Marines, Lebanese militia exchange fire

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — U.S. Marines traded small-arms fire with Lebanese militiamen throughout the night, a Marine spokesman said today, and Syrian-backed Druse insurgents clashed with Lebanese army troops in the central mountains near the capital.

A Saudi-sponsored ceasefire plan reportedly was being negotiated in an effort to end Lebanon's latest outbreak of fighting.

Maj. Robert Jordan, the Marine spokesman, said all three companies of the 1,200-man Marine contingent engaged in sporadic firefights from their base at the international airport. He said there were no American casualties.

He said militia fire directed against nearby Lebanese army positions spread to the Marine base and the Marines returned fire.

"Some guy (militiaman) would just pop up and let off a few rounds," Jordan said. "But the heaviest concentration was out of Hay El-Sellum," a Shiite Moslem slum on Beirut's southern edge.

Jordan said an amphibious task force of about 2,000 Marines arrived off the Lebanese coast. The additional forces were ordered to the eastern Mediterranean by President Reagan as a back-up in the event of future attacks.

■ Lebanon becoming big issue — Page 2A

Beirut was shaken by the rumbling of artillery overnight, but spokesmen for the U.S., Italian, French and British contingents of the multinational peacekeeping force reported no shelling in their zones.

Earlier this morning — after the small-arms fire began — Marine spokesman Charles Rode had said all was quiet at the U.S. base.

The Red Cross said it was sending relief convoys to the Chouf mountain town of Deir Al-Kamar to help 30,000 besieged Christians. It said Druse commanders agreed to let the convoys through after a three-day ban.

Army communiques said its units repulsed several overnight Druse assaults, backed by Palestinian guerrillas, on the key town Souk El-Gharb in the Aley mountains above Beirut and pounded insurgent positions around Shweifat on the southern edge of the capital.

An army communique said two Lebanese soldiers and at least two Palestinian guerrillas were killed in battles at Souk El-Gharb on Sunday, but Western military sources said a U.S.-trained unit was overrun with 14 Lebanese soldiers killed, 28 wounded and 28 others missing in hand-to-hand fighting.

Druse communiques said Christian forces had been driven from 85 percent of the Aley and Chouf mountain areas since the fighting began Sept. 4, when Israeli troops abandoned positions in the mountains for a more secure defense line to the south at the Awali River.

The Druse deny the army's claims that Syrian troops, Palestinian guerrillas or Iranian volunteers were fighting alongside the Druse, a secretive Islamic sect.

Third diplomat in year ousted by Soviet Union

MOSCOW (AP) — A U.S. diplomat and his wife have been accused of spying in Leningrad and the diplomat was asked to leave the country, the KGB secret police said today.

The U.S. Embassy spokesman Mark Smith confirmed that the diplomat, Vice Consul Lon David Augustenborg, had been declared persona non grata. He is the third U.S. diplomat accused of spying this year by the Soviets.

The Soviet news agency Tass, in a report attributed to the KGB, said Augustenborg "and his wife, Denise Augustenborg, were detained flagrante delicto in the area of Leningrad on Sept. 11 as they were carrying out an act of espionage."

Smith would not say whether Augustenborg and his wife had been detained. He declined to provide any background information about the diplomat.

Tass said an investigation "fully exposes the U.S. diplomat and his wife as being engaged in intelligence-gathering activities incompatible with their official status."

The agency said Augustenborg "was declared persona non grata for his illegal acts of spying."

No other details of the allegations were provided in the three-paragraph Tass dispatch. The dispatch did not mention any connection with the recent downing of a Korean Air Lines jetliner by a Soviet fighter plane, an incident which has strained U.S.-Soviet relations.

The last U.S. diplomat expelled from the Soviet Union was embassy attache Louis Thomas, who was ordered out of the country last June.

At the time, Tass claimed Thomas had been nabbed "red-handed" by the KGB during an act of espionage. The agency used the identical wording in today's report — that evidence "fully exposes" the alleged activities.

Thomas was the second diplomat expelled for alleged spying this year. On March 7, Embassy First Secretary Richard Osborne was accused of espionage and kicked out.

Osborne worked in the economic section of the embassy in Moscow, while U.S. officials said Thomas worked in the security division.

Last April, three Soviet officials — a KGB officer, the acting defense attache and a diplomat at the United Nations — were expelled from the United States after the FBI caught them trying to obtain classified documents.

The FBI denied that the expulsions were in retaliation for Osborne's ouster. But the U.S. action came following a series of expulsions of Soviet diplomats from several Western countries for espionage, including 47 thrown out of France.

Three British diplomats were expelled from Moscow in retaliation for the ouster of four Soviets from London, but otherwise Soviet retaliation for the expulsions was minimal.

Another body recovered; New sanctions threatened

WAKKANAI, Japan (AP) — Gale winds washed a third body believed from the downed South Korean airliner onto Japan's northeast coast today, and the nation's leaders warned of new sanctions unless Moscow admitted it should not have shot down the jumbo jet.

Police in Hokkaido, Japan's northernmost main island, found the headless body on the Sea of Okhotsk coast near Monbetsu, 160 miles southeast of where the Boeing 747 is believed to have crashed into the sea off the Soviet island of Sakhalin.

The body was too mutilated for even the sex to be determined.

The Maritime Safety Agency reported a second find today, a piece of flesh believed to be from a human back that was found in a salmon fisherman's net off Monbetsu. In all, searchers have retrieved more than 420 objects believed to have come from the destroyed Boeing 747.

In Washington, the State Department conceded that the attacking Soviet jet may have fired warning shots before launching a deadly missile. And in Moscow, a Soviet general claimed the jet fighter's pilot could not have distinguished the airliner from a U.S. spy plane.

■ New translations reveal warning shots fired — Page 2A

■ Day of mourning observed; Pilots recall other flights off course — Page 5C

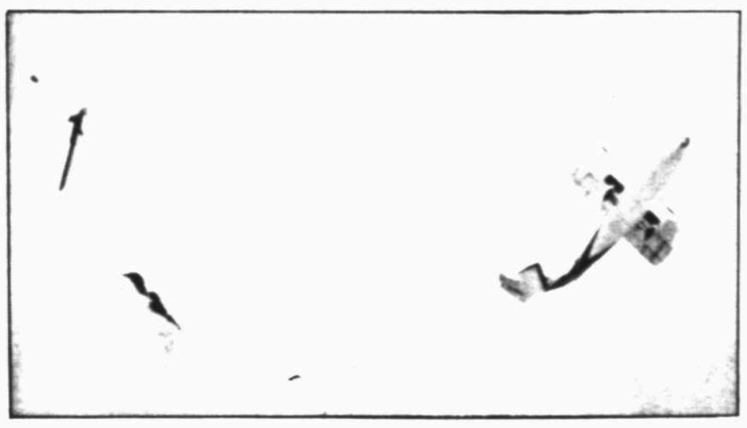
The Soviet fighter shot down Korean Air Lines Flight 007 on Sept. 1 off the Soviet island of Sakhalin, north of Japan's northernmost island of Hokkaido. The 269 people aboard the airliner are presumed killed.

Today, a pack of six Soviet vessels searched near Moneron, a tiny island off southwest Sakhalin where the jumbo jet is believed to have gone down, the Japanese Maritime Safety Agency said. The Soviets have not disclosed any details of their search and bar other vessels from Soviet waters.

In Tokyo, the lower house of Parliament unanimously adopted a resolution accusing the Soviet Union of "inexcusable barbarism" and demanding an official apology for the attack.



Plane plunges

Stunt pilot Wes Winter, Mesa, Ariz., was killed Sunday when the experimental plane he was flying in a Plainview air show lost its wings and plunged to the ground. The Partenavia p-68c had been featured in the 15th Annual Plainview Kiwanis Air Show held Sunday afternoon.

Pilot killed in air show crash

PLAINVIEW, Texas (AP) — A crowd of 1,000 watched and listened in horror as an experimental airplane lost its wings and plummeted to the ground, killing the pilot while his wife screamed "Oh my God!" over the public address system.

The crash occurred minutes after the pilot had boasted of the Italian-made plane's safety, telling a reporter the craft was "capable of doing what I want it to do."

Wes Winter, 46, an aircraft distributor from Mesa, Ariz., was killed Sunday after the wings snapped off his plane as he flew in a loop at the 15th annual Plainview Kiwanis Air Show, said Hale County Sheriff's Deputy Todd Ed Burson.

Winter's wife, Kathy, was describing her husband's maneuvers over a public address system when the plane began tumbling, said Plainview Herald photographer Jerry Mennenga, who witnessed the crash.

As the plane nose-dived toward the ground, "everybody was stunned. I thought at first it was just part of the thing. But you could hear her on the PA saying 'Oh my God!' Then she started screaming, and it was being carried over the PA system," Mennenga said.

"Finally they shut it off after two or three minutes and everyone was real quiet," he said.

In an interview with an Amarillo television station shortly before the crash, Winter said the plane was not designed for the stress of aerobatics, but he was confident of its capabilities.

"We know that the airframe is capable of doing what I want it to do," Winter told KAMR-TV reporter Anita Rother. "And of course, we went to the factory and checked it over ourselves. And I've been very careful in designing the air show around the airplane."

Bald men gather at Morehead City

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — "Combless and proud of it" could have been the slogan as bald-headed men gathered for a convention aimed at instilling pride and promoting a positive image.

Nearly 300 men from six states, Canada and Sweden — all with nary a hair — attended the get-together Saturday sponsored by the Bald-Headed Men of America Club.

"I founded the club back in 1973, when everybody was organized for everything," said president John Capps of Morehead City. "I felt bald-headed men needed to be organized, to instill pride and dignity at being bald-headed, to promote a positive image and outlook."

The club has 10,000 members from all 50 states and 26 foreign nations, Capps said in a telephone interview.

Automobile tire distributor Mark Adams, of Tega Cay, S.C., won the convention's "prettiest head" award.

Other winners included Bob Hood of Milwaukee, Wis., for the "best all-around bald head," and Haywood Jones of Durham, N.C., for the "best solar dome."

Dean Kartalas of New York won the "most kissable head" award. Bill White of Raleigh, N.C., got the "1983 Crystal Chrome Dome Award," which Capps said was the second-highest honor.

Capps said he was given a "perfect 10 award." "I turned it down but they insisted," he said.

Subsidy director resigns

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The 22-year-old director of Midland County's Community Developement and Federal Rental Subsidy programs resigned today after he was charged with theft of federal funds.

Nunez

Charged late Friday afternoon and bailed out of jail under a $10,000 bond was director Richard Joseph Nunez. He had been hired as an independent contractor by Midland County Commissioners' Court last January when he succeeded Betty Sheeler. He was salaried at $13,200 a year.

In his letter to County Judge Bill Ahders, Nunez said he submitted his resignation in order "to avoid any further embarrassment to the county."

Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith said the investigation into the Nunez-directed programs began after "questionable bookkeeping procedures" were suspected.

In the formal complaint by sheriff's investigator Bryan Cook, Nunez allegedly mailed checks to three recipients — Eugene DeLeon, Diane Herrera and Clara Brown — of rental subsidy payments. The checks were mailed to post office boxes which Nunez had rented. Thereafter, Nunez, according to Cook's complaint, deposited the checks in an account at First City National Bank. The next day, he withdrew the funds, the complaint said.

The sheriff's office had subpoenaed Nunez's records and found no applications for rental subsidy by the three supposed recipients.

The Commissioners' Court this morning was in executive session with the sheriff, County Attorney J. Scott Henderson, County Auditor Johnnie Thompson, County Treasurer Dee Thompson and other officials.

Nunez was charged with felony theft of between $750 to $20,000. The penalty for the offense is a two to ten year prison sentence and a $5,000 fine.

The Nunez case will be presented to the Midland County Grand Jury for possible indictment Wednesday.

The charges were filed before Justice of the Peace Bob Pine and with District Attorney Vern Martin.

Before coming to Midland County, Nunez was a counselor for the Office of Housing and Community Development in Big Spring.

Pinochet's 'style' remains intact

By RICHARD BOUDREAUX
Associated Press Writer

AP Laserphoto

Singing the national anthem during a religious ceremony marking the 10th anniversary of his military government's rise to power are Chilean President Augusto Pinochet, right, and his wife.

SANTIAGO, Chile — Despite a deep recession and massive political protests, Gen. Augusto Pinochet is entering his second decade as Chile's military president with his authoritarian style intact.

The "Days of National Protest" by hundreds of thousands of Chileans once a month since May have forced the 67-year-old army commander to start talks with a five-party Democratic Alliance on steps toward civilian rule.

But two weeks after opening the talks through his interior minister, Pinochet is now warning that the opposition should expect no more than a congress that would coexist with military rule during the last year or two of his presidential term, which runs to 1989.

After lifting a state of emergency that enabled the armed forces to impose curfews and ban meetings, he has extended for six months a decree empowering him to hold dissidents in secret jails up to 20 days and banish them abroad or to remote parts of Chile.

After vowing to "change the face" of his regime after 10 years, Pinochet marked its anniversary Sunday with a typically combatative speech while his riot police attacked hundreds of anti-government demonstrators with clubs and tear gas in Chile's two largest cities.

He denounced his foes as "demagogues" responsible for President Salvador Allende's turbulent Marxist experiment of the early 1970s. He also blamed them for inspiring political violence that has taken 50 lives in the past five months.

"I consider it a duty to adopt all means necessary to exterminate it," he declared.

The tough talk reflects a position of strength that has enabled Pinochet to withstand an economic decline and a level of unrest that would be enough to break most Latin American regimes.

Leaders of the armed forces, his base of power since the coup that toppled Allende, convinced Pinochet to open a dialogue with the opposition to defuse the protests. But they, too, oppose fundamental changes in the 1980 constitution that set his presidential tenure because it guarantees them a watchdog role over future elected governments and bans Marxists from holding office.

An unemployment rate of about 30 percent has worked to Pinochet's advantage in one important way — discouraging a general strike by dissident labor organizations that started the protest movement.

If the protests have been unable to disrupt the economy or seriously weaken Pinochet, his security forces have been unable to crush the largely spontaneous unrest among the unemployed in the slums ringing Santiago.

Most of those killed in the protests have been unarmed demonstrators or bystanders hit by police or army gunfire in those neighborhoods.

"I would rather die by the bullet than of hunger" is a refrain heard often among young people increasingly willing to battle police with nothing more than rocks.

In the past four days 10 more people have died. One funeral march Saturday drew 30,000 mourners, the largest concentration of anti-government protesters since Pinochet took power.

How to control this unrest has been debated in the army since Pinochet sent troops to back riot police during the July and August demonstrations. They were not used this month, and some military analysts doubt they would be used again even if police could not contain violence.

Some advisers have urged Pinochet to try to defuse the unrest with quick-fix measures to create jobs. But the expanded credit to landowners and businessmen he announced Sunday appears too limited to produce a rapid recovery.

The unrest is equally worrisome to the Democratic Alliance leaders because they don't control it either. Pinochet's tough response has divided the alliance parties, which range from the right to the socialist left, over whether they should halt talks with Interior Minister Sergio Onore Jarpa.

"Talking to the government is the only non-violent way out," said Radical Party leader Enrique Silva Cimma. "We have a political and patriotic responsibility to do everything possible to prevent a bloodbath."

Other opposition leaders worry about losing control of the protest movement if they seem too eager to continue the talks or accept limited concessions.

"We are not going to get rid of this dictatorship without some kind of violence," said a younger Radical Party activist. He asked not to be named because Chileans can go to jail for calling Pinochet a dictator.

Lebanon issue may be 'heating up'

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

An Analysis

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, expecting greater pressure from Congress over the use of U.S. forces in Lebanon, is facing what a senior aide says "could be the most difficult stage we'll have" in the troubled Middle East nation.

"We're racing against time on the diplomatic front," said one White House official, referring to the intensive efforts of Reagan's special Middle East envoy, Robert McFarlane, to bring about a de-escalation of the violence and then work out a withdrawal of Syrian and Israeli forces.

This official, who spoke on condition that he not be further identified, referred to the leader of the Druse militia, Walid Jumblatt, and said: "We get a good signal from Jumblatt and then the Syrians sit down on him and he doesn't do what he said he'd do."

Four U.S. Marines have been killed in recent weeks because of the violence. It was firing from Druse positions outside Beirut that landed on Marine camps near the Beirut airport last week and brought return fire from Marine artillery and U.S. Navy gunners stationed offshore.

Administration officials, reluctant to acknowledge on the record that this meant the U.S. forces had entered a more active stage, conceded privately that it represented a stepped up role.

Meanwhile, said Larry Speakes, the chief White House spokesman, "If we fight back, we're starting a war. If we don't fight back, we're not defending ourselves."

For his part, Reagan on Friday told a Republican group in Scottsdale, Ariz., via a closed-circuit television hookup:

"We are not planning enlarging a war. We are not planning on expanding the forces that are there. But we have said ... that we're going to protect our Marines that are being shot at."

"We're not going to get drawn into some kind of a long-drawn conflict. But we ... do not see any necessity at the moment, or any good reason, for withdrawing the multinational force."

Meanwhile, Rep. Clarence D. Long, D-Md., chairman of the House appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations, announced he would try to cut off funding for the Marines in Lebanon until Reagan asks for specific congressional authorization for them to remain.

A week ago, Reagan conferred with Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., and other top congressional leaders. This week, Reagan is tentatively planning to meet with Republican congressional leaders on Tuesday morning, as Congress returns from its August recess.

Reagan has already reported to Congress under a provision of the War Powers Act of 1973 that requires such notice when American forces enter another nation "equipped for combat."

But the president has refused to invoke another section of the law that requires Congress to grant approval within 60 days if U.S. forces are introduced "into hostilities or into situations where imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated by the circumstances."

Long has taken issue with the president's refusal to invoke this section of the act, and said last week "the situation today in Lebanon can be described in no other words than one of hostilities."

As for Congress and the handling of the provisions of the War Powers Act, one administration official said "we'll have to wait till they get back here."

"Right where we are is right where we want to be and right where we have a consensus of support," said Speakes. "We do believe we have a consensus from the congressional leadership."

Speakes pointed out that Baker said he opposed the use of the 1,200 Marines as part of the U.S., French and Italian multinational force when it was first introduced in Lebanon more than a year ago.

"But he said the other day 'they're there and I support you.' Tip (O'Neill) said the same thing, and (so did) Bob Byrd," Speakes said.

West Texas areas get a little rain

By The Associated Press

Scattered thunderstorms dotted portions of South Texas and the coast before dawn today following heavy rains in areas of drought-parched West Texas.

A long string of dry days was broken in Sutton, Schleicher, Coke, Runnels and Tom Green counties Sunday as rains of up to 1.4 inches fell on parched earth, the National Weather Serice reported.

But officials said the moisture may be a case of too little, too late for farmers and ranchers.

Coke, Sutton and Schleicher counties were among several West Texas counties listed as federal disaster areas.

"We haven't had any real rain here in the past little while, like since about last year. You could say it wasn't great and its surely not enough, but its better than we've been getting," said Schleicher County Agricultural Extension Agent Jerry Swift.

Midwest gets some relief from heat

By CYNTHIA GREEN

Crowds flocked to beaches from Maine to Georgia as temperatures reached into the 90s and 100s, breaking records in 21 Eastern cities, but the Midwest got a breath of relief as the mercury fell 20 to 30 degrees from the day before.

California meanwhile suffered under a stifling blanket of smog and 100-degree heat Sunday.

