state.

"But it had it's beneficial side for me. Joe Fisher was on the team that won state that year and he came to the University of Texas. Every scrimmage between us was a war. I was determined to show him how lucky he had been that we didn't make it to state.

"Showing Joe made me an all-Southwest Conference player."

Mike still lives in Austin where four of the five starters on UT's SWC champions still live and see a return to Longhorn glory under Tom Penders.

A success? Bill Worley felt the turnout was go gratifying that "maybe we should have scheduled two games."

A success? Paul Stueckler was in the stands, the feeling here is that he'll have one going at Lee by next year, if it isn't already the works?

UA's Richardson ends Austin jinx

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

The Hogs gave coach Nolan Richardson his first victory in Austin in four attempts on Saturday with a 99-92 victory over Tom Penders' run-and-gun Texas Longhorns, who were run ragged by the deep Razorbacks.

Arkansas, which had downed Texas Tech earlier in the week, was tied atop the SWC ladder with the surprising Texas Christian Horned Frogs at 2-0.

TCU won twice on the road at Texas A&M and at Waco on Saturday night 66-53 in the new Ferrell Center.

IN OTHER games, Southern Methodist gave coach John Shumate a victory in his SWC opener with a hard-earned 77-69 triumph over Texas A&M; Rice beat Texas Tech 79-74 in overtime; and Houston beat Pan American 72-63 in non-conference action.

Houston and SMU are 1-0 followed by Rice and Texas 1-1 and Baylor, A&M and Tech, all 0-2.

For Richardson, it was only his eighth SWC road win in 25 games.

The Hogs were so happy they dumped an ice bucket on him in the shower.

"We kept our poise down the stretch," Richardson said. "Everybody was so excited in our dressing room you would have thought we won the championship or something."

What Arkansas did was beat Texas at its own game. Forced to play only seven players because of a knee injury suffered by Courtney Jeans, Texas led by 11 points early then faded in the second half as the Hogs cracked the 'Horns' press.

Freshman Lee Mayberry led Arkansas with 22 points before 12,647 fans.

Baylor hit only 3 of 20 shots in the first half to establish a school record for the worst shooting percentage in 20 minutes, 15 percent.

Rich Antee scored 20 points to pace the Frogs.

Baylor coach Gene Iba said of Antee: "He's 6-10 and weighs 240 pounds. Our freshman center (Joey Fatta) wasn't ready."

Donald Thompson, A&M's leading scorer, had 12 points before he fouled out with 13:19 left and SMU took advantage behind Kato Armstrong's game-high 25 points.

SMU center Glenn Puddy had 17 points and 12 rebounds for the Mustangs before a crowd of 5,375 fans.

SMU COACH John Shumate said he was a little worried at the end.

He said "it was a great game. There is no question when we have to go to A&M it will be a heckuva game. We weathered the storm and pulled it out in the end.

"We played very well in the first half but Puddy lost his legs in the second half. He gave us a good half but got tired."

A&M coach Shelby Metcalf said the Aggies couldn't find an answer to Puddy until he tired.

"Puddy hurt us bad in the first half," Metcalf said. "We couldn't handle him.

"We struggled but I thought our effort was good. I'm glad we don't play again until next Saturday because I'm looking at making some changes. Our comeback came from hustle."

The Aggies were 17 points down but cut the deficit to four points before losing.

Kenneth Rourke's 25 points led Rice in its overtime victory.

"It's our biggest win of the season," said Rice coach Scott Thompson. "We kept our poise when it got to the nitty gritty."

Arkansas is back on the road again Wednesday night at TCU in a big early season showdown.

In other games, Houston is at Texas Tech, SMU is at Baylor, and Texas is at Rice.

Teammate sucker punches Hansen

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Utah Jazz guard Bobby Hansen suffered his broken cheekbone when he was sucker-punched by teammate Bart Kofoed without provocation, according to a friend of Hansen's who saw the incident.

Anita Wille said in an interview with the Des Moines Sunday Register the punch was thrown as guests were leaving a New Year's Eve party at Hansen's house. She claimed it did not stem from horseplay that escalated, the official explanation given by the Jazz.

"It was just like watching an automobile accident," Wille told the Register. "It was so totally unexpected and unprovoked, that's all you can say. We're just heartsick about it."

The blow shattered Hansen's left cheekbone, an injury that will sideline the former University of Iowa standout for six to eight weeks. The Jazz cut Kofoed last week.

Suddenly Suns are feared team in NBA

By WALTER BERRY
AP Sports Writer

PHOENIX (AP) — For the first time in five years, the Phoenix Suns are being feared around the NBA.

Saturday's 107-99 victory over the Miami Heat was the Suns' 11th straight triumph at home, where they are 14-2 this season.

Phoenix, 20-11, has won five straight games overall, eight of its last nine and 15 of its last 19.

And after four consecutive losing seasons and three years in a row out of the playoffs, the Suns are challenging the two-time defending world champion Los Angeles Lakers for the Pacific Division lead.

"I would say outside of Cleveland, Phoenix is playing the best in the NBA now," Dallas coach John MacLeod said after the Suns beat the Mavericks 120-111 Friday night. "They're right up there with the Cavaliers, Detroit, and the Lakers.

"They're playing tremendous basketball. They are legitimate," said MacLeod, who coached the Suns from 1973-87. "They're doing a lot of things very well and playing very impressively. You don't win that many games on a fluke. But I think if you ask them, they're surprised at how good they're playing, too."

"Have you ever seen a team — virtually a brand new team — come together like this?" Suns forward Tom Chambers said. "I haven't. It just doesn't happen. For us to play like this is a big surprise."

