Rostow resigns in face of arms agency shake-up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ousted U.S. arms control chief Eugene V. Rostow, citing "political and bureaucratic difficulties" within the Reagan administration, bid an emotional farewell today to his embattled disarmament agency.

The 69-year-old Rostow also urged support for his successor in the quest for an agreement with the Soviet Union to reduce the risks of nuclear war.

He said he apparently violated the diplomatic axiom to "above all, show no zeal." He told his assembled staff and agency employees that "you've won my affection."

Rostow resigned Wednesday under fire from President Reagan and a small group of conservative Republican senators, headed by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., who had already succeeded in stripping him of two close assistants, Robert Grey, his deputy director, and Norman Terrell.

Recalling the long history of jurisdictional disputes surrounding the small agency, Rostow said it had regained some of its strength after years of neglect.

However, he said, familiar political and bureaucratic divisions "now are manifest again."

Leaning on crutches required by recent hip surgery, Rostow entered the State Department auditorium to a standing ovation. He took no questions from reporters and was applauded by his staff again as he left the room.

Rostow praised Kenneth Adelman, who was named by President Reagan to succeed him, and said he was "sorry if I brought new turbulence into your life."

The shuffling of personnel in the agency is likely to broaden Secretary of State George P. Shultz's authority over it. Adelman, who has served as a deputy to U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, does not have Rostow's broad experience in government nor reputation as a veteran government official.

The 69-year-old Democrat submitted his resignation Wednesday in a letter to Reagan.

In a brief statement, he said coolly that "in recent days it has become clear that the president wished to make changes. In response to his request, I have tendered my resignation."

Rostow, who is returning to Yale law school to teach next semester, did not call on the president. In an exchange of letters with Reagan, he said he was leaving "for the reasons which Secretary of State Shultz has so kindly discussed with me."

Reagan, in announcing he was nominating Adelman, deputy to U.N. ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, to take Rostow's place, affirmed his commitment to arms control.

"I have no higher priority or higher purpose than to reduce the risk and the means of conflict," the president said.

Reagan said Rostow had served his and earlier administrations "with distinction and has played a key role in launching our comprehensive arms reduction proposals."

Senate Republican leader Howard Baker of Tennessee said he was not surprised by Rostow's departure. "He has been a distinguished public servant and private citizen and no doubt will continue to contribute," Baker said.

Two other senators, Democrat Paul Tsongas of Massachusetts and Republican Larry Pressler of South Dakota, reacted sharply.

"One really has to wonder how President Reagan can deal with the Soviets if he can't deal with Senator Helms," said Tsongas.

Helms, meanwhile, said today he was "very encouraged" by the nomination of Adelman and said he hoped Rostow's successor would lead the agency "in making progress towards those goals which are central to the Reagan arms control policy — such as the zero option, sound verification procedures, and a willingness to acknowledge past Soviet violations of the agreements now in effect."

Last week, bowing to pressure from Helms and other conservatives, the White House withdrew the Grey's nomination. Rostow accused hardliners of trying to take over the agency and prevent any new agreement with the Soviets to limit nuclear weapons. He called them "people who don't want any agreement at all."

Pressler, chairman of the Senate arms control subcommittee, said, "It's a great setback for the U.S. position in arms control because it looks as though we are in a state of chaos and confusion."

Pressler said the arms negotiations require months of preparation.

Meanwhile, in Moscow, the Kremlin said today that Rostow's resignation was another sign of "serious differences now rending" the Reagan administration.

"The most reactionary American circles who oppose any agreements with the U.S.S.R. pressed for Mr. Rostow's resignation," Radio Moscow said.

The official Tass news agency said Rostow quit because of "serious differences with Reagan's people concerning the problems of arms control, the tactics" of the Americans at missile reduction talks in Geneva.

Voters may 'call' bingo

By ED TODD

Depending on the weather and their slant on bingo, Midland voters may be trekking to 13 voting places in sparse or dense numbers Saturday, when they have the option of legalizing bingo for charitable purposes in Midland County via the local-option state Bingo Enabling Act.

All told, almost 43,000 Midland Countians are eligible to vote in the election; only 308 absentee ballots were cast.

If approved by the electorate, bingo games would be monitored by the Texas State Comptroller Office, which would grant bingo licenses to non-profit organizations such as churches, veterans' and fraternal organizations, and medical societies. A maximum of $2,500 in prizes could be awarded in any "one bingo occasion," while the limit on a single prize would be $500. Net proceeds would go to charity.

Since January 1982, when the Bingo Enabling Act went into effect, 306 Texas counties, municipalities and peace justice precincts have voted to legalize the game. Only 18 jurisdictions, including Lamesa and Dawson County, have rejected legalizing bingo. In the Midland area, Odessa, Big Lake and Andrews have voted to legalize the game of chance.

If bingo is approved in Midland County, the county Commissioners' Court has the option of tagging on a 2 percent tax on gross receipts from bingo games. Polls will be open Saturday from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Talking it over

Memphis police officers rush house, fail to save comrade taken hostage

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Police firing tear gas stormed the home of a religious zealot today in a futile effort to rescue an officer taken hostage, and all seven men holding the prisoner were killed in the gun battle, authorities said.

A police tactical unit found the battered body of Patrolman R.S. Hester just inside the front door of the house where he had been held prisoner since late Tuesday night.

Police Director John D. Holt said Hester had been dead for several hours. He said Hester, whose hands were handcuffed behind his back, had suffered suffered numerous injuries, but he would not go into detail.

Holt said the decision to storm the house using tear gas and automatic weapons came after officers with electronic eavesdropping devices heard someone inside the house say, "The devil is dead." He said police assumed that was a reference to Hester.

The police director said the last time Hester's voice was heard was at about 6:30 a.m. Wednesday when the officer said, "Give them anything they want."

At the time, Holt said, it would not have been possible for police to enter the house. "Entry could not be gained without certain death to the officer," Holt said.

Bob Graham, administrative assistant to Holt, had said earlier that all of the seven others found dead in the house were "male black adults."

Hester, a 10-year veteran of the force, was taken hostage by Lindberg Sanders, 49, described as a religious zealot with a history of mental illness who thought police were "anti-Christ."

One of the officers making the assault suffered a cut hand and was in good condition at a hospital, Graham said. Police said Hester had been dead for several hours before the assault began.

An hour before the assault began at 3:07 a.m., negotiators used bullhorns in an unsuccessful attempt to talk to Sanders.

Police had kept vigil at Shannon Elementary School across the street from the small frame house where Hester was seized in an incident that also injured two other officers.

Reporters and relatives of some of the people inside the house waited in a classroom. As the gunfire began across the street, relatives began screaming and tried to leave the room.

Police stormed the house through the front door and were fired on as they entered the living room, Holt said. After the shootout, officers searched the house room by room. Police said the doors and windows had been nailed shut and doors were barricaded with furniture.

Sanders, described by police as the leader of a nameless religious sect, and others in the house had made no demands during the siege.

U.N. offers meeting site

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar says he would like to offer the United Nations as a neutral "shelter" for a meeting between President Reagan and Soviet Communist Party head Yuri V. Andropov.

Both Reagan and Andropov have raised the possibility of having a summit meeting. Perez de Cuellar meets with the U.S. president Friday at the White House.

In an interview with The Associated Press, the U.N. chief said an introductory meeting between the two world leaders "would help at least to create a better atmosphere for the solution of so many international problems."

Among the most pressing, he said, are the Middle East, Afghanistan, Southeast Asia, South-West Africa and Cyprus.

"I think one of the great advantages of the United Nations is that (it is) a kind of permanent forum for discussions, for dialogues or conferences for all member countries," Perez de Cuellar said.

"And I would be only too happy to provide the necessary 'shelter' — let's put it that way — for the two leaders to meet together and I think that (the U.N. headquarters in New York) would be a normal place for them to meet together and discuss international problems."

Andropov, in written responses to questions from an editor for Hearst Newspapers last month, said a summit conference could be a "very effective" way of improving Soviet-American relations if there is "good preparation." He did not specifically propose a summit with Reagan.

At his Washington news conference last week, Reagan said he was in favor "in principle" of taking up the suggestion. "But," Reagan added, "I think that a summit is something that requires some planning."

Perez de Cuellar met briefly with Andropov last November while in Moscow for the funeral of President Leonid I. Brezhnev. Andropov succeeded Brezhnev as Communist Party general secretary, the late leader's more important post.

The president of the Soviet Union technically is head of state, but that position has not been filled. Brezhnev met former President Nixon before assuming the presidency in 1977. He also met then-President Carter in 1979 to ratify the SALT II agreements.

Friday's White House session will be Perez de Cuellar's third meeting with Reagan since the 62-year-old Peruvian diplomat took office a year ago.

The two first met last February when Reagan was in New York for a speech and again last June when the president addressed the U.N. disarmament conference.

During Friday's visit, the U.N. secretary-general also is to be guest at a Blair House luncheon given by Vice President George Bush, an old friend from the days when they headed their countries' respective U.N. delegations.

In addition to discussing world problems with Reagan, the secretary-general said he also planned "a kind of evaluation of our bilateral relations."

Earlier this month, Perez de Cuellar said it was "a matter of the utmost seriousness" that Reagan had decided to withhold a U.N. assessment of up to $700,000 earmarked for a rules-making commission of the International Law of the Sea Treaty. The United States has refused to sign the treaty because of objections to its deep seabed mining provisions.

"I had to express concern because it was a decision which from our point of view was not helpful, but it was said with great respect for the position of (the U.S.) government," the secretary-general said.

Barbara Bush outlines RIF's needs

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

When Barbara Bush arrived in Midland Wednesday, she came "to introduce some good friends of mine to some very old friends of mine."

The former Midlander, along with another misplaced Texan and a self acclaimed "token Yankee," also came with another reason in mind — the beginning endeavor to open the doors of a national, private and non-profit organization and allow the private funds of Texans to enter.

She also came with some startling facts concerning illiteracy in the United States.

"Experts say that 99 percent of the population was literate in 1950," Mrs. Bush, a member of the board of directors of Reading is Fundamental, Inc., said. "Only 72 percent of the population is today — and it's going down. We are 49th out of the 158 member nations now. We were 14th in 1950.

"An article in the Wall Street Journal recently said that the reason Japanese productivity is higher than ours is because they have better education," she continued.

While Reading is Fundamental, Inc., distributed 610,000 books to almost 190,000 Texas children through 159 local projects, the organization receives the majority of its national funds from the eastern states, where most of the support for the program began.

"We have local programs all over the country," Anne Richardson, a former teacher in Massachusetts, wife of former U.S. Attorney General Elliot Richardson and RIF chairman of the board, explained. "We have an enormous majority west of the Mississippi.

"We feel we haven't gotten to the national slope of our support as we have with our local groups. But it's time for us now to really build a national support program," she said. "And that's why we're here and in Dallas and Houston."

Although Midland presently does not have a local RIF project, many areas in the state do, including those in the Rio Grande Valley, urban areas and even Lamesa.

The local projects, which raise 25 percent of the money for their book distributions, are matched by 75 percent from a national fund, which in the past has included little Texas money.

"(Funds for the national program) mostly have been from the eastern part of the country just because we haven't gone about trying to build a support system here in Texas," Mrs. Richardson said.

That should change, if the fund-raising luncheon, hosted by Earle M. Craig Jr. at the Racquet Club Wednesday, is any indication. Craig himself began the check writing of about 30 friends of the Craigs and the Bushes attending by announcing a generous donation.

"Reading is fundamental," he said. "Private financial support is fundamental also."

The program, which was begun in Washington, D.C., in 1966 by Maggie McNamara, wife of Robert S. McNamara, has a simple philosophy.

"The basic job is to get children interested in reading at a very early age," Ruth Graves, RIF president, said during the luncheon.

According to literature distributed by RIF, "The idea was to see what would happen if lower-income children in the city's public schools, many of whom had some of the nation's lowest reading scores, were given a chance to choose, and to keep, books they liked — not textbooks, but books the children freely selected themselves, to own, to share, to read."

The idea was a success, according to the printed material.

The method of book distributions are

Faulk signs on as Gramm opponent

MADISONVILLE, Texas (AP) — Phil Gramm, who resigned from Congress to run for his seat as a Republican, has drawn a field of nine Democratic opponents — including humorist John Henry Faulk, who says the special election is another referendum on Reaganomics.

A Libertarian candidate also is running for the seat, which represents an area stretching 250 miles from Dallas to Houston.

Faulk, 69, a CBS radio commentator who was blacklisted in the 1950s, said here Wednesday that Gramm's resignation and switch from the Democratic Party last week "is the best thing that could have happened" to the 6th district.

The Feb. 12 special election gives voters "another chance to tell Washington that Reaganomics isn't working. Gramm's like a weatherman who creates tornadoes, instead of predicting them," Faulk said.

"There's only one Republican in this race because everyone else has enough sense to know voting Republican in the middle of a recession is like wearing a 'Hit Me' sign to a boxing match," he said.

Gramm easily won re-election last year to a third term in Congress as a Democrat, but resigned last week and left the party after Democratic leaders bounced him from the Budget Committee for his support of President Reagan's economic programs.

He could have just changed parties and remained in Congress, but decided to force a special election to would allow his constituents to register their feelings.

Gramm's major barrier to returning to Washington is considered to be former Dan Kubiak, 44, of Rockdale, who quit the Texas House of Representatives last year after seven terms to make an unsuccessful bid for state land commissioner.

State Democratic chairman Bob Slagle complained last week Gramm should be forbidden from running as a Republican, because of state law that requires those voting in a primary "shall remain a qualified member of the party for the duration of the voting year." Slagle said the voting year extends through the end of February.

Secretary of State David Dean, an appointee of Republican Gov. Bill Clements, said Wednesday he had made a decision on Slagle's request, but that a ruling was close at hand.

Gramm, a 40-year-old former economics professor at Texas A&M, cannot win in the 6th district as a Republican, Faulk said, because "there are plenty of people my age who remember the Depression."

Faulk said he would campaign on "protecting the Social Security system, reducing uneployment and encouraging economic recovery."

George M. Chamberlain, 34, of Granbury, a structural engineer at Comanche Peak nuclear plant near Glen Rose, held a news conference in Dallas Wednesday to announce his candidacy.

The secretary of state's office said it also received filing fees Wednesday from Carl A. Nigliazzo, 36, an economic planner from Hearne; Louis C. Davis, 58, a lawyer from Houston; Joe English, 44, of Granbury, who is retired; and Rex Carey, 43, of Midlothian, a former employee of the Office of Economic Opportunity who finished fourth in a race against Gramm in last year's Democratic primary.

Other Democrats announcing last week were Joe Agris, 42, a plastic surgeon from Houston; and Bill Powers, 53, a businessman from Navasota who finished last among five Democrats opposing Gramm when he first won election to Congress in 1978.

Third woman likely to gain approval

WASHINGTON (AP) — Margaret Heckler, whose nomination as secretary of health and human services has received initial support in Congress, seems likely to become the third woman in the Reagan Cabinet.

Even groups who differ with her position on abortion are reacting favorably to her appointment.

"In the final analysis, she is going to be part of the Reagan administration which has been quite hostile to family planning and the reproductive rights of women. But we are hopeful," said Bill Hamilton, legislative director for the Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

"We know her to be a reasonable person," he said.

President Reagan selected Mrs. Heckler to succeed Richard S. Schweiker as head of the $274 billion government agency. Schweiker will leave government early in February to become president of the American Council of Life Insurance.

Mrs. Heckler will have to be confirmed by the Senate Finance Committee and the full Senate before she takes office. No date has been set for a hearing because Congress is in recess until Jan. 25.

But Karna Small, a White House spokeswomen, said she expected early confirmation of Mrs. Heckler, a Republican who spent 16 years in the House as a congresswoman from Massachusetts.

Several senators praised Mrs. Heckler, including Sen. Edward Kennedy, a Democrat from her home state. "Although I have disagreed with her on a number of issues, she is a responsible and talented public servant, who brings real strengths to the largest domestic agency of the federal government," he said.

Sen. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., said she was pleased the president has appointed "such a highly qualified woman."

Mrs. Heckler is a Roman Catholic who strongly opposes public financing of abortions, but she has supported the Equal Rights Amendment and other women's rights issues, as well as issues affecting veterans and the elderly.

While Mrs. Heckler was in Congress, she argued against an administration plan requiring parents to be told when minors receive most contraceptives. The rule may be one she would have to enforce at the health agency.

Earlier this week, Schweiker gave final approval to the rule, but Planned Parenthood has filed suit to stop it from taking effect. The regulation must be approved by the Office of Management and Budget.

Some women said they thought Mrs. Heckler's nomination was politically motivated.

"I think it's at least 95 percent political," said Judy Goldsmith, president of the National Organization for Women said.

"The message American women delivered in the November election is they are going to be centrally involved in politics, they are going to vote their interests and they will do it in an organized, effective way," Ms. Goldsmith said. "The Republican Party is perceived as a party that has, in general, opposed those interests."

Kathy Wilson, a Republican who is chairwoman of the National Women's Political Caucus, said, "I think they are finally beginning to realize over at the White House that it is not real wise to run the country like a men's club."

Mrs. Heckler, a 51-year-old attorney from Wellesley, Mass., was defeated by Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., last November. The two were thrown into a race because of redistricting.

At a ceremony in the East Room, Mrs. Heckler told Reagan, "You have offered me the greatest challenge of my life." She described the new job as "the hardest assignment in Washington."

She is the second woman the president has named to a Cabinet job in a week. The president chose Elizabeth Hanford Dole to succeed Drew Lewis as transportation secretary last week. Jeane Kirkpatrick is delegate to the United Nations, a post with Cabinet rank.

Reagan also appointed the first woman to the Supreme Court — Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

Schweiker is the fourth member of Reagan's original Cabinet to resign. The others were Alexander Haig, secretary of state; James Edwards, secretary of Energy; and Lewis.

The president called Schweiker "a trusted adviser and able administrator and a man who has done an outstanding job. ..."

The life insurance council which Schweiker will head represents companies responsible for 98 percent of the nation's life insurance policies. Schweiker will make a six-figure income, a council spokesman said.

Mixon removal 'company move'

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

The manager of Midland's chief cable television service for the past six years was recently removed from the position, a change which Times-Mirror Cable Television officials are calling a "company move."

Newton Youngblood, vice-president for Times-Mirror's southwest region, said Tom Mixon was replaced effective Jan. 7, after managing Times-Mirror Cable Television of Midland since 1979.

"Basically, there are no changes. It was just a company move," said Youngblood, who will serve as acting manager, splitting time between Midland and regional offices in Austin until a replacement is selected. "The only thing that will happen in the future is that we're going to try to improve our responsiveness to the people of Midland," he said.

"We're trying to improve the efficiency of our organization. We're trying to be more responsive as a service organization in the Midland area," Youngblood said.

Mixon managed Tall City Cable Television from 1976 to 1979, when Communications Properties Inc. — Tall City's parent company — was absorbed by Times-Mirror.

"They were just wanting some new people," said Mixon, who declined to elaborate on the reasoning behind his replacement.

Mixon said he will remain on Times-Mirror's payroll for another three months and added that he may be given another job within the company. Youngblood said another position for Mixon is "under exploration."

When asked to name any specific problem areas in past management of the cable system, Youngblood said: "I think in general we hope to solve some of the irritants we've had in the system there."

Tom Mixon

He said the "irritants" include the telephone system, which occasionally angers customers unable to reach Times-Mirror's office.

Mixon, 38, said he may explore other job prospects in the cable television or oil industries. But with two daughters in high school, Mixon said he's reluctant to leave Midland.

"There are jobs available in the cable industry...I just hate to leave Midland," he said.

Mixon was born and raised in Fritch. In 1965, he began work on cable television construction in Abilene. He later worked for cable systems in Brownfield, Levelland and Lubbock before going to work for CPI in Little Rock, Ark. CPI transferred him to Midland in 1976.

Heckler opposes contraceptive rule

By BETTY ANNE WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — When Margaret Heckler was a member of Congress, she argued against the Reagan administration's plan requiring that parents be notified after their teen-agers receive prescription birth control products.

Now, the regulation may be one that Mrs. Heckler will have to enforce if she is confirmed as secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services.

The proposal, dubbed the "squeal rule" by its critics, is in the last stages of review. It is one of the hottest topics taken on the by the administration and generated 120,000 comments from the public after it was proposed last year.

Only Monday, the current health secretary, Richard S. Schweiker, gave his final approval to the idea and sent it to the Office of Management and Budget for clearance. It would take effect 30 days after it was published in the Federal Register.

Mrs. Heckler joined 32 other members of the Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues in sending an April 23, 1982, letter on the subject to the department.

"While we applaud the efforts of HHS to encourage the involvement of parents in this process, we question the wisdom of the approach outlined in the proposed regulation. We fear that enactment of such a regulation would discourage many young people from utilizing these services and would result in a drastic increase in the number of teenage pregnancies," the letter said.

"Thus, we urge you to reassess your decision and to withdraw the proposed regulations," it said. It was addressed to Marjory Mecklenberg, then acting deputy assistant secretary for population affairs.

Under the regulation, family planning agencies receiving federal funds would have to notify parents within 10 days after birth control pill, diaphragms or intrauterine devices are prescribed to girls under 18.

Exceptions would be made if it appeared likely the girl would suffer harm if her parents were notified.

About 5,000 birth control clinics would be affected by the proposal.

The proposal has been criticized by activists on both ends of the political spectrum. Opponents of abortion argue it is too permissive and that parental consent should be obtained before a minor receives contraceptives from a federally subsidized clinic.

Schweiker and Mrs. Meckleberg have argued that the proposal would carry out a congressional directive to involve parents in contraceptive decisions.

Former Midlander outlines needs of reading program

left up to the imagination of the volunteers in the local project, according to Mrs. Richardson. Books are distributed at schools, parades, shopping centers and juvenile halls. They are delivered from hot air balloons, wailing fire trucks and from volunteers dressed as book characters in costumes.

Mrs. Richardson explained that training groups help local projects begin. The only thing required from local volunteers is at least three distributions per year. "How they manage to raise the funds is up to them," she said.

"We have the local groups," Ms. Graves explained, "and we provide them with the training. In addition to the local, we also have the nationwide public service campaign (which includes announcements on national television by celebrities Carol Burnett, Arthur Ashe, Michael Learned and Ed Asner). We've also developed special tools so that parents can help their children with reading. Also, with the federal government, we match the book funds with the local projects."

The 75-25 percent fund match does have exceptions, Mrs. Richardson said. A hundred percent of the cost of books for migrant students are provided through the national support system with federal government funds.

"Nearly 10 percent of all the children we servce nationwide are Texas children," Ms. Graves, a former resident of Port Arthur, pointed out. "We've put $2.5 million in Texas to support the local projects in the last five years."

Of the 16-member board of directors, one-fourth are native Texans, Ms. Graves added. "I like to think that wasn't a conspiracy," she said with a laugh. "I like to think that Texans feel we're priveleged to live in this part of the country and have a chance to show our appreciation. We're making a big effort to serve the children of Texas and we know our fellow Texans would want to participate and support that."

The whole point of the program is to show young children that reading is enjoyable, Mrs. Richardson said. "What's the old adage? An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure?"

Shake-up continues at fast, furious pace

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration's midterm shake-up is occurring at a fast and furious pace. But rather than removing those who may be causing problems, President Reagan has lost in a matter of weeks two Cabinet members with whom there was no sign of dissatisfaction.

He also forced a purge in his arms control negotiating team, in the midst of a series of weapons reduction talks, perhaps leaving himself open to Soviet propaganda charges of disarray in the West's nuclear policies.

Across the private street that separates the White House from the Old Executive Office Building, five members of Vice President George Bush's pared-down staff decided to switch jobs, with all but one choosing to leave the White House.

Thus, as Reagan nears the start of the third year in his presidency, he has lost one-third of his original Cabinet; he has watched three top aides leave his White House staff, two under fire; the arms control team is being overhauled, and the vice president is breaking in a new staff.

In view of the changes, administration officials are defensive about midterm assessments stating the president is losing control of his agenda and failing to accomplish his goals.

"We're at a difficult stage with a lot of these issues," said one official. "We're at a point where you can't get a lot of agreement with Congress. It's not a matter of simply being reactive. It's a matter of reality. It's what every administration goes through."

An Analysis

In picking replacements, Reagan bowed to the conservative wing of the Republican Party for the arms control jobs while turning to a more moderate area when he chose former Rep. Margaret Heckler of Massachusetts to replace Richard Schweiker as secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services.

Schweiker was the fourth Cabinet member to leave, joining Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis, resigning as of Feb. 1; former Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., whose departure was clearly welcomed at the White House last summer, and Energy Secretary James Edwards, who is returning to South Carolina, where he once practiced dentistry.

Lewis was considered one of the stars of the Reagan Cabinet, but officials said they had nothing to offer him other than the transportation job.

"Drew would have liked to have stayed. There was no spot feasible for him to move into," said one White House official, requesting anonymity. So, he quit for a job with a cable television company.

This source said Schweiker "did what he wanted to do on the budget" and felt it was time to leave.

"I'm sure the money had something to do with it," said the official, referring to the considerable raise Schweiker is likely to get jumping from a Cabinet job, which pays $80,100, to a salary in six figures as president of the American Council of Life Insurance, a trade association.

There was also "something of a burnout factor," said the White House official, who painted a picture of Lewis and Schweiker as two Cabinet secretaries whose departures Reagan could not have halted.

The decision to formally announce the changes at Health and Human Services was apparently made so quickly that at 10 a.m. Wednesday, the appointed hour for the president's announcement, workmen were still nailing together the presidential podium in the White House East Room and secretaries from the Old Executive Office Building were still trooping over to fill up the room.

Only hours after the president, Schweiker and Mrs. Heckler left the East Room, the White House copying machines were cranking out the president's statement acknowledging the departure of Eugene Rostow as director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Rostow was forced out in the face of persistent opposition by conservative Republicans led by Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina.

Reagan said he was accepting with regret the resignation of Richard Staar as the U.S. representative at talks intended to reduce conventional weapons in Europe. But deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said it had been made "apparent to (Staar) we would like him to resign."

Lewis 'teamies' approve powers

AUSTIN (AP) — Rep. Carlyle Smith says the East Coast has preppies, the West Coast has groupies and the Texas House has "teamies."

And Smith, leader of a tiny group of House dissidents, found out Wednesday he is far outnumbered by those teamies, loyal to new Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth.

Lewis won House approval — by a vote of 142-4 — for a rules package that gives him new powers, including the right to make all appointments to the powerful House Appropriations Committee and to fire committee chairmen.

"I question whether this is any type of omen for anything," Lewis said after the House demolished Smith's attempts to shoot down the speaker's proposed rules.

Smith, D-Grand Prairie, and Milton Fox, R-Houston, found little support on the House floor Wednesday for their anti-Lewis efforts. Smith and Fox were the only two members who voted against Lewis for speaker on Tuesday.

Smith told the House's 45 new members to steer clear of being a teamie, bound to voting according to Lewis' wishes. Smith demonstrated the "teamie salute."

"You've got to hold your nose and you got to put your hands on your eyes," he said, adding the salute is not perfect because "you just got two hands."

"That's what the (speaker's) lieutenants are for. They can come plug up your ears," he said.

Rep. Paul Moreno, D-El Paso, also argued against Lewis' proposal giving the speaker the right to appoint all appropriations committee members. For the past 10 years, half the committee was picked by seniority and half was selected by the speaker.

Moreno said the change was made in 1973 to end the "corruption era in the House."

"Now I am seeing these things eroded," he said. "Gib Lewis and I are friends...but Gib Lewis did not serve during the corruption era. What you are doing today is you are going back and giving the speaker all sorts of power, power that you will not be able to eliminate.

"Let me tell you that corruption was easy and you're getting right back to it without knowing about it," he said.

Moreno, one of the four who voted against Lewis' rules package, said the seniority system is the only way for him to retain his seat on the committee.

"You and I know that the chances of my getting on the appropriations committee is like me climbing a telephone post," said Moreno, a wheelchair-bound cripple who was present but did not vote in the speaker election Tuesday.

Rep. Charles Evans, D-Hurst, said the Lewis system would provide for more "continuity" in the budgeting process by filling the appropriations committee with representatives from other important committees.

The House voted 138-8 in favor of the Lewis plan for the appropriations committee. Smith was unable to draw more than 26 votes for any of his amendments to Lewis' plan, and more often got only seven or eight members to vote with him.

Lewis said the seniority system for the appropriations committee "just wasn't working."

He said the rule allowing him to fire committee chairmen is "no big deal," adding that the speaker should have the right to fire chairmen who don't do their jobs. Lewis said he did not "envision" ever removing a chairman, and would not use the power as a weapon to punish opposition.

Fox is anticipating some punishment for his anti-Lewis efforts.

"I'm reasonably sure I won't be a chairman or a vice-chairman or a member of the appropriations committee," he said. "On the other hand, he might want to demonstrate how fair he is. You never know."

The new rules include a change requiring House members to file a written request with the speaker to welcome guests in the House gallery. In recent sessions, representatives could introduce their guests without written permission from the speaker.

The House did approve Rep. Wilhelmina Delco's amendment putting "sexual neutrality" back in the wording of the rules.

New House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, left, listens to House Parliamentarian Robert Kelly Wednesday during sessions aimed at changing some House rules. Lewis and his followers OK'd, by a 142-4 vote, a package giving him new powers, including making all appointments to the House Appropriations Committee.

Candidate charged in campaign incident

HARLINGEN (AP) — A city commissioner trying to regain Harlingen's mayoral post says he is the victim of "underhanded politics" because of allegations that he shoved and threatened a man over some campaign signs.

Sam Lozano, a seventh-term commissioner, appeared Wednesday before Peace Justice Thomas Thompson, who released the candidate on personal recognizance bonds totaling $600. Lozano pleaded innocent.

Harlingen businessman Gregorio Garcia, a campaign election worker for city commission candidate Fidel Davila, filed a complaint against Lozano earlier Wednesday.

Garcia and another man were campaigning for Davila Tuesday afternoon, when, according to Garcia, Lozano got out of a car and accused him of removing Lozano's campaign signs from a local business.

"He pushed me three times," Garcia said. He said Lozano wanted to fight with him, then pointed a finger at him and said, in Spanish, "You are going to see, tomorrow."

Shortly before Wednesday's city commission meeting, Lozano read a prepared statement, in which he said the incident was politically motivated.

"This is a political act designed to destroy my campaign for mayor," he said. "I did not do any of the things I am accused of. I did not touch him or threaten him at all.

"In my many, many years of public life, starting in 1962, I have never seen such underhanded politics," Lozano said.

Lozano, 55, refused to answer reporters' questions, saying his attorney had advised him against it.

Ted Shrader, Lozano's opponent in Saturday's election, said he will not use the incident in the campaign.

White review would look bad: Clements

AUSTIN (AP) — Outgoing Gov. Bill Clements says Gov.-elect Mark White's new administration will collect "scars and wounds and hard feelings" that are "totally unnecessary" because of a fuss over Senate appointments.

Clements also told reporters Wednesday he is convinced there are not enough Senate votes to force Clements' recent appointments to be returned for White's review.

Debate is set next week on a motion by some Democratic senators to recall Clements' appointments from the Senate Nominations Subcommittee and send them back to White.

"There are only five Republican senators so there had to be strong, strong support from a lot of Democrats over there and particularly from some very senior Democrats who feel strongly that these traditions of the Senate should be preserved," Clements said. "They don't have the votes to send them back."

White said Tuesday that some senators had suggested returning Clements' recent appointments to White for review "to avoid prolonged debate and undue divisiveness." He said he was making himself available to these senators, but added he was "not going to intrude on the prerogatives of the Senate."

"The result is going to be that these nominations will be considered as they always have been on an individual consideration of each appointee on its own basis," Clements said.

"Personally, I think it is very poor judgment on a lot of people's parts to bring up this kind of a situation and get embroiled in an issue of this nature at the very beginning of an administration," he said.

"There will be scars and wounds and hard feelings that will come out of this that are totally unnecessary," he said.

By DICK ALEXANDER
Hearst Feature Service

SALZBURG, Austria — The retired sea captain stood on the terrace staring out over the lake. Ducks swam and cool breezes rustled the trees along the shore; the setting was idyllic and romantic. The beautiful young baroness from Vienna touched his arm.

"Hello," she said. "You're far away. "Is there any way I can bring you back to the world I'm in."

Before the Herr Von Trapp could reply, singing was heard in the distance, gradually getting louder:

"The hills are alive with the sound of music,

With songs they have sung for a thousand years."

The Von Trapp children were returning after an outing with Maria, their governess and former postulate at the Benedictine convent in the city. It was the time of the Anschluss, the annexation of Austria by Nazi Germany in 1938. The scene described is from "The Sound of Music," the enormously successful movie that has become a classic, despite critical reviews that it was corny, cloying, sugarcoated and unrealistic.

I had just driven down from the hills myself to meet Horst Fitting, down from the Gersbergalms Hotel, the chalet on the mountain called Gaisberg that overlooks the enchanting city of Salzburg, birthplace of Mozart.

Horst and I were standing beside this same lake that fronts the Leopoldskron Palace, where the terrace scene was filmed. Beside the lake, into which the movie Von Trapp children fell, is the gazebo used in the film when Lisl sang, "I am 16, going on 17" to her young boyfriend, who was going on to become a Nazi.

Horst, a tall man with a military bearing, was coming out of the gazebo as I snapped his picture. At the same time, a tourist bus stopped and discharged its occupants. Horst lined up the visitors and led them in singing:

"Edelweiss, edelweiss,
Every morning you greet me."

Horst, my guide for the day, has a good sense of humor. He next regaled his audience by singing: "I am 70, going on 60," — a bit of an exaggeration, although he did serve in the Luftwaffe during World War II, flying a B-17 for the Germans.

HOW'S THAT — a B-17 for the Germans? That's correct. The Germans shot down some of our B-17 Flying Fortresses and B-24 Liberator bombers during the war, and the ones that were salvageable were put back together.

Horst told me this as we walked through the Old City of Salzburg beneath the Hohensalzburg Fortress, the largest preserved citadel of its kind in central Europe. It was built in 1077, enlarged in about 1500 and completed in 1681. We visited the Cathedral, the most massive early baroque architecture north of the Alps, St. Peter's Abbey and Benedictine Monastery, founded in about 696 A.D. by St. Rupert, and St. Peter's Cemetery, which contains the graves of many illustrious personages, including Nanneri Mozart, Wolfgang's sister, and U.S. Gen. "Mad Dog" Collins.

We walked along the Getreidegasse, the old, narrow street with its enchanting gilt and wrought-iron trade signs; it is now a smart shopping street. Joannes Chrysostomus Wolfgangus Theophilus Mozart, better known as Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, was born on Jan. 27, 1756, in a third-floor room at No. 9 Getreidegasse. Now a museum, it is open during May, June and September from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m., July and August from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. and the rest of the year from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

ON A HILL between the Old City and Hohensalzburg Fortress is the Nonnberg Convent, which was used by "Sound of Music" director Robert Wise as the convent Maria (Julie Andrews) attended and where she was advised, in song by the Mother Abbess, to "Climb every mountain." The real life Baroness Maria Augusta von Trapp, who lives in Vermont and is now 77, returns often to her native Salzburg and still prefers to wear dirndls, I learned while having an excellent lunch of consomme with liver dumplings, rump roast with potatoes and carrots, bier and apfelstrudel at Jedermann's restaurant.

I can understand why the baroness returns to Salzburg so often. Unfortunately, some of its beauty was lost during World War II when 16 air raids on the city destroyed more than 400 houses and two churches. In 1945, Salzburg was occupied by advancing Americans. Fortunately, someone breathed new life and the old charm back into the town, and the observer will note bronze plaques affixed to buildings restored since the war.

IN JUNE, THE gardens behind the centrally-located Mirabell Palace boast some 90,000 tulips. Horst and I walked through the palace to the garden and past the two unicorns on the sides of the steps that lead to the Pegusus Fountain, the fountain that moviegoers may remember as the one Maria danced around in "The Sound of Music."

It was in the Marmor Saal (Marble Hall) of the Mirabell Palace where, that night, I heard a concert of music by Haydn, Janacek and Mozart performed by the Panocha String Quartet of Prague. In this same room, father Leopold Mozart used to give concerts with young Wolfgang and his sister Nanneri.

Mozart, like the poet George Trakl more than 100 years later, become disenchanted with his native Salzburg when he felt the Archbishop Colloredo had humiliated him by treating him as a mere servant in Colloredo's establishment.

IN TRAKL'S CASE, his relations with Salzburg underwent a pronounced change. In his later letters he described Salzburg as a "dead" and "rotting" city.

Economic interface explained

NEW YORK (AP) — When people get to talking about hard economic times, they start with the obvious: unemployment, failing companies and high interest rates.

Those are some of the visible problems. But what about causes and solutions?

When the talk turns in that direction, it often centers on the government's role. Some argue the government spends too much, or taxes too much, or both. Which leaves many people wondering: What does the government's budget problem have to do with layoffs, bankruptcies and the rest?

The answer is, plenty. But the connection is not always obvious.

Here are some questions and answers to help explain the link between the federal budget "crisis," as some people call it, and the trouble in private industry.

Q. What is the budget problem?

A. It is more than the fact that the government spent $111 billion more than it took in last year. That alone was a record shortfall. The more troubling thing, in the view of many economists, is the prospect of budget deficits hitting $200 billion or more in each of the next several years.

Q. What's wrong with having the government outspend its income?

A. Not all economists agree on this, but many believe that such large budget deficits will prevent interest rates from falling further — and possibly lead to even higher rates. The argument goes like this: There is a limited amount of money available for lending by banks and individuals. So, the bigger the chunk of money the government must borrow to pay its debts, the less money there is left over for private borrowers. And the smaller the amount left to the private borrowers, the higher they will bid up its price, or the interest rate.

Q. What does that have to do with the unemployment problem?

A. First, of course, the high borrowing costs force some companies out of business. Many of those that do survive are forced to reduce their expenses, often by cutting the payroll. High rates also discourage consumers from buying high cost items, such as cars or houses, which means less production — and jobs — in those industries. But there are less obvious links between unemployment and high interest rates. One involves the loss of jobs in export businesses.

Q. Why are exporters different?

A. The reasons for their problem are different, but the result often is the same: layoffs. Peter G. Peterson, chairman of the investment firm Lehman Brothers Kuhn Loeb Inc. in New York estimates that as many as 2 million U.S. jobs in exporting were lost last year as an indirect consequence of high interest rates.

Man gives up roping cattle to corral schools of fish

IRON STATION, N.C. (AP) — Lewis Ballard's pastures on both sides of Old Plank Road off N.C. 73 once were cattle country. But when the bottom fell out of the cattle market in 1974, Ballard and his wife, Sue, moved from herds to schools — of fish.

"People took an interest in fishing in 1974," the 63-year-old Ballard said while giving a tour of his ponds recently. "So we begged, borrowed and stole everything we could to get into it."

Now Ballard's Catfish Country is one of the most prolific fishing holes around, with competitive catfishing seven days a week from daylight to dark and prize carp fishing tournaments on weekends.

At first, Ballard stocked his ponds with some bass and trout from a neighbor's private pond. But the biggest part of his fish were non-game fish, like carp and catfish, which he bought from commercial haulers.

Their size varied, so in March 1979, Ballard started hauling his own fish in a 12,000-pound-capacity truck. Ballard hauls his carp and catfish from the Potomac River separating Maryland and Virginia and from Lake Erie between Ohio and Michigan.

"The biggest ones come from the Potomac," Ballard said. "The further down closer to salt water you come, the bigger they get. Why, I really don't know. I guess it's the sea diet or something."

Ballard said he gets his fish from the Potomac because fishermen there can net fish, a practice not allowed in North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee.

State governments struggle with red ink

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — While President Reagan wrestles with the granddaddy of budget deficits, state governments are struggling in their own red ink, a product of recession compounded by cuts in federal aid.

That two-way stretch signals the end for the "new federalism" program the president proposed just a year ago as a way to begin reordering American government with a single, bold stroke.

State governors are not about to bargain to take over federal programs without federal revenues, and Washington doesn't have any money to offer them.

The National Governors' Association estimates that city and state governments lost about $17 billion in federal funds under each of Reagan's first two budgets. There are further cuts in prospect, if the administration can get Congress to make them.

The White House has been considering a reincarnation of "new federalism" that would lump as many as 30 to 40 federal aid programs together, then turn them over to state and local governments. The idea, as in the original version, is to send along federal revenue sources to cover the cost.

But with $200 billion federal deficits in prospect this year and next, Reagan needs the revenue in Washington.

An Analysis,

Indeed, in order to keep the deficit from soaring even higher, the administration already has had to tap some of the very tax sources the president had proposed turning over to the states as part of the federalism plan.

Reagan plans to propose another $30 billion to $33 billion worth of domestic spending curbs or cuts in the budget he will present to Congress late this month. Even cuts that don't go directly to federal aid programs will have an impact on state and local budgets, because they leave it to states and cities to do things Washington isn't going to do.

So when the governors convene in Washington on Feb. 27 for their mid-winter conference, they will be seeking to hold onto what they've got — and they certainly will not be looking to take over any more programs or expenses that now come out of the federal treasury.

It isn't a partisan matter. As Reagan's dilemma shows, budgets and deficits do not respect party or philosophy. No one in American politics denounced deficit spending more consistently than Reagan, and the deficits he now faces are more than three times as big as any recorded before him.

But any time the governors vote on a policy statement, they will vote Democratic. Thirty-four states are governed by Democrats now, only 16 by Republicans.

The governors association says state deficits totaling about $2 billion are in prospect for the current budget year. By law or tradition, states cannot end the year with budget deficits, so governors and legislatures are looking for solutions now.

Singapore tries to improve morale, status of armed forces

SINGAPORE (AP) — Enlisted men don't have to address officers as "sir." New recruits are no longer scalped by their first army haircut. Reservists are encouraged to use their military rank in civilian life.

These and a number of other steps have been introduced as Singapore tries to improve morale and give more status to those in its armed forces.

Defense Minister Goh Chok Tong wants all 2.4 million people in this prosperous island republic to be aware of the need to defend it against foreign threats.

"It must be a total effort that all of us must mount on the entire population. That way we hope it will seep down to the level of the private soldier," he told a recent forum.

Goh, who sometimes is listed as a possible successor to Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew, did not identify any potential external threats.

In recent years Singapore, which is about the size of Chicago, has had friendly relations with its two closest neigbors, Indonesia with a population of 150 million and Malaysia with 13 million people. Other senior officials occasionally question the regional ambitions of Vietnam and the Soviet Union.

Defense strategy is based on the porcupine which is small and normally friendly but is armed with dangerous quills to use against attackers.

"Very few animals take on the porcupine — that's the kind of overall defense strategy we will have," Goh said.

Concern about low morale is not new in Singapore. A 1978 book titled "Youth in the Army" reported that many draftees did not understand why they were in the service and wanted only to shed their uniforms as soon as possible.

The book said goldbricking was common with some desperate enough to chop off their trigger fingers to avoid active duty.

To curb draft dodging, the government recently increased the bond that young men eligible for military service must put up before they go abroad to study from $23,585 to $35,377.

Those who complete their 24 to 36 months of full-time service can wind up in jail if they ignore followup compulsory reserve training each year until they are 45.

The army has 35,000 men plus 50,000 reservists. The navy has 3,000 personnel and the air force 4,000.

Other paramilitary units include 7,500 police and a home guard of about 30,000. Women are not subject to the draft but do serve in non-combat roles.

Singapore is part of a five-power defense agreement with Australia, Britain, Malaysia and New Zealand. New Zealand bases a battalion here under this pact which requires Australia, Britain and New Zealand to consult — but not necessarily make a defense commitment — if there is an external threat to Malaysia or Singapore.

In addition to unmotivated draftees, defense planners have been bedeviled by the lack of suitable training space at home. Taiwan has been used for armor and artillery training and maneuvers are sometimes held in Australia and Brunei, the British-protected sultinate on Borneo.

Singapore newspapers warn the public when exercises are to be held on this crowded island. The last two lines usually say, "Blanks and thunderflashes will be used. The public is advised not to be alarmed."

Officials say it is still too early to measure how much more attractive a series of moves might have made military life to young Singaporeans.

NOW president to fight extradition to Louisiana

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ginny Eleanor Foat, the California president of the National Organization for Women, says she will fight extradition to Louisiana on a murder charge.

