IPAA edges closer to backing oil import fee

By JOHN PAUL PITTS

DALLAS — After making an impassioned plea for the energy security of the free world, the Independent Petroleum Association of America today came closer than ever to issuing a statement for all-out support of an oil import fee.

However, critics who have been long-time proponents of an import tax say today's IPAA statement doesn't go far enough.

In a press conference at the IPAA annual meeting here, Raymond H. Hefner Jr., chairman of the board of IPAA, said the security of the free world hinges directly on the strength of the United States and that one of the critical elements of national strength is a secure supply of energy within U.S. control.

"The deliberate manipulation of world oil prices by foreign governments has eroded this basic strength and it could be lost," said Hefner.

He said a goal of the U.S. government must be to insulate domestic energy resource development from economic control and manipulation by governments of Persian Gulf producing countries. The great potential of future U.S. reserves cannot be developed under the cloud created by what amounts to worldwide economic terrorism.

Hefner presented recommendations of the group's Emergency Action Task Force, which were adopted by the IPAA Executive Committee on Sunday.

Hefner said that if the dominant Arab OPEC countries continue to hold oil prices below the level needed for the U.S. to maintain adequate reserves of oil and gas, the Task Force recommends the president take all appropriate actions to prevent OPEC control of our energy supply. Those actions include a floor price for crude oil to provide stability and a variable import fee on crude oil and petroleum products — without exemptions or exceptions — to stabilize prices of crude oil and products at an adequate level.

The statement departs from previous IPAA positions in that it specifically names import fees and price floors as possible actions for the president to consider.

The task force's report urges the president to:

Pope, leaders of 11 major religions pray for peace

ASSISI, Italy (AP) — United in a quest for peace, Pope John Paul II and leaders of 11 non-Christian religions, from African animists to Japanese Shintoists, fasted and prayed together today.

In a gesture of solidarity and support, several of the world's warring governments and insurgent groups promised to observe the pope's appeal for a 24-hour truce. However, violence and fighting were reported in Northern Ireland and the Middle East.

In Washington, President Reagan today expressed support for the day of peace proclaimed by the pope and said the weapons envisioned as part of his Star Wars defense against nuclear attack "threaten no one."

After hours of fasting and separate prayers, the 160 participants in the "World Day of Prayer for Peace" walked in silent processions through the stone streets of this medieval hilltown to the Basilica of St. Francis.

Police and plainclothes officers trying to clear the narrow alleys kept pushing pilgrims and tourists who had flocked to Assisi in busloads.

On the steps of the 800-year-old church where the 13th-century saint is entombed, representatives of the various religions offered a public prayer, each fol-

Yates' future looking brighter, says head of Marathon Oil operations

"It may not be as robust as it once was, but we expect for it to produce lots of oil in the future."
— Carl Giardine, Marathon Oil Co. vice president

IRAAN (AP) — The future is looking brighter in at least one West Texas oil field, says the head of Marathon Oil Co.'s domestic petroleum operation.

Carl Gairdine of Houston, senior vice president for Marathon production in the United States, says his company's Iraan operations have stabilized and the Yates field will begin producing more oil.

"We're getting ready to hire some people," Gairdine said at a dedication program Saturday to honor early oil pioneers. "I feel positive about the field and we look forward to being here for a long time."

The Yates field is Marathon's biggest single asset and still contains a very large reserve of oil, he said. It produced its 1 billionth barrel of oil on Jan. 11, 1985.

"It may not be as robust as it once was, but we expect for it to produce lots of oil in the future," Gairdine said.

The field now produces just over 100,000 barrels of oil per day, said John Strong of Midland, Marathon regional production manager.

He said the company will drill from 75 to 85 new wells in the field this year, and by 1989, more than 1,000 new wells will have been drilled in a long-range program of enhanced recovery.

The recent Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries talks have been encouraging, he said.

"They are at least talking to each other, and that's a bright spot, but they must do more than just talk," Gairdine said.

State Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, who commended the well developers for their early vision, was the dedication speaker.

"This is one field where the Texas Railroad Commission has had few problems," Sims said.

A special monument was dedicated at Saturday's program, where Sims described today's oil field workers as being like their predecessors.

"Those pioneers were great, but they had problems much like those we have today," Sims said. "The Yates' couldn't sell enough oil in those early days."

Mattox confident of victory while Barrera struggles

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Heavyweight oil and insurance companies went after him, an Austin prosecutor tried to convict him and an investigation linked him to a condominium scandal.

Republicans wanted him out of office and recruited a young, good looking judge — Roy Barrera Jr. — to take Attorney General Jim Mattox's job.

So 15 days before the election, what did Mattox do to hold onto his office? He came into work late in the morning, took a long lunch, went to the eye doctor and returned to his office near the Capitol to sign some papers and review a few cases.

With little time before the Nov. 4 election, Barrera is still struggling to raise money and to get his message out, while Mattox enjoys huge leads in the polls and rarely campaigns.

"To have a horse race, you got to have two horses," Mattox says. "And Roy Barrera Jr. isn't a horse."

Barrera, 34, is a Republican district judge in San Antonio. The Texas Republican Party picked him as their man against Mattox for several reasons: Mattox's perceived vulnerability, the growing Republican Party, his tough-on-crime posture and, as much as anything, his ethnicity.

The theory was that Barrera would win Dallas, Midland and perhaps Houston just by being a Republican. He could rack up big numbers in his home county of Bexar, just as he did in his judicial race. And he could do something no Republican before had accomplished — bring in votes in heavily Hispanic South Texas, a Democratic stronghold.

Now, however, the polls show those coalitions haven't come together. But Barrera is on a last-minute fund raising and media blitz. That, he says, along with a strong showing by GOP gubernatorial candidate Bill Clements, will give him an upset win over Mattox.

"If Republicans go to vote, and if they're voting for Bill Clements," Barrera says, "I don't know how they can cross over to vote for Jim Mattox in lieu of Roy Barrera. I submit that if the vote is there for Governor Clements, the vote is there for Roy Barrera."

The judge also says he also will receive help from fundamentalist Christians, especially in light of Mattox's ongoing case against the Rev. W.N. Otwell, a Fort Worth preacher who runs an unlicensed boys home. Otwell has formed a following that, among other things, has left a dead cat on Mattox's doorstep and rallied against him at the Capitol.

Barrera says Mattox's action against Otwell "has galvanized the Christian vote."

As for South Texas, Mattox hit there early and obtained endorsements from nearly 2,000 Hispanic leaders. But that support, says Barrera, is from elected Democrats who have to support the ticket.

Candidates say they have right stuff

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Brown

Smith

ELECTION '86'

The race for County Commissioner, Precinct 4, pits 16-year incumbent Winfree Brown against political newcomer Scot Smith, a market research manager.

Both feel they have the right stuff to oversee the county's budgetary procedures.

Smith, a write-in candidate, has a degree in accountancy and information systems from the University of Texas of Permian Basin and has lived in Midland County two years and said he is fiscally conservative.

"I'm a rookie and I'm financing my campaign on my own," Smith, 32, said.

He said he felt two major issues in the race were county roads and the county jail system. "I took it to the streets and asked the people what they felt the issues were," he added.

"There is a schism between those in the city and those out of the city limits, yet still in the county," Smith said.

He said he found those living out of the city limits were more concerned about roads and taxes while those in the city limits were more concerned with taxes and the jail system.

Smith said he felt some of the commissioners had strayed away from the fundamentals of the office and if elected, he would have more of a "hands-on" approach to county government.

"Someone from the outside looking in can see more sometimes," Smith said of his status as a newcomer to the race.

Smith said he is running for the seat because, "I live in the county limits and have lived with the road situation.

"I think if you're going to complain, you should do something about it," he said.

Running for re-election is Winfree "Win" Brown, who besides being county commissioner for the past 16 years, is a petroleum landman, past chairman of the Board of Regents of North Texas State University and a part-time gemologist.

Brown said there are about 30 miles out of 800 miles of county roads in Precinct 4 and that $13 million is budgeted for road repair.

"The worst roads get the first attention," Brown said.

"People will be unhappy regardless — I've always insisted on an open-door policy — 'give me a call and I'd listen to the problems'" Brown said.

As far as the jails are concerned, Brown said he would rather have built a new jail than spend the estimated $2 million on renovations.

"The renovations will add about 10 spaces (bringing the total jail capacity up to 95)...and we need about 144 spaces with expansion possibilities of 75," Brown said.

Brown said while he's been commissioner, the county in essence, gave taxpayers a 10 percent cut in the tax rates because the appraised values dropped and the county still didn't raise taxes.

"I have the county's operation at heart," Brown said.

Council may name new chief at meeting

From Staff Reports

A new police chief for the city of Midland may be chosen Tuesday at the meeting of the City Council, City Manager James Brown said early today.

Brown said the City Council will review the qualifications of the four finalists for the position in a closed executive session. He said if any action is taken, it will be taken in an open meeting.

"We have not made a decision and it will not be made until tomorrow," Brown said. He would not comment on any finalists that may have been eliminated from consideration.

The four finalists, who were recommended to the city Oct. 13 by the firm Jensen-Oldani, are Kenneth R. Harrison, 44, Miami police colonel; James McLaughlin, Jr., 42, director of police service in Longview; Talmadge Lassiter, 51, police chief in Durham, N.C.; and Richard L. Czech, 53, commander in the Tucson, Ariz., police department.

Eisenhower's 'Abominable No-Man' dies

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) — Sherman Adams, who once ran the country as "assistant president" to Dwight D. Eisenhower, but whose political power ended in a scandal over a vicuna coat, died today at a hospital. He was 87.

Mary Hitchcock Memorial Hospital spokeswoman Annie Proulx said Adams died at 8 a.m. of respiratory arrest and renal failure. She said he had been hospitalized for several weeks.

The Republican ex-governor became counselor to Eisenhower in 1952 after Adams engineered Eisenhower's New Hampshire presidential primary and general election victories.

He was the man who said "no" for the president, and his influence was such that Eisenhower reportedly did not approve any policy papers that were not initialed "S.A., O.K."

When Eisenhower was hospitalized with a heart attack in 1955, a committee of top-ranking officials ran the country with Adams in charge, president in everything but name. Eisenhower called Adams "the Boss." Others called him "the Rock" or the "Abominable No-Man." Columnists said he was the second-most powerful man in the country.

Payment to prostitute leads to resignation

LONDON (AP) — Margaret Thatcher and Conservative Party authorities were looking for a new deputy party chairman today after best-selling novelist Jeffrey Archer resigned over his offer of hush money to a prostitute.

Deputy premier Lord Whitelaw, party chairman Norman Tebbit, and floor leaders at the House of Commons were calling on the Prime Minister at her official 10 Downing Street residence.

The tabloid News of the World linked Archer, who combined politics with fiction writing, to 35-year-old prostitute Monica Coghlan.

After resigning Sunday, the 46-year-old Archer, who is married and the father of two sons, said he had never met the woman. But he acknowledged that the weekly was correct in reporting that he arranged for an associate to offer her $2,800 to go abroad after she told him newspapers wanted her story because one of her clients had told them she and Archer had a relationship.

Archer said he made an error of judgement. "I have been very silly, very foolish. What else can I say?" he told reporters.

Bright, good humored and witty, Archer was in great demand as a speaker in Tory electoral districts. With planning for the next general election campaign already underway, he was scheduled to visit 150 districts in the next six months.

Mrs. Thatcher, in power since May 1979 and re-elected in June 1983, hopes to win a third term when she calls the next election, which must be before mid-1988.

"The gap left by the energetic Archer is big," the liberal Guardian reported today.

Opinion among Conservatives seemed to be that Archer had no choice but to quit and that the party would not be damaged.

"Because he (Archer) has done the honorable thing and gone, I don't expect any lasting damage to the party," said Peter Bruinvels, a Conservative lawmaker and member of the state Church of England's policy-making General Synod.

"As a Conservative Party we don't deal with prostitutes. We are a party of the highest morals and no deals must ever be done with people of dubious character," Bruinvels told a reporter.

The Daily Telegraph, regarded as the voice of the Conservative heartland, said Archer's departure "should not be a matter of serious embarrassment to the government."

Elected to Parliament in 1969 as its youngest member, Archer had to resign when he went bankrupt five years later after a Canadian company he had heavily invested in collapsed.

He turned the experience into his first novel, "Not a Penny More, Not a Penny Less." He then wrote three more, including "First Among Equals," in which an ambitious lawmaker's political career is threatened by a prostitute.

Gorbachev accuses U.S. of 'misrepresentation'

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev today criticized what he called "gross misrepresentation" by Washington of the Reykjavik summit and repeated that weapons in space must be linked with other arms control issues.

However, Gorbachev said there was room for negotiation on arms control, despite the breakdown of his talks in Iceland with President Reagan.

His comments came in a statement issued through the Tass news agency that was addressed to the organizers of a writers' meeting in Sofia, Bulgaria. Tass said the writers asked Gorbachev for his vision of the future of mankind.

The Communist Party general secretary said arms control was the main priority of Kremlin foreign policy, citing his government's 14½-month-old moratorium on nuclear weapons tests.

"At the recent meeting with the U.S. president in Reykjavik, the Soviet side put on the table a package of interlinked proposals" on arms control, Gorbachev said.

The main points in the Soviet proposals made in Iceland, he said, were an initial 50 percent cut in strategic nuclear weapons, elimination of all medium-range missiles in Europe, a ban on testing of space weapons and a nuclear test ban.

"If the American side had accepted the package, a real process of the elimination of nuclear weapons would have got under way," he said.

After the Oct. 11-12 summit, both sides said Gorbachev and Reagan agreed in principle on a 50 percent strategic weapons cut and on removing medium-range missiles from Europe. But they said the talks broke down over the future of the U.S. "Star Wars" space-based missile defense program, and each side blamed the other for the failure to achieve an agreement.

The United States wants to have the right to test space weapons components, while Gorbachev wanted Reagan to agree to limit space weapons testing and research "to the laboratory" for 10 years.

Soviet officials since have indicated Gorbachev's position would allow some field tests, as long as they were not conducted in space.

"The situation after the Reykjavik meeting, in spite of the well known provocative actions of the U.S. administration and the gross misrepresentation of what came to pass at the Iceland meeting, still offers opportunities for a search for solutions," Gorbachev said.

"It is also a signal to all those who can and must play a role to promote detente and disarmament," he said.

His phrase "provocative actions" refers to the superpowers' exchange of diplomatic expulsions, initiated by the U.S. order expelling 25 Soviets based at the United Nations. The exchange ended last week after the Soviets stripped U.S. missions in the Soviet Union of their Soviet staff.

After the summit, both sides said the two leaders agreed to initial 50 percent cuts in strategic nuclear weapons.

Gorbachev has said Reagan also agreed to a subsequent phase in which all long-range nuclear weaponry would be eliminated.

But Reagan has said he agreed to eliminate only ballistic missiles fired from land and sea, leaving some cruise missiles on heavy bombers.

During the weekend, two Soviet officials read what they claimed were statements made by Reagan that supported the Soviet version of events.

The officials, Deputy Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh and chief Geneva negotiator Viktor Karpov, also alleged Reagan agreed not only to eliminate all strategic weapons, but nuclear weapons of every kind, including medium-range missiles, shorter-range missiles and tactical nuclear devices intended for battlefield use.

A White House spokesman on Sunday contradicted the Soviets' statements.

Palestinian driver fights off attacker, saves Jewish girls

JERUSALEM (AP) — A bus veered toward a cliff while its Palestinian driver fought off a broken bottle-wielding assailant and Jewish schoolgirl passengers screamed in panic, authorities reported.

For several moments Sunday night it looked like the driver had lost control of the vehicle and it would fall off the narrow, steep road into a deep valley outside Jerusalem.

But the driver, wounded by the attacker's initial blow, managed to turn the wheel and keep the bus from falling off the precipice. As the driver hit the brakes, his Palestinian assailant took out a dagger.

The door opened and the driver and his assailant, locked together, wrestled down the hill. They fought until the driver overcame and disarmed the man.

By then, several schoolgirl passengers had raced to their nearby religious school and called police. The attacker was seized and taken to Jerusalem police headquarters.

The driver, Jaleb Zarai, was taken to Hadassah Hospital where he was treated for a slight head injury, hospital spokeswoman Ruth Mekel said.

Zarai, 33, a Palestinian from Jerusalem, was released shortly afterwards, still angry because his passengers had been endangered.

"The Jews are like brothers to me. I work with Jews all the time. I am against terror," he said in an interview with the national news agency Itim.

Jerusalem police spokesman Rafi Levy said the Palestinian assailant was not a terrorist and suggested he may have gone berserk.

Itim reported that the attacker told police during interrogation he had recently been fired from his job and felt distressed. Itim quoted him as saying he wanted to take revenge because he had not received his last paycheck.

PEACE

lowed by a brief period of meditation.

The pope, in his closing address at the basilica, called on government leaders to fashion "a strategy of peace."

"Either we learn to walk together in peace and harmony, or we drift apart and ruin ourselves and others. Here we are acting as the heralds of the moral awareness of humanity as such, humanity that wants peace, needs peace," he said.

Then the participants, from more than three dozen countries, raised olive branches, the symbol of peace.

The joint peace appeal, according to the Vatican, could reach some 3.5 billion believers worldwide, or about 70 percent of the Earth's population.

The gathering began under threatening skies at the central door of the Basilica of Santa Maria degli Angeli, built where St. Francis of Assisi died.

Moslems, Buddhists, Jews, Hindus, Zoroastrians, Sikhs, Jains, Bahais, American Indians, as well as Protestants and other non-Roman Catholic Christians, took part.

Later, the pope led Christians from 32 denominations and groups in an ecumenical service at San Rufino Cathedral. Jews met outside San Rufino Cathedral, in a small piazza, saying it is against their practice to pray in a building with non-Jewish religious objects.

At the Basilica of Santa Maria degli Angeli, there was a stunning array of colors — robes of crimson, black, red, blue, white and yellow, golden crucifixes, feathered headdresses of American Indians and ceremonial African beads — set against the church's facade of pink and beige stones.

As thousands of onlookers applauded, the pontiff arrived in a motorcade from nearby Perugia and shook hands with the heads of more than 60 delegations representing the spectrum of faiths.

The first to greet the pope was the Dalai Lama, the self-exiled Buddhist god-king of Tibet. John Pretty-on-Top, a Crow Indian from Crow Agency, Montana, wore tribal regalia.

The white-robed pope offered both hands to Elio Toaff, chief rabbi of Rome. The two men had met last spring during John Paul's historic visit to Rome's main synagogue.

The pope said in his opening speech, speaking in English, "Without in any way denying the need for the many human resources which maintain and strengthen peace, we are here because we are sure that, above and beyond all such measures, we need prayer — intense, humble and trusting prayer — if the world is finally to become a place of true and permanent peace."

The pope said he chose Assisi because St. Francis is "known and revered by so many throughout the world as a symbol of peace, reconciliation and brotherhood."

Popular drug testing kit comes under scrutiny

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Police here have quit using a drug-testing kit popular among law enforcement agencies after it mistakenly identified novocaine as cocaine.

And in a case in the East Texas town of Paris, the drug-testing kit, marketed by Becton, Dickinson and Co. of Irving, twice mistook instant tea for hashish. Subsequent police action in the case prompted a lawsuit.

"We stopped using the kit five or six years ago," said narcotics Sgt. John Sparks. "We were having other problems but the main reason was that we were getting a positive cocaine reading when we tested a substance we knew was not cocaine."

City police are now using what Sparks called a different and better means for conducting narcotic field tests.

"We're using the same preliminary test procedures the Department of Public Safety chemists use in analyzing suspected narcotics," Sparks said. "They supply us with the necessary chemicals for making two separate tests, one to confirm the substance is illegal and another that provides a specific identification."

"We've had very little trouble field testing suspected drugs since we changed," Sparks said. "Our accuracy rate is between 90 and 95 percent over the past four or five years."

IPAA

— publicly identify the national security threat caused by manipulation of world oil prices by the dominant Arab OPEC countries;

— Declare to OPEC that the U.S. will take all actions necessary to prevent the destruction of domestic energy industries;

— Announce his support for strengthening the collapsing oil and gas industry and related energy industries; and,

— Support exploration and development incentives and remove regulatory impediments to oil and gas exploration and development by:

— Revising and enacting tax provisions including depletion, more rapid expensing of lease and well costs, tax preference for exploration

— Deregulation of natural gas, repeal of the Fuel Use Act, and elimination of existing impediments to transportation of natural gas from producers to end users; and,

— Opening up more federal lands for exploration and development.

However, the recommendations did not set forth specific levels for a crude oil floor price or adequate product prices.

Neither did the task force establish a recommended timetable for stabilization of oil prices or a deadline by which the president should respond to the group's recommendations.

Asked what alternatives the president might utilize to stabilize oil prices, if he opts not to pursue an import tax, IPAA Task Force chairman C. John Miller said there are a number of negotiation options available to the president.

Miller added that he hoped the statement would be a positive step toward reuniting the industry which has been less than unanimous in its positions on the import fee issue.

Those who have criticized the IPAA for not having already come out in support of a crude oil fee say the task force recommendations do not go far enough. "I feel it was a non-statement," said Russell Wright, whose publication, World Oil, has come out strongly in favor of an import fee.

Arliss Watts, a member of a private campaign organization working in support of a variable import fee called Energy Security Policy, commented, "IPAA has moved a long way from last year, and they are moving in the right direction, but not far enough."

"Too many people are worried about what might happen if a crude oil tax were enacted. You cannot be paralyzed by fear of what might happen," said Watts, who also is owner of North Central Oil Corp.

Raymond Plank, chairman of Minneapolis-based Apache Corp. and a founder of ESP, seeking an immediate import tax said, "We will continue to go around the country and work with the grassroots movement to get an immediate oil import fee.

"The IPAA statement would have been perfect if it had not contained the word 'if'." Plank added that his group feels that an oil price of $25 to $26 per barrel is needed to continue enhanced recovery operations in the U.S.

Midkiff man killed in accident

From Staff Reports

A 22-year-old Midkiff man was killed early Sunday when the vehicle he was driving went out of control on a farm road east of Midkiff in Upton County, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Jose Angel Martinez, Box 12, Midkiff, was pronounced dead at 8:23 a.m. by Judge Robert Pine. According to reports, Martinez was traveling westbound on Farm to Market Road 2401 two miles west of Midkiff when his vehicle went off the south shoulder, struck a fence line, overturned and struck Martinez.

The body was taken to James Dennis Funeral Home in McCamey. DPS said a seat belt was not worn in the accident.

RACE

"Many grassroots Democrat Hispanics who do not hold elected office and who do not have to account to the party for lip service have told me I'm doing very well from Laredo to Brownsville all the way around to Corpus Christi," Barrera says.

Mattox says he realized the Republicans' strategy and attacked it early on. "I presumed he was the anointed one from the beginning, because he had Trammel Crow and Eddie Chiles and Bunker Hunt and the big guys," says the incumbent, a former state legislator and member of Congress from Dallas.

"So while he was running against two unknowns and spending a million dollars in the primary, I was raising a million dollars and I put it in the bank," Mattox says. "While he was doing all that, I went about organizing all the Hispanic leadership and getting them behind me.

"It was a pre-emptive strike," he says. "My first move was to cut his feet out from under him. If I could get all the Hispanic leadership behind me, he really couldn't claim to have much support in the Hispanic community."