The 21-year-old franchise, which reached the NBA playoff finals in 1975-76 and posted four 50-win seasons from 1978-83, was in shambles in recent years.

Phoenix was 36-46 in 1984-85, 32-50 the next season and 36-46 in 1986-87 in a season that saw MacLeod fired and a drug scandal involving several players since traded.

The Suns struggled to a 28-54 record last season, their worst mark since going 16-66 in the 1968-69 expansion season.

Veteran center Alvan Adams retired, first-year coach John Wetzel was fired, and Cotton Fitzsimmons, the team's director of player personnel, was named coach again last May.

Fitzsimmons, 57, who guided Phoenix to a 97-67 record in 1970-72, quickly made some changes.

He had traded last February with Cleveland to get guard Kevin Johnson and center Mark West. In July, the Suns signed Chambers to a five-year, $9 million contract as the NBA's first unrestricted free agent.

Steve Jones...a winner.

Jones in easy victory

CARLSBAD, Calif. (AP) — Steve Jones birdied two of his first four holes and cruised to a three-stroke victory Sunday in the Tournament of Champions, the inagural event on the 1989 PGA Tour schedule.

Jones, who never trailed over the final 18 holes, won the second title of his career with a final-round 69, three under par on the La Costa Country Club course, and a 279 total.

TofC

The victory was worth $135,000 from the total purse of $750,000. It marked the third consecutive year that a first-time qualifier had won this exclusive event that brings together only the winner of Tour titles from the previous 12 months.

Jones, 30, a rangy, 6-foot-4, who qualified for this event with a 1988 triumph in the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am, faltered only once.

He bogeyed both the 15th and 16th holes and saw his lead dwindle to a single stroke. But he nailed it down with a 25-foot putt for a birdie on the 17th hole.

"That pretty well turned out the lights," said Jay Haas, who tied for second with South African David Frost at 282.

Haas chipped in for birdie on the last two holes, from 80 feet on the 17th and about 35 on the 18th, for a 68. Frost also had a 4-under-par effort in the sunny, chilly weather.

PGA champion Jeff Sluman, Morris Hatalsky and Lanny Wadkins tied at 285. Hatalsky closed up with a 67. Sluman shot 71 and Wadkins 73.

U.S. Open champion Curtis Strange and Masters title-holder Sandy Lyle of Scotland were well back at 287. Strange had a closing 71 and Lyle 74.

In a separate but simultaneous competiton for Seniors, Miller Barber scored a one-shot victory with a chip-in birdie on the final hole.

Barber's 50-foot chip from behind the green completed a two-stroke swing in his favor and snatched the victory from Dale Douglass.

Mattingly still top hitter

Forget '88's dismal .311season

By MURRAY CHASS
N.Y. Times News Service

A statistical study determined last off season that for the previous four seasons Don Mattingly easily was the best player in the universe.

A similar exercise was undertaken this off season to see where Kirby Puckett fit with the best hitters swinging today. Puckett, after all, has compiled some impressive statistics in his five years in the major leagues.

The latest statistical scrutiny, however, tells more about Mattingly than it does about Puckett. Despite what for him was not an outstanding season (.311, 18 home runs, 88 runs batted in), Mattingly continues to have no peer among the players who operate out of batter's boxes.

Using 10 offensive categories for the past five seasons, which for Mattingly, Puckett and some other notable players represent their full-time employment in the majors, Mattingly is virtually as far ahead of the next best hitter as he was a year ago.

Ranking him in each of the 10 categories and then adding up the rankings (the lower the total, the better the performance) shows that the Yankees' first baseman emerges with a total of 46 points. Eddie Murray, Los Angeles' new first baseman, is a distant second with 184 points.

A year ago, when 12 categories were used, Mattingly had 44 points to 190 for George Bell and 195 for Murray.

The two categories that were not used, the ratios between strikeouts and home runs and runs batted in and plate appearances, were eliminated to give other hitters a better chance to approach Mattingly in the overall rankings. Mattingly was first in each of those categories last season and was first and second this time.

Mattingly's consistently high rankings in the 10 categories used are remarkable. He is first in runs batted in, slugging percentage, extra-base hits and total bases, second in hits, third in batting average, fifth in runs scored, seventh in fewest strikeouts, eighth in home runs and 17th in on-base percentage. His on-base percentage is his weakest area because he doesn't walk much, only 242 times in five years. By comparison, Wade Boggs, who has the best on-base percentage, walked 520 times.

Boggs also ranks first in batting average and hits, but he suffers in other areas. Among the 134 players who have averaged 400 plate appearances each of the past five seasons, Boggs is 91st in home runs and 51st in RBI. He ranks third over all with 203 points.

Puckett is 13th with 277 points. Like many of the other top players, he suffers because of strikeouts (he is 98th). But his rank is also affected by his home run total, which ranks 52nd.

Mattingly's strength lies in his rare combination of hitting for average, hitting with power and seldom striking out. Good hitters generally fall into two categories: those who hit for average and don't strike out much but have little power, and those who hit with power but don't hit for high average and strike out often.

63-1 long shot pays a bundle

MONTICELLO, N.Y. (AP) — Farmer Arbuckle, a 63-1 shot, went from last place to first Sunday, triggering an $11,407 trifecta in the seventh race at Monticello.

Fast Ernestine, the favorite, finished second, two lengths back. Pontiac Chief was third.

Farmer Arbuckle, driven by Gus Gliatis, paid $109, $25.20 and $8. Fast Ernestine paid $10.80 and $4.40. Pontiac Chief paid $5.60 to show.