Ms. Foat, 42, remained jailed today after a judge denied bail because the charge against her carries a possible sentence of death or life imprisonment.

Deputy District Attorney Robert Lord said at a hearing Wednesday that Ms. Foat is wanted in the robbery and bludgeon murder of an elderly South American slain in the New Orleans area in 1965.

She acknowledged she is the person identified as Virginia Galluzzo in the warrant from Jefferson Parish, La. "That's my maiden name, yes," she told Municipal Court Judge Michale Tynan.

She said she had decided to fight extradition, and one of her attorneys said she would plead innocent to any charge against her. After denying bail, Tynan set an extradition hearing for Feb. 11.

Louisiana officials said Ms. Foat, prominent in California Democratic politics, was implicated in the case by her ex-husband, John Joseph Sidote, who was booked on the same fugitive warrant late Wednesday.

Authorities in Carson City, Nev., said Sidote, who had been jailed there on a drunken driving charge last week, was rebooked on the murder warrant from Jefferson Parish, La., and was held without bail.

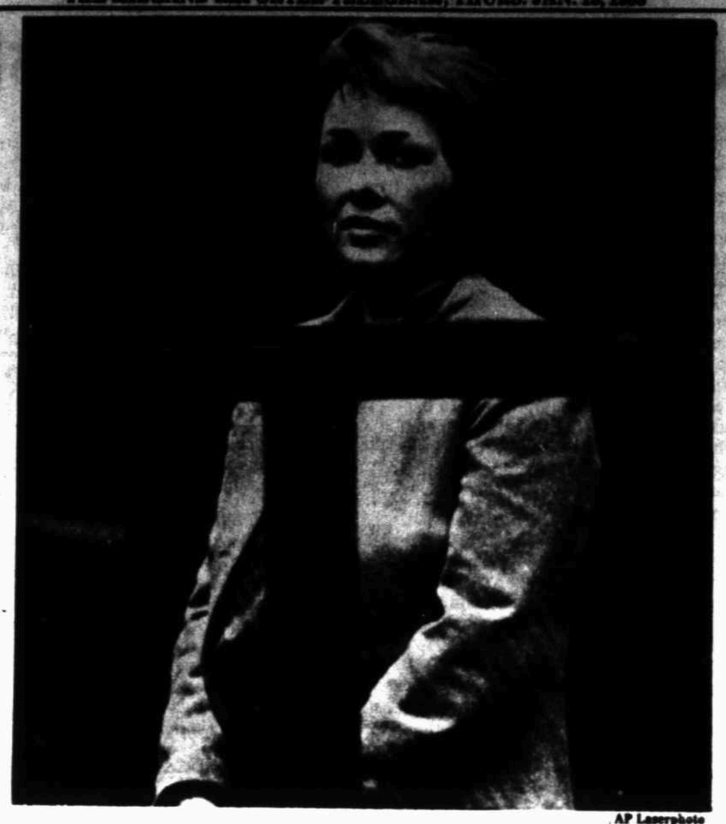

Sidote alleges he and Ms. Foat robbed the victim, Moises Chayo, of $1,400 and she hit him over the head with a tire iron, according to Jefferson Parish Sheriff Henry Lee..

Ms. Foat's attorney, Kay Tsenin, suggested the allegations might be a matter of revenge by the ex-husband.

Meanwhile, former presidential adviser Midge Costanza expressed support for Ms. Moat.

The former aide to President Jimmy Carter said colleagues knew that Ms. Foat was arrested in 1977 and extradited to Nevada where her ex-husband had implicated her in another murder — the shooting of a San Francisco hotel executive.

The charges were dismissed when Sidote refused to repeat his allegations at a preliminary hearing. Convicted in that case, he was sentenced to 25 years and then paroled in 1981.

Environmental groups file suit to overturn ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several environmental groups say they are filing a lawsuit against Interior Secretary James Watt to overturn his decision removing wilderness protection from thousands of acres in 10 Western states.

The suit was to be filed today in federal district court in Sacramento, Calif. Terry Sopher, a spokesman for the Wilderness Society, said California was chosen because it is one of the states most affected by Watt's decision.

The environmental groups are contending among other things that Watt violated requirements that he prepare an environmental impact statement on his action.

Watt provoked a storm of protest two weeks ago when he announced he was removing 805,000 acres of land from further study as candidates to be included in the 80-million-acre wilderness protection system.

Watt contended that the land had been improperly included along with 24 million acres of Interior Department land which is being surveyed for possible inclusion in the wilderness system.

The land affected by Watt's action included 341,000 acres in 158 areas which are less than 5,000 acres each and another 465,000 acres where the federal government owns the land but not the mineral rights underneath.

In addition, up to 1.5 million acres that environmentalists say don't have wilderness characteristics on their own but adjoin wilderness areas would also be removed.

Sopher said the suit will attack Watt's contention that a 1976 land management law requies him to drop so-called "split-estate" land where the government does not own the mineral resources.

Watt has said his order does not mean any areas will be developed immediately, but merely removes them from a category that contains 24 million acres of land being studied for the wilderness system.

Development will not occur until each area is reviewed by the Bureau of Land Management and some will end being recommended for wilderness protection, he has said.

However, Sopher said, "Until they issue a new policy, these areas don't have any protection."

Among the groups planning to file suit are the Wilderness Society, the Sierra Club, Natural Resources Defense Council, Environmental Defense Fund, National Audubon Society and the National Wildlife Federation.

Court to decide if contraceptive ad ban constitutional

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court soon will decide if the government may outlaw unsolicited mailed advertisements of condoms and other contraceptives, a ban some call an outmoded remnant of a 19th century anti-vice crusade.

The court is reviewing a lower court decision that said the ban unconstitutionally infringes on freedom of speech. It is expected to announce a ruling in the case by July.

On Wednesday, Youngs Drug Products Corp., a leading manufacturer of the contraceptive devices, urged the court during an hour-long hearing to uphold the lower court.

Jerold Solovy of Chicago, the lawyer for Youngs, said the advertising ban is a vestige of an 1873 law sponsored by morals crusader Anthony Comstock. He was "the mortal enemy of the birth control movement" and his views are not shared by many today, Solovy said.

Youngs, which manufactures Trojan brand condoms, "wants to educate the adult population," Solovy said.

Besides violating free speech rights, the New Jersey-based company said, limiting advertising of contraceptives may impair health and contribute to unwanted pregnancies.

But David Strauss, a Justice Department lawyer who presented the government's case, said the ads violate personal privacy and could be seen by children.

He said the information only should go to homes which request the material.

"It's simply inevitable that some will fall into the hands of children against their parents' wishes," Strauss said.

Members of the court pointedly challenged some of his assertions.

Justice Thurgood Marshall said, "You're assuming children open their parents' mail. I don't think a child has the right to look at the mail" addressed to an adult.

Justice John Paul Stevens questioned whether requiring the ads to be mailed in sealed envelopes wouldn't be a less restrictive means of protecting children.

"People who are concerned they are offensive are not likely to put them on the dining room table," he said.

And when Strauss noted that the ban does not apply to doctors, Justice Harry A. Blackmun suggested, "Maybe there are some physicians who don't want to receive them."

The drug company, in legal documents that noted the prevalence of sexual issues on daytime televised soap operas, said education about use of condoms could prevent disease.

"There are 20 million cases of herpes a year and the only known prevention of it is a prophylactic," said Solovy.

Seven family planning organizations joined the case on the drug company's side. They said the cost of restricting advertising on contraception is "millions of unintended pregnancies, hundreds of thousands of unwanted children, millions of abortions and a venereal disease epidemic."

Youngs planned its ad campaign in 1979 and sued to overturn the ban rather than risk prosecution under a law that carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine for repeat violators.

U.S. District Judge John Penn in Washington struck down the law as unconstitutional in 1981.

Woman who eluded authorities for three years arrested by FBI

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. (AP) — A tiny, demure woman accused of killing her husband and poisoning her daughter with arsenic was arrested by FBI agents here Wednesday after eluding authorities for more than three years.

Audrey Marie Hilley, 49, of Anniston, Ala., was arrested on a charge of unlawful flight to avoid prosecution, said Paul Daly, special agent in charge of the Albany, N.Y., FBI office.

Mrs. Hilley vanished Nov. 18, 1979, from a hotel near Birmingham after she was indicted for murder in the 1975 death of her husband, Frank. In 1979, authorities discovered he had died of acute arsenic poisoning. She also was charged with attempted murder in the poisoning of her daughter, 22-year-old Carol Hilley.

Miss Hilley, who was paralyzed by arsenic poisoning, was hospitalized in 1979. Later she made a complete recovery.

Before 1979 was over, investigators found that both Mrs. Hilley's mother, Lucille Frazier, and her mother-in-law, Carrie Hilley, had significant, but not fatal traces of arsenic in their systems when they died.

Daly said Mrs. Hilley was using a false name and was arrested at 5 p.m. at work.

Brattleboro is on the Vermont-New Hampshire border.

Mrs. Hilley, who worked in Brattleboro and lived in Marlow, N.H, about 25 miles away, was scheduled to appear before a federal magistrate in Rutland, Vt., on Thursday.

She faces charges of unlawful flight from prosecution, attempted murder by poison of her daughter, first-degree murder in the poisoning death of her husband, and two bad check charges totaling more than $6,000.

Since 1979, authorities have received reports that people had spotted Mrs. Hilley in Alabama, Atlanta, Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas and Montana.

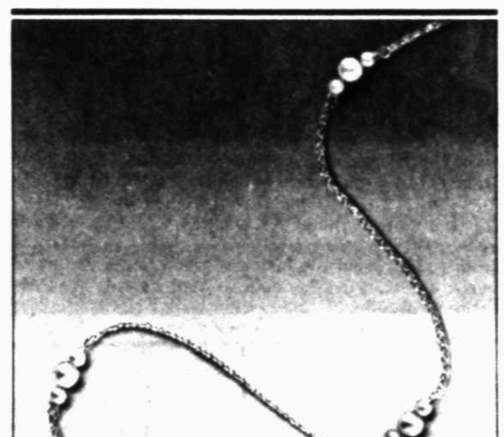

FBI agent Cecil Moses in Birmingham, Ala., said Mrs. Hilley went "on a rather interesting odyssey since leaving here," but he declined to elaborate.

"She's been cooperative," said Moses, who has been in close contact with the FBI in Albany. "She admitted to her true identity."

Civil rights leader questions motives of officials who permitted KKK rally

DUBLIN, Ga. (AP) — A civil rights leader says he questions the motives of officials who permitted a Ku Klux Klan rally in Wrightsville less than a week after a violent clash there between blacks and whites.

The Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, testified Wednesday in the trial of three civil rights suits against Wrightsville and Johnson County officials.

Lowery told the all-white jury that he was suspicious of the decision by the city of Wrightsville to grant a parade permit to the Klan after granting one to the local SCLC chapter.

"I question the judgment of officials who would permit the Ku Klux Klan to assemble at the same time and the same place as the SCLC...," Lowery said. "I question the motive of such a permit."

The three suits, which seek $21.3 million in damages, allege that blacks were deprived of their civil rights in a series of incidents in Wrightsville in early 1980.

A fourth suit, combined for trial with the other three, asks U.S. District Judge Dudley Bowen to block the prosecution of blacks indicted on charges stemming from rioting in the east-central Georgia city of Wrightsville.

The disturbances began April 8, 1980, when whites attacked a smaller group of black protesters who were demonstrating at the Johnson County courthouse for more jobs for blacks. On April 12, 1980, blacks marched to the courthouse where a Klan rally, led by J.B. Stoner, was under way.

Lowery, who led the April 12 march, said he and his fellow marchers were jeered by the Klansmen and Stoner. He said Stoner "engaged in tirades against us...questioned our humanness and our rights...compared us to animals and encouraged violence against us."

Lowery said he went to Wrightsville at the invitation of the SCLC chapter there in an effort to "redeem Wrightsville and bring about an aura of brotherhood and justice in the county."

Most of Wednesday's testimony focused on Johnson County Sheriff Roland Attaway and the April 8, 1980, disturbance.

Reagan applauds his pro-farm moves

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, promising to help America's struggling farmers, is departing from his free-market philosophy to try turning the situation around.

"We don't have time to stand around chewing our cud," Reagan said. "So to the American farm family, let me say, help is on the way."

Within 20 minutes Tuesday, Reagan told the national convention of the American Farm Bureau Federation in Dallas:

—He is bypassing Congress to revive a payment-in-kind, or PIK, program giving surplus grain to farmers making major production cutbacks. This is an effort to deplete the huge commodity stockpiles that are driving farm prices to record lows.

—He has signed "contract sanctity" legislation barring the government from imposing embargoes on farm export contracts already negotiated. Those contracts remain valid for 270 days after an embargo unless a national emergency or war is declared.

While opposed by some administration officials because it restricts foreign policy options, the guarantee will restore America's tarnished image as a reliable grain supplier, farm leaders say.

—He is making available $250 million in direct federal credit and $1 billion in federal loan guarantees to boost U.S. export sales and counteract export subsidies provided by America's agricultural competitors. "We aren't going to let ourselves be plowed under," he said.

—Federal farm credit interest rates will drop below 11 percent on Jan. 17, falling to 10.25 percent for operating loans and 10.75 percent for real estate loans, and loan officers will continue using all available means to keep farmers in business.

—He is ready to junk a plan that effectively cuts dairy price supports by 50 cents a hundred pounds if it doesn't curb overproduction. Dairy farmers have complained bitterly about the program, passed by Congress last summer, and have won a court order blocking it at least temporarily.

A White House aide, who asked to remain unnamed, conceded that the president's support among farmers has deteriorated and that the slew of programs and policies announced Tuesday is aimed at helping him regain his standing in rural America.

"That's what this trip is all about," he said. "It's intended to assuage them."

The president, reviewing the depressed state of the rural economy, cited low farm income and the rising number of farm foreclosures and sales. Tear gas was used last week to disperse an angry mob of farmers at a sale in Colorado.

"But let's face it, let's not fool anybody, until farm prices go up, you will be hurting," Reagan told the 4,500 Farm Bureau delegates from across the country.

To raise prices, he dusted off a crop reduction scheme born in the Depression and used widely in the 1960s. Known as PIK, Reagan called it a "crop swap," and Agriculture Secretary John Block said it could shave $3 billion to $5 billion off the federal farm program budget over the next two years.

William Lesher, Reagan's top farm economist, said even with those savings, it will be difficult to keep the 1983 farm program budget below last year's $12 billion pricetag.

Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, promised full congressional review of the plan within the next several weeks.

Wheat farmers would get 95 percent of their normal production on the PIK acres and the other's 80 percent. They can do anything with the commodity they want expect put it back under government loan.

Farmer's friends haven't given up

LONDON, Ohio (AP) — Farmers trying to block the forced sale of Doug Daily's 191-acre farm failed after he tried unsuccessfully to renegotiate a $400,000 debt on the property, paving the way for a sheriff's auction.

The property is scheduled to go on the block at 10 a.m. Friday at the Madison County Courthouse.

Members of Ohio's fledgling Family Farm Movement haven't given up, however, Daily, 37, said. At a meeting Tuesday night of about 200 farmers — many of them wearing the red armbands of the farm movement — Daily said he may take legal action.

"I hope nobody in here feels the effort was wasted," Dailey said of a two-day protest by farmers last week during which they occupied the office of the Production Credit Association, to whom Daily owes the money.

"There may be a legal solution," he said. "We've got to sit down and examine where we are."

Dailey's brother, Dick, said the farmers' group hopes to force the sale to be aborted. When asked what tactics might be used, he only grinned and said, "We want to keep them guessing."

Dick Dailey called on farmers to show up for the sale.

"Let's find out if we can stop a sale on the courthouse steps," he said.

"This game isn't over. The only thing we've had is the kickoff."

As many as 150 farmers supporting Doug Dailey marched on U.S. Route 42 south of London and gathered outside the local PCA office about noon. That was the time set for a meeting between Doug Dailey and PCA officials, who promised to tell him whether a proposal to renegotiate the loan was acceptable.

About 15 minutes later, Dick Dailey emerged from the building to say his brother had been turned down.

He said his brother offered to use equity in his farm equipment, valued at about $100,000, as collateral for a $400,000 loan he owes PCA, but that the agency rejected the offer.

"We just wouldn't last that long if we knuckled under to every loan in trouble," Columbus PCA President Don Johnson said. "We don't have any room to negotiate the forgiveness of a debt. We do have some room for the timing of (repaying) the debt."

As the Daileys and other farmers prepared for the noon meeting, BancOhio repossessed Doug Dailey's car as it was parked several hundred feet from the PCA office. When Doug Dailey and his wife finally emerged from the building, they had to accept a ride from friends.

Reagan may mandate better worker treatment

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is expected shortly to sign legislation expanding the responsibilities of farmers and agricultural associations for the treatment of migrant and seasonal workers.

But it also exempts growers from what had become a series of complex and, at times, contradictory enforcement actions.

The old law, passed in 1963 and amended in 1974, was intended to improve the working conditions of migrant workers. But the law only applied to farm labor contractors.

Because only labor contractors were required to register with the federal government and were legally responsible for maintaining fair working conditions for migrants, enforcement of the law bogged down in legal battles over who was a farm labor contractor.

Under the new law, all agricultural employers, whether farm labor contractors, farmers or agricultural organizations are required to provide certain minimum working conditions for migrant and seasonal workers.

These include:

—Requiring the employer to provide in writing to employees wages, the period of employment and transportation, housing or any other employee benefits to be provided and the the charges, if any, associated with those benefits.

—Notifying employees of any work stoppage at the place of employment.

—Prohibiting any agricultural employer from requiring an employee to purchase any goods or services exclusively from the employer.

—Providing safe and sanitary housing and transportation.

Growers, however, are exempted from the costly and time consuming requirement that they register with the federal government as a farm labor contractors.

The House Education and Labor Committee said that the question of defining a farm labor contract had "become paramount" so that "worker protections have often been relegated to a secondary status."

It added that "many migrant and seasonal agricultural workers remain today, as in the past, the most abused of all workers in the United States."

Agriculture undersecretary named

WASHINGTON (AP) — A career government economist, J. Dawson Ahalt, has been named acting deputy undersecretary for international affairs and commodity programs in the Agriculture Department.

The appointment, effective immediately, was announced earlier this week by Agriculture Secretary John R. Block.

Ahalt will be responsible for "providing policy direction on commodity programs" in his new job. Deputy Undersecretary Alan Tracy will continue to concentrate on international affairs.

Block said Ahalt will return to his previous position as deputy assistant secretary for economics after the office of the undersecretary "is more fully staffed."

U.S. to sell parts to Guatemala

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Satisfied with the human rights progress there since President Efrain Rios Montt took power, the Reagan administration announced last week that it will let Guatemala buy nearly $6.4 million in helicopter parts and other items for its air force.

The military sales, for cash, will be the first of parts or equipment the United States has made the Central American country in more than five years.

In 1977, Gen. Kjell Laugerud Garcia, then Guatemalan president, withdrew his request for military purchases in protest of a State Department human rights report critical of Guatemala. Under terms of the Arms Export Control Act, human rights violators are ineligible for U.S. military assistance.

The current decision came "after extended consultations with the Congress and analysis of the situation in Guatemala," State Department spokesman John Hughes said.

"The decision was made in light of human rights improvements that have taken place in Guatemala since the Rios Montt government came to power in March 1982," Hughes explained.

THE DEPARTMENT spokesman conceded that charges of human rights violations against Guatemala are still rife.

"While we want to see further progress in Guatemala in promoting respect for human rights, President Rios Montt has taken significant steps in this area. Progress has been made," Hughes said.

Since last March 23, when Rios Montt assumed power after a bloodless coup ousted former President Gen. Romeo Lucas Garcia, "political violence in the cities has declined dramatically," Hughes said.

"Recently there are indications that the level of violence in the countryside has declined as well.

"Villagers have been provided food and medical supplies along with the means to defend themselves.

"Plans are under way for the election of a constituent assembly.

"The Indian population is increasingly participating in the country's political process, and President Rios Montt has been attacking corruption within the government," Hughes said.

THE STATE Department spokesman refused to be drawn out on the basic reasons for the U.S. decision to accede to Guatemala's requests, some of which are more than three years old.

Asked why Guatemala needs parts for its UH-1H helicopters, he said, "I guess that they have helicopters that don't fly."

Questioned about the guerrilla war Guatemala has been fighting for years now, and whether "the United States believes that it is Cuban-supported," Hughes said that he could not go beyond his prepared statement.

The U.S. decision to resume military sales to Guatemala brought immediate adverse reaction from human rights activists who have been objecting to the signs of a thaw in relations with Guatemala since President Reagan and Rios Montt met Dec. 4 at the conclusion of Reagan's Latin American trip.

"The administration in effect is saying, 'A job well done' to a government responsible for the slaughter of as many as 8,000 of its own people — mainly Indians," the Council on Hemispheric Affairs declared.

Opposition was noted too in Congress.

REP. TOM HARKIN, D-Iowa, by late Friday had 75 co-sponsors for a resolution he introduced that, if approved by the House and Senate, and signed by the president, would prohibit the administration from providing Guatemala military assistance.

There is no likelihood the president would sign any such resolution, a Harkin aide said.

Although the State Department said responsibility for the decision was that of Secretary of State George Shultz, many observers here attribute it to President Reagan.

The president was said to have been favorably impressed by Gen. Rios Montt after meeting the Guatemalan president in San Pedro Sula, Honduras, last month. Shortly after their meeting, Mr. Reagan praised Rioss Montt as "a man of great personal integrity and commitment."

Mr. Reagan said then that Guatemala "is confronting a brutal challenge from guerrillas armed and supported by others outside Guatemala" and assured Rios Montt "that the United States is committed to support (your) efforts to restore democracy and to address the root causes of this violent insurgency."

THE GUATEMALANS "made quite a presentation and brought a lot of information and material to us," Mr. Reagan told reporters later. "And frankly I'm inclined to believe they've been getting a bum rap."

The situation in Guatemala was recently described by the U.S. ambassador there, Frederic Chapin, as a "civil war initiated by the leftist insurgents now united as the URNG (Guatemalan National Revolutionary Union)." The URNG is made up of the Guerrilla Army of the Poor (EGP), the Guatemalan Communist party (PGT), the Rebel Armed Forces (FAR) and the Armed People's Revolutionary Organization (ORPA).

The URNG is an umbrella group, formed less than a year ago, reportedly at the urging of Cuban President Fidel Castro, to coordinate military activities of the various guerrilla organizations, the oldest of which dates from 1960. Political coordination of the Guatemalan leftist groups is handled through the Democratic Front Against Repression (FDCR), based in Mexico City.

ACCORDING TO Ambassador Chapin, Rios Montt offered to hold talks with the guerrilla leaders, who were in Mexico, last June, but the FDCR rejected the proposed dialogue, claiming a "lack of conditions that would allow broad and democratic discussions." Since then, URNG officials have proclaimed their intention "to continue their struggle until they obtain final victory," the ambassador reported.

"The war has continued to this day," he cabled the State Department.

"As in any war, there are numerous combatant deaths from military clashes; as in any war, there are also, unfortunately, many non-combatant deaths as a result of these clashes. Such deaths are inevitable where almost every military action taken is proximate to the civilian population."

Crisis may be hard to solve, say parties

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Three leading opposition parties say the government's plan to settle the nation's severe financial crisis may take a lot longer than President Miguel de la Madrid predicts.

Spokesmen for the three major opposition parties said the nation's inflationary woes and unemployment problems are too complex to be solved in two years, as de la Madrid's government hopes.

"We all trust the nation may surmount its problems quickly and regain lost progress, but we question whether that prophetic assurance will stand," said spokesman Gonzalo Altamirano Dimas of the National Action Party. The political moderate party won 15 percent of the vote against 75 percent for de la Madrid's Institutional Revolutionary Party last year in July 4 general elections.

Amarillo citizens generally ignore warheads plant

EDITOR'S NOTE — If a nuclear freeze ever came to pass, they'd feel it first in Amarillo, Texas. That's where the United States assembles all its nuclear warheads. The Pantex plant, where it's done, behind seven seals of security, is a mainstay of the city's economy. Many in town approve or accept, fewer don't, and most prefer to talk about something else.

AMARILLO (AP) - Just north of here, in a canyon veined with high-grade flint, the people who lived here 10,000 years ago gathered to fashion mankind's most primitive weapons, spears and clubs.

Just east of here, on a flat, shadowless plain studded with thick concrete bunkers, 2,600 workers gather every day to assemble mankind's ultimate weapons, nuclear warheads.

A full circle. The irony, however goes unremarked by most of the people of Amarillo.

Most of Amarillo's 150,000 citizens don't seem to pay much attention to either place — except on infrequent occasions, such as some years ago when the government named the one site a national monument, and some months ago when the bishop called the other a national shame.

"Pantex?" said a desk clerk, an Amarillo native. "Oh, dear, I don't know. Paul," she called to the bell captain, "can you tell this gentleman how to get to Pantex?"

Pantex is the name of the warhead factory. The name subtly reveals its location, in the Texas panhandle, if not what goes on there. The authority listed on the No Trespassing signs, posted every 10 yards on a chain-link fence surrounding 9,100 acres, is "United States Energy Research and Development Administration," which reveals even less.

Trucks, trains and airplanes come to Pantex hauling plutonium from Colorado, uranium and tritium from South Carolina, firing switches from Missouri, detonators from Ohio, neutron generators from Florida. Pantex workers, wearing smocks and film badges to measure radiation, put the parts together. Pantex is the end of the line.

In Amarillo, most folks don't want to talk about that.

They don't mind talking about Pantex's $57 million annual payroll, its $97 million operating budget, its $20 million construction budget, its $3 million utility bill, its $220,000 United Way contribution, largest in the Panhandle, its atomic merit-badge program for Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, but they do not want to talk about what goes on at Pantex.

For 12 years, what went on there was classified as top secret and therefore criminal to talk about. In 1963 that restriction was removed, but the heritage of silence about Pantex lingers, perhaps out of patriotism, which is deep-seated in this part of the country, perhaps out of a natural reluctance to dwell upon the unthinkable. Whatever, the attitude here is the opposite of that in Oak Ridge, Tenn., where the town's role in the development of the atomic bomb is a Chamber of Commerce boast.

A GOVERNMENT SURVEY, just completed, shows that an overwhelming majority of Amarillo residents approve of what is done at Pantex. They just don't like to talk about it and are not curious about details.

The congressman representing Pantex's district was unaware, for example, that nuclear waste from around the globe was brought to Pantex for storage. He found out about it in the newspaper — which had happened upon that fact in a public document that was, at the time, three years old.

So, when Catholic Bishop Leroy Matthiessen suggested, publicly, not long ago, that Pantex's employees might want to consider other, more peaceful, lines of work, it made the sort of news that most in Amarillo resented. Those who phoned radio talk shows and wrote letters to the editor disagreed with him on grounds that nuclear warheads were a necesssary, if disagreeable, deterrent to war, but what they seemed to dislike as much was the attention he called to Pantex.

"Pantex has been here 40 years," said Mayor Rick Klein, "I don't understand people making a fuss about it."

Many in Amarillo are, today, uneasy with the new attention drawn to Pantex ancillary to the MX missile debate. After all, 10,000 missiles, 10 warheads per missile, figure it up. Pantex might be the end of the line but, in Amarillo, it also is the bottom line. In Amarillo, fallout from the MX translates into one word: dollars.

Forty years. Two generations. In that time, the habit of unquestioning silence in Amarillo about what went on at Pantex grew in some cases into refusal to believe it.

"I WORKED AT PANTEX for 20 years and so help me God I did not know what they did there," Agnes Klinke said.

"I knew I worked for the Atomic Energy Commission — that's what it was then — but I didn't know what they did. I typed up papers for security clearance, that was all. I never asked people down on the line what they did and they never said. We weren't supposed to ask and they weren't supposed to say.

"When it finally came out that Pantex made nuclear bombs, we didn't believe it. They were always telling us not to say anything about what we did and there they were saying it. We all wondered how much truth there was to it."

Miss Klinke is a gentle and hospitable lady of 73 years. She speaks of Pantex and everything connected with it in terms anything but ladylike, but not because of what is made there.

She lives a stone's throw from the Pantex fence. When she was a young woman she lived in a house on the other side, before there was a fence, and remembers vividly, and vehemently, the day in 1942 her family was ordered to move.

"They called all the neighbors together, 20 families, and told us we had two weeks to get out. They gave my father $60 an acre. He had turned down $100 and wouldn't have sold for $200. They wouldn't even let us cut our wheat. They turned our home place into a staff house. They kept the wheat."

THUS WAS THE PANTEX plant born, to make World War II bombs, on land that had been disturbed only by plowshares.

The plant closed when the war ended. When it reopened in 1951, to make bombs of a different sort, Agnes Klinke swallowed hard and took a job. She needed a job.

"She didn't know what they did at Pantex any more than anyone else," Bishop Matthiesen recalled. "I ought to know. I was Agnes Klinke's parish priest.

"I was the pastor out there for nine years and I didn't know what was going on it my own parish — even after it was public knowledge. My Lord, I used to write character references for people to get jobs there.

"When it became known that it was a nuclear warhead plant, people turned their backs on that knowledge, I among them. We block the whole business out of out minds. It is that denial that is frightening."

OMB asks for review of military pay

BY PHILLIP SWANN

From Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, — Congress would accept a Reagan administration proposal to reduce a 7.6 percent military pay increase that the Pentagon had targeted for fiscal 1984, congressional military experts predict.

The Office of Management and Budget has reportedly asked Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger to review proposals to freeze military pay at 1983 levels or hold the increase at 4 percent.

Pentagon officials have estimated that a 7.6 percent increase is necessary to strengthen the all-volunteer army, and President Reagan said last year he might support the hike.

But now the White House, which is expected to submit its fiscal 1984 budget to Congress late this month, is exploring several ways to reduce what some officials estimate will be a $200 billion deficit. The Pentagon budget, a one-time sacred cow on Capitol Hill, is now first in line for the chopping block.

A freeze on military pay would save approximately $2.9 billion while a 4 percent increase would save $1.37 billion, according to the Pentagon. Defense officials, who oppose the cuts, are likely to argue that they would bring back an underpaid, low-quality volunteer army.

The congressional military experts say that the mood in Congress is that there be cuts in defense as well as domestic programs. They add, however, that there could be a fight if the Reagan administration calls for a freeze on military pay.

"They would accept the 4 percent increase," said one top aide to a key member on the House Armed Services Committee. "But there is an element in Congress pushing for a freeze on all government programs. The tendency here is to give the military something for the cost of living."

The committee aide and other military observers noted that a 7.6 percent increase may not be needed to man the all-volunteer army because of a substantial increase in recruits. In addition, the drop in the inflation rate has diminished the need for higher salaries.

"This country has higher salaries for the military than any country in the world," said Kelsay Meek, a military affairs aide for Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D-San Antonio. "They've also received good increases lately (a 4 percent increase for each of the last two years.) I would say there is an excellent chance that Congress would accept only 4 percent. The deficits are going to be very high."

An aide for Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman John Tower, R-Texas, said the senator would "be inclined" to support the 7.6 percent increase. But the aide said Tower would not comment further until Reagan officially submits the budget proposal at the end of the month.

Several congressional staffers predicted that Tower and other military supporters would eventually back a pay reduction to appease liberals who are threatening to fight the MX missile and other weapon systems.

"They (military personnel) need to survive, but we're going have to tighten our belts," said Rep. Soloman Ortiz, the freshman Corpus Christi Democrat who was just named to the House Armed Services Committee. "We will have to compromise."

Handicapped learn to help each other

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (AP) — Ruth Van Deursen has multiple sclerosis and George Hewitt is mildly retarded. Thanks to each other, they now lead more productive lives in a program to help the handicapped give mutual aid.

Since they were brought together by a program for the developmentally disabled, Hewitt has worked as Ms. Van Deursen's attendant, moving her in and out of her wheelchair, taking her shopping, cooking, cleaning and washing for her.

Ms. Van Deursen pays Hewitt for his work, helping him to keep a steady job.

They found each other through Rolling Start, a non-profit organization that operates services for the disabled and helps to pair attendants with physically disabled people.

Rolling Start runs the Transitional Living Center here, teaching students to cope with their disabilities and become more mobile.

In the past year, Rolling Start has extendend its attendant-training program to the developmentally disabled — the mentally retarded and those with cerebral palsy or emotional problems.

Training director Jeff Killian said 80 percent of the trainees have found jobs.

One is Hewitt, 22, a former Pacific High School student who said he "wasn't doing much of anything" after he failed to get into auto mechanics or electronics. He completed the 6- to 7-week course of half-day sessions in the Attendant Care Training Program that includes lectures, films and work experience.

"I was taught how to catheterize people who need it, how to transfer a disabled person from bed to wheelchair and from chair to commode or bath," he said. "I learned how to dress people...cook, wash clothes, shop for groceries and clean house.

"In the time I've been Ruth's attendant I've enjoyed the work very much."

Christine Rozzano, a Rolling Start counselor for both Hewitt and Ms. Van Deursen, said, "I know he has had problems getting to this point, but now he's working, making some money and making a contribution to society."

"George is a good cook," said Ms. Van Deurson, who is equally satisfied with the arrangement, "and you can see how he keeps the place clean."

In 1968, Ms. Van Deurson, now in her early 30s, learned she had multiple sclerosis, a disease of the central nervous system. At the time she was a registered scuba diver, was newly married, and was about to get her pilot's license.

"Then my marriage fell apart, there was a divorce and I moved (from the East) to California," she said. She also lost her managerial-level job, she said, and now is unemployed, but takes classes at the Transitional Living Center.

Multiple sclerosis is an incurable and progressive disease whose precise cause is not known. It gradually weakened Ms. Van Deurson's legs and stiffened her hands. She said her eyesight is also weakening.

Ms. Rozzano says the center wants to spread the word about the mutual aid program.

GOP mayor wants public works jobs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cleveland Mayor George Voinovich believes Congress should create public works and public service jobs to deal with the nation's high unemployment.

Voinovich, representing the National League of Cities, told the Senate Labor employment and productivity subcommittee Wednesday that the "people need jobs — and my city administration needs their services.

"Notwithstanding its unpopularity, I think Congress has got to reconsider its view on a longer term PSE-type (public service employment) program for areas of chronic high unemployment," he said.

The program should not be national in scope, such as the ill-fated Comprehensive Employment and Training Act, which was abolished last year by the Reagan administration.

Voinovich suggested that any program be limited to areas where unemployment exceeds 8 percent and have a life span of two or three years.

"If putting additional employees to work in the public sector is philosophically upsetting to some, I would suggest that standing in a cheese line or losing your house because you can't afford the mortgage payments is a lot more upsetting to many more people," said Voinovich.

The Republican mayor made his remarks at the first of two hearings by the subcommittee, chaired by Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., on the role of the federal government on the creation of job programs.

Earlier, Alice M. Rivlin, Congressional Budget Office director, told the panel the nation's economy should begin to recover this year year, but unemployment won't drop below the 10 percent mark until early in 1984, if at then.

Cranston to run as peace candidate for president

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democratic Whip Alan Cranston, a nuclear freeze advocate whose efforts to control atomic weapons go back to 1945, is staking out a position as the peace candidate for president in 1984.

"That theme is our campaign theme because that is the reason the senator wants to be president," Sergio Bendixen, Cranston's campaign manager, told reporters Wednesday.

"There is no other candidate today who is putting that issue at the center of his campaign," added Harris Wofford, co-chairman of Cranston's advisory committee.

Bendixen and Wofford spoke at a news conference where they announced the California senator has become the second prospective presidential candidate to qualify for federal matching funds. The first was former Vice President Walter F. Mondale.

To qualify, candidates must raise $5,000 in contributions of $250 or less this year in 20 states. They get the federal money next year.

Cranston, 68, became involved in the world peace movement at a conference in Dublin, N.H. in October 1945, two months after the first atomic bombs were dropped on Japan. He was named to a committee that was supposed to come up with proposals for world laws to insure disarmament. From 1949 to 1952 he was president of United World Federalists.

Cranston has supported proposals in the Senate and on the California ballot to freeze nuclear arms. He also opposes the proposed MX nuclear missile, which Wofford said he "intends to fight against with even more strength" in the Congress that reconvenes Jan. 25.

Cranston was not at the news conference. He is in California meeting with delegates to the State Democratic Convention that meets Saturday in Sacramento.

Cranston has visited 37 states since forming a presidential committee a year ago, campaigning on both the nuclear issue and the Reagan administration's economic policies. He plans to announce his candidacy Feb. 2.

On Dec. 29, the advisory committee told Cranston that his emphasis on the arms race "will have a special appeal" to supporters of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., another nuclear freeze advocate, who has announced he will not run for president.

But Wofford said Cranston would not be a "one-issue candidate" because of his involvement in economic, environmental and other issues.

"I think a test of his candidacy will be whether he can link the issues of the economy and the arms race. It's not just that one issue," he said.

When a reporter said that voters, as Cranston himself has observed, seem to be more worried about the economy than about nuclear war, Bendixen replied: "We did not take a poll and then decide that the major theme of the campaign would be peace."

Ike Turner returns to community where he, Tina began their careers

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill. (AP) — Musician Ike Turner has returned to the community where he and ex-wife Tina launched their careers in the 1960s, hoping to open a nightclub and produce a new record.

Ike and Tina Turner gained worldwide popularity with their revved-up rock 'n' roll, especially in their hit rendition of "Proud Mary." They were divorced in 1976.

Last week Turner, 48, moved back into the big, brick house where the couple lived from 1954 to 1962.

The singer said he has high hopes for the future. He plans to open Ike Turner's Manhattan Club here and produce a single, then an album with a new group of his four sons and other musicians.

LONDON (AP) — Prince Andrew, the second son of Queen Elizabeth II, may be going back to sea aboard the carrier HMS Invincible at the end of the month.

The ship, on which he served as a helicopter co-pilot during the Falkland Islands war against Argentina last year, has undergone maintenance and is engaged in sea trials. It is due to participate in NATO exercises after returning to duty.

After that, the British Press Association says, the carrier to which Andrew's squadron is attached probably will head for the Caribbean, where Andrew, 22, escorted American actress Koo Stark at the start of their heavily publicized romance last fall.

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon is the star attraction tonight at a $120-a-ticket fundraiser, and Republicans expect 1,000 partisans to show up.

Nixon will appear earlier at an even more expensive cocktail party, for which $1,000 buys a ticket and membership in the Capitol 100 Foundation club.

State GOP Executive Director Warren Tomkins thinks the Nixon visit could raise at least $20,000. The last time close to 1,000 people turned out for a Republican fundraiser in South Carolina was in 1970, when the speaker was former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew.

Joan Collins

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Joan Collins, who plays the vindictive seductress Alexis Carrington on television's "Dynasty," has separated from her third husband.

Miss Collins and Ron Kass, who once headed the Beatles' Apple Records and is now producing television specials and record projects, are splitting up because "both are consumed with their work," publicist Justin Pierce said Wednesday. He said no divorce was planned.

Miss Collins, 49, was married in 1952 to English actor Maxwell Reed and divorced in 1957. In 1963, she married singer-producer Anthony Newley. They had two children and were divorced in 1970.

She and Kass were married in 1972.

Reagan to propose 'sub-minimum wage'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, seeking to make a dent in unemployment, will propose legislation allowing employers to pay teen-agers less than minimum wage for summer jobs, administration sources say.

Reagan embraced the "sub-minimum wage" option at a meeting of his Cabinet Council on Economic Affairs Wednesday, and will propose the change in his Jan. 25 State of the Union address, said these sources, who declined to be named publicly.

Administration sources said the "youth differential" — which would permit payment of $2.50 an hour instead of the current $3.35 minimum wage rate — could provide summer work for as many as 600,000 youngsters between the ages of 16 and 20.

Teen-age unemployment hit a record 24.5 percent in December with more than 2 million young people officially listed as jobless. Overall, more than 12 million people were out of work as the unemployment rate hit 10.8 percent.

Meanwhile, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said Wednesday he had proposed an income tax surcharge to the president as part of a list of tax increases that would be triggered into effect after Oct. 1, 1985, if the government's deficits continued to run too high.

Regan would not divulge the other items on the list, but administration sources said an energy tax package was another leading option.

The sources, who did not want to be identified by name, said they expect the president to include the contingency tax plan in his fiscal 1984 budget due out Jan. 31. But which specific tax Reagan would choose was still up in the air Wednesday, they said.

The president continues to oppose any major new taxes in 1983 and 1984 to narrow record deficits expected in the $200 billion-a-year range, contending it is bad economic policy to raise taxes during a recession or at the start of a recovery.

For several weeks, the administration had been considering a host of options for dealing with unemployment — evidently to counter a push by congressional Democrats and organized labor for massive public works programs.

The sources did not divulge what other employment proposals Reagan may have endorsed. The administration, however, already has supported extension of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act, an emergency unemployment compensation program allowing up to 16 weeks of additional jobless benefits for eligible recipients.

Among the other options that have been under consideration are granting tax credits to businesses that hire unemployed workers who have exhausted jobless benefits and slowing the phase-out of unemployment benefits for people who accept part-time work.

The administration had considered a broad-scale tax on unemployment benefits to encourage people on the jobless relief rolls to intensify their search for work. But that option, revealed publicly over the Thanksgiving holidays, was scrapped in the face of a firestorm of criticism by the AFL-CIO and congressional Democrats.

The sources said the youth differential was approved at a meeting of the Cabinet Council on Economic Affairs. It includes Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan; Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan; Martin Feldstein, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, and David A. Stockman, director of the Office of Management and Budget.

Reagan has long supported the concept of a sub-minimum wage for youths, advocating such a change during his campaign for the White House in August 1980.

Reagan considering tax surcharge, oil, gas levies

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is considering an income tax surcharge and new levies on oil and natural gas as options for raising at least $40 billion in fiscal 1986 if needed to lower the budget deficit.

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said Wednesday he had proposed the income tax surcharge to the president as part of a list of tax increases that would be triggered after Oct. 1, 1985, if the government's deficits continued to run too high.

Regan would not divulge the other items on the list, but administration sources said an energy tax package was another leading option.

The sources, who did not want to be identified by name, said they expect the president to include the contingency tax plan in his fiscal 1984 budget plan due out Jan. 31.

Their idea is to show a way for portraying deficits under $100 billion a year through 1988. But which specific tax Reagan would choose was still up in the air Wednesday, they said.

The president continues to oppose any major new taxes in 1983 and 1984 to narrow record deficits expected in the $200 billion-a-year range, contending it is bad economic policy to raise taxes during a recession or at the start of a recovery.

That doesn't include any increases that might be proposed to meet Social Security's financial problems or the government's mounting health care expenditures.

Either a surcharge or a package of energy taxes by itself could raise the $40 billion to $50 billion the Treasury Department has in mind.

Congress agreed to a 10 percent tax surcharge during the administration of President Lyndon Johnson to help finance the Vietnam War.

There has been much talk in Congress over the last two years of imposing up to $5 a barrel on oil imports. Initially, the idea was to encourage conservation, no longer a concern because of the recession.

Many economists have noted this would be a good time politically to impose a fee because oil prices have been falling.

Meanwhile, natural gas is scheduled for removal of some federal price controls beginning in 1985. Reagan would like full decontrol but it is generally believed he could not get Congress to go along without tying decontrol to a windfall profits tax.

Sources, who asked that their names not be used, said several variations of an income tax surcharge were under consideration. One would be a 10 percent surcharge, whereby an individual would compute his income taxes as usual, then add 10 percent on top of whatever his obligation was. That option would raise an estimated $50 billion if adopted in the 1986 fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1, 1985.

The Treasury Department has proposed a backup tax for later years that would be triggered only if the budget deficit continues to run around $100 billion a year or more.

According to latest administration estimates, the deficit will grow from around $200 billion in 1984 to nearly $300 billion by 1988 without major steps to slow federal spending or to raise taxes.

The president's advisers, however, have warned that without declining deficits in future years, interest rates will remain high and a sustained recovery will not be possible.

Regan's solution is the plan for automatic increases, which allows the administration to avoid tax increases now. The Treasury secretary alluded to his proposal during a speech Wednesday, but he refused to discuss it in detail.

Boy's dream to see Dallas Cowboys realized

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The dream of 8½-year-old Trevor Ray, suffering from an inoperable brain tumor, will be realized Saturday afternoon when he sees the Dallas Cowboys in person.