The hot spot in the East was downtown Baltimore, which reached a record 101 degrees. But Providence, R.I., Nashville, Tenn., Richmond, Va., and Wilmington, Del., all hit 100, and more than a dozen other cities with highs in the upper 90s broke or tied their records for the date, the National Weather Service said.

In Atlantic City, N.J., where the 99-degree heat was nearly 30 degrees above normal, beaches were jammed and gaming tables were filled in the air-conditioned casinos.

Forecasters blamed the sizzling weather on a high pressure system stuck over the Southeast. The cold front moving in today from the Midwest should provide some relief for New England, but the National Weather Service again predicted 90-degree highs from New Jersey to Florida.

"For this time of year, we're usually way off on our crowds, but we've got a good crowd," said Bernard Levy, assistant chief of the Atlantic City Beach Patrol.

"We've been quite busy," said Muriel Harris, spokeswoman for the Golden Nugget casino hotel. "There should be a decline in crowds after the holidays, but the hot weather is going to keep people coming down."

About 100,000 people went to Nantasket Beach south of Boston, where the 99-degree high broke a 52-year-old record.

"It's the second biggest crowd since July 4th. It's unbelievable," said Officer John Wright. "People and cars are all over everywhere. We thought this was the end of the season — after Labor Day — and a lot of our guys went on vacation so we're incredibly short of manpower."

Rhode Island, which normally sees 90-degree heat only eight days a year and last year reported only four such days, on Sunday marked its 28th day of the summer with temperatures above 90.

Many school systems in North Carolina planned to close early today because of the heat, as they did last week, officials said. Raleigh's 97-degree high topped the 1965 record by 5 degrees Sunday.

Meanwhile, the baked Midwest was having one of its first cool spells of the summer. Temperatures from Nebraska to Wisconsin on Sunday plunged 20 to 30 degrees from Saturday's readings.

Kansas City, Mo., reported 95 on Saturday, but at 2 p.m. Sunday thermometers registered only 70.

Hurricane headed seaward

MIAMI (AP) — Hurricane Chantal, the third hurricane of the 1983 season, headed away from land northeast of Bermuda today and forecasters said its 75 mph winds threatened only shipping.

"Chantal is quite small with gales extending out only 75 miles from the center," the National Hurricane Center said. "No significant change is expected."

Storm Chantal whipped into a hurricane in the mid-Atlantic on Sunday. The third named storm of the hurricane season, Chantal strengthened all day Sunday and became a "minimal hurricane" at 6 p.m., the National Hurricane Center said.

At 10:30 p.m. EDT Sunday, Chantal was 400 miles east-northeast of Bermuda and moving east northeast at 13 mph. It was centered near latitude 33.3 north, longitude 58.0 west.

Asked about that possibility, National Hurricane Center forecaster Bob Case said that "after 17 years in meteorology you learn to never say never, no and can't."

U.S. concedes Soviet pilot fired warning shots

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States now concedes the Soviet pilot who downed a South Korean airliner may have fired warning shots before loosing his fatal missiles, but the State Department says there is no indication the crew of the doomed jetliner saw or heard a warning.

"The fact is that it was an unarmed, civilian airliner, and it cost the lives of 269 innocent people," the State Department said.

The change in the evidence the Reagan administration has amassed in its worldwide campaign to rebuke the Soviets for their action came in an unusual Sunday morning news release from the State Department. No officials were available to comment on it.

Reagan had declared Sunday a national day of mourning for the victims of KAL Flight 007, including 61 Americans.

The written statement said government linguists using electronic enhancement techniques and replaying the tapes of Soviet air-to-ground transmissions hundreds of times "were able to interpret three passages more clearly" than when the White House released an earlier transcript of the conversations last week.

In the revised version, the Soviet pilot's radio transmissions indicate he fired his cannon nearly six minutes before he used heat-seeking missiles to shoot down the Korean Air Lines Boeing 747.

"This additional analysis of the tapes reinforces our belief that the totality of the events remains exactly as stated by the U.S. and Japan," the State Department said. "The Korean airliner was not aware of the Soviet fighters, nor was it aware that any warning was given."

Japan monitored the radio transmissions when the plane was shot down Sept. 1.

The Soviet Union has said repeatedly that its pilots tried, first by radio and then by firing warning cannon bursts with tracer shells, to signal the aircraft that it had violated Soviet airspace. There still is no indication in the U.S. translation of the pilot transmissions that any effort was made to contact the airliner by radio.

The Kremlin contends the plane was on a spying mission.

In a rare two-hour news conference Friday, Soviet Marshal Nikolai Ogarkov said four bursts of warning shots with 120 tracer rounds were fired at 18:20 Greenwich Mean Time (GMT), which coincides with the time on the new State Department transcript.

The transcript quotes the interceptor pilot, identified only as "805," reporting to his ground controllers, "I have broken off lock-on. I am firing cannon bursts."

The earlier transcript had quoted him only as saying he was switching off his missile lock-on, a device used to select a heat-seeking missile's target.

A minute and a half later the attacking Soviet pilot noticed the jetliner was decreasing speed, although there is no indication why.

"The evidence indicates that the (Korean Air Lines) pilot was totally unaware of the fact he was off course, that he was intercepted by Soviet fighters or that any warnings — visual, radio, gunfire — were given," the State Department said.

Budget cuts blamed for day-care abuse, neglect, newspaper reports

DALLAS (AP) — At least three children have died at Texas day-care homes where the Department of Human Resources knew problems existed that had not been corrected, the Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story.

The News on Sunday said a three-month study found that some children have been beaten and others have died in day-care centers monitored by state officials who say staff cut-backs keep them from properly inspecting the facilities.

In others cases, the newspaper said, sex offenders have been allowed to work in day-care centers, because DHR is unable to adequately screen applicants.

DHR officials say that they are doing a good job, but acknowledge that they can't hire enough inspectors to keep up with the increasing numbers of such facilities.

"I think children are less protected today then three or four years ago," said David Beard, state administrator of child-care licensing. "We're not as thorough as we used to be."

The number of licensed day-care centers in Texas has more than doubled in the last five years, from 9,461 in 1977 to 21,816, according to DHR. As the number of child-care facilities has grown so has the rate of complaints. The agency recorded 4,113 complaints against day-care centers — nearly twice the figure in 1977.

In 1982, DHR confirmed 313 child-abuse cases in 1982, nearly four times the number in 1979.

But state budget constraints have reduced the number of DHR inspectors from 275 in 1977 to 119, forcing DHR to cut back on enforcement.

Faced with the diminished staff, DHR cut its recommended number of inspections of each facility from four a year in 1977 to one every six months to nine months in 1983.

"I'm really concerned about how much good regulation is going on when go in every nine months," said Beard.

"Because we're spread so thin, we physically cannot give some of the complaints the time they need. We used to make follow-up visits and confirm that changes had been made. We still do that with some problems. But with others we follow up by telephone."

Based on the number of children in day-care — the state's licensed homes have a capacity of more than 400,000 — "Child care has a pretty good track record," Beard said.

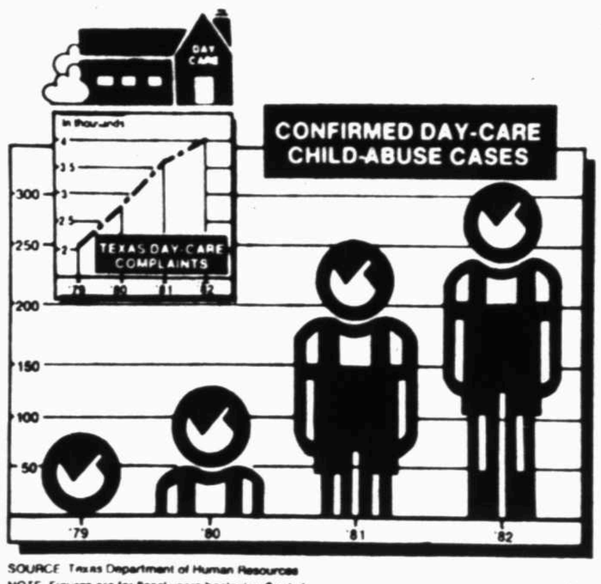
But, he says, "I think we are barely able to keep up. Any further cuts, any significant, sudden growth in facilities or other imposed responsibilities on licensing inspectors and that owould put us in a really critical position."

Some day-care facilities are rarely, if ever, complained about, according to DHR. And some complaints — broken toys, for example — are relatively minor. But many are not.

On Thursday, a state district judge ordered an Austin day-care center to close after hearing testimony that children were beaten with mop handles.

In 1982, the owner of a registered home in Dallas said a 9-month-old boy suffered two broken bones when she tried to give him some medicine. The same year, a 6-year-old San Antonio girl died after falling out the side door of a day-care center van as it rounded a corner.

Last March, DHR investigators found that the 19-year-old son of a child-care center owner had sexually abused two sisters, ages 6 and 8. And in 1981, a 6-year-old Fort Worth boy drowned during a day-care center swimming lesson. The pool was so murky that his body could not be seen at the bottom, DHR records show.



SOURCE: Texas Department of Human Resources
NOTE: Figures are for fiscal years beginning Sept. 1

Some of the injuries occurred at centers or homes where few or no previous complaints had been reported, but at other facilities the agency had recorded a history of problems.

The DHR declined to provide a detailed list of children who have died in child-care centers, citing required confidentiality of some of its records. But an examination of the agency's files showed that at least three deaths occurred since 1980 at homes were inspectors had discovered previous violations that had been allowed to continue.

Theresa Clary, the owner of a home in the Houston suburb of Channelview, pleaded no contest in May to charges of negligent homicide after a 23-month-old girl died in her care.

The toddler died of a ruptured esophagus caused by violent vomiting after she was left locked up in sweltering heat inside the owner's van. DHR had previously found that the home was caring for 23 children when it was licensed for 12 and had warned her twice of the violation.

State law permits DHR to seek criminal penalities, civil fines or court injunctions against child-facilities that continually violate state standards. But such sanctions are rarely used. No more than six owners have been prosecuted for operating without a license since 1976. Three others have been forced to pay civil fines.

DHR officails say they take only the most severe cases to the courts becuase judges are often reluctant to shut centers down and prosecutors are hesitant to handle the cases.

'Extralegal' system used for arrests

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Lawyers say an "extralegal" system used by Jefferson County officers to arrest suspects without warrants violates the constitutional rights against unreasonable arrest and detention.

But law enforcement officials insist it protects the rights of the suspects.

"You can say that in Jefferson County, we go to great lengths to protect a person's rights," Beaumont Police Chief Willie Bauer told the Houston Chronicle in a story published Sunday.

Under the system, police obtain an "accusation bond" from a justice of the peace. If the accused person cannot post the bond, he may be held while police continue their investigation.

Law enforcement officials say the suspect benefits because he does not face the stigma that would result if police filed charges immediately, only to have them later dismissed after further investigation.

However, lawyers and law professors say "accusation bonds" may violate constitutional rights because a judge does not quickly determine whether police have sufficient evidence to arrest and hold the suspect.

"I find it incredible that no one has challenged it in federal court," said Richard Alan Anderson of Dallas, first vice chairman of the State Bar of Texas Criminal Law Section.

The Constitution forbids police to arrest anyone without sufficient evidence to show he probably committed a crime.

If police arrest a person without probable cause, the arrest is illegal and any evidence gathered because of that arrest — such as a confession — cannot be used against him at a trial.

Jeffferson County District Attorney James McGrath said that if a suspect or his attorney presses the issue, police could file charges immediately and have a judge determine whether there is probable cause.

"Police eventually file formal charges on 99 percent of the people jailed under accusation bonds," McGrath said. "I have never felt that anybody is deprived of any right by it."

Radio executive trying to organize council

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas radio station executive is trying to organize a national review council to monitor lyrics of popular songs for excessive drug and sexual references — a move branded by some record industry officials as censorship.

William Steding, vice president and general manager of KAFM, said the council would be composed of about a dozen elected representatives of different segments of the music industry, such as major record companies, distributors, broadcast managers and recording artists.

Major industry associations would elect members by early next year, Steding told the Dallas Times Herald.

"The council will make judgments based on the lyric content as to the acceptability of music for today's youth," said Steding. "If it passes the guidelines, a record would get a label saying it is acceptable, just like a Good Housekeeping seal."

Steding said he believes only a few songs aimed at teenagers are overtly harmful, but those few "make a lot of indulgences seem like acceptable behavior.

"Lyrics are not a major problem today. It's more of a nuisance you have to deal with," he said. "I'd like more input from others in the industry on this. It's something I'm not sure radio stations are qualified to handle."

The tentative guidelines state that a title or lyric is objectionable when "specific reference is made to sex or the sex act, the use of drugs or when a specific expletive used normally as a swear word is contained within," the Times Herald reported.

The guidelines also advise that offending songs not bearing the seal be deleted from station play lists or edited by the individual stations.

KAFM, which is owned by the Mormon Church through its parent company, the Bonneville International Corp., plays contemporary hits aimed at teen-agers. The station has been following the guidelines for about a year, Steding said.

The effort arose out of his interpretation of the station's responsibility to uphold the standards it pledges for its federal license, Steding said.

One of the opponents to the idea is Stanley Gortikov, executive director of the Recording Industry Association of America, whose 45 member companies produced 85 percent of the approximately $3 billion in records and tapes sold last year.

"I resent and fear the establishment of any form of centralized censorship," Gortikov said.

Suburban growth shifting to 'exurban' growth

DALLAS (AP) — Census experts have a new term for population shifts in Texas — "exurban growth."

While the growth of the past decade caused suburbs to boom, state officials say that a dozen of Texas' rural counties will at least double in size as people reach out beyond urban centers.

State officials project that Williamson County, north of Austin, will be the state's fastest growing county for the next 17 years.

Williamson County, which County Judge Tim Maresh says was once little more than rolling, shrub-covered hills, doubled in population in the 1970s — from 37,000 in 1970 to 76,000 in 1980. Before the end of the century, the county's population is expected to top 200,000.

"Our best guess now is that we're at 90,000 and they're just building like the dickens out there," Maresh told the Dallas Times Herald in a story published Sunday.

State officials say Williamson County is typical of the latest population trend — from suburban growth to "exurban."

"The suburbs are simply a subcategory of the city," said John Summer, professor of political economy at the University of Texas at Dallas. "These are exurbs, which means away from or beyond the city."

Officials list 12 counties where more than 100 percent growth is expected between 1980 and 2000: Denton, Collin, Rockwall, Van Zandt, Hood, Hays, Williamson, Montgomery, Fort Bend, Maverick, Starr and Hidalgo.

100-year-old twins attribute long life to work

ELKHART, Texas (AP) — Hard work, clean living, no smoking and no alcohol are the secrets of longevity, two identical twins proclaimed on their 100th birthday.

This tiny East Texas town celebrated "Ila and Ida Day" Saturday for its twins, Ila Foster and Ida McGahey

"Work," said Mrs. McGahey, is the secret to long life.

"I've done as much hard work in my life as anybody who's not a convict," she said.

The twins, whose younger twin sisters Ada Wallace and Ava Turner are in their 80s, joined family and friends around a birthday cake covered with 100 candles.

Ila and Ida and eight brothers and sisters grew up on an Anderson County farm, said Mrs. McGahey's 63-year-old daughter Dewece.

"They lived on the fruits of their own labors," she said. "They raised their own meat and grew their own vegetables — and made the best ice cream I've ever tasted."

The elder twins say they neither smoked nor drank alcohol, although Miss Foster admitted taking liquor once for a pain in her stomach.

"It tasted like slop," she recalled.

If they could live the past 100 years over again, the said, they would get an education.

"They didn't have schools then like they do now," said Miss Foster.

Also sharing your birthday: music's Ray Charles, Jacqueline Bisset, Claudette Colbert and singer Mel Torme. Profits increase when new technology is adopted. Follow your instincts where a money matter is concerned. Your friends mean well but may not give good advice. An ardent pursuit of a professional goal pays off. Romance remains secondary to work but is very satisfying. An old disappointment will soon be forgotten. Greater initiative will win you a raise or promotion.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Cultivate a new friendship and good things begin to happen. Your loved ones give you special support in your pursuit of a better life. Expand your romantic horizons.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You profit from a mistake. Member of opposite sex is trying to confuse you. Change is in the wind. Keep expenses under tighter control. You adapt quickly to new surroundings.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A "coincidence" is difficult to believe. Do not dismiss your dreams out of hand; they could be prophetic. The boss recognizes how valuable you are to his operation. A favor is granted.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A new job is possible. Wait a while before evaluating an innovative procedure. Your ideas may be in conflict with the boss' beliefs. A love triangle could jeopardize many relationships.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You attract the attention of someone who may soon be in a position to offer you a job. Stop letting others second-guess you. A newcomer finds you irresistible.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are intrigued by a stranger's attentions. Last-minute calculations are subject to error. Check them at least twice. Help a child learn to make his own decisions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are crowding someone. Back off! Although the financial picture shows improvement, it is still important to keep the lid on spending. A hiring freeze makes things difficult.

Whopper war airs tonight

NEW YORK (AP) — The Macdonalds of Norwalk, Conn., can't bear the shame. Two parents, three kids and one dog are all disguised in phony glasses, oversized noses and bushy eyebrows and mustaches.

This is no scene from a Woody Allen movie. It's video theater at its most commercially provocative — the latest salvo in No. 2 Burger King's guerrilla war against hamburger king McDonald's.

The namesake Macdonalds, so the TV advertisement goes, are embarrassed by their new-found preference for Burger King. "We can't show our faces anymore," says the mother. But, by commercial's end, the mock solemnity changes to whimsical celebration, a veritable hamburger high.

The Macdonalds advise viewers to switch to Burger King, and then, as they toss off their disguises, they gleefully shout: "Tell 'em the Macdonalds sent you."

Burger King is up to its old tricks again, stirring up the multibillion dollar fast-food industry with another aggressive campaign. This one, which begins tonight to coincide with the increase in television viewing after the summer lull, contends that millions of consumers have switched to Burger King since the company's first two comparison campaigns. The Macdonalds' spot will air in about 10 days.

One year ago, Burger King launched the Battle of the Burgers, citing taste tests favoring the Whopper over McDonald's Big Mac and Wendy's Single. That prompted lawsuits from McDonald's and Wendy's, but the court actions were dropped after Burger King promised to stop the commercials.

Last March, Burger King began Whopper War II, with commercials saying that Burger King's broiling was superior to McDonald's frying. The company also promoted a video coupon. Consumers repeating the ad message could buy one Whopper and get one free.

"Teen-agers arrived in groups singing the message," says Steve Bowen, senior vice president for J. Walter Thompson, Burger King's advertising agency.

Bowen says the video coupon was an industry first, but the real courageous move was the comparison campaign. "The industry generally doesn't think it's a good idea because you're raising the competition's name and you risk turning off people," Bowen says.

In addition, Burger King's comparison commercials, which were part of the company's umbrella "Aren't You Hungry?" theme, were filmed by an expert in food photography, instead of somebody specializing in the euphoria scenes of the Pepsi and Coke commercials.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

A. — East's overcall has made life difficult, especially since the fact that North opened in third seat increases the chances that his suit is only four cards long. Nevertheless, you have no better action than to raise to two hearts, even though you would like to have sturdier support.

Q.4 — Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠985 ♡6432 ◇AQ6 ♣J52
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♠ Pass 1 NT Pass
2 ♡ Pass ?
What action do you take?
A. — Fie on you for thinking that we are trying to trick you. You have a dead minimum response and you have located what is at least a 4-4 fit. Pass. There is no need to raise hearts or to take a false preference to spades.