TSWA picks Norman 4A's top footballer

HOUSTON (AP) — Sweetwater senior Kenneth Norman, who was outstanding at both running back and defensive back, was selected as the Class 4A Player of the Year by the Texas Sports Writers Association and was named first team on both offense and defense.

Norman had 1,850 yards rushing and 18 touchdowns in 11 games this past season.

Norman started at running back his junior and senior seasons after starting as a wide receiver his sophomore year. He ran for 4,008 yards and 47 touchdowns in three seasons and added 738 yards and 11 touchdowns on receptions. He also returned five kickoffs for touchdowns.

On defense, Norman was credited with 25 interceptions in his three varsity seasons.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: This is your year to aggressively pursue the things you really want. Let romance develop according to its own timetable. You gain personal satisfaction from doing good work. Children need your special brand of caring. Extra benefits come from friends and other supporters. Unexpected events will help advance your career goals and enhance the beauty of a special relationship. The financial picture is bright.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: dancer Ray Bolger, actor Paul Henreid, baseball great Willie McCovey, singer Johnnie Ray, rock star Rod Stewart.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Give priority to creative work. Do not try to make money through speculation. Seek advice from experts on marketing your talents. Close personal relationships require special handling. Go slow.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Try not to overdo today even if you are under pressure. Work according to your own capabilities. An older person offers sound advice. Avoid secret transactions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Influential person will support your plans as long as you keep expenditures within reason. Travel is favored. New partnerships are possible in business and romance. Be careful not to act hastily.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Active support from higher-ups will make your life much easier. Influential people will pull a few strings on your behalf, opening doors previously barred to you. Romance heats up in an interesting way.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do important work early in the day if not feeling up to par. Keep all business dealings open and aboveboard. Concentrate on winning the confidence of influential people. A good reputation works wonders.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Little opposition is likely now. You can further your interests without too much fuss. Influential person's support is the key to your success, but beware of romantic designs. Be kind but firm.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Tie up loose ends that could delay your progress. Pay bills and bring accounts up to date. Plans should be made for the future. Loved ones are contented and affectionate. Show appreciation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Keep to yourself today if others act in a contrary or erratic way. The personal side of your life needs more of your attention. Use tact if confused about a close relationship.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Avoid making promises you might not be able to honor. Keep your imagination under control. A medical or dental appointment should not be postponed. Correct a situation before it worsens.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Someone influential may be testing you. Do not put faith in this person's promises. Continue to straighten out your private affairs. Use tact and kindness with a teenager.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Expect some mixups today. The morning goes well. Encounters with influential people are happy. A friend could cause you some problems. Do not allow them to interfere with your business.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone you have had problems tracking down can be contacted now. Be sure to keep receipts for tax purposes. A teen-ager comes to you with a perplexing problem. Be a sounding board.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠83 ♡AKJ105 ◇8 ♣AKJ52
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one spade. What action do you take?
A.—Although in terms of point count you are a bit heavy for a simple overcall, two-suited hands aren't handled well by a takeout double. For instance, suppose West then boosts the auction to four spades, passed back to you. Now you would have to guess at an uncomfortably high level. It's wiser to get in one suit by overcalling two hearts.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q76 ♡A9873 ◇8 ♣K762
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Since partner's jump rebid shows a hand worth some 18 points, a raise to four clubs, which might be passed, is a distinct underbid. Jump to five clubs to confirm that you have excellent trump support and a distributional hand. (If you play splinter bids, a jump to four diamonds to show a singleton there would be perfect.)

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A2 ♡K932 ◇AKJ6 ♣KQ6
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—There is a textbook bid available—a jump to two no trump. That shows a balanced hand of 19-20 points and no significant support for partner's suit.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K932 ♡A2 ◇AKJ6 ♣KQ8
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—A jump raise to three spades in this sequence is invitational, not forcing. Since you want to be in game even if partner has a dead minimum 6 points, there is a simple way to to show your powerful hand in support—jump to four spades!

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ ♡954 ◇762 ♣KQ763
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—With only 10 points and no fit, you do not have quite enough to respond at the two-level. Therefore, the only bid you can make is one no trump.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ ♡954 ◇762 ♣KQ763
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—In this sequence partner must have at least a six-card spade suit, especially since you can tell that his suit can't be top quality. Therefore, you have excellent support and, because you have a maximum for your first response, you should now raise to three spades.

Jenrette faces petty larceny charge

Jenrette

GEORGETOWN, S.C. (AP) — Shoes have put former U.S. Rep. John Jenrette back in the news.

The South Carolina Democrat, who was convicted in 1980 in the FBI's Abscam investigation, faces charges of petty larceny for the theft of a pair of shoes and for altering price tags at a suburban Washington, D.C., department store, authorities said.

He is scheduled to go to trial in Fairfax County, Va., on Feb. 1, said his lawyer, Warren McLain.

"It was a silly, silly mistake," Jenrette said Saturday, adding that if he hadn't lost his temper over the Dec. 7 incident, the arrest "probably wouldn't have happened."

Jenrette said he was trying on a pair of rubber work shoes at the store when he heard that cars parked outside were being towed. He said he walked outside with the shoes on because he thought he had parked his car in a "questionable area."

Two security guards immediately "jumped on me," Jenrette said. An argument ensued and "the next thing I knew they signed a warrant."

Jenrette also denied charges that he altered prices on a pair of pants and a shirt from a clearance table.

Following Abscam, his former wife, Rita, appeared seminude in Playboy. She wrote a book about how she and Jenrette made love at the U.S. Capitol and how she found $25,000 stuffed in his brown suede shoe.

NEW YORK (AP) — Thirteen-year-old Drew Barrymore, the lovable little girl in the movie "E.T.," said agents hired by her mother put her in handcuffs to take her back to the hospital after her binge of substance abuse.