A community group is sending the boy and his family to Texas where Trevor will attend the NFL team's practice.

The trip is the first gift of the Tomorrow Today Foundation, which wants to grant the wishes of children with terminal illnesses.

A patrol car will take Trevor; his mother and stepfather, Larri and Paul Kolan, and older brother, Jason, to the airport Friday. The family will be guests of the Marriott Hotel and visit Mrs. Kolan's family in Texas.

Poetess' works reflect 'look on the positive side' philosophy

NEW YORK (AP) — Susan Polis Schutz remembers how she used to go from college bookstore to college bookstore, selling posters with her poetry and her husband's illustrations.

They had left their Colorado home to live out of a pickup truck, touring the country, letting the poster sales pay for the trip.

Her free verse reflected the in-language of the times: finding love, celebrating the goodness in life, and getting more in touch with yourself.

That was in 1972. And it's virtually the same today.

But Mrs. Schutz now has a wider audience. The "'60s person" who stopped at campuses in cutoff jeans and a T-shirt is one of the more popular poets in America.

Her "look on the positive side" philosophy, backed by her husband Stephen's air-brushed white suns, orange skies and seagull silhouettes, are printed in books which are excerpted and made into greeting cards. The books alone have sold an estimated 20 million copies.

The quotes turn up in gift shops, bookstores and card racks throughout the nation and overseas.

But she says she doesn't really write for the public.

"I never think about how many books I sell," she says. "I don't believe it, really. I'm writing for myself. I don't even plan on a poem being published."

The popular writers, says Ms. Vendler, are "there to incarnate the cliches and to soothe people, so they think, 'Yes, I really am a nice person. I love my husband. My family loves me.'"

That's the way she perceives Mrs. Schutz. "I would say mostly her messages are reassuring, as I have seen them," says Ms. Vendler.

Mrs. Schutz writes, as she did in her "tomboy" childhood in the small Hudson River community of Peekskill, N.Y., because "I had a hard time discussing my feelings, so I found that, writing them, I could understand them better."

For instance, a poem to her husband:

"We built a world together —
"A world of fun
"A world of creativity
"A world of nature
"A world of passion.
"We built a life together —
"A life of honesty
"A life of understanding
"A life of freedom
"A life of
"love."

She was shy about letting people see her words, because "they're sort of your deepest feelings."

But when romance flowered, things changed. She was a student at Rider College in Lawrenceville, N.J., and dating Stephen, who was studying physics at nearby Princeton University.

Poetry became a way to speak to him.

"If you're writing an honest thought down, there it is, and you say, 'Well, I might as well give it to this person and let him understand me better,'" she says.

Mrs. Schutz still writes her poems as love notes to her husband and children, confidences to her friends, and just statements about how she feels.

She writes in an almost song-like pattern of repeated phrases.

"My thoughts seem to come out in a certain rhythm," she says. "It's a very natural rhythm."

She writes of "relationships," tells her readers to look for "honesty," and advises them — in the title of her latest book — to "Find Happiness in Everything You Do."

It may look like a string of cliches. But she defends it.

"I'm writing my feelings, so it doesn't matter what anybody says," Mrs. Schutz declares.

And she defends the simplicity of her ideas.

"The things I'm writing about are very simple," she says. "The greatest things are simple. People who complicate things are the ones who don't understand them."

Her readers understand them, she says. They write to her, and tell her that her poetry has made them realize that they're not alone with their feelings.

"Sometimes they'll say that, by showing something I wrote down to somebody they're involved with, they can express their feelings," she says. "I think maybe what strikes them is that I'm being very, very honest. I really do live my life the way I write."

However, her poetry only shows the parts of her life that she is willing to let the public see. Her readers will find few poems about anger or sadness. She writes them, but rarely publishes them.

She says quietly but firmly that her darker thoughts are her own business, and she's really a "private person."

What she has to share, she says, is more uplifting — that "everyone can change their life for the better."

PIE to toss pies for good cause

LAPORTE, Ind. (AP) — A local businessman hopes to smack a pie in the face of record-high unemployment in LaPorte County, with a stunt that he also hopes will cook up a few jobs.

Randall A. Weiss, president of a home entertainment store here, said he hopes to raise at least $33,500 with a President's Pie Eating Contest on Feb. 21 — George Washington's birthday — to benefit people whose unemployment benefits have expired. He's formed a volunteer group called People Involved in Employment — PIE.

Proceeds will be used to pay the unemployed to work for people who need household jobs done but cannot afford to pay. "If we reach our goal, it will pay for 10,000 hours of work," he said.

LaPorte County had a 16.5 percent jobless rate in November.

Weiss said the pies will be donated by a local supermarket, the contestants will be employers in the county and the paying spectators will be their employees.

"I figure there are a lot of employees who will pay a dollar or more to see their employer look silly by eating a pie with his hands tied behind him," Weiss said.

"We're going to use mainly cream pies: They are the messiest," Weiss said. And "since it is Washington's birthday, we'll see that there's a good supply of cherry pies."

Margaret Thatcher returns to London

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher returned home today from a surprise five-day tour of the Falkland Islands, the South Atlantic archipelago over which Britain and Argentina fought an undeclared war last year.

The prime minister's Royal Air Force VC-10 jet touched down at Brize Norton Royal Air Force base near Oxford at 9 a.m. (4 a.m. EST) after a 23-hour, 8,000-mile journey.

Mrs. Thatcher, accompanied by her husband, Denis, and her aides, was driven immediately to London.

The prime minister left the Falklands Wednesday morning aboard an RAF Hercules cargo plane after touring abandoned Argentine positions on Tumbledown Mountain, scene of heavy fighting during the 74-day conflict.

Before leaving, she said the tour was a "personal pilgrimage" to thank the British troops who ousted Argentine invasion forces from the British colony last June 14 and to reassure the islanders of Britain's commitment to defend the islands indefinitely.

Pope still unsure of visit to Poland

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II has indicated that he is not yet sure he will go ahead with a scheduled visit to Poland, his homeland, in June.

The pope referred to the trip during a prayer Wednesday before a small group of Polish pilgrims attending a general audience in the Vatican.

The Polish government and the Polish Roman Catholic Church have said the pope's visit would take place June 18. The trip had been originally scheduled for last June, but was postponed.

Party replaces Kisilev

T. Kisilev

MOSCOW (AP) — Nikolai N. Slyunkov, a deputy chairman in the state planning committee, was named today to replace the late Tikhon Y. Kisilev as Communist Party chief in the Byelorussian republic, Tass reported.

The official news agency said he was named to the post during a plenary meeting of the party's national Central Committee. Little is known about the 53-year-old Slyunkov except that he has been with the planning committee for nearly nine years.

Kiselev, whose death at age 65 was announced Wednesday, also held a non-voting candidate's seat on the ruling Politburo, but Tass did not say whether he was replaced in that position.

Japanese leaders approve tariff cuts

TOKYO (AP) — The Japanese government today approved wide-ranging tariff cuts and pledged to revise other import procedures as part of an effort to deal with complaints that Japan is an unfair international trading partner.

The moves are designed to make Japanese markets more open to foreign products, and include revisions of 16 specific import procedures seen as roadblocks to market access.

Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone said the changes are "designed with the overall aim of firmly maintaining the free trading system and contributing to the revitalization of the world economy through achieving an expansion of trade on a balanced basis."

Final testimony on massacre slated

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The judicial panel probing Israel's actions before and during the Beirut massacre last fall will hear final oral arguments Sunday.

A commission statement released today said the three-member panel has received written summations from eight of the nine high-ranking political and military leaders who were told they may be harmed by the inquiry's findings.

"Prime Minister Menachem Begin informed the commission that his written memorandum of Dec. 7 constitutes his final brief," it added.

Journalists prepare to leave El Salvador

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The State Department Wednesday reported that two foreign correspondents, David Helvarg of Pacifica Radio News, and Michael Rosengren of the Swedish television network "intend to leave" El Salvador shortly.

Helvarg and Rosengren were "briefly detained" by Salvadoran army troops "and accused of maintaining contact with Salvadoran guerrillas," department spokesman Alan Romberg said.

"An American consular official has since met with Helvarg. We understand both correspondents intend to leave Salvador shortly," he added.

Arrest of the two newsmen was first disclosed by the Salvadoran defense ministry.

The Salvadorans reported that Helvarg and Rosengren "were captured and turned over to the armed forces chief of staff to investigate their activities in the zone where they were captured."

The detentions reportedly occurred in the El Coco region in San Vicente province, near the town of Apastepeque, on the Pan American highway, 28 miles east of the capital city of San Salvador. The El Coco region "is a zone used by the terrorist groups of the FMLN," according to the defense ministry.

A third correspondent, Chris Wenner, who was said to be working for the British Broadcasting Co., was believed to have accompanied Helvarg and Rosengren.

Israel, Lebanon accept new withdrawal agenda

KIRYAT SHMONA, Israel (AP) — Israel and Lebanon broke a three-week deadlock today and agreed to a U.S.-proposed compromise agenda for negotiating peaceful future relations and withdrawal of foreign armies from Lebanon, Israeli officials said.

The breakthrough came in the sixth round of talks among Israeli, Lebanese and U.S. negotiators and followed efforts by President Reagan to break the stalemate.

"I wish to inform you that the delegations have reached an agreement on the agenda," Foreign Ministry Spokesman Avi Pazner told reporters in this Israeli border town.

Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon said the U.S. proposal contained the main elements of Israel's and Lebanon's proposals for the negotiations, which he said "will eventually form one document."

Israeli chief negotiator David Kimche read the clauses of the agenda to reporters, saying they would all be negotiated simultaneously.

This was apparently designed to avoid giving the impression that any one issue was more important that another.

The first item on the agenda is termination of the technical state of war between Israel and Lebanon, followed by security arrangements to keep their border peaceful.

Next comes a "framework for mutual relations" to include subjects such as "liaison, an end to hostile propaganda, movement of goods, products and persons."

The clause on troop pullbacks from Lebanon speaks of "a program for complete withdrawals, conditions for Israel's withdrawal in the context of the withdrawal of all foreign forces."

Before the compromise was reached, Israel had insisted that the talks begin with normalization of relations between the two nations, while Lebanon demanded that they focus on withdrawal of an estimated 60,000 Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian troops.

A technical state of war has existed between Israel and Lebanon since the armistice that ended the 1949 Arab-Israeli war.

The two countries never signed a peace treaty and Lebanon was considered likely to oppose signing one out of fear of angering its fellow Arab nations.

Lebanon said the 1949 armistice to serve as a framework for future relations with Israel, while the Israelis said the armistice was terminated by later wars.

Safety comes first

Air travelers attempting to fly into or out of Midland Regional Airport got a taste recently of what can happen when winter unleashes its fury on an airport. Seven inches of snow piled onto Midland and the surrounding area during the waning hours of 1982 and the wee hours of 1983 and numerous flights were cancelled by airline pilots.

The airport didn't close. Airport officials keep it open, but they only provide pilots information on runway conditions and let the pilots make the final decision on whether to attempt a landing or takeoff. In light of the seven-inch accumulation of snow, most pilots considering stopping at Midland determined conditions were too hazardous.

A number of airline passengers were more than a little perturbed about the inconvenience. That's understandable, but the inconvenience truly can be blamed on the weather. Airport officials said even more snow-clearing equipment wouldn't have speeded the process much. But there is another consideration here — safety.

A year ago today Air Florida flight 90 took off from Washington's National Airport in a snowstorm not unlike the one in Midland Dec. 31-Jan. 1, crashed into the northbound span of the 14th Street Bridge and plunged into the ice-covered Potomac River. Seventy-eight persons died in that accident.

A subsequent investigation of the Air Florida crash — and the corresponding crash six months later of a Pan American World Airways jet in New Orleans — cited the tenuous relationship that exists between the Federal Aviation Administration's air traffic control system and the National Weather Service, which provides the FAA with data on flight conditions.

But there were numerous complicating factors including what the National Transportation Safety Board termed "a recurring problem — a breakdown in cockpit management and teamwork during a situation involving malfunctions."

NTSB member Frank McAdams noted, "What's really important is that pilots, carriers and manufacturers are deeply aware of the hazards of winter operations." That statement applies in Midland, too.

While we can sympathize with the air travelers who were inconvenienced by the Midland snowstorm, the safety of passengers takes precedence over their needs to be elsewhere. The pilots who decided not to stop in or fly from Midland Regional during that snowfall acted in the best interests of their passengers.

Satellite safeguard need

Chances are that the nuclear-powered Soviet spy satellite now reportedly tumbling out of control will either burn up when it enters the earth's atmosphere or scatter its components harmlessly over remote ocean areas.

Still, the possibility of highly radioactive debris falling into populated areas somewhere on earth cannot be dismissed. In a worst-case scenario, the radioactive remains of Cosmos 1402 could plunge to earth in the middle of, say, Manhattan.

That would expose hundreds of persons to dangerous doses of radiation, not to mention the hazards posed by the falling debris itself. There is even a very remote chance that the satellite's reactor could survive re-entry into the earth's atmosphere intact and explode on impact, although most scientists regard the possibility of a nuclear explosion as nil.

If at least parts of Cosmos 1402 survive re-entry, it will be the second time that a Soviet nuclear-powered satellite has crashed to earth. In January, 1978, radioactive debris from Cosmos 954 fell over a remote stretch of Canada's Northwest Territories. No one was injured but the debris had to be carefully collected and the Soviets eventually paid a cleanup bill of several million dollars.

Following this incident, then-President Jimmy Carter suggested that the Soviets adopt better safety standards and that they consider discontinuing the use of nuclear-powered satellites altogether. Soviet leaders spurned these suggestions.

Now that a second nuclear-powered Soviet satellite appears likely to fall the end of January with consequences no one can predict for certain, it is time for governments around the world to press Moscow for corrective measures.

The United States stopped using nuclear-powered satellites some years ago. The Soviets could do everyone a favor by following suit.

How freedom fares

What with economic recessions and trade tariffs, hot and lukewarm wars, global terrorism and domestic violence, the nations of the world experienced a pretty dismal year. One optimistic note, however, was sounded in the annual survey from Freedom House: 1982 was a better year for freedom than 1981.

The human rights group reported that despite major declines in human rights in Poland and Ghana, significant advances were made in Bolivia and Honduras. Indeed the gains registered in Latin America are striking as compared with other regions.

"In the underdeveloped world, it is in the Americas that democratic traditions are most firmly grounded," said Raymond D. Gastil, director of the survey. "The hemisphere has never been freer than it is in 1982-83."

Bolivia and Honduras shifted from military dictatorships to civilian governments in 1982, Bolivia moving from "not free" column to free status and Honduras stepping up from "partly free" to free. Another noticeable if not spectacular plus was evident in the Dominican Republic. Among major Latin American countries, only Chile showed stagnation or retreat on the human rights front.

In Poland, of course, it was a far different story. A "partly free" nation moved to the "not free" column. The survey lamented that martial law crushed the media, dissolved the independent trade union movement, imprisoned dissidents and weakened the independent voice of the Catholic church.

Africa became an even darker continent, by Freedom House's yardstick, when a military coup in Ghana destroyed representative government and a free press and Kenya became a one-party state in which the right to dissent was officially denied.

Measuring overall gains, the survey noted that 1.6 billion people or 36.3 percent lived in free nations in 1982, as compared with 35.9 percent in 1981; 918 million or 20 percent reside "partly free," compared with 19.3 percent. Both sets of figures are blighted by the harsh fact that 2.2 billion people, or 43.6 percent of the total, still are deprived of liberty and basic human rights.

Every gain is to be applauded but the stark reality is that freedom remains a blessing enjoyed by only a slight majority of the world's population. There is yet no cause for celebration.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Pentagon has secret plan for 'minutemen'

WASHINGTON — There has been much agitated whispering on Capitol Hill about a secret Pentagon plan to establish a rapid deployment force in Jordan. The secrecy of the project has prevented open discussion of an extremely controversial issue.

Jack Anderson

Basically, the secret plan calls for perhaps two brigades of elite Jordanian troops, who would serve as modern minutemen ready to respond immediately to any crisis in the Persian Gulf area. This "mini-Rapid Deployment Force," as it has already been nicknamed in the Pentagon, would be trained and equipped by the U.S. military.

The details are considered so sensitive politically that only top congressional leaders have been informed of the plan, and they have been sworn to secrecy. The intent is to keep the project hush-hush and to finance it secretly.

The reason for all the secrecy is not to suppress the congressional debate, which is beginning to simmer below the surface. Rather, it is intended to prevent a storm of protest in Jordan. While King Hussein reportedly favors the project, it is doubtful that the Palestinian majority in Jordan would welcome such close, active cooperation with the United States.

Nevertheless, insiders told my associate Lucette Lagnado that the Pentagon is convinced Hussein can be a key U.S. ally in the Middle East. Some of those who are pushing the plan even see Jordan as the pillar of U.S. strategic operations in the Persian Gulf area.

Here's what the Jordanian force would be used for:

— Maintaining Jordan's own stability. An elite military unit would guard against both internal threats to Hussein's regime — attempted coups or assassinations — and external threats from such hostile neighbors as Syria.

— Emergencies in friendly Persian Gulf states: This is the main purpose for creating the Jordanian RDF. It could be dispatched quickly to put down insurrections against regimes in Saudi Arabia, Oman, Kuwait, Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates.

— Possible use in inter-Arab wars: The Pentagon apparently sees the Jordanian RDF as a potential surrogate force to promote U.S. interests in the area, without the need for American troops.

The use of friendly Arab troops would be infinitely more palatable to Saudi Arabia, which has expressed displeasure over the possibility of calling in American forces, even in a direct emergency.

Needless to say, the Pentagon's secret plan has already raised concern, especially among senators who believe Israel, not Jordan, is better equipped to protect American interests in the Middle East. They fear it will damage our relations with our most dependable ally; the Israelis would understandably be concerned that a crack Jordanian military force could be used against them.

There is also uneasiness on Capitol Hill over the idea of establishing a special relationship with any Middle East potentate. Some senators are still haunted by the disastrous results of such an arrangement with the late shah of Iran.

But the Pentagon can presumably count on strong White House support. Jordan is crucial to President Reagan's Middle East peace plan.

HERE'S MUD IN AIREYE: While cost overruns are distressingly commonplace among the major armed services, even the runt of the military litter, the Coast Guard, has trouble keeping its projects within the budget. Its AIREYE medium-range surveillance system is not only years behind schedule, but has run far over its original $6 million budget.

The AIREYE, in various stages of development since 1972, is a sensor that was to be attached to Coast Guard planes to detect illegal oil discharges at sea and to identify the tankers responsible. Some $10 million has already been spent or obligated, and the target date for a prototype has been changed from 1980 to January 1984. The original anticipated cost of the six AIREYE systems totals $18 million.

Now there is some question whether the surveillance device is even worth having. The technology involved may be 10 years out-of-date. As an internal report of the Coast Guard inspector general observed last November, "The justification for the AIREYE system appears to be questionable at this time." In fact, the IG recommended that any further effort be delayed until a full evaluation is made.

Much of the cost overrun was caused by design modifications — at least 22 since the contract was let in July 1980. One Coast Guard research and development official told my reporter Carolyn Farrar bluntly that the project is "an example of poor management."

GEORGE F. WILL

Need for public safety requires no mandate

WASHINGTON — Arriving propitiously this Sunday and running for seven more Sundays on public television is a political drama. Here is a precis:

George F. Will

The nation is suffering a severe slump which has depressed government revenues yet strengthened the case for ameliorative social spending. A consensus across the political spectrum insists that military spending must be cut to fund compassionate programs. But one stiff-necked politician of notoriously strong convictions — years ago they caused him to change parties — objects. He is no longer young and critics accuse him of nostalgia for a simpler age. He is a great communicator but enlightened opinion holds that his rhetorical power is a function of simplicity and anachronistic nationalism.

All his weaknesses are revealed in his alarmism about the foreign power to the East. He ignores the events of this century that make that power's policies understandable in terms of its national experience — it suffered much from the world war. Proof of his shallowness, say his multiplying critics, is that he takes seriously that power's bellicose rhetoric. He is deaf to academic, media and foreign policy elites, who explain that the totalitarian regime's rhetoric is a residue of the past, and is less important than the fact that the regime is a fact we must live with. His program for matching that power's buildup dooms the arms control dialogue which must be the source of safety since the development of the ultimate weapon, the airplane.

This is a drama about a stubborn man, Winston Churchill in the 1930s, "the wilderness years."

Early episodes deal primarily with other matters, such as India. But soon the paths of the lion and the jackal cross. Visiting Munich in 1932, Churchill stays at a hotel frequented by the man who came to power in Germany fifty years ago Jan. 30.

Today Churchill is remembered, reverently, for his implacability. Then, when implacability meant spending money people did not want to spend, he was ridiculed, and execrated as a "scaremonger."

British policy in the 1930s traced a trajectory similar to that of U.S. policy since the 1960s. First it proclaimed British superiority; then it pledged to maintain "parity"; then it fell to explaining why Germany's numerical superiority did not really mean British inferiority, and why advocates of military spending were moved by ambition or venality.

In the dramatization, Prime Minister Baldwin says of Churchill: "Talk like that scares people." And it might impede detente with Germany. Establishing a defense ministry would be "expensive and provocative."

Churchill's critics, who included most mainstream politicians, wanted to entrust Britain's safety to arms control talks, not because there was any record of achievement from talks, or because Hitler seemed likely to be tamed by them, but because safety through arms control was the only safety that could be had on the cheap. Deterrence costs money.

Persons who wanted to trust Britain's safety to arms control first argued that Germany was not aiming for superiority. Then they argued that the very fact that Germany was spending so much suggested that British rearmament would be matched by Germany. Besides, Germany would bankrupt itself. Sound familiar?

When critics of Churchill's rearmament plans could no longer deny or suppress the facts, or impugn the motives of those who cited the facts, they said: Britain's real strength is economic. We must attend to that first. Military spending will complicate recovery, hence it must wait. So said the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Neville Chamberlain.

Appeasement, said Chamberlain, would free resources for "more creative uses." The message transmitted to Germany, with devastating clarity, was: We are desperate for an arms agreement because we believe we cannot afford to match your arms spending.

Martin Gilbert, Churchill's biographer, has published a book in conjunction with this series ("Winston Churchill: The Wilderness Years" from Houghton Mifflin). It is a timely study of how a democracy allowed considerations of political convenience and budgetary "necessity" to control defense policy. Churchill's doctrine was: We can afford what we need; what we cannot afford is to say we only need what is easy to provide.

Today Washington is full of persons whose political bravery extends only to ridiculing the steadfastness of the secretary of defense, Casper Weinberger, whose duty is to decide what safety demands, and to say so, stubbornly. He is not permitted the luxury of pandering to wishful thinking.

To those who today say that polls prove (in words hurled at Churchill) there is "no mandate from the people" for more defense spending, Churchill's reply remains unanswerable: "The prime responsibility of any government for the public safety is absolute and requires no mandate."

ART BUCHWALD

After AT&T, remember your 'Ma'

One of the saddest things Americans will have to face in 1983 is the demise of "Ma" Bell, who, at the urging of the Justice Department, is going out of the telephone business and into "computers" and esoteric communications. From now on each one of us will be at the mercy of his or her local telephone company.

Art Buchwald

I've always been very sentimentally attached to the old gal so I went over last week to say goodbye.

"We're going to miss you, 'Ma,'" I told her as she was packing some cable and silicon chips in her suitcase.

"I'm going to miss every last one of you," she said. "You were all my children and we shared many good times and bad times together."

"It doesn't seem right to break you up," I said bitterly. "You were the best telephone system in the whole wide world. I never told anyone this before, but you were the only monopoly I ever loved."

"I did the best I could," she said, wiping away a tear. "Some people did call me a monopoly, but I was a benevolent one. I had to make a profit for the widows and orphans who owned my stock. But I also made it possible for almost everyone in this country to own a telephone. I soaked the rich on long-distance calls, so I could subsidize the poor who wanted to make local ones."

"You were the last American monopoly who had a heart."

"My only desire in life," she said, "was to reach out and touch someone."

I handed her a Kleenex.

"When something went wrong with your phone," she sobbed, "I sent one of my people out there right away to fix it and I never charged you."

"And when we got lucky you always let us keep the change we found in the coin box at a pay phone."

"The girls I trained to be operators were the friendliest women in America. And I respected people's privacy. If you didn't want to be in the phone book I always found you an unlisted number."

"I tried to make life a little easier for everybody."

"Tell me, 'Ma,' of all the innovations you thought up during the years, which one were you the proudest of?"

"The collect telephone call. I made it possible for generations of children to keep in touch with their parents. I doubt without the collect call if parents would have ever heard from their kids again."

"Only a mother would have thought of the collect telephone call," I said.

She put a Princess phone and a Touch-Tone dialer in her suitcase.

"The Justice Department never did like me. They've been out to get me for years. Well, at least I wired up the country before they won their case."

"If it hadn't been for you there wouldn't be telephone poles strung across this nation from sea to shining sea."

"Could you use an old switchboard?" she asked me.

"I'd like that. It would remind me of the wonderful times we had together."

"Well, I guess I'm all packed," she said. "It was nice of you to stop in and say goodbye. Most people forget."

"I'll never forget you. Every time the phone rings I'll say to myself, 'Ask not for whom the bell tolls. It tolls for "Ma."'"

Tears started to well up in her eyes.

"I suppose now that I've been broken up you'll never call me any more."

"Of course I'll call you, 'Ma.'"

"When?"

"Friday."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 13, 1733, James Oglethorpe and 130 English colonists arrived at Charleston, S.C., en route to settling what is now the state of Georgia.

On this date:

In 1419, the British captured the French city of Rouen.

In 1813, the British blockaded the Chesapeake and Delaware bays during the War of 1812.

Special fees net cities more money

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time since World War II the nation's cities are obtaining more revenue from special charges than from property taxes, their traditional source of money.

The Census Bureau reports that the cities received $19.3 billion in 1980-81 from charges and miscellanous general revenue. That compares to $18.3 billion from property taxes.

The year before, property tax income had been slightly ahead of charges, $16.9 billion to $16.5 billion.

David F. Patching of the bureau's government finance branch said records dating back to 1942 show property tax revenues surpassing income from charges and fees.

But Vance Kane, assistant division chief for programs, said the new trend could stem in part from tax freezes, such as those in California and Massachusetts, that have held down property taxes.

At the same time, Kane explained, cities are "trying to be very innovative about charges. The logic is that those who use government services should pay directly for those services."

These special charges can cover a variety of areas, including parks and recreation fees and water, sewer and special district costs, Kane said.

While cities' total tax income — property, income, sales — grew by 9.1 percent from 1979-80 to 1980-81, charges and miscellaneous revenue grew by 17.2 percent over the same period.

And in 1981-82, property taxes accounted for only 22 percent of total city government revenue, down from 33 percent a decade earlier.

Overall, for 1980-81 cities in the United States had income of 105.4 billion and expenditures of $104.5 billion. Total revenue was up $10.6 billion from the year before and spending grew by $10.8 billion.

The largest single spending item was education at $9.9 billion, up 6.9 percent.

The second largest category was police protection at $8.9 billion, up 9.3 percent from the year before. Highways cost $6.7 billion, up 12.9 percent, and sewage cost $6.2 billion, up 17.8 percent.

Poland's 'official' unions unpopular

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland — Communist authorities admit that most Polish workers are refusing to join new government-sanctioned unions that officials hope will replace the outlawed Solidarity Labor Federation.

"There is a boycott everywhere," said Stanislaw Ciosek, minister for trade union affairs. Resistance is greatest in the "strongholds of Solidarity," such as the Baltic shipyards in Gdansk where the independent trade union was born in August 1980, he said.

The government suspended Solidarity with a declaration of martial law on Dec. 13, 1981, and outlawed it nearly 10 months later with legislation which allows the formation of local unions at more than 40,000 Polish businesses.

Only 2,500 unions have been formed since the ban on labor organizations was lifted on Jan. 1. So far, they have attracted only a fraction of the 9.5 million members claimed by Solidarity or the four million workers who belonged to the competing trade unions heavily under official influence.

Committees to organize new unions have formed at 22,000 businesses, although their their work is going slowly, Ciosek said during a recent interview.

The new unions are attracting more members in the coal fields of southern Poland and at steel mills throughout the nation, he said. Their greatest success has been at the Lenin Steel Works in Nowa Huta, in southern Poland, where he said 3,000 of the 34,000 workers have joined.

The deputy director for employment at the Lenin plant refused, in a telephone interview, to disclose the number of union members there.

Zbigniew Kowalski, head of the union formation committee at Warsawa Huta, the giant steel mill on the outskirts of Warsaw, said that only 350 of the plant's 9,500 workers had pledged to join. Solidarity had 8,000 members at the mill and other unions had 2,000 members.

"It would be a great success if within two or three months we had 1,000 members," said Kowalski.

Ciosek asserted that Solidarity supporters are conducting an underground campaign against the new unions, using "acts of physical and mental terrorism in some places," but refused to give specific details.

Kowalski, head of the Warsawa Huta union committee, reported no threats, but said he had been telephoned by Solidarity activists who "tried to convince me I was betraying the workers."

"The main problem is that people are very cautious in their attitudes to the new trade unions," Ciosek said. "The nine million people who cast their lots with Solidarity found that was not the horse to ride."

Although the new unions initially will be limited to local businesses, the law calls for consolidation of labor organization by industry.

Critics of the new unions say they are unpopular because they do not have the political muscle of Solidarity. The unions can strike only after giving notice, and are barred from making the kind of political demands that made Solidarity revolutionary. Another Solidarity strength, which the new unions lack, is the right to organize regional and national coordinating bodies.

Ciosek predicted that progress in linking the unions by industry will be slow, saying that "people don't trust an over-centralized union."

The minister said Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, released from an 11-month martial law internment on Nov. 13, was free to take part in the new unions "just like anyone else."

Walesa, in a letter to Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, said he would cooperate with the government in solving Poland's pressing labor and economic problems only if authorities proclaim an amnesty for Solidarity supporters fired or jailed for their union activities and "return to the principle of pluralism" under which Solidarity operated.

Ciosek said he consulted with Walesa several times in the early days of martial law, and that the government had shown the labor leader a copy of the new trade union bill before it was enacted "as a matter or courtesy."

Ciosek said his talks with Walesa were not "negotiations," and refused to say if the ban on Solidarity could have been prevented if Walesa had been more cooperative.

The trade unions minister repeated a statement by other government officials that "a total amnesty will depend on the circumstances."

Former Solidarity members claim that thousands of union supporters have been dismissed from their jobs because of politics. But Ciosek asserted that "It is difficult to prove that people were fired for being members of Solidarity.

UPI correspondent ordered out of Poland

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Ruth Gruber, United Press International's U.S. correspondent in Warsaw, said today that she was called to the Foreign Ministry and formally ordered to leave the country by midnight Saturday.

Miss Gruber, who had been detained for nearly a day and questioned about alleged illegal activities, said she was given no personal explanation for the order. She said she was given two day to leave Poland and had to surrender her government press credentials.

On Wednesday, the official PAP news agency said Miss Gruber was to be expelled because she allegedly collected "secret information" about military facilities. The 33-year-old reporter denied the charge at the time.

Miss Gruber, the only American reporter for the agency in Warsaw, was released from 23 hours' detention Wednesday evening.

Her Polish secretary, Anna Olszewska, also was detained Tuesday, but remained in police custody today, officials said.

Ruth Gruber

An American Embassy spokesman said the mission learned of the expulsion order for Miss Gruber about an hour before it was published by PAP.

"This will probably not go without a response," the spokesman said. In the past, Washington has replied to the expulsion of a U.S. correspondent by expelling a reporter from the host country stationed in the United States.

There are four Poles accredited in the United States as reporters, and about a dozen American correspondents in Warsaw.

Speaking to reporters after her release, but before the announcement of the expulsion order, Miss Gruber described her detention as a "nightmare."

She said she was questioned for seven or eight hours Tuesday evening and Wednesday morning about a set of photographs allegedly addressed to her and including pictures of military installations. She said she had denied any knowledge of the film or its origin.

She said she thought her detention was "part of a campaign against the Western press" in Poland, citing authorities' refusal to renew accreditation of British Broadcasting Corp. correspondent Kevin Ruane, who was forced to leave Poland last Friday.

She said another form of pressure against foreign reporters in Poland is the refusal of the Warsaw branch of the Labor Ministry to renew the work permits of nine Poles working for Western correspondents in Poland.

On Tuesday, before the expulsion order was made public, government press spokesman Jerzy Urban said other actions against the Western press were related "indirectly" to the cooling of U.S.-Polish relations following the imposition of martial law on Dec. 13, 1981.

The government made no comment on Miss Gruber's later charges.

The Reagan administration imposed economic sanctions against Poland and its ally, the Soviet Union, following the martial law crackdown.

The official statement on Miss Gruber's expulsion said, "The security service of the Interior Ministry has obtained information to the effect that Ruth Ellen Gruber...has been receiving from Gdansk materials containing secret information."

Rostow resigns in face of arms agency shake-up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Arms control chief Eugene V. Rostow's resignation under fire from President Reagan and a group of Senate conservatives climaxes a major shake-up in the U.S. disarmament agency at a time when strategy for negotiating with the Soviet Union is undergoing close review.

The 69-year-old Democrat, angered by a protracted battle with Senate hardliners over his top assistants and the way he was directing arms policy, submitted his resignation Wednesday in a letter to Reagan.

A brief statement issued by Rostow said coolly that "in recent days it has become clear that the president wished to make changes. In response to his request, I have tendered my resignation."

Rostow, who is returning to Yale law school to teach next semester, did not call on the president. In an exchange of letters with Reagan, he said he was leaving "for the reasons which Secretary of State (George) Shultz has so kindly discussed with me."

Reagan said he was nominating Kenneth Adelman, deputy to U.N. ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, to take Rostow's place. Affirming his commitment to arms control, the president said, "I have no higher priority or higher purpose than to reduce the risk and the means of conflict."

Reagan said Rostow had served his and earlier administrations "with distinction and has played a key role in launching our comprehensive arms reduction proposals."

Senate Republican leader Howard Baker of Tennessee said he was not surprised by Rostow's departure. "He has been a distinguished public servant and private citizen and no doubt will continue to contribute," Baker said.

"One really has to wonder how President Reagan can deal with the Soviets if he can't deal with Senator Helms," said Tsongas. He referred to Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., a leading critic of Rostow and the arms control agency's operations.

Last week, bowing to pressure from Helms and other conservatives, the White House withdrew the nomination of Robert Grey, the agency's deputy director and long-time Rostow associate. Rostow accused hardliners of trying to take over the agency and prevent any new agreement with the Soviets to limit nuclear weapons. He called them "people who don't want any agreement at all."

Pressler, chairman of the Senate arms control subcommittee, said, "It's a great setback for the U.S. position in arms control because it looks as though we are in a state of chaos and confusion."

Pressler said the arms negotiations require months of preparation. He praised Rostow as "a very high quality public servant."

Two sets of negotiations are to resume in Geneva, Switzerland, early next month. One concerns efforts to make deep cuts in U.S. and Soviet strategic nuclear missiles, bombers and submarines. The other involves so-called Euromissiles — the more than 600 the Soviets have targeted on western Europe and the 572 U.S. cruise and Pershing II missiles to be deployed beginning in December and aimed at Soviet territory.

Rostow is the third top administration official to depart within two weeks. Drew Lewis, the secretary of transportation, quit after Christmas. Richard Schweiker resigned as secretary of health and human services Wednesday.

Rostow warned last week that the disputes crowding in on his agency could hurt U.S.-Soviet negotiations.

"The Soviets can try to exploit the doubts, and they get very anxious at the thought that any extremist American group might take charge of American nuclear policy," he told the Associated Press.

He said he was trying to steer a course between those who would have the United States withdraw to "armed isolation" and proponents of any agreement with the Soviet Union.

Rostow took a hard line toward Moscow, accusing the Soviets of trying to gain nuclear superiority over the United States. He, in turn, was accused by unnamed critics of exceeding his instructions.

Reagan and the other top U.S. negotiator, Edward Rowny, found some cause for optimism in recent Soviet proposals for limited weapons reductions and easing tensions. But Rostow brushed them aside as only a "slight adjustment" in the Soviet position.

To take Grey's place Reagan is naming David Emery, a former Republican congressman from Maine. At the same time, the president accepted the resignation of Richard Staar as director of negotiations with the Soviet Union in Vienna, Austria, on reducing NATO and Warsaw Pact ground forces in Europe.

In the shuffle, Morton Abramowitz, a former U.S. ambassador to Thailand, was appointed to succeed Staar.

Voters may 'call' bingo

Depending on the weather and their slant on bingo, Midland voters may be trekking to 13 voting places in sparse or dense numbers Saturday, when they have the option of legalizing bingo for charitable purposes in Midland County via the local-option state Bingo Enabling Act.

All told, almost 43,000 Midland Countians are eligible to vote in the election; only 308 absentee ballots were cast.

If approved by the electorate, bingo games would be monitored by the Texas State Comptroller Office, which would grant bingo licenses to non-profit organizations such as churches, veterans and fraternal organizations, and medical societies. A maximum of $2,500 in prizes could be awarded in any "one bingo occasion," while the limit on a single prize would be $500. Net proceeds would go to charity.

Since January 1982, when the Bingo Enabling Act went into effect, 306 Texas counties, municipalities and peace justice precincts have voted to legalize the game. Only 18 jurisdictions, including Lamesa and Dawson County, have rejected legalizing bingo. In the Midland area, Odessa, Big Lake and Andrews have voted to legalize the game of chance.

If bingo is approved in Midland County, the county Commissioners' Court has the option of tagging on a 2 percent tax on gross receipts from bingo games. Polls will be open Saturday from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Police firing tear gas stormed the home of a religious zealot today in a futile effort to rescue an officer taken hostage, and seven men holding the prisoner were killed in the gun battle, authorities said.

A police tactical unit found the battered body of Patrolman R.S. Hester just inside the front door of the house where he had been held prisoner since late Tuesday night.

Police Director John D. Holt said Hester had been dead for several hours. He said Hester, whose hands were handcuffed behind his back, had suffered numerous injuries, but he would not go into detail.

Holt said the decision to storm the house using tear gas and automatic weapons came after officers with electronic eavesdropping devices heard someone inside the house say, "The devil is dead." He said police assumed that was a reference to Hester.

The police director said the last time Hester's voice was heard was at about 6:30 a.m. Wednesday when the officer said, "Give them anything they want."

At the time, Holt said, it would not have been possible for police to enter the house. "Entry could not be gained without certain death to the officer," Holt said.

Bob Graham, administrative assistant to Holt, had said earlier that all of the seven others found dead in the house were "male black adults."

Hester, a 10-year veteran of the force, was taken hostage by Lindberg Sanders, 49, described as a religious zealot with a history of mental illness who thought police were "anti-Christ."

One of the officers making the assault suffered a cut hand and was in good condition at a hospital, Graham said. Police said Hester had been dead for several hours before the assault began.

An hour before the assault began at 3:07 a.m., negotiators used bullhorns in an unsuccessful attempt to talk to Sanders.

Police had kept vigil for more than 30 hours at Shannon Elementary School across the street from the small frame house where Hester was seized in an incident that also injured two other officers.

As the gunfire began today, relatives of several people inside the house began screaming and tried to leave a school classroom where they and reporters were being kept by police.

Graham said Hester was captured when he and his partner, R.O. Schwill, were summoned Tuesday night by an anonymous caller who told a police dispatcher that a man wanted in a purse-snatching was there.

The patrolmen were attacked as soon as they arrived, Graham said. A radio call for help brought several other police units to the scene, and a hail of bullets scattered the backup officers.

U.N. offers meeting site

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar says he would like to offer the United Nations as a neutral "shelter" for a meeting between President Reagan and Soviet Communist Party head Yuri V. Andropov.

Both Reagan and Andropov have raised the possibility of having a summit meeting. Perez de Cuellar meets with the U.S. president Friday at the White House.

In an interview with The Associated Press, the U.N. chief said an introductory meeting between the two world leaders "would help at least to create a better atmosphere for the solution of so many international problems."

Among the most pressing, he said, are the Middle East, Afghanistan, Southeast Asia, South-West Africa and Cyprus.

"I think one of the great advantages of the United Nations is that (it is) a kind of permanent forum for discussions, for dialogues or conferences for all member countries," Perez de Cuellar said.

"And I would be only too happy to provide the necessary 'shelter' — let's put it that way — for the two leaders to meet together and I think that (the U.N. headquarters in New York) would be a normal place for them to meet together and discuss international problems."

Andropov, in written responses to questions from an editor for Hearst Newspapers last month, said a summit conference could be a "very effective" way of improving Soviet-American relations if there is "good preparation." He did not specifically propose a summit with Reagan.

At his Washington news conference last week, Reagan said he was in favor "in principle" of taking up the suggestion. "But," Reagan added, "I think that a summit is something that requires some planning."

Perez de Cuellar met briefly with Andropov last November while in Moscow for the funeral of President Leonid I. Brezhnev. Andropov succeeded Brezhnev as Communist Party general secretary, the late leader's more important post.

The president of the Soviet Union technically is head of state, but that position has not been filled. Brezhnev met former President Nixon before assuming the presidency in 1977. He also met then-President Carter in 1979 to ratify the SALT II agreements.

Friday's White House session will be Perez de Cuellar's third meeting with Reagan since the 62-year-old Peruvian diplomat took office a year ago.

The two first met last February when Reagan was in New York for a speech and again last June when the president addressed the U.N. disarmament conference.

During Friday's visit, the U.N. secretary-general also is to be guest at a Blair House luncheon given by Vice President George Bush, an old friend from the days when they headed their countries' respective U.N. delegations.

In addition to discussing world problems with Reagan, the secretary-general said he also planned "a kind of evaluation of our bilateral relations."

Earlier this month, Perez de Cuellar said it was "a matter of the utmost seriousness" that Reagan had decided to withhold a U.N. assessment of up to $700,000 earmarked for a rules-making commission of the international Law of the Sea Treaty. The United States has refused to sign the treaty because of objections to its deep seabed mining provisions.

"I had to express concern because it was a decision which from our point of view was not helpful, but it was said with great respect for the position of (the U.S.) government," the secretary-general said.

Barbara Bush outlines RIF's needs

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

When Barbara Bush arrived in Midland Wednesday, she came "to introduce some good friends of mine to some very old friends of mine."

The former Midlander, along with another misplaced Texan and a self acclaimed "token Yankee," also came with another reason in mind — the beginning endeavor to open the doors of a national, private and non-profit organization and allow the private funds of Texans to enter.

She also came with some startling facts concerning illiteracy in the United States.

"Experts say that 99 percent of the population was literate in 1950," Mrs. Bush, a member of the board of directors of Reading is Fundamental, Inc., said. "Only 72 percent of the population is today — and it's going down. We are 49th out of the 158 member nations now. We were 14th in 1950.

"An article in the Wall Street Journal recently said that the reason Japanese productivity is higher than ours is because they have better education," she continued.

While Reading is Fundamental, Inc., distributed 610,000 books to almost 190,000 Texas children through 159 local projects, the organization receives the majority of its national funds from the eastern states, where most of the support for the program began.

"We have local programs all over the country," Anne Richardson, a former teacher in Massachusetts, wife of former U.S. Attorney General Elliot Richardson and RIF chairman of the board, explained. "We have an enormous majority west of the Mississippi.

"We feel we haven't gotten to the national slope of our support as we have with our local groups. But it's time for us now to really build a national support program," she said. "And that's why we're here and in Dallas and Houston."

Although Midland presently does not have a local RIF project, many areas in the state do, including those in the Rio Grande Valley, urban areas and even Lamesa.

The local projects, which raise 25 percent of the money for their book distributions, are matched by 75 percent from a national fund, which in the past has included little Texas money.

"(Funds for the national program) mostly have been from the eastern part of the country just because we haven't gone about trying to build a support system here in Texas," Mrs. Richardson said.

That should change, if the fund-raising luncheon, hosted by Earle M. Craig Jr. at the Racquet Club Wednesday, is any indication. Craig himself began the check writing of about 30 friends of the Craigs and the Bushes attending by announcing a generous donation.

"Reading is fundamental," he said. "Private financial support is fundamental also."

The program, which was begun in Washington, D.C., in 1966 by Maggie McNamara, wife of Robert S. McNamara, has a simple philosophy.

"The basic job is to get children interested in reading at a very early age," Ruth Graves, RIF president, said during the luncheon.