Mattox, to the surpise of many, didn't draw an opponent in the primary. Barrera faced Ed Walsh, the former Williamson County district attorney, and John Roach, a district judge from Plano. Barrera finished first in the primary, then easily beat Walsh in a runoff.

Barrera's campaign contains several themes. He points out that Mattox was indicted and stood trial — and was found not guilty — on charges of commercial bribery. Mattox says he decided to fight "the big boys," in this case Mobil Oil Co. and Fulbright and Jaworski, a powerful Houston law firm. The trial, Mattox says, made him more popular with the people.

Mattox also took $200,000 as a fee from devehowever, Barrera notes. Faulkner's condominium and "land-flip" deals led to charges against several investors and resulted in the collapse of a Dallas-area savings and loan association.

Also, Mattox has gone after utility companies, fathers delinquent in their child support, fraudulent health spas, bogus time-share deals and, most recently, the insurance industry's tort reform movement. All of this has made more than a few people mad.

"I've always had a good working relationship with the business community;" Mattox says. "I've certainly gone after them when they haven't done something right, but I always treat them fair."

Barrera says the incumbent "is despised by the business community, as well as the legal community." Barrera points out that he has won every major Bar Association poll, including the one in Mattox' home town of Dallas.

Mattox last week began airing a series of television adverstisments, including one showing him winning a case in a packed courtroom and another filmed on the front steps of his mother's South Dallas home. But Mattox doesn't need paid media exposure. He holds about one press conference a week, hands out dozens of press releases a week and has received exposure on national television.

Barrera says that Mattox's high-profile strategy has backfired, that he is overexposed. "In politics, regarding media exposure, there's a point of diminishing return," says Barrera, whose father is a well-known San Antonio attorney and former Democratic Texas secretary of state under former Gov. John Connally.

"There's a point," Barrera says, "when you become known as a ham and a media maniac and a headline addict, and your credibility suffers and your respectability suffers. He'll do anything to get on TV."

Mattox says he has started new, innovative programs that have worked. "When you do that, you'll get credit for it, and you should get credit for it," he says.

One Mattox loyalist suggests Barrera is jealous of the attorney general's exposure, especially in light of Barrera's inadequate fund raising. Barrera's campaign workers, however, say the money is coming in at a rate of about $30,000 a day. His TV ads began running last week, and Barrera even canceled a Washington, D.C., fund-raiser to stay in San Antonio and shoot more campaign spots.

Barrera confidently says that when Texans see his television spots and when they see him stump, he can overcome Mattox's lead, which he attributes to "pure name identification."

Meanwhile, Mattox will spend most of his time being attorney general and gleaming over his newest poll: Mattox 56 percent, Barrera 30 percent.

Syrian minister says U.S. decision understandable

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Syrian foreign minister says Syria was not behind the attempted bombing of an Israeli jetliner, despite British charges to the contrary, but says the U.S. decision to call home its ambassador is understandable.

Farouk al Shar'a said Sunday he was "sure that there are no evidence whatsoever" linking Syria with the attempt to smuggle a bomb aboard an El Al jetliner at London's Heathrow Airport last April.

And the foreign minister said that despite the U.S. decision to recall Ambassador William Eagleton from Damascus, "So far, the United States has not taken any measure against Syria."

After the British last Friday claimed Syrian involvement in the airliner plot and severed diplomatic relations, President Reagan recalled Eagleton in a show of support.

Eagleton was to consult with administration officials this week while the White House ponders its next move. No decision has been made on any possible action against Syria, State Department spokeswoman Deborah Cavin said Sunday.

Recalling an ambassador falls short of severing diplomatic ties, and Shar'a, speaking on the CBS-TV program, "Face the Nation," said he was confident the United States would not join London in ending relations with Syria.

"We consider this a normal step to be taken by the American administration to consult with its ambassador in Damascus and to review the situation," Shar'a said. "We are confident that there are no clues, or anything whatsoever to link the name of Syria with any terroristic act.

"I am sure that the United States will very much look into the facts more than the mere statements given by the British government," Shar'a said.

London made its move against Syria the same day a British court convicted a Jordanian, Nezar Hindawi, 32, in the attempt on the airliner, which carried 375 passengers, about 200 of whom were American.

In making a U.S. decision in the matter, administration officials will be watching the degree of international support for Britain's action. U.S. officials also will be weighing their desire to maintain influence in Damascus as they try to draw the Arab nation into peace talks with Israel and seek help in freeing American hostages held in Lebanon.

In addition to the United States, Canada and Israel have applauded Britain's break with Syria.

Although 19 U.S. senators have sent a letter to Reagan urging economic sanctions against Syria, the idea is being greeted cautiously on Capitol Hill and in the administration.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., appearing Sunday on the ABC-TV program, "This Week With David Brinkley," said the administration did the correct thing.

"We may want to do much more. We may want to break relations," Lugar added.

Lugar, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, balked at urging a full diplomatic break, saying: "I don't have a view until we have what the facts are. That's why we have called (Eagleton) back."

Sen. Dave Durenberger, R-Minn., chairman of the Senate's Select Committee on Intelligence, stressed the need to pressure the Soviet Union to reduce its support of nations that back terrorists.

Both the White House and the Kremlin will be watching a meeting of Western European foreign ministers in Luxembourg today to gauge the degree of international support for the British action, Durenberger said.

Many experts on terrorism contend that Syria has been far more involved than Libya in recent terrorist attacks in Europe, but that the Reagan administration has hit back at Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi because he has fewer allies and because it wishes to maintain influence in Damascus.

"We have known for a moral certainty that Syria has been more involved than Libya (in terrorism) and now the courts of Britain have come down very solidly with very hard evidence," said Robert Hunter, who served as Middle East expert under President Carter.

The United States has not retaliated against Syria because "we would like to get Syria into the Arab-Israeli peace process" and because Damascus reportedly has helped Washington obtain the release of some of the American hostages held in Lebanon, Hunter said on the CBS program.

Thai jet plunges after losing pressure

TOKYO (AP) — There was a loud bang, the depressurizing cabin filled with mist and a Thai jetliner with 247 people aboard plunged five miles, flinging passengers around like dolls before making an emergency landing at Osaka, authorities said today.

Sixty-two people were injured in the Sunday night accident, which evoked chilling memories of the 1985 crash of a Japan Air Lines jumbo jet that plowed into a mountain, killing all but four of the 524 aboard, after losing its cabin pressure and its hydraulic systems.

The cause of Sunday night's pressure loss was not known. But Thai Airways International officials in Bangkok were quoted as saying the pilot heard a "bang" in the rear of the aircraft while cruising at 33,000 feet, then lost two of his three hydraulic systems.

"So he decided to make an emergency landing," Capt. Yothin Pamornmontri, the airline's vice president for operations, told Thai newspapers.

He said one passenger was sucked into the plane's cargo compartment but was rescued.

Five people were listed as seriously hurt, with one in critical condition, in Osaka hospitals.

The accident occurred as Thai International's Flight 620, an A-300 Airbus, was approaching the western Japanese city on a flight from Bangkok and Manila.

The A-300 is a wide-bodied jetliner built by a consortium of five European companies.

The injured included 17 Filipinos and five Thais, two of them crew members, Osaka fire department official Keisuke Suzuki said in a telephone interview. The other 40 people hurt were Japanese, he said.

Some had broken arms or legs. The most seriously injured, a Japanese man, was reported to have suffered chemical burns.

News reports quoted passengers as saying there was a "big bang" and white mist filled the main cabin, indicating a sudden loss of pressure. Those whose seat belts were not securely fastened were flung from their seats and dishes and carry-on luggage flew about the cabin as the plane rocked violently and then went into its dive, they said.

Kyodo News Service quoted one unidentified passenger as saying it looked as if some passengers were "taking a space walk."

Oxygen masks dropped automatically as the crew fought to control the plunge.

Japan Transport Ministry officials said the plane, which carried 233 passengers and a crew of 14, plummeted from 33,000 feet to about 6,600 feet.

News reports said the passengers cheered wildly as the plane touched down at Osaka about 40 minutes after the mishap, 10 minutes behind schedule.

Preliminary inspection showed that the rear pressure bulkhead, which separates the aircraft's main cabin from the non-pressurized tail section, was severely damaged, Osaka Prefectural Police spokesman Masayuki Miyaguchi told a news briefing.

He said investigators also found damage to two of four toilets and a hole about one yard in diameter in the lower rear of the fuselage of the plane, which he said was virtually new and had been in service by Thailand's international flag carrier for just three weeks.

There was no immediate indication as to what caused the hole.

The sudden pressure loss was reminiscent of that sustained by a Japan Air Lines Boeing 747 before it crashed on Aug. 12, 1985, killing all but four of the 524 people aboard in aviation's worst single-plane disaster. Japanese government investigators say the JAL plane was crippled by a blowout of the rear pressure bulkhead.

The newspaper Sankei Shimbun quoted Kensaku Ohmori, 41, as saying he heard the "bang," saw everything go white and then realized that a stewardess standing nearby had fallen over.

"A strong wind blew against my face and I desperately held onto my seat, but thinking about the JAL jumbo I thought it was a lost cause," he said.

"I recalled the JAL accident and kept reciting sutras, praying that my life would be saved," Yonezo Tabata, 73, a clothing merchant, told the Asahi Shimbun.

A photo in Tokyo Shimbun, taken just after the plane landed, showed passengers smiling and hugging each other.

Kyodo quoted unidentified passengers as saying they saw two men struggling to keep a third man from being sucked out of a "big hole" in the rear of the plane.

Arab nations respond coolly to call for boycott

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Most Arab nations reacted cooly to Syria's call for a boycott of Britain after London broke ties with Damascus over an attempt to blow up an Israeli jet.

Only Libya officially supported the call for a boycott.

Britain broke relations with Syria on Friday after Jordanian Nezar Hindawi was convicted in London of trying to blow up an Israeli airliner on April 17 by planting explosives in his girlfriend's luggage before she boarded at London's Heathrow Airport. Britain said it had firm evidence that Syria was involved in the plot, which was foiled by El Al airline personnel.

Both the United States and Canada brought their ambassadors to Syria home for consultations.

State-run Syrian newspapers on Saturday urged Arab countries to boycott Britain and a commentator on the official Damascus Radio said Britain "will have the pay the price for this hostile step based on lies, allegations and deliberate provocations."

Syria earlier closed its airspace, ports and territorial waters to Britain and gave the 19 British diplomats in Damascus a week to leave the country.

Israel has offered British airliners the use of its skies for flights to the Middle and Far East.

Most Arab leaders remained silent on the Syrian-British dispute.

In the first official response from a Persian Gulf country, Kuwait's minister for Cabinet affairs, Rashed Abdel-Aziz al-Rashed, said, "Kuwait profoundly regrets these negative developments."

He told reporters that his country "expresses disappointment over attempts to defame the Arab world, particularly when Israel carries out such frenzied efforts to escalate such differences and channel them in a manner that harms good relations between the Arab world and Western nations."

Algeria's Foreign Ministry released a statement declaring its "complete solidarity with its sister, Syria, and assures her of its total support."

Libya closed its airspace to British planes. On Sunday, its Foreign Ministry issued a statement calling on "all Arab countries to cut relations with the United States and Britain and withdraw their money from British and American banks."

The Sunday Times of London said British embassies and military bases have been warned to expect terrorist attacks and security has been stepped up at British installations.

Waite: Break will hurt hostage efforts

PORTHCAWL, Wales (AP) — Terry Waite, special envoy of the Archbishop of Canterbury, said Sunday that Britain's decision to break diplomatic relations with Syria would make more difficult his efforts to win the release of American hostages in Lebanon.

"I can understand why relations with Syria have been broken. Naturally enough, it doesn't make my work easier — but then nothing in recent months has. It has always been difficult and this is just another difficulty I shall have to cope with," Waite said.

He was speaking in Porthcawl where he launched the Welsh branch of Y Care, a new YMCA organization hoping to combat poverty overseas.

Britain sev red ties with Syria on Friday after a Jordanian, Neza. Hindawi, was sentenced to 45 years in prison for attempting to blow up an El Al jet carrying 375 people. Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe said there was conclusive evidence linking the Syrians with Hindawi's April bomb attempt.

Waite visited Lebanon several times after American hostages wrote to the Archbishop of Canterbury, Robert Runcie, asking him to help win their freedom.

In August, Waite said he had been asked by Runcie and Pope John Paul II to return to Lebanon to try to resume negotiations with Islamic Jihad, the Shiite Moslem extremist group which has claimed responsibility for several abductions of Westerners in Lebanon. No date has been set for the trip.

Islamic Jihad has claimed it is holding David P. Jacobsen, director of the American University of Beirut Hospital; Terry A. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; and Thomas Sutherland, acting dean of agriculture at the American University in Beirut.

The kidnappers claimed last year to have killed diplomat William Buckley, 58, but no body has been found.

Two other Americans have been kidnapped recently in Lebanon, Frank Reed and Joseph Cicippio.

Woman: Hindawi took away photos

LONDON (AP) — Anne-Marie Murphy says her former fiance, Jordanian terrorist Nezar Hindawi, took away every photo she had of him shortly before the attempted bombing of an Israeli jet.

The News of The World, a Sunday tabloid which bought her exclusive story for an undisclosed sum, quoted her as saying an Arabic newspaper with a story about Hindawi also disappeared from her London apartment.

Hindawi was sentenced to 45 years in prison Friday for attempting to blow up an El Al jet on April 17 by fooling Miss Murphy into carrying a concealed bomb in her luggage. The prosecution said Miss Murphy, who was five months pregnant then, and 374 other passengers would have died if the bomb went off.

"The only good that has come out of all this is my baby," the 32-year-old Irish woman was quoted as saying as she cuddled her 10-week-old daughter, Caoimhe, which means "fair of face" in Gaelic.

"When I look at her, I can't explain how I feel. I'm not a fighter. I've never had a fight in my life. But the biggest battle I ever fought was for the life of my baby. I wanted her so much," Miss Murphy was quoted as saying.

"I love her so much. Her father could make no difference to my feelings for her now," the paper quoted her as saying.

Miss Murphy, who met Hindawi while she was working as a chambermaid at a London hotel, was quoted as saying he was her first boyfriend, and that she believed him when he said he loved her and wanted to marry her in the Holy Land.

One night shortly before she was to fly to Israel, Miss Murphy was quoted as saying, Hindawi returned while she was looking at photographs of him. "I liked to take pictures of him with my little camera but he took them all off me, every single one."

Former Israeli nuclear technician in custody, clergyman says

By DAN FISHER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

JERUSALEM — An Australian clergyman on the trail of a missing one-time Israeli nuclear technician said here Sunday he had "solid information" that the man was being held secretly in Israel.

Mordechai Vanunu, who sold information to the Sunday Times of London about Israel's nuclear program, disappeared Sept. 30, and there have been unconfirmed press reports that he was abducted by Israel's Mossad security service and brought here to face treason charges.

Based on data and more than 60 photographs supplied by Vanunu, the Sunday Times reported early this month that Israel had been manufacturing atomic warheads for 20 years and that, with about 100 nuclear weapons in its stockpile, it ranks as the world's sixth-largest nuclear power.

The Rev. John McKnight, an Anglican priest from Sydney, said he was in Israel because of the abduction reports and "more solid information" concerning Vanunu's fate. McKnight refused to detail that information, except to say he heard that Vanunu was remanded in custody for 15 days during a secret legal proceeding last week.

According to McKnight, Vanunu converted to Christianity while in Australia last summer and became a member of his parish. The clergyman said parishioners had financed his trip in hopes that he could find the missing technician. "We really look after each other and care for each other," he said of his church. "My visit here is pastoral, not political," he told a crowded press conference.

McKnight said that he had requested information about Vanunu from Israeli officials and that he had been given an appointment with a senior political adviser to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir for Sunday morning. But when he arrived, McKnight said, he was told that the official "still wasn't ready to talk to me, and could I phone him back."

Repeated subsequent efforts to reach the adviser, Aryeh Mekel, were unsuccessful, McKnight said. Reached by the Los Angeles Times, Mekel referred a correspondent to Shamir's press spokesman, who acknowledged McKnight's request but said: "Since we don't have any information and Mr. Mekel is unable to help him, there is no point in conducting any such meeting. And this is what we told him."

While he carefully avoided blaming the Mossad for Vanunu's disappearance, McKnight said that the 31-year-old technician had told him before leaving Australia for London last month that "the Israelis would not be pleased" by his nuclear revelations. "I do not believe he would have left England on his own free will," the clergyman added.

According to McKnight, Vanunu had also expressed concern for his life and his "security" both before going to London and in telephone calls and at least one letter after arriving there.

McKnight said that he had not contacted Vanunu's family here since arriving last Thursday night but that based on second-hand information current as of Saturday, they had apparently not seen the missing man since his reported abduction.

Israeli officials have refused to comment substantively on either the Sunday Times revelations or the reports of Vanunu's abduction by the Mossad. And the Israeli press has been put under a virtual gag order concerning the subject. The respected independent daily newspaper Haaretz has twice in recent days seen its editorials on the Vananu affair censored out of the newspaper.

Communications Minister Amnon Rubenstein did confirm that Vanunu was a former employee of the Israel Atomic Energy Commission but said his statements were not credible because he was seeking revenge after being fired from his job.

Vanunu worked for more than nine years at Israel's "experimental" nuclear reactor at Dimona, in the Negev Desert. It is one of the country's most secret and best-guarded installations, and its capacity to produce weapons has long been the subject of deliberate official ambiguity.

Former Prime Minister Shimon Peres told a recent strategic studies seminar in Jerusalem that the prevalent Arab belief that Israel possesses "certain deterrent weapons" helps reduce the danger of conflict in the region.

After the original Sunday Times story, Peres said Israel was "used to sensational reports on the nuclear research center in Dimona and does not make a practice of commenting on them."

Born in Morocco, Vanunu immigrated to Israel with his family as a boy. He was a noncommissioned officer in the Israeli army's engineering corps and in 1976 went to work at the Dimona complex.

PLO guerrillas agree to truce with Amal militia

SIDON, Lebanon (AP) — Palestinian guerrillas said they pushed deeper into Shiite Moslem territory outside Sidon on Sunday and then signed a truce, halting a weekend offensive that marked the PLO's forceful return to Lebanon.

Police said 32 people were killed and 55 wounding in the two days of fighting.

Four years ago, Israel's invading army drove Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat and his guerrillas out of what had been their main Middle East stronghold. But thousands of PLO fighters have filtered back into the refugee camps in Beirut and the south in recent months.

The truce was signed Sunday night in Sidon by Arafat's representatives and Justice Minister Nabih Berri's mainstream Shiite Amal militia. Representatives of the Palestine National Salvation Front, a Syrian-backed alliance of six guerrilla groups opposed to Arafat, also signed the accord.

The agreement said the warring factions ordered their fighters to stop shooting an hour later, at 10 p.m., and begin withdrawing to positions they held before the confrontation began Saturday.

That would mean the PLO would leave several Shiite villages it captured as far as five miles east and southeast of the port of Sidon, and return to the Ein El-Hilweh and Mieh Mieh refugee camps on the city's southern flank.

The accord stipulates that militiamen of Sidon's Popular Liberation Army, a Sunni Moslem group that had remained neutral, would take the positions vacated by the Palestinians.

A spokesman for PLA leader Mustafa Saad said the PLO and Amal also had agreed to negotiate an end to the 26-day-old Amal siege of the Rashidiyeh refugee camp in the southernmost port of Tyre after the Sidon cease-fire takes hold.

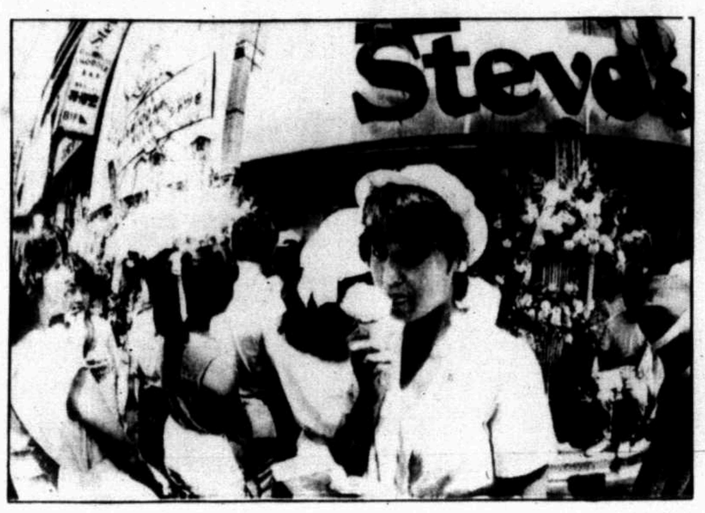

Fighting with mortars, rocket launchers and machine guns was reported at Rashidiyeh Sunday. Police said at least four people were killed and 75 wounded, raising the toll to 29 dead and 140 injured since the fighting began Oct. 1. The shantytown houses about 16,000 U.N.-registered Palestinian refugees.

Sources said the weekend fighting near Sidon was intended to relieve the pressure on Rashadiyeh.

On Saturday, the Palestinians captured strategic hills southeast of Sidon, and a PLO statement earlier Sunday said the guerrillas had pushed two miles deeper into Shiite-held territory.

Japanese scream for ice cream

By SALLY SOLO

Ice cream used to be child's play in Japan, but over the past year the Japanese have come to take their frozen dessert very seriously.

TOKYO (AP) — Ice cream has come a long way in Japan from the days when only children liked it and the flavors were just vanilla, chocolate and strawberry, sometimes topped with corn flakes.

A hundred years after ice cream was first introduced, gourmet varieties from abroad now have young adults flocking to ice cream shops and domestic makers are coming into the market.

Selling what they call "super premium" ice cream, Haagen-Dazs, Hobson's and even cookie king Famous Amos have opened shops that now are taking their place alongside fast-food hamburger and fried chicken outlets.

Haagen-Dazs Japan, a joint venture of the U.S. Pillsbury Co., the Suntory Ltd. brewery and a Japanese dairy firm, introduced its first ice cream "shoppe" — pronounced "show-pay" in Japanese — among trendy boutiques in November 1984.

"When we started here...our aim was to make a new market," Kiyoshi Inoue, a Suntory spokesman, said in an interview.

Until then, most ice cream shops offered the standard vanilla, chocolate and strawberry, and pre-packaged ice cream came in red bean "chip" and cheese-covered flavors.

Inoue said Suntory chose Haagen-Dazs over a local brand because "the (U.S.) dining-out industry sells well in Japan. There's no resistance to American things."

In two years the firm has set up 14 shops; a rate of expansion that Inoue says Haagen-Dazs expects to sustain.

While Haagen-Dazs was dishing out about 4,000 orders a day in each shop, other firms opened up with variations on the super premium theme, suddenly giving Japanese a choice of ordering their ice cream straight, topped, or with candies, cookies and fruits hand-mashed or machine-blended in.

"It's the era of individual tastes," said Kenichiro Kataoka, president of the Asahi Gourmet Co., which inaugurated the first overseas branch of the Boston-based Steve's Ice Cream in August in Tokyo.

Steve's, the originator of the "mix-ins" in which small candies, bananas or just about anything sweet is blended into the ice cream, hopes to have 10 stores operating in a year.

Hobson's, which also serves mix-in varieties, opened in October, 1985, and has similar ambitions.

Those most likely to be seen at any hour at ice cream shops are women from their late teens to late 20s, a group that Kataoka said differs from the clientele of the past.