In September, she said, she took a break from her initial hospital stay for drug and alcohol use to audition for a play in New York, and broke her 88-day string of sobriety when she snorted cocaine in a nightclub restroom.

She said she then stole her mother's credit card, flew to Los Angeles, snorting more cocaine, and went on a shopping spree.

Her mother hired private agents who handcuffed her and sent her back to the hospital, according to her first-person account in this week's People magazine.

She said her descent into drug and alcohol abuse began with her rise in fame. "From the time I became famous in 'E.T.,' my life got really weird," Miss Barrymore said.

Miss Barrymore was released from her second stay at a drug-and-alcohol rehabilitation hospital shortly before Christmas. She said she drank at age 9, smoked marijuana at 10 and snorted cocaine at 12.

"It was frightening. I was this 7-year-old who was expected to be going on a mature 29," she said. "By the time I was 8½, I felt like I was some abnormal, crazy girl. I could walk up to the door of any nightclub and they'd say, 'Hi, you're that little girl. Come in.' "

Last June, after a beer binge, Miss Barrymore had a showdown with her mother and "started throwing things — glasses, vases. They were breaking all over the floor. I went from party girl to jerk of the planet."

CHICAGO (AP) — Singer Chuck Berry thinks the nondescript terra cotta building at 2120 S. Michigan Ave. should take its rightful place as a historic location in the development of urban blues.

"I recorded some of my biggest hits at that address," Berry recalled recently. "I have a lot of memories of it. They were great days of great music."

The building once was the mecca for the nation's blues musicians — the home of Chess Records. This week, the Commission on Chicago Landmarks will consider the nomination of the two-story building for city landmark status.

During the 1950s and 1960s, passersby might have seen Howlin' Wolf, Bo Diddley, Muddy Waters, the Dells, or the Rev. C.L. Franklin and his daughter, Aretha.

Bluesman Willie Dixon said he would like to make the building the national headquarters for his Blues Heaven Foundation, which raises money for music scholarships, and perhaps a blues museum.

"It is part of the history of America," Dixon said. "Remember, all rock is the blues by rearrangement. And the blues should have a place, a home, so the world knows where they came from."

Burns

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedians George Burns and Red Skelton, newsman David Brinkley and producer David Wolper were among eight people inducted into the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences' Hall of Fame.

Posthumously honored Sunday night were Jack Benny, Burns' wife and partner, Gracie Allen, talk show host David Susskind and newsman Chet Huntley.

Burns, Skelton, Brinkley and Wolper attended the black-tie ceremonies along with 700 others, including Bob Hope, Art Buchwald, Johnny Carson, Alex Haley, Burt Lancaster and Gregory Peck.

The ceremony at 20th Century Fox studios was taped for a Jan. 23 broadcast by Fox Broadcasting Co.

The eight were the 29th through 36th inducted into the academy's 5-year-old Hall of Fame. Past inductees include Steve Allen, Lucille Ball, Milton Berle, Carol Burnett, Carson, Walter Cronkite, Walt Disney, Jackie Gleason and Hope.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It was confession time for NBC Entertainment President Brandon Tartikoff as he put his hand on a stack of Bibles carried by an actor dressed as a priest.

Yes, Tartikoff confessed, it probably was a bad idea to broadcast Geraldo Rivera's special on Satanism, which was picked up by the entertainment division after news side refused to touch it with a 10-foot pitch fork.

"I would not say it was our finest hour," Tartikoff told a gathering of newspaper writers and critics Saturday after staging the stunt with the Bibles, at which he also vowed not to buy a sequel to Vanna White's "Goddess of Love."

Tartikoff said specials like November's "Devil Worship: Exposing Satan's Underground," which featured gruesome reports of torture, child sexual abuse and baby skinning, are best left to the world of syndication.

"I don't think you'll be seeing more programs like than from NBC," he said.

Tartikoff said the network didn't know far enough in advance that Rivera's material would be so graphic.

"He did not come in saying, 'I've got something you're going to love — skinning babies,'" Tartikoff said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Courteney Cox, who plays Michael J. Fox's girlfriend on NBC's "Family Ties," has purchased a house previously owned by singer-songwriter Carole King and stripper Gypsy Rose Lee.

Miss Cox, who also plays a marine biologist in the film "Cocoon: The Return," bought the Hollywood Hills home from producer Alan Barnette for $800,000 late last year.

Analysts see higher short-term rates

By KENNETH N. GILPIN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Additional evidence of economic strength makes further increases in short-term interest rates likely over the next month to six weeks, credit market analysts predicted.

Nevertheless, a number of the analysts said they were not yet convinced that the Federal Reserve Board has initiated a move toward higher rates by tightening credit conditions further.

Doubt about the Fed's actions remains even though the overnight federal funds, the rate most directly controlled by the central bank, traded above 9 percent for much of last week.

Those doubts were not sufficiently strong to prevent short-term interest rates from creeping up again last week, further flattening the yield differential between short-term money market rates and long-term Treasury bonds.

At the end of last week, three-month Treasury bills were trading at a price to yield 8.55 percent, not much lower than the 9.02 percent yield on the Treasury's bellwether 9 percent bonds that mature in 2018.

Some of the questions that linger about the Fed's intentions are due to seasonal pressures associated with strong year-end credit demand, pressures that are still being worked out.

"I don't think the Fed has tightened again," said Samuel D. Kahan, chief financial economist at Kleinwort Benson Government Securities in Chicago.

Kahan and others cited the Fed's open market activity on Friday as support for the view that the central bank has maintained a 8¾ percent to 8⅞ percent target range for the funds rate.