According to literature distributed by RIF, "The idea was to see what would happen if lower-income children in the city's public schools, many of whom had some of the nation's lowest reading scores, were given a chance to choose, and to keep, books they liked — not textbooks, but books the children freely selected themselves, to own, to share, to read."

The idea was a success, according to the printed material.

Temperatures fall in South, Northeast

By The Associated Press

Temperatures dropped to the teens and 20s in the Northeast today, and readings fell below freezing across much of Dixie with winds gusting up to 50 mph.

Florida's citrus belt was hit with temperatures in the low 30s, but agricultural experts said dry air and the wind would prevent a fruit-killing frost.

In California, fog in the central valleys early today dropped visibility to near zero.

Fair skies were forecast for most of the nation today, except for the upper Ohio and Missouri valleys, where clouds had moved in. Snow showers were forecast for Minnesota and upper Michigan.

Afternoon highs in the teens were predicted in northern New England with 20s in the upper Ohio Valley. Southern California was expecting temperatures near 80.

Faulk signs on as Gramm opponent

MADISONVILLE, Texas (AP) — Phil Gramm, who resigned from Congress to run for his seat as a Republican, has drawn a field of nine Democratic opponents — including humorist John Henry Faulk, who says the special election is another referendum on Reaganomics.

Faulk and five other Democrats joined the race for the 6th District before Wednesday's 5 p.m. deadline.

A Libertarian candidate also is running for the seat, which represents an area stretching 250 miles from Dallas to Houston.

Faulk, 69, a CBS radio commentator who was blacklisted in the 1950s, said here Wednesday that Gramm's resignation and switch from the Democratic Party last week "is the best thing that could have happened" to the 6th district.

The Feb. 12 special election gives voters "another chance to tell Washington that Reaganomics isn't working. Gramm's like a weatherman who creates tornadoes, instead of predicting them," Faulk said.

"There's only one Republican in this race because everyone else has enough sense to know voting Republican in the middle of a recession is like wearing a 'Hit Me' sign to a boxing match," he said.

Gramm easily won re-election last year to a third term in Congress as a Democrat, but resigned last week and left the party after Democratic leaders bounced him from the Budget Committee for his support of President Reagan's economic programs.

He could have just changed parties and remained in Congress, but decided to force a special election to would allow his constituents to register their feelings.

Gramm's major barrier to returning to Washington is considered to be former Dan Kubiak, 44, of Rockdale, who quit the Texas House of Representatives last year after seven terms to make an unsuccessful bid for state land commissioner.

State Democratic chairman Bob Slagle complained last week Gramm should be forbidden from running as a Republican, because of state law that requires those voting in a primary "shall remain a qualified member of the party for the duration of the voting year." Slagle said the voting year extends through the end of February.

Secretary of State David Dean, an appointee of Republican Gov. Bill Clements, said Wednesday he had made a decision on Slagle's request, but that a ruling was close at hand.

Gramm, a 40-year-old former economics professor at Texas A&M, cannot win in the 6th district as a Republican, Faulk said, because "there are plenty of people my age who remember the Depression."

Faulk said he would campaign on "protecting the Social Security system, reducing uneployment and encouraging economic recovery."

George M. Chamberlain, 34, of Granbury, a structural engineer at Comanche Peak nuclear plant near Glen Rose, held a news conference in Dallas Wednesday to announce his candidacy.

The secretary of state's office said it also received filing fees Wednesday from Carl A. Nigliazzo, 36, an economic planner from Hearne; Louis C. Davis, 58, a lawyer from Houston; Joe English, 44, of Granbury, who is retired; and Rex Carey, 43, of Midlothian, a former employee of the Office of Economic Opportunity who finished fourth in a race against Gramm in last year's Democratic primary.

Other Democrats announcing last week were Joe Agris, 42, a plastic surgeon from Houston, and Bill Powers, 53, a businessman from Navasota who finished last among five Democrats opposing Gramm when he first won election to Congress in 1978.

Third woman likely to gain approval

WASHINGTON (AP) — Margaret Heckler, whose nomination as secretary of health and human services has received initial support in Congress, seems likely to become the third woman in the Reagan Cabinet.

"In the final analysis, she is going to be part of the Reagan administration which has been quite hostile to family planning and the reproductive rights of women. But we are hopeful," said Bill Hamilton, legislative director for the Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

"We know her to be a reasonable person," he said.

President Reagan selected Mrs. Heckler to succeed Richard S. Schweiker as head of the $274 billion government agency. Schweiker will leave government early in February to become president of the American Council of Life Insurance.

Mrs. Heckler will have to be confirmed by the Senate Finance Committee and the full Senate before she takes office. No date has been set for a hearing because Congress is in recess until Jan. 25.

But Karna Small, a White House spokeswomen, said she expected early confirmation of Mrs. Heckler, a Republican who spent 16 years in the House as a congresswoman from Massachusetts.

Several senators praised Mrs. Heckler, including Sen. Edward Kennedy, a Democrat from her home state. "Although I have disagreed with her on a number of issues, she is a responsible and talented public servant, who brings real strengths to the largest domestic agency of the federal government," he said.

Sen. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., said she was pleased the president has appointed "such a highly qualified woman."

Mrs. Heckler is a Roman Catholic who strongly opposes public financing of abortions, but she has supported the Equal Rights Amendment and other women's rights issues, as well as issues affecting veterans and the elderly.

While Mrs. Heckler was in Congress, she argued against an administration plan requiring parents to be told when minors receive most contraceptives. The rule may be one she would have to enforce at the health agency.

Earlier this week, Schweiker gave final approval to the rule. Lee Platzer of Planned Parenthood has filed suit to stop it from taking effect. The regulations must be approved by the Office of Management and Budget.

Some women said they thought Mrs. Heckler's nomination was politically motivated.

"I think it's at least 95 percent political," said Judy Goldsmith, president of the National Organization for Women, said.

"The message Americans women delivered in the November elections is that are going to be centrally involved in politics. They are going to vote their interests and they are going to be organized, effective voters," Goldsmith said. "The Republicans have perceived as a party that does not, in general, opposed those interests."

Kathy Wilson, a Republican national committeewoman of the state's Republican Political Caucus, said, "I'm very pleased to finally beginning to realize [sic] at the White House that it is [illegible] to run the country like a country club."

Mrs. Heckler, a 56-year-old attorney from Wellesley, Mass., was defeated by Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., last November. The two were thrown into a race because of redistricting.

At a ceremony in the East Room, Mrs. Heckler told Reagan, "You have offered me the greatest challenge of my life." She described the new job as the highest assignment in Washington.

She is the second woman the president has named to a Cabinet job in a week. The president chose Elizabeth Hanford Dole to succeed Drew Lewis as transportation secretary last week. Jeane Kirkpatrick is delegate to the United Nations, a post with Cabinet rank.

Schweiker is the fourth member of Reagan's original Cabinet to resign. The others were Alexander Haig, secretary of state; James Edwards, secretary of Energy; and Lewis.

The president called Schweiker "a trusted adviser and able administrator and a man who has done an outstanding job."

The life insurance council which Schweiker will head represents companies responsible for 98 percent of the nation's life insurance policies. Schweiker will make a six figure income, council spokesman said.

Heckler opposes contraceptive rule

By BETTY ANNE WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — When Margaret Heckler was a member of Congress, she argued against the Reagan administration's plan requiring that parents be notified after their teen-agers receive prescription birth control products.

Now, the regulation may be one that Mrs. Heckler will have to enforce if she is confirmed as secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services.

The proposal, dubbed the "squeal rule" by its critics, is in the last stages of review. It is one of the hottest topics taken on the by the administration and generated 120,000 comments from the public after it was proposed last year.

Only Monday, the current health secretary, Richard S. Schweiker, gave his final approval to the idea and sent it to the Office of Management and Budget for clearance. It would take effect 30 days after it was published in the Federal Register.

Mrs. Heckler joined 32 other members of the Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues in sending an April 23, 1982, letter on the subject to the department.

"While we applaud the efforts of HHS to encourage the involvement of parents in this process, we question the wisdom of the approach outlined in the proposed regulation. We fear that enactment of such a regulation would discourage many young people from utilizing these services and would result in a drastic increase in the number of teenage pregnancies," the letter said.

"Thus, we urge you to reassess your decision and to withdraw the proposed regulations," it said. It was addressed to Marjory Mecklenberg, then acting deputy assistant secretary for population affairs.

Under the regulation, family planning agencies receiving federal funds would have to notify parents within 10 days after birth control pill, diaphragms or intrauterine devices are prescribed to girls under 18.

Exceptions would be made if it appeared likely the girl would suffer harm if her parents were notified.

About 5,000 birth control clinics would be affected by the proposal.

The proposal has been criticized by activists on both ends of the political spectrum. Opponents of abortion argue it is too permissive and that parental consent should be obtained before a minor receives contraceptives from a federally subsidized clinic.

Schweiker and Mrs. Meckleberg have argued that the proposal would carry out a congressional directive to involve parents in contraceptive decisions.

left up to the imagination of the volunteers in the local project, according to Mrs. Richardson. Books are distributed at schools, parades, shopping centers and juvenile halls. They are delivered from hot air balloons, wailing fire trucks and from volunteers dressed as book characters in costumes.

Mrs. Richardson explained that training groups help local projects begin. The only thing required from local volunteers is at least three distributions per year. "How they manage to raise the funds is up to them," she said.

"We have the local groups," Ms. Graves explained, "and we provide them with the training. In addition to the local, we also have the nationwide public service campaign (which includes announcements on national television by celebrities Carol Burnett, Arthur Ashe, Michael Learned and Ed Asner). We've also developed special tools so that parents can help their children with reading. Also, with the federal government, we match the book funds with the local projects."

The 75-25 percent fund match does have exceptions, Mrs. Richardson said. A hundred percent of the cost of books for migrant students are provided through the national support system with federal government funds.

"Nearly 10 percent of all the children we servce nationwide are Texas children," Ms. Graves, a former resident of Port Arthur, pointed out. "We've put $2.5 million in Texas to support the local projects in the last five years."

Of the 16-member board of directors, one-fourth are native Texans, Ms. Graves added. "I like to think that wasn't a conspiracy," she said with a laugh. "I like to think that Texans feel we're priveleged to live in this part of the country and have a chance to show our appreciation. We're making a big effort to serve the children of Texas and we know our fellow Texans would want to participate and support that."

The whole point of the program is to show young children that reading is enjoyable, Mrs. Richardson said. "What's the old adage? An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure?"

Shake-up continues at fast, furious pace

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration's midterm shake-up is occurring at a fast and furious pace. But rather than removing those who may be causing problems, President Reagan has lost in a matter of weeks two Cabinet members with whom there was no sign of dissatisfaction.

He also forced a purge in his arms control negotiating team, in the midst of a series of weapons reduction talks, perhaps leaving himself open to Soviet propaganda charges of disarray in the West's nuclear policies.

Across the private street that separates the White House from the Old Executive Office Building, five members of Vice President George Bush's pared-down staff decided to switch jobs, with all but one choosing to leave the White House.

Thus, as Reagan nears the start of the third year in his presidency, he has lost one-third of his original Cabinet; he has watched three top aides leave his White House staff, two under fire; the arms control team is being overhauled, and the vice president is breaking in a new staff.

In view of the changes, administration officials are defensive about midterm assessments stating the president is losing control of his agenda and failing to accomplish his goals.

"We're at a difficult stage with a lot of these issues," said one official. "We're at a point where you can't get a lot of agreement with Congress. It's not a matter of simply being reactive. It's a matter of reality. It's what every administration goes through."

An Analysis

In picking replacements, Reagan bowed to the conservative wing of the Republican Party for the arms control jobs while turning to a more moderate area when he chose former Rep. Margaret Heckler of Massachusetts to replace Richard Schweiker as secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services.

Schweiker was the fourth Cabinet member to leave, joining Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis, resigning as of Feb. 1; former Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., whose departure was clearly welcomed at the White House last summer, and Energy Secretary James Edwards, who is returning to South Carolina, where he once practiced dentistry.

Lewis was considered one of the stars of the Reagan Cabinet, but officials said they had nothing to offer him other than the transportation job.

"Drew would have liked to have stayed. There was no spot feasible for him to move into," said one White House official, requesting anonymity. So, he quit for a job with a cable television company.

This source said Schweiker "did what he wanted to do on the budget" and felt it was time to leave.

"I'm sure the money had something to do with it," said the official, referring to the considerable raise Schweiker is likely to get jumping from a Cabinet job, which pays $80,100, to a salary in six figures as president of the American Council of Life Insurance, a trade association.

There was also "something of a burnout factor," said the White House official, who painted a picture of Lewis and Schweiker as two Cabinet secretaries whose departures Reagan could not have halted.

The decision to formally announce the changes at Health and Human Services was apparently made so quickly that at 10 a.m. Wednesday, the appointed hour for the president's announcement, workmen were still nailing together the presidential podium in the White House East Room and secretaries from the Old Executive Office Building were still trooping over to fill up the room.

Only hours after the president, Schweiker and Mrs. Heckler left the East Room, the White House copying machines were cranking out the president's statement acknowledging the departure of Eugene Rostow as director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Rostow was forced out in the face of persistent opposition by conservative Republicans led by Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina.

Reagan said he was accepting with regret the resignation of Richard Staar as the U.S. representative at talks intended to reduce conventional weapons in Europe. But deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said it had been made "apparent to (Staar) we would like him to resign."

Chaps, Hawks tangle tonight

If Midland College plays defense like it did in losing to Howard College Saturday night in the OIL Classic finals, all the Chaps will have to do is score 120 points to beat the Hawks in the return match 8 p.m. tonight at the Langford Chaparral Center.

Of course, if the Chaps play defense like they did against Amarillo College Monday, the task won't be quite as imposing. MC surrendered 71 points in that one, but unfortunately lost by six points. It was MC's first Western Junior College Conference defeat since Dec. 11, 1981 when Amarillo also turned the trick at the Chap Center.

Monday's loss dropped Midland out of its exclusive perch atop the WJCC standings and into den of snakes in which six WJCC teams are squirming around with just one defeat. But then, NMJC Coach Ron Black predicted the WJCC champion this year will probably wind up a four-time loser.

Saturday's loss to Howard, of course, was not in league competition, but Coach Jerry Stone is hopeful that the Hawks don't extend the Chaps losing streak to three. Since coming back from the holiday vacation, MC's only win came over 5-8 Tyler, 88-86 in overtime.

IT ISN'T a plot to cool off the Hawks, who scorched the Chaps for 59 points on a 24-of-36 spree from the field last Saturday, but "Chaparral Super Fan" fans with wooden handles will be given to the first 250 fans at the Center tonight. As a bonus, the fans will offer food coupons from McDonald's.

Midland suffered a frigid shooting night in the Panhandle Monday, making just 36 per cent of its field shots. Amarillo jumped in front 12-0 and MC never could overcome the early edge.

"We've got good shooters, but we just aren't taking the goods shots all the time and when we have the goods shots, we aren't taking them," Stone said. "Last year we won a lot of games coming from behind or holding off late rallies. We're not getting that done right now. We need to be more consistent in what we are trying to do. These are good players and I think they'll respond to the challenge."

TONIGHT'S GAME is important, since it's at home. MC's next two games are on the road, Frank Phillips Monday and Odessa Thursday.

Two straight losses will cost MC its No. 3 national ranking with the Chaps tumbling to seventh place. But it was even more costly to Howard, which dropped from 10th to 16th...Amarillo, No. 14, dropped clean out of sight...Willie James, Howard's 6-10 freshman center, is playing without the benefit of a competitive senior year in high school. Pontiac, Mich., dropped its scholastic athletic program because of a lack of funds...

TED BATTLES

BATTLE SCENE

With the Chicago Cubs turning down the Dodgers bid for Henry Cotto and Joe Carter, who cavorted at Cubs Stadium last season, does that mean the Midland outfielders will soon be joining Leon Durham in the Wrigley Field pastures? And where does that leave Mel Hall?...

Pitt is retiring No. 13, Dan Marino's number, joining No. 33 (Tony Dorsett) and No. 99 (Hugh Green) as the only other retired numbers. That means the numbers of Marshall Goldberg and Mike Ditka haven't been retired, which is strange. Wasn't it Goldberg's 1930s rushing record that Tony finally broke, thanks to an extra year of eligibility and a lot more regular season games? Chances are Marshall, playing in the 1930s, probably wore what today is a tackle's number (79 or some such) and that would be embarrassing...

THE LADY was obviously in a state of extreme distress. She wanted to know if if was really true that Midland College would not be able to defend its NJCAA title, like it said in Ed Todd's column Sunday?

"We've already got our reservations in Hutchinson," she was almost pleading.

Well, mam, you can't really believe anything Ed Todd writes about sports. He hasn't turned in a satisfactory basketball story yet this season. Todd thinks a basketball is a ball made from a basket, a baseball is a ball made from a base, and a football, well, you get the idea.

IT DIDN'T get much publicity, but the University of North Carolina offered McKenan Stadium as the site for SMU and Penn State to settle their dispute over No. 1 in an after-bowl playoff. Joe Paterno was grateful, but, as far as he was concerned, there was no dispute... all there in black and white...We've never been to the University of Washington, but the stadium at Chapel Hill may be located in one of the beautiful settings of any campus stadium. Unless you are looking for it, you can walk right by. And the field house beyond the south end zone looks more like a country club...

SMU's Bobby Collins contends it's better to go 8-3 than 10-1, explaining, "If you lose one game, that's all people talk about. If you go 8-3, then they want to talk about the victories." And if you go 11-0-1, they want to know why you didn't go for two to avoid that tie...

WASHINGTON STATE'S George Raveling is one coach who thinks the conferences who have gone to the shot clock and three-point basket made a mistake. He thinks it was the best show in town the way it was.

"We've allowed the media and fans to dictate who the game will be played...I'm mystified. Last March in New Orleans, only one coach out of 300 voted in favor of the rules changes. Then, all of a sudden, we've got all these conferences with clocks and three point goals.

"College attendance is up every year, television ratings, too...We're supposed to give an alternative to the NBA, not imitate it."

How did it happen? Since most of the changes came in conferences primarily in the east, Raveling explains, "I think there was a nuclear explosion out East and the fallout damaged the damn coaches' brain cells."

We couldn't have said it better, George...

Ralph awesome for Cavaliers

By Associated Press

North Carolina State Coach Jim Valvano admitted it. Ralph Sampson was "absolutely awesome." But there was another matter to be considered.

With a healthy Dereck Whittenburg, the Wolfpack had romped to a 16-point lead, 50-34, over Virginia in the first half. Without Whittenburg in the second half, 19th-ranked N.C. State lost an 88-80 decision to the second-ranked Cavaliers Wednesday night.

"Losing Whittenburg the way he was performing is akin to losing Ralph," Valvano said. "What can I say?"

Whittenburg scored all 27 of his points in the first half — including seven 3-pointers from outside the Atlantic Coast Conference's 19-foot bonus circle. But early in the second half, State's most prolific scorer broke his right foot.

THE 7-FOOT-4 Sampson scored 19 of his 33 points in the second half and grabbed 21 rebounds as Virginia averted disaster. Virginia outscored N.C. State 14-4 to close out the half trailing 54-48. And, with Sampson controlling play, the Cavaliers rallied twice in the second half to win.

Thurl Bailey added a career-high 25 points for the Wolfpack, 7-3 and 1-1 in the ACC, while Rick Carlisle had 14 for Virginia, 12-1 and 3-0 in conference.

Top Ten

Milt Wagner scored 21 points, and the Cardinals of Louisville thwarted a Duke rally to post their 12th victory in 14 games. Duke cut the Louisville lead to nine points, 73-64, on three buckets by David Henderson. But two free throws and a basket by freshman Billy Thompson put Louisville ahead by 13, 77-64, with 4:44 to play.

Lancaster Gordon added 16 points for Louisville, which hit 40 of 56 field goal attempts for 71.4 percent. Henderson led Duke with 19 points.

Second Ten

Michigan recovered from a 43-34 deficit in the second half by outscoring Minnesota 14-4 — getting six points from Butch Wade — to take a 48-47 lead with 7:26 left in the Big Ten showdown. Leslie Rockymore paced Michigan with 15 points, while Randy Breuer had 20 for Minnesota, which lost for only the second time in 12 games.

Greg Cavener scored a career-high 22 points to pace Missouri to an easy victory over Northern Illinois. Missouri outscored the Panthers 10-2 in the first three minutes of the second half to lead 53-28. Missouri, 11-2, also got 15 points from Jon Sundvold.

John Pinone scored 19 points, and 9-2 Villanova led by as many as 20 points to beat Pittsburgh in a Big East Conference game. Villanova outscored Pitt 12-2 to take a 16-6 lead early in the game, and the rout was on. Pitt's Clyde Vaughan, the leading scorer in the conference, was held to only 12 points.

Michael Young scored 19 points, and Akeem Olajuwon and Reed Gettys each hit a pair of free throws in the final 37 seconds to lift Houston over Texas Christian. The victory, which gave Houston a 12-2 record, was the first for the Cougars at Fort Worth, Texas, in five years. Darrell Browder led TCU with 18 points.

Unranked Teams

John Paxson scored 16 of his 20 points in the second half as Notre Dame buried Canisius 78-47. Forward Bill Varner added 19 points for the Irish, 7-5, while Ray Hall had 13 points for the Golden Griffins.

Door opens for Brooks, Juan

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Correspondent

Baseball's Hall of Fame has opened its portals for two new members — "Mr. Good Guy With the Flawless Glove" and the "The Dominican Dandy With a Thousand Pitches" — but there were the usual laments for the good ones left out in the cold.

"I am sorry for the deserving players who didn't make it," said Brooks Robinson, the third base magician of the Baltimore Orioles who was honored Wednesday along with the San Francisco Giants' mound master, Juan Marichal.

"I think Harmon Killebrew was one of the best — 22 years in the majors, 573 home runs, more than 1,500 runs batted in. And Luis Aparicio, the best shortstop I ever saw — 2,677 hits. Both should be in."

ROBINSON, IN his first year of eligibility, led the Baseball Writers' poll with 344 of the 374 votes, followed by Marichal, with 313. A total of 281 (75 per cent) was needed to elect. Killebrew fell only 12 short and Aparicio fourth, 29 short.

Hoyt Wilhelm, Don Drysdale, Gil Hodges and Nellie Fox were others high in popularity for whom there has to be another day.

However, it was a great day for Robinson and Marichal, introduced by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn as electees whose careers warranted the approval of the writers.

Robinson, critics said, was perhaps the greatest third baseman who ever lived with the possible exception of Pie Traynor — a lightning-quick, diving, ball-hawking Houdini with split second release of the ball.

"NO ONE— unless it was Traynor — got rid of the ball more quickly," said Joe Reichler, renowned baseball historian and aide to the commissioner. "Many fine third basemen, Graig Nettles and Clete Boyer, got their reputations for spectacular plays but they sometimes blew the easy ones.

"Pie and Brooks made the tough ones and easy one with equal grace. When they got the ball, the first or second baseman had better be ready to take it. The ball would come like a bullet."

For all his fielding wizardry, Robinson also was a dangerous hitter, particularly in the clutch.

Marichal, born of poor parents, is the first player from the Dominican Republic to be voted into baseball's shrine. He pitched in the majors for 16 years, winning 243 games with a lifetime ERA of 2.89. He was a 20-game winner six out of seven years in the 1960s.

HIS TRADEMARKS were a high-kicking delivery and a wide variety of pitches. He was renowned for his smoking fastball and wicked screwball.

"They say you had 13 different pitches," a reporter said at the formal press conference Wednesday in a New York hotel. "Would you describe what they were?"

"Not true," replied Marichal, who still carries the accent of his native Laguna Verde. "I not have that many. I have five."

"And what are they?"

"Fastball, slider, curve, screwball and changeup," said the pleasant Latin. He paused momentarily to let the reply sink in, and added puckishly:

"Overhand, sidearm, underhand, three-quar-

Girls try again tonight

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Games played Monday night in the girl's District 4-5A basketball race did nothing to break up the four-way logjam for first place, so they try again tonight with one thing certian — that logjam will decrease by at least one.

The Midland Lee Rebels, tied with three teams for first place with 4-1 marks, meets 4-1 Odessa Permian on the road at 8 p.m. today. One of those teams will, at least briefly, fall out of the lead.

Meanwhile, Midland High, another 4-1 team, appears safe for another day at the top by hosting winless 0-5 Odessa High at the MHS gym in another 8 p.m. encounter. It would be a major upset if the Bulldogs were to fall in this one, but MHS coach Jane Young points out, "They beat us in a game last year when we were in the race, so we won't take them (Odessa High) lightly."

Big Spring, the other 4-1 squad, will test the troublesome Abilene Cooper Cougars, who have a 2-3 district mark, but some talent. If Cooper can pull the upset, only two teams could wind up with the league lead with six of the 14 games down the tubes.

In the only other district game tonight, 2-3 San Angelo faces 0-5 Abilene High, which means that San Angelo should stay alive in the district race. San Angelo was expected to make a strong run at the district crown after winning the 4-5A playoff berth a year ago. However, the Bobcats own back-to-back losses and are in danger of falling out of the race.

Abilene High, however, doesn't appear to have the guns to beat anyone at this stage of the game since five Eagles were kicked off the team last week. Lee bombarded the Eagles Tuesday by an embarrassing 56-22 margin.

Permian's only loss in district play came at the hands of Midland High, and the Rebels of Lee are hoping that the Tall City luck will continue tonight. The Rebels have won three games in a row since falling to Midland High early in the race.

Midland High once held sole possession of first place with a 3-0 mark before stumbling in Big Spring, vaulting the Steers, Lee, and Permian back into the thick of the title chase.

Under new UIL rules this year, two teams will earn playoff berths this season, so in reality, only two of the teams sharing first may end up out of the race at the end of the year.

Lee's Yshun King, who is coming off an 18-point game, and Midland High's Shelia Christian continue to pace the scoring attack of the two local teams. Christian is averaging 14.0 points per game while King is hitting at a 13.7 clip.

College presidents come out of ivory towers to take charge

An AP Sports Analysis
By DOUG TUCKER

SAN DIEGO — The 77th convention of the National Collegiate Athletic Association will be remembered in the bound volumes of such events for legislating tougher academic requirements for student-athletes through controversial proposal No. 48.

The ink-and-paper record, however, will not show an equally significant development. For the first time, university presidents took command of the policy-making meetings of the ruling body of collegiate sports.

Angered by scandals of academic abuse that have put 22 schools on probation, they wrote proposals to toughen academic requirements for incoming athletes. They were bitterly denounced by blacks, who said the requirements were racially and regionally discriminatory.

THE PICTURE was one that will be forever etched in the memory of those who were there. Dignified, conservative white university presidents biting their lips and standing their ground while black colleagues accused them of racial bigotry.

"That was interesting, indeed, very interesting," said one white president of a deep South university. "Five years ago, I guarantee you I would have wilted at the start of the racial charges. We all would have. But it didn't happen this time, did it? The pendulum swings one way, then it comes back the other way."

It was clear as the battle waged that the presidents were the ones in charge of this convention. The athletic directors and other administrators who normally conduct the convention's business sat and listened, for the most part.

THERE WERE more than 100 presidents in attendance, the largest number ever to attend and most of them for the first time. As one observer put it, "This reminds me of when me and my brothers would get into a ruckus, and after a while daddy would come busting through the door and give us all a whale of a licking."

The presidents did not stop with academics. They also saw to it that several measures were adopted to broaden and greatly strengthen the enforcement department, the division which carries out the rules the convention makes.

FURTHERMORE, they thwarted the efforts of the policy-making NCAA Council in mustering defeat of a Division I restructuring proposal.

The plan would have trimmed the top basketball division by 35-45 schools, addressing a problem that has plagued the NCAA for years. But a committee of college presidents working through American Council on Education got it beaten down. The committee members, who wrote the academic proposal, told presidents of schools who would be affected by the plan that they would vote against it in exchange for their vote on the academic proposals.

What will all the new rules mean? Nobody can say for sure, but practically everybody has a theory.

Of the requirement that high school graduates must score at least 700 on the SAT or 15 on the ACT college entrance exam to be eligible for Division I schools, Bob Moorman, commissioner of the Central Intercollgiate Athletic Association, a group of predominantly black Division II schools, said "It means a lot of our athletes are going to come back to us."

A few presidents of black colleges, including Jesse Stone of Southern and Joseph Johnson of Grambling, said the convention's action was "blatant racism," and there were threats of pulling the predominantly black schools out of the NCAA.

"We are still members of the NCAA but I can't predict we will be in the future," Stone said Tuesday night following passage of controversial proposal No. 48.

"WE WILL HAVE to study our need to remain in the NCAA," added Johnson.

In addition, presidents and chancellors of several predominantly black schools said they might seek the help of such black leaders as the Rev. Jesse Jackson, the New York Times reported today.

Dr. Joab Thomas, president of the University of Alabama, said that now the presidents have assessed their authority, they're not likely to give it up.

"I'm going to be talking to some of my colleagues about setting up an organization of us within the NCAA," he said. "College presidents don't have the time to devote to the daily details of athletic departments. But this time we came prepared. We were organized, and we knew what we wanted to do. Next year's covention, I think, will also see some heavy involvement by the presidents."

It's like old times for Packers' Stokes

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Green Bay Packer offensive tackle Tim Stokes says an upcoming matchup against Dallas Cowboys' defensive end Harvey Martin won't be anything new for him.

"Harvey and I broke into the league the same year," Stokes, a nine-year veteran, said when questioned about the challenge in the teams' National Football Conference playoff game at Dallas Sunday. "In fact, the first NFL scrimmage I ever played in was against Harvey Martin.

"Dallas was training at Thousand Oaks (Calif.), and I was with the Rams. I guess I've played against him at least 10 times."

Stokes, who replaced the injured Karl Swanke in the Packer starting lineup two games ago, said the 6-foot-5, 260-pound Martin has "stood the test of time," either leading or sharing the team lead in sacks since he joined the Cowboys back in 1973.

"Defensive linemen usually don't last that long," Stokes said. "I've watched him this year, and I think he's playing as well as he's ever played."

Stokes' recent performance has also won praise. Last weekend, he and the rest of the offensive line got the credit for helping the Packers to a 41-16 first-round playoff victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Packer quarterback Lynn Dickey passed for 260 yards and four touchdowns in that one. The Cardinals failed to sack the Green Bay quarterback in the entire game.

"I'm glad to see our offensive line getting a little bit more recognition," Stokes said. "I think we've got a good offensive line. I think (center) Larry McCarren obviously is an all-pro, and I think Greg Koch is as good a right tackle as I've seen play."

Stokes admitted the Packer line has had injury problems, "but at least we've got enough depth to cover up."

The Packers Wednesday listed their top two left guards on their injury report. Tim Huffman, who started against the Cardinals, was listed as probable for the Dallas game, although bothered by a back injury.

Derrell Gofourth, sidelined for the St. Louis game, was listed as doubtful because of knee problems.

Green Bay Coach Bart Starr said Huffman would start against the Cowboys, and Gofourth hopefully would be available as a reserve.

Starr said rookie Ron Hallstrom has been practicing as a backup at the guard positions in case Gofourth cannot play.

The Cowboys, meanwhile, said quarterback Danny White's thumb and wisdom tooth should be no problems for the game.

The Cowboys said the game, scheduled at Texas Stadium at 3 p.m. CST, was a sellout.

A Dallas oilman, Bob White, was advertising in the Milwaukee area, offering his 12-seat private box, complete with tickets, food, drinks and bartender, for $7,500 for the Packers-Cowboys game.

"Generally, they go for between $5,000 and $6,000 during the regular season, but it's a little more for the playoffs," said White, who said he would be away on business and unable to attend the game.

Robinson disclosed that his highest salary as the Orioles' ace third base custodian was $125,000 his last full playing year in 1976 — a salary reduced to $100,000 when he was named player-coach in 1977.

He said he never regretted that he didn't live during today's free agent money binge.

"We live in a crazy, hodge podge society," he said. "Athletes and entertainers are put on a pedestal. I think people in cancer research should be making more money, but it's not the way society is."

HE SAID, under questioning, that he had no criticism of the modern, its salary structure and administration, but throught there was a negative aspect in big, long-term contracts.

"In the old days they lived and died with the numbers game, how many games you played, hits and runs batted in," he said. "I get a feeling now that players under long term contracts don't feel like playing if they get a headache or a hang nail."

Marichal agreed.

"It seems to me," the pitcher said, "a player may have a very good year. Then he goes to another club under a multi-year contract and he has a very bad year.

Aulby takes bowling lead

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Mike Aulby came from 53rd place to take the lead with a six-game round of 1,498 after two rounds of play in the $135,000 Miller High Life Classic bowling tournament.

Aulby, a 22-year-old lefthander from Indianapolis, Ind., averaged nearly 250 for his second round Wednesday to lead Steve Cook of Roseville, Calif., by 23 pins.

Aulby bowled games of 267, 258, 205, 286, 256 and 226 for a two-round total of 2,783.

Dorsett offers $200 reward for football

Contact: Tony Dorsett.

Dorsett's record for the longest run in National Football League history can only be tied, never broken.

The Dallas Cowboys' running back has sent his shoes to the Professional Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio, but the ball is missing.

Dorsett said he wished he hadn't spiked the ball after his run two weeks ago against the Minnesota Vikings.

"I was so caught up in the game I didn't even realize it was a record," Dorsett said. "I was just out there running for my life. If I had known it was a record, I would have kept the ball."

Asked if he would give a $100 reward to get the ball, Dorsett said, "I'd give $200. I've never seen that ball again.

"I've received a lot of congratulations," he said. "I guess that's what they'll remember me for. It's a record that can be tied but never broken."

Cubs turn down Dodgers offer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dodgers vice president Al Campanis says the baseball team has discussed trading veteran Los Angeles third baseman Ron Cey to the Chicago Cubs, but no trade is imminent.

"We have talked to them (the Cubs) about Cey," Campanis said. "There's nothing imminent. Even if we work it out, they've got to talk to Cey's agent."

Cey reportedly wants a long-term contract in return for waiving the no-trade clause in his present contract with the Dodgers, which still has a year to go.

Chicago Cubs general manager Dallas Green said he and Campanis talked last week by phone and that they would talk again after the Cubs re-evaluate their minor league players.

The Los Angeles Times, citing unidentified sources, on Thursday said the Dodgers are willing to trade Cey for two players in the minor leagues. The team reportedly was turned down after asking the Cubs for two players from their Midland, Tex., farm team, power hitter Joe Carter and fast outfielder Henry Cotto.

Houston Oilers arrested

HOUSTON (AP) — Police who had been monitoring a north Houston bar for several days arrested two Houston Oilers defensive backs, one of them on suspicion of cocaine possession, a narcotics officer says.

Cornerback Greg Stemrick was being questioned about 5½ grams of cocaine worth about $600, Sgt. Jim Ellis said. He said J.C. Wilson, also a cornerback, was arrested on suspicion of drunken driving and suspicion of driving with a suspended license.

Charges had not been filed against either man, Ellis said.

The pair was arrested outside the bar about 9:25 p.m. Wednesday, the sergeant said.

Both Stemrick and Wilson were starting cornerbacks for the Oilers at the beginning of the season, but Wilson was beaten out by Willie Tullis for the final two games of the season.

Stemrick is an eight-year veteran who came to the Oilers as a free agent from Colorado State.

Oiler head coach Ed Biles, who said at a news conference last week that drug and alcohol problems were among those that plagued his 1-8 club this season, was in Palo Alto, Calif., and did not answer his hotel room phone, an operator said.

Memory of Cannon, Namath inspire James

WASHINGTON (AP) — Running back Craig James considers himself a pioneer in the spirit of Joe Namath and Billy Cannon.

James, the Southern Methodist University star who signed with the Washington Federals of the United States Football League, doesn't necessarily put himself in the same category, talentwise, to the famed American Football League stars, but he said, "I believe it is the same type of role.

"They were the pioneers of the AFL," he said Wednesday at a news conference to announce his signing. "We're the pioneers of the 1980s."

James referred to himself and Ohio State running back Tim Spencer who signed last week with the George Allen-coached Chicago Blitz which will meet the Federals in the USFL inaugural here March 6. Spencer was present at the James news conference.

Tripucka returns to ignite Pistons to surprise over Bullets

By Associated Press

The Washington Bullets didn't believe Kelly Tripucka would be a problem after he missed Detroit's last 23 games with a knee injury.

Tripucka, who averaged 25.7 points per game before he was injured Nov. 24, started for the Pistons in his first appearance since then and hit 11 of 18 shots for 25 points in Detroit's 116-110 victory over the Bullets Wednesday night.

"Tripucka played a great game," Washington Coach Gene Shue said. "I was surprised he played as well as he did. We just went over the players before the game and we really didn't pay much attention to him."

The game also marked the return of Pistons forward Kent Benson, who scored eight points after missing the previous 22 games with an injured ankle.

TRIPUCKA scored 14 points in the first half to help Detroit take a slim 56-53 lead at intermission. He then added nine more in the third quarter as the Pistons took control of the game by outscoring the Bullets 30-17 in the period to take an 86-70 lead going into the final 12 minutes.

"It was strange," Tripucka said. "It was like playing my first game. I was really worried in warmups that I wouldn't play well. In the beginning of the game, I was just feeling my way around, but after a few minutes I got into the flow of the game."

Tripucka, an all-star last year as a rookie, got a basket early in the fourth quarter to give him 25 points, but with a safe lead, Robertson rested him the rest of the period.

Vinnie Johnson added 24 points for the Pistons, who had lost eight of its previous 10 games. Washington, which lost its third straight contest, got 24 points from Kevin Grevey and 20 from Spencer Haywood.

NBA ROUNDUP

Nets 120, Pacers 114

Albert King scored 21 points in a relief role as New Jersey snapped a franchise record of 10 straight victories established when the team was in the American Basketball Association in 1973.

76ers 122, Bucks 121

Moses Malone had 30 points and 15 rebounds and Marc Iavaroni hit two free throws with five seconds remaining to lift Philadelphia past Milwaukee.

The 76ers, who have won nine games in a row, scored the last six points of the game after the Bucks went ahead 121-116 with 1:27 to go. Iavaroni hit two free throws with 50 seconds left and Andrew Toney, who scored 27 points, had a field goal before Iavaroni connected on his game-winning shots.

Celtics 139, Warriors 117

Guards Danny Ainge and Quinn Buckner scored 10 points apiece to lead Boston in its 39-point third quarter against Golden State. Robert Parish led Boston with 33 points, but it was Ainge, who shot 9-for-12 from the field and had 20 points, and Buckner, who was 8-for-12 for 16 points, who sparked the Celtics in the pivotal third period. After Golden State tied the score 68-68 with the first basket of the second half, Boston finished the quarter with a 107-86 lead.

Kings 118, Spurs 113

Steve Johnson scored 23 points, six of them during a 12-0 spurt that put Kansas City in control in the third quarter.

Mavericks 112, Clippers 110

Mark Aguirre scored 35 points, including a 23-foot basket with one second left that gave Dallas its victory over San Diego. The Mavericks, who at one time led by 20 points, trailed 110-107 with 25 seconds left, but Aguirre hit a three-point shot to tie it.

Nuggets 126, Jazz 118

Kiki Vandeweghe scored 30 points and Alex English 29 and Denver hit 17 of 18 shots en route to a 43-point third quarter against Utah.

Bulls 98, Cavaliers 96

Reggie Theus, who didn't start for Chicago for the first time in 354 games, scored 16 of his 30 points in the fourth quarter, when the Bulls outscored Cleveland 29-22 to win for only the second time in nine outings.

In a precedent-setting case, Rowe filed a claim with the Maryland Workmen's Compensation Commission which ordered the Colts and the team insurer to pay him about $7,000. I think they (the writers) should vote exactly on what the players' stats show. Another thing I'm thinking is that radio and TV poeple see the players day in and day out, maybe they should be included in the voting. I think I agree with what Don Drysdale said last year, that it's not the baseball hall of fame, that it's the baseball writers' hall of fame"...

High schools begin making athletes toe scholastic mark

and Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — When his top-seeded high school team was upset two seasons ago in the opening round of the California Interscholastic Federation baseball playoffs, junior pitcher Dan O'Dell was so disappointed he skipped the last month of school.

O'Dell went back to school last fall, got passing grades in four classes and played again last spring, earning All-CIF recognition.

But when most of his classmates graduated in June, O'Dell did not. Although he had remained academically eligible for sports, he had failed to earn enough credits to graduate.

O'Dell, one of the leading pitchers and hitters in Southern California last season, didn't think he needed to graduate. He expected to be drafted by a major league club. But he wasn't.

Now he's attending a junior college, trying to earn the equivalent of a high school diploma and continuing his playing career, hoping one day to get a shot at the pros.

Athletes like O'Dell are the subject of a growing debate on whether to toughen the minimum academic standards for high school athletes.

In Los Angeles, Rita Walters, a member of the city's Board of Education, has proposed that a C grade average be made mandatory for all students in the Los Angeles Unified School District who take part in extracurricular activities. Her proposal will be put to a school board vote Monday.

WALTERS IS critical of the academic standards for eligibility established by the CIF, which enable an athlete to play while all but flunking out of school. All the CIF requires for eligibility is four passing grades in the previous grading period. Thus, a student could get four D's and two F's and still play.

But the CIF, prompted by the growing concern of high school administrators, has begun a statewide review of its standards. It may vote on the issue as early as next February for implementation in the 1982-83 school year.

While Walters and many other educators believe that academic standards should be raised, others say an athlete who loses his eligibility will also lose his desire to stay in school. Teachers would not be able to help those who need it most.

Those who favor raising the standards argue that many athletes have lost sight of their reason for being in school, that they are placing athletics above academics. And they say that coaches, pressured to win at any cost, are encouraging athletes to do so.

They note that of the 320,000 California high school students who compete in athletics — one of every four, by CIF estimate — fewer than 5 percent earn athletic college scholarships. They say a diploma is more important than a high school athletic career.

Those who favor the status quo say that if the standards are raised, athletes may take easier classes to maintain their grade-point average and, in the long run, they will receive less education.

OUTSIDE CALIFORNIA, there already has been some action. Here are highlights:

The Milwaukee school board, responding to pressure from several local black groups, voted last summer to raise the eligibility standard for athletes at 16 high schools to a 1.5 grade-point average, which is midway between a C and a D average. Wisconsin merely requires that a student pass three classes in the preceding semester.

The Milwaukee board also put in an attendance clause, with one unexcused absence from school making an athlete ineligible.

At the end of the first grading period two weeks ago, 498 athletes in five sports — football, cross-country, soccer, girls volleyball and girls tennis — were declared academically ineligible. A district official said more athletes will likely be ruled ineligible after the attendance clause goes into effect in December.

AND, A district survey has shown that participation in athletics has declined since the new eligibility standard went into effect. A survey before school opened showed that 1,600 of the 6,660 students who planned to go out for sports didn't meet the 1.5 grade-point average requirement.

After the 12 high schools in Rochester, N.Y., instituted an eligibility policy requiring a C average for participation in athletics three years ago, about half of all the basketball players in the district were ruled ineligible.

Sixty-one of the 123 basketball players in the district, or 49.6 percent, didn't meet the standard.

At one school alone, 18 of the 23 players on the basketball team were ruled academically ineligible.

Rochester also has citizenship and attendance clauses, under which an athlete must have an 80 percent attendance record in each class. A district spokesman said the school board is considering raising the standard to a 90 percent attendance record.

There was a major controversy in Rochester prior to the 1980 sectional basketball tournament when four of the five starters on the basketball team at East High were ruled ineligible under the citizenship clause after they were arrested for robbing a neighborhood store.

The six public high schools in Oakland, Calif., require that a student have a 1.51 grade-point average — midway between a C and a D — to compete in athletics. The district also requires students to have a 1.51 grade-point average to graduate.

IT HAS been in effect for about 2 1-2 years and a district spokesman said participation hasn't changed "appreciably."

"We haven't had any huge probems with it," said Aldo Nelson, commissioner of the Oakland CIF section. "Our coaches were unanimously in favor of it. We had too many kids who were good athletes but couldn't get scholarships because they didn't qualify academically. ... It still not a real strict rule."

However, most large school districts, such as New York City, Chicago, Washington D.C. and Philadelphia, don't have a grade policy for athletic eligibility.