"Ice cream was introduced to Japan about 110 years ago, but it was seen as something for children so it had to be cheap. And because it was cheap it wasn't so good."

Perceptions of ice cream changed, he said, when America's Lady Borden hit the market 15 years ago with Japan's first "premium" ice cream.

Borden, negotiating a cheese arrangement with the Meiji Milk Products Co., proposed taking a chance on selling Lady Borden, a representative U.S. ice cream, said Meiji spokesman Toru Takao.

"Most ice cream at the time was selling for 20-30 yen (13-19 cents) a portion," Takao recalled.

"We had doubts how far we could get with an 800-yen ($5.19) product."

Takao said Japan's premium ice cream is more expensive than it is in the United States because the ingredients cost more in Japan and the scale of production is smaller.

Sales the first year were bleak, Takao said, but rose rapidly the winter of the second year when Meiji presented its product as an alternative to the ice cream cakes Japanese buy at Christmas.

Since Lady Borden arrived, ice cream has come to account for 12 to 13 percent of Meiji's sales, compared to 7 to 8 percent before, Takao said. Meiji's ice cream division now claims to have the biggest share — 18 percent — of Japan's ice cream market.

Not to be outdone by the new "super" brands, Meiji came up with its own "Penny Patch" chain last spring and has since established 10 stores. In three years, it hopes to have 100 shops around the country, Takao said.

According to Health and Welfare Ministry nutrition reports, Japanese are eating less sugar than they did 10 years ago. Those in the ice cream business say the gourmet ice cream boom does not signal a growing Japanese penchant for sweets, but a growing sense of "good taste."

Suntory's Inoue said Haagen-Dazs sells because of its "natural ingredients." Kataoka called Asahi's tie-in with Steve's a part of its strategy to bring to Japan "healthy, delicious products from around the world."

Iraq responds to call for peace

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq said Sunday it was willing to respect Pope John Paul II's call for a worldwide ceasefire today if Iran also agreed to a one-day truce in the protracted Persian Gulf war.

President Saddam Hussein said in reply to a letter from the pontiff that Iraq appreciated the pope's concern about the six-year-old war and "supports" the call for an international peace day, the state-run Iraqi News Agency reported.

The pope has appealed for a 24-hour truce today in all world conflicts to coincide with a "world day of prayer for peace." He is visiting the Italian city of Assisi today for a day of fasting and prayer with the leaders of 11 other major religions.

Hussein, whose Arab socialist country has been engaged in a war with Persian Iran since September 1980, told the pope that it was "impossible for one side to implement this appeal."

He added: "It would be possible if the Iranians heeded the call. Then there will be a cease-fire from both sides."

Nicaraguans sow crops despite potential for reaping violence

JALAPA, Nicaragua (AP) — They sometimes hear the gunfire of Sandinista soldiers fighting Contra guerrillas down the valley, but farmers in this war zone are sowing next season's bean crop and preparing to reap what officials describe as their best corn harvest ever.

Many work with automatic rifles slung across their backs.

The corn covers the northern end of the Jalapa Valley, rolling up to the base of the surrounding hills and the border of Honduras.

Nicaraguan officials claim the farmers here and elsewhere in the war zone are farming more land and are increasing crop production with advice and technical assistance from Cuba, Hungary, Yugoslavia and other countries.

The Jalapa Valley, 120 miles north of Managua, is brimming with 10,000 acres of corn, more than triple the acreage harvested in 1983, according to Kasto Zavala, the valley's production supervisor for the Ministry of Agriculture and Agrarian Reform.

Furthermore, thanks to the foreign technical assistance, the average yield for each acre of corn in Nicaragua has doubled over the past seven years to 3,800 pounds, according to statistics provided by the Agriculture Ministry in Managua.

The harvest for beans, tobacco and rice in the Jalapa Valley has also climbed, Zavala said, despite the fact that the valley is within easy striking distance of the U.S.-backed Contras trying to defeat the leftist government in Managua from their bases in Honduras.

Attacks by the rebels on agricultural cooperatives have been sporadic. There have been no concerted attacks in the valley since last spring, when the rebels bombarded about a half dozen tobacco warehouses with mortars and then set them on fire, Zavala said.

Workers in the fields said they occasionally hear combat as Sandinista troops engage the Contras in firefights along the green hills that surround this valley and mark the Honduran border to the north, east and west.

Recently, Sandinista troops fought a two-day battle with a company of guerrillas trying to slip back across the border to their base camps in Honduras.

Ministry of Agriculture officials in Jalapa and in Managua, the capital, attribute the infrequency of attacks on the farms to the fact that many of the farmers are armed.

Of the roughly 3,000 farmers in the Jalapa valley, 1,800 of them are in the Sandinista militia and have been issued weapons, Zavala said.

Many of the farmers carry AK-47 automatic rifles slung across their backs as they work or keep them within easy reach.

"The Contras do not attack the cooperatives because they are unable to," the leftist Sandinista government's deputy agriculture minister, Eduardo Holman Chamorro, said in an interview in Managua.

Mozambicans file past leader's coffin

MAPUTO, Mozambique (AP) — Thousands of Mozambicans filed past the coffin of President Samora Machel on Sunday, and many wept, wailed and fainted as they left the ornate City Hall where his body was lying in state.

Mourners waited hours in a line that trailed down sloping, tree-lined Samora Machel Avenue toward the harbor.

The Mozambican leader and 33 other people died Oct. 19 in a plane crash just 200 yards inside neighboring South Africa as the presidential plane was returning from Zambia, where Machel had met with leaders of Angola, Zambia and Zaire. His funeral is Tuesday.

For the second day, Mozambican citizens passed through the sand-colored City Hall, built by the former Portuguese colonial settlers, to pay final respects to the man who led the country to independence in 1975.

Machel's foreign medals, including an honorary British knighthood, were displayed on a red velvet-covered side table in the second-floor chamber.

His plain, wooden coffin was set on black cloth, flanked by bouquets of flowers and two military officers standing at attention.

Machel's military decorations and his green peaked guerrilla fighter's cap lay on a cushion in front of the coffin, while patriotic songs played softly in the chamber.

Most mourners stood silently in the line that flowed continuously up a marble staircase and through the building, but many were overcome by grief after seeing the coffin.

In a side room, medics waved towels to fan the faces of women who lay prostrate on the floor. Others had to be helped down the staircase.

Western diplomats said street committees of the ruling FRELIMO party (Front for the Liberation of Mozambique) had organized buses to bring people from different sections of the dilapidated capital.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Mexican gubernatorial candidates claim victory

CULIACAN, Mexico (AP) — Both major-party candidates claimed victory in their race for the governorship of northwestern Mexico's Sinaloa state, where drug trafficking and related violence dominated the campaign.

Final results of Sunday's elections for governor, 18 mayoralties and 23 state legislators will not be reported for at least a week.

Security was heavy at polling places for the first elections in northern Mexico since July 6, when state elections in neighboring Chihuahua touched off widespread charges of fraud by the ruling party.

Sinaloa's outgoing Gov. Antonio Toledo Corro, prohibited by law from re-election, said late Sunday he had no reports of protests or confrontations.

Semi-transparent ballot boxes were used statewide to prevent charges that poll workers stuffed the boxes even before voting began.

The gubernatorial race pitted former federal energy secretary Francisco Labastida Ochoa of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party against businessman Manuel Clouthier of the conservative National Action Party.

Five killed in mine mishap

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A cable holding a mining elevator snapped early Sunday, sending at least five miners to their death in a gold mine shaft near Johannesburg, the South African Press Association reported.

The news agency quoted K. W. Maxwell, chairman of the Randfontein Estates Gold Mining Co. Ltd., as saying two miners were crushed to death at the bottom of the shaft, and a third was severely injured.

It was not immediately known how the other three died. Thirty-two men were in the shaft when the accident occurred.

The cage crashed after a cable snapped and plunged to the bottom of the 2,400-foot ventilation shaft. Some of the miners were at the bottom of the shaft while others were reported to be about 48 feet above the bottom in a staging area.

Of those trapped, 28 were black and four were white, Maxwell said.

Police seize baby girl

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — At least 20 heavily armed policemen with dogs stormed into a suburban flat to seize an 18-month-old Peruvian girl who is being expelled from Sweden along with her parents, newspapers reported Sunday.

Helmeted police wearing bullet-proof vests and toting machine guns stormed the apartment in Jakobsberg north of Stockholm on Friday night to get the girl, who was being cared for by Swedish relatives, according to the reports, which were confirmed by police.

Military to recommend training sites in U.S. for Contra troops

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The armed services plan to recommend training sites in the United States for Contra troops after Costa Rica, El Salvador and Honduras objected to use of their territory, The Washington Post reported today.

The newspaper quoted unidentified sources as saying the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps have been directed to make the recommendations, using low-profile sites that would minimize adverse publicity and citizen opposition.

The administration had tried to persuade several Latin American governments to allow use of their territory, but Costa Rica, El Salvador and Honduras said they did not want to invite retaliation from Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government, the sources said.

The newspaper said Ft. Benning in Columbus, Ga., has too high a public profile for the Contra training, although in many respects it would be ideal. Other published reports have indicated the training sites will be Puerto Rico and Fort Bragg, N.C., home of the Army Green Berets.

The newspaper, quoting Reagan administration officials, said the State Department will provide overall policy guidance for the Contra program, the U.S. military will train Contra unit commanders and the Central Intelligence Agency will support the operations around — but not in — Nicaragua.

A Pentagon spokesman, Cmdr. Robert Prucha, told The Associated Press on Sunday night he had not heard of the report and, therefore, could not confirm or deny it.

Administration officials told the AP late last week the United States will provide the rebels with, among other equipment, surface-to-air missiles for use against high-performance helicopters the Soviets have sent to the Sandinistas.

In addition, U.S. trainers will provide instruction for the Contras in such areas as military tactics, human rights and weapons use. The training will be focused on the upper leadership ranks of the Contras, who, in turn, will train the rank and file, the officials told the AP.

President Reagan's signature on the aid legislation Friday resumed military assistance to the Contras following a 2½-year suspension mandated by Congress. The administration hopes the renewed aid will help the rebels become a more credible fighting force.

Over the next year, the insurgents will receive $70 million in military aid, $27 million in non-lethal aid and $3 million for a human rights enforcement office. The legislation also provides $300 million in economic aid to Costa Rica, Honduras, El Salvador and Guatemala.

Elliott Abrams, the assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, will chair an inter-agency committee set up to supervise the aid program. The committee also will include representatives of the Pentagon, CIA and the National Security Council.

A U.S. official said Friday the goal in Nicaragua is for the Contras to put sufficient military pressure on the Sandinistas so that they abandon Marxism and choose instead to establish representative democracy.

But officials have openly acknowledged in recent months that, as an alternative outcome, they would welcome an outright Contra victory. On the other hand, the administration believes defeat of the Contras would give the Sandinistas a freer hand in their alleged efforts to support leftist rebels elsewhere in Central America and in South America.

No U.S. military aid has been sent to the Contras since May 1984, a reflection of the widespread congressional sentiment at the time that providing help to the rebels is the first step toward direct U.S. military involvement in Central America.

An intense campaign by Reagan himself helped turn congressional opinion in his favor.

Since 1984, American assistance to the rebels has been limited to $27 million in humanitarian aid, which was used up last summer.

The rebels have been relying on assistance from other friendly foreign countries and private U.S. groups for their survival in the absence of U.S. government help.

Since the cutoff, the Sandinistas, with Soviet help, have undertaken a major expansion of their military capability while the Contras have had to scrap some military operations for lack of resources.

The role of private Americans in support of the Contras has been highlighted recently by the shooting down in southern Nicaragua of an American-manned plane which was carrying weapons and other supplies to the rebels. The lone survivor of the crash, Eugene Hasenfus, is standing trial in Managua.

In signing the legislation, Reagan certified that the Contras are meeting certain conditions imposed by Congress as prerequisites for distributing the aid.

Reagan certified that the rebels are moving to eliminate human rights abuses, broaden their leadership base, ensure civilian — as opposed to military — control and guard against misuse of funds through strict accounting procedures.

Study: Worsening scarcity of school counselors hurting nation's youths

NEW YORK (AP) — Many youngsters, especially the poor, wander aimlessly through school and never reach college because of a worsening scarcity of counselors, concludes a two-year College Board study released today.

Warning that "counseling is a profession in trouble," the report, titled "Keeping The Options Open," urged school systems to begin counseling in elementary school, much earlier than is now customary.

The report by a 20-member commission of educators was to be made public today at The College Board's annual meeting being held here this week.

Too often, the 43-page report said, youngsters from disadvantaged backgrounds who need counseling the most get the least. As a result, fewer poor and minority youngsters are steering an academic course toward college.

"For many students, school counseling is 'too little too late,'" said the report. Early intervention and recognition of special learning needs can help salvage a school career before the youngster is totally discouraged, it said.

The education reform movement "has brought neither increased attention to, nor support for, guidance and counseling in the schools. In fact, the topic of guidance and counseling has largely been ignored. We think this is an unfortunate omission with serious consequences for children," said the report.

Harold Howe II, a former U.S. commissioner of education who was chairman of the panel, said in remarks prepared for delivery today: "Our studies tell us that counselors have become expendable in schools. When school districts want to save money, they turn first to reducing the number of counselors, not athletic coaches."

Schools should be "caring environments," especially for youngsters from disadvantaged backgrounds, said the report. "Yet, we have not heard from educational leaders about the importance of this basic need as much as we have about new requirements, more tests, and longer school hours."

Among its recommendations, the report urged states to provide financial incentives for districts to develop innovative counseling programs.

The federal government, it said, should continue to support all aid programs aimed at helping disadvantaged students attend college.

Panel member Scott Thomson, executive director of the National Association of Secondary School Principals, said in an interview that the report represented a compromise between those on the panel, mostly practicing counselors, who focused primarily on increasing the number of counselors, and others who wanted the report to call for more sweeping changes in the profession itself.

"The problem now," he said, "is that much of the focus is on personal counseling and social counseling. Often that places counselors in conflict with teachers who think counseling doesn't have enough to do with academic direction."

He said the report advocates something of a role shift emphasizing guidance over counseling. The report, he said, suggests counselors should concentrate more on purely academic guidance, and less on personal or social counseling.

"I have always felt counselors sometimes tended to become partisans of the kids, and that can lead to conflicts with the teachers," Thomson said.

Some of the findings were foreshadowed in January when the panel issued a preliminary report. At that time, Howe cited statistics showing that in some urban school districts, as many as 700 students are assigned to a single guidance counselor.

Many districts have no counselors at all. In some rural districts, counselors travel from school to school.

Between 1959 and 1968, the report said, the number of counselors tripled and the student-to-counselor ratio was halved. The ratio continued to improve through the 1970s, but has worsened in the 1980s.

'Schizophrenics' relapse rates, family climate better with therapy

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — A new form of therapy for the families of schizophrenics has improved the emotional climate in certain families and sharply reduced the schizophrenics' relapse rates, new studies show.

In families that had no therapy, the emotional climate became worse and relapse of the schizophrenics was almost certain within nine months, said Jeri Doane, a psychologist at the Yale Psychiatric Center in New Haven, Conn.

In emotionally troubled families receiving the therapy, "parents were less likely to be critical or guilt-inducing to the patient," Doane said in an interview Saturday during the annual meeting of the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy.

Schizophrenia can be defined as a group of severe emotional disorders characterized by distortion of and retreat from reality, delusions, hallucinations and withdrawn, bizarre, or aggressive behavior.

Some scientists estimate that about 1 percent of the American public suffers from some form of the disorder, according to Dr. David Shore of the schizophrenia research branch at the National Institute of Mental Health.

Schizophrenia has typically been treated with a combination of drugs and individual therapy for the schizophrenic but without therapy for family members, said Doane.

The new style of family therapy was developed by Ian Falloon of the University of Southern California in Los Angeles, with whom Doane has collaborated on a series of recent studies.

"It's a radically different approach to the family therapy of schizophrenia," she said. "You teach them basic facts about the illness, its course, prognosis and causes. But more importantly, the treatment focuses on providing the families with tools for managing the patient's illness."

If families are receiving family therapy elsewhere, the therapy for schizophrenia generally provides just the facts, she said.

Carol Anderson, a family therapist at the University of Pittsburgh who has developed her own family therapy for schizophrenia, said she thinks the therapeutic methods Doane studied "have great value."

The researchers studied 36 families of schizophrenics — 18 in which the new therapy was used with family members and 18 in which therapy was given only to the schizophrenic patient. In both groups, drugs of the category called neuroleptics were given to the patient.

The 18 families in which neuroleptics and individual therapy were used were found to experience a significant rise in emotional tension, Doane said.

"If you neglect to do this (new therapy) you're not just leaving people where they are," they get worse, she said. "Not to include family members in efforts to rehabilitate the patient is unethical."

The research was recognized with an award at the family therapy association's meeting, but it has brought Doane and Falloon into conflict with many family therapists and psychiatrists.

"I think the psychiatric community has been slow to recognize the importance of including the families of the mentally ill in efforts to treat these people," she said.

On the other hand, she said, many family therapists who hold it as a central tenet that treating family members is important are also unhappy with the findings.

Children sing 'Happy Birthday' for hostage's second in captivity

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A group of school children sang "Happy Birthday" to kidnapped U.S. journalist Terry Anderson today and presented 500 birthday cards wrapped in yellow ribbons for him and other Americans held hostage in Lebanon.

"I hope that your brother and all the other hostages will be home soon. They are in our prayers," eighth-grader Stacey Calhoun told Peggy Say, of Batavia, N.Y., sister of Anderson, who turns 39 today.

Four children represented St. Francis DeSales School, where 500 pupils spent a week learning about the hostages and making birthday cards for them.

"I want to take them all home and read them. They're so precious," said Ken Reed, of New York City, whose brother Frank was taken hostage last month.

Before the presentation, Mrs. Say read some letters she has received from children in other parts of the country.

"'Don't cry,' they say, 'Terry will be home soon.' Children, the hope of the world, they make us laugh when we want to cry. I am looking forward to the day Terry's little girls wrap their arms around his neck and say 'Welcome home, Daddy,'" said Mrs. Say, her voice shaking.

Last year, Mrs. Say sent birthday greetings to her brother via Lebanese television. But for his second birthday in captivity, she decided to join the humanitarian foundation No Greater Love today in asking children across the country to send birthday cards to the hostages.

Sister Constance Marie, principal at the Philadelphia school, said she had devised a lesson plan for other schools to explain to children about the hostages' plight and make their own cards.

"We have children from 19 countries in our school, and some of them have known what it's like to live in fear," Sister Constance Marie said Sunday.

"We have children from Vietnam, Cambodia, Korea and Ethiopia," she said. "Some of those children wrote in their cards 'I know what it's like to be afraid.'

"We're hoping this will launch a campaign."

No Greater Love, a non-profit organization based in Washington, is dedicated to showing concern for the families of Americans held hostage or killed in war or terrorist acts.

The Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, 51, a Roman Catholic priest who was released in July after 19 months in captivity, said Anderson could expect a treat today from his captors.

"They made birthdays special," he said in a recent telephone interview. "They would stay with us and have our cake and ice cream with us. They would buy French pastry cups."

Jenco has said he was held with three other Americans in a small room: Anderson, The Associated Press' chief Middle East correspondent; David Jacobsen, 55, of Huntington Beach, Calif.; and Thomas Sutherland, 55, of Fort Collins, Colo.

The Rev. Benjamin Weir, who was freed in September 1985, was confined with the men for a time.

The men, who were moved around Lebanon, generally were locked in a windowless, 12-foot-by-15-foot room, Jenco said. They are thought to be guarded by members of Islamic Jihad, a loosely knit radical Lebanese Shiite organization with ties to Iran.

The Jihad claimed last October to have killed another American hostage, William Buckley, but his body was never found.

The captors demand that Kuwait release some of the 17 prisoners charged in the 1984 bombings of the U.S. and French embassies there.

Three other Americans have been seized in west Beirut over the past two months, but Islamic Jihad has denied involvement in those kidnappings.

Anderson's family has heard little about him during his captivity.

Purely defensive

One of the biggest dividends to accrue from the Iceland summit is a better understanding of the proposed space-based missile shield officially known as the Strategic Defense Initiative. This has come about because of a widespread discussion in the press and among politicians of the true nature of SDI as a means of promoting peace and preventing war.

President Reagan has been one of the most articulate spokesmen for the research project. He has lost no opportunity in the past few days to explain to his countrymen, and to the world, that the SDI is to be a mechanism for defense, not attack. He put it succinctly and in simple language the other day, using words that ought to reach the ears of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and his aides. Said Mr. Reagan:

"SDI is purely defensive, purely peaceful technology. If the Soviets honestly want progress toward a world free of nuclear weapons, they have nothing to fear from SDI."

No one has put it more clearly, or more convincingly. He has convinced the American public that he is on the right track in pushing the non-nuclear antimissile project he announced in 1983, and which its detractors like to label "star wars." Evidence of this is found in polls showing that about three quarters of the nation's citizens approved President Reagan's performance at Reykjavik.

So a summit meeting that some hastily billed as a "collapse" has turned out to be a significant success. A key reason for this is that the Strategic Defense Initiative, thanks to President Reagan's skillful leadership, is now generally viewed in this country as "purely defensive."

Oil payback hits bureaucratic snag

WASHINGTON — Oil companies that gouged the public during the period of price controls before 1981 may not have to pay millions of dollars in fines, thanks to federal bureaucrats rushing to meet a White House deadline for a new regulation.

Jack Anderson

The bumbling bureaucrats' hasty action allowed some oil companies to destroy records that the government would have needed to prosecute them for price-control violations, according to an unreleased General Accounting Office report obtained by our associate Lucette Lagnado. The report was requested by Rep. John Dingell, chairman of a House subcommittee on oversight and investigations.

The regulation that was so precipitately rescinded last year required oil companies to hold onto the records of their transactions throughout the period of price control, 1973 to 1981. After decontrol, the Energy Department prosecuted many of the control-era price gougers, but as of last April, the GAO report notes: "About 370 cases involving about $4 billion in alleged violations remained to be resolved." The oil companies' records were vital to the prosecutions.

In the years since decontrol, the oilmen have complained repeatedly about the burden of record-keeping — which of course kept them in peril of prosecution — and the Energy Department has been sympathetic. The government auditors found that the number of firms with records necessary for enforcement purposes has decreased substantially.

Back in November 1984, the department proposed a change in the regulations that would require only a relative handful of oil companies to retain their records from the decontrol years. The rest would be exempt.

The White House Office of Management and Budget established a deadline of Jan. 31, 1985, and the final regulation was issued on that date. The GAO auditors concluded that the department had been extremely hasty in its action — and had thereby let many potential defendants off the hook. A GAO official suggested that the department was under constant pressure from a variety of sources to change the rule.

The department's haste was apparently compounded by inefficiency that also worked to the oil companies' benefit. Companies that would have to hold onto their records had to be notified — and many of the notifications were never delivered, for one reason or another.

As the auditors pointed out, firms that were not notified "could have disposed of — or could still dispose of — records needed for ... enforcement actions, without violating the regulations."

Furthermore, in its haste to issue the rule change by Jan. 31, the Energy Department failed to make clear which records should be retained by the oil companies that weren't exempt. When in doubt, the companies might well have destroyed the records the department would have needed to prosecute.