Q.5 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠10954 ♡AK87 ◇5 ♣8654
The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South
1 ♠ Dble Pass 1 ♡
Pass 1 ♠ Pass ?
What do you bid now?
A. — This is a matter of simple arithmetic. By first doubling and then introducing his own suit, partner has shown a hand of at least 16 points. In support of spades your hand is worth 10 points, and the total comes to enough for game. Jump to four spades.

Q.1 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J7 ♡A83 ◇K985 ♣Q1065
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South
1 ♠ 2 ♠ ?
What action do you take?
A. — We hope you didn't elect to bid two no trump. If partner is minimum you have no game. However, you do have an excellent defensive hand against two clubs, and we would recommend a double. If partner is better than minimum, it could be a massacre, and you should defeat the contract even if he has no extra values. And if, by some chance, the opponents should make two clubs doubled, you haven't doubled them into game.

Q.2 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J94 ♡AK106 ◇KQ7 ♣874
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South
Pass Pass ?
What is your opening bid?
A. — Since partner is a passed hand, your chances of having a game are almost nonexistent. Therefore, you are opening in an attempt to get a partscore and, unless partner makes a forcing response, you intend to pass at your next turn. So, there is no need for a "prepared" opening bid – bid one heart.

Q.3 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠95 ♡1065 ◇KJ73 ♣KJ42
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
Pass Pass 1 ♡ 1 ♠
What do you bid now?
Q.6 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A983 ♡J107 ◇AQJ976
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ◇ Pass 1 ♡ Pass
What do you bid now?
A. — Your playing strength and fit for partner's suit make your hand better than minimum, so you should delay raising partner's suit with only three trumps. Bid out your shape. One spade is the clear choice.

HRC outlived itself

During the 12 years the Human Relations Council has been in operation here it served many useful purposes — not the least of which being the one for which the local agency was organized: Reducing racial tensions and promoting harmony, particularly in regard to integration of Midland's schools.

Perhaps the agency did its job so well that it worked itself out of existence. For that, every Midlander should be pleased. But the announcement that the agency will close its doors to the public effective Oct. 31 because of a lack of sufficient funding leaves us keenly aware that the agency's demise likely will mean some underprivileged Midlanders will not receive the help they desperately need.

As much as anything, the HRC simply did outlive its purpose. It outlived it's time, too. The agency was created in a day when social service agencies were created left and right to fill every need. HRC succeeded where so many others failed because it remained aware of its purpose. But it couldn't outrun the economic crunch of the 1980s, that drained away much of the agency's funding, and the turn away from social service agencies as an answer to social concerns.

Just because an agency closes down doesn't mean the need for that agency automatically disappears, though. As Dan O'Grady, former president and ex-officio member of the HRC board noted last week, there will always be a need for an agency like the council.

In that agency's absence, the responsibility for ensuring that the needs of Midland's elderly and underprivileged residents will fall to the city's various charitable organizations and churches. That need shouldn't be overlooked.

Fowled up scheme

"For want of a nail, a shoe was lost" etc. and for want of a steady electrical current, Russ Fuscus blew his chance to win a mention in the Guinness Book of World Records.

An hour-long power failure in the line supplying his Remus Point, N.Y., restaurant and its kitchen equipment doomed his goal of selling 25,000 chicken wings in 12 hours and earning a place in history. The idled frying pans caused a two-hour backup in orders.

As Clausewitz once put it: "No plan survives the first contact of war." In other words, Russ Fuscus, who stocked up on 30,000 chicken wings, a quarter ton of blue cheese dressing and 31,000 stalks of celery, learned the hard way that the most grandiose preparations can be wrecked by a single unanticipated mishap.

Russ did not do too badly — he managed to sell 20,400 wings, which is a local record of sorts. But this year, no cigar. Maybe next year.

Another View:

Train-crew abuse

Between June 1982 and May of this year there were seven train accidents involving alcohol and drug abuse by rail crews in which six persons were killed and property damage of $17.2 million was caused.

At hearings of the National Transportation Safety Board, it was reported alcohol abuse was involved in another recent accident, this one on Sept. 28 of last year near Livingston, La. This crash caused a fire, the explosion of two tank cars, the evacuation of 3,000 people from their homes, and $10 million damage.

The safety board found that two crew members were drinking before and after reporting to work on that train, that the engineers' ability to run the train was impaired, and that the train was being operated by an off-duty clerk when the crash occurred.

Clearly steps need to be taken to stop the heavy use of alcohol and other drugs by train crews on duty. The safety board, railroads and unions, while all agreeing that alcohol and drug abuse by train crews poses a major safety problem, disagree on what steps should be taken.

At recent public sessions, the safety board proposed new rules that would prohibit train crews' use of alcohol and other drugs and provide "appropriate penalties" for violators. It also called for more extensive testing of crews after accidents.

The Association of American Railroads, the rail industry's trade association, pushed for a requirement which would compel train crews to take breathalyzer or other tests during spot checks by railroads, and also endorsed the safety board's proposal for stricter post-crash testing.

Rail labor unions, however, called only for regulations designed to prod the industry to establish or improve programs for counseling workers with drinking and drug problems. They also maintained that workers shouldn't be fired for any first violation of company rules on drinking and drugs if those caught agreed to enter a rehabilitation program.

Judging from the testimony at the safety hearings, it is apparent that the safety board and railroads have treated serious alcohol and drug problems much too lightly. There should be no hesitancy about adopting the tougher rules recommended by the safety board and the railroads.

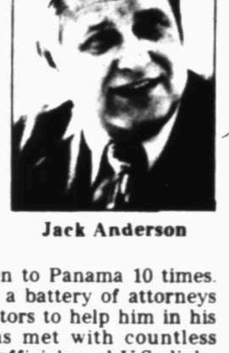
WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

For Floridian, 'Missing' is real

WASHINGTON — For Miami businessman Murray Rozynes, the long search for a missing son is a poignant reprise of the movie "Missing" — but with the curtain scene yet to be written.



Jack Anderson

His son Steven, a 29-year-old attorney, disappeared in Panama four years ago. The elder Rozynes has tracked down every lead, followed every tip, investigated every rumor.

He has been to Panama 10 times. He has hired a battery of attorneys and investigators to help him in his quest. He has met with countless Panamanian officials and U.S. diplomats. He has questioned scores of Panamanian villagers and peasants in the constant hope that one of them just might have crossed paths with his son.

But like the father Jack Lemmon played in the movie, Murray Rozynes has come up against one stonewall after another.

Steven Rozynes was seen for the last time in the sea town of Viento Frio where he had gone, as an amateur anthropologist, apparently to study the people. He had planned to cover Panama by canoe, so he traveled light, carrying a radio, field glasses — and $2,000.

A postcard dated April 16, 1979, brought the Rozyneses the last message from their son. "Dear folks," it read, "all is perfect." The card was mailed from Balboa, Panama.

He reached Viento Frio the next month. Eyewitnesses in the town later told authorities that they had seen two national guardsmen, Pedro and Manuel Ceballo, stop Steven for a security check.

The eyewitnesses said they had observed Steven and the Ceballos get into an argument over payment. But the two guardsmen, the last people known to have seen Steven alive, denied that there had been a quarrel or that they had known the younger Rozynes was carrying money.

Eyewitnesses insisted, however, that they had seen Steven show he had money during the argument.

Through U.S. Ambassador Everett E. Briggs, Murray Rozynes asked that the Ceballos be given lie detector tests. But Panamanian authorities won't issue the necessary order because, they say, lie detector results are not admissible in the courts of that country.

In April 1982, the Panamanian Justice Department closed the Steven Rozynes case after a Panamanian marine expert submitted a report saying that Steven's canoe was unsafe for an ocean journey.

In "Missing," the father eventually learns that his son had been killed by Chilean police. But Murray Rozynes, still uncertain about the fate of his son, persists in his search.

"I just want to know for sure whether my boy is dead or alive," he says. "But I don't know, and no one will tell me."

PERSONAL COMMENT

I have been portrayed as the bete noire of the press, let loose in the nation's capital to hound the resident politicos, who consider my existence to be an intolerable affront.

The Washington Post's Tony Kornheiser discussed my minacious qualities with an unnamed Senate aide, who tried to describe what it was like to get an inquiry from my office. "His call is a grand clong," said the aide.

This is a political term which he defined as: "When things get hopelessly fouled up and you suddenly feel your bladder rushing to your heart."

Explained the aide: "Your first thought is that you're in big trouble. His power is incredible. The vast majority of people who read him represent the vast majority of people in the country. He can paint you any way he wants to."

Not long after this appeared in the Post, Newsweek magazine reported that Sen. Orrin Hatch, a Republican viewer-with-alarm from my native Utah, has been evoking my powers of intimidation to frighten fellow senators. "Some fear Hatch's access to the widely syndicated column of his good friend Jack Anderson," Newsweek noted.

Hatch is a man of intelligence, industry and integrity who has used his considerable analytical and forensic talents to discredit Democrats and occasional Republicans whom he believes to be misguided. But I should explain that I am not a partner in these endeavors.

Any reporter of national catastrophes and international crises, it seems to me, ought to keep a prudent distance from the rascals who cause these events. Yet all too many who write about government have been seduced by those who govern.

Correspondents who form entangling alliances with the officials they write about, reporters who share the rarefied atmosphere on the mountaintop with political rulers can become separated and estranged from the masses below.

So I accept with modest pride the latest honor bestowed on me by the political tenants on Capitol Hill.

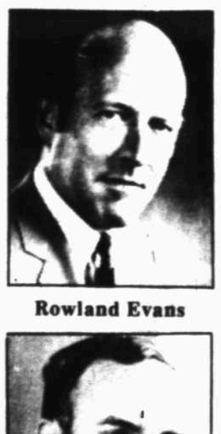
INSIDE REPORT:

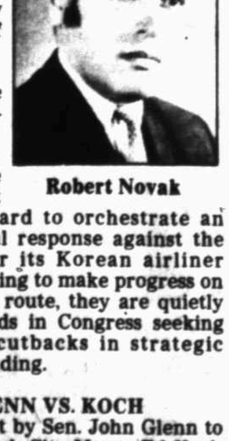
Airliner response hits roadblock

WASHINGTON — After deciding on limited sanctions against the Soviet Union designed to attract maximum international support, the Reagan administration has run into a brick wall in asking other Western governments to restrict Aeroflot operations in their countries.



Rowland Evans

Opposition from neutral Switzerland and Austria to closing down offices and canceling routes for the Soviet airline was expected. But State Department officials have had to scratch and claw to get help from NATO members, with the early exception of Canada.



Robert Novak

Hard-liners inside the administration warned from the start that it would be hard to orchestrate an international response against the Kremlin for its Korean airliner atrocity. Failing to make progress on the sanction route, they are quietly planting seeds in Congress seeking to restore cutbacks in strategic defense spending.

GLENN VS. KOCH

An attempt by Sen. John Glenn to stop New York City Mayor Ed Koch from attacking him about racial quotas has ended for now in an impasse that cooled even more the long, chilly relations between them.

Glenn's campaign strategists believe Koch eventually will endorse Walter F. Mondale for the Democratic presidential nomination but want to stop the mayor from continuing his charges, made across the country, that the senator supports racial quotas. So, on Aug. 22, Glenn telephoned Koch to tell him he was basing his accusations on an incorrect UPI story.

Three days later the mayor wrote the senator offering to correct himself if and when he received an anti-quota declaration from Glenn. What arrived at City Hall was an ambiguous statement from Glenn's New York campaign headquarters asserting that the senator has not opposed "numerical goals and guidelines." But that phrase, retorted Koch in a Sept. 1 letter to Glenn, "is effectively a synonym for racial quotas."

NICARAGUAN SUMMIT?

Special Ambassador Richard Stone is trying to arrange a summit meeting between leaders of Nicaragua's extreme left-wing Sandinista government and anti-Sandinista guerrillas to try to set early free elections.

Adolfo Calero, political leader of the CIA-backed contras based in Honduras, is all for such talks. But other anti-Sandinista leaders are uneasy, preferring to fight rather than talk. No sign of agreement to the talks has come from the Marxist government in Managua.

A footnote: A major military thrust by the contras may be in the offing. Guerrilla leaders have been advised by American friends that the anti-Sandinista movement will lose friends in the U.S. without some concrete victory soon — such as capture and at least temporary possession of a Nicaraguan town.

SCOOP JACKSON'S MEMORIAL

Close political supporters and friends of the late Sen. Henry M. Jackson are thinking about establishing a living memorial to him: a political action committee distributing campaign funds to Democratic office-seekers who, like Jackson, combine domestic liberalism with hard-line anti-communism.

The problem, however, is that there may not be enough of such Democrats these days to qualify for these contributions. Consequently, one intimate of the defense-oriented senator believes the memorial to him might have to be more conventional — such as calling a new aircraft carrier the U.S.S. Henry M. Jackson.

A footnote: AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, another anti-communist liberal and strong Jackson supporter, stunned the memorial service for the senator held in the capital when he turned his eulogy into an attack on the Reagan administration. Kirkland accused "conservatives" — meaning President Reagan — of "business as usual" in handling the Soviet Union after the Korean airliner disaster.

MAUREEN'S REAL ROLE

While Maureen Reagan will be traveling the country mending her father's fences with women's organizations, her real mission as newly-named consultant for the Republican National Committee will be to sensitize the men at the White House — including Ronald Reagan.

The president's political advisers doubt how much good will with women's groups can be sown by his daughter. But they do believe she will alert the president and his men to how issues affect women.

Actually, Maureen Reagan has had a cool relationship with presidential aides, who were none too happy that she ran for the U.S. Senate from California last year. But in a recent California meeting she buried the hatchet with White House political aide Ed Rollins, whom she unsuccessfully sought to manage her 1982 Senate campaign.

CHARLEY REESE

Is Reagan conservative or isn't he?

Reams of copy have been written about the de-conservatizing of President Ronald Reagan. The question is why has the man who was the nation's most well-known spokesman for conservatism abandoned his principles at the White House gate?

Charley Reese

There is the manipulation theory. This argues that Reagan is conservative but his staff isn't and they talk him into and out of things. Well, most of his key staff is liberal, that's for sure. Jim Baker, the chief honcho, managed the losing campaign of Gerald Ford against Jimmy Carter in 1976 and the losing campaign of George Bush against Reagan in the 1980 primaries. He is a Houston lawyer of no known conservative beliefs.

Richard Darman, Baker's deputy, is a protege of liberal Republican Elliot Richardson. David Gergen, White House communications chief, supported Hubert Humphrey against Richard Nixon in 1968 and worked in the Bush campaign.

The problem with the theory that Reagan is simply bamboozled by his staff is that it must be based on the assumption that Reagan is stupid. Only a stupid man would let his staff twist and manipulate him. And Reagan is not stupid.

But, if he is not stupid, he must then not be as conservative as his speeches and this, I think, is the true situation. I believe Reagan is one of those modern men, and they are common, who put little value on words and who never think clearly and logically through their beliefs. Reagan is rather vaguely in favor of some things and rather vaguely against some other things, but he couldn't explain logically why he believes in either category nor can he go from his general belief and translate that into specific programs. A person like that leaves plenty of room for his staff to maneuver.

Secondly, I believe Reagan is rather lazy. I believe he likes to perform, likes the ceremonies, likes to make speeches, but is very bored with the details of governing. Nor do I think he likes conflict and the task of resolving conflicts. This, too gives his staff plenty of room for maneuvering.

Thirdly, Reagan is not a man of strong convictions. He can be stubborn, but that is not the same thing. A child can be stubborn. Reagan can be talked out of his positions because he has not thought them through and because he does not really care that much about such matters.

I believe he wishes the best for people, for his country and for mankind, but I'm afraid he is not at all certain how to accomplish it nor does he feel driven to pursue his programs.

This puts us in an even worse situation than we normally are. No leader of a free society has the same freedom of action as a dictator. But a leader of strong convictions — a Harry Truman or an Andrew Jackson — can get a great deal done.

I'm afraid we have the same problem with Reagan we had with Carter in that too many decisions about vital issues are heavily influenced by political and public relations considerations because that is the main field of interest and expertise of the people closest to Reagan.

Lebanon provides a clear example. Reagan and his people didn't know anything about Lebanon or they would have done the one thing that might have worked — given the Israelis the backing to drive the Syrians out in 1982. Instead, they turned against the Israelis and played public relations games with the Arabs.

Then they sent the Marines in with no clear idea of what they are to do. Now they are afraid to pull them out because it will look bad, but they are afraid to put more in or to expand their mission because that will look bad, too. There is now no hope whatsoever of reunifying Lebanon, but Reagan doesn't want to admit that so he's just doing nothing except hoping that not too many more Marines get killed.

We have to do better at picking leaders. We must not continue to tolerate a system which produces two candidates, each of which campaigns on the platform that the other is even worse.

Fearless prison warden faces down six inmates

McALESTER, Okla. (AP) — A fearless prison warden who faced down six inmates holding two guards hostage, fired his rifle into the ceiling and refused to negotiate, says he's no hero — "You just do what you have to do."

The attempted uprising at the Oklahoma State Penitentiary was halted and the guards released Sunday when Warden John Brown confronted the inmates, who were armed with makeshift weapons, officials said.

"I don't know if that's standard procedure or not," Brown said in a telephone interview after the incident. "It was a judgment call, and that's just what I happened to do."

Prison guard Jim Uppendahl, who was hit over the head with a heavy object, suffered a slight concussion and was kept overnight at McAlester Regional Hospital for observation, officials said. Victor Anderson, the other guard, was treated and released.

The situation at the penitentiary was "nearly normal" following the incident, Brown said. "The other inmates weren't involved, and they cooperated beautifully."

Six inmates from the prison's Unit C rushed the unit's control center at about 5:45 p.m., Corrections Department spokeswoman Joyce Jackson said. Two of the inmates had been called before correctional officers in a disciplinary hearing earlier in the day, administration officer Henry Hutcherson said, although officials weren't sure exactly what sparked the uprising.

The inmates, who hadn't been identified Sunday night, were armed with a small metal pipe, homemade knives and plastic spoons with razor blades imbedded in them, Hutcherson said.

In the takeover attempt, which took place during an exercise period when all the other prisoners were outside the unit, the inmates set fire to some mattresses, causing some smoke damage, Ms. Jackson said.

Warden John Brown

Brown, 61, was on the grounds when an officer came running to tell him what had happened, officials said. He grabbed a shotgun and a pistol, and, accompanied by a guard, went inside the cellblock.

"I noticed that one of the inmates was trying to beat out a window, and there were fires in the cellblocks," he said. "I couldn't really see in because there was smoke...so I opened the cell door, fired one round in the ceiling, yelled 'Freeze' and demanded that they release the hostages," which they did.

Ms. Jackson said the situation was under control within an hour, and the six inmates were put in the prison's disciplinary unit.

Brown, who was a consultant to the California Corrections Department before coming to McAlester four months ago, said he didn't deem his actions heroic. "You just do what you have to do," he said.

The McAlester prison has received an influx of inmates after two recent disturbances at other Oklahoma corrections facilities.

Legislators ready to vent outrage

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislators are eagerly lining up to vent their anger at the Soviet Union for shooting down a South Korean jetliner and air their concerns about the continued presence of U.S. Marines in Lebanon as Congress gets back to work after a five-week recess.

Anxieties about record budget deficits and a crowded agenda of fiscal and domestic issues, including a list of money bills that require action before the Oct. 1 start of the new fiscal year, also faced members of the House and Senate gearing up today for a final legislative burst before the coming election year.