The 100 high schools in the New York Public Schools Athletic League require only that a student pass three courses in the preceding semester to compete in sports. Thus, a student with three Ds would be eligible.

The athletic eligibility standard at the 65 high schools in Chicago is the same as New York, but grades are checked once a week. However, the director of the district's physical education department said he has recommended instituting a C average for participation in sports.

The 31 high schools in Philadelphia are allowed to set their own eligibility standards, but only one school has a tough policy.

At Bartram High in Southwest Philadelphia, an athlete with two failing grades can't participate in athletics or any other extracurricular activity.

THE POLICY has been in effect three years. A school spokesman said 50 to 60 students at the 4,000-student school were ruled ineligible in the first year, but only six students were ruled ineligible this year.

And there is this:

"Over a three-year period we've found that our teams have been more successful," said school spokesman Joan Haigh. "We won the City football championship in 1980 and this year we're probably going to win the sectional title. Our soccer and volleyball teams are also No. 1 this year."

Harressed Olajuwon saves Cougs from Killer Frogs

FORT WORTH (AP) — Texas Christian did just exactly what it had planned against the Houston Cougars and still lost before a record home crowd in a Southwest Conference basketball thriller.

TCU limited the seven-foot Akeem Olajuwon to only 14 minutes playing time by getting him in foul trouble.

He had only two points and one rebound — career lows — yet it was his free throws in the final 37 sconds that helped beat TCU 54-51 Wednesday night and give Houston the SWC leadership.

"I felt like Akeem was no factor in the game, but he went to the line and then just got lucky," said TCU's Doug Arnold.

Olajuwon, on a one-and-one siuation, shot too hard, but the ball banked into the hoop off the glass. The next free throw went through cleanly.

Reid Gettys later added two more free throws to ice the game for 16th-ranked Houston, now 3-0 in the SWC and 12-2 overall.

"When I saw Akeem hit that one off the glass I knew that if that would go, anything would," said TCU Guard Darrell Browder. "Other than that, he was no big factor."

"We played about like we set out to, but they did a good job of hitting their free throws," said TCU Coach Jim Killingsworth.

The victory was the first for the Cougars at Daniel Meyer Coliseum in five years.

Browder scored 16 straight points in one stretch and finished with 18 points for the night, as TCU dropped to 2-1 in the SWC and 11-3 overall.

Michael Young was high for Houston with 19 points, followed by Clyde Drexler with 14.

A record TCU crowd of 7,260 looked on. The Coliseum record is 7,300 set in 1962 for an SMU-Texas SWC playoff game.

San Diego grid coach quits after investigation

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The head football coach at the University of San Diego has resigned after an investigation by school officials turned up evidence of alleged illegal loans to athletes, according to newspaper reports.

Bill Williams, a head coach at USD since 1975, told the San Diego Tribune Wednesday that he submitted his resignation to the school, and that the resignation takes effect Saturday.

"I have resigned," Williams told the paper. "I'm not trying to be evasive, but that's all I have to say at this point."

Results of the school's investigation have been turned over to the National Collegiate Athletic Association. The NCAA is expected to make an official determination on penalties next week.

The Tribune, citing an unidentifed source, said the NCAA has already decided to place the private school's football program on one year probation, prohibiting appearences on television and bowl games.

The NCAA was holding its annual convention in San Diego this week. But Hale McMenamin, assistant director of enforcement for the association, said he could neither confirm nor deny the newspaper reports.

According to the Tribune, the results of the investigation uncovered evidence of illegal loans made by an assistant coach and then by Williams.

Since USD is a Division III NCAA school, it is unable to award football scholarships, although tuition is about $8,000 a year.

Who remembers second placers from Olympics?

Los Angeles Times and Washington Post News Service

It is the nature of sports that the faceless athletes who chased world record holders or Olympic gold medalists throughout their careers are as long forgotten as Calvin Coolidge's vice president, Liz Taylor's first two husbands, the guy who batted in front of Babe Ruth or the second man to fly the Atlantic solo.

I mean, Alydar is never going to catch Affirmed in horse racing. no one is going to remember Sham chased Secretariat to his thrilling Triple Crown in 1973. Can you name the Olympians that Jesse Owens outran and outjumped in the Berlin Olympics of 1936? (One of them was Jackie Robinson's bother, Mack.) Do you know who pushed Jim Thorpe to his gold medals in 1912? Anyone remember who built the SECOND steamboat?

The guys who finished a heartbeat away remain in history's closet as a rule. The best they can hope for is to star in trivia questions. They're so obscure, you can win paid vacations to Acapulco if you can remember them.

ONLY RARELY does one get a chance to vindicate himself or herself. Which may explain why Gregory Foster, the hurdler, was watching with such interest the ongoing adventures of wide receiver Renaldo Nehemiah on the San Francisco 49ers this summer. You may think 49er Coach Bill Walsh had a rooting interest in Nehemiah's progress. But he was practically a disinterested bystander compared to the stake Gregory Foster had in the experiment. Every pass Nehemiah caught in summer drills, Foster's heart leaped. Every tackle Nehemiah got up slowly from was foreclosing on a rivalry that was, while not exactly one-sided, at least top-heavy in favor of Nehemiah.

The night that Renaldo Nehemiah set his world high-hurdle record of 12.193 at Zurich in 1981, Greg Foster ran a 13.03. Whenever Skeets Nehemiah would run a 13.24, Greg Foster would run a 13.27. You can't blink your eye in three one-hundredths of a second, but that is the difference in athletics between immortality and anonymity. It was the Queen of England, herself, to whom her defeated yachtsman once confided when she inquired as to who had me in second, "Your Majesty, there is no second."

That's true in all sports. You run second, you might as well compete in a mask and a suit from which all the labels have been cut.

WHEN RENALDO Nehemiah decided to seek fame and fortune — and maybe a limp — in the National Football League, his risk was that, if he succeeded, European federations would run him off Olympic track and fields forever. You can be a phony lieutenant in the Red Army and still be eligible, but you can't be an honest employee of the San Francisco football club.

The Nehemiah-Foster competition over the years had been furious indeed. But the fact remained that, when Nehemiah set his world record, Foster was second. When Nehemiah ran a 13-flat race, Foster was second. The hurdle is a highly formful race. This is because, while lots of people can run 110 meters fast, not many of them want to take the trouble to learn the technique of scraping across 10 42-inch barriers while doing so. Technique is for diamond-cutters is the view of most world-class sprinters.

Renaldo Nehemiah was probably the only man in the world who could beat Greg Foster over the high timbers. Consider what a frustrating reality that must be to go through life with. But Greg Foster now gets a reprieve. With Nehemiah reduced to trying to beat cornerbacks and safety men, Greg Foster now looks to be a 10th of a second faster than anything he will have to beat in Los Angeles in 1984. Hurdlers do not pop up overnight.

THE SAD FACT is, 1980 would have been the year Skeets Nehemiah got his well-earned gold medal — till Jimmy Carter put up an 11th hurdle.

Greg Foster now has a chance to put someone else in the unenviable spot he occupied for so many years - second. He begins his campaign for the 84 Games by running in the venerable Sunkist Invitational Track Meet at the Los Angeles Sports Arena on Friday, Jan. 21.

Alydar is never going to catch Affirmed, Sham is never going to draw even with Secretariat. Jesse Owens is always going to own the Hitler Olympics and whoever batted second the year Ted Williams hit .406 is going to remain as unidentified as the yacht that trailed in the America's Cup in front of the Queen of England.

But Greg Foster is going to overtake Renaldo Nehemiah — and probably get the only gold medal between them to prove it.

Borg defeats Mayer

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Bjorn Borg of Sweden outlasted Sandy Mayer 6-7, 6-3, 7-6, 7-6 in an exhibition tennis match Wednesday night.

Mayer took the opening set with an 8-6 victory in a tiebreaker.

Borg, who has won five Wimbledon men's singles titles and was ranked No.1 in the world before taking a year off, broke Mayer's service once in winning the second set.

Canadian wants to purchase Blues

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The National Hockey League will first try to find a buyer for the Blues in St. Louis before considering allowing Ralston Purina Co. to sell the team to Canadian businessmen, says NHL President John A. Ziegler Jr.

"The league has a longstanding policy of not being in favor of franchise tranfers,"' Ziegler said Wednesday after it was announced Batoni-Hunter Enterprises Ltd. made an offer to buy the team and move it to Saskatoon, Saskatchewan for the 1983-84 season.

"Rather, we look first in the community to determine whether there would be a legitimate prospective buyer in St. Louis before acting on this matter," Ziegler said in a prepared statement from New York.

Mattsson makes most of chance

By The Associated Press

Goaltender Markus Mattsson had not appeared in a National Hockey League game since 1981, and when the Minnesota North Stars gave him a chance to show his stuff last week, it was a disaster.

"The only time I played in the last 10 days was the game against the Russians last week," Mattsson said. "I played two periods. They had five goals."

Minnesota lost that game, 6-3, last Jan. 4, but the North Stars gave the 25-year-old goalie another chance Wednesday night. He stopped 40 shots and registered his third career shutout in the NHL as Minnesota clobbered Pittsburgh 7-0.

"They really had the pressure on in the first two or three minutes," said Mattsson, a native of Finland who was recalled from Birmingham for the game.

Al MacAdam scored two of Minnesota's goals, six of which came in a 10-minute span during the third period. MacAdam had not scored a goal in two months.

Mattsson last appeared in an NHL game on April 4, 1981 with the Winnipeg Jets.

NHL ROUNDUP

Sabres 2, Nordiques 1

Phil Housley and Craig Ramsay scored for Buffalo, and the Sabres held the high-scoring Nordiques to only nine shots on goal, including two in each of the first two periods.

Bruins 6, Maple Leafs 4

Rick Middleton's backhander at 10:22 of the third period snapped a 4-4 tie and helped end Boston end Toronto's seven-game unbeaten string. Pete Peeters, in goal for Boston, stopped Jim Korn of Toronto on a breakaway with 20 seconds left to preserve the victory.

Jets 5, Rangers 5

Morris Lukowich's power-play goal at 11:02 of the third period pulled Winnipeg into a tie with the Rangers. Doug Soetaert was spectacular in goal for the Jets. He faced 21 shots in the second period. Three of the goals he surrendered were on fluky deflections, twice off a player's skate and the third on a midair deflection by New York's Mike Rogers.

Oilers 10, Black Hawks 4

Wayne Gretzky, Pat Hughes and Paul Coffey scored two goals apiece, giving Edmonton its 16th victory in 22 games and extending the Oilers' unbeaten string on the road to seven games. Coffey added a pair of assists and his two goals included his first shorthanded score of the season.

Flames 6, Canucks 4

Kent Nilsson scored three goals, two during a five-goal Calgary second period, to power the Flames to their third straight victory this season at Vancouver.

The game was halted briefly at 11:33 of the third period. Calgary's Carl Mokosak drew a five-minute penalty for high sticking, then got into a fight with Darcy Rota.

Pittsburgh's Three Rivers to get $6 million renovation job

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Workers have begun ripping up the aging Tartan Turf playing surface at Three Rivers Stadium as part of over $6 million in renovations to the nearly 13-year-old stadium.

By the time the Pittsburgh Pirates play their first game on April 12, a $850,000 AstroTurf playing field will be installed and the old center field scoreboard will be replaced with a $5 million Diamond Vision instant replay board.

The new scoreboard is being supplied without cost by the manufacturer in return for advertising rights on the board during Pirates and Pittsburgh Steelers games.

Stadium officials have described the new scoreboard as "state of the art," and said it can display a variety of live televised games, closed circuit broadcasts and instant replays. It will be one of only five in use in United States stadiums.

Seventy color television monitors will also be installed to enable fans who can't see the Diamond Vision screen to watch instant replays.

The new scoreboard will be mounted in the center field upper deck, just above the location of the old board. About 800 seats will be removed, but the stadium's capacity will be increased from 54,000 to about 58,000 by next football season because of the installation of new lounge boxes.

The boxes, which now extend down the first- and third-base lines, will completely encircle the stadium between the second and third level of seats. The old scoreboard will be removed to permit the installation of the new boxes.

However, all of the new seating is not expected to be installed until the Steelers begin their 1983 National Football League season.

The stadium expansion project will be the second in three years. About 4,000 new seats were added in 1980 when an area formerly used for picnics, group events and press overflow was converted into permanent seating.

Stadium workers began ripping up the patched and weathered Tartan Turf surface on Monday, the day after the Steelers were beaten by the San Diego Chargers 31-28 in the NFL playoffs. A new asphalt layer will be put down before the new artificial turf is laid into place.

Other stadium renovations will include caulking and repairs to aging sections of concrete.

The old scoreboard carried the message "R.I.P., Three Rivers Stadium Scoreboard, July 16, 1970-January 11, 1983" Monday as employees began the renovations.

Management of the stadium is expected to change hands in the next few weeks from a company controlled by the Pirates to the City of Pittsburgh. The city agreed to take over control of the Northside facility last year after the Pirates filed a lawsuit, claiming promised repairs to the stadium were never made.

Fin & Feather

Agreement between state and federal agencies that gives the Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept. authority over 43,000 acres at Matagorda Island highlighted 1982 for the department.

The agreement calls for the TPWD to operate Matagorda state park and Wildlife Management Area in two units. The WMA will be used for management of wildlife resources and research activities and, when appropriate, hunting and fishing. The WMA and park will offer limited recreational activities such as camping, swimming and birding.

Another important agreement was made between the TPWD, a power company and sportsmen's organization. This resulte in the John Wilson Marine Fish Hatchery at Flour Bluff, a $1.2 million faicility made possible by funds donated by the Gulf Coast Conservation Association plus a 30-acre gift from Corpus Christi Central Power and Light Co.

Biologists hope to produce up to 10 million redfish fingerlings annually at the hatchery for restocking Texas bays.

Elsewhere in 1982

Some 18 million visited the state's 115 parks, recreation and natural areas, historic sites and other facilities, a 22 per cent increase in the last two years.

The TPWD became owner of 4,047 acres of marshland habitat in Jefferson County, adjacent to the Murphee WMA.

Money from the sales of the white-winged dove stamp enabled the TPWD to purchase a 120-acre Penitas unit at the Las Palomas WMA and the 200-acre Anaqua unit in Cameron County. Predominately farmland, the units will be reforested in native brush for whitewing nesting.

Art prints of state waterfowl stamp painting will earn $350,000 which the TPWD will use for research, management and habitat acquisition.

The first public pheasant hunt was held in October with a public drawing to select hunters for the four weekends.

Thirteen state records were set in 1982 by anglers, including: Guadalupe Bass, 2 pounds 2½ ounces; Flathead catfish, 91¼; rainbow trout, 4-13; smallmouth bass, 6-2. In the unrestricted division: Blue catfish, 86 pounds, two ounces; Warsaw grouper, 225. In the saltwater division: Chub, 1.37 pounds; gafftopsail catfish, 13-5; Warsaw grouper, 197; blue marlin, 722; tiger shark, 867; tripletail, 29; and rainbow runner, 10-½ ounce.

Operation Game Thief, offering $50 to $200 to those observing and reporting game/fish violations, resulted in 400 calls, resulting in 202 convictions with 20 persons receiving $3,400 in reward money.

Give West Texas men paid $21,000 in fines after pleading guilty to shooting deer from a helicopter, a violation of the Federal Airborne Hunting Act of 1981. Wardens caught the men with 10 white tails killed with the aide of a low-flying helicopter.

Others depart, but Landry goes on

By FRANK LUKSA
Los Angeles Times and
Washington Post News Service

Unconnected though they may be, these departures from the NFL raise at least two questions. First, which job brings more peace of mind and security — being an NFL head coach, or training cobras?

SECOND, NOw how many different head coaches has Tom Landry outlasted since he became the one and only in Dallas? That puzzler was put to Mark McDonald, our outdoors editor who put down a story he was reading entitled, "How to Sell Carp Door to Door for Fun and Profit." He guessed 115. Other office idlers put it anywhere from 85 to 105.

Once Kansas City and the Rams fill their vacancies, the correct number since 1960 will be 171. Heaviest turnover has been in Houston (11), the least in Tampa Bay (1) where John McKay has coached since franchise birth. Probably 95 percent were axed. A few resigned. Vermeil is the first to quit because he was "emotionally burned out."

"It's a big surprise," said Tex Schramm of the Cowboys. "He's a young man (46 years old). All coaches go through those periods during their careers. I'm sure we'll see him back."

A non-Dallas NFL source requested anonymity in exchange for his theory of Vermeil's exit because it's an admitted guess. He knows Vermeil. He knows Philly coaches. And what he said was most sensible.

IT HAS TO do with Charlie Johnson, the nose guard Vermeil traded to Minnesota last summer. Johnson was a showcase player in Vermeil's system. He epitomized the workaholic ethic Vermeil preached. He was proof of how driving and striving could transform a seventh-round draft choice into an All-Pro. And then, in effect, Johnson rejected the system and his coach by asking to be traded. Overwork was one of Johnson's major complaints.

"What hurt him was Johnson, when Johnson said he couldn't play for Dick anymore," said the NFL guy. "Johnson was his best player. His leader. A guy who'd go to war for Dick. All of a sudden a guy Dick is close to says, 'I can't play for you anymore.' You'll notice Dick traded him to a place where the coach (Bud Grant) is supposedly easy. I'm sure that shocked Vermeil.

"DICK CAN take the losing. But he felt like he's hurting the people around him. It's that he decided, 'I'm making everyone around me miserable.'"

Maybe that's part of the reason. Maybe all of it or none. There weren't many specifics to be found in transcripts of his farewell news conference. Vermeil did say when he felt different about what he was doing, and dropped Landry's name in the process.

"It started after our Super Bowl," he noted, referring to January 1981. "The pressure became so intense . . . a whole lot of things caught up with me. They started eating away at me. You can't help but burn out when you're the kind of person I am and you're in this position. Landry has done it for 20 years, but he's a totally different personality."

How does Landry march on year after year?

"He's unique," said Schramm. "That's why he's been on one job for 23 years. He can accept defeat. He can accept hard times just as easily and as graciously as the wins. His strong Christian faith helps his philosophy because he feels all he can do is the best he can do, and then it's in someone else's hands."

CAN ANYONE relate to Vermeil's burn-out feeling? Indeed, said Dan Reeves from Denver. Reeves went 10-6 as a freshman head coach last season and 2-7 this time around. Adding heartbreak that transcends football, Richie McCabe, Denver's secondary coach, died of cancer last week at age 48.

"You burn out a lot more when you're losing," Reeves said. "I can relate to it. This is a tough business. Tough even when you win. I know what Dick went through (a 3-6 season). I don't think his was a bad team. We weren't either. But when the strike was over, for whatever reason, we didn't play well."

Head coaching pressures are heavier than Reeves imagined. He marvels that Landry has shouldered the load for so long without a break.

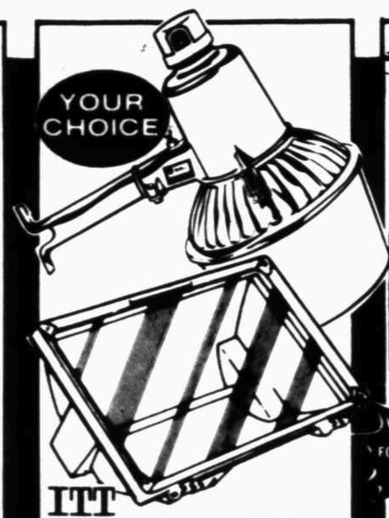

"Losses hurt when you're an assistant but nothing like as a head coach," he said. "I felt bad as an assistant in Dallas if my group didn't play well. But it wasn't that tremendous feeling of being responsible for the whole thing. I felt like I let the city down. I let the owner down, let down the organization and the players."

"I used to relax at the end of the week as an assistant. Now it's time for me to start reviewing the game plan. So it's a never-ending process. The night before the game and the day of the game there's the nervousness. When the game's over going home and trying to sleep, which you can't do, and up the next morning to start a new game plan. It's never-ending, never a moment when you can relax.

Leaner companies will profit in 1983

By ARELO SEDERBERG
Hearst Feature Service

After a miserable 1982, corporate profits are expected to take off this year.

Companies are leaner and can operate more profitably on a smaller base of income. Payroll costs are down. Lower interest rates have resulted in a cleansing of balance sheets. Much long term debt at high interest rates has been eliminated, in some cases swapped for equity. Also, lower tax is helping profit margins.

Merrill Lynch estimates pre-tax profits will gain 25 percent, after-tax profits will gain 20-22 percent. It will be due in part to an expected economic recovery.

Even at 22 percent, however, the gain would be below the average in other recoveries from post-war recessions, Merrill Lynch notes. The average gain has been 35 percent. But considering the miserable recent history of earnings (just look at the results in three major industries – steel, autos, airlines), it certainly is something market bulls found missing in the past.

Continued profit growth is anticipated for beyond this year. Data Resources, for example, expects profits to rise 12.9 percent this year (compared with a 16 percent drop in 1982), then 18.1 percent in 1984 and 16.9 percent in 1985.

If those figures are correct, the stock market could enjoy a powerful, sustained rally. It might well be, as Wall Street is trying to get across, that a Dow Jones average of 1,000 will indeed be the floor for many years to come.

The Dow is a simple average of 30 industrial stocks; it is the king of averages only because it is so heralded and has a long history. It really fails to measure true market activity, especially since it contains so many of the hard-hit "smokestack" companies. Its sad performance over the past decade for some has underminded a better "other" market. Argus Research has computed that if the Dow would have moved in proportion to the New York Stock Exchange Index since it first went over 1,000 in 1966, it would today be over 1,500.

Yet when investors ask, "How's the market?" they want to know how the Dow is doing. Thus, in relating earnings to averages, the Dow is most often used. And how have earnings been doing relative to the average? Well, what is called "earnings on the Dow" last year amounted to only $50 (per share earnings of the 30 companies), the weakest since 1966. Argus expects an explosive growth to $115 this year, $150 next year, and $190 in 1985, when profits will reach some $230 million, compared with $120 million last year.

The Value Line Investment Survey, in projecting an average level for the Dow of 1180 this year (with an outer range of 945 to 1475), sees a whopping 160 percent turnaround for Dow earnings this year, from $42.90 in 1982 to $111.50. Even with the turnaround, however, this year's earnings will not equal the $113.71 of 1981.

This is one reason why Value Line anticipates the average this year is more likely to be closer to its projected low end, instead of the high end, of its predicted range. And the villain in the drama is ailing International Harvester, one of the Dow 30 components. Harvester's staggering losses are messing up the totals. Value Line notes that if Harvester's deficits were omitted from 1981-83, earnings changes would be far less dramatic. The 1982 decline from 1981 would be reduced to 39 percent (instead of 62 percent) and the gain this year would be only 48 percent.

Some of the nation's "traditional" industries, such as steel, are not expected to score much of an earnings comeback this year – steel lost about $3 billion last year – yet profit improvement is expected for others, such as autos and airlines. Standard & Poor's believes the four major automakers could earn some $3 billion in 1983, almost seven times the small $450 million profit last year. And airlines, which lost some $400 million in 1982, should turn a profit this year.

So, even if it is not all roses, the outlook is better. The long recession has had a cleansing effect.

Steelworkers set goal of job security

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Preparing to bargain during a "damnable depression," the United Steelworkers has set job security as a goal for 1983 contract talks with troubled industries such as steel, aluminum and copper.

But the union's International Wage Policy Committee, meeting Wednesday to formulate negotiating goals, means to prevent profitable companies and healthy industries "from evading their collective bargaining responsibilities."

"We cannot bargain in a vacuum, and we cannot ignore the consequences of a collective bargaining settlement on the company or industry with which we bargain," said a 30-page set of goals adopted by unanimous vote of the 173-member committee.

The committee's document is intended to be used by union negotiators as a broad outline during contract talks later this year with the aluminum, basic steel and non-ferrous metals industries and with the container industry in 1984.

"Usually we're on the asking end rather than the giving end in contract negotiations," said USW President LLoyd McBride. "But because of this damnable depression, employers are coming to us and saying, 'If we're going to survive we've got to get something from you this time.' We want them to survive. If they don't survive, we won't have jobs.

"Many of our employers are in financial difficulty. Our bargaining with those employers has to be done with that fact in mind," he added.

However, "the fact is that many of the employers we have under contract are doing quite well. So we think in many areas there's room for substantial improvement," McBride said.

The union's contract with the basic steel industry, in which more than 160,000 workers are currently laid off, expires in August. Pacts with the big aluminum companies, where thousands of other workers are on furlough, expire May 31. Contracts in the copper mining industry, also operating below capacity, expire June 30.

All three of those industries are seeking contract concessions.

For industries deemed healthy, the union is seeking a "substantial wage increase," improvements in cost-of-living and job protection and better insurance, pension and benefit programs.

The union, which claims 1.3 million members, represents workers in a wide range of industries. McBride singled out chemicals and fabricating as among those that are profitable.

The broad bargaining parameters adopted Wednesday are to be further refined by the union's various "Industry Conferences" which have the power to approve or reject contracts negotiated by the union's executive board.

Raise rejected by workers

SCRANTON, Pa. (AP) — City clerical workers turned down a 5 percent pay raise Wednesday in favor of a contract that freezes wages but guarantees that union members will not be laid off.

Members of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers voted 46-12 to reject the raise in favor of a 1-year contract that puts a moratorium on layoffs for clerical workers.

The workers previously rejected a contract that failed to include raises. But they changed their minds after Mayor James McNulty said he could increase salaries at the cost of four or five of the 75 clerk positions.

McNulty had made a similar pledge to the Department of Public Works. After the union members voted for salary increases, McNulty fired several DPW employees.

McNulty said he "applauds" the new contract.

Martin Corbett, a union representative, said he did not believe the agreement would set a precedent.

"In the future, we will not be able to trade no increase for no layoffs," Corbett said.

The city estimated a raise would have cost about $40,000.

Museum acknowledges gift

The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum has announced receipt of a gift of $1,000 from the North American Royalties Inc. Foundation, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Directors of North America Royalties recently toured the museum as part of a Midland meeting, the first such session held outside Chattanoooga.

In acknowledging the gift, Homer Fort, executive vice president of the museum, thanked the company and its foundation and expressed pleasure at having the directors tour. A number of other companies have done the same, he said, and also have arranged visits by stock analysts from around the country.

FAA has reservations about Braniff-PSA flight plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration has objected to a proposed agreement that would get Braniff International aircraft flying again, saying it has "substantial concerns" about the agreement.

The FAA said Wednesday that "few things are clear" about the arrangement under which Pacific Southwest Airlines would lease up to 30 Braniff aircraft and form a new division to serve cities once served by Braniff.

The FAA said it was thus uncertain whether PSA was entitled to get airport landing rights formerly held by Braniff.

The agency also said it might be impossible to meet a proposed May 1 target date for putting the planes into operation.

The proposed PSA-Braniff agreement is to be considered Friday by U.S. Bankruptcy Judge John Flowers in Fort Worth, Texas. The FAA comments came in an objection filed with the Fort Worth court, copies of which were released by FAA officials here.

Also filing objections were the federal Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., Internal Revenue Service, Pan American World Airways, Southwest Airlines, United Airlines and the Marriott Corp.

They were joined by committees representing Braniff's ticketholders, stockholders and unsecured creditors.

Braniff Chairman Howard Putnam declined comment Wednesday, but PSA spokesman Bill Hastings said his airline was surprised at the number of objections filed.

"We anticipated objections, but I don't know if we anticipated all the parties involved," he said.

Braniff halted operations May 12 and filed for protection from its creditors in bankruptcy court the next day.

Braniff's airport landing rights, or "slots," were temporarily reallocated by the FAA to other airlines, but the agency said the approximately 400 slots were subject to being returned to Braniff or a 'duly qualified successor."

Putnam has said transfer of the landing slots is the final obstacle to PSA's plan to lease the Braniff aircraft.

But the FAA said that "facts presently available are insufficient to permit a determination whether the proposed (PSA) entity is a successor and where slots are returnable."

The agreement "is not a straight acquisition of Braniff by PSA; it is not a complete dissolution of Braniff; it is not a joint venture," the FAA said.

"Without more details, more substance" the agency said, it "cannot conclude that this new entity is a successor to Braniff."

The FAA said there also were a number of other unresolved questions about maintenance of the planes and qualification of pilots who will fly them.

Furthermore, the FAA said it would subject to its normal regulatory process proposals to return Braniff slots to PSA, a process that would require a public hearing.

"The number of flights to be flown, the identity of affected airports and slot times are major considerations," the FAA said.

City grants permits

In the first week of the new year, the city of Midland granted 23 building permits for construction valued at $4,388,700, through Jan. 7.

Topping the list was a permit issued to Command Construction for a 92-unit condominium project at 509 Delmar, near K-Mart in west Midland. Estimated price tag is $3,688,000.

The city's Department of Inspections and Permits issued seven permits for new single family homes, and nine for residential alterations.

Prices of the new homes ranged from $50,000 to $184,000.

Oil likely to spill near Galveston

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A U.S. Department of Interior study on offshore oil and gas drilling shows that Nueces and adjoining counties are less threatened by oil spills than areas east of Matagorda County.

The study is based on full-scale development of offshore oil and gas leases in the Gulf of Mexico, as proposed by Interior Secretary James Watt.

In the section of the study on oil spill risk, the counties of Nueces, San Patricio, Aransas, Refugio and Calhoun are given about a 30 percent chance of being contacted by an oil and gas spill during the long-term development of leases in the Gulf of Mexico.

Matagorda County is given a 40 percent chance, Brazoria a 50 percent chance and the counties of Galveston, Chambers and Jefferson about a 78 percent chance of being hit by oil spills.

The 1982 study covers development of all leases in the Gulf of Mexico, from the tip of Texas to the tip of Florida, over a 40-year period.

The Department of Interior previously prepared environmental impact statements for each particular lease sale in the Gulf of Mexico and other offshore areas of the United States. But under under Watt's more rapid leasing system, the department now prepares a single comprehensive statement for each area.

In the 735-page study on the Gulf of Mexico, Louisiana coastal areas are given a greater chance than Texas areas of being contacted by spills deriving from oil well blowouts, pipeline or other equipment malfunctions, fires, tanker collisions or other causes.

BankAmerica buys Schwab house

and Wire Reports

BankAmerica Corp., the California-based parent of the nation's largest bank, Tuesday acquired Charles Schwab Corp., the nation's largest discount securities firm.

The action marked the Federal Reserve Board's first approval of such an acquisition by a bank holding company.

However, it merely continued a trend toward softening the traditional lines of demarcation between securities selling and such financial industries as commercial banks, savings and loans and insurance companies.

Schwab, based in San Francisco, becomes a wholly owned subsidiary of the bank and will operate under the name Schwab, under the same management. The discount brokerage firm maintains 51 American offices, including one in Midland, and one in Hong Kong.

The $53 million acquisition was approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Department of Justice in 1982. Public hearings on the merger began in September.

"To my knowledge, this (acquisition) won't have any affect on the Midland office," said Lou Carr, branch manager here. The local office opened in May 1982.

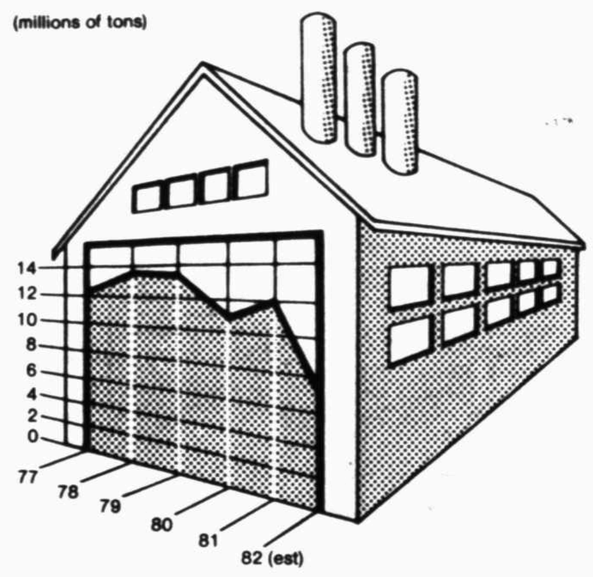

Trade groups representing securities dealers had opposed the sale of Schwab to BankAmerica, arguing the deal might hurt competition in the discount brokerage field and might create conflicts of interest on matters involving customers of both the brokerage and the bank.

However, the Federal Reserve's order said the acquisition was allowable under legal guidelines that permit bank holding companies to take part in activities closely related to banking and that "may reasonably be expected to produce public benefits that outweigh possible adverse effects."

Discount brokers offer all the normal investment services save one — advice. They make trades for investors who already know what they intend to do in the stock market. Since no advisory service is offered, they are able to discount brokerage commissions by 35- to 80 percent, depending upon the transaction.

International trade essential economic ingredient

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Carter administration created the Foreign Commercial Service (FCS) within the Department of Commerce in 1980 to place in the hands of one agency the responsibility for promoting U.S. exports and to help American companies meet heightened competition in the world markets.

International trade is an essential ingredient of the U.S. economy. Roughly 40 percent of U.S. agricultural production is exported. Nearly 20 percent of total U.S. production of goods is exported. One out of eight jobs in the manufacturing sector produce for exports. Approximately 20 percent of U.S. consumption if supplied by imports. Much of the U.S. production process depends on imported goods.

Has FCS lived up to its expectations? Not quite, according to a study of the agency by the General Accounting Office (GAO), an investigative arm of Congress. Who is to blame? The GAO says there is plenty of it to go around, from the White House to the Department of State — which had prior responsibility for promoting exports — to Commerce.

The GAO analysis of FCS performance, claims that it began operations with serious resource problems and that these problems have hampered its ability to substantially improve its performance.

"GAO found numerous indications that FCS needs to reallocate its overseas staff, both among and within countries," the survey asserted. "Although FCS has taken some steps to correct this problem, the lengthy procedures necessary to transfer positions among countries make it unlikely that FCS can attain the desired allocation of staff in the near future."

The GAO contended that arguments over the agency's funding between State and Commerce delayed FCS in fulfilling its functions and contributed to the current poor management of its recruitment, training and placement system.

GAO also found that the commercial staffs overseas continue to devote too much time to reaction to programs and activities, rather than actively promoting exports.

"In particular," it said, "many posts devote an inordinate amount of time to planning and other administrative work as well as to certain Commerce information programs."

Usually a surveyed agency will make an attempt to blame its problems on others. Surprisingly, Commerce generally agreed with the GAO's conclusions and said it was taking steps to correct these deficiencies. Similarily, the State Department also agreed with the substance of the recommendations.

LABOR RELATIONS RULING

The National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) has blocked several international unions that attempted to hold representation elections away from the workplace where companies spoke out against unionization.

In its recent ruling, the NLRB upheld the earlier court decision which decreed that the selection of the time and place of elections should be left to the discretion of NLRB regional director.

Had the decision been overturnd, two results could have occured: Either most elections would have been held off a company's property with the increased likelihood of smaller voter turnout, or employers would have been discouraged from presenting their reasons why the selection of a collective bargaining representative was not in their employees' best interest.

BANKRUPTCY JAM

Congress is likely to move fast in the new session to break a legal impasse over the nation's bankruptcy law which has left thousands of cases in confusion at a time many busnesses are filing for bankruptcy as a result of the current economic recession.

Rep. Peter Rodino, D.-N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary Committe, has introduced legislation to bring the bankruptcy system into compliance with a Supreme Court decision of last June.

In that ruling, the court decreed that the 227 federal bankruptcy judges could not decide non-bankruptcy issues even when they involved companies with bankruptcy cases before those judges. In effect, the court said the judges' powers must be curtailed or they must be given the protection of lifetime tenure, enjoyed by other federal judges.

SURPLUS PROPERTY

The National Recreation and Park Association has called on Interior Secretary James G. Watt to recommend the transfer of 14 surplus government properties, most of them military installations, to state or local park and recreation uses.

Two of the recommended areas are in California and two in Washington. The California surplus lands are a 52 acre site of the San Luis Canal right-of-way for Los Banos, and 51 acres of the main installation of Cambria Air Force Station.

The two Washington sites are the seven-acre Coast Guard transmitter site, Sand Point Way at Blaine Air Force Station to be transferred to the city of Seattle and the nine-acre ammunition dump at the base to be transfered to Whatcom County.

CENSUS PRIMER

Trying to make it easier to use its 250,000 pages of statistics from the 1980 census, the Census Bureau is beginning to publish a series of "Census '80 Product Primers." The first four-page primer dealing with state population reports gives tips on how to use the census books and even includes exercises and charts that teachers could use in the classroom.

SEMINARS SET

Special training and counseling pilot programs to assist women-owned small businesses in seven cities have been organized by the Small Business Administration (SBA). Entitled, "Surviving Business Crises," the pilots will be open to women whose businesses have been operating for at least one year and are experiencing difficulties. The program is being funded jointly by SBA and private sector contributions from universities, consulting firms and small business organizations. One of the sessions will be held in Seattle, Wash. Programs will be held on evenings and weekends through next spring. Information can be obtained by calling 202-653-6620.

NUCLEAR COMMISSION

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission is amending its regulations to provide specific licensing requirements for the land disposal of low-level radioactive wastes. The regulations establish limits on the amount of radioactive material that may be released into the environment, technical requirements for the siting, design, operations and closure activities.

The future disposal of low-level radioactive wastes is becoming as important an issue for local governments as the more publicized disposal of spent nuclear fuel and hazardous chemicals.

More than 20,000 hospitals, laboratories, industries and nuclear power plants annually produce approximately 90,000 cubic meters of low-level radioactive waste – enough to fill more than 433,000 55-gallon drums. The waste is in the form of discarded equipment, cleaning and decontamination solutions, laboratory test tubes and even refuse from the manufacture of such products as smoke alarms and luminous dials for wrist watches.

With the potential closing of the Beatty, Nev. site due to repeated violations of transportation regulations and the lack of adequate disposal facilities in the East and Midwest, there has been increasing pressure for to find new sites. Federal officials estimate that the nation will need between five and seven new regional low-level waste facilities by 1990.

An increasing number of states have began assuming greater responsibility for the disposal of low-level radioactive wastes. Most governors are now contacting neighboring states about a potential for establishing regional compacts. At least one state, Texas, has decided to establish its own radioactive waste disposal facility. North Carolina, Maine, Maryland, Texas and New Hampshire, among others, have established commissions to examine state needs for disposal capacity and to develop future policies and plan. In California, Illinois and New Mexico, public health and environmental safety agencies have been charged with developing plans and conducting siting studies. Los Angeles County has identified a critical shortage of suitable disposal sites and has developed technical standards for selecting environmentally safe disposal areas.

AROUND AND ABOUT

Leading Republicans and Democrats will attempt to demonstrate their support of small business at an all-day Washington meeting of the Small Business Legislative Council, a coalition of 70 national trade and professional associations, representing more than 4.5 million American small businesses...James N. Thomson, president of Formaloy Corp. of Morton, Ill., a sheet-metal welding company, is the new associate administrator for management assistance at SBA...A career government employee, Marvin Morse, has been appointed to the new position of chief administrative law judge at SBA...Energy Department's Economic Regulatory Administration will hold a conference Jan. 18 here to discuss governmental policies relating to the importation of natural gas from Canada and Mexico. The conference was prompted by increasing public concern that the imported natural gas is not priced according to current supply, demand and competing oil prices. Concern has also been voiced that take-or-pay requirements in contracts for the gas may have resulted in some pipelines taking higher priced imported gas while available lower cost domestic gas is shut in.

American Express trots out new mailing scheme

By the Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DENVER — In its first effort at mail delivery since its forerunner's famed Pony Express of the Old West, American Express is testing a new one-day and two-day delivery or double your money back system in Denver.

If it is successful here — the only test market — American Express expects to expand the service nationwide and eventually help expedite 7 percent of the U.S. Postal Service's letters.

It is called Air-Letter Mail Express, and it is aimed directly at the Postal Service's substantially higher-priced Express Mail service.

"It's not every day that somebody takes on the Post Office," said Jim Hanifin of Denver, managing partner in the Air-Letter project and developer of the concept. He said he sees the American Express service as a challenge to the Postal Service but added that he did not want to discuss the service until it has gone through its 120-day test period.

Scott Budny, public information director for the Postal Service in the Rocky Mountain region, said the American Express Air-Letter had been cleared with the Postal Service.

"I know it is legal. They checked with our legal department in Washington. It's just another expedited delivery service." He would not comment on whether the government might have to lower its minimum express rate to compete with American Express.

Ironically, at the same time American Express is challenging the Postal Service, it is using the Postal Service.

"What we are doing is expediting mail over delay points of the postal system (on the starting end)," said Akin Toffey, vice president of the American Express New Products Division in Denver. "We're not going around them, we're working with them, in fact."

The problem with the Postal Service, he said, is that it takes too long for the letter to get from the person who mails it to the airplane that eventually carries it to its destination.

But once on the plane, the regular mail service is just fine, thanks.

The Postal Service charges $9.35 for Express Mail, which guarantees delivery of items up to two pounds the next day to most locations.

American Express limits its delivery to two ounces — essentially letters only — but charges less: $6.50 for one-day delivery and $4.25 for two-day delivery.

If the Postal Service does not get it there within the specified period, it will refund your money.

If American Express does not make it on time, it will give you double your money back.

Both services have geographic restrictions, with American Express estimating its new service will cover about 87 percent of the commercial mail flow.

A customer must take his or her letter to any of 120 special outlets in the Denver metro area. After selecting either one-day or two-day delivery, the customer pays the fee, and a colorful American Express stamp is affixed.

Letters are picked up around 5 p.m. at each of the locations and taken to the airport for sorting.

DJ Services offers free training

Since it's inception, DJ Inspection Services Inc. has maintained a mandatory training program for all of its employees. As of January-1983, these training courses are going to be opened up to employees of other oil and petrochemical companies. In addition, there will be no tuition fee.

The First course begins January 17th and ends on January 19th. The materials that will be covered includes but is not limited to: the manufacture of tubular goods; the properties of steel; types and origins of defects; the use of magnetic fields, API codes and inspection procedures.

The school will be held in the fully equipped training facilities at the new DJ Corporate Headquarters in northeast Houston at 10855 John Ralston Rd. Classroom work will be interspersed with "in-field" exercises in the threading and magnetic inspection buildings on the DJ premises.

Class size will be limited in order to provide individual attention to those in attendance. The first series of courses will last through June 1983. Graduation requirements demand that a student maintain at least an 80 percent grade average. A certificate of achievement will be awarded to those who successfully complete the course requirements.

As a convenience to those in attendance, DJ will supply all study materials and a noon meal. Each person will be responsible for their own living expenses and travel arrangements.

Opening lead: Ten of ♠.

Don't just pack up your tent and slink off into the night. You must be prepared to take chances to defeat an opposing contract. The rewards are worthwhile.

East was certainly well within himself when he competed no further than two diamonds. Even at this vulnerability, we would have considered his hand worth one more bid – not that it would have made any difference to either the final contract or the outcome of the hand.

Three no trump would have been a simple contract to fulfill, and we are not completely satisfied with North's decision to remove it to four hearts. But we must admit that there is a strong temptation when you have an unbalanced hand and a known eight-card fit in a major suit, to play in the suit contract rather than no trump.

West got his side off to an excellent start when he decided to ignore his partner's overcall and lead a club – not a practice we usually recommend, but who are we to quarrel with success? East's immediate problem was to find a quick entry back to his partner's hand.

If you look at dummy, it might seem that East should pin his hopes on partner having the ace of diamonds. But that would be unrealistic if you take the auction into consideration – South could hardly have a forcing response at the two-level if his hand did not contain the ace of diamonds.

East found a line of defense that would succeed if his partner held either the ace of diamonds or the queen of trumps and a lower trump honor. He ruffed the first trick with the king of trumps and returned a diamond. Declarer won, crossed to dummy with a spade and led a trump. East played his low trump, West won the ten and gave East another club ruff, and West still had to score the queen of trumps to cap a beautiful defensive effort – the defenders scored four trump tricks!

Think tank recommends scrapping 'unpromising' weapons systems

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — A conservative think-tank with close ties to the Reagan White House has concluded that despite increased defense spending, U.S. military strength is eroding because of "unrealistic cost planning" and misplaced reliance on high technology.

In a report, the Heritage Foundation, a conservative research organization with substantial influence on administration planning, recommends the scrapping of a number of "marginal or unpromising" weapon systems so that sufficient funds remain available for "more urgently needed" systems.