The January rule change allowed the exempt oil companies to destroy their records after June 30, 1985. Belatedly, the Energy Department realized this date was "unrealistic" if there were to be prosecutions in the future, and sent letters in May and June to 841 companies telling them to retain their records.

"Due to undeliverable letters and letters delivered after June 30, 1985," the GAO reports, "129 of the 841 firms could have disposed of — or in some cases could still dispose of — their records, even though the records may be needed ... for enforcement actions."

In its desperation, the department spent $7,000 on private investigators to locate oil companies that the Postal Service hadn't been able to find.

In letters to Energy Secretary John Herrington and Budget Director James Miller, Dingell said the agencies "took misguided, and, I believe, improper actions that could ultimately hurt your efforts to enforce, collect and distribute every last dollar of overcharges."

JAMES BOYS, 1980s-STYLE: Not all bank robbers these days walk in off the street with drawn guns; many are on the other side of the counter. In fact, federal banking regulators estimate that two-thirds of all bank failures are traceable to insider abuses or gross mismanagement. The concern has now spread to credit unions. Federal investigators will be checking the 15,100 federally insured financial co-ops following increasing incidents of fraud and favoritism — like unsecured loans to families and friends. As in the savings-and-loan crisis of recent years, credit unions insured by the states are at greater risk than the federally insured.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: State Department help-wanted ads are appearing in major newspapers offering careers in "security." This is evidence that Foggy Bottom is determined to beef up the protection of American embassy personnel against terrorist attacks around the world. But to the ever-suspicious budget watchdogs on Capitol Hill, the ads are also evidence that the new Bureau of Diplomatic Security may be another bureaucratic empire in the making. So they'll be watching the bureaucrats who watch out for the terrorists.

MINI-EDITORIAL: Was there a secret agreement at Reykjavik after all — one that wasn't announced but is already being implemented? We refer to the tit-for-tat expulsions of American and Soviet diplomats, with more threatened. Things were apparently a little chaotic that Sunday in Iceland, and it's just possible that something went awry in translation, resulting in an agreement to reduce embassy staffs by 50 percent, instead of ICBMs. Maybe it was the work of mischievous Hofdi House ghosts.

CHARLEY REESE

Failing to protect fighters 'unforgivable'

I keep a "while I wait" book in the car, something to read while the laundry's in the dryer or the kid is in his Scout meeting or violin practice. The current one is "The Memoirs of Robert E. Lee," and it has reminded me of basic truth applicable to our lives today.

Charley Reese

The fundamental problem of mankind is not the wars but the peace that precedes and follows the wars. Mankind is pretty good at fighting wars, but we're lousy at conducting peace. It was true in 1861. It's true in 1986.

There is a stark contrast between the purity of purpose and the ultimate altruism of the soldiers on the battlefield and the selfishness and muddled thinking of the politicians who put them there.

Typically, the politicians fail to prevent war and then, after the soldiers have won it at great sacrifice, fail again by throwing away the opportunity bought with blood. While the soldier is living and dying by the purest ideals, the civilians behind him are engaged in the most petty and unscrupulous behavior.

War is an environment in which to be virtuous — to do your duty, to keep your word — means risking death and mutilation. It is the opposite of what sociologists call a synergistic society where good behavior earns rewards. That's why men who actually fight form a bond of brotherhood that men who have not fought cannot duplicate.

Peace is an environment in which to do the right thing is ordinarily in our own selfish interest. It is in our interest to keep contracts and to refrain from plundering our neighbor's house. To practice virtue generally means to increase our benefits.

That's why it's all the more of a paradox that there is so much virtue on the battlefield and so little behind the lines. That's why there is no excuse for tolerating vice. If a boy of 18, out of a sense of duty, can endure incredible hardships and face death, how then can we tolerate a 40-year-old man shirking his duty in peacetime when to do it involves at most mere inconvenience?

Our duty, as civilians in peace, is to protect those who in war protect us. It means putting responsible and ethical men and women in political offices, holding them to high standards, and removing them when they fail. It is these civilian politicians who will either preserve peace or commit war. And they are our responsibility.

Doing our duty also means that we keep faith with those who wear the uniform and who are prepared to die for us. To keep faith means we insist they be armed and trained adequate to the missions the politicians assign them. To cheat a soldier by giving him defective equipment or not enough ammunition ought to be a capital offense. To put a soldier in harm's way without the adequate support to accomplish his mission is unforgivable.

To keep faith means we do not abandon them ever. It means we do not tolerate the taking of our youth as hostages. It means we do not ever rest until every single American who went into battle is accounted for. It means we do not ever pardon those who desert or shirk their duty or forgive those who aid our enemies.

I am appalled and disgusted at the cowardice and selfishness that is rampant among American civilians. How in God's name can we ask our youth to charge machine guns or fly through missiles if we ourselves lack the courage to stand up in a public forum and speak out on public matters? How can any American businessman sleep at night who cynically funds political campaigns for no other reason than the hope of gaining some business advantage? How can alumni of universities tolerate those universities spitting on the ideals so many have died to uphold?

Typically, our failure to do our duty, our selfishness, our cowardice produce the war that we demand of the military man that he win with his devotion to his duty, his unselfishness, and his courage.

It's a bloody miracle anyone will still take up the profession of arms.

Help for the industry

Many of us here in West Texas would like to see an oil import fee in order to ensure the survival of the future productive capacity of the oil and gas industry. However, the political facts of life are such that any oil import fee that would pass the Northeastern liberal-dominated House of Representatives would probably have enough extra provisions stuck in it that it would be worse for the industry than the present status quo.

One step that would improve the oil and gas industries' situation would be the adoption of Sen. Phil Gramm's Oil and Gas Production Revitalization Act. Among the many different proposals in the bill are the repeal of the Windfall Profits Tax. At the present price of oil no tax is being collected. However, the accounting, paperwork, and administrative costs of keeping up with the tiers, base price, amounts produced, and filing of required returns still costs the oil producer substantial amounts. The bill would require that 50% of the purchases for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve be from domestic sources. The bill would repeal the demand restraints of the Fuel Use Act that prevent certain types of heavy industrial users and utilities from using natural gas.

The bill has numerous other provisions the major goal of which are to reduce government regulations that drive up costs to the oil and gas producer and restrict or make his product less competitive in the energy market. The adoption of the Oil and Gas Production Revitalization Act will not bring boom times back to the industry but it will help the industry. I think all of us will agree the oil and gas industry needs all the help it can get at the present time.

Back to tax, spend?

Democrat Congressman Rostenkowski has indicated on Sept. 4th that, "Everyone knows that we will need a tax increase to reduce the deficit. The increase in revenue should come through higher progressive rates on income."

The Republican candidate for Congressional District 21, Lamar Smith, has pledged not to raise the tax rates on individuals and corporations written into the tax reform law of 1986. The tax reform simply states:

"I, Lamar Smith, pledge to the taxpayers of Texas, and to the American people that I will:

"One, oppose any effort to increase tax rates from the 15 to 28 percent rates for individuals and the 34 percent top rate for business; and

"Two, oppose any further reduction or elimination of deductions and credits, unless matched dollar for dollar by further reducing tax rates."

Under the guidance of Congressman Jim Wright, who is sponsoring Pete Snelson, Pete has refused to sign such a pledge. Our question is, "Why Pete? Do you know in your heart right now that when asked to raise taxes by Rostenkowski and Jim Wright that you will vote yes?" You may vote "yes" in committee and "no" on the floor, but back home folks will find out about this, Pete, so why not go ahead and sign the pledge and start out serving your constituency rather than following the old spend, spend, tax, tax policy of the Democratic Party.

I want to congratulate your paper on the story you published "Triumph over Tragedy" — the story of Becky Stacy. It was the most touching story I have ever had the pleasure of reading.

Mugging the language

It's no wonder that our kids use words incorrectly, with the more popular television newsmen butchering the language, too. Dan Rather, describing his recent mugging, said that he "was assaulted with violence on a Manhattan street."

Assaulted violently perhaps, but not so violently as he assaults the mother tongue.

The 'only candidate'

What is the reasoning of the people who say they support Lamar Smith? Have they not read the facts on this newcomer who has quit every job to which he has been elected; who says he will not work with the other party if elected; who never attended 15 percent of the meetings when he was supposed to be serving the public; who has used every Republican candidate when running against Van Archer and then dropped them; who has problems knowing where certain foreign countries are; who changes his position several times in the same evening?

This to me is a clear issue of a non-qualified, undisciplined opportunist vs. a proven, reliable gentleman, who has an impeccable record of working for Texas, with Texans, and among Texans; who stayed on the job with proven results; who has shown legislative ability; who has been honored by his peer group; who has never quit a project.

To me, regardless of one's party choices, there is no question in this race. The facts are clear and the data is there. As a Republican, I found there is no possible way one could read the record and find any reason to support this limited Republican. My only hope is that people will be more concerned for their state and its future than voting blindly for a poor party choice. Snelson is the only candidate.

Show your citizenship

Tuesday, Nov. 4, is election day. Be sure to vote.

Some people say that you must vote to be a "good citizen." Rather, if you don't vote, you have failed your responsibility as a citizen and have abrogated your citizenship. There's no such thing as a "good citizen" or a "bad citizen" when it comes to voting. You're either a citizen or you're not; it's that simple.

Hugh G. White
Midland

Goody, goody-time!

I think nine single-member districts would represent the citizens of Midland better than "at large" members. The "at large" members of our school board did not serve the citizens well when they changed the boundaries this year. Our pleas and protests fell on deaf ears and they did exactly as they planned from the beginning.

Now Dr. Baressi and the school board want Judge Bunton to hear them. An old song called Goody Goody expresses my feelings to Dr. Baressi and the present board:

"So you met somebody who set you back on your heels; goody, goody

"So you met somebody and now you know how it feels; goody, goody

"So you gave him your trust too, just as we gave ours to you

"And he broke it into little pieces and now how do you do?

"Well hurrah and hallelujah! You had it coming to you

"Goody, goody for him

"Goody, goody for me

"And I hope you're satisfied, you've been taken for a ride

"You rascal you."

Forecast calls for warm, fair skies

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is forecasting warm daytime temperatures and fair skies through Tuesday. The NWS forecast calls for a high on Tuesday near the 80-degree mark.

The overnight low will be cool once again, according to the forecasters at the NWS. The low is expected to dip into the middle 40s with light, variable winds. Winds will remain light and variable on Tuesday.

Sunday's high of 75 was 15 degrees below the record high set for that date in 1950. Today's low of 43 was 10 degrees above the record low set for this date in 1967.

STATE

A high pressure system over the Rockies pumped cool, dry air into the state, giving Texans pleasant weather with fair skies and mild temperatures.

Forecasts called for clear skies and mild temperatures statewide through Tuesday.

Lows tonight will be in the 40s in the mountains of Southwest Texas and the Panhandle and in the 50s and 60s elsewhere. Temperature readings in some of the higher areas of the mountains may dip into the 30s before dawn, forecasters say.

Highs Tuesday will be mostly in the 70s and 80s.

It was partly cloudy along the Texas gulf coast and clear over the rest of the state early today.

NATION

Two cold fronts spread rain today across broad regions of the East and West.

A slow-moving front stretching from New England and the Atlantic Coast into Florida produced rain and showers across much of the region. Another front moved across the Pacific Northwest and northern California.

Elsewhere, light rain dotted the Ohio Valley while fair weather prevailed across much of the Plains, Rockies and the Southwest.

Much of the nation had temperatures in the 40s to 50s early today, while readings dipped into the 20s to 30s in the central Rockies and were in the 70s to around 80 in the desert Southwest and southern Florida.

Today's forecast called for rain from the lower Great Lakes across New England, eastern New York and the central Atlantic Coast; rain and thunderstorms across the Florida Peninsula; rain across the Pacific Northwest; cloudy skies across the Ohio and Tennessee valleys; and fair skies across most of the rest of the nation.

GRAND CANYON

"Leave it as it is. You can not improve on it," his words were wisdom for the ages and came during his first visit to the Grand Canyon in 1903.

Strangely enough it was Theodore Roosevelt, the pioneer enviromentalist, who conducted the mountain lion hunt in 1913 that was the beginning of the Grand Canyon's ecological problems.

With the mule deer's natural enemy eventually pushed to the verge of extinction plus a ban on non predator hunting, the deer population soared from 4,000 in 1906 to 100,000 in 1924.

During that period, the deer devoured the meadows and forests with the thoroughness of a plague of locusts and by 1924 mule deer were starving by the thousands.

The park has never recovered and never will.

The African burro, introduced by a prospector a century before, became another menace, eating vegetation, trampling archeological sites and carving an eroding network of trails while driving out the native desert bighorn.

Trustees name new assistant superintendent

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County school trustees Sunday night named the superintendent of the Kermit school system to be the new assistant superintendent for administrative services.

E. Don Mercer, 47, said he will assume the position vacated by Joe Starnes last May about mid-December. Mercer has been superintendent of the Kermit school district since 1984.

ECISD board President Mickey Jones, commenting on the Mercer choice, said, "We're interested in getting the finest people in education assembled for this school system that we possibly can. He's a fine educator and that's why we brought him here," he said, observing that Kermit has "a fine school district."

Hugh Hayes, ECISD superintendent, said he has known Mercer since they worked together for about two years in the early 1970s in the Longview public school system. "I just feel he's the kind of guy we need to move us forward," stated Hayes.

Mercer spent about 12 years with the Longview school, serving for four years as assistant superintendent for instructional services before becoming superintendent of the Kermit school district. He earned his Bachelor of Science degree from Texas A&M in 1961 and became a teacher and coach in the Hallsville school systems, where he remained until 1972.

Since leaving Texas A&M, Mercer has earned a Masters of Education degree, with majors in counseling and education administration, from Stephen F. Austin State University in Nacogdoches in 1971. He has 60 hours of graduate work beyond the master's level at Stephen F. Austin State University.

Asked why he was attracted to the ECISD job, Mercer said, "I think that the potential to make an impact on student achievement in the school district is one of the concerns I had and I've worked with Mr. Hayes in the past and I feel he's the type of administrator who has the students at heart," he said, "and that's the kind of people I like to be with."

Among his administrative accomplishments while Kermit superintendent, Mercer implemented an educational delivery system for educationally disadvantaged students that is recognized by the Texas Education Agency "as one of the state's thirteen exemplary programs nominated for national recognition."

As assistant superintendent in Longview, Mercer says he implemented a successful comprehensive curriculum/instructional plan that resulted in:

— A significant improvement in the academic achievement of minority students as reflected on the Texas Assessment of Basic Skills;

— A 25 percent increase in the number of students in grades 1-through-8 reading on or above grade level;

— 15 percent fewer reported discipline cases and a five percent increase in student attendance.

While in Longview, Mercer says he was responsible for initiation of exemplary education programs such as Project ACE, a curriculum for excellence that "was one of the state's first funded programs for gifted and talented students."

The program included affiliation with the International Baccalaureate progrsm, which has been suggested for ECISD schools.

Mercer spent more than an hour closeted in executive session with ECISD board members Sunday night before they emerged and Hayes recommended the Kermit superintendent be hired.

Don Williams, who will retire the end of November, has been filling the position since Starnes left. Dr. Bill Walker was promoted from business manager to fill Williams' position as assistant superintendent for management and support services.

Two jailed following felony arrests, police say

Two Midlanders are in Midland County Jail today following their arrest late Sunday for felony possession of marijuana. According to the Midland County Sheriff's office, the couple, in their late twenties or early thirties, were arrested about 9 p.m. Sunday at a residence in the 1700 block of Marienfeld.

Investigators, armed with a warrant issued by Judge Robert Pine, raided a duplex and found six ounces of marijuana with a street value of about $300. Also confiscated were two rifles valued at $500 that were believed stolen from a residence in Tom Green County.

Sheriff's investigators were assisted in the raid by the K-9 unit of the Midland Police Department.

Midland Police are investigating a string of burglaries that occurred over the weekend in the city, including nearly $2,000 in electronic equipment.

Red Cross' failure to join in South African ousting 'matter of conscience'

From Staff Reports

The American Red Cross' failure to join Third World and Soviet bloc countries in ousting the South African government delegation from an International Red Cross conference "was a matter of balanced conscience," its president, Richard Schubert said Sunday.

"Quite simply, there is no way that an objective review of our governing statutes can support suspension," Shubert said.

"Suspension, properly or improperly generated, will only isolate the offenders from correction and from dialogue," he said.

Shubert presented the official American Red Cross position on the matter after a lenthy debate that followed a proposal by Kenya to oust the delegation because of the country's apartheid policies.

Shubert did not react to the South African government's request that the International Committee of the Red Cross leave the country.

Saturday's roll call vote, taken after two days of stormy debate in Geneva, Switzerland, concluded with 159 Third and Soviet bloc nations favoring ejection.

All 25 Western delegations opposed it and eight delegations, mostly from Latin America, abstained.

Meanwhile, ICRC delegates in South Africa are visiting about 300 prisoners, supporting the work of the national society and giving aid to 20,000 Mozambican refugees.

"For many, many years, the American Red Cross has been at the forefront of efforts to involve all elements of our society into our work and leadership," Shubert said. "We are probably among the first of the predominantly white Red Cross societies to have a black chairman.

"We were also among the primary sponsors in the council of delegates of the resolution condemning Apartheid...Apartheid is an affront to all humanity," he added.

"Most importantly," said Shubert, "We genuinely feel the hurt, anger and frustration of our black Red Cross leadership here gathered, as a consequence of the condemned apartheid. We have come, all of us, to admire their work and we care deeply for them as individuals. Our hearts, as well as our heads, boil over in resentment against callous disregard for the worth of human beings, wherever and whenever it occurs."

Shubert said the International Red Cross should be a body governed by law and not reaction to human emotion.

"Our decision to vote "non-participating" was taken so that we could make the clearest possible declaration of opposition to any action proposed to be taken outside the confines of applicable law and legal precedents," he said.

"Our Red Cross movement must continue to be a body grounded and governed by law or we will reduce ourselves to chaos, as we have so well demonstrated over the last 36 hours," Shubert added.

The family requests memorials be directed to the American Cancer Society or Hospice.

CANYON

Shooting the burros was opposed by some and the experiment of Cowboys to corral the burros and sell them at auction brought $11 a head. The hitch was it cost $450 a head to round them up.

The human hordes who have descended on the park have only compounded the woes.

Those who have sought to harness the canyon for man's use haven't helped matters in the eyes of the environmentalists. Before the Glen Canyon Dam, the Colorado River carried 380,000 tons of sediment a day. Now it carries 40,000 tons. The dam has improved trout fishing, but destroyed the rare native fish that thrived on the warm, slow-moving silt-laden waters.

If Senator Barry Goldwater had one pitch to call back, he claims now it would be his vote for the Glen Canyon Dam.

It's all chronicled in a decade old National Geographic, so the trip to Grand Canyon was viewed as an inspection of what, by now, was feared to be a total ecological disaster.

Instead, the 4 1/2 mile hike to the Tonto Platform some 3,000 feet below the rim turned out to be an exercise in survival.

On any planned trip into the Canyon, it is advisable to pack a lunch, preferably moisture containing fruit, the night before. At dawn, nothing is open, not even the park toll booth.

They laughed when I showed up with a two-gallon canteen, purchased especially for the venture, but by the day's end I was the life of the party.

For that matter, planning is the key to a successful Grand Canyon trip. If you intend to camp overnight, you'll need a permit and, if it's for next summer, you already are almost too late.

An early start is advisable. That means if you are billeting in Oak Creek Canyon, it's up and on the road by 4:30 a.m. in order to make the 100-mile trip to the South Rim by daybreak.

Not until the stop in Flagstaff to pick up a cup of coffee and a donut do you find out from your fellow travelers, a description that fits anyone so base as to perpetrate such deceit, that it was really a 3:30 a.m. departure and not 4:30.

It's when the group begins the hike down Bright Angel Trail at 7:30 a.m., that you begin to realize that the alleged experienced outdoorsmen who complete the party are not what they seem.

Already, Janelle, a future member of the family, has remarked on the beautiful sunrise while driving to the Rim from Flagstaff while looking to her left, which meant we were making better time than realized and were approaching the canyon from the North Rim. Either that or she had the scoop of the ages.

The other member of the party specializes in open sea disasters.

And then there was the matter of food, the oversight of which was brought home less than a quarter mile into the hike.

Within a few 100 yards of departure, a sign looms on the trail warning, "Do not proceed without food and water. The casualty rate is severe enough without encouragement from foolhardy travelers", not the exact quote, perhaps, but close enough.

However, no one was about to forsake the distance traveled for sustenance, so the Donner Party pressed on. Within minutes the hunger pangs set in.

The trip is 4 1/2 miles of switchbacks to Indian Garden, a campground built around a spring, a spring now too polluted to fill a canteen.

Some 70 years ago a photographer stuck cottonwood branches in the ground like fence posts. Now a 60-foot canopy of trees shades the inner canyon campground.

We arrived at 10:30 a.m. and, after a half hour rest faced a trip out that would take twice as long as the descent. By this time, as others picnicked around us on sandwiches, raisins, nuts, fruit, we knew we'd be too weak to make it.

We'd have barbecued one of those Abert squirrels, who get fat begging from hikers. On the way down, their antics were "cute", now they looked like a meal. The only thing that saved them were the witnesses.

It was 3 p.m., down the road, when the pizzas finally arrived.

Cisneros on campaign trail for White

By MICHAEL HOLMES

An analysis

EAGLE PASS (AP) — He pounds the podium. He leads "four more years" cheers. He switches fluidly from English to Spanish and back.

His audiences cheer. His voice cracks as he urges them on. People flock to stand near him, to be photographed beside him.

Henry Cisneros, mayor of San Antonio and one of the nation's leading Hispanic politicians, is on the campaign trail — for someone else.

For two days, Cisneros accompanied Democratic Gov. Mark White as White stumped for votes against his Republican opponent, former Gov. Bill Clements.

At a Houston union meeting, on the dusty streets of a Laredo barrio, in the Knights of Columbus hall at Eagle Pass, Cisneros championed his party's top candidate.

"If we fail to do everything we can for Mark White, we are doing a disservice to ourselves. We would be ashamed of ourselves if we let a man who stood for us stand alone on Nov. 4," he said Saturday night, his voice cracking with the strain of two full days on the campaign trail.

Meeting with East Texas politicans in Texarkana, helping the governor raise funds in Dallas, fielding questions at a McAllen news conference, Cisneros also waved the party flag.

"It's time to put some gasoline in that engine and get that Democratic machine rolling," he said.

In short, Cisneros is doing everything a high-profile politician with a future should.

But as dozens of people ask for his autographs, seek his handshakes, request a quick snapshot side-by-side, Cisneros is hearing questions about his own plans.

His appeal is strong.

Several times in recent days, Cisneros appeared to be as big a draw — if not bigger — than the man for whom he was campaigning.

He and White knocked on front doors in neighborhoods in San Antonio, Corpus Christi and Laredo.

On the porch of one home, White shook hands with an elderly Mexican-American woman. A campaign volunteer translated for both. After a moment, the woman leaned forward and spoke softly to the translator.

"He's right here," came the reply, and Cisneros was ushered forward to meet her.

For the record, Cisneros says he's got "the best job I know" as San Antonio's mayor.

His plans, he says, are to stay right where he is. There's another mayoral election coming soon.

That's the same answer he gave in 1984, when his name splashed into headlines nationwide after Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale interviewed the mayor as a potential vice presidential candiate, a job that eventually went to New York Congresswoman Geraldine Ferraro.