But the focus early this week will be on the Soviet Union and one of its fighters which, on Sept. 1, destroyed a South Korean jumbo jet carrying 269 people, including 61 Americans. Among the passengers was Rep. Larry McDonald, D-Ga.

"Rhetoric is the most important thing we can do sometimes and our words, in this case, are our real instrument of retaliation," Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said Sunday. "People (legislators) will be vying for the opportunity to be indignant, and they should."

Early business also included eulogies today for McDonald and Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., who had 42 years' experience in Congress and died of a ruptured coronary artery at his home in Everett, Wash., a few hours after denouncing the Soviet attack at a news conference.

Dan Evans, former Republican governor of Washington, was to be sworn in today as Jackson's successor. Evans was appointed by the state's GOP governor, John Spellman, to serve until a special election Nov. 8 in which Evans will be a candidate.

Baker, speaking on CBS' "Face the Nation," also said a bipartisan "statement of outrage and indignation against barbaric actions by the Soviet Union" would be introduced in the Senate and voted on Wednesday. A House vote also is expected this week.

Attention will be given to the lack of say from Congress in the deployment of 1,200 U.S. Marines in Lebanon and their recent casualties resulting from the continued civil war between religious factions there.

Some lawmakers have said President Reagan has failed to comply with the spirit of the 1973 War Powers Act that would limit the stay of the Marines to a maximum of 90 days — an initial 60 days and a possible 30-day extension — unless Congress approved.

Reagan's allies in the Republican-controlled Senate are preparing legislation that would approve the presence of U.S. troops in Lebanon without making an issue of the War Powers Act. Reagan has sought to avoid a long congressional debate on U.S. involvement in Lebanon, arguing that the Marines are there in a defensive role as part of a peacekeeping force and are not engaged in combat.

Baker, who is expected to introduce the legislation approving the presence of the Marines said, "In my opinion, it comes down to a question of whether or not we cut loose from that area or we resolve to do whatever is necessary to preserve the security and sovereignty of the state of Lebanon."

Democratic leaders in the House and Senate, though, have indicated they want the debate to take place under the War Powers Act.

"I don't think there's any question but that the War Powers Act should be invoked. It is the law of the land...The Congress should be brought more into the process to keep us from going overboard," Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said Sunday on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley."

Byrd added that he has told Reagan personally that if the War Powers Act is invoked, "you're going to get support as of now for what you're doing. The rug isn't going to be pulled out from under you."

Meanwhile, Congress is returning to face a persistent legislative gridlock with the White House over how to reduce budget deficits.

Before the recess, Congress postponed from July 22 to Sept. 23 the deadlines it had set for itself to achieve budget savings called for in the budget blueprint enacted earlier this year.

Teachers in St. Louis refuse to end strike

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Denying school board charges that they have "abandoned" their jobs, the city's striking teachers are standing firm in the face of a back-to-work order and today's threatened mass firings, a union leader said.

"I don't think anyone is going back to work," said Evelyn Battle White, president of American Federation of Teachers Local 420, after a rally Sunday by the union in the nation's largest school strike.

"From all indications, the strike will still be on tomorrow," said a teacher who asked not to be identified.

St. Louis school officials warned striking teachers last week that unless they returned to work today, they would be fired and replaced.

Although teachers' strikes are illegal in Missouri, 2,000 instructors remained on the picket lines Friday, and only 19,986 of the district's 56,500 students showed up for class. The strike also has hampered a court-approved desegregation plan.

Some politicians, civic leaders and labor leaders voiced support for the teachers at the rally Sunday night. A union spokesman estimated 1,500 of the district's 3,400 teachers attended.

At the gathering, strikers signed a letter to the school board aimed at countering claims that they abandoned their jobs by walking out when classes opened Wednesday.

"This is to notify you that I am unable to work because of current conditions. I have not abandoned my position with the St. Louis Board of Education. I will return as soon as conditions permit," the letter read.

Mrs. White said she would seek a court order to block any firings. A federal court hearing was scheduled today to determine whether a back-to-work order should be dissolved.

"The issues facing the union are life and death issues," Mrs. White said. If School Superintendent Jerome B. Jones "actually sends me something in writing saying I'm fired, then he's in court."

Common Cause wants to stem 'rivers of cash'

WASHINGTON (AP) — With 1984 election campaigns already gearing up, a public interest lobbying group is mounting a nationwide offensive to limit the influence of political action committees in congressional races.

Common Cause has declared October "People Against PACS" month.

"Alarming. Outrageous. Downright dangerous...Money. Money. Money. Behind the 1982 election returns were rivers of PAC cash," begins a direct-mail appeal by Common Cause President Fred Wertheimer.

"Congressional dependence on PACs has grown so much that PACs, not constituents, are becoming the focus of a representative's attention," Wertheimer continues. "This democracy-threatening trend must be stopped."

He marshals statistics. More than 3,400 PACs contributed $86 million to House and Senate candidates last year. That's seven times more than the $12.5 million spent by 608 PACs in 1974. And the trend could lead to $500 million in PAC spending on federal campaigns by 1992.

He cites examples. The National Rifle Association PAC gave $85,000 to members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which approved a bill making it easier to buy and sell firearms. And 83 percent of the House members voting to kill a used car consumer protection regulation received campaign money from the rule's leading opponent — the National Automobile Dealers Association.

At least one study of the used car issue has concluded there is a link between PAC contributions and voting records.

Utah mother ends strike against family

SOUTH SALT LAKE, Utah (AP) — Susan Davis has reached a contract settlement with her children, ending a three-day strike to force the kids into better behavior.

Missy, 8, came to terms Saturday night and Jamie, 9, and Steve, 6, signed the agreement Sunday in time for dinner, just before their father, South Salt Lake Mayor James W. Davis, had to fly to Washington. Davis acted as mediator in the dispute.

The children arrived home from school Thursday to find their mother carrying a picket sign.

Mrs. Davis said the children, the three oldest of her seven children, would have to make their own meals and do their own laundry "until they decide to shape up and accept my demands."

She said she ended the strike only after the three agreed in writing to do jobs when first asked, to be more cooperative and to have happy, positive attitudes.

Accused killer 'serene'

NATRONA HEIGHTS, Pa. (AP) — A heavily armed man accused of killing two teen-agers and wounding three other people at a neighbor's family reunion was "serene" when taken into custody, police said.

David Zewe, 31, opened fire Saturday evening for no apparent reason from his patio in this quiet Pittsburgh suburb, police said Sunday.

"He was very serene" when arrested, said Harrison Township Patrolman Joel Sowinski. "He was blank, no expression at all."

"He had one rifle over his shoulder and one rifle in his arms. He just dropped (them) very slowly. Then he opened his field jacket. That's when I saw the handle of the .45 automatic," Sowinski said.

Arraigned on two criminal homicide counts Sunday, Zewe was jailed without bond.

Coalinga shakes again

COALINGA, Calif. (AP) — The second tremor in three days caused no damage but resulted in scores of telephone calls to police in this farm town, devastated by a powerful earthquake on May 2.

The quake Sunday, centered 10 miles north of Coalinga, measured 4.2 on the Richter scale, according to a seismographic station of the University of California-Berkeley. It followed a tremor early Friday measuring 5 on the Richter scale.

Both tremors were described by seismologist Robert Uhrhammer as the latest in a series of aftershocks stemming from the quake in the spring that hurt 47 people and caused $30 million in damages.

Indian satellite OK

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — An Indian satellite, launched from the space shuttle Challenger, is "where it's supposed to be" and should start operating on schedule Oct. 15, a spokesman says.

A solar power gear which had been jammed opened Saturday after frozen hinges of the satellite were warmed by the sun, said William Sheehan, a Ford Motor Co. spokesman. Ford Aerospace built the craft.

"The craft is now where it's supposed to be in the sequence," Sheehan said. "They still have to do communications testing."

The 2,625-pound satellite, some 22,300 miles above the Earth, is expected to provide round-the clock weather data and thousands of channels for the overloaded Indian telephone system.

Some Austrian Tyroleans, attending the open-air Mass held by Pope John Paul II Sunday morning in a huge park near the Danube River in Vienna, protect themselves from the rain with huge pieces of cardboard. The cardboards were originally used as seats for the crowds.

John Paul II's actions give lie to his words

An Analysis

By KEVIN COSTELLOE

VIENNA (AP) — Pope John Paul II, criticized as "Wojtyla the politician" by Austria's leftist youth, contends that his church is above politics but still has taken sides on a number of sensitive political issues.

Right from the start of his four-day Austrian visit, the pope reiterated his condemnation of abortion, urged sincere diplomacy between the superpowers and called for respect for human rights, always a sensitive issue in this refuge for immigrants from communist countries less than 40 miles to the north and east.

John Paul's trip to this neutral country highlights his tactic of trying to influence the actions of world leaders while calling on Roman Catholic priests to stay out of day-to-day political affairs.

The strategy of the former Cardinal Karol Wojtyla of Krakow, Poland, has aroused controversy within the church and sparked criticism from leftist political movements and the Soviet bloc.

John Paul, who arrived Saturday, has indicated he knows the impact of his pronouncements.

"It is the mission of the church to perform a religious and spiritual task in this world, not a political one," John Paul said Sunday.

But he quickly noted the church also is dedicated to promoting "the rights of man."

"The church respects the responsibility of the state, without interfering with its political tasks," the Roman Catholic pontiff told a reception held by Austrian President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger.

"Thus, it derives even greater authority to bear the banner of true freedom, the banner of the inalienable rights of man, of their dignity and divine mission," John Paul added.

Nonetheless, in his first two days in Austria John Paul has:

—Issued an appeal for the superpowers to negotiate for lasting peace in good faith, denouncing "deceitful cunning, falsehood and intrigue" in international affairs.

—Twice blasted legalized abortion, saying it "erodes the very foundations on which our society rests."

—Addressed a special call for Eastern European nations to heed the respect for basic human rights based, he said, on the teachings of Jesus Christ.

—Said "sweeping changes in the world economic system" may be needed to cure what he called the widening gap between the world's rich and poor.

Vienna's Young Socialists object to what they see as the pope's overly conservative stand regarding such areas as Latin America. They organized an alternative assembly that originally was called an "anti-pope festival."

The pontiff's strongest political message could come Tuesday when he visits the tomb of Hungarian Cardinal Jozsef Mindszenty, who during the 1950s became a worldwide symbol of staunch anti-communism when he took refuge in the U.S. diplomatic legation in Budapest and stayed there for 15 years.

West German police called in to remove anti-nuclear protesters

MUTLANGEN, West Germany (AP) — German police today removed 26 anti-nuclear protesters from a field outside a U.S. Army missile depot after the military requested the area be cleared, German authorities said.

The protesters, who had camped at the site since Sept. 1, did not resist when they were taken away for identity checks, a German police spokesman said.

They removed tents, huts and a wooden tower on advice of the police before the eviction.

"There was no wrangling or cursing. The persons involved allowed themselves to be carried away peacefully," the spokesman said.

Police were called in when the U.S. Army reimposed restrictions on land adjacent to the Mutlangen base, which is used as a maintenance area for trucks that transport mobile Pershing 1 nuclear missiles

The depot, which is surrounded by wire, was blockaded by several thousand demonstrators Sept. 1-3 to protest plans to deploy new Pershing-2 nuclear missiles in West Germany.

The demonstrators said the missiles will be deployed at Mutlangen and other U.S. bases in south Germany.

Cowboys rally again; Beat Cards 34-17

AP Laserphoto

St. Louis wide receiver Pat Tilley runs for a nine-yard gain after catching a pass from Jim Hart, carrying it to the two before Dallas Cowboys Anthony Dickerson (left) and Harvey Martin (middle) haul him down. The catch set up a first quarter field goal.

Springs' TD starts comeback

ST. LOUIS (AP) — At first the Dallas Cowboys pretended again they wanted to be their own worst enemies, but this time quarterback Danny White sensed a difference.

"It was almost scary. It was so similar to the Washington game, except Washington dominated us," said White following the National Football League team's 34-17 triumph Sunday over the St. Louis Cardinals. "Today, it was our fault. Today, we knew we would come back."

Dallas, which rallied from a 23-3 halftime deficit before prevailing 31-30 over the Redskins in its opener last Monday night, this time revived earlier after lagging 10-0.

Ron Springs' first of two touchdown runs launched a Cowboys offensive comeback in the second quarter. Meanwhile, four interceptions of Jim Hart passes bottled up the St. Louis attack. And the winning team, while improving its record to 2-0, coasted after building a 31-10 lead in the closing period.

"Every one played very poor in the first quarter," said Cowboys Coach Tom Landry, who at the afternoon's end was breathing more easily on his 59th birthday.

"I don't know why, but we came on in the second quarter and played very well. We were very tired all week — the hot weather and coming off the Monday night game," said Landry. "Our offense is coming along, and our defense is coming along. The kicking game is the worst part."

AT THE outset, to be sure, a pair of lengthy returns by Stump Mitchell were most responsible for placing Dallas in a hole.

The third-year Cards back first hauled a John Warren punt 16 yards to the Cowboys' 39, setting up Hart's scoring bomb to Roy Green on the next play. Not long afterward, following a 28-yard Mitchell return to the 43, it became 10-0 on Neil O'Donoghue's field goal from the Dallas 13.

White, who completed 19 of 27 passes, zipped a 19-yard bullseye to Tony Hill to set up Springs' first touchdown, a plunge from St. Louis 1, but a turnaround lingered late into the opening half.

Still trailing 10-7, the Cowboys moved ahead on White's 10-yard flip to Drew Pearson. Only 19 seconds later, Dallas made it 17-10 when Everson Walls pilfered a Hart pass and Rafael Septien booted a 45-yard field goal.

In contrast to the opportunism of the Cowboys, the Cards failed to capitalize early in the third quarter on Bubba Baker's recovery of a Tony Dorsett fumble and 9-yard return to the Dallas 14.

Dennis Thurman spoiled the bid three plays later by picking off another of Hart's passes in the end zone. Scrimmaging from their 20, the Cowboys swept to a touchdown on Springs' run of 19 yards and later made it 31-10 on still another interception.

"One was tipped, and two others I thought were fine plays by their defense," the 39-year-old Hart said of the passes stolen by Dallas defenders.

The final, by Bill Bates, hurt the worst. He picked it off at the St. Louis 34. When he fumbled into the end zone, teammate Thurman won the battle for the ball. The best the Cards could do afterward was assemble a 34-yard scoring drive ignited by the elusive Mitchell's kickoff return of 66 yards.

IN ADDITION to the interceptions, Hart was sacked five times in the final half by the winning team's defenses.

"That's part of football; it's fun to get knocked down," said Hart, who nonetheless completed 22 passes for 295 yards. "The gloom of another loss, this is the part that's not fun. I think you have to give credit to the Cowboys; they shut us down."

St. Louis, while absorbing a second setback in as many weeks, suffered most through its inability to generate an offense compiling more than 53 yards on the ground.

"We didn't think we were going to have a particularly big running day against Dallas," St. Louis Coach Jim Hanifan said. "There were just too many mistakes. I think our team is a team that really hasn't jelled."

Raiders hand injury-plagued Oilers 20-6 defeat

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In a week's time, the Houston Oilers went from 498 yards in total offense to 223 and from 38 points to 6. Granted, they were without some key players, but that was only part of the story.

"We were at a disadvantage without (running back) Earl Campbell, (wide receiver) Tim Smith and (tight end) Dave Casper," said Houston quarterback Archie Manning, referring to three injured teammates, after the Oilers were beaten 20-6 by the Los Angeles Raiders. "But saying that takes something away from the Raiders."

Manning passed for 348 yards and wasn't sacked once during Houston's 41-38 overtime loss to Green Bay in a National Football League regular-season opener on Sept. 4. At the Los Angeles Coliseum on Sunday, he completed only six of 19 throws for 107 yards and was sacked five times.

"We can't make any excuses," said Manning. "They played real good defense. They put a lot of pressure on the passer. We wanted to stay out of long-yardage situations. We knew we had to do that to be successful.

"Our defense gave us so many opportunities, but we couldn't do anything on offense. We were totally inept."

MANNING WAS just about right. Houston's only points came on a pair of field goals by Florian Kempf. The Oilers managed only seven first downs to 26 for the Raiders, who finished with 386 yards in total offense.

Four times, the Oilers had the ball in Los Angeles territory following turnovers by the Raiders; once at the 46, then at the 30, then at the 24 and finally at the 12 with 4½ minutes to play following a 44-yard interception return by Willie Tullis.

Houston's total output resulting from the four turnovers and good field position? Zero.

"I thought we played hard today," said Coach Tom Flores of the Raiders, whose team is 2-0. "I thought we were a little bit flat. But we did move the ball.

"One thing I was worried about was giving them many scoring opportunities with our turnovers, but our defense did a good job creating some of their turnovers. I think our pass rush really kept Manning off balance, and offensively, I thought we played well."

The Raiders went ahead for good on their first possession, marching 49 yards on nine plays after a Houston punt. Kenny King capped the drive by scoring on a 2-yard plunge. Chris Bahr, who later would miss three field goal attempts, was unsuccessful on the conversion.

LOS ANGELES made it 13-0 with 1:12 remaining before halftime on a 10-yard TD run by Greg Pruitt, which capped an 80-yard, eight-play drive.

The Oilers got their first field goal by Kempf, a 40-yarder, just 35 seconds later. The three-pointer came shortly after rookie Larry Moriarty broke loose for an 80-yard run on a draw play, moving the ball from the Houston 7-yard line to the Los Angeles 13.

Kempf booted a 38-yarder with 1:57 remaining in the third period to make it 13-6. The score came shortly after Bill Kay blocked a 41-yard field goal try by Bahr. The ball bounced into Los Angeles territory and Houston took possession at the Raiders' 36.

Los Angeles responded to Kempf's second field goal with another 80-yard, eight-play scoring march to complete the scoring. Todd Christensen got the touchdown on a 2-yard pass from quarterback Jim Plunkett in the opening minute of the fourth quarter.

Plunkett finished the day with 19 completions in 28 attempts for 229 yards. Second-year running back Marcus Allen of the Raiders led all rushers with 96 yards on 17 carries.

Jimmy Connors back hands the ball back to Ivan Lendl during Sunday's U.S. Open singles championship match.

Connors wins U.S. Open

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Jimmy Connors was on the ropes, like a boxer trying to roll with the punches.

His stomach was upset, his toe was hurting, the heat was oppressive and Ivan Lendl was serving rockets at him. This clearly was not a very good situation for the defending U.S. Open Tennis champion.

Connors and Lendl had split the first two sets of the men's singles final Sunday, but the tide was rolling the Czech's way in the third one. After losing the first set 3-6, he had salvaged the second, 7-6, winning the tiebreaker 7-2. Lendl had a 5-4 lead in the third and was serving for the set. One more game and he would be just one set away from his first grand slam victory.

It never happened.

Inexplicably, Lendl committed a double fault. Like a balloon that suddenly springs a leak, all of the air seeped out of the steely-eyed Czech. Connors suddenly had the opening he needed and the 31-year-old didn't miss it.

"WHEN HE double faulted on set point, I said, 'Well, if he's going to do that, he's going to give me a chance,'" said Connors.

It was an invitation to take back the match and Lendl didn't have to ask Jimmy twice.

"I started getting in there and jumping on my returns more," Connors said. "I hit them more solid and started doing something with them instead of playing him back."