It charges that because of skyrocketing defense costs, "the numbers of weapons in many of Reagan's actual procurement requests turn out to be lower than had been projected for the same period" by the Carter administration's 1980 five-year defense plan.

It accuses defense planners of overly-optimistic cost estimates that seldom match real expenses in latter years of weapon systems procurements. These unrealistic projections, the report asserts, have had "a lethal effect" on such programs as the Navy's fleet buildup.

It concludes that despite the Navy's stated need of 137 cruisers and destroyers by 1992, Navy Secretary John Lehman plans to put only 25 new ones to sea by 1991, substantially short of the 61 needed to fill out the quota of 137.

Accompanying charts of the history of ship and other weapon systems procurements suggest that even the goal of 25 may not be met. For 1981, for instance, an earlier plan called for the building of 31 ships of all kinds that year, but only 17 were funded. Last year, only 18 were funded, compared with the 32 that had been planned five years earlier for 1982.

By comparing the planned and actual costs of 45 contemporary weapons systems since the late 1960s, the report concludes that they will end up costing $277.5 billion more than originally planned.

The report's conclusion that weapons costs are usually much higher than originally planned is similar to that reached in an unreleased briefing by a Pentagon analyst, Franklin C. Spinney. Spinney has been ordered not to discuss his findings either in and out of the Pentagon.

Ranking White House officials have recently reviewed the Heritage Foundation report and, according to a knowledgeable source, found it to be "enlightening." In the Pentagon, it is reported to have stirred controversy.

The report attributes most of the cost escalation to "the policy of focusing almost exclusively on complex hardware, and unrealistic budget planning and management for both complex and simple systems."

It argues that many of the new high-technology systems, such as radar-guided and "smart" cruise missiles, the Navy's Aegis escort vessel and the Army's DIVAD anti-aircraft gun, may be less effective in combat than the simpler and cheaper weapons they replace.

It asserts that many of the new weapons are designed for long-distance warfare, the shooting down of enemy aircraft tens of miles away, or destroying tanks at distances of thousands of yards. But the report argues that contemporary wars have shown that most aircraft are shot down within visual range, after the pilot has identified the aircraft as "enemy," and that virtually all tank battles are waged in distances of less than 1,000 yards.

It pointed out that during the Vietnam war, simple guns shot down a larger number of enemy aircraft for each round discharged during dogfights than the sophisticated missiles, with the worst results coming from the long-range radar-guided missiles.

And it accused the Pentagon of being so captivated by high technology that it has let the technology dictate battle strategy. "Until combat can be tailored to technology," the report argues, "logic dictates that we not fool ourselves into thinking that technology will change the rules of the game."

A growing problem linked to high-technology, the report claims, is the diminished readiness of the nation's combat capabilities. As aircraft and other weapon systems become more complex, more spare parts are needed.

Miami gets a laugh

MIAMI (AP) — "Miami needs a laugh," declared animal preservationist Jack Kassewitz Jr., and that's what it got when the Dade County Courthouse was draped with a pink ribbon and tied with a bow.

The wrap-up by the National Wildlife Rescue Team was staged earlier this week to protest plans by the artist Christo to wrap 10 Biscayne Bay islands in pink polypropylene this spring.

"Miami is so tense about everything," Kassewitz joked, but also said the display was a serious protest to the potential environmental hazard posed by Christo's plan.

It took only 10 minutes to put up the 1,400-foot continuous roll of pink trash bags, and less time for police to take it down. At about noon, the demonstrators wrapped the plastic around the Torch of Friendship, a popular site for protests in downtown Bayfront Park.

Vets' widows get government to admit mistake

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Lowell and Madeline Van Wagenen and John and Claire Leaver felt they had a sacred contract with their government.

Lowell and John kept their side of the bargain in full. They gave their lives in Vietnam.

Then in 1981, in a budget cutting move, Congress and the Reagan administration took away some of the survivors' benefits that Lowell Van Wagenen, John Leaver and thousands of other servicemen had been told would be provided for their widows and children if they did not return from Vietnam.

To make it worse, no one in government even bothered to tell the estimated 26,000 widows and 70,000 children that the $200-to-$300-a-month Social Sercurity survivors benefits they had been promised would be cut off when their children reached 18, even if they were in college.

"We all felt bitter and betrayed," Claire Leaver said of the feelings she and other widows had when they learned of the benefit cut. "We felt there was a commitment that the government had made to our husbands, that they would provide those benefits.

"THERE WERE benefits our husbands thought they had when they marched off to give their lives," said the Coronado, Calif., mother of two sons. Her husband, John, was a Navy commander when he died in a helicopter crash in Vietnam.

Madeline Van Wagenen said she was hurt because her husband, a Marine lieutenant, felt he had a contract with the government and had been so insistent on telling her of the benefits she and their son would get if he died in Vietnam.

"I didn't want to think about him dying, but he had to think about it," she said. "He was willing to do whatever had to be done, to put himself last, but he said 'take care of my family.'"

But what could have been just another story about governmental insensitivity is actually a story of how a small group of determined widows, complete amateurs at the Washington power game, aided by a few committed congressmen and senators and one sensitive member of the administration, could make the American system of representatve government turn around.

Because of Madeline Van Wagenen, Claire Leaver and perhaps 100 other Vietnam widows, some time in the next month the benefits will be restored to those who had them cut off last year, and will be waiting for the rest when their children reach 18.

"IT IS A wonderful good news story," Leaver said. "It gave us such a good feeling to know that only in America could a group of ladies like this go to the seat of government and get something done that needed to be done, to get something changed."

"We were so pleased that a government, in the midst of all these cuts, could say, 'Oops, we made a mistake,' and go back and correct it," Van Wagenen said.

But it was not easy. It took more than a year of effort, dozens of trips to Washington by scores of widows and some last-minute frantic maneuvering.

"This is a country that takes a three-day weekend to celebrate the fact that our husbands are dead," she said. "We felt that if you really want to honor these men, wouldn't it be better to see that their families are taken care of as they were told they would be."

VAN WAGENEN formed a loosely organized group that became known as the "Survivors of Sacrifice," consisting of Vietnam war widows who would be affected by the cuts. And they started out trying to get someone in government to listen.

"I was really afraid when we started this whole thing that we wouldn't find anyone who cared about us," she said. "We had written hundreds of letters, but we were not getting anywhere."

Van Wagenen said they got back computer-written form letters, indicating to them that the people in the administration and Congress were not even reading what they wrote.

So they decided to take their case directly to Washington.

And it was there that they found what Leaver calls their first "champion:" freshman Rep. Duncan Hunter, R-Calif.

Hunter, a veteran of Vietnam combat service himself, not only introduced the first bill to restore the cut survivors' benifits, he turned his Washington office over to the women.

"IF IT HAD not been for Duncan Hunter," Leaver said, "we would not have had a chance."

"We literally made our headquarters in his office," Van Wagenen said of Hunter. "It was so crowded and his poor staff tripped over us for nine months, but they were so nice."

Their next champion turned out to be someone the widows considered a less likely supporter, Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., who took up their cause in the Senate and introduced a bill there. Cranston soon was joined in the effort by Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., giving them bipartisan support.

"I was so impressed. Cranston, with his record, I guess, as a liberal Democrat, and Quayle, a conservative Republican, they worked so well together," Van Wagenen said.

And finally, after being turned away by "assistants to assistants" in the Defense Department and Veterans Administration, Van Wagenen said, they found their champion in the administration, assistant secretary of the Navy John Harrington.

When Van Wagenen showed Harrington, a former Marine, their most effective lobbying weapon, the packets of survivor benefit information Vietnam-bound servicemen were given, he agreed to help.

"HE ASKED me, 'What can I do?' and I said, 'Take me to the White House,'" she said.

Harrington did just that, and working through Presidential Counselor Ed Meese they got President Reagan to write letters to Congress supporting the restoration of the benefits.

Although everyone now seemed to agree in principle, the problem became finding where the money would come from. The already strapped Social Security system could not be tapped, so Cranston and Quayle, and then Hunter, changed the bills to make the Defense Department pay.

Even then, the move almost fell apart when the bills their provisions were attached to got hung up in fights over other issues. Then Hunter and his growing army of allies in the House got the restoration provisions attached to the continuing resolution in the final days of the lame-duck session last month.

But again, a filibuster in the Senate almost doomed that until Cranston and Quayle and the others got the two-house conference committee to approve the provision and the benefits were restored.

"This was a mistake the 97th Congress made and the 97th Congress made it right," Van Wagenen said. "I could have been so bitter if this thing had not passed, but it all came out right."

"It was such a special Christmas gift," Leaver said. "It reinforced the fact that the democratic process is alive and well in D.C. Those wrongs had been righted."

Magazine publisher sues Yale University

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — The 26-year-old publisher of the Yale Literary Magazine is taking Yale University to court for the right to retain the name of his publication.

Andrei Navrozov will ask a New Haven Superior Court judge on Mondayfor a temporary injunction barring enforcement of new regulations that affect the magazine, known as the Yale Lit.

Navrozov, a Yale graduate, claims the regulations were imposed to silence the conservative political views of the 162-year-old publication.

Yale has declined comment on the case. The new Yale rules require undergraduate organizations to register with the university and state that all such organizations must be led solely by undergraduates.

Navrozov has not registered the magazine, which is published quarterly at $8 an issue, because it does not comply with all the requirements.

Navrozov, son of Soviet defector Lev Navrozov, and two other alumni bought the faltering magazine in 1978 for $1 from the Yale Banner, publisher of the university's yearbook. At that time, university rules did not bar alumni from running the Yale Lit, said the magazine's lawyer, Richard Pober.

The other two alumni later severed their relationship with the magazine, and Navrozov founded the American Literary Society Inc., a non-profit corporation which publishes the magazine.

In a Dec. 8 letter, Yale University Secretary John Wilkinson told Navrozov to comply with university rules within 60 days or Yale would deny the magazine use of the name.

Pober filed a lawsuit in Novrozov's behalf in October. He filed a motion for the temporary injunction because of Wilkinson's letter.

International trade essential economic ingredient

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Carter administration created the Foreign Commercial Service (FCS) within the Department of Commerce in 1980 to place in the hands of one agency the responsibility for promoting U.S. exports and to help American companies meet heightened competition in the world markets.

International trade is an essential ingredient of the U.S. economy. Roughly 40 percent of U.S. agricultural production is exported. Nearly 20 percent of total U.S. production of goods is exported. One out of eight jobs in the manufacturing sector produce for exports. Approximately 20 percent of U.S. consumption if supplied by imports. Much of the U.S. production process depends on imported goods.

Has FCS lived up to its expectations? Not quite, according to a study of the agency by the General Accounting Office (GAO), an investigative arm of Congress. Who is to blame? The GAO says there is plenty of it to go around, from the White House to the Department of State — which had prior responsibility for promoting exports — to Commerce.

The GAO analysis of FCS performance, claims that it began operations with serious resource problems and that these problems have hampered its ability to substantially improve its performance.

"GAO found numerous indications that FCS needs to reallocate its overseas staff, both among and within countries," the survey asserted. "Although FCS has taken some steps to correct this problem, the lengthy procedures necessary to transfer positions among countries make it unlikely that FCS can attain the desired allocation of staff in the near future."

The GAO contended that arguments over the agency's funding between State and Commerce delayed FCS in fulfilling its functions and contributed to the current poor management of its recruitment, training and placement system.

GAO also found that the commercial staffs overseas continue to devote too much time to reaction to programs and activities, rather than actively promoting exports.

"In particular," it said, "many posts devote an inordinate amount of time to planning and other administrative work as well as to certain Commerce information programs."

Usually a surveyed agency will make an attempt to blame its problems on others. Surprisingly, Commerce generally agreed with the GAO's conclusions and said it was taking steps to correct these deficiencies. Similarily, the State Department also agreed with the substance of the recommendations.

LABOR RELATIONS RULING

The National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) has blocked several international unions that attempted to hold representation elections away from the workplace where companies spoke out against unionization.

In its recent ruling, the NLRB upheld the earlier court decision which decreed that the selection of the time and place of elections should be left to the discretion of NLRB regional director.

Had the decision been overturnd, two results could have occured: Either most elections would have been held off a company's property with the increased likelihood of smaller voter turnout, or employers would have been discouraged from presenting their reasons why the selection of a collective bargaining representative was not in their employees' best interest.

BANKRUPTCY JAM

Congress is likely to move fast in the new session to break a legal impasse over the nation's bankruptcy law which has left thousands of cases in confusion at a time many busnesses are filing for bankruptcy as a result of the current economic recession.

Rep. Peter Rodino, D.-N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary Committe, has introduced legislation to bring the bankruptcy system into compliance with a Supreme Court decision of last June.

In that ruling, the court decreed that the 227 federal bankruptcy judges could not decide non-bankruptcy issues even when they involved companies with bankruptcy cases before those judges. In effect, the court said the judges' powers must be curtailed or they must be given the protection of lifetime tenure, enjoyed by other federal judges.

SURPLUS PROPERTY

The National Recreation and Park Association has called on Interior Secretary James G. Watt to recommend the transfer of 14 surplus government properties, most of them military installations, to state or local park and recreation uses.

Two of the recommended areas are in California and two in Washington. The California surplus lands are a 52 acre site of the San Luis Canal right-of-way for Los Banos, and 51 acres of the main installation of Cambria Air Force Station.

The two Washington sites are the seven-acre Coast Guard transmitter site, Sand Point Way at Blaine Air Force Station to be transferred to the city of Seattle and the nine-acre ammunition dump at the base to be transfered to Whatcom County.

CENSUS PRIMER

Trying to make it easier to use its 250,000 pages of statistics from the 1980 census, the Census Bureau is beginning to publish a series of "Census '80 Product Primers." The first four-page primer dealing with state population reports gives tips on how to use the census books and even includes exercises and charts that teachers could use in the classroom.

SEMINARS SET

Special training and counseling pilot programs to assist women-owned small businesses in seven cities have been organized by the Small Business Administration (SBA). Entitled, "Surviving Business Crises," the pilots will be open to women whose businesses have been operating for at least one year and are experiencing difficulties. The program is being funded jointly by SBA and private sector contributions from universities, consulting firms and small business organizations. One of the sessions will be held in Seattle, Wash. Programs will be held on evenings and weekends through next spring. Information can be obtained by calling 202-653-6620.

NUCLEAR COMMISSION

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission is amending its regulations to provide specific licensing requirements for the land disposal of low-level radioactive wastes. The regulations establish limits on the amount of radioactive material that may be released into the environment, technical requirements for the siting, design, operations and closure activities.

The future disposal of low-level radioactive wastes is becoming as important an issue for local governments as the more publicized disposal of spent nuclear fuel and hazardous chemicals.

More than 20,000 hospitals, laboratories, industries and nuclear power plants annually produce approximately 90,000 cubic meters of low-level radioactive waste – enough to fill more than 433,000 55-gallon drums. The waste is in the form of discarded equipment, cleaning and decontamination solutions, laboratory test tubes and even refuse from the manufacture of such products as smoke alarms and luminous dials for wrist watches.

With the potential closing of the Beatty, Nev. site due to repeated violations of transportation regulations and the lack of adequate disposal facilities in the East and Midwest, there has been increasing pressure for to find new sites. Federal officials estimate that the nation will need between five and seven new regional low-level waste facilities by 1990.

An increasing number of states have began assuming greater responsibility for the disposal of low-level radioactive wastes. Most governors are now contacting neighboring states about a potential for establishing regional compacts. At least one state, Texas, has decided to establish its own radioactive waste disposal facility. North Carolina, Maine, Maryland, Texas and New Hampshire, among others, have established commissions to examine state needs for disposal capacity and to develop future policies and plan. In California, Illinois and New Mexico, public health and environmental safety agencies have been charged with developing plans and conducting siting studies. Los Angeles County has identified a critical shortage of suitable disposal sites and has developed technical standards for selecting environmentally safe disposal areas.

AROUND AND ABOUT

Leading Republicans and Democrats will attempt to demonstrate their support of small business at an all-day Washington meeting of the Small Business Legislative Council, a coalition of 70 national trade and professional associations, representing more than 4.5 million American small businesses...James N. Thomson, president of Formaloy Corp. of Morton, Ill., a sheet-metal welding company, is the new associate administrator for management assistance at SBA...A career government employee, Marvin Morse, has been appointed to the new position of chief administrative law judge at SBA...Energy Department's Economic Regulatory Administration will hold a conference Jan. 18 here to discuss governmental policies relating to the importation of natural gas from Canada and Mexico. The conference was prompted by increasing public concern that the imported natural gas is not priced according to current supply, demand and competing oil prices. Concern has also been voiced that take-or-pay requirements in contracts for the gas may have resulted in some pipelines taking higher priced imported gas while available lower cost domestic gas is shut in.

American Express trots out new mailing scheme

By the Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DENVER — In its first effort at mail delivery since its forerunner's famed Pony Express of the Old West, American Express is testing a new one-day and two-day delivery or double your money back system in Denver.

If it is successful here — the only test market — American Express expects to expand the service nationwide and eventually help expedite 7 percent of the U.S. Postal Service's letters.

It is called Air-Letter Mail Express, and it is aimed directly at the Postal Service's substantially higher-priced Express Mail service.

"It's not every day that somebody takes on the Post Office," said Jim Hanifin of Denver, managing partner in the Air-Letter project and developer of the concept. He said he sees the American Express service as a challenge to the Postal Service but added that he did not want to discuss the service until it has gone through its 120-day test period.

Scott Budny, public information director for the Postal Service in the Rocky Mountain region, said the American Express Air-Letter had been cleared with the Postal Service.

"I know it is legal. They checked with our legal department in Washington. It's just another expedited delivery service." He would not comment on whether the government might have to lower its minimum express rate to compete with American Express.

Ironically, at the same time American Express is challenging the Postal Service, it is using the Postal Service.

"What we are doing is expediting mail over delay points of the postal system (on the starting end)," said Akin Toffey, vice president of the American Express New Products Division in Denver. "We're not going around them, we're working with them, in fact."

The problem with the Postal Service, he said, is that it takes too long for the letter to get from the person who mails it to the airplane that eventually carries it to its destination.

But once on the plane, the regular mail service is just fine, thanks.

The Postal Service charges $9.35 for Express Mail, which guarantees delivery of items up to two pounds the next day to most locations.

American Express limits its delivery to two ounces — essentially letters only — but charges less: $6.50 for one-day delivery and $4.25 for two-day delivery.

If the Postal Service does not get it there within the specified period, it will refund your money.

If American Express does not make it on time, it will give you double your money back.

Both services have geographic restrictions, with American Express estimating its new service will cover about 87 percent of the commercial mail flow.

A customer must take his or her letter to any of 120 special outlets in the Denver metro area. After selecting either one-day or two-day delivery, the customer pays the fee, and a colorful American Express stamp is affixed.

Letters are picked up around 5 p.m. at each of the locations and taken to the airport for sorting.

Local Planned Parenthood protests law

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Communication between a parent and teen-ager won't be aided through enforcement of a new federal law which mandates a parent be notified in writing when the teen-ager receives prescription birth control products, according to the executive director of Permian Basin Planned Parenthood.

And she doesn't hold a breath of hope that the new secretary of Health and Human Services will be any better than the one who is resigning.

The local chapter agrees with the national organization of Planned Parenthood, which filed suit to stop the government from enforcing the new regulation, according to Tamra Oatman.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court, charges the rule violates family planning statutes and safeguards against right to privacy and would affect confidentiality of the doctor-patient relationship.

And this action of the federal government might imply it is stepping into the family's right to privacy, she added.

"It's an outrage that the government is operating under the guise of protecting minors' health. We feel it will break down communication in the family," Ms. Oatman said.

"Communication between a parent and child won't start up miraculously with a written note to the parent. One of our aims is to promote parent-teen and family communication, working in conjunction with church groups."

Richard S. Schweiker, the secretary of Health and Human Services, recommended the ruling become final, saying, "Its great benefit is that it will provide an opportunity for family involvement where parents were previously kept in the dark. This will remove a barrier between parents and adolescents, thereby encouraging more communication in many families."

Ms. Oatman disagreed with Schweiker's theory of improved communications.

"Communication between a parent and child won't start up miraculously with a written note to the parent. One of our (Planned Parenthood's) aims is to promote parent-teen and family communication, working in conjunction with church groups. They need to develop a communication base at an early age and not wait until the child is 16 or 17 and the parent gets a note from a family planning program."

The Permian Basin chapter requests that teens wanting birth control products from the agency sign a form verifying they had been told to talk with their parents first. Of the Permian Basin's clients, about a third are teen-agers, said Ms. Oatman. "That's true in most clinics. State statistics show that 20 percent of the births are to teen-agers."

If the rule is put into force, Ms. Oatman said the local Planned Parenthood clinics would continue to serve teen-agers "even if it means giving up some of our funding."

The director was particularly upset over the way the new regulation is being enacted. "They weren't successful in getting it across legislatively. So they're doing it administratively, rather than letting congressmen represent their voters."

Schweiker announced Wednesday he is resigning his cabinet post, and former Rep. Margaret Heckler of Massachusetts was named as his replacement.

"I can't say I'm sorry he's leaving," said Ms. Oatman. "He and Marjory Mecklenberg (deputy assistant secretary for population affairs) have been instrumental in pushing this new ruling through. It would make sense for Ms. Heckler to follow Schweiker's guidelines."

Family safe after fire destroys home

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

A Midland family's mobile home was destroyed but no injuries were reported when a neighbor's trash fire flared out of control Wednesday afternoon near the intersection of Cottonflat Road and County Road 130.

After receiving a 1:35 p.m. alarm, Midland firefighters arrived to find the home of Joe and Debra Osborn, Route 3 Box 481, ablaze. Firemen spent more than two hours dousing the flaming trailer and surrounding grass fires, which threatened other nearby homes.

Miguel Rodriguez said he was burning a pile of trash behind his residence, immediately south of the Osborns' trailer. Rodriguez said the flaming pile ignited surrounding dry grass and spread quickly toward the trailer.

Rodriguez said he ran to the trailer to alert those inside. Mrs. Osborn and her three children escaped without incident. Joe Osborn, 23, was away from home at the time and returned to find the trailer burning.

Mrs. Osborn, 21, and Rodriguez used heavy sacks and a garden hose to keep the blaze from reaching a house north of the Osborns' home. But flames ignited the trailer's back wall and spread quickly through the structure.

"It was just a trail of fire coming this way," she said. "Before we knew it, it was at the back of our trailer, and it just caught up."

Osborn placed the trailer's value at $12,000. "We were fixing to go down next month and get some insurance on it," he said, watching from a neighbor's steps as the house burned.

Nine Midland firemen used 6,000 gallons of water to extinguish the blaze. Firefighters also doused flames which spread to several junk vehicles scattered behind the trailer.

Texas Republicans, husband tops in Barbara Bush's book

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

George H.W. Bush may have been picked for the number two spot in the country, but his wife Barbara still thinks he's "the best qualified man in the United States. And Reagan is second best."

Surrounded by a combination of longtime friends and Republican supporters, the wife of the Vice President of the United States joked about her life in Washington, D.C., and revealed a lighter side to the president at a reception Thursday afternoon in the Racquet Club.

She had arranged to be in Midland, her residence during the 1950s, to speak at a luncheon to promote Reading is Fundamental, a pet project of hers to cut down on illiteracy. But she also agreed to be honored at a reception that afternoon hosted by Associated Republicans of Texas. Both events were fund-raisers and by the end of the afternoon Mrs. Bush commented that some of the people who attended both meetings "had a bad day."

Obviously at ease with this group, Mrs. Bush stood at one end of a small room in the Racquet Club to relate her tales before explaining the importance of ART in getting Republicans elected.

She literally had hitched a ride with President Reagan to Dallas on Wednesday on Air Force One. He was going to Big D to speak to farmers at a luncheon, she to talk on RIF at the same time.

Toward the end of the trip, Reagan called her to his rooms on the plane and said, "I'm disappointed you aren't coming to hear my speech."

"I told him 'I'm very disappointed you aren't coming to hear mine,'" she retorted.

The group of Republican supporters was surprised, however, at her next comment concerning Midland. Mrs. Bush had continued the conversation by noting she would be spending the night in Midland with her son, George. "And the president said, 'Isn't that the city that has Christmas in April?'"

The remark especially surprised Bobby Trimble, who is the spearhead behind the volunteer housing rehabilitation program. Last April, he was one of four persons chosen from across the country to receive the first national volunteer award. And he noted that it was Nancy Reagan who had to give the awards; the president had to give a speech in Chicago that night.

Looking back to the days when her husband was campaigning for the Republican nomination for president, Mrs. Bush said in a bantering manner, "George and I only worked 16 years against him (Reagan). I haven't changed my mind. I still think George is the best qualified man in the U.S."

Contending that Reagan "doesn't have a dark side," Mrs. Bush recalled when her husband stopped in to visit the president at the hospital a few days after he was shot in March 1981.

In reply to the vice president's question about his well-being, Reagan related that he had been hot and cold during the night and had requested a bath from the nurse. She refused. When she left, Reagan said he went to the bathroom, took his clothes off and took a sponge bath. When he was through, he looked down and saw he had spilled a large amount of water on the floor. Reagan proceeded to clean it up, telling Bush later that he didn't want the nurse to have to do it.

"Reagan is very considerate," Mrs. Bush added. "George loves to go to work every morning."

Turning to the purpose for her appearance, Mrs. Bush outlined the need for ART.

"Someone asked me what the Republican Party was like when I came to Texas. Well, it wasn't," she laughed, recalling the time she and her husband manned a polling place for the Republicans. The only people that came by were a drunk who thought he was at the Democratic box and some friends who dropped off lunch for the Bushes while on their way to vote at the Demo-

Woman gives open arms, house to homeless elderly

By GAIL BURKE

Pruitt Walker, 76, lives at Etta's house. This is his home. At 6 a.m. he extends his cane and tic-tacs his way from his bedroom to the breakfast table. Pruitt has been blind since the mid-1950s.

Golden Punchard, wearing a western-felt hat slightly cocked, can't quite remember how old he is — more than 75 years — but he's not quite sure. He lives at Etta's house, too. This is his home. Each morning after breakfast, Golden shuffles across the railroad tracks over to a local market off of Lee and Front streets. He says he's "tendin' business."

William Simmons proudly states he was born Dec. 29, 1899. He used to work as a bellhop — way back when — at the Scharbauer Hotel. He also lives at Etta's house. This is his home. Every morning William strolls his southside neighborhood. All told, he visits a special friend every day around 9:30 a.m. — but he only laughs if you ask if it's a lady friend.

She extended her modest abode to others — as a foster home. Unlike most foster home facilities, which accommodate the young, the door to Etta's three-bedroom brick house swings open for the elderly.

Since 1975, through the state-funded adult foster program, Etta has cared for five senior citizens — who otherwise might be institutionalized in a nursing home.

Etta will say she's not special. She stays in the background, muttering that she thinks "anybody who can get around shouldn't go to an old folks home."

About eight years have passed since she spotted an ad in the newspaper asking for a qualified person to manage a foster home for the elderly who do not necessarily need nursing home care.

THE TEXAS Department of Human Resources is always looking for adult foster homes. Social worker April Cook says it's an alternative to the nursing home.

"A lot of people can take this (adult foster home) on and not care, but Etta really cares for these gentlemen," says April. "She's a special person. These gentlemen would probably be in a nursing home if it weren't for her."

Etta's home is one of two certified adult foster homes in Midland. A person can keep up to three people in a home. The state pays Etta $6 per person, per day. Her boarders contribute to the household a contracted amount from their Social Security checks.

Pruitt claims he watches his budget closely, so he can buy a can of beer once in a while.

Etta, who keeps a tight budget, provides food, shelter and clothing for the gentlemen. And sometimes — when their money runs short — she takes care of them out of her own pocket. She cares.

"I'VE ALWAYS liked to take care of folks," Etta whispers while fidgeting with her blouse. "I don't think I'm that special. It takes a person who has patience who wants to care for your older people."

"We're just like family — even scraps now and then," she says with a grin.

Pruitt, garbed in camel-colored working shirt and trousers, says he "gets around pretty good," and enjoys listening to the buzzers, screams and

Police report burglary complaints in Midland

In a rash of burglary complaints filed with city police during the past 24 hours, a man who indicated he was from Midland College is suspected of breaking into a northwest-side home Wednesday morning and stealing $2,470 worth of jewelry.

Mrs. Rusty Olsen of 4109 Crestwood Ave. told officers the man came to her door about 8:15 a.m. and asked if she wanted her house number put on the curb. She said she'd have to check and let him know, according to the police report. The man said he'd return this weekend, but not to let "anyone but Midland College" do the job.

Mrs. Olsen said she left the house about five minutes after the man departed and returned later in the day to find the front door had been pried open and the jewelry missing from a jewelry case. It is believed the man may have broken into the house after seeing her leave.

He was described as a white, heavy-set, dark-complected man in his late 20s. Midland College officials were attending a meeting this morning and could not be reached for comment as to whether or not the school has representatives going door-to-door on a school benefit project.

In another burglary complaint, Ken Taylor of 4530 Lanham said guns valued at $11,750 were taken in a break-in at his home Wednesday. Included in the collection was a $7,000 limited edition Colt 45, according to Taylor, who told officers he returned home from work about 6:30 p.m. to find the front door had been pried open.

Clothing and video tapes worth a total of $1,050 were reported taken in a burglary of the Sherra Shankles residence at 1319 E. Estes. The house had been ransacked after someone entered it through a window sometime Wednesday.

Police on routine patrol about 4:40 a.m. today said they noticed a window of the Barragan Property Management Co., 1011 W. Missouri Ave., had been broken and a door left standing open. Missing was an $850 IBM Selectric typewriter. Damage to the window was estimated at $50.

In another burglary complaint, Sandy Sarratt of 1706 W. Illinois Ave. said $1,000 worth of stereo equipment was missing from her home after someone entered it through an unlocked door rear door Wednesday.

Term drawing to wait

AUSTIN (AP) — Senators who traditionally draw for two- or four-year terms on the first day of a legislative session following redistricting have decided to see if there any more changes in districts before drawing this year.

Sixteen of the 31 senators will get four-year terms and 15 will get two-year terms in the drawing.

Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, said although few changes are expected, senators decided they wanted to see what changes are made in federal court to meet U.S. Justice Department objections before drawing for terms.

Farabee said setting the boundaries probably will take 30 to 60 days.

"I did have one friend, but he don't take me but once a month...now my friend...he be out of town sometimes...but he comes to take me to Sunday school," says Pruitt.

AGE IS SLOWLY creeping into Golden's mind, clouding precious memories. He sits quietly on a corner sofa that Etta has recovered. Repetitively adjusting his cowboy hat, he gibbers about the past when he "tended cattle" around Midland.

Every now and then, he mumbles, "this is fine all right...pretty good place to live."

The spry, 83-year-old William admits he wouldn't know where he'd go if he couldn't stay at Etta's house.

"I need this home," he says, bowing his head and scanning his eyes across the carpet. "I imagine I'd have to go to the ol' folks home. That's where I'd thought I'd always go."

As if his memory were jogged, William adds, "My wife, she was in a nursing home. We need this home."

He begins to reminisce of a time when Midlanders rode anywhere in town "so long as they had a dime."

"I knew every cowboy in town," he says, adding "Quick Taxi Cab — you could get in and get yourself a ride if you had ten cents."

"I like it here," he says. "This is my home."

"This is our home," William adds.

Heading the local ART move is Deane Stoltz, who said their success at electing Republicans has been "amazing. In Dallas, we elected 50 out of the 50 judges. And we lost only one major state job (Gov. Bill Clements)."

He remembered the early days of Republicanism in Midland, led by the late Jimmy Allison Jr. "He was a dear friend of the Bushes and one of the backbones and spearheads of this program."

Pat Robbins, ART associate director in Austin who asked Mrs. Bush to appear at the fund-raiser, said 200 to 225 persons had attended.

"Mrs. Bush and the vice president have done a lot to help ART," she said.

Prison suit lawyers accept payment figure

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawyers who represented Texas inmates in their lawsuit against the state prison system have agreed to take $1.16 million for their services instead of the $1.66 million they had been awarded.

Attorney General Jim Mattox announced the agreed settlement Wednesday.

Former Attorney General Mark White, now Texas' governor-elect, had said he would fight the attorneys fees awarded by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice last November. White called the figure "excessive."

Justice's order called for, among other things, a stop to "triple-celling" and eventual housing of only one inmate in a cell.

The state responded by erecting tents on the grounds of its maximum security unit at Huntsville.

Last May, Texas prison officials announced they would not take any new inmates because they would be in violation of Justice's order against overcrowding, so the Texas Legislature was called into special session to authorize $55 million for new prison buildings.

But many provisions in Justice's order were overturned or weakened by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which ruled in June that Justice had exceeded his authority to defend the inmates' constitutional rights when he demanded detailed administrative changes in the prisons.

Horton back from Board of Education meeting

J. Murphy Horton, newly-elected member of the State Board of Education for the 21st Congressional District, recently returned from the board's first 1983 meeting.

The 11 new members drew for terms and for seniority. Horton, who drew the longest term, a six-year term, also drew the top seniority position, which allows him priority behind that of the 16 standing members.

"Out of 27, I'm 17 in seniority," he said, laughing. "But that in itself doesn't mean anything."

The board began its meeting Friday with orientation for the new members, he said. "They gave us a lot of data and threw a lot of information at us. It was a full day," he said. "But it was well presented and concise and, I thought, very clear."

The orientation included an introduction to the policies and responsibilities of the board and information pertaining to the allocation of finances and school monies.

Tax statute books, "about two inches thick," also were given to the new members, he said. "They said 'There's your Bible.'"

Representatives from the Texas Education Agency also addressed the new board members.

Also on Friday, Joe Kelly Butler was re-elected for a two-year term as board chairman.

Routine agenda items were discussed Saturday ("nothing pertinent") and the board heard two appeals, both of which were upheld. The first involved a janitor who had been with the Dallas Independent School District for 46 years before quitting during mid-term and losing many benefits from DISD. The other involved a teacher who was forced to quit his job to seek employment with higher wages when his wife became pregnant.

Board members approved the health series for grades 4 through 8 and the civics government series for grades 7 through 8. Adoption of the books had been postponed at the November meeting until additions and corrections had been made to the textbooks.

According to Horton, the health series was adopted "only after a great deal of information on drugs was added." He said that Joe White, assistant to chairman of the Texas War on Drugs Robinson Risner, appeared to be "pleased with the rewrites, although some of us (board members) still felt those books were lax, particularly in the areas of social diseases and how they were handled. I didn't think they said enough.

"The people that I personally had critique the civics government books said (the corrections and additions) were adequate but they didn't like the way the book taught free enterprise," Horton continued.

"Six of us voted against the health books. We knew we didn't have the vote but we wanted to make a statement," he added. "You can find something wrong with every textbook, but that is just one source. Good teachers will supplement a text with other sources."

An ad hoc committee was appointed by Butler to examine the possibility of allowing persons to speak in favor of textbooks during the adoption process. According to Horton, Butler is trying to establish a way in which an announcement of books that will be up for adoption is made earlier. Presently, publishers find out which books will be up for selection long after their books are published.

"He's trying to change it so that the publishers will spend less time re-writing and have more leeway."

The board will meet again Feb. 10-12 to finish orientation and be assigned to committees.

Washington Park betterment ideas presented by residents

The first of two meetings with residents near Washington Park Tuesday night produced several recommendations for improving that park, according to an administrative assistant to the city manager.

Susan Howell reported that about 30 residents from the Washington Park area showed up at the 7 p.m. meeting in the Federation of Black Women's Clubs building, 1703 E. Wall St. "They had a lot of requests" and much of it centered around standard park equipment, she said.

Residents asked for lighting in the park, water fountains, restrooms, resurfacing of the tennis courts, a separate basketball court, wider sidewalks for bicycling and roller skating, a covered barbecue pavilion similar to that in Hogan Park, more picnic tables, cemented trash cans and lighting for the swimming pool.

Ms. Howell noted the city has allotted $67,000 for a community center in that area.

The second meeting will be at 7 p.m. Jan. 18 in the same building.

Taking note of the residents' requests are members of the Parks and Recreation staff and members of the commission. Ms. Howell said a priority list will be compiled and submitted to the Midland City Council for approval.

Liaison appointed

White announced the appointment Wednesday.

"This is going to be a big shock to a lot of people," said Mrs. McBee, 36. "I was looking forward to being at home with my family, but this is a unique opportunity."

Mrs. McBee did not run for re-election last year, after serving four terms in the Legislature.

Midland pilot charged with violations

A Midland commercial pilot who the federal government claims flew his twin-engine air-taxi aircraft out of Lubbock International Airport without obtaining a take-off clearance from the control tower on Aug. 24, 1979, is accused of violating three sections of the Federal Aviation Regulations.

The complaint has been filed against the pilot, Patrick Quinn Perez, by U.S. Attorney Edward C. Prado in the Midland-Odessa Division of federal court in Midland.

The government is seeking to recover $3,000 in fines.

The complaint claims that Perez, who was the pilot-in-command of a Piper PA-31 Navajo in an air-taxi flight operated by Permian Airways Inc., obtained a clearance from the control tower to taxi into take-off position and hold on Runway 17R.

"After taxiing into position and holding for approximately one minute, defendant (Perez) took said aircraft off Runway 17R without obtaining a take-off clearance," reads the complaint.

Students to join in NASA program

Sixth-grade students from Crockett, De Zavala, Milam, Pease, South and Washington elementary schools, as well as students from Alamo, Goddard and San Jacinto junior high schools will participate in the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's lecture-demonstration program Jan. 19-28.

The goal of the national program of free services to teachers, students and the general public is to increase awareness and understanding of scientific research and technological development.

The program will be conducted by Robert D. Neal, an adjunct assistant professor in the College of Education at Oklahoma State University, who represents the Johnson Space Center in Houston. He is serving as an Aerospace Education Specialist for NASA.

MISD coordinator joins task force

Ron Hunt, Midland Independent School District coordinator of health, physical education and drivers' education, has been appointed to participate in the public education and support program for the Governor's Task Force on Traffic Safety.

The task force, formed in January 1982 to study traffic safety problems in Texas, made recommendations to the governor regarding solutions in October. Hunt was asked to serve on the program that will study the recommendations by Jean M. Martin, director of programs for the Texas Safety Association.

As a participant in the public education and support program, he will join with hundreds of others across the state to improve public awareness of traffic safety problems in Texas, including the growing number of traffic fatalities and the increase of alcohol-related traffic deaths.

Institute for Deaf receives donation

BIG SPRING — The SouthWest Collegiate Institute for the Deaf received a $500 donation toward the purchase of a visualtek machine from The First National Bank of Midland, according to Dr. Charles D. Hays, president of the Howard County Junior College District.

A visualtek machine is used to help a legally blind person read the printed, written or typed word. According to Dr. Doug Burke, director of transitional planning and development, SWCID needs not only books with special print, but also special equipment that increases the size of the print.

The donation will help equip the library on the SWCID campus, where a comprehensive reference section and facilities for the visually impaired are growing.

Late registration under way at OC

Late registration hours are 9 to 11 a.m., 2 to 4 p.m. and 5:30 to 7 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and 9:30 to 11 a.m. and 2 to 3:30 p.m. Fridays.

The last day to register for a full load is Wednesday. After that, students may sign up for no more than three classes.

NEA searching for celebrity grads

The National Education Association is asking all school districts for the names of living graduates of public schools who have achieved celebrity status in the fields of science, sports, medicine, arts and media.

Midlanders are urged to send names of any qualifying graduates of the Midland Independent School District to NEA NOW, 1201 16th Northwest, Washington, D.C. 20036, or call Dorothy Johnston, president of Midland Educators Association at 694-5880.

MC offers interior decorating course

A new credit course in "Interior Decorating" is being offered by Midland College for the spring semester, which begins Monday.

Michael D. Wortman, an Odessa interior decorator, will serve as the course instructor. He is a graduate of Texas Tech University.

The course will meet from 7 to 8:20 p.m. in Room 193 of the Allison Fine Arts Building.

"This course will be helpful to the person who simply wants to know more about how to make homes or offices more attractive," said Dr. Charles A. Stewart, chairman of the Midland College fine arts division. "It also would be suitable for a professional or pre-professional course, since it carries three hours of credit upon completion."

Persons interested in enrolling for the course may register in the Physical Education Building between 6 and 8 p.m. today or late register in the Office of Student Services in the administration building between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. Monday and Tuesday.

Two representatives declared winners

AUSTIN (AP) — Two contests filed against winners in close House elections have been settled by state representatives.

The House on Wednesday approved a committee report recommending that Chip Staniswalis, R-Amarillo, and Gwyn Clarkston, R-Irving, be declared winners.

The action came on voice vote and there was no opposition. The candidates who filed the contests had withdrawn the challenges in recent weeks.

Office design is important

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

If you have suspected that your physical surroundings affect both your mood and efficiency, modern science has just proven you're right.

A recent study conducted by researchers at the State University of New York's School of Architecture in Buffalo showed that a good physical environment at work improves the worker's performance and satisfaction.

According to Michael Brill, president of the Buffalo Organization of Social and Technological Innovation (or BOSTI), a good environment is worth from 4 to 5 percent of an employee's annual salary to an employer in terms of increased productivity.

After submitting questionnaires to more than 4,000 workers and studying the office environment in about 50 organizations, BOSTI researchers found that some aspects of the office are more important than others.

IN AN INTERVIEW recently, Brill noted that among the most potent factors are lighting, privacy and inclusion in the original design decision process. As a rule, workers prefer a more homelike environment than most offices provide. If given a choice, they would select pastel colors, soft homelike fabrics and traditional furnishings, rather than the neutrals and hard-edge furnishings that designers tend to specify for offices.

Brill, an architect who teaches at the SUNY School of Architecture, said that the high degree of cooperation of those who took part in the survey indicates that they regard their working environment as vitally important to them. About 77 percent took the time to answer the 500-item questionnaire with no reward other than the chance to offer their own opinion.

The researchers found that the most environmentally deprived workers are clerical, technical and professional employees who tend to have less space than they need to do their jobs and to be consulted rarely, if at all, when decisions on the office environment are made.

On the other hand, managers and supervisors tend to have more space than they need and to be consulted more often than other workers in preliminary stages of office design and redesign.

PARTICIPATION IN THE design process is worthwhile even if the worker does not get what he wanted. Participation indicates to the worker that he is important enough to be consulted. This in itself raises self-esteem and identification with the company, resulting in higher job performance and satisfaction, said Brill.

The study indicated that workers do better in more homelike surroundings. The energy crunch "did something wonderful in the office. It led to extensive delamping with absolutely no loss of performance," according to Brill. In fact, turning off about half the overhead lights in the office to save money actually improved the lighting, since it led to installation of individually controlled task lighting where it is needed.

Brill added that many workers would opt for more privacy than they have. They are not necessarily seeking absolute privacy, however. Instead, they want to minimize interruptions by limiting access of those with whom they do not work on a day-to-day basis. Many would opt to share an office with at least one other person in their own department.

OTHER IMPORTANT positive factors in employee satisfaction include adequate equipment to do the job. Is the chair comfortable? Is the desk adequate for the task? Is there enough filing or storage space?

As far as temperature goes, the most important guarantee of satisfaction is evenness. If it is too hot or too cold, an employee can dress to take care of the situation. But if the temperature fluctuates between too hot and too cold, job performance is likely to suffer.

Another ingredient in a good office is some form of noise control. Too much noise — whether it is the noise of telephones ringing, talking, or machines going — "makes people crazy," said Brill.

However, researchers found that the introduction of computers and other high-technology equipment does not necessarily upset workers. "People accept rapid change as long as they can have some form of compensating tactile gratification," said Brill. In other words, if a company puts in a new computer system, the employer would be well-advised to also add soft draperies or perhaps a rug.

ACCORDING TO BRILL, the best way to improve the worker's lot in the office is by providing some options over which the individual has control. In showing that an improved office environment has bottom-line relevance by leading to more productive employees, less absenteeism and less turnover, the BOSTI research may go some of the way toward making such options possible.

'Merrily whirling carousels' vanishing part of Americana

By ROBERT J. GORE
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Merrily whirling carousels flourished in city parks across the country at the turn of the century. Today, where there were once more than 10,000 merry-go-rounds, fewer than 275 still operate and the strikingly carved carousel animals are quickly becoming an endangered species.