On Friday the Fed added $1.5 billion worth of reserves to the system.

"If they had been totally absent from the market, that would have been a clear signal they had tightened," Kahan said. "If I am correct, we should see funds move below 9 percent in the coming week."

Moreover, December employment data released Friday were sufficiently ambiguous to prevent the central bank from making a move immediately, analysts said.

"The employment numbers will provide ammunition to both the hawks and the doves," said Nancy Kimelman, a vice president and economist at Security Pacific National Bank. "The hawks, who favor further tightening, will look at the gains in overall employment and in the manufacturing sector and conclude the economy is growing at a robust rate. On the other hand, the doves will point to the fact that hourly wage gains remain modest, and that hours worked declined slightly."

Arthur Andersen revamps; CEO steps down

DALLAS (AP) — Partners of Arthur Andersen & Co., one of the best known Big Eight accounting companies, voted to restructure the organization and choose a new chief executive officer, the company announced Friday.

The overhaul is intended to update the 75-year-old firm and better meet its clients' changing needs, said Duane R. Kullberg, managing partner and chief executive officer.

Kullberg, 56, is stepping down after nine years at the head of Arthur Andersen, but will remain a partner.

"I think the decision (to choose a new CEO) comes from the fact that we have a new beginning," Kullberg said. "I think the system needs a new start. It's time to pass it on to somebody else."

The first step in the transition will be nominating a new board of 24 partners and choosing a new chief executive, company officials said.

The 2,200 Arthur Andersen partners approved the restructuring at their annual meeting here. The move divides the company into two branches: audit-tax practice and management consulting practice.

"What we've done, I think, is to create a new global partnership model for the 21st century, and we think we've come there first and I would reasonably expect others would copy," Kullberg said.

With 231 offices in 49 countries, Arthur Andersen provides accounting, audit, tax, management information consulting and professional education services. The company recorded $2.8 billion in fiscal 1988 revenues.

The restructuring will allow Arthur Andersen to more easily bring experts from anywhere in the world to work on a given account, as opposed to the current, more localized operation, Kullberg said.

"Our clients operate globally and they need to be supported globally," he said.

Company officials said the restructuring plan was devised over the past three months by a special task force of partners. It was reviewd by the executive committee and board of partners in a series of regional partners' meetings last December.

MARKETS

Futures prices continue strong

From Staff and Wire Reports

Energy futures prices continue gaining strength, with contracts for February delivery of West Texas Intermediate gaining 24 cents to stand at $17.79 at mid-morning.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange Friday, prices had closed mostly higher Friday as blustery winter weather in the Northeast took more of a toll on traders than on contracts.

On the NYMEX, WTI rose 13 cents to close at $17.55 a barrel. The contract recovered on Thursday to post a gain of 34 cents after losing 28 cents on Wednesday.

One analyst said crude futures turned volatile in the last hour of trading despite a lack of market forces to explain the movements.

"I think it was due more to traders leaving the pits due to concerns about the snowstorm than anything else," said Bob Baker, an energy futures analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities Inc.

Among refined products traded on the exchange, domestic heating oil futures closed narrowly mixed. Analysts said cold weather has not affected heating oil prices significantly because of adequate supplies and forecasts of warmer weather.

Meanwhile, gasoline futures followed crude. The February contract settled 0.32 cent higher at 47.72 cents a gallon. Other contract months also ended mixed.

Analysts said concerns about whether the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries would stick to its new six-month production agreement remained in the back of traders' minds.

Since the accord was announced, prices have risen from around the $13 level, but analysts noted that investor confidence appeared short-lived as reflected in oil futures prices for the next several months. Although the February contract rose 13 cents a barrel Friday, contracts from March through June showed smaller gains of between 5 cents and 6 cents.

Investors plan to revive Texas Business magazine

HOUSTON (AP) — The defunct Texas Buziness magazine is being revived by a group of investors and is expected to hit the stands sometime during the last three months of this year, an investor said.

The magazine's operations will be moved from Dallas to Houston, said Chris Hearne of Austin, former publisher of Third Coast, an Austin city magazine. Hearne said Friday the move was prompted by expectations that Houston will lead the state's economic recovery.

Hearne declined to identify other investors but said there are fewer than 20. He did not say how much the group paid for the magazine, which published its last issue in August.

The group bought the magazine from Yankee Publishing of Dublin, N.H., he said.

Hearne, who will be the new magazine's president and publisher, said he preferred reviving Texas Business to starting a new publication. He compared the magazine to "a nice lot and a good location and it had a house that was torn down, but the foundation is good and it's a good place to start rebuilding."

The investor group bought the name, subscription list and some other assets, he said.

Pacific Resources agrees to merge with BHP unit

By KURT EICHENWALD
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Pacific Resources Inc., an oil refiner and marketer, has agreed to merge with a subsidiary of the Broken Hill Proprietary Co., the largest public company in Australia, the two companies announced Sunday.

Under the deal, which is worth about $395 million, holders of Pacific Resources common stock will receive $19 a share. The two companies said that the tender was expected to begin this week and that the deal would be completed before June.

The agreement would combine the petroleum exploration and development business of Broken Hill with the refining and marketing of Pacific Resources.

Broken Hill said it planned to use Pacific Resources, based in Honolulu, as its international headquarters for marketing crude oil.

Pacific Resources will retain its name after the merger. Shares of the company closed Friday on the New York Stock Exchange at $13.75, up 12.5 cents.

One oil industry analyst reached Sunday night said the premium price being paid for Pacific Resources reflects both the company's position in the market and trends in the industry.

Dollar up as gold takes a slump

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose in Europe this morning, supported by expectations of higher U.S. interest rates. Gold prices fell.