Connors won that game and the next one, taking the set that he had been just a Lendl serve away from losing, 7-5.

"My spirits lifted about 50 or 60 percent and I think his dropped a little from that point," Connors noted. "He played a pretty awful game to lose the set. He missed three or four balls for no reason."

Connors' insight was on target. The double fault had taken its toll on Lendl.

"I never really recovered from having set point and double faulting," he said. "If you make a mistake like that, you really don't deserve to win."

No problem there. He didn't win. Connors came out roaring in the fourth set, breaking Lendl's service in the second game.

"I tried to jump on everything and get on top right away," said Connors, who now had his fifth U.S. Open title and the 100th singles championship of his brilliant career in sight.

Fernando's new silhouette worries his fans

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

All right, Miss Dark Eyes, take a letter to Fernando Valenzuela, the pitching person. Mark it "Impersonal" and "Unconfidential" and "May be opened by postmaster."

Dear Fernando,

I notice in the public prints that a lot of people in the community are alarmed over your new silhouette on the pitcher's mound and are afraid you are our newest anorexic.

Your weight loss has shaken up the foremost dietitians of our time, the baseball writers. It's bad for you, as reflected in your win-loss record, they say. Go back to your burritos, tacos, cerveza, is their advice.

Pick up on the pie a la mode again, chili, hamburger to go, hot dog with everything. Have seconds on the hot fudge. Stock up on the Cokes, the Hershey bars and try waffles with syrup for breakfast. Get fat again. Your uniform won't fit, but maybe the screwball will come back.

WELL, FERNANDO, there are not many things I'm a certified expert on, but weight loss is one of them. Lord knows I've lost more than a thousand pounds in my time, give or take a hundred. I've been on more diets than a chorus line. It's easy being fat. It's hard work being thin. But I don't know of a single thing a fat person can do better than a thin one and that includes throwing the screwball.

When you came up to the big leagues in 1980, it was obvious to anyone you were too fat for a 19-year-old. In fact, you were too fat for a 49-year-old. But, when you struck out everybody, the community shrugged. So what? Babe Ruth was fat, too, wasn't he?

Well, not at 19, he wasn't.

But, if you're afraid slimness will lose you the hop on your fast ball, the break on the scroogie, I'd like to tell you a story.

ONCE UPON a time, in golf in this country, there was this little fat kid who hit the golf ball a half mile past everybody else. He played a game nobody had ever seen before, one nobody could believe. Jack William Nicklaus won every tournament there was. Or he finished second.

Only he was so fat, he looked like he got his clothes in an awning shop. You covered your eyes watching him beat Arnold Palmer. It was like Sydney Greenstreet getting the girl in films. The public hated it. TV hated it.

So, finally, did Jack Nicklaus. He just got tired of being the bad guy, Fat Jack, Porky Pro. St. Nicklaus instead of Jack Nicklaus.

As he tells it: "I was coming home from the Ryder Cup in England in 1969 when I noticed for the first time in my life I had gotten tired playing a round of golf. I knew what the trouble was. My doctor had told me that when the time came to lose weight I would know it. I knew it. I decided to drop 20 pounds."

Jack Nicklaus lost 20 pounds in a month, with Weight Watchers. Then, he lost 15 more. "I lost six inches around the hips, 1½ around my waist — and 35 yards on my drives," he says.

IT WAS kind of scary, Fernando. Jack was messing with a million-dollar corporation. "I lost about a yard a pound," he admits now. "You get a lot of your power with your backside because you drive a golf ball — or pitch a baseball — with your legs, your butt."

A lot of people, Fernando, thought Jack had sacrificed a once-in-a-generation, God-given talent in the interest of looking good in slacks. They questioned his wisdom. He suddenly looked like Lochinvar, but he might play like a locksmith.

Well, Fernando, Jack Nicklaus won 39 of the 69 tournaments he won on the tour after his weight loss. He won 10 of his 19 majors. He won $3 million of the $4 million he has piled up.

"When I came off the diet, I won the Sahara, the Kaiser and finished second in the Hawaiian in the next three tournaments I played," he recalls.

IN ADDITION to that, Fernando, Nicklaus thinks he would be long gone on the tour today if it weren't for that diet. "It's added 10 years to my career," he told me on the phone the other day. "Fernando won't be saving his career (by getting fat), he'll be shortening it."

So, Jack considered obesity just another par-5 over water with trouble in the back. "I consider it the most important victory of my life," says the man who won five Masters, five PGAs, four U.S. Opens, three British Opens and two Amateurs.

"At first, you lose some power," he says. "There's no question, when you lose fat, you lose some muscle, too. But, you build it up. If you believe your weight loss will hurt you, then it will. If you believe it won't - and it won't - it won't."

Has it become any easier for Jack Nicklaus? "I fight weight gain every day of my life. So do you," he says.

He needn't have added that, just because I woke him out of a sound sleep. But the point is, Fernando, there's a life outside of baseball. Even if obesity were good for one, it isn't good for the other, Nicklaus points out.

If you can manage to eat blindfolded, Fernando, I can tell you from personal experience, it's easier. Some time ago, unable to see, my appetite fell off precipitately. I didn't know why till my daughter explained it. "The attraction of food is largely visual," she pointed out. "If you don't see it, you won't be tempted to eat it." In other words, Fernando, if you can't see the whipped cream with the nuts and cherry on top, you won't drool for it.

If you can't smell it, that's even better. But, since I assume you need all your senses to pitch to the Atlanta Braves, I think you might better follow Jack Nicklaus' advice.

There's nothing in a plate of lasagna or Oysters Rockefeller that will help you get Dale Murphy out on strikes. And you'll look lousy in double-knits. Or a tuxedo. Hasta luego.

Baltimore fans boo Elway out of game

By The Associated Press

John Elway came "home" to Baltimore and was literally driven from the game by the boos and catcalls that Colt fans had promised him. But it was Elway's backup Steve DeBerg and the Denver Broncos who had the last laugh.

Elway, picked No.1 by the Colts in the National Football League draft, then traded to Denver after saying he wouldn't play in Baltimore, started Sunday but was lifted in the third quarter after being driven to distraction by crowd noise. He was replaced by DeBerg, who engineered the two touchdowns that gave the Broncos a 17-10 win.

"I made the change strictly because we couldn't get the plays off," Denver Coach Dan Reeves said of the din from the 52,613 who booed and chanted obscenities. "The crowd was very involved and every time we didn't get one off, they got more fired up.

"I've never heard anything like that. It was unreal."

The win put Denver at 2-0, one of only six undefeated teams in the NFL after two weeks of action. The Colts dropped to 1-1, one of 16 teams with that record, including 10 of 14 in the NFC.

When Elway, who said he expected the din, left the game in Baltimore, he had completed nine of 21 passes for 106 yards and the score was tied 3-3. Baltimore went ahead 10-3 with 11:45 left in the game when Larry Anderson returned Rick Parros' fumble 41 yards for a touchdown.

But DeBerg, who completed nine of 11 for 158 yards, hit Steve Watson with a 24-yard pass to tie it with 5:55 left, then scampered over from 2 yards out with 29 seconds left to win it.

Pittsburgh 25, Green Bay 21

The Steelers, 1-1, rushed for 285 yards against the Packers, 1-1, as Harris led the way with 118 yards on 22 carries, the 43rd 100-yard game of his career. That moved his career yardage to 11,088, only 148 yards behind O.J. Simpson's 11,236, second on the all-time list.

"We had just four healthy defensive linemen and we were committed to keeping them off the field as much as possible," said Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll. "We were forced into this by circumstance."

Seahawks 17, Jets 10

Seattle's victory was the product of seven Jet turnovers — four fumbles and three interceptions — and rookie Curt Warner's 128 yards in 25 carries and two touchdowns.

"It was a typical Seattle game," said Jet Coach Joe Walton. "You can't play winning football by turning the ball over that many times."

Redskins 23, Eagles 13

John Riggins gained 100 yards on 27 carries, including a 14-yard touchdown run early in the fourth quarter that snapped a 10-10 tie. It was Washington's eighth straight road victory.

Mark Moseley kicked field goals of 36, 24 and 23 yards and Joe Theismann completed 15 of 26 passes for 142 yards and one touchdown.

Giants 16, Falcons 13

Rob Carpenter picked up 111 yards in 28 carries, his second 100-yard game in a row. But Al Richardson's interception of a Scott Brunner pass set up Steve Bartkowski's 6-yard scoring pass to Alfred Jackson that tied it at 13-13 with 3:36 left in regulation.

New York's Mike Dennis, however, returned the overtime kickoff 54 yards to the Atlanta 41 and rookie Ali Haji-Sheikh booted a 30-yarder to win it, his third field goal of the game.

Rams 30, Saints 17

Rookie Eric Dickerson scored his third touchdown on a 3-yard run with 1:22 left as the Rams ran their record to 2-0 and dropped New Orleans to 1-1.

The score culminated a 60-yard drive after Saints punter Russell Erxleben took a safety with his team leading 27-21 rather than risk a punt from his end zone.

Dolphins 34, Patriots 24

David Woodley, held to just 40 yards last week, led Miami, 2-0, by passing for 218 yards and two touchdowns, including a 64-yarder to Duriel Harris. Andra Franklin had touchdown runs of 6 and 7 yards and Uwe von Schamann booted two field goals.

New England fell to 0-2.

Bills 10, Bengals 6

A swarming Atlanta defense that hasn't allowed a touchdown in two weeks stopped Cincinatti on four plays from the 4-yard line in the final quarter.

Joe Ferguson's 14-yard touchdown pass to Jerry Butler was the only touchdown of a game dominated by defense. The Bills are 1-1; the Bengals 0-2.

Browns 31, Lions 26

Mike Pruitt rushed for 137 yards and Brian Sipe threw four touchdown passes and completed 18 of 29 passes for 234 yards for the Browns, 1-1. The Lions are also 1-1.

Bears 17, Bucs 10

Terry Schmidt's 32-yard return in the fourth quarter with an interception of a Jerry Golsteyn pass gave the Bears their victory and a 1-1 record as Tampa Bay fell to 0-2.

Carner sinks sudden death winner

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — JoAnne Carner was alone in the lead only once in the $150,000 Portland Ping LPGA golf tournament.

That was when she sank a 35-foot birdie putt on the first playoff hole Sunday to defeat Charlotte Montgomery and capture the $22,500 first prize.

Long putts aren't supposed to win in sudden-death playoffs, Carner said. Golfers are supposed to play cautiously, trying for pars and waiting for the other player to make a mistake.

"You only go for a birdie when it's inside 15 feet," said Carner, a veteran of 14 such playoffs in her 13-year professional career. "Other than that you lag it (and go for par)."

"I lagged it very well," she said.

Carner, a winner for the second time this year and 39th time in her LPGA career, said she had trouble throughout the first few rounds with her putting and her husband stayed awake all Saturday night trying to find out why.

He concluded it must be the pressure points on her putting grip. She said she made the adjustment and had only one bogey on the final round.

Meanwhile, she had a 25-foot birdie putt to go with her winning 35-footer.

Montgomery, who never had finished higher than sixth before Sunday, felt a mixture of disappointment and encouragement.

"We certainly could use her down at the bank!"

Lea claims eighth straight victory

Expos remain atop East with win over Mets, 4-0

By The Associated Press

Charlie Lea pitched a six-hitter for his eighth straight victory, an Expos record, as Montreal beat the New York Mets 4-0 Sunday to remain atop the National League East.

Tim Wallach's two-run double capped a three-run fourth inning for Montreal, which leads the division by .003 percentage points. Philadelphia stayed in second with a 5-3 decision over Pittsburgh, which fell two games back. St. Louis, which edged Chicago 2-1, is third, 1½ games behind the Expos.

Montreal posted its best record ever on a homestand, going 12-4, bettering the 11 victories managed in a homestand in June 1980.

Lea, 15-8, broke David Palmer's 1979 record for consecutive victories for a starting pitcher in tossing his fourth shutout this season, one fewer than teammate Steve Rogers, the league leader. It was the seventh complete game for Lea.

Major League Baseball

The Phillies rallied for two seventh-inning runs on pinch-hitter Sixto Lezcano's line drive single and right fielder Dave Parker's error on the play.

Willie McGee's two-out single in the ninth drove in Lonnie Smith from second base to lift the Cardinals over the Cubs.

R. J. Reynolds' squeeze bunt capped a four-run ninth-inning rally as Los Angeles beat Atlanta 7-6 to grab a three-game lead in the NL West.

ATLEE HAMMAKER struck out a league high 14 batters and pinch-hitters Dave Bergman and Tom O'Malley came through with key hits in the ninth inning to give San Francisco a 3-2 victory over Houston. Nolan Ryan struck out 11 for Houston.

Paul Householder homered and doubled and Cincinnati held on to beat San Diego 4-2.

In the American League, Willie Upshaw's first major league grand slam paced Toronto's offensive explosion in a 16-6 rout of Oakland. Jesse Barfield collected three hits and drove in three runs with a solo homer and a triple.

Todd Cruz and Rick Dempsey each drove in two runs during a five-run second inning as Baltimore downed New York 5-3, preserving the Orioles' 5½-game AL East lead.

Enos Cabell capped a three-run Detroit fifth with a two-run single and the Tigers held on for a 6-4 victory over Milwaukee to keep within 5½ games of the Orioles.

JIM RICE'S unusual two-run sacrifice fly — which turned into a double play —helped Boston beat Cleveland 4-1. With the bases loaded in the seventh, Rice lifted a fly ball to left-center field. Left fielder Alan Bannister, who made the catch, collided with center fielder Gorman Thomas. With the two outfielders lying on the ground, two runners scored, but Wade Boggs was thrown out going for third base.

Willie Aikens drilled a two-run homer with two out in the ninth to give Kansas City a 3-1 victory over Minnesota as reliever Dan Quisenberry picked up his 38th save, tying the all-time major-league record.

Right-hander Dave Stewart scattered five hits over 7 2-3 innings as Texas edged Seattle 2-1.

In a late game, Harold Baines lined a game-winning RBI single in the 10th inning to make LaMarr Hoyt the first 20-game winner in the majors with a 5-4 decision. Hoyt became the first American League pitcher to win 20 games in almost three years.

Battery tossed at Parker

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A radio battery was thrown at Pittsburgh outfielder Dave Parker for the second time in his career Sunday during the Pirates' 5-3 loss to the Philadelphia Phillies.

The battery sailed out of the right field stands as Parker warmed up for the start of the eighth inning, minutes after he had committed a key error during the Phillies' two-run seventh inning and then grounded out to end the Pirates half of the inning.

But unlike a similar battery-throwing incident on July 20, 1980, when Parker took himself out of a game against the Los Angeles Dodgers, he remained in the game after showing the small battery to first-base umpire Dutch Rennert.

Rennert said Parker at first acted as if he was going to leave the game, then suddenly appeared to change his mind.

Lye birdies for first PGA tour victory

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — As he stood over his ball five feet from the hole on the 72nd hole, Mark Lye thought "this was the most important putt of my life."

Although his nerves were "jittery and my hands were shaking," he sank the putt Sunday for a birdie that lifted him to his first victory in seven years on the PGA golf tour.

"Oh, man, it's unbelievable," Lye, 30, said after he staged the year's biggest comeback to win the $350,000 Bank of Boston Classic at steamy and windswept Pleasant Valley Country Club..

The veteran rallied from eight strokes back with a sizzling 7-under par 64, one stroke off the course record, for a 72-hole score of 273.

That gave him a a one-stroke victory over John Mahaffey, who started the day with a three-stroke lead at 201, Jim Thorpe and Sammy Rachels.

"It has been a long dry spell," Lye said as he poured warm champagne into a cup of ice. "I haven't had any of this stuff for eight years and this is something I've been waiting for."

LYE, WHO is a diabetic and eats snacks four times during a round, started at 4-under after 54 holes. Then, after carding eight birdies and a lone bogey, he had to sweat it out for more than an hour before claiming victory.

"I've certainly knocked on the door enough times but I haven't won, mainly because I was scared or something," he said.

"In the past, I almost tried to back in. Today I got pumped up and took it to them. I didn't let up. I was so psyched up that I put a 2-iron shot from 240 yards over the green on the last hole. Then I had to chip back and sink the big putt."

Lye fashioned eight birdies and one bogey in defeating Mahaffey, Thorpe and Rachels by one stroke.

Aussies could take Cup away

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — The winds of change have blown here all summer long. Now the winds on Rhode Island Sound figure to make the ultimate change — the first America's Cup triumph by a foreigner — more likely.

Light to moderate winds, the kind Australia II sails best in, were expected for Tuesday's start of the America's Cup best-of-seven finals between the Aussie powerhouse and U.S. defender Liberty.

Those conditions are even more likely Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, meteorologist Tony Mignone if the Newport Weather Center said Sunday.

The change that kicked up the biggest waves at the triennial event was Australia II's innovative winged keel. At first, the Americans claimed that made the boat more than a 12-meter yacht and, therefore, ineligible to sail for the America's Cup. The protest was dropped later.

Both boats do well in all winds, but during a summer of trials with six other foreign contenders in which it posted an impressive 48-6 record, Australia II excelled in the kinds of breezes forecast for most of this week.

MIGNONE ADMITTED that it was difficult to forecast Tuesday's conditions, but said strong 15-20 knot winds in the morning should taper off as race time approaches.

The 24.3-mile races eight miles out on Rhode Island Sound can start as early as 12:10 p.m. but no later than 2:10 p.m.

Skipper Dennis Conner, winner of the last Cup competition in 1980 with Freedom, leads the United States' 25th defense of the prize that it won in the first race in 1851 and has held ever since.

But the exceptionally maneuverable Australian yacht, with its mysterious keel that is kept covered by plastic when the boat is hauled out of the water, is seen by many as the most serious threat ever to the U.S. streak.

Mignone said a low pressure system moving across the area Tuesday could create changeable conditions that are difficult to predict. He added that a larger, more stable high pressure area will take over for the next three days, when more light to moderate winds, in the 10-to-15 knot range, are expected.

"If they (the Aussies) should take the first race they should be in pretty good shape...especially if there are heavy winds (Tuesday) and Australia does well," Mignone said. "There really wouldn't seem to be much hope for the American boat."

THE WEATHER center, the official weather station for the competition, provides wind information to competitors before races.

Lee Reb volleyball takes third

Midland Lee's volleyball team swept to a third place finish over the weekend at the Seminole Tournament.

The Rebels got things rolling with a first round win over Pampa, 8-15, 15-6, 15-12. The Rebs came back from a first game loss to take the match, but saved some heroics for the second round.

Lee edged Denver City in the next round, 15-2, 7-15, 17-15 in a closely contested match.

That win put Lee up against Pecos. The Rebs lost the first game in a heartbreaker, 14-16, then edged Pecos 15-13 in the second before bowing 7-15 to surrender the match.

Lee met Ft. Stockton for the third place title, winning 12-15, 15-12, 15-6.

Hughes to buy Oncor from Tom Brown Inc.

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

Hughes Tool Co. has agreed in principle to acquire Oncor, the drilling equipment manufacturing subsidiary of Tom Brown Inc., for an undisclosed price.

The sale, which closes October 1, is subject to approval by appropriate governmental agencies and by the boards of Tom Brown and Hughes. The Tom Brown board meets Thursday.

"The deal is absolutely fantastic for everybody, not just us, but for Hughes," said Thomas C. Brown, chairman and CEO, this morning. "This has been in the mill for about six months and it seemed like the time was right from everybody's point of view."