Many Texas Democrats say Cisneros would make a powerful candidate for statewide office one of these days. The U.S. Senate in 1988, perhaps, or governor in 1990.

Flying aboard White's campaign jet, Cisneros was asked about 1988.

Yes, he said, he will be campaigning statewide in 1988 — "for Sen. (Lloyd) Bentsen."

After he was mobbed by enthusiastic well-wishers at White's Eagle Pass rally, Cisneros faced another question: Does all the fuss over him spark some interest in a statewide race where he has top billing?

"No," he replied. "Why should it?"

Fair bids fairwell for another year

DALLAS (AP) — It's all over but the cleaning up. On its 100th birthday, the State Fair of Texas ended a month-long run.

"It cost too much," said Randy Duvall of Dallas.

"I liked the fun house," said Tandinika Smith, 7, of Fort Worth.

"And the little Ferris wheel," added her mother, Patricia Smith.

"I'm sad, but I'll be glad to be going home to Nashville, Arkansas," said game operator Jo McMullan.

All were leaving the fair Sunday night as Big Tex bellowed his last "How-dee folks!"

He'll get a vacation until next October, when the fair returns to a 17-day schedule.

"Going into it with 31 days, we were not sure what to expect," fair spokeswoman Nancy Wiley said. "But things have gone exceedingly well."

Closing attendance figures were up, crime incidents were down and participation increased in a number of areas, she said.

Duvall, 22, said he and his four companions spent a total of $150 during their four hours at the fair.

"The beer cost too much," he complained.

One of his friends, Arla Ashlock, wasn't complaining — she clutched a pair of larged stuffed animals.

"I won them at the game where you throw a quarter on the rainbow," said Ms. Ashlock, a 20-year-old Olkahoma native making her first visit to the fair.

It was also the first time for Mrs. Smith, who had become separated from her husband, twin boys and other daughter.

"It was just a spur of the moment thing," she said of the decision to come to the fair on the closing night. "We had a great time," she added as she spotted the rest of her family walking up the nearly-empty Midway.

Mrs. McMullan was among the hundreds of game operators and concession workers packing up their booths. It was her 14th season here.

"I came the first year and I kept coming back," she said, taking down the booth where you drop ping pong balls into a clown's mouth.

She praised her employer, which had paid her grandson's medical bills.

"...I learned a lesson the very first day. To be a sport if I want to play. If I can't lose and be able to grin, then I really don't deserve to win," she wrote.

"That's the way I feel about the fair," said Mrs. McMullan, who works the rest of the year as a jailer and sheriff's dispatcher back home in Arkansas.

In another booth, workers armed with darts furiously attacked the remaining balloons pinned to a wall.

Others packed prizes into large black plastic trash bags before carting them off like a Santa Claus out of uniform.

They walked briskly, eager to end the last of 31 busy days.

But the fairgoers lingered, dragging out their departure to enjoy the last possible minute.

It was on Oct. 26, 1886, that more than 14,000 people boarded buggies, trains or mule-drawn streetcars to attend the first state fair in Dallas.

Total admissions for this year hadn't been calculated Sunday night, but officials expected attendance would top 3.9 million.

Other fairgoers enjoyed special attractions such as an exhibit of Chinese history and culture, Chinese acrobats and the national touring company of the musical production Cats, which played to 80,884 people during 20 shows, Ms. Wiley said.

"Attractions such as the Chinese acrobats drew between 7,000 to 8,000 persons a day," she added. "And there was the largest number of livestock entries we've ever had."

Nearly 14,000 animals watched visitors watching them, up from 12,000 entrants in 1985, she said.

In creative arts, the number of entrants increased 20 percent from last year, to 9,555 contestants.

At the hall of state, copies of the Magna Charta and the Texas Declaration of Independence were on display, drawing 353,000 spectators.

Police patrols were beefed up significantly, and only about 150 crimes had been reported by the last weekend, down from 224 during the 1985 17-day fair, Deputy Police Chief R.L. Schifelbein said.

"This has just been a great fair," he said. "There's been no major police or fair incidents and our guys have worked hard and really enjoyed it."

"The people have really been great," Schifelbein added.

Thousands make pilgrimage to mountaintop statue of Jesus

EL PASO (AP) — A small paper sack clutched in her hand, 100-year-old Mauricia Paez hobbled down a dusty trail that hundreds of thousands of people have walked to the peak of Mount Cristo Rey.

Inside the sack were aspirin and other remedies that so far she said she has not needed.

"God gives me life and health," said Mrs. Paez, who has climbed the mountain every year since 1970 to give thanks for her longevity.

Her latest trip was one that about 10,000 others made Sunday to the statue of Jesus that stretches more than 40 feet into the sky from a base of solid rock. They came to celebrate the 53rd annual feast day of Christ procession.

Beside Mrs. Paez was her granddaughter, Maria de Jesus C. Acosta.

"She comes mostly because she likes to be here," Ms. Acosta said. "I get a lot more tired than she does."

Ms. Acosta has made the pilgrimage since 1964, when a nephew in the service was assigned to a tour of duty in Vietnam. She had come to pray for his safety. The nephew returned.

The pilgrimages began in 1933, when Pope Pius XI called for special observances of the 19th centennial of Christ's crucifixion and resurrection.

Parishioners of San Jose de Cristo Rey quickly began work on the winding road to the summit, and by March 1934, a metal cross had been placed at the mountain top.

The next year, a larger, more permanent cross was erected, and succeeding pilgrimages drew larger and larger crowds.

In 1938, Spanish sculptor Urbizi Soler was commissioned to build the statue at a cost of more than $60,000 raised by the Diocese of El Paso. The statue looks over Texas, New Mexico and the Mexican state of Chihuahua.

First lighted in 1983, the statue now is lighted only on special occasions. Using makeshift canes fashioned from broom handles, scrap lumber and other materials, the faithful walked along the winding mountain trail.

"We do it every year because our parents like to come," Roman Alvarez, 9, said Sunday. "We come for the fun of it, to see what it's like to walk it."

Michelle Pena, 16, carried her shoes as she made the two-hour walk because "it's more of a sacrifice."

City tries to lure 1988 Democratic convention

HOUSTON (AP) — Democratic leaders visiting the city this week will get the red-carpet treatment from local officials trying to lure the party's 1988 national convention to Houston.

City officials armed with champagne, plush hotel rooms and fine dining will be on hand to greet members of the Democratic committee who will decide what city will host the next Democratic National Convention.

About 120 committee members, guests and party officials are expected to visit Houston beginning Thursday.

Everything from plane tickets and hotel rooms to samples of the city's finest food will be provided, compliments of the businesses. Some local companies also have offered free office space and condominiums for use during the convention.

Other contributions include legal service, courier service, banners and even coffee and Danish pastries, officials said.

"The reality is if they pick another city, they're leaving one hell of a lot on the table here in Houston, Texas," said Russell Rau, assistant to developer Joe Russo, who heads the citizens committee organized to attract the Democrats to Houston.

The payoff? Big bucks for Houston's economy, which has been hurt by ailing oil prices.

A study conducted by Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. showed the Democratic Convention would inject $67 million into the city's economy. The 1988 Republican National Convention would bring fewer visitors, but would still boost the economy by more than $63.8 million.

Although officials are also trying to attract the GOP convention, Houston is considered an unlikely spot largely because the 1984 Republican convention was in Dallas.

According to conventional wisdom, a party does not hold its big event in the same state twice in a row, officials said.

Houston and New Orleans are considered top contenders for the Democratic convention. Atlanta, Washington, New York and Kansas City also are in the running, officials said.

During their visit, committee members will have to don hard hats at the unfinished Brown Center, but a red carpet will be rolled out for them. The tour ends next Sunday in Galveston with breakfast aboard the historic sailing ship Elissa.

"You can't imagine the details involved in moving 120 people through your city for four days," said Clintine Cashion, assistant to Houston Mayor Kathy Whitmire.

"It's my feeling it is those personal touches, that attention to detail, that will make the trip memorable," she said. "We're not overlooking a thing."

Accused ax murderer says acts like watching movie

DALLAS (AP) — A man accused in the hatchet slayings of three women has confessed to those killings and two others, and says he didn't feel bothered by his acts because "it's just like watching a movie."

David Martin Long, the 33-year-old drifter arrested Friday in the Sept. 27 slaying of three women in suburban Lancaster, says he wants to be executed by Texas' method of injection "like they do to animals."

"I'm criminal," Long said. "I thought maybe I'd get better, but it appears to be getting worse, and I'm pretty much ready to call it a day with my demented personality."

In an interview with The Dallas Morning News published Sunday, Long added that "I've got something inside my head that clicks sometimes. It just goes off...It's just like watching a movie or something."

He said he killed the three women because he "just got tired of hearing all their bickering" and they objected to his drinking after he lived with them for a week.

Long, being held without bond on capital murder charges in the three slayings, signed statements admitting to the three killings and two others, authorities said.

Long attributes his violent behavior to alcohol and drug addiction and a troubled past that included alcoholic parents and a series of reform schools. But he said he blames no one but himself for the crimes he said he committed.

"I realize what I did is wrong," he said. "I don't belong in this society. I never have...I think I need to go ahead and leave. I like to call it being put to sleep, kind of like they do to animals.

"Texas has proven itself to be both humane and sensible in the disposal of guys like me," he said.

The Dallas County District Attorney's office says it will seek the death penalty for the triple slaying. Long said he has no plans to seek legal counsel.

He was arrested Friday in Austin and charged with the September hatchet deaths of Donna Sue Jester, 37, of nearby Lancaster; her cousin, Dalpha Lorene Jester, a 64-year-old blind invalid who lived with her, and a housemate, Laura Lee Owen, 20.

Long also signed a confession saying that in 1978, he bludgeoned to death a service station attendant in California and in 1983 killed his employer in a trailer house fire in the southeast Texas town of Bay City.

During the four weeks that Long eluded authorities, he said, he consumed large amounts of cheap wine, hitchhiked from town to town and tried to figure out how to buy a car.

"Had I had things come together like I wished they would have, I was going to go finalize a few more vendettas" against possibly five people in Texas, he said, adding that he wanted to kill the others who "I felt have crossed me up."

Long said that in the San Bernardino, Calif., slaying, he beat service station attendant James Carnell, 54, with a tire tool because Carnell allegedly tried to cheat him out of $16 for tire repairs.

San Bernardino police said that they lacked a murder weapon or motive for the 8-year-old slaying case and that Long's statement was the first lead they had. But it could be up to two years before he is extradited to California to be tried for that killing, authorities say.

In the Bay City slaying, 38-year-old Bob Neal Rogers was burned to death in his mobile home. Long said he was provoked because Rogers, his employer at the time, objected to misuses of a company vehicle.

Long was arrested in connection with the Bay City death, but a Matagorda County grand jury said there was insufficient evidence to warrant an indictment.

Padre Island visitors return to shore as red tide leaves

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Visitors have begun returning to the Padre Island National Seashore as the red tide continues to dissipate, officials said Sunday.

Since the seashore was reopened Friday, there have been no reports of new fish kills linked to the tide, said Richard Harris, a National Park Service Ranger.

"We haven't seen a large jump, but there has been a fairly good number," he said. "The fishermen who like to go down island, we're seeing a lot more of those come out. The water is very clear right now. The water is very calm and that really makes it nice for fishing."

The tide could still be seen offshore and officials said they are still taking precautions.

"We don't think this tide is completely gone yet. We are still not allowing camping on the beach or on the campground," Harris said.

Harris said if warm weather continues, the fish-killing, brownish-red tide that is produced by microorganisms could cause problems as late as early December.

"It's hard to predict right now. Nobody really knows that much about it to go out on a limb right now and say, 'We're at the end of this.' Nobody really wants to commit themselves," Harris said.

County plans new jail

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas County is making plans to build a new jail by the early 1990s, even though the Lew Sterrett Justice Center is only 3½ years old and another jail will be opened next summer.

Officials blame a persistent and worsening jail population increase for the need for a new facility. County commissioners are to consider the proposal Monday.

Plans for the new jail were discussed last week when the population at the county's four jail facilities reached 3,000 inmates, said County Administrator J. Allen Clemson.

In the meantime, county commissioners are considering several short-term proposals to add bunks to the existing jails. Some officials contend that a maximum-security area will be necessary before a new jail can be built because of the increasing number of violence-prone inmates.

The county will have 1,080 additional bunks for inmates charged with less-violent crimes when the new Bill Decker Correctional Center opens next summer.

Disabled held on murder

FORT WORTH (AP) — A handicapped man was being held on a murder charge today in connection with the shooting death of a woman who was shot to death as she climbed through a window into the man's home, police said.

The man told police the shooting was accidental.

Police said Mary Ann Harris, 37, died early Sunday at John Peter Smith Hospital of a single gunshot wound in the chest.

The man told police he was in bed about 2:30 a.m. Sunday when he heard a window in his unlighted apartment shatter. He said he was not wearing his artificial leg, but was able to crawl out of bed and grab a rifle from his closet.

Entertaining evening benefits Project Self-Sufficiency

By MYRA SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

The Midland Center was filled with an array of diverse entertainment Friday. Music lovers could enjoy country and western, jazz, a brass ensemble and a synthesizer. For those who like dance, there were performances by Ballet Folklorico and tapdancers.

"Pick Yourself Up Midland, (...dust yourself off and start all over again...)" was the theme for the musical event benefiting Project Self-Sufficiency.

Rev. Nina Douglas of the Permian Church of Religious Science, a co-sponsor and emcee for the evening, said, "Project Self-Sufficiency was designed to assist very low income single parents in breaking the poverty cycle by providing them with housing, child care, transportation, counseling, education, job training and placement."

"This is an opportunity for single parents, men or women, to change the quality of their life," she said. "It is a more excellent way to revive your spirit helping others to help themselves."

Project Self-Sufficiency — a derivative of the President's Quality of Life Initiatives — has been put into action in 140 cities across the nation since its implementation in 1985. The project, designed to enable single parents to become independent of long-term government programs, is federally funded and Midland was one of the cities selected to receive funds.

Jerri Westmoreland, Midland County Housing director and member of a task force to promote self-sufficiency, said, "Midland Project Self-Sufficiency is only six months old, but the organization already has 30 participants on the program." According to the Rev. Douglas, there were over 200 people in attendance and the evening grossed $1500 for the project.

The program opened with the "New Thought Singers" from the Permian Church of Religious Science, singing the theme song written for the event, "Stand Up, (Pick Yourself Up)."

They were followed by the Midland College Band Enslemble, playing a medley of Broadway tunes. The Midland College brass ensemble also performed.

The food bar was filled with barbecue sliced beef sandwiches, chipped beef, desserts, and beverages.

The Midland College Road Runners Country Western Band took the stage and the dancing began, continuing through the evening with the Midland College Ensemble and The Marbles playing.

Vernon Martin, a member of the Self-Sufficiency Board, joined The Marbles for several songs playing his trombone.

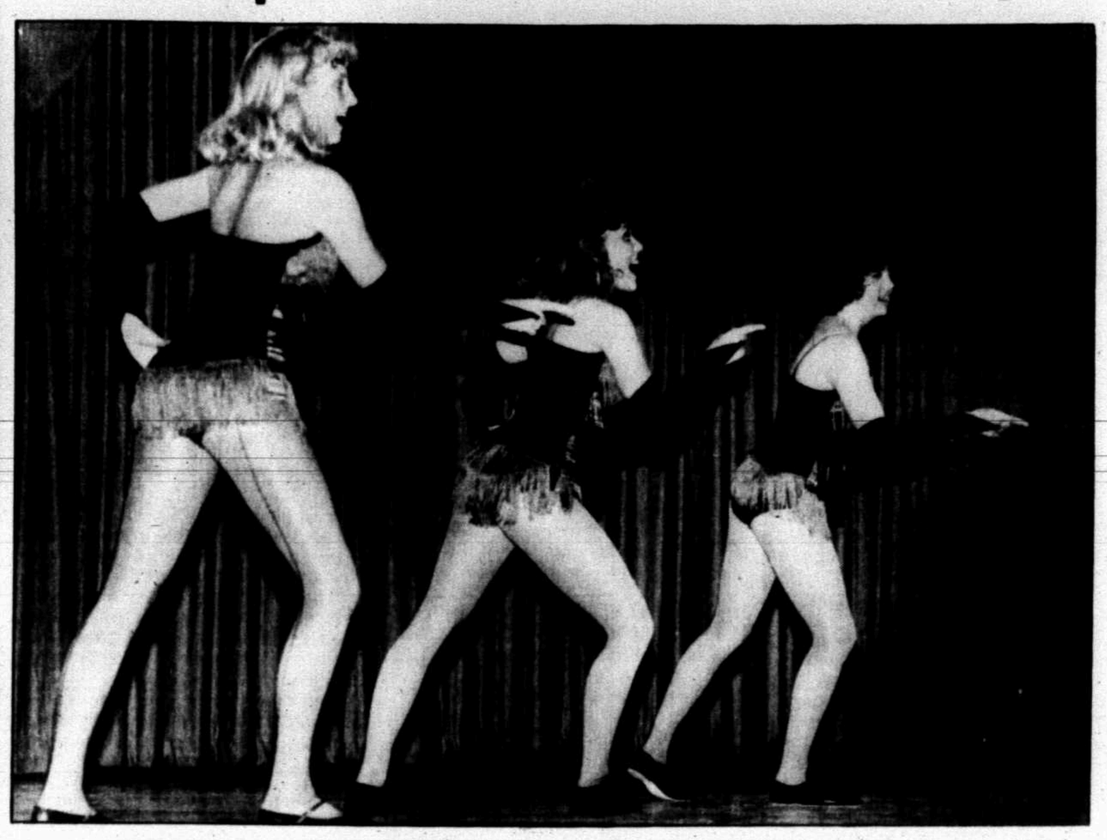

Audio entertainment turned visual for the second half of the program, with the Bingham Dancers, including a gymnastic dance number, jazz and tap. The Manriquez Family added color to the evening with a Ballet Folklorico performing traditional Mexican folk dances and rope tricks.

Westmoreland introduced some of the women and one man on the Project Self-Sufficiency program, who also were hosting the event.

Other entertainment included Eric Vaughan who played a variety of music on a synthesizer and a two member band, Iris. The program closed with blues music by soloist Rochelle Rabouin.

The Marbles played dance music at the Project Self-Sufficiency benefit. Band members include Matt Holten on drums and Burt Herrin on lead guitar.

The Bingham dancers, Leagha Lockhart, Julie Swift and Paula Brooks, performed a 'Roaring 20s' routine.

Organizers of the entertainment event and members of the Project Self-Sufficiency task force are Jerri Westmoreland, Vernon Martin and the Rev. Nina Douglas.

When allowance doesn't cut it, teens turn to work

By WILLIAM E. SMART
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The competition for the billions of dollars teenagers spend has heated up in recent years: Movies, retail stores, fast-food restaurants, record shops, all want a piece of the spending action.

And, in order for the teen-age Smiths to keep up with the teen-age Joneses, and vice versa — the old-fashioned weekly allowance just doesn't cut it — they are entering the part-time job market in droves: More than 4 million teen-aged students were working part-time jobs in 1985, according to the latest Bureau of Labor Statistics figures, and, says a National Center for Education Statistics study, nearly two-thirds of high school seniors and more than 40 percent of high school sophomores are working part-time jobs during the school year.

That may be good news for the economy, but is it good for the teenagers? It all depends on whom you ask:

Some psychologists and sociologists say part-time jobs help teenagers learn the value of the work ethic, keep them from having too much free time to get into trouble, help them learn skills that will be useful in later life.

Others say jobs have the opposite effect, leading them into drug abuse and other delinquent activities, teaching them to sneer at the work ethic and giving them the money to throw away on frills and luxuries.

ALMOST EVERYONE who has looked at the reality of part-time student employment says there can be benefits, when the proper approach is taken.

"The pressure for a teen-ager to work is great," says educator Roxanne Bradshaw, secretary-treasurer of the National Education Association, "and not just because of the economic plight in the world today. Much of it is peer pressure to have a little bit of freedom and independence, and to have their own spending money. The concern we have is when that part-time work becomes the primary focus."

Part-time work can be a beneficial, positive experience, says Bradshaw, "especially when there is parental involvement and an understanding work environment, one that is supportive of them as students. The first priority should be school."

Psychologists Ellen Greenberger and Laurence Steinberg, who have done a number of studies on the subject, and recently wrote When Teenagers Work: The Psychological and Social Costs of Adolescent Employment (Basic Books, 1986), conclude that teen-age student workers perform less well in school, experience a higher rate of delinquency and alcohol and drug abuse and are more likely than their nonworking peers to develop a negative attitude toward working.

"Insofar as working today may be unproductive for many youngsters, or have negative consequences for their development," say Greenberger and Steinberg, "the fault lies largely in the kinds of jobs we make available to youth and with the broader social context of their employment." Greenberger is at the University of California, Irvine; Steinberg is at the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

THE FAST food industry, one of the areas targeted by Greenberger and Steinberg, is perhaps the single largest employer of teen-age students. Spokesmen for that industry, which has a large turnover rate and a rapidly increasing number of available jobs, insist they are as concerned for their employees' welfare as they are in filling job openings.

"Given the labor shortage," says Mary Maguire, corporate-level public relations manager for Roy Rogers Restaurants, in Washington, "we want to do everything we can to attract and keep good employees. We're going to work with the students and their parents to meet their schedules, as well as our own needs, in order to keep that employee.

"There's no way we're going to sabotage a kid's performance in school, because then the parents will take them out of the restaurant. We need those employees."

Working in a fast food restaurant, or any other part-time job, says Maguire, calls for some level of maturity on the teen-ager's part. The benefits of such work, she says, include learning a balancing act of work, school and socializing. "They have to learn to keep the balance and to decide what their primary goal should be: Their primary goal should be schoolwork, and they shouldn't be working too-long hours."

NEA's BRADSHAW says there are a number of issues, including hours, that should be of concern to students and parents alike. Among them:

■ "If kids are going to work part time, they should have some sort of guidance and counseling, not only from the school side but also from the parents, and there should be encouragement for them to seek employment that is maybe going to give them some sense of self-esteem, responsibility and independence without taking up a full amount of their time.

■ "There should be limits on the number of hours students work, not only in number but also what those hours are, in the sequence of the day. They should not be working after 9 or 10 at night.

■ "There should be a space of time when students will have some quality time to do their schoolwork."

George Washington University Prof. Amitai Etzioni, who has written critically of fast food restaurants as places of employment for teenagers, agrees with Maguire and Bradshaw on the issue of hours. The deleterious effects of part time employment, he suggests, might be controlled by parents, who could "set a school-night curfew, like 9 p.m., and limit kids to working 15 hours a week during the school year. That would go a long way to improve the situation."

Also, says Etzioni, "The parents should agree with the children clearly what's going to happen to the money." That, he says, might depend on the family's financial situation. "For a poorer family, a good part of it should go for the household and not just be spent on trinkets. For the middle class, it should be for some agreed goal, like college or a car, and not again just pocket money."

MAGUIRE, WHO regularly is in touch with district managers "and other people who have worked their way up through hourly employment ranks," says they regularly tell her, "'The kids that work for me are working toward goals, and they're saving money for college.' Of course they're going to buy records or something, but they're going for goals. They're good kids."