Traders said expectations that U.S. interest rates were poised to rise were fueling the dollar's recent rally, but fears that central banks may intervene were keeping a lid on the U.S. currency, at least for the time being.

Demand was generated mostly by speculative institutional investors, while corporate clients appeared reluctant to commit themselves to the dollar's recent advance, traders said.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.7670, compared with $1.7797 Friday.

—1.8265 West German marks, up from 1.8140
—1.5575 Swiss francs, up from 1.5475
—6.2265 French francs, up from 6.1830
—2.0595 Dutch guilders, up from 2.0480
—1,339.00 Italian lire, up from 1,330.50
—1.1965 Canadian dollars, up from 1.1912

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.11 yen to a closing 126.08 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 126.55 yen.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $406.40 a troy ounce, up from $405.75 bid late Friday. But at midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a lower recommended price of $404.45.

In Zurich, the bid price was $404.80, down from $405.50 bid late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $1.97 to close at a bid $407.18.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.97 a troy ounce, unchanged from Friday's late price.

Stocks get third straight hike

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market rang up its third straight gain Friday, extending the rally that has carried the Dow Jones industrial average to its highest levels since the crash of 1987.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 3.75 to 2,194.29, finishing the week with a net gain of 25.72 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 9 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 964 up, 522 down and 491 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 161.33 million shares, down from 174.04 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 195.58 million shares.

Analysts said portfolio managers at investing institutions were continuing to buy stocks to put some of their large cash reserves to work at the start of a new year.

On Oct. 16, 1987, the session before the Dow took its 508-point drop on Black Monday, the average stood at 2,246.74. Thus, it now only about 52 points shy of recouping all its Black Monday loss.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $8.46 billion, or 0.31 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained .47 to 157.96.

Standard & Poor's industrial index rose .52 to 324.93, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up .66 at 280.67.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market added .95 to 384.74. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 311.40, up 1.98.

Debate over offshore funds begins again

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A multi-million dollar legislative settlement over the distribution of federal offshore oil and gas money hasn't settled the question of just how much money Louisiana should get.

"This problem is nothing more than (U.S. Sen.) Bennett Johnston (D-La.) trying to get even more money for Louisiana," said Donald Sant, deputy director of royalty management for the Interior Department.

Lawyers for the state say the problem is that the federal government isn't paying everything it owes.

"We beat them fair and square. And now they want revenge," said Robert Szabo, who helped Louisiana gain 27 percent of all royalties from offshore oil and gas fields straddling the state line three miles out in the Gulf of Mexico.

The battle now is over the reasoning behind the 1986 law that gives Louisiana the federal money — a $605 million windfall to start with and about $16 million a year since.

Louisiana lawmakers say the money compensates the state for the adverse effects of production in federal territory, such as the expense of providing roads, schools and other state services for the workers. Drainage of oil and gas from state pools is another matter, they contend.

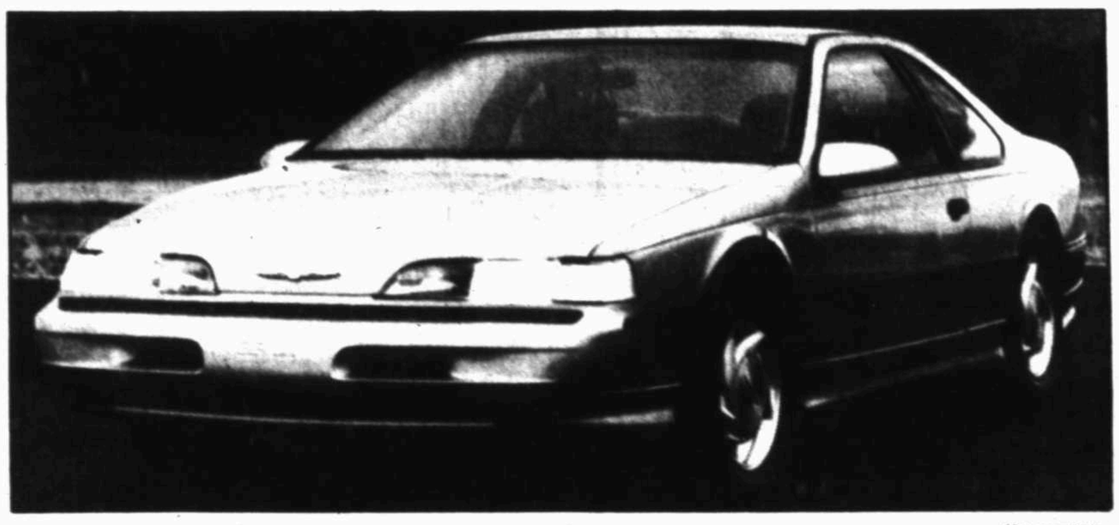

Federal officials argue that compensation for drainage of state reservoirs is included, so the 27 percent share of royalties covers all of the state's claims to such pools.

State geologists estimate that nearly 85 percent of the gas field lies under state territory. That means Louisiana should get 85 percent of the royalty payments paid by producers, say Louisiana lawmakers. They say such pro-rating has been standard practice offshore for at least the last decade.

The state has lost $6.9 million between September 1985 and March 1987 because it got only 27 percent of the royalty payments, according to an estimate by Seneca Resources Corp., which operates the state leases.

More importantly, the federal government's refusal to pro-rate royalties as the state suggests could affect many reservoirs throughout state territory.

U.S. stance hampers farm accord

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fear that the U.S. government will go it alone in world trade is discouraging other countries from joining in an accord that could cut spending on farmers by tens of billions of dollars every year, according to a report published by the International Monetary Fund.