Brown said Oncor, which makes drill collars, pipe, stabilizers and other drilling tools, has been a drag on the company for some time, although TMBR, the drilling subsidiary, has maintained positive cash flow.

Hughes will take all of Oncor's stock, patents, assets and debt, Brown said.

Proceeds from the Oncor sale will be used to step up Tom Brown Inc.'s drilling program, he said.

Apparently, Oncor has turned out to be an experiment that failed, as far as Tom Brown Inc. is concerned. The company will be separated from Tom Brown's oil and gas business because the two firms were not compatible, according to Oncor president William Chunn.

"Oncor's fit with Hughes is as near as you can get. We fill out their product line down hole," Chunn said. Last year, Oncor was involved in development and testing of a new downhole drill motor; initial commercial production was to get underway this year.

Brown said acquisition of Oncor will enable Hughes to compete more favorably with its competitors such as Smith International's Drilco unit.

Hughes' spokesmen in Houston declined to comment.

Analysts see the sale of Oncor as being a significantly positive move for Tom Brown Inc. At the company's annual meeting in August, Chunn admitted Oncor would continue to experience losses in fiscal 1984 and that the recovery in the oilfield service industry would be "agonizingly slow."

"This (sale) is more getting rid of something that's holding them back," said Joe Liberty of Rauscher Pierce Refsnes Inc. "It gets them back in the business they know best, drilling and exploring for oil and gas."

Tom Brown's common stock, traded over the counter, moved up about two dollars last week when rumors of the sale started to surface in the investment community. Trading was brisk this morning, with the ask price about $9.50 to $9.75.

The tool company, purchased in 1976 and organized as Oncor in 1978, had at first been a growing asset for Tom Brown. In 1978, Oncor purchased all of Reed Tool Company's drill collar manufacturing equipment and inventory, and embarked on an ambitious expansion program.

In fiscal 1980, Oncor had $10 million in revenues. By the end of fiscal 1982, that figure had jumped to $100 million, or almost half of Tom Brown Inc.'s earnings.

Early in 1982, the Tom Brown board decided the full potential of both companies would be best achieved by separating the two. Initially, the plan was to sell 100 percent of Oncor's stock to Tom Brown shareholders.

But Oncor was hard hit by the drilling service industry downturn in fiscal 1983. Sales slipped 64 percent, to $35.6 million (about a third of TBI's earnings) for fiscal 1983, which ended March 31.

The tool company has drained Tom Brown's earnings. The parent company lost $15.9 million in the year ended March 31.

Oncor is headquartered in Houston, with service and repair shops in Clinton, Okla., and Evanston, Wyo.

OIL & GAS

Gasoline will cheapen as demand tapers off

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The end of summer and of vacation driving will bring a decline in gasoline prices as demand tapers off, oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg says.

The average price of all gasoline grades dropped 0.2 of a cent per gallon in the two-week period ended Sept. 9 on a drop in wholesale prices of 0.46 of a cent a gallon, according to a nationwide survey of 17,500 gas stations published Sunday in the weekly Lundberg Letter.

He said the pressure of competition would force further reductions as the summer gasoline market dries up.

Lundberg said the wholesale price drop was not completely reflected at the pump because dealers continued to try to recover losses they've suffered since January.

Nonetheless, profit margins, which dealers rely on to meet operating expenses, have fallen from 11.47 cents a gallon to 9.5 cents this year, Lundberg noted.

A federal nickel-a-gallon tax imposed in April kept retail profits down, Lundberg said.

The overall average price for all grades of gas was $1.24.9 on Sept. 9, Lundberg said. The biggest drop-off was for self-serve regular leaded, which fell 0.29 of a cent a gallon to an average of $1.15.1.

Other prices and decreases were: self-serve unleaded, $1.22.2, down 0.26 of a cent; self-serve premium unleaded, $1.33.4, down 0.20 of a cent; full-service regular leaded, $1.31.7, down 0.03 of a cent; full-service unleaded, $1.37.8, down 0.06 of a cent, and full-service premium unleaded, $1.46.2, down 0.03 of a cent.

Lundberg said competition arising from discounts for cash instead of credit cards discounts "has been severe," holding the overall gas increase to 5.2 cents a gallon since January, from an average of $1.19.73 to $1.24.92.

W-1s: 12,320 filed in August

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas oil and gas drillers raced to the Railroad Commission in August to beat the Sept. 1 end of free drilling permits.

The commission reported Friday that 12,320 drilling applications were processed in August, when there was no charge for the application. As of Sept. 1, under a new state law, operators must pay a $100 application fee.

The fee proceeds will be used to plug abandoned wells and to enforce state pollution laws.

In July, 3,860 applications were processed.

In August 1982, 3,758 applications were submitted.

Soviet attack boosts space stock issues

Hearst News Service

Aerospace stocks as a group hit a period of listlessness a few weeks back as questions built up about the fate of the 1984 Defense Department budget in a year of record deficit spending. Then the Soviets "terminated" Korean Air Line's flight 007 and the rush was on.

"The market always reacts aggressively if not violently to dramatic news," said Gary Reich, securities analyst for Wertheim & Co., Inc., in New York.

"As far as I can tell they (aerospace stocks) went up across the board with no selectivity," said John Simon with Amdec Securities in Los Angeles. "They (brokers) must have figured the incident would be a good excuse for higher defense spending."

Said Eliot Fried at Shearson/American Express in New York: "For the stock market in general there was very little response, which sort of surprised me. But internally the development led to movement in the aerospace group which had been weak in the previous two weeks."

Within three market trading days following news that the Korean jet had been blasted out of the sky, the nation's fifth largest defense contractor, Lockheed Corp., experienced the largest gain of the group when its stock jumped 8 points from 106 to 114.

International economy improves

From Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — The International Monetary Fund, in a generally upbeat report citing "improved confidence" in the global economy, said Sunday that the "pressing task" now is to assure that the economic recovery under way in the United States and other nations can be sustained and spread to parts of the world still in recession.

But IMF officials, discussing the annual report, preliminary to a joint annual meeting here later this month with the World Bank, acknowledged that the outlook for the Third World remains "gloomy," and the report predicted that borrowing nations would find it tough going "for the next several years."

The IMF's rationale for a concentration on efforts to sustain the burgeoning economic recovery is that inflationary pressures and high interest rates have abated in major industrial nations. In the usually cautious tones of consensus documents, it also stressed the urgency of not causing inflation to reignite.

But the report warned that Third World countries facing almost $600 billion in international debts still will have major problems relating to inflation and must deal with protectionist schemes established by the richer countries.

Over the next several years, the report said, commercial bank loans are "likely to be at best moderate," and governmental aid bilaterally or through international institutions such as the IMF or World Bank is "likely to be quite modest in real terms."

The report suggested that big debtor nations in the Third World would be wise to try attracting direct private investment that not only might increase productivity but also would include a transfer of modern technology and skills. This more or less echoes a theme articulated by conservative spokesmen in the Reagan administration.

The IMF annual report represents a negotiated consensus among its 146 member nations. Therefore, it does not include policy recommendations on controversial issues expected to dominate discussions at the annual meeting starting Sept. 27.

Such topics likely are to include the overvalued American dollar, volatile exchange rates and the need for the IMF to add to its resources while being somewhat less generous in doling out loan funds.

However, the report cautiously expressed concern about recent wide swings in international currency rates and urged close cooperation among members to reduce these wide variations in exchange rates.

It ducked the question of utility of intervention in exchange markets to dampen these swings, commenting that intervention alone has little effect on exchange rate expectations "unless private market participants have reason to believe that authorities are willing to continue to intervene and if necessary to modify domestic policies, to hold an exchange rate to a target."

Last month, the United States and other major nations intervened moderately to hold down the soaring dollar and cushion the fall of the West German deutschemark.

In assessing changes in world economic conditions since its report a year ago, the IMF found pluses and minuses.

It cited progress among industrial nations in reducing inflation and substantial declines in interest rates. Also mentioned were a liquidation of inventories accompanying the recession, which promises inventory rebuilding as the economic recovery progresses, and a fall in world oil prices, which tends to reduce current account deficits of oil-importing countries.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Stock gift does have cost

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Some stock I have owned for several years has risen in value. I plan to give this stock to my young daughter under the gift to minors act before selling.

Will my daughter's cost basis on the stock be the same as my cost basis? If the stock is sold immediately after I make the gift, will the profit be taxed as a long-term capital gain, since I have owned it for more than a year? Will the value of the gift be my original cost, or will it be the value of the stock on the date of the gift?

A. Because the stock would be sold at a profit, your daughter's basis will be the same as your basis — the price you paid for the stock. A different rule applies, when gift stock is sold at a loss. In that case, the recipient's basis is either the donor's basis or the market value on the date of the gift, whichever is lower.

If that stock is sold immediately after the gift is made, the profit will be counted as a short-term capital gain — meaning your daughter will have to report the entire profit as taxable income. On gift stock, the "holding period" for capital gains tax purposes starts the day after the gift. Your daughter would have to own the stock for an additional year for the profit to be treated as a long-term gain — only 40 percent of which is taxable.

The value of the gift will be its market value on the date of the gift. This becomes important, because you can make gifts of up to $10,000 a year to each of as many people as your generosity allows, without filing a federal gift tax return. For a married couple agreeing to "split" gifts, that number doubles to $20,000.

• • •

Q. Instead of giving stock to a young child or grandchild under the gift to minors act, is it possible to put the stock in a 10-year reversionary trust, whereby ownership of the stock would revert back to me at the end of that period?

A. Sure. You can put securities, cash or almost anything else of value in a trust. There are many different kinds of trust. The type you are talking about is called a Clifford trust. It is often used to transfer income and, not incidentally, tax on that income to youngsters.

That type of trust must be set up for at least 10 years. During that time, the trust's income — in this case the dividends from the stock — would belong to the child. If the youngster's only income is dividends or interest of less than $1,000 a year, he or she doesn't even have to file a federal income tax return. Even if the child's income is higher, the tax bite should be relatively small — probably a good deal lower than the tax you would pay if you were collecting those dividends.

Meanwhile, you remove those dividends from your income, thus reducing your income tax bill. When the trust terminates, you get the stock back and you resume paying income tax on the dividends.

It must be stressed, however, that trusts are complicated legal things and most certainly should not be taken on as do-it-yourself projects. You'll need the services of a lawyer familiar with trusts to draw up a trust agreement suitable to your individual situation.

Q. I recently placed $10,000 in a bank savings certificate in gift to minors act form for my 13-year-old daughter. From your column, I know the interest paid on the certificate will belong to my daughter — not me.

But, what about the $10,000 I used to purchase the savings certificate? Does that also belong to the child?

A. Of course it does. When you register cash or securities in gift to minors act form you make an irrevocable gift, which then belongs to the youngster. Both the gift and the income it earns are the child's.

farm-ranch roundup

Herbicide suspected

AUSTIN — The Texas Department of Agriculture intends to cancel the registration of the herbicide Dinitro-3, suspected of causing the death of a farmworker near Bryan, according to Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower.

The herbicide and similar herbicides are suspected of causing a number of serious illnesses in several states, including Texas, California, Michigan and Wisconsin.

The TDA invesigation into Dinitro-3 began after Sacarais Ruiz died Aug. 5 in a Bryan hospital after he applied the herbicide to a cotton field earlier in the day. An autopsy indicated he died of acute poisoning.

"Our investigation has revealed that deficient labeling renders this product very dangerous to human beings, especially to farmers and other agricultural workers who use it," Hightower said.

"We're taking immediate action because this stuff is dangerous. The label is not clear about the serious results of failing to wear protective clothing, nor is it clear about medical treatment for those who have come into contact with the chemical. We need to do something before anyone else is hurt or killed."

Field day Thursday

LUBBOCK — Cotton farmers in search of a "better mousetrap" to help them out in the marketplace may find some clues in their quest Thursday at the 74th annual field day of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station here.

"Improved fiber quality will mean improved value and increase the marketability of Texas High Plains cotton," said Dr. John Gannaway, TAES cotton breeder and agronomist, "and that's a major goal of our breeding program."

At one of four major stops in touring the station, Gunnaway and his associates will discuss research in cotton breeding and variety testing in the pursuit of increased fiber strength, improved yield and earlier maturity.

Other featured stops on the tour will include techniques and products for weed control; grapes; development of drought-resistant cotton varieties.

Site of the Texas A&M University TAES Center is off Farm-to-Market Road 1294 north of Lubbock International Airport and east of Interstate 27 at the Shallowater exit.

Applications studied

LUBBOCK — The Lubbock-area Disaster Office of the Small Business Administration will be processing applications under the Economic Injury Disaster Loan Program from eligible businesses in West Texas counties through Feb. 16, 1984, according to Philip O'Jibway, district director of Lubbock's SBA office.

Agriculture-related businesses which sustained losses due to the 1983 drought may be eligible for loans under SBA's EIDL program. Only business loan applicants who are unable to obtain credit elsewhere are eligible for SBA assistance, he said.

"Applicants who file for Economic Injury Disaster Loans must be able to show their losses are directly attributable to the disaster as declared for their county's physical losses and that their efforts to secure financing elsewhere have failed," Jibway said.

Midland area counties affected by the disaster-loan program include Andrews, Coke, Crane, Ector, Howard, Martin, Midland, Mitchell, Nolan, Reagan, Upton, Ward and Winkler.

RRC adopting rule

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission has adopted a rule that will deregulate the transportation of certain agricultural commodities in Texas.

The rule, adopted on an emergency basis, exempts from RRC-approved rates the transportation of certain agricultural commodities for farmers, ranchers or cooperative organizations between points of production, processing or storage or to any point of first manufacture.

However, agricultural commodity carriers still will be required to have an RRC permit and comply with the RRC's safety, vehicle, registration and insurance requirements.

The new rule requires that an agricultual carrier keep records on each shipment to show the origin and destination, identity of the shipper and receiver, and shipment rates. Each shipment must be accompanied by a consignor bill of loading and an agricultural permit holder's waybill.

Filing fee for the permit is $25.

Before adoption of the new rule, a carrier could get a seasonal permit which was valid for 120 days and which covered a 75-mile radius.

Horse show scheduled

BIG SPRING — The Howard County Fair Association will hold its annual All Breed Open and Youth Horse Show at 9 a.m. Sept. 24 in the Rodeo Bowl here.

Events in the open and youth performance classes will include Western pleasure, reining, barrel racing and pole bending.

Drought tolerant crops featured

The latest research on cotton and grape varieties, drought tolerant crops and weed control will be featured stops for the 47th Annual Field Day of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station for Lubbock anf Halfway. The event begins at 1 p.m. Tuesday, September 13, at the research site, just north of Lubbock International Airport.

Midland County producers will find the program particularly applicable, said Earnest Kiker, county extension agenrt.

Kiker

Research efforts at the Lubbock and Halfway stations focus especially upon needs of producers in Midland County and throughout the High Plains of Texas, Kiker said.

The annual field day alternates between the TAES locations at Lubbock and Halfway. Field tours will be conducted throughout the afternoon, with tractor-drawn trailers shuttling visitors to key research plots.

The field day is a cooperative presentation of TAES, the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, the High Plains Research Foundation, U.S. Department of Agricultural Research Service and the National Weather Service.

The stops will highlight new techniques and products for weed control, development of new varieties to improve cotton fiber quality, the latest research on grapes, an increasingly important High Plains crop, and development of drought tolerant cotton to better utilize declining water supplies and reduce irrigation requirements, Kiker said.

Other features of the field day will be a display of computers and agricultural programs for computers, a tour of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service Soil Testing Lab, and an open house at the Texas Forest Service greenhouse and facility at the station.

Artistry

Over 2,000 years of tradition grace the walls of the Museum of the Southwest in two of the four new exhibits on display. The other two range in content from a look at the history of man in this region to a sampling of a major local institution's art collection.

"Since September is membership month, we selected the exhibits currently on display to showcase the diversity of the museum's collection as well as the community spirit that the museum has worked to improve over the years," said Anne Sherburn, the museum's development and public relations officer.

"Also Septemberfest (held this past weekend) is the only time during the year that some people come to the museum and come into the gallery space," Ms. Sherburn said. "We wanted to have a broad range of exhibits on display."

THE NEW exhibits include "Zapotec Weavings," closing Sept. 27; "Pueblo Pottery and Baskets from the Collection of Naomi Tackett," closing Oct. 30; "Las Llaneros. The Archaeology of the Southern Llano Estacado," closing Oct. 28; and "The First National Collection," closing Oct. 30.

The museum's most recent acquisition, "The Naming," a 5-ton limestone sculpture by Doug Hyde, donated by Fred T. and Novadeen Hogan, is also on display. In 1980, the Hogans donated their collection of paintings by The Taos Society of Artists to the museum. This collection is on view as well as other selections from the museum's permanent collection.

Although the designs on the "Zapotec Weavings" exhibit reflect the highly developed Zapotec civilization of more than 2,000 years ago, these tapestries were created by contemporary Zapotec Indian families living in Oxaca, Mexico.

"The appeal of that exhibit is realizing, after looking at the pieces, that all are made completely by hand," Ms. Sherburn said.

WOVEN IN a weft-faced tapestry weave on a Spanish style foot loom passed down through families for generations, each piece is made by an individual family.

"When people realize that creating these weavings is a family process, they appreciate them more," Ms. Sherburn said. "When these tapestries are viewed as a living tradition with a 2,000-year history, they are even more impressive."

The 2,000-year traditional artistic excellence of the Hopi, Santa Clara, Acoma, Hano-Tewa, Tesuque, Zia, Cochiti and San Ildefonso people is represented in the "Pueblo Pottery and Baskets" exhibit.

NAOMI TACKETT of Abilene has been assembling her collection for 20 years and the works on display represent about "a quarter of her personal collection," Ms. Sherburn said. "Certainly the baskets are some of the finest examples I've ever seen."

The questions "When did humans first arrive in our area?," "How did archaic peoples live on the Llano Estacado (Staked Plains)?," "Why did people from the Southwestern Pueblos come out onto the Plains?," and "Who were the many groups whose names were recorded by the early Spanish explorers?," are raised and answered in the museum's exhibit, "Las Llaneros: the Archaeology of the Southern Llano Estacado."

In answering these questions, Dr. Michael B. Collins, the exhibit's curator, gives a description of the environment, food gathering, tools and, in some cases, the cultural adaptations on the Southern Llano Estacado.

"The First National Collection," the first in the museum's series focusing on regional corporate art collections, is composed of selected art from the collection of The First National Bank of Midland.

"It's good when the public gets an opportunity to see a collection put together by a corporation that is as strong a member of the community as is First National," Ms. Sherburn said.

THIS COLLECTION, 50 years in the making, covers a broad range of styles, periods, subjects and mediums. Represented in the 53-piece exhibit are works by Fremont Ellis, Lincoln Fox, Thomas Moran, Percival Rosseau, Peter Hurd, Clark Hulings, Edward B. Weyman, Tom Lovell, Eric Sloane and others.

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 2-5 p.m. Sunday. There is no charge to view any of the exhibits at the museum, located at 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

Judge orders halt to dredging in bay

ANGLETON, Texas (AP) — The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers must temporarily halt dredging in East Matagorda Bay that fishermen claim threatens sensitive marine life, a judge has ruled.

State District Judge Neil Caldwell issued a temporary restraining order requested by the Texas attorney general's office. Caldwell also scheduled a hearing for Friday to determine whether a preliminary injunction should be issued.

Caldwell's ruling came less than a week after U.S. District Judge Robert O'Conor of Houston denied a restraining order that was sought by opponents of the dredging operation.