With good managers, she notes, "the kids really can do a lot and learn responsibility — for being somewhere on time, planning their schedules and looking a certain way, and in working with the public, learning how to deal with customers who may be having a rough day themselves. They also learn teamwork."

Nostalgia for cars

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — America's growing number of antique car enthusiasts have created a demand for such nostalgic motoring items as visored caps, leather cloaks, goggles, rubberized suits and dresses.

Also among the classic accessories sought for tailgate parties and picnics is the motor robe, which Bill Nance, divisional sales manager for Pendleton Woolen Mills, says is still being manufactured today.

DEAR ABBY

Polish proposal reminder of sad plight in other lands

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR READERS: I would like to share a rather unusual letter with you. The postmark on the envelope indicated it came from a small town in Poland. The return address, written in a neat and legible hand, read: Mr. Roman Majewski and Mr. Jozef Warzynski. The letter was written entirely in Polish, with the exception of two English words — "necking" and "petting"!

Since Polish is Greek to me, I sent the letter to Mr. B.J. Solak, a Polish-born friend now living in Aspen, Colo., who at 78 still happily skis and hikes. I asked B.J. to please rush the English translation, hoping the letter wasn't just a bad Polish joke, or worse yet, something of an embarrassing nature.

My Polish friend swiftly accommodated me with this English translation:

DEAR MISS VAN BUREN: Your fame has gone far beyond the frontiers of the U.S.A. and has reached us in our unhappy land. We are aware that the San Francisco Chronicle publishes your column, so we hope that it, and perhaps some other newspapers, will publish our matrimonial offer.

We are two 100 percent gentlemen, over 30, sensitive and sincere, of unusual courage, endowed with superior capacities for love, from necking and petting to seeking adventurous new ways of lovemaking. We are endowed with rich spiritual values, and while capable of loving like nobody in the world, we regard marriage as sacred and holy, and we would be faithful like gold.

We desire to meet two American women who know the Polish language and wish to marry two sincere young men of Polish nationality. Age is of no importance. A photo would be appreciated, but will not be the decisive factor. We are not seeking material wealth, only love from two American women who would teach us the English language, as we wish to become completely Americanized and live in your wonderful country.

Miss Van Buren, kindly accept our expression of deep respect and appreciation for your assistance in this matter. We are hoping for a compassionate response. — ROMAN AND JOZEF

Sadly for Roman and Jozef, as a matter of policy this column does not provide a matchmaking service, so please, readers, no letters asking to meet them.

While their letter may strike many as somewhat amusing, it conveys a very important message: Here are two obviously sincere Polish men who are willing to marry any American woman, sight unseen, in order to live in the land of the free and home of the brave. Three cheers for the red, white and blue!

DEAR ABBY: I would like to comment on those who wrote in to tell you about the secret "code" used by loved ones in the service overseas to communicate their locations during World War II.

I lived through those years and was aware of that practice. As I look back, I am not surprised that Tokyo Rose and Lord HaHa could personally welcome by name new arrivals in a combat area within a day after their arrival.

When I served in the U.S. Navy during World War II, we were told, "A slip of the lip may sink a ship."

I wonder how many men died because someone tipped off the folks at home as to where they were going. — RICHARD C. ROBENALT, DAVIS, CALIF.

DEAR RICHARD: Only you and Omaha reader Laurie S. Robertson (Major, USAR, Ret.) wrote to express that view.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "UNMARRIED, PREGNANT AND BETWEEN TWO FIRES": Since you are opposed to abortion because you consider it "murder," and your only problem is whether to keep your baby or put it up for adoption, I urge you to get in touch with an organization called Birthright. It is very much concerned about women in your plight and will help you to make a decision you can live with. God bless you.

Dollar firming

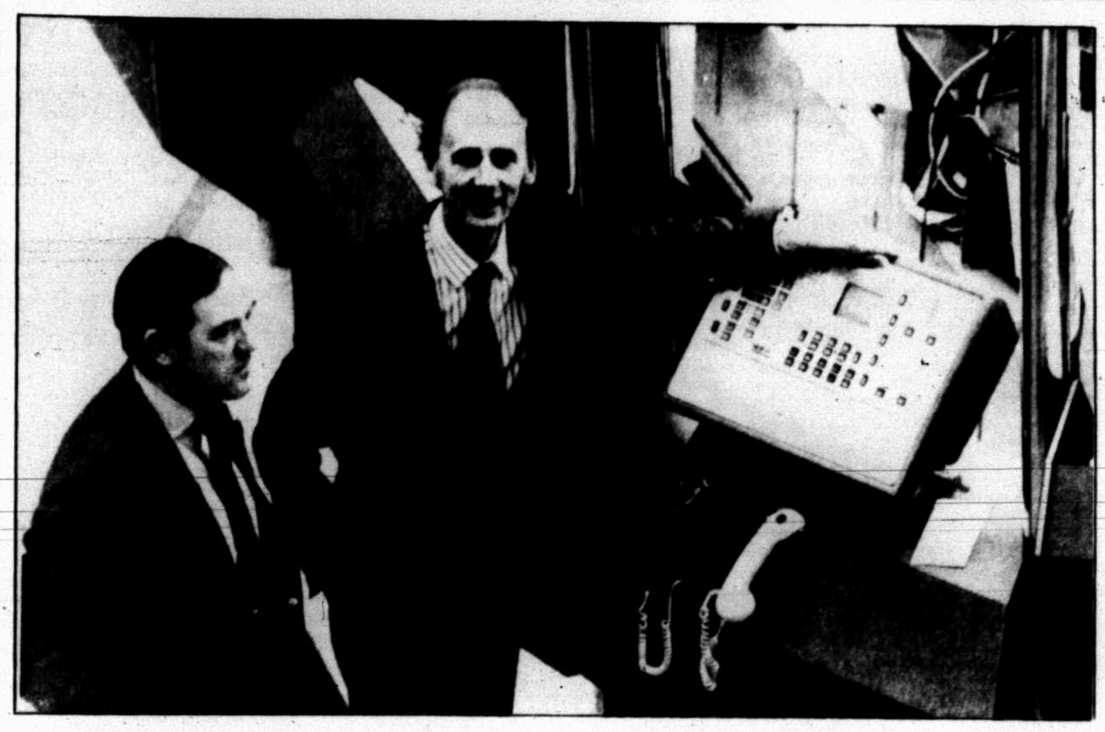

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar had a mixed performance in quiet European trading early today but was moving upward amid speculation that the U.S. economy was strengthening.

Foreign exchange dealers said the dollar, recovering from a weak opening, made ground mainly on the strength of last Friday's Commerce Department report that U.S. orders for durable goods rose a higher-than-expected 4.9 percent in September.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $410.70 a troy ounce, down from $412.50 bid late Friday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $409.60.

In Zurich, the bid price was $410.75, down from $412.50 bid late Friday.

'Big Bang' has shaky start

LONDON (AP) — The much-heralded "Big Bang" deregulation of the London Stock Exchange began with a whimper today as a 70-minute computer snarl at the start of trading marred the historic change.

A half-hour before the 9 a.m. start of official business, computers vital to the new high technology system of price quotations went down. They came back up briefly and went down again until they were restored just before 10 a.m.

During the breakdown, dealers — some banging on their new computer screens in frustration — were unable to enter prices or register deals.

But despite the problems, the market moved ahead, with the Financial Times 500-share Index up 8.4 points by mid-morning.

With the Big Bang, trading in the City of London, the capital's one square mile financial district, was extended beyond the floor of the Stock Exchange on Old Broad Street to hundreds of computer screens in the offices of dealers.

When working, the screens carried instant information about stock price movements for brokers and financial institutions to deal in by telephone.

During a year of preparation, the Big Bang has drawn American and other foreign securities companies into the new era of competition in the City.

"The Big Bang is definitely a whimper to start with," said Jeff Preen, a senior dealer with brokers L. Messel and Co., a wholly owned subsidairy of the American securities giant, Shearson Lehman Brothers International.

He spoke as he surveyed his company's packed dealing room filled with the multi-million dollar equipment Messel bought to join the inauguration.

Preen, for 17 years a dealer on the floor of the exchange, said the changeover to telephone and computer screens in Messel's dealing room left him with one overriding feeling — "nervous."

"It's a huge change. But we'll get used to it and be successful," said Preen.

The old-style market, with virtually all the business conducted on the floor, closed Friday with choruses of "Auld Lang Syne" and champagne toasts to mark the passing of the old age.

The exchange floor will continue as a place to trade company shares and British government bonds.

The exchange also is ending restrictive practices that fixed commissions at profitable levels for the few permitted to be members.

Fixed commission rules were scrapped and many brokers were ready to cut charges to clients from the previously fixed 1.65 percent commission to 1 percent.

Hispanic chamber notes anniversary

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

The Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, MHCC, began two years ago with approximately 20 members. The group is now "150 members strong and growing," according to MHCC president Roger Robles. The chamber celebrated its second anniversary Sunday with a banquet at the Club Granada.

Guest speaker at the dinner was Pete Martinez, 1986-87 president of the Texas Association of Mexican-American Chambers of Commerce, TAMACC. He commended the MHCC for being one of the most energetic chambers he's encountered. "I can see you all are motivated, and in Roger's words, Let's make things happen now."

He gave a brief history of TAMACC and its goals. "TAMACC was started in 1975 to encourage opportunities in commerce," he said of the organization, which currently has 5,000 members. Recently, board members — every chamber has two representatives on the board of directors — gathered in San Antonio to help set down objectives for the group. According to Martinez, objectives include:

- Establishing a voice in the legislative process on behalf of Hispanic businesses, by setting up a committee to work with legislators.
- Creating a media network to help promote issues of concern to TAMACC.
- Establishing financial stability for the state organization.
- Promoting economic development of Hispanic businesses by having seminars across the state and setting up an economic development task force.
- Capitalizing "on a language and culture we're proud of" to foster international trade not only with Mexico but other countries.

TAMACC is also coordinating efforts, with Southwestern Bell, to combat the Hispanic dropout problem. Southwestern Bell has produced a documentary, narrated by Edward James Olmos of Miami Vice fame, on the subject, entitled "Hispanic Dropouts: America's Time Bomb. The documentary was scheduled to air Oct. 27 at 7 p.m. on Channel 9, KTPX, but has been postponed in order to show the final game of the World Series. Elvia G. Hernandez, executive director of MHCC, urged members to watch the documentary and get involved.

Also attending the banquet was Paula Montoya, a member of Gov. Mark White's Good Neighbor Commission. The commissioner presented Lillian Wallis with the Good Neighbor Award, only the third to be presented. Wallis was honored for her efforts to aid victims of the earthquake in Mexico City. Gov. White was unable to make the presentation personally, but he sent a letter with Montoya, stating that he "was delighted to hear of your selection," and that her efforts to get supplies and rescue equipment to Mexico City "exemplifies the term good neighbor."

MHCC president Roger Robles listed some of the chamber's accomplishments, such as awarding two $1,000 scholarships to Lee High School and Midland High School students, sponsoring the first annual Ethnic Folk Festival, the July trip to Chihuahua and Parral, Mexico, the naming of Jose Cuevas Jr. as state Hispanic Businessman of the Year, and the awarding of $139,000 to the chamber's Eastside Economic Development Task Force for a revolving loan fund. "For these and other things, you should be proud of the chamber. United we can take our place as reponsible citizens."

IPAA: Outlook still grim

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

DALLAS — The Independent Petroleum Association of America, holding its 1986 annual meeting here, painted a picture of a deteriorating oil and gas industry, increased demand for petroleum products and other energy forms, and a continued increase in imported crude oil.

Regarded as one of the most reliable forecasts of economic activity for the oil industry, a report by the IPAA supply and demand committee said crude oil production would drop 2.3 percent in 1986 to 8.8 million barrels daily, following four consecutive years of growth. The 1987 projection offers even less hope, with production predicted to drop 3 percent from 8.8 million barrels daily to 8.5 million.

At the same time demand for petroleum products is expected slow its rate of increase. In 1986, demand was up 2.6 percent, but in 1987, industry experts predict it will be only 1.2 percent.

As a result of falling production and increase in demand, crude oil imports will continue to rise in 1987, following a jump of 900,000 barrels per day this year. In 1987 imports are expected to stand at 6.1 million barrels per day, accounting for 36 percent of total U.S. supplies. It will mean a 30 percent increase in oil imports in the last two years.

One bright note for oilmen came with the forecast for an increase in natural gas consumption, which many feel could help dissipate the 3 trillion cubic feet in excess capacity in the natural gas market. Despite a 5 percent drop in natural gas consumption this year, the report predicts consumption will increase 1.7 percent in 1987. This coincides with an overall 2 percent increase in total energy consumption next year.

The report said real growth in the U.S. economy would be restrained by recessionary conditions in the oil and gas industry and would only post a 2.6 percent growth in 1986. Real growth, measured by the gross national production (GNP), will be only slightly better in 1987 at 2.7 percent.

In examining the plight of the oil and gas industry, the cost study committee of the IPAA reported on the severe and continued deterioration of the oil and gas industry as well. Their report noted:

- A 40 percent decrease in oil country goods supplied,
- A 50 percent drop in well completions in the first 9 months of 1986,
- A 30 percent fall in drilling costs,
- A $5 drop for acquisition costs for proven reserves in the ground that will probably go lower before year-end,
- An average rig count of 955 for the year, that includes first of the year highs and will probably average 850 in 1987 with lows near 700 and a top at 1,000.

Despite lower costs for reserves, drilling and equipment, operators have not been able to generate cash to take advantage of the lower prices, concludes IPAA.

Ben Crenshaw
...wins a shortie

Crenshaw triumphs

SAN ANTONIO — Ben Crenshaw's 6-under-par 64—196 beat Payne Stewart by one stroke in the storm-shortened, 54-hole Vantage Golf Championship. The scheduled 36-hole, two-round finish Sunday was reduced to one round by a thunderstorm that hit the Oak Hills Country Club course shortly after Crenshaw and Stewart had completed 18 holes.

The victory was the 12th of Crenshaw's career and his second of the season. Stewart was a runner-up for the third time this season and saw his Texas jinx continue.

This was the fourth time in three seasons Stewart had been in position to win a Texas tournament and missed. He lost sudden-death playoffs in the Colonial at Fort Worth this year and in 1984, and lost a playoff for the Byron Nelson Classic title in 1985...

Seko Windy winner

CHICAGO — Japan's Toshihiko Seko outdueled Ahmed Saleh of Djibouti over the final three miles to win the America's Marathon-Chicago in a personal-best 2 hours, 8 minutes, 27 seconds for his second marathon victory of the year. Norway's Ingrid Kristiansen, the fastest women's marathoner in history, was the first women's finisher, in a disappointing 2:27:08, much slower than her world-best of 2:21:06...

Fifth for Crampton

ROSWELL, Ga. — Bruce Crampton became the PGA Senior Tour's first five-time winner this year, firing a 71—136 in win the rain-plagued Pepsi Senior Challenge by a stroke over Gary Player. Two shots off the pace was Jim Ferree, 70—138. Bob Charles, Art Wall and Butch Baird tied for fourth at 141....

Jaguar takes first

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Bob Tullius and Chip Robinson combined to win the attrition-filled Eastern Airlines 3-Hour IMSA Camel GT sports car race in a Jaguar XJR-7 prototype. The two came back after falling behind a full lap because of an off-course excursion by Tullius with about 45 minutes remaining in the race at Daytona International Speedway.

Tullius, 49, slid the car about 100 yards across the bumpy infield grass but was able to continue. A flat tire forced a pit stop, though, and the other team Jaguar, shared by Brian Redman and Hurley Haywood, moved a full lap ahead. Minutes later, the Jaguar driven by Redman suddenly slowed and came into the pits, where it was retired with a broken axle and throttle linkage...

Sox loss joins Series nightmares

By GEORGE VECSEY
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — In New England, it will always be The Schiraldi-Stanley-Buckner Game, just as the fourth game of the 1941 World Series will always be the Casey-Owen Game for Brooklyn Dodger fans. But the epic sixth game of this World Series could also be labeled The McNamara Game, after the Red Sox manager, who declined to replace a hobbling first baseman with a two-run lead.

The seventh game, rained out Sunday night, will take care of itself Monday evening or whenever. Met and Red Sox fans will forever see the wild pitch by Bob Stanley and the error by Bill Buckner, allowing the Mets to tie and win the sixth game early Sunday morning.

This 6-5 victory will always be one of the extraordinary moments in New York baseball: one out from elimination, three singles, a wild pitch and a grotesque error by a valiant, injured athlete, and then the fans lining the field, screaming to play the seventh game right then and there.

Everybody who was there, everybody who watched on television, will always see the wild pitch making Mookie Wilson skip rope, with Kevin Mitchell running home in disbelief. Then they will see the wobbly little grounder, with a mind of its own, slither past the damaged legs of Buckner as a stunned Ray Knight scored the winning run.

THE LONG-suffering New England fans will always debate why John McNamara had a wounded first baseman in position to commit a physical error that could cost a World Series. There is also room to honor the Mets for refusing to give in to this clawing, vertigo-inducing, gravity-shifting nightmare, with the season slipping away.

In this century, New York has seen its share of abrupt, brutal turnarounds. In 1908, Fred Merkle of the Giants never touched second base on an apparent game winning single, costing his team a game — and, a few days later, the pennant.

In 1912, the Giants lost the last game of the World Series after Fred Snodgrass muffed a fly in the bottom of the 10th. They lost to the Red Sox, by the way — this was before Harry Frazee incurred the Curse of Babe Ruth by selling the slugging pitcher to the Yankees early in 1920.

In 1941, Hugh Casey's final strike to Tommy Henrich got past Mickey Owen, costing the Dodgers the fourth game of the Series. Owen insists to this day that the pitch was not a spitball. In 1951, Bobby Thomson's home run won the National League playoff for the Giants.

THIS GAME belongs in that category. Stanley, one of the stars of the ill-fated 1978 team that was Bucky Dent-ed, replaced Calvin Schiraldi and threw the wild pitch that tied the game. Then Stanley did his job: inducing Wilson to hit a weak grounder toward Buckner, whose damaged ligaments make his running and fielding painful to watch.

The Mets, for reasons they cannot explain, have not bunted on Buckner, even though playing on grass fields. This time Buckner could not bend far enough to stop the ball, and the game got away.

Why in the world was he playing with a 5-3 lead going into the bottom of the 10th? In three games in the Series, McNamara had sent in Dave Stapleton to run and play first base in the late innings. This time McNamara didn't do it.

"Normally with Buckner, we pinch run for him," McNamara said. "We didn't have to tonight, and he has very good hands."

MANAGERS ARE paid to make defensive substitutions with a lead in the last inning. The brave Buckner should never have been allowed out on the field.

Dave Johnson of the Mets had to take more chances because he was behind almost the whole game. The Mets' victory was a triumph of stubbornness. Let us count the ways:

1. Bob Ojeda gave up a run in each of the first two innings, yet never gave in to despair and clamped down on his former teammates for the next four innings.

2. Darryl Strawberry stole two bases, one to set up the two-run rally in the fifth. He also patrolled right field perfectly, setting up his manager for an immense second guess when Johnson removed Strawberry in a lineup switch in the ninth.

3. Ray Knight, who was devastated when he was benched in the second game, never let it affect his game, smacking a vicious run-scoring single for the first hit off Roger Clemens.

Cowboys spoil Stallings return

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

IRVING (AP) — Dallas quarterback Danny White, who was starting for the first time in a month, and Herschel Walker made it a lousy homecoming for St. Louis Coach Gene Stallings.

The Cowboys used White's two touchdown passes and Walker's 120 yards rushing and two touchdowns en route to a 37-6 victory over the Cardinals Sunday.

Stallings was an assistant under Dallas Coach Tom Landry for 14 years and it was his first appearance in Texas Stadium as an NFL head coach. Landry had given his former pupil a 31-7 losing lesson when the two teams met in St. Louis last month.

"It was nice being back in Texas Stadium again, but I didn't like the result one bit," Stallings said. "We just got whipped and we don't have any excuses. The Cowboys are even a better team now than the one we played earlier. Danny White was good and Walker really helps their offense."

Landry said he was concerned going into the game.

"Anytime you beat a team like we did the first time, you normally have a rough time the second time around," he said. "I thought this game would be tight. St. Louis has a lot of injuries. I felt sorry for Gene. He's gone through a lot this year.

He added that "Gene's a good coach. He just doesn't have it going for him."

"We are at the halfway point and 6-2 is very good," Landry said. "I thought Danny played very well after being rusty from missing so many games. He made some great throws. I'm glad we could rest him in the second half. He's still only about 95 percent with all the injuries he's had."

White admitted he wasn't perfect on his comeback Sunday.

"I did pretty well, but practice is a lot different than being in a game," White said. "I missed some wide-open receivers."

Landry said he started White "because he needs the work. We've got the (New York) Giants coming up Sunday and we'll need him. He made enough good decisions today to score a lot of points."

Dallas increased its record to 6-2, one-half game behind Washington in the NFC, while the Cardinals dropped to 1-7.

White played only in the first half, throwing a 36-yard touchdown pass to rookie Mike Sherrard and a 20-yard scoring toss to Tony Hill as Dallas rolled to a 27-6 halftime lead.

White aggravated a groin injury and also suffered a lacerated chin, so Dallas Coach Tom Landry decided not to risk him in the second half.

Walker, starting at tailback because of Tony Dorsett's bruised knee, scored on touchdown runs of 19 and four yards and got his first 100-yard rushing day in the NFL. He ran for 120 yards on 25 carries and caught four passes for 37 yards.

It was the first time a Dallas running back other than Dorsett had rushed for 100 yards since Robert Newhouse did it against St. Louis in 1979.

Dallas scored on seven of its first eight possessions against the Cardinals, who lost linebacker E.J. Junior with a bruised knee in the first period.

It was Dallas' 100th victory in Texas Stadium and 13th in 15 games against the Cardinals here. Dallas defeated St. Louis 31-7 on Sept. 29 and now leads the series 31-17-1.

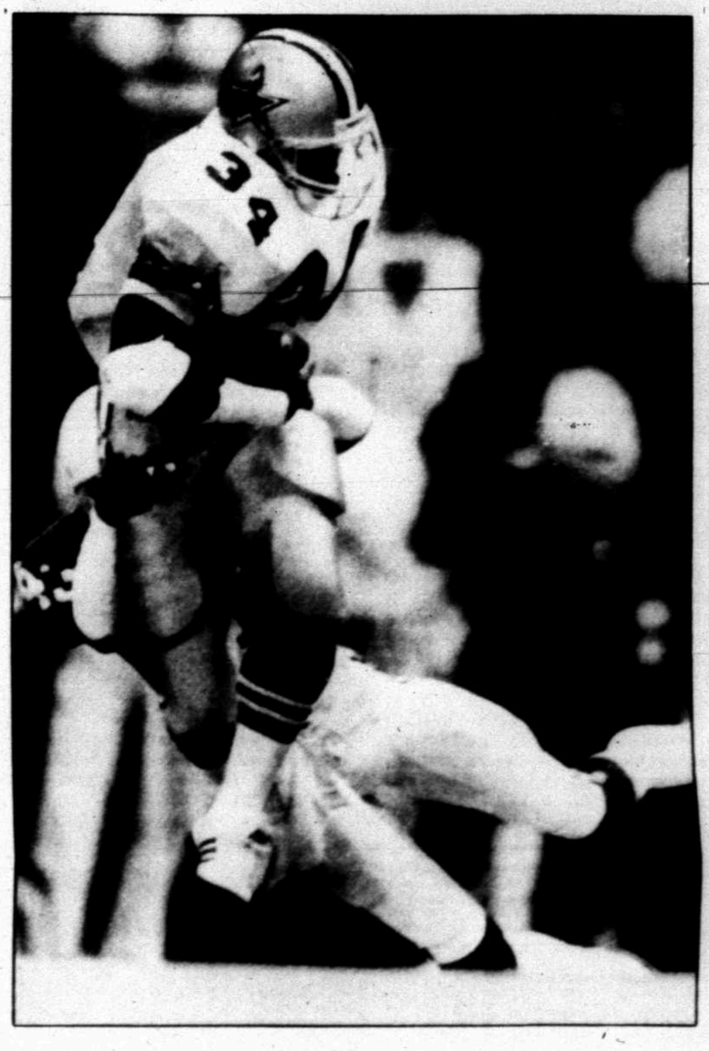

Dallas scored on five of six possessions in the first half.