The wooden animals are disappearing into private collections at such a rapid pace that experts fear the colorfully painted symbols of Americana will all but vanish from public view.

"The economic pressure to sell the machines piecemeal is tremendous. Trying to preserve a carousel is like whistling upwind," said Marianne Stevens of Roswell, N.M., an authoripvvens said, the figures are an important part of our heritage. "Americana, anything with an aura of nostalgia, is popular, and carousels are Americana. They're a part of us, of what our society was. The animals were made by artisans with terrific pride in their work," she said.

Soaring prices have come with the figures' popularity. An unusual one fashioned by a master carver can be worth more than $20,000, and one of the grand old baroque carousels can sell for nearly $500,000.

MADE LARGELY BETWEEN 1880 and 1928, merry-go-round wildlife were fanciful beasts of playful burdens. A carousel was a Noah's Ark in the round, featuring horses, camels, giraffes, dogs, lions, tigers, bears, ostriches, reindeer, giant chickens, frogs, pigs, rhinoceroses, mermaids and centaurs.

Tobin Fraley, an Oakland, Calif., art dealer, said, "The really nice animals are fine sculpture. They evoke a sense of things lost." An average horse will bring $3,500, he said. Prices for carousel figures, like most collectibles, have been stable since 1980, Fraley said, but rose about 20 percent annually in the previous decade.

Collector Jo Summit of Rolling Hills, Calif., called the increasing value of carousel figures, "ugly economics. It's the money. A carousel owner can make a 400 percent profit simply by buying a machine and tearing it apart. The whole situation has become very sticky. They're breaking up very good, operable machines. It's true that the animals can be protected in collections, but we shouldn't be destroying the whole."

A DISAGREEMENT between leaders of the National Carousel Association and the American Carousel Society is hindering any kind of joint preservation effort, said Nina Fraley, a Benicia, Calif., artist and Tobin Fraley's mother. The carousel association favors preservation. The society, formed in 1979 as a splinter group of the association, believes that it is permissible to dismantle the machines, Nina Fraley said. Together, the two groups have about 1,500 members.

There is an easy compromise, she said. "We should earmark the significant ones and concentrate on preserving them," she said. Other machines could be broken up. "You can't preserve art on a merry-go-round. The animals get worn away, but they shouldn't disappear into private collections. They should go to museums," Fraley said.

Tuttle agreed with Fraley's idea. "There are 50 or 60 machines that are very special. They will be saved, I'm sure. I have three machines I'm saving," he said. (Two are in amusement parks he owns and one is in storage.) Not all merry-go-rounds are worth saving, Tuttle said, because the machinery cannot be repaired or they have no historical or cultural significance.

Not only can the most notable machines be saved, they can pay for themselves in spite of competition with complex modern amusement rides, Stevens said.

She said she has either leased or sold 13 merry-go-rounds that operate profitably. The key is finding a pleasant suburban location with plenty of pedestrian traffic, she said. "In San Diego, we had 200,000 riders in the first seven months when we opened in 1981," she said.

STEVENS EARNS her living from restoring and managing carousels. "This is a passion, not a profession. Carousels were the first light shows. These machines are so wonderful," she said.

According to Stevens, great care must be taken in restoring carousel figures. A hot paint remover bath would melt the rabbit's hide glue most often used to laminate the wood, she said, so a cold bath must be used. The figures are hand sanded; missing parts such as ears or legs are replaced and cracks are filled, sometimes with auto body putty.

She has recently restored machines in Seaport Village, San Diego, and in Shoreline Village, Long Beach, Calif. Working with artist Tom Layton of Sandusky, Ohio, she decided to paint the animals with hard auto paint for further protection.

Nina Fraley also believes collectors need to work on their animals. "Until you work on the animals, you don't appreciate the differences and intricacies. You really learn about carvers and what they had in mind," Fraley said.

An "amusement park brat," Fraley grew up in a small attraction that her father owned in Seattle. She inherited a 50-animal carousel in 1962 and, with her husband, Maurice, refinished them.

"GRADUALLY, THE ANIMALS took over our lives," Fraley said, until the couple closed their art gallery in 1980 and began working full time at restoring carousels and brokering animals. Their most recent restoration was the machine in Berkeley, Calif.'s Tilden Park. "It was as painful as having a baby and took about as long — more than nine months," she said.

Like Tuttle, Stevens and Fraley, most of the avid collectors have a longstanding interest in amusement parks and merry-go-rounds. But nostalgia has motivated the surge of popularity in the last five years. Sondra Evans, editor of Garden Grove, Calif.-based Carrousel Art magazine, said, "The reason so many people want to own a carousel animal is that they want a piece of their childhoods. They remember that favorite horse on a favorite machine."

That is true, Summit said, tracing her interest to her youth, when she spent many days on Charles I. D. Looff's merry-go-round at the old Long Beach Pike. (Looff was the first master carver to also build his own machines, according to carousel historians.) "Tears streamed down my cheeks when the (Long Beach) carousel burned down. It was a tragedy. Since then, I've wanted a carousel horse," she said.

FOR WILDA LOOFF TAUCHER (Looff's granddaughter) of Long Beach, the 1943 fire was a very personal loss. "Part of my childhood went up in flames. My grandfather carved that machine and my father (Arthur) built it," she said.

To her grandfather and father, she said, "a carousel was a business. They never considered a carousel an art, but they had imagination and a sense of fantasy. Why else would you find a black panther in blue boots?"

She said relatives told her of watching Looff make his first carousel of 27 horses by carving in the mornings before he went to his job as a furniture maker. He carved it from scrap wood in 1876, she said, when it became the first amusement on a desolate beach called Coney Island, N.Y.

Looff was extending a tradition of carousels that began about the year 500 when the Arabs, Aztecs and other peoples concurrently originated early versions as equestrian games, according to historian Frederick Fried. Crusaders in the 12th century brought the game to Europe, where it was called "garosella," an archaic Italian word meaning "little war."

The French gradually refined the game to a circular competition where riders ateded from ribbons. In the late 1600s, an unknown French inventor hung wooden horses from a circular overhead frame to train noble children for combat. The machine was turned by a servant.

BY THE EARLY 1800s, the primitive carousels were a popular ride throughout Europe. An Englishman named John Savage in 1870 added steam power and an overhead crankshaft that gave the horses a galloping motion. The modern carousel was born, later to be powered by electricity.

Led by Looff, from Denmark, and German Gustav Dentzel, a wave of European immigrants such as Marcus Charles Illions, Daniel Carl Muller, Salvatore Cernigliaro and John Zalar took the infant U.S. carousel industry to its peak. Dentzel, the first large manufacturer of carousels, built his initial machine in Philadelphia, according to amusement park historians.

There were 13 carousel factories when the industry was at its zenith: five in Brooklyn, three in Philadelphia, three in North Tonawanda, N.Y., one in Kansas and one in Long Beach.

Each factory had its style. Dentzel was famous for menagerie machines with realistically outfitted Civil War cavalry horses. Looff used real horsehair tails, along with unique glass jewels and wildly flowing manes. The Philadelphia Toboggan Co. featured patriotic embellishments such as carved bunting and Miss Liberties.

Herschell-Spillman also turned out menagerie machines, but with simple, folksy animals. Stein & Goldstein made probably the largest machines with more than 100 animals each. Parker specialized in traveling machines — the horses' legs were fully extended in a gallop pose that made them easily storable.

THE INCREASING POPULARITY of carousels created the first amusement parks, which brought boom times. Herschell-Spillman shipped one machine a day in the 1890s. Carousel manufacturers vied for the most ornate creation, decorating their merry-go-rounds with a profusion of mirrors, lights, polished brass fittings, detailed murals and elaborate scrollwork. Specially built organs were a part of the milieu as well. The largest carousels were more than 60 feet in diameter and carried animals up to six abreast.

A language developed. The horses in the outside row were called "standers" because they were stationary. Galloping animals were termed "jumpers." The best, or "romance," side of each animal faced outside. The lead and most impressive figure was the "king" animal.

Pantographic carving machines allowed an apprentice to rough out four or more bodies at one time from blanks of laminated wood. The expression "head man" supposedly came from the masters' specialization in doing the heads of figures.

DESPITE SOME MASS PRODUCTION techniques, Nina Fraley said, "No two animals are exactly alike. The carvers being poor artisans rather than practitioners of a fine art were not usually allowed to sign their work, so they would add touches all their own," she said. The sides of the animals are decorated with signature devices: Indians, cherubs, nymphs, flowers, knights — even a portrait of Theodore Roosevelt.

Secret guarded

By KATHERINE KEEVIL
AP Writer

Compo is the material used to create the raised ornaments that graced countless walls and ceilings in the 1920s.

And Jeff Tyler of the J.P. Weaver Co. says it is a recipe. "The whole secret to the ornament is based on it. It's like chocolate chip cookies — a little pinch of this or that. The secret is in the recipe."

Tyler's family produces delicate cornice moldings — attached to walls at their junctures with ceilings — and other relief ornamentation at the 69-year-old firm in Alhambra, eight miles east of Los Angeles.

While most modern suburban homes lack the cornice moldings and ornate ceiling swirls and flowers found in buildings of the 1920s, the Weaver firm has plenty of work producing specialty interior relief ornamentation, says Lenna Tyler-Kast, its current owner.

The firm is one of only two retail companies in the United States that make "compo" decorations, she added.

Ceilings bearing Weaver-produced ornaments include those of the United Kingdom pavilion at Walt Disney World's Epcot Center in Florida, singer Linda Ronstadt's New York residence and the California state Capitol Building in Sacramento.

Customers can choose from molds in 6,500 patterns, about 500 of them carved from wood by the company's founder, J.P. Weaver, says Tyler, who is Mrs. Tyler-Kast's son.

The compo is poured into the molds. Each mold may be used many times for a repetitive decoration, such as cornice moldings.

"Sometimes (the mold creators) were smart and put three of the same thing on one pattern," the 25-year-old Tyler said. "At other times, they were thoughtless, and just put in one."

The molds also are used for relief work on picture frames, furniture, doors, ceilings and mantels, he said. Designs include angels, flower baskets, rosettes and animals.

While stlyle comes from the mold, longevity depends on the compo, Tyler said. Compo, self-adhesive when steamed, is pliable enough to fit around curved surfaces but hardens quickly, he said. It can be painted or stained before or after application.

The firm's recipe for compo came from Weaver, a fourth-generation woodcarver who started the company in 1914, Tyler said. He died in the 1930s and his secret remained with a select few, including Charlie Speakes, who had joined Weaver in 1924.

Speakes, 81, retired in 1979 but still visits the company. He remembers Weaver ornamentation being used on many Hollywood mansions, including those of silent screen comedian Harold Lloyd and actor William Powell. Tyler said the ornamentation also was used in Hearst Castle in San Simeon.

Relief decorating — called staff work when done in plaster, stone or cement — was developed in Italy, and flourished in France, where Louis XIV used it in building Versailles in the 17th century.

The ornamentation was popular in the United States until the Depression, when most companies that made it folded, Tyler said, adding that the J.P. Weaver Co. squeaked through hard times because of the quality of its compo.

Mrs. Tyler-Kast discovered Weaver's product as the "Rolls-Royce of compo," while working as an independent designer.

Majority owner Robert McKenzie, who had been Weaver's partner, at first refused to give up any part of the company, but was impressed with Mrs. Tyler-Kast's work and agreed to sell her part of the firm about 20 years ago, she said. She purchased the remainder of the company with a divorce settlement in 1979.

Mrs. Tyler-Kast said that with the help of Jeff and her other son, 23-year-old Rob, the company has grown to a point where there is "more work to do than there is time."

The exhibition consists of 66 modern European and American masterpieces, produced by such artists as Marc Chagall, Stuart Davis, Joan Miro, Edward Hopper and Georgia O'Keeffe.

Crash diets dangerous, experts warn

By SUSAN CHRISTIAN
Hearst Feature Service

PALO ALTO, Calif. — If your New Year's resolution is to shed the weight you only talked about losing last year, don't attempt to do with a rapid weight-loss diet. According to a report released this week at Stanford University Medical Center, crash diets of 800 calories a day or less are dangerous — and even deadly.

Dr. Peter Rudd, assistant professor of medicine, said he and Stanford dietitian Jane Woeckener compiled the report from medical studies on "severely restrictive diets" in response to increasing requests about the dangers of crash dieting.

"We are not making a statement about one particular diet, but rather any method that calls for an extremely low calorie intake," he said.

Rudd said that numerous deaths have been attributed to "semi-starvation," even in cases where people were dieting under a doctor's guidance. "Autopsies showed thinning of heart muscle fibers. When you put your body in a state of starvation, taking in inadequate amounts of protein, the body components that normally undergo a degree of turnover cannot replace themselves," Rudd explained.

The heart is especially vulnerable to breakdowns in structural protein caused by low-calorie diets. Weakened heart tissue can result in irregular heart rhythm and cardiac arrest. People with a history of heart disease should not even consider a semi-fast — but neither should seemingly healthy people, Rudd warned. "It's not a risk I'd take under any circumstance," he said. "You simply should not go on a diet of less than 800 calories."

Brigitte Bardot: 'Sex kitten' no longer

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — There are tell-tale lines at the corners of her eyes and she has put on weight, but Brigitte Bardot, who deliberately walked away from films more than a decade ago, has just been demonstrating that she has lost none of her fascination for her countrymen.

Indeed, as an outstandingly frank three-part TV series on her has shown, you don't have to be French to find her an exceptionally intriguing woman.

The three-hour-long series was no "docu-drama", fleshed out with imagined dialogue and invented incident, but, mostly, the 48-year-old actress, her ex-husbands, former lovers and onetime colleagues coming as close to the truth about her and them as may be subjectively possible.

The star, the once-upon-a-time "sex kitten" of the Fifties and Sixties whose provocative pout set a style for an entire generation of aspiring sirens, has faded away. What has emerged instead is a refreshingly outspoken person with no time whatever for the rosy gloss that cinema stars habitually put on their own past.

BARDOT FOR YEARS has lived a semi-reclusive life at her Saint-Tropez seaside villa, emerging chiefly to wage exhaustive battle against cruelty to animals. Her explanation for agreeing to the TV program was that "all the questions about me would be answered once and for all. There will be little or nothing left to tell, so reporters will have no reason to ask for further interviews which, in any case, I won't give."

The series cleared up the mystery of why she abruptly quit the movies without a formal adieu. (She made her last film in 1971.)

She explained that it was in part because her career never really absorbed her that much; she judged herself to be a mediocre performer, at best. But she also retired to avoid winding up on the emotional scrap heap like so many screen sex symbols did before her.

What may most have influenced her decision, she implied to the TV camera, was Marilyn Monroe's suicide.

"Were you afraid for yourself?" The interviewer asked.

"I grieved for her," was the response.

She made a half-hearted attempt to kill herself during difficulties following her marital split with actor Jacques Charrier. After that, she determined to get out of films as soon as she had earned enough to assure her future.

"BARDOT IS POSSIBLY a unique case, in any event a remarkable one, of a great female star overcoming the system and winning personal survival wholly on her own terms," critic Bertrand Delpech pointed out after seeing the TV series. "The few other enormous stars who've done it had the help of a wordly wise husband or father figure. Bardot scrapped the men and made her own rules. This was all the more amazing because she had been 'created' by a succession of ambitious Svengalis."

Chief "Svengali" was the director, Roger Vadim, who took over her career while she was still in her teens and later married her.

An unintentionally droie aspect of cross-cut interviews about their relationship was the now-graying Vadim's sedate attempt to play down the sexual side of their partnership. Seconds later, there was Bardot matter-of-factly telling how she had fled her conventional, middle-class family and moved in with him because, in the early Fifties, no other way existed to deal with her precocious physical desires.

She later divorced the German millionaire Gunther Sachs, because, notwithstanding his playboy image or maybe because of it, he was, she said, wildly jealous. But she also acknowledged he may have had reason. She made no effort to talk around her disinclination to remain attached for long to one man. None of that "I've-always-been-looking-for-one-great-love-and-never-found-it" hyperbole for her.

"WHEN A ROMANCE is over, it's over," she said. "It usually doesn't last very long. Men have seldom hesitated to admit it. Women have been afraid to. I've never seen any reason for that."

She is today a wealthy woman by any standard. She always invested her income wisely, seeking the most expert financial advice. Some of her fortune has gone into her animal crusades, like combatting the Canadian slaughter of baby seals.

Although she chooses now to live quietly, her undiminished aura has made her a considerable public personage even after a decade spent mainly away from the public's gaze. As a result, it can be risky to cross her.

France's socialist regime recently discovered this to its own discomfit. She threatened to leave France for good if a government scheme to ban private beach property was implemented. The plan would have stripped her of access to the Mediterranean from La Mandrague, her Riviera estate. Others had protested, but when she publicly voiced outrage and made headlines, the project was quietly dropped.

Using a stopwatch-equipped wristwatch, a timer clocks two contestants in a recent Alpo dog food-eating contest in Eugene, Ore. The competition was the final heat in a contest that has been running once every two weeks at a local Eugene tavern. On Jan. 29, eight finalists will meet for the Great Dog Food Eat-Off and will split $800 in prize money, with $500 going to the first man to finish a can of "beefy, meaty" Alpo.

Research lab seeks cure for MS

By NICK PROVENZA
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — A man whose wife suffers from multiple sclerosis rampaged through a University of Washington research lab last month in a desperate but unavailing search for a cure for his wife.

The lab is the workplace for the university's neuropathology department, where researchers seek answers to diseases of the nervous system, including the causes and treatment of MS. The man was sure the university had the answers to his wife's debilitating disease, according to lab technician Linda Sires.

"I understand the total frustration MS and cancer can cause," Sires said."I can totally relate to this man, but I can't do anything to help him," she said.

Dr. Ellworth C. Alvord, head of neuropathological research at the University of Washington, has been trying to untie the MS knot for 22 years, but his successes have been confined to laboratory animals. Alvord induces in monkeys a disease that is similar to MS in man. He then uses a combination of a myelin protein, penicillin and steroids to treat the animals.

Alvord has been able to obtain a success rate of 90 percent in treating a disease in monkeys that is 80 percent like multiple sclerosis in humans, but science doesn't know if the disease in the monkeys is precisely the same as MS or whether the process will work for human beings. One test using a method like Alvord's with human subjects did not appear to arrest the disease, he said. So researchers keep probing for more answers, and it was the search for answers that brought the distraught husband into Alvord's lab.

"I think the real irony of the situation is that we are not treating MS patients here at all," Alvord said of the incident. "My lab is a pathology lab. We don't have human patients treated here. So far, he's the only one I know of who's blown this out of a sense of proportion, and thinks there is indeed a treatment we are covering up. In the first place, there isn't, and in the second place, we wouldn't."

Alvord said the media may be contributing to people's belief that organized medicine sometimes keeps the public in the dark about viable cures for major diseases.

"When people accused the American Cancer Society of not wanting to admit that Laetrile worked because it was developed outside the Western medical establishment, they were wrong," he said. "Some people have the feeling doctors prefer that patients be sick because the doctors would lose business. That's logical, but it's not very realistic," he said.

"There's a big gap between the public's perception of what medicine can do and what it actually is capable of doing," said Dr. Rainer Storb, a cancer researcher working with bone marrow transplants at the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center here. "When I talk with people socially, I occasionally get the feeling they are generally disappointed in the progress cancer research has made. Cancer is not simply a single disease, and progress has been made."

DEAR ABBY

Bride resists catering to groom's mother's whim

By ABIGAL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Marty and I are being married in three weeks, and Marty's mother (Ethel) wants to post an invitation to our wedding and reception on the bulletin board at the school where she works! (She works in the cafeteria.)

My parents are paying nearly $4,000 for a catered affair, and I've told Ethel I need to know the exact number of guests, but she doesn't seem to understand the position she's putting me in.

My mother has offered to send individual invitations to anyone Ethel considers her close friend, but she refuses to put an invitation on the bulletin board.

Now I'm in the middle. Ethel says maybe she won't come if she doesn't get her way. Please help me. Marty thinks his mother is out of line, but he doesn't want to take sides. — UPSET BRIDE

DEAR UPSET: Explain to Ethel that yours is a catered affair and you cannot accommodate her by making it a free-for-all. And tell Marty he'd better start standing up to his mother when he thinks she's wrong, or you'll be starting down the aisle on the wrong foot.

DEAR ABBY: Where on earth did some so-called "men" ever get the idea that they have to "pucker up" like a monkey to kiss a woman?

The gentleman I am now dating insists on "puckering up." I think it's gross and does not fit into the soft, passionate love scene. I get all set for a tender kiss, and here comes these two puckered-up lips, turning me off completely!

I will look for your answer in the paper. — MONKEY-LOVED IN OHIO

DEAR MONKEY-LOVED: Your man is kissing you the way he learned to kiss. However, kissing is a learned activity. And what has been learned can be unlearned, so if you want to swing with this monkey-lover, first TELL him, then SHOW him.

DEAR ABBY: So you think you've heard everything? I got this "invitation" from an out-of-state niece who in the past rarely acknowledged receipt of other special-occasion gifts (Christmas, graduation, etc.):

"Dear Aunt Sue and Uncle John: I am being married Nov. 13. I'm sure you would like John.

"I am enclosing a list of gifts I have already received, as well as my crystal, silverware and china patterns.

"The Hi-Price Store in your area carries these, and any duplicates I get can be exchanged here for whatever I need.

"If you are unable to attend the ceremony, you will be in our thoughts. — Love, Janie"

Well, Abby, how is that for an "invitation" to a wedding? I'd appreciate your comments. — HAD IT IN ARKANSAS

DEAR HAD IT: It appears that your presence wouldn't be missed, but your presents would.

AT WIT'S END

Misunderstood

By ERMA BOMBECK

We have one child who is misunderstood ... literally.

From the day he uttered his first word, "Bweaba" (meaning there's a rainbow around my diaper), to present day, no one seems to know what he's talking about.

I don't know why, but I'm the only one in the family who can translate. When he was a toddler, he stood for hours at his father's elbow shouting, "Me no, na, noo noo" and his father would shrug and say, "What's he want?"

"Well, what do you think he wants?" I'd say irritably.

"He's either telling us the dog hates cold spaghetti, he hates the encyclopedia we bought for him, or he just swallowed his pacifier."

"He is trying to tell you he dropped his cookie down his drawers. I mean, how dense can a father be?"

As he got older, things got worse.

"That kid has to have his mouth fixed," said my husband.

"What now?"

"He just told me he has to know all of his bowels by tomorrow because the teacher is having an English elimination."

"He's always had trouble with his V's," I said.

"That isn't all he has trouble with. If he goes around talking like that, they're going to put him in a class where he makes recipe holders out of wooden blocks and clothespins all day."

"All he's ever tried to do," I sighed, "is imitate the rest of the family and he doesn't know how to pronounce the words yet."

"I'll say," said his brother. "He told the whole bus the other morning that you were a syndicated Communist."

"And he told everyone his teacher had hubcaps put on her teeth so they would look better," said his sister.

"And he told a client of mine on the phone the other night that I couldn't come to the phone because I was unapproachable. Really, something has to be done. At a football game the other night he yelled out, 'All we need now is one perversion and we win the game.'"

"What's the matter with that?" I snapped. "I told him myself one player has a mucilage separation in his shoulder and another was having trouble with his nymph gland and with the quarterback having a sensuous shoulder, we needed all the perversions we

NEWS Of Housing

Building A Modular Home

A crane hoists a section of a factory-built house onto an already prepared foundation, and the result, for the home's buyer, will be a lower price tag

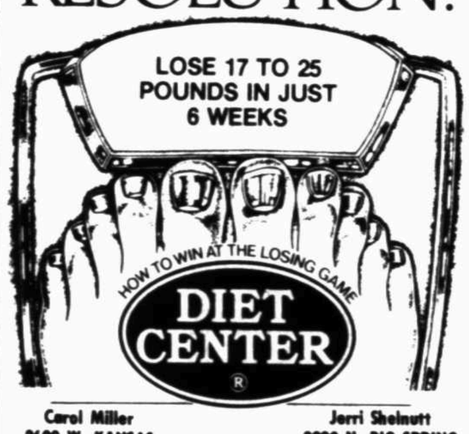

The homes are built in the company's factory, then brought to the building site in several sections on trucks. For the house to properly fit on the foundation, both must be built to exact specifications. These homes cost less to build because parts are bought in quantity and constructed under controlled conditions.

Speed of construction is also a big factor. Quality is improved because construction is overseen in the factory by quality control experts, and the home is not open to the weather during construction.

Village adds airstrip

From Wire Reports

KHASSAB, Oman — A modern airstrip capable of handling the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force in an emergency is the latest addition to this former fishing village in Oman's strategic Musandam Peninsula, lying at the mouth of the Persian Gulf.

By virtue of a treaty signed between the United States and Oman in 1980, the peninsula, which juts directly into the Hormuz Straits, is being hastily prepared for its new role as guardian of the gulf.

Since last October, Khassab has seen the inauguration of a peripheral highway linking it to neighboring emirates, a jetty into the sea and a 2,000-yard long airstrip, enlarged from a dirt landing field once used by the British.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers built the airstrip at a cost of $3.6 million. The refurbished strip now serves domestic flights from the Omani capital of Muscat and from Dhofar to the south.

It also is used for air support to the Omani naval base on Goats Island in the straits, now bristling with radar and patrol ships bearing the deadly French-built Exocet missiles.

The estimated 13,000 inhabitants of the peninsula — an enclave separated from the rest of Oman by a 45-mile zone belonging to the United Arab Emirates — are of the Shihuh tribe and speak an Arab dialect mixed with Persian and Urdu.

Original British explorers believed them to be pre-Semitic aborigines because of customs that separated them from the tribes of Oman and the surronding emirates.

During part of the year, they live in villages at the foot of innumerable streams that criss-cross the peninsula's mountainous terrain. When spring comes, they move to the highlands, where they tend crops or, since the 1970s, travel to the emirates in search of work.

To halt migration toward the emirates, an Omani Committee for the Development of the Musandam Peninsla was created in 1976. With the help of the U.S. consultants, it buit power stations, communications facilities, schools and a hotel. Omani currency and customs slowly began to replace the emirates' influence.

It was once thought the region's futre hinged on possibilities of offshore oil in the Hormuz Straits, but two recent drillings by a French company yielded few results.

Union official convicted

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the first such successful prosecution by the Labor Department, an international union leader has been convicted of "willfully failing" to inform the government his union has taken over management of a local affiliate.

Pascal DiJames, president of the Tile, Marble, Terrazo Finishers and Shopmen's International Union, based in Alexandria, Va., was convicted last month in U.S. District Court in Atlanta, the department's Labor-Management Services Administration said.

He was given a one-year suspended prison sentence and placed on probation for two years. DiJames, who has appealed, was attending a union meeting in Florida and could not be reached for comment. If the conviction is upheld, he would be forced to relinquish the union post.

The department alleged DiJames failed to file required reports about the takeover by international union leaders of a tileworkers local in Atlanta.

And James Wallace Jr., convicted in Ector County April 18, 1979, of carrying a weapon on licensed premises, armed robbery and attempted murder, has been released to Ector County after serving and earning eight years of an eight-year sentence.

Retirees volunteer to return

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 3,700 retired sailors and reservists have volunteered to return to sea duty aboard the Iowa when the battleship is returned to the fleet two years from now.

The old salts, whose average age will be 48 then, responded to a Navy call last year for veterans with certain skills to return to duty aboard the 60,000-ton ship, which was comissioned during World War II and mothballed after the Korean War.

The Navy says it will select 249 of the applicants by April and later will fill 329 additional enlisted slots in the Iowa's prospective crew. First priority will be given to former gunner's mates familiar with 16-inch guns, and fire control technicians experienced with the big guns also will be needed. The Navy is also looking for men with more than two dozen other specialties.

Aides' salaries upped

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some of the Senate's hired help will be making higher salaries than the senators, thanks to a pay hike that made it into law in the final hours of the 97th Congress.

The lawmakers agreed to a 15 percent increase in the pay cap for senior civil servants, including those in the legislative branch.

According to James Cowen, chief counsel of the Senate subcommittee on civil service, salaries of the secretary of the Senate, the sergeant at arms, senior legislative counsels and legal counsels are set by Senate rule at the top level and will go up automatically.

The latest published Senate payroll shows that Secretary James Hildenbrand, Sergeant at Arms Howard Liebengood, two senior legislative counsels and two legal counsels have been making the current maximum of $59,500 a year.

Cowen said their pay would go up to $68,425, compared with a senator's pay of $60,662.

Top aides to many committees get $59,500, but pay increases for them would have to be approved by their committee chairmen. Some top aides to senators could also end up making more than their bosses, but the bosses would have to approve it before it could happen.

House staff people are covered by the change in the pay cap, but none of them will make more than the elected representatives because Congress increased House pay to $69,762 a year.

The senators declined to go along with the pay increase for themselves, but retained the right to unlimited income from speeches and other outside activities.

Stove troubles detailed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Problems with wood-burning stoves are generally caused by people who don't know how to install or operate them, experts have told the Consumer Products Safety Commission.

Michael P. Lennon of HomePro Systems, which inspects stoves and chimneys, said 70 percent of the stoves that he has seen are installed incorrectly and 20 percent are "ready to burn at any time."

CPSC Chairman Nancy Harvey Steorts requested the meeting earlier this week with industry and laboratory representatives to help determine whether the commission should implement a mandatory rule on stove labeling.

The CPSC said that in 1981, heating devices using solid fuel, primarily wood, were involved in about 130,100 residence fires, resulting in about 290 deaths, 2,760 injuries and $265 million in property loss. About 10.5 million wood stoves were in use in 1981.

Smuggling sentence meted out

MIAMI (AP) — A boat captain has been sentenced to 30 years in prison for smuggling Haitians to Miami in a voyage that allegedly included deadly voodoo rituals where two people were thrown overboard.

Fritz Pierrot, 29, and a crew member, Fritznel Reme, were convicted Dec. 1 of conspiracy and smuggling 77 undocumented Haitians into Florida in the autumn of 1981. Reme was given a 5-year sentence at Tuesday's sentencing. Five other defendants were acquitted.

No murder charges were filed, but the indictment cited voodoo ceremonies in which two passengers were allegedly thrown overboard to get favorable winds for the voyage.

Mexican airlines up fares

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexican airlines scheduled fare increases ranging from 30 to 70 percent on domestic flights effective Wednesday, industry officials said.

The highest price hikes were expected to be on flights to and from points along the Mexico-U.S. border, where travelers have taken advantage of the weakened peso for bargain flights.

A regular round-trip ticket from Mexico City to Tijuana costs the equivalent of $89, while the round-trip fare from the Mexican capital to San Diego — across the border from Tijuana — costs several hundred dollars more.

The old fare structure lists round-trip fares of $48 from Mexico City to Nuevo Laredo — across from Laredo, Texas. A round trip ticket to San Antonio from Mexico City costs about $210.

Travel agents said many passengers have been requesting domestic tickets to the border, then making land arrangements to cross the frontier.

Other domestic flights also have been maintained at bargain levels. A round trip ticket between Acapulco and Mexico City was listed at about $18.

The increases were to counteract mounting fuel and other costs and in line with a domestic inflation rate of close to 100 percent.

Debate lets down legislator

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 98th Congress was only a few hours old when one of its new members, Rep. George Gekas, R-Pa., said he was already disappointed in the quality of the debate.

Gekas told the House he was delighted that a large delegation from his home district had come to see him take the oath of office.

"But I am also gravely disappointed that on their visit to this chamber they saw a debate and a vote which was just the opposite of what I had been saying throughout the entire campaign," he said.

"I had touted the House of Representatives and the Congress of the United States as the greatest deliberative body that the world has ever known," the former Pennsylvania state legislator said.

"And the first day they come to Congress, the first day I take my seat, my constituents hear a debate which was in the ultimate calculated to cut off and in the end succeeded in cutting off debate."

Gekas was reacting to House debate on Democrat-sponsored rules changes which Republicans said would make it easier for the House to avoid votes on controversial issues.

Sharks seen off Florida beaches

HALLANDALE, Fla. (AP) — The sighting of about 200 sharks prompted beach closures in this southern Florida resort area, but no attacks on people were reported, authorities said.

Crews in Navy and Coast Guard helicopters spotted the sharks Tuesday morning. Coast Guard spokesman Ensign Doug Turk said the sharks were "swimming in a tight pattern. I would guess the average length was 5 to 7 feet. There may have been a few 10-footers out there, too."

Committee leaders appointed

AUSTIN (AP) — Veteran Democratic lawmakers Carl Parker of Port Arthur and Ed Howard of Texarkana have been given new committee leadership roles in what could become legislative hot seats: education and gubernatorial appointments.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's appointment of Parker as chairman of the Senate Education Committee comes at a time when proposals are pending to share the wealth of the $1.7 billion Permanent University Fund, which now is dedicated to the University of Texas and Texas A&M.

The 1983 Legislature also will be asked to set up a separate fund for colleges outside those systems and to raise teacher salaries by up to 40 percent.

Parker, a 48-year-old lawyer, was a House member in 1963-76 and has been in the Senate since 1977. He replaces former Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson of Midland as chairman of the education committee.

SNELSON DID not seek re-election, but made an unsuccessful race for state land commissioner.

Another major change was Hobby's choice of Howard, 45, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Nominations, which will consider hundreds of gubernatorial appointments to state boards and agencies.

This thrusts Howard into the middle of the legislative fight over appointments by outgoing Republican Gov. Bill Clements, made after Clements was defeated for re-election Nov. 2. Howard said he expects incoming Democratic Gov. Mark White to try to recall Clements' appointments.

Howard succeeds former Sen. Peyton McKnight of Tyler, who made an aborted bid for governor, as chairman of nominations. Howard was in the House in 1969-74 and has been in the Senate since 1979.

Sen. Hector Uribe, D-Brownsville, one of four new faces on the powerful finance committee, said he would use the position to make sure the Rio Grande Valley is not forgotten when the "state budget pie" is sliced.

"ALL THE Valley citizens can ask for is that they receive their fair share; not just the leftovers from the rest of the state," Uribe said.

A freshman senator, Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, said his appointment to the Natural Resources Committee was "ideal."

The committee has subcommittees on agriculture, energy and water, and Sims said, "Agriculture and oil and gas are economic pillars" in his district. "Also, my election campaign pledged to conserve and enhance West Texas water supplies. This issue is dear to my heart, and I'm grateful to Lt. Gov. Hobby for honoring our requests," Sims said.

Coverage surprises spouse

WASHINGTON (AP) — For nearly a week, she found herself married to the biggest story of the new 98th Congress.

"Frankly, I was really surprised at the coverage," said Wendy Gramm, wife of Rep. Phil Gramm, the former Democrat from Texas who last week resigned his congressional seat and announced he was turning Republican.

"It seems like this has been going on for months and months and months," she said. "Whenever the president would be out of town and nothing much was going on, (the press) put out a little article about 'what's going to happen to Phil Gramm' and all the possibilities."

THE SPECULATION was prompted by Gramm's highly visible role in co-sponsoring budget proposals endorsed by President Reagan in 1981, a role that angered many Democrats.

"It was like waiting for a shoe to drop, basically — the other shoe to drop," recalled Mrs. Gramm.

Last week, the House Democratic leadership refused to return Gramm to his seat on the influential Budget Committee. Gramm flew to Texas, resigned from Congress and said he would run as a Republican in a special election called for Feb. 12.

So now, while other members of Congress are taking a breather from the campaign trail, Gramm is back on it again.

Mrs. Gramm, who works for the Federal Trade Commission and has remained in Washington with the couple's two young children, said, "It's nice to know that it'll be over shortly, anyway.

"I THINK it was the right decision that he made," said Mrs. Gramm, who like her husband is a trained economist and generally supports the president's economic positions.

"I'm a market economist," says Mrs. Gramm. "And I believe in markets working. And I think that a lot of Texas Democrats believe that way as well."

Though she's picked up a trace of Texas twang, Mrs. Gramm is not a native of Texas but of Hawaii. She was born in Waialua on the island of Oahu, where her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Lee, still live and where she visits every couple of years.

At age 17, she went to the mainland to attend Wellesley College near Boston, became interested in economics, and went on to get a doctorate from Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill.

In August 1970, she joined the faculty of Texas A&M, where Gramm also was teaching. They were married in November of the same year. She calls it "one of the most rapid, you might say, courtships on record."

IN 1976, Mrs. Gramm got her first taste of politics, helping stuff envelopes, as Gramm unsuccessfully sought the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate. She was out knocking on doors two years later when he was first elected to the House, then as a Democrat.

"There wasn't anything in academics that would have prepared me for it," Mrs. Gramm recalled.

Even today, Mrs. Gramm, 38, finds politics "interesting as a phenomenon" but says, "I wouldn't consider myself a political junkie by any stretch of the imagination."

But she has been around enough to anticipate some of the attacks on her husband, among them that he was a turncoat who had spied on the Democrats for the White House.

"It does bother you," she says. "But I guess in politics you can't really let it get to you....Sure it makes you mad, but it's expected."

She says she still considers herself a Democrat, "at least a Texas Democrat." But at least one Republican will get her vote.

"I will vote for Phil," she says.

Druse renowned as fierce warriors

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Druse fighting Maronite Christians in the mountains outside Beirut since October are a sect who follow a secretive religious faith and have been renowned for centuries as fierce warriors.

More than 140 people have died in the fighting between Druse and Christian militiamen in the Israeli-occupied Chouf Mountains, the rugged area southeast of Beirut that is to be the site of the first withdrawal of Israel's invasion army.

Over the centuries, the Druses have mystified Moslem and non-Moslem alike — their religious beliefs, rooted in Islam, defy simple definition. The Scriptures which chronicle their faith are withheld from as many as 90 percent of the Druses themselves. They believe in reincarnation but have a pragmatic approach to life that centers on preserving themselves, their families and their lands in time of crisis.

In half-Christian half-Moslem Lebanon, the Druses are classified by law as Moslems and receive six of the 45 seats apportioned to Moslems in the 99-seat Parliament.

In other places they often have been regarded as non-Moslems. In Israel, the Druses have been cultivated as a separate ethnic group and are the only Arab citizens drafted for compulsory service in the Israeli army.

"THE DRUSES IN fact are an Islamic sect," Sami Makarem, a Druse who is professor of Islamic thought at the American University of Beirut, said in an interview.

"Many people among the non-Druse don't like to admit this," the 50-year-old professor added. "Maybe the very orthodox Moslems think since you are a Druse and you are not orthodox, you are not a Moslem..."

Makarem, who was born in the Chouf village of Aitat where Druses and Christians are now fighting, holds a doctoral degree from the University of Michigan and is one of the Druse faith's "initiated" who study the ancient manuscripts.

The Druses permitted to read these manuscripts, which are still copied by hand in Arabic script, are called "uqqal" — the "wise ones" or "initiated" — while other Druses are called "juhhal" — the "ignorant ones" or "uninitiated."

"I am a Druse and I believe in our faith but I don't know very much about it," a young, college-educated Druse woman living in Beirut said. "You see, only a few of our people have to know the most secret teachings. It's not necessary for the rest of us."

Makarem said the Druses, like other mystics, open their innermost secrets only to those who are "ready" to comprehend them.

BOTH THE "INITIATED" and "uninitiated" Druses believe in reincarnation, that when their human body dies their soul will find a home in a new human body.

"This is one of the factors of the Druse bravery," Makarem said, noting the legendary willingness of Druse warriors to fight until death without surrendering.

The Druses arrived in Lebanon and what is now neighboring Syria in the 11th century. A few years later, their movement began in Egypt, but it failed to find lasting roots.

In the 17th century they joined forces with the Maronite Christians in Lebanon to fight the armies of the Ottoman Turkish Empire. The Maronites, an Eastern Rite sect now affiliated with the Roman Catholic Church, had also sought refuge and religious freedom in Lebanon's inhospitable mountains — and this eventually led to warfare with the Druses.

Druse-Maronite conflicts between 1840 and 1860 were abetted by Ottoman officials who sought to weaken the two troublesome and nationalistic minorities. In 1860 the Druses massacred more than 10,000 Maronites, a black page of history bitterly cited by the Maronite Phalange whose militias are once again fighting the Druses in the mountains.

Of Lebanon's current population of about 4 million, an estimated 200,000 are Druses. There are also about 200,000 Druses in Syria, 30,000 in Israel, and 3,000 in Jordan; emigrant communities are concentrated in the United States, Canada, Mexico, Brazil and Australia.

The word "druse" (pronounced drooz) is used primarily by outsiders, while the Druses call themselves "Muwahhidun" or "Unitarists." Druse stems from the name of an early member of the sect, a Turkish tailor named Nashtakin al-Darazi.

Doubtful that wearing jockey shorts affects fertility

Dear Dr. Solomon: A so-called friend of mine says that a person who wears jockey shorts may not be able to become a father because the shorts are very binding. It doesn't make sense to me, but I'd like to know if there is anything to what he says. — Gus, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dear Gus: Your friend is just a little confused. It has been suggested that jockey shorts might tend to lower the sperm count in a man, but not because the shorts bind. The concern is that the temperature of the scrotum (where the testes are located) would be increased, and that this might impair fertility. However Dr. Stanley A. Brosman, professor of urology at the University of California, Los Angeles, School of Medicine, says that most people doubt that jockey shorts would lower the sperm count sufficiently to cause a problem with fertility.

Neither is there any real evidence that hot baths, for example, would have an effect on fertility.

Dear Dr. Solomon: At age 35 I am pregnant for the first time, and both my husband I are looking forward to the big event. I know that I will be having amniocentesis, but what I would like to know is if this is done at any particular time. — Grace, Seattle, Wash.

Dear Grace: Dr. George I. Solish, director of obstetrics and gynecology at Long Island College Hospital, Brooklyn, New York, recommends amniocentesis for the detection of possible birth defects between the 16th and 18th weeks of pregnancy. He explains that there are about 300 milliliters of fluid in the uterus at that time, so that the removal of 30 milliliters for chromosomal analysis does not pose a problem.

In addition, performing amniocentesis at this time gives the patient an opportunity to learn the results, to decide whether to continue the pregnancy, and, depending upon her convictions and beliefs, to go through with an abortion.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If plastic surgery is surgery, what happens to the scars? I always thought that surgery meant cutting. Yet I see pictures of people who've had their faces lifted and you can't see a scar. How can something like his happen? — Florence, Cambridge, Mass.

Dear Florence: You are correct in your assumption that surgery, whether plastic or other, involves an incision. The fact that you don't see a scar does not mean there aren't any. The plastic surgeon is careful to make the incision so that the scar will not be visible — for example, along the hairline or behind the ear.

For Percy, Los Angeles: Both prescription as well as commonly used over-the-counter drugs can affect insulin activity. They include drugs used in the treatment of high blood pressure and antibiotics, in addition to the preparations as common as aspirin. Once these undesirable drug interactions are eliminated, it may be possible for some patients with diabetes to get along without the need for insulin.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Vehicles ruining roads

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Rural roads across the state are being pounded into unpaved routes by heavy industrial equipment traveling on roads not designed for such traffic, a Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation official says.

Midland County is included in the district in which 1,418 total miles of farm-to-market roads could be destroyed, according to statistics from the department. Also listed in that district are the counties of Andrews, Crane, Ector, Loving, Martin, Pecos, Reeves, Terrell, Upton, Ward and Winkler.

Most of the routes in the FM system were constructed in the 1950s and 1960s in a massive program to provide better roads for farmers who drove light agricultural vehicles, says Byron Blaschke, chief engineer in the department's safety and maintenance division.

"The average age of the roads is 20 years, which is a very mature age for a highway," he states. "As it starts reaching later years, it begins to deteriorate quite rapidly."

Despite diverting $12.5 million from the budget for emergency repair of the criticially-affected roads, some department engineers says the funds are only a fraction of the total needed.

A major study conducted last year showed the contractural cost to rehabilitate the FMs in the district would be $25.228 million over the next 20 years. That cost projection was calculated in July 1981 dollars, adds Cassie Carlson who works in the department's management division.

Industrial vehicles serving oil fields, timber stands, lignite fields and uranium fields all over Texas have necessitated changes in plans to periodically resurface the rural roads. Although seal coating and other types of rehabilitation have kept the FMs in good shape, one spokesman says the department may have to completely rebuild some of the roads at an average cost of $61,000 per mile — substantially higher than rehabilitation costs.