The dispute concerns silt being dredged from a 28-mile section of the Intracoastal Waterway paralleling the inland shore of East Matagorda Bay, about 25 miles east of Bay City. Corps officials say the dredging is necessary because the waterway is too shallow, making navigation difficult and hazardous.

The mud-like spoil from a 10-mile stretch of the waterway would be discharged into open bay waters if the operation continued.

The attorney general's office filed suit against the dredge operator in behalf of the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, claiming disposal of the spoil from the dredging operation would float into live osyter reefs, killing oysters and fish nursery grounds.

Tent City cleaned up

HOUSTON (AP) — Truckloads of debris have been hauled away and the roadside park that became a modern-day Hooverville has been reopened to the public, officials said.

But the only visitors attracted to the park on the banks of the San Jacinto River, 30 miles east of Houston, are occasional picnickers, overnight campers, fishermen and truck drivers catching a few moments of sleep on a long run.

A year ago, however, the park once known as Tent City was home for some 200 jobless, homeless people. It wasn't the only encampment of its kind, but it attracted the most attention.

Church groups came with food for the hungry, and area residents donated clothes and furniture. But resentment surfaced after some Tent City residents turned down job offers.

Texas town rated most dangerous

WASHINGTON (AP) — Odessa, Texas was the nation's "most dangerous metropolitan area" in 1982, the National Coalition to Ban Handguns says.

The organization based its claim on crime statistics for last year released over the weekend by the FBI.

The coalition said Odessa had a homicide rate of 29.8 per 100,000 residents, surpassing Miami, Fla., which usually is the metropolitan area with the highest homicide rate.

Miami's rate fell to 29.7 homicides per 100,000 residents last year from 34.5 per 100,000 in 1981, the organization said.

The coalition said the drop in Miami's homicide rate is "perhaps accountable by a 40 percent decrease in area handgun sales."

Theft, burglaries reported

Police Round-up

Police investigated several burglaries of residences, businesses and an automobile and one theft during the weekend and this morning.

The Colonial Food Store at 2110 W. Front, was burglarized early this morning after a rock was thrown through a west glass door. Officer M. Ambrose Pilgram, known to Pilot Point residents as Mule Man, walks behind the plow as his animals pull it. Pilgram enjoys the older style of farming and insists that it is actually better than using a tractor.

Man rekindles past behind mule

PILOT POINT, Texas (AP) — The people of Pilot Point call him the mule man.

He's a 60-year resident who believes in the days of the horse and buggy, a simpler time of busting broncos and roping calves.

Ambrose Pilgrim is a product of the West.

He has spent the last 12 years or so rekindling the past behind mule and plow. Gardens in Denton, Cooke and Grayson counties have reaped the benefits.

He says his mules come first in his life: "I buy the best harness I can put on 'em. I feed 'em and I take care 'em."

He plows by mule because he enjoys it.

"It's harder, but that mule will walk a straight line. I got him trained for that," he said. "I had a tractor, but I always made my garden with a team. The (tractor) wheels packed it, see? If you're plowing with a team, by golly, it loosens it up.

"And another thing, You take that garden out there. If you turn (a tractor) around and back up, you'll tear down a whole lot of stuff, but a mule, by golly, they'll step over a cabbage or a tomato plant on that end."

To prove his point, Pilgrim harnessed hs team behind a hand plow and drove them into the garden. The mule and their driver plowed rows, uprooting weeds without harming plants.

Pilgrim made a single, barely audible sound, gave a subtle tug on the leather lead and the entire "machine" turned around effortlessly.

Clouds of dust followed the mule man and his team as they returned to the barn.

"I used to break every mule I had," Pilgrm said, settling beneath a shady tree in his backyard. "I used to enjoy it. When I was through plowing, I'd just jump on 'em and ride 'em."

Workers fleeing peso devaluation

EL PASO (AP) — Streams of Mexican workers, who have seen their paychecks devoured by the declining value of the peso, are streaming north of the border in search of work and forcing operators of foreign-owned plants to seek ways of keeping their labor forces intact.

About 10,000 new jobs have been created in the so-called twin plants, or maquilardos, in Juarez, Mexico, pushing employment over the 50,000 mark, said Mario Mijares, public relations director for the Maquila Association.

But workers who man the posts in the plants, which usually import raw material into Mexico under bond and export finished products, say recent peso devaluations have cut the buying power of their paychecks sharply.

"Yes, there's work in Mexico, but it's badly paid," said Roberto Carlos Alonzo. "If we made enough money there to pay our expenses, caray!, with pleasure we'd grab the jobs."

Alonzo, 30, was a bootmaker at the Western de Mexico twin plant in Juarez, a skilled job that netted him $150 a week in 1981. But last year's successive peso devaluations cut his salary's worth to $40 a week.

With four children to support, he moved his family to New Mexico and made as much as $25 a day working in agriculture.

But last week, he sat in the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization detention center here, joining the rolls of September arrests that could surpass the 23,319 illegal alien catches tallied in August by the El Paso U.S. Border Patrol sector. That figure was 66 percent more than August 1981 arrests, El Paso chief patrol agent Alan Eliason said.

The twin plants may not be as effective a deterrent to illegal immigration as in the past.

Program set for mansion

AUSTIN (AP) — About 100 Austin women will take part in a program to give tours of the governor's Mansion and act as hostesses at receptions, the governor's office said today.

The Friends of the Governor's Mansion, a non-profit corporation formed in 1979 to raise private funds to finance Mansion restoration, is sponsoring the Mansion docent program.

The announcement said docents will begin hosting tours for small groups, such as historical societies, several afternoons each week beginning in November.

Capitol tour guides will continue leading Mansion tours, open to the public, from 10 a.m. to noon Monday through Friday.

The docent training program begins Sept. 14 with Jed Mace of Dallas, interior decorator hired for the 1979-82 Mansion restoration program, speaking at a luncheon.

Woman dies in accident

A 19-year-old Midland woman died early this morning from injuries suffered in a hit-and-run, car-pedestrian accident Aug. 29.

Mary Ann Navares, of 1100-A E. Parker died at Midland Memorial Hospital at about 1 a.m.

She was hit by a truck while she and a companion were walking south along the curb in the 1800 block of North Lamesa Road. The driver of the southbound vehicle, Jose Pablo Sanchez, 32, of 507 E. Estes, was arrested at his residence after Ms. Navares' companion took down the license number and gave it to police.

Sanchez was charged with failure to stop and render aid and was released from custody on a $5,000 bond the next day.

Ms. Navares had suffered multiple injuries, including a broken pelvis, and was admitted to the hospital in serious condition. Her condition later was changed to critical.

Centenarians reveal 'secrets' of living past 100 years

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — No matter how dreary their lives had been, it used to be when a person turned 100 their wrinkled faces would be splashed across the pages of local newspapers.

Centenarians were an oddity, a freak of nature. Blowing out 100 candles was considered a near miracle and the feat was likely to be documented by the press.

"How did they do it?" the curious wanted to know. The questions are always the same. "What is your secret?" "How does it feel?" "Did you ever think you'd live to be 100?"

Like Ponce de Leon's search for the Fountain of Youth, people have long been fascinated with the prospect of longevity.

Longevity, not aging. The thought of living to 100 repulses some people, unless they can do it on their own terms. They want to break the mold, ending up with smooth skin, agile bones and the mental alertness of a 25-year-old.

CENTENARIANS RARELY are the picture of robust health when they appear in print. They are wrinkled, childlike and often in wheelchairs — a far cry from what many hope to see. Positive illusions are crushed. Although they could pass for 80 or 90, 100-year-olds, like those a couple decades younger, look old.

Their classification — centenarians — suggests grandeur and an aura of mysticism. Much to our dismay, they are no more than very old humans. Some are wise, some forgetful, some remain jokesters.

Centenarians were once a curiosity. They defied the laws of mortality and reporters tried to get to the bottom of the phenomenon by asking, How?

In recent years, however, it seems the media has become indifferent to 100-year-olds. Is it a reflection of our youth-oriented culture? Partly. Is it because their breed is dying off? U.S. Census Bureau figures reveal just the opposite.

The cold hard facts are that centenarians are no longer such sensational news.

Although still a minority, statistics verify that a growing number of senior citizens are passing the three-digit mark.

According to 1980 census figures, there are 32,000 centenarians ranging from 100 to 110 in the United States.

Their lives span the kind of history grammar school children spend months reading about — The Battle of Wounded Knee, Edison's kinetoscope, the assassination of President William McKinley.

So long ago.

OTHER THAN reaching that stately three-digit mark, centenarians have little else in common. Some come from families where old age has come to be expected, while others are the last of the family name. In each case, they are the oldest person they have ever known.

Centenarians are a curious breed. There has been little research done on the reasons for their longevity, and in order to find out what it's like to be 100 one must go to the source.

In separate interviews with centenarians, the senior, senior citizens reflected upon their past and talked about reaching 100.

If there was any pattern to be found among this slice of centenarians, it was that they were all hard workers — frequently working into their 90s. None of the centenarians thought there was anything special about being 100.

However, the centenarians all agreed that 100 is a lonely spot. Although they say they try not to dwell on ill health or the loss of loved ones, life has obviously taken its toll.

The following are edited excerpts from conversations with centenarians.

LEE L. DOUGAN is a slight man with a broad smile. He is a fledgling centenarian who celebrated his 100-year birthday in July at a suburban Torrance "retirement hotel."

At his birthday party, a table full of youngsters — 90 years and below — honored the centenarian.

The former architect was born and educated in Indiana. Dougan worked and traveled around the world until he was in his late 90s. His building designs in Oregon, which include the monastery and national shrine of the Sanctuary of Our Sorrowful Mother, have been praised by his peers for their classical style.

But that is in the past, part of Dougan's history. These days, Dougan's hearing and eyesight are poor, so he wears a hearing aid and thick glasses.

Dougan gets confused when he answers questions, not because he is forgetful, but because of his hearing problem.

"The reason I've lived so long," he said, cupping his hand to his ear, "is because I've tried to take good care of myself. I am careful with food."

CNS photo

Joseph Hobi, 102: No stress and chewing tobacco.

Dougan, a nature buff, said he believes his long walks and yoga exercises have improved the quality of his life.

"The proper attitude," he added, has also been an important ingredient. An example of his "attitude," the staff at his board-and-care home jokingly say, was his jovial reaction to a recent stag party which featured a youthful belly dancer.

"He loved it," they said, showing a picture of the dancer hugging Dougan.

MABEL STOTT, 102, lives in a convalescent home. She is an intelligent woman who admitted she was hesitant to talk to a reporter. Stott warned that she would be cautious with her answers because she feared her words would somehow embarrass her family, who devotedly visit her nearly every day.

Born in Canada, Stott has been widowed 20 years. She never had children, but cared for her sister's children when they were young.

Stott did "office work" until her 80s. She said work was always an important element of her life.

Now that she is no longer working, she spends her time thinking, crocheting and playing cards with the other residents.

"I can't be bothered telling you what I think about. You don't mind, do you? I just don't feel like talking about it. My head is so dizzy I can hardly see," she said.

Before her hair turned gray, Stott said she liked to go dancing. "Before I got all this gray stuff, I had genuine brown hair. That's when I liked square dancing — the waltz. I was a good waltzer," she said, smiling.

When asked the standard, "What are your secrets?" Stott responded, "I never smoked seriously, just for fun, and I enjoyed a drink now and then."

She says people tell her she looks older than her age.

"Yes, in a way I guess it is unusual living to be 100. I haven't really thought very much about it. But I do know that I'd like to be older, much older. I've always wanted to live a long time," Stott said as she sat in her wheelchair placed in the convalescent home's chapel.

Stott repeated, "I'm so dizzy, I just can't tell you. Everything is going."

The nurses took Stott to her bedroom and she assured the reporter that she would feel better after she rested.

BETTY EDGE, 106 — the oldest centenarian interviewed — was tired and slumped over in her wheelchair as she whispered and scribbled her life story on a piece of paper. Edge is deaf and must communicate with her son, who visits her daily, and others by writing responses on a note pad. The system appears to frustrate her, but workers say she is able to cope "just fine."

A newspaper clipping about Edge written on her 100th birthday described her as a cheerful, high-spirited woman "whose independence has won the admiration of family, friends and neighbors." At the time the story was written, Edge lived alone at Leisure Village in Seal Beach.

After she fell and broke her hip, Edge was forced to move to a private convalescent home in Santa Monica. When funds ran out, she moved to the Torrance facility.

Edge has been widowed since 1945. She had three sons. One died in 1975. A son, Ben, described his mother as a "hard worker who always fought for herself and the family." Edge ran a successful antique shop in Brentwood for many years, he said.

Communication is, at best, difficult. She said she remembers when the bridge — the Tay located near the North Sea — fell down. Edge struggled to share other events she considers important.

A short time after the interview began, Edge asked if she could return to her room.

"Leave me alone. I'm an old woman and I'm tired," she said. "I am dying." (Edge died a week after this interview.)

HARMONICA-PLAYING Joseph Hobi, 102, lives in his suburban Gardena apartment with his daughter, Tillie. The Swiss-born centenarian still has an accent and fondly remembers his days in the old country, which he left when he was 24. Hobi settled in Iowa, where he took a job as a butcher.

"I remember crossing the Atlantic and getting sick. My companions had to go in the corner and vomit after two hours. Me, it took me three days," he said, chuckling.

The trip to America was one of the few times Hobi has ever been sick, he said, noting that he hasn't swallowed one aspirin during his entire lifetime.

Hobi, his wife and seven children moved to Gardena, Calif., in 1942. He changed professions when he was in his mid-60s. He attended night school and learned the craft of welding because "it paid well." After working on ships in the Los Angeles Harbor, Hobi changed jobs again, finally retiring from a local aerospace company at age 77.

"They weren't so strict about retiring in those days. I guess I wanted to keep working because I was stingy," he said.

Hobi has a creamy, slightly flushed complexion. "I must say, I have never looked my age," he said, holding up a picture of himself when he was 60.

After a recent cataract operation, his doctor told him that his blood pressure is that of a 40-year-old and that all his vitals are perfect, he says.

The secret to his success, he has decided, is no stress and chewing tobacco — which he admits he swallows.

"My hearing is perfect; the only problem I have is with my eyes," he said.

"Naturally, at my age, you begin to think about dying, but it doesn't scare me. I think about how long I'm going to be here. You know, I don't think I'll be here until I'm 120," Hobi said, predicting that he will live to 103 or 104, "somewhere in between."

Auto repair manual can help realign attitudes

Copley News Service

Does looking underneath the hood of your car remind you of staring into an open coffin? Are you spooked by dead batteries and cranky camshafts? Do you think a tie rod belongs in your clothes closet and a fan belt is something you wear around your waist?

If so, you qualify as a mechanical moron. And when the frustrations proliferate, you're probably ready for an attitude realignment and a rebuilt checking account.

Beverly Crowle knows. She's been there — where every noise the automobile makes sounds like a foreign language that only a mechanic can translate.

But Crowle did something about it. She wrote a song, "Wondrous Car," and a yet-to-be-published book, "The Wondrous Car Book." And she learned from experts how to distinguish a ball joint from a ball bearing and a manifold from a muffler.

As for the car that drove her to despair in its recurring state of disrepair? "I love it," she says. "I'll never sell it. It'll be on my lawn bronzed some day."

Crowle, you see, was able to perceive through her bad luck, automotive ignorance and frustration, a silver lining: humor.

For every breakdown of her car, there was a communication breakdown between driver and mechanic. Other people she knew voiced similar complaints.

"I heard from people who were ill over their car, I heard how annoyed they can become," she said. "I researched enough to understand my car, and decided to write a book to help people cope and understand it.

"I laughed all the way through it. I hope to do for cars what Erma Bombeck has done for kids.

Crowle recruited her 27-year-old son Floyd to pose for gag shots with various auto parts and consulted an electrical engineer — Norm Rayner — to provide the mechanical expertise.

Among her suggestions: Keep a tape recorder handy to record the sound of your automobile's malfunction (because "these noises don't necessarily peform when you turn on the engine to explain the problem to your mechanic").

She provides a section on how to describe a mechanical problem and a form to submit "as you would submit a symptom form to your doctor."

Her description of a carburetor: "your car's bartender. It takes several parts of air and a few parts of gas and mixes a concoction your engine finds quite delicious."

She also lists 101 uses for a dead car — everything from a planter box, to a newspaper-and-aluminum recycling bin, to a Halloween haunted house.

"Most women find the workings of a car so boring that they can't understand them. I wanted to write something they can understand," she said.

The car that is the source of her inspiration is, 7 years old and has logged 160,000 miles, she said. During a normal year, she will drive an unusually high 26,000 miles — commuting to her job and traveling to other engagements.

"My car survived a bad accident when somebody hit me," she said, "and that triggered it: one problem after another."

USDA's 'thrifty meal plan' may not prove practical

Copley News Service

Now there's a thrifty meal plan to accompany that $58 food stamp budget for a family of four.

It looks tasty, and since six or so U.S. Department of Agriculture experts worked it up, no doubt it's as balanced as can be.

The USDA has spent time and money on researching and now promoting this plan.

But will it be useful to those on food stamps? Is it realistic?

Will people on food stamps have the time and motivation to prepare them?

Maybe not.

The shopping takes time, the cooking takes time. Lots of time.

Just glancing at the meal plan, a family following it could use a full-time cook. The USDA says it takes an hour and a half cooking time per day — two hours or two and a half hours is more realistic.

Let's take Thursday of Week I. Breakfast starts off briskly with pancakes — making up the batter from the biscuit mix made earlier in the week — plus pork sausage and two fresh apples cut into wedges.

Then we turn to the USDA lunch. Turkey noodle soup, made from turkey stock from a rather lengthy recipe earlier in the week, plus seven other ingredients. Don't forget to bake the biscuits to go with the soup and cut up the pears. That's a hearty, nutritious lunch, all right.

Let's move on to dinner.

This time only beef tamale pie has to be put together — 12 ingredients, 30 minutes' baking time. The accompaniments are toast, cottage cheese with orange sections and the quick bread made the day before for a snack.

That's one day. How many highly motivated, high-income people with the time do that much cooking? Also on the Week I menu are four desserts made from basics — chocolate pie, oatmeal cookies, orange fluff, rice pudding. This doesn't count the cinnamon coffee cake and the muffins made for breakfasts and snacks. That's a lot of baking for anyone. And think of all the equipment you need to put these recipes together.

The meal plan almost seems planned for low-income trained home economists.

The USDA menus and recipes aren't "realistic," or to put it more kindly, the "USDA has too high expectations of what people would do," said Dorothy Wheeler. She's a home economist with the University of California Cooperative Extension, working with the nutrition education program. She and her 14 aides work constantly with low-income people, helping them to improve their diets.

For one thing, these plans assume people have so much food and equipment on hand, she said. "It takes a working oven and refrigeration. A lot of people don't have these."

But principally, she considered the problems with the USDA menus are the amount of time required to prepare the food, the complicated menus, the wide variety of different foods not being realistic.

Remember, it was just in July that the U.S. secretary of agriculture went to the grocery store and launched his famous food stamp diet — for a week. Now another official has been sent to six cities, to shop and instruct and to entice the media.

While in San Francisco, Isabel Wolf, the USDA's administrator of its nutrition information service, also made a conference call to six newspapers.