The Cowboys drove 42 and 41 yards for field goals of 44 and 43 yards by Rafael Septien in the first quarter. Sherrard made a diving catch of a 40-yard White pass to set up the second field goal.

After John Lee kicked a 35-yard field goal for the Cardinals, White took Dallas 73 yards in seven plays. Sherrard beat St. Louis defender Wayne Smith for the 36-yard touchdown reception.

Dallas went 61 yards in eight plays with a 15-yard White-to-Doug Cosbie toss, setting up Walker's 19-yard scoring run.

World Series pressure builds with delay

By MURRAY CHASS
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The pressure period that builds throughout the World Series and peaks with the seventh game gained an extra 24 hours last night when the decisive game between the Mets and the Boston Red Sox was rained out and rescheduled for 8:10 p.m. Monday.

The extra rest could benefit some players, especially Ron Darling, the Mets' starting pitcher, who would have been pitching with three days of rest instead of his customary four. However, the wet wait also could heighten the tension that exists in players at such a critical time.

Darrell Johnson, who managed the Boston Red Sox the last time they played the seventh game of a World Series, was talking recently about seventh-game pressure.

"The manager can't really say anything to the players before the game," said Johnson, now a minor league official for the Mets who scouted the Red Sox. "You can't point a finger at someone and say relax. Each player does what he has to do. You just hope they don't get higher than their peak of performance. It comes down to don't do more than you're capable of doing." Or less.

A COUPLE of veteran members of the Red Sox did less than they were capable of doing in the 10th inning of Saturday night's sixth game, and that is why the Mets and the Red Sox have a seventh game to play.

In the pattern that has clearly developed in baseball's postseason encounters this year, teams have reached the threshold of victory and stumbled fatally in circumstances they would easily handle at other times.

Perhaps a pitcher legitimately throws a poor pitch; perhaps a fielder fumbles a ground ball without help from his psyche. Often, however, uncharacteristic mistakes occur because players succumb to the pressure of the moment.

Bob Stanley, Boston's veteran relief pitcher, had thrown only one wild pitch in 94 innings this year when he entered Saturday night's game in the 10th inning with two out, Mets at first and third and the Red Sox ahead, 5-4.

"Usually, I don't throw a wild pitch in that situation," Stanley said. "But I made a mistake and we lost. It was a dream for me to be in there. It's every pitcher's dream to be on the mound for the last out of the World Series. But it didn't come out the right way."

IN THE National League pennant playoff, the Houston Astros led the Mets in the sixth game, 3-0, entering the ninth inning. Bob Knepper needed only three more outs, and the Astros would be in the seventh and final game, playing behind Mike Scott, their brilliant pitcher, who had already stymied the Mets twice. Knepper, though, never got the three outs, the Mets scored three runs, and seven innings later they had won the game and the pennant.

In the American League playoff, the California Angels were one strike away from bringing Gene Mauch his first pennant in 25 years of managing. They led the Red Sox, 5-4, and Donnie Moore, their No. 1 relief pitcher, had two strikes on Dave Henderson. But Henderson hit a home run, and the Red Sox went on to win that game, the next two and the pennant.

Henderson hit a home run Saturday night, too, and it helped the Red Sox take a 5-3 lead into the last half of the 10th inning. The Red Sox led in the Series, three games to two, so three more outs would bring them their first World Series championship since 1918. In three intervening World Series — in 1946, 1967 and 1975 — the Red Sox had lost the seventh game.

NOW, HOWEVER, they were in position to avoid the seventh game, and Calvin Schiraldi strengthened their position by retiring the first two batters. But not long afterward, Schiraldi was sitting in front of his locker, saying: "We should've won this game. There's no way I should be talking now about a loss. It's very hard to believe this happened."

Lions make bid for No. 1

Alabama figured to gain more by a victory largely because it had traversed a more arduous road to reach the showdown of unbeatens at Tuscaloosa Saturday.

A Penn State victory, it was reasoned by the astute, would carry less impact on the national rankings because of the Lions' "suspect" schedule, teams like Syracuse, Temple, West Virginia, Cincinnati and Rutgers and East Carolina.

These aren't teams the networks squabble over when it comes to lining up TV attractions to captivate Nielsen points.

Of course, no one expected Penn State, even in victory, to do it as impressively.

The Lions, it was conceded, probably were bigger, stronger and more physical, but Alabama would make up for it by blinding State's cumbersome operatives with its quickness and speed and dazzling the Lions with their sleight of hand abilities at the skill positions.

As things turned out, it was no contest. State not only enjoyed physical dominance, but had a big edge at the skill positions.

As a result, Joe Paterno once again finds himself in the midst of the battle for the No. 1 bauble that has proven so elusive in the past.

State will climb in this week's poll, but with Alabama safely behind, the toughest part of the schedule lies ahead Maryland, Notre Dame and Pittsburgh, all-emotionally charged assignments.

SOME SAID it wouldn't really matter what Texas did against archriv al Texas A&M in the season's final game.

"Let's face it, SMU will drive the last nail, if it's still necessary, in Coach Fred Akers' Austin coaching coffin."

After all, SMU loomed last week as the final serious obstacle to a Texas A&M repeat as SWC champion, although that's a risky assumption in a league with the SWC's track record.

A&M also has Arkansas left and, well, we hestitate to mention it, but Texas as well.

It took a field goal in the final 16 seconds to give Texas its win over SMU, but Akers is still alive, if less than well.

AT TIMES it looks like something you might see at Angel Stadium after an all-night busride from Beaumont or Jackson.

If you are going to blow a World Series, you serve up a home run ball to Bill Mazeroski, watch Reggie Jackson knock three out of the park in the same game or maybe Don Larsen will throw a perfect game.

You don't flush it down the drain with a wild pitch and a game-legged first baseman who more than once in the post-season jousting has demonstrated difficulty bending over for ground balls or futilely stiff-legging pop ups down the line.

In this statistic-oriented sport, it's a wonder someone hasn't kept book on how many extra innings Bill Buckner's infirmities have given the opposition.

In fact, you've got to wonder what Buckner was even doing in the lineup at that hour....two out in the 10th with the Red Sox trying to protect a lead.

Texas League baseball at its worst, perhaps, but it still adds up to suspenseful excitement.

I mean, the way these guys play, anything can happen.

Permian is over, now it's Bobcats

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Just when you thought you had seen a season's worth of football in Midland Lee's 24-14 victory over No. 2 ranked Odessa Permian last Friday, District 4-5A belts you between the eyes with a Lee-San Angelo matchup.

The Lee-Permian game was tabbed as the Game of the Week in the state. The Lee-San Angelo outing in San Angelo this week will surely get equal billing.

The AP high school rankings will not come out until Tuesday, but San Angelo and Lee are both expected to own Top 10 rankings when the new poll is released. It is possible that Permian will also be in the Top 10.

San Angelo was ranked No. 6 in the state last week and had a 24-7 win over Abilene Cooper without starting quarterback Doug Bonds. Lee has not had an appearance in the Top 10 this year, but its perfect 7-0 record and a victory over No. 2 should be enough to vault the Rebels into the Top 10.

In terms of importance, this week's Rebel-Bobcat matchup could be even more important than the emotionally charged Lee-Permian game.

Why? Well, it's pretty simple if you're looking from the Lee perspective. A Lee victory would vault the Rebels into the state playoffs for the fourth consecutive year. It would also put the Rebels into the playoffs as the top-seeded district team, allowing them to play a district runnerup in the bi-district round of the playoffs. Lee has entered the playoffs as the runnerup the last three years, having to play another district champion in the bi-district round.

A win over San Angelo would also insure the Rebels of at least a district co-championship, regardless of what Lee does against Abilene High next week. And since the Rebels would have beaten both San Angelo and Permian, they would be regarded as the No. 1 district seed.

San Angelo, however, could beat both Lee and Permian in the last two games to win the district championship outright, forcing Lee back into a must win situation against Abilene High.

This one is big in terms of playoff berths and that's what teams play for each year.

Lee fans are expected to migrate to San Angelo in droves Friday. Tickets for the game will go on sale to season ticket holders Tuesday at the Memorial Stadium ticket office at 8 a.m. The general public will be allowed to buy tickets from 8 a.m. Wednesday until noon Friday during regular office hours.

Gil Bartosh, Midland athletic director, expects that there will be plenty of tickets available for all who wish to attend the game.

Meanwhile, Midland High will return to action after an open date and the Bulldogs, too, have an important date with Odessa High at Memorial Stadium Friday at 8 p.m.

MHS is 0-4 in league play and Odessa High is 0-5. If OHS loses, the Bronchos will finish in last place at 0-6. If the Bulldogs lose, they would have to settle for at least a share of the basement. The Bulldogs still have a shot at fourth place with wins the final two weeks.

While Lee and San Angelo are playing for playoff berths, you can bet that OHS and MHS will be geared for an all-out effort in this one, despite the records. No one likes to finish last and that sometimes makes "pride games" the most exciting of the year.

Prep Game of Week: Midland Lee-San Angelo

PRESSURE

Players never would acknowledge being affected by the pressure; they have too much ego and too much pride for that. Sometimes they can be affected and not even realize it. They think they are playing naturally, but something is off and it creeps into their play.

In the case of the Red Sox, though, perhaps it is history that finally has overtaken them. Their history is dotted with collapses and big-game losses — those three seventh-game World Series, for example, and the loss in the 1978 playoff with the Yankees for the division title.

"I don't know nothin' about history," John McNamara, the Boston manager, said after the game, "and I don't want to hear anything about choking or any of that junk." Yet he added: "We needed just one out and didn't do it. I guess I can compare it to what happened with us in California."

ROGER CLEMENS, who pitched seven innings for the Red Sox, echoed his manager's thoughts about the California comparison and said: "I guess it wasn't meant to be tonight. All we can do is shake our heads and try again tomorrow."

The Angels, of course, tried but failed in the last two games with the Red Sox. One veteran player acknowledged after the pennant playoff that once the Angels squandered away the fifth game, he knew they would not win one of the last two games.

West Texas in LSC lead

ABILENE (AP) — West Texas State took over the top spot in Lone Star Conference football with a 49-19 victory over league rival East Texas State in Canyon.

The Buffaloes (4-4, 3-0) hold a slim half-game lead over the LSC's two ranked teams, Texas A&I (7-0, 2-0) and Abilene Christian (5-1, 2-0). And two of the unbeatens, Texas A&I and West Texas State, will clash Saturday night in Kingsville in one of the top college division games in the nation this week.

Texas A&I won its 12th straight game Saturday with a 38-17 non-conference verdict over Central State (Okla.) in Kingsville, and Abilene Christian knocked Angelo State (4-4, 1-2) out of contention with a convincing 45-13 triumph in its homecoming game in Abilene.

Also, in a battle to escape the cellar for two 0-2 teams, Eastern New Mexico (6-2, 1-2) dumped Howard Payne 41-10 in Portales. It was the 12th straight loss for the Yellow Jackets (0-7, 0-3).

WTSU quarterback Tod Mayfield, the league's passing and total offense leader, threw for 340 yards and two touchdowns Saturday, breaking the LSC record for pass completions in a season by raising his total to 229. Running back J.R. Compton also scored twice for the Buffaloes, who had 539 yards of total offense and 30 first downs.

Defensive back Aaron Muehlstein scored twice for East Texas State on a 98-yard kickoff return and 38-yard return of an interception. He's the LSC interception leader with five, including two for touchdowns.

WTSU wide receiver Stan Carraway also topped the LSC record for catches with his 68th of the season.

In Abilene, four was the lucky number for ACU. Rex Lamberti threw four touchdown passes, the Wildcat secondary picked off four passes and Mark Turner kicked four field goals in the Wildcats' big 45-13 win over Angelo State.

Edward Bane returned one of ACU's four interceptions 15 yards for a touchdown. It was the most points given up by the Ram defense in five years.

Raiders await revived 'Horns

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

With Texas upsetting SMU and TCU appearing for a time to be on the verge of pulling the rug from under Baylor, Texas Tech had to be frantic up in Lubbock.

Here it was Upset Saturday and Tech had the day off. When the smoke had cleared, Baylor had averted disaster on a couple of cross-country Cody Carlson TD passes and Texas beat SMU at the wire on Jeff Ward's 40-yard field goal, 27-24.

Even so, Tech still owns the biggest upset of the Southwest Confernce season with that win over nationally-ranked Arkansas at Fayetteville.

Coming after season-destroying blowouts at the hands of Miami, Texas A&M and Baylor, the win over the Porkers put an new outlook on Coach David McWilliams first season in Raiderland.

IN VIEW of Texas' woes, folks were even kidding that Tech could wind up beating Arkansas and Texas in the same season and not win the SWC title. There was a time that beating Texas and Arkansas would have meant an almost automatic SWC title.

While no brass ring is in the offing for Tech, the Raiders have suddenly become a bowl possible and what happens Saturday in Lubbock could go a long way toward promoting a post-season trip for the Raiders.

Tech plays revived Texas before what is expected to be the usual Jones Stadium sellout for the Longhorns.

HOWEVER, the game that packs the most import toward settling the SWC title will send Texas A&M, a 45-10 winner of Rice, to Dallas against SMU, whose title aspirations were dealt a blow by the 27-24 loss to Texas.

Arkansas, 31-13 winner at Houston, plays host to Rice and snakebit TCU plays at Houston in a night game in which the Frogs and Cougars will be endeavoring to salvage something from a nothing seasons.

A&M Quarterback Kevin Murray had another spectacular day, completing 17 off 33 passes for 215 yards. His 26-yarder to Rod Harris in the second period broke the SWC record for career TD passes of 40 held jointly by A&M's Edd Hargett and SMU's Chuck Hixson.

Ward's FG was the 13th time in his 29 games as a Longhorn that his toe has made the difference for the Steers. Texas' defense meanwhile looked like a Texas defense, limiting SMU to 40 yards rushing.

Arkansas' Kendall Trainor kicked field goals of 22, 35 and 51 yards for the Hogs, but an ankle injury to Quarterback Greg Thomas dampened some of the post-game celebrating.

AFTER A couple of controversial calls killed TCU threats, Carlson uncorked a 72-yard TD pass to John Simpson and an 86-yarder to Derrick McAdoo in the final period to repel the Horned Frogs' upset bid.

Texas' win came after losses to Oklahoma and Arkansas while Tech Saturday will be coming off wins over Arkansas and Rice.

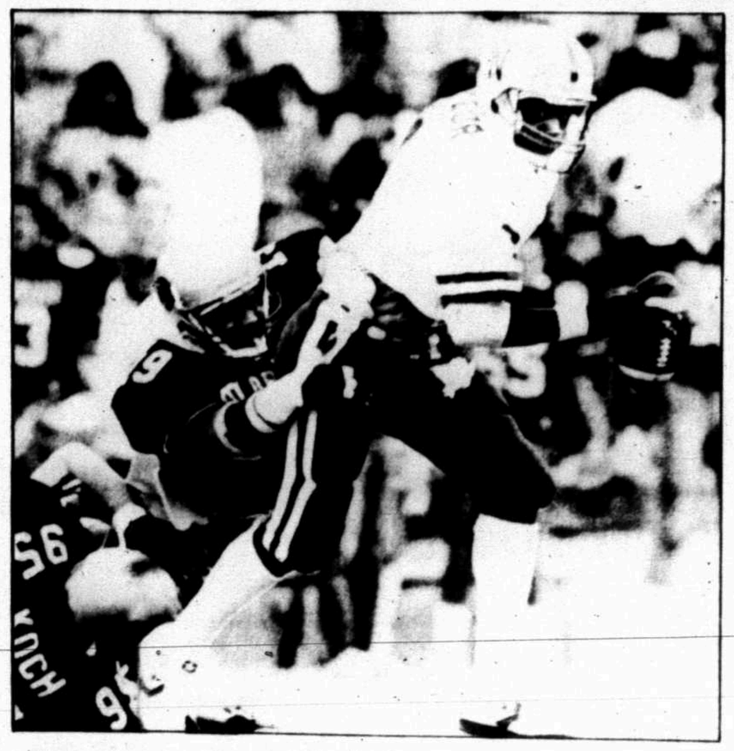

With a 3-3 record and only one SWC loss, Texas, despite the controversy over Akers' future, is still in the hunt and as far as Tech is concerned, looks as ugly as ever.

With Steve Pelluer at quarterback, Dallas opened the second half with an 86-yard drive climaxed by Walker's 4-yard scoring run.

LONGEST TOUCHDOWN — Cody Carlson's 86 yard touchdown pass to Derrick McAdoo for the Baylor Bears was the third longest in SWC history. Carlson also had a 72 yard scoring pass.

PONIES KICKED AGAIN — Every time Texas has defeated Southern Methodist during Jeff Ward's career the Longhorn placekicker has provided the difference, including his 40-yarder with 16 seconds left.

RECORD TIME — Texas A&M's Kevin Murray now has 41 touchdown passes, a career record for the SWC. Murray has another year of eligibility.

WHAT WAS THAT CALL? — TCU was given a 5-yard penalty for disconcerting signals against Baylor. Officials though the Frogs were trying to confuse the snap count for the Bears. "I've never seen that called," said TCU Coach Jim Wacker.

STREAKING — Texas A&M is just one victory short of tying the all-time record of 14 straight wins at Kyle Field.

12TH MAN — Derrick Goolsby's 39-yard return for Rice against A&M was the longest in the three-year history of the 12th Man Kickoff Team composed of volunteers from the student body.

The Edmonton Oilers, winners of six of their first 10 games, are finding that the rest of the NHL might be catching up with them.

"The teams in this league have really improved," said Mark Messier, who scored the first Edmonton goal in a 3-2 victory over the Vancouver Canucks Sunday night. "We're not going to come in here and blow team out 9-0 anymore. We have to be patient and disciplined if things don't go well for us in the early going."

Flyers 4, North Stars 1

Philadelphia, which has not lost to Minnesota at the Spectrum since 1978, improved its season record to 7-1 with goals from four different

Bruins 6, Flames 0

Rookie goalie Bill Ranford stopped 43 shots for his first NHL shutout and visiting Boston scored twice in each period against Calgary.

Blackhawks 8, Jets 4

Both of Fraser's goals came in the third period, while Savard scored his third and fourth goals of the season in the first and second periods.

Series, NFL clash

By HOWARD ULMAN

NEW YORK (AP) — The sports world gets the big matchup tonight.

Not just Mets and Red Sox in the seventh game of the World Series. Not just NFL Giants and Redskins with first place in the NFC East at stake.

Both. Red Sox-Mets vs. Redskins-Giants, competing in prime time on different national television networks.

The postponement of Sunday night's Game 7 to decide whether New York or Boston would rule the baseball world sets up a head-to-head battle between NBC and ABC.

NBC's World Series pre-game show Monday night starts at 8 p.m. EST, one hour before ABC's telecast of the game between Washington, which leads the NFC East with a 6-1 record, and the New York Giants, who are one game behind the Redskins.

Baseball is a prohibitive favorite to win the ratings.

"We're talking about the seventh game of the World Series," Ken Schanzer, executive vice president of NBC Sports, said. "If you put the Super Bowl on against a prime-time baseball game, I suspect the Super Bowl would do a fairly good (ratings) number. Granted, the Redskins-Giants football game is a very good football game, but it's going against a seventh game of the World Series."

"Everybody loses," an ABC spokesman who asked not to be identified said. "It's the kind of thing where the sports fan loses because he is faced with a tough choice. Both networks lose because, obviously, the seventh game of the World Series will be viewed widely and negatively affect Monday night football," while other fans will choose the football game.

The fact that teams from New York, the nation's top television market, are in both games, adds an intriguing element.

Fans who like both the Giants and the Mets probably will watch the World Series game because of its greater significance.

Steelers surprise Bengals

Dolphins win one on road

Associated Press

The Pittsburgh Steelers won their first home game of the season and the Miami Dolphins, another struggling team, won for the first time on the road in Sunday's NFL action.

Playing their best football of the year, the Steelers surprised the favored Cincinnati Bengals 30-9 for their 100th victory at Three Rivers Stadium.

"This is the kind of game we've been needing for a long time," Pittsburgh offensive guard Craig Wolfley said, pointing to the Steelers' 1-6 start, their worst since 1969.

The Dolphins, meanwhile, held off the winless Indianapolis Colts 17-13 at the Hoosier Dome to make their record 3-5, one of their worst starts under Don Shula.

Washington visits the New York Giants in tonight's game.

Earnest Jackson and Walter Abercrombie ran for more than 100 yards each and Mark Malone returned from a two-week injury layoff to throw two touchdown passes as Pittsburgh beat Cincinnati.

Gary Anderson kicked three field goals as the Steelers won for the first time in four home games this season and ended a four-game losing streak against the Bengals.

Dolphins 17, Colts 13

Quarterback Dan Marino passed for 243 yards and a touchdown and Miami's John Offerdahl made a game-saving tackle at the Dolphins' 14-yard line in the closing seconds, preserving the victory over the Colts, 0-8.

It was the Dolphins' 13th straight victory over the Colts, the longest current string in the league.

The Colts, trailing 17-10 at halftime, pulled within four points midway through the final period on Dean Biasucci's 45-yard field goal, his second of the game.

Chiefs 27, Buccaneeers 20

Jeff Smith scored the go-ahead touchdown on a 32-yard run in the fourth quarter, lifting Kansas City over Tampa Bay. Smith's run, the Chiefs' longest scoring run of the season, answered Tampa Bay's 13-play, 80-yard touchdown drive that had pulled the Bucs even at 20-20 with 12:52 to go.

Bill Kenney, in his first start as the Chiefs' quarterback this season, hit two key passes in the winning drive.

Tampa Bay's James Wilder had scored on a 3-yard run to forge the 20-20 tie in a game which the Bucs led 13-10 at halftime.

Jets 28, Saints 23

Al Toon, the NFL's leading receiver, caught three touchdown passes from Ken O'Brien as the Jets won a club-record sixth straight game. New York built a 28-6 lead through three quarters and withstood New Orleans' 17-point final period to raise its record to 7-1 in the AFC East.

Ignoring a persistent rain, Toon, a second-year wide receiver from Wisconsin, scored on passes of 16, 62 and six yards. Toon had six catches for 101 yards, giving him 49 receptions this year.

Raiders 28, Oilers 17

Los Angeles quarterback Marc Wilson threw four touchdown passes, three to tight end Todd Christensen, and the Raider defense sacked Houston quarterback Warren Moon six times and intercepted four passes.