Road bids due

Trailer blaze

Midland firemen battle flames shooting from the windows of a mobile home Wednesday afternoon near Cottonflat Road and County Road 130. The mobile home was destroyed, but four people inside the trailer at the time of the blaze escaped injury.

Family safe after fire destroys home

A Midland family's mobile home was destroyed but no injuries were reported when a neighbor's trash fire flared out of control Wednesday afternoon near the intersection of Cottonflat Road and County Road 130.

After receiving a 1:35 p.m. alarm, Midland firefighters arrived to find the home of Joe and Debra Osborn, Route 3 Box 481, ablaze. Firemen spent more than two hours dousing the flaming trailer and surrounding grass fires which threatened other nearby homes.

Miguel Rodriguez said he was burning a pile of trash behind his residence immediately south of the Osborns' trailer. Rodriguez said the flaming pile ignited surrounding dry grass and spread quickly toward the trailer.

Rodriguez said he ran to the trailer to alert those inside. Mrs. Osborn and her three children escaped without incident. Joe Osborn, 23, was away from home at the time and returned to find the trailer burning.

Mrs. Osborn, 21, and Rodriguez used heavy sacks and a garden hose to keep the blaze from reaching a house north of the Osborns' home. But flames ignited the trailer's back wall and spread quickly through the structure.

"It was just a trail of fire coming this way," she said. "Before we knew it, it was at the back of our trailer, and it just caught up."

Osborn placed the trailer's value at $12,000. "We were fixing to go down next month and get some insurance on it," he said, watching from a neighbor's steps as the house burned.

Nine Midland firemen used 6,000 gallons of water to extinguish the blaze. Firefighters also doused flames which spread to several junk vehicles scattered behind the trailer.

Local Planned Parenthood protests law

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Communication between a parent and teen-ager won't be aided through enforcement of a new federal law which mandates a parent be notified in writing when the teen-ager receives prescription birth control products, according to the executive director of Permian Basin Planned Parenthood.

And she doesn't hold a breath of hope that the new secretary of Health and Human Services will be any better than the one who is resigning.

The local chapter agrees with the national organization of Planned Parenthood, which filed suit to stop the government from enforcing the new regulation, according to Tamra Oatman.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court, charges the rule violates family planning statutes and safeguards against right to privacy and would affect confidentiality of the doctor-patient relationship.

And this action of the federal government might imply it is stepping into the family's right to privacy, she added.

"It's an outrage that the government is operating under the guise of protecting minors' health. We feel it will break down communication in the family," Ms. Oatman said.

"Communication between a parent and child won't start up miraculously with a written note to the parent. One of our aims is to promote parent-teen and family communication, working in conjunction with church groups."

Richard S. Schweiker, the secretary of Health and Human Services, recommended the ruling become final, saying, "Its great benefit is that it will provide an opportunity for family involvement where parents were previously kept in the dark. This will remove a barrier between parents and adolescents, thereby encouraging more communication in many families."

Ms. Oatman disagreed with Schweiker's theory of improved communications.

"Communication between a parent and child won't start up miraculously with a written note to the parent. One of our (Planned Parenthood's) aims is to promote parent-teen and family communication, working in conjunction with church groups. They need to develop a communication base at an early age and not wait until the child is 16 or 17 and the parent gets a note from a family planning program."

The Permian Basin chapter requests that teens wanting birth control products from the agency sign a form verifying they had been told to talk with their parents first. Of the Permian Basin's clients, about a third are teen-agers, said Ms. Oatman. "That's true in most clinics. State statistics show that 20 percent of the births are to teen-agers."

If the rule is put into force, Ms. Oatman said the local Planned Parenthood clinics would continue to serve teen-agers "even if it means giving up some of our funding."

The director was particularly upset over the way the new regulation is being enacted. "They weren't successful in getting it across legislatively. So they're doing it administratively, rather than letting congressmen represent their voters."

Schweiker announced Wednesday he is resigning his cabinet post, and former Rep. Margaret Heckler of Massachusetts was named as his replacement.

"I can't say I'm sorry he's leaving," said Ms. Oatman. "He and Marjory Mecklenberg (deputy assistant secretary for population affairs) have been instrumental in pushing this new ruling through. It would make sense for Ms. Heckler to follow Schweiker's guidelines."

Texas Republicans, husband tops in Barbara Bush's book

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

George H.W. Bush may have been picked for the number two spot in the country, but his wife Barbara still thinks he's "the best qualified man in the United States. And Reagan is second best."

Surrounded by a combination of longtime friends and Republican supporters, the wife of the Vice President of the United States joked about her life in Washington, D.C., and revealed a lighter side to the president at a reception Thursday afternoon in the Racquet Club.

She had arranged to be in Midland, her residence during the 1950s, to speak at a luncheon to promote Reading is Fundamental, a pet project of hers to cut down on illiteracy. But she also agreed to be honored at a reception that afternoon hosted by Associated Republicans of Texas. Both events were fund-raisers and by the end of the afternoon Mrs. Bush commented that some of the people who attended both meetings "had a bad day."

Obviously at ease with this group, Mrs. Bush stood at one end of a small room in the Racquet Club to relate her tales before explaining the importance of ART in getting Republicans elected.

She literally had hitched a ride with President Reagan to Dallas on Wednesday on Air Force One. He was going to Big D to speak to farmers at a luncheon, she to talk on RIF at the same time.

Toward the end of the trip, Reagan called her to his rooms on the plane and said, "I'm disappointed you aren't coming to hear my speech."

"I told him 'I'm very disappointed you aren't coming to hear mine,'" she retorted.

The group of Republican supporters was surprised, however, at her next comment concerning Midland. Mrs. Bush had continued the conversation by noting she would be spending the night in Midland with her son, George. "And the president said, 'Isn't that the city that has Christmas in April?'"

The remark especially surprised Bobby Trimble, who is the spearhead behind the volunteer housing rehabilitation program. Last April, he was one of four persons chosen from across the country to receive the first national volunteer award. And he noted that it was Nancy Reagan who had to give the awards; the president had to give a speech in Chicago that night.

Looking back to the days when her husband was campaigning for the Republican nomination for president, Mrs. Bush said in a bantering manner, "George and I only worked 16 years against him (Reagan). I haven't changed my mind. I still think George is the best qualified man in the U.S."

Contending that Reagan "doesn't have a dark side," Mrs. Bush recalled when her husband stopped in to visit the president at the hospital a few days after he was shot in March 1981.

In reply to the vice president's question about his well-being, Reagan related that he had been hot and cold during the night and had requested a bath from the nurse. She refused. When she left, Reagan said he went to the bathroom, took his clothes off and took a sponge bath. When he was through, he looked down and saw he had spilled a large amount of water on the floor. Reagan proceeded to clean it up, telling Bush later that he didn't want the nurse to have to do it.

"Reagan is very considerate," Mrs. Bush added. "George loves to go to work every morning."

Turning to the purpose for her appearance, Mrs. Bush outlined the need for ART.

"Someone asked me what the Republican Party was like when I came to Texas. Well, it wasn't," she laughed, recalling the time she and her husband manned a polling place for the Republicans. The only people that came by were a drunk who thought he was at the Democratic box and some friends who dropped off lunch for the Bushes while on their way to vote at the Demo-

Woman gives open arms, house to homeless elderly

Staff Writer

Pruitt Walker, 76, lives at Etta's house. This is his home. At 6 a.m. he extends his cane and tic-tacs his way from his bedroom to the breakfast table. Pruitt has been blind since the mid-1950s.

Golden Punchard, wearing a western-felt hat slightly cocked, can't quite remember how old he is — more than 75 years — but he's not quite sure. He lives at Etta's house, too. This is his home. Each morning after breakfast, Golden shuffles across the railroad tracks over to a local market off of Lee and Front streets. He says he's "tendin' business."

William Simmons proudly states he was born Dec. 29, 1899. He used to work as a bellhop — way back when — at the Scharbauer Hotel. He also lives at Etta's house. This is his home. Every morning William strolls his southside neighborhood. All told, he visits a special friend every day around 9:30 a.m. — but he only laughs if you ask if it's a lady friend.

She extended her modest abode to others — as a foster home. Unlike most foster home facilities, which accommodate the young, the door to Etta's three-bedroom brick house swings open for the elderly.

Since 1975, through the state-funded adult foster program, Etta has cared for five senior citizens — who otherwise might be institutionalized in a nursing home.

Etta will say she's not special. She stays in the background, muttering that she thinks "anybody who can get around shouldn't go to an old folks home."

About eight years have passed since she spotted an ad in the newspaper asking for a qualified person to manage a foster home for the elderly who do not necessarily need nursing home care.

THE TEXAS Department of Human Resources is always looking for adult foster homes. Social worker April Cook says it's an alternative to the nursing home.

"A lot of people can take this (adult foster home) on and not care, but Etta really cares for these gentlemen," says April. "She's a special person. These gentlemen would probably be in a nursing home if it weren't for her."

Etta's home is one of two certified adult foster homes in Midland. A person can keep up to three people in a home. The state pays Etta $6 per person, per day. Her boarders contribute to the household a contracted amount from their Social Security checks.

Pruitt claims he watches his budget closely, so he can buy a can of beer once in a while.

Etta, who keeps a tight budget, provides food, shelter and clothing for the gentlemen. And sometimes — when their money runs short — she takes care of them out of her own pocket. She cares.

"I'VE ALWAYS liked to take care of folks," Etta whispers while fidgeting with her blouse. "I don't think I'm that special. It takes a person who has patience who wants to care for your older people."

"We're just like family — even scraps now and then," she says with a grin.

Pruitt, garbed in camel-colored working shirt and trousers, says he "gets around pretty good," and enjoys listening to the buzzers, screams and

Inmate would invite guard to execution

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A death row inmate says a prison guard he shares his poetry with is "about as close a friend as I got around here" and may be the only person he asks to be with him when he is executed.

Thomas Barefoot, scheduled to die in 12 days for murdering a Harker Heights policeman, says he calls the guard "Pappy."

"I just haven't really decided yet whether I will ask him or not, but if I ask anybody, I'd ask him.

"My granddad died on the 13th of December and he (the guard) kind of filled up that hole there, the old man did," Barefoot said Wednesday in an interview in the Ellis Unit of the Texas Department of Corrections.

Condemned prisoners in Texas may designate five people as execution witnesses, in addition to those selected by the TDC.

The execution of Charlie Brooks Jr. on Dec. 7 was the first of a Texas inmate in 18 years and the first in the United States by lethal injection. Brooks' personal witnesses were his girlfriend and two Islamic chaplains.

Barefoot said he would like to visit his family on the day of his execution — "I'd like to hug my momma's neck. I'd like to hug all my children" — but he did not want to subject his family to the ordeal of watching him die Jan. 25.

Among those he would leave behind if executed are his mother, Rachel Biano of New Iberia, La., his ex-wife and five children, and his five brothers and one sister.

"I wouldn't want to write my mom and say, 'Come watch me die, Mom.' That's a little bit too cold and intense for me. I can't handle that," Barefoot said.

"I don't know of anybody that I would want to witness die and therefore I'm not going to put them through it," he said.

But he wouldn't mind the jurors and judge in his murder trial having that experience.

"I'd like the judge and jury that sentenced me to be there so I can look of them in the eye," Barefoot said.

He was convicted of killing police officer Carl Levin, 31, on Aug. 7, 1978, in Harker Heights, which is near the Central Texas town of Killeen.

Prosecutors said the officer was investigating a nightclub fire and had asked Barefoot for identification before questioning him about the blaze, believed to be the result of arson. Prosecutors contended Barefoot, a fugitive, shot Levin once in the head out of fear he would be sent back to Valencia, N.M., to face charges in unrelated cases.

Barefoot said Wednesday he is innocent of the shooting and was convicted only because he had a record, having served time in prisons in Oklahoma and Louisiana for possession of cocaine and a sawed-off shotgun.

Brooks was executed for the murder of a Fort Worth auto mechanic. The other two Texas inmates who have execution dates also were convicted of murder.

I did have one friend, but he didn't take me but once a month. Now my friend, he be out of town sometimes, but he comes to take me to Sunday school," says Pruitt.

AGE IS SLOWLY creeping into Golden's mind, clouding treasured memories. He sits quietly on the sofa that Ettie has prepared for him, precisely adjusting his trouser legs and fumbling numbers about the past. Like the cattle around Midland.

Every now and then, he mumbles, "this is fine all right, pretty good place to live."

The spry, 83-year-old William admits he wouldn't know where to find grub if he couldn't stay at Ettie's house.

"I need this home," he says, bowing his head and scratching his toes across the carpet. "I imagine I'd have to go to the ol' folks home. That's where I'd thought I'd always go."

As if his memory were jogged, William adds, "My wife, she was in a nursing home. We need this home."

He begins to reminisce of a time when Midlanders rode anywhere in town "so long as they had a dime.

"I knew every cowboy in town," he says, adding "Quick Taxi Cab — you could get in and get yourself a ride if you had ten cents."

"I like it here," he says. "This is my home."

"This is our home," William adds.

Heading the local ART move is Dottie Stoltz, who said their success at electing Republicans has been "amazing. In Dallas, we elected 50 out of the 50 Judges. And we lost only one major state job (Gov. Bill Clements)."

He remembered the early days of Republicanism in Midland, led by the late Jimmy Allison Jr. "He was a dear friend of the Bushes and one of the backbones and spearheads of this program."

Pat Robbins, ART associate director in Austin who asked Mrs. Bush to appear at the fund-raiser, said 200 to 225 persons had attended.

"Mrs. Bush and the vice president have done a lot to help ART," she said.

Ex-mental patient holds cops at bay, shoots himself

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — A mental patient who relatives say desperately wanted help told police he was "a son of God," and held them at bay for four hours before releasing his wife and baby and shooting himself, authorities say.

Chester Simpson, 24, was pronounced dead on arrival at Wichita General Hospital about 2 p.m. Wednesday, Sheriff John Gibson said.

Simpson was released last month from the hospital following a brief stay, and was jailed Dec. 29 after witnesses said he began throwing around $10 and $1 bills at an eastside gas station.

The standoff began about 9 a.m. Wednesday when deputies tried to serve papers to have Simpson recommitted to the Wichita Falls State Hospital, the deputies said.

Simpson opened the door and pointed a shotgun, but closed the door before the deputies could respond, said sheriff's department spokesman Tom Callahan.

Police then telephoned Simpson inside the house and learned he was holding inside his common-law wife, identified only as Brenda, and their 10-month-old baby.

"After our first phone call to Simpson it was clear the man was not of sound mind," Chief Deputy Bill Burrow said.

"He said he was the son of God and that God had told him that today was the day he was going back to the House of God. The woman refused to leave the house. She said she believed he was the son of God and would stay to the end," Burrow said.

But about 1:45 p.m., the infant was released to Simpson's parents, mother-in-law and a friend. His wife walked out of the house moments later, Burrow said.

Simpson then stepped from the home, lifted the 12-gauge shotgun above his head with the muzzle to his chest and fired once.

Mildred Beatty, who lived next door to Simpson, described him as "a nice, quiet boy who did not cause trouble."

"I think he was crying for help," she said. "He had been asking for help several times before, but no one helped him."

Bell would pass on money from requested rate hike

AUSTIN (AP) — Southwestern Bell wants $12.3 million more from its Texas customers, but the company says it won't keep any of the money.

The telephone company this week began charging $243.9 million in rate hikes recently approved by the Public Utility Commission. On Wednesday, however, Southwestern Bell said it needs another $12.3 million in intrastate long distance rates.

The increase, which the company wants to put in effect in March, is needed to pay for an October order by the PUC changing the way telephone companies divide long distance tolls among themselves, according to Southwestern Bell.

"Southwestern Bell would not keep any of the additional $12.3 million. The entire amount would flow through to 55 independent telephone companies in the state," said a company news release.

The new formula for dividing long distance revenue was requested by General Telephone Co. and approved by the PUC.

The Southwestern Bell proposal includes a penny-per-minute increase for most calls up to 41 miles. The new rates put in effect this week included a 10 percent jump — $88 million — in long distance tolls, an increase not sought by Southwestern Bell.

Don Butler, who represents the Texas Municipal League, on Wednesday questioned whether the $12.3 million would be passed on by Southwestern Bell to the other phone companies.

Prison suit lawyers accept payment figure

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawyers who represented Texas inmates in their lawsuit against the state prison system have agreed to take $1.16 million for their services instead of the $1.66 million they had been awarded.

Attorney General Jim Mattox announced the agreed settlement Wednesday.

Former Attorney General Mark White, now Texas' governor-elect, had said he would fight the attorneys fees awarded by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice last November. White called the figure "excessive."

In 1972, inmate David Ruiz filed suit on behalf of Texas prison inmates, charging the state with violating constitutional guarantees against "cruel and unusual punishment."

Justice's order called for, among other things, a stop to "triple-celling" and eventual housing of only one inmate in a cell.

The state responded by erecting tents on the grounds of its maximum security unit at Huntsville.

Last May, Texas prison officials announced they would not take any new inmates because they would be in violation of Justice's order against overcrowding, so the Texas Legislature was called into special session to authorize $55 million for new prison buildings.

But many provisions in Justice's order were overturned or weakened by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which ruled in June that Justice had exceeded his authority to defend the inmates' constitutional rights when he demanded detailed administrative changes in the prisons.

Ex-Monkee busy making movies, video records

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — After spending $2.5 million of his own money to make a movie, ex-Monkee Michael Nesmith showed it to a friend, head of a major film company.

The friend's response: "Nobody in the world will want to see that movie."

Yet the movie, a sort of motorcycle western called "Timerider," will be released in 800 theaters throughout the United States on Jan. 21. Several thousand paying customers have already wanted to see it in test engagements by Jensen Farley Pictures. So much for bigshot predictions.

Nesmith is a Texan who doesn't give up easily. Born in Houston and reared in Dallas, he displayed musical talent as a lad and decided to test his luck in the bigtime. "It was either New York or Hollywood and I chose Hollywood because it was warmer," he says.

Folk music was hot in 1961, and Nesmith was able to find work, with a little bit of help from Frankie Laine and Randy Sparks. He answered an ad one day for young musicians to star in a television series. Mike Nesmith became a Monkee.

The series was a ripoff of the Beatles and "A Hard Day's Night," but it was done with imagination and style. No wonder. Paul Mazursky and Larry Tucker ("Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice") wrote the pilot. Bert Schneider and Bob Rafelson ("Five Easy Pieces") produced. Rafelson directed and Jack Nicholson produced the Monkees' feature movie, "Head."

"The Monkees," which also included David Jones, Peter Tork and Mickey Dolenz, became an industry. They sold 36 million records, drawing noisy crowds on tour, attracting dolls and other merchandising. But the series burned out after two seasons.

"We decided not to try another year at the same time NBC decided to cancel the show," Nesmith recalled. "All of us had other things we wanted to do. I had been writing songs and I had a big hit with 'Joanne' by the First National Band."

Nesmith became a leading songwriter, turning out hits for Linda Ronustadt, the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band and Lynn Anderson. In 1974, he formed the Pacific Arts Corporation to produce albums and video records.

"I started in video when I made a European distribution deal and was asked to provide a video disc clip," said Nesmith, 40, tall and rangy with a well-trimmed beard. "Video discs were common in Europe, but they really hadn't caught on in this country. I saw it as an art form. My first disc, 'Rio,' got a standing ovation from 40 European field men. It made the record a hit, and I knew I had hit on something important."

By CHARLES CHAMPLIN
By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HOLLYWOOD — There's a tale they tell in old Hollywood to the effect that Francis Coppola's "The Godfather (Part I)" seemed much too long and slow. He re-edited it, so the story goes, to just over three hours, at which length it played shorter, faster and better.

I have no trouble believing that. Narratives have a built-in logic and an inexorable propulsive drive. When logic and drive are violated by abrupt cuts, a sort of uneasiness sets in. You may not think about time passing, but you feel it.

I now have additional evidence that longer is better, if not exactly shorter. I had a chance to see Michael Cimino's original version of "Heaven's Gate," all 220 minutes of it, plus intermission.

The reservations I had expressed about the much-shortened version that was shown commercially are by no means totally erased. Yet it seems to me a pity bordering on tragedy that the longer version was not shown.

Not a damned thing was gained commercially by forcing Cimino to eviscerate his work, but audiences were denied the chance to see fully whatever it was that Cimino had in mind.

The central character of Kris Kristofferson comes clearer, including the seeming hopelessness of his love for Isabelle Huppert as the frontier madam. She is easier to comprehend, not so much as the stereotyped whore with the heart of gold but as an independent woman with her own code.

Some obvious visual linkages become clearer, most obviously the circling dances at the Harvard commencement and the circling riders and wagons at the climactic shoot-out.

The long version includes John Hurt's declamation as the class orator at graduation. Its relevance to the story's theme is subtle but evident, but it is more importantly a wonderful piece of acting and an amusing and credible graduate foolishness. I would gladly have swapped three or four fusillades and five minutes of roller-skating to have preserved it in the truncated version.

John Hurt as the captive of wealth, Christopher Walken as the tool of poverty, Sam Waterston as capitalism at its most unrepentantly ruthless and Jeff Bridges as the self-made man at his noblest all remain emblematic figures, yet seen in full-length mirrors, so to speak, they come nearer to being full-fleshed and full-blooded. Walken's inner contradictions make a good deal more sense.

At that, the moral of "Heaven's Gate" seems to be that the then-executives at United Artists poured bad judgment after bad judgment in a futile effort to make the earlier judgments look less bad.

The studio launched a film whose stated budget of $12 million was from the start as improbable as seeking a new house in Beverly Hills for around $47,500. Cimino's cost-indifferent perfectionism, and that's what it was, was indulged with apparently no hard-eyed overviewing.

It remains true that film making is a collaborative medium, but there is a tradition from the old studio days in which the collaboration was that of the noose and the neck, too close for comfort.

What seems ideal if you can find it is the collaboration that resembles Charles Atlas' secret system of muscle-building — dynamic tension in which one muscle is pitted against another, in the hope of preventing bullies from kicking sand in your face at the beach.

When producer and director, or director and studio executives, can meet on terms of respect, candor and agreement on what the end product is meant to be, the quarrels can keep everybody on track.

As in "Heaven's Gate," the cavalry got there much too late and made things worse. Having failed to save Cimino from his excesses, the UA troops then deprived Cimino of the courage of his extravagant convictions, which included a heavy yet moving homage to the immigrant experience in America — a theme he treated first in "The Deer Hunter," in its pre-Vietnam, small-town sequences.

Amanda McKerrow and Charles Maple, both of American Ballet Theatre, will perform this weekend with the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chamber Orchestra, directed by Dr. Thomas Hohstadt. Miss McKerrow was the winner of the gold medal in the junior women's division during the 1981 Moscow International Ballet Competition. Performances are slated for Friday at Odessa's Permian High School and Saturday at Midland's Lee High School. Concert time is 8 p.m. with single admission tickets being sold at the door.

McKerrow, Maple to perform this weekend

Dancer Amanda McKerrow of American Ballet Theatre will perform with the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chamber Orchestra Friday at Odessa's Permian High School and Saturday at Midland's Lee High School.

Miss McKerrow is the first American dancer to win a gold medal at the Moscow International Ballet Competition. That was in June of 1981 when she was 17. At that time she was dancing with the Washington Ballet. Miss McKerrow signed with ABT this fall.

Born in Albuquerque, N.M., Miss McKerrow grew up in Rockville, Md. She began dance lessons at the age of six. After studying at the Twinbrook Academy of Dance in Rockville, Miss McKerrow studied at the Metropolitan Academy of Ballet at Bethesda, Md., before entering Mary Day's Washington School of Ballet in 1978.

Miss McKerrow will be featured in two dances with her partner, Charles Maple. Maple, who joined ABT in 1973, appeared as the younger brother in the movie "The Turning Point." He has also been seen in the PBS television series "Live from Lincoln Center." Maple began his career at the age of 15 in Pasadena, Calif.

In addition, the symphony's chamber orchestra, directed by Dr. Thomas Hohstadt, will perform the "Italian Symphony" by Mendelssohn, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" by Mozart and "Artik" by the American composer Alan Hovhaness.

Concert time is 8 p.m. Single admission tickets will be available at the door.

Breakfast-hour news broadcasts finally come to British television

LONDON (AP) — The breakfast-television war in Britain is about to begin with David Frost competing against other star-name broadcasters for the chance to deliver the day's top stories to a bacon-and-eggs audience.

More than 30 years after breakfast TV went on the air in the United States, 56 million Britons will get a chance to turn on their sets when the alarm goes off, and see something other than the standard test pattern.

The publicly financed British Broadcasting Corp. will be first on the air at 6:30 a.m. Monday.

Veteran sports broadcaster Frank Bough and anchorwoman Selina Scott, a favorite pin-up of British troops during last year's Falklands War, will present the BBC's "Breakfast Time," to be broadcast to 9 a.m.

Hot on its trail will be the TV-AM production company with two shows on on Britain's commercial ITV network. TV-AM, the brainchild of Frost and Peter Jay, a former British ambassador to Washington, is scheduled to unveil its morning lineup at 6 a.m. Feb. 1.

Frost and Angela Rippon, who was the country's first female newscaster on the BBC will be part of a TV-AM team presenting "Daybreak" for early risers, 6-7 a.m., followed by "Good Morning Britain," to 9:15.

Despite the array of talent, mostly taken from evening news shows, some critics argue that Britons are very happy with radio and 10 national newspapers in the morning, and don't want television blaring at them while they're shaving or drinking coffee.

"Absolute insanity," Jay said of the critics in a Sunday Express interview.

"People who doubt that you can sell a newspaper — which is what it is — to the greatest newspaper-reading public in the world at breakfast time, the traditional time for newspapers, on the most attractive medium of communications there is, such a person would doubt you could sell milk to cats," he said.

Jay and Ron Neil, editor of "Breakfast Time," say they're encouraged by good ratings for special early morning broadcasts last year of Pope John Paul II's visit to Britain and the Commonwealth Games in Brisbane, Australia.

They also note that breakfast TV is a hit in the United States, where it attracts more than 12 percent of the potential viewing audience, in Australia and in Japan, where it gets an impressive 37 percent of the audience.

The BBC is hoping for a total breakfast audience of 5 million to 6 million, divided between the two shows, while TV-AM is looking for about 2.5 million viewers for its programs, about 4-5 percent of the prospective audience.

The number of British homes with two television sets has increased to 40 percent, from 33 percent only two years ago. But critics aren't sure Britons want their second set in the kitchen.

Unlike the BBC, which is funded by license fees paid by TV-set owners, TV-AM will depend entirely on advertising for its survival. It is hoping for $32 million in advertising revenue during its first year, but the show is currently embroiled in a dispute over actors' fees for commercials.

Jay says TV-AM will go on the air even if the dispute isn't settled, but adds, "We would run out of gas within a matter of weeks," and be forced to close.

Critics given an advance look at the shows report that they are remarkably similar in style and content, and even flourish the same symbol — a rising sun.

Both feature full newscasts at 7 and 8 a.m., with frequent updates and an easy-going mix of features and interviews.

Both Jay and Neil estimate that Britons will watch breakfast TV for a maximum of 20 minutes, so they want to provide the equivalent of a popular newspaper.

"Getting up is the single most unpleasant thing people do every day," Jay says. "In order to get through it, they ritualize it. Our programs are designed like a bus — you can get on or off when you like."

Douglas going off the air

Douglas is departing from "Mike Douglas Now," his one-hour interview show seen daily on Cable News Network and Superstation WTBS. Prior to that, Douglas had been the host of a syndicated talk show.

His one-year contract was not due to expire until April 30, but Douglas said he asked Ted Turner, the head of the Turner Broadcasting System, for his release.

Humanism makes Kurosawa great director

By KEVIN THOMAS
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Certainly he is one of the most influential film makers of history. When "Rashomon" took the grand prize at Venice in 1951, Japanese cinema was as unknown in the West as Japan itself was when Commodore Perry dropped anchor in Tokyo Bay about 100 years earlier. The very title, "Rashomon," of that 11th-century tale of a rape in the forest told from seven different points of view has become part of the language, signifying the relativity of truth.

"Rashomon" (the word simply means the main gate to a castle's outer grounds) became a Broadway play, a TV drama and a Hollywood film, "The Outrage." So did "Seven Samurai," which gave birth to "The Magnificent Seven," which in turn spawned at least three sequels. And Italian director Sergio Leone smilingly admits to remaking "Yojimbo" as "A Fistful of Dollars," therein making a world-class star of erstwhile TV actor Clint Eastwood.

Perennially referred to as the most Western of the Japanese directors, Kurosawa has in turn been influenced in his samurai movies by John Ford and other classic Hollywood directors and has made films of Dostoevsky's "The Idiot," Gorky's "The Lower Depths" and Shakespeare's "Macbeth." Kurosawa, who will turn 73 this year, is preparing his version of "King Lear."

What makes Kurosawa great? It is his humanism expressed in one of the most dynamic styles ever developed by a film director. No matter how serious his theme, he has always tried to entertain and almost always succeeded.

Arguably, his greatest film is "Ikiru" ("To Live"), in which the late Takashi Shimura plays a petty bureaucrat who in learning that he's dying of cancer also realizes that he has in effect been dead for 25 years. At first he tries to make up for lost time, but eventually concentrates his waning energies into cutting through red tape to create a little park that will give his drab life some meaning. Had Kurosawa ended on a note of irony with his hero never feeling more alive as he dies, he would have had a fine film, but he and his co-writers didn't stop there; they proceeded to examine, with reverberating impact, how his death affects his family and colleagues and their view of him and his final accomplishment. We are left, however, realizing that he did achieve for himself meaning in his life — and that it doesn't really matter if afterwards others try to take credit for the park, which after all will be enjoyed by many people regardless of who was responsible for its creation.

To reflect on Kurosawa's films is to be flooded with a jumble of remembered emotions, scenes and images. There is the wonderful camaraderie of the seven samurai as they become involved with the lives of the villagers who have hired them as protection against the annual invasion of bandits. The rapid pans through the forest in "Rashomon;" the great climactic battle scene in Kurosawa's latest film "Kagemusha;" how Kurosawa in "High and Low" turned an Ed McBain 87th Precinct story about a kidnapping into a moody film noir that became a pungent social comment on the haves and the have-nots.

Trained as a painter and a calligrapher, Kurosawa came to directing fully prepared, having worked as an assistant director under the Japanese film industry's old apprenticeship system and having learned screenwriting, a craft he believes essential for directors to master, during the seven years before he was entrusted in 1942 with his first film, the very assured and entertaining period piece, "Sanshiro Sugata."

Kurosawa is more dynamic — and hence, more "Western" — than his predecessors and contemporaries, probably because of his family's frequent movie-going in his youth and his film-loving older brother, who worked as a benshi or narrator in the silent cinemas. At any rate, Kurosawa came of age knowing the work of Griffith, Lang, Chaplin — virtually all the major directors who created the international language of the cinema.

Perhaps the Kurosawa image that lingers most vividly in the memory is that of Shimura in "Ikiru" dying happy and content as he sways in a swing in his beloved new park as snow gently falls. And Kurosawa's battle scenes are among the most glorious and exciting in the Japanese cinema, heightened in "Seven Samurai" by an innovative (but never gimmicky) use of the zoom lens. Kurosawa understands well the sheer pleasure the audience derives from expressive camera movement — for example, the restless pursuits through city streets in "Stray Dog" and "High and Low." It is impossible, too, to think of Kurosawa without thinking of his great star Toshiro Mifune. He worked steadily for him for 18 years but now has not worked for him for exactly that length of time, having concluded that their last collaboration, the splendid "Red Beard," took more time — three years — than he could afford. Kurosawa takes pains to explain that he did not discover Mifune, but rather that his mentor, director Kajiro Yamamoto, did, singling Mifune out from a "New Faces" competition that Toho Studios held in 1946. Kurosawa has said that Mifune had more energy and could react faster than any Japanese actor he had ever seen. Mifune's first film for Kurosawa, "Drunken Angel" (1948), the film in which Kurosawa himself felt he had come into his own, cast the handsome young actor as a tubercular yakuza (gangster) opposite Shimura in the title role as an alcoholic doctor dedicated to serving the downtrodden.

Perhaps even more vivid is Kurosawa and Mifune's next film, "Stray Dog," a work that is every bit as Neorealist as the films that Rossellini, De Sica and Visconti were making at the same time in similar circumstances. Just as the laborer in "The Bicycle Thief" loses the bicycle that is essential to his job of plastering up posters around Rome, Mifune's young police detective has his service pistol lifted from him in a crowded Tokyo bus. Soon his search for his .38 Colt Automatic to save face becomes a necessity when it falls into the hands of a killer — a stray dog who turns into a mad dog. As Mifune's search for his pistol becomes a quest for personal identity and, by extension, that of a nation, Kurosawa implies that dwelling upon the disgrace of the war is useless and that his countrymen must set their house in order by themselves.

Mifune probably will be remembered as the most famous samurai of them all, and certainly he is the definitive swordsman, shrewd, humorous and compassionate, in "Seven Samurai," "The Hidden Fortress," "Yojimbo" and "Sanjuro," yet the range demanded of him by Kurosawa is extraordinary.

Opera auditions to be held in Dallas

DALLAS — Finals for the Metropolitan Opera National Council District Auditions, taking place in Dallas for the second time, will be held at 1:30 p.m. Feb. 6 in McFarlin Auditorium at Southern Methodist University.

Up to four finalists will be selected at that time to represent the Northeast Texas District in the finals of the Southwest Region, which includes Texas and New Mexico, in San Antonio Feb. 20.

Judges for the prelimimary auditions, held Feb. 4 and 5 in Caruth Auditorium at SMU's Meadows School of the Arts, and for the Dallas finals will be Carlisle Floyd, co-director of the Houston Opera Studio and noted operatic composer, Edward Purrington, general director of the Tulsa Opera, and Mary Elaine Wallace, former voice teacher and well-known adjudicator.

Following the San Antonio competition on Feb. 20, which will be judged by Metropolitan Opera star Jerome Hines, the winners will be sent to New York to participate in the National Semi-Finals.

Will gangster movie come back?

Batman, Robin coming to big screen

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "Batman," that mysterious nocturnal creature who swoops out from stately Wayne manor to fight such crime bigwigs as the Riddler, the Penguin and the Joker, is coming to the big screen.

Polygram Pictures is planning a big budget movie called "Batman: The Movie," which will go into production next fall.

But — "Holy oblivion, Batman!" — it will bear no resemblance to the campy hit TV series that ran on ABC from 1966-68, according to Polygram's Adam Fields. Fields said the movie, which will go more for reality than satire, will have a number of big names in cameo roles.

Adam West starred as Batman, whose alter ego was Bruce Wayne, in the series and Burt Ward was Robin — Wayne's ward, Dick Grayson. Neither will be in the movie.

"Batman" was created by cartoonist Bob Kane and made its first appearance in Detective Comics in 1939.

Lemon hates producing

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Jack Lemmon says he once became a producer to take up the idle hours of waiting that plague every actor.

"I thought producing might help make the waiting easier," Lemmon said. "So through my company, Jalem, I got some projects together, including 'Cool Hand Luke.'

Frank Rizzo, left, greets supporters after his news conference in Philadelphia Wednesday where he announced that he will run for mayor again. At the news conference, Rizzo said he can bring together the forces to make the city work. However, he is already facing tough questions about his controversial past.

Rizzo launches campaign for mayor

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Former Mayor Frank L. Rizzo, launching a campaign to regain the office he held for eight years, already is running into questions about his controversial past.

After making his Democratic candidacy official Wednesday, the tough-talking former policeman was peppered with questions about alleged police brutality under his administration and charges that he is perceived as racist.

Rizzo, 62, conceded he had "made my share of mistakes."

But he bristled when a questioner suggested that blacks, who make up about 40 percent of Philadelphia's population, see him as racist.

"My record will prove that I am not, and as we get into the campaign, we'll see whether or not I don't get my share of the votes of all the people of this town," he said.

"I'm never going to use that word or permit anybody else to use that word too much about me. I'm just going to tell them that I think they're wrong."

When the next questioner said that police brutality increased under his leadership, Rizzo's answer was sharper.

"Just because you asked that question, that doesn't make it right," he said, his voice rising.

Rizzo was mayor from 1971 to 1979. He left office after voters overwhelmingly rejected his plan to change the city charter to allow him to run for a third term.

In the upcoming primary, Rizzo is expected to face former city managing director W. Wilson Goode, a black Democrat who served under Mayor Bill Green, who has said he will not seek a second term.

Rizzo, who spent 30 years in the police department, rising from beat patrolman to commissioner, said creating jobs will be his top priority.

Prosecutor won't exclude executives

NEW YORK (AP) — Three executives arrested in the theft of $100,000 at their armored car company can not be excluded as suspects in earlier heists of $11 million and $225,000 at the firm, a prosecutor says.

Bronx District Attorney Mario Merola also said Wednesday that security at Sentry-Armored Car-Courier was "horrendous" with sacks of money lying "all over the place."

Authorities said they learned about the missing $100,000 while investigating the two other thefts at Sentry — the $11 million robbery on Dec. 12 and the disappearance of $225,000 in small bills on Dec. 29.

Merola announced grand larceny charges against Sentry's chairman, president and vice president. He said they lifted $100,000 from a $500,000 fund maintained by Chemical Bank to provide small bills and change to a grocery chain.

The money was allegedly used to help Sentry secure a $750,000 line of credit so it could buy more armored trucks.

NONE OF THE three charged in the skimming has been ruled out as a suspect in the $11 million robbery, which was the largest cash heist in U.S. history, or the disappearance of the $225,000, Merola said.

"Until the $11 million heist is solved, you've got to look at everybody," he said at a news conference Wednesday night. "I would not exclude them." No arrests have been made in that robbery.

Merola said he visited the Sentry warehouse and found "sacks, literally, all around the place filled with money, and all kinds of people walking in and out. Money was literally all over the place."

He said the company "was doing a land office business. There are some indications that they were collecting as much as $70 million in a day."

The FBI, which is investigating the $11 million robbery, would not comment on the arrests, said Ed Geraty, night supervisor of the New York FBI office.

CHARGED WITH grand larceny and misapplication of funds were Sentry President Jack Jennings, 64, of Ossining, N.Y., who is a retired New York City police lieutenant; Angela Fiumefreddo, 45, of the Bronx, the vice president; and Kuno Laren, 58, of Manhattan, the chairman of the board.

Mwss Fiumefreddo and Laren were arrested Wednesday but authorities were not immediately able to locate Jennings and a warrant was issued for his arrest, Merola said. A grand jury will hear evidence in the case, he said.

Merola said the three Sentry officers were accused of "skimming" the $100,000 in June 1982.

The money was not missed because an unidentified company employee, who may also be implicated, was told to "add $100,000 to whatever they had" when Chemical called for an accounting, Merola said.

THE GROCERY chain was not suspicious because it never asked for more than $200,000 at a time, he said.

"The bank never knew about it until this morning, when we asked them if they authorized Sentry to use the funds," Merola said. "Obviously they had not."

Message clear: Don't fly if airplane's wings icy

WASHINGTON (AP) — A year after an ice-laden Air Florida jetliner plunged into the Potomac River during a snowstorm, the message is clear in cockpits of every airline: Don't fly if there is suspicion of ice on the wings.

While that was the overwhelming lesson from the Air Florida crash a year ago today, air safety officials acknowledge there are other concerns about flying in foul winter weather still to be addressed.

The National Transportation Safety Board criticized the Federal Aviation Administration on Wednesday for not following up on all 20 of the board's recommendations from its Air Florida investigation. The FAA rejected three of the proposals.

And winter flying still carries its hidden dangers. Earlier this week a Republic Airlines turboprop skidded off snow-covered runway in Minnesota and a propeller ripped through the passenger compartment, killing a woman and injuring three other people.

On Jan. 13, 1982, Air Florida Flight 90, its wings covered with ice and snow, struggled to take off from National Airport and seconds later plunged into the ice-covered Potomac after clipping a motorist-filled commuter bridge.

Dramatic helicopter rescues a mile and a half from the White House were captured by television cameras and grabbed the attention of the nation as five survivors were plucked from the icy water.

Ten days later, a World Airways DC-10 skidded off an icy runway in Boston and plunged into the harbor. Two passengers were never found and presumably drowned.

Air regulations long have warned that ice on the wings of an aircraft hinders lifting capability. But as the Air Florida investigation showed, that warning was not always embraced equally by all pilots.

A year later, says Francis McAdams, who headed the NTSB investigation, "the extreme importance of the so-called clean aircraft concept has gotten through to the crews and I don't believe there (now) would be any pilot taking off with any contamination on his wing."

But other concerns about winter flying, some highlighted by the Air Florida crash, remain. For example:

—Airport officials, as demonstrated by the World Airways accident Jan. 23, 1982 in Boston, still have no adequate way to determine whether a runway is too slippery for safe landing or takeoffs. There also are few federal guidelines on when a runway should be closed. Braking reports continue to be relayed haphazardly to pilots.

—Widespread confusion persists about the effectiveness of the water-glycol solution used by most airlines to de-ice jetliners. The FAA recently warned there are too many variables to say how long a particular solution will protect a plane.

"The only sure-fired way to know that your wings are free of ice or snow is to look at them," says FAA spokesman Fred Farrar.

—Aircraft continue at times to be exposed to severe weather for lengthy times before takeoff, increasing the likelihood of ice accumulation.

—Planes still are de-iced at the passenger gates and far from the runway, making it more difficult and time consuming for pilots awaiting takeoff clearance to return for additional de-icing. The FAA and industry have considered a "car wash" type of de-icing facility near runways, but the proposal has made little progress. Such an approach would be more expensive than current procedures.

Social Security commission stymied by disagreements

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Social Security reform commission, which has only two days left to reach a solution for the financially troubled retirement system, is stymied by disgreements over payroll taxes and benefit increases.

Liberal Democrats are pushing for speeding up scheduled increases in payroll taxes while conservative Republicans say savings should be made by delaying inflation adjustments for benefits.

Private talks between members of the commission and top White House officials broke off after two hours Wednesday. Another session was set for Saturday morning, the last day the panel is supposed to be in business.

Economist Alan Greenspan, chairman of the reform panel, said there was a "general understanding," but no final agreement on a formula to keep Social Security solvent.

"I'm encouraged as long as we're meeting," said Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bob Dole, R-Kan.

Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., a commission member, said that while he and AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, another commission member, did not attend the talks Wednesday, they told the negotiators: "We just could not go along with a six-month delay in the cost-of-living increase," which is expected to be about 5 percent.

Pepper and other Democrats on the 15-member panel had offered to support a three-month delay in this July's scheduled benefit increase in exchange for higher payroll taxes as part of a mix to bail out the system.

But another commission member, Sen. William L. Armstrong, R-Colo., said that other conservative members of the panel "all feel just as I do that it's a mistake to raise taxes."

The current payroll tax is 6.7 percent, levied on the employer and the employee, on the first $35,700 in annual income. It is scheduled to reach 7.65 percent in 1990, and the taxable income figure is supposed to change in step with average wages in the country. It was unclear how much of an acceleration the negotiators were considering.

Armstrong said he would meet today with commission members Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, businesswoman Mary Falvey Fuller and former Rep. Joe Waggoner of Louisiana as well as Robert A. Beck, chairman of the Prudential Insurance Co., to "try to formulate a plan which we think would be acceptable to the broad spectrum of people in this country."

Armstrong's meeting presumably will form the basis for a set of minority views from commission members who feel the solution to Social Security's problems lies in restraining the growth of benefits.

Armstrong declined to discuss details of the private talks with White House officials, but he said, "I do not feel at this point we're close to any kind of an agreement." He added, "I would be very much surprised if the president could approve a package" that relies primarily on higher income and payroll taxes.

The 82-year-old Pepper, meanwhile, said the average Social Security beneficiary would lose $60 with a three-month delay in the cost-of-living adjustment and twice that much with a six-month delay.

"I can't understand for the life of me why the administration wouldn't be willing to increase the tax a little bit and not take that away from ... the millions of people in this country for whom a few dollars is a great deal," Pepper said.

However, Pepper said he might be willing to back a six-month delay if the negotiators would discard a proposed plan to increase the penalty for early retirement after the year 2000.

Pepper said the negotiators want to give early retirees 76 percent of their full benefits at age 62 instead of the current 80 percent, while boosting the bonus for working until age 70 to 140 percent of regular benefits instead of the current 115 percent.

Pepper also suggested reducing the cost-of-living increase for "the people in the upper-income bracket."

After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%.