Wolf, well qualified as a nutritionist, said the USDA is trying to find out how to effectively help the 20 million people who participate in the food stamp program. The department contracting for research on the best way to communicate its nutrition information. Agriculture Secretary John Block said he will make the publication "Making Food Dollars Count," with the suggested meal plans, available to food stamp recipients across the country. (Now it is available for 50 cents via the Consumer Information Center, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.)

The USDA did have nine low-income families in the Washington, D.C., area try out the menus. Basically, their responses, in a printed evaluation and according to Wolf, were very positive. She said, "Quite importantly, they were able to store the food properly, they had the required equipment to prepare it, they could prepare it in the available time, although we have had some criticism about what is perceived as excessive amounts of time required for preparation."

Also, "The meals included as much food and sometimes more than the households were accustomed to eating. These people did not run out of food." The cost for a week's groceries varied from $48 to $56.

Obviously, one major point of this program was to show that families could live on a $58 food stamp allowance per week. But the sample grocery list also had a category of ingredients presumed to be on hand and not figured in the list — items such as coffee, eggs, spices, kidney beans, vegetable oil, sugar, syrup, salad dressing, etc.

Unusual combinations, such as the tuna pizza, excited some negative response. (Wonder about the beef-cabbage sandwiches.) That and other items may be changed on the basic meal plan.

Responding to questions about the realism of the meal plan program and preparation time, Wolf said, "If you're going to get the maximum amount of nutrients and food for a modest amount of money, you really have to avoid partially prepared foods." Preparing foods from "scratch" is a way to get "more nutrients for the dollar." One of the criticisms directed to people who are on the food stamp program relates to the purchase of rather expensive and maybe not very nutritious processed, frozen kinds of foods.

DEAR ABBY

Wedding obligation tempts her to stay home

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a well-known professional man in our area. His secretary, who has been with him for four years, has asked him to give her 19-year-old daughter away in marriage. The secretary is divorced, and her ex-husband (a local resident) refuses to participate in or even attend his daughter's wedding although his name is on the invitation.

No one even mentioned the above to me until all the plans were made. I know the secretary but have never met her daughter.

I feel very uncomfortable about this and have told my husband that it is bound to create some speculation as to what the relationship between him and his secretary really is.

My husband said he had no choice because "they have no male family member to perform the duty." Am I wrong to be upset? And do you think I should attend the wedding? — WITHHOLD MY NAME IN FLORIDA

DEAR WITHHOLD: Are you wrong to be upset? No. Your husband should have discussed it with you first. Should you attend the wedding? Yes. It would look worse if you didn't.

DEAR ABBY: I am 17 and have been married a year and two months to a wonderful man. (He's 22 and we are in the military.)

We are very happy, but we have problems making love. I seem to hold back, and much as I want to, I can't seem to let myself go. My husband has been very patient with me, but I know he can't enjoy himself because of the way I am.

We've discussed the problem together and think maybe I should seek professional help. Where should I go? — UPTIGHT IN CHICAGO

P.S. Don't tell me maybe it's because I married young. I've had a lot of trouble in my life. I've been raped twice — the first time by my father.

DEAR UPTIGHT: First you should be examined by a gynecologist to determine whether there is some kind of physical problem. If there is none, there's a strong possibility that you are uptight because of your rape experience. Go to the nearest rape crisis center. It doesn't matter how long ago the rape occurred, if it hasn't been dealt with and resolved, it needs to be.

DEAR ABBY: I direct a charitable organization that provides full scholarships to deserving youths. These scholarships cover tuition, books, room, board, laundry, etc. for the duration of college. There are no repayment obligations of any kind.

Abby, don't you think the parents of our scholarship recipients should express a word of appreciation to our organization for the exceptional benefits their sons and daughters receive? An annual note, maybe "Thanks for the $6,000 gift you gave our son (or daughter) this year"?

Would you believe that we have spent as much as $30,000 to educate one youth whose parents have never once said thank you?

I predict that unless people begin to acquire a sense of gratitude for the generosity of others, the wells of charity are going eventually to dry up. Any comment? — CONCERNED

DEAR CONCERNED: An expression of gratitude from the parents of students who benefit from scholarships would seem minimal, and the students themselves should also thank their benefactors.

(For Abby's updated, revised and expanded booklet, "How to Be Popular" — for people of all ages — send $2, plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Cancer formation process studied

NEW YORK (AP) — Researchers have identified two mutations responsible for a certain type of human cancer, providing new evidence that at least two separate genetic changes are needed to cause cancer.

Two weeks ago, research teams in the United States and Great Britain described laboratory experiments showing that the formation of cancer was at least a two-step process.

The new research, reported in the current issue of Nature magazine, shows that the same holds true for an actual human cancer tumor, said Geoffrey Cooper, one of the authors of the report.

Cooper and colleagues at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston found a previously unknown second cancer gene in Burkitt's lymphoma, a leukemia-like illness that strikes only 200 to 300 people a year in the United States but is endemic in African children.

Burkitt's lymphoma had been linked to a cancer gene known as myc, one of some 20 human cancer genes that have been discovered during the last few years. Cooper has called the new Burkitt's lymphoma gene Blym-1.

New sacks made stronger

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Shipping sacks can be used to hold such products as petfood, fertilizer, sugar or chemicals.

Because the bags need to hold as much as 50 pounds of fertilizer, for example, the paper must be strong enough to withstand abuse.

A recent development called Stress Kraft paper by St. Regis has allowed the company to use only two sheets of the paper in a bag rather than three sheets normally required of regular paper.

Myasthenia gravis: Diagnosis difficult

Hearst Feature Service

Myasthenia gravis wears many masks. A throat that sometimes feels tight or an arm that seems slightly weak are typical deceptive symptoms of this uncommon muscular disease, making detection difficult and misdiagnosis commonplace. A victim often has an eyelid that inexplicably begins to droop, double vision, an abnormally high, nasal voice and difficulty in walking, swallowing, chewing, breathing and talking.

Though it is more frequent in women than in men, myasthenia is not partial to age or sex. Toddlers have been first-time patients; so have men and women approaching 80. And when muscles controlling breathing and swallowing are affected, an attack can be fatal.

Estimates of how many people have myasthenia gravis vary from one in 100,000 to one in 10,000. Its victims include the actor Roger Smith, husband and manager of the actress Ann-Margret. Aristotle Onassis, the late Greek shipping magnate, lived for several years with the disease before he died in 1975 of bronchial pneumonia.

Simply put, an MG victim has sets of nerves that cannot communicate with his muscles. While his nervous and muscle systems are separately healthy, when the nerves attempt to activate the muscles, the signal is interrupted. The myasthenic may be able to lift a skillet once with normal effort, but the act becomes increasingly difficult or impossible on the second, third and fourth tries because the message is not getting through.

According to two specialists who study and treat patients at MG research centers in San Francisco, the trigger that turns the body on itself remains elusive. Dr. Robert Layzer, a professor of neurology at the University of California-San Francisco School of Medicine, explained the process:

Normally, with each nerve impulse to a muscle, a small amount of chemical transmitter, called acetycholine, is released at the nerve terminal. Waiting at the muscle side to receive the chemical are special proteins, the acetylcholine receptors. In normal systems, when the chemical links up with the receptors, the muscles respond. But in the myasthenic, the body reacts against the receptors, sending antibodies to attack the receptors.

Layzer and Dr. Robert Miller, chief of neurology at San Francisco Children's Hospital, point to improved treatment techniques that have reduced the death rate, once quoted at anywhere from 30 to 85 percent, to almost zero. Miller said an "explosion of information" about MG has taken place since 1972.

To determine if a patient has myasthenia, a blood test can detect abnormal antibodies, and muscle responses are checked. Another diagnostic strategy administers a drug that has a tendency to briefly halt the muscle weakness, a strong indicator that the patient has MG. But a physician's own evaluation of the patient's symptoms remains the most important basis for diagnosis. In some patients diagnosed as myasthenic, none of the laboratory tests proves abnormal.

Once discovered, myasthenia can be attacked by three different methods, alone or in combination, that treat either the symptoms of the disease or the underlying disease process itself.

In milder cases, MG patients are treated with drugs that act directly at the junction of nerve and muscle to overcome the blockage of the nerve muscle. The most commonly used are Mestinon and Prostigmin. These drugs only help the symptoms of MG; they do not affect the disease process.

For more severe cases, immunosuppressant drugs are designed more to attack and suppress the abnormal immune system activity than to produce temporary improvement. These include corticosteroid drugs such as Prednisone and cytotoxic drugs such as Imuran, which is used in cancer chemotherapy. But these substances can produce severe side effects when used in high doses over long periods.

A third treatment is the removal of the thymus gland. Although improvement and remission rates are reported to be as high as 87 percent, it sometimes takes months or even years to be effective. "We know the thymus has some connection to MG," said Layzer. "We don't know why precisely its removal helps."

Though it is one of the rarer autoimmune diseases, Miller sees MG as a critical research link because of the bearing it may have on other severe autoimmune illnesses such as lupus and rheumatoid athritis.

Military divorcees EX-POSE inequities

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — In March 1980, a dozen women divorced or separated from their servicemen husbands met in a northern Virginia restaurant, agreed they were angry and decided to do something about it.

They had followed their husbands from base to base, hampering any chance for them to develop their own careers. The military promised that their loyalty would be rewarded by hefty pensions and lifetime medical coverage.

But that promise ended with their marriages, the women said.

"We felt we were part of a team," said Nancy Abell, whose 23-year marriage to an Air Force colonel ended in divorce. "They (the military) depended on the women to take care of the home and the children so that these men were free to follow their military mission.

"We feel that those (benefits) are ours," she said. "Certainly we have earned them rather than the people that the man has married after he is retired."

The dozen women organized EX-POSE, Ex-Partners of Servicemen for Equality, and made Mrs. Abell their first president. The nationwide group now claims about 5,000 active members, nearly all of them women.

The Alexandria-based organization is among the most vocal of several groups prominent in the battle over who gets what when a military marriage goes sour.

Aligned against them are some military retiree organizations that believe the person who served should reap the benefits, especially the pensions.

Each side has its stories — the ex-wives tell of women and children forced onto welfare after being abandoned by their military husbands; the military retirees talk of former prisoners of war whose wives spent their money lavishly while the men were in captivity and then asked for a divorce upon their return.

Ruth Rogers, president of the Virginia Beach, Va., chapter of EX-POSE, says the group of ex-military wives is trying to get expanded medical benefits for military divorcees.

Vic Wintriss, a former Navy commander who chairs the San Diego-based American Retirees Association, said retirement pay should not be considered community property in divorce settlements.

"There are some hard-working, diligent women who stood by their husbands and then were dumped on," he said. "There are some cases where the women did not support, did not help, did not contribute.

"It should be decided on a case-by-case basis," Wintriss added.

In 1981, the Supreme Court ruled that military pension benefits may not become part of a property settlement in a divorce.

But last year, after lobbying by EX-POSE and other groups, Congress reversed that ruling by passing legislation that allows judges to consider military pensions in divorce settlements.

Even with that victory, some EX-POSE members feel the legislation doesn't go far enough. Judges don't have to consider the pension, and many don't, they contend.

But Wintriss said military pensions are divided in community property states such as California, where marital property is split equally between husband and wife.

Because dividing military pensions is so controversial, EX-POSE leaders are directing their efforts toward getting more medical benefits for ex-military wives.

Shirley Taft, EX-POSE national president, said she found it nearly impossible to get health insurance after she was divorced, at the age of 61, from a retired Army lieutenant colonel.

She was no longer eligible for the medical benefits she had during her marriage, and private insurance companies weren't anxious to insure a woman in her 60s.

Besides changing the law on military pensions, the 1982 Uniformed Services Former Spouses Protection Act allowed ex-spouses to have medical benefits if they had been married for 20 years to a serviceman on active duty.

Sen. Paul S. Trible, R-Va., and Rep. G. William Whitehurst, R-Va., have introduced bills which would reduce from 20 to 10 the number of years an ex-spouse must be married while a service member is on active duty.

EX-POSE also is tackling state divorce laws it considers unfair and urging better enforcement of child support statutes.

Virginia and Florida, states with several major military installations, are known as "dumping grounds" for military men who want to divorce their wives, said Ruth Rogers, president of the Virginia Beach EX-POSE chapter.

Rod Stewart, wife Alana, split after five years of marriage

LONDON (AP) — British rock star Rod Stewart and his wife, Alana, have separated after five years of marriage, British press reports said today.

Stewart, who arrived in London on Friday to take part in a benefit concert for a sick friend, is staying at fellow pop star Elton John's mansion in Windsor, west of London. The 38-year-old singer refused to accept telephone calls.

Stewart's Texas-born wife, who is 37, reportedly left their Beverly Hills home three weeks ago, taking their children, Kimberley, 4, and Sean, 3, with her.

Biaggi

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi, at 65 a senior member of the House Select Committee on Aging, has another honor to add to his resume. He's been named "Grandparent of the Year."

The eight-term New York Democrat, flanked by his six young grandchildren, received the title during a ceremony Sunday.

"This is what I call 'the richness of life,'" he said. "When you get to be my age you reflect back on what's really meaningful — family."

Mike Goldgar, founder and executive secretary of the National Council for the Observance of Grandparents Day, noted that Biaggi is author of legislation that would give grandparents the same child visitation rights as divorced parents.

Grandparents Day, signed into law in 1978, is observed the first Sunday after Labor Day.

VIRGINIA CITY, Nev. (AP) — If singer-songwriter Leo Sayer ever pulls you over on a Virginia City street, don't argue. He might mean business.

Sayer, 35, a native of Sussex, England, whose hits include "You Make Me Feel Like Dancin'" and the Grammy Award-winning "When I Need You," was recently sworn in as a badge-bearing Storey County deputy sheriff.

"We don't want him to go out and arrest anybody, but technically I guess he could," says county Sheriff Bob Del Carlo.

LA COURNEUVE, France (AP) — French Communists applauded Canadian singer Robert Charlebois after he observed a minute of silence to honor the 269 people killed when a Korean jetliner was shot down by the Soviet Union.

Charlebois made the gesture Sunday while performing at the French Communist Party's annual "Fete de l'Humanite."

Taylor

CHICAGO (AP) — Actress Elizabeth Taylor has been left with virtually "no voice at all," and her performances in "Private Lives" have been canceled while her doctor maintains a day-to-day check on her condition.

Miss Taylor, 51, was to have opened in the play at the Schubert Theater with her former husband, Richard Burton, on Sunday.

But the performance was called off after she developed a vocal cord and sinus infection which he doctor, George Allen, described as severe.

Theater spokeswoman Jennifer Matz she said she understood Miss Taylor "can't talk at all" and the performances were being canceled from day to day because "we can't really tell how long it'll take her to improve."

Nation mourns for dead of KAL Flight 007

By The Associated Press

Fifteen flag-draped coffins marked a tribute in California, while Oregon closed schools, courts and offices today in observance of a national day of mourning for the 269 victims of the downed Korean jetliner.

Angry demonstrations mixed with quiet, tearful services large and small across the nation Sunday, only the seventh national day of mourning in 20 years.

A crowd of 1,500 gathered to express their sadness and hear speeches at a park in the Koreatown section of Los Angeles.

As rock music blared over loudspeakers, 15 flag-draped black coffins — one for each country that had citizens on the downed jetliner — lay in front of the speakers' platform.

"Our intent is to commemorate the lives that we have lost and to condemn the USSR for their barbaric, senseless actions," said John Rho, chairman of the event.

Across the continent, in Hartford, Conn., 100 people called a temporary halt to the city's annual Italian festival to hold an open-air memorial service for victims of Korean Air Lines Flight 007, which was shot down by a Soviet missile on Sept. 1.

Contestants in the upcoming Miss America Pageant in Atlantic City, N.J., prayed at candlelight services held at local churches.

Oregon officials hastily designated today a legal holiday, closing schools, state offices, courts and liquor stores with only one day's notice and spawning widespread confusion.

Bob Smith, director of the Executive Department, said any day designated a national day of mourning by President Reagan is automatically a state holiday in Oregon, and any holiday that falls on a Sunday is automatically observed the following Monday.

American Legion members carried an empty, flag-draped coffin and set off a three-gun salute Sunday near a Soviet freighter detained in the Port of Houston. The General Kravtsov, held by the U.S. Coast Guard because it did not have the necessary documents to leave, was cleared for departure today after producing the paperwork.

Scion of wealthy family charged with wife's murder

LONDON (AP) — Michael Telling, a member of one of Europe's richest families, was ordered to appear in court today to face a charge of murdering his American socialite wife Monika, whose headless corpse was found nine days ago.

Police, announcing Telling's arrest Sunday, said his wife's head was found in the garage of their home near High Wycombe, 34 miles northwest of London. The torso was found 130 miles away at Exeter in southwest England.

The charge alleges that murder occurred between March 27 and the beginning of September, raising speculation that the woman's remains were kept in a freezer before the torso dumped near a roadside in Exeter. It was found Sept. 3 by a motorist, and the head reportedly was found Saturday.

Mrs. Telling, 26, was the daughter of business consultant Louis Zumsteg and his wife Elsa, of Santa Rosa, Calif.

Telling, 33, is a cousin of polo-playing Lord Vestey, 42, a baron who is a friend of Prince Charles and has a fortune estimated at the equivalent of $900 million.

Telling's mother, who lives in Australia, is the eldest daughter of the late Leonard Vestey, brother of the present Lord Vestey's father.

The 250 Vestey companies countries control farms and ranches in Canada, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, Argentina, Brazil and Venezuela, meat packing interests in South America, a chain of butchers' shops in Britain and shipping lines.

Zumsteg told British reporters by telephone that he would come to England to claim his daughter's body and attend the inquest. He said he last heard from her more than five months ago.

The reports said Mrs. Telling was identified after one of her friends recognized a camel motif on the Moroccan T-shirt she was wearing, shown in a police-circulated photo to try to establish who she was.

U.S. pilots off course 21 times in five years

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. pilots reported wandering off course at least 21 times in the past five years while using the same navigational equipment as the Korean jetliner shot down by the Soviet Union Sept. 1.

The Washington Post, in an account published in its Sunday editions, said the pilots filed reports on those incidents with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

All the planes which wound up off course were using an inertial navigation system, the primary pathfinding gear on the Korean Air Lines Boeing 747. A Soviet intercepter plane shot down the jumbo jet, killing all 269 people aboard, after the civilian aircraft wandered 310 miles from its assigned course into Soviet territory.

The NASA reports included cases in which the INS malfunctioned, in which crew members made mistakes in programming the computers, and in which pilots failed to monitor the navigational system or the flight path, the Post said.

Simplicity is automatic.

All 1983 Honda Civic Hatchbacks are designed to be simple.

But with the Civic 1500 DX, your driving can be made even simpler. Because a 3-speed automatic transmission is also available. This is the only Civic Hatchback to offer it.

It also offers five-passenger seating.

Naturally, this car has all the other features you've come to expect from a Honda. Like front-wheel drive, rack and pinion steering, a handsome interior and a very simple price.

When it comes to value, it's no wonder Honda automatically comes to mind.

INTRODUCING THE CAR THAT WILL MAKE ALL CARS PERFORM BETTER.

AutoWeek called it "The finest quality car available." Car and Driver used the seldom-used words "magnificent," "lovely." "New levels of refinement," agrees Autocar.

Just what new car are they referring to? The BMW 318i. A sports sedan whose engineering is so technologically advanced, we fully expect it to inspire the next generation of "technological breakthroughs" in competitive models.

For a thorough evaluation of the sports sedan that will send the automotive community scurrying back to their drawing boards, contact us for a test drive of the BMW 318i.