Fund experts see a possibility that James M. Baker III, designated as secretary of state by President-elect Bush, will single out favored countries as trading partners instead of promoting U.S. trade with the whole world.

The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, whose members include the governments of the major industrial countries, says farm subsidies cost consumers and taxpayers $185 billion a year between 1984 and 1986. The biggest costs are in the United States, western Europe and Japan.

The IMF report cites a speech last year by Baker, then secretary of the treasury. Baker spoke of what the U.S. government would do if there were a failure of the trade talks now being held by representatives of 96 countries.

"We might be willing to explore a 'market liberalization club' approach, through mini-lateral arrangements or a series of bilateral agreements," Bush was quoted as saying.

Bilateral agreements are like the new one between the United States and Canada, freeing up trade between two countries but tending to freeze out others. A similar deal with Israel was made earlier last year. A "mini-lateral" arrangement includes not just two but a group of countries, like the 12 in the European Economic Community.

Groups of this kind encourage trade among members at the expense of those outside the club.

The report was written before last month's meeting in Montreal of representatives from the 96 governments. They agreed on how to negotiate 11 different kinds of trade issues in the remaining two years of talks. But they failed to agree on four others, including agriculture.

U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter insisted that other governments, especially the Europeans, promise to join in a long-term phase-out of subsidies before he would talk about cutting them in the immediate future. Bush has picked Yeutter as his secretary of agriculture.

On Thursday Alan Holmer, Yeutter's deputy as trade representative, said he was optimistic about agreement being reached on farm issues by April, a new deadline set at Montreal. But negotiations are being soured by a fight between the European community and the Reagan administration over the hormones that U.S. farmers use to make their cattle grow faster.

Last Sunday the community, which tries to keep its own farmers from using hormones, banned imports of U.S. beef and veal worth over $100 million a year. The Reagan administration retaliated with increases of 100 percent in import duties on such items as Danish hams and sun-dried tomatoes from Italy, a measure designed to make them too expensive for Americans to want to buy. The Europeans are threatening a counter-reprisal and U.S. officials say they have a list ready should that happen.

A truce is in effect at least until Jan. 23, when ministers of foreign affairs from the 12 countries are due to meet in Brussels. Bush will have been inaugurated three days earlier and the new administration may have some ideas for getting the talks back on the rails. Yeutter is to be replaced as trade representative by Carla Hills.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Airline smoking bans may get tougher

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional supporters of the two-year ban on smoking on most airline flights are moving to make the restrictions permanent, heralding a replay of the 1987 battle that pitted tobacco interests against health groups.

Reps. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., and Bill Young, R-Fla. — authors of the legislation that became law — introduced a bill at the start of the 101st Congress last week that would make permanent the current prohibition on flights of two hours or less.

The measure already has attracted 50 co-sponsors, and other bills prohibiting smoking on all routes are likely to follow.

New tax pushes California smokes to $2

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — California smokers and smokeshop owners are fuming over a week-old tobacco tax increase that boosts the cost of a pack of cigarettes from a vending machine to $2 or more.

The tax, approved by voters in November and effective Jan. 1, jumped from a dime to 35 cents on a pack of cigarettes and raised the price of cigars, chewing tobacco, snuff and pipe tobacco by 42 percent.

The hike makes California's tobacco tax one of the nation's highest. Minnesota's tax of 38 cents a pack on cigarettes is tops; by contrast, North Carolina, where tobacco is the leading cash crop, charges a mere 2 cents a pack.

City's accomplishments reviewed

By LYN MILLER

This review of the past year highlights various accomplishments made by the City of Midland during 1988.

One of the most significant projects conducted in the city, and still in progress, is the Lamesa Road Project. Designed to upgrade and expand Lamesa Road into a five-lane arterial street from Loop 250 south to Interstate 20, it is anticipated that the improvements will spur future economic development in the area.

In January 1988, the State Highway Department reached an agreement with the city, whereby the Highway Department would construct the road and provide relocation assistance to the homeowners and businesses in the area and the city would purchase the needed right-of-way, paying for curb and gutter, sidewalks and utility relocation.

Since last January, the city, using Community Development Block Grant funds, has acquired more than 120 property parcels, 95 percent of the needed right-of-way.

The Highway Department has scheduled May 1989 as the target date to begin construction on the road.

The city election was held in May of this past year, with no opposition candidates. Mayor Carroll Thomas and Councilman Robert Rendall, who was selected to serve as mayor pro-tem, were re-elected for additional two-year terms. Robert Monaghan, who filled an unexpired term on the council in 1987, also was elected to a two-year term.

At Midland International Airport during 1988, the $2.5 million renovation of the terminal building was completed; parking meters were installed in front of the terminal building, providing convenient short-term parking to patrons; inside the terminal construction was completed for a snack bar and lounge in the gate area and a nursery was created for the convenience of parents traveling with their infants; a taxi loading zone was created in front of the baggage area of the terminal for the convenience of travelers transporting their baggage to a cab, as well as a ground transportation loading zone; new logos were adopted by the city council for use at the airport and Midland Air Park; and in the fall of 1988 the application for Midland International Airport to become a foreign trade zone went into the review and approval process.

In the spring of 1988, reconstruction of Wadley Avenue from I Street to Whitney was accomplished for the purpose of redesigning the road to handle the current flow of traffic.

The pavement, constructed more than 30 years ago, had outlived its design life and water runoff had accelerated the deterioration of the road surface.

During reconstruction, a nuisance water drain, designed to carry water runoff from the watering of lawns and light rain, was installed. The re-routing of traffic during the reconstruction process was designed to pose as little inconvenience as possible to those traveling in the area.