The Raiders won their fifth straight game after three straight losses and took advantage of the Oilers' first-half errors for a 21-7 lead at intermission. Moon was sacked twice, threw two interceptions, lost a fumble and had five passes tipped in the Oilers' error filled first half.

The Raiders played the game without their leading rusher, Marcus Allen, sidelined with an ankle injury. Rookie Napoleon McCallum subbed with 82 yards on 22 carries.

Chicago 13, Detroit 7

Linebacker Wilber Marshall's one-man sack, strip and 12-yard touchdown fumble return led Chicago over Detroit. Marshall, in one fell swoop, sacked quarterback Eric Hipple, forced a fumble, recovered and returned 12 yards for the Bears' only touchdown early in the first quarter.

Kevin Butler kicked two field goals, including a 27-yarder with 18 seconds remaining in the game.

Quarterback Jim McMahon completed 17 of 24 passes for 141 yards as the Bears ran their record to 7-1. He also helped set up Butler's 29-yard field goal with 10 seconds to play in the first half that gave Chicago a 10-0 lead.

Browns 23, Vikings 20

Matt Bahr's third field goal of the game, a 22-yarder with 1:46 to play, lifted Cleveland over Minnesota.

Cleveland rallied from a 17-3 halftime deficit and still trailed 20-10 after three quarters. But Curtis Dickey, who rushed for 105 yards, tied the game at 20-20 with a 17-yard touchdown run with 4:23 to play to set the stage for Bahr's winning field goal.

Bahr also had a career-long 52-yard field goal in the first quarter and a 19-yarder in the fourth.

Eagles 23, Chargers 7

Philadelphia's defense shut down the explosive San Diego offense and Paul McFadden kicked three field goals to trigger the Eagles over the Chargers in intermittent rain.

The Chargers, seventh in the 28-team league on total offense and averaging 22.7 points a game, gained 279 yards against the ever-improving "46 Defense" taught by Eagles Coach Buddy Ryan.

49ers 31, Packers 17

Ronnie Lott, the NFL's pass interception leader, picked off two Green Bay passes and returned one 55 yards for the go-ahead touchdown to pace San Francisco over the Packers.

Lott stepped in front of Green Bay wide receiver Phillip Epps and raced down the sideline to give San Francisco a 21-14 lead with 14:07 remaining.

Ray Wersching added a 27-yard field goal with 5:13 left, and Tory Nixon returned another interception 88 yards for the final touchdown with 33 seconds remaining, stopping Green Bay's final drive.

Patriots 23, Bills 3

Tony Franklin kicked three field goals and quarterback Tony Eason, returning from a two-week absence, keyed a ball-control New England offense to lead the Patriots past Buffalo.

Eason, who had been sidelined with a rib injury, scrambled for a career- and game-high 55 yards on four carries. The Patriots cruised to victory with 17 first-half points, scoring on a 2-yard run by Craig James, a 16-yard run by Robert Weathers and a 31-yard field goal by Franklin.

Rams 14, Falcons 7

Eric Dickerson continued on his record rushing pace and threw his first NFL touchdown pass, and linebacker Mark Jerue scored on a 22-yard interception return as the Rams beat Atlanta.

Dickerson gained 170 yards on 30 carries to surpass the 1,000-yard mark as the Rams avenged a 26-14 loss in Atlanta two weeks ago and took over first place in the NFC West.

Dickerson built his NFL-leading rushing yardage to 1,030 yards at the midpoint of this season.

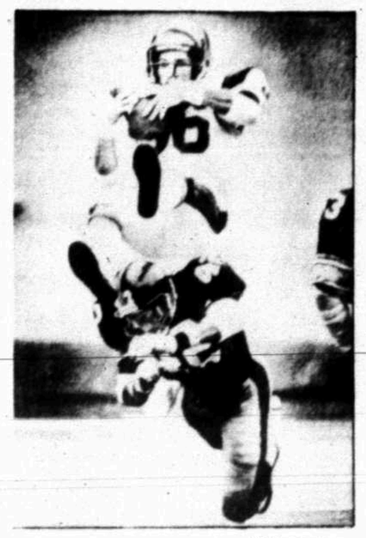

Broncos 20, Seahawks 13

John Elway passed for 321 yards, including a 34-yard touchdown pass to Vance Johnson on a flea-flicker play, and a grudging Denver defense yielded only two field goals until the closing minutes in the Broncos' victory over Seattle.

The triumph boosted the Broncos' record to 7-1 and gave them a two-game lead in the AFC West over Seattle, Kansas City and the Los Angeles Raiders, all 5-3.

The Broncos defense frustrated Seattle quarterback Dave Krieg, who completed only six of 16 passes for 26 yards and was sacked five times for 47 yards in losses. That resulted in a net passing yardage of minus-21 yards for Krieg before he left the game in the fourth quarter.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A1094 ♡J65 ♢AQJ982 ♣AQJ982
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Even with such a good hand and strong club suit, there is no reason to depart from standard practice. That requires you to bid a four-card major suit before rebidding a six-card minor if you can do so at the cheapest level. Bid one spade.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQ ♡KQJ10652 ♢9 ♣KQ5
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—While we can just construct a hand with one ace that partner might open, we would bet on his holding at least two. Therefore, we think this hand is perfectly suited to a Blackwood four no trump inquiry. We would then bid five or six hearts, or seven no trump, depending on how many aces partner shows.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J9 ♡KQ83 ♢KQJ ♣AKQ9
Partner opens the bidding with four hearts. What do you respond?
A.—Unless you and your partner have some methods of your own, you should pass. An opening preempt denies a hand that contains two aces. Any hand with a second ace and a suit good enough to bid at the four-level is strong enough to open with a one-bid.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK954 ♡8 ♢AK7 ♣AJ63
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Dble	2 ♣	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Partner's bid of two clubs shows a weak hand. However, you are so rich in controls that you can probably make a game opposite no more than six clubs headed by the queen and a well-placed singleton. Advise partner of this by jumping to five clubs.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ8742 ♡83 ♢J7 ♣1063
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	3 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Don't bid four spades—had partner wanted to hear from you, he would have doubled for takeout. You can expect him to have a running minor suit and a smattering of cards outside. Pass.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠9 ♡KQ76 ♢AKJ98 ♣542
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
3 ♣	4 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—West's preempt has made scientific investigation well-nigh impossible. However, partner should have at least a semi-solid seven-card spade suit and an outside ace for his jump, so we would gamble out six spades.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Auto racer Mario Andretti, anti-crime crusader David Toma and horseman Louis Guida are new members of the Italian-American Hall of Fame.

The three were inducted Sunday as the Hall of Fame gave its annual humanitarian award to Monsignor John Patrick Carroll-Abbing, founder and president of Boys' Town and Girls' Town of Italy.

Toma is a former Newark police officer and Guida is from Yardley, Pa.

"A number of Italian-Americans have made great contributions to this country and to the world, and they have not been given recognition," said Stephan P. Budassi of Trenton, national chairman of the Hall of Fame. "Our main function is to make certain the world knows of these people."

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Jonathan Frid, who portrayed vampire Barnabas Collins in television's "Dark Shadows," got a ghoulish welcome from fans who would like to raise the show from its filmworld grave.

About 1,000 people attended the fourth annual Dark Shadows Festival that ended Sunday, said festival spokesman Steve Randisi.

"Dark Shadows," once a top daytime attraction for ABC-TV, ran from 1966 through 1971, and now is in syndication.

In addition to the defanged Frid and other actors, the festival included presentations of rarely seen episodes, bloopers, a trivia contest, a costume competition and an auction of "Dark Shadows" memorabilia.

PEKING (AP) — Chinese children will be seeing lots of Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck, who have made their Chinese television debut.

Michael Eisner, chairman of the Walt Disney Co., said the half-hour Mickey and Donald show that made its debut Sunday night, will be aired weekly for two years under an agreement between Disney and China's CCTV calling for the two companies to share revenues from commercials.

Mickey and Donald got good reviews from some children. "Cartoons are my favorite program, but this is the most interesting," said 8-year-old Feng Shuo. His 12-year-old sister, Ye, added, "I liked the duck."

CCTV also has signed agreements with CBS to air the news program "60 Minutes," the series "Animal World" and various professional sports events.

NEW YORK (AP) — Bianca Jagger says she was "young, inexperienced and arrogant" during her marriage to rock star Mick Jagger, but that she's changed since.

"I don't need an overpowering, powerful, rich man to feel secure. I'd much rather have a man who is there for me, who really loves me, who is growing, who is real. And I'm willing to make compromises on freedom now," the 41-year-old said in an interview in the November issue of Vanity Fair.

She married Jagger in 1971 and has been on her own since 1979, but still has some good things to say about Jagger. "He does have a wonderful sense of humor that I can understand no matter what," she said. "I mean, he could be stabbing me in the back, but he can make me laugh while he does it."

Study: Majority of SDI contracts go to anti-missile states

By NORMAN BLACK

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 90 percent of the contracts awarded in fiscal 1985 and 1986 for the Strategic Defense Initiative went to contractors in states with senators who sit on the two key Senate committees that vote funds for the anti-missile defense program, a new study shows.

And most of these companies researching SDI, known popularly as "Star Wars," already are well-entrenched defense contractors, according to the study released Sunday by the Council on Economic Priorities.

"The companies that won the largest contracts to produce nuclear weapons in the last decade are the same ones winning the largest SDI contracts to make nuclear weapons obsolete in the next decade," wrote Rosy Nimroody, a national security analyst with the council.

Those defense contractors, in turn, are highly concentrated geographically, the study added. Almost 85 percent of the dollar value of SDI contracts has been awarded to contractors located in five states — California, New Mexico, Massachusetts, Alabama and Washington state.

At least 89 percent of the Star Wars contracts awarded in fiscal years 1985 and 1986 — or $4.56 billion — went to contractors located in states with representation on the Senate Armed Services Committee, which must authorize Star Wars funding, the study adds.

More than $196 million in additional contracts during those two years went to contractors in other states with representation on the defense subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

"It's pork barrel politics at work," said Alice Tepper Marlin, president of the council, which has issued several studies critical of the SDI, President Reagan's search for a high-tech shield against ballistic missiles.

"By linking the Strategic Defense Initiative program to the economies of states traditionally dependent on defense spending and represented on key congressional committees, the (Pentagon) can marshal support for a program despite its highly questionable strategic value and technical feasibility," the study said.

The New York-based research group, which specializes in national security, the environment and corporate social responsiblity, is completing work on a study, "Star Wars: The Economic Fallout." The book will be published next spring.

The study concluded that the top 20 contractors and laboratories have received awards totaling $5.7 billion since fiscal 1983, or 75 percent of the total $7.7 billion awarded.

The leading contractor to date is a government laboratory — the Energy Department's Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory in California, the study found. It has received contracts valued at $875 million.

In second place is the General Motors Corp., which last year acquired Hughes Aircraft. Thanks primarily to Hughes, GM has won SDI contracts totaling $612.7 million since fiscal 1983, the study stated.

GM is followed by the Lockheed Corp. with $580.5 million; the Boeing Corp. with $373.7 million; and TRW Inc. with $373.1 million.

The remainder of the top 20, in order, include EG&G Inc.; the McDonnell Douglas Corp.; MIT Lincoln Laboratory; the Los Alamos National Laboratory; the General Electric Co.; the Sandia National Laboratory; Rockwell International Corp.; Teledyne Inc.; Gencorp; the SDI Institute; Textron Inc.; LTV Corp.; Flow General; Raytheon Co.; and the Martin Marietta Corp.

If government and university laboratories are excluded from the listings, the top 20 corporations performing Star Wars research have won contracts worth $4.23 billion since fiscal 1983, or 55.1 percent of the total, the study added.

The administration initially planned to spend $26 billion on the program by 1990, although those plans have been trimmed by Congress.

Reagan requested more than $5.3 billion for the current fiscal year, but Congress authorized only about $3.5 billion.

From fiscal 1983 on, California led the SDI spending, gaining a total of $3.6 billion in contracts, the study said. It was followed by New Mexico, with $1.2 billion in total contracts; Massachusetts, $718.3 million; Alabama, $534.8 milllion; Washington, $402.7 million; Virginia, $258 million; Texas, $178.9 million; Colorado, $124.3 million; New York, $110.1 million; Florida, $75.5 million. lion; Pennsylvania, $41.1 million; Ohio, $35.4 mil-

Also, Maryland, $62.1 million; Utah, $46.7 million; Connecticut, $35.3 million; Minnesota, $35.2 million; Georgia, $28.2 million; New Jersey, $27.4 million; District of Columbia, $26.3 million; and Missouri, $18.4 million.

For fiscal 1985 and fiscal 1986, the study listed the following members of the Senate Armed Services Committee and the amounts their states received:

Pete Wilson, R-Calif. $2.5 billion; Jeff Bingaman, D-N.M., $729.3 million; Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., $593.2 million; Jeremiah Denton, R-Ala., $309.6 million; John Warner, R-Va., $199.6 million; Gary Hart, D-Colo., $79.1 million; Phil Gramm, R-Texas, $78.2 million; Sam Nunn, D-Ga., $25.2 million; Alan Dixon, D-Ill., $9.7 million; Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., $9.1 million; Dan Quayle, R-Ind., $2.9 million; William Cohen, R-Maine, $2.6 million; Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., $2.4 million; Carl Levin, D-Mich., $2.1 million; and the late John East, R-N.C., $350,800.

The study also listed the following members of the Senate Appropriations defense subcommittee and their states' SDI contracts in fiscal 1985 and fiscal 1986:

Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., $89.5 million; Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., $47.5 million; Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., $32.3 million; Jake Garn, R-Utah, $21.9 million; Jim Sasser, D-Tenn., $4.45 million; Warren Rudman, R-N.H., $2.4 million; Robert Kasten, R-Wis., and William Proxmire, D-Wis., $982,755; and Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, $215,000.

Killing of police officers said to be inevitable, 'they're opposition army'

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Two self-proclaimed revolutionaries charged with gunning down a state trooper say the killing of police officers is inevitable because they are soldiers in the opposing army.

"They're the first line of the enemy's defense," said Richard C. Williams, accused of being the trigger man. "They suppress revolutionaries. They do the bidding of the state, so they're an instrument of the state."

Williams, 39, of Beverly, Mass., and Thomas W. Manning, 40, of Boston are charged with murdering Trooper Philip Lamonaco after he stopped their car for speeding. Their trial, which they say is politically motivated, was to start today in Superior Court in Somerville.

Williams did not offer a denial when asked last week if he shot Lamonaco on Interstate 80 in northwestern New Jersey four days before Christmas 1981.

"Let's just say I'm guilty of no crimes," Williams told The Associated Press during an interview at the maximum-security Trenton State Prison.

Manning will testify that he shot Lamonaco in self-defense and that Williams was not present during the shooting, defense attorney William Kunstler told the The Daily Record of Morristown last week.

Prosecutors generally have declined to discuss the case.

"The people who did it and why they did it and who they did it to make it one of the most interesting law enforcement stories in the country," Attorney General W. Cary Edwards said in a recent interview. "There was no better trained professional...Lamonaco getting ambushed like that was tragic."

Both convicted armed robbers and bombers, Manning and Williams call themselves "anti-imperialist freedom fighters" and soldiers in the armed struggle to establish a socialist state.

In March, they were convicted of a bombing conspiracy with four other political radicals in federal court in New York. Manning was sentenced to 53 years in prison; Williams got 45 years.

After their New Jersey trial, they face trial in federal court in Boston on charges related to alleged attempts to overthrow the U.S. government.

Authorities say Williams, Manning, and Manning's wife Carol are members of the United Freedom Front and the Sam Melville-Jonathan Jackson Unit. The groups have been linked to bank robberies and have claimed responsibility for bombings along the East Coast.

Manning, who was on the FBI's 10 Most Wanted List, and Williams justify the use of violence to achieve their political goals.

Attacking police is warranted, Williams said, in a case where "someone was wanted by the law and wouldn't get a fair trial."

When Lamonaco was shot down, Manning was wanted on a federal warrant for bank robbery in Portland, Maine. Williams was wanted for a parole violation in Massachusetts.

A law officer doesn't have to fire the first shot, Williams said, because "if you wait for somebody to throw the first punch, you might not get the chance to throw the second."

But, he said, "It isn't like we're advocating people should go out and kill cops. That's not what we're about."

Flight 467 from Newark, N.J., slid off the end of the runway at Douglas Municipal airport in Charlotte N.C., and rested nose first on railroad tracks.

Cause of Peidmont crash hinges on closer look

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Officials investigating what caused a Piedmont Airlines jet to skid off a runway, injuring 34 people, say it will be several days before they finish examining the wreckage.

Ten officials of the National Transportation Safety Board arrived in Charlotte on Sunday to look into the accident, which occurred at 8:09 p.m. Saturday at Charlotte-Douglas International Airport.

"We're treating it as a major accident," said Dr. John Lauber, a member of the team.

Witnesses said Flight 467 touched down, ran off the end of the runway, ripped through a fence and slid about 100 yards through a wet field before crashing into a railroad track's gravel embankment.

NATION IN BRIEF

Poll: Women found more compassionate than men

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly two-thirds of Americans find women are more compassionate than men, but slightly more than a third of the people said they would not vote for a woman for president, according to a nationwide poll.

The telephone poll conducted by the Roper Organization for U.S. News and World Report said 71 percent of those polled considered women as qualified for political office as men and 13 percent thought women are better qualified.

The survey reported Saturday was based on interviews with 1,020 adults.

The magazine said there was little difference in the views of each sex.

Twelve percent said they did not think women were as qualified as men to hold political office, and 36 percent said they would not vote for a female presidential candidate.

Women were judged more compassionate by 63 percent while 11 percent said men were more compassionate.

The magazine said its poll has a 5 percent margin of error.

Student aid fraud eyed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Education is offering tips to loan officers and educators to help them spot fake applications for federal student aid.

"The purpose of this brochure is to stop the fraudulent use of student financial aid before it happens," said Secretary of Education William J. Bennett.

The department said Saturday it is sending out more than 27,000 "fraud alert" brochures that spell out the basic eligibility requirements for federal aid and provide a checklist of telltale signs of a phony application.

It advises the schools and banks that handle applications for grants or loans to watch for erasures or corrections on the student's name, Social Security number and address. It also says they should be wary of anyone who uses a post office box or "in care of" addresses, and those who request a "rush" application process.

It also gives a tollfree hotline for bankers or student financial aid officers to call when they come upon a case of suspected fraud: 1-800-MIS-USED.

CIA looks at policemen

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA has asked police chiefs in 18 cities to look among their own ranks for possible recruits for the agency's intelligence and anti-terrorism programs, a spokeswoman said.

"We're always looking for good people," CIA spokeswoman Kathy. Pherson said Sunday. "We have more than enough applications. But the trick is finding the people with the skills."

The CIA and FBI briefed the police chiefs last July about their intelligence and counterterrorism programs, she said. During the session, the CIA asked the police chiefs to determine if anyone in their departments was interested in working for the intelligence agency.

She said that the CIA does a lot of its recruiting on college campuses that offer international studies programs because "students there have the background we're looking for." She said the agency also is interested in recruiting police officers because "they have some of the skills we're looking for."

Debris analyzed in attempt to find cause of duplex fire

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Authorities will analyze samples of debris in an attempt to determine the cause of a weekend duplex fire that killed eight people, five of them children, a fire investigator says.

But William Fust, head of the fire department's arson investigation unit, said evidence that could have provided a clue might have been consumed in the fire.

Officials suspect that the fire was caused by careless smoking or children playing with matches, but arson hasn't been ruled out.

The fire broke out Saturday, apparently near a couch. The north Minneapolis building was without working smoke detectors, Fust said.

Those killed, all on the main floor of the duplex, were identified as Joyce Ruff, 22; her sons Keven, 1, and Bryant, 4; her brother, Homer Ruff, 26; and her three nephews, James Christopher Ruff, 7; Sean Ruff, 5; and Dwane Ruff, 3.

Also killed was Judith Westfall, 23, who rented a room from Joyce Ruff.

Another main floor resident, Albert Bradford, 35, remained in critical condition Sunday in the burn unit of Hennepin County Medical Center.

Abigail Patton, 23, was in satisfactory condition with a broken right wrist and dislocated hip. She jumped 20 feet to the ground after ripping a screen from a second-story window and throwing her four children to safety.

Three of her children were hurt; 6-year-old French suffered a broken arm, 3-year-old Amanda had a broken wrist and Amanda's twin, Romanda, was slightly injured. Eleven-month-old Randall was uninjured.

All four were released Sunday and were staying with relatives, said Autumn Alexander of the American Red Cross.

Cheryl Ruff, mother of three of the children who died in the fire, had left her sons with her sister earlier in the week so she could visit relatives in Illinois. She was hospitalized for shock Saturday afternoon after returning to Minneapolis.

Weekend fires elsewhere killed nine children.

In Cleveland, three children were killed and three children were injured in a house fire Saturday. Also injured was a man who tried to save the children.

The six children were all related, and were by themselves in the wood-frame house when the fire broke out, battalion Fire Chief James Pahler said Sunday.

AUTOMOTIVE REPORT

Computer Plays Doctor to Cure "Sick" Robots

It takes more than a thermometer and a stethoscope to diagnose a problem in one of today's industrial robots, and more and more, engineers are using computers to help fix their under-the-weather machinery.

Robotics engineer Glen Jimmerson of Ford Motor Company finds errors in a robot's arm by answering a series of logic-based questions asked by a computer. Jimmerson responds here to a question concerning the position the robot's arm is most likely to be in when operating errors occur. The computer can then find the most likely source of the problem.

The cure? It may be as simple as a few drops of oil, but in any case, the computer won't suggest, "take two aspirin and call me in the morning."

Leasing New Cars Can Save You Money

Need a new car, but not a high monthly payment?
Lease may be the answer. Monthly leasing payments are generally lower than those required to buy a vehicle, and a large down payment is not necessary.
Other advantages:

- Customers can lease cars or trucks with more options than they could normally afford to buy under the company's standard retail plan.
- There are no depreciation worries. At the end of the lease period, the customer pays only for excess mileage and unreasonable wear and tear. A lease usually has a mileage allowance of 15,000 miles per year.
- Customers who include a purchase option in the lease agreement can buy their vehicles at the end of the lease. However, if a customer later does not want to purchase the vehicle at lease end, he is not required to do so.

LONG HUAL-Which would you prefer? A car that's economical, or a car that's dependable? The Ultimate Fuel Optimiser (UFO2), an experimental vehicle from Ford, recently traveled over 400 miles on a single liter of fuel. The UFO weighs just 57 pounds. Marve Gorham's 1957 Thunderbird may not get that kind of gas mileage, but that hasn't stopped him from driving his car over 711,000 miles. And his T-Bird is still flying.

New and Old Coast to Coast Travelers

A trip from New York to Los Angeles is about 3,000 miles. Driving the distance demands a car that's economical and dependable enough to make the long journey.

In a recent long-distance driving competition the Ultimate Fuel Optimiser vehicle (UFO) in the picture above proved it could make the trip on just two gallons of gas, when it traveled 400 miles on one liter of fuel.

While Marve Gorham's 1957 Thunderbird might take a few more fill-ups than the UFO, he's proven his vehicle is also up to the test. Gorham has logged enough miles on his 'Bird, 711,000 to complete the trip 237 times. Says Gorham, "Frequent oil changes and lots of freeway driving contributed to the car's longevity."