City offices received a new Direct Inward Dial telephone system in July, following an extensive feasibility study, which made it possible for the public to dial specific departments and individuals direct.

In September, voters approved one of the four issues presented in a capital improvement bond election. Adopted was the funding of a public safety communications center, a priority item of the police department.

Negotiations began for the purchase of the Loraine Center to house the communications center and an architectural firm was selected to prepare plans for the remodeling of part of the building.

A new program, instigated in 1988, was the Mid-Managers Training Program, whereby training sessions are conducted relating to management, communication and public relations.

Accomplishments during the past year of the Department of Community Services include renovation of Angels Stadium; installation of additional lighting along the jogging trail and the addition of four Little League baseball fields in Windlands Park; initiation of the construction of Frank Essex Park; dedication of Butler, House and Volunteer parks; dedication of the tennis center at Midland High School; groundbreaking and beginning of construction at MARC-Opportunity Park; assisted with the Midland Junior Baseball Association state qualifying tournament, the Soccer Association state qualifying tournament and the MUGS national qualifying; and, with Softball Association, hosted the National Women's Class C Softball tournament and the State Men's Class C Softball tournament.

Some of the projects begun by the city administration, and still in progress, include a review of city policies with regard to water, sewer, streets and related areas; a review of the Work Management Program, providing an audit of the same; and the use of privatization and contracting for services in several areas of city government.

The City Council adopted a policy for the investment of city reserves and fund balances and, in December, held a joint meeting with the City of Odessa's mayor and council regarding regional economic development and the benefits of the statistical identification of the combined areas.

As we welcome the new year, the City of Midland is pleased to renew its commitment to the residents of Midland to continue providing quality services and assistance from all departments of the city.

autumn — (noun) When you think of the season, "autumn," often called, "fall," what events or happenings pop into your mind? Going back to school, football season, or season-premier televsion shows? All of these events take place during "autumn," which is comprised of the end of September, October, November and part of December. It is the seson between summer and winter, where, in central and northern parts of the nation, the leaves on many trees and shrubs begin to change colors and eventually fall off. "Autumn" comes to us from the Middle English word "autumpne" and the Latin word "autumnus."

Zoologist thinks public uneducated about animals

HOUSTON (AP) — When a hunter claims to have mistaken a whooping crane for a snow goose, it's evident that the public lacks proper education about endangered species, a zoologist says.

About 30 members of the Houston Audubon Society gathered over the weekend at the Edith L. Moore Sanctuary for a memorial service for a crane killed Tuesday by a Houston businessman who was hunting near the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge north of Corpus Christi.

It was the first reported shooting of the endangered whooping crane in 21 years.

"I think this whooping crane incident is an indication of the whole general problem out there," said Rex Wahl, a zoologist with the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department's Natural Heritage Program in Austin.

"For most people there's an unawareness, and a lack of information. It just galls me that somebody doesn't care enough...to identify what they're shooting at."

Government wildlife officials said they have not decided what will happen to the unnamed hunter, though they say they may seek restitution of $4,000 to $10,000.

Jane Scheidler, the society's vice president for environmental affairs, said the man should be forgiven because he turned himself in to authorities.

On Saturday, Audubon members recounted the bird's life, recited passages from famous people and held a moment of silence.

The service was conducted not only to remember the bird but to remind one another of the fragile coexistence between man and animals, Ms. Scheidler said.

"She was a wonderful, precocious bird," said Sandi Hoover, Audubon executive director.

Mitsubishi sues Houston lawfirm

AUSTIN (AP) — A Travis County courtroom was the stage for a confrontation today between some of Texas' better-known lawyers and government officials.

A Japanese aircraft manufacturer has filed a lawsuit alleging betrayal, coverup, breach of contract and ethical conflict by the Houston lawfirm of Fullbright & Jaworski in connection with an airplane bought by a partner in the firm.

Mitsubishi attorneys said their expert witnesses would include Joseph Jamail, who was lead attorney for Pennzoil Co. in its multibillion dollar suit against Texaco Inc.

F&J said it would call former Texas Supreme Court Justice Jack Pope as an ethics expert.

Former Texas Supreme Court Justice John Hill was retained as lead counsel for F&J, but he backed out to spend time preparing for another case. A third former state Supreme Court justice, Robert Campbell, will serve as an ethics expert for Mitsubishi.

But the allegations expected to be leveled in the courtroom could be more captivating than those making the accusations.

"We characterize it as a case of betrayal by Fullbright & Jaworski," said Sidney Ravkind, lead counsel for Mitsubishi, a unit of Mitsubishi Heavy Industries Ltd. of Japan. "Evidence will show we have uncovered facts that will show clearly they attempted to cover up the betrayal."

Mitsubishi claims F&J, which served as its legal counsel for more than 20 years, betrayed the aircraft company when in 1984 it negotiated the sale of two Mitsubishi aircraft for F&J partner Pike Powers and another investor. The aircraft manufacturer claims the terms were highly favorable for Powers.

Powers purchased one of the jets at the request of former Gov. Mark White, who planned to use it to fly around the state while in office. White has given depositions in the case and could be called as a witness.

Attorneys for Mitsubishi accuse Fullbright of conflict of interest and breaching fiduciary duty.

F&J co-counsel Michael Burk, of Lidell, Sapp, Zivley, Hill & LaBoon, calls Mitsubishi's suit and allegations an attempt to wriggle out of a contract they failed to uphold.

"When the evidence is presented it will be clear that F&J did absolutely nothing wrong and MAI (Mitsubishi) has always been happy with Fullbright's work," said Burk, adding that the aircraft manufacturer continues to refer business to the law firm.
